Property taxes can be raised by 13.6%

By BOB BENDER

of The State Journal Staff

Local property taxes will be limited to 13.6 percent under state law, the State Journal learned from a bill introduced in the Assembly today.

The bill, which would increase the statewide equalized property value, is considerably higher than the 10 percent limit set by the Legislature in 1973.

The bill is on cities, villages, townships and counties. Under provisions of the bill, these municipalities cannot increase their property tax by more than 13.6

percent and pay.

City of Madison Director of Administration John J. Smith said he is pleased the bill is passed the time will be as high as 13.6 percent.

"If it had been 6%,"

Smith said, "the city would have been in a bind."

He said the city has been holding on taxes for 10 years, and the amount the city could increase was about 10 percent.

"If it had been 6 percent, I would have been in a bind," Smith said.

However, Smith said the amount of many jurisdictions will be able to reduce in 1976. Adams predicted.

The limit on local taxing power was originally recommended by Gov. Pat

La Follette. When the Legislature passed the bill, it was amended to allow cities and villages to increase their taxes by 10 percent

in 1976.

Adams said the bill is a reprieve for cities and villages because it will allow them to increase their taxes by 13.6

percent in 1976.

Disciplinary code

conspicuous problems with the code lie in the area of legal implications. Double jeopardy and the possibility of an infringement on an individual's right to due process share the spotlight as the two most often mentioned problems with the code.

Most student government leaders contacted said that in the case of student misconduct in non-academic areas, they would rather see the matter handled by the civil authorities alone. As it stands, the University has the option to prosecute in non-academic misconduct cases also.

"It is our belief that the procedures now before the Board of Regents are incongruous in an academic institution and fail to fall within the purpose of the University," charged Mike DeLonay, president of the United Council of UW Student Governments at a June public hearing held by the Regents. "It is our position that if an offense warrants some type of penalty, or sanction, it is best handled by the state and city officials." United Council's position is that a student should not be answerable to the University for alleged violations once the accused has paid his/her debt to society.

CONCURRING WITH DELONAY is Bob Badzinski, president of the Stevens Point student government. "The University has no right to discipline students in non-academic cases. There are no Constitutional guarantees provided there," he said. "We'd rather leave it to the civil authorities. If you're going to get hit, get hit once, not twice."

The entire area of double jeopardy seems to have created some dispute among lawyers involved with the code, and it remains undecided if the University, the courts, or both should have jurisdiction over students' non-academic activity.

Of greater concern, however, is the section of the code entitled "Informal Adjudication." The types of misconduct covered in this section would not result in suspension or expulsion from the University. The chancellor of each campus would have the option of designating an investigating officer to handle the case.

"Probably the most blatant abuse of a student's rights occurs under this section," claims Jay Ambelang of the Campus Civil Liberties Union. "The investigator acts not only as the prosecutor but as the judge and jury. Despite the fact that the sanctions involved would be less serious than expulsion or suspension, this section is a gross violation of the due process guarantee."

ACCORDING TO DELONAY, this section "leaves too much to the chancellor and investigating officer's discretion. Little due process remains, and little protection for students' rights remain."

On the other hand, Dean of Students Paul Ginsberg defends the informal section. "The code helps to create a non-adversary counseling relationship with acts requiring less than expulsion or suspension," he said. "This is already the case with 99 per cent of such matters brought to our attention."

In fact, Ginsberg approaches the entire proposed code in a positive manner. "The code protects both the rights of students and the integrity of the institution. When students face suspension or expulsion, the procedures protect students' rights. There is little or no possibility of students being denied their full rights," he says.

A third problem with the code which has been referred to is that dealing with the sale and delivery of controlled substances. "For the purposes of this example, possession of amounts of controlled substances larger than are likely to be consumed by one individual in one week, possession of several hypodermic needles or other equipment commonly used

No one knows where the money goes

By DIANE WILKINSON
of the Cardinal Staff

Faculty, administration, teaching assistants and students searched Wednesday evening for the causes of budget cutbacks and declining educational quality at a forum entitled "Your Money and Education: Where are they going?"

The Democratic Party, Wisconsin citizens, the state legislature, racism, bureaucratic parasites, the governor and administration boondoggles were offered as scapegoats.

ALTHOUGH MANY were called, few public officials invited chose to attend. Students joined in non-attendance—only 50 came. The Wisconsin Student Association, with the de facto support of the Teaching Assistants Association, sponsored the forum at Great Hall.

The audience wanted a discussion of the TAA contract dispute, but Chancellor's Office representatives Len Van Ess and Ray Bowen refused to discuss it. Much to the displeasure of the audience, they said they came to discuss the budget process, not the contract.

TAA representative Mark Fuerst said the union faces for consumption of controlled substances, or possession of a substantial quantity of bags or other containers for re-packaging, or other chemicals commonly used for mixing with controlled substances, would constitute prima facie evidence that the student intended to sell or deliver the controlled substance in his possession," reads the code.

"THE SECTION DEALING with drugs should be deleted," says Jay Ambelang of the Campus Civil Liberties Union. "The University goes beyond its authority in regulating the private lives of students, which has nothing to do with their education. The University is attempting to legislate the morals of students by prescribing illegal conduct in the area of drugs even if it occurs off campus and is completely unrelated to the University."

For the time being, student leaders and administrators are looking ahead to public hearings through which feelings of students will be disseminated. Yet, for one student government president, what is said in the near future about the code may be pointless.

"What's most discouraging about the code is the meaning: the University is just looking for a process, there is no protection of student rights," charges Bob Badzinski, Stevens Point student government head. "The main intent of the University is to protect their image."

monumental difficulties in sorting out information on the University budget and finding out what priorities are.

"But it's obvious from complaints piling up at the Undergraduate Grievance Committee, that students are suffering closed classes, crowded classes and reduced personal contact," Fuerst declared.

"THE DEAN'S MEMOS read like memos of plant managers at Ford. Education and social space are being violated by cost-benefit analysis," Fuerst said.

Prof. F. C. Campbell, representing the Committee Against Racism, attacked the budget cutbacks as a reactionary move to curtail access to education by minority studies.

"The taxpayers aren't responsible for cutbacks; people want the doctors and lawyers," Campbell said. "The University is squandering its money on traditional and obsolete programs, not spending it on human needs. There's a large pie available, and we're squabbling over crumbs."

Prof. Anatol Beck of United Faculty disagreed. "America and Wisconsin are losing faith in the future, and there's nothing more future-oriented than a university. People aren't thinking of 40 years from now, but of their trip to the Virgin Islands this winter."

E. DAVID CRONAN, Dean of Letters and Science, and Van Ess deny administration costs are unreasonably exceeding instructional costs. The merger of the University with the State University System in 1971 drastically increased administrative costs, they said.

Van Ess said affirmative action programs and federal and foundation grants require extensive administration.

Sylvan Leabman, of the state Department of Administration, said all state agencies, not just the University, received five per cent budget cuts in the 1973 biennium and one and one half per cent cuts in the present budget.

"The governor and the legislature did not want a tax increase," Leabman said. Cronin denied that cutbacks are affecting minority programs and departments in Letters and Science. He said the Women's Studies Program, although supported by outside funds, shows expansion of programs in this area.

The forum concluded that the University needs more money to maintain its quality, but no one even can say where the money they do have is going now.

Trustbusting

The source of the allegations, according to Attorney General La Follete, is the Waukesha Freeman. La Follete said that he doesn't know what other newspapers are involved. But several sources stated that the Kenosha News could join the Freeman in the complaint, specifically against the Milwaukee papers.

Executives at the Milwaukee Journal, the Milwaukee Sentinel, the Waukesha Freeman and the Kenosha News could not be reached for comment.

EARLIER THIS YEAR the Freeman challenged the Milwaukee Journal's exclusive use of the Times and Times-Post news services. The Freeman filed a formal objection to a judgement in a similar case involving the Boston Globe and its exclusive use of syndicated features.

The U.S. Justice Department said that the Freeman's objection could not be addressed in the Globe case because it did involve features, not supplemental news services. The Globe was subsequently granted exclusivity in their circulation area.

Assistant Attorney General Michael Zaleski refused specific comment on the case but said that the investigation is looking into the methods in which large newspapers maintain exclusive use of the supplemental services.

"The investigation is a fact-finding expedition, no allegations have been made," Zaleski said. "Once we finish we will analyze the facts and then decide if prosecution is justified."

ACCORDING TO a wire service report La Follete said that if the investigation reveals deliberate restraints of trade the Justice Department "will take appropriate action to preserve the right of the freedom of the press to all newspapers, large and small, thereby enhancing the public's right to know."

La Follete said that criminal charges would not be pursued. He said that instead he would ask for a judgement declaring the practice illegal and to be halted.

The investigation will commence in Madison on Oct. 10 before Dane County Court Commissioner Charles Pellino.

A related issue, but one not included in the investigation thus far, is the Milwaukee Journal's exclusive use of the cartoon strip "Doonesbury."

The Journal claims state's rights to the feature and has denied its use by the Capital Times, the Kenosha News and also by the Daily Cardinal.

Portugal Soldiers vacate radio station

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — Infantrymen ordered by Premier Jose Pinheiro de Azevedo to end their occupation of a Communist-line radio station staged a day-long mutiny Wednesday in solidarity with the station's workers, then agreed to leave the station.

Soldiers of the Queluz Infantry Regiment ended their occupation of Radio Clube Portugues when they were promised civilian police would not take their place.

A BEARDED private said the troops felt the civilian police, often identified with the former rightist dictatorship, would turn Radio Clube over to "reactionaries."

The soldiers' brief rebellion — their second this week — was seen as another indication that Portugal was dividing into two armed camps as Azevedo's moderate-line government sought to impose its authority against increasing left-wing resistance.

The Socialist party, which backs Azevedo, warned that "minority groups" of the "adventurist and pseudorevolutionary left" were planning to attack the premier and assault information media.

When the premier ordered troops to occupy all Lisbon stations on Monday and put an end to anti-government broadcasting, soldiers sent to Radio Clube Portugues and to Radio Renascenca joined forces with the leftist staffers and refused to obey orders.

SENIOR OFFICERS finally restored control over Radio Clube and the government sent reliable commandos to occupy Radio Renascenca — the voice of the Roman Catholic Church until it was seized by its leftist workers — and take it off the air.

Azevedo pulled the military out of all Lisbon stations Wednesday except Radio Renascenca. But the government said police would be deployed around all stations and that any statement by political groups would have to be cleared with the Information Ministry.

The premier said he was confident his government and the ruling military Revolutionary Council would not have to reimpose "emergency measures...to defend authority, revolutionary discipline and the revolution itself."

Azevedo's cabinet was sworn in 12 days ago with a mandate from the Revolutionary Council to turn back from the radical leftward path of his Communist-backed predecessor, Gen. Vasco Goncalves.

George C. Scott and William Devane in Fear On Trial

Xerox is proud to present a major television special starring George C. Scott and William Devane. "Fear On Trial" is the gripping dramatization of the true story of John Henry Faulk, a CBS broadcaster who was unable to find work because a group of self-appointed arbiters questioned his beliefs and his patriotism.

In the 1950's and early 1960's, the hysteria of Communist witch-hunts, defamation and blacklisting drove teachers from their jobs, forced ministers from their churches and put performers and writers out of work.

"Fear On Trial" is the story of one man who chose to fight back.

A WEEKLY COLUMN ON CAMPUS AFFAIRS

Once upon a time only people with money could go to a University. You still need money to go to a University, but nowadays it also seems that only Universities with money can get people to come to them. Faculty that is.

Money seems to have replaced educational quality as the primary concern to an institute of higher learning. A case in hand is the battle raging between the Legislature and University administrators.

THE LEGISLATURE contends the University should be producing more education with less state money, when the University has always been allowed to produce less education with more money. It is a hard adjustment to make. Especially when a badly needed enrollment ceiling placed on this campus failed miserably this fall and the University's tightened belt has no more notches to be let out.

Teachers strikes across the country have put teachers demands in the public spotlight. A major demand has been increased wages.

No University faculties have gone on strike though the mere thought of unionization on many campuses sends senior faculty cringing at this spectre of "un-professional" behavior. Tenure is the key word in University politics; unions are for blue collar workers and uppity grammar and high school teachers, according to University sentiment.

University faculties are beginning to look out of their ivy covered libraries and desire more than the security of an academic position—to be precise they want to see larger numbers on their paychecks. As a result a new game has sprung up around the country—it's called buying off faculty. And Wisconsin as a result of this year's budget is coming out a loser on all accounts.

Faculty Memo, a University newsletter recently quoted Madison Professor Williard F. Mueller as saying, "The increases at other Universities insure that the UW will hold the unchallenged position as the lowest average paid faculty in the Big Ten in 1975-76."

The University faculty have been given a 6.5 per cent increase in salary for the next year. In comparison, the Technical School teachers in Madison, after going out on strike received a 7 per cent hike in salary.

Because of the larger classes teachers are faced with this semester along with nominal pay raises faculty are leaving for greener pastures. In recent years Michigan has been the recipient of two History Professors, and two former chairmen of the Journalism school are both elsewhere. For those who remain morale problems are the largest worry of the administration. The Law School is hunting for a new dean. Wisconsin weather is not appealing and for the salary they are offering, from all accounts, they will be looking for a while longer.

Collective bargaining by faculty is now gaining popularity in Wisconsin. There are presently two bills in the Legislature, one was introduced by the Board of Regents and another by The Association of United Wisconsin Faculty (TAUWF).

WHILE THE FACULTIES AT the Madison and Milwaukee campuses of the Wisconsin System are not entirely behind the idea of collective bargaining the faculties in the outlying system colleges are. The matter is still up for grabs, but as the teachers get more work with less compensation, collective bargaining becomes more appealing.

While not part of the established faculty the Teaching Assistants

No to student code

You may not realize it, but a revision of the student disciplinary code covering academic and non-academic misconduct was drawn up last spring. Developed by a University Task Force the proposed code received negligible student input. Initially to be acted on last summer, the Board of Regents delayed action on the code until January to allow more student input.

The delay is indeed necessary. Prior to this semester few students were even aware of the proposed guidelines much less their moral and legal implications. The code has drawn sharp criticism from both the Campus branch of the Civil Liberties Union and Student Government leaders around the University system.

THE POTENTIAL FOR double jeopardy is great. In areas of non-academic misconduct, a student can be disciplined by the University for conviction of a crime in a court if that crime was University related. For example seizure of University property, or an act which prevents University employees or students from pursuing their work could result in suspension or expulsion.

In the case of controlled substances a student could be disciplined for possession of substances arbitrarily designated to be "larger than is likely to be consumed by one person in one week." The code also goes so far as to say that a student would be held in violation for possession of a "substantial quantity of bags or other containers for repackaging."

The proposed code is ambiguous and the possibilities for abuse of individual rights are extensive. In cases which are not deemed serious enough to warrant suspension or expulsion the chancellor has the option to designate "an investigating officer" who could also serve as judge and jury. This could be a violation of due process guaranteed in the Constitution.

Public hearings to be conducted by the Wisconsin Students Association will be held the week of October 13. Exact dates and times are not yet arranged, but student input at these meetings will be vital. This will be the only time your opinion will be solicited in regard to the proposed code. For your own protection and security, we urge your participation.

Association (TAA) is responsible for teaching about 60 per cent of the undergrads in this University. Presently the TAA is gearing up to take a strike vote. One of the issues at stake is the question of whether or not the TAA has the right to bargain wages. The University says no, but the TAA claims every other state employee organization has that right.

The faculty has offered no support to the TAA. More money to the TA's would probably mean less money for the faculty. The University has managed to set these two groups against each other.

And the way things are now if it comes to a question of your paycheck or mine I would have to pick me.

ARIES, you go wild today and drink two cups of coffee and forego your underwear. Heightened metabolism ensues; get work done and stay away from attractive members of the opposite sex.

TAURUS, you are overwhelmed with the desire to spend money. You plan to move to a friend's house but are turned away at the last minute.

GEMINI, you cannot wake up this morning and sleep till the moon rises. You discover that it is possible to live by night and do it. CANCER, you are like a squirrel, tucking away notes to friends. They love you for it, and would sometime like to see your bushy tail in real life.

LEO, life is complicated and so your afternoons will be if you continue to drink Jim Beam. Switch to coffee today and see what its like to fly like a rocket. VIRGO, you think of a sibling and your sibling thinks of you. Time precludes face to face communication—make phone calls.

LIBRA, you appear when others least expect you and disappear when you're expected. You spend the day in the Ratskeller, smiling. SCORPIO, gloomy day today—you can count on nothing, not even yourself. You buy an abacus.

SAGITTARIUS, naive friend asks sexual advice. You give it, and then follow it. Hold hands tonight. CAPRICORN, you decide to grow a garden, then find out it's too late in the season. Hibernates.

AQUARIUS, you question your past, and feel very doubtful about your future.

PISCES, you mix cocktails at noon, but nothing can relieve the insanity of days ahead. Friends wish to see you; you wish you had time to see yourself.

Women harriers inexperienced

By SCOTT HILDEBRAND
of the Sports Staff

Wisconsin women's cross country team suffers from something that most women sports teams are hurt by—it is young and inexperienced.

However, if there is one thing that the women's cross country team has, it is an intense desire for victory. Coach Peter Tegen says he is very enthusiastic about the team, despite the lack of experience he has to contend with.

"I AM REALLY excited about the way the team performs," Tegen said. "This is the first year we've really had a girls cross country team. With the new talent Wisconsin has, it should be a very good season."

The season certainly hasn't been too bad so far. It started off with a 21-39 victory over Western Ontario on September 13 in Madison. Two Wisconsin runners, Lynn Morin and Mary Beth Spencer, were the first to cross the finish line.

Coach Tegen said this victory was "good enough for a starter."

The team travelled to Champaign, Ill. the following week for a meet with Illinois and Illinois State. In this meet, Wisconsin won the first five places and wound up winning with a perfect score of 15-49. Once again, the squad was led by Lynn Morin and Mary Beth Spencer.

Morin and Spencer are two of the people Tegen was talking about when he mentioned the team's new talent. Morin, the team's captain, is a sophomore from West Allis. She attended UW-LaCrosse last year but didn't do any running. From LaCrosse, she went to UCLA, a powerhouse in women's cross country. Not happy there, she came to Wisconsin where "things look great for her," according to Coach Tegen. Morin won the Wisconsin state high school championship in 1974.

MARY BETH SPENCER is a freshman sensation from Anoka, Minn. She placed first in the Minnesota state meet last year. Commenting on the performance of these two girls, Coach Tegen said, "They are different types of runners, but they make up a good team. They are fairly equal in talent."

Wisconsin should be better prepared for their meet Saturday with their old rival, UW-LaCrosse, and Minnesota-Mankato. The team didn't have much time to prepare for its first two meets.

An added stimulus to the women's cross country team has been the performance of Cindy Bremser, a former Badger. Cindy made it to the AAU national meet last year and is currently getting ready for the Pan American Games. "Her achievements have given the team a lot of enthusiasm," Tegen said of Cindy.

The real tests for the team are coming up in November. They are the United States Track and Field Federation meet at Kenosha on November 1, and the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women National Cross Country Championships at Ames, Ia., on November 15. Although he didn't spell out his goals for these meets, Coach Tegen says they are "very ambitious."

ON THE REST of the season,

PETER TEGEN

Tegen warns, "Things will definitely get tougher." However, he adds, "Our runners will improve quite a bit. I can say that for sure."

Kristof said that it is a disadvantage to have such a small number of participants go out for the sport, because they can't play with two full eleven member teams during practice sessions. "When they get out on the playing field—it's a rude awakening to see so many players when you're not used to that many," she said.

Badgers practice wishbone defense

In brisk weather Wednesday afternoon, the Wisconsin Badgers ran through drills in preparation for Saturday's clash with the Jayhawks of Kansas.

Both Charles Green and Mike Carroll worked out at quarterback and head coach John Jardine was happy with his passing game. "There were some lame ducks," said Jardine after practice, "but on the whole, the passing was fair." He attributed some of the difficulty to the chilly air.

The Badger defense is preparing for a Kansas option that suddenly came to life in the Jayhawks' 20-0 defeat of Oregon State last week. Referring to his defensive strategies, Jardine said, "We'd love to force them to pass. We can afford to mix up defenses a little more because they're limited in their passing game. We plan on giving them about four or five different looks on defense."

Jardine had praise for Jayhawk quarterback Nolan Cromwell. "He's not a dancer," Jardine said, "but he'll give you a good move...if you give him a shot, he'll go." The speedy Cromwell, who is a Big Eight hurdle champion, likes to "run right by" defensive backfields, according to Jardine. "He'll head for the sideline and beat you."

Jardine plans to stop the option by using larger defensive fronts and by seeing to it that his ends, cornerbacks, and safeties are "...in the right place at the right time." He added, smiling, "We've got a few surprises."

Women face 'first' test

By AGNES RING
of the Sports Staff

While the Wisconsin football team is next door at Camp Randall preparing for the Kansas game, the 17 members of the Wisconsin field hockey team are practicing their "dribbling," "flicking," and "driving," in preparation for their biggest games of the year coming up this weekend at the Indiana University invitational in Bloomington.

The Badger team will be up against Indiana, Purdue, and Ohio State—the first time the team has met Big Ten competition. The team's record so far this season shows one win, two losses, and two ties in competition with other state schools.

"PLAYING UNDER lights and on a turf will be a new experience for these women," said Coach Nancy Kristof. "It will prove to be a much faster game than the team is used to, but it will be a good experience for them."

Kristof has coached the field hockey team since it came into existence last year under the women's intercollegiate sports program. She played college field hockey in Pennsylvania and coached girl's athletics in a high school in Ohio for four years before coming to Wisconsin.

Nine players returned from last year, but most of the others had little or no experience in playing the game said Kristof. Of the 17 team members there are eight juniors, four sophomores, four seniors, and one freshman.

"You don't usually become an expert in the game in one season," said Kristof. "The game takes a clear understanding of the awkward rules of play and experience in the skills and strategies of the sport. Once they get past the stage of getting their legs smashed—amateurs love it."

SINCE REGISTRATION week the team has practiced two hours a day, five days a week in the field behind the Memorial Shell.

The first three weeks of practice were spent in getting in shape with agility drills, 50-yard dashes, shuttles, and doing sit-ups. Now the emphasis has shifted to stick work and teamwork exercises, which are done in blocks of 30 to 35 minutes, simulating the length of the halves of the game.

Attendance at the games is sparse. Though there are a few regular fans, a total of about 20 passers-by may stop in to see a few minutes of play.

But lack of glory or recognition doesn't dim the enthusiasm for the sport of these energetic athletes of varied majors and backgrounds.

ASKED WHY she came out for field hockey senior Margaret Hageman, an agricultural journalism major, replied, "It's a great sport because it demands skill and finesse—but it's not a 'kill' sport. You do your best and you do it for fun. It's great to be outdoors and to get the exercise."

Other team members echoed her enthusiasm for the low pressure atmosphere and the free spirit of competition and pleasure.

Their glowing faces and strong, lean bodies along with their attitude of camaraderie on the practice field exuded their ardent commitment to the sport.

One of the advantages of field hockey is that the highly skilled individual doesn't have to depend on the success of her entire team to excel in the sport.

THE CHAMPIONSHIPS are handled much like professional all-star games. At the local, regional and national levels, each team selects two outstanding players, based on their stickwork and speed on the field, to represent that team at the playoffs.

Last season the outstanding members of the Wisconsin team,
