Walter Meives' log house rests on a hillside in a wooded area near Barneveld.

Many long, hard hours went into the construction of the home. Each log had to be laid and secured in place.

Gus Nevar, who did the log work on the home, points out the notching visible at the corner of the home.

The huge fireplace in the living room of the log home is 12 feet wide, and is made of rocks collected on the farm.

Even the garage is built of logs at the Walter Meives residence near Barneveld.

The upstairs loft in the log house has a steep inclining ceiling.

Log House Near Completion on

While others are caught up in the day to day hustle and bustle of everyday life, a Madison man is "getting back to nature" on a wooded farm near Barneveld.

Walter Meives, a 56-year-old University of Wisconsin Professor, is in the process of putting the final touches on a primitive but beautiful log home.

A man who had a lot to do with the construction of the home, is Gus Nevar from Wisconsin Dells. Nevar and a single helper, Ron Navarro from Portage, did all the log work on the 32'x42' two-story house, including everything from cutting the trees to laying the notched logs.

It all began about three years ago when Meives saw some pictures of log homes that Nevar had built, and he expressed an interest in having one built for himself. He contacted Nevar, and the wheels began turning.

The actual building began about a year ago. Since then, Nevar and other local contractors have been hard at work on the project, and Meives said his house will soon be ready to move into.

Meives calls Nevar 'an innovator in building. He has more fresh, new and unique methods than any other builder I have ever known," he says.

Nevar says that Meives must like his methods, because "I suggest something to Walter and he will say go ahead and do it. He's given me a lot of leeway in building this house."

Nevar brought the logs from the Wisconsin Dells "pine country", to the spot near Barneveld. Before he did so, he selected the trees over the winter months, cut them to the particular sizes in a saw mill, and then hand-peeled the logs. They then had to be allowed to dry for nearly a year before they could be used in the home.

The logs used in the home are not custom built, but are full logs, about six inches in diameter. They are cut from young trees (about 30 years old) which are approximately 16-24 feet high. Nevar said that the Meives home took about 350 of the trees.

Nevar got his start in building log houses when he worked on the Fort Dells in Wisconsin Dells. He was working with Finlanders from Northern Minnesota who were "imported" in for the project, and he got a lot of his ideas from them.

However, their methods were much slower than his, according to Nevar. "They could build about two houses a year, where I can build anywhere from 6 to 10," Nevar said.

What methods are different?
"Well, where they would use an ax, I use a chain saw and a saw mill. That cuts off a lot of time," he said.

One of the main problems of building log houses is that "everybody wants it yesterday. They contact me and say 'when can you have a log house for me.' and they want it as soon as possible. The problem is that I have to know six months to a year ahead when I'm going to build a house, because I have to get and dry the logs," Nevar said.

One of the advantages of his occupation is that he never has to worry about having nothing to do. "Right now I have a waiting list of people to build homes for," Nevar said. "I always have enough orders ahead that I don't have to make a house without already having a buyer."

One of the outstanding features of the home is a huge fireplace which juts out into the living room. The fireplace, built by Buddy Nelson from Ridgeway, stands 12 feet wide and more than 30 feet high. Rocks used in the fireplace, mostly limestone and flint rock, were all hauled in from the farm. That was one of Meives' projects, and he said it took him most of last summer to haul the 30 to 50 tons of rock.

Across the fireplace rests a 5 inch wide by 12 foot long "hunk" of walnut log, which will be used as a mantle. That walnut and the other walnut in the home came from the farm.

He remembered one day of collecting rocks particularly. "My son Jimmy, my dog and I were out picking up rocks and we saw a snake with its head sticking up about 3 feet in the air. I asked my son what kind of snake it was, and he said, 'didn't you hear the rattle?' That answered my question in a hurry," Walter said.
"I wanted to kill the thing, but "I wanted to kill the thing, but all that I had to hit it was a short crow bar, and I wasn't about to get close enough to hit it with that. I finally found a long enough stick, and hit it over the head. It was quite an experience," he said.

When Meives is not out working on his new home, he has plenty to do back in Madison. He is a professor in Communications at the University of Wisconsin Extension Department in Madison, and has been in charge of the Photographic Media Center for the past 20 years. Besides that, he has been in charge of the photography for the United States Olympic team since 1959. Hired by the U.S. Olympic Committee, he and three other photographers travel with the team to the Olympics, Pan American Games, and wherever else the team travels. While he is working with the Olympic team, he takes time off from his University position.

off from his University position.

He has also been working for some time in cooperation with the Department of Public Instruction, developing instructional materials for the retarded, deaf, blind, and other handicapped children.

Meives graduated from the UW in 1943, and was an Air Force Photo Intelligence Officer for three years. He then took a position at the University.

The farm that Walter and his wife will soon be moving onto has been in his wife's family for over 100 years. Presently living on and managing the 250-acre farm are Meive's daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Gary Amidon. Walter's wife is the former Garnetta Moyer, and when her father LeRoy, the former owner of the farm, died, Walter and his wife bought out Garnetta's three sisters and one brother.

Since that time, Meives has been working with Jim Widder of the Department of Natural Resources, Glenn Kinderman, who supervises Soils Conservation Service for Iowa County, and the Iowa County Agriculture Office and Nordean Gilbertson in "trying to make the farm economically profitable." Meives said the big problems on the farm are erosion and flood control, and he has also had considerable help in deciding what crops to plant on the 60 tillable acres.

Besides his wife, Walter's family includes five children. The oldest is Dennis, 30, who is a DDS; Kama Amidon, 22; Mrs. Priscilla Zaemisch, 20, who lives in McFarland; Mark, 18, who is a pre-med student at the UW-Madison; and Jimmy, 16, who is going to be a senior at Madison LaFollette High School.

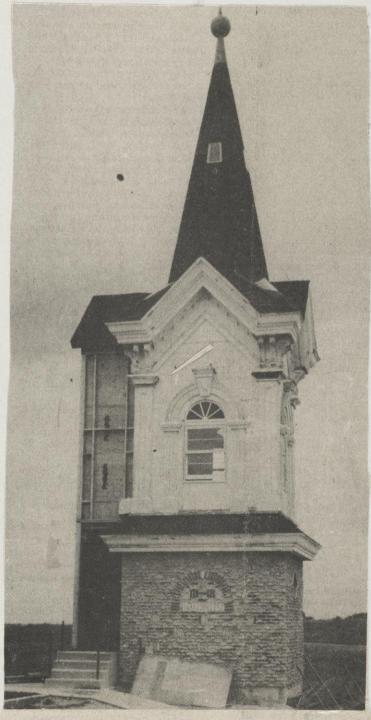

Extraordinary...Don Q Inn Complex Near Dodgeville

The famous Wheel Tree, assembled from about 440 iron wagon wheels, is situated near the entrance to the Don Q Inn. The Wheel Tree was completed in 1969.

The Don Q Inn Best Western Motel, located north of Dodgeville, has some of the most unique rooms to be found anywhere. Swinging beds, water beds, "cheese vat" bath tubs, and the shotgun room are all found in the newly opened motel.

When completed, this 67-foot steeple will house a honeymoon suite. The steeple was taken off of a church and moved to the location near the motel about three years ago.

Photos by James Massey Story by Christine DeSmet

"Everybody said we had everything but the kitchen sink, so we thought we'd put in one."

A stay at the Don Q Inn proves there's everything and more --probably something you'll recognize from your hometown, be it Argyle, Wisconsin, or be it Argyle, Beirut, Lebanon.

We want something different from Howard Johnson's," quips Don Quinn, operator of the motel and restaurant complex near Dodgeville on Hwy. 23.

And Howard Johnson's it ain't. Quinn's unique venture is becomone of Iowa County's and Wisconsin's biggest drawing cards for across the nation and world travellers and pleasure seekers.

Quinn, a man usually found wearing an old sweatshirt and a smile, says, "we only build with used things; everything is recycled. For example, the flooring on which we're standing is old boxcar planks.

One of the latest used items added to the complex, is the 67-foot steeple off the old Dodgeor ville Methodist Church building.

Slated for completion in days, this tall suite sits to the north end of the motel. The first floor will provide room for coats, luggage, and a 300 gallon copper tub from a cheese factory for those who like to bathe in a big

Up the spiraling staircase to the second floor, and it's a round bed from wall to wall with cozy corner settees. The third floor is the stereo-cocktail lounge. Done in plush purple hues, this floor has the never-ending ceiling into the steeple's point. Five windows lower in the ceiling were the holes where the crane lifted the structure from the church.

The stairwell railing was the sprinkling system of a Clinton, Iowa, hospital. The finishing touch will be a giant bell clapper in the third floor -- suspended from the pinnacle, this will be a foam seat molded from spraying over a weather balloon. Fred Frusher, Barneveld, who lives in a foam house and has a similar chair, will be the artist.

The view of course is astounding from the steeple and with the brilliance of the autumn country-side, there may be a steeple chase for reservations.

Walking into the motel itself, officially opened in June, 1974, the visitor passes through brass doors from the First Wisconsin Bank of Madison. The door Bank of Madison. The door supports come from the Clinton,

Iowa, hospital. Relaxing in the lobby is living in a museum. An old square piano from the Ambers Restaurant in Madison sits to the left. It was built just after the Civil War. Some barber chairs came from an old shop in Fennimore. A former Dodgeville dentist's safe sits in the corner. There is a sleigh and in the center a fireplace dominates the room. The main chimney of the fireplace is the former pressure tank of the Madison Gas and Electric Company. Butane tanks complete the structure.

"On the second floor balcony we will have a gift shop eventually," says Quinn. "Here we keep a lot of things people give us. They would rather not sell them and take the chance of them leaving the area or country. So we get them.

There's a portable still on the balcony. A Beloit preacher got it from a northern bootlegger and gave it to Quinn. Wooden wheelbarrows and coffeemills stand alongside.

When it's time to reserve a stall, as the rooms are called, you have to make a choice since no two are alike. Do you want the "Swinger', "Shotgun Room", or the "Blueroom"? Or perhaps the "Hideaway" with its own separate reading lounge?

"We have anything you want," says Quinn. "We've got round waterbeds, small beds, king beds, and swinging beds. All the bed frames are made from J.I. Case packing crates, and our ceiling beams come from John Deere buildings in Moline, Illinois."

With its suspended bed sensitive to the heartbeat rhythm
-- the "Swinger" is the most popular room. One of the five copper tubs from the Argyle cheese factor is here. An iron and wood sewing table cradles the TV set. A wood school desk from the era of Richland Center one-room school houses is a table and boxcar planks make another table. The lights come from a Racine soda fountain. Quinn found those covered by curtains when he visited the shop and now he'd like to get the antique fountain itself. Other "stall" features include brick from the Dodgeville watertower, ceiling heat, and mirrors everywhere with those above the beds and baths "to keep the dust out of your eyes," Don says. "Most of the chairs in the rooms come from the Iowa County Home and the shorter doors to some of the stalls are the inner doors from the Barneveld State Bank vault.

Before going down to the lowest level coffee shop and saunas -- to be completed soon -visitors will pass through lobby light filtered through stainglassed indows of a Beloit church,

This week construction of a 110-foot swimming pool building begins which will seat 150 people with a pool view. To be completed by fall, it will neighbor a tennis court surrounded by a grass amphitheater.

Perhaps the best feature about the entire complex is that the visitor need not go outdoors to travel between motel and restaurant. Early escavating found underground cavities which are now a natural limestone tunnel connecting the motel and restaurant. One 30-foot cavity is being developed to house the bootlegger's still.

Near the cave-like tunnel entrance the old Dodgeville Catholic rectory door and the Barneveld Bank safe door give a medieval air. The tunnel walls and ceiling entertain and tell their own stories. "Rock slabs from the Chicago Northwestern Railroad station platforms help support the sides. There's a volkswagen that didn't quite make it' -- the front bumper shines out of the wall. "Also, it looks like we had a casualty -- all that's left is a man's leg and foot hanging out of the ceiling, Don said, pointing upward.

The tunnel ceiling holds picture of the builders, a bike seat, toilet seat, a "Ken's Cafe" sign from Dodgeville, a "used" cow skeleton, and the bones of Don's son's horse shot four years ago during deer hunting season. Quinn said that soon to be added in the tunnel will be taped sounds of train whistles and thundering horses.

The center of attraction in the lobby area is the huge fireplace.

Near the end, steps will lead into the old railway station which will house eight of the total 42 units. Quinn still has some of the old train tickets used in the station.

The restaurant can seat 550 people. They are accommodated by five rooms. One of these has a copper bar supported by beer barrels. French horn lights hang overhead and small barrels ventilate the air while saws are the

In the dining areas wagonwheel chandeliers shed amber tones on rough barn siding and boxcar flooring. At the fireplace sit copper champagne buckets from Cyria and brass plates from Morocco and Beirut, Lebanon. The Chronicle's publisher, Lillian Kessler, loaned an airplane propeller.

As a pilot and world traveler, Quinn acquired many artifacts while flying to places like India during the Eisenhower era. Since acquiring the land from Aldro Pengilly in 1964, Quinn has gained worldwide notoriety for his renovation of the 60-year-old barn. All the work has been done by himself and his 56 local employees with no professional companies contributing.

Articles appear in papers like the Chicago Tribune and the San Francisco Examiner. "A Life magazine article has been repeatedly stolen from my bulletin board so I don't put it out anymore. I've got only two copies left of my original 20 or so," says Quinn.

If this businessman has his way, the Don Quinn retreat will never be completed. There is always something to add, always another touch.

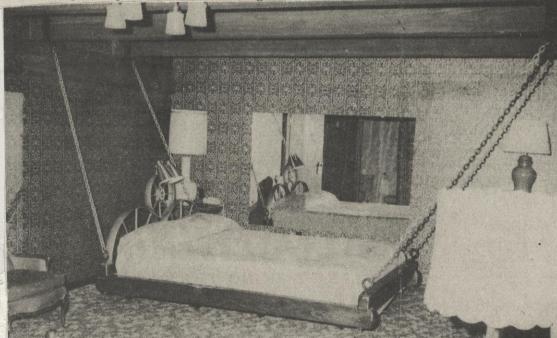

For example, how many restaurants have pigeon nests with pigeons on their John Deere Company beams? Or the kitchen sink in a tunnel? Or a Belgian statue faucet on a 300 gallon bathtub? Or slaughterhouse pulleys from Shullsburg at the entrance? Or a bed that is sensitive to your heartbeat and will swing in rhythm?

An underground tunnel links the Don Q Inn Best Western Motel to the dining area.

Don Quinn has antique pieces and unusual items from throughout the world in his motel and restaurant near Dodgeville. Here, he displays one of the pieces he picked up in the Middle East during his travels.

One of the "stalls" at the Don Q Inn Motel is called "The Swinger," mainly because of this swinging bed which hangs from chains in the room. Quinn says that the bed will move with the flutter of a heartbeat.

One of 5 huge kettle-shaped both tubs can be found in "The Swinger" room at the Don Q Inn. The former cheese vats can contain as much as 300 gallons of water.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE RESIDENTS OF THE VILLAGE OF BARNEVELD.

Several people have asked me why I voted against the water tower and I want to take a line or two and explain why I voted against the water tower.

The estimated cost of the water tower is approxiametly $177,000.00 now lets assume there are 600 men, women and children living in the village of Barneveld, if we divide 177000.00 = $295.00 of new debt to be paid by every man, we man and child living in Barneveld. A family of five has $1475.00 of new debt to face and to struggle paying for.

My position is that I am not sure the Village needs a fancy water tower. I want the engeineer who's fee is approximately 10% of the tower contract to meet with the residents of Barneveld and tell them why they need a $177,000.00 water tower.

Then in the interest of true democracy the water should be voted upon by the people of the village who are going to pay the ultimate bill. I believe that capital expenditures (buildings, equipment in excess of $10,000.00 etc) should be put to referendum in villages of less than 2000 people.

I will support the water tower if it is proven to me that: 1.) the village does in fact need one and 2.) if the people of the village authorize its construction by voting upon the issue.

Respectfully John Carr Village Trustee.

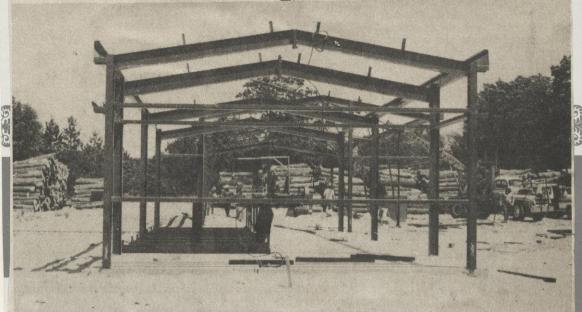

Tower Costs Misinterpreted

Contrary to "facts" printed under a picture in last week's Chronicle, the new water tower in the Village of Barneveld will not be costing the Village $177,000,00

Village Clerk Pat Messinger says that the complete cost of the project will be approximately $160,000.00, and that more than half of that money will come from state and federal grants. She said that a grant of $55,000 will be coming from the state for the project, and that $50,000 left over from the sewer construction will also be used in the building of the tower, leaving the cost to the village at about $55,000.

She said that she projects no increases in village taxes or in the water bill because of the building of the tower.

Gates Forest Products New Saw Mill in Village of Arena

Gates Forest Products, Inc., is scheduled to begin operations late this week. The sawmill will be run by Bill Gates, Bob Gates, and Bob Gates, Jr., in the village of Arena.

The Gates Forest Products, Inc. saw mill is near completion in the village of Arena.

Work began on the new company in May, and sawing is scheduled to begin tomorrow (July 9).

Combining to operate the business will be Bob Gates, Bill Gates, and Bob Gates, Jr. Bob used to be associated with River Valley Lumber Co., and has been working in logging for 20 years. Bill has worked as a farmer for most of his life, while Bob Jr. has worked as a log cutter and will continue to do so at the new mill.

The new building will be all steel, and will measure 130 feet in length by 26 feet wide. Inside will be a completely new Jackson Harvestore mill.

The main products which will come from the mill will be railroad ties and lumber. Bill noted that a nearby railroad used to be essential for hauling in the materials, but today trucks do most of the work. "It is important to be near a highway, though, and we have Highway 14 right there," Bill said.

Firewood will be another important product at the mill. "We'll be able to cut and deliver firewood for about half of what a person could cut it for himself," Gates said.

The mill will sit on a seven-acre plot in the village of Arena, with water and sewer coming from the village. Ten employees from the Arena area will have new jobs.

Barneveld Receives State Waterwork Grants

State waterworks improvement grant offers totalling $1 million were made to 24 Wisconsin cities and villages during fiscal year 1975, according to the Department of Natural Resources. The aids were offered under the State Waterworks Grant Program, established by the Legislature in 1974 and administered by the DNR.

In this area, Barneveld received two grants of $10,997 and $43,593 for the construction of a pump, pumphouse and elevated tank.

A water tower is in the process of being constructed in the village of Barneveld. The cost of the tower is expected to be approximately $177,000.00, and the move to construct the tower has been met by some dissension in the village. The village board made the decision to build the tower without going before the electorate with the proposal.

The bicyclists were a junior high group from the Northern Association of the Illinois Conference of the United Church of Christ. Composed of 17 students and six counselors from the northern Illinois area, the bicyclists traveled through the southern section of Wisconsin, staying in Congregational churches in the areas overnight. Barneveld was one fo five overnight stops, with the other being Brodhead, New Glarus, Darlington, and Monroe. The group began its journey

July 7 from Davis, Illinois, a city between Freeport and Rockford. They moved along about 35 miles a day, travelling just over back roads to avoid the heavy summer traffic.

Leading the group was Richard Behringer, Pastor of the St. Paul United Church of Christ in Davis. Behringer has been a counselor on bike trips such as this one for the past 10 years.

According to Behringer, the trip proves to be "kind of an identity thing" for the kids. He said they learn to work toegether as a group, and yet each student as a group, and yet each student has his own responsibilities to develop the individual. The jobs include such things as doing the

How does the group hold up? Behringer thinks they do remarkably well. "Sometimes when we have been travelling for a long period of time the group might spread out a mile or so, but as a whole we do pretty good," he said. He added that most of the bicyclists had never gone on a long bike trip before.

As well as the bicyclists, one of the counselors, Jay Jones, newsman from WQUA Radio in Moline, drove a car along with food supplies as well as spare parts and tools for the bicycles.

One of the students on the trip, Margaret Railsback from Moline, in the day of the state o

Behringer said he never starts the groups out on Sunday because it groups out on Sunday because it groups out on Sunday because it distributed by the worst day to the following: David M. Barneveld Woman Completes Quilt Project at Age 87

Mrs. Mary Venden pictured with her quilt that she did herself at the age of 87. Note the design, with its multi-colored patchwork, woven in with a bright yellow material.

Mrs. Mary Venden, Barneveld, Mrs. Mary venden, Barneveld, isn't one to brag, because as she said, "There isn't anything to brag about." But, at 87, she has just finished a project that women much younger would envy her

She has completed making a quilt. The design is from a pattern she had seen a number of years ago, and she made it from memory. It took about a year sewing "off and on". She said, "I could have had someone help me, but it was just something I wanted to do alone."

Mrs. Venden concedes that her evesight isn't what it once was, her hearing not so sharp, and it's harder to get around, but she stated, "It's what you have left that counts."

She does her own housework, and this past year she even did some canning. She said, "I canned peaches and made some dill pickles, and they certainly taste good, now." She has lived alone since the death of her husband, Martin.

She also enjoys making pillow-cases from washclothes or from scraps of material which she then makes up into a pretty cover. She likes watching "my stories" on television and generally keeps herself busy.

Asked what she contributes to an enjoyable long life she answered "partly because of my children who put up with me when I gave them a hard time, and to friends who helped me all along the way.

Her latest project has been 'carding wool' for a quilt that "carding wool" for a quilt that she intended to "make over". She was only going to do enough for "filler" that would be needed for the quilt, but as she worked it went so fast that before she knew it, she had carded a couple of boxes full of the wool.

Mrs. Venden was born and raised on a farm north of Dodgeville. (She was an Anderson.) The Vendens farmed in the Barneveld area until about 20 years ago when they moved to town. They had four boys. Russell, who is now deceased; Curtis, Ridgeway; Williard, Verona; and Norman, Dodgeville.

She has over the years "jotted down in her cookbook" several favorite poems and numerous sayings. She said, "I see a lot of meaning in them."

Here is one of her favorites: Those eyes that once searched far ahead; Seek now to safely guide my step; And limbs that thrilled to leap and run; Find pleasure now in the warming sun.

Rattlers fascinate hunter

Bounty hunter Woody Roberts grabbed an angry timber rattlesnake.

Roberts pried open its mouth, and venom streamed from the snake's hollow fangs, wetting his fingers.

"Who wouldn't want 'em to be extinct?" Roberts asked, wondering outloud about new laws that have outlawed snake bounties and protected the swamp rattler by placing it on the state's endangered species list.

But Roberts is an amiable man of seeming contradictions. "I'd hate to kill the last one," he admitted.

"I'm fascinated with 'em, and I like

'em,' he said, waving a tattered burlap bag in front of a half-dozen rattlers coiled in the grass.

Roberts, 57, said he'll catch snakes and then let them go if he can't collect a bounty. "But I don't know what I'd rather do than take a day off just to walk in the woods and look for snakes."

The Iowa County farmer discovered bounties when he was a youngster during the Depression. One rattlesnake brought 50 cents, and that was as much as he got for a whole day of sweat on a neighbor's farm.

"Let 'em put 'em on the endangered species list; then they'll get thicker than blue blazes,'' Roberts said with glee. "They'll never get too thick for me."

Roberts has no fear of rattlesnakes, and he wears tennis shoes on his snake-hunting forays because they are more comfortable than boots. But like many who do fear snakes, he feels that without the bounty rattlesnakes will become as thick as flies at a dump.

Rattlesnakes "take the joy away from people in the outdoors," Roberts said, apparently forgetting himself. "Outdoors was created by the Lord for people to enjoy."

But without the bounty Roberts still can make money off the timber rattlers he catches. An anatomy student studying the infra-red heat sensing system of rattlesnakes pays $10 a piece for them.

In past years, Roberts said "I sold about half of 'em to hippies. They like to eat.'em.

"If I couldn't get rid of 'em, I always fell back on the bounty," he said. "Now I'd let 'em go unless I take 'em to (Gov. Patrick) Lucey and put a few in his back yard. He ought to have one."

MERRY CHRISTMAS

A cool Yule to one and all $(\pm 68^{\circ})$ but with warm hearts and heartful thanks for the year past and the one to come! It won't hurt us to tighten the power belt--it might cut down on gas!

'73 and each heir one step closer to independence. Diane was graduated, is working in a large clinic (kidney and bladder) as a receptionist, and is knee-deep in wedding plans: she and her Victor III will be married on January 5th. The new comet Kohoutek will provide the "fireworks."

Alison went from theory to practicality. She took up histotechnology at the end of her junior year at UW and is employed by the pathology department at St. Mary's Hospital. Her habit (horses) is demanding and gratifying her many needs and efforts. Jumping and dressage have captivated her and her new mount is as willing as she is!

Bennett finished his first year at Western State College. He spent the summer collecting and saving the where-with-all for this winter's fling at ski racing in Steamboat Springs, Colorado. Anything you want to know about pitching tents---large, small, county fair, carnival, circus ???

Brian, a high school junior, is the last to get his driver's license. There are some plums to be had as the only-in-residence. We three spent a fun week in Alta, Utah in February skiing the famed powder. Very exhilarating, but the heated pool is becoming the best of the day for the athletic elders! Conservation camp took six weeks of the summer and he enjoyed it. Brian and his brush axe became fast friends as callouses and bugbites were exchanged for improving trout streams and public parks.

At Eastertime we collected nephew David Johnson for a sojourn down Mexico way, Akumal in Yucatan. That place is terrific for scuba and fishing if the on-shore wind doesn't get you. It got us. So we opted for local adventures into Mayan ruins and other short in-land expeditions.

Summertime means farm (Zucchini, anyone?) and cabin plus a few days camping and boating in the Apostle Islands with friends. In August, nephew David Healy brought his bride into the clan. This event brought brother George and family to the midwest so we all reuned in northern Wisconsin for a few days in the woods.

Since July 1 Obstetrics has been a thing of the past. Gynecology sets a more casual pace and we have enjoyed it. For a "graduation present" a short but splendid fishing trip to Labrador brought back tales of five-pound brook trout rising to a dry #6. It was a long way to go but memories were made of the experiences.

So, fall and winter, rationing and chillblanes, fireplace fires, and woolies--we'll have them all. We are well, happy, busy and anxiously awaiting '74, whatever it may bring. A toast to one and all, good friends, and keep in close touch----it's warmer that way!

Dear Friends:

I don't know whether we've gone through "The Wonderful Crisis of Middle Age" or whether that is still to come, but this year has seemed in retrospect, a wonderfully pleasant one. Do you believe, it's the calm before the storm?

What's new? Well, we have the house to ourselves after 26 years. Tom (21) thinks we should be rattling around in it, but so far it's been exciting to see all that ampty space. Even Bill's bus has left for a quiet home in the country.

We had another wedding. Bob (23) and Jackie were married in April. Weddings are easy when you are the parents of the groom and the bride is warm and friendly.

There were two graduations. With Eileen's help, Bill (24) is now a graduate student in electrical engineering. John took his Philosophy Ph.D., Anne (26) and Jenny (3 1/2) off to Rockefeller University in New York City for a year as a Post-Doc. Even Tom has now decided to go back to the University for a major in cartography and Russian. (Hurrahi)

We've discovered some new hobbies. I'm needlepointing while Reid is hooking his second rug. We've jars and jars of polished rocks, and slabs and cubes of petrified wood and jasper. We had to do something with all the rock we brought back from our houseboat trip on Lake Powell.

Yes, each year brings something new. Somehow, we'll cope with Watergate and the fuel crisis, and getting older because even when we don't see you, we know you are there and that makes the difference.

God Bless You.

Love,

Reid and Fran

Barneveld Will Miss Tom Stumpf

Tomorrow, March 21, will be the last day at Barneveld High School for Tom Stumpf resigned last week after serving as principal at the school for a little over two and a half years. In that period of time, Stumpf became one of the most popular principals the school district has ever known.

Stumpf was liked by most everyone, be it students, parents, teachers, or whoever else he was associated with. Unfortunately, he apparently wasn't liked enough by the right people.

Leading up to the resignation was the decision by the school board to eliminate Stumpf's job. Then, the board didn't notify him of non-renewal before the Feb. 28 deadline. That left him in the employment of the school district, without his job being there. At that point, Stumpf resigned to avoid a legal hassle.

It seems that the board was trying to cut corners by consolidating the positions of principal and administrator. However, how much will really be saved? This year, Stumpf was being paid $18,000 as principal, and Dick Neel was earning $10,000 in a part-time capacity as administrator. That alone is $28,000.

A new man in the combined role will have to be paid at least $20,000, that is if the school district is going to get a good man. Add that to the salary an athletic director. must have [Stumpf was also athletic director], and you're perhaps saving $6,000.

After listening to the reaction of students, teachers, parents and townspeople alike, it is hard to believe that somebody actually did want Tom Stumpf out of Barneveld.

But obviously, somebody did. Is $6,000 really saved when you lose someone of Tom Stumpf's calibre?

She was a resident at arena manor in 1976

I found the folowing poem in Mrs. Olson's Scrapbook. I thought it just juited Harvey Olson so I dedicate it to him.

Mary's lamb on a New Principle

Principle
Mollie had a little ram as black as a rubber shoe, and every-where that Mollie went, he emigrated too.

He went with her to church one day-the folks hilarious grew to see him walk demurely into Deacon Ellen's pew.

The worthy deacon quickly let his angry passions rise, and gave it an unchristian kick between the sad brown eyes.

This landed rammy in the aisle; the deacon followed fast, and raised his foot again; Alas! that first kick was his last.

For Mr. Sheep walked slowly back, about a rod, 'tis said, and ere the deacon could retreat, he stood him on his head.

The congregation then arose and went for that 'ere sheep; several well-directed butts just placed them in a heap.

Then rushed they straightway for the door, with curses long and loud, while rammy struck the hindmost man, and shoved him through the crowd.

The minister had often heard that kindness would subdue the fiercest beast. "Aha," he said, "I'll try that game on you."

And so he kindly, gently called, "Come, rammy, rammy, rami, to see the folks abuse you so I grieved and sorry am."

The ram quite dropped its humble air, and dropped from off humble air, and dropped from one its feet, and when the parson landed, he was behind the hindmost seat.

As he shot out the door and closed it with a slam, he named a California town-I think 'twas, "Yuba Dam."

For the Healys, Madison branch, this HAD to be the year that was with two (2) rounds of nuptial festivities in 1974. Diane added an "r" to Ms. on an away night for the Wisconsin hockey team. Relatives and friends from far and near gathered by candlelight to celebrate her marriage to Victor Trastek III. We warmly welcome our fine new son who stirs fond memories as he plods through his third year of medical school. Times and curriculum have changed greatly since Pat and I commuted to work and school from our hovel in outer Philadelphia. We look forward to many good times with this happy pair.

On August third, our twenty-eighth wedding anniversary, Alison joined hand and heart, dog, horse and exuberant youth with Bryan Ashbaugh whom we have know for many years. We have vacationed with his family and share common interests other than our children. Following the reception at our farm the newlyweds headed for Ontario where they canoed and camped in solitude. They had no sooner enrolled at Indiana University graduate school of business when an offer came to play basketball in Finland. And so they were off for a once-in-a-lifetime experience attested to in their detailed letters. As for both sets of sagging parents we, together with Bryan's brother blew ourselves to several easy days on a houseboat on the Mississippi River.

Bennett spent last year in Steamboat Springs, Colorado, so in March we paid him a visit. The "old folks" are really into these shorter skis and what fun we had! He returned to Madison in the spring to become a "turf technician" (sod-layer that is) and is off to Europe soon, now that his coffers have been laboriously filled.

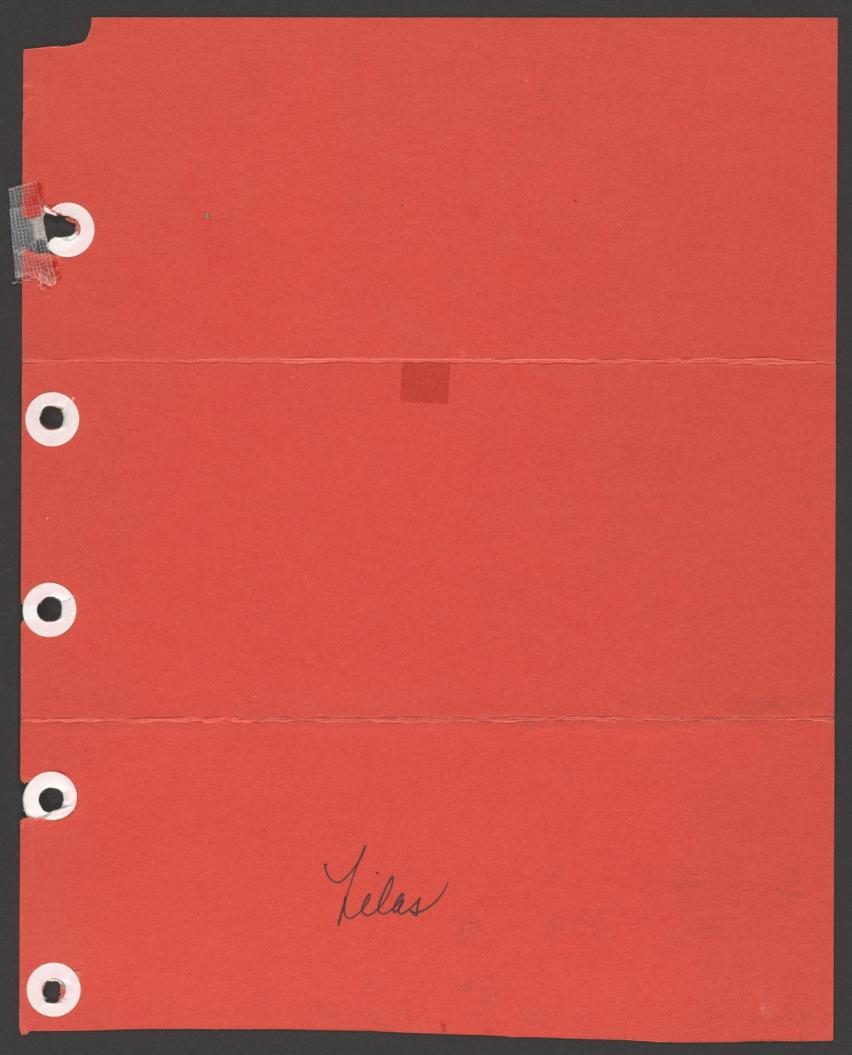

Brian, a high school senior, accompanied us to Steamboat where he casually left us behind to crash the mountainsides with expert skill, keeping good pace with his older brother. He will be first on the bus when James Madison Memorial heads for Jackson Hole after Christmas.

What an adventure we had at Eastertime! Brother George, DAnn and son Roger, Pat, Brian and I flew to Belize, Central America to bound and splash, fish and swim in the magnificent waters of its barrier reef. We six, plus our fine captain lived and learned for seven days aboard the Atoll Queen, a thirty-five foot sailing craft nicely designed for four. Scuba diving with Captain Ray put Brian on the honor roll as he passed his deep-water test with flying colors. Barracuda and beans for breakfast, bonefish, sharks, wahoo---we were wet and salty the whole time! Reflecting, George summarized it so well, calling it "the greatest culture shock of my life." It was a great vacation even though very little turned out as planned. The boys will long remember the hourly crises and experiences we lived in that short week. There is some talk of another trip, perhaps with Landrovers and off to the jungle--I'm ready.

Pat couldn't stand it any longer. She had to see for herself the watergate trial first hand so in October she met DAnn in Washington. They attended Judge Sirica's Court (our new folk hero) and Pat returned full of political fervor which is nothing new. Upon leaving the courtroom one afternoon John Mitchell cast a deadpan WINK at her producing mixed emotions, to say the LEAST!

At this writing the senior Healys are with us in Madison. Dad faces major surgery in a few days and we look forward to a successful outcome. To our friends and loved ones everywhere we wish you a peaceful but joyous New Year!

So many thanks, Lilas, for all that you do for us! with love, John, Put + kids and Mother + Dad Healy

Monson Takes Home Four Awards at Athletic Banquet

Larry Monson's outstanding athletic career was topped off Thursday night when he was presented with the Anton S. Arneson award at the Barneveld Athletic Banquet. Monson also received special awards as honorary captain in football, MVP in basketball, and top offensive player in basketball.

Barneveld Athletic Director Tom Stumpf presented Patty Mieden with the outstanding female athlete award sponsored by the Barneveld State Bank at Thursday night's athletic banquet at the Barneveld Legion Hall.

Junior Ted Swenson received a "Mr. Football" award from football coach Bud Johnson Thursday night at Barneveld's athletic banquet. Swenson played nearly every position on the team this year, both offensively and defensively.

Bill Schlimgen received this "Eagle Award" from wrestling coach Carl Mook at Barneveld's Athletic Banquet Thursday night.

The award pays tribute to the dedication and hard work that Schlimgen displayed throughout the season.

Iowa County Sheriff Bill Whitford displays a collection of "pot pipes" which has been put together by the Department of Natural Resources [DNR] and the Sheriff's Department.

Sheriff's Department to Display "Pot Pipes" at the County Fair

One of the most unusual exhibits at this year's lowa County Fair will be a display which has been put together by the lowa County Sheriff's Department

A collection of about 125 "pot pipes" will be displayed by the Sheriff's Department at the fair in Mineral Point. The pieces of paraphernalia are devices used for the illegal smoking of marijuana and other drugs which have been confiscated during the last few years.

Sheriff William Whitford explained that many of the pipes came to the collection from the Department of Natural Resources (DNR), which has occasion to come across many at Governor Dodge State Park, and Devil's Lake near Baraboo. The state crime lab used to keep all of the pot pipes when they were sent there for examination, but since the county now has its own testing equipment, the confiscated pipes can stay at the Sheriff's Department.

The pipes are made of all types of materials, and are of all shapes and sizes. Most were purchased in tobacco stores, according to the sheriff, although a number of the pipes were hand made.

pipes were hand-made.

"We've got one here that has a weed killer container for the body," Whitford pointed out, "while another one was made from the plumbing fixtures in the Higbee Hotel." He said some were made with nose fittings "like an oxygen mask" so that none of the "precious" drug is allowed to escape.

"Here's one with a suction cup on the bottom that you can stick on the dash of your car," the sheriff said. "And one made from a mayonnaise jar and a piece of gas line tubing. It also looks like someone took up making "pot pipes" in ceramic class."

Whitford said one of the larger made out of hamboo.

Whitford said one of the larger pipes was made out of bamboo, while another was made from a gas hook-up pipe.

Looking at all of the pipes and summarizing his thoughts, the sheriff said, "This just goes to show how people will go to any length to break the law."

Precedent Seen in Drought

By Steve Hannah of The Journal Staff

Madison, Wis. — One of the nation's foremost climatologists says the erratic weather pattern that has played havoc with agriculture twice within the last three years, and is responsible for the drought sweeping much of mid-America now, has an alarming precedent in

Reid A. Bryson, director of the Institute for Environmental Studies at the University of Wisconsin—Madison, claims the stagnant circulation of the atmosphere that is producing drought this year in parts of Wisconsin, Minnesota, the Dakotas and several Western states resembles a system that carried drought through the upper Midwest and across the Great Plains between 1200 and 1400.

Field Studies

Bryson, whose specialty is reconstructing past climates, spent a good part of the 1960s collecting field data in northwestern Iowa from the site of an Indian settlement obliterated by the two century drought.

Along with D.A. Baerreis, a UW—Madison professor of archeology, Bryson published a study of the Mill Creek excavation in 1968.

Bryson said the Mill Creek Indians were primarily corn farmers, and representative of the sort of agriculture that moved across what is now known as the corn belt to the foot of the Rocky Mountains.

National Notoriety

Bryson, who has gained national notoriety in recent years for proposing that the polar air mass is expanding and the Earth is cooling, said a similar climate change struck North America quite suddenly around 1200.

"Instead of the moist south winds from the Gulf of Mexico, the dry westerlies prevailed and the long drought began," he wrote recently in a magazine article on the Mill Creek culture. "In perhaps 20 years the tall grass prairies were replaced by short grass, and the only remnants of the forest that had filled the valleys were the few cotton-woods and willows along the streambanks.

"The deer disappeared, and two-thirds of the meat eaten by the Mill Creek people came from the bison, a grazing animal, though the people apparently had less of all kinds of food than formerly. Farther west (of northwest Iowa), the farming villages disappeared entirely. There were profound cultural changes.

"That drought lasted for 200 years," Bryson concluded. "So clearly 200 years of drought in the 'breadbasket of North America' is possible"

Bryson said that with data he collected from the Mill Creek site, he was able to construct a hypothetical rainfall map depicting the weather pattern that caused the two century!dry spell.

Similar to Now

"The general circulation pattern of the atmosphere that prompted the 200 year drought is quite similar to what we are seeing now," he said.

Bryson suggested that his suspicion that a prolonged drought might be ahead was reinforced by weather data from other parts of the globe. England, France and Germany have been plagued by a severe drought this growing season

"Dr. Hubert Lamb, a British climatologist, has compiled weather data in Europe for back between 1150 and 1350," Bryson said. "During North America's 200 year drought, the weather patterns that prevailed brought mild winters and unusually dry summers. That's just what we're seeing today."

Bryson said history also told us that as Iowa's Mill Creek Indian culture was disappearing, European drought decimated crops and there was a widespread outbreak of grain blight.

Each Mother's Day, Barneveld's Congregational Minister Paul Fotsch gives carnations to over 80 mothers within his congregation. Here he presents a flower to one of the oldest mothers, Rose Massey, Barneveld, who celebrated here 90th birthday in September. May 11 marked her 68th year as a mother.

Our Bad Weather May Be 'Normal'

By WHITNEY GOULD
Of The Capital Times Staff

The violent thunderstorms battering Madison and much of the Midwest may be less of a temporary aberration than a return to what was "normal" weather in the last century, according to one of the world's leading experts on climate trends.

"The reason it seems unusual is that we're not used to it, but weather like this was the general pattern of the last century," says Reid Bryson, a professor of meteorology and director of the Institute for Environmental Studies at the University of Wisconsin.

"The period we think of as 'normal' — the last 30 years — is probably one of the most abnormal periods of the past 1,000 years"

There is unusual weather everywhere today, Bryson notes: rain in parts of California which never had rain at this time of year; snow in Southern England; rain in wheat-growing areas.

But a study of the history of climatology indicates that this sort of thing was normal in the last century. Combing through an Army surgeon's records from Fort Winnebago, Bryson found that on July 1, 1838, a light snow was falling in Portage.

"The tempo of weather is slowing down to the way it was back then," Bryson said. "More north-south motion, less eastwest motion."

Thunderstorms indicate the motion of the atmosphere is "sort of sluggish; you have everything poured in one place."

He compared the genesis of storms to a pot of boiling water:

heat at the bottom (the earth's surface) causes a big bubble of warm air to rise and come into collision with cool air. The larger the contrasts between the top and the bottom, the more vigorous the bubble becomes.

The next logical question is why the contrasts which produce such thunderstorms are so dramatic today.

Bryson's theories in this area are admittedly controversial. But he is one of a number of respected climate researchers who believe the reason has something to do with an increase in carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, partly due to the burning of fossil fuels.

The carbon dioxide tends to trap heat waves coming from the earth's surface, resulting in a warming effect.

"It's like putting a blanket on the earth," Bryson says.

At the end of the last century, there were about 280 parts-permillion of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, he noted; now the concentration is up to about 318 ppm.

Counteracting this warming effect however, is the increase in airborne dust in the atmosphere from industrialization and volcanic activity in recent years. The dust blocks out the sun's

The effect of that, Bryson's research suggests, has been a drop in the world's mean temperature by three-fourths of a degree (Centigrade) in less than 20 years.

It would take a drop of only five degrees Centigrade for another Ice Age to occur.

"We've had 10 to 12 Ice Ages in the last 1 million years," Bryson observes, "at intervals of about 10,000 years. The last one was about 10,800 years ago. So it looks like we're due for another one pretty soon."

Barneveld Music Teacher Honored As Teacher of Year

Jan Swenson, Barneveld music teacher, was recently named one of four Wisconsin "Teachers of the Year" by the Wisconsin Department of Public Instruction. Mrs. Swenson prides herself in her innovative teaching techniques.

Barneveld music teacher Jan Swenson is a teacher who likes to do things differently than the next teacher might.

teacher might.

And because of the different methods that she employs in teaching elementary music, she was recently honored by being named one of four "Wisconsin Teachers of the Year". As a music teacher, she was honored in the special services category, which includes such subjects as music, physical education, art, etc.

The Barneveld teachers put their heads together and decided to nominate Mrs. Swenson for the state honor, and after going through the credentials of the many teachers nominated, the State Department of Public Instruction (DPI) notified the Barneveld teacher that she was one of four selected.

In announcing the awards, Barbara Thompson, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, said, "The 'Teachers of the Year' awards are given to individuals who typify professional excellence and in this sense these four teachers are truly deserving of these honors. In a broader sense, the awards are symbolic of teaching excellence in every school and can be shared by the thousands of dedicated teachers throughout Wisconsin."

Mrs. Swenson is an accomplished musician as well as an outstanding teacher. She has been teaching for nine years, five years in Barneveld where she has all elementary music and Junior and Senior choral groups. and before that, four years in the River Valley area.

A 1955 graduate of Madison East High School, Mrs. Swenson attended the University of Wisconsin - Madison on a scholarship and graduated in 1959. After receiving a major in instrumental music, she decided to be a professional horn player, and studied horn under the first horn player for the Chicago Symphony. Next she went to California where she hopefully would find more opportunities, and for a year and a half played in the Oakland Symphony. She also studied music and did private teaching besides working in a music store, before coming back to Wisconsin. She applied for her first teach-

She applied for her first teaching job approximately three weeks before the 1960-61 school year began, and was fortunate in finding a job as an instrumental, vocal and general music teacher at Arena High School. Her husband-to-be was teaching there at the time, and there she met him and they were married in the Fall of 1962.

The following year, they went to the State of Oregon where her husband Dean taught agriculture and Mrs. Swenson stayed active in music in a church choir. She also became involved in a symphony orchestra, which toured 13 countries in Europe over a six month span. The Swensons stayed in Oregon for three years, before they returned to Wisconsin where she took a position as an instrumental music teacher at River Valley High School during the 1968-69 school year. Three years later, she began as a general music teacher at Barneveld.

As she became involved in the general music program, she found that she became more interested as each year passed. "I enjoy each aspect of the general music field, but I would have to say that my heart lies with my elementary, teaching," Mrs. Swenson said. "I am lucky that I am able to work with the students all the way from first grade on up through high school. There are not too many teachers who have such an opportunity."

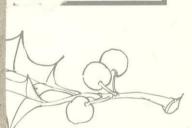

Mrs. Swenson believes strongly in her teaching methods. "When teaching elementary students, I like to start with the sound before sign concept," she said. "We do much work with tonal and rhythmic echoes, and I have them moving to the music before they see it in notation. I also have them singing in modes other than major, so that they are able to function as well using all the modes rather than just the common ones."

common ones."

She noted that at the fifth and sixth grade levels, she has them sight reading. "I took a group to the teacher's convention and they did sight reading on the spot," she noted. "The people were impressed to see the children sight reading at that age."

Playing by ear and improvising

Playing by ear and improvising is also encouraged in Mrs. Swenson's classes, which is not common at the grade school level. She also believes in having the students put their music in perspective. "For a student to be able to recognize a quarter beat and a half beat is useless unless he can sing the melody, putting it in perspective," she said. Her husband presently farms her husband presently farms near Arena, where they live with their three children, Dee 14, Pam 12, and Doug 10.

Mrs. Swenson is involved with several state music associations. She is doing committee work on an Elementary Music Comittee in the state, which helps the DPI establish guidelines, and she is also on a general music committee. Mrs. Swenson has done inservices around the state for other music teachers. She has been a member of the Madison Symphony for 20 years, and has also been director of her church's choir in Spring Green for the past 10 years. Mrs. Swenson has also been teaching auto-harp at recent "pickin" in grinnin" "workshops in the area.

Margy Klema, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rhodell Klema of Wauzeka, Wis. and Richard J. Harpold, of Barneveld were married Saturday, April 20 at the Barneveld Lutheran church. The Rev. Robert Twiton performed the 2:00 p.m. double ring ceremony.

The bride wore a princess-style gown of imported organza with a waistlength yoke of Chantilly lace, pearl trimmed and ruffled. The high collar and fitted sleeves were also trimmed with pearls and ruffled. The flared skirt with appliques and deep lace flounce hem extended into a bouffant cathedral train. Her fingertip veil, extending from a Camelot crown, was edged with a border of Cluny lace. She carried a cascade bouquet of red fifth generation of the Lloyd-Jones family gathered for a painting weekend.

Paint-spattered cousins

By JANE M. WOOD

There were young voices in the old chapel again — laughter, and the sound of singing, a harmonica playing, dogs barking, picnic baskets on the carriage stone, a frisbie hanging from the branch of one of the tall Arbor Vitae trees which mark the entrance to the brown-shingled Unity Chapel in the Wyoming Valley of Iowa County. The fifth generation of the Lloyd-Jones family had returned.

They were inside, scraping calcimine from the walls, stirring up paint, wielding rollers, and scrubbing floors and woodwork. Tourists wandered by from time to time to stand before the grave of Frank Lloyd Wright, and, attracted by the noise and activity, peered in the windows to see what was going on.

The idea of painting the chapel walls had originated at the wedding of Mary Lloyd-Jones and John Lynch in June, when members of the family had gathered there for the ceremony.

Evergreen branches and roadside flowers had masked the peeling walls, but the younger cousins had decided that action should be taken, and a date for a painting weekend was set on the spot. Parents, who were inclined to look on the venture as one of the short-lived enthusiasms of the young, reckoned without the determination of Buncy Jeffrey and Mary and John Lynch who drove from Iowa to Madison, and gathered up their Wood cousins — Woody, Susan, Chris, David, and Laura, and Susan's fiance, Tom Meier, for their painting crew.

and Laura Wood, Buncy Jeffrey and John and Mary Lynch.

The work proved to be more than they had bargained for. Layers of calcimine had to be scraped off and scrubbed before new paint could be applied. Calcimine dust was thick, and though they worked hard, they drifted outside occasionally to wing a frisbie about or to stand in the small cemetery trying to read the fading inscriptions on the stones.

An obelisk marks the grave of Richard Lloyd-Jones, their great-great grandfather, a preacher-hatter-farmer from Llandyssul, Wales, who had come to America in 1844 with his wife, Mary, and their seven children and had eventually settled in this Wisconsin valley whose vistas resembled their far away Welsh home. There were years of great hardship and struggle, family misfortunes and tragedies, but Richard and Mary lived to see many of their children grown up and settled in the valley, until, as one contemporary writer put it, it was a veritable "nest of Joneses."

Over the years the Taliesin Fellowship has kept the chapel repaired, putting on new shingles and a new roof, mowing the yard and planting flowers. A chapel fund, administered by the family, helped with some of the expenses.

Finally, the crew finished its work. The walls were bright with their new coat of paint, and a group of tired, paint-spattered youngsters gathered up paint cans and loaded ladders into cars, and were off again. The key was turned in the lock and the chapel left to drowse on under the midsummer sun, below the walls of Taliesin and the green hills of Bryn Mawyr, Bryn Canol, and Bryn Bach.

The family and the old community are scattered now and reunion times are infrequent, but somehow the weekend of work seemed to forge a bond between the cousins and an unspoken pledge that this generation will cherish the little brown chapel which symbolizes the history and traditions of their family.

The chapel had been a dream of Richard's, but it was Jenkin, the minister son from Chicago, who translated the dream to reality. He returned each summer to the valley and eventually purchased the site of what is now Tower Hill State Park. Here the community used to gather in the open air for services. W. C. Gannett, a friend of Jenkin's describes it:

"We held the meeting at the foot of a rocky crest; the great canvas from the hayricks became a Tabernacle for the day; ferns drooped and tall flowers glowed to make it beautiful; and at the open sides of the meadow, the stream, the golden slopes, and the hills beyond became church walls and frescoes. The teams drove up on Sunday till 50 or more were tethered among the trees. There must have been some three or four hundred persons present."

Gannett writes a description, too, of the type of permanent building they hoped to erect.

"A three-roomed church, to hold a minimum 100 and at a maximum, by unfolding audience room into the parlor, 200, with a kitchen corner tucked in somewhere — this cased in a form so simply pretty that it will beautify the hills, not blot them with another stiff church box — and all for $1,000 or $1,200 — this is our problem for the architects. It takes three breaths to write it out. But it can be somehow wrought out too, and all that can be will be — a thousand valleys are waiting for this type of churchlet today — something homelike within, a grace without, and buyable with very humble means."

The chapel was built to those specifications in 1886, too late for Richard, who died the year before, to see. David Timothy, a Welsh stonemason, who lived with John Lloyd-Jones, and who is also buried in the little cemetery, laid the foundation for the chapel. He was a meticulous craftsman and the family was raised with stories of his careful and precise workmanship. He set up the foundations for family houses, fireplaces and chimneys, and he was a strong supporter of Frank Lloyd Wright, Richard's grandson. The wooden windmill, Romeo and Juliet, designed by Mr. Wright, which the uncles predicted would fall in the first storm stands today, a monument to Mr. Wright's genius, and Timothy's craftsmanship.

damsville is another Iowa County ghost town. It's on the other side of Highway 39, which also is off County Trunk F. It's difficult to find (as is Moscow), but Raymond Peterson, a lifelong resident of the area, retired hunter and wing walker, trapper and Norwegian farmer, knows where it is.

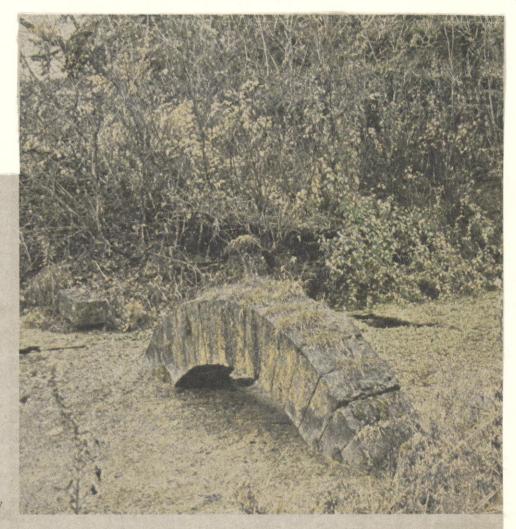

"You'll get to Adamsville, but you won't know it," Raymond said with a laugh when we stopped at his rural Barneveld farm to ask directions. "I went to school there. I was born and raised there. I figure I know more about Adamsville than anybody in the country."

Knowing Raymond, I wouldn't doubt that he knew more about a lot of things than anybody in the country.

"There was an old mill down there," Raymond continued. "They had a crowbar through it so you couldn't turn the mill wheel. I spent hours when I was a kid trying to get that crowbar out. I finally did, and, boy, did I catch hell!"

Raymond was full of stories of the old days in Adamsville, but he was also full of information about Adamsville today, having just been there the day before we talked to him.

"There's an old mill pond and race still back there with a stone bridge in the middle of it. I cleaned that bridge off yesterday. It's on my trap run. I figure I own it. We used to have all our school picnics back there!"

The old mill pond in Adamsville was the site of many a school picnic.

Over in Adamsville, following Raymond's direction, we found the old mill pond, the remodeled (and now a home) Adamsville cheese factory, the rock bridge and the Adamsville sign: "Site of old Adamsville, population 115, founded 1851."

There's not much else there except the pond, the stone bridge, recently revealed by Raymond, who must have somehow gotten out to the middle of the pond to do it and distant but still vibrant memories of some mighty fine school picnics.

The Artrain was officially opened Wednesday morning as the ribbon was cut by Barney Holland and Donna Erickson. The Michigan Artrain, stationed on the tracks at the north end of Dodgeville, will be in the city until Sunday, May 4. Official Ceremony
Marks Artrain Opening in Dodgeville

The ribbon was cut and the Artrain was officially opened Wednesday morning during a special ceremony outside the train.

Scheduled to cut the ribbon was Mrs. Jean Lucey, Governor Lucey's wife, but a report came that she was ill, and Dodgeville's own Barney Holland served as a substitute. Assisting with the official opening was Donna Erickson, Community Chairman of the Pastor David Roberts of the Plymouth Congregational Church in Dodgeville opened the ceremony with the invocation, and Dodgeville Mayor Douglas Schmoekel welcomed everyone to the city. He noted that "bringing the Artrain to Dodgeville required a lot of work and cooperation from all the communities involved."

County Resource Agent Everett Olsen, also Co-Chairman of the Bicentennial for Iowa County, gave a bicentennial greeting, saying that as communities try to pull the past together with records and the written word, so the Artrain looks back through the past the same way with paintings from years ago. He pointed out the "glorious past of the Iowa County area", saying that the area once produced three-fourths of all the lead used in the United States.

The Dodgeville High School band played a selection under the direction of John Mingst, and local poet Edna Meudt read a poem she had written, "showing the relationship between writing and the art on the Artrain." The poem was entitled "Overlay".

Next, Jerrold B. Rouby, Executive Director of the Wisconsin Arts Board, expressed the value of the Artrain to the community, stressing that it is "much more than a travelling museum. I'm sure it will be an event that is both worthwhile and pleasurable to the communities involved," he said.

Members of the Dodgeville Artrain committee were then introduced, and the ribbon was

School groups were already waiting to begin tours of the train, with the first group scheduled to view the art being Barneveld Grades.

The night before the official opening, contributors of $25.00 or more got a sneak preview of the train, at the Artrain Preview

The train contains a wide variety of art, with paintings by such famed artists as Renoir, Van Gogh, Picasso; the famed Head of Apollo, a marble piece from the Hellenistic Period, III Century B.C.; a suit of armor from Germany; photographs, modern designs and numerous other art nieces.

Local artists will be performing daily on the Artrain, and entertainment will be performed live on an outdoor stage.

The train will be in the city until Sunday, May 4.

A new water tower is on its way up in Barneveld. The structure should be completed in about six weeks, and will hold approximately 100,000 gallons of water.

Fairgrounds Come to Life

The Dane County Fairground was a beehive of activity Wednesday as thousands of people hauled in livestock for judging, readied demonstration areas, put the finishing touches on exhibits and generally prepared for the start of the Dane County Junior Fair. It officially started at 6 p.m.: Wednesday and will run through Sunday. Here, Larry Kelly, Deerfield, leads three calves through a very hot fairground walkway (temperatures reached 99 in Madison Wednesday). The young stock belonged to his nieces and nephews, he said.

ER 1975 R Y CHRISTMAS A little less impatient with those we deem too slow; A little less of arrogance because of all we know: A little more humility, seeing our worth is slight: We are such trivial candles compared to stars at night! A little more forgiving and swifter to be kind; A little more desirous the word of praise to find;

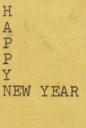

The word of praise to utter and make a heart rejoice; A little bit more careful to speak with gentle voice; A little more true eagerness to understand each other: A little more real striving to help a shipwrecked brother; A little more high courage to each task that must be done;

These be our resolutions -- and God help us, every one!

Sam Fotsch Given Lakeland Dean's Honor

Samuel Fotsch, son of Dr. and Mrs. Paul Fotsch of Barneveld. has received the prestigious Dean's Honor Award from Lakeland College, Sheboygan.

The scholarship is a four year, $4,000 grant. In order to qualify, the student must have been in the upper ten percent of his class scholastically, have evidenced academic superiority, been recommended by his counselor and been active in the extracurricular events in his high school. Samuel will enter as a freshman in September.

Lakeland College is a fullyaccredited, four year liberal arts school, affiliated with the United Church of Christ. It occupies a 150 acre, rural campus in the Kettle Moraine area and was founded in 1862 by hardy German emigrants. Originally known as "the school of the prophets in the bush," it was a training school for ministers. Later, a college and an academy were added to the complex, but when surrounding communities were able to build their own high schools, the academy was dropped. Lakeland offers 20 majors and 17 minors. It was the first Wisconsin college to introduce the Winterim session in January, during which a student pursues one subject in depth, usually with field experiences or travel abroad. It offers the only Health Care Administration major in the state.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN It appears to us that the majority of the people are misinterpreting the original meaning of the lotter published in the shopper by our pastor, Nov. Fotsch. First off. let us mention that he had the letters published in the Shopper about Sunday Bingo and the Legion after he had received the approval of the Sunday morning church congregation. There were no discenting votes. He didn't do it on his own but with the approval of the church Thoroforo, don't blame him alone. The real point that was intended and that was brought out is "with 7 days in the week do we have to have gambling in our community on Sunday?" No slander was intended at the American Legion as we all know the good they as Veterans have accomplished. We only are questioning their source of funds, from a moral aspect, that they are using for charitable purposes. We feel quite fortunate in having a man fill our pulpit on Sunday that is willing to accept writicism and harrassment because of speaking out on his convictions as a Sorvant of God. Adopted by U.C.C. Church Council

For 128 years the congregational Church has served this community. Its loaders have at many times spoke out on local issues, often on unpopular issues. At the present time it appears as though there is an orosion of moral values in our community: Cur moral values are beingleached away by a culture that is ondorsing solf-indulgence. At no time has the Congregation! Church oncouraged or condened gambling or the use of alchoholic beverages. Those are two of the greatest social problems in our country and in our state, any organization that receive the major source of its income from exploiting and encouraging those human frailities and then pose as a bonofactor to the community is deceiving itself and the members of its community. Christian badors throughout history have said that "the end is not justified by the means." We as citizens of this community are concerned about the way an organization riases its funds as well as the way those funds are spent.

If anyone has any ideas or suggestions how the American Legion can improve its Legion activities for the good of the community, please come to the Congregational church. We most every Sunday at 10:30 a.m. for worship.

Nick Danz, age 5, and John Krueger, age 7, suffered second and third degree burns when they were trapped in the Danz home following an explosion. A third child, Jessica, was carried from her upstairs bedroom by her mother after the fire broke out.

The fire started as Mrs. Danz was working to remove rubber backing from the floor. The rubber backing had torn loose and stuck to the floor, and she was using gasoline to remove it.

When the fumes from the gasoline reached the pilot light of gas range in the home, an explosion resulted.

Burial Request Discussed

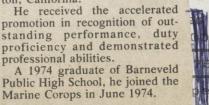

The Iowa County Board of Adjustments met January 17 to act on a variance request of John Osteraas, Madison, which would permit him to leave the unembalmed body of his sister Jana buried in a pine box on his property near Barneveld.

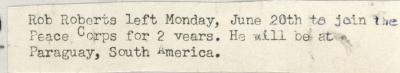

Judge Richard Orton in circuit court had ruled an injunction in favor of Osteraas. The injunction having expired, requested a variance. Osteraas Osteraas met with more delays in the matter however, when the Board of Adjustments ruled it didn't have jurisdiction in the matter because Osteraas "failed to exercise his right in requirement of the ordinance.

Instead of filling for a variance, he should have sought a conditional use permit.

Stumpf Resigns Barneveld High School Principal Position That 1975

Barneveld's A. Thomas Stumpf resigned as high school principal Thursday night, approximately one month after the school board decided to eliminate the position he presently holds.

Stumpf's resignation came during an hour-long executive session March 13 and is effective

Friday, March 21.

Taking over for the remainder of the school year as administra-tor - principal will be the present part-time administrator Richard Neel, who will hold the position from March 24 until June 30. He was previously dismissed by the board at the same time that the principal position was eliminated and will not be returning for the 1975-76 school year.

Stumpf will receive two months severance pay from the Barneveld School District.

Stumpf said his resignation came to avoid legal entanglements that would have resulted had he not done so, and also because "the board was considering non-renewing my contract, or in short, they were considering firing me."

The problem started when the board voted in mid-February to eliminate his principal position, but failed to give him notice by February 28, the deadline for such action. He said at this point there is no way they can legally non-renew him, so to avoid being involved in a lawsuit, he

He said the combined position of administrator - principal would be too much for one man to handle in the future, and he wanted no part of the post.

Tom Stumpf
When asked what his plans for the future hold, Stumpf said, "I have had several offers both inside and outside of education, and I will be considering them within the next couple of weeks.

At an assembly late Friday afternoon, Stumpf told junior and senior high students about his resignation. He made it clear that his reasons have nothing to do with the student body, saying, have thoroughly enjoyed the past two and a half years. I will especially cherish the memory of the past year."

He told the student body that "things have worked at this school because you as individuals with the past year. have been willing to go along with the policies set up." He ended by telling the group of students and faculty that he had enjoyed

The same afternoon, the Barneveld teachers met and offered the following statement: "the Barne-veld teachers express deep regret at the loss of one of the finest educational leaders in Barne-veld's history, Tom Stumpf. Students and teachers are very concerned that the many improvements made through Mr. Stumpf's efforts may be lost. Everyone involved agrees that Mr. Stumpf's abilities to organize, his consistency in dealing with school situations, his unfailing enthusiasm, his rapport with students and his empathy for students and teachers alike make him unique. It will be very hard to replace him."

A number of teachers were asked individually on Friday how they feel about Stumpf's resignation. Eric Larsen, head football and wrestling coach, summed up his feelings as to why Stumpf resigned, saying "After shovel-ing against the tide for so long, what are you going to do but throw away the shovel and find another beach."

Grade school teacher Tom Shinko said, "The faculty will really miss him, and if the faculty will miss him, then the students will miss him three times as much. He was honest, and you could confide with him. He wouldn't deal with rumors, and he was always open about everything. Anybody who has put as much effort in as him, and come out like this. . .well, I just don't know.

A senior high teacher, Jac Blasi, said, "Tom Stumpf made working with them during his stay BHS into a really good school we could all be proud of. He worked tirelessly to improve the quality of education here. When a man of his calibre is driven to resign in mid-year, you wonder what will happen next. The real tragedy is that even this probably won't get people to speak up in their children's behalf."

Dave Laulainen, high school basketball coach, said, "I anticibasketball coach, said, "I anticipated him leaving, but I am surprised he is going this early. I realty think a lot of him. He is by far the most personable administrator I've known. I have nothing but good things to say about Tom Diane Hanson, who has also had problems with the school board in the past, said, "He is one of the finest principals I have ever worked under. He has done much to improve the school system. He gives you a pat on the back when you need it. After what he's gone through, I can see why he resigned.

She added that the combined position of administrator - principal will be a difficult one, saying, "I don't think people actually know how much work is involved. I wish some of the people who think one man can do it all would just come in and try it for a couple of days." She said the board was trying to cut corners and save money by consolidating the jobs, but they're losing in the long run.

Al Antonson, who teaches science in the school system, said "educationally his loss is a disaster. Of administrators, he is the best. Barneveld is fortunate to have had him here. He has done a tremendous amount for the school, and the students in the school. His non-presence will be deeply felt."

Antonson said he is "leery of the board's ability to hire a replacement, because he will not be easy to replace. The man will have to be a superman."

Antonson labeled Stumpf an Antonson labeled Stumpr an "outstanding educator", and said the students will suffer in the long run. He added that "a school is only as good as its teachers, and teachers are only as good as the administration." He said it is yet to be seen what affect the resignation will have on the school as a whole.

"The worst part about it is, he liked it here, enjoyed the kids, and still had to leave. It's just too bad the situation was as such," Antonson said. "When the new man takes over in the administrator - principal position, something that should be done isn't going to get done.

Several teachers made statements that they wished to have kept anonymous. One teacher said Stumpf was forced to resign before he was fired because "the board hasn't been able to push him around like they'd like to.' The same teacher said a large number of teachers are "looking for another job. Unfortunately, the board doesn't care because there are probably 15 others waiting for each job and they can hire new teachers at the base

Another teacher said, "do a good job, break your back, go the extra mile, accomplish a lot, and get chased out of town. . .it speaks for itself."

Memorial Dedicated at Hyde Congregational Church Chapel

by Pearl M./Hughes

The Hyde Chapel, formerly the Hyde Congregational Church, was the scene recently of the dedication of a memorial with the caption, "In Loving Memory of the Pioneers Who Provided a Place of Worship and of Rest, 1862," the gift of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Bennett, Evansville, Wisconsin.

Bennett's great-grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hamilton, were among the founding families. Bennett was a former resident of McCutchin Hollow.

This church was instituted in 1862 and re-dedicated in 1878. Among the founders, many names stand out whose descendents continued to support the church, namely - Hamilton, McCutchin, Price, Hubbard and Evans. Families who joined later and served faithfully were Johnson, Davis, Duesler and Olson. Lena Olson, cousin of Mrs. Harland Forseth, served as church organist and Mrs. Evan Davis, mother of Bertyn Davis, prepared the sacraments many years. My father, John McCutchin, served as church clerk for a period of 49 years, from 1908-1944.

Services were held on Sunday afternoons with an occasional evening service. The seating arrangements was unique - the women and children sat on the right and the men on the left. This was segregation, but no one objected. Ministers from Arena, Adamsville, Ridgeway and Barneveld served the church many years.

On June 9, 1952, this church celebrated its 90th anniversary with a country style picnic dinner, a birthday cake and an appropriate program. The oldest, living former minister, Rev. B.F. Schoenfeld, who served from 1908-1916, was the guest speaker.

When membership dwindled, the church doors were closed by vote at the annual meeting in 1957 and remained closed except for an occasional funeral. In 1966, a non-profit corporation, the Hyde Community Association was formed to preserve and maintain this church as a historical landmark and a memorial to the pioneers.

The church was always open to people of various faiths and here they worshiped together. In the cemetery, nestling behind the chapel, lay buried not only Congregationalists, but also Lutherans, Baptists, Methodists, Catholics and many with no

Catholics and many with no church affiliation.

The dedication service included a brief historical sketch by Pearl M. Hughes, the words of dedication by Mrs. Marjorie Rickey, a prayer by Esther Bawden and a recording, "How Great Thou

Ridgeway Ghost has haunting good times

By GARY PETERSON Of The Capital Times Staff

Question: "What was the story on that - Strangler Lewis and the Ridgeway Ghost?"

Answer: "Which of the twenty versions would you like to hear?"

Here's the twenty-first version, give or take a few. It's the Ridgeway Ghost according to Otto William "Boo" Tesch, retired barber, current raspberry picker and cutter of 25 cords of

"Doin' pretty good for a young guy, heh!"

'Years ago," he began, "I saw a big dog right down there where the graveyard is. I never was afraid at night; I used to coon hunt. On a good moonlit night I came by the cemetery with my coon dog and this big dog - the biggest I ever saw came out of there. I reached for a rock, but the dog disappeared. My coon hound took off down the road with its tail between its legs. I'm not sure it was the Ghost, but it had to be something mysterious.

Legend has it the Ridgeway Ghost - last seen riding the cowcatcher on the night train out of Ridgeway in the 1860s or possibly destroyed in the Ridgeway fire of 1910 or maybe still around? - often took the form of an animal: a large dog, a headless horse, or a ghostly pig.

Here's how William and Strangler Lewis tied into the legend.

Evan "Strangler" Lewis, once world champion wrestler and a Ridgeway resident, was the son of William Lewis. William was the one allegedly scared to death by the Ghost. This is Boo Tesch's version:

"Lewis had gone to the Kate Powell farm to do some butchering. It became night by the time they were finished. Billy 'Mainspring' Williams warned Lewis not to go home, and to stay the night because some mighty strange things had been going on in that area (Potter's Grove, about one mile west of present day Ridgeway, once a small settlement and the reputed "birthplace" and favorite haunting spot of the Ghost).

"Lewis . . . (ignored the warnings) and was part way across a big field when he felt something warm breathing on his cold hand.

To make a long story short, it was "a large dog" and by the time Lewis arrived home "he was dripping with sweat and his family sent for the doctor, who came at once. He found that Lewis' heart had moved two inches from its normal position. He died two days later on May 8, 1974."

Tesch's oral history is found in 'Ridgeway - Host To The Ghost,' a book published for the bicentennial. It was written by Melva Phillips and Jeanie Lewis, whose husband's grandfather was "Strangler"

I spoke with these two local historians and Ghost researchers at Lewis' rural Ridgeway farm.

Melva Phillips and Jeanie Lewis talk about the Ridgeway Ghost near one of its haunts — the Petra House. Phillips and Lewis wrote the book "Ridgeway — Host to the Ghost."

"The Ridgeway Ghost kind of toured the area," Lewis began. "The more you hear about him the more people claim he's been in areas farther away. One of the guys up in Ridgeway is always trying to get that Ridgeway Ghost to come back, but he doesn't believe in him. I keep telling him, you have to believe in him. I do. I think he's around. I think he was at the laundromat last

'Be careful writing about this," she continued. "Don't get too involved the way most writers do, trying to get into the character of the thing they're writing about and all. And don't write it late at night .

Boo Tesch got his name not from the ghost, but from his hobby . "umpiring for about 45 years. Naturally, they boo you once in awhile. Couldn't get around that.'

Tesch tells of the Ghost's origin as well: "An old feller named Kennedy got killed out there sitting on a railroad track, counting his money. He was deaf and got run over by the train.

So, he thinks he was the Ridgeway Ghost?

"Oh, no doubt about it. He had the money buried out there and besides a feller in Ridgeway used to look for that money and I think he found it. He purchased a new car back in 1916 and after that no new Ghost stories appeared."

'That's a goody, Boo," Jeanie Lewis exclaimed.

'By golly, and it's the truth, too," Tesch returned.

Archie McIlwee, who grew up in the old Catholic parsonage out near Potter's Grove - since moved to Ridgeway and torn down - had some stories of his own. Seems the parsonage was rumored to be haunted by a priest who was allegedly scared to death by the Ghost, down the stairs and bled to death. On the anniversary of his death, so the legend went, a board on the side of the structure turned inside out and miracuously dripped blood.

"I never seen any of it," McIlwee admitted, "but, we had people come from New York and all over. Some of them wanted to stay all night and claimed they heard chains and rat-

"My cousin, Jack McIlwee, worked on the railroad and would sometimes spend the night at our house, hopping off the train and back on again in the morning. He'd eat everything and in the morning be gone. My grandmother would say 'them poor souls must have been hungry last night."

Melva Phillips, who grew up on the old Powell farm where William Lewis had gone before he died of fright, believes in the Ghost as well.

The Class of '23 was there seven strong out of a class of 11. And five members of the nine in the Class of '24 joined in for their 50th reunion. Stewart Watson, the principal for both classes, also came for the celebrations.

Typically it was a time to remember, laugh, and cry over the silly ways things used to be. Stewart Watson recalled the beginnings.

Barneveld High School was a two-year, then a three-year school before becoming a four-year high school. Previously the students finished school at Dodgeville or Mount Horeb. "In the summer of '22 they decided to begin a four-year high school," said Wat-

The first two graduating classes of Barneveld High School at Wauzeka, he sathered together for their 51st said. "It was a big deal. It raised the taxes and many fought the four-year high school."

Watson, principal from 1923 to 1935 remembered the first school board for the new high school. The members included Byron Jones, Charles Theobald, and Leslie Roach. He smiled and shook his head as he continued.

The school was as bare as a table with not even a dictionary. There wasn't a map anywhere,

"I told them you can give me plenty of money and build a library or give me so much a year to buy things. They decided to give me so much a year."

And so it began. Class members were quick to point out the school was renowned because it prepared students for any college. There were no electives, only prep courses.

The principal earned $1500 a year, while the three teachers earned $1,000 to $1,200 a year. There was a two-room grade school downstairs, with the high school upstairs. The girls went up one stairway and the boys went up another. They met in the main room where each student had his n permanent desk. Students

Not until 1924 was there a gym. The students played basketball in Roach Hall, a dance floor. (It was the location of Jerry's former store in Barneveld.)

Norman Duesler, Class of '23 and Watson recalled Barneveld was the champion basketball team of the Iowa County League for four or five years. The league included Highland, Cobb, Montfort, Rewey, Linden, and Ridge-

"We beat Mount Horeb and Dodgeville many times,"

Barneveld played basketball and baseball in those early days but no football.

The school was the center of entertainment then," said Duesler. Radio was just new and the school functioned as a social center. Watson had a silent movie machine and once a week movies were shown.

Watson talked of other innova-

"Because there were so few students, I combined classes, like juniors and seniors for physics class. We had three teachers who taught every hour of the day. But the parents got upset about combining the classes."

Watson said the classes split up for a while, but eventually they got back together again.

But were there any real prob-

Watson said, "I'd like to have had a great big gym." Duesler and Watson explained how the first gym came about. Watson went to Madison and petitioned the Public Works Administration for some people to build the facility. Because unemployment was high, the program was happy to send workers.

The gym was started by dynamiting through six to eight feet of solid rock. There was a big hole in the side of the standing structure for the gym when the PWA was stopped. Watson told the inspec-tors the situation; one of them came out, and through friendly ties the gym was completed.

Watson said a big problem was the tax situation, but the comparison to what we have today made that problem minor. "Keeping ahead of the kids was the main thing," said Watson. "But there really were no problems. Parents of the kids were great because they would head motor to the hilt except for one back me to the hilt except for one or two.'

Norman Duesler couldn't resist now. He reminded his friend of the dirt roads. (Watson, owner of Wingra Stone, Madison, later gravelled the County roads in 3½ years out of a 10-year program.)

"Remember my Sears motor buggy?" he said to Watson. They embarked on a discussion of the buggys and early cars. Everyone had a differnet way of getting to

But for Watson keeping ahead of the kids wasn't so hard. He drove one of the few roadsters. Both of them laughed.

A smile spread across Duesler's face after that, and he said, "You know, 51 years is a long time to remember all those things that happened." (He doesn't fool anyone, he wouldn't forget the fun in those struggling days for anything.) I nose present from the Class of 1923 were: Catherine Hughes Dahmer, West Allis; Fred Frame, Madison; George Duesler, Mid-dleton; Lillian Zepplin Ayers, Mount Horeb; Lillian Burns Meyers, Curtis Zepplin, and Norman Duesler, Barneveld. Little Valley, Quiet Beauty Describes Setting of Hyde Community

Theodore Sawle in front of the replica of an old blacksmith and copper shop being built near the mill. He's holding one of the smaller bellows used by the blacksmith.

Mrs. Evie Gust operates the Hyde Store which is well stocked and open seven days a week. Here, she waits on Mrs. Karen Dougherty from the farm across the road.

Hyde's Dam and Mill was built in 1850 and restored by Theodore Sawle who operated a sawmill here for many years. Neighbors like to fish at this quiet spot.

Sometimes the most interesting places are off the beaten track.

Like little Hyde on County Trunk "H" halfway between U.S. highways 14 and 18-151. It's a place of quiet beauty where the kids like to fish in the mill pond as they watch the big water wheel go round.

The dam was built in 1850 by William Hyde who came down from Prince Edward Island in Canada and brought trees with him that are still growing nearby. Theodore Sawle bought the property 45 years ago and operated a sawmill here for many years. But since building a modern mill at Spring Green that he operates with his son, he has spent much of his time restoring the old grist mill at Hyde. He lives in the big house on the hill overlooking the mill.
"I like to sit inside the millhouse and listen to the sound of water drip, drip, dripping from the big wheel," says Sawle who was born on a farm east of Arena that had its own grist mill.

"At 10 I used to watch the mill nights while my father milked. Daytime I attended the Dover School nearby.

He operated this mill and farm until 1931 when he purchased the property at Hyde. The old mill near Dover had been built Henry Rowell and Meigs in 1848. They later engineered mills near Lone Rock and at old Richland City. A Mr. Rowe of Dodgeville

Surchased the mill in 1852 with gold dust he brought back from California. Theodore's father, William Sawle, bought the farm and mill from his estate in 1889. This old mill burned down in 1950. It had been operated by waterpower from Blue Mounds Theodore Sawle turns out as many as 35,000 ties a year alongside the railroad tracks at Spring Green. At 71 he puts in nine hours a day, which is lucky because he spends much of his income and most of his spare time collecting old tools and working on his restorations.

"I have 12 stones from old grist mills and eight more (four pair) are in the millhouse in operation. You can see all the tools for dressing the stones on the wall and many other antiques as well.

"Recently I purchased the big turbines from the Ithaca mill for $775 and it cost me $300 to bring them home. Right now Stan them home. Right now Stan Wildenburg of Mt. Horeb is helping me build a replica of an old blacksmith and copper shop. He's an all-around-man and interested in such things. I have all the tools used by the coppersmiths in the old days and an old forge and the big and small bellows used by the blacksmith.

"In most states they encourage the restoration of historic sites but in Wisconsin the DNR and other government agencies seem to put obstacles in your way. Sometimes one wonders whether they are 100% conservationists or 50% bureaucrats," concluded

But, that's another story. Today, Hyde has everything

Whiff of the 19th Century at Hydes

By MIKE IRWIN

(The writer would like to thank Jim Stuart for his research efforts and an enthusiasm about Hyde's Mill that helped write this story.)

HYDE - Drive west someday between the hump-backed hills stretching from Barneveld to Ridgeway. On Mill Creek's bank, after you've crossed her about where she meets Trout Creek, you'll glimpse Hyde's water-powered mill. And if you steer closer, you'll sense you're also bridging the years to Iowa County's settlement days.

Inside the rough-sawed red oak millhouse you'll find 72-year-old Theodore "Teddy" Sawle, proprietor and chief restorer of the 1850's structure. Maybe he'll be squirting oil on the giant paddle-wheel's main shaft.

Or he'll be adjusting the belts, the guts of the milling apparatus.

Or he might be fanning oats for another visitor, and talking - making as many revolutions per minute with his hands as his gears and pulleys do.

Then Teddy'll stop, sweep a hanky over his ruddy, smooth brow, and adjust the red suspenders over those broad sawyer's shoulders of his.

"The wheel is producin' about two horsepower now," he'll say, "but I can get up to six or eight for grindin' or sawin' logs if I set things up with the pulleys down below."

While Teddy's showing off the mid-Nineteenth Century miller's tools and accessories, he mentions he was working here in 1937 but fell heir to his water rights through a 1918 deed.

"Now lookit the way this bench top was built," he says, and you find out it's the original owner's, Mr. Hyde's work, and that he pinned and screwed the pieces together with the same precision as he kept his daily log of debts and Before long, Teddy's got another contraption in the millhouse shaking and rattling. "Put your container here at the bottom," he says. "We'll grind you a little whole wheat flour.

You see the golden kernels dancing violently up above like waterbugs avoiding a trout. A few at a time they fall into the wooden-framed machine's digestive tract. Soon a light brown powder covers the bottom of the catch-

Beside the millhouse Teddy's built a wooden bridge so you can stand over midstream and watch a narrow channel of rushing water push against the flat wheel paddles. The 21-foot wheel makes between six and ten revolutions per minute, hardly a high enough number to blur its movement. But it was this easy, constant motion, this working agreement between nature and physical principle that helped farmers homestead these soft green hills and hollows.

Below the footbridge, heavy oak plank jammed 90 degrees against the current and staked in place provide the "dam" which diverts part of the stream's flow toward the millwheel. The remaining water tumbles over a lower area toward the opposite bank called a spillway.

This entire structure has been damnable trouble for Teddy Sawl during most of his years on Mill Creek. Off and on since the forties, either the state or farmers upstream or both have been urging him to take the thing out.

Four years ago a farmer complained to DNR his lowlands stayed too wet for spring planting because of Teddy's

A hearing examiner, and later a review judge, ruled the old sawyer had once "abandoned" the mill - in the technical sense of the word. In doing that, the authorities said, Theodors Sawle forfeited his water rights - and his freedom to dam Mill Creek.

No dam, no waterpower. No waterpower, no waterwheel. No waterwheel, no restoration and no free demonstrations or reveries for passersby about the way it was in Wisconsin 125 years ago.

When you're out on the bridge, Teddy starts to talk about the dam trouble and you look straight into his eyes. Then you have to look away. His face has taken on a distracted, painful expression like he's been walking a long time with a nail coming through his shoe.

"If I abandoned my wheel, and my power supply, here, down below, would I be resisting all this time? If I abandoned it would I still be fightin'?'

"I've done this restoration work for myself. An' I'm proud of it, but a lotta people enjoy the results as much as me. One neighbor has a thousand signatures saying the mill should operate for everybody, for its history value.'

If a dam can be abandoned, you wonder, can a dam decision made in a 1972 DNR hearing be allowed to ebb away? Or can an 1849 water rights law, like an antiquated mill, be shored up to meet today's need to experience yesterday's way of life?

"I'm hoping for a happy ending to this story," says Madison attorney Dick Cates, a friend and saw logs customer of Teddy's who is his counsel and negotiator in the dam squabble.

"We're going to apply to DNR for a permit by Sept. 1," he says. "Nobody's pushing anybody into a corner.

A DNR engineer has agreed to work with Ted. Maybe the water level can be lowered or the dam can come out in the spring, in high water time, and Teddy can operate as usual the rest of the

"I'm optimistic about the working with the DNR people," Cates says again. "I think they understand we can't any of us crush a guy like Teddy Sawle. He's a Nineteenth Century

Volunteer Drivers Honored at Commission on Aging Banquet

One of the husband and wife teams, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Blabaum, accepted their certificates for participating in the Commission on Aging Volunteer Driver-Escort program.

Participants in the Volunteer Driver-Escort program sponsor-ed by the Iowa County Commission on Aging were honored last Wednesday night (May 26) at an appreciation banquet at the Don

The program of helping to transport the aged has been in operation in the county for a year, effective at the end of May. Since that time, 1789 senior citizens were transported 41,132 miles by 20 drivers in the county, according to Gladys Grimm, Senior Citizens Services Coordinator.

"Without you, the volunteer drivers, none of this would be possible," Mrs. Grimm said. She old that the 20 volunteers have lonated 3,309½ volunteer hours, would have received 7,611.85 if paid. However, not a

The following persons served as drivers during the past year: Alex Lubeck, Utha Hutton, Robert Williams, and Mrs. Violet Reddell, Dodgeville; Geraldine Hodgson, John Koenig, and George Moyer, Barneveld; Mrs. Cora Mae Rice, Mineral Point; Mrs. Elsie McVay, Rewey; Mrs. Elise Disrud, Hollandale; Joseph Dostal, and Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Larson, Avoca; Mr. and Mrs. Albert Blabaum, Highland; Reuben Graves and Mrs. Anna Mae Keister, Arena; Mrs. Bessie Mae Keister, Arena; Mrs. Bestie Joseph Mrs. Bestie Joseph Zemlicka, Cobb; Mrs. Betty Jean Richmond, Linden; and Mrs. Margaret Leix, Montfort.

One of the heads of the program, 87-year-old Otto Oimoen, Barneveld, told the background of the program over the past few years. He said the driver escort program was started regionally in 1965, although Iowa County didn't get in the act until much later. He thanked County Home Economist Karen Bogenschneider for "unlocking the closet door and letting the program out." He said she did much to help get the program started, including sureying the county to find drivers.

Mrs. Grimm was thanked for her part in the program, which will come to an end when she resigns effective June 30, 1976. Oimoen said that Mrs. Grimm "has done one of the best jobs that anyone could be expected to Members of the commission on aging throughout the county were introduced and thanked for their volunteer work. Oimoen said the volunteers are essential, and noted "if you enjoy the volunteer work and find peace and contentment in doing it, it makes it all worthwhile.

Entertainment at the banquet was provided by the Flora-Dora Dancers from Dubuque, Iowa.

Spirits Prove Weatherproof As Freedom Train Arrives

By FRANK CUSTER

Of The Capital Times Staff

The American Freedom Train came to Madison Wednesday morning and with it, as the public gathered to view its exhibits and dignitaries assembled to welcome it, came the rain—heavy rain with thunder and lightning.

The train was late in arriving here — 2 a.m. It had been tardy in arrival at Sun Prairie where a committee with a bushel of corn waited to welcome it — three hours later than scheduled. Its arrival, heralded by screaming steam engine whistle, annoyed some East Side residents.

But tardiness brought on by refueling and clearing tracks between Green Bay (it's last show place), Milwaukee, and Madison didn't appear to be too much of a handicap. Even the rain wasn't so

There were no pickets as promised by the People's American Revolution Bicentennial Committee. Perhaps the rain kept them away.

Some 100 persons did show up, their interest in the big red, white and blue Freedom Train undampened as they stood in the downpour waiting for the entry ramp to open and let them into the train's exhibit cars.

There were those who wanted to see Hank Aaron's bat and ball from his record-tying 714th homer, or Robert Redford's suit, or Martin Luther King's vestments — some call them "trivia" in comparison with a page of the Lewis and Clark expedition Diary or Ben Franklin and George Washington penned notes.

The train's visit here is sponsored by the Donald C. Severson American Legion Post No. 501.

An outdoor public welcoming ceremony was abandoned and the participants sat in a parlor car to hear one another say what had to be said.

A five-man troop of soldiers from Ft. Sheridan, Ill., dressed in American Revolutionary War uniforms, was on hand as a color guard. But the train ruined that one, too — there was no presentation.

The Rev. Robert Borgwardt, pastor of Bethel Lutheran Church, gave the invocation; Charles Aly, senior vice president of operations for the train, spoke and Uncle Sam (Bill Leppien) passed out flags.

Dane County Executive George Reinke: Secretary of State Douglas La Follette; William Applegate, assistant director of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin; Mrs. Emily Widen, Madison, donor of model reapers; and Mrs. Lynda Wilcox, of the sponsoring Legion, also spoke at the welcoming.

Aly described the train as "not intended to be an exhibit but to be an experience," while La Follette described it as "a moving process. The American Revolution has always been a moving thing."

Reinke called it "a stimulant for us to realize that the Bicentennial celebration is next year."

The Madison Scouts Drum and Bugle Corps appeared for a concert scheduled at 8:30 a.m., but they were sent home due to the rain and invited to come again for another concert at Truax Field, Packers Avenue and International Lane. The train will be here through Sunday.

The Freedom Train is financed with donations from General Motors Corp., Kraft Foods, Pepsi-Cola Co. and Prudential Insurance Co. of America.

The tour through the train costs $2 for adults and $1 for children.

"If we are in the red at the end of the trip," Aly said, "we have had substantial offers to buy some of the cars."

Whatever profit is made from the train, Aly said, "if there is any, the money will go to charity."

The Madison Bicentennial Commission, as did Mayor Paul Soglin, rejected sponsoring the train due to its cost and the commercialization of the project.

Blink, and You'll Miss Civil War

By WHITNEY GOULD

Of The Capital Times Staff

Step right up, folks — the American Freedom Train is about to take you for a ride.

See Shirley Temple's teddy bear, Marilyn Monroe's footprints, Gerald Ford's swearing-in Bible, Elroy "Crazylegs" Hirsch's football spikes, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar's basketball shoes, a piece of moon rock.

See Billie Jean King's tennis racket, Jack Kennedy's rocking chair, Abe Lincoln's stovepipe hat . . .

Well, you get the idea.

That's someone's notion of what America is all about. They've packaged it — 750 artifacts representing the sweep of American history from the revolution to Gerald Ford — and stuffed it into 10 red, white and blue railroad cars which chugged into Madison Wednesday for a five-day visit.

The train is parked on a railroad siding off the entrance road to the Dane County Airport.

You can take it all in for $2 ($1 for senior citizens and kids four to 18). Freedom, after all, doesn't come cheap.

If you really want to get into the spirit of the thing, pick up an official American Freedom Train coffee mug or key chain at the souvenir booths, or some popcorn in a red, white and blue Freedom Train box.

But back to the train. It's not a good idea to blink or sneeze, as I did, or you'll miss the Civil War. The conveyor belt which takes you past the exhibits moves so fast that you're looking at part of Walt Whitman's manuscript for "Leaves of Grass" one minute and Hank Aaron's bat the next.

When I asked Mike Shannon, a freshfaced security guard, why everything moved so fast, he was candid. "We're $2-to-$3 million in the red on this thing," he said, "and if we don't keep the belts moving we can't get enough people to pay our expenses. When we've slowed it down, we've had long lines and it also creates a security problem."

Maybe it's just as well. If you really had a chance to ponder the contents of the show, you might be a bit bewildered. You hear the strains of "America, the Beautiful," for example, as you pass an exhibit showing freeways, airplanes, skyscrapers, and neon signs. Maybe the irony was intentional; I doubt it.

The last car is entitled "Conflict and Resolution," and includes scenes from the Civil War (that's the one I missed because of a sneeze); World War II; JFK's "Ask not what your country can do for you" speech; the civil rights movement, and finally, Gerald Ford's swearing in.

No Vietnam; no Watergate. Instead, an implied happy ending that flies in the face of a recognition that the whole history of America is the history of unresolved conflicts and unrealized dreams. We still have not even resolved the conflicts that brought us to the Civil War, but you'd never know it from the Freedom Train.

Indeed, the Freedom Train in some ways is a traveling metaphor for everything that's wrong with American society.

It reflects our fetish for packaging (the artifacts are hermetically sealed in plexiglas); our McLuhanesque bombardment with images we have no time to assimilate; our hucksterism; our obsession with security (armed guards are stationed at the ends of each car); and our almost religious reverence for objects at the expense of meaning.

On the other hand, I do not doubt the sincerity of the Freedom Train's perpetrators. They sought to bring together remnants of Americana from museums and archives around the country which most people will probably never have the chance to see in their separate showcases.

Nor is anyone getting rich from the proceeds from ticket and souvenir sales. According to Shannon, they're plowed back into maintaining the financially-troubled train, which was originally supported by donations from General Motors, Kraft Foods, Pepsi Cola and Prudential Insurance.

But in the end, what does any of this mean? Does it contribute anything to our understanding of America's history and its people, beyond the plastic aspects of our culture? I doubt it.

With $18 million to spend, why couldn't the Freedom Train people have invested in a more lasting contribution to preservation of the American heritage? Think of all the parkland that money could have bought; all the old railroad depots and historic landmarks it could have saved; all the local historical societies it could have bolstered.

But enough carping. If you visit the Freedom Train, stop across the road to take in an open field, where the grass is singing with crickets and a bee hovers over a thistle. That's America, too. It's free and you can stay there as long as you want.

an EDITORIA

County Historical Society

Establishing an Iowa County Historical Society would be an excellent goal for our Bicentennial year.

A County Historial Society would be able to collect and preserve materials and activities of value and interest to people in the area.

These materials collected could range from buildings and furniture to photographs and oral history or the operation of a bygone local business.

Acquiring and preserving a one room rural school, such as Jones Valley or Waldwick or Hollyhead could be done. Or, acquiring an old cheese factory or a railroad station might be a goal.

Setting up a library of historical materials could be an activity. This might include oral history (taped recollections) and old photographs. Acquiring microfilmed copies of Iowa County newspapers and several portable microfilm readers for home use is another possibility.

Old record books of schools and associations could be collected and protected yet be available for study. Examples would be the Modern Woodmen of Barneveld or The Hollyhead Literary Society or The Helena Valley Grange.

The Society could write stories on the Highland Paint Factory or The Stratman Farm Machinery Manufacturers (Dodgeville) or the Avoca Railroad Station or The Norwegian Literary Society or Moscow or the Mifflin Woolen Mills.

Other services that the Iowa County Historical Society might do are as follows: make local study units for the schools, make presentations to schools and clubs, conduct tours, set up historical markers, provide speakers, take care of abandoned cemeteries, make up booklets, collect artifacts or help with geanological research.

On July 6th at 7:30 p.m. there will be an organizational meeting in room three of the Iowa County Courthouse. For further information, contact Jean Whitford, County Ag. Center Building or John Helmenstine, Barneveld.

Zelenka, Schilling Acquitted

by Jim Massey

The two men accused of the 1975 murder of William Cook near Dodgeville were found innocent Saturday in a Monroe County Courthouse, just a day short of eleven months from the day the crime was committed (see story, page one).

Ronald Schilling, Horicon, and Robert Zelenka, Madison, were acquitted of murder and armed robbery charges when "insufficient evidence" was given. Following is a detailed account of the trial, and the events which led to the not guilty verdict.

MONDAY, MAY 3. One hundred prospective jurors came to the Iowa County Courthouse in Dodgeville to take part in a jury selection process. After questioning jurors throughout the morning, Monroe County Judge James Rice sent all of the jurors home, saying that an impartial jury could not be found here. He said that all jurors must be ignorant of a previous conviction of the two men for the related murder of Michael Posthuma, Horicon, which occurred the same day near Sun Prairie. Judge Rice moved the trial to his home courtroom in Sparta, and ordered the jury selection to begin two days later.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 5. The jury selection in Monroe County took the entire day, with the 12 jurors and an alternate finally being selected by 9:30 p.m. Toward evening, men and women were called in from the streets of Sparta before the final seven women and five men could be selected.

THURSDAY, MAY 6. The trial began at 12:30 p.m., just 100 miles north of where the crime was committed. Iowa County District Attorney Dennis Scallon began by giving the prosecution's opening statement. He explained that on the evening of June 6, 1975, Zelenka and Schilling had gone to the home of Yusuf Bin-Rella to borrow a gun. Bin-Rella reluctantly loaned the gun to the two men, Scallon said. Zelenka and Schilling then met Stanton and Cook, and the four men proceeded toward Dodgeville.

Cook was planning to buy marijuana from the men, Scallon said, although the men had no marijuana to sell and were out to rob Cook of $650. They took Cook into a wooded area north of Dodgeville where the "drug transaction" was to take place, Scallon said, and Cook was asked to put a blindfold over his eyes so wouldn't know where the marijuana was being loaded. Zelenka's car was stopped west of Hwy. 23 on Norwegian Hollow Road, and Cook was led into the woods. There, he was shot in the back of the head by Zelenka, Scallon said. Schilling took Cook's billfold, and he, Zelenka and billfold, and he, Zelenka and Stanton divided $650 on their way back to Madison. The gun was then returned to Bin-Rella, with a payment of $100.

Scallon said that Stanton came forward on June 19, and told authorities that he had information as to the whereabouts of Billy Cook. In return for providing the information, Stanton demanded that he not be prosecuted for his part in the crime. The arrangement was worked out, Scallon said, because "without Stanton, the facts couldn't be put together."

Stanton directed authorities to the body during the early morning hours of June 20, 1975, Scallon said, and an autopsy showed that it was indeed the body of the 19-year-old Reeseville

Bruce Rosen, Zelenka's attorney, gave the opening statement for the defense. He said that he intended to prove that "Stanton is a liar, a perjuror, a killer, and a junkie," and that "all of those conditions existed at the time the state gave him his immunity. I believe he will be one of the most important witnesses in this trial," Rosen said.

Rosen said he would produce witnesses who had been told by Stanton that he had pulled the trigger in killing Cook. He said a witness would be produced who received a letter offering $1000 from Stanton to kill another man, and that man, Philip Howe, would also testify that his life was threatened. One of the prosecution's top witnesses, Yusuf Bin-Rella, Rosen said, couldn't be believed because he had been convicted of seven crimes, and a was a defendant in nine more cases.

Shortly after Rosen's Statement, Bin-Rella, Madison, was the first witness. While being questioned by Special Prosecutor Wayne Rusch, a former lowa County District Attorney who had been appointed to help Scallon on the case, Bin-Rella said that Schilling and Zelenka had come to his apartment June 6, 1975, to borrow a .357 revolver that he and his girl friend kept in their house. He said that Zelenka had asked to borrow the gun "for protection against someone who might want to cause him harm."

Zelenka had asked to borrow the gun "for a couple days," Bin-Rella said, and he reluctantly loaned the gun and five bullets to him. He said Stanton did not come to the house when the gun was borrowed.

Bin-Rella said Zelenka brought the gun back between 8:00 and 10:00 p.m. June 9. He was told that it had been "fired once as a practice shot," and that Zelenka had fired the shot. "He (Zelenka) said that he had taken the shot, and he said that it had hurt his hand," Bin-Rella said. With that statement, Zelenka stood up at the defense table, and shouted, "that's a damn lie."

He saw Stanton several days later, Bin-Rella said, and he was told to get rid of the gun because "it might be unclean. He told me the gun had been used to take a life." He went on to say that Stanton said it had been Zelenka who had taken the life of another man somehwere in the woods.

He had told the police his story in exchange for a reduced jail sentence in regard to nine charges, Bin-Rella said. He would now be serving 30 days in jail for the nine charges against him.

When questioned by Rosen, Bin-Rella admitted that one of the charges against him was "lieing to a police officer." He also confessed to tape recording the police when they were questioning him in his home, with a statement on the tape which said he could not be held liable for anything he was saying. He insisted that Stanton had not told him that he had fired the gun. Bin-Rella was on the witness stand for an hour and forty-five minutes.

The second witness was Stanton. He took the stand, looked around the room, and refused to answer a question. He was found in contempt of court five times by Judge Rice, and was warned that for each time he was found in contempt he could face a penalty of six months in jail. He still failed to respond.

The judge, attorneys, and defendants then went to the judge's chambers to discuss Stanton's testimony. Rusch asked that a transcript of a July 17, 1975 preliminary hearing, at which Stanton testified, be admitted into evidence. The defense objected, saying that the sixth amendment right to crossexamine a witness on the stand would be violated. "I am not would be violated. aware of any Wisconsin or federal case in which such testimony has been admitted," Defense Attor-Robert Christensen said. He cited Supreme Court cases involv-'uncooperative witnesses' such as Stanton, and said the testimony has to be given at the trial. There is much less probing of a witness at a preliminary hearing, Christensen said, because the hearing is only used to decide whether there is probable cause to believe that the crime was committed. Christensen said prior trial testimony has been used, but never preliminary hearing testimony.

"I'm convinced the law would never allow it," he said. "For one thing, credibility of a witness is not an issue at a preliminary hearing, whereas it is here. He is the most important witness to both the state and to the defense. This isn't a shoplifting case, it's first degree murder."

Judge Rice said that since Stanton had already been given immunity for previous cooperation, regardless of his testimony at the trial, he had no motivation for testifying at the trial. "I will allow the preliminary hearing transcripts to be read into evidence," he said. "If I am mistaken in doing so, at least I am not depriving these two men of their liberty, because they're already in jail." The judge said the transcripts would have to be edited, deleting any mention of the Posthuma killing.

Connie MacIntyre, who lives with Bin-Rella in Madison, was informed that she wasn't to talk of the Posthuma matter, and was the next witness put on the stand. She testified that it was her gun that had been used by Zelenka and that she had bought the revolver in the Spring of 1975 for "self-protection". She said her house had been robbed on several occasions, which prompted her to buy the gun from a man in a bar for $50.

She too said that Zelenka had fired the shot, and that Bin-Rella had been paid $100 for use of the FRIDAY, MAY 7. Court resumed at 9:00 a.m. The first defense witness of the day was Gary Hendrickson, Madison, a Denuty Sheriff with the Decounty Sheriff's Office. Hendrickson told how he had gone to the scene of the crime during the early morning hours of June 20 and had found the body leaning up against a tree and rock formation. He said the body was found about 3:00 a.m.

Darrell Lien, Madison, an Evidence Technician at the Dane County Sheriff's Department, was the next witness. He identified the pictures that he had taken at the scene during the investigation, and the pictures were entered into evidence.

Richard Farris and James Kennedy, both deputies at the Dane County Sheriff's Department, also testified about their parts in the investigation.

The doctor who performed the autopsy of Cook's body, Dr. Billy Bauman, Madison, was next on the stand. The pathologist said that he had determined the cause of death to be from a bullet wound through the neck. He said the type of bullet was either a .357, .38, or nine millimeter. During cross-examination, Bauman admitted that the .357 bullet which was admitted into evidence was "probably not" the bullet used to kill Billy Cook.

Richard Thompson, Oregon, a Dane County Crime Lab Analyst, testified that he had conducted tests on the revolver which was turned over by Bin-Rella. He said he had been doing tests on firearms for years, and that he couldn't predict what a bullet as large as a .357 would do when it hit a body. He said nearly every bullet reacts differently.

Another deputy on the Dane County Sheriff's Department,

Thomas Kretschman, Verona, told of his involvement in the case on the witness stand. He was one of the officers who took the original statement from Stanton, and he had received the gun from Bil-Rella June 22. He said Bin-Rella had admitted that he would lie on the witness stand if necessary to protect certain individuals.

Iowa County Sheriff William Whitford identified numerous photos on the stand which were taken of the murder scene, and he testified that Zelenka and Schilling were both familiar with the area. Zelenka, he said, used to deliver Coca-Cola in the area, and Schilling's family used to operate a candle factory in Cobb. Whitford was the last prosecution witness.

Judge Rice next read the edited transcript of Stanton's testimony into evidence. The testimony once more told the story of borrowing the gun, and driving to Dodgeville, with Zelenka eventually pulling the trigger.

After the judge had read the transcript and the jury had been dismissed for lunch, the defense complained of the procedure the reading. "The way the transcript was read, it was obvious to the jury that there's a great deal they're not getting," Christensen said. "It was one of the worst readings I've heard. This isn't a trial."

Before the jury returned after lunch, a motion was made by Rosen to dismiss charges against Schilling and Zelenka because of the 17 pages of Stanton's testimony read into evidence. "I don't think we should take the chance that a jury might find our clients guilty, based on 17 pages of testimony given by someone who wouldn't talk at this trial," Rosen said. "The star witness is a transcript," Christensen said. "We were allowed no cross-examination of him. The physical evidence is inconsistent. I feel that it is the function of this court to stop these proceedings at once."

Judge Rice said that the trial has gone "beyond me," and he ordered to proceedings to continue. Christensen again protested, saying "I find it hard to believe that this is happening in an American courtroom. I move for a mistrial." The motion was

The first defense witness Friday afternoon was Detective Francis McCoy, on the narcotics squad at the Dane County Sheriff's Department. He testified that he had found a syringe at Stanton's apartment in Madison during a search, indicating the use of hard drugs. He had also found a notebook which included records of drug transactions.

Bin-Rella had given a statement to him on June 19, 1975, McCoy said, and he had been very reluctant to talk to authorities. In cross-examining, Rusch determined that there was another occupant in Stanton's apartment who could have used the syringe.

Phillip Howe, 29, Madison, was the next defense witness. He said he had seen Stanton the day after the murder, and Stanton had inquired about buying drugs. He said Stanton had well over $100 in $100 bills in his billfold, and he told Howe that he had gotten the money working as a "hit man". Howe said Stanton had told him that he was going for $10,000, and that he "didn't go small."

Later, Howe said, he was forced to arm himself for protection against Stanton when a letter was written to a man named Dennis Williams putting a contract out on him. He called Stanton a "punk".

Williams, next on the stand. substantiated Howe's statemen by saying he had received a letter from Stanton while in the Rock County Jail. Williams said that Stanton wrote "I stuck a magnum to a guy's head and pulled the trigger." He added that Stanton wrote that if he was granted immunity, he would come into court and admit shooting Cook. Williams said he had burned the letter after reading it several times. He said he knew of no reason that Stanton would write a confession to him, but said that he was very "flaky".

Larry Liska, an investigator for the Dane County Legal Services, testified that Stanton had admitted writing the letter during questioning. He, too, said that Stanton had told him that he would go to the trial and say that he shot Billy Cook, but he was afraid to because "the parole board would look unfavorably' upon him doing so.

Liska was the last defense witness, but the prosecution countered by recalling Kretschman to the stand. He was asked by Rusch how much time he had spent with Stanton during the investigation, and he said he had spent about 24 hours. He said he had spent the time over a series of days, trying to establish his reliability. "At no time was information given by Tom (Stanton) found to be unreliable," Kretschman said.

SATURDAY, MAY 8. Closing statements and the judge's instructions were given Saturday morning. Rusch began for the defense, telling the jury that they should consider Stanton's preliminary hearing testimony as evidence. "You wouldn't want some of the people who testified for neighbors, but these were the people from the 'drug society' of the defendants," Rusch said. "We haven't tried to show that Tom Stanton is a choir boy, but he was granted immunity at the preliminary hearing, and he did tell the truth."

He asked that the jury not speculate as to why Stanton had decided not to testify at the trial, saying "there may have been a lot of influences on him."

He indicated that if the defendants were at the scene, they would be just as guilty as if they had fired the shot. "If they aided and abetted, they are just a as guilty," Rusch said. Aiding and abetting was defined as knowingly rendering aid, or being ready and willing to render aid if Rosen spoke for 45 minues on the innocence of Schilling and Zelenka. He indicated that Stanton had taken much of their defense away by sitting mute on the witness stand, because they had planned to break him down on the stand. "He couldn't take the chance on the witness stand of breaking down and confessing," Rosen said, "so he didn't talk at all." It was obvious that Stanton was at the scene of the crime, Rosen asid, because he had led to the police to the body. "It was simple for him to get immunity for the crime and then say that somebody else did it.

Rosen said that he doubted the credibility of Bin-Rella or Ms. MacIntyre. "They both had very selective memories," he recalled for the jury.

"Conspicuously absent," he continued, "is any corroboration for Stanton's story." And again he brought up the fact that they were unable to cross-examine Stanton on the stand. "Cross examination is a very important right, and we were deprived of it," Rosen concluded. Rosen concluded.

Christensen echoed Rosen in his closing, questioning the reliability of the prosecution witnesses. Talking to an empty witness chair, Christensen witness chair, Christensen dramatized the fact that Stanton was unavailable for cross-examining at the trial. "Mr. Stanton, aren't you afraid that your imunity is in jeopardy?" Christensen asked. "Mr. Stanton, what did you pay Yusuf (Bin-Rella) and Connie (Mac-Intyre) to back up your story? Mr. Stanton, did you own a gun on June 9 such as the one which put a hole in the back of Billy Cook's head? Mr. Stanton, isn't this (17 pages of preliminary hearing testimony) a lie? Mr. Stanton, what is the truth?"

Rusch's final rebuttal was that Stanton wasn't the only witness who didn't testify. "There was one other witness that didn't testify at this trial," Rusch said, 'and that was Billy Cook.

Judge Rice spent about 20 minutes with final instructions for the jury, before the case went to the jury room at about 12:00 noon. After a lunch break, the deliberation took only about 90 minutes, before the jury minutes, before the jury announced that the decision of not guilty was ready.

Stanton Mute on

Stand, Zelenka, Schilling Not Guilty

A verdict of not guilty was handed down Saturday afternoon for the murder and armed robbery charges against the two men accused of the 1975 shooting of 19-year-old William Cook near

A jury of seven women and five men in Sparta took less than two hours to find Ronald Schilling, 24, Horicon, and Robert Zelenka, 20, Madison, not guilty of the June 9 slaying. Cook, Reeseville, was found dead from a gunshot wound in a wooded ravine north of Dodgeville, June 20, 1975.

The trial was moved to Monroe County after an attempt was made to secure an unbiased jury in Iowa County last week. Monroe County Judge James Rice, presiding in the case, ruled then that anyone aware of an earlier murder conviction of the men could not sit on the jury. Schilling, Zelenka, and Thomas Stanton, 20, Beloit, were convicted of first degree murder in the slaying of Michael Posthuma, Horicon, near Sun Prairie last June. Pre-trial publicity made too many Iowa County people aware of the Posthuma conviction, according to Judge Rice, so he ordered the move to Sparta.

What apparentaly brought about the not guilty verdicts was the unwillingness of Stanton to cooperate on the witness stand. Stanton was granted immunity from prosecution in the Cook killing after he had led police to the body, and had given a statement implicating Zelenka and Schilling. Stanton had also testified at a preliminary hearing, saying that they had led Cook into a wooded area off of Norwegian Hollow Road, north of Dodgeville, to rob him of $650, and at that time, Zelenka had shot Cook in the back of the head with a .357 revolver.

But with the immunity tucked in his pocket, Stanton refused to talk on the witness stand. Judge Rice found him in contempt of court five times for refusing to give his name, and for failing to answer four other questions brought forth by the prosecution. Stanton was told that he could be put in jail for up to six months for each time that he failed to respond to a question, but knowing that he has a life prison term ahead for the Posthuma murder, he didn't seem too concerned with the possibility of an additional 30 months behind bars. Following Stanton's startling refusal to testify, Wayne Rusch, former Iowa County District Attorney who was appointed as a special prosecutor on the case, asked for the admission into evidence of transcripts from Stanton's testimony at a July 17 preliminary hearing. Defense lawyers Bruce Rosen and Robert Christensen of the Dane County Legal Services, vehemently objected to the use of the transcripts, saying that the sixth amendment right of cross-examination would be denied.

unaware of any Wisconsin or federal case which such testimony had been admitted, and he cited Supreme Court cases which he felt backed up his convictions. He and Rosen also complained that a preliminary hearing is used only to decide whether there is "probable cause" to believe that a crime was committed, and that there was very little cross-examination at that time.

Despite the defense objections, Judge Rice allowed the preliminary hearing transcripts into evidence. In his chambers, he said, "If I am mistaken in doing so, at least I am not depriving these two men of their liberty, because they're already in jail."
He added that "right or wrong, I have the authority to do so."

Stanton's testimony implicating Schilling and Zelenka was read to the jury, but had little the autopsy on Cook. impact when the credibility of the Closing argume witness could not be tested. through much of Satu When asked how much Stanton's refusal to testify hurt his case, Iowa County District Attorney Dennis Scallon said, "The jury wants Stanton to get up there, asked them not to speculate as to and they want to hear him say why Stanton decided not to testify that Schilling and Zelenka did it The jury doesn't want to hear his at the trial. "There may have testimony read to them from a piece of paper."

Other prosecution witnesses did very little to assure the jury who the killers were. Yusuf Bin-Rella and Connie MacIntyre, Madison, testified that they had loaned a .357 revolver and five hollow-point bullets to Zelenka and Schilling three days before the shooting, and that the gun had been returned during the evening hours of June 9, the day of the murder. The two said Zelenka had told them that he had fired "a practice round" with the gun, which accounted for the one spent cartridge.

Bin-Rella said he later went to the police with the gun because he was told by Stanton that "the gun might be unclean. He told me the gun had been used to take a life," Bin-Rella said. Bin-Rella said.

Other prosecution witnesses told of their parts in the investigation. One witness who seemingly gave hope to the prosecution chances was Thomas Kretschman, a Deputy with the Dane County Sheriff's Department. Kretschman said that he had spent approximately 24 hours with Stanton during the investigation, and that "at no time was information given by Tom (Stanton) found to be unreliable.

Defense lawyers attempted little more than to shoot holes in the reliability of prosecution witnesses. One investigator testified that Bin-Rella had promised to lie on the witness tand if necessary, while another witness said that his life had been threatened by Stanton in a letter since the Cook murder. The defense took just an hour and a half to question all of its witnesses. Neither Zelenka nor taking part in the murder. Defense lawyers argued that "the burden or proof is on the prosecu-tion," and that "these two men do not have to get up and deny anything."

In cross-examination, Dr. Billy Bauman, a Madison Pathologist, was questioned by defense attorneys on the size of the bullet which was used to kill Cook. Bauman said the bullet loaned by

Bin-Rella, which was introduced as evidence, was "probably not" the type of bullet used in the killing. Bauman had performed

For his part of the closing argument, Christensen chose to dramatize to the jury the questions that could have been asked of Stanton on the witness stand. So talking to the empty witness chair, Christensen said, "Mr. Stanton, aren't you afraid what your immunity is in jeopardy? Mr. Stanton, what did you pay Yusuf (Bin-Rella) and Connie (MacIntyre) to back up your story? Mr. Stanton, did you own a gun on June 9 such as the one which put a hole in the back of Billy Cook's head? Mr. Stanton, isn't this (17 pages of preliminary hearing testimony) a lie? Mr. Stanton, what is the truth?"

After hearing instructions from Judge Rice as to the law, the jury deliberated less than two hours before coming back with the not guilty verdict. The jury said the guilty verdict was turned down on the first ballot because of "insufficient evidence".

The Monroe County Courthouse was the scene of the Zelenka-Schilling murder trial last week. The trial was moved to Sparta when an unbiased jury could not be found in Iowa county due to the closely related Michael Postuma murder near Sun Prairie. Monroe County Judge James Rice ordered that anyone with knowledge of the Posthuma convictions of Robert Zelenka, Ronald Schilling, and Thomas Stanton, could not sit on the jury for the Cook case.

The dark spot in the center of the photo shows where the body of William Cook, 20, was found early Friday morning by Iowa and Dane County authorities. Cook was found in the wooded area on the Thomas Dolan farm on Norwegian Hollow Rd., approximately 4 miles north of Dodgeville.

Criminal Complaint about $650, ... plaint filed Monday in County Court.

The complaint explains the gruesome details of the double murders, which supposedly took place June 9. Michael D. Posthuma, 20, Knowles, was also killed that day by the alleged dependence.

The complaint filed before Iowa County Judge James Fiedler against Zelenka, Ronald S. Schilling, and Thomas D. Stanton, begins explaining the murder of Posthuma. The complaint says at Zelenka stated that on June 1975, he and Schilling went to osthuma's house near Horicon that Posthuma's house near to discuss a transaction concerning a large amount of marijuana. Ing a large amount of marijuana. Two days later, Zelenka, Schilling, Cook and Posthuma went to Zelenka's residence at 4340 Melody Lane in Madison, and after a short time, Zelenka, Schilling and Posthuma left, leaving Cook there. Zelenka said in ing Cook there. Zelenka said in the complaint that the three men then went to Stanton's, in Madison, where he, Stanton and Schilling decided to take Posthuma into the country, leading him to believe that a drug transaction was about to occur. Zelenka said that they planned to hit Posthuma in the head and take a large quantity of money he was carrying. Zelenka said that they then proceeded out into the area near Sun Prairie in which Posthuma's body was ultimately found. He stated that prior to arriving in the area, he, Schilling and Stanton area, he, Schilling and Stanton had agreed that upon hearing the pre-arranged word "here", Posthuma would be attacked. Zelenka said that when he heard the word nere", he stopped the van, and as he did so, turned around to see Stanton striking Posthuma in the back of the head with a claw hammer. Schilling then climbed over the passenger's seat of the van, and proceeded to the rear of the van.

Zelenka said as he got out of the van, he heard further blows, apparently being struck by Posthuma, and as he got to the rear of the van, he saw that Posthuma, and as rear of the van, Schilling had a knife, and he was stabbing Posthuma repeatedly. Zelenka said in the complaint that two occasions he pushed lling away from Posthuma, Schilling but he returned to stab Posthuma

Stanton and Schilling then took the body from the roadway and dragged it through a ditch into the woods, where they dumped it. They returned to the van and attempted to remove traces of blood and then they drove it to the East Town Shopping Center and abandoned it. They then took Zclenka's Thursthee they are the these resulting the same that three men split up the money that they had taken from Posthuma's body, with each man getting about $1,000.00.

Schilling was also contacted by authorities, and according to complaint, admitted to stabbing Posthuma. He said he stabbed him repeatedly to make it look like something else killed him.

When it was learned that Cook was involved in the false mari juana transaction, the search began for him. The complaint says that Stanton, on questioning June 20 in the Iowa County Sheriff's Department, told of the whereabouts of Cook's body. Stanton was questioned in Iowa County after Iowa County Sheriff County after Iowa County Sheriff William Whitford had received an anonymous tip, saying that body was in the area.

The complaint says that during The company questioning, Stanton authorities that after the Posthuma slaying, he, Schilling, Telenka returned to Posthuma slaying, and Zelenka's apartment at approximately 6:00 p.m. on June 9. They picked up Cook, and left the apartment to pick up some apartment to pick up some "dope". Stanton said that the three men were aware that Cook had some money on his person. He also said that Cook knew of the purported transaction involving Posthuma and a large amount of marijuana, but he did not know that the transaction was hat the 'illusory''. transaction that

The complaint said that Cook was informed that they would be was informed that they would be going to contact Posthuma, who was supposedly loading up a quarter ton of marijuana in his truck. The four proceeded for Dodgeville, and upon arrival, stopped for some root beer and wine and drove away to a lonely side road, where they stopped the vehicle. Stanton said that Schilling then told Cook to put a head band over his eyes, because they did not want him to know the route to the location in which Posthuma was supposedly loading up the quarter ton of dope. Stanton stated that Cook put the blindfold over his eyes, and they led him down the side of a road 20 or 30 yards, into a woods, until they got to a cliff. Once at that location, Stanton said that Schilling told Cook to wait for a minute, and further stated that Cook still had the blindfold over his eyes. Cook then sat down on the embank-ment and Stanton said that when ment and Stanton said that when he turned around, he saw Zelenka pointing a .357 caliber revolver at Cook's head. The complaint said that Zelenka then fired the gun, and he and Stanton turned and walked back to the car. Schilling came back moments later, and told them Cook was dead. He also told them that he had removed the money from Cook and then pushed his body over the cliff. They divided the money evenly between them, approximately $650 to $750, and left the scene.

Tip Leads Authorities to Murder Victim of a 20-year-old body Reeseville man was found early Friday morning on a creek bank north of Dodgeville, 11 days after he was murdered in an apparent

William K. Cook was found at about 3:00 a.m. Friday after Iowa County Sheriff William Whitford learned the whereabouts of the body from an anonymous tipster. Whitford led Dane and Iowa County authorities to a wooded area on the Thomas Dolan farm about 3 miles north of Dodgeville, and within an hour the body was found.

Whitford received the anonyous call at 10:45 Thursday call evening. He immediately contacted Dane County authorities, who arrived at the scene at about 2:00 a.m. The combined group then searched the wooded area on the Dolan farm, before finding the body at 2:59 a.m.

Lawyers Tell Why Verdict Was Innocent

by Jim Massey

Stanton's refusal to testify proved to be the difference in the murder trial of William Cook in Sparta a week and a half ago, according to the lawyers involved in the case.

Ronald Schilling, 24, Horicon, and Robert Zelenka, 20, Madison, were found not guilty in a Monroe County Courthouse May 8 after three days of proceedings. The trial had been moved to Sparta when an unbiased jury could not be found in Iowa County.

Cook was found dead in a wooded ravine north of Dodge-ville on June 20, 1975, 11 days after the murder supposedly took place. Eleven months after the crime occurred, no one has been convicted of the murder and furthermore, no one will be.

Thomas Stanton, 20, Beloit, had been granted immunity in the case after he admitted that he part in the murder. implicated Schilling and Zelenka in preliminary hearing testimony, but when it came time to testify at the trial, he refused to say a word.

Both sides felt that Stanton made the difference in the case. Iowa County District Attorney

Dennis Scallon said that "the jury wanted Stanton to tell them that Zelenka and Schilling had committed the murder. If he would have testified, I feel that they would have been found guilty."

Scallon was upset by the fact that 26 out of 50 jurors who were called in the first morning in Dodgeville were "too busy to serve". He said it was "beyond understanding" that more than half the jurors couldn't serve before the questioning would even start. "We make our own laws, and try to uphold them," Scallon said. "I don't know how people can justify in their own minds not sitting on the jury.

Scallon doesn't blame Monroe County jury for finding the men innocent. "If I was a jury, I wouldn't convict someone if the accuser wouldn't testify, he said. Scallon said the prosecution case would have been strengthened considerably, "if someone, anyone, would have seen them (Zelenka, Schilling, Stanton and Cook) in Iowa County. There was simply nobody." nobody.

What would have happened if the Cook and Posthuma cases would have been tried together, Scallon was asked? "I'm sure Scallon was asked? "I'm sure they would have been found guilty if the cases would have been tried together. But that wasn't about to happen. We weren't even allowed to let the jury know anything about the other case. That put quite a cramp in the way we were able to prosecute.

Schilling's lawyer, Robert Christensen, Madison, felt it was inconceivable that the two cases could be tried together. "If the jury were to be told that these two men had already been convicted of a murder which supposedly happened a couple hours earlier, it would have been very difficult for them to find the men not guilty," he said. "It comes out that 'apparently' everyone is involved in a 'supposed' drug deal. There's really no substantial proof to say that these two cases were positively linked, so the judge did the only thing he could in leaving the first case out."

Wayne Rusch, former Iowa County District Attorney and a special prosecutor on the case, said the not guilty verdicts came as a results of "very difficult witnesses to work with and a minimum amount of information." He, too, cited Stanton's refusal to testify, saying the jury hearing. "I'm convinced the story I told the jury was the truth," he impossible to prove it.'

that they did all they could. "When you put in everything you've got and you still lose, you can't feel too bad," Scallon said. Rusch said that the prosecution had included all the information that could be found, with the exception of Stanton's testimony.

Christensen said the not guilty verdict reaffirmed his "faith in the jury system. There's no doubt in my mind that the jury did the right thing. If you could convict men on a written statement, you might as well jam the system.

Besides the Stanton testimony, Christensen felt that the conflicting facts surrounding the gun helped the jury find the men not guilty. "The bullets given to Schilling and Zelenka were supposedly hollow points, according to Yusuf Bin-Rella, who said he had loaned the gun. But yet the man who performed the autopsy (Dr. Billy Bauman) said that a .357 hollow point probably did not kill Billy Cook. That inconsistency had to help our

"When one of my clients is found guilty of something, I want it to be done right," he went on. "And if they would have been found guilty in this case, it wouldn't have been. It was would have overturned the ruling," Christensen said.

Was the defense surprised when Stanton didn't talk? "Well, we knew it was conceivable, Christensen said. "We ha gotten a letter from the judge saying that it was a possibility because he had been granted immunity for previous testimony, so there was really nothing forc-ing him to testify at the trial. So we did research on it, to see what previous rulings had been on such matters, and when the time came, we were ready.

It's not as if they walked out the front door of the courthouse because of this not guilty verdict, of course," Christensen noted. "I figure that the earliest they could be out on the streets would be about 12 years. And it may be much longer than that, depending on how the parole board looks at this thing.''

Iowa County Sheriff William Whitford related the feelings of a couple jurors when they were told of the previous murder convictions. "Two of the women broke out and cried, and said 'we can't have these men out on the streets.'

What was the reaction of Schilling and Zelenka when their not guilty verdicts were announced? "Schilling yelled out with some kind of a warhooop, Whitford said. He said their joy you're a power company and almost all of your customers lose electricity at once?

That was and is the problem of Wisconsin Power and Light Company since the ice storm swept through the southern part of the state last week. Nearly everyone lost power for some period of time, with some people still without electricity as of press time Wednesday.

The storm is not only considered one of the worst in recent years by the power company, it has been termed as the "worst storm in the history of Wisconsin Power and Light.

Robert Van Wagenen, WP&L Operating Superintendent for the eight county Southwest Division, says it is the worst that he has seen in 27 years with the company. "This is the most widespread storm that we have ever had to deal with," Van Wagenen says. "It covers about a 40-mile swath. It is by far worse than a tornado, like the one in Belmont a few years back, because a tornado will only cut through a small area. It's like nothing we've ever seen Van Wagenen gave an example of what happened to the ice-packed wires. "We had one new line, which had been in only about four months, and the poles went down like dominoes. When we checked the conductor on that line, there was ice four inches in diameter on the wire. There just had to be tons and tons of ice on those wires to bring them down like it did.

He said that falling trees naturally created problems in past few years prevented more outages. "We've had a lot of tree clearance in the past three or four years," Van Wagenen said. "If we wouldn't have done that, we would be in a lot worse trouble than we are now.'

George Byington, Southwest Division Manager, said that the area needs power poles so urgently that a load of 750 had to be trucked in from Gulf Port, Louisiana. "It took a couple days to get them up here, but we had do what was necessary to provide service to our customers." Over 400 poles have already been put in the ground within the district, and it is projected that another 400 will go up in the next few days.

The cost to Wisconsin Power and Light will be tremendous. "One company officials was quoted as saying it would cost about a million dollars, but I don't think that will cover it." Byington

The labor and materials will be equally expensive. "Poles alone cost anywhere from $60 to over $100 each, before they are put up and without any hardware on them," Byington said. "And of course the copper wire is extremely expensive, and there is thousands and thousands of dollars worth of other equipment as well."

Von Wagenen said that approximately 40 crews were brought in from outside the district to work within the area. Crews from Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, Missouri and throughout Wisconsin were brought in to repair damage from the worst storm that they had ever been involved with (see separate story).

About 126 men were included in those 40 crews to team with the Wisconsin Power and Light personnel, and all the men were called on to work anywhere from 14 to 18 hours a day. Of course that will mean high overtime wages when it comes time for WP&L to pay its bills. There is no insurance on such a disaster, so that money will have to come from the company pocketbook, and eventually, the customer.

Equipment came from miles around with the crews. "We've got trucks from everywhere around here," Von Wagenen said. "I just hope that when this mess is over with they all get back to where they came from," he laughed.

Two shuttles each day are bringing materials into the district from the area headquarters in Beloit, among other places. The Soutwhest District includes parts of Green, Dane, Iowa, Richland, Sauk, Grant, Crawford, and Lafavette Counties.

A helicopter brought in from Beloit is being used to help coordinate the giant task of keeping the crews away from each other. "If we didn't watch things closely, we'd have crews climbing on top of each other,' Von Wagenen said.

The only way to make sure that power is restored to everyone is to "take an area map, and have someone check at every house and farm to make sure they have electricity," Van Wagenen said. As of late Tuesday, things were progressing as well as could be expected, with nearly all main lines repaired between villages and sub-stations. The next project is working on the branch lines.

Some temporary repairs were made to area lines, but most of the work was and will be perman-"In some instances we were patching to get power as soon as possible to customers," Von Wagenen pointed out. "But for the most part we have been putting up the lines to stay. If we did temporary work all over, we'd be running back for months.'

Local WP&L manager Wayne Sherman described the damage as "nearly total destruction in the rural areas." He said the discouraging part about the project was 'as we made repairs in one area. we would get another report of an outage. Sometimes it seemed almost hopeless."

"There isn't anybody working on the lines who has ever seen anything to even compare to it. Sherman said.

When will service be completely restored? "It's hard to Von Wagenen said. "But we're hoping to get all customers that can take service by the end of the week." By customers that can take service he means those who do not have problems on their property, such as downed wires between a house and barn. 'We've just got to keep plugging

For the most part, Van Wagenen says that "the people have been great. Most have been really patient. There have been some that have been a little hostile, but I can't say that I blame them. When you're out of power for as long as some people have been, it gets a little discouraging. I can't say enough for

All the old poles broke and the new ones barely stood the strain during recent ice storms. Power and telephone poles along a five mile on Highway 80, south of Highland, were wiped out. Over 80 power poles needed replacement and at least that many telephone poles. Note the new telephone poles going up along the left side of the road.

"We're still getting calls," Iowa County Sheriff Bill Whitford said Wednesday morning in an assessment of the storm damage that tormented Iowa County last

"We took a generator to Arena yesterday to help a farmer with 244 young calves in a barn. They lost power for a while in that area Tuesday afternoon," Whitford said. He added that deputies have devoted time to provide transportation of equipment in the hard-hit areas.

Whitford said there were no reports of accident or illness reaching his office related to the storm. "We are lucky in that storm. respect," he added.

Whitford operated his office for both law enforcement and emergency government purposes when Iowa County was crippled because of the storm. Many people stopped in to get warm and to ask questions and he sold close to $100 in gasoline to motorists when it was learned the pump in operation in the city. Power for the office was provided by an emergency generator on hand for that purpose. The generator ran for 27½ hours during the weekend ordeal.

Whitford offered space at the jail for people who wanted a place to stay during the day and into the evening but when power came back on Friday people returned to their homes. Food was available for those who needed it but none had to be served other than to the prisoners. "We served a lot of coffee, though," Whitford said.

The Sheriff said the main problem experienced at the jail was damage to the roof caused by ice falling from the tower. He said the effort of providing service to the county was aided by the Civil Defense office set up and manned by Merle Vacha and Ken Palz-

Farmers Are Hardest Hit by Power Outages

Profit took a back seat to protecting the investment on area farms during the past week's disastrus ice storm.

With downed power lines cutting off electricity to nearly every farm in the area at one time or another, generators and alternators became life-savers on some farms while others resorted to milking by hand.

Wth mechanization playing a larger role on farms as each year passes, electricity has become a must in hundreds of ways. Milking machines, pipe lines, milk coolers, barn cleaners, bunk feeders, silo unloaders, and water systems all depend on the electrical current to carry out their everyday jobs.

But last week, for the first time in many years, ice-coated wires and poles snapped by the hundreds, leaving nearly every farmer in the county without power. Some farmers along main lines were out only one or two days, while some have been out a week already and may face as much as another week before complete power is restored.

Some farmers were prepared for such a disaster, with alternators on hand, ready to take over the job of the electricity. But others weren't as fortunate, and had to begin the search for power in any way possible.

The initial power outages came Thursday night for the most part, and farmers who didn't have generators ready to go were forced to milk either by hand or with the help of vacuum from tractors. Jack Weier, Dodgeville, gave an example.

"When the power went out Thursday night, I didn't have the cable down which is necessary to hook up a generator, and for that matter, I didn't have a generator. So we had to milk by hand," Weier said. "The kids and my wife all pitched in, but we didn't get hardly any of the milk in the cooler. Some cows give as much as 40 pounds a milking, but I'd say that in many cases 39 of the pounds went into the gutter."

By Friday morning, Weier was able to borrow a generator from a neighbor for use that day, and on Saturday, he bought one of his own. But yet, a generator didn't solve all of his problems.

"It's still cold in the house at night, because I don't dare leave the thing run all the time," Weier explained. "And things are slowed up considerably. First I use the generator to milk, then to cool the milk and heat the house, then to clean the barn, and then to run the silo unloaders. It's impossible to do all those things at the same time, because there isn't enough power."

Weier said he has been sharing a generator with two other farmers, and for that reason his cows have been milked at odd hours. "We milked at 11:00 Friday morning and 11:00 Friday night," Weier said. "And we had to do our work as fast as possible so someone else could get the generator."

He said the odd hours was one of the factors which dropped his herd's milk production. "Of course the cows aren't used to being milked at all hours of the day and night," Weier said. "But the availability of water is probably more crucial yet. We only have water when the generator is here, and so the cows can only drink at that time. I noticed a few cows were even getting sick because they were drinking too much water too fast."

Art Phillips, Ridgeway, also said that getting water to the cattle is extremely important. "I've been sharing an alternator with four other farmers, so we've only been able to use it for a few hours at a time. Our main problem is that we aren't able to get enough feed and water to the cattle. And when cows don't get enough water, they go down in milk, because something like 98 percent of milk is water."

percent of milk is water."

Phillips said he has had an alternator for about a year, and when the power went out, he travelled with milk trucks Friday to help pump the milk from coolers on numerous farms. "It's been quite a week," Phillips remarked. "I think I had about three hours of sleep during one three days stretch. And I can't see an end to it, because we'll probably be without power for a couple days yet."

Although the alternators have been acting as a replacement for the electricity, they are considerably more expensive to operate, according to Al Jewell, Dodgeville. "It cost us about $1,650 in the first place, and I'd say it is costing us roughly twice what electricity would to run the farm." The Jewells are pumping gasoline through "a tractor which is actually too large for the alternator" to operate the power take-off outfit.

Jewell said it is hard to figure how much money has been lost because of the blackout. "The cost of the alternator and operating it is only part of it. We've probably had a larger death loss with our small pigs, and I'd say the cattle have lost two weeks of feed because of the water shortage and our inability to get feed to them. We'll also have a weight reduction on the entire feeding head."

Art Kirch, Barneveld, needed a generator desperately with his electric pulsators and pipe line milker, among other things. "So we had one flown in from the State of Vermont," Kirch said. "It wasn't cheap, but it was the only way we could get one at the time."

A neighbor, Ray Thompson, also had his power source flown in, but it didn't last long. The generator worked its way out of the back of a truck and was smashed as it hit the ground. Another generator was borrowed from a neighbor and that too was damaged as the milk truck slid into it while the milk was being removed from the cooler.

An alternator bought three years ago was being used on the Dave Price farm, Dodgeville. The alternator was bought for $750 at that time, less than half the price today, and was used by several farmers during the past week. "The problem is that it takes a pile of diesel fuel to run the tractor attached to it," Price said. "We ran about 120 gallons of fuel through the tractor in two days. That's about $60.00 right there."

He said a reservoir has been a life-saver to him, as he has been able to keep a steady water supply to his cattle.

Robert Bomkamp, Highland, has also had an alternator for about three years, but since the storm he has found it "hard to keep it at home. I really can't complain, though, because we've been pretty well taken care of here. I've been glad to be able to help out my neighbors with the alternator."

Tom Mueller at Mueller Implement, who sold some of the alternators, said he "could have sold 150 on Saturday if we would have had them." He said an alternator is "a lot like fire or life insurance--it's electrical insurance. And it's the cheapest form of insurance you can buy." He added that "any farmer who is looking out for his production should have an alternator."

He said he has orders for 20 more alternators, and the farmers want them regardless of when they arrive. "I think many farmers are now aware that this could happen again, and next time, they want to be ready for it."

Iowa County Board Chairman and area farmer Dick Scullion recounted the grim tale of what happened in his area. Said Scullion, "North of Highland on 80 there were at least 90 electrical and telephone poles down all the way to Muscoda. In the Eden area there is a bad pocket of outage and farmers there don't know when they'll get power."

Scullion said emergency services were coming from the National Guard with their generators and the fire department with their water hauling. He said quite a few farmers have obtained generators, but "there is a lot of trouble to take care of yet."

Scullion said he and the Civil Defense people have called Congressman Robert Kastenmeier to try to get emergency funds for farmers in Iowa County to purchase generators and other needed equipment.

Storm Presses Civil Defense Into

"Generators", "alternators", "civil defense", "kilowatts", and "emergency" are terms not often used in Iowa County, but last weekend and still this week they have become everyday household words.

Those words began to be mentioned Thursday and by Friday and into Saturday were on the lips of many. Generators, alternators and kilowatts are all related words and were foremost in the minds of farmers, hospitals, care centers, grocery stores, and radio stations needing emergency power to carry out their operations. Civil defense and emergency are also related terms and a patch-work system of civil defense was instituted to combat the emergency that crippled the area for the weekend and into this week better known as a disasterous ice storm.

In Dodgeville, where many of the services for Iowa County are located, the disaster started about 4:00 p.m. Thursday when the power went off. Most businesses waited for a while and then sent employees home. Some of the homes received power around 7 p.m. but by midnight a tremendous glow lit up the dark, eerie sky and Dodgeville, along with the majority of lowa County, found itself without the service of electricity.

Ken Palzkill, Iowa County

ector for the county, left the Iowa County Courthouse about 5:15 p.m. After a period with no power he decided that procedures should be set in case the situation lasted. Civil defense equipment, including generators, were located and at 7:30 p.m. the emergency generator at the Iowa County Highway Department was unpacked...just in case.

Lights then came back on in some areas of the city so no further thought was given to the situation until a 3 a.m. ambulance call awakened Palzkill and other members of the crew. Palzkill was not on call but noticed the power was off and went to the ambulance garage to make sure the crew knew how to open the door without the usual electric power that handles that chore. During the run that took the crew to the hard-hit Waldwick area, reports back began to paint a grim picture of what was beginning to take shape in the rural areas. Reports of snapped-off poles and power lines touching the ground signaled that something would have to be done. Also, the eerie feeling Palzkill got when he drove for the Courthouse with no lights of any kind showing and ice bending the trees and bushes served notice that a dangerous situation could follow.

At 6 a.m. Friday, Palzkill had a chance meeting with WP&L manager Wayne Sherman who confirmed Palzkill's belief that the situation had reached emergency proportions. Sherman said that crews had to be called in Thursday because of falling limbs and other dangers but were prepared to begin the huge task of repair again that morning.

At7 a.m. Palzkill contacted the Sheriff's Department and got an assessment of the situation. Telephone lines were readied in a conference room of the Iowa County Courthouse, calls began to come in and go out to emergency government units. And, Palzkill got settled in an area that was to become his home for the next 36 hours.

Merle Vacha, Rewey, joined Palzkill and the pair began to make an assessment of the situation county-wide. Vacha, recently appointed Iowa County Civil Defense director, then started calling the state agency for coordination.

Other calls assessed the situation at the hospital and nursing home facilities in the county. Mineral Point Care Center still had power while Bloomfield Manor and Memorial Hospital Care Center were under emergency generator power. Memorial Hospital was not in such good shape but through the use of a 10 KW generator from the Dodgeville US Army Reserve Unit, a 15 KW Civil Defense generator, an emergency generator that is at the facility permanently and a donated generator from Mineral Point the hospital was soon back as close as possible to normal.

Emergency broadcasting was started by WSWW, Platteville, because WDMP was off the air. A search for an emergency generator to get WDMP back in operation was started and through the crisis power was supplied the station by a USAR generator or by a Civil Defense generator.

Palzkill and Vacha decided that, official declaration of a county emergency was needed so Iowa County Board Chairman Richard Scullion was located and he issued the proclamation. Then, WP&L manager Sherman requested a meeting with local officials at 4 p.m. to discuss the situation. Attending were John Roder and Ken Lewis from the city street and water departments, Mayor Doug Schmoekel, CW2 Robert Prideaux from the US Army Reserve, Police Chief Dick Heimerl, Superintendent Curt Cooksey, Iowa County Clerk Bud Olson, representatives from WDMP and CAP, along with Vacha and Palzkill.

The Civil Defense office received lanterns and a walkie-talkie from Heimerl and contact began with the villages and cities in lowa County to determine how the various areas were progressing. Dodgeville and Highland were experiencing water and sewer problems; Arena and Avoca had no real problems but were troubled with some power outages at times; Barneveld was without power but had an emergency gas engine operating to pump water and had a generator to maintain the Legion building for a shelter; power was out at Cobb and Highland; Blanchardville was without phone service so no contact could be

The Civil Defense number was announced on radio and television and soon calls flooded the office. Before it was over, Palzkill and Vacha would receive and handle about 500 calls.

Saturday morning began with hope. Palzkill and Vacha awaited the arrival of two promised 30 KW generators from the Wisconsin National Guard and planned to send one to Highland to operate the water pump and the other to WDMP to get the station back on the air. But the hopes were dimmed when what showed up was a pair of 3 KW generators that were too small for the planned uses. One went to Highland and was used at the fire department for heat.

Highland struck out on its own and got a generator from Boscobel to get the water pumping operation started again. Village president Jerome Laufenberg and policeman Lauren Smelzer kept in contact with the Civil Defense office to keep the office informed of all developments in that community.

Hollandale then became the focus of attention when the situation reached grave proportions there. Generators were sent there to provide a shelter at the fire station and to help out on farms. Calls kept coming into the Civil Defense office, but no calls came from Hollandale after 11 a.m. because at that time the phones went dead.

Other areas reported their situation. Linden had no real problem and received power on Friday when Cobb did. Montfort reported no problem but contact with Livingston and Muscoda could not be established. Rewey and Ridgeway reported no power so generators were dispatched to help pump water.

During the power outage, volunteer fire departments responded to requests to haul water to farms for stock. The DNR offered its water truck as did the Dodgeville Reserve Unit. Farmers began to lend their generators and nearly everyone got involved in helping out his neighbor.

Power returned to Dodgeville and some other communities Friday night but went out again Saturday at noon. Dodgeville returned to power for the most part of Saturday night. Other places returned either Friday, Saturday or Sunday, with Hollandale finally reporting power Monday night. But as of presstime Wednesday, some of the rural areas still waited for heat and lights.

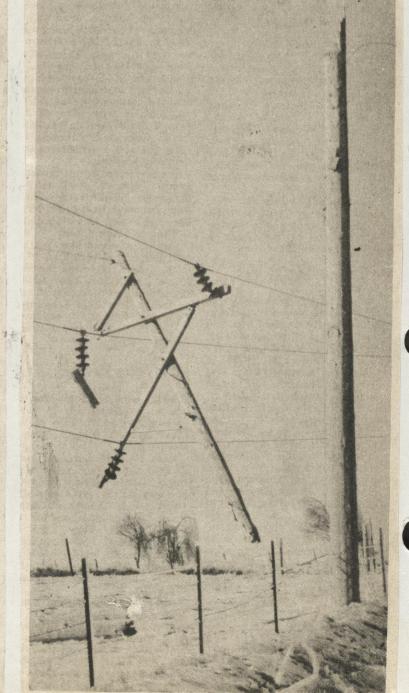

"Much was learned from the emergency," Palzkill said. "For one thing we know we need better communications."

"But I can't say enough good things about the people. Of the 500 or so calls we received, only two were of the crank nature. Everyone else was patient and polite. They would wait their turn for water or a generator and realized we were doing the best we could. And, we had many offers of help and warm housing. People really pulled together," Palzkill said.

He also emphasized that the Civil Defense office operated as an arm of the community. "The Sheriff's Department had their hands full and we functioned as an auxiliary. They provided a warm place to stay because of their emergency generator, pumped gas, and answered thousands of questions," Palzkill Transmission lines throughout the county were a snarled mess but above, an even stranger site, a snapped pole hangs in mid-air.

Crews Spend Long Hours in Fixing Damaged Power Lines

Working on replacement of poles near Highland are Junior Lindh [left], Tom Dachel and John Gores [on the truck]. Over 80 power poles needed replacement along a five mile stretch south of the highway.

"A helluva mess" is about the only way to describe the destruction caused by the massive ice storm which enveloped the southern part of Wisconsin during the past week.

To repair power lines throughout the county and area, crews from Missouri, Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, and other parts of Wisconsin were quickly moved in by Wisconsin Power and Light. Crew members from everywhere said they had never seen anything like the damage done to this area. Junior Lindh, a crewman from Chetek, who has been working for power companies for more than 20 years, said that he has witnessed numerous disasters, but "I've never seen anything like this. I've never seen damage over this big of an area," Lindh said.

"Our biggest problem right now is that the ice is still there," Lindh said Monday while working on a line between Highland and Muscoda.

Erwin Riewestahl, another crewman from Chetek, told of the problems with making the repairs. "We'll put up a pole, and put the arms on it, and then another one will break loose and break the arms off again. The ice puts terrific pressure on the line, and when one weak spot breaks loose it has an effect on the line for miles each way."

About 80 new poles had to be put in along one five mile stretch on Highway 80 between Muscoda and Highland, according to the crew. "We had to start all over with wire and poles," one worker said. "It was completely ruined."

Putting the poles into the ground hasn't been much of a problem, with virtually no frost in the ground, but it has been time consuming. A six-foot deep hole must be dug for each 35-40 foot pole, the cross-arms have to be put on, and later the wire and other electrical materials must be attached.

Lindh told of the work days being put in by most of the workers. "When the sun comes up, we're there to meet it, and we're usually there long after it goes down." Wisconsin Power and Light Operating Supervisor Robert Von Wagenen said the average work day was between 14 and 18 hours for the crews. "They're usually out there at 5:00 or 6:00 in the morning, until 8:00 to 10:00 at night. There isn't a lot that can be done after dark, and we don't want the men to get overly tired, anyway."

Van Wagenen said that as of Tuesday noon, "there have been no injuries to crewmen, knocking on wood." He said that at times working was impossible because of falling branches and ice chunks, which sometimes weighed between eight and ten pounds.

Crewmen numbering about 126 have been forced to find temporary homes within the area while working on the gigantic repair project. Motels and hotels in Mineral Point, Dodgeville, Spring Green, Lancaster and Platteville have been filled to capacity by the workers, and restaurants have found a few more mouths to feed when meal time comes around.

"The restaurants have especially done a tremendous job," Van Wagenen said. "They've had a lot more people to feed, and I don't know how, but they've been taking care of everybody. And believe me, these men are hungry when they go into a restaurant for a meal."

High winds and "tons of ice" brought these poles and hundreds like them crashing to the ground causing problems for utilities and farmers alike.

A Week to Remember

It was a week that people will talk about for many, many years - the ice storm of '76.

It was a week filled with neighbors helping neighbors, people sharing, yankee ingenuity at its zenith, utility crews at their finest, local units of government, the media, the town crews - everyone doing what they could to help, to make the load a little lighter, and survival a little easier.

For many communities, power was an on-again, off-again situation. Some communities after a week still lack power. For most farms in the area, emergency standby generators have filled the gap for power for milking machines, water pumps, and coolers.

It is unfortunate that it takes an area disaster to pull us all together; to remind us of the things we have in common; to help one another in a tradition that too many have forgotten.

We owe a debt of thanks to those who have worked so hard over the past week. The hours of work and cooperation, perhaps too soon will be forgotten. That is unfortunate.

But it is heartening to know that when the chips are down, when we have problems that we alone can not solve, that somehow together we can muddle through.

For the example many have set, we are grateful. Thank you.

Some Humor In The Disaster

There were a few humorous incidents related to the weekend disaster that struck the county in the form of an ice storm and power outage.

One man came to Heibel Hardware to purchase electric blankets to "keep warm while the power was off." He said his wife sent him

At Ridgeway, a crowd assembled at Ole's Bar noted that the power came on exactly 48 hours after it went off. "We didn't even have to re-set our clocks," one person said, noting that it was 7:20 p.m. when the lights went off and came back on.

At Memorial Hospital, Dr. Kim had to rely on a partner to get him to his rounds. His car was in the garage and the electric door would not work.

Also at the hospital, at least one visitor pressed the elevator button for a ride to another floor for a visit, only to learn that piece of equipment operated on electric power also.

Lineman Pressed Into Service Relates His Experiences

by Jeannie Lewis Clarence Mardis, from Lincoln, Illinois, left for work on Friday, March 5. He hasn't returned to his family since, and has not the "slightest idea" when he will be going home. Mardis is one of the many out-of-state men called here to help restore electrical power in Wisconsin.

Mardis said, "I was 50 miles from home when I got the word of the stormbreak, and I came right on up. I didn't even go home

Somewhere near Janesville he was 'nabbed' for speeding by a State Trooper. "That cop wasn't one bit friendly. I explained the plight of people, and why I was in a hurry," he said.

People without heat or water, farmers who couldn't milk their cows, baby pigs needing heat to survive or the cattle that couldn't be watered because of the loss of electrical power, were not good enough excuses for speeding, as the trooper told Mardis. "That is no reason for speeding," she said, as she wrote out the $37,00 ticket. Mardis said, "It was a woman State Trooper, too!"

Mardis went to a Lovernille

Mardis went to a Janesville bank to cash a check to pay his fine, only to find that they wouldn't do it. He said, "I finally got enough money from some of the men to pay the fine.

Mardis, along with a buddy Art McDonald from Meredoisa, Illinois, were doing their laundry in Dodgeville, when relating this experience. Both men said that everyone else has been real friendly here in Wisconsin.

A couple of local women at the laundromat said, "That trooper evidently doesn't have much empathy for people in dire need of electricity."

"In fact, Gert! That's dirt!"

said one gal about the State Trooper.

Another problem that Mardis found was buying a change of clothes, as he came with the clothes on his back. But, there is a reasonable explanation for that... he is 6 feet 6 inches tall and weighs 285 pounds.

The men have been working 16-18 hour shifts. Getting up at 4:30 a.m. to start another day of trying to restore electrical power to yet another area. In describing the work laid out for them by the powerful ice storm...they could only shake their heads and say, "What a mess."

The value of Dr. Gonstead's share of his homestead in Mt. Horeb which he held in joint tenancy with his wife, Elvira, is set at $310,000. According to the inventory, his share of other jointly-owned real estate with his wife was $141,400, while he personally owned $183,900 additional real estate.

His furniture, household goods and art objects are valued at $610,561, a herd of 200 cattle at $100,000, a Florida cooperative apartment at $40,000 and insurance at $82,397.

Most of the remainder of the estate consists of stocks, bonds, notes and bank accounts.

After making a number of gifts to personal friends, Dr. Gonstead left the bulk of his estate in trust to his wife. On her death the trust is to be used to set up teaching chairs in chiropractic colleges in the U.S. and Canada for the purpose of teaching the Gonstead method of chi-

An indicator of the severity of the storm facing the area was evident at the Power and Living sub-station in Mineral Point. A candle supply, and gas lamps were strategically placed about the office operational although only 20% of the normal load was needed. Shortly after 10, the last line feeding Mineral Point went out, sending the city into virtually total darkness.

Ice and tree limbs missing could be seen all over the county as the storm took its toll.

National Guard Helps Area

People living in rural communities have always been drawn closer together during times of natural disasters. But, this year's crippling ice storms, which left thousands of Wisconsin residents without electric power, added a new dimension to community

That dimension was in the form of more than 300 Wisconsin Army National Guardsmen who, armed with portable electric generators, moved into the state's hardest hit areas to provide emergency local residents.

"Used to be you'd go down the road and people would just look at you," commented Spec. 5 Arthur Kerl, of Company D, 132nd Support Batallion. "Now, almost everyone waves at you."

Most praise for the Badger Guardsmen came from area dairy farmers who rely on electric power to milk their cows, cool the milk and pump water for their livestock, each of which may consume up to 80 gallons of water each day.

Russell and Bonnie Peterson, of rural Hollandale, said they spent a "pretty rough week" before the Guard's arrival with a generator. Although they heat their home with wood, they were unable to cook and lost all the food in their refrigerator and freezer.

Kerl, who was called to duty shortly after the storm subsided March 5, was sent first to Ixonia near Watertown and later to Jefferson 'and Highland before going to Hollandale. His unit is headquartered in Madison and ordinarily serves as a support arm for Wisconsin's 32nd Infantry Brigade.

In the initial days of the emergency, so many farmers were without power that generators had to be taken from farm to farm just long enough for chores to be completed. Fourteen hour days were not uncommon for most Guardsmen on duty.

Staff Sgt. Norbert Frederick, a 14-year veteran with Wisconsin's National Guard, who has seen state active duty on many occasions, ranging from flood control in LaCrosse in 1964, riot control in Milwaukee in 1967, several times in Madison at the University of Wisconsin and, last year, at Gresham, said this call-up was "most enjoyable."

"It was rewarding work," Frederick said. "Farmers are tickled pink. We don't even have to buy food. Farmers' wives came in and cooked us breakfast."

Most of the Guardsmen, the Most of the Guardsmen, the last of whom went home Sunday afternoon, stayed at the community fire stations, the hub of local emergency operations. Prior to the arrival of the Guard's generators, fire department tank trucks delivered water to farmers.

Orvin Gordon, who helps his son Jerry on his dairy farm, said the National Guardsmen "have been wonderful. Without them we would have lost more of our cattle," he said, pointing out that they lost one calf during the first night of the storm.

Keith Johnson, who raises pigs

Keith Johnson, who raises pigs on his farm, echoed Gordon's concern for loss of livestock, noting that without electricity to power heat lamps, many of his new-born pigs would have died.

Among the Guard personnel taking part in providing emergency power was PFC Linda Maass of Lake Geneva, who volunteered for the duty. A part-time truck driver in civilian life, Maass helped drive Army trucks delivering fuel for the generators and other Guard vehicles being used.

In the words of Lee McNeill

In the words of Lee McNeill, who took vacation time from his job in Madison to be on hand as a volunteer fireman, "The people really appreciate what the Guard has done here. They couldn't have gotten along without them."

rea Still Recovering from Sto

Even though the ice is gone and all power restored, the lowa County area is still recovering from the damaging disaster that hit here the first March weekend.

Bob Grinnell, head of Con-imer Services for WP&L. reported Wednesday that the last customers without power were put back in service Sunday. "But we've still had some outages. Wind has been dropping branches on the lines and some areas were out of service for a period Sunday. This will keep happening from time to time because wind will cause the weakened branches to fall. This will cause outages on the weakened lines.

Grinnell said the company now faces a massive clean-up job.
"This will take two or three months. Some lines look as if service is actually out and it actually is. But, we've provided service to those customers in other ways. The debris that is still laying around will eventually be Grinnell reorted that the out-ofstate crews that were called to this area were released March 13 but crews from Janesville are still helping local crews in the clean-up process. He commended the customers and said, "They've been great. We've had many, many fine commendates and letters with very few complaints.

Also reporting on the situation this week were Merle Vacha and Ken Palzkill who operated the disaster.

"We hate to start thanking people for their wonderful efforts for fear of missing someone but some deserve special mention.' Palzkill said. He pointed out that the Hollandale Fire Department was on duty the longest. "Dennis Paradis worked all week coordinating generator use and hauling water. Dave Scott and Marvin Klosterman kept the Civil Defense office pretty well informed of the situation there with Denny," he said.

Palzkill reported that fire departments in Highland, Ridgeway, Rewey, Barneveld, Arena, Mineral Point, and Dodgeville, all volunteered to haul water along with the National Guard and US Reserve personnel. Bob Rickard, Linden, also hauled a lot of water as did individual farmers to neighbors.

It was also pointed out that electricians from throughout the county assisted with generator hook-ups. Implement dealers put forth a special effort to get generators for customers. Stores attempted to meet special needs by staying open.

Special mention went to the Iowa County Highway Department personnel who hauled equipment and generators and salted the roads for safe travel. The DNR also sent a water tanker into action and the Sheriff's Department performed many emergency related services.

Shelter and housing came from different sources. Dodgeville high school personnel served a warm meal Friday afternoon and the Dodgeville Jaycees manned the school for those who needed additional shelter. Many residents offered space in their homes where they had fireplaces and alternate heating methods. Also, the hospital and nursing homes opened space to those who needed it. Shelter was also given at the Barneveld Legion Hall and at the Village Hall at Cobb.

Palzkill also mentioned that WDMP and WSWW radios provided public service service announcements. He commended General Telephone and WPL crews for their efforts and cooperation.

"We'd like to extend our thanks to all who cooperated in the many different ways. Once again the people of Iowa County proved they are pretty fine folks and that under pressure they can really work together."

Dodgeville City Council Hears Park Tree Damage Report

"Dodgeville's parks are a mess," Park Commissioner Herb Harris reported to Dodgeville aldermen at their Tuesday night council meeting. The ice storm he said damaged a total of 76 trees in the parks and some of these had to be cut down

At Centennial Park, 31 were damaged in the old picnic area, and 28 in the new area and several around the ball park.

Eight trees were damaged at Wilson Park. A state team is studying the situation and will arrive at cost estimates. Joe Pflieger suggested the possibility of service groups assisting in providing new trees.

Ground-breaking ceremonies for the new Summit Apartments in Barneveld were held Thursday, June 3 at the building site. Building will begin soon, and it's hoped that the facility will be completed by Christmas. The facility will include 20 units in three buildings, and it will be designed for the elderly and low income groups. Survey Shows Storm Damage On Farms

It will be a while before complete damage estimates of last week's ice storm are tabu-lated, but it looks like the Governor will not declare the area a disaster area, according to unofficial reports being circulated this week.

Nordeen Gilbertson, Iowa County A.S.C.S. Director, has been involved in assessing damage to farms for the statistical reporting services. Gilbertson indicated that his office and other state and federal agriculture related organizations have called about 10% of the 1400 farms in the county to complete the

He indicated that people in the city had no idea of how hard the frost hit farmers last year, and that few people will realize the extent of the damage caused by the ice storm and resulting power

Of the 140 farms surveyed, Gilbertson indicatd that "There weren't over 10 that did not report extensive damage." Most of the damage reported was by dairymen who reported a lot of mastitis. Mastitis affects production drastically, and in most cases was caused by the use of vacuum pump milking operations with tractors. Not having hot water to sanitize the production led to the spread of the disease, and the farmers estimated a heavy loss in future milk production because of the outage.

In addition, farmers reported dumping milk, and extensive damage to fences, falling branches, and a lot of clean-up work everywhere. Gilbertson indicated that a lot of structural damage was not evident.

In many homes, Gilbertson cited losses in freezers and damage to plumbing.

Most farmers had to buy enerators costing from $1600 to $2200 as an additional expense, in addition to hotel bills, sickness caused by the cold, and meals eaten out.

Gilbertson indicated that his staff was trying to get the information first hand from the farmers and that all had been very cooperative.

He indicated that it would be many months before the full extent of the damage could be calculated, and added that he felt the area should be declared a disaster area.

Crews Still Working to 976 Mop Up Storm Damage

Dozens of line and tree-trimming crews were still on duty throughout the area, working to restore electrical power to an estimated 17,000 customers left powerless in last week's ice storms.

The clean-up has become a moppingup operation for most areas now, less frantic than the struggle to keep people out of danger last week.

An estimated 2,500 customers still had no power in Dane County, almost all in rural areas, according to Wisconsin Power and Light and Madison Gas and Electric spokesmen. The majority, said MGE's Bill McNamara, were affected by breaks in the wires leading from power poles to their homes.

Gov. Patrick Lucey planned a helicopter survey of hard-hit Washington County north of Milwaukee today.

The emergencies have been cancelled, and more than half of the 400 National Guardsmen called in to aid local clean-up efforts have gone home. But schools and a number of businesses in the county were still closed Monday.

To the southwest Iowa, Grant and Lafayette Counties, large pockets of the rural population, continued to be without power. An estimate of 4,000 customers blacked out at Mineral Point in Iowa County turned out to be conservative after WLP helicopters found much more extensive damage than had been thought, and the figure was hiked to 7,000.

Blanchardville service was restored in Lafayette County, but just to the north Hollandale in Iowa County was still out. Much of the WPL service area between Mt. Horeb and Blanchardville is still out, a WPL spokesman said.

MGE's McNamara said the company's crews worked all night in the Madison area. About 25 crews are working on service wires from main lines to homes, another 25 on larger lines and a dozen trimming trees, he reported.

Power is still out in "a very few scattered areas of rural Dane County." McNamara said, including an area south of Martinsville on Martinsville Road, Highway 12 west of Springfield Corners and in the Town of Fitchburg near the Town of Verona line.

Old Pump Handy in Emergency

This old hand pump had a busy weekend. Mt. Vernon, in southwest Dane County was without power for five days, and the pump, in the community's Forest of Fame park, had a steady stream of users. As many as ten people were waiting at various times to use the hand-power water supply, manus them from nearby farms who needed the water for their livestock. Above are members of three families who were staying at the Trainor house in Mt. Vernon during the storm and its aftermath. They went through 10 milk cans of water per day. Storm Brought 'Neighborliness'

By FRANK CUSTER Of The Capital Times Staff

MT. HOREB - There is a variety of words that signify "working together" and the people of Mt. Horeb have been providing a striking example of them in these days following last week's ice

They call it neighborliness when people work together to help others as has been done here since the icing devastated trees and utility lines of this community - perhaps more severely than elsewhere in Dane County and southern Wisconsin.

The women of Mt. Horeb Evangelical Lutheran Church, Mt. Horeb Methodist Church, St. Ignatius Catholic Church, and Immanuel Lutheran Church have the past five days been feeding hungry and tired electric utility crews repairing the damage brought on by the frigid destroyer that swept over the area last Co-chairwomen of the feeding program were Mrs. John Ellestad and Mrs. Walter Kalscheur.

The women swung into action Friday; they began to feed the Mt. Horeb electric utility electricians at St. Ignatius Church. St. Ignatius had an advantage - gas stoves. The stoves in the other churches were electric and they had no power immediately.

As the days rolled by following the storm, it was apparent that the Mt. Horeb utility men needed help in repairing lines in the village and surrounding area.

Call it "co-operation" — crews from other municipally owned plants were called in to assist. They came from Reedsburg, Lodi, Brodhead, Sauk City, Prairie du Sac, Richland Center, Wisconsin Dells, Marshfield and Arcadia.

They reported at the municipal building and were directed to various trouble spots to make repairs.

By Saturday the lines in the village were gradually being restored and the cooking and feeding operation moved to Horeb Evangelical Lutheran Church Fellowship Hall.

The women have been feeding the visiting and local work crews at the church ever since. Monday was no different than any other day since the men began fixing broken utility wires and removing broken tree branches hampering lines.

Monday 75 young students from Mt. Horeb High School joined the city public works crews in cleaning up branches and debris in the city. The helped push the pieces of wood into a village-owned chipper and another borrowed from Sauk City. The pulverized wood was hauled to the city dump.

Then the young workers joined the utility men for hot and tasty beef stew at the noon meal in the church.

Sunday a brief announcement at Mt. Horeb Lutheran Church resulted in a deluge of cakes and cookies - more than needed to feed the workers.

Hundreds of cookies and dozens of cakes were taken out to the isolated farms for the farmers and their concerned whether was cooled down

Over in Gobel's Restaurant, where the smell of delicious baked goods prevail near the entrance, they were doing a terrific business as some people came from the rural areas for a bit to

Behind the counter, lean Fritizi Flatberg moved quickly from customer to customer and remarked that business 'has been almost too good.

Among those at the lunch counter were Bill Lehner, manager of Ryser Brothers of Wisconsin, cheese producers, and Al Martin, operator of a local liquor store.

Lehner's cheese plant is a block away from the restaurant.

"The first day we didn't get any milk," he said of the ice storm. "We were properly If milk is not cooled down properly, it's over-ripe and you get offflavored cheese or pin hole cheese . . . and that's worthless.

"It will go another week vet before everything gets straightened out.

Martin informed the reporter that he knew of one farmer who has a couple cows with mastitis already.

"That farmer had a portable generator and even with that he still had some problems with his cattle," he said.

"I will say one thing, though, that storm brought the people together again. But with the cows, they are used to a schedule. When the storm upsets it, why, one guy said, it will take three to four months to get the cows back to normal."

He commented that the and his wife left their rural home on Highway 78 and stayed in the liquor shop — "she slept in the brandy section, I slept in the whisky section," he quipped.

Ole Gilbertson's Hardware store was busy as people stopped by Monday. Some were turned away — Gilbertson was out of flashlight batteries.

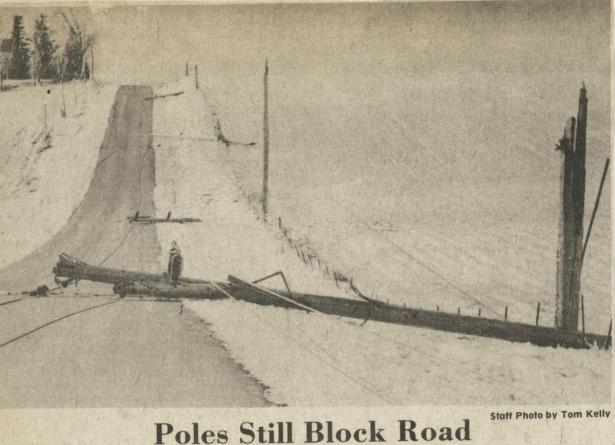

He said the people had been coming in Friday to buy all kinds of lighting devices and lamp oil.

His wife noted they ran out of candles, lamp oil, lamp wicks, oil lamps, and burners and chimneys for the lamps. "Canned heat" went rapidly as did small propane tanks for blow torches. the tanks could be used for camp stoves and for some propane lamps, Gilbertson explained.

Ned McGinley, manager of the Karakahl Motel, said the operation there took them back to the oldfashioned days on Thursday night.

"We had a fireplace going continuous through Friday for heat," he said. "We got a generator for a short time Friday night, used it 45 minutes to provide heat and that was enough to tide us over. By Saturday we were back to normal."

'We had $2 million worth of utility trucks and equipment in the church parking lot Sunday," noted Mrs. Elles-

Some 18 electric utility poles are down along the highway, which not only is preventing farmers from getting electricity, but blocks them from hauling supplies to their farms.

The County Highway Department would like to open the road, but Wisconsin Power and Light Co. has asked it to hold off until it can get crewws there to remove the wires and poles.

High voltage electric lines and poles lay on State highway 39 near Mineral Point, downed by the weight of ice and the whip of high winds in last week's damaging storm. Most of Iowa County, including Dodgeville, was left without power.

Volunteers Help Clean Up Storm Mess At Mt. Horeb

MT. HOREB — Some 75 Mt. Horeb young people are out voluntarily cleaning up fallen branches and trees in an effort to get this village back to normal after last week's devastating ice storm.

Except for a few isolated homes here, most of the village got its electricity back early today, but dangerous limbs and other objects needed to be cleared away to prevent further power line breaks

Curtis Witte, president of the village, said, "We've just gone ahead ourselves to do what we could to get things back to

Mt. Horeb was one of the hardest hit areas in southern Wisconsin and many homes were without power for as long as four days.

The youngsters, who were not in school today because of the power outages, decided themselves to spend the day cleaning-up as much of the community as they could.

Two wood chippers have been brought in to process the limbs as the young people cleaned them away from lawns, power poles and other areas. One of the chippers belongs to Mt. Horeb and the other was borrowed from Sauk City.

Rogert Volstad, director of Public Works at Mt. Horeb, was coordinating the young people's activity. The rest of the village pitched-in to do what they could. The Mt. Horeb Lutheran Church congregation, for example, was to prepare a noon meal for the kids.

Witte said that "we've been lucky to get by without any serious incidents since the storm started.'

'We're fortunate we had no serious fires when we were out of water," he

The village was out of water from early Thursday until Friday night because the power to the pumps had gone out and couldn't be restored. An emergency generator was finally brought in Friday night to pump some water to the community

Monday, Mar. 8, 1976.

Southern Wisconsin Saturday continued groping its way out of its worst ice storms in history, but about 5,000 Madison residents and 50,000 more throughout the state still had no electricity Saturday night.

Utility crews continued working double and triple shifts to repair power lines felled by ice and tree limbs as hundreds of people left their unheated homes in favor of warm shelters.

Madison Gas and Electric Co. (MGE) said it expected 95 percent of its customers to have power by tonight, and the Wisconsin Power and Light Co. (WPL) said 95 percent of its service should be restored by Monday night.

WPL said late Saturday power had been restored to about 50,000 persons since the peak outage time Friday, but about 30,000 still were without elec-

Those customers were in an area, mostly rural, from the Mineral Point-Monroe area to the Fond du Lac-Sheboygan vicinity.

Emergency centers and shelters reported that people were getting edgy about the lack of electricity

"Friday, they asked where there was shelter. Today they're asking when is the damn power coming back on," said Edward Kroll, director of the Dane County Dept. of Emergency Planning.

Strong winds Saturday downed a WPL transmission line between Lodi and Dodgeville, knocking out the power that had been restored. Electricity was restored to Lodi later in the day, but Dodgeville, Blanchardville, Hollandale, Belmont and Ridgeway remained dark.

MGE officials were optimistic about restoring service to a large part of the area served by the Prairie Substation near Huegel School that was heavily damaged in the storm. A large portable transformer, kept for such emergencies, was expected to be operating Saturday night, although downed wires meant some homes would stay dark.

'We're trying to put this mess back together," said Dan Carlsson, WPL spokesman.

WPL crews were trying to obtain a portable 500 kilovolt generator that they believe will supply power to most of the Blue Mounds area when it is installed, but no one could predict when that might be.

About a dozen local electrical contractors were recruited by MGE and authorized to repair power lines leading from poles to individual homes in an effort to speed restoration of service.

Stoughton Mayor Liniel Cooper declared a 12-hour state of emergency at 4 p.m. Saturday. About 1/3 of the city's residents, scattered in the northwest and southwest areas of Stoughton, are still without electricity. Farmers without power since Thursday afternoon have been using a donated tanker truck to haul water.

Seven Dane County Red Cross centers sheltered 188 persons overnight Firday, about 20 of them suffering from the flu, and fed more than 200 on Saturday.

As word of the shelters spread, the Red Cross fed nearly 400 persons, including volunteers, electric company linesmen and other workers Saturday night. About 160 persons had registered

National Guard'smen hauled two mobile generators provided by the state from farm to farm in Dane County, assiting all 16 farmers who sought help from the county Emergency Planning

Elsewhere in the state, 400 Guardsmen directed traffic, manned roadblocks and drove empty milk trucks to haul water to farms

Arthur Kurtz, deputy state secretary of agriculture, called the ice storm the most devastating disaster inflicted on Wisconsin farmers.

Kroll said that in his career in the Army he saw hurricanes on the east coast and typhoons in the Far East but none "that affected people for so long."

"You feel so helpless," he said. "There are only so many people who can fix a wire.

Madison and Dane County police reported no significant increases in break-ins, since the emergency began, but said they are continuing extra patrols in blacked-out areas to ward off possible burglary attempts.

Only three break-ins were reported in Madison Friday night and Saturday. One was at the Good Shepherd Lutheran Church, 5701 Raymond Rd., where Pastor J. Clemmons Peterson noticed flickering lights in the chapel about 9

Peterson may have scared the burglars away because police found

Police said they would not know for sure if crime increased during the emergency until people return to their homes when power is fully restored.

City fire dispatchers reported a significant decrease Saturday in the number of reports of downed wires and smoking trees.

The Fire Dept. is still trying to catch up on its records after falling behind Thursday night when dispatchers began receiving almost a call a minute.

Firefighters responded to 256 fire calls and 56 ambulance calls from 6 p.m. Thursday to mid-day Saturday.

County sheriff's deputies and traffic police Saturday continued checking on elderly persons in rural areas without electricity

In tiny Martinsville, west of Waunakee, they found an elderly couple shivering in a house "so cold you could see your breath inside" Sgt. Robert Shunk said.

They took the couple to a Verona

Shunk said it was surprising there have been no tragedies yet. 'Somebody's on our side," he said. He urged anyone knowing of elderly persons in remote areas to "give us a call. We'll check on them.

Madison's cable television system suffered severe storm damage and more than half the system was not operating Saturday. Although crews were working around the clock to repair severed wires, most service will not resume until electricity is restored, according to Rod Thole, general manager.

WLVE radio, Baraboo, off the air since Thursday evening, resumed broadcasting at noon Saturday after employes wrestled a 52 kilovolt generator up the station's steep, icy driveway that was littered with tree limbs.

The generator was temperamental, however, and the station lost several more hours of broadcasting time Saturday afternoon.

The emergency situation inspired about 200 citizens band radio operators to volunteer their assistance to help the Red Cross and police with transportation, guarding downed power lines and coordinating relief efforts.

The radio operators recently completed a Madison Police Dept. course and, as one said, wanted to help because "we're sick of hearing about Rubber Duck," a character in a popular song about CB radios.

About 40 percent of the houses in Mt. Horeb and all of those in surrounding rural area were without electricity Saturday night, but many persons with power were opening their homes to

"It's been wonderful. Everyone's real cooperative," one resident said.

Some people made only minor variations in their daily routines. Neil Robinson, 19, an employe at Morey Airport, Middleton, performed his usual duties Saturday - but he wore ice skates to move around on the icy ramp near the runways.

In response to "tons of inquiries," an insurance man said Saturday that most policies cover damages from loss of electricity only if there was direct physical damage on the premises to insured property

In other words, if you lost electricity because a line fell two blocks away, or even next door, you are not covered.

But if a tree limb pulled wires from the side of your house, insruance probably covers it, according to Tom Donahue, district manager of Farmers Insurance Group.

Very few policies cover damage to trees and shrubs from ice and wind, he Madison's water supply was "back to normal" Saturday, Water Utility Manager Larry Russell said Saturday.

Russell said that because of 'everyone's cooperation with holding the pressure down it let us not have to put anyone out of service" during the storm emergency period.

Late Thursday night, Mayor Paul Soglin asked that residents use water only for essential health and commercial purposes when power outages reduced the number of water pumping stations in operation to four. Saturday, nine stations were in operation, about the normal number used at one time during the winter. About 13 to 14 million gallons of water were in the city's hilltop reservoirs, a normal amount, Russell said.

"I've got a generator!" Rue found one in Minnesota and hooked it up as soon as he could set it up on his farm.

a.m. Saturday and joyfully announced:

And suddenly, life flowed back into the Rue farmstead.

In storm-wrecked and depowered Wisconsin, the farmers like Rue agree:

'Happiness is having your own generator.

The nonfarm people who called Saturday to wonder what a generator is, were told that it is a motor-like device powered off a tractor. In that relatively small mechanism, an alternating current is generated and sent out through the farm powerlines to power the vast assortment of motors and systems used to feed, water and milk the cattle and clean the barn.

In most cases, the device also supplies sufficient power to provide lights for the farm and home, heat the house, maintain the freezer and refrigerator, heat the water, power the stove - and make a pot of coffee.

The power from one of those alternators is replacing the electric power lost on Wednesday and Thursday through 15 southern Wisconsin counties.

Rue found his generator in Minnesota through Jerome Skindrud Associated Milk Producers, Inc., (AMPI) field supervisor whose son-in-law knew an electrician who had the generators or alternators as they are now called.

Two loads of generators were sent in. They are all gone. Another load is coming to Rue's farm Sunday or Monday.

"There have been telephone calls from all over," Rue said. "I don't know how people learned of them, but they are calling," he said.

Rue is sort of an expediter as the loads come in and the units sent out to waiting farmers.

'It is quite a feeling. Something like the feeling you'd have if you were Santa Claus," he laughed.

But the loads of generators coming to Wisconsin from as far away as Kansas are just a minor percentage of the thousands needed to help dairy farmers through this emergency.

Barneveld Wrestling Matches, Dance Draw Full House Crowds

"Super Brawl I" and music by the Alpine Brass drew a near capacity crowd Saturday night to a festivity put on the Barneveld Home Talent baseball team.

A crowd of approximately 500 watched five wrestling matches at the high school gym before moving over to the Barneveld Legion Hall to dance and listen to the music.

Four scheduled matches were wrestled, plus a fifth which proved to be the closest of the lot. In the first match, Dale Rickey, a former Dodgeville High School star, faced Barneveld's assistant wrestling coach, Chuck Ladd. Rickey, weighing just 155 lbs., used quickness and finesse to beat Ladd, tipping the scales at 190 by a score of 2-1.

In the second match, Ted Thompson and Greg Duffey who used to wrestle off weekly in high school to see who would wrestle 180 lbs. or heavyweight, wrestled again six and seven years after graduation. Thompson had the best of the match and won 7-0.

Dave Oimoen, a 1972 graduate of BHS, and Ray Lease, a 1970 graduate, followed in match number three. Oimoen built up an early lead and never lost it in posting a 6-2 win over his opponent.

Main event number one followed with "Crusher Kirch" facing "Moose Trainor". But lacked finesse and style, but neither lacked brute strength, and Kirch finally got the best of his foe in the second one-minute period. Kirch was leading 11-0 when he recorded a pin in 1:45.

when he recorded a pin in 1:45.

The final match pitted "Sugar Bear" Hauck against "Ripper" Reeson. Although Reeson had never wrestled before, his manager, John Carr, was confident his man would win the match when he read this poem before the match:

Tonight is the night that the Number one will be found, And we all know it won't be Ripper 'Who hits the ground.

Sugar Bear thinks that Ripper Will take a lickin',
But we all know Sugar Bear is Just one big CHICKEN!
There is just no way
Randy can win tonight,
Because in Ripper Reeson he

Meet just too much DY-NA-MITE!

Despite Carr's pre-match prediction, Hauck proved to be too much for Reeson to handle, and pinned his 190 lb. opponent with :45 remaining in the match. Reeson had battled Hauck even through the first two periods despite Hauck's 110 lb. weight advantage.

Checks totaling $45,836 were distributed at Mineral Point recently to members of Associated Milk Producers, Inc., who sustained milk losses as a result of the recent ice storm. Under provisions of the co-op's milk market loss program, AMPI producers received 75% of the value of all milk lost during the storm. Final settlement will be made when exact losses are determined. The Mineral Point meeting was one of 12 meetings the co-op has arranged in the state in order to process and pay the claims of several thousand members who lost milk during the storm.

President Gerald R. Ford declared southern Wisconsin a federal disaster area Tuesday, qualifying the area for about $8.4 million in public grants and additional loan programs for victims of the early March ice storm.

The Presidential Disaster Declaration was announced to Governor Patrick J. Lucey, Tuesday. It covers the 22-county area, including Iowa County, that suffered $50.4 million in damages as a result of the crippling storm.

Anthony Testolin, director of the bureau of disaster resources of the State Division of Emergency Government, said offices for those who wish to apply for disaster loans should be set up by April in the southeastern part of the state and by April 5 in the Madison area and areas west. Offices will be staffed by state and federal officials from the IRS, the State Revenue Department, the Small Business Administration, the Farmers Home Administration, and social services agencies.

Direct federal grants will be available only to municipalities, counties, and state agencies. Most others who suffered damages from the storm will be able to apply for loans at 6 and 5/8's percent interest from the SBA and the FHA. In addition to loans, persons who missed work days because of the storm may qualify for special disaster unemployment insurance. And, 1975 tax returns can be amended to get credit this year for losses due to the storm.

County Included in State Damage Request MADISON--lowa County has Joining Iowa County on the list of counties experiencing the most in costs and losses to homes and losses to home and losses

MADISON--Iowa County has been included in the list of counties Governor Patrick J. Lucey has submitted to Washington in an attempt to get a presidential disaster declaration for 22 southern counties:

lowa County's damage breakdown totals include dairy losses of $946,600; livestock and poultry losses of $278,200; field and fruit crops, nursery and greenhouse losses of $49,700; and other losses (fence damage, etc.) of $563,100 for a total of $1,837,600. Equipment purchases (generators, alternators, etc.) totaled $733,400.

More than $50.4 million in damages from the recent ice storm that crippled the area are being sought for the 22 counties. Lucey has labeled the storm as "the costliest single natural disaster in the history of the state."

Lucey has asked President Gerald R. Ford for emergency grants and loans for local government, business, farmers and other citizens. He has asked for expedient action on the part of the president so that financial assistance can be authorized promptly.

Joining Iowa County on the list of counties experiencing the most severe damage in the early March storm are Calumet, Columbia, Crawford, Dane, Dodge, Fond du Lac. Green, Grant, Jefferson, Lafayette, Manitowoc, Milwaukee, Ozaukee, Richland, Rock, Sauk, Sheboygan, Vernon, Walworth, Washington, and Waukesha.

Information for the damage estimates were compiled by the Department of Agriculture and Division of Emergency Government. But, officials aiding in the estimates feel that the real costs of the storm and the losses that resulted may never be known.

Estimates for the disaster include:

Agricultural damage: $17.28 million in dairy products, live-stock, crop, fruit, nursery, structural and equipment losses.

Private utility damage: $13.75 million with losses divided between three major companies. Wisconsin Power and Light Company has estimated a loss of Private damage: $10.99 million in costs and losses to homes and businesses (exclusive of farms) due to debris removal, structural damage, flooding, and food loss.

More than half a million state residents were without power sometime during the storm. Thousands suffered damage to homes, trees, shrubs and lost food in freezers and refrigerators. Farmers by the thousands suffered production losses, stock and poultry losses, and damages to their homes, buildings, woodlots, and fences. Lucey toured a portion of the disaster area before making his request for aid.

The Governor's request asks that all appropriate federal relief programs be authorized for the area including grants, loans, and benefits administered by the Small Business Administration, Department of Agriculture, Federal Disaster Assistance Administration, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Utility crews from Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, and Illinois helped state crews restore power within the stricken area during the storm. Also, friends helped friends, neighbors helped neighbors, and residents have stories to tell for years to come.

Public damage: $8.4 million in costs to local, county and state government for protective measures, facility damage, and debris removal.

Legacy of the Ice Storm

Blue Mounds State Park was hard hit by the ice storms earlier this month, and is now closed as rangers struggle to repair the damage. Almost every tree in the park lost branches or suffered even worse damage, said park director Jim Schweiger, and there's a chance the hiking trails could be closed all summer if the ground stays too soggy to bring in heavy treetop-trimming equipment. The park is closed to make clean-up easier, and crews are working to open the picnic and parking areas by early summer. But curious on-lookers are making it difficult for them to work despite the "closed" signs.

Storm Damage Keeps Forester Busy In Iowa County Area

"It has been a busy time," area forestor Jim Widder describes the post-storm tree damage calls he has received since the disaster that struck this area in early

Widder, who has an office at the area DNR headquarters and the area DNR headquarters and another at the Iowa County Ag Center, has visited at least 60 places to inspect damages and give advice on repair. "I cut a radio tape and said at the end of it I would help anyone who called and then the phone started ringing," Widder said. Some of the calls involved trees with some calls involved trees with some historical significance to the area.

"Only the owner can determine if a tree should be repaired or cut down," Widder said. "There is one damaged tree in Mineral Point that has historical significance behind it and I think it can be saved. But only the owner can make that determination," he added

Widder has seen a lot of split trunks and busted off limbs since the storm. "Split trunks can be bolted and cabled and the tree can be saved in most instances. Ornamental birch trees were severely damaged in the storm. My advice is that if a young tree under six inches in diameter is damaged it should be cut off at damaged it should be cut off at ground level. It'll sprout again and be developed. It'll take a few years but it'll be faster growing than planting a new seedling," he said. "If a birch is broken off of the main trunk it should be trimmed back to the main trunk, not just at the break. Trimming at the break will leave a stub-sticking out. Cutting back requires a covering over of the wound but dressing can be found at local hardware stores. But be careful of lead base paints. They should not be used," he cautioned. He add that small wounds under three inches would not have to be treated.

Blue Mounds State Park came out of the storm with extensive damage, according to Widder. Damage was 100% there. The entire crown canopy was reduced by at least 1/3 and estimated clean-up and repair costs are set at $85,000 by the state crew. We're going to try to save what we can but we don't know how long it will take or when the park can be opened. Clean-up has been started by the park crew and further help will come from a CAP crew and from the DNR," he had extensive damage but Widder does not expect a total tree removal project will have to be done. "Those old trees should be held as long as possible and a re-planting program started," he like this before."

said. He also estimated 25 to 30% of the trees in the county were affected in some way with the ones on high ground suffering the most.

Besides the help tree service people can provide, Widder points to fertilization as a method of assistance that could pay dividends. "Trees need a fertilizer high in nitrogen for leaf production and this should be done prior to July 1. We have a brochure at the DNR area office we'll provide to anyone needing information on fertilization.

Widder also added that many problems caused by the storm may not show up until 1977 or 1978. He expects that growth will be reduced 20% over the next two In Dodgeville, Centennial Park up again. "I wouldn't be too and extensive damage but quick to give up on a tree," he

One of these is the original military road, the first link between Fort Howard at Green Bay, Fort Winnebago at Portage and Fort Crawford at Prairie du Chien.

As a result of efforts by Everett Olsen, Extension Resource Agent, and members of the State Senate a move is underway to place additional markers along the road besides the one just east of Dodgeville on U.S. Highway 18-151, pictured above.

It was in 1829 that three men and an Indian guide were the first white men to travel the state. James Duane Doty, territorial judge, Morgan L. Martin, lawver and land speculator and Henry S.

Baird were on their way to Prairie du Chien to hold court and to look for a route where a road might be built. The First Wisconsin Military Road was constructed six years later, in a shorter time than it may take to complete the new expressway along 18-151 today.

It's in keeping with the Bicentennial Celebration this year that Senate Joint Resolution 29 has been introduced by Senators Hollander, LaFavre, Knutson, Thompson, Morrison, Petri, Bablitch, Martin, Bidwell and co-sponsored by Representatives McEssey, Gower, Lewison, Azim, O'Malley, Duren, Byers, Goodrich and L. Everett and the Senators and Representatives need your support in seeing that this historical road is properly marked.

This village in the valley is Blue Mounds in western Dane County, catching the lowering sun on a warm spring day. The community, with steepled church, old fashioned business district and grouping of

Here is southwest Wisconsin in all the summer beauty of a perfect July day as seen over Iowa County's Town of Brigham. The contour strip cropping as a soil conservation measure creates these brilliant pat-terns for the Big Three of Wisconsin crops — the green tasseled corn, golden oat straw just after combining, and the deep green second crop alfalfa hay. The fields are those of the Dean and Diane Oimoen farm, Rt. 1, Barneveld, south of Blue Mounds off Highway F.

Our passports have expired! How's that for a sad commentary of the years activities. I even went back to work, halftime, at U. of Wis. Student Health Center. The academic calendar allows adequate time off for farm, cabin, family, and friends.

February found sin the rain at Aspen but the mountains took on equivalent moisture in snow. Alison, Bryan and his mother joined us there for a few days of skiing. A wild ride down the mountains to the Denver airport brought our group in just after the plane left. So we taxed the benevolent Ashbaughs for bed and breakfast—best of the trip.

A family reunion at Bill Anderson's produced an admirable collection of Hodgson kin. We looked over the fifty-plus assembled and couldn't find one to worry about. Such good cooks, too

Alison and Bryan drove from Denver in March to be on hand when Diane and Vic produced the first of the next generation. They went home after days of revelry and, on March 26, he made his way into the waiting world. Pat's blue flag flew high on the masthead signalling Craig Victor Trastek's arrival. He and his parents live in Chicago where Vic is a surgical resident at Northwestern. July will find them at the Mayo Clinic.

The rites of spring include planting an oversized garden at the farm. While still one-up on the seeds we zapped down to Belize for the bone-fish and tarpon of the Caribbean summer. Ash and Care Ashbaugh joined us for a lovely week in those tepid waters.

May finished Bennett's year at the U.W.-Madison and Brian's first at U.W.-Eau Claire. Both worked at outdoor type jobs and at the same time managed to maintain their amateur standings in water skiing.Last summer in the north saw the completion of our efforts on our neighbors' log cabin. Everone should cut, peel, saw, position, and fit logs at least once. It was a fun, rewarding project and good for the soul.

July brought us a few days with friends sailing in Lake Michigan among the islands off Door County. One night, for want of a better campsite, Pat and I slept in rubber dingha tethered to the mother boats. Such waterbeds! Meanwhile, inside her sleeping bag, Pat was erupting with poison ivy.

We shook Pat's family tree several times this summer. Sister Muff and family hosted several rousing days, occasioned by visits from Julanne and Uncle Harry respectively. My annual tennis game plus Olympics in the pool leaves us in various stages of collapes.

Alison and Bryan spent the summer in Houston, he with the Gulf Oil Co. She visited in August to cuddle the growing Craig. Alison enjoys being back in school while Bryan winds up his M.B.A.

Fall, students, poor Packers, sons back to school, Pat and I struggling with medical Spanish and singing with the U.W.Choral Union, drought, no apples at the farm (but a good honey crop), a new President. There were only ten around our Thanksgiving table, Great-grandmother Healy presiding. She will be in Madison this winter, spending Christmas and January with brother George and DAnn.

Again full circle. Off, with boys, to Denver for Christmas and skiing.

Our heartfelt warmth to all of you, wherever you are. Merry Christmas,

"you all" and God Bless.----10-4 from Big Santa and Speed.

Eve We Merry Christmas, dear friends;

Another Christmas season and we wonder where the year has gone so quickly. It is great to be busy but someday we must find time to relax, also! Our family is really scattered now and we are grateful for Ma Bell and the faithful postman. John is completing his first year of Army service with the Military Police in Fort Wainwright, Fairbanks, Alaska. He is delighted with his post and finds his second-hand Scout makes it possible to do some hiking and camping, even the last outing in an early six-inch snow. His letters are full of enthusiasm and we are happy for him. No Christmas leave for him but he plans to be home in late January. Jim is in Cedar Rapids and has found the joys of owning a home tempered with the hard work of changing the landscaping of the front yard and the fussy work of a little remodeling in the house. He likes working at Collins Radio but finds the job and house leave little time for his homebuilt airplane. That seems to be his long-term project. Dick is comfortably settled in Cincinnati with a view of a lovely hillside full of woods outside his apartment. He is a professor of engineering analysis at the Univ. of Cincinnati and thoroughly enjoys his work. Large class sizes are frustrating but the students are great to work with and he is busy in department work and happy at it. He's also part of the church choir now and working his way through his first time at singing the Messiah. Warren and I are envious and would love to join him in that great music.

We stay busy in all directions here at home. Warren is doing less traveling just now and I like that. Reports, proposals, and the fascinating research projects added to the teaching makes time go too quickly for him, too. I wish I could find the cartoon that pictured a child, looking at the brimming briefcase of papers that his father brought home each night, and asking mother "If Daddy can't get his work done at school, why don't they just put him in a slower group?" Well, I have finished my third and last year as member of a budget analysis/allocation panel for United Way. I wouldn't dare count the hours it has taken but it is why my shopping is un-finished and the cards are late in the mail. It is heartening, though, to see the high level of concern our community has for those who need help and I felt privileged to be part of the process. Now, though, I can go back to being me and doing some of my fun-things. I'm learning to weave a Navajo rug on a simple loom and find it frustrating but fascinating; and when added to my quilting, needlepoint, knitting and gardening, I'm glad to see there is so little time left for housework. There are certainly no lonely or idle hours in our lives just now.

We squeezed in a fabulous vacation this year. With our good friends, Fran and Reid Bryson, we had a seven-day motorized rubber raft trip down the Colorado River through Grand Canyon in July. The phrase, "I will lift up mine eyes", kept running through my mind as we looked up in every direction to those magnificent rocks, and the excitement of broiling sun and 40° water (straight from the bottom of Glen Canyon Dam), the challenging hikes up the side canyons, the thrill of swimming in foaming waterfalls or floating in azure clear waters of Havasu Creek was a dream-like vacation. We have twelve new friends from our raft and all of us want to make the trip again. Dick got in some canoe trip/camping in Canada, and Jim had saved his vacation for the air show and working in our woods at the cottage, but some day we hope all our family can take the river trip together. It was simply superb.

The year draws to a close and we just move our unfinished tasks from this calendar to the next. It is a blessing to be so delighted with life and so blessed with dear friends. Even though we don't communicate often, we think of you and cherish memories of days past. We look forward eagerly to next year and hope you feel the same way. You are always welcome in our house, may we see you soon. God bless you all in the coming year.

Members of the Iowa County Historical Society met in Dodgeville Saturday morning before heading out on a historical tour of East Iowa County. The tour included the Jonesdale, Hollandale, Barneveld, Blue Mounds and Ridgeway areas.

County Historical Society Tours Eastern Iowa Co.

On Saturday, April 23, Iowa County Historical Society Society members met at Dodgeville for their first historical tour of Eastern Iowa County. The tour committee, Lucille Lauper and Theresa McCarragher had researched the area and gave a travelogue along with a tour of many areas that even those natives of the area had never visited.

The tour began at the Governor Dodge Memorial on Garrison Grove or Dodge Road, on to 191 and to Jonesdale and Ike's Lake. There Ithyl James greeted them and told about the history of Jonesdale and the lake.

Then on to Highway 39 and Calvary Cemetery where Theresa McCarragher gave the history of the Catholic Church in Hollandale.
At F and 39 the group was joined by Lester and Bertha Willborn at the Moscow Center Cheese Factory. They explained and demonstrated the art of Swiss cheese making and treated the group to some of their product.

On then to Moscow in the extreme southwest corner of Iowa County where Clara Dougherty, Olga Moen and Mr. Mellom narrated the history of the now extinct village.

Then back via the Old McKenna Road to Highway 39 and the Englebert farm with its Emma Mieden park of statues built in the thirties by Nick Englebert. Then to Hollandale where Lucille Lauper narrated its history and Theresa McCarragher related more of the history of St. Patricks Church and the century old painting from France of the Virgin Mary.

Lunch at the Legion Hall was followed by a short journey to Adamsville and Middlebury on the Burma and Mill Dam Roads where Max Theobald was the host and narrator of the history of that area and the church.

The next stop was at the Helgeson farm where Abner told about their log house, the birthplace of his sister, Ida. This house was built by John Stensby.

The last stop was at the new log home designed and built by Raymond Peterson and family. He has cut and finished all the logs and lumber in a home destined to stand for a long, long

The Dodgeville Chronicle has had a Barneveld correspondence since 1881 who reported happenings of consequence here. In following issues of the Barneveld Shopper, we will reprint some of these happenings of yesteryear.

"110 years ago the March draft call for Ridgeway tounship was as follows:... David simpson, Hans Olson, Charles Duffey, Thomas Williams Ole Arneson, Charles Olson, John Jones, Sever Olson, Hugh Lewis, Henry W. Jones, Robert Owens,....there were additional names on the list, but I believe none of them are related to present day Barneveld people.

In 1885 Thomas I. Williams was the postmaster and sold grocories and other merchandise and was the correspondent to the Chronicle. The Chronicle of 2--1885 had the following items in the Barneveld Department. "Go to the Postoffice for Valentines and "Doctor R.W. Jones is very busy a t present and can hardly got time to sleep at night."

In Fobruary of 1875, "Mrs. A. Groons house in Pokerville was burned down last week, with most all that was init, except the family. The town was small before, now there is one house less.

Joel Zander

In February of 1875, a letter to the Chronicle had this note about the vote at a recent election in Ridgeway to waship ever going dry. "I see the whiskey has beat the Good Templars Lodge. It is too bad. Our young folks pledge their names on the Good Templars list one night and before going home go to the saloens to drink whiskey."

the writer also mentioned "I haven't very interesting news from this part of the country. If I would say it has been very cold, everybody all over knows it. I don't know if anybody has been froze to death."

Tari Thielbar to doath."

In November 1875, "Farmers are delighted in this community, at the pleasant weather we are having at the present, for the corn, being very soft, has not been gathered until now, but now we are having "husking bees" every say and we will soon be through. Plowing is well under way and we will soon be ready for winter."

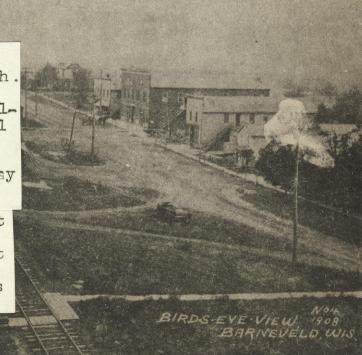

The business district from Barneveld's north side was the subject of this photo.

The Chronicle said 6-3-1881 about the Iowa County Grange Convention became on the subject of cheesemaking. "Mr. Theobald (Fred) again enthusiastic on the subject and in his peroration paid a very high compliment to farmers, calling them "The most independent of all men, kings of the soil, monarchs, and many other dignified names."

2-18-1887 "Mr. J.J. Davies of Blue Mounds Valley Grange, gave an oyster supper to the members of Grange number 515, on the 5th. A number of his neighbors were also present. The evening was spent in discussing questions pertaining to the farm, intermingled with song and music in Welsh and English. It was voted by all that it was good to be there. Mr. Daniel Jones, son of Rev. Griffith Jones of alwick, rendered some very fine music with singing in both Welsh and Wnglish. Hoping that such occasions may often return is the wish of all who were present."

Many are prospecting this winter for lead ore, and we are told that Evan Z. Evans has struck it under the glass rock. But the best of all is the strike by Wm. X Jones and John M. Thomas in the great cave. On one side of the cave they have struck a seam which is white and almost like flour, and Mr. Thomas says it is flour." This from the Chronicle of 2-6-1885 and is a joke?

Crop Season Was Driest In History

The 1976 growing season in Wisconsin was the driest on record, the State Agriculture Department says, calling it even worse than that of the Dust Bowl era of the 1930s.

The summer rain shortage led to the Dairy State's smallest hay crop since 1958, lowest corn production since 1967 and the poorest oat harvest since 1907, the department said.

The state's precipitation records date back to 1891.

The current drought has not only retarded 1976 harvests, but a shortage of ground water could spell trouble next year if there is insufficient rain now before winter frost sets in, the department said.

Hay, corn and oats represent 95 per cent of Wisconsin's cultivated acreage.

The 1976 corn yield was 17 bushels an acre less than in 1975, while a similar decline in drought-influenced 1936 was only 10 bushels, the department said.

Rainfall has averaged 13 inches during the current growing season, compared with 13.4 in 1891, 14.5 in 1958 and 15 in 1932.

The department said Wisconsin farmers have already lost an estimated $624 million to the drought this season.

"Hansel and Gretel" was the theme of the first grade float which took a blue in the Barneveld Fair Day parade. The float was put together by Mrs. Martin's and Mrs. Jabs' first grade class.

Drought Reaches Severe Stage in County

Sweltering temperatures and continued dry weather have made conditions severe on farms throughout Iowa County.

Although the first crop of hay was reported to be good in most areas, the second crop is spotty and the grain crops of corn and oats are questionable if it doesn't rain soon.

The problem has come about as only 2.35 inches of rain fell in May, and only 1.64 inches were recorded in June. Only a trace has been reported in scattered areas during the first 14 days of July, according to the figures compiled by area weather observer Bert Ley. The average for each month is about four and a half inches of moisture.

The last substantial rain was back in mid-May, when 1.16 inches were measured on May 16. Since then the heaviest rain was on June 14, when .67 of an inch fell to the ground.

To compound the problem. temperatures soared near the 100 degree mark over the past weekend, and are in the 90's again this week after an 80 degree day on Monday. No immediate relief can be guaranteed by weather forecasters.

The corn and oat crops are managing to give farmers most of the headaches. Much of the corn in the county has begun to tassle out, and in most cases, it is a foot to a foot and a half shorter than it usually is at this stage.

But the main problem isn't the shortness, it is that if there isn't rain soon, there won't be ears on the stalks. And that will mean that the corn will have to go into the silo, if it doesn't dry up first.

Iowa County Agricultural Agent LaVerne Draves says that the corn is no longer holding its own in the field. "If this hot weather continues, and if it doesn't rain soon, the corn won't be able to stand it any more," Draves said. "From now on, every day without moisture will mean marked reductions in corn

"The corn needs moisture for ear development, and right now there is obviously no moisture there," Draves continued. "It's not yet too late for the ear corn. It has been hurt some, but a good rain now would be a billion dollar rain.

Draves says the heat puts additional stress on the corn. "Corn does best between 50 and 86 degrees, and as soon the temperature gets above this, it really hurts. It definitely starts to work against the corn.

Farmers are looking to several alternatives to cope with the corn problem. Draves says many farmers are cutting the corn for green feed, while others are filling silos. Some farmers are even considering baling the corn. "I can see nothing wrong with baling the corn," Draves said. "Since it is a high moisture crop, there is of course a problem getting the moisture down. But the corn is drying up fast now, and I guess it doesn't make much difference if it dries standing up or laying down.

The oat crop is also drying fast, and most is ripening much too fast. "There will be a lot of light oats harvested this year," Draves

The lack of rain has also left virtually no pasture. This means that the winter supply of hay is being used now, and that when winter finally does come, the hay supply is likely to be diminished.

When hay supplies are exhausted, that will mean hay will have to be bought. Many farmers are looking for the hay now before the prices get too high. Eldon Schraepfer, an auctioneer and realtor from Hollandale, said that at the present time, prices aren't too high. "I'd say the average hay would sell for a dollar to a dollar and a quarter a bale from the baler," Schaepfer said. "I don't think prices will get as high as some people think, because farmers will sell cattle first."

John Bradley, a Mineral Point farmer, said that things are getting to the "critical stage. I've had to chop oats for more feed, and sell cattle that I hadn't planned to sell. I imagine that we'll be putting most of the corn in the silo, to get out of it what we can. We'll have enough roughage (hay), but the grains will be the problem.

He said the second crop is "not worth cutting" in some spots.

"It's drying up right in the field."
Bradley isn't the only farmer who has been forced to cut down on cattle because of a lack of feed. Ken Powell, manager of the Iowa County Livestock Market just east of Dodgeville, said that $123,000 worth of cattle were sold last Thursday (July 8) at the weekly auction. "There were 765 head of cows and calves, which included 164 cows," Powell said. "There have been quite a few farmers who have called up and said they have to sell seven or eight cows and that's where that total of 164 came from.

He said the total was "half or less last year." Prices are dropping weekly, he said, on the cattle, but they are "not as bad as they could be. "Very few are selling for under 23 cents, while some are going as high as 28 cents," Powell said.

Pat Hennessey at the Hennessey Livestock Yards also noted that many more cattle are being sold than is normal. "We are taking in a terrific amount of cattle," Hennessey said. "It cattle," Hennessey said. "It started the Tuesday after the fourth of July, and since, the runs have been double what they have been other years." He attributed the large amount of cattle sales to the lack of pasture, which he said has forced farmers to "sell cows that are not paying their way." Dodgeville farmer Bob Meudt says that if it does rain, his corn could be saved. And he figures that if he has corn, he won't have to buy hay.

Despite the severe conditions, Meudt says that he has seen it worse in other years. "It was drier in 1963, when we didn't get any rain to speak of in May or June. And when I was a kid in the 30's, I can remember cutting down trees to use for feed for the

Some areas got temporary relief early Tuesday morning. Mrs. Merold Schambow, Rewey, said that they got about a quarter-inch of rain about 5:00. "That won't last lon with these hot temperatures, though," she said.

Even though the pasture is short, milk production hasn't gone down too much, according to an Associated Milk Producers (AMPI) official. "The amount of milk coming in hasn't dropped as drastically as might expected," the official said.

Farm equipment sales haven't slowed down too much, either, according to Clarence Gratz at the Farmer's Store in Mineral Point.

"It (the drought) hasn't hurt us too much yet," Gratz said. "We've been selling plenty of haying and chopping equipment, and we've even moved a few

When one farmer was asked how he was coping with the drought, he said there wasn't much that could be done. "We're doing a lot of praying, though,

The Wisconsin Nursing Home Association passed a resolution recently stating the American flag be flown around the clock for the hostages in Iran. In keeping with that, the Mineral Point Care Center accepted a flag from Iowa County D.A.V. members last Thursday which will be flown day and night "in prayer" for the hostages. Hospital Administrator Virgil Strang accepted the flag from D.A.V. members: Bill Rink, Mineral Point; Agnes Murphy, Ridgeway 257; Floyd Heins, County Commander 170; Joyce Finley, 1st Vice, 170; Jim Finley, Iowa County Voiture; Rudy Lindholm, Vice Commander, 3rd District; Jewannia District; Jewannia District; Jewannia District Commander 2 de Murphy District Commander Williams, Barneveld, 3rd District Commander; and Joe Murphy, Ridgeway, Commander.

Occupants began moving into the new Summit Apartments in Barneveld this week. The housing for the elderly includes 20 units in the three buildings pictured. Applications for rentals are available at the Barneveld State Bank, and are being accepted on a first come first serve basis. Of the 20 apartments, 10 are two bedroom units renting for $165 a month, while the other 10 are one bedroom, and they are renting for $135 a month. The rent includes all utilities except telephone. Construction on the apartments began in June. General contractor on the project was Connery Building, Madison, while Ace Hardware, Mt. Horeb, handled the plumbing. Modern Housing, Monroe, did the electrical work, while Rowley and Schlimgen, Madison, put in the carpeting. General Electric received the bid for the appliances, and McKay Nursery, Waterloo, will be doing the landscaping next spring. The $435,000 project was all federally funded. A model apartment will be open for inspection soon in the complex.

Ruggles Home May Be Oldest Frame House in Iowa County

Jean Whitford, of the County Bicentennial Committee, visits with Debby McKahan in front of the historic William P. Ruggles house in the town of Ridgeway. It served as a stagecoach stop for many years and was the only communication between Sauk City, Arena, Dodgeville and Mineral Point until the railroads came.

by Harry Johnson

Is this the oldest house in Iowa County? We visited the William P. Ruggles house on County Trunk "H" with Jean Whitford of the Iowa County Bicentennial Committee and found that the house is still being lived in. The Iowa County History says its was the first frame house in the Town of Ridgeway (1842).

Capt. Ruggles was born in Massachusettes in 1807 where he

Capt. Ruggles was born in Massachusettes in 1807 where he had been a captain in the local militia. He came to Wisconsin in 1836 and was postmaster at Sinsinawa for a number of years. His great-grandson, Tom McCutcheon, has a letter Ruggles received from his father back East who was also a postmaster. No postage was necessary in those days.

Tom still owns the old house and barn and the 300 acres on which it stands and the house has been rented for the past four years by Debby McKahan who is shown in the picture with her daughter Kari 2. Grant Morse of Hollandale is Debby's grandfather. And, of course, his brother, the late Senator Wayne Morse, was her great-uncle.

Capt. Ruggles came to the Town of Ridgeway in 1842 and purchased 426 acres for $1.25 an acres. For many years this old house and the many outbuildings served as a stagecoach stop and there was a big spring-fed fountain in the yard to water the horses.

The stagecoach was pulled by a four-horse team and even then was often mired in the clay roads. Sometimes as many as 40 slept over night on straw mats packed in like sardines in a can. It is said that school was once held here in one of the buildings and at one time it held the office for Hyde's Mill and the locality was once called Rugglesdale.

The original barn still stands alongside the other buildings to make this one of the most historical sites in Iowa County.

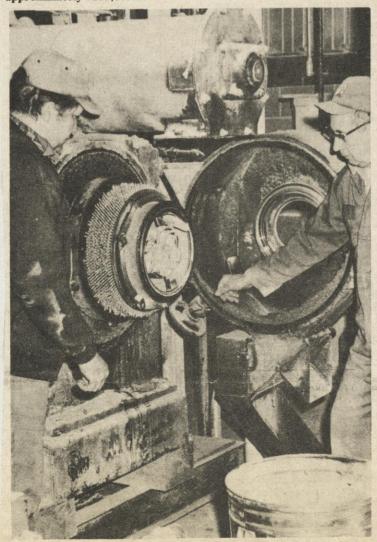

The original barn and many of the other buildings still stand on the 200 acres and are owned by Captain Ruggle's great-grandson, Tom McCutchin. The house was the first frame building in the town of Ridgeway according to the Iowa County History.

New Pellet Mill in Hollandale

This new addition to Hollandale Feed and Grain cost approximately $130,000.00.

At work in the new pellet mill at Hollandale Feed and Grain are John Carr, left, owner, and Jack Strand, pellet mill operator.

The $130,000 plant is now part of Hollandale Feed & Grain, which is one of three county feed mills owned by John Carr, Barneveld. The other two are Barneveld Feed & Grain and Mineral Point Feed & Grain.

The new plant specializes in making pellets, cubes and crumbilized concentrates at the rate of five ton per hour. Materials used in making the products include grains, soybean meal, minerals, vitamins, linseed meal, etc., which means the mill must have an extensive inventory in the manufacturing ingredients. However, Carr feels he is still able to save money for himself and his customers.

"We used to be a typical retail

"We used to be a typical retail country feed mill, but now we are more of a broader base service center," Carr said. "We've eliminated one mark-up margin with our pellet mill. We make the finished feed and sell it direct to the consumer. Why should we send a check for $10,000 to Madison for feed when we can make it here?"

Construction began on the new addition in July of 1976, and the mill was complete in December.

Production began January 1.

"It definitely has increased our competitive edge in serving our retail accounts," Carr added.
"Our business here and at our other two mills has increased substantially since the new section opened."

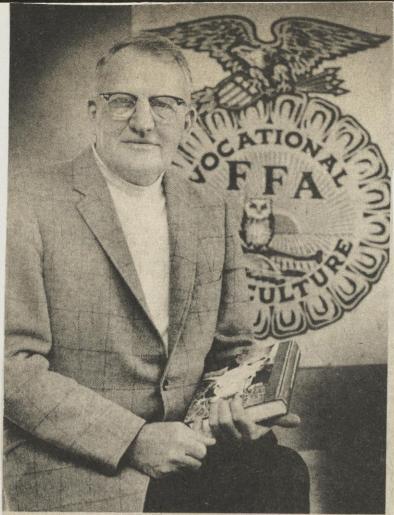

opened."

"I feel strongly about what this mill is doing for the community, too," Carr said. "Two full-time jobs were added by the pellet mill, and in a community the size of Hollandale, that is substantial. I feel that it is a real plus to the community. Our employees are spending their payroll dollars and customers are spending their feed dollars here. It makes for a self-sustaining economic unit."

Carr says the plant will also help raise the tax base in the community, which in these days of state school aids is important.

Irving Gerhardt

Like a farmer who works long hours into the night, Irving W. Gerhardt has not been an eight-to-four o'clock vocational agricultural instructor at East High School for the past three decades.

Gerhardt has been busy at youth work and adult activities out in the community since he came to Madison in 1947 to establish the city's only vocational agricultural department.

He has earned a national reputation as an ag teacher here and previously at Hayward and Mauston, winning the national Honorary American Farmer Degree in 1975 for outstanding service to the Future Farmers of America (FFA).

His list of honors and activities reflect his dedication and effectiveness

He has been a member of the board of directors of the Dane County Junior Fair since its start 30 years ago and has helped guide it to great success

He developed the first dog obedience program for 4-H clubs in the state in 1958 and since served as its only superintendent. He helped expand the program statewide and helped many other counties get started.

He has been an instructor at the Badger Kennel Club for over 25 years and he has been helpful to thousands of dog owners throughout the state.

He was honored by the Wisconsin 4-H in 1973 with its coveted "Friend of 4-H" award.

Some of his proudest work has been with Madison FFA members who honored him with a plaque and these words from an alumni speaker:

"Those of us who had the privilege to attend his classroom and come under his guidance, foresight, counseling and his discipline, understand completely

Know Your Cottage Madisonian Pikes Peak

what this man is all about. We have come to know a sincere and honest friend - a man who made this chapter go." Members of the current FFA chapter petitioned this newspaper to salute their instructor as a Know Your Madisonian.

He received the "Teacher of Teachers Gold Award" from the National Vocational Agriculture Teachers Assn. for having inspired and directed a large number of young people into the agriculture teaching profession.

Gerhardt proudly points out that a large number of his former students now serve as 4-H and youth agents in Wisconsin and other midwestern states. Six of his former students have Ph.D. degrees in agriculture and related

He is proud of the new ag teaching facilities at East which include a greenhouse which will be ready for operation next fall, just about the time Gerhardt is planning retirement.

"I'd do it all over again," Gerhardt said of his teaching career. "I could have made more money in other fields but I'm very happy with what I've done. I've sincerely enjoyed the kids here at Gerhardt is a past-president of the Kiwanis Club and a member of the Zor Shrine. He and his wife, Marian, live at 3626 Lake Mendota Dr. Their son, Scott, 21, is stationed with the First Marine Division at Camp Pendleton, Calif.

My name is Mark T. Hodgson, 24, and I am running for the Barneveld Public School Board. I live in the Township of Brigham with my mother and father on a farm. I have one brother, Jerry, who is married to Jackie Oimoen and they have one child, Chad. I also work at the Quad County Co-op in Barneveld which enables me to see and talk to people not only from the Village but also from the Township. I attended eight years of grade school and four years of high school in Barneveld.

Feb. 1977.

I have an interest in this school that most people in the district couldn't have as I have lived here for 24 years and went to school in Barneveld for 12 years. Part of myself was left in that school; a very important part. In school we had a pride in ourselves; but we had a very important kind of pride and it was for the school. I feel this same way today. I feel the school has lost some of this. Part of this is due to administration, teaching staff and board of years past. I do feel it is on an upward trend this past year.

One issue this past year that came about was taxes. The people of the community were right in their concern for where the money was going. Some of their questions were answered but not completely. There is no reason in my mind why anyone can't get a full and detailed explanation of where every penny in our school is being spent. I feel this issue is one I would work on very hard. I am very proud of our school and if elected I will try my best to pass it on to future graduates and of course to the parents of the students because if there isn't that feeling in the home it is that much harder for administration, board and teaching staff to accomplish it in

If anyone in the district would like to talk with me any further on these or any other matters contact me and I will be pleased to listen and talk with you.

I will appreciate your support at the primary election, Feb. 15.

The main event of the evening was scheduled to include recently crowned NCAA 118 lb. champion Jim Haines. However, following his victory in the nationals in Norman, Oklahoma over the weekend, the University of Wisconsin senior decided to compete this weekend in the World Cup in Toledo. UW wrestler Nick Bell is scheduled to take his place in the event. He will supposedly wrestle Dave and Bill Schlimgen.

Following his graduation from Ridgeway High School, where he starred in the old Iowa County League, Davis attended the University of Wisconsin - Platteville, where he led his team to the NAIA championship tournament in Kansas City on two occasions. During his undergraduate career, he lettered in basketball four times, and was captain of the team. He graduated from UW-P in 1960.

After graduating from college, he coached one year at Milledge-ville (Illinois) High School, and then coached five years at Portage High School. During that period, he received a masters degree from the University of Wisconsin.

In 1966, he became an assistant coach at the University of Maryland, and coached the Terrapin freshmen for two years while working towards a Ph.D. in Physical Education, which he received from Maryland in 1970.

He then spent two years as an assistant basketball coach at American University in Washington, D.C. before going to Lafayette in the fall of 1971.

At Lafayette, he has had a record of 114 wins and 43 losses, for an outstanding .726 winning percentage. He led the college with an enrollment of approximately 2000 students from Pennsylvania into the National Invitation Tournament (NIT) twice. Among his other major accomplishments are two Conference Divisions titles, two twenty-win seasons, four straight

96-Year-Old Still Thinks of Work

Oscar Olson, 96, still thinks of work, cording wood for instance! Noting, that all of the Arena Manor residents have been keeping their thermostats turned down as much as possible to conserve energy during what is now termed the coldest winter ever remembered, he said, "Mister, I could make some money these days cording wood."

He keeps abreast of all the news; worries about the energy crisis and wonders what will happen. He recalls that wood was used for fuel in his younger days, and that many are "turning to wood" as the price of fuel oil

Chopping wood, to him no stranger. He recalls the day when "If it was too cold to take the team to the woods, my buddy and I would go anyways." After cording wood all week, they would walk the five miles to Barneveld on Saturday, and dance all night. Actually, Mr. Olson didn't get to dance much, as his brother Albert and him were top-notched violin players.

He reflects, "There were a lot of new barns going up. When one was built, then there would have was built, then there would have to be a dance. My brother was the best violin player I have ever heard. Man-o-man, that was a boy that could play." Both of the men "just picked it up" when it came to playing the violin. He added, "There is no music to my ears, but that of a violin."

Both of his parents came from Norway. His father was a grown man, his mother a young girl

Mr. Olson's start in life was like that of Abe Lincoln. Mr. Olson was born in a log cabin near Barneveld. He became a car-Barneveld. He became a carpenter at an early age. He met, and was wedded to Hannah Hanson, and went farming by renting one in Brigham Township. In 1915 he purchased a farm in Walnut Hollow. He hired a contractor by the name of John Lewis to build a house and barn on the property. In 1916 the Olsons moved to their new home. The Olsons had two children, Norman (who now has the farm in Walnut Hollow) and Twilla (Mrs. Earl Ranney of Barneveld). Their mother died when they were nine and seven and their grandmother came to stay for about a year to look after them. After which their father took over the job of raising

Barneveld rescue squad learns fast

By Charles Fulkerson Of The State Journal

BARNEVELD — "I guess we're getting our baptism by blood right away," explained Trygve Arneson.

"It's been one every other day so far since we went into service."

Arneson, a local banker and emergency medical technician, was detailing the brief and gory history of the new Barneveld Rescue Squad. No one could accuse him of making an overstatement.

The rescue squad serves Barneveld, a village of 600, and the surrouding countryside. Since the squad went into operation last Friday night it has responded to three serious auto accidents involving 13 persons.

During a fund raising drive for the rescue squad's $36,000 ambulance, Arneson calculated an average of 70 to 80 Barneveld ambulance calls a year for all emergencies. But if the current rate should continue, the year end total for auto accident calls alone would be about two and one-half times the expected average for all calls.

Nobody here expects that to happen, but Arneson says the 18 volunteer technicians in the rescue squad are still "a little shocked" by the heavy concentration of accidents during the first week.

Barneveld's main street is Highway 18-151, one of the state's busiest and most dangerous two-lane roads. All three accidents, including a headon collision Wednesday that claimed the life of Thomas Hillwig, 21, Dodgeville, have been on the highway.

Even before the ambulance went into service there had been a spate of bad accidents, and the back yard of Barneveld Motors, a local car dealer, is now so littered with wrecks it looks like a junkyard.

When the new ambulance was delivered in late May the rescue squad parked the vehicle downtown near an intersection to give villagers a chance to look at it, recalled Marsha Myers, another emergency medical technician and bookkeeper at the local bank.

What they got instead was another look at a head-on collision on Highway 18-151 right down the street from the ambulance. Mrs. Myers said none of the people involved was hurt, which was fortunate because the ambulance wasn't operating.

Service was delayed about six weeks until the ambulance radio system was delivered and installed.

The emergency medical technicians who live in Barneveld or the surrounding area were trained last year in an 80-hour course offered in Dodgeville by the South West Wisconsin Technical Institute. Arneson, who is treasurer of the rescue squad, attributes the large number of technicians in an area of relatively low population to universal community support of the ambulance service.

The village and its environs contributed $12,000 toward the purchase of the ambulance, including a $3,000 contribution from the Town of Brigham and $3,200 raised through an auction sponsored by a local women's club.

Another $3,000 was obtained through a federal grant and the rescue squad got the rest of the money for the ambulance by borrowing from a special medical services fund created by the Iowa County Board, Arneson said

Some of Barneveld's volunteer medical technicians say they still get nervous when the radio receivers they carry everywhere call them to an

She stretches on her tiptoes, calling for increased volume from her singers, and, once she gets it, lunges forward like a matador making a kill.

She tells her students to feel like waves on the ocean, and she undulates slowly back and forth.

She pounds on the piano top when her chorus goes off key.

Her foot is hardly ever still, as she continually taps out the rhythm.

Through it all, there is a touch of humor. "That's about as musical as yesterday's laundry," she says.

And, during Godspell: "C'mon, loosen up, you have to be sexy."

Or, during another song: "It sounds like a bunch of cats."

One of four Wisconsin teachers of the year, Jan Swenson injects herself wholeheartedly into her music teaching at Barneveld's public schools. "Emotion is the Essence" reads a newspaper clipping in her office, which sums up her exemplary method of teaching.

Mrs. Swenson, a Madison native who shares a rural Arena farm with her husband, Dean, and three children, overcame the handicap of being born with one hand to receive the state-wide recognition for her professional abilities. She plays the French horn for the Madison Symphony Orchestra and has taught in various teacher workshops around the state.

The warmth and personality of Jan Swenson is reflected in the faces of students from kindergarten to high school seniors and also in the intensity with which she pursues her duties.

BARNEVELD — The first indication that Pat Reisdorf's mathematics class at Barneveld High School was slightly wackier than your run-of-the mill math class is that the teacher tied up a newspaper reporter when he entered the room.

Well, actually, Ms. Reisdorf tied the reporter to a senior student, Denise Theobald.

"See if you two can untie yourselves without breaking the rope or loosening the knot; I've got to go to the ladies room."

And, with that, Ms. Reisdorf disappeared for a few moments.

When she returned, she explained that "there is a way to undo those ropes without breaking the knot or cutting them, but you have to break out of your conventional way of thinking. I use this trick to teach the students topology — a way of looking at dimensional geometry."

It is important to note that Ms. Reisdorf made no move to untie the reporter and student while she explained her teaching methods. It is also important to note that none of the students who wandered in and out of the classroom during the interview thought it at all odd that their teacher had a visitor tied up.

"She's really wacky; but she's a great teacher," one of them said.

Ms. Reisdorf's teaching methods

Ms. Reisdorf's teaching methods include teaching mathematical formulas to the tune of "Sesame Street" songs, making models out of straws, and using complicated number games.

They also include letting the students listen to the radio while they are studying, installing a gumball machine in her classroom and allowing students to paint a mural on the wall outside her classroom.

"I decided to become a math teacher when I was in high school," Ms. Reisdorf explained to the still-tied reporter. "Everyone hated math and I loved it; but I thought even then that if students were going to learn the classes couldn't be so boring as they usually are."

Apparently Ms. Reisdorf's classes are anything but "boring.

"She's not like your typical teach er, said Charlene Gagner, another senior. "We end up singing all of our proofs and theorems - but we remember them.

Other students filtered into the room and started working puzzles in a

"The college people are worried aobut students not knowing how to approach problems creatively," Ms. Reisdorf said. "Students want to memorize a formula and then use it without thinking; what we try to do with these puzzles and number games is to get them to think.

One of her former students stopped by last week to tell Ms. Reisdorf that his college professor asked him to sing the "quadratic formula" to a University of Wisconsin class.

'Easier to remember'

"What I hope is that some of this sticks with the kids after they get out of class," she said. "It's easy to forget a formula; but if you remember the song, it will come back.'

Patti Rue, another senior, endorsed that idea. "The way she teaches makes you want to learn more and it is easier to remember things, she said. "She makes learning fun.

Ms. Reisdorf said she also tries to relate mathematics to music, art and, to some extent, reading.

While she was talking, another student, still ignoring the reporter's tied hands, asked him for his birth date, looked in a book and reported that, according to the reporter's biorythm chart, he was having a "triple critical

"The pre-calculus class will be doing biorythms this year," Ms. Reisdorf said. "I think it's a good way to help them learn that mathematics can be useful.'

Promised an A

Finally, Ms. Reisdorf transferred the ropes from Miss Theobold's wrists to her own - the class was to be tested Friday and anyone who could do the untie-the-rope trick had been promised an A so students couldn't see the answer.

"I'll show you how to do it," she said, proceeding to make a couple of loops, twist the rope ever so slightly and end up just as tied as she was in the beginning.

"We'll have to work on that before Friday," she announced as she untied the reporter.

Ms. Reisdorf said her educational philosophy is: "You can lead a horse to water, but you can't make it drink. With math students, I'd like at least to make them thirsty.

Dane County ghost towns — search for haunting memories

Of The Capital Times Staff

Western Dane County, on or near the Iowa/Dane counties line, seems to have an affinity for this sort of thing.

Now, ain't that Peculiar?

Yup, that's Peculiar alright - a grassy triangle in the road betwixt and between a modern pink ranch house and several tumble down farms. There used to be a sign in Black Earth, pointing the way to Peculiar - and a lot of bad puns.

The sign is gone now, but a fella in a gas station — "my grandmother lived in Peculiar" — pointed the way to the intersections of County Trunk F and FF, once the site of Tom Denney's Peculiar Post Office.

It seems that about 1898, Denney, operator of the Denney cheese factory in Vermont Township, got upset with the U.S. mail. He'd driven his rig into Black Earth to pick up his mail, only to find it had been sent to Blue Mounds - the opposite direction.

Denney decided to petition Washington for his own post office and got it - three years before RFD made it to the rest of Dane County. Somehow, the place and the post office got named Peculiar or Peculiar

By GARY PETERSON 1978 Denney left in 1904. So did his post office, upon the advent of Rural Free Delivery. To get to Peculiar Corners, take Highway KP right off Wisconsin 78 in Black Earth. Go about 1 mile and turn south on County Trunk F, than go on up and over the hill, which is roughly 3 miles. And you'll come to a Y in the road, a couple of Yield signs on a triangle of roadside grass.

Yup, that's Peculiar

Three miles west and a little bit south of Peculiar at the junctions of County Trunks J and JJ is something really peculiar. It's Elvers

Elvers, itself, or what's left of it the old town hall and a cheese factory house - isn't all that unusual. But about a hop, skip and a jump from Elvers - overlooking it, in fact, on a cliffside — are the — what shall we call them? — Elvers elves.

Perched on that hilltop is a minature reproduction of Elvers. I never saw anything - and maybe you never saw anything — quite like it.

Gilman Mickelson, an 82-year-old retired dairy farmer who lives right below little Elvers, did it. He started the project when he was 79 and had some time on his hands.

'Quite a bunch of cars go by," Mickelson emitted between spats of tobacco. "People stop and ask.

Interrupting his cutting of a wooden horse, he went on: "Might do some more this winter. I take a little of the farm work now, but I'm 82 years old. I was born 21/2 miles up the road and my wife was born down the valley, so we didn't have to go far to meet.

town hall, a post office, a store and saloon, back in the early 1800's," he continued. "It's (his miniature) put up according to the way Elvers was.

"Settlers came in here and built a

He went back to cutting his horse and I went to little Elvers.

Descriptions fail. There's a farm and a wolf, a beaver and some cows, "look-out" penguin and a windmill, a Harvestore silo and a horse, and Lena and Lucy.

'Proceed at your own risk," read Lena and Lucy's sign, situated precariously close to the edge. On the back, in red paint, it is written -"Lena and Lucy took a walk on this hill. We'll visit Guri and Sunevia. It would be such a nice thrill. On the way up, Lucy stumbled. She took a big spill. I tripped on a rock, she told Lena, I was not at the still. This is what Lucy and Lena have pledged. It's their duty to live on this dangerous ledge. We'll stay here forever, to let the folks know, that the going is rough and very steep down below.

I kid you not.

Proceeding to the mechanical windmill woodcutter, you'll find Erick - you'll just have to see for yourselves - the letterbox elf, the Elvers cheese factory, a bobcat, a windmill donkey.

It's authentic folk art extraordinaire and when the wind blows, Erick chops wood and the donkey donkeys, as donkeys, windmill and otherwise, are wont to do.

It's always 9 o'clock on the Elvers church steeple near the place where the animal band plays. A dog is on bass, a cat plays the fiddle. You get the general idea?

The Elvers school, District No. 1, has a "Boy's Rest Room" and a real resident racoon who waddled away. A wooden elephant, moose, and a rabbit are scattered beyond.

Wordless in Elvers - you'll just have to see it for yourselves.

"Torphy Day" was featured at the Hyde Chapel, May 21, when the Hyde Community Association met for its annual spring picnic and meeting. The Torphy families were early settlers in the Ruggles and Hyde areas. Mike Torphy was one of the early teachers in the Ruggles School. His son, Michael, is now an attorney in Madison and emphasized that we sometimes fail to show our appreciation to our forefathers who gave us many advantages. He paid special tribute to his mother who greatly influenced his life and to his wife who gave him three sons of whom he is very proud. One son, Mikael Torphy Tr., Madison, is presently a Circuit Court Judge.

Also present were Bill Torphy and his wife of Sauk City, Agnes Torphy Murphy and her daughter, Mrs. Henderson of Mt. Horeb. Their father, the late Ed Torphy, farmed near Hyde Store. Their sister, Genevieve Torphy Gorgan, Madison, sent greetings. Their nephew, Wayne Boylan, and Mrs. Ellen Blotz, Ridgeway, a cousin, were also present.

This association originally included descendants of the early settlers living in Iowa County and a few Madison families with Hyde ties--several of whom wowned land in the area. The average attendance at that time was 25. In the past 10 years, this association has grown to include not only members from this area and Madison, but Sauk City, Evansville, Wauwatosa, Boyd, Beaver Dam, Waupun, Florida, and Chicago and vicinity. Seventy people attended the meeting Saturday.

Eveland, left, along with retiring president John Koenig and Trustee Shelby Raisbeck, right, watched the flip of the coin made by Mrs. Anna Mae Jones. Raisbeck and Eveland were tied at 100 votes each following several recounts of the ballots last Tuesday. Three "official" methods are provided for breaking a tie: a coin flip, draw of the cards or drawing straws. Raisbeck called tails and the coin came up heads to give the office to Eveland. Raisbeck continues as trustee and Koenig was also elected trustee.

The "hidden part of agricul-' is hard at work on the Bill Van Haren and Stanley Kanter farm just south of Barneveld.

Van Haren and Kanter are beekeepers, and they have about 350 bee colonies spread out over the Barneveld-Blue Mounds-Ridgeway area on approximately a dozen farms. They are in the midst of the peak season.

"You might say that beekeep ing is the hidden part of agriculture, because it's there but people don't see it," Van Haren said. "During the warm weather months, bees are all around dong their work, but they aren't as obvious as the other forms of agriculture."

Van Haren and Kanter operate on the former Bob Schaller farm on the former Bob Schaller farm about a mile south of Barneveld on CTH "K". They've been at that location for about a year, and before that, they were on the Barry Watkins farm further down the road for about four

The bee season begins when the flowers and plants start blooming in the spring. "The bees are out gathering pollen as soon as they see a blossom," Van Haren said. "In this area, they get their pollen from trees such as maple and willow, and from dandelions, sweet clover, alfalfa, and a number of flowers growing wild such as golden rod and aster." He said that a cluster may start out with about 15,000 to 20,000 bees, but by mid-June, a good colony may contain as many as 50,000 honey bees.

Van Haren explained the system by which honey bees operate. "Each colony has just one queen, and all the other bees are the offspring of the queen," he said. "The other two casts of bees are the drones, or the males, and the worker bees. The workers constitute more that 95 percent of all the bees in the and they consist colony, and they consist of sexually immature females. They can never mate with the drones, which have a sole purpose of mating with the queen."

it is the only "sexually mature" female in the hive, according to Van Haren. At birth, the queen bee is fed a special "royal jelly" for about five days, and this richer food enables her to complete the maturity cycle.

The queen bee may give birth to as many as 1500 bees a day during the birth cycle. The cycle from egg to a bee is 21 days. The life of a worker bee varies from season to season, Van Haren says. "During the summer, an average worker bee will live approximately 35 days. However, the life span increases to about five months during the winter. It seems that a bee has just so much energy to burn up, and if they are hard at work, they burn up that energy faster and don't live as long."

Bees aren't actually dormant during the winter months, according the Van Haren, even thought it may seem that way. Their instincts tell them that the days are shortening, and that they should conserve," the beekeeper said. "They become less active, and a colony might eat 50 to 60 pounds of its own honey to make it through the winter. They are sort of like a cold-blooded animal---they will huddle together for survival." The job of the beekeeper during the winter months is to make sure that the bees don't run out of food, Van Haren indicated, and a periodic check of the hives is necessary.

The single queen bee is the most important bee in any particular colony, Van Haren says. "You've got to watch the queen to make sure she isn't losing her fertility. If she is, then she needs to be replaced." The quality and quantity of an entire colony depends on the queen, Van Haren says.

Why isn't there more than one queen in a colony? "Only one queen is tolerated in each colony," Van Haren pointed out. "If a second one comes in, the two queens will fight until one

The bees in a colony have a most unusual way of communicating with each other. The communication method is called the "wag-tail dance," and the bees use it to point out sources of honey to their companions. Some bees leave the hive to search for pollen, but most of them already know where they're going when they leave the hive, Van Haren

Unlike other forms of agriculture, beekeeping isn't particularly dependent upon the weather for a good year. "The beekeeping year has nothing to do with an agricultural year, "When the Van Haren said. farmers had a disastrous year last year because of the drought, we did well. The pollen is still needed for honey on top of the other two. The number of boxes may vary, though, with a large group of bees needing as many as seven boxes for chamber. a brood

An average colony produces petween six and 10 pounds of honey a day during the "heavy honey flow" period. Over an entire season, a colony's produc-tion will vary from 30 to 150 pounds, depending on the number of bees. With the 350 colonies owned by Ban Haren and in a year.

Kanter, that means a lot of honey

Most of the honey on the farm is put into 700 pound drums, and the drums are then shipped to Madison and Chicago. Van Haren says there is tremendous market for honey, since in the United States, an average of one pound of honey is consumed by each person per year. Van Haren and Kanter got started in the business when they moved to the country, and a friend sold them 35 colonies of bees for a hobby. "After the first year, we had about 5000 pounds of honey, and all of a sudden we were in business," Van Haren said. "You just don't go through that much honey by yourself."

Van Haren finds the work enjoyable as well as profitable. "It's good to have bees around on a farm, too," he added: "Most garden vegetables need pollination, and bees are the most effective pollinators.

The honey shipped off of the farm is labeled "Mr. Chew's" before it hits the store shelf. Some of the honey is sold directly to consumers from the farm.

Van Haren, 26, picked up the beekeeping trade through a course at the University of Wisconsin, and from other beekeepers in the area. He then passed the knowledge onto his 27 year-old partner.

Plans for the future call for approximately 150 more colonies to be spread out on farms throughout the area.

Although the work is enjoyable, it can often be painful as well, as this reporter found out during a picture-taking session. Van Haren wears very little protective clothing, however, because he said he would "rather get stung 20 times that collapse from the heat." He explained that bees don't generally sting unless they are aggravated in their hives. "It's more or less the same thing as someone breaking into your home," Van Haren said, "and not too many people Van Haren would stand around and watch someone do that."

Adamsville Always Unique, and Christmas Offered Pleasantness

by Jeanie Lewis

Remembering how Adamsville use to be is a pleasant reflection for Max Theobald, who lives there; Della Loui, rural Dodgeville, and Myrtle Jacobsen, Racine. For anyone listening, the stories are so vivid you can almost see them as children, and as they grow to adulthood. Christmas time was extra special, but at any time there was no place quite like Adamsville. Following is a letter from Myrtle Jacobsen.

I was a heavy-hearted motherless little third grader when I began going to the Adamsville Country School in 1913. The three Christmases I spent there left memories I really cherish.

Christmas at Adamsville was different. The school house itself was very small, but the Adamsville church stood on the same lot, only a few yards away. The church had more room, and it also had a platform in the front of the room, so those who gave their songs and recitations could be seen as well as heard. All the Christmas programs were held in the church, and this added much to the event. It would have been unthinkable to hold our wonderful Christmas programs anywhere else.

Ruby Theobald was our teacher and all of us who knew her regret that she is no longer with us. Ruby was very much interested in music, singing, and in everything that she considered good for her pupils. She didn't get up on a soapbox to expound on her theories and principles, she simply lived her life in such a way as to be a living example for those she came in contact with. "Kindness" should have been her middle name.

Ruby played the organ well. Luckily for her pupils, there was an organ in the school house and another in the church. The Christmas programs were practiced in the school house until they were ready for the final rehearsals in the church. She always sent away for new and soul stirring Christmas songs and hymns that were sure to entrance both young and old listeners.

I loved to sing, and I didn't get "stage fright", so Ruby allowed me to sing solos and also in the groups.

Another new girl, Hjordis Olson, who was about my age, entered our school. She had a throaty sort of voice that was distinctively different, and definitely an asset to our group.

One of my favorite solos was "cradled in a bed of hay, once a darling baby lay", that ended with "Bethlehem's Babe shall be crowned our Loving King! Through Him, the Lord of Lords, the world shall live again." (I still love to sing it every Christmas!)

Many of the lovely old Christmas hymns that we still love so much were included in those Christmas programs.

When we finally began our daily march to the church for those long awaited final rehearsals we all began to experience a strange excitement. The feeling became more intense every day. I couldn't explain it then, and I can't explain it now. There seemed to be an aura of holiness in the very air we breathed. It was everywhere.

This unexplainable aura must have permeated the whole Adamsville neighborhood, because the whole church was filled to overflowing for our Christmas programs. Even before you went inside you could smell the fragrant tree with its lighted wax candles. Some of the young men even sat on the window sills. There was something so extra special that we seemed to float instead of walk!

I remember Max and Kenneth McKenzie sharing a window sill near the front, on the right side, across from the tree. Their cheeks were bright red from the biting cold outside. My eyes were drawn to Kenneth's brand new Scotch plaid mackinaw, which seemed especially fitting for a young Scotchman to wear. It was such a pretty coat.

Many of the older men wore the popular black Galloway coats with shawl collars that would be drawn up over their heads. Instead of buttons these coats had some black "things" shaped like small saw logs, and some black satinlike "frogs" hooked over them.

No one ever left an Adamsville program empty handed-there were gifts and candy for all! Such a whole-hearted spirit of loving and giving made the Christ-child so real we felt the love all around us. I can feel it yet.

us. I can feel it yet.
What a privilege to have been an acting member of such a cast!
Thank you, Adamsville!

Max noted that speaking a Christmas piece was an "awful thing for me to have to do. My throat got dry and I just couldn't get the words out."

Della recalls that it was always a religious affair and came to them "as natural as eating and drinking." She credits Adamsville with giving her a special love for Christmas.

Adamsville was once a thriving town, with a large grist mill that boasted of having the best flour manufactured there. There was a hotel, a post office, a general store, a school and a church all built in the 1800's. According to Max if it hadn't been for Adamsville there never would have been a Hollandale. When the railroad came through--all the people moved to be nearer the railroad.

Max recently had a sign erected that shows where Adamsville is--and he does what he can to make people aware of its existence. CB's are popular fad in 1976, but Max has had a home base unit for years, and enjoys talking to people on it.

Christmas time brings back memories of yesterday in Adamsville. Next week watch for a continuation of the story of

WAILING AND MOANING

Funerals, "something that haunted you to death!" exclaims Max. The sermon, an hour long told only of the deceased, which got the mourners to moan and grown with sorrow. Songs, ' most touching ever heard," produced more lamenting. Max notes, "I didn't want to go to a funeral, but I had to anyway."

He recalls the funeral for the little Robinson children who had died from eating poison berries. The old undertaker in Hollandale didn't keep supplies on hand, so he got a double casket from Freeport. The casket didn't arrive when it was supposed to the next day, and didn't come until 3 o'clock the next day, the

Big Event in Adamsville

All ghost towns aren't out

By RAY BARTH

Capital Times Correspondent

Men who made honest mistakes and men who were crooks from the beginning are the resident wraiths of "Ghost Towns of Wisconsin," a new book by Waukesha County candymaker and author William Stark.

There was a third breed — those whom history (or the railroad) simply bypassed. Their stories as told by Stark are entertaining and possibly even instructive to latter-day town developers.

Belmont, the first capital of Wisconsin Territory in 1836, owed its existence to the influence of the first governor, Henry Dodge, who lived 20 miles away at Dodgeville.

Dodge was the lead miners' hero of the 1832 Black Hawk War. He wasn't adamant about Belmont remaining the capital, and that opened the way for Judge Charles Dunn to buy the site of Madison for $1,500 and parcel out shares in his venture to the 36 legislators for their votes.

That was only one of the sharp deals that ruined many a promising town, according to Stark.

"If ever skullduggery created a ghost town, it occurred just before the Civil War at Newport," he wrote. The town founders, honest men, were tricked by a mayor of Milwaukee, Byron Kilbourn, whose maneuvers finished Newport and raised Kilbourn City (now Wisconsin Dells).

But Kilbourn overdid it. His railroad company bribed the entire state legislature, the governor and a Supreme Court justice to obtain land grants. "This scandal ruined both Kilbourn's and Gov. Coles Bashford's public lives," Stark wrote.

Oil City was another swindle that was found out, though the place still claims a population of 15 in Monroe County. The swindler buried a barrel of oil and then proceeded to discover it and sell stock.

Helena was twice a ghost town. In 1832, the people fled in the general alarm of the Black Hawk War, and the U.S. Army dismantled their log houses to construct rafts for crossing the Wisconsin River in hot pursuit.

The town was rebuilt and lasted another 25 years, making lead shot by dropping molten lead down a tower. The site of Helena is now Tower Hill State Park near Spring Green.

In another ghost town, Voree, a man was crowned King. King James, after a reign of six years, was slain by assassins in 1856. His gravestone at Burlington is inscribed simply, James J. Strang 1813-1856.

Still another assassin, Charles Julius Guiteau, spent part of his boyhood in Ulao, a Lake Michigan town founded by his uncle. Guiteau was "the disappointed office seeker" who shot and mortally wounded President James A. Garfield in 1881.

Ulao had all but vanished 15 years before. Its existence depended upon supplying cordwood to lake steamers. The town, 15 miles north of Milwaukee, couldn't survive the depletion of the timber.

Sinipee, on the Mississippi River four miles north of the state line, scarcely lasted eight years, but long enough for the future 12th president, Zachary Taylor, and the only president of the Confederacy, Jefferson Davis, to dine and gamble there. Mosquito-borne malarial fever drove out residents in 1839 and finished Sinipee.

Dover in Dane County had trouble because its landlords lived in Liverpool and had to collect rent transoceanically. The tenants refused to pay, and in 1849 the British Temperance Emigration Society was dissolved. Dover began to die when the railroad bypassed it for Mazomanie in 1856.

Pleasant Ridge was not so much a town as a farming community of blacks, some of them freed slaves and others runaway slaves. The last of their descendants still owning property in Grant County died in 1961.

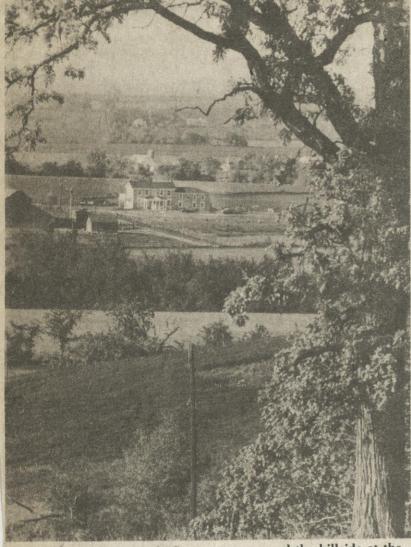

Stark's 200-page hardbound book also tells the stories of Dunnville, Seeleyburg, La Rue, Pokerville, Turtleville, Gratiot's Grove and Rock Island.

The product of five years' research by Stark, "Ghost Towns of Wisconsin" was printed by Zimmerman Press, Sheboygan.

Guess who came to Sauk City dinner?

By TIMOTHY HARPER

SAUK CITY (AP) — It was just a rainy, quiet Sunday at Maplewood Nursing Home on Sycamore Street. Then that darned elephant came for lunch.

The six-ton intruder named Barbara, who created a sensation in Fond du Lac in Aug. 8 when she similarly ran loose for several hours, bolted Sunday as she and other elephants helped raise the main tent for the Carson & Barnes Circus for a one-night stand at this central Wisconsin community.

Hardly impeded by the chain shackles on her forelegs, she outdistanced dozens of pursing spectators who had been watching the tent raising.

Barbara, who at 38 is late middle-aged for an elephant, roamed four miles to Maplewood, a nursing home for 91 residents, most of them 75 or older.

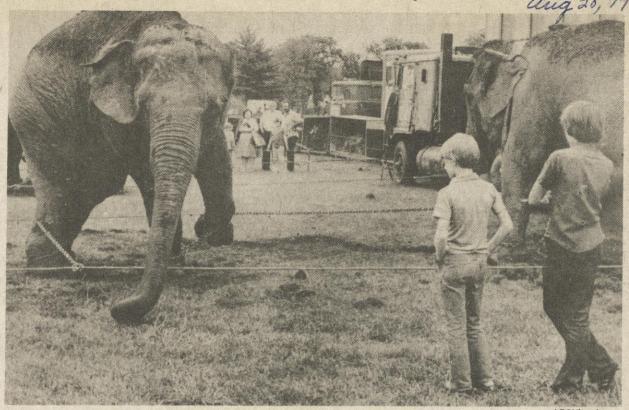

Frightened by the trailing crowd, she crashed through a four-foot-high plate glass window and the surrounding wall into an elderly woman's room.

Luckily, the woman wasn't in the room, nurse Marjorie Krause said. "She's usually right in front of that window, but it was lunchtime so the rooms and the halls were empty."

Barbara, about 10 feet tall, then smashed through a door into a hallway, ripping acoustic tiles and light fixtures from the ninefoot ceiling.

"She just blasted through that door," Mrs. Krause said. "She went through several doors and now the door frames and arches are bent out of shape. It's unbelievable to see the damage."

The elephant raced down a hall past nurses who were so astonished they "couldn't say anything," Mrs. Krause said.

Barbara, a multi-ton elephant employed by the Carson and Barnes Five Ring Circus, was back in captivity Sunday after taking an unscheduled tour through a local nursing home.

There were no injuries reported during the pachyderm's 11/2 stroll through town, although extensive property damage caused to the Maplewood Nursing Home.

Tillie Nolden, 71, was having lunch in her bed when she saw Barbara breeze by.

"I thought I was surely going mad," she said. "Did I really see an elephant?"

Barbara at last burst through a hall door to the outside and paused in a nearby field, leaving behind what Mrs. Krause said was "at least" several thousand dollars damage.

Sauk City policeman Roger Moon said authorities caught up with Barbara in the field of 10foot corn stalks as she was beginning to calm down, and coaxed her into a truck with the help of one of the circus' 30 other eleph-

In Fond du Lac three weeks ago, Barbara had fled during a tent raising when a car backfired. Dragging her harness, she roamed backyards and grain fields for about six hours, chewing on corn before being recaptured - with considerably less damage in her wake.

Circus trainers said Barbara was not injured during Sunday's outing, and that she would hereafter be chained more securely.

"Everyone was chasing her. It made it worse," circus manager D.R. Miller said.

"Nothing much ever happens around here," Mrs. Krause said, "but this was real excitement."

Wild Electrical Storm Brings Damage With Needed Rain

much relief.

The near six inches of rain over Saturday and Sunday was much needed, though some say not all at once and not so noisy. According to extension agents, we received one fifth of our total yearly average of moisture in just 48 hours, causing local flooding of streams and in some cases, basements.

Monday morning power went out local flooding of streams and in some cases, basements.

Monday morning power went out at the high school in Dodgeville after five feet of water seeped into a transformer pit during the night. The Power and Light Company and Lindgren Electric worked together Monday to try to determine the source of trouble. It was finally traced to a short in the high voltage underground cable coming from the pole in the parking lot to the transformer vaults in the building. The short may have been caused by water or lightning, or a weakness in the cable, according to Wayne Sherman of the Power and Light Company. The building will probably have power restored by today or tomorrow, thus making for an entire work week without power. Administrative secretary, Mary Brown, says she'll be doing a lot of her annual reports in pencil and it's a busy week preparing for the school district's annual meeting.

Dodgeville was only without power for three minutes Sunday night, but there were numerous reports of individual power outages over the weekend and Monday, due to fuses out.

Winds were especially high and damaging in the Barneveld area Friday night. A corn crib was wedged between two trees on the Harold Zander farm and a newly erected addition to an old barn just completed the same evening was instantly, "tin all over." A small cemetery is one of the few landmarks left of Gorstville.

No white cliffs at this Dover, but Dover is where it all began. Or rather, in 1842 at Samuel Roberts' Temperance Coffee-House in Liverpool, England, with Robert Gorst, Charles Wilson, Charles Reeves, and the British Temperance Emigration Society.

The society purchased 6,000 acres of land from the U.S. government at $1.25 an acre, surveyed it into 80 acre plots, built houses, planted gardens and wheat. For a $25 down payment, the society filled the plots with 700 settlers. They were the people of "Gorstville," the forefathers and mothers of present day residents of Mazomanie, Berry and Black Earth.

In 1844, 184 came from Yorkshire; from Lancashire, 135; Derbyshire sent 39; Worcestershire, 23; Lincolnshire, 17; Wales, 15; 12 from Berkshire; 45 from Leicestershire; seven came from Scotland; five from Shropshire; four journeyed from London; two from Nottinghamshire; Chesire's two; five from Kent; and one from the Isle of Man.

Today, the settlers of Dover have long scattered. No hotel, post office, cooper's, blacksmith's, shoemaker's, wagon shops or stores remain. "When the railroad chose Mazo for a depot site and made no stop in Dover," said the historical marker, "Doverites moved their homes into Mazo and Dover faded away to become a ghost town..."

Two huge oak trees, some milk-weed, and bushes and flowers in a small semi-neglected cemetery — that's all folks.

Every farmer knows that cows milk better when music is being played. Mrs. John Christen of rural Barneveld said that her husband always insisted that this was true. She has a forty year old accordian, and one evening after not playing the instrument for several years - she got it out to play. Mrs. Christen said, "I took it outside, and began to play. The cows on the hillsides came a-running, stopping by the fence. They stood there, as if to listen while I was playing. I enjoyed it, and I think they did too."

Mrs. Christen is delighted with nature, plants in particular. She notes, "I planted morning glorys called Heavenly Blue, and somehow not only do I have the blue ones, but also some reddish ones as well. They really have

Hauge log church is 125 years old

In 1852, Norse pioneers completed a log church on a hillside in western Dane County near what is now Daleyville. The Hauge log church was the first Norwegian Lutheran Church west of Madison. On Sunday at 2 p.m., a program will be held to mark the 125th anniversary of the church.

The interior of the 20 by 20 church with its original pews and communion rail is shown above. The church also has a tiny altar and balcony. At left, shown outside the church, covered with white siding in 1927, are three members of the church's Preservation Sociey, from left, Bennie Grunwald, Orville Rundhaug and Lawrence Anderson. Hilton Arneson is president.

The church was used until 1887 when a new one was constructed. The Preservation Society was formed in 1926. Members restored the interior of the church after it was vandalized in January of 1976.

The anniversary program will be held on the church grounds at 2 p.m. Sunday with a coffee hour to follow. Hauge log church is located two miles north of Daleyville on Dane County Trunk Z just off Highway 78. The program will beheld at Perry Lutheran Church in Daleyville in case of rain. Utopian towns topic of UW class

By Deborah Wiese Written for The State Journal

Utopian communities in America go back as far as the 1600s, but their real "heyday" was in the period from about 1825-1860, says Prof. Margaret Bogue, chairman of the University of Wisconsin-Extension (UWEX) history department.

During this time over 90 communal settlements were begun in the U.S., including four which will be studied in a UWEX course entitled "Heavens on Earth: The Community Tradition in Midamerica."

The religious communities to be covered in the course beginning Thursday are the various Shaker communities; the Mormon Community at Nauvoo, Ill.; Amama, the Community of True Inspiration; the Hutterites; and the Bishop Hill Experiment.

These pre-Civil War movements were part of a very optimistic period in American history, according to Prof. Bogue.

"The anti-slavery movement, prison reform, prohibition and women's rights were all major reform activities of the mid-1800s. People generally held the view that society could be perfected and the utopians believed their societies were models for all to emulate."

The Bishop Hill Experiment was the shortest-lived of the five communities, but it is one of the best preserved. It will be the subject of a UWEX tour May 6-7. The now non-communal village near Galesburg, Ill., still contains examples of the colony's striking architecture—the church, the school, the hotel, the clock tower and some of the dormitories of the original settlement.

The buildings suggest a simple and highly structured life, centered around a fundamentalist view of the Bible.

The founder and spiritual leader of the community was Erik Jansson, a Swedish native who believed he was chosen by God to lead people in his Lutheran church away from the "false teachings" of Luther to a solely biblical faith.

Jansson managed to attract nearly 1,000 followers to America in 1846 to establish the Bishop Hill Community. A large number of settlers died in the first hard winter, but the rest stuck it out and gained a fair amount of prosperity during the next six or seven years.

Although the community had a primarily agricultural economic base, it also recognized a need for "worldly goods," so thriving industries in broommaking, linens, carriage-making and hide-tanning developed to enable the community to make money and trade with the outside world.

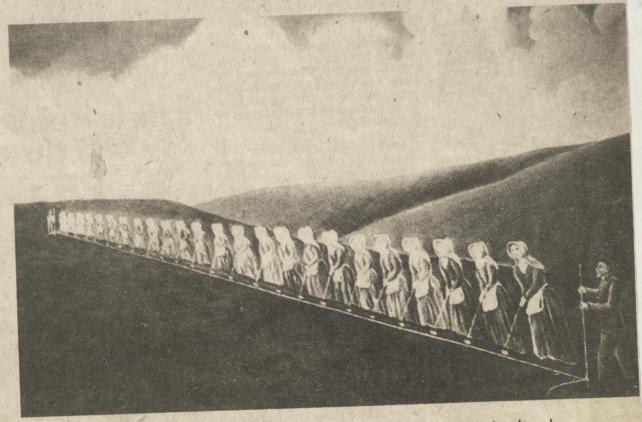

The community members led a regimented life and held their goods in common. They lived in what might be compared to dormitories — each family had bedrooms and living rooms while sharing one big kitchen and dining hall. Men and women ate at separate tables.

The strictness of the colony caused many settlers to leave — and led to the death of Erik Jansson. A former member shot him after he repeatedly forced the man's wife to remain in the colony, as required by the marriage contract. After Jansson's death the colony became somewhat more democratic and wealthier.

The colony finally dissolved in 1879. Information on the course and the tour is available from UWEX Madison Registration Office, 101 Extension Bldg., 432 N. Lake St.

Farmers Not Getting Rich With New Price Support Figures

Where are the dairy farmers
during this June dairy month

To find out we visited with Glen and Betsy Thronson over at Blue Mounds.

If you hear someone use that archaic expression "rich farmer" they sure aren't talking about a dairy farmer, nor have they ever heard of today's cost-price squeeze. That's why the dairy farmers were upset when the same day that the new support price for milk was announced the news media blared to the world that it was going to mean an increase to the consumer of 6 to 8 cents a gallon.

"The new government support price only guarantees us $9/cwt and all we're interested in is stablizing the price of milk so we stablizing the price of milk so we can at least meet the cost of production," explained Glen.
"Even at $9.00 our share is not more than 19-20 cents a quart, and Bjorkland in the State Journal said that the new support price only means a 3/4 cent gain for the dairy farmer."

The Thronsons know that the family farm is the most efficient production unit for milk

"And 1000 more dairy farmers quit again last year. What will happen to the price and the quality of milk if more quit and big commercial farms take over?" asks Betsy.

There are 3,000 AMPI Women statewide and they consider their main job one of public relations. consider their main job one of public relations, explaining to consumers how things really are. "We're only milking 38 cows now but that's because of the drought last year. There just drought last year. There just wasn't enough hay or grain to handle our capacity of 55. But if anybody thinks we're getting rich they should come and see Betsy and I struggling with the family accounts just to make ends meet. After all, the farmer only gets 47c or less than half of the food dollar, and the last tractor that I bought for $7,000, with the same parts, now sells with the same parts, now sells for $14,500," concluded Glen Thronson.

Barneveld (

Converting a church into a home can try a person's soul, say Jim and Wanda Owens, Barneveld, Wis., who completed their unusual home about a year-and-a-

In 1972, Jim Owens decided to guit farming and move the family out of their rented farmhouse. "We were looking for omething we could afford. . . . One day Jim calls me from work and he says, 'Guess what, Dear, I bought a church,' " Wanda Owens remembers.

Within two weeks the Owens had moved into the church basement and begun to plan remodeling. "We spent four years in the basement. . . . It was terrible. Have you ever tried raising four kids with no walls?" she says.

The basement had a kitchen and bathrooms, but there were no other room partitions, so the Owens had to improvise with temporary walls and do with a lot less privacy.

The Owens bought their church from a Lutheran congregation that had built a new church. Coincidentally, a Methodist church in nearby Cobb, Wis., also went up for sale and Jim Owens bought it too, to use for finishing lumber.

"We needed that long-length lumer. . . . We knew we needed 30-footong 2x10s (for floor joists and other parts) and long-length lumber is terribly expensive," he says.

After designing a floor plan, the Owens set about to build their dream home. "We completely stripped the inside of this building," Jim Owens says.

They put in 6-inch insulation and new walls. Since the former congregation had taken all the stained glass windows with, the Owens closed up all the old window holes and put in new windows.

Similarly, they closed off the old double door entrance at the end of the church and put the main entry on the side. Wanda Owens notes that that change was one of the few that sparked controversy among some of the congregation members - some thought it was a shame to not use those doors in

The family room is where the church's entry and pastor's study had been. Next is a large kitchen, with a formal dining room between the kitchen and living room. The living room is at the end of the building where the altar had been.

The altar end of the building is open clear to the roof, so the Owens have a 14-foot Christmas tree every year. An open stairway in the living room goes up to the bedrooms.

The original balcony, now the master bedroom was extended to fit in three more bedrooms. A second stairway leads from the master bedroom down to the basement apart in order to make the heat and plumbing runs; that's when it really got hairy living down there," Wanda Owens says.

Since the Owens keep their house cool, usually about 62 degrees, they have electrical heaters in the bathrooms for comfort getting dressed, and a Franklin stove in the family room. The Owens are member-patrons of Quad County Cooperative, Barneveld.

Now that it's finished, the Owens are pleased with their home and say it's well worth all the work and inconvenience it meant. "Our contractor told us he couldn't rebuild it for twice what we put into it," Wanda Owens says.

Best of all, she says it's plenty big for their four growing children. In fact, it's so big (5,200 square feet, including the basement), that they intend to finish off the basement to rent as an apartment.

THE CHURCH'S ALTAR RAIL was redone to serve as a stairway banister leading from the living room to the upstairs bedrooms. The living room is open clear to the roof in the Owen's home, allowing them to have a huge tree at Christmas time.

Harold Zanders stands on a cement platform where his corn crib was just a short time ago. Shown also, is the old barn that withstood the winds that destroyed a new addition erected just the night before the storm. He said, "I was real disgusted at first, but am glad it wasn't worse, and I am resigned to the fact that I will have to rebuild."

This shed on the Harold Zanders farm in the Barneveld area triggered a chain reaction that demolished a new addition to an old barn. It also destroyed a corn crib that was found wedged between two trees. Several other buildings had slight damage.

The Hi-Point Steak House was destroyed early Friday morning when fire swept through the building. Officials said the fire was probably used by a faulty space heater in the entry way to the bar area. [More photos in Section 2, page 7].

Hi-Point Demolished by Fire 1945

The Hi-Point Steak House near Ridgeway burned to the ground early Friday morning despite the efforts of three local fire departments to extinguish the blaze.

The Ridgeway Fire Department was the first notified of the fire, at approximately 12:30 a.m. and the Barneveld and Dodgeville Fire Departments arrived on the scene minutes later. The fire was reported by a passing motorist, Don Engling, Platteville.

The bartender at Hi-Point that evening, William O'Connell, said he closed early and left the steak house about 11:45 p.m. Later, Iowa County Sheriff Department Deputy Nick Basting pulled into the driveway of the Steak House at about 12:00 midnight, but said he did not see or smell smoke or fire.

The fire started in the entry way to the bar area, and according to officials, it probably started from a heater which was used to warm the entry way during extremely cold weather.

Basting said that when he arrived at the scene later, several people were trying to enter the building through the front and side doors. He said he ordered them away since entry could not possibly be made, even by a fireman. They said they thought Leif Erickson, part-owner of the building, was still inside because music could be heard from inside and lights were on. Basting told them that he had checked the building many time when the lights had been left on, and that there was probably no one inside.

There was virtually nothing that the three fire departments could do to save the building, and it was a total loss.

Leif Erickson said he had the building insured, but he did not have enough insurance to rebuild the facility as it was. He said he was still unsure as to whether or not the supper club would be rebuilt.

Erickson said the building would cost approximately $130,000.00 to replace.

HOLIDAY GREETINGS TO ONE AND ALL

Christmas in Colorado with the Ashbaugh clan put the final fillip on 1976. Alison and Bryan and his family made that holiday one for the record books. Very little snow in the Rockies but Bennett, Brian, Pat and I, plus our "Denver connection" and friends, put Breckenridge on the map as we rang in 1977.

The no-snow scene killed our February ski week so we opted for sunshine and moved in on Corrin and Pitsie Hodgson who were vacationing in Palm Desert. I played golf for the first time in 22 years on one of the country's finest courses. Corrin "knew the man" so we drove down the Sea of Cortez to San Filipe for more fun and fellowship, aided and abetted by their kinfolk, the Gormallys.

In May, Brother George met us in Belize for some tarpon fishing. All did well with Bennett boating the prize winner. Fly rods and all. Provost Healy takes to that barefoot vacationing like a sand burr.

The end of June found us U-hauling Vic and Diane to Rochester, Minn. to begin a surgical fellowship at the Mayo Clinic. He enjoys his work and Diane and Craig find their lives much improved over that in downtown Chicago. "Su nieto" will learn fast in that environment! We joked about moving BACK to Rochester many items which we moved out in 1955 when she was five. Time flies when you're having fun!

We spent eight carefree August days sailing with our friends, the Pittses, aboard their fine Fuji. We cruised the coasts of northern Lake Michigan, putting into interesting little harbors at night or anchoring in Manitou Island's friendly lee. Plenty of time to plan our Costa Rican caper for October! We four toured that mountainous republic in a four-wheel drive Toyota, feasting our eyes upon peerless vistas, tall peaks, volcanoes, seashores, monkeys, banana and coffee plantations---truly mind-boggling.

Thanksgiving found us around our laden table once more bringing together Ann and Bud Nelson (and a visit from Eric and Merle), Lene Sullivan (Ann's mother), nephews Tom Johnson and Roger Healy, who is just back from Alaska, Bennett and Brian. Grandmother pronounced the blessing as we gave thanks for her on the occasion of her 86th birthday this day. She will again be with George and Dorothy in Williamsburg for the holidays. Thanks, too, for Pat's Uncle Harry whom we helped celebrate his 75th in Detroit in June Working half-time at the UW Health Service allows for time to enjoy cabin and farm, and plan for our next adventure. Bennett labors away at the Madison campus while Brian holds forth at UW-EauClaire. Pat's activities include a little teaching at the YMCA, Madison Civics Club, and a certificate in the teaching of illiterate adults. We four will share Christmas with Diane, Vic and Craig. Then it's westward ho! for a skiing reunion with Alison Bryan, and Care but it won't be the same with out Ash. The year will end as it began--in Breckenridge---so Think Snow!

Barneveld Students Favor Ford, "10 Udall on Traveling Voting Machine

Dr. Paul Fotsch, CESA Education Specialist, explains procedure on a voting machine to a high school class and teacher Patti Gibeault, just right of the machine.

Area students are getting a chance to try out an unfamiliar piece of machinery during this, a presidential election year.

A voting machine has been introduced to a number of public schools in the southwestern Wisconsin area, and will make an appearance at nearly every school in the area before the elections in November.

The idea is to give students and adult staff members an opportunity to express their preferences for president and their opinions on other current subjects. It also is a way of acquainting students with mechanical voting procedures, which at present, are only used in cities of more than 10,000 population.

The machine is being moved from school to school by Dr. Paul Fotsch, educational specialist at Cooperative Educational Service Agency (CESA) 14 in Fennimore. He explains how the machine works to the students, who for the most part, have never seen one.

"The closest machines in this area would be in Madison," Fotsch explained last week while showing the machine to students in Barneveld. "They have 203 of them there.

Fotsch said the machine is ideal in familiarizing students with the mechanical voting procedures. "Following graduation from high school, many of these young people will be going to larger cities, where voting machines are used exclusively. And when they get there, if they haven't come in contact with the machines before, they will often be afraid to show their ignorance in running the machine, so they won't vote at all. This also gives students a chance to express their views on the social issues of the day."

The machine was bought by CESA when Prairie du Chien Campion closed down a couple of years back. "It was kind of like a white elephant in this area," Fotsch recalled. "But CESA saw the use for it and picked it up."

In Barneveld, students voted for presidential candidates, expressed their political affiliation, and voted yes or no for 15 current issues.

At every school that Fotsch had been at before, the students had given Jimmy Carter the edge in the Democratic race. But at Barneveld, Morris Udall was a winner by a substantial margin, with 52 percent of the vote, to 38 percent for Carter. Other percentages were five percent for Henry Jackson, three percent for George Wallace, and one percent for both Birch Bayh and Frank Church.

On the Republican side, Fotsch said that it is now apparent that President Gerald Ford is "starting to pull away". In a number of the schools, the vote between Ford and challenger Ronald Reagan was even. In Wauzeka, for example, both got 50 percent of the vote, and in Hazel Green, it was 51-49 in favor of Ford.

In Barneveld, Ford took a resounding 75 to 25 percent victory victory.

An interesting experiment gave the students an opportunity to select a party affiliation. A total of 54 percent said they were Independents, while 36 percent claimed to be Democrats and the remaining 10 percent said they were Republicans. Fotsch said the has found it common at the schools for the students to consider themselves Independent.

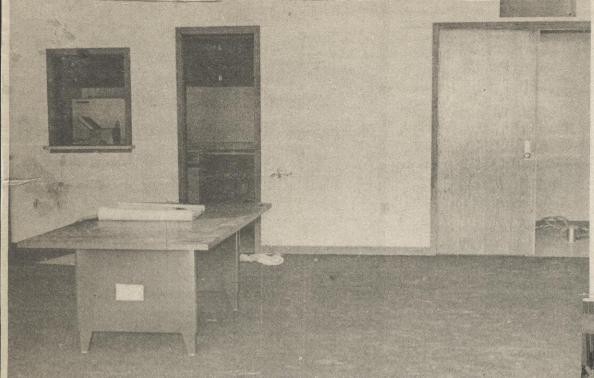

Approximately 190 junior high and high school students and their teachers voted in Barneveld, and expressed their opinions on issues ranging from granting amnesty to draft evaders to making Hwy. 18 & 151 an expressway. Students and teachers voted in favor of approving the equal rights amendment, decriminalizing marijuana, banning throw-away bottles, having gun control legislation, repealing the 55 mile per hour speed limit, having a spring break at the school next year, and of making Hwy. 18 & 151 an expressway. Issues voted down included granting amnesty to all past draft evaders, passing a law banning abortions, having no fault divorce, giving public employees the right to strike, having compensation for crime victims, making detention a part of the school's program, and having an eight-period school day

Barneveld has nice, new municipal building to show

Barneveld fire chief Buddy Evans (left) explains a section of the new fire hall to visitors at the facility's open house Saturday, December 3. The $350,000 building is a combination village hall and town of Brigham hall that will be used for storage of the fire trucks and ambulance as well.

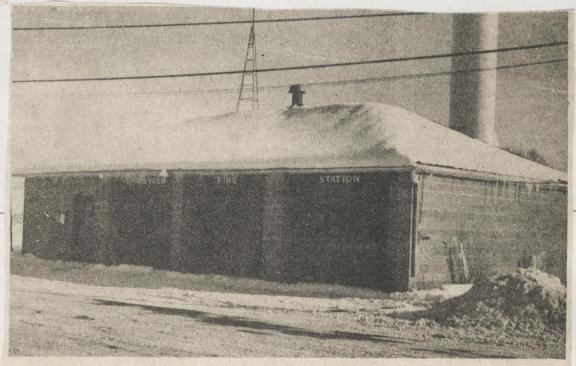

The newly purchased Barneveld Area Ambulance has already moved into the fire station to take advantage of the heated area. The electrical work is being completed this week in the six-door station.

Barneveld, Brigham showing new $350,000 building to public Saturday

Barneveld Village President Steve Eveland proudly shows off the new building that will be the home of the Barneveld Fire Department, the rescue squad vehicle, the Village of Barneveld and the Town of Brigham. An open house will be held at the new facility this Saturday, December 3, beginning at 1:00 p.m. Coffee and doughnuts will be served. A dance will be held that evening beginning at 9:00, and the public is invited. The 32,000 square foot building is being mostly paid for by the federal government. The government agreed to pay for the entire structure at a cost of $333,000, but later 3,000 more square feet were added on, which will cost the village and township an additional $17,000. The 2.7 acres of land on which the building is located were purchased at a cost of $9,000 from the Arneson Agricultural Credit Corporation by the township and village. The $333,000 paid by the government includes all of the furniture and equipment in the elaborately furnished building. The new facility was needed because of the size of the present facility (see photo inside).

The village hall will provide separate offices for both the Bar-neveld and Town of Brigham governments.

This is the reason the Barneveld Fire Department needed a new home. The old fire station next to the water tower had room for just three vehicles, and on the east side of the building, a tiny office space was used for a village hall. The garage section will now be used for storage of utility trucks and the village snow plow, while the office area will be used for a laboratory for the village sewage plant.

ELLIS ARNESON AWARD:

Pat Lease, son of Mr and Mrs Ray Lease, Barneveld, was awarded the Ellis-Arneson-Award for being selected as the outstanding Senior Athlete for the 1976-77 school year. The Award is given for participation and dedication in athletics.

Also, selection is based on leadership, scholarship and overall school citizenship. This award was presented to 'Pat at the recent school awards program on May 31st by Athletic Director Ken Miller. Congratulations Pat, as you are a most deserving recipient.

Traditions are "wonder times" meant to do over and over because it is something special. The Jim and Wanda Owen family, Barneveld, find going to get the tree, decorating it, as a family, is one tradition that gives them a feeling of pleasure.

Mrs. Owen said, "Sometimes it is hard to fit in a time when we can go as a family to get the tree, but we make time, its important to us. It just wouldn't be Christmas without going after the tree, bringing it home and decorating it."

And what a tree it is — almost 14 feet tall, with hundreds of bulbs and tree ornaments. The top had to be cut off because "the angel was hitting her head on the ceiling." The Owen family live in what use to be the old Barneveld Lutheran Church. In front of the tree are Jim, Bret, Tadd, Faye, Dawn and Wanda Owen.

Sept. 1977

A barn, milk house, silo and a herd of cattle burned in a Friday morning blaze on the Pat McGraw farm south of Barneveld and Ridgeway. The barn and its contents were completely destroyed in the fire, which was discovered by Art Phillips, a neighbor, at approximately 5:20 a.m. Phillips was on the way to the barn to milk his cows when he saw the smoke on the nearby farm. Lost in the barn were 25 head of dairy cattle, and one bull. McGraw said that he didn't think that it was combustion that started the blaze, but it might have been faculty wiring that leveled the 20-year-old structure. McGraw was unsure about his plans for rebuilding.

Marijuana Valued at $105,000 Recovered in Swamp Near Arena

Thirty-one bags of marijuana with a street value of approximately $105,000 was found in a swampy area along the Wisconsin River near Arena last week, according to Iowa County authorities.

Mazomanie Police Chief Mueller phoned the Iowa County Sheriff's Office Oct. 24 to report a drug find on the John Sawle property north of Blynn Rd. Two men hunting on the property Sunday, Oct. 23 reported seeing a large number of garbage bags containing a green plant substance, and many tall plants "that are not familiar to the area." Upon receiving the information from the hunters, Mueller traveled to the scene with them and found 31 black garbage bags of marijuana, which were covered by a polyethylene covering.

Sheriff's Department officials tested the green plant substance, and the field tests produced positive results, indicating that the plant was marijuana. The bags were removed from the swamp by boat, and 18 of the bags were destroyed at the scene. The remainder of the marijuana was returned to the Sheriff's Office, where it was burned Oct. 27.

The average weight of the 31 bags was 14 pounds. According to officials, the average street price of marijuana is $15.00 per ounce, with the estimated value of all of the confiscated marijuana at $104,160.00 Officials consider this to be a "conservative estimate."

An investigation is still underway.

DNR Allows Sawle To Operate

Nostalgic Mill Creek Dam

After a fight with the DNR, Theodore Sawle, 72, Ridgeway, now operates this old grist mill on Mill Creek, Arena to show how grains were ground by waterpower in the 19th century. The DNR approved the operation of the mill last week.

Looking good once again

Not too long ago the Wyoming Valley United Methodist Church south of Spring Green was totally without its windows. Vandals broke out the expense stained glass. Now, however, the church has new windows and is services are being held as usual in the picturesque surroundings.

Theodore Sawle, 72, of Ridge-way in Iowa County has been fighting area landowners, the Department of Natural Resources and a state court for the right to operate an old grist mill on Mill Creek near Arena to show how grains were ground by waterpower in the 19th century.

This past week he was granted the right to do this by the D.N.R.
"It cost me $12,000 in lawyer fees but it was worth it," Sawle said. Now people can make the trip every weekend to see the mill in operation. "It was too bad the fight had to go so long and so far," he said.

DNR Hearing Examiner Maurice Van Susteren commented on the approval. He said:

"Yes, Mr. Sawle, contrary to the cynical opinion and view held by some, the Department of Natural Resources does have a soul."

In an age of nostalgia, Van Susteren said, "The old grist mill ranks with the corner church and the little red schoolhause as one OCT. 13, 1977

Mill Creek winds out of Governor Dodge State Park and travels 25 miles before meeting the Wisconsin River. The creek drains roughly 47 square miles of watershed.

William Hyde built a mill and dam on the stream sometime around 1875. The original mill burned and was rebuilt.

Sawle's family acquired the structure in 1932. They used its 30 horsepower output to grind feed until 1936, and later to make boxes for the federal government during World War II.

In 1949, the Public Service

Commission, which preceded the DNR in water regulation, ordered the log dam gates removed, and Sawle burned the dilapidat-ed mill. Then in the 1960's, he bought some parts, including a 4,000 pound grinding stone, built a waterwheel and authentically reconstructed the mill. He also operates a sawmill at Spring

When a neighbor complained in 1972 that the dam would flood cropland, the DNR ordered the dam gates removed, saying Sawle had lost the right to use the dam because he was no longer grinding grain for the longer grinding grain for the public.

A Dane County Circuit Court agreed in 1973, saying a tourist attraction did not qualify for the "privilege" of raising the water level upstream.

In issuing a new permit, however, Van Susteren said the pond would not overflow its bounds. He added that it has been state policy, through the been state policy, through the State Historical Society, to promote appreciation of Ameri-can history and culture.

Van Susteren also said removing the dam and mill could destroy an ecological balance in the creek. Silt from bottom of the pond would be carried downstream into trout habitat, for example. VanSusteren said the dam also provided a barrier against carp moving upstream out of the Wisconsin River.

Sawle still must provide the DNR with evidence that he is financially able to maintain the mill for 10 years. Plans for the dam gates must meet state requirements, and the permit limits the mill's use to educational and recreational purposes and recreational purposes only.

Van Susteren in describing of the importance of the grist mill in the importance of the grist mill in the 19th century, also said:

"Going to the mill was a daylong outing for the farmer and his family," "While men engaged in talk in the mill and had a nip of the miller's hard cider, the women engaged in woman talk on the banks of the mill pond. It was picnic time and a place for 'sparking' and 'wooing.' In the 'dog' days of August there was 'skinny dipping' in the swimming hole in the ping' in the swimming hole in the secluded upper reaches of the pond; when January's chill winds blew, crude homemade skates and sleds glided over the ice.'

Van Susteren concluded: "A crass materialist may consider Sawle a 'Man from La Mancha' with an impossible dream. We do not so view him."

Turnaround May Happen This Season For Barneveld Cagers

A strong finish in tournament competition in 1978 leaves the Barneveld basketball team optimistic as it heads into the 1978-79 season.

Coach Troy Parham's Golden Eagles peaked at the right time of the year last season, upending Pecatonica and Black Hawk in tournament play before bowing out to eventual sectional qualifier Mineral Point in Class C action. It was that finish plus the experience gained through the season that makes Parham a believer that this could be the year for a basketball contender at Barneveld.

"I feel that if we can play consistent offensively, we can play basketball with anybody in the conference," Parham said.
"As long as you've got a line-up of 6'2", 6'3", 6'1", 6'1", and 5'10" in this conference, you'll be all

Parham said that he came to Barneveld a year ago with "no idea of what to expect." He quickly implemented an exciting brand of basketball which called for everyone to play and get the needed experience, and this year yet we're not really a senior dominated team. If we can survive our first 12 games, of which eight are away, we'll do all

Heading the list of returnees this year are Pat Clerkin and Jeff Beckett, the tallest of the Golden Eagles at 6'3" and 6'2", respectively. Clerkin came on strong toward the end of la. season, and has picked up from where he left off in early practices. "Pat found out what he could do toward the end of last season, and he has gone from there and improved," Parham said. "He is a completely different ball player this season." The junior centerforward scored 168 points as a sophomore, and grabbed 174

Beckett was second in scoring among the returnees, with 112 points to go along with 73 rebounds. He appeared to be on the verge of breaking out of his shell last year to become a dominate force on the team, but the transition never took place. The Eagles hope that it will happen this year during his senior campaign.

Other letterwinners returning include seniors Mark DeSmet and Jeff Zander, both steady performers; and juniors Scott Carmody, Jeff Ranney, and Tim Sullivan, all guards who fit into Parham's style of play.

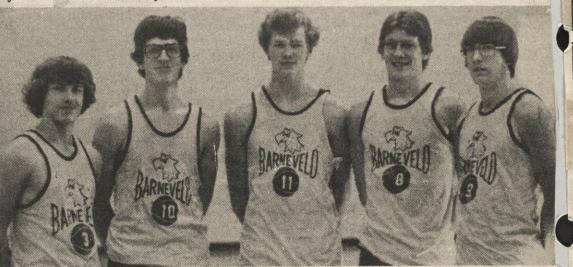

Parham figures that juniors Wes Friedli, Paul McSherry, Kermit Nyhus and senior Cal Williams will also be competing for a starting spot on the balanced Barneveld team. "I feel that what we lack in height, we should be able to compensate with in overall team speed and defense," Parham said. "With team depth and experience, we have the ingredients to challenge for the State Line League championship this season."

Eagles Hope To Improve Under New Coach

Despite having only two lettermen from a 1-18 team of a year ago, first year Barneveld coach Troy Parham has high hopes for his 1977-78 basketball squad.

"We'll be lacking in experience, but with a good nucleus of junior varsity players and a transfer student we have the potential to finish in the upper division of the State Line League," Parham said.

The two lettermen returning are sophomore Pat Clerkin and senior Todd Eveland, both who stand 6'2". The transfer student Parham referred to is Jeff Beckett, a former Monona Grove student who is an excellent outside shooter, according to his coach. He also measures 6'2".

Other front line players this season will be Scott Carmody, a 5'11" sophomore guard; Jeff Ranney, a 5'9" sophomore guard; Mark DeSmet, a 5'11" senior guard; and Jeff and Jerry Zander, with Jerry being the tallest and oldest as a 6'4" senior. Jeff is a 6'1" junior.

A mixture of good height and slick ball-handling guards should make Barneveld one of the leaders in the State Line League this season in girls basketball.

The Golden Eagle girls, under the direction of second year coach Catherine Luchsinger, have a solid nucleus to work around which includes five re-turning letterwinners. Last year's Barneveld team finished at 8-4 in the State Line League, good enough for third place behind Belleville's 12-0 squad. However, Mrs. Luchsinger feels that Monticello, which has an undefeated junior varsity team moving up from last year, and Argyle will be the teams for her squad to contend with.

New additions to the Golden Eagle varsity will be Rhonda Collins, Sandy and Sue Trainor, Joan Twiton, Betty Zemp, and Holly Burke. Miss Burke is a senior transfer student who could be a help in the rebounding department

'The girls seem to be more aggressive and confident this year," Mrs. Luchsinger noted. "It helps when you have everyone back from last year's team to get the team ready for this year.

Mrs. Luchsinger sees her team's biggest assets as height and experience. "We'll be tough on the boards, and Liz (Budd) and Patti (Dimpfl) are two good outside shooters with the ability to handle the ball," she said. "I'm looking for us to finish high in the conference standings

Gun Collection Makes History Interesting

A Barneveld teacher has found a way to make history interesting in the school classroom.

Tom Shinko, a sixth grade teacher in Barneveld for the past nine years, can hold the interest of any student -- regardless of age--with his lecture about and display of old guns. His collection includes guns from every era dating back to the Revolutionary "History is sometimes called a 'dead subject'," Shinko said, "because you're studying about something that happened in the past. Some people prefer studying only current things and subjects about the future. But this gun collection tends to put life into the period the students are studying, whether it is the Civil War or the Viet Nam War."

Grade and high school students are the ones that find his World War II collection most relevant, Shinko said. "When you're studying a period of time, and you can see something that was actually used then, it can seem that much more real. Many of the students now have fathers who might have been in the war, and when they see these nine or ten pound guns, they can imagine how much hell their dad must have gone through to cart that thing around for days at a time. It makes the subject much more interesting for the student.

Shinko began collecting guns and other war artifacts when he was about 10 years old. He "got from a man he was the bug staying with in Sauk City, and he has been interested in the hobby Almost everything that he has collected has come out of someone's attic, and he has purchased very few items from dealers. "The price that a dealer would ment to sell it to me. However, put on a gun would make it almost the County Board said no. I told prohibitive to buy it," Shinko said. "So I have just picked up leads here and there on where I any further than me, but as of might find a gun, and by following these leads up, I have quite often come up with something. talking to people in that area.

He said it is difficult to find he said. World War II items that are for sale. "After the war, the guns were brought back to the states by the ton," Shinko said. "But many of the soldiers needed money and they sold their guns. The guys who didn't need the money kept them around because they had meaning to them. And now when I go to buy one of these now when I go to buy one of these guns, most guys don't want to sell to get a gun. "I once worked six them, because you can't put a years to get a luger," he noted. price on sentiment.

Despite the difficulty in getting ahold of World War II firearms, Shinko has at least one of all the small arms that were carried by more. the United States Army in that war. One gun that is missing from his WW II collection is a machine gun he calls "The Thompson". He knows where there is one, but again, he is having trouble getting it.

Barneveld sixth grade teacher Tom Shinko speaks to a class about his collection of civil war guns, which is pictured in the rear.

"The Iowa County Sheriff's Department has a Thompson sub-machine gun that was picked up in the 1930's," Shinko said. "I went to an Iowa County Law Enforcement committee meeting and made them an offer, and the committee seemed to be in agreeany further than me, but as of right now, the answer is still no.

He said he would like to see the gun plugged so there would be no My father owns a golf driving danger of it ever being used range in Baraboo, and I have picked up a lot of information just talking to people in that area." value, so I'd like to see it done," Shinko pointed out that the Thompson has a "colorful history". He said it has been used in every war since the Prohibition Era, and extensively in Europe and Asia during WW II. However, he said they are obsolete now, and have been outdated since about 1950.

That was my first luger, and I really wanted it bad. After five years of bargaining, I finally got it." He has since acquired four

He has been able to buy one machine gun. He purchased a WW I machine gun from the Sauk County Sheriff's Department, and he remembered the red tape he had to go through at the time. had to have a mug-shot taken, and forms had to be filled out in triplicate," he said. That gun, like most of his collection, was plugged.

With each lecture he gives on guns, he stresses the safety aspect. "I still have a bullet in my back from a hunting accident," Shinko said, "and I tell all the students that once you pull the trigger of a gun, you can't get the bullet back. I know."

Shinko said he enjoys showing the guns to classes all over southwestern Wisconsin. He has talked in Schools at Dodgeville, Belmont, Platteville, Barneveld, and even to a class of graduate students at the University of Wisconsin - Platteville. The only problems he has with the numer-ous lectures are the worry of theft, and the work of carrying the guns in and out of schools, which often results in them getting scuffed and banged up. However, with his lectures he feels he is getting some use out of the summer, the guns are part of a display at the Villa Louis in Prairie du Chien.

The collection doesn't include just guns. He also has several swords, bayonettes, knives, sabres, medals, hand grenades, spiked helmets, and flags from several wars.

In referring back to his lectures Shinko, who was born & raised in of the volopes & see

Eastman near Prairie du Chien, said that some of his guns can be appreciated more than others. "You can look at some of these Civil War guns with the big firearms. "I suppose I could keep them all locked up in a closet somewhere, but I feel that that would be hoarding them," he said. "This way there are a lot of people who are learning from

He hasn't had any problem with theft at the schools yet, but it is always present in his mind, and he always stays in the room with the guns the day they are in school. He doesn't take any chances at home, either, as he has the guns locked up in a bank vault in Madison. During the bores, and it isn't hard to figure out why there were so many amputations during that war," Shinko said. "Such a big bore means a big bullet, and a big hole in a log or an arm." in a leg or an arm.

That is the type of thing that makes his lectures interesting. The first time that I lectured to a junior high - high school mixed group, I figured they wouldn't be very interested," Shinko said. 'But they listened intently, gave me total respect and asked good, intelligent questions. And I think they learned something from it,

Dam creates flood of controversy

HYDE — Theodore Sawle built a mill and water wheel on a country creek here and ever since he's been battling upstream landowners, the Dept. of Natural Resources (DNR) and the state attorney general. Sawle, 72, built the grain mill and 4,000 pound wheel by hand after cutting the lumber for it at his sawmill in Spring Green. The project was a hobby.

Interest seen "I feel people are interested in this stuff. A lot of people like to see how they did old things," says Sawle, a compact, muscular man whose garage is filled with ancient hand tools, some of which he used in building the

The impressive undertaking had cost him about $2,000 when he finished it in 1974. It was easy and inexpensive compared to the struggle Sawle has encountered trying to win back the water rights needed to make the mill work.

Sawle says he's spent at least $6,000 paying a half dozen attorneys to represent him and the next round in the protracted legal fight is July 22 in Dodgeville before a DNR hearing examiner.

Sawle traces his right to dam up Mill Creek and use its waters to an English immigrant named William Hyde.

Hyde settled at the Iowa County crossroads that bears his name about 1850 and built a mill and dam a few yards from the site where Sawle's new mill stands. According to Sawle, Hyde got a patent from the federal government forever guaranteeing the right of any mill operator to use the waters of the creek.

Patent came with it

When Sawle, whose father was a mill owner before him, bought the old Hyde mill and wheel in 1931 he got the patent with it.

Sawle says he continued to use the wheel until World War II, when he installed an electric motor in the mill to supplement the water power.

The state Public Service Commission, Sawle says, then decided "you aren't using your water to the full extent so you've got to lower the water level, with the privilege of raising it if you ever need it again."

In 1968 Sawle began building the new mill and he put an extension on Hyde's original dam and raised the water back to its pre-war level.

"They very quickly told me I'd lost my rights through non-use," Sawle grumbles. "I felt I should still have my rights. I hired lawyers and resisted them and I wouldn't have stood up to them if I felt I had abandoned my rights.

"The original patent from the United States government says forever," Sawle says emphatically, adding his current lawyer, Madison Atty. Richard Cates, has the old document. "But you show the DNR that and they just laugh. They say forever is a long time but not this long."

DNR Atty. George Meyer says when Sawle "stopped using the dam for milling purposes he lost his rights under the mill dam act. His rights were extinguished and the dam was non-authorized."

Sawle complied with the DNR decision, which was upheld by the courts, and lowered the water level. But then in 1975, after he had his mill and new wheel completed, Sawle once again raised the water level.

Suit filed

Landowners upstream complained their land was being flooded by Sawle's mill pond and since Sawle had not obtained a permit to raise the water level the DNR had the state attorney general sue him.

Sawle then dropped the level of the water behind the dam from six to three feet and the attorney general stayed collection of a $300 judgment against him, pending a final decision by the DNR hearing examiner.

Meyer expects hearing examiner
Maurice Van Susteren to reach a decision on the case by Labor Day. Meyer says the DNR has no position for or against a permit for Sawle. However, he concedes that DNR fish management officials are concerned the dam may harm any trout in the creek by increasing the temperature of the water and preventing downstream migration

John Strudland, a Lake Geneva businessman who farms 875 acres at Hyde, claims Sawle's mill pond would "flood about 100 acres of my best farmland.

"It doesn't seem right that one man for profit or any other reason can flood another man's land," adds Strudland, who has suggested Sawle put $100,000 in escrow to cover any crop damages he might suffer from the mill pond.

"He (Sawle) says he wants to have it (the mill) free and open to the public but I think he wants to make something commercial, with a restaurant and the whole thing," adds Strudland.

"I'll go away and lock the door rather than charge for that mill," retorts Sawle angrily.

"This is an immensely interesting case," adds Sawle's attorney, Richard Cates. "I have to show it's in the public interest and it makes sense to let Ted Sawle do what comes naturally—build an historical site and let people in so he can tell them all about the past. I marvel at his ability.

"Wisconsin would be the loser if we don't win and I'm not going to stop fighting," Cates says.

At the hearing Cates is confident testimony will show that the mill pond will cause little or no damage to any land. Only a couple of acres at most would be affected, he says.

Meanwhile, James Pew, an area farmer and electrician, has collected 1,000 signatures on a petition asking the state to let Sawle have his pond and run the mill.

"We feel it's in the best interest of the community to have this dam operational," says Pew. "Not only would people growing grain in the area love to have a place to stone ground it, but the mill also has historical signfi-

"You'd have to ask 1,000 people around here to find one that was opposed to it," Pew says.

Decision On Sawle's Dam Near

In the 1850's, a man named Hyde built a dam. It has opened a flood of controversy in the area. A hearing will be held tomorrow at the Iowa County Court House concerning it.

A decision making hearing starts tomorrow (July 22) at 9:30 a.m. at the Iowa County Court House in regard to the Sawle's dam located in the community of Hyde. Theodore Sawle, 72, came under fire after building a mill and water wheel, and put to use the dam that has been here for "years and years."

The story probably began "long before any of us were around." In 1850, an English immigrant named William Hyde settled in the community here. He built a mill and a dam. According to Sawle, "Hyde got a patent from the federal government forever guaranteeing the right of any mill operator to use the waters of the creek, (Mill Creek)."

Sawle, after learning the trade from his father, who was also a mill operator, purchased the old Hyde Mill and wheel in 1931. He got the patent with it. He used the wheel until World War II, when he installed an electric motor in the mill to supplement

The State Public Service Commission then decided "you aren't using the water to the full extent so you've got to lower the water level, with the privilege of raising it if you ever need it again," Sawle notes.

For many years, Sawle has toyed with the idea of writing a book and building a mill and whell to bring back the William Hyde era that one day "could all be forgotten."

In 1968 he began building the new mill and put an extension on Hyde's original dam & raised the water back to its pre-war level. He built the grain mill and the 4,000 pound wheel by hand after cutting the lumber for it at his couprill in Spring Green his sawmill in Spring Green. Sawle, described by many as a person "who wouldn't hurt anyone intentionally, but who would want what is fair" found that landowners upstream felt they would be hurt by his actions. John Strudland, a Lake Geneva businessman who farms 875 acres at Hyde, claims Sawle's Mill pond would "flood about 100 acres of my best farmland."

acres of my best farmland."

Skrudland says, "It doesn't seem right that one man for profit or any other reason can flood another man's land." He also suggests that although Sawle claims the mill will be open to the public and will be free-Skrudland thinks "he wants to make something commercial with a restaurant and the whole thing."

The very idea of this provokes the Sawle's granddaughter, Marcia Reeson, who says, "My grandparents have shown this mill to thousands of people and have never taken a dime, and they never will." (Marcia will be testifying at the hearing.)

She reported that many times there have been well-wishers who want to help in the fight to preserve the mill, water wheel and the dam, and offer monetary aid. She stated, "We all say no thanks to the money. It will never in any way be said that this is being done for money. My grandfather does is because it means so much to him."

Seemingly, one of the main words in the controversy is "forever." What does it mean? Webster's dictionary says, "for a limitless time." Sawle says of the patent that promises his water right forever-"can at one point in history rights be given and at another time the same rights be taken away by our government?"

taken away by our government?"
According to DNR Atty.
George Meyer when Sawle
"stopped using the darn for milling purposes he lost his rights under the mill dam act.
His rights were extinguished and the dam was non-authorized."

In an earlier battle, Sawle complied with the DNR, upheld by the court, an order to lower the water level. When he completed his project that cost him about $2,000, he again raised the water level. Since he had not obtained a permit to do so, the DNR had the state attorney sue him. The water level was dropped from six feet to three feet. And the controversy goes on-shortly to be decided at the hearing.

The prolonged legal fight between the Sawles, the DNR and landowners may be lengthy. According to one source, "A decision may not be made yet on Friday, and will be continued, because of the large number of witnesses on both sides." Legal fees has already mounted to $6,000 for the Sawles.

Just before press time, Mrs. Sawle was asked about her feelings toward the matter on Friday. "Certainly we hope to win. But, not until the last card is played will we know." Reflecting for a moment she said, "We aren't doing this for us, you know. It's for others to enjoy, and for future generations to be able to se just how it was way back when..."

old Mill Creek

Mill devotee treasures By Niki Graham Window Writer

Hyde is unincorporated hamlet nestled in the gentle hills outside Spring Green. A stream flows near Hyde; its name, not surprisingly, is the Mill Creek. Not surprising because a postcard-perfect mill is situated on the banks of the old Mill Creek.

Theodore Sawle has owned the mill since 1931. Sawle is, in the truest sense, a mill devotee. He can rattle off the 100 plus years of history behind his own mill, as well as many others in the area. Sawle has owned or worked in mills

(mainly sawmills) most of his life and is one of those rare people who can combine a hobby with a livelihood. Sawle is happy to talk about his little mill project — and how he saved it from the the Department of Natural Resources (DNR)

The dam for the Hyde mill was built in 1850, its six foot stones hauled from the hills with oxen. By 1860, the mill was grinding 15,000 pounds of wheat yearly, supplying local residents with flour. The original owner — named Hyde — was a craftsman from Nova Scotia who operated the mill until it burned down in

In 1880 the mill was rebuilt and underwent a succession of owners. The line ended when Sawle and his wife Roma bought the property, and moved into the neighboring home.

Sawle ground feed at the mill in the thirties, then shifted his efforts in the forties. Throughout World War II, Sawle made wooden boxes used to ship supplies overseas. He claims he worked 24 hours a day and ran the box factory into the dirt. Indeed, the grounds now show no signs of the building.

Nor would they show signs of the mill if some folks had their way.

During his box making days, Sawle used more electricity than mill-wheel power and neighbors asked him to lower his water level. He complied, with a promise from the DNR that the water could be raised anytime. After that, Sawle was busy with other interests and sort of ignored the mill.

But in 1968, in semi-retirement, Sawle decided to raise the water level, T restore the mill and grind flour again.

In fact, the mill is filled with the restore the mill and grind flour again.

In fact, the mill is filled with the restore the mill and grinding equipment — an assortment grinding equipment — an assortment bandonment and cause for all loss of ater rights.

Sawle lost his fight in court a few times, then concluded he'd get tough. "I knew I has some kind of a case," Sawle says, "because the judge was always vague in his rulings." Sawle "got himself a good lawyer" and began to appeal.

"I really can't say anything bad about the DNR," Sawle concedes, "they were knowledgeable people and they finally admitted I had the rights." Sawle's court battle included researching abstracts all the way back to 1880, and an updated interpretation of flowage rights.

The mill stands, unscarred by years of litigation. Sawle recently made a new water wheel, using a workbench handmade by Mr. Hyde himself.

Thinking they'd lose cropland to the grinding equipment—an assortment mill pond, two neighbors objected and that would delight any museum curator. Sawle's been "antiqueing" out the DNR refused Sawle a necessary curator. Sawle's been "antiqueing" out permit. It seems the mill was idle for 20 , east for years and his collection years, a period the DNR considers includes a huge corn separator, complete with square nails, an ancient feedbag filler/scale and a gadget for testing wheat quality. Sawle can explain the use of all his contraptions, as he reads mill history avidly. He also follows the works of old millwrights who he considers mechanics and engineers as well as millers. As he explains it, in the 1800's millwrights travelled around looking for mill sites, established a good operation. then sold the mill. Sawle has researched millwrights who built over 40 mills in a Presently, Sawle is toying with the idea of sharing his expertise with the public, perhaps in the form of milling demonstrations. But thats a way off. In the meantime, he grinds flour for relatives, and works part time in a Spring Green sawmill.

Sawle is pleased that his legal troubles are over, and is comforted by the fact that over 2,000 local residents signed a petition in his support. They like the mill as much as he does Hyde's old Mill Creek just wouln't be the same without it.

Marshall To Be Honored After 45 Years

Dr. Stanley B. Marshall, 72, who has practiced medicine in Hollandale for the past 45 years, has announced he will retire at the first of the year.

What this means to Dr. Marshall is taking on no new patients. He will however, continue to treat his regular patients.

After graduating from Loyola University School of Medicine in 1932 and interning in St. Mary's hospital, Madison, Dr. Marshall came to Hollandale with the intention of staying one year to get acquainted with the practice of medicine and "learn people" before going back to the city.

He learned people all right, and his wife Jeanette learned to love the Hollandale area, though a big city girl, so they stayed.

His office was located by the post office back in 1933. He later built his own building across the street and in 1958 built the building he and Dr. Eduardo DeLaFuente now share.

Assisted in the office by his wife, Dr. Marshall remembers the early years of his practice were the years of the country's depression. Weeks were long and so were days. It was seven days a week and 24 hours a day with many, many house calls. There were no appointments, people just walked into the clinic and waited their turn. An office call charge totaled 50 cents. Because people were poor Marshall recalls, "I often came back from a house call with a live chicken as my payment." "But, there was rarely a time when the family didn't set the table and invite me to sit and talk for a while." "That's what I miss most from those years," he says nostalgically, "and this is what I would want to implant in the present time-the friendship you could have with everyone." That was a time when the doctor knew the family well, he knew the medical and some of the personal history of the patient which helped in treatment tremendously. "Now," he compares, "we're numbers. Everything necessarily is charted and without the charts, doctors would be lost to ven remember patient's names. These are the days of the specialists," he said, "general practitioners now are referral people."

When asked why he entered into the medical profession he replied, "It's all I can remember wanting to do." Born and raised in Blanchardville, the doctor there had a big influence on Stan Marshall. He was confident. "His job was fascinating to me," Dr. Marshall remembers. Travelling with the Blanchardville doctor in his Model T Ford to make house calls, you might say Stan Marshall had his first internship then.

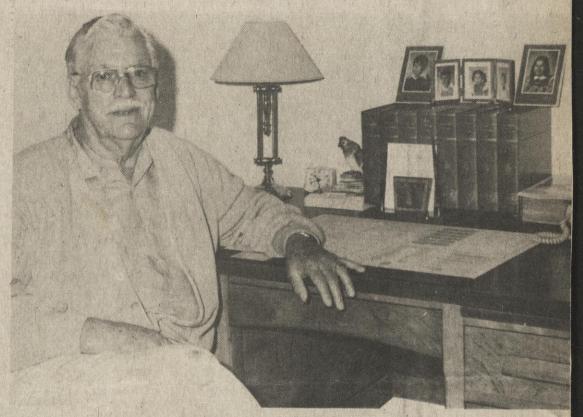

After 45 years of making his own way in the business, he says emphatically, "I'd do it all over again exactly the same."

With retirement ahead for him, his plan is "to just live, to try to enjoy myself as always." During his early doctoring years, he tried to set the precedent of always taking a week off each year, something he knew he really needed. He was able to do that with Dr. Hohler in Mineral Point helping to care for his patients. But somehow he never got much fishing in. Now he hopes to be able to fit it in. Travel gives him a great deal of enjoyment, too, and he plans to see as much as possible of his son and daughter. His daughter, Moya, who has five children, lives in Alabama. His son, Stan Jr., is a major in the Army stationed in Texas. Stan Jr. has two children.

It's rare to see Dr. S.B. Marshall not wearing his smile. His prescription for keeping good health and your smile is to just be yourself and follow your own dictates. "We're all capable of knowing what we can do and can't and you shouldn't try to do more. It isn't jogging or a teaspoon of this or that," he says, It's "keeping within the boundaries of your own nervous system. The secret's in the way we live."

"The pressure is on in this day and age," he warns, "we have to be careful within our families to reserve the time to temper our nervous systems and give our children our time---that's most important."

An open house is planned for Sunday from 2 to 4 p.m. honoring Dr. Marshall for his years of service to the Hollandale Community and area. It will be held at the Hollandale Legion Hall.

Planning for his retirement, Dr. S. B. Marshall will take no new patients after the first of the year, but will continue to see his regular patients.

As a young doctor, just starting out, Dr. Marshall is shown in the first building constructed for his practice in Hollandale. After 45 years in medicine he says, "I'd do it all again, exactly the same."

"No Change Now" For Iowa County Sheriffs Department

It's business as usual at the Iowa County Sheriff's Department, two and a half weeks after a new sheriff has taken over a new sheriff has taken over.

On Tuesday, Oct. 10, Arnold Fritsch, Cobb, was worn in as the new Iowa County Sheriff by Iowa County Judge James Fiedler. Fritsch was appointed sheriff by acting Governor Martin Schrieber after he (Fritsch) won the primary election in September, remaining as the only active candidate for the upcoming general election in November. Schreiber said that Fritsch's appointment would help for a smoother transition into his administration, and help to keep the department running efficiently.

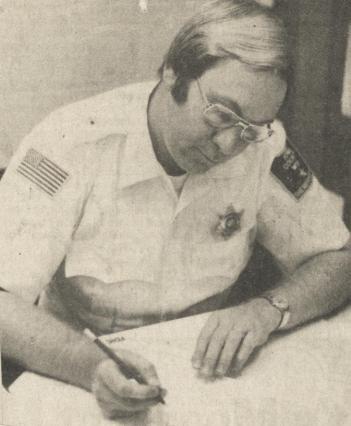

Fritsch Announces Candidacy For Sheriff

Arnold Fritsch today announced his candidacy for Sheriff of Iowa County.

A veteran of 15 years as a law enforcement officer, Arnold Fritsch is a graduate from the Wisconsin Law Enforcement Academy. He has been employed as a law officer in Rock and Iowa Counties. A native of Iowa County, he and his family returned in 1968, and have since resided in Iowa County.

Fritsch states an active campaign will be evident prior to the Primary Election in September.

Iowa County Sheriff Arnold Fritsch performing some of his administrative duties that go with his new job.

Since that appointment, and in the weeks before, Fritsch had been a busy man. Since the day after the Sept. 12 primary, Fritsch spent time at the sheriff's office, familiarizing himself with the department and learning the ropes with the help of Chief Deputy Richard Meudt. He feels he still has much to learn.

"I find the position a challenge," Fritsch said about the new job. "I've been working to familiarize myself with the office and the department's operations, and everyone has been super to help me out. And even at this early date, I have found the cooperation from county committees has been very encouraging."

Fritsch, the first sheriff ever to be appointed to the position in Iowa County, has been spending most of his time in the office, taking care of the administrative duties of the job. "At the outset, my time has been spent in administration," he said. "Policies have to be established and regulated, but I have also been around the county working on different problems."

The new sheriff will be stressing a testing program for the advancement of employees and to be used as a hiring tool as his tenure goes on. He also will institute an ongoing training program on the use of lethal and non-lethal weapons.

The department presently consists of Fritsch, Chief Deputy Meudt, seven full-time patroling deputies, one part-time patroling deputy, two full-time secretaries, four full-time dispatchers, and two part-time dispatchers. Fritsch said he finds the staff adequate at times, but at the time of an emergency, a larger staff is needed.

"The deputies are responsible for responding to all calls while they are on duty, civil, criminal, or traffic matters," Fritsch said. "It's getting to the point that the ever increasing number of paper services (subpoenas, executions, and warrants), are taking a majority of the deputies time on some shifts."

Fritsch does not plan to drastically change policies of the department, but he expects the personnel to carry on their normal duties. "As far as work policies or reassignment of employees, there won't be any at the present time," he said.

As for the possible reorganization of the department, Fritsch said that he hasn't even met with the law enforcement committee yet, so that possibility is only in the future. "I know that it was at one time discussed, but I don't know what the thinking of the committee is now," he said.

Fritsch has already found out

Fritsch has already found out that the job doesn't consist of a 4-hour work week, eight to five each day. "There have already been a lot of hours to put in, but that was to be expected with the new position," he said. "I have been familiarizing myself with the jail procedures, where things are stored, the budget for the upcoming year, and the general operations of the office. But it's a challenge that I enjoy."

School Closed Two Days As Snow, High Winds Raise Havoc in Areas

The Snow Came,

If you thought you had a lot of snow after the snow storm, it was probably nothing compared to the snow this Chicago-Northwestern engine shoveled between Madison and Ridgeway. The front end was used as a plow for more than 30 miles, but finally just west of Ridgeway, the train came to a halt. Chicago-Northwestern officials spent hours and even days to get the train moving again.

Schools and roads alike were closed last Thursday and Friday as one of the worst blizzards in years swept through southwest-ern Wisconsin and the Midwest.

Several inches of snow mixed with 30 to 50 mile per hour winds made the visibility poor and the road surfaces slick. Schools throughout the county were called off both days.

The storm created a special problem for Iowa County Highway crews. Plows were out in full force, and at times there wasn't much that they could do.
"The snow was so heavy that it kept breaking down our equipment," a highway department official said. "And the vehicles couldn't serve the public if they were in the shop being fixed."

He also noted that even after roads were opened, the condition was only temporary as the winds quickly filled in the holes. At times, roads were level full from snow bank to snow bank.

"A lot of cars in the way also made it difficult for us," he pointed out. "Of course the motorists couldn't help it and we couldn't help it, so although it wasn't really anybody's fault, it made moving the snow real difficult.

Fortunately, most pecule stayed off the roads during storm. Only one accident we reported in the county during the snowfall and another the following day. Sheriff's Department officials reported that the total was one of the lowest totals in the area as far as accidents are concerned. Iowa County Sheriff William Whitford had an outside view of the storm in this area. "I was snow-bound in Fond du Lac for for two days at the state sheriff's convention," the sheriff said. "It was much worse up there--with about 11 inches of snow and 50-60 mile an hour winds---and I simply couldn't get out." Along with the sheriff at the convention was Chief Deputy Richard Meudt.

There were many individual stories about adventures after the two-day nightmare, and they will probably continue for years to come about the "Blizzard of January, 1978."

Fire Destroys Barn, 40 Head Of Milk Cows on Barneveld Farm

A rural Barneveld barn and its contents, including about 40 head of milk cows, were destroyed in a fire probably caused by lightening early Saturday morning.

The barn on the Ralph Oimoen farm was completely destroyed, as were the milk house and a nearby silo, in the blaze which was reported about 3:55 a.m. The fire started during the middle of an electrical storm.

Approximately 40 cattle were destroyed in the blaze, but according to Oimoen's daughter, Sherry Harpold, about 20 head broke out of the stanchions and escaped. Mrs. Harpold, who operates the farm along with her father, husband Lenny, and her brother Gene, said that rebuilding plans have not yet been made by the family. "We haven't really got together as a family yet to decide what to do," she said.

The fire apparently started between 2:00 and 3:00 a.m., but wasn't discovered until close to 3:00 when a Hollandale youth said he could "see the flames all the way from Holandale." Fire departments from Barneveld, Hollandale, Ridgeway and Mt. Horeb responded to the call, but they were unable to save the building.

Three bins of hay, estimated at 3500 bales, were also destroyed, along with a half bin of corn-fodder. Firemen were called back to the farm on Monday when the smoldering turned into a fire in one of the silos on the farm, and according to Mrs. Harpold, that silo is destroyed.

To handle the 20 cows that remain, a nearby barn on the farm that had been used for young cattle was temporarily set up for milking, according to Mrs.

Harpold.
"We had as much insurance as they would allow us to have, but it is never able to cover everything," Mrs. Harpold said. The good herd of cattle was worth much more than it was may 13/978 insured for.

Campbell's Department Store Closes After 43 Years in Dodgeville

Campbell's Department Store in Dodgeville will discontinue business this week after about 80 years of serving Iowa Countians at five locations.

Robert G. Campbell has sold the building at 133 N. Iowa St., where his business has been in existence for the past seven years, to Kozelka's Mens Wear, a Prairie du Chien firm. Kozelka's is scheduled to open in Dodgeville on Thursday, September 7. Campbell, 65, is retiring after 34 years in the dry goods business in Dodgeville.

"This isn't the way that we wanted it to work out, but when Robert Jr. passed away last year, the decision was made immediately to sell out," Campbell said. Plans had called for Robert Jr. to operate the store, and Robert Sr. had planned to go into semi-retirement, occassionally returning to the store to help his son.

The business began in the Campbell name in the late 1800's, when Bob Sr.'s grandfather, George, started a store in Adamsville. "There was a store, a cheese factory, a church and a school in Adamsville at the time, and if the railroad hadn't gone through Hollandale, Adamsville would have been the town to grow," Campbell notes. When Hollandale began to prosper with the railroad, the store was moved to Hollandale, where A.R. Campbell, Bob Sr.'s father, joined him.

In 1906, A.R. Campbell went to work for Bishop's Department Store in Platteville, before returning to join in a partnership in Barneveld in 1911. Campbell joined John Minix, to operate a store known as Minix & Campbell. In 1917, Campbell took over sole ownership of the store, and it was known as A.R. Campbell & Company.

In 1929, Campbell sold out his business to John Minix and his son Wilbur, and A.R. then went to Madison and bought and operated the Hillington Grocery Store. After five years in Madison, Campbell bought the Will Parry Dry Goods Store in Dodgeville, and in 1935, the A.R. Campbell Dry Goods Store was opened for the first time in Dodgeville.

In 1944, A.R. Campbell was joined by his son Robert, and a partnership of "Campbell's" resulted. Nine years later, Bob purchased the busines from his father, and continued to operate the store at that location until 1971. In 1969, Campbell was joined by his son Robert Jr., and the two men moved the business to the Oral (Kelly) Moen building in 1971, the business' present location. A department store known as Robert G. Campbell's, Inc., was then operated under the name of Campbell's. Additional space on the lower level was rented to allow for a wider variety of items.

Campbell has fond recollections of the past years, and has seen many changes take place. "We started out with two employees plus my dad and myself, and when we close we will have had nine at our peak," Campbell said.

Campbell worked for his father in the store in Barneveld at age eight, and he remembers how it used to be. "Saturday night used to be a big deal, when everybody would get all dolled up and come into town by horse to do the shopping," he said. "That's when there really used to be peak shopping hours. Now, there's business every hour of every day, and the family doesn't necessarily come into town shopping together."

shopping together."

The Campbells used to take eggs, poultry, butter and other goods in trade for goods from their store. "If they'd bring in $20 worth or produce, they could take home $20 worth of goods," he said. "Of course, you could get a lot of merchandise for $20 in those days."

In those days, the store used to have the same customers all the time, but that, too, has changed, according to Campbell. "With the influx of tourists to Governor Dodge State Park, we have customers from all over," he said. "One Saturday, I had checks from customers in four different states, and it's not unusual to see a lot of new faces in here each day."

Although Campbell's has gained a lot of new customers, a lot of old ones still patronize the store, he said. "In some cases, I still have the same customers I had 30 years ago, and I'm definitely going to miss them. I'm going to miss all the people that I've met in the business, and I've met a lot of them."

Campbell hasn't made any definite plans for the future, but he is looking forward to taking a a few Alabama football games. A 1936 graduate of the University of Alabama, Campbell is looking ahead to the Alabama-Notre Dame football game, which he plans to attend with Frank Hamilton, Dodgeville, a Notre Dame alumnus. "And I can always go out to the farm (the Campbell farm west of Dodgeville) and help milk and cut weeds," he said, noting that there would always be something to do there. He said he has had job offers, but he won't accept anything until after the first of the year when his business obligations are cleared up.

an EDITORIAL Best Wishes For An Old Friend

Robert G. Campbell, Sr., Dodgeville businessman, retires today after 34 years of work in the dry goods business in this city.

Campbell and his family have been in the business throughout the county for nearly 80 years, with more than half of the time spent at the two locations in Dodgeville.

It will take some getting used to for people to walk into the store at 133 N. Iowa and see someone other than Bob. He has been a good businessman, a good neighbor, a community builder, and a good friend for as long as most people can remember.

At age 65, he deserves to take a break; to enjoy himself and the fruits of his labor. We wish him well in whatever endeavor he decides to take up.

Best of luck - we'll miss you!

SPECIAL THANKS TO ALL THE ENTRIES IN THE PARADE. THEY WERE EXCELLANT and we appreciate all your efforts.

AN OPEN LETTER TO AREA PRANKSTERS:

Halloween 1978 has come and gone and its wake of fun and games, a few items should be brought out for public information. While several other properties were hit by eggs and other acts of malicious mischief, I refer only to actions involving the Barneveld State Bank in this letter. .

- 1. The toilet seat incident of October 15, while being a little early for Halloween, could be considered a good joke. No one got hurt and only minor damage was done to the base of the imported porcelain throne. I had a good laugh about it and thank the friends who removed the evidence from the Bank roof.
- 2. The Halloween night episode was less funny and considerably more serious in that damage of substantial nature was done to property belonging to others. The parking lot behind the Bank building is private property, whether it's fenced or not, and vehicles parked there, whether Bank-owned or otherwise, are not toys for hooligans to wreck. A police report has been filed and will be prosecuted if necessary.
- 3. The teepee addition, or Native American High-Rise, of 11/5/78 again could be considered a funny prank except that property of substantial value was stolen from its rightful owners and damaged. Again, a police report was filed because of the dollar value involved and the damage to Bank property as a result of this trespass.

To the parents of young people in our community who are minors in the legal sense of today's society, I hope you will seriously discuss these points with your children. As parents we have a serious responsibility to teach our children to have a rightful respect for other people's property, and the place for this basic education is in our homes.

To the young people of our community who are of legal age, fun is fun but it is time that some of you grow up and learn to live more responsible lives. If those persons guilty of the actions mentioned above would exert as much ingenuity and energy in your jobs and daily lives as you put into these pranks, we could all be proud of our village and community and you could go far. Thank you,

CARL F. ARNESON

Dream home takes shape from church

By Sunny Schubert Of The State Journal

BARNEVELD — "There were times — lots of times — when I thought Jim was the craziest man alive," says Wanda Owens, shaking her head as she smiles fondly at her husband.

Jim returns her smile with a grin of his own — the crazy-as-a-fox grin of a man who turned a dream into a dream house for his family.

The crazy times were the four years the Owens and their four children lived in the one-room basement of an abandoned Lutheran church — years when everybody had to go to bed at the same time because all the lights were on one master switch.

Years when Wanda wandered about ankle-deep in sawdust, listening to the clomping footsteps of workmen overhead.

Years when the family's food was speckled with charcoal falling from uncovered ceiling beams once damaged in a long-forgotten fire.

oday, the Owens family looks back on those years with smiles — smiles particularly broad during the holidays, when the 14-foot tree in their living room reminds them that their home is unique.

The Owens' story began years ago when Jim and Wanda abandoned one dream: After renting a farm for several years, "we finally realized that with land prices going up like they were, we were never going to be able to buy our own farm," Wanda says.

Jim found work as a mechanic in Barneveld and Wanda, who now is a teacher's aide at Barneveld High School, held a variety of part-time jobs squeezed around her full-time job as mother to four children.

And meanwhile, they looked for a home. They built one house, but when it was finished "it cost more than we'd planned and didn't have some of the features we wanted," Wanda says. So they kept renting and kept looking.

they kept renting and kept looking.
"For two years, we looked at everything that was for sale for I don't know how many miles around," Wanda remembers. "Finally, we found one we thought we could live with. I spent all one afternoon filling out the papers and then Jim called. 'Guess what?' he said. 'I just bought a church.'"

"I didn't believe him," Wanda says, sighing, "but within two weeks, we were living in the basement."

The church Jim bought was a Lutheran church on County Trunk T in Barneveld, built in about 1919. Structurally sound, the building had been abandoned about 18 months before the Owens bought it in 1971.

The basement was livable — after a fashion. There was a kitchen, two showers, and one huge meeting room which Wanda divided into bedrooms with curtains. "My spring cleaning consisted of taking down the walls and throwing them in the washing machine," Wanda recalls.

"I never thought we'd spend four years down there," she says, then shrugs. "But with four kids, and wanting to do the church right — we just didn't have the money to do it as fast as we wanted."

o they took their time and did much of the work themselves. To get lumber for the interior remodeling, Jim bought another abandoned church — this time a Methodist chapel in Cobb.

Wanda laughs at the thought of their ecumenical homestead. "A Lutheran church, remodeled with Methodist lumber, housing a Congregational family — and our Catholic friends say their going to convert us. Are they sure they'd want us?"

The Lutherans had taken the stained glass windows, church bells and pews, leaving "just one big room with a 14-foot ceiling," Jim says. "It was like a huge tunnel."

Jim and Wanda designed the interior for their children: Dawn, 15, Faye, 13, Tadd, 10, and Bret, 9. The rooms are big — the 12- by 29-foot kitchen, for example, can handle a family reunion without even getting crowded. The old rectory has been converted into a cozy family room with a Franklin stove and lots of cupboard space for storing games, toys and books.

They installed an upstairs with four roomy bedrooms, two baths and a loft. The loft fronts on the formal living room, the only room still boasting a 14-foot ceiling. The loft railing and stairway banister are built from the original altar rail, lovingly restored, as was the wainscoting in the dining room.

and the living room is where the Owens put their immense Christmas tree, ceiling high and close to 12 feet in diameter at the base.

Just finding a tree that big is a challenge, Wanda says.

Tree lots just don't sell 14-foot trees, so the Owens have to cut their own. Even Christma's tree farms rarely have trees of that size, so Wanda phones area farmers before the family takes to the fields.

"I finally found a woman who said she had a tree that big, then she asked where I was going to put it. When I told her my living room, she got real quiet. I'm sure she thought I was crazy "Wanda says, laughing.

crazy," Wanda says, laughing.

It takes the better part of a day just to decorate the towering Tannenbaum. The top branches are reached from the loft, then two stepladders are employed for the middle branches. The Owens won't even guess how many ornaments, how many bushels of tinsel icicles, or how many feet of Christmas lights adorn the tree.

And while Wanda grouses good-naturedly about the amount of work that goes into preparing the house for Christmas, the whole family views the tree as a symbol of the work they've done together and the hardships they endured to build their dream house.

Church turns dream

"You only remember the good times," Wanda says.

The Owens' beautiful 14-foot Christmas tree marks the spot where the altar once stood in their church-turned-home.

Dane County's postcard-pretty village of Blue Mounds is 385 acres and 341 people with pride in the past and an eye on the future. Blue Mounds' future looks as bright as its rich history sprawling trailer town on the west Mead and Hunt was hired to begin deedge of the village, there've been six sign work. new houses built in the last decade, two just last year alone.

BLUE MOUNDS - Winter doesn't exactly stop time in this tiny western Dane County community - it just kind of stalls it in a snowdrift.

Residents spend their days doing inside chores or psyching themselves up for the 20-mile trek into Madison. Out-of-town visitors become as rare as palm trees on the snow-clogged village streets, and even the famous blue haze that surrounds the nearby mounds on summer evenings disappears as soon as the first flakes fall in the autumn.

But while winter days may seem to grind by slowly, there is progress being made in Blue Mounds.

Old community

The folks who drop into the Hooterville Inn, the same folks who proudly relate that Blue Mounds is one of the oldest permanent communities in Wisconsin, also point proudly to the site of the village's new water and sewage treatment plant. And when the weather's been discussed enough, talk turns to the future and what summersto-come will bring to Blue Mounds.

To village president Curt Lindholm, Blue Mounds is a village with a firm grip on the past and an eye on the

"It'll grow, no question," he said. His eyes twinkle wryly as he recites statistics: in 1967, Blue Mounds' population was only 215, but in the last 10 years, it's skyrocketed all the way to

Lots of growth

"That's quite a bit of growth," Lindholm said.

Surely Ebenezer Brigham would be permanent white settler, built a road for up to 50 percent of the total project back in 1828.

It was called Blue Mounds then, too, because of the summer haze surthe Indians believed came from the pipe of Wakanda, the earth-maker.

But Brigham's inn became a popular overnight stop for travelers on the 'old Military Road between Dubuque and Milwaukee.

According to stories, passengers would no sooner alight from stagecoaches and wagons than card games would spring into being, and before long, Blue Mounds became Pokerville. a name that lasted - unofficially, at least - long into the 20th Century.

The original inn is gone today, but the twin mounds remain. And by next summer, a symbol of Blue Mounds' future will sit atop the smaller mound a 180,000-gallon water storage tank, "enough to get your feet wet," Lindholm chuckles.

Blue Mounds' water and sewer project began almost 10 years ago, when village residents voted down the first plan to install sewer lines.

In 1975, a second attempt to win public approval for the project was more successful, and village residents agreed to chip in with $1,000 a household, $1,500 for commercial establishments. Pledges soon totalled $142,000, And housing - not counting the and the Madison engineering firm of

The sea of state and federal red tape that surrounds any sewer project can intimidate officials of much bigger communities, but with the aid of the engineers, Blue Mounds officials took the plunge.

They emerged with a Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) loan of $339,000, the pledge of an FmHA grant house at what is now Blue Mounds cost, and a Housing and Urban Development block grant of $53,750.

Also, Mead and Hunt engineer Dennis Hultgren said Blue Mounds is exrounding the 1,716-foot peak - haze pected to rank high on a forthcoming state Dept. of Natural Resources priority list, which could net the village another $215,000. That money would be used to decrease the size of the FmHA loan.

The entire project will cost about Mr. William Bryant $850,000, Lindholm says. Bids were awarded last September, and construction already is under way on the sewage treatment plant. Water and sewer lines are partly installed, and a 1,400-foot-deep well is being drilled in the valley below the mounds

Both Hultgren and Lindholm agree one of the primary reasons the water and sewer project finally won village approval is the septic pollution of existing private wells.

Hultgren said tests showed as many as 42 percent of the wells had mineral and bacterial pollution at one

And Lindholm said other tests have shown the soil around Blue Mounds to be very poor for septic waste disposal systems

"We have quite a number of independent septic systems malfunctioning throughout the village, requiring expensive and extensive repairs," he

The sewage treatment plant, just south of Highway 18-151, will be capable of handling up to 72,000 gallons of raw sewage a day. It will be a tertiarylevel plant, which means the treated effluent discharged will be as clean as modern technology can make it.

And with "city" water and sewers on the way, Lindholm has great visions for the future of the 385-acre vil-

The village has been working with the DNR in developing a recreation plan and acquiring land for a park, Lindholm said proudly. And, he said, a Blue Mounds Advancement Assn. has been organized, "and is instrumental in promoting tourist events like Pioneer Days.'

"All these things can be done, but it takes a lot of effort," he added.

'We pushed a lot of paper around to get as far as we have.

For a village with the historical pride of Blue Mounds, it's fitting that one of the biggest contributors to the success of the water and sewer project is the Cave of the Mounds park, just east of the village.

Cave of the Mounds proprietor Ed Rooney also has big visions for that tourist attraction. He agreed to participate in the project because he wants to put in an eatery to serve the 250,000 tourists a year he anticipates will visit the cave some day.

The cave, by the way, was discovered in 1939, on land still owned by the family of Ebenezer Brigham, the founder of Blue Mounds

By Steven T. Lovejoy Of The State Journal

ARENA — On a crisp cool Saturday morning a few weeks ago, Bob Gates drove up to his sawmill at 7 a.m. and found six cars and pickup trucks waiting in the driveway.

Like the lackadaisacal grasshopper that fiddled away the summer, it seems that a number of folk didn't store up enough wood for the winter.

When the first few days of chilly weather surprised everyone by showing up on schedule, the dash to fill the woodpile began.

Gates' mill, tucked underneath Arena's turquoise blue water tower, has been doing a land-office business selling slab wood for the past few weeks.

Stacks of picked-over dry, gray wood lining the north side of the lumberyard testify to the growing popularity of woodburners and fireplaces as people try to minimize their winter fuel bills.

For Gates' Forest Products, the boom in wood-burners has meant extra revenue for a product that formerly was a waste by-product. "There really was never much of a market for it until the last five years," Gates said.

Wood slabs, the rough semi-circles of wood that come off logs in the first trimming, don't have the heating capabilities of block wood — and they probably rate a little lower in the romance category for people who want picturesque fireplace fires.

But at $10 a ton for slab wood, compared to the going rate of $30 or $35 a ton for regular cord wood, Gates' product has a certain pocket-book attraction

For customers who shudder at the idea of transporting a ton of wood in their Toyota, Gates offers deliveries for an extra $5 a ton. But, at this time of the year, Gates' chief hauler, Wilson Atkins, isn't going to promise you 24-hour delivery.

"If I took all the calls that came in, I'd be 200 or 300 orders behind," Atkins said. "You know, people didn't think they'd need any wood for winter."

Once Atkins hits his order limit of two weeks, he just tells people to call back. Otherwise, he said, when the sawmill shuts down and puts him off schedule, he has to go around calling everyone to tell them their delivery is delayed.

Gates said that firewood sales from the Arena operation run about 15 tons a day year-around. Madison accounts for most of the deliveries — usually two or three four-ton loads a day during October and November.

Atkins and Gates agree that the rise in demand for slab wood is an indication of rising pressure on wood sunnlies

Atkins said he logged off 25 tons of wood on a private parcel of land earlier this year and sold it to one customer.

Even driving around on country roads, he said, you don't see old dead trees along the roadway anymore; scavengers have pulled up with saws and carted them away.

"It's going to get worse every year," Atkins said. "It's something you can't go down to the hardware store and pick up."

That situation is changing, however. Some quick-stop grocery stores in Madison sport woodpiles outside their front door, and Old's Seed Co. offers a bin of 80 or 90 pounds of wood at the rate of $2.75 for mixed hardwoods and $3.75 for birch.

Old's reports wood sales has been "very good" this year.

While some wood-buyers looking for large quantity purchases may be translating the seasonal rush as a wood shortage, a spokesman for Old's said it looks more like a communication problem. Old's gets questions from customers about where they can make bulk purchases, but at the same time people drop in offering to sell quantities of wood.

"Somebody should take out an advertisement," the Old's spokesman said.

Robert Gates' Arena sawmill produces firewood as a profitable byproduct.

Gates and enviable woodpile.

Wisconsin Man Makes Dodgeville A Stop on

"Longest Horseback Ride

The Garry Evans family, Dodgeville, greet Vernon Stepp as he is invited to "put up his horses for the night" in their stable. (Note the antenna)

BY Jean a Lewis

Who ever heard of a talking

Well, listen to this! No, take another look. The horse is not doing the talking, the animal is equipped with a CB and the antena joggles as the pack moves along. The man, Vernon Stepp, Kansasville, Wis., is doing the talking as he travels the highways in quest for a world record-the longest horseback ride. When his journey has ended-traveling from Kansas-ville to Fairbanks, Alaska he will have traveled 4,000 miles.

Truckers, especially take a double take when they see him on horseback, with a CB antena sticking up. He has his "ear on". They ask him "how are you doing ole-timer"? He responds with, "I'm sitting on mohair; my speed is set on cruise control." is set on cruise control.

Old timer seems fitting, but certainly not because of his age, 57. His work as a heavy equipment operator before his journey, the wind and the sun account for his weathered brown face. He has a snowy beard, and not until he takes his hat off do you see the black hair that might also tell you his nationally, Sioux Indian.

Actually his CB handle is "Rawhide." He laughs as he tells: "I think it is appropriate. A man cannot travel 4,000 miles, and not end up without some raw

He has "a great wife at home." Also five children who have not tried to talk him out of the trip.

Although he has thought about the trip for about 35 years, he was mum about it until he was almost ready to leave home, which was May 11. During this time he has kept a watchful eye on the Guinness Book of Records. To date, nobody has challenged the current record set back in 1911. A nine and an eleven year old boy traveled 3619 miles. They made the ride in 36 days traveling from Coney Island to San Francisco. Strepp relates, "That is quite a feat in itself. I plan to take about five and a half months to complete the trip. If anyone asks why the trip took so long, I can fall back on my age.

According to Stepp, if the children had made the trip in two days less time, they would have been given $10,000. Stepp doesn't have a sponsor yet for his trip, but he is riding for Cancer and Muscular dystrophy. (This will probably be the longest ride-a-thon in history.)

Why is he doing this? "I don't know. It is just something I always knew I would do. Sixty-seven years is a long time for a record to go unchallenged. Because I sold most of my heavy equipment two years ago, I felt that the time was right to go. Stepp notes. "Put it this way. A youngster cannot afford to go. Someone a little older...his wife won't let him go. A iellow my age, his knees would give out. That doesn't leave many challenge me. I may not be first, but you can bet I'll set the second record for the longest horseback

He had a duel purpose for starting his trip in May, and traveling west before heading north. He plans to condition himself and his animals to the harsher weather he knows is coming ahead. He said, "I want to do all the traveling I can in the U.S. When I get on the Alcon Highway it will not be easy. It's 1532 miles of pretty rough country. My horses have never met up with bears, moose or rattlesnakes. When they see one they could go right up a wall. You wouldn't believe how primitive that area is...the bears are just like housecats, there are so many of them. I'm taking it easy now, but I'll do some hard riding later on." he adds.

Who is traveling with you? Pointing Heavenward he says, "I do not travel alone. He travels with me. I see a lot of God's creatures as I travel. They are not afraid of you when you are on a four-footed animal.

Stepp will hobble his horse at night in an open area. If a bear should be in the mood for horse flesh, or should they decide to harm him, he is prepared. He carries a gun.

One of the highlights of the trip is meeting people. Donna Evans, Dodgeville, along with her husband Gary who owns a stable in town asked him to "put up his horses for the night."

James McDonald 1978 quits MARC post

By KAYE SCHULTZ
Of The Capital Times Staff

James McDonald, executive director of the Madison Area Association for Retarded Citizens, will resign his post and take a job as an assistant to Dane County Executive George Reinke.

McDonald, 57, MARC executive director since 1965, announced his resignation to the MARC board at its Tuesday meeting. He will begin his administrative job with the county March 20.

According to McDonald, the resignation was prompted by a disagreement with the MARC board over new organizational structure and direction. As part of a reorganization implemented last June, corporations were formed to run the day center and volunteer services.

"I think the organization lost something by doing that. I can see a conflict in the future, with the two groups competing against each other even for funding," McDonald said.

In the 12 years McDonald has headed it, MARC has developed from a small group to a county-wide program and has received national recognition for many of its activities.

It was the first local organization to run day centers for the retarded in the community, and currently operates six centers around the county.

Orchard Hill, a residential center for the retarded, a county transportation system for developmentally disabled residents, an advocacy program for retarded citizens and the first youth program in the country are among the programs initiated at MARC with McDonald's assistance.

McDonald also cited the establishment of the state's first information center on developmental disabilities and a park beautification project using retarded residents as major programs initiated by MARC.

In assessing the progress of the organization, McDonald said all MARC's programs were held in church basements and it had a $15,000 deficit when he began work as its first director and first full-time employe in 1965. Currently, MARC has facilities throughout the county and a working capital in the six-figure range, he said.

"I think we've accomplished what we wanted — to gain community recognition and make it fiscally responsible," he said.

McDonald praised The Capital Times and the late William T. Evjue, its founder, for support of the retarded through the Kiddie Camp and other programs. McDonald was responsible for having the newspaper nationally recognized for its work with the retarded while Evjue was publisher.

James McDonald

You've all heard of the Ridgeway ghost, but have you heard of Willis, the Village Bar (Barneveld) ghost? Well, he walked down Hwy. 18-151 through Ridgeway Sunday during the parade, and is pictured above.

Opening Planned for Area Furniture Stripping Business

Furniture stripper Bill Roberts demonstrates how his method of stripping in tanks differs from hand stripping on a chair done both ways. The left side of the chair was dipped in Roberts' tank, while the right side was handstripped.

Tired of working for hours, or even days, stripping coats of paint off of antiques or old furniture? Well, now there's an easier way.

Just take your furniture or fixture to the "Old Barn Dip-N-Strip" shop in Barneveld, where Bill Roberts will take care of the problem for you. Roberts has purchased a franchise of the "Houck Process" of furniture stripping, wich is acclaimed as the most effective stripping method ever developed. It is designed to save hours of time and effort in the restoration and refinishing of wood or metal items.

According to Roberts, the process strips paint off furniture in as little as 30 seconds, depending on the type of finish and number of coats. An hour in the "dip tank" will usually take the paint off of the furniture, except in extreme cases, Roberts said.

In Roberts' shop, he has installed two tanks, one which contains a hot chemical solution, and another with a cold solution. The chemical solution was developed by Delhi Chemicals, Inc., and the process is known as the "cadillac of furniture stripping methods."

Roberts has one of the two Houck franchises in Wisconsin, with the other in the Oregon area. A training session with the dealer in Oregon has helped Roberts prepare for his new part-time profession.

An interest in antiques pointed Roberts toward the furniture stripping business. "I'd go to auctions and bring home all kinds of furniture, and before long, I had too much to strip by hand," he said. "I enjoy taking an old piece of wood with paint on it, and taking that paint off to see what you've got."

A dipping tank for just his own use wasn't financially feasible, so Roberts decided to start his own shop. He is planning a grand opening of that shop for Saturday, July 29 from 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. The shop is located at the end of Kenzie St. in Barneveld.

Roberts commented that the dipping method brings wood back to its natural appearance. "Hand stripping can only get a part of the paint off of a piece of furniture, whereas these chemicals can bring it back to like natural sawed wood. And it's guaranteed not to weaken glue joints, which is sometimes a problem with other methods."

Roberts also advertises furniture repair and refinishing at his shop. "Most people will do refinishing themselves, but we can do it if they so desire," he said. He generally has someone else do repair and upholstery work for him, he added.

A former cheesemaker, Roberts works as a field man for Associated Milk Producers, Inc. (AMPI). He and his wife Gelaine have three sons and a daughter.

• Village Bar serves big,

inexpensive meals

BARNEVELD — Let me make the full public disclosure before I begin: Ed and Mardi's Village Bar is owned and operated by my father, Edward Wineke, and his wife, Mardell.

Normally, I wouldn't review a restaurant owned by my father; after all, there is some reasonable question of objectivity

But when people kept telling me about how good the food was and asking me if the owner was related to me, I thought the least I could do would be to eat there. If the food was terrible, I could always just forget I'd gone, and if it was good I'd give the old man a plug.

The night that my wife and I ate there, the food was very good. It was very good possibly because the American Dairy Association had just awarded the Village Bar its "Golden Knife" award for excellence in cooking and for the restaurant's promotion of dairy products.

Mary had shrimp and I had a New York strip steak; both of our meals were cooked perfectly and neither of us could finish them.

That backs up one thing other people had told me about the Village Bar. It serves a BIG meal.

The Village Bar serves an inexpensive meal, too. The shrimp is $4.50 and the steak was $5.95 — that's for the big sirloin. A normal sized steak is $3.95.

The restaurant also serves seafood platters, ham steaks and a variety of other foods, almost all of which are under $5. A liver and onions plate, for example, is $2.25.

So the food is good and the prices are good. What about the atmosphere?

The atmosphere of the Village Bars...well, clean.

The Village Bar is a tavern that serves food. It is not the Edgewater. It doesn't even pretend to be.

People eat at booths along one side of the barroom and in a small dining area at the rear of the building which they share with a pool table. There are no linen tablecloths and the napkins

But the place is very clean and, while the drinkers can sometimes get a bit boisterous, my father doesn't allow them to use language which would offend diners or to conduct themselves in ways that might make their dinners unpleasant.

I wouldn't be ashamed to take my 83-year-old grandmother there. In fact, my 83-year-old grandmother has eaten there.

The service, I understand, varies. It has always been very good when I've been there, but my Dad tells me that if a crowd of customers shows up all at the same time, things can slow down for a while.

Since he doesn't take reservations (at least, I don't think he takes reservations) that can happen sometimes — but then, that can happen at the Edgewater, too.

Finally, one thing I like about the Village Bar is the people who frequent it.

Like many small town taverns, it is the social gathering place for most of the community. Parents come in with small children and older farmers stop in to drink a beer or two after working hard all day. People seem to laugh a lot and most people seem to know each other.

If it weren't my father's restaurant, I'd recommend you eat there. Since it is my father's restaurant, it would be unethical for me to do so. As it is, all I can do is report that I've had good meals there, and friends of mine who had no idea who owned it have told me they've enjoyed it, too.

Ridgeway Ghost Returns to Area as Halloween Nears

Who knows what black evil lurks in the hearts of men? Sometimes the shadows tell; sometimes it's in the wind. The man-in-the-moon glides over the October sky, looking for all the world like a faceless jack-o-lantern ready for Halloween. Listen for the wind to tell its story about the most famous ghost in all of Wisconsin.

The Ridgeway ghost was of a different genus from those gentler kinds described in fairy tales. It ranged alone; it had size, and a disposition given to more than its own business or to mere harmless pranks.

Listen as LaVere Yapp, rural Ridgeway tells the story of how William Lewis met the "ole guy."

"It seems he was coming home from helping a neighbor butcher. As he crawled under a fence some kind of a mist held him back, preventing him from doing so. He slashed at it with the big butchering knife he was carrying. But no matter what he tried he couldn't get by for some reason. It wasn't long after that when the once strong robust man became but a skeleton of his former self. When he died, everyone said it was because he had met up with the Ridgeway Ghost.

Perhaps, because the Yapps, and the Lewis' are related the parition appeared to them...At a y rate, here is another story that Yapp told about his great grandfather, Richard Yapp.

"It was back in 1868. My

"It was back in 1868. My grandfather went to the kitchen to fill his pipe with tobacco. He reached for the can on the top shelf; his two young sons age four and six played on the kitchen floor; a shot rang out; their father fell to the floor, where he died of the mortal wound. A man on horseback had rode up to the cabin window and shot the man before anyone knew what was happening. Although there was much speculation, the murder was never resolved. When we hear that someone has seen the ghost, we just tell them that it is probably Grandfather Yapp trying to find out who murdered him." Noted Yapp - he wasn't laughing as he told this tale, so naturally we look a little more and find that at one time the inevitable haunted house came in as the home of this apparation.

While ghosts have occasionally taken up their abode in inhabited houses and even in luxurious palaces and castles, as a rule they prefer abandoned houses, and the more bleak, repelling, and terrible, the better to their tastes. Such a home the Ridgeway ghost found in a house some distance east of Ridgeway, which it is said that some settler had abandoned when his well went dry. It is said that some railroad section men sought shelter in this house during a terrific storm and while there had a section of the ceiling plaster fall upon their heads. This occurrence was attributed to a malevolent prank on the part of the supposed shadowy tenant of the building and confirmed its existence in the minds of many when they learned of it.

Yet another tale tells of "a dark and stormy night when a dressmaker was one night pursued by the presence with disastrous results to her health, shortly after her encounter."

Melva Phillips, in her book Along The Military Ridge To Ridgeway, tells a couple of stories: "Boo Tesch told of the McSherry's seeing an old woman dressed in white riding a goat. When one would get close to her she'd disappear into the bushes. That was out in the old mining community of Frogtown or Porters Grove."

Yet another tale is told by Nellie Tesch: "My uncle lived out there in a place that everyone called the haunted house. The ghost used to pull covers off at might."

Melva relates this story: "I have heard many times how the well had gone dry and the house was left vacant. At night a light was seen in this haunted house on the military road and the creaking of boards was heard far into the night. No one would go to investigate as they were sure it was the Ridgeway Ghost. (If you want to know the rest of this story, you can purchase the book from Melva Phillips, Ridgeway, Wisconsin for $5.00).

If you should chance to be in Ridgeway, especially as Halloween draws near, listen to the wind. You'll get a feeling, something lurks within its whispering; it rattles the dry October leaves in the gutters of the street; perhaps you had better leave, before it is too late.

Ida A. Steensland

Ida A. Steensland, age 79, Mt. Horeb, died Sunday, April 2, 1978, at a Madison hospital after a brief illness. Mrs. Steensland was born September 11, 1898, in the township of Brigham. She was married to Amos Steensland on June 12, 1934, and they farmed in the Daleyville area for many years. She was a lifelong member of the Perry Lutheran Church, it's ALCW, and the Clay Hill Circle. She attended the Clay Hill rural school. Ida was preceded in death by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Halvor Helgeson; two sisters, Julia and Annie; and her husband, Amos in 1977. Survivors include a brother, Abner of rural Barneveld; and many nieces and nephews. Funeral services were held Tuesday, April 4, at 11 a.m. from the Perry Lutheran Church with Rev. Fred Hofer officiating. Interment was at the church cemetery. The Ellestad Funeral Home was in charge.

The group then began the weather-shortened journey that they had been working toward for nearly a year, a scheduled 11/2 Mike Reilly of the Dodgeville mile parade along Commerce Chronicle while he was with the Street in Dallas, the same area Highland group, partly while he where President John F. Ken- was in his Greenwood Inn Motel nedy was shot in 1963. But, due to the fact that cold weather, ice, snow and the coldest day in 30 years (including a chill factor of -15 below zero and winds up to 25 m.p.) was upon Dallas, the 1½ m.p.h.) was upon Dallas, the 1½ making connections to get back mile parade became about a ½ to Madison. carried the group were to have January 1, a day of football, left their spot of line-up to go to football and still more football. True....,but January 1, 1979 was they stayed at their original a little different for 100 kids, position and after the few blocks some 60 parents, boosters and a had been "weathered" by the group of band instructors and 3/4 mile venture. The buses that position and after the few blocks had been "weathered" by the band a group of 100 partially frozen color guard, band members and directors marched right back to the heated buses. From there, the group went directly back to the Greenwood Inn, their home in Dallas (and a good one) since their departure from the state of the state

This story was written by since their departure from At about 9:45 a.m. in Dallas, Highland Wednesday morning, Texas that day, the Highland December 27, 1978. They hit the tubs and showers and warm beds with only a case of ability of marched from their leasting. with only a case of chills, a marched from their location at possible bit of frostbite to the fingers and a later headache development, the only reported cases of hardships suffered during the parade.

band had practiced in weather outdoors from 47 degrees during the first couple of days in Dallas to 18 degrees and sleeting on Sunday and in areas from the cafeteria, T-House and any other available room at the Greenwood Inn to the City Hall in downtown Dallas that same Sunday. When comments came from native Texas onlookers that "you're from Wisconsin and are surely used to this weather," answers back were like "hey, we wouldn't be marching in this weather in Wisconsin." And, on Sunday, with no let up in the weather in sight, the band and color guard directors, Mr. and Mrs. George Breiwa, set themselves off to find some gloves, stocking caps leotards for the members. "Cold" complaints had come from the kids after the final outdoors practice so warmer clothes were needed. But, they found no stores to be open in Dallas due to a "blue law" that disallowed the sale of clothing on Sunday. So the girls in skirts marched with bare legs on Monday and those needing gloves or hats salvaged as many as possible from chaperones, parents, motel personnel and anyone else that they could. (In fact, this reporter took parade pictures with one glove on to help keep two hands on a band member warm as she only had one glove. The other was lent to another band member who only had a right-hand

Leading up to parade time the

A lot of this may sound bad, but the whole nature was highly successful. The year or more of hard work had paid off. The little southwestern Wisconsin com-munity of Highland had raised well over the needed $15,000 to send their band to Dallas, Texas to represent their town, the county and the state in a nationally televised New Year's Day bowl parade....the Cotton Bowl. And represent them they did. They marched the parade route as flawlessly as humanly possible and received not only highly rated comments from the Highland spectators, but from television personalities and parade commentators William Conrad, Loretta Switt, Larry Hagman and Judy Norton-Taylor along with many native Texans. They had worked to prepare for that parade and they were not to be denied their hour of glory.

To the many who watched the processional on television, the crowd watching the parade came alive with applause when the Highland band came by the viewing stand. A good reason for that was that the viewing area bleachers were covered with Highland Band Boosters, some who flew to Dallas, others who rode with the band on the buses and still others who either drove their own cars or campers to the Texas city. Several Highland people were interviewed on national television while a good share of the southwestern Wisconsin contingency was captured on scanning television cameras before and during the parade.

The band and color guard also captured the hearts of the parade announcers, as what other community of 800 population had sent their high school band to the Cotton Bowl Parade? And, what other community had about 1/4 of its entire population in Dallas (nearly 1000 miles away) to watch their band perform in person on New Year's Day, 1979...especially in near subzero temperatures?

And, the football game—it was played before 32,000 fans (out of 72,000 tickets sold), one Highland band member for the first half only....and the score was mid-western team Notre Dame 35 and hometown favorite Houston 34, with the tying tally coming with time running out on the clock and the game winning extra point booted with no time left in the game.

Seats at the game were covered with ¼ inch of ice and players were noted to slide a ways when tackled. The field was readied for the game by being scraped with graders and then swept with street sweepers, an all night process.

But, compared to the Highland band and color guard performance.....Ho Hum!

Snowfall Measured in Dollars

Snow costs are mounting in proportion to the record snowfall which continues to fall on Iowa County and southwestern Wisconsin during the winter of 78-79.

Snow on the ground has reached a record 30 inches in southwestern Wisconsin, and there seems to be no break in

As the snow falls, township, village, city, and county snow crews are working overtime to keep the roads as clear as possible and to remove the snow where buildup is a problem. Some workers have been putting in as many as 80 hours a week to e necessary work done.

These man-hours are cutting quickly into the money allotted for snow removal. According to county officials, $210,000 was appropriated for 1979 for snow removal, and most of that money will probably be used this winter. That will leave very little if any money for November and December of this year, and next winter.

"We had about $16,000 in the snow fund at the end of 1978," an official at the Iowa County highway department said. "That was after it took $80,000 for the last six weeks of the year for snow removal." A total of $200,000 was allotted for snow removal for 1978, and that figure was increased to $210,000 for Those figures are for county roads only. The state will pay approximately $49,000 to Iowa County for the cost of winter maintenance in 1978. The county is contracted by the state to clear main roads through the county, such as Hwy. 18-151 and STH 23.

Harvey Bryant, head of the road maintenance crew, said that his men have been on the job nearly around the clock some days to try to keep the roads passable. "We have some guys running on a couple hours of sleep today," Bryant said Wed-nesday morning. "We're out nesday morning. "We're out plowing the roads, but in some cases they fill in with drifting snow just about as fast as we blow them out.

Bryant said that about 60 men are employed for road mainten-ance, and this time of the year only about a half dozen remain in the shop to keep the machines rolling. "We do very little general maintenance this time of the year, most is geared to keeping our snow equipment on the road," Bryant said.

Approximately 40 trucks of all shapes and sizes are on the road when the full crews is at work. Bryant noted. Keeping the trucks on the move when the snow removal is needed has meant some men work 60 to 80 hours a week, and of course, that means overtime. "Our winter maintenance fund is probably pretty much depleted already," Bryant said.

A lull between storms is usually used for resting up and repairing equipment, Bryant said, but this year, "there hasn't really been any let-up." When it isn't snowing, the men are moving the snow to make room for more.

In the city of Dodgeville, the problems have been similar. Widening streets is one of the main concerns, when the crews aren't busy plowing. "Almost all the men were over 100 hours during the last two-week pay period," according to city clerk Ramona Osborne. "I think they're doing the best job they can. A lot of people aren't aware of all the hours they spend working on the streets, but I know they really are spending a lot of time on the job."

"We've got to get some of the streets widened," city street

Bill Singer at Singer Lumber Company in Dodgeville said that it is difficult to generalize as to whether or not snow should be shoveled off of a particular building. "It depends on the construction of the building, and how much load a roof can take," Singer said. "Flat roofs are obviously the biggest problem, and places with two stories where the snow will build up below the second level is also a problem. If you have a four to six foot drift building up, you probably should be concerned."

Singer added that the biggest source of damage is the ice build-up beneath the snow, which makes for a heavier load. This will also be a problem as the snow starts to melt, and you get a back-up of water on the roof. A lot of buildings will have problems of water leaking inside because of the tremendous pressure on the roof."

A general rule would indicate that if a building has a "reasonable pitch," it would take quite a load of snow to cause a collapse, Singer said.

commissioner John Roder said. "It depends on if it snows, whether or not we can spend time widening. When there's snow on the roads, we have to be working on that at nearly full force.

Roder noted that with seven men available, it takes six to operate the three plow trucks, a salt truck, an enloader, and a grader. "We can't hardly do it all," Roder said. "We were out until 2:30 this morning (Wednesday) and we'll be out before midnight again tonight working on the streets. There are some things we just don't have time

Shoveling sidewalks is one thing that the city crews haven't been able to get at, since city streets are of a higher priority. "We've had complaints that we only shovel the snow when it's light, but that's the only time we have time to do it," Roder said.

Keeping city parking lots free of snow is another major problems, Roder said. "A lot of times, there are cars scattered all over the lots, so it's very difficult to take a big truck in and clear it out," he noted. "If everyone would park together, it would sure help.

Alternate side parking on icy streets is also a necessity, and Roder also urged people to keep cars parked along the same side of the street during the daylight hours. "It's much easier for us to plow a street when all the vehicles are parked on the same

Finally, Roder urged homeowners not to blow or push snow from their driveways or sidewalk back onto city streets. "It gets so bad sometimes that we have to go out with the trucks and clear them off again," Roder said. "If everyone would just blow the snow back onto their yards, it wouldn't be such a problem. There's not enough salt in it to hurt a yard.'

As for how much money all of the work is costing, Roder said "I imagine our snow budget is pretty well shot.'

Roof Collapses

Steve Venden at Morton Buildings said that the strength of a building is "all relative to the amount of ice that melts underneath the snow." The collapse problem has thus far been confined to barns and buildings with flat roofs, and Venden said to prevent cave-ins, the building must be "engineered right in the first place. buildings and pole-type buildings are designed to meet the same state codes as homes, whereas some ag buildings (such as barns) really don't have to meet such tough standards." In spots where problems are anticipated, Venden said that extra supports are used to prevent snow from becoming too much for a roof to

One problem that farmers face is the unavailability of insurance for outbuildings such as barns in case of cave-ins. Woody Erickson State Farm Insurance in Dodgeville said that no insurance is available from any company to cover collapses of outbuildings caused by a snow overload. 'Insurance coverage of barns and other outbuildings is usually pretty much limited to the perils of fire, lightening, wind, hail, and vandalism," Erickson said. As for homes, Erickson said that the coverage is available, providing that the homeowner has secured "form three" insurance. He noted that a lesser policy would not cover damage due to a collapse from snow.

Businesses may be covered as well, depending on the type of insurance purchased, Erickson said. "There are always limitations to any kind of contract." he added. "There is no such thing as a policy that covers everything fully. There is always some exceptions and some exclusions." He said homeowners and businessmen should check on what type of coverage they carry on their property, and make sure it is sufficient.

Iowa County Resource Agent Everette Olsen said that overhangs on buildings and flat roofs cause the most problems. "If a home is not well insulated, heat will escape and cause the snow to melt near the edge of a roof," he said. "That will turn into a pond of water under the snow, and that's when the problems will start." He urged people to check their roofs for that water build-up, and remove.

To eliminate any danger, remove the snow from your roof. Last week in Mineral Point. the 7th grade basketball team shoveled roofs in the business district in return for contributions to a pizza party.

One person on our staff made a snow sled to clear the snow off of his steeply pitched roof. Two persons, one on each side of the house, pull the snow-sled back and forth over the roof removing the snow. If any of our readers have a similar problem and would like details, call our office at 935-2331. We'll give you a construction plan and our staffer indicated that he took about 10 minutes to build and about an hour in use to clear the snow from his home.

Area roof collapses have caused concern among farmers, homeowners, and businessmen in Iowa County as the heavy snows continue to blanket the buildings and the countryside.

A second barn collapse in the county was reported Tuesday (Jan. 23), again in the Barneveld area. The center of a barn on the Winton (Bud) Swenson farm collapsed under the heavy pressure of the snow, but the milking area underneath the hay mow survived the cave-in. No cattle were injured in Tuesday's collapse, although 22 cattle were killed and seven more were butchered after a similar incident a week earlier at Trademark Farms about two miles north on County Trunk K.

Collapses of other businesses throughout southern Wisconsin have left people concerned that there might be more cave-ins locally if the severe winter weather continues. The weather bureau has urged homeowners and owners of businesses to check roofs for snow cover, and if the snow is building up in excess, to clear it away.

"McCutchin Day" Well Attended

"McCutchin Day" held at the Hyde Chapel recently and sponsored by the Hyde Community Association was well attended by family friends and by the descendents of Robert A. McCutchin a Scotchman, who was born in in, a Scotchman, who was born in 1781, in Ireland. Pearl McCutchin Hughes reported in her condensed history of the McCutchins that when the sons and daughters of Robert A. McCutchin came to America in the 1840's, several settled in the Arena township, in a fertile valley which became known as "Mc-Cutchin Hollow." Here, Alec, Robert, Jane, Eliza and Ann made homes. Jane married Clemons Moreback, Eliza married Robert Hamilton and Ann married Thomas Hamilton. Hugh ran a lumber yard in Spring Green and Andrew was the proprietor of the Farmers' Hotel in Arena. James was connected with a steamer which furnished supplies to the forts along the Mississippi River and later farm-

On "McCutchin Day," descendents of Robert A. McCutchin arrived from Chicago, Wauwatosa, Madison, Waupun, Sun Prairie and the surrounding Area. One branch of the family Jane McCutchin Moreback through the Ed White Sr. family can claim 480 descendents, as reported by Helen White Loy, who gave an interesting resume of the family. The eldest descendent present was her father, Ed. White II, who at age 89, looked a young 69. Two of his sisters, Berniece White Sheehan and Mary White Campbell had taught at the McCutchin School.

The youngest descendent present was Barbara Burns, daughter of Nancy McCutchin Burns. Robert Howard McCutchin's son, Robert, is the sixth in direct and unbroken line to carry the name "Robert." Robert Howard and Nancy are the son and daughter of Mrs. Gertie McCutchin and the late Robert or "Bob" McCutchin.

Mrs. Doris Hamilton Austin, Wheaton, Ill., reported briefly on the descendents of Ann McCutchin Hamilton. Mr. and Mrs. Delbert Hamilton, Wauwatosa, and Doris Austin are members of this branch. The descendents of Eliza McCutchin Hamilton were represented by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hodgson, Mrs. Mildred Hodgson Hottman, Arena, and Kim Bennett, Chicago. A grandson of James McCutchin, Leonard McCutchin, and his wife, Blanch, had the largest family present. Dorothy McCutchin, Madison, represented the Alec McCutchin branch.

"McCutchin Day" was feted at the Hyde Chapel recently when descendents of Robert A. McCutchin and friends paid tribute to this pioneer family. The event was sponsored by the Hyde Community Association.

The McCutchin farm was established in 1847 by Robert McCutchin, a Scotchman, who was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1827. He homestead-ed land in "McCutchin Hollow" and was present at the land auction in Mineral Point when 40 acres were certified to him on May 20, 1847. He added to this acreage, worked industriously and improved the land. He built a new frame home sometime prior to 1865. His son, John McCutchin, followed him and farmed many years adding many modern conveniences. This has been a three generation farm and was a Century farm in 1948 when it was owned by Mr. and Mrs. Curtis McCutchin. On the adjoining farms resided Mr. and Mrs. Robert or "Bob" McCutchin and Mr. and Mrs. Tom McCutchin. 18 legend This branch of the family was represented on "McCutchin Day" by Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Everyone agreed the "Mc-Cutchin Day" was a success. It was also a nostalgic day - a day to renew old acquaintances and to meet c'stant cousins for the first time.

Jennifer Humphrey Blue Mounds

The Barneveld and Ridgeway Volunteer Fire Department responded to a call at the Jones Hardware Store in Barneveld last Friday shortly after noon. According to store owner Clarence Jones, a short in the wiring was the cause of the blaze, which was for the most part confined to the second story. Jones said that out-of-season merchandise was stored upstairs in the building, but he said he could not estimate how much of the goods were damaged. The store, which has been in the Jones family since 1905, has remained open since the fire.

Building His Own

Raymond Peterson's grandfather, Peter Bratbakken, dug a hole into a bluff and lived in it the first winter after coming to America from Norway in 1856. The next year he built a log house, which was torn down after a few years. Now the grandson is building a log house for himself and his wife, Lulu, as a retirement occupation. Peterson, 68, (shown) and his son, Robert, 34, cured 49,800 board feet of home sawed lumber for the house, which has 10 by 10 inch white pine logs for siding. It is in the Town of Moscow, Iowa County.

Jack Leary, Barneveld, has a mountain of signs to paint for Wisconsin Farm Progress Days to be held October 9-11 at the Charles Mueller and Roger James' farms near Cobb. Leary, a CETA employee, has been helping Farm Progress Days Executive Secretary, LaVerne Draves, with some of the work involved in getting ready for the big three day event here in Iowa County. More than a semi-load of signs arrived at Iowa Grant High School recently. Deer Find A Friend In Ray Raymond Peterson is busy with the trapping season but still takes time to take care of his friends - the deer. Peterson is a retired farmer who lives with his wife Lulu in a hunting cabin south of Blue Mounds on Co. Trunk F.

"They think I'm their mother, Peterson explained. But his raising of the deer has changed his perspective on their life styles; and that communion with nature is reflected here in his words.
"OUR DEER"

Century after century our deer herd has been the no one, of all our wildlife. All of the predators including the human being have depended on them for survival. They have no defense except fear. The fawns are born, abso-lutely defenseless. They lie hidden, and the first few days you can pick them up and lay them down again and they won't even move a muscle.

A great many are born in the hayfields and a great many are killed, their only defense is to lay motionless in the hay and they sure are a mess when they go through the haybines.

Quite a few of the farmers will stand up when operating their haybines, to better see down into the hay, even then, they find mutilated fawns when they bale or rake.

The spotted fawns are well camoflaged and are near impossible to see. I have stepped right over them without making them out. They are about the most beautiful and grateful of all the wild animals. Many people cannot resist the temptation to pick them up and take them home, not realizing the obligation they are taking on as "foster mother" to the delicate beautiful fawns.

Most of them die, because very few people know that they need as much attention and love as a new born baby. For awhile they need a balanced formula. They have to be closely watched and regulated. The formula has to be changed to hold a balance between constipation and scours.

Some few have even killed them by feeding them "milk replacers" to reduce the cost of

I have raised a few. It goes like this. Some farmer friend calls me on the telephone and says, found an abandoned fawn and took him home, but I can't get him to drink. What do I do. I tell them how to mix the formula and explain to them their obligations. The next day they call and ask me if I will take it off their hands as they have no success.

By that time the job is harder. You have to spend enough time with them to gain their confi-

It is illegal to take them, and if you pen them up the warden has

As soon as the fawn has accepted me as his or her mother I leave them to come and go as they please. Bottled milk purchased is not good. Whole milk right from the farm cooler is about the only way.

The rewards are love and trust and appreciation like you cannot believe. Last year I raised three. Right now I have two that come every day. These two are just about one year old. One still comes in the house. He was picked up by a farmer in the next county. The other was rescued in the winter in below zero weather from a pack of dogs. There was some open water in a stream and the deer was in open water up to his ears. He had been in the water for maybe an hour and was so paralyzed and numb that he to be carried home. He weighed then about 85 pounds.

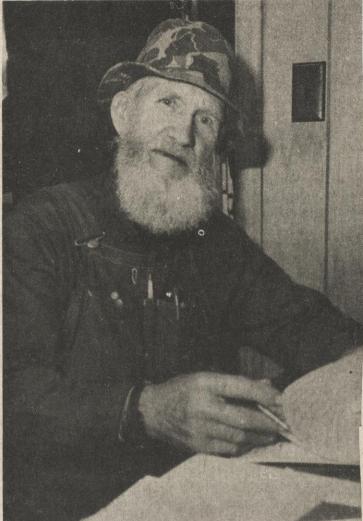

It was quite a battle to save him and for 2 days and 2 nights I kept him wrapped in electric blankets. I spent a lot of time with him and gained his confidence. I combed and petted and fed him till he was strong enough to turn out. I have a log sawed into a trough with a chain saw. In this I keep shelled corn all the time. All winter it averaged about two gallons of shelled corn per day. Of course the tame deer often bring their wild friends home to dinner. The rewards for feeding wildlife are very satisfy-

My wife has several bird feeders out all the time. We were feeding over 40 goldfinches last winter. They need thistle and seed imported from Ethiopia. We bought well over $100.00 worth of thistle seed. Now the middle of May we still have about 15 coming yet and they have put on their courting clothes. Bright yellow, "really beautiful."

Back to the deer. Our county warden told me he picked up 27 deer this last winter and spring that had been killed by dogs and that is only a fraction of the dog kill. Once a dog has run a deer he will never quit. The pity of it is that as fleet as a deer is, he can not out last a dog.

Any dog, even a beagle, that is in good condition can catch and kill a deer. Specially late in that winter when the snows have been heavy and the deer are in bad physical condition. We badly need some new legislation on this. Presently we are not legally allowed to shoot a dog pursuing deer. We are suppose to call a warden but by the time he gets to the scene, the dogs have gone.

First we need at least a $50.00 license on all female dogs capable of reproduction. Every cute little puppy grows up to be a dog that sooner or later must be disposed spot on the farm where I was born. We cut the trees and made all of our own lumber, cured it outdoors.

The white pines came from the perpendicular bluffs along the rivers and streams in the south west of Wisconsin. The reason they were still there is the fact that the farmers couldn't get them out. We bought them of. Too many take the easy route. Haul him out in the country and dump him out. When hunger gets acute enough, the wolf in him comes out, another killer living on wildlife.

I am a Copenhagen snuff eater. The first fawn I raised, got started eating my worn out chews of Copenhagen. He sure got hung up on the stuff. He nearly always comes home twice a day. When I saw him coming I had to get the Copenhagen out of my mouth, because if I didn't he would try and get it out himself. He would eat it down and I would take a fresh one. He had to have it, so I felt I would never lose him to the wild. Then some crazy kid hit him with a car and that was the end of that one.

Since I started raising them I have not been able to make myself kill one. I used to hunt a great deal, Canada, Michigan, North Dakota, Wyoming and of course, Wisconsin. I saved all my deer horns and about 10 or 12 years ago I had 36 racks up in my gravary. Then my barn and granary burned down and I felt pretty bad about losing my collection.

I used to think I was a sportsman. I had a 30-40 Krug with open sights, that was responsible for my success. No I guess that is not an accurate statement. Quite a number of times it was that beautiful little lady called "Luck." She was always with me and on impossible shots she rode and steered the bullet, I am quite sure.

Then I read about a new rifle coming out. "The international sporting rifle." A 30-06 with a Belgian barrel, a German action and a French walnut stalk. I had to have one, and equipped it with a good scope. Then I began to feel ashamed of myself.

A man on a hill with a rifle like that, could lay down any animal within a half mile.

I began to question the sport-ing angle, so I went to the bow and arrow. Since then I killed a number of deer and I can count up 11 black bear registered with the bow. Plus that I helped out a few with a little less luck.

Then came the brush pile with all the pulleys I rejected that and still use my small 45 lb. recurve. Naked. I still have to hunt bear with that little bow and I am 71 vears young.

I have a log trapping shack that I now share with my wife. My children are all grown up and pretty much on their own.

The log house (trappers shack) is 34 by 44 feet and built out of 10 by 10 inch logs sawed on three sides. The main beams are solid 12 by 12 timbers. The full basement is blasted out of bedrock. The shack has four levels counting the basement and attic, 11 inches and up to 15 inches on the largest logs on the round outside. I was my own architect and designed and built it with the help of my wife and my youngest son whom I paid and hired.

First we sawed 17000 board feet and built a 40 by 60 shed. Bought all of the woodworking machinery, a tractor powered 4 ton planer that will take a 28 inch board, etc. We tongue and grooved it ourselves and all. Then we love wood and knots so we varnished everything before we put it together. Everything is full measure lumber. We made a law that no board in the entire house is less than a full inch thick. We have used now over 200 gallons of Polyurathane varnish so far. We payed for sawing 49 thousand 800 board feet of lumber for the house and we now have between 7000 and 8000 board feet of lumber cured over two years and ready to work. This is all black walnut and cherry. For finishing. We have lived in the house 2 winters. We have a combination wood and oil furnace and find it easy and cheap to heat.

We have a fireplace to build yet. It is a bit unusual and they have had us on t.v. several

Whenever the trapping season is open the house has had to wait. We cut our first tree four years ago and Feb. 4th. We are very happy with the house and the

We are retired farmers. Our crops are now gardens and our stock are deer and wild animals. It is a good life. Come and see us sometime. Eight miles south of Blue Mounds, Wis. on the east side of County Trunk F in Iowa County, Wis.

New Life at West Point Starts For Former Barneveld Girl

This article is reprinted from "The Winchester Star," a newspaper in Winchester, Massachussetts. Featured in the story is Sarah Fotsch, formerly of Barneveld. She attended Barneveld Public Schools from the first grade through her first year of high school. She is the daughter of Drs. Paul and Estelle Fotsch. Paul Fotsch was formerly the minister at the Barneveld Congregational United Church of Christ.

The day begins with reveille at 6 a.m. Only 15 minutes later, the new cadets have 55 minutes of physical training. After breakfast, the hard work continues. Every hour is filled with classes, calisthenics, or organized athletics. Then, the exhausted cadets end the day with taps at 10 p.m. For the next four years, Sarah

For the next four years, Sarah Fotsch of 16 Elm St. will face this type of schedule at the United States Military Academy at West Point.

Her six-week training period, the most difficult part of a cadet's education, began July 2. Fotsch said in an interview, "If I can make it through the first six weeks, I will come out a stronger person. Stronger than if I attended a regular coed school."

Fotsch fully realizes, and accepts, the difficulties she will face. The physical and emotional strain, and the discipline appear as a challenge to her. She feels discipline is good, but she knows it will be "really gruelling."

it will be "really gruelling."

"I will be doing something every minute," she said. "The emotional stress will be hard."

Admitting that she is a little afraid, she said "right now, I don't know how I'm going to make it," but she feels she needs to be challenged.

She views West Point "as a duel challenge. Something that trains a person both physically and mentally." She understands she has a five year commitment to the army after graduation, but she "hopes that what I will gain will make it worth it."

Aside from facing the regular difficulties of adapting to military life, she has to put up with harassment for being a woman. Only five percent of West Point's students are women, and the last all-male class graduated this year. She said there are some men who feel women do not belong at West Point, and that they give women a hard time.

Fotsch originally applied to, and was accepted by, all three military academies, Navy, Air Force, and Army. Senator Kennedy appointed her to West Point, and Congressman Markey nominated her for the Navy and Air Force academies. West Point received over 3000 applications from women, and Fotsch was among the 110 to be accepted.

She chose West Point for several reasons. She feels the relationship between teachers and students is good. All the professors live on the base, and are easy to contact. The classes are fairly small, the largest being 18 students.

The facilities for cross country running, Fotsch's favorite sport, and past-time, also attracted her to West Point. The coach wants her to be on the track team. She said "I never thought I was good enough to be on a college team." West Point supplies all equipment, and has an orthopedic doctor.

Fotsch is a 1979 graduate of Winchester High School, and is the daughter of Drs. Paul and Estelle Fotsch. She has three brothers, David and Sam, who attend College in Wisconsin, and Lawrence, who will be a junior at WHS. Her family came to Winchester from Wisconsin, where they had lived for nine years, in 1976.

While in high school, she was constantly involved in sports, and she received many awards in recognition of her achievements. She played on a Wisconsin regional basketball team, and was on junior varsity at WHS. As a member of a Winchester swim team, she was given the most improved award.

Her most outstanding accomplishments were in track. She began running when she was a freshman, and gradually built up to jogging six to eight miles a day. She was on the cross country team three years, and was captain during the last winter season. She ran for two seasons on the Middlesex All Star League.

Fotsch has competed in several marathons. She ran in the Boston Bonnie Bell Mini Marathon, which is 6.2 miles, twice, finishing in the top 125, out of 1000 runners, both years. This year, she placed second in the Winchester Marathon.

Academically, she worked hard, taking an extra course each semester. She received recognition from the English Department for her writing skills, and published poems in the quarterly Running Magazine this spring.

Her extracuricular interests include clarinet, which she played in the WHS band and orchestra, pottery, macrame, drawing, and most sports.

Actively involved in the United Church of Christ, she was a member of a youth group called Forum. As the worship secretary, she participated in services that were held every Sunday."

"It was a really good experience," commented Fotsch. "It made you able to ask questions among your peers, and learn together."

Last summer, she worked with the church "Just a Start" program for the disadvantaged in the inner city. She said it was a "fantastic way to spend a summer." Fotsch worked at a playground, organizing games, and preparing for competitions between different parks. She said "What I really enjoyed about the program was learning about people from other cultures."

Also in connection with her church, she attended a survival seminar. They learned what they could eat in the wild, and bushwacked up mountains.

Fotsch is not sure what her future plans are. She does not know if she wants to be an army officer. Since she enjoys both sciences and arts, she is uncertain which she will pursue when she completes her military service.

In a section of WHS yearbook that describes the students, one quote appropriately depicts Fotsch. It reads:

"Harbors are safe places for ships, but that isn't what ships are for."

Evie Gust, Hyde, says "My next stop will be Hollywood, you know anything can happen, kid." Evie and her Hyde Store were filmed for viewing recently by Channel 15 T.V. news staff Rick Fetherston and his cameraman.

County police arrested a Barneveld man last Thursday in a suspected arson case stemming from an afternoon fire at a village

The Iowa County Sheriff's Department arrested Jesse Draper, 29, Barneveld, in connection with a fire that gutted two rooms of his parents' home in Barneveld. No one was injured in the fire.

Draper is being held in lieu of $5,000 bond at the Iowa County Jail awaiting a court hearing. He allegedly told patrons in a Barneveld tavern of his plans before starting the blaze. A short while later, fire broke out in the home at 203 Kenzie St. in Barneveld.

Two to three first floor rooms were "gutted" in the fire, according to LeRoy Evans, Barneveld fire chief.

The second floor of the twostory home, which was being remodeled, incurred extensive smoke and water damage, Evans

The Barneveld chief confirmed that the State Fire Marshall's office would be called in to make a determination of arson.

Witnesses at the scene after the 4:02 p.m. alarm commented that heavy smoke emitted from first and second floor windows of the house and seeped through the roof also.

The Barneveld fire department responded with three fire trucks and called the Ridgeway department for assistance. The Ridgeway fire department sent two trucks to control the fire, which was extinguished in about

Gas becoming a hot item for city's thieves

By BILL JOLIN
Capital Times Staff Writer

Gasoline has become so precious that people are stealing it more and more often.

Since the price of gas jumped earlier this year, operators of local self-service stations say they have noticed an increase in what they call "drive-offs".

That's when a car pulls into a pump, usually the farthest one from the station building, and the driver fills up and drives off without paying.

"Drive-offs are getting worse as the prices go up," said one local station manager. "We get half a dozen a week."

His comment was echoed by others in Madison. The Transport Oil Co., which has several stations in Madison, said it has become so common that the managers don't always report it. A spokesman said that the thieves are mostly young people.

The thefts don't seem limited to one area of town. Both downtown and suburban stations have had problems.

Michelle Baca, assistant manager of the Martin station on West Washington Avenue, said the thefts happen mostly at night. "I have noticed more, especially with the rise in the price of gasoline." she said. Her station gets two or three a week, more than ever before.

SHIELA REAVES/The Capital Times

Sue Rickey, an attendant at a local Mobil Oil station, uses binoculars to check the amount of gas customers are putting in their tanks. Ken Menge, manager of the Clark station at 2910 E. Washington Ave., said his station has noticed more gas thefts too.

A manager of another station said he's starting to be able to tell those who are going to drive off without paying. They usually pull into the pumps furthest from the office and stay around the car longer, checking oil or windshield fluid, and appearing a bit nervous.

There's a maximum fine of $500 for conviction of theft of gas, but not everyone gets caught. If the station manager can get a description of the car and a license number and calls the police right away, the car has a good chance of being spotted and the driver caught.

But it's often hard to get a description or a license number, especially at busy times of the day.

And some drivers are downright sneaky. They will take their license plates off before they get to the station.

That way, even if they're seen, a description of their cars isn't as good. The license plate ploy has been happening more lately. And there are other tactics the stations would rather not talk about for fear people would try them out.

The problem isn't limited to Madison. Reports from Milwaukee say that theft of gas and the license-plate dodge also have been growing there.

Dear Mae

THANKS, for the 25 years you published the SHOPPER. I know many times we were late getting our ad to you and it was very inconvenience for you. Now I hope on Tuesday evenings you can go fishing with Ben instead of folding the "SHOPPER"

I remember talking with you several weeks ago and you stated that if all of our business places advertized weekly the SHOPPER would not have had to struggle every few months. The "SHOPPER" started about 1950 with Rev. Sanford the first publisher. Bill Olson and Marcene Thousand also worked with it before you.

Russ Stenseth, Dave Baumgartner, Arch Campbell, Anton Armeson, Lee Nyers, Verner O'Nell, Stewart Watson (just to name a few) started the paper as a community service and an economical source of advertizing. It has served its purpose well and with community cooperation will continue.

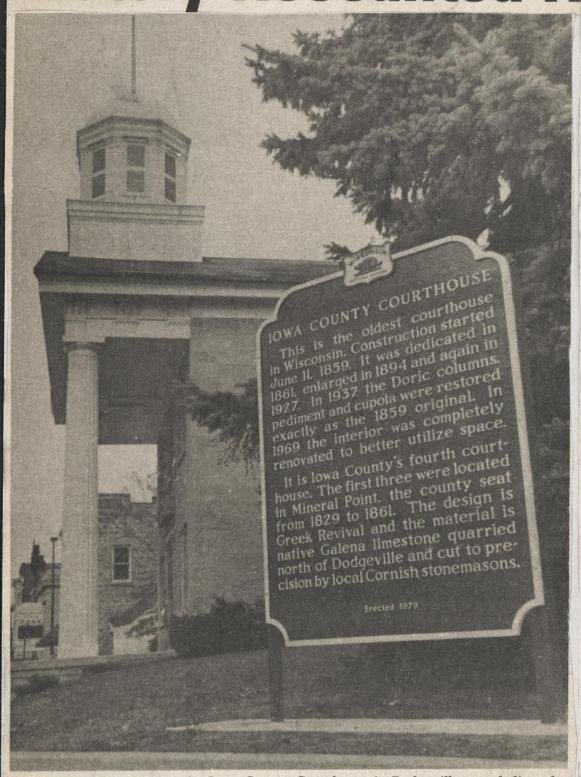

Mae, if the shopper doesn't continue how are guys like Leo Clerkin, Fred Segebrecht, Bob Arnesen and Vernon Oimoen going to find freezers, housekeepers and other dainty articles? I know you have given Linda Schlimgen a lot of help to get started.

THANKS AGAIN

lowa County Courthouse History Recounted Here

Interior remodelling has been done for operational convenience, and rooms and locations of offices altered according to

An official marker for the Iowa County Courthouse in Dodgeville was dedicated at ceremonies Tuesday evening, October 16.

The County Board of Supervisors met in its usual fall session at Mineral Point, presided over by Mr. L.W. Joiner of Wyoming Township. Considerable talk and speculation among its members was brought to a climax, when, on November 13, 1858, the chairman appointed a committee to confer with the citizens of Dodgeville regarding the choice of a site for the erection of a new Court House. It had long been believed that all citizens of the county would best be served with the County Court and County Offices more centrally located. This feeling was shared by many of the Supervisors.

This committee was authorized to receive proposals for the new Court House, and to report at the adjourned Board meeting.

Several weeks passed without an open meeting but in the December issue of the Dodge-ville 'Advocate,' notice was given of a meeting of all interested people, to be held in Dodgeville at 12:00 o'clock noon on Monday, January 3, 1859. The report of this meeting was to be made to the County Board when it met in Mineral Point on Tuesday, January 4, 1859.

The people who attended the meeting had long been active in the proposed program. The cost to the taxpayers of the county for a new Court House in Dodgeville when one was in use in Mineral Point was a critical issue. To compensate the taxpayers for any expense, a bond issue of $8,000.00 had been approved by the State Legislature and raised by popular subscription around Dodgeville. This amount was deposited with the County Treasurer, in trust, for a building fund. Additional private contributions later increased this the Commissioners.

of the committee, which, when beginning in London with the presented, was received and display of the Greek marble placed on file. The committee figures and architectural fragoffered the following resolution: Lord Elgin, and the interest be elected whose duty it shall be flavor. at their earliest opportunity to cause to be prepared plans and specifications for a building of sufficient capacity and proper construction for a Court House and Jail with proper Jurors' rooms and Jailer's residence, not to exceed in the cost of $10,000.00 and conditioned that Eight Thousand and Ten Dollars of what is denominated the Dodgeville Bonds shall be taken at par and parts toward the payment of same; that the said Committee locate the ground upon which said building shall stand, and after taking good and sufficient warranty deed for the same, not to cost exceeding the sum of One Dollar; that the said Committee then proceed to advertise and receive bids, choose between the same, and proceed to let the contract, taking bonds for the faithful and speedy completion of the work, and to do any other matter or thing pertaining to the same, deemed necessary for the best interests of the Committee.'

The program and interest continued at a rapid pace from then

The January 11th issue of the Mineral Point Tribune contained the following item. "TO ARCHI-TECTS, Plans, accompanied by specifications, for building to be used as a Court House and Jail for Iowa County, will be received by the undersigned Commissioners appointed for that purpose of by the Board of Supervisors: said building not to be of less capacity than the one now in use, to be built of stone, in a workmanlike and credible manner, to contain a large Hall for the use of the Court, suitable Jury Rooms, dwelling for the residence of the Jailers' family, together with Cells for the safekeeping of prisoners. Said plans and specifications must be delivered to the Commissioners at Dodgeville on or before Friday, the 21st instant. For the best plan accompanied by the proper specifications complete, the sum of FIFTY DOLLARS will be paid; for the second best, the sum of TWENTY FIVE DOLLARS. G.M. Ashmore, L.W. Joiner, Francis Little: Commissioners. Dated, Mineral Point, January 8, 1859. Iowa County Advocate please copy.

The Building Committee met on Friday, January 21st and of the plans offered, the one drawn by Ernest Wiesen, Esq., of Mineral Point was adopted by architectural The The Board met at 7:00 o'clock known as "The Greek Revival" the evening of January 4th in had reached its peak in the Mineral Point to hear the report middle west. This period had its was discharged. Mr. Joiner then ments that were discovered by "Resolved: That a Building Com-mittee consisting of three of the changes and modifications it soon present members of this Board developed a distinctive American

The Court House in use at Mineral Point at this time was of this design and period. It may be considered unusual, that the design of the Mineral Point Court House, in an area away from the centers of culture and learning contained many refinements beyond the understanding of a layman's knowledge of some of the fine points of architectural detail. The columns had an inward inclination from the vertical axis line, producing an optical illusion of greater solidity, a detail incorporated in Greek temples. Its Doric pediment and entablature was directly inspired by the classic Parthenon in Athens. Ernest Wiesen's knowledge of the pattern books, the national popularity of the design and the citizens familiarity with the Mineral Point Court House were three good reasons for using such a plan for the one about to be built.

The design and plan for the new building called for a twostory rectangular structure to be built of dressed native Galena limestone, 65 feet long, 42 feet wide and 44 feet to the ridge of the roof. An overhanging frame Doric pediment surmounted by a dome-shaped louvred cupola, supported by four fluted columns forming a ten foot portico, con-stituted the classic facade. Cut stone steps and stone flagging for the portico floor completed the entrance. The cupola was to rise 20 feet above the ridge of the roof, giving an overall height of 64 feet. The columns were to be 25 feet high with a base diameter of 3 feet and tapered to 21/2 feet at their tops and were to be made of fluted 12-inch pine planks, 2 inches thick, nailed to a center core of pine timbers. The stone walls were to be 24 inches thick. Chimneys for the stoves that were to be used were to be of local red brick and the window openings were to be two sash, each sash with six glass panes. All exterior woodwork was to be painted white with the exception of the louvres in the cupola and those were to be painted shutter

The jail in the southwest corner was to be escape-proof, not like the jail in Mineral Point where a prisoner sawed his way to escape through the hewn oak logs. The 24-inch stone walls were to be lined with quarterinch iron plate with an inside lining of 2-inch oak planking. There were to be no windows, the only opening for ventilation being a narrow slot at the bottom of the door 4 by 12 inches. Sanitary arrangements even for those days were crude. A pipe through the stone wall to a pail outside partially solved the problem. (This hole may still be seen outside on the south wall). Offices for county officials and two vaults and the jail were to be on the first floor and the Court Room and Jurors Rooms were to be on the second floor.

The front entrance, adapted from one in Shaw's book, was designed to show the ability of the Cornish stone cutters who would without question be employed on the construction of the building. The pilasters either side of the door entrance and the pediment above with the moulds, wreaths and ornaments with the date '1859' were to be an example of the cutting of the local stone that would be unsurpassed in the county. This was not to be in the classical tradition of the Elgin architectural fragments, but the expression of the exacting work of local stone artists as interpreted from the design by the architect who knew well the craftsmanship of the stone cutters who would be working on the construction of the building.

The Building Committee was well pleased with the accepted plan and construction bids from contractors were quickly received. Sites for the location had been studied and the one most logical had been selected.

The land was originally entered from the United States Government to William I. Madden, he having applied for a grant of land in October of 1835 and received the land patent in January of 1849.

Hoskins, Stephens & Company were to be the contractors and their workmen were eager and ready for employment. The local stone quarries were examined. The stone had to be the proper density, texture, color and free from seams and cracks. The quarry on the Charles Paull farm in Township 6 North, Section 15, north of the village produced the quality of stone required.

The exterior and interior woodwork was executed in the most creditable and workmanlike manner. The Wisconsin white pine used for the columns, timbering, and other purposes was rafted down the Wisconsin River and grounded on a landing north of the present Village of Arena.

From there it was hauled overland to be fabricted at the building site. Some of the timbers 42 feet long, 12 inches thick and 18 inches high must have indeed presented a formidable transportation problem in a day of horse drawn carriers and rough, rutted dirt roads, to say nothing of raising them into position on top of the high stone walls of the building. Oak was also used along with the pine for beams and framing in the roof, cupola and portico pediment. This was obtained from the local stands of timber.

At the fall session of the Board of Supervisors held in Mineral Point, Mr. Joiner reported on November 16 that the building was "carried up to the roof, the stone work finished ready for the roof, so far to the satisfaction of the Committee; and an evidence that the roof will be put on before the first of January.

Another year went by with irritating anticipation. Again at the fall session of the Board held at Mineral Point, the Building Committee, on November 11, 1860, begged to report that "said building nearly completed and will be ready to be delivered over complete by the first of the coming month." This report was optimistic and was presented not only as routine Board business procedure but also as routine Board business procedure but also as an effort to quite private questioning as to the mounting costs that were expected to surpass the original building estimate.

Over five and one-half months later, on April 23, 1861, the Iowa County Board of Supervisors finally were obliged to meet in the still unfinished Court House in Dodgeville. The rooms were not finished and woud not be ready until the first of July.

On July 9, 1861, a resolution was presented to the Board to the effect that: "Resolved that the County Building in the City of Dodgeville be accepted of the Contractors and the Treasurer be authorized to surrender to them the securities in his hands generally known as the Dodgeville Bonds and Mortgages." This resolution was adopted, but again on November 13, 1861, at the Fall Session of the Board another resolution was presented to the effect that, "Resolved that the proper offices are hereby authorized to assign the bonds known as the Dodgeville Bonds to the Contractors of the County Building." At the same session the Board adopted a resolution allowing that the "Court House not be used other than for Public Speeches and Lecturers.' closed this construction period.

In the enusing years the County Offices were pressed for working and storage space for the ever increasing records and reports that were required. Special committees had been an-pointed to study the need for Court House room and survey the situation. Reports were brought in, only to be tabled after open discussion. The situation grew desperate and at the November session of 1893, the County Board voted to build an addition on the west end of the Court House. This brought to a climax the indecisions and differences of opinion that had existed for years.

An addition, 42 feet by 42 feet, was recommended being built on the west end adjoining the present structure, to be two stories high and of the same style of architecture. The first floor was to contain the County Judge's Room, 20 feet by 22 feet, a Judge's private office 141/2 feet by 16 feet, and three fire proof vaults 10 feet by 13 feet. The second floor was to have four rooms, Circuit Judge's room 15 feet by 18 feet, a library 16 feet by 22 feet, and two jury rooms 15 feet by 21 feet and 14 feet by 15

When the bids were opened they were found to be very close. Whitford and Kelly received the contract for $6,500.00 for the mansonry, Prideaux and Davis and woodwork, and Thomas Clayton $187.00 for the painting. Mr. Llwewllyn Davis, the County Treasurer, drew the plans and specifications for $27.00 and was prevailed upon to take charge and supervise the construction. The native limestone was to be used to match exactly the original building.

Work progressed rapidly throughout the summer and a report was submitted by the Committee at the fall session. It was found that after making the excavations for the foundation at 41/2 feet, the red clay soil would not adequately support a building of this size and weight and that it would be necessary to excavate to a depth of 12 feet in order to build the foundation on solid rock. For this unforseen labor and work, the contractors were to receive an additional $400.00. An inside flight of stairs between the old and the new addition was constructed at a cost of $50.00. A new wood shed, toilets, steel files, furniture and carpeting brought the total cost of the addition to $9,354.09. This structure served for about a quarter century.

With the increasing growth and economic expansion of the county and the many new administrative offices that were necessary to serve the citizens during the next quarter century more office space was needed. It had been an unfortunate oversight on the part of the original Court House Committee, that all of the land within the block where the structure was to be erected had not been purchased, if for no other reason than to provide the proper setting for so important a building. A jail and jailer's residence had been built to the rear and a little south of the first addition, and when the problem of expansion again came up for consideration, the only choice was to the north and

This second addition 52 feet long and 44 feet wide was to be built at a right angle and attached to the first addition, forming an ell to the building. The plan as laid out by Edward Tough, an architect from Madison, included three vaults, a storage room, a boiler and coal new steel flag pole topped by a room in the basement; the gilded ball, that was to project Register of Deeds' room and 32 feet above the cupola dome vault, the Highway Commission, was installed and the bell re-Library, and Men's Toilet on the hung. Stone from Madison was used instead of the native limestone for which a credit of $750.00 was given. The interior of this addition with terrazo floors, modern plumbing, heating and lighting fixtures is quite in contrast to the original build-

The original structure of 1861 with the two additions as described constitutes the Court House essentially as it is today. Replacements, refurbishments and some interior changes have

In 1937 a survey and examination was made of the frame pediment, cupola and columns. It had been feared that the base of the columns since buried in concrete when the original stone floor and steps of the portico were replaced, had deteriorated to a degree that created a safety hazard due to the heavy overhanging pediment. An architect was engaged to prepare plans and specifications for the complete replacement of the columns, pediment and cupola. At a meeting of the Public Property Committee of Iowa County on December 15, 1938, bids were opened for this work. The contract was let with C.O. Rude and Andrew Hendrickson for the sum of $7,830.00, with the Federal Government paying 45% of the cost on a P.W.A. grant. Work was to start immediately in order to comply with the terms of the government grant. On January 10, 1939, the original columns were sawed in half and taken down, the cupola and pediment having been removed previously. A complete restoration was stipulated with the contract agreement. Samples of the original mouldings and other wood details were sent to a millwork firm to be duplicated. The columns were to be reproduced in redwood.

By the middle of March the columns, each costing $400.00 had been brought by truck from Chicago and were in place and the roof and the cupola were taking shape. The The County Board, on March of the original portico had been

Many Changes Recalled In 24 Year Dodgeville Postal Career

In case you haven't noticed, there's been some changes made at the Dodgeville post office. No, the price of stamps hasn't gone up again and it's still located off Iowa Street.

What's changed is the postmaster. Robert Prideaux, Postmaster for 24 years, retired this past winter and with him went a proclamation that had been hanging for as many years. The proclamation was the official enstatement of Prideaux signed by then President Dwight Eisenhower. "It's something I'm very proud of," said Prideaux.

Actually, there is no official postmaster in the Dodgeville office as yet because the official appointment hasn't yet been made. A recommendation has to go up the ladder from the Milwaukee office to the Chicago Board to Washington. Bob Anderson, an employee of the post office for many years, is the only one who has made application for the position and is the only person in the Dodgeville postal service qualified. "There is careful screening for the postmaster position," Prideaux explained. At the time of my appointment," Prideaux added, "I had four years of "I had four years of military service in and I had veterans' preference.

Prideaux has seen mail in every condition possible in his years of service . . . from covered with soot in the days of the old coal train delivery to now with just about everything travelling by truck and zip coded.

The price of stamps in that time has gone from 3 cents first class to 15 cents with the biggest cost in the postal departments now labor. The Union contract with labor partly responsible.

"When I started, Prideaux recalled, I had three city routes with two full time clerks, an assistant postmaster and myself. Now, there's a Postmaster, Supervisor of Postal Operations, two part-time clerks, two full time city carriers and an auxiliary; three city routes and three rural routes."

Of the many dramatic changes in the Postal Department, the volume of mail is probably most dramatic. "Incoming mail is 20 times greater than when I started," Prideaux said. And, "Oh yes, he added, my salary went from a four figure one to a five figure one." A highlight of his career was being named state postmaster of the year in 1976.

"I always had a good crew to work with," Prideaux commented, "they've invited me back already too."

Postmaster Retires

"I'm enjoying my retirement," he said with a smile, "and I'm kept plenty busy. Mowing and fencing of property they own, part-time work with the sheriff's department, community service work, and yes even a little housework now keeps me busy." He and his wife hope to spend some of their winters in Arizona.

Prideaux has been a member of the Iowa County Rescue Squad since 1961, is a member of the Gomer Lewis Legion Post, a Kiwanian, a member of the Iowa County Law Enforcement Assocation and Sheriffs' Associationcounty, state and national levels. He was also a member of the Reserves for 23 years, is a member of the Independent oddfellows Lodge, and has held several offices in the League of Postmasters.

Until the official Postmaster appointment is made, William Brennan, Barneveld, is the officer in charge. Brennan recently served at Milton for several months until an appointment could be made there. He has served as the Barneveld postmaster for serveral years.

News out of Blue Grass, Wis., (Pop. 11) just a little different

By Ron Seely Of The State Journal

BLUE GRASS — There is little news out of Blue Grass, Wis.

There is almost no Blue Grass. It has a population of 11, the size of one football team.

Nothing is happening here that would merit the front page of a newspaper or the top story on a television news broadcast. No murders. No vandalism. No elections. Not much of anything. Just three homes, a farm and some outbuildings and an abandoned cheese factory, all clinging to a ridge overlooking a wooded valley north of Dodgeville.

Blue Grass isn't even on the map. The people at the Census Bureau don't know about it. Most people don't know about it. But it's there.

So why write about a place where there is no news? Well, it's peaceful for one thing. And with Iranian revolutions and oil shortages and inflation and everything else that's news these days, it's good for the soul to go someplace where nothing is happening.

But then, there really are things happening. At the Nelson's dairy farm, for example, the snow is so high that the cows just keep walking over the fences. It is getting to be a nuisance, according to Carol and Phil Nelson who own the farm and, with their four children, constitute more than half of the population of Blue Grass.

And from across Sneed Creek Road, which serves more or less as Main Street, Theresa Meudt reports that not too long ago one of her three pet crows escaped from the pen under their front porch.

Just about everybody in Blue Grass is sick of winter. Mrs. Meudt, whose husband Dick is undersheriff in Iowa County, looks forward every year to the coming of spring when the days get warm and the ridge and valley begin to turn green.

"I love the summer," Mrs. Meudt said while sitting at her dining room table after lunch one day last week. "My daughter Amanda and I can't wait for the first patch of green. The kids and I, even when they were small, used to walk every night during the summer looking for asparagus along the roadway. We'd walk as much as 2 miles. I'd put up maybe 30 or 40 packages of asparagus in addition to what we ate over the summer."

There used to be more news out of Blue Grass. The cheese factory, which gave the community its name, operated until the early 1960s but closed after its owner, Leland Adams, died after a heart attack. The Meudts bought the Adam's house and the cheese factory for $7,000. They use the cheese factory as a garage, where they restore antique cars.

The cheese factory livened things up a bit, the Nelsons said. They remember delivering their milk there. And Phil Nelson, whose parents operated the farm before he and his wife took it over, can remember delivering milk to the factory on a horse-drawn wagon.

The factory used to be quite a gathering place. About 21 farmers delivered their milk to the little factory, and Mrs. Nelson recalled that the farmers "used to kill a lot of time there after taking the milk over in the morning."

The kids also liked the factory, Mrs. Nelson said. In what other neighborhood could they get fresh curd for the asking?

"Always on the weekends, the kids were up there after the curd," Mrs. Nelson said. "Even before it was ready, they would be up there. We had a lot of stomach aches on those days." In addition to the factory, Blue Grass used to boast a general store and a gasoline station. They closed in the early '60s, and the buildings were torn down because they were on the state highway right-of-way.

There was some bonafide news out of Blue Grass not too many years ago. It happened when Bruce and Karen Nelson decided to give the community a sign-post. The children took a census, painted the community's name on the end gate of their grandfather's trailer and posted it at the junction of Sneed Creek and Nelson Roads. The little ceremony might have gone unnoticed if a newspaper reporter hadn't come out and taken a picture of all the village's residents around the sign post and written a story.

The homemade sign has been replaced by a legitimate green population sign. It still stands at the junction of Sneed Creek and Nelson Roads, with the broad expanse of the valley sweeping away in the background.

The two families that make up Blue Grass' population are naturally close. The kids all play together. And Mrs. Meudt said it is nice to have a neighbor to depend on. "If she needs something, she sends over, and, if I need something, I send over," Mrs. Meudt said. "You know, a loaf of bread or something. You don't have to drive all the way into Dodgeville just to get something like a loaf of bread."

Everybody in Blue Grass seems happy to be there and not interested in moving somewhere else.

"It's home," Mrs. Nelson said. "We don't really know anything different."

Even Mrs. Meudt, who lived in Philadelphia until she was 28, can't think of anyplace else she would rather live.

"I love it here," Mrs. Meudt said.
"I couldn't live in the city again. In Philadelphia, the traffic has gotten so bad that you just can't get around. We went on a vacation out to Arizona last year, and, of all the states we went through, there was not one I would want to live in instead of Wisconsin."

That's about it from Blue Grass.
Watch out for the cows walking over the fences, and keep an eye out for Mrs. Meudt's crow. Other than that, there is not much else going on.

Nothing much at all.

A Wisconsin luxury— Bob and Margaret Disrud and Bob's brother Bud, owners of the Wakefield Cheese Factory on County BB (though an unsurfaced road not on state maps, The state of the wakefield cheese an unsurfaced road not on state maps,

Bob and Margaret Disrud and Bob's brother Bud, owners of the Wakefield Cheese Factory on County BB (though an unsurfaced road not on state maps, it's about a mile south of Folklore Village, also on BB) just west of Ridgeway, are among the last cheesemakers to accept farmers' milk in cans rather than in bulk.

"If we converted to milk storage tanks, a lot of farmers would be out of business. We aren't big enough to make the switchover. We'll stay with it as long as the farmers do. If we quit accepting cans, we'll quit cheesemaking entirely," said Margaret Disrud, admitting cheesemaking is a lot more work when it involves milk cans.

The Disruds make what is known in the trade as barrel cheese, 500 pounds of cheddar per barrel, 1,200 pounds a day, seven days a week, from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. usually.

"The bulk of it is sold to Borden's."

Bob Disrud said. Wakefield Cheese welcomes visitors and even provides them with a printed sheet that describes cheesemaking and gives a history of cheese.

"We are proud of our factory. At one time," the history describes, "about 30 dotted the countryside of the Ridgeway township. Today, Wakefield is the only one to remain in operation."

William Ienatsch, whose reputation as a cheesemaker is obvious when you taste his creamy, smooth and rich cheeses, isn't as happy to see visitors as the Disruds, but he's honest about it.

"It just depends on what kind of mood I'm in. Sometimes I'm sociable, sometimes I'm not. If somebody walks in, they can stand by the door and watch if they don't get in the way," says Ienatsch.

From 5 a.m. until 1:30 p.m., Ienatsch is making Monterey jack or cheddar cheese at the Barneveld Cheese Company as traffic whizzes up and down U.S. 18-151 just beyond the door. Inside, cheesemaking sounds drown out the highway noises and Ienatsch, with the help of his grandson William III, continues with the art that has dominated 40 years of his life.

"I started out making Swiss cheese down in Green County. By the time I was 22 I had my own factory. I was making wheels, but now I'm getting too old to do that. They weigh up to 240 pounds, have to be washed twice a week, turned over and scrubbed with salt. We made Swiss here for four years, then we started to switch.

"Monterey jack is a fun cheese to make. It's less work so you get done earlier and you make more money at it. You said I could lie a little," he smiled as he checked on a vat of agitating curds and whey.

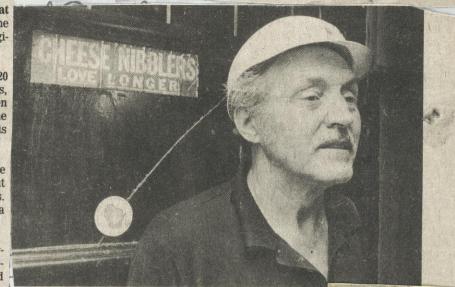

"I figure I'll make cheese another 20 years and then retire. In this business, you're pretty much tied down seven days a week," said Ienatsch, not the first cheesemaker to offer this remark.

He said his grandson shows some promise as a cheesemaker, but added: "It's hard to say with kids. You just don't push 'em. You gotta kinda leave 'em."

The best time to stop by the Barneveld factory, says Ienatsch, is between 10 a.m. and noon, provided you're not in the market for curds.

"What really gets me are these curd eaters. You wouldn't believe how many there are. I think I'm going to have to stop selling curds altogether," Ienatsch said.

Devotees of fresh, squeaky cheese curds quickly cultivate a knack for spotting cheese factories along Wisconsin roads. The real difficulty for the curd eater is learning when the slabs of curd have been run through the cheesemaker's curd mill, cut into small pieces and salted, right before it's put into hoops or barrels and made into solid cheese.

The town of Brigham recently purchased the fourth fire truck for the Barneveld Fire Department at the cost of $30,800.00. The pumper-tanker was delivered on Monday, February 26. The front-mount pump will be capable of pumping 500 gallons a minute from the 1600 gallon tank on the truck. According to Barneveld Fire Chief LeRoy "Bud" Evans, the truck's principle function will be to haul water to a rural fire.

There was beer everywhere Tuesday when a General Beer Distributors truck tipped over just off of Hwy. 191 near Hollandale. Gerald F. Pailing, Barneveld, was driving the truck owned by the Madison firm when he said he came into a sharp corner too fast, skidded across the road, and overturned. The truck rolled through a fence owned by Dwight Massey, Hollandale. The accident happened at approximately 10:41 a.m., and officials were on the scene cleaning up the debris unto about 4:00 that afternoon.

Fireman from Hollandale and Barneveld battled a blaze on the Ted Theobald farm of rural Barneveld Tuesday during the midday hours. Hollandale received the call first at approximately 11:00 a.m., and later Barneveld was asked for assistance. A calf shed which contained corn and oats was damaged in the fire, although the firemen were able to save part of the structure. According to Hollandale Fire Chief Dennis Paradis, the fire was probably caused by electrical problems. The firemen were on the scene for approximately three and a half hours.

Fund Established At Area Banks For Barneveld Woman

A fund for a Barneveld woman has been established at two area banks, to help with the costs of expensive medical bills.

Mrs. Friedli is in Zion, Illinois, for treatments for her illness, and the fund will hopefully cover some of the extreme costs of the medical bills.

Area Residents Cheer Carter Family At Prairie du Chien

The Delta Queen roars into Prairie du Chien on the Mississippi before a large crowd of onlookers.

To the tune of "On Wisconsin" and in a light rain President Carter stepped off the Delta Queen into Prairie du Chien and Southwest Wisconsin. He was welcomed by over 10,000 people, some of them from the Iowa County area.

Iowa County Sheriff, Arnold Fritsch was one of the officers from neighboring counties to Prairie du Chien to help with crowd control. The crowds at Prairie du Chien were friendly and the entire Carter family Jimmy, Rosalyn and Amy combined to shake the hands of a large number there.

A steady Sunday morning rain had turned some of the streets near the Delta Queen docking area of Lawler Park into small canals. The rain undoubtedly cut into the attendance for Carter's visit and those who did make it were armed with umbrellas and raincoats.

A motorcade left from Lawler Park, which is near Villa Louis, to the 3M Plant on the city's north side. There Carter gave a short speech mainly on energy. He spoke of the United States as being blessed with large energy reserves in the form of coal and stressed conservation.

The rain had stopped when Carter gave his speech and he enjoyed walking into the assembled crowd and shaking more hands. The crowd enjoyed it too and didn't hold back with their cheers and applause.

does booming business

1 "HUA, Iowa (UPI) — For $50, a bride and groom can be married in a little bit of history — the Little Brown Church in the Vale.

The historic church is without a pastor until early June, but that hasn't stopped the plans for summertime weddings.

"We're filling up fast," said Catherine Zwanziger, who is taking reservations for the weddings until a new pastor arrives. "People come to us from throughout the nation and have since before World War I."

The church was immortalized in the lyrics of a song by William Pitts.

"The soldier boys in World War I heard the songs at the camps and remembered it after they came back and wanted to come here for their weddings," Mrs. Zwanziger said.

The church lost its pastor earlier this year and has been slow in filling the spot because the new pastor wanted to wait until school ended to move his family.

"It's a non-denominational church, so all the Nashua pastors have been helping out in the crunch. The interim pastor marries them on the weekends and diffferent ministers do it during the week when the other pastor teaches school," Mrs. Zwanziger said.

This past Saturday was one of the biggest days.

Mrs. Paul Goings, a member of the church's congregation, said the time a couple can have in the church depends on the number of weddings scheduled that day.

Last Saturday there were weddings scheduled from 8:30 in the morning to 8:30 at night at half-hour intervals.

But on another day during the week, a bride could have half a day for the wedding if she wanted.

Mrs. Goings said the church also is a popular tourist stop and a place for school tours.

"But we always respect the privacy of the bride. If it looks like any tourists will be on the grounds during her time, we ask her and if she wants a private wedding, she can have one," she said.

Mrs. Goings said there doesn't seem to be any trend toward popular months for weddings in the church.

"I guess a lot of it depends on the weather and people. This year June looks like a biggy and yet last year it dropped way down," she said.

Members Honored, Mortgage Burned at Barneveld Lodge

Fifty and 25-year members were honored, certificates were presented to the newest members, and a one-year-old mort-gage was burned at ceremonies at the Barneveld Lodge Tuesday night.

The mortgage burning festivities highlighted a full evening of events at the new Barneveld facility. An old lodge building burned about three and a half years ago, and when a new building was finally completed just a year ago, the work began to pay off the mortgge. "The giants of Lodge No. 319 made this possible," Said Harley Rundhaug, one of the members of the building committee as h referred to those making pledges toward the new building. "For a toward the new building. "For a year and a half, we at the lodge though about what we should do following the fire, and finally the decision was made to rebuild on the same spot.

He recalled the tearing down and burning of the old building to clear the lot, and the letting of the bids early in the project. Building committee members Carl Arneson, Neil Massey, Wayne Thousand, Don Komplin and Rundhaug worked closely with the builders through a year of building, and about a year ago, the new facility was completed and dedicated. "With costs of the new building being $44,500, and our insurance covering only $17,000, we had a lot of money to come up with," Rundhaug went on. "We took pledges in anonymous amounts from the lodge members, and with the 'giants' of this organization, here we are with the building paid for in just one year's time."

Approximatley $22,000 came from the pledges, while $5,000 came to the lodge from the estate of David and Maude Baumgartner. Operating funds were raised through a concert, and a series of through a concert, and a series of Sunday morning breakfasts sponsored by the lodge. "I think everyone has to agree that this lodge has had unparalleled success in paying off this beautiful new building," Rundhaug added. Barneveld chapter Worhipful Master William Ienatsch noted tht one year is "probably a record" for paying off a building such as the lodge. In other ceremonies, four 50-year members of the lodge were honored. George Duesler, Norman Duesler, Wendell Mas-sey, and William McCutchin received 50-year certificates and pins from state lodge official George Hughey. John Mc-Cutchin, Spring Green, himself a 50-year lodge member in another chapter, accepted the awards for his brother William, who was unable to be in attendance.

Twenty-five year certificates went to Carl Arneson, John Bollerud, Lewis Christianson, John Koenig, George Moyer, Otto Oimoen, & Harold Rothlisberger. Arneson, Koenig and Oimoen were present to accept their awards.

New members raised to master masons were Vernon, David and Kenneth Massey. Paul Durand also was honored, but was unable to attend the program.

The ceremonies had originally been set for Sept. 13, but they were set back to Sept. 27 because of a death of one of the lodge members.

Piano music at the Tuesday evening program was furnished by Goldie Elliot, Dodgeville. Thomas McCutchin, Barneveld lodge chaplain, served as the master of ceremonies.

Foam Home Gains Popularity As Tourist Attraction in County

Trying to spend your recreational dollars wisely? One way might be to stay close to home, and check out one of the area's newest tourist attractions.

That attraction is a foam house near Barneveld, known as the "Habitable Sculpture." The summer of 1979 marks the second year that the unique structure has been open to the public, but relatively few area residents have visited the home of Fritz and Dona Frusher.

The Frushers began their experiment in polyurethane foam in 1972. The original concept was a sculptured living unit that would be a natural extension of the rocky bluff that it's nestled in, and would flow around the existing trees in harmony with the natural contours of the rock ledges. The Frushers, originally from Madison, looked for the right spot to build, and finally came up with a spot deep amidst the woods, which overlooks scenic Blue Mounds State Park just a few miles away.

The idea for the home resulted from a desire to use a building material that would be energy conserving, and would also provide its inhabitants a more natural environment of soft, unpredictable curves. Frusher, operator of an insulation contracting firm dealing in sprayed polyurethane foam and related coatings, decided on a free-form polyurethane foam house.

The unique home is one of a few foam homes in the United States, and is indeed unique in that it was built from plans drawn from the minds of the Frushers. Artistically inclined, the two were intrigued by the boundless shapes possible with foam--shapes limited only by their imaginations.

The main section, containing 1800 square feets, was constructed by spraying poly-urethane foam onto a polyethy-lene air structure. The foam is sprayed out of a gun as a liquid, and within five seconds it expands to 30 times its original volume to form a tact-free, rigid material. Once the shape was solidified, the air structure was removed and additional foam was applied to an average thickness of six to eight inches.

Since the home is literally built of insulation, the fuel savings is tremendous. "During the severe winter of 1976, our heating bill was $250.00," Fritz points out. He added that an average 3,000 square foot home, heated electrically, would have used more than $1700 worth of fuel.

There are four distinct levels to the foam home, although the first floor is actually on several levels. The first level includes a garage, den, shower, dressing area, bathroom, utility room, kitchen, dining area, office, living room, and a carpeted TV lounge, which is nestled into a pocket between two outcroppings on the lowest level. Included in the TV lounge is a nine foot by seven foot waterbed. Interior walls and doors were avoided to give a maze effect to the first level, the largest section of the home.

One of the most unique tourist attractions in the Iowa County area is the Habitable Sculpture, a foam house built by an enterprising young couple near Barneveld.

Ascending a tower which was added to the home in 1976, the master bedroom is found at the second level. Also included on the floor's second level is a sunporch.

The third level is comprised of a studio, and a sundeck allows for a magnificent view of southwestern Wisconsin's highest point (Blue Mounds) on the fourth

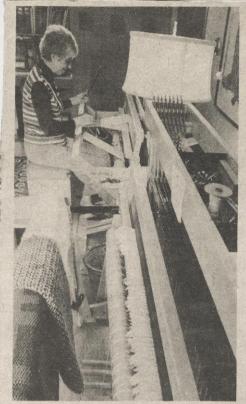

The foam home has several advantages over a conventional model, according to Fritz. "Painting of the exterior is never necessary," he notes. "Rain washes the surface, and snow tends to slide off. Unlike wood, the polyurethane foam dosen't rot, and bugs don't like to eat it." He added that air conditioning isn't necessary, since the lower level never gets above 75 degrees in the summer, and sliding glass doors in the tower provide ample ventilation. And, though the house was built section by section, there is no added-on look because of the blending qualities of the foam.

Since the first visitor caught sight of the unusual foam home and the word began to spread, the Frushers have been swamped with requests for tours. In 1977, they opened their home to the public on a daily basis, excluding Tuesday, May through October. The home is located on Ridgeview Rd., north of Barneveld about four miles off of Country Trunk K.

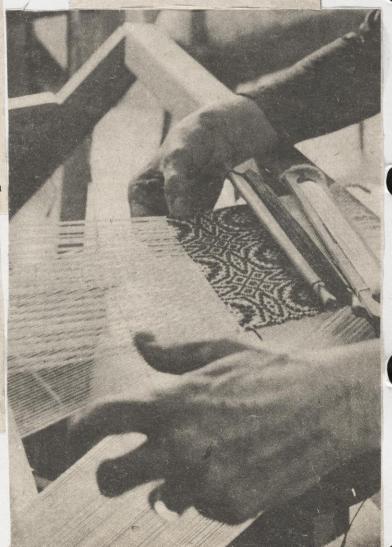

The floors, walls and ceilings all blend together in the Habitable Sculpture to give a maze effect to the main floor of the structure. The interior, like the exterior, was constructed by spraying polyurethane foam onto a polyethylene air structure.

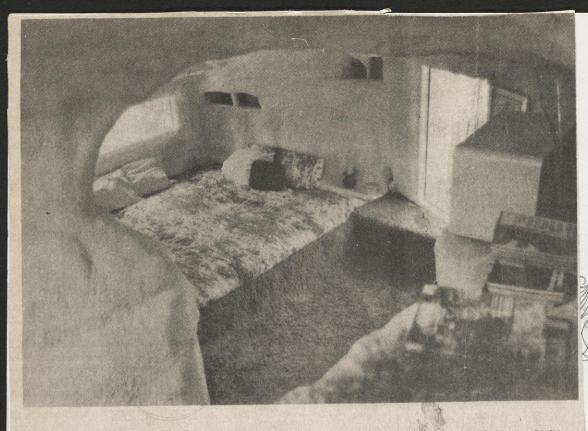

Weaver

Fran Dryson, above, follows a design chart, left, while she weaves. Dryson has four- and eight-harness looms. In weaving, a harness is a device that raises and lowers the threads on a loom.

One of Fran Bryson's designs begins to take shape as she gently moves the threads on her loom back and forth.

A seven foot by nine foot waterbed fits nicely in the TV lounge, which is nestled into a pocket between two rock outcroppings on the lowest level.

The master bedroom features a plant-filled sunporch on the second level of the foam home.

ran Bryson has an eight-harness Macomber loom from York, Maine. Fran Bryson has a four-harness Kessenich from Wauwautosa, Wis. Fran Dryson has a Navaho loom she and her husband built. And Fran Bryson has a tapestry loom and a Clemes & Clemes spinning wheel.

"I'm the kind that's spreading myself thin," she laughs. "My husband once told me I was a dabbler and I was shocked. I thought that was the same thing as a dilettante. I make rugs, stoles, place mats, baby things, wall hangings. I was a home ec major. I'd probably have been the type, in the Middle Ages, that the great designers would have hired to do their executing."

In the present day, however, Bryson executes quite a few of her own designs. And, she even spins, her own yarn.

"The patterns, I work out beforehand," she explains. "What you do is you figure it out and sit down with a pencil and graph paper. I make my own patterns, but they've probably been invented before. I find the designing part of it fun. I'm interested in how the patterns go. I'm kind of into that now.

"So really," she continues,
"you've made all your decisions by the time you sit down to weave. It can be relaxing; it can be frustrating, too. It gets boring, just like factory work, doing the same thing all the time. You have to pay a certain amount of attention to it or you make mistakes. Of course, because you do have to pay attention to it, you can't be solving all the problems in the world."

Fran Bryson is, to say the least, a philosophical weaver.

"If you were really wanting to make a living, this would be a lousy way to do it. You have to have a certain amount of money to put into it."

Then you have to try, sometimes desperately after all the time and expense involved, to get something out of it.

"I'm really trying to do like the shoemaker and the elves to get enough money ahead to be able to buy my yarn," she says laughing. "The arts are a luxury."

Former Barneveld Man Has Lead Role in Musical

Reprinted from the Sun Prairie Star-Countryman

From the front of an elementary school classroom to the foot of the theatre rehearsal stage is the present almost daily routine of Sun Prairie Civic Theatre's lead performer of its upcoming production, "Oklahoma."

Tall Bill Jabs, Eastside School sixth grade teacher will be Civic Theatre's Curly. Bill describes Curly as robust, a teasing type of person with a sense of humor. "I found it easy to fall into the role as our characteristics are similar," he said.

Although this is Bill's first plunge into the musical world of Civic Theatre, his love of music dates back to early school years.

It all began with his entry into a children's choir in church. Uniquely, he and another young man sang in the soprano section while two girls were singing alto. "I guess I really fell in love with music then," Bill recalls.

Growing up on a farm with four sisters, all younger than Bill, leisure time was at a minimum for such things as music but he remembers his mother's skill at the piano although she had never studied music.

During his school days in Barneveld High School "I really got into it." He performed in high school musicals, was a soloist with the high school choir and sang as a soloist at weddings and funerals. Bill was active in music competitions also. As a senior, he earned a second in State competition for his performance.

While attending the University of Wisconsin-Platteville, he was a member of the Glee Club.

When teaching in his first position at Edison Junior High School in Janesville for two years, he along with six teachers were responsible for about 200 sixth and seventh graders. Once a week the teachers grouped for a sing along for the students.

Since coming to Sun Prairie, Bill's major involvement in music has been with a Saturday night Mass guitar group at the Immaculate Heart of Mary Church in Monona.

When auditions for "Oklahoma" were announced Bill's wife Carla and fellow teachers at Eastside encouraged him to try out. Bill had seen the movie three times during his high school years. He was always impressed with the Gordan McCrea interpretation. "I guess it has always been my ambition to sing in that musical," he revealed.

Taking the part however has meant some extremely full days the past five weeks. His days begin at about 7:30 a.m. and continue until 11 p.m. or 12 midnight. Following the end of the school day and prior to play practice Bill coaches track up at the high school working with distance runners.

"It helps to have an understanding wife," he praised. "She accepts the fact of the long day." Not being able to see his young daughter, Michelle, age 4, often is perhaps the most difficult part of this total involvement presen-

Though the schedule is tiring, he is committed to two activities which have always received high priority in his life, music and track. He ranks track as his first love in high school focusing on the shot put, the discus, and despite his 6' 3", 220 lb. frame, running in the half and quarter mile events. Bill was co-captain of the track team the final two years of high school.

He also played football, basketball and baseball. He said it was possible to compete in two spring sports by practicing each sport about one and one half hours each night. "Then I went home and milked the cows," he said smiling.

His entry into Civic Theatre was approached with some apprehension as he was not sure what to expect but he assesses the experience as "tremendous." Despite the diversity of the group, the camaraderie is top notch according to Bill. And though dancing has never been difficult for him, he had some problems coordinating movement with his lines. "The directors have helped so much," he praised.

Bill's students are very aware their teacher is performing in the Civic Theatre show. "They are eagerly awaiting the day when I show up with my hair curled," he said.

The only side effect of his involvement in the show — "I find myself talking with an Oklahoma accent in class. The kids raise their hands and tell me not to talk like Oklahomans."

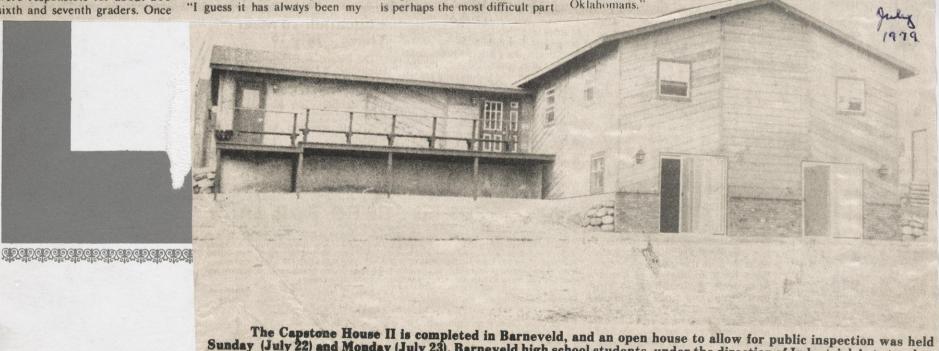

Bill is not sure how his curly hair will be achieved. "I may have to have a permanent and be stuck with curly hair three or four months," he said grinning.

Bill appreciates the moral support he has received from his fellow teachers at Eastside and especially the assistance of Marty Koshakow who also handles sixth graders.

Bill is looking forward to the opening April 15. "The rehearsals have been going good and I feel we have a good show. I am anxious to have it on stage," he exclaimed.

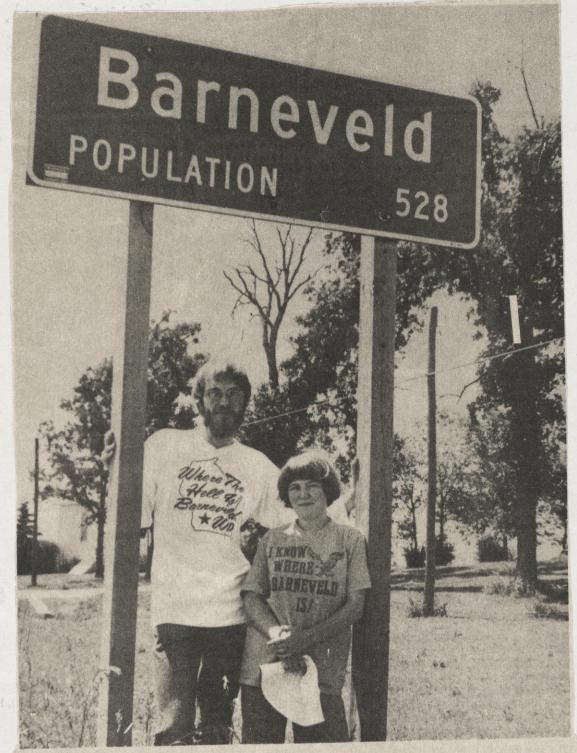

The show will run April 15-16 and 21-22-23 at 8 p.m. in the Sun Prairie High School auditorium. Tickets may be purchased at the Sentry Food Store in Sun Prairie, Wednesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. For additional information, call 837-8217.

Bill is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Bob Jabs, Barneveld.

The Capstone House II is completed in Barneveld, and an open house to allow for public inspection was held Sunday (July 22) and Monday (July 23). Barneveld high school students, under the direction of Industrial Arts teacher Al Merkel, built most of the home, with the help of 12 contractors. The house is for sale by the real estate brokers in the Barneveld School District. Students involved with the project included Doug Brindley, Steve Harwood, Doug Manteufel, Mark DeSmet, Dave Henderson, Cal Williams, Dan Roberts, and Jeff Zander. Contractors included Bob Olson, Ridgeway Lumber; Dave Ranney, excavating; Paul Kellesvig, Kellesvig Concrete Co.; Jim Myers, heating; Jim Evans, plumbing; Kent Montague, electric; Gerald Sersch, Sersch Plastering Co.; Ed Collins, Collins Painting & Decorating; Bob Schaller, carpeting; Russell Docken, Docken Landscaping; Richard Amble, brick layer; and Duane Kittleson, metal work.

Barneveld Has Visitors From Barneveld

Visitors to Barneveld, Wisconsin, from Barneveld, Holland over the 4th of July weekend were Ytzen Lont, left, Marjan Hidshes. The young couple is hitchhiking across the country, and they plan to remain in the United States "until our money runs out."

After years of correspondence among residents of the only two Barneveld's in the world, two young people from Barneveld, Holland became the first residents of that city to visit the sister city of Barneveld, Wisconsin last week.

Ytzen Lont, 24, and Marjan Hidshes, 21, visited Barneveld over the weekend as part of a cross-country hitchhiking trip. They left Barneveld, Holland in early April, arrived in Boston, Massachusetts on April 7, and have been travelling across the country ever since. When asked how long they plan to stay in this country, Lont replied "as long as our money holds out."

Stories on the origin of the Barneveld name for the Wisconsin village vary, but one popular story indicates that Barneveld, Wis. got its name directly from Barneveld, Holland. Both towns. it is said, were named after the same Holland hero, Jan Van Barneveld. The Iowa County village supposedly got its name when a Dutchman by the name of Orbison was working on the railroad which was being laid in Barneveld in the 1880's. He was so infatuated by the town that he insisted the name be changed from Simpsonville to Barneveld, after the lovely Holland village that he was familiar with. Apparently no one resisted, and Barneveld got its name.

As the story goes, a Dutch teacher, Gerrit ter Harmsel, saw the name Barneveld, Wisconsin, on a map of the United States while in his classroom in Barneveld, Holland, back in 1966. Correspondence between the two towns then began, with Ruth Stenseth of the Barneveld Woman's Club one of the first representatives in this country. In the fall of 1969, the Woman's Club was told that it would be receiving a gift from the people of Barneveld, Holland, and later a gift of 5,000 of Holland's finest tulip bulbs and 250 hyacinth bulbs arrived.

Barneveld, Wisconsin responded by sending a gift in return. Mr. and Mrs. Ken Johnsrud of Barneveld were named as official ambassadors for a trip to Holland, at which time they presented a gift of money to be used for a bench, a popular item on public sidewalks in Holland. A plaque stating that it was a gift from Barneveld, Wisconsin accompanied the bench.

A letter accompanied the Johnsruds as they travelled to Holland in 1972, and it read as follows:

"It is our desire to express our gratitude to you all for your gift of bulbs to Barneveld, Wisconsin, U.S.A.

They have added much beauty and brought recognition to our village, and, as the years pass, the beauty grows. So, we pray, will our Sister City friendship."

A number of tulip festivals followed the planting of the Holland tulip bulbs in Barneveld, focusing on the tulips which were planted on the village greens.

But since those days of the early and mid-1970's, not much has been heard of the sister city of Barneveld, Holland. Until the arrival last week of Lont and Hidshes.

Lont explained that Barneveld, Holland, is a city of approximately 14,000 people. The principle industry in the city is poultry, with most of the population commuting to other nearby cities to work.

They said they found things to be very different in Wisconsin, with last week's heatwave especially shocking. "We live near the sea, and we have a moderate climate," Lont said. "An average temperature is about 70 degrees in the summer, and it never gets much below 30 in the winter."

While the price of gasoline in this country has nearly doubled in the past year, Lont and Hidshes pointed out that the cost is still much higher in Holland. "It was something like $2.69 a gallon when we left in April," they said

The young couple has found that hitchhiking across America has been an easy and enjoyable way to go. "Every ride brings us a new adventure," Lont emphasized. "We have had very little trouble getting rides, and on a couple of occasions, we had two rides available to us at once." He added that most rides provide no problems, but said that "one driver drove very badly, trying to look at a map at the same time he was driving. It also didn't help that he was intoxicated."

Lont and Hidshes have already seen much of the country and some of Canada, but they plan to see much more before they head back to their native country. They may also take in some of British Columbia, Alaska, and South America, again, "depending on how our money holds out."

They gave up jobs and homes in Holland to take up worldly travel, and Lont and Hidshes have no regrets. "It has been quite an adventure so far, and I'm sure there is much more to come," Lont said.

When they left Holland, Lont and Hidshes had no idea if they would ever see Barneveld, Wisconsin. "We didn't know if we would ever get out of Boston," he said. "But things began to go well, and when we were in Washington, D.C., someone from Wisconsin recognized the name Barneveld when we spoke of it. That is the first time we really knew where Barneveld was located, and we decided we would have to make it."

While in Barneveld, the young couple was given the royal treatment, as guests of Ralph and Sylvia Thoni. They also visited the Johnsruds, Barneveld mayor Steve Eveland, and many others during their weekend stay in the village.

It is now certain that the question on Lont's shirt (Where the Hell is Barneveld, Wis.) will be answered by a response similar to the one on Hidshes' shirt in the future--"I know where Barneveld is!"

Pioneer Flavor, Accompanies Hyde Church Wedding adventurous fulfilled their pioneer heritage last Saturday by being married in the 118 year old Hyde Chapel, Ridgeway north of Barneveld.

In a simple but elegant cere-mony, Patricia Ann Herrara and Kim G. Bennett were united in marriage.

It was in December of 1861 when the pioneers of the valley surrounding the eventual site of the Hyde Church resolved to build that place of worship. It was a spiritual union of a different kind of simplicity and elegance. That pioneer union of minds decided upon a church of 20 by 30 the church, and a charter member, was Robert Hamilton, great, great grandfather of Kim Bennett. He and Mrs. Hamilton, along with various great, great uncles and aunts of Kim Bennett are buried in a cemetery behind the Hyde Church, which was completed in 1862.

Other pioneer charter members of the church were the Rev. and Mrs. David Jones, Richard and Martha Evans, William Webb, Thomas Hamilton and Jane Hamilton, according to Mrs. Rueben Hughes, secretary-treasurer of the Hyde Hyde Community Association.

These charter members had the vision to begin building their house of worship for future generations.

One of those following generations represented a different kind of vision Saturday, as Miss Herrara, a vision of loveliness, swept into the chapel adorned in traditional white, exchanged vows with Kim Bennett, and left as Mrs. Bennett on the arm of her new husband.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Pitts, and the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph L. Bennett, Evansville,

That the ceremony occurred is owed in no small part to early pioneer families who supported their new Hyde Church. They included the Hamiltons, included the Hamiltons, McCutchins, Prices, Johnsons, Davises and Deuslers.

The Hyde Church was instituted as a Congregational Church, but it soon became a nondenominational place of worship, Mrs. Hughes pointed out, even though it was Congregational in principle. Lutherans, Baptists, Catholics, and Methodists worshipped at the Hyde Church in those early days in the mid 19th century, Mrs. Hughes said, and added that there is one Catholic buried in the church cemetery

Church services were held weekly until 1957, when they were disbanded, according to Mrs. Hughes, and the fate of the church transferred to the Hyde Community Association, incorporated in 1966, about 10 years after the church services were disbanded and the church was apparently somewhat neglected.

The Hyde Community Association meets three times each year and is composed of members from Ridgeway, Barneveld, Arena, Madison, Evansville, Waupun, Boyd, Wheaton, Ill., and the Barrington area of Chicago. The association schedules two work days every year in May and December and also arranges a Christmas coffee with, among others, German, Welsh and Scandinavian foods. The Hyde Church, now referred to as the Hyde Chapel, received new windows and was painted in 1966 and 1967, as the association worked to restore the historic place of worship.

In 1975, Ralph Bennett, father of the groom, dedicated a memorial to the Hyde Chapel, which states: "In loving memory of the pioneers who provided a place of worship and of rest, Floating into the Hyde Chapel with Pat Herrara, now Mrs. Kim Bennett, may have been other spirits of the church's pioneer past.

There may have been the spirit of Mrs. Hughes' grandfather who bought the first organ for the church, or of her father who took organ lessons so he could play the new organ.

There may have been the spirit of another musician, Lena Olson, former operator of the Hyde Store, now deceased, who was the church organist for years.

The current church organ dates back to 1906, according to Mrs. Hughes, and it was rededicated in October of 1972, after being in and out of Hyde Church several times. She added that the church piano was tuned and repaired for the wedding.

Many friends and relatives shared the moments of joy encompassed by the marriage of Pat and Kim by traveling across the state or country to the Hyde Chapel, but there was one pioneer church practice no longer customary for weddings or other church activities of the 1980s.

For some years after the Hyde Church was built, a strict seating arrangement had ladies sitting on the left and men on the right when entering the church, according to Mrs. Hughes.

Members of the Barneveld Women's Club are planning a spaghetti supper for Saturday, April 21 at the Barneveld Lutheran Church. The supper is being held as part of a community improvement project, with funds to be directed toward youth in the community for the next two years. The Women's Club is hoping to raise enough money to construct an ice skating rink and a warming house in the village. Tickets for the event are available at the Barneveld State Bank, and will be available at the door. The supper will be held between the hours of 5:00 and 8:00 p.m. Among the club members planning for the event recently were the above, front row, left to right: co-chairwomen Judy Anderson and Ann Arneson; Kevin Montague, one of the youth of the community who will eventually benefit from the project; Lois Montague, and Helen Torphy. Parham, Athletes Honored at Barneveld Athletic Banquet

Awards for sportsmanship. and as the most dedicated and most valuable athletes were presented in three sports Tuesday night at the Barneveld Winter Athletic Banquet.

Athletes were honored in boys and girls basketball, as well as wrestling by their respective coaches. A special award at the banquet also went to Troy Parham, who received a plaque as the Dodgeville Chronicle All-Area Boys Basketball "Coach of the Year.'

Guest speaker at the event was Lou King, formerly a baseball scout with the Minnesota Twins. King presently owns a fund-raising company.

The theme of King's message was that athletes "don't quit" in striving toward their goals. King said that with the words "don't and "don't an quit," Winston Churchill rallied his nation to victory in World

King gave examples of several athletes who had set goals and achieved them. "What you can first conceive and believe, you shall achieve," King said to the Barneveld athletes.

Barneveld girls basketball coach Cathy Luchsinger summarized her team's season, in which the girls finished third in the State Line League with a 10-4 record, and compiled a 13-6 overall mark. She noted that three girls were named to the first-team all-conference squad, and that her team put together an outstanding record without a senior on the squad.

The girls junior varsity team finished with an 11-3 conference record, good enough for second place in the league, and a 13-5 overall record. Letterwinners on the varsity squad included Jeana Buol, Lisa Brattlie, Julie Handel. Sandy Trainor, Rhonda Collins, Sue Trainor, and Joan Twiton. Sandy Trainor was named the most valuable player on the squad, finishing as the team's rebounding leader with 195 boards. She had her personal best in a league game against New Glarus with 20 rebounds.

Parham introduced his varsity squad which earned Barneveld's first sectional trip in more than 30 years. The team compiled a 17.6 record, and finished second in the State Line League with a 12-4 mark.

The Golden Eagles averaged 60 points per game, and held their opponents to 53.8 during the season, Parham noted. Team leaders included Pat Clerkin in scoring and rebounding, Jeff Beckett in field goal percentage, Paul McSherry in assists, and Mark DeSmet in free throw percentage. Beckett was named most valuable by his teammates. Letterwinners included Beckett, Clerkin, DeSmet, McSherry, Kermit Nyhus, Wes Friedli, Jeff Ranney, Tim Sullivan, Cal

Williams, and Jeff Zander.
Mrs. Ken Miller presented the wrestling awards in the absense of her husband, who was out of town with his new job. He started a job with Gopher Sporting Goods as of March 15. Mrs. Miller read a letter from her husband, which summarized the 1978-79 season. The team finished fourth in the State Line League with a 5-6-1 overall record, which was an excellent accomplishment for a team giving up between 12 and 18 points per meet on forfeits. "Each wrestler can be proud of that accomplishment," Miller wrote. "All of the wrestlers stuck by me when the going got tough, when it would have been much easier to quit, as some did. I feel that this young team can be equal to the best in the league in the next two or three years."

Miller concluded by writing "don't let losers make losers of you. A majority vote doesn't make something wrong, right."

Wrestling letters went to Ken Schlimgen, Mike Theobald, Bob Kirch, Jeff Ihm, Rick Mueller, Nick Kirch, Kenton Powell, Dave Henderson, Dean Manteufel, Tony Kirch, and Jeff Ryan. Sophomore Bob Kirch was named the most valuable wrest-

Henderson also presented other booster club awards for best sportsmanship and most dedicated in each of the three sports. Mike Theobald was named the wrestler with the best sportsmanship, while Bob Kirch was honored as the most dedicated. In girls basketball, Cathy Henderson was the most dedicated and Joan Twiton was honored for best sportsmanship, while in boys basketball, the sportsmanship award went to Jeff Zander and Pat Clerkin and Kermit Nyhus shared the most dedicated award.

Barneveld Boys Eliminate Mineral Point At Belleville Regional

Barneveld outscored Mineral Point 10-1 in the final four minutes to take control of a ragged ball game and earn a 47-31 victory in a regional semi-final game Saturday night at Belleville.

The win advanced Barneveld into the regional title game Monday night (March 5) against Monticello, with the winner advancing to sectional play this weekend at West Bend. Monticello earned a berth in the finals with an 83-71 win over Juda earlier in the evening.

Mineral Point's Mark Flanagan

Mineral Point's Mark Flanagan scored the game's first basket to give the Pointers their only lead of the evening, but Barneveld maintained control most of the way. The Pointers spurted to pull within two points early in the second half, but the Golden Eagles put the game out of reach with a splurge down the stretch in the game's final four minutes.

Forty-three fouls were called in the game and 43 more probably could have been called in the physical contest. Mineral Point was guilty of 27 of those fouls, and the Golden Eagles converted from the free throw line to score nearly half of their points. Barneveld connected on 23 of 33 free throws compared to only five of 12 for Mineral Point, while the Pointers were actually outscoring Barneveld from the field, 13-12.

"It was a very physical ball game, and I'm proud that our guys were able to hang in there," Barneveld coach Troy Parham said. "Being aggressive is different than being physical, and we had to adjust to win the ball game. I felt that our defense did its job, to hold Mineral Point to 31 points, and that our man-toman defense tore them apart early." Mineral Point scored in double figures in only one quarter, while popping in just six points in two periods and seven points in the final eight minutes.

"We shot very poorly," Mineral Point coach Gerry Douglas explained simply. "We set out to concentrate on our defense, and we did very well for awhile on that end of the court. Barneveld only scored 22 points in the first half. But we simply couldn't put the ball in the hole at the other end."

Mineral Point shot a dismal 31 percent from the field on 13 of 42 field goal attempts, while Barneveld wasn't much more efficient with 12 of 31 shots for 39

After Flanagan's opening bucket, Barneveld scored the next 10 points to take a 10-2 lead with three and a half minutes gone. Kermit Nyhus and Pat Clerkin each scored four of those points as the Eagles took command early. Chuck Bennett and Bill Grange each tallied buckets in the final four minutes of the period as Mineral Point trailed 13-6 after eight minutes.

Mineral Point outscored Barneveld 7-2 at the outset of the second quarter to close to within 15-13, and Barneveld built its lead to 22-16 later in the period before a final basket by Flanagan cut the halftime lead to 22-18 in favor of the Eagles.

Tim Coogan popped in a two-pointer to start the second half, and once again Mineral Point trailed by only two points. But Jeff Zander, Clerkin, Jeff Beckett, and Nyhus all scored in the next two and a half minutes while only Coogan could manage points for Mineral Point, as the Golden Eagle lead expanded to 29-22. Coogan scored again with 2:32 left in the third period to score all six of Mineral Point's markers in the third stanza, but Nyhus and Williams each tallied two points to put Barneveld in control 33-24 as the quarter ended.

Free throws turned the tide in Barneveld's direction in the fourth quarter. Paul McSherry and Clerkin each tossed in four free throws, and Nyhus dropped in two to account for 10 of Barneveld's 14 fourth period points. Mark DeSmet and Clerkin each added a basket as Barneveld outpointed the Pointers by a 10-1 bulge in the final four minutes.

Parham had words of praise for junior forward Kermit Nyhus following the victory. "Kermit kept his composure out there as well as anybody, and I was proud of him," Parham said. "Pat Clerkin also did a good job, especially from the free throw line. He made nine of 10 free throws, so he has definitely improved in that area." Clerkin led Barneveld scorers with 17 points.

Parham said that his squad has yet to reach its full potential. "We've had guys in and out of the starting line-up throughout the season, due to discipline problems and sickness," he said. "I just hope things fall in place against Monticello."

Douglas said that tournament play is entirely different from the regular season, and he felt that inexperience hurt his troops. "Our young guys were playing on a strange floor, with a lot of people screaming and yelling around them," Douglas said. "Playing in a tournament game is a lot different than going over to Iowa-Grant and playing during the season when there's really no pressure. Our young players simply didn't respond to the pressure that well."

The Mineral Point coach said that all 12 of his players got in the game and "got their feet wet, so next year they'll have a little better idea of what's going on when tournament time rolls around."

We're probably one of the only teams in the state that at one time this season started a freshman, sophomore, junior and senior in the same line-up," Douglas added. "That's quite a mixture to have playing together. But I saw improvement throughout the year, and that's all you can hope for. You can't have a championship year every year. It's not like in college where you can go out and recruit ballplayers. You have to take what's there and try to make it fun. I think we had fun, and tomorrow we'll go to work and start preparations for next In other statistics in the contest, Barneveld held a 40-33 rebounding edge, but also had more turnovers, 18, to 16 for Mineral Point. Bennett was the game's leading rebounder with 12, while Flanagan and Clerkin grabbed 11 each for their respective teams.

Mineral Point's season ended at 4-16, while Barneveld improved its season record to 16-5.

Palmyra First Barneveld Opponent at West Bend

The Palmyra Panthers will be the first opponent for the Barneveld Golden Eagles Friday night at the West Bend Boys Basketball Sectional.

Barneveld earned a trip to the sectional tourney for the first time since the class system was originated by dumping Monticello 60-58 Monday night in a regional finale at Belleville. Earlier tournament victories had come over Black Hawk, Argyle and Mineral Point.

For Palmyra, the trip to the sectional included wins over Norris Foundation (of East Troy), Deerfield, and Williams

Bay. Other teams in the sectional include unbeaten Pardeeville and Kohler.

Pardeeville and Kohler will meet in the sectional opener Friday night at 7:00, followed by the Barneveld-Palmyra game at approximately 8:30. Tickets are still available through the Barneveld high school office at 924-4711.

The trip to sectionals might be termed a surprise for Duane Wild's Panthers. Palmyra finished only fifth in the Madison Eastern Suburban Conference with a 9-9 record, but finished strong and then picked up three tournament wins to earn a sectional berth. The Panthers played only teams within their conference during the regular season, and beat every team at least once except conference champion Lakeside Lutheran and runner-up Cambridge.

"We've played everbody tough, but we didn't always get the breaks that we needed to win the close games," Wild said of his Panthers. "We had quite a few players back from last year's team, so we really expected to finish higher in the standings than we did. But the trip to the sectional should help to make it a successful year."

The Palmyra roster lists six seniors and five juniors, with the tallest being a pair of 6'2" centers. Paul Seifert, a 6'2" senior who scored 20 points against Williams Bay, and Tom Schroeder, a 6'0" junior forward who added 14 markers, are two of the team's top scorers, although Wild indicated that his team has been balanced throughout the year.

Wild, in his ninth year as head coach at Palmyra, led the Panthers to a sectional berth in 1974, and has directed the squad to two conference titles in his tenure at the school. He has chalked up 104 wins and 78 losses during those nine years, going over the coveted 100 win mark this season.

"We've got a small club, with nobody over 6'2", but we hope that our jumping ability and shooting will make up for our lack of height," Wild said. The entire Palmyra roster is

The entire Palmyra roster is listed as follows: Seniors: Todd Bealhen, 6'0" guard; Bret Minton, 6'1" guard; Mike Lewis, 6'0" forward; Paul Seifert, 6'2" center; Bill Wickland, 5'10" guard; and Jeff Vukodinovich, 6'1" foward. Juniors: Tom Schroeder, 6'0" forward; Keith Williams, 6'0" forward; Gary Northey, 6'2" center; Ronnie Lewis, 5'9" guard; and Ken Hahn, 6'1" center.

Looking ahead to the sectional, Barneveld coach Troy Parham said that his team would be ready to play. "I think that it will be to our advantage that the other teams in the tournament haven't seen us play," he said. "We hope to do some things that will confuse our opponents."

He said that the favorite would have to be Pardeeville, which has put together a 22-0 record this season after advancing to the state meet a year ago. "They've got a front line of 6'6", 6'6", and 6'4", to go along with 6'1" and 5'9" guards," Parham said. "That height is hard to contend with."

Monticello's Kieth Hoesly moves in against Barneveld's Mark DeSmet (21) and Kermit Nyhus (33) Monday night in regional tournament action at Belleville. Hoesly led his team with 19 points in a 60-58 loss to the Golden Eagles.

Palmyra Ends Barneveld Season Short of Goal

Barneveld was unable to come up with one of its patented second half comebacks last Friday night, and the Golden Eagles fell to Palmyra in a semi-final sectional boys basketball game at West Bend, 55-40.

The Golden Eagles had come from as many as 18 points behind win the basketball games during the regular season, and had scored two-point victories in two of its previous tournament contests. But this time, a comeback victory was not to be, as Palmyra unveiled a four-corner offense that held Barneveld at bay in the second half.

A cold spell in the second quarter was the beginning of the end for the Golden Eagles. The Panthers outscored Barneveld 17-5 in that period, including 11 straight points which increased the Palmyra lead to 33-16. That streak took four and a half minutes, and the Golden Eagles were unable to recover in the final two periods.

For Barneveld, the season ended at 17-6, while Palmyra surprisingly advanced to the state tournament with a 14-9 mark. The Panthers scored a one-point victory over Kohler the following evening to earn a state tournament berth. Sectional favorite Pardeeville suffered its first loss of the season Friday night to Kohler.

Barneveld shot only 33 percent from the field, one of its worst showings of the season, and was outrebounded by the Panthers 35-27. Those two factors were crucial as the taller Eagles fell behind in the early stages.

Barneveld coach Troy Parham

said that several things contributed to the poor showing by the Eagles. "The kids were obviously tight," he said. "It was a new environment, a big gym, and something that they hadn't experienced before. They were even tight Thursday night when we had practice in the empty gym. I also think that physical and mental fatigue played a part after a rough month of basket-

The last month of the regular season includes six tight ball games, and those contests were followed by a pair of narrow tournament wins over Black Hawk and Monticello.

"It was very disappointing for us," Parham continued. "Because after Pardeeville got beat, we knew we had our chance (to go to state). We didn't have to contend with the height that Pardeeville had if we won our first game.'

"But we simply didn't play good basketball," he added. 'Palmyra wasn't any better than most of the teams that we had been playing, but we didn't play well enough to win. We didn't have the zip that we usually have. It was probably our worst game of the year.

Barneveld never had the lead in the contest, trailing from the first two-pointer. Palmyra's Bill Wickland hit the first bucket, and after Kermit Nyhus countered for Barneveld, Paul Seifert put Palmyra ahead for good with a bucket just two minutes into the game. The Panthers led by as many as seven points late in the period before Pat Clerkin hit three points in the final minute and a half to pull the Eagles to within 18-12.

Clerkin cut the gap to 18-14 with the second quarter's first basket, but two minutes later, Palmyra went on its 11 point spree. Five players contributed as the Panthers took control with a pressing defense that often failed to even let the Golden Eagles cross the center line. The lead expanded to 35-17 by halftime.

Barneveld had come from behind to win before, so the 600 fans who followed the Eagles to West Bend still had hope. After Todd Bealhen scored the first basket of the second half to put Palmyra up by 20, the Golden Eagles made their final bid to get back in the game.

Barneveld outscored Palmyra 13-4 in the final seven minutes of the third period to pull within 11 at 41-30, again within striking distance. The lead was cut to nine at 43-34 two minutes into the fourth quarter, but when the Eagles had a chance to cut the deficit to seven, turnovers took their toll. Barneveld was guilty of only 10 turnovers compared to 21 for Palmyra, but the miscues occurred at strategic times in the contest. Palmyra slowed the tempo of play, and worked for the easy buckets to again assume control as time ran out.

Parham said that although Palmyra qualified for the state tournament with the poorest record at the West Bend Sectional, teams often put things together late in the year. "They played well, and used good ball handling and good shot selection to do what they had to in the second half," he said. "Things are falling in place for them."

"I have to be well pleased with the season that we've had," Parham said. "I felt we might have a better won-loss record than we ended up with, but we lost a couple of close ball games. We had some ups and downs, but we overcame those to finish by playing five extra ball games in the tournaments. Now we've got sub-regional, regional, and sectional experience, so that should make a difference next year.

The Eagles should be strong again next year, the Barneveld coach added. "In fact, we should be able to win the State Line League, and possibly make it back to the sectionals and maybe even further.'

Back next year will be six players who saw considerable action this season, including leading scorer Pat Clerkin. Lost to graduation will be seniors Mark DeSmet, Jeff Beckett, Cal Williams, and Jeff Zander.

In other statistics against Palmyra, while Barneveld was hitting only 17 of 51 shots for 33 percent, Palmyra was sinking 21 of 42 shots for 50 percent. Barneveld made eight of 14 free throws, compared to seven of 12 for Palmyra. Barneveld committed 13 fouls, while the Panthers were guilty of 11.

Barn Collapses on Barneveld Area Farm, Beef Cattle

Some of the cattle can be seen amidst the rubble of the fallen barn at Trademark Farms, rural Barneveld. The heavy snow collapsed the roof of the barn Tuesday morning.

Neighbors and friends helped close up one end of the fallen barn Tuesday south of Barneveld. A 65 X 80 foot section of barn collapsed under snow on the Trademark Farms, killing more than 20 cattle.

A barn roof cave-in took the lives of approximately 25 beef cattle Tuesday on a farm south of Barneveld.

The cattle were crushed when a 56x80 section of barn collapsed under the heavy snow. Ninetyseven cattle had access to the barn, and preliminary figures showed that approximately 70 cattle had escaped.

The collapse happened on the Trademark Farms, just off County Trunk K, south of Barneveld. The farm is owned by Dr. Richard Botham, Madison, but the cattle were owned by a renter, David Lee.

"It happened sometime between 6:30 and 8:00 this morning," Lee said Tuesday afternoon. "I was working up to my dad's farm just a quarter mile away, when a neighbor came up and told me that my barn collapsed."

Barneveld Slips By Monticello To Advance to West Bend 1979

Barneveld's State Line League runners-up earned a trip to the West Bend Sectional Monday night, winning for the second time in three meetings this season against conference champion Monticello, 60-58 at Belleville.

The victory was assured only as the final second ticked off the clock, as the Ponies missed a last shot which would have sent the game into overtime.

Barneveld junior Kermit Nyhus, playing perhaps his best game in only his first varsity season, put the Eagles on top by two points with a free throw with 11 seconds to play. Nyhus missed the first of two shots, but hit the gift toss that assured the Golden Eagles of at least an overtime opportunity.

But Barneveld didn't need an overtime to claim its 17th victory of the year. Monticello was mable to score in the final 11 seconds, and the Pony rally fell short.

Barneveld led by as many as nine points in the fourth quarter after trailing through the first three stanzas. The Golden Eagles got off to a quick start and a brief lead in the first period, but Monticello assumed command before the quarter ended and led until Barneveld scored first in the final period.

Free throws carried the Golden Eagles through the final frame. Barneveld converted 15 free throws in the fourth period, four each by Nyhus, Pat Clerkin, and Mark DeSmet. Nyhus tallied 10 of his 15 points in that fourth quarter, to nearly duplicate the feat of Monticello's Brian Smith, who scored 12 points. Smith scored four buckets in the final minute and a half to offset each pair of free throws that the Golden Eagles dropped through, as the game wound down to the final seconds.

It appeared that it would be certain victory for Barneveld when Monticello's high-scoring Keith Hoesly fouled out with 2:48 left in the game, but Pony coach Bob Luchsinger relied on Smith to carry the Monticello hopes down the stretch. Barneveld led 51-44 when Hoesly fouled out, but in the final 168 seconds, Smith helped the Ponies outscore Barneveld 14-9, to creep within one point before Nyhus dropped in the pressure free throw with 11 seconds left.

The win was especially gratifying for Barneveld coach Troy Parham and the Golden Eagles, who had led the conference through much of the season but had slumped in the season's final month to slip to a second place tie. "We felt that we were the best team in the conference, and playing Monticello in the regional finals, we had a chance to prove it," Parham said.

The victory improved Barneveld's record to 17-5 on the season, while Monticello dropped out of tournament competition with an 18-4 record with an 18-4 record.

Barneveld led by four points three times in the first quarter before Monticello sprinted ahead. Four players scored two points each to help the Ponies move in front 10-8 after three quarters.

In the second period, Hoesly led the Ponies to a 17-10 advantage before Barneveld again pulled back into contention. The 6'0" senior scored eight second quarter points as Monticello moved into the lockerroom with a 24-19 lead.

Barneveld pulled to within two points midway through the third period before Monticello again moved out to a seven point advantage at 35-28 before the Golden Eagles spurted in the final two minutes. DeSmet, Paul McSherry and Zander scored two points each as Barneveld pulled to within 35-34 as the third quarter ended.

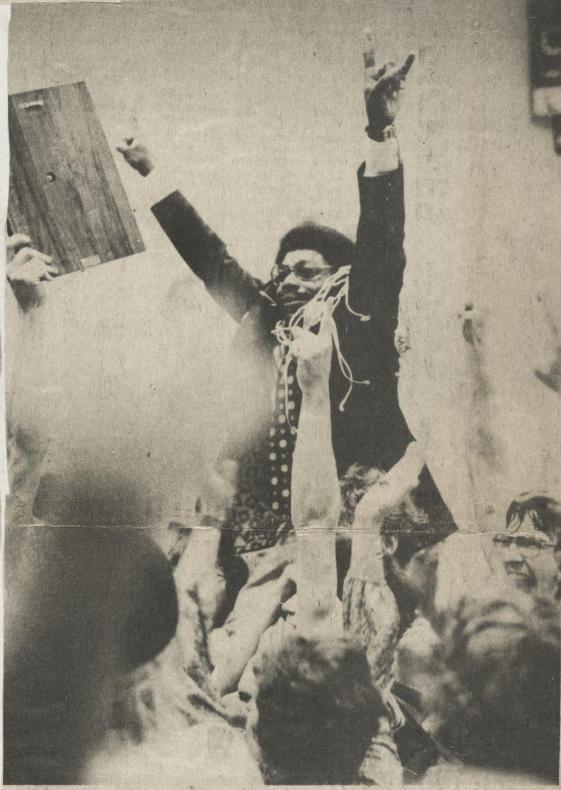

The Golden Eagles scored the first six points of the fourth quarter, and they were never headed. The lead reached nine points an 47-38 with 4:11 to play, and stayed at nine until Monticello began its final rally.

"We both have been fourth quarter teams all year, but I think that Monticello found out that we were a better fourth quarter outfit," Parham said.

The Barneveld coach called the regional championship "unbelievable," and added that his team "played like a championship ball club in the second half" against Monticello. "We knew that Hoesly was going to score a lot of points (he finished with 19), but we weren't about to let him score 36 like he did against Juda two nights before. As it turned out, I think our pressure wore them down, and we were too tough on them inside. And we also had too much depth for them."

"We missed a lot of free throws in the first half (Barneveld made 3 or 10 in the first half), but we made them when we had to late in the game," Parham added. "We made a few changes at halftime, and put Pat (Clerkin) on the weak side, so that helped us offensively in the second half. And Kermit just did a super job for us in the second half"

Statistically, Barneveld had the edge in one of three departments, and the other two were even. The Golden Eagles hit 19 of 32 field goal attempts for 59 percent, compared to 17 of 46 for 37 percent for Monticello. Both teams turned the ball over 13 times, and both clubs collected 25 rebounds. Nyhus led Barneveld rebounders with 12.

"In the first half, the New Glarus guards were getting the chance to shoot the outside shots, and they were hitting them. But then we used a man-to-man defense in the second half, and didn't give them the room to get those shots off. And then once we got the lead, Ranney, Nyhus and (Jon) Zander hit the clutch free throws."

Friedli played the game with a sprained big toe, and was hobbled by the injury late in the second half. Bothun said he hopes Friedli will be 100 percent in time for Waterloo.

Barneveld again hit the big free throws to win the game. The Golden Eagles hit 20 of 29 gift tosses, compared to just eight of 11 for New Glarus. Barneveld had one of its poorest shooting

Last season, first-year Barneveld football coach Kirk Holland attributed a shortage of players and a lack of size to a dismal 1-8 season which his Golden Eagle gridiron squad suffered through.

This year, Holland says that both of those situations have been improved considerably. "We've got more players, and the ones that we've got are bigger," he said in an interview last week. "So this is the year to make Barneveld a contender in football."

Holland said that realistically, a contending position for the Golden Eagles would mean an upper division finish in the State Line League. He sees schools such as Black Hawk, Belleville and Pecatonica as roadblocks between his team and the conference title.

"I was talking with one of the Black Hawk assistant coaches, and he said that they've got 24 kids on the freshman team alone," Holland indicated. "Those numbers are difficult for us to compete with. Belleville also has a large group, and this year they've got an especially talented group returning."

But Holland is optimistic about his team's chances of improving. "The kids have a good attitude, and they've been working hard," he said. "And our squad size is up to 42 kids this year."

Included on that team are 16 lettermen, six who are seniors. Three of the returnees are only sophomores who were forced into action as freshmen a year ago.

The lettermen will be led by senior co-captains Scott Carmody and Nick Kirch. Carmody is a four-year starter who was plagued with injuries and illness most of last season. He will be used as a running back and a defensive cornerback. Kirch will also find a spot in the offensive backfield, and will serve as the middle linebacker.

Other lettermen include seniors Greg Ryan, Bill Myers, Steve Kirschbaum, and Jeff Jenson; juniors Joel Zander, Kenton Powell, Randy Oimoen, Dean Manteufel, Willie Henderson, Lindsay Czerwonka, and Billy Arneson; and sophomores Willie Hilst, John Carmody, and Troy Burkhalter.

The major losses to graduation from last year's squad include four two-way players. Mark DeSmet, Cal Williams, Doug Manteufel, and Dave Henderson will be missed this season, according to Holland, but he hopes that his younger players will be able to fill their shoes and improve the team depth.

Filling DeSmet's job at quarterback will be Willie Henderson, a 5'10" junior. He'll be flanked in the backfield by Carmody, Kirch, and Myers, with sophomore John Carmody in a utility role.

Holland says the weight of his players should increase by about seven or eight pounds in 1979. "We'll have a much bigger line this year, and our backs have will be a bit bigger," he said. The biggest in the line will be Greg Ryan at 6'3" and 215 lbs., with Randy Oimoen the only other player listed at 200 pounds or more.

Also new on the team this year will be a pair of new assistant coaches. Jim Gainey and Chris Kopmeier, both new at the school, will assist Holland. "With all respect to Jim and Chris, we will miss Steve Van Hout and Al Antonson," Holland said. "They both did an excellent job, and had excellent football knowledge. But I'm sure that Jim and Chris will do a good job for us."

Injuries could be costly for the Golden Eagles, despite the larger numbers. "Our depth still won't be what it should be, because a lack of experience in some positions," the Barneveld coach said. "We've already had a couple of injuries--Jeff Jenson with an ankle in practice and Doug Hughes in a farm accident, but we don't think either injury is too severe. We hope to have them both back with us soon."

Holland says that Belleville and Black Hawk will probably be fighting for the State Line League crown, because of their experience and numbers. "Belleville had an unbeaten junior varsity team last year, and they also had a lot of strong juniors.

Sportsmanship

Seven Iowa County wrestlers have been honored by their coaches by being named recipients of the Dodgeville Chronicle wrestling sportsmanship awards.

The first annual awards are being presented to one wrestler from each of the Iowa County area schools. Coaches at each school were asked to make the selection of one wrestler on their squad that would be most fitting for the award.

The Chronicle sports staff decided to create the new award to recognize a quality in an athlete that is sometimes overlooked, the quality of sportsmanship. A plaque will be presented by the Chronicle to each of the recipients.

The award is being astablished.

The award is being established following a season in which Iowa County has established itself as the number one wrestling county.

the number one wrestling county in the state of Wisconsin. More points were scored at the past state tournament by Iowa County wrestlers than by wrestlers in any other county in Wisconsin. Six of seven Iowa County schools had state placewinners in the state meet, and Mineral Point brought the Class C state championship back to the county.

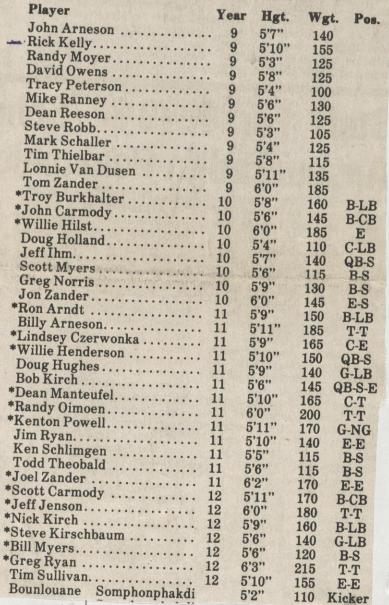

In past years, certificates have been presented by the Chronicle to area wrestlers earning berths in the sectional and state meets. With the new class system developed in the state, it was decided by the sports staff that one sportsmanship award per team would be more appropriate and meaningful than a bevy of certificates.

This year's winners of the awards are as follows: Mike Murphy, Mineral Point; Scott Reddell, Iowa-Grant; Doug Lindsay, Dodgeville; Jerry Sigg, Pecatonica; Bill Rose, Highland; Joe Wiest, River Valley; and Dennis Schlimgen, Barneveld.

The sportsmanship award winner at Barneveld High School for the 1979-80 school year is freshman Dennis Schlimgen. The son of Mr. and Mrs. Roman Schlimgen, Dennis wrestled for the Golden Eagles as a 98 pounder, while weighing in at only about 85 pounds. Schlimgen was selected to receive the award by his Barneveld teammates. "Dennis gave up a lot of weight against everybody he wrestled against everybody he wrestled against everybody he wrestled against coach Raymond Lease said. "He was an extremely dedicated wrestler, and Barneveld should be able to expect good things from him for the next three years."

Golden Eagles Win 20th Straight

Barneveld turned in its 20th boys basketball victory of the season Saturday night, eliminating a scrappy Shullsburg quintet in the opening game of the Mineral Point Regional tournament.

The Golden Eagles fought off a third period Shullsburg rally with a flurry of free throws in the final eight minutes and beat the Miners, 55-44. The win sent Barneveld into Monday night's regional finals at New Glarus against the Glarner Knights, with the winner headed to the sectional tournament this weekend at Whitewater and West Bend. Barnevled lost its only game of the season to New Glarus in November.

"We out-talented them, but they out-hustled us," Barneveld coach Gary Bothun said in describing his team's victory over the Miners. "They never gave up, no matter how far they got behind. Their coach said that after they beat Argyle in the first game of the tournaments, it really gave them a lift. They were fired up for us."

really gave them a lift. They were fired up for us."

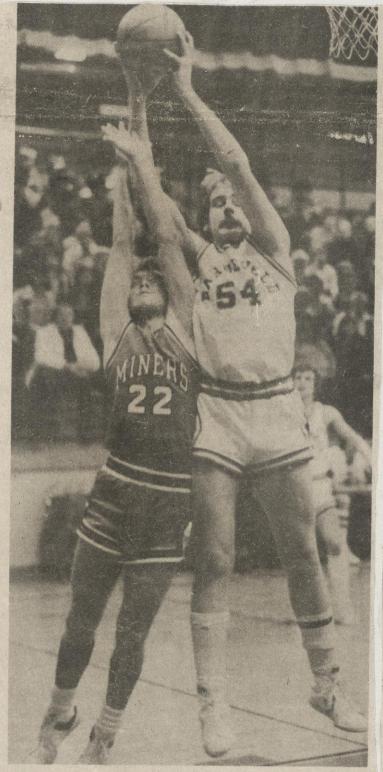

That win for Shullsburg (against Argyle) was only the second of the season for the Miners, but it put the Blackhawk League quintet at 1-0 in the "second season," the WIAA tournaments.

It was free throws that won the game for Barneveld Saturday night. "We did an excellent job with our free throws (hitting 21 of 26 for 81%), and it was the difference in the ball game," Bothun indicated. "We shot 100 free throws each Saturday morning in preparing for the game, and it paid off."

After failing to connect on two free throw attempts in the period, Barneveld hit 16 foul shots in a row before missing a free shot in the final quarter. Center Pat Clerkin and guard Jeff Ranney experienced most of the free throw success, with Clerkin hitting 10 of 12 and Ranney dropping in seven of nine. Meanwhile, Shullsburg was able to hit on only eight of 18 free throws. Many of those misses came on the front end of bonus opportunities in both the second and fourth periods.

It was in the second period that Barneveld took control of the game. Shullsburg played the Eagles even in the first period, and trailed only 12-11 heading into the second quarter. In that second stanza, Barneveld outscored Shullsburg 18-2 during the first seven minutes and 20-4 throughout the eight minute session. Clerkin scored 12 points during that quarter, eight on free throws, to help his team sprint to a 32-15 halftime lead.

But the fighting Miners were not about to give up. Shullsburg outscored Barnevled 15-6 during the first five minutes of the third quarter, and by a 22-12 margin during the entire period to pull to within 44-37 after 24 minutes. But that was as close as the Miners were able to pull, as the Golden Eagle free throws kept the game out of reach in the final frame.

For the third straight tournament game, Clerkin led his team in scoring, this time pouring 22 points. "For the last three basketball games, Pat has been showing what he can do," Bothun said. "He has been playing good, hard basketball." The Barneveld coach also had praise for Ranney and his play in the Shullsburg game.

"I think our problems against Mineral Point and Shullsburg had something to do with getting up for each game," Bothun said. "But this is a fun part of the year, so we've got to make it that and play to our potential from here on in. There won't be any more bad teams to play against."

Both teams shot 40 percent from the floor in the game, with Shullsburg hitting 18 or 45. Barneveld led in rebounding, 24-20, with Clerkin and Ranney each collecting six.

Barneveld Climbs Tourney Ladder

Barneveld moved another step up the tournament ladder last Thursday night, trouncing Mineral Point in a sub-regional boys basketball game at Mineral Point, 54-38.

The win gave the Golden Eagles a 19-1 season record, whileMineral Point dropped from tournament action with an 0-19 mark. Barneveld advanced into the Mineral Point Regional finals against Shullsburg with the

Golden Eagles (8) Gun For Pirates

The Waterloo Pirates will be the opponent Friday night when Barneveld's Golden Eagles make a return trip to the boys sectional basketball tournament this year at Whitewater.

Waterloo, which is coached by Arthur Westphal, heads into the sectional game with a 19-2 record, losing only to Columbus (86-79) and to Lakeside Luthern (70-63 in three overtimes). The Pirates have been listed high on the state's Class C list all year, and finished as the once-beaten champions of the Eastern Suburban Conference.

Westphal, who has compiled a 57-25 record in four years at Waterloo, led the Pirates to a 12-8 record a year ago. The 14-6 record that his 1977-78 team compiled was his best team before this year's quintet.

Waterloo earned the sectional

Waterloo earned the sectional berth by beating Belleville of the State Line League, 80-61; Eastern Suburban opponents Deefield (65-57) and Johnson Creek (66-49). It will be the first trip to a sectional meet under Westphal's guidance for the Pirates.

"We try to push the ball up the floor, and speed up the tempo of the game, that's no secret," Westphal said. "We're fairly quick and we're not big, so that's the type of game we have to

The Waterloo starting line-up includes guards Rob Hamilton, 5'10", and Kirk Virchow, 5'9"; forwards Tom Kegler, 5'10", and Brian Wilke, 5'10"; and center Mike Radloff, 6'2". The first three players off of the Pirate bench are Tony Robertson, a 6'4" sophomore center; Randy Ellis, a 5'9" guard; and Mark Monsies-Gomez, a 5'8" guard. Of that group, Kegler is the leading scorer with a 15.8 average, while Virchow averages 15.3 and Wilke and Hamilton also score in double figures with 12.4 and 10.0, respectively.

"We try to make up for our lack of size with rebounding positioning," Westphal pointed out. "Against Barneveld, it will be our quickness against their size, but I expect it to be a heckuva game. We may have a tough time matching up to handle their size, but we'll try to get the ball up the floor in a hurry to offset that size difference." The Pirates used a fast-breaking offense to outscore opponents by an average of 73 to 59 this season.

Westphal said that his team will employ both man-to-man and zone defenses, depending on the situation. "We also like to use a press, depending on the game," he said.

One Pirate that Westphal is a bit concerned about is guard Rob last night against Johnson Creek, and we don't know if he'll be ready to play against Barneveld or not," the coach said. Hamilton has contributed 149 assists to the Waterloo cause this season, including 10 in Monday's game.

Barneveld coach Gary Bothun has seen Waterloo play this season, and looks at the Pirates as a tough obstacle on the way to the state tournament. "They're not big, but they're a good ball club," he said. "They pass well, they're aggressive, and they press alot. They also rebound and work the ball inside well for a small team."

Bothun said that his team's job will be to slow down the fast-moving Pirates. "Only one team has scored 60 points against us all season, and we don't plan to let them be the second one," Bothun said. The Barneveld coach added that the Golden Eagles have held opponents to less than 40 points eight times this season.

The two teams will meet Friday night at Williams Center in Whitewater in a 6:30 ball game. The contest will be followed by a Class B game between Elkhorn and Lake Mills. All tickets are reserved seats, but according to Whitewater athletic director Charles Coulthart, tickets will be available at the door. The Whitewater fieldhouse holds approximately 3000 spectators. Tickets are $2.00 for students and $2.50 for adults, and also can be purchased at Barneveld High School.

Either Waterloo or Barneveld will meet the winner of the Kohler-Pardeeville game for a chance to head into the state meet March 20-22. Pardeeville is favored in its meeting with Kohler, and is headed by Joel Hammond, the son of head coach Bruce Hammond, and a 6'7" center.

Bothun feels that his quintet has the capabilities of beating any of the three teams in the sectional field. "We've proven that we're one of the best 16 teams in Class C in the state, and I think we're as good as any team around when we're at our best," he said. "But we'll go into the sectional as the underdog, because everybody figures it will be Pardeeville and Waterloo. Our job will be to relax and play good basketball, and see what happens."

Saturday night's game for the sectional championship will be held at the site of last year's sectional tournament, at the West Bend Fieldhouse. Barneveld lost last year in a sectional semi-final game to Palmyra, which advanced to the state tournament by upsetting Kohler in the finals. The two Friday night winners will play the sectional title game at 7:30 Saturday night.

Fouls Sink Barneveld In State Bid,

The Barneveld basketball fans who made it to Whitewater last Friday night to see the Golden Eagles take on Waterloo in the Sectional semi-finals will be talking about the 47-41 loss to the Pirates for a long time.

There will undoubtedly be a great many "what ifs" floating around in the conversations of the Barneveld fan. "What if" Barneveld would have been able to take advantage of first half opportunities to build a 12 or 14 point halftime lead. "What if" Golden Eagle big men Pat Clerkin and Kermit Nyhus hadn't been relegated to the bench for nearly half of the ball game due to some questionable foul trouble. And "what if" Barneveld wouldn't have shot 33 percent from the field, scoring only four field goals in the second half.

The list could go on forever, but when the questions end, the facts will be clear—Barneveld blew a six point halftime lead and lost a game it could have won.

"We were all pretty disappointed, mostly because we didn't think Waterloo was a better team than we were," Barneveld coach Gary Bothun said. "If we thought we lost to a better team, we could be a little happier with the way the season ended. But with the way things went in the second half, we had to go home feeling disappointed."

In that second half, Barneveld saw a six point halftime lead slip away due to foul trouble and poor shooting. Barneveld's top scorers, Clerkin and Nyhus, fouled out midway through the final period, and with those two 6'4" seniors, Barneveld's hopes for a victory went to the bench.

"The foul trouble took us out of our game in the second half, and we couldn't do anything that we wanted to do," Bothun continued. "When Kermit and Pat were on the bench in the third period, we had to just hang in there and hope we could stay close until we got them back later in the game. But it seemed that as soon as we got them back, they got their fifth fouls and they were gone."

"In the first half, we worked our offense a little bit before we got in foul trouble, but when we did try to work it into Pat, he turned around and got a quick offensive foul," Bothun continued. "Some of the calls (fouls) against us were just unbelievable. On Pat's fifth foul, I stood up to ask the referee what the call was for, and he slapped me with a technical before I was even able to say a word. I asked him what the technical was for, and he said it was for what I said. I hadn't even said anything yet."

Barneveld led throughout the first half, breaking away from a 4-4 tie early in the game to go ahead by as many as nine points midway through the second period. Seniors Nyhus, Clerkin, Jeff Ranney and Wes Friedli all scored in the first quarter to put Barneveld on top 12-7 after the first eight minutes.

The Golden Eagles began to stretch the lead in the second stanza. Junior guard Jesse Straubhaar hit a pair of buckets and Greg Ryan, substituting for Nyhus, already on the bench with his third foul, pumped in a pair of buckets to help Barneveld build a 20-11 lead with 5:15 left before halftime. Waterloo quickly fought back to within two points, at 20-18, before the Eagles closed the half with a flurry to go back on top by six at 30-24. Clerkin, Ranney and Straubhaar all scored six points in the first half to share Barneveld scoring honors, while Nyhus, Ryan and Friedli each scored four.

The third quarter was the beginning of the end. Just 3:45 into the quarter, Waterloo tied the score at 32-all, and Barneveld was never able to grab the lead again. Nyhus committed his fourth foul with 2:49 left in the third quarter, and 50 seconds later, Clerkin was on the bench as well with his fourth foul. But Barneveld still was down by just a single point, 35-34, heading into the final period.

Waterloo scored the first two buckets of the fourth quarter to go up by five points, before Nyhus countered with a basket to make the score 39-36. But 27 seconds later, a controversial fifth foul was whistled on Nyhus, and he was permanently on the bench with 4:46 still to play.

The two teams traded two-pointers, before Clerkin took his spot on the bench next to Nyhus. Waterloo's Rob Hamilton drove the lane, plowed into Clerkin, and somehow drew Clerkin's fifth foul. A pair of technical fouls followed, one on Bothun and one on Jeff Ranney, as Waterloo on Jeff Ranney, as Waterloo pulled away in the final agonizing moments. The Waterloo lead grew to as large as 47-38 before Jon Zander and Straubhaar scored the final three points to make the decision stand at 47-41.

Bothun said that the Eagles had several chances to blow the game open, and when they couldn't do it, the door was left open for Waterloo to come back.

"The first three or four times down the floor in the second half, we didn't score," he said. "We had our chances to go up by about 14 points, but we couldn't get the clutch basket. We missed easy shots under the basket, and then we lost our cool. We threw up shots with nobody under the basket to rebound, when our strategy was to work for the good shot."

The Barneveld coach said that Waterloo "made you be a good basketball team. In the first half, we did play good basketball. But then we got into our foul trouble, Waterloo got into the bonus from the free throw line, and we couldn't work our offense. We couldn't execute the offense that

Waterloo might have won by a bigger margin if it hadn't been for a miserable free throw percentage. The Pirates made only 13 of 36 free throws, and missed many of the free throws in bonus situations. They might have shot as many as 50 free throws if their percentage had been high.

Bothun said that despite the heart-breaking sectional defeat, the 1979-80 campaign could be called a "great season. We lost our first game, and then won 21 games in a row, sometimes with lackluster performances but sometimes playing super basketball. We set out by establishing three goals—to win the conference, win the regional championship, and make it to state. We fell short of one of those goals."

After beating Barneveld Friday night, the Pirates took on Kohler Saturday night at West Bend for the right to play in this weekend's state tournament. Kohler easily handled Waterloo, winning by 19. "I went up to the game, and from what I saw of Kohler, we could have matched up with them pretty good," Bothun said. "They had way too much height for Waterloo, with two Wolf boys who are brothers of the Wolf who was an all-stater and played for North Carolina. One is 6'6" and one is 6'4". I feel we could have given them a better game than Waterloo did."

Bothun said that in Saturday night's sectional finals, Waterloo "wasn't getting away with the pushing that they weren't getting called for on Friday. "When they committed a foul against Kohler, they were called for it," he said. "That was a little different than the way things went Friday

Statistically, Waterloo had the edge. The Pirates made 17 of 40 shots for 43 percent, while Barneveld made 17 of 51 for 33 percent. From the free throw line, Barneveld was more accurate while shooting far less shots than the Pirates. Barneveld made seven of 13 for 54 percent, while Waterloo was 13 of 35 for 37 percent.

Barneveld outrebounded the Pirates, 33-28, with Clerkin accounting for 13 rebounds. In the turnover department, Barneveld had 14 to 10 for Waterloo.

The 21-2 basketball season will officially come to a close Tuesday night, March 25 when the cagers will be honored at the annual winter athletic banquet. The boys basketball, girls basketball and wrestling teams will all be honored at the 7:30 event. Tickets are $3.00 in advance and $3.50 at the door for the banquet, which will be held in the high school gym. Guest speaker for the banquet will be Marian Keegan, girls cross country and volleyball coach at the University of Wisconsin Richland Center campus.

Conference champion Barneveld, runner-up New Glarus, and third place Juda each placed two players on the 1979-80 State Line League boys basketball All-Conference team named last week.

Barneveld seniors Pat Clerkin and Kermit Nyhus were the tallest players listed on the 10-man squad at 6'4". They helped lead Barneveld to a 21-2 season record and a 15-1 conference mark and the school's first State Line League title. Clerkin was the only repeater on this year's all-league team from the 1978-79 squad.

Named as the league's most valuable player was Greg Blum of Juda. Blum earned the MVV honor by receiving the most votes among the league coaches who picked the team. Clerkin and Nyhus were listed second and third in the balloting.

Another area player selected was Pecatonica senior Ron Gifford. The 6'1" Gifford was selected along with Kurt and Rudi Feller of New Glarus, Dave Zimmerman of Monticello, Tim Meyer of Belleville, and Bryce Sopher of Black Hawk.

Earning honorable mention selection for Barneveld and Pecatonica were Wes Friedli and Jerome Hendrickson, respectively. Both are seniors.

Barneveld Prepares With Quiet 1990

A group of 14 returning lettermen has Barneveld coach Kirk Holland "quietly optimistic" as his team heads into the 1980 football campaign.

Holland will be working with a solid group of 19 juniors and seniors this season on a team dominated by upperclassmen. Only seven sophomores and five freshmen reported out for August football drills, leaving Barneveld with 31 members on the football squad. So Holland is once again concerned with the shortage of players.

"We've got some good kids, but we'll have problems if we run into many injuries," he said. "We've got experienced people at most positions, but we won't have the experienced back-up people."

Holland looks for the all-important quarterback spot to be filled by veteran Willie Henderson, a 5'9", 150 lb. senior, and an injury at that key spot might cause a major problem for the Golden Eagles. "We've got a capable back-up quarterback in Jon Zander, but of course he doesn't have the experience that Willie has," Holland said. "There will be several key positions where injuries would really set us back, so we just have to go out and play hard and hope it doesn't happen."

Last year's Barneveld team compiled a 2-7 record, good enough for a sixth place tie in the State Line League. Holland is hoping his team can move up in the standings this time around.

"Realistically, I look for Belleville and Pecatonica to fight it out for the championship," Holland predicted. "I also look for Black Hawk and Holy Name to be competitive, along with us. With a couple of breaks, we could be fighting for the championship." "We've got good senior leadership," Holland continued. "We

"We've got good senior leadership," Holland continued. "We don't have a senior on our team who's not fully dedicated. They've been together as a unit for four years, and they were extremely successful as JV's before playing varsity ball last year. So we're looking for good things from them."

Among the players who will be sorely missed from last year's team are running backs Nick Kirch and Scott Carmody, and linemen Steve Kirschbaum and Greg Ryan. Holland hopes his group of eight juniors and 11 seniors can fill the gaps left by those graduates.

New faces on the Barneveld team will include a pair of seniors, Jeff Ryan and Jesse Straubhaar, who both decided to give football a try for the first time as seniors. Ryan will see duty in the line while Straubhaar will work as a receiver and back.

Sophomores who might be called into varsity action, according to Holland, include Rick Kelly, Randy Moyer, and Dave Owens. "They probably won't be varsity starters, but they will probably get some work," the third year Barneveld coach said.

Probable starters on this year's team, with the first scrimmage just two days away (Barneveld hosts Benton Saturday morning at 10:00), include Henderson at quarterback, John Carmody at halfback, Kenton Powell at fullback, Dean Manteufel at center, Jon Zander at an end, and Joel Zander, Randy Oimoen, Doug Hughes, and Willie Hilst in the offensive line. On defense, starters will probably include Ryan and Oimoen at the tackles, Hilst at nose guard, Joel and Jon Zander at the end spots, Doug Hughes, Bob Kirch, and Powell as linebackers, and Ken Schlimgen, Straubhaar, and Carmody in the backfield.

Serving as co-captains this season will be seniors Henderson and Powell, while assistant coaches will again by Gary Bothun and Jim Gainey Bothun and Jim Gainey.

Barneveld opens its' non-conference season August 29 at Cassville, and will begin league play Saturday, Sept. 13 at home against Juda to highlight Fair Day activities. The Fair Day game will be a salute to Ron Arndt, Jr., who was killed in a traffic accident last year. Arndt, who was an all-area linebacker as junior a year ago, will be honored posthumously when his number will be retired during halftime ceremonies. The Barneveld defense will play without one linebacker as a special tribute to Arndt during the first series of downs against Juda, according to coach Holland.

Five teams placed two players each on the 10-player State Line League All-Conference girls basketball team named last week.

*Conference champion Belleville, Barneveld, Black Hawk, Monticello, and New Glarus each had two players listed on the first team. Seniors Sandy Trainor and Joan Twiton of Barneveld were the only repeat players from the 1978-79 team. The first team players were selected in a vote of conference coaches, while honorable mention selections for each team were also named by the coach for that squad. Julie Handel was listed as an honorable mention selection for Barneveld, while Teresa Hendrickson was listed on the honorable mention squad for Pecatonica.

The entire 1979-80 all-league team is listed as follows:

Bill Myers, right, Barneveld, recently returned from a hunting trip to Wyoming, where he bagged the seven and half year old ram pictured above. Only 350 permits to hunt the rams were issued in the country, and Myers was the only Wisconsinite to receive a license. Only a 30 percent kill was expected, and the ram bagged by Myers was the largest of those shot before he returned to Wisconsin. He dropped the animal from about 500 yards away, leaning against a tree. The ram has a 32-inch curl rack, which is 16 inches at the base. Myers was hunting out of Sweetwater Lodge, Wyoming, which is located near Yellowstone National Park. Wayne Maubach, co-owner of the lodge, is pictured above with Myers.

Clerkin, Trainor, Kirch Receive MVP Honors At BHS

Pat Clerkin, Sandy Trainor and Nick Kirch were named most valuable players of their respective sports Tuesday night at the annual winter sports banquet at Barnveld High School. Clerkin was named the most valuable player on the 1979-80 boys basketball team, which last week finished a 21-2 season with a sectional loss to Waterloo. Trainor was the MVP of the Golden Eagle girls cage team, and Kirch, Barneveld's first-ever state wrestling placewinner, earned the award in that sport.

Dodgeville Chronicle All-Area Co-Player of the Year award from Chronicle editor Jim Massey. The 6'4" senior also took home awards as a first team allconference player, and a basketball sportsmanship award.

Trainor, a first team allconference player on the Golden Eagles girls team, was voted MVP by her teammates. Head girls coach Bill Femal said the award was a difficult one to hand out on this year's team, because one player can not make a team. Without Julie Handel handling the ball, or Sandy and Susan rebounding, or Joan Twiton

Nick and Bob Kirch were the first state wrestling qualifiers for Barneveld, and both received state participation certificates. Kirch also received the MVP and the beginning of the season with most dedicated awards in the three goals, to win the league sport, while Randy Oimoen was wrestling the sportsmanship winner.
Other awards presented at the banquet included Wes Friedli, most improved on the 1979-80 boys basketball team; Greg Ryan, most dedicated boys basketball; Joan Twiton, sportsmanship award girls basketball; and Dawn Owens, most dedicated girls basketball.

Four-year awards were presented to 11 senior athletes, who participated in the sport or who participated in the sport or cheerleading all four years of high school. Those awards went to Jeana Buol, Denise Theobald, Greg Ryan, Pat Clerkin, Wes Friedli, Jeff Ranney, Rhonda Collins, Nick Kirch, Joan Twiton, Sandy Trainor, and Susan scoring, we wouldn't have been said that the Golden Eagles 'definitely had the best fans in the league. We had more fans game this season, home and away." He called the 21-2 season a "truly great year," and added that two of three Barneveld goals had been fulfilled. "We set out at championship, to earn a return trip to sectionals, and make it to state. We did the first two, and maybe on another night in another circumstance we might have been able to attain the final goal. But this team did many things that it can be proud of. They won 21 games in a row, and won the league championship with a 15-1 record. Eight times we held our opponents to less than 40 points, and 15 times to less than 50 points. Eight times we outscored our opponents by more than 20 points. The seniors on this team have done something they can be proud of, winning 38 of 46 ball games during the past two years. We will miss them and their will miss them, and their leadership next season ."

that Bothun said underclassmen should "accept next year as a challenge, and try to stay on top as State Line League champions.

Schlimgen commented on his team's 7-3 record, one of the best in recent memory at the school. 'And with only one senior on this year's team, next year's team ought to have a shot at first place in the league."

Athletic director Al Antonson noted that the 1979-80 sports season was a tremendous success for Barneveld in all three sports. You fans saw a lot of victories this year, especially at home," he said. "Combining the three sports, Barneveld won 23 games and lost only two at home this

Speaker at the banquet was Marian Keegan, physical education teacher and girls volleyball and tennis coach at the University of Wisconsin Center-Richland. She urged the Barneveld athletes to motivate themselves, and apply that motivation not only to sports but also to the classroom.

Iowa County ghost towns have their stories

RICH RYGH/The Capital Time

A misty look at the ruins of Moscow's old cheese factory on the Roland Syse farm in Iowa County.

Ma's cow was mooing in the distance.

Or, perhaps, it was pa's cow. Never mind. Capital Times Staff Photographer Rich Rygh and I were still in Moscow, once a thriving community in Iowa County.

Ole Bull fiddled here at the Syttende Mai celebration in 1873.

Four years later, Syttende Mai was celebrated by the Moscow Reading Society said to have 200 members and 300 books, offered for lending.

On May 17, 1933, 2,000 people gathered near the old village of Moscow and a "Mr. Holt played Ole Bull's masterpiece, 'Seterjentens Sondag,' on the same violin used by Bull in 1873."

Hotels, flour mills, businesses of all sorts existed here.

And, Martha Holland, an early pioneer and settler in Moscow, wrote her poetry — some of it published — here:

Were there no angel whispers heard, In pine trees tall by night winds stirred, In sylvan home, where thou dids't dwell.

In humble cot? Did not bright star foretell.

The destiny of that man-child, Of thine who came to thee in wild, Kentucky's wintry clime? Was there no breath Of prophesy to point his life and death?

— "Nancy Hanks Lincoln," by Martha Holland oday Moscow still exists, though mostly as a township. Yet, if you wend you way determinedly enough through the lowa County hills off Highway 39 three miles east of Hollandale, onto County Trunk F and then down Dug Out Road, you will come to the new bridge in "beautiful downtown Moscow."

Past the bridge are several old buildings, most of them still in use, though one, an old cheese factory on the Roland Syse property, stands only on two sides, still strong enough to show its incredible interlocking walls, a tribute to some long departed master builder.

Cows do moo here; it's mostly farm land. Across the road from the Syse farm and up the hill rest the residents of the Moscow Cemetery, visited on a recent sufficiently hazy and dreary fall day.

Moscow is a ghost town with its own ghosts. You don't need to go out West to find those. They're right here with stories to tell under marked tombstones.

"Sally Smith" lived to the ripe old age of 95 and died in 1881.

"Seth Smith," 77 years, 3 months, preceded her in death in 1854.

"Johnson" and "Fader og Son" remain "at rest," with the Holy Ghost somewhere about.

A lot of people died young then. More than half the tombstones are those of children.

If you read "A History of the Town of Moscow," by Ethelyn Thompson and Lucile Lauper, a book to which this article is heavily indebted, you will find a photograph taken by A.L. Dahl of the "historic May 17th celebration in the Village of Moscow"

Somewhere in there are Ole Bull and Rasmus B. Anderson, perhaps Martha Holland or Sara Smith.

And "Fader og Son" and Holy Ghost.

Iowa County's Best Young Farmers

The Dodgeville Jaycees held their 13th annual Iowa County Outstanding Young Farmer ban-quet in November and honored young couples for their work in agriculture. Three couples from a group of 12 candidates from around the county were recognized for their achievements. Dick and Cindy Reeson of Barneveld were selected as the 1983 Iowa County Outstanding Young Farmer while Gerald and Debra Nelson of Arena were named first runnerup and Tom and Judy Lauffer of Dodgeville were second runner-

Dick and Cindy Reeson

Dick Reeson, 33, purchased his farm two miles north of Barneveld in 1977, but has been an actual farm operator for 12 years. "I've farmed most all of my life and knew that there would be nothing else I would ever want to do," he said about getting started.

The Reesons began farming without any family assistance and Dick feels that has been their greatest accomplishment. "The challenge of farming is a whole lot greater when you're out on your own, making your own deciyour own, making your own decisions, and not having the security of your family's farm," he said.

Milk production on the Reeson farm has raised from 16,000 pounds of milk to the current 20,200 pounds of milk in just two years. Reeson credits this to three-a-day milkings.

"I milk at 9:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. and my wife milks the third shift at 1:00 a.m. after she gets home from work. For the first seven months, production stayed exactly the same. On the eighth month, we noticed an increase," he said.

"Every month since then production increased 250 to 400 pounds a month per cow. Our herd average soared from 16,000 to 20,200 pounds. Herd health improvement and Mastitus became non-existent. The greatest result is in the heifers. Stress was relieved from them while still maturing. They now peak at 80-90 pounds rather than 50-60

Reeson once had a goal of having a 18,000 pound herd average. Now that he's surpassed that, he'll continue to work on his goal of having a 100 percent registered herd. Currently, 95 percent of the herd is registered. "I want my farm not to necessarily get bigger, but to improve quality and efficiency," he said.

The Reesons also find time to be involved in numerous organizations. Some of their activities include serving as president of Associated Milk Producers, Inc., membership to the Holstein Association, American Dairy Association, being active members of St. Ignatius Catholic Church and being leaders of the Mounds-View 4-H Club.

Gerald and Deborah Nelson Gerald Nelson, 28, bought his father's farm near Arena in 1980. Previously, he had been farming with his father on a 50-50 basis.

"I began farming because I enjoyed working with land and cat-ile," Nelson said. "I wanted to keep the family farm going.

Nelson has tried several innovations to improve his farm. He was one of the first in his area to start using high moisture ground ear corn in a cement stave silo. Also, alfalfa is directseeded whenever possible.

"Our latest new practice in-volves a new heifer harn." har said. "We just completed a 32x150 foot barn which includes several new ideas. The entire barn has a solar roofline, natural ventila-tion, individual calf pens, and energy-free waterers. The energy-free waterers. The building is designed for comfort of both livestock and those taking care of them."

Nelson's goals for his farm continue to be bringing the farm up to its production potential and building a productive herd of registered cows. He has already realized one goal of having an excellent scored cow.

The Nelsons are actively involved in many organizations and both serve as dairy leaders for their local 4-H club. Gerald serves on an ag advisory commit-tee at River Valley High School and is on a land use planning committee for the Town of Arena. Among other groups they belong to are Iowa County Farm Bureau, American Dairy Association, AMPI and Produc-tion Credit Association.

Tom and Judy Lauffer

Tom Lauffer, 30, operates a farm between Dodgeville and Ridgeway which he has jointly owned with his brothers since

"I started farming because I like it," Lauffer said. "My dad is a good farmer and has always had good cows and good equipment to work with and I think that got me started more than anything. Farming is more than just a job, it's fun and when it stops being fun and starts to be just a job, I'll quit."

Lauffer is experimenting with a new planter that is equipped for no-till operation. It is hoped that the planter will cut down the amount of field work that needs to be done.

He has already reached one of his initial goals of increasing his herd's average of fat produced. Lauffer is also moving closer to realizing his dream of owning his own farm.

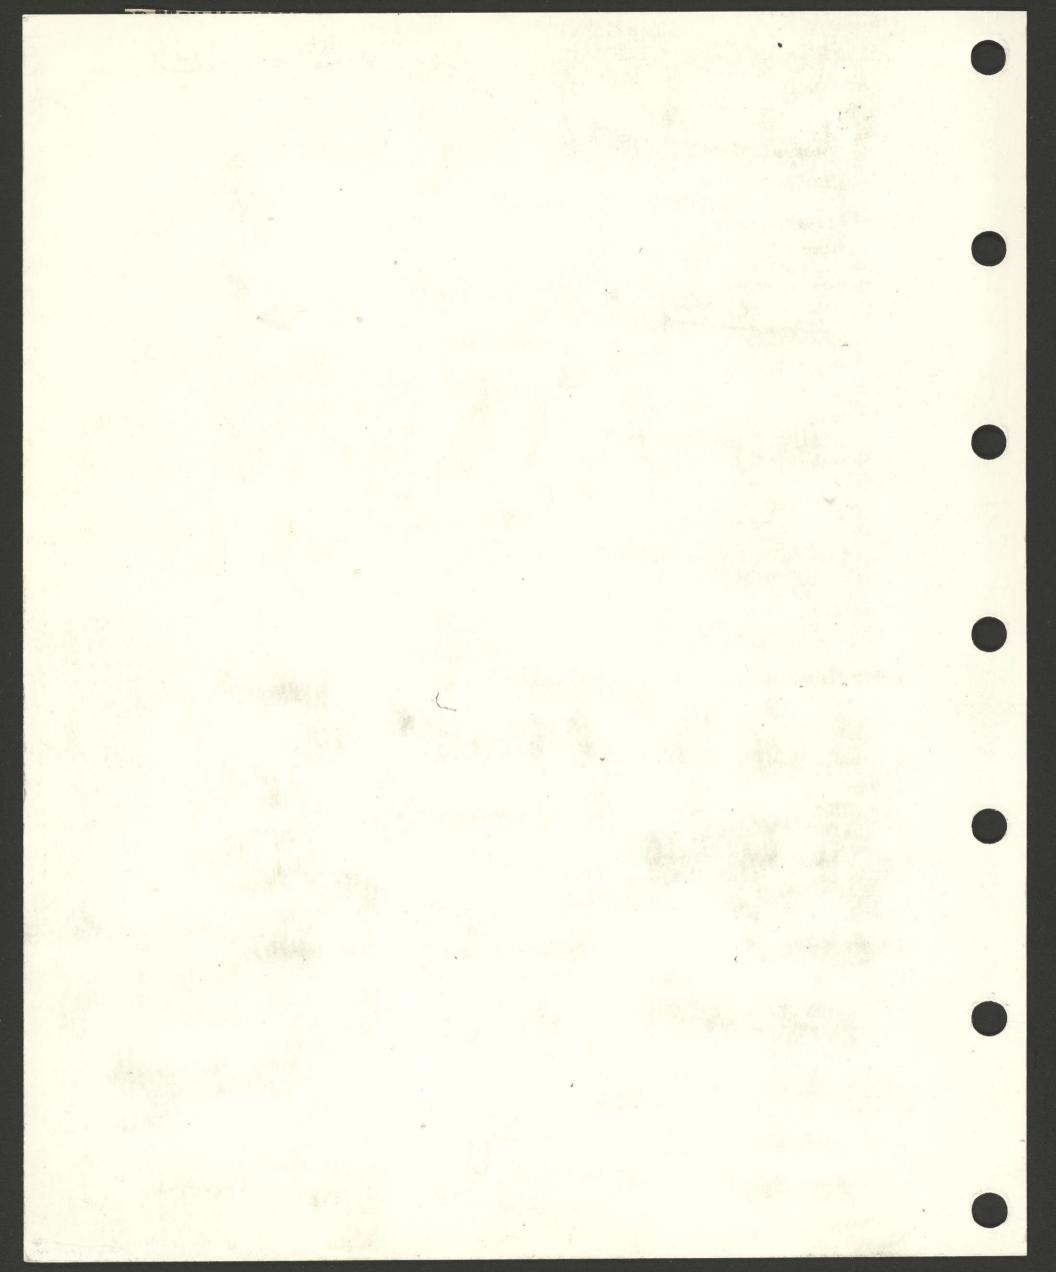

The Lauffers belong to Farm Bureau, Iowa County Young Farmers and have been a delegate for Tri-State Breeders.

Bill Papke, right, presents Deborah and Gerald Nelson the first runner-up Outstanding Young Farmer plaque.

Bill Papke, right, congratulates Judy and Tom Lauffer for being chosen second runner-up in the 1983 Iowa County Outstanding Young Farmer contest.
