THE DEDICATION

*Not as of yore to that famous pair,
Whose meeting caused the first affair,
Nor to Professors of renown
Whose names are known the world around;
Not to ourselves, 'though we believe
The kindest word we should receive;
Not to the crew or football team
Nor Senior thesis or Freshman theme,
But to those who long have been
The font from which our jestings spring,
Who keep alive the college song
Who even help the grind along
This Badger then with many a toast,
We dedicate to those we roast.*

PROFESSOR OF RAILWAY ENGINEERING

WILLIAM DANA TAYLOR was born in Montgomery, Ala., in 1859. He graduated (B. E.) at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute in 1881. The same school conferred the degree of C. E. in 1885, just after he had completed a year's post-graduate work in mathematics at the Johns Hopkins University. He later became Chief Engineer of mining roads of the Louisville & Nashville system constructed in Alabama and Tennessee. In 1891 he was elected Professor of Civil Engineering in the Louisiana State University at Baton Rouge, and occupied this chair for seven years. He resigned this position in 1898 to become Chief Engineer of the St. Louis, Peoria & Northern Railroad. He was a captain in the Third Regiment, U. S. V. Engineers, in the late war with Spain. He is a member of the Society for Promotion of Engineering Education, of the Western Society of Engineers and of the American Society of Civil Engineers. At the time of his election in June, 1901, as Professor of Railway Engineering in this University, to succeed the late lamented Professor N. O. Whitney, he was Track Elevation Engineer of the Alton Railway in Chicago.

Drink Death and Seek the Coffin Factory

THE CLASS OF 1904, having courted the pinnacle of mastery and attained it, is prepared to wreak a stupendous obliteration on all who dare buffet the surging crests of the incarcinating avalanche of the infinity of its intelligence.
 SO YE WHO HAVE TASTED NOT OF THE WORLD'S WISDOM.

GO WAY BACK AND SIT DOWN

<small>Avaunt! To other climes, ye skunks, Lest here we seal your fate! Mendota is no peat-bed waste, Oh Water, swallow, permeate.</small>	<small>For the land is small and the lake is large, And 1905 is weak: A toss and a jump, and another chump Will have the shore to seek.</small>

PONDER!
WHO KNOWS BUT THAT ANOTHER DAY SHALL SEE YOUR CLASS A HORDE OF

Blood-Stained, Hell-Chained Souls

T'IS a weary but good climb, freshmen,
May you make it loyal and true,
For the glory of old Wisconsin,
Remember, goes forward with you

A Review of the Season

THE football season of 1901 was a decided success and students of the university, as well as the members of the team, have the pleasure of looking back on a record of brilliant victories. Every team with which we competed was defeated by at least three touchdowns, although some of our opponents were past masters in the art of football.

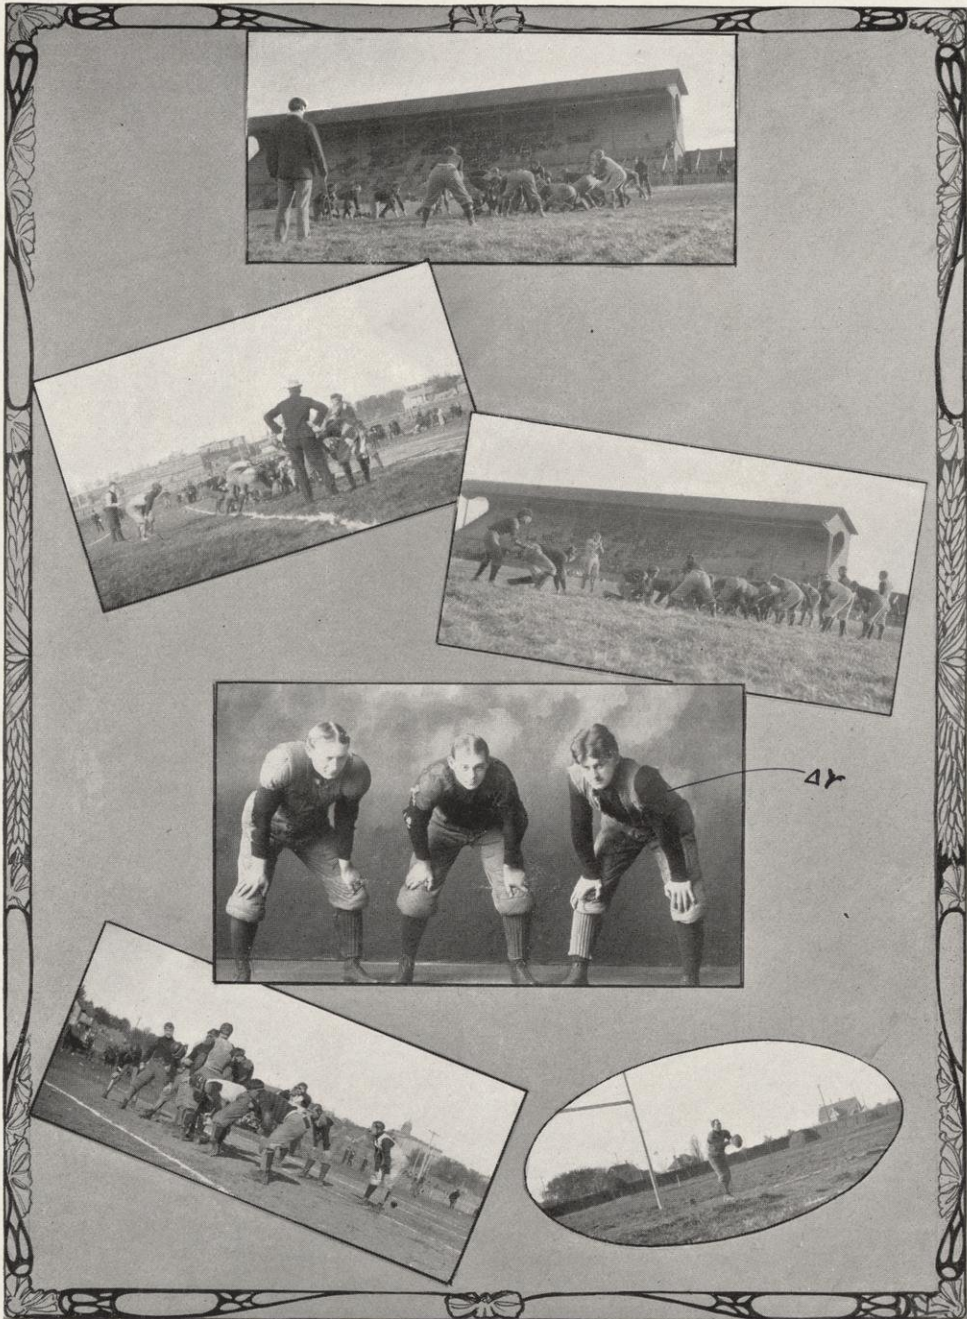

The games with Milwaukee Medics and Hyde Park gave the rooters no criterion by which to judge the men, as both were won with comparative ease. The next game, that with Beloit, probably did the team more harm than good, as the high score of 40 to 0, against a college which in past years had shown good form, caused undue elation among the student body and overconfidence and vanity in the squad. But this overconfidence was short-lived, for on the following Saturday a fluke allowed the little team from Knox College to score, and, from this time on, all realized that victories in the final contests would come only as the result of hard work. The Minnesota game, now only a month away, spurred on the men to hard work and conscientious training, and, under the masterful direction of Phil King, every man began to pick up the finer and more scientific points of football which were so evident on the glorious 16th of November. Mr. King is admitted by eastern critics to be a wonderful coach, and this year even Minnesota began to recognize his ability. He commanded the respect and admiration of every aspirant for football honors, and to him is due the credit for the splendid discipline and unconquerable determination which were possessed by this year's team.

Coach Williams and his band of husky blonds caused more than one veteran of the varsity team to have troubled dreams during the first few days of November. On November 16th all realized that the day which had been awaited for twelve slowly-dragging months was at last upon us. When Wisconsin started to go on the field that day they remembered the score of 6 to 5, remembered the gibes and taunts suffered at the hands of the Minnesota team the previous year, remembered that the Gophers had never defeated the Badgers on old Camp Randall. The tension was so great that not one of the team could climb over the side-line ropes unassisted, and not one could speak without choking down a sob. But this was the fear of determination, not of cowardice, as was proved by the fierceness and daring exhibited by all. A critic from Harvard, who has seen all big eastern games for the past nine years, said after the game: "I have never seen an eleven play so fiercely. Wisconsin to-day could have defeated any team ever brought forth in the East."

The Chicago game ended as all had anticipated and closed a season whose success we hope may be an inspiration for future generations of football enthusiasts.

A Review of the Season

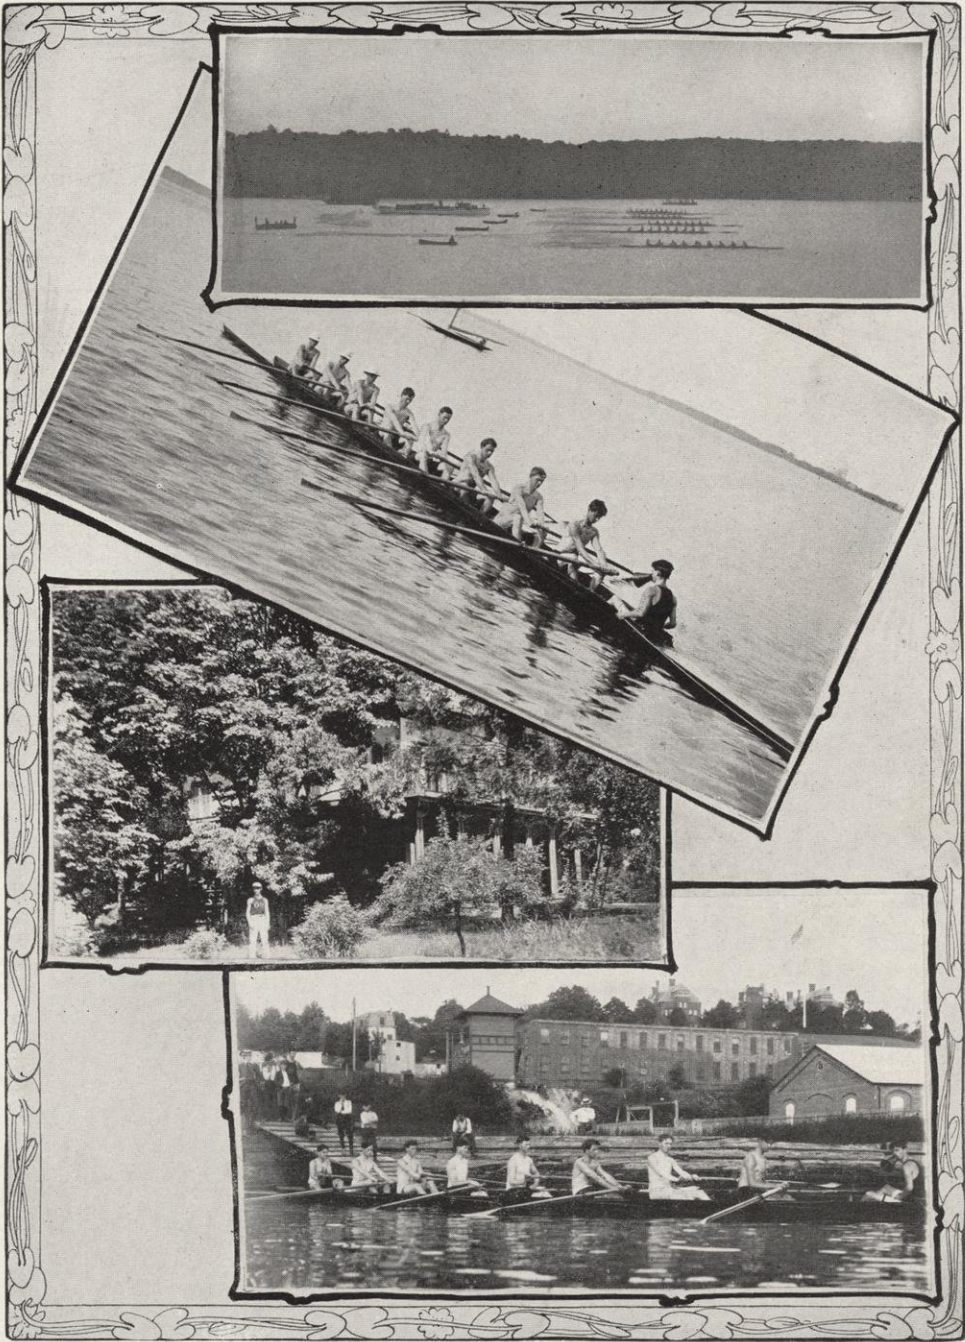

WITH the advent of the "Haymaker" crew into the East the fact became generally known among eastern collegians that Wisconsin possessed a boating department, and the respect that was gained for us in that race has been increased by our work during the last two years, and particularly by our race of last year, when we succeeded in rowing under a four-mile record that was established by Cornell in 1896. Although we were defeated in that race the men did such splendid work that they gained the respect and admiration of the Easterners, and at the coming regatta we may feel sure that the "wise" ones will not leave out Wisconsin in their forecasts.

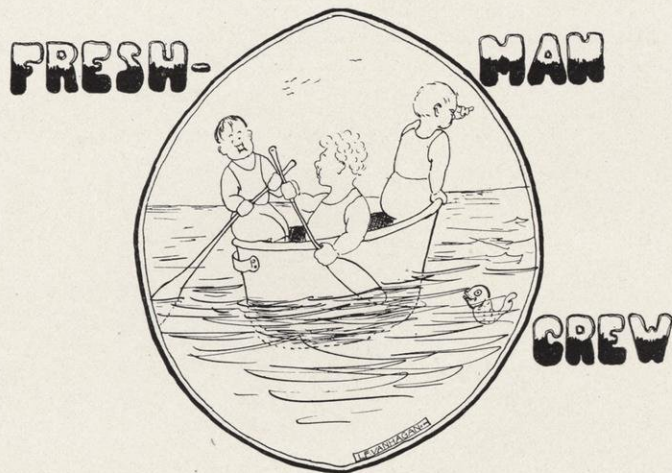

In the early part of our training season the prospects for a fast crew were anything but promising. We were favored, however, with an abundance of new material, having the championship 1900 freshman crew to draw from. As the season advanced and the men got out on the water it soon became apparent, from the vim and energy that the men put into the work, and from the way that they handled their blades, that there was much that augured well for the Cardinal. The only thing which we had to fear, and the thing which lost us the race, was that the men would not be able to stand the strain of a four-mile race when pitted against the eastern crews, made up largely of veterans at the oar, many of them with three or four years' experience. For the last three weeks before we left for the East we covered the four-mile course on Lake Mendota twice a week, and it was there we made the fastest time for four miles that had ever been made by a Wisconsin crew on dead water.

We left Madison on June 26th and arrived the following afternoon at Highlands on the Hudson, whose great bridge marks the beginning of the last mile of the varsity course. We were about the last crew to arrive on the scene of the contest, several of the other crews having been on the river for two or three weeks before our arrival. This is a greater handicap than many people imagine. The other men have an opportunity to get acquainted with the situation in general and, particularly, are able to accustom themselves to the rowing with the tide, which sometimes is a great factor in the race. Combined with the change in the climate there is the change from dead to running water, and the only way that we can avoid the results of our long trip and these disadvantages is to spend a longer time on the river before the race than we have been doing in the past.

At the drawing for places on the course we were very fortunate and secured the very position that we desired, being placed between Cornell and Columbia, the two crews that we most feared. Just before the varsity race the wind changed and swept strongly down stream. When we were at the stakeboat ready to start Columbia's launch ran in close to the start, breaking Cornell's stakeboat loose from its moorings, Cornell for that reason being forced to take a flying start. The delay from this accident was very wearing on the nerves of the men and the result contributed a great deal to the poor start that we secured, our first three or four strokes not being taken together, as they should have been. The wind, which was blowing down stream, combined with the strong tide, proved a disadvantage to Wisconsin, as our stroke was one that was long and powerful and calculated to be rowed at 32 or 33 to the minute. We were forced to carry the stroke higher than we had been accustomed to doing. The race itself, according to all the critics, was the finest exhibition of its kind ever seen on American waters. Wisconsin for the first three miles of the course was second and not until the spurts in the last mile did the superior endurance of the Easterners enable them to draw away from us. This weakness was neither the fault of coach nor men. It is impossible to gain in a single season of training what others have been several years in securing. WILLIAM J. GIBSON.

A Review of the Season

IF there is one thing more than another in connection with athletics at the University of Wisconsin this spring which delights the hearts of those who desire to see Wisconsin in the lead in track and field events, as in other departments of the activities of the institution, it is the prospect of again taking a first place at the Conference meet at Chicago on May 31.

Since the meet of 1898, when Wisconsin won by the largest margin by which a college team had ever carried off the laurels of victory, the Badger athletes have been unable to land first place. The departure of Maybury and other star members of the team at the close of that season, left the team decidedly weak for the next year, and when Coach Moakley, who now has charge of the Cornell squad, came here at the beginning of the next season's work, he had scarcely an experienced man on the team. It was not his fault that the Badgers were only able to land fourteen points at the Intercollegiate meet that spring, for he had worked as conscientiously as coach ever did to bring out his men, but the men simply did not have it in them.

With the coming of C. H. Kilpatrick, the following year, the institution inaugurated the policy in regard to the track, which has proven so successful in other branches of athletics, that of maintaining the coach in his position more than one year, and the wisdom of such a policy has been so conclusively proven since that time that no temporary setback will be sufficient to disprove it. In the spring of 1900, the work of the new coach showed itself at the Intercollegiate, the team scoring a total of twenty-one points, although Wisconsin for the second time in her history ranked fourth in the big meet of the year, Michigan, Chicago and California preceding her in one of the most even contests for first place ever seen on a western field.

Last year's meet, the Badger team returned to a position dangerously close to the winner, landing in second place with a total of twenty-eight points. Inasmuch as the low water mark is fourteen points, and since the tide has risen at the rate of seven points a year for three successive years, it is due to reach the thirty-five point mark this coming meet, a total of points sufficient to insure first place again to the Badger team. The ill-luck of the track team for the past two seasons has been so marked that it has escaped the notice of but a few. Both in 1900 and in 1901, there were men whose ability was such that had unforeseen accidents not kept them out of the meet, the pennant would have been unfurled above the wearers of the Cardinal. There is another peculiar thing which has attracted less attention than it deserves, and that is the present record for the 100-yard dash. Although Maybury and several lesser sprinters have been in the institution since the time of George F. Sherman. Sherman still holds the short run record in the high school time of 10 1-5 seconds. This time has been lowered by several of the short distance men in trials, but it has never been changed in either duel or other meets in which the Badgers have contested.

There is nothing to be said about the outlook for this spring. There are a number of the last year's long distance men who are sure points winners, in addition to which the new material is much better than that brought in by previous freshmen classes of the past four years. Altogether the prospects for a winning team are bright and, barring accidents, the Wisconsin standard bearers ought to defeat the exceptionally strong teams of both Chicago and Michigan on track and field in the second annual meet of conference colleges, which is scheduled to be held May 31, 1902. Vive la Wisconsin.

A Review of the Season

“A REAL FAN,” in the true George Ade sense would have been the most appropriate descriptive word imaginable to have applied to any one of the large chorus of “rooters” that the Wisconsin Baseball Team of 1901 had as its ardent supporters.

The season proper opened with the arrival of the Michigan team. They were promptly shut out (7 to 0). This decisive victory served to arouse more interest from the lethargic state into which much baseball enthusiasm had lapsed, due to the vicissitudes of several preceding seasons.

Northwestern came and was defeated. Then Camp Randall presented a beautiful contest when the wily Gophers appeared, and until the eighth inning it seemed that the Varsity team was doomed to certain defeat. But hold! the “rooters” had a voice, and it was a voice of no mean calibre and was given in that unstinted manner so characteristic of “Old Wisconsin,” which served to quicken the dormant energy of the half-discouraged, half-defeated team, and the Cardinal again waved triumphantly. It was a close victory, but 'twas victory, and one such as is pleasant to recall and one that amply repays “the real fan” for “cutting” the time-worn lines of ancient lore, Blackstone, or even laying aside for the time being the intricate mathematical demonstrations with which the engineers are accustomed to grapple. The “rooters” claimed this victory as theirs, and the facts seemed to substantiate their claims.

The curve of baseball enthusiasm reached its highest point for this season, and probably the highest point for many previous seasons, the day that the Maroon was trailed in the dust. This was an ideal victory such as one seldom sees and accounts of which read like fiction. The game having been won in the ninth inning, with a rush, the “rooters” crowded upon the diamond, swept the Cardinal players from their feet and in the delirium of their enthusiasm carried the happy players many blocks upon their shoulders, while the Varsity Band discoursed “Hot Time” and “The Poor Team Won” with a zeal that only a true collegian can appreciate.

But victories did not make up the complete schedule, for while singularly successful at home, likewise the team was singularly unsuccessful abroad, and although defeats came with as great frequency as did the victories, throughout the season the members of the team, with their doughty little coach, maintained that esprit du corps that made them factors to be reckoned with in any of the baseball contests in which they participated.

Championship Tournament

In the finals, Henry F. Helmholtz defeated his opponent easily. Therefore, by winning this tournament, he was qualified to play Beye, the defender of the title. In a close and spirited contest the latter won 5-7, 7-5, 9-7, 3-6, 6-3, thus continuing to hold the championship.

In the doubles Helmholtz and Seaman defeated Beye and Belnap in the finals, 6-2, 6-3, 5-7, 6-4.

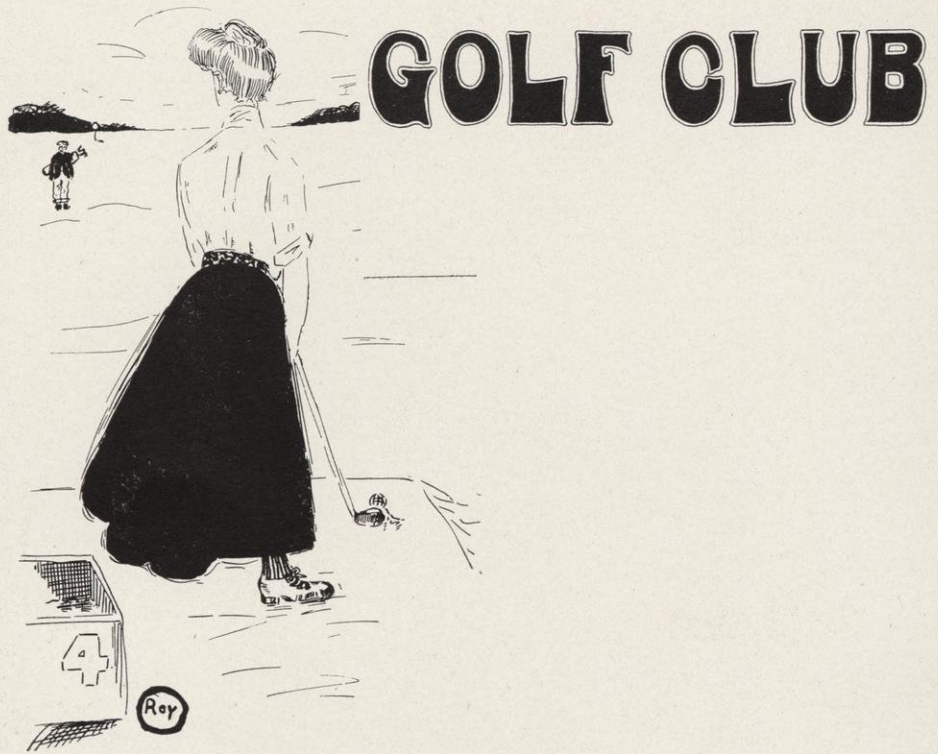

Intercollegiate Tournament at Chicago

Helmholtz and Seaman represented Wisconsin at Chicago. Seaman was defeated in the first round, 7-5, 10-12, 9-7, while Helmholtz was more successful and was not defeated until the semi-finals, 6-2, 3-6, 6-4, 5-7, 7-5.

WHAT TO LOOK FOR IN THE NEXT BADGER

A Page of Sophomoral Expectations

A Marvelous Story of a Political Career. The initial installment of Lyman's "Concerning Myself" will be the first of a series of unprecedented experiences by a representative student and will expound a boundless variety of political intricacies, class rushes, and histrionic endeavors. The part relating to politics will be especially interesting, as it is in this field that Mr. Lyman has achieved such remarkable success. In this he will describe in detail the maneuvers which have led to his being universally admitted as the peer of Frank Bucklin and which has actuated Dean Henry to lift his hat to the young Hanna.

Types of Fair Men. An artistic compilation by Bonnie E. Burton. The material for this most attractive article has been gathered by the author from among the men of the university, whom she has had ample chance to study. She has written upon every type and has characteristic pictures, drawn by her own hand, of the men she describes. The article will be further embellished by photographs of Miss Burton herself, illustrating one type of a College Girl.

"Behind the Lime Lights"—A Unique Serial. A most unusual story of stage life, in two parts, which will take the readers back of the scenes of Library Hall Theatre and bring them in touch with all the great dramatic stars. In this the author, Mme Fola La Follette, shows them to us with a familiarity which is most singular. Never have the greatest actors in the world been so shown, as for instance, where the author herself, Elizabeth Shepherd and D. Donald MacDuff MacDonald play Stephe Stuntz off the stage in his own act and as they will be shown in an actual picture. It will be entirely novel. We shall see the great Sargeant, powderless, paintless, wigless, rehearsing, in his holiest sanctum, those jokes which he will later inflict on innocent friends. We see the renowned Brennan in his most affectionate personal side. We shall see with pleasure the dainty Stolte as, away from stage lights and affectations, she appears among those who know her best. We will go on a tour with the troupe from the Library Hall Theatre to the Pi Phi House, where they consume buns with an avidity marvelously like that of ordinary people. These articles have been carefully reviewed and heartily indorsed by John Bartow Patt, who was also manager and supervisor of the tour described.

My Library Courtship. A Society Romance. This clever story from the stub pen of Francis Xavier Murphy will be the literary masterpiece of the Badger of 1904. Besides the exquisite charm of the narrative, the familiarity of the setting adds to the story. The scene is laid in the library and the leading characters may be easily recognized as real people. The hero, Francesco De Gimminy, is readily seen to be the coquettish F. X. himself. In this story, as in all his tales of society life, the author will be seen at his best.

A Timely Word to Aspiring Writers. "Such Tales as I Have Written." These sketches by Leo De Ruche Ludlow will be scattered profusely throughout the entire issue of the Badger, including the advertising space (only excluding the cover). There is no one who has not long known that this young man was a promising writer. He has long been restrained from appearing in the "Sphinx" and previous issues of the "Badger," not having been able to make satisfactory arrangements with the publishers, but, having heavily subsidized the present issue he will use it to bring to light the accumulations of many past years.

CONFESSIONS OF A CIGARETTE EATER

By Professor Dodge

This book, written after the style of De Quincey's famous work, should have a large sale, and its influence upon the minds of those addicted to the injurious habit of cigarette smoking cannot but be beneficial. A preface by PROFESSOR BULL is a valuable addition to the book.

How to Crib Through College

By Prof. William Amasa Scott

Author of "Lectures on Cribbing, Its Use and Abuse"
1 Vol. Crown 8vo, 39c

This is the longest and strongest book the professor has yet written. If you are fond of cribbing, read it; if not, read it and you will be. Its success is already assured.

Class Politics, their Ins and Outs

(Especially the Outs)

By William F. Moffatt

MANY will doubtless remember the famous political ring composed of members of last year's Badger Board and the ring's recent downfall. For the first time Mr. Moffatt tells how it happened. A biographical note by J. Bartow Patrick, Mr. Moffatt's Mark Hanna, adds much to the interest of this very commendable work.

Some Women I Have Loved

By FREDDIE CARPENTER, author of Asleep at the Switch, and other poems. With frontispiece, 12mo, $1.50.

Freddie Carpenter is recognized by all readers of fiction as one of the most artistic, self-esteemed and finished novelists of the day, and he has done nothing that shows certain fine characteristics of his work more than this charming gallery of executed miniatures. "Some Women" is a book that will enhance the fine reputation of the author, which he justly deserves.

Some Wild Escapades I Have Had

PARSON P. E. SCHROEDER
 Crownless 1/2 vo, size 1 1/2 x 2 inches.
 Signed and numbered by the author. Edition limited to 13. Price $25.00.

A revelation! A revelation! The adventures set forth in this book make the Arabian Knights turn pale. Never in our own not mild career have we received such a shock. Those who have seen the author only in his role of guileless student will find it hard to believe that this racy volume could have come from his pen. However, the underlying current of truth does not allow the reader to doubt that the author has experienced what he writes.

PRIVATE LIFE of JOHN HICKEY
Janitor A A Rubber A A Man

HARRY E. BRADLEY, author of How to Become a Phi Beta Kappa. With 8 full-page, 100 text illustrations, cloth, 12mo. $2.00 net. (A new and cheaper edition.)

In response to the continued demand for this work, the publishers issue this edition at a popular price. Mr. Bradley has tried to put into a volume of handy size the life of the great Hickey, which would bring out his human side in due proportion to his already well-known Gym life.

Behind the grand, simple strength of the man, as idolized in the popular accounts, lie forces that were molded at Poughkeepsie and by a life full of the roughest experience. This side of Hickey's character has been neglected.

Holding a Kicker

By CLARENCE W. GREGORY. This will be found a very clear and scientifically worded discussion on a most interesting subject to those familiar with the national game. The author's previous works,

Jacks Up,
Should Three Aces Beat a Straight, and a treatise on the advisability of opening a pot on a bum flush when one has a hunch that he will fill, are well and favorably known and should recommend this, his latest book.

"Thoughts For Higher Living" 33

From the spoken and written words of . . .

CHRONICLE AND COMMENT

A Gifted Woman This is pre-eminently the age of woman. She stands at the wheel of social progress. She voices the need of the present. In the world at large it is not rare to find a woman who can talk with omniscience. Such a person, however, has been found but once in the history of the University, and she has come in our generation. This most gifted young woman is Miss Elinor Merrill, who, although still a Junior, has drawn many to her way of thinking. Miss Merrill's speeches are all spontaneous, no notes, not even a plan of thought being decided on before she rises to speak. Up to this time her talks have been made before Self-Government, vespers, and other distinctly feminine gatherings. There is, however, a strong rumor to the effect that Dean Birge has secured her for convocation the last week in May. In case this is true, the Regents will probably be requested to grant the Gym for an auditorium. It will be the best oratorical attraction of the season.

Koffend and Kipling The salient point about Mr. Koffend's vitalizing poetry is that it exhibits the poet-author for a moment as a pupil in the school of the great Kipling. This is shown particularly in the poem, "A Devilish Pre-Lenten Conspiracy," which caused such comment among the members of the Six O'Clock Club, the Classical Club, and other social and literary institutions, when it appeared in the Sphinx of January 12, 1902. There is a dash, a bold, bad vigor, and an unrelentless clinging to the realistic which link these two modern bards in undying amalgamation. A close comparison of the best parts of Mr. Koffend's greatest poem, with "Loots," a characteristic poem of his master, reveals some startling similarities. In both there is a tendency to syncope, and a sacrifice of form to the leading thought. Figures play a minor part in the diction of the two poems. Kipling says:

"That 'is eyes is very often precious stones."

Which contains the bolder figure? This, or the lines in which Koffend makes Hades' King say to Beelzebub:

"That you are right, I'm certain;
We'll have to work to fill our flats
Before Lent draws the curtain."

Could anyone but a Kipling or a Koffend set Lent to such a business and do it so successfully?

Space forbids a line-by-line comparison. Everyone knows Kipling, so we simply append the last stanza of Mr. Koffend's masterpiece. It speaks loudly for itself.

MORAL.

So all you students, good and bad,
 Before the Lenten season
 Attend your work and please be good
 Or Satan'll know the reason;
 He has his wicked eye on you,
 He knows you're good from Lent on,
 So all the imps you see in town,
 Are surely mischief bent on.

Work of "Maurer's Theoretical Eddy Maurer Mechanics and Solution of Units," in addition to its solution of the problems of force and energy, is a masterpiece of unfathomable profoundness. Its unsolved and unsolvable problems are the direct results of his ever fertile brain, its references and quotations are gleaned from a variety of treatises on every subject from "pound (of) feet" to "internal (brain) stresses." Professor Maurer has done considerable work along this line and is very familiar with every part of the subject, having had occasion to present nearly every step in the developments of its preponderant formulæ in four or five different ways to such bodies of large moment of inertia, as Howland, Douglas, Frendburg and others of similar external dimensions and density. Never before has a publication of like character and similar qualities been placed before the inquiring public.

To pass to the question as to whether Professor Maurer's production is worthy of substitution for Haskins and Merriman, we who have dived into its cold, icy depths, swam or floated upon its formula-strewn bosom, sailed between his stress diagrams or paddled in the slush of its surrounding shallows, will vouch that "never can man die better than by facing Eddy's Book." "Not So?"

A New Department Since our last issue, the For Women women of the University, through the Self-Government Board, have been very active in agitating the question of a department of Domestic Science in the University Curriculum. As usual, their requests have been pooh-poohed by the Board of Regents, but many members of the faculty heartily approve. Professor Giese has offered to give up his afternoon classes and conduct the class in Color Study in Home Decoration. Professors Schreiner and Lenher will substitute three-fifths cooking for the women of their classes. For this, two entire alcoves of their Laboratory will be given up, and the Hall matron has even consented to give her original recipes, including her famous "Kartoffels avec fromage," all the rage at the Hall.

Miss Nora McCue, the chief agitator of this movement, especially feels the need of such training.

As great inducement, Miss Merle Pickford has announced that she will return next year in order to take the course; which announcement has caused the Regents to look more favorably upon the enterprise.

To Excel Mr. Henry Overbeck
 Its Winkler's recent announce-
 Own Record ment for the 1903 Sphinx is characteristic. "Editorially as well as artistically, the Sphinx next year will excel even its own record, the only standard by which it can be measured. If you have seen a copy of it recently there is no more to be said—you know it is the one Sphinx of the world."

In the twelve volume edition of these remarkable orations, Edward Bulwer Cochems, the author, gives to the hungry world the unpublished speeches of his University career. Appended to each volume is a dictionary and glossary of technical terms, by the use of which the text is made luminous.

The publishers regret that the complete orations of this brilliant orator cannot be printed, but necessarily the selections made are but brief extracts. To quote from such a well-known author seems uncalled for, yet we cannot refrain a few examples from this extraordinary collection. The most recent and original is this: "The effervescent, rejuvenating spirit that percolates through the soles of all Wisconsin football players and inflates the pulmonaries of every shin-guard enthusiast built our new Historical Library building, raised the geometrically severe Kappa house, and last of all, this spirit gave to us our magnificent 'gymnasium.'"

In vol. vi, page 22, we read: "Brains have been discovered in the Wisconsin football men." Page 93 of vol. xi, contains the following: "They (the players) have the courage of Spanish toreadors, the beauty of Apollo Belvideres, while the 'muscles of their brawny arms are strong as iron bands.'" The edition may be found in all bindings so that the poorest home need not be without it. Sold at all bookstores and news-stands.

Probably nothing published in recent years will receive more unfavorable comment from the public at large than the volume entitled: "Idylls of Politics," by Our Friend. Although it has not been known, even by his intimates, the author has spent several years in a careful study of Machiavelli, having in mind the preparation of such a work as has now appeared. No doubt the strongest chapter in the book, and the one which will be most criticised by those believing in modern methods, is that on "Appointment and the Appointive Power." Mr. Friend clearly shows that he has thoroughly assimilated the teachings of the Italian master and plainly demonstrates his thorough understanding of and adherence to the great "spoils doctrine."

Some Political Principles

The author is mainly to be commended for his honesty of purpose, for he has not elaborated mere theories. As stated in the preface, all conclusions arrived at are the result of actual experience gained only last winter.

Beebe a
Coming Man

Dwight Eastman Beebe is a name that has very recently begun to appear in the best magazines, and his new novel will not disappoint those who admire the less pretentious efforts of the author. Although

Mr. Beebe is a newcomer, his short stories have already attracted attention by their freshness and also by their singular variety. This young author ranges from the boards of the Fuller Opera House to Ferdy Kaestner's, and his quiet, somewhat unconscious mastery of local color is equally convincing in either field. Mr. Beebe makes his first appearance in "The Haresfooters," which will considerably more than fulfill the expectations his short stories have aroused. It is filled with varying contrasting figures and with events that have a dramatic significance. Mr. Beebe knows the stage as only an actor can know it, and at the same time he knows it as can only one who looks at it from without. With actors he shows a sounder acquaintance, less warped by winds of doctrine, than any Wisconsin man has displayed in fifty years. His story of John Brennan's triumphant departure from Ferdy Kaestner's is alone "worth the price of admission," and the end of the villain Patrick behind the wings closes the book with a note of austere tragedy that effectively enhances the power of the Madisonianepic. ❀ ❀ ❀

"Omeger* in Yallow Chalk" By Augustus Trowbridge—A work of unsurpassed originality, of vast scope and opening a field hitherto unopened. A tale of strange weirdness and peculiar interest. A book filled with reading from cover to cover. Order from booksellers, price $1.50.

In this work the author has surpassed himself. The misty phantoms and wild flights of imagination are suggestive of De Quincey in his most characteristic strain. The reader is gradually involved in a labyrinth of mysteries, from which he is magically extricated by the appearance of the cabalistic symbol, "Omeger in Yallow Chalk."

Though all admit the wonderful interest of this story, there is a mooted question regarding its originality. It may, perhaps, be premature to charge the author with plagiarism, but some of the situations in this book remind one of the thrilling scenes in "The Midnight Bather," by Manington. Further productions by this author will help to decide whether these scenes are inspired by the smoke-laden German atmosphere of the author's den or by the reading of similar works.

IMPOSSIBLE

Jack—But, Ethel, surely your father will consent.

Ethel—It's absolutely no use, Jack. You see, you are a Chi Psi and papa is a Psi U.

There was a young fellow named Beebe,
Who thought he was smarter than we be;
But as things came to pass,
He was squelched by the class;
"Requiescat in pace—hic Beebe."

"Where are you going?" asked the casual acquaintance of the pale young man with spectacles.

"Where am I going?" returned the youth, with a wild look in his eye. "I—ha! ha!—I'm going to the Quisics Phiz—a—that is—a Physics Phiz—a—ha! ha!—a Quisics Quiz—"

There was a shriek of demoniacal laughter.

It was the tenth time he had been asked that question and the strain had been too great.

AT THE DELTA GAMMA HOUSE

Miss Hughes—Say, Agnes, lend me my cuff-buttons for a little while, will you?

THE TRIP WE DIDN'T TAKE

(The Badger's interview with the manager of last year's Glee Club concert tour.)

"The only really, truly trip we took was the time the faculty let us go as far as the Fuller Opera House to give the home concert. You see, the faculty 'tripped' us so hard when we first went at them on the subject of pleasure jaunts about the state, and we 'tumbled' so hard when we did fall, that we couldn't stop bounding long enough to catch our breath for the rest of the season.

"The night we took the trip to the Opera House, I refer to, our chaperones wouldn't allow us to go any way but Langdon Street and Wisconsin Avenue. They were afraid that passing through the contaminating atmosphere of State Street might leave us unfit to perform in the evening's entertainment. As it happened one of our littlest boys caught sight of a ginger ale sign a couple of blocks away and had to be fed Bromos for an hour to bring him to earth again.

"But the trip we didn't take was really too fine for description. We covered the entire state, in our minds, each fellow having us play at least once in his home town, and we always sold standing room only (they all stood it somehow). No, we didn't disgrace ourselves. Our behavior was so good it caused comment, almost newspaper criticism. We never even gave the yell at the close of our performances.

"Yes, we had a perfectly dandy time—the trip is one to be remembered. You may say that the boys took their own Minniwakan water with them, in preference to anything weaker. "Thanks? Oh, not at all! It's a pleasure to tell about the good times we had."

THE SANDMAN.

The sandman is coming, children,
He is never far away.
And he brings great loads of the yellow sand
On every wintry day.
So softly he scatters it; close, close your eyes
As wildly before you the golden dust flies.
It flies most at morning before it strikes eight,
And it's woe to you, children, if the sandman is late.
For the stars then are shooting, as all children know,
And the sidewalks are slippery when the sandman is slow.
Come, sandman, come, and with bounteous hand
Scatter, oh scatter, your golden sand.

Old gentleman to dapper young man with a gold tipped cigarette—"So you're a student at the University now are you?"

Dapper young man—"O, NO, father wanted me to be but I thought I'd rather be a Chi Psi."

AT THE END OF THE YEAR

Leslie W. Quirk

HE sat with his head bowed, his hand on his forehead, looking out the window. Twilight had fallen early to-night, for the sky was overcast with clouds. Inside the room the light had faded black; it suited the boy's fancy to sit thus, alone with the darkness and his thoughts. For the boy had met failure.

He said it over to himself as he sat there—forced himself to say it—and each time the word was more ugly than before. It was his own fault—he knew that—yet the knowledge did not comfort him. He had failed—failed—and he repeated the word with the dull pain that is not pain at all and yet is more than pain.

He remembered the day he had gone to the class officer for his standings. Even then he had been uneasy, but he never for a moment dreamed of failure in more than one study. Then the class officer had run over his cards, looked pityingly up at him, shuffled them again, and had finally told him, as gently as possible, that he had failed; that he could not go on with his class.

He remembered he had not moved a muscle when the class officer told him; he had stood there looking out the window over the upper campus, where two freshmen were romping and shouting. Then he had turned quietly, after thanking the class officer from mere force of habit, and moved slowly toward the door. The class officer had spoken to him as he went out—he remembered that —but he never heeded the words of sympathy. Straight to his room he had come, with the sorrow locked in his heart.

He sat by the window now, thinking of the disgrace. It was raining outside, softly, drearily. The water dripped from the trees monotonously, and pattered steadily on the umbrellas of the hurrying pedestrians. From the dull, leaden sky the water oozed with slow reluctance, till the whole cloud-imprisoned air was a great soggy mist, chill and somber.

He shivered a bit at the dampness that had crept into the room, and frowned as he heard somebody open the piano downstairs. He wanted to be alone with his thoughts. What right had anyone to bother him? He knew they did not mean to reproach him; no one would do that. Even when he went home, his mother would meet him at the gate, just as she used to do, and reach up and kiss him. But he knew he had almost broken her heart, and it hurt him as nothing else could have done. He could never again face his mother. He had cut all the ties that bound them together.

Outside, the rain flared suddenly into great drops of water, that splashed angrily on the smooth asphalt and mottled it where they struck. A sudden gust of wind furrowed the little pools into deep, changing wrinkles, and then blew over and was gone, leaving the air still and fresh where the rain had been falling. It comforted the boy somehow, and he nodded in friendly interest as some birds hopped out into the street with many a coquettish flirt of downy feathers. There was happiness somewhere, at least. And perhaps, after all, it was not such a disgrace. He would go back home. Then, as the piano below burst into a rollicking air, he drew his breath sharply and stopped. He could not go home. He had disgraced his family as well as himself. His life was ruined.

A moment later, with a blast of wind, the rain began once more, and the boy shivered and drew near the fire. It was not a quiet rain now, but a gusty shower, where the water sifted through clouds of gray and black, and fell in vapory mists one moment and in drenching downpour the next. It beat noisily in the street; then died into perfect silence; next it shrieked as the wind brought a fresh downpour; then, with a last splatter, the shower ended as suddenly as it had begun.

Downstairs, the piano stopped in the midst of a bar, and for a moment was silent. Then, slowly and with much feeling, came the notes of "Auld Lang Syne." The boy buried his head in the cushion as he heard it, and cried softly to himself. It hurt him, the music, more than he could tell. It brought back the memories of home and mother, the memories he was trying to force from his mind. But presently the notes of the piano died softly away, and he raised his head.

He looked out the window far up the street to where an arch light spluttered uncertainly, and noted the rainbow tints of blue and yellow and red on the glistening pavement, as the film of water swirled and eddied from a horse's hoof or a carriage wheel. He would write a short theme describing it, he determined, and he brought out his pencil and paper. Then—he laid them away. His time for writing themes was a thing of yesterday. To-day he had met failure; to-morrow, by his own hand, he would be an outcast.

From below drifted the notes of the piano, picked idly and without tune. But as he listened, the bass and treble blended, and there came an air he knew, softly, dreamily, with heart-breaking sweetness. It was "Home, Sweet Home." There was none of the master's touch here, to be sure, but it was the same music that has crept into so many bleeding hearts.

The boy listened with strained ear, fearful lest a single note should escape him. As the music died away with its pleading, sobbing ecstasy, he picked up a photograph of his mother that he had dropped, and held it reverently in front of him.

"I'm coming home, mother," he said, softly, "and start all over again. You and I will be friends to the last—yes, friends to the last." And the tired head sank into the cushion again, and the boy was asleep.

It was morning when he woke, a Sunday morning in early summer. Outside, a June sun blazed triumphantly, with never a hint of rain. The trees lent cool blotches of shade to the walk; the parasols of the church-goers darkened it for a moment, and then passed away. Up in the blue sky, little flecks of white cloud drifted aimlessly along, so far above the green earth that they seemed floating in the sea of blue, tranquil and with infinite calm.

THE WOODS WALK

Oh! the walk through the woods by the lake
In winter or summer we take,
With a rest at the start,
For 'tis hard on the heart—
Is the walk through the woods by the lake.

Oh! the walk by the lake through the woods!
How often in varying moods
Have we sat there and talked
Or dreamily walked
While the winds rippled soft through the woods.

Oh! the walk through the woods by the lake,
May it last for sweet memories' sake,
So our children, in turn,
When they come here, may learn
Of the walk through the woods by the lake!

THAT CENT

One day a maiden, deeply interested in a Geology lecture, was suddenly startled by being struck on the cheek by a penny. She immediately turned to find the guilty, but in vain. Later informed as to the offender, this witty maid sent to him the following note, with the cent attached to the top: "A cent should never be miss sent." The same day this maiden received a beautiful bouquet of flowers with the following attached: "May the scent of these flowers prove me innocent—and out a dollar."

FOR THE LAST TIME

THE Middleton eating house was nearly deserted. Two people turned the pages of the old register.

"Here's my name for the first time," said Maurice Brown. "And here's Jean Caldwell." She pointed to her own name on the opposite page. "I was with John Rodgers. Nice old John, he was mighty good to me my freshman year—a green lass from his native town."

They turned the old pages. Out in the dining-room, they heard the clearing away of the table where they had eaten. No one else had driven to Middleton that afternoon. The warm summer sun came in through the windows.

"Let's trace ourselves," suggested Maurice, opening to the first page of four years before. "Ah, here I am again. With Mary Wallace this time." Both laughed. "By the way, where is Mary now?" asked Jean.

"She knows better than I," was his answer, "I haven't seen her since she left college."

"For there I took the last farewell, O my sweet Highland Mary," quoted Jean as she turned another page.

"Some more Sunny," he retorted; "I thought I had dropped Burns forever when Sunny gave me a fair in General Survey."

"See here we are again," he continued, Maurice Brown and Jean Caldwell. I remember that time, don't you, Jean? When it rained on top the snow and we had a sleighride home under an umbrella? Here we are another time with Peggy Powell and Sawyer. We were a great four-in-hand, weren't we? What do you suppose Sawyer told me when I saw him in Milwaukee last week?"

"I can't imagine, so tell me."

"That some day Peggy is going to be Mrs. Jim Sawyer."

"Peggy and Jim Sawyer? Who ever would have dreamed it!"

"Here we appear again," he continued. "You're down here with Billy Mathews. I used to think that was quite a crush. You say you didn't? Well, there's no accounting for opinions. Here's the crowd of six we came out with last year several times. I remember we didn't always put our names down because you said they were written often enough as it was. We've been mighty faithful to the old place, haven't we?"

Jean had looked from the book to the window. Her eyes were on the one pedestrian on the street of Middleton, but her thoughts did not follow. "It's about the last time we register, isn't it, Maurice?" she asked, softly.

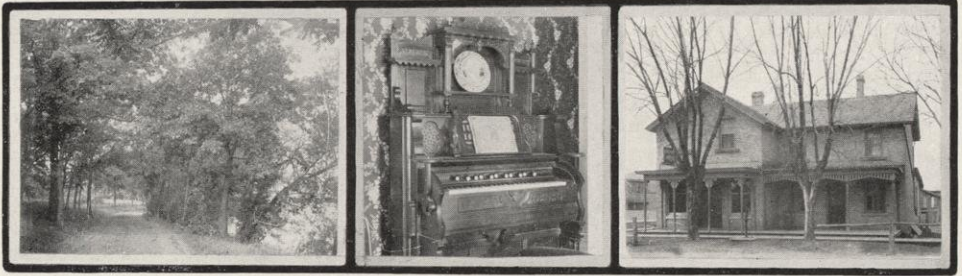

He took up the old pen. "Here it goes."

Maurice Brown, Jean—he hesitated a moment, inverted the pen and with the wooden end he traced "Jean, my Bonny Jean."

"It's only a bit more of Burns," he said. "And it is true Burns."

Jean, you know it is true even if I haven't told you, don't you?

She did not answer.
 "You know I—care for you more than I do for any one else."
 She looked a moment at his face.
 "Yes, Maurice," she answered, "I believe you do."
 He shut the book and they left the little office.
 The sunset was glorious behind them as they drove to Madison.

THE ODE OF HESPERIA

By an Hesperian Himself

Hesperians all in unity
 Knit by Love's attraction,
 Let us gird our armor on,
 Now is time for action.

CHORUS:

Raise the starry emblem high,
 Show the world we are not dumb;
 Let our cry and watchword be Magna Parens Virum.

Shall we basely bend the knee
 To Athena? NEVER!!!
 Hand to hand we'll firmly stand/
 Hesperians forever.

(The above is the dedicatory ode to the extensive collection of "best" songs that Hesperia is making.)

I. Minnesota comes on the field

Hully Gee!

II. Wisconsin holds them for downs

Well!

III. Wiseman blocks a kick and scores two points

Wouldn't that crush you?

IV. Minnesota gets close to Wisconsin's goal

Um!!!

V. Larsen makes a touchdown

Whee! Hurray!

VI. Victory, 18 to 0.

I'm not digging holes today. Mr. Cresson.

Horace, Odes, Bk. III, 30

A monument I've wrought more lasting far
Than bronze, more lofty than the crumbling peak
Of Pharaoh's tomb; that not corroding rains
Nor furious Northwind, nor the countless flood
Of years, nor yet the season's fleeting change,
Can waste to ruin. Not wholly shall I die;
The greater part of me shall flee the tomb.
Crowned ever with fresh laurels, shall
My fame in years to come unending grow.
Until the pontifer the Capitol
No longer with the silent virgin climbs,
Till then, where headlong Ausidus roars down
And where the parched Daunus rules, the lord
Of rustic folk, grown strong from lowly birth
Shall I be hailed the leader and the first
Of those who shaped Aeolian song to strains
Of Rome. Receive my honest-earned pride,
Melpomene, and on my Roman brow
With gracious hands the Delphic laurel bind.

Horace, Odes, Bk. I, 30

Venus, royal mistress of Carian Cindos,
And of Paphos, leave thy beloved Cyprus:
Hie thee to fair Glycera's dainty altar,
Smoking with incense.

Nymphs and comely Graces with loosened girdles,
Youth, without thee, robbed of its sweetest lurements,
Ruddy Cupid, Mercury hastening after—
May these attend thee.

A LITTLE TALE OF LAKE MENDOTA

By Horatio G. Winslow

SEATED on a high fence, overlooking the campus, sat B. Franklin Berry, newspaper correspondent. There was a smile of satisfaction on his face as he looked down at the fierce class rush which was being fought out at his feet.

"This ought to be worth a column, at least," he confided to himself as he remembered how kindly the Chicago Bugle Call had received his account of the "lake rush" a month before.

"And it's good for six dollars, sure!" B. Franklin Berry chewed ecstatically at the point of his pencil.

"Aha! Smith at it again, is he?" A little black note-book came out of his pocket and he jotted down the words "Smith, R. L.," by which he meant that the aforementioned Mr. Smith was a ringleader.

Smith, "Pudge" Smith, the object of Mr. Berry's attention, was one of the choice spirits of the Freshman class. His fertile brain it was that devised the Freshman yell and his ready hand it was that pasted the Freshman posters. Now, however, "Pudge" was lying on the ground where he had been hurled after a brief but strenuous combat with a husky Sophomore. The rush had rushed itself away from the prostrate Freshman, leaving him alone.

As B. Franklin noticed him, "Pudge" staggered to his feet. Their eyes met. B. Franklin was smoking a cigarette, and, as far as the cigarette permitted, was smiling an amused, cynical smile.

"Hello, 'Pudge,'" he said, familiarly.

"Hello," said "Pudge," who could not remember having seen B. Franklin Berry before.

"Perhaps you don't remember me?"

"Can't say I do."

"My name is Berry, B. Franklin Berry. I'm reporting this for the Chicago papers. Neat little scrap, isn't it?"

Little Smith picked up his ears.

"You're a correspondent for the big city papers?"

"Yes."

"Then maybe you wrote that spiel that was in the Chicago Bugle Call about our lake rush."

"Sure I did. That was mine. Do you remember it?" A pleased smile stole over B. Franklin's features. He liked to have his work appreciated.

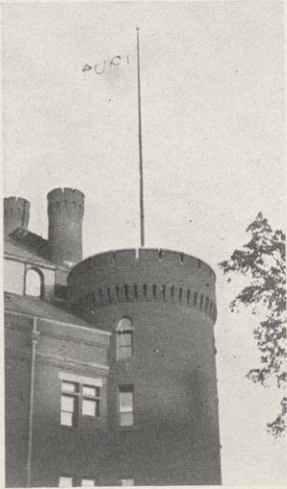

And did "Pudge" remember it? Did "Pudge" remember how his name had been copied all over the state because he, the son of a minister, had been a ringleader? Did "Pudge" remember the scorching letter that came from his father and the expected check that didn't come?

"Do I remember it?" said "Pudge;" "you're darned right I remember it."

Turning from where he had been standing, he ran up to a couple of his classmates, who were resting from the fray.

"Give me a lift up, fellows. I want to say something to the crowd."

They obeyed blindly and "Pudge" stood up, one foot on the shoulder of each and his legs braced by their hands.

"Fellows!" he shouted. "Oh, fellows!"

The fight had stopped at the sound of his voice and, when the combatants looked toward him, ceased altogether.

"Fellows, over there on the fence is a correspondent. He's writing a report of this scrap, just the way he did about the lake rush, and he'll get us into trouble again, just the way he did before. Let's show the Chicago papers what we think of 'em, and chuck this guy into the lake!"

Never was a speech answered more promptly. In an instant all enmity between the two classes was forgotten and, with a wild rush, two hundred and fifty frenzied boys made for the lattice fence.

In vain did B. Franklin Berry put his note-book in his pocket; in vain did he run at full speed through a succession of back yards; in vain did he proclaim his innocence. Strong arms seized him and the note-book sealed his doom.

"I n-never meant anything by it," moaned B. Franklin, as the procession moved toward the lake.

"And we don't mean anything by this, either," said "Pudge," cheerily. "We're just givin' you something to write up. That's all."

They reached the lake. Four brawny young men rolled up their trousers and, catching Mr. Berry by the arms and legs, waded a few feet out into the lake. They swung him to and fro between them. One! Two!! Three!!! And B. Franklin Berry flew ten feet out into the lake. Splash!

The crowd cheered wildly.

He was a mournful sight as he brushed the water out of his eyes and looked feebly about for his hat.

"Hold on! Don't come in yet. Give us our yell," called an enthusiastic Freshman.

"I don't know it," the correspondent groaned.

"You're another," retorted "Pudge." "It was in your account of the lake rush. Yell it or we'll duck you again."

And he yelled.

"Give ours," commanded a Sophomore, and a second time B. Franklin Berry made the welkin ring.

"Now," suggested the diminutive "Pudge," "lead us in the varsity yell. Give it good and loud, too."

"U! Rah! Rah!" the shivering newspaper man began. It was taken up by the two classes and the bystanders until the windows in the gymnasium rattled—

U! Rah! Rah! Wis-con-sin!

U! Rah! Rah! Wis-con-sin!

U! Rah! Rah! Wis-con-sin!

Tiger!

THE SONG OF THE HOO HOO

I sit in the gloaming, with whiskers all foaming,
While hubbubs are roaming outside in the gloom,
Consistently glueing my fingers with blueing;
There's nothing else doing, and I must have room!
You may talk about pleasure in eating ice cream,
But I find hot flatirons much better with steam.
So, fill up your glasses with lukewarm molasses
And drink to the classes of which we all dream.

My bonnie lies dying, my hopes are all frying,
My pork-chops are drying out there in the rain.
Weep not for my Susan, she snores while she's snoozin';
The way she is boozin' would give you a pain.
So, bring on your soap and your crackers and fizz—
I'm the greatest of Hoo Hoos—the first in the "biz."
I feed upon scholars (who minds it they hollers,
Or chew up their collars, to hear them go whiz?)

So, I sits in the breezes and chokes and I wheezes
And scratches my fleases (that's put there to rhyme),
And often I teeters my tail on gas meters
And swallows muskeeters a foot at a time.
Just fill up my whiskers with salt and with grain
And think that you've gathered your feet in your brain.
So, here now begin it, read this for a minute—
If you find sense within it, you must be insane!

VIRTUE ITS OWN REWARD

"John Friend is also a strong student and seems to be the affable popular man he always was among his Antigo classmates, as he was chosen to the coveted position of President of the Senior Class. When one thinks that this means a choice by some five hundred fellow-students, the honor certainly is more than a passing tribute."—Clipped from Antigo Republican of Dec. 26, 1901.

THE QUIET ONE

A Character Sketch

HE is always in a certain lecture room of Science Hall. I think he assists in physiology, or something. He is excessively quiet and seems absolutely lifeless, even though he wears so broad a smile that it shows all his fine white teeth. I hear that he receives a little attention from the boys at times, but never makes any response. He has never noticed me in any way—perhaps he has not seen me.

He is loosely put together, without an ounce of superfluous flesh over his bones. He has a lean and hungry look as if in need of a good dinner. He is bald as bald can be, and is quite pale. His eyes are deep set and have a vacant look. There is not enough of his nose to describe. The top of his head has something very peculiar about it which I will speak of later.

His habitual attitude is one of excessive meekness as if he were apologizing for being in the world. Once

I saw him with his hands on his hips and a cigarette between his teeth; his rakish air seemed quite inappropriate. His manners are well enough, of a negative sort; he never stuffs his hands into his pockets, nor makes one nervous by walking about, or by making unnecessary motions or noises.

The highest art in dressing is to wear clothes that are unnoticeable. He, then, must be a true artist, for I have never noticed his clothing at all.

There is a look in his face as if he had gone through some terrible experience that had cut him off from his kind and left him without the passions of humanity. I feel sure he would not resent what many a man might regard as an insult, though if attacked with fists he might give way, and falling upon his enemy, work him some harm.

The last time I saw him he was suspended from an iron rod by a ring which was fastened into the top of his skull—a beautifully articulated skeleton.

US

A Serio-Comedy

By the Faculty Before an Audience of Students

(The stage is filled with professors, doctors, instructors and assistants, constituting a chorus, led by Dean Birge, as première danseuse. All join hands, circle around and sing.)

OPENING CHORUS.

Behold in us the exponents of mental stimulation,
A world of work we labor in for others' elevation;
We are an inconceivably learned aggregation.

But now we will relax
And your patience we will tax
With a musical rendition of indisputable facts.

(The chorus now slowly retreats to rear singing, while the orchestra enthusiastically plays lively accompaniment.)

Here come our two boy prodigies,
Our infantile monstrosities,
Whose equals it would be quite mad to seek;
With learning that's amazing,
And precocity that's dazing,
These two present a spectacle that's certainly unique.

Then listen to their history,
An unexampled mystery,
Which others strive in vain to emulate;
Unquestioned in veracity,
And free from all mendacity,
Your strict attention their discourse will amply compensate.

(While the rest of the faculty look on with an air of tender affection, Drs. Fish and Tilton, in child's costume, toddle onto the stage and sing in lisping voice. The Dean stands near, smiling encouragingly.)

DR. TILTON:

I could read and write when I was only two,
At the age of six, my teacher sums I'd show,
And what I had not read,
And stored safely in my head,
It really is not worth your while to know.

DR. FISH:

When in dresses I had read the Bible through,
And at five new worlds to conquer I would seek,
I knew all of algebra,
And disserted with my pa
In the purest, uncorrupted ancient Greek.

BOTH:

We're different, we're different from common clay, you see,
And you cannot find our equals throughout all the faculty;
And whatever your opinion is, we both of us agree
That we're paragons of learning and of perspicacity.

DR. TILTON:

And now I am imparting history
At the very tender age of twenty-three;

Though only an assistant,
I am fully as proficient
As most at twice my age may hope to be.

DR. FISH:

Though to tell you I am very greatly pained,
At your density I'm often much ashamed,
And as to reputation,
I am filled with admiration
At the wondrous elevation I've attained.

CHORUS.

They're different, they're different from common clay, you see,
And you cannot find their equals throughout all the faculty;
And whatever your opinion is, we all of us agree
That they're paragons of learning and of perspicacity.

(The stage is darkened; a weird light plays over the scene, while the orchestra plays mysterioso. Professor Slichter, with a darklantern and a pair of handcuffs, and with two huge horse pistols protruding from his boots, slinks stealthily onto the stage, casting furtive glances to right and left. Removes an enormous dirk from between his teeth and sings, sotto voce, the last verse crescendo.)

You all have heard of Sherlock Holmes,
Nick Carter and Old Sleuth,
And others who have won renown
In running down the truth.

There's Diamond Dick, Perspicuous
Pete,
LeCocq and Slippery Sam;
But famous as are all of these
The peer of each I am.

You that have played football, take care!
Trackmen and baseball men, beware!!
Come to Wisconsin if you dare!!!
I'll fix you!!!!

(Fires his pistols into the air and disappears in a cloud of smoke. As the smoke clears away, Samuel Erstwhile Sparling is disclosed, yawning and rubbing his eyes, while the orchestra plays a soporific air. The audience gradually falls asleep, and Happy Werder snores peacefully.)

SOPORIFIC SOLO.

Oh; my classes please
All in search of ease,
And my lectures are lullabies;
For they bring rest
To the troubled breast
And sleep to the weary eyes.

(Chorus drowsily chants.)

"Slow, slow, you can hear him go,
Dust of dreams in their eyes to throw."
Till the little bell, with its merry chime,
Cheerily rings the call of time.
Ting-a-ling-ling!

(He mumbles a few more lines, yawns, and retires nodding. Several loud shrieks are heard from behind the scenes, followed by a tremendous crash; the stage is flooded with light, and red fire is burned behind the wings. John M. Olin leaps to the center of the stage with a snarl and facial contortions indicative of unassuageable ferocity. Great commotion among the audience. Law students make frantic efforts to escape from the hall. Hank Casson may be seen making a futile attempt to close himself up in an umbrella. Mr. Olin glares about him for a moment, while Casson bumps his head thrice upon the floor; the Chorus bows profoundly, and Mr. Olin roars out in a tremendous voice.)

John M. Olin is my name;
The law is my vocation,
And scaring students most to death
My greatest delectation;

"THE PEER OF EACH I AM."

I never intersperse a joke to make their labors light;
I spur them on to work, by pure unmiti-
gated fright;
I rage at them and storm at them, and war with all my might,
For that's the way to make them first-class lawyers.

FACULTY CHORUS.

Oh! that's the way to make them first-
class lawyers;
For certainly we know this to be so,
That although it may be fright
That makes them all recite,
Their Monday morning's lesson they are always sure to know.

(Mr. Olin stalks from the stage. The orchestra now plays a triumphal march. All are hushed while Professor Julius Olson, magnificently arrayed in robes of state, crowned, attended by the officers of the Self-Government Association as ladies-in-waiting, and his train borne by the Junior Prom. Committee as pages, appears and proceeds to the footlights, while the whole company bows profoundly. He bows majestically in graceful acknowledgment, doffing his crown. Sings.)

SOLO.

Behold in me the arbiter of varsity society—
Of all the social functions I'm the
head;
I'm imperator of fashion and dictator of propriety,
And every one must follow where I've
led.

If you want to go to parties and to military hops,
Get my permission first or stay away;
If you want to wear a purple vest with green and yellow socks,

Come to me and hear what I may have to say;
If you think of eating breakfast at the early hour of four,
Or supper in the middle of the day;
Or, if when you are hungry, you're afraid
to ask for more,
Come to me and I will tell you if you may.

CHORUS.

Behold in him the arbiter of varsity society—
Of all the social functions he's the
head;
He's imperator of fashion and dictator of
propriety,
And every one must follow where he's led.

(The whole company, headed by the Dean and Mr. Olson, now execute a complicated figure—then sing in a sprightly manner the closing chorus.)

CHORUS.

'Tis the hour of nine
By the big bell's chime,
And it's time you were all abed;
You must be deep
In your beauty sleep;
Ere the strokes of ten are heard o'erhead.

To our tender care
You're intrusted here,
For we take the place
Of your parents dear;
And we watch o'er you
With a jealous eye,
And with many a tear
And groan and sigh.

Then up and away with you, one and all,

"BEHOLD IN ME THE ARBITER OF VARSITY SOCIETY."

Home to your landladies, large and small;
Let each climb into his little bed,
When the lights are out and his prayers
are said;

And let the theme of your sweet dreams
be,
The virtues of Us, the faculty.

(CURTAIN.)

STRANGE THINGS DO HAPPEN

The Senior Ball was over, the last row taken on Mendota and they knew that they must part.

He knew that every moment of vacation would be spoiled for him, because he would miss her so; she felt that her heart would have its secret sorrow, and they were very sincere and melancholy.

The first week was terrible, their parents marveled at the variability of their tempers—and could not understand it—as you do, my friend, or as I.

And his letters were filled with resentment at their separation, and hers contained much that was very pathetic, and they wrote many things that you wouldn't write, nor would I.

Tho there could be no pleasure in it, she consented to spend a few weeks at a resort with friends; he betook himself on a trip to New York.

And when the Fall time had come, and they found themselves merely passing acquaintances, they marveled at it greatly and could not understand it, as you do, or as I.

She—Was that Chicago man badly injured?

He—Yes, hopelessly, I'm afraid; he is delirious and seems to imagine that his team is winning.

A TOAST

(With an apology to the "Yellow and the Blue.")
Here's to our college that stands on the hill,
And here's to Mendota so blue;
Here's to the co-eds, whose graces we sing,
And here's to the boys of our crew;
Cardinal streamers by fair hands entwined,
And hearts that beat true and voices combined,
Hail!

Hail to our college that stands on the hill!
And hail to Mendota so blue!

AND SHE WAS

[TRIOLET]

"You're a dream," I declared
As she passed out of sight;
Yes, I sat there and stared;
"You're a dream," I declared;
Then I woke and despaired
For I saw I was right.
"You're a dream," I declared
As she passed out of sight.

THE HAMBURG REVOLUTION

The girls at Chadbourne had a meet whereto their members went ;
With cries 'gainst fish and Hamburg the evening air was rent ;
"Down with Sunday wieners, with cheese and salmon pie !"
From throats of many Chadbourne girls resounded loud the cry ;
One thoughtful maiden, rising with determined gesture, said :
"Let's notify the regents that we girls are underfed ;"
No sooner said than carried out ; the pencils rushed like mad,
And framed this little letter, in latest writing fad :
"Dear Mr. Regents : We are starved. Our cheeks have hollow grown ;
We came as plump as partridges—we're now but skin and bone ;
Our pretty eyes are all sunk in, our dimples are starved out,
We sigh, but ah ! we sigh in vain, for days when we were stout ;
And, all in all, we you beseech, as men, as regents—friends,
To us poor starving Hall girls to make some slight amends."

A CUT

[TRIOLET]

We passed on the street and I took off my hat
(It was only last week that I met her) ;
I thought that perhaps she might stop for a chat ;
We passed on the street and I took off my hat ;
Alas ! all my well-meant politeness fell flat,
For she didn't know me in my sweater.
We passed on the street and I took off my hat ;
(It was only last week that I met her).

Minnesota Rooter (who came down in a chartered coach)—Is our coach in this train ?

The conductor (who, perhaps, misunderstood)—No ;
I saw him going back before the first half was over.

O'Shea—Few people make collections after they have passed the 14-year mark. Has anyone in the class had a different experience ?

Clarence Du Four—I, sir. I am making a collection of coins.

O'Shea—Coins ? Ah ! And do you still keep it up ?

Du Four—Whenever I can get my hands on them.

THE FRESHIE OF IT

On the train—Freshman to Alumnus—Are you going back to Madison this fall ?

Alumnus—Yes ; I'm going to "rush."

Freshman—I always thought Rush was in Chicago.

[SEE PAGE 35 FOR "PRISCILLA'S EYES."]

PRISCILLA'S EYES

Priscilla's eyes are fair to see
When she so coyly looks at me ;
The flashes from those depths of gray
Her inmost thoughts to me betray ;
I could not want a better key.

Sometimes they dance in open glee ;
Sometimes a storm I can foresee,
And then I hasten to obey
Priscilla's eyes.

When at her feet on bended knee
I urge my oft-repeated plea,
Altho' Priscilla says me nay,
Those tell-tale eyes her love display—
Ah! then, I dearly like to see
Priscilla's eyes.

ACCORDING TO THE RULES

(TRIOLET)

The turbulent young sophomore kicked
About the style of board ;
And so the Club, whose rules were strict,
The turbulent young sophomore kicked
Until he was most soundly licked
And tossed about and floored ;
The turbulent young sophomore kicked
About the style of board.

SHE—No. Why ?

HE—
There are waves in the floor,
And swells by the score,
And ripples of laughter and glee ;
And waves in the hair
Of the maids who are there—
A good place you plainly can see (sea).

THE STONE BENCH

There's a certain place on the campus green,
Where words are said and things are seen ;
A place where only two belong,
Somewhat apart from the curious throng—
'Tis the bench by the old Chem. Lab.

There is never a one who e'er will tell,
Of all the people who know them well,
The name of a man or the name of a maid,
Who ever sat in the sun or shade,
On the bench by the old Chem. Lab.

When a girl snickered out,
"My, what a cute little boy."

She brought with her Trigs and Greek grammars
And histories that filled up a trunk,
But she was the very first Freshman
That made a jolly big flunk.

SMITHSON'S REVENGE

By Stephen Conrad Stuntz

IT was Monday after the Minnesota football game, and the boys had not yet settled down to work. A dozen or more had gathered in Smithson's room, and sat there, talking of the newspaper accounts of the game, when they were suddenly interrupted by an exclamation from Smithson himself, who lay back in one corner of the big lounge, half smothered under a pile of sofa pillows. He had been shouting "Poor old Gophers!" very much out of tune until the callers had sat on him. Now he lay quiet, planning some new effect in the arrangement of the decorations, until his eye chanced to note a vacant space in the row of pictures over the mantel. He darted across the room, glanced hastily around, then burst out, "Say, fellows, I'll fix that man. He's swiped my McGregor picture, the one in the low-neck gown, you know. It's that fool Gopher, Williams; he was always rubbering at it, and I'll bet, that last night, when he packed he quietly walked off with it. He thought it was some varsity girl. Well, I'll fix him." Then in the presence of all assembled he took the solemn oath of the house, that he would never rest until he had revenge upon the many-adjectived villain who had wantonly and feloniously, without cause or reason for action, walked off with his dear possession. "I was hot at him for trying to rub it into us so about not betting, with his little 'You might have had the money, but you only got the game,' but now I will fix him."

A letter from Williams a few days later gave the opportunity so much wished for. The letter read: "MY DEAR SMITHSON:

"I hope you will pardon my nerve in walking off with that girl's picture from your mantel. But I know you can easily get another and I wanted this so much. Am awful sorry I didn't meet the original of the picture when I was down. I'm going to ask an awful favor of you, but know you'll grant it. I'm planning to come down to the Junior Prom, and am going to have the presumption to ask you to ask the young lady (I didn't catch the name, but she's in the U., isn't she?) to go to the Prom with me. Will you also make all arrangements about tickets, carriages, etc.? I'll look out for the flowers. I'll be awfully much obliged and will be glad to do the same for you some day up here, only the Skiumah girls don't hold a candle to the original of that picture. Remember me to the other fellows.

"Yours in brotherly affliction,
"U. M. WILLIAMS."

"U. M., that's Ugly Mug," was Smithson's only comment before the assembled boys. "Now I will fix him good and proper."

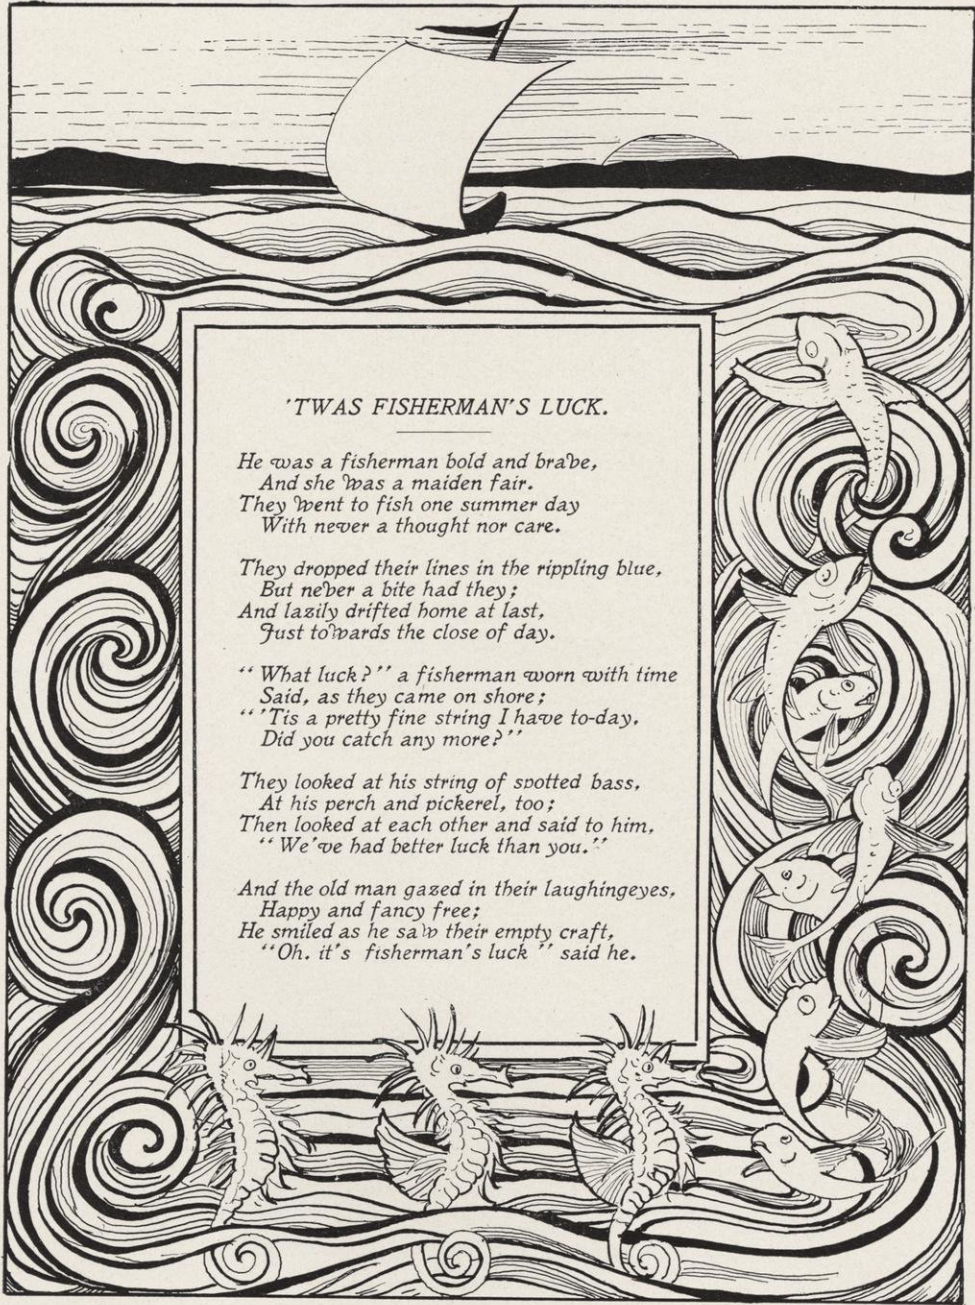

Smithson's arrangements went off smoothly, for the boys at the house heard nothing more of the affair until the day of the Prom when

Williams arrived from Minnesota. He wished very much to meet the young lady who was to accompany him that evening, but when Smithson went to the telephone, all he could get was that her dress hadn't come from the dressmaker's yet, and that she didn't want to see anyone. He appeased Williams as best he could, took him around to one of the receptions of the day, and delighted him when he got back to the house by the message from the young lady that he might bring Mr. Williams around a little early if he wished, and that the flowers had come. Smithson contrived, as they were dressing, to present Williams with the bill for the tickets and carriage. "I hope you'll pardon me, but I've already paid for these, and as I'm to leave town by the three o'clock train in the morning, I thought probably you would wish to settle up before I go." The matter was soon settled and they started for the residence of the young lady. As the carriage drew up in front of the young lady's house a burst of noise came out, but Smithson's quick exclamation, "noisy crowd in the house just back," explained it, and they stepped upon the porch. Their ring was answered by a young man in full dress. "Beg pardon, but I came after one of the girls and the maids are all busy, so I'll let you in. You won't mind, I hope." He started up the stairway, but was met at the landing by someone, who whispered, "Miss McGregor? I'll call her; she's ready, I think." Almost immediately a light footstep was heard on the stairs and then there swept into the room a vision in a full-length white ball wrap. The introductions were over in a minute and Miss Gregor McGregor and Mr. U. M. Williams were chatting away quite oblivious of Smithson. Then Smithson rose abruptly, cleared his throat, and as, at this signal, a crowd of young fellows rushed in from the back parlor and hallway, he began, "Mr. Williams, when you stole my picture of Miss McGregor, I vowed I would have revenge on you. Miss McGregor kindly consented to assist me in obtaining it, and I leave you to her tender mercies." He turned to go, but the young gentlemen, most of whom Williams had met that afternoon, gathered closely around as the young lady said, "I regret very much, Mr. Williams, that I cannot afford the time to keep up this masquerade any longer, but—" with one sweep the wrap was thrown off and the blonde wig removed, revealing to the amazed Williams a youth in full-dress suit, "it is quite time that I was starting after my partner for the evening. The picture you stole was myself as I appeared at the amateur circus last year. Good night."

* * * * *

Early the next morning a disgusted Gopher crawled out of the North-Western Limited at Minneapolis, stopped at a telegraph office to telegraph to his father for more money, then dragged himself wearily to his room, where soon the infinitesimal fragments of a picture of a youth in a low-necked gown littered the floor.

'T WAS FISHERMAN'S LUCK.

*He was a fisherman bold and brave,
And she was a maiden fair.
They went to fish one summer day
With never a thought nor care.*

*They dropped their lines in the rippling blue,
But ne'er a bite had they;
And lazily drifted home at last,
Just towards the close of day.*

*"What luck?" a fisherman worn with time
Said, as they came on shore;
"Tis a pretty fine string I have to-day,
Did you catch any more?"*

*They looked at his string of spotted bass,
At his perch and pickerel, too;
Then looked at each other and said to him,
"We've had better luck than you."*

*And the old man gazed in their laughing eyes,
Happy and fancy free;
He smiled as he saw their empty craft,
"Oh, it's fisherman's luck" said he.*

CHRISTMAS CARROLLS

With Apologies to Sylvia and Bruno

DECEMBER 21

He thought he saw his pocket-book
While walking out one day;
He looked again and saw it was
A great big load of hay.
“Should I lose sight of you,” he said,
“I’d scarcely feel so gay.”

DECEMBER 22

He thought he saw within a church
Two mighty congregations;
He looked again and saw it was
A few of his relations.
“I think that this upsets,” said he,
“Some of my calculations.”

DECEMBER 23

He thought, while gazing o’er the plain,
He spied a mountain large;
He looked again and found it was
The things he’d bought on charge.
“If I should cross the sea, said he,”
“I’d have to hire a barge.”

DECEMBER 24

He thought he saw that load of hay
Go up in smoke and flame;
He looked again and saw it was
That same old Christmas game.
“I fear that, without you,” he said,
“My horse will go quite lame.”

DECEMBER 25

While feeling in his vest-pocket
 A match-safe he did find;
 'Twas all the proof his relatives
 Had had him in their mind.
 "I'm very gratified," said he,
 "That they should be so kind."

DECEMBER 26

While looking through a microscope
 He thought he saw a mote;
 He looked again and saw it was
 His winter overcoat.
 "To see you larger grow," said he,
 "I fear is quite remote."

JANUARY 1

Upon his New Year's linen white
 He thought he saw a speck;
 He looked again and saw that he
 Had got it in the neck.
 "I'm very fortunate," said he,
 "To find myself on deck."

WIS-CONS-IN

Junior to Freshman—Have you discovered what an important part "cons" play in Wisconsin?

Freshman (sadly)—Yes; it's plain on the very face of it.

10:30 P. M., FEBRUARY 7, 1902—A mysterious van, laden with furniture, arrives at Psi U house and leaves empty.

10:00 P. M., FEBRUARY 11, 1902—Empty van again appears and carries away said furniture.

Lady—Whose little girl are you?

Little Girl—My papa is Prof. James Charles Monaghan, but mamma calls him Jim.

TEN MINUTES WITH UNIVERSITY HUMORISTS

FOR many a year has Wisconsin humor held its own proud place, despite the rivalry of the comic almanac and the illuminated Sunday supplement. It were impossible for a historian to do full justice to so broad a theme; for that would imply an expurgated account of the pre-Adamite Mock Schemes, which were funny in proportion as they were scurrilous; it would mean to dwell lovingly on those thrilling days when Andrew Alexander Bruce—not then a professor, nor yet the propeller of a thirty-dollar baby cart, but the unterrified editor of a weekly Ægis—wielded a trenchant pen with one hand and with the other repelled the assaults of his roastees; it would require a review of the Ground-Hog, the one lone annual of the lawyers; and it would involve the story of the career of Professor J. F. A. Pyre, from the moment when a mere freshman, he penned those burning lines:

“I would I were a William-goat, who has dead loads of fun,
And every time he starts a prof he gets him on the run.”

down to the epoch when he began to assign to his co-ed students “One Fond Kiss and Then We Sever.” Let us content ourselves with setting an arbitrary date for the beginning of this history; and for such a purpose what could better serve than 1896—the advent of Professor Moses Stephen Slaughter?

One name resistlessly looms before us as the constant, unailing source of amusement through all these years—no less a one than that of Stephen Conrad Stuntz. Stevie has been so long the unwreathed poet-laureate, father confessor of senior girls in search of thesis subjects, and funny-man-in-chief to the University of Wisconsin, that we were almost fain to treat him with reverence. But he himself has made this impossible; for did he not ordain that “No one shall take me seriously, no, not even myself; for to who so taketh himself or me with seriousness, to him shall be the portion of outer darkness?” It is this attitude that has kept Stevie so perennially young; and one of his host of feminine admirers only the other day remarked that “she had never seen such a tall sixteen-year-old.” But how to choose a fitting example from the volumes of Stuntz’s verse and prose? Best, perhaps, for our purpose will be that autobiographical gem—

“Just tell them I make epigrams, and they will know the rest,
Just tell them I can pun and quip and josh:
Just tell them I write epics, lyrics, elegies,
pastels,
And they will know I’m Stevie Stuntz, b’gosh.”

WHEN there is Harvey Sargeant—litterateur, histrionic artist, scholar (by spells), one whose vision is ever upward. Harvey's career as a humorist was short but scintillating. As editor of the woman's column in the Sphinx-American he is held by competent critics to rank at least with Mrs. Rorer and Marion Harland, and in his moments of inspiration to reach to the plane of Margaret Sangster. "Hot, too Hot Talks," have proved the making of many a fair young life. Sargeant's classic "Ode to an Overshoe" was the prelude to the wearing of men's shoes by women; and his "Owed to a Tailor" led to the perfecting of the national credit system. Greatest of his works, by universal acclaim, is that beautiful ballad of stage life, "I'll Never Forget My Cue."

* * * *

And of course the woman humorists of our day must not be neglected. Whoever says that women have no sense of humor, refer him to Sarah Jane Seeber's "Parodies and Paradigms." Miss Seeber's talent was manifested early in her career, when she wrote an English theme all by herself in a single month. But this precocity was but a hint of what was to come; and in her recent rondeau, "Go and Grow, Man, Go and Grow," the power of alliteration displayed borders on the marvelous. A single instance of her mastery of words must suffice; it is addressed to her tutor and collaborator, "Steve C. S."

"Tell me, erudite and learned shark,
Even as I agitate my knuckles underneath thy nostrils,
Tell me, whereof shall I write the morn?
For all is in, and truly I am put away,
If I have not three pages of my thesis writ this day."

* * * *

COULD our readers endure, this history might be continued indefinitely; but prudence urges us to forbear. It is hard, very hard, to refrain from the elaboration of deserving cases; but we can only refer to Mr. Rembrandt

E. N. Dodge, whose exceedingly dry humor has warped the floor of Room 66; to Dean Johnson, perhaps our keenest humorist, who gravely professes to see a logical connection between the words "Engineer" and "Sociable;" and even to the triumphs of Mr. John Varsity Brennan, who convulses us all with the rendition of that good old song, "Amang the Train There is a Swain I Dearly Lo'e Mysel'."

B

UT surely we must do at least partial justice to that peerless and tireless innovator, Mr. Arthur Francisco Beule. Mr. Beule's history is one of steady, consistent development. While he was yet but rudimental, he conceived the novel idea of a sophomore poster. Later, as a mold of public opinion, he urged us, in fiery language, to support the crew and to attend the joint debate; and, as the climax of his apotheosis, he appeared in the startling role of a human pin cushion. And, in spite of his manifold duties, there has appeared regularly for four long years that authoritative work, Beule's Bi-Weekly Bulletin, or Who's Who in the Self-Government Association. Founded upon the revelations of this periodical, has been organized a powerful social factor, the G. A. E. R., which, being expanded, means the Galaxy of Arthur's Ex-Rushees.

A

CLASSIC woman wit, who will not stand for a mere passing mention, is Miss Ida Elliott, author of "Up in the Bright Blue Sky" and "How This Came to be Thus." This subtle diplomatist's masterpiece, dedicated to her sisters in affliction, is entitled "The Song of the Quarantined." It begins:

"You can't pace up and down for half a mile,
You mustn't poke your heads out in the damp,
You can't receive from men a distant smile,
Or waste on them a single postage stamp.
A hop is far beyond your wildest hopes;
An indoor meet is something you can't see,
It's not for you to stroll on gentle slopes,
Or saunter underneath a budding tree.
But you sit and think and talk and walk and read,
And you read and walk and talk and think and sit,
And you're missing all the gossip—yes, indeed.
For a grouchy bunch of maidens, you are it."

Miss Herfurth—Herr Lord, translate "Um Gottes willen—brennts!"

Lord—For God's sake, is there a fire?

Miss H.—Ja, Herr Lord.

Edith Mitchell (getting on street-car)—Now, Arthur Uihlein, I insist on paying my fare. (After hurriedly opening her purse she hands fare to conductor.)

Conductor—Why—er—er—miss, we can't ring up beer checks.

COME, gather 'round the fireplace,
And watch the embers glow;
No need for words or talking;
We all must feel and know—
Our hearts will bid us linger—
When work shall bid us go.

The Last Smoker

Go, fetch the good tobacco;
We'll blow a cloud of blue
Till, through the clouds, a vision
Shall rise and come to view—
The strife and toil for many,
The olive branch for few.

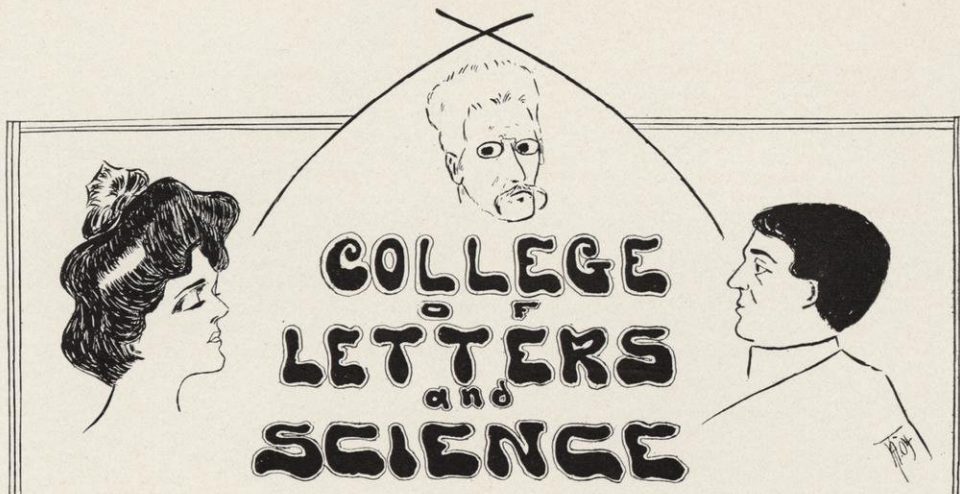

We've spent our days in building
Frail houses on the strand;
To-night we're gazing seaward,
Away from the peaceful land—
And each is his own good pilot,
To steer with the firmest hand.

Then fill with good tobacco
The brown pipes all again—
We'll smoke o'er our days in college,
And dream o'er the struggles when,
Long past the wisdom of Seniors,
The world shall christen us men.

The University of Wisconsin

Situation of the University

THE University Grounds extend along the north shore of Lake Mendota more than a mile. In point of beauty the site is unsurpassed, if not unequaled. The campus contains 240 acres, besides an athletic field, known as Camp Randall, of 42 acres. On the lower Campus are the Gymnasium and the Historical Library building.

Organization

The College of Letters and Science	114	Professors and Instructors
The College of Mechanics and Engineering	66	Professors and Instructors
The College of Agriculture	42	Professors and Instructors
The College of Law	15	Professors and Instructors
The School of Pharmacy	32	Professors and Instructors
The School of Commerce	31	Professors and Instructors
The School of Economics and Political Science	21	Professors and Instructors
The School of Music	14	Professors and Instructors
The School of History	14	Professors and Instructors
The School of Education	9	Professors and Instructors

Library and Laboratory Facilities

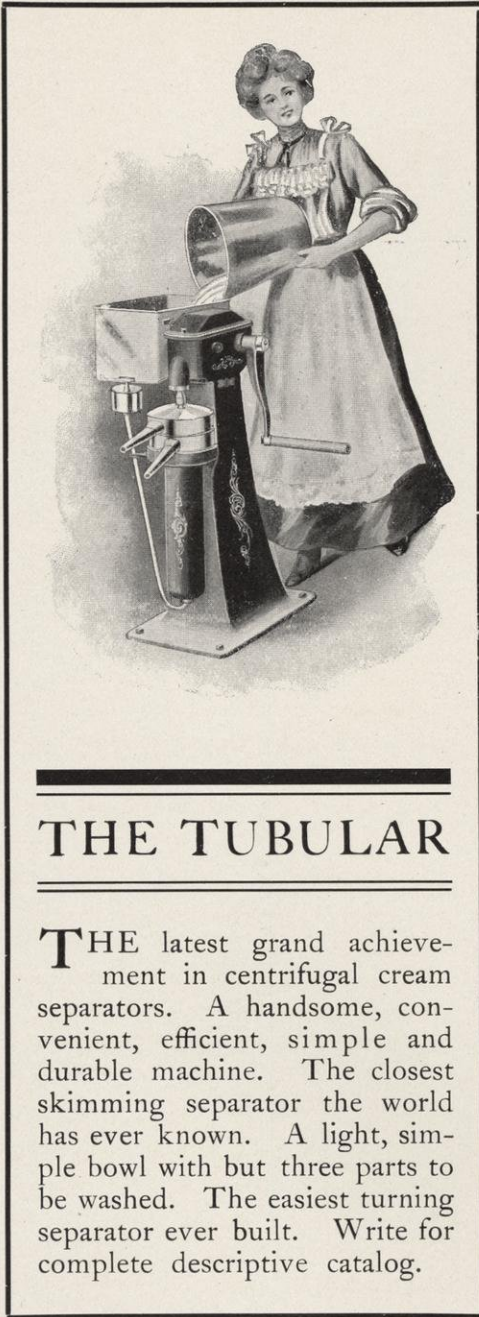

THE completion of the new Historical Library building, which also includes the University Library, affords unsurpassed accommodations for the use of students. The number of volumes contained in the Libraries accessible to students is nearly 250,000. The laboratory facilities of the University are excellent and include well equipped laboratories in chemistry, physics, biology, geology, mineralogy, petrography, psychology, botany, and in engineering, pharmacy, assaying, and agriculture.

Facilities for Physical Training

THE Gymnasium, 200 feet long, 100 feet wide, and three stories high, affords probably the best accommodations to be found in the country. Besides offices, locker-rooms, lecture-rooms, shower and tub baths, bowling alleys, and rooms for other special gymnastic work, it contains a swimming-tank 80 feet long by 28 feet wide, a running-track of eleven laps to the mile, a ball cage, and a general gymnasium 165 feet long by 96 feet wide.

Conditions of Admission

STUDENTS are admitted either by certificate of graduation from an accredited high school, or upon examination. For detailed information address the Deans of the respective colleges, or W. D. Hiestand, Registrar of the University.

THE TUBULAR

THE latest grand achievement in centrifugal cream separators. A handsome, convenient, efficient, simple and durable machine. The closest skimming separator the world has ever known. A light, simple bowl with but three parts to be washed. The easiest turning separator ever built. Write for complete descriptive catalog.

The maiden fresh from college has a head well stored with knowledge; .
She knows of many things that wise old
Solomon never knew.

She has mastered etymology, and she knows about zoology,
She knows farming is a science, now you'll find that this is true.

From geology to astronomy, even domestic economy,
As applied to modern dairying, she takes the proper view.

All about cream fermentation and of perfect separation,
Known as scientific skimming, which the
"TUBULAR" will do.

She's an excellent debater on the SHARPLES
separator,
And she knows it long since bade would-be competitors adieu.

You'll not find a maid who's neater, and there is no butter sweeter
Than she churns from the cream that the
"TUBULAR" doth brew.

She'll ne'er forget her alma mater, nor the SHARPLES separator,
She will make a charming housewife, and we leave her now to you.

A STORYE.

ONCE on a Time a King did Sally forth to the Hunt with his Noble Chamberlain, riding a Cole Black Cobb the Whyle. Long did the Hunter Chase the Fox Farr o'er Brown Hyland and Lea, o'er Gates and Stiles, through Sage Brush and Wild March. Strong were his Boone Companions and Gay the Noyes as they sped over the Green Graas of the Parks and now 'Cross Grey Rhodes to Grimm Groves where lived the Hart and other Game Galore. Butt none were of such stock as the True Lord himself. He was a Starr at Doing Stunts. Every Man in Towne did Dahle tell of the March when all did Luse the way but that the Earl did in the Kohl-black Knight lead them again to the Hall, they following his Beck through the Wood, and so Sharp his sight that Never did a Horsfall on a Stone. Oft had he slain the Savage Lyon on the Mainland, leaving him to Dye in his own Blood and Gore.

And oft this day the King Drew aim on All that Harmes and none Could Dodge their True Dessert, but on the Ground lay stricken by Frost and Snow which now did fall.

When in a Gust the Windes did blau o'er the Hills they did Return White from the Chase covered with Snow. The Noble Lord did send his Coon Page to bring Some Fruit and Beers and Potts of Meet for all his Foulkes. And when the Knight Ware on and all had Eaton none was Fuller than the Goodman himself, who barely kept a Holt of the Post, Butt that is the Price we pay. To Du Four Man thus is surely Goodenough. No Foote now did Waite, Butt all did Pray their Lord a Wright Goodnight.

Dean Birge has received a large number of applicants for the degree of B. S. (Bachelor of Slides), but on account of the intense competition he has not been able to announce any decision yet. Full reports will be received at the Psi U house by a special leased wire. The race stands now between Henry Murphy and Harvey Clausen. The winner of the degree will be allowed to take nine-fifths under Professor Monaghan, the remaining fifths to be divided between Professor Parkinson and Dr. Sparling.

COURAGE

A little band of heroes was gathered together, boasting of their bravery.

“I,” said Alexander the Great, “have lead my phalanxes against the fiercest barbarians Asia could produce.”

“And I,” Napoleon said, “with a mere handful of men conquered the strongest and most powerful nations of Europe.”

“And I, gentlemen,” put in a quiet voice, “have asked Marshall three fool questions in Biology, inside of an hour. Who wins?”

There was a long silence during which Alec. and Nap. withdrew into the background.

SELLERY

“Say do you know that new man, Sellery?”

“Who, the man that stalks around the hill?”

“Yes, he seems to be a good-hearted fellow and he’s got lots of nerve and a good head.”

“Seems to be pretty fresh, though ; ought to have a little salt on him.”

“What made you think Irving Fish was a Hypnotist?”

“Why, I was up to see the boys drill the other day and I heard him yell, ‘Hip, Hip, Hip! keep your fours straight! Hip, Hip, Hip!’”

RUSH MEDICAL COLLEGE

In affiliation with the University of Chicago

ORGANIZED 1837

THE academic year of Rush Medical College is divided into quarters, corresponding with those recognized at the University of Chicago, beginning respectively the first of July (at the University June 18), October, January, and April, each continuing for twelve weeks. A recess of one week occurs between the end of each quarter and the beginning of the next, excepting that at the University there is no recess at the end of the Spring quarter, but there is one of one month at the end of the Summer quarter.

The general course of instruction requires four years of study in residence, with a minimum attendance upon three quarters of each year. A student may begin his college work on the first day of any quarter, and may continue in residence for as many successive quarters as he desires. Credit will not be allowed, however, for more than three consecutive quarters. At least 45 months must elapse between the date of a first matriculation and the date of graduation.

OLIN VS. CLASS OF 1903

TEMPLE OF MULOCH FIELD, NOV. 18, 1901—Game called at 10 A. M. Olin kicks off. Abercrombie brings the ball back fifteen yards, behind splendid interference by Graass. Abercrombie is injured. He is up again. Lyle fumbles and Olin gets the ball. Olin goes through Cunningham for 50 yards and a touch-down.* Olin catches the kick-off and is downed in his tracks by Kuenzli. Olin goes through Teigen for 40 yards. Olin tries the same place for 20 more. Olin goes through Teigen for another 20 yards and a touch-down. Olin catches the kick-off, and returns to the 50-yard line. Olin punts. Malone catches the ball and brings it back 20 yards. Baldwin goes around Olin's end for 30. Malone plunges through the line for 10 yards and Baldwin kicks center for 12 more. It is first down on Olin's 1-yard line. Rodger loses the ball on a fumble. Olin goes through Rodger for 95 yards and a touch-down. Rodger is injured. He is taken out of the game.

*Olin never misses goal.

SECOND HALF

Warren kicks off. Olin makes a fair catch. He takes 10 yards on an off side play by Barber. Olin tries a free kick from the 80-yard line. He kicks goal. Morgan makes a beautiful kick-off. Olin catches the ball, back of his own goal line, and runs the length of the field for a touch-down. Purves, Garvin, Lueck and Curtis are carried off the field. Olin returns the kick-off 10 yards. Olin punts. Buchholz catches the ball, and brings it back 2 yards, interfered for by Morgan. Kralovec makes a yard through center. They try the guards back and Smith makes a yard. Third down and three to gain. Wetzler makes the distance. Loveland loses 5 yards, and Hewitt drops back for a punt. Hewitt's punt is blocked and Olin falls on the ball. * * *

The final score was 179 to 0.

IN ENGLISH

[RONDEAU]

Confound the theme! I try to write,
But all my thoughts have taken flight.

I wildly gaze from earth to air;
I pull my inoffending hair;
I look for subjects, left and right.

This is not always my sad plight;—
Sometimes when I am feeling bright,
I dash themes off—that's on the square.
Confound the theme!

Well, guess I'll wait until to-night;
It may be then I can indite
A theme without this wear and tear;—
But now—by all the gods I swear
That not a subject is in sight.
Confound the theme!

THE School of Illustration offers the most thorough and practical correspondence course in illustration obtainable anywhere. The text-books of the course were written by Mr. Frank Holme, the director of the School, and they embody the results of his study and experience. The course enables you to develop your talent at a small cost compared with the expense of travel and living away from home. You simply utilize the time you have been throwing away. Perhaps all you have guessed about correspondence instruction is wrong. We would be pleased to send you a booklet describing our work and methods and giving the opinions of pupils of the School, with examples of their work. We would also be glad to answer as many questions as you want to ask.
