The United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin) to the Secretary of State

PARIS, December 7, 1951.
[Received December 7—6 : 35 p. m.]

Delga 554. Re: Human Rights Covenant. Following is Belgium–India–Lebanon–US amendment (A/C.3/L.185) to Chile–Egypt–Pakistan–Yugoslav resolution (Delga 450, Nov. 30) on Human Rights Covenant:

"1. After the third para of the preamble, insert the following:

—'whereas—the GA at the request of the ECOSOC in resolution 384 (XIII) of 29 August 1951, reconsidered this matter at its 6th session.'

"2. Substitute the following for the 4th para of the preamble and the operative para:

—'Requests—the ECOSOC to ask the Commission on Human Rights to draft two covenants on Human Rights, to be submitted simultaneously for the consideration of the GA at its 7th session, one to contain civil and political rights and the other to contain economic, social and cultural rights, in order that the GA may approve the two covenants simultaneously and open them at the same time for signature.' "

AUSTIN

320/12–1951 : Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

PARIS, December 19, 1951.
[Received December 19—7 : 02 p. m.]

Delga 743. Re Draft Covenant on Human Rights. Following are texts of three resolutions submitted in Comite Three:

1. Guatemala 12 Dec Document A/C 3/L 190:

"The GA considering that it is desirable that the Covenant on HR should include provisions relating to the admissibility or non-admissibility of reservations and to the effect to be attributed to them, in particular with regard to the validity of the covenant as between the reserving state and other states ratifying the covenant, considering that the ICJ and other organs of the UN, including the GA, have studied the problem of reservations and that it is desirable that their conclusions should be taken into account in so far as they are appropriate to the purpose of this resolution, decides to recommend to the ECOSOC that it should instruct the Commission on HR to prepare for inclusion in the Covenant on HR one or more clauses relating to the admissibility or non-admissibility of reservations and to the effect to be attributed to them".

2. Ecuador and Guatemala Dec 13 doc A/C 3/L 189:

"The GA considering that the Commission on HR has by virtue of GA res 421 E (V) of 4 Dec 1951, prepared various articles on economic, social and cultural rights, considering that the wording of those articles, which have been examined during the present session of the GA, should be improved in order to protect more effectively the rights to which they refer calls upon the ECOSOC to request the Commission on HR to take into consideration when revising those articles of the draft covenant the views expressed during the discussion of the draft covenant and also such views as the specialized agencies [garble] and govts of member states may think fit to advance."

3. Syria, Dec 18 doc A/C 3/L 191.

"The GA considering that the measures for the implementation of the international Covenant on HR so far recommended by the ECOSOC and the Commission on HR do not provide for commissions of investigation and enquiry, considering that commissions of investigation and enquiry could if made to offer adequate guarantees of good faith and impartiality contribute greatly towards the implementation of the Covenant on HR and in particular of the provisions concerning economic, social and cultural rights, whereas commissions of investigation and enquiry are already widely used by the organs of the UN as means of study and investigation, requests the ECOSOC to consider the possibility of including commissions of investigation and enquiry, offering adequate safeguards of good faith and impartiality among the measures of implementation provided for by the Covenant on HR and of giving the Commission on HR specific directives on these lines."

ROOSEVELT

320/1–1052: Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY PARIS, January 10, 1952—5 p. m.

Delga 960. Human Rights Covenant. In conversation with Daza Ondarza of Bolivia [1] today, he confidentially advised Mrs. Roosevelt he had just recd instructions from FonOff vote for single covenant on human rights. He expressed thought that request was very likely made to his govt by another govt to vote for single covenant. He feels it would be difficult to explain action of his FonOff on any other grounds.

[1] Ernesto Daza Ondarza, Minister in the Permanent Delegation of Bolivia to the United Nations, member of the Bolivian Delegation to the General Assembly.

Daza Ondarza urged Dept approach all FonOffs in LA, including Bolivia FonOff, through US Embassies to counteract request to these FonOffs for support single covenant.

USGADel has not yet found that any other LA del has recd instructions similar to those of Bolivia and considers any general approach in other capitals undesirable.

Daza Ondarza is wiring FonOff immediately to point out arguments presented him by Mrs. Roosevelt for two covenants. He indicated appreciation for simultaneous support for US position through Dept. We suggest Dept may wish instruct Embassy La Paz in its discretion bring foregoing to attn FonOff and explain briefly our reasons for supporting two covenants.

Vote on two covenant issue is close in GA. Single vote may be decisive. Vote expected in committee Friday or Saturday, January 11 or 12.

ROOSEVELT

Editorial Note

For the exhaustive deliberations of the Third Committee on the Draft Covenant (including the question of insertion of a self-determination article), November 30–December 21, 1951 and January 14–30, 1952, see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Sixth Session, Third Committee, pages 67–150 and pages 235–403 (hereafter cited as GA (VI), Third Committee). For the complicated parliamentary history of this item in committee, see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Sixth Session, Annexes, fascicule for Agenda item 29 (hereafter cited as GA (VI), Annexes).

The General Assembly considered the Report of the Third Committee on the Draft Covenant at plenary meetings on February 4 and 5, 1952. For the proceedings, see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Sixth Session, Plenary Meetings, pages 501–520 (hereafter cited as GA (VI), Plenary). For texts of the resolutions concerning human rights adopted by the General Assembly on February 5, Resolutions 543 (VI)–549 (VI), see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Sixth Session, Resolutions, pages 36 and 37 (hereafter cited as GA (VI), Resolutions).

The essential components of the resolutions were as follows: The General Assembly decided that two draft covenants should be formulated for the consideration of the Assembly at its Seventh Session, one to contain civil and political rights and the other to contain economic, social, and cultural rights (Resolution 543 (VI)). Resolution 544 (VI) requested the Commission on Human Rights to improve the wording of the economic, social, and cultural articles, taking into account the views expressed during the Sixth Session of the General Assembly. The General Assembly decided to include in the International Covenant or Covenants on Human Rights an article on self-determination, and formulated a draft text relating thereto (Resolution 545 (VI)) (see documentation immediately following). Resolution 549 (VI) requested the Economic and Social Council to hold a special session to precede the Eighth Session of the Human Rights Commission, "at which it shall take the necessary action to enable the Commission to complete the work entrusted to it . . . before the end of the Council's fourteenth session, so that the Council may submit the drafts to the General Assembly at its seventh regular session together with its recommendations."

II. PROPOSALS FOR THE RIGHT OF PEOPLES AND NATIONS TO SELF-DETERMINATION

IO Files

Department of State Instruction to the United States Delegation to the Seventh Session of the Commission on Human Rights

RESTRICTED [WASHINGTON, April 1951.]

SD/E/CN.4/58

DRAFT INTERNATIONAL COVENANT ON HUMAN RIGHTS
RIGHT OF PEOPLES AND NATIONS TO SELF-DETERMINATION

PROBLEM

What should be the position of the United States at the 7th (1951) session of the Commission on Human Rights with respect to the request set forth in the Resolution (Section D) adopted by the 1950 session of the General Assembly that the Commission on Human Rights "study ways and means which would ensure the rights of peoples and nations to self-determination and to prepare recommendations for consideration by the General Assembly at its sixth session?"

RECOMMENDATION

1. If majority sentiment in the Commission favors the consideration of this subject, the United States Delegation should join in its consideration.

2. If majority sentiment in the Commission favors some affirmative action in the Commission, the United States Delegation should propose—if some other delegation does not do so—that a resolution on this subject should be adopted rather than the inclusion of a provision on the right of self-determination in the Covenant on Human Rights. Such a resolution might call on Members of the United Nations as well as the United Nations itself and its organs to give due attention in their work to the principle of self-determination of peoples in accordance with the provisions of the Charter.

3. If the Commission decides to include a provision on the right of self-determination in the Covenant, the United States Delegation should seek to limit this to a reference in the preamble.

4. If the Commission decides to include a provision on the right of self-determination in the text of the Covenant rather than in the Preamble, the United States Delegation should seek to limit this to a provision along the following lines: "Each State party hereto agrees to promote the principle of self-determination of peoples in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations."

DISCUSSION

Background.

During the consideration of the draft Covenant on Human Rights at the 1950 session of the General Assembly, Afghanistan and Saudi Arabia proposed that a provision be included in the resolution being considered by the General Assembly requesting the Commission on Human Rights "to study ways and means which would ensure the right of peoples and nations to self-determination, and to prepare recommendations for consideration by the General Assembly at its sixth session." This paragraph is included in the resolution by a vote of 31 to 16 with 5 abstentions and 9 absent in the Third Committee.

The vote on this paragraph was as follows:

For the proposal: Afghanistan, Argentina, Burma, Byelorussia, Chile, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Indonesia, India, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Mexico, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Ukraine, USSR, Uruguay, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

Against the proposal: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Greece, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Peru, Sweden, Turkey, South Africa, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstentions: Brazil, Ethiopia, Lebanon, Siam, Venezuela.

Absent: Bolivia, Colombia, Costa Rica, Iceland, Liberia, Luxembourg, Panama, Paraguay.

In explaining the opposition of the United States to the proposal of Afghanistan and Saudi Arabia, the United States pointed out that the Commission on Human Rights is not an appropriate forum for the consideration of the question of self-determination of nations and peoples.

A Lebanon proposal calling for the inclusion on the agenda of the 1951 session of the General Assembly of the item, "The study of the ways and means which would ensure the right to nations to self-determination," was rejected by the Third Committee by a vote of 7 to 16 with 28 abstentions and 9 absent.

The vote on the Lebanon proposal was as follows:

In favor of the Lebanon proposal: Denmark, Ethiopia, Iraq, Lebanon, Mexico, Netherlands, Peru.

Against the Lebanon proposal: Afghanistan, Australia, Belgium, Burma, Byelorussia, Czechoslovakia, El Salvador, Guatemala, India, New Zealand, Poland, Ukraine, USSR, United Kingdom, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

Abstentions: Argentina, Brazil, Canada, China, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Egypt, France, Greece, Haiti, Honduras, Indonesia, Iran, Israel, Nicaragua, Norway, Pakistan, Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Siam, Sweden, Syria, Turkey, South Africa, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Absent: Bolivia, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Iceland, Liberia, Luxembourg, Panama, Paraguay.

Considerations.

In view of the 31 to 16 vote in the General Assembly for the consideration of the subject of self-determination in the Commission, it is deemed advisable for the United States Delegation to join in the consideration of this subject in the Commission, if a majority sentiment in the Commission favors this position.

The United States Delegation should point out, if appropriate, that the right of self-determination is a group right and includes many questions relating to minorities. A definition of minorities is being drafted in the Subcommission on the Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities, and it seems entirely inappropriate to include provisions in a Covenant on Human Rights on this question prior to a further report from the Subcommission. In fact, the Subcommission itself has on the agenda of its next session the consideration of a convention on minorities.

The two express references in the Charter of the United Nations to the principle of self-determination are in Articles 1 (paragraph 2) and 55 (introductory paragraph).

Editorial Note

Due to the press of time, neither the Seventh Session of the Commission on Human Rights nor the Thirteenth Session of the Economic and Social Council was able to address the question of self-determination.

320/12–851 : Telegram

The United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin) to the Secretary of State

PARIS, December 8, 1951.
[Received December 8—6 a. m.]

Delga 564. Following is text resolution on self-determination (A/C.3/L.186) submitted in third committee by Afghanistan, Burma, Egypt, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Pakistan, Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yemen:

"Whereas the General Assembly at its fifth session recognized the right of peoples and nations to self-determination as a fundamental human right,

Whereas the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, due to lack of time, were unable to carry out the request of the General Assembly to find ways and means which would ensure the above-mentioned right to peoples and nations,

Whereas the violation of this right has resulted in bloodshed and war in the past and is considered a continuous threat to peace,

The General Assembly

(a) To save the present and succeeding generations from the scourge of war,

(b) To reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, and

(c) To take due account of the political aspirations of all peoples and thus to further international peace and security, and to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples,

Decides to include the following article in the International Covenant on Human Rights:

All peoples shall have the right to self-determination."

AUSTIN

320/12–851 : Telegram

The United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin) to the Secretary of State

RESTRICTED
NIACT

PARIS, December 8, 1951—7 p. m.

Delga 573. Re joint resolution on self-determination (Delga 564, Dec 8), staff intends recommend USGADel take following action in Committee Three Monday morning, Dec 10:

(1) Speak in favor of general principle of self-determination as related to nonself-governing territories, countries which have lost their independence in recent years and countries whose independence may be threatened.

(2) Introduce following amendment to operative paragraph:

"Decides to include a provision in the International Covenant on Human Rights recognizing the principle of self-determination of peoples enunciated in the Charter of the United Nations."

AUSTIN

IO Files

Minutes of Twenty-ninth Meeting of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly, Paris, December 10, 1951

SECRET

US/A/M(Chr)/216

[Here follows list of persons (51) present. Mrs. Roosevelt was in the chair.]

1. Committee 3 Developments

Mr. Taylor called upon Mr. Green to outline the developments in Committee Three which required the urgent attention of the Delegation. Mr. Green referred to the joint draft resolution submitted by twelve Moslem states, calling for the inclusion in the Covenant on Human Rights of an article which would read as follows: "All peoples shall have the right to self-determination". (See A/C.3/L.186.) The resolution might well be entitled "Variations on the old Moroccan Theme". He recalled that the Fifth General Assembly, over the opposition of the United States, had adopted a resolution requesting the Human Rights Commission to study the problem of self-determination of peoples. The matter had not been considered in the Human Rights Commission in its session of the past summer, and so was being reintroduced by the Moslem states at this time. The United States would find this language very difficult to accept in that it was extremely ambiguous, both as to when it would become applicable and in what manner. The Assembly had decided in its last session to make all the provisions of the Covenant applicable equally to states ratifying the Covenant and to the non-self-governing territories administered by such states. When this proposed new article was read in connection with that action of the Fifth General Assembly, the implications of this move for Morocco were obvious. It could be argued that a party to the treaty was obligated to grant the right of self-determination immediately to its territories. This obviously would create difficulties for the United States and other administering powers.

Mr. Green commented that the situation in Committee Three had been additionally complicated by a speech made by the Belgian Delegate, Mr. Dehousse, last Friday. In it he had said that certain delegations which were characterized by "obsolete monarchies", religious persecutions, and suppression of minorities were not qualified to talk about human rights. This statement had provoked considerable reaction and hostility among many states, especially the sponsors of the joint resolution.

The immediate problem was what approach the United States should take to this latest maneuver. He suggested that the United States could say it had always favored the right of self-determination as a principle, and wanted to obtain acceptance for this principle on as broad a basis as possible. The objection which we had to the proposed new article was that it did not show that this principle already obtained in the Charter itself. For this reason the United States could propose the amendment contained in paragraph (2) of Delga 573.[1] This would refer to the Charter provision on self-determination and imply that all states, not simply those which adhere to the Covenant, are bound to respect this principle. The amendment would also bring out the fact that the Charter binds all states to respect this principle in their colonies, and in "satellitized" countries and states infiltrated by the Soviets, and not just in non-self-governing territories. He asked for the Delegation's views on this proposed course of action.

Mrs. Roosevelt felt that this amendment would not be satisfactory to the sponsors of the joint resolution, even if it were a better argument than we had made in the past on this point. She foresaw a defeat for the United States on this proposal. She added that it was an improper course for the Assembly to adopt articles for insertion in the Covenant. She felt that the best argument we could make was that the joint resolution would have the effect of limiting rather than broadening the mandate of the Charter on self-determination. All states were obligated by what was contained in the Charter, whereas this joint resolution would apply only to those states becoming parties to the Covenant and by implication would leave others free to observe or not those principles of the Covenant.

Mr. Plitt favored the widest possible broadening of the principle here referred to. He pointed out that this joint resolution was sponsored by the solid bloc of Islamic powers with the single exception of Turkey. We must at some stage go along with these powers in order to break up their bloc. To oppose their joint resolution would be "adding another rivet to this super-heated steamboiler". Mrs. Roosevelt agreed that something must be done along those lines but felt it extremely hard to break up such a bloc on such a measure.

Mr. Vorys called such a provision "selfish determination" and thought such ideas in the present-day world were false. It was extremely unwise, in his view, to favor such fractionalization in the world where no state could today depend on its neighbors to respect the rights of sovereignty. "Unlimited self-determination", he said, "is as 'phony'." Mrs. Roosevelt commented that the United States can very well say that when talking about itself, but to say it abroad where there are so many countries in which human rights are not being observed would sound very inappropriate. Mr. Vorys agreed that his remarks were not germane to the discussion, but he wished to register his views on the general topic.

[1] Dated December 8, supra.

Mr. Cohen asked whether a provision for self-determination was now contained within the Human Rights Declaration. If it were not, he suggested that it would be much wiser to work for its inclusion there, and not, by insisting on its insertion in the Covenant, thwart whatever possibilities the Covenant had for ratification. It could better be declared as a standard toward which all could agree to work. It would be unfortunate to endanger the Covenant and any value it might have in such a way.

Ambassador Gross stated that he was not afraid of the language in either form. He felt that it took an "overspecialist" to object to the 12 power language and not to our amendment. If this matter were submitted to the American public, 99-½% would express themselves in favor of affirming the right to self-determination. It might be that they would do so without an adequate understanding of the problems involved, but no such understanding would be elucidated in the United Nations.

Mr. Gerig said that the Committee 4 aspect of this question was whether the United Nations would put itself on record in favor of the right of secession of peoples from a unitary state. Considering our own history, he felt that the question was raised of how far the United States should go in accepting this principle. Mrs. Roosevelt said that that was the very reason it should not go into the Covenant. However, since it would go in anyway in some form or other, it was up to the United States to work for language in the best possible form, even if this meant being voted down.

Miss Bacon supported the remarks of Ambassador Gross. She suggested voting for the proposed language, while explaining in full the reasons for which we would prefer different language, and stating our understanding of what the proposed language would mean. Mrs. Roosevelt was not sure this would be satisfactory to the sponsoring delegations. Mr. Maffitt also adhered to the point of view expressed by Ambassador Gross and Miss Bacon. He said that the United States should not appear to be opposing the fight for self-determination. We could merely state the preference for wording this matter another way.

In agreeing with Mrs. Roosevelt, Mr. Maktos said that the United States ought to anticipate the argument that since this matter was already expressed in the Charter the United States could surely not oppose the further expression of it in this Covenant. Mr. McKeever said that a United States vote against this proposal would be misunderstood both at home and abroad. The technical reasons we might put forward for opposing it would not be understood, however justified. He asked, therefore, why the United States must "saddle itself with that albatross for a Pyrrhic victory"! Ambassador Jessup submitted that albatrosses were not worn as saddles.

Ambassador Kirk referred to the Belgian attitude, and stated that in view of the great importance of the Belgian Congo, as the primary source of uranium ore, both to Belgium and the United States, it would be wise for the United States not to forget its own self-interest in this problem. Mrs. Roosevelt commented that the United States was not forgetting its own interests, but the Belgian speech, which incidentally had been on a very high plane, had contained this unfortunate reference to "obsolete monarchies" and has aroused the national and religious prides of many a country. She felt that the result of the speech would be to set us back considerably and perhaps lose the fight for two Covenants. If, however, the Delegation felt that the United States should say we think the proposed joint resolution is bad procedure, we could offer our amendment as better procedure. We could then stand in favor of this right, and if our amendment were not accepted, not oppose the joint resolution as a principle.

Senator Cooper wondered whether the United States would be willing to agree that for example Hawaii or Alaska could determine for itself whether it wished its independence. Mrs. Roosevelt recalled the Civil War and the fact that we had fought to keep peoples within our federation, and that although this might seem slightly inconsistent, the greater principle had been for the freedom of the individual. Senator Cooper thought that the United States should stay on the ground that it agreed in principle with this idea, as a purpose toward which we could work. To include it in the Covenant would make ratification very difficult for the United States and others.

Ambassador Key said that since everyone agreed to the principle of self-determination, the problem was one of drafting. The 12 power draft was a step backward. We wanted words which would conform to the Charter.

In regard to Ambassador Kirk's remarks on uranium, Dr. Tobias stated that the United States should keep in mind the principles which it sought to safeguard by the protection the atom bomb gave.

Mr. Sandifer pointed out that this joint resolution gave the right to one state to protest that other states were not granting the right of self-determination. The United States questioned the propriety of such a step at this time.

Ambassador Gross recalled the Genocide Convention discussion, and the fact that the United States was certain to face a similar defeat on this matter. The more we attacked the position that would succeed in the end, the worse we would appear in the end for having opposed it and lost. He preferred the amended wording, but the choice of final acceptance by the General Assembly was of course not up to us.

Mrs. Roosevelt summarized the feelings of the Delegation to be that the United States would make the best possible speech, indicating the reasons for its preference for the amendment language. The United States would not oppose the inclusion of this right of self-determination, but would in fact support it, while at the same time making clear that ratification of a Covenant with this wording in it might experience further difficulties.

[Here follows discussion of other agenda items.]

CHARLES D. COOK

320/1–2652 : Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

PARIS, January 26, 1952.
[Received January 26—4 : 11 p. m.]

Delga 1208. From Green. Following . . . is resolution on self-determination adopted by Comite 3, Jan 25 :

"Whereas if fifth session recognized right peoples and nations to self-determination as fundamental human right,

"Whereas ECOSOC and Commission Human Rights, due lack time, were unable carry out request of GA to find ways and means which would ensure above-mentioned right peoples and nations,

"Whereas violation this right has resulted in bloodshed and war in past and is considered continuous threat to peace,

"GA

(a) To save present and succeeding generations from scourge war,

(b) To reaffirm faith fundamental human rights, and

(c) To take due account of political aspirations all peoples and thus to further international peace and security, and to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for principles of equal rights and self-determination peoples,

"Decides include in international covenant or covenants human rights an article on right all peoples and nations to self-determination in reaffirmation of principle enunciated in Charter UN drafted in foll terms: All peoples shall have the right to self-determination.

"Said article to stipulate that all states, including those having responsibility for administration non-self-governing territories, should promote realization that right, in conformity with purposes and principles of UN and that states having responsibility for administration of non-self-governing territories shld promote realization that right in relation to peoples such territories,

"Requests Commission Human Rights prepare recommendations concerning international respect for self-determination peoples and submit these recommendations to GA at seventh session,

"Such recommendations must include invitation to states members of UN responsible under UN Charter and universal declaration human rights for safeguarding and defense of said principle, to avoid recourse to manoeuvres calculated frustrate principle of right peoples to self-determination, including obstruction free expression of people's will and of realization their legitimate national aspirations, aggression under guise of defense or masked by disinterested motives, such as struggle for truth, freedom, humanitarian principles or any other equally high ideal, exploitation of internal dissensions, trivial or ephemeral national divergencies or conflicting interests in foreign countries and non-self-governing territories, threats and terrorism or any other method contrary to purposes and principles of UN as set forth in Charter".

[Green]
[ROOSEVELT]

IO Files

Minutes of Fiftieth Meeting of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly, Paris, January 31, 1952

SECRET
US/A/M (Chr)/237

[Here follows list of persons (41) present. Mrs. Roosevelt presided. There was discussion of a prior agenda item.]

2. Tactics for Committee 3 Items. Mr. Green noted that the Oatis case had been effectively presented by Dr. Tobias the day before. In regard to the Plenary, he called attention to Document US/A/C.3/L.226,[1] the first operative paragraphs of which requested two covenants on human rights. This was the result of a joint amendment submitted by the United States, Belgium, India and Lebanon; the vote in Committee had been 29–21–6. He felt that a minority in the Plenary might attempt to invoke the two-third majority Rule. The Reference Section of the Delegation had found that no Committee 3 item had ever required a two-third vote. We could therefore argue, both from history and logic, that this was not a two-third situation. He urged, however, active liaison work to obtain as many votes as possible for the two-covenant position.

In Document US/A/C.3/L.228,[2] in regard to self-determination, Mr. Green noted that this resolution was based on the original 13-Power text which sought to insert an article in the Human Rights Covenant to the following effect: "All people shall have the right to self-determination". The United States Delegation had tried to head off such a development, by avoiding such precise language. We had first offered an amendment to include a "reaffirmation" of the principle of self-determination. Thereafter, we tried to insert a "provision" which would reaffirm that principle. Finally, we had agreed to the Afghanistan amendment to "an article", but all without success. By a vote of 33–9–10, this rigid language in L/228 had been adopted.

[1] The "US" indicator should not be on this or other documents cited here; these are United Nations General Assembly documents.
[2] For text, see p. 788.

Mr. Green felt that the United States had come out of the situation with a maximum of goodwill. On the one hand, we had shown the Arabs and others our willingness to compromise; we on the other hand, had also demonstrated effectively to the colonial powers that we would not be pulled to the extremes that the majority demanded.

The last paragraph of L/228 contained a recommendation to the Human Rights Commission which contained incredible language.

The United Kingdom and France had urged us simply to vote against this resolution in Plenary, although we would be in a minority of nine, without making any attempt to change any of the language. Mr. Green pointed out that some of the Arabs, including the Iraqi, in addition to many Latin American Delegations, were dissatisfied with the language of the resolution. France had given the United States Delegation the "full treatment" in seeking to have us drop our efforts at a compromise. They were worried that this would be a new principle in international law, which would support expropriation in the economic field and render useless the principle of the sanctity of contracts.

Mr. Green pointed out a suggested revision of the resolution on self-determination, contained in Document US/A/5447. He asked the Delegation to decide whether we should vote with the UK and France against the resolution as adopted by the Committee, taking the matter next year, or whether to seek better language, over the serious concern of the United Kingdom and France, who preferred this "ambiguous monster".

Mrs. Roosevelt said that France had gone beyond the economic threat, saying that the United States would one day find its military bases taken over. Mrs. Roosevelt had countered this by saying that one day she hoped the United Nations would be strong enough so that the United States would have no need for bases. She promised to repeat to the Secretary all their strongest feelings, suggesting however that their trouble may well have been brought about by their own slowness. They had brushed aside this argument. She added that even if we could obtain better language, she felt that we would not want to co-sponsor it. There was every reason to assist in obtaining a clearer recommendation and to have it introduced by means of better wording, but only with "behind-the-scenes" support from the United States. We had obtained considerable goodwill by not standing in the way of their reactions to what they felt was an incorrect situation. She also hoped that we could put across the idea that the vote on the covenant was not a two-thirds matter.

Mr. Allen noted the danger of urging our draft language upon others without co-sponsoring. This would leave us open to the possibility of even worse language than existed at present. He was inclined on balance to recommend relaxing and voting against the present language.

Mr. Sandifer felt that Mrs. Roosevelt's analysis contained entirely sound and good procedure. However, we could not get too far ahead in drafting legal obligations. Mr. Cohen wondered about the idea of stating our real position on self-determination in connection with conditions existing in the world today. When bogged down by technical details, when ultimate desiderata become lost, we should take the opportunity to emphasize the important highlights in the whole matter which would take us out of the bog of language difficulties. Mrs. Roosevelt thought this could be done, but she felt we should be careful not to make "grand speeches" unless we could carry out what we say. She wanted it clearly understood that we were overwhelmingly in the minority because the rest of the world often think we do not mean what we say. For this reason, she was unwilling to make such a speech unless we would back it up. Mr. Cohen certainly hoped we would be able to carry out what we said. Mrs. Roosevelt stated that this would make the British and French very unhappy. She would prefer, however, to stick to what we believe to be right. She added that there was much truth in the idea that putting ourselves in such situations as this, in backing the British and French, was just what the Soviets wanted.

She suggested giving this language, as re-drafted by the staff, to the Arabs, as a much better draft, but telling them we could not go out and work for it since we had already exhausted our every effort. Both Miss Strauss and Ambassador Jessup agreed with this suggestion. Mrs. Roosevelt added that she would then be willing to think about a Plenary speech, but would want the help and the ideas of all the members of the Delegation.

Mr. Taylor announced that a joint meeting of Committee 1 and joint 2 and 3 was still scheduled for that evening at 8:30. Santa Cruz strongly opposed such a meeting, however. The Plenary meeting would be taken up all morning with the 20-year peace program. Thereafter, Committee 6 matters would come before it. The next group for Plenary consideration would be Committee 1 items.

Mr. McKeever recalled the plans for making a recording of the Delegation meeting the next morning. The subject would be an appraisal of the entire assembly.

CHARLES D. COOK

547-842—79——51

Editorial Note

The same United Nations official public documentation cited in the editorial note on page 771 is relevant also in respect of the self-determination question, as the essential question was whether a self-determination article should be included in the draft of the Covenant or Covenants. The appropriate texts and sources are also included in the fascicule on agenda item 29 cited ibid. For the text of the resolution as adopted by the General Assembly on February 5, 1952, Resolution 545 (VI), see GA (VI), Resolutions, pages 36 and 37. The United States voted against the resolution both in the Third Committee on January 25, 1952, and the plenary meeting of the General Assembly on February 5, 1952. For the statement by the United States Representative (Roosevelt) to the Third Committee on January 25, 1952, explaining the negative United States vote, see GA (VI), Third Committee, page 345.

320/2-652

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs (Allison) to the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Hickerson)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] February 6, 1952.

Subject: US Position in UN on Self-Determination Resolution.

This morning's unclassified summary from Paris reports that the US voted against the resolution on self-determination in the GA at its closing session. The resolution passed by a vote of 42–7–5.

The US thus appeared in opposition to a resolution relating to a peculiarly American concept, while the overwhelming majority of the UN—with the Soviet bloc of course included—registered support for it. For the Far East, and Asia as a whole, the propaganda consequences of this vote are obvious and unfortunate.

In searching about for an explanation of our position I find that in previous votes we had voted in favor of all parts of the resolution with two exceptions. The texts of these exceptions are given below.

In Delga's 1299, February 4[1] it is stated that the US Delegate "expressed regret for the US negative vote on the self-determination text, explaining that her Delegation did not oppose inclusion of a practical article but did feel the Commission should have drafting leeway. The proposed text was not satisfactory she said."

I realize that in the rush of the closing of the UN session the Delegation probably did not have opportunity to send full reports to the

[1] Not printed.

Department on this question or obtain instructions from the Department. From the statement quoted above it would appear that our opposition to the resolution was based chiefly upon technical considerations, i.e., a belief that the GA should not prescribe to the Human Rights Commission the exact language to be included in the international covenant or covenants but should leave the phrasing for determination by the Human Rights Commission.

While not questioning the soundness of this technical argument I question whether our position would not have been adequately indicated by our negative votes on the paragraphs in question. Considering the very great importance from a political and propaganda point of view of our stand on self-determination, we might then have voted for the resolution as a whole. This course seems in fact to have been followed by the Netherlands, Canada and Denmark.

I realize that the issue is closed for this session. It occurs to me, however, that the problem raised by this vote—the relative weight which our Delegation should give to technical consideration as against larger political issues—is a recurring one and one which might well be discussed within the Department in connection with preparations for the next GA.

The US voted against the following parts of the resolution in question:

"The GA

"Decides to include in the international covenant or covenants on human rights an article on the right of all peoples and nations to self-determination in reaffirmation of the principles enunciated in the Charter of the UN and drafted in following terms: All peoples shall have the right to self-determination."

"Requests the Commission on Human Rights to prepare recommendations concerning international respect for self-determination of peoples and to submit these recommendations to the GA at its Seventh Session."

340.1 AG/2–752

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL PARIS, February 7, 1952.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: As it is possible that the French Ambassador may raise with you the question of including an article on self-determination in one or both of the Covenants on Human Rights, I thought I might give you the background of the situation as it developed in the General Assembly. This is a subject about which the French Government appears to be deeply concerned, and about which they will probably want to consult the Department in the coming months.

At the end of the debate on self-determination in the Third Committee the French Delegation was so upset about our attitude that two of their members, Mr. Broustra and Mr. Epinat, called Mr. Utter and, later, Mr. Bonsal of our Embassy to the Foreign Office to discuss the matter. When we indicated that we would be glad to have a more detailed exchange of views, Professor Cassin, Mr. Broustra, Mr. Epinat, and Mr. Juvigny invited me to lunch, together with Mr. Green and Mr. Simsarian, to discuss the problem further. The French have made no further approach to the Embassy since this luncheon conversation.

In their conversations with Mr. Bonsal, Mr. Utter, and with me the French expressed their very great concern over the resolution on self-determination adopted by the Third Committee. I enclose a copy of this resolution, which was adopted on February 5 in the Plenary. You will note that the resolution prescribes the exact text of an article on self-determination for inclusion in one or both of the Covenants and gives the Human Rights Commission no discretion to revise it.

The history of this resolution is that we tried to make changes by cooperation with the Afghanistan member, who was one of the thirteen co-sponsors. The co-sponsors proposed the inclusion of an article which should simply say, "All peoples have the right to self-determination." We felt that it should be left to the Commission on Human Rights to reaffirm the principles already in the Charter, either in the preamble or in any other way they saw fit. We lost on this. Finally, we accepted the fact that there should be an article with the understanding that the wording should not be limited to these words—"All people shall have the right to self-determination."—but could be elaborated by the Commission and safe-guarded in any way they felt necessary. The final resolution, however, was a hodge-podge of Soviet amendments, a Syrian amendment, and various other wordings. As a resolution emerged from the Committee, it made no sense. Even the Delegate from Iraq was willing to have it amended. Our Delegation agreed that we should not co-sponsor any amendment, but might suggest language to others, and vote for the new wording if somebody else proposed it.

No amendment was submitted in the Plenary, but the Danish Delegation proposed that the two operative paragraphs of the resolution be voted in parts, so that the Assembly might have a chance to delete some of the unsatisfactory language. Unfortunately, no change was made in the first operative paragraph, but the Plenary did delete the long second sentence in the second operative paragraph. The resolution, with this deletion was adopted by 42–7 (US)–5.

The French are very much worried about the inclusion of any kind of article on self-determination, no matter how carefully drafted the language might be. They fear that this will lead to economic self-determination of peoples and not be limited to the political self-determination alone. I feel that at present the only idea in the minds of most of the sponsors in the Arab countries at least, is purely political. However, I am not at all sure that in the minds of the Soviets, who warmly uphold the Arabs on this, there is not the thought underlying their support of how they can use it to embarrass the free countries of the world in different ways. The French pointed out that the inclusion of the right of self-determination in a treaty might mean the abrogation of treaties and contracts in the economic field. They pointed out to us that it might easily mean the abrogation of agreements on military bases. They tried to frighten us in every possible way and they are very much frightened themselves. I feel, though they avoid saying so, that the political implications are of major importance to them.

I do not myself see, however, what is to be gained by having introduced an absurd resolution of recommendation to the Human Rights Commission and just voting against it. The vote in Committee 3 was overwhelmingly against us: 33–9–10. We were among the 9, because we could not vote for the present wording. The French prefer to continue in the minority and say it is important that we should be with them. I think that though they are bringing out the economic and military points, they are more concerned really on the political self-determination of peoples as it touches Morocco and Tunisia. I think also the British are concerned from this point of view primarily.

There is a desire on the part of the Arab and Afghanistan Delegates to have the article on self-determination included in both Covenants so that no matter who ratifies which Covenant, this remains. We would, of course, make every effort to have the entire article only in the economic and social covenant, but we would probably be defeated and so my only hope is that we might be able to accept a civil and political covenant, making a reservation on this article.

I am not wholly in sympathy with the French attitude, but I realize why it is hard for a government with colonial possessions not to be excited and I promised to put before you their whole argument and point of view and I have done so as nearly as I can remember the points put forth by them. They are frank in saying that with such an article included they could not possibly ratify a Covenant and they doubt if it can be put in legal form.

I should also say that an Afghanistan adviser, who speaks only French, told me their anxiety was that their point of view would not be brought before the Human Rights Commission. I assured him that if no one else presented it, I would do so, though I could give no commitment as to what our attitude would be on it. He said he understood that and he only wanted to be assured they would be represented. I think it fair to assume that Pakistan, which is on the Commission, will state their case.

I have gone over the Human Rights Commission membership for the next meeting, and we will be 9–9 when Uruguay votes with us and that is by no means always the case. Direct opposition to self-determination, therefore, seems to me useless and the effort to get the least objectionable article almost a necessity.

Very cordially yours, ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

[Enclosure]

United Nations Secretariat Document A/C.3/L.228 Circulated at Paris January 26, 1952 (Sixth Session, Third Committee, Agenda Item 29)

DRAFT INTERNATIONAL COVENANT ON HUMAN RIGHTS AND MEASURES OF IMPLEMENTATION

Draft resolution approved by the Committee at its 403rd meeting held on 25 January 1952

INCLUSION OF AN ARTICLE RELATING TO THE RIGHT OF PEOPLES TO SELF-DETERMINATION IN THE INTERNATIONAL COVENANT ON HUMAN RIGHTS

Whereas the General Assembly at its fifth session recognized the right of peoples and nations to self-determination as a fundamental human right,*

Whereas the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, due to lack of time, were unable to carry out the request of the General Assembly to study ways and means which would ensure the above-mentioned right to peoples and nations,

Whereas the violation of this right has resulted in bloodshed and war in the past and is considered a continuous threat to peace,

The General Assembly

(i) To save the present and succeeding generations from the scourge of war,

(ii) To reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, and

(iii) To take due account of the political aspirations of all peoples and thus to further international peace and security, and to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples,

*See General Assembly resolution 421 D (V). [Footnote in the source text.]

1. Decides to include in the International Covenant or Covenants on Human Rights an article on the right of all peoples and nations to self-determination in reaffirmation of the principle enunciated in the Charter of the United Nations. This article shall be drafted in the following terms: "All peoples shall have the right to self-determination", and shall stipulate that all States, including those having responsibility for the administration of Non-Self-Governing Territories, should promote the realization of that right, in conformity with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, and that States having responsibility for the administration of Non-Self-Governing Territories should promote the realization of that right in relation to the peoples of such Territories.

2. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to prepare recommendations concerning international respect for the self-determination of peoples and to submit these recommendations to the General Assembly at its seventh session. Such recommendations must include an invitation to State Members of the United Nations, responsible under the United Nations Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights for the safeguarding and defence of the said principle, to avoid recourse to manoeuvres calculated to frustrate the principle of the right of peoples to self-determination, including obstruction of the free expression of the people's will and of the realization of their legitimate national aspirations, aggression under the guise of defence or masked by disinterested motives, such as the struggle for truth, freedom, humanitarian principles or any other equally high ideal, the exploitation of internal dissensions, trivial or ephemeral national divergencies or conflicting interests in foreign countries and the Non-Self-Governing Territories, threats and terrorism or any other method contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations as set forth in the Charter.

III. THE DRAFT CONVENTION ON FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

IO Files

Department of State Instruction to the United States Delegation to the Sixth Regular Session of the General Assembly

RESTRICTED [WASHINGTON,] October 10, 1951.
SD/A/C.3/146

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

(Agenda Item 11—Report of the Economic and Social Council)

THE PROBLEM

Faced with a decision of the Economic and Social Council reversing the recommendation of the Assembly's Ad Hoc Committee, which had suggested the calling of a special conference to complete the proposed Convention on Freedom of Information, the General Assembly must decide upon some form of definite action to dispose of this Convention.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. The United States should strongly support the decision of the Economic and Social Council and, in consultation with other delegations, seek the adoption of a resolution postponing indefinitely further consideration of this Convention (see Draft Resolution #1, Annex A);

2. In the event the above proposal is defeated and the Assembly decides to complete the Convention at this session, the Delegation should be guided by the detailed comments with respect to each article which are contained in Annex B;

3. If a majority favors the calling of a special conference to complete the text, the U.S. should propose that the Conference's terms of reference be broadened to enable it to consider other proposals relating to freedom of information and that governments be represented by persons drawn from the fields of press, radio and film; and

4. In any event, the U.S. should propose that the completed Convention on the International Transmission of News and the Right of Correction be opened for signature without further delay (see Draft Resolution #2, Annex A) and that the appropriate member of the delegation sign the Convention on behalf of the U.S.

COMMENT

As contrasted with the limited scope of the Convention on the International Transmission of News and the Right of Correction (also known as the "Newsgathering Convention"), which was adopted at the Second Part of the Assembly's Third Session but has not yet been opened for signature, the proposed Convention on Freedom of Information covers a very broad field. The Newsgathering Convention merely facilitates the work of foreign correspondents as a limited group. The Draft Convention on Freedom of Information on the other hand provides that contracting states shall secure the right to seek, to receive and to impart information and opinions. It forbids contracting states to regulate the use of the media of information in any manner discriminating against their own nationals or those of other contracting states on political grounds, or on the basis of race, sex, language or religion.

At the Second Part of the Third Session of the General Assembly, the Third Committee considered the Freedom of Information Convention only briefly and, after adopting revisions of the first five articles, decided that it could not complete the draft at that session and recommended that it be placed on the agenda of the Fourth Session. At the same time the Assembly decided not to open for signature the completed Newsgathering Convention until it takes "definite action" on the Freedom of Information text.

At its Fourth Session in 1949, the General Assembly, on the initiative of the United States Delegation, rejected proposals to complete the Freedom of Information Convention. At its Fifth Session, however, the Assembly reversed its decision of the previous year and appointed a special committee to prepare a new draft of the Convention on Freedom of Information, having rejected by a vote of 14 to 25 a United States motion to postpone further action pending definite action on the Draft Covenant. The Assembly further instructed the Committee "to report to the Economic and Social Council at its Thirteenth Session on the results of its work and to submit recommendations, in particular, with regard to the advisability of convening a conference of plenipotentiaries with a view to the framing and signature of a convention on freedom of information" (Resolution 426(V)).

The Committee constituted for this purpose was seriously unbalanced geographically, including four Arab states, India, and three Latin American states, but no representative of the Scandinavian states and inadequate representation of the Far East and the British Commonwealth. It met from January 15 to February 7, 1951 and adopted a new text of the Convention. It also recommended that the Economic and Social Council should convene a special plenipotentiary conference to complete the text.

The Committee's Report (doc. A/AC.42/7) was considered by the Economic and Social Council at its recent session and its recommendations were not approved. Instead, the Economic and Social Council adopted the following resolution by a vote of 10 (U.S.)–1–7:*

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having studied the report of the Ad Hoc Committee appointed by the General Assembly at its fifth session to prepare a draft convention on freedom of information and the observations of the Governments thereon,

"Considering the existence of a wide divergence of views on this subject,

"Having decided not to convene a plenipotentiary conference,

"Transmits this decision to the General Assembly together with the records of the discussion which took place at the thirteenth session of the Council on the report of the Committee on the Draft Convention on Freedom of Information."

---

*The vote in the Social Committee, more significant as a test, was 10 for (Belgium, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Peru, Poland, Sweden, USSR, UK, US), 7 against (Chile, France, India, Iran, Mexico, Philippines, Uruguay), Pakistan being absent. [Footnote in the source text.]

DRAFT CONVENTION ON FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

The United States position against the completion of the Freedom of Information Convention is based on the probability that if the Convention were to be completed at this time it would emerge in a form unacceptable to the United States and detrimental to this Government's efforts to promote worldwide acceptance of our concept of freedom of information. It would constitute a serious setback to the promotion of freedom of information by the United Nations whether or not the United States and a few like-minded countries adhered to it, because it would place a United Nations stamp of approval on a number of restrictive practices which, though current in many countries, do not now enjoy international sanction.

The revised text of the Convention prepared by the special committee of the General Assembly is an improvement over the original Geneva text in several respects. Even as revised, however, the text is not consistent with long established principles of freedom of speech and of the press as understood in the United States.

Article 2, for example, would permit objectionable limitations on freedom of expression, together with other restrictions which, while perhaps not objectionable in principle, are so formulated as to lead to the probability of their abuse by governments so inclined. Above all, the method of so-called "specific enumeration" employed in this Article is considered by this Government to be completely impractical and an open invitation to the addition of still more objectionable limitations, as demonstrated by Resolution A of the Committee. This resolution, calling for a study of the feasibility of adding to the present set of limitations certain still more objectionable restrictions indicates the open-ended nature of the formulation adopted by the Committee.

This method, because it aims at an exhaustive listing of permissible limitations on freedom of expression, would compel every government participating in any further consideration of the text to press for the inclusion of any and all restrictions which are presently in force as a matter of its domestic legislation or which it may deem to be necessary for the future. It would lead to the drafting of an agreement embodying the lowest common denominator of freedom of information rather than an instrument capable of safeguarding and promoting the maximum of freedom.

Other Articles of this text are also objectionable. Article 4, which would permit the establishment of "a right of reply or a similar corrective remedy", sets forth no legal safeguards and does not indicate whether the right would operate domestically or internationally. Article 5, which incorporates a sort of model code of ethics for journalists (unrelated to the code which the Subcommission on Freedom of Information and of the Press has undertaken to prepare) suggests the possibility of undesirable governmental pressure on organizations of journalists.

Articles 6 and 7, which deal with economic problems affecting the media of information, are drafted in a sweeping and arbitrary manner. While many of these problems are indeed worthy of attention, the language presently employed interposes no legal test of reasonableness or of necessity. The only test prescribed is that they are deemed necessary by the Contracting States which impose them; no other Contracting State would have a right even to contest their decisions.

Furthermore, while the Committee kept open the possibility of including an article dealing with federal-state problems as proposed by the United States Representative, it rejected another article proposed by the United States which would have made clear the non-self-executing nature of the proposed Convention. This Government could not consider becoming party to any Convention of this nature without such a provision.

Attention should also be drawn to the undesirability of attempting to complete a detailed convention covering one of the major rights to be included in the proposed Covenant on Human Rights in advance of the completion of the Covenant. The problem is illustrated by Article 10 of the Committee text, which provides that "in any case of incompatibility" between the provisions of "the general agreement" (i.e. the Covenant) and this Convention "the general agreement shall prevail." It seems to this Government that to undertake obligations in a detailed agreement which, by their express terms, may be nullified or altered by a second, more general agreement (whose provisions are not yet fixed) will almost certainly lead to conflicts of interpretation.

Much as this Government would welcome a convention which could serve as a means of advancing and safeguarding freedom of speech and freedom of the press throughout the world, it cannot give its support to the text under discussion, and does not deem it suitable for consideration by a special conference. This Government cannot agree with the assumption which seems to underlie much of the present text, namely that the pressing task of the moment is to define ways and means by which governments may curb the reporting of news which they consider undesirable. Any proposal which might in any way further restrict the availability of news and information to the peoples of the world would, in the view of the United States Government, be singularly inappropriate at this time when governmental restrictions on the flow of news threaten increasingly to deprive the public of the information which it needs to form conclusions on the many vital problems affecting world peace. The U.S. Delegation should urge that priority be given instead to the completion of the Draft Covenant on Human Rights and that the Assembly should take definite action to table the Freedom of Information Convention until world conditions are more conducive to the preparation of a more affirmative instrument.

The Delegation should stress that the United States will not enter into any agreement which might have the effect of impairing freedom of speech and of the press as guaranteed under the Bill of Rights. Moreover, even if the Convention were drafted in such a manner as to preclude this effect in the United States (as indeed the present text is, because the limitations are permissive in character) this Government would nevertheless be opposed to its completion because it would not want to see the press in any other country subjected to some of the restrictions permitted by the Convention and not prohibited by this basic law.

The United States Delegation should also point out that there is no indication that the press in any free nation favors this Convention. On the contrary, there is much recent evidence of the fact that the press in several countries is currently engaged in fighting similar restrictions which have been enacted, or are being considered for enactment, in the laws of their countries. This Government does not believe the prestige of the United Nations should be used to sanction such restrictions.

In the event the Assembly decides to complete the Convention at this session, the United States Delegation should be guided by the detailed comments appearing in Annex B, of the detailed comment paper contained in the Background Book on Freedom of Information.

If, on the other hand, a majority favors the calling of a special conference, it is suggested that the United States Delegation seek as a minimum to have the terms of reference of the Conference broadened to enable it to consider not only the Committee's text, but also any other text which might be submitted, together with other items relating to the present state of freedom of information.

If the Assembly decides to convene the special conference, the United States Delegation should also suggest that the governments be represented by persons drawn from the field of the press, radio and films. It is also suggested that the list of governments eligible to participate in the Conference include non-Members as well as Members, as suggested in Annex C of the Background Paper on this subject (SD/A/C.3/144) and be determined on the basis of the formula employed in the case of the Geneva Conference on Freedom of Information.

The United States Delegation should oppose any suggestion to call on the Subcommission on Freedom of Information and of the Press to prepare an agenda or any material for the proposed conference. It may be anticipated, however, that an attempt will be made to include on the agenda of the conference the consideration of the Model Code of Ethics for journalists which the Subcommission has undertaken to prepare. While this Government has expressed its opposition to the draft Code as it emerged from the last session of the Subcommission, it is believed that there is no reasonable basis for opposing its inclusion on the Conference's agenda.

CONVENTION ON THE INTERNATIONAL TRANSMISSION OF NEWS AND THE RIGHT OF CORRECTION

The "Newsgathering" Convention which was adopted by a vote of 33 (U.S.) to 6 (the Soviet bloc), with 13 abstentions at the second part of the third session of the General Assembly was not opened for signature because of the strong feeling on the part of a bare majority that it should be coupled with the Freedom of Information Convention. In Resolution 277 (III) A, the Assembly decided "that the draft Convention on the International Transmission of News and the Right of Correction shall not be open for signature until the General Assembly has taken definite action on the draft Convention on Freedom of Information".

It should be noted that when the United States Delegation acquiesced in the decision of the third session not to open for signature the Newsgathering Convention (partly in order to secure support for deferring the freedom of information text and partly in the knowledge that very few delegations were prepared to sign it), it insisted that the two texts were in no way organically related. The Newsgathering Convention is completely self-contained and there was never any intimation during its preparation that it would be linked with another instrument. Furthermore, it is obvious by now that there is no reasonable prospect of agreement on the freedom of information text and there is no point in further delaying the activation of the Newsgathering Convention.

Having reviewed the Newsgathering Convention in the light of present circumstances, this Government has concluded that a strong attempt should be made to open it for signature and acceptance without further delay. With the increase in political tensions and the growth of totalitarian regimes following the war, the operations of foreign correspondents and news agencies have been increasingly subjected to restrictions and harassment, with a resulting curtailment in the international flow of news. This has reached a peak in the Soviet states, as illustrated by the Oatis Case (see separate position paper [1]), but the trend is not confined to those states.

Since the Convention is intended to provide an international norm for the treatment of foreign correspondents and an agreed limit on peacetime censorship of news despatches, its activation at this time would be especially desirable.

[1] See Department of State Instruction, undated, p. 806.

Moreover, it would establish the only feasible system for "correcting" false or distorted reports which has proved acceptable to a majority of governments and it would, therefore, meet a need which has been loudly proclaimed by those states which have not yet managed to develop strong news agencies.

An analysis of the Convention and of the position taken by the respective delegations during its consideration will be found in the Background Book on Freedom of Information.

OTHER FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ISSUES

In the course of the debate on this item the United States Delegation should refer to the suggestions advanced by the United States Representative at the recent session of the Economic and Social Council for affirmative action which might be taken by the United Nations to promote freedom of information. These suggestions indicate that there are many urgent problems in this field which have largely been ignored because so much attention has been centered on the freedom of information convention. They will be found in Press Release #1262, which is included in the Background Book on Freedom of Information.

Annex A

Draft Resolution No. 1

(CONVENTION ON FREEDOM OF INFORMATION)

The General Assembly

Believing that freedom of information must be protected by every possible means (and that a special convention on this subject would be desirable);

Convinced that the present divergence of views renders impossible the drafting of an acceptable convention on freedom of information at this time;

(Notes with appreciation the Report of the Committee on the draft Convention on Freedom of Information;)

Decides to postpone indefinitely further consideration of this Convention; and (Recommends to the Economic and Social Council that it review the situation at a future session and, if it finds that prospects for agreement on a constructive text have improved, that it establish appropriate machinery for completing the Convention.)

Note: Clauses in parentheses to be included only if necessary to secure adoption of a resolution along these lines.

Draft Resolution No. 2

(CONVENTION ON THE INTERNATIONAL TRANSMISSION OF NEWS AND THE RIGHT OF CORRECTION)

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the widest dissemination of news is indispensable to the maintenance of peace and to economic and social progress;

Believing that, in order to promote the greatest international flow of news, it is highly desirable to establish an international standard for the treatment of foreign correspondents and their dispatches and an international right of correction;

Decides to open for signature the Convention on the International Transmission of News and the Right of Correction.

Annex B

Detailed Comments on Freedom of Information Convention

Note: Reference to the "present text" are to the text as adopted by the special committee of the General Assembly.

Preamble: The United States Delegation should support the Preamble as presently worded and should oppose any suggestions for expanding it.

Article 1: The present text of Article 1 embodies virtually all of the changes in the original Geneva text which were suggested by the United States and, as now worded, constitutes a forthright and adequate statement of the freedom to be guaranteed.

It should be noted that the present text is ambiguous in referring to "freedom without governmental interference" which might be interpreted as meaning that this freedom is to be secured against private as well as governmental interference. The American concept of free speech and a free press has, in general, involved only the minimum of governmental action necessary to prevent private infringements on the enjoyment of this freedom (e.g. anti-trust and libel legislation). Previous United States attempts to clarify this point by substituting "freedom from governmental interference" for the present language have been unsuccessful. It is suggested accordingly, that the United States Delegation should not seek to revise this language, but that if a question is raised, it state for the record that this Government interprets this phrase to mean that contracting states would be obligated to secure this freedom from governmental interference.

Article 2: Article 2 constitutes the most serious deterrent to United States support for this Convention. In accordance with this Government's policy in respect to the Covenant on Human Rights, the United States has strongly opposed the attempt to enumerate in specific terms the restrictions which governments may legitimately impose on freedom of information. The United States had advocated instead a general limitation provision delimiting the boundaries of governmental power in this sphere.

The United States position rests largely on two grounds: (1) The debate to date on this matter has shown clearly that adequately to protect governmental powers in this area, even in terms of existing valid laws in the countries where freedom of speech and press exists, would require the listing of even more limitations than are contained in the present text. Even then, there would be no assurance that all essential governmental authority had been safeguarded in terms of the future. (2) Moreover, to attempt to list specific limitations which are considered to be necessary and desirable by the various governments constituting the majority on this issue inevitably leads to undesirable compromises of the "log-rolling" variety, with the result that undesirable limitations wanted by a minority of delegations are supported by a majority (See text adopted by Third Committee of the General Assembly). The result is a statement of the lowest common denominator of freedom prevailing among a majority of States.

Although the present text of Article 2 does not contain the most objectionable provisions of the original Geneva text, namely paragraph (j) concerning the dissemination of false or distorted reports, it retains other undesirable restrictions. These include "expressions which . . . are dangerous for youth and intended for them" and "legal obligations . . . including disclosure of information received in confidence in a professional or official capacity". The latter clause refers to Official Secrets Acts in force in many countries (including the United Kingdom) under which public officials may be prosecuted for disclosing matters of governmental policy even if they are not officially classified or otherwise prejudicial to national security.

There is every reason to believe that if this text were used as a basis of discussion by a special conference it would be expanded to include still other permissive restrictions. The special committee itself recommended study of the feasibility of including such other limitations as "matters likely to injure the feelings of the nationals of the State", and "false or distorted reports which undermine friendly relations between peoples or States". (Resolution A of the Committee's Report).

The third paragraph of Article 14 of the Draft Covenant (the freedom of information Article), embodies essentially the formulation which the United States has consistently advocated for this Article. The Article reads:

ARTICLE 14

"1. Everyone shall have the right to hold opinions without interference.

"2. Everyone shall have the right to freedom of expression: this right shall include freedom to seek, receive and impart information and ideas of all kinds, regardless of frontiers, either orally, in writing or in print, in the form of art, or through any other media of his choice.

"3. The right to seek, receive and impart information and ideas carries with it special duties and responsibilities and may therefore be subject to certain penalties, liabilities and restrictions, but these shall be such only as are provided by law and are necessary for the protection of national security, public order, safety, health or morals, or of the rights, freedoms or reputations of others." (UN Doc. E/1681)

The United States Delegation should support the substitution of the formulation employed in paragraph 3 above for Article 2 of the present text, but should modify it slightly for the purpose of this Convention, as follows:

The exercise of the freedoms referred to in Article 1 shall be subject only to such restrictions as are provided by law and are necessary for the protection of national security; for the prevention of disorder; for the protection of public safety, health or morals, or the rights, freedoms or reputations of others.

In the event the above proposal is rejected, the United States Representative should move the deletion of the following clauses from the text of Article 2 as adopted by the special committee:

Paragraph (d) "which are dangerous for youth and intended for them"

Paragraph (h) "including disclosure of information received in confidence in a professional or official capacity"

If these clauses are deleted and the article is not otherwise altered, the United States Delegation should abstain on the final vote on this Article, but vote in favor of the Convention as a whole with such an amended article, provided the remainder of the Convention is satisfactory.

Article 3: The United States Delegation should support this Article which was adopted by the special committee on the proposal of the United States. While not necessary, the inclusion of this Article is desirable to make it clear that this Convention could not so be interpreted as to limit any freedom now guaranteed by the Constitution or to restrict any rights in this field recognized under existing international treaties.

Article 4: The United States Delegation should propose the deletion of this article on the ground that: (a) the Convention in no way limits the right of any Contracting State to establish a "right of reply"; (b) the present language is hopelessly vague since it does not indicate whether the right of reply would operate nationally or internationally, voluntarily or compulsorily, etc., and (c) an international right of correction is provided by the Convention on the International Transmission of News and the Right of Correction.

547-842—79——52

Article 5: It should be noted that the Committee's revision of this article is a considerable improvement over the Geneva Conference text. The draft adopted by the Conference implied that information personnel have a number of responsibilities beyond those of straight reporting, including that of facilitating the solution of economic, social, and humanitarian problems, promoting respect for human rights, etc. The Committee's revision on the other hand, accords with the conviction of this Government that the only primary obligation of information personnel is to seek the truth and report the facts, and that the other desirable objectives mentioned in the Conference draft will result from the honest performance of this primary obligation. The maintenance of this modification is essential since the Soviet objective in the field of freedom of information is to secure recognition of the thesis that organs of information have a duty to carry out affirmative "tasks" assigned to them by the government, such as, promoting peace and security, combating fascism and racial hatred.

Despite these improvements, however, this article still suggests the possibility of governmental pressure on organizations of journalists. It is believed that some governments would interpret the intent of this article, namely that they should "encourage" the establishment of such organizations, as justifying such practices as requiring journalists to belong to approved organizations before they could engage in the profession, issuing and withholding identity cards, etc. Moreover, the Sub-Commission is now preparing another Model Code of Ethics for journalists and there is no need to include one in this Convention.

For these reasons, the United States Delegation should move the deletion of this article.

Articles 6 and 7: The United States Delegation should urge the deletion of these Articles on the ground that the remainder of the Convention would in no way prevent a Contracting State from taking, on a reasonable basis, the measures set forth therein. Experience at the Conference on Freedom of Information, in the Third Committee of the General Assembly and in the special committee has shown that many governments look upon these articles as a means of incorporating still more restrictive provisions.

If the articles are retained, however, they should be modified so as to make them less sweeping and arbitrary. The words "which it deems" in Article 6, for example, should be deleted in order to make it possible for other Contracting States to contest the necessity for measures taken pursuant to this article which may appear to discriminate against them. As the article now stands the state imposing the restrictions for alleged balance of payments reasons could not be questioned as to the necessity for its action.

The same change should be made in Article 7. In addition, the words "until such time as they are fully developed" in paragraph (a) should be deleted since it may be assumed that such enterprises are never fully developed unless they enjoy a complete monopoly.

Article 8: The United States Delegation should support Article 8 in its present form. While the first part of the article, relating to the right to edit newspapers and periodicals, could be used to hamper the publication of foreign-owned newspapers or periodicals, it is a fact that many states devoted to freedom of the press (e.g. The Scandinavian States) require such a provision.

The last clause, relating to the right to operate telecommunication facilities, is required by the United States, where aliens are prohibited from owning or operating radio stations.

Article 9: The United States Delegation should support this article in its present form. The present text of this article, providing that a state may refuse entry to any particular person, is identical with the first part of paragraph 7 of Article XII of the "Newsgathering Convention". While the United States strongly opposed this provision in the Newsgathering text and finally succeeded in adding a proviso that it could not be applied to refuse entry to a correspondent as such, it is not considered as objectionable in the context of the present convention. Whereas the Newsgathering agreement related only to a very limited and clearly defined group, foreign correspondents, the present agreement affects all nationals of all Contracting States. Moreover, this provision accords with the immigration practices of most governments and will receive strong majority approval. It is not inconsistent with United States laws and regulations even though the latter operate in terms of defined classes of excludable aliens.

The second paragraph is designed to take cognizance of the rather unique immigration practices of this country which permit certain normally excludable aliens to enter conditionally and is particularly important in connection with persons coming to observe or cover the proceedings of the United Nations. An identical provision was accepted as Article IV of the "Newsgathering Convention".

Article 10: This article points up the difficulty of attempting to draft a specific convention dealing with one of the rights covered by the Draft Covenant. Under this provision, Contracting States would agree in advance that in any case of conflict between this detailed Convention and the much more general language of Article 14 of the Covenant (which may be modified in the course of further consideration), the Covenant would prevail!

If the Covenant is to have precedence, as it probably should, some such provision is necessary in this Convention. A suggestion which reduces the difficulty somewhat, and which should be proposed if there is an opportunity, would involve the substitution of the words "but in any case where this is not possible" for the present language which reads "but in any case of incompatibility".

Article 11: The United States Delegation should support the present text of this article.

Article 12: Article 12 of the present text provides for the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice to settle disputes arising under the Convention if no other mode of settlement is agreed upon.

The United States Delegation should urge that no article dealing with the settlement of disputes should be included in the text at the present time. It should point out that the subject matter of this Convention exactly duplicates that of Article 14 (on freedom of information) of the draft International Covenant on Human Rights. Hence it is important that contracting states not be subject to two different modes of settling disputes arising under the same international obligations.

The United States Delegation should suggest that this article be held in abeyance until the corresponding provisions of the Draft Covenant have been agreed upon. At that time the provisions of the Covenant, if suitable, could be incorporated in the Convention by agreement among the Contracting States. This proposal should not be pressed if a majority strongly favors the present provision.

Articles 13–15: The United States Delegation should support these articles in their present form.

Article 16: The formulation of an acceptable colonial article is made difficult by the necessity of having to reconcile two widely divergent points of view. The colonial powers have pressed for a formulation which recognizes the fact that, for constitutional reasons or because certain non-self-governing territories have achieved varying degrees of self-government, the prior consent of the governing authorities of such territories must be obtained in some cases before the Convention can be extended to those territories.

On the other hand, the non-colonial powers, especially the USSR group of states with strong support from the Middle East, the Far East and some Latin American States, have urged a formulation which would make these instruments applicable automatically to non-self-governing territories of contracting states. The present text, sponsored by the Arab representatives on the special committee, would make the Convention applicable automatically to the non-self-governing territories of contracting states.

The United States position must take into account the customary practice of this Government which has always extended instruments of this type automatically to territories for the international relations of which it is responsible, without prior consultation with the governing authorities of such territories.

Since the Article 16 of the present text accords with United States practice and will certainly be supported by a large majority, the United States Delegation should not oppose it, even though it is objectionable to the United Kingdom and other colonial powers.

Articles 17–19: The United States Delegation should support these articles as they stand.

New Articles: If at this stage the remainder of the Draft Convention has been modified to bring it into substantial conformity with the views of this Government, the United States Delegation should propose the inclusion of federal state and non-self-executing articles. Their inclusion is an essential prerequisite to United States support for an otherwise acceptable text.

Federal State Article: For a federal state article, the United States Delegation should propose an article along the lines proposed for the Covenant on Human Rights in the position paper on the Covenant.

The incorporation of a federal state article in this Convention is essential to take into account the situation in which the United States and other Federal States find themselves in bringing a Convention of this kind into operation domestically. This Convention deals essentially with the non-exercise of certain governmental powers (i.e. states shall secure freedom from governmental interference in the exercise of the right to freedom of information). In such matters as freedom of speech and press, censorship of films and books, etc., state governments can violate the Convention as well as the Federal Government. In short, while it is clear that the Federal Government has jurisdiction in respect of the inter-state and international aspects of the subject matter of this Convention, and has control of radio broadcasting, the power to violate some provisions of this Convention is as much state as it is federal. The article suggested is an adaptation of Article 19 (7) of the Constitution of the International Labor Organization as amended in 1946 which has received wide acceptance.

It may be anticipated that the new article suggested will be opposed by a number of delegations, principally on the ground that it constitutes a wide "loophole or escape clause" for federal states. A few delegations, not understanding the operations of a federal state, may propose that no such article be included. It has proved difficult in the course of numerous consultations regarding this issue to convince such delegations that this article, far from constituting an escape clause, is necessary to clarify the precise situation of the United States Federal Government, the legislative and executive branches of which cannot determine with finality the exact limits of federal vs. state reponsibilities in this field. The boundaries between federal and state action are constantly being reviewed by court decision and it is only by reference to these court decisions that the particular responsibilities of the state and federal jurisdictions can be determined with reference to a particular set of facts, and at a given time.

At its last session the General Assembly when considering the Covenant on Human Rights agreed in principle on the need to consider a federal-state article. The special committee of the Assembly which prepared the revised text of this Convention did not consider a federal-state article, having decided to await the action of the Human Rights Commission with regard to the Covenant. The Human Rights Commission at its last session did not have time to review the matter.

Non-Self-Executing-Article

"Where not already provided for by existing legislative or other measures, each Contracting State undertakes to take the necessary steps, in accordance with its constitutional processes and with the provisions of this Convention, to adopt such legislative or other measures as may be necessary to give effect to the freedoms recognized in this Convention."

A similar provision has already been incorporated by the Commission on Human Rights into the Draft Covenant, which should facilitate its acceptance for this Convention.

Since in the United States and in many other countries the provisions of treaties which they ratify come into force automatically, a question would immediately arise as to whether the precise words of the Convention could be enforced as domestic law (and be interpreted by the courts in conjunction with existing laws) or whether its provisions may not be so general in character that more specific legislation is needed to enforce the Convention.

The provision suggested above is intended to make it clear beyond doubt that in so far as there are no existing legislative or other measures giving effect to the terms of Article 1 of the Convention, the United States would undertake to adopt such measures in accordance with its constitutional processes. Thus, since the treaty itself would stipulate that it would become operative only through legislative or other measures already in existence, or which are subsequently adopted, to bring its provisions into effect as a matter of domestic law, the language of Article 1 referred to could not be considered automatically to become the "supreme law of the land" in the United States.

Under this provision, the Convention would still become binding internationally upon the deposit of the required number of ratifications or accessions and at that moment Contracting States will assume the obligation to adopt legislative or other measures in accordance with their constitutional processes to give effect as a matter of domestic law to the terms of the Convention—to the extent that the rights set forth in the Convention are not already provided by such measures.

It should be noted that the Special Committee of the Assembly rejected by a large majority the proposal of the United States Representative to incorporate this article. In the course of a very brief and confused debate several representatives charged that this article would operate to enable this Government to evade its obligation. They contended that the United States should, if necessary, act to bring its legislation into complete conformity with the Convention simultaneously with its acceptance of the instrument.

Resolution A of the Special Committee

In a separate resolution the special committee requested the Secretary General to prepare a report on the legal problems raised by several amendments which had been rejected in the course of the Committee's debate. The objective of this resolution is to seek suitable language expressing the intent of the rejected amendments in order to see if they could at a later stage be incorporated in the Convention.

The amendments involve the addition to Article 2 of the following clauses:

(a) "matters likely to injure the feelings of the nationals of the state"

(b) "false or distorted reports which undermine friendly relations between peoples or States"

(c) "reports regarding racial, national or religious discrimination".

The United States Delegation should oppose any further consideration of these proposals. Although these proposals were sponsored in the Committee by non-Soviet representatives, they are proposals which have always in the past been sponsored by the Soviet states. Based on a totalitarian conception of press control, they could only be enforced by state censorship and control of the media of information. The objective which the sponsors of these proposals seek should be the subject of long-range education, not repressive legislation.

Annex C

In the event the General Assembly decides to convene a special conference to complete the Draft Convention on Freedom of Information, the question will arise as to which countries should be invited to participate. Following the precedent of the original Conference on Freedom of Information and of recent conventions sponsored by the United Nations, it is certain that invitations would be addressed to certain non-member states.

In order to counter Soviet arguments in favor of the participation of Outer Mongolia and Communist China and against the participation of Spain, etc., it would be desirable to utilize a formula which has been used by the United Nations in similar circumstances and which is acceptable to the United States. Such a formula is contained in Resolution 368 (IV) of the General Assembly, which reads:

"INVITATIONS TO BE ADDRESSED TO NON-MEMBER STATES TO BECOME PARTIES TO THE CONVENTION ON THE PREVENTION AND PUNISHMENT OF THE CRIME OF GENOCIDE"

"The General Assembly,

"Considering that article XI of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, approved by General Assembly resolution 260 (III) A of 9 December 1948, provides, inter alia, that the Convention shall be open to signature and ratification or to accession on behalf of any non-member State to which an invitation has been addressed by the General Assembly,

"Considering that it is desirable to send invitations to those non-member States which, by their participation in activities related to the United Nations, have expressed a desire to advance international co-operation,

"1. Decides to request the Secretary-General to dispatch the invitations above-mentioned to each non-member State which is or hereafter becomes an active member of one or more of the specialized agencies of the United Nations, or which is or hereafter becomes a Party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice;

"2. Remains convinced of the necessity of inviting Members of the United Nations which have not yet done so to sign or ratify the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide as soon as possible."

266th plenary meeting, 3 December 1949.

It is suggested that the United States Delegation seek support for this formula as the one to be employed for any conference which may be called on freedom of information.

IO Files

Department of State Instruction to the United States Delegation to the Sixth Regular Session of the General Assembly

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON, undated.]

SD/AC.3/149

TREATMENT IN THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE CASE OF WILLIAM N. OATIS

(Agenda Item 11, Report of the Economic and Social Council)

THE PROBLEM

What action should the United States Delegation take in the General Assembly with regard to the imprisonment by Czechoslovakia of Associated Press correspondent William N. Oatis? [1]

[1] For documentation on developments in the Oatis case as they proceeded in the diplomatic (bilateral) channel, see volume IV.

RECOMMENDATIONS

The United States Delegation should:

1. On the assumption that majority support can be obtained, support a resolution incorporating the substance of the resolution on this subject which was passed by the Economic and Social Council (Annex A attached).

2. Make a strong statement condemning the Czech action as a flagrant violation of accepted principles of freedom of information and exposing the absurdity of Oatis' conviction under the Soviet-type espionage law.

3. Refer to (a) the evidence concerning violations by Rumania of freedom of the press and publication submitted by the United States in the cases involving violation of human rights in Bulgaria, Hungary and Rumania pursuant to General Assembly Resolution 385(V) of November 3, 1950, citing this material as a means of demonstrating in detail the policies of the communist governments respecting freedom of the press; and (b) other examples in Eastern Europe of the violation of accepted principles of freedom of information.

4. If the question of the Argentine newspaper La Prensa should arise, follow the position set forth in Annex B.

5. Make available informally to interested delegations the prepared document containing background material and the verbatim record of the Oatis trial. Because of the importance of gaining active support from other delegations, these documents should be relied upon as providing evidence of the good faith of our position. However, the trial transcript and related documents should be made available only to delegations who remain doubtful of our position in regard to the case, and in no case should unrestricted circulation to all delegations be permitted.

COMMENT

William N. Oatis, an American national and chief of the Associated Press Bureau at Prague, was convicted on July 4, 1951 on charges of "espionage" after a mock trial, the transcript of which indicates that his offense lay in attempting conscientiously to carry out in a communist state the normal duties of a foreign correspondent. He was convicted under Czechoslovakia's "espionage" law and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment and expulsion from Czechoslovakia after completion of the term, which may be reduced to five years for good behavior.

Oatis was convicted of betraying "state secrets" to a foreign power under a law which defines state secrets as ". . . everything that should be kept from unauthorized persons in an important interest of the Republic, particularly in political, military or economic interests." (See translation of para. 86 of Czech Penal Code in Despatch No. 7, of July 13, 1951 from Prague, contained in the Background Book on Freedom of Information.[2]) The trial gave evidence of having been rehearsed, but the essential element in the conviction was the use of the definition of espionage as set forth in the Czech Penal Code, a definition which includes, for all practical purposes, the acquisition or dissemination of any information not made public by the Czech Government. (See transcript of trial in Background Book on Freedom of Information). Granted the acceptance of such a definition, the normal functions of a foreign correspondent amount to "espionage".

In order to exhaust all possibilities to obtain Oatis' release and in accordance with Congressional and public opinion, the Department authorized the United States Representative to the recent session of the Economic and Social Council to seek support for a general resolution which, while not referring to the Oatis case as such, would condemn the continuing actions of Communist governments in cutting off virtually all free reporting from their territories. A resolution sponsored by the United States (Annex A) was adopted by a vote of 14 to 3 (The Soviet bloc), with Pakistan abstaining.

While the Czech Government has given no indication to date of its willingness to release Oatis, the recent actions of the United States to prohibit Czech airline flights over Western Germany, to prohibit exports of US goods to Czechoslovakia, to discourage Czechoslovak imports, etc. are known to be causing it increasing concern.[3] It is believed that additional pressure in the form of an airing of the case in the General Assembly will assist in securing Oatis' release. In order to coordinate this Government's efforts in Oatis' behalf, however, it is important that the Delegation keep the Department informed of the progress of its negotiations concerning this case and of the timing of any action by the Assembly.

Judging by the experience in the Economic and Social Council, however, the United States Delegation is likely to encounter considerable reluctance on the part of many delegations to support a resolution on this case. While they supported the United States proposal in the Economic and Social Council, for example, the non-Soviet delegations did not participate actively in the debate. Their reluctance was based on the following factors:

(a) They were concerned lest, by joining in this action, they would be committing themselves to any future action which might be undertaken by this Government as a means of exerting pressure on the Czech Government. For this reason it is important to avoid any direct reference to the measures which have been taken by this Government in an attempt to obtain Oatis' release. (See Background Book on Freedom of Information). Moreover, it will be noted that the Economic and Social Council resolution does not call upon other governments to take any action.

[2] Not printed.

[3] For documentation on political problems related to Czechoslovakia, see volume IV. For documentation regarding the question of imports and exports in U.S.-Czechoslovak trade in the context of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), see vol. I, pp. 1381 ff.

(b) There was some doubt expressed by members of the Economic and Social Council as to the real nature of Oatis' position and activities in Czechoslovakia. The United States Delegation should assure any delegation which appears to doubt Oatis' innocence that he was a bona fide correspondent and that allegations concerning his "espionage" activities are completely false. By making available to interested members of the Third Committee documents containing an impartial presentation of the facts regarding the background of the trial of Oatis and containing without comment the verbatim record of the trial, itself, the United States can most effectively persuade other delegations of the good faith of the United States position.

(c) Some delegations felt that the Oatis case was but one of a series of recent major denials of freedom of information and that their moral position would be much stronger if it could be considered together with other similar cases. The case of La Prensa in Argentina was singled out in this connection. While the United States Delegation should be ready to recognize the seriousness of recent major violations of freedom of information, it should not initiate any discussion specifically on La Prensa. (If the case of La Prensa is raised, the delegation should be guided by the position set forth in Annex B.)

At the same time this feeling may be somewhat mitigated by the fact that the United States will be in a position to refer in detail to the evidence which it has submitted, and which will be before United Nations Members, with regard to violations of freedom of the press and publication in Rumania, as well as to evidence on this subject regarding Bulgaria and Hungary. Other delegations will doubtless be in a position to add accounts of the difficulties of their own national correspondents in Eastern Europe and probably also of the three peace treaty satellites.

(d) Although this issue was not raised in the Economic and Social Council, some delegations may doubt the advisability of raising in the United Nations the case of an individual as such on the ground that the matter is outside the Assembly's competence. The United States Delegation should point out that, although the Oatis case is the flagrant example which largely prompted its action, the Economic and Social Council resolution is carefully drafted to avoid this problem. Moreover, the fact that we will be discussing other violations of freedom of information will also be helpful in this regard. The ECOSOC resolution, it may be emphasized, does not refer to the Oatis case as such, but to "all governmental action aimed at the systemic exclusion of bona fide correspondents, the imposition of arbitrary personal restraints and the infliction of punishments upon such correspondents solely because of their attempts faithfully to perform their duties in gathering and transmitting news."

As a means of stimulating an active debate on this issue, it is suggested that, in its consultations with other delegations, the United States Delegation should urge them to discuss the problems of all foreign correspondents who attempted to work in the Soviet states. At the same time and previous to the opening of the debate, efforts should be made to ensure that at least several other delegations will actively support in the debate not only the resolution but also the United States stand on the Oatis case itself.

Annex A

RESOLUTION DIRECTED AT OATIS CASE

THIRTEENTH SESSION–ECOSOC (DOC. E/2110)
ADOPTED 14–3–1 (PAKISTAN)

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing freedom of information as one of the fundamental freedoms referred to in the Charter and the high importance accorded in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights to the right to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media regardless of frontiers,

Desiring to implement the right of all peoples to be fully informed,

Conscious of the need of continually stressing the vital importance of safeguarding and developing this essential freedom in order that all peoples may, by freely exchanging information and ideas, come to understand one another, develop friendly relations among themselves and achieve true international cooperation in solving problems of vital concern to all nations,

1. Views with extreme concern all governmental action aimed at the systematic exclusion of bona fide correspondents, the imposition of arbitrary personal restraints and the infliction of punishments upon such correspondents solely because of their attempts faithfully to perform their duties in gathering and transmitting news;
2. Urges strongly that personal restraints be removed and sentences imposing arbitrary punishments be revoked; and
3. Appeals to Governments to do all within their power to safeguard the right of correspondents freely and faithfully to gather and transmit news.

Annex B

With regard to the La Prensa issue, the United States Delegation should,

1. refrain from taking any position which would make it appear that the United States condones Argentina's action against La Prensa, but should also,
2. refrain from taking the initiative in encouraging or proposing General Assembly action.

The reason for 1. is that there can be no question of United States disapproval of direct or indirect suppression of such an important symbol of a free press as La Prensa was. This position has been made clear by United States officials in statements which constitute perhaps the only expressions of official attitude which have been made by officials of any government on this issue. The most important reason for 2. above, is that United States initiative or leadership is certain to be exploited in Argentina in a manner which will react unfavorably against both United States interests and the interests of press freedom in that country, and will contribute to nothing so much as the strength of Peron.

Specifically, the United States Delegation should,

1. Refrain from initiating or encouraging proposals for General Assembly action in the La Prensa issue.
2. If the issue is raised by another delegation in connection with the ECOSOC Resolution bearing on the Oatis case, the United States may vote in favor of an appropriate amendment to the ECOSOC Resolution.
3. Vote in favor of a separate resolution condemning the suppression of La Prensa, if one is proposed by another delegation.

(With reference to points 2 and 3, the Department should, if possible, be consulted on the text of any amendment or separate resolution which may be proposed).

4. Not initiate any remarks on this issue in general debate and limit any remarks that may be necessary in reply to questions to factual statements falling within the sense of this position paper.

320/11–551 : Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin)

RESTRICTED WASHINGTON, November 5, 1951—5 : 52 p. m.

Gadel 64. Dept informed Oct 30 by Fr Emb that French considering proposing GA open for sig a Convention on the Right of Correction, consisting only of Arts 1, 9, 10, 11 and certain of the "Miscellaneous" provisions of Newsgathering Convention. Remainder Newsgathering text wld be abandoned. Fr aide-mémoire [1] follows air pouch.

Dept strongly opposes Fr proposal on grounds:

(1) US supported inclusion Right Correction provisions in Newsgathering text primarily as means attracting support for provisions re correspondents and censorship and despite propaganda risk involved. Since US correspondents outnumber all others, US likely be main target corrections. Moreover correction provisions of little utility. Any govt now able request corrections through diplomatic channels.

(2) Main objectives Newsgathering Convention are estab intl standard for treatment fon correspondents and limiting censorship outgoing dispatches. By abandoning these objectives Fr proposal wld constitute further setback efforts promote FOI.

(3) While Fr insist anxious avoid reopening arts as presently drafted, proposal opens door to amendments other Dels seeking transform present essentially voluntary provisions into mandatory ones or possibly even attempting incorporate parts FOI Convention.

[1] Not printed.

Proposal may be maneuver force US reconsider position FOI Convention. USDel shld maintain position as stated recommendations 1, 2 and 3 of SD/A/C.3/144.[2]

Possible Fr may offer "compromise" proposal to separate Newsgathering text into two distinct parts, with new provision for optional acceptance one or both parts. USDel shld strongly oppose since such separation most likely result in activation Right of Correction and loss of Gathering and Interl Transmission News.

In view difficult negotiating situation, with Fr in position exploit dissatisfaction over ECOSOC decision to shelve FOI Convention, suggest immediate high level approach Fr Del urging they not advance proposal. In addition above arguments, suggest point out proposal likely lead to acrimonious debate 3rd Comite as last year with result other GA issues in which Fr-US interests heavily involved likely be adversely affected. Suggest Amb Austin, in view his concern over FOI Convention, discuss with Fr.

If Fr press proposal USDel shld consult other Dels urging opposition proposal and affirming US readiness sign Newsgathering Convention as whole. Dels which voted for Convention 3rd GA (list of 33 follows air pouch) shld be urged maintain support. USDel shld take propoganda initiative in debate pointing out seriousness abandonment this time of agreed standards for promoting free flow news.

If necessary as means persuading Fr not press their proposal, USDel may agree it will make no effort at this session open Newsgathering text for signature. In any event effort shld not be made unless prior assurance majority support for whole text as now drafted. Recommendation 4 of SD/A/C.3/144 is modified accordingly.

WEBB

[2] This paper is the same as the text of Annex B of Doc. SD/A/C.3/146, p. 797.

320/11–1751 : Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin)

RESTRICTED WASHINGTON, November 17, 1951—1 : 14 p. m.

Gadel 183. On further consideration Fr proposal re Newsgathering Convention and after consulting Canham [1] (memo of conversation pouched Nov. 14 [2]), Dept inclined maintain position set forth

[1] Erwin Canham, United States Representative on the United States Delegation to the Third Regular Session of the General Assembly, 1948–1949; he was the U.S. Delegate concerned with freedom of information issues.

[2] Not printed.

Gadel 64. However, require report status USDel consultations suggested Gadel 64 in order decide whether US opposition to possibility dividing convention two parts with provision for optional acceptance shld be reconsidered.

Dept sees possible advantage under certain circumstances in agreeing such division if this is only means preventing adoption Fr proposal for separate convention on right of correction standing alone. Wld not agree such division however unless reasonable assurance necessary support to bring first part convention re newsgathering into force, since otherwise wld merely result activation right of correction alone. If necessary resort to such division, US cld either sign only first part re newsgathering, or first and second part (re correction) with reservation that, if ratified by Senate, US obligation under second part wld extend only vis-à-vis States which also accepted first part re newsgathering.

If tempo negots preclude reference Dept, USDel authorized discuss on confidential basis possibility division of convention on above basis with such Dels as UK, Fr, Neth, Canad, Swed, Den, Leb, Urug and Grk. USDel shld not formally propose division unless necessary prevent adoption Fr proposal for separate Convention on Right Correction. USDel shld first make every effort as suggested Gadel 64 to head off or defeat Fr proposal.

WEBB

320/11–2251 : Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin)

SECRET WASHINGTON, November 27, 1951—11 : 48 a. m.

Gadel 259. Do not understand reference Delga 312 to Fr proposal to divide Newsgathering Convention into two Conventions.[1] Has Fr abandoned proposal single Convention Right Correction in favor dividing Newsgathering text into two optional conventions?

Dept awaiting report high-level approach FrDel suggested Gadel 64 [2] and concerned that USDel may be forced accept two conventions without any assurance support for newsgathering provisions. Even with such assurance important divided convention be supported only last resort as means preventing adoption original Fr proposal as suggested Gadel 183.

WEBB

[1] In the Delegation's classified information summary for November 22, transmitted in Delga 312, November 22, mention was made that the United Kingdom was "indifferent" to a "French proposal" to divide the Newsgathering and Right of Corrections Convention into two conventions (320/11–2251).

[2] Dated November 5, p. 811.

320/12–2051 : Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

[Extract]

SECRET PARIS, December 20, 1951—11 p. m.

Delga 757. Daily Classified Summary No. 41, December 20, 10:56 p. m.

. . . . . .

Freedom of Information

US objections to the completion of the Freedom of Information Convention were reiterated to Schuman[1] (France) by Mrs. Roosevelt. She held that the present climate of opinion was unfavorable to completion of the convention. The US hoped, she said, the earlier convention, which was already completed, might be opened for signature at this session.

Schuman acknowledged differences of opinion on the draft Freedom of Information Convention were almost irreconcilable but stated his Government felt strongly something was needed to "balance" the Convention on Transmission of News and the Right of Correction. He suggested a resolution, a declaration, or a code of ethics might serve this purpose.

The US, Mrs. Roosevelt responded, would be very glad to consider concrete proposals of the French Delegation.

. . . . . .

ROOSEVELT

[1] Robert Schuman, French Minister for Foreign Affairs.

320/12–2251 : Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

RESTRICTED PARIS, December 22, 1951—9 p. m.

Delga 795. As follow-up of conversation between Mrs. Roosevelt and Schuman (France) concerning newsgathering and FOI conventions,[1] USDel staff met with Kayser (France)[2] to consider possible alternative lines of action in GA when FOI discussion opens in Comite 3. This subject likely to be reached beginning third week January.

Kayser stressed point that Fr del is continuing to press for some action in GA to save right of correction provisions of newsgathering convention. Fr del continues to prefer adoption resolution in GA simply opening these provisions for separate ratification. Fr del might be willing to go along with res opening newsgathering provisions for separate ratification also.

[1] See Delga 757, December 20, supra.

[2] M. Jacques Kayser, French journalist, Technical Adviser on the French Delegation to the General Assembly.

In view US opposition to convening internatl conf to complete FOI convention, Fr del urging that US join France in supporting at same time some affirmative action on FOI at this session GA.

Fr suggest that same resolution postponing completion FOI convention refer to drafting of code of ethics. Kayser claimed his del was simply seeking to place moral duties on correspondents through a code of ethics to be adopted and admin by private journalist organizations and not through govt controls. One suggestion was that FOI subcommission draft code of ethics might be sent by ECOSOC to private organizations for implementation by latter. Under this provision ECOSOC itself wld not undertake to make any changes in subcommission draft.

As pointed out Delga 757, Schuman expressed to Mrs. Roosevelt strong support his govt for some "balance" in FOI field, which might be in form of code of ethics.

Kayser also urged desirability of provision in res against monopoly which limits free flow of info. Free competition wld be stressed in such provision. State action might be called for this connection to prevent monopoly by few which wld handicap others in furthering free flow of info.

USDel wld appreciate receiving from Dept by January 5, any suggestions on code of ethics and monopolies which Dept considers cld appropriately be included in GA Res on FOI.

[ROOSEVELT]

320/12–2251 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin)

RESTRICTED WASHINGTON, January 3, 1952—4 : 57 p. m.

Gadel 582. Dept unable agree Fr request US join in support res on code ethics and monopoly Delga 795.[1] Consider such action, when coupled with Fr proposal re Newsgathering Convention, as completely negative Freedom of Info (FOI) approach.

Cannot see how "balance" between rights and duties of correspondents which Fr desire is attained by adoption Right Correction provisions convention and stress on code and anti-monopoly in return for killing or seriously jeopardizing affirmative protection of correspondents afforded by first part convention. Throughout most of world "balance" now heavily against rights correspondents and US strongly opposed any action which tends add weight UN prestige to action many Govts restricting and harassing correspondents.

[1] Dated December 22, supra.

Suggest immediate consultations UK, Scandinavian and other like-minded Dels in order effect concerted approach FrDel along lines Gadels 64 and 183 and urge FrDel not place itself in position leader anti-FOI elements in GA. While playing role compromiser in past FOI discussions, Fr has shown reluctance be separated completely from Western Eur US and UK Dels and may be persuaded abandon present drive despite assurance majority support if certain of strong opposition these Dels. In private talks USDel shld if necessary urge Fr take into acct strong opposition press and other quarters US to their proposals.

With regard code ethics shld be noted FOI Subcom will review and complete it as first item business in Mar session, after which transmitted ECOSOC for referral professional bodies for voluntary adoption. GA action this time therefore not only unnecessary but likely increase suspicion professional bodies code intended as Govt instrument control press. While USDel may of course support reference in otherwise acceptable res merely noting code in process drafting shld oppose any form GA endorsement giving above as reasons.

Reference Govt anti-monopoly measures undesirable since plays into hands Sov propaganda. US cld support such reference only if point clearly made that greatest threat FOI is totalitarian Govt monopoly but USDel shld note UK and other Dels having BBC type monopoly may have difficulty supporting. Because of this difficulty previous attempt draft such res resulted in feeble and ambiguous text worse than none (see res 27 E/CONF.6/79). If find necessary oppose inadequate reference monopoly, USDel shld stress US opposed all forms FOI monopoly, pointing out US Govt has recently used anti-trust legislation in successful prosecutions few instances private abuse US.

ACHESON

320/1–2252 : Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL PARIS, January 22, 1952—11 p. m.

PRIORITY

Delga 1143. Re Comite Three agenda. Presently anticipated Third Comite will complete consideration Covenant on Human Rights item about Jan. 28. Two items will then remain on agenda: (1) Sections 2 to 10 of chapter 5 of ECOSOC report and (2) draft protocol on stateless persons.

If present efforts to have only joint Comite Two and Three consider reorganization ECOSOC are successful, Comite Three will have only freedom of info as remaining principal subject for consideration under ECOSOC report. Although we anticipate introduction and wide support for res for postponement freedom of info convention, some two days' debate expected, through Jan 30.

In view anticipated termination practically all other comites by Jan 30, USGADel proposes urge postponement item on draft protocol on stateless persons until seventh session GA. Even to obtain postponement, likely to be at least one day of debate, thus permitting termination Third Comite by end of day Jan 31.[1]

Above estimates reflect USGADel and secretariat thinking, if Oatis case is not raised in Third Comite in connection with FOI subject.

Staff of opinion though strong statement shld be made on Oatis case, preferable not submit res, even along general lines of ECOSOC res as result discussions with UK, Fr, Canada, Leb, New Zealand, Neth, Yugo for fol reasons:

(1) Negative sentiment created in Third Comite with regard discussion of individual cases as result of rejection in comite of Polish res on 24 inhabitants of Barcelona and resentment when Israel raised in comite Jan 22 case of two Jews executed in Iraq.
(2) Insistence by US on approval res wld very likely extend session GA additional five or six days.
(3) Difficulty found in comite to obtain affirmative action on res after termination all other comites. Staff particularly concerned that USGADel might be forced to withdraw res in order not hold up termination GA.
(4) Submission of res by other dels on other human rights matters wld be encouraged. Sovs and Arabs likely exploit such opportunity keep GA considering their proposals.

Staff of opinion however USGADel shld make statement in Third Comite re ECOSOC res on Oatis case in connection consideration ECOSOC report. In opinion staff this will extend session Third Comite additional three or four days, since there will be supporting speeches other dels and opposition speeches from Sov bloc. There will also no doubt be many speeches on other human rights matters, such as Negroes in US, Morocco, etc.

Staff estimate accordingly is that with proposed discussion Oatis case in Third Comite, this comite will not terminate its work until Feb 2 or 4.

[1] Regarding this item, the Department of State responded in Gadel 819, January 24, 1952, 4: 43 p. m.: "Department entirely agrees Delegation proposal urge postponement subject item until seventh session of the General Assembly." (320/1–2252)

Urgent USGADel receive immediate view of Dept on line of action proposed above with respect Third Comite.

ROOSEVELT

320/1–2252 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin)

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, January 23, 1952—6:17 p. m.

PRIORITY

Gadel 808. Re Delga 1143 [1] Oatis case. View considerations urtel Dept agrees Del opinion not feasible secure adoption res Oatis case. Sufficient make strong ref Oatis in statement re pertinent Sec ECOSOC Report. However view obvious importance of issue and in absence submission res Dept stresses importance adequate US statement along lines special text of statement re Oatis transmitted to Del by Dept in memo Dec. 11 to Green and Simsarian.[2] Dept still hopes Del able persuade other Dels make appropriate supporting statement.

ACHESON

[1] Dated January 22, supra.

[2] Memorandum not found in Department of State files. James F. Green and James Simsarian were Advisers on the United States Delegation, and both were engaged in Committee Three matters.

IO Files

Minutes of Forty-ninth Meeting of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly, Paris, January 25, 1952

SECRET

US/A/M(Chr)/236

[Here follows list of persons (42) present.]

1. Freedom of Information and Oatis Case.

Mr. Simsarian said that after considering human rights, Committee Three would proceed to discuss Chapter 5 of the ECOSOC report. Section 5 of Chapter 5 was on freedom of information and the Oatis case. This dealt first with the Newsgathering Convention. He recalled that this convention has been initially drafted in the Freedom of Information Conference in 1948, on the basis of a United States proposal. It had been completed by the Assembly in 1949, and was designed to protect foreign correspondents in their work. The United States had been prepared to sign this Convention at that time, but the Assembly held up opening it for signature until a Convention on Freedom of Information was also completed or finally disposed of. The Delegation's instructions on the Newsgathering Convention had been modified to allow the postponement of final action on this Convention.

The second part of Section 5 of Chapter 5 of the ECOSOC Report had to do with the Freedom of Information Convention. It was initially placed before the United Nations by a proposal from the UK. The US favored the postponement of consideration of this Convention at this time, since it was not felt to be in satisfactory condition, and we were anxious to have it postponed indefinitely. It appeared that we would be successful in having its consideration postponed at this session because of the lack of time for its adequate consideration.

The third point that would be coming up under this section of the ECOSOC Report, related to the Oatis case. Mr. Simsarian recalled that in the last session of ECOSOC the United States Representative had made a strong statement on the Oatis case and a resolution was adopted with the Oatis case primarily in mind. This matter would not be before Committee Three in the ECOSOC Report. The Department had recommended that the Delegation make a strong statement condemning the action of Czechoslovakia in the Oatis case (see Gadel 808 [1]). The staff felt that other delegations would join in making strong statements to the same point. The staff had been concerned, however, lest these statements would unduly prolong the work of Committee Three and thereby that of the Assembly itself. A telegram explaining this situation had been sent to the Department, with the recommendation however that a strong statement be made on the Oatis case in spite of this fact. The Department expressed its agreement with this recommendation. The staff was now working for support for our statement from other delegations.

Mr. Simsarian stated that it was deemed advisable not to submit a resolution on this case for a number of reasons. The Committee had rejected the consideration of a Polish resolution in regard to Spain. In addition, counter pressures might be expected if we tabled a resolution, which might be so strong as to compel the withdrawal of our resolution. Hence, on balance, it had been decided by the staff that the most effective tactics on the Oatis case would be to confine the United States approach at this time to very strong statements. The Department had endorsed this approach.

Mr. Taylor asked what the reactions of other delegations had been to our proposed move. Mr. Simsarian said that a number of them had indicated they would make strong statements. Mr. Allen inquired whether the move he understood was being contemplated to postpone consideration of the Freedom of Information item would interfere with our plans for making a strong statement on the Oatis case. Mr. Simsarian explained that he did not believe that the submission of this resolution would preclude strong statements on the Oatis case in the Committee.

[1] Dated January 23, supra.

Mrs. Roosevelt recalled that a Yugoslav delegate had approached her to ask whether the US would allow freedom of information to be discussed. She had pointed out to him that the US was not going to stand in the way of any discussion of freedom of information. Mr. Simsarian added that the Latin Americans, in addition to the Western Europeans, would probably make supporting statements on the Oatis case. In answer to a question by Mr. Lubin, he said that France had agreed to withdraw its proposal for a corrections convention, and would instead support postponement of a detailed discussion of freedom of information this year.

[Here follows discussion of other agenda items.]

CHARLES D. COOK

320/1–2952 : Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

PARIS, January 29, 1952.

[Received January 30—12 : 20 a. m.]

Delga 1243. Re Comite 3 joint draft res Jan 29. Fol is text of joint draft res tabled Comite 3 Jan 29 (Chile, Egypt, France, India, Lebanon, Mexico, Philippines and Yugoslavia).

(Joint Draft Res A/C.3/L.227/Rev : 1).

Report of the Economic and Social Council (Chapter V) Chile, Egypt, France, India, Lebanon, Mexico, Philippines and Yugoslavia: Revised Joint draft resolution.

Freedom of information.

The General Assembly,

Regretting that the progress of the proceedings at its sixth regular session does not allow it to devote a detailed discussion to the problems of freedom of information, and especially to the study of the draft convention of freedom of information.

Decides to place consideration of all these problems and of this situation on the agenda for its seventh regular session, and to give it priority.

ROOSEVELT

Editorial Note

At its plenary meeting on February 4, the General Assembly in Resolution 541 (VI) took note of the fact that the Third Committee had not been able to give the consideration "that they deserve" to the documents relating to freedom of information; and decided to postpone the item until the Seventh Session. For the appropriate documentation that had been tabled for the consideration of the Third Committee, see fascicule for agenda item 11 in GA (VI), Annexes, pages 11 ff. The brief proceedings of the General Assembly on the item are recorded in GA (VI), Plenary, pages 496–498. For text of the resolution, see GA (VI), Resolutions, page 35.

Third Committee consideration of the item was taken up almost wholly with extensive discussion of the Oatis case, on January 30 and 31 and February 2, 1952. For an initial statement of some length about the Oatis Case by the United States Representative (Tobias), see GA (VI), Third Committee, pages 413–415. For the Third Committee's proceedings as a whole on this matter, see ibid., pages 413–446.

IV. MATTERS RESPECTING REFUGEES AND STATELESS PERSONS

Editorial Note

In accordance with General Assembly Resolution 429 (V) of December 14, 1950, a diplomatic conference assembled at Geneva, Switzerland on July 2, 1951, to complete the drafting of and to sign a convention relating to the status of refugees. The conference was also to effect similar action for a draft protocol on stateless persons.

The conference adopted a final text on July 25, 1951, and 13 governments had signed ad referendum by mid-August, not including the United States.

For an authoritative statement by the United States Representative to the Conference, George L. Warren (Department of State Adviser on Refugees and Displaced Persons), as to reasons why the United States had not signed, see article by Mr. Warren, "U.N. Action on Status of Refugees and Displaced Persons", Department of State Bulletin, September 24, 1951, pages 502–504. The principal reason was that "the convention was not well adapted to United States laws and practices, under which refugees already receive rights shared by all other legally admitted aliens and, except in special instances, are in effect assimilated in status to that of citizens. Little, therefore, would be gained for refugees by United States adherence to the convention."

Mr. Warren pointed out, however, "that the United States Government had an interest in assisting in every way possible to secure broad adherence to the convention, particularly on the part of European states, because the legal establishment of rights and privileges for refugees under the convention would regularize the position of refugees and thus contribute to peace and order in areas in which large numbers of refugees reside."

For text of the Refugee Convention of July 25, 1951, see United Nations, Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Status of Refugees and Displaced Persons, Final Act and Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees (Palais des Nations, Geneva, 1951).

IO Files

United States Delegation Position Paper, Superseding Two Earlier Department of State Instructions on Refugee Problems [1]

RESTRICTED [PARIS,] January 2, 1952.

US/A/C.3/341

REFUGEE ITEMS BEFORE THE THIRD COMMITTEE

THE PROBLEM

The problem is to determine the position which the Delegation should take in the Third Committee on the two refugee items on the agenda. Two principal questions arise: clarification of the Statute of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (see Annex A [2]) and the creation of a special fund for assistance to refugees in cases of urgent need.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. The Delegation should avoid taking the initiative in the debates and should, wherever appropriate, support postponement of decisions until the next session of the General Assembly.

2. The Delegation should support a resolution by which the Assembly would note the Report of the High Commissioner for Refugees and commend him for the progress made in establishing his Office and initiating the work of protection for refugees.

3. With regard to clarification of the Statute of the High Commissioner, as a basis for further consideration of his budget by the Fifth Committee, the Delegation should:

a. Support the position that the administrative expenses of the High Commissioner's branch offices are a proper charge on the United Nations budget, but that the activities of the branch offices should not extend beyond those permitted in the Statute.

b. Support the position that "administrative expenses" of the High Commissioner's Office, which according to paragraph 20 of the Statute shall be borne on the United Nations budget, should be limited to those expenses required to carry out the functions prescribed by the Statute.

---

[1] The earlier papers were Doc. SD/A/C.3/147, October 13, 1951, "Refugees and Stateless Persons . . ." and Doc SD/A/C.3/148, October 12, 1951, "Problems of Assistance to Refugees". (IO Files)

[2] Not printed.

4. The Delegation should oppose any proposals which involve a step-up of program operation above the general lines contemplated in the observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

5. The Delegation should oppose any action by the General Assembly looking toward the establishment of an international fund for assistance to refugees. In the event that substantial support for the establishment of an international fund for assistance to refugees should develop, the Delegation should endeavor to have action on the proposal referred to the Seventh Session of the General Assembly for consideration. If it is decided to take action at this session, the Delegation should take the following positions:

a. In the event that the High Commissioner proposes an amendment to paragraph 10 (3) of the Statute if the Office of High Commissioner for Refugees, which removes the requirement that the High Commissioner have prior approval by the General Assembly to appeal to governments or to make a general appeal for funds to be administered by his Office for the relief of refugees, the Delegation should oppose the adoption of such a proposal.

b. In the event that the High Commissioner requests authorization under paragraph 10 (3) of the Statute to appeal to governments or to make a general appeal to both governments and non-governmental organizations for funds to be administered by his Office for the relief of refugees, the Delegation should oppose such authorization.

c. If it is proposed that the General Assembly should authorize the High Commissioner to appeal to individuals and non-governmental organizations for funds, the Delegation should abstain or, if a preponderant majority appears to be in favor of the proposal, should vote affirmatively.

6. The Delegation should make clear that the United States Government continues to be concerned in the plight of refugees and hopes that the temporary migration organization established by the Brussels Conference will assist in the resettlement of many of the refugees remaining after the termination of the International Refugees Organization. The Delegation should support any proposal expressing the view that refugees within the mandate of the High Commissioner's Office should receive a fair share in any opportunities for migration which will be provided.

DISCUSSION

The Third Committee has agreed to consider simultaneously the two refugee items on its agenda:

Refugees and stateless persons:

(a) Report of the High Commissioner for Refugees

(b) Report of the Economic and Social Council Problems of assistance to refugees: reports of the International Refugee Organization and of the High Commissioner for Refugees.

The High Commissioner for Refugees, Dr. J. G. von Heuven Goedhart, had requested that the Third Committee consider these items in early December in order that its views might be available to the Fifth Committee when the latter reviewed the High Commissioner's budget. The Third Committee decided, however, not to interrupt its general debate on the Human Rights Covenant and to take up the refugee items on January 2.

The present position paper consolidates the position papers previously prepared in the Department concerning the two agenda items (SD/A/C.3/147 and 148), together with new material on the clarification requested by the High Commissioner of the statute of his office.

There follow detailed comments on each of the foregoing six recommendations.

1. The first recommendation takes account of the rather negative character of the Delegation's position and the tactical advantage of not attempting to meet head-on any general desire to increase the High Commissioner's budget or to establish an international fund for assistance to refugees.

2. The High Commissioner submitted a report to the General Assembly through ECOSOC at its Thirteenth Session (E/2036 and E/2036/Add. 1) and supplemented his report with a lengthy oral statement. ECOSOC noted the report and commended the High Commissioner for the progress made in organizing his Office. In general, the United States position is to support the efforts of the High Commissioner to facilitate the assimilation of refugees lacking a legal status pending the acquisition of citizenship on their part. The organization of effective protection involves the patient development by the High Commissioner of services for refugees in countries in which refugees are concentrated in coordination with related services to be provided by governments. For various reasons the High Commissioner has not had time as yet to develop this program and as a result will need to spend the next year in further development of the specific contribution which his Office can make to the resolution of the problem of refugees. In this basic effort, the High Commissioner will have the full support of the United States Government in order that a sound program may eventually be developed. In consequence, the United States Delegate may appropriately support a resolution noting the High Commissioner's Report and commending him for the progress made in organizing his office and initiating the work of protection for refugees.

3. The Secretary General had included in his original estimates a sum of $727,100 to cover the costs of the Headquarters Office of the High Commissioner in Geneva and the branch offices it was proposed to open during the course of 1951 and 1952.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions recommended a reduction of $227,100, or a total of $500,000. Referring to the High Commissioner's proposals concerning the establishment of branch offices, the Committee stated that it had "reached the conclusion that reasons of economy make it imperative, at any rate in the initial stages, that a far more conservative policy should be pursued and that both the number of such offices and their provisional establishment should be scaled down." The Advisory Committee pointed out the need for a clear definition of the term "administrative expenses" which, under paragragh 20 of the Statute, are to be borne on the budget of the United Nations, as well as the need to ensure that the activities of branch offices do not extend beyond what is permitted in the Statute and thus become dissimilar in nature from those performed at the Headquarters Office in Geneva.

When the High Commissioner appeared before the Third Committee to request an early consideration of the refugee items, he said that before the Fifth Committee reviewed his budget it should have the Third Committee's views on the following two questions: (1) Should the administrative expenses of branch offices be borne on the budget of the United Nations? (2) What is meant by the phrase "administrative expenses" in paragraph 20 of the Statute?

Just before the Christmas recess, the Fifth Committee, and later the Plenary, approved a provisional estimate of $500,000 for the High Commissioner's Office, on the understanding that the budget estimates would be discussed in detail at a later stage in the light of any observations on the activities of the High Commissioner which the Third Committee might wish to make.

The third recommendation is designed to meet the apparent desire of the High Commissioner to obtain the support of the Third Committee for an increase in his budget over the $500,000 recommended by the Advisory Committee. It states that the administrative expenses of both the Geneva Headquarters and the field offices, to be borne on the United Nations budget, should be limited to those expenses required to carry out the functions prescribed by the Statute. By limiting itself to this position, the Delegation need not debate in the Third Committee the number or size of the branch offices required—a matter for the Fifth Committee to consider—but need merely state that it questions whether the functions prescribed by the Statute require at this time as many posts as the High Commissioner requested. Similarly, the Delegation can avoid becoming involved in a detailed discussion of what constitutes "administrative" and "operational" expenses by adhering to a general definition of "administrative expenses"—those required to carry out the functions of the Statute.

4. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, as indicated earlier, has recommended that the $727,100 requested by the High Commissioner be reduced to $500,000. The Delegation has been instructed to support the Advisory Committee's recommendations in the Fifth Committee "unless, on individual items, the Secretary General is able to supplement his statement of October 8 with overwhelming evidence of the need for restoration". The High Commissioner may present arguments for the establishment of more liaison offices in countries where refugees reside than would be permitted by this budget. It has been the Department's view, prior to hearing further budget justifications, that this budget will prove sufficient for the orderly development of the Office in its second year, because the specific services which the High Commissioner is to render in supplementation of services to be provided refugees by the governments of residence have not yet been clarified. The foregoing budget should provide the essential requirements of the headquarters office in Geneva and liaison offices in the important countries of refugee residence.

5. The General Council of the International Refugee Organization has submitted to the General Assembly a communication (A/1948), dated November 10, 1951, on the residual problems which will remain at the termination of the activities of the IRO. The communication refers to limited numbers of refugees—in Germany, Austria, Italy, Trieste, Greece, Turkey, Spain, Portugal, the Middle East, China, and the Philippines—who face "doubtful prospects of achieving assimilation or self-maintenance in the immediate future". It states that 1,000 to 1,500 refugees are entering Germany, Austria, Turkey, Greece, Trieste, and Italy from Eastern European countries monthly. The communication concludes that the problems inherent in this situation "are so grave in terms of human suffering that they call for urgent consideration by the United Nations." (For full text of conclusions, see Annex B).

The High Commissioner, in Part III of his report to the General Assembly (E/2036/Add. 2), refers to the urgent need for relief of the remaining refugees in the countries cited by the communication of the IRO General Council. He mentions 5,000 in Shanghai, 150 in Samar, and 900 in Trieste, but does not give precise figures concerning emergency cases elsewhere. In a private conversation, the High Commissioner indicated that he felt that approximately 12,000 persons would be in need of material assistance after the termination of the IRO. In his report to the Assembly he concludes that he should be authorized to raise voluntary contributions to establish a limited relief fund to deal with the emergency needs of these residual refugees and of new refugees. (For full text of his conclusions, see Annex C).

The fifth recommendation is based upon the assumption that the United States Government will not make any further contributions for assistance to refugees. The Congress has made clear its intention in this regard, and the Department has assured Congressional leaders that it will request no further appropriations for refugee work. It is considered furthermore, that an international fund for relief purposes is not necessary, for the reasons outlined below.

Western European governments which have since World War II been accustomed to having indigent refugees on their territories assisted from international funds are reluctant at present to resume the function of assisting such refugees unilaterally. The pressure from these sources to expand the fund and to use it for a growing range of problems, will tend to increase in succeeding years.

There remain the residual United Nations refugees following the termination of IRO. The numbers of these requiring assistance are relatively small, totalling less than 100,000 in all Europe and approximately 3,000 in South East Asia and the Far East. Arrangements for the continuing care of those refugees among them who require institutional care, including their dependent relatives will be substantially completed by IRO through an expenditure of $22,000,000 for this purpose. This latter group number approximately 34,000 of the 100,000. The total group is so distributed over many countries that the burden of relief for them on the economy of any one country is not such as to justify the establishment of an international fund for their assistance.

The argument for an assistance fund may also be based on the apparent lack of international provision for the 1,000 to 1,500 refugees who are escaping monthly from Eastern Europe. These refugees consist in part of younger persons able to withstand the rigors of escape through a closely protected border. Opportunities for their emigration from Europe may soon be provided through provisions for them under international arrangements now under active discussion for moving surplus migrants out of Europe.

Anticipating the termination of IRO, the United Nations has taken steps in further efforts to resolve the problems of refugees who lack legal status. The office of High Commissioner for Refugees has been established, and a Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees has been recommended to the governments for acceptance by a diplomatic conference convened by the Nations. These steps are not considered sufficient by some governments and by segments of the general public. However, this pressure for further action by the General Assembly has not resulted in the formulation to date of specific proposals other than that an international relief fund should be provided.

It is not anticipated that the proponents of an international assistance fund will be in a position to present convincing data justifying the establishment of such a fund or a budget of relief requirements, beyond those made available by the national relief administrations of the countries of residence of refugees. In the absence of a specific program it is the United States view that action by the General Assembly should be postponed until the Seventh Session pending the development of further facts relating to the problem. In the intervening period the results of a world survey of the refugee problem, financed by the Rockefeller Foundation to the extent of $100,000, will become available. Later reports of actual experience in individual countries will also indicate particular areas where relief needs, only vaguely assumed to exist at present, may actually arise in fact. Taking into account the limited resources and funds available to the United Nations, action of this character should only be taken on the basis of clearly demonstrated needs and a clearly defined program.

6. To offset any criticism of its opposition to an appeal to governments for contributions to an international fund, the Delegation may need to refer to the continuing concern of the United States Government in the plight of refugees, as evidenced by its large contributions to UNRRA and IRO. The Delegation can point out that emergency relief is no longer necessary and that the most important need today is for emigration of surplus populations, including refugees, from the overcrowded areas of Europe. It can refer to the establishment of a temporary migration organization by the Brussels Conference as a major effort in this direction. The Delegation may find it useful to endorse the principle set forth in the recommendation of the High Commissioner's Advisory Committee on Refugees, to the effect that refugees within the mandate of his Office should receive a fair share in any opportunities which will be provided. (For full text, see Annex D).

Annex B

Communication From the General Council of the International Refugee Organization: Conclusions

(A/1948, November 10, 1951)

1. It must be borne in mind that in most of the countries mentioned above the situation of refugees coming within the mandate of the IRO is rendered precarious by the large numbers of refugees or other persons entering these areas, who, while outside the scope of the competence of the IRO, at the same time reduce considerably the opportunities of housing and employment available to refugees under the protection of the Organization.

2. In considering these residual problems for which it is not expected that satisfactory solutions will be found before the termination of IRO operations, the representatives of the Member Governments at the Eighth Session of the General Council were not prepared to present the position of their Governments as to measures which might be taken, in further efforts to resolve those problems by the General Assembly.

3. Nevertheless, they are agreed that, although the problems inherent in the situation as here set out are clearly not of sufficient magnitude to justify the maintenance of the IRO, they are so grave in terms of human suffering that they call for urgent consideration by the United Nations.

Annex C

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to the General Assembly: Part III, Conclusions

(E/2036/Add.2, November 13, 1951)

The seriousness of the situation which faces refugees within the mandate of the IRO who will not be resettled has been clearly outlined in the communication of the General Council of the IRO. The basic facts analysed in this communication cannot be denied. The constant influx of new refugees into areas from which the IRO has not been able to resettle all the refugees, coupled with the residual problems of refugees remaining in countries with their own refugee difficulties, present an urgent problem which demands the attention of the United Nations.

This problem, although it is of considerable magnitude can, in my opinion, be solved if it is divided and tackled in its component parts. There are, in my opinion, three lines of action:

1. In the first place, a limited relief fund should be established which would provide for the basic needs of certain refugee groups, such as those in the Far East and Middle East, whose conditions will be desperate after the cessation of IRO emergency relief. This fund should also be able to cope with temporary emergency situations which might arise from the influx of refugees in countries of first asylum, and could be administered by my office. I therefore request that I be authorized by the General Assembly to undertake the necessary negotiations and appeals to raise voluntary contributions for it.

2. In the second place, long-term plans should be made and methods evolved for financing and implementing economic reconstruction measures calculated to afford to residual groups some areas possibilities of a normal livelihood. Accordingly, Governments and appropriate specialized agencies should be urged to work out in close collaboration with my office all suitable plans toward that end.

3. Thirdly, that it would be desirable that those States willing make a further international effort to promote migration should consider the possibility of taking the measures necessary to ensure that refugees within the mandate of my office will receive a fair share of any opportunities for migration which will be provided.

Annex D

RECOMMENDATION ADOPTED BY THE UNITED NATIONS HIGH COMMISSIONER'S ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON REFUGEES

(A/AC.36/R.1, December 18, 1951)

The Advisory Committee, after considering the problem of assistance raised by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, is of the opinion that the drawing up of long-term plans with a view to satisfactory assimilation of refugees in the various countries of refuge is an appropriate means of contributing to the solution of the refugee problem. The Committee draws the attention of the High Commissioner to the urgent need to enter into relations with the competent organs of the United Nations for this purpose.

The Committee, aware of the continuing needs of a certain number of refugees, takes note of the High Commissioner's intention to ask the General Assembly to authorize him to open the necessary negotiations and to appeal for voluntary contributions with a view to creating a special fund for assistance to refugees in cases of urgent need.

While assimilation and integration of refugees within their countries of present residence must be the aim, the committee considers that in present circumstances migration is an appropriate means of contributing to the solution of the refugee problem. The Committee agrees with the opinion expressed by the High Commissioner that it would be desirable that those states willing to make a further international effort to promote migration should consider the possibility of taking the measures necessary to ensure that refugees within the mandate of his Office will receive a fair share in any opportunities for migration which will be provided.

320/1–252 : Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

RESTRICTED
PRIORITY

PARIS, January 2, 1952—6 p. m.

Delga 814. Position paper SD/A/C.3/147,[1] para 3, recommends USGADel oppose authorization for High Commissioner for Refugees appeal to govts or make general appeal for funds. Staff recommends that, if proposed, GA authorize HC appeal only to individuals and NGO's would help counteract effect of USGADel negative position on (1) appeal to govts and on (2) sizeable increase in HC's budget.

Advise soonest. Vote may be taken January 4 or 5.

ROOSEVELT

[1] See footnote 1, p. 822.

IO Files

Minutes of Thirty-eighth Meeting of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly, Paris, January 3, 1952

SECRET

US/A/M(Chr)/225

[Here follows list of persons (40) present. Mrs. Roosevelt was in the chair.]

1. Refugee Items before Committee Three [US/A/C.3/341 [1]].

Mr. Green described the general situation in Committee Three by saying that there were really two related items being considered at once. The first was a more general one and concerned the report of the High Commissioner for Refugees, Dr. J. G. von Heuven Goedhart. The second involved a proposal for creating an international assistance fund for refugees to care for those remaining after IRO was terminated. Because of the obvious relationship between these two items the Third Committee was taking them up together.

The staff had combined the two earlier position papers on these items, together with new material on recent developments, into a single document which was before the Delegation as US/A/C.3/341. Mr. Goedhart had wished to take up his report earlier in the session in order to have had Committee Three action on it completed before Committee Three undertook the budgetary aspects of it. It had not been possible to accede to his request, so Committee Five had included an item for $500,000 in the budget without prejudice to future action they might take pending receipt of Committee Three's report. $300,000 had been allocated to the Commissioner for 1951, and he was now asking for $727,000 for 1952. The Advisory Committee had reduced this amount to $500,000, and had questioned the number and size of the branch offices of the High Commissioner's office. They felt these branches to be overstaffed and could not agree that over one half the Commissioner's budget should go for these expenditures. Admittedly this involved an interpretation of paragraph 20 of the Statute of the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees. Quoting paragraph 8, sub (c) and (d), the Advisory Committee had said that clarification was needed in regard to the legitimate administrative expenditures which could be made for branch offices, in order to assure that the activities of these offices conformed to those of the main office.

In his formal introduction on the previous day, Dr. Goedhart had avoided the administrative question. He had confined his presentation to a request for an endorsement in general terms by the Committee of the need for branch offices. He had referred in this connection to

[1] Dated January 2, p. 822.

League of Nations experience, which indicated the necessity of having branch offices. Recommendation 3 of the position paper, US/A/C.3/341, had tried to anticipate these ideas of the Commissioner, with a view to keeping Committee 3 out of this particular wrangle. The recommendation was that the US support the position that branch offices are a proper charge upon the UN budget but that their activities should be limited to those allowed in the Statute of the Commissioner's Office. Mr. Green felt that we might become involved in a debate on this question, but that it would be wisest to place the matter in the hands of Committee Five, to decide how much money would properly be required.

Mr. Green said that the second problem before the Committee was the more difficult one. This dealt with the question of assistance to refugees after IRO went out of existence early this year. The General Council of the IRO had been asked for an opinion on the remaining problems in the field of refugees after the end of IRO. These were set forth in a communication, the conclusions of which were annexed to the position paper. The IRO had settled over one million people, and had cared for 40,000 others, but still others would remain uncared for when IRO ceased to function. These were set forth in a list. The General Council concluded in paragraph 3 of the conclusions that this situation did not justify the retention of the IRO, but did call for immediate attention in some other way.

Dr. Goedhart had used this conclusion as a springboard in his presentation to ask for an international assistance fund to aid the remaining refugees—some 200 in the Philippines, 2,000 in Shanghai, 400 tuberculosis cases in Trieste, and others. He asked for $3,000,000 for 1952 to care for these people after considering IRO experience and in view of the continuing flow of escapees from behind the Iron Curtain. He proposed that the money be spent through private or public agencies other than his own office. To raise the necessary amount he suggested an appeal to governments. This could not be done consistent with the terms of paragraph 10 of the Statute of his office without the approval of the General Assembly. A resolution was now being drafted to this effect.

In paragraph 5 of the position paper before the Delegation Mr. Green indicated that the recommendation was to oppose the creation of an international fund for assistance to refugees. The idea behind this recommendation was that there was no real need for a special fund. The number of persons concerned was small and those people should be cared for by the states in whose territory they were to be found. Otherwise, the UN would be receiving annual and ever increasing appeals from the High Commissioner's Office for items of that sort. This would have the effect of cutting into bigger UN relief programs such as Palestine, Korea, and UNICEF. In addition UN prestige might conceivably be decreased if the responses anticipated by Dr. Goedhart were not forthcoming. The US Congress had made its position quite clear that it would not again give funds for refugees. The Department was committed not to ask Congress for such funds. If the proposal were adopted by the Assembly, the Department would be placed in a delicate position in view of the moral force of a resolution adopted by the Assembly.

In paragraph 5 of the position paper a certain amount of flexibility was preserved. The recommendation was that if the appeal for money for the international assistance fund were limited to private organizations and individuals, the Delegation would abstain or, if a preponderant majority appeared to favor such a course, vote in favor. The staff had requested authorization from the Department on this position.

Mr. Green mentioned that the appeal by the High Commissioner had made a big impression on the other delegations in Committee 3, and indications were that many states—including the British Commonwealth and Western Europe—would support a resolution authorizing the Commissioner to make his appeal to both governments and private sources, while recognizing the fact that they were not committing their governments to making any contribution. $3,000,000 did not seem like too large a sum for the work proposed to be done. This was the same problem the Delegation had been faced with in regard to UNICEF, when 51 states had voted in favor of the appeal, none had opposed, and only the US and Thailand had abstained. A similar situation could arise again.

In addition Mr. Green noted that there seemed to be no enthusiasm for limiting the appeal to non-governmental sources. Dr. Goedhart himself was not favorably inclined to such a limitation. He wanted to be able to approach governments with the moral authority of a General Assembly recommendation behind him.

Mr. Green noted that the first and last paragraphs of the position paper dealt with tactics. The US should avoid active leadership on this item and should try to give special emphasis to the new migration body created by the recent Brussels Conference. This organization would be able to assist in the general area. The paper suggested the tactic of having this appeal postponed to the following year, but he was not hopeful that this could be accomplished.

In summarizing this matter, Mr. Green stated that the recommendation with regard to the budgetary problem was that the US support the High Commissioner's contention that branch offices were necessary, but that their expenditures should be limited to those allowed by the Statute of the Office of the High Commissioner. In regard to an international fund for assisting refugees, the most that could be hoped for would be to limit the appeal proposed by the Commissioner to non-governmental sources, or vote in favor if the overwhelming support of all other delegations developed. He suggested that the Delegation consider the type of tactics that should be employed in this latter matter.

Mrs. Roosevelt thought it was unwise for the head of an organization to go around to governments asking for funds when there was no budget indicating exactly how they would be spent. At the same time she recognized that Dr. Goedhart's appeal for $3,000,000 was not excessive. She mentioned that Dr. Goedhart had pointed a finger at the US. It was over our Voice of America radio that we were asking people to flee from behind the Iron Curtain, and then when they did escape, we put them in camps and tried to persuade them to join the Western armed forces. Otherwise they were not taken care of by us. She recalled that Radio Free Europe had been able to get a special fund from the Ford Foundation because of the fact that they had been able to persuade people to flee from Iron Curtain countries and then had no facilities for taking care of them. This whole question put the US in a highly delicate and embarrassing position. She doubted whether anything the Delegation or the Department could do would cause Congress to be generous in this regard. At the same time the US would be placing itself in a highly unpopular position vis-à-vis other delegations if it turned out that we were the only ones in opposition to this proposal. She felt certain that $3,000,000 could be raised from private sources very easily.

Mrs. Roosevelt mentioned that there had been considerable lack of confidence in many of the people Dr. Goedhart had gathered around him. She recommended telling him that the reason we and other government could not support him fully, was because of a lack of trust in his personnel. She honestly feared, however, that US opposition in this case would be entirely alone.

Mr. Sandifer thought that the Department's position was basically sound. Although the facts cited by the Commissioner were highly appealing, the proportions were such that each individual state should take care of those cases within its borders. A loose, open-ended appeal of the type proposed by Dr. Goedhart was not sound. Only a limited amount of money and goodwill existed in the world. To dissipate it, so that places like Korea did not receive the necessary share, would be unwise. In addition, Mr. Sandifer pointed out that the Department had given a written assurance to Senators McCarran and McKellar that there would be no more appeals for funds for the IRO or a successor organization. The only apparent exception to this had to do with the Migration Group created by the Brussels Conference. In fact, this was a different case, and did not deal with refugees per se. He suggested that the Delegation consider stating specifically to the Department what the situation was and asking them for the authority to abstain if the parliamentary situation required it in view of the various political factors involved. Mrs. Roosevelt asked about the migration organization. Mr. Sandifer said that this group would not touch the refugee situation for which Dr. Goedhart wanted to make his appeal. Mrs. Roosevelt thought there might be some escapees from behind the Iron Curtain who could qualify for migration and thus could be helped by the new organization. Mr. Sandifer said there might be a few but the new group was not essentially connected with refugees. The trouble was, in his opinion, that Dr. Goedhart was too "good-hearted" and could not be relied upon to keep to the limitations prescribed for his office.

Mr. Lubin suggested telling Dr. Goedhart what the US position was vis-à-vis Congress, and that we would not publicly oppose his appeal if he would assure us that in the US he would only raise money through private sources. In return the Department could place at his disposal all the available services for raising money for foreign causes within the US. Mrs. Roosevelt said that she had told Dr. Goedhart not that he could not go to Congress himself, but only that he might be most successful in the US seeking funds from private organizations like the Ford Foundation. She did raise with him the question of why his Office's branch office was established in Washington rather than in New York where all the large private fund raising organizations were located. She felt that he was very honest and would try to do his best with his administration, but she agreed with Mr. Sandifer that his heart was too easily and too often touched.

Ambassador Jessup suggested that the US could make a strong statement along the line that authorizing an appeal to be made was not agreeing to support that appeal with a contribution. He favored the middle course advocated by Mr. Sandifer. Senator Cooper recalled the original IRO resolution, and the questions that had then been raised. He thought that Mr. Goedhart should be allowed to make his appeal so long as he understood the attitude Congress took. He did not favor Mr. Lubin's idea of making a deal with the High Commissioner. Mr. Cohen agreed fully with Senator Cooper.

In summarizing the views that had been thus far expressed, Mrs. Roosevelt understood Ambassador Jessup and Mr. Sandifer to favor an abstention if the Department would authorize it. She understood Senator Cooper and Mr. Cohen to favor voting for the appeal while clearly stating that it must be made to private sources. Ambassador Sayre endorsed the stand taken by Senator Cooper and Mr. Cohen. Ambassador Jessup said that if we argued that we were willing to let Dr. Goedhart try to raise the money, but that Congress cannot appropriate any money for this fund, we could state that we could not vote in favor of an appeal to governments but would abstain and, if the appeal were limited to private sources we would vote in favor. Mr. Sandifer wanted to be sure the Delegation received the proper instructions from the Department. Mrs. Roosevelt agreed with Ambassador Jessup's suggestion. Mr. Cohen wondered as to what stand the Delegation would take if the resolution authorized an appeal both to private and governmental sources. He thought we would only favor for ourselves the private appeal but for others, if they were willing, a governmental appeal was all right. Mr. Sandifer and Mrs. Roosevelt both felt that we should abstain on such a combined appeal.

Mr. Ross strongly sympathized with the ideas expressed by Senator Cooper and Mr. Cohen, but felt it politically unwise for the US to vote in favor of an appeal which the US would not follow through on. He suggested not voting in favor of the resolution if an appeal to governments was at all involved. Mr. Sandifer made it clear that there was no change in his feeling that an appeal to governments was unsound, but for political reasons he would acquiesce in an abstention. He felt that getting an authorization for even this would be difficult. Mrs. Roosevelt agreed with Mr. Sandifer.

Dr. Tobias asked if the US would be all alone in opposition to the proposed appeal. Mrs. Roosevelt answered that only the Soviets and the US appeared to oppose it at the present time. She recalled that the pattern of US voting in the past had been not to vote in favor of any matter in which we were convinced that the US Government would not follow through. She thought it best to continue to follow this pattern. Hence she was inclined to favor asking the Department for authorization to abstain, but to be able to vote for a resolution which proposed an appeal limited to private sources. Since there were no further comments, it was so decided.

CHARLES D. COOK

320/1–352 : Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

RESTRICTED NIACT PARIS, January 3, 1952—3 p. m.

828. Re refugee items. Del decided at meeting today to urge Dept to authorize del to abstain rather than vote against proposed general appeal to govts NGO's and individuals for three million dollar assistance fund to aid sick and destitute emergency refugee cases.

Del feels strongly that preliminary [parliamentary?] situation in Third Comite calls for an abstention rather than negative vote on this fund. Del recognizes weaknesses of proposed appeal for funds. However, it now appears that US is isolated in Third Comite with perhaps only one or two other dels and Sov bloc in opposition to fund. US has privately stated to number of dels its opposition to establishment of fund. UK, for example, has informed us of intent to support authorizing UN High Commissioner for Refugees to institute general appeal for funds since it does not feel that GA shld oppose an appeal for funds to assist emergency destitute and such cases along limited scope proposed. Commonwealth countries being influenced by this view of UK. Denmark, Neth and Belg prepared take lead in sponsoring resolution for fund. Latin Amer, Far East and Middle East countries likely in any event support fund in view its consistent opposition UN refugee functions.

Del feels that in view over-all political situation in GA, it wld be unwise weaken US position other subjects by outright opposition to appeal in third comite. It does not appear that limited scope of appeal warrants such drastic position. In abstaining, USDel wld explain there is no prospect US Govt contribution to proposed fund.

This tel supersedes Delga 814.[1] Not likely that situation in third comite will permit vote by USDel limiting appeal to only individuals and NGO's. Del recommends, however, that it be authorized to vote affirmatively in event appeal limited to individuals and NGO's. As in case of broader appeal this appeal wld also have wide support in third comite.

In view termination IRO communication from IRO General Council of Oct 27, 1951 that current problems inherent in refugee situation "so grave in terms of human suffering that they call for urgent consideration by the United Nations" and moderate scope of proposed fund, deferment of this question found impractical at this session GA. Dept's views needed urgently since vote scheduled Friday January 4.

ROOSEVELT

[1] Dated January 2, p. 830.

320/1–352 : Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

RESTRICTED
NIACT

PARIS, January 3, 1952—3 p. m.

Delga 829. For Hickerson and Warren [1] from Sandifer. I want to emphasize in strongest terms political necessity for approving USGADel's request for authorization to abstain on Goedhart's proposal for assistance fund (Delga 828 [2]). Specific and limited character of Goedhart's proposal as presented Comite Three makes abstention possible without stultifying our basic position. In peculiar political atmosphere this GA, USGADel cannot afford loss of good will and prestige involved in voting in very small minority perhaps of one against limited and popular Goedhart proposal. [Sandifer.]

[1] George L. Warren, Adviser on Refugees and Displaced Persons.
[2] Dated January 3, supra.

ROOSEVELT

320/1–352 : Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

SECRET PARIS, January 3, 1952—8 p. m.

Delga 836. Re USGADel decisions mtg 3 Jan. Re Comite Three refugee items. In view support by practically all other dels except Sov bloc for proposal to authorize commissioner appeal to govts and private sources for international assistance fund, and of polit disadvantages of our opposition, agreed request authorization from Dept (a) abstain on proposal for general appeal to govts and private sources but (b) vote in favor of appeal if it is limited to only private sources. Del wld make clear in comite that del not in position to commit govt with respect to contribution to fund. (See separate tel.)

ROOSEVELT

320/1–352 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin)

RESTRICTED PARIS, January 3, 1952—4 : 52 p. m.

PRIORITY

Gadel 581. Re Delga 828 and 829 January 3 you are auth ur discretion to abstain on Res Third Comite auth HC appeal for asst funds.

ACHESON

320/1–452 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin)

SECRET WASHINGTON, January 4, 1952—5 : 21 p. m.

PRIORITY

Gadel 591. Re Gadel 581 Jan 3 fol considerations re Goedhart request for relief funds may prove helpful in event USDel decides its discretion intervene discussion this subj.

Auth to appeal for funds even in modest amount requested will estab principle acceptance by UN of responsibility for providing relief refugees. Problems presented by Goedhart are permanent rather than temp in character and therefore UN assumption this responsibility will involve permanent obligation. Proposal is based on assumption that because IRO provided such relief UN shld cont relief as required. IRO was temp agency set up to deal with internatl postwar problem. Problem now posed by Goedhart is basically one involving adequacy of relief measures of individual govts for very ltd nrs refugees remaining their territories. Situations described do not impose such burdens on individual govts as to justify application internatl funds. However all Eur govts welcome opportunity transfer their normal relief responsibilities to refugees to internatl fund and demands on fund will grow substantially in fol years. Plea that govts concerned suffer econ distress hardly justifies internatl action when such small nrs involved. Before auth is granted HC might be requested confer with govts concerned to determine their willingness accept responsibility supply relief required by special measures if necessary. This admittedly impractical in China where largest nr refugees involved Goedhart proposals located. Relief refugees China raises question policy in sending hard currency behind Iron Curtain for relief persons whose resettlement any other area has proved impossible partly because suspected security risks. Furthermore view lack responsible organ Shanghai to admin funds locally no assurance funds will be properly used. Subsidization vol agencies while justified in IRO efforts make permanent arrangements for hard core and to facilitate maximum resettlement difficult refugees cases shld be carefully reexamined as matter of policy in light permanent nature residue refugee situations.

Auth requested Delga 836 Jan 3 granted. Ltr fol.

ACHESON

320/1–452 : Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

PARIS, January 4, 1952.
[Received January 4—2 : 01 p. m.]

Delga 852. Re refugees. Following is joint draft res Colombia, Netherlands, UK, Uruguay and Yugo on problems of assistance to refugees submitted in Comite Three document A/C 3/L 199.

Colombia, Netherlands, United Kingdom, Uruguay and Yugoslavia joint draft resolution:

"The GA

"1. Takes note of part I (1) and part II (2) of the annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees submitted through the ECOSOC to the GA in accordance with paragraph 11 of his statute;

"2. Expresses its satisfaction at the conclusion of the convention relating to the status of refugees;

"3. Invites member states and nonmember states which have demonstrated their interest in the solution of the refugee problem to become parties to that convention as soon as possible;

"4. Reiterates its call upon governments to cooperate with the High Commissioner as recommended in its resolution 428 (V)."

[ROOSEVELT]

320/1–452: Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

PARIS, January 4, 1952.

[Received January 4—7: 45 p. m.]

Delga 854. Re refugees. Following is draft resolution submitted by Byelorussia on problems of assistance to refugees in Comite 3 document A/C 3/L 201.

Sixth session Third Committee agenda items 30 and 31 refugees and stateless persons and problems of assistance to refugees Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic: Draft resolution refugees and stateless persons:

"GA

"Notes the failure of the Governments of the US, the UK, France and other countries to implement its resolution 8 (I) of 12 February 1946 on encouraging and assisting the early return of the displaced persons to their countries of origin,

"Condemns the policy which was pursued by the IRO and is being continued by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and which is designed to substitute for repatriation the forced resettlement of displaced persons in other countries,

"Condemns as incompatible with the principles of the United Nations Charter and with the accepted practice of international law, the attempts by certain member states, and primarily by the US by all possible means to recruit displaced persons for subversive and diversionary activities in the territory of the USSR and the peoples democracies,

"1. Recommends to the governments of the above-mentioned countries and to the governments of other countries in whose territories there are still refugees and displaced persons, that they should take steps to implement the above-mentioned resolution so as to complete the repatriation of the displaced persons and refugees to their countries of origin during 1952,

"2. Proposes to the governments of the states members of the United Nations in whose territories there are refugees and displaced persons to submit to the Secretariat of the United Nations full information regarding the refugees and displaced persons in their territories."

ROOSEVELT

320/1–452 : Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

PARIS, January 4, 1952.
[Received January 4—7 : 33 p. m.]

Delga 855. Re refugees. Following is joint draft resolution (Colombia, Denmark, Lebanon, Netherlands, New Zealand, UK, Uruguay) on problems of assistance to refugees submitted in Comite 3 document A/C 3/L 200. Communications: Sixth session Third Committee items 30 and 31 refugees and stateless persons and problems of assistance to refugees Colombia, Denmark, Lebanon, Netherlands, New Zealand, United Kingdom, Uruguay: Joint draft resolution.

"The GA

"Taking note of the communication of the International Refugee Organization on residual problems, (3) and the observations of the High Commissioner for Refugees contained in Part III (4) of his report on the problem of assistance submitted in accordance with Resolution 430 (V) of the GA;

"Having noted the serious unsolved problems which in certain areas will face refugees who will not have been repatriated or resettled by the end of the operations of the IRO;

"1. Authorizes the High Commissioner, under paragraph 10 of his statute, to issue an appeal for funds for the purpose of enabling emergency aid to be given to the most needy groups among refugees within his mandate;

"2. Recommends all states directly affected by the refugee problem, as well as the appropriate specialized agencies of the UN and other intergovernmental agencies concerned, to pay special attention to this problem (when drawing up and executing programmes of economic reconstruction and development), and requests the High Commissioner to contribute to the promotion of activities in this field;

"3. Appeals to states interested in migration to take measures to ensure that refugees within the mandate of the High Commissioner benefit from projects to promote migration."

Note: (3) A/1948
(4) E/2036/add 2/E/2036/add 2/corr 1 (not French and Russian) E/2036/add 2/corr/2.

ROOSEVELT

Editorial Note

For the proceedings of the Third Committee regarding the several refugee items, January 2–14, 1952, see GA (VI), Third Committee, pages 151–233. The documentation of these proceedings is found in GA (VI), Annexes, fascicule for agenda item 30 and agenda item 31. For the proceedings in the General Assembly, February 2, 1952, see GA (VI), Plenary, pages 480–484. The General Assembly adopted two resolutions. Resolution 538 (VI) had two parts: Part A noted the General Assembly's satisfaction at the conclusion of the refugee status convention and invited governments to become parties to the convention "as soon as possible": Part B of the resolution authorized the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees "to issue an appeal for funds for the purpose of enabling emergency aid to be given to the most needy groups among refugees within his mandate." The other resolution, Resolution 539 (VI), simply postponed consideration of the draft protocol relating to stateless persons until the next regular session of the General Assembly. For the texts of these two resolutions, see GA (VI), Resolutions, page 35.

V. THE QUESTION OF THE TREATMENT OF PEOPLE OF INDIAN ORIGIN IN THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA

IO Files

Department of State Instruction to the United States Delegation to the Sixth Regular Session of the General Assembly

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] September 20, 1951.

SD/A/C.1/360

TREATMENT OF INDIANS IN THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA

THE PROBLEM

The problem is to determine the United States position with respect to the question of the treatment of Indians in South Africa at the Sixth Session of the General Assembly.

RECOMMENDATION

1. Although the United States delegation should not take the initiative in proposing a resolution, its preferred position should be to support a resolution, noting efforts of the United Nations in the past to promote respect for and observance of human rights generally and its efforts to solve this particular problem; noting the failure of the parties to enter into negotiations; and calling upon them to reopen discussions. The delegation should actively oppose any move to have this question placed automatically on the agenda of the Seventh Session of the General Assembly.

2. The delegation should determine in the light of the circumstances prevailing at the Assembly the degree of participation, if any, which the United States should have in this question, keeping in mind that the United States is interested in this item principally as a leading Member of the United Nations which enjoys friendly relations with both parties and which has pursued a policy of active cooperation in United Nations efforts to promote universal observance of human rights.

3. In private consultations with other delegations the United States should encourage any appropriate initiative by other states and particularly by members of the British Commonwealth designed to achieve increased cooperation between the parties and to reduce the hazard of a clash over color policies which will redound to the disadvantage of the Western democracies.

4. In the event that substantial support develops for a more far-reaching resolution the United States delegation should attempt in private conversations to moderate any proposed condemnatory action. If, however, a resolution similar to 395 (V) of December 2, 1950 is proposed and secures substantial support the delegation should vote in favor of all sections of such a resolution which state our belief in the responsibility of United Nations Members to promote respect for an observance of human rights, and which recommend the resumption of talks and the utilization, if necessary, of an agency of the United Nations to aid the parties in this regard.

The United States should explain our position by reiterating the views expressed by the United States delegate in the General Assembly in the past along the following lines:

". . . it is the part of statesmanship to proceed cautiously in this delicate field of human rights and fundamental freedoms, which may create serious repercussions on sensitive domestic policies. Without closing the doors to the progressive development of international law in this field, certainly at this stage of our constitutional development, the Assembly should devote itself primarily to finding ways and means of composing differences and securing universal acceptance and observance of common standards of human rights and fundamental freedoms. At this stage in view of the serious constitutional issues involved we should exercise the greatest self-restraint . . .".

5. If the resolution consists of provisions along the foregoing lines the delegation should vote in favor of the resolution as a whole. If the resolution goes beyond these provisions the delegation should consult the Department for further instructions.

COMMENT

This question, involving the complaint of India against the discriminatory treatment of some 250,000 nationals of the Union of South Africa of Indian extraction, was considered by the General Assembly in 1946, 1947, 1949 and 1950 without settlement. In the course of the Spring Session in 1949 the Assembly adopted a resolution (265 (III)) inviting the Governments of India, Pakistan and the Union of South Africa to enter into discussions at a round table conference, taking into consideration the purposes and principles of the Charter and the Declaration of Human Rights. As a result of correspondence between the parties, during the fall and winter of 1949, a preliminary conference was held in February 1950 at Capetown to discuss the agenda for a proposed Round Table Conference. The three Governments agreed on the inclusion of two concrete items of the agenda: (1) reduction of the Indian population of South Africa (proposed by South Africa); and (2) removal of political, social and economic disabilities of South African nationals of Indo-Pakistan origin and the provision of opportunities for their fullest development (proposed jointly by India and Pakistan).

Towards the end of April of that year, however, the Union Government introduced in Parliament the Group Areas Bill, which would establish in the Union additional areas of exclusive occupation or ownership on a racial basis. This bill was regarded by the Indians and Pakistani as an extension of apartheid (policy of segregation) and therefore prejudicial to negotiations on the basis of the agreed to agenda.

The Governments of India and Pakistan requested the Government of the Union of South Africa to postpone executive action under the Asiatic Land Tenure Amendment Act of 1949 and the enactment of the Group Areas Bill until the Round Table Conference had been held. The Government of the Union of South Africa refused to accede to these requests and the Group Areas Bill was approved by the Parliament.

The Indians believed a Round Table Conference under these conditions would be one-sided and could provide no solution for the problem. In July 1950, the Government of India, therefore, refused to proceed with the conference and placed the question of the treatment of Indians in South Africa on the agenda of the Fifth Session, requesting the General Assembly to take note of these facts and take appropriate steps to ensure that the treatment of Indians in South Africa would conform to the principles and purposes of the Charter and the Declaration of Human Rights.

During the Fifth Session, the General Assembly passed a resolution (A/1604 of December 4, 1950) which recalled the previous history of this case and the Declaration of Human Rights. It recommended that the parties proceed with the holding of a Round Table Conference, on the basis of their agreed agenda. In the event that the parties failed to do so before April 1, 1951, or to reach agreement at the Round Table Conference within a reasonable time, it provided that there be established for the purpose of assisting the parties, a Commission of three members, one member nominated by each party and the third nominated by the other two members. In default of agreement between the two members to select a third the Secretary General was to appoint the third member. In addition, the resolution called upon the governments to refrain from taking any steps which would prejudice the negotiations and in particular for South Africa to refrain from the implementation of the Group Areas Act. The resolution automatically placed the question on the agenda of the Sixth Session.

In the Spring of 1951, there was an exchange of correspondence between the parties. The Government of India inquired of the Union of South Africa if it were willing to participate in a Round Table Conference in accordance with the terms of the General Assembly's resolution. The Union of South Africa stated that although it was willing to enter negotiations on the basis of the previously agreed agenda, it was not able to accept the General Assembly resolution as a basis for the Round Table Conference. The terms of that resolution constituted, in its opinion, an intervention in a matter which is essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the Union. In addition, the Union of South Africa found the establishment of the three-member commission unacceptable.

On April 12, the Representative of India transmitted copies of its correspondence with the Union of South Africa on this subject to SYG Lie. There have been no further negotiations between the parties on the question. The Government of the Union of South Africa has begun the implementation of the Group Areas Bill and the designation of restricted areas, though not complete, is progressing.

320/12–451 : Telegram

The United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL PARIS, December 4, 1951—10 p. m.

Delga 504. Re Indians in South Africa. Miss Strauss[1] who will handle this item is thinking of throwing out following idea in her comite statement without making any formal proposal:

Americans and other people have had experience in dealing with racial problems. We in US have made considerable progress and there is number of outstanding citizens who have done great deal of thinking and work in this field. Perhaps Union of South Africa on one hand and India and Pakistan on other could agree to select one of three men who would act entirely in private capacity and help parties to get together again for the purpose of discussing their differences.

Would appreciate Dept's reaction to this idea. This item scheduled to come up following German item which now in Comite V.

AUSTIN

[1] Anna Lord Strauss, Alternate Representative on the United States Delegation to the General Assembly. (Nota Bene: In the United States system of representation on organs of the United Nations, Alternate Representatives had the same status as Representatives.)

320/12–451 : Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin)

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, December 5, 1951—7:02 p. m.

Gadel 352. Re Delga 505 [504], Indians in South Africa. Practical value of idea using any third party would be as reserve, compromise suggestion if extreme proposals eventuate, but Dept doubts its acceptability to all three parties even in those circumstances.

Dept sees fol additional drawbacks:

1. Only task third party wld be as stated ref tel, to help parties get together and not become involved substance of question. For such limited, catalytic purpose, racial expert not necessary and probably undesirable.
2. US has consistently urged UK carry ball in this Commonwealth dispute. Suggested idea wld tend relieve them this responsibility, leaving US in unprofitable position holding bag for likely failure.
3. Putting US forward for such role wld open way for propaganda counter charges by unfriendly states re racial situation in US to confusion basic issue.

WEBB

320/12–851 : Telegram

The United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL PARIS, December 8, 1951—5 p. m.

Delga 569. Indians in South Africa. Taking into account Dept's Gadel 352, Dec 5, Miss Strauss suggests and staff concurs with inclusion of fol para in her brief statement:

"Perhaps we need at this moment the moral leadership of a personality in whom the parties have confidence—one person above political controversies who can help bring them together. This has led to resolving of the most difficult controversies in the past. Parties in dispute who seriously wish to seek understanding and agreement for their own and the common good have often had recourse to this method. It is a method which men often prefer because it gives them a chance to preserve their self-respect while they seek to achieve a mutual accommodation in practical arrangements. I emphasize this idea because I believe so strongly in the method of conciliation."

AUSTIN

320/12–851 : Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin)

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, December 10, 1951—6:40 p. m.

Gadel 402. Dept agrees inclusion para on Indians in South Africa quoted in Delga 569 on basis it not formal proposal and so not in conflict with position paper recommendations.

Dept suggests substitution "assistance" for "leadership" in first sentence; deletion "the most" from second sentence; change in penultimate sentence phrase "to preserve their self-respect while they seek" to "in a calm objective atmosphere".

WEBB

IO Files

Minutes of Thirty-first Meeting of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly, Paris, December 12, 1951

SECRET

US/A/M(Chr)/218

[Here follows list of persons (40) present. Mrs. Roosevelt was in the chair. The agenda item was "Indians in South Africa (SD/A/C.1/360, Delgas 504 and 569, Gadels 352 and 402)".]

Mr. Meeker opened a discussion of this case with a brief history of the immigration of peoples of Indian origin to the territory of South Africa. He referred to the coming to power of the Malan government with its stringent racial policies. There were three difficulties which the people of Indian origin faced in the Union. Rigorous laws restricted their right to hold property in many areas. Civil liberties were severely curtailed. Finally, the policies of the Malan government included an extreme form of segregation, called apartheid, as promulgated in the Group Areas Act.

The United Nations history of this case dated back to 1946 when the Indians first brought their complaint to the Assembly. They originally based this complaint on: (a) certain agreements between the South African Government and the British Government of India which allegedly bound the former to grant proper treatment to people of Indian origin residing in South Africa; and (b) provisions in the Charter guaranteeing respect for human rights. This case had been brought up in succeeding years. Beginning in 1949 the Indians dropped the first ground and relied solely on the human rights provisions of the Charter. The Department had made a study of the legal grounds alleged by the Indians in regard to their first claim, and found no justification for holding that the South African Government was bound by previous agreement with the British vis-à-vis the present Indian government.

At the fifth General Assembly a resolution had been adopted calling for the South Africans to confer with the Indians and Pakistani in an attempt to resolve their differences. This resolution recommended that a conference be held on the basis of an agenda to which the parties had previously agreed. The previous year the Indians and Pakistani had asked that the South African Government suspend the implementation of the Group Areas Act pending the outcome of negotiations. This the South Africans had refused to do, although an agenda had been agreed upon. The fifth General Assembly wanted the parties to go ahead from there. A Commission was to be appointed consisting of one representative for both India and Pakistan and one for the South Africans, and a third to be chosen by the first two, or in default of agreement, by the United Nations Secretary General. South Africa refused to negotiate on the basis of the General Assembly action, maintaining that to do so would be accepting interference by the United Nations with its domestic affairs, in violation of Article 2(7) of the Charter. They agreed to negotiate, but outside the framework of the United Nations. They had indicated that appointment of a United Nations commission under the resolution was not acceptable to the Union.

Mr. Meeker turned to the position paper which was before the Delegation in document SD/A/C.1/360. There it was suggested that the United States not take the initiative in proposing a resolution, but support one which would note the previous efforts of the United Nations to obtain observance of human rights generally and in particular with regard to this problem, which would note the previous failure of the parties to enter into negotiations, and would call upon them to re-open discussions. The Department did not want the action this year to provide for automatic inclusion of the item on the agenda of the seventh General Assembly. At the same time the United States should seek to have the members of the British Commonwealth take the appropriate initiative in this case.

Mr. Meeker reported that the Indians wanted a commission created by this session of the Assembly, even if it were necessary for the General Assembly to appoint a representative for the Union Government. He added that they did not seem to have thought the whole problem through carefully, and did not appear to know exactly where they wanted to, or would, come out as a result.

Mr. Meeker referred to an exchange of telegrams between the Delegation and the Department, set forth in Delgas 504 and 569, and Gadels 352 and 402, in which the question was considered of including a suggestion that some prominent personality be called upon by mutual agreement of the parties to help them compose their differences. From the exchange it was obvious that the Department did not want the Delegation to take the lead in this matter. The Department did, however, concur with a new formulation of this suggestion which would keep it on an informal basis, not as a proposal, and therefore within the terms of the position paper. Miss Strauss added that it was hoped that other delegations might take up this idea and themselves come forward with a proposal along these lines.

Mrs. Roosevelt asked why it was that we felt it necessary to be soft with the South Africans. Mr. Sandifer said that the United States had long considered this as a problem primarily of the Commonwealth. The United States had so often taken the lead in various problems within the United Nations that it was highly appropriate for the Commonwealth to assume the responsibility in this case. At the last General Assembly, he recalled, Senator Lodge had taken a vigorous part in this item and had helped in formulating a strong resolution. Mrs. Roosevelt felt that Senator Lodge had not wanted the United Nations to be too soft with the South Africans. She pointed out that this problem was not solely domestic, but had international implications. It involved the feelings of many people around the world. She thought that we should be, and were not, giving our support to those elements within South Africa who were fighting the Group Areas Act and the policies it stood for. Mr. Laugier, formerly Assistant Secretary General of the United Nations for Social Affairs, was circulating a pamphlet which virtually implied that this sort of inattention to vital problems was what was bringing Communism to many areas of the world.

Mr. Sandifer pointed out that there was a close relation between this case and that of the South West African problem. It also affected our general relations with the Government of South Africa. The Indians had not "come into court with clean hands" in this case. Furthermore, in other matters, South Africa had given us wholehearted support, whereas India, as had happened in Committee Five the last two days, virtually "slaps us in the face." Mr. Maffitt recalled that when the trial of Cardinal Mindszenty was brought up in the United Nations debates, the United States had taken the position with the Latin Americans that our opposition to it was based on the violation of the human rights clauses in the peace treaties and not in the Charter.

Miss Strauss liked Mrs. Roosevelt's ideas favoring encouragement of those moderate elements within South Africa which might succeed in getting the upper hand.

Mr. Cohen said that we should be careful to distinguish between the views we express as to our feelings in this or other cases, and the question of taking initiative when we do not know exactly where it would lead us. He cautioned against taking an attitude of restraining our expression of feelings in important matters like the present one. In long-range terms of our struggle with the Soviets, our position should be clear and unequivocal, so no one could question our motives. When the moment arrives that we have to decide whether one resolution or another most appropriately will achieve the ends we seek, and we have to choose one over another, no one could then question our general feelings on the subject matter, or our position of fighting for the observance of human rights. We should avoid the kind of position the United Kingdom often takes, in being firmly against Iron Curtain violations of human rights, but abstaining on questions which involve the Commonwealth. He also commented that in the Mindszenty case the United States by no means excluded the United Nations Charter as a basis for Assembly action.

Senator Cooper thought that last year the question had been one of what type of resolution we would support. Many had wanted a strong condemnatory one, without any plea for conciliation. The United States had sought conciliation. Since it was obvious that South Africa would not now conciliate, the United States should try to avoid the inevitable move for a condemnatory resolution by taking the initiative. In regard to Senator Lodge's participation in the item, the question had been as to how strong a speech he should make. It had been agreed, in Senator Cooper's recollection, to make a strong speech which also admitted our own faults.

Mr. Gerig noted that South Africa was feeling very much pressed by the United Nations in view of the fact that the South West African resolution had been adopted in Committee Four. The feeling had been expressed to him several times that the limit could easily be reached and the Malan cabinet decide to withdraw from the United Nations. We ought to decide whether this attitude of theirs should have any effect on our position.

Ambassador Gross thought that this problem was perhaps more a bilateral one than was recognized. It was not fair to saddle the United Nations alone with this problem. Our government ought bilaterally to assist solution of this question before the General Assembly convenes, and the Delegation ought to know the extent of such efforts so that it could better estimate what type of United Nations action on the problem would be feasible. As it was, we came into the Assembly without sufficient knowledge as to what could be accomplished through the United Nations, and what ought better be left to be done outside.

Dr. Tobias commented that the Department seemed to feel that the United States Delegation could go too far, and matters might boomerang on us. He could not agree that that would be the case. We should take the same attitude with the South Africans as with the Soviets in cases of such extreme violations of human rights. He felt that the United States had some pretty firm ground to stand upon, if it were ever challenged in the United Nations as to its domestic treatment of minorities. There existed an enlightened public opinion, and absolute rights of citizens who daily obtained from the courts protection for those rights. The United States should stand on principle and present its own case, if the need arose, with no cause for hesitation.

Mr. Ross spoke about the frustration that had existed in the United Nations on the item in its long history. This had led to many emotional speeches and actions by the Assembly which tended to irritate further the feelings of the South Africans without bringing the problem any nearer to a solution. He was inclined to agree with the reasons listed by Mr. Sandifer for avoiding the position of taking the lead on this item. At the same time he felt that the United States could take a very strong position behind the scenes to develop a firm background for a solution. He suggested perhaps giving the Secretary General a role to play in bringing the parties together for negotiations. Mrs. Roosevelt said this seemed to be about the general position of the Delegation.

Mr. Williams said that the fundamental question involved here was how to respond to other resolutions on this subject. He drew a contrast between our approach on this subject in which we initially, at least, were against a commission working on this problem since the parties did not seem to want a commission, whereas in the case of the German elections, we said that a commission should be appointed to investigate the conditions behind the Iron Curtain in Germany as to the possibility of holding elections although it was obvious that the Soviets would not allow a commission to come to Eastern Germany. Mrs. Roosevelt said that we would avoid condemning the South Africans and urge that the parties get together. She realized the difficulty pointed out by Mr. Williams, but thought that a sufficient difference could be demonstrated in the two cases.

Mr. Vorys said that any resolution on which the United States votes support a solution of this problem in South Africa should be worded so that we would be prepared to have it apply to the United States as well, bearing in mind what Dr. Tobias had said.

Mr. Taylor recalled that there would be a plenary meeting the next day to hold Security Council elections and to vote for a replacement for Argentina on the Trusteeship Council. We would support El Salvador to replace Argentina. Morocco and the General Committee report on the new Soviet item on the Mutual Security Act, plus the Yugoslav item, would also be considered in plenary. The report of the Sixth Committee on procedures for handling the drafting of resolutions would be postponed to the following week.

CHARLES D. COOK

320/12–1251 : Telegram

The United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin) to the Secretary of State

SECRET PARIS, December 12, 1951—3 p. m.

Delga 623. Re USGADel decisions mtg 12 Dec. Re Indians in South Africa case, approved position in Doc SD/A/C.1/360. Will avoid taking lead but seek develop strong behind-scenes support for reopening discussion between parties. In speeches USGADel will make clear moral position US takes on issue of human rights in this and other cases.

AUSTIN

320/12–1351 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin) [1]

SECRET WASHINGTON, December 13, 1951—7:05 p. m.
PRIORITY

Gadel 442. You will have noted serious implications re So Afr participation UN raised by Forsyth, Secretary So Afr External Affairs, reported Pretoria's 155, Dec 6,[2] rptd Paris for USDel. It shld be borne in mind Forsyth is a Moderate or as he put it an "internationalist" of which there are few in Union.

[1] Repeated for information to Pretoria as 127.

Dept has long felt So Afr threats withdraw UN not entirely empty. How much they will continue to take is entirely speculative but Dept believes there is a limit beyond which they will not go. Last year's Indian Res for which US voted was strongest passed to date. This year's Res South West [Africa], which US co-sponsored, although right, is very strong. Shld this be followed by another strong Indian Res, serious results might ensue.

US interests So Afr, on which Arneson can give Del info, of great importance and require maintenance close and good relations with Union Govt.

In light above considerations Del requested exert every effort create and maintain Indian discussion this year in as friendly and quiet atmosphere as possible and attempt keep Res as mild as possible. US Del shld not support any Res tougher or going beyond last year's strong resolution.

ACHESON

[2] See p. 705. The whole question of South African participation in the United Nations had been raised by General Assembly (or Fourth Committee) consideration of the South West Africa question; for documentation on this subject, see pp. 673 ff.

320/12–1251 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin)

SECRET
PRIORITY

WASHINGTON, December 13, 1951—7:05 p. m.

Gadel 443. Re Delga 623, Dec 12. Indians South Africa. Dept endorses proposal develop strong backstage support to get parties talking but believes in light considerations outlined Gadel 442 Dec 13, particularly desire not further alienate South Africans from UN, Del shld avoid unduly emphasizing HR issue.

ACHESON

320/12–1451 : Telegram

The United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin) to the Secretary of State

[Extract]

SECRET

PARIS, December 14, 1951—1 a. m.

Delga 651. Daily Classified Summary No. 35. December 14, 1951, 12:10 a. m.

. . . . . .

Indians in South Africa

The task before the General Assembly in the question of Indians in South Africa is to see to it that last year's resolution is implemented, in the opinion of Panikkar (India). Since no conference had been held under the resolution, it was time to establish the commission provided for in it, he said.

Panikkar believed that if South Africa declined to appoint its representative on the commission, the UN should arrange for the appointment of a representative on behalf of South Africa. Thus, the Commission would comprise one representative appointed by India and Pakistan and two representatives appointed by the UN.

As to the possibility of the appointment of a single mediator, Panikkar stated his delegation would have to ascertain the attitude of the Indian Government. The conversation indicated the Indian Delegation had not made real preparation for consideration of the item next week, and apparently does not have any particular resolution in mind.

In speculating on possible developments in the question of Indians in South Africa, Tweedsmuir (UK) expressed the opinion India would introduce a resolution which would be sufficiently strong to arouse the ire of South Africa. He thought the Union would reply by attacking inequalities in India with the result that other countries would pitch in and it might develop into a very hot battle.

The UK and the US, in Tweedsmuir's opinion, would have to do everything possible to reduce the temperature and be prepared to present a resolution on which agreement could be obtained. He hoped his speculation would be wrong and debate might not be as heated as he feared.

Tweedsmuir saw no inclination on the Union's part to take a more cooperative view.

Hamilton (South Africa) reiterated to the US General Assembly Delegation that he believed there was a chance of changing the South African Government's position if top-level continuing pressure were exercised in Washington. He also thought a top-level conference in Paris, arranged through the South African Ambassador to the US, might have some effect or at least be a move in the right direction toward settlement of the question of Indians in South Africa. (Hamilton is a General Smuts appointee who is not in sympathy with the Malan Government in some of its positions.)

. . . . . .

AUSTIN

320/12–1451 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin)

SECRET WASHINGTON, December 14, 1951—6:39 p. m.

Gadel 459. Ref Delga 651. Indians SoAfr. Dept strongly opposes Indian proposal estab Comm since SoAfr wld certainly decline appt Rep and UN appt wld be contrary intent last yr Res which was premised on minimum anticipated compliance parties in naming own Reps. Without Reps both parties, character of body wld be basically altered from that of pacific settlement to one of investigation and judgment. Proposed Comm might seek admission SoAfr which likely precipitate chain reaction which could result SoAfr withdrawal from UN.

We wld hope it wld be possible to obtain Res which, tho permitting convocation round table Conf whenever parties agree, in effect wld amount to dropping item from future GA agenda. If this cannot be done, possibility appt single individual to assist in bringing parties together seems to Dept at this time best means countering provocative Indian Res.

Suggested top-level pressure not considered feasible in present climate US–SoAfrs relations.

ACHESON

320/12–2051 : Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

PARIS, December 20, 1951.
[Received December 20—6:39 p. m.]

Delga 754. Re Indians in South Africa. Dels of Burma, India, Indonesia, Iran and Iraq introduced fol draft res in ad hoc pl comite today: sixth session.

Ad hoc political committee.

Agenda item 25.

Treatment of people of Indian origin in the Union of South Africa—Burma, India, Indonesia, Iran and Iraq:

Draft resolution—

The General Assembly.

Recalling its resolutions 44 (I), 265 (III) and 395 (V), relating to the treatment of people of Indian origin in the Union of South Africa, having considered that the Government of the Union of South Africa has been unable up to the present time to accept the General Assembly resolution 395 (V) as a basis for a round-table conference,

Noting that the promulgation on 30 March 1951 of five proclamations under the group areas act rendering operative thereby the provisions of the act in direct contravention of paragraph 3 of resolution 395 (V) having in mind its resolution 103 (I) of 19 November 1946 and against racial persecution and discrimination, and its resolution 217 (III) dated 10 December 1948 relating to the universal declaration of human rights,

Considering that a policy of "racial segregation" (apartheid) is necessarily based on doctrines of racial discrimination:

Recommends that a commission of three members be established for the purpose of assisting the parties, namely the Governments of India, Pakistan and the Union of South Africa, in carrying through appropriate negotiations; the said commission being composed of one member to be nominated by the Government of the Union of South Africa, another to be nominated by the Governments of India and Pakistan and the third to be nominated by the other two members, or in default of agreement between these two in reasonable time, by the Secretary General of the United Nations,

Calls upon the Governments of the Union of South Africa, India, and Pakistan to nominate member within 60 days from the date of adoption of this resolution,

Calls upon the Government of the Union of South Africa to suspend the implementation of enforcement of the provisions of the group areas act pending the conclusion of the negotiations, Decides to include this item in the agenda of the next regular session of the General Assembly.

ROOSEVELT

IO Files

Minutes of Thirty-sixth Meeting of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly, Paris, December 21, 1951

SECRET

US/A/M(Chr)/223

[Here follow list of persons (47) present and discussion of a prior agenda item.]

2. Indians in South Africa [Gadels 442, 443, 459; SD/A/C.1/360; A/AC.53/L.20].

Mr. Taylor pointed out that the resolution contained in document A/AC.53/L.20 might come up for a vote in the Ad Hoc Committee that day. Mr. Meeker referred to this draft resolution which was similar to the one passed by the Assembly at its Fifth Session. It called for a commission for which the US had voted the previous year. The Indians had indicated that they might prefer to have the assembly appoint a member to this commission for the Union Government if the latter failed to make such appointment. The Department was strongly opposed to this idea. Gadel 459 stated that South Africa would certainly refuse to make the appointment, and a move of this sort would basically change the character of the Commission as a negotiating body, and possibly precipitate the withdrawal of South Africa from the UN.

The Department's instructions had also been consistently against active US participation in this matter. The Department felt that the idea of a single mediator would not be adopted without an active push from the US Delegation which the Department would not authorize. The Indians were not interested in this idea. It had been concluded by the staff that it would be unwise to put in a resolution calling for a single mediator since it could not succeed without efforts the Delegation was not authorized to make. Consequently the US would only throw this idea out during the course of its speech. It was hoped that some other Delegation might pick up this idea.

In connection with the voting on the joint draft resolution of Burma, India, Indonesia, Iran and Iraq, the US would vote for it as a whole, since it did not go beyond the resolution of last year. If a paragraph by paragraph vote were requested, the US might wish to vote against or abstain on the paragraph referring to specific legislation of the Union of South Africa, and providing for inclusion of the item on the agenda of the Seventh Session. Mr. Meeker felt that the US vote would not defeat these paragraphs, and it might be politically wiser to vote in favor.

Mr. Stein felt that the US should not support a recommendation that the UN tell a country not to enforce specific legislation. He suggested that at least the US should vote against operative paragraph three calling upon South Africa to suspend the enforcement of the Group Areas Act. Mr. Cohen did not think that anything in the Charter prevented this type of recommendation by the UN, but that it was merely a question of policy. South Africa was of course embarked on a course fraught with grave danger. The US should abstain on this paragraph. Mr. Meeker agreed that the Assembly had the power to take this action, and that the question was one of the political effect such a course might engender. If the US abstained or cast a negative vote on these various paragraphs, the South Africans might well take this as an indication that we had reservations on the matter, and they would feel justified in refusing to abide by the resolution.

Mr. Pollak underscored the remarks of Mr. Meeker and called for considering this matter also in terms of the Genocide charge recently launched against the US by American Communists and the Civil Rights Congress.[1]

Mr. Sandifer suggested voting against operative paragraph three since our vote in favor of the resolution as a whole would be the really important vote. Ambassador Kirk pointed to the inconsistency of our apparent stands in Committee One on the Soviet charge against our Mutual Security Act, and in the Ad Hoc Committee on this item. Mr. Vorys said the difference was that as far as the laws were concerned, "ours was nice, and theirs naughty".

[1] Documentation on this matter is located in file 320.

Mr. Cohen suggested that we offer an amendment showing exactly where we stood on this matter, and after its probable defeat, abstaining on operative paragraph 3. Miss Strauss proposed language to the following effect: "that the Union Government take no action which would further racial segregation." This would avoid reference to specific legislation and accomplish the same result. If such language did not succeed, then we could vote for the resolution as a whole.

Mr. Ross thought that the whole history of this item showed it to be self-defeating, and accomplishing only a strengthening of the policies of the Malan Government. He thought that a much simpler approach along the lines of an exhortation, plus the proffering of the assistance of the UN Secretary General would be the only possible way of retrieving this situation. Mr. Maktos cautioned against pushing South Africa so far by resolutions aimed against it that it would withdraw from the UN.

Dr. Tobias was not impressed by these expediency considerations and the telegrams concerning it. He felt a policy of expediency would return to plague us in the future. We were faced with a situation which he had tried to make clear in Committee 4, where we had not a world government, but only a limited organization which reflected internal policies. He could only agree with Mr. Meeker that the US could vote for the resolution as a whole, in that it was similar to last year's. But on specific paragraphs, he thought we would get into trouble. This was not the same type of problem as the one of South West Africa. He did not think the UN could ask for internal changes, however justified or desirable they might be.

Ambassador Gross recalled that last year's resolution recommended that the Group Areas Act not be enforced. He felt this gave us valid grounds for abstaining, in that the first preambular paragraph referred to the previous resolutions. Ambassador Jessup supported Mr. Ross, and asked whether we had exhausted all chances of having others put a resolution in along the lines Mr. Ross suggested. We could then fall back to the present one, if necessary.

Miss Strauss referred to the Delegation's suggestion to which the Department had only recently moved, of the idea of a single mediator. We could ask others to suggest this idea, but it would be unfair if we could not assist in pushing it along. This we were not authorized to do. Mr. Taylor pointed out that the situation might well be different, depending on when the matter came to a vote before Christmas. We should try to have the resolution voted on only as a whole, in which case we would support it. If it came up for a paragraph by paragraph vote, we could abstain on the operative paragraphs if necessary.

Mrs. Roosevelt felt we should vote for it as a whole. We could abstain on preambular paragraph 3, indicating that this was already taken care of by reference in paragraph 1. Then we could abstain on the last two operative paragraphs. The Department's instructions would permit that much leeway. She felt we might explore Mr. Ross' suggestion if the vote did not come on until after the recess. She said that of course we did not wish to see any state leave the UN, and there were practical reasons for keeping South Africa and others in, too. In regard to the recent Communist propaganda gambit entitled "We charge Genocide", she said that the US could explain its position satisfactorily here in the UN. At home was where this matter was dangerous, especially when tied in with the South African and Moroccan items. Every time we went back on a principle, she said, it meant rough sailing in the future. She added that often times we did not see things "the whole way 'round," although there were probably overriding considerations for our present attitude. Senator Cooper suggested that Mr. Ross' idea was such a good one that we ought to seek postponement on any action today.

[Here follow remarks appropriate to the fact that this was the last Delegation meeting before the Christmas holidays and that certain members (Congressmen Mansfield and Vorys) were leaving permanently.]

CHARLES D. COOK

320/12–2051 : Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

[Extract]

SECRET PARIS, December 20 [21?], 1951—7 p. m.

Delga 770. Re: USGADel decisions mtg 21 Dec.

. . . . . .

2. Re Indians in South Africa item, joint draft res discussed. US will vote in favor whole res if comes to vote before recess. On para-by-para vote, US will abstain on third preambular para and operative paras numbered 2 and 3. If vote postponed until after recess, will communicate with Dept re possibility stimulating introduction of res which will promote and assist negotiations between parties.

[ROOSEVELT]

320/12–2351 : Telegram

The Senior Representative on the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Jessup) to the Secretary of State

SECRET PARIS, December 23, 1951—3 p. m.

Delga 800. Subj: Indians in South Africa. Miss Strauss in ad hoc polit comite yesterday gave US statement, which included suggestion of neutral individual to assist in bringing the parties together. Suggestion apparently well-received by Indian deleg, which for first time showed real interest in this idea. Indian deleg said it wanted to study idea and indicated it might wish to incorporate an appropriate paragraph in five-power draft resolution, either by way of substitution or as an addition to five-power text. US del has not proposed any specific language, but has prepared, to hold in reserve for possible use if necessary, fol language:

"Requests the Secretary-Gen to lend his assist to the govts concerned in the event that such assist might prove helpful in initiating discussions between them with a view to resolution of their differences;"

We believe seed planted by Miss Strauss statement has taken root in minds of sponsors; we propose for present to let situation develop before we engage in further activities this subj.

As reported in Delga 770, deleg believes that assist of neutral individual such as SYG might be more helpful in bringing parties together than commission such as five-power draft proposes, since it appears that South Africa will again ignore recommendation for commission.

Will keep Dept informed of developments.

JESSUP

320/12–2351 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin)

SECRET WASHINGTON, December 28, 1951—7:01 p. m.

Gadel 562. Re Indians in South Africa Delgas 754 and 800. Dept believes five power draft Res as unlikely achieve desired end as last year's Res and previous efforts. Passage wld only exacerbate feelings, solve nothing and keep problem coming back in GA every year.

While Dept believes chance of settlement this case thru UN action remote, sees no harm in attempting a fresh approach such as USDel idea of neutral individual to bring parties together. We believe however USDel has gone as far as it can or shld at this time by planting seed. If it germinates in minds of sponsors you may help in pruning, but if it needs cultivating UK shld be head gardener in commonwealth garden.

USDel shld approach UKDel on this basis to encourage UK play lead in seeking solution.

ACHESON

320/1–252 : Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL PARIS, January 2, 1952—11 p. m.

Delga 823. Re Indians in South Africa. Nehru and Haksar (Ind del)[1] approached Miss Strauss this morning and advised her Ind Govt favors suggestion made in her speech for appointment of neutral individual on understanding this suggestion wld be incorporated as addition to five-power draft res (Delga 754 Dec 20). Fischer (Israeli del)[2] who joined conversation also indicated strong interest in US suggestion.

Miss Strauss indicated we have assumed that since our suggestion has received favorable reaction from several speakers in comite some others dels wld submit appropriate formal proposal. On basis conversation fol para was prepared to be inserted as new numbered para 3 of five-power res: "Requests the SYG in event that members of comm have not been nominated in accordance with preceding para, to lend his assistance to govts concerned in case such assistance appears helpful in initiating discussions between them with view to carrying through appropriate negotiations; and in his discretion after consulting govts concerned to appoint individual who wld be available to render such assistance."

Nehru and Fischer then agreed that latter will approach some LA dels such as Uruguay and request them to formally propose above para as amendment.

Re last para Gadel 562, we have repeatedly raised matter of UK initiative with UK del but were given clearly understand UK del unwilling take initiative.

ROOSEVELT

---

[1] Respectively, R. K. Nehru, Alternate Representative on the Delegation of India to the General Assembly, and P. N. Haksar, Adviser to the Indian Delegation.

[2] Maurice Fischer, Israeli Minister to France.

320/1–252: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin)

SECRET WASHINGTON, January 4, 1952—6:17 p. m.

PRIORITY

Gadel 594. Re Indians in South Africa.

1. We approve additional para re neutral individual Delga 823 Jan 2.

2. We approve Del decision 21 Dec abstain on third preambular para and operative paras 2 and 3 of draft Res (Delga 754 and 770 Dec 20).

3. Del shld also abstain on the second preambular para in view of fact we voted against para 3 of Res last year which South Africans are now charged with contravening.

4. In accordance position paper SD/A/C.1/360, Del shld vote against para placing item on agenda seventh session.

5. In vote on Res as whole Del authorized vote in favor as Res generally similar to last year's Res on which we voted affirmatively in plenary. Dept convinced, however, Res unlikely accomplish anything and there is risk that coming on top present SW African situation it will make return S African Del to GA more difficult.

ACHESON

IO Files

Minutes of Fortieth Meeting of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly, Paris, January 5, 1952

SECRET

US/A/M(Chr)/227

[Here follow list of persons (35) present and discussion of two prior agenda items.]

3. Indians in South Africa

Mr. Stein reported on the recent word from the Department on this item and the 5-Power resolution contained in Gadel 594. The Department proposed that the Delegation modify its decision on the voting by paragraphs on this resolution as follows:

(a) abstain on the second preambular paragraph. (Since the United States had voted against the General Assembly resolution referred to in that paragraph, we should abstain on references to it.)

(b) vote against the last paragraph of the resolution which called for automatic consideration of the item by the Seventh Session. Otherwise the Delegation should vote in favor of the resolution as a whole.

Mr. Stein suggested that the Delegation adopt the Department's ideas. Miss Strauss, he said, could explain the United States views in regard to the last paragraph. In fact, any member could place this matter on the agenda anyway. Should the possible mediatory efforts of the Secretary-General hold a chance of success, it would be unwise to have the item fall automatically on the agenda and run the risk of disrupting such a chance. Mr. Stein reiterated his suggestion that the Delegation support the proposed modifications.

Miss Strauss agreed in general with the Department's position but regretted having to vote against the last paragraph since she thought the South Africans might feel the United States was not taking a serious interest in this matter. In general, she said, she could not favor the automatic placing of items on the agenda. There were special reasons for her position in this particular case however.

Mr. Allen wondered if there were still time to try to get the last paragraph changed to the effect that the Secretary General would report to the Members on whether his special position in the matter gave him reason to believe the question should be included in the agenda or not. Miss Strauss liked this idea but pointed out the difficulty of obtaining sponsors for such an amendment. Mrs. Roosevelt doubted that there would be sufficient time to attempt such a move. Miss Strauss asked if the Delegation would approve of her seeking to have some other delegation put in an amendment to this effect, on the "off-chance" that she could persuade someone to do it. Mr. Stein said that the Department's instructions indicated they would not object. Mrs. Roosevelt said that she heard no objections to this course. The vote would be according to the new instructions.

[Here follows discussion of another matter.]

CHARLES D. COOK

IO Files

United States Delegation Plenary Position Paper

RESTRICTED [PARIS,] January 10, 1952.

US/A/3427

TREATMENT OF PEOPLE OF INDIAN ORIGIN IN THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA: REPORT OF THE AD HOC POLITICAL COMMITTEE (A/2046)

1. UNITED STATES POSITION

The United States should vote in favor of the attached resolution adopted by the Ad Hoc Political Committee. If the resolution is voted upon paragraph-by-paragraph the United States should (a) vote in favor of preambular paragraphs 1, 4 and 5, and operative paragraphs 1, 2 and 3; (b) abstain on preambular paragraphs 2 and 3 and operative paragraph 4; (c) vote against operative paragraph 5.

547-842—79——56

The United States should vote under Rule 67 against plenary discussion of the report of the Ad Hoc Political Committee.

2. HISTORY IN COMMITTEE

The Ad Hoc Political Committee devoted 6 meetings to the consideration of this agenda item. After adoption of the resolution paragraph-by-paragraph, the resolution as a whole was adopted by 41 votes to 2, with 13 abstentions.

3. POSSIBLE DEVELOPMENTS IN PLENARY

Since South Africa has indicated that it does not desire plenary debate, and it is unlikely that India will desire debate, there will probably not be a debate. It is likely, however, that there will be a number of explanations of vote. It will not be necessary for the United States to explain its vote.

[Annex]

RESTRICTED

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE AD HOC POLITICAL COMMITTEE 1/5/52

TREATMENT OF PEOPLE OF INDIAN ORIGIN IN THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44(1), 265 (III) and 395(V), relating to the treatment of people of Indian origin in the Union of South Africa,

Having considered that the Government of the Union of South Africa has been unable up to the present time to accept General Assembly resolution 395(V) as a basis for a round table conference,

Noting that the promulgation on 30 March 1951 of five proclamations under the Group Areas Act renders operative thereby the provisions of that Act in direct contravention of paragraph 3 of resolution 395(V),

Having in mind its resolution 103(I) of 19 November 1946 against racial persecution and discrimination, and its resolution 217(III) of 10 December 1948 relating to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Considering that a policy of "racial segregation" (Apartheid) is necessarily based on doctrines of racial discrimination,

1. Recommends that a commission of three members be established for the purpose of assisting the parties, namely the Governments of India, Pakistan and the Union of South Africa, in carrying through appropriate negotiations, the said commission to be composed of one member to be nominated by the Government of the Union of South Africa, another to be nominated by the Governments of India and

Pakistan and the third to be nominated by the other two members, or in default of agreement between these two within a reasonable time, by the Secretary-General of the United Nations;

2. Calls upon the Governments of the Union of South Africa, India and Pakistan to nominate members within sixty days from the date of adoption of the present resolution;

3. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in the event that the members of the Commission are not nominated in accordance with paragraphs 1 and 2 above, to lend his assistance to the Governments of India, Pakistan and the Union of South Africa, provided such assistance is deemed necessary and helpful by him, with a view to facilitating appropriate negotiations between them; and further, in his discretion and after consulting the Governments concerned, to appoint an individual who would render such additional assistance for the purpose of facilitating the conduct of the said negotiations;

4. Calls upon the Government of the Union of South Africa to suspend the implementation or enforcement of the provisions of the Group Areas Act pending the conclusion of the negotiations;

5. Decides to include this item in the agenda of the next regular session of the General Assembly.

320/1–1352 : Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL PARIS, January 13, 1952—8 p. m.

Delga 1007. Re Indians in South Africa. In estimating the influence of the Arab-Far Eastern group in this Assembly, Dept may usefully compare this year's ad hoc comite vote on five-power res on above subj with vote in same comite last year.

Last year essentially same res was approved in comite by vote of 26 to 6 with 24 abstentions. This year res was adopted by vote of 41 to 2 (Australia being only country joining the union of SA) and 13 abstentions. Even West Eur ranks broken e.g. with Norway voting in support of res rather than abstaining and Neth abstaining rather than opposing it.

Perhaps fact that essentially same res has once been approved by Assembly was undoubtedly contributing factor in large vote. Another factor although with limited effect on voting constellation, might have been insertion of Israeli amendment providing for neutral mediator. Nevertheless, we believe that considerable increase in support for India since last year in this troublesome case is significant and can not be disregarded.

Prior to vote in comite, Miss Strauss made strong pleas for elimination of last para of 5-power res providing that this matter be inserted on agenda of next Assembly. She urged comite members to vote against this para. It is significant that only Australia, Belgium, France and South Africa responded to this plea.

39 members voted in favor of retaining the para and 11 members abstained. Last year same para was included by comite vote of 31 to 3 with 22 abstentions. The increase of support for this para despite strong US plea and despite fact that many reps are personally tired of hearing same old story again and again is also of interest.

Sov bloc made speeches of unprecedented brevity limiting its anti-discriminating harangues generally to state of affairs in South Africa. This bloc switched from abstention last year to affirmative vote.

After voting in comite, Nehru (India) thanked USDel profusely for our support. Jordan of South African del indicated satisfaction over inclusion of Israeli amendment and said US negative vote on last para was "better than nothing." He also said if SYG Lie undertakes his efforts get parties together with specific ref to comite res there might be hope for resumption of discussions.

From viewpoint of our relations to NE and FE states affected by our recent positions on such matters as Morocco,[1] this year's debate on above item was not unhelpful.

ROOSEVELT

[1] For documentation on the Moroccan question in the General Committee in the opening phase of the Sixth Regular Session of the General Assembly, see pp. 135 ff.

320/1–1352 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin)

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, January 16, 1952—6 : 34 p. m.

Gadel 734. Re Indians in SoAf Delga 1007. In analyzing large vote this year Dept believes fol factors also important: 1) fact that not until plenary did US indicate support for similar Res last year; 2) irritation over failure SAfr be more forthcoming re solution SWAfr question; 3) resentment over SAfr partial GA walkout.

Clarify Jordan remark that "if SYG Lie undertakes his efforts get parties together with specific ref to Comite Res there might be hope for resumption of discussion". Dept also interested any indications Jordan line of thinking might be shared by Jooste or Donges.[1]

ACHESON

[1] Respectively, G. P. Jooste, South African Ambassador to the United States and Vice-Chairman of the Union's Delegation to the General Assembly, and T. E. Donges, South African Minister of the Interior and Chairman of the Union Delegation.

320/1–2452 : Telegram

The Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Roosevelt) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL PARIS, January 24, 1952.
[Received January 24—12 : 50 p. m.]

Delga 1171. Re Gadel 734 re Indians in South Africa. Sentence on which Dept requests clarification shld read as follows:

"If SYG Lie undertakes his efforts get parties together without specific ref to comite resolution there might be hope for resumption of discussion."

We understand Jordan's remark to mean Govt of South African Union wld be willing cooperate with SYG in his efforts get parties together provided he does not base his efforts on a GA Res. This coincides with past attitude of Union Govt that it is willing enter discussion with Indian Govt at any time outside UN and without recognizing UN Res as basis for discussions.

In conversation with USGADel staff member on Jan 21, Jooste said South Africa still remains ready to negotiate with India and Pak, in Capetown, Karachi, New Delhi or anywhere else on basis of still valid Capetown agrmt, i.e., on basis that problem of Indians in SA shld be discussed at round-table conference and there should be no limitation on questions which either side puts on agenda. If SYG, under GA Res, approaches SA, this is reply they intend make. SA will not negotiate on basis of GA Resolutions themselves. Jooste said this offer cannot remain open indefinitely.

ROOSEVELT

Editorial Note

For the proceedings of the Ad Hoc Political Committee on this question, on December 20 and 21, 1951 and January 2–5, 1952, see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Sixth Session, Ad Hoc Political Committee, pages 152–162 and pages 163–174, respectively. For the proceedings of the General Assembly on this matter on January 12, 1952, see GA (VI), Plenary, pages 327–331. Appropriate documentation is found in GA (VI), Annexes, fascicule for agenda item 25.

The resolution adopted by the General Assembly on January 12, 1952 recommended the establishment of a commission of three members for the purpose of assisting the parties engaged in the controversy (India, Pakistan, and the Union of South Africa) "in carrying through appropriate negotiations." The resolution also outlined means for implementing this procedure. For text of the resolution, Resolution 511 (VI), see GA (VI), Resolutions, page 11.

Editorial Note

At the time that Mrs. Roosevelt took over as Acting Chairman of the United States Delegation in December 1951, she circulated a memorandum dated December 18, 1951, to members of the Delegation, "for it explains much that is happening in Committees 2, 3 and 4" (IO Files, Doc. US/Gen. 499, December 18, 1951). In the memorandum Mrs. Roosevelt had included remarks (English translation) excerpted from an address by M. Henri Laugier, former Assistant Secretary-General in charge of Social Affairs, before the World Federation of United Nations Associations, Geneva, July 31, 1951. Although these remarks were subsequently severely criticized as Communist propaganda by Deputy Assistant Secretary Sandifer, when he read the document, their content is included here as relevant to an understanding of the intellectual climate prevailing at the Paris General Assembly, 1951–1952, with regard to human rights questions, and the problems posed thereby for United States policy.

M. Laugier's remarks follow:

"First of all, allow me to bring to your attention the facts to which Committee 3, the Social Committee of the Assembly, was a witness last year. I have always thought, and I am more than ever of the opinion, that a group of historians and observers, men with imagination and with an eye for criticism, should be set up at the Secretariat of the United Nations to analyze methodically the policy of the different states, and particularly their votes in the different committees of the Assembly. In the absence of such a body whose job would be to think and consider, I have modestly attempted to fulfill its functions myself, and the votes in Committee 3 have been of great value not only to me but to you, and I think to all those who attempt to foresee the future by taking into account the present events. What happened is this, and I cordially invite you to consider carefully the following facts:

"In many important votes on the following subjects: the colonial clause in the Covenant, freedom of information, the right of self-determination, the insertion of economic and social rights in the Covenant; we saw after many very noble speeches and a roll call vote, a majority of some 30 to 35 states (depending upon the circumstances), made up of most of the South American countries, Middle Eastern countries, Asiatic and Soviet states, join together against a minority of 12 to 16 votes (depending upon the circumstances) of the highly developed states such as Great Britain, the United States, France, Belgium, Australia, etc. The phenomenon is of great importance and deserves to be studied in great detail. A conference should be given over to it, or even a book written on it, bringing a possible solution to this question: What does it mean? What it means is that in the Social Committee of the United Nations, where governmental pressure is not as great as in the political, economic, trusteeship, or financial committees, the highly developed countries have lost the control, the leadership of the international community; and that this control and this leadership have gone over to the disinherited countries. It means and signifies the following: that there exists today in the world several hundred million men, women, and children who are leading a life which is not fit for a human being, in slums and with insufficient food, among sickness, ignorance and illiteracy; and who today, in this world of technical progress are not willing to resign themselves to their fate. The same problem existed fifty years or a hundred years ago. But at that time these men come into the world, lived, gave birth to children, and died on their own land like plants or animals. Today in this scientific world they know that within reach by plane, a few hours from misery, there exist countries where there is plenty of everything, nay, where squander and waste are the order of the day. And they no longer resign themselves to their sad fate; they demand, discreetly today, imperatively tomorrow, an international night of August 4;* the disinherited countries arise to ask that these states abandon their privileges, states which history and geography have made into privileged countries. These disinherited countries know that they cannot expect a significant improvement in their fate through national action alone, and with mingled hope and despair, they turn towards the United Nations, calling for help and relief. That is to say that within a short time, the world, already menaced by imperialist wars, is going to be threatened with a social revolution pitting the disinherited countries against the privileged countries; and that undoubtedly only a generous, brave, and fearless action is capable, not of forestalling this imperious demand for international social justice, but at least of guiding it into the peaceful ways of cooperation among peoples of the World. It is, in any event, particularly important that these countries which history and geography have made happy, powerful, rich and strong, be made to feel that that this power, this good fortune, this wealth, and this strength, do not give them special rights or authority in the international community, but impose upon them responsibilities and extra duties of generosity, devotion and self-sacrifice to the cause of suffering humanity." (Translation of an excerpt from address given before the World Federation of United Nations Association, Geneva, July 31, 1951)

*August 4, 1789, when all feudal rights and privileges of the [French] nobility were relinquished to the Constituent Assembly. [Footnote in the source text.]

CANADA

POLITICAL AND MILITARY RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA [1]

711.56342/2-951

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Canada

RESTRICTED WASHINGTON, February 19, 1951.

No. 134

The Secretary of State refers to the Department's instruction No. 89, dated December 15, 1950, and to the Embassy's despatch No. 970 of February 1, 1951,[2] concerning surveys by the United States Air Force of communications sites in Newfoundland and Labrador. As stated in its note No. D–41 of January 30, 1951,[3] the Canadian Government's approval related only to the carrying out of surveys and the Canadian Government was awaiting a further request from the United States for permission to carry out the communications project.

The Department transmits herewith a copy of a letter dated February 9, 1951 from the Secretary of Defense [3] explaining in detail the communications facilities which the United States Air Force desires to construct in Newfoundland, and requesting the Department to seek the approval of the Canadian Government. The attached letter also requests that authority be obtained to permit the Northeast Command, together with the Chief of the United States Army Engineers, to assist the Canadian Government in acquiring the privately-owned lands involved, which in turn would be incorporated in a supplementary lease from the Canadian Government to the United States.

It is proposed that the conditions of the 1941 Leased Bases Agreement [4] be made applicable to the additional areas to be acquired near

---

[1] For documentation on discussions with Canada concerning the use of atomic weapons and the use of Canadian bases in case of atomic warfare, see vol. I, pp. 802 ff.

For documentation on economic and military cooperation between the United States and Canada during 1950, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 583 ff.

[2] Neither printed.

[3] Not printed.

[4] Reference is to the Leased Bases Agreement of March 27, 1941, between the United States and the United Kingdom, in which the United Kingdom leased certain bases in Newfoundland to the United States for a period of 99 years. When Newfoundland became a part of Canada in 1949, Canada assumed the commitments made by the United Kingdom in this agreement. In 1950, the United States and Canada negotiated some revisions in the agreement, which were formalized in an exchange of notes in 1952. For text of the 1941 Agreement, see Department of State Executive Agreement Series (EAS) No. 235, or 55 Stat. 1560. For documentation on the revision of the agreement, see Foreign Relations, 1949, vol II, pp. 393 ff. and ibid., 1950, vol. II, pp. 583 ff.; for the exchange of notes in 1952, see United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), vol. 3, (pt 3), pp. 4271–4275.

Ernest Harmon Air Force Base and Pepperrell Air Force Base, and that tenure run for the balance of the existing 99-year lease. If the Canadian Government is agreeable, this procedure could be followed by authority of Article XXVII of the 1941 Leased Bases Agreement, which provides that the United States may acquire supplementary leases.

In the letter of February 9, 1951 from the Secretary of Defense, it is further stated that it is understood that the lease of this property and all construction connected therewith will be without expense to the Canadian Government, and that the United States will re-imburse the Canadian Government for any expenses which Canada may incur in connection with the acquisition of property.

There are attached two charts showing the location of the areas which the United States Air Force would like to acquire near Ernest Harmon Air Force Base and Pepperrell Air Force Base.

For the Embassy's information, the question of additional communications facilities at Goose Bay will be taken up in connection with the broader problem of an over-all lease in that area.[5]

[5] Negotiations for a 20-year lease of portions of the Royal Canadian Air Force Station at Goose Bay, Labrador, were in progress. See the Department's instruction 168 to Ottawa, April 3, 1951, p. 881. An agreement was effected by an exchange of notes on December 5, 1952. For text, see 3 UST (pt. 4), 5295–5299.

711.56342/2–2651

The Ambassador in Canada (Woodward) to the Secretary of State

RESTRICTED AIR PRIORITY OTTAWA, February 26, 1951.

No. 1098

Subject: Leases for Communications Sites

Upon receipt of the Department's Instruction on this subject[1] the Embassy forwarded to the Department of External Affairs on February 21 a Note[2] summarizing the request of the United States for approval by the Government of Canada of proposals to construct communications facilities in Newfoundland and to lease certain lands in that connection.

The Embassy's Note included the following paragraph:

"In order to facilitate the detailed arrangements which may be necessary, it is requested that the necessary authority be granted by the Government of Canada to permit the United States Northeast Command, together with the Chief of the United States Army Engineers, to assist the Government of Canada in acquiring the privately owned lands involved. It is proposed that these lands, together with the Crown lands included in the sites, be leased to the United States under authority of Article XXVII of the 1941 Leased Bases Agreement, which provides that the United States may acquire supplementary leases, that the conditions of the 1941 Leased Bases Agreement be made applicable to the additional areas to be acquired near Ernest Harmon Air Force Base and Pepperrell Air Force Base, and that tenure run for the balance of the existing 99 year lease. The approval of this proposal by the Government of Canada is requested together with permission for the United States Air Force to undertake the construction program outlined above."

[1] Supra.
[2] Not printed.

The first sentence of this paragraph creates no problems, and is accepted as a convenient collaboration in working out the final details, including the exact location of the sites. It is understood that the Government of Canada will acquire title to the privately owned lands for defense purposes. Under legislation which will soon go through Parliament, the Minister of Defense will be authorized to lease government property on the authority of an Order-in-Council. Such Orders-in-Council, however, must be laid before Parliament and are finally valid only if Parliament does not take action to disapprove within a specified time limit.

With these proposals thus subject to political review, and taking into account the somewhat delicate relationships between the Federal Government and the Province of Newfoundland in matters of sovereignty, officials in the Department of External Affairs are very much concerned over the political implications of the second sentence in the paragraph quoted above. They feel so strongly about this that the Embassy's Note has been held in the Department of External Affairs and has not yet been referred to Cabinet Ministers, pending exploration of the possibility of modifying the request of the United States in certain respects, as outlined in the following paragraphs.

1. The most serious Canadian objection is to the proposed tenure of 99 years, which turns over these outlying areas to the United States for the same term as the Leased Bases themselves, which were granted to the United States under quite different conditions and for quite different purposes. Canadian officials feel that there would be strong protests against any action which seemed to establish the principle of an intention by the Government of Canada to cede additional territory to the United States. As a practical matter, it is pointed out, there is no necessity for a lease of such duration for communications facilities which may become obsolescent in a much shorter time and which may not actually be needed for this period. Furthermore, similar communications facilities are being established at Goose Bay for a much shorter period. Officials suggest that twenty-five years might be a reasonable tenure, subject to renewal if desired. Alternatively, a form of words leaving the tenure open for a reasonable period, or during such time as the communications facilities are needed, might solve the problem.

2. Canadian officials are also reluctant to make the lease contingent on the authority of Article XXVII of the 1941 Leased Bases Agreement, for much the same political reasons. They would much prefer a request based on a need for communications facilities essential to the defense of the North Atlantic area.

3. The request of the United States would also be more acceptable to Canada if it were not specified that the conditions of the Leased Bases Agreement be made applicable to the additional areas to be acquired. It was pointed out that this really involves only three things: (a) the tenure of the lease, discussed above; (b) the right to establish canteens, which appears not to be necessary for these particular areas; (c) the question of jurisdiction which, if excluded, would place U.S. personnel in these off-base areas under the same conditions as U.S. personnel anywhere in Canada outside the base areas.

There is no objection to appropriate references to the Leased Bases, since these communications facilities are definitely linked with their operations. The only objection is to an extension of the areas included in the 1941 Leased Bases Agreement, in an effort to avoid possible political difficulties over the question of sovereignty to which Canadians, and particularly Newfoundlanders, are so markedly sensitive.

The Embassy has been assured that the Government of Canada is most anxious to avoid creating any unnecessary difficulties in development of the communications project, which is cordially approved in principle. The purpose of these suggestions is in fact, to expedite the process of final approval and to make certain that there will be no last-minute objections on political grounds.

In order to expedite the necessary considerations by all agencies of the Government of Canada, the Department of External Affairs has already informed the Department of Transport of these proposals in order that they may be studied in their technical aspects. In that connection certain questions have been raised by the technicians, to which it is desired to have answers as soon as possible. These questions may have bearing on the possible necessity for adjustments in the Canadian system of communications.

[Here follow several technical questions.]

For the Ambassador:
DON C. BLISS
Minister

711.56342/3–151

The Chargé in Canada (Bliss) to the Secretary of State

RESTRICTED AIR PRIORITY OTTAWA, March 1, 1951.

No. 1126

Subject: Leases for Communications Sites

A copy of the Embassy's despatch no. 1098 on the above subject [1] has been shown to Mr. R. A. MacKay, Defence Liaison Division, Department of External Affairs, who indicated that it was a complete and accurate statement of the position of the Government of Canada in this matter as originally explained to the Embassy.

In an effort to expedite consideration of the United States request for use of these communications sites, I made a preliminary draft yesterday of a revised Note, which I have discussed with Mr. MacKay. We concluded that the United States approach might be made in two different ways in an effort to eliminate the politically dangerous references to the Leased Bases Agreement. One such approach could be made in general terms, leaving the tenure of a lease indefinite, for such time as the lands may be required for the maintenance and operations of the communications system. Another approach would link this proposal with the Goose Bay lease, which also includes facilities for global communications. After discussing the matter with Under Secretary Heeney the Department of External Affairs has indicated that it would prefer the second approach.

There are attached hereto copies of the proposed Note as now redrafted.[2] Numbered paragraph five [3] represents the text which would be acceptable to officials in the Department of External Affairs and in their view more acceptable to Cabinet Ministers and to Parliament than the original United States proposals. These, which were incorporated in the Embassy's original Note, were set forth in the penultimate paragraph in the letter from the Secretary of Defense attached to the Department's Instruction No. 134 [4] as supplemented by the third paragraph of the Department's Instruction.

In sum, this redraft omits any reference to a lease, avoids linking the proposal to the 1941 Leased Bases Agreement, and puts use of these facilities on much the same basis as those to be made available at

---

[1] Supra.

[2] Not printed.

[3] Paragraph five was as follows: "In view of the importance to the defense of the North Atlantic Region of the proposed communications facilities, and in view of the heavy capital investment which will be entailed in their construction, the Government of Canada is requested to make available the lands described above to the United States for its exclusive use for 20 years for the purpose of installing and operating these facilities. If the United States should make a request for extension at the end of the 20-year period, it is understood that such a request would be considered by the Canadian Government in consultation with the United States Government in the light of the common defense interests of the two countries."

[4] Dated February 19, p. 870.

Goose Bay. The justifications provided are the defense of the North Atlantic Region and the heavy capital investment of the United States in these facilities.

In the consideration of this redrafted Note in Washington the Embassy suggests that the following questions must be weighed:

1. Are there any political or practical reasons for desiring a lease of these communications facilities, as distinct from those at Goose Bay, for a period of eighty-nine years as against the Canadian suggestion of twenty years subject to renewal if the facilities continue to be required for purposes of mutual defense?
2. Is it necessary to refer to the authority of Article XXVII of the 1941 Leased Bases Agreement, or is the United States satisfied to justify its request on the considerations set forth in numbered paragraph five?
3. Is the application of the conditions of the 1941 Leased Bases Agreement to these areas a matter of significance? As indicated in the Embassy's despatch no. 1098 the only relevant feature of these conditions would be the question of jurisdiction, the significance of which will have to be determined in Washington.
4. The Secretary of Defense furnished an undertaking that the United States would reimburse the Canadian Government for any expenses which Canada might incur in connection with acquiring these properties. (Numbered paragraph seven of draft Note.) One such expense would be the cost of purchasing the lands and obtaining title in the name of the Federal Government. It is understood that when the Newfoundland Bases were acquired, the United States reimbursed the United Kingdom for its expenditures in acquiring the lands included in the Leased Base Areas. That, however, was in connection with a lease for ninety-nine years. The question arises, therefore, as to whether or not the United States would be willing to reimburse the Government of Canada for such expenditures when the lands involved are turned over to the United States for a much shorter period.

The Embassy expects in due course to receive appropriate instructions from the Department in connection with the points raised in this despatch.

DON C. BLISS

Secretary's Memoranda, Lot 53 D 444, "Memoranda for the President, 1951"

Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State to the President

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] March 2, 1951.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

Subject: Recommendation of the Permanent Joint Board on Defense concerning the extension and coordination of the aircraft control and warning nets of Canada and the United States.

The United States Joint Chiefs of Staff on December 15, 1950 transmitted to the Permanent Joint Board on Defense, Canada–United States, for consideration a plan for the extension and coordination of the Canadian and United States air defense systems. The Permanent Joint Board on Defense was requested to advise the Joint Chiefs of Staff whether the plan which had been developed by the Air Forces of the two countries was acceptable.

The Board carried on discussions at two meetings in January, 1951 with a view to determining various matters such as the division of costs and the operational control of the system. As a result of these discussions, the Board prepared a formal Recommendation to the two Governments for approval stating that a plan substantially as set forth by the two Air Forces for the extension and coordination of the air defense systems of the United States and Canada was feasible and acceptable and should be implemented forthwith as a matter of great urgency.[1]

As the Department of Defense was primarily concerned, the Recommendation of the Board was first transmitted to that Department, and there is attached a copy of a letter dated February 23, 1951 from the Secretary of Defense indicating his approval, as well as the concurrence of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff.[2]

I believe that the Recommendation of the Board represents an equitable and feasible basis for cooperation in this joint defense project by the United States and Canada and I recommend that you approve the action of the Permanent Joint Board on Defense for this Government. Following your approval, this Department will initiate action to put the Board's Recommendation into effect through an exchange of notes with the Canadian Government.

There are enclosed copies of the pertinent documents, including a letter addressed to you from Major General Guy V. Henry, U.S. Army (Retired), Acting Chairman of the United States Section of the Board.[3]

JAMES E. WEBB

---

[1] Recommendation 51/1, February 16, 1951, not printed, was attached to the memorandum. It provided that Canada should acquire and retain title to the sites, that the costs of construction, equipment, and operation should be shared on a basis of approximately two-thirds by the United States and one-third by Canada, and that Canada and the United States should each initially have responsibility for manning and operating certain specified installations but that Canada might by agreement assume the manning and operation of additional stations.

[2] Not printed.

[3] Not printed. Secretary of State Dean Acheson wrote to Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall on April 25 that the President had endorsed the recommendation on April 14, "Approved, subject to the availability of required funds." This limitation, Acheson thought, was intended only to signify that the United States commitment would be dependent on the appropriation by Congress of the necessary funds. (711.56342/4–2551).

711.56342/5-2351

Memorandum by the Minister of Embassy in Canada (Bliss)[1]

SECRET OTTAWA, April 3, 1951.

Subject: Northeast Command

During the war, even before the United States was directly engaged, the defense of Newfoundland was a matter of concern to both the United States and Canada. As the war progressed both countries invested heavily in new military bases for the defense of northeastern Canada against attack by land, sea or air. The Newfoundland Bases played an important role on the air route to the United Kingdom from the United States and Canada, as well as in the sea and air protection of ocean convoys.

In connection with these activities Canada constructed a naval base at St. John's for the British Admiralty, greatly extended the air fields at Gander and Botwood, and built new air bases at Goose Bay and at Torbay. The United States, following conclusion of the Newfoundland Bases Agreement in 1941, constructed an army garrison post at Fort Pepperrell, near St. John's, a naval base at Argentia and an air field at Stephenville, all on territory leased for 99 years. In addition, the United States shared with Canadians the air base facilities at Gander and at Goose Bay. All of these air fields became of great importance as staging and transit points on the main route to Europe.[2]

After the war and until 1950 the U.S. Leased Bases in Newfoundland relapsed to a peace-time basis. U.S. facilities at Gander were turned back to Canada, but a portion of the installation at Goose Bay was still used by the United States, mostly for MATS operations, and the continued operation of Goose Bay as an air base was agreed by the PJBD as necessary for mutual defense. Argentia became primarily a U.S. naval depot and training station, and the naval air field at Argentia became the USAF station for weather and rescue services. Fort Pepperrell, upon departure of the army garrison, became headquarters of the U.S. Newfoundland Base Command of the USAF, using for communication purposes the nearby Canadian air field at Torbay, now a civil airdrome operated by the Canadian Department of Transport. Harmon Field at Stephenville continued as a U.S. air base to function as a transit point for USAF traffic to Europe, supplemented by Goose Bay.

To some extent in 1949, but at a greatly increased tempo in 1950, the entire picture changed as international tensions increased and as the United States turned to rearmament and to the formulation of global air strategy for a possible conflict. For the next two or three years, as the strategic planning develops, Newfoundland will become of growing importance to the United States. Requirements for planned strategic air operations have been stepped up to a point where existing facilities available to the United States are wholly inadequate. As a result, steps have been taken to lease a portion of the Goose Bay Air Base by the United States for a period of twenty years [3] and to construct important installations for operational requirements of the U.S. Strategic Air Command.[4] Arrangements are going forward to lease additional small areas in the vicinity of the existing bases for the installation of a global communications system. Present plans call for a possible United States requirement for a greatly expanded air base at Torbay. There is also the possibility that still another large air base may be constructed by the United States in Newfoundland on a site not yet determined.

[1] Bliss gave a copy of this memorandum to Norris S. Haselton, the Officer in Charge of Dominion Affairs, when Haselton visited Ottawa in April.

[2] For a detailed account of U.S.-Canadian defense arrangements during World War II, see Stanley W. Dziuban, Military Relations Between the United States and Canada, 1939–1945, in the United States Army in World War II series (Washington, Office of the Chief of Military History, 1959).

These Torbay projects, which are still in the planning stage, have not yet been considered by Canada on the government level, and they may be modified by political considerations. The proposal to use Torbay for the purposes of the Strategic Air Command as an operating base or even as a transit point, may have to be abandoned in the face of objections that it is too near a center of population. In that case it may be necessary to develop an alternative in the form of an entirely new base at a safe distance from any settled community, and possibly still another one. Goose Bay, of course, does not involve such considerations and that project has been approved.

These projected developments have profoundly affected the nature and extent of United States military activity in northeastern Canada. In the case of global conflict, taking into account the plans of the United States Strategic Air Command, northeastern Canada will be much more than a staging area on the route from the United States to Europe. It is now rapidly becoming an operating area, with bases from which attacks on the enemy may be launched and to which enemy counter-attacks may be directed.

In view of this radical development the U.S. military organization was modified toward the end of 1950 by establishing the Northeast Command under Major General Whitten, USAF,[5] with headquarters at Fort Pepperrell. The MATS operations in this area, formerly [3] See the Department's instruction 168 to Ottawa, April 3, 1951, infra.

---

[4] For documentation on U.S.-Canadian discussions on this subject, see vol. I, pp. 802 ff.

[5] The Joint Chiefs of Staff established the U.S. Northeast Command as a unified command (controlling forces of more than one service) on October 1, 1950, and appointed Maj. Gen. Lyman P. Whitten, USAF, as Commander in Chief, Northeast (CINCNE). At the same time the U.S. Air Force inactivated the U.S. Newfoundland and Greenland Base Commands and the Air Force component of the U.S. Northeast Command, also with Maj. Gen. Whitten as Commander.

directed from the United States, have been incorporated in this command. General Whitten's command now covers all United States military activities in northeastern Canada except those of Argentia Naval Base, which is quite appropriate in view of the fact that all such activities are carried on by the USAF.

Extensive revision of present Canadian arrangements may also be necessary. Certainly the existing status at Torbay, as a civil airport operated by the Department of Transport, will have to be radically altered. Before that field can be extended and rebuilt to meet U.S. requirements, it will have to be taken over by the RCAF, with perhaps a portion set aside for civil air operations. If the war-time pattern is repeated new construction will be at the expenses of the United States, but further use of Canadian territory by the United States will be necessary.

In this connection there is an observable Canadian reluctance to enter into any new arrangements which will have the effect of turning over additional Canadian territory to the United States for a long period, as in the case of the Newfoundland Bases Agreement. The present tendency, of which the current Goose Bay lease is an example, is to limit such arrangements to twenty years, thus linking them theoretically with the life of the North Atlantic Treaty, and to justify additional U.S. activities as essential to the defense of the Atlantic area.

During the war the defense of Newfoundland and neighboring territories, together with the operations based on that area, were organized as a joint command in which the United States and the Canadian commanders collaborated by mutual agreement. Under present conditions the Northeast Command, which is responsible for the great bulk of military activity in northeastern Canada, far overshadows the Canadian command structure. Canadian operations are of relatively minor significance, commanded by officers far junior to General Whitten. Up to the present they have coordinated Canadian activities through a committee of the designated commanders of Army, Navy and Air Force, but they may soon be placed under a single commander, probably an Air Force officer.

In case of hostilities General Whitten, under his directives, would be responsible for the defense of the Leased Bases and of any other installation which the United States operates or may develop at Goose Bay, Torbay, in Greenland or elsewhere. This defense responsibility, as matters stand, is limited to air defense, including the air defense of Argentia outside the actual naval base.

With the rapid development of military activities in Newfoundland the responsibilities of Canada for defense of that area have been greatly increased. It is of course a fact that air defense of the U.S. installations will have the effect of providing a measure of defense for the entire northeastern area. However, General Whitten's responsibilities will not extend to the defense of Canadian installations apart from those used by the United States nor will it extend to the civilian population. The strategic planning which is in progress will, as already indicated, involve the population of northeastern Canada heavily and Canadian responsibilities for their defense will decrease [increase] correspondingly.

As far as we know there has been no planning for combined U.S.–Canadian action in northeastern Canada in the event of an emergency, beyond an assumption that something like the pattern of World War II might be repeated. There is some doubt among the Canadian planners that this would be adequate in the circumstances, taking into account the drastic increase in military activity which might be expected. There is also doubt among Canadian planners as to their ability to obtain from their government the Canadian military facilities which the situation would demand, especially in view of the fact that the very existence of these requirements derives from activities for which the United States is primarily responsible. It is therefore believed that some careful thinking should be devoted to this problem.

Presumably no joint command would be adequate in the circumstances, but Canada would find it difficult to accept a U.S. command as a result of a bilateral agreement. Cabinet Ministers already have enough trouble, and will have more trouble, over the political problems created by United States activities in Newfoundland. As one aspect of this situation it may be remarked that American and Canadian collaboration in defense is provided for in the structure of NATO, but as yet this has been implemented only through creation of the Regional Planning Group. In the rest of the NATO organization these planning groups have been superseded by commands and the commanders-in-chief have been named. There is no ready explanation for the exception which has been made in the case of the United States and Canada.

However, if this gap in the NATO structure were filled by the creation of an appropriate command a number of useful purposes might be served. It would certainly facilitate Canadian contributions to the defense of northeastern Canada, since they would not be the result of pressure from the United States but would represent Canadian participation in the defense of the Atlantic area. Incidentally, Canada's share in this would then represent a contribution to NATO, for which Canada would receive credit in the international accounting. Finally, of course, the establishment of a NATO command in this area might solve the otherwise difficult problem of naming an American commander with defense responsibilities for a significant portion of Canadian territory.[6]

DON C. BLISS

[6] Haselton wrote to Bliss on May 23 that the idea of a joint command had been considered on several occasions by the Joint Chiefs of Staff but that for the time being there was no possibility that such a command structure would be established (711.56342/5–2351).

711.56342/4–351

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Canada

SECRET WASHINGTON, April 3, 1951.

No. 168

The Secretary of State transmits herewith a copy of a self-explanatory letter dated March 17, 1951 from the Secretary of Defense [1] requesting the Department to initiate with the Canadian Government an exchange of notes by which certain areas of the Royal Canadian Air Force Station at Goose Bay, Labrador, would be leased to the United States for military purposes.

The letter from the Secretary of Defense attaches a copy of a proposed note [2] which has been agreed upon by the Air Forces of the two countries. Also attached are copies of excerpts from the Journals of the Permanent Joint Board on Defense for its meetings of March, 1950 and February, 1951 [3] containing the discussions in the Board on Goose Bay, the arrangements regarding jurisdiction and other matters at the Newfoundland Bases, and the form of the proposed Goose Bay lease.

At the February, 1951 meeting of the Board, the Canadian authorities indicated that they wished to make no reference in the proposed lease agreement to the subjects of jurisdiction, customs and excise privileges, and postal facilities. However, it was made clear that the Government of Canada had not changed its position on these points and that it was prepared to proceed with the arrangements agreed upon at the Board's meeting of March, 1950.[4] The Canadian Section offered, and the United States Section agreed to accept, a letter from the

[1] The letter from Acting Secretary of Defense Robert A. Lovett to Secretary of State Acheson, March 17, 1951, is not printed (711.56342/3–1751).

[2] The draft note, dated February 19, 1951, stated that the Canadian Government was willing to grant the United States a 20-year lease, under specified terms, of portions of the Royal Canadian Air Force Station at Goose Bay (711.56342/3–1751). It was identical to a note from the Canadian Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs to the U.S. Ambassador, December 5, 1952, which was part of a formal exchange of notes on that date effecting an agreement. For the text of the agreement, see 3 UST (pt. 4), 5295–5299.

[3] Not printed.

[4] According to the excerpts from the PJBD Journal of the March 1950 meeting, the Board agreed that the arrangements which it recommended at the same meeting for the Leased Bases in Newfoundland should also apply to the leased areas at Goose Bay (711.56342/3–1751). The Board's recommendation concerning the Leased Bases was put into effect in an exchange of notes February 13 and March 19, 1952. For the text of this agreement, including the text of the PJBD recommendation of March 28–30, 1950, see 3 UST (pt. 3), 4271–4275.

Canadian Government to accompany the exchange of notes expressing the Canadian Government's intention to seek legislation which would give the United States the same privileges at Goose Bay as at the other bases in Newfoundland. The attached letter from the Department of Defense states that an exchange of notes substantially in the form enclosed will be satisfactory from the military point of view if accompanied by such a letter from the Government of Canada. However, the Department of Defense wishes to reserve final concurrence to the note and associated papers which will be submitted by the Government of Canada to the United States Government.

The Embassy's attention is invited to Section IV, subparagraph 7 of the Board's Journal of the March, 1950 meeting, which states that "all proposed United States service projects in Canada based on the United States area to have the prior approval of the Canadian Government". It is noted that this provision is not included in the proposed exchange of notes regarding Goose Bay. The Department understands that representatives of the United States Air Force discussed this question informally with officials of the Royal Canadian Air Force and it was decided to omit this condition. However, to avoid any possibility of misunderstanding, it is suggested that the Officer in Charge discuss this point informally with officials of the Department of External Affairs, in order to confirm that the Canadian Government is willing to omit this provision.

The proposed note has been reviewed by interested officers of the Department and no objection is perceived to it.

The Officer in Charge is requested, therefore, to seek the agreement of the Canadian Government to the enclosed note for the lease of Goose Bay, and to obtain from the Canadian Government a draft of the proposed letter regarding privileges and immunities which is to accompany the lease agreement. The Embassy is requested to transmit the Canadian draft letter and other supporting papers, as well as the proposed Canadian note (if any changes are made in the attached draft) to the Department for final approval by this Government before the formal exchange takes place.

642.00/4–1051

The Ambassador in Canada (Woodward) to the Secretary of State

RESTRICTED AIR PRIORITY OTTAWA, April 10, 1951.

No. 1325

Subject: "Canadian Foreign Policy in a Two-Power World."

A major policy address was given by External Affairs Minister L. B. Pearson [1] to a joint meeting of the Canadian and Empire Clubs in Toronto on April 10. The full text of an advance copy of the speech is herewith enclosed.[2]

[1] Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs Lester B. Pearson.

The speech should be read in entirety as it is a rather disjointed exposition of present Canadian foreign policy with particular emphasis on United States–Canada relations. It is expected that this aspect of the speech will receive the greatest attention in the press and radio and it is probably true that such attention will concentrate on direct statements rather than on qualifying phrases or on those sections which praise United States leadership.

A local newspaper, the Ottawa Journal, headlines its article: "Free and Easy U.S.–Canadian Day is Done—Pearson lays down Ottawa's 'Declaration of Independence' ". The headline is based on the following statement in the address: "The days of relatively easy and automatic political relations with our neighbor are, I think over." This may be taken as indicative of the manner in which press and radio will handle the speech.

That section of the address pertaining to U.S.–Canada relations is not critical of the United States Government but of attitudes which Mr. Pearson senses as current in some quarters in the United States. He feels that Americans are too quick to criticize Canada, and he seeks to refute the grounds on which these charges are laid.

For the Ambassador:
L. DEAN BROWN
Second Secretary of Embassy

[2] Not printed.

611.42/4–1751

Memorandum by the Minister of Embassy in Canada (Bliss) to the Ambassador in Canada (Woodward)

OTTAWA, April 17, 1951.

Subject: Pearson's Speeches.

Haselton has informed me by telephone that Tony Satterthwaite [1] proposes to telephone you tomorrow regarding the United States reaction to Pearson's speeches on the subject of relationship between Canada and the United States. It appears that Pearson's statements have received considerable attention in the Department of State at the Assistant Secretary level, even at the time when the MacArthur affair [2] might have been expected to monopolize attention.

[1] Livingston Satterthwaite, Deputy Director, Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs.

[2] On April 11, General of the Army Douglas MacArthur was relieved of his command of United States Army forces in the Far East and United Nations forces in Korea. For documentation on this subject, see volume VII.

Tony appears to think it desirable to let Pearson know that his views have been carefully noted in the State Department, have been widely discussed, and have received careful attention. He does not propose that you argue the matter with Pearson or give him the impression that we are unduly concerned. However, it might contribute to a more friendly attitude if you could convey to Pearson, in a joshing manner, the impression that his viewpoint has received full attention in the State Department.

611.42/4–1851

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Ambassador in Canada (Woodward)

OTTAWA, April 18, 1951.

Subject: Mr. Pearson's Toronto Speech, April 10, 1951

In a conversation today with Minister of External Affairs L. B. Pearson, I told him that the State Department had asked me to assure him it had given most careful consideration to the remarks made in his Toronto speech on April 10th, and that the speech had received a very wide coverage in the American press—in fact, a bigger spread than anything which had happened affecting US–Canadian relations for a long time. At the suggestion of the Department,[1] I added that the only possible ill effect of his remarks might be that those in agencies of the Government other than the State Department might question the "special position" Canada had always enjoyed. By this I meant in the Office of Defense Mobilization and the Pentagon, where other countries and the representatives of other countries were always seeking special consideration for priorities on scarce materials, machine tools, etc. I said that the Department had wanted me to mention this not as a cause for alarm, but only as a possibility.

Mr. Pearson confirmed a statement made to me earlier by Mr. Heeney, Under Secretary of State,[2] to the effect that the speech had been made primarily for Canadian consumption and to prepare Canadian public opinion for possible action by the Canadian Government with respect to the Far East. By this, Mr. Pearson explained, he meant that if the fighting in Korea spread to China, his Government might have to reconsider its position with respect to the commitment of troops in the Far East, in spite of any action the United States Government might take. In other words, Mr. Pearson said, if General

[1] Apparently made in an unrecorded telephone conversation.

[2] Woodward discussed Pearson's speech with Under Secretary of State for External Affairs A. D. P. Heeney on April 11, reported in despatch 1340, April 13, not printed (642.00/4–1451).

MacArthur could not be controlled, and led the United Nations Forces into war on the Chinese mainland, the Canadian Government might well feel that it could not associate itself in such a military venture. Mr. Pearson added that his Government had lost all confidence in General MacArthur,[3] and that he would not have made his remarks the way he did, had he known that General MacArthur was to be relieved as he was within a few hours after the Toronto address. Pearson added that he greatly appreciated Mr. Acheson's telephoning Mr. Wrong[4] in Washington at midnight, April 10th, an hour or so before the White House announcement on General MacArthur.

The Minister also said that he felt Canadian public opinion, and to some extent, United States public opinion, should be educated to the fact that Canada is growing up as a nation. Some years ago Canada had always been fearful of too much control from London, and to a certain extent it had now transferred this fear to Washington. He had made a number of speeches in New York at the United Nations and elsewhere, in Parliament, and throughout Canada, to which little attention had been paid, saying the same thing—that Canada had to assume its responsibilities in the world today, and especially in the "two-power world" today. He had always gone out of his way to express his gratitude for the fact that Canada was not like Poland, although each lived beside one of the two great powers—but that nevertheless Canada had to learn to approach its problems in a spirit of independence, recognizing and being thankful for the leadership of the United States in the free world. This part of the Toronto speech Mr. Pearson said he would have made anyway, MacArthur or no MacArthur.

The Minister seemed to be pleased with the attention paid to his remarks in the American press, as well as by the fan mail he had received from Canadians.

At the conclusion of our conversation I jokingly reminded the Minister that I had been invited by the Ottawa Kiwanis Club to attend a luncheon meeting next week at which he was to be the guest speaker, and that the topic announced by the Club was "United States–Canada Friendship Day". Mr. Pearson laughed and said that he guessed he had better speak about "the undefended border and the 135 years of peace". As I left I invited him and his wife to dinner at the Embassy, and he invited me to attend the opening baseball game with him at Lansdowne Park.

STANLEY WOODWARD

---

[3] For documentation on the Canadian viewpoint concerning the Korean War and General MacArthur, see volume VII.

[4] Canadian Ambassador to the United States Hume Wrong.

711.56342/5–1151

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Joseph J. Wolf of the Office of European Regional Affairs

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] May 11, 1951.

Subject: US–Canadian Base Negotiations.

Participants: Peter M. Towe, Third Secretary, Canadian Embassy
Joseph J. Wolf, Bureau of Regional Affairs EUR: RA

Mr. Towe called at 10 a. m. May 10 at his request. He resumed the conversation reported in Memorandum of Conversation of May 7,[1] (when he had obtained clarification of the US–Iceland Defense Agreement of May 5, 1951)[2] by saying that he would like to obtain clarification, on a personal basis, of some further aspects of the bases field.

He then referred to the fact that the meeting of the PJBD now going on[3] might lead to some area of disagreement. In this respect he read from a memorandum of instructions to the Canadian members of the PJBD which he said had been approved by the Prime Minister.[4] The instructions made three points.

1. Canada's intention to cooperate whole-heartedly and fully with the United States with respect to base requirements in the common defense.
2. Canada's firm belief that any rights granted must not be at the expense of Canadian sovereignty.
3. Long-term leases should not be considered as an appropriate vehicle.

With respect to the latter item, Mr. Towe raised the question as to whether the Iceland formula or something like it might apply. He also suggested something along the line of a year-to-year right of user, rather than a vested right for a fixed period.

I responded that I assumed that if Canada was merely going to grant permission to use bases, such would assume Canadian construction at full Canadian expense. Mr. Towe disclaimed any such Canadian intention, and asked whether the infra-structure conversations now going on in the Deputies[5] might not govern these bases. I said that we were studying the infra-structure proposals, but were not yet sure what our position would be with respect thereto. I also said that I thought urgency might compel us to move forward on certain projects before a final overall solution of infra-structure or sharing of the burden was accomplished. Mr. Towe asked what I thought might be a

[1] Not printed.
[2] For text, see 2 UST (pt. 1), 1195–1201.
[3] The PJBD met in Kingston, Ontario, May 7–10, and at Chalk River, Ontario, May 10–11. The Journal of the meeting may be found under file number 711.56342/5–1151.
[4] Louis St. Laurent.
[5] The reference is to discussions in the North Atlantic Council of Deputies of the distribution of costs for permanent military facilities built in connection with the NATO program. For documentation, see volume III.

fair financial formula. I responded that we hoped that host countries, would provide the facilities, particularly if they had the raw materials and manpower, and did not have to expend other than local currency. We agreed that overall budget problems would be relevant. Mr. Towe asked whether any such construction would be given credit as a defense effort with regard to the sharing of the burden exercise, and I said that I could not respond officially, but personally believed that such would be the case.

Reverting to the term of the agreement, Mr. Towe said that Canada did not want to establish long-term lease-holds such as the 99 year lease base agreement, or the 20 year term at Goose Bay, nor did it wish the United States to retain rights after the emergency had expired. He pointed out that the North Atlantic Treaty had connotations going beyond the defense effort, and that we all hoped that the Treaty would continue in force after the present defense emergency was over. He indicated that arrangements made under NATO joint planning should be limited in term to the existence of the NATO military requirement as the maximum term. He specifically asked whether all of our requests would be NATO requests. I said I did not know the details of our refined requests at this time.

In this respect, he remarked that the Prime Minister's memorandum said that the PJBD should be used as the vehicle for negotiation, but said that he personally wondered whether requests for NATO purposes should be obtained through a vehicle other than the PJBD, which had been established primarily with reference to hemispheric defense.

I pointed out to Mr. Towe that from the financial, political, and military point of view, it was necessary to have firm rights which could be used during an emergency and which would not be subject to termination on short-term notice by either party. I remarked that the latter would give no basis for major financial investment, would make uncertain military plans and operations, and would create an atmosphere of political uncertainty. I remarked that the close friendship between Canada and the United States certainly would result in Canadian permission remaining open during any emergency period, and emphasized that it would be best to firm this up clearly in the agreement.

742.561/8–151

The Minister of Embassy in Canada (Bliss) to the Officer in Charge of Dominion Affairs (Haselton)

SECRET OTTAWA, May 16, 1951.

DEAR NORRIE: Herewith I am sending you two copies of Canadian draft note [1] on extension of the continental radar defense system, of which you have already received a text from the Canadian Embassy in Washington. This note represents a revision of a Canadian draft, worked out at our meetings yesterday between Johnson of the U.S.A.F.[2] and officials of Defence Liaison.[3]

Before we got into the substantive problems, I raised the question of why the Government of Canada objects to the exchange of notes and we got a long grumble from Wershof, who felt that we were inconsistent in our attitude. He felt that in the past we have been able to carry out many PJBD recommendations without exchanging diplomatic notes, and indicated that the Canadians are quite satisfied to have the agreement of the President in this instance; Johnson replied that this particular PJBD recommendation obviously required further action than contemplated in the recommendation itself, and that very few PJBD recommendations can stand by themselves. Wershof also felt that our insistence on registration with the UN is not entirely sound when obviously we cannot tell the whole story and in effect hold back vital information; there was no dispute over the necessity for withholding such information, but I suggested that we would at least be informing the UN that we do have such an agreement in giving a general idea of its nature. Wershof remained unconvinced, but there was no further argument along this line.

However, MacKay indicated his own concern because this exchange of notes must be laid before Parliament, which he is reluctant to do. He feels that it implies another cession of territory by Canada to the United States, the advent of additional U.S. troops on Canadian soil, and all that, and that Canadian public opinion will react adversely to this and other projects now in train. Johnson and I, discussing this after the meeting, felt that the Canadian public is not as sensitive in these matters as MacKay implies. My own feeling is that the Cabinet, which in effect is the Government of Canada, is the sensitive point, and a real problem is to get officials to put through proposals and persuade their Ministers to accept them. After that hump is passed it is fairly easy sailing.

---

[1] Not found in the Department of State files, but apparently similar in substance to the note that was sent by the Canadian Ambassador to the Secretary of State, August 1, 1951, in an exchange of notes constituting a formal agreement. For text, see 5 UST (pt. 2), 1721–1724.

[2] John A. Johnson, Associate General Counsel, U.S. Air Force.

[3] R. A. MacKay, Head of the Defence Liaison Division, Canadian Department of External Affairs, and Max H. Wershof.

Without going into detail regarding our redrafting, I can indicate a few of the points which were considered. Generally speaking, our problem was to prepare a note which represented a compromise between opposing Canadian and American objectives. The Canadians wanted no note at all but if they did have to have one they wanted it made clear that Canada is not giving away anything to the United States, remains in full possession of the sites and permanent structures erected on Canadian soil, and has the option of manning the stations with Canadian personnel. In a collateral discussion with Air Vice Marshal James [4] it was established by Johnson that the R.C.A.F. does not see its way clear to man any more than a minimum number of stations, but MacKay wants to suggest, for Canadian consumption, that Canadian personnel may be used if too many Americans seem to be intruding on Canadian territory. Johnson, on the other hand, wanted a paper which would make it clear that the United States has an interest in these radar stations, including a property interest sufficient to justify appropriations for their construction and operation on foreign soil. He would be much happier if paragraph 6 did not contain a reference to "structures permanently affixed to the realty" [5] but MacKay seemed to feel that this is necessary from the Canadian viewpoint.

An important twist in the revised draft has been a rewording of the phraseology to disassociate the manning of the stations from the operation of the stations.[6] By doing this it makes it possible for the Canadians to represent themselves as manning or at least authorized to man, any or all of the stations with Canadian personnel. At the same time it makes it possible for Johnson to maintain that the United States has operating responsibility, thus justifying an appropriation for this purpose, whether for the maintenance of U.S. personnel on the stations or for their manning by R.C.A.F. personnel on a contractual basis. It is only this gimmick which makes it possible, to my mind, for Johnson even to suggest that this draft might be saleable in the Pentagon.

It is my own feeling that the reference in paragraph 6 to permanent structures is a somewhat excessive Canadian requirement, since it makes these structures Canadian property as soon as they are erected. It is difficult for me to understand why Canada could not

---

[4] Air Vice Marshal A. L. James, Royal Canadian Air Force.

[5] Paragraph 6 of the Canadian note cited in footnote 1 above stated that the United States should retain ownership of all property which it placed on the sites, "other than structures permanently affixed to the realty."

[6] Paragraph 2 of the Canadian note cited in footnote 1 above provided that the United States and Canada should each assume financial responsibility for the operation of those stations allocated to them by agreement between the two governments. Paragraph 7 provided that both countries should initially man certain stations according to arrangements agreed upon by the two governments and that Canada might, by agreement, take over the manning of stations initially manned by the United States.

accept an arrangement whereby these structures would remain U.S. property as long as a station is in operation, on the understanding that they would revert to Canada when operations are discontinued. If we want to fight on any point, this is the one I would pick. On the other hand, if we can overlook it perhaps it would be wiser to do so.

The Canadians also inserted a proviso in paragraph 5 (a) regarding prior approval for construction and installations. This is an analogy of the Goose Bay arrangement.[7] Apparently the R.C.A.F. felt that without such a proviso the U.S.A.F. might undertake over-ambitious construction which might involve Canada in excessive operating costs. I doubt that it has great substance, other than as a precaution. In response to my direct question MacKay indicated that he thought the existence of this proviso in the Goose Bay lease had exercised some influence on U.S. planning for that project. Anyway, they seem to attach some importance to it.

As I informed you over the telephone, I have arranged with MacKay that the next action in this case will be taken by the United States after Johnson has endeavored to sell his draft in Washington. We agreed that Johnson has the harder task. MacKay would not commit himself to Canadian acceptance of this draft, but his general attitude was one of confidence that he could persuade his Minister to accept it and that it would go through the Cabinet Defence Committee. However, it will not be presented to the Cabinet until we hear from you.

Sincerely yours, BLISS

[7] The proposed agreement for a U.S. lease at Goose Bay provided that "all new major construction in the Leased Areas shall have the prior approval of the Commanding Officer, Royal Canadian Air Force Station Goose Bay" (711.56342/3–1751).

742.13/6–1251

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs (Perkins) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] June 12, 1951.

Subject: Discussion with Canadian Minister for External Affairs Pearson on June 13.

Mr. Pearson is leaving for England at the end of the week. He is to receive an honorary degree at Oxford and also plans to see a number of British and Western European officials while he is on his trip in addition to taking a holiday. In view of the fact that he will be talking to a number of Western Europeans, we think it is likely that he intends to talk with you at dinner Wednesday [1] largely on European questions in order to get the benefit of your current thinking on these problems.[2]

[1] June 13.

Tab A [3] contains a reference to the Far East and the U.N. which we recommend that you raise with Mr. Pearson inasmuch as potential differences in this area constitute, in our opinion, the only important source of disagreement with Canada on foreign affairs.

Under Tab B [4] is included a list of some of the questions which Mr. Pearson may well raise concerning our European policy. Since there are few points of actual difference between the two countries with respect to European policy, this list merely contains questions in which the Canadians have shown considerable interest. The annex does not attempt to brief you on these questions as they comprise our major European problems with which you are familiar, and as the talk on both sides will almost certainly be in the nature of an exchange of background views.

Tab C [5] contains for your background information certain observations with respect to the present status of U.S.-Canadian relations in general.

[Annex]

Memorandum Prepared in the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON, June 12, 1951.]

BACKGROUND INFORMATION CONCERNING STATUS OF UNITED STATES-CANADIAN RELATIONS

1. Attitudes in the Department of External Affairs

Since the end of the war, many Canadian officials in the Department of External Affairs have viewed the relative decline in British economic and military power as an opportunity, and even as a compulsion, for Canada to assume a new role of leadership in the Commonwealth and in international organizations generally. These officials, headed by Mr. Pearson himself, and Mr. Arnold Heeney, the Under Secretary, and supported by many junior officers, now stress the independence of Canada's decisions in international matters and her increasingly important role in multilateral negotiations. On the reverse side of the coin, they have a tendency to play down the effects of Canada's bilateral ties with the U.S., to insist on the inviolateness of Canadian

[2] No record of this conversation has been found in the Department of State files. On June 14, Acheson and Pearson, along with other Canadian representatives and members of the State Department, discussed various aspects of international affairs. For the record of this conversation, see vol. I, p. 845.

[3] "Far East," not printed.

[4] "Europe," not printed.

[5] See Annex, below.

territory and to become easily irritated over what they consider our lack of appreciation of Canadian interests and views. This attitude, while strongest in External Affairs, is not uncommon in Canadian intellectual circles. It is responsible in some measure for the importance which Canadian External Affairs officials attach to problems with the United States, particularly in regard to cooperation in joint defense projects. The tendency in External Affairs to exaggerate the sensitivity of the Canadian public creates difficulties and delays in the implementation of various defense measures, even though the arrangements have been approved by the Permanent Joint Board on Defense.

2. Pearson's speech of April 10, 1951

In this speech, Mr. Pearson reflected clearly the attitude mentioned above. He foresaw the end of relatively "easy and automatic political relations" with the United States due to the growing importance of multilateral contacts for both countries. The speech generally emphasized the points of difference between the U.S. and Canada rather than the points of agreement. Mr. Pearson has attempted to explain the speech as a means of preparing Canadian public opinion for feared further public differences with the United States in the UN on the Far East. It has caused some government officials in Canada, both in External Affairs and in other Departments, to view questions with the U.S. not simply as problems to which solutions should be found, but as international incidents involving Canadian prestige. The Department's policy has been to ignore the speech completely, and, by giving it little publicity, to contain its effects. It is suggested that the Secretary treat the speech with a minimum of comment.

3. Attitude of the Canadian Public Towards the United States

The attitudes prevailing in External Affairs do not appear to be shared to any appreciable extent by other Canadian Government Departments or by the public at large. As has been the case for many years, there does exist in Canada a moderate amount of feeling against the United States compounded of frustration, envy, and fear of absorption. There is little indication that this feeling is much stronger now than previously. However, ill-considered criticisms of United States policy by Canadian Government leaders and unfavorable action by the Congress on the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project,[6] which has wide support among the Canadian people, could create in Canada considerable public irritation against this country.

[6] For documentation on this subject, see pp. 903 ff.

711.56342/7–1451

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Canada

RESTRICTED WASHINGTON, July 23, 1951.

No. 9

The Secretary of State refers to the Department's instruction No. 134, dated February 19, 1951,[1] regarding the request of the United States Air Force for the use of sites for global communications facilities near Ernest Harmon and Pepperrell Air Force Bases in Newfoundland. Reference is made also to the Embassy's despatch No. 1098, dated February 26, 1951, and to despatch No. 1126, dated March 1, 1951, on this same subject.[2]

The Department transmits two copies of a letter dated July 14, 1951, from the Secretary of Defense,[3] giving further details about the communications facilities and their operations, in accordance with the request contained in the Embassy's despatch No. 1098. The letter also states that the draft note attached to the Embassy's despatch No. 1126 is acceptable to the United States Air Force with three exceptions which are noted in detail.

The Air Force states that 180 acres of land are now desired at the Flat Rock site near Pepperrell Air Force Base in lieu of the seventy-two acres previously requested.

The United States Air Force also requests that efforts be made to have the Government of Canada bear the expense of the acquisition of land areas necessary for the project, inasmuch as these communications facilities are of importance to the mutual defense of the North Atlantic region, and since they will be acquired and owned by the Canadian Government and merely made available to the United States for a period of twenty years.

With respect to jurisdiction and other privileges and immunities, the Department requests the Embassy to seek the Canadian Government's agreement that United States personnel on the communications sites shall receive the same privileges as those accorded to United States personnel on the Leased Bases.

The Officer in Charge is requested to seek the approval of the Canadian Government for the use of the global communications sites by the United States Air Force, on the basis indicated, and to inform the Department as soon as possible of the reply.

---

[1] See p. 870.
[2] See pp. 871 and 874.
[3] Not printed.

742.561/8–151

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs (Raynor) to the Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs (Perkins)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] August 1, 1951.

Subject: Exchange of notes with Canada providing for construction of Continental Radar Defense System

Discussion

The Permanent Joint Board on Defense, Canada–United States, some months ago agreed on the details of a continental radar defense system to consist of 31 stations located in Canada, to be built jointly by the U.S. and Canadian Governments, with the U.S. paying two-thirds ($100 million) of the cost, Canada paying the balance. The recommendations of the P.J.B.D. have been approved by the Secretaries of Defense and State and by the President.[1] The Canadian Cabinet has likewise approved the recommendation.

The texts of the notes to be exchanged formalizing the understanding[2] were agreed upon some weeks ago. At the last moment, however, Canada told us that although the text of the notes was still acceptable to the Canadian Government, it was unwilling to agree that the exchange of notes should be registered with the U.N. This position was apparently based on fear of adverse public opinion in Canada. The U.S. Air Force, which is the action agency on our side, continued to maintain very strongly, however, that it must have something more than the P.J.B.D. recommendation in writing to justify to Congress the expenditure of the funds. The Department of State has maintained throughout that, if notes were exchanged, they would have to be registered with the U.N. In view of Canada's unwillingness to agree to registration it became necessary to find some acceptable compromise, which was achieved when the Canadians indicated that they would agree to our suggestion that registration of the notes need not necessarily take place in the immediate future and that before registration is accomplished we would consult with the Government of Canada. This position is acceptable to L.

In connection with the exchange of notes, the Canadians also desire assurances on two points: (1) that the U.S., as previously agreed, will sign, as promptly as possible, contracts for the construction of our part of the project; and (2) that we will assure the Government of Canada (in reply to a letter which the Canadian Ambassador will presumably hand you today) that the U.S. Government does not consider that this project in any way constitutes U.S. aid to Canada. BNA is assured by the Air Force that there should be no undue delay as regards the first of these two points, and has cleared with L the matter of assuring Canada that no implication of aid is involved.

[1] See the memorandum for the President, March 2, p. 875.

[2] The texts of the notes exchanged in Washington on August 1 are printed in 5 UST (pt. 2), 1721–1724.

Recommendations

(1) That you sign the attached note in reply to the note which will be handed to you today by the Canadian Ambassador, the exchange constituting an inter-governmental agreement; (2) that you tell the Ambassador that the Department will not press for registration in the immediate future, and that it will consult with Canada before registering the notes; (3) that you inform the Ambassador that the Department has been assured by a responsible official of the U.S. Department of Air Force that there should be no undue delay in finalizing the various construction contracts; and (4) that, if the Canadian Ambassador hands you a letter requesting a statement that the project involves no U.S. aid to Canada, you reply that a communication to this effect will be forthcoming in due course.

742.561/8–151

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Dominion Affairs (Haselton)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] August 1, 1951.

Subject: Exchange of Notes on Radar Screen

Participants: Hume Wrong, Canadian Ambassador
EUR—Mr. Perkins
BNA—Mr. Raynor
BNA—Mr. Haselton

Ambassador Wrong handed Assistant Secretary Perkins at 4:30 today the Canadian Embassy's note No. 454, dated August 1, 1951,[1] setting forth the Canadian Government's understanding of the agreement, based on the recommendations of the Permanent Joint Board on Defense, on the extension and coordination of the continental radar defense system. The Ambassador told Mr. Perkins that Canada had decided to exchange notes and enter into a formal inter-governmental agreement on this project only with reluctance and chiefly because the situation of the Canadian Defense Production Minister, who had been advancing funds for U.S. account without formal authorization from the U.S., had become "intolerable". These advances now total something over $6 million, the Ambassador said. Canada's attitude with respect to exchanging notes with the U.S. is due largely to its reluctance to agree to registration of the inter-governmental agreement with the U.N. The Ambassador stated frankly that his Government feared some adverse public reaction when the terms of the agreement were published, and for this reason asks that the Department not proceed to register these notes with the U.N. "in the near future", and that the United States consult with Canada before registering the agreement. The Ambassador added that he understood the phrase "near future" to mean at least a year. Mr. Perkins said the Department is willing to agree not to press for early registration of the agreement and will consult with Canada before registration takes place. On the other hand, the Department could not commit itself to any specific period in this connection.

[1] Not printed.

The Ambassador asked that in view of the delay in finalizing the agreement and the advances which have been made by the Canadian Government for U.S. account, that the Air Force proceed as soon as possible to finalize the contracts with Defense Construction, Ltd., covering construction of the radar stations. Mr. Perkins told the Ambassador that the Department had been assured by responsible officials of the USAF that this matter would be taken care of as soon as possible.

The Ambassador then read and handed to Mr. Perkins a letter dated August 1 (copy attached),[2] requesting assurances that nothing in connection with the radar project would be interpreted as constituting U.S. aid to Canada. Mr. Perkins told the Ambassador that a reply to this effect would be forthcoming in the very near future.

Mr. Perkins then handed to the Ambassador the Department's note dated August 1 agreeing to the terms of the Canadian note on the radar project and constituting a formal agreement between the two countries.[3]

---

[2] Infra.

[3] For text, see 5 UST (pt. 2), 1721–1724.

742.561/8–151

The Canadian Ambassador (Wrong) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, August 1, 1951.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In connection with today's exchange of notes [1] constituting an agreement between our governments for the establishment of a radar chain in Canadian territory as part of the defences of the North American Continent, I have been asked to bring to your attention a question regarded as of considerable importance by the Canadian Government. The Canadian Government does not receive financial or economic assistance from the United States and is anxious to avoid the appearance of being a recipient of aid.[2] The radar network is a project which the defence authorities of the United States consider to be essential for the protection of the United States; at the same time its construction is in the interests of Canada. It is thus a co-operative defence project which is being undertaken in the interests of both countries, and it would be completely incorrect if it were to be interpreted as constituting in any way United States aid to Canada.

---

[1] See supra.

The understanding of the Canadian Government is, therefore, that the conclusion of this agreement in no way implies that Canada can be regarded as becoming a recipient of aid from the United States. I should be glad if you would confirm that you share this understanding, and also if you would take steps to ensure that, as a result of the agreement, Canada will not be incorrectly classified by any agency of the United States Government as one of the countries receiving aid from the United States.[3]

Believe me, my dear Mr. Secretary,

Yours very sincerely, HUME WRONG

---

[2] Canada had been included in a list of countries receiving assistance from the United States in connection with the Kem Amendment to H.R. 3587, signed by the President on June 2, 1951, which forbade aid from the United States to countries exporting certain items to the Soviet bloc. Canada had been included in the list because of a loan from the Export–Import Bank to a Canadian company, but the Legal Division had subsequently determined, as reported in a memorandum of July 16, 1951, by the Assistant Legal Adviser for Economic Affairs, Michael H. Cardozo, to the Director of the Office of Economic Defense and Trade Policy, John M. Leddy, that, since the company was controlled by United States interests, the loan did not constitute aid (460.509/7–1651). On July 18, Acheson noted in a memorandum that the National Security Council had that day authorized the removal of Canada from the list of countries receiving assistance within the terms of the Kem Amendment. (Secretary's Memoranda, Lot 53 D 444)

For documentation concerning the Kem Amendment, see vol. I, pp. 993 ff.

[3] Perkins wrote to Wrong on August 7: "You may assure your Government that this Department is in full accord with this understanding, and that it will use its best efforts to ensure that other agencies of the United States Government not interpret the agreement as involving, in any manner, the extension of aid to Canada" (742.561/8–151).

711.56342/7–1451

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Canada

RESTRICTED WASHINGTON, October 16, 1951.

No. 67

The Secretary of State refers to the Department's instruction No. 9, dated July 23, and to previous correspondence regarding the request of the United States Air Force for the use of sites for global communications facilities near Ernest Harmon and Pepperrell Air Force Bases in Newfoundland.

The Department understands that the Canadian Government has not yet replied to the Embassy's letter of July 25,[1] in which a draft note on the subject was transmitted to the Canadian authorities. The matter was discussed informally at the meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defense on August 21–23, 1951, at which time the Acting Department of External Affairs Member stated that the United States request "would have to be presented to the Cabinet". No information has been received since that time as to whether this action has been taken.

The Officer in Charge is requested to approach again the Canadian Government with a view to obtaining approval of the project. The Department will appreciate being informed of the present status of the matter.[2]

[1] Not printed.

[2] In despatch 396, October 18, not printed, the Embassy reported that the United States request had been in the hands of the Canadian service departments but was now being considered in the Department of External Affairs, which planned to submit it to the Cabinet in the near future. The major consideration in the Department of External Affairs, the Embassy reported, was how to reconcile the U.S. request for a 20-year lease with the position taken by the Prime Minister in May against the granting of any more long term leases for defense purposes (711.56342/10–1851). See memorandum of conversation, May 11, p. 886.

711.5/10–1751

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs (Perkins) to the Deputy Under Secretary of State (Matthews)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] October 17, 1951.

Subject: Background information regarding action in the JCS on possible Canadian Participation in the U.S. Northeast Command.

As you will recall, General Vandenberg[1] raised with the Joint Chiefs of Staff the question of Canada's participation in the Northeast Command and the JCS inquired whether the Department considered that Canadian participation would be desirable from a political point of view.

Mr. Raynor, in his conversation with you on August 8,[2] stated that BNA perceived no objection on political grounds inasmuch as the advantages vis-à-vis Canada would outweigh any possible disadvantages with Denmark.[3] It was our understanding that, upon receiving this affirmative reply from the Department, the JCS would undertake a careful study of the military aspects of the problem.

BNA has learned in confidence that the Air Force introduced in the JCS a proposal that a Canadian officer be assigned under General

[1] Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Chief of Staff, U.S. Air Force.

[2] Raynor described the conversation in a memorandum of that date, not printed (711.5/8–851).

[3] The U.S. Northeast Command's area of responsibility included Greenland.

Whitten as Deputy Commander of the U.S. Northeast Command. The Air Force states that it realizes that the Joint Chiefs would probably not look with favor on making the Northeast Command a Combined Command with the Canadians; therefore, the role of the Canadian officer would have to be carefully defined and limitations would have to be placed on his authority. The Air Force feels that he might be used in bringing about an integrated U.S.-Canadian air defense system for the Island of Newfoundland. They also consider that the Canadian officer might be used by the Northeast Command as a channel of communication with Ottawa for getting Government permission for certain projects, for keeping the Canadian Government informed, and for handling civil defense and other important matters.

The Air Force paper quotes excerpts of a conversation between General Foulkes, Chief of the Canadian Chiefs of Staff Committee, and General Bradley, during the latter's visit to Ottawa.[4] General Foulkes said that Canada was becoming disturbed at the magnitude and importance of the U.S. Northeast Command. In view of the Command's widespread activities, the Canadians thought that they should have a high-ranking officer on General Whitten's staff to coordinate air defense, civil defense and other matters. General Foulkes hinted that what they desired was the position of Deputy Commander, or a Combined Command. It was stated that Canada would not be satisfied with having a "liaison officer" on General Whitten's staff. This proposal had been made by the Air Force and refused by Canada, because it was felt that Canada should have a more important and active role.

BNA has also learned in confidence that the United States Navy will probably dissent strongly within the JCS when the Air Force proposal is discussed. The Navy position, in which it believes the Army will join, is as follows:

1. The U.S. Northeast Command is a U.S. Unified Command, responsible directly to the JCS, and set up to give the JCS greater operational control over U.S. forces. It has no territorial command. It is not desirable to attempt to make a Unified Command into a Combined Command.

2. The U.S.–Canada Regional Group under NATO does not have a NATO Commander and no such command is foreseen at this time. The U.S. Air Force apparently envisages an integrated air defense of the Island of Newfoundland. The Navy considers this undesirable, in that it would imply that the United States was responsible for the defense of Newfoundland.

3. The Navy considers it would be embarrassing to appoint a Canadian officer as Deputy Commander of the Northeast Command, and then to restrict his activities so severely that he would be Deputy in name only. The alternative, however, would mean that the Canadians would probably assume more and more functions until the Command became, in fact, a Combined Command.

[4] General of the Army Omar N. Bradley, Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff, visited Ottawa on August 1 and 2.

The U.S. Navy, as an alternative to the Air Force suggestion, has proposed that a high-ranking Canadian officer be appointed to the Planning Staff of the Northeast Command. This officer would have no command over U.S. troops and such an arrangement would avoid the concept of a Combined Command. This Canadian officer, however, would be in a position to have an intimate knowledge of the plans and operations of the Northeast Command and to coordinate civil defense and other necessary activities. The Navy feels that its proposal would preserve the advantages of Canadian participation in the Northeast Command without the disadvantages which might be brought about by the Air Force proposal.

If the JCS approves the Navy position, they will probably transmit the matter to the United States Section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defense with the request that the Board carry out exploratory discussions with the Canadians. BNA believes that the U.S. Navy position is probably as far as the Department of Defense would be willing to go at present. If the U.S. Section were to make this proposal it would, therefore, have little room for negotiation with the Canadians, who may well find the proposal unsatisfactory. This might bring about a situation which would have the opposite effect from that which the Air Force intends, namely, to gain greater Canadian cooperation on U.S. projects and operations within Canada.

Should this matter be presented to the P.J.B.D., the State Department Member (N.S. Haselton, BNA) plans to advise caution in approaching the Canadians. Although the Department of State has on several occasions in the past urged the U.S. military services to take the Canadians into their confidence and to coordinate more closely with them, it might be better tactics, in view of the above considerations, to wait until we receive a formal approach from the Canadian Government. We would then be able to offer the Navy position as a counter proposal. On the other hand, if the military services insist that we make an offer in order to improve their working relations with the Canadians, Mr. Haselton plans to suggest that we sound out the Canadians informally at a high level, possibly through a private conversation between General Henry, Chairman of the United States Section, and General McNaughton, Chairman of the Canadian Section.[5]

It is hoped that the above information will prove useful in case the Northeast Command should come up for discussion in your meetings with the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

[5] Gen. Andrew George Latta McNaughton, Chairman, Canadian Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defense, Canada–U.S.

711.56342/11-951

The Canadian Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs (Reid) to the Ambassador in Canada (Woodward)[1]

RESTRICTED
No. 322

OTTAWA, November 9, 1951.

The Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs presents his compliments to His Excellency the Ambassador of the United States of America, and has the honour to refer to the Ambassador's Note No. 112 of July 27, 1951, in which the approval of the Canadian Government was requested for the establishment by the United States Air Forces of global communications facilities in certain specified areas in Newfoundland.

The Canadian Government agrees to the extension of global communications by the United States Air Force within the areas in Newfoundland as defined in the Ambassador's Note. The approval of the Canadian Government is given on the following conditions:

(1) The land necessary for the facilities will be acquired by the Canadian Government, which will retain title to it.

(2) This land will be available without charge to the United States for its exclusive use for as long as, in the opinion of both Governments, there is a continuing need for the facilities.

(3) If, at any time in the future, it is decided by either Government that the facilities are no longer necessary for joint defence or for NATO purposes, the land, together with any immovable facilities on it, will, on twelve months' notice, revert to the use of the Canadian Government.[2]

(4) Any movable property placed on the land by the United States may be removed by the United States at any time prior to the evacuation of the property by U.S. forces, or within a reasonable time thereafter.

(5) Arrangements respecting such technical matters as frequencies and powers will be co-ordinated with the Royal Canadian Air Force and the Department of Transport of Canada, and will be subject to the approval of the Department of Transport.

The Canadian Government does not wish at this time to make any commitments on the question of privileges and immunities until the position of the NATO Forces Agreement has been clarified.[3] The [1] A copy of this note was enclosed with despatch 471, November 9.

[2] In a letter of December 11 from the Acting Secretary of State to Secretary of Defense Lovett, inviting the Defense Department's comments on the Canadian note, the State Department called attention to this provision and observed: "In the case of NATO facilities the Department of State could not agree that the Canadian Government would have a unilateral right to determine whether these were necessary for NATO purposes. The Department understands, however, that the global communications project in Newfoundland is a United States requirement, rather than a NATO requirement." (711.56342/12-1151)

[3] For documentation on U.S.-Canadian discussions concerning the applicability of the NATO status of forces agreement to the Newfoundland bases, see volume III.

Canadian Government nevertheless agrees that U.S. forces stationed on the land in question will be granted privileges and immunities on a standard no lower than those set forth in the NATO Forces Agreement, conditional on the approval of that Agreement by the Parliament of Canada.[4]

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

[4] Negotiations concerning the global communications sites continued in 1952.

711.5/12–551

Memorandum by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs (Bonbright) to the Deputy Under Secretary of State (Matthews)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] December 5, 1951.

Subject: Recent developments regarding possible Canadian participation in the U.S. Northeast Command

Reference is made to Mr. Perkins' memorandum of October 17, 1951,[1] regarding General Vandenberg's proposal in the Joint Chiefs of Staff that Canada be given representation in the U.S. Northeast Command, with headquarters in Newfoundland.

On October 26, 1951, the Joint Chiefs of Staff requested the U.S. Section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defense, Canada–U.S. to carry out exploratory discussions with the Canadian Section to ascertain as far as possible Canadian desires and intentions. The position of the Joint Chiefs of Staff was that Canadian representation on the staff of the Commander in Chief, Northeast Command, in positions other than that of Deputy Commander, would be welcomed. The Joint Chiefs of Staff did not consider it necessary or desirable to reorganize the Northeast Command to form a combined Canada–U.S. Command.

At the meeting of the Joint Defense Board on November 12, 1951, the views of the Joint Chiefs of Staff were presented to the Canadian members. At that time, General MacNaughton, Chairman of the Canadian Section, gave the following reply:

"The Canadian Section appreciates the information contained in General Henry's memorandum regarding Canadian participation in the U.S. Northeast Command. The Canadian Section feels the Canadian Chiefs of Staff would desire to await the results of conversations known to be going on between the Commanding General, U.S. Air Defense Command and CINCNE, as well as their own decision regarding defense of the Labrador Coast, before expressing their views on Canadian participation in the U.S. Northeast Command."

[1] See p. 898.

DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA REGARDING THE PROSPECTIVE ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AND POWER PROJECT

Editorial Note

In an Executive Agreement of March 19, 1941, the United States and Canada had agreed, subject to the approval of the United States Congress and the Canadian Parliament, to undertake the joint construction of a deep waterway and power project on the St. Lawrence River. Since 1941, legislation to approve and implement the agreement had been introduced annually in Congress, but no action had been taken. The House Committee on Public Works held hearings on the subject from April 24 through May 10, 1950, but discontinued the hearings before their completion. For the text of the Executive Agreement, see Foreign Relations, 1941, volume III, pages 157–168; for documentation on developments of the interim period, see ibid., 1947, volume III, pp. 104 ff. and ibid., 1949, volume II, pp. 393 ff. For the 1950 hearings, see House Committee on Public Works, Great Lakes–St. Lawrence Basin: Hearings on H.J. Res. 271, 81st Cong., 2d Sess. (Washington, 1950). The Secretary of State's statement at the hearings is printed in the Department of State Bulletin, May 15, 1950, pages 765–768.

611.42321 SL/12–1150

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Dominion Affairs (Benninghoff)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] December 11, 1950.

Subject: The St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project

Participants: Mr. Hume Wrong, Canadian Ambassador
Mr. Gordon Cox, Canadian Embassy
Under Secretary Webb
Mr. Benninghoff, BNA

The Canadian Ambassador called on Mr. Webb as a result of a previous informal conversation in regard to the St. Lawrence project. Mr. Wrong stated that he had just been authorized to suggest that in the near future, perhaps in the middle of January, there be called a conference of experts of both countries to go into the question of the cost of the project. He said that Canadian engineers had gone into this problem more recently than had American experts, and that the people in Ottawa had more up-to-date figures than were available in Washington. He said that Mr. Lindsay of the Department of Transport would lead any such Canadian delegation, and that he supposed that the Army engineers and the Federal Power Commission would be the agencies most interested in the United States in such a technical discussion.

Mr. Webb said that although he could not commit the Administration, he personally felt the suggestion to be a good one and would pass it along with his recommendation. Mr. Wrong promised that he would send a short memorandum on the subject to Mr. Benninghoff for use in preparing further documents.[1]

With regard to the project as a whole, Mr. Wrong conveyed the impression that the Canadian Government was getting anxious about the passage of the Bill in Congress. He pointed out that the time factor was becoming more and more important. If the project is approved at the next session of Congress, the earliest date by which power can be expected in Ontario is 1956, and the consumption of power in Ontario is increasing so rapidly that unless the project is approved fairly soon Canada will, of necessity, be forced to seek other sources. In this connection he mentioned steam power plants, and said that his Government would also probably raise the question of a New York–Ontario agreement if Congressional action is not taken.

With regard to the Seaway, he said that likewise time was a factor. Iron ore from Labrador will be reaching Montreal in 1953 or 1954 when the railway now under construction is finished, and unless the Seaway has definitely been agreed upon, Canada will have to make other arrangements for handling the ore. He mentioned in this connection possible expenditures of about $20 million for rail and dock facilities in Montreal, and the possibility that Canada might build a seaway completely within its own boundaries.

In connection with the above, the Ambassador said that his Government would probably reconsider the whole situation if the Congress had taken no action by approximately April 1951, or otherwise indicated that the Bill would not pass during the next session.

Mr. Webb stated that in addition to recommending the early meeting of the experts referred to in the first paragraph, he would convey to the White House the Ambassador's observations regarding the urgency of action on the St. Lawrence project.[2] He expressed his own desire that the project advance as rapidly as possible. He said that he knew the President was personally interested in seeing something done, but that he had had no opportunity to ascertain what the White House proposed to do at the next session of Congress. In reply to the Ambassador's question, Mr. Webb said that he knew of no change in present arrangements whereby the Department of Commerce has primary responsibility for pushing the Bill through Congress.

[1] Not printed.

The Ambassador mentioned the possibility that at an appropriate time it might be advisable for two or three members of the Canadian Government to make speeches in Canada and the United States favoring the St. Lawrence project, and otherwise enter into a publicity campaign. Mr. Webb said that this would be worth looking into to ascertain whether public utterances by Canadian officials would help the project along.

[2] In a memorandum for the President, December 15, 1950, Webb recommended approval of the proposal for a meeting of technical experts and that urgent consideration should be given to the handling of the St. Lawrence project during the coming sesssion of Congress (611.42321 SL/12–1550). Arrangements were made through the State Department for a meeting of technical experts on January 11, 1951 (611.42322 N/1–551).

611.42321 SL/12–1950

Memorandum by the Under Secretary of State (Webb)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] December 19, 1950.

CABINET MEETING, TUESDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1950

St. Lawrence Seaway

Secretary Sawyer[1] brought up the question of the St. Lawrence Seaway, stating that he had recently had a visit from Mr. C. D. Howe.[2] He stated that he was bringing up the question since the President had assigned him the responsibility in the last session of Congress of pressing for legislation; that he considered the enactment of the necessary legislation as a matter of urgency, and urged assistance from all present. He requested the Vice President to speak to Senator Connally[3] in an endeavor to get a more friendly subcommittee than we had had last time, and requested General Marshall[4] to take steps to see that the National Military Establishment fully supported the move to obtain action in this session of Congress. He emphasized the defense value of this project, which seemed to be generally agreed.

[1] Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer.
[2] Canadian Minister of Trade and Commerce.
[3] Senator Tom Connally of Texas, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.
[4] Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall.

In addition to the arguments put forward by Secretary Sawyer, I emphasized the fact that further delays on this project were sure to cause difficulties in our relations with Canada, and that the State Department considered it also a matter of real urgency.

I believe Secretary Sawyer intends to push this matter with real vigor.

JAMES E. WEBB

611.42321 SL/2–751

The Ambassador in Canada (Woodward) to the Secretary of State

RESTRICTED OTTAWA, February 7, 1951.

No. 1015

Subject: Ambassador's interview with Prime Minister regarding St. Lawrence Waterway.

On February 6 by appointment I called on the Prime Minister [1] to discuss the latest developments in connection with the St. Lawrence Seaway project. Present also in the Prime Minister's office were Minister of Trade and Commerce C. D. Howe, Minister for External Affairs Lester B. Pearson, and Minister of Transport Lionel Chevrier. I indicated to the Prime Minister that as we regard this project to be a matter of mutual interest to Canada and the United States, and in view of this mutuality of interest I wanted him to be fully informed regarding the latest political developments in Washington.

These developments, of which I gave him a chronological review, included the interdepartmental meeting at the White House on January 22,[2] and the meeting at the White House on January 26,[3] at which time the Defense Mobilization Administrator, Mr. Chas. E. Wilson, stated his approval, and the resolution introduced by Senator Green [4] with the endorsement of more than 20 others on February 1. I suggested that Mr. Howe undoubtedly deserved some credit for influencing Mr. Wilson's views in this matter.

I also gave the Canadian Cabinet members an account of the legislative measures which have been introduced in the Congress with bipartisan support. This and other developments I said accounted for the President's statement to me that the prospects for United States action on the St. Lawrence Treaty are better than they have been for the fifteen years he has been working on it.

---

[1] Louis St. Laurent.

[2] The Administration's plans to secure Congressional approval of the St. Lawrence project were discussed at the meeting, described in a memorandum by the Canadian desk officer, William N. Dale, January 22, not printed (611.42321 SL/1–2251).

[3] No record of this has been found in the Department of State files.

[4] Senator Theodore Francis Green, of Rhode Island, introduced S. J. Res. 27 on February 1.

The Prime Minister expressed his appreciation of these developments, and asked me to convey his thanks to the President for his personal interest and leadership. This has been done under separate cover. The Prime Minister and the other Canadian Ministers then discussed the situation among themselves, the Prime Minister suggesting that it might be well for Canada not to press the St. Lawrence question too vigorously at this time. It was agreed that Chevrier, who said that he was booked for three speeches on the subject, could carry out his obligations provided he spoke only on the Canadian aspects of the problem. Pearson also remarked that it would be well to avoid any more Canadian representatives going to Washington in this connection.

This remark of Pearson's may have been a reference to the recent activities in Washington of Richard Hearn, General Manager of the Ontario Hydro-electric Commission, who made a series of trips to Washington during January to discuss the St. Lawrence Seaway project with Mr. Wilson, to whom he obtained access through a mutual friend in Commonwealth Electric. According to a recent report from our Consul at Niagara Falls, Mr. Hearn returned from Washington in a state of exuberant optimism over the prospects.

STANLEY WOODWARD

611.42/5–1451

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Secretary of State[1]

RESTRICTED [WASHINGTON,] May 14, 1951.

Subject: Conversation with Canadian Ambassador

Participants: Hume Wrong, Canadian Ambassador
Secretary
Mr. Haselton, BNA

The Canadian Ambassador called by appointment at 2:30 today. He opened the conversation by saying that he is leaving tomorrow for a short visit to Ottawa and merely wished to see if there were any thoughts or messages which I might like him to convey to Mr. Pearson or other officials in Ottawa. I said I had nothing particularly in mind but asked that my personal regards be given to Mr. Pearson.

[Here follow summaries of brief discussions of various subjects.]

The Ambassador said he intended to discuss the St. Lawrence problem in Ottawa. There is a possibility, he said, that a "high-level approach" may be made to the Department on this subject before long. The Prime Minister has been under considerable domestic pressure to make a statement, such as has already been made by a number of public figures in Canada, to the effect that Canada will go ahead with the Seaway project on its own if favorable U.S. action is not taken during the present session of Congress. The approach to which the Ambassador referred would apparently involve a suggestion that the power and seaway features of the project be separated; that Ontario and New York be authorized to proceed jointly on the power part of the project; and that Canada, alone, undertake the Seaway within its own territorial waters, which could be done, the Ambassador said, at a cost of only about $30 million more than has been estimated for the joint project. The Ambassador said his position up to this time has been that the Prime Minister should defer a public statement on the subject as long as possible—at least until the House Public Works Committee has made its position clear.[2] I confirmed that in my opinion a statement now by the Prime Minister would not be helpful and might tend to complicate the situation rather than to clarify it.

[1] Drafted by Norris S. Haselton, Officer in Charge of Dominion Affairs.

[2] The Committee had conducted hearings from February 20 through April 30 on various resolutions to approve and implement the 1941 St. Lawrence Agreement. House Committee on Public Works, St. Lawrence Seaway: Hearings, 82d Cong., 1st Sess. (Washington, 1951). The Secretary of State's statement before the Committee is printed in the Department of State Bulletin, March 12, 1951, pp. 432–434.

611.42321 SL/6–1351

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs (Perkins) to the Secretary of State

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] June 13, 1951.

Subject: An additional topic which Mr. Pearson may wish to discuss with you on June 13, 1951.

Discussion

Since the preparation of the briefing memorandum for you of June 12,[1] it has been learned through the Canadian Embassy that Mr. Pearson may bring up the subject of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project with you this evening.

From the Canadian point of view this is the year of decision as far as the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project is concerned. The domestic pressures, particularly in Ontario Province, for the project are so great that if the Congress fails to approve the legislation this year the Canadian Government feels that it must issue a statement at the highest level concerning alternative action by the Canadian Government.

When Mr. Saunders, Chairman of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, called for such a statement from the Prime Minister, the White House heard about it and requested the Department [2] to inform the Canadian Government that we thought the legislation still had a "fighting chance", and that an official statement from the Prime Minister or other Cabinet officials would diminish this chance. The Canadian Embassy then informed the Department very informally [3] that they believed there should be confidential conversations between the two Governments as to alternative procedures if the legislation should receive an adverse vote in the Congress and before any statement was made by the Prime Minister. The White House agreed that this was desirable and it was suggested that these consultations would be more fruitful if the ground work were laid in advance of Congressional action, thus avoiding the pressure and publicity of last minute talks. The Canadian Embassy has now agreed to ascertain from Ottawa what alternative the Cabinet has in mind and to inform the State Department so that discussions can be held with the White House.

[1] See p. 890.

It has been learned [4] that the President might be willing to consider a bargain with the Canadians if the legislation for the joint project fails in Congress this session. There are indications that the President would consent to construction of the power aspect of the project by Ontario and New York State in return for a firm commitment that the Canadians would undertake to construct the Seaway by themselves. It is quite possible that the Canadians have a similar plan in mind.[5]

The House Public Works Committee has just returned from a trip to the Mesabi iron range and the St. Lawrence River, and the trip appears to have enhanced somewhat the chances for a favorable Committee vote on the St. Lawrence legislation. In view of the slightly improved outlook, the White House does not wish to press the Canadians for discussion of alternative proposals at this time.

Recommendation

If Mr. Pearson brings up the subject of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project and the alternative means of securing it, it is suggested that you inform Mr. Pearson that you believe the legislation now before Congress still has a chance of approval. Since it cannot be denied, however, that the legislation may very possibly be defeated, it is recommended that you tell Mr. Pearson we believe there should be consultation prior to Congressional action in order to lay the ground work for an alternative course of action.

---

[2] This request, made by David Bell of the White House staff in a telephone conversation on May 19 with William N. Dale, was reported by Dale in a memorandum of May 22 (611.42321 SL/5–2251).

[3] This telephone conversation on May 21 with Canadian Minister W. D. Matthews was reported by Dale in the memorandum cited in footnote 2 above.

[4] Bell gave Dale this information in a telephone conversation on May 21, reported in the memorandum cited in footnote 2 above.

[5] In the margin next to this paragraph was the handwritten notation "For your information only."

In view of the White House attitude, it is not believed that Mr. Pearson should be pressed to initiate these conversations immediately unless his Government wishes to do so.[6]

[6] No record of any discussion of the Seaway question during Pearson's visit has been found in the Department of State files.

611.42321 SL/8–451

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Minister of Embassy in Canada (Bliss)

OTTAWA, August 4, 1951.

In a discussion today with External Affairs Minister Pearson he expressed the view that Canada is still most anxious to proceed with the joint seaway-power project. If the President can find a way of getting the proposed legislation through Congress that will be the ideal.

However, in view of apparent legislative difficulties in Washington [1] it is necessary for Canada to proceed immediately to serious consideration of the possibility of an alternative program. This is now receiving Cabinet consideration for the first time and active study of the physical possibilities is being initiated. The problem will probably be discussed in Parliament during the coming session.

The preferable alternative from the Canadian vewpoint is an arrangement whereby Ontario and New York will be enabled to proceed with a joint power project (Ontario is desperately anxious to obtain additional power promptly and work on such a project must be initiated promptly if industrial needs are to be met.) Such a project would also facilitate construction of the Seaway by raising the level of the river and eliminating the necessity for costly excavation. This would of course involve the Boundary Treaty [2] and would have to be approved by the Joint International Commission,[3] which could legally give clearance without further recommendations to Governments. It would take about a year, however, to complete the necessary studies.

I pointed out that approval by the President of an Ontario–New York scheme would entail a modification of his previous attitude of insisting on a joint government project. It would also involve some domestic political problems of concern to the White House. Pearson indicated that if there were objections to the Ontario–New York

[1] The House Committee on Public Works voted July 26 to table the St. Lawrence resolution.

[2] Treaty Concerning the Boundary Waters Between the United States and Canada, 1909. For text, see Department of State Treaty Series (TS) No. 548, or 36 Stat. 2448.

[3] The International Joint Commission, United States and Canada, established by the treaty cited in footnote 2 above.

project by the White House, on whatever grounds, Canada would feel that the President then became responsible for blocking the project and the reaction north of the border, especially in Ontario, might be strong. I suggested that if no other solution were possible, the President would probably not wish to interfere, and Pearson agreed that this was his opinion also.

A final alternative, of course, is Canadian construction of a Seaway alone, but this is still a rather remote possibility. It will be studied here, however.

Canadian public reaction to the recent action of the Public Works Committee has been widespread. Ontario and Quebec are most strongly in favor of Canadian action to get both the power and the Seaway projects going as quickly as possible. The Prairie Provinces want the Seaway especially. The Maritime Provinces are opposed to the whole business. The Pacific Coast is indifferent.

611.42321 SL/8–651

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. William L. Kilcoin of the Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] August 6, 1951.

Subject: St. Lawrence Seaway and Hydroelectric Project.

Participants: Mr. W. D. Matthews—Canadian Minister
Mr. G. E. Cox—Canadian Embassy
Mr. Charles S. Murphy—Special Counsel to the President
Mr. Dave Bell—White House Staff
Mr. Davis—Department of Commerce [1]
Mr. Don C. Bliss—US Minister, Ottawa, Canada
Mr. N. S. Haselton—BNA
Mr. W. L. Kilcoin—BNA

This meeting was set up by Mr. Haselton at the request of Mr. Bell of the White House Staff. Mr. Murphy opened the discussions by stating that the recent action of the Public Works Committee in tabling the last joint resolution approving the 1941 US–Canadian agreement for development of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Hydroelectric Project necessitated a review and reappraisal of the situation. He said that the Executive Branch of the Government had not yet established a particular line of approach or position. He felt that informal exploratory discussions with Canadian representatives would be helpful in determining appropriate steps now to be taken and would be helpful to both governments in setting their policies and future courses of action. He asked Mr. Matthews to comment on the present Canadian thinking based on the rejection of the last joint resolution before the House Public Works Committee.

[1] Assistant Secretary of Commerce Thomas W. S. Davis.

Mr. Matthews stated that significant support from Ontario and a wide section of the press was developing for Canada to undertake the Seaway alone and for joint Ontario–New York development of the hydroelectric resources. The Canadian Government has not deviated from its traditional advocacy of a joint US-Canadian project but if there appears to be no hope for US legislative approval in the near future, it might be necessary to reverse this policy. Parliament is not now in session which eases immediate political pressures, but a position will have to be taken by the Government by the time Parliament convenes on October 9. He stated that a select committee of members of the Cabinet had just been appointed to consider the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project and to recommend to the Government the steps it should take now that legislation respecting the project had been tabled by the Public Works Committee of the House. Mr. Matthews had not been advised concerning the membership of this Committee but Mr. Bliss supplied this information. The Committee is comprised of Mr. Howe, who heads the Ministries of Defense Production and Trade and Commerce, Mr. Chevrier, Minister of Transport and Mr. Winters, Minister of Resources. Mr. Bliss emphasized that this was the first time that Canada had officially undertaken to study any alternatives to the joint US-Canadian Project.

Mr. Matthews indicated that if Canada decided to proceed unilaterally on the Seaway, and jointly with New York on the hydroelectric project, new studies and surveys would have to be undertaken (replanning the Seaway would take at least a year), financial and other problems would have to be carefully considered, and it might be several years before the waterways phase of the program could be initiated. In answer to Mr. Bell, he said that Canada had ample financial resources to undertake construction of the Seaway, and although it might constitute some drain on Canadian gold and US dollar reserves, this should not be too serious, as not more than $50 million would be required in any one year. The real problem lies in physical resources—manpower, materials and equipment and the Canadian Government is really concerned over this aspect of the situation.

Problems involved in joint Ontario–New York development of hydroelectric power and Canadian construction of the Seaway were then discussed. Mr. Murphy stated that State rather than Federal development of this power would be a departure from Federal policy but that the President might be prepared to withdraw his objection to the New York State proposal if this was the only way in which the Seaway could be constructed. It was pointed out by Mr. Haselton that if the joint New York–Ontario Hydro scheme was approved, some provision would have to be made to meet legitimate needs of various New England states for hydroelectric power. Mr. Murphy was of the opinion that the Federal Power Commission could insert a proviso protecting the interests of other states if and when the New York application is reconsidered. In so far as treaty obligations regarding boundary waters are concerned, the International Joint Commission, it was agreed, could approve these programs after referral without further recourse to their respective Government. However, Mr. Murphy and Mr. Bell were careful to underscore and stress the point that the U.S. members of the International Joint Commission would have no authority to consider or act on proposals for an all Canadian Seaway and a joint Ontario–New York State hydro project unless directed to do so by the President acting through the Department of State. The inference was clear—U.S. approval and support of the hydro project would be contingent on firm assurances that construction of the Seaway would be undertaken by Canada without undue delay. On balance development of the Seaway is more important to the U.S. strategically and economically than development of the hydroelectric resources of the St. Lawrence. The reverse is true for Canada. Although not directly stated, it was implied by Mr. Murphy that a departure from National Policy in approving a joint Ontario–New York hydro undertaking could only be justified on the basis of our over-riding need for the Seaway.

Mr. Matthews was extremely cautious in estimating when construction of the Seaway might be started providing Canada decided to proceed unilaterally. The impression left was that Canada would not proceed with any great speed and it was indicated that some years might elapse before this project could get under way. He was asked if the United States might be able, if legislative approval is later obtained, to join with Canada in construction of the waterways. He was doubtful whether Canada would agree to our participation if the planning and financing were well advanced. Mr. Bliss strongly backed up Mr. Matthews' impression that the Canadians, once a decision is made, would want to proceed on their own as a matter of national pride and prestige. Mr. Matthews said that the additional costs to construct an all Canadian route would not be heavy. Tolls would unquestionably be charged but under agreements and in consonance with US-Canadian relations they would be applied equally and without discrimination.

Mr. Cox asked if Senator Moody's [2] proposal to back the St. Lawrence resolution on the Foreign Aid Bill was likely to be considered and accepted by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Neither Mr. Bell nor Mr. Davis were in a position to give an opinion. Mr. Cox asked if the bill could be considered in the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House. Mr. Murphy said that under Congressional customs and practice the House Foreign Affairs Committee would not accept a measure which was being considered by another Committee of the House. If a Senate bill, however, contained such a provision, the House Committee could either accept or reject it in conference.

[2] Blair Moody, Michigan.

Mr. Davis was strongly of the opinion that the recent action of the House Public Works Committee should not be considered as final. He expected a number of changes in the membership of the Committee and was hopeful that action might be possible in the near future, say within a period of 6 weeks or 2 months. The situation should be much clearer in about a month. He stated that the proponents of the resolution were prepared to carry on the fight and that they were encouraged by the large number who had voted against tabling the last measure. He pointed out that development and distribution of the St. Lawrence Power by the State of New York would be a significant departure from national policy which the Executive Branch might find it difficult to support. If a new joint resolution is introduced, he said that Section 5 would probably be deleted.

After considerable discussion, it was agreed that efforts would be continued to have the joint resolution reported out by the House Public Works Committee, or by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee as a part of the Foreign Aid Bill if this appears preferable or practical. In a month or 6 weeks the prospects or possibilities of favorable committee action could be properly appraised and he indicated that a further meeting should be held at that time. Mr. Murphy agreed to this proposal. This would provide ample time before the reconvening of Parliament to permit the Canadian Cabinet Committee to outline its position and policy on the basis of the latest available information. If a joint resolution is reported out by the Committee, Mr. Davis warned that a protracted fight can be expected on the floor of both Houses.

611.42321 SL/9–2251 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Canada (Woodward) to the Secretary of State

SECRET NIACT OTTAWA, September 22, 1951—6:01 p. m.

49. For Perkins EUR pass Murphy White House. Following the President's instructions, I have told PriMin St. Laurent that the Pres wld be prepared to consider a proposition on the development of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project.

The PriMin has now requested an appointment with the Pres to state Canada's proposals which are as fols:

1. To proceed with the project at once, or as soon as it can be done legally; that is, with clearance from the IJC, with Parliamentary approval, and with US sanction for New York-Ontario power development.

2. Hydro-electric power in the international section to be developed by Ontario and New York State, if New York participation approved by US Govt.

3. The Can Government to build the seaway as proposed, but on the Canadian side.

4. Tolls to be the same for US and Canadian shipping.

5. The door to be left open for US participation in project if we so desired. (Some cabinet members still prefer US-Canadian joint development on grounds it wld cost Canada less and canal shld be partly on US side for engineering reasons.)

The PriMin wants to make these proposals to the President in person. From his point of view it is urgent to do so before opening of Parliament on Oct. 9.

The Emb has nothing in writing, but I have been told the same thing by the PriMin, Foreign Min Pearson and Min of Transport Chevrier who is in direct charge. The proposal can thus be considered firm.

Suggest that perhaps the Pres may wish to obtain assurances from the PriMin in Washington as to when work might start on the navigation project and when it might be completed. The PriMin might wish assurances as to US Federal Power Commission approval of the power project.

I recommend that we examine the proposals as outlined above, and if found satisfactory, give the PriMin the appointment he has requested, if possible, for Thurs.[1] We should bear in mind that Canadian Govt will raise the St. Lawrence issue anyway in one way or another and that we cannot stop them from doing so.

If the appointment is made for PriMin at White House, I think the Pres cld simply let the PriMin state his case, since it was on St. Laurent's initiative that the appointment was requested, and it is a matter of prime importance to Canada.

No exchange of notes or memoranda appears necessary at this time. The Canadian Govt has got up a big head of steam on the St. Lawrence and we should take full advantage of it. It is the best possible moment for us to give them the go-ahead signal, if we can possibly manage it.

The PriMin wants to make his visit to Washington strictly business. He wld like to fly down late Wednesday, stay at the Canadian Emb, and call on the Pres Thurs, returning to Ottawa by plane the same day. He has asked particularly for no honors or ceremony.

To the press he cld be expected to say very little. He is naturally reticent and wld in any event wish first to give any info to Parliament.

WOODWARD

[1] September 27.

611.42321 SL/9–2751

Memorandum by the Under Secretary of State (Webb) to the President

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] September 27, 1951.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

Subject: Visit of Prime Minister St. Laurent on September 28 to discuss the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project.

The St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project has, as you know, been a continuing problem in our relations with Canada for a great many years. It appears now that the Canadians may try to force the problem to a head within the next few months. Our handling of it, vis-à-vis the Canadians, is very important from now on, not only as far as the project itself is concerned but also from the point of view of Canadian-American relations in general.

The attitude of the Canadian Federal Government towards the St. Lawrence problem has changed markedly over the past year. As far as we can ascertain, the Government was satisfied to cooperate with us in attempting to secure Congressional approval of the joint project, as set forth in the 1941 St. Lawrence Agreement, up to the fall of 1951. Our failure to secure Congressional passage in 1950 of legislation approving the Agreement, however, caused the Canadians to believe that favorable action on the joint project was next to impossible under present conditions. As an indication of their changing attitude, Transport Minister Chevrier delivered an outspoken address in September of that year in which he said that Canadians "cannot sit idly by and wait forever" for the Congress. He said further that when Canada is convinced that no progress can be made on the combined scheme, other means must be found for securing the power and seaway development.

On December 11, 1950, in a conversation with Mr. Webb of this Department, the Canadian Ambassador advised us that although the Canadian Government prefers the joint project it would reconsider its position in the event that favorable Congressional action was not forthcoming this year. When the legislation authorizing the St. Lawrence dual purpose project was tabled in the House Public Works Committee late in July this year, the Canadian Government accepted the defeat as firm evidence that Congress would not approve the project this year. A special Cabinet subcommittee composed of Trade and Commerce Minister Howe, Transport Minister Chevrier and Resources Minister Winters was set up to study alternatives to the 1941 Agreement procedure. This committee has worked out an arrangement with the Province of Ontario, the terms of which we do not yet know, outlining the responsibility of both the federal and provincial governments under a new procedure. Proposals embodying the new procedure will probably be the subject of the Prime Minister's discussion with you on the 28th.

The Canadian Liberal Government is in a difficult political position with respect to the St. Lawrence issue. The Conservative opposition Party is in power in Ontario and its spokesmen, Premier Frost and Mr. Saunders, Chairman of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission, have claimed often and loudly that the Central Government has not pushed the St. Lawrence project with sufficient vigor in Washington. Continued failure to secure Congressional approval tends to lend validity to these charges in the public mind. Mr. Saunders claims that the industrial development of Ontario Province is hindered by lack of low-cost power and predicts a severe power shortage in the years following 1956 unless development of the St. Lawrence can be undertaken within a year. Since Ontario cities, such as Toronto, have been subjected to power brown outs periodically over the last several years, these statements may make considerable impression. While Ontario Province is primarily interested in securing the power, the Federal Government itself is eager to have the seaway. East-west transportation routes are essential if Canada is to be bound together economically. The seaway would provide a ready outlet for the agricultural produce of the prairies. Moreover, the Canadian Government is anxious to facilitate shipment of iron ore from the new Labrador iron ore fields to our steel mills and sincerely believes that both the seaway and power developments are essential to the defense of the North Atlantic area.

For these reasons, the Canadian Government believes that the project must not be stalled indefinitely for lack of Congressional action on the 1941 St. Lawrence Agreement. If the United States cannot participate in construction of the seaway, the Canadians will probably wish to build it themselves. With a substantial budget surplus they foresee no insurmountable financial obstacle. With respect to the power they realize fully that United States approval in some form is required. They feel, moreover, very strongly that if the Administration cannot secure Congressional approval of the 1941 Agreement it should not prevent Ontario and New York from proceeding on their own to develop the power resources of the river. The Canadian Government is firmly of the opinion that Canada has a right to build the seaway itself and to secure development of their share of the St. Lawrence River power and that it would be unjust for us to stand any longer in their way. If the Canadians think that by insisting on Congressional approval of the joint project even after it is a lost cause, our Administration is blocking the project, the Canadian Government will probably react very strongly. Intense resentment caused by such a belief might well spread into other areas of our relationship with Canada and to some extent jeopardize the essential cooperation now existing between the two countries.

The Department has been informed by Ambassador Woodward that the Prime Minister's proposal to you will include the following principal points:

(1) The Canadian Government to build and finance the seaway on the Canadian side.
(2) Hydro-electric power in the international section of the St. Lawrence River to be developed by Ontario Province and New York State, if New York participation is approved by our Government.
(3) Both the seaway and power aspects of the project to be begun as soon as the necessary clearances have been obtained and financing arranged.
(4) Tolls to be the same for United States and Canadian shipping.
(5) Opportunity for United States participation in the project to be maintained as long as possible.

In order to anticipate the opposition, we are informed that the Prime Minister would like to make some arrangement with you quickly so that he may announce it in the Speech from the Throne opening Parliament on October 9. If we are unable to accept his proposal or some mutually agreeable variation of it, it is probable that he will make some reference to the St. Lawrence in any case at that time. The State Department's Legal Division has prepared a paper on some of the legal and constitutional questions which are involved in the Prime Minister's proposal and a summary of their findings is attached hereto as Tab "A". A brief biographical sketch of the Prime Minister is attached as Tab "B" and a simplified artist's drawing of the proposed project is included as Tab "C".[1]

As far as our relations with Canada are concerned, the State Department would like to see this Government go along with the Canadians as far as possible in their new proposal. We believe that the Canadians have been exceedingly patient in waiting for Congress to act these many years and that their present proposals would benefit both countries.

However, the Department realizes fully that there are many other government departments concerned in this matter and that domestic political factors and constitutional problems of first rate importance must also be considered. In any case, however, we believe that this Government should avoid putting the Canadians in a box in which it appears to them that they cannot get the project either through Congressional action or through cooperation with the Administration. If the Canadians were to gain this impression it would probably injure our relations with Canada more than any other single incident which has occurred during this century.

Accordingly, it is recommended that the proposal be received sympathetically and that you tell the Prime Minister that you will endeavor to work it out from the United States side in the light of the constitutional and political problems which exist. It is further suggested that you tell him that naturally no conclusion has yet been reached as to the necessity of procuring Congressional approval for a proposal such as he has suggested.

[1] Tabs B and C not printed.

JAMES E. WEBB

[Annex]

CONCLUSIONS TO STATE DEPARTMENT LEGAL OPINION CONCERNING ALTERNATIVE METHODS FOR CONSTRUCTION OF THE ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AND POWER PROJECT

1. Under Articles VIII and III of the 1909 Treaty Concerning Boundary Waters between the United States and Canada, the International Joint Commission, United States and Canada, has authority to approve "uses, obstructions, and diversions" in the St. Lawrence River, affecting the natural level or flow of boundary waters, with the authority of the United States or the Dominion of Canada within their respective jurisdictions. Such approval can be conditional. Approval by the two Governments and the International Joint Commission of a project does not constitute an international agreement; it merely authorizes the respective projects for the approval of which application is made.

2. Under the terms of Article I of the 1909 Treaty, the United States has the right to use, on terms of equality, the Canal which Canada contemplates building on the Canadian side of the Boundary.

3. Under Article VIII of the 1909 Treaty, Canada is entitled to equal right in the use of the boundary waters for power purposes.

4. Accordingly, it would be within the Executive power to enter into an agreement with Canada containing assurances in harmony with paragraphs (2) and (3).

5. In the view of the Department, however, the Executive could give no assurance that power would continue to be developed in the manner indicated by the project.

6. Also, an agreement between the Power Authority of the State of New York, "a political subdivision of the State of New York", and the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission, an agency of the Province of Ontario, for the purposes indicated, would be contrary to the provision contained in Article I, section 10, of the Constitution, that "No State shall, without the Consent of Congress . . . enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State, or with a foreign Power". It seems clear that under this provision what a State may not do, its political subdivisions may not do.

611.42321 SL/9–2851

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs (Perkins)[1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] September 28, 1951.

Subject: St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project

Participants: Mr. Louis St. Laurent, Prime Minister of Canada
Mr. Hume Wrong, Ambassador of Canada
Mr. Norman Robertson, Secretary to Cabinet
Mr. J. W. Pickersgill, Personal Assistant to Prime Minister
Mr. Harry S. Truman, President of the United States
Mr. James E. Webb, Under Secretary of State
Mr. Stanley Woodward, Ambassador to Canada
Mr. George W. Perkins, Assistant Secretary of State
Mr. Charles Murphy, White House
Mr. Joseph Short, White House
Mr. David Bell, White House

After an exchange of greetings the Canadian Prime Minister opened the conversation by stating that the situation in the Canadian economy required urgently that a decision be made on the development of the St. Lawrence. They felt it was important to develop both the transportation facilities and the power facilities. These facilities were needed in Canada as quickly as possible. He explained that the power situation in Ontario could not be allowed to drag along much longer. The development of Ontario was proceeding at what they believed to be a normal and desirable rate and this indicated that unless steps were taken immediately they would, in the not too distant future, be short in power. They had no hydro-electric alternative to the St. Lawrence project. Therefore, if this were not to be completed, they would have to install coal burning power plants. The construction of these power plants would require a large investment. Once this were started it would very much dampen the interest in Ontario in the St. Lawrence development. But they would have to go ahead with steam development if no arrangement in connection with the St. Lawrence were made. Therefore, the St. Lawrence decision was urgent. He also pointed out that if Ontario lost interest in the St. Lawrence project, it would be very difficult for the Canadian Government to go ahead with it without the assistance of the Province of Ontario. The Prime Minister also pointed out that this situation did not exist in Quebec as they had other possibilities for power development which would not interfere with the St. Lawrence Seaway. He further stated that Ontario would, he believed, provide half the cost of the power development which would include part of the Seaway cost. The Canadian Government, he said, was ready to ask Parliament to set up an Authority to build the Seaway. They felt that it was feasible to have it on the Canadian side only, and that confining it to this side would add little more to the cost. The Authority, of course, would also cover power development.

[1] Another record of this conversation, consisting of notes made by David E. Bell, was sent to the State Department on October 10 with a memorandum by Bell for W. J. McWilliams, Director of the Executive Secretariat (611.42321 SL/10–1051).

The President said that he had first come in contact with the St. Lawrence project when he was in the Senate in 1935. He has been for it ever since and has tried to get it through our Congress, but he has been hampered by the interests of Railroads and certain Eastern ports. He indicated his willingness to continue to try to press it through. He was anxious to see it completed and agreed that if it could not be worked out jointly, he would go along with the Canadian proposal.

The Prime Minister pointed out that they too preferred the joint arrangement and felt that the 1941 Agreement was satisfactory. He also indicated that they too had Railroad and other opposition in Canada. However, they had come to the conclusion that a development which helps the general economy helps all parts of the economy of the country, and they were confident that Parliament would now give them the necessary authorization.

The President indicated that he hoped that their meeting today would have some influence on the legislation which was now before Congress, but, if it did not, we must find some way to proceed. It was important to have the Seaway at the same time as the power development. He also evidenced special interest in the ability to transport iron ore from Labrador to the Great Lakes area.

The Prime Minister reiterated the importance of getting started on the provision of power for Ontario and the difficulty that would arise if Ontario started on the steam plant development.

The President pointed out that the same type of situation existed in New York State; that he was interested in the development of both the Seaway and the power project; and that he liked the international proposition best.

The Prime Minister said he was primarily interested in getting results. They would support the Province of Ontario in its efforts to get agreement to the joint power scheme, and they felt they could get approval for the Seaway plan.

In response to the President's question as to the depth of the proposed Seaway, the Prime Minister replied that it was to be 27 feet and in accordance with the 1941 Agreement.

The President felt this was satisfactory.

The Prime Minister pointed out that if the iron ore development was to be successful, it must be on a mass production basis and must be useful to the United States markets. He also indicated that he felt it would be desirable for the Canadians to talk about something constructive rather than the cost of living.

The President said that he had tried to get the people of the United States behind the project. His heart was in it and he would do all that was possible.

The Prime Minister indicated that he would like to be able to say that the matter had been discussed here, and that there was still hope that it could be done on the basis of the 1941 Agreement. In the meantime, they would continue to work out agreements with the Province of Ontario. However, they would have to negotiate with some United States authority before the project went to the International Joint Commission.

The President suggested that the Prime Minister designate someone to work out a statement to be made after the meeting. The Prime Minister agreed to this.[2]

The Prime Minister pointed out some of the advantageous aspects of a joint effort, saying that United States assistance would in particular help to expedite the project from the manpower, material and financial points of view. They could, of course, do it alone, but with United States participation the project would move more quickly.

The President asked the Prime Minister to remember that the United States has a great many obligations. But he felt that this was important and that probably the necessary materiel allocations could be made for the work.

In closing, he expressed his appreciation for the Prime Minister's having come to see him.

G[EORGE] W. P[ERKINS]

---

[2] The press release issued after the meeting is printed in the Department of State Bulletin, October 8, 1951, p. 581.

611.42321 SL/10–3151

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Canadian Affairs (Dale)

RESTRICTED [WASHINGTON,] October 31, 1951.

Subject: Implementation of Prime Minister St. Laurent's proposals for construction of the St. Lawrence Project

Participants: Mr. Matthews, Minister, Canadian Embassy
Mr. LePan—Canadian Embassy [1]
Mr. Bell—White House
Mr. Tate—L [2]
Mr. Haselton—BNA
Miss Whiteman—L/ARA [3]
Mr. Dale—BNA

Mr. Matthews said that he believed the Embassy would soon be requested by the Canadian Government to send a note to the Department requesting our cooperation in the joint construction of power works and an all-Canadian Seaway. With this thought in mind, he asked whether we had any suggestions as to points which might be usefully covered in such a note.

Mr. Bell made several recommendations in this connection. In view of the constitutional prohibition against agreements between states and foreign powers, he thought that the Canadians should avoid the use of words implying any agreement between the two countries. He believed that the note should leave our hands untied as to the procedure to be followed in this country in implementing Prime Minister St. Laurent's proposals. Mr. Bell mentioned that the note might profitably include a firm statement of Canadian intent to construct the Seaway. It was also suggested that it might contain a proposal for joint exploratory studies of engineering and technical problems. Mr. Bell recommended that since the procedure proposed by Prime Minister St. Laurent involves very delicate legal and political problems for the US, we would appreciate it if we could see the note in draft. Finally, he suggested that the note include mention of the alternative which, it is understood, the proposed Canadian enabling legislation will contain: namely, to proceed with congressional approval if possible and otherwise by administrative action. There followed some discussion of the possible use to which an exchange of notes might be put in connection with a projected special Presidential message to the Congress in January. Mr. Matthews agreed that these suggestions were useful, and he will undertake to see that they are considered in preparation of the note.[4]

[1] Douglas V. LePan, Counselor, Canadian Embassy.
[2] Jack B. Tate, Deputy Legal Adviser.
[3] Marjorie M. Whiteman, Assistant Legal Adviser for Inter-American Affairs.

The timing of action on the Prime Minister's proposals in relation to congressional consideration of the St. Lawrence was then considered. Mr. Bell said the President thought that the Congress should be allowed a couple of months more to act on legislation approving the 1941 Agreement before we announce a decision to proceed with the Prime Minister's proposal. Mr. Matthews said it is his Government's view that since Congress did not act on the Blatnik bill during the session just concluded, there is no substantial hope of Congressional approval, and that we should proceed immediately with the Prime Minister's plan. It was subsequently pointed out that the Prime Minister's suggestion involves a large amount of preliminary work which could well be done while Congress is considering legislation. Therefore, the two alternatives are not mutually exclusive at an early stage. With this thought in mind, it was tentatively decided that following receipt of the Canadian note, we would undertake to set up a joint working committee to consider engineering and technical questions involved in construction of the project without Congressional approval.

After Mr. Matthews' departure, the discussion with Mr. Bell was continued briefly. It was pointed out to him that two decisions would have to be made by the White House before studies to any considerable extent, even of an exploratory nature, could be undertaken. First of all, the White House must decide whether to proceed along the lines suggested in the Federal Power Commission's brief which involves approval by the Commission of an agreement between Ontario and New York, or along the lines of the State Department's proposal centering around an International Joint Commission recommendation.[5] Secondly, the White House will have to establish a definite cut-off date with respect to congressional action, since this point was not covered in the Prime Minister's conversation with President Truman. Mr. Tate also raised the question as to whether the IJC as at present constituted could effectively handle the St. Lawrence Project, and Mr. Bell indicated that he had this problem in mind. Mr. Bell signified his agreement that decisions on these matters must be made by the White House before any substantial progress can be made on the U.S. side with respect to Prime Minister St. Laurent's proposals.

---

[4] After further discussions, an exchange of notes took place on January 11, 1952. For text, see Department of State Bulletin, February 11, 1952, pp. 234–235.

[5] The Federal Power Commission brief has not been found in the Department of State files. For the Department position, see the Annex to the Under Secretary of State's memorandum to the President, September 27, p. 919. These proposals were discussed at an interdepartmental meeting on October 24, reported in a memorandum by William N. Dale (611.42321 SL/10–2451).

THE AMERICAN REPUBLICS

FOURTH MEETING OF CONSULTATION OF MINISTERS OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS OF AMERICAN STATES, HELD AT WASHINGTON, MARCH 26–APRIL 7, 1951 [1]

363/12–1550

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Deputy Under Secretary of State (Matthews)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] December 15, 1950.

Subject: Proposed Meeting of Consultation of Foreign Ministers.

Article XXXIX of the Charter of the Organization of American States,[2] drawn up at Bogota,[3] provides for the holding of Meetings of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs "in order to consider problems of an urgent nature and of common interest to the American States". Article XL provides that any member state may request that a meeting of Consultation be held. It should be emphasized that such Meetings are different from the "Inter-American Conferences" also provided for in the Charter and which are much broader in scope. The Meetings of Consultation are of an emergency nature and their agendas are restricted.

The first point to be considered is should there be a Meeting at this time? There has been a desire expressed from time to time by Latin

---

[1] For additional documentation and analytical and summary accounts of the Meeting, see Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of American States, Washington, March 26–April 7, 1951: Report of the Secretary of State (Department of State Publication No. 4928, Washington, 1953); Pan American Union, Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs, Held in Washington, March 26–April 7, 1951: Proceedings (Washington, 1951), hereinafter cited as Proceedings; Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Foreign Ministers of the American Republics: First Intermediate Report of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, House Report No. 210, 82d Cong., 1st Sess. (Washington, 1951); and Research Summary on Inter-American Cooperation for Defense: Results of the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Foreign Ministers of the American Republics: Eighth Intermediate Report Prepared by the Staff for the use of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, House Report No. 671, 82d Cong., 1st Sess. (Washington, 1951).

[2] For text of the Charter, signed at Bogotá, April 30, 1948, and entered into force for the United States on December 13, 1951, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 2361, or United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), vol. 2 (pt. 2), p. 2394.

[3] Reference is to the Ninth International Conference of American States, held at Bogotá, Colombia, March 30–May 2, 1948; for documentation on the conference, see Foreign Relations, 1948, vol. IX, pp. 1 ff.

Americans for a Meeting of Consultation.[4] While this desire has reflected the Latin Americans' feeling of being neglected, specific pretexts have been advanced for a Meeting such as control of communism. Since Korea there has been an increased desire for a Meeting which we have discouraged primarily because until recently the desire for such a Meeting had been focused on the immediate question of Korea; it was our feeling that since this problem was being dealt with in the UN it was premature for OAS consideration of it. Since the Chinese Communists came into Korea we have been thinking more seriously about a Meeting, but we have been worried about the absence of a definite long-range program within our Government which could be presented for implementation to the Latin Americans in so far as their efforts and resources are concerned. We now feel that the impact of the President's speech [5] and of the program announced therein will be such in relation to Latin American public opinion as to make it inevitable that we will have to have a Meeting. All of us in ARA are convinced of the inevitability of a Meeting. We are also convinced now of the desirability of a Meeting for the purpose of identifying the Latin Americans more closely with our struggle and our objectives in the struggle and insuring their more spontaneous cooperation.

The next question then is whether we should take the initiative and make an immediate announcement of our intention to hold a Meeting. I strongly favor making an immediate announcement tomorrow or Sunday of our intention to request the OAS under Article XL of the Charter to convoke such a Meeting in the near future for the purpose of considering matters of an urgent nature related to the present emergency. Such prompt initiative on our part would have an electrifying effect upon public opinion throughout Latin America and would strongly crystallize opinion in our favor. The alternative to doing this is for the pot to boil over during the next week or two and for the smaller states to begin to make requests for meetings on specific grounds which might embarrass us with the result that we would ultimately appear to assent reluctantly to such a Meeting.

This, of course, raises the question of what would be the subject matter of the Meeting. It is not our intention to announce the agenda but rather our initial announcement would state that we will consult

---

[4] In a memorandum dated August 14, 1950, to Rollin S. Atwood, Acting Director of the Office of North and West Coast Affairs, Edward A. Jamison, Officer in Charge of Special Political Problems in the Office of Regional American Affairs, stated in part: "The recent Bolivian initiative toward holding a South American foreign ministers conference on communism, and the Chilean ideas about OAS coordination of assistance for Korea, indicate an attitude which may result in an early demand from Latin America for a Meeting of Consultation. There is also certainly a possibility that we may wish to ask for such a meeting in connection with developments in the Far Eastern situation." (720.001/8–1450)

[5] Reference is to President Truman's address on "The National Emergency," broadcast from the White House on December 15, 1950; for text, see Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States: Harry S. Truman, 1950 (Washington, 1965), p. 741, or Department of State Bulletin, December 25, 1950, p. 999.

on the agenda items. In general we would anticipate that the following would be the main subjects of discussion:

1) Production and control of strategic materials.
2) Allocation of manufactured goods and meeting Latin American requirements to sustain their economies and to provide for development, especially with regard to materials essential to the war effort.
3) Internal economic controls essential to maintain and stabilize economic life of Hemisphere.
4) Implementation of United Action for Peace resolution [6] on regional basis, including general problem of utilization of Latin American manpower.
5) Common political defense measures in regard to communism, sabotage and exchange of information.

It is obvious, in response to Mr. Acheson's question,[7] that as of this date there are some pitfalls in connection with such an agenda in the sense, for example, that we have not now within the Government a requirements policy which we could announce to Latin America immediately. However, it is not our intention to have such a Meeting until the middle of February at the earliest or possibly a month later. By then we should be in a position to discuss these questions intelligently enough to meet the very general requirements of a Meeting of Consultation. It should be emphasized that these Meetings are not intended to result in detailed programs of action and the implementation of many of the specific points at issue can be delegated by the Ministers to standing agencies of the OAS such as the Inter-American Economic and Social Council and the Inter-American Defense Board. In regard to matters of political defense, it might be desirable to consider the creation of an Inter-American Committee on Political Defense under the OAS similar to the body which operated in Montevideo during the war. The ARA staff has met twice today on this problem and we are unanimous in recommending strongly that the President and the Secretary authorize us as soon as possible to issue over the weekend an announcement along the line of the attached.[8]

[6] Reference is to Resolution 377 (V) of the General Assembly of the United Nations, November 3, 1950. For text, see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Fifth Session, Resolution Adopted by the General Assembly during the period 19 September to 15 December 1950, Supplement No. 20 (A/1775), pp. 10–12.

[7] In his summary of the Secretary's regular morning staff meeting for December 15, 1950, Deputy Director of the Executive Secretariat William J. McWilliams recorded in part that Director of the Policy Planning Staff Paul H. Nitze "reported that Mr. Miller has expressed a desire to send out a call for a meeting of the OAS immediately following the President's speech tonight. The Secretary said he thought this should be thought through very carefully since meetings of this kind can sometimes cause more harm than they do good. He asked Mr. Matthews to have this come up through the staff in an ordinary fashion." (Secretary's Daily Meetings, Lot 58 D 609)

[8] Mr. Miller stated in a memorandum of December 16, 1950, to Mr. Matthews, that a meeting of senior officials of the Department held that morning had unanimously approved the proposed conference. He asked permission to announce the U.S. request for it immediately. (363/12–1650)

363/12–1650: Circular telegram

The Secretary of State to Diplomatic Offices in the American Republics

SECRET WASHINGTON, December 16, 1950—2 p. m.

277. Secy Acheson made fol announcement 3 p. m. today:

Verbatim Text. "Pursuant to instructions from Pres Truman, I have today instructed the rep of the US in the Council of the Organization of Amer States to request that a Mtg of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs be held in accordance with Art 39 of the Charter of the Org, which provides that such Mtgs shall be held 'to consider problems of an urgent nature and of common interest to the Amer States'.

"The aggressive policy of intnatl Communism, carried out through its satellites, has brought about a situation in which the entire free world is threatened. The free world is mtg that threat by resolute action through the UN, in keeping with the principles of the UN Charter. As Pres Truman announced in his speech last night, the US, for the purpose of organizing its strength in support of these principles, has embarked on an emergency program of economic and military preparedness.

"Within the UN, the US is also part of the established regional community represented by the OAS. All twenty-one members of that community have jointly dedicated themselves to the cause of freedom. This common cause, even more than geography, has prompted them to work together for their common security. Their cooperation is based on the principle that the defense of any one of them is inseparable from the defense of all of them. What is at stake in the present situation, with respect to this inter-Amer community of ours, is the survival of all that it stands for in the world.

"The US, having embarked on urgent mobilization for the common defense, wishes to consult its fellow members in the inter-Amer community with respect to the situation which we all face and on the coordination of the common effort required to meet it. That is the reason why it is requesting that a Mtg of Consultation be held.

"In the near future this Govt, after consultation with Cong leaders and the Govts of the other Amer Reps, will have proposals to make respecting the date and place of the Mtg and its agenda." End Verbatim Text.

You shld as soon as possible seek urgent interview Pres or FonMin and communicate fol: US Govt contemplates suggesting mtg be held about mid-Feb with agenda limited to broad outlines of appropriate inter-Amer cooperation to meet emergency in three fields: Polit, Mil, Econ. Announcement timed to obtain maximum effectiveness in relation Pres Truman's speech re natl emergency, in view of many aspects intensified US preparation which have special importance to other Amer Govts. We wld be happy have mtg in Washington. We desire advice judgment which Govt to which you accredited may have to offer re proposal, contents agenda, and gen approach. For your info and possible use in carrying out this instr, this Govt attaches major importance to limiting agenda items to those directly and immed related to emergency.

Primary reason for calling Mtg under Art 39 OAS Charter rather than under Rio Treaty [1] provisions is latter might imply failure or loss of confidence in security action by UN.

For your own info, present plan is that US Rep will make brief statement of request at COAS mtg next week,[2] at same time indicating mtg (in 2 weeks).[3] Time thus afforded for consultation on major points.

ACHESON

[1] Reference is to the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (Rio Treaty), opened for signature at Rio de Janeiro, September 2, 1947, and entered into force for the United States on December 3, 1948; for text, see TIAS No. 1838, or 62 Stat. (pt. 2) 1681.

[2] For text of the press release announcing that the U.S. request for a Meeting of Consultation would be brought before the Council of the Organization of American States (COAS), see Department of State Bulletin, January 1, 1951, p. 8; for text of the request, which was placed before the COAS on December 20 and approved the same day, see ibid.

[3] The Department of State issued a press release on December 29, concerning U.S. proposals for the agenda of the Meeting of Consultation; for text, see ibid., January 8, 1951, p. 66.

Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26 [1]

The Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Ambassador in Colombia (Beaulac)

CONFIDENTIAL
INFORMAL

WASHINGTON, December 19, 1950.

DEAR WILLARD: I was sorry that events moved so rapidly toward the end of last week that we were required to announce our intention to convene the Foreign Ministers' meeting before we had time to consult with the other governments. Once we had seen the last draft of the President's speech, it seemed to us that a Foreign Ministers' meeting, for which there already had been pressure among the Latinos, would become inevitable, and consequently it was important for us to take the initiative very strongly and immediately. A related factor was the intention which we heard about last Friday of the Guatemalan Government to request a meeting on the Haya de la Torre case.[2] This would seem to us unfortunate (a) because the general question of asylum appears to us to be a matter for the Inter-American Juridical Commission and not a matter of consultation, and (b) because the specific case of Haya has been resubmitted to the World Court.[3]

[1] Files of Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Edward G. Miller, Jr., for the years 1949–1953.

[2] For documentation on the Guatemalan request, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 865 ff.

[3] For documentation on the Haya de la Torre case, see pp. 1579 ff.

I am delighted to see from your telegram 458 [4] how favorable the reaction has been in Colombia. You may assure President Gomez [5] and Minister Restrepo [6] that we will cooperate closely with Zuleta [7] at this end.

I naturally hope that you will consent to serve as a member of the Delegation, since your help and advice will be indispensable to the success of the Conference. We will advise you when the details are worked out. In the meantime, there will be no objection to your letting Gomez and Restrepo know informally that it is planned for you to come to Washington (if this is agreeable to you, as I hope it will be). The timing of the meeting is still somewhat uncertain. We cannot hold it until about February 15 at the earliest because of the importance of having the new Brazilian regime [8] in power, and also because it will take us some time to work out agreed positions in our own government on such controversial questions as our priorities and allocations system. It seems a little more likely that we will hold the meeting after the 15th of March, by which time the incoming Administrations of Uruguay and Guatemala [9] will have been sworn in, as well as the incoming Brazilian Administration. Also, I had planned to go to Uruguay for their inauguration on March 1, which would give me a very convenient opportunity to talk to Vargas and Peron [10] on the trip [11] and perhaps nail down their cooperation a little better. I would welcome your views on the question of timing.

With best regards,

Sincerely yours, EDWARD G. MILLER, JR.

---

[4] Not printed.

[5] Laureano Gómez, President of Colombia.

[6] Gonzálo Restrepo Jaramillo, Colombian Minister of Foreign Affairs.

[7] Eduardo Zuleta Angel, Colombian Ambassador to the United States.

[8] Reference is to the administration of Getúlio Dornelles Vargas, elected President of Brazil on October 30, 1950.

[9] Reference is to the administration of Andrés Martínez Trueba, elected President of Uruguay on November 26, 1950, and Jacobo Arbenz Guzmán, elected President of Guatemala in mid-November 1950.

[10] Juan Domingo Perón, President of Argentina.

[11] Assistant Secretary Miller visited five Latin American countries between mid-February and early March 1951: Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Peru, and Uruguay. The main purpose of his trip was to discuss with the appropriate officials of these governments matters relating to the forthcoming Meeting of Consultation. For documentation on Mr. Miller's discussions with Brazilian and Argentine officials, see pp. 1184 ff. and 1079 ff., respectively.

396.1/1–1251

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Albert H. Gerberich of the Office of South American Affairs [1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] January 12, 1951.

Subject: Agenda for Foreign Ministers' Conference

Participants: Ambassador Zuleta-Angel, Colombian Amb.
Mr. Dreier, Amer. Amb. to OAS
Mr. Spalding, ARA/I
Mr. Gerberich, OSA

General Observations:

The Ambassador said he wanted to inform himself regarding our ideas on the various problems to be considered under the agenda proposed for the Foreign Ministers' Conference on March 25.

Regarding the first section of the agenda—Politico-Military matters—he said he wanted to make it clear that he is not asking for any special assistance to Colombia or any other republic in its particular problems. He said it is essential that all such matters be put aside in the interests of overall American solidarity. He said that in his opinion the failure of the Conference would be nothing less than an international disaster.

On the second point for discussion—Subversive Activities [2]—he said that thus far the American Republics have taken one step forward by Resolution 32 of the Final Act of the Charter of Bogotá,[3] but have never implemented it. Perhaps they should go farther. He questioned whether it was wise to declare the Communist Party outlawed throughout Latin America. Colombia has not done so. He thought it might be more advisable to continue to keep the Communist Parties under close surveillance and restrict their many fields of activity.

As to Economic Assistance he had been thinking of one project in particular—the Inter-American Highway.[4] He thinks it would be a valuable project to complete because of the facilities it would offer for transporting supplies from one country to another and permitting each country to perform its share of the defense effort more efficiently. It would also be a very popular project throughout Latin America.

---

[1] The source text indicates that the codrafters of this memorandum were Hobart A. Spalding, Intelligence Adviser, Bureau of Inter-American Affairs, and Ambassador John C. Dreier, U.S. Representative to the COAS.

[2] For previous documentation relating to the policy of the United States regarding anti-communist measures within the inter-American system, see Foreign Relations, 1948, vol. IX, pp. 193 ff., and ibid., 1950, vol. II, pp. 624–671, passim.

[3] For text, see Ninth International Conference of American States, March 30–May 2, 1948: Report of the Delegation of the United States with Related Documents (Department of State Publication No. 3262, Washington, 1948), pp. 222–276, hereinafter cited as USDel Report.

[4] For documentation on this subject, see pp. 1038 ff.

In conversations with Nelson Rockefeller [5] he has discovered that he is also thinking of going ahead with this project, but that he has in mind a route farther to the eastward than the one drawn at present. The Ambassador did not elaborate further on this.

He mentioned a conversation that he had had with Luis Quintanilla,[6] and said that while Quintanilla has the best interests of America and of his country at heart he is not to be relied on as a spokesman for the whole Latin American community, as he dares not depart from the traditional Mexican position of suspicion and distrust of "US imperialist" motives.

Organization of Conference:

Ambassador Zuleta said he understood that there were some differences of opinion regarding the organization of the Meeting of Foreign Ministers among the members of the COAS Committee, and he expressed a desire to know the United States view. Mr. Dreier reported that the Committee that morning had agreed on a compromise between those who felt the Foreign Ministers should handle all difficulties in person and those who leaned toward a maximum use of committees to give preliminary consideration to all subjects. The Department believed it was important that the Foreign Ministers be presented with proposals which had already been considered by technical committees. Ambassador Zuleta recalled the experience at Bogotá where committees had wrestled with problems without making any progress until the riots of April 9. Thereafter the heads of delegations had met and solved all major problems promptly—except for economic questions which continued to be handled by a committee and were in the last analysis a failure. Ambassador Zuleta therefore argued in favor of maximum discussion by the Foreign Ministers themselves. Mr. Dreier emphasized the importance in this regard of the preliminary work in the COAS whereby the main issues could be defined and presented to the Foreign Ministers for decision, leaving the working out of details to the committees. It was agreed that further consideration should be given to this important aspect of the Meeting.

Combatting Communism:

With reference to Point (2) of the agenda, Mr. Spalding assured the Ambassador that our thinking and his were running along parallel lines and that like himself we did not favor blanket decrees "outlawing" the Communist Party of the Hemisphere. Our belief was set forth

---

[5] Mr. Rockefeller had been appointed Chairman of the International Development Advisory Board on November 24, 1950.

The Advisory Board was established in pursuance of Section 409 of Title IV of the Foreign Economic Assistance Act of 1950 (Public Law 535), approved June 5, 1950; for text of the act, see 64 Stat. 198. For additional information, see Department of State Bulletin, December 4, 1950, p. 880; ibid., December 18, 1950, pp. 973–974.

[6] Mexican Ambassador to the Organization of American States.

that much of our own legislation, if copied and strictly enforced in other countries, would provide an effective method of dealing with communist and pro-communist activities, and it was explained to the Ambassador that although by US law to be a member of the Communist Party was not illegal, to act as such was now in nearly every case in contravention of US law. Reference was made to the Smith Act [7] and certain provisions of the Internal Security Act of 1950 [8] as the type of legislative provision that we had in mind, and the Ambassador expressed his satisfaction and approval of this approach to the problem.

Mr. Spalding indicated that we felt that communist activities among organized labor were of particular importance and that on that score we were exploring the possibilities of advocating legislative measures somewhat similar to certain provisions of the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947 [9] which might deny the benefits of favorable labor legislation to communist-led groups, in addition to other measures to eradicate the influence of Soviet-oriented leaders in the labor field. Ambassador Zuleta expressed the greatest interest in this and asked that we provide him with any information that we might be able to supply concerning US legislation along these lines.

In closing, our ideas on the merits of a counterpart to the Emergency Advisory Committee for the Political Defense of the Hemisphere (CPD) [10] were outlined to the Ambassador. He expressed general agreement with the necessity for a technical body of manageable proportions to work out the details and the implementation of anti-subversive measures.

---

[7] Reference is to the Alien Registration Act (Public Law 670), commonly known as the Smith Act, approved June 28, 1940; for text, see 54 Stat. 670.

[8] For text of the Internal Security Act of 1950 (Public Law 831), approved September 23, 1950, see 64 Stat. 987.

[9] For text of the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947 (Public Law 101), approved June 23, 1947, see 61 Stat. 136.

[10] For documentation on the work of the Emergency Advisory Committee, which was established in 1942, see Foreign Relations, 1942, vol. v, pp. 74–107; ibid., 1943, vol. v, pp. 2–39; and ibid., 1944, vol. VII, pp. 1–26.

363/1–1751

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller)

RESTRICTED [WASHINGTON,] January 17, 1951.

After talking with Mr. Nelson Rockefeller, Ambassador Zuleta and Dr. Lleras,[1] I believe we can anticipate a strong move at the Conference of Foreign Ministers for a resolution reaffirming Point IV and economic development. It seems to me that we should be prepared to take a positive position on this by drafting a resolution which could be entitled "Emergency Programs to Strengthen the Home Front", and which could include some of the following points which have been suggested by one or more of the three individuals named:

---

[1] Alberto Lleras Camargo, Secretary General of the Organization of American States.

(1) Setting targets for food production over a given period of five or ten years, and instructing IA–ECOSOC to work out detailed plans.

(2) Setting targets for disease control under Health and Sanitation activities (i.e., 5-year program to eliminate malaria, as proposed by Dr. Soper to Mr. Rockefeller), and instructing IA–ECOSOC and PASO to work out detailed plans.

(3) Direction to IA–ECOSOC and Governments to collaborate on preparation of plans for an internal transportation system keyed to strategic materials.

(4) Direction to IA–ECOSOC to study plans for maximum utilization of available manpower throughout the Hemisphere for war production purposes (including possibility of moving unused plants from Germany, as suggested by Vargas).

(5) Instructing IA–ECOSOC to make studies for post-war development and maximum utilization of unusable dollar accumulations.

363/1–1751

Memorandum by Mr. Ivan B. White[1] of the Bureau of Inter-American Affairs to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller)

[WASHINGTON,] January 19, 1951.

The following comments are submitted in regard to your two memoranda of January 17[2] re economic agenda items for the coming Consultation of Foreign Ministers:

a) I suggest that if a modification of Item 3*b* is required, it take the following form: "Production and distribution of products and services in short supply to provide within limits imposed by the emergency for the requirements of the American republics and for the continuation of

---

[1] Mr. White became Director of the Office of Regional American Affairs on February 19, 1951.

[2] One of the two memoranda by Mr. Miller under date of January 17 is printed supra; in the other memorandum, which was addressed to Mr. Thomas C. Mann, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs, Ambassador Dreier, Ambassador Fletcher Warren, Director of the Office of South American Affairs, and Ambassador Albert F. Nufer, Acting Director of the Office of Middle American Affairs, Mr. Miller suggested that, in view of his discussion with members of the International Development Advisory Board and anticipated comments from Latin American governments, the U.S. seek a modification of agenda item III (b) to read as follows:

"Production and utilization of products and services in short supply to provide within limits imposed by the emergency for the requirements of the American republics for continuation of essential economic activity and expansion." (Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26) essential economic activity and expansion of essential productive facilities." [3]

b) I am becoming increasingly dubious about the advisability of a resolution entitled "Emergency Programs to Strengthen the Home Front" for the following reasons: [4]

(1) In view of the fact that Congressional action will not have been taken at the time of the Conference either in respect to the fiscal year 1952 Point Four programs or expansion of lending authority of the Eximbank, Congressional reaction to U.S. participation in such a Resolution would be unfavorable. Furthermore, we would run the risk of a recurrence of commitments in excess of performance.[5]

(2) In view of the fact that there are wide variations country by country in economic development financial needs, in U.S. previous performance in meeting such needs, and in governmental attitudes towards U.S. Point Four assistance, economic development and technical assistance materials can most efficiently be dealt with on a bilateral basis.

c) With respect to the five specific suggestions, I submit the following comments:

(1) We intend that targets for production of essential foods will be set forth as a result of: (a) U.S. determination of requirements; (b) a Conference Resolution setting forth such targets in connection with the "production for defense" item in the agenda; and (c) subsequent IA–ECOSOC planning of the production program in pursuance of a general directive from the Consultation of Foreign Ministers.

(2) With reference to disease control, it is my opinion that the U.S. reaps greater returns in goodwill from the masses through the operation of the Health & Sanitation programs of the IIAA [6] than it does from OAS multi-lateral activities in the same field. If this conclusion is correct, it points to an expansion of the IIAA Health & Sanitation programs, and we have, in fact, made pro-

---

[3] On January 31, the Department of State proposed a revision of draft agenda item III (b); for text of the relevant communication from Ambassador Dreier to Secretary General Lleras Camargo, dated January 31, see Department of State Bulletin, February 12, 1951, p. 266.

[4] In a memorandum to Mr. Miller, dated January 23, 1951, Ambassador Nufer stated in part that he was "inclined to share Mr. White's doubts as to the advisability" of a resolution along the lines suggested by Mr. Miller (363/1–1751).

[5] In a memorandum to Mr. Miller, dated January 23, 1951, Ambassador Warren stated in part the following: "It would be difficult to overemphasize the importance of refraining from making or implying any commitment which we cannot fulfill. It would be better to go on record for less than we intend to give." (363/1–2351)

[6] The Institute of Inter-American Affairs (IIAA) was originally incorporated in 1942 and became a U.S. Government corporation in 1947. It was established to aid governments in the Western Hemisphere by promoting technical programs and projects for health, sanitation, and food supply. As of mid-1950, the IIAA operated in conjunction with the Technical Cooperation Administration (TCA) in Latin America. For background information on the IIAA, see the statement made by Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs Willard L. Thorp before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on June 10, 1949, printed in the Department of State Bulletin, June 19, 1949, pp. 795–797. For information on the IIAA's activities and its relationship with TCA in 1950, see the editorial note in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol II, p. 679.

visions for a doubling of this program in the Point Four budget for fiscal 1952 which has been submitted.

(3) In my judgment, our internal transportation activities during the emergency period should be concentrated on specific needs to meet specific situations in the individual countries, whether such situations arise from the need to maintain the basic economy of the country or to facilitate the production and distribution of strategic materials. I visualize this as a process which should take the form of bilateral programming and financing. On the multi-lateral front, I fear that we will be fortunate if we are able to go ahead with the Inter-American Highway and question the advisability of attempting any continental network of roads beyond that point during the emergency period.

(4) From what we already know of the economic and production pattern in Latin America, I believe we would be well-advised to concentrate on manpower utilization in the fields of military manpower and of the expansion of production in minerals, fibres and essential food products. These are the things which the Latin Americas, from the economic standpoint, can best do. Our task is to put over in Washington the basic concept of utilizing Latin America to do these things as a means of meeting U.S. manpower and supply deficiencies and to get a policy which will permit the shipment to Latin America of the agricultural equipment, fertilizers and other items needed to make such a program effective.

(5) I propose as an alternative to the suggestions of Nelson Rockefeller and the others that we proceed along the following lines in dealing with the problem of economic development:

(a) That the Secretary, in his opening address [7] at the Consultation of Foreign Ministers, set forth, and possibly elaborate, the basic U.S. policy in regard to economic development and technical assistance in Latin America as set forth in the President's budget message.

(b) That the Latin American Governments be informed prior to the Conference that, during the stay of the Foreign Ministers in Washington, the U.S. Government is prepared to discuss with them individually economic development and technical assistance problems.

(c) That Nelson Rockefeller and his group be informed of the foregoing and of our intention to include Dr. Bennett [8] and his staff in those bilateral discussions which relate to technical cooperation.

---

[7] For text of Secretary Acheson's address, delivered before the opening regular session of the Meeting of Consultation on March 27, see the Department of State Bulletin, April 9, 1951, pp. 569–573.

[8] Henry G. Bennett, Administrator, Technical Cooperation Administration.

363/1–2051 : Circular airgram

The Secretary of State to Diplomatic Offices in the American Republics

RESTRICTED WASHINGTON, January 20, 1951—9:35 a. m.

COAS January 17 approved for transmission by Representatives to their governments following program Fourth Meeting of American Foreign Ministers:

1. "Political and military cooperation for the defense of the Americas [1] and to prevent and repel aggression, in accordance with inter-American agreements and with the Charter of the United Nations and the Resolutions of that Organization.
2. "Strengthening of the internal security of the American Republics.
3. "Emergency economic cooperation:

(a) Production and distribution for defense purposes;
(b) Production and distribution of products in short supply and utilization of the necessary services to meet the requirements of the internal economies of the American Republics."

Plenary Meeting February 7 set for final consideration program and approval. Primary questions raised in COAS discussions centered on whether topics broad enough to cover consideration of all projects deemed essential. General agreement that Item 1 in no sense limits consideration to measures strictly within narrow concept continental defense against armed attack; that item 2 covers consideration measures cooperation as well as strictly unilateral action; and that item 3 permits consideration all economic and financial problems essentially related immediate emergency. In your discretion you should take appropriate opportunity discuss above with officials Foreign Office, pointing out desirability that COAS representatives have adequate instructions to vote on this program at February 7 meeting.

FYI Department will shortly provide you with further instructions regarding the presentation by the various governments in advance of the Meeting of Foreign Ministers of draft resolutions or other proposals which the governments may have in mind submitting for the consideration of the Foreign Ministers.

In the meantime, it is of course highly desirable to report promptly to the Department any indication of views you may obtain regarding the attitude of the government to which you are accredited toward the draft agenda. If asked concerning the views of the United States, you may say that, in the Department's view, the agenda appears to be satisfactory, but that the U.S. Government is, of course, giving full and final consideration to the matter between now and February 7.

[1] For documentation concerning U.S. policy with respect to hemisphere defense and related matters, see pp. 985 ff.

For your own information, the latter clause is intended to cover the possibility that it may be found necessary to make a slight modification in one of the agenda items to cover aspects of the problem now under consideration; however, it is impossible at this stage to know whether any further changes in the agenda will be necessary from the U.S. point of view.[2]

ACHESON

[2] For text of the agenda for the Meeting of Consultation, as finally approved on February 7 and 14, see Department of State Bulletin, April 9, 1951, p. 568.

363/1–2551

Memorandum by the United States Representative on the Council of the Organization of American States (Dreier) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] January 25, 1951.

This refers to your memorandum of January 17 and to the comments thereon made by Mr. White, Ambassador Nufer and Ambassador Warren.

I should like to emphasize my strong agreement with your view that we should approach the general problem of Latin American interests in the most positive way we can. Recently I sent you a memorandum [1] on special reasons why Latin Americans should recognize the absolute necessity for entering the Meeting of Foreign Ministers with a strong desire to collaborate with us rather than to bargain. I think there are equally strong reasons why the United States must take the same attitude. The full benefit of this critical meeting can only be gained by a strongly positive approach from both this Government and those of Latin America.

I do not feel the Meeting of Foreign Ministers can be a success if it does not give recognition to the needs and aspirations of the general public of both this country and Latin America. The main reason we do not have more foreign troops in Korea is that other peoples are not sure that we are fighting for goals of equal importance to them. I believe by and large that feeling is shared by Latin America, despite the attitude of cooperation displayed by all the Latin Governments in the UN.

From talks I have had with Ambassador Zuleta, Ambassador Nieto del Río [2] and others, I am sure we are going to have formal proposals from some Latin American Governments to broaden the agenda of the [1] No memorandum fitting the description given here was found in the Department of State files.

[2] Félix Nieto del Río, Chilean Ambassador to the United States.

Meeting of Foreign Ministers to deal specifically with some aspect of the general problem of strengthening the economies of the Latin American countries. I have expressed my personal hope that it would be possible to find some way to work out an agreement on this matter before February 7 (when the COAS meets to give final approval to the agenda), so that we could avoid having a strong division created in the COAS, with the United States taking a defensive and negative stand. Accordingly, I would welcome an explicit inclusion of the general subject of economic improvement in the agenda. It is clear that this general subject should be approached clearly in the light of the limits imposed by the current emergency.

I believe both your proposal and Mr. White's regarding a revision of Item 3(b) meet this requirement. Another approach would be to add a Point 3(c) saying "Problems of Economic Improvement During the Emergency."

With regard to the points which might be covered in a resolution "Emergency Programs for Strengthening the Home Front," I should like to make one main observation in addition to stating my general agreement with this approach. The observation is that the adoption by the Meeting of Foreign Ministers of a resolution advocating certain general goals and activities does not necessarily mean that all such activities must be carried out through OAS agencies. For example, a general declaration of policy in favor of the elimination of various diseases might include a recommendation that Governments collaborate to this end through multilateral and bilateral agreements. This would enable us to carry out certain activities through an expanded program of the IIAA, leaving others to the PASO. Likewise, a resolution advocating the study of transportation problems and the undertaking of programs to improve transportation facilities required by expanded emergency production, may well be used as a background for U.S. bilateral approaches, as well as any activity by the IA ECOSOC which might be helpful.

In considering any resolutions which will reflect a general policy to carry out certain activities, I believe we should carefully analyze the benefits to be achieved from bilateral as compared with multilateral programs, and use both these approaches to the extent they are considered useful. Resolutions can form the background for both types of activity.

Similarly, I agree entirely on the importance of bilateral discussions with visiting Foreign Ministers on their specific economic problems. This does not in any sense, however, seem to me to lessen the desirability of some general statements by the Meeting of Foreign Ministers which can be used to focus public attention on certain important positive goals of inter-American cooperation.

363/2-951

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Edgar L. McGinnis, Jr., of the Office of South American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] February 9, 1951.

Subject: Possible Discussion of Asylum at Forthcoming IAM

Participants: Ambassador Berckemeyer [1]—Peruvian Embassy
Ambassador Warren—OSA
Mr. McGinnis—OSA

Ambassador Berckemeyer called upon Ambassador Warren today at his own request. The Peruvian Ambassador stated that his Government was greatly concerned over the Guatemalan proposal at the COAS meeting recently to reaffirm the right of asylum. He said that his Government strongly opposed the introduction of this subject as extraneous to the general purposes of the IAM. Furthermore, he considered the proposal as a disguised attempt to bring the Haya case before the OAS. Ambassador Berckemeyer asked what the Department's views were on this proposal.

The Peruvian Ambassador was told that we did not favor the inclusion in the agenda of the Conference any matters not relevant to the emergent problems which the meeting has been called to consider. Ambassador Warren added that he was doubtful whether the Guatemalan proposal would have any more success than that Government's previous endeavor to bring the Haya case before the OAS.[2] Ambassador Berckemeyer was also told that we continue to believe that it would be inappropriate to discuss the Haya case while the matter is under consideration by the International Court of Justice.

Before departing, Ambassador Berckemeyer stated that it would be very "difficult" for Peru to participate in the IAM if the Haya case were to be discussed either directly or indirectly.

---

[1] Fernando Berckemeyer, Peruvian Ambassador to the United States.

[2] On February 14, 1951, the COAS rejected the Guatemalan proposal to include on the agenda a fourth item concerning the right of asylum.

363/3–251

Memorandum of Conversation, by the United States Representative on the Council of the Organization of American States (Dreier)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] March 2, 1951.

Subject: Draft Resolutions for Meeting of Foreign Ministers

Participants: Dr. Alberto Lleras, Secretary General of the OAS
John C. Dreier, U.S. Representative on the COAS

I took the opportunity this afternoon to show Dr. Lleras in greatest confidence some draft resolutions on economic subjects [1] and on subversive activities, in order to gain his reaction to the general content thereof. I explained very carefully that these were in no sense approved drafts, and asked him to keep confidential for the time being the fact that he had even seen any such papers. This he assured me he would do.

After reading over the general economic resolution and the one on economic development (the only ones I showed him), he commented that he felt they were lacking in anything tangible or even significant. He said they would immediately be compared with the resolutions of Chapultepec [2] and that the general impression would be that the policy of the American republics had gone backwards since that time. For example, he compared the vague statement of relative equal sacrifice with the much stronger statement of equal treatment contained in the Chapultepec resolution.

Dr. Lleras recommended that we do not use these draft resolutions to consult other Governments, since the effect will be unfavorable. When I asked him what he felt the Latin American countries specifically looked for in resolutions at the Meeting of Foreign Ministers, he said frankly that he doubted whether the Latin Americans had thought things out sufficiently to know what they wanted in concrete terms. However, there was no doubt but that what they sought in general was assurance of fair treatment by the United States, so that they would not have to experience all the same problems of the last war in regard to basic interference with their economic operations. Actually Dr. Lleras pointed out that this kind of assurance could not well be stated in resolutions of the 21 Foreign Ministers because it really involved the policy and practice of only the United States. Therefore, he said the important thing for the United States was not the resolutions but the statements of policy which we made, in which we could give the Latin American Governments the reassurance they wanted that we were cognizant and sympathetic to their needs.

[1] Versions of draft resolutions on economic subjects prepared by the United States for presentation to the Meeting of Consultation are contained in OAS Files, Lot 60 D 665; final drafts are printed in Proceedings, pp. 67–71, and Department of State Bulletin, April 16, 1951, pp. 614–615.

[2] Reference is to the Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace (Chapultepec Conference), held at Mexico City, February 21–March 8, 1945; for documentation on the conference, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. IX, pp. 1 ff. For text of the Final Act, containing the resolutions of the conference, see Pan American Union, Final Act of the Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace, Mexico City, February–March, 1945 (Washington, 1945).

After reading the draft resolution on subversive activities,[3] Dr. Lleras said he felt it substantially better than the economic resolutions because it was so much more specific; it set up a staff to do a specific job, told them what to do and to whom to report. In contrast the economic resolutions made references to "studies" by the IA ECOSOC without sufficient indication of what they were to contain, when they were to be completed, and what was to be done with them when and if they were ever finished.

Going back to the economic resolution, Dr. Lleras particularly advised against showing the Latin American countries any draft resolution which contained the language found in paragraph three under allocations and priorities. This reference to "such international arrangements as may be established", he said, would recreate fears that the United States would, at the Meeting of Foreign Ministers, merely turn the Latin Americans over to the international conference on allocation of materials where they would be at the mercy of other countries of the world. He said that a recommendation such as that included in paragraph three, would be all right once the Latin Americans were fully familiar with the commodity group set-up, but at the present time might do a lot of harm.

[3] For text of the final draft of the resolution on internal security, jointly submitted to the Meeting of Consultation by Bolivia, Ecuador, the United States, and Uruguay, see Proceedings, pp. 60–62, or Department of State Bulletin, April 9, 1951, p. 573.

363/3–851

Memorandum of Conversation, by the United States Representative on the Council of the Organization of American States (Dreier)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] March 8, 1951.

Subject: Conversations with Latin American Representatives as Indicated Concerning U.S. Position on Points II and III of Agenda for IAM, March 6 and 7.

The following summarizes the views expressed by Latin American Representatives in conversations with Ambassador Dreier, and at times Ambassador Warren, Mr. Spalding and Mr. Corliss,[1] on March 6 and 7.

1. Brazil: Mr. Dreier met with Ambassador Accioly [2] of Brazil in the latter's office and showed him the draft resolution on internal security and the summary memorandum of positions on economic questions. Ambassador Accioly was extremely well impressed with the paper on internal security and particularly applauded the suggestion that a meeting of Ministers of Justice might be called to consider the recommendations of the proposed staff. He agreed with the role assigned to the COAS in this matter.

[1] James C. Corliss, Office of Regional American Affairs.
[2] Hildebrando Pompeu Pinto Accioly.

On economic questions, Ambassador Accioly confined himself to saying he had no personal objection to it, but that he did not consider himself well qualified to deal with economic problems. He stated that his Foreign Minister [3] had reported favorably on the conversation held with Mr. Miller in Rio. The Foreign Minister had also asked Ambassador Accioly, he said, to draw up some proposals under the political subjects under Point I of the agenda.

2. Costa Rica: Ambassador Oreamuno [4] came to Mr. Dreier's office and was shown the text of the two documents referred to above. He found the resolution on internal security satisfactory but made a few suggestions for drafting changes, which have been conveyed to Mr. Spalding. He expressed doubt that the COAS would consider itself able to judge on the necessity for a meeting of Ministers of Justice without submitting the document to their Governments for review first.

In the economic field, Ambassador Oreamuno also expressed his general satisfaction. He said he felt that under II–G some consideration should be given to the relative impact of refusal of allocation of a needed commodity on various projects, depending upon the degree of completion. Failure to allocate a bit of machinery to a project 90 percent completed would, he argued, be much more serious than to deny the same item to a new project not yet begun. Ambassador Oreamuno also urged that Article III–C, last sentence, should be clarified in its effect on the Latin American countries. Does this mean, he asked, that if a country puts a price control on imported products, it must also impose price controls on its exports to the United States? Finally, Ambassador Oreamuno urged more attention to the problem of the gradual relaxation of price controls, so that dollar balances will not be lost through price rises, as was the case after the last war.

3. Chile: Ambassador Nieto del Río, Minister Rodríguez [5] and Mr. Burr [6] came to Mr. Dreier's office and discussed the above documents for about two hours. With reference to internal security, they expressed particular interest in the role of the COAS and felt that it should be made clear that the Council would have no substantive responsibility for the recommendations of the staff. They felt the

[3] João Neves da Fontoura.
[4] J. Rafael Oreamuno.
[5] Mario Rodríguez A., Minister-Counselor, Chilean Embassy.
[6] Jorge Burr, Commercial Counselor, Chilean Embassy.

formula proposed was generally satisfactory, the Ambassador making a few suggestions for drafting changes which Mr. Spalding took down.

On Point III, the Chileans said that what concerned them about our paper was not what it contained but what it did not contain. When asked for examples, they mentioned the importance of the subject of synthetic production that interfered with such basic industries as nitrates; also the importance of maintaining an effective relationship between the prices of exported and imported products, particularly after the emergency had been relaxed and price controls removed. They felt it was extremely important to have some adequate system for attending to Latin American export needs, and complained about the recent inability to get 1500 tons of synthetic rubber for essential civilian needs in Chile.

The Chileans showed Mr. Dreier a confidential circular [7] from their Foreign Office outlining their general attitude on the economic questions in connection with the IAM. This circular outlined five main subjects of interest: (a) Production and prices of strategic materials; (b) filling the requirements for machinery, etc., for economic development programs; (c) methods of financing economic development; (d) planning economic development on an inter-American basis for more effective integration; and (e) avoidance of disruptions to the economy at the conclusion of the emergency. The paper outlined the problems of Chile which are well known, emphasizing the increases which Chile suffered in the prices of imported materials during the last war in comparison with the relatively stable prices of her exports. Much attention was also given to the vicious circle in which Chile found herself with respect to economic development: she could not import capital goods because of the need for consumer goods, and could not produce consumer goods because of the need for capital goods. The circular concluded with a request for the Embassies to discuss these subjects with the other governments and particularly to obtain information on the situation and views of other countries with respect to the five points mentioned above.

4. Ecuador: Ambassador Peñaherrera [8] and Minister Moscoso [9] were shown the two documents. The Ambassador had little comment to make on either one. Dr. Moscoso urged stronger references to democratic liberties in the resolution on internal security.

On economic questions, the Ecuadorans asked whether the study of transportation requirements would cover the possible control of tariffs, which they felt constituted an important aspect of the problem. They also urged that more attention be given to the question of maintaining price controls on manufactured goods after the emergency.

---

[7] Not found in Department of State files.
[8] Luis Antonio Peñaherrera.
[9] Alfonso Moscoso Cárdenas, Minister-Counselor, Ecuadoran Embassy.

The Ecuadorans expressed an interest in discussing the draft resolution [10] which the Foreign Minister [11] had given to Mr. Miller in New York, and it was agreed that another meeting [12] would be set up for this purpose and to go more fully into the economic questions mentioned above.

5. Peru: Ambassador Berckemeyer and Ambassador de Lavalle [13] came in and were shown copies of both documents. On economic questions, their only comment was to urge that it be clarified that the controls recommended under Point III of our memorandum were temporary and not to be permanent. They said they would transmit the text of the memorandum to their Government but indicated they had received no expression of their Government's views on the IAM so far, other than the general desire to cooperate with the United States.

With respect to the internal security question, the Peruvian Ambassadors expressed general satisfaction, but indicated they had no instructions.

6. Bolivia: Ambassador Martínez Vargas,[14] Ambassador Mollinedo [15] and Minister Peñaranda [16] came in to discuss the economic paper, having already been informed fully about the internal security paper. The main comment was that increased production of strategic materials was a question of price. They asked for a definition of the meaning of the phrase "relative equality of sacrifice", which we were not able to give them in a firm way. They also spoke of the importance of looking forward to the problems of post-emergency with sudden stoppage of production on which countries like Bolivia depended for their livelihood.

---

[10] Apparent reference to a resolution concerning the peaceful settlement of inter-American disputes (363/3–651) ; no copy of the Ecuadoran draft was found in the Department of State files.

[11] L. Neftalí Ponce Miranda.

[12] Ambassador Peñaherrera, accompanied by Minister-Counselor Moscoso, called at the Department of State a few days later for further discussion of the matter with Mr. Miller, Mr. White, and Mr. McGinnis. In a memorandum of that conversation, dated March 13, 1951, by Mr. McGinnis, Assistant Secretary Miller was reported to have stated in part that the United States had prepared a draft resolution concerning the peaceful settlement of inter-American disputes which was "very similar to the Ecuadoran draft," and that "the question of sponsorship was somewhat difficult since obviously any country which had pending disputes with another American Republic would not be a good sponsor for the proposal." He further commented: "In order for the proposal to gain unanimous acceptance it would be advisable . . . to have some country such as Mexico or Brazil sponsor it." Ambassador Peñaherrera was reported to have replied in part that "if the United States did not wish to present the proposed resolution, Mexico would be an acceptable substitute." (363/3–1351)

On March 28, 1951, the United States and Mexico jointly submitted to the Meeting of Consultation a draft resolution on the importance of maintaining peaceful relations among the American states; for text, see Proceedings, pp. 55–56, or Department of State Bulletin, April 9, 1951, p. 574.

[13] Juan Bautista de Lavalle.

[14] Ricardo Martínez Vargas.

[15] Alfredo Mollinedo.

[16] Juan Peñaranda Minchin, Minister-Counselor, Bolivian Embassy.

363/3–1251

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of North and West Coast Affairs, Office of South American Affairs (Krieg)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] March 12, 1951.

Subject: Foreign Ministers Meeting

Participants: Dr. Otanez,[1] Minister-Counselor, Embassy of Venezuela
Dr. Perez Matos,[2] Secretary, Venezuelan Mission to OAS
Mr. Mann,[3] Acting Assistant Secretary for Inter-American Affairs
Ambassador Dreier, US Representative on the OAS
Mr. Krieg, Officer in Charge, North & West Coast Affairs

Dr. Otanez and Dr. Perez Matos called at Mr. Mann's request to discuss the policy which this Government will follow at the Meeting of Foreign Ministers of the American Republics. Mr. Mann handed to each of the callers a memorandum entitled "General Views of the US Government with Respect to Economic Problems in Connection with the IAM".[4] He pointed out in this connection that the paper on our military policy is still under consideration and that Ambassador Leparvanche[5] had discussed internal security with Ambassador Dreier and Mr. Spalding on another occasion. The economic portion of the agenda would undoubtedly require the most attention from the Foreign Ministers, and it was on that subject that Mr. Mann said he wished to talk with the Venezuelans.

Mr. Mann commenced by emphasizing that the principles included in the memorandum have been accepted by all appropriate branches of the U.S. Government; they therefore represent a great deal more than the views of the Department of State. Resolutions will be drawn up covering the general principles set forth in the memorandum. The text of the draft resolutions should be ready in about a week, and Mr. Mann said he would be glad to discuss them with Dr. Otanez if the latter wished. Dr. Otanez replied that he was more interested in the basic principles than in the detailed wording and pointed out that Foreign Minister Gomez Ruiz[6] is leaving Venezuela on the 14th. Dr. Otanez went on to say that the principal difficulty at the present time lies with allocations and priorities. The Embassy staff, he said, are referred from one office to another among the defense agencies and [1] Aureliano Otañez.

[2] Martín Pérez Matos.
[3] Thomas C. Mann.
[4] Not printed.
[5] René Léparvanche Parparcén, Colombian Representative to the COAS.
[6] Luis Emilio Gómez Ruiz.

after a wearisome procedure are finally informed that arrangements should be made first with a manufacturer after which the subject of priority could be considered. The manufacturer, in turn, states that they cannot accept orders without a priority.

Mr. Mann admitted that there is much confusion at the present time and pointed out that our emergency governmental organization is still in the process of being created. He had every expectation that it would improve in effectiveness with the passage of a few months and that in the meantime the Department is prepared to give all possible help and assistance to the Venezuelans in procuring materials essential to their economy. Mr. Mann emphasized, however, that we are facing a real emergency. We must first arm the United States, and then we must arm Western Europe, which is in the fore front of the battle line against Soviet aggression. The question of arms for Japan must be considered, and Indo-China is immediately threatened and fighting is actually going on in Korea, Mr. Mann went on, and is consuming large amounts of materials and men; he pointed out that United Nations troops in Korea have suffered 50,000 casualties to date. In these circumstances, he continued, there are bound to be scarcities of essential materials, and we must all share these shortages and the consequent hardships. It cannot be expected that the Latin American countries will be able to purchase everything they want while the emergency lasts, but he wished to assure the Venezuelans that we will make every effort to see that their essential requirements are attended to.

There followed a discussion of some of the points listed in the memorandum, and Dr. Otanez indicated general approval of the statements made. Ambassador Dreier said he would greatly appreciate receiving the views of the Venezuelan Government on these points, and Dr. Otanez said he would be glad to inform us as soon as he had received his Government's comments.

363/3–1351

Memorandum of Conversation, by the United States Representative on the Council of the Organization of American States (Dreier)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] March 13, 1951.

Subject: United States Position on Political and Military Subjects for IAM

Participants: Ambassador Eduardo Zuleta Angel of Colombia
Mr. John C. Dreier, U.S. Representative on the COAS AR—Mr. Ivan White (for part of the time) and Mr. Edward A. Jamison.

Having displayed a constant and special interest in supporting the United States in regard to political and military matters at the Meeting of Foreign Ministers, Ambassador Zuleta was informed that we could discuss confidentially with him some draft resolutions which were still in the semi-final stage of approval. He was shown copies of the draft resolutions on hemisphere defense and support of the United Nations.[1]

After reading them, Ambassador Zuleta commented that they would create no problem for the Latin Americans. He observed that they were rather weak and that he would have preferred a single resolution in place of two separate ones. He also asked why no reference was made to the Inter-American Defense Board in the resolution on the United Nations.

Mr. White explained that it was a matter of priorities and that the implementation of the "uniting for peace" resolution of the UNGA would rest principally with the UN. In response to Ambassador Zuleta's further comments, Mr. Dreier explained the U.S. position as follows:

There were three main lines of military effort to be considered at the present time: Korea, hemisphere defense, and the use of UN forces in some future emergency. The views of our Government were that in regard to Korea, it would be better for the U.S. Government, at the unified command of the UN, to deal directly with other Governments in an effort to increase the contribution of troops to the Korean campaign. With respect to the OAS, the first task was hemisphere defense and this was being assigned to the IADB. In view of the fact that the IADB would be fully occupied, and that the immediate requirement problem of forces for Korea would be handled bilaterally, it was our view that it would be best not to direct the IADB to consider plans for future UN military forces. Moreover, such forces, even if planned, could probably not be equipped any way, due to shortage of material. Furthermore, there were differences in the nature of the military forces required for Korea—where ground troops were essential—and for hemisphere defense—where air and naval forces would play a more important role. It appeared impossible, therefore, to accomplish planning for hemisphere defense and for future UN collective forces at one time.[2]

Ambassador Zuleta indicated that he accepted this view. He said he would have no difficulty in supporting and gaining support for the resolutions, although he displayed no great enthusiasm over them, repeating that the UN resolution was weak, since it gave no cue to how it

---

[1] Copies of the referenced draft resolutions are attached to a memorandum by Mr. White to Mr. Miller, dated March 12, 1951, not printed (363/3–1251).

An interdepartmental working group, comprised of representatives from the Departments of State and Defense, drafted the resolutions dealing with military and hemisphere defense matters. Documents pertaining to the deliberations of the military working group are contained in OAS Files, Lot 60 D 665, Box 98.

[2] For additional documentation on these subjects, and the position of the Department of Defense concerning the Meeting of Consultation, see pp. 985 ff.

was to be implemented. Mr. Dreier said he thought the UN resolution had two important values: it would focus attention on the broader problem of the UN; and at the same time, would constitute support for whatever efforts might be made to obtain more forces for Korea.

Ambassador Zuleta agreed that we would discuss at another time questions of how to handle these resolutions. He simply reiterated his previously expressed view that it would be desirable to have them introduced jointly by several countries.[3]

[3] On March 27, 1951, the draft resolution on support for the United Nations was jointly submitted to the Meeting of Consultation by Brazil, Colombia, Cuba, Paraguay, the United States, and Uruguay; for text, see Proceedings, p. 51, or Department of State Bulletin, April 9, 1951, p. 573.

On the same date, the draft resolution on inter-American military cooperation was jointly submitted by Brazil, Colombia, El Salvador, Paraguay, the United States, and Uruguay; for text, see Proceedings, pp. 52–53, or Department of State Bulletin, April 9, 1951, p. 574.

OAS Files, Lot 60 D 665 [1]

Position Paper Prepared in the Bureau of Inter-American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] March 21, 1951.

IAM D–1/1a

[Here follow a cover sheet and a negotiating brief on emergency economic cooperation.]

IAM/ECONOMIC

The agenda of the IAM provides for consideration of the following:

III Emergency Economic Cooperation—

(a) Production and distribution for defense purposes.
(b) Production and distribution of products in short supply and utilization of necessary services to meet the requirements of the internal economies of the American Republics; and measures to facilitate in so far as possible the carrying out of programs of economic development.

PROBLEM

The objective of the United States is to secure the full cooperation of Latin America in the mobilization of economic resources, goods and services to assure their maximum production, distribution, and utilization, and the adoption of measures of economic defense, for the common purpose of achieving security. The consideration of this objective will precipitate IAM discussions of issues which are complicated per se. Furthermore, LA holds certain grievances based on allegedly indifferent consideration by the United States of their economic problems and development aspirations during World War II and thereafter. Specifically, problems will arise concerning formulation of an inter-American policy with regard to:

[1] Basic collection of records of meetings of the Organization of American States, other major inter-American governmental organizations, and inter-American conferences together with related subject files for the years 1939–1962, as retired by the Office of Inter-American Regional Political Affairs, and subsequently preserved as item 39 of Federal Records Center accession 71 A 6682. Documents pertaining to the Fourth Meeting of Consultation are contained in Boxes 98–99.

1. General Framework of Emergency Economic Cooperation
2. Increased Production
3. Allocation of Production essential economic activities by means of allocations and other administrative devices
4. Price Controls
5. Intergovernmental Consultation
6. Transportation Facilities
7. Technical Cooperation Programs
8. Economic Development
9. Economic Defense and Security Measures

Problems (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), and (9) are of immediate emergency concern to the defense effort. Problems (3), (4), (6), (7) and (8) are of great importance to Latin America both as a corollary to emergency economic cooperation and for the post-emergency period.

The position of the United States must be realistic with relation to the exigencies of the defense programs, the maintenance of economic equilibrium in the Americas, and the continuance of inter-American solidarity. This position must be within the policy frames approved by the CFRS [2] on February 7, 1951 (IAM D–1).[3]

RECOMMENDATIONS

The United States must seek to obtain the IAM acceptance of certain principles (for procedure see specific draft resolutions in the Negotiating Brief under economic subject headings) as follows:

1. General Framework of Emergency Economic Cooperation:

A unanimous declaration of common cause and common sacrifice in economic cooperation for the defense of the free world.

2. Increased Production:

Full inter-American cooperation in maximizing production of strategic materials, and of other basic materials and essential manufactured goods, in meeting the needs of the common defense programs and the essential civilian requirements of the free world.

[2] Reference is to the interdepartmental Committee on Foreign Requirements and Supplies (CFRS), established January 19, 1951, as part of the Office of Defense Mobilization (ODM). The committee was charged with the responsibility for reviewing and evaluating foreign requirements for supplies produced in the United States and United States requirements for supplies from foreign sources.

[3] Not printed; it is contained in OAS Files, Lot 60 D 665.

3. Allocation of Production:

Full inter-American cooperation in (a) the international allocation of basic materials in short supply and to assure acceptance of principle that highest priority be given defense requirements, (b) that essential civilian economic activities be sustained, (c) that in reducing less essential civilian needs, the principle of relative equality of sacrifice should prevail.

4. Price Controls:

Maximum cooperation in the acceptance of necessary price controls as a means of facilitating commodity flow, curbing inflationary tendencies, and avoiding market dislocations and consumer distress.

5. Intergovernmental Consultation:

Full opportunity for Governments to consult with each other on the effect of emergency controls on international trade, but excluding any commitment for consultation prior to the imposition of controls.

6. Transportation Facilities:

The cooperation of Latin America, through IA–ECOSOC, in planning for the maximum utilization of all inter-American transportation facilities in anticipation of an emergency.

7. Technical Cooperation Programs:

Agreement on the desirability of actively planning and prosecuting technical cooperation programs.

8. Economic Development:

Agreement that priority consideration of economic development programs must be viewed in the light of, and in relation to, the defense effort; this criterion will place emphasis on economic development programs for the production of basic materials essential to the defense program but does not preclude consideration, in so far as possible, of the carrying out of other economic development programs.

9. Economic Defense and Security Measures:

Agreement on full inter-American cooperation in (a) applying export controls to direct shipments and transshipments to the Soviet Bloc of Items of strategic significance or in short supply, (b) controlling air cargo and maritime resources with a view to prohibiting the carriage to or within the Soviet Bloc of goods which are the subject of embargo, and (c) such other economic defense measures as may become necessary.

DISCUSSION

The IAM has been called by the United States for two basic reasons, i.e., (1) the necessity for enlisting the full collaboration of Latin American Republics in the political, military and economic fields, so as to further the common defense of the free world, and (2) because the impact of our national rearmament program upon Latin American countries is so great as to make such a meeting essential from their standpoint.

General Framework of Emergency Economic Cooperation:

The broad purpose of the United States in the economic field is to gain acceptance of Latin America that the defense program is vital to both and that each of the American Republics must contribute to the common effort for the benefit of the free world. A declaration of common purpose and common responsibility would be of help to the United States later in getting Latin America to take practical steps of economic cooperation, would develop a sense of common sacrifice, and would help to create an auspicious atmosphere for negotiations. Appropriate consideration must also be given to reserving the resources of Latin America for the free world.

The economic items on the agenda are of particular importance to the United States because (1) failure to reach agreement on economic cooperation will adversely affect political and military objectives, and (2) because Latin America is both a major supplier of materials vital to the common defense programs and also a consumer of industrial products from the United States and Western Europe which will be subject to increasing economic controls.

In 1950 Latin America exported to the United States $2.8 billions of goods, or about 35 per cent of total U.S. imports; in addition to basic foodstuffs such as coffee and sugar, Latin America supplied 25 per cent of U.S. imports of metal and manufactures, 46 per cent of wool imports, 61 per cent of petroleum, and more than 50 per cent of imports of copper, lead, nitrate, and henequen fiber.

In turn, the U.S. exports to Latin America in 1950 totaled $2.5 billions, representing 30 per cent of U.S. total exports of machinery, 30 per cent of iron and steel exports, 38 per cent of chemicals, 40 per cent of textile manufactures, 44 per cent of automobiles, and 44 per cent of iron and steel advanced manufactures.

Latin American imports from the United States in 1950 represented about 50 per cent of Latin America's total imports from all sources, indicating the high percentage of dependence on U.S. supplies.

The economic items on the agenda will be complicated and controversial, both because of their inter-relationship with each other, and because of the history of Latin American economic relations with the United States during and after World War II. At the Rio Conference in 1942 the United States, recognizing the mutuality of the war effort, committed itself to equal treatment in the allocation of goods to cover civilian needs in Latin America and in the United States. Latin America holds the views that:

1. During a substantial period of World War II, the Latin American requirements for civilian supply were neglected by the United States as compared with treatment given to the U.S. civilian population;

2. During World War II the United States purchased materials from Latin America at controlled prices, whereas after the war, when Latin America was able to convert their dollar earnings into U.S. supplies, the United States lifted price controls and sharp price increases occurred;

3. That after World War II the United States did not give sufficient priority to Latin American aspirations for economic development.

The United States does not concede the validity in toto of these Latin American views, but their existence presages difficulties in negotiations in the IAM.

The new emergency faces the United States with precisely the same problems in these fields as arose during the last war, the difference being only in degree. The main lesson to be drawn from U.S. experience with the Rio doctrine is that the United States must avoid over-commitments on supply, and must insure administrative implementation of such commitments as are made.

Increased Production:

Latin America is today a vitally important producer of raw materials and production could be increased, substantially in most cases, with guidance and assistance from the United States. Also, Latin America has a modest industrial base which, within limitations, could be used for the production of manufactured goods of use to the common defense program.

Latin America is the major foreign source of the following materials on the U.S. stockpile list:

Item	Source
1. Abaca (manila fiber)	Central America
2. Antimony	Mexico, Bolivia and Peru
3. Asbestos (certain grades)	Bolivia
4. Beryl	Brazil
5. Bismuth	Mexico, Argentina, Bolivia and Peru
6. Castor Oil	Brazil, Mexico, Haiti, Ecuador, Central America
7. Copper	Chile, Mexico, Peru, Cuba
8. Iodine	Chile
9. Ipecac	Central America and Brazil
10. Manganese	Brazil, Cuba and Mexico
11. Mica	Brazil and Argentina
12. Monazite	Brazil
13. Quartz crystals	Brazil
14. Quebracho	Paraguay, Argentina and Brazil
15. Sisal	Haiti and Brazil
16. Tantalite	Brazil
17. Tin	Bolivia
18. Vanadium	Peru
19. Wool (apparel)	Argentina and Uruguay
20. Zinc	Mexico, Peru and Bolivia

Latin America is also a significant supplier of the following stockpile items: agar, chromite, cotton (long-staple), industrial diamonds, fluorspar, hog bristles, molybdenum and nickel.

The Western European countries are also dependent on Latin America for both strategic materials and essential civilian items, notably grain, meat, foodstuffs, cotton and wool.

In order to increase production of basic materials in Latin America, the United States may in some instances have to overcome difficulties from (a) the shortage of risk capital, especially in the case of marginal production, (b) the Latin American fear of economic dislocation upon termination of U.S. procurement programs, and (c) lack of assurance that capital equipment necessary for expanded output will be available from the United States and Western Europe. Other very important factors affecting the production capacity of Latin America will have to be taken into consideration by the IAM, such as inadequate standards of health and sanitation, ineffective manpower techniques, illiteracy, and inefficient agricultural methods; such problems are, and will be, dealt with through the Technical Cooperation Program with increased importance in relation to the common defense program.

Allocations and Priorities:

There is strong evidence that Latin America considers the maintenance of their civilian economies as the first line of civilian defense against internal subversive elements. As a means of securing adequate civilian supplies, Latin American governments are inclined to link their cooperation in supplying strategic materials to firm guarantees for reciprocity in material supplies from the United States. This will present a very difficult negotiating problem because while the United States is necessarily limiting supplies to Latin America, at the same time the United States must ask Latin America to expand the exports of basic materials. In this connection the United States, as principal supplier to Latin America, has a strong bargaining position, but an intransigent U.S. attitude might precipitate serious economic friction, jeopardize defense efforts, and create political disharmony. Consequently the United States must be prepared to meet the legitimate civilian requirements of Latin America in order to secure Latin American economic cooperation for the defense program. The United States must also place the problem of cooperation in the broad context of the defense of the free world and on the footing of a common cause. Divergent viewpoints must be balanced out within the supply limitations.

Price Controls:

The U.S. price ceilings on basic commodities imported from Latin America are, with very few possible exceptions, favorable to Latin America both historically and with regard to the relations between imported raw materials and exported manufactured goods. The United States considers that price controls confer reciprocal benefits and are a potent anti-inflationary measure. Under present price control policies the United States will be able to undertake to avoid discrimination against raw materials or against imported goods. Latin America is concerned, however, with the future purchasing power of the dollar balances which they will accumulate by reason of increased sales to the United States, and would like to arrive at some formula for maintaining the post-emergency purchasing power of these dollar balances. The United States is not able to give any practicable assurances on this latter point.

Intergovernmental Consultation:

The United States will provide the Latin American governments with full opportunity to consult with regard to the effect of emergency controls on international trade, but cannot commit itself, in all cases, to the prior consultation desired by Latin America.

Transportation Facilities:

Inasmuch as the maximum utilization of all transportation facilities will be increasingly important, cooperative studies of inter-American requirements versus availabilities should be prepared for possible emergency.

Technical Cooperation Programs:

Effective progress in the technical cooperation field is of immediate and increasing importance (a) as a shield against Soviet penetration by strengthening the inter-American front economically and socially, and (b) during this emergency period, its relation to the defense programs. The faith of Latin American peoples in the free-world system must be confirmed by concrete efforts to help them to help themselves in overcoming poverty, ignorance and disease. With technical cooperation, as planned, labor productivity may be increased and wealth created with a view to improving human welfare in economic and social fields. There will be strong pressure from Latin American delegations and U.S. groups for the affirmation by the IAM of a positive program of technical cooperation, and a realistic agreement in this regard is entirely consistent with U.S. policy objectives.[4]

Economic Development:

While material requirements for defense programs and basic civilian economic activities must have priority over other material requirements, there is the problem of facilitating, in so far as possible, economic development in Latin America during the emergency period. The free-world rearmament program will materially affect supplies of capital goods required in Latin America to (1) maintain and develop existing civilian industrial and agricultural industries, (2) complete developments recently started and not yet finished, and (3) carry forward developments which are planned. Opposition elements in Latin America are propagandizing that the free-world rearmament program will be used as an excuse by the industrialized countries to choke off economic development in Latin America and thus reduce Latin America to a dependent "colonial area". Among pro-United States elements there is the feeling that since 1946 the United States' emphasis on economic aid to Europe has left Latin America in a "neglected" status. Latin America will probably seek to obtain in the IAM a positive affirmation that economic development must go forward and that there be effective cooperation in facilitating the material requirements necessary for such development. This means that the United States must be prepared to assure the consideration of requests for capital assistance and material supplies for economic development, within the realities of the supply limitations. In this connection, experience gained in the last war proved that it is often possible constructively to relate other development (such, for example, as development of transportation and port facilities) with development for the production and distribution of defense materials.

[4] For documentation on United States technical assistance policy toward the American Republics as a group, see pp. 1038 ff.

Economic Defense and Security Measures:

In order to broaden the area of international cooperation in denying to the Soviet bloc strategic materials, services, or the use of funds, the United States should seek agreement on full Latin American cooperation in the matter of security controls. In this connection a resolution, to be unanimously acceptable to the Latin American countries, must avoid specific public reference to the Soviet bloc, but should provide for agreement on principle under which appropriate measures can be developed by bilateral or multilateral discussions. As regards financial controls, it is recommended that, if the opportunity presents itself, consideration be given to holding informal discussions on the technical aspects of foreign funds controls.

363/3–2251

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Director of the Office of Regional American Affairs (White)[1]

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] March 22, 1951.

Subject: Draft Economic Resolutions

I showed Dr. Lleras yesterday our draft economic resolutions, and discussed with him the tactics which should be followed in presenting them to the Conference. In particular, I mentioned Mr. Thorp's suggestion that we defer putting them in until he could have an opportunity at the first meeting of the Economic Committee Tuesday afternoon of explaining that these resolutions had been prepared after months of consultation with other governments, the purpose of Mr. Thorp's suggestion being to prevent our draft from being looked upon in the eyes of Latin Americans as a purely United States draft, thus requiring them for purposes of home consumption to try to get numerous changes inserted.

Dr. Lleras agrees that there is something in Mr. Thorp's point, and also believes that it is essential that from the beginning of the Conference there be a more or less "official" U.S. draft which will eliminate the need of numerous other drafts, some of which might be so expansive in the beginning as to create the illusion that much more was going to be forthcoming.

Consequently, Dr. Lleras suggests a compromise approach, namely, that our three economic resolutions be submitted at the beginning of the Conference, with an explanatory statement which would constitute a summary or preview of Mr. Thorp's remarks to the effect that our resolutions have been prepared after consultation with the other countries. I attach an outline of such a statement.[2]

As to the form of the resolutions, I believe they are generally all right,[3] but in the Emergency Economic Resolution I have one comment, namely as to the role of IA–ECOSOC. This body is referred to only once in the resolution, in the last paragraph on transportation. It seems to me that it would be preferable to add at the end of the resolution a separate paragraph, giving the IA–ECOSOC a general direc-

[1] Addressed also to Ambassador Merwin L. Bohan, United States Representative to IA–ECOSOC, and Mr. Charles F. Knox, Jr., Consul General at Curaçao, on temporary detail to the Department of State, January 23–April 27, 1951.

[2] Not printed.

[3] In a memorandum to Mr. Miller, dated March 12, 1951, commenting on the draft economic resolutions, Mr. White had stated in part the following: "While the Technical Cooperation and Economic Development Resolutions have been improved, I still regard them as on the cautious side and as inadequate from the standpoint of providing inspiration to the peoples of the Hemisphere." He had recommended, inter alia, that the "Technical Cooperation and Economic Development subjects be incorporated in one strong and comprehensive Resolution based on the 'Point IV concept' in the broad sense of the term." (Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26) tive with regard to its continuing functions in all of the different fields covered by the resolution. Thus, the IA–ECOSOC would be given through the Conference a function comparable to the function conferred by the meeting upon the IADB in its field of competence.

OAS Files, Lot 60 D 665

Position Paper Prepared in the Department of State [1]

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] March 22, 1951.

IAM D–6a

AFFIRMATION OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS SUPPORT FOR THE UN

Problem:

What position should the U.S. take regarding affirmation by the Meeting of Foreign Ministers of American Republics' support for United Nations action against aggression or the threat of aggression.

Recommendation:

The U.S. should initiate or support approval by the Meeting of Foreign Ministers of a resolution in which the responsibilities of the American Republics as members of the UN to support UN action against aggression in other parts of the world would be emphatically affirmed. A proposed draft resolution is attached.[2]

Discussion:

The first item of the IAM agenda of the Foreign Ministers Meeting is entitled "Political and Military Cooperation for the Defense of the Americas, and To Prevent and Repel Aggression, in Accordance with Inter-American Agreements and with the Charter of the UN and the Resolutions of that Organization." The wording of this agenda item and the discussions in the Council of the OAS while it was being considered have made it unmistakably clear that action by the Consultative Meeting in support of UN efforts to prevent and repel aggression is anticipated by the Governments of the American Republics. The question to be decided, therefore, is not whether there will be such action, but the nature of the action which will be most desirable. This action will have greatest political and practical value if it is directed at strengthening the support of the other American Republics for the UN efforts most directly related to the emergency which is the basic reason for the meetings being held.

---

[1] The cover sheet to the source text reads in part as follows: "The attached position paper and accompanying proposed resolution . . . have been finalized in the Departments of State and Defense."

[2] Not printed.

The UN action in Korea and the Uniting for Peace program adopted by the General Assembly [3] are based upon the principle that defense against aggression is indivisible and that each member state of the UN has a responsibility to contribute within its capabilities to the maintenance of peace and security throughout the world. The U.S. has accepted this principle and played the leading role in the adoption by the UN of these two programs. The success of both programs depends on maximum cooperation by the members of the UN. The U.S. is particularly anxious to gain further positive support and participation of the 20 American Republics. The Meeting of Consultation affords an excellent opportunity for reawakening and stimulating this support and participation.

While the American Republics are all members of the UN and have almost unanimously approved the above UN actions (Argentina abstained on the Uniting for Peace Resolution) there is an inevitable inclination among the Governments and peoples of some of them, reinforced by traditional hemispheric or nationalistic isolationism, to concentrate exclusively on local or hemispheric problems. There is a tendency also to consider that hemispheric defense and universal collective security are mutually exclusive, and that self-defense and hemispheric defense action through the OAS machinery excludes participation in UN programs for maintaining peace and security in other parts of the world. So far as the UN is concerned, the Latin American countries all too often appear to assume that their UN responsibilities are fulfilled by merely voting their support for UN programs for collective security. These attitudes are not only unfortunate from the UN point of view, but they foster an irresponsible approach which is not helpful in dealing even with localized hemispheric defense problems. They also tend to fail to take into account the danger to hemispheric security which results from aggression in other parts of the world.

For these reasons, it is imperative that the backing of the American Republics for the UN, and particularly for the Korea and Uniting for Peace programs, be reaffirmed in an effective manner by the Meeting of Consultation. The military resolution is directed at tasks and policies, which appear from the military point of view to fall directly within the province of the regional organization, should be complemented by action in which the responsibilities of the members of the OAS as members of the UN are affirmed. It is particularly important to have this affirmation because of the position that, from the U.S. military point of view, the OAS machinery should not be used in present circumstances to provide military forces for action outside the hemisphere.

[3] For documentation on the Uniting for Peace program, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 303 ff.; related documentation concerning United States policy with respect to proposals for strengthening the United Nations system in order to meet aggression may be found in vol. I, pp. 616 ff.

It is of the utmost political importance that the Uniting for Peace Program was adopted by the UN General Assembly as a result of U.S. efforts. These efforts were based upon the importance of building upon the effort improvised for UN action in Korea and in order to maximize the military contributions of UN member states other than the U.S. Accordingly, U.S. silence or a negative U.S. attitude on this highly important program of its foreign policy, taken together with the rather restricted military resolution, would have unfortunate public and political repercussions, both in the U.S. and among the other American Republics, which the U.S. must avoid. It can be expected that this Uniting for Peace program will in any event be raised by some of the Latin American Delegations. In fact, the agenda item specifically encompasses the Uniting for Peace program and the necessity that it do so was strongly argued by a number of the representatives of other Governments in COAS discussions of the agenda.

Editorial Note

On March 26, President Truman delivered an address to the opening session of the Meeting of Consultation concerning the purpose of the meeting; for text, see Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States: Harry S. Truman, 1951 (Washington, Government Printing Office, 1965), pages 195–198, or Department of State Bulletin, April 9, 1951, pages 566–568.

On March 27, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs Willard L. Thorp addressed Committee III (Economic Cooperation) of the Meeting of Consultation on the common economic problems confronting the American Republics; for text, see ibid., April 30, 1951, pages 693–698.

On March 31, President Vincent Auriol of France, who was in the United States on a state visit from March 28 to April 2, delivered an address to a special session of the Meeting of Consultation; for text, see Proceedings, pages 153–160. In a memorandum to President Truman, dated January 24, 1951, recommending that the appearance of President Auriol at a session of the meeting be encouraged, Secretary Acheson had stated in part the following: "A brief address by President Auriol to the Foreign Ministers would serve to remind the Latin Americans of their ties with Western Europe and would tend to counter suggestions that we move toward a policy of Hemisphere isolation." (363/1–2651) For documentation relating to President Auriol's visit to the United States, see volume IV.

On April 7, Secretary Acheson made informal remarks to the closing session of the Meeting of Consultation concerning the meeting's achievements; for text, see Department of State Bulletin, April 16, 1951, pages 616–617.

On April 18, Ambassador John C. Dreier delivered an address, in which he assessed the results of the Meeting of Consultation, to the Pan American Society of Massachusetts and Northern New England, at Boston, Massachusetts; for text, see ibid., April 30, 1951, pages 688–693.

363/3–1351

Memorandum by Mr. W. Tapley Bennett, Jr., of the Office of Middle American Affairs to the Secretary of State [1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] March 31, 1951.

Subject: Status Report on Committee Work at Meeting of Foreign Ministers of the American Republics.

There are attached for your information, as background for the Plenary Session scheduled for Monday afternoon, brief reports on the status of work in the three technical committees of the Foreign Ministers Meeting.

A script for the Monday afternoon meeting, with recommendations,[2] will be submitted Monday morning on the basis of week-end developments.

W. T[APLEY] B[ENNETT, JR.]

[Annex 1]

MARCH 31, 1951.

STATUS OF WORK OF COMMITTEE I—POLITICAL AND MILITARY COOPERATION

Chairman: Restrepo Jaramillo (Colombia); Rapporteur: Sevilla Sacasa [3] (Nicaragua)

The principal results in this Committee to date are:

(1) General approval by the full Committee of a "Declaration of Washington," based upon drafts presented by Brazil and Chile.[4] Along with declarations of hemispheric solidarity, this draft contains an emphatic affirmation of support for action of the United Nations. Although they did not refer to the UN aspect directly, the Foreign

[1] Addressed also to Mr. Miller.

[2] Not printed.

[3] Guillermo Sevilla Sacasa, Nicaraguan Ambassador to the United States.

[4] For text of the Brazilian and Chilean draft resolutions, see Proceedings, pp. 43–45.

Ministers of Argentina, Guatemala and Mexico,[5] all of whom have given indication of resisting any IAM action in relation to the UN, expressed their approval of the Declaration.

(2) Preparation by a working group of a draft resolution on hemispheric military cooperation combining most aspects of that sponsored by the United States and other countries with certain detailed amendments made by Peru and Bolivia. This draft, which appears to raise no serious problems for us, must be considered by Subcommittee A of Committee I, before going to the full Committee.

(3) A tentative decision by a working group of sponsors to separate the resolution on UN support jointly sponsored by the United States and four other countries from a Bolivian proposal[6] directed specifically at support for the Korean operation.

(4) Approval by Subcommittee C (on which the United States was not represented) of (a) the joint U.S.–Mexican proposal on peaceful settlement in the hemisphere; (b) a Venezuelan proposal[7] to reaffirm certain principles contained in the 1940 Convention on Provisional Administration of European Colonies and Possessions in the Americas,[8] to which Guatemala has added a preamble restating a Bogota Conference action expressing the aspiration that colonialism in the hemisphere should be brought to an end (the United States abstained at Bogota); (c) a Venezuelan proposal[9] that the American Republics make certain that their laws on military service do not adversely affect students of other American countries. This Subcommittee also approved referring a Haitian proposal[10] regarding individual responsibility for war to the Inter-American Council of Jurists.

The principal potential problem stems from the point of view expressed or implied early in the meetings of Committee I by Argentina, Mexico and Guatemala—that the OAS should not in this Meeting concern itself with extra hemispheric security actions or resolutions of the UN. In spite of approval of the Declaration of Washington, containing an affirmation of the importance of UN action to the hemisphere, it is almost certain that those countries will attempt to water down the recommendations of the Resolution on UN support[11] which specify steps which the American Republics should take as members of [5] Hipólito Jesús Paz, Argentine Minister of Foreign Affairs and Worship; Manuel Galich, Guatemalan Minister of Foreign Affairs; and Manuel Tello, Mexican Acting Minister of Foreign Affairs.

---

[6] For text, see Proceedings, pp. 41–42.

[7] For text, see ibid., pp. 55–56.

[8] For text of the Convention, signed at Havana, July 30, 1940, and entered into force, January 8, 1942, see Department of State Treaty Series (TS) No. 977, or 56 Stat. (pt. 2) 1273.

[9] For text, see Proceedings, pp. 54–55.

[10] For text, see ibid., pp. 45–50.

[11] In a memorandum to the Secretary of State, dated April 3, 1951, discussing the proposed Mexican amendments to the draft resolution on support for the United Nations, Ambassador Beaulac stated in part that "the Mexican amendments do not adhere with any consistency to a rigid separation of United Nations and Organization of American States matters—except with regard to that part of our draft resolution which deals with the section of the 'Uniting for Peace Resolution' recommending that governments maintain elements of their armed forces in the UN to place themselves in a better position to contribute to its collective security efforts.

The two Venezuelan proposals mentioned above (3*b* and 3*c*) are also likely to create difficulties for us when they are considered by the full Committee. An effort is being made, however, to work out with the Venezuelans a draft of 3c which we could accept.

[Annex 2]

MARCH 31, 1951.

STATUS OF WORK OF COMMITTEE II—INTERNAL SECURITY

Chairman: Dr. Ernesto Dihigo [12] (Cuba); Rapporteur: Dr. Alfonso Moscoso (Ecuador)

The Cuban draft resolution on the "Strengthening and Effective Exercise of Democracy" [13] was unanimously approved by the full committee on March 30. The United States supported this resolution. The resolution suggests that the X International Conference of American States at Caracas in 1953 [14] consider measures to give full effect to Bogota Resolutions XXX (on the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man) and XXXII (on "The Preservation and Defense of Democracy in America"). As a technical contribution to this end it entrusts the Inter-American Juridical Committee with making preliminary studies and the Inter-American Council of Jurists with drawing up draft conventions or other instruments, to be presented for discussion at the Caracas conference.

The Mexican draft resolution on the "Improvement of Social, Economic and Cultural Level of the People of America" [15] was likewise unanimously approved by the Committee on March 30. The United States Representative [16] made a statement in favor of the text as adopted, pointing out for the record that since the resolution contains a condition so that they can be made available for service as United Nations units." (363/4-351)

---

The Department of State's telegram 599, to diplomatic offices in the American Republics, dated April 7, 1951, reads in part as follows: "early indications Mex, Arg, and Guat would attempt to weaken original proposal [concerning support for the United Nations] cosponsored by US arguing possible conflict OAS–UN jurisdiction. Amendments proposed by Mex wld have undoubtedly had this effect had they been accepted, but Colom, Urug, and Cuba took lead with US in counteracting this trend; Res emerged at least as strong as orig form; and was unanimously approved after Arg first abstained and then approved with reservation." (363/4-751)

[12] Ernesto Dihigo y López Trigo, Cuban Minister of State.

[13] For text, see Proceedings, pp. 58–59.

[14] Reference is to the Tenth Inter-American Conference held at Caracas, Venezuela, March 1–28, 1954.

[15] For text, see Proceedings, pp. 59–60.

[16] Presumably William Sanders, Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs.

reference to the Inter-American Charter of Social Guarantees,[17] the United States reservation to that Charter should be noted. The resolution recommends that the Inter-American Economic and Social Council and the Inter-American Cultural Council [18] prepare plans and programs for promoting effective cooperation among the American Republics to raise the economic, social and cultural levels of their peoples.

A subcommittee of nine representatives, including the United States, is now considering the draft resolution on internal security sponsored jointly by the United States, Uruguay, Ecuador and Bolivia.

[Annex 3]

MARCH 31, 1951.

STATUS OF WORK OF COMMITTEE III—ECONOMIC [19]

Chairman: Neves Da Fontoura (Brazil)
Rapporteur: Dominguez Campora [20] (Uruguay)

Economic Commission Committee III got off to a bad start, wasting two full days in procedural discussions. However, after two subcommittees had been appointed and these in turn had appointed smaller working groups, progress has been fairly satisfactory since Friday afternoon. The Subcommittees will begin substantive discussions on Monday. The following subjects are now ready for consideration by these committees: Allocations and Priorities, Transportation, Prices and Consultation, International Commodity Problems, Strategic Production and Economic Development.

There are three main problems facing the U.S. The first, and so important that it could conceivably affect the successful outcome of the meeting, is the difference in philosophy between Brazil and the United States. The Brazilians take the position that there are two emergencies, the internal communistic threat faced by Latin America and the external communistic threat faced by the United States. While agreeable to the idea that the United States should build up its military defenses, the Brazilians take the position that the defense role of Latin America is to make itself economically strong through programs of economic development. While our other Latin American friends are far too realistic to give Brazil outspoken support, the philosophy of the majority appears to be that perhaps Brazil will win

[17] For text of the Charter, incorporated as article XXIX in the Final Act of the Bogotá Conference, and the reservation made by the United States delegation, see USDel Report, pp. 250–259.
[18] Organs of the Organization of American States.
[19] Drafted by Merwin L. Bohan, United States Representative on the Inter-American Economic and Social Council (IA–ECOSOC).
[20] Alberto Domínguez Cámpora, Uruguayan Minister of Foreign Affairs.

concessions for them. Hence, they have so far adopted in public a somewhat benevolent neutrality towards both sides, although there is much agreement with the United States in private.

The other two problems concern prices and post-emergency problems. The Latin American countries are almost unanimous in desiring resolutions reiterating the principles of parity and the fixing of ceiling prices in relation to the costs of production, and the provision for prior consultation in connection with the setting of prices and allocations. In the field of postwar economic problems our Latin friends would like to have assurances of the post-emergency purchasing power of accumulated exchange holdings, the continued control of prices of manufactured goods, and assurances affecting the liquidation of stock piles and the marketing of surplus production. The United States Delegation will attempt to funnel these problems through a general study resolution on the grounds that some of them appear unanswerable and others require investigation and study before any general indication of measures can be considered.

OAS Files, Lot 60 D 665

Unsigned Summary of the Seventh Meeting of the United States Delegation Members on Committee III, Department of State, 9:15 a. m., April 4, 1951

CONFIDENTIAL

USDel Com III M–7.

1. Mr. Thorp requested progress reports on the activities of Committee III, its subcommittees and working groups.

2. Ambassador Bohan reported that in the Economic Development resolution, approved by Subcommittee A, all changes requested by the United States were incorporated in the revised resolution.

3. Ambassador Bohan brought up the question of U.S. position on a proposed resolution of Cuba on "Social and Economic Improvement of the Workers in the American Republics."[1] This resolution calls on the American Republics to support the principles of various multi-lateral agreements, including the Inter-American Charter of Social Guarantees, incorporated in the Bogota Charter. Ambassador Bohan stated that the Cubans felt very strongly about the necessity of incorporating such a resolution in any final act of this Meeting. They feel that the resolution passed by the Plenary Session on "Raising the Economic and Social Standards of the American Republics" was not adequate. Mr. Burrows presented the previous attitude of the United States in regard to this resolution and pointed out that strong opposition to it was voiced by the Department of Labor. Mr. Arnow [2] of the Department of Labor said that not only does his Department feel that approval of this resolution would be inconsistent with our position before the ILO, but certain concepts contained in the Inter-American Charter of Social Guarantees cannot be supported and must be opposed by the U.S. Government. He said that the resolution of Committee II on the same subject, already passed by the Ministers, was strongly objected to by the Department of Labor. Mr. Miller pointed out that our representative on Committee II called attention to this point and entered a reservation for the United States. However, this problem might be solved administratively by achieving uniform treatment of both resolutions. It was generally agreed that when the Cuban proposal came up, the United States would present its reservation to Committee III.

[1] For text, see Proceedings, p. 105.

4. Mr. Leddy [3] reported that the Price Control resolution might come up this morning and stated that the draft prepared last night contains an outstanding disagreement between the United States and some of the Latin American Delegations, especially in the matters of prior consultation and its relation to cost indices of essential civilian products. It was generally agreed that if such a matter came up in Committee III, the United States would try to advance a broad text containing general language on this subject. Mr. Leddy reported that the Subcommittee agreed on a consultation provision which says that each country would provide opportunities for consultation and whenever practical, to consult before action is taken. Consultation will be held as soon as possible after such action and on request of other nations.

5. Mr. Wythe [4] reported on the "Priorities" Resolution and stated that the Subcommittee had adopted a clause on export quotas which grants responsibility of the export country to determine the liscensing distribution of products exported. On one clause on which the United States position was over-ridden, Mr. Wythe had a revised draft which he was planning to submit at today's session.

6. Mr. Wythe brought up the question of the Brazilian insistence on a Bilateral Supply Agreement which the United States opposes. At this point, Mr. Miller asked the opinion of Mr. Thorp on the advisability of arranging a meeting between Secretary Acheson and the Brazilian Foreign Minister to secure an understanding of Brazil's position and the reasons for her opposition so far in the Conference. There was general agreement that such a meeting would be most useful and Mr. Miller agreed to arrange it. Mr. Miller recorded the five major

[2] Philip Arnow, Associate Director, Office of International Labor.
[3] John M. Leddy, Deputy Director, Office of International Trade Policy.
[4] George Wythe, Director, American Republics Division, Office of International Trade, Department of Commerce.

U.S. objections to entering into a Bilateral Supply Agreement which would be included in the briefing material for the Secretary during his talk with the Brazilian Foreign Minister. A prolonged discussion ensued as to possible alternative approaches that could be made to secure the agreement of the Brazilians on this matter. Mr. Knox commented that the Brazilians seem to be determined to secure approval of their position on this matter before any arrangements for the increased production of strategic materials are entered into.[5]

7. Mr. Brown [6] reported that a draft text on Stockpiling had been approved by the Subcommittee, calling for producing nations to be given at least four months' notice before stockpiling operations cease.

8. Mr. Leddy mentioned that the Economic Security Resolution proposed by the United States had been passed over in the Subcommittee and on his initiative, a new and separate resolution on the matter will be introduced before Committee III today. Mention was made of the fact that certain Delegations believe that the Economic Security Problem is so tied up with political overtones that it would more appropriately belong in Committee I. Mr. Miller agreed to have introduced into Committee I the U.S. resolution on this matter.

9. Mr. Nolan reported on the progress made in the transportation resolution and mentioned the efforts of Brazil to secure aid for the Santos-Arica Railroad. Mr. Miller said that the U.S. should offer a reservation to this resolution, indicating that it does not belong in this Conference of Foreign Ministers.

10. Mr. Brown indicated that since the Economic Development resolution was ready for approval by Committee III, it might not be appropriate to continue U.S. approval on this resolution until the completion of all the other economic resolutions. It was agreed that the U.S. would support the Economic Development resolutions in Committee III, but that its approval was subject to review when the text on allocations and priorities was finalized.

11. Brief discussions followed on matters in regard to the resolution on Increased Production and Strategic Materials and the resolution on IMC Activities.

12. The members of the U.S. Delegation on Committee III will meet again in Room 5106, New State, Thursday, April 5, at 9:00 a.m.

---

[5] An unsigned summary, dated April 5, 1951, of the eighth meeting of the U.S. delegation members on Committee III, which took place at the Department of State on the same date, reads in part as follows: "Mr. Thorp reported that the Brazilian attempt to obtain Bilateral Supply Agreements in Committee III resolutions were unsuccessful." (OAS Files, Lot 60 D 665)

For further information on bilateral discussions between representatives of the United States and Brazil concerning a supply agreement, see the editorial note, p. 1195.

[6] Winthrop G. Brown, Director, Office of International Trade Policy.

Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26

The Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Chargé in Argentina (Mallory)[1]

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] April 6, 1951.

DEAR LES: Thank you for your letter of March 26 enclosing the CAS memorandum[2] on the Argentine delegation to the Conference.

In general the memorandum has proved to be sound, though some of the details have turned out differently. The Argentines have been cooperative for the most part up to the present and have not engaged in "theatrical tactics." At the same time they have spoken up on a number of subjects and are definitely playing a part in the Meeting. As far as I know they have not made serious efforts since their arrival to form a bloc vis-à-vis the United States.

Concerning U.S.–Argentine relations,[3] our friends seem to be playing a game not unlike our own—one of inaction. Just as we have not brought up problems with them, they have not raised any with us. Whether they plan to discuss any specific problems later, we do not know.

Since the Meeting is not over, our fingers are still crossed, but it seems unlikely that at this late hour Paz and Co. will take any action to realize the more sinister of the intelligence reports which we received—such as Argentine sabotage of the IAM, etc.[4]

With kindest regards,

Very sincerely, EDWARD G. MILLER, JR.

---

[1] Drafted by Mr. Henry Dearborn of the Office of South American Affairs.
[2] Neither printed.
[3] For documentation on this subject, see pp. 1079 ff.
[4] Beneath Mr. Miller's signature appears the following unidentified handwritten notation: "Meeting now over. All OK"

Under Secretary's Meetings, Lot 53 D 250 [1]

Notes of the Under Secretary's Meeting, Department of State, 10:15 a. m., April 6, 1951 [2]

SECRET

UM N–328

[Here follow a list of those present (20) and discussion of matters unrelated to the Meeting of Consultation.]

Inter-American Foreign Ministers Meeting

9. Mr. Miller reported that the Inter-American Foreign Ministers Meeting has been concluded and has surpassed all expectations. There are several reasons why this meeting was a success. We were very well prepared and everyone in the Department, as well as the entire Government, cooperated extremely well. Mr. Thorp did an outstanding job on the economic problems and got everything that we were after and still maintained good-will. The other agencies worked very closely with us and our relations with Defense were extremely good. We hope to get greater support for our operations in Korea. Our general attitude of restraint and modesty was a good one and was appreciated. The Secretary's active participation in committee and subcommittee meetings was a great personal contribution.

10. Mr. Thorp reported that the economic phase of this conference was partly a defensive operation. We got what we wanted out of the conference, which was an agreement that production should be expanded, especially the production of raw materials. Also we got agreement on cooperation for economic defense. We gave assurances of a fair deal on priorities and prices. With respect to prices, we agreed that there would always be an opportunity for consultation on prices and if possible this consultation would take place in advance. We also agreed to study the possibilities of stabilizing foreign exchanges. When the question of parity on industrial products was raised, we agreed that in giving consideration to prices we would consider raw material and manufactured prices.

11. Mr. Thorp pointed out that we have only one reservation in signing the final act. Two resolutions regarding improvements of conditions of American workers were passed. The resolutions, in effect, called for carrying out the Bogotá agreement regarding social guarantees. We reserved at the time of the Bogotá agreement and we will hold to the same reservations now. We must do this since some of the guarantees are in conflict with the ILO agreement.

[1] Master file of records of meetings, documents, summaries, and agenda of the Under Secretary's Meetings for the years 1949–1952, as maintained by the Executive Secretariat.

[2] The Under Secretary's Meeting convened weekly; it was customarily attended by the Deputy Under Secretaries of State, Assistant Secretaries of State, and certain office directors. Under Secretary of State James E. Webb presided at these meetings.

UNITED STATES SUPPORT OF INTER-AMERICAN COLLECTIVE ACTION FOR PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES, WITH PARTICULAR REFERENCE TO THE CARIBBEAN AREA [1]

720.00/4–2551

Memorandum by the United States Representative on the Council of the Organization of American States (Dreier) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] April 25, 1951.

Subject: Termination of Special Committee for the Caribbean.

It seems to me that early steps should be taken to bring to an end the Special Committee for the Caribbean (so-called Watchdog Committee), which was established by the COAS/OC over a year ago.[2] You probably recall that an effort to do this was made last October, but that this failed largely because of the attitude of the Dominican Republic. Just before the Foreign Ministers Meeting,[3] it was agreed in the Committee that the favorable opportunity offered by the presence of the principally interested Foreign Ministers in Washington should be used to accomplish this purpose. Unfortunately, the Dominican attitude toward Cuba, especially Foreign Minister Dihigo,[4] spoiled this opportunity.

Actually, the only elements of controversy which still devolve from the COAS/OC Resolutions of April 8, 1950 [5] are a remnant of the controversy between Cuba and the Dominican Republic over Cayo Confites [6] (which the latter seems unwilling to relinquish), and the Dominican resentment over propaganda attacks by Dominican revolutionaries located in Cuba.

---

[1] Continued from Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 641 ff.

[2] The Special Committee for the Caribbean had been appointed on April 8, 1950, in connection with the efforts of the Council of the Organization of American States (COAS) to resolve problems resulting from charges and counter-charges of subversive activities by several Caribbean governments. For documentation relating to the committee's establishment and its activities during 1950, see ibid.

[3] Reference is to the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of American States, held at Washington, March 26–April 7, 1951. For documentation on the conference, see pp. 925 ff.

[4] Ernesto Dihigo y López Trigo.

[5] For the text of these resolutions, see Annals of the Organization of American States (Washington, 1950), vol. 2, pp. 147–151.

[6] Reference is to an abortive invasion against the Dominican Republic in 1947 allegedly instigated by Cuban authorities; for documentation on the incident, see Foreign Relations, 1947, vol. VIII, pp. 629 ff.

This problem has been discussed with MID and Tom Mann [7] who agree that the Committee should be terminated at an early date. To accomplish this, I believe we should suggest that the Committee complete its final report, the main point of which would be that there appear to be no remaining problems which cannot be resolved through normal diplomatic channels. When agreed upon in the Committee, this report should be transmitted to the directly interested governments (Cuba, Haiti, Guatemala and the Dominican Republic), with an express statement that it will be issued within a specified period of time—say one week—and without any indication that it is being submitted for approval or disapproval.

If you approve,[8] I shall get in touch with Chairman Mora [9] immediately and recommend that a meeting of the Committee be arranged, if possible before the departure of Ambassador Zuleta Angel,[10] in order to see whether the Committee will agree upon this procedure and the text of a final report.

[7] Thomas C. Mann, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.

[8] At this point, the source text bears a marginal notation which reads: "OK EGM[iller]".

[9] José A. Mora, Uruguayan Ambassador to the United States and Representative on the COAS.

[10] Eduardo Zuleta Angel, Colombian Ambassador to the United States and Representative on the COAS.

363/5–1551

The United States Representative on the Council of the Organization of American States (Dreier) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] May 15, 1951.

COAS 21

Subject: Termination of the Special Committee for the Caribbean

On Monday, May 14, the final report [1] of the Special Committee for the Caribbean, established on April 8, 1950 by the Council of the Organization of American States acting provisionally as Organ of Consultation, was delivered to the Secretary General [2] of the Organization of American States and released to the press.

The report was drafted and approved at the final meeting of the Special Committee on May 7. On May 10 it was sent to the Representatives on the Council of the four directly interested governments (Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala and Haiti) for their confidential advance information. The receipt on May 14 of a note dated [1] A copy of the report, dated May 14, 1951, is attached to the source text, but it is not printed; for text, see Annals of the Organization of American States (Washington, 1951), vol. 3, pp. 338–339.

[2] Alberto Lleras Camargo.

May 12[3] from the Ambassador of the Dominican Republic,[4] addressed to Ambassador José Antonio Mora of Uruguay as Chairman of the Special Committee, provoked an all-day informal consultation among the members of the Special Committee. It was decided, however, not to change the final report under which the Committee terminated its labors. An explanation of the position adopted by the members of the Special Committee was incorporated in a note which Ambassador Mora sent on May 14[5] to Dr. Alberto Lleras, Secretary General of the Organization of American States, transmitting the Dominican note for inclusion in the documentation of the Committee.

Copies of the final report of the Committee and of Ambassador Mora's confidential note to Dr. Lleras are attached. Although the report of the Committee was released on May 14 for publication in newspapers of May 15, the Members of the Committee decided that the note to Dr. Lleras transmitting the Dominican note of May 12 would not be made public unless the Dominican Ambassador released his note.

The Committee's final report was drafted in such a way as to make it possible for the Committee to cease its activities. It will be recalled that an effort was made in November 1950 to issue a report which would have wound up the Committee's affairs by declaring the controversies, which were the subject of the resolutions of April 8, 1950, to have been ended. At that time the Government of the Dominican Republic, overruling the informal opinion expressed by the Foreign Minister of the Dominican Republic who was in New York at the time, declared that it would not accept a statement of that sort, since it did not consider its dispute with Cuba settled in all respects.

In order to avoid any repetition of this difficulty, and believing genuinely that the need for the Committee no longer existed, the members of the Committee prepared their final report with great care. They avoided any broad statements concerning the existence of an attitude of harmony amongst all the Caribbean states, but did indicate that any remaining difficulties which might exist were fully capable of being handled through normal diplomatic channels. No indication is given in the report that the states directly concerned have approved it, nor was their approval sought. The Committee refers to the resolution by which it was established more than a year ago with "provisional character" and states that it considers its work ended.

It was the hope of the Committee that the report would be accepted without any adverse comment on the part of any of the member states of the Organization of American States. The members of the Committee shared the belief that liquidation of the Committee itself might, in a small measure, contribute to the realization on the part of those governments concerned in the resolutions of April 8, 1950, that any remaining difficulties should be settled through direct negotiation.

[3] Not printed.
[4] Luis Francisco Thomen.
[5] A copy of the note in Spanish is attached to the source text, but it is not printed.

Hopes for tacit acceptance of the Committee's final report were dashed when, on Saturday, May 12, the Dominican Ambassador, Dr. Luis Thomen, telephoned Ambassador Mora to state that he had received the report of the Committee, but wished to submit to the Committee a note containing further information which would indicate that the situation in the Caribbean was not as favorable as the Committee believed. He argued that it was important that the Committee not be terminated. His note was delivered on Monday morning, May 12, to Ambassador Mora with copies to all other members of the Committee.

The note, of which a copy is attached, makes charges concerning new conspiratorial meetings in Cuba alleged to be sponsored by President Prío Socarrás [6] and other high Cuban officials. The note also refers to various arms smuggling transactions in Mexico, Guatemala and the United States by persons believed to be enemies of the Dominican Government.

Ambassador Mora requested the members of the Committee to meet with him informally on May 14 to consider the nature of the reply that he should make to the Dominican note. All members of the Committee except the undersigned strongly held the view that the Committee was no longer in existence and it was, therefore, understood that the persons present were there in their capacity as former members of the Committee only. The Colombian representative, Dr. Jorge Mejía Palacio, argued in favor of a simple reply to Ambassador Thomen to the effect that the Committee, having already terminated its existence, could do nothing about his note but transmit it to the Governments for their consideration. This was opposed by others, including the U.S. Representative, on the grounds that it would inflate the significance of the new charges, which were generally felt to represent primarily a last minute attempt of the Dominican Ambassador to prevent liquidation of the Committee. It was finally decided to transmit the note to the Secretary General, under cover of a letter signed by Ambassador Mora, which would carefully explain why the Committee had felt that it should not alter the decision taken on May 7 to terminate its work. As will be seen from the attached copy of the note, the Committee attaches importance to the fact that it was given a clearly provisional character which did not justify its indefinite continuation; that normal diplomatic channels were open to the Dominican Republic for the purpose of clarifying problems mentioned in its note; and that the termination of the Committee in no way limited the right or opportunity of the Dominican Government to take up with appropriate inter-American organs any situation which it felt threatened the peace.

[6] Carlos Prío Socarrás, President of the Republic of Cuba.

With the transmittal of its final report to the Secretary General and its release to the press, the Special Committee for the Caribbean may now be considered to be definitely terminated.

JOHN C. DREIER

739.00/8–2351

Memorandum by Mr. Charles C. Hauch of the Office of Middle American Affairs to the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Mann)[1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] August 23, 1951.

Subject: Strange story of the vessel Quetzal, formerly the Fantasma

This is the kind of story which could happen only in the Caribbean—or possibly in the Balkans of the old days.

About a month ago the Dominican Foreign Office gave our Embassy in Ciudad Trujillo a new bill of charges of revolutionary plotting against Trujillo.[2] One of the charges was that the vessel Fantasma which had been seized by the Cuban Government from the Cayo Confites revolutionists when that expedition was broken up in 1947, had recently been turned over by the Cuban Government to Caribbean plotters against Trujillo and would be used in a new attempt against the Dominican Government. Information received about the same time from our Embassy in Habana indicated that the vessel had been sold at auction to a group apparently headed by the Cuban Deputy and long-time active foe of Trujillo, Enrique Cotubanama Henriquez, President Prío's brother-in-law. A message from our Embassy in Guatemala at the same time was to the effect that the vessel had been sold to the Guatemalan Government. According to both Embassies, the vessel was to be reconditioned in Cuba and to sail to Guatemala, assertedly to participate in legitimate commercial activities; the crew, however, continued to be composed of Cuban, Dominican, and Guatemalan veterans of the Cayo Confites affairs. The vessel's name was changed to the Quetzal and it was apparently transferred to Guatemalan registry.

On or about July 25 the Quetzal sailed from Cuba bound for Livingston, Guatemala, but failed to arrive. About the middle of August, the Dominican Foreign Minister[3] informed Ambassador Ackerman[4] that President Trujillo planned to release publicly a [1] Addressed also to Mr. W. Tapley Bennett, Jr., Officer in Charge of Caribbean Affairs, Office of Middle American Affairs.

[2] Rafael Leonidas Trujillo Molina, President of the Dominican Republic.

[3] Virgilio Díaz Ordóñez.

[4] Ralph H. Ackerman, United States Ambassador to the Dominican Republi strong statement regarding the activities of the vessel, with supporting documents in order to make known to all anti-Trujillo plotters that the Dominican Government was aware of their schemes in the hope that this would deter them. In the mean time the United States Coast Guard office in Miami had been requested by sources not divulged to Washington Coast Guard headquarters or to the Department whether it could supply any information on the fate of the vessel.

It was not until the receipt of Ciudad Trujillo's despatch 105 of August 17 [5] that we received information indicating that the Dominican Government was fully aware of the fate of the crew and probably of the vessel, and probably had a hand in preventing its arrival in Guatemala. According to a public announcement put out by the Dominican Government on August 16, the Captain of the vessel, one Alfredo Brito Baez, is now in the Dominican Republic, "having reentered the Dominican Navy after having been abroad on special service". Ambassador Ackerman has been confidentially informed that all the crew are also in the Dominican Republic. He had not obtained any definite information as to the fate of the vessel, but says it is believed that it has either been turned over to the Dominican Government or scuttled. The Naval Attaché is investigating this point.

One possible explanation of the change in course of the vessel after leaving Cuba is that the Captain and/or the crew were bought off by Dominican agents to sail the vessel to the Dominican Republic, or to scuttle it somewhere on the high seas and be picked up by a Dominican vessel. Another possible explanation is that a unit or units of the Dominican navy intercepted the vessel after it left Cuba and took it and its crew to the Dominican Republic, or sank the vessel on the high seas after removing the crew.

The vessel's documents, which the Dominican Government asserts have come into its possession and which were published in the Dominican newspaper El Caribe on August 16, are cited by the Dominican Government as proving that the vessel was engaged in revolutionary activities against it. Actually there is nothing in the published documents definitely establishing this. It appears from the documents that the actual owner of the vessel may have been the Dominican revolutionist Miguel Angel Ramirez, one of the leaders of the Cayo Confites and Luperón [6] affairs. The only document allegedly found on the vessel which might be interpreted as evidence of a recurrence of active revolutionary plotting was an undated receipt signed by Ramirez for a quantity of arms and ammunition received from Costa Rican authorities at San José. However, this could very well be a receipt for the arms received by Ramirez from the Costa Rican Government (i.e.

[5] Not printed.

[6] For documentation on this incident, which involved an attempted invasion of the Dominican Republic in June 1949, see Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. II, pp. 451 ff.

Figueres)[7] prior to the Luperón invasion attempt in 1949 (during the OAS Caribbean Investigating Committee's activities last year it was ascertained that some of the weapons seized by the Dominican authorities at Luperón had originally been licensed for export from the United States for the use of the Costa Rican Government.

Another interesting point in this whole affair is that the Captain of the Quetzal, Alfredo Brito Baez, has been out of the country for some time, and, if I remember correctly, was the Captain of another vessel of which the Dominicans were suspicious early last year, after it had been sold by a Cuban firm and taken to Guatemala. Captain Brito told us at that time that he was a Cuban, but now the Dominican Government asserts he is a Dominican who, as stated above, has "reentered the Dominican navy after having been abroad on special service."

Information just received from Habana is that the Dominican Chargé has left precipitously for the United States asserting his life is in danger from Dominican exiles and their sympathizers, who are asserting publicly the vessel was captured and sunk by the Dominican armed forces. It is conceivable that the incident might lead to a new flare-up in Caribbean tension and necessitate OAS action.[8]

---

[7] José Figueres Ferrer; he had become President of the Founding Junta of the Second Republic in Costa Rica in May 1948.

[8] The following handwritten notation, initialed by Mr. Bennett, appears on the source text: "There is also today's reappearance—in President Prio's mansion—of Enrique Henriquez after two days of being 'kidnapped'. All this means that the pot is boiling again—we can expect repercussions from Guatemala soon. If the Dominican navy did capture or sink the Guat. vessel, then that is an act which would ordinarily be considered an act of war."

637.39/10–2251

Memorandum of Conversation, by the United States Representative on the Council of the Organization of American States (Dreier)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] October 22, 1951.

Subject: Cubans Imprisoned in Connection with "Quetzal" Case in Dominican Republic.

Participants: Dr. Luis Machado, Ambassador of Cuba to the United States
Dr. Gonzalo Guell, Cuban Representative on the COAS
John C. Dreier, U.S. Representative on the COAS
Edward A. Jamison, AR.

By arrangement with Ambassador Guell and Ambassador Machado, the latter having called me on the phone, I called at the Cuban Embassy to speak to them and convey to Ambassador Guell the Department's reaction to the questions which he had put to me last night

(see memorandum of conversation of today's date).[1] Ambassador Machado opened the conversation by repeating in general terms the main points of the Cuban position, emphasizing their desire to avoid any public dispute in the Caribbean among members of the anti-Soviet group.

I told Ambassador Guell that, having considered the matter more fully, I had come to the conclusion that it would not be possible for me to take any step in the matter as Chairman of the Peace Committee without consulting members of the Committee. I said that I had discussed the problem which he had outlined to me last night with others in the Department in a sincere desire to work out any arrangement which might enable us to help avoid the development of any further dispute among the Caribbean countries. We had come to the conclusion that it would not be possible for any U.S. representative to attempt to intervene in the matter unofficially, since any such move would be considered to represent official U.S. policy. Moreover, I pointed out that our relations with the Caribbean countries were so intimate and broad in scope that anything that we did in the way of intervening in a situation of this sort would be liable to misinterpretation in the light of other completely unconnected aspects of our relations. We therefore had come to the conclusion that any insinuation of suggestions or requests on our part would be too likely to be misinterpreted and to worsen rather than improve the situation. Such a move would be neither in the interest of Cuba nor of the United States.

Ambassador Guell expressed some disappointment at this. In connection with one of his remarks I stated that he had asked me a second question, namely, whether we would advise him to see Accioly.[2] I repeated what I had said Sunday night, namely, that we saw no reason why he should not do so in view of Ambassador Accioly's known abilities and prestige as an impartial, intelligent and experienced international jurist and diplomat. I added that I had no idea what Ambassador Accioly's reaction would be, since I had not spoken to him of the subject, but that it might be possible that Brazil could feel they were sufficiently removed from the area to avoid some of the dangers which we foresaw for ourselves.[3]

---

[1] In a memorandum of a conversation which took place on October 21, by Ambassador Dreier, dated October 22, 1951, Ambassador Güell was reported to have asked in part whether Ambassador Dreier, in his capacity as Chairman of the Inter-American Peace Committee and probable future chairman of the COAS, could "express semi-officially to the Dominican Government" the hope that the Cuban request for the release of the five imprisoned Cuban crew members of the Quetzal would be granted without further delay (637.39/10–2251).

[2] Hildebrando Pompeu Pinto Accioly, Brazilian Representative on and Chairman of the Council of the Organization of American States.

[3] On October 23, 1951, Ambassador Dreier discussed the Quetzal matter with Ambassador Accioly at the latter's office in the Pan American Union. The memorandum of that conversation, dated October 23, reads in part as follows: "When Footnote continued on following page.

Ambassador Guell then referred to the Peace Committee and said he was authorized to discuss the matter with members of the Committee. He said he might talk with them before the meeting this afternoon, or might on the other hand see them individually. I advised him informally to follow the latter course starting with Accioly, since if he discussed the matter with the whole group at once before the meeting today, the matter might get out of his control and wind up in the meeting itself without his so desiring. Guell indicated that he would probably follow this course, first calling Habana, if possible, for further instructions.

At the close of the conversation Guell seemed to be somewhat at a loss to know what to do. He spoke of the necessity for Cuba's doing something, and presumed that they might have their Chargé at Ciudad Trujillo again request release of the Cubans and then just wait awhile. I mentioned at this point that the Uruguayan Ambassador to Peru was apparently also just waiting in Mexico, and observed that he might presumably be going back to Ciudad Trujillo in due course.

Ambassador Guell said he would keep me informed of any steps he took, while Ambassador Machado would do likewise to the Department. After he and I had left Washington, Minister Barón [4] would keep in touch with Mr. Burrows.[5]

Footnote continued from preceding page.

Accioly asked me what the U.S. was going to do about this matter, I explained why we could do nothing. He expressed regret at this, since he felt it would be difficult for any other country to do anything if the U.S. did not. I then mentioned the Uruguayan intervention on behalf of Guatemala, which also apparently was news to Accioly. I asked him whether Brazil might do anything in this case, being more removed from the area, and he said he did not know. He had informed his Foreign Office of Guell's conversation, but he doubted whether the Brazilian Government would want to step in where the U.S. did not." (637.39/10–2351)

[4] José T. Barón, Cuban Alternate Representative on the Council of the Organization of American States.

[5] Charles R. Burrows, Office of Regional American Affairs.

637.39/11-2951

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Charles C. Hauch of the Office of Middle American Affairs [1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] November 29, 1951.

Subject: Quetzal Case [2]

Participants: Ambassador Nufer, Director of MID Ambassador Beaulac, U.S. Ambassador to Cuba
Mr. Charles R. Burrows, Deputy Director of AR and U.S. Acting Representative on the Inter-American Peace Committee.
Mr. Edward A. Jamison [3]—AR
Mr. Hobart Spalding, Intelligence Adviser—ARA
Mr. Harvey R. Wellman, Acting Officer in Charge, Caribbean Affairs—MID
Mr. Charles C. Hauch, Caribbean Affairs—MID

This meeting was held to review the Department's position with reference to the "Quetzal" case, particularly in the light of information from the Embassy at Habana that the Cuban Foreign Minister was planning to come to Washington in connection with "Quetzal" matter and would probably wish to discuss it with Ambassador Beaulac, now on consultation in the Department.

After considerable discussion of the whole "Quetzal" matter, the sense of the meeting was as follows:

1. That the Department and particularly the U.S. Ambassador to Cuba should avoid getting involved in the controversy between the Cuban and Dominican Governments which had been referred to the Inter-American Peace Committee.
2. That Ambassador Beaulac not change his travel plans but return to Habana on December 1 as projected.
3. That the Department should receive the Cuban Foreign Minister or other Cuban representatives if they should call for an appointment and that Ambassador Beaulac should be present at any such meeting, but that the Department should discourage any call by the Foreign Minister at the Department to discuss the "Quetzal" matter, in view of its having been placed before the Peace Committee and the desirability of avoiding prejudicing the position of the United States representative on the Committee.

---

[1] Drafted by Mr. Hauch on December 4, and rewritten by Mr. Wellman on December 10.

[2] On November 23, 1951, the Dominican Government had put the crew members of the Quetzal on trial. All of the crew were convicted of engaging in subversive activities; the three Guatemalan and five Cuban sailors were sentenced to 30 years at hard labor. Upon appeal, the two Dominicans involved were acquitted, and the sentences of the others were reduced. Pertinent documents are in Department of State decimal files 637.39 and 739.00.

[3] Officer in Charge, Special Political Problems, Office of Regional American Affairs.

4. That if the Cuban Foreign Minister or other Cuban representatives in discussions with Department officers should make a final effort to get the U.S. to influence the Dominican government to release the Cuban seamen, the suggestion be made to the Cuban representatives that they communicate with the Chairman of the Peace Committee. (In this connection Ambassador Beaulac stressed that our reply to any such Cuban suggestion should be of a nature acceptable to Cuba and helpful to a solution of the problem.)

5. That if prior to Ambassador Beaulac's return to Cuba, the Cuban Foreign Minister should wish to discuss the matter with him, the Ambassador should of course see him, but should make clear our position in the foregoing sense.

6. That the Department should interpose no objection to the fulfillment of an order of the Dominican Government for three combat aircraft from Canada. (Ambassador Nufer communicated that this decision had been taken at the ARA staff meeting.)

637.39/1–1052

The United States Representative on the Council of the Organization of American States (Dreier) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] January 10, 1952.

COAS 53

Subject: "Quetzal" Case

On December 25, 1951, at 11 p. m., Representatives of Cuba and the Dominican Republic, signed, before the Inter-American Peace Committee, a declaration of non-intervention and mutual respect,[1] thus bringing to an end the consideration before the Committee of the so-called "Quetzal" case. The following report is submitted by the undersigned as U.S. Member of the Inter-American Peace Committee.

The "Quetzal" case was brought before the Inter-American Peace Committee by the Government of Cuba in a note dated November 26.[2] This note, transmitted in accordance with the Committee's procedures to the Dominican Government, elicited a reply dated December 7.[2] In their reply the Dominican Government stated it would not object to consideration of the "Quetzal" case before the Peace Committee provided opportunity were also given to the Dominican Government to present its complaints against Cuba, particularly the charge that the Cuban Government had violated inter-American agreements by returning the "Quetzal" to Miguel Angel Ramirez, well-known leader of the abortive Cayo Confites expedition of 1947.

---

[1] The declaration is incorporated into the minutes of the meeting of the Inter-American Peace Committee held on December 25; a copy of the minutes in Spanish is attached to the source text, but not printed. For English text, see Annals of the Organization of American States (Washington, 1952), vol. 4, pp. 218–219.

[2] Not printed.

Further communications with representatives of the two countries in Washington revealed that the Foreign Ministers of both countries would come to Washington on or about December 19 for the purpose of consulting with the Peace Committee. A formal meeting of the Committee with Ambassador Gonzalo Guell and Ambassador Luís Thomen representing Cuba and the Dominican Republic respectively, was held on December 18,[3] but developed very little substantive information, since both Foreign Ministers were shortly expected to be in town. Following the arrival of the two Foreign Ministers, the Acting Chairman of the Committee, Ambassador Quintanilla of Mexico (who assumed the Chairmanship according to the regulations when the current Chairman, Ambassador Guell of Cuba, stepped down from his post for this case) consulted informally with both, at the request of the Committee, and made arrangements for a formal meeting on December 21. In the meantime, members of the Committee further discussed the case informally with both Foreign Ministers.

At the meeting of the Committee on December 21, a lengthy speech was delivered by the Foreign Minister of Cuba, who offered an impressive amount of evidence to support his contention that the "Quetzal", engaged in a peaceful voyage and violating no laws, was seized by a Dominican war vessel and brought to the Dominican Republic either by force or fraud. He attacked the jurisdiction of the Dominican courts over the members of the crew of the "Quetzal" in view of the manner in which they had been brought to Dominican territory.

In reply the Dominican Foreign Minister emphasized the long record of revolutionary activity of the "Quetzal" and its owner. It is worthy of note, however, that at no time, either in the formal session of December 21 or in other informal conversations, did the Dominican Foreign Minister offer any explanation of how the "Quetzal" had been brought into Dominican waters. His main defense was the charge that the "Quetzal" had an illegal registry, and was obviously bound on a revolutionary mission, and therefore was properly considered outside the law.

Following the lengthy session of the evening of December 21, the members of the Committee proceeded to hold a series of informal conversations with the two Foreign Ministers separately. Most of these conversations took place at the respective Embassies of Cuba and the Dominican Republic or at the residence of Acting Chairman Quintanilla. It soon became clear that a fair chance of resolving the case was to be found in a formula embracing the following three points:

1) Liberation of the Cuban members of the "Quetzal" crew by the Dominican Government.

[3] A copy of the minutes of the meeting of December 18 is filed under decimal file number 363.1/12–1851.

2) Submission to the Court of two legal points which seemed capable of adjudication: namely, the Cuban charge that Dominican courts lacked competence and jurisdiction in the case of the "Quetzal" crew; and the Dominican charge that Cuba had violated the Habana Convention in turning over the "Quetzal" to its former owner, Miguel Angel Ramirez.

3) A Declaration by both parties before the Committee of non-intervention in each other's affairs, restitution and accommodation of diplomatic representatives, abstention from hostile propaganda by either government, and finally, agreement to bring any other outstanding questions that might develop before the Committee.

At first both Foreign Ministers indicated general agreement with the formula outlined above, it being understood that the Committee would make no public reference to the liberation of the Cuban sailors, nor would the written agreement between the parties touch upon that subject. However, the written agreement would not be signed and made public until the Cuban members of the "Quetzal" crew were released.

As the Committee attempted to reduce this formula to satisfactory written terms, however, a major difficulty was encountered. The Dominican Foreign Minister, who had previously emphasized merely the return of the "Quetzal" to its former owner, Miguel Angel Ramirez, as the case they wished to bring before the International Court, indicated that he actually had in mind a broader subject, namely, various aspects of the Cayo Confites incident of 1947. The Cuban Foreign Minister insistently refused to permit any aspect of the Cayo Confites case to be brought up before the International Court, claiming that this subject had been fully aired and dealt with by the Organ of Consultation and the Inter-American Peace Committee in past years. Working day and night—twice until the early hours of the morning—the Committee attempted to find a satisfactory written formula which would accommodate the views of both Foreign Ministers on this subject.

Another serious obstacle to the Committee's work developed on Sunday afternoon, December 23, when in the midst of a discussion with the members of the Committee the Dominican Foreign Minister and Ambassador Thomen announced that they had just received word that the Guatemalan members of the "Quetzal" crew had been released that day in Ciudad Trujillo. This announcement fell like a bomb in the midst of the Committee which had already made known its fears that any such action by the Dominican Government, while leaving the Cuban sailors in prison, would have a most disturbing effect upon Cuban opinion and would probably render useless any further efforts by the Peace Committee. So strongly did the Committee make known its disappointment over this action of the Dominican Government, that the Dominican Foreign Minister offered to take special measures to obtain assurances that the Cuban members of the "Quetzal" crew would be released immediately, once agreement was reached with Cuba on the other points referred to above. The Committee was also pleased to receive the cooperation of the Cuban Foreign Minister, who delayed his return to Habana in order to avoid having to break relations with the Dominican Republic, as he had intended to do in the event the Guatemalan sailors were freed without similar action on behalf of the Cubans.

The following day, when efforts to produce agreement on the submittal of cases to the International Court proved to be in vain, Ambassador Quintanilla suggested that a happy solution would be offered by the agreement of both parties to drop both of the cases referred to in point 2 above, leaving only point 3 to be included in the written agreement. After some consideration of the merits of this idea, which was backed by other members of the Committee, both Foreign Ministers gave their assent. Final approval of the agreement was therefore made possible at once. The signature was delayed until the late hour on Christmas Day only because of difficulties in obtaining official word from Ciudad Trujillo that the Cuban sailors had in fact been released to the Chargé d'Affaires of Chile, who was at that time representing Cuban interests. [4]

In connection with paragraph number 3) of the agreements signed on December 25, copy of which is attached, some background is worth placing in the record. The proposal of the Committee to include in the agreement an item on propaganda was inspired by a remark of the Dominican Foreign Minister on this subject early in the negotiations. Before trying to include these topics in their proposals, however, the Committee pointed out to the Dominican Foreign Minister that it was hardly possible to prevent the issuance of anti-Dominican statements by private groups and persons in Cuba. Dr. Díaz Ordoñez said that he fully accepted this fact and that what he had in mind preventing was official or officially-inspired propaganda which the Cuban Government under their constitution was fully empowered to prevent. This view of the Dominican Foreign Minister was made known to the Cuban Minister of State, Dr. Sánchez Arango, by the Committee.

One other point connected with the negotiation of the agreement concerned the restoration of diplomatic representatives by the two countries. The Cuban Minister of State informed the Committee of the report which he had received from the former Cuban Chargé in Ciudad Trujillo, concerning an interview he had had with President Trujillo during which the latter had made various offensive remarks about Cuba and its high officials. Dr. Sánchez Arango said he could not send a new Chargè d'Affaires to Ciudad Trujillo so long as that incident remained on the record without some public denial by a high [4] In telegram 124, from Ciudad Trujillo, dated December 25, 1951, Chargé Belton informed the Secretary of State that the Cuban members of the Quetzal crew had been released (637.39/12–2551).

Dominican source. The matter was taken up with Dr. Díaz Ordónez, who had been present during the interview. It was possible to arrange for an exchange of letters [5] between each Foreign Minister and the Chairman of the Committee, in which this incident was erased from the record.

From the remarks made by both Foreign Ministers, and their letters of appreciation [6] sent to members of the Committee, it would appear that both of them were genuinely gratified with the outcome of their discussions before the Committee. The Cuban Minister of State informed the Committee that it could consider the "Quetzal" case closed so far as the Government of Cuba was concerned.

JOHN C. DREIER

[5] Not found in Department of State files.
[6] Not printed.

UNITED STATES POLICY REGARDING HEMISPHERE DEFENSE, PROVISION OF ARMAMENTS AND MILITARY ASSISTANCE TO AMERICAN REPUBLICS, AND PARTICIPATION BY AMERICAN REPUBLICS IN THE KOREAN CONFLICT [1]

ISAC Files, Lot 53 D 443 [2]

Paper Prepared in the Office of the Director of International Security Affairs for the International Security Affairs Committee [3]

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] February 13, 1951.

ISAC D–5

STATEMENT OF CONSIDERATIONS RELEVANT TO A JUDGMENT REGARDING THE INITIATION OF A UNITED STATES GRANT MILITARY AID PROGRAM TO THE LATIN AMERICAN REPUBLICS IN FISCAL YEAR 1952

I. PROBLEM

Do the security interests [4] of the United States require legislative authorization and appropriations for the provision of grant military assistance to the Latin American Republics in Fiscal Year 1952?

II. BACKGROUND

The problem under consideration has arisen urgently in connection with the formulation of the position which the United States will take at the meeting of the American Foreign Ministers in March 1951.[5]

---

[1] Continued from Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, p. 599 ff.

[2] Top secret records relating to the activities of the International Security Affairs Committee for the period February–October 1951, including action summaries, memoranda of meetings, minutes, and other papers, as maintained in the Executive Secretariat of the Department of State.

[3] The International Security Affairs Committee was an interdepartmental committee comprised of representatives from the Departments of State, Defense, and Treasury, and the Economic Cooperation Administration (ECA); it was charged with responsibility to conduct a continuing review and coordination of policy and programs relating to international security affairs and mutual defense assistance matters. The committee was chaired by Mr. Thomas D. Cabot, Director, International Security Affairs, a position established in the Department of State effective January 8, 1951. For additional information, see the editorial note in vol. I, p. 267, and the press release, dated January 4, 1951, in Department of State Bulletin, January 22, 1951, pp. 155–156.

[4] For documentation relating to the national security policy of the United States, see vol. I, pp. 1 ff.

[5] Reference is to the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of American States, held at Washington, March 26–April 7, 1951. Documentation concerning the meeting may be found on pp. 925 ff.

This task, in turn, involves the measures which this Government will take in furthering the implementation of Section C of the resolution of the United Nations General Assembly entitled "Uniting for Peace";[6] the military obligations under the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance;[7] and the preparation of Fiscal Year 1952 foreign aid legislation which the Executive Branch of this Government will submit to Congress in April 1951.

III. DISCUSSION

A. Alternative Points of View

1. That it is in the interest of the United States to provide grant military assistance which it is considered that Latin American countries now need to increase their ability to fulfill their roles in hemisphere defense; and to furnish military units to be used outside of Latin America in support of collective action against aggression.

2. That the other requirements for available and potential United States military resources are such that it is not in the interest of the United States to initiate a program of grant military aid to Latin American countries in Fiscal Year 1952.

In a memorandum drafted on November 13, 1950 (see Tab A),[8] the Bureau of Inter-American Affairs of the Department of State made the following recommendations:

"That the Agreement of the Department of Defense be sought to a request to Congress for legislative authorization to permit this Government to make available to governments of the other American Republics military training, equipment and supplies on a grant basis for units of their armed forces which they may decide, in conformity with Section C of the United Nations General Assembly Resolutions entitled 'Uniting for Peace', to maintain for possible service as United Nations units."

The Secretary of Defense[9] in a letter of January 10, 1951 (see Tab B),[10] to the Secretary of State said:

"For fiscal year 1952, it is the judgment of the Department of Defense that military grant aid in an amount not to exceed $100,000,000

---

[6] Reference is to Resolution No. 377 (V) of the General Assembly of the United Nations, November 3, 1950. For text, see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Fifth Session, Resolutions Adopted by the General Assembly during the period 19 September to 15 December 1950, Supplement No. 20 (A/1775), pp. 10–12.

[7] For text of the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (Rio Treaty), opened for signature at Rio de Janeiro, September 2, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, December 3, 1948, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 1838, or 62 Stat. (pt. 2) 1681.

[8] The cited memorandum, drafted by Mr. Edward A. Jamison, Officer in Charge, Special Political Problems, Office of Regional American Affairs, is printed in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, p. 672. It indicates that the initiative for the development of a military grant aid program for Latin America was originally taken in the Bureau of Inter-American Affairs.

[9] George C. Marshall.

[10] Printed as an annex to the source text.

for Latin America should be included in the Mutual Defense Assistance legislation now being drawn up."

Task Force VI of the Foreign Aid Steering Group,[11] in a memorandum of February 6, 1951 (Tab C)[12] to the Chairman of Task Force I of the FASG stated that:

"If the military aid for Latin America were handled as a separate title, it would probably not have any substantial effect in the balance of the program, even if considerable opposition to that part of the program developed."

B. Summary of the Arguments for and against Grant Military Aid to Latin America in Fiscal Year 1952 (Note: Prepared in S/ISA as a guide for developing the issues on proposals for furnishing military aid on a grant basis to the Latin American countries).

1. For Grant Military Aid to Latin America:

a. In the light of the United States strategic interest in Latin America and the undesirability of diverting United States forces to this area in time of emergency, it is considered militarily sound to provide such military assistance to Latin American countries as may be required in order to enable them to discharge fully their respective roles and missions.

b. Under present legislation the United States is severely limited in its ability to assist the people and governments of the other American Republics in fulfilling the positive roles which many of them wish to take, and are potentially capable of taking, in the struggle of the free world against Communist aggression. This is in sharp contrast with the military assistance being given to governments in other areas of the world in the form of outright grants.

c. The present high degree of voting support which the 20 Latin American countries provide in support of United States policies and objectives in the United Nations and in the OAS is not sufficient; in addition, a much greater degree of practical and psychological support is needed from the governments and peoples of these countries.

d. Any steps which elicit more tangible Latin American contribution to coordinated action against aggression will (1) strengthen recognition by Latin American Governments of the indivisibility of defense against Communist aggression; (2) increase their willingness to make contributions; and (3) eliminate what they have considered a valid basis for their failure to participate more fully.

---

[11] The Foreign Aid Steering Group (FASG), established in late 1950, was an interagency group comprised of representatives from the Departments of State, Defense, and Treasury, the Economic Cooperation Administration (ECA), the Office of the Special Assistant to the President Averell W. Harriman, and the Bureau of the Budget. Representatives from other agencies sometimes attended the group's meetings, which were held at the Department of State. The FASG was charged with the responsibility for developing a unified foreign assistance program. For additional documentation, see vol. I, pp. 266 ff.

[12] Not printed.

e. Grant military aid will increase among the people of Latin America a sense of responsibility which their governments have for participating in collective efforts, and thus increase the ability of these governments to contribute military forces to some form of a collective action, either within, or outside the hemisphere.

f. Contributions which each government makes will serve as a stimulus to other governments to make contributions.

g. The political recommendation for grant aid is based upon the assumptions:

(1) that military grant aid will put the Latin American Governments in an improved position to contribute to coordinated action against aggression;
(2) that this purpose will be fully accepted by governments receiving such aid; and
(3) that those governments will commit themselves to making tangible contributions in accordance with an approved plan.

h. Finally, the adoption of the draft military resolution to be submitted to the forthcoming consultative meeting of the American Foreign Ministers will serve to clarify to public opinion throughout the Hemisphere the broad concept of Inter-American defense which the United States is anxious to promote.

2. Against Grant Military Aid to Latin America:

a. The geographic location and the political, religious and cultural orientation of Latin American countries toward the United States will cause them to cast their lot with us in the long run. We should, therefore, conserve military equipment now available or expected to be available in Fiscal Year 1952, as much as we can, as far as Latin America is concerned, and concentrate it where it is most immediately needed—to equip the people of Europe and the Far East who are threatened by or fighting against Communist aggression on their own ground in areas which are vital to the security of the United States.

b. In order to strengthen political unity, and to further effective use of the manpower resources of the free world, the United States has furnished equipment which certain United Nations members needed to participate in the United Nations action in Korea. This assistance has been furnished on a "pay if you can, if not settle up later" basis. Although several of the Latin American countries have indicated a willingness to participate in the Korean operation, the net results from all of them have not been outstanding. Accordingly, no amounts of aid which may be made available for such operations should be specifically earmarked for the Latin American countries until the relative merits of other claimants for such aid have been determined in the light of factors peculiar to the particular operations.

c. In addition to the larger considerations, the major serious disadvantages within Latin America of a grant military aid program are: (1) the propaganda against the substantive problem of United States hegemony, and its adverse effect on the will for self-help; (2) changes in the balance of power within the region; and (3) the dissipation of some undefined proportion of the aid for intra-hemisphere political reasons, rather than for the stated purposes.

d. It is a basic assumption implicit in both the military (Tab B) and the political (Tab A) recommendations for grant military aid that the resources of the Latin American countries are not sufficient to enable them to accomplish the mission which the United States desires them to accomplish. It does not necessarily follow from this assumption that grant military aid is the best method of achieving United States objectives in Latin America. If any form of grant aid is proven necessary to achieve these objectives, it is arguable that such aid should be furnished through the media of Point Four Assistance, Export-Import Bank loans, and MDAP offshore purchases. These methods may be expected to have the effect of freeing dollars for purchase of arms in the United States, raising the standard of living and so increasing internal security, fostering the further development of Latin America as a source of strategic materials, and improving transport and communication within the area. It should be noted in this connection that the military recommendation (Tab B) is confined to furthering hemisphere defense, without indicating whether this concept includes extra-hemisphere operations.

IV. CONSIDERATIONS REQUIRING ELUCIDATION BY THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

A. What is the present status of Inter-American defense planning, first, on an international basis, and, second, on a unilateral U.S. planing basis?

1. Has a strategic concept been developed, and, if so, what is it?
2. Has the strategic concept been translated into defense plans for all, or some parts of, the area, with objectives and missions stated and developed, and, if so, what are the salient features?
3. Have defense plans been converted into force requirements of a general or specific nature, first, for the area as a whole, and, second, for individual countries and, if so, what are these?

B. What is the military basis for the proposal that $100,000,000 is required to furnish military assistance to Latin America in FY 1952?

1. Is it based on equipment deficiencies developed from force requirements under defense plans of the character mentioned in 1 above, and, if so, to what extent will this $100,000,000 fill such deficiencies, generally, and by countries? If this is not the basis, what is the basis?
2. To what extent are the forces for which such assistance is intended now in being? To the extent that they are not now in being, have they been budgeted for and when will they be activated, or are there at least plans for their activation?
3. What proportion of the total assistance proposed is designed to provide spares, replacements, etc., to make operable U.S. equipment now in the hands of the intended recipients? What general types and quantities of such equipment are now on hand and in what countries?

What proportion of the total assistance represents new capital equipment? What proportion represents training programs?

4. What is the present thinking as to the general breakdown as between countries and services of the $100,000,000 of assistance recommended?

C. What is the estimated total cost to the United States in future years, if any, of carrying forward the kind of program that would be initiated by the $100,000,000? Of implementing any defense plans which have been developed or are in process? In other words, is this a one-shot proposition, and if not, what is the general character, duration and magnitude of the commitment we are undertaking or visualize for the future?

D. To what extent, if any, will the provision of the assistance proposed interfere with the provision of assistance under other MDAP programs? From a military standpoint, and considered as of now, what priority should be accorded to any FY 1952 programs for Latin America in relation to MDAP programs for other areas? Given such a priority, and the general type of equipment to be provided, what is the best forecast as to when it would be possible to (a) make token deliveries, (b) make substantial deliveries, and (c) substantially complete the FY 1952 Latin American programs?

E. How long will it be, taking into account the time required to furnish assistance, any training required, and the present status and the potentialities of the various Latin American military establishments, to accomplish the objectives, as they are stated in answers to questions above, of the proposed military assistance program? In other words, when, as a practical matter, is it contemplated that such forces will be in a position to do each of the following: (a) discharge their roles under any Inter-American defense plans; (b) carry out specific missions of importance to Inter-American defense; (c) perform, in any global war, important tasks for which U.S. forces would otherwise be required; (d) contribute forces of substantial size and value for overseas operations in a global war; and (e) make significant contributions to any United Nations force?

[Annex]

The Secretary of Defense (Marshall) to the Secretary of State [13]

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, January 10, 1951.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: It is the opinion of the Department of Defense that the Mutual Defense Assistance legislation for Fiscal Year 1952 should include a provision for a military grant aid program to Latin America.

[13] A copy of this letter is also filed under Department of State decimal file number 720.5–MAP/1–1051.

The primary United States strategic military objective in Latin America is to establish an Inter-American defense structure which associates the military and strategic resources of the other American Republics with those of the United States and assures an increased production and delivery of essential strategic materials.

In the light of the United States strategic interests in Latin America and the undesirability of diverting United States forces to this area in time of emergency, it is considered militarily sound to provide such military assistance to Latin American countries as may be required in order to enable them to discharge fully their respective roles and missions.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff are now preparing a hemisphere defense plan [14] which, supported by bilateral agreements with the Latin American countries, would be the military basis for programming aid.

For Fiscal Year 1952, it is the judgment of the Department of Defense that Military grant aid in an amount not to exceed $100,000,000 for Latin America should be included in the Mutual Defense Assistance legislation now being drawn up.

If the Department of State is in substantial agreement with the foregoing, it is recommended that this matter be referred to the Foreign Aid Steering Group for inclusion in foreign aid legislation.

Faithfully yours, G. C. MARSHALL

[14] For previous documentation concerning United States policy with respect to hemisphere defense planning, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, pp. 599 ff.

ISAC Files, Lot 53 D 443

Minutes of the Third Meeting of the International Security Affairs Committee, Held in the Department of State, 10:30 a. m., February 13, 1951

TOP SECRET

ISAC M–3

[Here follows a list of those present (22).]

DISCUSSION BY GENERAL BOLTE [1] OF GRANT AID TO LATIN AMERICAN COUNTRIES

1. GENERAL BOLTE explained in general terms why, from the military point of view, it is considered desirable to extend grant military assistance to Latin American countries. He said that the Department of Defense is interested essentially in getting approval of the principle of extending this grant aid, and that the proposed figure of $100 million which was arbitrarily fixed and is already being revised downward, underscores the fact that it is mainly the principle rather than the amount of such assistance which the Department of Defense is looking at. He mentioned that the Inter-American Defense Board has recently taken positive steps in developing a sound hemispheric defense plan and that the other American Republics are evidencing a cooperative spirit. In addition the other American states are taking a positive stand against world Communism. He said it would help the United States to exert real influence and take positive leadership in the forthcoming conference of the Foreign Ministers of the American Republics in Washington beginning March 26 if the U.S. Delegation had at least agreement in principle on the matter of grant aid to the other American Republics. General Bolte said he realized a firm figure based on detailed justification would have to be developed for the FY 1952 presentation and that this job would not be extremely difficult because we already have a good idea of what the Latin Americans need.

[1] Lt. Gen. Charles L. Bolté, Deputy Chief of Staff for Plans, U.S. Army, and Chairman, Inter-American Defense Board (IADB).

2. General Bolte said that we are quite clear on what we expect to achieve through the extension of this grant aid. For one thing we would seek to strengthen the forces of those countries which could assist in the protection of the Panama Canal, especially at a time when our armed forces are committed elsewhere in the world. We also expect to develop plans with the Latin Americans for submarine patrol of shipping lanes in the event of total war. A further direct gain we would expect to accrue from the extension of grant aid is in the realm of base rights and communications facilities through certain of these countries. He added that although commitment by these countries of forces to Korea would not be treated as a quid pro quo for grant aid, the extension of grant aid would undoubtedly have an effect in causing these countries to be more cooperative in contributions to UN forces in Korea.

3. General Bolte said that the U.S. is disappointed in the kind of support these Latin American countries have given to the UN action in Korea, but he admitted that part of the blame is ours in the way we handled requests for contributions and in the conditions which we attached to the acceptance of offers of help. He stated that he recognized that there might be adverse Congressional reaction to extending grant aid to Latin America in the light of their poor showing with respect to Korea but that this opposition could probably be overcome through other considerations.

4. Mr. Gordon [2] asked whether we are pressing the Latin Americans to make contributions in the Korean war and whether there is any likelihood of further developments on this score before April 2 (target date for Congressional presentation of FY 1952 aid program). GENERAL BOLTE said that we are pressing on various fronts for further Latin American contributions in Korea but that he doubted whether there would be anything substantial before April 2. MR. WHITE [3] added that we are increasing our pressures, that Mr. Mann [4] is in Mexico City at the present time discussing the possibility of a Mexican contribution and that Mr. Miller,[5] on his forthcoming trip,[6] will also press this matter in various capitals he visits. MR. GORDON asked whether General Bolte expected that firm programs similar to those on which arms aid for Europe and the Far East will be based can be developed for Latin America in time for the Congressional presentation. GENERAL BOLTE said that it can be done inasmuch as we already have a good estimate of what those countries require in the way of arms assistance. He mentioned that at the present the Latin Americans can only obtain assistance on a cash basis under Section 408(e)[7] and that because those countries have lowest priority they have not been able to get equipment even for cash. This, he mentioned, has caused an adverse reaction on the part of the Latin Americans.

[2] Lincoln Gordon, of the Office of the Special Assistant to the President.

5. MR. GORDON asked why we should give arms to the Latin Americans in view of the fact that they have dollar reserves and are in general enjoying a good foreign exchange position. MR. WHITE pointed out that we are admittedly aiming at the political problem in Latin America since our proposed program is so small. Grant military aid would at least be a kind of acknowledgement of the fact that the Latin Americans are paying off their lend-lease obligations, that they were not included in the Marshall Plan,[8] and that to date other countries have been getting free arms while the Latin Americans have not been able even to purchase arms from the United States. These, he said, are important political factors which must be taken into account in assessing this question. He also pointed out that it is not expected that in the coming year the Latin American countries generally will enjoy the

---

[3] Ivan B. White, Office of Regional American Affairs; he became Director of the Office on February 19, 1951.

[4] Thomas C. Mann, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.

[5] Edward G. Miller, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.

[6] Mr. Miller visited five Latin American countries between mid-February and early March 1951: Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Peru, and Uruguay. The main purpose of his trip was to discuss with the appropriate officials of these governments matters relating to the forthcoming Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs. Documents pertaining to his trip are in Department of State decimal file 110.15–Mi and Lot 53 D 26.

[7] Reference is to a section of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act (Public Law 329), approved October 6, 1949; for text, see 63 Stat. 714.

[8] For documentation on the European Recovery Program, popularly known as the Marshall Plan after Secretary of State George C. Marshall (1947–1949), see Foreign Relations, 1947, vol. III, pp. 197 ff.

same foreign exchange situation they enjoy today. MR. HEBBARD[9] stated that the Treasury Department as a matter of principle opposes extending aid to build up the dollar positions of other countries. However, Treasury recognizes that there are quite a number of considerations which have a bearing on this problem of grant aid to Latin America and considers the foreign exchange and dollar positions of these countries merely as aspects of the larger problem.

6. MR. HALABY[10] asked whether in the extension of this proposed grant aid substantial increases in forces in the recipient countries are contemplated, increases which might have an adverse effect upon the economic stability of those countries. GENERAL BOLTE stated that this program would not have any substantial effect on the size of the military establishments in the recipient countries.

7. MR. CABOT stated that the discussion this morning was by way of informal consideration of the problem in expectation of formal consideration at the next meeting of ISAC. He pointed out that a decision on the question of whether to extend grant military aid to Latin America in FY 1952 is required at an early date and that he expected ISAC could come to a decision at the next meeting.

[Here follows discussion of matters unrelated to the question of military grant aid to Latin America.]

---

[9] William L. Hebbard, Assistant Director, Office of International Trade, Department of the Treasury.

[10] Najeeb E. Halaby, Jr., Assistant for International Security Affairs, Economic Cooperation Administration.

710.5/2-1451

Memorandum by Mr. Ivan B. White of the Office of Regional American Affairs to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller)

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] February 14, 1951.

Subject: Inter-American Military Cooperation

In my judgment, the U.S. has reached a point in its history where, for the first time, the prompt and effective military cooperation of the Latin American countries is of real importance. The evolution of this cooperation over the period of the next several years will be an important test of the efficacy of the Good Neighbor Policy. If these conclusions are correct, it follows that the orientation of U.S. diplomatic efforts in Latin America in the immediate future should be in the direction of a heavy concentration on obtaining prompt and effective military collaboration.

The key considerations which have led to the conclusions stated above are as follows:

1) It is generally regarded that the period of the next eighteen months, during which our own defense mobilization will be in the course of preparation, and the effective defenses of Western Europe in the process of erection, will be a vital one in the world's history.

2) The need to create situations of strength as set forth last year by Secretary Acheson is a real one. In its assessment of the world situation, the Soviet Union has probably appraised Latin America as being important as a producer of strategic materials but as a negligible factor, at least over the short term, in the military sphere, should there be an outbreak of general hostilities.

3) If a collective inter-American military force could be created in the near future, with a portion available to combat current aggression and the balance available for overseas operations in case of a widening of hostilities, this force would constitute a new factor in the world balance of power situation.

4) From the standpoint of the most effective utilization of resources, the creation and activation of the force outlined above would be most beneficial to the U.S. during this period of shortage of military manpower and equipment because:

(a) Latin America has available ground forces of 500,000 men who have already had varying degrees of military training and experience (attached is a country list of these forces), and

(b) the larger countries of Latin America already have a good nucleus of U.S. equipment, as a result of lend-lease and war surplus property operations, and, therefore, the need for equipment is a supplementary rather than a complete one.

5) The above considerations are important up to the point where Latin American countries could contribute forces within their economic capabilities so that no appreciable additional strain would be created on U.S. economic and financial resources.

6) With a rapidly growing U.S. public opinion that our allies should assume a more proportionate share of the military burden abroad, active military participation by the Latin American countries would greatly strengthen U.S.-Latin American relations during the coming years.

7) Finally, active military participation by the Latin American countries may, over the long run, accrue to their advantage. As larger percentages of U.S. and Western European output go into defense production, the chances of a Latin American country getting, in practice, a reasonable break on material supply will be greatly enhanced if it is in the position of a full ally. Furthermore, Latin America now has an opportunity to come of age, politically speaking, and to establish a real position in the world power framework.

The things we would like to have from Latin America in the near future in the military field may be summarized as follows:

1) Participation in Korean Operations. The need in this category is for ground forces. Latin American units sent to Korea will make it possible for the U.S. to accelerate the rate of dispatch of its own units to the European theater during the coming critical months. According to the Department of Defense, several Latin American countries have the military capability of making available immediately for Korea units of the size indicated below:

Brazil—1 Division
Argentina—1 Division
Mexico—1 Regimental combat team
Chile—1 Battalion

In addition, it would be most helpful if Uruguay and Peru could supply a battalion each.

It is my understanding that the Department of Defense is prepared, as in the Colombian and Cuban cases, to assist in the training, equipment and supply of these units.

2) Approval of the Inter-American Defense Scheme.[1] I attach[2] a copy of the Inter-American Defense scheme and of the Department's airgram[3] regarding our desire to obtain the prompt approval of the Latin American Governments to this document. It would be most helpful if the Latin American countries could make an affirmative decision on this matter in time for formal action to be taken by the Consultation of Foreign Ministers. Although this document is primarily concerned with hemisphere defense in the narrow sense, it does have two advantages; (1) it names the probable aggressor specifically, and (2) it recognizes that in case of general hostilities, the Western Hemisphere should take the offensive.

3) Adoption by the Consultation of Foreign Ministers of Adequate Resolutions on Military Cooperation. There is attached a copy of the Draft Military Resolution[4] which is now before the Joint Chiefs of Staff for consideration. The key policy question raised by the Draft Resolution is whether the American Republics at this juncture are prepared to recognize that the defense of the hemisphere requires the projection of its military forces beyond the lines of demarcation set forth in Article IV of the Rio Pact.[5]

4) Implementation of Resolutions. Once the meeting of Foreign Ministers is concluded and the active planning of the Inter-American Defense Board is under way, it is hoped that favorable Congressional action on military aid for Latin America will make possible bilateral negotiations looking forward to the earmarking, training and equipment of a coordinated force which would be available for action wherever necessary, should there be an outbreak of general hostilities. In my judgment, the minimum force of this type which could be created in Latin America without undue strain on the economies of those coun-

---

[1] Reference is to the Inter-American Common Defense Scheme, approved by the Inter-American Defense Board (IADB) on October 27, 1950, and by the Department of State on January 15, 1951; for information, see Secretary Marshall's letter to Secretary Acheson, December 16, 1950, Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, p. 679.

[2] No attachments were found with the source text.

[3] Circular airgram, dated January 30, 1951, not printed (710.5/1–3051).

[4] For text of the draft resolution on inter-American military cooperation as submitted to the Fourth Meeting of Consultation by the U.S. and several Latin American countries, see Pan American Union, Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of American States, held in Washington, March 26–April 7, 1951: Proceedings (Washington, 1951), pp. 52–53, hereinafter cited as Proceedings.

[5] Rio Treaty; see footnote 7, p. 986.

tries would be along the following lines, including such units as may be made available for Korea:

Brazil—2 Divisions
Argentina—1 Division
Mexico—1 Division
Regimental combat teams from the medium-sized countries of Chile, Peru, Colombia, Venezuela and Cuba.
Battalions from the 12 smaller Latin American countries.

I am fully cognizant of the political difficulties which will have to be overcome to make effective a program of the type outlined above. I believe it is most important, however, that we proceed as promptly and vigorously as is possible, recognizing that in some cases, governmental leaders, even if favorably disposed, will need a period of time to obtain acceptance from their own people of the concept of active military participation. In some cases, we may very well find that certain countries will count themselves out of this enterprise and that we may have to offset their non-participation by greater participation from more cooperative countries. In such an event, it seems inescapable to me that we will have to review our policy of economic cooperation with individual countries for the purpose of adopting a selective approach, rather than the general one envisaged in the U.S. position paper[6] prepared for the coming Conference.

[6] Presumably a reference to the position paper prepared in the Bureau of Inter-American Affairs, the final draft of which was designated IAM D–1/1a and dated March 21, 1951; for text, see p. 949.

720.5–MAP/2–1551

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. H. F. Arthur Schoenfeld of the Office of the Director of International Security Affairs

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] February 15, 1951.

Subject: Position to be taken by the Department regarding grant military aid for Latin American republics.

Participants: Mr. Thomas D. Cabot, Director, International Security Affairs
Mr. Ivan White, AR
Mr. W. H. Bray,[1] S/ISA
Mr. H. F. A. Schoenfeld, S/ISA

Mr. Cabot explained that he had learned this morning at the Secretary's staff conference that Mr. Nitze,[2] S/P, expects on Tuesday next, February 20, to discuss the above question with JCS. At the same time he had understood that in view of the forthcoming departure of Assistant Secretary Miller for a round of visits to certain Latin American capitals, the latter was anxious if possible to have some indication of an agreed position within the Department of State on the above subject. Further, Mr. Cabot had sought guidance at the Secretary's staff meeting as to whether he was to assume a quasi-judicial capacity as between divergent views within the Department on the subject, or whether he would be expected to follow his own inclination, which was adverse to grant military aid to Latin America at this time, and take a position as an advocate of this view. Mr. Cabot had not been enlightened as to what was expected of him in this respect, and was therefore seeking the views of interested officers both within the Department and in Defense and elsewhere. He had had an opportunity to examine ISAC D–5 [3] only following the meeting of ISAC of February 14 when General Bolte had spoken to that Committee in very general terms regarding the expediency of giving grant military aid to Latin American republics. On the other hand, Mr. Cabot could not construe General Bolte's statement as a response to the questions raised in Section IV of ISAC D–5, the answers to these questions, or at least the more controlling ones, being required for a judgment.

[1] William H. Bray, Jr., Office of the Director, International Security Affairs.
[2] Paul Nitze, Director, Policy Planning Staff.

Mr. White said that ARA appreciated the difficulties caused by the absence of the information required from Defense as set forth in Section IV of ISAC D–5. ARA was prepared, however, to go on record in expressing the opinion that without grant military assistance to at least some of the Latin American republics, these perhaps including the most important members of the group, ARA was confident that if cooperation with the United States in a military sense should be urgently required and called for in the future, it would not be forthcoming, and this was a source of concern to ARA.

Mr. Bray pointed out that according to preliminary information from the Department of Commerce, which would be confirmed shortly, the Latin Americans had already begun to build up important dollar balances in 1950, which were expected to be substantially increased in 1951 and 1952, and which, consequently, might be available for purchase of military equipment adequate to their needs. Mr. White disagreed with this suggestion, pointing out that these balances would be required for many purposes more appealing to Latin American populations and governments than military expenditures.

Mr. Schoenfeld invited attention to the fact that the lack of the information called for in Section IV of ISAC D–5 in the case of the Latin American problem was making most difficult, if not impossible, the kind of judgment which had attended the development of MDAP for recipient countries under the various titles of the MDAA, or which had been considered in submitting requests to Congress for funds for this purpose. Consequently, the Department was handicapped in approaching the problem so long as the necessary underlying data from Defense were not available. Mr. Cabot telephoned to General Burns [4] in the Department of Defense to inquire if these data could be expected in time for the scheduled meeting of the ISAC on February 16. Mr. Cabot reported that General Burns could give him no assurance to this effect. Mr. Cabot further indicated that General Burns had intimated the existence of some difference of opinion within the Department of Defense, which had not been settled by the official expression of the Defense view that an amount not exceeding $100,000,000 (later orally revised downward to $80,000,000) should be sought from Congress.

[3] Dated February 15, p. 985.

In response to Mr. Cabot's query whether there was any information regarding the probable magnitude of future needs for grant aid to Latin America in addition to the amount now under discussion, he was able to elicit no statement either from General Burns or from Mr. White.

The conversation ended on the agreed note that in all probability ISAC would be unable at tomorrow's meeting to make any determination regarding grant military aid for Latin America, and that the issue would have to be deferred for later consideration. Consequently, it was understood that Assistant Secretary Miller would be obliged to leave for his Latin American trip without a decision on this question.

[4] Maj. Gen. James H. Burns, U.S. Army (ret.), Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs.

ISAC Files, Lot 53 D 443

Minutes of the Fourth Meeting of the International Security Affairs Committee, Held in the Department of State, 11:00 a. m., February 16, 1951

TOP SECRET

ISAC M–4

[Here follow a list of those present (18) and a discussion of previous minutes.]

Grant Aid to Latin America

2. MR. CABOT said that the Department of State is not prepared at this time to make a decision with respect to the proposed grant aid program for Latin America because it is felt that more information as to the nature of and justification for the program are needed in State before such an important policy decision can be made. MR. CABOT listed some of the considerations which enter into his own thinking on this question:

a. This is a very important question of policy and not merely a problem of the dollar amount involved. A decision to extend even the modest amount of grant aid proposed will subject us to persuasive pressures to increase the amount to unforeseeable proportions over the next few years.

b. According to the State Department estimates denial of this grant aid would make it unlikely that the UN could raise Latin American forces for foreign duty under the UN, whether in Korea or elsewhere.

c. The increasing shortage of war materials, and the low priority we have given Latin America as a claimant on available war materials, make it clear that the Latin American countries would not receive shipments of any consequence for 12 or 18 months, even under a grant aid program.

d. It is anticipated that the flow of dollars to Latin America will increase considerably during FY 1952 as a result of our stepped-up defense effort, so it is not clear why the Latinos should not buy what arms they require.

e. It is open to question whether the Congress would support such a grant aid program, and it is possible that its inclusion in the 1952 legislation might weaken our total case.

MR. CABOT stated that it was not clear to him what we could reasonably expect to gain in terms of U.S. security through this proposed program, since we could only promise aid and would not be able to deliver within the next year or year and a half.

3. MR. CABOT stated that it would be most helpful for the Department of State to have answers, even though not specific and not complete, to the questions raised by Mr. Ohly [1] with respect to the proposed program (paragraph IV, page 5, of ISAC D–5).[2] He concluded by saying that since the Department of State is not in a position to make a decision on this question at the present time he suggested that the Department of Defense undertake to provide him with as much of the needed information as possible so that the question could be decided in ISAC at a future meeting. He mentioned that Mr. Nitze is meeting with elements of the JCS early next week and that in these talks he might be able to get the kind of information which the Department of State requires for a decision on this matter.

4. GENERAL BURNS stated that he had hoped that the information supplied by General Bolte at the previous meeting would answer most of the State Department's questions. However, Defense will provide as much information as it can in reply to the questions in Paragraph IV of ISAC D–5. He pointed out that this grant aid proposal has only recently been approved in the Department of Defense and that there are no detailed plans developed in support of it. MR. GORDON pointed out that since an early decision on this question is required to meet the needs of the Foreign Ministers Meeting (March 26) and the Congressional Presentation (April 2) a firm decision should be reached by March 1. MR. WHITE stated that although Mr. Miller realized it was not possible for him to have this decision before leaving on his trip, he wants to be consulted before a final decision is taken, and if it is felt that a decision must be reached before Mr. Miller returns to Washington (between March 10 and 12) it will be necessary to consult him by cable.

[1] John H. Ohly, Acting Assistant Director, International Security Affairs.
[2] Dated February 15, p. 985.

5. MR. HALABY pointed out that at this stage the grant aid question is largely between Defense and State, and that although ECA and the other member agencies have a less direct interest, it should be up to State and Defense to work out an agreed line and merely keep the other agencies informed of developments. While agreeing generally with Mr. Halaby, MR. GORDON and MR. HEBBARD asked that they be kept up to date on State-Defense discussions. MR. CABOT stated that he would work this out with General Burns and would tentatively schedule the question for final decision at the ISAC meeting on February 23.

6. MR. GORDON stated his understanding that a decision by State on the grant aid question is not conditioned upon full and complete answers by Defense to the formidable list of questions posed in paragraph IV of ISAC D–5. He pointed out that we should not expect that a new program such as the one proposed can be supported by as detailed a programming job as we can reasonably expect in connection with the European MDAP. MR. CABOT agreed with this observation and emphasized that he only wants a clear picture of what this program is intended to achieve in order to decide whether it warrants the major policy decision required.

7. MR. HALABY stated that there should be an estimate of the financial and economic capabilities of the Latin American countries to be affected by the proposed program in order that the economic impact may be assessed. MR. HEBBARD stated that he would undertake to get at least a rough estimate on the financial capabilities of these countries. He noted, however, that Treasury appreciates that a strong dollar position of a Latin American country is only one element which would affect a decision on the question of extending grant aid.

8. MR. WHITE, addressing the document ISAC D–5, said that ARA could not approve it because they did not think it possible adequately to set forth the pro's and con's on the question until there is more complete information available. Apart from this fact, he stated his reservations on the area approach taken by this paper, pointing out that each Latin American country presents a different problem and that a more selective approach is sounder. He stated that two of the questions listed in paragraph IV of the paper particularly interest him, namely, for what purposes do we contemplate making Latin American troops available; and from what countries would they be drawn. In conclusion, MR. WHITE urged that the financial condition of a Latin American country not be taken as the controlling element in a decision on whether or not to extend grant aid, since psychological, political, and strategic factors are also major consideration.

[Here follows discussion of matters unrelated to the question of a military grant aid program for Latin America.]

ISAC Files, Lot 53 D 443

Minutes of the Sixth Meeting of the International Security Affairs Committee, Held in the Department of State, 10:30 a.m., February 23, 1951 [1]

TOP SECRET

ISAC M–6

[Here follow a list of those present (18) and discussion of a matter unrelated to the question of grant aid to Latin America.]

Grant Aid to Latin America

5. MR. CABOT said that the State Department accepts the Defense Department's recommendation of an $80 million grant aid program for Latin America and will not oppose the inclusion of this item in the 1952 budget presentation. He said that it may be necessary to refer the matter back to ISAC for further consideration should it be determined that the justification is inadequate and that it might jeopardize the success of the 1952 legislative program.[2]

6. MR. WILLIS [3] said that the Latin American countries are in a strong financial position and in general will continue in this position. He believed that the Administration should not be expected to present adequate justification to Congress based on the inability of Latin American countries to pay. This does not mean that Treasury objects to the program since there are no doubt many reasons why we do not request the Latin American countries to pay. He said the decision in this respect should be with State and Defense because of strategic and other reasons. Treasury will approve the decision to grant aid to Latin America subject to the same reservation stated by Mr. Cabot.

---

[1] No representative from the Bureau of Inter-American Affairs was present at this meeting.

[2] The Department of State was informed by the Department of Defense, in a memorandum by Maj. Gen. S. L. Scott, Director, Office of Military Assistance, to Mr. Cabot, dated February 22, 1951, that the upper limit for the proposed military grant aid program had been reduced to $80,000,000; the Department of State's acceptance of the Defense Department's recommendation was communicated in a letter from the Acting Secretary of State (Webb) to Secretary of Defense Marshall, dated March 9, 1951, not printed (720.5–MAP/3–951).

[3] George H. Willis, Director, Office of International Finance, Department of the Treasury.

7. General Burns said he interpreted this to mean the green light for Defense but that the case is subject to later review.

8. Mr. Gordon said Mr. Harriman agreed on the matter. He added that there are two appropriate points in this connection: (1) the Latin American countries should have a low priority in all programs the JCS recommend; and (2) the amount of aid should be small and contingent upon some quid pro quo since it is fairly obvious that Latin America does not need the grant. The program is being proposed in order to achieve certain U.S. objectives. Mr. Gordon said that Task Force I of the Foreign Aid Steering Group should consider, in working out the legislative program, whether the Latin American program could be made more appealing by having the legislation include the following: (1) that assistance be given only in relation to the recipients' participation in an agreed Western Hemisphere defense plan; (2) that the grant aid be associated with commitments outside the recipient countries with relation either to hemispheric defense or in support of UN actions outside the hemisphere; and (3) that grants be made only pursuant to bilateral agreements that provide for maximum self-help and mutual aid.

9. Mr. Halaby remarked that ECA had no direct interest in this program and did not expect to be called upon to defend it. On a personal basis, he asked whether the legislation could be drafted so that the aid would be given on a reimbursable basis (rather than on a grant basis) in return for payment either in cash or strategic materials. He questioned the desirability of our giving aid to countries that are building up dollar reserves when we are "squeezing" the European countries on their dollar reserves, or giving grant aid to those who can pay. He said that with regard to legislative strategy it might be better to place this request in a separate title.

10. Mr. Cabot asked Mr. Gordon to include his points and those raised by Mr. Halaby in a paper to be presented to Task Force I. He remarked that the action of ISAC in approving the program would make it hard to resist requests for aid from all other countries.

11. There was additional discussion whether ability to pay is a criteria in determining grant aid programs. It was agreed that ISAC was not deciding the over-all relation of end-item programs with ability to pay.

[Here follows discussion of additional matters unrelated to the question of grant aid to Latin America.]

363/3-551

The Secretary of Defense (Marshall) to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, March 5, 1951.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In view of the world situation, the Joint Chiefs of Staff consider it of military importance to use the occasion of the forthcoming Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the American Republics, scheduled to open in Washington on 26 March 1951, to press for the achievement of certain military objectives in Latin America. In this connection, the Joint Chiefs of Staff reaffirm the validity of the military measures and objectives outlined in both the Analysis and the Conclusions of NSC 56/2, "United States Policy Toward Inter-American Military Collaboration," dated 18 May 1950.[1] They consider, therefore, that those points should be pressed in general and in detail.

From the military point of view, action to achieve the following purposes appears to be particularly important at this time:

(a) The acknowledgment by the American Republics of the necessity for self-help and mutual aid in preparation for meeting and defeating aggression. The principle that each nation has a moral obligation to prepare itself to contribute its full share to defense of the hemisphere should be emphasized. Likewise, the necessity for assisting neighbor republics through mutual aid should be stressed. Some of the forms of mutual aid contemplated are the use of military bases, the provision of strategic raw materials, assistance in the procurement of military equipment and the provision of military training facilities;

(b) Approval by the several Latin American nations of the "Common Defense Scheme for the American Continent." This scheme, adopted by the Inter-American Defense Board (IADB), has as yet been approved only by the governments of the United States and Cuba;

(c) Willingness on the part of the Latin American Republics to proceed urgently with additional military plans to assure effective collective hemisphere defense. Such plans would include statements of the strategic military objectives of the American States, of the roles and missions of the several states in meeting such objectives, and of the strategic military requirements of the several states as derived therefrom. The development of military assistance programs for Latin America, if they are to be both effective and economical, must be based upon a foundation of such objective military planning;

(d) Acknowledgment of the necessity as a primary matter for using contingents of the armed forces of the several American Republics within the boundaries of the Western Hemisphere in order to maintain the security of the hemisphere. Its defense with Latin American forces operating in Latin America should be regarded as the initial task for the Latin American nations. The machinery of the hemispheric regional organization should not be used to provide armed forces for service outside the region. Further, the Joint Chiefs of Staff would find serious military objection to the establishment, for the Western Hemisphere, of a military organization parallel or similar to that of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, because such an organization would not be in consonance with the Joint Chiefs of Staff concept of operations in the Western Hemisphere and in fact would otherwise seriously interfere with the effective conduct of a global war;

[1] For text of the National Security Council (NSC) document numbered NSC 56/2, adopted at the 57th meeting of the National Security Council, May 18, 1950, and approved by the President on May 19, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, p. 628.

(e) Agreement that the several Latin American Governments will support actively the work of the IADB and will consider promptly the plans and recommendations of that body. In this connection, however, the Joint Chiefs of Staff would not acquiesce in any arrangement for the command participation of the IADB in western Hemisphere strategy or operations; and (f) Establishment of the principle of the maintenance of national armed forces tailored to meet the requirements of hemisphere defense. Such a principle is in direct contrast to the existing nationalism in Latin America which dictates a policy of military power balance in all arms vis-à-vis neighbors. Each nation should be encouraged to strengthen those military forces best adapted to the execution of the tasks which it accepts in the defense of the hemisphere.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff assume that the processes used in the subject conference relating to the approval, from the military point of view, of position papers or draft resolutions will follow the procedures already established in connection with other Meetings of Heads of State or with the Councils of Foreign Ministers.

I am in full accord with the preceding recommendations of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and urge that this Government take every advantage of the opportunity offered by the forthcoming Inter-American Meeting to secure their adoption by the other participating nations, as primary military objectives of the United States.

On the other hand, these present recommendations of the Joint Chiefs of Staff do not, in my opinion, preclude a determined effort by this Government to awaken the Latin American nations to their responsibility to provide ground forces for service in Korea in the near future, as recommended by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and set forth in my letter to you of 30 January 1951, to which your reply of 23 February 1951 refers.[2] Such action in support of the United Nations will be consonant with the Program of United Nations Action to Stop Aggression, approved by the President as U.S. Governmental policy on September 16, 1950, following consideration in the National Security Council. Subparagraph (d) above postulates that the machinery of the Organization of American States, including the Inter-American [2] These letters are printed in volume VII.

Defense Board, should not be used to provide armed forces for service outside the Western Hemisphere. Any steps in this connection should therefore be pursued by the United States in its capacity as executive agent for the United Nations in accordance with the Security Council resolutions of June 25, June 27 and July 7, 1950,[3] rather than within the framework of the Inter-American System.

Faithfully yours, G. C. MARSHALL

[3] For text of these resolutions, see United Nations, Official Records of the Security Council, Fifth Year: Resolutions and Decisions of the Security Council, 1950, pp. 4 and 5; they are also printed in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. VII, pp. 155, 211, and 329.

Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26[1]

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Under Secretary of State (Webb)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] March 15, 1951.

[Subject:] Cancellation by the Navy of Proposed Transfers of Excess Destroyer Escorts to Certain Latin American Governments.

The decision, which I understand Admiral Sherman[2] made yesterday not to go through with the proposed transfer of certain excess destroyer escorts to Peru, Uruguay, Colombia and Venezuela, after the Department of the Navy had completed discussions in this matter with Peru and Uruguay and had, in fact, drawn up in final form the proposed contracts for Admiral Sherman to sign, is a most unfortunate development. Coming as it does just before the Meeting of American Foreign Ministers where the question of military cooperation will figure prominently, it may very well cast serious doubts in the minds of the Foreign Ministers of our sincerity to cooperate in this field, and it may quite likely affect adversely the cooperation of these countries in economic matters, particularly the supply of strategic raw materials.

I believe that with respect to Peru and Uruguay this matter has gone too far for the Navy at this point to cancel indefinitely the transfer of these vessels.

It was my understanding that the House and Senate Armed Services Committees were well aware of the current negotiations with these Latin American countries for the sale of certain excess destroyer escorts, and that as a result of a discussion between Admiral Sherman and Mr. Vinson,[3] there was not included in Section 4 of Public Law 3

[1] Files of Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Edward G. Miller, Jr., for the years 1949–1953.

[2] Adm. Forrest P. Sherman, Chief of Naval Operations.

[3] Carl Vinson (D–Ga.), Chairman, Armed Services Committee, House of Representatives.

(copy attached)[4] any mention of destroyer escorts as being in the category of ships for which prior congressional approval would be needed for their transfer. In fact, in connection with congressional attitude on this whole program of excess ships to Latin America, it is noteworthy that, while the further sale of cruisers is precluded by this Act, both the House and Senate reports on the bill state specifically that this section was not intended to cast any reflection on the negotiations and recent sale of light cruisers to friendly Latin American countries.

The Peruvian and the Uruguayan naval attachés,[5] after having been told for the past month by the Navy that this bill of Mr. Vinson's would not affect the sale of these destroyer escorts, learned yesterday that as a result of a last minute opinion of the Navy's Judge Advocate General[6] the term "destroyer" as used in the Act is a generic word which would include destroyer escorts. As a result, they were informed Admiral Sherman would not approve the contracts and no further transfers would take place for the balance of this fiscal year. While the formal offer of sale to these countries has not been made, the foreign naval representatives had been asked formally several months ago by Navy to enter into these discussions with a view to negotiating the technical details incident to the sale. In fact, in the middle of January, all the naval attaches of these countries were taken by the Navy to Coral Gables, Florida, to inspect the ships which they would receive. In anticipation of the proposed sale, the Peruvian and Uruguayan Embassies had, therefore, prepared the way for acceptance by their respective Governments of the transaction and had received appropriations to cover the purchase of the vessels.

Recommendation:

I suggest you get in touch with Admiral Sherman as soon as possible and explain the Department's concern as outlined above. You might emphasize we cannot afford, particularly before an important inter-American meeting, to jeopardize our relations with friendly Latin American Governments whose cooperation in Hemisphere defense we are actively seeking. We therefore urge Admiral Sherman to reconsider his decision. If he feels he cannot do so because of the Judge Advocate General's decision that destroyer escorts are considered destroyers within the meaning of Public Law 3, you might suggest that officers of Navy and State discuss the problem with the Chairman of the House and Senate Armed Services Committee[7] to ascertain [4] Not printed here; for text of Public Law 3, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of modern naval vessels, and for other purposes," approved March 10, 1951, see 65 Stat. 4.

[5] Commander Juan Manuel Castro, Peruvian Naval Attaché; Capt. Eduardo Beraldo, Uruguayan Naval Attaché.

[6] Rear Adm. George L. Russell.

[7] Senator Richard B. Russell (D–Ga.) was Chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

their views on this point and try to work out with them a solution satisfactory to all concerned.[8]

[8] Three destroyer escorts were sold to Peru and three to Uruguay; the transfer of the vessels was authorized in September 1951. For additional documentation, see pp. 1579 ff. and 1611 ff.

In a letter to Secretary Acheson, dated April 24, 1951, not printed, Secretary of Defense Marshall stated in part that in view of the passage of Public Law 3 prior to any firm commitments having been made for the sale of destroyer escorts to Argentina, Colombia, and Venezuela, and the increased need of the United States for anti-submarine vessels, it was the opinion of the Department of Defense that no destroyer escorts should be sold to these governments (720.5621/4–2451); in his reply, dated May 24, 1951, not printed, Secretary Acheson stated that the Department of State concurred (720.5621/4–2451).

795B.5–MAP/3–1651

Memorandum by the Officer in Charge of General Assembly Affairs (Popper) to the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Hickerson)[1]

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] March 16, 1951.

Subject: Military Assistance for Korea

On February 13th a meeting was held with the Department of Defense[2] concerning the possibility of securing additional military assistance for Korea. It was then agreed that the Department of State should approach the representatives of a number of countries where there was some possibility of securing additional assistance. As a result of the decisions taken in that meeting, approaches have been made to a number of governments and the following progress can be reported:

American Republics

Cuba—The President of Cuba[3] has asked the Congress for authorization to send a battalion to Korea rather than a company as originally offered. This request has evoked considerable criticism among the opponents of the present administration, including Ambassador Belt,[4] formerly the Cuban Representative to the United Nations. A special session of the Cuban Congress convened on February 26 and has been considering the President's request. The Cuban desk officer[5] doubts that Congress will give its approval during the special session, but he believes that authorization is more probable during the regular session of Congress which is scheduled to convene on March 19.

[1] Drafted by the Officer in Charge, International Security Affairs, Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs (Bechhoefer).

[2] This meeting took place at the Department of State; a copy of the minutes of the meeting, dated February 16, 1951, is filed under Department of State decimal file number 795.00/2–1651.

[3] Carlos Prío Socarrás.

[4] Guillermo Belt, Cuban Ambassador to the United States, 1944–1949.

[5] Harvey R. Wellman.

Colombia—Colombia has been training one battalion for service in Korea. This battalion was originally scheduled to complete its training in Colombia by May 15. However, the Department received a telegram on March 13 [6] requesting that arrangements be made for the battalion to leave Colombia as soon as possible. If arrangements are made to transport this unit from Colombia before May 15, it will be necessary to give this unit additional training. This brings up the question as to the availability of transportation at this time. Further, it has not been decided where the Colombian unit would be sent for additional training.

Mexico—Mr. Mann spoke to both the Foreign Minister [7] and Under Secretary of Foreign Affairs of Mexico during his recent visit to Mexico City, and after his return, took the matter up further with the Embassy in Washington. It was agreed that the public in Mexico was not conditioned to the idea of Mexico furnishing ground troops to Korea and that therefore any possibility of assistance at this time was remote.

Brazil—During discussions between Assistant Secretary of State Miller and the newly appointed Foreign Minister,[8] the Foreign Minister raised the issue of assistance to the United Nations in Korea. He indicated that Brazil was seriously considering furnishing assistance commensurate with Brazil's international prestige. He cited the possibility of furnishing an entire division. In preparation for any such steps, it would be desirable to condition public opinion in Brazil, and the Foreign Minister requested the assistance of the United States Embassy. The Bureau of Inter-American Affairs is working with the Pentagon on this matter, and in particular is planning for a speech by General Bolte which could be translated into Portuguese and given broad publicity. The discussions will be continued at the forthcoming meeting of the Foreign Ministers in Washington. It seems advisable to concentrate on Brazil in the efforts to secure assistance from Latin America because of the possibility of a large size Brazilian contribution and because of the extensive amount of American equipment the Brazilian army already possesses.

Uruguay—Mr. Miller, during his recent visit to Montevideo, discussed the matter with the Foreign Minister [9] who stated that his government was still anxious to have Uruguay send a battalion to Korea. However, the opposition party was bitterly attacking any such project. Mr. Miller, with the consent of the Foreign Minister, spoke to the leader of the opposition. The leader of the opposition proclaimed his complete support of the United States, but at the same time stated his [6] Apparent reference to telegram 666, from Bogotá, March 12, 1951, not printed (363/3–1251).

---

[7] Manuel Tello, Acting Foreign Minister.
[8] João Neves da Fontoura.
[9] Alberto Domínguez Cámpora.

opposition to sending Uruguayan troops to Korea. Since the general status of public opinion in Uruguay is lukewarm, it seems unlikely that the Government could secure in the near future the necessary authorization from the Uruguayan Congress.

Chile and Peru—Mr. Miller brought up the question of assistance for Korea with the Foreign Offices in both Chile and Peru, but received a lukewarm response.

Argentina—Due to existing political conditions, Mr. Miller found it advisable not to discuss the matter. There had previously been some discussion of the possibility of an offer from the Government of Argentina of two air force contingents. The Assistant [sic] Secretary of Defense [10] in a letter dated March 9th [11] indicated that, even though the tactical value of Argentine squadrons would be nominal in Korea, the Joint Chiefs of Staff would accede to loaning suitable aircraft on the premise that the action might be a lever for securing substantial Latin American ground forces from Argentina and from the other Republics. ARA has indicated informally that nothing further should be done to secure such an offer from Argentina at this time because of the unfavorable political situation and because of its doubts that the furnishing of two Argentine squadrons would in fact lead to the result desired by the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

[Here follows discussion of the progress of United States efforts to secure additional military assistance for Korea from certain nations other than the American Republics.]

[10] Robert A Lovett, Deputy Secretary of Defense.
[11] Not printed (795B.5/3–951).

363/3–551

The Secretary of State to the Secretary of Defense (Marshall)

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, March 20, 1951.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I refer to your letter of March 5, 1951 [1] in which you forward the views of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Department of Defense regarding military objectives which should be sought in the forthcoming Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the American Republics. It is my understanding that representatives of our two Departments are preparing draft resolutions on these matters which will be submitted to the same procedures of review as those established in connection with other meetings of Heads of State or with the Council of Foreign Ministers.

In addition to seeking in this Meeting to further the accomplishment of the inter-American military objectives which the Joint Chiefs of Staff regard as particularly important at this time, I believe that the Foreign Ministers should take action to stimulate political support and more active backing by the other American Republics for the United Nations collective security efforts and for the General Assembly resolution on "Uniting for Peace". It is my view that this can be done without using the machinery of the Organization of American States to provide troops for action outside the hemisphere, to which the Joint Chiefs of Staff find objection.

[1] Ante, p. 1004.

As approved for the Governments by the Council of the Organization of American States, item I on the agenda of the Meeting reads: "Political and military cooperation for the defense of the Americas, and to prevent and suppress aggression, in accordance with inter-American agreements and with the Charter of the United Nations and the resolutions of that Organization." Not only does this wording justify a positive assertion of support for the United Nations, but it may be safely predicted that failure of the Meeting to take such action will be widely interpreted as retrogression from the high degree of political cooperation which exists among the American Republics in United Nations peace and security matters.

On this political basis, therefore, the Department of State plans to propose or support a resolution, along the lines of that presented in the attached paper,[2] in which the Meeting of Consultation would affirm the support of the American Republics for United Nations action to prevent and suppress aggression.[3]

Sincerely yours, DEAN ACHESON

[2] No attachments found with the source text.

[3] For text of the resolution on this subject, as submitted to the Fourth Meeting of Consultation by the U.S. and several Latin American Governments, see Proceedings, p. 51.

710.5/4–2051

Memorandum by the Deputy Under Secretary of State (Matthews) to the Executive Secretary of the National Security Council (Lay)[1]

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] April 20, 1951.[2]

Subject: Third Progress Report on NSC 56/2, "United States Policy Toward Inter-American Military Collaboration".[3]

NSC 56/2 was approved as governmental policy on May 19, 1950. It is requested that this Progress Report as of March 23, 1951 be circulated to the members of the Council for their information.

[1] Drafted by Duncan A. D. Mackay of the Office of Regional American Affairs; cleared by the Offices of South American Affairs and Middle American Affairs, and in draft by the Office of the Director, International Security Affairs.

[2] Drafting of this document began prior to the opening of the Fourth Meeting of Consultation, but all necessary clearances were not obtained until after the meeting had adjourned.

[3] Dated May 18, 1950; for text, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, p. 628.

1. There has been continued collaboration among the Departments of State, Defense, Army, Navy and Air Force in the execution of the policy and procedures set forth in this paper. In this connection, the Secretary of Defense has designated the U.S. Delegation to the Inter-American Defense Board to represent the Department of Defense and the three services in advising the Department of State in the coordination of the implementation of the policies set forth in NSC 56/2.

2. With the concurrence of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Defense has designated the Chairman of the U.S. Delegation to the Inter-American Defense Board as the principal military advisor to the U.S. Representative on the Council of the Organization of American States.

3. The Hemisphere Defense Scheme called for in NSC 56/2 has been approved by the Inter-American Defense Board and submitted to the governments of the member states of the Organization of American States for their approval. The Governments of Chile, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and the United States have formally indicated their approval of the Defense scheme. In addition, the Governments of Costa Rica, Ecuador, Honduras, Peru and Paraguay informally have indicated to our missions that they approve the Defense Scheme. The Department of State is taking action to encourage the expeditious approval of the Defense Scheme by the remaining governments.

4. A United States proposal for action by the Meeting of American Foreign Ministers, which starts on March 26, to further accomplishment of the objectives contained in NSC 56/2, particularly those deemed of immediate importance, has been prepared. Advantage will be taken of the presence in Washington of the Foreign Ministers and their military advisors to lay the groundwork for subsequent bilateral negotiations on the defense roles of certain countries. Progress achieved in either or both of these aspects will be the subject of a subsequent Report being prepared.

5. The Departments of State and Defense have agreed to support before the Congress the inclusion in the proposed foreign aid legislation for the fiscal year 1952 of a sum not to exceed $80 million in support of military grant aid for Latin America to assist certain governments in Latin America to undertake specific defense roles, on the basis of prior agreement, and to assure the maximum practical availability of the armed forces of these governments in the event of global war. Representatives of the Department of State and the Department of Defense have agreed that, although NSC 56/2 prescribes a chronological sequence of steps to be taken, some of these actions necessitate concurrent action to save time.

6. Planning talks between representatives of the Governments of the U.S. and Venezuela concerning the security of vital installations in Venezuela were begun in the Panama Canal Zone on March 19, 1951.[4] The results of these planning talks will be the subject of a subsequent report.

7. The report of the Joint U.S. Military Survey Team, requested by the President of Cuba to study Cuba's defense needs, was completed and submitted to the Cuban Government. The Cuban Government has accepted the recommendations and has initiated discussions with a view to implementing certain of them. In this connection, an agreement was signed on December 22, 1950 with Cuba,[5] establishing in Cuba a U.S. Air Force Mission under the supervision of the Commanding General, Caribbean Air Command.[6] The Cuban Government has also requested the establishment of a U.S. Army and Navy Mission, and has approved draft contracts which have been submitted, subject to minor modifications.[7]

8. The U.S. Government has sold two light cruisers each to the Governments of Argentine, Brazil and Chile under the provisions of Section 408 (e) of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended. This is the first significant transfer of excess military equipment to Latin America under this Act as amended.[8]

9. The Inter-American Defense Board has prepared and forwarded to the Governments of the nations of the Western Hemisphere a study[9] of the defense of inter-American maritime routes. On the basis of the reactions from the military authorities of the various Governments, this study will serve as the foundation for a plan for the employment of forces of the Western Hemisphere to protect the delivery of strategic raw materials from Latin America to the United States.

[4] For documentation concerning these talks, see pp. 1623 ff.
[5] For text of the agreement providing for the services of a United States Air Force Mission to Cuba, signed at Washington, December 22, 1950, and entered into force on the same date, see TIAS No. 2166, or United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), vol. 1, p. 887.
[6] Brig. Gen. Emil C. Kiel.
[7] For documentation on this subject, see pp. 1329 ff.
[8] For documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, pp. 599 ff.
[9] Not found in Department of State files.

S/P–NSC Files, Lot 61 D 167

Memorandum by the Under Secretary of State (Webb) to the Executive Secretary of the National Security Council (Lay)[1]

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, June 12, 1951.

Subject: Fourth Progress Report on NSC 56/2 "United States Policy Toward Inter-American Military Collaboration".

NSC 56/2 was approved as governmental policy on May 19, 1950. It is requested that this Progress Report as of June 1, 1951 be circulated to the members of the Council for their information.

[1] Drafted by Mr. Jamison.

1. The Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs which met in Washington on March 26 to April 6, 1951, took constructive action toward the development of inter-American policy towards military collaboration in a number of respects. On the basis of full cooperation between the Departments of Defense and State, the United States, as co-sponsor with certain other governments, proposed three draft resolutions, which with relatively minor changes, were unanimously approved as Resolutions II (Preparation of the Defense of the American Republics and Support of the Action of the United Nations), III (Inter-American Military Cooperation), and IV (Importance of Maintaining Peaceful Relations Among American States) of the Final Act of the Meeting.[2] The following are regarded as the principal positive results:

a. A recommendation (Resolution III) that the American Republics orient their military preparation so that through self-help and mutual aid they can (1) increase those resources and strengthen those armed forces best adapted to the collective defense and maintain those armed forces in such status that they can be immediately available for the defense of the continent, and (2) cooperate to develop the collective strength necessary to combat aggression against any of them. This for the first time provides an inter-American policy basis for directing the development of military strength toward collective defense of the Continent, with military forces utilized in the performance of specific roles and missions which will contribute to the common defense.

b. A directive to the Inter-American Defense Board (Resolution III) to prepare vigorously and keep up to date the military planning of the common defense and to submit plans formulated to the governments for consideration and decision. Emphasis was placed upon the importance of Delegations to the Board maintaining close liaison and consultation with their governments regarding the work of the Board.

c. A recommendation (Resolution III) that the Governments (1) maintain adequate and continuous representation not only on the Council of Delegates of the IADB but on the Staff and any other organ which the Board may establish, (2) actively support the work of the Board and consider promptly the results of its work, and (3) cooperate in organizing within the Board a coordinated system of exchange of appropriate information. Items (b) and (c) should contribute to improved recognition of the functions of the IADB, to more firm backing by the Governments, and improvement in its ability to carry out its functions.

d. A declaration (Resolution II) that (1) the present world situation requires positive support by the American Republics for achievement of the collective defense of the Continent through the OAS, as well as for cooperation in the United Nations, and (2) a recommendation (Resolution II) that, in accordance with the concepts of the UN General Assembly's "Uniting for Peace" Resolution, each government immediately examine its resources and determine what it can contribute to defense of the continent and United Nations collective security efforts, particular attention being given to the development and maintenance of elements of its armed forces which could promptly be made available for those purposes.

[2] For text of the Final Act, signed April 7, 1951, see Proceedings, pp. 234–267.

e. A declaration (Resolution IV) that observance of inter-American commitments on non-intervention and peaceful settlement of disputes among the American Republics makes it possible for each to concentrate the development of its capabilities upon the tasks best adapted to the role it is best qualified to assume in collective defense.

The resolution entitled "Inter-American Military Cooperation" (Resolution III) is tied closely at several points to the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance. The resolution contained qualifications intended to indicate clearly that the development and possible use of military strength for common defense shall be (1) in conformity with constitutional processes, (2) in accordance with the countries' own judgements of their capabilities, (3) without prejudice to individual self-defense and internal security.

The Resolutions approved in the economic field which have an important bearing on the objectives and conclusions of NSC 56/2 were those on "Economic Development" (Resolution XII), on "Increase of Production and Processing of Basic and Strategic Materials", (Resolution XIII), and on "Defense and Security Controls" (Resolution XV). Also pertinent to the objectives and conclusions of NSC 56/2 was the Resolution entitled "Strengthening of Internal Security" (Resolution VIII).

2. Advantage was taken of the presence of high level political and military officials of various governments at the Foreign Ministers Conference to hold bi-lateral conversations between officials of the U.S. and representatives of Brazil, Peru, Mexico, Uruguay and Chile. Although considerable emphasis was placed upon the importance of ground force contributions to Korea, those meetings also served to more fully acquaint these governmental officials with the principles and objectives of collective continental defense in accordance with the concepts of NSC 56/2.

3. At the instigation of the U.S. Delegation, the Inter-American Defense Board (IADB) has taken the first step toward assuming the new responsibilities assigned that body under Resolution III of the Fourth Meeting of Consultation noted above. By motion passed on May 17, the Board directed its Staff to proceed with the preparation of adequate plans for the common defense of the hemisphere. Those plans are to be based on the broad, general principles enunciated in the "Common Defense Scheme for the American Continent." In the remarks preceding the introduction of this motion, the U.S. Delegation indicated that if the motion were passed, it proposed to make its views on these plans known to the Staff and hoped that the other delegations would do likewise. It is considered that this procedure will enable the U.S. Delegation more effectively to utilize the multilateral procedures of the IADB in attaining the objectives of NSC 56/2 inasmuch as the Staff is under the direction of a general officer of the U.S. Army.[3]

4. In the period since the Third Progress Report,[4] the Inter-American Defense Board has been officially informed of the approval of the Common Defense Scheme for the American Continent of the governments of Colombia, Paraguay, Venezuela, Guatemala and Ecuador. Since the governments of Chile, Cuba, the Dominician Republic, Haiti and the U.S. had previously given such notice, this brings to ten the number of governments which have so approved.

5. As a result of the planning talks held at Quarry Heights from March 19–23, 1951 agreement was reached between the Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces of Venezuela and the U.S. Commander-in-Chief, Caribbean, outlining the general area of mutual interest in protection of the oil industry and other strategic materials in Venezuela against external aggression and internal sabotage. The general areas of vulnerability and desirable security measures were outlined. The foregoing agreement signed ad referendum was submitted to the two governments for approval and is currently being studied by the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff.

JAMES E. WEBB

[3] Brig. Gen. Edwin L. Sibert.
[4] Supra.

371.75/8–1551

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Duncan A. D. Mackay of the Office of Regional American Affairs

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] August 15, 1951.

Subject: Meeting With Representatives of the U.S. Delegation to the IADB To Consider Problems of Inter-American Military Collaboration.

Participants: Brig. Gen. E. L. Sibert, Director of Staff, IADB
Col. D. S. Somerville,[1] G–3, Army
Col. J. H. Anderson,[2] G–3, Army
Col. Crawford,[3] G–3, Army
Capt. J. A. Lark,[4] Op. 35, Navy
Lt. Col. R. A. Collins,[5] Op. 35, Navy [Marine Corps]
Col. Willis Smyser, Opn. Div, AF

[1] Duncan S. Somerville.
[2] John H. Anderson.
[3] Stuart M. Crawford.
[4] Jacob A. Lark.
[5] Ralph A. Collins.

Col. W. F. Lewis,[6] Opn. Div, AF
Lt. Col. R. O'Connor,[7] Opn. Div, AF
S/ISA—Mr. Schoenfeld
AR—Messrs. Burrows,[8] Jamison and Mackay

The meeting was held in Mr. Burrows office at 2:30 to take up certain current problems of inter-American military collaboration. These were (1) the formulation of U.S. comments on the "General Military Plan for the Defense of the American Continent" (Document T–020),[9] recently completed by the Staff of the IADB, and made available July 26 to the Council of Delegates with a request for their written comments by August 28, 1951; (2) the security of information turned over to the IADB for use in planning; (3) the relationship of non-American possessions to inter-American military planning; and (4) possible items for inclusion in the NSC 56/2 Progress Report due September 1.[10]

1. Comments on the IADB Military Plan: Mr. Jamison expressed State's appreciation for the early consultation by the Defense representatives on this document. He stated that certain comments on the plan had been prepared in State, and that a copy of these comments would be made available informally to the Secretary of the U.S. Delegation. The general impression of the document, he stated, was that, with a few drafting changes and clarification on some substantive points, it would serve as a "broad umbrella" under which bilateral agreements could be worked out between the U.S. and other countries on the three defense sectors.

Following a review of the drafting suggestions in the State memorandum,[11] the following substantive questions were discussed:

(a) U.S. Responsibility in Caribbean-Panama-Galapagos Sector. It was agreed that it would be more appropriate in VC1b(1) to express as a recognition of responsibility, rather than a grant of authority, the coordination and planning by the U.S. on CPG Sector. Colonel Somerville indicated that the U.S. would not be precluded from bringing in other countries to assist in the defense of this sector, and that Defense planned to make this clear by having some language inserted which would permit Brazil, for example, to be brought in to assist in plans "pertaining to the sector" which were of concern to her.

(b) U.S. Responsibility in South Atlantic and South Pacific Sectors. In response to a query of Mr. Jamison's whether the U.S. was specifically excluded from planning and coordination in other two [6] Willis, F. Lewis.

[7] Roderic D. O'Connor.
[8] Charles R. Burrows, Office of Regional American Affairs.
[9] Approved on November 15, 1951, by the Council of Delegates of the Inter-American Defense Board as Document C–019; for information, see the editorial note, p. 1028.
[10] Infra.
[11] Not found in Department of State files.

sectors, General Sibert stated that the JCS had determined that, except for a possible base in Brazil or a refuelling point in Chile, the U.S. had no requirements in the other two sectors, since it was assumed that any threat to U.S. interests would come in the Caribbean area. The countries in these sectors, he stated, are primarily responsible for the defense of the sector, although bilaterals could be worked out with the U.S. on particular points. He also made it clear, in this connection, that the bilateral negotiations contemplated under Title IV of the Mutual Security Program would be carried on by us without reference to the Board.

(c) Control of High Seas. Captain Lark clarified the meaning of paragraph VC3 on page 8. Coastal waters, he stated, would be the responsibility of the country concerned; "high seas", i.e., beyond the coastal limits, would be the responsibility of the United States.

(d) Internal Security. It was suggested that reference should be made in this section on page 13 to Resolution 32 of Bogota [12] and Resolution 8 of the IAM,[13] as a means of emphasizing previous inter-American action on which exchange of information could be based.

(e) Detailed Plans of Action. General Sibert acknowledged that this document is actually a plan which would enable governments primarily concerned with particular problems to make detailed plans among themselves. In response to a query of Mr. Jamison's, General Sibert stated that he did not believe that this proposed decentralization of planning in the three defense sectors would necessarily eliminate the need for future action by the IADB, since there would remain many hemisphere military problems with which the IADB could deal. General Sibert stated that he understood that General Goes Monteiro [14] of Brazil was planning to recommend formally that the IADB review and coordinate the defense planning of all three sectors. If such a suggestion were made, General Sibert indicated it would be disapproved by Defense.

Mr. Jamison pointed out the need in this section VIIA (page 11) for some qualifying statement to cover the probable necessity for working out arrangements with European states regarding their possessions in this hemisphere (see also paragraph 3 of this memorandum).

2. Security of Information in the IADB: General Sibert in a conversation with Mr. Miller on July 25 had expressed concern over the [12] Reference is to the Ninth International Conference of American States, held at Bogotá, Colombia, March 30–May 2, 1948; for text of the Final Act of the conference, which includes Resolution XXXII, see Department of State Publication No. 3262, Ninth International Conference of American States . . .: Report of the Delegation of the United States of America with Related Documents (Washington, 1948), pp. 222 ff. For documentation on the Bogotá conference, see Foreign Relations, 1948, vol. IX, pp. 1 ff.

---

[13] Reference is to the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of American States; for text of the Final Act, which includes Resolution 8, see Proceedings, pp. 234. ff.

[14] Pedro Aurélio Góes Monteiro.

participation of Guatemala as a full member of the IADB on security grounds, and had inquired whether there was any way either to exclude Guatemala from the IADB or provide limited participation on its part. An ARA memorandum on this subject was discussed. It was agreed that, as a realistic matter, it would have to be assumed that any information passed on to twenty countries in a body of this kind would, in many cases, find its way into the wrong hands. In determining, therefore, what information should be given to the IADB by Defense, it was agreed that only such information should be transmitted which, even if it were to come into possession of a potential enemy, would not seriously affect the security of the United States. It was recognized that the advantages to be gained in keeping intact the inter-American system, even though a limit might be imposed on the subjects which could be discussed multilaterally, outweighed limiting or excluding participation of any one country.[15]

3. Relation of non-American Possessions to Inter-American Military Planning: Mr. Jamison stated that a decision would have to be reached soon on the assistance which would be required by the U.S. in the protection of the European possessions in case of war. He referred to certain illustrative tasks which had been cited by Defense in support of the $40 million grant aid for Latin America [16] indicating the possible use of Latin American troops in Curacao and Aruba. It was emphasized that the explosive political effect which the use of Latin American forces might have on the European territorials in the Caribbean area should be taken into account. He read portions of a series of letters from Mr. Knox,[17] Consul General in Curacao, indicating the extreme sensitivity which the Dutch officials have on this question.

Colonel Somerville stated that there was not at the present time in the Department of Defense any concrete plan for garrisoning Latin American forces in any of the European possessions in the Caribbean. He explained that any such proposal such as had been made by way of illustration in the Defense presentation on the MSP, would only be formalized if it was determined that there were no overriding political objections. In any event, he stated that any such proposal would not be taken up in a military way with any Latin American country until there had been full coordination with the European government concerned. He cited in this connection the primary responsibility of the U.S. in the defense of the Caribbean area, and the planning talks which had been held separately with the Venezuelan and Dutch military representatives over the protection of the oil industry.

---

[15] Pertinent documents on this subject are in decimal file 710.5.

[16] The $80,000,000 figure agreed upon by the Departments of State and Defense as necessary for the military grant aid program to Latin America for FY 1952 was reduced as a result of hearings at the Bureau of the Budget.

[17] Charles F. Knox, Jr.

The further question of the desirability of the representatives of the industry being advised of these plans at an appropriate time was fully discussed.

4. Suggested Items for NSC 56/2 Progress Report: The next quarterly progress report on NSC 56/2 "Inter-American Military Collaboration", is due September 1. The following items were suggested for inclusion: (a) completion of the IADB "War Plan"; (b) status of Military Planning Talks between Venezuela and the U.S.; (c) negotiation for U.S. Army and Navy Missions in Cuba; (d) progress on the proposed $40 million grant aid for Latin America.

5. Other Business: Deviation from long-range Defense standardization goal in the agreement with Venezuela for formation of Venezuelan Vampire jet interceptor squadron as a part of Venezuelan requirements for defense of oil industry:—The Air Force representatives were informed of the substance of letters received from Ambassador Armour [18] in Caracas expressing his concern over the recent reported sale by the British Government of 5 additional Vampire jet aircraft to Venezuela, and transmitting a suggestion of the Air Attaché, Colonel Duncan,[19] that U.S. armament for these jet aircraft be offered to the Venezuelan Government by the U.S. Mr. Mackay pointed out that Colonel Duncan's suggestion appeared to indicate an acquiescence on the part of the USAF in the Venezuelan purchase of British jets, which was also reflected in the recent military agreement with Venezuela. Colonel Lewis, in reply to Mr. Jamison's query whether this was not a modification of standardization policy, stated that, as a matter of realism it was recognized that Venezuela had already seven Vampires, and that, since she had a requirement for three jet squadrons, it seemed more economical to fill out one of these with the British aircraft. Recognizing this fact, it seemed desirable, he stated, to salvage for standardization at least the armament on the British aircraft. Mr. Schoenfeld stated that it was not clear that the British had consulted with the U.S. on their decision to sell further jets to Venezuela, and that this matter was timed very badly with the Mutual Security Program pending in Congress. Mr. Mackay stated that a letter [20] to Defense had been prepared in State outlining the NATO standardization and Mutual Security aspects of this problem and would request consultation with Defense on this matter. Colonel Smyser and Colonel O'Connor indicated that a recent similar problem involving Italy and Guatemala had prompted an Air Force request to Defense for policy guidance on the possible conflict between the disposal of NATO surplus and the standardization policy for this hemisphere.

---

[18] Norman Armour.
[19] Lt. Col. William F. Duncan.
[20] Not printed.

S/P–NSC Files, Lot 61 D 167

Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State to the Executive Secretary of the National Security Council (Lay)[1]

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, September 13, 1951.

Subject: Fifth Progress Report on NSC 56/2, "United States Policy Toward Inter-American Military Collaboration."

NSC 56/2 was approved as governmental policy on May 19, 1950. It is requested that this Progress Report as of September 6, 1951 be circulated to the members of the Council for their information.

1. As a result of unanimous acceptance by the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the principle of collective defense, and a directive (Resolution III) to the Inter-American Defense Board (IADB) to prepare a plan for the common defense of the hemisphere for the consideration and decision of the governments, the Staff of the IADB has completed a "General Military Plan for the Defense of the American Continent" and presented it to the Council of Delegates who will submit their comments by October 15, 1951. There has been close consultation on this plan between representatives of the U.S. Delegation to the IADB and officers of the Department of State.

2. The Departments of Defense and State have approved in substance an initial "Agreement Document" resulting from joint discussions held at Quarry Heights, March 19–23, 1951, between the Commander-in-Chief, Caribbean, and the Chief of Staff of the Venezuelan Armed Forces, concerning the security of vital installations in Venezuela. The Document lists requirements for military supplies and equipment which were presented unilaterally by the Venezuelan representatives. Since, under current priorities, other U.S. commitments for military supplies and equipment take precedence, the Joint Chiefs of Staff desire further conversations, including a detailed joint survey of the requirements, before making any decision to award Venezuela an equipment priority which would permit furnishing the items requested. Venezuela has agreed to bear the entire cost of any equipment found needed.

3. Agreement has been reached with the Cuban Government for the establishment of a U.S. Army and Navy Mission in Cuba. The establishment of these Missions, in addition to the Air Mission, which was authorized in December 1950, was part of a series of recommendations made by a Joint U.S. Military Survey Team requested by the President of Cuba to study Cuba's defense needs. Negotiations are in progress with the Uruguayan Government to conclude an agreement for the establishment of a U.S. Air Force Mission in Uruguay.[2] The

[1] Drafted by Mr. Mackay.

[2] The agreement was signed at Washington on December 4, 1951; it entered into force on the same date. For text of the agreement, see TIAS No. 2369, or 2 UST (pt. 2) 2517.

Dominican Republic, Mexico, and Nicaragua remain the only Latin American countries, in which there is at present no U.S. service mission.

4. Authorization for an appropriation for grant military aid to Latin America, included in the general Mutual Security Bill, has been approved by the House of Representatives and the Senate. The House version included a sum not to exceed $40 million for this purpose, while the measure as approved by the Senate authorized $38,150,000. The grant aid is to be used to assist those Latin American governments who will agree to undertake specific hemispheric defense roles, for which otherwise the U.S. would have to provide forces. Agreement has been reached between the State and Defense Departments on the general procedures which would be followed in negotiating agreements with these governments, once an authorization for military grant aid has been given, and the necessary appropriation made.

5. Because of the high costs of available equipment and the low priority assigned to Latin America for its allocation, the U.S. is at the present time unable to provide Latin American nations with many major items of new equipment or spare parts and maintenance items necessary for equipment previously received from the U.S. As a result, several of these countries are now seeking fulfillment of their needs from European sources, including sources behind the Iron Curtain. The acquisition of such European types of equipment is likely to conflict with the long-range objectives, outlined in NSC 56/2, for standardizing Latin American training, equipment and doctrine along U.S. lines. The Departments of State and Defense are presently reviewing this problem.

JAMES E. WEBB

795B.5/8–1651

The Under Secretary of State (Webb) to the Secretary of Defense (Lovett)[1]

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, October 10, 1951.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I refer to that portion of the letter of August 16, 1951[2] of the Acting Secretary of Defense[3] which sets forth the views of the Joint Chiefs of Staff regarding Latin American military participation in the Korean operation. This letter states:

"The JCS consider that Latin America is probably the most promising source of substantial contributions. They recommend that efforts be continued to obtain forces from the nations reported on by the Secretary of State, including Mexico, and that Argentina be requested to make a substantial contribution. It is considered that offers by Argentina and Brazil should be in the order of a division each."

[1] Drafted by the Director of the Office of Regional American Affairs (Cale) and Mr. Jamison; cleared by the Bureaus of United Nations Affairs and Far Eastern Affairs, the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Economic Affairs, and the Offices of South American Affairs and Middle American Affairs.

[2] For text, see volume VII.

[3] Robert Lovett.

As stated in Mr. Matthews' letter of September 27, 1950 [4] to the Secretary of Defense, the Department of State agrees that it is desirable that Latin American forces participate in the Korean military operations. Since the date of this letter, a Colombian battalion has reached Korea and a Colombian frigate has participated in naval operations off the Korean coast. The Department of State will continue to make every practicable effort to increase Latin American participation.

As you know, representatives of the Department of Defense have been negotiating in Washington with General Goes Monteiro of Brazil concerning the despatch of Brazilian troops to Korea. The Department of State considers the negotiations with Brazil on this matter to be most important not only because that country currently represents our best chance of obtaining additional Latin American troops but because it is believed that active Brazilian participation will make it more difficult for other and more reluctant Latin American states, including Mexico, to postpone making similar contributions.

While there are a number of important questions raised by the negotiations with Brazil, I wish in this letter to direct your attention to the question of reimbursement for the assistance we give to countries sending units to Korea. General Goes Monteiro has been informed, in general terms, that Brazil is expected to agree to reimburse the U.S. for the cost of assistance provided, and that the terms of such reimbursement will be negotiated in the future. I believe it is essential for our two Departments to be in agreement as to the meaning of this stipulation and the procedures to be followed in the negotiations referred to, and for the Brazilians to be informed as soon as possible in order to avoid possible misunderstanding.

Specifically, it is suggested that the Brazilians should be informed: (a) that we expect Brazil to agree in advance, by an exchange of notes, to reimburse the United States for the assistance it receives from the United States; (b) that shortly after a Brazilian contingent enters into active participation in the UN operation, the United States Government will begin to keep the Brazilian Government currently informed of the cost of assistance rendered; (c) that, at that time, Brazil will be requested to indicate whether it is in a position to begin immediately to reimburse the United States for the assistance received.

Should it become apparent, at any stage in the negotiations with Brazil, that they will not make a firm offer of troops for Korea if they must accept an obligation, immediately after the arrival of the Brazilian contingent in Korea, to maintain full dollar reimbursement or some other form of settlement on a current basis, it is recommended that the Brazilians be informed that we are prepared to accept the offer of troops and to defer further negotiations with respect to payment.

[4] For text, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, p. 664.

While this approach differs in some respects from that which has been followed in the negotiations initiated with certain of the governments contributing forces to the Unified Command, it is believed that its acceptance will offer a practicable basis for negotiations with Brazil and other Latin American governments. If it is acceptable to the Department of Defense, I recommend that it be followed with Brazil and the other Latin American governments from which we seek troops for Korea. Similarly, I recommend that if the Government of Colombia indicates that it is unable to maintain full dollar reimbursement or some other form of settlement on a current basis, we agree to defer reimbursement negotiations with Colombia.[5]

Sincerely, JAMES E. WEBB

[5] For additional documentation relating to this question, see pp. 1291 ff.

720.5-MAP/10-2551

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Special Political Problems, Office of Regional American Affairs (Jamison)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] October 29, 1951.

Subject: Mutual Security Program, FY 1952—Latin America.

Participants: Assistant Secretary Miller
General Robert L. Walsh [1] (USAF)
Major General John L. McKee [2] (USA)
Rear Admiral Milton E. Miles [3] (USN)
Lt. Col. Ralph A. Collins (USMC)
Capt. Jacob A. Lark (USN)
Col. Stuart M. Crawford (USA)
Col. Francis Hill (USA)
Col. James D. Alger (OSD)
Lt. Col. Craig Davis (OSD)
Col. Willis F. Lewis (USAF)
Lt. Col. Roderic D. O'Connor (USAF)
Col. Willis M. Smyser (USAF)
Col. John H. Anderson (USA)

[1] Chairman and Air Member, Joint Mexican-United States Defense Commission; and Chairman, United States Delegation to the Inter-American Defense Board.
[2] Army Member, Joint Mexican-United States Defense Commission; Delegate to the Inter-American Defense Board.
[3] Navy Member, Joint Mexican-United States Defense Commission; Delegate to the Inter-American Defense Board.

Col. T. W. Sharkey [4] (USA)
S/ISA—Mr. Bingham [5]
S/ISA—Mr. Schoenfeld
AR—Mr. Jamison

Mr. Miller opened the discussion by saying that it had occurred to him that the most effective utilization of the military grant-aid program funds appropriated by Congress for Latin America might be achieved by allocating the major share of the amount to Brazil. He emphasized that this was not a formal position of the State Department, but that he wished to explore the idea with those planning the program in Defense, since they were in possession of details on which he had not been informed and were, therefore, in a better position to consider the matter. He suggested that in view of the relatively small size of the appropriation, as well as the fact that it has become available so late in the Fiscal Year, there might be merit in concentrating on Brazil, particularly in view of the extensive discussions which had been held with General Goes Monteiro.

General Walsh, pointing out that he was only speaking for the Air Force, indicated that he had an open mind on the matter, and implied that there might be some room for allocation of a greater share of the funds to Brazil. In this connection, he mentioned that consideration was being given to the possible re-establishment of what he referred to as the "South Atlantic Group", in which case there would be considerable chance that we would want to reopen bases in Brazil. In connection with this, it would be reasonable to expect Brazil to perform more air defense missions and, therefore, to have additional units of its air force assisted by us. He added that he felt that there was a strong possibility that we would be unable to obtain from Mexico the agreements necessary to carry out the program, thus leaving funds which it might prove desirable to use in assisting Brazil. Mr. Miller said that General Walsh's comment on Mexico illustrated what he believed would be an important problem in dealing at this stage with a considerable number of the countries, i.e., that we would be unable to obtain the necessary agreements in the time available.

General McKee, speaking for the Army, said that it was also disposed to have an open mind on the subject, but that he did feel that there was considerable danger of incurring the resentment of a number of the countries if all of the funds were allocated to only one or two, and that this had been a consideration in the Army's decision to recommend initiation of negotiations with several countries.

Admiral Miles said that his viewpoint was different from that of his two colleagues in that the Navy would like to get naval cooperation from as many countries as possible. He mentioned Argentina's naval [4] Thomas W. Sharkey.

[5] Jonathan B. Bingham, Assistant Director, Non-European Affairs, Office of the Director, International Security Affairs.

role in the defense of the River Plate and the Straits of Magellan trade routes. He subsequently acknowledged that the naval program did not at present contemplate an allocation to Argentina, except for the possibility of its being included in on-the-spot training, requiring provision of training equipment. Admiral Miles also mentioned that of the ten and one-half million dollars tentatively allocated to the Navy, it was planned that two million would be used for training and that countries not now contemplated in the navy program for defense missions might be included in this training. He mentioned specifically training naval personnel by those countries in the use of certain types of modern naval equipment, which we alone could furnish.

Mr. Miller asked what proportion of the funds it was contemplated to allocate under the present plans to Brazil, and was told that the amount was something over thirteen million, or about ⅓ of the total amount available. He asked what specific tasks Brazil would be expected to perform and was told that on the Army side it was expected that the funds would be utilized to rehabilitate a regimental combat team and three anti-aircraft battalions. Mr. Miller then asked whether, if one of the other countries was unwilling to perform a task contemplated, funds would be available for additional tasks for Brazil. With reference to the inclusion of Argentina, which was referred to repeatedly, it seemed to be the consensus that the likely decision not to approach that country would leave funds available for allocation to additional Brazilian units, and that this might well prove to be the case with regard to Mexico as well.

(During this discussion, it became apparent that the present planning in Defense only goes to the point of determining types of armed force units within countries which can be made more effective with U.S. assistance to perform defense tasks, and that there has not been a determination of specific tasks which any given country will be expected to perform. Presumably, units brought up to standard efficiency will be available for the performance of such tasks as an emergency may call forth. It was also pointed out that all discussions with foreign governments regarding military assistance under the program is confined to end-items of equipment and other services and does not include any discussion in terms of dollars.)

There was no final determination and no statement of the position the State Department will finally take with regard to Defense's proposals for countries with whom negotiations should be initiated, which proposals will soon be sent to State by Secretary Lovett. The Defense representatives indicated, however, that the determination to be contained in the letter from Secretary Lovett had been approved by the JCS and that there might be considerable difficulty in getting it reversed or altered in any significant way. It was agreed, however, that no time should be lost in reaching the necessary decisions, since implementation of the program should proceed as rapidly as possible.

At one point in the discussion, question was raised as to whether equipment found to be necessary for distribution to the Latin American countries will be available, and it was indicated that the problem of obtaining the necessary priorities would be extremely tough to deal with, and that it might prove to be very difficult to obtain the priorities necessary to transfer even the relatively small amount of equipment which $38.15 million now authorized [6] could be used to pay for.

[6] The Mutual Security Act of 1951 (Public Law 165), approved October 10, 1951, authorized $38,150,000 for the purpose of furnishing military grant aid to the other American Republics; for text of the act, see 65 Stat. 373. An appropriation for this amount was included in the Mutual Security Appropriation Act of 1952 (Public Law 249), approved October 31, 1951; for text, see 65 Stat. 731.

720.5-MAP/10-3151

The Acting Secretary of State to the Secretary of Defense (Lovett)

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, November 9, 1951.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have received your letter of October 31, 1951 [1] informing the Department of State that you approve a recommendation of the Joint Chiefs of Staff that programs be initiated, in conformity with Section 401 of the Mutual Security Act of 1951, to furnish military grant-aid in support of forces to be provided by certain Latin American countries which you listed.[2] As you requested, the Department of State has reviewed from the political viewpoint the list of countries recommended by the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The Department of State concurs in seeking the President's approval for the initiation of programs of military grant aid with the countries listed in your letter, but suggests, for reasons set forth below, that Venezuela be added, tentatively, to the list.

With regard to negotiations which may be carried on with these countries, however, this Department would like to make the following further recommendations:

1. In conformity with your suggestion regarding Argentina,[3] negotiations with that country should be delayed until a more appropriate time, and the matter should be kept under constant review. Should the political situation in that country continue to preclude initiation of these negotiations, the Department agrees with your further suggestion that the funds tentatively allocated to that country in this year's program should be reallocated in adequate time to insure that they will not remain unobligated at the end of the fiscal year.

2. Unless there are overriding military considerations to the contrary, negotiations initiated with Ecuador should include the opportunity for the country to prepare units of two Services rather than the one Service now contemplated by Ecuador's inclusion in the first priority Air Force list. It is this Department's view that, because of the tense political situation existing between Peru and Ecuador, an approach to the former involving possible assistance to all three of its Armed Services without a more nearly comparable approach to Ecuador than that indicated, would not only provoke resentment in Ecuador but might adversely affect the possibility of obtaining Ecuador's agreement to afford this Government base rights in the Galapagos Islands, which the Joint Chiefs of Staff have indicated to be a requirement in the event of global war.

[1] Not printed.

[2] These countries were Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Ecuador, Mexico, Peru, and Uruguay.

[3] For additional documentation concerning the inclusion of Argentina in the military grant aid program for Latin America, see pp. 1079 ff.

3. In view of recent indications of Brazil's increased desire to cooperate in hemisphere defense, the Department of State recommends strongly that Brazil be given high priority in such reallocation of funds as may be required as a result of failure of one or more of the other Governments to qualify for inclusion in this year's program. The traditional ties of U.S.–Brazilian friendship and cooperation, as well as the progress made in negotiations recently carried on with General Goes Monteiro, make it highly desirable that the total allocation to Brazil be the maximum feasible.

I understand that Venezuela was not included in the list to receive military grant-aid because of indications at the recent Panama Staff Talks of that country's readiness to pay for equipment to meet its military requirements.[4] While agreeing on the desirability that Venezuela pay its own way militarily, the Department of State believes that we should obtain more concrete evidence that the attitude then displayed represents a firm governmental position. It is therefore recommended that Venezuela be included tentatively in the list submitted to the President, pending verification at the earliest possible time of that Government's views. Because of the importance to our national security of insuring the defense and continued flow of Venezuela's strategic materials, we should be in a position to assist that country in accomplishing this task should it become necessary.

As soon as the President's approval is obtained and I am so informed, this Department will be ready to issue instructions to our Diplomatic Missions in the countries to be approached, with a view to ascertaining whether the Governments of such countries are willing to enter upon negotiations for the conclusion of the necessary agreements.

Sincerely yours, JAMES E. WEBB

[4] For additional documentation concerning the possible inclusion of Venezuela in the military grant aid program for Latin America, see pp. 1623 ff.

Editorial Note

On November 15, 1951, the Council of Delegates of the Inter-American Defense Board approved "The General Military Plan for the Defense of the American Continent", which had been prepared by the Board's Staff, and forwarded it to the respective governments. The plan was formulated in pursuance of the provisions of Resolution III of the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of American States. For text of the resolution, see Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of American States, March 26–April 7, 1951: Report of the Secretary of State (Department of State Publication No. 4928, Washington, 1953), pages 69–70. The text of the plan, filed under Department of State decimal number 720.5/11–1551, was not declassified in time for publication.

720.5/12–1351

The Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Chairman of the United States Delegation to the Inter-American Defense Board (Walsh)

SECRET WASHINGTON, December 13, 1951.

MY DEAR GENERAL WALSH: It seems quite likely that one of the most difficult problems in connection with negotiations for military grant-aid to Latin American countries will be that presented by the adverse reactions of countries not included among the probable recipients. Even more serious than the feeling of resentment which will probably develop will be the sense of omission from significant planning for hemisphere defense. These factors may well have a negative effect upon both political and military cooperation by these countries, and perhaps upon the continued effectiveness of the Inter-American Defense Board.

It has occurred to us in the Department of State that there might be considerable advantage in the U.S. taking the initiative in stating its objectives and intentions in initiating the program of military grant-aid, as clearly and precisely as would be consistent with security, in the most appropriate inter-American forum, which, in this case, would be the Inter-American Defense Board. Such a statement probably need not go much beyond what has been said in connection with presentation of the program to Congress, but might well emphasize such aspects as (1) the relationship of the program to Inter-American Defense Board planning; (2) the obvious necessity of concentrating on certain types of military preparation; and (3) the fact that it can only be regarded as one part of the entire problem of building more adequate hemisphere defense in which every country has responsibility and concern.

It is our view that a statement of this kind, by General Bolté or yourself, before a session of the Council of Delegates of the Inter-American Defense Board in the near future, and before negotiations have been initiated, would constitute an important factor in minimizing the possible adverse results described above. If you and the other members of the U.S. Delegation to the Inter-American Defense Board believe that this suggestion has merit, we in the State Department shall be happy to discuss the matter with you and to assist in any way we can in the preparation of such a statement.[1]

Sincerely yours, EDWARD G. MILLER, JR.

[1] A memorandum of conversation by Mr. Jamison, dated January 3, 1952, involving Assistant Secretary Miller; the Officer in Charge of Brazilian Affairs, Office of South American Affairs (Kidder); Maj. Gen. Walsh; and Col. Sharkey, reads in part as follows:

"It was Defense's view that any consultations either with the 'have' or 'have nots' should be kept at the governmental level along the lines of the communications sent to the field. Mr. Miller said that he accepted General Walsh's judgment as to the undesirability of the IADB approach. He asked however whether this was a matter which he, Mr. Miller, might handle in one of a series of speeches which he expects to make soon. He suggested that he might devote a few paragraphs to this subject in one of these speeches and that the text of the talk might then be sent around to the various Latin American Embassies here in Washington. There was general agreement that this would be a sound approach, and Mr. Miller said that he would see to it that the text of any such statement was checked with General Walsh and other Defense officials when it had been prepared." (710.5/1–352)

720.5–MSP/12–1451: Circular telegram

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Offices in the American Republics [1]

SECRET WASHINGTON, December 14, 1951—8:26 p. m.

535. Re State–Defense circ agam, Nov 6, 1951, 2:05 p. m.[2] Re procedures carry out grant mil assistance Program under Mutual Security Act of 1951. President has found that country to which you are accredited, along with certain other Amer Republics, may be furnished mil assistance under section 401 Mutual Security Act of 1951 in accordance with Defense plans establishing a need for its participation in Missions important to defense Western Hemisphere. You are requested inquire FonMin whether his Govt desires enter into dipl-mil conversations aimed at reaching bilateral mil assistance agreement required by Act, as well as separate mil plan relative to prep unit or units its armed forces for hemisphere defense missions and to provision grant aid by US to assist in such prep. Plans under which Presidential authorization has been given, which constitute basis for initiation of program, contemplate US assistance in prep of unit or units all three armed services countries being approached, except Cuba, where air force alone involved, and Ecuador and Mexico, where naval units not rpt not involved.

[1] Drafted by Mr. Jamison and Mr. Schoenfeld; cleared by the Offices of South American Affairs and Middle American Affairs, the Office of the Assistant Legal Adviser for Economic Affairs, the Office of the Director, International Security Affairs, and the Department of Defense.

[2] Not printed (720.5–MAP/11–651).

You shld explain to FonMin if his Govt approves initiation these conversations, you will be assisted in them by reps Dept Defense, who will also be auth carry on necessary supplementary negots with mil reps his Govt, and these negotiators are prep arrive in that country promptly, shld his Govt approve. Mil negot teams include one officer Gen or flag rank, assisted by 2 or 3 other officers. Entirely your discretion, you may wish confirm your inquiry by aide-mémoire with view eliciting favorable written response.

Fol for your background info re above approach:

1. Copies of draft bilateral agreement, dated Nov 20, 1951,[3] of type contemplated for negot with LA countries, together with explanatory comments on Agreement in gen and each of its provisions have been sent by air pouch. This draft corresponds to those negotiated with countries now receiving US grant mil assistance, except for certain adaptations required either because of nature LA program or recent changes in pertinent Acts US Congress. While you shld refrain from presentation this draft until after initiation detailed negots, you may wish refer in gen to its provisions, emphasizing their similarity those negotiated in detail with other Govts receiving US grant aid. You will note final Art draft stipulates it must be registered with UNSYG and will be, therefore, a public doc. Mil plan, however, will be classified Secret and treated accordingly.

2. Emb will have noted that program involves prep units armed forces of countries receiving grant aid for possible use, in event of war or grave emergency in which Rio Treaty wld be applicable, for missions important to defense Western Hemisphere which may involve utilization of forces outside natl terr but within hemisphere. Shld questions as to nature these missions and the circumstances under which they wld be performed be raised, you shld indicate our hope and belief that any problem which may arise this connection can be resolved satis during detailed negots.

Strictly for your own info, precise nature of mutual undertakings, including those for utilization forces, will be spelled out in bilateral mil plans as finally negotiated. These plans will be tied closely to provisions of Rio Treaty. Fulfillment of undertakings will in gen depend upon subsequent agreement when specific situation calling for joint action arises. Therefore, unless it appears that Govt is clearly unwilling even consider possibility preparing units for hemisphere defense missions which may involve utilization (subj to that Govts agreement at that time) forces outside natl terr, related questions shld not constitute obstacle to initiation of negots.

3. It is US view that finally negotiated bilateral mil plan shld be in consonance with Inter-American Defense Board Common Defense Scheme and the gen mil plan. Latter was recently approved by Council of Delgs of IADB for submission to Govts. Again strictly FYI, for those Govts which have not yet approved Common Defense Scheme, substantive approval of this doc or gen mil plan will be a prerequisite to our making available grant mil assistance. Of countries now being approached, Braz, Mexico and Urug have not as yet indicated approval.

[3] An annotated draft of a model Military Assistance Bilateral Agreement is attached to a memorandum by Mr. Jamison to Mr. Miller, dated November 23, 1951, not printed (720.5–MAP/11–2351).

Shld question be raised re publicity re negots, you may say that, while every reasonable effort will be made to conform to desires of FonMins Govt in this respect, and while we wish avoid heavy publicity until actual results can be reported, it will probably prove necessary and desirable that there be brief gen announcement in Wash, which can be timed to coincide with local release, when the mil negotiating team arrives in that country. This wld be confined to brief statement that conversations re mil matters related to US Mutual Security Program and to defense Western Hemisphere being carried on. You shld emphasize importance maintenance secrecy info as to specific Govts being approached until that time.

Report by tel results your approach including, if response favorable, date on which FonMin Govt desires conversations begin.

Request you pass info in this message to US service attachés and Chiefs US service missions.

FYI only this tel being sent to Mexico City, Habana, Bogota, Rio, Lima, Quito, Santiago, Montevideo.

ACHESON

720.5–MSP/12–1751

The Acting Secretary of Defense (Foster) to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, December 17, 1951.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I am forwarding to you for your information a copy of my letter to the President dated 5 December 1951 regarding the Title IV Mutual Security Program. In this letter I have recommended that the President make a finding to the effect that United States defense plans establish a need for the participation in missions important to the defense of the Western Hemisphere of certain designated Latin American countries. I further recommended that because of this requirement, the President find that military assistance may be furnished these countries in accordance with the provisions of Section 401 of the Mutual Security Act of 1951. This letter was coordinated with your Department.

You will note that the list of countries and the forces each is to be requested to make available reflects the recommendation regarding Ecuador made by you in your letter to me dated 9 November 1951.[1]

[1] Ante, p. 1027.

Furthermore in addition to the tabulated countries and their force contributions, I have recommended to the President that Venezuela be included tentatively in the list of countries eligible to receive military grant aid. This action again reflects another of the recommendations contained in your letter referred to above. In the case of this latter country, I consider that every effort should be made to secure the full participation of Venezuela in the Mutual Security Program by means of reimbursable aid; however, if in the course of future conversations or negotiations it appears from a political point of view that Venezuela's omission from the list of countries to receive military grant aid may threaten the defense and continued flow of Venezuela's strategic materials, this consideration would be overriding. In such an event, the eligibility of Venezuela to receive grant aid will have been established in the finding by the President.

With further reference to your letter of 9 November 1951, I agree that Brazil should be granted a high priority if any reallocation of funds which may be required as a result of failure of one or more of the other governments to qualify for inclusion in this year's program. However, the amount of military grant aid to be given to Brazil should be in consonance with Brazil's willingness to accept hemisphere defense tasks, and also her ability to absorb efficiently and utilize effectively such materiel assistance. Further any reallocation of funds among the Latin American countries must be effected so as to insure the balanced progress of the total program.

On notification of the President's action with reference to the recommended findings, I understand that you are prepared to issue the necessary instructions to the diplomatic missions in the countries to be approached with a view to ascertaining whether the governments of these countries are willing to enter upon negotiations for the conclusions of the required agreements.

Sincerely yours, WILLIAM C. FOSTER

[Enclosure]

The Secretary of Defense (Lovett) to the President

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, December 5, 1951.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Section 401 of the Mutual Security Act of 1951 authorized the appropriation of $38,150,000 for the purpose of furnishing grant military assistance to the other American Republics. The Congress, in the Mutual Security Appropriation Act, 1952, made such an appropriation. However, the furnishing of such assistance is contingent upon compliance with the relevant general provisions of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, and upon several special provisions of the Mutual Security Act of 1951. Among the latter is this requirement: "That such assistance may be furnished only in accordance with defense plans which are found by the President to require the recipient country to participate in missions important to the defense of the Western Hemisphere."

The Department of Defense has for a number of years been giving careful study to the roles which the various Latin American countries might play in support of Western Hemisphere defense. This study has resulted in the conclusion that in addition to maintaining the minimum armed forces required to preserve internal security (including the performance of such tasks as protection against enemy clandestine operations or raids; protection of sources, and of installations required in the production or distribution, of strategic materials; safeguarding vital lines of communication; and insuring the local security of bases and other military installations), selected Latin American countries could, provided that they were furnished adequate equipment and training, supply forces capable of executing certain specific and essential common defense missions within this hemisphere. These missions, if not performed by the selected countries, would necessitate the diversion of substantial United States forces to the area in time of war. The specific missions are based on a current United States war plan, but the general concept of this plan is in consonance with the Common Defense Scheme which was prepared multilaterally by the Inter-American Defense Board and will also be reflected in the defense plan currently being developed by the Board. Ten Latin American governments and the United States have approved the Common Defense Scheme and formal approval of this document, or of the defense plan, by each of the proposed countries will be a prerequisite to receipt of military grant aid under this Program.

In accordance with the war plan, each of the Latin American countries concerned will be asked to provide specific forces to perform hemisphere defense missions. These forces will generally be employed extra-territorially and the details regarding the units to be provided by each country will be contained in the military understandings which, together with the bilateral agreements required by the Mutual Security Act of 1951, will be negotiated with each country. It is considered highly desirable from a military standpoint that the several Latin American governments indicated in Tab (A), provided they can be assisted by adequate military grant aid, make forces of the general types and sizes shown available for the performance of hemisphere defense missions in accordance with the war plan.

In advance of negotiations, it is of course not possible to know within any accuracy the extent to which individual governments are prepared to agree to provide specific forces of the types indicated to perform hemisphere defense missions. Consequently, the details with respect to the precise units which would be furnished by each country will need to be negotiated with each government and incorporated in the military understanding.

The Department of Defense has therefore recommended that the several governments indicated in Tab (A) be approached and that, upon agreement between the United States and the Latin American nations concerned, programs be initiated to supply grant military assistance for the purpose of supporting the forces to be provided by each. The Department of Defense has further recommended that in the event that satisfactory agreements cannot be concluded with one of the nations, the following course of action be followed:

1. In the case of army forces, one of the other countries shown on the list would be asked to provide the additional forces required. The decision as to which nation to substitute would depend on the type of forces to be furnished.
2. In the case of navy forces, one of the other nations listed would be asked to supply the deficiency.
3. In the case of air forces, the following countries, in the order of priority indicated, would be approached: (a) Argentina; (b) Dominican Republic; and (c) Bolivia.

In requesting the concurrence of the Secretary of State from a political standpoint in the foregoing list of proposed recipient nations, I pointed out that the decision to include Argentina in the Mutual Security Program was made only after an extensive study and was based primarily on military considerations. I further indicated that in view of the current political situation in Argentina, the Secretary of State might wish to delay negotiations with that country until a more appropriate time.

The Secretary of State has concurred in the foregoing proposals with respect to the countries to be approached subject, however, to a specific recommendation with regard to including Venezuela as a recipient of grant aid.

Venezuela was not included in the original list because, in the course of military staff conversations earlier this year, Venezuelan military authorities stated that the Venezuelan government would purchase any of the equipment which might be required for its defense forces. The Secretary of State has recommended that Venezuela be included tentatively in the list of countries proposed as recipients of grant aid pending verification of the ability and willingness of the Venezuelan government to pay its own way in procuring the equipment required by those forces which it should support in order to carry out vital hemisphere defense missions. In order to secure the continued flow of strategic materials to the United States and in view of the possibility that political considerations may become overriding as a result of future conversations, I concur in the recommendation of the Secretary of State to include Venezuela tentatively in the list of countries eligible to receive military grant aid.

The Secretary of State in addition to making the above recommendation, agreed that the political situation in Argentina was currently of such a nature that negotiations with that country on this subject should be delayed until a more appropriate time.

In view of the importance of proceeding to implement the aforementioned plans and our desire to initiate diplomatic-military negotiations with the proposed recipient governments at the earliest practicable date, it is recommended that you now make a finding to the effect that United States defense plans establish a need for the participation in missions important to the defense of the Western Hemisphere of the proposed recipient countries indicated in Tab (A), with the addition of Venezuela tentatively. It is further recommended that you find that, because of the above, military assistance may be furnished these countries in accordance with the provisions of Section 401 of the Mutual Security Act of 1951.

The Department of State concurs in this recommendation, and I am transmitting this letter through the Director for Mutual Security [2] so that he may indicate his concurrence or comments. In the event that you make the finding recommended, it is proposed immediately to approach the several countries indicated (with the exception, for the reasons hereinabove set forth, of Argentina and possibly Venezuela) with a view to initiating negotiations.

With great respect, I am

Faithfully yours, ROBERT A. LOVETT

[2] W. Averell Harriman assumed the office of Director for Mutual Security on October 31, 1951.

[Tab A]

The Department of Defense list of countries and the forces which each is expected to contribute (with the support of military grant aid) is indicated below:

Country	Army	Navy	Air Force
Argentina	2 AAA Gun Bns.
Brazil	1 RCT w/Sv Spt. 1 AAA Gun Bn.	2 Light Cruisers 5 Destroyers 8 Patrol Craft 5 Mine Craft 2 Rcn. Sqdns. (Air)	3 Fighter Sqdns. 4 Light Bomb. Sqdns.
Chile	1 Rcn. Bn.	2 Light Cruisers 13 Patrol Craft	1 Fighter Sqdn. 2 Light Bomb. Sqdns.
Colombia	1 AAA AW Bn.	4 Patrol Craft	1 Fighter Sqdn. 1 Light Bomb. Sqdn.
Cuba			1 Transport Sqdn. 1 Light Bomb. Sqdn.
Ecuador	1 AAA AW Bn.		1 Fighter Sqdn.
Mexico	1 AAA Gun Bn.		1 Fighter Sqdn. 1 Light Bomb. Sqdn.
Peru	1 AAA AW Bn.	6 Patrol Craft	2 Fighter Sqdns. 1 Light Bomb. Sqdn.
Uruguay	1 AAA AW Bn.	2 Patrol Craft 1 Rcn. Sqdn. (Air)	1 Fighter Sqdn. 1 Light Bomb. Sqdn.
			Air Force Alternate countries: (a) Argentina (b) Dominican Republic [3] (c) Bolivia

[3] For documentation pertaining to the effort of the Department of State to have the Department of Defense upgrade the priority assigned to the Dominican Republic vis-a-vis the military grant aid program for Latin America, see pp. 1367 ff.

ECONOMIC AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES TOWARD THE AMERICAN REPUBLICS AS A GROUP [1]

S/ISA Files, Lot 52–26 [2]

Memorandum by Mr. H. F. Arthur Schoenfeld of the Office of the Director of International Security Affairs [3] to Mr. William H. Bray, Jr., of That Office

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] February 21, 1951.

[Subject:] TF II D–12, January 31, 1951 [4]—Justification of Point IV Program in the Other American Republics.

You have asked that the FY 52 Point Four Program for Latin America proposed in TF II D–12, dated January 31, 1951, be reviewed in the light of United States security interests.

The proposed program is limited for the present to technical assistance under the Act for International Development.[5] It contemplates

[1] Continued from Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 672 ff.

[2] Files of the Office of the Director, International Security Affairs, Department of State, containing material for the years 1949–1951. This lot, and related lots 52–19, 52–24, 52–40, and 52–51, are part of Federal Records Center Accession 62 A 613. Lot 52–26 contains basic subject files on military assistance program development; records of committees and task forces concerned with military and economic assistance programs are in Lot 52–51. For additional information, see the list of sources at the beginning of this volume.

[3] The position of Director, International Security Affairs was established in the Department of State effective January 8, 1951; Thomas D. Cabot assumed the position on February 2. In that capacity, Mr. Cabot also chaired the International Security Affairs Committee (ISAC), an interdepartmental committee comprised of representatives from the Departments of State, Defense, Treasury, and the Economic Cooperation Administration (ECA). The committee was charged with responsibility to conduct a continuing review and coordinaton of policy and programs relating to international security affairs and mutual defense assistance matters. For additional information, see the editorial note in vol. I, p. 267, and the press release, dated January 4, 1951, printed in the Department of State Bulletin, January 22, 1951, pp. 155–156.

[4] Reference is to a paper prepared in the Department of State by Task Force II of the Foreign Aid Steering Group (FASG); a copy is printed as Annex A, below.

The Foreign Aid Steering Group, established in late 1950, was an interagency group comprised of representatives from the Departments of State, Defense, and Treasury, the Economic Cooperation Administration, the Office of the Special Assistant to the President W. Averell Harriman, and the Bureau of the Budget. Representatives from other agencies sometimes attended the group's meetings, which were held in the Department of State. The FASG was charged with the responsibility for developing a unified foreign assistance program. For further documentation, see vol. I, pp. 266 ff.

[5] The Act for International Development was Title IV of the Foreign Economic Assistance Act of 1950 (Public Law 535), approved June 5, 1950; for text, see 64 Stat. 198.

an increase in expenditures over those of FY 51 which are around $11 million. It recommends at present that approximately $44 million be employed for bilateral technical cooperation projects in the other American Republics in FY 52 and $2 million as the U.S. contribution to the technical assistance program being undertaken by the Organization of American States.

The composition of the proposed bilateral technical assistance program in Latin America is as follows:

	Cost to US (thousands of dollars)
1. Joint Commissions and Economic Surveys	703
2. Agriculture	26,812
3. Education	5,157
4. Health	7,445
5. Industry and Labor	528
6. Transportation and Communications	1,314
7. Mineral Resources	631
8. Water Resources	547
9. Government Administration and Technical Services	360
10. Other	130
Total	$43,627

The justification for this Program stems from the fundamental assumption that ". . . this [western] [6] hemisphere, backed up by The Rio Treaty,[7] represents the inner citadel of our defenses". The corollaries of this assumption, as stated in the document under consideration, involve the closest political, economic and military support by Latin America for the world policy of the United States.[8] Within these assumptions, the proposed technical assistance program for Latin America has the double objective to: (1) increase production for defense purposes by expanding, on an emergency basis, technical aid programs so that they can effectively assist the Latin American Governments in solving problems, especially in health and supply, that will result from our expanding raw materials requirements, and (2) assist in overcoming the basic Latin American weaknesses which contribute to insecurity.

The justification points out that the proposed program takes into account the "reluctance of Latin American Governments to go in for defense production programs except in the concept of an economic [6] Omission and brackets in the source text.

[7] Reference is to the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (Rio Treaty), opened for signature at Rio de Janeiro, September 2, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, December 3, 1948; for text, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 1838, or 62 Stat. (pt. 2) 1681.

[8] For documentation relating to United States national security policy within a global context and the development of the military assistance program in 1951, see vol. I, pp. 1 ff.; for documentation concerning United States policy with respect to hemisphere defense and related matters, see pp. 985 ff.

program which gives consideration to their essential requirements as well as the adverse effect on their economies of the eventual termination of specific productive programs".

As you have indicated, a statement of the relative strategic importance of any country, or area, to the United States rests upon certain hypotheses regarding the nature and direction of U.S. actions in relation to those of the potential enemy. These hypotheses, against which the fundamental assumption and the corollaries of the foregoing Program Justification must be compared are contained in NSC 56/2,[9] and in the Hemisphere Defense Scheme (approved by the U.S. Government) of the IADB, dated October 27, 1950.[10]

The fundamental assumption, cited above, in the justification for the Point Four Program for Latin America may be considered to be implicit in the first conclusion of NSC 56/2, which states that "In global war, the security of the western hemisphere and U.S. access to its resources and manpower would be essential to the transoceanic projection of major U.S. offensive power".

The corollaries which the justification under consideration draws from this assumption are consistent with the basic U.S. military objectives in Latin America. These objectives, as stated in NSC 56/2, are to see to it that the Latin American countries can maintain their internal security; defend themselves against isolated attacks or raids; protect their sources of strategic materials; maintain lines of communication and military bases; and that certain countries, beyond the foregoing roles, should be capable of performing additional tasks as appropriate.

Section V A 1 of the Estimate of the Situation of the Hemisphere Defense Scheme cited above, states that the political, social and economic methods to counteract the probable aggressor are:

"a. Demonstration of the effectiveness and of the virtues of our democratic system through the development of their [The American Republics] [11] basic institutions.

b. Development of adequate educational systems to maintain democratic faiths among our peoples.

c. Efforts to raise the economic and social level of the American peoples to a point consistent with principles proclaimed in the Atlantic Charter."

---

[9] Reference is to the National Security Council (NSC) document numbered NSC 56/2, adopted at the 57th meeting of the National Security Council, May 18, 1950, and approved by the President on May 19; for text, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, p. 628.

[10] Reference is to the Inter-American Common Defense Scheme, approved by the Inter-American Defense Board (IADB) on October 27, 1950, and by the Department of State on January 15, 1951; for information, see Secretary Marshall's letter to Secretary Acheson, December 16, 1950, ibid., p. 679.

[11] Brackets in the source text.

Section V B of the Estimate states, inter alia, as the requirements for the defense of the continent:

"a. a standard of living to assure true well being for all citizens.
b. coordinated industrial development.
c. adequate public information systems."

In the light of the foregoing analysis, S/ISA should express the belief that the basic assumption and the argument in TF II D–12 are consistent with the major policy statements on United States security interests in Latin America, and accordingly, that it is in the interests of United States security to seek legislative authorization and appropriation to furnish Point Four assistance to Latin America in FY 52 as proposed in TF II D–12.

[Annex A]

Paper Prepared in the Department of State

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] January 31, 1951.
TF II D–12

JUSTIFICATION FOR THE POINT FOUR PROGRAM IN THE OTHER AMERICAN REPUBLICS—FY 1952

A. Rationale of the Point IV Program.

Whether or not the U.S. will be able to hold outer defenses along far distant fronts in other parts of the world, the security of the U.S. depends ultimately on the collective security of the Western Hemisphere. U.S. security is inseparable from hemisphere security. Behind the present outer defenses of the United Nations and the North Atlantic Treaty [12] this hemisphere, backed up by the Rio treaty, represents the inner citadel of our defenses.

The continued support of Latin America for the policy of the United States in the world is one of the elements on which our national security depends. The Latin Americans represent over half of the votes that support us in the United Nations. In case of another world war we would depend on them for the local defense of the hemisphere and for such protection of vital installations and communications as would release United States manpower for other activities. Moreover, it is becoming evident that in another world war much may depend on the degree to which we have on our side actual military manpower recruited from the 150,000,000 people of Latin America. Finally, the economic effort to build the strength of the free world today depends on [12] For text of the treaty, signed at Washington, April 4, 1949, and entered into force for the United States, August 24, 1949, see TIAS No. 1964, or 63 Stat. (pt. 2) 2241. Documentation on the negotiation of the treaty is printed in Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. IV, pp. 1 ff.

the contribution of raw materials from Latin America; in the event of a deepening of the present emergency and the accompanying mobilization, and especially in the event of total war, our dependence on the economic contributions of Latin America would be vital.

Today we can and do count on the support of Latin America. There are, however, historic forces at work which make it evident that we cannot take that support for granted. We must actively develop our Latin American policy in order to counter these adverse forces and to maintain the cooperation on which we depend.

Nationalism that regards international cooperation as contrary to the national interests is a force working against us today. An example of this is in Argentina, where the domestic strength of nationalism is such that the Government must appease it by advocating the "Third Position".[13]

Latin American governments today must, to an extent never hitherto known, reflect in their foreign policy the drifts and prejudices of public opinion at home. Unless the people themselves support inter-American cooperation positively, the governments will be increasingly unable to do so.

Although our cooperation with Latin America has a historic background that is lacking in our more recent cooperation with countries in Europe and Asia, our cooperation in Europe and Asia has involved programs of grant assistance far beyond anything we have given to Latin America, where our assistance has been confined essentially to loans, for which the Latin Americans pay full value, and to jointly financed technical cooperation. Aside from economic assistance, the fact is that today our legislation authorizes us to give grant military assistance to almost all of the free world except Latin America, which must pay for our military equipment at high rates. While there are reasons bearing on the present emergency for this situation, the psychological effect on the Latin Americans has been bitter and constitutes a major problem of present United States policy in Latin America.

Because of the insignificant part played in our Latin American relations by the kinds of grant assistance that loom so large in our cooperation with many countries of Europe and Asia, the role of Point IV technical assistance is relatively much more important in Latin America. Not only does the Point IV program occupy an essential and dominant position in the developing picture of our Latin American relations, it also is the one type of program that goes directly to the problem of enlisting the good will of the masses of people in Latin America, persuading them that we are on the side of their aspirations. The people in Latin America today are rebelling in their own minds against the misery that has been their lot for ages past. They are no longer willing to accept it. They have everywhere been subjected to a barrage of communist propaganda that offers communism as the only means of their redemption. They have been told that to the capitalist United States they are only a source to be exploited as long as they serve the selfish purposes of the United States, and they have had past history interpreted to them in this sense. The stark fact is that "revolution" is a respectable word today among most of the peoples of Latin America. An intelligent effort is being made to insure that "communism" itself is associated by many of them with a vision of salvation.

[13] For documentation on this subject, see pp. 1079 ff.

It must be recognized in evaluating the potential of hemisphere security that there are basic weaknesses in Latin America today which make for political instability. These lie in economic and social insecurity, the weaknesses effectively exploited by communists and other agitators. The population of Latin America is equivalent to our own, but the lot of the masses is on the whole one of poverty, ignorance and sickness. Nevertheless, the ability of the Latin Americans to maintain good order within their jurisdictions, to exclude enemy elements, and to support themselves in essential respects are vital for our own survival. And should political and economic instability result in the outbreak of conflicts between Latin American states such as occurred up to a dozen years ago, this might render the inter-American system unworkable, thus constituting a dangerous threat to hemisphere security. The role of Latin America in the present "war for men's minds" is critical. The success of Latin American states in making freedom work effectively will have a significant moral value throughout the world as it will demonstrate that the inter-American system is viable within the framework of democracy.

In addition to the absolute security aspects of our relations with Latin America the availability of certain raw materials from Latin America is an essential element today in the economic strength of the free world coalition. The strategic raw materials whose flow from Latin America must be increased immediately include:

antimony asbestos bauxite beryl cadmium cobalt copper diamonds, industrial lead* manganese quartz crystal sulphur tin tungsten zinc cacao bean fats and oils hard fibers hides and skins hog bristles kenaf molasses rubber* softwoods wool

*Increased Latin American production may be required. [Footnote in the source text.]

In order to make our inner citadel secure and to maximize supplies for the free world coalition it is imperative to increase Latin American productive capacity. With respect to the financing of new capacity it is expected that increased dollar earnings of Latin American plus sizeable investments of private and public loan capital will improve the ability of the area to finance the required additional economic plant, including production of strategic raw materials. Consequently, the proposed program of economic assistance for Latin America does not contemplate the use of grant aid to finance the capital requirements of development projects but instead is limited to technical assistance in which a major accomplishment will be the development of the kind of plans and the creation of economic environments which will attract both domestic and foreign investment in the process of sound economic development.

In the interest of hemisphere security, then, as well as to increase the availability of strategic materials the proposed Point IV program for Fiscal 1952 has the double objective to (1) increase production for defense purposes by expanding, on an emergency basis, technical aid programs so that they can effectively assist the Latin American Governments in solving problems, especially in health and food supply, that will result from our expanding raw materials program, and (2) assist in overcoming the basic Latin American weaknesses which contribute to insecurity. Technical assistance will, therefore, be directed toward exploration to prove up additional mineral reserves, to improve transportation, to develop power resources, to increase food production, to train teachers to train workers, to improve sanitation and initiate elementary measures to eliminate the sources of prevalent fevers and infections especially in the mining camps and jungle areas where an influx of population will inevitably result from our raw materials program.

Thus it would be unthinkable to drop existing programs which attack the basic Latin American weaknesses. On the contrary, there should be an expansion of the agricultural, health and sanitation, as well as educational programs which were started by reason of wartime necessities during World War II. At that time, the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs was provided with $153 million for the FY 1942–46,[14] to carry on a technical assistance and information program supplementary to the raw materials programs of such agencies as the Rubber Development Corporation, the Metal Reserve Corporation and the Foreign Economic Administration. The programs which the Coordinator's office initiated by reason of wartime necessity were continued on a very modest scale after the war and today they constitute a sound foundation on which the required expansion may be projected efficiently and without waste.

[14] For background information on this subject, see History of the Office of the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs (Washington, 1947).

It has been these relatively modest programs that have made the most effective attack on the basic Latin American weaknesses; and that have engendered effective U.S.–Latin American cooperation which has reached the masses and created good will by reason of direct personal benefit which they have provided. They have driven home a convincing demonstration of democracy at work wherever they have operated and have measurably raised the production of the working forces. The results obtained from our experience, therefore, demonstrate that, through the expansion of these programs, it will be possible to increase the production of staple foods (e.g. corn, beans, potatoes, rice, meat) and other essential materials which will minimize the dependence of Latin American countries on imports. Although technical assistance in the field of agricultural development has increased food production where programs were in operation, these programs were continued on so limited a scale that population growth continues to outpace the production increases. Today, according to FAO, even if the 1952–53 production targets are met, the volume of crop production would be only 95 percent of the per capita production before 1942 and, moreover, in the majority of the countries the nutritive value of the supplies would remain inadequate. Now, because of the emergency situation we must assist the Latin American governments to expand their food supply not only sufficiently to meet the normal requirements of their own increased population but also the special demands which will be engendered by the large scale of the metal, fibers, rubber and other raw material production. The basic goal of this program, therefore, will be to increase the production to a level adequate to assist in meeting the requirements of expanding defense production.

Because of deficient production of certain essential foods it is necessary in many countries, even during eras of peacetime world trading, to depend upon foreign sources to fill the gap in order to satisfy low consumption levels. In the case of emergency such supplies would have to be made available mainly by this country. Even if this would not constitute an excessive strain on the agriculture of this country, Canada and Argentina, it should be borne in mind that under emergency conditions maximum savings should be made in transportation and the corollary demands on manpower and fuel arising therefrom. Other essential imports which are susceptible to increased local production and which impose a burden upon shipping include fuels, heavy chemicals and pharmaceuticals.

The proposed program also takes into account the reluctance of Latin American Governments to go in for defense production programs except in the context of an economic program which gives consideration to their essential requirements as well as the adverse effects on their economies of the eventual termination of specific production programs. Concentration of our efforts upon minerals, transportation, power, food production, training workers and upon elementary health and sanitation programs will not only contribute to defense production, but in the longer run also lead to better levels of living and economic security for the people of Latin America. Without such technical assistance the Latin Americans by their own efforts will continue to make some progress. Owing to the serious lack of technical skills, however, so little progress will not constitute a significant contribution in the present situation to either defense production or hemisphere security. This could be our Achilles' heel in the hour of crisis.

[Here follows further discussion of other aspects of the proposed Point IV program for Latin America.]

S/ISA Files, Lot 52–51

Paper Prepared in the Department of State [1]

SECRET

Economic and Technical Cooperation Program in the Other American Republics

I. General Summary

A sound cooperative economic and technical assistance program for Latin America is necessary to reduce the deficiencies in the Latin American economy that make for economic, political, and social instability. As has been stated above, the essence of that deficiency is the lot of the Latin American masses, which by and large, is one of poverty, ignorance, and sickness. Although there are obvious differences among the twenty Republics, those differences are of degree rather than of kind with respect to the basic problems. All of the countries have an inadequate, and often-times, declining, rate of agricultural production resulting from unscientific and exploitative land-use methods. The productive capacity of the populations of all the countries is undermined by the prevalence of disease, resulting from malnutrition, the absence of environmental sanitation and the inadequacies of the preventive measures now being employed. The incipient industrial development in all of the countries is handicapped by inefficient organization and deficient training of the labor force. In all of the countries, the funds available for governmental services are inadequate in relation to the urgent needs. This inadequacy is accentuated by the inefficiency with which those funds are used. In most of the countries, there is weak administrative organization and inadequate technical competence in the administration of the social services which the various governments are now beginning to provide for their people.

[1] Drafted by Task Force II of the Foreign Aid Steering Group, and incorporated as Tab 2 of a document designated TF II D–17/5a, dated March 7, 1951, prepared for presentation to the Bureau of the Budget as part of the FY 1952 foreign aid program.

Notwithstanding the great handicaps that history and geography have imposed, the people and the governments of the Republics of Latin America are today on the march. Throughout the area the people are demanding, and the governments are gradually providing, an increasingly firm foundation for the general economic development that alone will provide a higher standard of living. Everywhere the governments are assuming more leadership in projecting national programs for the improvement of the lot of their people. The governments and the private citizens of the Latin American countries are investing greater funds than ever before in agriculture, transportation, power, and industrial facilities. Throughout the area the governments are increasing their annual budgets for education, health, social security, public works, agricultural development and other social services to a degree that would have been inconceivable even ten years ago.

In virtually every country of Latin America, the increased funds devoted to national programs of social betterment have not provided a corresponding increase in the standard of service. A major reason for this is to be found in the fact that adequate technical and administrative skills and the structure of administrative organization that would permit effective utilization of available resources, are lacking in those countries.

Increasingly, as the nature of the problem becomes understood by them, the governments of Latin America are turning to the United States for the minimum of economic assistance and technical "know-how", which can make their own great effort productive. For that reason, in this area of vital interest to the United States, extraordinary results can be achieved with a program of technical cooperation, supplemented by a relatively small expenditure of funds to enable the United States technicians to provide actual demonstrations of effective action programs related to specific problems.

The recognition by the Latin American Republics of the vital relationship that a program of technical assistance can have to their own national programs of economic and social development, is founded on the extremely rich experience of the technical assistance program which the United States initiated during World War II.[2] At that time, because of wartime necessity, including our need for the active support of the Latin American countries against the Axis, the technical assistance program was projected on a comparatively extensive scale. A great part of that program was related to the problems involving the allied military forces stationed in the hemisphere and other large-scale raw materials acquisition programs of the United States. Notwithstanding the handicaps under which these programs were initiated, including the dislocation of shipping and the diversion of civilian goods normally going to Latin America, they achieved real success. During the subsequent period of post-war retrenchment the cooperative programs were reduced and in some countries discontinued.

[2] Apparent reference to the Office of the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, and the program of its subsidiary, the Institute of Inter-American Affairs (IIAA). For information on the IIAA, see footnote 11, p. 1059.

The post-war reduction in the scope of the program has been even greater than appears from the limitation of the funds employed because of the inflationary spiral that has characterized the Latin American economies since the war. In fact the funds available for the technical cooperation programs of the U.S. since the war period have been decreasing at a time when great inflationary pressures have been operating throughout Latin America. For this reason, the rate of operation has declined even more than the reduction in expenditures would indicate. The costs of all the elements that enter the programs, including salaries and wages, materials, supplies, and equipment, have in most instances more than doubled. In short, the 11 million dollar program of 1951 represents no more than a 5 or 6 million dollar program in 1945, although at that time we were spending several times that amount.

The programs that have been developed with this limited budget have been extraordinarily effective as demonstrative activities. However, the nature of the problem of maintaining Latin America as an area of democratic strength during the years immediately ahead, and of developing the region as an even more important source of materials for the free world, requires that we assist the Latin American countries to help themselves at a substantially increased tempo. The existing basic programs do not extend to many countries in which the needs are very large; in countries where the programs have been in operation, their benefits and impact on the economies should be broadened.

The program during the last eight years has demonstrated the manner in which our technical "know-how" can supplement and make effective the efforts of the Latin American nations in their own behalf. In addition, our experience has provided us with the specialized knowledge and understanding of sound methods of initiating and operating a technical cooperation program. The description of the proposed program, which is largely an extension of existing programs, must be presented against a description of what those successful methods are.

There are in general three major ways in which the United States has made available to the Latin American Republics its resources of technical knowledge and skill. One has been advice by technical experts who surveyed a particular problem and recommended a course of action to be carried out by the other government. For some types of problems, such as those of public administration and fiscal policy, the advisory approach may be the simplest and most effective. Another has been for United States technicians in the other country to assume full responsibility for the execution of the work programs along lines that have been agreed upon with the host government in advance. Such an approach has been feasible in the procurement of strategic materials. A third method is to have the host government create a cooperative agency, usually known as a "Servicio" (or cooperative service) within an appropriate Ministry with authority to carry out a technical program in a given field. This Servicio is then staffed with nationals of the host country and a limited number of United States technicians; its activities are jointly planned and executed; and its operations are financed with funds contributed by both governments.

In practice, what has been referred to as a "Servicio" may be called by some other name. But the cooperative agencies through which the agriculture, health, and education programs have been carried on have significant characteristics in common. In each case the Servicio is in effect a bureau within the appropriate Ministry. The United States representative known as the Chief of the Field Party is nearly always also the Director of the Servicio and is thus, at least technically, an officer of the host government as well as a representative of the United States. The relationship between the Minister and the Chief of the Field Party in handling Servicio operations is that of co-equals, since the program agreement provides that there must be agreement between the Chief of the Party and the Minister in the development of basic policies and procedures, the planning and operation of specific projects, and the hiring of key Servicio personnel.

The United States makes two distinct types of financial contributions to programs using the Servicio plan. One is the direct contribution to project funds which is deposited to the credit of the Servicio along with the contribution of the host government which may often considerably exceed the U.S. portion. The other U.S. contribution is the payment of the salaries and expenses of the field party.

The use of the Servicio makes for a fuller sense of mutual responsibility; the control which the United States technicians exercise over Servicio operations assumes more effective use of the knowledge and skills of the United States technicians working on the program; it brings technicians and administrative personnel of the two countries together in an extremely close working relationship in a single agency attempting to solve common problems and produces a greater degree of mutual understanding and respect; and lastly, the Servicio approach means that the nationals of the host government learn and absorb information from the United States technicians in a context of operating responsibility which trains them to assume responsibility for such operations on a permanent basis.

The Latin American governments have shown enthusiasm for this type of operation. During the fiscal year 1951 there were 34 Servicio-type programs in operation in 18 of the Latin American Republics. In addition, the United States carried out advisory and training programs on a varying scale in all of the 20 Latin American Republics. The funds made available for these purposes from the technical cooperation appropriation for FY 1951 totalled approximately $11,350,000 exclusive of the cost of Washington administration.

It is proposed that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1952, the United States carry out a program of technical and economic cooperation in the Republics of Latin America in the basic fields and in approximately the amounts indicated by the following table:

1. Agricultural development and food supply and related activities (including food processing, feeder roads, etc.)	$13,650,000
2. Health and Sanitation	7,900,000
3. Education	5,100,000
4. Mineral and Power Development	2,000,000
5. Industry and Labor	1,100,000
6. Public Administration and Technical Services	1,600,000
7. Transportation, Joint Commission, Special Projects, etc.	2,400,000
Total	$33,750,000

The above budget:

(a) will permit the United States to continue its current technical cooperation programs,

(b) will permit the expansion of existing programs in order to make them more effective in relation to the magnitude of the problem in these countries,

(c) will permit the initiation of basic programs such as agriculture and education, etc., in countries where such activities are not now being carried on, and

(d) will provide needed balance in the country programs.

Approximately $11,500,000 of the sum requested will permit the continuation on an annual basis of the minimum programs underway in fiscal year 1951 in accordance with item (a) above.

To provide for the expansion of these going activities to a scale more commensurate with the requirements of the job to be done will require that a minimum of $8,500,000 be added to the $11,500,000 annual budget now used. This means that the sum of $20,000,000 of the proposed budget is required to develop the existing programs to the extent made necessary by the problems being attacked and the approaching emergency, in accordance with item (b) above. This expansion provides for special development of the actual food supply programs in Bolivia, Chile, and Peru, in response to special emergencies that are developing in those countries, and which are of strategic importance to our defense effort. Approximately $3,500,000 of the proposed $8,500,000 expansion is absorbed by this factor alone.

In addition, the proposed program provides approximately $11,000,000 for the initiation of basic programs of the type already successfully developed, in other countries that need and request them, and which do not have them at the present time. This expansion would provide for agricultural development programs in 8 new countries at a cost of approximately $5,000,000, for education programs in 9 new countries at a cost of approximately $2,500,000, and for new programs in health and sanitation, mineral and water development, public administration, industry, and other fields in all 19 republics at a cost of approximately $3,500,000. The proposed program will also provide approximately $3,000,000 for the development of activities such as industry and labor, fiscal administration, economic surveys and joint commissions for economic development that are essential to a broad program of economic and technical cooperation, but have been developed heretofore.

Since 1942, the financial contribution of the Latin American governments to the co-operative programs has been increasing. That contribution consists of funds given directly to the programs of services and facilities provided by the local governments, and of contributions made by third parties, usually communities that desire such facilities as environmental sanitation and water systems. In the past, the total of these contributions has increased year by year until it constitutes more than 50% of the cost of the programs. Under the program proposed for fiscal year 1952, also, the host governments will be required to contribute all they can afford as a condition to the initiation or continuation of these cooperative programs.

The proposed program provides for the major concentration of effort in Brazil, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, and Mexico, in that order, and over 40% of the proposed budget will be used in these five countries. These countries have approximately 60% of the population of Latin America. All of these countries are of strategic importance in relation to our defense effort. In all of them it will be necessary to expand considerably our technical cooperation program to assist them in carrying forward their economic development programs, and thus enable them to acquire greater strength as allies, and to increase their production of essential raw materials for us and industrial products for themselves. Chile, for example, has recently opened a steel plant which will enable her to supply not only most of her own needs, but also a large percentage of the needs of the neighboring Republics. The development of a new industrial center in Chile, which this plant is bringing about, is causing severe strains on other segments of the economy, especially those related to food supply, since the new industrial area is draining off supplies, already inadequate, of the Santiago region. The same situation obtains with respect to the increased production of copper in the northern region of the republic. There too, an influx of population into the expanding copper mining camp has resulted in an acute shortage of food supplies. A cooperative agricultural program in Chile has been started, but this assistance should be made more extensive in order to enable Chile to solve its food supply problem.

Similar situations obtain in connection with Bolivia, Mexico, and Brazil. The expanded programs of mineral production developed in response to United States needs, have created serious food shortages. In all of these areas there are parallel problems related to health and sanitation and to industrial training. The proposed program will provide some of the assistance required by the governments in their attempts to solve these problems.

It will be noticed from the above table that relatively heavier emphasis is being given to the programs of agricultural development, food supply, and related fields. More than 40% of the total budget proposed will be used for this purpose. Approximately 24% of the proposed budget is to be used for health and sanitation and related activities.

The $5,000,000 proposed for educational programs is sufficient to continue those programs, if the problem of inflation is taken into account, merely at the rate at which they were initiated and to expand the program into several new countries. Education projects account for 15% of the budget.

The other activities proposed in public administration, mineral and power development, industry and labor, and joint economic surveys, which are essential factors in a total program, account for the remaining 21% of the proposed budget.

The Republics of Latin America desire U.S. technical assistance. No better proof of this can be found than their willingness during the last eight years to assume an ever-increasing share of the direct cost of the cooperative programs. In addition, they have increased their own budgets to continue, on a permanent basis, the services initiated by cooperative action. The direct contribution of the Latin American Republics increased year by year until in 1950 it was approximately $14,000,000 for all the U.S. programs. In addition, the work of the cooperative programs affected the form in which many millions of dollars in the Latin American budgets were employed. On the basis of past experience, therefore, it is anticipated that under the proposed program they will bear a large, fair share of the cost. Because the proposed program for FY 1952 is on a scale that is more nearly commensurate with the extent of the problem than has been true during the last few years, it will involve a proportionately large increase of U.S. expenditures over FY 1951. Most of this increase will be used to initiate new programs or to intensify food production in areas that are now of strategic importance. In these two situations it is not reasonable to expect a ratio of contributions by the Latin American governments equal to the ratios that have been reached in old established programs after several years of operation. For that reason, although a reasonable increase in the direct contribution of the Latin American governments is to be expected, they will, in all probability, not maintain the ratios of 1951.

[Here follows further discussion of other aspects of the technical assistance program proposed for Latin America.]

820.00–TA/3–1951

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of Regional American Affairs (White) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] March 19, 1951.

With reference to your appearance before the Bureau of the Budget in justification of the Foreign Aid Program for Latin America, I present the following suggestions:

1) At the meetings of the Inter-departmental Committee on International Security Affairs, which I attended while you were in Latin America, it became abundantly clear that other government agencies, and to an extent, Cabot himself, were not so much concerned about the worthwhileness of aid to Latin America as they were about the two following problems:

a) Taking into account the tremendous magnitude of the funds to be requested of Congress and the growing urgency of "shoring up" the countries on the periphery of the Iron Curtain, was the administration justified in asking for grant funds for Latin America?

b) With the foreign exchange position in the Latin American countries improving rapidly as a result of favorable prices, should not military aid be on a reimbursable rather than grant basis?

2) With reference to (a) above, I believe it would be valid to point out that, while Communism in Latin America has not reached the critical point, we may very well be engaged in a marathon contest with the Soviet Union. If this is the case, one dollar invested wisely and now in Point IV programs answering to the aspirations of the people may prove to be an important and more effective instrument than ten dollars invested at a later date when the political situation my have deteriorted due to the conditions of poverty and hopelessness.

3) With reference to (b) above, I think it should be pointed out that with the dollar and gold reserves of Latin America still a billion dollars below the level prevailing at the end of 1945 and with much greater deterioration reflected in the purchasing power of those reserves, the Latin American countries are not going to be disposed to spend any sizable funds on equipment needed for them to assume military roles which we desire in our own interests.

4) It seems to me that in connection with both economic aid and military aid, both the Budget Bureau and, at a later date, Congressional committees should be brought to face squarely the extremely low level of national income and the inherent financial limitations which act as a definite ceiling on what the Latin Americans can do to help themselves. In my judgment, this has been clearly and concisely set forth by DRA in the following briefing memorandum:

"The population of the twenty Latin American republics in 1949 is estimated at about 150 million, approximately equal to that of the U.S. The national income of the Latin American countries for the same year is estimated at about $24 billion as compared with the national income of the United States of $217 billion.

"The budgeted federal expenditures of these republics during 1949 totalled over $4.4 billion, compared to expenditures of the United States Government of over $40 billion in the same period. In the case of Latin America, as a whole, and that of the United States, budgeted expenditures comprised 18.5 percent of national income.

"The burden of federal expenditures in relation to national income varies greatly, however, among the individual Latin American countries. In five republics, Argentina, Dominican Republic, Panama, Peru and Venezuela, the cost of administration absorbs between 30 and 32 percent of their national incomes. In El Salvador and Paraguay, on the other hand, these costs amount to less than 10 percent of national income.

"In 1949, the budgets of the Defense Ministries of the Latin American nations called for expenditures approximating $1.0 billion, roughly equivalent to one-twelfth of defense expenditures in the United States. These military disbursements by the other American republics comprised 4.2 percent of the total national income of Latin America. In the United States, the cost of national defense represented 5.5 percent of the country's national income.

"Costa Rica and Panama have no true military establishments or separate defense ministries; their security forces consist entirely of armed policy and civilian reserves. Only Argentina, Brazil, Mexico and Chile have military establishments adequate for maintenance of internal security.

"Any significant increase in the size of the Latin American defense establishments would require the allocation of a substantially higher proportion of their national incomes to military expenditures".

820.00-TA/3-2151

Memorandum by the Special Assistant in the Bureau of Economic Affairs (Dort)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] March 21, 1951.

Budget Hearings (3/21/51)

LATIN AMERICA ECONOMIC

The following points were of particular significance.

Mr. Miller made the following general points:

(1) That the economic program in Latin America was primarily one of long term significance and should not be viewed simply as an emergency program.

(2) That we should extend aid even though some countries temporarily might have governments we do not particularly like. Governments come and go and we can not constantly change our basic attitude toward the countries in Latin America with each change in government. By cooperation and steady pressure we can influence them for the better.

(3) The Inter-American Highway program should be a part of the omnibus bill [1] since it has the same basic objectives, i.e., securing greater production and greater cooperation. It also has some significance for defense.

(4) In answer to possible criticism that Latin America had a low priority at the present time and therefore all assistance should be directed to other areas, he said that this concept of priority was fuzzy. We do have an absolute interest in Latin America.

The following remarks of particular significance were made by the Budget Bureau representatives:

(1) The justification should be greatly sharpened up in relationship to the increase of production, particularly of vital materials, which would result directly or indirectly from the program.

(2) Whereas it might not be hard to justify the programs at current levels only a particularly significant objective would justify any substantial increase in view of the current demands on our resources.

(3) Although the questioning ultimately developed relatively clear purposes and concrete results in connection with the programs, this was not evident in the written justification. The justification was largely in generalities, building good will, etc. They felt that for Congress it was essential to develop a comprehensive country picture indicating specific goals and anticipated results from the programs together with indications from past experience of the effectiveness of the work. As a result of the testimony on several sample countries they seemed satisfied that such material was available.

[1] For documentation on foreign aid legislation, see vol. I, pp. 266 ff.

S/ISA Files, Lot 52–51

Summary Minutes of a Meeting of the Foreign Aid Steering Group, Held at the Department of State, 3:30 p. m., March 22, 1951

SECRET
SG S–11

[Here follow a list of those present (25) and discussion of matters unrelated to the proposed Point IV program from Latin America.]

Other Task Force II Problems

30. Mr. Stinebower [1] reviewed the last Steering Group action on the Inter-American Highway [2] and said that the (State) Bureau of American Republics Affairs had asked to have the problem reconsidered. He said that the only question is whether to include the project in the omnibus bill, since it would go over in one form or another. Mr. Atwood,[3] of ARA, reviewed the recent legislative history, including last year's authorization of 8 millions, with appropriations of 4 millions, which have been used up. The Bureau now is requesting 24 additional millions of authorizations with appropriations of 28 millions. As for inclusion in the omnibus bill, ARA feels that highway construction is a number 1 project for under-developed areas. Generally, loans have been used for this purpose; but Mr. Atwood did not believe that the countries could borrow enough to complete this highway, although some loans for feeder roads, etc., should be feasible. Our present desire is to complete an all-weather highway to the Canal Zone in two years. The project would improve hemisphere defenses but could not be justified on solely military grounds.[4] However, the economic development programs of the area are tied directly to highway availability, making the project an essential part of our aid to the area and to Latin America, where it is the only large grant element contemplated. ARA wants it to receive number 1 priority. Completion

[1] Leroy D. Stinebower, Director, Office of Financial and Development Policy, Bureau of Economic Affairs, and Chairman, Task Force II, of the Foreign Aid Steering Group.

[2] The summary minutes of the tenth meeting of the Foreign Aid Steering Group held in the Department of State, March 7, 1951, read in part as follows:

"Inter-American Highway—The funds for this project were originally intended for inclusion in the FY '51 supplemental appropriations request. TF II decided to include it in the omnibus bill, although uncertain of Department of Defense support, and to leave it to the Bureau of the Budget to decide the best legislative course to pursue. The prevailing sentiment of the Steering Group was that it should decide not to put this program into the omnibus, subject to the right of ARA to have this decision reconsidered." (Lot 52–51, Box 124)

[3] Rollin S. Atwood, Deputy Director, Office of South American Affairs.

[4] In a letter to the Secretary of State, dated March 7, 1951, Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall stated in part the following:

"The Department of Defense considers that, as stated by the IADB, the completion of this highway would be of value to the collective defense of the continent. However, in considering the over-all military requirements of the United States, the completion of this highway is of relatively low priority and expenditure of funds for this purpose at this time cannot be justified for purely military reasons." (820.2612/3–751) in two years would save money in the long run. We are "committed" to completion of the road by the implications of the legislative history.

31. Mr. Gordon [5] felt that new conditions since Korea call for re-examination of implied commitments developed in the last war which might today look like "business as usual".

32. If the highway goes into the bill, he thought it should have a stronger justification than he has yet heard. The question is whether, in an international security bill, you should include a long-range development plan similar to those which have to be forfeited in some US localities. He also felt that we would damage the character of the bill and run the risk of appearing to be wrapping something in a security cloak.

33. Mr. Stinebower asked whether, if a stronger case could be made for the Highway as such, it should be included in the bill.

34. Mr. Lawson [6] said he would prefer to see it included.

Action:

35. It was agreed that Task Force II should re-examine the Inter-American highway project to justify it in whole or in part on the basis of more immediate results, such as food production and raw materials development, as a part of the omnibus bill.

36. It was pointed out that this approach might have the effect of reducing the project to its more justifiable components, with perhaps a smaller total amount requested.

37. Since additional country studies are being prepared for Latin America already, it is not expected that re-examination of the highway will alter the timetable.

Programs submitted to Budget

38. Mr. Lawson commented that in the papers so far reviewed at the Bureau, they have yet to see a total country program to embrace loans, grants, technical assistance and military aid. In the Latin American submissions, US objectives, economic military and political are not shown country-by-country, so they cannot be related to the economic programs. This statement of objectives is necessary. Other deficiencies have been evident in the treatment of the internal and external financial positions, strategic materials, detailed military programs, possibility of government loans or private financing in short, the documents submitted do not add up to programs based on stated objectives by area and country, although the oral presentations at the Budget have been good.

[Here follow additional discussion of and action on matters unrelated to Latin America.]

---

[5] Lincoln Gordon, Office of the Special Assistant to the President.

[6] George W. Lawson, Jr., Chief, International Activities Branch, Estimates Division, Bureau of the Budget.

S/ISA Files, Lot 52–51

Minutes of the First Meeting of the Expediting Group,[1] Held at the Department of State, 3:00 p. m., April 18, 1951

TOP SECRET
EG M–1

APRIL 20, 1951.

[Here follow a list of those present (35) and discussion of several matters unrelated to Latin America.]

Proposed Revisions on Title IV Programs (FWG IV D–1)[2]

COLONEL BONESTEEL[3] said the FWG had recommended three appeals: (1) to restore the military program to $70 million; (2) to raise the technical cooperation programs by $1.9 million over the markings; and (3) to request the restoration of new authorization for the Inter-American highway in the amount of $4 million.[4]

[Here follows a brief discussion of the military grant aid program appeal.]

Inter-American Highway

MR. MANN[5] explained that the paper treats the problem with the same approach that was used in the original submission, and that the only new element is that we request half as much as we did before. He said that ARA would prefer to be over-ruled than to agree to a 16-year program for the highway which a $4 million annual expenditure rate would necessitate. COLONEL BONESTEEL was concerned about asking the Secretary or Under Secretary of State[6] to go through an appeal process since nothing new had been added. AMBASSADOR WOOD[7] felt that the only way to gain a restoration in the highway will be to request it at a high level on a frankly political basis. Therefore, no extensive figures would be required. MR. MANN indicated that he expects Con-

[1] An interdepartmental group called into existence for several days to resolve questions relating to the redrafting of the foreign aid program for appeal to the Bureau of the Budget.

[2] Reference is to a paper prepared in the Department of State by the Final Working Group (FWG) for Title IV (Latin America) of the proposed foreign aid bill, dated April 17, 1951, and designated FWG IV D–1, for use in connection with hearings on the bill at the Bureau of the Budget; a copy is in Lot 52–51, Box 128.

[3] Charles H. Bonesteel, III, Executive Director of the European Coordinating Committee, temporarily designated Special Assistant to the Secretary of State, effective March 16, 1951, to assist in preparing the foreign aid program for presentation to Congress. Mr. Bonesteel served as the Department of State's representative on the Executive Group for Foreign Aid; for documentation on the Executive Group, see vol. I, pp. 266 ff.

[4] The original requests submitted to the Bureau of the Budget by the Department of State were as follows: $80,000,000 for military grant aid, of which $10,000,000 was allowed; $33,781,000 for the technical cooperation program, of which $17,000,000 was allowed; and $8,000,000 for the Inter-American Highway program, which was disallowed.

[5] Thomas C. Mann, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.

[6] James E. Webb.

[7] C. Tyler Wood, Deputy United States Representative in Europe, Economic Cooperation Administration, and member of the Executive Group on Foreign Aid.

gressional support for the highway, but AMBASSADOR WOOD cautioned that the Executive position must be properly established before the hearings. MR. LINCOLN GORDON expressed the belief that support for the program within the White House is stronger than the Budget attitude indicates, and that it would therefore be a mistake not to appeal it. COLONEL BONESTEEL made it clear that his only concern is to provide the top appealing officer with a good case. MR. MANN agreed to rewrite the appeal justification emphasizing the importance of the program for the prevention of social unrest and political revolution.[8] COLONEL BONESTEEL felt that Mr. Webb would go along with a properly constructed paper emphasizing the significance of the highway in the general context of Latin American policy, its effect as a deterrent on political unrest and the domestic political interest in it. AMBASSADOR WOOD felt it is important to introduce something new before a high level appeal is made. COLONEL LINCOLN [9] proposed that the last sentence of 1 under Problem be deleted and that the last paragraph on page 2 be removed altogether. COLONEL BONESTEEL informed the group that Mr. Webb had indicated generally that he would be willing to make the $4 million appeal.

Technical Cooperation (OAS)

MR. STINEBOWER explained that the only appeal is in the bilateral Point IV material.

MR. MANN said that this section is only an outline which will require revision. An additional paper on UN programs will also be prepared. MR. IVERSON [10] explained that the working group had cut to a figure for grants but the finally requested amount was about $600,000 more than the Budget markings ($5,116,000 compared to $4.5 million in the markings). He said that the IIAA [11] programs have generally increased over the past year but noted that programs in recent years

[8] In a memorandum to Mr. Webb, dated April 25, 1951, Mr. Mann stated in part that the principal basis for the appeal on the Inter-American Highway request "is that the five Central American countries concerned, and Panama, have extremely low living and health standards and, in varying degrees, are already suffering from social and political unrest. The greatest single contribution which this Government can make to their economic progress and stability is to complete the highway which will provide the only overland means of communication between all of them, open up new areas to agricultural development and complement the Point IV program in the area." (Lot 52–51, Box 128)

[9] George A. Lincoln, Special Assistant to the Secretary of Defense, and member of the Executive Group on Foreign Aid.

[10] Kenneth R. Iverson, President, Institute of Inter-American Affairs (IIAA).

[11] The Institute of Inter-American Affairs was originally incorporated in 1942 and became a U.S. Government corporation in 1947. It was established to aid governments in the Western Hemisphere by promoting technical programs and projects for health, sanitation, and food supply. As of mid-1950, the IIAA operated in conjunction with the Technical Cooperation Administration (TCA) in Latin America. For background information on the IIAA, see the statement made by Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs Willard L. Thorp before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on June 10, 1949, printed in the Department of State Bulletin, June 19, 1949, pp. 795–797. For information on the IIAA's activities and its relationship with TCA in 1950, see the editorial note in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, p. 679.

have been marginal. There has been some feeling in Latin America that we should raise our contribution since the participating countries often put in 6 or 7 times more than we do. COLONEL BONESTEEL understood from the Budget markings that the Bureau would go along with a considerable program but wanted a realistic evaluation as to whether 1952 personnel can be processed by July 1. MR. IVERSON replied that: (1) there is already a program going on in the hemisphere; (2) they have had no trouble with finding the necessary people; (3) the figure here already includes a lapse of three months; (4) we are building programs with the Point IV money available and our proposal would increase the FY 1951 programs by a third. Therefore, he felt that there are reasonable answers to the comment on lapses. COLONEL BONESTEEL suggested that general points of this kind be put on top of the details of our justification, so as to indicate that we accept generally the Burget position but account for the specific points. MR. IVERSON agreed to do so.

The deadline for the preparation of the three "rebuttals" to Budget, military Inter-American highway and technical assistance was agreed to be Friday noon. The appeal of $1.9 million was accepted by the group subject to re-drafting of a justification.

MR. STINEBOWER felt that any appeal papers prepared for Mr. Webb should be couched in more general terms. COLONEL BONESTEEL agreed and said that two or three main points should suffice. It was agreed that the appeals would be re-written in the form of a memorandum from Colonel Bonesteel to Mr. Webb for the Under Secretary to use in making an oral appeal to the Director of the Budget.[12] The memorandum should state that the Executive Group recommend an appeal (a) on the military program (with the main arguments stated and the details tabbed in); (b) on the highway (about a paragraph with three of four strongly stated points plus a table on programs); and (c) technical assistance (in summary, synthesized form).[13]

[12] Frederick J. Lawton.

[13] The appeal to the Bureau of the Budget was embodied in a paper prepared by the Final Working Group for Title IV, dated April 23, 1951, and designated FWG IV D–1a, not printed; a copy is in Lot 52–51, Box 128.

As a result of appeals by the Department of State, the Bureau of the Budget increased the FY 1952 budget marking for technical assistance programs in Latin America to $22,000,000, which the Department proposed as of late August to apportion in the following manner: $18,000,000 for bilateral technical cooperation programs (all countries except Argentina), $1,000,000 for OAS programs, and $3,000,000 for multilateral programs administered through the UN (820.00–TA/8–2851).

The Mutual Security Act of 1951 (Public Law 165), approved October 10, 1951, however, authorized a limit of $21,250,000 for technical assistance programs under Title IV (American Republics); for text, see 65 Stat. 373. The actual appropriation included in the Military Security Appropriation Act of 1952 (Public Law 249), approved October 31, 1951, was for $21,245,653; for text of the act, see 65 Stat. 731.

Pertinent documents relating to contributions by the United States for technical assistance programs in the individual Latin American countries are in Department of State decimal file 820.00–TA for 1951 and S/ISA Files, FRC Accession 62 A 613.

[Here follows additional discussion of matters unrelated to Latin America.]

820.00–TA/5–251

Memorandum by the Regional Planning Adviser of the Bureau of Inter-American Affairs (Halle) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller)[1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] May 2, 1951.

Subject: Policy on Assistance to Latin America.

There has been general agreement that our foreign aid programs should tend to make the recipient countries less dependent rather than more dependent on outside assistance. This has been the understanding of Congress in supporting the IIAA programs as well as such other programs as those of the ECA.

The IIAA policy has, accordingly, been one of helping Latin American governments to initiate programs of development and then gradually transferring to those governments the burden of continuing them. At a meeting of the IIAA Board of Directors on July 1, 1949, "it was the consensus of the meeting that any case in which it was proposed to increase the ratio of the Institute's contribution to Servicio program funds above the ratio that prevailed in the preceding year was to be submitted to the Board or to the Executive Committee for consideration and approval, except that this would not apply to very minor increases in ratio not exceeding 1% or 2%".

Another basic feature of the IIAA programs is that they are programs of "technical cooperation", not programs of grant aid. The IIAA contributions of project funds have always been explained as being quite incidental to the technical contributions and in support of them.

Through the medium of the IIAA we could, if we were not careful, decrease rather than increase the self-reliance of the Latin American countries. We could do this by building up their governmental services with our funds to an extent that was beyond the capacity of their economies to support. By augmenting our project contributions we could also convert the IIAA programs into programs in which grant assistance played a more dominant role.

To illustrate: I suppose it is true today, as it was a couple of years ago, that there was no prospect of the Costa Rican Government's being able to pay, in the foreseeable future, more than about 50% of the project costs of the cooperative food production program. This raised the question whether that excellent program was not, in fact, too large and expensive for the scale of the Costa Rican economy—whether it could ever be turned over entirely to the Costa Ricans. However, subject to the agreement of our Embassy in San José, $58,000 of TCA funds is now to be allocated to supplement the $125,000 of regular program funds for the program for F.Y. 1951. Point Four funds are also to be made available to supplement the regular project contributions in other programs—in some cases on a very large scale.

---

[1] Addressed also to Mr. Mann, Mr. Ivan B. White, Director, Office of Regional American Affairs; Mr. Albert F. Nufer, Director, Office of Middle American Affairs; and Mr. Fletcher Warren, Director, Office of South American Affairs.

In the past few years we have repeatedly faced situations in which cooperating governments have complained that they could not afford to sustain their share of the cost of particular programs. At the same time, IIAA chiefs of field party have urged the expansion of those same programs with increased contributions of U.S. project funds.

I raise the policy question involved here without at the moment being prepared to offer a considered answer. My disposition is to suggest that we should regard our IIAA programs as long-range programs that may be continued with our participation over an indefinite number of years with the objective of eventually building something that the other countries can permanently support. In order words, I would not propose that on all of these programs we aim at turning them over entirely to local support by a definite date in the foreseeable future. I think we should, however, resist the pressures for indiscriminate enlargement generated by (a) the availability of funds and (b) the zeal of those who are in command of the field operations. The Board did, in July of 1949, draw a rough sort of line to limit our assistance under ordinary circumstances. This may not have been the best solution and, in any case, it may not be taken seriously today.

We ought, I think, to work out a policy that would govern operations to the end of increasing the self-reliance of the Latin American peoples.

LOUIS J. HALLE, JR.

361/8–251

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of Middle American Affairs (Nufer) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller)[1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] August 2, 1951.

Subject: The Technical Cooperation Program of the Organization of American States

I understand that Dr. Lleras[2] plans to call you in the near future to discuss with you the financial problems of the Technical Cooperation

[1] Drafted by Mr. Robert M. Sayre, Office of Middle American Affairs.
[2] Alberto Lleras Camargo, Secretary General, Organization of American States.

Program of the OAS and to urge that this government make another payment to the Special Account for the Program. For that reason, I thought you would like to have briefly the status of the Program and recommendations on what you might say to Dr. Lleras.

Status of the Program

About $276,000 has been paid into the Special Account. This has been allocated, except for $24,000, to four projects and administrative expenses. Funds allocated to the following three projects are probably sufficient to carry them through December 31, 1951:

Project No. 1—Nurse's Training Center
22—Housing Research and Training Center
77—Aftosa Center

Funds allocated to Project No. 39 for three training centers for agricultural extension workers are expected to last until about August 31. Eight other projects approved as of first priority by the IA ECOSOC are about ready to begin but there are no funds available.

Status of Pledges and Contributions

	Pledge	Payment
(a) Pledges paid in full:
El Salvador		$4,571
Haiti		2,000
Honduras		3,143
Panama		2,714
Dominican Republic		4,571
(b) Pledges paid in part:
United States	$1,000,000	$250,000
Uruguay	19,100	9,550
Venezuela	15,429	3,857
(c) Pledges on which we have information Government is acting to make payment:
Argentina	87,857
Brazil	128,000
Colombia	26,857
Ecuador	6,142
Guatemala	5,000
Nicaragua	3,000
Peru	17,428
Total	274,284

(d) No pledge:

Bolivia	Chile
Costa Rica	Mexico
Cuba	Paraguay

Efforts made to obtain pledges and payments

In the basic resolution of April 10, 1950,[3] all Member Governments agreed to make a pledge. On September 28, 1950, the IA ECOSOC invited all Member States, by October 31, 1950, to make a pledge to the Special Account for the program. During the month of December, Dr. Lleras discussed the subject of pledges and payments with the heads of the delegations of all Member States that had not pledged and urged them to have their governments announce a pledge. On January 25, 1951, the IA ECOSOC authorized its Chairman[4] to communicate directly with each government that had not made a pledge urging them to do so. Subsequently Dr. Lleras also communicated with each such government. Again on May 24, 1951, the Chairman of the IA ECOSOC communicated with all the governments urging them to make pledges or to make payments on the pledges already made. The Executive Secretary of the CCTA has made two trips to various Latin American countries to explain the program and to urge the payment of pledges.

Action on payment of United States pledge

In a letter from the US Representative[5] to the Chairman of the IA ECOSOC of October 31, 1951,[6] the United States announced a pledge of $1,000,000 provided it did not exceed 70% of the total amount pledged. It was agreed within the Department that we would make our first payment when all the pledges were assembled and that that payment would be ½ of the total amount we expected to pay or $500,000. When it became apparent that the Program would not get started unless the United States made a payment, ARA urged, and UNA reluctantly agreed, to make a payment of $250,000 even though all the pledges were not in. This payment was made on January 19, 1951.

After the OAS Program was approved in its entirety on March 13, the OAS requested informally whether the United States would make a second payment. In a memorandum of March 22, 1951,[6] to TCA–Dr. Bennett,[7] you requested that a second payment be made. This was approved by TCA but disapproved by UNA which has final responsibility for all payments to international organizations. Your staff favors a second payment though not necessarily of $250,000, but in view of the fact that there has been almost no change since your [3] Apparent reference to the resolution establishing the program of technical cooperation of the Organization of American States, approved at a special meeting of the IA–ECOSOC held in Washington, March 20–April 10, 1950; for text of the resolution, see Annals of the Organization of American States (Washington, 1950), vol. II, pp. 261–267.

[4] Julio E. Heurtematte, delegate to the IA–ECOSOC from Panama.

[5] Merwin L. Bohan.

[6] Not printed.

[7] Henry G. Bennett, Administrator, Technical Cooperation Administration.

request of March 22, 1951, it is doubted that UNA would approve any payment. The possibility is being explored, however.

Recommendations

In your discussions with Dr. Lleras you might want to point out that we are aware of the financial difficulties of the OAS Program and are very sympathetic toward his desire to obtain additional funds. However, this is an international program and we want to maintain its international character. We cannot do that if almost all of the funds are US funds. At present about 90% of the funds in the Special Account are US funds. We are now in the process of justifying to the Congress our participation in the Program. The Department is being criticized for paying too large a share of the financial support for international organizations. A bill recently passed the House to limit our contributions to international organizations to 33⅓%. In the face of the lack of support for the Program by other governments as evidenced by their pledges and payments, we may have a difficult time justifying such participation and consequently an equally difficult time obtaining funds for next year's contribution. We would be hard pressed to explain any additional payment until other governments match our present payment on a 70–30 basis.

You might suggest to Dr. Lleras that he again discuss the financial problems of the Program with the heads of the Delegations of those countries which have not made payments on their pledges or have not pledged. You might also want to reiterate a suggestion made to him on two previous occasions—that he suggest to these governments that they deposit their payment to the credit of the PAU in local currency in one of their own banks so that it would become immediately available and then the government would not need to be concerned about the loss of dollar exchange. Any local currency can be utilized in the Program and at present there appears to be no problem of convertibility.

You might also want to consider whether a suggestion that Dr. Lleras visit several of these countries to impress upon them the necessity for their financial support of the Program would be advisable.

A suggestion that our embassies consult the governments that have not pledged or have not made payments and urge them to do so has been considered. This approach is not recommended.[8]

[8] Beneath the text of this memorandum appear the following handwritten notations: "I agree with these recommendations J[ohn] C. D[reier, U.S. Representative to COAS]," and "So do I. T. C. M[ann]."

Editorial Note

The Second Extraordinary Meeting of the Inter-American Economic and Social Council of the Organization of American States was held at Panama City, Panama, August 20–30, 1951. Assistant Secretary Miller served as Chairman of the United States delegation. The agenda of the meeting included the subject of more effective contributions by member states to the technical cooperation program of the OAS. In his report on the results of the meeting, which was attached to a memorandum by Mr. Bohan to the Secretary of State, dated November 20, 1951, Mr. Miller stated in part the following: "While the discussion on financing was thorough and brought out forcefully the obligation of all countries to support the Program financially, and although Argentina and Chile said they were taking action to make their payments, there is some doubt that actual payments will be forthcoming immediately." Mr. Miller also commented that the meeting "may be considered a success from the United States point of view since we were able to support all the decisions taken . . . [and] because of the practically unanimous agreement reached on all agenda items." (365/11–2051) Additional pertinent documents relating to the meeting are in Department of State decimal file 365 and Lot 60 D 665. For further information, the text of committee reports and resolutions adopted by the meeting, see Annals of the Organization of American States (Washington, 1951), volume 2, pages 366–382. For the text of Mr. Miller's address concerning hemispheric economic problems delivered to the plenary session of the meeting on August 28, see Department of State Bulletin, September 17, 1951, pages 475–478.

Under Secretary's Meetings, Lot 53 D 250 [1]

Notes of the Under Secretary's Meeting, Department of State, 10:15 a. m., October 29, 1951 [2]

SECRET

UM N–413

[Here follows a list of those present (20).]

Point IV Program

1. In introducing the subject of the proposed reorganization of TCA, Mr. Webb explained that Mr. Heneman [3] and his Management Staff are now assisting the Under Secretary as a specialized group of

---

[1] Master file of records of meetings, documents, summaries, and agenda of the Under Secretary's Meetings for the years 1949–1952, as maintained and retired by the Executive Secretariat of the Department of State.

[2] The Under Secretary's Meeting convened weekly; it was customarily attended by the Deputy Under Secretaries of State, Assistant Secretaries of State, and certain office directors. Under Secretary of State Webb presided at these meetings.

[3] Harlow J. Heneman, Director, Management Staff, Office of the Deputy Under Secretary of State for Administration.

people who can make a study of a job to be done and come up with sound organizational and administrative proposals. In effect, A/MS is serving as a group of industrial engineers would in a large corporation. The proposed reorganization of TCA [4] is a pilot model of that type of study which could take place in other areas of the Department.

2. Mr. Heneman reviewed the proposed reorganization of TCA and referrred to an organization chart at hand to indicate the specific changes to be made. He pointed out that it was not until recent Congressional action had taken place that it could be decided how TCA should be organized and what job it had to do. One of the primary problems is to determine how to set up TCA, as well as the regional bureaus, to handle Point IV matters. TCA is to be set up as a focal point in the Department on Point IV matters, and within this organization there are specific points of contact for the regional bureaus and the other agencies on their problems at hand. Originally, TCA was set up on a functional basis, but now the emphasis has changed to a geographic organization with certain technical and general staff functions. Mr. Heneman explained that there are two development services—one for Latin America and one for the Near East, with the possible establishment of one at a later time for Asia and Africa. One problem which A/MS faced in making their current study was the integration of the IIAA into the TCA operation. He pointed out that there would be duplication of staff and facilities, if IIAA were allowed to continue as is. Mr. Heneman pointed out that an effort had been made to keep the Washington organization as small as possible and only develop staff by responding to the needs from the field. With the Institute becoming a part of TCA, then the personnel and know-how already developed by the Institute could be utilized on a global basis. In other words, some of the people in the Institute would be utilized to assist in other areas.

3. Mr. Heneman pointed out that the Country Directors which would be set up in the field would be under the Ambassador. He also stated that the appointment of key people going to the field would be discussed with the responsible regional bureau. He stated that if TCA expands its procurement and supply functions, it would be necessary to set up an assistant administrator for this particular task, but at the present time the job does not warrant this position.

4. Mr. Heneman explained that this plan had been developed in consultation with the staffs of the regional bureaus, and it is hoped that the working relationships with the bureaus would be improved by this arrangement.

[Here follows discussion of the basis of the Point IV program for underdeveloped areas.]

---

[4] For documentation on this subject, see vol. I, pp. 1641 ff.

8. With respect to the IIAA, Mr. McGhee,[5] because of his past experience with that organization, pointed out how effective it is in the field. He felt that its power and authority should not be diluted merely to achieve administrative consistency. Mr. Heneman assured Mr. McGhee that the IIAA as an organization was not being abolished but would be better utilized under the TCA reorganization.

9. Mr. Miller agreed with Mr. McGhee's comments on the Institute. He pointed out that he had not heard of the proposal discussed by Mr. Heneman and took exception to it. He stated that the creation of TCA did not facilitate the work of the IIAA, and he is very apprehensive of the proposal made by Mr. Heneman. With respect to the Country Director proposal, Mr. Miller reserved his position on this. He felt that in some cases a Country Director should report to the Counselor for Economic Affairs. The pattern for the Country Directors should not be the same for every country.

10. Dr. Bennett referred to his great respect for the IIAA and indicated his efforts to give the Institute freedom and to step up its program. He explained that the proposal was not to abolish the IIAA but was to reduce the Washington overhead by not duplicating staff. Thus, the top-flight people in IIAA could be utilized to help in other areas. Mr. Heneman emphasized that if the staff in IIAA is left intact, it would duplicate staff required in other areas. The value of the IIAA is recognized and the proposal made in the reorganization was not made merely for the sake of organizational neatness. Dr. Bennett assured Mr. Miller that the Institute would not suffer under his direction. Mr. Humelsine[6] suggested that all of the "development services" be called "institutes". Mr. McGhee agreed that this would be a good idea, and Mr. Miller added that the name of the IIAA is invaluable in Latin America. Mr. Heneman agreed that the "development services" could be called anything desired. Mr. Webb pointed out that the "development services" are not "institutes". He pointed out that we cannot maintain separate corporations such as the IIAA, because the tendency in government, in both the Executive and Legislative branches, is against this type of organization. Mr. McGhee agreed that it need not be a corporation but pointed out that an "institute" could serve as a focal point within the government for providing this type of aid to a certain area. In addition, he stated that it would be much easier to get a better man to become "president" of an "institute" than merely a "director" or "chief" of a "development service". Mr. Webb pointed out that the decision on this question of the "institute" was not final.

[Here follows discussion of the need for a regional administrator of the Point IV program in the Middle East area.]

---

[5] George C. McGhee, Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs.

[6] Carlisle H. Humelsine, Deputy Under Secretary of State for Administration.

PPS Files, Lot 64 D 563[1]

Paper Prepared in the Department of State[2]

TOP SECRET

Latin America Aid Programs

MILITARY PROGRAM

[Here follows discussion of military grant aid to Latin America under the Mutual Security Program.]

(An estimate of the cost, beyond the amount which may be authorized and appropriated for fiscal year 1952, will be made by the Department of Defense).

C. Extent to Which Program Meets Needs of National Security.

Successful completion of the program will contribute to collective security of the hemisphere. The defense tasks which it is hoped this grant aid will enable other countries to perform are so essential to the national security of the U.S. that there would be no question that U.S. forces will be required to perform them if Latin American forces are not available.

ECONOMIC PROGRAM

A. Minimum Objectives and Tasks.

1. To stimulate the volume and types of production of basic materials required for defense production and stockpiling by helping the Latin American Governments to solve problems that would otherwise inhibit the expansion of raw materials production.

2. To assist in overcoming present weaknesses in the Latin American economic structure which contribute to political and economic instability to the end that the orientation of the governments and people of the Latin American countries toward the U.S. may continue to be at least as favorable as at present.

B. Nature and Magnitude of the Program.

Measured against development efforts which are expected to be undertaken through private investment and loan capital the program will continue to be only a significant catalytic agent to stimulate efforts by local governments to help themselves. Primary reliance will continue to be placed on private investments and loans and on public investment by the Latin American Governments themselves to meet development needs in Latin America. U.S. Government funds will be used only to the extent necessary to increase production in Latin

[1] Master file of documents, drafts, records of meetings, memoranda, and related correspondence of the Policy Planning Staff for the years 1947–1953.

[2] Prepared at the staff level for the International Security Affairs Committee (ISAC), and attached to a paper approved by ISAC, entitled "Summary Statement of Recommended Aid Programs for Non-European Areas", dated September 12, 1951, and designated ISAC D–20/1a, not printed.

America to the level which is required for the defense production effort and for assuring our political objectives in the region.

In addition to the general assumptions given on pages 2 and 3 of ISAC D–22/3a of August 31, 1951,[3] the following special assumptions are applicable to the Latin American portion of the Mutual Security Program:

1. No technical assistance will be projected for Argentina but the current policy of extending no additional technical aid to Guatemala will be subject to revision should political conditions change.
2. In some of the Latin American countries, economic problems faced are of a magnitude too great to be solved by technical assistance alone.
3. There will generally be disappointment in Latin America that the grant aid program is not expanded more rapidly.
4. The relative contributions from Latin American countries will continue to increase or, in any event, will not be reduced.
5. Private capital will continue to be available in at least the current volume for economic development in Latin America.
6. The level of anticipated loan operations in Latin America by the Export-Import Bank and the IBRD will not vary significantly from the figure of approximately $350,000,000 attained in fiscal year 1951.

It is impossible to speak with certainty as to the cost of the program or even as to all of the elements which should comprise the program. This is true both because of the uncertainty as to the validity of the general and specific assumptions made with respect to the Latin American program and because of other uncertainties such as:

a. The amount of funds that will be authorized and approved by the U.S. Congress for the program for fiscal year 1952.
b. The extent to which the governments of Latin America will be able and willing to contribute to the program for fiscal year 1952.
c. The magnitude of U.S. import requirements of strategic and critical materials which, it is understood, have not yet been estimated by ODM.
d. The extent to which the maintenance of lower prices in the U.S. than in the world market for strategic and critical materials will interfere with the imports of such materials from Latin America and the extent to which it may accordingly be necessary to subsidize such importation either directly or indirectly.

In the light of these and other uncertainties, the following tentative estimates are made as to the elements and costs of the programs for fiscal years 1953 and 1954:

1. Elements comprising the program:

a. An expanded technical cooperation program which would be an extension and intensification of the present technical cooperation activities.
b. Contribution to the construction of the Inter-American Highway on a scale to assure its completion by 1959.

[3] Not printed.

c. U.S. grant aid in the construction of other highways in Latin America to facilitate the production and acquisition of strategic and critical materials.

The lack of overland transportation facilities is a major impediment in Latin America to achieving a rapid increase in the production of strategic and critical materials. The lack of such facilities not only limits access to the strategic and critical materials but interferes with the production and transport of equipment and supplies, including foodstuffs, needed in connection with the production of the materials. In general, primary reliance for the construction of transportation facilities will continue to be placed on the governments of the Latin American countries and private investment and on loans which may be floated in connection with particular raw materials projects. For example, it appears that it will be possible to use private capital and loan funds in Brazil to help finance the completion of a better 240 kilometer road in the Amapa region and in improving access to the Urucum deposits in order to speed up production of manganese. It is believed, however, that there are cases where it would be in the interest of the U.S. to use grant assistance in the construction of highways to facilitate the speeding up of strategic and critical materials production, especially where our potential need for the materials is great and the construction of transport facilities might seriously interfere with development of deposits in the event of a rapid increase in requirements of the materials. For example, new roads will be necessary in Brazil if remote deposits of tungsten are to be opened up, in Chile if certain copper mines are to be brought into production, in Bolivia to encourage increased production of tin and tungsten, and in Guatemala access to, and production of, rich lead and zinc properties is limited by the necessity of transporting ores approximately 200 kilometers by mule back. These and other cases should be thoroughly explored to determine just how far it would be in the interest of the U.S. to help improve access to raw material resources. It is believed that there are a number of cases where inadequate transport facilities in Latin America are not only seriously limiting current production of strategic and critical materials but that they would constitute an even more serious limitation on a rapid expansion of such production and that the only way of overcoming the deficiency at present may be the extension of grant aid.

2. Estimated cost.

The cost of the program for each of the two years is estimated as follows:

a. Technical assistance	$30,000,000
b. Inter-American Highway	$ 8,000,000
c. Grant aid for other highway construction in Latin America	$25,000,000

547-842—79——69

C. Extent to Which Program Meets Needs of National Security.

So long as the Latin American Governments maintain their present political orientation toward the U.S. and our dependence upon them for raw materials continues, increased production in Latin America should promote the national security of the U.S. The factors limiting the economic aid program proposed for Latin America are our desire to rely to the maximum extent possible on private enterprise, loans and the Latin American Governments themselves to finance their own economic development needs. Maintenance of the present ratio of Latin American contributions to U.S. contributions in technical cooperation activities means that the rate of expansion of such activities is limited by the ability and willingness of the Governments of Latin American countries to contribute. The program proposed for Latin America is also limited by the general assumption that there will be no general war and that our need for encouraging production of strategic and critical materials is therefore not as great as it would be in the event of such a war during this period. Should this assumption prove incorrect our requirements for strategic and critical materials would not only increase but these increased requirements would undoubtedly have to be met to an even larger extent from Western Hemisphere sources.

340.210/11–2751: Circular airgram

The Acting Secretary of State to Diplomatic Offices in the American Republics [1]

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, November 27, 1951—2:35 p. m.

CONTINUATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR LATIN AMERICA

It will be recalled that prior to the Fourth Session of the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA) in Mexico City in June,[2] the Department had been considering a plan for the possible merger of ECLA into the Inter-American Economic and Social Council (IA-ECOSOC), or, if this could not be agreed, for the holding of annual simultaneous sessions of the two bodies.[3] The Department is in receipt of a despatch from the Embassy at Quito [4] inquiring with regard to

---

[1] Sent also to diplomatic offices in London, The Hague, and Paris.

[2] The Fourth Session of ECLA was held in Mexico City from May 28 to June 16, 1951. Documentation on U.S. participation in the session is in decimal file 340.210 and Lot 60 D 665. For additional information, see the Department of State Bulletin, June 11, 1951, pp. 955–956.

[3] For previous documentation on the status of ECLA, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 672 ff.

[4] Not printed.

the Department's current views in connection with this matter, and considers that the following information may be of general interest.

It will be recalled that after the Second Session of ECLA in 1949 at Havana, members of the delegation concluded that a merger of the two organs might be desirable, on the grounds that there was no need for two Multilateral economic organs in the same region. Several influential Latin American Delegations had indicated that they might accept some solution along these lines, and it appeared that such a step might be taken in 1951, which was time when the UN–ECOSOC would be considering the reorganization of its three regional commissions, including ECLA. However when the matter came up for reconsideration early in 1951, the situation had changed. By this time, Dr. Raoul Prebisch,[5] who had taken over as Executive Secretary of the Commission, had built up a very considerable degree of support in Latin America both for his own work, and for the Commission itself. When, therefore, the matter was discussed informally with some of the Foreign Ministers of Latin America while they were in Washington in April,[6] although there was some support for the idea of a merger from some countries including Colombia and Venezuela; nevertheless, Brazil and Chile were opposed to the plan; the Mexican attitude was cautious and certain other countries were non-committal. In view of these facts, it became clear that general agreement to a merger could not be obtained.

The U.S. Delegation was accordingly instructed to seek a solution to this problem at the Fourth Session of ECLA, in Mexico, on the basis of simultaneous sessions of the two bodies. A suggestion to that effect was advanced by the Mexican delegation. In spite of the apparent logic of this solution, it met with determined opposition. Brazil, Chile, Argentina and Cuba were strongly opposed. Mexico indicated that it did not wish to press the matter against determined opposition. Colombia and Venezuela did not attend the session. Personal conversation with influential delegates indicated that many Latin Americans suspected that the U.S. desired a merger of the two bodies as a means through which it could dominate both. Several delegations stated that ECLA was the only economic organ in Latin America which was genuinely Latin American in sentiment. The delegate from Brazil stated privately that he was under personal instructions from the President[7] himself not even to admit the existence of the problem of coordination at a governmental level. As the Mexican delegation stated at a closed session, the problem was fear and suspicion and such feelings could not be dealt with by logic.

---

[5] Raúl Prebisch was an Argentine economist.

[6] Reference is to the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the American States, held in Washington, March 26–April 7, 1951. Documentation concerning the meeting may be found on pp. 925 ff.

[7] Getúlio Dornelles Vargas, President of Brazil.

As a result of this, the Commission adopted a resolution which calls for the establishment of a Committee on Coordination between IA–ECOSOC and ECLA which will be made up of the Executive Secretaries of both bodies and other secretariat officials. This Committee would handle coordination of effort between the two secretariats.

In addition the resolution designated Dr. Prebisch to consult with an official of the Organization of American States (presumably Dr. Lleras) to work out measures which they consider adequate to deal with the problem of coordination "at the governmental level".

The U.S. Delegation did not feel too dissatisfied with the above result for the following reasons among others:

1. The resolution adopted does face the problem of coordination at a governmental level and it is hoped that Messrs. Prebisch and Lleras may come forth with a realistic solution since both are fully conscious of the nature of the problem; and can be expected to attack it in good faith.
2. The Delegation was much impressed with the work of ECLA and of its Secretariat, and particularly with Dr. Prebisch himself. The Delegation felt that ECLA is building up a body of Latin American thought in the fields of economic development and trade which is essentially realistic and useful. As is pointed out in the last few pages of the Delegation's report which was circulated to Embassies in the region, it was felt that Dr. Prebisch is in a position to bring home to Latin American officials economic truths which they would not accept on the basis of any statement made by U.S. representatives.

The present policy of the Department is set forth in the following statement by the U.S. Delegation to the Fourth Session of ECLA at Mexico City:

"The Delegation of the United States declares that the Government of the United States is profoundly impressed with the high quality of the work being carried out by ECLA; that it wishes to see this work continued; and that it will give it its sincere and strong support.

"My Government, of course, will continue to maintain its interest in the coordination of the work of ECLA and the Inter-American Economic and Social Council at all levels but it will await the report of the Committee, which it is proposed to create, before supporting any specific method for realizing that coordination."

At the Second Extraordinary Meeting of IA–ECOSOC held at Panama in August 1951, the Council took note of the resolution passed by ECLA and (1) agreed to accept ECLA's invitation to form a coordinating committee composed of the Executive Secretaries and other officials of ECLA and IA–ECOSOC and (2) agreed to designate an OAS official to study, jointly with the UN officer referred to in the ECLA resolution, the measures necessary and appropriate for coordination on government level and to submit their decisions to subsequent meetings of ECLA and IA–ECOSOC.

The Department feels that a basis will be worked out for avoiding any important duplication of work between the two organs. This may be based upon an understanding under which ECLA would assume responsibility in the field of long-term studies while IA–ECOSOC would concern itself principally with short-term matters. In this connection it will be noted that Dr. Prebisch has already suggested to UN–ECOSOC that the next plenary session of ECLA be postponed until the Spring of 1953, and has stated that he would prefer to have the Commission meet only every other year. It will be noted that, since the first year of ECLA existence, cases of actual duplication between the two Secretariats have been rare.

Finally, the UN Economic and Social Council has just voted with strong Latin American support to continue ECLA indefinitely with essentially its present terms of reference.

WEBB

ARA/REA Files, Lot 57 D 597 [1]

Memorandum by the Acting Administrator of the Technical Cooperation Administration (Bingham) to the Assistant to the Director of Mutual Security (Ohly) [2]

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] December 19, 1951.

Subject: Bureau of Budget Marking for Economic Aid for Latin America in Fiscal Year 1953

IIAA and ARA have recommended that the Bureau of the Budget marking for economic aid for Latin America for fiscal year 1953 be appealed. I concur, since I share their belief that the reduction made by the Bureau is too drastic and that the Bureau should be asked to agree to a figure of $30 million for the bilateral program and the United States contribution to the OAS technical cooperation program together.

The Bureau states that the amount approved by it would provide for an expansion in the bilateral program of approximately 85 per cent above present rate of obligation. The Bureau also makes the general comment relative to Titles II, III and IV that the "agency projection for 1952 took no account of July–October experience, but instead copied the estimates made last spring". The present rate of obligation is, of course, the result of the lateness of the 1952 appropriation. The rate of obligation during the July–October period was determined not by the judgment of any of the agencies as to what was desirable but by a resolution of Congress limiting expenditures to the rate of the previous year. The April–June rate, increased by a factor to permit the growth of existing programs and the addition of desirable new programs, would undoubtedly be a much fairer standard for judging the size of the 1953 program. The agencies which formulated the 1953 program considered it reasonable and feasible.

[1] Records relating to the mutual security program in Latin America for the period 1951–1956, as maintained by the Office of Inter-American Regional Affairs.

[2] Drafted by Mr. Edward G. Cale, Director, Office of Regional American Affairs.

IIAA assures me that by the end of fiscal year 1952 it expects to have executed susbtantially all of the 1952 bilateral program and to have spent or obligated the entire $18 million authorized for the program. As you know, IIAA has recently requested the transfer of $2 million to the 1952 IIAA program from the amounts authorized for other areas.

The Bureau's reduction appears to have been based to a considerable extent on its belief (1) that there will be a shortage of technicians for the 1953 technical cooperation program generally and (2) that the funds for Latin America should be curtailed in order that a larger number of technicians may be available for other areas. I believe that these views are subject to serious question on both counts. The problem of recruiting competent personnel is difficult but IIAA has found that an adequate number of competent technicians can be obtained through an active recruitment program. Furthermore, as you will recall, representatives of IIAA, the Department of Agriculture, and the Federal Security Agency expressed the view at the hearings before the Bureau that with an active recruitment program the technicians required for the program recommended for 1953 can be found.

The suggestion that the Latin American program be curtailed in order that more technicians may be provided for other areas overlooks the following considerations:

1. Some of the principal qualifications for a technician working in Latin America are familiarity with one or more of the languages spoken in Latin America and with customs and habits of the people. Because of such qualification some personnel would be willing to work in Latin America but not elsewhere.

2. Because of the well established nature of the Latin America program the number of new technicians required in relation to the number already employed is less than for other areas.

3. It is not safe to assume, under present international conditions, that there are any "non-crisis" areas. Latin America because of such factors as its proximity to the United States and its raw materials is of extreme importance to us. As Mr. Miller indicated during the hearings before the Bureau, placing Latin America in an inferior status in such matters as foreign aid has already made the task of obtaining Latin American support for United States objectives more difficult.[3] The

---

[3] In a memorandum to Mr. John P. Hoover, of the Office of South American Affairs, and Mr. Sayre, dated July 26, 1951, Mr. Miller had stated in part the following:

"In preparing our revised program for fiscal year 1953, I believe that we should review carefully our proposals in relation to the programs of other extent of Communist influence in Guatemala and attempts now being made to extend that influence to such vital areas as Panama and several recent examples of Latin American non-support of the United States, such as the vote of a considerable number of the Latin American countries for Byelorussia, rather than Greece for a seat on the Security Council,[4] indicate that we cannot continue to take Latin American support for granted.

The programs in the other American republics have demonstrated that these governments need the technical assistance of the United States and want to work with the United States on the solution of basic economic and social problems which confront them and which directly and indirectly affect the United States. They respond by channelling substantial sums of money into the cooperative programs and into related activities with the effect that programs are not only assisting in the improvement of economic conditions but the Latin American governments are assuming ever greater responsibility. The United States assistance has been so small in the past to permit only cooperative programs on a spotty basis. The proposed program will permit a more balanced activity and greatly stimulate the activities of the Latin American governments. A $30 million program is only one and half million average per country.

The amount requested for a United States contribution to the technical cooperation program of the Organization of American States was $1,500,000. The Bureau of the Budget, considering carry-over, has allowed $1,000,000 or the same contribution as in calendar years 1951 and 1952.

While the present payment record of the other American republics to the Program does not appear to warrant raising our contribution there are strong indications that when the United States contribution is actually offered in November or December 1952, an increased contribution would be justified. Our inability to offer an increased contribution at that time, if expectations as to the size of the total OAS program and the payment record of other countries prove correct, would have a more damaging effect on the program than our original offer of only $1,000,000 in 1950 to a program which we knew at the time would cost a total of over $3,000,000. The contribution to the OAS program should be a part of the total program for Latin America with the understanding that the amount to be used for the OAS would areas from the standpoint of assuring ourselves that Latin America is not being discriminated against. From indications that I have seen, I am increasingly concerned that we are applying one standard to Latin America and a different standard to all other areas of the world. While I do not necessarily at this stage wish to suggest any diversion from the policy which we have pursued of opposing grant aid to Latin America for capital investment projects, I nevertheless believe that the possibility of discrimination as between areas is sufficiently great so as to warrant a careful review of it by us in conjunction with Ambassador [Walter] Thurston [of the Policy Planning Staff]." (Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26) probably not be less than $1,000,000 and if the payment record at the time warranted, it might go as high as $1,500,000. In any case the amount offered by the United States would be covered by a percentage proviso.

---

[4] Documentation on this subject may be found on pp. 78 ff.

I believe that the $30 million program for Latin America is both realistic and desirable, especially when it is considered that our contribution to the OAS technical cooperation program will also come from this figure.

ARGENTINA

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND ARGENTINA[1]

611.35/2–1351

The Chargé in Argentina (Mallory) to the Department of State

SECRET BUENOS AIRES, February 13, 1951.

No. 1184

Subject: Discussions between President Perón[2] and Former Ambassador George S. Messersmith.[3]

In connection with the general condition of United States-Argentine relations and with special reference to the positions to be taken by the two countries at the Conference of Foreign Ministers of the American Republics,[4] to be held in Washington beginning March 26, 1951, it was considered desirable by Assistant Secretary Miller[5] to convey certain thoughts and considerations to President Juan Perón. Inasmuch as former Ambassador Messersmith, a person who has had a sympathetic and understanding attitude towards Argentina's problems, who has had a long and cordial friendship with President Perón and who has spoken and can speak to the President with great frankness, was proceeding to Argentina, Mr. Miller requested him to approach the President. In the letters referred to, Mr. Miller provided certain background information in addition to discussions held in Washington.

Mr. Messersmith arrived in Buenos Aires on January 29, 1951.[6] Arrangements were completed for him to see the President. He has prepared full memoranda of his conversations, which are enclosed. Inasmuch as the memoranda themselves are the important source of infor-

---

[1] Continued from Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 691 ff.

[2] Juan Domingo Perón, President of Argentina.

[3] Mr. Messersmith had served as Ambassador to Argentina, 1946–1947. Shortly after his retirement from the Foreign Service in August 1947, he had accepted a position as Chairman of the Board, Mexico Power and Light Company, an affiliate of a large public utility in Buenos Aires known as CADE (Compañía Argentina de Electricidad).

[4] Reference is to the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of American States, held in Washington, March 26–April 7, 1951; documentation on the meeting may be found on pp. 925 ff.

[5] Edward G. Miller, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.

[6] Mr. Messersmith was in Buenos Aires from January 29 to March 2. During that time he had several conversations with President Perón. Extensive memoranda of his discussions with the President were transmitted to the Department of State under cover of this despatch, and also despatch 1320, from Buenos Aires, March 6, 1951 (611.35/3–651).

mation, no attempt will be made in this despatch to summarize them. It may be pointed out, in explanation, that three memoranda are enclosed,[7] of which Enclosure No. 3 not only constitutes a statement of what Mr. Messersmith considered he could say on behalf of the Department of State but was so prepared that it could be translated and given to President Perón following his request.

The reporting officer, in connection with this matter and the three enclosures, observes that the attitudes and comments made by President Perón are, by and large, quite favorable to an understanding of the position of the United States. This reported attitude is not reflected in other facets of Argentine life, including the Administration press, the attitude and statements of his ministers and advisers. A condition previously noted still exists, namely, that it is difficult to determine whether to believe the President, who speaks in private, or to judge from the acts of the press and the government, which speak and act in public. His apparent unwillingness to face up in public or to condition the people of Argentina to realities is of paramount importance. It is believed that following this introduction by Mr. Messersmith Assistant Secretary Miller, during his projected visit the first days of March 1951, will find it desirable to endeavor to obtain precise and categoric definitions of President Perón's stand.

L. D. MALLORY

Enclosure 3

MEMORANDUM

FEBRUARY 10, 1951.

During a conversation which I had the privilege of having with President Perón on Friday afternoon, February 9, I conveyed to him the following thoughts and observations which Assistant Secretary of State Miller had asked me to convey to the President with respect to the attitudes of the State Department on the Conference to be held in March of the Foreign Ministers of the American States.[8] I said that naturally the thinking of the State Department was still in a preliminary stage as it was preparing for the Conference in collaboration with other Departments and Agencies of the United States Government, and that final conclusions on many points would only be formulated in the period before the Conference began. Assistant Secretary of State Miller, however, felt that it might be interesting to President Perón to have the thoughts of the Department as formulated so far.

[7] Enclosures 1 and 2 are not printed.

[8] Mr. Messersmith's conversation with President Perón on February 9, which took place at the President's home in Olivos and is reported in enclosure 2, covered a wide range of topics in addition to the Foreign Ministers Conference, including Argentina's economic problems and the necessity for the nations of the Western Hemisphere to collaborate in the interests of hemisphere defense.

1. The United States Government intends firmly to pursue its policy of friendship towards Argentina. There are obstacles and sources of friction on each side, but the United States Government is of the firm opinion that through patience and mutual understanding such obstacles and sources of friction can be minimized and eventually overcome.

2. The United States Government does not intend in any way to use the forthcoming Conference of Foreign Ministers to place Argentina in any embarrassing position but, on the contrary, hopes to facilitate in the ways within its power the most complete cooperation on the part of the Argentine government.

3. The United States Government strongly hopes that each delegation at the Conference will be able to understand the problems and views of the other delegations so as to reduce the possibilities of misunderstanding which may be inherent in the situation.

4. To facilitate the long-term approximation between the two governments and countries, the United States Government realizes that it will be necessary on its part to keep working on the elimination of the historic prejudices and misconceptions which exist against Argentina in the United States, and that conversely it realizes that its success in this effort will depend so largely on a similar attitude and action on the part of the Argentine government in eliminating such prejudices and misconceptions in the Argentine against the United States. The increasing disposition of the American press to meet Argentina half way is shown by the favorable reaction in the American press to such conciliatory gestures as the release of Balbin.[9]

5. The United States Government is keeping the people of the United States fully informed on all phases of its policy with respect to the extremely critical world situation in which it and we all find ourselves, and has made and is making every possible effort to make the fundamental facts of the world situation and their significance for the United States and the Western world completely clear so that public opinion is prepared for and ready to support the acts of the Government. The United States Government hopes that President Perón and the Argentine government will take more definite steps to align themselves publicly and unequivocally with the Western Powers in the present conflict, and prepare public opinion in the Argentine for such definite and unequivocal attitudes on the part of the Argentine government. References to the Third Position [10] are not understood in the United States and lead to confusion there as to the real

[9] Ricardo Balbín, a political opponent of President Perón, had been arrested while campaigning as a candidate for the governorship of Buenos Aires during the provincial elections in March 1950, subsequently sentenced to 5 years in prison, but pardoned and released in early January 1951.

[10] For the Department of State's view of President Perón's doctrine of the Third Position, see the Policy Statement for Argentina, p. 1112.

attitude of President Perón and the Argentine government and tend towards alienating public opinion in the United States. With the position of President Perón and of the Argentine government so strong internally as it now undoubtedly is, it is difficult to understand why a more unequivocal stand should not be taken and why Argentine public opinion should not be more adequately prepared.

6. As concerns the Conference of Foreign Ministers, the United States Government is aware that Argentina has difficult internal political and constitutional problems with regard to the question of military cooperation outside of the hemisphere, and in this respect the United States Government has full understanding and is prepared to ease as much as possible Argentina's share at the Conference.

7. The United States Government does not have presently in mind discussing at the Conference or raising in any way for discussion at the Conference, anything which will add to the commitments which the various countries of the Americas have already solemnly assumed under the Rio Treaty [11] and the United Nations Charter.[12] What the United States believes should and must be considered is the implementation of the commitments already solemnly undertaken by all the governments concerned. Because of the overwhelming importance of the situation which we all have to face, and of the issues which are at stake, and of the Conference taking clearly defined decisions, we hope that everyone will understand in all of the American countries the necessity of having the Conference do more than speech making or passing equivocal half-hearted or inadequate resolutions or measures. Public opinion throughout the free world will not be impressed if the Conference produces merely empty phrases and does not show a solid determination on the part of all of the American states to resist Communist aggression.

8. The United States Government is of the opinion that the Conference will make it clear that the armed forces of each country can be committed outside of its national territory only in accordance with the constitution and laws of each sovereign country. Every country has this same problem and the discussions in the United States Congress and in the press of the United States indicate how fully and clearly it is understood and is being examined. It is nevertheless obvious, in view of the world crisis, that it is important to take as positive positions in advance of actual aggression as the constitutional processes of the various American states permit.

9. In connection with the political and military parts of the agenda of the Conference, the United States hopes that the Conference would,

---

[11] For text of the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (Rio Treaty), opened for signature at Rio de Janeiro, September 2, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, December 3, 1948, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 1838, or 62 Stat. (pt. 2) 1681.

[12] For text, see Department of State Treaty Series (TS) No. 993, or 59 Stat. 1031.

first of all, adopt a declaration reaffirming the solidarity of the hemisphere and the declaration to resist aggression, and to take cooperative measures towards this end. Such declaration must be strong, unequivocal and adequate.

10. One of the objectives the United States will seek at the Conference will be that the Ministers give broad policy directives to the Inter-American Defense Board to undertake plans to implement our treaty commitments and those of all the American states with regard to hemisphere defense. These directives of the Inter-American Defense Board would, of course, be subject to the approval of the respective governments. In this respect the United States Government is of the opinion that hemisphere defense is not merely a passive concept, but includes defense measures outside of the hemisphere. The action of each government will depend on its constitutional processes.

11. With respect to the second item of the agenda of the Conference, the United States plans for its part to place emphasis on the control of subversive activities rather than endeavoring to propose legal concepts which would be difficult for some countries to comply with. Specifically, the United States Government has no intention at this time of proposing to or asking other countries to sever diplomatic relations with Soviet Russia or to outlaw the Communist Party as neither of these programs are in effect in the United States. The points on which the United States Government believes it should concentrate in its proposals will be such matters as control of travel by subversive elements, protection of strategic installations and such similar measures. The United States Government believes that the Conference will discuss the exchange of information, and on this point the planning of the United States has not progressed very far at this date. It is not, however, the present opinion of the United States that a replica of the Committee for Political Defense [13] which met in Montevideo during the war should be recreated, and its present thinking is that any multilateral consultation which may be deemed necessary may probably be done within the framework of the COAS. In this latter respect, however, the thinking of the Department of State has not progressed adequately and the matter is receiving consideration.

12. With regard to the items on economic matters on the agenda of the Conference, the United States has not been able to formulate and conclude its planning. In view of the critical world situation, the responsibilities which this situation places on the United States and its economy and production, new agencies having to do with wartime economic activities, have, as is well known, been recently established. These agencies are proceeding with their organization studies, planning and action. The Department of State in its determination of its attitudes on economic items which may arise during the Conference and which can or should be discussed in the interest of all, must coordinate its planning with that of existing and new agencies having primary responsibilities in these matters. By the time that the Conference meets, or beforehand, it will have been possible for the State Department to more clearly define the position of the United States Government.

[13] For previous documentation on this subject see Foreign Relations, 1947, vol. VIII, pp. 95–100.

13. The United States Government believes that one objective under the economic points of the agenda should be to provide for the maximizing of the utilization and the most effective distribution for the defense effort of critical materials. With regard to price policies, it is hoped that whatever price control policy is worked out within the United States Government will take into account the need of consideration of the views of other countries in trying to operate on the basis of agreement. The United States Government has in mind very much the procedures during the last war and certain frictions and wishes to avoid such unnecessary frictions.

14. In the economic aspects of the agenda a point of special interest to us as to the other American countries will be the administration of the allocations and priorities programs in the United States, which necessarily have to be set up to meet the imperative needs of defense effort and production. In planning for the Conference in this respect, the United States Government and the Department of State have very much in mind the experience and the problems of the last world war. It is a hope of the United States Government to be able to work out a fair and equitable administration of our allocations and priorities programs and to have its allocations programs so administered as to recognize the need, not only for maintaining a fair level of economic activity in the American states, but also so far as the imperative exigencies of the situation permit, a reasonable level of economic expansion.

I informed President Perón that I considered it a privilege on the part of the Department of State and Assistant Secretary of State Miller to convey the foregoing to him. It would be appreciated by him that these were preliminary thoughts of the Department of State and that its final plans for the meeting had not yet been made, as this was obviously impossible because of the time-consuming nature of the consideration and discussions which had to take place within the Government in order to prepare for this important meeting. I said that I believed, however, that the foregoing represented the thinking of the Department of State at this time. I said that Assistant Secretary of State Miller, as he knew, was planning to make a short visit to several of the American countries before the meeting, and around the end of February, and that he would undoubtedly, when he arrived in Buenos Aires, and where the President had been so kind as to indicate he would be glad to see him, be able to elucidate on the foregoing points and to discuss with the President further thinking of the United States Government and the Department of State with respect to the Conference, as it had developed in the interval.

GEORGE S. MESSERSMITH

Editorial Note

By an exchange of notes, dated March 2 and March 27, 1951, at Washington, the United States and Argentina agreed to extend for a period of one year from its date of expiration the Military Aviation Mission Agreement of June 29, 1940, which, after several extensions, had expired on June 29, 1950. Copies of the notes are filed under decimal numbers 735.58/3–251 and 735.58/3–1651. For the text of the 1940 agreement, see Department of State Executive Agreement Series (EAS) No. 175, or 54 Stat. 2320.

On October 12, the Argentine Embassy informed the Department of State by note that the Argentine government had decided to dispense with the Military Aviation Mission (735.58/10–1151); on December 17 the Department of State received a confirmatory note, dated December 12, to that effect (735.58/12–1251).

735.00/3–651

The First Secretary of Embassy in Argentina (Pool) to the Department of State

SECRET BUENOS AIRES, March 6, 1951.

No. 1319

Subject: Developments During Mr. Miller's Visit.[1]

[1] Assistant Secretary Miller visited Buenos Aires March 2–5, as part of a tour of five Latin American countries (Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Peru, and Uruguay) during the latter part of February and early March. He was invited to Argentina ostensibly to attend the Pan American Games, but the actual purpose of his visit was to engage in preliminary discussions with Argentine officials concerning the forthcoming Meeting of Consultation and current problems in United States-Argentine relations. Mr. Miller's memorandum describing the discussions, dated March 4–5, was transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 1321, dated March 6, 1951 (110.15–Mi/3–651). In the covering despatch, Chargé Mallory stated in part the following:

"Perhaps the principal value of the visit will be the realization by the Argentines that Mr. Miller made no requests and offered no help except in general international cooperation. The tactic of causing Argentina to realize that she cannot bargain with us using civil liberties or anything else as a pawn, and that she needs us and our close allies more than we need her, should bear good fruit, providing that the several agencies of our Government maintain a united front in policy and practice. The Embassy most strongly supports the views of the Assistant Secretary in this matter. It recommends that no overt action be taken which could cause offense to Argentina, or provide the basis for reaction on her part. It recommends that we follow a policy of quiet watchful waiting, of doing as little for her as possible, allow her to become deeply concerned over supplies and materials which she needs; in short, to follow a policy of masterly inaction which will place us in a dominant position to the end that Argentina can realize that her own best interests are to quickly become our partner in the divided world of today."

Mr. Miller's visit produced some unexpected developments, the evaluation of which the Embassy has not yet completed.

During the whole time Mr. Miller was here, he never once saw Peron alone.[2] The Embassy was informed that Friday afternoon, March 2, would be reserved for his talks with the President, and that Miller and Paz [3] would proceed to the Pink House after Mr. Miller's call on the Foreign Minister at 3:30. Nothing happened on Friday, however, or on Saturday either. Mr. Miller finally was invited to luncheon at the President's Town House on Sunday and spent about two hours with him then, but always in company of the others present—the members of the Economic Council, and Mrs. Peron.[4] It was quite clear that it had been decided Peron was not to see Miller alone. It is not known whether this idea originated with the President or with his advisers. All of this is in sharp contrast to Mr. Miller's visit last year,[5] when he and the President sat down in a friendly spirit and talked things out over the table. This time Cereijo [6] and Evita did the talking.

While Mr. Miller was in Peron's company, no specific matters whatever were touched upon, the conversation being confined entirely to generalities. Peron stated that Argentina was fully committed to supporting the United States in the coming conflict, and he recognized that Argentina must soon define its position. Instead of attempting to bring up specific matters for discussion, he went out of his way to talk of other matters—such as the secret scientific experiments in Bariloche [7]—which are not on the agenda. When Mr. Miller said goodbye to Peron on Monday morning, March 5, Peron made a half-hearted effort to explain away his attitude, which explanation Mr. Miller took to be a feeble apology.

The thought has been expressed that the President is too harassed to have taken on the kind of discussion which would doubtless have ensued in a private conversation with the Assistant Secretary. It is fairly

---

[2] In a letter to Chargé Mallory, dated February 5, 1951, Mr. Miller had stated in part the following: "Regardless of the visit and regardless of the ground covered by George Messersmith, I sincerely hope that I will have an opportunity to talk with Perón alone. The deterioration in U.S.-Argentine relations during the last three weeks is most discouraging to us, as I assume it is to you, and I would like to go over with Perón some of the choicer morsels which his press has been serving up recently and compare them to some of the letters which he sent me last spring and summer." (Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26)

[3] Hipólito Jesús Paz, Argentine Minister of Foreign Relations.

[4] María Eva Duarte de Perón.

[5] For documentation on Mr. Miller's visit to Buenos Aires, February 19–24, 1950, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 691 ff.

[6] Ramón Antonio Cereijo, Argentine Minister of the Treasury and President of the National Economic Council.

[7] Reference is to the experiments with atomic energy conducted for the Argentine Government by Dr. Ronald Richter. On March 24, 1951, President Perón announced that Dr. Richter's experiments had resulted in the discovery of an improved method for producing atomic energy, but the announcement ultimately proved frivolous. Documents pertaining to this subject are in Department of State decimal files 835.2546 and 935.7137.

clear that he is not a very happy man these days. From several different sources, word was pointedly got to the Chargé d'Affaires and to Mr. Miller that above all Mr. Miller should say nothing whatever to Peron about the Prensa matter.[8] From this it is gathered that the situation was too touchy for him, that it had gotten out of hand, and that Peron had a bull by the tail and did not know what to do with it. And too, from the conversations with the Perons, it appeared that they were really concerned about local developments and the outcome of the next election.

Foreign Minister Paz and Remorino[9] appeared to understand far better than anyone else the United States position vis-à-vis Argentina. Both strongly indicated their intention of working to bring about the improvement necessary. Paz went so far as to say that he would resign if Argentina did not embark on a program of collaboration with the United States for he would not wish to be in office if things went the other way. Paz stated that he foresaw no difficulties in the political or military sphere at the coming meeting of Foreign Ministers.

Cereijo was the official who did most of the talking, and he professed to be speaking for Peron. He told Mr. Miller that Peron was ready to do what he wanted, and desired to know exactly what was wanted so that he could go on from there. (Such a statement should more properly come from the Foreign Minister.) Mr. Miller pointed out to Cereijo (and to Evita) the great effect on American public opinion which recent developments in the field of civil liberties in Argentina had had. Neither Cereijo nor Evita appeared to appreciate the situation, but agreed with the necessity for Argentina's going along with the United States in the economic field, Cereijo saying flatly that Argentina was in accord with the economic ideas which the United States would develop at the meeting, and that he had heard Peron order Paz to lend the United States full support. Cereijo made light of Democracia's attacks on the United States, saying this was election year and such things should be expected. Just before Mr. Miller left for the airport, Cereijo said that Democracia would immediately be changing its line.

Evita emerged as the great and good friend of the United States. This was quite different from last year, when during the whole course of Mr. Miller's visit she had no word of praise whatever for us. She now professed to be a great admirer of the United States—particularly for the stand it has taken in defense of freedom. She indicated her belief in the necessity for Argentina to cooperate with the United [8] La Prensa, the independent Argentine newspaper, was forced to cease publication on January 26, 1951, because of a boycott of the paper by the Argentine newsvendors' union, an affiliate of the government-sponsored Central Confederation of Labor (Confederación General del Trabajo-CGT); on April 13 the newspaper was expropriated by the Argentine Government.

[9] Jerónimo Remorino, Argentine Ambassador to the United States.

States. She again expressed her desire to visit our country, but realized it would be politically inadvisable for her to go now. She expressed the hope that some day when she was again a private citizen, she would be able to make the trip. Evita showed no understanding whatever of the Prensa problem and said that the matter could be settled very simply by the Prensa giving in to the news boys.[10] She heatedly claimed that labor was free in Argentina. As to the possibility of there being created a Third International Labor Organization in the western hemisphere, she indicated that it could be postponed.

That Evita and Cereijo did the talking is considered significant. It would appear that she is in the saddle more than ever, and, of course, Cereijo is her man. (It is somewhat amusing that at one point in the conversation with Mr. Miller, Evita told Cereijo to "shut up".) The thought has been expressed that Peron may be losing his grip, and that he is an extremely worried man. If the word ever gets around that he is in reality leaving more to her these days, trouble will most likely come, for the army will not accept her.

[Here follows a personal reference.]

The Embassy has not as yet decided what to make of all this. Its thinking at the moment is still confused—even somewhat baffled. It is not disposed to take anything at its face value, for there is a wide discrepancy between words and actions. If, however, the Argentine Government really intends to play ball with us, it should certainly be starting soon, for it is only two weeks from today that the Foreign Minister, Ambassador Remorino, and the other members of the delegation to Washington will be leaving for the Conference. In any event, the Embassy officers are still hoping that before long they will be able to add up two and two and get four. In the meantime, fingers are crossed.

JOHN C. POOL

[10] In a letter to Chargé Mallory, dated March 13, 1951, Assistant Secretary Miller stated in part the following: "I am, of course, bitterly disappointed that instead of easing up on La Prensa since I left, the attitude seems more hostile than ever. It seems to me that unless some solution is found of the La Prensa case, we are going to be in for extremely hard sledding in connection with any constructive program towards Argentina." (Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26)

OAS Files, Lot 60 D 665[1]

Paper Prepared in the Department of State[2]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] March 15, 1951.
IAM D–10

[Here follow a covering sheet and a Negotiating Brief on the La Prensa problem.]

POSITION PAPER—"LA PRENSA" PROBLEM

Problem—What should the position of the US be if the closing of the Argentine newspaper La Prensa is interjected in any way into the Meeting of Foreign Ministers?

Recommendations—

1. The US should not take any initiative to bring up the La Prensa matter either with a view toward putting it on the agenda or toward introducing a resolution under an item already on the agenda.

2. The US should not support any move by another republic to place the La Prensa matter on the agenda either in general or specific terms.

3. The US should support a general resolution introduced by another Latin American republic favoring freedom of the press.

4. The US should not support any resolution by another country which specifically attacks the Peron regime and its attitude in the La Prensa dispute.

5. In discussions with other Foreign Ministers outside of the Meeting, the US should if the subject is brought up express its concern over the La Prensa situation. The US should point out that while the difficulties of La Prensa are an internal Argentine problem to be resolved in Argentina, comments on the La Prensa situation throughout the hemisphere clearly show that the problem has international aspects. We should state that when free institutions are attacked, the suppression of any part of them becomes a matter of concern to all who are fighting for their preservation. It would also be appropriate to refer to the detrimental effects of this affair on US-Argentine relations.

Discussion—On January 26, 1951, the independent Argentine news paper La Prensa was forced to cease publication owing to a boycott of the paper by the newsvenders' union, an affiliate of the Government-sponsored Central Confederation of Labor of Argentina (CGT). The venders gave as the reason for the boycott that La Prensa had refused their demands, among which were that 20% of the paper's revenue from classified advertising be given to the union for social aid and that the union be the sole distributor of the paper. The Department suspects that the action of the newsvenders was inspired by the Peron Government and in fact this is widely believed among those who have expressed themselves on the subject. The Peron Government has always been hostile towards La Prensa for the latter's critical stand towards the Government and its policies.

[1] Basic collection of records of meetings of the Organization of American States (OAS), other major inter-American governmental organizations, and inter-American conferences, together with related subject files for the years 1939–1962, as maintained and retired by the Office of Inter-American Regional Political Affairs.

[2] Drafted by Mr. Henry Dearborn of the Office of South American Affairs in preparation for the forthcoming Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs.

There has been widespread criticism of the Peron Government throughout the hemisphere because of its attitude towards La Prensa. Although that Government has stated that the issue is solely a labor matter and is not one in which Executive intervention would be justified, editorial opinion in the US and the other American republics has made abundantly clear that it believes Peron is taking advantage of the situation to silence his most powerful and vocal critic. The issue has therefor become one of freedom of the press.

Indignation toward the Peron regime appears to have reached its height following February 27 on which day one La Prensa employee was killed and several others wounded by unidentified persons who attempted to prevent La Prensa workers from entering the printing plant. The unidentified persons are generally believed to have been acting on behalf of the Government though proof of this is lacking.

At the present time the Argentine police have taken over the La Prensa plant and it has been announced that Dr. Alberto Gainza Paz, the publisher of the paper, is to be charged with violation of a 1945 decree regarding the security of the state. Gainza Paz, however, still has not been formally charged and is at liberty. A general meeting of the Government sponsored CGT on March 9, resolved in favor of complete support of the newsvenders' boycott and a boycott of La Prensa by all CGT affiliates.

The La Prensa question may arise in the Meeting of Foreign Ministers in a number of ways. An attempt to place it on the agenda is regarded to be the least likely approach since a unanimous vote is required for this purpose and Argentina would certainly not give its assent. Another possibility is that the problem will be introduced as a resolution under one of the items now on the agenda. The resolution could be either of a general nature on freedom of the press or could relate specifically to the situation in Argentina. The US would not wish to take any initiative at the Meeting to bring up the La Prensa matter. To do so would in all probability strain US-Argentine relations to an extent which might wreck the whole Meeting and make hemispheric solidarity on security objectives impossible. Furthermore, it would be unwise for the US to support a move by another republic to place the La Prensa matter on the agenda as a separate item. This is because every effort has been made to limit the agenda to its present terms and it is believed that the La Prensa matter does not fall within the objectives of the Meeting. On the other hand, if another American republic should introduce a general resolution on freedom of the press under an item already on the agenda the US should support this since it would neither be desirable nor politically expedient for the US to refrain from supporting a resolution which all the world knows we believe in so firmly. The US should not, however, support any resolution which specifically attacks the Peron regime since such an action might also wreck the conference and put an end to hemispheric solidarity. Action on the La Prensa matter during the meeting may be limited to cloak room discussion by the Foreign Ministers. In this case the US should express itself along the lines of recommendation 5.

611.35/3–2151

The Attaché in Argentina (Martin)[1] to the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Mann)

SECRET PERSONAL BUENOS AIRES, March 21, 1951.

DEAR TOM: Seldom do I express opinions without being asked, but the spirit moves and I do not resist. Jack Pool's policy despatches, particularly no. 1262 of February 26,[2] have aroused a great deal of discussion in the Embassy. While I can hardly believe that we are going to reverse at this critical time a policy of collaboration which has been so fruitful, Birgie[3] writes that Jack's despatches have rung the bell, and Mr. Miller's remarks of March 12 concerning La Prensa[4] suggest that he may have heard it. With Jack's knowledge, I should like to impose upon you long enough to present a few considerations on the other side, albeit hastily and in an informal fashion—to you who know so well the background from which I write. Although I hope to be as brief as possible, I must enter into some detail to avoid the appearance of dogmatism.

---

[1] T. R. Martin was the Attaché responsible for matters relating to technical assistance, Argentine trade with the Communist bloc nations, and the importation into Argentina of motion pictures produced in the United States.

[2] In this despatch Mr. Pool had suggested, inter alia, that the United States should demonstrate a "little indifference" toward Argentina, and that relations between the two countries should proceed "purely on a quid-pro-quo basis." (635.00/2–2651)

[3] Clarence E. Birgfeld, Officer in Charge of River Plate Affairs.

[4] In a press conference on March 12, Assistant Secretary Miller had made the following statement:

"In my speech before the Inter-American Press Congress in New York last October, I expressed what I believed to be the views of every American on the subject of freedom of expression. It follows from what I then said that I, like every believer in a free press and as a true friend of Argentina, must feel deeply concerned over the situation of La Prensa and its employees."

A memorandum of the press conference is in the Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26. Mr. Miller's statement appeared in the New York Times, March 13, 1951, p. 25.

[Here follows a personal reference.]

Jack's thesis is cogently expressed in the subject caption which he has given to despatch no. 1262: "If a hot war comes, Argentina will have to collaborate with the western powers." Jack argues that he was speaking in his despatches only of a possible war-time policy, but at least his last two paragraphs were misunderstood here and may have been misunderstood in the Department. I do not agree with his thesis, but even if it should be accepted as correct, it does not seem to be a reason for a change in present policy. War may not come and our policy should be designed to ensure Argentine collaboration whatever the event. To me the eventual achievement of Argentine collaboration is one of the most constructive accomplishments possible in our inter-American relations. To Jack it means considerably less.

What do we want from Argentina as we revert to a defense economy and face the prospect of war? You and I pondered this question many an hour several years ago, and I do not see that the answer has changed. We want Argentine collaboration on three different planes or of three different types which might be described as general collaboration, specific collaboration and the supply of goods.

Considering these types of collaboration in reverse order, Jack effectively demonstrates that we can probably get goods anyway. Economic laws will certainly direct the trade in our direction. This was the conclusion reached by you and Mr. Braden [5] in 1946, and I have little quarrel with it as now presented by Jack. But Jack again is speaking in terms of open hostilities and ignores, I think, that even in relation to the supply of goods, we may want more in peace or war than the economic laws will deliver. We may soon be unable to supply Argentina with goods in the quantities in which she can purchase them. To persuade Argentina, merely in order to accumulate credits in the United States, to increase production, to ration domestic consumption, or perhaps ultimately to sell at all to a country facing national extinction—to persuade Argentina to do these things, we might well need the maximum of collaboration.

Equally important from the point of view of policy, we need Argentina's collaboration in specific undertakings. The extent to which we get it will depend on Argentine interest, on the climate of our relations, and on what we can offer in the way of quid pro quo's. Where there is an Argentine interest, as in the control of local communistic activities, collaboration should come without too much effort, provided that the general climate is not adverse. We should continue to try to extend, however, the ground where Argentine and U.S. interests are mutual, through the long and dreary and discouraging process of cultivation and education. If the general climate should be adverse, we are not likely to get more in the way of specific collaboration, such as control of trade with Russian satellites, etc., than selfish national interest demands. Even in a favorable climate of relations, Argentina can be expected to request quid pro quo's in some instances, and in fact has already requested them. This should not surprise us. Even the British ask for quid pro quo's, and we in the same position would be obliged to seek them. In a favorable climate it should not be too difficult to bargain satisfactorily. Argentina herself has not suggested quid pro quo's for normal exports but only for commodities of an especially strategic character. Reciprocally, supplying her with her minimum needs on a nondiscriminatory basis, we might bargain with the special favors which she is likely to need and request. We should certainly yield no special favor without something in return and we should always bargain with a smile. The only objection to bargaining, as I see it, is that we might permit ourselves to resort to coercion.

[5] Spruille Braden was Ambassador to Argentina from May to August 1945, and Assistant Secretary of State for American Republic Affairs from August 1945 to June 1947.

To me coercion means in the circumstances a threat of being deprived of minimum quantities of essential goods or of being made the subject of discrimination. What coercion means to Argentina and to other Hispanic-American countries was clearly stated at Bogotá:[6] "No State may apply or encourage coercive measures of an economic and political character in order to force the sovereign will of another State and to obtain from the latter advantages of any nature."[7] That Argentina would regard denial of minimum quantities of essential goods as coercion is already indicated by press interpretations of Mr. Miller's statement of March 12.

If we succeed in achieving collaboration in the supply of goods and in specific undertakings, general collaboration should come easily. I have in mind, for example, support of U.S. positions in the United Nations and in the councils of the OAS. George Kennan emphasized when here how important support in the United Nations is, and we know how important Argentine support in the OAS might be. Our present programs and policies are certain to cause dissention and contention between ourselves and the other American republics. If Argentina should be collaborating with us, the dissidents will be without leadership and the dissention will come to nothing. If, on the other hand, Argentina should have to bargain with us for every consideration and the spirit of collaboration should not prevail, she will be eager to comfort other dissidents and, ostensibly or in the background, encourage them and guide them, and the hemisphere will be divided.

[6] Reference is to the Ninth International Conference of American States, held at Bogotá, Colombia, March 30–May 2, 1948. For documentation on the conference, see Foreign Relations, 1948, vol. IX, pp. 1 ff.

[7] This is not the precise language of Article 16 of the Charter of the Organization of American States (Bogotá Charter), which reads as follows: "No state may use or encourage the use of coercive measures of an economic or political character in order to force the sovereign will of another State and obtain from it advantages of any kind." For text of the Charter, which was signed at Bogotá April 30, 1948, and entered into force for the United States on December 13, 1951, see United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), vol. 2 (pt. 2), p. 2394.

Although much more can and should be said by way of demonstration concerning the three types of collaboration and our need for them, I do not want to burden you further. Let me close with just a few personal observations:

1) Jack Pool has spoken of Argentina's need for the United States. Quite properly he did not attempt to assess the U.S. need for Argentina but, after all, it is the latter which must determine our policy. Not Argentina but the United States faces war. Not Argentina but the United States may soon be fighting for national existence. If Argentine collaboration was important in 1947, it must be important now, for the situation cannot be said to have improved. I do not pretend to foresee that continued cultivation of Argentina will realize all our hopes, but I am hesitant to risk losing in a moment of national crisis the gains of the last two years won at such a sacrifice of high moral and political principles by both the nation and individuals. The policy of cultivation seems to ensure the minimum that Jack promises in event of war, and in addition offers the possibility of securing somewhat more, come what may—of all of which we may shortly stand in dire need.

2) Our policy of cultivation of the Argentine Government, despite the aberration of ECA in 1948 and 1949,[8] has been eminently successful, particularly under Mr. Miller. He has accomplished much that was believed to be impossible. Where we have failed the Argentine Government has been unwilling or has found it impossible to change public policy. We ourselves have not been able to change public policy in order to meet Argentine requests.

3) When a totalitarian Government suppresses the press, there is occasion for sympathy and whatever assistance can practicably and properly be rendered, but there need be no surprise. When our Government decided in 1947 to welcome Perón into its bed, it deliberately accepted the possibility of certain consequences. As I recall, you personally outlined these consequences for Secretary Marshall.[9]

[Here follows a personal reference.]

4) And what of the difficulties which Perón faces in following a policy of collaboration with us? To many of his followers we are as contemptible as he is to us. Their personal interests and public policies are frequently opposed to ours. And the Opposition? Within a week I have attended two public meetings of the Radicals, the only organized opposition party with any appreciable strength. Attacks upon the United States in general, upon foreign capital, upon the Rio Treaty, upon Perón's momentary thought of sending Argentine soldiers to Korea aroused the loudest applause. Leaders of the Radical Party stated as firm principles that the Party is neutral in the present world situation. There was not a single reference to Communism or Russia in the first meeting where attacks on the United States were so bitter

[8] For documentation on the activities of the Economic Cooperation Administration (ECA) with respect to Argentina in 1949, see Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. II, pp. 473 ff.

[9] George C. Marshall, Secretary of State, 1947–1949.

as to embarrass the Argentines whom I had accompanied. When one of their most prominent leaders, Frondizi,[10] accused Perón of having obligated Argentina at Rio to send Argentine boys overseas, the applause was general and the loudest of the evening. The people as a whole, individualistic, proud, and stubborn, seem determined upon neutrality, much like the people of the United States from 1914 to 1917 and from 1939 to 1941. If, as Jack states, "thinking Argentines" doubtless realize that a victorious Russia would present a threat to their sovereignty, whereas they know that no such danger is inherent in victory by the West, there appear to be very few "thinking Argentines". Many may well prefer a balance between East and West of which they might take advantage. The East is still further away, and many are none too certain that victory of the West would present no threat. In fact the way in which we deal with Argentina in the present circumstances and during a war might well be taken as indicative of what a victory of the West would mean. Despite all of the ridiculous talk of Argentine independence, she is certainly independent at least in one respect: She thinks independently. The amazing thing is that Perón has gone as far as he has; and on one occasion, when there was thought of sending troops to Korea, he went too far for his own good but may have demonstrated his way of thinking.

5) Words in the press worry us. This is natural, for the press is controlled by the Government and we can assume that the words are approved by the Government in advance. I don't like the words of course, but in 1939 and 1940 Roosevelt himself backtracked many a time and played to the public. Perón may be doing the same. What concerns me is action and not words, and the action seems to be generally in our favor. You will recall that we went through the same thing with Spain during the last war. The Spanish press was filled with attacks upon the Allies and catered to the Nazi information office, but we got the action. All during the period of the bitter press attacks Spain released British and American aviators so that they might fight again, permitted transit of more than 25,000 volunteers for Allied armed forces, limited the amount of wolfram going to the enemy, supplied Britain with vital goods, and performed many other significant favors. Let us seek first the action, and later worry about the words. Maybe after the elections of 1952, even words will change.

6) You observed to me in 1947, I believe, that the great danger in the pursuit of policy toward Argentina by the United States was not that we would follow a policy of coercion or a policy of collaboration but that we would follow neither. To change the metaphor, you anticipated that we might fall between the two chairs, that is, by mixing coercion with collaboration, destroy the effect of either. In 1948 and 1949 ECA knocked us between the chairs. Resorting to rhetoric, let's not speak of comparative need but of mutual assistance, let's not speak of depriving one another but of supplying one another; let's not suggest a change to a policy known as anathema in Argentina, but affirm continuance of a policy which has already won Argentine favor; let's not risk our gains, but conserve them; let's not coerce by denying essentials to one another, but let's bargain for special favors. If our actual needs are not urgent, let's feign indifference to strengthen our bargaining position, but let's not adopt indifference as a basis of policy. Above all let's be patient as long as we get results and cultivate friendly relations with this difficult and impossible people, a policy which is so fundamentally inter-American that we need feel no shame if results invariably fall short of desires.

[10] Arturo Frondizi, a member of the Argentine Chamber of Deputies.

Well, that's it. If I'm merely reiterating arguments already considered and discounted, I can have only the satisfaction of getting them off my chest and apologize for troubling you with them. If I can only cause a moment's pause before we risk so much, your time spent in reading them may not have been wasted. The length of this letter must surely recall other letters of similar vein which you used to receive regularly from Buenos Aires. I am of course showing this letter to Jack, Joe,[11] and Les,[12] and they will no doubt comment in any manner that the arguments seem to require.

Best regards, T. R.

[11] Joe D. Walstrom, Counselor of Embassy for Economic Affairs.
[12] Lester D. Mallory.

Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26

The Officer in Charge of River Plate Affairs (Birgfeld) to the Chargé in Argentina (Mallory)

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, April 4, 1951.

OFFICIAL—INFORMAL

DEAR LES: I am taking an hour out from conference work this morning to write you on a few points which you might like to know about prior to the return to Buenos Aires of the Argentine delegation to the IAM. Please tell Joe Walstrom and Jack Pool that I am well aware that I owe them letters, but there is nothing I can do about it until the conference closes.

At the risk of encountering the fate which overtakes nearly all who endeavor to prognosticate, it now appears that the conference might close within the allotted two weeks. Final sessions have been scheduled for April 6 and 7 and invitations for the closing reception by the Foreign Ministers have been sent for the 7th also. Most of the log jams, principally on economic matters, apparently were broken yesterday.

Argentine policy at the conference apparently has been conducted on the basis of the same "masterly inaction" policy which has been ours for the last several weeks. The Argentines have avoided getting too deep into any of the economic debates in the subcommittees, but Paz did second in a plenary session a resolution on civil rights. Also, the Argentines joined in the approval by acclamation of the Declaration of Washington.[1]

[1] For text, see Pan American Union, Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs Held in Washington, D.C. March 26–April 7, 1951: Proceedings (Washington, 1951), pp. 236–237.

Despite fears and forebodings on our part, and numerous reports that the Argentines planned to sabotage the conference, they have not done so yet. Until the last curtain goes down anything could happen but I will stick my neck out by saying it has been my impression and belief since the conference began, barring some unexpected flareup, that the Argentines will cooperate within certain limits. Following the first plenary session on Tuesday, March 27 Vittone [2] remarked that we were all in the groove and would stay together throughout the conference. This alone might or might not have meant anything, and the two alternatives are still open, but his remark would fit in with a long luncheon conversation I had on March 26 with two of the Economic Counselors to the Embassy here in Washington and with a half hour conversation I had alone with Paz on Sunday, April 1 (even though April Fools Day).

Excepting for the above-mentioned March 26 luncheon with the Argentine Economic Counselors and also excepting the statements made by Paz and Vittone, the remainder of the Argentine delegation, both those from Buenos Aires and those attached to the Embassy here, has been considerably cooler than usual. For a week now such personal friends and acquaintances as Campos, Pelliza, Bunge, Schiopetto, Quirós, Cafiero, Biritos,[3] etc., have carefully refrained from any corridor conversation on substantive points and in general are considerably less cordial than they were two weeks ago. Since I know some of these people real well I cannot help but have the impression that they are following a deliberate policy. Vittone's favorite topic of conversation in recent days has been the need to extend the conference on some minor procedural points so that they will have time to visit various parts of the United States and Cafiero's (Financial Attaché) attitude seems to be reflected in his characterization of the conference as "este loquero".

Our policy vis-à-vis Argentina has been well established now for some three weeks, and is one of strict correctness in all matters. We are engaging in all of the customary social amenities and routine business relationships. However, we are avoiding where possible making any requests of Argentina, although we are pleased to consider on their merits any requests of us by the Argentines. Within this framework, for example, we are dragging our feet on any action regarding Williams' request for credit to finance tungsten and sulphur mining,[4] we have refrained from asking the Argentine delegation for its opinion regarding our reservation to the Bogota Charter, but we did casually inform the Argentine Embassy of its invitation to participate on the International Pulp and Paper Committee.[5]

[2] José Carlos Vittone, Director of the Political Department, Argentine Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

[3] The Argentine officials named here are identified as follows: Eusebio Campos, Under Secretary of Economy; Oscar Luis Pelliza, Under Secretary of Industry and Commerce; César Augusto Bunge y Alvarez Calderón, Economic Counselor, Argentine Embassy; Ovidio V. Schiopetto, Economic Counselor, Argentine Embassy; Carlos A. Quirós, Argentine Chargé; Antonio Francisco Cafiero, Financial Attaché; Eduardo Biritos Guevara, Economic Counselor, Argentine Embassy.

All of us here, from Ed Miller down are watching the Argentine situation very closely and discussing developments or lack of developments daily. Incidentally there is no one here endeavoring or with any inclination to attempt to carry on his own shoulders all of the weight of this problem. In this connection, I think you can be assured that we did understand what Jack Pool meant in his despatch [6] which I spoke of so highly a few weeks ago and, with respect to TR's letter [7] to Tom Mann and Tom's reply thereto,[8] I deliberately limit myself to saying that TR's fears are and were unfounded.

Returning again to the conference, continued vehement denunciations by the US press could reach such a stage that the Argentines would feel it impossible to overlook them. Press comment has been constant, daily, and reasonably widespread. Most of the Washington papers have something on the subject of Peronismo or La Prensa [9] or dictatorship in Argentina, etc., nearly every day. The National Press Club of Washington has now called for a day of mourning on Friday, April 6 to commemorate the passing of La Prensa and this morning's Washington Post editorialized on the distinct possibility that Perón will conspire with the Soviets, since there is little distinction between leftist and rightist totalitarianism. This subject of press attacks on Argentina was one of those which I discussed with Paz alone last Sunday. Paz referred of course to similar attacks which he would

---

[4] Thomas J. Williams, a United States citizen with extensive business interests in Argentina, had applied through Minerales y Metales, S. A. (MINMET) to the Export-Import Bank for a loan of $5,000,000 on behalf of Sociedad Minera, S. A. (SOMINAR), a firm in which he was a majority owner, in order to finance the purchase of equipment in the United States for the production of tungsten and sulphur in Argentina. Documents relating to the loan application are in decimal files 103–XMB, 835.14, and 835.2546.

[5] The Pulp and Paper Committee was one of six commodity committees established through the initiative of the United States, Great Britain, and France early in 1951. These committees collectively constituted the International Materials Conference (IMC); they were charged with reviewing the international supply position for scarce raw materials, and with recommending to governments measures to insure equitable distribution. For further information on the origin and development of the IMC, see Willis C. Armstrong (Acting Special Assistant, Office of International Materials Policy), "The International Materials Conference," Department of State Bulletin, July 2, 1951, pp. 23–30.

[6] Reference uncertain.

[7] T. R. Martin's letter of March 21, supra.

[8] Not printed.

[9] In a memorandum to the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs (Sargeant), dated March 28, 1951, the Assistant Chief of the Division of Public Liaison (Patterson) had attributed severe press criticism of the Department of State's position regarding La Prensa to Under Secretary of State James E. Webb's public statement that the closing of La Prensa was an internal Argentine matter and to the action of the United States delegation to the Twelfth Session of the United Nations Economic and Social Council, held at Santiago, Chile, February 20–March 21, 1951, in voting not to raise this issue (953.61/3–2851).

receive from the press in Buenos Aires. Paz' entire attitude supported what you have reported to the effect that he wishes to work with us. I could not help but believe him sincere, and only hope that he can survive the press attacks during the remainder of the conference and whatever might be awaiting for him when he gets back to Buenos Aires.

With kind personal regards and best wishes,

Sincerely yours, CLARENCE E. BIRGFELD

NAC Files, Lot 60 D 137 [1]

Minutes of Meeting No. 174 of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems, Held at Washington, April 26, 1951

SECRET

[Here follow a list of those persons present (20) and a discussion of a proposed settlement of United States Government postwar claims against West Germany.]

2. Proposed Export-Import Bank Loan to the Sociedad Minera Argentine, S.A.

Mr. Glendinning [2] said that the proposal covered a $5 million loan, not more than $2 million of which would be for sulphur and the remainder for tungsten. The loan would be to a private Argentine company without a government guarantee and would be supported by an appropriate contract with GSA for the acquisition of tungsten. The contract would cover at least 10,000 metric tons, and possibly 16,000 metric tons, of concentrates. The major question was that of the attitude of the Argentine Government with respect to that aspect of the problem. The proposed terms were that the credit be for 7 years at an interest rate of 5 percent (NAC Document No. 1130).[3]

Mr. Thorp [4] said that the key international problem here, assuming the technical operations were feasible, was making certain Argentina would allow the tungsten to be exported. The State Department was asking Mr. Williams, the promoter, to undertake to get a commitment from the Argentine Government. The State Department had felt that in all probability this would be adequate, since Argentina had a fairly good record of living up to commitments it has put on paper. In order to provide additional assurance the Department proposed that at some

---

[1] Master file of documents of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems (NAC) for the years 1945–1958, as maintained by the Bureau of Economic Affairs at the Department of State and subsequently preserved as item 70 of Federal Records Center accession 71 A 6682.

[2] C. Dillon Glendinning, Secretary of the National Advisory Council (NAC).

[3] Not printed.

[4] Willard L. Thorp, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs.

appropriate point, after an agreement had been reached between Mr. Williams and the Argentine Government, there would be a confirmation of that agreement through the United States Embassy in Argentina. This Government would then be in a position to insist that the tungsten be made available.

The Chairman [5] observed that this was fundamental to the credit. Mr. Gaston [6] said that there were certain reasons why the United States Government should not initially approach the Argentine Government on this point, since for example, the question of how much would be paid for the tungsten might arise. He added that the Export–Import Bank would have no liens on anything and no guarantee. Their guarantee would lie in the self-interest of Mr. Williams and of the Argentine Government. The Argentine Government would gain dollar exchange and Mr. Williams would have a profitable contract. Furthermore, he had a good reputation as a competent businessman.

The Chairman said he assumed that before the Bank started extending cash advances there would be assurances the United States would get the product. Mr. Gaston said that Mr. Williams had agreed on his own account to produce the necessary export licenses and any other papers that were necessary.

Without further discussion the recommended action was unanimously approved.

Action. The following action was taken (Action No. 464):

> The National Advisory Council approves consideration by the Export–Import Bank of a 5 percent 7-year credit to the Sociedad Minera Argentine, S.A. (Sominar), an Argentine corporation, in the amount of approximately $5 million to finance the dollar costs of machinery, equipment and supplies for the production of tungsten and sulphur, of which not more than $2 million would be for sulphur production.

[5] John W. Snyder, Secretary of the Treasury and Chairman of the NAC.
[6] Herbert E. Gaston, Chairman of the Board of Directors, Export–Import Bank.

735.00/7–951

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to Mr. Henry Dearborn of the Office of South American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] July 9, 1951

Subject: Call of Argentine Foreign Minister Remorino.

Minister Remorino came in to see me today, accompanied by Mr. Quiros, and stayed for nearly an hour. The conversation was very pleasant and was more specific than I had expected. He said that it was his purpose in accepting what he knew would be a thankless job to continue to work for improved relations with the United States. He said that despite everything he thought a great deal had been accomplished in the last two years and that he intended to continue the same policy. He also said that with his knowledge of the United States he intended to speak up with the President in favor of the United States on every possible occasion and he assured me that he was a person who would speak his mind and would quit when unnecessary obstacles were put in his path.

I made no comment except to assure Remorino that we understood that he was a sincere friend of this country. For my part, I said that he knew where I stood and I also said that Ambassador Bunker [1] had commented favorably on his reception in the capital and on his trip to the provinces.

Remorino said that he would have to reorganize the Foreign Office although he did not specify how. He was going to get a person with political background as the No. 2 man to replace Vittone who is temporarily in office.

He left with me the attached memoranda [2] having to do with the proposed Eximbank loan for the steel mill and the purchase of certain equipment for the armed forces. I said that I would look into it.

He then mentioned Argentina's great desire to be elected to the Economic and Social Council.[3] He said that while he would not tell this to anyone else the real reason for Argentina's aspiration is that the ECOSOC is the council with least possibility of causing embarrassments or trouble for Argentina. They want to get out of the Trusteeship Council because of the difficulties which membership in that group produces internally in view of the large "Turco" groups in Argentina which cause trouble in connection with the Arab States and Libya; the large Jewish population which is interested in Palestine; the large Catholic population which worries about Jerusalem; and the problem of the Falkland Islands which harasses their relations with Great Britain. On the other hand, the ECOSOC had never accomplished anything and this seemed to be the best recommendation for desiring membership on it. The stress which Argentina lays upon getting membership in this group is shown by Remorino's statement to me that he would go to the General Assembly in Paris next fall only if they are assured of election beforehand. Otherwise Paz will head the delegation.

Remorino indicated that as a quid pro quo for our support in getting them into the ECOSOC, Argentina would back us for the presidency of the COAS. I told him that we had certain reservations as to whether we should accept that job and that we certainly were not going to campaign for it. This attitude seemed to be a novel one and he was frankly surprised. I told him that it was our practice to accept the designation of the Latin American caucus but he pressed me for some more positive statement which I declined to give. On the contrary, I told him that Argentina's nonparticipation in specialized agencies of the UN might raise questions as to the suitability of Argentina for membership in a group whose primary function is to supervise the work of the specialized agencies.

[1] Ellsworth Bunker was appointed Ambassador to Argentina on March 13, 1951; he arrived in Buenos Aires April 24, and he assumed charge of the Embassy May 8, the date he also presented his credentials.
[2] Not found with the source text.
[3] Of the United Nations.

Remorino made numerous very favorable references to Ambassador Bunker and said that he was the ideal man for the job in Argentina. He also spoke with unfeigned appreciation of the cooperation which he had always received from the Department.

I accompanied the Ambassador to his car and engaged in the customary violent abrazo. Throughout the conference Memorino made numerous favorable references to Ambassador Paz and said that it would be easy for him to work with Paz. He also made a few very unpleasant references to Cereijo.

511.00/8–251 : Circular airgram

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Offices in the American Republics [1]

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, August 2, 1951—12 : 25 p. m.

FOL IS INFO POLICY GUIDANCE ON ELECTORAL CAMPAIGN IN ARGENTINA

Background:

The principal opposition party of Argentina, the Union Cívica Radical, will reportedly select its slate for the Presidential elections (set for Sunday, November 11) at a convention on August 4. The Peronista Party convention is expected to follow on or about August 22, resulting in the nomination of President Perón for a second term. Plans of the Conservative, Socialist, and minor—including Communist—parties are as yet unknown.

The following factors are foreseen as likely to produce a large amount of international publicity and to make the conduct of U.S.-Argentine relations unusually difficult during the period of the campaign:

1. The Government-controlled papers and news agencies of Argentina will probably maintain and even increase their current efforts to convict the U.S. of interference in Argentine domestic affairs, to dis-parage the U.S. Government, and to vilify its leadership. To this end, close scrutiny will be turned upon our informational activities, particularly in the field of radio: it is a matter of record that in Argentine official circles VOA broadcasts are interpreted as having diplomatic significance.

[1] Sent to all missions in the American Republics; sent also to the Consulates at São Paulo, Recife, and Porto Alegre, Brazil; Monterrey and Guadalajara, Mexico; and Guayaquil, Ecuador.

2. The Argentine government may take official actions in the international field calculated to reaffirm Argentine sovereignty in the face of U.S. regulations which they consider presumptious—for instance, the Kem Amendment.[2] Unfavorable U.S. public opinion reaction will naturally follow.

3. The Radicals' choice of Deputy Ricardo Balbín, if confirmed, will indicate that that Party plans to conduct its campaign as much for the purpose of affecting foreign opinion as for winning Argentine votes. (Balbín, pardoned on January 2 after 10 months of imprisonment, is at present under charge of violating the "disrespect" law on more than a score of occasions; he is distinguished mainly for his oratory.)

4. Argentine exiles and self-exiled persons in other countries, chiefly Uruguay and the U.S., can be expected to carry on the opposition campaign abroad and may go to considerable lengths in attempting to damage the relations of the Peron Govt with others of the American republics.

5. The Peronista campaign will predictably receive an abnormal amount of attention, much of it unfriendly, from the U.S. press.

U.S. Position:

In the absence of unforeseen developments, the Peronistas are expected to win the elections, regardless of in what manner the campaign may be conducted.

It is obviously to the interest of the United States, with reference to 1) the long-term objectives of U.S.-Argentine relations, 2) the development of Continental strength and security, and 3) the maintenance of Western Hemisphere support at the Sixth General Assembly of the U.N., to exercise restraint during this period of strain.

The United States, therefore, acting within the leeway afforded by its long-range Argentine policy, is currently expressing an attitude of strict "correctness" towards Argentina, applying this tactic in every phase of relations. It is essential that this attitude of "correctness" be projected in terms of the public affairs program and that it be kept uncompromised during the months of the presidential campaign. There should not be even the appearance of justification for any Argentine claim that the U.S. Government is abetting Administration opponents or showing partisanship in the political contest. Although it is not the determining consideration, the fact should be borne in mind that a departure from this policy might very possibly lead to curtailment by the Argentines of USIE activities in their country, which are continuing with a proven degree of effectiveness.

[2] The Kem Amendment (Section 1302 of Public Law 45, Third Supplemental Appropriation Act, approved June 2, 1951), so-named after Senator James P. Kem of Missouri, directed that all economic and financial assistance must be withheld from any country which exported strategic materials to Communist-bloc nations. For text of the amendment, see 65 Stat. 63.

Treatment:

1. In order that treatment may accord with that customarily given to political contests in the Latin American republics, coverage of the Argentine campaign should be held to a minimum of factual reporting.

2. The elections themselves and their results should have brief routine handling.

3. In the absence of specific guidance, avoid statements related to the elections which may be made in this country by Argentine exiles or expatriates.

ACHESON

Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26

The Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Ambassador in Argentina (Bunker)

CONFIDENTIAL
OFFICIAL—INFORMAL

WASHINGTON, August 16, 1951.

DEAR ELLSWORTH: Your letter of August 6 [1] expressed your concern over our position regarding Argentine membership in the Pulp and Paper Committee.[2] In this letter you expressed the fear that we have deviated from our "correct" position and expressed the view that you are unable to see how denial of membership in the Committee gains any real objective.

In reply, all that I can say is that we are not denying Argentina membership since membership is not ours to deny. In any event, even if we are changing our position since the original invitation was issued,[3] we are doing this not in order to penalize Argentina but rather to save the Pulp and Paper Committee. The whole work of the Committee depends upon the voluntary cooperation of Canadian producers

---

[1] Not printed.

[2] This subject had been discussed in a conversation at the Department of State, July 18, 1951, between Mr. Miller, Mr. Mann, Director of the Office of South American Affairs Fletcher Warren, Officer in Charge of River Plate Affairs Archibald R. Randolph, and Mr. Dearborn. The memorandum of that conversation, by Mr. Randolph, dated July 18, reads as follows:

"The policy of ARA with respect to Argentina's acceptance of the invitation extended by the United States to participate in the Paper and Pulp Committee will be (1) The United States if requested to act as sponsor for Argentina's membership will decline with the explanation to the Argentines that the ill treatment accorded the press in Argentina makes it impossible for the United States to acquiesce. It should be stated frankly to the Argentines if the situation arises why the United States cannot sponsor Argentine membership for the Paper and Pulp Committee. (2) In the event that a vote is called in the Committee to vote on Argentina's membership the United States will abstain." (398.392/7–1851) of newsprint and American newspaper publishers with whom we are trying to work out a program of voluntary reduction of consumption. Any chance of success would be totally undermined by the admission of Argentina to the group. It is perfectly arguable that the invitation should never have been issued to Argentina in the first place. However, even if a mistake were made at that time, this is no excuse for committing a bigger one by our insisting on Argentine membership and torpedoing the Committee's work at this delicate stage. The Central Group of the IMC today ruled that the invitations originally issued by the tripartite group had lapsed and that Argentine membership in the Wool and Paper Committees was for the determination of these committees and not of the Central Group since the committees are now set up and functioning. After talking to Alberto Lleras,[4] Win Brown [5] and the people in ARA, I decided to take the bull by the horns and I went out to see Paz today to have a frank discussion of the situation with him. I told him that in principle we favored Argentine participation in the work of the IMC and that Argentina would be welcomed with open arms in the Wool Committee. I said, however, that if Argentina should press for membership in the Pulp Committee there was no doubt that in view of the La Prensa case there would be opposition on the part of some of the countries to Argentine participation in that Committee. I specifically ducked what our attitude would be merely stressing that there would be opposition. I went so far as to make clear that I was not predicting one way or the other how the issue would be decided but I said that I assumed that he wished me as a personal friend to warn him (prevenir) of a possibly embarrassing situation. I said that it seemed to me the wisest course to follow would be for Argentina, once the Central Group advised it that membership in the two committees was a matter which would be determined by those committees, should make application only to the Wool Committee. I said that we would also look with sympathy to Argentine membership in other committees and I mentioned specifically tungsten.

[3] The invitation had been extended during the Foreign Ministers Conference in Washington, but the Argentine Government had delayed its acceptance until mid-July.

Paz expressed himself deeply appreciative of my frankness and said that my advice seemed entirely wise to him. I discussed at some length with complete frankness the attitude of the American newspaper publishers and the Canadian newsprint producers. I also emphasized the long period of time that had elapsed since the extension of the invitations to Argentina and their decision to accept them, the reconstitution in the meantime of the Central Group and the progress that had been made in the Paper Committee towards the voluntary plan. I also suggested that a perfectly acceptable solution to Argentina's newsprint problem lay in the fact that possibly the Scandinavians will have stocks in 1951 which they might be willing to sell to Argentina.

[4] Alberto Lleras Camargo, Secretary General of the Organization of American States.

[5] Winthrop G. Brown, Acting Director, Office of International Materials Policy.

I don't know what the reaction will be in Buenos Aires to the foregoing. I suppose to some extent it depends upon how Paz puts it up to his own Government. At least as of now I think that we have followed the best course in this difficult dilemma.

Most of the hour's meeting with Paz this morning was spent in very frank and open discussion by him of the internal political situation in Argentina and of the determination of himself and Remorino to work together in complete harmony towards improving relations with the United States. I will try to write you a complete account of this from Panama but since I am leaving the office in half an hour I must cut off now.

With kindest regards,
Sincerely yours,

EDWARD G. MILLER, JR.

Miller Files, Lot 56 D 26

The Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Ambassador in Argentina (Bunker)

SECRET
OFFICIAL—INFORMAL

WASHINGTON, September 10, 1951.

DEAR ELLSWORTH: I spent Friday night having a long talk with Les Mallory during the course of which we discussed some of the problems you had talked over with him. I think that Les and I, and consequently you and I, see eye to eye about the problems in Argentina, and Les has undertaken to write you fully about his consultation here including his talk with me. I prefer that he do it himself rather than have me do it since there are undoubtedly nuances which he will want to take up with you on some of the problems in recent months. However, there are a few points which I might comment on here.

In the first place, I am glad that Les can get away for a substantial leave. I was also glad of the opportunity of spending a full evening with him—he is a fine person. I was delighted to know that he is extremely happy in his assignment with you, as I expected that he would be. Also, I gather that the feeling is mutual. He was quite impressed over your unprecedented generosity in having gone to the airport to see Eleanor and him off.

At one point during the evening, Les mentioned that you sensed a hardening attitude on the part of Washington toward Argentina. To the extent which you have detected such a trend, I am probably responsible for it in my letters, particularly my letters about the Descartes translation [1] and the pulp and paper matter.[2] All that I can say is that it is extremely difficult for us to take this continual pounding which the Argentine press is handing out without reacting in some way along the lines of a stiffening in attitude. This does not mean that there has been any change in our policy with Argentina which remains the same. Furthermore, an example of the way our policy pays off, such as Argentine cooperation in San Francisco,[3] is proof that our policy is the only one. Nevertheless, Argentina is a unique case in hemispheric relations since it (and possibly Guatemala) is the only place in the hemisphere where the government, while cooperating with us in multilateral organizations, works against us both at home and elsewhere in the hemisphere. They work against us through buying newspapers, such as El Mundo in Rio, and individual newspapermen and radio stations such as two we listened to in Panama. The result of the attacks on us is probably not great but it tends to work against our objectives during this critical point in history. Even in international organizations their support is not constant and during the IA ECOSOC meeting in Panama,[4] from which I returned last week, the Argentines were not as cooperative as they might have been. While this to some extent was due to the especially offensive personality of Schiopetto, the fact that the performance is still perfectly Argentine is shown by the issue of the Argentine Information Bulletin which includes an entirely gratuitous and unnecessary crack at me. It is only natural that the result of all this should be to make us here in Washington less tolerant of Argentina and to put us in the mood to be harder bargainers in specific negotiations. At the same time, as I told Les the other night, we are getting to be in an increasingly hardboiled mood toward South America as a whole, because of their miserable performance in making any concrete contribution in Korea. I am having luncheon in a few minutes today with the Chief of Staff of the Brazilian Armed Forces, General Goes Monteiro,[5] who is going to tell me that Brazil's willingness to cooperate with us in the military field will be conditioned to a large extent on the success of the Brazilian Minister of Finance, Lafer,[6] who is asking for a 100 million dollar loan. I propose to tell Goes Monteiro that Lafer's visit will be facilitated by a greater display of willingness on the part of the Brazilian people as a whole, and the armed forces in particular, to do their part in the collective security effort, and that any effort to link the economic and [3] Apparent reference to the Japanese Peace Conference, which met in San Francisco, September 4–8, 1951. For documentation on the conference, see vol. VI, Part 1, pp. 777 ff.

[1] Reference to the letter concerning the Descartes translation is uncertain. "Descartes" was the pseudonym of an individual, suspected by some in the Department of State to be President Perón, who wrote articles critical of the United States for the government-controlled press in Argentina, particularly Democracia.

[2] See the letter of August 16, supra.

[4] Reference is to the Second Extraordinary Meeting of the Inter-American Economic and Social Council (IA–ECOSOC), held in Panama City, August 20–30, 1951. For information on the meeting, see the editorial note on p. 1065.

[5] Pedro Aurélio Góes Monteiro.

[6] Horácio Lafer.

military negotiations will only have adverse repercussions toward Brazil.[7]

Since I have been in this job, I have felt that it was part of my responsibility to try to bring home to these people that they need us at least as much, if not more, than we need them. In this effort, I have run against the feeling of overconfidence which was instilled in the Latin Americans before and during World War II that like the figures on Keats' Grecian Urn the United States would always be pursuing and the Latin Americans would always play the role of the flirtatious maidens, always beckoning and never giving in.

As to our tactics in the immediate future, I believe that we should continue to play our role of correctness and fairness which seems to be paying dividends. Any positive efforts in specific negotiations would seem to be out of the question for the next two months. We can send the ball back when they serve it up, but let it go at that. On the other hand, I believe that we can work on personal relations, you with Remorino at your end and I with Paz at this end, since I believe both of these men are worthwhile. I suggested to Les that in my opinion it would be fruitless for you to try to establish close personal relations with Peron. I believe it would be more effective if you tried to arrange it so as to deal primarily with Remorino and also to see him as much as you think appropriate on a personal basis. This might arouse the curiosity of both the President and other characters such as Cereijo, although we must be careful that in cultivating Remorino and Paz we do not injure their standing with their own people. I have seen Paz on three occasions since he has been here and our relations are most intimate and cordial. He cannot conceal his complete bliss in being out of Buenos Aires and out of the Ministry[8] at this time. He has explained to me with remarkable frankness his reasons for being glad to leave which include primarily that he has never been close to Evita. He considers her renunciation of the vice-presidency to be a major blow to her and he has no doubt, on the basis of a conversation which he had with her before he left, that she was most anxious to be nominated. His interpretation of the sequence of events is that she ran her luck out as far as it would go and when she saw that Mercante[9] and the Army had the cards stacked against her she pulled out of the game. However, he feels that she may not have pulled out of it for good and believes that Quintano will not be the final candidate for the vice-presidency.

---

[7] For documentation on the negotiations between the United States and Brazil concerning military and economic matters, see pp. 1184 ff.

[8] Ministry of Foreign Relations. Ambassador Paz had served as Minister of Foreign Relations prior to his appointment as Ambassador to the United States.

[9] Domingo A. Mercante, Governor of the Province of Buenos Aires.

I am giving a dinner in honor of Paz and the new Panamanian Ambassador, Roberto Heurtematte, who was in Yale with me, on September 27 which also happens to be my 40th birthday. This should go very well to solidify (or else liquify) relations.

With kindest regards,

Sincerely yours, EDWARD G. MILLER, JR.

P.S.—The Epoca editorial which Jack Pool sent me with his letter of August 31 [10] is not inconsistent with the other cracks that this and other journals have been taking at us in BA recently. The coincidence between the line in this editorial and that in the Argentine Embassy propaganda bulletin enclosed herewith [11] is so striking (for example, in the emphasis upon the fact that my presence at the meeting in Panama was of secondary importance to other duties of mine) that it leaves no doubt that this is all part of a concerted officially-inspired attack. Furthermore, the line was set down before the end of the IA ECOSOC session since the head of the Argentine Delegation after being voted down ignominiously in the closing plenary on a last-minute resolution with reference to farm wages, explained lamely that he had been caught short by the last-minute decision of the conference to hold a plenary on Thursday night instead of Friday as originally scheduled. The meaning of his remarks was clear to anybody since the last plenary was called because of my impending departure which had been announced to everyone when I arrived.

[10] Not printed in this volume.
[11] No enclosure was found with the source text.

Editorial Note

On September 28, 1951, several Argentine army officers attempted an abortive coup against President Perón. In a letter to Assistant Secretary Miller, dated September 29, Ambassador Bunker commented in part as follows: "The whole show was pretty inept, and the government seems to have been well prepared for it. If this was to be the big event, then I should say that its collapse was quite complete and that it would be hard to pick up the pieces from here. If there is something more important afoot, such as . . . reported to me, then, of course, there may be further developments at some later date. I have a definite feeling however that if further changes come, they will come because of pressure or disaffection within the Peronista Party itself and in conjunction with the army. I also feel that in this connection the Army would prefer to move in a more legalistic and constitutional way and that a change would be brought about quietly and not through a coup. With the black economic picture ahead for the next year it is difficult to see why anyone should want to take over now. If nothing happens militarily or politically, I believe the course of economic events is more apt to force a change of policy and/or government than anything else." (Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26) Additional pertinent documents relating to the attempted coup are in decimal files 735.00 and 735.00 (W).

735.5-MAP/10-1051

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. H. F. Arthur Schoenfeld of the Office of the Director of International Security Affairs

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] October 10, 1951.

Subject: Possible Military Grant Aid to Argentina

Participants: OSD/OMA—Col. J. D. Alger
OSA—Mr. Henry Dearborn
ARA—Mr. Duncan Mackay
AR—Mr. E. A. Jamison [1]
S/ISA—Mr. H. F. Arthur Schoenfeld

Colonel J. D. Alger stated that he desired to consult officers in the Department of State informally about the possible inclusion of the Argentine Republic in a first priority list of Latin American countries to be approached in connection with grant military assistance under the FY 1952 Mutual Security Program.[2] He said that from the military point of view, the Department of Defense considered Argentina to be among the three or four Latin American Republics most capable militarily of making a positive contribution to the Defense of the Western Hemisphere.[3] Since the Argentine also had considerable quantities of the United States equipment, it would be in the interest of Hemisphere Defense plans to give that country grant military assistance in order to make the military contribution of which Argentina is capable. A letter was being drafted from the Secretary of Defense to the Secretary of State setting forth a priority list of Latin American governments possibly to be recipients of grant military aid and to be approached in the negotiations presently planned when funds become available under the Mutual Security Act of 1951.[4] It was felt in the Department of Defense, however, that in view of political considerations involved in the case of Argentina that country should not be included in the proposed priority list without some previous consultation with the Department of State.

---

[1] Edward A. Jamison, Officer in Charge, Special Political Problems.
[2] For documentation on this subject, see vol. I, pp. 266 ff.
[3] For documentation on United States policy with respect to hemisphere defense and related matters, see pp. 985 ff.
[4] For text of the Mutual Security Act (Public Law 165), approved October 10, 1951, see 65 Stat. 373.

Mr. Schoenfeld said that S/ISA would be guided in its attitude towards this question by the views of ARA. Mr. Jamison and Mr. Dearborn described the current internal political situation in the Argentine, including the traditional emphasis in that country on neutralism and particularly the use that has been made by Peron of his "Third Position" doctrine with its anti-American overtones. These Argentine attitudes, in the opinion of ARA, made it quite certain that any intimation by the United States at the present time regarding possible grant military assistance to Argentina in connection with that country's assumption of reciprocal obligations for Hemisphere Defense would be used for internal political purposes in the current Presidential campaign in Argentina. Moreover, since the decision last winter to develop a program of grant military aid to Latin American countries, it had been the consistent position of the Department of Defense and of the Department of State in presenting the Mutual Security Program to the Bureau of the Budget and to the Congress, that there was no present intention of giving the Argentine grant military assistance. For these reasons, the Department of State would probably be unable to support grant military assistance to Argentina at this time. Mr. Jamison and Mr. Dearborn said that, on the other hand, the present obscurity of the political situation in the Argentine and the possibility that at a future time, perhaps not distant, that situation might change and it might become desirable from the political standpoint to use possible negotiations with Argentina on this subject with a prospect of advantage to the United States, the possibility of such aid to Argentina should be kept open.

It was suggested by Mr. Schoenfeld that, if the Department of Defense decides to include Argentina in the proposed priority list, the letter from that Department should record explicitly the fact that the Department of Defense and the Department of State have excluded Argentina from current consideration for military grant aid, but should also leave the matter open for renewed considerations when the political situation makes it desirable to reconsider. This suggestion was concurred in by all present.

Col. Alger indicated that the proposed letter from the Secretary of Defense to the Secretary of State covering the priority list would refer to the present situation along the above lines, leaving open for future consideration, as circumstances may require, the possibility of approaching the Argentine Government as to its undertaking a Defense Task and receiving military grant aid for the purpose.

611.35/10–2651

Policy Statement Prepared in the Department of State [1]

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] October 26, 1951.

ARGENTINA

A. OBJECTIVES

US objectives in relations with Argentina are: 1) realization by Argentina that its traditional neutralism is not feasible in the world of today and that in US-Argentine relations Argentina needs the US more than the US needs Argentina; 2) Argentine collaboration in the maintenance of international security, especially in the western hemisphere; 3) Argentine adoption of policies which will strengthen those forces striving for peace and a democratic way of life; 4) creation and maintenance of a favorable climate of opinion among the Argentine people toward the US and its policies; and 5) encouragement of healthy bilateral economic relations and protection of US enterprise carrying on Argentine operations.

B. POLICIES

Argentina's aspirations to be the dominant power in South America, its intense national pride, its competition with the US for agricultural markets, and its current interpretation of the functions of the state, all combine to bring it into conflict with the US on a number of basic issues. Furthermore, Argentina traditionally has preferred to lead or to play a lone hand in international relations, an attitude caused in large part by its ambition and pride and manifested in its lack of enthusiasm for inter-American and world organizations when they are likely to limit in some way its own freedom of action. Argentina's characteristic tendency toward neutrality is yet another obstacle to closer harmony with the US and will probably prevent it from rendering military assistance against Communist aggression outside the hemisphere. On the other hand, Argentina has participated actively in the work of the UN and in the last few years has shown an interest in the political activities of the Organization of American States. Argentina's desire for imports from and exports to the US is also a linking force. The opposition of both Governments to Communism serves as a basis for common action in various respects, especially in UN and OAS political activities. The general US policy believed best fitted to cope with the special problems of US-Argentine relations is that now being followed—namely carrying on friendly but firm and frank relations. Within the scope of this broad policy we allow ourselves leeway between a liberally friendly approach and an approach which may be described as "correct", depending on the temper of relations in general. As this Statement is written the US is limiting itself to being "correct", among other lesser factors, because of the strain put upon our relations by the Argentine Government's expropriation of the independent newspaper La Prensa, by severe attacks on the US by Argentine officials and the Peronista press, and by US press and labor attacks on Argentina. While it seems likely that the conflicting forces named will continue in varying degrees into the foreseeable future, and will prevent the two countries from achieving a close friendship, it also seems likely that mutual interests will cause them to remain on moderately-friendly-to-cool terms and to work together in practical ways.

[1] Drafted by Mr. Dearborn.

Internal Political Background. The internal political situation in Argentina has an important bearing on US–Argentine relations, and we cannot carry on these relations with hope of success without taking cognizance of that situation. During the Peron administration the Peronista Party has completely controlled the political life of Argentina. It has won all elections and has 100 per cent representation in the Senate and more than a two-thirds majority in the Chamber of Deputies. It also has controlled the provincial governorships and legislatures. The cohesive force which has held the party together has been the combined personalities of President Peron and his wife. While Peron is unquestionably the most powerful man in Argentina, he is not an absolute dictator and we would be mistaken if we should conduct our relations on that erroneous concept. He was put into office by labor, which continues to constitute his strongest following. To keep this support he must favor policies popular with labor and this is both a limitation on his power (as well as the source of it) and a possible explanation of why many of his public acts and speeches do not coincide with his privately expressed opinions. Another limitation on his power is the extreme nationalist group within his own party which regards him as too internationalist minded and too friendly with the US. Still another is the still-to-be-reckoned-with autonomous sentiment of the provinces.

Since he became President, Peron has been rather more favorable to cooperation with the US than many of his followers and often more favorable than the Radical Party which constitutes his principal opposition. The Peronista nationalists and the Radicals favor nationalization of the petroleum industry, but Peron, supported by more moderate Peronistas, has not expanded the nationally-owned petroleum organization to exclude private interests. The Radical Party strongly opposed the ratification of the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance which Argentina signed at Rio de Janeiro on Peron's direction and later ratified as a result of his initiative. Industrialization, mechanization of agriculture and economic development are of prime importance in Peron's program and he is believed to feel that these objectives can most readily be achieved if the US, with its industrial exports and its technical knowledge, cooperates. He is known to have in mind the difficulties Argentina encountered in two world wars in obtaining essential supplies abroad and to desire ultimately to make Argentina as free from dependence on foreign sources of supply as possible.

A unique phenomenon in Argentine politics is Mrs. Peron. She holds no political office but so closely approaches her husband in political power that there is serious discussion as to whether she has less, the same or more than he. The importance of Mrs. Peron's views to US-Argentine relations is therefore obvious. While a year ago she was believed to be bitterly anti-US, more recently she has privately expressed herself in a conciliatory manner. Mrs. Peron's emotional attitudes on small matters are likely to be reflected in Government decisions on important issues. Her vindictiveness has been manifested on numerous occasions and her retaliatory measures have reflected both ruthlessness and a long memory.

Argentine Neutralism. By a judicious amount of inaction and by a minimum amount of special consideration, we are attempting to bring home to Argentina the realization that extreme nationalist policies are not in its interest and that, far from being independent, it is in fact quite dependent upon the free world, especially on the US. It is important to disabuse Argentina of its false sense of self-sufficiency because this attitude stands in the way of the realization of our other objectives. US tactics at present, therefore, are to make the minimum number of requests possible of Argentina for collaboration in international action. We have withheld a number of requests for Argentine cooperation in international organizations, for example, in order to puncture the inflated Argentine sense of indispensability. On the rare occasions when we do attempt to induce that Government to act, it is our intention to base our reason on Argentina's own interests and obligations rather than on aspects which might suggest any US need for Argentine cooperation. On the other hand, our operations in allocating scarce materials are making Argentina's dependence upon the US more and more obvious. The Department is receiving an increasing number of requests from the Argentine Embassy for assistance in obtaining articles in short supply. While normal attention is being given to these requests, no special consideration is being accorded. We have not permitted our tactics of inaction to stand in the way of US representations on behalf of US business, though in these representations we have emphasized Argentine obligations and interests rather than any favorable results for the US. This was our position during our recent assistance to US shipping firms in their negotiations with the Argentine Government.

Collaboration in Hemisphere Defense. Argentina is politically, economically and militarily one of the most powerful of the American Republics. It is strategically situated with respect to South Atlantic shipping routes and the Straits of Magellan and would be in wartime a much needed supplier of food and raw materials to the US and its allies. It would be, therefore, in the US interest to have Argentina on our side in case of an outside attack on the other American republics or on ourselves. Our policies to achieve this objective are principally to encourage Argentine participation in hemisphere defense arrangements, to foster good relations between the armed services of our two countries, to obtain Argentine cooperation against Communist penetration, and to obtain Argentine economic collaboration in the present emergency.

In June 1950 Argentina took the most important step it has ever taken toward collaboration in hemisphere defense when it ratified the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance. This was an encouraging development since it represented a radical departure from traditional Argentine policy and since its accomplishment required the Peron Government to proceed against strong opposition both within and outside the Peronista Party. It is likely that Peron's decision was influenced in large measure by his desire to qualify for US military assistance under the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949 [2] and that he believed the outbreak of war in Korea gave him a strategic moment for action.

In the implementation of its arms policy, the US has permitted the export to Argentina of reasonable amounts of arms. Reasonable amounts have been interpreted to mean quantities not in excess of Argentina's normal defense requirements and not exceeding those exported to Latin American republics of comparable size. These arms have been obtained partly from commercial sources and partly from US Government stocks. The most recent significant US Government sale to Argentina was two cruisers [3] similar to those offered simultaneously to Brazil and Chile under the Mutual Defense Assistance Act. A condition of sale was that the vessels would be used to further the policies and purposes of the Act and especially in support of the obligations undertaken in the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance. Argentina found it necessary in August 1950 to turn down one sizeable offer of US Army equipment owing to lack of dollars, and financial limitations on Argentine arms purchases are still operating. The US is not at present considering Argentina for grant military aid but would reconsider if US-Argentine relations should improve and if Argentina by its actions and attitude shows itself to be politically in step with the concept of collective defense of the hemisphere and will agree to undertake those military tasks which we consider it capable of performing. At present the US will not permit the exportation to Argentina of any military equipment which is considered above Argentina's minimum requirements for maintaining internal order and self-defense.

[2] For text of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act (Public Law 329), approved October 6, 1949, see 63 Stat. 714.

[3] Documents relating to the refitting of these cruisers are in decimal files 735.56 and 735.5621 for 1951. For previous documentation on the negotiations leading to the sale of the cruisers, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, pp. 599 ff.

In fostering collaboration between the armed services, the US has encouraged the exchange of visits by high-ranking personnel and by the naval vessels. Another implementation of this policy is found in our furnishing naval and military ground advisers to Argentina.

Argentina has shown itself disposed to collaborate against Communist penetration in the hemisphere. Though the Communist Party is legal, it finds even more difficulty than other opposition parties in expressing itself due to the obstacles set up by the Government. Having between 35,000 and 50,000 members and having polled only approximately 80,000 votes in the most recent national election, the Party's numerical strength is not threatening. The Government has in the past found it a convenient scapegoat. In recent months, however, there has been evidence that the Communists actually contributed clandestinely to the unrest in some labor circles brought about in the first instance by economic grievances. The Argentine Communists are not sufficiently strong to create much unrest by themselves but it may be assumed that they will continue to take advantage of strife derived from other causes. The more fertile the ground for discontent, the more readily their seeds of dissension will take root. In general, labor has supported the Perons because it believes they are its champions. While this is still true, recent indications of labor unrest, of which the most outstanding example is a series of strikes and incidents among railway workers, point to what may become a serious weakening of this support. If the Perons or their successors should be unable to keep the now politically conscious Argentine worker reasonably satisfied, it is a possibility that this worker, with his new-found power, might turn to a Communist leader, always provided that that leader were shrewd enough not to promote international communism at the expense of Argentine nationalism. It will be well for the US to remember, in case of a war with the USSR, that there is a large Slav colony in Argentina numbering between 500,000 and 600,000. It is considered that the USSR might receive substantial support from this group in a crisis. Communists and sympathizers among them are at present estimated at perhaps 90,000. Anti-American propaganda is in general favorably received in Argentina and rapidly gains popular support. Communists appreciate its value and utilize it to the fullest extent.

In October 1948 Peron informally recommended to our Ambassador a secret inter-American conference to stamp out Communism in the western hemisphere. He repeated the suggestion in December 1949, saying he thought commonly agreed objectives and a program against Communism would be desirable and mentioning the possibility of some sort of meeting among the most interested countries to lay out objectives and agreements. The US did not encourage him either time. While Peron indicates he would like to sponsor an international step against Communism and while Argentina went along with the resolution directed against international Communism voted by the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs (1951), he apparently feels that Argentina itself can take care of the home front. The inconsistency between Peron's proposals to the US and his famous "third position" is obvious.

Argentina and World Peace. Our basic policy in attempting to induce Argentina to support our objectives of peace and democracy is to carry on friendly relations with its Government. This policy was not followed during the last war when the Argentine Government did not support the US cause. From the time we entered the war until 1947 we attempted to obtain our objectives by moderately forceful rather than friendly measures and we purposefully discriminated against Argentina in various ways. With President Truman's decision in June 1947 that Argentina had substantially complied with its inter-American commitments, the US returned to its former basic policy.

The Peron Government since its inauguration has been independently active in promoting peace and it is general knowledge that Peron covets the Nobel Peace Prize. In 1947 he attempted a peace offensive which received wide attention. While no one knows whether Argentina has, as Peron says, effected a controlled liberation of atomic energy "on a technical scale", the stress which he placed in his announcement on his intention to use atomic power solely for peaceful purposes has its importance. Such a policy would be entirely consistent with the "third position" which is advertised by Peron as a force for peace. The US, however, does not look upon this "third position" as a force for permanent peace. When first publicized in mid-1947, the concept appeared to be an indication that Argentina did not wish to follow in the wake of either the capitalistic US or the communistic USSR in world affairs but preferred an independent course. Other nations were invited to join Argentina in a third group which would strive for peace and counteract the trend toward war between the other two camps. President Peron, however, subsequently assured us that the "third position" was a peacetime policy and a "political device" which would have no effect if the US and the USSR went to war, in which case Argentina would declare war immediately on the side of the US. Whatever President Peron's intention, Argentine propagandists for the "third position" have injured US-Argentine relations and to a minor extent have embarrassed the US in its relations with the other American Republics.

At home and abroad they have vilified Moscow and its international influence; but they have with equal and perhaps more severity attacked "Yankee imperialism" and "Wall Street" for various alleged activities in the western hemisphere. It is our policy to counteract this propaganda whenever possible. Through diplomatic channels we point out to Peron and his representatives that if the Argentine Government is sincere in its professed desire to collaborate with the US against Communism, it should cease to weaken the cause of the democracies by attacking the US.

Argentina has in many respects played an active and constructive role in the affairs of the UN, the Organization of American States and related organizations. Its policy in these organizations has, however, tended to be somewhat individualistic, and heavily dependent upon the personalities of its representatives at any given time. It is US policy to encourage Argentine participation in those spheres of UN and OAS activities where it is now playing a constructive role. In the present state of US-Argentine relations, however, US tactics are neither to play a leading role in proposing Argentina for slates on international bodies nor in urging Argentina to take any given action. At the same time we are friendly to the Argentines at international meetings, give them our opinion when asked and vote for their candidates when they are the obvious choice of those voting or of the Latin American caucus.

Argentine delegates to UN meetings are as a rule cooperative and friendly with our delegates, even withdrawing their own proposals at times in deference to our policies. Ex-Foreign Minister Bramuglia,[4] as president of the Security Council in the fall of 1948, guided it through the difficult days of the Berlin crisis in an able and intelligent manner. Argentine delegations to the ICAO Council have attained high prestige and this has been recognized by the members. Despite the obvious inconsistency with its "third position", Argentina has supported the US on the questions of seating the Chinese Communists in the UN and of declaring Communist China an aggressor. At the Cairo meeting of the Universal Postal Union in January 1951,[5] Argentine collaboration with the US was so outstanding on the issue of seating the Chinese Communists [6] that we instructed our Embassy in Buenos Aires formally to express our appreciation.

The matter of Argentine collaboration with the UN in Korea against Communist aggression requires some explanation. Immediately following the attack on Korea in June 1950, Argentina sent a message

---

[4] Juan Atilio Bramuglia.

[5] A joint meeting of the Executive Committee of the Universal Postal Union (UPU) and the International Air Transport Association (IATA) took place in Cairo, January 22–February 5, 1951.

[6] For documentation concerning United States policy with respect to this issue, see pp. 209 ff.

to the UN in support of the UN resolutions pertaining to the conflict. Peron showed indications of planning to play a more active role in the implementation of the resolutions than he ultimately did. Following a particularly severe popular reaction at home against Argentine involvement, and especially against any contribution of troops, Peron withdrew closer to the line of traditional Argentine policy and ever since he has been intermittently reassuring the Argentine public that no troops will be sent abroad unless the people are consulted. Peron's "third position" propaganda over the previous three years had doubtless made even more firm their resolve to resist any such radical departure from neutralism as sending troops abroad. Peron has himself to blame if it was suspected by some that he welcomed and secretly abetted public resistance so that he might hold it responsible before the free nations for withholding substantial assistance to the UN in Korea. The extent of Argentine collaboration in Korea since its message of support of the UN in June 1950 has been an offer, accepted by the Unified Command, of 14,000 cases of canned meat for Korean relief.

While the Argentine Government opposes Communism as a doctrine, and tends to vote with the US on important international political issues, somewhat to its embarrassment its own attitude on civil liberties causes it on occasion to vote with the USSR in conferences having to do with these matters. In world labor conferences Argentina has been embarrassed by the heckling of nations which object to its domestic control of organized labor and to the assumption by its delegates that Argentine labor conditions are utopian.

Argentina has for many years had an active interest in increasing its population through the admission of selected immigrants and maintains a permanent commission in Europe for selection and promotion purposes. Immigrants now number about 200,000 annually. While Argentina has since 1947 accepted over 30,000 persons classified by the International Refugee Organization as displaced persons it has shown a preference for handling its immigration problems independently rather than in cooperation with the IRO. Argentina encourages Italian and Spanish immigration more than any other.

An illustration of Argentine action to promote peace is that country's effort to maintain calm in the Antarctic region by signing an agreement with the UK and Chile not to send warships to the area except for routine purposes. It has been US policy to issue a statement when this agreement is renewed annually to the effect that the US does not contemplate sending warships to the area.[7]

Argentina has not for the most part favored US objectives in the multilateral economic sphere. This is explained principally by Argentina's traditional aversion to multilateral economic agreements as derogations of its sovereignty, by the prevalent feeling in Argentina that the present world crisis is ours, not hers, and by that Government's desire to derive as much economic advantage as possible from the world situation. It is our policy to attempt by tactics already described to convince Argentina that this is its fight as much as ours and that the cooperation of all free nations is essential if the principles which we have both espoused in the UN and OAS are to prevail.

[7] For documentation on United States policy with regard to the Antarctic in 1951, see vol. I, pp. 1715 ff.

Argentina has held back on a number of UN or affiliated economic activities. Specific examples are its failure to associate itself with the International Bank for Reconstruction, the International Monetary Fund and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. In the light of Argentina's historical position on these matters, it was somewhat surprising and encouraging when, after several years of urging by the US, it recently applied for membership in the Food and Agriculture Organization. With specific reference to the present emergency, Argentina has after long delay accepted an invitation to participate in the work of the international materials committees which have been set up to represent major consuming and producing countries in considering problems of world shortages. She is now a member of the Wool Committee and desires membership in others. Argentina probably made this decision to participate after observing that non-participation was working against its interests. On the other hand she has shown no interest in cooperating with us in cutting off trade with the Soviet bloc. While Argentina has not refused to furnish us with strategic materials such as beryl and tungsten, it has indicated that it expects in return assistance in securing mining machinery and other scarce goods. We have yet to obtain any beryl and unless Argentina is granted at least a part of what it wants, we shall probably not get any. US policy is still in a formative stage regarding prospective action on this matter.

Historically Argentina has been the most reluctant member of the inter-American system. This has been a matter of serious concern to the US because of the importance of this system in US foreign policy. We have therefore welcomed the indications occurring during the past four years that Argentina is adopting a more active and cooperative inter-American attitude. At the major conferences at Rio de Janeiro in September 1947,[8] at Bogota in April 1948 and at Washington in the spring of 1951 Argentina was generally cooperative rather than obstructive. As in the UN Argentina has often been slow to incur multilateral economic commitments in the OAS. It has also been quick to oppose any assumption of political powers by the COAS.

During Peron's presidency there have been numerous charges from other American republics of Argentine Government support of attempts to overthrow their existing regimes. Peron has reiterated again and again that Argentine policy is non-intervention in the affairs of other states. It is US policy to encourage Argentina's adherence to this principle. We remind that Government on appropriate occasions that the US is vitally concerned in the maintenance of the non-intervention principle [9] and we show ourselves to be constantly vigilant to detect any intervention. Despite many charges of interference leveled against the Peron Government, there has not been any substantial confirmation of them. It is US policy not to point an accusing finger at Argentina or any other American republic as long as substantial evidence is lacking.

[8] Reference is to the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Continental Peace and Security (Rio Conference), held at Quitandinha, State of Rio de Janeiro, August 15–September 2, 1947. For documentation on the conference, see Foreign Relations, 1947, vol. VIII, pp. 1 ff.

Argentina claims sovereignty over the Falkland Islands which have been held and administered by the British since 1833. The question of determining to whom the islands legally belong is at best a difficult one. The US is in no way a party to this dispute. However, we have used our influence to prevent the problem from being made an issue which would create friction on the question of European possessions in the western hemisphere at a time when solidarity among the world's anti-communist forces is sorely needed. When the Argentine Foreign Minister asked the US to support the Argentine claim at the Bogota conference of 1948, we informed him that the US did not support either the British or the Argentine claims and that in the opinion of the US the dispute should be settled by peaceful means under the recognized procedures of international law. While Argentina did bring up the Falklands at Bogota in connection with its support of a general resolution regarding colonies and occupied territories, it is believed that Argentina made less of an issue of the question at Bogota as a result of our pre-conference talks with the Foreign Minister.

Argentine, British, Chilean and potential US claims in the Antarctic are in conflict. In an effort to prevent that continent from becoming a sore spot in world politics, the US in 1948 presented a proposal to these nations and to others with official claims there suggesting that all agree to solve the territorial problem by establishing a condominium.[10] Few of the claimants showed enthusiasm for the idea, and Argentina flatly refused to accept it even as a basis for discussion. The US considers that the most promising approach at present is a modified version of a counter-proposal offered by Chile—namely the freezing of the legal status for a period of five or more years. Though the US has not discussed this plan, except informally with Chile and the UK, it will be our policy if it is put forward formally to endeavor through diplomatic channels to obtain Argentina's support on the basis that it would be an Argentine contribution to peaceful settlement. Before entering into the proposed arrangement, the US would announce its own Antarctic claims. By the timing of the announcement in relation to the signing of the modus vivendi and the political situation, we would seek to minimize the inevitable Argentine criticism and to ward off a major demonstration of anti-US feeling.

[9] For a statement of the non-intervention principle, see the Department of State's instruction 131, dated February 19, 1947, in Foreign Relations, 1947, vol. VIII, pp. 629–631.

[10] For documentation on United States policy with respect to the Antarctic in 1948, see ibid., 1948, vol. I, Part 2, pp. 962 ff.

Attitude Toward Democratic Institutions. No objective in our relations with Argentina is more difficult, more frustrating to implement, than the adoption in Argentina of policies which will strengthen democratic institutions. The Peron Government has in one way or another almost completely stifled criticism of itself by the press, and there is little doubt but that it intends eventually to permit no criticism. Radio in Argentina is without exception subservient to the Government. The right to free expression is further curtailed by a law establishing a prison sentence for writing or speaking disrespectfully of Government officials and by severe limitations on the right of assembly. While elections have remained free at the polls, the opposition finds it almost impossible to reach an audience of any size and there are legal restrictions making it difficult to form new political parties. Organized labor is for the most part under the thrumb of the Peronista party through Peronista control of the leadership of the General Confederation of Labor and its affiliates. The few labor groups which have attempted to guard their independence have been arbitrarily and forcefully dealt with. The judiciary and the educational life of the nation have been made instruments of Peronismo. Letters passing through the Argentine mail system are likely to be opened, telegrams and cables are monitored and telephone lines are tapped.

The Argentine Government's attitude toward civil liberties is of concern to the US, not only because of our desire to strengthen democratic institutions in the world, but also because it is unlikely that there can ever be any warm friendship between the two countries as long as this attitude persists. While it is our policy to attempt in every appropriate way to persuade the Argentine Government to abandon its restrictions on civil liberties, the measures which the US can take to achieve these purposes are limited by the fact that Argentina is a sovereign country which, as shown by experience, reacts in exactly the opposite way to any suggestions from the outside as to how it should conduct its affairs. Through diplomatic channels we have attempted to point out to Peron the detrimental effect of his press restrictions on US–Argentine relations and we have sought to convince him of the advantages of a free press. Our arguments have not deterred him in his course. Nothing could have proved this more conclusively than the expropriation in April 1951 of the celebrated Argentine independent newspaper La Prensa, which the Argentine Government pushed through in the face of the severest criticism throughout the western hemisphere and western Europe. Nothing could have confirmed more conclusively the determination of the Peron regime to make all major Argentine institutions subservient to its purposes. The La Prensa affair was the hardest blow dealt to US-Argentine relations since World War II and the fact that the Argentine Government went ahead with expropriation in spite of US sentiments is significant. The vindictiveness of Mrs. Peron against La Prensa's editor is believed to have been an important factor in the Government's decision to stop the independent paper, and the incident furnishes an outstanding example of her importance in US-Argentine affairs. The US has protested several instances of Argentine censorship of despatches prepared by American press correspondents and has taken immediate and successful action to have American correspondents released from jail when arrested while performing their normal reporting activities [11] but it has never received assurances that there would be no recurrences. The US has also protested the inability of its radio correspondents to broadcast from Argentina. In reply we have been informed that radio in Argentina is under private control and that the Government cannot interfere in questions of allotments of time on the air. Another incident in the general field of civil liberties which perturbed US-Argentine relations was the failure of the Argentine CGT to obtain admission to the ICFTU at its meeting in Mexico City in January 1951. The US delegation to the conference, composed of leaders of the CIO and AFofL, took a leading role in the refusal of the conference to seat the Argentines, their position being based upon the fact that the Argentine labor movement was not free but controlled by the Government. Efforts of the Argentines to save face naturally resulted in violent attacks on the US in the Peronista press.

Climate of Argentine Opinion Toward the US. It is our policy to attempt to create and maintain a favorable climate of opinion among the Argentine people toward the United States so that we may realize our foremost objectives: the end of Argentine neutralism, and encouragement of hemisphere defense, peace and democracy. This is a formidable task. Argentina's close commercial and cultural ties with Europe have tended to prevent the diffusion of accurate knowledge about the US among Argentines. This situation has created a fertile field of ignorance in which extreme nationalism and demagoguery have easily been able to plant anti-US seeds. The Argentine people have traditionally resented US leadership when it extends to South America, seeing it as an obstruction to their own. In addition many Argentines have long tended to think of the US as a materialistic, money-grubbing, imperialistic nation with little appreciation of cultural values. Exclusion of Argentine meat from the US and other economic measures regarded by Argentina as discriminatory have tended to strengthen this unsympathetic attitude. These impressions have been modified somewhat through normal trade relations, tourist travel, and our USIE programs. In recent years some notable changes have been effected in the attitudes of high-ranking Argentines during official visits to the US and they have returned to their country with pro-US views. Nevertheless the dominant Argentine feeling about the US is still critical and suspicious. The USIE programs are a principal weapon with which to counteract these views, but their effectiveness is dulled and often rendered useless by the Argentine limitations on freedom of expression and, in fact, by the official Argentine policy of playing upon anti-US sentiments for the Government's own ends. US policy is to diffuse throughout Argentina as much information as possible about the US and the principles for which it stands but to proceed with sufficient caution not to provoke the Argentine Government into prohibiting our operations. At present this is a serious limitation. We are following a foot-in-the-door policy ready to seize upon any relaxation of Argentine restrictions as a sign to enter into full-scale informational and cultural programs.

[11] Documents pertaining to this subject are in several decimal files, principally 935.61, 935.63, and 935.64.

We should continue our already beneficial policy of inviting influential Argentines to the US when the opportunity offers itself, but at present, while we are following our "correct" tactics, persons of cabinet rank should not be invited to make courtesy visits. The question of inviting the Perons constitutes a special public relations problem even when relations are better. Mrs. Peron is known to have attempted to inspire invitations and it is reliably reported that President Peron was personally offended by President Truman's invitation to the Chilean Chief Executive.[12] Our policy is not to invite the Argentine President nor his wife as long as there is the present amount of ill feeling in the US toward the Perons. The press, organized labor, various intellectual groups and many other vocal elements could be expected to give either or both of them such an inhospitable reception that it might take US-Argentine relations years to recover from the repercussions. We would, if necessary, officially explain the lack of an invitation on this basis.

US-Argentine Economic Relations. The US endeavors to encourage healthy bilateral economic relations with Argentina. One purpose is to improve our overall relations with that country. Another goal, which is especially significant at this time, is to maintain a practical friendly situation in the economic field which will serve to mitigate periods of strain in other fields for the sake of hemisphere security. The hard work devoted to economic matters during the past two years and the friendly frank personal contacts established between representatives of the two Governments in the process have helped to sustain the shock to relations from the lack of harmony on civil liberties matters.

[12] Gabriel González Videla. President González Videla had visited the United States during April and May 1950. For information concerning his visit and his discussions with President Truman, see the editorial note, Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, p. 785.

During 1950 we engaged in extended conversations with Argentine officials which looked toward an improvement in US Argentine trade and financial relations, and which included talks on a supplement to the US-Argentine Friendship, Commerce and Navigation Treaty of 1853,[13] a double taxation treaty,[14] a bilateral air transport agreement, and encouragement of tourism. Within this same framework we supported an Export–Import Bank credit of $125,000,000 to enable Argentina to pay US creditors amounts overdue on commercial shipments faster than it had been able to pay on its own account. It was believed that this would improve Argentina's position in relation to US traders and that restored confidence would stimulate commerce. Among the favorable developments following these steps were an increase in US-Argentine trade, the liquidation of most of Argentina's commercial dollar arrears and Argentine relaxation of restrictions on tourism. On the other hand Argentina has yet to show any serious effort to liquidate its financial dollar debt. The supplementary trade treaty lies inactive with the next move up to Argentina. We do not plan to urge action on it at this time. The US is holding up action on the double taxation treaty. Talks in 1950 concerning a route annex to the bilateral air transport agreement of 1947 [15] failed to materialize owing to a legitimate difference of opinion which could not be reconciled.

The US and Argentina have a bilateral Trade Agreement signed in 1941.[16] The one clear Argentine violation of this Agreement lies in the failure of the Argentine Government to put into effect reduced duty rates on certain concession articles. These lower rates were to become effective when total Argentine customs revenues should exceed 270 million paper pesos and this occurred in 1947. Two US notes of protest, one in 1948 and another in 1949, have not been definitively answered and consideration is being given to what further steps should be taken to obtain observation of the Agreement.

Another subject in connection with the Agreement on which it may soon be necessary to approach Argentina is that of bringing the "escape clause" into conformity with the pertinent provisions of the [13] For text of the Friendship, Commerce and Navigation Treaty, signed at San José, July 27, 1853, and entered into force December 20, 1854, see TS No. 4, or 10 Stat. 1005.

[14] For documentation relating to United States policy with respect to the negotiation of double taxation treaties, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, pp. 688 ff.

[15] An air transport agreement was signed on May 1, 1947, but it never entered into force. For documentation, see ibid., 1947, vol. VIII, pp. 238 ff.

[16] For text of the agreement and related exchanges of notes, signed at Buenos Aires, October 14, 1941, and which entered into force definitively January 8, 1943, see Department of State Executive Agreement Series (EAS) No. 277, or 56 Stat. (pt. 2) 1685.

Trade Agreement Extension Act of 1951.[17] The latter requires the President to take "escape clause action" on any Trade Agreement concession which is causing or threatens serious injury to the domestic industry producing like or directly competitive products. While Argentine adherence to the GATT,[18] which contains a more satisfactory "escape clause", would be a solution, that country has shown no interest in acceding to the GATT. An approach to Argentina now concerning the "escape clause" might jeopardize the bilateral Trade Agreement by precipitating an Argentine request for a general revision and should therefore only be taken after thorough consideration. It is US policy to negotiate or revise trade agreements only within the framework of the GATT.

We have formally acquainted Argentina with our Point IV program and the procedure by which that country could participate but have never received more than individual expressions of interest from a limited number of Argentine officials. If Argentina should desire to participate, we would consider its requests in the light of relations at the time. Under present conditions we shall not make another approach on the matter. Being fully aware of the Argentine propensity to capitalize to the fullest any advantages which "terms of trade" may give it, it is our policy to avoid, insofar as possible, engaging in specific quid pro quo conversations or negotiations. Accordingly, we successfully opposed the Argentine desire to discuss specific quid pro quos in the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Foreign Ministers. This policy would not prevent us, however, from bargaining with the Argentines on a specific matter of vital interest to the US if we were certain that we could pay off. In conformity with the "correct" tactics we are now employing toward Argentina we have not supported its desires to obtain additional government credits and we are opposed to Argentina being allowed to utilize for other purposes any unused portion of the Export-Import Bank credit.

Having in mind the difficulties encountered in the conduct of certain private US enterprises in Argentina, it is a US objective to defend the legitimate rights of US firms doing business in or with that country. In the past eighteen months we have made successful representations in connection with international airline rate structures, permission for Braniff Airlines to fly into Argentina, remittance of 1949 blocked airline pesos at pre-devaluation rates, reciprocal exemption of transport companies from income taxes, transfer of the headquarters of Swift International to the US and the reentry of US motion pictures into Argentina.[19] Our representations are continuing with some hope of success with respect to the petroleum companies' efforts to sign a long-term importation and distribution agreement with Argentina [20] and the American and Foreign Power Company's efforts to sell out to the Argentine Government on reasonable terms. There seems to be little or no likelihood that the Argentine Government will resolve the problem of discriminations against US shipping companies in favor of the latter in view of its firm intention to favor Argentine lines as a means toward building up a large modern merchant fleet.[21] The US intermittently discusses the problems of the US meatpackers with Argentine officials with a view to ensuring their continued operation on a reasonably profitable basis.[22] Our current tactics in making representations on behalf of US business include emphasizing the damage which Argentina does to its credit by pursuing nationalistic economic policies which discourage new capital from entering the country and cause foreign enterprise now in the country to operate on a frightened wait-and-see basis.

[17] For text of the Trade Agreements Extension Act (Public Law 50), approved June 16, 1951, see 65 Stat. 72.

[18] For text of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), concluded at Geneva, October 30, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, January 1, 1948, see TIAS No. 1700, or 61 Stat. (pts. 5–6).

C. RELATIONS WITH OTHER STATES

Argentina's relations with neighboring states, while friendly on the surface, are ruffled by an undercurrent of distrust on the part of the [19] An agreement between the Argentine Government and the Motion Picture Association of America (MPAA) had been reached in January 1951; it essentially pledged the Argentine Government to implement the so-called Cereijo–Johnston Agreement, signed May 12, 1950, which provided for the unrestricted entry of United States films into Argentina and confidentially for minimum remittances up to 1.1 million dollars per year of earnings on United States films already circulating in Argentina. The terms of the new agreement, not fully incorporated into any written document, are described in despatches 1116, from Buenos Aires, February 1, 1951, not printed (835.452/2–151), and 1219, from Buenos Aires, February 16, 1951, not printed (835.452/2–1651). In telegram 37, from Buenos Aires, July 16, 1951, not printed, Ambassador Bunker had informed the Secretary of State that the Argentine Government had issued permits to the signatories of the Cereijo–Johnston Agreement, allowing them to import films from the United States (835.452/7–1651). For previous documentation with regard to the extended negotiations between representatives of the Argentine Government and the MPAA, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 691 ff.

[20] Documents relating to the efforts of the petroleum companies to negotiate a long-term petroleum agreement with the Argentine Government are in decimal files 811.05135 and 835.2553. No such agreement was reached in 1951. For previous documentation on this subject, see ibid.

[21] During 1951 intermittent and inconclusive discussions took place in Buenos Aires between representatives of the Argentine Government and United States shipping companies, concerning, inter alia, the alleged Argentine practice of granting prior exchange permits for merchandise designated for import in Argentine ships, and the requirement that imports and exports by official Argentine entities be carried by Argentine vessels. Pertinent documents are in decimal files 102.7971, 811.05135, and 935.537.

[22] United States meatpackers in Argentina contended that as a consequence of competition from rapidly proliferating government-owned packing houses, onerous controls on foreign packers, and the termination of the government's subsidy program in August 1950, they were operating on a loss basis. In despatch 108, from Buenos Aires, July 20, 1951, not printed, the Embassy had informed the Department of State that the Argentine Government, by a decree dated July 13, had authorized the Ministry of Economy to compensate United States meatpackers for losses incurred between September 1, 1950, and June 30, 1951 (835.311/7–2051). For previous documentation on the problems of the meatpackers, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 691 ff.

latter because of what they suspect may be Argentina's political and economic ambitions. While we believe that much of this distrust is voiced to the US to prevent it from becoming too friendly with Argentina and in order too gain for themselves further considerations from the US, especially in arms matters, we also believe that there is sincere apprehension as to Argentine intentions.

Peron's relations with the present Government of Bolivia have been continuous but troubled. The latter feels certain that Bolivian revolutionaries in Argentina are plotting to overthrow it and from time to time it has believed that they were receiving assistance from Peron. It is true that individual Argentines have aided the Bolivian revolutionaries, but we have no evidence to substantiate that the Peron Government was involved. Argentina and Bolivia have a long, common border, difficult to patrol, and a certain amount of illicit activity must be expected from private parties and venal officials.

Brazil and Argentina are jealous of each other's prestige in the western hemisphere and in the world. US–Brazilian relations have traditionally been more friendly than US–Argentine relations and Brazil tends to resent any manifestation of closer collaboration between the US and Argentina. US policy is to endeavor so to conduct its relations with the two countries that feelings of rivalry will be kept at a minimum.

A basic policy of both Argentina and Chile is believed to be friendship toward each other. As a result, the minor unfriendly incidents which occur from time to time reach reasonably quick conciliations. The present Chilean Government distrusts the Peron regime, feels it to be inherently dangerous, and has so informed us. The US has indicated to Chile that it has received no convincing evidence supporting the rumors concerning Argentine aggressive designs and Chile has not offered this substantiation. General Ibañez [23] not long ago announced in Argentina his candidacy for the Chilean presidency and prophesied that he and President Peron would be elected in 1952. The Department is following closely reports that Peron has offered or has contributed funds for the Ibañez campaign.

The US is interested in Argentine-Paraguayan relations primarily because they are a potential sore spot in the western hemisphere. Argentina's preferred geographic and historical position in relation to Paraguay might under certain conditions lead to an attempt at political domination. This, combined with Argentine-Brazilian rivalry for influence in Paraguay, might lead to serious friction between Brazil and Argentina. Finally, the tendency of Paraguayan political factions to take advantage of this rivalry for their own immediate ends tends to draw in the neighboring countries, willing or not. At present none of these potentially disturbing forces is believed to be seriously threatening. US policy is to mitigate them whenever possible and appropriate.

[23] Carlos Ibáñez del Campo.

Argentine-Uruguayan relations are of special interest to the US because of the frequently expressed fear of the Uruguayan Government that Peron is attempting to infiltrate and dominate Uruguay. The US has felt that these fears are exaggerated. The obvious incompatibility between the Argentine and Uruguayan concepts of democracy and the friendly attitude toward Peron of the principal opposition party in Uruguay exacerbates the underlying distrust of Argentina which Uruguay has in common with all of Argentina's neighbors. US policy is to calm Uruguayan fears since we believe them unjustified and to remind that Government that the US stands fully behind the Rio Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance in case Argentine aggression does occur. A likely source of embarrassment in Argentine-Uruguayan relations, especially prior to the November 1951 Argentine elections, will be the free Uruguayan press and radio. The Peron Government, as it restricts ever further Argentine outlets of public expression, will be increasingly angered by the free Uruguayan radio which Argentines can hear and the free Uruguayan press which they will probably see clandestinely. The US would be gravely concerned if Argentina were able to exert pressure to curb freedom of expression in Uruguay.

Argentina and the United Kingdom have for many years maintained a business relationship under the aegis of which British influence has also penetrated Argentina in cultural and other ways. There are developments, however, that indicate Argentine economic dependence on the UK may be declining. Argentine purchases of British public utilities in Argentina have wiped out the sterling debt attached to those utilities. Furthermore, Argentina is consuming more beef at home and is finding other markets for its exports, circumstances which have been hastened by stubborn British reluctance to pay what the Argentine, and many British, believe a fair price for beef. If Anglo-Argentine trade continues to decline, British prestige and influence may be expected to suffer. A consequence of this might be that the substantial US meat packing interests in Argentina which profit from a healthy Anglo-Argentine trade would suffer. There are significant unknowns in the picture. The effect of the nationalization of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Co.[24] upon UK–Argentina trade relations is still too early to judge. US policy is to play no direct part in Anglo-Argentine trade negotiations, though we must follow the situation closely because of its possible discriminatory or other effect on US interests in Argentina and its effect on our overall interest in world petroleum and food conditions.[25]

[24] For documentation concerning United States policy with respect to Iran, see volume v.

Argentina maintains diplomatic relations with the USSR and its satellites but political relations are not particularly good. Argentine diplomats have been treated poorly in Moscow and Russian diplomats are treated coolly in Buenos Aires. Having trade agreements with a number of the satellites, Argentina maintains that it must sell a small amount of its production to them in order to obtain goods which it vitally needs. It remains to be seen how this trade can be reconciled if at all with present US views and laws regarding commerce with iron curtain countries.

D. EVALUATION

It is not believed that any general policy toward Argentina would obtain better results in achieving US objectives than the present one of carrying on friendly, firm and frank relations. Less friendliness or more aggressive tactics on the part of the US would result in a resentment in Argentina which would make the conduct of relations more difficult and would stop the degree of collaboration we are now obtaining from that country. On some matters of great importance we receive no collaboration at all, but on some others we receive a considerable degree. It is believed that through our present policy we shall obtain at the very least a benevolent neutrality from Argentina if there should be another world war and this would be far better than the situation in the last war when Argentina was benevolently neutral toward our enemies.

While we are making progress in some respects in obtaining Argentine collaboration in hemisphere defense and toward world peace, in other ways we are not. Argentina has always taken its UN responsibilities seriously. In meetings of UN bodies Argentina has tended to vote with us and has not in practice adhered strictly to its "third position". Argentine cooperation in the OAS has been good on paper but we have yet to see how that country will carry out the resolutions of the 1951 Fourth Inter-American Meeting of Consultation of Foreign Ministers and other recent obligations. As in all spheres of our Argentine relations, we have never obtained what we wanted by critical or aggressive tactics. It is a certainty that Argentina would never have ratified the Rio Pact if we had employed such tactics on that subject.

President and Mrs. Peron, ex-Foreign Minister Bramuglia, and Minister of Defense Sosa Molina [26] have all stated on various occasions that Argentina would immediately declare war on the side of the US in case of war with the USSR. This is a stronger expression of solidarity than the US has received in the past from high-ranking Argentines and Argentine action in the UN and OAS lend it weight. How much Peron would contribute to our cause in the event of armed conflict with the USSR will in all probability vary in direct proportion to the degree to which the Argentine homeland is in danger and it is highly doubtful that any Argentine Government would in the foreseeable future any more than in the past offer troops unless that nation itself were threatened. This probably means that Argentina will not send troops outside the Western Hemisphere in the implementation of UN action, but it may well assist the UN in other ways and we should not jeopardize non-military assistance unless the cost is beyond reason.

---

[25] Documents relating to United States interest in the negotiations between Argentina and Great Britain during 1951 concerning meat purchases and trade are in decimal files 435.4131 and 835.311.

[26] José Humberto Sosa Molina.

A successful operation of our present policy was evidenced in March and April 1951 at the Fourth Inter-American Meeting of Consultation of Foreign Ministers. We now know that the Argentines came to the Meeting in an extremely sensitive mood and that on their arrival the tension was such that the principal determination to be made by the Argentine Government was whether it should walk out or stay and sabotage the meeting. The friendly attitude which Secretary Acheson and his staff showed the Argentine Foreign Minister and the courteous correct treatment accorded the Argentines from the start brought about a visible change in them. They were cooperative at the Meeting and were not obstructionist even in matters where we might have expected them to be. If we had had a critical or aggressive policy toward Argentina, that delegation would, we believe, have acted on its initial instructions and have walked out or resorted to sabotage. As in many prior instances, friendly personal contacts with high Argentine officials proved highly important to us and it should be our policy to continue to use this effective medium. Argentina's application for membership in the Food and Agriculture Organization may possibly be credited to US diplomacy. At least it was an action which we had for a long time urged Argentina to take and was a remarkable decision for Argentina in view of its past practice in the field of multilateral economic cooperation.

The US objective looking toward the strengthening of democratic institutions in Argentina has not been realized. Our policies to achieve this have been ineffective. It is believed that the US cannot immediately realize this objective without either running counter to its policy of non-intervention in the internal affairs of another state or with its policy of conducting relations with Argentina in a friendly, firm and frank manner. We should not abandon our friendly policy since we would then jeopardize such cooperation as we are receiving from Argentina and any chance of improving our present relations. It has been fairly conclusively proven that democracy cannot be exported and it is a safe assumption that democracy will come to Argentina principally as a result of the efforts of the Argentine people. The farthest we should go unilaterally is to point out on appropriate occasions that the Argentine Government's attitude on civil liberties is a main deterrent to real US friendship and cooperation.

It is most difficult to know to what degree our objective of creating and maintaining a favorable climate of opinion in Argentina toward the US and its policies is being realized. This is principally because of the limitation on freedom of expression and because newspapers, radios and orators speaking the Government line follow the anti-US pattern that has been laid down. We know high level government officials who would lose their jobs if their anti-Peron and pro-US views were reported. How many hold such views whom we do not know? One cannot assume that only persons of anti-US sentiments will vote for Peron since we know Peronistas who are pro-US. There is substantial demand for USIE material and services in Argentina and this in itself is of some signficance. Furthermore we are aware that most Argentines who visit the US return favorably impressed. Many of these show themselves individually and on their own initiative most sympathetic to the US. Our cultural centers are active and there is a continuing demand for US artists and lecturers.

The USIE program functions under obvious limitations in the face of adverse propaganda inspired by the Argentine Government, but it has so far been able to operate through all media of information with the toleration, and in some instances effective cooperation, of the authorities. It is in fact remarkable that under present conditions our press and radio operations have been interfered with so little. We should not be surprised if as the fever increases prior to the November 11, 1951 election our USIE activities are curbed or perhaps even stopped altogether by the authorities. This would probably be done on the ground that the program is intervening in Argentine internal affairs or that it is misleading the Argentine people. There would not need to be any evidence for such charges. Under present circumstances the most promising and feasible policies are to continue our USIE activities at the highest level likely to be allowed by the Argentine Government but within that difficult limitation to so gauge the program that it will be as influential as possible especially among Peronistas.

There has been some improvement in economic relations between the US and Argentina in the last two years. As a result of the work of the Joint US-Argentine Committee on Commercial Studies (September–December, 1949),[27] Argentine commercial practices were liberalized in certain respects and its trade balance with the US improved because of this and also because of higher commodity prices which have obtained since June 1950. Certain specific objectives have been attained in regard to the treatment of US investments in Argentina although the record is far from being all that we desire. Most of the progress was obtained during the early part of 1950 when negotiations were going on for an Export-Import Bank credit. However, there has been no appreciable change in the fundamental attitude of Argentina toward foreign investment, this attitude being to subordinate all to domestic political expediency. Under present circumstances the outlook for improvement in the economic field is not bright.

[27] For documentation on the formation and activities of the Joint Committee, see Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. II, pp. 473 ff.

We can point to little success in the field of Argentine multilateral economic cooperation and it is probable that this situation will continue. Argentina has not associated itself with the International Bank for Reconstruction, the International Monetary Fund, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade or with the endeavor to cease trade with the Soviet bloc. On the other hand, after long delay Argentina has begun to participate in the committees set up to consider materials shortages resulting from the emergency. Argentina has its heart set on becoming a member of the UN Economic and Social Council at the next General Assembly and it may be that it will deviate from its usual aloofness from multilateral economic matters as a step in its ECOSOC election campaign. During the period that we continue to employ correct tactics toward Argentina, we shall not urge it to cooperate with our objectives in international economic bodies.

835.10/12–1351

Memorandum by Mr. Henry Dearborn of the Division of River Plate Affairs to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller)[1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] December 13, 1951.

Subject: Argentine Financial Arrears

The National Foreign Trade Council[2] proposes to issue a press release (attached as Tab A)[3] expressing the view that the Argentine Government should be strongly urged to take immediate steps to approve the transfer of at least a portion of Argentine financial arrears and to establish a definite formula to clear the entire backlog. Four hundred million pesos in unremitted profits were worth $82,000,000 at the end of 1948 but are worth only $29,000,000 at the current rate of exchange according to the release.

The number 1 objective of the NFTC in connection with this matter is undoubtedly to achieve payment by Argentina of the arrears at the [1] Addressed also to Mr. Mann, Deputy Director of the Office of South American Affairs Rollin S. Atwood, and Mr. Randolph.

[2] A private organization representing United States corporations engaged in international trade.

[3] Not printed.

most favorable possible rate. We are, I am sure, ready to help in any way we can to gain this objective. However, given the present state of the Argentine economy and the present attitude toward foreign capital of the Peron Government, it is doubted that the desired objective can be reached either by sending a collector to pound on the door or by publicizing the debt.

The proposed NFTC release in effect charges that Argentina, by not settling its financial arrearages is not honoring a commitment to the Eximbank. This charge puts Argentina on the defensive by appearing to brand her as a welcher. Such an inference, if made, should be true beyond any argument. It is not likely, however, that Argentina considers she has failed to honor a commitment. She has recognized the debt and has agreed to pay it—not on any given date, however, but rather "when the status of the balance of payments so permits it". Argentina has, to be sure, sufficient dollar balances to pay these arrears at once, but if she feels that her balance of payments situation does not permit payment now, her position has some substance. Owing to Argentina's dismal crop outlook for 1952 and her depleted European balances, her balances in the US are, in a way, a nest egg for hard times. It is not therefore clear that Argentina has failed to live up to a commitment. If it is not clear the case of US creditors may be harmed if they so charge.

The disadvantageous situation in which the US creditors find themselves in the face of the depreciation of the peso is naturally a cause of real concern to them. It seems highly unlikely, however, that Argentina will recognize, as desired by the NFTC, a responsibility to remit earnings at an exchange rate approximating that in existence at the time remittances were blocked. Since Argentina is under no obligation to recognize such a responsibility, her only motives in adopting such a course would be in order to encourage, or at least not to discourage, foreign investment. Unfortunately the past actions of Peron's Government have been such as to show clearly that Peron wants foreign investment only on his own terms. It is well known that his terms have not been liberal and it would be most surprising if they included remittance of profits at higher than the current rate of exchange.

There can be little doubt but that the Peron Government will regard any effort to collect financial arrears at this time, when Argentina finds herself in severe economic difficulties, as an attempt to kick her when she is "down." We are not in a good psychological position. Despite Argentina's reserves, we are not even in a good bargaining position outside the psychological realm if it is true that Argentina is going to rely on a program of austerity instead of foreign aid to pull her through 1952.

What action should be taken?

I see no reason why an inquiry should not be made by our Embassy of Cereijo or Gomez Morales [4] whether Argentina has any immediate plans for implementing the latter's stated intention to pay her financial arrears when her "balance of payments so permits it." The Embassy might add that in the opinion of the creditors Argentina's dollar balance seems to be more than enough to justify at least the formulation of a plan for payment and some initial action by way of implementation of the plan. We should not, however, put on any pressure through the Foreign Office at this time. It is my view that a press statement by the NFTC would not hasten payment and might, in fact, retard the Argentine willingness to cooperate by creating an even more hostile attitude in Argentina toward US capital.[5]

Attached as Tab B is a memorandum [6] giving a chronology of significant steps since March 1950 pertaining to Argentine financial dollar arrears.

Tab B

CONFIDENTIAL

Chronology of Significant Steps since March 1950 Regarding Argentine Financial Arrears.

[Here follow those sections of the chronology pertaining to the period from March to December 1950.]

5. A despatch from our Embassy in Buenos Aires of January 29, 1951, inquired whether the Argentine Government should be approached regarding the resumption of financial remittances. About a month later Dr. Cereijo told Assistant Secretary Miller that he (Cereijo) had completely fulfilled his agreement with the Export–Import Bank regarding financial arrears. As for current remittances, Cereijo referred to Argentina's remittance of 5 percent on current earnings and appeared to think that was satisfactory. We have not taken the arrearage problem up with Argentina since Mr. Miller's talk with Cereijo. Relations between the two countries became increasingly difficult as the November 11 elections approached. "Wall Street" was one of the principal targets of the Peron Government's anti-US propaganda and it was realized that any approach on this problem would be turned to the disadvantage of the US, and would probably [4] Alfredo Gómez Morales, Argentine Minister of Finance.

[5] A memorandum from Assistant Secretary Miller to Mr. Dearborn, dated December 18, 1951, and attached to the source text, reads as follows: "I have talked with both [William S.] Swingle [Executive President and member of the Board of Directors, NFTC] and John Akin [Executive Officer in charge of Western Hemisphere matters, NFTC] about the attached matter in the last few days and they have indicated that they are going along with my suggestion that in the first instance the Council confine itself to writing a letter to us which we could in turn pass on to our Embassy at BA for any action that they might think appropriate." (835.10/12–1351) make a satisfactory settlement less likely by making the question more a political than an economic one.

[6] Printed below.

6. On September 27, 1951, Messers Akin, Jacob [7] and Emerson [8] of the National Foreign Trade Council called at the Department to request the Department's opinion as to the advisability of issuing a press release on the subject of Argentina's financial arrears.[9] They were advised that such a release prior to the Argentine presidential elections might be detrimental to the achievement of their principal objectives. They agreed with the Department after hearing its reasoning. The latter recommended that the problem be discussed again following the elections and that a course of action be developed in the light of the situation at that time.

7. On November 20, 1951, Mr. Akin wrote to Mr. Miller suggesting that he and Mr. Gray [10] would like to go over the problem with him at an early date. Mr. Miller replied that he would be glad to do this at their earliest convenience.

8. The following conversation took place on November 30, 1951 between Mr. Multer [11] of the House Banking and Currency Committee, President Peron and the Argentine Minister of Finance:

Congressman Multer:

I am sure that when there is confidence in the United States that Argentina will allow the re-export of earnings as readily as she allows the importation of materials, this situation (strict terms of payment for Argentina in US) will find its solution.

Minister of Finance:

But there is no payment pending.

Congressman Multer:

What happens is that, although they know there is no payment pending, today it is not possible to re-export the earnings from North American investments in the country and that has there its repercussion.

The President:

Gentlemen, I do not discount the importance which this minor and circumstancial matter has in international relations, particularly commercial ones, between the United States and Argentina, but as a statesman, I view the problem from a more elevated [7] Leonard Jacob, II, Vice President, International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation; member of the Board of Directors, NFTC.

[8] Earl A. Emerson, President, ARMCO International Corporation; member of the Board of Directors, NFTC.

[9] The discussion which took place at the Department of State on September 27 is recorded in a memorandum of conversation of the same date, by Mr. Dearborn, not printed (835.10/9–2751).

[10] W. Latimer Gray, Senior Vice President, First National Bank of Boston; member of the Board of Directors, NFTC.

[11] Abraham J. Multer (D–N.Y.).

place, a higher one, because I do not believe that an entire economic policy can be based on an insignificant matter such as this.

I analyze, since I have been the head of the government, what the conduct of the United States has been in the interchange between Argentina and that country. I see a very unfavorable circumstance for us when, during five years they owed us thousands of millions of dollars and we said not a single word, while in great contrast, when we have a small debt they wish to take us to the scaffold for it. . . .[12] We have not had reciprocity from the United States.

[12] Omission in the source text.

735.5–MSP/12–2251 : Airgram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Argentina

SECRET WASHINGTON, December 22, 1951.

A–186. The purpose of this airgram is to furnish the Embassy with the separate instructions referred to in the penultimate paragraph of the Department's circular airgram of December 18, 1951,[1] relating to implementation of the Mutual Security Act of 1951. This message should be made available to U.S. Service Attachés and the Chief of U.S. Army Mission for their information.

In presenting plans for implementation of the military grant aid program for Latin America to the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Defense indicated that, primarily for military reasons, Argentina had been included in the list of countries with which specific programs of grant aid should be initiated, but suggested that the Secretary of State might wish to delay negotiations with that country until a more appropriate time. The latter agreed that negotiations with Argentina should be delayed until a more appropriate time.

The specific program contemplated for Argentina, subject to the conditions described above and to the negotiation of the Bilateral Mutual Assistance Agreement required by the Act, would involve US assistance in the preparation of Army units for missions important to hemisphere defense. Furthermore, in the event that satisfactory agreements cannot be concluded with one or more of the nations now tentatively scheduled to be approached for Air Force contributions, the Secretary of Defense recommended that a program in this category be attempted with Argentina.

It is not possible to state when a "more appropriate time" for an approach to Argentina might be. Argentine foreign policy and the state of Argentine–US relations must be primary considerations. At present, the unsatisfactory status of US–Argentine relations make quite impossible any US approach to Argentina leading to US military grant aid to that country. Furthermore Peron's policies appear to indicate clearly that his Government will not enter into any undertakings requiring the use of Argentine forces outside of Argentina.

[1] Not printed (720.5–MSP/12–1851).

If you are asked by responsible inquirers why the US is not offering to enter into negotiations to reach a Bilateral Military Assistance Agreement with Argentina, you may in your discretion use appropriate parts of the information included in the seven numbered paragraphs of the Department's circular airgram of December 18. It will be obvious that based purely on military criteria Argentina might be expected to be approached in this program. If called upon to explain why this was not done you may wish to state frankly that Argentina's antagonistic attitude toward US and US objectives has created a situation among the US public and in the US Government which would make any grant military assistance impossible at this time. You might also mention that Peronista pronouncements about sending no Argentine military contingents outside the national territory, particularly where these emanate from a country possessing Argentina's potential for a contribution to collective defense, can only be interpreted as contrary to the objectives of the program.

You are requested to keep the Department fully informed with regard to developments which may indicate changes in Argentine policies and attitudes which in turn would justify an approach to the Argentine Government with a view to entering into negotiations for a Bilateral Military Assistance Agreement.

ACHESON

Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26

The Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Ambassador in Argentina (Bunker)

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, December 28, 1951.

DEAR ELLSWORTH: I think your letter of December 13 [1] presents us with a lot of problems that deserve considerable thought. In particular, I am concerned over your worry that we should not close the door, or give them the impression that the door is closed, to an improvement of relations between our two countries. In this connection you will be interested in reading the enclosed study [2] of the handling of U.S.-

[1] In his letter, Ambassador Bunker stated in part:

"The overriding impression that I have received during these last few weeks is that there is a desire on the part of Perón to try to improve relations with the United States, and that he also feels that, in view of his handsome victory at the polls (an outstanding example of purity in elections), we should be inclined to take a more favorable, less antagonistic view of his administration." (Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26)

[2] Not found with the source text.

Argentine relations in recent years prepared by Louis J. Halle, Jr., who was formerly policy planning adviser in ARA and who is now at the War College. I find that this study is helpful and timely even though I think that in parts it is a little naive in dealing with the formulation of American foreign policy as if it were a task that could be executed without reference to the state of domestic public opinion in this country. However, the thing that struck me most forcefully in reading this paper just after having read your letter was the very penetrating analysis on how two countries can get themselves into an inflexible situation like this. In a sense I cannot help but feel that it would help if I shuffled off the scene since I expressed my views on the Perons when I made the statement that Halle refers to in the La Prensa case. However, I am not going to leave (the Secretary only yesterday having insisted that I stay on until the end of the current Presidential term), and it is idle for me to speculate if I would have been better off not having said anything about the La Prensa case.

Having agreed with you, however, as to the fact that we should not close the door—and I have done everything in my power to keep good relations with Paz and Remorino and not to let the Aloe–Apold–Colom [3] diatribes suck us into a dog fight—I have to express skepticism as to what is going to come through that door if it is kept open. The reason for my doubts is that I am afraid that what Peron really wants from us is something that is not within our power to give him—because I feel that what is really important to Peron and to his wife to receive from this country is not so much loans or even military equipment but rather something much more intangible and impossible for us to deliver, namely, our official approval of them personally and of their regime coming from both our Government and our press. That is what my talks with Peron really came down to in February 1950 when he talked about "arreglando mi situación con los Estados Unidos" and what is fundamentally, in my opinion, at the root of all of this press campaign against us down there. In this connection, I think that one of Halle's shrewdest observations in the enclosed study is that although Peron attacks us to attract attention to himself he is also particularly eager to be accepted as one of the boys. This bears out precisely the impression I got when I lunched with Peron when I was in Argentina this last February.[4] As he expatiated about the virtues of Eisenhower, Marshall, Bradley and Ridgway,[5] one almost felt that he considered

---

[3] Eduardo Colom, a Peronista member of the Argentine Chamber of Deputies; Raúl A. Apold, Sub-Secretary of Information; Carlos Vicente Aloé, Governor-elect of the province of Buenos Aires.

[4] Mr. Miller had met with President Perón in early March.

[5] General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower, Supreme Allied Commander, Europe; General of the Army George C. Marshall, Secretary of Defense until September 12, 1951; General of the Army Omar N. Bradley, Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff; Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, Commander, Far East Command.

himself as being part of that great group even though only half an hour earlier he had been exculpating himself for Argentina's non-participation in Korea on the ground of internal political expediency.

I do hope that you can come up to Washington at your earliest convenience for a number of reasons; provided that it would not be embarrassing for you to come.

[Here follow personal references.]

Sincerely yours, EDWARD G. MILLER, JR.

BOLIVIA

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND BOLIVIA[1]

Editorial Note

On March 14, 1951, the United States and Bolivia signed at La Paz a Point IV General Agreement for Technical Cooperation, which entered into force on the same date. A copy of the agreement was transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 809, from La Paz, March 14 (824.00–TA/3–1451). For the text of the agreement, see United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), vol. 2, p. 671, or Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 3033. For the Department's press release concerning the agreement, see Department of State Bulletin, March 26, 1951, page 501.

[1] For previous documentation concerning United States relations with Bolivia, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 744 ff.

824.00/4–551

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. William P. Hudson of the Office of South American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] April 5, 1951.

Subject: Bolivian Request for Further Economic Assistance

Participants: Pedro Zilveti Arce, Foreign Minister of Bolivia
Ricardo Martinez Vargas, Ambassador of Bolivia
Jose Romero Loza, Member of Bolivian Delegation to IAM
ARA—Mr. Miller [1]
OSA—Mr. Atwood [2]
OSA—Mr. Hudson

Sr. Zilveti Arce began the conversation by pointing out that Bolivia had cooperated in the "spiritual" aspects of the IAM conference [3]

[1] Edward G. Miller, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.
[2] Rollin S. Atwood, Deputy Director, Office of South American Affairs.
[3] Reference is to the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of American States, which met at Washington, March 26–April 7, 1951; documentation relating to the meeting may be found on pp. 925 ff.

without getting much in return in the way of satisfaction of her material needs. For the psychological effect in Bolivia he planned to remain in the United States for a week or so after the conclusion of the conference, and he hoped that at the end of that time he would have something to take home to show his people that consideration was being given to Bolivia's economic problems.[4]

He outlined these problems as follows:

(1) The Banco Minero. In order to increase tin production and thus increase reserves of foreign exchange needed to finance economic development projects, it was desirable to expand the capital and activities of this Government-owned bank. If the Bank could give more effective assistance to small and medium miners, the bases of production could be broadened, and dependence on the large mining companies could be reduced. The Government was thinking of converting the Bank into a mixed society, with participation by private capital.

(2) Agricultural Development. The Cochabamba-Santa Cruz highway would soon be completed, but little provision was being made for utilizing the regions to which it would provide access. The whole purpose of the highway would be defeated unless such provision were made.

(3) Petroleum Production. Sr. Zilveti Arce felt that Bolivia's oil reserves had a strategic importance because of their location in the heart of the South American continent; Bolivian oil could be supplied to all of Bolivia's neighbors which needed it. He referred to his statement in the April 2 plenary session of IAM* and said that this announcement had been made with the full concurrence of the Bolivian Cabinet. Bolivia's immediate need, he said, was to increase YPFB production sufficiently to operate the new refineries and satisfy domestic requirements.

(4) Military Needs. Bolivia proposed to create two Army divisions of war strength (14,800 men each), one for internal security (to protect against sabotage of mining and related installations, put down strikes, etc.) and one for use in the common defense effort either within the Western Hemisphere or outside it. However, the Bolivian Army has for some time been very low on weapons, and would hope that the United States would equip these divisions.

Mr. Miller responded that the Department of State was in many respects only a switchboard operator; its power to assist the Bolivians in attacking their economic problems was limited, since many of the means for doing this rested in the hands of other Government agencies or even of private agencies. As examples he cited the tin price and the [4] The Bolivian Government described its economic needs in greater detail in a memorandum dated April 13, 1951, which was delivered to the Department of State on the same date. The original copy of the memorandum could not be located in Department of State files, but a translation is attached to a memorandum dated April 25 (824.00/4–2551).

---

*["Retaining the autonomous agency which now has charge of the management of this industry, our Government plans to issue dispositions which will liberally open the door to the foreign investor. New recently discovered petroleum horizons make it possible to surpass the most optimistic calculations."] [Footnote in the source text.]

general problem of tin production, the latter of which was to a large degree dependent on private companies.

Mr. Miller spoke at length of United States petroleum policy. The Export–Import Bank and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development both had policies prohibiting loans to State agencies for petroleum development. He could think of only two or three deviations from this policy, including the case of Bolivia, where the deviation occurred under very special circumstances. Actual practice formed the foundation of this policy: all countries where State agencies were charged with petroleum production were net importers of petroleum products, and all in which production was in private hands were net exporters. He suggested that Guillermo Mariaca, the general manager of YPFB, who is now in the United States trying to solve YPFB's production problem, be sent to look for a private company to operate YPFB.

Mr. Miller recalled having flown over the Santa Cruz region and said that he had personal knowledge both of its potential richness and of the difficulties of exploiting it. We were trying to help overcome these difficulties.

With regard to Bolivia's military problem, Mr. Miller thought that the policy of the Department of Defense was to supply weapons only for specific purposes or operations, but he asked Mr. Atwood to talk with Mr. White [5] (AR), who would talk with our military people about this problem, in preparation for talks with Bolivian representatives. The latter, he felt, should include one civilian.

Concluding his response to Sr. Zilveti's statement, Mr. Miller agreed that discussion of Bolivian economic problems as a unit or "package" should take place, and he asked Mr. Atwood to arrange this. He pointed out that nothing concrete could be expected to emerge promptly, but he felt that some general announcement might be made within the time which Sr. Zilveti had indicated to be desirable.[6]

Ambassador Martinez Vargas brought the discussion back to the petroleum problem, saying that Bolivia very urgently needed a small amount of money (US $3,500,000 if his memory served) in order to do the drilling and repairing of wells required to bring YPFB production up immediately. He pointed out the urgency of this problem in relation to the construction of the Cochabamba-Santa Cruz highway and the servicing of Eximbank loans. He said that some discussion of an additional loan to YPFB had already taken place with Eximbank officials,[7] and that their reaction had been favorable. Such a loan, he contended, would not be a violation of general U.S. petroleum policy because it would be merely an extension of assistance already given to develop Camiri and exploit its production. The new loan would merely be used to complete the original program.

[5] Ivan B. White, Director, Office of Regional American Affairs.

[6] On April 23, 1951, the Department of State announced the formation of a United States-Bolivian Joint Economic Committee to study economic problems of mutual interest to the two governments. The first round of meetings took place during late April and May, another series began in October. Documents pertaining to the work of the committee are in Department of State decimal files 824.00, 824.00–TA, 824.10, and 824.2553. For the press release announcing the formation of the committee, see Department of State Bulletin, May 7, 1951, p. 748.

Mr. Miller agreed with this contention and said that the Department of State would not oppose such a new loan on policy grounds.

Speaking of the tin price, Ambassador Martinez Vargas pointed out that previous Bolivian contracts with the RFC had been based on the New York price. Now, however, since RFC was controlling the latter price, Bolivia could not accept a contract based on it.[8]

Mr. Atwood suggested that the Bolivians approach the RFC on the subject again.

Mr. Miller said that he strongly shared the Bolivian hope that the contract could be signed at an early date.

---

[7] Reference is to Bolivia's application to the Export–Import Bank for a $3,000,000 credit to finance the cost of machinery, equipment, and services purchased in the United States for drilling additional wells in the Camiri oilfield. In a memorandum dated August 7, 1951, Mr. Jerome J. Stenger, Department of State liaison officer with the Export–Import Bank, stated in part that "ARA is most anxious to have this loan approved to compensate [Bolivia] for the low price of tin", but "the Bank is not convinced that there is enough petroleum to support this extended drilling program." (103–XMB/8–751) Although the loan application remained under consideration by the bank until mid-1952, it was not approved.

[8] A long-term contract for the purchase of tin concentrates by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (RFC) which was signed with Bolivian producers in mid-June 1950, terminated on December 31, 1950. At the request of the Bolivian Government, it was extended for an additional 2 months, pending the conclusion of a new long-term contract. Intermittent negotiations between Bolivian representatives and the RFC took place during late February and early March, but disagreement over price prevented early signature of a new contract. Pertinent documents are in decimal file 824.2544.

824.2544/4–1051

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. William P. Hudson of the Office of South American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] April 18, 1951.

Subject: Bolivian Request for Political Support for Foreign Minister Zilveti Arce

Participants: Sr. Ricardo Martinez Vargas, Ambassador of Bolivia
Mr. Thomas C. Mann, Deputy Assistant Secretary—ARA
Mr. Rollin S. Atwood—OSA
Mr. William P. Hudson—OSA

Ambassador Martinez Vargas first talked with Mr. Atwood and Mr. Hudson, reiterating the political urgency of Bolivia's obtaining a long-term tin contract with RFC. (See memorandum of conversation with him on April 10.[1])

Mr. Atwood explained that the Department was still doing its best to arrange for a long-term contract, but that the prospects did not appear good.

Such being the case, Ambassador Martinez said that he had concluded it was desirable for the Bolivian producers to sign the short-term contract offered by the RFC,[2] provided the Department of State could at the same time issue a press release referring to the eventual prospect of a long-term contract and to the impending reexamination of Bolivian economic problems. (See memorandum of conversation of April 5 between Assistant Secretary Miller and the Bolivian Foreign Minister.) The Ambassador said that when our statement was issued he would simultaneously release a statement to the effect that the Bolivian Government would take the necessary internal measures to increase the production of strategic materials.

Mr. Atwood expressed the opinion that the Ambassador's proposal could probably be carried out;[3] meanwhile, he said, the Department would continue its efforts to arrange a long-term tin contract.

Emphasizing once more the importance of providing some support for the Foreign Minister upon his return to Bolivia, the Ambassador said that he did not wish to take up the time of Secretary Acheson or President Truman, although he would do so if necessary, but that he did want to explain the situation personally to Mr. Mann.

The meeting having been moved to Mr. Mann's office, the Ambassador repeated what he had told Mr. Atwood and Mr. Hudson and also referred to the conversation which Mr. Miller had had with the Bolivian Foreign Minister on April 5.

Mr. Mann assured the Ambassador that we appreciated what the Bolivian Foreign Minister had done in Washington and what he planned to do upon his return to Bolivia, and that the Department would do what it could about the problems which the Ambassador had presented. Referring to protests in La Paz against the Foreign Minister's statement that Bolivia would supply troops for Korea, Mr. Mann suggested that the Ambassador remind Sr. Zilveti Arce that if

---

[1] In that memorandum, which was drafted by Mr. Hudson, Ambassador Martínez Vargas was reported to have stated, in part, "that signature of the tin contract was an absolute political necessity," that a "long-term contract with a clause providing for periodic [price] adjustments might serve the purpose if signed immediately", and that "the tin contract problem must be considered quite apart from the 'package' examination of Bolivia's other problems." (824.2544/4–1051)

[2] On April 23, 1951, Bolivian producers and the RFC signed an interim contract covering deliveries of tin concentrates to the United States government-owned smelter at Texas City, Texas, between March 1 and May 31, with the price based on the average Singapore price of tin for the period from April 10 to May 31, 1951.

[3] The Department issued a press release along the lines desired by Ambassador Martínez Vargas on April 23. For its text, see the Department of State Bulletin, May 7, 1951, p. 748.

the Bolivians were complaining about spilling their blood for the Yankees, a lot of Yankees were also complaining about American blood already being spilled in Korea for Bolivia and other countries of this hemisphere.

[Here follows an exchange between Mr. Hudson and Ambassador Martínez Vargas concerning the rumored resignation of Foreign Minister Zilveti Arce.]

824.00-TA/4-2751

Memorandum by the Deputy Director of the Office of South American Affairs (Atwood) to the Director of That Office (Warren)[1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] April 27, 1951.

Subject: Considerations Bearing on Further Assistance to Bolivia

The Bolivian request for further financial and technical assistance must be considered in relation to the following factors, among others:

(1) The pattern of Bolivia's present economic development program and our present assistance in that program;
(2) The capacity of the Bolivian economy to service further loans;
(3) Steps which must be taken by the Bolivian Government to complement measures taken by us for the attainment of common objectives;
(4) The relation between additional assistance to Bolivia and the recommendations of a United Nations mission which surveyed the Bolivian economy last year;
(5) Dangers inherent in increasing the resources of Bolivian Governmental agencies.

1. Present Development Program

Those aspects of Bolivia's present economic development program which are logical and integrated are based on the report made in 1942 by the Bohan Mission,[2] which had been sent to Bolivia by the United States Government. This Mission recommended, in brief, that Bolivian dependence on mineral exports should be greatly reduced by the development of her agricultural and petroleum resources.

Agricultural and forest production were to be increased particularly in the Santa Cruz area, and to this end a highway was to be constructed between Cochabamba and Santa Cruz and the Bolivian Development Corporation was to undertake the establishment of pilot projects for [1] Addressed also to Mr. Merwin L. Bohan, United States Representative to the Inter-American Economic and Social Council, and Mr. Winthrop G. Brown, Acting Director of the Office of International Materials Policy. Mr. Warren, Mr. Bohan, and Mr. Brown represented the United States on the recently formed United States-Bolivian Joint Economic Committee. The memorandum was drafted by Mr. Hudson.

---

[2] For documentation on the United States Economic Mission to Bolivia (popularly known as the Bohan Mission, for the Chief of the Mission, Merwin L. Bohan), see Foreign Relations, 1942, vol. v, pp. 592 ff.

the production of meat, rice, sugar, and lumber. The highway has been under construction for several years. The Eximbank has already lent $10,350,000 for this purpose, and has established an additional line of credit of up to $16,000,000. The Bolivian Government has spent about $8,000,000 and is committed to spend an additional $8,000,000 or whatever more may be required to complete the road. Construction should be finished in 1953 or early 1954.

The agricultural projects of the Bolivian Development Corporation have not flourished, largely because insufficient investment has been made, and little private capital is now flowing into Santa Cruz. Unless a substantial investment program is undertaken in the Santa Cruz area promptly, little production potential will have been developed by the time the highway is concluded.

Some technical assistance for development of the Santa Cruz area is being supplied by the Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations of the U.S. Department of Agriculture. It is hoped to increase this aid under the 1952 Point IV program.

The Bolivian petroleum program has consisted principally of increasing crude production at Camiri, building refineries at Cochabamba and Sucre, and constructing a pipeline from Camiri to the refineries. The Eximbank has lent $8,500,000 for this program, and the Bolivians have invested about $14,000,000. They have now applied for a new loan of $3,000,000 for a drilling program to bring Camiri production up sufficiently to supply domestic requirements.

The Bolivian Government has tended to dissipate its very limited developmental resources rather than concentrating them on the integrated program described above. Considerable sums of money are spent annually on the construction of two railroads (La Paz-Beni and Cochabamba-Santa Cruz) which are not at present economically practicable. Large debts to Brazil and Argentina are being incurred for the construction of two other railroads and a highway which are of doubtful immediate economic value. The Bolivians would like to borrow $20,000,000 for immediate investment in irrigation projects in areas outside the Santa Cruz region—although they have insufficient resources to develop the latter region (which does not require irrigation).

For some years to come, minerals production must supply most of the foreign exchange which Bolivia will need to finance her development program. Current high prices and full demand for her minerals afford an opportunity to build up reserves for this purpose. Maximum production of minerals is thus an essential part of her development program, quite aside from the interest which both Bolivia and the United States have in making maximum quantities of strategic materials available for defense use.

Except for one small technical assistance project (which it is hoped to expand under Point IV) we are not now giving Bolivia any assistance in the minerals production aspect of her development program. However, there has recently been considerable exploration of possibilities for such assistance, including loans to producers, long-term contracts, extensive technical assistance, and export priority rating for mining equipment.

2. Capacity to Service Further Loans

Such incomplete studies as have been made and such data as are available suggest that Bolivia's middle-term balance of payments prospects are exceedingly gloomy. There is a very serious question as to whether, when the present boom in minerals prices has ended, Bolivia will be able to service even the obligations which she has already incurred or has already committed herself to incur. Careful and professional study of her international payments prospects is therefore needed in connection with consideration of her requests for further loans. Such study might also throw valuable light on the question of the most suitable terms for any additional loans; for example, it might be desirable to schedule amortization of such loans over the short period during which minerals prices may be expected to remain high, and thus force the employment of bonanza earnings in development projects rather than in increased imports.

Aside from the balance of payments question there is also serious doubt about the ability of the Bolivian Government to raise revenues sufficient to cover financing of additional loans.

3. Complementary Bolivian Measures

Our defense agencies consider it essential that Bolivian production of tungsten for sale to the United States be sharply increased—an objective which is also in the interest of Bolivia. Various agencies of the United States Government are in position to render substantial assistance toward such an increase, probably including assistance to the Bolivian Government's Banco Minero. The Bolivian Government, however, must modify its exchange controls relating to tungsten in such a way as to make an increase in production profitable and attractive to the private companies which control the most important tungsten properties.

Our defense agencies also require a continuing high level of production of Bolivian tin ores for the Texas City smelter. Such production can be maintained only if the producers can expect a reasonable degree of stability in Bolivian Governmental exchange controls and tax measures. A high level of tin exports is also of course in the interests of Bolivia and of the Bolivian economic development program.

Steps to increase minerals production are the Bolivian measures of greatest immediate interest to the United States. However, there are many other measures which the Bolivian Government ought ideally to take if United States long-term economic assistance is to be fully effective. In fact, there is some doubt as to whether piecemeal assistance to Bolivia, in the absence of complementary Bolivian efforts at self-help, may not be largely useless and actually harmful in the sense of increasing a debt burden which Bolivia will not be able to carry unless she undertakes certain reforms. If the Committee plans to give serious consideration to the desirability of advocating further large loans to Bolivia, it may also wish to study the possibility of persuading the Bolivians to adopt some or all of the needed reforms. Examples of measures which the Bolivian Government should take are as follows:

(a) Tax reform, including some immediate measures to effect substantial increases in revenues;

(b) Reform of other aspects of the fiscal system, including its administration;

(c) An effective campaign against inflation, including the above and other measures;

(d) An effective program to build up foreign exchange reserves during the present bonanza period;

(e) Progress, in consultation with the International Monetary Fund, toward reform of the exchange rate system;

(f) Concentration of resources on an integrated and practicable economic development program;

(g) Perhaps an attempt to settle the basically important conflict between the Government and private minerals exporters over the foreign exchange needs of the latter through a thorough investigation by a foreign accounting firm acceptable to the two parties.

4. The United Nations Problem

In 1950, at the invitation of the Bolivian Government, a technical mission of the United Nations surveyed the Bolivian economy and prepared a report recommending a program of action which it felt offered the only possible solution for Bolivia's basic economic problems. In anticipation that it might be "necessary . . . to force Bolivian compliance with the details of the program," Dr. Hugh Keenleyside, the chief of the U.N. mission, called at the Department twice during the fall of 1950. On his first visit he expressed the hope "that the United States will make it clear to Bolivia that it cannot back out of the perhaps onerous reforms needed and trust the United States to come to its assistance again." Assistant Secretary Miller told him that "provided the UN program was in harmony with US objectives and policies and met with our approval, we would make it most clear to Bolivia that we would not continue 'handouts' if it decided the recommended reforms were too unpalatable." On his second visit Dr. Keenleyside hinted at a hope that "the State Department would not undermine the work of the mission by offering to solve Bolivia's problems for them if they do not accept the report." Assistant Secretary Miller replied that "we had no intention of doing so."

5. Dangers in Assistance to Bolivian Government Agencies

In requesting financial assistance the Bolivians are apparently thinking exclusively of loans to Bolivian Government agencies. Some consideration must be given to three dangers inherent in such loans.

First there is the question of the efficiency of Bolivian Government agencies as opposed to private companies which would invest their own capital along with United States loans. Other things being equal, the records of such Bolivian agencies as YPFB, the Bancos Minero and Agricola, and the Bolivian Development Corporation indicate that private companies would be more efficient.

Second there is the question of conflict between such loans and our general policy of favoring private enterprise. There exists in Bolivia today a strong tendency toward excessive State control of the means of production. In the absence of other overruling considerations we of course do not wish to encourage this tendency.

Finally, it must be realized that Bolivian domestic private capital would probably flow into privately-controlled enterprises which had the promise of loans from us, whereas there is little possibility of substantial private capital participation in enterprises controlled by Bolivian Government agencies. This is an important consideration because the presently untapped resources of Bolivian private capital are vitally needed in the economic development program. Some foreign private capital might also participate in projects controlled by private enterprise.

For various reasons the foregoing considerations concerning private capital do not apply very strongly in the case of the pending YPFB loan application, but they are particularly pertinent to the problem of the best method of financing food-processing projects like sugar and rice mills.

611.24/6–151

Memorandum by the Secretary of State to the President

SECRET WASHINGTON, May 30, 1951.

Subject: Resumption of Diplomatic Relations with Bolivia

In the Bolivian Presidential election of May 6 the Administration candidate [1] came in second in a field of six, and the largest number of votes (43%) was obtained by an opposite party, the Nationalist Revolutionary Movement (MNR),[2] which had a long record of undemocratic practices and principles and which was supported by Bolivia's

[1] Gabriel Gosálvez.

[2] The MNR's candidate was Victor Paz Estenssoro, who was then in political exile.

small Communist party. The vote for the MNR was not sufficient for outright victory under the Bolivian Constitution, but that party declared its intention to seize power by force if denied it by Constitutional procedures for resolving such electoral deadlocks.[3]

On May 15–16 the Constitutional President of Bolivia [4] voluntarily resigned and turned his power over to the Bolivian Army, which designated a Junta of Army officers [5] to assume the executive functions of the government. The President stated that he had taken this step to preserve democracy in Bolivia from those who would have made a mockery of it (by which he meant the MNR). The Junta announced that it would seek to keep the peace in Bolivia and preserve her democratic institutions, and it promised that its stay in power would be brief.

From appearances to date the Junta has met the criteria which the United States has applied in other recent cases involving the recognition of Latin American governments which have come to power through irregular procedures. It has established its authority over Bolivian territory, with the substantial acquiescence of the people, it has declared its intent to honor Bolivia's international obligations, and its assumption of power has not been due to any external influences. A resumption of US-Bolivian diplomatic relations would therefore be consistent with our policy, and I believe that it is desirable from the viewpoint of our national interests.

It will be important to time our action so that we shall not be among the last Western Hemisphere countries to resume relations. The Junta has already been recognized by Colombia, Peru, the Dominican Republic, Chile, Mexico, and Spain. Brazilian recognition is expected soon. In conformance with recent practice it is planned to give the other American republics and certain European countries advance notice of our intentions, and it is believed that most of those which have not recognized the new Junta by the time we do so will shortly follow our example.

Inasmuch as timing is an important factor, I recommend that you authorize me to announce resumption of relations with Bolivia at such early date as may be appropriate.[6]

DEAN ACHESON

---

[3] Under the Bolivian constitution, in order to become president a candidate had to win a majority of the votes cast in the presidential election. If no candidate received the required majority, the constitution provided for the selection of a president by the Bolivian congress from among those candidates receiving the highest percentages of the vote.

[4] Mamerto Urriolagoitia.

[5] General Hugo Ballivián assumed leadership of the Junta.

[6] Marginal notation on source text: "Approved 6/1/51 Harry S. Truman." As reported in despatch 1010, from La Paz, June 7, the United States officially resumed diplomatic relations with the government of Bolivia on June 7, 1951 (611.24/6–751).

824.2544/6–1551

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Mann)

RESTRICTED [WASHINGTON,] June 15, 1951.

Subject: Problem of Bolivian Tin Prices

Participants: W. Stuart Symington, Chairman, National Security Resources Board [1]
ARA: OSA—Mr. Warren [2]
ARA: OSA—Mr. Atwood
ARA—Mr. Mann

Mr. Mann opened the conversation by stating that he, Ambassador Warren and Mr. Atwood were all from the Bureau of Inter-American Affairs and that their interest in the problem of tin prices was limited to its Bolivian aspects. Mr. Mann said that it appeared to the Bureau of Inter-American Affairs that Mr. Symington had done a very good thing in bringing down tin prices from the abnormally high levels which they had reached; [3] that there was no desire on the part of the Bureau to interfere with Mr. Symington's program but rather to cooperate with it; and that one purpose of the visit was to explain the situation which exists in Bolivia.

Mr. Mann then referred to the fact that Bolivia is a one-economy country with the Government dependent upon the mining industry, and particularly the tin industry, for a very large part of its tax revenues and virtually all of its foreign exchange. He recalled the income of the average Bolivian is about one-fortieth of the income of the average U.S. citizen and there abounds in Bolivia not only economic misery but social strife which makes Bolivia one of the most unstable countries in the hemisphere both politically and economically. Reference was also made to recent political developments, including the role of Paz Estenssoro and the recent elections.

---

[1] Mr. Symington was appointed Administrator of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on May 7, 1951.

[2] Fletcher Warren, Director, Office of South American Affairs.

[3] A sharp increase in the worldwide demand for tin after the outbreak of the Korean conflict in late June 1950, had driven the price of that metal upward until it had reached an all-time high of almost $2.00 per pound in February 1951. The following month, in an effort to reduce the world market price of tin, the United States Government initiated a program which included the temporary suspension of all purchases for the tin stockpile, prohibition of the private importation of tin, and the designation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as the sole importer and seller of tin in the United States. Thereafter, the RFC steadily lowered its selling price, and partly as a result of this policy the world market price of tin declined. Although government restrictions relative to the purchase of tin affected only tin metal, the RFC had to purchase tin concentrates in order to keep the government-owned smelter in Texas operating. Documents pertaining to the international tin question are in several decimal files, principally 398.2544 and 811.2544. For further information on this subject, see U.S. Senate, Preparedness Subcommittee of the Committee on Armed Services, Tin 1951, Sixth Report, 82d Cong., 1st Sess., 1951.

Mr. Mann then said that the sudden decline in the price of tin and the cessation of the U.S. purchasing program threatened to bring about a crisis in Bolivia and that this threat was of concern to the Department for the following reasons:

a) A principal aim of our foreign programs is to build up strength rather than weakness in the free world. In Bolivia we have accordingly helped through loans in the building of the Santa Cruz-Cochabamba highway which will connect the highlands with the potentially productive lowlands. This will make it possible to develop agriculturally the lowlands and to transport food to the centers of population in the highlands. If the mining industry operations should be greatly reduced, this would prejudice the efforts being made to promote stability and create a situation which could be exploited by anti-United States elements.

b) Some of the Bolivian tin mines are marginal and others are not. If the price of tin should drop below a certain point, marginal mines would cease to produce and the total amount of production of tin would thus be decreased. This is related to our procurement of tin as a strategic material since the ores which the U.S. buys for smelting at Texas City are low-grade ores.

c) Nationalization of the mining industry in Bolivia is a continuing possibility and an economic collapse in that country might lead to nationalization or other radical steps which, if they occurred, would set an undesirable precedent in other Latin American countries where we are trying to keep business in private rather than government hands.

d) The Latin Americans have a common bond in their belief that they are exploited as "economic colonies" through procurement by industrial powers of their raw materials at what the Latinos consider to be unfair prices. There is, therefore, a risk that other Latin American countries may side with Bolivia in the event a satisfactory agreement cannot be reached, to the detriment of our ability to procure strategic materials on a fair basis throughout the hemisphere. We would be particularly vulnerable in respect of the price of tin since we do not have a world price established under normal competitive conditions but rather a situation where the U.K. and the U.S. are such large consumers and buyers of tin that they have the power to fix prices by their buying and selling programs.

Mr. Mann then stated that he was not prepared to say what a fair price would be for Bolivian tin and that in as much as there appeared to be no possibility of an early agreement between the Bolivian Government and the RFC on the price question, it might be well to send to Bolivia representatives of both the RFC and the Department to make an on-the-ground assessment of the situation and to obtain data which would enable the RFC and the Department to come to a precise judgment. Such a mission could serve as a means of consulting with the Bolivians in accordance with our commitments and, by indicating an interest on the part of our Government in reaching a solution of the impasse, might serve as a convenient stopgap pending the reaching of a mutually satisfactory agreement. (The Interior Department already has an official in Bolivia who could participate in the study.)

Mr. Symington indicated his agreement with this suggestion [4] and explained that he had already made an offer to the Bolivians—which the Bolivian Ambassador refused to transmit to his Government—of a $1.03 price. He explained that the price of $1.83 was abnormally high and a result of cartel-type practices on the part of the principal producers of Bolivian tin and their counterparts in other tin-producing countries. He explained he considered it his duty to bring the price down to a fair level and, in this connection, that he considered the price of $1.03 to be fair since it represented a 30 percent increase over the price of 75 cents which prevailed shortly before the outbreak of the Korean war. He stated that while he recognized that the cost of producing a portion of the Bolivian tin from the marginal-type mines was higher than it was in other countries, he thought the question of preventing a collapse of the Bolivian economy should be met by grants from Congress if they were needed rather than by subsidizing the economy through artifically high tin prices. In this connection, he explained that in his view the American taxpayer was already very heavily burdened and that neither the taxpayer nor the American Congress could be expected to tolerate waste.

Mr. Mann expressed agreement with these statements in principle and observed that it was, however, not in our overall national interest to permit the price of tin to drop below a certain point. He said that he hoped the data which would be obtained by the survey team would serve to indicate what this point was.

Mr. Mann then inquired whether, as a stopgap measure pending the completion of the survey and a final decision on the price question, it would be feasible from the RFC standpoint to sign an open-end contract with Bolivia for the purchase of tin at the current Singapore price of $1.11. This contract could be subject to termination on short notice by either party. In the alternative, would it be feasible from the RFC point of view to enter into a short-term contract of say two months explaining publicly at the same time that the contract was devised to enable Bolivia to resume sales of tin ores and concentrates to the U.S. pending the report of the survey mission? In both of these cases the price to be paid for Bolivian tin would drop as the Singapore price declined. As another alternative, would it be possible from the RFC standpoint to resume tin purchases at the Singapore price without a contract?

---

[4] A joint mission representing the State Department, Interior Department, and the RFC was formed shortly thereafter. Its members spent the last week of June and the first week of July in Bolivia gathering information about tin production costs and their relationship to the Bolivian economy. Pertinent documents are in decmial files 103–RFC and 824.2544.

Mr. Symington indicated that all of these alternatives would impede the program to drive the price of tin down still farther. He added that if the price should drop below the $1.03 figure offered to the Bolivians, it would be very difficult to repeat the offer.

In the course of the conversation Mr. Symington indicated that he did not believe it would be in our interests to pay a different price for Bolivian tin than is paid for tin from other producing countries and he also indicated that his plan was to make separate contracts with each country which might or might not maintain a uniform price level.

398.00-TA/6-2751

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. William P. Hudson of the Office of South American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] June 27, 1951.

Subject: Departmental Policy on Recommendations of United Nations Technical Mission [1]

Participants: Dr. Hugh Keenleyside, Director General of UN Technical Assistance Administration
Mr. John D. Hickerson, Assistant Secretary for United Nations Affairs
Dr. Henry G. Bennett, Administrator of TCA
Assistant Secretary Miller—ARA
Miss Eleanor Dennison—UNE
Mr. Benjamin Hardy—TCA
Mr. William P. Hudson—OSA

Referring to a letter [2] in which Dr. Keeneyside had asked for a meeting to exchange views about technical assistance to Bolivia, with particular regard to the report of the United Nations technical mission,[3] Mr. Hickerson said that the Department agreed with many of the recommendations of the Keenleyside mission but that, as Dr. Keenleyside had himself realized, the Department could not give any blanket endorsement to them. In fact, while the Department would certainly not oppose Bolivian acceptance of the mission's recommendations, it could not put any pressure on the Bolivians to accept them. The Bureau of Inter-American Affairs, Mr. Hickerson said, felt that the proposal to place UN administrative assistants in Bolivian Government Ministries was particularly significant, and he wondered if Dr. Keenleyside would elaborate on this aspect of the mission's plan.

[1] A position paper on this subject, dated June 25, 1951, drafted by Mr. Hudson in preparation for the meeting which is reported in the instant memorandum, is attached to a memorandum by Mr. Hudson to Mr. Miller, dated June 25, 1951, not printed (365.4/6-2251).

[2] Not printed.

[3] For the mission's report, see United Nations, Report of the Mission of Technical Assistance to Bolivia (New York, 1951).

Dr. Keenleyside said that every effort had been made to work out the administrative assistance aspect of the UN plan in a way which would make it fully acceptable to Bolivia. The plan called for placing one UN technical expert in each Ministry at the Under Secretary (Oficial Mayor) level. This officer would work with the Bolivian Under Secretary of that Ministry and with the Minister himself within a framework of action and policy outlined in advance in the contract between the United Nations and Bolivia. The UN expert would not receive orders from the United Nations or even be in communication with the United Nations under ordinary circumstances except once a year, when an annual report would be made to the UN. However, if the UN expert felt that any case of disagreement between himself and his Bolivian colleagues involved a breach of the original contract, he could refer the case to the chief of the UN party in Bolivia, who would be known as the Coordinator and would be a special assistant to the President. (Although Dr. Keenleyside did not further elaborate on this point, it is understood that such cases, if not settled by the Coordinator and the President, would be referred to the United Nations, which might then terminate the contract with Bolivia if it saw fit.) The salaries of the UN experts would be paid in part by Bolivia and in part indirectly by the United Nations, which would supply the Bolivian Government with foreign currency for this purpose. Asked about the nationalities of the UN experts, Dr. Keenleyside replied that they would be picked from various countries but that the Coordinator would not be American, British, or Canadian, nor could he be a citizen of any country bordering on Bolivia; he would probably be a Scandinavian.

The proposal regarding administrative assistance, Dr. Keenleyside said, was the keystone of the program recommended by the UN technical mission. He felt that this program offered the only possible solution for Bolivia's difficulties, and said that he hoped to receive United States support in his attempts to persuade the Bolivians to accept the program. Mr. Hickerson reiterated that the United States must remain neutral on this issue.

Dr. Keenleyside then asked whether the United States would continue to bail Bolivia out of her recurrent crises by large loans. Mr. Miller replied that the United States had never done this, but that in any event the United States would not apply economic sanctions to make the Bolivians accept the recommendations of the Keenleyside mission.

Dr. Keenleyside then took up the question of technical assistance, stating that he was concerned lest a major expansion in the U.S. Point IV program might not be seized upon by the Bolivians as an excuse for rejecting the less palatable but more fundamental program proposed by the United Nations. Dr. Bennett and others assured him that the United States would continue to try to make its technical assistance program fit so far as possible into the recommendations of the Keenleyside mission.

Mr. Miller made it clear to Dr. Keenleyside that the United States would not use either financial or technical assistance to Bolivia in such a way as to impede Bolivian acceptance of the UN recommendations.

Dr. Keenleyside said that he understood that Ambassador Florman had told the Bolivian Government in effect that Bolivia did not need to worry about the recommendations of the UN mission because the United States would take care of Bolivia. Mr. Miller expressed surprise at this statement, but said that he would write a letter [4] to the Embassy to make it quite clear that Embassy officials should in no way oppose Bolivian acceptance of the UN recommendations.[5]

[Here follow remarks by Dr. Keenleyside concerning the current status of negotiations between the UN and Bolivia.]

---

[4] No copy of Mr. Miller's letter could be found in the Department of State files. However, a letter to Mr. Miller dated July 6, 1951, from the Chargé in Bolivia (Maleady), reads in part as follows:

"You may be assured that, as directed in your letter of June 29th, officers of the Embassy will be instructed to maintain strict neutrality on the question of whether the Bolivian Government should accept the recommendations of the UN Technical Mission." (398.00/7–651)

[5] On October 1, 1951, the Bolivian Government signed an agreement with the United Nations providing for the implementation of the technical assistance recommendations of the so-called "Keenleyside report."

824.2544/7–951

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Acting Director of the Office of International Materials Policy (Brown)

RESTRICTED [WASHINGTON,] July 9, 1951.

Subject: Bolivian Tin Situation

Participants: The Secretary
Mr. Symington, Administrator, Reconstruction Finance Corporation
Mr. McKinnon and Mr. Allen—RFC
ARA—Mr. Miller
OMP—Mr. Brown

Mr. Symington said he wished to discuss the Bolivian tin situation with me, as the mission which had been sent down to Bolivia reported rather explosive conditions there and he wished to cooperate with the Department in every way.

Mr. Symington then reviewed the history of tin prices since Korea and said that the increase in price had been very costly to the American taxpayer. He said he felt the problem of buying tin and the problem of preserving the Bolivian economy ought to be treated separately, although he realized that there was a real political problem and would be prepared to cooperate as much as he could.

Mr. Symington said that if the State Department would tell him what price it thought he ought to pay to Bolivia to get things moving, he would pay it.

Mr. Symington said that the mission's proposal had been suggested by Mr. Atwood, and Mr. Weaver had felt it should be supported.[1] Mr. Symington felt, however, that there was a technical obstacle in that the waiver of smelting charges would result in larger quantities of low-grade ore coming to the smelter, which would mean the smelter would operate at a loss.

I said I agreed that we could not determine tin prices just on political considerations, but we could not ignore political considerations either. My desire was to get something moving. I asked whether some middle ground could not be found between the proposal of the mission and the proposal of $1.03, with retroactive adjustment based on the results of the current cost study, which had been Mr. Symington's offer to the Bolivian Ambassador. Mr. McKinnon said that the mission's proposal would have the effect of a price of about $1.20, that being the average smelting charge on Bolivian ores. Mr. Brown said that mathematically the mid-point between $1.20 and $1.03 would be about $1.12. Mr. Symington said he would buy that price and would make the Bolivian Ambassador an offer based on it right away. He said that the Johnson Committee[2] was of the opinion that $1.10 might be about the right price for Bolivian tin.

Mr. Symington said he was very anxious to get away from the Singapore price, which he believed to be a manipulated price. Mr. Brown stated that the Department also saw merit in making a contract at a definite price rather than a contract tied to a market price.

Mr. Miller said he thought the Bolivian Ambassador might be willing to consider $1.12 and that he had pressed the Ambassador not to adopt an arbitrary and adamant attitude.

Mr. Symington then said he would call the Bolivian Ambassador at once and make him an offer of a contract at $1.12, with the price to be adjusted retroactively based upon the results of the cost study. He asked whether the Department would have any objection if he speci-

---

[1] The joint State Department–Interior Department–RFC mission recommended that the Bolivians be offered an interim contract at the price of $1.03 and that smelting charges be waived, which would have had the effect of raising the net price offered for Bolivian tin concentrates to $1.20 per pound.

[2] Preparedness Subcommittee of the Committee on Armed Services, United States Senate. Lyndon B. Johnson was Chairman of the subcommittee, which was popularly known as the Johnson Committee.

fied that the adjustment should be either up or down. Mr. Miller said he was confident that it would not come out as a downward adjustment, but he saw no reason for not trying that out on the Ambassador.

824.2544/7–1051

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. William P. Hudson of the Office of South American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] July 10, 1951.

Subject: RFC Tin Contract Offer

Participants: Sr. Ricardo Martinez Vargas, Ambassador of Bolivia
OSA—Mr. Warren
OSA—Mr. Krieg [1]
OSA—Mr. Hudson

Ambassador Warren said that the officers of the Department had been glad to hear yesterday the good news that the RFC had made a new tin contract offer to Bolivia. He would like to hear from the Ambassador the full details of this offer.

Mr. Symington had informed him, Ambassador Martinez said, that he realized that a price of $1.03 per pound was too low for the high-cost Bolivian producers. In order to save time while necessary further consideration was being given to the question of a price which would be fair to both parties, Mr. Symington had proposed the immediate signing of a contract on the following terms. Bolivia would receive a price of $1.12 per pound pending further negotiation of the price question on the basis of the study now being made by the RFC. If a different price were later mutually agreed upon it would be applied retroactively to cover all shipments previously made under the contract. The period of the contract would be June 1, 1951 through May 31, 1952. This one-year contract would be extended for an additional year at a price to be determined by further study at the appropriate time. Ambassador Martinez had inquired whether the price would be related to the export prices of United States goods. Mr. Symington had replied that this was too complicated a question to be discussed at present. Mr. Symington had told him that he was aware of Bolivia's need for assistance but that such assistance did not fall within his jurisdiction.

[Here follows an exchange concerning the possibility of an increase in the production of Bolivian tungsten.]

Mr. Warren said that the Department of State would of course continue to think hard and sympathetically about Bolivian problems. However, the United States also had an obligation to try to relate its evaluation of Bolivian problems to United States aims throughout the world. At this moment the United States was thinking in the broadest terms of its history. It was under attack throughout the world in defense of ideals common to the western hemisphere. Recognizing the special difficulties in Bolivia, the highest officers of the American Government had studied the Bolivian tin problem and had formulated the RFC offer in the light of world-wide U.S. obligations. The Department realized that the Bolivians did not find the offer completely satisfactory, but the Department considered it generous under all the circumstances, especially as it evidenced willingness on the part of the United States to continue studying the problem. Mr. Warren hoped that Ambassador Martinez would point out to his Government that the contract offered by RFC represented a beginning and would recommend that his Government make the best of the present difficult situation by accepting the offer.

[1] William L. Krieg, Officer in Charge, North and West Coast Affairs, Office of South American Affairs.

Ambassador Martinez said that he had already pointed out to his Government that the offer was of a provisional nature and designed to serve as a stopgap in the present emergency. In his cable transmitting the offer, he had reported that Assistant Secretary Miller had told him that he thought it was worthy of very serious consideration. He was afraid, however, that the Government and the Bolivian producers might not feel that the offer was sufficient even as a stopgap measure, since the $1.12 price would not cover the costs of many Bolivian producers.

Mr. Warren inquired what measures the Bolivian Government might take to make the $1.12 tin price economically feasible to the high-cost producers. The RFC offer at that price had been made, he said, after the very highest officials of the United States Government had given considerable time and thought to determining the maximum degree of assistance which the United States could give to Bolivia under the present circumstances. The price arrived at was about halfway between what the RFC wanted and what conservative tin interests in Bolivia considered an acceptable minimum. The offer made by the RFC afforded the possibility of a later price readjustment on the basis of further sympathetic consideration. While he realized that the $1.12 price was not fully satisfactory to the Bolivians, he wondered whether the Bolivian Government might not take steps to make this price practicable in the interim until full consideration could be given to the possibility of a readjustment. [Ambassador Martinez made a special note of this idea.] [2]

Ambassador Martinez estimated that the United States must require 100,000 tons of tin a year, including its stockpile acquisitions. Since Bolivia provides only 18,000 to 20,000 tons of this total, a price increase would not amount to much if applied to Bolivian tin alone, but would be costly if it had to be applied to all United States imports of tin. He thus felt that, in view of Bolivia's position as the only western hemisphere producer, Bolivia should receive preferential price treatment.

[2] Brackets in the source text.

Ambassador Martinez was not sure what his Government might be able to do for the high-cost producers, although he supposed it might give them relief through differential exchange rates. He wondered if the Departmental officials had any suggestions.

Mr. Warren replied that he had nothing specific in mind; he was convinced, however, that the Bolivian Government must do something because the offer made by RFC represented the farthest point to which the United States could go at this time.

824.2544/11-251

Position Paper Prepared by the Acting Deputy Director of the Office of International Materials Policy (Evans)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] November 2, 1951.

DEPARTMENT POSITION ON BOLIVIAN TIN NEGOTIATIONS

PROBLEM

Mr. Symington has asked Mr. Webb [1] whether the Department believes the United States should subsidize the Bolivian economy through the price of tin. Mr. Webb, of course, replied that the answer to the question in that form is "no", but that the question as asked did not bring out the complicated nature of the problem.[2] The Department, therefore, should formulate any views on the subject of these negotiations for Mr. Webb to give to Mr. Symington.

RECOMMENDATION

That Mr. Webb make the following points:

1. The United States Government should not subsidize the Bolivian economy through the price of tin. If a commercial price for tin should not be sufficient to maintain Bolivia's economy, and aid from the United States should be desirable, such aid should be labeled as such and should not be based on funds provided by Congress for a different purpose.

2. By a commercial price we mean a price at which the Bolivians can be induced to sell and we are willing to buy because of our own

[1] James E. Webb, Under Secretary of State.

[2] Mr. Symington had raised this question in a conversation with Mr. Webb at the Department on October 25, 1951. The exchange between them was recorded in a memorandum of that date, by Mr. Winthrop G. Brown (824.2544/10-2551).

needs. The United States needs Bolivia's tin ore and Bolivia needs our dollars. Under these circumstances, it should be possible for the two parties to reach agreement with no thought of subsidy.

On the other hand, we must consider the fact that Bolivia is almost entirely dependent upon the sale of tin. Our relations with Bolivia and the other countries of the hemisphere would be seriously damaged if through arbitrary action on the part of the United States Government we were to deprive Bolivia of a market for their exports. So long as the United States Government is prohibiting the private importation of tin and thereby affecting an important section of the total world demand there is a danger that this might happen. Therefore, if agreement cannot be reached with Bolivia on a reasonable basis by US Government negotiators it may be necessary to consider some other way of permitting US civilian demand to become effective.

3. The price the United States should pay should take into consideration not only our current needs but the price which will maintain a level of production in Bolivia corresponding to our future requirements. The cost study is helpful here. It cannot, however, be the sole determinant of a price acceptable to both sides and should be considered in the light of normal commercial practice.

We understand that the RFC in its negotiations with the Bolivians has argued that the price should be based on the average cost of production in Bolivia. In order to keep the mines operating on this basis it would be necessary for the Bolivian Government to control all tin revenues and to distribute them to individual producers so that the cost of each would be met. This is a very dangerous proposal to make to a foreign government. The United States is engaged in trying to protect the interests of American investors in underdeveloped countries against the strong desire of those countries to expropriate and nationalize. If other countries were to learn that the United States Government were proposing such action in the case of Bolivia it would be very difficult for us to protect the American owners of low cost mining properties in other countries. It would be an open invitation to the Chilean Government, for example, to redistribute to locally owned copper mines the profits of Anaconda and Kennecott.

If the RFC cost study shows that the production of some Bolivian mines would have to cease at the price the RFC is willing to pay it of course has the right to reduce the quantity it is prepared to buy, but it should not suggest to the Bolivian Government the confiscation and redistribution by it of the earnings of the lower cost mines.

4. The State Department does not know whether the increase in Bolivian taxes is justified or whether that increase has been greater than the increase in taxes in the United States. We should recognize however that the fact that the Bolivian Government can alter costs through tax action reduces the value of cost as a basis for determining the price we are prepared to pay. We should make this clear to the Bolivians.

5. In commenting on the suggestion that we should draw on the stockpile, we should make it clear that we are assuming the maintenance of the present stockpile objective. Any decision to reduce the amount of tin in the stockpile should be based on a change in the objective which in turn should be based on a study of the security implications. We should firmly oppose any other withdrawal from the stockpile on the following grounds:

(a) To do so would be a perversion of the purpose of the stockpile. It is designed to protect our security. It is not designed as a price manipulating instrument.

(b) Even if we should so use it, we should not start drawing from the stockpile unless we are prepared to continue doing so for some time. Otherwise, it would be too easy to call our bluff.

(c) The political situation in the Far East is so serious that we cannot rely on continued supplies and should not materially reduce our stockpile, which is only two thirds full. On the contrary, we should be building it up.

(d) Such action would slow down our whole stockpile program by making producers less willing to produce extra amounts for it, since their fears that we will use the stockpile as a commercial weapon against them will be confirmed.

DISCUSSION

The following additional comments relate to the specific recommendations given above.

Recommendation 2. Some amplification of the statement that the United States would have some responsibility if Bolivia should not sell her ore may be needed. It is true that the government monopoly of tin purchases does not directly affect Bolivia's ability to sell ore to other than the Texas City smelter, as American private buyers do not purchase ore. However by keeping American private buyers out of the market for tin metal we have reduced the effective world demand for tin. This in turn reduces Bolivia's chance of selling ore to European smelters.

Mr. Symington has suggested that he may obtain the ore he needs from Indonesia and thus be independent of Bolivian ores for the smelter. We do not believe he is likely to succeed. He now obtains approximately half the Indonesian production for the smelter. To replace the Bolivian ores for the smelter he would need to purchase virtually the entire Indonesian production. If he were to try to do this he would probably find himself competing at a high price level with the Dutch smelters that are dependent on Indonesian ore. However if this estimate should be wrong and Mr. Symington should contract for Indonesian ores and then refuse to purchase from Bolivia on the ground that his requirements were met, the position suggested above would permit the Department to insist that the United States civilian demand for tin be filled, possibly by a resumption of commercial imports. This would increase Bolivia's opportunity to sell her ore somewhere.

Recommendation 3. The RFC proposal to average costs does not, of course, accord with the normal method of determining price in a capitalist economy. Our objection to this proposal, even under conditions of emergency controls, is not inconsistent with our suggestion that premium prices might be paid for the production of individual mines, as was done during World War II. Under our domestic premium price plan there was no averaging of all costs. A basic price was established and a premium price paid only to those high cost producers whom the United States Government decided should be subsidized. A similar system was used by us abroad, and premium prices were paid to certain higher cost producers in order to obtain the additional production. These determinations, however, were made by the United States Government.

Recommendation 5. We understand from the Munitions Board that they are opposed either to withdrawal of tin from the stockpile or a lowering of the stockpile objective. The arguments in this recommendation, of course, stand on their own feet even if the stockpile objective should be lowered, but our present appraisal is that such a reduction is unlikely.

824.2544/11–951

The Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Chargé in Bolivia (Maleady)

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, November 9, 1951.

OFFICIAL—INFORMAL

DEAR TOM: I have read with interest your letter to Bill Hudson of October 29, 1951 regarding Bolivia's reaction on the tin contract.[1] I sympathize fully with your position on this matter and feel that I owe you some personal explanation of our role (or lack thereof) in these negotiations.

After the installation of the Military Junta last August, the Department was so concerned over the situation in Bolivia that at the risk of incurring severe congressional criticism, we intervened with the RFC and Secretary Acheson himself personally pulled out of the air the figure of $1.12 for an interim contract. The reason for doing this was that we wanted to find some temporary break in the impasse with which we were then faced and we were motivated by the apprehensions which had been expressed by various Bolivians that their economy was on the verge of collapse. We were somewhat surprised thereafter when the Bolivians dragged their heels on accepting the offer even on an interim basis [2] and especially when Ormachea [3] told me in October that they had accepted the offer as a favor to the United States.

[1] In his letter, Mr. Maleady had assessed the degree of Bolivian resentment over the impasse in the negotiations for a long-term tin contract. He had stated that he could not "stress too greatly how badly people feel here," and he had noted his concern that the situation might generate undesirable political repercussions (824.2544/10–2951).

The discussions between the Bolivians and the RFC were resumed in December [4] during the pendency of the interim contract and the Department felt that it should not get in between the Bolivian negotiators (who, after all, have been representatives of private producing interests) and the RFC. At least we felt that a bona fide effort should be made on both sides to reach an agreement on economic grounds without injecting political considerations into the discussions. I felt it important that we be scrupulous about this, not only because of the tendency of the RFC to engage in demagogic maneuvers against us with Senator Johnson,[5] but because I was seriously alarmed when both Guachalla [6] and Ormachea called on me after their arrival here and asked me virtually the same question, namely, what would the State Department do for Bolivia if the RFC did not treat them justly. I felt it important from the outset to make it clear that the Department was not going to act as advocate for Bolivia and I hoped by making our position clear at the outset to make the Bolivians negotiate in good faith. I also felt it important that we discourage any idea on the part of the Bolivians that they could play us off against the RFC regardless of what action we might take vis-à-vis the RFC, if and when the time would come for us to take a position.

Two months have passed and there is no progress to date. I agree with you that the RFC has acted as if there were only commercial considerations involved and with little, if any, regard for the sensibilities of the Bolivians or for the strategic considerations involved. On the other hand, the Bolivian producers have not been helpful either in sticking to the impossible figure of $1.50 or intending to fight Symington through the press.[7]

Nevertheless, I have now reached the conclusion that it would be best for the Department to try to cut through this new impasse.[8] Yes-

---

[2] On September 5, 1951, a 30-day interim contract between Bolivian tin producers and the RFC was signed, providing for the payment of $1.12 per pound for tin concentrates, with smelter charges as specified in the 1950 contract.

[3] Hector Ormachea Zalles, Bolivian Special Ambassador to the United States.

[4] These discussions had been resumed on September 24, and suspended on October 25, 1951 (824.2544/10–2951).

[5] Lyndon B. Johnson, Chairman of the Johnson Committee.

[6] Luis Fernando Guachalla, Bolivian Permanent Representative to the Organization of American States.

[7] In a memorandum dated October 23, 1951, Mr. Brown stated, in part, that the Bolivians "are in no hurry [to sign a tin contract] since they are shipping their tin to [other] ports and getting substantial loans on it." (824.2544/10–2351)

[8] In a memorandum dated November 2, 1951, Mr. Hudson stated, in part: "We have been assuming in ARA that the deadlock in the Bolivian tin negotiations would be broken soon by the approaching exhaustion of our supplies of tin for commercial consumption, which will occur within two or three months. However, E is now certain that the RFC is counting on being able to go into the tin stockpile to take care of commercial requirements." (711.6/11–251)

terday at the Under Secretary's meeting[9] I raised with Webb and Thorp[10] the desirability of our making a move, and we all agreed that it would be bad if we should do it as the State Department alone in view of our greater vulnerability. Mr. Webb and Thorp thought the time had come for us to take some action and Mr. Thorp was requested to approach Defense and Agriculture as well as Interior for the purpose of trying to come to a governmental position on what would be a fair solution to the present tin dilemma. It is not an easy case at all and Mr. Symington is perfectly right in his contention that we simply cannot accept the right of Bolivia to impose a constant series of new taxes on the tin industry and to require us to treat those taxes as legitimate cost items. This is the point on which the Bolivians have been least successful in their discussions.

I do not know where we will end up on this or what the time element may be. One ray of hope is that in a telephone conversation Monday Mr. Symington volunteered that he would be willing to "shade the price" of $1.12 with the possibility of some escalator feature, provided, however, that we give him a directive. Now perhaps some such idea may form the basis for the discussions which Mr. Thorp is to have.

In any case we will keep you informed of developments and keep up the great work you have been doing in a tough situation. We all have you in mind constantly and you have our complete confidence.[11]

With kindest regards,

Sincerely yours, EDWARD G. MILLER, JR.

---

[9] The Under Secretary's meeting met weekly; it was customarily attended by the Deputy Under Secretaries of State, Assistant Secretaries of State, and office directors. The meetings were held at the Department of State, and Under Secretary of State Webb presided. A copy of the minutes of the meeting referred to by Mr. Miller, held November 7, 1951, is in Under Secretary's Meetings, Lot 53 D 250.

[10] Willard L. Thorp, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs.

[11] Despite the efforts of the Department, which included bringing the Bolivian tin situation to the attention of President Truman and opposing any use of the tin stockpile as an economic weapon in tin negotiations, no agreement on a long-term tin contract between the Bolivians and the RFC proved possible during 1951 or 1952. Pertinent documents are in decimal files 398.2544, 711.63, and 824.2544.

611.24/12–1951

Policy Statement Prepared in the Department of State

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] December 19, 1951.

BOLIVIA

A. OBJECTIVES

The basic immediate objectives of the United States in Bolivia are: (1) to promote sufficient economic and political stability to prevent that country from becoming the subject of penetration by its neighbors, a focal point of international rivalry, or the victim of communist inroads which would constitute threats to Bolivian sovereignty and the peace and security of the hemisphere, and (2) to insure in time of international emergency maximum Bolivian production of strategic materials, especially tin, tungsten and antimony and continued access to these materials. In so doing, the US wishes to promote conditions in Bolivia favorable to US private capital, the maintenance of law and order, and fair and equitable treatment for foreigners. A secondary US objective is to retain the cooperation of Bolivia in support of our hemispheric and world policies.

We hope that, in the long run, the attainment of our basic immediate objectives will raise the standard of living of the Bolivian populace and pave the way towards the establishment of a stable and effective democracy in that country.

B. POLICIES

General Background. Bolivia, a country of 420,000 square miles with a population of only 3,019,000, some 80% of whom are illiterate, is a remote, land-locked country of great contrasts. There are vast areas of great potential which are underpopulated and undeveloped, while the majority of the population and the nation's economic life are concentrated on the harsh and barren altiplano, some 13,000 feet above the sea. There the Indian, apathetic to the point of numbness, lives much as did his ancestors, scraping a subsistence from exhausted fields by primitive methods and contributing little to internal trade. The 30 percent of mixed blood and the less than 15 percent who are white live for the most part in the principal cities, controlling the political and economic life of the country.

Traditionally Bolivia has been a mining country, dependent upon its export of minerals, especially tin, for its receipts of foreign exchange and government revenue and using large proportions of its foreign exchange receipts for the import of foodstuffs and other materials which could be produced domestically. Between 1940 and 1948, over 94 percent of all exports by value were minerals, with tin alone representing about 70 percent of the total. Although the industry indirectly employs only a small part of the population, a large part of the country's economic activity can be traced directly or indirectly to mining.

Obviously, changes in world conditions have a tremendous impact on such an unbalanced economy. Bolivian producers of tin cannot, on the whole, compete with Far Eastern producers because of their higher costs, remote locations, and poorer deposits. So long as world tensions continue and US consumption and stockpiling of tin help keep demand in line with supply, Bolivia is relatively prosperous. However, since the Bolivian mines are generally marginal high-cost producers, they must curtail their production when the price of tin falls, as it did in late 1949 and early 1950, while Far Eastern producers can still operate at a profit. When the tin price is depressed, the country as a whole suffers severe economic hardship—reduced foreign exchange receipts, lower government revenues, decreased employment and national income, and general economic stagnation.

547-842—79——75

Equally ominous is the fact that known Bolivian reserves of tin ores which can be worked economically by present methods and within the price ranges of recent years are nearing exhaustion.

The development of other resources to complement and perhaps eventually replace mining as the basis of the national economy has been severely hampered by many factors and is proceeding too slowly. The rich agricultural lands and forests of Bolivia's eastern tropical regions cannot be exploited adequately until economical transport facilities are available, substantial migration or immigration has taken place, and problems of health, agricultural techniques, land tenure patterns, etc., have been solved. Prior to recent Bolivian legislation and Government announcements which opened certain areas to oil development by private enterprise, development of petroleum resources for export purposes had been blocked by a nationalistic policy which since 1936 had kept foreign oil capital out of Bolivia, and in the brief interval since the recent change in petroleum policy foreign capital has shown almost no interest in Bolivian investments.

Bolivia's history has been one of cruel tyrannies, bloody revolutions, and violent upheavals, often put down with unspeakable brutality, with only brief periods of relative tranquility and constitutional administration. Governments generally have been composed of venal and selfish administrators, lacking the education, experience, and background of responsibility needed for efficient administration.

Between 1936 and 1946, Bolivia was ruled by a succession of Army officers who, with one exception, took office as a result of coups d'état. In December 1943, following a coup engineered by a minority group of young army officers and the Movimiento Nacionalista Revolucionario (MNR), a national socialist party closely allied with Nazism and the "Colonels' Clique" in Argentina, Major Gualberto Villarroel was installed as President. This administration was nationalistic, authoritarian, and antagonistic to vested interests, and it used labor, especially mine labor, as a political tool and weapon. It maintained itself in power by exercising a virtual reign of terror in which its opponents were kidnapped, imprisoned, assaulted, and assassinated without any pretense of legal proceedings. Freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and other civil liberties were seldom known. Although many members of this administration were definitely anti-US in sympathy, they realized that Bolivia had no other recourse but to take its place on the side of the democratic nations. Consequently, strategic materials such as rubber, quinine, tin, and tungsten were provided for the allied war effort and periodic lip service was paid to democratic principles. Tired of the excesses of this regime, the Bolivian populace revolted in July 1946 and, in a bloody and vengeful uprising, ejected Villarroel and his followers, substituting for them a temporary junta of outstanding citizens which organized free elections. President Enrique Hertzog was inaugurated in March 1947 as the first nonmilitary chief of state since 1936.

The Junta and Hertzog administrations restored civil liberties, maintained the social gains of the people, reorganized the army to take it out of politics, held honest and free elections, and attempted to rule according to constitutional and democratic principles and socialist philosophies. Hertzog, however, was soon under attack from both the right and the left and beset by labor difficulties, and he was forced to devote his energies to staying in office. On the one hand, the government faced the remnants of the MNR, aided by exiles residing in neighboring countries. On the other hand, it found itself under increasing pressure from the left as represented by the Partido de la Izquierda Revolucionaria (PIR), a leftist radical political party which in January 1951 came out wholly for the communist line. Hertzog turned to the US for support and assistance. The US responded by giving its sympathetic attention to Bolivian problems, extending economic assistance, offering appropriate counsel, and facilitating where possible the acquisition of arms and equipment needed to maintain internal order. However, Hertzog, tired, sick, disillusioned by the failure of his administration, faced with the necessity of adopting non-democratic methods to control the subversive opposition, and unable to cope with political pressures which blocked effective economic measures, resigned and was replaced constitutionally in October 1949 by the elected Vice President, Mamerto Urriolagoitia.

The new president attempted to follow the policies of Hertzog but, plagued by economic deterioration for which both administrations were largely responsible, had even less success in bringing stability to the country. His administration worried less about deviations from constitutional principles in its efforts to put down revolts and uprisings, being more prepared to meet force with force. Several bloody clashes between the armed forces and rebellious groups occurred during his tenure. The army regained much of its prestige and political power. Inflation, shortages of commodities, cutbacks in productive enterprises, the basic economic ills of the country, and the normal unhappy lot of the Bolivian masses resulted in growing social unrest which demagogues, agitators, and revolutionaries were quick to exploit. The Bolivian masses, largely unaware of the implications, again opposed the army and the government. Under these conditions the presidential election of May 6, 1951 (in which the polling was on the whole honestly supervised) resulted in a stunning defeat for Urriolagoitia's party. Faced by five opposition candidates, the administration's nominee obtained only about 32% of the total vote; and his chief opponent, MNR leader Paz Estenssoro, even though still in exile, obtained about 43%. Since no candidate received an absolute majority, the election should then constitutionally have been referred to the new Congress, scheduled to convene August 6. However, on May 16, President Urriolagoitia resigned and handed the government over to a junta of anti-MNR army officers headed by General Hugo Ballivian; and the junta later decreed the annulment of the May 6 election and the cancellation of the mandates of all members of Congress. Thus Bolivia's latest experiment with representative government appears to have failed and come full cycle back to military dictatorship. Further, the prospects of stability even under military rule are poor.

Economic Policy. Because of the complete dependence of Bolivia's economy on mineral exports, and US interest in maximum production of and secure access to Bolivian strategic minerals, the principal immediate economic problems between the two countries concern minerals, especially tin.

During and after World War II, Bolivia failed to take advantage of the relatively high prices of tin and other metals to stabilize its economy on a sound basis. When the inevitable post-war slump in mineral prices came at the end of 1949 and lasted until the unexpected outbreak of the Korean war, Bolivia had failed to prepare itself and expected the US to come to its assistance, professing that because of its contributions during World War II, its recent efforts to have a democratic administration, the importance to US security of its tin, and the aid given in the post-war period by the US to other competing countries, the US was obligated to render some form of special assistance to its tin industry, not so much to help the producers as to support the basic economy of Bolivia and in so doing to strengthen the political position of the administration. The US has continued in the post-war period to purchase tin concentrates from Bolivia for processing at the Texas City smelter, which was built during the war to process Bolivian and other foreign concentrates and which is operated by the RFC, but no special assistance to the Bolivian tin industry has been extended. Although during the recent war we relied heavily on imports of tin concentrates from Bolivia, the only source of this strategic material in commercial quantities in the hemisphere, US authorities charged with the responsibility of protecting US interests in strategic commodities have indicated an unwillingness to give any special consideration to Bolivia, feeling that the stockpile would provide ample protection in the event of emergency and would allow time for reopening of Bolivian mines were they forced to close prior to an emergency for economic reasons. In times of world crisis, of course, when the tin price tends to be very high, the question is not whether we will give special assistance to prevent Bolivian mines from closing but whether we are willing to pay the high free-market price which Bolivia demands as one condition of contracts with our purchasing agencies. From the viewpoint of US-Bolivian relations alone, it would obviously be desirable to meet the free-market price and thus negate the Bolivian charge that we take full advantage of free-market conditions in times of depression but unjustly and inconsistently seek to impose controls on the tin price in boom times. However, our price policy toward Bolivia is only one aspect of our world tin price policy, which in turn in times of emergency like the present becomes part of an elaborate anti-inflationary mechanism. Recent experience has shown that conditions of world political emergency are likely to produce a conflict between the desirability of treating Bolivia generously and stimulating maximum Bolivian tin production, on the one hand, and the objective of driving the inflated world tin price down, on the other. The situation as of this writing is illustrative: price disagreement has prevented the signature of a long-term contract for sale of Bolivian concentrates to the RFC.

Under the Point IV program the Bureau of Mines is attempting to aid Bolivia through the development of processes to reduce the cost of recovery of tin and improve the characteristics of Bolivian exports of tin concentrates. In the latter connection, the Department's policy is to support a plan to erect a tin ore benefication plant in Bolivia, provided a workable and technically sound project can be developed.

For years the Bolivian Government and the larger mining companies have been in conflict over the amount of foreign exchange earnings which the latter should be required to sell to the Government. The issue is of basic economic importance, and it creates high political passions. One party or the other, but usually the industry, attempts periodically to drag the US into the controversy. However, experience has shown that our intervention, no matter how well motivated, is too dangerous to be worth while, and present US policy is to stay clear of all negotiations on the subject. This position is particularly correct in view of the fact that none of the tin-producing enterprises, and only two of the other mining companies, are controlled by American capital.

The basic outline of US economic policy with respect to Bolivia was established by the US Economic Mission to Bolivia which surveyed that country's economy and potentialities in 1941–42 and through an exchange of notes with Bolivia at the Rio de Janeiro Conference of Foreign Ministers in January 1942. The report of the mission, known as the Bohan Report, was adopted by the two governments as the basis for US economic assistance and mutual collaboration. The pattern of this plan, which is still valid today, provided for the development of internal communications in Bolivia and the diversification of that country's economy through development of the agricultural and petroleum potentialities of the eastern lowlands to produce supplies for domestic consumption and export. Such development would tend to raise living standards and correct the unfavorable balance of payments position of the country, lessening its dependence on tin exports. In this program, priority was given to construction of a highway connecting Cochabamba with Santa Cruz at the foot of the Andes, which is the gateway to the region selected for agricultural development. The US committed itself to considerable financial assistance to Bolivia during the period of development.

The history of the highway project, on which active construction was begun in 1945, was marked on both sides by errors, inefficiency, misunderstandings, and delays, all to the detriment of the Bolivian economy and US prestige. At times, these difficulties created serious political problems. These were resolved recently, however, through the extension of an additional Export-Import Bank credit to assist in completion of the road. American construction, engineering, and auditing firms have been engaged by the Bolivian Government, and it is hoped that the project can be brought to successful completion some time in 1954. US policy is to continue rendering such assistance as is appropriate to insure that the highway is completed.

The agricultural phase of the Bohan Plan has not been initiated except on a very small scale because of the long delay in completing the highway and Bolivian refusal to concentrate available resources on the development program. With the completion of the highway itself now apparently assured, the major problem in implementing the Bohan Report has become the necessity for rapid progress in preparations for exploitation of the Santa Cruz area. Bolivia has already indicated its desire to obtain loans from the Export-Import Bank for agricultural development as provided for in the Bohan Plan. Requests for financial assistance will be considered by US agencies on the criteria of economic justification and the availability of private capital. It is US policy to encourage the use of private capital for this and other development programs in Bolivia. Already some private capital, mostly domestic, has been invested in the Santa Cruz area. The US emphasizes the need for Bolivian assurances of just and nondiscriminatory treatment and the creation of conditions conducive to the investment of foreign private capital in the country. On the technical side a vigorous US contribution to the agricultural development of Bolivia is being made under the Point IV program through an agricultural mission operated in that country by the Department of Agriculture to develop suitable crops and methods for extensive production once the transportation problem is solved.

Another phase of the Bohan Plan contemplated the development of Bolivian petroleum reserves to offset in part diminishing returns from the tin industry and to lessen the pressure on the nation's foreign exchange availabilities for the importation of petroleum products. As an exception to general petroleum loan policy, the US Government in 1945 permitted the use of Export-Import Bank funds, authorized in March 1942 for the economic development of Bolivia, to assist in financing further development of the petroleum industry by YPFB, a government monopoly which has controlled the Bolivian petroleum industry since expropriation of the Standard Oil Company holdings in 1937. An increase in the original allocation was authorized in 1947. Bolivia has carried out an overly-ambitious development program costing about $22,000,000 on a basis which has differed in important respects from the recommendations of the Bohan Mission. A pipe line from the Camiri field to Cochabamba with a spur line running to Sucre has been completed. A 5,000 B/D refinery has been erected at Cochabamba, and units of 1,000 B/D and 3,000 B/D at Sucre. Unfortunately, development of crude production in the Camiri field has not been carried out efficiently or as rapidly as required by the over-built refinery program, and an application has been made for additional Export-Import Bank funds for use in development drilling in the Camiri field.

The Department does not consider that there are any policy objections to consideration by the Export-Import Bank of a further small loan for petroleum development in the Camiri field, provided it can be determined that such a loan would be technically sound from an oil standpoint, and that the development would be managed efficiently, although it would be preferable for such development to be carried out either directly by private capital or by a satisfactory contractual arrangement between YPFB and private capital.

Bolivian petroleum legislation has recently been passed opening certain areas of the country to oil development by private enterprise or to joint operations with YPFB, and the Bolivian Government has announced that it is willing to enter into lease contracts for the exploitation of other areas where oil prospects are better. However, estimates of Bolivia's oil resources and the political atmosphere within the country have not to date seemed sufficiently attractive to foreign oil companies to interest them in sizeable investment for Bolivian petroleum exploration and development.

One of the basic handicaps of the Bolivian economy is the deficiency of the Government's health and education programs. For a number of years the Institute of Inter-American affairs has maintained missions in Bolivia which have made progress toward remedying this deficiency. It is US policy to continue this assistance under the Point IV program, expanding it in accordance with Bolivian ability and willingness to make matching financial contributions.

It is expected that, in the long run, the economic development of Bolivia under the diversification program will assist the country to overcome its balance of payments difficulties, allowing it to relax its restrictive import controls, put a stop to its practice of resorting to barter agreements, and abolish its complex multiple exchange rate structure. The US seeks the eventual establishment of a single exchange rate in conformity with International Monetary Fund policies and, through its representation in the latter, has encouraged Bolivia to take the necessary measures to this end. While opposed on principle to Bolivian exchange and import controls, the US recognizes, however, that many of them cannot be eliminated without general economic improvement.

The US hopes that Bolivia will remedy its unsatisfactory economic and fiscal practices. In view of our obligation to refrain from intervening in the internal affairs of other countries, however, we hesitate to make direct efforts to rectify such internal conditions, although we do, through our representation in the UN, the IMF, and the IBRD, work toward this end. A UN economic mission which surveyed the Bolivian economy in 1950 recommended to the Bolivian Government at the end of that year a novel but fundamental program of administrative and fiscal reform. The mission's report has been accepted in principle, and technical assistance agreements to implement most of its recommendations were signed October 1, 1951. While recognizing that ideally the UN's recommendations might offer a solution to Bolivia's basic governmental ills, which are also perhaps its most important economic and political ills, the US remains doubtful about the long-run acceptability of the UN proposals to the Bolivian people; and US policy has been neither to oppose Bolivian acceptance of the report nor to attempt to influence the Bolivians to adopt its recommendations.

The climate in Bolivia today is definitely not conducive to the investment of foreign private capital. Political instability and economic deterioration are two factors which make the country unattractive for investment. We hope that the success of our efforts to further political stability and economic diversification will help create conditions conducive to the investment of US private capital in Bolivia. Another deterrent is a traditional nationalism which causes foreign investment to be suspected of imperialistic motives. The US attempts to counter this sentiment whenever possible through the rendering of appropriate counsel, the demonstration of its good faith by its acts, and the educational publicity campaign of the USIE program in that country. Potential investors, however, are aware of the history of the Bolivian Government dealing with foreign private capital and are not convinced that there has been any real change in the attitude of Bolivian officials.

A problem in this connection, which affects any development program or investments requiring the residence of US citizens in Bolivia, arises from Bolivia's failure on numerous occasions to accord effective protection to foreigners, especially those residing in the isolated mining districts. The US has made repeated representations in this connection and, although privately recognizing the practical difficulties faced by the Bolivian Government in exercising its authority in remote regions, has insisted on recognition of the obligation of that Government to take the necessary measures to provide effective protection. Since the brutal slaying of two Americans in a mining camp during a labor disturbance in 1949,[1] the US has followed closely the process of apprehension and trial of the perpetrators of the crimes, frequently reminding the Bolivian Government that we expect that justice will be done. US policy is to press this matter appropriately.

A bilateral air transport agreement of the Bermuda type was signed with Bolivia in 1948, but it has not yet been considered by the Bolivian Congress. It is US policy to press for ratification of this agreement as soon as possible. Meanwhile, two American carriers continue serving Bolivia, touching at La Paz, which is an intermediate point under the route pattern established for Latin America by the Civil Aeronautics Board. It is US policy to insure that American carriers continue adequate service to Bolivia. A CAA technical mission is rendering assistance to Bolivia to improve domestic and international aviation services and facilities. A US Air Force mission assists the Bolivian Air Force in its training, operating, and organizational programs.

Since 1931 Bolivia has been in default on its external debt of some $60 million in principal plus accrued interest. An agreement providing for resumption of service on this obligation was signed on the initiative of the Government of Bolivia with the Foreign Bondholders Protective Council in 1948, and was ratified by the Bolivian Congress in 1950. The US has consistently kept the Bolivian Government aware of its interest in this agreement, and it is the hope that Bolivian compliance with it will be satisfactory. Initial payments under the agreement were due in 1951, but the tin contract crisis caused the Bolivian Government to suspend plans for its implementation.[2]

An item of Bolivian debt owed directly to the United States Government is a World War II lend-lease account now amounting to about [1] Reference is to the so-called "Catavi massacre", which had taken place in late May 1949. For further information on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. II, p. 525; ibid., 1950, vol. II, p. 746.

---

[2] In despatch 28, from La Paz, July 18, 1951, the Commercial Attaché (de Lima) had written in part the following: "Unless a long term RFC tin sales contract to Bolivia's liking is entered into, it appears problematical that any future action will be taken with regard to the implementation of this agreement. Since Bolivia does not enjoy a commercial credit standing that could be jeopardized, it would otherwise appear that a determination as to what further action is to be taken with regard to the 1948 agreement . . . will be made in the light of the degree of likelihood that Bolivia estimates she has of obtaining a sizeable World Bank loan as a direct consequence of honoring this obligation". (824.10/7–1851)

US$494,000. It is US policy to press for early settlement of this obligation.[3]

Political Policy. During World War II, Bolivia turned from its traditional orientation towards Europe to the US. Although the US and Bolivia were not on the best of terms during the Villarroel administration, relations between the two countries have been generally good, especially since the fall of the Villarroel regime in mid-1946. The US has attempted to cooperate with and aid Bolivia to the maximum appropriate extent. This policy has been implemented largely through economic and financial assistance, technical aid, grants to enable Bolivian educators, students, and professional men to visit this country, military ground and air missions maintained by the Department of National Defense, and cooperation in the United Nations and the Organization of American States and their respective organs and specialized agencies. A regular cultural and information section operates in the US Embassy at La Paz to publicize the US and to expose communism for what it is.

This policy has resulted in general Bolivian support for US objectives in the OAS and the UN.

Among political problems between the US and Bolivia, one arises from Bolivia's insistence that international communism is operating with special intensity in that country, causing strife and chaos in order eventually to obtain in Bolivia a pro-communist base of operations against the southern part of the continent, and even entering into pacts with the MNR for political domination of the country. The Bolivians have used their claim that they are a special object of Moscow's attentions for every purpose from requests for financial assistance to attempts to entangle us in their domestic politics. While the US remains alert to the possibility of dangerous communist penetration of Bolivia, it also remains to be convinced that the problem is of the immediately serious proportions represented by the Bolivians, and it has refused to be drawn into Bolivian domestic affairs, or to take certain other steps suggested by Bolivian officials, on the basis of this pretext alone.

Although there has been some discussion of Bolivian participation in the Korean action, the Bolivian armed forces are not expected to make any appreciable contribution to the defense of the continent [4] in the event of armed attack. Their principal role would be that of preserving internal order in Bolivia and protecting the country from a communist coup which might create a diversionary disturbance and threaten US access to strategic materials. US air and ground military missions collaborate with Bolivia in order to create a pro-US orientation and to increase the efficiency and capabilities of the Bolivian armed forces, without, however, instigating desires for expensive and unwarranted amounts of modern military equipment. US policy has been to extend to Bolivia only the same assistance in purchasing arms and military equipment as is extended to other countries entitled to MDAP aid.

[3] On January 26, 1951, the Bolivian Government had completed its obligations under the terms of the Lend-Lease Settlement Arrangement of 1947. This arrangement, however, had not included so-called contingent lend-lease accounts, covering cash-reimbursable transactions amounting to $494,399.25. The Department's efforts to negotiate a settlement of this amount proved abortive during 1951, primarily because of the financial exigencies confronting the Bolivian Government. Pertinent documents are in decimal file 724.56.

[4] For documentation concerning United States policy with respect to hemisphere defense and related matters, see pp. 985 ff.

C. RELATIONS WITH OTHER STATES

Claiming to have lost territory to each of its five neighbors, Bolivia is naturally suspicious and distrustful of others, and it is somewhat surprising that its relations with its neighbors are as good as they are. This is true especially in the case of Chile, Bolivia's traditional enemy since the loss of its littoral in the War of the Pacific, and of Paraguay, its most recent enemy in armed conflict. Although there is little contact between Bolivia and Paraguay, the bitterness of the Chaco War seems to have faded and Bolivians in general accept their defeat and the loss of the Chaco.

The dream of eventual access to the sea has motivated much of Bolivia's foreign policy and has kept alive the resentment against Chile. Nevertheless, the relations between the two today are very good. They have for some years professed a common interest as democracies surrounded by military dictatorships and subjected to Argentine pressure and interference. Both Bolivia and Chile have from time to time claimed that the Peron [5] Government is determined to achieve the overthrow of their democratic institutions and replace them with administrations of the Argentine type. This common fear of Argentina has overshadowed the traditional difficulties stemming from the port question. It can be expected, however, that Bolivia will continue to keep alive the issue of access to the sea. Although we have expressed our sympathy with the Bolivian aspiration and our interest in the economic problems which have been related to it, it is our policy to view this as a matter which must be resolved through friendly negotiations among the interested parties, and we are in no sense committed to the grand-scale Titicaca irrigation and hydroelectric scheme which has been advanced hypothetically as compensation to Chile and Peru for Bolivian access to the coast near Arica. The President of Chile [6] not long ago expressed, informally, a willingness to consider the cession of a strip of territory along the Peruvian border which would enable Bolivia to control most of the Arica–La Paz railroad, a financial liability to Chile, and develop a small port just north of Arica. A solution of the port question through the cession of Chilean territory along its northern border cannot be accomplished without the consent of Peru, according to the 1929 settlement of the Tacna–Arica dispute.[7] Peruvian consent to the proposal of the Chilean President may prove difficult to obtain, although there are no special problems today between Bolivia and Peru and relations are generally good.

[5] Juan Domingo Perón, President of Argentina.
[6] Gabriel González Videla.

Bolivia's most troublesome international problems arise from its proximity to Argentina and, until recently, its dependence on that country as a major source of supply, especially of foodstuffs. Following the overthrow of Villarroel, the Peron administration gave a number of clear indications that it preferred that totalitarian government to the more democratic administrations which succeeded it. Bolivian political exiles on occasion organized revolts from across the Argentine border. The Bolivian Government took these incidents and Argentine economic pressure as indicating that the official policy of the Argentine Government is to promote a successful revolution in Bolivia. US policy is to consider these incidents as possibly indicative of the sentiments of individual Argentine officials but, in the absence of more concrete evidence, not necessarily as proof of official Argentine policy. On the contrary, in more recent incidents, the Argentine Government took appropriate and correct measures, albeit at times belatedly, to control the movement and activities of the Bolivian exiles. Indications of the current Argentine attitude afforded by the May 1951 election and subsequent events have been inconclusive as regards Argentine support for any particular Bolivian faction, but there is no question of a lively continuing Argentine interest in Bolivian affairs, and the possibility of active Argentine intervention always exists.

Bolivia also fears Argentine interest and penetration in the eastern plains south of Santa Cruz, the petroleum region of Bolivia, where Argentina has agreed to invest over two hundred million Argentine pesos in the construction of railroads and highways. The Yacuiba-Santa Cruz railroad, on which slow progress is being made, cuts through the heart of this petroleum zone. The US considers that the Argentine-financed transportation projects cannot be justified economically and will add more dead weight to Bolivia's staggering future debt burden; but the US has not attempted to persuade Bolivia to this view.

A comprehensive economic agreement was signed by Bolivia and Argentina in 1947 which, although not implemented to date, provides for preferential customs arrangements, extensive interchange of specified commodities, and large Argentine credits for public works, industrial development, and stabilization. There is a vociferous group in Bolivia which favors full implementation of this agreement and closer economic and political ties with Argentina in view of what it considers a lack of progress under the existing policy of cooperation with the US. Since this agreement would if implemented tend to strengthen inter-American economic ties and encourage the expansion of trade and mutual economic development, the US does not oppose it so long as the arrangements are non-discriminatory, do not infringe on Bolivian political or economic sovereignty, and permit free access to Bolivian markets and products.

[7] For documentation on the settlement, see Foreign Relations, 1929, vol. I, pp. 720 ff.

Brazil has economic interest in the same regions of Bolivia which appeal to Argentina, especially the Santa Cruz area. It is rapidly completing the Corumba–Santa Cruz railroad, which skirts the Bolivian petroleum zone. Many Bolivians fear this penetration, but the majority do not consider Brazil a serious threat, and relations between the two countries have been generally good. Bolivia tends to look to Brazil as a counter-balance to Argentine penetration of its eastern zone. There is a danger, however, that the interests of these two powerful neighbors may clash, since their respective zones of activity, as delineated in agreements with Bolivia, overlap. Furthermore, there is little national sentiment in the eastern zone, which has practically no economic ties with the rest of the country, and separatist, pro-Argentina or pro-Brazil movements might easily be instigated. The US does not oppose Brazilian interest so long as it conforms to the same conditions established for Argentine activities. The US attempts to lessen the possibility of a separatist movement and/or a clash between Argentina and Brazil in eastern Bolivia by assisting Bolivia to strengthen the economic and political interdependence of the various regions of the country, orienting the eastern area toward the highland centers. The Cochabamba-Santa Cruz highway project and the agricultural and petroleum development programs are instruments of this policy.

Official relations between Bolivia and the USSR are non-existent for all intents and purposes; diplomatic representatives have not been exchanged in spite of mutual diplomatic recognition, communist activities in Bolivia were outlawed in April 1950,* and trade with the Soviet orbit is insignificant. Bolivia has evinced willingness to cooperate fully in the embargo of strategic materials to the USSR and its satellites.

While the United States has refused to give full credence to Bolivian Government claims of communist plotting for immediate access to power in that country, the United States does appreciate that communism has probably made some inroads in Bolivia recently. Such inroads are to be expected among a population so backward, poverty-stricken, and illiterate, especially in view of the social unrest created by recent economic difficulties and the weak, vacillating economic policy of the Hertzog–Urriolagoitia administrations. It is US policy to view the communist problem in Bolivia as essentially a long-term one, and US countermeasures consist principally of assistance to the Bolivian economic development program, attacks on basic health problems and ignorance through the IIAA Health and Education Missions, and a vigorous USIE program.

*A more stringent and detailed decree outlawing communist activities was issued by the Busch government in 1938. [Footnote in the source text].

D. POLICY EVALUATION

Progress toward attaining the basic US policy objectives outlined at the beginning of this statement is slow and uneven. Until Bolivia becomes a more stable political entity with a viable economy, the danger of penetration by its neighbors and a possible clash of their respective interests in Bolivia will continue, as will Bolivian vulnerability to the spread of communist or other totalitarian doctrines. The principal measure of the success of U.S. policy must therefore be the extent to which the political and economic structures of Bolivia have been strengthened.

With regard to political stability, the movement during the past year has actually been retrograde. The Urriolagoitia regime failed to carry the country successfully through the strains of national elections, and a de facto military government took over. The ability of the latter government to restore a measure of harmony in the Bolivian political family is problematical, and prospects for an early return to constitutional rule are indefinite.

Economically, there have been some bright spots. An American contracting company has renewed construction of the Cochabamba-Santa Cruz highway. A large part of the US Point IV program is being concentrated on development of the Santa Cruz region, and there are prospects of early substantial investments in that area. Increased international tension has created boom prices in world mineral markets. On the whole, however, progress toward economic stability has been unsatisfactorily slow.

The primary responsibility for Bolivia's disappointing political and economic situation does not rest on the US, to be sure. Were the Bolivian Government to take measures within its power to eliminate inefficiency and corruption from public administration, revise the country's tax and fiscal systems and general economic practices, and concentrate its efforts and resources on sensible, economically sound development projects, eliminating those carried on for purely political and regional purposes, much would be done to rectify the basic ills, both political and economic.

However, there has been some measure of US responsibility in that US implementation of policy has often vacillated between close and full cooperation and refusal to do anything at all. Thus, in 1949–50 the US granted the Bolivian request for an additional loan for the Cochabamba–Santa Cruz highway but at the same time was unable to give any special assistance to the Bolivian tin industry, then in critical straits; and again in 1951, while preparing an expanded Bolivian Point IV program and giving sympathetic consideration to other Bolivian requests for additional economic development assistance, the US has not yet signed a long-term contract to buy Bolivian tin—a basic necessity for a certain measure of economic stability in that country. Thus too, US policy toward full-scale implementation of the Bohan Plan is ill-defined. The US has already contributed or promised for the Cochabamba-Santa Cruz highway far more than the entire amount originally estimated to be needed for the Bohan Plan, Bolivia's fulfillment of her own obligations under the Plan has been questionable, and there is serious doubt as to her ability to assume further debt burdens. On the other hand, some further US Government investment in the Plan will probably be necessary to insure its success and make Bolivian repayment even theoretically possible. US attitudes on this problem vary from time to time, but Bolivia continually hopes that something will occur to loosen the purse strings of the US Treasury.

The lack of coordinated implementation of US policy in Bolivia stems from administrative and statutory obstacles within the US Government and from conflicts with other policies, rather than from any lack of good will, but it contributes to the shortcomings of policy implementation. At the same time, the piece-meal approach to the problems of Bolivia encourages that country to rely on the US to solve its problems as they arise rather than to take effective local remedial measures within its power.

The US probably could count on access to Bolivian strategic materials and political support, at least from the present Bolivian administration, in the event of another world war. Again, however, a higher degree of political and economic stability and well-being would make such cooperation more certain and more effective, since domestic difficulties might well have an adverse effect on Bolivian production of strategic materials and since a successful revolution, a distinct possibility in view of the present situation of that country, conceivably might bring to office a government inclined to cooperate only grudgingly with the US. The attainment of maximum production of Bolivian strategic materials in time of emergency depends in part on US price policies and US willingness to enter into long-term contracts. Other objectives besides the stimulation of maximum Bolivian production, however, enter into the determination of the price and contract factors, and are sometimes, as at the present writing, in conflict with the production objective. Such conflict can, as at present, interfere with US policy toward Bolivian strategic materials by discouraging Bolivian plans for increased minerals production and even by posing some threat to the security of US access to Bolivian minerals.

The US has been more successful in other aspects of policy with respect to Bolivia, such as enlisting that country's support and cooperation in world affairs. The US practices of offering technical assistance, travel grants for study, an information program, political counsel, and general economic cooperation have been instrumental in increasing the bonds of friendship and understanding between the two countries. The USIE program has been successful in causing certain segments of the Bolivian population to look to the US as a cultured, progressive, benign, and cooperative friend without ulterior motives.

The US should continue its policy of aid to Bolivia, especially through the technical assistance program. The Point IV program in Bolivia should be expanded up to the maximum of Bolivia's capacity for absorption. (In this respect, however, a major difficulty is Bolivia's inability to undertake additional financial obligations, even for cooperative programs which would be of great benefit.) Bolivia's requests for additional financial assistance for her economic development program should continue to be examined sympathetically on their own merits, but the major emphasis should be on the participation of private capital in Bolivia's development. To this end the Bolivian Government should be encouraged to take measures, such as regular payments on the new bond settlement agreement, to restore the country's international credit and make conditions within Bolivia more attractive to private investment.

An experiment in democracy has failed in Bolivia because of the lack of developed natural resources on which to base a sound and diversified economy, the poverty and ignorance of the masses, the weaknesses of Bolivian administrators, and traditions of political violence. The Bolivian experience should prove to us that we cannot export the US type of democracy to be superimposed on a backward country. Rather we must help Bolivia to create within that country economic conditions and educational levels which will allow the gradual development of democratic principles, traditions, and institutions under the leadership of capable and trained administrators. In the long run, this may occur in Bolivia. This is the ultimate objective of the US in Bolivia—to help create a healthy, prosperous, and stable democracy with satisfactory levels of living, education, and culture for the Bolivian people.

Editorial Note

During 1951, the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank authorized $1,000,000 credits to two Bolivian mining companies to finance the cost of machinery, supplies, and equipment in the United States for the expansion of tungsten production. The first credit, approved November 1, was to Mauricio Hochschild, S. A. M. I. (824.10/11–251), and the second, approved December 19, was to the Bolivian Tin & Tungsten Mines Corporation (824.10/12–2051). For further information, see Export-Import Bank of Washington, Thirteenth Semiannual Report to Congress for the Period July–December 1951 (Washington, 1952), pages 10–11.

BRAZIL

POLITICAL, ECONOMIC, AND MILITARY RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND BRAZIL[1]

832.00/1–1551 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Brazil (Johnson) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL RIO DE JANEIRO, January 15, 1951—7 p. m.

915. There follows complete text Vargas document[2] referred to Embtel 914, January 15.[3]

"1. Sr. Getulio Vargas, President-elect of Brazil,[4] appreciated the courtesy of the Government of The United States of America, in submitting to him, in a confidential manner, the topics which will be debated at the Washington conference, to take place next March.

"2. The topics referred to appear to him, in general interesting and opportune. In his new period of government Sr. Getulio Vargas will be animated by the desire to continue the policy of cooperation and loyalty which he previously carried out with the US and other nations of this hemisphere, and which was translated into an intimate and sincere collaboration, both in the economic and military spheres, during the difficult emergency of the second war. The political events which followed the termination of that war, and which continued to develop, filling with apprehension those who have responsibilities of government, have made it imperative to strengthen the bonds among the American countries.

---

[1] For previous documentation concerning United States relations with Brazil, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 757 ff.

[2] The so-called "Vargas document" was a confidential memorandum by Brazilian President-elect Getúlio Dornelles Vargas, delivered to Ambassador Johnson on January 13, 1951, by Brazilian Minister of Foreign Affairs João Neves da Fontoura, under cover of an informal note dated January 11, 1951. The memorandum was in response to an unsigned and undated paper discussing the forthcoming Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of American States which Ambassador Johnson had handed to Foreign Minister Neves da Fontoura on December 29, 1950. Copies of these documents, including the Portuguese text of President-elect Vargas' memorandum, were transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 1085, from Rio de Janeiro, dated January 24, 1951, not printed (363/1–2451).

The Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of American States was held at Washington, March 26–April 7, 1951. For documentation, see pp. 925 ff.

[3] Not printed.

[4] Getúlio Vargas was elected President of Brazil on October 3, 1950, and he assumed office on January 31, 1951. He had previously served as President, 1930–1945.

"Brazil expects to give to the US at the Washington conference—as in other pronouncements and programs—its cooperation, but considers it indispensable that the government of the US understand that this cooperation, besides imposing all types of sacrifices, requires an effective understanding so that the economic life of the country which gives it will not be disturbed to the point of having its immediate and future possibilities of development and production substantially reduced.

"3. The Brazilian Government, in its internal policy, will exert all efforts to see that the reestablishment of a war economy in the US will not have on the internal economy of our country only the effect of a passing prosperity, and will collaborate with the Government of the US in appropriate measures to offset the inflation stimulated by war.

"In this sense, the Brazilian Government requires the positive support of the North American Government so that orders of materials needed for the establishment of basic industries and the execution of public works will move forward quickly and have priority of delivery and that requests for credits from such establishments as the Export-Import Bank and the International Bank related to these orders will be granted and processed with rapidity. Instead of accumulating a balance of dollars, resulting from the growth of exports, for subsequent utilization, the Brazilian Government desires to utilize it immediately in payment of orders and in servicing loans granted.

"4. It is not inopportune to recall that direct North American investments in Brazil in the past decade have corresponded to the confidence and expectations of investors. The atmosphere of general progress and juridical security does not justify a withdrawal, such as that which followed the great depression of 1929 not only in relation to Brazil but with respect to all Latin America. The value of Brazilian cooperation and the earning power of our establishments justifies the conclusion that North American investment at the moment is excessively timid. To intensify the flow of private capital it is necessary that the Government of the US give it official stimulus and not discriminate against Brazil in measures of cooperation which have been adopted in relations to other parts of the world.

"5. The goodwill of the Brazilian Government towards contributing national raw materials for the emergency economy of the US should have its counterpart in the goodwill of the Government of North America towards conceding priority of manufacture and medium and long term bank credits for the immediate execution of a rational program of industrialization and public works to which the principle efforts of the Brazilian administration will be devoted.

"6. The Brazilian Government finds it equally necessary that artificial restrictions on the present level of prices of Brazilian exports, and especially coffee, shall not be imposed.

"No foreign financing will contribute to the intensive development of our country if we do not have domestic capital to support and absorb aid coming from abroad. In recent years coffee has been the principal factor not only in rebalancing our accounts with the US, but in creating internal availabilities which have formed new capital and developed initiatives. Any policy which does not respect real prices, such as that coffee has attained in a free market economy, would be contrary to the development of the country.

"7. The Government of the US is not unaware that many North American initiatives in Brazil have been frustrated by legal and fiscal obstacles which upset the collaboration of the two countries. The Brazilian Government is ready to adopt in its internal policy measures which will favor and stimulate the spontaneous flow of American capital into Brazil; but the US, having attained the greatest degree of economic expansion known in history, must recognize that it does not need a protection in policy, unfavorable to the establishment of manufacturing industries in the places which are sources of foreign raw materials, nor does it need to continue overloading by taxes the income of its emigrated capital.

"8. The Brazilian Government wishes to conclude with the US a policy of economic reciprocity which will make available national raw materials of strategic value to the other country. It believes however, that at the same time it is indispensable that the US adopt positive measures which will translate themselves into a policy of positive aid in the development of our economy for the rationalization of agriculture, and for industrialization.

"This policy should be part of the general principles affirmed at the conference next March but its perfect definition and realization must result from bilateral negotiations which the Brazilian Government wishes to initiate early in February.

"Through these bilateral negotiations, the Brazilian Government will make known its immediate plans of economic development and of legislative and administrative measures through which it intends to assume them.

"The Brazilian Government views with special sympathy the creation of an American-Brazilian organism, of easy functioning and reduced bureaucracy, charged with coordinating, on the technical-financial level, a policy of cooperation between the two countries.

"9. With respect to Brazilian initiative, this policy does not contemplate only government enterprises and services. On the contrary, so far as possible, it will try to encourage private initiative, give aid to enterprises of integrity the action of which would be included in the general program, and coordinate, in accordance with the public interest, the objectives of the administration and of business.

"10. Within the general program of developing basic sectors of continental economy, the Brazilian Government expects, then, from North America, direct and indirect support for effective measures which will contribute to the progress of Brazil and the well-being of its people.

"Thus, there will be requested, in the bilateral negotiations referred to above, supplies with priority and long and medium term financing for the following undertakings:

"I. Construction of hydroelectric plants in the upper Sao Francisco, Minas Gerais, and Rio Grande do Sul, in accordance with plans approved by the Federal Government and by the state governments.

"II. Works of economic utility in the Sao Francisco valley, notably in the Paulo Afonso region, including transportation, urbanization and sanitation.

"III. Construction and installation of petroleum refineries with a capacity of 10,000 to 30,000 barrels, for Brazilian private or state organizations.

"IV. Construction and installation of two synthetic nitrate plants destine for private or state organizations for installation in zones of the lower Sao Francisco and in Minas Gerais.

"V. Construction and installation of new installations for expanding the Volta Redonda steel mill, with the immediate utilization of the credit already granted by the Export-Import Bank;[5] and, later, the construction and installation of a second steel mill with a capacity of 1,000 tons daily, in Minas Gerais, in the Rio Doce zone, which possesses railway transport and port installations which will assure an outlet for the production.

"VI. Dredging, construction and permanent equipment of maritime ports and acquisition of vessels for renovating the merchant fleet, with a view to assuring the expansion and regularization of cabotage.

"VII. Equipment and execution of a plan for the rational utilization of Brazilian coal, including the operations of mining, beneficiation and transportation.

"VIII. Financial and technical cooperation in the improvement, reequipment and electrification of railways.

"IX. Financing the transportation and establishment of European immigrants, principally Italians, so as to assure the integration of imported manpower in the national economy, permitting the execution of an immigration program on a large scale.

"X. Establishment in Brazil of industries for the treatment of national raw materials, with mixed capital, in order to make possible the exportation of manufactured products instead of the raw materials themselves.

---

[5] On July 20, 1950, the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank had authorized a credit of $25,000,000 to the Republic of Brazil to finance the purchase of equipment necessary for expanding steel production at the Volta Redonda mill. Extension of the credit, however, was pending the Brazilian Government's full compliance with the provisions of the loan agreement.

"XI. Creation of one or more mixed American-Brazilian companies for the study of the raw materials of the country, the exploration for and exploitation of mineral deposits.

"XII. The construction and installation of a factory at Cabo Frío for the production of alkalis, [6] and cooperation in studies for a second factory in the northern part of the country.

"XIII. Equipment and execution, through private or state organizations, of the plan for storing, transporting and conserving foodstuffs including the construction of silos for cereals, treating and fumigating plants, warehouses, and refrigerated vessels.

"XIV. Supplying of equipment and indispensable parts for the regular maintenance of Brazilian aviation.

"11. These points, listed as examples in this note, represent in synthesis the cooperation that the government of Brazil expects from the US for the realization of an unpostponable economic development program. It is evident that they cannot be included in the agenda of the international meeting. They should be the object of bilateral negotiations which, however, will be embodied in the spirit and the principles of the meeting, of consultation, which the Government of Brazil will attend animated by the most sincere aim of continental cooperation, ready to offer its contribution to the common effort."

JOHNSON

[6] In the latter part of 1950, the Cia. Nacional de Alcalis had applied to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD) for a credit to finance the foreign exchange costs of a 100,000-ton alkali plant at Cabo Frío. The IBRD had the application under consideration during 1951.

Editorial Note

On January 18, 1951, the Executive Directors of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development approved an additional credit of $15,000,000 to the Brazilian Traction, Light and Power Company, Ltd. (832.10/1–1751), which augmented a previous credit of $75,000,000 to finance most of the foreign exchange costs of a program for expanding hydroelectric generating and transmitting facilities in the Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo areas. For further information on these loans, see International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, Sixth Annual Report to the Board of Governors 1950–1951 (Washington, 1951), page 32.

On February 8, 1951, the National Advisory Council approved consideration by the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank of a credit up to $30,000,000 to the Sociedade Brasiliera de Mineracao Ltda. (Sobramil), a Brazilian company jointly owned by six Brazilian citizens (Chamma brothers) and the United States Steel Corporation, to finance the acquisition and installation of the equipment and facilities required to mine and to deliver to an ocean port 3,000,000 tons of Urucum manganese ore over a period of 12 years (Department of State National Advisory Council Documents, Document No. 88, Action No. 452, February 8, 1951, Lot 60 D 137, Box 369). The Bank did not regard a guaranty by the Brazilian Government as necessary, but it required a statement from the government indicating that there were no objections to the proposed loan or to the execution of the project as planned. The Brazilian Government withheld its approval, however, and the loan did not become effective during 1951. Pertinent documents are in Department of State decimal files 103–XMB and 832.10.

On December 5, 1951, the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank authorized a line of credit not to exceed $5,000,000 in favor of Cia. Brasiliera de Ligantes Hidraulicos to assist in financing the purchase of materials and equipment in the United States for construction of a cement plant in Brazil. For information on this loan, see Export-Import Bank of Washington, Thirteenth Semiannual Report to Congress for the Period July–December 1951 (Washington, 1952), pages 13, 34.

832.00/1–2551

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] January 25, 1951.

Subject: Brazil

Some time ago you talked to the President about the problem of economic development in Brazil, and you and I later talked to Secretary Snyder [1] and Bill Martin [2] about the proposal of the International Bank to announce a $250,000,000 investment program in Brazil, provided that there be a limitation of the Export-Import Bank's lending activities in Brazil. Nothing has come of this proposal because of (1) the failure within the government to resolve the jurisdictional problem between the two Banks,[3] and (2) the feeling in Treasury that we should make no long-term commitments about development because of actual or pending shortages of materials in this country.

Mr. Thorp [4] and Mr. Harriman [5] have commenced a series of meetings with Mr. Martin, of the Treasury, and Mr. Black,[6] of the Inter-

[1] John W. Snyder, Secretary of the Treasury.
[2] William McChesney Martin, Jr., Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.
[3] For documentation on this subject, see vol. I, pp. 1573 ff.; documentation on the problem as it related to Brazil in 1950 is printed in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 757 ff.
[4] Willard L. Thorp, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs.
[5] W. Averell Harriman, Special Assistant to the President.
[6] Eugene R. Black, President of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

national Bank, in an effort to resolve some of these problems. A solution of the problems under discussion by this group could be expedited if the President would take a direct interest in the matter. Furthermore, the entire problem has taken on new importance and urgency because of the desire of President Vargas to work out broad programs of economic and political cooperation between Brazil and the United States, as expressed in a recent series of telegrams between Embassy Río and the Department. These telegrams are referred to in the attached draft of memorandum from you to the President.

It is imperative for the future of our relations with Brazil that we give a positive response to the proposals of President Vargas, even though the realization of the entire program is obviously not a short-term possibility, especially in view of materials shortages. Accordingly, we should express a willingness to begin to lay plans for the ultimate realization of the program and to proceed immediately with the highest priority items.

President Vargas and the Brazilian Foreign Minister have expressed a desire for negotiations to begin in February about the whole problem of cooperation between Brazil and the United States. In accordance with this, I intend to proceed to Río about February 17. It is highly desirable that I be in a position to talk concretely by the time I get there.

Recommendation: That you sign the attached memorandum to the President.[7]

---

[7] The draft memorandum contained a recommendation requesting the President to "issue instructions to the members of the National Advisory Council and the Office of Defense Mobilization to jointly prepare a United States Government position in regard to the maximum possible implementation of the Vargas program within the limitations imposed by the emergency and, in cases where financial cooperation is required, to determine which of the two lending institutions should deal with given projects." In a memorandum to the Secretary, dated January 26, 1951, Mr. Thorp expressed his disagreement with this recommendation, stating in part the following reasons: That assistance requirements for Brazil must be considered within a global context; that we "have no assurance that Brazil is the most urgent case at the moment"; that the United States had barely initiated an effort to solve the raw materials allocation problem; and that the jurisdictional problem between the IBRD and the Export-Import Bank was of "greater importance to the Department" and should be resolved before any action on the Brazilian question (832.00/1–2651). Department of State files contain no evidence indicating that Mr. Miller's draft memorandum was sent forward to President Truman. The jurisdictional dispute between the two banks was not resolved prior to Mr. Miller's departure for Rio de Janeiro on February 17.

832.00/2–651

Memorandum by the Economic and Finance Adviser of the Bureau of Inter-American Affairs (White)

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] February 6, 1951.

Subject: Suggested Comments to be made in Mr. Miller's Talk with President Vargas in Pursuance of Vargas' communication of January 15, 1951

The following comments are arranged in the same chronological order as that used by Vargas in his message. In practice, Mr. Miller may desire to discuss the economic topics first, following with the political and military subjects.

1. Mr. Miller should first deliver to him a personal, written message from President Truman, together with a Portuguese translation. This message should be short and concentrated on four key points:

a) President Truman is delighted at Vargas' message of cooperation and looks forward to the maintenance of the same close personal relationship which existed between Vargas and Roosevelt and which proved so fruitful for both countries.

b) President Truman is quite aware of Brazil's potentialities and needs for economic expansion. In his recent budget message to Congress, he emphasized the need to pursue vigorously economic development and technical cooperation programs. The maintenance of close economic cooperation between Brazil and the U.S. is very important.

c) Collaboration in the military sphere between the two countries is of key importance. Immediate implementation of this collaboration could have important effects in demonstrating to the world that a situation of such strength exists as to give the Soviet Imperialists pause in their planning of future aggression.

d) Assistant Secretary Miller has discussed Vargas' message with the responsible members of Truman's administration and will discuss its various aspects with Vargas in a spirit of complete cooperation and mutual confidence.

2. Mr. Miller should say that President Vargas' expression of desire to continue political and military cooperation is deeply appreciated. It is most timely because the moment for concrete action has arrived if peace is to be preserved or, failing that, to establish basis for defeat of Soviet aggressors' attempt to enslave the free world.[1]

a) Political collaboration means continuation of Brazil–U.S. united front in active support of the principles of the United Nations and Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance.[2]

---

[1] For documentation concerning United States policy with respect to the Korean "emergency" in early 1951, see volume VII; for related documentation dealing with United States national security policy, see vol. I, pp. 1 ff.

[2] For text of the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (Rio Treaty), opened for signature at Rio de Janeiro on September 2, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, December 3, 1948, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS), No. 1838, or 62 Stat. (pt. 2) 1681.

b) In vital military sphere, designation by Brazil of a ground force of one division to participate in United Nations action in Korea would be most helpful.

c) In the event Brazil decides it can make such a contribution, its announcement at time of the Meeting of the Consultation of Foreign Ministers would have a most important effect and might prove a great influence on the future course of world events.

d) In the event Brazil makes such a decision, the U.S. is prepared to cooperate in making available training equipment and logistical support necessary to make Brazilian troop participation most effective.

e) The Government of the United States will be prepared in the near future to enter into discussions with the Government of Brazil regarding additional joint military measures which might be taken to mobilize against the possibility of an outbreak of general hostilities.

3. The Government of the United States agrees with the Brazilian Government that appropriate measures should be adopted to arrest inflation and has already taken vigorous fiscal and other measures to deal with this problem. In the case of Brazil, the report of the Joint Technical Commission [3] made certain recommendations regarding this matter. The U.S. is prepared, through the instrumentality of the Joint Economic Development Commission,[4] to provide such technical experts as the Brazilian Government might find useful in dealing with this problem. After consultation with other government agencies in Washington, I am pleased to inform you that the Government of the U.S. is prepared to follow the following basic principles in dealing with Brazil's materials problem: (There should follow at this point a summary of the U.S. Government position on economic items on the agenda for the emergency Consultation Meeting of Foreign Ministers of the American republics, rephrased in terms of U.S.-Brazilian economic relations.)

4. It is agreed that American private investment in Brazil has over the long run been treated equitably and the American business community in Brazil is an enthusiastic supporter of the Brazilian people and of the prospects for the economic growth of Brazil. The Government of the U.S. is prepared, through the instrumentality of the Joint

---

[3] The Joint Brazil–United States Technical Commission had been established in 1948. The commission's report, popularly referred to as the "Abbink Report" (after the chairman of the United States section, John Abbink), was issued on March 24, 1949, as Department of State publication 3487. For previous documentation on the commission, see Foreign Relations, 1948, vol. IX, pp. 364–375.

[4] The Joint Brazil–United States Economic Development Commission had been established by a formal exchange of notes on December 19, 1950; its activities were initiated on July 19, 1951. For documentation on the establishment of the commission, see ibid., 1950, vol. II, pp. 757 ff. For Department of State press releases during 1951 concerning the commission, see Department of State Bulletin, May 21, 1951, p. 814; ibid., July 23, 1951, p. 156; ibid., October 8, 1951, p. 581; ibid., October 22, 1951, pp. 654–655. For the commission's final report, see Institute of Inter-American Affairs, The Development of Brazil: Report of the Joint Brazil–United States Economic Development Commission (Washington, 1954).

Economic Development Commission to consider measures which, if adopted, would result in a satisfactory flow of private investment to Brazil within the limitations of the mobilization period. It is most doubtful, however, whether the U.S. Congress or the American people would support tax incentive devices at a time when the American public and corporations at home are being called upon for progressively higher taxes.

5. The Government of the U.S. is making every effort to integrate its lending and materials policies so that they may go hand in hand in the field of the economic development of Brazil. The principal problem is one of deciding, within the framework of Brazil's long-term requirements, which projects are of the most essential character and best adapted to meet the requirements of the joint defense effort.

6. The Government of the U.S. has had very much in mind the importance of coffee to the Brazilian economy in the formulation of its price control policies. It will be noted that price ceilings, as now applied in the U.S., are at a level for coffee approximately five times pre-war as compared with a coefficient of approximately two times pre-war for the U.S. manufactured goods which Brazil traditionally purchases from the U.S. This reveals an extraordinary improvement in the terms of trade for Brazil, an improvement which is also apparent in the case of a number of other key Brazilian exports such as cacao. The maintenance of this basically favorable situation will depend in part on the success of Brazilian anti-inflationary measures in preventing the excess domestic purchasing power being created in Brazil by these commodity prices from reflecting itself in general price and wage rises in Brazil. The U.S. is cognizant of the fact that these commodity prices are resulting in an internal source of capital for Brazil. It is important that this capital be channeled into essential sectors of the economy.

7. Reference is made to the observations contained in Paragraph 5 above.

8. The Government of the U.S. has studied the Note [5] of the Brazilian Ministry of Foreign Affairs in regard to the establishment of a Joint Economic Development Commission and has assumed that the policy of economic reciprocity between the two countries should be based on the basic premise set forth in that Note; namely, that the primary areas in the Brazilian economy requiring the most active financial and economic cooperation between Brazil and the U.S. are: (a) inland transportation, (b) agricultural development, (c) power development, and (d) development of mineral resources. This analysis coincides with the thesis of the report of the Joint Technical Commission which pointed out that the rate of economic growth in private industries in the past decade had been much greater than these basic sectors of the economy, and that future economic growth in Brazil, including the growth of private industry, was dependent on a solution to the problems in these basic sectors.

[5] Not printed.

The Government of the U.S. has assumed that the Joint Economic Development Commission would operate under the terms of reference of the Note from the Brazilian Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

9. The Government of the U.S. agrees that private initiative should be encouraged.

10. In accordance with the views expressed above, the Government of the U.S. believes that the activities of the Joint Economic Development Commission and the lending activities of the Eximbank and the International Bank should be concentrated on these four basic sectors. This does not exclude the possibility that in certain special cases such as the expansion of the National Steel Mill and the construction of the alkali plant, these lending institutions would be actively interested. It is believed, however, that the essential requirements of the basic sectors of the Brazilian economy are so large that, when taken together with the sensible desire of the Brazilian Government not to so over-burden its external debt position as to threaten its future stability, private investment, Brazilian and American, should be looked to as the source of financing for individual industrial expansion and future development of Brazil's petroleum industry.

In defining the respective roles of the two lending institutions, it is believed that consideration might be given to the following ad hoc arrangement; it being understood that each project will have to be considered in the light of its individual merit and essentiality:

a) Eximbank: In view of its long history of credit operations in Brazilian railroad and shipping activities, it is believed that the Eximbank would be disposed to undertake active working relationships with the Brazilian Government and with the Joint Economic Development Commission in essential projects dealing with railroad rehabilitation and development, port works, aviation and any other essential transportation investment.

b) International Bank: It is believed that the International Bank, of which both the U.S. and Brazil are members, should be approached with a view to obtaining its active cooperation with the Brazilian Government and with the Joint Economic Development Commission in the development and execution of the essential projects in the field of agricultural production and energy production.

c) Both lending institutions have an interest in the field of mineral development, as demonstrated in the current Amapa and Urucum projects, and it is hoped that this interest will be continued.

Both institutions agree that proper management is a key element in economic development.

There is attached a memorandum [6] dealing with the fourteen specific economic development projects and programs set forth in the Vargas communication.

[6] Not attached to the source text. A draft copy of the memorandum in question, however, was found in the Department of State files under file number 832.00/1–3151.

Editorial Note

Between February 18–23, 1951, Assistant Secretary Miller visited Rio de Janeiro, as part of a five-country tour of South America. He had been invited by the Brazilian Government to undertake exploratory conversations with Brazilian officials concerning economic cooperation between Brazil and the United States. These discussions covered numerous topics, including Brazil's desire to negotiate a "supply agreement" to ensure an adequate flow of scarce products from the United States, the strategic materials requirements of the United States, the role of the IBRD in financing the economic development of Brazil, and the possible participation of Brazilian troops in Korea. Memoranda of the discussions are enclosed with a letter from the Counselor of Embassy in Brazil (Mills) to the Officer in Charge of Brazilian Affairs (Kidder) in the Department of State, dated March 6, 1951 (832.00/3–651).

A second round of talks took place in Washington during the latter part of March and April. A report summarizing these talks, together with related memoranda, is enclosed with a letter from Mr. Kidder to Ambassador Johnson, dated April 24, 1951 (Rio de Janeiro Embassy Files, Lot 61 F 30, Box 123, Folder 320). None of these discussions proved conclusive or final, but it was agreed to establish at Rio de Janeiro a Joint Group on Emergency Supply Problems to determine Brazilian needs for scarce equipment and material from the United States and to consult on measures for facilitating the export of raw materials from Brazil to the United States. The agreement to set up the Joint Group was effected by an exchange of notes at Rio de Janeiro, July 24, 1951, and it entered into force on the same date; for text, see TIAS No. 2301, or United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), volume 2 (pt. 2), page 1594.

611.32/3–2051 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Brazil (Johnson) to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET RIO DE JANEIRO, March 20, 1951—2 p. m.

1206. FonMin Neves da Fontoura has given me confidentially copy ltr addressed to the Pres by Pres Vargas, original of which he will deliver during IAM meeting. Amb Nabuco has copy which he will also give in advance to Dept on arrival Washington. Fol is translation made in Emb of copy given me by FonMin:

"Mr. President: I consider it augurs well that at the very beginning of my govt the mtg of the Mins of Fon Relations of the American Republics takes to Washington my Minister of Foreign Relations, in his first offical trip to a foreign country, who will thus be able to transmit my salutations and these brief words to Your Excellency viva voce.

At the outset, I want to tell you of the satisfaction I had in receiving Mr. Nelson Rockefeller as Your Excellency's representative during my inauguration ceremonies; this satisfaction was so great because, besides his role as Special Ambassador of the United States of America, Mr. Rockefeller brought the credentials of his untiring effort to strengthen inter-American relations, he being, therefore, doubly welcome among us.

The Ambassador of Brazil in Washington, in turn, told me of the friendly feelings toward Brazil which Your Excellency nourishes, and how much Your Excellency has done to facilitate his mission. I want to thank you warmly for this constant good will, understanding and help, and I dare hope that your personal interest, and that of your government, in the prosperity and well-being of Brazil will not be abated, but on the contrary, will be intensified during my administration.

As Your Excellency knows, the serious problems of maintaining political and social stability within the molds of democracy are wholly connected, in any country, with its economic development; therefore our effort, intense and resolute as it might be, cannot forego the effective application of that international cooperation which finds such a noble expression in Point IV of the program of action outlined by Your Excellency, nor the action of organizations able to facilitate our development through judicious investment of capital. It is my strong desire that there may be initiated without further delay, on the plane of concrete accomplishments, a collaboration which can only be productive and good for the future of both our countries.

On the other hand, I have given assurances to Amb Herschel Johnson that, within the limits of her possibilities, Brazil will not spare efforts or supplies which may contribute to the success of the defense program of the hemisphere.

As Your Excellency knows, it fell upon me to direct Brazilian policy during the last war when military forces of our two countries fought side by side on land, in the air and on the sea. I need add nothing to express my confidence in the future development of the relations between Brazil and the United States of America; and this confidence, far from being shaken, is fortified by the fact that certain problems of reciprocal interest are about to draw the studied attention of our govts, for I am sure that such problems will be examined on both sides in an atmosphere of mutual understanding and good will.

With high respect and best personal wishes, Most sincerely, Getulio Vargas."

JOHNSON

611.32/4–1251 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Brazil

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, April 12, 1951—2 p. m.

744. Pres Truman recd Fon Min Fontoura Apr 9, presenting him with personal ltr to Vargas.

Ltr reciprocates greetings and assures Vargas US interest well being, prosperity Braz; states appreciation Vargas' views on importance Econ development for maintenance polit and social stability and states discussions with Braz Reps all aspects Econ problem as it concerns US–Braz relations currently being held here; re Vargas' desire initiation immediate coop, ltr assures him Pres's sincere hope Jt Comm will prod concrete accomplishments he wishes and states belief Comm will make positive constructive contribution Braz Econ development; re defense program, ltr expresses special pleasure for assurances given to Amb Johnson and says

"As you presumably already have been informed, Secy of State Acheson, acting on behalf of the Unified Command, in a recent talk with Your Excellency's Min of FonAffs explained the great assistance which cld be rendered to the United Nations effort in Korea shld it prove possible for Brazil to send an Infantry Division to participate in the combined mil effort in that area. Many Amer troops have been engaged in bitter combat against the aggressors in Korea for the past nine months and are badly in need of rest, which can become possible only as adequate replacements are made available. May I take this occasion, therefore, to urge your consideration of this matter."

Text of ltr air mailed.

ACHESON

795B.5/5–1051 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Brazil

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, May 10, 1951—5 p. m.

846. (For eyes of Amb only from Miller) Dept of Defense informs tel recd from Gen Ridgway [1] stating he wld welcome visit Braz Mission, Dept's 835 and 837, May 7.[2]

In informing Neves de Fontoura foregoing, you shd emphasize representations which we made to Defense that, in Dept's judgment, Braz Govt was sincere its desire send sizeable ground force Korea and that primary purpose Mission was to prepare public opinion for this move. It appears therefore inherent in situation that failure of Braz to take such action subsequent visit of Mission wld have most unfav repercussions. In my judgment, therefore, Mission shd only be sent if Vargas Admin intends to make every effort obtain public and Congress support. You shd also remind Neves my understanding that it will be made clear that Braz Mission wld not be fact-finding body and wld be announced as having been formed for purpose of study various ways in which Braz cld contribute to support UN operations Korea.

[1] Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, Supreme Commander, Allied Powers, in Japan; U.S. Commander in Chief, Far East; and Commander in Chief, United Nations Command, in Korea.

[2] Neither printed.

In view importance Braz participation Korea,[3] for both material and psychological reasons, and if you believe it wld be helpful, you may desire raise with Neves question whether both of you shd at proper moment discuss matter with Vargas personally.

Believe receipt by you of Vargas personal assurances this matter important and that Pres Truman's direct communication Vargas this subj provides you logical basis this suggestion. [Miller.]

ACHESON

[3] In a memorandum to the Consultant to the Secretary (Pawley), dated May 31, 1951, commenting on Mr. Pawley's suggestion that a special commission be despatched to Latin America for the purpose of stimulating offers of ground forces for Korea, Mr. Miller stated in part the following: "In my opinion, the key to the question in South America is Brazil and I believe that if Brazil contributes troops, the chances are that one or more of the other countries will follow suit." (795B.5/5–3151)

Rio de Janeiro Embassy Files, Lot 61 F 30, Folder 523.1

The Counselor of Embassy in Brazil (Mills) to the Officer in Charge of Brazilian Affairs (Kidder)

TOP SECRET RIO DE JANEIRO, May 21, 1951.

OFFICIAL—INFORMAL

DEAR RANDY: I received this morning your Confidential letter of May 15, 1951,[1] enclosing Ed Moline's memorandum of May 3 to Ivan White on "Brazil's Proposed Petroleum Development Program" and a memorandum of the same date entitled "Brazil's Petroleum Demand and Program for Petroleum Development" prepared by Ortiz of PED.

Without doubt you have seen the Ambassador's Top Secret telegram 1503 of May 21[2] for the attention of Assistant Secretary Miller. It stresses the political importance which the Brazilians attach to receiving from us the equipment for both prospecting and refining which they have on order.

No one in the Department needs to be told of the nationalistic fervor surrounding the petroleum problem in almost every country which has hopes of developing self sufficiency in this field. Brazil, as you well know, is no exception.

[1] Neither the letter nor its enclosures are printed.
[2] Not printed.

I make this well known observation merely as a reminder that many things of great importance to us may be influenced greatly by the way in which we handle the Brazilian request for assistance in purchasing petroleum equipment with their own resources. It is not unlikely that there are persons both inside and outside the Department arguing with sincerity that we should insist that Brazil accept the participation of private capital in both refining and exploration on the terms which such private capital has to date been willing to offer and to force such acceptance we should ration equipment releases.

From the Ortiz memorandum I judge that PED can make a case for the equipment either way on defense grounds. The nub of the matter as we see it, however, lies in the last sentence which reads as follows:

"To encourage the continuance and intensification of this alliance sympathetic consideration should be given to Brazil's economic development programs, particularly in so far as they can be integrated into the over-all Western Hemisphere defense effort."

The program which is dearest to the Brazilian heart is the petroleum program, both refining and exploration. If we do not wish the alliance to go sour in other fields, we should be slow to use the screws of "short supply" to prevent Brazil from obtaining equipment.

I think you are the one person in the Department who, because of your fairly recent residence here, fully realizes the emotional dynamite in this question and what damage could be done to the overall relationship if the Brazilians become convinced we are "welshing" on what they undoubtedly consider a commitment to help them buy petroleum equipment with their own money.[3]

Sincerely, SHELDON T. MILLS

[3] In a letter to Ambassador Johnson, dated July 5, 1951, Mr. Kidder stated in part the following: "Procuring petroleum equipment for the Brazilians is a tough, uphill fight in which we so far have the support and the good will of people in the Petroleum Policy Staff, in the Petroleum Administration for Defense, and in the Office of International Trade. The three-man group studying petroleum refinery equipment is working hard and is in close touch with the representatives in New York of the National Petroleum Council and with the American firms working for the Council. Progress is being made but it is impossible to come out with a flat approval of all of Brazil's requests for equipment. The situation is becoming increasingly tighter . . . and refinery equipment must go to places where it will produce optimum results. Brazil's case can be argued on several grounds but, when analyzed alongside other requirements for petroleum equipment, its case boils down to the paramount political considerations about which you and Shelly have written. We have made the strongest possible case based on those considerations." (832.2547/6–2551)

795B.5/5–2851 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Brazil

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, May 28, 1951—6 p. m.

900. For Amb from Miller. If import FonMin comments re proposed trip to US Góes Monteiro [1] is that decision and public announcement Braz troops Korea would be delayed until after trip,[2] suggest you emphasize to Fontoura fol considerations:

(1) Almost two months already elapsed since question first raised with Braz del here;

(2) Several months will necessarily elapse after any decision sent troops before their actual participation Korea due to equipping, training and transport requirements;

(3) US public, press, and Congress becoming increasingly critical disproportionate US share total UN responsibility in Korea. Specific ref made LA and it is anticipated this question will be raised in Congressional Comtes examining proposed Pt IV and mil aid proposals for LA in few weeks time;

(4) In view foregoing, highly desirable this matter expedited fullest extent possible,[3] and it is hoped recent UN successes Korea will improve atmosphere in Braz;

(5) Not clear your communications that Vargas has adopted definite position this matter, and it is hoped therefore that you will have opportunity discuss matter with him personally.

[Miller]
ACHESON

[1] Gen. Pedro Aurélio Góes Monteiro, Chief of the General Staff, Brazilian Armed Forces.

[2] In telegram 1526, from Rio de Janeiro, May 24, 1951, Ambassador Johnson had reported that President Vargas had approved a trip to the United States by General Góes Monteiro, and that Foreign Minister Neves da Fontoura had "intimated main purpose Monteiro's visit US wld be discuss 'with Gen Marshall' and high mil auths extent, nature and time Braz mil participation." (795B.5/5–2451)

[3] In telegram 1558, from Rio de Janeiro, May 31, 1951, Ambassador Johnson stated in part the following: "I think it in our interest go slowly for short time, giving Fontoura full opportunity make his case with Pres in conjunction mil authorities, who already, according FonMin's statements, support his thesis subject to prior assurance Braz's internal security. . . . We have powerful leverages particularly in econ field which cld be called into play but wld be greatly our advantage for Vargas admin come to decision without any appearance pressure from US." (795B.5/5–3151). In telegram 916, to Rio de Janeiro, June 1, 1951, the Secretary indicated that the Department agreed with the Ambassador's views (795B.5/5–3151).

832.2546/6–1351

The Ambassador in Brazil (Johnson) to the Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs (Neves da Fontoura)[1]

CONFIDENTIAL RIO DE JANEIRO, June 11, 1951.
No. 493

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to inform Your Excellency that my Government has accepted the recommendations set forth in the attached aide-mémoire in reference to the purchase of monazite and products derived from monazite which are produced in Brazil. The text of this aide-mémoire was prepared in Washington and sent to the American Embassy in Rio de Janeiro by the Department of State.

Upon receipt of a note from Your Excellency indicating that the Government of the United States of Brazil also accepts the recommendations to supply the quantities of monazite and products of monazite specified in the accompanying aide-mémoire, the Government of the United States of America will undertake to negotiate a purchase contract for the cited materials.

Please accept [etc.] HERSCHEL V. JOHNSON

[Enclosure]

The United States Embassy in Brazil to the Brazilian Ministry of Foreign Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

Aide-mémoire of conversations held April 2nd, 4th, 5th and 10th, 1951 [2] between representatives of Brazil and the United States regarding procurement by the United States of monazite and monazite products from Brazil for the emergency needs of the defense effort.

The representatives of both countries gave careful consideration in these conversations not only to the urgent needs of the defense effort, but also in particular to Brazil's future needs and to the importance of developing in Brazil a Brazilian industry for increased processing of crude monazite into its various components as part of the program for the industrialization of Brazil.

As a result of these conversations the representatives agreed to recommend to their respective governments for consideration the following proposals:

a. The Government of the United States and the Government of Brazil would enter into an agreement, for a term of three years from its inception, under which Brazil would sell and the United States would buy monazite and monazite products produced and processed in Brazil in accordance with prices, specifications and schedules of shipment to be set forth in such agreement.

[1] Enclosure to despatch 1854, from Rio de Janeiro, June 13, 1951, which is not printed (832.2546/6–1351).

[2] These conversations took place in Washington.

b. In order to further the policy of Brazil of encouraging industrialization, the United States would during the term of this agreement purchase from Brazil all of its output of thorium salts and from Brazilian industry all of its output of rare earth chlorides up to an annual amount of 2,500 tons; it being understood that if Brazilian industry is able to produce additional monazite products the United States will purchase such additional products produced during the period of the agreement to the extent that such products are necessary to the defense effort and meet the specifications of the United States; it being also understood that if Brazilian industry is able to produce more than 2,500 tons of rare earth chlorides during any year of such agreement the United States will purchase such additional output to the extent that it is necessary for the defense effort.

c. In order to meet the urgent needs of the defense effort Brazil will use its best efforts, and the United States will use its best efforts to assist Brazil, to increase the production of crude monazite so as to make available the raw material required by the processing industry of Brazil and in addition to supply to the United States for the emergency needs of defense during each of the three years of the agreement up to 2,500 tons of crude monazite; it being understood that Brazil will sell to the United States 2,500 tons of crude monazite during each of the three years of the agreement subject only to Brazil's inability, with the full assistance of the United States, to produce that quantity of crude monazite over and above the requirements of Brazil's industry for processing under the agreement.

d. The United States and Brazil will promptly explore ways in which production of crude monazite in Brazil and the processing of monazite by Brazilian industry may be increased with the assistance of the United States in order to promote the industrialization of Brazil, aid in the defense effort and carry out the purposes of the agreement.

e. If an agreement setting forth these proposals is acceptable to Brazil, negotiation of its terms in detail and its execution by the respective governments will be concluded without delay.[3]

APRIL 10, 1951.

---

[3] In a memorandum to Ambassador Johnson, dated June 19, 1951, the Chief of the Economic and Consular Department of the Brazilian Foreign Ministry (Bueno do Prado) stated in part that the proposals contained in the aide-mémoire were acceptable in principle to Brazil, and he requested the United States to indicate in detail the type of assistance it was prepared to give to increase production of raw monazite and to develop the industrial processing of this product in Brazil, This memorandum is enclosure No. 1 to despatch 1932, from Rio de Janeiro, June 22, 1951, not printed (832.2546/6-2251).

795B.5/7–551 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Brazil (Johnson) to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET PRIORITY RIO DE JANEIRO, July 5, 1951—8 p. m.

27. Embtel 1750, June 29, 8 p. m.[1] I had talk yesterday with Pres Vargas. He extended warm congratulations and good wishes for US and Amer people on Independence Day. I thanked him and expressed satisfaction declaration his Govt made June 30, Embtel 1, July 2.[1] I said further I knew he fully conversant with various talks I had had with FonMin Neves Fontoura re mil situation Korea and importance my govt attached to Brazilian support and participation UN effort. I did not recapitulate my talks with FonMin but referred to close collaboration Brazil in two world wars and long history friendship and understanding as background our feeling this precious collaboration of Brazil was something very much needed now. I had impression Pres reaction these comments entirely friendly and understanding. He made reference to past collaboration between two countries and said Brazil had every desire support and stand by US in present emergency, and to implement fully her obligations to UN. He referred to note [2] to be sent Secy Gen Lie [3] in reply latter's appeal for mil support Korea and commented note contained reaffirmation Brazil's determination fulfill obligations she has assumed. Gen Góes Monteiro going US discuss manner Brazilian implementation those obligations.

Pres spoke of polit realities in Brazil, of necessity preparing and leading public opinion accept and support Brazilian mil participation abroad; moment not arrived when polit practicable make public declaration re Brazilian mil contingents overseas. He referred to internal conditions, particularly to insidious Commie propaganda and subversive activities and said they were causing him concern, that it is of primary importance govt have this situation under control and insure internal security of country. Gist his remarks this connection was internal security country wld have to come ahead of fon commitments. Pres not emphatic in speaking of any these matters but seemed to me his meaning was entirely clear.

I then told Pres of our concern re supply certain raw materials from Brazil and thanked him for his action our request re beryllium.[4] Pres reaffirmed promises previously made that he wld do everything possible meet US defense needs raw materials. I mentioned urucum

[1] Not printed.

[2] A copy of this note, dated July 3, 1951, is enclosed with despatch 43, from Rio de Janeiro, July 9, 1951, not printed (795B.5/7–951).

[3] Trygve Lie, Secretary-General of the United Nations.

[4] In telegram 5, from Rio de Janeiro, July 3, 1951, Ambassador Johnson informed the Secretary that the Brazilian Government had agreed to issue the necessary export licenses permitting the export of beryllium to the United States up to the 1,500 tons previously authorized by President Vargas, but not exported during the first six months of 1951. (411.329/7–351) manganese matter without going into details, for I knew he familiar with it, he stated delays were due to causes "of an internal character" relating to legal validity concessions made by state Matto Grosso which in all probability he said shld be by fed govt. He hoped have matter satisfactorily settled in about "two weeks".

Re sobramil contract manganese urucum FonMin Neves Fontoura has told me in strict confidence that although legal impediment is reality, real core long delay is Pres Vargas objection to Chama Brothers. Their participation this undertaking not liked by Pres nor, according FonMin, by Brazilian mil and FonMin believes Chama Brothers will be put out. Pres Vargas made no mention this. Our opinion in Emb FonMin correct re Chama Brothers being source trouble. Not clear why this shld be if they have acquired legal right. That however as we see it here is entirely internal Brazilian matter no concern ours. FonMin sees no question any quarter as to Brazilian govt's desire for US obtain this manganese nor any objection to US Steel as working agent.

No suggestion in Pres attitude nor in anything he said during interview that there anything but sympathetic understanding US, position Korean situation. He concerned mainly with what are polit and practical possibilities as he sees them for Brazilian action. His whole attitude was frank, friendly and interested in US. He seems preoccupied with two things: (1) econ development Brazil. He mentioned joint Brazilian US econ comm two or three times and said he extremely impatient for it get to work soonest. (2) Internal security country. Spread Commie propaganda and insidious activity its agents and leaders is increasing and causing him serious concern. He not satisfied with quality Brazilian police nor present measures to combat and contain Commie activity. Although he gave no impression being alarmed he apparently shares known concern of mil authorities re this situation.

JOHNSON

Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26[1]

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Director of the Office of Regional American Affairs (Burrows)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] August 3, 1951.[2]

Subject: Korean and Uniting for Peace Aid From Brazil

Participants: S—The Secretary
General Goes Monteiro, Chief of the General Staff of Brazilian Armed Forces

[1] Files of Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Edward G. Miller, Jr., for the years 1949–1953.

[2] Department of State files indicate that this conversation took place on August 2.

Mr. Mauricio Nabuco, Brazilian Ambassador
AR—Mr. Burrows

General Goes Monteiro presented his compliments and said that in connection with the business which brought him to Washington [3] he was making his first formal call at the Department of State. He handed me a letter [4] from the Brazilian Minister of Foreign Affairs, João Neves da Fontoura. I told General Goes Monteiro that on behalf of my Government I was happy to extend him a welcome to Washington.

General Goes Monteiro explained his mission as being in direct connection with his country's interest in and desire to comply with its United Nations commitments and said that he was here to discuss with the proper authorities of the UN and of the Unified Command not only Brazil's interest in compliance with Secretary General Trygve Lie's June 22 request for additional troops in Korea and the Uniting for Peace Resolution,[5] but also the best way in which Brazil might so strengthen her economic and military position as to make that help effective. I then mentioned to General Goes Monteiro my conversation with his Foreign Minister last April during the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of American States with reference to the possibility of Brazil making troops available to the Unified Command in Korea. I said that when I had spoken to Dr. Neves da Fontoura at that time the fighting war in Korea was in a phase of great activity, that there had been some change in the status of the Korean situation since then and that there was now some possibility (but only a possibility) of an armistice, but there was still a need for troops and would be a continuing need whether or not an armistice was actually signed.

General Goes Monteiro discussed in some detail the Brazilian desire from the beginning to cooperate with the UN forces in the Korean affair, but described the difficulties which his country had faced in making such cooperation effective in terms of the contribution of fighting forces by reference to Brazil's difficulties in transportation and communications facilities, as well as basic economic factors. He stressed in this the advantage which had been taken of these difficulties by the Communists and said that their propaganda had been a continuing factor which Brazil had been unable to ignore at any time. Now however, the General said, Brazil was ready to discuss with the UN and the Unified Command in Korea how best she could help, how

---

[3] Gen. Góes Monteiro was in the United States from late July to late October 1951.

[4] Not printed.

[5] For text, see Resolution 377 (V) of the General Assembly, November 30, 1950, in United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Fifth Session, Supplement No. 20 (A/1775), pp. 10–12. For documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 371 ff.

the obstacles still remaining in the path of effective Brazilian cooperation could best be overcome. He said that naturally in approaching this problem Brazil was anxious to talk first with her good friend and ally, the United States.

I responded by recalling that Foreign Minister Neves da Fontoura, in his conversation with me last April, had spoken of the difficulties presented by the domestic situation of Brazil and by Communist propaganda there and I said that the present situation in Korea, with the possibility for an armistice, has undoubtedly changed the circumstances in terms of Brazil's domestic situation and has also undoubtedly made action of this kind (the sending of troops) less difficult to accomplish in the face of opposing propaganda. I also said that when I spoke to Dr. Neves da Fontoura I had been able to call to his attention the possibility of aid in terms of equipment and training which could be given Brazilian troops for Korea. I said that this was still true and that as a matter of fact, legislation now pending may soon make possible military aid of another kind. I said that we were gratified by the terms of General Goes Monteiro's mission and that we would be only too happy to facilitate in any way the General's conversations and mission here.

General Goes Monteiro asked whom he should see and I suggested that he might first see Assistant Secretary Miller,[6] then General Bolté,[7] Chairman of the Inter-American Defense Board, and perhaps Mr. Cabot [8] of ISA. General Goes Monteiro said that he would follow my suggestion and would discuss his business with these gentlemen in all the detail necessary and desirable. I ended the conversation by speaking of my satisfaction that Brazil now has a great opportunity to continue the leadership in Latin America which it has always exercised and said that by a happy circumstance Brazil is in a position now to achieve at least three advantages by one action; she can increase her prestige, she can obtain special and very valuable training for some of her troops, and she has an opportunity to obtain some military equipment. I said that the United States would consider it a privilege to be able to cooperate with Brazil in achieving these ends.

---

[6] A memorandum of conversation between Mr. Miller, Gen. Góes Monteiro, and others, by Mr. Burrows, dated August 2, 1951, is filed under Department of State decimal file number 732.551/8–251.

[7] Lt. Gen. Charles L. Bolté; a memorandum of conversation between Gen. Bolté, Gen. Góes Monteiro, and others, by Lt. Daniel F. Resendes, dated August 6, 1951, is filed under decimal file number 732.5/8–951.

[8] Thomas D. Cabot, Director, International Security Affairs; a memorandum of conversation between Mr. Cabot, General Góes Monteiro, and others, by Mr. Kidder, dated August 13, 1951, is filed under decimal file number 732.00/8–1351.

832.2546/6–2251 : Airgram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Brazil

SECRET WASHINGTON, August 9, 1951.

A–87. Reference is made to Embassy's despatch 1932 of June 22, 1951,[1] and the Department's telegram No. 26 of July 6, 1951.[1] While regretting the delay thus entailed, it was felt that careful consideration was required for the suggestion contained in enclosure No. 1 of the cited despatch, that the US state precisely the kind of aid it is disposed to lend to Brazil in line with the commitments undertaken in the aide-mémoire of April 10.[2]

Generally, the US is prepared to consider any reasonable request directly related to assisting Brazil to meet its commitments. These involve primarily (1) the ability of Brazil to produce sufficient crude monazite to meet domestic requirements in Brazil and to ship to the US 2500 tons during each of the three years of the Agreement; (2) the ability of Brazil to process sufficient monazite to produce 2500 tons of rare earth chlorides annually during the three year period.

While the US Government is prepared to implement its commitments under paragraphs C and D of the aide-mémoire, it is difficult if not impossible for the US to indicate in any detail the nature of the aid it is prepared to give, since there is no information at hand to indicate what may be needed by Brazil to carry out the commitments it has undertaken in the aide-mémoire.

It is suggested, therefore, that the Embassy, utilizing personnel presently available, explore with appropriate Brazilian officials the question of required assistance in an effort to define the general areas in which help will be needed. If desirable, specific questions may be referred to the Department for appropriate handling. Where the situation requires it, consideration will be given to sending to Brazil a technician well qualified to deal with the particular problem presented.

It is suggested that the first point of attack on the problem in Brazil might well be the production of adequate quantities of the raw monazite, which will form the basis for the processing in Brazil and at the same time permit a start to be made on the shipments of monazite to the US. It may be added that the US Government is prepared now to enter into discussions with appropriate Brazilian authorities, looking to the prompt purchase by the US of all thorium residues which may be available in Brazil.

For Embassy's information only, while the US is prepared to carry out its obligation under the aide-mémoire to assist Brazil in expanding its monazite processing facilities, and to purchase annually for a period of three years, 2500 tons of rare earth chlorides produced in Brazil, some thought has been given to the possibility that in meeting this demand, Brazilian processing facilities may be built up above a level which could be economically sustained after the expiration of the US purchase commitment. If, as now seems likely, the US requirement for rare earths can in a matter of two years be met entirely from raw materials produced in the US, the Brazilian market for this product will be considerably diminished after the US purchase obligation expires. In this connection, if it seems helpful to the Brazilian authorities, the US would undoubtedly be prepared, while purchasing the raw monazite on schedule, to consider extending beyond the contemplated three years, the period during which it will purchase from Brazil the total of 7500 tons of rare earth chlorides now planned to be delivered within three years.

[1] Not printed.

[2] See the enclosure with Ambassador Johnson's note to Brazilian Foreign Minister Neves da Fontoura, June 11, 1951, p. 1201.

If, in its preliminary determination of the kind of assistance needed from the US, a loan appears likely, it would be of some significance to know whether such a loan would probably be made to or guaranteed by the Brazilian Government.[3]

ACHESON

[3] The substance of this airgram was incorporated into note No. 97, dated August 21, 1951, and handed to Minister Bueno do Prado on the same date by Mr. Mills at the Embassy in Brazil (Rio de Janeiro Embassy Files, Lot 61 F 30, Box 127, Folder 523.5). The Department of State files indicate that the Brazilian Government did not formally respond to this note.

832.00-TA/8-951

The United States Representative on the Inter-American Economic and Social Council (Bohan)[1] to the Officer in Charge of Brazilian Affairs (Kidder)

CONFIDENTIAL RIO DE JANEIRO, August 9, 1951.

DEAR RANDY: I am enclosing copy of a letter dated June 15, 1951, from Herbert E. Gaston, Chairman of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, to Mr. Truslow. I am sending you this copy, as you were not sure whether it was in the files in Washington, and also because it gives me a chance to give you a bit of background on a problem that may become quite serious.

You will recall that you felt that the bark of this letter was probably worse than its bite, and I am inclined to believe, from reading the files, that Mr. Truslow also felt this way about it. I cannot be as optimistic.

[1] Mr. Bohan had been appointed interim United States Commissioner on the Joint Brazil–United States Economic Development Commission after the death of the original Commissioner, Francis Adams Truslow, on July 8, 1951, and he served in that capacity until the appointment of J. Burke Knapp as Commissioner on September 28, 1951.

One of the principal reasons for my having become so frustrated that I asked for retirement at the tender age of fifty was the general attitude of the Export Import Bank vis-à-vis Mexico. As the Economic Counselor of the American Embassy in Mexico City, I was called upon to try to get for the United States practically eighty percent of what it wanted from Mexico, and yet the Embassy was most effectively short-circuited when it came to what Mexico wanted from the United States, i.e. credits from the Export-Import Bank.

As I read over Mr. Gaston's letter, I cannot help but be struck by the difference in the attitude he takes from that of the International Bank. I am very sure that the International Bank has not given the Joint Commission the power of veto. I am equally sure that the International Bank has a "deep and continuing interest in the welfare of Brazil and—concern that the prosperity of that country shall not be endangered by its entering prematurely into undertakings which may be more attractive than timely." In other words, my opinion is that the International Bank reserves the same rights that the Export-Import Bank does with this difference. Mr. Gaston takes the position that it is his bank and not the combined judgment of the United States Government and the Joint Commission that is to make policy; in other words, the Export-Import Bank is a government within a government.

You know that I have the kindest feelings towards Mr. Gaston, but I think that the Export-Import Bank has forgotten that it is only part of a whole and not the whole. I realize that the problem must be solved, not with a shillaly [shillelagh?] but with diplomacy, I certainly hope that matters can be worked out so that the overall policies of the United States towards the Joint Commission can be carried out by Mr. Knapp and that the prestige of the Commission will not be as adversely affected in Brazil as the American Embassy in Mexico City was affected by the lack of cooperation on the part of the Export-Import Bank.

Sincerely yours,

MERWIN L. BOHAN

[Enclosure]

WASHINGTON, June 15, 1951.

DEAR MR. TRUSLOW: If I thought an agreement formalizing relations between the Export-Import Bank and the U.S. Brazilian Commission to be necessary or advisable I should have several reservations to make to what you propose in your letter of June 8. But I don't see any real point to such an agreement. I am ignorant of the provisions of your agreement with the International Bank, nor do I know anything about the negotiations between that institution and the Brazilian Government which preceded that agreement. In any event the situations of the two institutions are not quite comparable since this Bank is an agency of the United States.

However, it is quite easy to outline what seems to be the reasonable course for this Bank to pursue, having in mind the existence of the Joint Commission and its general objectives as set forth in Section 410 of the Economic Cooperation Act of 1950.

In its operations in International Bank member countries this Bank will be guided by the advices of the National Advisory Council, which define generally the scope of this Bank and the International Bank and stipulate that neither Bank shall establish a monopoly of lending in any country. We should not feel ourselves warranted in subscribing to any understanding or agreement which would have the effect of modifying or evading the Council's action or the responsibilities of the Directors under the provisions of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 or any other legislation affecting the Bank.

We shall be happy, of course, to cooperate as fully as we can with the Commission under the limitations I have mentioned. We do not intend to keep any secrets from the Commission as to our operations in Brazil. We should expect to use what seems to us to be the normal channel of communications; that is, the State Department, but are disposed to take special steps to see that the State Department supplies to you all information which may be helpful, including summaries of any applications and action taken on them.

As I mentioned to you in our conversation at lunch the other day, this would include information on loan applications not eligible for International Bank financing because a National Government guaranty is not offered or is not found to be requisite. It would include also projects in which the United States has a special interest, such as strategic materials projects, as well as proposed exporter credits for machinery or materials where there is substantial participation by the supplier, and also supplemental credits for projects to which large commitments have already been made by this Bank.

We should welcome the views of the Commission on any of these matters, but we could not under any circumstances concede a veto power to the Commission on any proposed loan. We should expect that the Commission, where it has strong contrary views, would present them to the National Advisory Council directly or through the medium of the State Department. We shall ourselves be willing to consider such objections carefully and give great weight to them and if we are not convinced we should be willing ourselves to forward the Commission's objections to the National Advisory Council.

I make these observations because of our deep and continuing interest in the welfare of Brazil and our concern that the prosperity of that country shall not be endangered by its entering prematurely into undertakings which may be more attractive than timely. We cannot fail also to note that this Bank is the custodian of obligations to the United States to the extent of more than $96,000,000 out of credits to the amount of more than $203,000,000 extended for Brazilian development beginning in 1939.

In view of this record it would seem appropriate that we be supplied with information as to projects undertaken and contemplated through the advice of the Joint Commission and we should be grateful also for any new information the Commission may feel free to supply to us on Brazilian balance of payments and budget conditions and prospects.

One of the salient features of recent Brazilian economic history has been the long-continued dollar shortage, only very recently overcome, which caused officers of the Brazilian Government two years ago to discuss with us the prospects of an exchange loan to cover accumulated arrearages in dollar payments for merchandise, and we cannot ignore the fact that budget shortages continuing up to the present have seriously embarrassed at least one project toward which we had made large loan commitments in dollars.

We expect to continue our own studies of these matters to guide us in our Brazilian loan policy. But we should be grateful for any help that the Joint Commission feels warranted in extending to us.

Sincerely, HERBERT E. GASTON

Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26

The Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Commander in Chief, United Nations Command (Ridgway)

SECRET WASHINGTON, August 10, 1951.

DEAR MATT: I feel that I owe you some explanation for having caused General Bolté to telegraph you some time ago about the proposed Brazilian mission to Korea about which you have heard no more. All of us here have been disappointed in recent weeks as it has been increasingly apparent to us that the Brazilian Government is not going to take decisive action in this matter.

During the Foreign Ministers Conference which was held in Washington in March and April, Secretary Acheson and General Bolté had a very frank and apparently successful discussion with the Brazilian Foreign Minister, Neves da Fontoura, and his principal military advisers about the need of their sending a division to Korea. The Foreign Minister's response and that of his military advisers was apparently most favorable and our hopes were aroused that we would get some definite action from Brazil. Subsequently, the Foreign Minister broached to me his idea of a Brazilian mission to Korea along the lines which General Bolté telegraphed you about, the purpose of which was to pave the way, through arousing public opinion, for an effective military contribution by Brazil. The Foreign Minister was very pleased when we were able to notify him just before his return to Rio in May that SCAFE was agreeable to the idea of a mission. Immediately upon the Minister's arrival in Rio he began what seemed to us to be a determined campaign to bring about a prompt decision and he had a number of enthusiastic conversations with Ambassador Johnson. His efforts were apparently aided by the return of General Estillac Leal, the Brazilian War Minister, to Rio after a very successful official visit to the United States [1] who also seemed to favor in principle sending troops to Korea. At some point thereafter, for reasons unknown to us, the proposed mission to Korea ceased to be mentioned. Possibly the reason may have been that when the Foreign Minister had made some equivocal public statements about troops to Korea after his return from the Conference, I wired Ambassador Johnson to tell the Brazilians in no uncertain terms that they should not send the mission to Korea unless there was a bona fide intention in the first instance to send the troops. It did not seem to me wise to bother you with junketeers or to institute the precedent of sending missions as sort of trial balloons to test public sentiment.

In any event, instead of the mission to Korea we have your old friend General Goes Monteiro now visiting Washington for the alleged purpose of conducting discussions with the American military authorities as to Brazilian military cooperation, etc. The purpose of his trip is extremely vague and, although the General speaks in terms of Brazil's implementing its international commitments and arousing public opinion in support of this objective, he spent the greater part of his talks with General Bolté and me recently in rehashing the familiar Brazilian complaints against the United States. All of this could be a prelude simply to an eventual request for military equipment which, of course, would be very difficult to comply with so that there is grave danger that General Goes Monteiro will return from what appears to be an ill-advised venture with his hands empty, thus setting back rather than forward our chances of real military cooperation from Brazil.

I have wanted you to have the full story as to why you did not hear more about the proposed military mission to Korea. I doubt that you will hear about it again, at least for the time being. However, we will keep after the matter.

With warmest regards,

Sincerely yours, EDWARD G. MILLER, JR.

[1] Maj. Gen. Estillac Leal visited the United States in May; documents pertaining to his visit are in decimal file 033.3211.

732.5811/8–1751

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Brazilian Affairs (Kidder)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] August 17, 1951.

Subject: Discussion with General Goes Monteiro on His Mission to U.S.

Participants: Brazilians:
General Goes Monteiro, Chief of Staff of Armed Forces; Colonel Sardenberg,[1] Aide to General Goes Monteiro; Colonel Coelho [2]
Americans:
General Sibert,[3] Inter-American Defense Board; Mr. William Sanders, UNA; Mr. Kidder, OSA

This morning at 10 o'clock General Sibert and Messrs. Sanders and Kidder called on General Goes Monteiro at his home in Bethesda. The meeting had been arranged on our initiative. General Goes was assisted by the two Colonels listed above.

The first third of the conversation was of a general nature. General Goes reiterated some of the statements which he had made in earlier conversations during his visit and discussed his activities on the Political Defense Committee [4] in Montevideo, where he and Mr. Sanders were colleagues. General Sibert brought the conversation around to the business which we wished to discuss. He informed General Goes that we were fully authorized to discuss with the General matters which had brought him to the United States. He said that he would like to explain our position from the military point of view and that either Mr. Sanders or Mr. Kidder could discuss any political or economic aspects of matters relating to General Goes' mission.

Goes Monteiro produced a lengthy document, apparently his written instructions received from President Vargas. He read to us an 8-point resume of the instructions included in the body of the document. He is instructed as follows:

1. To make clear that Brazil's first priority is the securing of its internal stability. Until Brazil's internal security is assured, it would not be possible to send troops to Korea.

---

[1] Idalio Sardenberg.
[2] Lt. Col. Mario Perdigão Coelho, Brazilian Air Force.
[3] Brig. Gen. Edwin L. Sibert, Director of the Staff, Inter-American Defense Board.
[4] Reference is to the Emergency Advisory Committee for Political Defense, established by Resolution XVII of the Third Meeting of Consultation of the Foreign Ministers of the American Republics, which met at Rio de Janeiro, January 15–28, 1942; for text of the resolution, see Department of State Bulletin, February 7, 1942, p. 128. For documentation on the Third Meeting of Consultation, see Foreign Relations, 1942, vol. v, pp. 6 ff. For documentation on the Committee for Political Defense, see ibid., pp. 74 ff. and 2 ff.; and ibid., 1944, vol. VII, pp. 1 ff.

2. Brazil's second priority is its economic development. Brazil must develop itself industrially and problems of transportation and power must be solved. Solving of these problems is of direct interest to the United States as regards the supplying by Brazil of scarce strategic minerals.

3. This point in its first section merely amplified the need for development of transportation and power. A second section related to the need on the military side of the improvement of air and naval bases.

4. The General was to make clear that Brazilian assistance in Korea and in defense of the free world if a third world war should break out would depend upon the amount and speed of the economic and military assistance received from the United States. The greater the help received from the United States, the sooner Brazil could act. As of the moment, the Brazilian Government is unable to determine the date when it can carry out its obligations to the United Nations as that date will depend upon the speed of its preparations.

5. The General was to emphasize that failure to secure Brazil's internal situation (i.e., control Communism) and to build up its industrial strength would jeopardize not only Brazil but the security of the whole continent.

6. In case of war Brazil could, if given assistance as of now, defend itself and its coastline.

7. The General was to demand for Brazil the right to be charged with the full defense of its own coastline. (He expressed the personal view that if war should break out within a year Brazil, even with help, could not take responsibility for the defense of its coast and of lines of communication in the South Atlantic. This is particularly true because Brazil has no details as to the capacity of the enemy in, for example, submarine warfare. He believes that Soviet strength in submarines will be at least as great as that of Germany during the last war.)

8. The above points are to be stressed so as to show that President Vargas' primary interest is to guarantee the internal situation of the country. That is his first consideration which must be met before he can meet external obligations. Nevertheless, Brazil intends to meet its UN obligations and will bend every effort in that direction.

General Sibert thanked Goes Monteiro for his extreme frankness and for his clear exposition of his instructions. He said he would like to speak every bit as frankly in an effort to make clear the reaction both of the U.S. Government and of U.S. public opinion. He then outlined the military priorities assigned by Defense to the principal geographic areas of the world: (1) Korea; (2) Europe; (3) Far East and Southeast Asia; (4) Middle East; (5) Northern part of the Western Hemisphere; (6) Latin America: (a) Caribbean area and (b) the rest of Latin America. Goes Monteiro said he fully understood the reasons for the assignment of the priorities and, in fact, could himself make a good argument in support of them.

General Sibert then made the following points:

(1) We can do a great deal to assist Brazil through the provision of equipment to strengthen its potential for police action to guarantee its internal security.

(2) We cannot, however, provide the crucial weapons of modern war which are already in such short supply that we do not have enough to meet the needs of the first three categories under our priority setup.

(3) Brazilian participation in Korea would lift Brazil from category 6 to category 1.

(4) The United States hopes that Brazil will be able to provide troops, preferably a division, for Korea. We will be able to supply a division with everything that it needs and to provide technical assistance and training. We would provide transportation to pick the troops up at Brazilian ports and would provide fully for their care until they should be returned to Brazil. We would provide everything except replacement of personnel, which Brazil would have to organize in such a way that there would be a constant flow of replacements from Brazil to keep the division at full strength. We would provide for the return of the wounded and disabled to Brazil.

(5) Our help would be on the basis of a loan to be negotiated for future payment. Terms for that loan would have to be realistic.

(6) The $40,000,000 which we are asking from Congress for military aid to Latin America [5] is not in any way related to participation in Korea but only to continental defense. Whether or not $40,000,000 is granted is a matter which is entirely up to Congress. If we do receive that sum, it will be the only military aid at our disposal which is not related to Korea. The distribution of the $40,000,000 will be in the hands of the Defense Department. Even so, public opinion must influence the distribution of those funds. General Sibert added that he need not point out the effect that Brazilian participation in Korea would have on public opinion.

Following the above points, General Sibert said he would like to make a few general observations about public opinion. He pointed out that there are large segments of public opinion in the United States which are opposed to our continued involvment in Korea. The Korean war is becoming increasingly unpopular with those persons and another winter campaign will increase impatience. Participation by other nations would have a valuable psychological effect and as well would enable us to follow a system of rotation which would have a favorable effect on American public opinion. The General added that our resources are limited and that we are near the bottom of the barrel.

Immediately before adjourning the meeting, General Sibert said that an immediate offer of participation by Brazil would have an important psychological effect upon the United States, but he added that we would understand if the Brazilians felt it necessary to keep any preparations or agreements secret. General Goes Monteiro replied that, for various reasons which he had mentioned during his conversation, particularly the formation of favorable public opinion in Brazil, it would be necessary for any arrangements to be kept completely secret for not less than six months.

[5] For documentation pertaining to the military grant aid program for Latin America, see pp. 985 ff.

The meeting concluded with agreement to meet again at 10 o'clock on Monday, August 20.

732.5/8–2151 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Brazil

SECRET WASHINGTON, August 21, 1951.

191. At mtg Goes Monteiro, Gen Sibert, Sanders, and Kidder Aug 20,[1] Goes outlined Braz order mil priorities within which we might be able find solution problem Braz's desire meet UN commitments and send troops Korea. Order priorities is (1) internal security; (2) hemisphere defense; and (3) preparation mil unit meet other international obligations and be at disposal UN.

Goes proposed immed recommend to his Govt that it (1) approve Inter-Amer Defense Bd plan;[2] (2) consider revitalization JBUSMC and JBUS Defense Bd with functions expanded along lines those in effect during war; (3) consider joint mtg reps of two Comms, including reps State and FonOff, to work on details implementation any plans agreed upon; and (4) immed commence formation mil unit which cld fight anywhere outside continent. According to Goes, any publicity re formation mil unit wld necessarily picture it as for hemisphere defense but secret plan wld envisage use outside continent at disposal UN. Depending on conclusions reached at current talks, unit wld be up to one Div and cld include air and navy elements. Goes suggested Sibert meet with three mil Attaches Braz Emb and with his aide, Col Sardenberg, work out details. Meeting sched Aug 24.[3]

Sibert told Goes that US cld not equip proposed Braz mil unit unless Braz moved to top category our defense priority scheme; that to effect this we must have agreement (1) stating unit being prepared for Korea and (2) setting forth size of unit and time limit on period preparation. Goes replied agreement wld have to be secret, that unit wld be up to a Div, and preparation wld require minimum six months.

---

[1] A memorandum of this conversation, by Mr. Kidder, dated August 20, 1951, not printed, is filed under Department of State decimal file number 732.5811/8–2051.

[2] Apparent reference to the Inter-American Common Defense Scheme, approved by the Inter-American Defense Board, October 27, 1950, and by the Department of State, January 15, 1951; for information, see Secretary Marshall's letter to Secretary Acheson, December 16, 1950, Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, p. 679.

[3] During late August and September, General Sibert met frequently with Brazilian military representatives to draft a military understanding between the United States and Brazil, which would include provision for a Brazilian contribution of armed forces for service in Korea. Mr. Edward A. Jamison, Officer in Charge of Special Political Problems, Office of Regional American Affairs, attended these meetings. Documents pertaining to the negotiations are in several Department of State decimal files, principally 732.5, 732.5–MSP, 732.5811, and 795B.5.

He plans make further recommendations his Govt as soon as informal agreement reached Wash.

Balance 2½ hr talk devoted largely full, clear exposition by Goes of reasons for Braz's system priorities, including frank statement Vargas' need consolidate position. Goes states, although realizing problem is mil, and econ aid matters presently being centered in Jt Comm Rio, there are complementary remarks re econ aid he wishes make as econ factors basic; this is to subj third meeting Aug 22.

Urtels 257 and 263 [4] extremely useful.

ACHESON

[4] Neither printed.

732.5/8–2351 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Brazil

SECRET WASHINGTON, August 23, 1951—8 p. m.

203. In talks 22nd [1] Goes emphasized need Brazil develop econ and industrial strength as essential support mil program. Seemed satisfied however our explanation re activities Joint Comm Econ Development and its role helping obtain financing from lending institutions in US. Stated he is not thinking in terms another agreement econ assistance and any mil agreement wld not include econ and financial aspects. In spite this assurance there is possibility he will return later to questions econ or industrial development aid. He desires list advantages to accrue Brazil through mil participation Korea explaining he wants present concrete advantages to his Govt which needs all propaganda ammunition possible to use in influencing public opinion.

Goes also suggested possible secret agreement similar basically 1942 Agreement [2] but brought up to date.

Goes now leaving talks up to mil group mentioned in second para Deptel 191 Aug 21.[3] Brazil mil Attaché Col. Queiroz will be responsible Brazil side discussions. Goes holding himself available. Not planning return Brazil until Sept.

ACHESON

[1] A memorandum of this conversation between General Sibert, General Góes Monteiro, and others, by Mr. Kidder, dated August 22, 1951, is filed under decimal file number 732.5811/8–2251.

[2] For information on the negotiation of the political-military agreement between the United States and Brazil, which had been entered into by an exchange of notes dated May 23 and May 27, 1942, at Rio de Janeiro, see Stetson Conn and Byron Fairchild, The Framework of Hemisphere Defense (Washington, 1960), pp. 317–319, in the series United States Army in World War II: The Western Hemisphere.

[3] Supra.

398.14/8–2851 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Brazil

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, August 28, 1951—7 p. m.

217. For Bohan from Mann. Verbatim text message.

AIDE MEMOIRE

INTERNATL BANK AND BRAZ

1. The Management of the Bank has based its policy towards Braz on the three Fol fundamental considerations:

(a) The Joint Braz–US Econ Development Comm wld review the whole problem of Braz developmental needs and possibilities and pass upon the appropriateness and priority of the various projects making up that program.

(b) The Internatl Bank wld be prepared to participate in the financing of Braz development up to a very substantial amt over the next four or five years.

(c) The Bank's financing wld be related to the For exchange costs of those projects which were sponsored by the Joint Comm and approved by the Bank.

2. It has been the understanding of the Management of the Bank that the above approach was acceptable to the US Govt, to the Braz Govt and to the Joint Comm itself.

3. It was agreed between the Bank and the Joint Braz–US Comm that, at this stage, the only project which had the sponsorship of the Joint Comm was power development in the State of Rio Grande do Sul. A Bank Mission has just returned from Braz after studying the power situation in the State of Rio Grande do Sul and there is every reason to hope that it will be possible for the Bank to work out financing of the expansion of power development there.

4. As far back as Jan 1950 the Bank expressed the view that transportation was a high priority in Braz development needs. The Bank was asked, informally, by the Braz authorities if it wld be willing to sponsor a transportation survey. The Bank indicated its willingness, in principle, to consider such a survey, but after the appointment of the Joint Comm, it was understood that the Joint Comm, itself wld wish to review the need for such a survey and the form that it shld take.

5. It is not possible for the Bank to commit itself to a gen line of credit for railway and port development in Braz before the Bank has had the opportunity of considering properly worked out projects upon which it wld be proposed to use the proceeds of the line of credit. The Bank's policy with respect to gen lines of credit has been clearly explained to the Braz authorities and was apparently understood by them.

6. It is impossible for the Pres or the Vice Pres of the Bank to visit Braz at this time in view of the forthcoming Annual mtg of the Bank. It is Mr. Black's present intention, however, to visit Braz soonest after the Annual mtg. The Management wld, however, be glad to receive the MinFin in Wash either at the time of the Annual mtg, or earlier, if that is convenient to the Min, and to discuss with him all aspects of the Bank's relations with Braz.

7. If Bohan wld wish to come to Wash now, or at any time in the near future, for consultation with the Bank, the Management will be glad to receive him. [Mann.]

ACHESON

Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26

The Ambassador in Brazil (Johnson) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller)

CONFIDENTIAL
OFFICIAL—INFORMAL

RIO DE JANEIRO, August 31, 1951.

DEAR ED: Horacio Lafer [1] called to see me by special appointment late yesterday afternoon. He first informed me that he had definitely decided to attend the meeting of the International Monetary Fund which takes place early in September in Washington.[2] He will leave here on September 5 by air and will be in the United States about ten days. Accompanying him will be his wife, Dr. Eugenio Gudin, Walter Moreira Sales [3] and Valentim Boucas.[4] I do not yet know whether the wives of the three latter will be going along or not.

Lafer told me that he assumed I was familiar with the suggestion he had put up to Bohan and which was the subject of Bohan's telegram to you at Panama of August 26.[5] Lafer made it clear, and was quite frank about it, that he was appealing for my support for their request. He said that he was speaking on behalf of the President as well as himself in urging that the International Bank give serious consideration to an announcement which would earmark approximately $100,000,000 for Brazilian port development and for certain emergency purchases for the railroads. He said that they were not asking for the money, but for an announcement which could carry conviction to the Brazilian masses that the Joint Commission is doing something which will be of real and direct benefit to the people.

[1] Brazilian Minister of Finance.
[2] Reference is to the Sixth Annual Meeting of the Boards of Governors of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund held in Washington, September 10–14, 1951.
[3] Director, Currency and Credit Administration, Bank of Brazil.
[4] Valentim Fernandes Boucas, President, Brazilian Technical Council of Economics and Finance, and Financial Adviser to the Brazilian section, Joint Brazil–United States Economic Development Commission.
[5] Not printed.

The Vargas Administration is having difficulties. Communist infiltration throughout the country is on the increase, the cost of living is high, and the Administration by no means has Congress in its pocket. What Vargas would like to do is to make an announcement that with the cooperation of the United States and through the machinery of the Joint Commission his Administration intends to carry out plans for rectification of the bad conditions in Brazilian ports, and that they expect the work to be completed within three years. At the same time, it would be announced that $100,000,000 had been earmarked for this purpose and for the purpose of much-needed emergency equipment for the railroads, and that the Brazilian Government was making available an equivalent amount in cruzeiros for necessary financing of the project.

The question of cruzeiro financing has been a tough one for the Administration, as you know, and I gather from Lafer that it is his belief such an announcement along the lines of that outlined above would be of immense service to the Administration, and in particular to the Finance Ministry, in securing the necessary legislation and appropriations from Congress to implement the Brazilian side of the Joint Commission's work.

Lafer and Vargas do not expect the Bank actually to make money available except for completed and approved projects. What they want is an announcement that the Bank will earmark funds for the purposes described. The money, of course, will not be available until definite projects have been submitted to the Bank and received its approval. Such an announcement might also indirectly be very helpful in the Goes Monteiro talks now under way in Washington.

The statement telegraphed to Bohan from Tom Mann (Deptel 217, August 28, 7:00 p.m.) [6] contained an excellent statement from the International Bank regarding its policy toward Brazil. It is a reasonable statement and one with which Lafer would not take issue. He would admit that it is Brazil's fault that projects are not ready for immediate action by the Bank, but he and Vargas want help from us on an empirical basis and as a matter of high policy. Neves da Fontoura told me yesterday that he knew the Finance Minister was coming to see me, that he did not know in detail what he would take up, but that he knew in general terms, and that he fully supported the Finance Minister's request.

Incidentally Lafer mentioned that he thought Brazil should look to the Ex-Imbank for any foreign financing it requires for industrial development and to the International Bank for foreign financing requirements for public works.

I told Lafer that I understood his point of view and sympathized with him, and that he would have my support in principle. I told him, however, that the Bank had an established policy in these matters and that I could not express a valid opinion as to what the possibilities are. I told him that I was glad he was going to Washington, and that I knew you would be delighted to see him. He will certainly call on you at the first opportunity, and probably before he attempts to make any contacts with the Bank officials.

[6] Supra.

As I see it our overall relationship with Brazil needs a fillip in the very near future. You, of course, are only too aware of the persistent references on the part of Goes Monteiro to economic help. He is not, in my opinion, thinking primarily of returning from Washington with something in his pocket. Rather he is thinking of the job of salesmanship which Vargas, the Foreign Minister and the Chief of Staff will have on their hands if they take the risks, domestically, we wish them to take.

The help the Brazilian Administration and Military need so much might take many forms none of which would commit us, or the International Bank, to anything new. The Bank already has told the Brazilians it considers $300 millions a reasonable target figure for Brazilian borrowing for economic development purposes over the next five years. The Bank, therefore, might find it possible to say, publicly, that it considers $100 millions a reasonable figure for the Joint Commission to use as its target in preparing projects in the railway and port field for the consideration of the Bank, particularly if the Brazilian Government is ready to take action to provide adequate funds in cruzeiros to cover local costs of the projects which will be developed. The Department and the Bank must have many people who are very skillful in drafting who could evolve a statement, indicating that if Brazil does its part re cruzeiro financing, it can have every reason to expect that the dollar financing side of economically justified projects in the port and railway fields should not present any difficulties.

Under cover of Bohan's letter to Tom Mann of August 28, 1951,[7] there was transmitted a memorandum of the Gibbs and Hill railway technician contracted by TCA, Mr. H. D. Barber.[8] I cannot speak for the technical side, but his opinion, I believe, should carry weight.

If you agree and consider it practicable, please see if the experts of the Bank cannot think up some sort of statement which they find they could make and have it ready to show to Finance Minister Lafer when he arrives.

I know your difficulties are great, and I do not know whether it is possible for the Bank to find some formula not too inconsistent with their policy which would help these people out. I sincerely hope that some way can be found. They need our help and support now, and if

---

[7] Not printed.

[8] H. Dale Barber, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Railroads, Joint Brazil–United States Economic Development Commission.

we can give it I am convinced it will be deeply appreciated by Vargas and Lafer and Neves Fontoura, and will not be forgotten. I am also confident that it would strengthen the hand of the Government in dealing with left-wing groups and their anti-American tools who are scattered through the Administration.

Sincerely, HERSCHEL JOHNSON

Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26

The Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Ambassador in Brazil (Johnson)

SECRET WASHINGTON, September 14, 1951.

DEAR HERSCHEL: I have 20 minutes in which to dictate a report giving you the highlights of Lafer's visit which will be signed by my secretary after she transcribes it. I am off for a brief trip to Venezuela to attend the National Petroleum Convention [1] for four days and will be back in my office on Thursday morning, the 20th.

Oakley Brooks [2] has undoubtedly filled you in on many of the details. In my opinion, Lafer's visit was well-timed and highly successful. He, Boucas and Moreira Salles appeared to be immensely pleased with the outcome of the trip. Even though they have obtained merely reaffirmations of what they previously had, the willingness of the Banks to go along with the public statement [3] about the financing of the foreign exchange costs of the transportation program is a definite step forward. It was very good to have Brooks here, and especially his presence in Washington the week before Lafer's arrival permitted us to lay the groundwork with key people such as Black, Martin and Thorp, as well as with Secretary Snyder through Martin.

It was extremely fortunate that Burke Knapp arrived here last Monday in time to play a decisive part in clearing the financing statement with both Banks. The almost unique situation which he enjoys in having the trust of Black and Garner [4] on the one hand and being favorably known to Thorp, Martin, Gaston, etc., on the other enabled him to do what few, if any other, people could have done. The Brazilians were tremendously impressed by his ability to jump right into the breach and he has already made a notable contribution in his future task. I cannot stress too strongly how much I myself have been im-

---

[1] The Venezuelan National Petroleum Convention met at Caracas, September 8–18, 1951.

[2] Banking Adviser to the United States section, Joint Brazil–United States Commission for Economic Development.

[3] For the text of this statement, which was dated September 14 and released to the press by Minister Lafer upon his return to Rio de Janeiro, see Department of State Bulletin, October 8, 1951, pp. 581–582.

[4] Robert L. Garner, Vice President of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

pressed by Knapp this week. I had been getting increasingly disturbed by a tendency on the part of a number of people in Rio to underestimate Knapp. I believe that his opportunity to work with Lafer and Boucas here has been most constructive. I do not intend in saying this to detract in the slightest to Merwin Bohan's tremendous job in holding the fort. He has certainly won in a short time a permanent place in the hearts of the Brazilians.

In addition to the financing problem, Lafer raised two other points:

1) Lafer dragged out again the old idea about a bilateral supply agreement which had been kicked around during the Foreign Ministers Conference ad nauseum and finally buried, I had thought, for good with the formation of the Joint Emergency Group on Scarce Materials. I explained to Lafer in detail why such an agreement was out of the question and he readily agreed indicating that he was really only going through the motions.

[Here follows a personal reference.]

The Minister asked me to take him off the hook with a simple letter [5] which I drafted up in consultation with him and had signed today by the Secretary.

2) Lafer also raised the old chestnut about our activities in ECA (more Campos, no doubt). He again indicated that he was going through the motions and that he simply wanted to be gotten off the hook. As of this writing I believe we have satisfied him with a memorandum [5] about TCA and ECA activities in underdeveloped areas other than Latin America which I have transmitted to him. I have told him that he could make public use of both this letter and the one from Secretary Acheson. My secretary will forward under separate cover copies of all three documents as soon as they are all in final form.

In addition we have discussed a number of other things at random with Lafer. We have talked to him about specific supply problems, including sulphur, and have put Boucas in touch with Courand. He has talked with Black about the caustic soda plant at Cabo Frio. We have explained to him our difficulties with the Treasury with regard to a double taxation treaty and he was to have discussed this with Secretary Snyder today. I have urged that, despite our inability to sign the type of tax treaty which Brazil wants, it would be in Brazil's own interest to sign a treaty of friendship, commerce and economic development. He expressed agreement. I have talked to him about petroleum and have given him a copy of an excellent speech made by Secretary Chapman [6] on Monday at the Petroleum Convention in Venezuela to which I am going tonight. I think the fact that I will go to Venezuela just for the convention has impressed him.

In the meantime we are continuing our conversations with General Goes Monteiro and I will ask Ed Jamison to send you an interim report next week. Last Monday, Lafer's first day in Washington, General Goes Monteiro gave a luncheon for General Marshall. Before the luncheon he took me aside and said that his success in getting Brazil to go along with us on a program of military cooperation depended upon the success of Lafer's negotiations. I told him not to worry about Lafer's negotiations and my prediction has come true. Now we will see whether General Goes Monteiro will buckle down. Recently the conversations have been making much more sense and I am hopeful that the General will go back with something concrete in his pocket. Lafer is going to check with the General before he leaves Washington and will advise Randy [7] of his impressions.

---

[5] Not printed.

[6] Oscar L. Chapman, Secretary of the Interior.

Throughout his visit Lafer has been considerate of our position, reasonable in every way and a thoroughly satisfactory and effective person with whom to deal. His success here like that of Joao Neves—but more so in this case since Neves was handicapped by deafness—shows that if Brazil will send people of good will and energy who will apply themselves to the problem at hand and take our problems into account, they will get what they want in contrast to those whose approach is to browbeat us and spew forth their queixis about things that happened years ago. Incidentally, Lafer has not at any time called upon the Brazilian Embassy here for any assistance.

[Here follow personal references.]

The foregoing is a hasty outline of recent events but you will find Oakley Brooks' oral report most interesting, I am sure. Incidentally, I am delighted that Oakley is in this picture and am certain that he will be a tower of strength on the Commission,

With kindest regards,

Sincerely yours, EDWARD G. MILLER, JR.

[7] Randolph A. Kidder.

732.5/8–2751

The Deputy Chief of Staff for Plans, Department of the Army (Bolté), to the Chief of the Joint Staff, Brazilian Armed Forces (Góes Monteiro)

SECRET WASHINGTON, 27 September, 1951.

DEAR GENERAL GÓES: I am gratified to learn from General Sibert that considerable progress has been made toward a firm agreement which will assure the closer cooperation between our respective countries both in hemisphere defense [1] and in support of the United Nations' action in Korea.

The current attitude of the United States with respect to these two subjects is reflected in the memoranda which are attached. I recognize that Brazil may wish to offer some additional suggestions and similarly, after a more detailed study, my Government may wish to propose further suggestions or clarifications.

[1] For documentation concerning United States policy with respect to hemisphere defense, see pp. 985 ff.

I understand that, if changes are desired by either Government, we are in agreement that these will be considered in Washington or in Rio de Janeiro by representatives to be designated by the two of us. After any such changes have been made, the documents can be put in final form for approval by the Governments.

I am happy that your visit has been so fruitful. It has been a privilege for me and the officers who have participated in the negotiations to have worked with you and your representatives. I wish you a pleasant journey home as well as continued progress in regaining your health.

Sincerely, CHARLES L. BOLTÉ

[Enclosure 1]

DRAFT

MILITARY ASSISTANCE TO THE UNITED NATIONS

ARTICLE I

a. Brazil undertakes to form, and upon approval by the Brazilian Congress, to offer to the Unified Command an infantry division for employment as part of the United Nations forces now serving in Korea. (Approval for employment in Korea is one of the basic assumptions of this memorandum.)

b. This division will be organized generally along the lines of a United States infantry division and will be twenty percent overstrength in personnel.

c. The special combat training of this division will be initiated without delay with the objective of having it prepared for overseas movement six months thereafter.

d. Upon the dispatch overseas of this Brazilian expeditionary force, Brazil will provide trained personnel replacements for this force at a rate to be determined by experience which for planning purposes is estimated at ten percent per month.

e. Such training equipment as may be furnished by the United States for the preparation of the expeditionary force will generally be retained in Brazil on a loan basis for purposes of training personnel replacements and will be returned to United States control when no longer needed in connection with the Korean operation.

ARTICLE II

a. Immediately after the acceptance by the Unified Command of the Brazilian offer set forth above, Brazil will undertake to provide a list by item of training equipment necessary for the prompt and proper pre-combat training of the division referred to in Article I, above. This list will be based upon the maximum use being made of equipment now on hand in Brazil. The United States will provide such additional items of training equipment as are available. This additional equipment may be limited in some items to the barest essentials.

b. The United States will furnish the technical assistance required for the said pre-combat training of this division in terms of quotas for students in United States Army schools and in terms of instructors.

c. Upon the completion of the training of this Brazilian expeditionary division, the United States, in cooperation with Brazil, will transport said division from Brazil to the theater of war indicated in I. a and c above.

d. During the stay of said division in the theater of war, the United States will furnish the same logistic support to said division as it does to one of its own divisions, except for certain mutually agreed activities such as pay of personnel, supply of distinctive uniforms, etc.

e. The United States undertakes to return the personnel of said division to Brazil when the military posture of United Nations' forces in Korea permits. The disposition of equipment will be determined at the time of redeployment.

f. The Brazilian expeditionary force will proceed overseas using United States equipment then available to the maximum extent of its capabilities. Brazil will provide a list by item of deficiencies needed to complete a full division Table of Equipment. The United States will furnish the items contained in the deficiency list out of then existing stocks in the theater of war so that the Brazilian division will be equipped on the same scale and under the same standards used for the supply of United States comparable units.

g. Brazil agrees to reimburse the United States for assistance extended in II. a, b, c, d, e, and f, above. Terms of reimbursement to be negotiated in the future. The principles applicable to such reimbursement will be consistent with those used in negotiations with other nations receiving logistical support for combat forces in Korea.

[Enclosure 2]

DRAFT

BRAZIL–UNITED STATES MILITARY COOPERATION

ARTICLE I

The U.S. and Brazil reaffirm their intent to honor their obligations to each other (as well as to other American States) under the Inter-

American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance of Rio de Janeiro of 1947 and as members of the Organization of American States.

ARTICLE II

It is understood that the defense of Brazil should be the responsibility of that country but that in case of aggression, before Brazilian rearmament is complete, the assistance of the U.S. may be required. Such assistance will preferably be in terms of arms and equipment for Brazilian units.

ARTICLE III

Provided the Mutual Security Act of 1951 is approved to include authorization of grant military aid for Latin America, and appropriations for this purpose are made, and further provided that Brazil enters into a bilateral agreement for defense of the hemisphere as required by that Act, the U.S. will assist Brazil in her development of a defense rearmament program consistent with hemisphere defense responsibilities assumed by Brazil. As a matter of policy, funds to assist the rearmament of Brazil will be included in amounts sought from Congress provided the world situation continues to justify this action.

The objective of this rearmament program will be to provide Brazil with the means necessary to discharge the responsibilities delineated in a later military agreement between the two governments to be negotiated in conformity with the objectives of the General Military Plan for the Defense of the American Continent, drawn up by the Staff of the Inter-American Defense Board. Such agreement will be prepared for presentation to the two governments by the Joint Brazil–U.S. Defense Commission.

ARTICLE IV

a. Brazil undertakes to cooperate to the maximum degree possible in the defense of the inter-American maritime routes in case of hostile attack.

b. Brazil undertakes to cooperate by making available an increased production in Brazil of raw, semi-finished, and finished material needed by the two contracting powers in furtherance of a common defense effort.

c. In the event of a general war, the United States shall do all it can to grant Brazil access to a reasonable quota of the fuels and lubricants required by the latter's war economy.

ARTICLE V

The U.S. will be favorably disposed to see the establishment in Brazil of a munitions and armament industry sufficient to support a level of military preparations adequate for Brazil's defense and international responsibilities. To that end the U.S. will assist with such development by granting appropriate export licenses to a degree consistent with its other obligations and consulting on technical assistance. The U.S. will sympathetically consider the placing of orders with such an industry provided in general that no excess capacity exists in the U.S. for the items in question.

ARTICLE VI

The U.S. will be favorably disposed to see the establishment in Brazil of aircraft and naval construction and repair facilities appropriate to Brazil's air and naval forces. To this end the U.S. will consult on the matter of technical aid and grant export licenses consistent with her other obligations.

ARTICLE VII

a. The improvement of air and naval basing facilities in Brazil required for the joint use of Brazil and the U.S., shall be carried out by Brazil. Operation of such bases shall be by Brazilian units under Brazilian command but with, where necessary, U.S. technical assistance.

b. The mutually agreed construction of air and naval basing facilities required for U.S. use shall be subject to negotiation.

ARTICLE VIII

The two governments concerned undertake to coordinate the projects described in V. and VI. above with the work of the Joint Brazil–U.S. Economic Development Commission.

732.56/10–1151

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Brazil

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, October 11, 1951.

No. 41

The Secretary of State desires to inform the Mission, for its guidance and records, that the second installment amounting to $500,000, due under the terms of Supplement I to the Brazilian Lend-Lease Settlement Arrangement of April 15, 1948,[1] which was signed April 19, 1950,[2] has been fully paid in the following manner:

March 15, 1951	$209, 115. 41	from refund credits, accrued on interim arms program contracts, transferred to lease-lend account.

[1] For text, see Foreign Relations, 1948, vol. IX, pp. 383–388.

[2] For information on the supplementary agreement, which applied to certain contingent lend-lease accounts, see editorial note printed in ibid., 1950, vol. II, p. 759.

October 2, 1951	1, 526. 95	—ditto—
October 2, 1951	289, 357. 64	by check from Brazilian Treasury Delegation in New York on the Chase National Bank of New York.

After this payment, the balance due under this portion of Brazil's lend-lease settlement schedule is $1,000,000 payable in two equal installments on or before September 30 of 1952 and 1953.

Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26

The Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Ambassador in Brazil (Johnson)[1]

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, October 23, 1951.

OFFICIAL BUSINESS—INFORMAL

DEAR HERSCHEL: I have delayed replying to your thoughtful and extremely helpful letter of September 21[2] pending the conclusion of the visit of General Goes Monteiro. Before commenting on the letter specifically, I should like to make some general comments on the visit.

General Goes Monteiro left on the 15th for New York to consult with Muñiz. He seemed reasonably satisfied with his visit although I think he may have been somewhat disappointed that he did not receive comments from Rio on the draft agreement which General Bolte gave him and that he won't know the reaction in Rio to this proposal until he gets back there.

I have to confess to you that I certainly misjudged General Goes Monteiro on the basis of my first conversation with him, after which I telegraphed you so frantically. Having then informed you that the General seemed to have lost some of his mental capacity, I must now say that he lost it just like a fox. He is a cagy and deliberate man who knows just what he wants and what his bargaining leeway is. He came up here under very difficult circumstances since he was, in fact, the sacrificial offering in lieu of the late-lamented mission to Korea. He also came up into a situation in Washington where our military leaders are being pulled from all directions with requests for military equipment of which we are terribly short. Furthermore, he was negotiating against a background in his own country where the situation is none too solid in terms of the government's ability to gain approval of a real contribution in Korea. Finally, the General must have felt a let-down in dealing in these negotiations with people of the rank of myself and lower in the Department of State and with a brigadier [1] All of the deleted portions of this letter contain personal references, except as indicated in bracketed note, p. 1230.

[2] Not printed.

general in Defense, whereas when he had come up before World War 2 he had lunched alone with FDR twice. . . .

With all of these handicaps, General Goes Monteiro did extremely well and I have the feeling that he is going back in a relatively happy frame of mind. . . . I am convinced that Goes Monteiro wants to send a division to Korea and that he is going to go back to Brazil and make a fight. The Pentagon did a good job of sticking to its guns on this point and I have the impression that General Goes overruled some of his own military advisers up here. . . . I also believe, from everything that I have seen during the visits of Lafer and Goes—both of whom talked to me with complete frankness—that Neves da Fontoura, Lafer and Goes consider themselves a team which constitutes the vanguard of anti-Russian and pro-U.S. sentiment in Brazil. Both Lafer and Goes spoke about each other in terms of the highest admiration and both spoke in the same sense about Neves. It is extremely fortunate, I believe, that all three have been up here since the Vargas regime went in and that all three have returned apparently well satisfied. When Randy and I called on Goes last Saturday, he spoke with complete frankness about the communist menace in Brazil and the extent to which communist activities paralyze action on the part of the Brazilian Government. He referred over and over again to the need of the administration to consolidate itself internally and of the difficulties presented by the fact that there are 14 political parties represented in the Chamber of Deputies and 7 in the Senate. He spoke time and again about the Clube Militar problem, and on Saturday stated flatly that he had to go back to Brazil to prevail upon Vargas to remove Estillac Leal.

. . . . . .

To return to your letter of September 21. I appreciate your having written in such detail and keeping us posted. In the discussions with the General we have concentrated on the primary objective of obtaining as soon as possible a Brazilian offer of participation with an infantry division in Korea. This is the fundamental reason why we have felt that the present discussions should not be extended to cover more ground than necessary. [Here follows discussion, which was not declassified for publication, concerning possible revision of the 1942 military agreement between Brazil and the United States.]

You will by now have received a copy of my letter of October 12 [3] in reply to General Bolte on the question of expanding the activities of the JBUSMC and the JBUSDC and the establishment of a Joint Brazil–United States Defense Board. You state on page two of your letter that you know little of the activities of the JBUSDC in Washington. In point of fact the duties of that group have been practically

[3] Not printed.

nil. Under the proposal made to me by General Bolte the Defense Commission would have a job to do.

The proposal for a Joint Defense Board stems from the successful experience that Defense has had with similar boards involving Canada and Mexico. It has been suggested that the Defense Board would meet quarterly, meetings to alternate between the United States and Brazil. General Bolte and General Walsh have both emphasized their desire to have participation and close cooperation from State. They would like similar participation apparently on the Military Commission and the Defense Commission. The suggestion for participation on the Military Commission is a little ludicrous in view of your information that the Defense people up here have failed totally to keep their own people on the Military Commission in Rio informed of any of the pending developments, including the Goes Monteiro discussions. I am glad that you have been able to keep them up to date.

With kindest regards,

Sincerely yours, EDWARD G. MILLER, JR.

Under Secretary's Meetings, Lot 53 D 250 [1]

Notes of the Under Secretary's Meeting, Department of State, 9:30 a. m., October 31, 1951 [2]

SECRET

UM N–414

[Here follow a list of those present (20) and discussion of matters unrelated to Brazil.]

Joint U.S.–Brazil Economic Commission

9. Mr. Miller reviewed the difficulty in the appointment of a man to work on the Joint U.S.–Brazil Economic Commission and how Ambassador Bohan had quickly come to our rescue as its interim head. He emphasized that Brazil is especially adapted to this new type of commission technique.

10. Ambassador Bohan stated that he could be neither proud nor apologetic of the three-month work, because a great amount of work remains to be done. However, the Commission is organized and the many subsections have been planned and are beginning their work. Ambassador Bohan found Brazil a great nation of huge potential. Two primary problems face Brazil, and those are distribution and fuel. The

[1] Master file of records of meetings, documents, summaries, and agenda of the Under Secretary's meetings for the years 1949–1952, as maintained and retired by the Executive Secretariat of the Department of State.

[2] The Under Secretary's meetings convened at the Department of State on a weekly basis; they were attended by the Deputy Under Secretaries of State, Assistant Secretaries of State, and office directors. Under Secretary of State James E. Webb presided at the meetings.

Economic Commission cannot help on the problem of distribution. The Commission will focus its main activity on the problem of distribution, since the Commission does not want to waste its efforts in dealing with too many matters. One of the main problems is improvement of the railroad system. Basically, the railroads need general rehabilitation, other than just physical. The main thing required is managerial rehabilitation, the solution of which involves many political headaches. Ambassador Bohan stated that unless the Commission could set up a good railroad management corporation, no amount of money would accomplish the results required to improve the railroad situation in Brazil. One great danger on this project involves requirements and a high priority is needed to get the necessary steel brake equipment, track-laying equipment, etc. Another important problem is improvement of ports. Operations and dredging are the main problems in connection with this project.

11. With respect to agriculture, Ambassador Bohan reported that Brazil has a large agricultural extension program, and that the Commission must act as a catalyst in bringing the local, state and federal parts of the government together. Some of the main problems in connection with agriculture are storage and credit. Agriculture lags far behind industrial development, and Brazil badly needs a better balance between these two. The problem is to get the government to use the resources at hand.

12. In reviewing the need of Brazil for requirements for railroad equipment, Mr. Thorp stated that the Department has machinery for handling these requirements, and that we must be assured of a good case before we attempt to bring it outside the Department. He felt that the steel situation would be better about a year from now. Ambassador Bohan pointed out that the steel would be needed during the first quarter of next year.

13. Ambassador Bohan explained that Mr. Truslow's successor on the joint Commission will be Mr. Knapp, and Mr. Miller added that Ambassador Bohan had agreed to backstop Mr. Knapp. Mr. Miller added that he is pleased to report that there has been a meeting of the minds with respect to the organizational location of the Point IV country director in our mission in Brazil. The Point IV director will be under Mr. Knapp.

14. Mr. Webb asked about the pressure in Brazil to build industrial facilities at such a pace that it is not in balance with agricultural facilities. Ambassador Bohan confirmed this and stated that there is a psychological problem in Brazil and elsewhere in that the government and the people feel that building a strong industrial machine means success. He hoped to have some success in improving the agricultural situation in Brazil by utilizing the existing organizations in that area. He noted that it may be necessary to set up "servicios" [3] in Brazil.

15. When questioned on the duration of this commission experiment, Ambassador Bohan noted that this is a new technique and one which involves action and not merely study. The Commission should be of temporary use only and should not last much more than 18 to 24 months. It is hoped that the Commission will aid in the establishment of permanent institutions which will take over what the Commission has done. Two important institutions which must be established are a railroad authority and an investment finance corporations, the latter working on power, industry and mineral development.

[3] For documentation on the use of "servicios" in Latin America, see pp. 1038 ff.

832.00–TA/11–951

The United States Representative on the Inter-American Economic and Social Council (Bohan) to the United States Commissioner, Joint Brazil–United States Economic Development Commission (Knapp)

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, November 9, 1951.

Subject: Relations with Export-Import Bank

DEAR BURKE: Leroy Stinebower [1] and I spent two hours with Mr. Gaston and his associates on November 5. I gave them a brief résumé of the Commission's work to date and, the atmosphere being propitious, then launched into a plea for close and understanding teamwork between the Bank and the Joint Commission. I told Mr. Gaston that the last thing in the world we wanted was a delegation of the Bank's authority as a clearcut separation of authority was the main protection of the Commission against political and other pressures in Brazil. On the other hand, I felt that if we both knew currently what the other was doing and thinking that our jobs would be much simplified and the objectives of American foreign policy more effectively implemented.

I used the Vale do Rio Doce as a concrete example and pointed out that we had only received a squib through Leroy that the Bank was considering an operation with them and yet we knew that there had been considerable correspondence back and forth ever since early in August. I pointed out that we can both work more efficiently if we were kept currently informed of the steps being taken by the Bank and if we also kept them currently informed of anything we might do in this field.

Mr. Gaston seemed to agree with these observations and he also came pretty close to accepting the idea that when technicians of the Bank go to Brazil that they should work side by side with our own people. I took the liberty of stating that you would be delighted to have an Export-Import Bank official come down and spend some time with the Commission, getting to know the people connected with it and the problems confronting it. Bernie Bell broke in at this point to observe that the Bank had wanted to do this sometime ago but that its suggestion in this regard had been frowned upon. Mr. Gaston would not quite commit himself but I feel that if you cared to write a letter to Leroy showing enthusiasm for the idea that Mr. Gaston would probably approve of someone going down in the near future. Personally, I think that we should not let any grass grow under our feet because I think you can take the Export-Import Bank into camp if we can get some of its representatives down there and treat them in the same manner that we have dealt with Sidney Wheelock and other IBRD representatives.

[1] Director, Office of Financial and Development Policy.

Another thing that I think would be most helpful would be a letter from you to Leroy giving, in considerable detail, the work that Hassilev[2] has done with respect to the Minas power project, his work on the Electric Bond and Share program, and Dale Barber's conversations with the Vale do Rio Doce people. I really think it would go a long way towards getting the Bank to open up and work more closely with us.

Not to throw any flowers, but merely to keep you advised of the situation up here, I feel that your conversations with Mr. Gaston were more successful than you believe. On at least two occasions he mentioned you in a manner which indicated that he had revised some of his opinions regarding your dishonorable IBRD background, and I think that you should go out of your way to see that projects in which you know his Bank is interested are reported upon currently even though the information per se is not of any particular importance. Just the mere fact that he is hearing from you regarding such projects will go a long way towards getting him to respond to our overtures.

Assistant Secretary Thorp is giving a lot of thought to the question of what projects go to what banks and he has some ideas that may help to smooth out the rough path ahead of us. I won't go into this matter but I did want you to know that it was being given attention at the highest level.

Sincerely yours,

MERWIN L. BOHAN

---

[2] Leonide Hassilev, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Power Development, United States Section, Joint Brazil–United States Economic Development Commission.

NAC Files, Lot 60 D 137 [1]

Memorandum by the Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund for the United States (Southard) to the Secretary of the National Advisory Council (Glendinning)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] December 11, 1951.

Document No. 1232

Subject: Possible Brazilian Drawing on the Fund

1. Mr. Octavio Paranagua, Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund for Brazil, has twice discussed with me (most recently on December 10, 1951) the possibility of a Brazilian drawing on the Fund primarily to cover the cost of unanticipated dollar wheat purchases made necessary by the failure of Argentine supplies.

2. Brazil's dollar imports have been running at a very high rate—those from the United States alone reportedly averaging about $70 million per month. This high level of imports has apparently been largely due to a deliberate relaxation of restrictions on the assumption that availabilities of dollar goods might be much less should war break out or United States defense preparations be intensified, although inflation in Brazil has undoubtedly played a role. Whatever the cause of the increased imports, the result has been to run down Brazilian reserves from a high of about $220 million at the end of March (Government and bank dollar balances) to about $92 million at the end of October (preliminary figure) and no doubt even less at the end of November. From Mr. Paranagua, and from other sources, it is understood that some measures are being taken to reintroduce restraints on imports. But they will presumably not operate without a lag.

3. In addition to the drain on reserves due to increased imports, Brazil faces two repurchase obligations (one as of April 30, 1950 and the other as of April 30, 1951) which Mr. Paranagua believes will total the entire $65 million which Brazil has drawn on the Fund. With respect to these two obligations, Mr. Paranagua intends to propose that the first one, which he thinks will run between $15 million and $20 million, be made very promptly, without waiting for all of the procedural delays. It might be completed before the end of this month. As to the second one, he proposes that Brazil will wait out the permitted delays which can run as much as 60 days.

4. Mr. Paranagua states that after the first repurchase has been completed—i.e., around the first of the year—Brazil wishes to draw on the Fund approximately $15 million per month for three months to cover the estimated monthly cost of the additional wheat imports. Meantime, he hopes that Brazil will take adequate measures to reverse the current drain on its dollar reserves.

[1] Master file of the documents of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems (NAC) for the years 1945–1958, as maintained by the Bureau of Economic Affairs in the Department of State and preserved as item 70 of Federal Records Center Accession 71 A 6682.

5. On the whole, I am inclined to the view that the United States should be prepared to support such drawings by Brazil, on the understanding that Brazil would give a firm repurchase commitment. Mr. Paranagua has assured me that Brazil will give such a commitment if he recommends it, and that he is prepared to recommend it in terms of a maximum of three years, with the hope that Brazil would repurchase in less than that time. I should appreciate having the advice of the NAC Staff on this matter as promptly as possible.[2]

[2] On January 23, 1952, at meeting No. 188, the National Advisory Council unanimously approved Action No. 522, which reads as follows:

"The National Advisory Council offers no objection to consideration by the U.S. Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund of a Brazilian request for a Fund drawing of $37.5 million, to cover current wheat requirements, with the understanding that Brazil will assume a firm commitment to repurchase previous drawings during June, July and August, 1952, and that Brazil will undertake to repay half the proposed drawing in 12 months and the balance in 18 months." (NAC Files, Lot 60 D 137, Box 362)

Editorial Note

On December 21, 1951, Secretary Acheson wrote to Secretary of Defense Lovett suggesting that in view of the probable forthcoming discussions with Brazil aimed at reaching a bilateral military assistance agreement in conformity with the provisions of the Mutual Security Act of 1951 (65 Stat. 373), it would be appropriate for the Departments of Defense and State to review the 1942 military agreement for possible revision, inasmuch as Brazil might raise that question during the discussions. There was enclosed with the Secretary's letter a detailed "Study on United States–Brazil Political-Military Relations", prepared in the Department of State. The letter and its enclosure, which were not declassified in time for publication, are filed under Department of State decimal number 732.5–MSP/12–2151.

In telegram 812, from Rio de Janeiro, dated December 27, 1951, Ambassador Johnson informed the Secretary that the Brazilian Government agreed to participate in conversations looking toward a bilateral military assistance agreement. (732.5–MSP/12–2751) The conversations began on January 2, 1952, without any agreement having been reached between the Departments of State and Defense concerning revision of the 1942 military agreement.

832.2546/12–2751 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Brazil (Johnson) to the Secretary of State

SECRET RIO DE JANEIRO, December 27, 1951—7 p. m.

813. For Assistant Secretary Miller. Mytel 811, Dec 26, 6 p. m.[1] FonMin told me this afternoon with great apparent satisfaction of action taken Dec 22 by Natl Security Council in authorizing negots with US Govt agreements re supply strategic materials. He said slowness with which action in particular (1) monazite, (2) manganese, and (3) uranium,[2] had progressed had been matter of great concern to him. Now he has been authorized by Pres to carry these negots to conclusion, he optimistic they may be entirely cleared up before end Jan. Final agreements will have be approved by Pres, but will not have again go through Security Council and bureaucratic machinery. Monazite he believes is capable particularly early action. He has already set up comite in FonOff to iron out remaining difficulties re urucum managanese contract and expects Gov Matto Grosso in Rio early next week. It probably state Matto Grosso's desire for larger royalties will be made at expense Chama brothers. Difficulties purely of internal order and FonMin stated no objection had been voiced in any quarter to US obtaining supplies manganese required. Prices all these commodities he indicated wld be matter for negot.

At mtg this afternoon FonMin again reiterated it was desire Pres Vargas himself and admin in gen to "go along" with US in all these questions. He deplored ponderous nature Braz bureaucracy and said he felt SAT's clearance for action by Security Council wld greatly facilitate progress. At Security Council mtg MinFin Lafer spoke in support his proposal.

JOHNSON

[1] Not printed.

[2] For documentation relating to the efforts of the United States to negotiate an agreement with Brazil concerning uranium, see vol. I, pp. 685 ff.

CHILE

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND CHILE[1]

Editorial Note

On January 16, 1951, the United States and Chile signed at Santiago the following Point IV technical assistance agreements:

1) General Agreement for Technical Cooperation, entered into force July 27, 1951. The agreement was transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 806, from Santiago, February 14, 1951, not printed (825.00–TA/2–1451). For text, see United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), volume 3, page 390, or Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 2403. For a press release dated January 16, see the Department of State Bulletin, February 5, 1951, page 219.

2) Technical Agreement for a Cooperative Program of Agriculture and Livestock, entered into force January 16, 1951. Minor editorial changes in the text required the re-signing of the agreement; it was transmitted to the Department of State also under cover of despatch 806. For text, see 3 UST (pt. 2) 2630, or TIAS No. 2430.

3) Technical Agreement for a Cooperative Program in Education, which never entered into effect. Certain Catholic groups and political elements in Chile expressed vigorous opposition to the agreement, alleging in part that it would interfere with Chile's sovereign rights. By a note dated April 3, 1951, delivered to the Chilean Ministry of Foreign Affairs on April 4, the United States abrogated the agreement in the manner specified therein. A copy of the note was transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 1039, from Santiago, April 4, 1951, not printed (825.00–TA/4–451).

---

[1] Continued from Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 783 ff.

Miller Files, Lot 53 D 261[1]

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs (Thorp)[2]

[WASHINGTON,] January 30, 1951.

Problem: To forestall a sharp price rise in Chilean copper and prevent diversion of Chilean copper for non-defense purposes.

Discussion:

The Chilean Government is presently confronted with a rising tide of opposition extremely critical of the Government's failure to obtain higher prices for copper and for its failure to carry out development programs long promised by the Government to increase production and raise standards of living in Chile. The attack on the Chilean Government is by extreme nationalists, leftwingers and communist sympathizers and has a strong anti-U.S. bias. In addition there has been a build up of considerable anti-U.S. feeling in conservative and middle class circles based primarily on the handling of the copper question. Most Chileans view the reimposition of the copper tax[3] as an unfriendly act on the part of the U.S. which had no economic justification. At the present time the position of the government coalition is precarious and it may be overthrown for failure to halt inflation and secure a higher price for copper which would help balance the budget and aid industrial development.

The Government of Chile has cooperated fully with the U.S. and with American copper companies in holding the price of copper at 24½ cents in spite of a general rise in other raw material prices during the last year. The Chilean Government has also cooperated in preventing copper from being diverted to countries behind the Iron Curtain. Increased pressure has developed during the last six months to allow Chilean copper to be sold to neighboring countries and certain western European companies at prices ranging from 30 to 40 cents per pound. With the price freeze now in effect in the U.S. the pressure to divert copper to markets paying higher prices will increase. Pressure to raise the ceiling price in the U.S. will also develop, although the Chilean Government has indicated that it appreciates the desire of U.S. to hold the line.

A fairly obvious way to stop diversion of Chilean copper and to obtain maximum quantities for the U.S. is to raise the price and enter

---

[1] Files of Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Edward G. Miller, Jr., for the years 1949–1953.

[2] Source text is an unsigned copy; original not found in Department of State files.

[3] Reference is to the United States excise tax on imported copper. After having been suspended since 1947, the tax was reimposed on July 1, 1950. For further information, see the Policy Statement for Chile, infra.

into centralized government purchasing. There are, however, at least two convincing arguments against such action.

1. The cost of raising the price one cent per pound on Chilean copper imported into the U.S. is approximately eight million dollars per year. If the price on copper produced in the U.S. is also raised one cent per pound, the additional cost is approximately eighteen million dollars per year.

2. A modest rise in the price of copper (one to three cents per pound) will not of itself offset the attacks on the Chilean Government and hence will not facilitate all out cooperation with the U.S. which is essential in time of emergency.

The national interest of the U.S. requires that the price of Chilean copper be held to 24½ cents per pound or very close to it, and of greater importance, requires that every pound of copper that can be produced in Chile be utilized in the war effort. This means all out cooperation on the part of the Chilean Government to (1) facilitate production without interruption from strikes or disorders; (2) ensure full use of transportation facilities, port facilities and shipping space; (3) take security measures to protect copper production and transportation facilities from sabotage; (4) institute internal regulations to guarantee the most efficient use of copper by Chilean companies and to prevent diversions to the Soviet Area or to other countries for nonessential purposes.

In order to facilitate all out cooperation between Chile and the U.S. it is necessary to consider the overall problem facing the Chilean Government. This involves a careful analysis of the scope and objectives of the development program which the Chilean Government has been and is engaged upon. Briefly stated, the Chilean Government plans to break the country's previous dependence on two export commodities, nitrate and copper, whose fluctuating prices tended to produce either a feast or famine and both of these extremes led toward inflation. This dependence is to be broken by a diversification of industrial production and a growth in commercial transactions. One outstanding product of this new program is the recent opening of the steel mill in Huachipato whose entire estimated production for 1951 (over 200,000 tons) has already been sold. Another example designed to decrease dependence on imported materials, was the establishment of a staple fibre plant near San Antonio to help build up a Chilean textile industry.

Although the Chileans have made considerable progress in the past decade they are still far from a balanced economy and feel that it is essential for political and social reasons that they drive ahead with their program of economic development. If the Government were to accept a freeze on the price of copper without the right to divert considerable quantities to higher priced markets and at the same time abandon its development program it would probably lose effective support very quickly. This program cannot be accomplished without the investment or loan of foreign capital. While the Chileans have had great success with the Eximbank, the essential projects before the IBRD for almost four years were not approved because of the Bank's feeling that Chile had failed to combat inflation effectively. The Chileans' reply is that they are painfully aware of the problem of inflation and have taken such measures as were considered possible but that the most effective solution is to be found in increased production and that loans are needed in order to achieve effective results rapidly. They also point out that Chile has not defaulted on debts, and because of continued prospects for dollar income, their balance of payments position will be relatively strong. Chile also feels and has stated that the development program is geared to dovetail as closely as possible with the U.S. defense mobilization program.

The attached annex[4] contains a detailed description of six of the projects included in the development program for which the Chilean Government requires financial assistance from outside sources. In addition to these projects the Chilean Government has carried on extensive development projects in the fields of agriculture, fishing and industry which have been financed without recourse to financial assistance from outside sources.

The development program for which Chile requires outside financial assistance includes the following major projects:

1. Expansion of Steel Mill: Purchase and installation of additional equipment, primarily a 750 ton Mixer, will eliminate production bottlenecks and enormously increase the capacity of the mill with an investment of about eight million dollars and 253,000,000 Chilean pesos.

2. Modernization of Coal Mines: To avoid huge coal deficits by 1956, Chile must start now to increase production in the Schwager and Lota coal mines and to seek additional deposits. Cost—about eleven million dollars and 1,068,000,000 Chilean pesos.

3. Cellulose and Paper Plants: Chile now imports cellulose and newsprint though it has excellent forest resources. It can set up a cellulose mill (Kraft pulp plant) and a newsprint paper mill which will make the country self-sufficient at a cost of eleven million dollars and 400,000,000 Chilean pesos.

4. Irrigation: Two particular irrigation projects are under study which would increase the total available arable land and improve other land now under cultivation. The Rio Elquf and Nilahue Valley projects can be begun with about three million dollars and eventually may require a total of thirteen million dollars, with peso costs of more than 600,000,000.

5. Power: Two new generating units at Los Cipreses and La Isla, 30,000 KW each, can be installed for approximately three and one-half million dollars and 234 million pesos. A power plant at Lake Calafquen can be built for the Temuco–Valdivia area, with ultimate capacity of 72,000 KW at a cost of U.S. $4.2 million and 144,000,000 pesos. A power house with a 10,000 KVA generator can be built on the

[4] Not found with the source text.

Mostazal River for $1,050,000 U.S. and 76,000,000 Chilean pesos. Total cost for all projects U.S. $8,750,000 and 454,000,000 Chilean pesos.

6. Nitrates: A request will probably be received within the next few months for a dollar loan to the nitrate industry to modernize production methods in the province of Tarapacá. This will enable Chile to increase production while decreasing costs, thus putting Chilean natural nitrates in a more favorable position to compete with synthetics in the world market. Estimated size of the loan, approximately fifteen million dolllars, but this figure is only approximate. The Chilean industries are now conducting lengthy, detailed studies of their needs.

Recommendations:

It is recommended that the problem of holding the price on Chilean copper and preventing its diversion, in excess of the national needs of Chile, be discussed as an integral part of Chile's overall development problems.

Specifically it is recommended that:

1. The Eximbank give active consideration to (a) the extension of credit to Chile to cover the steel mill project,[5] the cellulose project and the coal mines project. These projects contemplate a loan totalling approximately thirty million dollars. (b) A "line of credit" of thirty million dollars be granted to Chile by the Eximbank under which she can present over a period of several years specific loan requests for hydroelectric projects, nitrate projects and irrigation and agricultural production projects.

2. Immediate consideration be given to arrangements fo a long term (five to eight years) contract to purchase Chilean copper at 24½ cents per pound and prevent diversion to the Soviet Area and for purposes not essential to the defense effort.

3. Action be continued to have the two cent duty on imported copper removed.

[5] See the editorial note, p. 1284.

611.25/2–2751

Policy Statement Prepared in the Department of State

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] February 27, 1951.

CHILE

A. OBJECTIVES

The basic US objective in Chile, as in the rest of Latin America, is to obtain Chile's full and effective cooperation in our quest for freedom and international security. Chile's effective cooperation depends upon the maintenance of reasonable governmental stability and the continuance of Chile's present strong adherence to democratic principles. It is the objective of U.S. Government policy to strengthen the idea both in the Chilean Government and among the Chilean people that the interests of the United States and Chile are fundamentally the same. We also strive to strengthen Chile's existing disposition towards friendship for the United States and to curb the influence of political forces inimical to our broad international policies.

In view of its demonstrated willingness to cooperate, we must strive to make Chile able to carry out its role in the defense of the Hemisphere, and to further our own defense effort by insuring the availability on an increasing scale of Chile's strategic natural resources, especially its copper.

It is also our objective to promote the economic development of the country and to foster conditions favorable to existing American interests as well as to the investment of additional capital.

B. POLICIES

Friendly US connections have been established since the beginning of Chilean independence. At the present time, good relations with the United States are a predominant tenet in Chilean foreign affairs. Nevertheless, we must never lose sight of the political value of an "anti-US" or "anti-Yankee-imperialist" stand in Latin America, nor of the desire of small countries to be assertive about their sovereignty occasionally.

Partly due to its geographical location, Chile has developed a certain independence in foreign relations which reflects the strong individuality of the national character. The constitution of 1925 calls for a "presidential system" of government. In practice, however, there is a multiplicity of parties and a tendency to follow the pattern, uncommon in Latin America, of parliamentary government similar to that of France. In the absence of majority parties in Congress, the executive governs with the support of usually unstable coalitions which form and reform, necessitating frequent cabinet changes.

The Administration's stand against Communism.

The present Administration in Chile has been zealous in its efforts to combat Communism. President Gabriel González Videla, early in his administration, broke with the Communists who had joined with his own powerful Radical Party and other left-of-center groups to support his election in 1946. After serious Communist-inspired strikes and disorders, he sponsored the outlawing of the Communist Party in Chile. In 1948, despite strong opposition from several non-Communist parties, the Government succeeded in enacting the "Defense of Democracy" law which drove the Communist Party underground, disenfranchised its members, and forbade their active participation in labor unions. As a result, direct Communist agitation has been considerably reduced and Communist influence, in general, has been weakened.

Nevertheless, the Communists have had some success in infiltrating other political parties and in regaining their influence in labor movements. They will attempt to exploit the prevailing labor dissatisfaction, strikes, and labor-exerted pressure on the government, which remain perennial features of the Chilean political scene.

The US has in no way inspired or instigated the Chilean Government's anti-Communist program. While we do not necessarily advocate the outlawing of the Communist Party as the most effective way of combating Communism, we have expressed a view to the Chileans that every government should meet this threat in the manner it deems most appropriate.

Anti-American Factors.

The fact that a large segment of Chile's industrial labor is employed by US-owned enterprises adds a degree of anti-US flavor to the ill will normally encountered as the cause or product of labor-management disputes. To counteract this, it is our policy in everyday diplomatic intercourse and through the Information and Education Program, to seek to dispel those latent complexes concerning "Yankee Imperialism" which are readily exploited by extremists of both Right and Left, as well as by the personal ambition of individual politicians.

Chile has two right-wing groups which occasionally become the subject of embarrassment to the government. Until the end of World War II the Nazi movement was very strong in Chile among the large German population of the South, in schools, military circles, the press and even the government. While this group is now dormant it may arise again some day as a very strong anti-American influence. There is also a right-wing pro-Perón movement which seems to be gaining supporters, although Chile is traditionally opposed to Argentina. A group of Congressmen paid homage to Perón during the celebration which took place in Buenos Aires in 1950. This group was censured by the Congress upon its return home and the leader of the unauthorized delegation, the President of the Chamber of Deputies, tendered his resignation as a result. However, General Carlos Ibañez,[1] former dictator-president of Chile, selected Buenos Aires to announce his candidacy for the presidency in the election of 1952, apparently with the backing of the Peróns.

In spite of the existence of the groups mentioned above, anti-US feeling is now at a low level. In the past year the US has taken specific steps to foster this friendly feeling through the invitation extended to President Gonzalez Videla for his highly successful visit to the United States,[2] by maintaining a sympathetic attitude on loans, when economically sound, by supporting Chile's efforts to purchase a tanker in the US, and by our successful support of Chile's efforts to secure a place on the UN Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea [3] and to have the 1951 ECOSOC meeting take place in Santiago.[4]

[1] Carlos Ibañez del Campo, President of Chile, 1927–1931.

[2] For information on President Gabriel González Videla's visit to the United States during April and May 1950, and his discussions with President Truman, see editorial note printed in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, p. 785.

Chilean Support for U.S. Global Policies.

We have encouraged Chile to participate actively in the United Nations and the Organization of American States. We consult with its representatives in formulating the tactics of our UN program and we urge its support for resolutions that we consider important. By voting our way, as it usually does, Chile contributes tangibly to the furtherance of our global foreign policy.

Hemisphere Defense.

For economic reasons the armed forces of Chile are small, but it is our policy to assist their development and training so that in time of war or emergency they can cooperate in hemispheric defense [5] by carrying out their appropriate duties. While the details are now being worked out by the Inter-American Defense Board, it is likely that Chile will be requested to maintain order and security, insure continued shipment of vital raw materials, prevent damage to vital ports and other installations, and offer some protection for the Straits of Magellan.

At the present time the US has an Air Mission in Santiago and a Naval Mission in Valparaiso [6] which seek to prepare the Chilean armed forces so that they can be integrated readily into joint plans for hemispheric defense. These Missions have been well received by the Chileans and the equipment and training of the armed forces are now oriented toward the US. Chile is anxious to modernize its military establishment, but its efforts in this direction have been hampered by a shortage of dollars for expenditures of this nature and by the scarcity of certain types of material in the United States, the preferred source of military supply. The Chilean Government is now negotiating to

---

[3] For documentation on the establishment and work of the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. VII, pp. 731 ff.

[4] Reference is to the Twelfth Session of the United Nations Economic and Social Council, which met at Santiago, February 20–March 21, 1951.

[5] For documentation on the policy of the United States with respect to hemisphere defense and related matters, see pp. 985 ff.

[6] On February 15, 1951, the United States and Chile had signed at Washington agreements providing for the establishment of a United States advisory air force mission in Santiago and for an advisory naval mission in Valparaiso; both agreements entered into force on February 15. For text of the Air Force Mission Agreement, see 2 UST 522, or TIAS No. 2201; for text of the Naval Mission Agreement, see 2 UST 535, or TIAS No. 2202. For an announcement concerning the agreements, see the Department of State Bulletin, March 26, 1951, p. 502.

procure two light cruisers from the US [7] under the Military [Mutual] Defense Assistance Act [8] as recently amended. These vessels, to be purchased at relatively low price, would considerably strengthen the Chilean fleet and the government has already set aside the dollars necessary to make payment. In 1950 Chile liquidated her outstanding indebtedness under the Lend-Lease agreement by a lump-sum payment of 15,000,000 pesos ($541,964).[9]

US-Chilean Financial Ties.

The Chilean economy is often said to be dependent on the US. This is so because of: 1) the considerable US private investments in Chilean mineral resources and industry; 2) the importance of the US market for Chilean exports; 3) Chile's need for US manufactures; and 4) the dependence of Chile's development program on loans granted or supported by the US Government. Consequently, economic matters are all important in Chile's relations with us and they help us to achieve political aims.

Copper.

The most important single factor in our economic relations with the country is the Chilean copper industry, the production of which is exported largely to the United States. Roughly 95% of Chilean output is produced by wholly-owned subsidiaries of two U.S. firms (Anaconda and Kennecott).

These companies have long been subject to heavy and complex taxation. When there is a fiscal deficit, Chile tends to look to copper as a source of additional revenue. One form of taxation is application to the companies of the special exchange rate of 19.37 pesos per dollar for that portion of foreign exchange proceeds from copper exports which must be returned to Chile as representing local cost of production whereas all other exports are accorded rates ranging from 49 up to the free rate of about 70 pesos per dollar. Another tax, payable in dollars, consists of 50 percent on that portion of the copper price in excess of 13½ cents per pound. Not only are these taxes important for the governmental budget but they also are of great significance in the country's annual foreign exchange budget.

The current acute copper shortage gives the Chilean Government an opportunity to seek increased revenues by additional taxes or by controlling the sale of copper in order to obtain increased profits from higher prices. Ministerial decrees already are required for exportation

---

[7] Chile had taken possession of the cruisers on January 25, 1951 (725.5621/1–2551). For documentation on the negotiations leading to the sale of the cruisers, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, pp. 599 ff.

[8] For text of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act (Public Law 329), approved October 6, 1949, see 63 Stat. 714; for text of the act's amendment (Public Law 621), approved July 26, 1950, see 64 Stat. 373.

[9] For information on Chile's liquidation of its Lend-Lease indebtedness, see editorial note printed in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, p. 783.

of copper sold on any other basis than US dollars and very little additional action by the government would be needed to impose complete control on sales. Recently the copper companies were approached by a Chilean government official to turn over 20 percent of production "voluntarily" for sale by a Chilean government corporation. We hope that the copper companies will be able to avoid this by direct negotiation with the Chilean Government without the intervention of the US.[10] Although it is our policy not to interfere in such matters unless national interests are threatened, the US Government may have to take a hand in this case if there is any likelihood that copper will thus be diverted from normal channels or if any action were taken by the Chilean Government which would result in reduced shipments to the US or other damage to our combined economic and defense efforts. Chile may try to use copper as a lever to obtain higher quotas of short materials such as cotton, the importation of which from the US is essential to the Chilean textile industry.

U.S. Excise Tax on Copper.

Of equal concern to the US-owned companies and the Chilean Government is the US excise tax on imported copper which was originally 4 cents per pound and was reduced by the GATT[11] in 1949 to 2 cents. The suspension of this tax since 1947 expired on July 1, 1950. Even if Congress provides for a further temporary suspension,[12] the presence of the tax in our legislation is a source of recurring uneasiness for Chile as a possible cause for eventual curtailment of copper exports with consequent decline in employment, dollar resources and tax revenues. Since this type of curtailment occurred after World War II, the psychological factor in Chile's attitude toward this tax is considerable. Imposition of the tax by the US is regarded as an unfriendly act and is constantly exploited by Communists and extremists of the right as a manifestation of US imperialistic selfishness.

The Executive branch of the US Government advocates continuation of the suspension of the tax, primarily because our domestic production of copper is insufficient for our needs. This position is also based on our [10] In late January 1951, Mr. William H. Hoover, President of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, and Mr. Charles R. Cox, President of Kennecott Copper Corporation, met with President González Videla and other Chilean officials at Santiago to discuss current problems in the copper industry. These discussions proved inconclusive and were terminated on January 31. Shortly thereafter, the Chilean President announced that since most of the copper questions which concerned the companies and the government of Chile required a decision by the United States Government, he would name a commission to enter into conversations with United States representatives at Washington. Subsequently, he appointed Chilean Ambassador Félix Nieto del Río to head the so-called Chilean Copper Commission. Pertinent documents are in decimal file 825.2542.

[11] For text of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), concluded at Geneva, October 30, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, January 1, 1948, see TIAS No. 1700, or 61 Stat. (pts. 5 and 6).

[12] H.R. 3336 provided for another suspension of the tax; it was approved as Public Law 38, May 22, 1951. For text, see 65 Stat. 44.

awareness of the political significance of the tax to US relations with Chile.

Sodium Nitrate.

Second only to the copper industry as a source of wealth is the older traditional mainstay and, also, the white elephant of Chilean economy, the production and exportation of natural sodium nitrate found in seemingly unlimited quantities in the desert of the North. This industry employs twice as many persons as the copper industry but provides a considerably smaller portion of foreign exchange and tax revenues. Over 65 percent of the output is owned by US interests (Guggenheim) but the marketing of nitrates is a monopoly of an agency of the Chilean Government which receives 25 percent of the profits.

This industry has long struggled with the competition of synthetic ammonia production which is again expanding all over the world. Notwithstanding the tremendous increase in world consumption of fertilizers during the last war, the Chilean product has maintained only its volume of sales, rather than its proportionate share of the US market and Chile now sells only 7½ percent of the world's nitrates whereas it once sold as much as 65 percent of the total supply.

During the war the United States built and operated Army ordnance plants for the production of nitrogen. The Chilean Government was apprehensive that operation of these plants or their disposal at low prices after the war would constitute a subsidy for the US nitrogen industry to the detriment of Chile's nitrate trade. In 1945, by an exchange of notes[13] at the time of the Chapultepec conference,[14] we promised Chile that the US Government would not continue to operate these plants beyond the period necessitated by the consequences of the war and further agreed to consult with Chile regarding the terms of disposal of these plants to private industry.[15] Most of the ordnance plants have now been transferred to private industry under sale or lease arrangements and in every case, the Chilean Government has claimed that the disposal price was far below the commercial value of the plant and created unfair competition. On the other hand, US officials, in accordance with our policy in this respect, have repeatedly asserted that the terms of disposal of these plants were based on fair and reasonable commercial standards.

---

[13] The United States note, dated March 5, 1945, contains the agreement reached; it is printed in Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. IX, p. 795.

[14] Reference is to the Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace (Chapultepec Conference), held at Mexico City, February 21–March 8, 1945. For documentation on the conference, see ibid., pp. 1 ff.

[15] In the fall of 1951, the Chilean Government was provided an opportunity to comment on the proposed lease worked out between the Department of the Army and the Mathieson Chemical Corporation for reactivation of the Morgantown Ordnance Works prior to the execution of the lease. Pertinent documents are in decimal file 825.2564.

The Chilean Government has also expressed its concern at US financing through ECA, of synthetic ammonia production in ERP countries and at reports of possible US financing of plants in other countries, such as Spain. It is our policy to reply to the Chileans that these projects are undertaken on the basis of their own intrinsic economic soundness after full consideration of all factors involved in the world fertilizer trade including our interest in the welfare of the Chilean industry.

The nitrate producers, with the backing of the government, have taken preliminary steps toward seeking a loan in the US to modernize production methods in the northernmost province of Tarapacá. They hope to introduce the Guggenheim system now in use in Antofagasta and to make other improvements in production methods which will virtually eliminate the antiquated and inhuman Shanks method. It is US policy to encourage this type of modernization which lowers production costs, improves living standards and puts Chile in a better competitive position in the world market.

Economic Diversification Program.

While agriculture is still the economic activity of a large part of the working population of Chile, the economic well-being of the country depends mostly upon the export of copper and nitrate. To counteract this, the Government has pursued intensive efforts at industrialization and economic diversification during the past decade, and has had considerable success as exemplified by the establishment of several new industries, including a steel mill and a producing oil field. It is our policy to foster industrialization and the use of modern machinery in Chile, while at the same time urging balanced production, stabilization of the currency and caution to avoid over-extension.

The industrial development of Chile is being promoted largely through the Corporación de Fomento de la Producción, a government owned corporation established in 1939, with wide autonomous powers. The Corporation was created entirely upon Chilean initiative, originally to direct rehabilitation following the earthquake of 1939. It has since expanded its program to include general economic development.

The largest project thus far undertaken by Fomento is the $88,000,000 Huachipato steel mill at Concepción, financed by a $48 million Export-Import Bank credit for the purchase of equipment in the US.[16] Production is based on domestic supplies of iron ore, limestone and domestic and imported US coking coal. It is our policy to support Chile in this significant industrial achievement and we also point to this particular project as an outstanding example of the benefits derived from US financial aid for economic development.

[16] This credit was authorized on September 11, 1945.

Through the Fomento Corporation, Chile has developed its recently discovered oil deposits in Tierra del Fuego, and has become an oil producing country this year. Storage facilities and a 45-mile pipe line from the fields to a sheltered harbor have been built and the production of crude (over 2,000 barrels per day) is at present exported to Uruguay. The field and all facilities are owned and exploited by a Chilean Government entity, Empresa Nacional de Petróleo. The first steps are being taken for the construction of a stabilization plant at the oil fields. Plans for a refinery near Valparaiso are still far from realization. Since the Chilean Government is committed to a policy of public ownership of oil fields and installations, participation by the large oil companies in the construction of a refinery is precluded. Chile has not formally requested a loan for the projected construction of an oil refinery. Should other Latin American countries receive loans for oil development purposes, Chile will probably request similar assistance. Under our present policy financial assistance in the form of Export-Import Bank loans for petroleum development is precluded. Since 1942, marketing of petroleum products in Chile has been regulated by an agreement among the Esso Standard Oil Company, Shell-Mex and the Cia de Petroleos de Chile (Copec). This agreement, which is implemented under government auspices, terminates at the end of 1951 but is automatically extendable for an additional three years unless one of the parties signifies a desire for its termination. This step was taken by the Esso Standard Oil Co. at the end of 1950 and is currently under negotiation looking toward a return to competitive marketing of petroleum products. This government, in accordance with its foreign economic policy, supports efforts to obtain the elimination of this agreement and in general encourages the development of competitive petroleum marketing.

Through another subsidiary, ENDESA (Empresa Nacional de Electricidad), Fomento has expanded power output, with Export-Import Bank and IBRD financial assistance, by constructing hydroelectric installations to serve the Concepción area where the steel mill is located and where Fomento plans to establish nearly 20 industrial plants, including factories for agricultural machinery; building materials and chemicals. A new 30,000 kilowatt plant owned by a subsidiary of the American and Foreign Power Company has further increased the electric power of the Santiago–Valparaiso region and it is likely that rationing in this area will have ended completely by 1951.

The Chilean development plans also include an irrigation project, establishment of a wood pulp and newsprint mill, modernization of lumber enterprises, further expansion of electric power, modernization of the principal coal mines and further improvement of the railroads. Realization of these plans is dependent on the ability of the Chilean Government and private firms to obtain sizeable foreign financing.

Chile's capacity to borrow in the US is now the subject of serious scrutiny because of the continued inflationary policies of the government and its failure to take corrective action leading to economic stabilization.

Growing Government Controls in the Economy.

In the last thorough reshuffle of the cabinet in March 1950, the Administration shifted from conservative economic policies to the more programmatic of the erstwhile opposition parties. The Government at present is committed to advanced social policies which make it prompt to respond to the clamors for wage increases, and reluctant to adopt effective anti-inflationary measures. Consequently, the demand for commodities, of which several basic ones are imported, continues to rise, while the industrialization program has as yet been unable to furnish a commensurate increase in national productivity adequate to satisfy either consumption at home or to meet trade imbalances abroad.

U.S. Concern Over Chile's Financial Policies.

We intend to take every opportunity, within the framework of our policy of non-interference, to impress on Chilean representatives our belief in the desirability of effective measures aimed at achieving economic stability and sound financial practices. Chilean officials fervently hope that the US Government will not adopt a pessimistic view of further expansion of the Chilean economy and look to the Department of State for initial support in procuring financial assistance. It is our present policy to support Chilean applications for sound development projects but to dispel undue optimism with respect to further financial assistance in the absence of effective measures for stabilization and caution to avoid overexpansion.

Since the early 19th century, foreign loans and investments, first European then American, have played a very important part in the Chilean economy. This inflow of foreign capital reached a peak during 1925–29, but in 1929–32 Chile suffered a sharper relative decline in foreign trade than any other country in the world and with the resulting inability to meet service payments, the external debt went into default. Chile sought to escape from this predicament partly by establishing exchange control in 1931. By 1950 this control system had become one of the most complicated in the world and tends to make the government a hidden partner in all international business transactions.

Foreign enterprises with investments in Chile are permitted to transfer earnings and capital, but only on the basis of an agreement with the exchange-control authority, which specifies the rate at which capital may be amortized and the exchange rate or rates applicable to this particular industry. The combination of an inflationary economy and exchange control has permitted Chile to count on exchange profits as a source of government revenue but at the same time it has lessened Chile's chances of obtaining further financial commitments from abroad. The instability of the Chilean financial system is also aggravated by the fact that the budget and the economy in general are highly dependent on the export of its minerals which are subject to wide variations in price in the world market. The exchange rate is also manipulated by the government to increase or decrease the profits of a given industry or may be used as a form of subsidy. For example, in a recent effort to provide full employment in the northern provinces the President had the exchange rate for the nitrate industry raised from an average of less than 43 to 49.23 pesos to the dollar and thus provided greater profits and a better competitive position for the industry.

It is US policy to encourage Chile's adherence to its commitments of January 1948 to the International Monetary Fund, which encompass internal anti-inflationary fiscal policies and eventual simplification of the present multiple exchange-rate system in favor of a single rate at a realistic level.[17] The IMF conducted a financial study of Chile and submitted written recommendations to the government designed to halt the inflation and strengthen the financial structure. The US lends general support to these recommendations. Chile was one of the Geneva signatories to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and has participated in the second and third rounds of tariff negotiations held at Annecy and Torquay, respectively. It is U.S. policy to encourage Chile's continued participation in the GATT, in line with the aspect of our economic foreign policy that is directed towards reducing artificial barriers to international trade.

Technical Assistance Programs.[18]

In addition to the general assistance to Chile in increasing its industrialization and diversifying its economy, the US has tried to help improve the standard of living of the country through technical assistance offered by the Institute for Inter-American Affairs (IIAA) [19] and the Interdepartmental Committee for Scientific and Cultural Co-

---

[17] For documentation on the foreign exchange question in Chile in 1950, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 783 ff.

[18] For documentation on the technical assistance policy of the United States toward the American Republics as a group, see pp. 1038 ff.

[19] The IIAA was established in March 1942, and became a United States Government corporation under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State in 1947. Its purpose was to aid governments in the Western Hemisphere by promoting technical programs and projects for health, sanitation, and food supply; as of mid-1950 the IIAA operating in conjunction with the Technical Cooperation Administration (TCA) in Latin America. For background information on the IIAA, see the statement made by Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs Willard L. Thorp before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on June 10, 1949, printed in the Department of State Bulletin, June 19, 1949, pp. 795–797. For information on the activities of the IIAA and its relationship with TCA in 1950, see the editorial note in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, p. 679.

operation (SCC).[20] The health and sanitation program of the IIAA, which has been in continuous operation since 1943, has involved construction of three tuberculosis sanatoria, operation of three health centers, the installation of numerous sewage systems and a program of rural sanitation. Assistance was also given to nurse training and to a health-education campaign. Under the new Point IV program technical assistance to Chile will be broadened by two new IIAA programs in food supply and vocational education. Also under consideration are a program for mass-produced low-cost housing and assistance in general economic planning and research.

Shipping and Aviation Policy.

It is our policy to encourage Chile to permit the principles of free competition to operate in the conduct of transportation services. However, since the end of the war, Chile, in common with some of the other American Republics, has shown increasing inclination to build up its merchant fleet through a system of preferences and discriminations intended to channel trade to its flag carriers. This attitude became a fixed policy in 1950 in pursuance of which the Chilean Government has taken steps to guarantee that 50% of the freight destined to Chile is handled in its national shipping companies. The 50% is achieved through the mechanism for issuing import permits, whereby the Chilean National Foreign Trade Council determines what flag ships are to be employed in the movement of freight. Following our repeated protests that this policy and the measures used to carry it out were discriminatory against US shipping, an acceptable agreement was reached last fall among the Chilean and US shipping lines involved.[21] Other shipping lines have expressed apprehension over these arrangements and the Maritime Administration is holding hearings[22] to determine if the arrangements violate the terms of the 1916 Shipping Act.[23]

In order to prevent its capital city from being bypassed on international trunk air routes, Chile very early adopted a policy of prohibiting overflights of Chilean territory. Although the US-Chilean air transport agreement of 1947[24] contains a provision covering the [20] This committee was officially in existence from May 1938 to October 1950; through it the Department of State sponsored certain assistance programs in Latin America related primarily to social services and health care.

[21] The shipping agreement signed October 30, 1950, at New York, consisted of pooling arrangements between Grace Line, Gulf and South American Steamship Company, and Compañía Sud Americana de Vapores (CSAV). For previous documentation on shipping matters, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 793–798.

[22] On May 14, 1951, the United States Federal Maritime Board dismissed a complaint against the pooling arrangements by the West Coast Shipping Line (911.5325/2–951), and on July 6, the Board formally approved the arrangements (911.5325/7–951).

[23] For text of the Shipping Act (Public Law 260), approved September 7, 1916, see 39 Stat. 728.

[24] For text of the Air Transport Agreement, concluded by an exchange of notes at Santiago, May 10, 1947, and entered into force December 30, 1948, see TIAS No. 1905, or 63 Stat. 3755.

right of transit as well as the right to non-stop points in Chile, that government has consistently maintained that transit rights were not granted separately but only in connection with the right to make traffic stops in Chilean territory. In view of the difference in interpretation, the US formally reserved the right to set forth its position at a later date. We are now considering initiating action to obtain clarification of this point in view of the desire of a US carrier, which has no traffic rights in Chile, to overfly Chilean territory on its trunk route to Argentina.

C. RELATIONS WITH OTHER STATES

Chile has always played an important role in inter-American affairs. In recent years it has become one of the most active participants in inter-American organization, showing particular interest in international economic planning on behalf of underdeveloped countries. In general, in the Organization of American States Chile collaborates with the United States. Chile has ratified the Rio Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance.[25]

Chile is also very active in United Nations affairs and belongs to most of the specialized agencies. The Chilean delegation has sided firmly with the Western powers on all important issues. It formulated the protest in the Security Council against the Communist coup d'etat in Czechoslovakia in 1948 [26] and actively opposed Soviet machinations in the General Assembly in 1950. The President strongly supports the US policy of containing Communism. It is our policy to encourage Chile to play an important role in the UN as one of the leading democracies of Latin America.

In Latin America Chile has served as a champion of democracy and has frequently expressed its opposition to authoritarian governments in the Western Hemisphere. Whenever a democratic government has been overthrown, Chile has shown its concern by postponing recognition of the new government. For example, it has endeavored to promote the growth of US and OAS sentiment against recognition of the governments established by force in Peru and Venezuela. The Chilean Government has openly criticized US application of Bogotá Resolution 35 [27] which proclaims the desirability of the continuity of diplo-

---

[25] For text of the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (Rio Treaty), opened for signature at Rio de Janeiro, September 2, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, December 3, 1948, see TIAS No. 1838, or 62 Stat. (pt. 2) 1681.

[26] For documentation on United States policy with respect to the crisis in Czechoslovakia in 1948, see Foreign Relations, 1948, vol. IV, pp. 733 ff.; for documentation on the related subject of the United States attitude toward changes in the representation of Czechoslovakia at the United Nations, see ibid., vol. I, Part 1, pp. 167 ff.

[27] For text of this resolution, adopted by the Ninth International Conference of American States, held at Bogotá, Colombia, March 30–May 2, 1948, see the Final Act of the conference, printed in Annals of the Organization of American States, vol. 1, 1949, p. 135.

matic relations among the American states. Despite the US position that recognition does not mean approval, the Chileans believe that concerted action to show disapproval of a regime set up by force would do much to discourage ambitious military groups.

With respect to these views, it is our policy to explain to Chilean officials that while it is one of our basic long-term policies to foster adherence to democratic principles in Latin America we do not wish to encourage any policies which would tend to divide the American republics into antagonistic groups according to the political ideologies of the several governments in power.

Chile has not yet established diplomatic relations with the Junta Government of Venezuela. In 1950 the Chilean Government requested the US to represent her interests in Caracas. Pleading a shortage of personnel, we refused, but one of the items considered in the formulation of a negative reply was the US desire that Chile and Venezuela reestablish relations.

Chile's attitude toward Argentina is motivated by a conflict of interests. While feeling it advisable to maintain close economic relations with its eastern neighbor, Chileans resent Argentina's ambitions to become dominant in southern South America and fear Argentina's meddling in their internal affairs. In the opinion of many Chileans, President Perón of Argentina has long desired to acquire special economic advantages for Argentina in Chile and would encourage any group in Chile that might be willing to pursue a pro-Argentine policy. The US has tried to avoid entanglement in Chile-Argentine relations and has followed its policy of encouraging the growth of democracy both at home and abroad.

Bolivia and Peru find it difficult to forget that they lost extensive territories to Chile as a result of the War of the Pacific (1879–1883). Although Chile finds the military dictatorship in Peru distasteful, it has accorded recognition to the government and relations are correct though not cordial. In the case of Haya de la Torre[28] Chilean sympathies are completely with Colombia. After the election of a pro-democratic administration in Bolivia in 1947,[29] relations between Chile and Bolivia became most cordial and the President of Chile proclaimed his friendship for the Bolivian administration on the occasion of last year's revolt and civil war instigated by Bolivian radicals with the alleged support of President Perón of Argentina.

---

[28] Victor Raúl Haya de la Torre, principal leader of APRA in Peru, had taken political refuge in the Colombian Embassy in Lima in January, 1949. The Colombian Government's refusal to turn him over to Peruvian authorities generated a legal and diplomatic controversy between the two countries. For previous documentation on United States interest in the so-called Haya de la Torre case, see Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. II, pp. 772 ff. and ibid., 1950, vol. II, pp. 994 ff.

[29] Reference is to the administration of Enrique Hertzog, President of Bolivia, 1947–1949.

The Government of Chile has unofficially indicated its willingness to cede to Bolivia a narrow strip of land adjacent to the Chile–Peru boundary, which would give Bolivia access to the sea. The cession would be combined with a three-nation irrigation and hydroelectric power development. Under the Chile–Peru boundary settlement of 1929, the consent of Peru to such a cession is required. Press announcements reporting high level discussion of this proposal have caused a good deal of debate and animosity in all three countries. Peruvian officials have indicated apprehension; a large segment of Chilean public opinion has expressed vehement opposition; and the Communists have denounced the project as an evil scheme of US imperialism, basing this propaganda on the fact that the President of Chile, during his visit to Washington in April 1950, had outlined the proposal to President Truman.

Chile established diplomatic relations with the USSR in 1946 but broke them in 1947 when President González Videla alleged that international Communism was responsible for the Chilean coal strike. In November 1950 Chile reestablished diplomatic relations with Yugoslavia by means of an exchange of notes which took place in New York City between the delegates of the two countries to the UN. In connection with the current Communist aggression in Korea,[30] Chile has formally expressed her solidarity with the US and has declared to the UN that it recognizes its responsibility in upholding UN Charter[31] principles.

Traditionally, Chile has had relatively strong ties with Western European countries. The bonds of ancestry, language, and religion long furnished a strong base for Chilean-Spanish relations, but Radical Party administrations, in power since 1938, have shown little friendliness toward the Franco[32] Government.

For many years, the influence of French culture has been preeminent in Chilean higher education and cultural activities but, since World War II, US cultural influence has made considerable gains. For more than a hundred years close relations with Germany existed because of the achievements of German colonists in southern Chile, the influence of German technical assistance in the school system, and the training of the Chilean army by German officers. Ties with Italy have been close because of cultural affinities and also because of the Italian ancestry of certain prominent Chileans. A considerable number of British families settled in Chile and now form a bilingual Anglo-Chilean colony which exercises appreciable influence in the Santiago area through their schools and clubs, by participation in business, and [30] For documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1950, volume VII.

---

[31] For text of the Charter of the United Nations, signed at San Francisco, June 26, 1945, and entered into force for the United States, October 24, 1945, see Department of State Treaty Series (TS) 993, or 59 Stat. 1031.

[32] Francisco Franco Bahamonde, Spain's Chief of State.

by their "way of life." This group has been successful in avoiding the growth of anti-British feeling.

Commercial exchange with Europe is slowly reviving. Chile has entered into several trade agreements with European countries, mostly providing for the exchange of sodium nitrate for particular commodities. More normal commercial relations were recently established with Germany by the conclusion of a trade agreement which thinly disguises a large-scale barter arrangement. At the present time a growth of trade with Europe represents no threat to American interests and indeed may fit well into US policies for other areas which are the recipients of ECA and technical assistance.

Chile claims a sector of the Antarctic continent which includes the Palmer Peninsula and overlaps the Argentine and British claims. The Chilean Government and public attach considerable importance to this Antarctic claim and believe the area may some day have great geopolitical importance as well as strategic military value. The US, reserving its rights to make territorial claims, seeks condominium for the Antarctic in agreement with seven other interested countries. Chile and the US are seeking a common approach to a solution of the Antarctic problem.[33]

D. EVALUATION

The US has successfully sought Chilean support for its general program in the UN and in the OAS. On almost all important issues the two governments consult in advance and support mutually satisfactory positions. At home the Chileans have shown a devotion to democratic principles and have contained the extremist forces of the left and right without sacrificing any of the basic freedoms.

Although Chile was sympathetic to the Nazis in World War II, we believe that maximum cooperation from Chile in the event of another war or emergency is now assured. Its armed forces are available for immediate use in a regional security framework and to ensure continued production and shipment of copper and other strategic materials. The Chilean Government is already participating in a voluntary inspection system to prevent shipment of semi-processed copper to countries which are our potential enemies. If the threat of war increases, the armed forces and the economic resources of Chile will be available for integration in the over-all war effort of the US.

In general, the government's development program has progressed satisfactorily but it has not yet reached the point where it has relieved the Chilean economy of its lopsided dependence on the prosperity of the copper and nitrate industries. Nor has industrialization reached the stage where it can effectively influence the constantly rising cost of living or the chronic unbalance of Chile's foreign-exchange budget. In future years the development of the economy will continue to be dependent on foreign capital although stabilization of the currency and sound financial practices may eventually diminish this dependency.

[33] For documentation on United States policy with regard to the Polar Regions, see vol. I, pp. 1715 ff.

In cultural fields the USIE program has been successful. The three Cultural Institutes and the active radio and motion-picture programs have helped develop a disposition of friendliness and understanding toward the US. It would be well to extend these programs to reach an even greater segment of the laboring and white-collar groups which are the targets of Communist and other anti-US propaganda.

Perhaps the smallest gains were made in the field of raising standards of living for the inhabitants of Chile. In common with other countries, Chile is in the grip of a vicious inflationary spiral which wipes out increases in wages almost as soon as they are granted. This has prevented large-scale progress in improvement of housing, provision of an adequate diet and improvement of educational and health standards. The 1951 expansion of assistance under Point IV, to include technical aid in low-cost housing construction, education, and food production, should prove to be effective in helping to achieve some of our objectives in Chile.

825.2542/3–551

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Edmund E. Getzin of the Economic Resources and Security Staff, Office of International Trade Policy

[WASHINGTON,] March 5, 1951.

Subject: Chilean Copper.

Participants: Mr. Fred Searles, Office Defense Mobilization
Mr. Richard Bissell,[1] Economic Cooperation Administration
Mr. Frank Hayes, National Production Authority
Mr. Brown[2]—ITP (State)
Mr. Atwood[3]—OSA
Mr. Knox[4]—ARA/E
Mr. Getzin—ER

Mr. Searles called the meeting to discuss certain proposals made by the Government of Chile with respect to copper. The substance of the Chilean proposals are:

[1] Deputy Administrator, Economic Cooperation Administration.
[2] Winthrop G. Brown, Director, Office of International Trade Policy.
[3] Rollin S. Atwood, Deputy Director, Office of South American Affairs.
[4] Charles F. Knox, Jr., Consul General, Curacao. Mr. Knox, who had served as adviser on American Republics economic development in 1945, was temporarily detailed to the Department of State from January 23 to April 27, 1951.

1. That production of copper in Chile be increased.
2. That Chile use a portion of the production for its own needs and for export to friendly countries other than the United States.
3. That the price of copper be adjusted upward.
4. That the United States eliminate the excise tax on imported copper.
5. That study be given to a formula which would maintain the price of copper at a parity with the prices of things Chile must import.

The Chilean proposals were the subject of a letter from Assistant Secretary Thorp to Mr. Edwin Gibson, Deputy Defense Production Administrator, dated February 19, 1951 [5] in which he asked for DPA to help formulate a U.S. position for discussion with the Chileans.

Mr. Searles began by saying that he was familiar with the proposals made by Chile, and that the Chileans should be told to submit their proposals to the International Materials Conference on Copper, Lead and Zinc.[6] He suggested that in a broader forum the weight of opinion of other countries could be brought to bear on the Chileans in an effort to get them to withdraw some of their demands. He also suggested that countries receiving ECA assistance might be induced to "gang up" on the Chileans, and added that pressure should be brought on Chile since that country has been selling copper to the Soviet and its satellites. In connection with the Chilean request for a "set aside" of copper to be sold at higher than market prices, the question was raised as to whether or not such diversion was of particular concern to the United States. Mr. Searles replied by saying that, at the present the U.S. needed all the copper it could get, but that he was not too concerned if part of the Chilean production was sold elsewhere since, in that event, greater supplies would be available from other sources. This view was questioned by Mr. Bissell in the light of large unfilled European demands for copper. The following reviews were also expressed by the others:

1. The United States could not refuse to talk to, nor could it refer to a multilateral conference, a mission appointed by the President of another country sent to the United States for the express purpose of talking bilaterally about matters of particular importance to that country.

---

[5] Not printed.

[6] The Copper, Lead and Zinc Committee was one of the commodity committees established through the initiative of the United States, Great Britain, and France early in 1951. These committees collectively constituted the International Materials Conference (IMC); they were charged with reviewing the international supply position for scarce raw materials, and with recommending to governments measures for insuring equitable distribution. For additional information on the origins and development of the IMC, see Willis C. Armstrong (Acting Special Assistant, Office of International Materials Policy), "The International Materials Conference," Department of State Bulletin, July 2, 1951, pp. 23–30.

2. That some points made by Chile, such as the copper tax and increased production by United States companies, are clearly appropriate for bilateral discussions.

3. The IMC has just got under way, and its activities will for sometime be confined to developing a statistical base for its deliberations. It would be difficult to interject specific problems on copper into the conference at this time. In the meanwhile, the Chilean Congress is to reconvene March 5 and has before it certain measures inimical to the interest of the United States copper companies. The opinion was also expressed that, if discussions with Chile were not carried out bilaterally and in good faith, Chile might well withdraw from the IMC.

4. There is no evidence that Chile has sold copper to the Iron Curtain countries or that she has any intention of doing so. As a matter of fact, Chile's record in preventing such shipments has been good.

Mr. Brown stressed the importance of intra United States discussions on the Chilean proposals before formal United States-Chilean talks, and pointed out the urgency of developing a United States position. Mr. Searles said Mr. Wilson [7] would tell Mr. Acheson [8] the U.S. position at the cabinet meeting. Mr. Brown reiterated his request for DPA representation to work with State and ECA to develop a U.S. position. Mr. Searles declined to designate someone. Mr. Searles then suggested that the Department representatives talk with the Chileans on the following day in an effort to find out exactly what they want. He intimated that his information on the proposals of the Chileans was at variance with that furnished to the Department. Mr. Brown then suggested that the information referred to be made available so that the Department's representatives have the benefit of such information in their talks with the Chilean officials. Mr. Searles declined to divulge his information. (Note: Mr. Searles apparently had obtained a copy of the instruction [9] from the President of Chile to Mr. Roberto Vergara. This paper has also been made available to the Department through Embassy Santiago.)

It was emphasized by State and agreed by ECA that regardless of where the Chilean proposals are discussed, it is essential that there be a unified United States position on each.

It was then agreed that the Department of State should talk to the Chileans on Friday, March 3 in an effort to ascertain their exact proposals. It was suggested that these proposals with the Department's recommendation on each, should then be submitted to Mr. Edwin Gibson for referral to the Executive Committee of the Committee on Foreign Supplies and Requirements. The Department officials reiterated the Department's request that representatives of the Defense

---

[7] Charles Edward Wilson, Director, Office of Defense Mobilization.

[8] Dean G. Acheson, Secretary of State.

[9] A copy of a memorandum containing instructions from President González Videla to Señor Vergara, a member of the Chilean Copper Commission, dated February 12, 1951, was transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 843, from Santiago, February 21, 1951, not printed (825.2542/2–2151).

Production Administration and Economic Stabilization Agency be designated forthwith to develop the United States position prior to submission to the Executive Committee for approval. Representatives of DPA and ESA should also participate in formal discussions with the Chilean Mission.

In closing Mr. Searles said that the excise tax on imported copper was a block to maximum imports into the United States and stated that if this barrier did not have to be overcome, companies operating in Africa, with whom he is associated in private life, would be able to bring more copper to the United States. Why this was so was not explained since it is the current practice of importers to pass the tax on to the consumer. The latter now pay two cents over the domestic price for their supplies of foreign copper.

825.2542/3–951

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Edmund E. Getzin of the Economic Resources and Security Staff, Office of International Trade Policy

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] March 9, 1951.

Subject: Chilean Copper.

Participants: Mr. Carl Lenz, Office of Price Stabilization
Mr. Leo Halpern, Office of Price Stabilization
Dr. John Morgan,[1] Defense Production Administration
Mr. Frank Hayes, National Production Administration
Mr. Rollin Atwood—OSA
Mr. John Evans [2]—ER
Mr. Edmund Getzin—ER

The Department was notified on March 8 that Mr. Edwin Gibson, Deputy Administrator, Defense Production Administration, had appointed Dr. Morgan and Mr. Hayes to develop a United States position on the Chilean copper question with representatives of ESA and Department of State. This was pursuant to Assistant Secretary Thorp's letter to Mr. Gibson, dated March 3.[3]

The participants met on March 9 and in general terms discussed the contents of the Chilean memorandum and recommendations so far made by State and ESA to meet the Chilean proposals. Mr. Hayes then referred to a conversation between Mr. Harrison [4] of DPA and

---

[1] John D. Morgan, Jr., Director, Materials Review Division.
[2] John W. Evans, Chief, Economic Resources and Security Staff, Office of International Trade Policy.
[3] Not printed.
[4] Maj. Gen. William Henry Harrison, Administrator, Defense Production Administration.

Mr. Gibson, DPA with Messrs. Hoover of Anaconda and Cox of Kennecott. Following this conversation Mr. Gibson had listed five points representing DPA's views on subjects for discussion with the Chilean delegation. These five points are:

1. "The United States will discuss the question of an increase in the price of copper from Chile provided the Government will check or stop semi-manufacturing."
2. "Raw copper should assume its normal distribution—U.S. will agree to a maximum amount of copper to be retained by Chile for handling in cooperation with the producers in the manner customary in the trade—this maximum amount will be used by Chile to trade for those necessary supplies which the U.S. cannot provide."
3. "The U.S. will be willing to discuss the question of a moderate loan program for small mine development and production. This amount should not exceed four million and expenditures under it be subject to investigation by U.S. experts of individual projects."
4. "The U.S. will undertake to arrive at an understanding with regard to the materials the U.S. will supply."
5. "The agreement be limited to a one year period."

It was apparent that these points were hurriedly drafted and their exact meaning and scope would have to be clarified. Specifically, with regard to point 1, it was not known if stoppage of semi-manufacturing was a condition to be fulfilled prior to the discussion of price or whether it was to be a result of satisfactory discussions. It could not be determined if a general rise in the price of copper was to be considered or if the increase in the price was to be confined to Chilean copper. If the latter, there was some doubt as to its manner of accomplishment.

In point 2, the meaning of the phrase "its normal distribution" was in doubt and it was not clear whether the copper is to move at prices agreed to under point 1, or at some higher price relating to what Chile buys from other countries.

Under point 3 the question of whether or not the U.S. is to enter into purchase contracts at higher prices if necessary requires clarification.

Dr. Morgan and Mr. Hayes were asked to check back with Messrs. Harrison and Gibson and clarify the questions raised and report to the group as soon as possible. The representatives of OPS were in general agreement but reserved their position on point 1, pending further consideration in that agency of the inflationary effects of a possible increase in the price of copper.

It was suggested that Mr. Hayes represent DPA and Mr. Halpern ESA in subsequent discussions with the Chilean mission.

825.2542/3–1551

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Milton Barall of the Office of South American Affairs [1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] March 15, 1951.

Participants: Senor Felix Nieto del Rio, Chilean Ambassador
Senor Roberto Vergara, Chile
Senor Jorge Burr,[2] Chilean Embassy
Mr. G. Johnson, Economic Stabilization Agency
Mr. F. H. Hayes, Defense Production Administration
OMP—Mr. Brown
Mr. Getzin
OSA—Ambassador Warren [3]
Mr. Atwood
Mr. Barall

At the request of the Chilean Ambassador the first formal meeting on the copper question was held (this date) with the understanding that the US Government was not yet ready to discuss or negotiate with respect to any general increase in the price of copper.

It was agreed to be in the interest of both countries that production of copper in Chile should be increased. To increase production from the large mines of the Anaconda and Kennecott Companies, the Chilean Government will continue discussions with these companies in order to reach an acceptable basis under which the companies can accelerate current expansion programs and plan for additional investments leading to even greater production. It was agreed that with respect to the large mines no financial assistance would be sought from the US Government. After agreement between the Chilean Government and the American companies is reached, the US will assist by granting priorities for the production and export of essential equipment and supplies to carry out the plans, although no guarantees of delivery can be made at this time because the supply situation in these items will have to be examined in the light of other high priority needs at the time of delivery. With regard to smaller and medium sized mining properties, the US is prepared to assist in efforts to increase production by granting priorities for supplies and equipment in the same manner as for the larger mines. In addition, the US is willing to consider providing limited financial assistance on the basis of favorable reports submitted by competent engineers. The US Government is prepared to arrange immediately for engineers to go to Chile to help determine, together with operators and engineers in Chile, the feasibility of increasing production by enlarging present operations and/or starting new ones. This can be done under Point Four or on other terms but only at the request of the Chilean Government. After this examination the US is willing to consider the appropriate method of financial assistance.

[1] Mr. Getzin was codrafter of this memorandum; it was drafted on March 19, 1951.
[2] Commercial Counselor, Chilean Embassy.
[3] Fletcher Warren, Director, Office of South American Affairs.

The US Government recognizes the desire and right of Chile to sell a portion of her copper production to countries other than the US. Because of the importance of copper to the economy of the US, especially at a time when US industry is geared to maximum defense production in an attempt to supply the free world with essential military and civilian goods, we expect that maximum quantities will continue to be shipped to the US and that only a minimum will go to other countries. By "minimum" we mean quantities sufficient to take care of the normal essential requirements of Chile and other countries, chiefly Latin America. The US also hopes that Chile's internal consumption will be held to essential requirements. The US considers that sales of unfabricated copper should be made in the form of refinery shapes and that the sale of "palanquillas" should cease. Chile agreed to this providing that the copper companies would abandon the use of one price for all exports. The Chileans asked that it be clearly understood that sales to other countries are not to be limited to Latin America alone and that sales to free countries in Europe or elsewhere may also be made.

The US representatives said they had understood that the principal reason why Chile wished to divert its copper from the United States was to finance requirements of needed products from other Latin American countries, and that the copper companies had built up a considerable market for Chilean copper in Europe which might be prejudiced by price increases. The Chileans agreed that this was substantially correct, but did not wish to be precluded from making sales outside of Latin America at a higher price if suitable occasion should arise. The US explained that the American companies had spent considerable time and effort in building up markets for Chilean copper in Europe and it was therefore desirable that all sales outside of Chile should be made through the established sales organizations of the copper companies. The Chileans stated that if satisfactory arrangements with the companies could be worked out it would not be necessary to set up a sales organization of their own.

It was recognized that the amount to be sold to countries other than the US was related to decisions that would be taken with respect to the change, if any, in the price of copper in the US and would be the subject of further discussion. It was also agreed that the price of copper that might be diverted and the way in which that increased price would be distributed between the companies and the Chilean Government was a matter for discussion between the companies and the Chilean Government. It was agreed by Chile that no copper would be sold to iron curtain companies and that in sales to other countries care would be exercised to avoid the possibility of transshipment behind the iron curtain. It was also agreed that the distribution of copper would be subject to any obligation Chile undertook with respect to international allocation in the International Material Conference.

With respect to the excise tax on copper it was explained that three bills to suspend the tax had been introduced in the US Congress, two in the Senate and one in the House. Since this is a tax measure, action must first take place in the House. The Ways and Means Committee cannot reach the bill for discussion until work on the Internal Revenue bill now under consideration is completed. The US hopes for favorable action but it will be several weeks before the bill is even discussed in the Ways and Means Committee. Meanwhile, the Executive Branch has gone on record unanimously as favoring suspension and is doing everything in its power to see that this viewpoint is brought to the attention of individual members of the Congress.

It was explained to the Chileans that the US was unable to devise a formula which would guarantee to maintain the purchasing power of Chilean copper with respect to items imported into the country. It was explained that no such formula had seemed practicable of application for domestic prices let alone internationally. The US recognizes however the problems which Chile is facing and is willing to consult at any time with the Chilean Government in the event that there should be great inequity in the terms of trade.

In the general discussion of this point the US representatives pointed out that the US has instituted price controls and that these controls apply to the goods which the US imports as well as to the goods the US exports. Therefore to the extent that Chile imports from the US she is receiving the benefit of our price control. Moreover it is the general US policy that the essential needs of friendly countries from the US should be met, but a specific formula for implementing this policy in terms of specific commodities or needs could not be devised. The US could not give any assurance at this time as to how long our price controls would be effective.

The subject of a general increase in the price of copper was discussed from several angles but it was again made clear to the Chileans that the US has not yet taken a position on whether it can consider the establishment of a ceiling price higher than 24½ cents. Ambassador Nieto pointed out that while Chile's long term problems would likely be resolved by diversification of her industry, a solution to her short term problems could only be achieved through an increase in the price of copper. He asked if the US was willing to consider an increase in price and added that if the price were not increased the result might be less copper for the US. Efforts were made to elicit from the Chilean Mission some idea of the amount of price increase they thought necessary to solve this problem. In reply they indicated an estimated gap of 30 to 35 million in the price of items imported by Chile over the price of its exports and suggested that an increase of 10 cents would be required to close the gap. (There is some question as to the validity of the figures presented and whether the entire deficit in foreign exchange should be charged to copper but these points were not developed at this meeting.) The Chilean Ambassador stated with some vehemence that Chile would not accept a policy similar to that in effect during the last war under which a low price was paid for copper and this price continued unchanged, until after the war. He felt that there should be an immediate increase in the current price and assurance given that any price would not necessarily be firm for the duration of the emergency. Sufficient elasticity should prevail so that Chile's needs can be met.

The Chileans were assured that the question of price was being considered at the highest levels in the US Government. Since there was agreement on all points except the US price, it was decided that the next meeting would be held after a US position on that point is established.

Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Secretary of State[1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] March 20, 1951.

Subject: Need for immediate solution of the copper problem with Chile.

Background:

The Chilean Government is faced with increasing opposition from its Congress and from the opposition parties in Chile (aided and abetted by the communists) in regard to the Government's handling of copper production and sales problems. Bills have been introduced to nationalize the copper industry, set up a Chilean copper sales corporation and divert sales of copper to countries other than the U.S. in order to obtain prices 10–15 cents higher than the U.S. price.

President Gonzalez has adjourned the Congress and sent a special mission here to discuss the copper problem and seek a solution which will prevent precipitate action by the Chilean Congress. The Department has had long discussions with the Chilean mission and representatives of ESA (Griffith Johnson)[2] and DPA (Mr. Hayes) have been present during the formal talks.

[1] Source text is an unsigned copy; original not found in Department of State files.

All of the problems presented by the Chileans including increased production in Chile and Chilean sales to other friendly countries have been settled in a manner satisfactory to both governments. The remaining point, upon which the success of the entire discussion rests, has not been settled and hinges on a decision by the ODM as to whether or not the U.S. is willing to increase moderately the price paid for Chilean copper. Word from Chile emphasizes that the pressure on the Chilean President is increasing and an immediate solution is necessary.

General Harrison has indicated that a moderate rise in price (up to 4 cents) would not be objectionable.

Mr. DiSalle[3] has sent word to Eric Johnston[4] that they would go along with a moderate increase in price to Chile but not a general rise for all producers. This means U.S. Government purchase paying a subsidy to Chile and reselling at 24½ cents in the U.S.

It is understood Harrison will not go along with subsidies to Chile and not to U.S. producers.

A meeting between Eric Johnston and General Harrison is scheduled for Thursday, March 22.

Mr. Foster[5] is entirely familiar with the problem and is pushing for a solution. Mr. Thorpe will ask Foster to talk to Eric Johnston early on March 21. Mr. Linder[6] talked to Foster on Friday, March 16.

Recommendation:

That you speak to Mr. Charles Wilson pointing out that a solution of this problem is considered politically essential prior to the meeting of the Foreign Ministers' Conference[7] on March 26.[8] [2] G. Griffith Johnson, Advisor, Economic Policy Office.

---

[3] Michael V. DiSalle, Director, Office of Price Stabilization, Economic Stabilization Agency.

[4] Administrator, Economic Stabilization Agency.

[5] William C. Foster, Administrator, Economic Cooperation Administration.

[6] Harold F. Linder, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs.

[7] Reference is to the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of American States, held at Washington, March 26–April 7, 1951. For documentation on the meeting, see pp. 925 ff.

[8] No record of Secretary Acheson's response to Mr. Miller's recommendation or of a conversation between the Secretary and Mr. Wilson has been found in Department of State files, but see footnote 4, p. 1273.

825.2542/4–351

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Milton Barall of the Office of South American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] April 3, 1951.

Subject: Discussion of copper problems with Chilean representatives

Participants: Horacio Walker,[1] Foreign Minister, Chile
Ambassador Felix Nieto del Rio, Chile
Senator Tomic,[2] Chile
Senor Vergara, Chile
Senor Garnham, Ministry of Economy, Chile
Senor Jorge Burr, Economic Counselor, Chilean Embassy
G. Johnson, Economic Stabilization Agency
F. Hayes, Defense Production Administration
OMP—Mr. Evans
Mr. Getzin
OSA—Mr. Warren
Mr. Atwood
Mr. Barall

This meeting to discuss the copper question was opened with a thorough review of what had been accomplished prior to this date, based on Memorandum of Conversation of March 15, 1951,[3] which outlined those agreements in principle which had already been achieved. Mr. Atwood also amplified certain of the ideas expressed at previous meetings and added that since the last meeting the United States had reached agreement to discuss a moderate increase in the price of Chilean copper.

The Foreign Minister expressed his satisfaction with the talks as they had proceeded to that point and stated that he was glad to see that the United States understands the Chilean problem from both the political and economic points of view. Since copper represents 65 percent of Chilean exports and is therefore vital to the economic life of the country, it was necessary to consider public opinion on this subject. In the last war copper was sold at the frozen price of 11½ cents while all manufactured items were later imported at higher prices after ceilings had been removed, causing an estimated loss to Chile of $500,000,000. Public opinion was strongly oriented to avoid repetition of this. The Foreign Minister explained that, to date, the Government had avoided passage of a law controlling copper sales in the belief that the problem should be solved by inter-Government agreement.

[1] Horacio Walker Larrain.
[2] Radomiro Tomic Romero.
[3] Ante, p. 1263.

However, he had already seen price increases in some of the items imported by Chile and he was concerned with the trend. He stated that it was not Chile's intention to sell copper indiscriminately but only to friendly countries such as Brazil and Argentina in exchange for exports which they shipped to Chile. He recognized the fact that Chile must also make sacrifices in this emergency, as in the last war, but in his view an increase in price granted by the United States represents a lesser sacrifice than that made by Chile. He stated that internal economic stability was necessary to maintain copper production at a high level and for other defense purposes.

He agreed, for Chile, to the sale of copper produced by the United States companies being effected entirely through those companies which in turn would follow the sales instructions of the Chilean Government. Chile also agreed that sales would be made for the essential needs of friendly governments only. He then asked if he correctly understood a statement made by Mr. Miller to the effect that, if the American companies did not make money available for the expansion of copper production, loans from the United States might be possible. He explained that in exchange for higher prices, increased production, and an allocation of copper for sale by Chile, the Chilean Government proposes to modify the tax laws to provide more favorable treatment to the American companies and that a proposed law for such equitable treatment would be sent to Congress. The only important problem left unsolved was the settlement of the price. The political and economic situation in Chile required an increase in price and Chile was willing to discuss such a moderate increase at the present time. In his opinion an increase of 4 cents per pound would be moderate. Also, a quota of copper production under the control of Chile, was necessary for the essential needs of the country and for export to friendly nations. The Foreign Minister stated that Chile is willing to prohibit the resale of such copper and to give assurance that none would be sold to iron-curtain countries and, under such conditions, he estimated that they should receive up to 20 percent of the total production (a reduction from the original request for 25 percent). He added that this also made possible a downward revision on the basis of equity and good faith. The Foreign Minister stated that he would have to report to the President and the Cabinet upon his return and was seeking a decision prior to his departure so as to be able to cite specific figures arrived at in the discussions. With respect to increased production he wanted to be in a position to tell the copper companies that if they did not have sufficient funds for the necessary expansion the United States Government would lend the money. He would assure the copper companies that if they proceeded with the expansion it would be under better conditions than they had enjoyed in the past.

Mr. Atwood replied that the United States Government's position with respect to the larger mines is that if they need assistance the United States is willing to discuss this directly with the companies since this type of loan is within the scope and purpose of the Eximbank. While the State Department could not speak for the Bank it was noted that it was within the Bank's policy to make this kind of loan. On the question of the quota of copper for sale by Chile, the United States was glad to hear that it was Chile's intention to sell only in terms of the essential internal needs of friendly countries; that no sales would be made behind the iron curtain; and that re-export would be prohibited. At the same time the United States felt no specific quota was necessary since any export sales made in the above framework or domestic sales considered by Chile as essential to its internal needs, or for essential uses of other friendly nations, would be acceptable. The United States would like to reserve the right of consultation on this matter in the event that the diversions were sufficient to interfere with the United States defense effort.

Mr. Vergara questioned what was meant by "essential needs". For example, would this include manufacturing in Chile, even the manufacture of items which were destined for export? Mr. Atwood replied that Chile's use of copper to manufacture items for sale abroad to other countries was considered to be within the meaning of "essential needs". At the same time Mr. Atwood made it clear that it was expected that Chile would use this criterion intelligently and reasonably.

Senator Tomic pointed out that an allocation of 20 percent of Chilean copper for sale by his country did not mean that this entire amount would necessarily be required for essential uses and foreign markets. If the entire 20 percent, or approximately 80,000 tons, could not be used legitimately for these purposes the unused balance would revert to the copper companies for normal sales in the United States. Thus Chile would have the right to control this amount of copper and also the right to sell it to friendly countries in Europe such as France, Italy, Germany, Switzerland or Sweden which have bought copper from Chile in the past. Mr. Atwood replied that we could reach an agreement on this basis, with Chile exercising the proper precautions to see that sales were made only within the terms agreed to.

The Foreign Minister explained that fixing a definite quota would be advantageous to the United States in that it could then calculate in advance the amount of Chilean copper which would be available for export to the United States. For example, if Chile takes 20 percent, the United States may then count on 80 percent for its needs. Mr. Atwood stated that he believed agreement could be reached on this matter and asked that it be made of record that this quota was not being imposed by the United States. The Foreign Minister stated that this quota would be recommended by the Chilean Government as a limitation on its own recognized absolute right to dispose of its copper as it wished. This would be done to assure the United States of continued copper shipments for its defense efforts. Senator Tomic stated that in his opinion the United States would probably receive more than 80 percent of total production by following this formula.

Mr. Evans asked if the Chilean Government would be willing to consult with the United States on the export of copper so that the United States and Chile would not both be selling in the same market, thus causing a given third country to receive too much copper and possibly enable it to exceed such quotas as may be agreed upon through International Commodity Committee procedures. The Foreign Minister agreed to consultation and the exchange of information to avoid exceeding quotas set for other countries. Mr. Atwood stated that if Chile estimated that it should control up to 20 percent of production, the United States was willing to accept this figure with the assurances already advanced by Chile.

Mr. Getzin asked if the 20 percent included concentrates and applied to all types of copper in Chile. Mr. Vergara replied "no". Mr. Hayes specified that the 20 percent was applicable to refined copper and that Chile could dispose of this amount within the limitations agreed to, this quota being acceptable for perhaps the next 12 months. The Chileans stated that they would be willing to discuss revision whenever deemed desirable by the United States and Mr. Garnham pointed out that after this system is put into effect it will be possible to determine whether Chile can sell this amount properly. After some experience a revision could be anticipated. Mr. Hayes then suggested that a quarterly discussion of the quota might provide the basis for continuous discussions. He also specified that "palanquillas" would not be included in the 20 percent. The Chileans (Vergara) agreed that there would be no more "palanquillas" manufactured but that this restriction did not apply to legitimate processing such as the manufacture of light wire, etc., and that (Tomic) distribution would be made with the least disruption to normal marketing procedures.

Mr. Atwood stated that the price of copper sold to other countries could be set by the Chilean Government and that the actual distribution would be made by the companies which had worked hard building up interest in Chilean copper. Senator Tomic said that Chile had considered the possibility of making sales through their own companies, Fomento, or Madeco which was 30 percent owned by the Government, or Famae which was 50 percent owned by the Government, and he wanted it made clear that Madeco and Famae are not out of business. He suggested that perhaps Fomento should be the sales agency so that this company could get, in exchange for Chilean copper, the essential items needed for the Chilean manufacturing industry. However, he did not insist on this point and the Chileans agreed firmly that copper in refined shapes will be sold through the American companies.

The Foreign Minister then raised the question of the price of Chilean copper. Mr. Atwood reviewed the price problem, emphasizing the possible dire consequences to the United States economy of any rise in the price of copper, and then stated that the United States considered an increase of 2 cents per pound as moderate and justifiable. Mr. Vergara referred to the price squeeze faced by Chile and stated that 2 cents would be highly unsatisfactory. He pointed to the failure of the wheat and potato crops in Chile this year and the fact that Argentina was already squeezing Chile on the price of the wheat which might be made available. Also, freight rates were going up because of the failure of the United States Government to include these in price control regulations while diverting shipping to Europe, India and elsewhere. The 2 cents offered would not be enough to solve Chile's current problems and would only force the Government to seek a higher export quota or to increase taxes on the American companies, and thus prevent attainment of United States objectives. Mr. Atwood replied that a final United States position could not be taken today since further discussion with ODM would be necessary. The question of how a price change could be brought about was under consideration in the United States and the Chilean point of view would be made known to United States Defense Agencies. The Chileans pointed out that in their opinion a 4 cents increase was considered a minimum, with Senator Tomic stating that the price of copper should be about 30 cents per pound. He indicated that part of the desired 4 cents minimum increase would be passed on to the copper companies, either in the form of price increase or as tax exemptions or relief. Messrs. Atwood and Hayes pointed out that an increase of 4 cents in Chile, if spread between the companies and the Government at 2 cents each, would force up the price of US-produced copper by 2 cents a pound to keep pace with Chilean copper.

Mr. Getzin asked if Chile would be willing to accept 2 cents per pound and give nothing to the copper companies. The Foreign Minister replied in the negative stating that the price increase would not go directly to the companies, since Chile would require the additional funds and would pass on some part of it to the companies, probably in the form of a more favorable tax plan or a more favorable exchange rate. Chile would negotiate this directly with the companies but a 50–50 division would certainly not prevail. Mr. Hayes stated that a 4 cent increase instead of 2 cents would exert tremendous inflationary pressure on the United States' economy and that this amount was "staggering". Mr. Johnson pointed out that ESA had agreed to discuss the price increase only because of Chile's acute foreign exchange problem, since the present price was adequate in the US, and was not prepared to consider any increase being granted to companies in the United States as their present profits were considered adequate. The Foreign Minister replied that some concession to the companies was required to induce them to increase production but that Chile was willing to accept a price increase in the form of a subsidy such as that paid for Bolivian tin in the last war. The method of increase in the price would be left to the United States Government.

Senator Tomic asked for definite information on what could be done in the way of additional investments in Chile to increase production to keep pace with other copper-producing areas such as the United States, Africa and Canada, where the production rate was increasing, whereas, in Chile, it was now lower than the level of 25 years ago. Mr. Atwood replied that the United States was aware of Chile's problems but was thinking more along the lines of long-range development of the country's economy rather than maintaining emphasis on one commodity. The Foreign Minister stated that he appreciated the efforts the United States is making in Chile's behalf and requested that a meeting be called as soon as possible to settle the question of price. Ambassador Warren assured him that this would be done.[4]

---

[4] A memorandum from the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Mann) to the Secretary of State, dated April 12, 1951, reads in part as follows:

"Mr. Edwin Gibson of DPA, reporting an agreement reached by Messrs. Wilson, Harrison and Eric Johnston, notified the Department that a price rise of three cents on Chilean copper was justified if the Department could obtain agreement from Chile on all the other points raised in the discussions which had been held.

"On Monday morning, April 9, the Chilean Foreign Minister indicated his agreement on all the points including a price rise of three cents.

"After a meeting of Departmental representatives with Mr. Gibson on Monday at noon the Chilean Foreign Minister was advised informally that afternoon that the U.S. considered a price rise of three cents on Chilean copper to be reasonable and that a note covering the points agreed upon would be prepared and delivered to the Chilean Ambassador prior to the Foreign Minister's departure from the U.S. on Saturday, April 14." (825.2542/4–1251)

795.00/4–751

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Milton Barall of the Office of South American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] April 7, 1951.

Subject: Request for assignment of Chilean Troops to Korea

Participants: Horacio Walker, Foreign Minister, Chile
Ambassador Nieto, Chile
Admiral Holger,[1] Chief, Naval Mission, Chile
Commander Contreras,[2] Air Attaché, Chile
Lt. General Bolte,[3] Inter-American Defense Board
Brig. General Sibert,[4] Inter-American Defense Board
ARA—Mr. Miller
ARA—Mr. White
OSA—Mr. Barall

Mr. Miller opened the discussion by referring to President Gonzalez's strong interest in the international situation and then stated that at the request of General Marshall[5] the State Department was seeking the participation of ground troops of additional friendly nations in the Korean fighting and that, because of its urgency, this matter was now being taken up with Chile despite the delicate political situation of the Chilean president.[6]

Mr. Miller explained that in this matter he was not acting for the United States but rather for the United Nations, which have had some of their troops in the line for nine months, without rest or relief, and which have suffered heavy casualties, including the wounding of the two sons of General Bolte. In this serious position, the United Nations were seeking additional ground forces. Help of any kind would not be refused but the primary need was for ground troops.

While recognizing the political difficulties of the Chilean Government, and of other countries, Mr. Miller nevertheless felt that he had to explain our point of view and to seek aid—not just nominal aid, but effective aid. Though there would be political difficulties, there would also be political advantages to be derived from positive action and collaboration with the United States and the United Nations. The armed forces of Chile would benefit considerably by the valuable combat

---

[1] Vice Adm. Immanuel Holger.
[2] Lt. Col. Humberto Contreras.
[3] Charles L. Bolté, Chairman, Inter-American Defense Board.
[4] Edwin L. Sibert, Director of the Staff, Inter-American Defense Board.
[5] George C. Marshall, Secretary of Defense.
[6] In a memorandum to the Director of the Office of Regional American Affairs (White), dated April 6, 1951, Mr. Warren had stated in part that he and Mr. Atwood had doubts about the advisability of exerting pressure on the Chilean Government to furnish troops for use in Korea "at this time", since there was "real opposition in Chile to sending Chilean troops abroad," and that if President González Videla was forced to make an effort to do so "it may mean the fall of the González Government." (725.5/4–651) training they would receive. This had been turned to political advantage in Colombia.

Mr. Miller explained that under the present laws equipment could be made available only on the basis of prepayment in dollars but that a request had been submitted to President Truman to have this law amended to allow wider latitude. At any rate, given the scarcity of materiel, any equipment furnished would have to be used for a specific purpose, i.e. training for action. In Korea itself, a different procedure is in effect and the United Nations forces could make up any deficiencies in the equipment of Chilean troops. The United States is offering to train the troops in their own countries, furnish transportation and maintain them in Korea. In principle, this would all be paid for by the Chilean Government but this is in principle only and the actual payment would be the subject of negotiations much later.

The Foreign Minister stated that he had followed with interest Mr. Miller's objective and clear explanation and that he would report on the situation to President González Videla, who is, of course, very much interested in hemispheric solidarity and in the United Nations efforts to combat communism. The political climate was not yet prepared for Chile to go ahead but he recognized the necessity for greater efforts. The Foreign Minister explained that Chile had its long coast line to defend and had to continue the fight against communism to assure the flow of strategic materials such as copper, nitrates and coal. The Communists were making continuous efforts, sometimes successfully, to disrupt production. Chile doesn't have large land forces but had tried unsuccessfully to send a naval vessel or an Air Force unit to Korea. Favorable public opinion has still to be built up and if more powerful South American countries such as Brazil would take the first step this would help Chile convince its people of the necessity for active participation in the Korean fighting. The Communists in Chile had been conducting a strong campaign against participation in Korea as well as against production of strategic materials. The Government had taken steps to combat this campaign but in a democratic country it could not be put down so easily as in some of the other countries with regimes based on force. The Foreign Minister explained that the Chilean ground forces were weak and that it would be much harder to send ground troops than to convince the people to send a naval vessel, but a campaign has to be made to change the mentality of the press and public and to win them over to the necessity for action by the armed forces.

The Foreign Minister stated that he recognized the necessity for Chile to make its sacrifices and, with the best of good will, would transmit Mr. Miller's request to the President and study, with him, the possibility of taking action. However, he again made the point that other countries, which were not facing Chile's difficult present internal situation, should take the lead, for their action would have a very beneficial effect on Chile. He stated that a reply to Mr. Miller would be transmitted through Ambassador Nieto.

Mr. Miller stated that he appreciated the Foreign Minister's remarks with respect to other countries like Brazil and that this matter had been taken up with the Brazilian Foreign Minister,[7] whose approach to the problem was very sympathetic and he hoped that there would be a favorable outcome. Mr. Miller thanked the Foreign Minister for his frank exposition of the Chilean point of view and stated that he looked forward to a reply on what could be done. In response to a question by the Ambassador with respect to the names of other countries from whom assistance was being sought, Mr. Miller replied that this had been discussed with those South American countries which were considered to be most capable of helping.

The Foreign Minister said that this was a problem affecting all the democratic nations and western civilization and that it would receive serious consideration.[8]

[7] João Neves da Fontoura.

[8] The Chilean Government did not furnish troops for use in Korea in 1951.

398.254/2-2451

The Secretary of State to the Chilean Ambassador to the United States (Nieto del Río)[1]

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to His Excellency the Ambassador of Chile and has the honor to refer to his note No. 230/46 of February 24, 1951[2] which stated that the Chilean Ambassador had been designated to carry on conversations respecting problems concerning copper, and to the memorandum furnished by the Embassy under the date of February 1, 1951,[2] which sets forth the position of the Chilean Government.

Pursuant to the conversations which took place during the period from February 27 to April 9 between representatives of the United States Government and representatives of the Chilean Government,[3] the position of the United States Government with respect to the questions raised by Chile has been presented and the enclosed memorandum contains a statement of the understanding of the United States Government with regard to agreements reached by the two governments respecting problems concerning copper.

[1] Department of State files do not indicate on which date the instant note and memorandum were handed to the Chilean Ambassador.

[2] Not printed.

[3] For text of the Department of State's press release concerning the negotiations which took place in Washington, dated May 7, 1951, see Department of State Bulletin, May 21, 1951, pp. 819–820.

It would be appreciated if the Chilean Government would inform the United States Government if the attached memorandum accurately reflects the understanding of the Chilean Government with respect to the problems discussed.

WASHINGTON, April 17, 1951.

[Enclosure]

MEMORANDUM

The United States Government concurs in the view expressed by the Chilean Government that the maintenance and increase of copper production in Chile is of primary importance. It is recognized that increased production can be achieved by expanded operations by the two large American companies and by enlarging the operations of existing smaller mines or by opening up certain mining properties not now in operation.

With regard to expansion of the operation of the larger companies it is understood that the Chilean Government will continue discussions with the Anaconda and Kennecott companies in order to reach an acceptable basis under which these companies can accelerate expansion programs and plan for additional investments leading to increased production. The United States Government is pleased with the reports that the discussions are progressing rapidly and that mutually satisfactory arrangements may be expected in the near future. Following agreement by the Chilean Government and the American companies the United States Government will assist to the fullest extent that the emergency permits in the export of essential equipment and supplies to carry out these plans. It is noted that the mining companies state that they do not contemplate the need for public financial assistance for carrying out their expansion programs.

With regard to smaller and medium-size mining properties in Chile, the United States is prepared to assist in efforts for sound increases in production by facilitating deliveries, within the general defense needs, of supplies and equipment or by considering the granting of loans to increase production, provided that such requests are based on reports submitted by competent engineers. The United States Government is prepared to provide engineers to help determine, together with operators and engineers in Chile, the feasibility of increasing production by enlarging present operations or by starting new ones.

The United States Government appreciates the Chilean Government's natural desire to utilize reasonable quantities of copper produced by the American companies in Chile for export directly to countries other than the United States and for the manufacture in Chile of semi-finished and finished products both for domestic use and for export. It is understood that in export sales of copper the Chilean Government does not propose to export copper in the form known as "palanquillas." In regard to the quantity of copper to be utilized for the above mentioned purposes it is understood that the Chilean Government will impose a limit of not higher than 20 percent of the production of the Anaconda and Kennecott companies thus assuring to the United States continuous shipment of Chilean copper in quantities no lower than 80 percent of the production of said companies. It is also understood that the distribution of copper would be subject to any obligation Chile undertakes with respect to international allocation in the International Materials Conference. The Chilean Government appreciates the importance of copper to the economy of the United States, which at the present time is being geared to maximum defense production in effort to supply the free world with essential military and civilian goods. The Chilean Government stated its intention that the copper not shipped to the United States will be used by Chile or sold to other friendly countries only for their essential needs; that the Chilean Government will take the necessary measures to assure that such copper will not be re-exported; and that no sales will be made to countries which are potential enemies or satellites of potential enemies. The United States also was pleased to learn that Chile agreed to exchange information on the amount of copper which should be sold to other countries, particularly in the event that the diversion should be sufficient to interfere with the United States defense effort, and also to exchange information with the United States on the export of copper to third countries to facilitate the supply of essential requirements to such countries in the most expeditious manner.

The Chilean Government stated that it must receive additional dollars from the sale of copper in order to maintain economic stability and support its own efforts for participation in hemispheric defense. The United States Government therefore, in the light of the agreements reached with the Chilean Government and the latter Government's continuing discussion with the copper companies regarding increased production and sale of Chilean copper, considers reasonable an increase of three cents per pound in the price of all Chilean copper sold to the United States, and understands that the announcement of such an increase will be arranged by the Chilean Government at such time as it determines. It is understood that prices to third countries will not be lower than the price for Chilean copper sold to the United States.

In the course of conversations between the representatives of the two governments it was brought out that a mutually satisfactory solution of the copper problem was related to Chile's overall plans for continued economic development. The representatives of Chile described Chile's immediate program of loans now being sought from the Export-Import Bank for the purpose of bringing the production of the Huachipato steel mill up to full present capacity, and from the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development for the purpose of increasing the agricultural potential of the country through irrigation, land clearance and the purchase of agricultural machinery and increasing hydroelectric power, providing new and increased coal production, and establishing a wood-pulp and newsprint industry. The satisfactory execution of the Chilean plans for economic development should be of value in helping to bring about greater economic stability in Chile and diversification of industry and production. Within the framework of its world-wide commitments, the United States will continue to manifest its interest in the economic development of Chile and will continue to cooperate with the Government by maintaining a friendly attitude toward requests for technical assistance such as those received in the past for assistance in economic planning, low cost housing, health and sanitation and increased food supply.

While the Government of the United States feels that it is not practicable to seek a bilateral formula which will permit dollars obtained by Chile through the sale of copper to the United States to maintain a constant purchasing power in the United States, it is pointed out that the United States has instituted price controls and that these apply to goods exported from the United States to Chile. Under the principles agreed to in the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of American States, this Government believes there is ample provision for continued cooperation by the two Governments to help maintain and improve the Chilean economy and that, through consultation, problems of mutual interest may be fully discussed in order to arrive at a satisfactory solution.

The agreement with respect to the distribution of Chilean copper produced by the American companies and the price of Chilean copper to the United States as provided above may be subject to periodic review upon the initiative of either Government.[4]

WASHINGTON, April 17, 1951.

[4] This memorandum was amended in a note from the Secretary of State to the Chilean Ambassador, dated May 1, 1951, which reads in part as follows: "In addition to the items already agreed to, it is understood that with respect to non-fabricated Chilean copper produced by the American companies and sold to countries other than the United States such sales will be made through the facilities of the producing companies and that arrangements for such sales will be worked out by the Chilean Government with the producing companies." (825.2542/5–151) The Chilean Government indicated its approval of the memorandum and the amendment in two notes dated May 7, 1951 (398.254/5–751).

Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26

The Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Ambassador in Chile (Bowers)

RESTRICTED [WASHINGTON,] May 7, 1951.

DEAR AMBASSADOR BOWERS: I am very concerned over the attitude of President González Videla towards the Compañía Chilena de Electricidad.[1] I had a visit this morning from Grant Hylander[2] and he filled me in on some of the details of their unhappy predicament.[3] I know that you are equally concerned and the company is grateful for your sympathetic cooperation with them.

The thing that disturbes me is the harm that Chile does to its own long-range interests by this type of performance on the part of the President, especially since it comes so soon after his unfortunate statements about copper shipments to Russia and the International Bank just before my arrival in March.[4] For a country with which we have so much sympathy as Chile and with whose government we have cooperated so closely, it is undeniable that Chile does not stand very high with our financial community and that undoubtedly is one reason why they have so much difficulty with the International Bank. Of the major U.S. interests having investments in Chile the only ones which are pro-Chilean and have received good treatment over the years are the nitrate companies. The copper companies are much more sympathetic now than they have been and this is due in large part to the statesmanship which has been displayed by Cox since he took over management of Kennecott. However, the attitude of the copper companies is now in the balance depending upon what Chile does in regard to taxes and exchange rate for them. As for the IT&T, their experience has been so unhappy that it was definitely reflected in the attitude which General Harrison assumed in the copper negotiations in his capacity as Defense Production Administrator during the early stages of the negotiations when he evidenced considerable hostility to increased production of copper in Chile. The point I am making is that from [1] A Chilean subsidiary of the American and Foreign Power Company.

[2] Vice-President, American and Foreign Power Company.

[3] In 1951 the Chilean Electric Company experienced difficulties in its efforts, inter alia, to obtain rate increases. Pertinent documents are in decimal file 825.2614.

[4] During the latter part of February and early March, Mr. Miller visited five Latin American countries: Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Peru, and Uruguay. He traveled to Chile ostensibly to observe several meetings of the twelfth session of the United Nations Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC), held at Santiago, February 20–March 21, 1951, but the actual purpose of his visit was to engage in preliminary discussions with Chilean officials about matters relating to the forthcoming Fourth Meeting of Consultation and current problems in United States relations with Chile. For excerpts from Mr. Miller's address on United States-Chilean problems of economic development, delivered to the delegates to the twelfth session of ECOSOC on March 6, see Department of State Bulletin, March 19, 1951, pp. 454–457.

Chile's own standpoint their tendency towards shortsightedness in dealing with important American investors is bound to have adverse repercussions in regard to their credit standing in this country. It certainly will affect their ability to attract any additional private investment over the years. Perhaps they don't want any more private investment, but I don't see how they are going to realize their maximum economic potential without it. These are just random thoughts which you might want to pass along in a friendly way either to the President or the Foreign Minister or Ben Claro [5] if you see fit—or if you don't, just file them.

I have just received your letter of May 3.[6] The prospect of Ibáñez' victory is definitely not encouraging, particularly following upon the unhappy turn of events in Bolivia yesterday,[7] and I might add that the turn of events is not any too happy in this country. I feel exactly as you do about the situation here and think the furore which has been raised over the return of our conquering hero must necessarily encourage tin-horn generals of the type of Ibáñez. We are making a very sad spectacle of ourselves indeed and there is no possible way to minimize it. In short, I am disgusted.

Trusting that you are the same, I remain

Sincerely yours, EDWARD G. MILLER, JR.

---

[5] Benjamín Claro Velasco, Chilean Minister of Economy and Commerce.
[6] Not printed.
[7] Reference is to the electoral victory of Victor Paz Estenssoro in the Bolivian presidential election of May 6. Documentation on the subject may be found on pp. 1141 ff.

825.2564/5-1551

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Milton Barall of the Office of South American Affairs

RESTRICTED [WASHINGTON,] May 15, 1951.

Subject: Increased shipping cost for Chilean nitrate

Participants: Señor Felix Nieto del Río, Chilean Ambassador
Señor Mario Rodríguez, Minister Counselor, Chilean Embassy
Mr. Doetsch, President, Chilean Nitrate Sales Corporation
Mr. Miller, Assistant Secretary, Inter-American Affairs
Mr. Barall, Chile Desk Officer

The Chileans discussed the nitrate industry in general terms as outlined in memorandum of April 25 which was sent from the Nitrate and Iodine Sales Corporation of Chile to the Chilean Nitrate Sales Corporation located at 120 Broadway, New York City. The Chileans raised the problem of an increase in the cost of ocean transportation which may make it impossible for Chilean nitrate to be sold at the ceiling price in the United States market or to compete with synthetics if the ceiling price should be raised. They claim that the present conference rate of $8.50 per ton to Atlantic and Gulf ports which is applicable to 40 percent of Chilean nitrate shipments, combined with the time and rate charters which carry the remaining 60 percent at lower rates, bring the average transportation per long ton to $7.80 for 1950–51. These terms expire June 30, 1951 and, because of a current shortage of available shipping, tramp steamers, generally not under United States registry and not subject to any United States control, are increasing their freight rates to about $15.00 per ton. If no action is taken to solve this problem the effect on the Chilean economy would be ruinous and a shortage of fertilizer in the United States would probably occur before synthetic production could be increased.

Mr. Miller explained that any sharp increase in price was imposed by tramp vessels not under the control of the United States and therefore this was not a problem which could be easily solved by this government. However, the United States would examine any concrete proposal made by the Chileans to help the nitrate industry solve the problem. Mr. Doetsch stated that he thought it was possible that some arrangement could be worked out through the National Shipping Authority whereby vessels could be made available for operation under the NSA to carry Chilean nitrate at reasonable rates. He stated that he had no details on how this could be done although he understood that certain commodities were already being shipped under similar arrangements.

Mr. Miller stated that the Department would look into the situation to see if something could be done through the NSA to help the Chileans.

Action Taken:

After investigation, a letter[1] from Mr. Radius[2] to Admiral Cochrane[3] was prepared requesting investigation of the possibility of allocating shipping space for the transportation of nitrate from Chile to the United States under arrangements similar to those now in effect whereby certain ships under the NSA transport coal and grain under "general agency" agreements.

---

[1] Not printed.

[2] Walter A. Radius, Deputy Director, Office of Transport and Communications Policy.

[3] Edward L. Cochrane, Chairman, Federal Maritime Board.

825.2542/8–651

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of River Plate Affairs (Randolph)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] August 6, 1951.

Subject: US-Chilean Copper Agreement

Participants: Mr. Charles R. Cox, President of Kennecott Copper Company
Ambassador Fletcher Warren (OSA)
Mr. Archibald R. Randolph (OSA)

Mr. Miller was absent from his office on other official business at the time set for Mr. Cox's appointment. Ambassador Warren received Mr. Cox. Mr. Cox opened the interview by declaring that the United States copper producers in Chile are irked at the Department for "not having kept the companies informed at all stages of the negotiations which led to the United States-Chile copper agreement". He said that the agreement provides for a tax of three cents applicable to shipments subsequent to May 8. The agreement did not stipulate the effective date nor provide the machinery for determining the application of this tax. It was therefore wide open. The Chilean President after the signing of the agreement in a public statement said that the tax was applicable to "shipments" effected after May 8. Mr. Cox asked "Why did not the United States Government step in and say this was not correct?" His company had firm contracts concluded prior to May 8. The Chilean President's statement because it was "uncontested by the State Department" has had the effect of committing the Chilean Government in an interpretation of the copper agreement. The practical effect of the Chilean President's statement has been to obligate the Kennecott Copper Company to pay $700,000 representing taxes accessible against copper "shipments" after May 8 but covered by delivery contracts concluded prior to that date. It is understood that the tonnage involved covers 4500 tons in the New York free zone area destined for United States stockpile.

Ambassador Warren emphasized that ARA holds that the American copper companies were at all times kept thoroughly informed and had been consulted throughout the period of the negotiations. This point was made perfectly clear. Mr. Cox declared that he knew "nothing about the terms of the agreement until it was made". He wants the American companies to be consulted prior to any other proposed contract. The American companies were not present when the Chileans called at the Department to discuss the present agreement, in spite of the fact that Messrs. Cox and Hoover were designated as advisers to the Chilean Commission by the Chilean Government. Mr. Cox considers that had he and Mr. Hoover been kept abreast of the negotiations which terminated in the current agreement that he would not now be faced with an out-of-pocket assessment by the Chilean Government in the sum of $700,000.

Ambassador Warren reiterated that it is his belief that the American copper companies had been consulted all along the line. He said that he hoped Mr. Cox and Mr. Hoover could discuss their problems with Mr. Atwood who would be in the office tomorrow. Mr. Atwood had expended a great deal of time and devoted scrupulous attention to these problems. Mr. Cox said that at the present time Mr. Hoover is on vacation in the Northwest. As soon as Mr. Hoover returns the two of them will be pleased to call on Mr. Atwood to discuss this matter further.[1]

Mr. Cox said that the American companies are now prepared to increase their investments to expand production. The Kennecott Company will invest five million dollars which will provide an approximate increase in production of 2500 tons per month. The Anaconda Company has promised President Gonzalez to invest twenty million dollars which will provide an increase of 80 to 90 million pounds, a production increase of approximately 46%.

[1] Department of State files contain no evidence that Messrs. Cox and Hoover pursued this matter with Mr. Atwood.

Editorial Note

On August 9, 1951, the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank authorized two credits in favor of the Corporación de Fomento de la Producción (Chilean Development Corporation) totaling $11,150,000. The first was an additional credit of $10,000,000 to assist in financing the purchase in the United States of the equipment, materials, and services necessary to expand the productive capacity of the Huachipato steel mill (Cia. de Acero del Pacifico, S. A.), for which the Bank had previously granted credits aggregating $48,000,000. The second credit was to finance the purchase in the United States of the materials and services required for expanding the production of the ferro-manganese plant of Fabrica Nacional de Carburo y Metalurgica, S. A. (CARBURO) (103–XMB/8–951). For further information on these credits, see Export-Import Bank of Washington, Thirteenth Semiannual Report to Congress for the Period July–December 1951 (Washington, 1952), pages 11, 13–14.

On September 19, 1951, the National Advisory Council recommended consideration by the Board of Executive Directors of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development of a $1,300,000 loan to the Chilean Development Corporation to finance the dollar costs of exploration for ground water in the Río Elqui Valley, and the partial development of such water for irrigation purposes (Department of State National Advisory Council Documents, Document No. 88, Action No. 490, September 19, 1951, Lot 60 D 137, Box 369). The loan was let on October 10. For additional information see International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, Seventh Annual Report to the Board of Governors 1951–1952 (Washington, 1952), pages 28–29.

398.254/9–751

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Milton Barall of the Office of South American Affairs

RESTRICTED [WASHINGTON,] September 7, 1951.

Subject: Chile's position in the IMC—Copper, Lead and Zinc Committee

Participants: Manuel Trucco, Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, Chile
Walter Muller, Chilean Representative, IMC
Mario Rodríguez, Minister Counselor, Embassy of Chile
Mr. Miller, Assistant Secretary of State
Mr. Willis Armstrong, OMP
Mr. Edmund Getzin, OMP
Mr. Barall, OSA

Señor Trucco stated that the purpose of his visit was to explain in advance, to the United States, the position Chile would take in the Copper, Lead and Zinc Committee of the IMC. He then handed Mr. Miller a copy of the paper [1] which Chile had sent to the Chairman of the Committee and which presented the Chilean point of view as follows:

1. Copper is of greater importance to Chile than to other countries since it is her principal means for making international payments, providing 65 percent of the total value of exports and being almost the sole source of dollars.
2. In the last World War Chile lost tremendous revenue because it consented to fixed prices for copper.
3. Despite this, Chile has already agreed to "freeze" 80 percent of her copper, which is shipped to the United States at low price.
4. The 20 percent reserved for Chile is the only means available to the country to pay for imports whose price has been going up very rapidly.
5. Under the proposed allocation the ceiling assigned to some of the nations to whom Chile now sells copper is much too small and in certain cases there is no quota at all.

---

[1] Not printed.

6. Chile reiterates its objection to fixed quotas and prices of some raw materials while other raw materials, machinery, agricultural products, etc., rise in a free market to high levels.

The statement ended by indicating that Chile could not participate in any international allocation of copper which would place in jeopardy her control of 20 percent of the production of the American companies.

Mr. Miller replied that the arguments advanced by Chile with respect to the importance of copper to the Chilean economy were well known to the United States and, indeed, were a paramount consideration in negotiating the copper agreement in the spring of this year. He explained that the United States felt Chile could participate in the proposal for allocation of copper for the fourth quarter of 1951 without losing any of the benefits of the copper agreement.

Mr. Miller and the others on the US side made the following observations:

1. The allocation was for the fourth quarter only and in no way prejudiced any country's position as to principles, methods or amounts in succeeding quarters.
2. There was no obligation on the part of a supplying country to sell to a particular consuming country. Supplying countries would be obligated only to limit shipments to the ceiling established for the recipient country.
3. The allocation placed no limit on the price which Chile might obtain for her copper. In the event seller and buyer could not agree on price and copper remained unsold the committee would reallocate any unsold portion.
4. Chile had participated in the negotiation of this allocation for nearly six months and, although the basic principles were well known to the Chilean delegate, at no time had he raised any objection or reservation. This 11th hour change in position was particularly awkward since all countries had appeared to be in agreement and, if allocation for the fourth quarter were to be feasible, arrangements must be completed no later than September 15. Time did not permit a complete renegotiation.
5. The United States placed great significance on a successful copper allocation because the material was so important to mutual defense and security that success or failure in this material might well determine the possibilities of success of the whole IMC concept.

Mr. Miller emphasized the temporary, experimental, nature of the present proposal and stated his belief that the difficulties which Chile anticipated could be ironed out within the IMC Committee, citing as an example the fact that Argentina had already indicated its intention of going before the Committee to seek a higher quota and that a means could be found to continue Chile's lucrative sales to Argentina, Brazil and other countries within the allocation framework.

In reply to Mr. Miller's query on the degree to which Chile had contracted to oversell to Argentina during the fourth quarter, Señor

Muller stated that deliveries to Argentina would exceed 8,000 tons for the fourth quarter, more than four times the ceiling on consumption allowed for that country, and that if Argentina wanted even more copper she could obtain it under the barter system worked out by the two countries, under which Chile obtained necessary meat and foodstuffs essential for the health and well-being of its people. Mr. Armstrong questioned Argentina's using this copper and quoted from the copper agreement: "The Chilean Government stated its intention that the copper not shipped to the United States will be used by Chile or sold to other friendly countries only for their essential needs". Señor Muller quickly changed the subject.

After further discussion of all the above, it became apparent that there was no possibility of reconciling the Chilean and US points of view at this time. Trucco even went so far as to argue that the US would render inoperative the copper agreement by urging Chile to give up control of its 20 percent, this despite the sentence contained in the agreement, "It is also understood that the distribution of copper would be subject to any obligation Chile undertakes with respect to international allocation in the International Materials Conference", which was quoted to show him that international allocations had been provided for in that instrument. The Chilean representatives also argued that, while no price control was indicated in the present proposal, this item was already on the agenda for future discussion and, in any event, an allocation system always strengthened the position of the buyer and in the long run, would make it impossible for Chile to get $1200 a ton for the copper over which it exercised control. Without this extra income from copper, Chile's economic situation would be extremely bad and she would have no way to defend herself against the constantly rising prices of imports.

Mr. Armstrong informed the Chileans that in US opinion the failure to achieve international control over copper would probably have serious repercussions for other commodities and that the entire IMC might now fail. In this event, world opinion would hold Chile responsible. The Chileans seemed rather surprised at the firm stand taken by US representatives at the meeting and made inquiries as to the final date for reaching a definite decision in the committee. They were informed that the committee had to complete its arrangements by the 15th of September at the latest.

In conclusion, the US pointed out that it could in no way agree with the position taken by Chile. Chile was again urged to seek a formula by which its needs for foreign exchange, recognized by the United States, could be reconciled to the allocation proposal. A trial period for one quarter was suggested.

825.2542/9–1251 : Airgram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Chile

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, October 2, 1951.

A–92. With respect to Embassy despatch No. 325, September 12, 1951,[1] the Department approves the strong protests registered by the Embassy against the possible sale of copper to countries in the Soviet sphere. The Embassy is authorized to continue to make representations to the Chilean Government, if such action is necessary, to secure compliance with the commitment it accepted in the copper agreement of May 1951 with respect to its 20 percent of the production of the American companies, to wit: "that the copper not shipped to the US will be used by Chile or sold to other friendly countries only for their essential needs; that the Chilean Government will take all the necessary measures to assure that such copper will not be re-exported; and that no sales will be made to countries which are potential enemies or satellites of potential enemies". Nevertheless, it is hoped that this particular problem is no longer acute and that the intervention of President González, as reported in Embtel 158, September 18,[1] and in letter from Ambassador Bowers to Asst. Secretary Miller, September 21,[1] has already been effective in blocking possible sales to countries under Soviet domination. The Embassy could then turn its efforts to the establishment of proper means of screening shipments and coordinating the efforts of the two governments to assure that the eventual consumption of copper produced in Chile will not benefit the iron-curtain countries.

A very real problem exists with respect to Chile's disposal of her 20 percent within authorized channels. At present, in addition to the backlog produced by its failure to establish procedures for the export of the full 20 percent of the production of the American companies since May 8, the Chileans have claimed, in the International Materials Conference, the right to dispose of 27,000 additional tons for which it says decrees had been issued prior to the effective date of the copper agreement. The Embassy is requested to obtain accurate data on the production of the American companies between May 8 and August 31 (or later, if possible); the amount shipped by Chile as part of its 20 percent; and the balance still due Chile to complete its 20 percent. Verification of Chile's claim to 27,000 tons is also requested. Withdrawal in a short period of time of such large amounts from the normal shipments to the US would have a serious effect on the US rearmament effort and jeopardize the continued acceptance of the agreement by the U.S. Upon receipt of the above information from the Embassy, the

[1] Not printed.

Department will make an effort to space the shipment of Chile's quota of copper so as not to interfere with the overall plans of the Office of Defense Mobilization.

WEBB

725.5–MSP/12–1751

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Milton Barall of the Office of South American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] December 17, 1951.

Participants: Mario Rodríguez, Minister Counselor, Chilean Embassy
Mr. Bernbaum, Officer in Charge, NWC, OSA
Mr. Barall, Chile Desk Office, OSA

Mr. Bernbaum explained that certain Latin American nations were being invited to negotiate bilaterally with the United States, under the terms of the Mutual Security Act of 1951 [1] which allotted $38 millions for furthering hemispheric defense. He pointed out that while other countries were also being approached, their names were still secret and that the Ambassadors had not been called in since the visit of a series of Ambassadors would have aroused undesirable speculative interest in this matter. Mr. Bernbaum stated that the actual approach to the Chilean Government would be made through our Embassy in Santiago and that the purpose of this conversation was to keep the Chilean Embassy in Washington abreast of developments. Upon receipt of a favorable reply from the Chilean Government, the American Ambassador in Chile would be ready to begin negotiations immediately. He would be assisted by a general or flag officer, and other officers of the armed forces, who could be dispatched from the United States immediately. At such time as it was agreed to negotiate, public announcement could be made.

Mr. Rodriguez expressed pleasure at being informed of developments and stated that his government had been wondering how the Mutual Security Act would be implemented. He mentioned the fact that the Chilean Constitution required Congressional approval before sending troops abroad or before permitting foreign troops to be stationed on Chilean soil. Therefore, he was of the opinion that any agreement reached would have to be submitted to the Chilean legislature for ratification. He also pointed out that the Chileans very firmly regard the Straits of Magellan as national waters and that if the United States contemplated joint protection of the Straits by Chile and Argentina this would certainly meet with a great deal of opposition in Chile. Mr. Rodríguez said he would inform his government that the approach would be made through the Foreign Office.[2]

[1] For text of the Mutual Security Act (Public Law 165), approved October 10, 1951, see 65 Stat. 373.

---

[2] In telegram 319, from Santiago, December 22, 1951, not printed, Ambassador Bowers informed the Department of State that he had left an aide-mémoire with the Chilean Foreign Minister inquiring whether the Chilean Government wished to enter into bilateral negotiations for a mutual security agreement (725.5–MSP/12–2251). The Chilean Government accepted the invitation, and the negotiations began on January 21, 1952 (725.5–MSP/1–2152).

COLOMBIA

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND COLOMBIA[1]

Editorial Note

On January 11, 1951, the Board of Directors of the Export–Import Bank had authorized a credit of $1,503,000 to the National Railways of Colombia to finance the purchase of five Diesel electric locomotives and spare parts in the United States (821.10/1–1851). For further information, see Export–Import Bank of Washington. Twelfth Semiannual Report to Congress for the Period January–June 1951 (Washington, 1951), pages 11–12, 36.

On November 1, 1951, the Board of Directors of the Export–Import Bank established a line of credit up to $20,000,000 in favor of the Colombian Bank of the Republic or such commercial banks as it might designate to finance the purchase and shipment of raw cotton from the United States to Colombia (821.10/11–151). For further information of this loan, see Export–Import Bank of Washington, Thirteenth Semiannual Report to Congress for the Period July–December 1951 (Washington, 1952), pages 14, 36. For a Department of State notice concerning the loan, see Department of State Bulletin, November 19, 1951, page 828.

---

[1] Continued from Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 802 ff.

821.2612/2–151

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Albert H. Gerberich of the Office of South American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] February 1, 1951.

Subject: Colombian application for International Bank Highway Construction Credit.

Participants: Ambassador Eduardo Zuleta Angel
Minister-Counselor Diego Suarez[1]
Minister of Public Works Jorge Leyva[2]

---

[1] Diego Suarez Costa.
[2] Jorge Leyva Urdaneta.

Mr. William McChesney Martin, Asst. Secy. of Treasury
Mr. John S. DeBeers (Treasury)
Mr. Atwood,[3] Mr. Gerberich (OSA)

The Minister of Public Works said that he wished to outline the difficulty he has been having in presenting an application for a credit to the International Bank to defray dollar expenses in the Colombian highway construction program. He said the condition of the Colombian roads is incredibly bad—so bad, that the average life of a truck on them is not more than 12 to 14 months. The Minister referred to the Currie Report,[4] which indicates that improvement of transportation facilities is one of Colombia's chief needs. He said he had discarded his original highway plan to make it conform to the Currie recommendations, and then discussed it with officials of the International Bank. They have been studying this revised plan for four or five months now, but have not shown any receptiveness to a formal application. Instead they have kept informing him that the project requires more study, and have sent engineers, lawyers, etc., to advise with the Colombians from time to time. The Colombians cannot wait longer, and the Minister hoped Mr. Martin could inquire into the subject and help them if he can.

Mr. Martin said he would be glad to do what he could. He asked how much the total amount would be. The Minister said that the entire project would be 165,000,000 pesos, and dollars would have to be obtained for 30% of this, about $26,000,000 in all. The term of the loan would be four years.

The Minister also brought up the arrangements that had been made with a Belgian firm for a 6-year credit to purchase rolling stock for the National Railways. The International Bank officials had suggested that action on this be deferred until they could study it, and perhaps the credit could be furnished through the Bank. This project is still under study, and the Minister is minded to transfer it to the Export-Import Bank, but didn't want to make a false step, as he is not aware of the line of demarcation between the jurisdictions of the two Banks.

Mr. Martin said he was not in a position to speak for the Export-Import Bank, but he wanted to explain that originally the plan was to have that Bank in the course of time restrict itself to short-term credits while the International Bank should handle long-term, more comprehensive development credits.[5] He said he would inquire about the railway credit at the same time that he inquires about the highway credit application.[6]

[3] Rollin S. Atwood, Deputy Director, Office of South American Affairs.

[4] A nine-man mission headed by Mr. Lauchlin Currie (popularly known as the Currie Mission) had been sent to Colombia in July 1949, by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD), for the purpose of assessing the country's economic potentialities and recommending an integrated program for economic development. For the mission's report, see IBRD, The Basis of a Development Program for Colombia. Report of a Mission headed by Lauchlin Currie and sponsored by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development in collaboration with the Government of Colombia (Washington, 1950).

[5] For documentation concerning the establishment of the IBRD, see Foreign Relations, 1946, vol. I, pp. 1384 ff.; for information on the Export–Import Bank, see United States Senate, Legislative History of the Export–Import Bank of Washington, Senate Document No. 85, 83d Cong., 2d Sess. (Washington, 1954). For documentation relating to the status of the jurisdictional issue between the two banks in 1951, see vol. I, pp. 1573 ff.

[6] On April 10, 1951, the Board of Directors of the IBRD approved a loan of $16,000,000 to the Republic of Colombia to finance the reconstruction of portions of Colombia's highway network, and the loan became effective on July 6 (398.14/7–3151). In a letter dated May 5, 1951, to the Secretary of the Treasury, John W. Snyder, commenting on the loan, the President of the IBRD, Eugene R. Black, pointed out that only slightly more than two months had elapsed between Colombia's request and the conclusion of the loan (Department of State National Advisory Council Documents, Document No. 1150, June 5, 1951, Lot 60 D 137, Box 367).

611.214/3–551

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Charles H. Sullivan of the Commercial Policy Staff

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] March 5, 1951.

Subject: Proposed Adjustment of FCN Treaty[1] with Colombia to Special Tax Situation of Flota Gran Colombiana.[2]

Participants:

Shipping Lines:	Department:	Commerce (OIT):
Mr. E. Russell Lutz, Grace Line	OSA—Mr. Krieg[3]	Mr. Koushnareff[7]
Mr. R. Harlow, United Fruit Co.	—Mr. Gerberich
Mr. Matthew Ahearn, United Fruit Co.	ARA—Mr. Nolan[4]	Federal Maritime Board:
Mr. Thomas Bartle, Lykes Bros. Steamship Co.	SD—Mr. Falck[5]	Mr. Spencer[8]
	CP—Mr. Setser[6]
	—Mr. Sullivan

This meeting was held in order to explain to representatives of shipping enterprises interested in Colombian traffic the problem occasioned

[1] The draft of a proposed Treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation was presented to the Colombian Government in October 1948. A copy of the draft was enclosed with the Department of State's instruction 177, to Bogotá, dated October 16, 1948 (711.212/9–248). For documentation on the subsequent negotiations between the United States and Colombia, see Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. II, pp. 611 ff.; and ibid., 1950, vol. II, pp. 802 ff.

[2] Flota Mercante Gran Colombiana, a shipping line jointly owned by Colombia, Venezuela, and Ecuador.

[3] William L. Krieg, Officer in Charge, North and West Coast Affairs, Office of South American Affairs.

[4] Charles P. Nolan, Officer in Charge, Transportation and Communications, Office of Regional American Affairs.

[5] L. James Falck, Assistant Chief, Shipping Policy Staff, Office of Transport and Communications Policy.

[6] Vernon G. Setser, Assistant Chief, Commercial Policy Staff, Office of International Trade Policy.

[7] Serge G. Koushnareff.

[8] William A. Spencer.

in connection with the treaty negotiations by Colombian Law 10 of 1946 which exempts the Flota Mercante Gran Colombiana from income taxation, and to apprize them of the course of action which the Department and the other interested agencies plan to adopt in this connection.

It was explained that Colombia insisted on maintaining the Flota exemption, which was deemed to be inconsistent with Article XI of the proposed treaty. Article XI provides, inter alia, for national treatment in matters of taxation. It was further explained that the Department had tried to solve this problem by incorporating in the treaty a provision for reciprocal exemption of the income of shipping enterprises from double taxation [9] but that Colombia had refused to accept a provision to this effect within the context of the FCN treaty, claiming: (1) that the treaty did not afford Colombia advantages which would compensate it for its loss of revenue under such a provision; and (2) that the Flota exemption was in effect a subsidy to national shipping within the meaning of Article 35 of the Economic Agreement of Bogota.[10] In view of the circumstances of the negotiation and of the availability of other media for obtaining relief from double income taxation for U.S. shipping enterprises operating to Colombia, it was proposed to provide specifically through a Protocol provision or an exchange of notes accompanying the treaty, that the establishment of rules to govern the income taxation of shipping enterprises shall not be dealt with in the treaty but shall be left to an appropriate agreement on double taxation. It was pointed out in the latter connection that the matter could be dealt with either within the framework of a convention for the avoidance of double taxation or through an executive agreement relating exclusively to the income taxation of transportation enterprises.

Mr. Lutz stated that the representatives of the shipping companies would explain the problem of the Flota exemption to their principals, who would probably communicate to the Department whatever reaction they might have to the proposed removal of the matter from the treaty to an agreement on double taxation.

It was emphasized during the discussion that Colombia had accepted the standard navigation provisions without modification, and the limited scope of the Protocol provision referring to governmental [9] For documentation concerning United States policy with respect to double taxation treaties, see vol. I, pp. 1233 ff.

[10] This agreement, approved by the Ninth International Conference of American States, had not gone into effect. For documentation on the conference, see Foreign Relations, 1948, vol. IX, pp. 1 ff. For text of the agreement, see Department of State Publication No. 3263, Ninth International Conference of American States, Bogotá, Columbia, March 30–May 2, 1948: Report of the Delegation of the United States of America with Related Documents (Washington, 1948), pp. 201 ff., or Annals of the Organization of American States: 1949 (Washington, 1949), vol. 1, pp. 99 ff.

shipping assistance (with indirect mention of Article 1(b) of IMCO [11] and Article 35 of the Bogota Agreement) also was explained.

Mr. Lutz observed that at the present time the principal difficulties the shipping companies encounter in their Colombian operations result from:

(1) Discriminatory exchange control practices which divert cargo to Flota ships. (In this connection, paragraph 4 of the new exchange control article recently given to the Colombians was read to Mr. Lutz who appeared of the opinion that it would afford a substantial degree of protection in matters of this kind.)

(2) Practices of Colombian Government entities who are routing their foreign purchases almost entirely in Flota ships.

(3) Practices of port authorities, particularly where ports are Government-operated, who give preferential treatment to national ships in berthing and like matters. (After some discussion, however, the general understanding was that these practices were not of particular importance with respect to Colombia and that in any event the standard navigation article would assure nondiscriminatory treatment.)

Mr. Lutz indicated that there were no other problems likely to have a measurably detrimental effect on their Colombian operations.

[11] The convention establishing the International Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO) was signed at Geneva, March 6, 1948, but it did not enter into force for the United States until March 17, 1958. For text, see United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), vol. 9, p. 621, or Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 4044.

Editorial Note

By an exchange of notes signed at Bogotá on March 5 and March 9, 1951, the United States and Colombia concluded a Point IV General Agreement for Technical Cooperation, which entered into force on the latter date. Copies of the notes were transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 1069, from Bogotá, March 8 (821.00–TA/3–951). For text of the agreement, see 2 UST 799, or TIAS No. 2231. For the Department's press release dated March 9, 1951, see the Department of State Bulletin, March 26, 1951, page 501.

547-842—79——83

611.214/3–1651

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Charles H. Sullivan of the Commercial Policy Staff

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] March 16, 1951.

Subject: Views of Shipping Lines on Proposed Adjustment of FCN Treaty with Colombia to Special Tax Situation of Flota Gran Colombiana.

Participants:	Shipping Lines:	Department:
	Mr. E. Russell Lutz, Grace Line.	OSA—Mr. Krieg
		—Mr. Gerberich
	Mr. Thomas Bartle, Lykes Bros. Steamship Co.	ARA—Mr. Nolan
		—Mr. Russell
	Mr. Henry Giardina, Gulf and South American Steamship Co.	SD—Mr. Falck
		CP—Mr. Setser
		—Mr. Sullivan

This meeting was held in order that representatives of the interested shipping enterprises might communicate to the Department the views of their principals regarding: (1) the Department's proposed solution (previously explained in a meeting on March 5)[1] of the problem occasioned in connection with the treaty negotiations by Colombian insistence on maintaining the existing exemption of the Flota Mercante Gran Colombiana from income taxation; (2) treaty coverage of consular fees and charges; and (3) exchange restrictions as they affected navigation enterprises.

(1) The shipping representatives indicated that they thoroughly understood the Department's problem in connection with the treaty negotiations and felt that it should proceed, as proposed, on the basis of stipulating specifically in the treaty that the income taxation of shipping enterprises should not be dealt with in the treaty itself but should be left to an appropriate agreement for the avoidance of double taxation. They indicated that their principals were strongly interested in the conclusion of an agreement with Colombia that would afford United States shipping enterprises relief from Colombian income taxation and expressed the belief that this interest would be brought to the attention of the Treasury Department, particularly in connection with the long-pending double tax convention. They expressed the view that Flota was not heavily taxed by the United States and stated that their tax experts found it difficult to understand why, under the existing tax regulations, Flota was not required to pay more than appeared to be the case.

(2) The shipping representatives expressed preference for the insertion in the standard FCN navigation provisions of a specific reference to consular fees and charges. The Department representatives indicated that it was the intent to cover consular fees in this provision and they believed that the present language adequately did so. Moreover, the inclusion in new treaties of a specific reference to consular fees might cause doubts as to whether such fees are covered in existing treaties, such as that with Uruguay, which contain the standard navigation provisions. The shipping representatives explained that consular fees did not constitute a problem with respect to Colombia but were a serious matter in the case of Ecuador; and they hoped that in any negotiation with Ecuador the Department would strongly maintain its present position of insisting on national treatment in this matter.

[1] See the memorandum dated March 5, 1951, p. 1293.

(3) The shipping representatives expressed gratification with that feature of the Department's recent FCN proposals to Colombia on exchange controls which was designed to assure transport enterprises of protection from the application of exchange restrictions in a manner detrimental to their interests or to their competitive position. They were inclined to attach special importance to the latter point; and urged that the Department do its utmost to obtain Colombian acceptance of this particular assurance, and of the new provision in its entirety.

(The shipping representatives indicated that, although they could not speak with authority in this connection, they believed that the United Fruit Company shared their views on these matters.)

611.21/5–2251

Policy Statement Prepared in the Department of State

[Extracts] [1]

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] May 22, 1951.

COLOMBIA

A. OBJECTIVES

In its relations with Colombia the United States seeks to retain and perfect Colombian cooperation in our plans for western hemisphere defense; [2] to persuade Colombia, within the framework of our basic policy of non-intervention, to strengthen her democratic institutions; and by furnishing economic and technical assistance,[3] to help Colombia keep its traditional place as a stable, friendly democracy.

---

[1] The portions omitted from this policy statement duplicate material in the policy statement for Colombia for the previous year, which is printed in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, p. 817.

[2] For documentation concerning United States policy with respect to hemisphere defense and related matters, see pp. 985 ff.

[3] For documentation concerning the technical assistance policy of the United States toward the other American Republics as a group, see pp. 1038 ff.

B. BACKGROUND

. . . . . .

We are still disturbed about the widespread civil strife and religious persecution in Colombia, which seems to have become worse in 1951 instead of better. The country continues to be governed under a state of siege and Congress has not been permitted to meet since 1949. The restrictions on public gatherings, press and radio have been somewhat relaxed, but censorship of the press in particular continues to cause widespread dissatisfaction, both at home and abroad. The administration continues to be a one-party government, with no likelihood that the Liberals will agree to collaborate or even recognize the government as functioning legally.

Internal Political Situation.

. . . . . .

The Liberals have made it clear that they do not recognize the validity of President Gomez' election.[4] Economically the position of Colombia has improved since he took office. However, the situation is unsatisfactory and potentially dangerous, for the Liberal majority considers itself held in subjection by a Conservative dictatorship supported by the Church and maintained by force of arms.

Our policy in the present situation is to steer a careful neutral course, striving on the one hand to avoid giving substance to Liberal accusations that the US is aiding the present administration to set up a dictatorship of a minority party in Colombia, and on the other hand pursuing our traditional policy of cooperating with the constituted government of the country and abstaining from intervention in domestic political affairs.

Communism and Labor.

. . . . . .

Organized labor in Colombia is affiliated almost entirely with one or the other of two large federations, the Colombian Federation of Labor (CTC) or the Union of Colombian Workmen (UTC). The latter federation has appeared on the scene only in recent years and has gained ground rapidly because of the approval given it by the Church and the strong support received from the government. In 1949 the UTC was given official recognition in place of the CTC, which fell into disfavor because of the activity of Communist elements within its directive board. The CTC in 1950 split into two factions, one Liberal-controlled and the other Communist-controlled, the former being the stronger in point of numbers. The actual strength of the Communist branch is not known, but is not believed to be great. The UTC has been gaining in numbers by defection of subordinate unions from the rival groups, and its numerical strength is probably equal to that of the two wings of the older Federation today, if it does not actually exceed it. This is a critical period in the development of the Colombian labor movement, and current events will doubtless have considerable effect on the state of affairs for some years to come.

[4] Laureano Gómez, unopposed Conservative Party candidate, was elected President of Colombia in November 1949, and he assumed office in early 1950.

Collaboration in Hemisphere Defense. Colombia is of great potential importance in any system of hemisphere defense because of its strategic proximity to the Panama Canal and its frontage on both the Caribbean and the Pacific, although at present we do not envisage asking for any bases in Colombian territory for the permanent defense of the Panama Canal. During 1948 and 1949, at the initiative of the Secretary of the Army,[5] a preliminary ground survey was made with Colombian collaboration to determine the possibility of constructing a second interocean canal across the Darien Isthmus. It is a policy of the United States to insure that no potential enemy gains a foothold on Colombian territory as a base for operations.

The US has sought to further Colombian military collaboration by permitting the export to Colombia of reasonable amounts of military equipment considered necessary for its internal security,[6] and to enable the Colombian Government to carry out its role in hemisphere defense. In addition, an effort will be made to provide Colombia on somewhat easier terms than hitherto with the arms that will be needed for this purpose and for assisting the UN efforts to combat aggression. Colombia was the first among the other American republics to furnish a frigate to serve with our naval forces in the Korean theater and a battalion of troops for the land operations there.

. . . . . .

Attitude Toward Democratic Institutions. We have been much disturbed by recent developments in Colombian political and religious life. Colombia has been under a state of siege since November 9, 1949. During that period the national Congress has not been permitted to meet, nor have any departmental and municipal bodies been allowed to assemble except where the Conservative governors have considered it safe for the party's interests for them to do so. The Council of State and the Supreme Court, both of which until recently had Liberal majorities, have been brought under control by what the government calls constitutional means. The highest ranking military officers have in many cases been superseded by others of whose pro-Conservative sympathies there can be no doubt. The Liberals charge that throughout the civil service their members have been discharged wholesale and the jobs given to Conservatives; they also charge that coercive measures have been employed everywhere to repress Liberals or bring them into line, and that the police have been handpicked for expressly this purpose. Present indications are that an all-Conservative Congress will be elected in June, since the Liberal Party has refused to go to the polls. Since this would remove the danger that Congress might impeach the President or repeal the extraordinary legislation issued by executive decree during the emergency, it is probable that the state of siege will then be lifted.

[5] Kenneth C. Royall.

[6] Documents pertaining to Colombia's efforts to purchase arms from the United States during 1951 are in Department of State decimal files 721.56 and 721.5621 for that year.

Civil violence during the past year has been more widespread than at any time since the Conservatives came into power in 1946. For some months the whole Llanos region was in rebellion, and this has not yet been completely overcome in some areas. There has been banditry throughout the central Andes, from Cauca on the south to Bolívar on the north. Piracy on the Magdalena River has forced vessels to tie up at river ports overnight where they can be protected. A large national police force has been organized under the supervision of a British mission. Severe repressive measures seem thus far only to have aggravated the situation and fanned the flames of partisan and religious hatred.

The persecution of Protestants,[7] which is closely linked to the political violence, since most Protestants are Liberals, continues to be a blot on Colombia's record, and the Conservative Party, the Government, and the Church cannot escape a share of the responsibility for it. Missionaries from the United States have been among the victims of these outbreaks of religious intolerance, some have been beaten and jailed and their property destroyed, and one has lost his life. There is reason to believe that the Government desires to give adequate protection and prevent the recurrence of these incidents, but that it is unable to enforce its decrees in the more remote rural areas. It also appears to have adopted the definite policy of refusing visas to missionaries planning to enter Colombia.[8] [7] For previous documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 816 ff.

---

[8] In a letter to United States Senator Irving M. Ives (R–N.Y.), dated August 16, 1951, Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Edward G. Miller, Jr. stated in part the following:

"The Department of State has been fully conscious of the plight of Protestant missionaries and has from time to time instructed the Embassy in Bogota to give all justifiable aid to those American citizens who have been injured in their persons or properties. The Embassy has taken up numerous cases of this nature with the Colombian Government and in some of them the Embassy has been able to obtain punishment of the guilty parties or to have other corrective measures applied. In other cases, the Embassy has not been successful in promptly obtaining what we consider to be adequate redress.

At the same time, the Department has urged American Protestant missionaries to be most circumspect in their actions, to refrain from any political activity, and to report promptly to the Embassy and to the Colombian authorities any incidents in which they may have been aggrieved." (Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26).

In general, our policy is to persuade the Colombian Government to relax its present restrictions upon democratic institutions and urge it to avoid drifting into a dictatorship of the right. We endeavor to orient our public affairs program so as to obtain more adherents for democratic ideals. In any of our actions seeking changes in internal Colombian affairs we are guided and limited by our strict observance of the principle of non-intervention.

Economic Relations. In encouraging economic development in Colombia it is our policy to place emphasis on the improvement of agricultural production and of transportation. Approximately $300,000 has been authorized for projects for fiscal 1951 under the Point Four Program. Technical assistance is now rendered in a number of fields of activity, including agricultural research, rubber experimentation, combating plant diseases and insect pests, irrigation and power projects, health and sanitation, railway and highway development, the coal industry, civil administration reform, and banking reform. In the financing of development projects, investment of private US capital is encouraged.

In line with our general policy of assuring throughout the world more favorable conditions for economic development and, more broadly, of furthering liberal principles of trade and economic relations in general, we have sought since 1940 to enter into negotiations with Colombia for a comprehensive modern treaty of friendship, commerce and navigation.[9] The 1846 Treaty,[10] while not the weakest of treaties of that period, is nevertheless outmoded, and US business interests have held the view that its replacement by an up-to-date treaty would be desirable.

These efforts culminated in the signature on April 26th of a comprehensive FCN treaty,[11] which we are inclined to consider in most respects as the most satisfactory treaty of the kind to be concluded since World War II. The treaty is based squarely upon our standard draft, and its establishment provisions are deemed to be particularly satisfactory. Colombia agreed to strong provisions on most matters of interest to US investors and, in a matter of particular importance, accepted an expropriation provision which should amply protect US interests against that feature of the Colombian Constitution which [9] For documentation concerning the general policy of the United States with respect to the modernization of treaties of friendship, commerce, and navigation, see vol. I, pp. 1233 ff.

---

[10] Reference is to the Treaty of Peace, Amity, Navigation, and Commerce, signed at Bogotá, December 12, 1846, and entered into force, June 10, 1848; for text, see Department of State Treaty Series (TS) No. 54, or 9 Stat. 881.

[11] The draft treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation, signed at Washington, had not gone into effect. Soon after it was signed, the Colombian Government raised questions concerning the interpretation of the most-favored-nation clause in Article III with respect to religious matters, and discussion of this matter extended beyond 1951. The draft treaty was not ratified by Colombia, however, and it was withdrawn from the United States Senate on June 30, 1953. Pertinent documents are in Department of State decimal file 611.214.

gives the Congress authority to take property without compensation in certain circumstances. Colombia also accepted our standard proposals on exchange controls, commercial arbitration and navigation; and, although it was not possible to develop provisions on territorial preferences and on the tax treatment of shipping enterprises which meet the optimum standards of US policy in those fields, reasonably satisfactory formulae were worked out.

With respect to requests for assistance from government agencies in financing economic development projects, it is our policy to favor consideration according to the criteria of economic justification and availability of private capital. We have recognized, however, that emergency requirements such as those that arose from the events of April 1948 deserve unusually sympathetic consideration. At the same time it is US policy to urge Colombia to finance concomitant local currency costs for reconstruction through non-inflationary means, in order among other things to avoid further pressure on the exchange rate by an increase of the circulating medium. In collaboration with the IMF Colombia very recently eliminated its certificate system [12] and all of its import control with the exception of a prohibited list. It also eliminated all exchange taxes except the National Stamp Tax and depreciated its exchange rate to 2.50 pesos per dollar for all transactions except coffee exports, to which a mixed rate of 2.0875 pesos per dollar applies.

Protectionist sentiment has increased in Colombia in recent years, inspired by expansion in domestic industries. Post-war price rises that impaired the revenue value of the peso, plus the protectionist motivation, furnished the impetus to the Colombian objective of general upward adjustment in customs duties. However, the Reciprocal Trade Agreement of 1936 [13] bound rates on many products against increase, and Colombia as a signatory of the ITO Charter [14] was committed to seek tariff reductions. After GATT [15] tariff negotiations broke down, the Trade Agreement was jointly terminated on December 1, 1949,[16] giving Colombia freedom of action, and in July 1950, the new Colom-

[12] The certificate system represented one of the two principal types of exchange in Colombia. It was based on so-called Certificates of Exchange, which were issued by the Bank of the Republic, and used to pay for gold produced in the country, all of which had to be sold to the Bank. The certificates could be exchanged for dollars received in payment for certain selected imports, and they could also be sold freely on the Stock Exchange to importers for use in payment of specified imports.

[13] For text of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement signed at Washington, September 13, 1935, effective May 20, 1936, see Department of State Executive Agreement Series (EAS) No. 89, or 49 Stat. (pt. 2) 3875.

[14] For information on matters relating to the International Trade Organization (ITO), see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, pp. 779 ff.

[15] For text of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), concluded at Geneva, October 30, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, January 1, 1948, see TIAS No. 1700, or 61 Stat. (pts. 5–6).

[16] For the exchange of notes signed at Washington, October 12, 1949, effective the same date, which terminated the existing reciprocal trade agreement, see TIAS No. 2207, or 2 UST 569.

bian tariff went into effect. It is hoped Colombia may still adhere to GATT principles and join that organization.

Colombia's lend lease responsibility has reached a satisfactory conclusion through a dollar lend lease settlement arrangement signed April 13, 1950.[17] Payments thereunder have satisfactorily been met and only one payment remains to fully liquidate all lend lease accounts.[18] Surplus property indebtedness is gradually being paid off, and there are no arrearages.

On August 15, 1951 the de Mares Concession of the Tropical Oil Company will revert to the Government. In anticipation of this, a National Petroleum Enterprise has been formed by the Government, and it has entered into two agreements with the Tropical Oil Company covering technical assistance and administration of the future exploitation of the concession, as well as the financing, enlargement and administration of the Barrancabermeja refinery. The trend in legislation which had resulted in restricting foreign company operations was reversed in 1950 by a series of decree-laws which were designed to create a favorable atmosphere for foreign investment in petroleum development, and as a result activity by foreign companies in petroleum exploration and exploitation has been reactivated. Labor conditions in the oil industry have been relatively stable due in large measure to increased salaries and other financial benefits obtained by labor under negotiated contracts. Labor's previous insistence for a greater scope in company management and for compulsory arbitration on all issues has subsided.

Our policy continues to be, on the one hand, to avoid intervening in internal Colombian labor affairs, and on the other hand to see to it that US oil interests receive fair treatment as long as their concessions are in force and that adequate payment is provided in the event of expropriation. We desire that Colombia's petroleum potential be increased and that it be adequately secured and controlled in friendly hands so that it may be available in increased quantity when needed for Western hemisphere defense.

Negotiations are now being conducted for a Bilateral Civil Aviation Agreement,[19] which is intended to replace the Olaya-Kellogg Air Pact of 1929,[20] concluded in the days when international air operations were [17] For information on the Lend-Lease Settlement Arrangement, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, footnote 3, p. 816.

---

[18] In a note to the Colombian Embassy dated July 19, 1951, the Department of State acknowledged receipt of a check from the Colombian Government in the amount of $42,398.41, which completed Colombia's obligations to the United States under the terms of the Settlement Arrangement (721.56/6–2851).

[19] An air transport agreement with Colombia was not signed until 1956. A memorandum of March 3, 1952, by John L. Hill of the Aviation Policy Staff contains a detailed review of the negotiations from 1945 to its date (611.2194/3–352).

[20] For the exchange of notes signed at Washington, February 23, 1929, effective the same date, which constituted the air pact, see Charles I. Bevans (ed.), Treaties and Other International Agreements of the United States of America, 1776–1949 (Washington, 1968–1972), vol. 6, p. 906.

limited to flying boat service which is now obsolete and should be superseded by a new pact based on the "Bermuda" principles.

While we do not wish to obstruct the creation and development of merchant fleets by any foreign country and recognize the right of nations to subsidize their merchant shipping, we do object to the strengthening of their merchant fleets through discriminatory practices against US shipping. In the past year the Colombian Government adopted certain practices of this nature in order to protect and develop the Flota Mercante Grancolombiana, owned jointly by Colombia, Venezuela and Ecuador. These practices, such as the use of exchange controls to arbitrarily divert commercial cargo to Colombian flag vessels and the exertion of influence on exporters to ship coffee on Grancolombiana vessels, were protested by this Government, and a satisfactory solution was reached. In addition, a serious situation resulted because of the acceptance by the Flota Grancolombiana of southbound freight in pesos, contrary to Shipping Conference rules. This was settled by an agreement between the Conference and the Flota,[21] with the very active assistance of the Department and the Embassy. One major problem still remains: Colombian Law No. 10 of 1946, exempting the Flota from the payment of income, excess profits and patrimony taxes, which all other shipping lines operating to Colombian ports are required to pay. Various attempts to adjust this problem have been made. Two additional avenues remain for reaching a solution on this subject: a special treaty on double taxation which is under study by the US Government, or an executive agreement providing for the reciprocal exemption from income taxes of transportation companies. With respect to the previous objection of the Colombian Government to the US requirement that goods shipped to Colombia and financed by Export–Import Bank loans be carried exclusively in US ships, this was amicably removed through a waiver by this Government of the above requirement and permitting the shipment of 50% of such goods on Colombian flag vessels.

C. RELATIONS WITH OTHER STATES

. . . . . .

D. POLICY EVALUATION

. . . . . .

In the economic field our activities have yielded mixed results: we have recently signed a new commercial treaty with Colombia; we have been successful in protecting certain American commercial interests, such as the shipping lines, but we have not succeeded in inducing the Colombian Government to modify its system of economic controls so as to create an atmosphere favorable to the free inflow of American private capital. Neither have we been successful in persuading Colombia of the folly of a high tariff system and the need for reducing tariff barriers. Loans by the Eximbank and International Bank have enabled Colombia to shore up its economy at points of crucial weakness: road and rail transport, electric power, and agricultural production. However, the Banks cannot be expected to extend loans in such volume as to carry the major portion of Colombia's capital requirements for economic development. The Colombian Government and private capital must make the largest contribution, with the Bank providing supplemental assistance. This calls for a continuance of our patient efforts to improve the conditions under which private investment operates in Colombia.

[21] Reference is to an agreement signed October 17, 1949, which forms part of an enclosure to despatch 457, from Bogotá, April 21, 1950 (911.5321/4–2150).

We should make every effort to guarantee that Colombian support of US objectives is more effective by establishing an identity of democratic purposes, using more fully all of our present methods, such as: technical assistance, including the training of technicians and students in the US; Eximbank and International Bank loans for sound projects, while encouraging conditions that will be attractive to private developmental capital; and direct military collaboration. These methods would serve to strengthen Colombia as a component country of the hemisphere for common security and prosperous economic and cultural interchange, as well as to obtain more unqualified short-term political cooperation from Colombia.

. . . . . .

795B.5/6–2751 : Circular airgram

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Offices in the American Republics [1]

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, June 27, 1951—12 : 15 p. m.

UNTRUE RUMORS REGARDING DESERTIONS FROM BATALLÓN COLOMBIA

The Department is informed that false and defamatory rumors are being circulated in Colombia concerning the Batallon Colombia, which embarked from the port of Buenaventura on May 21 and is now in Korea. Current stories are to the effect that more than half of the battalion deserted en route from Bogotá to Buenaventura, only about 300 men having actually embarked. It is probable that Communist propaganda throughout the Continent will seek to spread this and

[1] Sent to all missions in the American Republics, except Bogotá; sent to Bogotá for information only; sent also to the Consulates at Recife, São Paulo, and Porto Alegre, Brazil; Monterrey and Guadalajara, Mexico; and Guayaquil, Ecuador other destructive reports designed to detract from the effect of Colombia's cooperation with the UN in combatting Communist aggression in Korea by 1) indicating determined popular resistance in Colombia to participation in the Korean war; 2) creating the impression that Colombian troops in Korea are the reluctant victims of "Yankee imperialism"; 3) undermining public respect for the Batallon Colombia.

The following facts, supplied by Embassy Bogota, are for guidance and discretionary use in correcting false impressions on this subject:

1. The Batallon Colombia left Buenaventura for Korea with a total of 1045 men. Authorized strength was 1083. The battalion sailed below authorized strength (by 38 men) not because of any lack of volunteers but because of bureaucratic difficulties and delays. For example, a number of soldiers who were actually in hospitals were retained on its rolls, and were not ready for duty in time for the departure date. Soldiers and civilians continued to volunteer for service in Korea until the very day the battalion left Buenaventura; most of them, of course, could not be accepted.

2. FYI. There were some desertions from the battalion, as there are from all Colombian military units. These were due principally to 1) extremely cramped and poor living conditions in Bogota; 2) the fact that some unit commanders throughout the country, instead of sending the soldiers who volunteered for Korea, retained them and sent men of whom they wished to rid their units. End FYI.

3. The combat units of the battalion were up to full strength when it sailed.

4. As an index of the enthusiasm of the troops, during the crossing of the Quindio Pass, one truck in the military convoy slid off the road. Eleven soldiers sustained injuries including broken ribs, cuts, a broken collar bone, etc., requiring 24-hour hospitalization. All of the eleven insisted on sailing with the battalion and did sail.

5. The unit had more men by the time it reached Buenaventura than when it left Bogota. Several who had deserted decided to rejoin as the convoy passed through their home towns; two soldiers stationed in garrisons en route requested transfer to the Batallon Colombia and were accepted; also accepted were two civilians who volunteered as one of the trains passed through Cali.

In combating derogatory rumors, the fact that Communist propagandists are even willing to impugn the honor, courage, and devotion to freedom of Latin American soldiers should be pointed out as evidence of their denationalized, perverse state of mind.

The Department is arranging special coverage of the Batallon Colombia at the front. While avoiding any appearance of officious proprietary interest, USIE should use local facilities, where available, to disseminate the resultant material with a view to encouraging constructive interest in Colombia's representation in the UN forces.

ACHESON

795B.5/7–2751

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Secretary of State [1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] July 27, 1951.

Subject: Department of Defense Proposal to Bill Colombia Currently for Battalion in Korea.

The Department of Defense has informally proposed that the Department of State begin negotiations with the Government of Colombia with regard to the cost of equipping, training, transporting, and logistically maintaining the battalion of troops which the Colombian Government has sent to Korea. I understand that the E area of the Department supports this position. The reason given is that in its note of November 14, 1950 the Government of Colombia recognized "that there will be an obligation to reimburse the United States Government for the training, logistical support and other services which this battalion will have to receive, the details to be arranged later between the Government of Colombia and the Government of the United States".

Furthermore, the Department of Defense pointed out that discussions with regard to reimbursement to the United States for similar services have been commenced with all other Governments having troops in Korea except Ethiopia. Finally the Department of Defense pointed out that in his letter to you of September 30, 1950,[2] the Secretary of Defense [3] stated that: "I should like to observe that the Department of Defense attaches great importance to preserving this principle of reimbursement. In my opinion, the precedent which we are now establishing in the case of Korea will set the pattern for future collective military action by the United Nations. In a larger sense, this Government is acting as executive agent for the United Nations, and it would appear undesirable to establish any general principle that U.S. military supplies, services or equipment will be donated without creating any obligation on the part of their recipients. This is indeed an uncharted area in international affairs, and I therefore do not consider that we should be bound by such precedents as Lend-Lease, which was conceived and executed before the establishment of the United Nations".

ARA is opposed to beginning negotiations at this stage with the Government of Colombia. I understand this view is shared by NEA and UNA and it is also shared by General Bolté.[4] Our position is

---

[1] Sent through the Office of the Deputy Under Secretary of State, H. Freeman Matthews.

[2] See Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, p. 666.

[3] George C. Marshall.

[4] Lt. Gen. Charles L. Bolté, Deputy Chief of Staff for Plans, U.S. Army, and Chairman, Inter-American Defense Board.

based primarily upon the fact that to begin negotiations now will not be consonant with the quoted part of the Colombian Government's note of November 14, 1950 which states that details with regard to reimbursement will be arranged later. The entire import of our arrangement with Colombia is that the amount and form (i.e., currency) of payment will be negotiated later, i.e., when the full amount of the cost of our services rendered can be measured in the light of Colombia's capacity to pay. Capacity to pay can be measured only in the light of the total sum subject to reimbursement and any effort to discuss capacity to pay in relation to sums falling due periodically would be futile.

It is clear that there exists a split of opinion in the Pentagon between those charged with the responsibility for fiscal matters and those in charge of operations. It is the latter who have participated in the actual negotiations with other Governments in which we have endeavored to obtain offers of troops for Korea. You will recall that in the discussion with the Brazilian Foreign Minister [5] in which General Bolté was present, it was made very clear to the Brazilians that all in which we were interested was a recognition of an eventual responsibility for some kind of reimbursement. In all of the discussions which have taken place with goverments of countries in our area in which high officials of the Pentagon have been present, emphasis has been placed upon the same point, namely, that the obligation to repay was a remote one which would be left to future diplomatic discussions. In other words, the main objective has been to get troops and to worry about payment later in the light of the country's capacity to pay in relation to the total obligation incurred.

I am fearful that if, in the light of the informal discussions which were held by General Ridgway [6] and General Bolté with the Colombians last fall, the Colombians should now be presented with a formal bill for current expenses, such action would have an adverse repercussion upon our ability to obtain any further troop offers for Korea from other countries in Latin America. Nor do I see that any useful purpose would be served, even from a fiscal standpoint, in beginning these negotiations now since even those who advocate such action admit that if the Colombians plead inability to pay, no payment will in fact be exacted at this stage.

Consequently, it is my recommendation that you either direct UNA to prepare a letter for your signature to Secretary Marshall requesting the deferment of the negotiations with Colombia or that Mr. Matthews be requested to take this up through some other channel with the Department of Defense.

---

[5] João Neves da Fontoura.

[6] Lt. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway was Deputy Chief of Staff for Administration, U.S. Army, during 1950.

795B.5/7–951

Memorandum by the Special Assistant for Economic Affairs (Schaetzel) to the Secretary of State [1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] August 3, 1951.

Subject: Reimbursement for Logistical Support to Foreign Troops in Korea

Problem

Whether the United States should initiate negotiations for reimbursement with all countries to whom the United States is currently providing logistical support.

This issue is posed sharply in the case of Colombia. It becomes a matter of general concern in that an exception in the case of Colombia will affect the dozen or so negotiations with other countries now in process.

Background

This memorandum will not go over material on this subject contained in Mr. Thorp's memorandum to the Secretary of July 9, 1951 (Tab A).[2] In considering this paper, the Secretary inquired, "Could we devise some method of current settlement?" The present policy of seeking arrangements for settlement concurrently with the accruing of obligations is consistent with the Secretary's query, Mr. Harriman's earlier inquiry, and is the policy that has been pursued with all other countries. It should also be stated that the issue here is not immediate reimbursement in dollars or local currency, nor even a settlement schedule for future implementation; the point of dispute is whether negotiations should be initiated.

It is evident from a review of the considerations pro and con on the Colombia case that there is a conflict between two policies which requires a decision by G or the Secretary.

Proposal that the initiation of negotiations with Colombia be postponed for an indefinite period, or at least until the totality of Colombia's obligations can be determined.

This proposal is based on a conviction that if negotiations for settlement are initiated now with Colombia, the most likely result will be to lessen their enthusiasm for maintaining their battalion in Korea and, more importantly, may imperil our chances of persuading the Brazilians to despatch a division to Korea. ARA argues that in the State–Defense negotiations with the Colombians which preceded their agreement to make available a battalion to the United Nations forces, and with respect to more current negotiations with the Brazilians, there is no question but that an impression was left with the Latin

[1] Addressed also to Mr. Matthews.
[2] Not printed.

Americans that a financial settlement for logistical support was not a matter of immediate concern to us. With respect to this issue, our negotiators had had as their principal objective getting Colombia to accept the principle of repayment. The arguments in support of this position are developed more fully in Mr. Miller's memorandum of July 27 to the Secretary (Tab B).[3]

This position, in summary, is that the primary interest of the United States at this time is to see that more Latin American troops are despatched to and maintained in Korea; financial reimbursement, and in this instance the initiation of negotiations, is a distinctly secondary consideration.

Position that negotiation should be initiated at once with all countries to whom we are providing logistical support.

While the government's policy appears to be absolutely clear that negotiations for settlement should be undertaken at approximately the same time that troops are made available to the United Nations and obligations are incurred, this policy can, of course, be reversed if the considerations stated above do in fact contain the dominant U.S. interest. In other words, the fact that a policy exists is less important than the reasons which led to its adoption.

To recapitulate some of these reasons: We agree with the consideration stated in a letter from the Secretary of Defense that the principle of reimbursement establishes a precedent "which will set the pattern for future collective military action by the United Nations." This is not a point which rests on fiscal or budgetary considerations but, rather, on the undesirability of establishing "any general principle that U.S. military supplies, services or equipment will be donated (to carry out a United Nations program) without creating any obligation on the part of the recipients."

If an exception is made in the case of Colombia, it will be almost impossible to hold intact the present pattern of negotiations, and it is not unlikely that the net effect will be to put off all negotiations until the Korean engagement is finished.

Experience with lend-lease settlements points up the advantages of beginning negotiations with the objective of putting the settlement on a current basis while obligations are being incurred. Certainly the atmosphere most conducive to negotiations on this subject would seem to be while the battle goes on and the troops are in the field.

It has been argued that arrangements for reimbursement cannot be worked out until the final accounting is rendered. However, it should be possible to arrange a schedule of payments which would be realistic in view of the financial situation of the contributing country. Again, the internal budgetary arrangements for troop support, worked out within a country while its nationals are in battle, is an infinitely more favorable atmosphere than after the troops have returned and the engagement is a matter of history.

[3] Not attached to source text as Tab B, but see supra.

Conclusion

Various of the considerations set forth above are peripheral to the basic issue. That issue would seem to be:

(1) whether the principle of reimbursement is a matter of sufficient national importance so that at least negotiations to this end should be undertaken at once; or

(2) whether our major objective is to see that foreign troops, and in this case Latin American troops, are despatched in maximum number forthwith to Korea and that even the proposal to negotiate a settlement might stand in the way of achieving this objective.[4]

[4] In a note dated August 15, 1951, to Mr. Schaetzel and Mr. Miller, Deputy Under Secretary Matthews stated the following:

"I have given some thought to the question of approaching Colombia to initiate negotiations for reimbursement for logistical support of troops in Korea. I believe on balance that the approach should be delayed sixty days and reexamined in the light of conditions at that time." (795B.5/7–951) Department of State files indicate that negotiations were not undertaken during the remainder of 1951.

398.13/11–251: Airgram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Colombia

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, November 2, 1951.

A–125. The Executive Board of the International Monetary Fund met on Sunday, October 28, to consider an exchange proposal by the Colombian Government involving immediate devaluation of the buying rate for coffee exchange from pesos 2.0875 to 2.17 per dollar and progressively thereafter until after a period of forty months the rate for coffee exchange would be unified at the buying rate of pesos 2.50 per dollar which now applies to all other exchange proceeds.

The Fund Executive Board took the following decision:

1. Since the authorities of Colombia desire to proceed with the unification of the buying rates of exchange, and considering the not unfavorable exchange prospects of Colombia, the Fund makes no objection to a change in its multiple currency system by an immediate devaluation of the coffee buying rate of exchange from Ps $2.0875 to Ps $2.17 per US dollar, and progressive devaluations by Ps $0.00825 per US dollar every month for forty months until that rate is completely unified with the buying rate of Ps $2.50 which already applies to all other exchange proceeds.

2. It is understood that the authorities of Colombia will consult with the Fund if for any reason they should contemplate departing from any projected rate adjustment. If conditions should change in Colombia, the Fund can at any time suggest that the projected devaluation be modified or postponed.

3. To minimize the risks of inflation and exchange speculation attending the proposed devaluation of the coffee buying rate, the Fund recommends:

a. That the authorities of Colombia continue as long as possible the participation of the Government in the exchange profits, and either substitute other sources of fiscal revenue for the exchange profits once they have disappeared in the process of exchange rate unification, or reduce public expenditures accordingly; and that the authorities of Colombia continue to take other appropriate anti-inflationary fiscal and monetary measures.

b. That the authorities of Colombia retain, and if necessary strengthen, the regulations governing the surrender of the exchange proceeds from coffee exports, particularly a high minimum surrender price and a short surrender period.

While the Fund issued a press release on October 29,[1] the release included only paragraphs Nos. 1 and 2 of the decision quoted above and all of paragraph No. 3 remains confidential. The Fund understands that the exchange rate plan was announced in Colombia on October 29.

WEBB

[1] Not printed.

720.5/12–1751

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Albert H. Gerberich of the Office of South American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] December 17, 1951.

Subject: Military Aid Program for Colombia

Participants: Mr. Bernbaum,[1] ARA: OSA
Dr. Jorge Mejia Palacio, Minister Counselor, Colombian Emb.
Mr. Gerberich, ARA: OSA

Mr. Bernbaum informed Dr. Mejia that the United States has decided to allot thirty-eight million dollars under the military aid program for grant-aid to Latin America.[2] He explained that only certain of the republics would share in this, and those would be allotted funds in the order of their importance to hemisphere defense. One of these countries will be Colombia.

Our Embassy will take up shortly with the Colombian Government the desirability of making a certain amount available for military grant-aid, and if the Colombian Government expresses an interest in receiving a share, a negotiation team will leave Washington to implement our offer through talks at Bogotá. The present conversation had as its objective a wish to keep the Colombian Embassy in Washington fully informed of these developments.

[1] Maurice M. Bernbaum, Officer in Charge, North and West Coast Affairs, Office of South American Affairs.

[2] For documentation on the military grant aid program for Latin America, see pp. 985 ff.

Dr. Mejia said he assumed that the talks in Bogotá were directly connected with the aide mémoire [3] which the Colombian Embassy received last week from the Department. Mr. Bernbaum explained that that was another subject, and had to do with economic, financial and military assistance conditioned upon non-export of contraband materials to the Soviet Union and its satellites, but that the two matters are related, and that our team would doubtless discuss both while it is in Bogotá.

Mr. Bernbaum told Dr. Mejia that we will continue to keep the Embassy fully informed of any developments, especially the progress of any negotiations that may develop.

---

[3] Not printed.

COSTA RICA

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND COSTA RICA[1]

Editorial Note

On January 11, 1951, the United States and Costa Rica signed at San José a Point IV General Agreement for Technical Cooperation, which entered into force on the same date. The agreement was transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 544, from San José, January 11, 1951, not printed (818.00–TA/1–1151). For text, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 2186, or United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), volume 2, page 431. For a press release dated January 11 concerning the agreement, see the Department of State Bulletin, January 22, 1951, page 151.

[1] For information concerning United States relations with Costa Rica in 1950, see the editorial note, Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, p. 842.

611.18/3–151

Policy Statement Prepared in the Department of State

SECRET WASHINGTON, March 3, 1951.

COSTA RICA

A. OBJECTIVES

Our specific objectives in Costa Rica are to: 1) encourage the adoption and practice of policies which will preserve the democratic tradition of that country; 2) cooperate in the development of sound economic and fiscal policies as a basis for democratic progress; 3) obtain full Costa Rican cooperation in the Inter-American System for hemispheric security [1] and solidarity; 4) seek Costa Rican understanding of and support for US policy on extra-continental matters and in the United Nations; and 5) promote friendship and cultural collaboration between the people and the Governments of the United States and Costa Rica.

[1] For documentation concerning United States policy with respect to hemisphere defense and related matters, see pp. 985 ff.

B. POLICIES

General Background Information

For 300 years the Spanish colonists and their descendants lived a simple and isolated existence on the Central Plateau of Costa Rica. Their economy was virtually non-monetary, based upon barter exchange, and no families of great wealth or political domination were created. The Spanish culture and predominantly European blood-strain, with but a relatively slight mixture of indigenous blood, was retained to a large degree. As a result, there is less social stratification in Costa Rica than there is elsewhere in Latin America, the literacy rate is high, and the standard of living is higher generally than in any other Central American republic.

Costa Rica has a long tradition of political democracy, as the outgrowth of these unique and favorable conditions. It has never maintained an army, except during the times of national emergency, and has relied upon a small police force to maintain law and order. The introduction of coffee and bananas during the past century brought about a profound transformation in the economic and social life of the country. A monetary economy was evolved and the population of the Central Plateau greatly increased, so that nearly 75 percent of the entire population is concentrated in this area. Most of the domestic economic and social problems of Costa Rica today have their roots in this heavy population concentration in a limited area, and in the monetary and fiscal problems which grow out of an unbalanced economy.

In 1948, a successful popular revolution was waged against a corrupt and discredited regime[2] which, with Communist support, had attempted illegally to perpetuate itself.[3] On November 7, 1949, after being ruled by a Provisional Junta for 18 months, Costa Rica returned to a constitutional form of government. Six weeks of civil war intensified the fiscal and monetary problems which today remain unsolved in spite of energetic efforts of the new government.

We have believed the form of Government in Costa Rica to be exemplary in Latin America, and it was our policy, while recognizing the Provisional Junta which governed after the civil war, to encourage its early relinquishment of power in favor of a truly constitutional government. It remains our policy to support Costa Rica's efforts to adhere to these democratic traditions and to assist by all practical means in the establishment of a solid political, economic, and social basis upon which this tradition may survive and flourish.

Recognizing that a sound economic structure is an essential element of political democracy, it is our policy to provide, when requested, and usually on an expense-sharing basis, technical assistance and advice for the attainment of worth-while objectives. To implement this policy we are cooperating directly with Costa Rica in educational, health and sanitation programs, and in various agricultural projects to stimulate the production of food, rubber, coffee, and abacá.[4] We support and participate in the cost of the Inter-American Institute of Agricultural Sciences at Turrialba, and, in order to provide the communication network necessary for economic progress, we have supervised the construction of the Inter-American Highway, making major contributions to its over-all cost and granting substantial loans to Costa Rica for this purpose.

---

[2] Reference is to the regime of President Teodoro Picado Michalski.

[3] For documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1948, vol. IX, pp. 488 ff.

It is also our policy to support and encourage the investment of private US capital in Costa Rica. We have endeavored to point out to Costa Rica the advantages of such investment and of encouraging and maintaining an atmosphere in the country which will be conducive to this activity. It is also our policy to encourage the adoption and practice of policies by US firms operating there which recognize the changing economic, social and political ideas of the economically less advanced areas. Where necessary, we advocate the renegotiation and modernization of existing contracts in conformity with enlightened, modern practice. This is considered to be essential to the continuation of harmonious foreign operations in the face of a growing sense of nationalism, expanding labor organizations, and the like.

A continuous unfavorable balance of payments since 1944, chronic unbalance in the Government's budget, and dislocations arising from the civil war of 1948, have brought the country's finances to a virtually chaotic state. It is our policy to encourage the present Government of Costa Rica to take determined measures to put the Costa Rican financial house in order, and to reestablish its international credit on a satisfactory basis at an early date.

It is our policy to encourage Costa Rica to participate fully in the Organization of American States, to promote the growth of the Inter-American System, and to adhere to the principles of hemispheric peace, solidarity, and security. To this end we recognize and respect Costa Rica as an equal with full sovereignty, consult with her representatives on matters affecting the Western Hemisphere internally, encourage the solution of problems with neighbor states by lawful and peaceful means, and seek Costa Rican support in presenting a solid Inter-American front in extra-continental matters.

Costa Rica's support of US global foreign policy has a particular moral value despite that country's small size. It is our policy, therefore, to consult with Costa Rican officials on extra-continental questions of mutual interest, to acquaint them with our point of view, and to seek their support generally and in the United Nations.

---

[4] A plant yielding fiber for the production of manila hemp.

Costa Rica's democratic characteristics have made possible a truly genuine friendship with the United States. It is our policy to cultivate this friendship as a means of strengthening that country and the example it provides of what may be achieved through the democratic system. To this end, we support a full cultural and information program, including an educational mission and a Cultural Institute. We also support the exchange of professors and provide grants for the specialized training of Costa Ricans in the United States.

C. RELATIONS WITH OTHER STATES

At the conclusion of the civil war in 1948, leaders of the deposed regime escaped into Nicaragua taking with them certain aircraft and arms. To date, the Nicaraguan Government has refused to return this materiel to Costa Rica and, as a result, the relationships between these two countries have been strained. While it is our policy to seek a direct, bilateral, and peaceful solution of this problem, we have informally counseled, when asked, that the materiel be returned or that Nicaragua make a fair compensation therefor.

As a result of assistance given to the revolutionary leader Figueres [5] in 1948, Costa Rica, with other countries, was for a time utilized by elements of the erstwhile Caribbean Legion [6] as a base of operations. This added to the strained relations with Nicaragua, since the strong man of that country, Somoza [7] (then chief of the National Guard) was a consistent target of the Legion. At one point, Nicaragua was accused of violating the territory of Costa Rica with the result that the Organization of American States was called upon to intercede to maintain the peace of the Hemisphere.[8] It is our policy to watch carefully the activities of all free-booting international groups, to encourage the exchange of accurate information regarding their activities while discouraging the dissemination of irresponsible rumor, and to seek to have Costa Rica, as all nations in the area, disassociate itself from them entirely and prevent the use of its territory for concentration of their men and materiel. The present administration in Costa Rica has, from its inception, avoided any dealings wth the Caribbean Legion or other similar groups.

Recently there have been disturbing reports to the effect that, with the knowledge and support of President Somoza of Nicaragua, ex-President Picado of Costa Rica is preparing in southern Nicaragua for an armed adventure against his homeland. Although these reports are

[5] José Figueres Ferrer.

[6] A group of political exiles and military men from countries in the Caribbean region, with the alleged aim of overthrowing certain dictatorial regimes in the area. For documentation on the activities of the Caribbean Legion, see Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. II, pp. 437 ff.

[7] Anastasio Somoza García.

[8] For documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1948, vol. IX, pp. 488–542, passim, and the editorial note in ibid., 1949, vol. II, p. 436.

largely discredited, we are carefully watching possible developments and are prepared to take feasible action in favor of a peaceful solution, if necessary. There are also similarly disturbing but unsubstantiated reports that ex-President Figueres of Costa Rica is forming an armed group on his farm in northern Costa Rica for military action. Presumably such activity would be directed against Nicaragua and might be utilized by Somoza as a pretext for "defensive"action.

Costa Rica officially and its citizens individually have paid less lip service to the aim of Central American Union than have other nations in the area. It is our policy not to encourage or impede efforts to arrive at a satisfactory formula for Central American economic or political union. We recognize that such a union can and should come about only upon the initiative and by the agreement of the interested states.

D. POLICY EVALUATION

On November 7, 1949 Costa Rica returned, with the inauguration of President Ulate,[9] to a truly democratic and constitutional form of Government. During the first year of President Ulate's administration much has been done toward the restoration of stability in the Government, and steps have been taken, such as disbandment of the Army, to insure continued adherence to democratic forms. Whether due in large or small measure to the efforts of this Government, there has occurred a transformation which is in conformity with our policy toward Costa Rica. Costa Rica's opposition to Communism appears to be genuine and sincere. The Communist party has been outlawed in Costa Rica and the Government has given every indication of being alert to the threat of infiltration by the agents of international Communism, although it is not well equipped to cope with a real threat.

The desire of Costa Rica to take sound economic steps in an effort to strengthen its basis for political democracy has had our full approval. Our various cooperative missions are functioning to the satisfaction of both parties, and they are soon to be expanded under the Point IV program. We have obtained enabling legislation [10] and a new appropriation which will permit the resumption in 1951 of limited work on the Inter-American Highway, a large part of which will occur in Costa Rica. The abacá program conducted under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may also soon be expanded and, while contributing to the strength of the Costa Rican economy, is also helping to provide the United States with a source of supply for a fiber of great strategic value. The Inter-American Tropical Tuna Commission, recently established by the Governments of the United States and Costa Rica,[11] represents a step towards increasing the food supply of that country and of the United States through the properly regulated exploitation of a valuable resource in Costa Rican and surrounding waters.

[9] Otilio Ulate Blanco.

[10] Reference to the Second Supplemental Appropriation Act (Public Law 911), approved January 6, 1951; for text, see 64 Stat. 1223. The act authorized an appropriation of $4,000,000 to continue survey and construction of the Inter-American Highway.

We have successfully conducted negotiations for a final settlement of Costa Rica's Lend-Lease obligation [12] to the United States and have concluded an agreement, subject to legislative approval in Costa Rica, to reamortize the Export–Import Bank debt of that country on a mutually satisfactory basis. We have also received indications that Costa Rica will shortly take up with the Foreign Bondholders Protective Council the matter of resuming service on its outstanding publicly-floated bonds which have long been in default.[13] After consultation with the International Monetary Fund, Costa Rica has resorted temporarily to stringent exchange controls and multiple exchange surcharges as a method of dealing with its pressing balance of payments problem. The situation has improved to the point where foreign exchange is available currently for essential imports and also has been provided for settlement of a considerable part of the formerly frozen backlog of commercial obligations arising from past imports. It is hoped that Costa Rica will soon take steps in collaboration with the Fund to simplify its complex exchange rate system. The above-mentioned exchange surcharges, however, constituted a violation of our trade agreement [14] with Costa Rica. To assist in the solution of the problem, the United States agreed to a one-year waiver of certain provisions of the agreement. No permanent solution to the problem has yet been achieved, and it may be necessary for us to agree to a termination of the agreement [15] or to an extension of the waiver.

There have been no serious problems resulting from US capital investment in Costa Rica, and the minor ones which have recently arisen,

---

[11] The Inter-American Tropical Tuna Commission was established by a convention signed at Washington, May 31, 1949, and entered into force March 3, 1950. For text, see TIAS No. 2044, or 1 UST 230.

[12] For information on the conclusion of a Lend-Lease settlement arrangement with Costa Rica, see the editorial note printed in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, p. 842.

[13] During the fall of 1951, Costa Rican officials met several times with representatives of the Foreign Bondholders Protective Council (FBPC), but no specific bond settlement plan was agreed upon.

[14] Reference to the Reciprocal Trade Agreement between the United States and Costa Rica, signed at San José, November 28, 1936, and entered into force, August 2, 1937; for text, see Department of State Executive Agreement Series (EAS) No. 102, or 50 Stat. 1582.

[15] By an exchange of notes at Washington dated April 3, 1951, and entered into force on the same date, the United States and Costa Rica agreed to joint termination, effective June 1, 1951, of the trade agreement between the two governments which had been signed on November 28, 1936. For text of the notes, see TIAS No. 2237, or 2 UST 841; they are also printed, along with a press release dated April 4, in the Department of State Bulletin, April 23, 1951, p. 662.

particularly with respect to labor relations, have been satisfactorily solved. It may be anticipated, however, that expansion of the labor movement in Costa Rica will lead to a more noticeable conflict between labor and management interests which may call for the reexamination of policies followed by some firms in an effort to achieve a more liberal and modern approach to the problem of their operation in foreign countries. In 1949, the largest US firm [16] in Costa Rica paved the way for better relationships by renegotiating and modernizing its contract with the Government. The new agreement enables Costa Rica to benefit directly from the successful operation of the firm through a form of profit sharing. This company has also made more recent concessions to labor and to the Government of Costa Rica.

Costa Rica has continually assumed its full role in the Inter-American organizations, bringing to them a commendable spirit of democratic practice. It is believed the present Government will continue to support the ideals of continental solidarity and hemispheric security, since it has recently contributed to the maintenance of peace in the Hemisphere by eschewing association with the Caribbean Legion and other such organizations. Because of its long anti-military tradition, Costa Rica does not maintain a standing army, relying for its internal security on a national police force. The role of Costa Rica in hemispheric defense, therefore, would be a minor one as regards manpower. Costa Rica's participation in the Inter-American System, however, is more likely to insure valuable moral cooperation and support and to make possible the use of Costa Rican territory for air and naval bases in the event of a threat from an extra-continental power.

Costa Rica has been a consistent supporter of US foreign policy and its objectives and strategy in the United Nations. Costa Rica's offer of military bases to the Unified Command for use in the defense against aggression in Korea was accepted, and the Government has declared its willingness to offer several companies of National Guardsmen for military police duty in Korea under the Unified Command.

We have been successful in preserving friendship between the United States and Costa Rica, which is based fundamentally on an identity of democratic tradition, and our cultural, educational, informational, and technical cooperation in other fields should contribute to its continued growth. Costa Rica, although a very small country by comparison, is recognized and treated as an equal by the United States. This fact, as well as our scrupulous avoidance of any encroachment on Costa Rican sovereignty is warmly acknowledged and appreciated.

---

[16] Apparent reference to the United Fruit Company.

718.5/5–2351

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Special Political Problems, Office of Regional American Affairs (Jamison)[1]

[WASHINGTON,] May 22, 1951.

[Subject:] Military Equipment for Costa Rica.

[Participants:] Dr. Alberto Oreamuno, Vice President—Costa Rica
Señor Don J. Rafael Oreamuno, Ambassador—Costa Rica
Colonel Radnor[2]—G–3—Latin American Branch
Ambassador Nufer[3]—MID
Mr. Schoenfeld[4]—S/ISA
Mr. Shaw[5]—MD
Mr. Siracusa[6]—MID
Mr. Heins—MID
Mr. Jamison[7]—AR

The Vice President of Costa Rica and his brother, Ambassador Oreamuno, called to explore further the question of replacement of arms of the Guardia Civil of Costa Rica with U.S. type equipment. This matter had been gone into in a preliminary way at a meeting in the Pentagon with Assistant Secretary Bendetsen[8] of the Department of the Army, during which a general disposition to give sympathetic consideration to the Costa Rican proposition was expressed. This proposition is based upon a recommendation made by the head of the U.S. Army Mission in San Jose, Colonel Alexander,[9] to the President of Costa Rica.

With regard to availabilities and pricing of the materials needed for standardization of Costa Rican arms, Colonel Radnor said that certain preliminary surveys had indicated that many types of material called for are probably available and that, as a rough estimate, the total cost would be around $500,000.

The principal problem resulted from what the Costa Rican Vice President said was a suggestion of Colonel Alexander that the varied types of arms now held by the Guardia Civil might be traded for, or at least be used as a basis for a credit upon, purchases by the Costa Ricans of new equipment. It was pointed out to Dr. Oreamuno and the

[1] The source text is an unsigned copy of the original; it is attached to a letter from Mr. Fred G. Heins of the Office of Middle American Affairs to the Chargé in Costa Rica (Williams), May 23, 1951, not printed (718.5/5–2351).
[2] Jess C. Radnor.
[3] Albert F. Nufer, Director, Office of Middle American Affairs.
[4] H. F. Arthur Schoenfeld.
[5] Robert W. Shaw.
[6] Ernest V. Siracusa, Assistant Officer in Charge, Central America and Panama Affairs.
[7] Edward A. Jamison.
[8] Karl R. Bendetsen.
[9] William Alexander.

Ambassador that existing legislation requires payment in cash prior to the transfer of equipment, and that there is no way known to those present in which such a trade would be authorized under existing law or regulations. The only possible path that might be explored would be for the Costa Rican Government to arrange for sale of its present equipment to some private purchaser in the U.S., and use whatever funds it might obtain therefrom to help pay for new equipment. It was indicated that, if this proved at all feasible, it would have to be a completely separate transaction, but that the Department would look into the question of whether there are non-government buyers who might be interested in such purchases.

In the face of the obvious problem created for Costa Rica by the heavy costs which would be involved, the suggestion was made that in presenting the request through the formal channels required, the Costa Rican Government might indicate priorities in categories for contemplated gradual replacement of existing equipment in separate stages. Although disappointed at the unfavorable prospect of their being able to go through with the full program, Dr. Oreamuno indicated that a list of equipment on this basis would be prepared and that Ambassador Oreamuno would present it to the Department for consideration in accordance with existing Mutual Defense Assistance Act [10] provisions.

During the conversation Dr. Oreamuno made it clear that a principal reason for his government's interest in this matter was the desire to render ineffective, through control of supply of ammunition, significant amounts of materiel which have gotten out of the Government's hands and, presumably, into the hands of real or potential revolutionaries.

[10] For text of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act (Public Law 329), approved October 6, 1949, see 63 Stat. 714.

718.56/6–1251

Memorandum by the Officer in Charge of Special Political Problems, Office of Regional American Affairs (Jamison) to the Director of That Office (White)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] June 12, 1951.

At the time of the visit of Vice President Oreamuno of Costa Rica in connection with a plan for standardizing the armament of the Guardia Civil, Mr. Miller [1] expressed interest in the possibility that legislative authority might be sought for permitting governments which receive equipment from the U.S. to turn in equipment in their possession and receive credit on the purchase of the new materiel. You will recall that the Chief of the U.S. Military Mission in San Jose had included, in his plan for standardization of Costa Rican arms, the suggestion that old equipment be turned in for credit, and that it was necessary to tell the Costa Ricans that no legislative authority for such a transaction exists.

[1] Edward G. Miller, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.

Although, as you know, our friends in G–3 were reluctant to discuss the idea that legislative authority along the above lines be sought, I have probed into the question in the files and in conversations with various people with the following results:

The Inter-American Military Cooperation Bill which was first proposed in 1946 shortly after termination of World War II hostilities, but which did not progress further than the House of Representatives, contained a stipulation that the benefit to the U.S. which was required might be ". . . payment or repayment in kind or property or any other direct or indirect benefit which the President may determine to be adequate and satisfactory." It provided further ". . . that in arranging the terms and conditions for the transfer of any arms, ammunition, and implement of war, as defined by the President's Proclamation Numbered 2717, of February 14, 1947,[2] or any superseding proclamation, first consideration shall be given to requiring the transfer by the foreign government to the United States of any similar articles, weapons, aircraft, or vessels not adapted to tables or organization and equipment of the armed forces of the United States. The value of such equipment received from the foreign government shall be computed on the same basis as the value of similar equipment disposed of, under existing laws and regulations, by the armed forces of the United States as surplus to their needs, and may be included as part of any compensation required.

It is my understanding that it was expected that large amounts of excess materiel would be transferred article for article under this provision since there were then large amounts of excess which would not have been otherwise valuable except for salvage. I have not been able to find in the files any detailed explanation of the actual procedures contemplated, and no indication of the manner in which other practical problems—such as meeting the cost of our acquiring the materiel turned over to us—would be dealt with.

It appears from the record that the plans for exchange of standard for non-standard materiel provided for under the above bill were contingent upon the existence of considerable amounts of surplus, and that it was deemed that whatever practicable basis may have existed for carrying out such a program disappeared with the disappearance of such excess materiel. It is doubtful that, at present costs, the materiel we would receive in return for standard equipment could actually be used to produce credit to be applied on the cost of new materiel. The expenses involved in our acquiring it would be heavy and might in fact be greater than any value which might be obtained from it. If the primary purpose, therefore, were to be to increase the ability of a recipient government, such as Costa Rica, to pay for equipment obtained from us, it does not appear that this result would be achieved and it would probably be unwise to encourage any such expectation.

[2] For text, see 61 Stat. (pt. 2) 1051.

While it seems to me that there would be certain political advantages to requiring a trade-in of old non-U.S. type equipment—such as the assurance that it would be kept out of hands in which it would be misused and the furtherance of the objective of standardization, I question whether the innumerable practical difficulties are not too great in present circumstances to warrant the effort to convince the Department of Defense and perhaps other geographic Bureaus of the Department that the legislation now proposed should be amended to make this possible.[3]

[3] At the end of the text of this memorandum appears the following handwritten note initialed by Mr. Heins: "Asst. Sec. Bendetsen offered orally to be of any help possible in connection with new legislation to authorize the U.S. to take old equipment as partial payment."

718.5/6–2151

The Chargé in Costa Rica (Williams) to Mr. Fred G. Heins of the Office of Middle American Affairs

SECRET San José, June 21, 1951.

OFFICIAL—INFORMAL

Dear Fred: With further reference to Costa Rica's desire to obtain military equipment and your memorandum of conversation on June 14,[1] I had lunch with Dr. Oreamuno yesterday. During the course of this luncheon he brought up his visit to Washington and the fact that he had had a letter from his brother reporting on the above conversation and the note [2] presented. Although the doctor seemed to be still hoping and looking for some way for Costa Rica to get these arms without paying for them, or paying for them on time, he seemed resigned to the fact that this was out of the question and they would have to find the cash.

[1] Not printed (718.56/6–1451).

[2] Reference to Costa Rican note No. SD/0–34, addressed to Secretary of State Dean G. Acheson, dated June 13, 1951, indicating that Costa Rica wished to dispose of, by sale or transfer, its present military equipment and to acquire new equipment from the United States; a copy of the note is attached to 718.5–MAP/7–2651.

Repeatedly he emphasized the need for the Government to have these arms and have them quickly. I am writing you in another letter about his views on Figueres, but he expressed his belief, in the strongest terms, that Figueres intended to be the next President. If Figueres won the elections fairly, Ulate would turn the government over to him and that would be that. On the other hand, if the voting went against Figueres, the doctor was sure that Don Pepe would cause trouble and forcibly try to take over. The doctor repeated several times that the only possible way to avoid this trouble was for this Administration to have the new military equipment in its possession. He emphasized that the Government had no decent arms—none had been left it. On the other hand, by apparent mistake, it did have control of 80% of the ammunition for the arms that had disappeared. If it got the new equipment, it could protect itself and the Figueristas would be unable to get this ammunition without which a successful revolt would be impossible. He looked upon obtaining the new equipment from the States as preventive medicine.

The doctor stated that it was urgent for him to receive a reply from his brother on the cost and availability of the arms. Once he had this information he stated he would be able to discuss the matter more thoroughly with President Ulate and in one way or another they would obtain the cash to purchase some, if not all, of the material. With information on availability and how long it would take to obtain delivery on various types of equipment, they would be able to draw up a priority schedule. If the terms of purchase have to be cash, he wants to be told so; although as I said earlier he hopes some way can be worked out for a down payment to be made when the arms are delivered and the balance due paid over a period of time. He asked me to write to you informally in the hope that you might be able to speed up the reply to the Costa Rican note as he feels the matter is so urgent every day counts.[3]

Sincerely yours, PHIL

[3] In a letter to Assistant Secretary of the Army Bendetsen, dated July 26, 1951, not printed, Mr. Miller requested the Department of the Army to take expeditious action in completing the pricing and availability survey in connection with the list of arms submitted by Costa Rica (718.5–MAP/7–2651).

Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26 [1]

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Fred G. Heins of the Office of Middle American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] August 13, 1951.

Subject: Visit of Ambassador Oreamuno

Participants: Ambassador Oreamuno
ARA—Mr. Miller
MID—Mr. Heins

Mr. Miller said to the Ambassador that President Truman this morning had approved a proposal that Mr. Miller stop in San José to award President Ulate the Legion of Merit. He said he would prefer no announcement at this time of the proposed decoration, but suggested that the Ambassador inquire of President Ulate whether August 26 would be an appropriate time to make the award. Mr. Miller said he would fly from Panama to San José and return to Panama the same day.

The Ambassador said he was delighted at the news and felt certain that August 26 would be satisfactory. He said he would check with President Ulate and let Mr. Miller know. He said the purpose of his call was to invite Mr. Miller to visit Costa Rica after the Conference in Panama.[2]

The Ambassador said he had just received a letter from President Ulate expressing his concern because nothing was being done on the Inter-American Highway since the agreement between the United States and Costa Rica had been concluded in January.[3] (After checking with Mr. James [4] of the Bureau of Public Roads, the Ambassador was informed by telephone that the Bureau's Resident Engineer in Costa Rica had informed the Bureau last week that he is now dismantling a rock crusher and other equipment in southern Costa Rica and moving it to the new project in northern Costa Rica, that he is preparing and moving lumber to the project, and that everything is being done to begin actual road construction as soon as the dry season begins.)

---

[1] Files of Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Edward G. Miller, Jr., for the years 1949–1953.

[2] Reference is to the Second Extraordinary Meeting of the Inter-American Economic and Social Council, held at Panama, August 20–30, 1951. Mr. Miller served as Chairman of the United States Delegation. For additional information, see the editorial note on p. 1065.

[3] Apparent reference to the exchange of notes signed at Washington, January 13 and 17, 1951, and entered into force on the latter date, by which the United States and Costa Rica agreed to amend and to extend the Inter-American Highway Agreement of January 16, 1942, between the two countries. For text of the notes, see TIAS No. 2319, or 2 UST (pt. 2) 1844. For text of the original agreement, see EAS No. 293, or 56 Stat. (pt. 2) 1840.

[4] Edwin W. James, Chief, Inter-American Regional Office, Bureau of Public Roads, Department of Commerce.

The Ambassador said his brother (Vice President Oreamuno) had been requested to prepare a new inventory of all the ammunition and military equipment now in the hands of the Costa Rican Government. He said they are complying with this request even though it should not be necessary because the U.S. Military Mission had made an inventory only a few months ago and copies had been furnished to the Department in June. Mr. Spalding [5] checked into this matter, and was informed that a complete new inventory is not desired, but only certain additional information with respect to condition, etc.

The Ambassador was informed that a re-distribution of the presently available Inter-American Highway funds had just been agreed upon between the Department and the Bureau of Public Roads. After checking with the Bureau of Public Roads, the Ambassador was informed that Mr. Miller would advise President Ulate on August 26 that the U.S. would contribute $1,000,000 provided Costa Rica would contribute $200,000. This should be sufficient to complete an all-weather road from San José to Liberia. If Mr. Miller thinks it desirable, he may also advise President Ulate that up to $300,000 or $400,000 additional U.S. funds might be allotted to Costa Rica later from a reserve, if it is found that additional projects can be undertaken in Costa Rica and if Costa Rica is able to contribute necessary matching funds. Mr. Miller indicated, and Mr. James later concurred by telephone, that there would be no objection to President Ulate making a public announcement of these proposed allocations. It was made clear that these figures included the $400,000 U.S. funds already allotted to Costa Rica.

Ambassador Oreamuno said he might possibly leave this week for a few days' visit in Costa Rica and, if possible, would try to remain in Costa Rica until August 26.

Ambassador Oreamuno was informed that three additional Point IV consultants had been selected for Costa Rica and should arrive there within a few weeks. Mr. Pietri Vigna is ready to leave Washington as soon as Costa Rica informs us that he is acceptable. He is an airport engineer. Dr. H. Mallory from Florida has been selected to coordinate all the Point IV agricultural projects in Costa Rica, Mr. Irwin R. Vaughn is from the National Office of Vital Statistics. Ambassador Oreamuno expressed his appreciation, and it was agreed that, if possible, these men would be put in touch with him before they leave Washington.

[5] Hobart A. Spalding, Intelligence Adviser, Bureau of Inter-American Affairs.

547-842—79——85

718.5/12–2051

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Fred G. Heins of the Office of Middle American Affairs

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] December 20, 1951.

Subject: Arms and Ammunition

Participants: Ambassador Oreamuno, Embassy of San Jose.
MID—Mr. Fred G. Heins

In connection with Ambassador Oreamuno's call at the Department on another matter, I told him we had ascertained as a result of his inquiry of Mr. Mann [1] on December 14, that someone would soon be in touch with him, probably early in January, to work out the details for disposing of Costa Rica's old arms and equipment. I told him it was presently contemplated that an advance payment of $50,000 could probably be made to Costa Rica shortly after January 1st, against title to all of the arms and ammunition now in the hands of the Costa Rican Government.

The Ambassador was pleased with this proposed arrangement and said it would enable Costa Rica to purchase a considerable portion of the new equipment required, because he understands there is already available from other sources, in Costa Rica a total of approximately $110,000 in cash to be used for this purpose. I told him we had been informed by the Army that during the past two months certain of the new equipment for Costa Rica was being received at warehouses, and that the Army was anxious to make deliveries whenever Costa Rica was ready to pay for them.

I told the Ambassador that this whole matter was being handled on a very confidential basis and I understood it was presently hoped, that after all of the old Costa Rican material is received in the U.S. and sold, the total net amount to be paid to Costa Rica from the sale of these materials would be nearly $100,000. The Ambassador said this was in line with previous estimates.

F[RED] G. H[EINS]

[1] Thomas C. Mann, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.

CUBA

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND CUBA[1]

Editorial Note

On January 16, 1951, the General Services Administration announced in a press release that agreements had been reached with several parties for the rehabilitation and reactivation of the idle United States-owned Nicaro Nickel Plant in Oriente Province, Cuba. Under the agreements, Frederick A. Snare Corporation of New York received the construction contract, and Mining Equipment Corporation of New York, a subsidiary of N. V. Billiton Maatschappij of The Hague, Netherlands, was selected to operate the plant upon the completion of reconstruction work. The Department of State approved of the choice of the Billiton firm, and also endorsed the idea of private Cuban participation in the ownership and management of the renovated plant, which became a subject for negotiation between Billiton and interested Cuban investors. Work on the Nicaro plant continued through 1951, and the plant began to operate early in 1952. A chronology of the principal developments regarding Nicaro, covering the period from October 1950 to March 1951, and a memorandum concerning the question of Cuban participation, are attached to a memorandum from the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs, Thomas C. Mann, to the Under Secretary of State, James E. Webb, dated April 4, 1951 (837.2537/4–451). Additional pertinent documents are in Department of State decimal files 836.06 and 837.19.

[1] For previous documentation concerning United States relations with Cuba, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 843 ff.

710.5/2–1351

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Harvey R. Wellman of the Office of Middle American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] February 13, 1951.

Participants: Cuban Ambassador [1] and Military, Air and Naval Attachés [2]
Assistant Secretary Miller [3]
Mr. Mackay [4]—AR
Mr. Wellman—MID

Ambassador Machado stated that the Cuban Government had studied the defense survey and recommendations [5] made by the survey team from the United States armed services and accepts the recommendations in their entirety. He said that the Cuban Government is now interested in obtaining military and naval missions on a basis similar to that of the recent air mission agreement.[6] The Cuban President [7] had also instructed him to state that the Cuban Government is interested in carrying out the recommendation regarding new equipment and supplies needed by the three branches of the Cuban armed forces. The President believes, however, he stated, that the United States should make this equipment and supplies available to Cuba on the same basis as sales have recently been made to other Latin American countries, namely, 10 percent plus cost of rehabilitation. Ambassador Machado expressed the desire to have action initiated on both these matters before the arrival on February 21 of the Cuban Chief of [1] Luis Machado.

[2] Lt. Col. Ramón M. Barquin, Cuban Military Attaché; Lt. Cmdr. Oscar Rivery, Cuban Naval Attaché.
[3] Edward G. Miller, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.
[4] Duncan A. D. Mackay.
[5] This survey had been conducted between October 26 and November 7, 1950; a subsequent report containing recommendations was transmitted to the Cuban Government in January 1951.
[6] Reference is to the Agreement providing for the services of a United States Air Force Mission to Cuba, signed at Washington, December 22, 1950, and entered into force on the same date; for text, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 2166, or United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), vol. 1, p. 887.
[7] Carlos Prío Socarrás.

Staff, General Cabrera,[8] as an official guest of the United States Government.

Mr. Mackay agreed to consult Mr. Anderson,[9] IAD, regarding the Cuban desire to enter into military and naval mission agreements. Ambassador Machado stated that there should be no objection by either Government to agreements embodying substantially the same provisions as the recent air mission agreement. Mr. Mackay stated that there would be the question of availability of naval and military personnel. Ambassador Machado said that the Cubans are thinking of a small mission of no more than three or four officers in each case.[10]

Mr. Mackay pointed out that only excess, surplus equipment can be acquired upon the payment of 10 percent plus the cost of rehabilitation. Any equipment or supplies which must come out of new procurement would have to be paid for at the price which the United States Government has had to pay. At present the army and air force have very little surplus equipment but the navy does have some.

Mr. Mackay agreed to arrange for the appropriate officers in the United States Army, Navy and Air Force to communicate with the Military, Naval and Air Attachés at the Cuban Embassy to discuss the cost and availability of the particular items which the Cuban defense survey recommended be acquired.

Ambassador Machado observed that the United States must recognize the necessity of giving financial assistance to the other American Republics to enable them to put their armed forces into shape for the defense of the hemisphere.

Assistant Secretary Miller was not able to remain throughout the conversation. While present he inquired of Ambassador Machado regarding the offer of President Prio to raise the Cuban unit for Korea from company to battalion size. Ambassador Machado stated that this proposal is being presented for approval to the special session of Congress which, according to his information, has not yet been convened.

---

[8] Maj. Gen. Ruperto Cabrera y Rodriguez.

[9] Kenneth Anderson, Special Assistant to the Chief, Division of Acquisition and Distribution, Office of Libraries and Intelligence-Acquisition.

[10] On August 28, 1951, the United States and Cuba signed two agreements providing for the establishment of a United States Army Mission in Cuba and a United States Naval Mission in Cuba, both of which entered into force on August 28. For text of the Army Mission Agreement, see TIAS No. 2309, or 2 UST (pt. 2) 1677; for text of the Naval Mission Agreement, see TIAS No. 2310, or 2 UST (pt. 2) 1689.

394.31/3–2751

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Secretary of State [1]

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] March 27, 1951.

Subject: Cuban Foreign Minister [2] Intends to Mention GATT [3] Sugar Negotiations during Courtesy Call

Discussion:

Minister of State Dihigo has indicated that during his conversation with you at 5:30 pm on March 27,[4] he may refer to our sugar negotiations under GATT with Cuba at Torquay.[5]

The Cubans have rejected our sugar offer and have requested that negotiations on this matter with them be transferred to Washington or Habana. We have replied that we must continue to rely on our delegation at Torquay to carry on these negotiations and that we cannot agree to having them transferred elsewhere.

The negotiations in question involve not only Cuba but also the Dominican Republic [6] and Peru, and the negotiations with all three countries are interdependent from our point of view, a fact of which the Cubans are fully aware. Consequently, it would be impracticable to transfer part of these negotiations from Torquay and to do so would undoubtedly provoke serious and justifiable objections on the part of the Dominican Republic and Peru. The Dominican delegation particularly has been waiting in Torquay since last September for the opportunity of participating in these sugar negotiations.

Recommendation:

It is recommended that you tell Dr. Dihigo that since this matter is now under discussion at Torquay, the United States prefers to have the matter worked out by our delegations there.

Further Background:

The following background information may be helpful in the event that Dr. Dihigo insists on discussing the matter in greater detail.

---

[1] Drafted by the Director of the Office of Middle American Affairs, Albert F. Nufer, the Deputy Director of the Office, Edward G. Cale, and Mr. Wellman.

[2] Ernesto Dihigo y Lopez Trigo.

[3] Reference is to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), concluded at Geneva, October 30, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, January 1, 1948; for text, see TIAS No. 1700, or 61 Stat. (pts. 5 and 6).

[4] A memorandum of the conversation between Secretary Acheson and Cuban Foreign Minister Dihigo, drafted by Mr. Wellman and dated March 27, is filed under Department of State decimal file number 837.2351/3–2751.

[5] The third round of tariff negotiations under GATT took place at Torquay, England, from September 28, 1950, to April 21, 1951. For documentation on the negotiations, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, pp. 791 ff., and vol. I, pp. 1245 ff.

[6] For documentation on the interest of the Dominican Republic in an increased sugar quota in the United States, see pp. 1367 ff.

As you may recall, it was largely because of disagreement over sugar that the Cuban delegation withdrew from the Tariff Negotiations under GATT at Annecy.[7] The present United States duty on sugar is 50 cents per hundred pounds when imported from Cuba and 68–¾ cents per hundred pounds when imported from other countries. At Annecy we offered to reduce the rate on Dominican sugar to 60 cents, but withdrew this offer after the Cuban delegation withdrew from the negotiations.

Prior to the beginning of the Tariff Negotiations at Torquay we had agreed with Cuba, the Dominican Republic and Peru to negotiate on sugar with all three at once with a view to reducing both the Cuban and the full-duty rates. It was understood that the reduction in the Cuban rate would probably be somewhat less than the reduction in the full-duty rate so that the margin of preference on Cuban sugar would be reduced. We had, furthermore, reached an informal understanding with the Cubans that if sugar negotiations were successfully concluded with all three countries the margin of tariff preference remaining to Cuba would not be less than the 20 percent established in the Reciprocity Treaty of 1902.[8] That Treaty is now in suspense.

Our delegation at Torquay has been authorized to offer a reduction in the rate on Dominican and Peruvian sugar to 55 cents per hundred pounds and on Cuban sugar to 44 cents per hundred pounds. We are prepared, if necessary, to go as low as 50 cents on Dominican and Peruvian sugar and 40 cents on Cuban sugar. Any reduction is made contingent on the incorporation of a "snap back" provision under which the rates of duty might be raised to $1.875 on full-duty and $1.6875 on Cuban sugar if current legislation[9] providing for domestic sugar quotas should expire before or without being replaced by comparable new legislation. (The former rate is the full-duty rate in effect prior to the first reduction under the Trade Agreements Act of 1934[10] and the latter is that full-duty rate less the present absolute margin of Cuban preference on sugar.)

---

[7] The second round of tariff negotiations under the GATT took place at Annecy, France, from April 8 to August 27, 1949; relevant documentation is included in Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. I, pp. 651 ff. There is considerable unpublished documentation on the Cuban sugar preference question in Department of State decimal file 560 AL, and in International Trade Files, Lot 57 D 284, Boxes 108–109, and 128–132 (the 1949 GATT meetings at Annecy, France).

[8] Reference is to the Convention of Commercial Reciprocity, signed at Habana, December 11, 1902, and entered into force December 27, 1903; for text, see Department of State Treaty Series (TS) No. 427, or 33 Stat. (pt. 2) 2136.

[9] Reference is to the Sugar Act of 1948 (Public Law 388), approved August 8, 1947; for text, see 61 Stat. 922. For documentation on matters relating to the enactment of the Sugar Act of 1948, see Foreign Relations, 1947, vol. VIII, pp. 604 ff.

[10] For text of the Trade Agreements Act (Public Law 316), approved June 12, 1934, see 48 Stat. 943; for text of the United States-Cuban Reciprocal Trade Agreement, signed at Washington, August 24, 1934, and entered into force September 3, 1934, see Department of State Executive Agreement Series (EAS) No. 67, or 49 Stat. (pt. 2) 3559.

The principal purpose and effect of this snap back provision is to place the sugar-supplying countries on notice, and to obtain their approval, in advance, of action which the United States would be forced to take in any event if sugar quota legislation were ever allowed to lapse. In the absence of the snap back provision, the action increasing sugar duties would have to be taken under the provisions of the escape clause of GATT. The Department of Agriculture is very insistent upon the snap back provision, however, because of the added assurance it would give to the domestic sugar industry. The Department of Agriculture maintains that it had the State Department's commitment to incorporate such a provision into GATT the last time rates of duty on sugar were reduced and will not agree to further reductions without it.

Cuba's rejection of our sugar proposal at Torquay is apparently based principally on dissatisfaction with the snap back provision, rather than with the rates of duty we have offered. They have pointed out that the snap back would give us freedom of action regarding rates of duty on sugar, whereas they would continue to be bound by commitments made to us on products imported from us. There is some validity in this objection, even though Cuba in this event would be free to invoke the nullification and impairment clause of GATT and to withdraw equivalent concessions from us.

The Cubans undoubtedly know that it is highly probable that United States sugar quota controls will be continued indefinitely and that if these controls were removed, we would be forced to increase the rates of duty on sugar sufficiently to afford protection to our industry. Nevertheless, for political reasons they do not wish to go on record as approving our increase of sugar duties in such a contingency, at least without obtaining something in return. The solution of the problem may lie in incorporating language in the snap back provision which would give the Cubans the basis for prompt withdrawal of concessions from us in the event we make use of the snap back provision on sugar. We believe, however, that the place to resolve this problem is Torquay.

In the meantime, we have instructed our delegation at Torquay to point out to the Cubans: (1) that the pre-Torquay understanding which we had arrived at with Cuba, the Dominican Republic and Peru leaves us free to continue negotiating with the other countries in the event we are unable to reach agreement with Cuba and that any reduction in rate which we agree to with them, in the absence of a reduction in the preferential rate to Cuba, will automatically operate to reduce the Cuban margin of preference; (2) that even in the absence of the snap back provision we would not be precluded from raising our tariff to an adequate protective level, but that there would be no basis for retaining the present 18–¾ cents per one hundred pounds preference for Cuba; (3) that the snap back contemplates the establishment of a tariff quota for Cuba, but that in the absence of a snap back Cuba would be without any claim for tariff quota protection.

It is believed that our negotiating position vis-à-vis Cuba is strong and that we should not weaken it by agreeing to negotiate with them outside the Torquay framework.[11]

[11] At Torquay the tariff rate on Cuban sugar adopted at Geneva in 1947 was bound for another three years. For further information on United States-Cuban negotiations, see Department of State Publication 4209 (Commercial Policy Series 135), Analysis of Torquay Protocol of Accession, Schedules, and Related Documents (Washington, 1951), pp. 232 ff.

NAC Files, Lot 60 D 137 [1]

Minutes of Meeting No. 171 of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems, Held at Washington, March 28, 1951

SECRET

[Here follow a list of those persons present (22) and a table of contents.]

1. Proposed Export–Import Bank Loan to Cuban Electric Company

Mr. Glendinning [2] recalled that in June 1950 the Council had advised the Export–Import Bank that it perceived no objection to the Bank's advising the American and Foreign Power Company that the Bank would consider on their merits loan applications for financing Latin American subsidiaries of American and Foreign Power (NAC Action No. 406.) [3] This was the first case under the ensuing Export–Import Bank negotiations with American and Foreign Power. It called for a 12-million dollar loan to the Cuban Electric Company which would provide part of the financing for a total program of about $33 million. In considering the problem the Staff Committee was satisfied the power was required in Cuba and would make a contribution to the development of the Cuban economy in this period.

Allocating machinery had not been set up with respect to this type of equipment, although it was in process of being established. Approval of consideration of the credit would carry no commitment with respect to making equipment available should the allocating authority later conclude other programs had priority.

The interest rate would be approximately 4½ percent and maturity of the loan 20 years (NAC Document No. 1115).[3]

[1] Master file of the documents of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems (NAC) for the years 1945–1958, as maintained by the Bureau of Economic Affairs, Department of State, and preserved as item 70 of Federal Records Center Accession 71 A 6682.

[2] C. Dillon Glendinning, Secretary, National Advisory Council.

[3] Not printed.

Mr. Szymczak [4] said that he had no objection to the loan and thought it was a good one. He was, however, concerned with the problem of coordination of development financing. He recalled that there had been meetings of the Staff Committee, of the International Bank, and of the Export–Import Bank, on this problem but so far as he knew nothing as yet had come out of these meetings. His question related to the overall issue of coordination of development financing as between the Export–Import Bank and the International Bank.

Mr. Gaston [5] commented that so far as this particular loan was concerned it was one the International Bank could not make since it was a private loan and not guaranteed.

Mr. Martin [6] observed that papers on the other problem had been distributed to the Council (NAC Document No. 1107).[7] It was contemplated there would be a meeting of the principals and Mr. Harriman's [8] office in the near future to discuss this general matter and get something up to the NAC for action. He added that it was not an easy problem and that ECA also was concerned with the general problem of lending operations.

Mr. Szymczak inquired whether the International Bank had sent the Truslow Mission [9] to Cuba. Mr. Hasenoehrl [10] said that the Mission had been made up at the request of the Cuban Government. So far it had made no report other than on the railroad situation.

Mr. Szymczak observed that the International Bank was not in the Cuban picture as yet since it had loaned nothing to that country. He understood, however, that the Export–Import Bank had made some loans to Cuba. Mr. Hasenoehrl said that these loans had been paid off.

Mr. Szymczak commented that this loan appeared to be the kind of loan that would pay for itself. Mr. Gaston said that it was a profitable company and that the only thing that disturbed him was that rates were rather high, and the cost of operations high due to a high wage and salary schedule and the fact that much of the equipment was outmoded. The proposed loan would take care of part of this prob-

---

[4] M. S. Szymczak, Board of Governors, Federal Reserve System.

[5] Herbert E. Gaston, Chairman, Board of Directors, Export–Import Bank of Washington, and Acting Chairman, National Advisory Council.

[6] William McChesney Martin, Jr., Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

[7] Not printed.

[8] W. Averell Harriman, Special Assistant to the President.

[9] This mission (so-called after its chairman, Francis Adams Truslow) had been organized in mid-1950 by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development at the request of the Cuban Government for the purpose of making a comprehensive survey of the Cuban economy and recommending specific proposals for the country's development. For further information, see International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, Sixth Annual Report to the Board of Governors 1950–1951 (Washington, 1951), pp. 35 ff. For the mission's final report, see International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, Report on Cuba: Findings and Recommendations of an Economic and Technical Mission Organized by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development in Collaboration with the Government of Cuba in 1950 (Washington, 1951).

[10] Victor F. Hasenoehrl.

lem. However, the company had a large proportion of small services that did not pay their costs. Mr. Szymczak observed that if prices continued to go up in the United States the company might find it could not buy all of the necessary equipment and would have to ask for a further loan. Mr. Gaston commented that that was their problem.

[Here follows discussion of matters relating to general problems of foreign lending and the availability of materials and resources.]

Action. The following action was taken (Action No. 457):

The National Advisory Council advises the Export-Import Bank that it approves consideration by the Bank of a credit not in excess of $12 million to the Cuban Electric Company to aid in financing the dollar costs of its construction program. It is understood that the interest rate will be approximately 4½ percent, that the credit will be repayable within 20 years, and that the funds advanced will be secured by collateral in excess of 100 percent of the amount of the loan.[11]

[Here follows additional discussion and action on matters unrelated to Cuba.]

[11] On March 29, 1951, the Board of Directors of the Export–Import Bank approved a credit of $12,000,000 in favor of the Cuban Electric Company, Inc., to assist the company in financing a construction program in Cuba. For further information, see Export–Import Bank of Washington, Twelfth Semiannual Report to Congress for the Period January–June 1951 (Washington, 1951), pp. 12–13, 36.

837.2351/3–1351 : Airgram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in the Dominican Republic [1]

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, April 3, 1951.

A–120. Reference is made to the Embassy's despatch 579 of March 13 [2] regarding Cuban discussions with the British Government concerning an increased market for Cuban sugar in Great Britain in connection with possible tariff concessions by Cuba to Great Britain which would have the effect of reducing or eliminating tariff preferences now being granted by Cuba to corresponding imports from the United States.

This Government's understanding with the Cuban Government, with regard to Cuba's desire to offer concessions to European countries involving reductions in certain United States preference margins in return for compensating concessions from those countries on Cuban products, is set forth in the confidential aide-mémoire of June 27, 1950 entitled "Results of Discussions between the Delegations of Cuba and the United States",[3] which was prepared at the conclusion of discussions held in Washington May 23 to June 27, 1950 between representatives of the Governments of Cuba and the United States. It is believed a copy of this aide-mémoire was sent to the Embassy for its information and files.

[1] Drafted by Mr. Charles C. Hauch of the Office of Middle American Affairs.
[2] Not printed.
[3] Not printed (411.37/6–2850).

It should be mentioned that neither in the aide-mémoire, nor in any negotiations between Cuba and European countries of which the Department is aware, was it contemplated that tariff preferences would be accorded products of European countries by Cuba. Such action would be clearly contrary to GATT. Rather, the aide-mémoire and the negotiations envisaged a reduction or elimination of preferences now accorded imports into Cuba from the United States in respect of products of which European countries are, or are likely to become, important suppliers of the Cuban market. It was understood (numbered point 4 on page 9 of the aide-mémoire) that Cuba and the United States would continue to consult with each other in the event that either proposed to reduce or eliminate existing margins of preference. In accordance with this understanding, the Cuban Government informed this Government of offers it proposed to make to European countries which would have the effect of eliminating or reducing the United States preference on the products involved and obtained the United States views in each instance.

With respect to the possibility mentioned in the Embassy's despatch that in return for tariff concessions by Cuba to Great Britain, the latter country might grant Cuba a fixed sugar quota for the next 3 years in the British market, the Dominican and other Governments directly affected by any such British action would obviously have the most immediate and primary interest, and as such could be expected to take the initiative in discussing the matter with the British or taking it up under GATT. At the same time, it will be observed that in numbered paragraph 2 on page 5 of the United States-Cuban aide-mémoire, the United States set forth its understanding that in any Cuban negotiations with European countries, the approach would be kept consistent with GATT and the Habana ITO charter.[4] For your own confidential information only, it has very recently been reported to the Department by an adviser on sugar matters to the Cuba Torquay delegation that Cuba has not requested and does not intend to request the British Government for a fixed quota for Cuban sugar in the British market, but rather sought a British commitment not to reduce British purchases of sugar in the world market below 1,500,000 tons during a 3 year period.

[4] Reference is to the Charter for the International Trade Organization (ITO) signed at the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment held at Habana, Cuba, November 7, 1947–March 24, 1948; for documentation on the formulation of the Charter, see Foreign Relations, 1948, vol. I, Part 2, pp. 802 ff. For text of the Charter, see United Nations Doc. ICITO/1/4 (a document of the Interim Committee of the International Trade Organization established by the Final Act of the Habana Conference), or Department of State Publication 3117 (Commercial Policy Series 113), Havana Charter for an International Trade Organization and Related Documents (Washington, 1948).

The Department has sent copies of your despatch 579 to the United States delegation at Torquay and the Embassy at Habana, and has forwarded to you and the Embassy at Habana copies of a memorandum of conversation of March 1 [5] between a member of our delegation at Torquay and Ambassador J. M. Troncoso, the head of the Dominican delegation, on this subject.

ACHESON

[5] Not printed.

737.56/5–151

The Acting Chief of the Lend-Lease and Surplus Property Staff (Meigs) to the Chief of the Division of Investments, Bureau of Accounts, Treasury Department (Barnes)

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, May 1, 1951.

MY DEAR MR. BARNES: There are being transmitted to the Treasury Department, Division of Investments, by this Department, two remittances aggregating $335,329.46 for credit to the Cuban lend-lease accounts on your books. One of these is a draft on the National City Bank of New York by its Habana branch, payable to the Treasurer of the United States in the sum of $214,988.04; [1] the other, in the sum of $120,341.42, represents a transfer of a credit accruing to Cuba as the result of the completion of accounting on certain interim arms program contracts.

The total residual lend-lease indebtedness of Cuba is $335,329.46 as follows:

Balance due under "treaty" terms	$300,767.23
Balance due on "cash" account	34,562.23

Therefore, the completion of these credit transactions will fully liquidate the monetary responsibility of the Government of Cuba under the Lend-Lease Agreement of November 7, 1941.[2]

Your confirmation will be appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

CARROLL M. MEIGS

[1] A check to this amount from the Cuban Government was delivered by Ambassador Machado to Secretary Acheson at the Department of State on April 27 (737.56/4–2751).

[2] For text of the United States–Cuba Lend-Lease Agreement, signed at Washington, November 7, 1941, and entered into force on the same date, see Foreign Relations, 1941, vol. VII, p. 122.

394.31/5-351

Memorandum by the Acting Director of the Office of Economic Defense and Trade Policy (Leddy) to the Assistant to the President (Steelman)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] May 3, 1951.

[Subject]: Negotiations at Torquay on Cuban Textiles.

It is understood that in their interview with you the representatives of exporters of textiles to Cuba will make the following points regarding United States action at Torquay in regard to Cuban textile rates:

1) We have permitted Cuba to increase her textile rates, especially on rayons, to new and excessive levels, notwithstanding commitments contained in the agreement we reached with Cuba in Geneva in 1947.
2) No real compensation was or could be obtained, especially not for textile exporters.
3) Instead of trying to obtain compensatory concessions from Cuba the United States should have withdrawn concessions we had granted to Cuba, such as those on sugar or tobacco.
4) The Cuban action was contrary to the principles of the Trade Agreements Act [1] and the President should therefore suspend concessions granted to Cuba.

In reply, it is recommended that you say nothing beyond the following:

1) The Torquay negotiations have been completed and the results will be made public on May 9.[2]
2) It was agreed by the plenary committee of the conference that no details concerning the results would be made public before May 9.
3) Apart from our international commitment, it would obviously be unfair to give advance information to one group and not to others.

To go beyond statements to this effect would risk the possibility of a flood of textile imports into Cuba with pressure from Cuba for permission to give immediate effect to increased rates.

The following background material is for your confidential information.

1. At the Annecy conference in 1949 Cuba claimed that a crisis in its domestic textile industry required extensive modification in the rayon and cotton textile rates it had agreed at Geneva to maintain on imports from the United States. The United States agreed at Annecy to undertake renegotiation of these rates. At Torquay, Cuba submitted the modified rates which it desired to substitute, and negotiations took place regarding the proposed new rates and compensation for our agreement to these changes. Negotiations regarding the cotton textile rates were successful, both as to new cotton rates to be

[1] Reference is to the Trade Agreements Act (Public Law 316), approved June 12, 1934, as extended and amended; for text of the act, see 48 Stat. 943.

[2] The Department of State issued press release No. 365 on May 7, 1951, which contained a summary of the results of the tariff negotiations at Torquay.

set and as to compensatory new concessions. Long negotiations failed, however, to secure the offer of rayon textile rates to which we could agree, although even the modified rates are substantially under current U.S. duty levels.

2. Cuba thereupon decided to make the modifications it desired in accordance with the provisions of Article XXVIII. Under this Article, any party to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade was permitted, at the time at which Cuba took the action, to withdraw or modify concessions granted at Geneva (as these were) at any time after January 1, 1951 subject only to the commitment to negotiate and if possible agree with the other substantially interested parties. The Article provides that, in such negotiations, there shall be an effort to maintain a level of concessions not less favorable to trade than that provided for by the original concessions. If, but only if, agreement cannot be reached, the country with which the concession was initially negotiated is free to withdraw substantially equivalent concessions originally negotiated with the party taking the initiative under Article XXVIII.

3. Since there was no restriction on the unilateral right of a country to withdraw or modify concessions under Article XXVIII other than the procedural requirements just cited, Cuba was entirely within her rights in notifying the rayon textile modifications under Article XXVIII and could, in fact, have withdrawn rates from the Agreement entirely had she so desired. The problem which faced the United States was therefore to negotiate agreement with Cuba for compensatory adjustment, in accordance with Article XXVIII. Such negotiations took place and resulted in the offer of concessions which the United States believes provide satisfactory alternatives for the development of United States trade. Although we never agreed to the modifications in rayon rates which Cuba made, we accepted compensation, full details of which will be made public on May 9. Only if the compensation offered had been judged inadequate and had been refused would there have been any justification for the more drastic step of withdrawing concessions granted to Cuba in retaliation.

4. In judging whether or not to recommend acceptance of the compensation offered, the United States considered the volume of trade to be benefited as compared with the volume affected by the increases, the amount of duty reductions offered, the resulting level of protection, and the possibilities for trade expansion under the new concessions. Weight was also given to the consideration that if the compensation were rejected and we chose instead to retaliate, we should forfeit all compensatory concessions and would in addition have to bear the responsibility for starting what might develop into a series of retaliatory withdrawals which would seriously disturb relations with Cuba for years to come and might well lead to similar action by other countries and a general unraveling of the tariff reductions which we and other countries have negotiated. Moreover, it had to be borne in mind that if we took the initiative in such drastic action, Cuba might take the entire case before the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement under Article XXIII as an action nullifying or impairing the attainment of the objective of the Agreement. A very convincing case against the United States might have been made by laying before the other countries the extent of compensatory concessions which had been offered to us and rejected.

5. There is one other important element involved. The United States cannot make the GATT program or the Reciprocal Trade Agreement program a strait jacket for preventing the establishment or expansion of industry in the other American republics. The United States is committed to the promotion of sound industry in the other American republics. This policy is in our own long-term interests since it has been demonstrated that sound industry can and will raise living standards and increase both the volume and value of international trade. The necessity for reasonable protection of new industries in Latin America is not open to serious contradiction and our efforts, under the GATT and Trade Agreements program, should be to discourage excessive protection—which leads to hot house rather than sound industry—and only to discourage those industries which clearly cannot be established on an economic basis. The Cuban textile industry is, by and large, a sound industry and is an important part of the whole diversification program in Cuba which we have encouraged in many ways. The fact that increased rates will affect American textile exports to Cuba is unfortunate but inevitable. We have been losing Latin American textile markets for many years and this trend will continue.

In the light of all these considerations it was decided to accept the compensation, even though we did not accept the modified rayon rates.

6. With reference to the further charge that regardless of what happened at Torquay the President should suspend the application of trade-agreement rates to products of Cuba because of Cuba's discriminatory treatment of American commerce or because of other acts which tend to defeat the purposes of the Trade Agreements Act, under Section 350 (a) (2) of the Act, it should be emphasized that the Cuban textile case does not come within the provisions of this section. Cuba is not discriminating against United States goods. The rayon and cotton textile rates in question are preferential rates more favorable than those enjoyed by other countries. In a case of discrimination the reverse would be true, i.e. Cuba would have to charge rates higher than those accorded to the most-favored-nation to create discrimination against the United States. Further, it cannot be said that Cuba is performing acts contrary to the purposes of the Trade Agreements Act while acting in strict conformity with the provisions of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, an agreement which the United States entered into partly under the authority of the Trade Agreements Act.

398.235/6–1451

Memorandum by the Secretary of State to the President

RESTRICTED [WASHINGTON,] June 14, 1951.

Subject: Appointment With Ambassador Machado of Cuba

Final agreement was reached yesterday among the Executive departments on the draft sugar legislation. This is the matter which Ambassador Machado wishes to discuss with you during his conversation this morning.[1]

The principal changes in the legislation as compared with the 1948 Sugar Act are:

1. The increase in the quota of Puerto Rico from 910,000 tons to 1,080,000 tons.
2. The increase in the quota for the so-called full duty countries from 1.36 percent of the amount by which consumption in the United States exceeds the fixed quotas of the domestic areas and the Philippines to 4 percent.
3. The modification of section 202(d), under which Cuba was guaranteed a minimum participation in this market, in a way that is slightly less favorable to Cuba.
4. The omission of section 202(e) which contained authority under which retaliatory action against Cuba might have been taken by reducing the amount of Cuban sugar permitted entry in the United States in the event of discrimination by the Cuban Government against United States trade or industry.

The basic structure of the draft act is the same as that of the 1948 Act with fixed quotas for domestic areas and with Cuba being the principal beneficiary of increases in consumption.

Cuba opposes the increase in the quotas for Puerto Rico and the full-duty countries. It is the belief of the Executive departments, however, that the increase in the Puerto Rican quota is justified by the need to help improve economic conditions in Puerto Rico. The increase in the quota of the full-duty countries, which is shared by Peru, Dominican Republic, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Mexico, Haiti and other countries, will enable these countries to re-establish the position in this market which they had during the pre-war years 1937–1941 under the 1937 Act.[2] We have been under strong pressure from these countries ever since the passage of the 1948 Act which was less favorable to them than the 1937 Act.

[1] No memorandum of the conversation between President Truman and Ambassador Machado on June 14 was found in the Department of State files.

[2] For text of the Sugar Act (Public Law 414), approved September 1, 1937, see 50 Stat. 903.

The Executive departments considered continuing the minimum guarantee to Cuba in the form contained in section 202(d) of the 1948 Act but were finally convinced that this would be strongly opposed by domestic sugar interests and would undoubtedly lead to efforts to modify the legislation after it is sent to Congress. Since the domestic areas, other than Puerto Rico, were receiving no increases in their fixed quotas there was some basis for their view that Cuba, as the principal residual claimant under the Sugar Act of 1948 and under the proposed legislation, should bear the entire burden of the increased quotas provided by the legislation for other areas.

Section 202(e) had its origin in failure of the Cuban Government to pay certain claims to United States citizens and in discrimination by the Cuban Government against United States industry and commerce. Its incorporation in the 1948 Act evoked such resentment in Cuba that the Cuban Government was virtually assured that it would not be used. Its omission from the present legislation should be well received in Cuba.

It is suggested that you may wish to hand Ambassador Machado the attached memorandum [3] which explains the reasons for the changes provided for in the proposed legislation and which, it is hoped, may lead the Cuban Government to give attention to some of the problems in our relations with Cuba which have been neglected by the Cuban Government.[4]

D[EAN] A[CHESON]

---

[3] Not printed.

[4] In a memorandum of conversation with the Director of the Sugar Branch, Department of Agriculture (Myers), dated June 14, 1951, Mr. Cale stated in part that it had been reported that President Truman had not given the memorandum to Ambassador Machado because "the President preferred not to become involved in the details of the sugar legislation" during his conversation with the Cuban Ambassador. Mr. Cale stated further that he understood that when Ambassador Machado had handed the President a memorandum containing the Cuban Government's views on the proposed legislation, the President "had merely commented that it was obviously impossible to satisfy everyone in a situation involving conflicting interests . . . but that he would ask the Executive departments to study the memorandum." (811.235/5–951)

837.2351/6–1551

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Middle American Affairs (Nufer)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] June 15, 1951.

Subject: Cuban Reaction to Proposed Sugar Legislation

Participants: Ambassador Machado
Dr. Arturo Mañas,[1] Dr. Oscar Diaz Albertini,[2]
Sr. Miquol and Sr. Ramirez
Mr. Mann, ARA
Mr. Cale, MID
Amb. Nufer, MID

Ambassador Machado and representatives of the Cuban sugar industry called at noon today to give us their reaction to the proposed sugar legislation of which a copy of the latest draft bill had been handed them earlier today by Secretary of Agriculture Brannan.[3] The draft bill is the one containing the compromise formula for section 202(d) agreed upon in a meeting[4] between Mr. Larry Meyers of the Department of Agriculture and Messrs. Cale and Nufer on June 13.

The Cubans brought with them copies of yesterday's editions of the Habana newspapers El Mundo and Diario de la Marina which contained AP dispatches with a June 13 Washington dateline, summarizing the proposed sugar legislation fairly accurately. The Cubans expressed surprise that this information had become known to the press before it had been given to them. We were unable to explain how this information had leaked but assured the Cubans that it had not been obtained from anyone in the Department of State. The clippings from the two newspapers mentioned are attached.[5]

Ambassador Machado and Dr. Mañas (who acted as spokesmen for the Cuban group) launched into a strong criticism of the draft bill. Although they repeatedly expressed their displeasure over the increases contemplated at Cuba's expense in the quotas of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and the full-duty countries, it was more or less apparent that they have come to accept these changes as inevitable. Their main attack was against the proposed wording of section 202(d). They maintained that any impairment of the minimum guarantee provision in the 1948 Act was wholly unacceptable to Cuba. They said that they considered the retention of that provision as vital to Cuba, not only because of the immediate effect the proposed change would have in [1] President, Cuban Sugar Stabilization Institute, and Secretary, Cuban Sugar Mill Owners Association.

[2] Financial Counselor, Cuban Embassy.
[3] Charles F. Brannan.
[4] A memorandum of this meeting, dated June 13, by Mr. Cale, is filed under decimal file number 811.235/5–951.
[5] Not printed.

Cuba economically and politically, but because it opened the door to further drains on Cuba's share of the U.S. sugar market when the proposed Act expires in 1956.

Mr. Mann and Mr. Cale went to great lengths to explain the realities of the situation to the Cubans and to point out that while the proposed legislation was somewhat less favorable to Cuba than the 1948 Act, it was a very substantial improvement over the 1937 Act. Mr. Cale gave the Cubans statistical data which he had prepared showing what Cuba's participation in the U.S. sugar market would be at given consumption levels under the 1948 Act and under the proposed legislation. He also gave them statistics showing how Cuba's percentage participation in the U.S. sugar market had increased since 1937 over most of the other supplying areas. It was also pointed out to the Cubans that the Department considered the draft bill which they received from the Secretary of Agriculture an equitable solution of a difficult problem; that it had agreed to go along with the draft bill; and that a bill on sugar will doubtless be introduced at this session of Congress [6] regardless of the Department's agreement, and possibly in that event in a less acceptable form to Cuba.

While the Cubans agreed that the proposed legislation was substantially more favorable to Cuba than the 1937 Act, they appeared utterly unreconciled to the compromise formula proposed for section 202(d). The adverse reaction in Cuba would, they claimed, be far-reaching when it became known that Cuba had not only been forced to give up some 240,000 tons of its quota to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and the full-duty countries,[7] but had also suffered a substantial impairment of the 1948 minimum guarantee provision.

Ambassador Machado was especially acrimonious in his criticism of the proposed change and repeatedly said that he was unable to understand why the Department agreed to the proposed change after he had been assured by Mr. Cale and Mr. Nufer that it would fight for the maintenance of the minimum guarantee provision. He said that he failed to see how the Cuban Government could accept the proposed

---

[6] On June 18, 1951, Senator Allen J. Ellender (D-La.) introduced Senate bill 1694, providing for the amendment and extension of the Sugar Act of 1948; its companion bill in the House of Representatives was numbered H.R. 4521. On September 1 Congress approved Public Law 140, entitled "An act to amend and extend the Sugar Act of 1948, and for other purposes", which was based largely on the so-called "Ellender bill"; for text of the act, see 65 Stat. 318.

[7] In a memorandum to the Secretary of State concerning the problem of determining the extent to which the Department of State could support the Department of Interior's recommendation for a large increase in Puerto Rico's sugar quota in view of the Department of State's obligation to the full-duty countries and Cuba, dated May 23, 1951, Ambassador Nufer had recommended in part the following: "That the Department make its support for any increase in Puerto Rico's quota of more than 125,000 tons contingent on a corresponding reduction in the quotas of domestic producers, since Cuba's share should not be reduced by more than 200,000 to 225,000 tons, and we must ask for an increase in the quota of full-duty countries." (398.235/3-2451)

legislation and he went so far as to say that if the bill were introduced in its present form he might be obliged to "stump the country" in order to present Cuba's side of the case, although he said that he would not like to do this. (It seems hardly likely that the Ambassador would carry out this threat which he doubtless used merely to try to emphasize his point.) As usual, Ambassador Machado said that the proposed legislation might have adverse effects on our rice market in Cuba, thereby intimating that Cuba might be forced to take retaliatory measures directed against the U.S. rice industry.

Although the meeting lasted for almost two hours, the Cubans showed no willingness to recede from their point of view and they repeatedly emphasized that nothing short of a minimum guarantee provision similar to that contained in the 1948 Act would be acceptable to Cuba. They clearly intimated that they felt that the Department had let them down and that it had not opposed strongly enough the domestic beet interests which were responsible for the compromise formula. Ambassador Machado said that he had reason to believe that if the Department had held out the 1948 minimum guarantee provision would have been retained.

In view of the attitude taken by the Cubans at today's meeting, it seems possible that they will fight the proposed legislation if introduced in its present form. Ambassador Machado said, in this connection, that he had not yet discussed the matter with anyone in Congress but intimated that he might have to do so.

Editorial Note

On June 20, 1951, the United States and Cuba signed at Habana a Point IV General Agreement, which entered into force on the same date. The agreement was transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 2532, from Habana, dated June 25, 1951, not printed (837.00–TA/6–2551). For text, see TIAS No. 2272, or 2 UST (pt. 2) 1231.

795B.5/6–2551

The Chargé in Cuba (Elbrick) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL HABANA, June 25, 1951.

No. 2535

Subject: Campaign To Register Cuban Volunteers for Service With United Nations Forces

The Embassy has for some time viewed with concern the failure of the Cuban Congress to act favorably on the Executive message transmitted by President Prio requesting authorization to send Cuban troops outside of the country for service with the United Nations forces. The session of Congress to which the message was sent terminated in the last days of May with little indication that the issue would be brought up at any time in the near future. The Embassy, therefore, has considered ways and means of encouraging the Government to take action to implement its support in the United Nations of the decision to resist the Communist aggression in Korea.

It was decided that possibly the most effective means of encouraging Government action in the matter would be to assist Cuban patriotic organizations in carrying out a register of volunteers for service with the United Nations forces. This matter was followed up by the Embassy's Information Officer, Mr. R. C. Salvatierra,[1] who arranged with the Cuban Veterans of World War II and the Comité Nacional de la Acera del Louvre to sponsor their conduct of the campaign with the cooperation of the friendly Cuban press.

A memorandum[2] prepared by Mr. Salvatierra on the subject is enclosed.

It was decided that publicity for the campaign would be inaugurated June 22 and that the actual registration would be started in a downtown headquarters especially rented for the purpose on June 25, anniversary of the aggression against the Republic of Korea. The initial announcement coincided with General Ridgway's[3] appeal to the United Nations for more volunteers to fight Communist aggression in Korea. Announcement of the campaign appeared in a majority of Habana newspapers on June 22. The greatest publicity was given by Prensa Libre which announced the campaign in multi-colored streamer headlines at the top of page 1. These headlines were as follows: "Cuban Volunteers—to fight against the Communists—register opens in Habana on June 25."

June 29

Since writing the above, information has been received to the effect that the campaign has gone very well so far (June 28). It is reported that over 500 volunteers have already registered and the drive has received increasing publicity in the press, on the radio, and in the movies since its inception. The Minister of Defense, Ruben de Leon,[4] has sent a telegram to the organizations sponsoring the drive, congratulating them on their efforts, which would indicate that the Cuban Government is in complete accord with the drive's objective, namely, to force appropriate action in the Cuban legislature to provide the

[1] Richard C. Salvatierra.
[2] Dated June 20, not printed.
[3] Lt. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, Supreme Commander, Allied Powers, in Japan; U.S. Commander in Chief, Far East; Commander in Chief, United Nations Command in Korea.
[4] Rubén de León y García.

troops which the Cuban Government had previously offered to the United Nations.

In assisting the organizations in question in preparing the drive, the Embassy has, of course, been extremely careful to avoid any possible implication on its own part which might have been seized upon by political opposition leaders to discredit the United States. The Embassy took a calculated risk in this case, and believes that the results already achieved have justified that risk. The fact that the Cuban Government in the person of the Minister of Defense is now openly supporting the drive should serve further to divert any possible suspicion of Embassy involvement in this matter.[5]

Press clippings are being assembled and will be submitted in a later despatch.[6]

C. BURKE ELBRICK

[5] Airgram 25, to Habana, dated July 17, 1951, reads in part: "Dept commends Embassy upon its imagination, initiative, and resourcefulness in suggesting and stimulating campaign . . . for registration of Cuban volunteers for service with United Nations Forces, with practical objective of encouraging Cuban Government to implement its support in United Nations of decision to resist aggression in Korea by following through with its proposal to offer battalion of troops to Unified Command." (795B.5/6–2551)

[6] Not printed.

837.2351/6–2751

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Middle American Affairs (Nufer)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] June 27, 1951.

Subject: Note from Cuban Government on Proposed Modification of the 1948 Sugar Act

Participants: Ambassador Luis Machado of Cuba
Ambassador Nufer—MID

The Cuban Ambassador, Dr. Luis Machado, called yesterday at his request to hand me a note with regard to the proposed modification of the 1948 Sugar Act. A copy of the Cuban note is attached.[1]

The purpose of the note is to request the United States Government to make every possible effort to protect Cuba's position in the United States sugar market by preventing, if possible, any modification of section 202(d) of the present Act detrimental to Cuba's interests and any decrease in Cuba's present share in our market.

The note expresses concern over the possibility that Cuba may receive less favorable treatment under the proposed legislation than under the 1948 Act, and calls attention to the exchange of notes of December 23, 1941 annexed to the supplementary trade agreement between Cuba and the United States.[2] Cuba also maintains that the pertinent provisions of the GATT agreement signed at Geneva on October 30, 1947, justify the maintenance by the United States of the treatment accorded Cuba as a supplier of sugar to this market under the 1948 Sugar Act.

[1] Not printed.

In discussing the proposed sugar legislation, Ambassador Machado admitted rather reluctantly that it would not have too serious an impact on Cuba's economy. He said, however, that politically the effects of the proposed legislation would be extremely bad and that the opposition was already endeavoring to capitalize on the fact that Cuba would be called upon to give up some 240,000 tons of its U.S. sugar quota to Puerto Rico and the full-duty countries. He added that the Government was already under severe attack in the opposition press and that the sugar bill would probably become a leading issue in the Presidential campaign. His own position, he said, had become very difficult and he felt that he might find it necessary to resign after the bill is enacted. His and his Government's position might, Ambassador Machado said, be improved if, once the bill is passed, an exchange of notes between the two Governments could be arranged containing some reference to our recognition of the importance of sugar to Cuba's economy and of the fact that in connection with the new legislation the Executive Branch of the Government had taken fully into account the exchange of notes of December 23, 1941.

The Ambassador said that fortunately the provisions of the Sugar Act were so involved that the average Cuban citizen was unable to grasp their full import. An exchange of notes such as he suggested would therefore have a very reassuring effect on the Cuban people.

I told the Ambassador that offhand it seemed doubtful to me whether an exchange of notes such as he had in mind could take place. I said that I was certain that we would not be able to agree to an exchange of notes which could in any way be construed as a commitment on our part similar to the exchange of notes of December 23, 1941. I suggested to Ambassador Machado, however, that he might wish to give the Department an informal and unofficial memorandum setting forth his views on the subject which we would consider carefully with a view toward determining on what basis, if any, an exchange of notes such as he had in mind might be possible.

In the course of the conversation Ambassador Machado expressed concern over reports that Ambassador Thomen [3] of the Dominican Republic intended to appear before Congress in connection with the proposed legislation. He expressed the hope that these reports were not true because if Ambassador Thomen appeared before Congress in connection with the bill he would be forced to do likewise. So far he said he had not even discussed this legislation informally with his friends on the Hill and taken special pains to take no action which might lend itself to criticism or misinterpretation. Neither had the Embassy, he said, given out any press statements on the subject although he did intend to give the press a short prepared statement upon leaving my office.

---

[2] Reference is to the Second Supplementary Trade Agreement and exchange of notes between the United States and Cuba signed at Habana, December 23, 1941, and entered into force, January 5, 1942; for text, see Department of State Executive Agreement Series (EAS) No. 229, or 55 Stat. (pt. 2) 1449. For documentation on the negotiations leading to the signature of the agreement, see Foreign Relations, 1941, vol. VII, pp. 196 ff.

[3] Luis Francisco Thomen.

837.2317/7–1151

The Chargé in Cuba (Elbrick) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL HABANA, July 11, 1951.

No. 50

Subject: Presentation of Memorandum to Cuban Ministry of State Regarding Rice Negotiations

During the past two weeks the Embassy has been increasingly concerned regarding the apparent lack of progress being made by the special Cuban commission which was established by the Council of Ministers to draw up a final position in connection with the rice negotiations between the two countries.[1] In an effort to clarify the U.S. position, the Embassy proposed the text of a possible memorandum in its telegram No. 3 of July 2 [2] to the Department. The Department subsequently revised the text of the memorandum in telegram No. 15 of July 3.[2]

While several informal inquiries have been made recently as to what progress was being realized, it has become increasingly clear to the Embassy that the urgency with which the Cubans at one time considered these negotiations has largely disappeared. It is a matter of debate as to whether or not this attitude reflects a feeling among certain local Government officials that it would be poor tactics to proceed with these rice negotiations until the Cuban position vis-à-vis the new sugar legislation has been clarified. The obvious fact is that these negotiations have been given little or no attention for some time, and with the idea of again concentrating attention upon their importance and in an effort to conclude the negotiations at an early date, if this is possible, the Embassy decided upon the presentation of a memorandum embracing the text outlined in Deptel 15 of July 3. A copy of the memorandum as presented is attached to this report.

[1] A series of discussions between Cuban and United States representatives regarding the interpretation of the rice quota provision in the GATT took place in Habana during the spring and summer of 1951, but they lapsed without any agreement being reached. Copies of the minutes of meetings held on May 29, 31, and June 4, are filed under Department of State decimal file number 837.2317/10–3151.

[2] Not printed.

Upon the presentation of the memorandum there was very brief discussion. Although it was hurriedly read by several of the Cuban officials, it was suggested that the memorandum and its content might be subject of a further meeting as soon as it has been translated into Spanish and has been studied by the appropriate officials. This position was agreed to by the Embassy representatives but it was again emphasized that the time for these negotiations actually has now exceeded the limit of July 1 set under the terms of the Torquay resolution and that while a reasonable extension of this period would probably be tolerated by the contracting parties, it was extremely important in the view of the United States Government that every effort be made to conclude these negotiations at as early a date as possible. The Cuban representatives concurred and pointed out that shortly after July 1 the Cuban Government had telegraphed the GATT Secretariat at Geneva stating that the rice negotiations had not been concluded and that they were being continued. This was the first notification that the Embassy had received that the Cuban Government had taken this action.

For the Chargé d'Affaires ad interim:
DuWayne G. Clark Counselor of Embassy

[Enclosure]

MEMORANDUM

During the various conversations which have been held so far between the Cuban and the United States delegations at Habana, concerning the problems arising out of the operation of the GATT rice concessions made by Cuba to the United States at Geneva in 1947, as outlined in the memorandum dated March 15, 1951,[3] from the U.S. delegation at Torquay to the Cuban delegation at Torquay, the Cuban representatives have been informed that the American Government would be willing to agree to give Cuba a free hand as regards the duty to be charged on over-quota rice imported into Cuba in order that Cuba may achieve its objectives, provided Cuba is willing to guarantee to the United States for each year after 1951–52 a minimum import quota of 5.5 million quintals of rice. In offering Cuba a free hand to increase the over-quota rice duty there was never any intention that the U.S. delegation would negotiate with the Cuban delegation as to the determination of the particular level to which the over-quota duty might be raised. On the contrary, it was intended that the Cuban Government would be free to set that duty at the rate which might be necessary in any particular year to accomplish the objectives expressed by the Cuban delegation.

[3] Not printed.

In making this offer to agree to the unbinding of the over-quota rate in return for a guarantee to the United States of a minimum import quota, it was understood that the Cuban delegation and the U.S. delegation were in agreement that the understanding at Geneva was that the Cuban Government intended to apply a margin of preference, both within the quota and on over-quota imports, equal to the pre-Geneva margin of preference and that this is still the Cuban intention.

The U.S. delegation is taking the liberty of submitting this memorandum to the Cuban delegation in the hope that it may clarify the position of the U.S. Government as regards the particular point under discussion. It is thought that this clarification may be of help inasmuch as the question of whether or not the over-quota duty rate on rice will be increased is understood by the U.S. delegation to be under discussion in the special Cuban commission established to arrive at a policy position prior to the resumption of the rice negotiations between the two countries.

As an alternative to the position described in the preceding paragraphs, and assuming that there is to be no modification in the GATT rates on rice imports into Cuba, the Government of the United States would be agreeable to the shifting of the quota year to April 1 and to release Cuba from any claim of violation of the terms of the 1947 GATT rice concessions provided Cuba undertakes the declaration of a realistic import quota and establishes a formula which will assure for the future a continuation of such quota. Under this alternative, while the United States would not press for a change in the original minimum import quota figure, it would naturally expect that the formula would embrace the announcement of one or several supplementary quotas which would bring the total of the quota to a realistic aggregate.

HABANA, July 11, 1951.

394.31/7–1851

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mrs. Amelia H. Hood of the Office of Middle American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] July 18, 1951.

Subject: Cuban-United States Rice Discussions

Participants: Dr. Zaglits [1]—Agriculture
Mr. Skartvedt [2]—Commerce
Mr. Corse,[3] CP—State
Mr. Phelps,[4] CP—State
Mrs. Hood, MID—State

A meeting was held in the Department of State, at which the persons listed above were present, to determine what reply should be made to telegram no. 33 of July 16, 1951 [5] from our Embassy at Habana. The telegram stated that present indications were that the discussions with regard to rice would be delayed by the Cubans until the Cuban position in the United States sugar legislation could be determined. The Embassy therefore suggested that, if by July 20 the Cubans had not reached a decision with regard to their position in the rice matter and resumed discussions, they be told that the negotiations were terminated and that the United States intended to bring before the Contracting Parties at the Sixth Session of GATT in September the matter of the Cuban contravention of the provisions of the rice note in the Cuban Schedule of GATT.

Dr. Zaglits said that in the opinion of Agriculture, now was not an opportune time to press for resumption of the negotiations. He said that some of the Cuban sugar people, including Dr. Mañas, had seen Senator Ellender some time ago. Senator Ellender told them that rice and sugar had to be kept separate, but that if Cuba did not live up to her commitments on rice, she might get a sugar Act much less favorable to Cuba than the proposed legislation. Dr. Zaglits said Agriculture felt it should be made plain to the Cubans that we did not intend to pay Cuba for living up to concessions granted us at Geneva.

Dr. Zaglits said further that the rice matter could be settled without requiring a re-write of the rice note in the Cuban Schedule of GATT. He felt that one way to settle the matter would be for the Cuban Government (1) to accept in writing one interpretation of the note, namely that it provides for a realistic quota and (2) to agree to an understanding that Cuba would retain the margin of preference on both quota and over-quota rice at the level in effect at the time of the [1] Oscar Zaglits, Head of the Foreign Agricultural Trade and Policies Division, Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations.

[2] Enoch Skartvedt, Office of International Trade.
[3] Carl D. Corse, Chief, Commercial Policy Staff.
[4] Vernon L. Phelps, Assistant Chief, Commercial Policy Staff.
[5] Not printed (400.379/7–1651).

Geneva negotiations. If this clarification and understanding were obtained, we would not complain about the unilateral change by Cuba from January to July for the announcement of the preliminary quota. However, if possible we should get the Cubans to change the announcement of the preliminary quota from July 1 to April 1. Dr. Zaglits continued that he could appreciate the difficulties which Cuba would have in announcing a quota on January 1 since that was about the time the Cuban rice begins to be marketed. In the case of July 1, there would also be difficulty because if a large initial quota were announced, the quota would not be filled by the time the Cuban crop was ready for the market. Therefore, April 1 would be the best date. It would enable the United States rice to be moved off the Cuban market by the time the Cuban rice is ready.

Dr. Zaglits said he considered this alternative of no change in the rice note, together with the clarification and understanding, would be preferable to a change in the note which would involve the spelling out of an increased quota and an unbinding of the over-quota rates such as had been proposed. He said he understood that Dr. Guerra and the Cuban Ministry of Finance were in favor of this alternative plan since the latter was afraid that increasing the over-quota rates would make rice much more expensive for the Cuban consumer.

Mr. Corse agreed that we do not want to "pressure" the Cubans to finish the rice negotiations and said he felt we should be ready to accept either (1) the alternative plan outlined by Dr. Zaglits or (2) what has already been proposed, that is, a new note in the Cuban Schedule which would set a quota of 5,500,000 quintals with the over-quota rates unbound, even if the latter plan meant that discussions went beyond the deadline for the completion of the Article XXVIII negotiations. He suggested that Mrs. Hood consult Mr. Hollis[6] (L/E) as to what the final deadline actually is. If there was not time to complete the discussions as Article XXVIII negotiations, then some other way could be found for getting any necessary approval of the Contracting Parties, for example as in the "potato case". All present agreed with Mr. Corse's suggestion that either alternative would be acceptable.

Mrs. Hood remarked that she had noticed in a cable[7] that went out to the Embassy that the 5,500,000 quintal figure was referred to as a United States quota. She asked whether that meant that it would be an allocated quota for the United States or was it really meant to be a global quota in which any country could share. Dr. Zaglits replied that it was intended as a global quota.

It was agreed by all present that the matter of the Cuban contravention of the terms of the rice note should not be brought before [6] Walter Hollis, Office of the Assistant Legal Adviser for Economic Affairs.

[7] Reference uncertain.

the Contracting Parties because while there had been contravention in the past, there might not be during this quota year since Cuba had already announced for 1951–52 a combined basic and preliminary supplementary quota of 4,500,000 quintals and had promised to announce another supplementary quota in November or December.[8]

It was also agreed (1) that a telegram [9] should be sent asking the Embassy not to suggest to the Cubans any deadline for the termination of the rice negotiations and giving the Embassy the reason why the matter should not be brought before the Contracting Parties at this time; and (2) that an airgram or instruction [10] should be sent the Embassy outlining the present thinking on the rice situation as expressed in the meeting.[11]

---

[8] No additional supplementary rice quota was announced by the Cuban Government in 1951.

[9] Telegram 58, to Habana, July 19, 1951 (400.379/7–1651).

[10] Sent as Instruction No. 20, to the Embassy in Habana, August 10, 1951 (400.379/7–1651).

[11] There is no indication in the Department of State files that the suspended rice negotiations between the United States and Cuba were resumed during the remaining months of 1951.

795B.5/8–1451

The Counselor of Embassy for Economic Affairs in Cuba (Clark) to Mr. Harvey R. Wellman of the Office of Middle American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL HABANA, August 14, 1951.

DEAR HARVEY: Your letter of August 9th [1] regarding Ambassador Guell's [2] suggestion that the Cuban Government might make a small air contingent available to the Korean effort in lieu of a battalion of ground troops, reached me yesterday. I did not have an opportunity to explore it until this morning, as yesterday was a local holiday, informal variety in commemoration, I believe, of the overthrow of the Machado [3] regime. In any event I got Guell this morning and while the result of the conversation was not particularly satisfactory I want to pass along to you the reflection of our talk for what that may be worth.

I explained to Guell that I was afraid that there was considerable disappointment that the Cuban Government seemed to feel that it is inexpedient to make further plans for sending a battalion of ground troops to Korea. In reply, Guell repeated again the decision which apparently was reached in the Council of Ministers that for political reasons stemming principally from next year's elections it had been decided that it would not be politic to send Cuban troops to Korea.

---

[1] Not printed.

[2] Gonzalo Güell, Special Consultant, Cuban Ministry of State.

[3] Gerardo Machado, President of Cuba, 1925–1933.

Unfortunately, the campaign for volunteers for such service seems to have been a source of considerable embarrassment to the Cuban Army, the implication being that the Army is unable to perform its responsibilities and that the volunteer campaign is a natural outgrowth of a basic desire of some Cubans to participate in the Korea effort. In any event I got the very definite impression that ground troops from Cuba for Korea, volunteer or from Army Forces, is now and will be during the coming year pretty much out of the question.

We then discussed the suggestion of the contribution of a few fighter or pursuit planes by Cuba and I think that Guell was rather amazed when he realized that a squadron would consist of no less than 9 planes with a supporting flying and ground personnel of something like 200 men. This is far beyond what they had been thinking of and Guell confessed that the maximum contemplated was about 3 pursuit planes and possibly 30 or 40 men who could be drawn, not from the Army but, from other sources. He was, of course, thinking in terms of Cuba supplying funds for the purpose of aircraft in the United States and when I pointed out that the problem is not one of funds but of material and equipment which should be drawn from Cuban sources, he seemed completely stymied.

I advanced to Ambassador Guell as a purely potential suggestion which he might care to explore with the Ministry, the Pentagon suggestion [4] that Cuba might be able to send to Korea 3 or 4 of the C–47 Douglas planes which are now in the possession of the Cuban Army Air Force. I mentioned that such a transport unit would constitute a token contribution by Cuba to the Korean effort, that the equipment would draw from Cuban supplies and that the personnel required to fly and maintain these transport planes would probably be considerably reduced as compared with that for the pursuit units.

Guell seemed to be relieved and pleased with the idea of the contribution of the transport planes and he told me he would discuss it immediately with the Foreign Minister. I suspect that the Minister will then feel out the Cuban Aviation people who may not be too enthusiastic about giving up 3 or 4 of their C–47's. In any event Guell promised to let me know of any developments as soon as he could. If and when there are any I will certainly pass the word along to you without delay.

Sincerely, WAYNE

[4] At this point the margin of the source text bears an asterisk, and after the signature appears the following handwritten notation, evidently by Mr. Clark: "I told Guell this is my idea. I did not mention its having originated in the Pentagon."

398.2351/7–2551

Memorandum by Mr. Harvey R. Wellman of the Office of Middle American Affairs to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller)[1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] August 15, 1951.

Subject: Request of Cuba for exchange of notes on sugar legislation.

The Cuban Foreign Office has requested an exchange of notes in which the United States would agree to make every appropriate and possible effort to safeguard the position of Cuba in the United States market at least under the same conditions as the Sugar Act of 1948 as it is to be amended, provides. Such an exchange of notes is requested avowedly for internal political reasons in order to neutralize if possible the criticism the Cuban Government has suffered as a result of the sacrifices required of Cuba in the new sugar legislation.

Recommendations:

It is recommended

(1) that no exchange of notes embodying such a commitment as is requested be entered into for the reasons given in Mr. Cale's memo of August 2, 1951, which is attached;[2]

(2) that after the bill amending and extending the Sugar Act of 1948 shall have become law, we deliver to the Cubans a note in response to the Cuban memorandum and note protesting certain provisions of the legislation and stating Cuba's case. In this note we would do the following:

(a) explain the reasons for our recommending adoption of the amendments to the 1948 Act;

(b) emphasize those provisions of the new legislation favorable to Cuba, and

(c) assure Cuba that the Department had fully considered Cuba's views and had taken full account of the position of Cuba as our principal foreign supplier of sugar, our reliance upon Cuban sugar especially in emergencies, and the relation of a high level of United States imports of Cuban sugar to the maintenance of reciprocally beneficial economic relations which exist between the United States and Cuba.

(3) that such a note contain no commitments with respect to the future but only explanations and assurances regarding the amendments to the Sugar Act of 1948.

---

[1] Addressed also to Mr. Mann, Ambassador Nufer, and the Officer in Charge of Caribbean Affairs, W. Tapley Bennett, Jr.

[2] In his memorandum, addressed to Mr. Wellman and not printed, Mr. Cale had stated that he believed it was unwise to accede to the Cuban request for an exchange of notes because, inter alia, the Executive branch could not properly make such a commitment, Cuba was not sustaining any real injury, and it might lead to future misunderstanding (398.2351/7–2551).

(4) that we consider the advisability of giving even the type of assurances outlined in 2 above, if the Cuban Government does not take steps promptly to satisfy certain obligations to the United States, principally the settlement of the private claims [3] and the removal of discriminatory taxes. If when the legislation shall have become law, Cuba has not taken satisfactory action with respect to these outstanding obligations, we will then have to decide whether it is desirable for other reasons to deliver a note as recommended in 2 above or to send a formal acknowledgement only of the Cuban memorandum and note together with a copy of the new legislation.

In the meantime we contemplate formally requesting the Cuban Government for an indication of when it will make the promised payment on the private claims and of the amount of the payment. We shall also continue to press for elimination of discriminatory taxes which are in contravention of GATT.

If you concur in this position, please initial this memorandum as evidence of your approval.[4]

---

[3] In 1951 these claims totaled an estimated $9,136,475.37, of which $1,060,238.76 had been adjudicated by the Cuban courts.

[4] The source text bears the initials of each of the recipients, except Mr. Miller. In late August 1951, the United States agreed to discuss the Cuban Government's request for an exchange of notes regarding Cuba's position in the United States sugar market vis-à-vis the new sugar legislation. Draft versions of a United States note were discussed by the two governments during the remaining months of 1951 and early 1952. On February 1, 1952, the text of a final note was prepared by the Department of State for presentation to the Cuban Government, but by that time Cuban officials lost interest in the matter, in part because they could not obtain a note worded strongly enough, and in part because hostilities in Korea had increased the world-wide demand for sugar. Consequently, no exchange of notes took place. Pertinent documents are in Department of State decimal files 398.235, 398.2351, 811.235, 837.235, and 837.2351.

737.13/9–751

Memorandum from Mr. Harvey R. Wellman of the Office of Middle American Affairs to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) [1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] September 7, 1951.

Subject: Projected visit of Minister of State Gans [2] to Department

The new Cuban Minister of State, Oscar Gans, has informed our Chargé in Habana that he expects to return from the San Francisco

---

[1] Addressed also to Mr. Mann and Mr. Bennett; the source text bears the initials of each of the recipients.

[2] Oscar Gans y Martínez assumed office as Cuban Minister of State on August 30, 1951; on October 1, he was appointed Prime Minister of Cuba.

Conference [3] via Washington in order to have three or four days in Washington to consult Department officials.[4] The Embassy speculates reasonably enough that the visit probably concerns the proposed exchange of notes on the new sugar legislation and states that this matter is becoming increasingly important to the Cuban Government.

Recommendation

It is recommended that after the New Foreign Minister has had ample opportunity to present the views of his Government and to consider what the United States Government is prepared to offer in the way of a note, the Department officers receiving him then inform the Foreign Minister that they would like to bring to his attention several situations which are unsatisfactory and the rectification of which is of great interest and importance to the United States Government. It is recommended that he be asked what measures the Cuban Government will commit itself to take to remedy the following situations:

1. Uncollected American private claims

Foreign Minister Suarez Fernandez [5] gave informal assurances that the adjudicated claims would be paid.[6] Our position is that the Cuban Government should make a substantial payment on these long-standing obligations and should arrange for the orderly liquidation of all the claims, including those adjudicated by Cuban courts, those acknowledged by agencies of the Cuban Government and presumably not subject to question, and all other legitimate claims not evidenced by court decision or administrative acknowledgement.

2. Discriminatory taxation of American imports

Cuba has been taxing, contrary to Article III of GATT, some imports at a higher rate than the same domestic products. American exporters and their Congressmen have been complaining most about the discriminatory gross sales tax on imported lumber. Minister Suarez Fernandez promised to have this discrimination removed, but the Ministry of Finance has informed the Embassy that it is no longer interested in this matter now that Suarez Fernandez has resigned.

---

[3] Reference is to the Conference for the Conclusion and Signature of the Treaty of Peace with Japan, held in San Francisco, September 4–8, 1951. For documentation on the conference, see vol. VI, Part 1, pp. 777 ff.

[4] Minister Gans visited the Department of State on September 11, accompanied by Ambassador Machado. In a memorandum of conversation between Mr. Miller, Minister Gans, and Ambassador Machado, dated September 11, 1951, Mr. Nufer stated that the participants discussed the exchange of notes concerning sugar recently proposed by the Cuban Government and the question of claims held by United States nationals against the Cuban Government, and that in reference to the latter Minister Gans made the statement that his government had set aside a sum of money which it intended to use to liquidate a portion of the claims (237.1141/9–1151).

[5] In despatch 2407, from Habana, June 5, 1951, Chargé Elbrick had reported that Minister Suarez Fernandez had stated that he would first try to obtain his government's consent to the payment of the adjudicated claims, and then attempt to find a way to pay the remainder of the claims (611.37/6–551).

[6] The Cuban Government made no payments on outstanding claims owed to United States citizens during 1951.

3. Foreign Accountants

The Cuban Government has not replied to our memorandum of March 8, 1951 [7] setting forth a basis for settlement satisfactory to the American accountants involved. We supplied the Ministry of State in July at its request, information showing that Cubans are permitted to practice accounting in most American states and in all the important financial areas, thus giving the Cuban Government a basis in international reciprocity to rectify this situation. Criminal prosecutions for illegal practice are still pending against representatves in Cuba of American accounting firms.

It would seem plausible that the Cubans, having been disabused of their belief that they have a fixed position for all time in the United States sugar market, would clean up these situations as soon as possible and remove this source of ill will. It is more likely, however, now that the new sugar legislation is approved, that when they are able to obtain from us the most satisfactory note from their point of view that we are willing to give, they will give little attention to these situations on the ground that the question of sugar has been resolved until 1956. This is an opportunistic position but one characteristic of the Cuban Government in recent years.

Therefore if, as the Embassy states, the obtaining of a note regarding sugar legislation is becoming increasingly important to the Cuban Government, for internal political reasons, it behooves us to make use of every bit of leverage which the immediate situation provides.

[7] Not printed.

795B.5/11–2951

The Acting Secretary of State to the Acting Secretary of Defense (Foster) [1]

SECRET WASHINGTON, November 29, 1951.

MY DEAR MR. FOSTER: As you are aware, the Republic of Cuba desires to make a contribution to the effort of the United Nations in Korea, and it has advanced on an informal basis an offer of three C–47 transport aircraft with the condition that Cuba be given an opportunity at an early date to purchase aircraft which would replace the three planes contributed for Korean service.

Because the Department of Defense believes that the unavailability of C–47 aircraft for replacement purposes would make infeasible the consideration of this informal Cuban offer, it has advanced the suggestion that the Cuban Government might wish to consider making an offer of three C–46 aircraft with Cuban crews. These aircraft, instead of being sent to Cuba to replace Cuban C–47's, would be sent to Korea for integration with the United States Air Force. I am informed that the Department of Defense recently asked for the views of General Ridgway's headquarters on a Cuban offer on this basis and that it received a reply which recommended that such an offer be rejected, unless overriding political considerations were perceived, because of the minor scale of such a contribution and because of difficulties in integration.

[1] Drafted by Mr. Cedric C. Phillip of the Office of Middle American Affairs; cleared with the Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs and the Office of Regional American Affairs.

It is my considered opinion that there are overriding political considerations that clearly indicate that it would be in the best interests of both the United States and the United Nations that Cuba make an offer that could be accepted, and that would enable Cuba to join with the other free nations of the world in the struggle now being waged in Korea against communist aggression. A Cuban contribution, even though limited in scope, would serve to broaden the United Nations character of the collective effort. With regard to Cuba itself, acceptance of the offer outlined herein could serve to encourage that country to make a further contribution at a later date, if possible, in the form of troops. Rejection of the offer, on the other hand, might have the effect of discouraging all further Cuban efforts to contribute to the United Nations effort in Korea and might impair the spirit of cooperation with the United States which Cuba has manifested in the United Nations.

A Cuban offer for which the Department of State would recommend favorable consideration would be an offer of three C–46 transport aircraft for integration with the United States Air Force units in Korea, and of Cuban crews to operate these planes. The crews would have appropriate transport experience, and would be capable of integration with the United States Air Force with a minimum of further training and orientation by virtue of their experience, orientation in the United States, and the knowledge of at least two members of each plane crew of the English language.

If the Department of Defense concurs that an offer from the Cuban Government of three C–46 aircraft and crews might be assured favorable consideration, I believe that the appropriate procedure which might then be followed would be for the American Embassy at Habana to inquire of the Cuban Government whether it would be prepared to modify its initial informal offer in the manner indicated above. Upon receipt of a favorable reply, negotiations to complete the offer and acceptance could be initiated. At such time, it would, in my opinion, be desirable to remind the Cuban Government of its earlier offer of ground troops, that the primary need in Korea continues to be for ground troops, and that an offer of transport aircraft would not be considered a substitute.

Since it would be desirable that our two Departments reach agreement on the acceptability of a Cuban offer along the lines suggested above before a reply is made to the Cuban Government regarding its initial informal offer, I would appreciate an expression of the views of the Department of Defense on this matter. There have been numerous indications from the Cuban Government that it desires to be informed promptly of United States reaction to its initial informal offer. I hope, therefore, that I may have the benefit of the views of your Department at an early date.[2]

Sincerely yours,

For the Acting Secretary of State:
EDWARD G. MILLER, JR.
Assistant Secretary

[2] In a memorandum of conversation between Lt. Col. Roderic O'Connor of the Department of Defense and Mr. Philipp, dated December 13, 1951, Lt. Col. O'Connor is reported to have stated that he expected a letter from Secretary of Defense Robert A. Lovett recommending affirmative action on Cuba's offer to reach the Department of State "on December 21 or immediately after the Christmas vacation." (795B.5/12–1351) No such letter was found, however, in the Department of State files.

737.34/12–451

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Ambassador in Cuba (Beaulac)[1]

CONFIDENTIAL HABANA, December 4, 1951.

Participants: President Prío
The Ambassador

I told the President that the State Department was getting a lot of inquiries from people at home who were worried about the provision, in a Senate-approved bill, for setting up a government buying and selling agency in Cuba. I asked him whether the Government supported the provision.

The President said that he would like an agency of that kind to use in defense of the people's interests. What he is particularly interested in is an agency which could be used to keep down the price of meat. Cattle growers withhold meat from the public during certain seasons (I think he meant during the dry seasons). He would like some device to force meat into the markets in order to keep prices down. This will be a problem just prior to next year's elections.

[1] Enclosed with despatch 914, from Habana, December 4, 1951. Willard L. Beaulac was appointed Ambassador to Cuba on June 20, 1951; he arrived in Habana and assumed charge of the Embassy on September 6; and presented his credentials on September 20. Ambassador Beaulac succeeded Ambassador Robert Butler, whose mission terminated on February 10, 1951.

His Government has no intention of abusing the power it would have. It would not interfere with ordinary trade, either retail trade or importing and exporting.

The interests have distorted the nature of the bill and the dangers contained in it. They have said that while President Prío might not abuse the power the bill would give him, succeeding presidents might do so. He is willing to answer this argument by limiting the effectiveness of the provision to one year or two years. (I take it he is particularly interested in having it in effect during the electoral period.)

The President said that he did not insist on the provision and he was prepared to consent to its being taken out of the bill. However, he did not want to oppose the provision publicly because he wanted to reserve the right, during the electoral period, when meat prices go up, of saying, "I told you so. I tried to get congressional authority to keep prices down, but I was unable to."

I told the President that I would speak to him with the same frankness that he had spoken to me. I said that, as a friend of Cuba, I was seriously concerned over the implications of the bill. I said that one of the great advantages that Cuba had over most other countries was the relative freedom to trade which Cubans enjoyed. You could still take a dollar into a bank in Habana and get a peso for it, and take a peso into a bank and get a dollar for it. That freedom, of course, was subject to abuse and was being abused. But the answer was not, in my opinion, government intervention or the setting up of government corporations.

I had just come from Colombia. President Gómez, with all his defects, had been doing a yeoman job in getting rid of the numerous and complicated government controls over Colombia's economy, which had been one of the principal causes of the recent failure in Colombia's democracy. It was disappointing to see that Cuba, with its precious freedoms still intact, was thinking in terms of limiting those freedoms.

The President said that he did not intend to do this; that his Government was on the side of liberalism in economic as well as political matters.

I told the President that, as he had suggested, I had read carefully his speech before the Auténtico Congress in which he had recommended an extension of economic activity in Cuba to permit employment of the chronic unemployed. I said that I assumed that there was no intention of compelling companies to take on more workers than they needed but that the idea was to provide work for additional persons by increasing production. The President confirmed that this was the case.

The President said that, as an indication of his desire that private capital intensify its work in Cuba, he was preparing to recommend legislation which would provide lower taxes on income that was reinvested in Cuba. This he thought would be good for capital and good for Cuba.

I said that this was a most interesting idea. I said that it appeared to run counter to one of the recent acts of the Congress which declared undistributed reserves to be subject to a special tax. I said that I had been informed that the effect of this action of the Congress had been to require certain companies to sell a part of their properties in order to pay the tax. Several sugar mills had been sold or were being sold as a result of the tax, I had been informed. The reason sales were necessary was that the undistributed surplus, in the cases referred to, was not in the form of cash or liquid assets but had been reinvested in lands, buildings, irrigation, etc.—in other words, in just the sort of thing the President wanted to encourage.

The President said that there was a lot of deception in connection with the matter that I had referred to. American stockholders or potential stockholders in Cuban corporations had become disillusioned as far as the possibility of receiving dividends was concerned. The corporation device had been greatly weakened in Cuba, and this important instrument was not as valuable or as useful to Cuba's economy as it used to be. The President said that investment of the kind I mentioned was not affected by the Congress' action. I said that that appeared to be just the point, that it was affected.

The President said that tax evasion was a chronic and accepted thing in Cuba. Nobody ever went to jail for not paying taxes. All the wealthy families have their wealth tied up in non-taxable corporations. They were practically tax-free. All companies, particularly the Cuban companies, resorted to all sorts of devices to conceal profits and to control taxes.

Editorial Note

By an exchange of notes dated December 10 and 18, at Habana, the United States and Cuba concluded an agreement providing for the control of electromagnetic radiations in the event of an attack by a third party upon either of the two countries, which entered into force on the latter date. The notes were transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 1016, from Habana, dated December 21, 1951, not printed (710.5/12–2151). For text, see TIAS No. 2459, or 3 UST (pt. 2) 2860.

737.5–MSP/12–2751

The Ambassador in Cuba (Beaulac) to the Department of State

SECRET HABANA, December 27, 1951.

No. 1037

Subject: Bilateral Military Assistance Agreement

I have the honor to enclose a copy of the aide-mémoire [1] that I left with the Minister of State [2] this morning when I asked him whether the Cuban Government wished to enter into diplomatic-military conversations aimed at reaching a bilateral military assistance agreement under the terms of the United States Mutual Security Act of 1951,[3] Section 401, as well as a separate military plan relative to the preparation of a unit or units of the Cuban Air Force for hemisphere defense purposes, and relative to the provision of grant aid by the Government of the United States in order to assist in such preparation.

As the Department has already been informed, the Minister of State said that he would take the matter up with the President but that he could anticipate a favorable response. He said that both he and the President held the view that Cuba should prepare itself to fight anywhere, within the hemisphere and outside the hemisphere, since it was clear that Cuba could not defend itself on its own doorstep.

The Minister said that he would take steps to see that two committees were formed, a civilian committee with military advisors to work on the military assistance agreement, and a military committee to work on the military plan.[4]

WILLARD L. BEAULAC

---

[1] Not printed.

[2] Aureliano Sánchez Arango; he was appointed to the office on October 1, 1951.

[3] For text of the Mutual Security Act (Public Law 165), approved October 10, 1951, see 65 Stat. 373.

[4] In telegram 477, from Habana, January 7, 1952, not printed, Ambassador Beaulac informed the Secretary of State that the Cuban Government agreed to initiate diplomatic-military discussions on whatever date the United States desired (737.5–MSP/1–751). The discussions began on January 30, 1952.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC[1]

711.56339/4–951

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Charles C. Hauch of the Office of Middle American Affairs

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] April 9, 1951.

Subject: Proposed Agreement With the Dominican Republic on Long Range Proving Ground for Guided Missiles[2]

Participants: His Excellency Virgilio Diaz Ordonez, Dominican Foreign Minister
His Excellency Sr. Dr. Luis Francisco Thomen, Dominican Ambassador
His Excellency Julio Ortega Frier, Ambassador on Special Mission (Dom.Rep.)
Ambassador Albert Nufer, Director, Office of Middle American Affairs
Mr. Charles C. Hauch, Office of Middle American Affairs
Mr. Gerald Russell, Office of Regional American Affairs
Colonel Carl Swyter, Guided Missiles Branch, Department of the Air Force
Lt. Col. R. H. Clinkscales, Military Air Rights Section, U.S.A.F.

This meeting was arranged as a result of the initiative taken by the Dominican Foreign Minister in stating that if we had any particular

[1] For previous information concerning United States relations with the Dominican Republic, see editorial note printed in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, p. 854.

[2] In telegram 111, from Ciudad Trujillo, November 11, 1950, not printed, the First Secretary of the Embassy (Belton) had informed the Secretary of State that the Dominican Government agreed to discuss with representatives of the Department of State and the United States Air Force the acquisition of sites in the Dominican Republic in connection with the operation of a Long Range Proving Ground (LRPG) for guided missiles (711.56341B/11–1150); a draft of a proposed agreement was sent to the Embassy for presentation to the Dominican Government under cover of instruction 67, February 9, 1951, not printed (711.56341B/12–2950).

comments on the Dominican counter draft [3] of the Long Range Proving Ground Agreement, submitted to our Embassy by the Dominican Foreign Office, he was at our disposal to hear our views while he was in Washington. At the outset of the meeting, an informal written statement outlining in general terms our preliminary thinking on the Dominican counter draft was given the Dominican representatives. A copy of this statement is attached.[4] This statement indicates general concurrence with the form and approach proposed by the Dominican Government for the Agreement, but contains certain broad suggestions regarding desired changes in some of the Agreement's Articles. The ensuing discussion was carried on in a spirit of friendly cooperation, with the Foreign Minister stating that his Government was happy to cooperate with us in this project. At one point Ambassador Ortega Frier stated that when the request for Dominican cooperation was received, his Government was "tickled to death" at the opportunity thus afforded to participate in a joint defense project.

After looking over the draft of our views handed them, the Dominican representatives, with Ambassador Ortega Frier doing most of the talking, mentioned the following points:

1. Ambassador Ortega Frier inquired whether it was intended to use the sites and rights granted by the Agreement for general defense purposes in the event of hostilities. He said that if there was any possibility that this might be done it would be better to include it now than to conclude a supplementary agreement at a later date. Ambassador Ortega Frier was apparently desirous, for prestige reasons, that such an addition be made to the Agreement. The Air Force representatives stated that it was not now intended to use the sites and privileges cited for purposes other than those stipulated in the draft already submitted to the Dominican Government. The Dominicans were told that consideration would be given to the point raised by Ambassador Ortega Frier.

2. Some apprehension was expressed by the Dominicans with respect to the extent of the range area and possible danger which might result should the missiles flown over the area get off course. They inquired whether it was possible that these missiles might fly outside the range area. The Air Force representatives said that while this is a possibility, they feel that very little danger will result therefrom, since the movement of the missiles can be controlled from the ground and the missiles can be destroyed if there is any reason to believe their continued flight would be dangerous.

[3] The Dominican counterproposal for an LRPG agreement, dated March 16, 1951, was transmitted to the Department of State as enclosure 2 under cover of despatch 589, from Ciudad Trujillo, March 16, 1951, not printed (711.56341B/3–1651). In the covering despatch, Ambassador Ackerman stated in part that most of the concessions sought by the United States in the original draft had been retained in the Dominican draft, and that the only substantive changes were an explicit statement that the Dominican Republic did not cede sovereignty over the area specified as the testing ground, provision for the establishment of a mixed commission to determine jurisdiction over crimes by United States personnel in and outside of the area, and a reduction of the duration of the agreement from 25 to 5 years.

[4] Not printed.

3. The Dominicans inquired whether the missiles might carry atomic weapons or materials. They were told that this might be a possibility.

4. In general the Dominicans wished to know how much dangerous material would be carried in the missiles over the testing range. The answer to this question was that normally very little will be carried, i.e., only sufficient explosive material to destroy the missile in the event its continued flight is undersirable. It was clearly pointed out that the missile is a means of transporting explosives and is not an explosive itself, so that in testing the flight of missiles over the range the principal "cargo" carried by the missile will be non-explosive ballast material.

5. The Dominicans inquired whether it was intended to establish other proving grounds or to make agreements with other countries of the type proposed between the United States and Dominican Governments. The reply to this question was that this is the only LRPG contemplated by the Air Force and that it is not now planned to extend it beyond Puerto Rico. The Dominicans were told that the only other agreements negotiated or under negotiation are with the Government of the United Kingdom, with reference to the use of the territory of the Bahamas and other British islands on the route of the LRPG. It was pointed out that the testing of guided missiles over the LRPG is a joint United States-British project, and that the agreements with the British provide for the way in which British controlled territory shall be used in this project.

6. Some discussion ensued on the proposal of the Air Force for a 25-year period for the life of the Agreement and the Dominican counter proposal for a 5-year period. Ambassador Ortega Frier stated that it would be difficult to explain to the Dominican people, particularly those whose property rights would be affected by the need for sites, rights of way, etc., why they must give up the use of their property for 25 years. He felt it would be better to present the matter to those Dominicans whose property rights would be so affected as a 5-year proposal, since this would appear to be of a much more temporary nature than a 25-year period. He said that the Agreement could be extended as needed beyond the 5-year period.

The Air Force representatives stated that the 5-year period would just give them time to get well under way and that it would be difficult for them to explain the project to the Congress of the United States and to obtain the necessary funds for the heavy long run investment needed if assurances could not be given in advance that the Air Force would continue to reap the benefits of the investment put into the project. No conclusive result was reached between the United States and Dominican representatives as to the length of the Agreement.

No comments were made by the Dominican representatives regarding the general remarks in the United States informal statement with respect to the Dominican Government's counter draft on the matter of jurisdiction.

It was agreed that we would prepare precise alternative language on those Articles in the Dominican draft which we wish to have revised, and would submit these proposed revisions to the Dominican Government through our Embassy at Ciudad Trujillo, in accordance with the already agreed on plan to have the agreement negotiated and signed there.

After the Dominicans had left, the United States Government representatives tentatively agreed to suggest to the Dominicans a 12 or 15-year period, and to accede to a 10-year period if necessary. If it is decided to present this alternative to the Dominican Government it will be included in the Department's suggested modifications of the Dominican draft for presentation by our Embassy to the Dominican Government.[5] [5] The several drafts and counterdrafts of the proposed LRPG agreement exchanged by the United States and the Dominican Republic between May and November, 1951, are in Department of State decimal files 711.56341B and 711.56339.

---

On November 26, 1951, the United States and the Dominican Republic signed at Ciudad Trujillo an agreement, with an accompanying exchange of notes of the same date, providing for the extension through a portion of Dominican territory of the flight-test range for guided missiles of the United States Air Force Missile Test Center at Cocoa, Florida. The agreement was transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 327, from Ciudad Trujillo, November 29, 1951, not printed (711.56339/11-2951). For text of the agreement and notes, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 2425, or United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), vol. 3 (pt. 2), p. 2569.

795B.5/7-951

The Ambassador in the Dominican Republic (Ackerman) to the Department of State

SECRET

CIUDAD TRUJILLO, July 9, 1951.

No. 14

Subject: Conversation with President and Foreign Secretary Regarding Dominican Troops for UN [1]

In my conversation today with President Trujillo [2] and Foreign Secretary Díaz Ordóñez (this is the first time he has had Secretary Díaz Ordóñez present at our interviews) concerning the position of the Dominican Republic in the Korean campaign and the contribution of armed forces for the UN, reported in my telegram 8, of July 9, 1951,[3] the President repeated to me substantially the views he had expressed to General Watson [4] in the conversation reported in my despatch 848, June 27, 1951.[5]

---

[1] For additional documentation concerning United States efforts to secure from Latin American governments offers of troop participation in Korea, see pp. 985 ff.

[2] Rafael Leonidas Trujillo Molina.

[3] Not printed.

[4] Lt. Gen. Thomas E. Watson (ret.).

[5] Not printed (795B.5/6-2751).

I pointed out to him the advantages to this country of having a battalion thoroughly trained and equipped for modern warfare as his best insurance against any invasion attempts, although I did not believe there would be any further incidents of that nature in view of the actions taken by the OAS. In emphasizing this remark I pointed out that the reason we had been interested in a battalion rather than a group of smaller size, such as one or two companies, was because the battalion is a self-sustaining unit, if a Marine battalion is taken as a model, equipped, in addition to rifles and machine guns, with tanks, bazookas and possibly such light artillery as howitzers, and flame throwing equipment. The firing power, therefore, of a modern battalion is substantially above that of much larger units under former standards. The streamlining and training of such a force would provide valuable experience to men and especially officers, and by its greater effectiveness might permit him to reduce his present military forces. Therefore, there were advantages to the country apart from the primary objective supporting this attempt to discourage the Soviet from embarking on a Third World War, which seemed to me to merit his reconsideration of his previous decision. I stressed the importance of the countries of Latin America making a show of strength vis-à-vis the Soviet, and mentioned that Brazil was one of the latest of the South American countries to signify intention to join our forces in Korea.[6] He interpolated that he had heard rumors that Nicaragua may send a contingent to Korea, to which I replied that while I believed this matter is under active consideration in Nicaragua, as in several other countries, I could not state for certain that such is the case.

The President listened attentively to my presentation and when I had concluded, he remarked that there could be no question in the minds of anyone anywhere as to his opposition to Communism; that he had taken a strong stand against it long before the U.S. had decided that relations with Russia could not be effective until they were backed up with force. He wished to recall to me that the groups in this area who were desirous of destroying his government were not adverse to using Communists or any other element they could get to support them in such attempts, for among those mixed up in the Cayo Confites affair there were Cuban Communists, some of whom have since shown their true colors by visits to Russia or the satellite states. At that time he sought aid from the U.S. in the form of military equipment and received little understanding and on this as on other occasions in the past he has not found the U.S. very sympathetic to him. He has had to govern this country in a manner designed to improve it in all fundamentals. He has given it a national pride and made it sufficiently strong that it is now respected among nations. The improvements under his direction are here for all to see. I pointed out that in the affairs of all nations there are times when misunderstandings arise, but that I felt he could not complain in any way against the treatment accorded him during the last three years for we had endeavored to understand his problems and to be of assistance to him in many ways. This he acknowledged to be true. He then said that the financial problem was one that had him somewhat concerned for he had spent a great deal of money in building up his armed forces to insure security from interventionists abroad, and in equipping and supplying those forces. Aside from heavy expenditures made in Brazil, he had also built up an arms factory [7] so as to relieve himself of dependence on foreign sources in an emergency, and this arms factory had been costly. He has always taken pride in avoiding the assumption of obligations beyond the capacity of the country to pay and when he assumed such obligations to live up to them without quibbling or further discussion. The UN has been a financial drain, for apart from the contributions it has been costly to send representatives to its meetings. He feels that the Dominican Republic is in less favorable position to send troops to Korea or prepare for integration of a contingent in the forces of the UN than are a number of the more wealthy of the Latin American countries who have not signified an intention to contribute.

[6] For documentation on this subject, see pp. 1184 ff.

He then inquired as to whether I knew the present status of the security program legislation and in the event it were approved by Congress, whether these funds would be made available to the countries of Latin America.

The third point he raised was the Constitutional provision against sending troops outside of the country, and he facetiously remarked that when he had sought extraordinary powers sometime ago to counteract the plottings of his enemies, adverse criticism emanated from "your friends".

I expressed my understanding of his preoccupation with the financial burden imposed on this country for maintaining the various agencies of the UN and especially for its many meetings which caused a great outlay for small countries and also remarked that the State Department and the U.S. Government were appreciative of the strong support we had always received from the Dominican delegates to these bodies on matters of concern to us and to the Dominican Republic. I remarked that the U.S. has been well aware of the fact that the Dominican Republic has met its obligations to the UN and its affiliates promptly and willingly and that possibly this in part was the reason we felt that he would not treat lightly the request for armed support. I emphasized that this is a common effort and that we too are making heavy sacrifices and would probably have to continue to do so until such time as the Soviet, which apparently only recognizes force, came to realize that warfare is unprofitable to all.

[7] Apparent reference to the Dominican Government's armament plant at San Cristobal.

The objection to sending forces to Korea by reason of the Constitutional proscription was cogent and one which I could not argue against except to point out that under present world conditions a new request for special Presidential authority would be justified. However, as regards the cost of a contingent for the use of the UN, these forces, as I understand it, are to be held in readiness for use after they have been trained and equipped. If the cease-fire in Korea is a prelude to the withdrawal of troops from that area it is unlikely that the UN will call for these contingents immediately and when such call is made the special Presidential authority required could then be raised before the Dominican Congress.

As regards the appropriations under the security program it seems reasonable to suppose, although I pointed out that this was my idea wholly and not based on information obtained from Washington, that the U.S. Government would utilize that to assist those countries in Latin America which show an intention to support the actions of the UN with armed forces. This should not be interpreted to mean that the U.S. plans to supply equipment and materials as a gift but presumably the authority in that legislation would permit the U.S. to make such equipment available at cost or below cost and also to assist in the training of such troops as might be requested by Latin American governments so that they would be ready for immediate integration into an over-all army. I mentioned further that the arms factory might now become a source of income to this government and especially a worthwhile contribution to the UN or the Atlantic Pact countries in the event that the discussions now being conducted in Washington by Brig. General Clark (Ret) with the War Department were to result in contracting for materiel manufactured to our specifications. Probably the use of such arms by the Dominican armed forces would reduce considerably the amount of equipment it would require from outside.

At this point the Foreign Secretary remarked that while he agreed with the President with regard to sending troops to Korea because of the Constitutional restrictions he did not think that these objections could be applied to the commitment which had been undertaken by this government in the GA and in Washington for making available armed forces for integration into an army for the UN, inasmuch as such troops would not be required immediately and they were merely being trained for later call if an emergency arises in the future. He expressed the view that probably a contingent smaller than a battalion could be made available, but I repeated the arguments given previously supporting a contingent of battalion strength.

The President then handed certain documents to the Foreign Secretary, which apparently had been drawn up by other advisers with regard to these questions, and requested the Foreign Secretary to redraft them along the lines of making available armed forces for the future use of the UN in accordance with the commitments of this government under article 8 of the GA resolution "Uniting for Peace".[8] He asked that the Foreign Minister prepare this in draft form which he could study carefully.

Several times during the exchange of views, the Foreign Minister interjected a few words in my support and I feel certain that these were effective in the President's reversal of his previous decision.

As soon as I receive more definite information from the President or Foreign Secretary concerning this decision, I shall seek from the Department its views as to training, and equipping such contingent to make it available for immediate integration into a larger force.[9]

RALPH H. ACKERMAN

[8] Reference to Resolution No. 377 (V) of the General Assembly of the United Nations, November 3, 1950. For text, see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Fifth Session, Resolutions Adopted by the General Assembly during the period 19 September to 15 December 1950, Supplement No. 20 (A/1775), pp. 10–12.

[9] In despatch 14, from Ciudad Trujillo, dated July 12, 1951, Ambassador Ackerman stated in part: "It is quite obvious from my conversation with the President and the Foreign Minister, as well as from inspired articles which have occurred in the press, that this government will not make available troops for Korea." (795B.5/7–1251)

839.10/8–151

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] August 1, 1951.

Subject: 1. Participation of the Secretary in ceremony of exchange of notes with Dominican Ambassador recognizing termination of Financial Convention of 1940.[1]

2. Comment by Secretary on negotiations with Dominican Republic for military bases.

Discussion:

1. Agreement has been reached on the text of an exchange of notes recognizing the termination of the Financial Convention of 1940. The Dominican Ambassador has requested that you sign the United States note at a brief ceremony at your office. For the Dominicans this event will be of historic importance since it will constitute United States recognition of their complete financial independence.

[1] For text of the Financial Convention and accompanying exchanges of notes signed by the United States and the Dominican Republic at Washington, September 24, 1940, see Department of State Treaty Series (TS) No. 965, or 55 Stat. (pt. 2) 1104.

The Dominican Republic came under United States military administration in 1916. At this time its customs had been under United States management for eleven years. In 1924 the United States Marines were withdrawn but American control of Dominican customs continued until 1940. In that year the Financial Convention was signed, returning financial controls to the Dominican Government, but pledging that Government to make certain bond and interest payments.

On July 4, 1951 the Dominican Government paid the last outstanding private claim. Except for a small balance on its Export-Import Bank loan which is being paid off regularly, the Dominican Government has now extinguished all foreign debts. Considering the past history of Santo Domingo, this accomplishment represents a genuine achievement.

2. On request of the United States Air Force, negotiations are under way with the Dominican Government for the use of certain areas and facilities in Dominican territory in connection with a Long Range Proving Ground for experiments with guided missiles. These negotiations were apparently proceeding smoothly until the Dominican Government recently decided to submit a counter draft. This counter draft proposes several substantive changes, some of which are unacceptable to the Army.

Ambassador Ackerman reports from Ciudad Trujillo that some of the Dominican proposals are motivated by an impression that the Proving Ground, while of vital importance in Dominican minds, is viewed in the United States as a routine military matter of small importance to the Department of State. Ambassador Thomen is reportedly the one who conveyed this impression to President Trujillo.

Recommendation:

1. That you participate in the ceremony to be scheduled at your earliest convenience.[2]

2. I believe that during the ceremony an informal statement by you to the Ambassador that the Department is greatly interested in the early conclusion of these negotiations in view of the importance of the Long Range Proving Ground to hemisphere defense would have a salutary effect.

[2] On August 9, 1951, Secretary Acheson and Ambassador Thomen signed an exchange of notes at Washington whereby the United States and the Dominican Republic recognized the termination of the Financial Convention the two countries had signed in 1940. For text of the notes, see TIAS No. 2365. For a press release dated August 9, see the Department of State Bulletin, August 20, 1951, p. 299.

611.39/10–951

Policy Statement Prepared in the Department of State

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] October 9, 1951.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

A. OBJECTIVES

Our objectives with particular reference to the Dominican Republic are: 1) to obtain the support of the Dominican Government and people in efforts to promote inter-American and world-wide peace and prosperity; 2) to build in the Dominican Republic an appreciation of the institutions and practices of representative government; 3) the economic development of the Dominican Republic and the promotion and protection of legitimate US business interests; 4) to promote mutual understanding and friendship between the peoples of the Dominican Republic and the United States; and 5) the improvement of relations between the Dominican Republic and its neighbors.

B. POLICIES

US policies toward the Dominican Republic are of particular importance because they exemplify our attitude towards dictatorial governments in a nearby area of political and strategic significance to us. Since 1930 the Dominican Republic has been under the complete control of one of the most efficient and ruthless dictators to be found in the other American republics, Generalissimo Rafael Leonidas Trujillo Molina, under whose rule the Dominican Republic has nevertheless made very substantial progress economically and in public health and instruction. Trujillo and his favorites have, however, a stranglehold on the political and economic life of the country, except for public utilities and the sugar industry, which is principally American-owned and provides through taxation the main source of the government's revenues.

US-Dominican relations are colored by the long history of Dominican financial and political tutelage under the US, as well as by our policy at various times during Trujillo's rule—the most recent being the period 1944–47—of making known our disapproval of his regime. In 1905 under the so-called Theodore Roosevelt corollary to the Monroe Doctrine, the US began the collection of Dominican customs to service the Dominican foreign debt and thus meet a potential threat of intervention by some other power. Customs control was followed in 1916 by military occupation, and for the next eight years the Dominican Republic was under a US military government. Although political sovereignty was restored in 1924, complete financial independence was not regained until 1947 with the liquidation of the remaining privately held Dominican foreign debt.

The period of US control aroused in the Dominicans an ardent desire to become and remain free from dependence on foreign governments. While Dominican opinion did not become permanently hostile to the US as a result of our intervention, and the Dominican Government fully cooperated with us in the recent war, it has been reluctant to ask our help even in undertakings which might be of benefit to it. This reluctance was intensified during and as a result of the 1944–47 period when our official relations with the Trujillo Government were on a "correct but cool" basis, and when we therefore rejected certain Dominican requests.

In seeking to achieve our first objective it is our policy to make known to the Dominican Government our international objectives and our views on specific international problems. The Dominican Government has usually made a point of cooperating with us in the Organization of American States (OAS) and the United Nations. At the same time it has occasionally taken an aggressive stand on matters that are of particular interest to it, such as the Spanish question, how to deal with international communism, the creation of an effective inter-American organization (now achieved in the OAS), and the use of OAS machinery to curb threats of aggressive and interventionist international action against the Dominican Republic. In this last regard Dominican policy is in line with our policy of strong support for the OAS as a regional security system within the United Nations.

Efforts to achieve our first objective also play a leading role in determining our policy towards Dominican arms requests, both from the point of view of the effect which a possible refusal on our part to license arms shipments to the Dominican Republic would have on that Government's general attitude toward us, and from the point of view of the result of such shipments on the ability of the Dominican Republic to contribute to world and Hemisphere defense against aggression. The Dominican Government has for a number of years been strengthening its armed forces, principally on the grounds that this is necessary to meet threats to Trujillo's regime from Dominican exiles and their allies abroad. Under our 1944–47 policy of official disapproval of Trujillo's regime as dictatorial, the Dominican Government was barred from obtaining export licenses for arms in the United States, although it would have preferred to obtain equipment here. Consequently, it obtained substantial quantities of arms elsewhere, while in turn exhibiting a cool attitude towards us. It has been our policy since the middle of 1947 to license the export of reasonable quantities of arms, aircraft, and vessels to the Dominican Republic from commercial sources. The views of the Dominican Government as to what is reasonable have not, however, always coincided with ours, but not to the extent of raising any serious barrier to basically friendly relations. We made available a small amount of ground and naval equipment from US surplus stocks in accordance with the "interim" program formulated on the basis of the 1945 military staff conversations with the other American republics, and are willing within the limitations of available supplies to consider Dominican requests under the Mutual Defense Assistance Act.[1] The Dominican Republic is now the best armed of the Caribbean and Central American republics.

The achievement of our second objective—the development of an appreciation of representative government—poses an extremely difficult problem, in view of our policy of non-intervention in the internal affairs of other friendly countries and the impossibility in any case of imposing democracy from the outside. As a matter of fact, the Dominican Republic offers a classic example of the truth of the latter proposition. From 1916 to 1924 while we were in complete control of the Dominican Republic, we endeavored to pave the way for the Dominicans themselves to establish genuine representative and democratic government in the Dominican Republic. The ostensibly democratic government which assumed power through a free election upon the withdrawal of the US Marine occupation force lasted only six years before Trujillo seized power in 1930.

Policies which we are following to achieve our second objective include: 1) an effort, through the USIE program's portrayal of life in the United States, to bring to the Dominican people an understanding of what the democratic way of life can mean; 2) cooperation in projects for the improvement of economic, health, and educational conditions, in order to provide a foundation on which effective democracy can be based; and 3) our efforts to promote international stability and thereby to remove any basis for the claim that a "strong man" is necessary to keep the Dominican Republic safe from outside attack. We do not permit the fact that the Dominican Government is an absolute dictatorship to prevent us from maintaining normal relations with it and treating it in basically the same general manner as we do all the other American republics. Nevertheless, we refrain from positive steps which would be widely interpreted as a demonstration of warm friendship for Trujillo and his regime, such as, for example, an official invitation to him to visit the US.

In an effort to promote the economic development of the Dominican Republic it is our policy to encourage the Dominican Government to provide a favorable climate for foreign private investment, and to encourage private US investors to give full consideration to the Dominican Republic as a field for investment. At the same time we are prepared to discuss frankly and confidentially with potential private investors the political and other circumstances affecting the security of investments in the Dominican Republic. The present value of private US investments approximates $120 million. We are not averse to the investment of non-US private foreign capital in the Dominican Republic on an equal footing with US capital. Requests to US Government agencies for financial assistance will be considered according to the criteria of economic justification and the availability of private capital.

[1] For text of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act (Public Law 329), approved October 6, 1949, see 63 Stat. 714.

It is also our policy to give sympathetic consideration, within the framework of the Point IV program and the expanded UN Technical Assistance program to requests of the Dominican Republic for technical assistance[2] in justifiable fields of activity. The Dominican Republic has not been the recipient of as much technical and financial assistance from the US Government as have many other American republics. While it would undoubtedly benefit from such assistance, its government has preferred to develop the country through a policy of vigorous economic self-improvement and the investment of private foreign capital on a contract or concession rather than a loan basis. Save for the small unpaid balance of an Export–Import Bank loan of $3 million granted in 1940 for construction purposes, and being liquidated with regular payments, the Dominican Government has no foreign debt. It tends to regard foreign loans and large scale technical assistance programs as implying a kind of economic inferiority and vassalage. Its views in this connection are conditioned by the Republic's unfortunate experience with foreign loans, which resulted in the establishment of the previously mentioned US Government restrictions on Dominican financial sovereignty from 1905–1947.

A further factor in this independent policy of economic development has been relatively favorable conditions in the Dominican Republic in comparison with other Caribbean island areas with respect to such matters as density of population and continued availability of agricultural resources in this basically agricultural country. The Dominican Republic has not, therefore, presented us with a chronic economic problem as have certain other countries and regions in this area of primary interest to us. Aside from the already mentioned $3 million Export–Import Bank loan of 1940, US Government assistance in recent years has been limited to the assignment of a relatively few US technical experts to the Dominican Republic and the training of a similar number of Dominican technicians in the United States, and to small health and education programs conducted by the Institute of [2] For documentation concerning United States technical assistance policy toward the American Republics as a group, see pp. 1038 ff.

Inter-American Affairs.[3] The former program terminated in 1947, and the latter in 1948, although it has recently been revived as a vocational training program. It is anticipated, however, that US technical cooperation will be expanded under the Point IV program, in which the Dominican Government has evinced an interest, and to this end we have signed a Point IV General Agreement with the Dominican Government.[4]

It is our policy to cooperate with the Dominican Government in all possible ways to encourage and increase trade between the United States and the Dominican Republic. We encouraged the Dominican Republic to become a party to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)[5] and to this end were one of several countries which conducted trade negotiations with her at Annecy in 1949[6] resulting in her accession to GATT in 1950. Limited negotiations were also carried out at Torquay in 1950–51[7] with the Dominican Republic.

The principal Dominican interest in its economic relations with the United States is a large scale opening of the US market to Dominican sugar, the country's largest export. The preferential tariff treatment granted Cuba has since 1902 operated to the distinct disadvantage of the Dominican sugar industry. When the sugar import quota system was established by the Congress in the Sugar Act of 1934,[8] imports of sugar from the Dominican Republic and other "full-duty" countries were virtually barred. Cuba's preferential position was maintained in

---

[3] The Institute of Inter-American Affairs (IIAA) was established in 1942 and became a United States Government corporation in 1947. Its purpose was to aid governments in the Western Hemisphere by promoting technical programs and projects for health, sanitation, and food supply; as of mid-1950 the IIAA operated in conjunction with the Technical Cooperation Administration (TCA) in Latin America. For background information on the IIAA, see the statement made by Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs Willard L. Thorp before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on June 10, 1949, printed in the Department of State Bulletin, June 19, 1949, pp. 795–797. For information on the activities of the IIAA and its relationship with TCA in 1950, see the editorial note in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, p. 679.

[4] By an exchange of notes dated February 20, 1951, at Ciudad Trujillo, the United States and the Dominican Republic had concluded a Point IV General Agreement for Technical Cooperation, which entered into force on the same date. The notes were transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 532, from Ciudad Trujillo, February 21, 1951, not printed (839.00–TA/2–2151). For text, see TIAS No. 2226, or 2 UST 709.

[5] For text of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), concluded at Geneva on October 30, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, January 1, 1948, see TIAS No. 1700, or 61 Stat. (pts. 5 and 6).

[6] For documentation on trade negotiations under the GATT at Annecy, see Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. I, pp. 651 ff.

[7] For documentation on trade negotiations under the GATT at Torquay, England, see ibid., 1950, vol. I, pp. 791 ff.

[8] Reference is to Public Law 213, approved May 9, 1934, which amended the Agricultural Adjustment Act of May 12, 1933 (Public Law 10) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities and to establish import quotas for these products. For text of P.L. 213, see 48 Stat. 670; for text of P.L. 10, see 48 Stat. 31.

the Sugar Act of 1937 [9] and increased in the Sugar Act of 1948.[10] For the foregoing reasons, Dominican sugar has traditionally found a market in Great Britain and, because the war stimulated a boom in world demand for sugar, the Dominican sugar export situation has been favorable in recent years. However, with the increasing production of sugar in the British Commonwealth and the growing uncertainty regarding the continued availability of dollars for British or other European purchases of Dominican sugar exports, as well as with the Dominican realization of dependence on the United States as the supplier of approximately 75% of Dominican imports and the consequent need for dollar exchange, there has recently been a concerted effort on the part of Dominicans to obtain a fundamental change in our sugar policy, so that the Dominican Republic will ultimately be able to dispose of a good share of its sugar output in the US market. In accordance with our policy looking toward eventual elimination of tariff preferences in world trade the United States has reduced somewhat the margin of tariff preference enjoyed by Cuba on sugar [11] while the preferences on a number of other products (mostly, however, unimportant ones) have been eliminated entirely.

With respect to an increase in the quota for Dominican sugar, we have been sympathetic to the Dominican problem in this connection, and with the Department of Agriculture recommended to the Congress an approximate 300% increase in the small quota for all full duty countries, including the Dominican Republic, when new sugar legislation was under consideration in the summer of 1951. Although enacted into law,[12] this change, which beginning in 1953 would increase the basic Dominican quota from 5,468 tons to 29,469 tons at the present level of US consumption, does not satisfy the Dominican authorities, who asked for a quota of 250,000 tons.[13]

In efforts to achieve our objective of promoting mutual understanding and friendship between the peoples of the Dominican Republic and the United States, we pursue the policy of informing the Dominican people about the United States and its people through our program of International Information and Educational Exchange. This entails an active press, radio, and motion picture program. In

---

[9] For text of the Sugar Act (Public Law 414), approved September 1, 1937, see 50 Stat. 903.

[10] For text of the Sugar Act (Public Law 388), approved August 8, 1947, see 61 Stat. 922.

[11] For documentation on the negotiations in 1951 between the United States and Cuba concerning sugar, see pp. 1329 ff.

[12] Reference is to Public Law 140, approved September 1, 1951, which amended and extended the Sugar Act of 1948; for text of P.L. 140, see 65 Stat. 318.

[13] Documents pertaining to Dominican interest in an increased sugar quota are contained in Department of State decimal file 839.235.

There is considerable unpublished documentation on the Cuban sugar preference question and its ramifications in United States trade relations in decimal file 560 AL, and in International Trade Files, Lot 57 D 284, boxes 108–109, and 128–132 (the 1949 GATT meetings at Annecy, France).

view of the strong de facto censorship existing in the Dominican Republic with respect to matters distasteful to the Government, our information program there is directed to themes which we feel will not arouse the opposition of the Government (as, for example, might a direct portrayal of the advantages of democracy over dictatorship) and perhaps result in difficulties for USIE activities in the Dominican Republic. We sponsor, with the Dominican Government, a Dominican-US Cultural Center in Ciudad Trujillo, which is actively supported both by Dominican cultural and official leaders and by American citizens resident in Ciudad Trujillo. The Center provides a meeting place for Dominicans and Americans interested in learning more of each other's culture through lectures, extensive library facilities, the teaching of English, and various other means. We have from time to time sent US professors and lecturers to the Dominican Republic for the purpose of teaching their specialties or imparting to Dominicans information about the United States. Many Dominican students, intellectual leaders, and technicians have also visited the United States to pursue their studies and specialties, some of them under our student exchange and travel grant program.

Our fifth objective—the improvement of relations between the Dominican Republic and its neighbors—is given particular import by virtue of the fact that during the past several years the Dominican Republic has been directly involved, both as an intended victim and as a participant, in a series of plots and counter plots directed against various governments of the Caribbean area by political exiles and adventurers, with the support at times of other governments in the area in violation of international obligations. The result was a mounting international tension and deterioration of relations between certain countries, including relations between the Dominican Republic on the one hand, and Cuba, Guatemala, Haiti, and at times Venezuela and Costa Rica on the other. It is our policy in the achievement of this objective to endeavor, both through appropriate direct representations and through our membership on OAS bodies dealing with these matters, to encourage these countries to work towards this end; through the latter means we also expect to prevent and punish possible violations of international obligations in connection with such conspiracies and thereby to diminish international tension in the area.

C. RELATIONS WITH OTHER STATES

As already indicated, among the foreign relations of major concern to the Dominican Republic are those with certain of its neighbors. The state of these relations is determined primarily by the attitudes and activities of other governments toward the Trujillo regime, and vice versa, or by Trujillo's beliefs concerning these attitudes and activities. He has believed at various times, with some reason, that certain elements, if not government officials, in Cuba, Guatemala, Haiti, Venezuela, Costa Rica, and Mexico have been allied with Dominican exiles in the latter's unceasing propaganda campaign against him, as well as in the organization of two armed expeditions to unseat him. On the other hand, certain Dominican officials have participated in the past few years in similar movements directed against other countries in the Caribbean area.

Relations with Haiti have historically presented the greatest difficulties for the Dominican Republic. There is a constant underlying strain on these relations owing to historical and racial factors and to population pressure from Haiti on the much less densely settled Dominican Republic. In 1937 the Dominican authorities perpetrated a wholesale massacre of Haitian peasants who had infiltrated into the Dominican Republic.[14] Early in 1950 certain Dominican officials were found by a special investigating committee of the OAS to have been involved several months before in a plot to overthrow the Haitian Government.[15] On the other hand, a basic Dominican fear has been that Haitian territory will be used as a base of operations for revolutionary activities against it. Although the same OAS Investigating Committee was unable to confirm any factual basis for such Dominican fears in the several immediately preceding years, there were later reports tending to confirm to a certain degree Dominican apprehensions at that time. Since the overthrow of the Estimé [16] regime in Haiti in May 1950,[17] Trujillo has felt much less apprehension on this score, and there has been a gradual improvement of relations, including a meeting between Presidents Trujillo and Magloire [18] and their joint declaration that they would work towards agreements on several matters of common interest and a strengthening of economic and cultural ties between the two countries.

Dominican relations with Cuba and Guatemala have been particularly strained in recent years owing to the organization within their respective territories of two military expeditions by Dominican exiles and other anti-Trujillo elements, as confirmed by the aforementioned report of the OAS Caribbean Investigating Committee early in 1950. The expedition, organized in Cuba in 1947, had the active support of certain high Cuban Government officials and was tolerated for several months by the Cuban Government, in violation of Cuba's international [14] For documentation on the tender of good offices by the United States, Cuba, and Mexico to conciliate differences between the Dominican Republic and Haiti arising from this incident, see Foreign Relations, 1937, vol. v, pp. 133–141.

[15] For documentation concerning United States support of inter-American collective action for peaceful settlement of disputes, with particular reference to the Caribbean area, see ibid., 1950, vol. II, pp. 641 ff.

[16] Dumarsais Estimé, President of Haiti, 1946–1950.

[17] For documentation on this subject and the recognition of the new government in Haiti, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 932 ff.

[18] Paul E. Magloire, President of Haiti.

obligations. Although the expedition was eventually broken up by the Cuban armed forces, and the OAS in April 1950 condemned Cuba's part in it, relations between the two countries have continued to be strained owing to: 1) the Dominican Government's feeling that the Cuban Government has failed to give complete satisfaction for Dominican grievances arising out of Cuban toleration of the expedition; 2) the Cuban Government's apparent sympathy for the objectives of Trujillo's enemies and the Dominican Government's belief that the Cuban Government is actively cooperating with anti-Trujillo elements to undermine Trujillo's position; 3) continued anti-Trujillo propaganda and other activities in Cuba short of actual organization of another military expedition; 4) a vociferous and manifest public hostility to the Dominican Government in Cuba; 5) alleged threats to the physical safety of the personnel of the Dominican diplomatic mission in Habana; and 6) rivalry between the two countries over their respective shares of the US sugar quota.

Relations with Guatemala have likewise continued strained since the June 1949 organization in that country of an air expedition against the Dominican Republic, one plane of which actually arrived in and attacked Dominican territory. Despite the failure of the expedition, the Guatemalan Government has continued its policy of open hostility towards the Trujillo regime and friendship for its foes. The Guatemalan Government, and the Costa Rican Government as well, have not maintained diplomatic relations with the Dominican Government for a number of years because of their openly stated enmity to dictatorship of the Trujillo type. In large part because of their common enmity towards Guatemala and lack of friendship for Costa Rica, Trujillo and President Somoza[19] of Nicaragua, both dictators, feel a natural affinity and have long maintained friendly relations.

Diplomatic relations between Venezuela and the Dominican Republic were resumed after the ousting in 1948 of Venezuela President Betancourt,[20] who Trujillo thought was cooperating in plotting against him, and there has been a cessation of Dominican charges that the Venezuelan Government was aiding and abetting Dominican exiles in revolutionary activities. Such charges continue to be made from time to time against the exiled leaders of the Betancourt Acción Democrática Party.

Relations with the UK have been of significance because the UK is the traditional market for Dominican sugar and the British Government for several years has purchased virtually all Dominican sugar exports, more recently with ECA financing. During the years 1946–49, the UK was the source of a number of military aircraft and warships obtained by the Dominican Government. Such military transactions were of particular significance to us as a source of dollars for Great Britain, but on the other hand ran counter to the objective of standardization of western hemisphere armament with US equipment.

[19] Anastasio Somoza García.
[20] Rómulo Betancourt.

Trujillo feels a personal and ideological affinity with General Franco [21] of Spain, and strongly opposed the UN 1946 resolution [22] on Spain. In the Fifth Regular Session of the General Assembly in 1950, the Dominican Republic was one of the governments sponsoring the resolution which modified the 1946 action.[23] The United States voted for this resolution. Shortly after the close of the Spanish Civil War, in an effort to impress world opinion that the Dominican Republic was willing to receive the oppressed, as well as to encourage white immigration, Trujillo had offered haven to a considerable number of Spanish Republican refugees, most of whom were later glad to leave the Dominican Republic.

The Dominican Republic has no relations with the USSR and is outspokenly anti-Communist. Trujillo regards himself as a hemisphere leader against Communism, and refers to all his enemies, Communists and non-Communists alike, as Communists. The Dominican Government has from time to time indicated its willingness to support the United States and the United Nations in anti-Communist measures.

D. POLICY EVALUATION

US policy with respect to the Dominican Republic can be considered to be successful in view of the almost unqualified Dominican Government support for our international objectives, and its willingness to cooperate with us in practically any matter in which we request its cooperation. One notable exception to date has been the Dominican Government's failure to contribute to UN military forces, allegedly because of the need to maintain all its forces at home for defense against a possible attack from outside by the forces of "international communism" (i.e., anti-Trujillo Dominican exiles and their sympathizers). In addition, there are certain factors which, while not preventing basic Dominican support of our international objectives, irk the Dominican Government and cause it some chagrin. One of these factors is anti-Trujillo publicity in the United States. Another is the movement of anti-Trujillo Dominicans in and out of the United States. The Dominican Government believes we should prevent both of these types of activity in the interest of good US–Dominican relations. We have told the Dominican Government that while we are prepared to and will enforce US statutes which forbid activities against the security of foreign governments or activities which in their operation might have an adverse effect on such governments, we cannot undertake to limit the free activities or movements of anti-Dominican Government individuals, whether US citizens or aliens, which are not in violation of US law.

[21] Francisco Franco Bahamonde, Spain's Chief of State.

[22] Reference is to Resolution No. 39 (I) of the General Assembly of the United Nations, dated December 12, 1946. For text, see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, First Session, Resolutions Adopted by the General Assembly During the Second Part of its First Session From 23 October to 15 December 1946, pp. 63–64.

[23] Reference is to Resolution No. 386 (V), dated November 4, 1950. For text, see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Fifth Session, Resolutions adopted by the General Assembly during the period 19 September to 15 December 1950, Supplement No. 20 (A/1775), pp. 16–17.

Another factor which has affected the Dominican Government's general attitude towards us has been its dissatisfaction at times with our refusal to approve certain arms exports, or with what it regards as delay in the issuance of export licenses. At the same time we are frequently attacked by liberals and anti-Trujillo elements for permitting the export of armament to the Dominican Government. There are admittedly arguments on both sides with regard to the desirability of permitting arms to go to the Dominican Republic from the United States but on balance our present policy of licensing the export of reasonable quantities of arms from commercial sources and of according the Dominican Government opportunity to share in available supplies of military equipment under the Mutual Defense Assistance Act is justifiable if we are to maintain officially friendly relations with the Dominican Government and secure its cooperation in matters of interest to us. Our efforts to persuade the Dominican Government to rely primarily on the OAS and the United Nations for the military defense of the Dominican Republic against aggression have met with only limited success. We have pointed out in this connection that the Dominican Government could more profitably use its resources for the material development of the country than for armaments. The Dominican Government, while agreeing with us in principle and recently stabilizing or even reducing its rate of expenditures for this purpose, feels that it must have adequate means to defend itself against possible further expeditions which may be organized against it abroad.

With respect to our second objective it is obvious that no observable progress has been made towards the democratization of the Dominican Republic. There is no evidence so far of the Dominican Republics' turning from dictatorship while Trujillo maintains control, and he is firmly in the saddle with apparently excellent health. On the other hand, democracy is the Dominican ideal, and even Trujillo portrays himself as a democratic leader and his country as one where full civil and political rights prevail. We are under constant attack by liberals in this and other countries and by Dominican political exiles for maintaining normal diplomatic relations with Trujillo. However, unless we are prepared forcibly to remove Trujillo—and such a step would be clearly contrary to our non-intervention commitments—a policy of other than normal relations would merely antagonize him, as has been the case in past efforts to apply such a policy, without removing him or advancing the cause of democracy in the Dominican Republic. In certain cases where a policy of discrimination against Trujillo would involve a withholding of concrete benefits to the Dominican Republic, such discrimination would injure the Dominican people in equal if not greater degree.

With respect to our third objective, the Dominican Government regards our policy towards its desire for a larger share of the US sugar market as the basic yardstick for measuring our willingness to take positive steps to cooperate with it in economic matters. Regardless of how much technical assistance we may be willing to make available to the Dominican Republic under Point IV, the Dominican Government will undoubtedly feel in increasing degree that unless we make a more substantial gesture in this direction than we have to date, we are discriminating against it in a matter of prime economic importance to it, and its general attitude towards us will be affected accordingly.

Despite the progress made by the Dominican Republic in economic development, health, and education in the past 20 years, there remains much to be done to bring it up to the economic levels of the more developed of the other American republics. A principal factor in achieving this objective will continue to be the investment of private foreign (i.e., mainly US) capital in worthwhile lines of endeavor. In connection with our objective of promoting and protecting legitimate US business and investments in the Dominican Republic we have been successful in the main in preventing discrimination against American interests; there is, in fact, a tendency for the Dominican Government to accord American interests better treatment than that accorded Dominican or other foreign nationals, precisely because we have been zealous in guarding our citizens' interests. Threats to the security of foreign investment in the Dominican Republic arise primarily not from discriminatory treatment against foreigners but from abuses which are suffered by the entire populace—Dominicans and foreigners alike—with the exception of the privileged few. The basic fact is that economic activity in the Dominican Republic must adjust itself to the existence of an officially sponsored system of tribute and favoritism, which is used to further the business interests of those having official blessing and to injure those not having such blessing.

With reference to our fourth objective it is difficult to judge the extent to which mutual understanding and friendship between the US and Dominican peoples has been achieved. In particular it is difficult to know to what extent the masses of the population are aware of and friendly to the US. One reason for this is that in the absence of a free press, free expression of opinion, and free elections, there is no way of measuring their attitude. Nevertheless, it seems likely that among Dominican intellectual, business, and professional leaders, many of whom have visited the US or have come into frequent contact with US citizens in the Dominican Republic, the sentiment towards the US is predominantly friendly. However, inasmuch as certain Dominicans have been subjected to segregation practices in the US because of their color, they and other Dominicans of the same color have become unfriendly towards us. Anti-Trujillo Dominicans, including individuals within the country who are willing to speak freely with Embassy representatives and other trusted US citizens, as well as exiles outside the country, usually exhibit varying degrees of impatience with, or even hostility to, the US because they think we are remiss in not ridding the Dominican Republic of Trujillo or at least in not instituting a partial or thorough boycott of his regime.

The achievement of our fifth objective must be measured in both short and long run terms. With respect to efforts to ameliorate the international tension of the past five years in the Caribbean and to improve relations between the Dominican Republic and other Caribbean and Central American republics, real progress has been made in that this tension has abated and there is no real evidence of a renewal of government assistance to or toleration of military activities directed towards the overthrow of other governments in the area. Not only has such positive governmental support of anti-Trujillo elements apparently ceased, but Dominican Government officials do not appear to be sponsoring plots or conspiracies against other governments. On the other hand, mutual antipathies continue to exist as between the Dominican Government and the governments of Cuba and Guatemala, and it does not appear that there can be friendship between their respective regimes in view of the severe ideological differences between them (i.e., "dictatorship" versus "democracy") and the sympathy of the Cuban and Guatemalan regimes for Trujillo's enemies.

With specific reference to Dominican-Haitian relations, any basic improvement is a long run matter, although from time to time relations may improve temporarily. The Dominican Government and people have a tendency to feel that they should have our support in what they regard as their defense of Christian civilization against engulfment by the African barbarism and paganism of Haiti. They view our efforts to maintain an objective and unbiased attitude towards Dominican-Haitian relations as favoritism towards Haiti.

Nonetheless, despite the difficulties which prevent full achievement of our objectives vis-à-vis the Dominican Republic, and make impossible perfect US-Dominican harmony, there is no doubt that under its present government the Dominican Republic will be found on our side in most important international issues and in any basic world controversy.

739.5–MSP/12–2151

The Secretary of State to the Secretary of Defense (Lovett)[1]

SECRET WASHINGTON, December 21, 1951.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Reference is made to Acting Secretary Webb's letter to you of November 9, 1951[2] in which he expressed the approval of this Department of the list of Latin American countries to be submitted to the President for the negotiation of military grant aid agreements pursuant to section 401 of the Mutual Security Act of 1951.[3]

Although the Dominican Republic is included in the program as a second alternate for preparation of an air force unit, it is not included in the list of countries to be approached initially concerning military grant aid agreements, despite the Department of State's understanding that the Dominican Republic is regarded by the Department of Defense to have military potential to contribute to hemisphere defense. It is anticipated that this omission, if not counteracted in timely fashion, will be regarded by the Dominican Republic as an act of discrimination against it, particularly since Cuba, with which country the Dominican Republic's relations are currently strained, is one of those countries with which it is contemplated that such an agreement will be negotiated in the first instance. Such an adverse reaction on the part of the Dominican Republic might diminish its willingness to cooperate with us in activities of mutual defense and, specifically, in implementation of the recently signed agreement with regard to the use of Dominican territory for testing guided missiles.

It is accordingly suggested that the Department of Defense, without altering the determination regarding the negotiations with prospective Latin American recipients of military grant aid during fiscal year 1952, give consideration to the possibility of negotiating in the first instance rather than alternatively with the Dominican Republic regarding participation in any program for military grant aid in furtherance of hemisphere defense during fiscal year 1953 and subsequent years.

Furthermore, it is believed that immediate attention should be given to the desirability of making a general approach regarding military

---

[1] This letter was originally drafted on December 11, 1951, by the Officer in Charge of Special Political Problems, Office of Regional American Affairs (Jamison) and Mr. Hauch; it was redrafted on December 18, by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Mann) and the Acting Officer in Charge of Caribbean Affairs, Office of Middle American Affairs (Wellman). Assistant Secretary Miller concurred in the redraft.

[2] Ante, p. 1027.

[3] For text of the Mutual Security Act (Public Law 165) approved October 10, 1951, see 65 Stat. 373.

cooperation for hemisphere defense to the Dominican Republic at approximately the same time that negotiations for military grant aid are being initiated with other Latin American countries. To this end, I believe it would be helpful for Ambassador Ackerman to be authorized to discuss this matter with appropriate Dominican officials along the following lines:

1. The Dominican Republic constitutes in our view an important potential element in hemisphere defense, and we are giving careful consideration to the contribution which it might be requested to agree to make in accordance with common defense plans.

2. Since the United States has in recent years had no armed service mission in the Dominican Republic, it has not been in the same advantageous position to survey and assess the value of Dominican armed forces and facilities as in the case of those countries with which negotiations are now being conducted for military grant aid agreements. The United States Government would welcome any suggestions from the Dominican Government as to the best way to make this survey and assessment.

3. In the meantime, an effort will be made, within the existing critical supply situation and to the extent compatible with United States defense requirements, to comply with requests of the Dominican Republic for the purchase of equipment or material which would help to put the Dominican armed forces in readiness for a role in hemisphere defense.

4. Consideration is being given to possible ways in which Dominican arms production facilities might be used in a collective defense effort.

The Department would like to point out that discussions by Ambassador Ackerman along the foregoing line should facilitate any negotiations which it might subsequently be desired to undertake with the Dominican Government in connection with the military grant-aid program, and the failure to hold discussions of this general nature with the Dominican Government while initiating negotiations with other countries, particularly Cuba, would probably be prejudicial to the success of any subsequent approach to the Dominican Government for negotiation of a Military Assistance Agreement.

The Department would appreciate receiving the views of the Department of Defense at the earliest opportunity [4] in order that appropriate instructions may be sent to Ambassador Ackerman.

Sincerely yours,

For the Secretary of State:
H. Freeman Matthews
Deputy Under Secretary

[4] No response was received from the Department of Defense in 1951.

103-XMB/12-2651

Memorandum by Mr. Phil R. Atterberry of the Office of Financial and Development Policy to the Director of That Office (Stinebower)

RESTRICTED [WASHINGTON,] December 26, 1951.

Subject: Agenda for Meeting of Board of Directors, Eximbank, December 27, 1951.

1. Minutes of Regular Meeting of December 19, 1951. To be received.
2. Minutes of Regular Meeting of December 14, 1951. To be approved.

For Action

[Here follows discussion of a matter unrelated to the Dominican Republic.]

4. Dominican Republic—Textile Mill. Textilera Dominicana, C por A, a privately-owned corporation, organized under the laws of the Dominican Republic, has submitted a request for Eximbank participation with Conferation Life Association, Toronto, Canada, for a credit of $900,000 to finance the expansion and modernization of the applicant's cotton mill located in Ciudad Trujillo. The insurance company is willing to participate in this project on a 50–50 basis with the Eximbank. The total cost of the pending program is estimated at $1,330,000. Capital required in addition to the requested loan is to be raised by the sale of stock to the present stock holders.

The Eximbank staff committee recommends that the application be denied inasmuch as the project appears to be uneconomic in the absence of protective duties.

The Department is divided in its position on this question. ARA holds that an application for Eximbank assistance in financing the expansion of an industry should not be denied on the grounds that the industry cannot be operated at a profit without a protective tariff. That is to say, the denial of Eximbank funds to beneficiary of protective duties would seriously interfere with U.S. assistance in the promotion of industrial development in Latin America.[1]

On the other hand, ED believes that if an industrial enterprise cannot produce profitably without excessive tariff protection after the modernization program is completed, its expansion should not be encouraged. The Dominican Republic import duties on cotton textiles, which are reported to average more than 75% of the cost of the foreign product, appear excessive in comparison with, for example, Cuban duties of 25 to 40% and U.S. average of 25%. ED believes that the extent of protection needed, after the modernization program is completed, should be clearly established before action is taken on this application.

[1] In a memorandum to Assistant Secretary Thorp, drafted by the Deputy Director of the Office of Middle American Affairs, Roy R. Rubottom, Jr., and Mr. Wellman, dated December 18, 1951, Assistant Secretary Miller stated that ARA had no objections on political grounds to the Export–Import Bank's consideration of the loan application, and that rejection of the loan might have an unwanted effect on the Dominican Government's attitude toward compliance with its part of the LRPG Agreement (103-XMB/12-1851).

Recommendation: Although this is listed for action, the Department has not yet received a report of the Eximbank staff committee's review of the protective tariff question, which the members of the Board requested at last week's meeting.

[Here follows discussion of other matters.]

103-XMB/12-2951

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Chief of the Investment and Economic Development Staff (Gorlitz)

[WASHINGTON,] December 29, 1951.

Subject: Eximbank Loan Application of Textilera Dominicana

Participants: Messrs. Rowntree, Jordan and Walker, Eximbank
ARA—Messrs. Hoover [1] and Hauch, Mrs. Hood [2]
ED—Mr. Gorlitz

At the Eximbank Board meeting of December 27, it was decided to have the staffs of the Bank and the Department discuss a revision of the Bank staff's memorandum [3] on the loan application of Textilera Dominicana. In accordance with that decision, the above group met to exchange views.

The Department representatives indicated that, as Mr. Thorp has said at the last Board meeting, that the Department was not pressing for either approval or denial of this application. Rather it was interested in having the record show clearly the reasons for either approval or denial. There was a general feeling that the latest version of the Bank staff's memorandum did not hang together internally and that its conclusions were not supported by the factual data in the memorandum.

The Bank representatives admitted that the memorandum left much to be desired. They asked, however, for specific suggestions from the Department.

---

[1] John P. Hoover.
[2] Amelia H. Hood, Office of Middle American Affairs.
[3] Not found in Department of State files.

Mrs. Hood of MID, then pointed out several misinterpretations of fact and errors in the text. For example, she mentioned that the tariff had not been increased in 1949. She also questioned whether an average ad valorem equivalent of the Dominican tariff could easily be figured out, whether judging by the table of U.S. and Dominican prices the tariff average could be as high as 75 percent. In addition, she mentioned that the temporary closing of Textilera Dominicana was not simply because of its inability to compete with imported textiles. Also involved were its large unsold inventories of cotton goods, large stocks held by drygoods' merchants and increasing unemployment and depressed state of business in general. She also indicated that many textile mills in the U.S. shut down in 1949 because of large inventories and consumer resistance to high prices. The Bank representatives were glad to receive these and several other points Mrs. Hood raised and said that they would take them into account when revising their memorandum.

In discussing further the reasons which lay behind the recommendation to turn down this application, it developed that the inability of Textilera Dominicana to compete with imported textiles without some degree of tariff protection was only a subsidiary argument. Even the argument that private capital was available as shown by the establishment of two other textile plants in the Dominican Republic did not appear to be the central one. The Bank representatives felt rather that the Board's opposition to the granting of this credit was based upon its general belief that the textile industry, especially in Latin America, was one eminently suited for exploitation by private capital and that only in special instances was it justifiable to invest U.S. Government funds in such enterprise.

The group then agreed that that general argument appeared to be the most defensible basis for denial of the credit if the Bank intended to turn it down. Everyone agreed that the staff memorandum should be completely revised to stress the policy reasons for the Bank action, while mentioning briefly subsidiary arguments such as the probable availability of private capital, the need for tariff protection and Bank suspicion of manipulation of cost and profit data by the applicant to show the most favorable prospect.

There was no misunderstanding of the position of the Department representatives in discussing this matter with the Bank staff. They were simply discussing the Bank staff memorandum and were not committing the Department to support any position the memorandum might recommend.[4]

[4] On January 10, 1952, the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank denied the loan application of Textilera Dominicana (103–XMB/1–1252).

ECUADOR

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND ECUADOR[1]

Editorial Note

On May 3, 1951, the United States and Ecuador signed at Quito a Point IV General Agreement for Technical Cooperation, which entered into force on the same date. A copy of the agreement was transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 818, from Quito, May 4, 1951 (822.00–TA/5–451). For text, see United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), volume 2, page 955, or Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 2249. For a press release concerning the agreement, see Department of State Bulletin, May 21, 1951, page 823.

[1] For previous documentation concerning United States relations with Ecuador, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 855 ff.

722.11/5–1551

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Edgar L. McGinnis, Jr., of the Office of South American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] May 15, 1951.

Subject: Proposed Official Visit of President Galo Plaza [1] to the US

Participants: Ambassador Penaherrera [2]—Ecuadoran Embassy
Dr. Moscoso, Counselor [3]—Ecuadoran Embassy
Assistant Secretary Miller [4]
Mr. McGinnis, Jr.—OSA

The Ecuadoran Ambassador told Mr. Miller that he had requested this appointment to discuss the proposed official visit of President Plaza to the United States and particularly whether this Government could accede to Dr. Ponce's [5] request that the President be invited to the US during the latter part of June or early July.

[1] Galo Plaza Lasso.
[2] Luis Antonio Peñaherrera.
[3] Alfonso Moscoso Cárdenas.
[4] Edward G. Miller, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.
[5] L. Neftalí Ponce Miranda, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Ecuador.

Mr. Miller replied that a decision had been made to invite President Plaza to the US for an official visit and that it would be convenient for President Truman to have the Ecuadoran President stay in Washington from June 20 to June 23 and, in accordance with custom, to have him as his guest at Blair House the first night and at Prospect House the remainder of his stay. Mr. Miller added that it was planned that Ambassador Daniels,[6] who is now en route to Ecuador, would present the official invitation to President Plaza after the presentation of his credentials. He said that a telegram [7] would be sent to our Embassy in Quito today to have our Chargé d'Affaires [8] inform President Plaza confidentially of the invitation and to ascertain his reaction thereto. Ambassador Penaherrera was told that it was our intention to keep this matter confidential until Ambassador Daniels had had the opportunity of presenting the invitation.

Mr. Miller mentioned that he had been informed that neither Mrs. Truman nor Miss Truman would be in Washington during the period of the visit since the President's wife would have to be with her mother who is ill in Missouri and Miss Truman is expected to be in Europe during the period of the proposed visit. He observed that, of course, this did not mean that President Plaza's wife would not be included in the invitation. Mr. Miller said that this Government was pleased to extend the invitation to President Plaza in view of the achievements of his democratic administration in Ecuador and the example it would set of the faith of the US Government in the strength and vitality of the democratic way of life. He said that, while he would be glad to collaborate with the Embassy in working out a plan for substantive accomplishments which might result from the President's visit here, he felt that the visit of itself would be of sufficient moral and spiritual value and influence to render unnecessary any elaborate program of other achievements.

Both the Ambassador and Dr. Moscoso indicated that they heartily agreed with what Mr. Miller had said and the Ambassador added that he was most grateful for this information and was certain that President Plaza would be highly pleased to accept the invitation. Dr. Moscoso said that he was in full accord with Mr. Miller's observations that the spiritual and moral value of the visit was the principal benefit which would result from the President's trip, but added that, of course, it would be necessary to develop some substantive accomplishments which could be pointed to as having resulted from the trip.

Mr. Miller observed that Mr. Daniels would arrive in Quito May 20 and that the period would, therefore, be brief between the acceptance of his credentials and the time the President would depart for the US.

---

[6] Paul C. Daniels was appointed Ambassador to Ecuador on April 19, 1951.
[7] Telegram 245, not printed.
[8] John N. Hamlin.

He, therefore, suggested that it would be advisable for the Foreign Ministry to expedite as much as possible the acceptance of Ambassador Daniels' credentials and his first meeting with the President. The Ambassador indicated that he would be glad to suggest to the Foreign Office that this be done.[9] [9] Ambassador Daniels presented his credentials and the invitation from President Truman to President Galo Plaza on May 25 (722.11/5–2551), and President Galo Plaza accepted the invitation on May 28 (722.11/5–2951).

722.11/6–1551

Memorandum by Mr. Edward L. McGinnis, Jr., of the Office of South American Affairs

[WASHINGTON,] June 15, 1951.

Things We Want From President Plaza

1) Bases on Galapagos. To obtain his agreement to open early negotiations for US military bases in the Galapagos. We want the base agreement to be finalized now so that it will come immediately into effect in the event of war.

2) Shipping Discrimination. We want to get his support to end Ecuador's discrimination against US shipping. Shipments on Gran Colombian [1] vessels pay 3½% consular fees (on value of goods) while shipments on other lines pay 7%. We have repeatedly tried to have Ecuador remove this discrimination, pointing out that it reduces their revenues. We would have no objection if Ecuador chose to grant a direct subsidy to the Gran Colombian line in lieu of the present discriminatory practice.

3) Communism. We should try to convince him that membership of the Ecuadoran National Labor Federation (CTE) in the CTAL aids communism. We could point out that the CTE is the only Latin American labor group, not completely dominated by communists, that is affiliated with CTAL. The two US labor confederations, as well as many free Latin American labor unions, belong to the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (OIRT).

Things President Plaza Wants From US

1) Loans—Earthquake. Under the unexpired earthquake credit,[2] he wishes loans for grain storage, waterworks in Ambato and about nine small towns, hydroelectric power development at Rio Verde, and housing construction materials. The Bank has granted the Ambato loan (to be announced later)[3] and will sympathetically consider waterworks for the additional towns and the grain storage program. It will also consider the Rio Verde project provided it is sealed down. The Bank is opposed to any housing materials project that does not provide for realistic housing costs in Ecuador.

[1] Flota Mercante Gran Colombiana, S. A., a shipping line jointly owned by Ecuador, Colombia, and Venezuela.

[2] Reference is to the $7,000,000 credit (popularly known as the Earthquake Rehabilitation Loan) which the Export-Import Bank had approved on December 14, 1949, to finance reconstruction work in the area damaged by the earthquake of August 1949.

2) Loans Outside the Earthquake Credit. Plaza wishes loans for airport development at Quito and Guayaquil, highway construction and improvement, and development of a deep water port at Guayaquil. The Export-Import Bank will sympathetically consider the airports project and may possibly approve it next week. The other development projects should be submitted to the IBRD[4] instead of the Export-Import Bank under present Departmental policy.

3) Abaca[5] Program. Plaza desires the RFC to establish an abaca program in Ecuador. Under US legislation to encourage Western Hemisphere production of abaca,[6] the RFC has been surveying the possibility of establishing a large plantation in Ecuador. No commitment can be made to Plaza on this since RFC surveys are not completed. However, preliminary studies indicate that conditions are favorable in Ecuador for the production of abaca. If other conditions are satisfactory, the RFC will require the construction of a road from Camarones to Quevedo (about twenty-five miles).[7]

4) Destroyer Escorts. Although we have told the Embassy here that destroyer escorts are not available, Plaza may request the sale of two such vessels to his Government. In seeking legislative approval for the sale of DE's to Peru and other countries, the Navy Department has told us that they absolutely cannot release further DE's for sale to any country.

---

[3] On June 14, 1951, the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank had approved a credit of $500,000 under the Earthquake Rehabilitation Loan to assist Ecuador in financing the cost of rehabilitating and improving the water supply system in the city of Ambato, but the credit was not announced until June 22. For further information, see Export-Import Bank of Washington, Twelfth Semiannual Report to Congress for the Period January–June 1951 (Washington, 1951), pp. 16–17. For the Export-Import Bank's press release, see Department of State Bulletin, July 9, 1951, p. 71.

[4] In a memorandum of conversation, by the Deputy Director of the Office of Financial and Development Policy (Corbett), dated June 13, 1951, the President of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (Black) was reported to have stated, in part, that "the IBRD would be willing to start studying any projects that the Ecuadorean President might have in mind but could in no way give a commitment to finance these projects in the absence of some settlement on the foreign debt [of Ecuador] mutually satisfactory to both Ecuador and the bondholders." (398.14/6–1351)

[5] Manila hemp.

[6] Reference is to the Abacá Production Act (Public Law 683), approved August 10, 1950; for text, see 64 Stat. 435.

[7] Negotiations between the Government of Ecuador and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation toward an agreement for the production of abacá continued intermittently throughout 1951, but no agreement was reached. Pertinent documents are in Department of State decimal file 822.2327.

5) Boundary Dispute. Plaza may ask our support in Ecuador's boundary dispute with Peru. We should, of course, maintain a strictly neutral attitude but indicate that we are always prepared to meet with the other Guarantors of the Rio Protocol [8] (Brazil, Argentina, and Chile) to assist the two countries to solve their dispute.

6) Earthquake Grant. Plaza may inquire regarding the fate of the legislation proposed in the House of Representatives in 1949 to appropriate $5,000,000 for earthquake rehabilitation in Ecuador.[9] Despite the Department's endorsement, this legislation never got out of committee. Its prospects at present are nil.

7) Supply Problems. The President might request our assistance in obtaining scarce supplies and equipment in the US. We should offer sympathetically to examine any specific requests, pointing out that the civilian consumption of many items has been severely restricted in the United States.

8) Point IV Economic Commission. The President already knows that we have agreed to establish a Joint Economic Development Commission under Point IV. In any case, he should be informed that we are willing at any time to sign such an agreement.[10]

9) Point IV Assistance. Plaza may request individual technicians for various projects, including a survey of the irrigation possibilities on the Santa Elena Peninsula. I understand that TCA is prepared to grant any reasonable request.

In addition to the foregoing, we have already informally agreed with Ecuador to announce that the two countries will shortly enter into negotiations for the signature of a cultural convention. We also expect to announce the granting by the CAB, with the approval of President Truman, of a foreign air carrier permit to AREA. This Ecuadoran airline applied about six months ago, under the US-Ecuadoran bilateral air transport agreement,[11] for a route from Ecuador via Panama to Miami.[12]

---

[8] For the text of the protocol between Ecuador and Peru regarding peace, friendship, and boundaries, signed at Rio de Janeiro, January 29, 1942, see Department of State Executive Agreement Series (EAS) No. 288, or 56 Stat. (pt. 2) 1818.

[9] H.R. 355, 80th Congress.

[10] The proposed commission was discussed intermittently by the two governments during 1951, but primarily because of inability to agree on the commission's composition, jurisdiction, and funding the discussions were suspended in October. Pertinent documents are in decimal file 822.00–TA.

[11] Reference is to the Commercial Air Transport Agreement signed at Quito, January 8, 1947, and entered into force on October 27, 1947; for text, see TIAS No. 1774, or 61 Stat. (pt. 4) 4013.

[12] For the press release dated June 25, 1951 announcing the awarding of a route to Aerovias Ecuatorianas, S. A. (AREA), see Department of State Bulletin, July 9, 1951, p. 70.

Editorial Note

President Galo Plaza arrived in the United States on June 20, 1951. For President Truman's remarks of welcome at the Washington National Airport, see Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States: Harry S. Truman, 1951 (Washington, 1965), pages 342–343. For the text of an address by President Galo Plaza delivered on June 21 to the United States Congress, see Department of State Bulletin, July 9, 1951, pages 68–70. For a joint statement by President Truman and President Galo Plaza released to the press on June 25, see ibid., page 68. After spending three days in Washington, President Galo Plaza traveled to New York and then to California, departing from the United States on June 29.

822.10/6–2251

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Edgar L. McGinnis, Jr., of the Office of South American Affairs

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] June 22, 1951.

Subject: General Discussion of Ecuadoran Loan Projects

Participants: Senor Galo Plaza—President of Ecuador
Senor Luis Antonio Penaherrera—Ecuadoran Ambassador

Export-Import Bank Representatives [1]

Mr. Gaston—President
Mr. Arey
Mr. Stambaugh
Mr. Gauss
Mr. Sauer
Mr. Whittemore
Mr. Sherwood
Mr. Townsend
Mr. Chase
Mr. Jordan

Department of State Representatives

Mr. Daniels—US Ambassador to Ecuador
Mr. Krieg [2]—OSA
Mr. McGinnis—OSA
Mr. Stenger [3]—ED

President Plaza remarked that Ecuador had been slow in developing projects under the Earthquake Rehabilitation Loan of 1949, largely due to technical difficulties. He observed that geological studies had to be made; building codes examined and adopted; and detailed data on construction needs gathered. He remarked that three loans had already been approved under the earthquake credit providing for railway and highway improvement and rehabilitation and for the IBEC rice cultivation project on the coast. He said that, while these loans would indirectly benefit the area affected by the earthquake, he was hopeful that future loans from the undisbursed portion of the credit would be made for projects more directly associated with the needs of the devastated areas.

[1] The representatives of the Export-Import Bank are identified as follows: Herbert E. Gaston, Hawthorne Arey, Lynn U. Stambaugh, Clarence E. Gauss, Walter C. Sauer, W. D. Whittemore, Sidney Sherwood, Wilson L. Townsend, and Elmer E. Chase.

[2] William L. Krieg, Officer in Charge, North and West Coast Affairs, Office of South American Affairs.

[3] Jerome J. Stenger, Assistant Chief Departmental Liaison with Eximbank, NAC, IMF, IBRD.

In this connection President Plaza said that he was hopeful that there could shortly be approved credits for the waterworks systems in Ambato and nine other Ecuadoran towns under the earthquake loan. He mentioned that local authorities were receiving valuable aid from the Health and Sanitation Servicio [4] in the preparation of the necessary plans. He also referred to his Government's desire to obtain a credit of $800,000 for building materials for housing construction in the earthquake zone to be granted under the same loan.

Mr. Gaston replied that the Board of Directors had approved the Ambato loan application and would proceed to consider credits for waterworks systems in the other Ecuadoran towns mentioned by the President as soon as the necessary technical information was received from Ecuador. With reference to the building materials application, Mr. Gaston indicated that the information so far received from Ecuador gave him the impression that the housing contemplated was perhaps beyond the financial reach of the people for whom it was intended. President Plaza replied that Mr. Cornwell [5] and his colleagues of the Pan American Union was now making further studies of this situation and would shortly furnish the Bank with detailed information on building materials requirements for a modest building program. The President said that the type of housing constructed would be tailored to local requirements and would be very modestly priced.

President Plaza then referred to the pending Ecuadoran application for a $1,000,000 loan for airport improvement at Guayaquil and Quito. He said that it was his understanding that this loan would be approved by the Bank in the near future. Mr. Gaston said that the Bank had the matter under consideration and that certain additional technical data, to be furnished by Panagra, was required before final action could be taken. He indicated that the Bank was favorably disposed toward this project. Mr. Gaston also asserted that, before the loan were granted, the Bank would require assurances that these airports would be available to all airlines on a free and non-discriminatory basis. The President observed that relations between Ecuador and Panagra had always been satisfactory and that he did not anticipate that there would be any difficulty in meeting the Bank's wishes in this regard, which coincided with his own.[6] [4] For documentation on the use of servicios in Latin America, see pp. 1038 ff.

---

[5] Warren H. Cornwell, a member of the OAS Advisory Commission on Housing.

[6] On July 19, 1951, the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank approved a $1,000,000 credit for Ecuador to assist in financing the cost of improving and expanding the airports at Quito and Guayaquil (822.10/7–1951).

President Plaza then referred to an Ecuadoran project to develop hydroelectric power facilities to Rio Verde and said that studies were going forward by qualified engineers so that it could be presented in project form to the Bank at a later date. The President asserted that he doubted whether sufficient monies would remain under the earthquake loan to finance this project since it was estimated that it would cost $5,000,000. The five million dollar figure, the President explained, included sucre costs of the project. The President went on to say that he would prefer that the Bank make some public announcement of the fact that it was favorably disposed toward this project since it would be helpful to him in Ecuador. Mr. Gaston made a non-committal reply to both of these suggestions of the President. (Mention was made of the Rio Verde project in the Export-Import Bank's press release of June 23.)

Mr. Gaston then asked the President what progress was being made on the grain storage program in Ecuador. The President said that FAO experts had been studying the problem and had assembled technical data on the requirements for grain storage facilities. The President observed that such facilities would be very useful in preventing speculation and added that grain prices now fluctuate violently between harvests. President Plaza said that he expected that sufficient information upon which to base a loan application would be available shortly and that he would see that it were placed in the hands of the Bank. Mr. Gaston observed that the financing of this project could be taken from the undisbursed portion of the earthquake loan.

The President then said that he had received disquieting information respecting the construction activities of the Nathan A. Moore Company in their building of the Quevedo–Manta Highway.[7] He said that apparently the Company did not have the administrative ability properly to perform the work, but added that the Company had subcontracted a portion of the work to the Inca Construction Company. The latter company, he said, was a reliable local firm and had been doing a good job. Mr. Gaston said that he had heard reports confirming what the President had said respecting the Nathan A. Moore Company, and he added that it appeared to the Bank that the Company had not been constructing the road bed in accordance with specifications. Mr. Gaston observed that the construction of the highway had so far been performed solely with Ecuadoran funds but that the Bank wanted to be certain that the Nathan A. Moore Company could do a good job before it authorized disbursement from the credit established by the Bank for this purpose. Mr. Gaston said that the Bank was not only anxious to assure that loan funds were spent wisely but also that Ecuadoran monies were not wasted. He said he thought it might be a good thing to have an engineer of the Bank visit Ecuador and examine the situation and report thereon to the Bank and to the Government of Ecuador. President Plaza readily agreed to this suggestion.

[7] For previous documentation on highway development in Ecuador, see Foreign Relations, 1948, vol. IX, p. 585.

After an exchange of courtesies, the President departed with Ambassador Penaherrera.

822.00–TA/6–2251

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Edgar L. McGinnis, Jr., of the Office of South American Affairs

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] June 22, 1951.

Subject: President Plaza's Requests for Point IV and Financial Aid

Participants: Senor Galo Plaza—President of Ecuador
Dr. Neftali Ponce—Minister of Foreign Affairs of Ecuador
Senor Colon Serrano—Minister of Economy of Ecuador
Senor Salazar Gomez [1]—Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations of the Chamber of Deputies of Ecuador
Mr. Mann [2]—ARA
Mr. Warren [3]—OSA
Mr. Krieg—OSA
Mr. McGinnis—OSA

Following the discussion of certain Ecuadoran loan projects that had been submitted to the Export-Import Bank, the President enumerated to Mr. Mann three matters in which he was particularly interested and which pertained to the economic development of Ecuador.

The President referred to General Wilby's [4] recent visit to Ecuador and his report upon the survey of the Batignolles Company respecting the dredging and maintenance of a deep water port at Guayaquil. He said that General Wilby had been sent to Ecuador under Point IV and that his recommendations had included a suggestion that further engineering surveys be made to ascertain the feasibility and approximate cost of this project. President Plaza said that he was hopeful that the United States Government could make available under Point IV other technical experts to complete the studies recommended by General Wilby.

---

[1] Eduardo Salazar Gómez.
[2] Thomas C. Mann, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.
[3] Fletcher Warren, Director, Office of South American Affairs.
[4] Francis B. Wilby.

President Plaza next referred to his desire to go forward with the Rio Verde hydroelectric power project as soon as engineering studies had been completed. The President estimated that these studies would be available by November 1. He referred to the fact that he had discussed this matter with Mr. Gaston, President of the Export-Import Bank, and was hopeful that, if the cost of the project exceeded the unused portion of the earthquake credit, the Export-Import Bank would be able favorably to consider the extension of an additional loan.

President Plaza mentioned that his Government would request additional Point IV aid for technical studies of the irrigation possibilities in the coastal areas, particularly in Guayas Province. He explained that this area was a very rich agricultural region that, with the proper development, could be made to produce tremendous quantities of rice and tropical products.

Mr. Mann said that, in so far as Point IV assistance was concerned, this Government was very desirous of aiding Ecuador in planning further agricultural development. He said, however, that the present would be an inopportune time publicly to mention further specific technical assistance projects because the US Congress would shortly consider appropriations for Point IV purposes. Mr. Mann said that, assuming favorable action by Congress, he would, however, soon be in a position to discuss with Dr. Bennett [5] the suggestions made by the President and was hopeful that a program along these lines could be worked out.

President Plaza indicated his agreement and expressed the hope that this could be done soon.

---

[5] Henry G. Bennett, Administrator, Technical Cooperation Administration (TCA).

933.532/6-2251

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Edgar L. McGinnis, Jr., of the Office of South American Affairs

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] June 22, 1951.

Subject: Ecuadoran Shipping Discrimination

Participants: Senor Galo Plaza—President of Ecuador
Dr. Neftali Ponce—Minister of Foreign Affairs of Ecuador
Senor Colon Serrano—Minister of Economy of Ecuador
Senor Salazar Gomez—Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations of the Chamber of Deputies of Ecuador
Mr. Mann—ARA
Mr. Warren—OSA
Mr. Krieg—OSA
Mr. McGinnis—OSA

Following the discussion with President Plaza of other matters (which are covered by separate memoranda), Mr. Mann mentioned to the President that this Government was concerned over the matter of Ecuador's discrimination against American steamship lines in favor of the Gran Colombia Merchant Fleet. Mr. Mann said that it was his understanding that Ecuador granted preferential treatment to shipments on vessels of the Gran Colombia Merchant Fleet in the payment of consular invoice fees. Mr. Mann added that it appeared that Ecuadoran revenues were reduced by this practice and that the Ecuadoran Government might wish to give consideration to granting a direct subsidy to the Gran Colombia line in lieu of this present discriminatory practice.

The President replied that he had talked with President Truman concerning this question.[1] President Plaza said that he had told President Truman that the Grace Line had had a virtual monopoly of international shipping in Ecuador and that the Ecuadoran Government had accordingly supported the efforts of the Gran Colombia Merchant Fleet to provide competition to the Grace Line since it was felt that this virtual monopoly arrangement was not healthy either for Ecuador or for American shipping interests. President Plaza went on to say that the matter of Ecuadoran support for the Gran Colombian Fleet was an extremely delicate issue in Ecuador. He further observed that the substitution of a direct subsidy in lieu of other official support of the Flota would involve action by Congress, but said that he had had this matter in mind and was still hopeful that some satisfactory arrangement could be effected.

[1] No memorandum of this conversation was found in Department of State files.

722.001/6-2251

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Edgar L. McGinnis, Jr., of the Office of South American Affairs

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] June 22, 1951.

Subject: Communist Orientation of the Ecuadoran National Labor Confederation

Participants: Senor Galo Plaza—President of Ecuador
Dr. Neftali Ponce—Minister of Foreign Affairs of Ecuador
Senor Colon Serrano—Minister of Economy of Ecuador
Senor Salazar Gomez—Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations of the Chamber of Deputies of Ecuador
Mr. Mann—ARA
Mr. Warren—OSA
Mr. Krieg—OSA
Mr. McGinnis—OSA

After the discussion of certain other matters with President Plaza (which have been made the subjects of separate memoranda), Mr. Mann observed that it appeared unfortunate that the Ecuadoran National Labor Confederation (CTE) retained membership in the CTAL. He said that apparently the CTE was the only labor group in Latin America, not completely dominated by the communists, that is affiliated with the Communist Confederation of Workers of Latin America (CTAL). Mr. Mann mentioned the fact that the two United States labor confederations, as well as many free Latin American labor organizations, belonged to the democratically oriented Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT).

President Plaza replied that he was not unmindful of this matter, but said that there was a great deal of ideological confusion within the ranks of labor in Ecuador. He said that he hoped that some of this confusion, particularly within the Socialist Party, would be corrected during the forthcoming presidential campaign. He referred to the progressive front which it was hoped to work out between the MCDN,[1] the Liberals, and the Socialists whereby the latter could be weaned away from communist influences. The President indicated that the affiliation between the CTE and the CTAL was a matter in which he could not take direct action. He said, however, that he was hopeful that some of the communist influence in the labor ranks and the orientation of some socialist groups toward the CTAL could be eliminated in the long run. He said he hoped that this matter would be resolved following the next presidential elections.

[1] Movimiento Cívico Democrática Nacional.

611.22/9-1551

Policy Statement Prepared in the Department of State

[Extracts] [1]

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] September 15, 1951.

ECUADOR

A. OBJECTIVES

The primary objectives of the United States with respect to Ecuador are to maintain and to strengthen the cooperation of the Republic of Ecuador towards hemisphere security; to continue Ecuadoran support for United States regional and world policies; to encourage the establishment of more stable, democratic and responsible government in that country; and to further Ecuadoran economic development along lines compatible with United States economic and commercial policies.

B. POLICIES

Hemisphere Security. In view of Ecuador's extremely weak military potential, it does not appear that she is in a position to take any direct military action herself toward hemisphere security. It is possible, however, for Ecuador to contribute toward the security of the Western Hemisphere by furnishing military bases for use in the collective defense of the hemisphere [2] in the event of an emergency; maintaining a military establishment sufficient to keep internal order and to prevent sabotage; and through participation in regional defense arrangements and organizations to maintain peace and friendly relations with other states.

During World War II the Government of Ecuador permitted the establishment of United States naval and air bases in the Galapagos Islands and on the mainland at Salinas. These bases were important to United States military plans since Ecuador is within five hundred miles of the Panama Canal. The bases were evacuated by the US after the termination of the war and returned to the Ecuadoran Government. The Joint Chiefs of Staff has cited the need for a new agreement with Ecuador which would, in the event of war, afford the US armed forces military rights to occupy and operate a base on the Galapagos Islands. President Plaza has assured our Embassy at Quito that his Government is willing to reach a satisfactory agreement on the military use of these islands and publicly stated, on an official visit to the US in June 1951, that Ecuador would furnish military bases to the US in the event of a future emergency.[3] While it is therefore believed that we can rely upon the friendly cooperation of the Ecuadoran Government in working out renewed base arrangements, opposition to such arrangements based on nationalistic considerations will doubtless arise when negotiations are undertaken. A measure of the popular attitude is reflected by the fact that President Plaza found it necessary to inform the Ecuadoran people that he had made no formal commitment to the United States during his state visit here respecting military bases in the Galapagos Islands.

[1] The portions omitted from this policy statement duplicate material in the policy statement for Ecuador for the previous year, which is printed in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, p. 855.

[2] For documentation concerning United States policy with respect to hemisphere defense and related matters, see pp. 985 ff.

In order to reduce the possibility of friction, our view is that any agreement which may be concluded should be based upon the mutual obligation of both governments to cooperate in the defense of the hemisphere and provide for concrete contributions on the part of each toward the establishment of military facilities in the Galapagos adequate for common defense needs.

Before undertaking negotiations with Ecuador, the Department is awaiting the views of the Joint Chiefs to Staff as to the conditions which they would want to include in such an agreement.

. . . . . .

Encouragement of Stable Democratic Government. The Republic of Ecuador is one of the most politically unstable countries of South America. It has been traditionally governed under a constitutional system very similar to our own which guarantees the rights of the individual which we consider to be basic. While it is too early to detect a trend, it is encouraging that the present chief executive, Galo Plaza Lasso, was elected President in an unusually free election (June 1948). He was educated in the United States and is considered to be capable and enlightened. A cardinal point of President Plaza's policy has been scrupulously to follow constitutional procedures in governmental administration and to permit the utmost freedom of discussion and opinion on all public issues. In short, he has been making sincere efforts to guide Ecuador toward more democratic government.

In recognition of President Plaza's leadership in Ecuador's progress toward a more democratic and stable political regime, President Plaza was invited by President Truman to make an official visit to the US. The visit, which took place in June 1951, emphasized the importance we attach to the maintenance of representative government and democratic procedures in Latin America. It also stressed the community of interests of the US and Ecuador, and by implication all of Latin America, in the common cause of the free countries of the world in meeting the communist menace. It is believed that the prestige that [3] President Galo Plaza's statement concerning military bases on the Galapagos Islands was part of a toast to President Truman at a state dinner given by President Galo Plaza in honor of President Truman at the Statler Hilton Hotel in Washington, June 22, 1951; for text, see Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States: Harry S. Truman, 1951, pp. 355–356.

President Plaza gained from this state visit increased his popularity in Ecuador and thereby served the cause of democracy in the Americas.

. . . . . .

. . . We have also proposed an FCED Treaty to Ecuador in order to establish a sound basis for the attraction of private US capital for local economic development. While Ecuador has shown some interest in this treaty, the Ecuadoran Government has as yet been slow to begin definitive negotiations. While we wish to obtain a satisfactory treaty with Ecuador, we have not vigorously pressed for action because we wish to avoid the impression that its advantages would largely accrue to the US and because careful advance exploration of the probable Ecuadoran position on the treaty provisions on expropriation, commercial policy and navigation appear necessary in order to determine whether a suitable basis for negotiation exists. Ecuador's protectionism in commercial and shipping matters, its special favors to other Gran Colombiana countries and possible unwillingness to accept the principle of just compensation in the event of expropriation raise questions as to whether formal negotiations should be pressed at the present time.

. . . . . .

Our commercial and trade relations with Ecuador are largely governed by the Trade Agreement of August 6, 1938 as modified by an exchange of notes of March 2, 1942.[4] Under the exchange of notes, the United States waived its rights under the Trade Agreement to protest projected increases in customs duties by Ecuador on certain products included in Schedule I of the Trade Agreement designed to meet a financial emergency arising from curtailed exports due to the war. While the waiver had no specific time limitation, Ecuador agreed to reduce and finally to eliminate the duty increases as improvement in its fiscal situation might permit.

Since 1947, Ecuador has maintained in effect a system of graduated taxes upon foreign exchange transactions. Since we consider that these taxes constitute a contravention of the Trade Agreement in that they serve to increase import charges upon certain US exports to Ecuador that are covered by the Agreement, we have formally discussed this matter with the Ecuadoran Government. Ecuador, however, takes the position that these exchange taxes cannot be classed as customs duties and that in any case they are permitted by the 1942 exchange of notes which Ecuador considers gave it full liberty to increase duties on items listed in the Trade Agreement.

While we cannot yield to the Ecuadoran position, careful consideration is being given to the problem since it is possible that Ecuador would prefer to let the Trade Agreement lapse rather than to permit modification of its control over foreign exchange transactions. The problem is complicated by the fact that the exchange taxes form part of an Ecuadoran program to protect foreign exchange reserves and to increase revenues for the purpose of economic development.

[4] For text of the agreement and the exchange of notes, see 53 Stat. (pt. 3) 1951.

C. RELATIONS WITH OTHER STATES

A long standing boundary dispute with Peru, which resulted in open military conflict in 1941, is in the process of solution under terms of settlement outlined in the Rio Protocol of 1942. The execution of this Protocol, which sets forth the main geographic features of the new boundary, is under the guaranty of Brazil, Argentina, Chile and the United States. Demarcation of the boundary has proceeded slowly but satisfactorily except for differences of opinion respecting two sectors of the border. One involves the Santiago-Zamora area in the southeast and the other the Lagartococha region in the extreme northern part of the boundary. The latter dispute was the subject of an Arbitral Award in 1945 to which Ecuador and Peru give differing interpretations. Various unsuccessful attempts have been made by the guarantors to assist the disputants to resolve this disagreement. While we have proposed that the question of law involved should be submitted to an international judicial body such as the ICJ for adjudication, this suggestion was not adopted by the other guarantors since some believe that the question was not susceptible of adjudication, that the guarantors had no authority to impose their viewpoint (Peru opposed submission of the dispute to the ICJ) and because they believed that the matter should be settled within the inter-American system.

The Santiago–Zamora dispute arose in 1948 because of Ecuador's insistence that it was impossible to fix the boundary in that area as provided in the Protocol because subsequent investigation disclosed the existence of an extensive river system which created a doubt as to the location of the boundary in that region. Peru maintains that the boundary in the area was fixed by the findings of a Brazilian arbitrator in 1945 and that the river system in question has no bearing on the location of the boundary. This dispute has been complicated by the fact that Ecuador has announced that it cannot accept any final settlement that will not accord her "substantial access to the Maranon (river)" which would provide an outlet to the Amazon. The implication is that, regardless of the Protocol, Ecuador intends to insist upon an outlet to the Amazon in the area in dispute. With like disregard for what a study of the facts and geographical realities in the area might disclose, Peru has publicly stated that it will never agree to granting Ecuador access to the Maranon.

As the result of tension created by these disagreements, border incidents have occurred from time to time between the armed forces of the two countries further embittering relations.

Following a border incident in August 1951, both countries requested the aid of the guarantors to fix the responsibility for this latest incident and to assist in the solution of the two unresolved boundary questions. The guarantors are currently meeting in Rio de Janeiro to consider means to assist the disputants to reach a definitive settlement of these issues. The Brazilian Foreign Office has been charged by the guarantors to consult with Peru and Ecuador regarding the possibilities of a direct agreement between them or as to recourse to any other method for solution of their difficulties.

Relations have been particularly friendly with Colombia although the unsettled political situation there has caused some anxiety in Ecuadoran Government circles lest Colombian dissidents involve the local government in their internal conflicts. The basically friendly attitude of Colombia toward Ecuador is reflected in open sympathy for Ecuador in its boundary dispute with Peru and in its desire to join with Ecuador in the formal establishment of closer economic and cultural ties as provided in the Quito Charter.

A special relationship exists among the four former Gran Colombiana countries: Ecuador, Colombia, Panama, and Venezuela. This feeling of kinship, which is perhaps stronger in Ecuador than in any of the other three nations, took concrete form in the adoption by these countries of the Quito Charter in 1948. This Charter, as yet unratified by Venezuela and Panama, provides for the creation of closer economic and cultural ties among the signatories. It envisages the establishment of a Gran Colombiana economic council, an eventual customs union, cultural exchanges, and close cooperation in the fields of science, industry, communications and finance. While a provisional economic council was established in Caracas in 1950, no action has as yet been taken along the lines laid down in the Charter, and it is doubtful at this stage whether this embryonic organization will produce any concrete results in the reasonably near future. Nevertheless, there is a strong sentiment in Ecuadoran Government circles that closer economic and cultural relations among these countries would result in accelerated economic progress and place the members of the group in a stronger diplomatic position vis-à-vis their Latin American neighbors, as well as other foreign countries. The creation of the Gran Colombiana Merchant Fleet in 1946 by Ecuador, Colombia and Venezuela was a forerunner of these broader efforts toward economic integration. Its success in competing with well established foreign shipping lines provided a stimulus to economic collaboration among these countries. Our policy is not to oppose closer economic integration of the Gran Colombiana countries provided that it does not result in commercial discrimination against the US.

Ecuador has no formal diplomatic relations with the USSR or Soviet satellite states except Czechoslovakia and Poland. Trade with these countries has been insignificant and Ecuador readily agreed to the certification required by the Kem Amendment. A small but active Communist party has important influence in the labor movement as well as in Ecuadoran cultural and educational institutions and groups. The local Communist party, which has legal status in Ecuador, maintains intercourse with several local political factions and leaders. There is evidence that this party maintains contact with communist groups in other Latin American countries and with the communist officials in the USSR and satellite countries. There is sufficient communist strength within the relatively weak CTE (Confederation of Workers of Ecuador) to maintain the organization's affiliation with the communist-dominated CTAL. The CTE is the sole remaining national labor federation, not entirely and clearly dominated by communists, which retains this connection.

The objectives of the local Communist party appear to be to foster anti-US sentiment, create unrest and discontent in Ecuador when opportunity offers, and to be in a position to prevent Ecuador from providing assistance to the US in the event of war with Russia. To combat this communist threat, we continue to expose the true nature of the objectives of world communism with the aid of our information programs and through regular diplomatic channels.

D. POLICY EVALUATION

Our policies have in general produced favorable results. There is little doubt that the Ecuadoran Government and people are basically friendly and cooperative. Ecuador supported the cause of the United Nations during the war, providing important military bases to the US and scarce materials for the war economy. More recently Ecuador has consistently supported the US in its fight against communism carried forward in the UN and other international agencies. It is believed that, in the event of the involvement of the US in war, Ecuador would again cooperate in the establishment of any needed military bases, furnish war materials, and render other assistance within the limits of its resources.

. . . . . .

There is some belief within the Government of Ecuador that US commercial policy does not fully recognize the economic problems faced by an underdeveloped country. Ecuador gives lip service to the principle that reduction of tariffs and elimination of other trade barriers is desirable, but evidently believes that the principle should be modified to permit tariff and other protection for local industries, trade preferences to encourage trade with neighboring states, and freedom to exclude or reduce selected imports both for protective purposes and for reasons of economic development through the regulation of foreign exchange. Moreover, the belief is held that tariff policy should be subordinated to fiscal needs since a considerable portion of governmental revenues are derived from import and export duties and charges.

While we recognize that Ecuadoran fiscal needs must be taken into consideration by Ecuador in the establishment of import duties, we have been reluctant to waive, except in an emergency, our right to Ecuadoran duty concessions exchanged for substantial tariff concessions on our part. We recognize also that Ecuador may require exchange controls for the purpose of protecting its monetary reserves, but believe that such controls should be applied in a non-discriminatory manner against US imports.

Since Ecuador has indicated that it regards any suggestions on our part for the reduction of charges on US exports as interference with its fiscal and financial policies, it will continue to be difficult for the US to obtain full compliance with the existing Trade Agreement and to obtain Ecuadoran conformity with the principles which the US subscribes to in GATT [5] and which it is advocating for general adoption by countries not members of GATT.[6]

[5] For text of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), concluded at Geneva, October 30, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, January 1, 1948, see TIAS No. 1700, or 61 Stat. (pts. 5–6).

[6] Ecuador was not a member of GATT.

722.5–MSP/12–1751

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Edgar L. McGinnis, Jr., of the Office of South American Affairs

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] December 17, 1951.

Subject: Proposed Negotiations with Ecuador for Participation in Common Defense Plan as provided by the Mutual Security Act [1]

Participants: Dr. Alfonso Moscoso—Minister-Counselor, Ecuadoran Embassy
Mr. Bernbaum [2]—OSA
Mr. McGinnis—OSA

Mr. Bernbaum said that he had called Dr. Moscoso in to tell him that the American Ambassador at Quito had been instructed to discuss with the Ecuadoran Foreign Office the possible negotiation of a bi-

[1] For text of the Mutual Security Act (Public Law 165), approved October 10, 1951, see 65 Stat. 373.

[2] Maurice M. Bernbaum, Officer in Charge, North and West Coast Affairs, Office of South American Affairs.

lateral military assistance agreement involving the preparation of Ecuadoran armed units for hemisphere defense missions with the assistance of grant aid from the US under the Mutual Security Act. He said that, if Ecuador expressed a willingness to negotiate with the US respecting specific detailed arrangements, a military negotiating team would be sent from this country to Ecuador to assist Ambassador Daniels in negotiations with the Ecuadoran Government. Mr. Bernbaum said that a general bilateral agreement between the two countries was contemplated which would provide for the cooperation of the two countries in carrying out the defense tasks assigned in the Common Defense Scheme [3] and the General Military Plan [4] worked out by the Inter-American Defense Board. He added that these plans are closely tied to the provisions of the Rio Treaty.[5] The monies provided by the Mutual Security Act would be employed by the US in assisting certain Latin American countries, including Ecuador, to put their military forces on a basis upon which they could make a contribution to the common defense.[6]

Dr. Moscoso thanked Mr. Bernbaum for this information and said that the idea sounded desirable to him and that the Embassy would shortly forward a communication to the Foreign Office in the matter. The Minister-Counselor asserted that his own conception of the best plan for the defense of the Americas was the formation of a continental army. He stated that, while there were many political obstacles to the formation of a continental army, he believed that in the long run it would be possible and cited efforts being made in Europe along the same lines. As an example of the political difficulties in working out

---

[3] Reference is to the Common Defense Scheme for the American Continent, approved by the Inter-American Defense Board (IADB), October 27, 1950, and the Department of State, January 15, 1951; for information, see Secretary of Defense Marshall's letter to Secretary Acheson, December 16, 1950, Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, p. 679.

[4] Reference is to the General Military Plan for the Defense of the American Continent, approved by the Inter-American Defense Board, November 15, 1951; for information, see the editorial note, p. 1028.

[5] For text of the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (Rio Treaty), opened for signature at Rio de Janeiro, September, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, December 3, 1948, see TIAS No. 1838, or 62 Stat. (pt. 2) 1681.

[6] In despatch 940, from Quito, dated June 7, 1951, Ambassador Daniels stated in part the following:

"The desire on the part of the United States that the military establishment of Ecuador be developed primarily with a view to performing definite missions falling within a general defense plan and deemed vital to the collective defense of the Hemisphere is most logical. At the same time, it must be recognized realistically that the mentality of the Ecuadoran public at large, as well as the army, navy and air forces, has been conditioned over the years by the recurrent threat or fear of Peruvian aggression. Armaments in Ecuador are thought of as primarily a protection against Peru, which can hardly be considered an objective falling within the broader policies advocated by the Department. Accordingly it is important that everything possible be done to minimize this suspicion and latent hostility between the governments and peoples of Ecuador and Peru, if the Military Security Program is to proceed on an efficient basis consistent with U.S. policy." (722.5/6–751) such arrangements, he mentioned the historical differences between Peru and Ecuador and Chile and Argentina.

Mr. Bernbaum said in conclusion that the information he had imparted was confidential, but that once the military team reaches Ecuador it will probably be necessary to make some kind of public announcement and that in the long run the bilateral agreement would become public.[7]

[7] In telegram 234, from Quito, December 18, 1951, Ambassador Daniels informed the Secretary of State that Ecuador desired to enter into conversations aimed at reaching a bilateral military assistance agreement (722.5–MSP/12–1851), and the Ecuadoran Foreign Minister (Neftalí Ponce) confirmed this acceptance in a letter to Ambassador Daniels dated December 22, 1951 (722.5–MSP/12–2751). The proposed conversations were scheduled for mid-January.

GUATEMALA

RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND GUATEMALA, WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO THE CONCERN OF THE UNITED STATES OVER COMMUNIST ACTIVITY IN GUATEMALA[1]

611.14/5–251

Policy Statement Prepared in the Department of State

SECRET

WASHINGTON, May 2, 1951.

GUATEMALA

A. OBJECTIVES

The objectives of the U.S. policy with relation to Guatemala are:

1. To bring the Guatemalan Government to recognize the danger involved in the present substantial influence of the Communists in the Guatemalan Government and in other important fields of national life and effectively to oppose it.
2. To bring about the establishment in Guatemala of favorable conditions for the conduct of business by U.S. interests on mutually advantageous terms.
3. To obtain Guatemalan understanding of and support for U.S. policy objectives in the hemisphere and throughout the world, so as to assure every form of cooperation, including when necessary, permission to construct and use air and military bases in Guatemala.
4. To assist Guatemala, when and as appropriate, in her efforts to strengthen and expand her economy and raise the standard of living of her people.
5. To secure access to and to maintain and expand the production and flow of raw materials which are strategically necessary for our defense and that of the hemisphere.
6. To assist in the training and equipping, as a source of supply, of the Guatemalan Armed Forces, so that they will be able to oppose the spread of Communist influence in Guatemala and to assume their proper role in hemispheric defense.[2]

GENERAL BACKGROUND INFORMATION

For several years there has been developing in Guatemala a situation which the Department has viewed with concern. Excessive nationalism, manifested by a hostile attitude toward private U.S. companies, the proclivity of an enigmatic and crusading President and others for fuzzy economic and political philosophies and a serious penetration by international Communism, which has taken full advantage of the first two factors, have combined to create this situation.

[1] Continued from Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 865 ff.

[2] For documentation concerning United States policy with respect to hemisphere defense and related matters, see pp. 985 ff.

Historically, Guatemalan politics has been turbulent and unstable. Since its independence in 1821, the Republic has almost always been ruled by dictators, some of them notorious for their cruelty and ruthless repression. The social system inherited from the Spaniards has for centuries been nearly feudal. The small propertied class, perhaps 5 percent of the population, has regarded the Indians, who comprise roughly two-thirds of the population, as vastly inferior beings and has treated them accordingly, excluding them from the political life of the nation. In between these extremes is the Ladino class (mixed Indian and European blood) which, unlike the Indian group, is generally landless and comprises the bulk of labor for hire in Guatemala. It is within this group that the revolutionary parties have secured their support and that the Communists, through the labor unions, have been able to make most effective progress.

The wide cleavage in the command of wealth and resources in Guatemala has been reflected in low standards of living and social rights for the masses. Foreign companies, which comprise the largest economic entities, have in the past realistically suited their policies to conditions as they found them, made favorable arrangements with the dictators in power, and thus secured large concessions and special privileges. Accordingly, foreign companies are identified with oppressive governments and the propertied class as exploiters of the people.

In 1944 one of the most ruthless of all Guatemalan dictators [3] was overthrown by an uprising supported by all segments of the population. Juan José Arévalo,[4] a seemingly liberal and progressive ex-teacher, returned from long exile in Argentina and was elected President by an overwhelming popular vote.

Shortly thereafter Guatemala embarked on a social, economic, and political program which in general terms aimed at achieving freedom and democracy for the people, protecting them from the abuses of the old feudal system and improving their standard of living.

This program appeared at its outset to be commendable. By and large, there was freedom of speech and of the press. The first mid-term Congressional elections were conducted fairly, the opposition won seats and there were few political exiles. The Government instituted a system of social security which was efficiently and honestly run and it undertook to provide the people with better educational and health opportunities. In order to further the cause of the workers it enacted labor legislation and sponsored the formation of labor unions.

---

[3] Reference is to Jorge Ubico y Castañeda, who held power in Guatemala from 1931 to 1944.

[4] Juan José Arévalo Bermejo.

Soon, however, the Government's excessively zealous approach resulted in a biased, pro-labor attitude. This, together with increasing nationalism and chauvinism brought it into direct conflict with large domestic and U.S. interests. The conflict was further aggravated as the Communists gained strength within the Government and the unions from which they could exploit the issues. The U.S. firms (against which there already existed a deep-seated mistrust and resentment on the part of many Guatemalans because of their privileges, past policies, size, prosperity, and foreign ownership) became typified as the arch enemies of Guatemala's "democracy" and the revolution. They were charged with being in conspiracy with the so-called "reactionary" elements to oppose the democratic privileges which Guatemalans were told they were so bitterly winning. The U.S. Government, because of its support of U.S. interests seeking fair treatment under Guatemalan law, and because of the Communist seizure of the situation to air their "imperialistic" charges, also became in the eyes of many Guatemalans a bitter enemy of the Revolution.

Penetration of Guatemala by agents of international Communism has not been confined to the growth of their influence within the labor movement alone. The Government, by ignorance of the danger or by design (and perhaps by a mixture of both) has, as the self-styled model of Latin American liberalism, welcomed within its borders political exiles of leftist inclination, radicals, and avowed Communists. It has, furthermore, given positions of influence within the Government to many people of open Communist sentiment or reputation. While the Arévalo Government cannot be said to be Communist or controlled by Communists, it nonetheless holds a strong sympathy for Communism. The considerable influence of this doctrine on the Government of Guatemala is reflected in its actions and policies and must not be underestimated.

Within Guatemala itself a great many people, not only the wealthy class, became resentful of the Arévalo regime. They feared the excesses of the regime, especially its pro-labor bias and its exploitation by Communism.

They also feared and resented large-scale graft which was previously almost unknown, the growth of a large and expensive bureaucracy, and the Government's dissipation of the largest budgets in Guatemala's history on unproductive and wasteful projects. For example, the Government constructed an olympic stadium, the cost of which approximated one-fourth of an annual budget while the roads of the country were rapidly deteriorating.

Internal dissatisfaction has been so great that the Government itself admits (even with some pride) to having put down twenty-nine separate revolutionary attempts against it.

In the view of many Guatemalans the tragedy of the last few years lies in the fact that the early aims of the Revolution have largely failed of substantial achievement. They attribute this to their leaders' failure to take advantage of a golden opportunity for constructive work made possible by Guatemala's most prosperous era and the utilization of power to advance the interests of the revolutionary groups, including personal enrichment of the leaders without regard for the overriding interests of the people. The revolutionary aims were distorted through their confusion with Communist jingoism in the domestic and international fields. Furthermore, the Government resorted to strong-arm police state methods as a means of keeping itself in power after the first two factors had created such revulsion that overt attempts to unseat it were made.

As a result of these developments, our relations with Guatemala have gradually deteriorated over the past several years. We would have been concerned with any tendency toward excessive nationalism in Guatemala as being contrary to the best interests of both that country and the United States, but we are the more deeply concerned because the Communists have been able to distort this spirit to serve their own ends. A low point was reached in March 1950 when the Guatemalan Government requested the recall of our Ambassador, the Honorable Richard C. Patterson, Jr., on the charge—which the Department categorically rejected—that he had intervened in Guatemala's internal affairs.[5]

Since that time, during which we have been without an Ambassador in Guatemala, national elections have been conducted. Colonel Jacobo Arbenz,[6] one of the three leaders who engineered the revolution of 1944 and who served throughout most of the intervening years as Minister of National Defense, was elected as the candidate of the Government.[7] The manner in which the election was conducted permitted no result other than Arbenz' overwhelming majority. As the Government's candidate, Arbenz was backed by all those who support the current Government, including the most radical political parties, the Communist-dominated labor unions and the Communists and pro-Communist groups. During the course of the campaign Arbenz, probably as a matter of strategy, appeared to disembarrass himself of the most vociferous avowed Communists who then formed their own political party. (Political organization of an International or Foreign

---

[5] For documentation on the efforts of the Guatemalan Government to have Ambassador Patterson recalled, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 869–877. Ambassador Patterson's mission was terminated on April 24, 1951, when his successor, Ambassador Rudolf E. Schoenfeld, presented his credentials. Ambassador Schoenfeld had been appointed on March 13, 1951, but he did not arrive in Guatemala City until April 14.

[6] Jacobo Arbenz Guzmán.

[7] President Arbenz had been elected in mid-November 1950, and he assumed office on March 15, 1951.

character is outlawed by the Guatemalan Constitution, Article 32). This group was more a front than an actual party and for practical purposes, Arbenz was elected with their backing and is essentially committed to continue the policies of the present regime.

In the campaign and pre-inauguration period, there has been much speculation as to what Arbenz would do once in power. It is recognized that he, unlike President Arévalo, has no deeply engrained political or social convictions. He is considered by most to be an opportunist who will mold his activities in such a way as to best suit and provide for the continuity in power of himself and his adherents. Whether his judgment of the situation will call for a mild or drastic modification of the Arévalo policies, or whether it will call for continuation along present lines cannot now be forecast with accuracy. Arbenz has not definitely committed himeself one way or the other, but the consensus of most observers is that he will steer a more nearly middle course than Arévalo, partly because world conditions and Guatemala's geographic position would seem to demand such a course, regardless of whether it is to his liking. The fact that he appears to have full control of the Army (resulting from the purge of a pro-Arana [8] officer group after the latter's assassination) would seem to give him the means to oppose the Communists if he so desires. The future of U.S.–Guatemala relations, however, depends upon Arbenz' actions on this question and the extent to which the influence of the United States may properly be brought to bear on the formulation of his decision.

B. POLICIES

1. In order to bring about a recognition of the menace contained in Communist influence and to induce possible counter-measures, we have employed frank and open discussion of the Communist problem with appropriate Guatemalan officials both in Washington and in Guatemala. In these discussions we have endeavored to expose the methods by which the agents of international Communism attempt falsely to establish an identity of purpose with domestic Communists, leftists, radicals, ultra-nationalists, and other dissident groups. It has been our aim to isolate the Communists and to destroy their power by making non-Communists aware of the real danger which they represent to legitimate Guatemalan liberal aspirations, and the harm they do to Guatemala's relationships with the United States and others of her close neighbors. We have endeavored to maintain an atmosphere conducive to the continuation of these frank exchanges of opinion with Guatemalan officials by displaying a genuinely sympathetic interest in the problems incident to the revolutionary experience of that country. As set forth below, we have utilized certain forms of influence where we could properly do so. However, we have avoided any official acknowledgement of the existence of strain in U.S.-Guatemalan relationships, public expressions of censure for occurrences in Guatemala, and other acts which might have been construed as exerting improper influence or direct or implied intervention such as economic pressure, sanctions, or direct military action. Our attitude of patience in dealing with Guatemala has been, in part, motivated by a recognition of the fact that in an election year it would be politically difficult for the more moderate elements to assert their position in regard to the radicals and the United States. We believed that our objective of exposing the Communists would be abetted by their need to maneuver for power within the heterogeneous revolutionary parties, and to reveal their doctrine in direct appeals to the electorate. From time to time and when deemed appropriate to the circumstance, we have indicated whom we believe to be the most obvious and active agents of international Communism, particularly those who held key or influential positions within the Government. We also have endeavored to convince Guatemalans that the restriction and control of Communists, as a means of self-preservation, is not inconsistent with the ideals, the aims, and the institutions of democracy.

[8] Reference is to the followers of Col. Francisco Javier Arana, Chief of the Guatemalan Armed Forces, who was assassinated on July 18, 1949.

2. In order to secure the establishment of favorable conditions for U.S. enterprise, it is our policy to impress upon Guatemalan officials the desirability of employing, to mutual advantage, private U.S. capital for the development of their resources. We have endeavored to secure conditions which would not only lead to expanded investment by existing firms, but which would also prove attractive to new capital. We have in this connection counseled the need for impartial access to the courts, equitable and fair administration of Guatemalan laws as they concern foreign individuals and interests, equitable taxation laws, realistic attitudes toward the employment of foreign officials and technicians, provision for the repatriation of a fair amount of earnings, impartial administration and interpretation of labor laws, and, in general, practical and realistic basic laws to govern the exploitation of natural resources which, while adequately protecting the national interest, would permit foreign companies to undertake long-term investment under satisfactory conditions and proper safeguards. We have endeavored to soften and to refute the erroneous and harmful doctrine of excessive economic nationalism and misguided patriotism. At the same time, we have been diligent in endeavoring to secure from U.S. interests an appreciation and understanding of the revolutionary era through which Guatemala is passing as a reflection, in fact, of the wave of liberalism which has followed the Second World War and as a reaction against the continued existence there of an outmoded semi-feudalistic economic, social, and political system. We have therefore counseled their exercise of patience and flexibility in meeting day-today problems in the face of the obstructionist attitude of the Government, and the need for a review and modification of their general policy and modus operandi to meet the new and changing requirements of the day. This has been considered by the Department to be a prime necessity for the continuation, in an atmosphere of good will, of their operation in the territory of another sovereign country and for reducing the possibility of expropriation. We have counseled the necessity for an absolutely apolitical attitude on the part of the companies and their officials and, at the same time, the need for good public relations programs as a means of convincing the Guatemalan people and Government of the many benefits which their operations provide.

As a corollary to these efforts it has also been necessary to employ our influence for the protection of U.S. interests in the face of excesses on the part of the Government and the labor unions.

We endeavored to encourage Guatemala to accede to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)[9] in order to create a more favorable atmosphere for United States enterprise than exists under the present bilateral trade agreement.[10] In this we were unsuccessful since Guatemala decided at the last minute not to participate in the Torquay tariff negotiations and has evidenced no interest in the GATT since then.

One of the avowed aims of President Arévalo and the leaders of the 1944 revolution was the fostering of a labor movement which, during President Ubico's regime (1931–44), was suppressed. A Labor Code was drawn up and labor unions were formed. The principal targets for the demands of these labor unions were U.S.-owned companies, which were the largest and the most important in Guatemala's economy. Singled out particularly were the U.S.-owned United Fruit Company and the International Railways of Central America (IRCA), which the former is believed, for all practical purposes, to control. Pan American Airways, the Empresa Eléctrica (American and Foreign Power Co.), and several U.S. petroleum marketing companies experienced similar but less important difficulties.

Labor troubles experienced by U.S. firms—principally the United Fruit Company and the IRCA, were of two kinds:

a. A direct controversy between the Government and the United Fruit Company over a provision of the Labor Code classifying agricultural enterprises employing over 500 persons as industries for purpose of the application of certain provisions of the Code which the Company alleged were discriminatory against it. It has been now fairly well established that the United Fruit Company is not the only agricultural enterprise employing over 500 persons. It is clear, [9] For text, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 1700, or 61 Stat. (pts. 5–6).

[10] Apparent reference to the Reciprocal Trade Agreement signed at Guatemala, April 24, 1936, which entered into force June 15, 1936. For text, see Department of State Executive Agreement Series (EAS) No. 92, or 49 Stat. (pt. 2) 3989.

however, that in effect this provision is applied only against the Fruit Company; furthermore, legislative debate at the time the Code was adopted indicates that the disputed provision was specifically aimed at the Fruit Company and at no other enterprise.

b. Direct controversy between the labor unions and U.S. firms over the problem of wages and conditions of work. The most important disputes were of this kind. They were complicated by the fact that the Government, through its administrative officials and through the Courts, demonstrated a biased attitude and championed labor's position to the extent of ignoring the provisions of the Labor Code and of the law. Acts of the Government in these and in other disputes involving U.S. companies included deliberate agitation against the Fruit Company, attempts to influence the Courts, threats—direct and implied—of expropriation, and a general attitude of disregard for management's legitimate rights in equity and in law.

It has been our policy with regard to Labor Code discrimination, to make representations to Guatemalan officials, both in Washington and in the field, with a view to impressing upon them the existence of discrimination and the need to eliminate it. We have endeavored not only to explain the harmful effects which this discrimination would have upon the expansion of existing U.S. interests in Guatemala, but also on the attraction of capital for new enterprises.

As regards labor conflicts, it has been our policy to make informal and formal representations with a view to preventing their spread and securing for U.S. firms what we regard as just and equitable treatment under the law. One of our principal objectives was to avoid the development of so serious a situation that we would be asked by the U.S. firms involved to take up their cases as a direct denial of justice.

3. It is the policy of the U.S. to cultivate the respect and friendship of Guatemala so as to insure her support for our policies in the Hemisphere and throughout the world. We endeavor to preserve an atmosphere of equality and correctness in offical dealings with Guatemala, avoiding infringement of the sovereignty of that nation. We also endeavor to inculcate in Americans and American interests engaged in travel or business there an appreciation of the need for similar respect.

Effective support for U.S. policy, however, demands that the Guatemalan Government and people should have a full understanding of that policy, and a realization of the manner in which their own direct interests are best served by supporting it. For this reason we consult with Guatemalan officials when feasible and desirable with respect to the formulation and implementation of policy, especially when their interests might be immediately affected by it, and maintain in Guatemala information and cultural programs aimed at cultivating among the people a knowledge of the U.S. as well as an understanding of our policies and activities on the domestic and international scenes. The Instituto Guatemalteco-Americano is supported jointly by the U.S. and by Guatemala as a cultural center. Its activities include courses in English and Spanish, a lending library of books and records, traveling exhibits, special lectures, motion picture programs, and frequent social functions. Its operations are principally aimed at the middle classes and it is most successful among Government civil servants and commercial clerks.

The USIE program seeks to explain and give prominent publicity to U.S. policy and culture through the media of the press, radio, motion picture, visual exhibits, and by cooperation with Guatemalan officials and teachers in the educational field. This program has a great mass appeal, particularly through its public motion picture programs.

It is hoped by these means to emphasize the identity of U.S.-Guatemalan interests and provide a firm basis for Guatemalan friendship and cooperation in peacetime as well as their cooperation in the event of war, including the use of Guatemalan territory if needed by our armed forces for the common defense of the Hemisphere. Effective cooperation in the extreme test of war must not be cooperation based exclusively upon necessity growing out of geographic location and economic dependence upon the United States. It must grow out of a sincere friendship and willing acceptance of the union of our interests which these programs are aimed at cultivating.

As a means of preserving the peace and of achieving solidarity within the Hemisphere, it has been our policy to encourage Guatemala to participate fully in the OAS and in the United Nations, and to respect her commitments incurred by her membership in these organizations. We have made every effort to keep ourselves fully and correctly informed with respect to any developments or movements likely to disturb the peace of the Hemisphere. We have exchanged information with interested states when it appeared to be advisable to do so and we have, by informal representation, counseled restraint and endeavored to discourage the use of territory and facilities for illegal acts against friendly states. Upon the commission of acts of intervention or the development of situations of extreme tension we have encouraged and fully supported investigational action by the OAS. In general, and on appropriate occasions, we have by public statement counseled that democracy must be achieved through the process of internal growth and development and that it cannot be imposed by outside force.

4. Consistent with the general policy of the United States, to increase its own strength by enhancing the strength of its friendly neighbors, we have in Guatemala, as in other countries, engaged in a program of cooperative projects involving technical assistance for economic development. Through the Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations we have, in cooperation with Guatemala, maintained the Instituto Agropecuario Nacional which engages in agricultural research, experimentation, and extension to a limited degree. The Institute of Inter-American Affairs [11] has supplied project funds and technical direction for the construction of the Roosevelt Hospital near Guatemala City and for the construction of health centers, clinics, drinking water and sewage systems. The United States has contributed funds for construction of the Inter-American Highway in Guatemala, and the Bureau of Public Roads maintains a resident engineer and staff there for the technical direction of this project. Until recently we have had an IIAA education mission in Guatemala which worked jointly with the Ministry of Education and directly in the public school system. The mission was forced to withdraw when the Guatemalan Government allowed the contract to expire allegedly because of lack of funds but actually due to pressure from anti-U.S. sources. Also, we support a staff for rubber experimentation under the Department of Agriculture, a project in Guatemala in connection with the Inter-American Geodetic Survey, military missions attached to the Guatemalan Army and Air Force, a cultural institute, training grants for study in the United States, and from time to time, the assignment of various technicians in such fields as vital statistics, social security actuarial problems, banking and financial legislation, census problems, etc. During 1949 the total U.S. contribution for this type of assistance, exclusive of $1,518,000 contributed by the Bureau of Public Roads to the Inter-American Highway, was approximately $589,000. This figure represents the cost of going projects in Guatemala and does not take into account various experts and technicians who were sent there for brief missions.

In view of the growing strain in U.S.-Guatemalan relationships, it became a matter for decision in the Department whether we would maintain or discontinue these programs, or expand them as has been recently done in other areas, particularly under the Point IV program. Recognizing long-term benefits to be expected from these programs, and the fact that the political difficulties in Guatemala may well prove to be transitory, it has been decided neither to discontinue nor to expand or otherwise enlarge upon the level of U.S. cooperative activities there. Consistent with this decision our Embassy has been instructed

---

[11] The Institute of Inter-American Affairs (IIAA) was established in 1942 and became a United States Government corporation in 1947. Its purpose was to aid governments in the Western Hemisphere by promoting technical programs and projects for health, sanitation, and food supply; as of mid-1950 it operated in conjunction with the Technical Cooperation Administration (TCA) in Latin America. For background on the IIAA, see the statement made by Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs Willard L. Thorp to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on June 10, 1949, printed in the Department of State Bulletin, June 19, 1949, pp. 795–797. For information on the activities of the IIAA and its relationship with TCA in 1950, see the editorial note in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II. p. 679. For documentation on the IIAA for 1951, see pp. 1038 ff.

specifically not to negotiate a general Point IV Umbrella Agreement [12] with Guatemala. It has been our view that such expansion under the Point IV program could not be justified in a country whose Government has demonstrated itself to be greatly uncooperative in return, which has failed to meet squarely the important issue of Communist infiltration at a time when U.S. blood and treasure are being expended in defense against Communist aggression, and which has in other respects demonstrated itself to be hostile to local and general U.S. interests.

Should developments in the next few months fail to show convincingly that the new administration in Guatemala is prepared forcefully to meet the Communist issue, to treat legitimate U.S. interests in a manner fair to both parties, and to cooperate with the United States against a common enemy in the international field, we should be prepared to consider the withdrawal from Guatemala of the present cooperative programs. It should then become a matter for final determination whether or not the long-term U.S. interests would best be served by continuation of the programs or whether the possible coercive effect of such withdrawal, in conjunction with the application of other policies appropriate to the circumstance, would beneficially affect our immediate objective to eliminate Communist influence there. If, however, the new administration demonstrates a positive desire to cooperate with the U.S. in the defense of free-world principles, and if this desire is backed up by specific action to contain Communist elements and respect U.S. interests, we should then consider bringing Guatemala within the full scope of the Point IV program.

Notwithstanding this policy, however, we should maintain flexibility and be prepared to undertake or enlarge upon any form of cooperative program which Guatemala may request and which gives promise of resulting in immediate or direct benefit to the United States; such as, for example, a program which would develop or increase the supply of strategic materials.

Consistent with the above-mentioned decisions, it is our policy to discourage the Export-Import Bank and other official agencies from making developmental loans to Guatemala.[13] As with cooperative projects, flexibility should be maintained, so that loans might be encouraged when they directly benefit the United States. In the implementation of this policy we have informally advised the Eximbank that the Department would prefer its deferring action on the formal application now [12] For documentation concerning United States policy with respect to the negotiation of general Point IV agreements, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, pp. 846 ff.

[13] No loans were approved for Guatemala by the Export-Import Bank or the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development during 1951. The Department of State interposed no objection to a request made by the Bank of Guatemala for a short-term loan of $5,000,000 from the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, which was to be guaranteed with gold on deposit with the Federal Reserve Bank (814.10/10–251).

pending for a loan for electric power development. Even though a U.S. company was involved in this case, it was considered that the Guatemalan Government would derive important political benefits if such a loan were made. Alternatively, in the matter of a projected loan for construction of a road to a lead and zinc mine operated by a U.S. firm, we have considered that although the Guatemalan Government would benefit, a controlling factor in any final decision in addition to normal economic criteria, should be the strategic interest of the United States in gaining access to increased supplies of these critical minerals which are in short supply. Consideration by U.S. agencies of any loan requests arising from the recent IBRD Economic Surveys [14] will be governed by this policy. As in the case of the Point IV program, should the Guatemalan Government in future demonstrate a sincere desire backed up by action to cooperate fully with the U.S. we should then give consideration to a revision of this policy.

5. Guatemala is an actual or potential source of supply for the following strategic materials:

Abacá [15]
Lead
Zinc
Essential oils
Rubber
Cinchona bark
Chrome
Mahogany and other hard wood
Loofa sponges
Derris root,[16] and possibly Petroleum

It is probable that other minerals and agricultural products of strategic value could, like some of the above, be exploited under the pressure of wartime conditions and necessity.

The RFC is now financing, under contract with the United Fruit Company, a 5,000 acre abacá plantation and decorticating mill in Guatemala. This project may soon be expanded to 7,500 acres and is the best producer in Central America. The Department of Agriculture maintains a staff in Guatemala to conduct investigations for natural rubber development, particularly in the field of hybridization of rubber trees to secure disease-resistant strains. The aim is to meet Guatemala's need for natural rubber and to provide the United States with an additional source of supply in this Hemisphere. A U.S. project operated during the last war by the FEA and later by the RFC, in connection with a cinchona plantation in Guatemala, was abandoned some years ago as being commercially unfeasible in peacetime. Provision was made at that time, however, to prevent the plantation's coming into the hands of the Netherlands monopoly.

[14] The IBRD Economic Survey Mission, under Dr. George E. Britnell, had visited Guatemala during the summer of 1950 in order to conduct studies of the country's economy. For the mission's report, see International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, The Economic Development of Guatemala: Report of a Mission Sponsored by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development in Collaboration With the Government of Guatemala (Washington, 1951).

[15] A plant yielding fiber for the manufacture of manila hemp.

[16] A root used in the manufacture of certain insecticides and fish poisons.

It has been our policy to cooperate fully with U.S. agencies engaged in programs for the production of these strategic materials. Also, our efforts to bring about favorable investment conditions in Guatemala have been motivated in part by the need for attracting U.S. firms to invest in the development of strategic materials.

The existence of commercially exploitable deposits of petroleum in Guatemala has never been conclusively established by successful drilling. Surface geological evidences are, however, favorable and several large U.S. firms have undertaken rather extensive geophysical exploration work in the post-war years. Their findings were such as to warrant their seeking exploitation contracts involving the firm commitment to drill exploratory wells in the Petén province. This involved a decision to risk a relatively large investment, since the Petén is inaccessible for all practical purposes except by air. Negotiations which would have led to the signing of such contracts, under the Petroleum Law promulgated in January 1948, came near to successful conclusion; they were halted, however, when a new ultra-nationalistic petroleum law was promulgated early in 1949. This law contained such restrictive provisions that none of the companies could foresee the possibility of advantageous operations and they withdrew immediately. Angel Hurtado Mendoza, who was Petroleum Advisor to the Guatemalan Government during the critical 1948–49 period and who for practical purposes is responsible for the present Petroleum Law, is an Argentine national who is known to be anti-American and almost certainly is pro-Communist. The Director General of Mining, Jose Mendez Zebadua, and his Associate Chief, Humberto Veliz Gonzalez, are both pro-Communists. They also occupy, respectively, the positions of Director and Sub-Director of the National Petroleum Institute.

Assuming that it is in the interest of the United States and of the Hemisphere to develop all possible sources of petroleum in readily accessible areas, efforts should be made to seek the modification of the restrictive attitude which Guatemala has thus far demonstrated with respect to proving its petroleum potential, and, if such exists, permitting its exploitation. It is therefore the policy of this Government to seek the modification of these restrictions in a manner which will permit advantageous exploration for and exploitation of petroleum in Guatemala by foreign capital, including all legitimate safeguards for the national interests of Guatemala.

Notwithstanding the present policy of withholding cooperative assistance from the Government of Guatemala, it is to be repeated that we should favor loans to either U.S. or Guatemalan companies which will have the direct effect of increasing the source of supply of strategic materials.

6. The key to power in Guatemala, as elsewhere in the volatile political scene of Latin America, rests in control of the Army. So long as the Army remains united, that government and factions which it supports can remain in or achieve political power. Armies in Latin America are traditionally conservative and that of Guatemala, while more liberal, does not deviate sharply from the general character. It has supported the Arévalo regime, in spite of its Communist influence, in an effort to establish and preserve a tradition of constitutionality and legality. There have, however, been signs of dissatisfaction on the part of the Army with the policies of the civilian government and no definite signs of the Army's having been infiltrated with Communist doctrine. So long as the present situation prevails in Guatemala, U.S. policy does not contemplate the extension of any form of military cooperation or aid which would permit the substantial expansion of the Guatemalan Armed Forces beyond their present levels of strength, except for the maintenance, for the time being, of our military (Air and Ground) missions. This does not mean that an inflexible embargo of arms shipments to Guatemala is to be observed.* On the contrary, none should be imposed so long as it may be considered that the Guatemalan Army represents the most effective bulwark in that country against the spread of Communist influence. This policy has a two-fold aim:

a. To permit the maintenance of the Guatemalan Army at a level of strength which would allow it, if united, to oppose effectively any conceivable armed threat which Communist elements might be able to make against it.

b. To induce the Army, by the persuasive effect of restraints on the shipment of arms to Guatemala, to oppose the Communist movement there.

It is acknowledged that this policy could result in a military force in Guatemala of an inferior potential fully to assume its assigned role in hemispheric defense. However, the role of Guatemala in relation to the overall plan of hemispheric defense would be relatively small, and it is therefore considered not to be so vital as the immediate and local problem of opposing the Communist threat. Furthermore, the effectiveness with which an army of any strength could assume such a role would depend upon the attitude of the Guatemalan Government and people toward the Communist issue.

As soon as there may be a substantial and favorable change in the situation in Guatemala on the issues in question with this country, and subject to the determination of Guatemalan eligibility, the U.S., acting through its Military and Air Missions, through the Mutual Defense Assistance Act,[17] and through any other form of military grant or aid programs which may be established, should extend to Guatemala assistance and cooperation consistent with enabling it to meet in full its role in hemispheric defense, and if feasible, to contribute military forces for the fight against aggression overseas.

*Until Guatemalan ratification of the Rio Treaty is complete she is ineligible to purchase munitions from official sources although she may purchase from commercial sources subject to export control. [Footnote in the source text.]

C. RELATIONS WITH OTHER STATES

During the Arévalo regime Guatemalan relationships with a number of nations, particularly in the Caribbean areas, became strained. Today, Guatemala has either severed relationships with or refuses to recognize de jure the governments of the Dominican Republic, Nicaragua, Venezuela, and Peru. Furthermore, relationships have at one time or another been strained between Guatemala and Costa Rica, El Salvador, and Honduras.

Responsibility for this situation results largely from the revolutionary zeal of the present Guatemalan administration which considers itself to be a model of liberalism and democracy. It, therefore, tends to deplore and in some cases actively to oppose, openly or covertly, those governments which it considers to be "imperialistic", "reactionary", or "dictatorial". This attitude has found expression in Guatemalan support of the Caribbean Legion [18] and other dissident elements plotting against the alleged oppressors in other countries, the severance of diplomatic relationships, and the harboring of political exiles, usually of the leftist stripe and including avowed Communists. During the past year and a half there has been vitrually no evidence that Guatemala has continued actively to support the Caribbean Legion, apparently as a result of the application of the Rio Treaty [19] machinery by the OAS. In its report [20] on the attempted invasion of the Dominican Republic at Luperon in June 1949, the OAS Investigatory Committee, appointed under the Rio Treaty procedures, made clear to some extent the degree of Guatemalan connivance and direct participation in this and in earlier incidents, including the blessing of officials at the highest level and the use of elements of the Guatemalan Armed Forces.[21]

---

[17] For text of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act (Public Law 329), approved October 6, 1949, see 63 Stat. 714.

[18] A group of political exiles and military men from countries in the Caribbean region with the alleged aim of overthrowing certain dictatorial regimes in the area.

[19] For text of the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (Rio Treaty), opened for signature at Rio de Janeiro, September 2, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, December 3, 1948, see TIAS No. 1838, or 62 Stat. (pt. 2) 1681.

[20] For text, see Organization of American States, Investigating Committee of the Organ of Consultation, Results of Its Labors, Document C–I–67–E, March 13, 1950 (Washington, 1950).

[21] For previous documentation on the attitude on the United States toward the investigation conducted by the Organization of American States, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 641 ff.

The severance of relationships between Guatemala and the Dominican Republic, Nicaragua, Venezuela and Peru has originated in ideological differences fanned by Guatemala's crusading "sense of mission". In the case of Nicaragua, the situation has been aggravated by the long-standing contest between Somoza [22] and Arévalo, and the deep personal animosity and odium for each other which has resulted therefrom.

As a result of its tolerance and support of interventionist activities and its pious attitude, Guatemala stands today virtually without a single sincere and undisturbed friend among her immediate neighbors of comparable size, with the exception of Cuba. In the past year or two El Salvador has become fearful of the penetration of Communist influence from Guatemala. As a measure of self protection, El Salvador has recently asked this Government for a full exchange of information on Communism and Communist activities within her borders. Although relations with Honduras were temporarily improved at the outset of the Galvez [23] regime, that country has become less confident as a result of recent developments in Guatemala and the fear that leftist agitators, operating from Guatemala, will penetrate into Honduras and create dissension there.

Guatemala's relationships with Mexico in this period have been cordially correct. Guatemala, however, maintains close contact with and is greatly influenced by the more radical elements in Mexico, inside and outside of government, particularly and most importantly Lombardo Toledano and the CTAL (Confederacion de Trabajadores de America Latina). At the present time Mexican leftists and radicals appear to be effectively represented in Guatemala by Mexican Ambassador Luis Rodriguez, an associate of ex-President Cardenas [24] who has closely identified himself with the activities of admitted Communist groups and individuals in Guatemala.

With respect to Guatemala's long standing controversy with Great Britain over British Honduras (Belize), it has been our policy to encourage a peaceful solution by bilateral negotiation of the disputant parties or by judicial procedures.[25] Guatemala has utilized this issue as a means of diverting attention, when convenient, from domestic problems and has also rallied to her cause, with some success, the moral support of some of the other American Republics. Her championing of this issue has placed Guatemala in the forefront of the anti-colonialism movement in the Hemisphere, which has included tacit support for the Puerto Rican independence movement.

---

[22] Anastasio Somoza García, President of Nicaragua.
[23] Juan Manuel Galvez, President of Honduras.
[24] Lázaro Cárdenas, President of Mexico from 1934 to 1940.
[25] For previous documentation on the policy of the United States toward the Guatemala–United Kingdom controversy with respect to Belize, see Foreign Relations, 1948, vol. IX, pp. 81 ff.

Directly as a result of Guatemalan maneuvering with respect to Belize, complete Inter-American ratification of the Rio Treaty has been jeopardized. In presenting its instrument of ratification of this Treaty, Guatemala filed a reservation, the acceptance of which, without satisfactory modification by Guatemala, has been considered to be unacceptable by the United States and certain other American states which have thus far responded. As written, the reservation preserves for Guatemala the right to endeavor to "solve" the Belize controversy by whatever means she may see fit, including, presumably, the use of force, and to invoke the Treaty at any time on this issue. Accordingly other parties to the Rio Treaty might be called upon to support Guatemala's actions on this issue with resultant involvement with Great Britain and danger to the peace of the Hemisphere.

Guatemala recognizes but does not exchange diplomatic representatives with the Soviet Union. The contact, if any, of the Guatemalan Government with the Soviet Union, and of Guatemalan Communists with the Soviet Union, is therefore not direct but devious; probably through the Soviet Embassy in Mexico or other channels.

Guatemala recognizes the Spanish Republican Government in exile and has maintained an attitude toward Franco which parallels her attitude toward other countries she considers to be dictatorial. Guatemala opposed the UN resolution to return ambassadors to Spain.

The principle of Central American Union receives the oral support of Guatemalan officials and is written into the Guatemalan constitution as an objective. Pursuant to this objective, Guatemala concedes citizenship to persons who are citizens of other Central American countries and has certain preferential tariff arrangements with them. It has been the policy of the United States neither to support nor oppose efforts to bring about a Central American Union. We recognize that, while it might contribute to economic and political stability in the area, it can come about only upon the initiative and by the agreement of the interested states.

D. POLICY EVALUATION

1. In general there is little evidence that the Guatemalan Government has recognized the danger which exists in Communist penetration and there has been little definitive action or demonstration of desire by it to contain Communism. It has, nonetheless, taken certain steps which either reflect uneasiness on the Communist issue or a recognition of the need, on occasion, to appease domestic and international public opinion. If these steps did in fact signify uneasiness, they possibly did not receive greater expression because of election necessities. Outside the Government definite and growing elements of the population have become increasingly preoccupied in these matters, and reflect their concern in stronger opposition to the Government.

Evidences of Government uneasiness have been limited to the following acts:

(a) Dismissal of the editor of the official Guatemalan Government newspaper and of the chief of propaganda of the government radio station when they exposed themselves by association with the Communist newspaper Octubre.

(b) Dismissal of a minor Foreign Office official after we pointed out that he had supported Communist opposition to the Government-sponsored ratification of the Rio Treaty.

(c) A short-period closing of the Communist newspaper Octubre and the "labor" school "Jacobo Sánchez." This was apparently a trial balloon, which was hastily hauled down by dismissal of the Minister responsible, Colonel Elfego H. Monzón,[26] who, seemingly sincere, was sacrificed to political exigencies.

Public preoccupation was most strikingly expressed in the bloody "minute of silence" demonstrations in July 1950. These, carried out on the pretext of commemorating Arana's assassination, were really expressions of popular opposition to Government policies. This opposition was also expressed to some extent by the largest and most important labor union, the SAMF, when it took steps several months ago to divest itself of Communist leadership—notably Manuel Pinto Usaga—and withdrew from the Communist-led FSG labor federation, which is affiliated with the WFTU.

These limited evidences, however, do not constitute effective acknowledgment of the threat of Communism or action to contain it. The Communist newspaper Octubre is still openly published and distributed; the Communist "labor" school "Jacobo Sánchez" is still functioning; the two labor federations, CTG and FSG, as well as the National Committee for Syndical Unity (CNUS) are still controlled by Communists; Guatemala continues to welcome and harbor foreign Communists and known Communists remain in Government positions; for example, the head of the Secretariat of the Presidency, Hugo Salguero,[27] and the head of the President's Publicity Office, Humberto Alvarado. Furthermore, ex-President Arévalo recently appointed two persons, one an avowed Communist and the other a suspected Communist, as Government directors of the semi-autonomous Social Security Institute; the Government's radio station and official newspaper continue to reflect the Pravda-line; Government officials continue to associate themselves with such public demonstrations as the Communist-organized celebration of the Russian Revolution, beneath blown-up portraits of Lenin and Stalin and huge red banners prominently displaying the hammer and sickle; and, in spite of the constitutional provision for it, no action has been taken to disband the recently-formed Communist Party.

---

[26] Col. Monzón had been Minister of Interior.

[27] Alvaro Hugo Salguero.

The ground work, however, has at least been laid for recognizing and eliminating the Communists since they have come into the open to some degree, and their methods of exploiting nationalistic causes have become evident. How much of this is due to our policies to isolate and expose the Communists, and how much is due to circumstances beyond our control cannot clearly be evaluated. It would be an error to assume that our policies have been more important than (or even as important as) other factors which have influenced this situation; for example, the international situation resulting from the Communist invasion of South Korea,[28] election-year politics, the effect within Guatemala of the increasingly bad press in the United States, etc.

This does not mean, however, that our policies were not correct. They were appropriate to the conditions prevailing in the last year and, furthermore, they properly recognized the need to encourage and permit Guatemala to work out her own problem so long as this did not pose an immediate or direct threat to the security of the United States or neighboring countries. Nothing would have harmed the overall U.S. interests more than the premature adoption of an overly aggressive policy. It would have furnished the Communist world with a valuable propaganda weapon, and would have done great harm to the Inter-American System, reviving mistrust of the United States and a fear of "dollar" and "big stick" diplomacy. In the next few months, however, should there be no concrete actions and evidence to substantiate the hope that the new administration will take steps to contain Communist influence, our policies should be reevaluated with a view to the adoption of a more positive approach.

2. We have not been successful in bringing about in Guatemala conditions which are favorable for the investment of U.S. capital. In spite of Guatemalan protestations to the contrary, the fact remains that their actions in regard to foreign capital do not bear out their words. There still remains an attitude of distrust on the part of U.S. interests already there, and a lack of interest in Guatemala by potential new investors. Examples are the United Fruit Company's abandonment of a proposed ten-million-dollar expansion program, and the withdrawal from Guatemala of all U.S. oil exploration companies.

So long as the Government of Guatemala remains influenced to a large degree by Communists and ultra-nationalists, favorable conditions for U.S. business will be virtually impossible of attainment. Our hope of long-run success lies in preventing a complete evacuation of U.S. interests by proper application of protection policies, and of inducing U.S. firms, by their own policies, to discredit the extremists and overcome the popular mistrust of their activities.

---

[28] For documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. VII, pp. 125 ff.

With respect to the protection of U.S. interests, it is believed that our representations have materially contributed to curbing the logical end of Communist and ultra-nationalist influence, i.e. the expropriation of U.S. interests or the carrying of unfair practices to such extremes as would have further impaired our relations with Guatemala by presenting this Government with a case of a denial of justice.

Our corollary policy of encouraging U.S. interests to adapt their operations to conditions in Guatemala, as a practical necessity for staying in business there, may have contributed to their proven willingness to meet the Guatemalan labor unions and the Government more than half way in seeking solutions to their problems. As an example of this willingness, the United Fruit Company has informed us that it plans to open negotiations with the new Government for a revision of their contract on terms which should be far more attractive to Guatemala. It also plans to initiate an extensive and modernly conceived public relations program.

3. Although it is often unenthusiastic, Guatemala generally supports the U.S. position in the UN. Also, the President and the Foreign Minister [29] have given public assurance that Guatemala would be on the side of the United States in the event of war. However, Guatemala does not have a genuine understanding of U.S. policy and its statements and acts of support do not stem from an ideological community of interest. They stem rather, in the most practical sense, from a recognition of Guatemala's geographic, economic, and power position in relation to the United States.

We believe, therefore, that in the event of war Guatemala would feel compelled to offer to the United States such use of her territory, including bases, as may be necessary in the free world defense. Should the influence of Communism proceed unchecked, however, it is not inconceivable that Guatemala might assert her sovereignty to preserve a neutral position. Such a position could well serve Communist ends especially if it provoked U.S. impatience and intervention.

Our programs to promote an appreciation of American life and an understanding of our policies among the people of Guatemala are popular and should have long-term beneficial results. However, there is little evidence that they have had much effect on Government policy and their good effects on the populace are generally limited and countered by anti-U.S. Communist propaganda.

On the positive side, Guatemala maintains full participation in the UN, in general association with the free world position, and she is an active member of the OAS. With respect to the OAS, however, Guatemala is the only state which, because of her reservation, has not completed ratification of the Rio Treaty. Guatemala remains therefore as the only Republic in the Hemisphere which has not fully entered with the United States in this collective defense and regional arrangement.

[29] Manuel Galich.

Our policies, aimed at curbing unrest in the Caribbean, have been successful with respect to Guatemala. As a result of the OAS investigation, and the consequent action of the Organ of Consultation, Guatemala appears to have desisted for all practical purposes from supporting the Caribbean Legion or ancillary revolutionary and interventionist activities. The Legion has virtually ceased to exist as a force in being for lack of support by Guatemala and other countries, although members of the Legion continue to find haven in Guatemala and are continuing their scheming and propaganda against so-called tropical dictatorships.

4. Except in the long run, results obtainable from cooperative programs aimed at raising the standards of living, of health, education, etc., cannot accurately be evaluated. The most which can now be said is that such programs seem to be performing measurable good work. Likewise it is too early to assess the impact, if any, of our policy of not expanding cooperation under the Point IV program for the time being. In this connection it is worth noting that the effect which this policy might have on Guatemala is countered to some extent by her ability to obtain technical assistance from international organizations which are largely financed by the United States. The policy itself, however, is considered to be correct for the circumstances prevailing, so long as the recommended degree of flexibility is maintained, and so long as we continue efforts to reach the people through other available means.

5. Because of natural limitations, there has been little of a positive nature which our policies could contribute toward improving Guatemala as a source of supply of strategic materials. We should, however, press with greater vigor our desire to have Guatemala establish conditions which would be conducive to exploration and possible subsequent exploitation of petroleum and strategic minerals. Our success in this endeavor again will be largely determined by the extent to which Communists and ultra-nationalists are able to continue their influence within the Government.

6. Partly as a result of U.S. policy and legislative restrictions and partly as a result of the actual non-availability of materiel in the United States, the Guatemalan Army has not been able to achieve the strength in arms which it currently desires. It is, nonetheless, sufficiently well armed and equipped at this time to oppose effectively any threat which Communist-led elements in Guatemala could pit against it. There is reason, furthermore, to believe that the Guatemalan Army, more than civilian elements of the Government, is aware of the threat implied in Communist penetration, and of U.S. preoccupation with this threat.

To date, the ability of Guatemala to play its part in hemispheric defense has not been materially altered by this policy.

Under Secretary's Meetings, Lot 53 D 250[1]

Paper Prepared for the Under Secretary's Meeting[2]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] June 12, 1951.

UM D–101/1

CURRENT RELATIONS WITH GUATEMALA[3]

PROBLEM

To assess our current relations with Guatemala.

DISCUSSION

This paper follows a review of the United States relations with the Republic of Guatemala which was presented at the Under Secretary's meeting on May 29, 1950 (UM D–101)[4] and other papers and memoranda prepared periodically in ARA concerning the infiltration of communist elements into positions of power and influence in Guatemala. This paper is concerned with developments since the change of administration in Guatemala on March 15 of this year and does not attempt to retrace ground covered in previous studies, such as the gradual taking over of control of organized labor by the communists.

The three-month period since the inauguration of Jacobo Arbenz as President of Guatemala provides few indications to bear out hopes that the new President would take prompt action to reduce the influence on the Government and life of Guatemala of known communists and leftist extremists. On the contrary, communist elements appear, if anything, to have stepped up the pace of their efforts to consolidate the bases of their political and economic position in Guatemala and to be reaching out for more and more power.

It was always recognized that the infiltration of communist elements in Guatemalan life had reached sufficiently serious proportions as to compel the new Chief Executive to proceed cautiously, even assuming

---

[1] Master file of records of meetings, documents, summaries, and agenda of the Under Secretary's meetings for the years 1949–1952, as maintained by the Executive Secretariat of the Department of State.

[2] The Under Secretary's meeting convened weekly; it was customarily attended by the Deputy Under Secretaries of State, Assistant Secretaries of State, and certain office directors. Under Secretary of State James E. Webb presided at these meetings.

[3] Prepared in the Bureau of Inter-American Affairs; a detailed background, study, entitled "A Review of Communist Influence in Guatemala," dated May 31, 1951, is attached to the source text as Tab A, but not printed.

[4] Reference document, entitled "Current Relations With Guatemala." is printed in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, p. 897.

the best intentions on his part to clear up the situation. It must be admitted, however, that in Guatemala since March 15 of this year the ascending curve of communist influence has not even tended to level off, but has rather continued upward on an accelerated incline.

Although President Arbenz has made no public statements to indicate a pro-communist or extremist policy, he has made numerous appointments of communists and extreme leftists to important and strategic positions in the Government. The Foreign Minister and the Minister of Education [5] are far left in their views and have consistently cooperated with the communists since taking office. Both, together with a third member of the cabinet and the President of the National Congress,[6] are reported recently to have signed the communist "peace" manifesto.

The National Electoral Board is now controlled by communist elements, with active pro-communists having been appointed to two of its three seats. The labor unions are now firmly in the grip of communist and extremist leadership; and the important Guatemalan Institute of Social Security has been practically taken over, the Administrator [7] being one of the most dangerous communists in the country.

The volume of communist propaganda has grown markedly during the past years. Its effectiveness is increased by the enthusiastic support it receives from the Government radio station and the official and semi-official newspapers. Communist-line editorials and campaigns on the Korean situation and on political and economic issues of local, continental, and world application are featured regularly in public opinion media financed wholly or in part by Government funds.

Since April of this year the Communist Party of Guatemala has operated openly despite the provision by the constitution which prohibits the formation of a political organization of "international or foreign character".

Communists of international importance are welcomed in Guatemala, and the pro-Government press delights in pointing out that, while they are denied visas to many other countries, they are free to come and go in Guatemala as they like. Louis Saillant, Secretary General of the WFTU, came from France in May for a Latin American transport workers' conference which was attended by communist labor leaders from all over the hemisphere. Communist political and economic themes were featured throughout the meeting. Four Guatemalan cabinet ministers sat on the platform at the opening session, which was held in an auditorium made available by the Government.

American interests in Guatemala are being hard pressed by extremist labor demands, sparked by communist leaders and by the open parti-

[5] Héctor Morgan García.
[6] Roberto Alvarado Fuentes.
[7] Alfonso Solórzano Fernández.

sanship of the Government, which goes so far as to ignore the labor code and laws when necessary and to support the union position even in such extreme cases as illegal strikes. International Railways of Central America (IRCA) appears to be in imminent danger of expropriation. The United Fruit Company is continually being subjected to harassing work stoppages and extreme demands and threats backed by Government pressure.

POLICY RECOMMENDATIONS

In recent months, due to the increasing influence of communist elements in Guatemala and the continued failure of the Guatemalan Government to face the issue squarely, we have been in the process of adapting our policies towards more direct counter-action of leftist trends. In this connection, we have had to bear constantly in mind that Guatemalan political history and social development requires us to move with great care in an effort to expose and isolate communists there and destroy their power. Nothing would harm overall interests of the United States in Guatemala more than the premature employment of overly agressive measures with respect to Guatemalan internal matters. The communists would be furnished with a valuable weapon throughout Latin America and would be able to do great harm to the inter-American system through a revival of mistrust in the United States and fears of a return to the days of unilateral intervention and "big-stick" diplomacy. In the light of these conditions the followed [following?] policies are recommended:

1. Under present policy this Government will refrain from supplying aid to Guatemala which it is not under positive obligation to furnish. No Point IV Umbrella Agreement is being signed with Guatemala, and Guatemala has been deleted from the list of countries being proposed to Congress for increased technical assistance aid. It is not contemplated that Guatemala will be the recipient of any military grant funds that may be made available by Congress, and it is not proposed that Guatemala be assigned a defense role by the Inter-American Defense Board.

2. With respect to technical missions already operating in the country, the agricultural mission is being maintained at present strength; proposed plans for its expansion have been postponed. Technical personnel furnished by IIAA to the large Roosevelt Hospital project under an agreement dating from 1942 has been substantially reduced in view of the dilatory tactics of the Guatemalans in making further funds available for completion of the hospital. Since the United States investment in this project amounts to more than $2 million, we do not wish to withdraw entirely before completion if that can be avoided.

3. No change is proposed in the status of our military ground and air missions in Guatemala in the belief that they constitute a valuable link between the United States and Guatemalan military establishments, the latter being considered predominantly anti-communist. For some months now Guatemalan requests for arms and munitions have been denied, and we are currently engaged in an effort to prevent the sale to Guatemala by Italy of surplus airplanes. The only exception to this policy on arms would be in instances where the request is for a nominal quantity and where favorable action would seem necessary for the continuance of the status of our military missions.

4. The Department will oppose any Export-Import Bank or World Bank loans to Guatemala unless the loan is related to the production or transportation of strategic materials which would directly serve United States interests. In this connection the extension of financial and technical assistance by international agencies which the United States does not unilaterally control represents a real problem. For instance, UNESCO has now signed a contract with Guatemala to provide educational assistance of the type being given by our IIAA mission when it was forced to withdraw. There are other examples in this field. This problem is now under consideration.

5. We have withdrawn plans for allocating for work in Guatemala $2.4 million of the current $4 million appropriation for the Inter-American Highway. This allocation, which is connected with the construction of an important 20-mile gap to connect Guatemala with the Mexican highway system, will be reviewed later in the year.

6. We hope to avoid signing a new agreement with Guatemala at this time for the continuation of the rubber development project there. Plans for expanding abacá production (the Guatemalan project is production-wise perhaps the most successful in Central America) are being postponed for the present. Decisions on these projects can be delayed until the end of the year without harm to future development.

7. With respect to the growing list of items being placed under export control, we are now considering with the Department of Commerce the possibilities of setting quotas and allocations for Guatemala at levels relatively lower than those for other countries in the area and at the lowest point justifiable on an historical trade pattern.

It is not contemplated that there will be any announcement of the above policies. Since candid tactics in seeking to convince Guatemalan officials of the danger of communism to Guatemala and the Hemisphere have been shown to be ineffective, it is considered important that we refrain from stating officially or privately that our actions are related to internal conditions in Guatemala. Whenever it becomes necessary to explain our inability to accede to some official request, we should plead technical reasons. Delays in shipments of needed materials would be blamed on the critical world situation and other reasons connected with the defense of democracy. Guatemalans should be left to make their own deductions, and we would attempt to insure that at no time would Guatemalan officials have any tangible grounds on which to accuse the United States of discriminating against Guatemala for political reasons or of attempting to intervene in her internal affairs.

It is believed that the United States Government should avoid any final or rigid position at this time. It is important to maintain sufficient flexibility in our policies to permit adjustments as changing conditions may dictate. We shall have greater opportunity to influence the situation in Guatemala if the Guatemalans feel they have something to hope for and, alternatively, something to forfeit.

Under Secretary's Meetings, Lot 53 D 250

Notes of the Under Secretary's Meeting, Department of State, 10:15 a. m., June 15, 1951

SECRET

UM N–357

[Here follow a list of those persons present (21) and discussion of a matter unrelated to Guatemala.]

Current Relations with Guatemala (UM D–101/1)

5. Mr. Mann [1] reviewed the document and gave a background summary on conditions and developments in Guatemala. He pointed out that Latin America is in the throes of a social revolution. He noted that the communists in Guatemala are small in number, but they control strong anti-U.S. elements and nationalist groups. The army is the key to the situation in Guatemala and it is divided. The army is held together by a desire to avoid a dictatorship and some elements are worried about the communists. Within the last 30 days, ARA has decided that it is advisable to apply certain economic pressures. They have started by shifting the work on the Inter-American Highway from Guatemala, and they have reduced the work on a hospital in that country. They have talked to Commerce about reducing the exports to Guatemala. Mr. Mann felt that economic pressures would be effective since 85 percent of Guatemala's exports are sold in this country and 85 percent of their imports come from the United States. He emphasized that we should proceed quietly since this proposed policy is, in effect, a violation of the Non-intervention Agreement [2] to which we are a party. He pointed out that this policy has a risk involved, because the Non-intervention Agreement is a corner-stone of our Latin-American foreign policy. If it became obvious that we were violating this agreement, other Latin American governments would rally to the support of Guatemala. This would strengthen the hands of the nationalists and communists in that country. He pointed out that these proposed actions would be the first of its kind since the establishment of the Good Neighbor policy. He emphasized again that these steps should be handled quietly, and that each one should be justified on technical grounds.

---

[1] Thomas C. Mann, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.

[2] For a pertinent statement concerning the principle of non-intervention in Latin America, see Foreign Relations, 1947, vol. VIII, pp. 629–630.

6. Mr. Thurston [3] said that he deplored the use of coercive measures, but he believed that the conditions in Guatemala called for corrective policies. He felt that ARA's proposals were not intemperate and might be effective. He suggested that it might be wise later to obtain support of other Latin American countries.

7. Mr. Matthews [4] asked whether Latin America was more alive to the danger of U.S. intervention than communism. Mr. Mann agreed that this was true and said that this represented one of the dangers in the policy proposed. He pointed out that we have talked to people on the Hill, and Congressman McCormack [5] states that he would back us on our policy toward Guatemala.

8. Mr. Martin [6] pointed out that when we were faced with the same problem in Italy we tried to reduce unemployment. It appeared to him that we were proposing an increase of unemployment in Guatemala in handling the same problem. Mr. Webb asked whether the government would change after some of these economic pressures are applied. Mr. Mann felt that the situation in Guatemala would get worse instead of better and that the communists would fight in order to retain their power. They are in a position to do this because they are well organized and have arms. We hope, however, that the center and right elements in Guatemala will see that it is necessary to get together and clean their own house. Their pocketbooks will be affected by our moves and this may stimulate action against the communists.

9. Mr. MacKnight [7] pointed out an inconsistency which disturbed him from a propaganda point of view. He noted that on page 6 of D–101/1 [8] it is suggested that we should explain our inability to meet official requests on technical grounds. Later, it is noted that we should influence Guatemala so that the people feel that they have something to hope for. He felt that it would be difficult to give them a spark of hope when we were denying them so many things. He pointed out that this was a difficult propaganda position. Mr. Mann pointed out that the right and center elements in Guatemala feel that we have supported the communists and when it becomes apparent that we are not doing so they will come to our side. Mr. MacKnight suggested that the apparent inconsistency which he noted on page 6 should be clarified.

10. Mr. McGhee [9] felt that the ARA proposal was a good one. He believed that we should withhold favors to a country which is man-

---

[3] Walter Thurston, Policy Planning Staff.
[4] H. Freeman Matthews, Deputy Under Secretary of State.
[5] Representative John W. McCormack (D–Mass.), House Majority Leader.
[6] Edwin M. Martin, Director, Office of Regional European Affairs.
[7] Jessie M. MacKnight, Special Assistant, Office of the Assistant Secretary for Public Affairs.
[8] Supra.
[9] George C. McGhee, Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs.

aged by the communists. It would show the Guatemalans, as well as other peoples, that we are standing up for things in which we believe. Mr. McGhee felt the only criterion was whether it would work. He also suggested that the Kem Amendment [10] might be of value in this case as well as many others.

11. Mr. Hickerson [11] agreed with ARA's proposal that we should use UN organizations and measures wherever possible to support our policies. He said that he was working with ARA in this regard. However, he asked whether ARA planned to use independent organizations to assist us in Guatemala. He pointed out that we used trade unions, labor representatives, and organizations of other governments in our campaign against communism in Italy and France. He also suggested that church groups could be used effectively to help us on our policy. Specifically, he pointed out that it is planned to send an ILO team to Guatemala. He suggested that instead of dragging our feet on this proposal we should back it, provided the right people are included on the delegation. He felt that if good, anti-communist individuals were included on the team they would be able to get in touch with the right and center groups in Guatemala and do us a lot of good. Mr. Mann pointed out that the people who control the labor unions in Guatemala are communists. Mr. Hickerson recognized this fact, but felt that leaders from outside Guatemala could influence important groups in Guatemala who are anti-communist. Mr. Webb felt that Mr. Hickerson's suggestion was a good one and Mr. Mann agreed to work on this idea.

12. Mr. Hickerson was afraid that the approach proposed by ARA might harden public opinion unless it were handled very carefully. Mr. Webb agreed and asked whether we could do something in the propaganda field but still avoid the appearance of intervention. Mr. Mann pointed out that we have been working with the AP and UP to get them to cable factual information on events in Guatemala. Mr. Webb pointed out that it was necessary to combine the political, economic, and psychological forces in order to accomplish our objectives in any country, including Guatemala.

13. Mr. Mann stated that the suggestions made were good ones and would be taken into account by ARA.

---

[10] The Kem Amendment (Section 1302 of Public Law 45, Third Supplemental Appropriation Act, approved June 2, 1951), so-named after Senator James P. Kem of Missouri, directed that all economic and financial assistance must be withheld from any country which exported strategic materials to Communist-bloc nations. For text of the amendment, see 65 Stat. 63.

[11] John D. Hickerson, Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs.

611.14/7–3051

The Secretary of State to the Deputy Director of the Office of International Trade, Department of Commerce (Macy)

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, July 30, 1951.

MY DEAR MR. MACY: As you may be aware, the Department has for some time been seriously concerned with the infiltration of communist elements into positions of power and influence in the Republic of Guatemala. In recent months, their activity has been markedly increased. The new Administration of Colonel Arbenz, which in its pre-inauguration period gave some promise of exercising a moderate influence, has so far been unwilling or unable to act against the communists. Consequently, the Department recently saw fit to review its policy towards Guatemala and, as a result, adopted certain measures designed to persuade that government that its best interests do not lie in the perpetuation of its present attitudes.

The measures covered in this policy include the withholding from Guatemala of those types of assistance which the United States is not obliged to render, the suspension of United States investment on the Inter-American Highway in Guatemala, no expansion of technical assistance under the Point IV Program, a selective curtailment on the selling of United States arms and ammunition to the Guatemalan Armed Forces, opposition to any loans to Guatemala by the United States or international lending agencies, and the application of economic pressure on Guatemala through this Government's controls on the allocation and export of scarce materials. Implementation of this last-mentioned phase would of course require the cooperation of the Department of Commerce. Conversations held with Mr. George Wythe [1] have revealed definite practical possibilities for action.

Procedurally, the Department envisages the establishment of quotas and allocations for Guatemala, from the growing list of commodities subject to export controls, at levels relatively lower than those for comparable countries in the area and at the lowest point justifiable on an historic trade and/or consumption basis. This action should result in initial pressure, forcing Guatemala to return with special requests for quota enlargement, priority assistance, etc. Failure to meet such requests as well as delays in the shipment of approved materials will be attributed on our part to the critical world situation and other technical and procedural reasons better known to the experts in your Department. The Guatemalans will be left to draw their own deductions, and we will attempt to insure that at no time will their officials have any tangible grounds on which to accuse the United States of discriminating against Guatemala for political reasons or of attempting to intervene in her internal affairs. To achieve this purpose it will be necessary, from time to time, to give partial or full satisfaction to certain requests. This will prevent Guatemala from being able, by comparison with other countries, to document a case proving that the United States is applying economic sanctions against it. It must be accepted that United States interests in Guatemala, such as the United Fruit Company, the railroad, etc., will, to a certain extent, suffer a pinch on their needs about equivalent to that suffered by the Guatemalan economy in general.

[1] Director, American Republics Division, Office of International Trade, Department of Commerce.

I know that you will agree that it is of the utmost importance that this policy be made effective in the strictest secrecy; as, were it to become known to Guatemala, the repercussions would be far-reaching and might well prejudice the best interests of this country and its relations with other nations. The Department, therefore, believes that the necessary information of what this policy consists of should be restricted to the several key officers in the Department of Commerce who would be entrusted with its implementation.

I hope that the Department of Commerce will agree to lend its cooperation in this matter and would appreciate receiving your views and recommendations. A resumé of the procedure to be followed with reference to the allocation and export of controlled materials to Guatemala would be most helpful to officers in the Department who will have liaison with the appropriate officials of the Office of International Trade.[2]

Sincerely yours,

For the Secretary of State:
EDWARD G. MILLER, JR.[3]
Assistant Secretary

[2] No reply to this letter was found in the files of the Department of State or the Department of Commerce, but see the memorandum of conversation, by Edward W. Clark of the Office of Middle American Affairs, dated December 18, 1951, p. 1448.

[3] Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.

Under Secretary's Meetings, Lot 53 D 250

Notes of the Under Secretary's Meeting, Department of State, 9:30 a.m., October 3, 1951

SECRET

UM N–402

[Here follow a list of those persons present (20) and discussion of matters unrelated to Guatemala.]

Situation in Guatemala

3. Ambassador Schoenfeld reviewed the current political and economic situation in Guatemala. He reported that the political situation is obscure and inconsistent. There is a latent antagonism towards the U.S. The new President is leftist in labor matters but is not a Communist. He is not as antagonistic towards the U.S. as others might have been. However, he is surrounded by many leaders who are basically antagonistic towards the U.S. The Communists and extreme leftists are in key positions and occupy positions of strength in the labor movement. Very few of these leaders understand communism, but they have adapted themselves to communist discipline.

4. The church is a potential ally of the U.S. but its power has been shattered. The army is also a potential ally but the Ambassador has not seen great political acumen in the military organization. The substantial classes in Guatemala take no interest in politics.

5. Ambassador Schoenfeld reported that if the problem with the United Fruit Company is not settled properly, the present Guatemalan administration, as well as the entire country, would be wrecked. Our greatest problem in Guatemala is our own psychological adjustment of playing an intermediate role. We must do things invisibly and this requires great experience. At the present time, however, our staff in Guatemala is very new and has not built up the necessary experience in that country. We must attempt to take apart the communist core in Guatemala without affecting the present administration and our general Latin American policy.

6. The problem with the United Fruit Company began as a wage problem, when the company stated that they were unable to increase the wages of the workers. Before the wage contract expired, the workers asked for a wage increase, but the labor court suggested that they continue to use the present contract. Recent disastrous storms have ruined the United Fruit banana farms which has made a wage increase impossible. About the same time the dock workers asked for more money. The question now facing the United Fruit Company is whether they should attempt to rehabilitate the area, or whether it is economically sound for them to continue to operate in Guatemala. Unless this problem is handled with great care, the country will go to pieces. The country at the present time is in serious financial difficulties with Standard Oil and others. Nationalization of the banana farms is a possibility because of the peculiar economic theories which are expounded by some of the leaders in Guatemala. Ambassador Schoenfeld felt that it would be disastrous for Guatemala, as well as for US-Guatemalan relations, if the United Fruit Company left. This is especially true in Guatemala, but also what is done in Guatemala will affect the surrounding countries. The Ambassador emphasized that any visible interference by the U.S. would bring the latent antagonism against the U.S. to the surface.

[Here follows discussion of Guatemala's signature of the Japanese peace treaty and another matter unrelated to Guatemala.]

814.20/11–1451

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Edward W. Clark of the Office of Middle American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] November 14, 1951.

Subject: United Fruit Company Negotiations With the Guatemalan Government.

Participants: ARA—Mr. Miller
Mr. Mann
MID—Ambassador Nufer,[1] Mr. Clark
Representatives of the United Fruit Company:
Mr. Jefferson Coolidge
Mr. Montgomery
Mr. McGovern
Mr. Robert LaFollette

Mr. Coolidge said that the situation with regard to the Fruit Company's negotiations with the Guatemalan Government had changed since they had made the appointment to call on Mr. Miller. He said that on November 10 the Minister of Economy and Labor [2] had replied to the Company's letter of October 18 and had set forth the minimum conditions under which the Guatemalan Government would negotiate with the Company. Mr. Coolidge said that while the answer had been reasonably satisfactory from the point of view of the Company's request for assistance in labor matters, in all other respects it failed to give the guarantees deemed necessary by the Company. On the following day, therefore, Mr. Coolidge said, the Company had addressed a letter to the Minister informing him that since the Government's ideas and those of the Company concerning the possible settlement of difficulties were obviously so far apart, the Company saw no useful purpose that could be served in continuing negotiations. He said that it was at this point, when it seemed that there was no longer any possibility of reaching agreement with the Guatemalan Government, that they had made the appointment with Mr. Miller.

Mr. Coolidge then went on to say that in the meantime there had been a new and important development. He said that when President Arbenz was informed of the Company's letter, he called in his Minister of Economy and demanded to know what had happened and why the Company thought the Government's position was too extreme. He ordered the Minister of Economy to find out from the Company what objections they had to the Guatemalan Government's proposals. Mr. Coolidge said that the President's quick action had come as a surprise to the Company, which nevertheless interpreted it as an encouraging sign. He said the Company was presently drawing up a letter which would set forth in specific terms what its objections were to the Government's proposals. He said that it was, of course, too early to tell what the results of this new development would be but they at least today saw some possibility of making progress with the Government whereas yesterday it had seemed that negotiations had broken down completely.

[1] Albert F. Nufer, Director, Office of Middle American Affairs.
[2] Manuel Noriega Morales.

Mr. Miller inquired in what way the Government's proposals fell short of meeting the Company's requirements. Mr. Coolidge stated that the Guatemalan proposals had not offered any guarantee against exchange control measures and had not given guarantees that Guatemala would not pass any laws during the next three years which would further increase the Company's production costs. Mr. Miller asked if the currency in Guatemala was not freely exchangeable with the dollar. Mr. Coolidge admitted that it was but said that this was a standard clause which the Company had in all its contracts with other Central American countries except Panama. Ambassador Nufer asked if the Company's position that it could not stand any raise in costs was rigid. Mr. Coolidge replied that probably the Company could stand an increase of up to ten per cent without too much harm.

Mr. Mann asked if insisting that Guatemala bind itself not to pass any laws which would affect the Company's operations did not conflict with the Government's sovereign rights. Mr. Montgomery said that this did not necessarily follow, declaring that in his opinion it would be possible for the Government to make such a guarantee without impairing its sovereignty.

Mr. Coolidge said that the disagreement between the Company and the Puerto Barrios dock workers was rapidly reaching a crisis and that early next week a compulsory arbitration award by the labor court in Puerto Barrios unfavorable to the Company was expected. If this were to happen it would be bound to have an adverse effect on the present negotiations with the Government. Mr. Clark asked if President Arbenz' apparent concern with the trend the negotiations were taking might not have an effect on the outcome of the Puerto Barrios dispute. Mr. Coolidge said that this was an interesting point which would bear watching.

Ambassador Nufer said that it seemed to him that much depended, especially at this particular time, on how the negotiations were conducted by the Company. He agreed that President Arbenz' quick action seemed to be an encouraging sign but thought the Company would be well advised to answer to the Minister's request in a spirit of friendly cooperation. The language of the Company's reply might be equally as important as the content. Mr. Coolidge and the other Company officials said they were in full agreement with this view.

Mr. Mann asked whether if the Government signed an agreement with the Company similar to those in Honduras and Costa Rica, the Company would then publish financial figures on the Company's operations in Guatemala. Mr. Coolidge said that the Company would not be obliged to do so but he personally favored the idea. Mr. Mann remarked that the apparent reluctance of the Company to publish its financial figures made a bad impression since it led people to the assumption that the Company was making so much money that the release of the figures would be embarrassing. This in turn permitted demagogues to claim that the Company was making one hundred per cent per year on its investment and the Guatemalan people were prepared to believe it. Mr. Mann then discussed the operations of the oil companies in Venezuela where by cutting the Government in for a 50–50 share of the net profits, they insured that the Government would be vitally interested in the success of the Company's operations. He suggested that some such similar arrangement, which would tend to make the company's and the Government's interests mutual, might well be considered by the Company.

Mr. Mann asked if the Company wished to have the Department's comments on the letter which the Company was now drafting to the Minister of Economy. Mr. Coolidge said that he would be pleased to let the Department have a look at the letter before it was signed.[3]

[3] Negotiations concerning wage disputes and other labor problems between the United Fruit Company and the Guatemalan Government continued intermittently into 1952. Pertinent documents are in Department of State files 814.053, 814.06, and 814.20.

814.2614/12–1851

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Edward W. Clark of the Office of Middle American Affairs

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] December 18, 1951.

Subject: Priority Assistance for Ebasco [1] in Guatemala

Participants: Mr. Koppelmann, Vice President of Ebasco
ARA—Mr. Mann
MID—Mr. Siracusa [2]
Mr. Clark

Mr. Koppelmann explained his Company's plans for expansion of its power plant facilities in Guatemala. He said they had given up the idea of obtaining a loan from the Export–Import Bank since they had been unsuccessful in getting the Guatemalan Government to guarantee such a loan. They had instead raised the necessary capital from private sources in the United States and in Guatemala. He said that the power facilities of the Company were greatly over taxed and that the plant was operating at a maximum capacity at all times.

[1] Ebasco International Corporation.
[2] Ernest V. Siracusa, Officer in Charge, Central America and Panama Affairs.

This was dangerous and expanded facilities were therefore necessary. Some time ago the Company had placed an order with the General Electric Company for a large power generator, a hydraulic turbin, and other needed equipment but there had been indications recently that the order was being held up by the Office of International Trade of the Department of Commerce. Mr. Koppelmann stated that the purpose of his visit was to try to find out what the exact status was of the equipment on order as far as the United States Government was concerned.

Mr. Mann, after reviewing the situation in Guatemala regarding communist penetration and the attitude of the Guatemalan Government toward the United States, especially toward United States business interests, outlined in general terms what the United States Government was endeavoring to do to cope with this problem. He stressed that the cooperation of private business was necessary if our policy was to be successful. In the long run, he said, it was the hope of the Department that, if the experiment in Guatemala should be successful, it would have a salutary effect on the way in which all countries in Latin America, not only Guatemala, treated United States business interests. He said that some or all United States companies doing business in Guatemala might have to suffer somewhat because of our present policy but he said that it was the Department's belief that in the long run United States interests in Latin America generally would benefit.

With regard to the specific matter at hand, i.e., the equipment which Mr. Koppelmann's company needed for expansion, a defense order, which in effect meant priority assistance, was necessary. The Department's opinion had been asked by the OIT and, because of the prevailing situation in Guatemala, the needs of the defense effort and those of countries more friendly to the United States, the Department had not been able to recommend to the OIT that priority assistance be granted for expansion of power facilities in Guatemala. Mr. Mann said that he realized that while this might make it difficult for the company, it would also have an adverse effect on Guatemala and the Guatemalan economy.

Mr. Koppelmann stated that he understood the position of the Department and of the United States Government but of course regretted that his company's plans for expansion had to suffer. He said it would be helpful, in the probable event that the Company were attacked if there were power failures, to have some sort of a letter from the Department which would indicate that the company had tried to obtain the necessary equipment but had not been able to get it because of the defense effort. Mr. Mann said that the authority for approving or denying applications for priority assistance lay with the OIT and the National Production Authority and not with the Department but he thought that one or the other of these organizations could issue such a letter. He asked Mr. Clark to look into this matter.

The need for treating the information given Mr. Koppelmann regarding United States policy toward Guatemala on a strictly confidential basis was emphasized. Mr. Koppelmann stated that he understood the necessity for this and his cooperation and that of his company could be depended upon.

Note: Mr. Wythe of the OIT has agreed to send an appropriately worded letter [3] to Ebasco per Mr. Koppelmann's request.

[3] No copy of such a letter was found in the Department of State files.

814.00–TA/12–3151 : Airgram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Guatemala

SECRET WASHINGTON, December 31, 1951.

A–103. The Mutual Security Act (Public Law 165—82nd Congress) approved by the Congress on October 10, 1951,[1] contains two provisions which the Director [2] of the Mutual Security Program [3] has determined apply to the technical cooperation program in the other American republics.[4]

These two provisions are as follows:

"Section 511(b) No economic or technical assistance shall be supplied to any other nation unless the President finds that the supplying of such assistance will strengthen the security of the United States and promote world peace, and unless the recipient country has agreed to join in promoting international understanding and good will, and in maintaining world peace, and to take such action as may be mutually agreed upon to eliminate causes of international tension.

"Section 515 All countries participating in any United States aid program or in any international organization receiving United States aid shall be required to so deposit, segregate, or assure title to all funds allocated to or derived from any program so that the same shall not be subject to garnishment, attachment, seizure, or other legal process by any person, firm, agency, corporation, organization, or government when in the opinion of the Director any such action would interfere with the attainment of the objectives of this Act."

Another section of the Act requires that the recipient countries must agree to the provisions of Section 511(b) within ninety days after passage of the Act (i.e. on or before January 8, 1952) or the assistance must be terminated.

[1] For text, see 65 Stat. 373.
[2] W. Averell Harriman.
[3] For documentation on this subject, see vol. I, pp. 266 ff.
[4] For documentation on the technical assistance policy of the United States toward the Latin American Republics as a group, see pp. 1038 ff.

As you are aware the Point IV Agricultural Mission has been operating in Guatemala without an agreement for a year and a half—the Rubber Development Program for approximately six months. Continuation of the programs in this manner was agreed to as a temporary expedient by the administrator of the technical cooperation program even though it did not strictly conform to general procedure established pursuant to the Point IV legislation passed by Congress. As you will recall, the Department had a dual motive in adopting this procedure. On the one hand it did not wish to extend to Guatemala the full measure of cooperation that it was offering to more friendly nations; and, on the other hand, the existing state of affairs in Guatemala was recognized as being fluid and the Department did not deem it wise to terminate long-range programs which were doing good work (one of them on a commodity of strategic value to the United States) and which might be utilized to good purpose in its efforts to influence developments in Guatemala. Nevertheless a limitation was placed on technical cooperation in Guatemala to the effect that no new programs would be introduced and no existing programs would be expanded.

Because of the continuing atmosphere of hostility in Guatemala toward the United States and United States interests, the Department has increasingly over the last several months come to doubt that the interests of the United States are being served by the continuation of our programs in Guatemala. No final decision on their withdrawal has been taken, however, as you are aware. Nevertheless, pending a final decision, the Department now feels that the programs in Guatemala must be placed on the same footing as those in other countries with the Government of Guatemala formally undertaking to meet the requirements stipulated in all applicable technical assistance legislation.

In view of the foregoing, if the existing technical assistance programs are to be continued, it will be necessary to negotiate and conclude in the immediate future agreements covering the Agriculture and Rubber Programs. While the January 8, 1952 deadline referred to above is not to be considered inflexible and may be extended, the agreements will nevertheless have to be concluded as soon as possible. These agreements must embody the conditions required by Congress in legislation relating to technical assistance, which are those set out in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the proposed draft of a note regarding the Rubber Development Program which was forwarded to you under cover of instruction No. 18 of October 4, 1951 [5] and the two provisions of the MSA quoted above.

With regard to the two provisions of the MSA it is suggested that Section 511(b) be incorporated in the agreements in the form of a preamble as follows:

[5] Not printed.

PREAMBLE

"Considering that the peoples of the United States and of Guatemala have a common interest in economic and social progress and that their cooperative efforts to exchange technical knowledge and skills will assist in achieving that objective, and

"Considering that the interchange of technical knowledge and skills will strengthen the mutual security of both peoples, and develop their resources in the interest of maintaining their security and independence, and

"Considering that the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Guatemala have agreed to join in promoting international understanding and good will and in maintaining world peace, and to undertake such action as they may mutually agree upon to eliminate causes for international tension."

The Embassy will note that the language used to comply with the requirements of Section 511(b) is similar, and in some cases almost word for word, to language embodying commitments which Latin American countries have made from time to time in such treaties and agreements as the Rio Treaty and the Charter of the Organization of American States,[6] and most recently in resolutions at the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs.[7] The Department suggests, therefore, that the Embassy may want to approach the Guatemalan Government on the basis that these provisions are simply a restatement of existing commitments.

As noted above, Section 515 of the Mutual Security Act requires all countries receiving assistance to give assurances regarding garnishment, attachment, seizure, etc. This section was enacted out of concern by Congress over the type of situation which arose when funds intended for assistance to Greece were attached in Belgium in the course of the past year. It is recognized that in certain situations attachments are possible on United States foreign aid funds wherever there is an assistance program of any kind in any area. Thus, it is deemed necessary to ask all the countries to agree to the anti-attachment provision which is considered the minimum step which must be taken now in order to comply with the statute. It is suggested that Section 515 be incorporated in the agreements as an article as follows:

ARTICLE

"The two Governments will establish procedures whereby the Government of Guatemala will so deposit, segregate, or assure title to all

[6] For text of the Charter, signed at Bogotá, Colombia, April 30, 1948, and entered into force for the United States, December 13, 1951, see TIAS No. 2361, or United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), vol. 2, (pt. 2), p. 2394.

[7] For documentation concerning the Fourth Meeting of Consultation, held at Washington, March 26–April 7, 1951, see pp. 925 ff.; for text of the Final Act of the meeting, containing resolutions adopted, see Pan American Union, Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs Held in Washington, D.C. March 26–April 7, 1951: Proceedings (Washington, 1951), pp. 234–268.

funds allocated to or derived from any program of assistance undertaken by the Government of the United States so that such funds shall not be subject to garnishment, attachment, seizure or other legal process by any person, firm, agency, corporation, organization or government when the Government of Guatemala is advised by the Government of the United States that such legal process would interfere with the attainment of the objectives of the program of assistance."

The Department recognizes that the language suggested above may be too stylized in the event you should consider it appropriate or necessary to keep the negotiations on a more informal plane. The Department is therefore prepared to give sympathetic consideration to such changes in language as you may suggest, provided that they do not alter the sense of the MSA provisions in question.

If in your opinion negotiation of these agreements is not feasible at this time and you believe it would be harmful to over-all United States policy toward Guatemala to endeavor so to negotiate, there will be no other alternative than to inform the Guatemalan Government that present technical assistance missions will have to be terminated in the near future. The Department would prefer, however, and hopes that this procedure will be possible, that an attempt at negotiation be made in order that, should the negotiations be unsuccessful, the onus for termination of the programs should rest on the Guatemalan Government because it was unable or unwilling to accept conditions which have been agreed to by most other countries in the world.

As agreed while you [8] were recently in the Department on consultation (reference memoranda of conversation dated October 10 and 11, 1951 [9] regarding the Agricultural and Rubber programs, respectively), the decision regarding which Ministry to negotiate with (Foreign Office, Agriculture, INFOP [10]) and by what instrument (agreement, exchange of notes, exchange of letters) will be left to your discretion. The timing, however, can now be discretionary only within the limits described above.

It will also be necessary to negotiate with the Guatemalan Government to amend by appropriate means the existing IIAA Roosevelt Hospital Agreements to include the new MSA requirements. It is considered that the other assurances required by legislation pertaining to technical assistance are adequately provided for in the existing Roosevelt Hospital agreements.

Please keep the Department informed of the status of any negotiations you may undertake as a result of this instruction.

ACHESON

---

[8] Ambassador Schoenfeld.
[9] Neither printed.
[10] Institute de Fomento de la Producción (Production Development Institute).

HAITI

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND HAITI[1]

611.38/4–1651

Policy Statement Prepared in the Department of State

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] April 16, 1951.

HAITI

A. OBJECTIVES

Our objectives with particular reference to Haiti are: 1) to obtain the Haitian Government's support in efforts to promote inter-American and worldwide peace and prosperity; 2) to encourage developments in Haitian national life and internal affairs which will contribute to Haiti's becoming a more stable and effective democracy; 3) to raise living standards and improve economic conditions in Haiti, where such conditions are particularly bad; 4) to encourage the maintenance of internal order and the ability of Haiti to contribute to Caribbean defense in a future military emergency; 5) to promote mutual understanding and friendship between the peoples of Haiti and the United States in, the light of the history of United States military intervention in Haiti and racial attitudes in the United States; and 6) to improve relations between Haiti and the Dominican Republic.

B. POLICIES

United States relations with Haiti have special significance because United States intervention in Haiti was more prolonged that in any other country, because Haiti is the only Negro republic in the hemisphere, and because Haiti has probably the poorest economy and the lowest living standards of any of the American republics. Haiti was one of the Caribbean countries whose weakness and political immaturity prompted United States' "benevolent intervention", with Marine occupation from 1915 to 1934, to prevent irresponsible financial management, disorder, and violence which might have impelled some other power to intervene on behalf of its nationals. The United States' attitudes and policies toward Haiti are therefore peculiarly susceptible of being construed as a test of our adherence to democratic ideals and to the principle of juridical equality of states.

[1] For previous documentation concerning United States relations with Haiti, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 932 ff.

With a density of population not exceeded elsewhere in the other American republics, mountainous terrain, eroded and leached soil, a retarded economy and culture, and a history of chronic political instability, the prospects for notable progress and improvement in Haiti are not very encouraging. These conditions afford a potential opportunity for a communist minority to create chaotic conditions or a diversionary disturbance in a possible future emergency.

Almost twenty years of tutelage left Haitians with the feeling that Haiti's problems should be of special interest and concern to the United States and that we should feel a moral responsibility for their solution. Haitian authorities have frequently criticized the United States for not giving more financial and technical aid to Haiti, but when financial aid has been given they have on occasion alleged that its results have been ineffective, if not harmful to Haiti. The tendency of most Haitian administrations has been to endeavor to modify or nullify commitments made by their predecessors, and the Haitian Government has at times requested that Haiti be relieved of all or part of the financial obligations incurred in connection with United States assistance. While the United States has arranged substantial debt moratoria or extensions for Haiti, we have felt that consideration of exceptional measures for cancellation or reduction of debts should be resisted in principle in order gradually to encourage development of Haitian national responsibility.

The problem of development of reasonably responsible self-government in the Negro republic is complicated, paradoxically, by an always present and at times intense social and political hatred between the mulatto minority, which is the traditional economic and cultural elite, and the black majority, which has recently developed an elite of its own. There are racial complications in US-Haitian relations. Many black and mulatto Haitians of the elite groups regard United States Negroes as inferiors because Haitians have a traditional inheritance of French culture and because they won independence for themselves instead of being liberated by others.

In endeavoring to achieve the first stated of our objectives vis-à-vis Haiti, it is our policy to make known to the Haitian Government our international objectives and our views on specific international problems demanding action. Haiti has in general collaborated with the United States in the Organization of American States, as well as in the United Nations. In the latter organization, Haiti has displayed particular interest in questions involving human rights and dependent areas. The views of Haiti with respect to problems affecting dependent areas are similar to those of other Latin American countries who have extreme anti-imperialistic views on colonial matters. Liaison between the Foreign Office and delegations to the General Assembly has at times been bad, resulting in conflict between the views of the Haitian Government, and the position taken by the Haitian delegation. However, some improvement has been effected recently, and the attitude of the Government of Haiti on major international problems ordinarily coincides with that of the United States.

547-842—79——93

At the request of the Haitian Government, a United Nations Economic Mission visited Haiti in 1948 to study its over-all economic situation and make recommendations. While we were interested in this project and its findings, particularly in connection with Point Four activities in Haiti, we refrained from sponsoring or in any way becoming actively associated with it. Haiti has since demonstrated an active interest in obtaining technical assistance from the UN and there is a UN resident commissioner for technical assistance in Haiti. UNESCO has also undertaken a pilot project in fundamental education in Haiti, in the success of which we are interested, despite the great difficulties which have impeded its progress to date. It is our policy to refrain from endeavoring to enter those fields of technical assistance in which Haiti prefers to have such assistance from the UN, and to avoid duplication and overlapping of functions.

Haiti has on several occasions contributed to a testing and strengthening of OAS peace machinery, by referring to it disputes with the Dominican Republic, with resultant positive action by OAS peace agencies. Haiti's action and policy in this connection is in line with our objective of strongly supporting the OAS as a regional security system within the UN.

To encourage the development of democratic practices and institutions in Haiti—our second objective—it is our policy: 1) to make informal efforts to encourage the Haitian Government to respect constitutional practices, democratic principles, and human rights; 2) to bring to the Haitian people an understanding of the democratic way of life through the program of International Information and Educational Exchange; and 3) to cooperate in projects for the improvement of economic and educational conditions, in order to provide a foundation on which effective democracy can be based.

One of our policies in the effort to promote the economic development of Haiti—our third objective—is to encourage the Haitian Government to provide a favorable climate for foreign private investment. There has been a tendency in recent years for the Haitian Government to enact legislation which if fully implemented would bring about active and direct participation of the Government in the production and distribution of certain commodities. To date, laws affecting coffee, bananas, and tobacco have been enacted. It is our policy to encourage private enterprise as distinguished from state control in the production and distribution of Haitian staple products. All appropriate protection is given legitimate American business interests when the enactment or application of such legislation would adversely affect them.

In accordance with the same general objective, it is our policy to encourage private United States investors to give full consideration to Haiti as a field for investment, but at the same time to provide frank information on a confidential basis to potential investors on the circumstances affecting the security of investments in Haiti. We are not averse to the investment of non-United States private foreign capital in Haiti. The present value of United States private investments approximates $50,000,000.

It is also our policy to encourage the Export–Import Bank within its regulations and general loan policy to consider sympathetically those of Haiti's requests to the Bank which appear economically sound and likely to enhance the long-run economic development of the country. In accordance with this policy, the Bank has over the past 12 years approved three loans to the Haitian Government totalling $14,500,000 for development purposes, two of which have been entirely disbursed and are being repaid. No disbursements on the third have as yet been made, pending completion of plans for the project it is to finance—a large scale land reclamation, irrigation, and drainage project in the Artibonite River valley.[2] The Haitian Government has at times expressed dissatisfaction with the results of the two previous Export-Import Bank loans and has requested a scaling down of the principal amounts outstanding. Although the $5,500,000 so-called J. G. White public works loan of 1938 has now been almost entirely liquidated, the question of repayment of the balance of almost $4,000,000 due on the 1941 $5,000,000 development loan to the Société Haïtiano-Américaine de Development Agricole (SHADA), a Haitian Government corporation, might again be raised by the Haitian Government. Payments on both interest and principal are now being made regularly. The view of the Export-Import Bank and the Department has been that no justification exists for canceling any portion of the unpaid principal on this loan.

---

[2] On April 9, 1951, the National Advisory Council (NAC) had approved consideration by the Export-Import Bank of a credit amounting to $14,000,000 to Haiti to assist in financing the purchase in the United States of the equipment, materials, and services required for the development of the Artibonite Valley (Department of State National Advisory Council Documents, Document No. 88, Action No. 451, April 9, 1951, Lot 60 D 137, Box 369). The Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank authorized the credit, which superseded a previous credit of $4,000,000 approved December 29, 1948, at its meeting of April 19. For additional information about this loan, see Export-Import Bank of Washington, Twelfth Semiannual Report to Congress for the Period January–June 1951 (Washington, 1951), pp. 13–14. Pertinent documents relating to the interest of the United States in the Artibonite Valley project are in Department of State decimal files 838.10, 838.20, and 838.2614.

In implementation of another policy directed towards our third objective, field parties of the IIAA [3] have been cooperating with the Haitian Government for a number of years in developing basic food production and improving health conditions. A three-year program conducted by the same agency in basic education terminated in 1947. At the request of the Haitian Government and apart from their official duties, the agricultural and health parties have acted as de facto technical advisers to the Haitian Government in their respective fields. In addition, under the program of the former Interdepartmental Committee for Scientific and Cultural Cooperation [4] and the present TCA, numerous technical experts in various fields concerned with improvement of living standards and economic conditions have been made available to Haiti over the past 13 years, and numerous Haitians have received training in the same fields in the United States.

We encouraged Haiti to become a party to GATT [5] and to this end conducted trade negotiations with her, resulting in her accession to GATT in January 1950. It is our policy to cooperate with Haiti in all appropriate ways to increase her exports and trade between the two countries.

Haiti desires an increased quota for entry of Haitian sugar into the United States, particularly since it is expected that production will be expanded. Under existing US sugar legislation and US legislative policy, there is little likelihood of Haiti's desire being fulfilled to any appreciable extent. It is our long-run policy, however, to eliminate tariff preferences on sugar and other commodities, and thereby put Haiti and all other foreign producers of these commodities on an equal footing. Some progress has already been made in this regard with respect to Haitian products.

With respect to our fourth objective, the Haitian armed forces have proved to be a deciding factor in domestic political upheavals, and they would be essential to the maintenance of stability in the event of an internal communist attempt to create a diversionary disturbance or gain a strategic foothold. The army of Haiti, which embraces also

[3] The Institute of Inter-American Affairs (IIAA) was established in 1942 and became a United States Government corporation in 1947. Its purpose was to aid governments in the Western Hemisphere by promoting technical programs and projects for health, sanitation, and food supply; as of mid-1950 it operated in conjunction with the Technical Cooperation Administration (TCA) in Latin America. For background information on the IIAA, see the statement made by Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs Willard L. Thorp before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on June 10, 1949, printed in the Department of State Bulletin, June 19, 1949, pp. 795–797. For information on the activities of the IIAA and its relationship with TCA, see the editorial note printed in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, p. 679. For additional documentation, see pp. 1038 ff.

[4] The Interdepartmental Committee on Scientific and Cultural Cooperation (SCC) was in existence officially from May 1938 to October 1950.

[5] For text of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), concluded at Geneva, October 30, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, January 1, 1948, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 1700, or 61 Stat. (pts. 5 and 6).

police and naval functions, was organized under direction of the Marines during the occupation, and is a fairly efficient, compact force. We wish to see that Haiti is provided with a moderate amount of military equipment for maintenance of internal security. It is our general policy, therefore, to be guided by this consideration in responding to Haitian requests for purchase of arms from US Government stocks, or for approval of shipments from commercial sources.

A policy problem which may have to be faced shortly is the extent to which Haitian requests under MDAP, assuming physical availability of requested materials in NME stocks, should be met. No clear-cut program has yet been formulated to enable feeble Haiti to make a contribution to Caribbean and hemisphere defense, and the extent to which we should assist in supplying Haiti with arms to this end has not been decided by the Department and the NME. We have from time to time attempted to dissuade the Haitian Government from a substantial increase in armament, in order that its limited financial resources may be used for purposes of economic development, health, and education. At the same time we have acceded to Haitian requests for establishment of small air and naval training missions. Such establishment is in line with the general pattern for hemisphere defense, but in the case of Haiti resulted largely from the Haitian Government's desire to demonstrate the close friendship of the US and from our willingness to accede to the Haitian request as a manifestation of our cooperating where feasible in meeting Haitian wishes. It should be noted that the small Haitian air force and coast guard should, as a result of the training they are receiving, better be able to contribute in a future military emergency to patrolling the Windward Passage, which separates Haiti from Cuba and is the channel for most shipping between the Panama Canal and eastern US ports.

In efforts to achieve our objective of promoting mutual Haitian-US understanding and friendship, we have pursued, in addition to policies already described, the policy of informing the Haitian people and Government about the United States and its people, through our program of International Information and Educational Exchange. This entails an active press, radio and motion picture program in Haiti. We also sponsor, with the Haitian Government, a Haitian-American Cultural Center in Port-au-Prince, which provides a meeting place for Haitians and Americans interested in learning more of each other's culture through lectures, extensive library facilities, the teaching of English, and various other means. Our participation in the exhibits of the Port-au-Prince Bicentennial Exposition during the first half of 1950 also afforded us an opportunity to tell the US story. We have from time to time sent US professors and lecturers, some of them of the Negro race, to Haiti for the purpose of teaching their specialties and imparting to Haitians information about the US. Many Haitian students, professors, and intellectual leaders have also been brought to the US to pursue their studies and specialties, and while here they have naturally become better informed about the US.

In conformity with our objective of improving relations between Haiti and its closest neighbor, the Dominican Republic, who have a long history of mutual suspicion, fear, and hatred, it is our policy to encourage the two countries to work towards such improvement. We have strongly supported such efforts by OAS bodies, and have also made direct bilateral approaches to the two countries for this purpose.

C. RELATIONS WITH OTHER STATES

The foreign relations which present the greatest difficulty to Haiti are those with the Dominican Republic. These relations are perpetually strained due to historical and racial factors and population pressure from Haiti on the much less densely settled Dominican border areas. An additional strain since Trujillo's [6] advent to power in the Dominican Republic in 1930 stems from what the Haitians have frequently believed to be his hostile and aggressive attitude towards Haiti and Haitian governments. Trujillo, on the other hand, asserts that all he wants is a friendly government in Haiti, which many Haitians interpret to mean a subservient government. One of Trujillo's principal motives in this connection has been his fear that an unfriendly government in Haiti would permit Haitian territory to be used by his enemies abroad as a base of operations for revolutionary activities against him. In 1937, the Dominican authorities perpetrated a wholesale massacre of Haitians who had settled in the Dominican Republic along the border.[7] Early in 1950 Dominican officials were found by a special Investigating Committee of the Organization of American States to have been involved several months before in a plot to overthrow the then Haitian Government, which Trujillo believed to be unfriendly to him.[8] The same OAS Investigating Committee was unable to confirm any factual basis for Trujillo's fears that the Estimé [9] Government was conniving with his enemies to permit Haitian territory to be used for a base for military operations against him. Following the overthrow of Estimé in May, 1950, from purely internal causes, there has been gradual bettering of relations, including meeting between Presidents Trujillo and Magloire [10] and their joint declaration that they would work towards agreements on several

[6] Rafael Leonidas Trujillo Molina, President of the Dominican Republic.

[7] For documentation on the tender of good offices by the United States, Cuba, and Mexico to conciliate differences between the Dominican Republic and Haiti arising from this incident, see Foreign Relations, 1937, vol. v, pp. 133–141.

[8] For documentation on this subject, see ibid., 1949, vol. II, pp. 437 ff. and ibid., 1950, vol. II, pp. 641 ff.

[9] Dumarsais Estimé, President of Haiti, 1946–1950.

[10] Paul E. Magloire, President of the Republic of Haiti.

matters of common interest and a strengthening of economic and cultural ties between the two countries.

Haitian relations with Cuba are particularly friendly; a substantial factor in this friendship has often been their common antipathy towards the Trujillo regime in the Dominican Republic. Haiti has traditionally had close relations with Venezuela, also strengthened at times in recent years by their common hostility to Trujillo. While the maintenance of friendly relations between Haiti and other countries is naturally desirable, it is our policy, in promoting Caribbean peace and encouraging observance of international obligations in the event of civil strife, to discourage the formation of blocs as well as any collaboration by Caribbean Governments, including Haiti, in revolutionary activities against one another.

French cultural influence has always been of special significance in Haiti. Many Haitians have been educated in France and there is a natural feeling of affinity by Haitians towards the former mother country. A kind of friendly cultural rivalry, without direct political significance, exists between the US and France in Haiti. Should France go Communist, French influence would undoubtedly be used as a wedge for enhancing the USSR's position in Haiti.

Although Haiti has nominal diplomatic relations with the USSR, there has been no exchange of diplomatic representatives. Communist activities have been outlawed, and the relatively unimportant communist line parties and their press mouthpieces have been suppressed.

D. POLICY EVALUATION

US policy with respect to Haiti has been successful from the viewpoint of Haitian governmental support for our international objectives. Moreover, this support has been voluntary, without damage to our reputation in other countries, because it was achieved without use of "big stick" tactics in Haiti, and because it was achieved with full adherence to the policy of respect for the juridical equality of states. The policy has also been a success in the sense that Haiti has been gradually developing more responsible self-government without becoming involved in any serious international difficulties other than those which have arisen from mutual Haitian-Dominican antipathies. US financial and technical assistance has been a substantial factor in this situation.

At the same time, with particular reference to our interest in the development of democratic institutions and practices in Haiti, it must be stated that their achievement is not uninterrupted. Repressive measures, graft and corruption, and presidential efforts to remain in office beyond the term prescribed in the constitution have led to two overturns of the Government by force in the last four years. On the other hand, the achievement of orderly democracy remains the Haitian ideal, and the temporary open military domination of the Government in both 1946 and 1950 took place on the grounds that it was necessary in order to restore constitutional and civilian government. Such restoration was effected, at least in name, on both occasions.

With respect to our economic objective, our efforts to assist in the improvement and development of the economy and living conditions have achieved some success in meeting the basic Haitian problem posed by an increasing population dependent for existence on shrinking resources. However, although the Haitian Government and people realize that we are cooperating with them to this end, the tendency of Haitians and Haitian governments to feel that the US has a special obligation to solve Haiti's economic problems and to accede to most if not all of Haiti's requests in this connection at times complicates US-Haitian relations. Obviously, we cannot undertake to supply the financial and technical wherewithal for the complete economic rehabilitation and development of Haiti; yet Haiti's exaggerated expectations color Haitian views of the US and its government. It is not always apparent, moreover, that Haiti has done all she can to help herself in this regard. During the four years ending in May 1950 Haitian Government revenues, although reaching record heights, were in considerable degree dissipated in graft and uneconomic projects, such as the Port-au-Prince Bicentennial Exposition. Largely as a result of political factors, the banana export business, once a lucrative enterprise, has been severely injured. Furthermore, Haiti's treatment of private US investors has in some cases been discouraging. Despite our efforts to encourage the Haitian Government to create a favorable climate for foreign investment, graft and bribery and a disregard of contractual obligations and business ethics have not been uncommon in business arrangements undertaken by the Government or influential Government officials with private US investors.

With reference to our arms policy, the Haitian Government has frequently felt that we have exhibited insufficient interest in assisting it to acquire what it regards as necessary armament. It has persistently believed that, as evidence of our friendship and in view of Haiti's limited financial resources, we should supply Haiti with arms from US Government stocks at bargain prices, and that we have a moral obligation to do so in view of the long and intimate association of the US Military with Haiti during the occupation and the fact that present Haitian armament, now asserted to be worn out, was supplied largely by the US at that time. We have consistently explained to the Haitian Government that it is not legally possible for this Government to supply Haiti with arms at bargain prices and have informed them of the procedure to be followed by the OAR under MDAP.

At the same time our efforts to persuade the Haitian Government, pending a clarification of Haiti's role in Caribbean and hemisphere defense, to limit its attempts to acquire arms to what is necessary for police purposes and maintenance of internal security, have not been well received. Previous Haitian Governments have expressed the view that if Haiti had more armament, the Dominican Government would be deterred from what Haiti has regarded at times as a truculent and belligerent attitude. We have pointed out that Haiti cannot hope to compete with the more affluent Dominican Republic in this regard and that Haiti would, in any event, be absolutely dependent upon outside military assistance in the event of an outside attack.

With particular reference to our objective of promoting mutual US-Haitian understanding and friendship, one stumbling block has been the realization by the Haitian Government and people of attitudes towards the Negro race in the US, and the consequent feeling in certain Haitian quarters that despite our official friendship and the absence of racial discrimination in official relations with Haiti and Haitians, certain segments of American public opinion cannot have real friendship for a Negro republic. This feeling is aggravated when Haitians traveling in the US in official or unofficial capacities are on occasion subjected to segregation practices; in extreme cases this has made the Haitians involved inimical toward the US and has adversely affected Haitian opinion. Another factor which has stood in the way of Haitian understanding of the US—albeit in diminishing degree in recent years—has been the traditional favor felt for French culture and an accompanying disdain for US cultural achievements. Our program of International Information and Educational Exchange has achieved considerable success in overcoming the results of both of these impediments.

A further factor which occasionally gives rise to Haitian-US misunderstanding is the long-standing disagreement between Haiti and the US regarding sovereignty over Navassa, a guano island off the southern peninsula of Haiti. We formally asserted US sovereignty over Navassa in 1916 under the authority of the so-called Guano Act of Congress of 1856 [11] and a further Act of Congress of 1913 [12] appropriating funds for construction of a lighthouse there. Since we are in actual possession of Navassa and the Haitian Government does not press its claim, the matter is usually quiescent.

With reference to our objective vis-à-vis Haitian-Dominican relations, they are more favorable than they have been for some time and are probably as good as can reasonably be expected for some time to come. Given their usual normal state of tension, it remains to be seen whether the recent rapprochement will be more than temporary. The Haitian Government and people have historically felt that they should have our support in their relations with the Dominican Republic, and have a tendency to regard our efforts to maintain an objective attitude in this connection as favoritism towards the Dominican Republic. Some Haitians have felt that recent acquisitions of arms by the Dominican Republic is somehow our responsibility—even though most of this material was not secured in the US. To offset this feeling we have endeavored to bring the true facts to the attention of the Haitian Government.

[11] For text of the Guano Act, approved August 18, 1856, see 11 Stat. 119.
[12] Reference to the Urgent Deficiencies Appropriations Act (Public Law 32), approved October 22, 1913; for text, see 38 Stat. 208.

Nonetheless, notwithstanding the various factors which prevent the full achievement of our objectives and at times impose stumbling blocks to perfect US-Haitian harmony, the Haitian people and Government look to the US for sympathetic understanding of Haiti's problems and active cooperation in meeting them.

Editorial Note

By an exchange of notes dated May 2, 1951, at Port-au-Prince, the United States and Haiti concluded a Point IV General Agreement for Technical Cooperation, which entered into force on the same date. The notes were transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 555, from Port-au-Prince, May 2, 1951, not printed (838.00–TA/5–251). For text, see TIAS No. 2414, or United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), volume 3, page 545. For a press release concerning the agreement, see the Department of State Bulletin, May 21, 1951, page 824.

HONDURAS

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND HONDURAS

Editorial Note

On January 26, 1951, the United States and Honduras signed at Tegucigalpa a Point IV General Agreement for Technical Cooperation, which entered into force on the same date. The agreement was transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 472, from Tegucigalpa, January 29, 1951, not printed (820.00–TA/1–2951). For text of the agreement, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 2192, or United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), volume 2, page 467.

On January 30, 1951, the United States and Honduras signed at Tegucigalpa an agreement providing for a cooperative program in agriculture, which entered into force on the same date. The agreement was transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 490, from Tegucigalpa, February 1, 1951, not printed (103–IIAA/2–151). For text, see TIAS No. 2209, or 2 UST 577.

611.15/2–651

Policy Statement Prepared in the Department of State

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] February 6, 1951.

HONDURAS

A. OBJECTIVES

The major objectives of US policy in Honduras are: 1) to assist and encourage the evolution of representative, democratic institutions; 2) to seek Honduran understanding and support of our foreign economic and political policies; 3) to advance the security of the United States and the hemisphere;[1] 4) to support the adoption by Honduras of sound economic policies and institutions; and 5) to foster and protect legitimate US commercial and investment interests in Honduras.

[1] For documentation concerning United States policy with respect to hemisphere defense and related matters, see pp. 985 ff.

B. POLICIES

Despite geographic proximity to and economic dependence on the United States, Hondurans do not look to this country for guidance and assistance, especially on purely domestic procedural matters of government, to the same extent as do some of our other Latin American neighbors. We have made it our policy to encourage this spirit of self-reliance and to make clear that it is appreciated by us.

The United States has been gratified to note the earnest and effective steps taken by the administration of Señor Juan Manuel Galvez, who became President of Honduras on January 1, 1949, to increase the degree of personal liberty beyond that enjoyed by the Honduran people during the previous 17 years. The United States engages in positive cooperation in the economic, technical, educational and cultural fields in order to encourage and support this trend toward the evolution of democratic ideas and processes, to provide a firmer foundation upon which it may grow, and to point out a way by which the Honduran people may help themselves.

The newly-enjoyed freedoms of speech, of assembly and of the press have, however, opened the doors to nationalistic fervor which often approaches anti-Americanism. To a large extent, this development may be viewed as the growing pains of democracy which in time can be overcome by truly effective collaboration and by democratic progress itself. To overcome this nascent nationalism, as well as to advance the security of the United States and the hemisphere, it is important that the Honduran people understand what our political and economic foreign policy objectives are and that they realize that Honduran interests as well as our own are served by cooperation. Our policy is to facilitate this popular understanding and support of mutually advantageous foreign policy objectives, through a program of information and education.

President Galvez is a consistent supporter of US foreign policy, as was his predecessor General Tiburcio Carias Andino. We are endeavoring to encourage the continuation of this attitude by recognizing and supporting, where feasible, legitimate Honduran interests and aspirations and by consulting with the Government of Honduras regarding our foreign policy objectives.

While encouraging the Honduran spirit of self-reliance, we stand ready at their request to assist in the solution of broad social, economic and political problems that are of concern to the Government and people of Honduras. As in the case of other small Central American governments with low incomes, the cost of maintaining their military establishment might result in the diversion of funds from more productive economic and social projects. It would be impossible for Honduras, in any event, to assure its own security with any conceivable level of expenditures on a military establishment. Accordingly, our policy is to discourage the purchase by Honduras of excessive quantities of armaments and to encourage its reliance upon collective security arrangements, particularly inter-American commitments and the procedures of the Organization of American States for keeping the peace. A US air mission and army mission are, however, operating in Honduras with a view to assisting in the development of an efficient air force, an engineer battalion, and a presidential guard as aids in providing for the minimum defense requirements of Honduras and assisting it to perform its appropriate role in hemispheric defense.

It is our policy neither to encourage nor impede efforts to arrive at a satisfactory formula for Central American economic or political union, but to recognize that it can come about only upon the initiative and by the agreement of the interested states. Such a union might, of course, contribute to Central American economic and political stability.

As is the case with other relatively underdeveloped countries, economic problems are of major concern in Honduras. The Honduran economy is predominantly agricultural, and its chief exports in 1949 were bananas (38%), lumber (14%), gold and silver (12%), and coffee (6%). Approximately 73% of all exports are sold in the United States. Since increased income from agriculture offers the best hope of an immediate improvement of the low living standards of the people, it is our policy to give special encouragement to the further development and diversification of agriculture. To this end, negotiations will shortly be undertaken to conclude an agreement with the Honduran Government for cooperative agricultural work with the aim of substantially increasing agricultural production, establishing modern grain storage facilities and initiating soil conservation work.

The lack of adequate transportation facilities is one of the major impediments to Honduran economic growth, and it is our policy to aid in the development of such facilities by continuing to participate in the construction of the Inter-American Highway and by providing technical assistance on other road building projects. The Government of Honduras has, by legislation, entered into a long-term road building program on which it has requested our technical assistance, and it is anticipated that highway engineers will soon be made available to Honduras for this work.

A difficult problem in our present relations with Honduras involves the application of our Mediterranean fruit fly quarantine. American-owned fruit companies and one Honduran company, all operating in Honduras, wish to export citrus fruit to the United States during the months of July to November. US Department of Agriculture technicians admit that the Mediterranean fruit fly is not known to exist in Honduras, but no relaxation of the quarantine regulations has been granted due to the opposition of fruit growers in the United States. Current regulations require a 16-day cooling period before entry into this country. Honduras has requested that this period be shortened to the 7-day sailing time from Honduras to New York and is becoming more insistent that action be taken on the problem. It is our policy to uphold the regulations as now constituted, but to request the US Department of Agriculture to consider their relaxation to a point where the citrus trade may be expanded successfully, providing a further survey should support the alleged freedom of the area from the fruit fly.

US companies, particularly the United Fruit Company, have provided a large part of the capital and technical personnel which have been utilized in the economic development of Honduras. US relations with Honduras must take into account the activities of such companies and the attitude of the Government and people of Honduras toward them. It is our policy, while scrupulously avoiding the taint of interventionism, to foster cordial relations and mutual understanding and respect between Honduras and these companies to the end that the legitimate interests of the companies may be protected.

C. RELATIONS WITH OTHER COUNTRIES

At the outset of the Galvez Administration the previous strained relations between Honduras and Guatemala were temporarily improved. However, relations between the two countries have been deteriorating for the past year, as a result of Honduran preoccupation with the leftist government of Guatemala, of Guatemala's propaganda campaign against Honduras and its tacit support of border forays by Honduran emigres, as well as Guatemalan aid in the establishment of leftist labor unions in Honduras. The resulting mistrust has impaired the former profitable, commercial intercourse between the two Republics.

Honduras, a consistent Central American supporter of the nonintervention commitments of the Organization of American States, has cordial relations with all of its other neighbors and enjoys exceptionally close economic ties with El Salvador as a consequence of a "Free Trade Area" Agreement now in its thirty-second year of existence. Very few, if any, individual Hondurans have ever been involved in Caribbean revolutionary groups and the Honduran Government has never been known to give its support, actual or tacit, to such groups.

Honduras has never recognized the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

D. POLICY EVALUATION

As indicated, the growth of democratic institutions and procedures in Honduras under the Galvez administration has been gratifying. Furthermore, our objective of obtaining the support of the Galvez Government for our foreign economic and political policies has been achieved. Few Latin American states are more consistently cooperative, particularly in respect to issues in the United Nations, the Organization of American States, and other international organizations. Only limited progress has been made toward creating among the people of Honduras a genuine understanding and support of our objectives with respect to Honduras, which is due in large measure to the lack of education, technical skills, and adequate capital, to low health and living standards, and to the venality and inefficiency of Honduran office holders. We should anticipate slow but steady progress in obtaining popular understanding and support of our policies.

Honduran cooperation with the United States in the economic field has likewise been close. American investments in and trade with Honduras have been adequately safeguarded. The United Fruit Company and the Government of Honduras have signed a revised tax contract to the benefit of Honduras which has been approved by the Congress of Honduras, and relations between the Company and the Government appear to be satisfactory. The country would welcome additional foreign investments.

MEXICO

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO[1]

611.1231/1–2251

Memorandum by Mr. Harold C. Herrick, Jr., of the Office of Middle American Affairs to the Officer in Charge of Mexican Affairs (Rubottom)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] January 22, 1951.

Subject: Notes relating to the Chamizal for your use in talking with Vicente Sanchez Gavito.[2]

1. You might tell Sanchez Gavito the following points:

a. We wish very much to obtain a solution of the Chamizal. We hope that Mexico likewise desires to find a solution. If so we feel sure that an answer can be found at this time to this problem.

b. However, we believe that the two Commissioners[3] must actively continue their conversations to work out the details of the agreement within the framework of the conversations which we have had with Sanchez Gavito.

c. We are quite willing to work out a new water treaty to increase the benefits for the farmers in the Juarez Valley but we consider that this and the Chamizal should be handled concurrently.

2. Things we are willing to offer to Mexico:

a. Recognition of the Chamizal award.[4]

We continue to hold that the 1864 river line cannot be determined. Therefore, a percentage division of the Chamizal must be obtained. (We are willing, if necessary, to give Mexico 420 acres of land, which is what she claims of the 630 acres in the Chamizal. However, the 420 acres cannot be given to Mexico within the area of the Chamizal.)

---

[1] Continued from Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 936 ff.

[2] Informal conversations between Sánchez Gavito, Director General of the Mexican Diplomatic Service, and officials of the Department of State concerning the Chamizal question were held intermittently during 1950 and early 1951. Pertinent documents are contained in decimal file 611.1231.

For background information on the Chamizal problem, see U.S. Senate, Convention With Mexico for Solution of the Problem of the Chamizal, Hearing Before the Committee on Foreign Relations, 88th Cong., 1st Sess., 1963.

[3] Lawrence M. Lawson and David Herrera Jordán, the Commissioners of the United States and Mexico, respectively, on the International Boundary and Water Commission—United States and Mexico.

[4] Reference is to the Lafleur award of June 15, 1911, by which the 630-acre Chamizal tract had been divided between the United States and Mexico. For documentation on the award, see Foreign Relations, 1911, pp. 565–605.

b. More water to Mexico by modification of the 1906 Treaty.[5]
We are willing: (1) To modify the stipulated schedule of deliveries of water, which in effect will give Mexico an additional more than 13.5% (Mexico has requested this, this Government has been agreeing on a year to year basis and, therefore, there is agreement on this point), and (2) To give Mexico 50% of the water in the Rio Grande below San Elizario Island.

3. Things which Mexico desires to which we cannot agree:

a. Agreement on a water treaty before there is agreement on the Chamizal.
b. All of the water in the Rio Grande below San Elizario Island down to Fort Quitman cannot be given to Mexico in exchange for a like amount of water some place down river. The reason for this is that farmers in the United States depend on the waste and drain waters reaching the Rio Grande below San Elizario and, therefore, the most we can offer to Mexico is 50% of the flow in this stretch of the river.
c. There is no disagreement regarding Mexico's desire to modify the schedule of water deliveries, although such modification will give to Mexico more than 13.5% additional water.

4. Our ideas of what would seem to be a reasonable settlement of the Chamizal:

a. This country recognize the award.
b. The two Commissioners reach agreement on what percentage of the Chamizal, as an acreage or percentage figure, is Mexican (We would be willing to go to a maximum of 420 acres).
c. The Commissioners agree on the location of a modified channel of the river which will cut the maximum amount of land to Mexico in the Chamizal—Cordova Island area, which is engineeringly feasible and which is believed to be politically acceptable both in the United States and in Mexico. We do not believe that the entire Cordova Island could be compensated for in the area, although we are willing to consider any Mexican suggestions in this regard.
d. Assuming that part of Cordova Island would remain in the United States, uncompensated for by the rectification of the river at that location, the two Governments would, at a later date, enter into a separate convention for the elimination of detached areas along the Rio Grande which would include the remainder of Cordova, Horcon Tract and Beaver Island.

---

[5] For text of the Convention for Distribution of the Waters of the Rio Grande, signed at Washington, May 21, 1906, see Department of State Treaty Series (TS) No. 455, or 34 Stat. (pt. 3) 2953.

547-842—79——94

611.1231/2-1251

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Mann)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] February 12, 1951.

Subject: Boundary and Water Problems

Participants: Licenciado Vicente Sánchez Gavito,
Director General of Diplomatic Service
Thomas C. Mann, Deputy Assistant Secretary for Inter-America Affairs

After the discussion of claims problems, which is reported in a separate memorandum,[1] I raised the question of the Chamizal and water problems.

I started off by saying that Lic. Sánchez Gavito would recall that this problem was first broached by me some months ago in Washington in view of the very strong feeling which existed in Mexico that the U.S. had not lived up to its obligations under the Chamizal award.

I said that since the award involved only 420 acres under the Mexican contention it would have been a relatively easy problem to settle in 1911 but that with each passing year the problem had become more difficult of solution because (a) of increasing land values of the Chamizal area, (b) the growth of the business district of El Paso immediately adjoining the area and the possibility of the business area gradually encroaching into the Chamizal and, (c) the growing possibility that a settlement of the Chamizal might not only relate to land values of the disputed area itself but might also affect values of important property outside of and adjoining the area. I said that if Mexico was genuinely interested in a settlement it seemed to me that this problem should be given preferred attention.

I went on to say that I hoped he would understand that the settlement which had been proposed would result in the following benefits to Mexico: (a) recovery of the possession of approximately 420 acres of land which, irrespective of title, was now actually in the possession of the U.S., (b) United States recognition of the award (with safeguards not necessary to repeat here) which would represent a juridical victory for Mexico and, (c) the acquisition of more water than Mexico is presently entitled to under the 1906 Water and Boundary Treaty. I said that on the other hand the United States would be required to institute eminent domain proceedings at a probable cost of several million dollars and, in addition to losing possession of the land and making concessions in water, would derive no benefits except having a river boundary between Mexico and the United States and the rather intangible benefit of presumably creating a better atmosphere and better relations.

[1] Not printed.

I said that it was important that he understand that while a settlement might present political difficulties for the government of Mexico it would also present very difficult political problems for the government of the United States and that while we were willing to make an effort to right what Mexico considered to be a historical wrong we considered that it was essential that Mexico also be willing to undertake to make the same effort and assume the same onus that we were willing to do.

Lic. Sánchez Gavito then said that the concessions that we were making with respect to the water were not sufficient in as much as Mexico was already receiving water under a revised schedule and had been doing so for many years; also that 50% of the water below El Paso which had been offered had already been used by the United States. I said that I did not agree since it could not be assumed that as water became more scarce in that area with an increased population that we would always be willing ex gratia to agree to a revised schedule of deliveries and that furthermore while the water below the city of El Paso may have previously been used it was still valuable for irrigation purposes and could easily be used again on the American side of the river in the event the Mexicans did not consider it valuable. He quickly said he did not mean to imply that Mexico was not interested in the concessions that had been offered.

Sánchez Gavito then said that the principal obstacle to a settlement had been Mr. Lawson's suggestions that about 200 acres of Cordoba Island be left north of the proposed change in the river bed, and that this would not be acceptable to Mexico.

I said that there were two possible ways to get around this: (a) the 200 acres north of the new channel might be given to the United States in exchange for an equal amount of land of a similar agricultural value below El Paso, possibly as a part of a general settlement of the detached area question, (b) the 200 acres might be left to Mexico with an agreement that the exchange would be made at a later and more politically feasible date. With respect to the suggestion (b) he indicated that Mexico would not be willing to make a firm commitment to this effect and with respect to (a) that this would not be politically possible at this time particularly since the building of the only bridge had complicated the situation and since the city of Juarez planned to build a large stadium on Cordoba Island rather than use it for agricultural purposes. I said that these were all questions which would have to be explored further and that I hoped he would agree that it was important to have a common river boundary between the United States and Mexico in this area and that for engineering reasons and in order to maintain the minimum drop in the river at this point in order to keep the channel open there are limits to the size of the bend which could be made in the river at this point.

Lic. Sánchez Gavito then suggested that we look at a map of the area and attempt to agree on a line which he said he wished to be as near the western boundary of Chamizal as possible. I said that I did not think it would be useful to attempt to draw lines in as much as presumably Mr. Lawson and Mr. Herrera had already drawn some and also because we could not hope to draw a good line without actually looking at the situation on the ground. I said that in this connection I thought it would be impractical to agree to any line in which Mr. Lawson did not fully concur. In conclusion I said that I would be willing at some mutually agreeable time after the meeting of the Foreign Ministers [2] to meet with him in El Paso where we could go over the ground and talk directly with the two Commissioners. I said that this meeting could be held secretly and that I thought we would be able to tell within a very short time whether there was any possibility of reaching agreement. If we decided there was no possibility I said that the best thing would be to forget about the whole problem and move on to more constructive things. If, on the other hand, we could agree then it seemed to me that there was an excellent chance of getting this very troublesome problem out of the way.

In the course of the conversation Lic. Sánchez Gavito said that some people in the Foreign Office thought it would be well to have some publicity in order to have a trial balloon. I said that publicity before we had agreed upon a line would be very bad from our viewpoint because it would arouse unnecessary fears about what we would yield to Mexico. I said that after there had been a meeting of the minds we would have no objection to a trial balloon since it had been understood from the beginning that either the Mexican Foreign Office or the State Department might find it politically impossible to get their respective Congresses to go along and that I hoped that if this happened neither country would feel offended. I said that I looked at the whole procedure as nothing but a good faith effort on the part of the Foreign Offices to reach a satisfactory settlement and that no one could be certain that such a thing is possible.

T[HOMAS] C. M[ANN]

[2] Reference is to the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Foreign Ministers of the American States held at Washington, March 29–April 7, 1951. Documentation on the meeting may be found on pp. 925 ff.

712.56/2–2651

Memorandum by Mr. Charles W. Kempter of the Office of Lend-Lease and Surplus Property

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, February 26, 1951.

For the confidential information and guidance of interested United States Government officials and offices there are transmitted herewith copies and/or translations of certain notes exchanged between the American Ambassador in Mexico City [1] and the Acting Minister for Foreign Relations of the Government of the United Mexican States [2] by means of which there was consummated and made effective The Mexican Lend-Lease Settlement Arrangement of February 24, 1951,[3] providing for the re-scheduling of the repayment responsibility of the Government of Mexico, in order that there might be reached a final settlement of those defense aid obligations arising from the general terms of the basic Mexican Lend-Lease Agreement of March 18, 1943.[4]

Under the terms of this Settlement Arrangement, Mexico assumes the payment to the United States of $12 million over a ten year period. Amortization payments of $1 million each are scheduled for the first three years and of $750,000 each for the following three years. The balance thereafter, in the amount of $6,750,000, becomes payable in four equal installments covering the final four year period.

The terms of reference require payment in United States dollars but give this Government the option of drawing Mexican pesos in lieu of any scheduled dollar payment in order to meet United States foreign currency requirements in Mexico. To that end, an Embassy note,[5] addressed to the Foreign Office of Mexico following the signing of the Settlement Arrangement, informed the Mexican Government of the United States decision to exercise its option and receive Mexican pesos in settlement of the first six scheduled payments.

This Settlement Arrangement further provides for the suspension, by Mexico, of payments after five years if, by that time, there have not been reached final settlement terms concerned with an outstanding Mexican claim [6] which already has been accepted by this Government.

Also included and made a part of the Settlement are the customary provisions covering exchange rates guarantees, restrictions on lend-

---

[1] William O'Dwyer.

[2] Manuel Tello.

[3] The Mexican Government's notes of December 18, 1950, and February 24, 1951, and a copy of the United States note of the latter date were transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 2141, February 26, 1951, from Mexico City (none printed, all filed under Department of State decimal file number 712.56/2–2651).

[4] For text, see Foreign Relations, 1943, vol. VI, pp. 397–400.

[5] Note no. 743, dated February 24, 1951, not printed (712.56/2–2651).

[6] Reference is to the so-called Railroad Retirement Fund Claim, which arose as a result of the deductions made by the Railroad Retirement Board from the wages of Mexican workers who came to the United States to work on the railroads between 1943 and 1945. The Mexican Government at the time objected to the 3¼% tax deduction, but because of the wartime emergency allowed the workers to accept employment, with the understanding that an agreement would later be sought authorizing the refund of the amounts deducted. In an exchange of notes with Mexico signed at Washington, November 15, 1946, the United States committed itself to try to obtain appropriate enabling legislation which would permit the refunds to be made. For text of the notes, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 1684, or 61 Stat. (pt. 4) 3575.

lease retransfers and the protection of the rights of American patents and trademarks owners.

[Here follows a list of attachments.]

795B.5/4–651

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Mann)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] April 6, 1951.

Subject: Mexican Participation in Korea

Participants: Secretary of State
Maj. Gen. Charles L. Bolte [1]
ARA:AR—Mr. Ivan White [2]
ARA—Mr. Thomas Mann
Foreign Minister Manuel Tello
Ambassador Rafael de la Colina
Brig. Gen. Alberto Salinas Carranza [3]

It was arranged that I would meet with Mr. Tello in my office at the Pan American Union Building to discuss the problem of Mexican participation in military action in Korea.

I commenced the conversation by referring to Mexico's support, in the deliberations of the United Nations, of the efforts of the free world to resist aggression in Korea and said that I hoped Mexico could, after due consideration, decide to contribute a division of troops. I recalled that in this connection the United States troops had now been fighting continuously for about nine months and that, because of the shortage of men in the United Nations lines, it had not been possible to put into effect the program of rotation which is desirable for several reasons. I said that there was a real need for Mexican troops and that I was confident, if the Mexican Government should find it possible to help, that Mexican troops would demonstrate their well-known fighting qualities.

I also said that Mexico was one of the nations in this hemisphere able to play an effective role in Korea with a minimum of additional training and equipment. In this connection, I explained that under existing United States law, military equipment could be made available only on the basis of payment in dollars and, furthermore, that it was necessary to use the limited amount of military equipment available in Korea and other danger zones. Concerning equipment of forces for action in Korea, a different situation prevails in that it is legally possible for the United States to make up deficiencies in military equip-

---

[1] Chairman, Inter-American Defense Board, and Assistant Chief of Staff for Operations, Department of the Army.

[2] Director, Office of Regional American Affairs.

[3] Military Attaché, Mexican Embassy.

ment, assist in training troops, to transport contingents to Korea, and to maintain them while they are in the field there provided it is agreed that there will be reimbursement. I said that the terms and conditions of reimbursement could be negotiated later.

The Foreign Minister then referred in complimentary terms to the sacrifices being made by the U.S. in Korea and to the motives which prompt those sacrifices and said that he was, therefore, pained to have to say what he was about to say.

Mr. Tello then stressed that public opinion in Mexico was not prepared at this time to send Mexican troops outside of Mexican territory; and he spoke at some length concerning what he described as a similar state of U.S. public mind preceding the First World War and preceding Pearl Harbor in the Second World War. He denied that Mexican public opinion was greatly influenced by communists, saying that there were only "a handful" of communists and their opinions did not amount to much.

He then referred to the discussions with the American Ambassador [4] in Mexico City preceding the decision of the Mexican Government to vote in the United Nations in favor of resisting aggression in Korea. He said he made it plain to the American Ambassador at that time—and the American Ambassador agreed—that Mexico's action in the United Nations would not constitute an obligation on Mexico's part to furnish troops.

In the course of the conversation, the Foreign Minister also remarked that this is a pre-election period in Mexico and expressed his opinion that Mexico would be unable to bear the cost of maintaining a division in the field.

I agreed that Mexico's action in the United Nations did not create a legal obligation on Mexico's part to furnish troops. I said that the problem seemed to resolve itself into one of internal Mexican politics and that it seemed to me the question was one of preparing and leading Mexican public opinion.[5]

[4] Walter Thurston, Ambassador to Mexico from June 1946 to November 1950.

[5] In telegram 11, from Mexico City, dated July 6, 1951, Ambassador O'Dwyer stated in part the following: "Mexico's attitude toward collective security cooperation unchanged with no indication Mex intends contribute mil to fight aggression in Korea or elsewhere abroad." (795.00/7–651)

Editorial Note

On April 12, 1951, the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank had authorized a credit of $1,875,000 to the Mexican Gulf Sulphur Company, a Delaware corporation which owned all of the capital stock of the Mexican Sulphur Company, S. A., a Mexican firm holding concessions to properties on the Isthmus of Tehuantepec reported to contain proven sulphur reserves, to finance the purchase of machinery and equipment in the United States for the construction and operation of a new plant to produce elemental sulphur. (Export-Import Bank of Washington, Twelfth Semiannual Report to Congress, pages 9–11) The approval of the loan request had been preceded by considerable internal discussion, primarily because the extent of the sulphur deposits could not be definitively determined until after the operation had begun, and because sulphur was under Mexican export control. Pertinent documents are in decimal file 103–XMB and Department of State NAC Files, Lot 60 D 137.

On May 31, the Board of Directors of the Bank had approved the application of Nacional Financiera on behalf of the Altos Hornos de Mexico, S. A., a steel company located at Monclava, for a credit of $5,000,000 also under the $150,000,000 line of credit, in order to finance plant expansion for the increase of steel production. (Export-Import Bank of Washington, Twelfth Semiannual Report to Congress, pages 16, 18–19)

On August 2, the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank approved the application of Nacional Financiera, S. A., on behalf of the National Railways of Mexico and the Ferrocarril Mexicano, for two credits amounting to $56,000,000 under the $150,000,000 line of credit which had been authorized by the Bank on August 31, 1950, to finance the purchase of material, supplies, and equipment in the United States for the rehabilitation of the two railroad systems. The National Railways was to receive $51,000,000 and the Ferrocarril Mexicano was to receive $5,000,000. (103–XMB/8–851) For a press release issued by the Export-Import Bank pertaining to the loan, see Department of State Bulletin, September 24, 1951, page 499.

611.1231/4–2051

Mr. Harold C. Herrick, Jr., of the Office of Mexican Affairs to the Assistant Officer in Charge of Mexican Affairs (Hughes), Temporarily in Mexico City

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, April 20, 1951.

DEAR RUTH: There have been some recent developments in the case of the Chamizal with which we believe you should be acquainted. I am sorry not to have written before this time, but various things have stacked up in the office.

As you may know, Tom Mann met in El Paso with Vicente Sanchez Gavito, Commissioner Lawson and Commissioner Herrera Jordan on March 23 and 24. I am enclosing a copy of the very informal memorandum [1] of the several points upon which they reached tentative agreement. They also are not too far apart in agreement on a rectified channel for the Rio Grande which would cut to Mexico 805 acres—420 of the Chamizal and 385 of Cordova Island. Mr. Lawson indicates hope that he will be able to reach agreement on a new river line. In general terms we would like to see more land cut to Mexico in and to the east of Cordova, whereas, the Mexicans would, of course, prefer to receive more land in the Chamizal area to the west of Cordova Island.

[1] Not attached to the source text, but a copy of the referenced memorandum was found in the Department of State files, and it is printed below as an enclosure.

In the case of the Mexicans, the tentative agreement at El Paso is subject to the approval of at least Tello. Tom and I talked to de la Colina here while Tello was recently in Washington. However, Tello indicated that he did not want to give an answer until he arrived back in Mexico City, which should have been, I understand, last Saturday or Sunday. Presumably we will have some word from him in the near future.[2]

In our case, if and when we get a green light from Tello, Tom plans to send a memorandum[3] to the President outlining the history and present status of the controversy and recommending in substance that the President authorize: (1) the continuation of negotiations along the lines of the El Paso conversations, (2) discussion of the matter with Tom Connally[4] and Ken Regan[5] to solicit their support, and (3) the formation of a citizen's committee in El Paso to promote local support in El Paso of the proposed settlement.

You might pass this letter to Paul Culbertson[6] and any others that you might wish. We will keep you advised.

With all best wishes.

Sincerely yours, HAROLD C. HERRICK, JR.

[Enclosure]

1. This does not constitute an agreement on the part of either Government.

2. No publicity except by mutual agreement in advance.

3. Will agree later on wording regarding recognition of 1911 Award.

4. The Joint Commission will endeavor to agree upon a line for the relocation of the river northward so as to enclose 805 acres of land (420 acres Chamizal and 385 acres Cordova) between the present and proposed new channels. The proposed new channel will begin at a point on the present channel below the Stanton Street Bridge and end at a point on the present channel east of Cordova Island. The City sanitation disposal plant will be north of the proposed new channel.

[2] There is no indication in the Department of State files that the Mexican Government responded to this initiative by the United States during the remainder of 1951.

[3] Not printed; it was not sent forward to the President.

[4] Senator Tom Connally (D–Texas) was Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

[5] Representative Kenneth M. Regan (D–Texas).

[6] Counselor of Embassy, Mexico City.

5. The 805 acres will be reduced by the amount of land, if any, that may be gained by moving the channel north within the existing levees west of the Stanton Street Bridge. It is estimated that perhaps 20 acres may be gained by Mexico in this area.

6. Rectification of the river from Monument No. 1.

7. Mexico will bear cost of delivering clear title to that part of Cordova Island north of proposed new boundary. United States will bear cost of delivering clear title to all territory south of proposed new boundary with the exception of lands within Cordova Island.

8. No agreement on sharing costs of proposed rectification.

398.14/4–2751

Memorandum by the Officer in Charge of Mexican Affairs (Rubottom) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller)[1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] April 27, 1951.

Subject: Additional World Bank Credit for Mexico

The Department has known for several months that the World Bank took the position, following the announcement of the $150 million line of credit[2] extended by the Export-Import Bank to Mexico, that it would not grant additional credit to Mexico unless the Eximbank credit line was reduced by an amount equal to that lent by the World Bank. Lic. Carrillo Flores, President of Mexico's Nacional Financiera, has been assiduously working to change the World Bank's attitude, and it now appears that he has been successful.

Yesterday, at lunch with Alfonso Cortina, Minister Counselor for Economic Affairs of the Mexican Embassy, and Mr. Paez Urquidi, Director of the Mexican Federal Electricity Commission, the latter two related the following to Mr. Ohmans[3] and me:

1. The World Bank has agreed that it will not insist on having the Eximbank line of credit reduced by the amount of any additional World Bank loans provided the joint technical commission[4] now readying to go to Mexico finds that Mexico's present borrowing capacity is in excess of $150 million.

2. The World Bank will consider an application for an additional $25 million (approx.) loan to the Federal Electricity Commission—no

---

[1] Addressed also to Albert F. Nufer, Director, Office of Middle American Affairs.

[2] For documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 959 ff.

[3] John L. Ohmans, Office of Middle American Affairs.

[4] This commission, known as the Combined Mexican Working Party, had been formed in February 1951. It did not complete its study until October 1952. For its report, see The Combined Mexican Working Party, The Economic Development of Mexico (Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press for the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, 1953).

action to be taken respecting the effect of this loan on the existing Eximbank line of credit until the commission's study has been completed.[5]

3. Mr. Paez Urquidi was in telephone communication with Lic. Beteta [6] on Wednesday, and the latter agreed that Mexico would reduce the Eximbank credit line by $25 million if the joint study commission recommends that Mexico should not borrow more than the $150 million line of credit at this time. (It is quite clear that none of the officials concerned expect to have to reduce the credit.)

4. No discussions will be held with the Eximbank pending the completion of the technical commission's report.

For the time being, the Mexicans prefer to keep this whole matter on an informal basis, but eventually the Department and the Export-Import Bank will be formally notified of the understanding reached with the World Bank.

---

[5] The IBRD actually approved a loan of $29,700,000 to the commission and Nacional Financiera on January 11, 1952 (398.14/1–252). In a memorandum dated January 10, 1952, the Deputy Director of the Office of Middle American Affairs (Rubottom) stated in part that he understood that "the Eximbank and the Mexican Government arrived at a definite understanding that the $150,000,000 earmarking would be reduced, at least for the time being, by the above amount." (398.14/1–1052)

[6] Ramón Beteta, Mexican Minister of Finance.

712.5–MAP/4–3051

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of Middle American Affairs (Nufer) to the Director of the Office of Regional American Affairs (White)[1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] April 30, 1951.

Subject: Assistance to Mexico in Procurement of Materials for Military Project No. 1

Ambassador de la Colina has held several informal discussions with Messrs. Mann and Rubottom over the past several months in which he has requested that his Government be assisted by the Department in procuring machine tools and other materials, valued at approximately $600,000, for the completion of its shell-loading factory, hereafter called Military Project No. 1. General Beteta,[2] brother of Mexico's Finance Minister, and Colonel de la Colina, brother of the Mexican Ambassador, have also visited Washington to press for aid in the completion of this project.

The Joint Mexican-United States Defense Commission has given detailed consideration to this project. At its meeting on December 7,

---

[1] Drafted by Mr. Rubottom.

[2] Presumably Ignacio M. Beteta, Chief, Mexican Department of Military Industry.

1950, the Commission adopted a recommendation [3] endorsing a program for the development of the military industry of Mexico, including Project No. 1. Following that action, the Department of Defense formally notified the Secretary of State on December 29, 1950, of its "approval in principle of U.S. assistance in the development of the military industry of Mexico".

Subsequent to the informal discussions and recommendations referred to above, and on the specific suggestion of the Department, the Government of Mexico on February 26, in a formal note [4] to the Department, requested its assistance in the procurement of the material required.

It thus appears that the United States has rather firmly committed itself to assist the Mexican Government in this project. As you are aware, Military Project No. 1 was begun during World War II and was slightly more than half completed when that war ended and the project was abandoned. With the development of the present emergency situation, the Mexicans have again interested themselves in the completion of this shell-loading factory. They hoped, at first, to obtain the necessary materials through normal commercial channels but, in view of information furnished to Dave Clark [5] and others by the Department of Commerce, that avenue seems to be closed, and the Mexicans will have to turn to military channels under Section 408(e) of MDAA, as amended.[6]

I recognize that Mexico so far has provided little tangible support of the United Nations effort against aggression in Korea, although it did make a definite contribution of medical and food supplies which have been delivered. I am also aware of the position taken by Mexico at the IAM but feel that Foreign Minister Tello evinced a spirit of reasonableness and understanding which undoubtedly contributed to the eventual unanimity of the decisions reached at the meeting, especially with regard to the votes of Argentina and Guatemala. As far as troops for Korea are concerned, it must be admitted that Foreign Minister Tello felt that his instructions permitted him no latitude and caused him to give a definite negative answer to the

---

[3] A copy of the recommendation is attached to a letter from Acting Secretary of Defense Robert A. Lovett to Secretary Acheson, December 29, 1950, not printed (712.5/12–2950).

[4] Not printed.

[5] David M. Clark, Office of South American Affairs.

[6] Reference is to the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, Amendments (Public Law 621), approved July 26, 1950; for text, see 64 Stat. 373.

In a note presented to Ambasasdor de la Colina, dated May 7, 1951, the Department of State indicated in part that the material requested by the Mexican Government in connection with the completion of a shell manufacturing plant was in critically short supply, and that even with priority assistance it would require two to three years to secure the items through the United States commercial market. The Department further indicated that should the Mexican Government wish to make a request for the materials under amended section 408 (e) of the MDAA, such a request would be submitted to the appropriate authorities (712.5/2–2651).

Secretary's request for Mexico's support of the UN in Korea. There has been no indication that President Aleman [7] will, for the time being, alter this position, but Ambassador O'Dwyer is now seeking an appropriate time, under instructions from the Department, to approach the President for a Mexican contribution of troops. All observers agree that the Mexican position is dictated largely by political considerations, i.e., the 1952 presidential election. Once the official Government party has agreed on a candidate, it is possible that President Aleman might undertake more positive leadership to prepare his people to assume their responsibilities in Korea and/or elsewhere.

Notwithstanding the above considerations, I believe that on balance the United States has more to gain by adhering to a cooperative line in its relations with Mexico, including assistance for Military Project No. 1, than by doing otherwise. No one questions Mexico's basic loyalty to the cause of democratic freedom nor its opposition to Communist tyranny. In helping Mexico, we are helping a friend and ally. We should, in making our help available, hammer away at every opportunity on the need for her help now rather than at some future date. Mexico, like Canada, has a peculiarly important position vis-à-vis the United States because of its 2400-mile common frontier with this country. Our basic economies are completely intertwined, with nearly 80 per cent of Mexico's trade being with the United States. Our demands on Mexico for zinc, lead, copper, antimony, mercury, cadmium, and other metals, as well as cotton, henequen, and other vital imports, need be only mentioned here. From a military standpoint, we also have much at stake in obtaining the maximum of Mexican cooperation. The Joint Mexican-United States Defense Commission has just begun the preparation of a joint emergency defense plan.[8] We have recently requested Mexican cooperation in an important defense communications project. We need now to request Mexico's assistance in furnishing a high-speed aerial gunnery range for the Navy, and a number of other vital projects in which the Department of Defense is interested.

In summary, there is no escaping the preponderant role which the United States plays in Mexico's whole scheme of living, but we must also admit that Mexico is important to the United States. Acknowledging that Mexico's reaction so far to the UN effort against aggression has been disappointing, we should redouble our efforts to make the Mexican Government and people feel their responsibility in this fight for freedom. I am confident that the best way to gain Mexico's full and wholehearted collaboration is by continuing our policy of [7] Miguel Alemán Valdes, President of Mexico.

[8] The minutes of the 60th Plenary Meeting of the Joint Mexican-United States Defense Commission held in Mexico City, September 14–15, 1951, not printed, indicate that this plan was approved on September 15, and submitted to the governments of both countries for consideration (712.5/2151).

full cooperation with it and that we should help it obtain the materials for Military Project No. 1, the delivery of which, even at best, may be indefinitely delayed.

611.1294/5–1651

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of Transport and Communications Policy (Radius) to the Under Secretary of State (Webb)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] May 16, 1951.

Subject: Possible Bilateral Air Transport Agreement Negotiations with Mexico

Conclusion

That Assistant Secretary Thorp [1] and Under Secretary Webb should have knowledge of Mr. Rentzel's recent and proposed informal conversations with Mexican officials, and his proposal for formal negotiations.

Recommendations

That they confirm the Department's position that no informal commitments or formal negotiations should be undertaken until a firm CAB position on the revision of the Latin American Route Decision has been presented to the Department and has received the approval of the President, and approve the attached letter [2] asking for the CAB's position.

Background

The Mexican part of the Latin American Route Decision of 1946 [3] certificating 5 U.S. carriers on 6 routes into Mexico has never been put into effect through a bilateral air transport agreement because of Mexico's refusal to accept the U.S. concept of complete reciprocal competitive opportunity on all possible air routes. Last March Mr. Rentzel, (then Chairman of the CAB and now Under Secretary of Commerce for Transportation), apparently with the knowledge and approval of the President, explored informally with President Aleman and top Mexican transportation officials the current possibilities of an agreement on the basis of modified U.S. route requests. Mr. Rentzel reported informally to the President and the Department that there was a reasonable chance for an agreement based upon an exchange of routes which would permit Mexican air carriers to operate the shorter trans-

---

[1] Willard L. Thorp, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs.

[2] For text of the decision of May 17, "Additional Service to Latin America", see Civil Aeronautics Board Reports (Washington, 1946), vol. 6, pp. 857–946.

[3] Not attached to source text, but see Secretary Acheson's letter, June 5, infra.

border routes, including New Orleans–Mexico City, on a monopoly basis, with U.S. carriers operating the longer routes between the major traffic points in the U.S. and Mexico.

Secretary of Commerce Sawyer [4] and Mr. Rentzel have informally requested the Mexican Minister of Communications and Director of Civil Aviation [5] to come to Washington for further informal exploratory talks within the next few weeks. In as much as the invitation has already been issued, the Department has taken the position that it has no objection to further informal exploratory talks. It was emphasized that it must be clearly understood by the Mexican officials that no formal agreement can be reached at this time. Embassy Mexico has been instructed [6] so to advise the Mexicans in order that hopes will not be unduly raised and misunderstandings result.[7]

On May 5 (Mr. Rentzel's last day as Chairman of the CAB), he requested interested Department officials to meet with the Board and stated that the Board has "reconsidered" the Latin American Route Decision and was prepared to agree to an exchange of routes substantially along the lines of the Mexican proposal. Department officers at the meeting emphasized to the Board that, in the Department's opinion, it would be inappropriate for the Department to negotiate an international agreement which would in effect constitute a revision of the Route Decision approved by the President without an explicit directive from the President. Mr. Rentzel suggested that it might be desirable to enter into formal negotiations even with the knowledge that agreement could be reached only on a basis which would in effect eliminate certain of the certificates issued to U.S. carriers with Presidential approval in 1946, expressing his belief that the necessary legal steps could be taken after the conclusion of the agreement.

It is conceivable that, in his new capacity as Under Secretary of Commerce for Transportation, Mr. Rentzel may continue his activities in this matter as a result of his understanding with the President and may, in his informal conversations with the Mexican officials, partially commit the U.S. Government to later formal negotiations, attempting then to get the Department's concurrence to such formal negotiations without having obtained the President's explicit directive as to the exact routes for which the U.S. would settle.

Section 802 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 [8] places on the negotiation by the Secretary of State of aviation agreements with foreign governments only the condition that the CAB be advised of,

[4] Charles Sawyer.
[5] Angel Martin Pérez.
[6] Department of State's telegram 1108, May 11, 1951, not printed (611.1294/5–1151).
[7] In the Department's telegram 1135, May 18, 1951, not printed, the Embassy in Mexico City was instructed to make clear to the Mexican Government that not even an informal understanding could be reached at this time (611.1294/5–1651).
[8] For text of the Civil Aeronautics Act (Public Law 706), approved June 23, 1938, see 52 Stat. 973.

and consulted concerning, such negotiations. Nevertheless there is serious question whether, in view of the responsibilities placed upon the CAB by the Civil Aeronautics Act, the Department can properly conclude an agreement which would entirely omit several routes contemplated by a previous CAB route decision, approved by the President, awarding certificates to United States air carriers. At best the Department would be placed in a difficult position vis-à-vis the United States carriers whose certificates would not be covered by the agreed routes unless the President had previously agreed to corresponding revisions of such decision.

Since the Latin American Route Decision of 1946, referred to above, contains routes which the Mexican Government is not prepared to agree to in an air transport agreement, the Department should have a written statement by the CAB, setting forth the manner in which it is prepared to amend that decision if necessary to achieve agreement with Mexico. Such a statement should set forth the minimum route requirements on which an agreement can be based as well as the CAB's evaluation of the relative importance of routes above that minimum which this Government may attempt to obtain in the course of negotiations. The proposed United States position based on such statement should be presented to the President by the CAB and the Department for his explicit agreement to the conclusion of an agreement in conformity with it.

WALTER A. RADIUS

611.1294/6–551

The Secretary of State to the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board (Nyrop)

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, June 5, 1951.

MY DEAR MR. NYROP: In view of the possibility of the negotiation of a successful air transport agreement between the United States and Mexico which is set forth in Mr. Rentzel's letter of March 19, 1951,[1] reporting to the President on his discussions with Mexican authorities in Mexico City, it is believed to be desirable to obtain as soon as possible a firm basis on which additional negotiations with the Mexican Government can be carried out. Were formal negotiations to be held with the Mexican authorities prior to the establishment of a United States position in this regard, the good that has been accomplished by recent discussions with the Mexicans could be lost and it is possible that the conclusion of a satisfactory agreement would be made even more difficult than heretofore.

[1] Not printed. In the letter, Mr. Rentzel had stated in part his belief "that under no circumstances, will it be possible to execute or carry out the Latin American Decision of 1946 insofar as the certification of the three additional carriers to Mexico is concerned." (611.5212/3–1951)

With this in mind the Department, in its letter of April 3, 1951 [2] to Mr. Rentzel, pointed out that the Board might find it desirable to explore the implications of the possibility that the agreement which could be reached with Mexico would provide authorization for only a limited number of United States carriers currently holding permanent certificates for service between various points in the United States and Mexico under the Latin American Route Decision of 1946. Mr. Rentzel's reply, dated April 16, 1951 [2] enclosed a copy of his letter of March 19 to the President and a copy of the President's reply [2] giving general approval to the carrying through of additional negotiations with the Mexican Government, but did not give specific decisions by the Board concerning the routes that the Board considers indispensable in an agreement with Mexico.

Since the Board, pursuant to its responsibilities under the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, in the Latin American Route Decision of 1946 granted certificates to certain United States air carriers to serve specified routes into Mexico and since that decision was approved by the President, it does not appear proper for this Department, under its responsibility for the negotiation of international air transport agreements, to undertake negotiations which would have the effect of modifying the Latin American Route Decision. It is recognized that the formal amendment of the Latin American Route Decision of 1946, including the revision of the certificates awarded to the various United States air carriers affected by that decision, would require lengthy proceedings on the part of the Board. Since it is believed that the time consumed by such lengthy proceedings could result in an undesirable deterioration in the aviation relations between the United States and Mexico, it is suggested that the Board advise this Department in writing of the minimum route requirements that it would be prepared to accept as the basis for an agreement with Mexico, together with an evaluation of the relative importance of routes over and above the minimum requirements which this Government should attempt to obtain in the negotiations with Mexico.

In view of the President's role in the approval of the decisions of the Board in connection with international air transportation, it is believed necessary to have the President's approval on the carrying out of negotiations which would have the effect of modifying a decision which he has previously approved and that when the Board's position is prepared it should be the subject of joint Department and Board discussions with the White House.

---

[2] Not printed.

Since it is recognized that the decision of the Board with respect to the allocation of the routes obtained to United States air carriers is a function which can be exercised by the Board after the conclusion of the agreement, information on the Board's ideas relating to this portion of the modification of the Latin American Route Decision of 1946 is not believed to be essential at this time.

As soon as the Board can make available to the Department the information required for the negotiations with the Mexican Government, this Department will be able to take constructive action in this regard.

Sincerely yours,

For the Secretary of State:
WALTER A. RADIUS
Director
Office of Transport and Communications Policy

Editorial Note

On August 11, 1951, the United States and Mexico exchanged notes in Mexico City placing into effect a new agreement concerning the employment of Mexican agricultural workers in the United States. These notes were transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 429, August 15, 1951, not pictured (811.06M/8–1551). For the text of the agreement, see United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), volume 2 (pt. 2), page 1940. For the text of a press release on the agreement, see Department of State Bulletin, August 27, 1951, page 336.

The new agreement replaced a previous one dated August 1, 1949 which had been discontinued as of July 15, 1951, at the request of the Mexican Government. For information on the earlier agreement, see editorial note printed in Foreign Relations, 1949, volume II, page 686. For text of that agreement, see 2 UST 1048. The Mexican note requesting discontinuance had been transmitted to the Department under cover of despatch 1 from Mexico City, July 2, 1951, not printed (811.06M/7–251).

Negotiations leading to the Migrant Labor Agreement of 1951 had been facilitated by President Truman's signature of Public Law 78 on July 12, 1951. For text of this law, which authorized the United States Government, inter alia, to guarantee the performance by employers of their employment contracts with Mexican workers, see 65 Stat. 119. For the President's special message to Congress, July 13, 1951, concerning the law, and also requesting legislation to prevent the illegal entry of migrant workers into the United States, see Department of State Bulletin, July 30, 1951, page 197. Pertinent documents are in decimal file 811.06M.

611.12/10–151

Policy Statement Prepared in the Department of State

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] October 1, 1951.

MEXICO

A. OBJECTIVES

Objectives in our relations with Mexico are to enlist her support in efforts to promote Inter-American and world-wide peace, develop better political, economic and cultural relations, obtain more tangible support of the United Nations policy to resist aggression wherever it may arise, including the use of Mexican troops, assure maximum cooperation in case of total war, settle individual problems arising between United States and Mexican interests, as well as problems between the two Governments, and promote mutually advantageous economic development.

B. POLICIES

General. Our relations with Mexico derive special importance from the consideration that we must have in our near neighbor stable political and economic conditions and a sense of common purpose and direction between the two countries. Her large population, natural resources and strategic location make it vital to the defense of the hemisphere that our political relations be friendly at all times; our dealings, although firm, should be tolerant and understanding.

Relations between the US and Mexico in the past decade have been very friendly, in contrast to the generally turbulent relations between the two countries during the preceding century. Antipathy toward the US, which has existed ever since the Mexican-American War, has decreased steadily in recent years. Mexico is coming to realize that cooperation with the US is not only desirable but inevitable if Mexico is to maintain her progress and general well-being. During the first world war, Mexico maintained an attitude toward the US of "sullen neutrality," but she was an enthusiastic ally during the second. Many essential war materials were obtained in Mexico, and she permitted recruitment of several hundred thousand Mexicans for agricultural and railroad maintenance-of-way work in this country, thereby making an equal number of Americans available for military service. Furthermore, Mexico sent an air squadron to the Far East, and thousands of Mexican nationals served in the military services of the US.

Outstanding matters pending settlement in current US-Mexican relations include the refund to Mexico of monies paid into the Railroad Retirement Fund by Mexican railway workers (1943–46), the disputed Chamizal area on the Rio Grande at El Paso, bilateral air transport agreement, a commercial fisheries treaty, more lenient travel regulations, the division of radio frequencies, and our various claims, including the Pious Fund, Sabalo, and agrarian claims.

Political. Although we do not accord Mexico unreasonable advantages in negotiations, we cannot attempt to impose our policies or overtly threaten to withhold advantages in order to obtain a better bargaining position in another field of negotiation. The Mexicans respect a demand for fair treatment when presented in a firm but friendly way; but even a vague indication of applying the "big stick" would make them withdraw from the particular negotiations and slowly stop cooperating in other fields. They are skilled at procrastination.

Our policy is furthermore to give every encouragement to a democratic system of government. We seek to convince the Mexicans of our complete respect for their sovereignty and of our lack of desire or intention to interfere in their domestic political problems, particularly in presidential elections.

It is important to show that the moral strength of the US is as great as its military and financial power. Mexicans have not forgotten that one hundred years ago their country lost almost half of its territory to the US. Our treatment of Mexico in the past, including armed intervention, political meddling and non-recognition, has created impressions that cannot be erased by the effects of less than two decades of the good neighbor policy. While more and more Mexicans each year come to believe that we sincerely intend to apply that policy permanently, many remain skeptical. We again demonstrated our good faith to Mexico during the meeting of the Joint Mexican-US Defense Commission in Mexico City, in September 1950, by returning her battle flags captured a century ago.

In order to further our political relations with Mexico, we seek to increase cultural interchange between the two countries. The American people have in the past decade become increasingly interested in the art and music of Mexico, the history of her long and bloody struggle for liberty, and in the opportunities for American business enterprise. On the other hand, the expropriations made under administrations from Madero to Cardenas are also remembered, and Catholic Americans have not forgotten the confiscation of church properties and the rigorous anti-clerical movement.

The already extensive public affairs (USIE) program in Mexico is being expanded in the effort to develop and strengthen the understanding and support there of the United States. This takes on strategic importance since Mexico's manpower and other resources will be essential to us in event of another major war. The purpose of the USIE program is to elicit Mexican support, both official and popular, of what we do. In addition, a program which is successful in Mexico will, due to Mexico's influence throughout the hemisphere, have an important impact in the other American Republics.

The Communists have made more significant penetration of Mexico than their numbers, or the public activities of Communist diplomatic missions in Mexico, would indicate. This has been accomplished by aggressive tactics on the part of artists, writers, and school teachers who have great influence on the intellectual and cultural life of the country. Communists are also strongly entrenched in labor organizations.

Specific objectives of the USIE program are: 1) to combat the Communist threat to the US and the security of the hemisphere; 2) to clarify by statements and actions our friendly desire to cooperate with Mexico in cultural, political, and economic matters while strictly respecting Mexico's sovereignty; and 3) to show an accurate picture of the US, its policies and its people.

Because of Mexico's position as one of the large political units of the western hemisphere, we place importance on the effort to obtain her support on international questions, especially those affecting Latin America.

Without infringing upon the independence of unions, and in appropriate circumstances, we endeavor to foster closer relations between organized, non-Communist labor of both countries and to separate Mexican labor leaders from Communism. For example, twenty-three members of the Petroleum Workers' Union will spend five months in the US this year for the purpose of observing our petroleum operations and acquainting themselves with organized labor leaders here and their techniques. Although we are disappointed in the results of the ICFTU meeting in Mexico in January of this year,[1] we shall continue to strive for greater Mexican labor union participation in that organization. We also seek to diminish the prestige of Vicente Lombardo Toledano and other communistically-inclined Mexican labor leaders.

The incumbent President, Licenciado Miguel Alemán Valdes, will remain in office until December 1, 1952. He has frequently declared his friendship for the United States, and his Government has cooperated with the United States in most matters of major importance. Mexico has supported the United Nations resolutions regarding the aggression against South Korea, and high-ranking Mexican Government officials have made frequent pronouncements to the effect that Mexico will carry out her obligations in the United Nations. However, Mexico has not cooperated in the matter of sending troops to Korea and the President and other officials have stated that it is not politically possible for the administration to do so.

[1] The Mexican delegation had withdrawn from the meeting, and subsequently had joined with the Argentine delegates to consider a new federated labor organization. Pertinent documents are in file 800.062–ICFTU.

[Here follows a statement concerning United States support of the Alemán Government and the character of the President's subordinates.] Mexico has had two decades of increasing political stability, and at this time there seems to be little prospect of a change in government other than by constitutional process.

Presidential elections will take place in Mexico on the first Sunday in July in 1952. As yet the Administration party, the PRI, has given no indication as to who its candidate will be. There have been some indications that President Alemán himself may be a candidate for reelection, depending upon the state of world affairs at that time. Since the Mexican Constitution forbids reelection such a procedure would require legislative action to make it possible. Several persons have announced their candidacy on minor party tickets but it is not believed that any of them have much chance to be elected. Leading candidates for the PRI nomination include Ruiz Cortines, Secretary of Gobernación; Fernando Casas Alemán, Governor of the Federal District; Antonio Bermudez, Senator and Manager of Petroleos Mexicanos; Ramón Beteta, Secretary of the Treasury; and several State Governors.

The Alemán administration has maintained Mexico's high rate of industrial and agricultural growth; a vast program of public works is being carried forward; a courageous and far-sighted financial policy has stabilized the peso; and Mexico's international prestige has been maintained.

Economic. Our long-range economic policy toward Mexico is to encourage the development of a balanced and expanding Mexican economy, which will insure a growing market for US goods and services, and provide sound opportunities for American investment.

Mexico's strongly nationalistic and protectionist commercial policy serves as a deterrent to a steady expansion of the Mexican market for US products at the present time. This policy resulted in the termination of the 1943 trade agreement between the US and Mexico on December 31, 1950,[2] leaving the two countries without a contractual basis for their commercial relations. Quantitative restrictions on imports were removed, but tariffs were substantially increased on many products which enter the Mexican market from the US. Such action is contrary to the objectives of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade,[3] but thus far Mexico has shown no interest in adherence to it. We hope that Mexico will perceive the advantages of participating with other trading nations in the General Agreement and that, as soon as practicable, negotiations to that end may be undertaken. Meanwhile, under existing US policy, Mexico will continue to receive MFN treatment.

---

[2] For documentation on the termination of the agreement, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 939 ff.

[3] For text of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), concluded at Geneva, October 30, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, January 1, 1948, see TIAS No. 1700, or 61 Stat. (pts. 5–6).

During the emergency period, the Department will be concerned with three major problems relating to materials of strategic importance: 1) The support of efforts to expand available supplies of Mexican metals, minerals, and other products and to obtain them for our use; 2) the maintenance of Mexico's cooperation in preventing shipments to Soviet bloc countries of items of primary strategic importance and other materials which should be controlled for strategic reasons; and 3) the support, within the established general policies and procedures, of Mexico's valid requests for assistance in obtaining supplies of essential materials which are in short world supply.

In view of the magnitude of the commercial and financial transactions between the United States and Mexico, it is important that Mexico maintain a realistic and stable peso-dollar rate. Mexico has been reasonably successful in doing this by following sound policies in correcting its post-war balance-of-payment difficulties. The existence of a US-Mexican Stabilization Agreement since 1941,[4] recently extended to July 1953,[5] has helped Mexico to stabilize its currency, to maintain a free exchange system, and to obtain relief from balance-of-payment stringencies. The stabilization fund was first established at $40 million (US), then raised to $50 million in 1947, and it has remained at that amount except for 12 months, 1949–1950, when it was temporarily increased to $62 million. The fund was utilized for the purchase of pesos to the extent of $37 million, all of which have been repurchased by Mexico. Finance Minister Beteta, a US-educated economist, has shown rare determination in maintaining a sound financial policy.

The economy of Mexico has strengthened considerably since the stabilization of the peso at its present par, 8.65 to 1, in June 1949. Following the outbreak of hostilities in Korea, the country's holdings of gold and foreign exchange sharply increased, due principally to the influx of flight capital. However, reserves began to level off during mid-1951. The Federal Government of Mexico has continued to meet its recognized foreign debt service payments regularly. However, because of the size of foreign debt, requests for loans out of the $150 million line of credit granted by the Eximbank on September 1, 1950, will be considered by the Department with special emphasis upon the degree of essentiality of the projects involved. A World Bank mission is now making a study of Mexico's borrowing capacity in cooperation with the Mexican Government.

[4] For text of a joint statement by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States and the Secretary of the Mexican Treasury announcing the signature of the agreement on November 19, 1941, see U.S. Treasury Department, Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the State of the Finances For the Fiscal Year Ended June 30, 1942 (Washington, 1943), p. 291.

[5] A Supplemental Agreement, extending the existing Stabilization Agreement until June 30, 1953, was signed on July 26, 1951 (812.131/7–2651).

Since 1946, Mexico has sought a refund of the approximately $6 million paid by its workers into the US Railroad Retirement Fund during World War II. Although this amount would eventually be offset against Mexico's Lend-Lease debt to the US, in accordance with the terms of the Lend-Lease settlement agreement reached in February of this year, we are continuing to seek a more clean-cut basis for handling this claim.

It is also our policy to encourage Mexico's economic development through the diversification and increase of agricultural production. We believe Mexico should place at least equal emphasis on such a program rather than press so strongly for industrialization, although we realize the latter is looked upon by the Mexicans as the cure-all for their economic ills. Since agriculture is the occupation of nearly two-thirds of the Mexican people, improved commercial relations with Mexico depends on better conditions for these workers.

Mexico and the US have agreed upon a joint program of technical assistance [6] in accordance with the Point IV objectives, and the cooperative missions in operation and training programs are being continued. Moreover, serious consideration is being given to an expanded program in agriculture. We believe these programs of technical assistance should be continued and enlarged, always provided that the Mexican Government continues to display a desire to share in and profit from the effort, and that no conflict or duplication develops with UN, OAS, or private programs.

We encourage the use of private capital, both Mexican and foreign, in the financing of development projects, but the resources of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the Eximbank have also been generously used, particularly in the fields of inland transportation, irrigation, electric power and steel production. Mexico often seeks loans from the Eximbank because of the lower interest rate and because of the traditional reluctance of Mexican capitalists to invest their money in Mexico, except in urban real estate. This tendency should be discouraged.

The Department should at every opportunity encourage the Mexican Government to permit the participation of experienced private foreign capital in the exploration and development of Mexico's petroleum resources, since it is believed that Mexico's full petroleum potential can be achieved only in this way. However, Mexican laws and Mexican philosophy both are inimical to development of her oil resources by private capital. Since Mexico's petroleum resources are important to Western Hemisphere defense, every effort is being made to supply that industry with the materials and equipment necessary to support an active and balanced development program with a view towards increasing the amount of relatively secure petroleum supply which could be available to the allied and friendly nations in the event of hostilities.

[6] A General Agreement for Technical Cooperation between the United States and Mexico was effected by an exchange of notes at Mexico City, June 27, 1951, which entered into force on the same date. The notes were transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 3280, June 28, 1951, not printed (812.00–TA/6–2851). For a press release concerning the agreement, dated June 27, 1951, see Department of State Bulletin, July 9, 1951, p. 67.

With regard to other Mexican mineral resources, it is our policy to encourage their development by causing the Mexican Government and labor unions to realize that their present tax and labor union practices retard the incentive of new American capital to enter the mining industry. We hope to stimulate Mexican production of strategic ores [7] by assisting their experts in mining survey techniques and in offering the facilities of our laboratories for analysis of ores. This encouragement to production is carried on not only because increased development of Mexican resources is essential to the well-being and political stability of the country, but also to increase the supplies of strategic minerals which would be readily available to us in case of war.

We cooperate fully with the Mexican Government through a joint commission to control and eventually to eradicate foot-and-mouth disease [8] in Mexico, before it damages our cattle industry. The last outbreak occurred in August 1951, but it was quickly brought under control. Although the financial burden of the program should fall in large part on the Mexican Government, it is our policy, in view of the importance of keeping the disease out of the US, not to allow the matter of proportionate financial contributions, nor the disposal of Mexico's exportable meat surplus which is a result of the campaign, to jeopardize the continuation of present cooperative measures.

We have yet to solve our dispute with Mexico over commercial fishing rights and the extent of territorial waters, although this problem has been quiescent since mid-1950. A delicate balance, or modus vivendi, has been achieved and no US fishing boats have been molested due to Mexico's fear that a prohibitive tariff would be placed on the entry of Mexican shrimp and tuna into the US. We continue to refute the Mexican nine-mile territorial waters claim, although the whole question is complicated by our own continental shelf and high seas fishing areas policy. However, we hope eventually to settle these questions by international agreement.

---

[7] In August 1951, representatives of the United States Atomic Energy Commission and the Mexican Government held discussions at Mexico City concerning a proposed joint uranium development program in Mexico. As a result of the discussions, a draft memorandum of understanding, dated August 20, 1951, was prepared by the Department of State with the approval of the Atomic Energy Commissioners and presented to the Mexican Government for consideration. No agreement was reached on the matter, however, in 1951. Pertinent documents are in decimal file 812.2546.

[8] For previous documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1947, vol. VIII, pp. 811 ff.

We encourage and give appropriate assistance to the development of transportation facilities which connect the marketing and production centers of the US and Mexico. The Mexicans have been granted a $56 million loan under the Export-Import Bank credit to rehabilitate Mexican railroads. However, the Bank established several conditions for the loan through which it is hoped to improve the operating efficiency of the railroads.

We are preparing to discuss with the Mexican Government a bilateral agreement covering the reciprocal operation of bus and truck traffic between the two countries. These discussions, however, are not expected to begin until after the first of next year. It is hoped that eventually Mexico will assume the leadership in the conclusion of a multilateral convention covering commercial motor traffic over the Inter-American Highway.

To date we have been unable to negotiate a bilateral air transport agreement with Mexico, due to the Mexican Government's unwillingness to grant the routes embodied in CAB's Latin American route decision of 1946. At the present time, the entire matter is being reviewed to determine if there is any other approach which might be mutually acceptable to solve our outstanding aviation problems.

The attitude of the Mexican Government has been a stumbling block to the successful conclusion of a NARBA agreement.[9] The Mexican delegation walked out of the last NARBA conference. The US hopes that Mexico will eventually accede to the new convention, although it is expected that Mexico will request some concessions before it accepts this agreement.

A technical agreement has been reached for the assignment of television frequencies along the border for a range of 250 miles and this will soon be confirmed by an exchange of notes.[10] Discussions are also being held looking toward an agreement covering mobile transmitting equipment, and likewise the control of electro-magnetic radiation.

The Department of State relies on the Department of Labor for determination of the need for Mexican farm workers and seeks to facilitate orderly procedures whereby the needed Mexican workers are brought into the US for temporary periods in a legal manner and under terms satisfactory to both the US and Mexican Governments. Legislation enacted in July 1951 [11] authorized the US Government to recruit Mexican braceros in accordance with a governmental agree-

---

[9] On November 15, 1950, a North American Regional Broadcasting Agreement was signed at Washington by the United States, Great Britain, Canada, Cuba, and the Dominican Republic; the agreement entered into force for the United States, April 19, 1960. For text, see 11 UST 413, or TIAS No. 4460.

[10] The United States note, dated August 10, 1951, and the Mexican note, dated September 26, 1951, were transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 1118, October 31, 1951, not printed (912.44/10–3151). The Department's press release of October 26, announcing the agreement is summarized in Department of State Bulletin, November 26, 1951, p. 865.

[11] Reference is to Public Law 78. See the editorial note on p. 1488.

ment with Mexico for employment on US farms. This new agreement entered into effect, following discussions in Mexico City, on August 11, 1951. The US guarantees the payment of wages and the costs of transportation of the Mexican workers and offers assurances that the terms of the individual contracts between the employer and the workers will be fulfilled.

As a result of the findings of the President's Commission on Migratory Labor [12] and following greater public awareness of the tremendous problem of the Mexican farm worker illegally in the US and not under contract, immigration officials are carrying out a vigorous policy aimed at returning these so-called "wetbacks" to Mexico. It is our policy to encourage this stringent campaign against the illegal entrants since their presence here flouts our laws, and exploitation of them by some US growers contributes to tensions in our relations with Mexico.

International Boundary. The Department, through the US Section, International Boundary and Water Commission, will continue to assure that the benefits to this country and the obligations of this Government contained in treaties and agreements with Mexico regarding the international boundary are fulfilled. These include: 1) a settlement of boundary, water and land controversies, such as the Chamizal, and 2) construction of joint dams and engineering projects, such as Falcón Dam, to utilize the water of the Rio Grande, and the Colorado and Tijuana Rivers for the benefit of both countries.

To the maximum extent possible, the Department will not become involved in US domestic problems arising from international boundary activities. Such domestic matters pertain to the determination of the agency to operate and maintain the Imperial Dam on the Colorado River and part of the All-American Canal in California which will be used to deliver water to Mexico and the distribution and use within the US of the US portion of the water and power to be made available by the international dams and power plants on the Rio Grande.

C. RELATIONS WITH OTHER STATES

Mexico has been for many years a strong adherent of the inter-American system and has in general been meticulous in carrying out her duties in this regard. She has developed an outstanding position among the other American republics, and has been helpful to the US in our relations with them. Mexico has a strong desire to be considered one of the political leaders of the hemisphere.

Mexico's publicly expressed general policy is to avoid meddling in Central American politics. However, she has traditionally looked upon that area as her sphere of political and social interest; she encourages political exiles from those countries to take refuge in Mexico, and Mexican diplomatic representatives sometimes become involved in the politics of the countries to which they are accredited. Guatemala especially has been influenced by the nationalistic philosophy underlying the Mexican Revolution and by Mexico's extreme leftist labor leaders.

[12] For text of Executive Order 10129, dated June 3, 1950, which established the Commission, see 15 Federal Register 3499, or Department of State Bulletin, July 3, 1950, p. 33. For the Commission's report, see Migratory Labor in American Agriculture (Washington, 1951).

Mexico follows closely the general course of South American politics but is cautious in adopting any partisan attitude in the rivalries among Argentina, Brazil and some of the other South American republics. We can in general count upon Mexican support in carrying out the terms of the Rio Treaty [13] and other international agreements.

Mexico never forgets her cultural relationship with Spain. She has consistently refused, however, to recognize the Franco regime and has recognized the Spanish Republican Government-in-exile. In the UN Mexico voted against resumption of normal diplomatic relations with Spain by member nations.

During World War II, and particularly at the time of Ambassador Oumansky's [14] assignment to Mexico, the Mexican Government had a generally friendly attitude towards Russia. This friendship has deteriorated, and although Communist propaganda is disseminated actively by the Russian satellite embassies in Mexico, there is no evidence of progress in promoting Communism or even of maintaining the position reached during the Oumansky period. A number of leftist or Communist-inspired conferences have been held in Mexican territory. The Mexican labor leader, Vicente Lombardo Toledano, claims not to be a member of the Communist Party, but his actions suggest that he is more than a fellow traveler. He is the recognized leader in communistic propaganda and activity against the US. Certain sectors of organized labor with leftist tendencies representing minority groups have shown a hostility to the US, but it is not believed that they carry much weight or present any threat to relations between the two countries.

Mexico has publicly announced a claim to part of Belize, but this has not been a cause of dissension with the United Kingdom. However, if British control of the territory should end, a lively dispute between Mexico and Guatemala might ensue.

Canada has made determined efforts in the past few years to increase trade with Mexico. While the volume of trade between those countries is still small as compared with US-Mexican trade, it is growing rapidly and taking on importance. Closer relations of a political, economic or cultural nature between Mexico and Canada, even if established, would not create a problem since US-Canadian objectives are so similar.

---

[13] For text of the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (Rio Treaty), opened for signature at Rio de Janeiro, September 2, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, December 3, 1948, see TIAS No. 1838, or 62 Stat. (pt. 2) 1681.

[14] Konstantin Alexandrovich Umansky had served as Soviet Ambassador to Mexico from June 1943 to January 1945.

Mexico has played an important role in the work of the United Nations since the organization was established, as well as in the OAS. Luis Padilla Nervo, Chairman of the Mexican Delegation to the UN, has won an enviable personal reputation as an effective and intelligent leader among UN representatives and has rendered outstanding service to the organization. Dr. Jaime Torres Bodet, Director-General of UNESCO, is another example of the wide scope and high competence of Mexico's participation.

Mexico's coldly formal support of the UN effort in Korea has been disappointing. In addition to the fact that her leaders have felt it politically inexpedient to do more in view of the presidential election in 1952, this can probably also be attributed to her feeling that the Korean affair is really between the US and the Soviet Union, to a combination of nationalistic and Communistic propaganda which has succeeded in making it seem to be politically unwise for the Mexican Government to support the US too openly, to her unjustified but strong belief that we have given insufficient recognition to the Mexican contribution in World War II, and to a fear that Mexico's armed forces are inadequately trained and equipped to perform creditably, this being attributed in part to her inability to obtain arms as needed from the US. However, Mexico offered some foodstuffs and medical supplies to the UN which were accepted.

In most major political matters Mexican representatives have collaborated with the United States, although serious differences of views have occurred in the UN in the fields of freedom of information and dependent areas.

D. POLICY EVALUATION

Our policy toward Mexico has been successful in its most important aspects. We have a friendly neighbor on our southern border and Mexico's actions in the UN and OAS are generally in accord with those of the US. The financial and technical assistance which the US has given to Mexico in recent years is productive of and conducive to continued cooperation by Mexico in the political, economic and cultural fields. Mexico remains a large market for our exports and furnishes us several strategic materials. Mexican labor is being provided on a legal contractual basis for US agricultural requirements and the flood of illegal labor has been slowed. Some progress is being made in clearing up outstanding problems, mostly in the economic field, but Mexican trade practices remain unsatisfactory from our point of view and agreement on aviation, telecommunications and fishing matters is yet to be reached. With the exception of the Chamizal question, there are no boundary problems between the US and Mexico. An expanded information program is expected to help us counteract communist propaganda in Mexico.

We should continue to seek means of furthering better understanding between the Governments and the people of the two countries; and to seek solution of the economic and political problems arising from time to time. The only satisfactory means of doing so is through a policy of mutual respect and cooperation.

611.1294/10–1251

The Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board (Nyrop) to the Director of the Office of Transport and Communications Policy (Radius)

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, October 12, 1951.

DEAR MR. RADIUS: Reference is made to your letter dated June 5, 1951,[1] relative to the negotiation of an air transport agreement with Mexico.

It appears that at the present time the attitude of the Mexican Government is more favorable than heretofore toward the conclusion of an air transport agreement with the United States, and there is reason to believe that a mutually satisfactory agreement may be effected. It is requested, therefore, that arrangements be made for an immediate meeting with the appropriate Mexican officials in Mexico City with a view to the negotiation of an agreement. The Board has designated as its representatives at this meeting the Chairman, Mr. Donald W. Nyrop, Mr. Gordon M. Bain, Director, Bureau of Air Operations and Mr. Edward A. Bolster, Chief, Foreign Air Division.

The Board has reviewed the various route proposals under consideration, and has determined that the following routes should be obtained for United States carriers:

1. New York–New Orleans–Mexico City. The Board is unwilling to grant reciprocal rights over the entire route, but has approved the grant of a Mexico City–New Orleans route. If the Mexicans insist upon a monopoly for a Mexican carrier on the New Orleans route, the Board would be agreeable to exclusive operations by a Mexican carrier for one year, during which time the U.S. carrier would operate between Mobile or Birmingham or Atlanta and Mexico. As a maximum concession, the Board would accept exclusive Mexican operations for two years.

2. Houston–Brownsville–Tampico–Mexico City–Tapachula and beyond.

3. New York–Washington–Fort Worth/Dallas–San Antonio–Monterrey–Mexico City. The Board will agree to the elimination of Mon-

---

[1] Ante, p. 1486.

terrey from this route, despite the substantial investment of American Airlines at this point. In relinquishing this point, the United States should secure Mexican recognition of the obligation to reimburse American Airlines for such investment and a release to American Airlines from any future obligations under its Monterrey airport contract.

4. Los Angeles–El Paso–Mexico City. If the resistance of the Mexicans to the grant of this route is sufficiently strong to endanger the agreement, the request may be withdrawn.

5. Los Angeles–San Diego–La Paz–Mexico City. There should be a clear understanding with Mexico that the carrier operating this route will be permitted to terminate service either at La Paz or Mexico City.

6. San Antonio–Laredo–Monterrey–Mexico City. If the Mexicans are strongly opposed to the grant of this route, it may be abandoned. However, this route should not be relinquished prior to the relinquishment of the Los Angeles–El Paso–Mexico City route.

7. Houston/New Orleans–Merida and beyond.

8. Miami–Merida and beyond.

Any agreement reached must include the new Los Angeles and New Orleans routes as described above for U.S. carriers.

The Board is agreeable to the grant of the following routes to Mexico:

1. Mexico City – Guadalajara – Mazatlan – Hermosillo – Mexicali–Tijuana–Los Angeles.
2. Mexico City–New Orleans.
3. Mexico City–Miami and beyond.
4. Mexico City–Monterrey–Laredo–San Antonio.
5. Torreon–Monterrey–San Antonio.
6. Chihuahua–El Paso.

The Mexican request for a route, Nogales–San Diego, and for Houston as a co-terminal on route 5 should be refused.

It is further the opinion of the Board that the United States Government should have the authority to grant to each designated U.S. air carrier the right to operate schedules non-stop between any point in the United States on such route and any point in Mexico on such route and that this right should be specified in the agreement.

Sincerely yours, DONALD W. NYROP

911.5212/10–2551

The Acting Director of the Office of Transport and Communications Policy (Barringer) to the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board (Nyrop)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] October 25, 1951.

MY DEAR MR. NYROP: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of October 12, 1951,[1] setting forth the Board's views relative to the basis upon which this Government might again negotiate with Mexico for an air transport agreement.

[1] Supra.

Your letter was carefully studied by the several officers of the Department concerned. The Department concurs with the Board that the prospects for the conclusion of an air transport agreement appear to be somewhat more favorable now than they have been in the past; and shares the desire of the Board to proceed with negotiations as soon as possible. An analysis of the background and the past history of United States-Mexican civil aviation relations leads the Department to the conclusion that before arrangements are made for negotiations in Mexico, as requested in your letter, the following questions should be subjected to further consideration by the Board and by the Department.

(1) It appears to the Department that the basis suggested by the Board relative to the route exchange does not meet what Mexico has heretofore indicated to be its minimum requirements. Does the Board have information which would lead it to believe that this basis will possibly be acceptable to Mexico?

(2) The Department should like further to explore with the Board the policy implications of granting an even limited monopoly to a foreign carrier on a route or route segment. The Department is aware of the fact that from the economic point of view, the grant of a one or two year monopoly for a Mexican carrier to operate the Mexico City–New Orleans route would not be harmful to the interests of United States carriers because of the relatively low traffic between these points. Indeed, it could be argued persuasively that such an arrangement, even if acceptable to Mexico, would be advantageous to the United States since, in exchange for an exclusive right of doubtful economic value to Mexico, the United States is spared from granting to Mexico fully reciprocal long-haul routes from and to high-density traffic-generating points in the United States (New York, Washington, possibly Chicago). It could also be argued that the grant of an exclusive right, temporary or permanent, would not establish an undesirable precedent or involve a change of policy because of the unusual geographical situation, similar only to that existing with Canada, of a long contiguous border. The Department has serious doubts that this argument could be sustained with other nations, particularly those in the Western Hemisphere, especially when applied to the comparatively long over-water route contemplated between Mexico City and New Orleans. Should the United States be prepared to consider similar treatment for other countries, including Venezuela?

(3) The Department is concerned over the initiation of negotiations on the basis of a position which contemplates setting aside permanent certificates currently held by U.S. carriers, previously granted by the Board, with the President's approval, in the Latin American Route

Decision of 1946. As was indicated in our letter of June 5, 1951, the Department suggests that it would not be prudent to engage in negotiations with the Mexican Government until the President has indicated whether he approves of the proposed modification of the Latin American Route Decision. What procedures, if any, does the Board consider necessary to enable it to modify or cancel rights given certain American carriers under the Latin American Route Decision? [2]

Officers of the Department are prepared to discuss this problem with you at your convenience.

Sincerely yours, J. PAUL BARRINGER

[2] In a letter dated November 6, 1951, the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board (Nyrop) answered these queries by stating that because of the "generally more favorable atmosphere during recent months" the Board had concluded that a new effort to reach an agreement should be made, that the concession contemplated was necessary and the Board did not regard it as establishing a precedent, and that the President had recently requested that the negotiations be expedited. (611.1294/11–651)

611.1294/11–751

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Acting Director of the Office of Transport and Communications Policy (Barringer)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] November 7, 1951.

Subject: Negotiations with Mexico for a Bilateral Air Transport Agreement

Participants: Mr. Charles Murphy, Special Counsel to the President
Mr. Donald A. Hansen, Attorney-Adviser, White House Staff
Mr. Donald W. Nyrop, Chairman, Civil Aeronautics Board
Mr. Thomas Mann, Deputy Assistant Secretary, Bureau of Inter-American Affairs, Department of State
Mr. J. Paul Barringer, Acting Director, Office of Transport and Communications Policy, Department of State

At a meeting held in Mr. Murphy's office in the White House at 9:30 a. m. today, Chairman Nyrop and the Department's representatives outlined to Mr. Murphy and Mr. Hansen briefly the history of past negotiations with Mexico for a bilateral air transport agreement based upon the Latin American Route Decision of 1946, and the current basis for further negotiation recommended by the CAB in a letter dated October 12, 1951 to the State Department. Mr. Nyrop explained the effects of the recent change of position by a series of charts showing the routes authorized by the 1946 Decision, the routes currently operated by carriers of both countries under temporary permits, and the effect of the changes now proposed by the CAB. These charts and a copy of the October 12 CAB letter were later left with Mr. Murphy.

In addition, the following points were made:

1. The Department and the CAB agree that the negotiating positions now recommended by the CAB be submitted to the President for his approval, inasmuch as the completion of a bilateral agreement incorporating the revised US route requests and proposed concessions would result in a de facto revocation and modification of certain routes and certificates granted US air carriers by Presidential directive in the 1946 Decision.

2. The conclusion of an agreement based upon the current CAB recommendations would involve a change in US policy to the extent that exclusive rights would be granted to Mexico for Mexican air carriers between points in Mexico and US points of secondary traffic importance. The Department's representatives expressed the view that both in regard to the change and the proposal for a 1–2 year exclusive on the Mexico City–New Orleans route, other Latin American states should receive equal treatment.

3. The Department and the CAB agreed that, while the current recommended basis for a new negotiation represented a substantial effort to meet previously stated Mexican positions, was a reasonable offer, and included the ultimate concessions that should be made, it was impossible to predict a favorable reaction from the Mexican Government. The President should be advised that the Department and CAB will make every possible effort to conclude an agreement if he approves the basis of negotiation, but neither is overly optimistic as to the chances of Mexican acceptance of the proposals.

4. It was suggested that a White House representative, preferably Mr. Murphy himself, accompany the US Delegation to Mexico City for the formal negotiations. The presence of such a direct and personal representative of the Preesident would strengthen the US position by indicating to the Mexican authorities that the US position was fair but final and that there would be no possibility of effective appeal to the President by the President of Mexico for further concessions.

Mr. Murphy appeared to agree that the problem required the President's personal attention and would undertake to advise Mr. Nyrop in the near future as to the time and manner in which it should be presented to the President. It was suggested that an early decision was desirable, and Mr. Nyrop said it would not be difficult for himself and the Department's representatives to visit the President in Florida [1] if necessary.

Mr. Murphy asked questions regarding the reactions of the various US air carriers concerned. Mr. Nyrop pointed out that American Airlines and Eastern Air Lines had agreed in writing to the modifications that would probably have to be made in their certificates, that from a practical point of view it was not probable that Braniff Airways would object so vigorously as to create serious difficulty. Mr. Mann expressed the opinion that Braniff might object vigorously. Mr. Murphy also asked whether Pan American's ownership in the Mexican airline, CMA, might possibly give rise to the intervention of the latter in opposition to an agreement which would involve loss of CMA's present exclusivity on the route Mexico City–Los Angeles. It was suggested that the Pan American management would be less likely to inspire such opposition at this time than previously. It was generally agreed that no hint of the over-all basis proposed should reach the interested airlines.

[1] President Truman spent the latter part of November and the early part of December at the Little White House in Key West, Florida.

While waiting for the meeting with Mr. Murphy, Mr. Nyrop agreed with Messrs. Mann and Barringer that, should the President approve the basis, it would be most desirable to precede the formal negotiation by an informal exploration through appropriate Mexican authorities to ascertain whether or not there existed, in the opinion of the Mexican Government, an actual basis for negotiation. Mr. Nyrop did not feel that such an exploration with General Salinas was desirable, suggesting that a preliminary informal exploration might best be conducted by officials of the American Embassy at Mexico City.

811.06–M/11–1551

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. John L. Ohmans of the Office of Middle American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] November 15, 1951.

Subject: Mexican Migrant Labor Agreement

Participants: David H. Stowe, Presidential Assistant
Michael Galvin, Under Secretary of Labor
Edward Keenan, Assistant Director, Bureau of Employment Security, Department of Labor
Argyle Mackey, Commissioner, Immigration and Naturalization Service
Willard F. Kelly, Asst. Commissioner, Immigration & Naturalization Service
Edward Williams, Office of Attorney General, Dept. Justice
Thomas C. Mann, Deputy Asst. Secretary of State, Inter-American Affairs
John L. Ohmans, MID, Department of State
Milton Turen, Bureau of the Budget
Bernard Schmid, Bureau of the Budget

The meeting was called by Mr. Stowe in order to review recent developments concerning the Mexican migrant laborers and to discuss strategy to be followed in the immediate months ahead, with respect to the agreement with Mexico.

Mr. Stowe recounted President Truman's decision to sign P.L. 78 in July 1951 thus paving the way for the negotiation of the Migrant Labor Agreement of August 11, 1951. The President's decision had been made then to limit the agreement to six months (President Aleman concurred) in order to grant time for Congressional action on the serious and growing "wetback" problem. But no positive action was taken by Congress in the session which ended in October and the agreement will end on February 11, 1952 unless further negotiations are undertaken with Mexico.

Congressional inaction on "anti-wetback" legislation was determined in part by considerable opposition among farmer groups to bills providing strong penalties for harboring and concealing "wetbacks", and granting INS officers permission to enter their farms in search of the aliens who had entered illegally.

In talks with farmer groups in California and in Arkansas and in Farm Labor Committee meetings in Washington Mr. Stowe found that there was misunderstanding regarding the bills. However, after explaining the nature of the bills he was assured of grower support, unfortunately not reflected in any subsequent Congressional action. Mr. Stowe distributed copies of letters he exchanged with Max Henderson, Chairman of the Subcommittee of the Agricultural Labor Users' Committee on the subject (attached [1]) which indicated that grower support of a bill along the lines of the Walters' bill [H.R. 4055] [2] could be expected. However, from a legislative point of view Mr. Stowe admitted that the Administration with its desire for some "wetback" curbs, batted zero.

Appropriation-wise, the INS and the USES fared a little better. INS received enough to pay for the expenses of the airlift, although this was not enough to put on extra men and continue the return by plane of the Mexican illegals. The USES received enough to meet their minimum expenses.

There was general discussion on the strategy that ought to be followed between November 15 and February 11. Mr. Stowe said he could not, of course, speak for President Truman, but if there were no prospect of legislation which would assist in controlling the "wetback" influx, he would recommend to the President that no negotiations be entered into to extend the agreement. For social, political, and for security reasons President Truman had to follow through with his program to seek curbs on wetbacks. Besides, the President had assured President Aleman that he would seek legislation on control of the wetbacks, and in reply President Aleman had expressed his sincere concern on the wetback problem.

---

[1] None printed.
[2] Brackets in the source text.

Mr. Mackey expressed his agreement and volunteered the comment that the INS would not consider the admissability of Mexicans under any conditions not consistent with the law. Mr. Galvin considered that the legislative "posture" about February 11 could change the picture; i.e., if there was a possibility of legislation about that date, it might prove to be advisable to seek a 30 or 60-day extension to the agreement so that the proper legislation could be passed.

In response to questioning by Mr. Mann, Mr. Kelly admitted that his patrol officers could not, under present budgetary limitations, on border patrol personnel prevent the use of wetbacks in the border areas, particularly the lower Rio Grande Valley. Mr. Galvin pointed out the inherent difficulty in gaining "grass root" support for legislation in February, (so that the agreement would be extended) because at that time and up through May the farmers needing workers could get along without legal workers and "wetbacks" could be procured fairly easily. It would not be until May or June that the farmers in Arkansas, Mississippi, Colorado, and northern California would create any great demand for legal workers.

Mr. Stowe said that the problem was very important and that a foreign importation program was needed. He was convinced that a Mexican agreement was the answer.

Copies of the Bureau of the Budget study [3] (coordinating the Departmental views on the report of the President's Commission on Migratory Labor) were distributed. Mr. Galvin hoped that preliminary views of State and Justice could be exchanged with Labor in about ten days, while Mr. Stowe expressed a desire for the agencies' comments early in January.

The need for inter-agency coordination on the migrant labor problem, which was a recommendation of the Task Force study, received general agreement. Mr. Stowe said he would handle all specific inquiries concerning legislative action on a substitute for the Walters Bill (H.R. 4055); Mr. Galvin and his Labor Department officials would handle general inquiries on the operation of the agreement, and would seek greater support from the growers. The responsibility for pressure for legislation to control the wetbacks was delegated to INS. State promised to seek coordination of all Departmental actions and to make proper references to the other agencies.

---

[3] Not found in Department of State files

611.1294/12–1751

Memorandum by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Mann) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] December 17, 1951.

Subject: Department's Unnumbered Telegram of December 14 [1] to Mexico City.

Attached is a copy of a telegram [2] which I drafted on December 14 concerning the civil air negotiations with Mexico.[3] During the lunch hour on December 14 Mr. Deak [4] (AV) told me that the U.S. delegation had unanimously recommended giving a permanent exclusive to Mexico on the Mexico City–New Orleans route. His information was based on a telephone conversation with Mr. Barringer.

I told Mr. Deak that inasmuch as this was a departure from the agreed government position which had been cleared with President Truman,[5] it seemed to me it was a matter which should be taken up with the White House. In this connection I recalled that at the meeting in Mr. Murphy's office sometime ago I inquired of Mr. Nyrop what the maximum U.S. concession would be on Mexico's desire for a monopoly on the Mexico City–New Orleans route, and that Mr. Nyrop had replied in Mr. Murphy's presence that he would not agree to giving Mexico more than a three years' head start.

The second point I raised with Mr. Deak was that this would be a departure from long standing CAB policy, which would complicate our civil air relations with other Latin American states and that we would have to insist on equal treatment for other Latin American countries.

Mr. Deak telephoned again in a few minutes and said he had been in touch with Mexico City since our conversation and that Mr. Barringer had told him that Mr. Stowe had personally cleared the monopoly question with President Truman before his departure for Mexico City. Mr. Deak also said that he had learned that the CAB had already telegraphed its concurrence with the delegation's recom-

[1] Sent as telegram 734, not printed.

[2] Not attached to the source text.

[3] A delegation from the United States, led by Mr. Nyrop, who was designated chairman, and Mr. Stowe, conducted negotiations concerning an air transport agreement with Mexican representatives at Mexico City, December 10–19, 1951. A detailed report and documentary record of the negotiations is filed under decimal file number 611.1294/12–1951.

[4] Francis Deak, Chief, Aviation Policy Staff, Office of Transport and Communications Policy.

[5] In a memorandum for the files, dated November 23, 1951, Mr. Barringer noted in part that he had been informed by Mr. Nyrop that the latter had received a telephone call from Mr. Murphy at Key West, Florida, "stating that the President had approved the basis of an exchange of air routes with Mexico as outlined in the Civil Aeronautics Board's letter to the State Department dated October 12." (611.1294/11–751) mendation and that a reply from State was urgently required since they were about to go into another meeting with the Mexicans.

I told Mr. Deak that under these circumstances I would reluctantly interpose no objection, although I foresaw that this would create difficulties for us, including difficulties in our negotiations with the Colombians and Venezuelans. Mr. Deak then proposed that we send a telegram which in effect would state that we concurred in the delegation's recommendation, and I said that I would prefer that the record show exactly how this thing had developed, and thereupon drafted a telegram, a copy of which is attached.

This morning I called Mr. Deak to find out if he had any additional information, and he said that while there was no report from Mexico City, he had learned from Mr. Nyrop's secretary that Mr. Nyrop had reported that "the next forty-eight hours would be critical" which caused Mr. Deak to suppose that even with this concession the Mexicans might not be agreeable. Mr. Deak had also heard from the same source that there would be no other departures from the position which had been agreed upon, although he did not know whether the maximum or minimum concessions would be made. Apparently the delegation plans to return on Thursday, December 20. In the meantime I have asked Gerry to send down a telegram asking for a telegraphic report of what is going on in Mexico.

611.1294/12–1851 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Mexico (O'Dwyer) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL MEXICO CITY, December 18, 1951—6 p. m.

815. From Barringer. Re Deptel 743, Dec 17.[1] Emb and del agreed current reports aviation negots prior today undesirable as entirely impossible give accurate complete picture any one time owing complex fluid nature conversations. Talks raised ministerial levels at noon after virtual breakdown on level Dir Civil Aviation. Min Communications Garcia Lopez partially admitting importance US concessions outlined three serious differences remaining:

1. Nonstop Los Angeles–Mex.
2. Mex desire exclusive San Antonio.
3. US request New York–New Orleans–Mex.

Latter solved by US offer drop back permanently Atlanta–Birmingham. During further mtgs Lopez yesterday withdrew request San Antonio but insisted on nonstop exclusive LA–Mex pleading US must appreciate and concede due serious difficult domestic Mex polit problem involved. Martin Perez disclosed this decision followed three hour mtg with Aleman.

[1] Not printed.

US del gave negative answer today stating own domestic and intl aviation problems insurmountable. Moreover, US now has similar most difficult problems in possibility of continuing indefinitely de facto monopoly extant in current exchange of permit outside over-all agreement. Lopez today suggested USDel return Wash and persuade US Govt accept final Mex proposal.

In order put ball in Mex court and give Stowe another opportunity see Aleman, USDel kept door open by suggesting Mex Govt reconsider. Lopez agreed another mtg tomorrow.

Follows routed scheds tentatively agreed. All with nonstop exception US route Nr. 1.

a. US routes:

1. Los Angeles–La Paz–Mex City.
2. Wash–Dallas–San Antonio–Mex City.
3. Houston–Brownsville–Tampico–Mex City–Tapachula and beyond.
5. Wash–Atlanta and/or Birmingham–Mex City.
6. Miami–Havana–Merida and beyond.

b. Mex routes:

1. Mex City–Guadalajara–Mazatlan–Hermosillo–Mexicali–Los Angeles.
2. Hermosillo–Nogales, Arizona.
3. Chihuahua–Cananea–Nogales, Arizona.
4. Casas Grandes–El Paso.
6. Torreon–Monterrey–Laredo, Texas–San Antonio.
7. Mex City–Monterrey–Laredo, Texas–San Antonio.
8. Monterrey–Brownsville.
9. Mex City–New Orleans.
10. Mex City–Miami and beyond.

Dept will note above routes within instrs as amended Deptel 734, Dec 14 [2] except Nrs. 2, 3 and 8 previously cleared with CAB by Chairman Nyrop. [Barringer.]

O'DWYER

[2] Not printed, but see footnote 1, supra.

611.1294/12-2851

Memorandum by the Deputy Director of the Office of Transport and Communications Policy (Barringer)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] January 3, 1952.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE MEXICAN GOVERNMENT FOR AN AIR TRANSPORT AGREEMENT DECEMBER 10 TO DECEMBER 19, 1951

Summary of the Activities of Mr. David Stowe and Ambassador O'Dwyer in Conjunction with the Negotiations

As a necessary supplement to the summaries of the various conferences between the United States Delegation and the Mexican Delegation which have been made the subject of summary reports, the following general account of the conversations held between Mr. Stowe and Ambassador O'Dwyer on one hand and President Aleman and the Foreign Minister on the other hand are recorded as they were summarized by Mr. Stowe and the Ambassador in later conversations with the US Delegation.

[Here follows a summary of the discussion Mr. Stowe and Ambassador O'Dwyer had with President Alemán on December 12.]

Following Conference IX held at 12 noon, December 18, Chairman Nyrop and Mr. Barringer felt that it would be desirable for Mr. Stowe to seek a second audience with President Aleman which Mr. Stowe was able to accomplish the following morning. During these conversations with President Aleman, he again repeated his appreciation of the major concessions made by the United States but placed new emphasis upon the importance to Mexican aviation of continuation of the exclusive rights enjoyed by CMA between Los Angeles and Mexico City. He repeated the arguments made by the Minister of Transportation and Public Works, Garcia Lopez, to the effect that protection of the Mexican carrier on this route was a matter of political essentiality to Mexico and an important consideration in the present and future of Mexican civil aviation. He stated he would be glad to have an American carrier operate from Los Angeles through El Paso to Mexico City or from Los Angeles through La Paz (with a required stop) to Mexico City but that he could not consider equal competitive opportunity on the nonstop operation between Los Angeles and Mexico City. Mr. Stowe explained to him that President Truman could not accept an arrangement of this sort as it not only violated principles to which the United States had unalterably adhered in its civil aviation relations with other countries but it was also politically impossible from the point of view of the domestic politics of the United States. In response to a suggestion by Mr. Stowe, President Aleman then stated that if the United States Delegation were to indicate to his Minister of Communications that the United States would accept a route San Diego, La Paz, Mexico City (with non-stop rights) with the understanding that the governments would consult after a few years on the possibility of changing the point of departure from San Diego to Los Angeles, he would instruct his Minister to accept this proposal. As this was the only unresolved question between the Delegations, this suggestion, if accepted by the United States would result in the agreement that he and President Truman were so anxious to obtain.

Following this meeting with President Aleman, Mr. Stowe and Ambassador O'Dwyer urged the United States Delegation to make this proposal tentatively to Minister Garcia Lopez at the meeting held at 12:30 on December 19, emphasizing, of course, that approval of the United States Government would have to be obtained. Mr. Barringer suggested that this additional concession not be suggested even on an ad referendum basis unless it were coupled with withdrawal of the Mexico City–New Orleans exclusive concession previously made. This agreed tactic was followed as reported in the notes on Conference XII.

During Conference XII it became apparent that Minister Garcia Lopez had not received or was not acting on the instructions that President Aleman had given Foreign Minister Tello to pass on to Minister Lopez. When this was reported to Ambassador O'Dwyer and Mr. Stowe, the Ambassador attempted to get the Foreign Minister on the telephone and, failing to do so, waited on him at his office. During his conversation with the Foreign Minister, the latter entirely dissembled the conversation held earlier with President Aleman by indicating it was not his understanding that the President had made any suggestion involving a non-stop right for a US carrier from San Diego to Mexico City, that it was still the Mexican position that neither Los Angeles nor San Diego should be served by an American carrier on direct flights to Mexico City. It can only be assumed that President Aleman had made an offer which he regretted and was later persuaded to have his subordinates withdraw.

Following a further meeting between members of the Delegation, Mr. Stowe and the Ambassador, Mr. Stowe determined to obtain clearance for the additional concession from the White House and reported that President Truman would be willing to make the concession if the Civil Aeronautics Board concurred. Mr. Barringer undertook to obtain a clearance from the Department of State on the basis that he personally did not recommend the concession unless it were coupled with the withdrawal of the New Orleans concession. Chairman Nyrop then attempted to obtain clearance from the Civil Aeronautics Board. In view of the fact that the Civil Aeronautics Board did not concur, it was decided that Chairman Nyrop would call Minister Lopez at 7 o'clock as previously agreed and seek a final audience with the Minister in order to terminate the negotiations. This final meeting is recorded as Conference XIII.[1]

[1] A copy of the record of Conference XIII, at which the United States and Mexican representatives agreed to suspend the negotiations, is attached to the source text, but it is not printed.

NICARAGUA

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND NICARAGUA

611.17/4–1751

Policy Statement Prepared in the Department of State

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] April 17, 1951.

NICARAGUA

A. OBJECTIVES

Our objectives in Nicaragua are:

1. To maintain and develop Nicaraguan support for United States foreign policies and for measures taken for the security of the United States and of the hemisphere; [1]

2. To seek more effective and continuing support by cultivating among the Nicaraguan people a genuine understanding of our policies and of the community of interests of Nicaragua and the United States;

3. To encourage in Nicaragua a spirit of self-reliance and self-help for the achievement of orderly democratic growth and of economic advancement;

4. To foster and protect legitimate United States interests in Nicaragua.

Background Information

By virtue of his position as Chief of the National Guard, and through his two terms in the presidency, General Anastasio Somoza has authoritatively ruled Nicaragua since 1936. During this period he has been able to render ineffectual all significant opposition and has treated the national domain as if it were his private estate. His régime has been characterized by consistent cooperation with the United States and support for our policies except those, in general, which, if put into practice in Nicaragua, might weaken his hold on the country. President Somoza, and Nicaraguans generally, have also demonstrated a proclivity to look to the United States for leadership in the solution of their social, economic, and political problems. This attitude of dependency seems to result in part from the past United States military occupation of Nicaragua, our past supervision of elections and the customs administration there, and from Nicaragua's geographic proximity to and economic dependence on the United States.

[1] For documentation concerning United States policy with respect to hemisphere defense and related matters, see pp. 985 ff.

B. POLICIES

1. To maintain and further develop Nicaragua's support and friendship, it is our policy faithfully to respect the sovereignty of Nicaragua, to observe strictly our agreements with that country and to avoid intervention, direct or implied, into its purely domestic affairs. We consult with Nicaraguan officials when appropriate in the formulation and implementation of policies affecting the interests of both countries, and give full consideration to Nicaragua's legitimate interests in our day-to-day relations. We endeavor to develop Nicaraguan interest in the broader aspects of world and hemispheric affairs as well as a sense of international responsibility by encouraging her full participation in the United Nations and in the Organization of American States.

2. Effective and continued support of our policies by Nicaragua, however, will not be insured by the fact that the present incumbent, President Somoza, recognizes the community of interests which exists between our two countries. If we are to assure the cooperation of succeeding Nicaraguan regimes, the people of Nicaragua must come to understand what our policy objectives are and that their interests, as well as our own, may be best secured by Nicaraguan cooperation and support. It is our policy to seek this popular understanding through a program of information, education, and cultural exchange. To this end, we maintain a large library and a cultural institute in Nicaragua. Also, an information program is carried out by the Embassy's Public Affairs Section and a project for the exchange of students is sponsored.

3. A solid basis for continued satisfactory relations with Nicaragua, depending on a broad and popular understanding of and support for our policies, however, cannot be obtained so long as the country remains in a relatively primitive state of development with but a few people participating actively and fruitfully in the political and economic life of the country. There must, then, be political and social advancement through a democratic evolution suitable to the background and environmental conditions in Nicaragua as well as an economic program which will bring steady improvement in the standard of living of the majority of the people.

While many Nicaraguans profess a desire to see democracy practiced in their country, few have shown a genuine willingness to make personal efforts or sacrifices to bring this about. It is necessary, as a condition to democratic and economic achievement, to encourage in Nicaragua the development of a spirit of self-reliance on the part of the people who must be brought to recognize that the problems involved are their own and that progress cannot be imposed upon them from the outside, but must be achieved through their own efforts.

While it is our policy to provide incentives, encouragement and assistance for political and economic progress in Nicaragua, we endeavor to do so without prejudice to the development there of an attitude of self-help. On every appropriate occasion we seek, while avoiding intervention into internal affairs, to make clear to Nicaragua that the United States not only practices representative government, but also preaches it. We, therefore, encourage Nicaragua to form and to give participation in government to opposition parties as well as to permit a free expression of opinion and to make a genuine effort to effect agreement on points at issue by democratic processes. Our policies with respect to the dissemination of information, the propagation of education and the promotion of cultural understanding are designed to be effective also in the execution of our policy and the promotion of democratic progress. Because of restrictions in Nicaragua on the freedom of access to information and because of the special need for education, these programs are of particular importance. The lending library which is supported in Nicaragua by the United States is used by a great number of people and is the only institution of its kind in the country.

Nicaragua's economy is basically agricultural and its chief exports are coffee (about 45%), gold (about 25%), cotton (about 8%), and forest products (about 4%). Approximately 75% of all exports are sold in the United States. Since agriculture offers the best hope of an immediate improvement in the low living standards of the people, it is our policy to give special encouragement to the further development and diversification of agriculture. The Nicaraguan Government has recently signed a General Technical Assistance Agreement [2] and technical experts are now operating in the country on a cooperative basis in a wide number of related fields.

The lack of adequate transportation facilities is an impediment to Nicaragua's economic growth. We have given financial and technical aid in construction work on the Rama Road in accordance with a commitment [3] made by President Roosevelt. We have helped in the construction of the Nicaraguan section of the Inter-American Highway. Subject to the necessary appropriations by Congress, our policy is to continue our assistance on these projects.

---

[2] For text of the Point IV General Agreement for Technical Cooperation between the United States and Nicaragua, signed at Managua, December 23, 1950, and entered into force on the same date, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 2168, or United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), vol. 1, p. 906.

[3] The commitment was embodied in an exchange of notes at Washington dated April 8 and 18, 1942, which entered into force on the latter date; for text, see TIAS No. 2229, or 2 UST 722. For documentation on the United States commitment, see Foreign Relations, 1942, vol. VI, pp. 568–576, passim.

It is our policy to encourage the utilization of private United States capital on a non-discriminatory basis in the financing of development projects. Requests for financial assistance will be considered by United States agencies according to the criteria of economic justification and the availability of private capital.

Another impediment to Nicaragua's economic development is the lack of a more efficient and honest administration of national affairs. Nicaragua has a foreign debt in excess of $6,000,000 and an internal debt in excess of $8,000,000. It is sometimes tardy in servicing its debts. Nicaragua has also been confronted with an adverse balance of payments which has resulted in a shortage of dollar exchange and, consequently, in a backlog of pending dollar remittances to pay for imports. The country has attempted to meet this situation by adopting the exchange rate measures recommended by a mission of the International Monetary Fund in late 1950. The Government appears to be making an effort to administer the exchange rate measures fairly and effectively. It is our policy to encourage a sound approach to these problems and to support, in appropriate ways, Nicaraguan efforts to achieve administrative and financial stability.

Nicaragua is one of seven American Republics which have acceded to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.[4] We encourage the government to observe the provisions of that instrument in the conduct of its foreign commercial relations.

4. In order to foster and protect legitimate United States interests in Nicaragua, it is our policy to encourage the maintenance there of an atmosphere conducive to the investment of foreign capital on mutually advantageous terms. To this end, we have, in addition to offering protection in appropriate instances, initiated discussions looking toward the negotiation with Nicaragua of an interim Customs Agreement,[5] a Consular Convention, and a Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Economic Development.

C. RELATIONS WITH OTHER COUNTRIES

Due principally to propaganda attacks on General Somoza by the left-wing Guatemalan Government of ex-President Arevalo,[6] and Nicaragua's distrust of Guatemala's intentions, no diplomatic relations exist between these two countries. Nicaragua has to a lesser degree the same mistrust for the Cuban Government. Similar tension with the

[4] For text of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), concluded at Geneva, October 30, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, January 1, 1948, see TIAS No. 1700, or 61 Stat. (pts. 5 and 6).

[5] By an exchange of notes at Washington dated December 3, 1951, and October 9, 1952, which entered into force on the latter date, the United States and Nicaragua concluded an Interim Agreement relating to customs exemptions of diplomatic and consular officials; for text, see TIAS No. 2708, or 3 UST (pt. 4) 5154.

[6] Juan José Arévalo Bermejo, President of Guatemala, 1945–1951.

Costa Rican Government has been dissipated to some extent as the result of Ulate's[7] replacement of Figueres[8] as head of the Costa Rican state, although the Costa Rican Government and its people still distrust Somoza. Should Figueres or some other individual of similar political views return to power in Costa Rica during the rule of Somoza, there would almost certainly be a deterioration of Nicaragua's relations with its southern neighbor.

Although General Somoza mistrusts Honduras' current Government and Panama's President Arias,[9] Nicaragua maintains friendly relations with these two countries, as well as with El Salvador. There has been some evidence of Nicaragua's desire to arrange a close political cooperation with the latter country.

It is our policy to promote friendly relations between Nicaragua and her neighbors in Middle America by counselling strict observance of all commitments undertaken by Nicaragua in connection with her membership in the Organization of American States and the United Nations. Furthermore, we endeavor to keep ourselves currently advised of developments so that, when necessary, we may bring our influence as well as that of the international organizations, to bear in time to prevent disturbances. It is also our policy with respect to the sale of arms to Nicaragua to discourage excessive purchases. By doing so, we hope to minimize economic problems resulting from the maintenance of excessive military establishments by small states as well as to preserve a political balance of power in the area and to discourage any spirit of aggression.

While Nicaragua recognized the U.S.S.R., it has never exchanged diplomatic representatives with that country and there is no immediate problem of local communism in Nicaragua.

Nicaragua and other Central American countries maintain separate national governments, separate military establishments, and separate tariff structures. As a result, the over-all cost to all governments is increased and funds needed for economic development are dissipated in this duplication. Accordingly it is our policy not to impede efforts to arrive at a satisfactory formula for Central American political or economic union, but to recognize that union can come only by agreement of the interested states, and that, like democracy, it cannot be imposed from without.

D. POLICY EVALUATION

We have achieved our immediate objective of enlisting and keeping the support of the Somoza régime for our foreign, economic, and [7] Otilio Ulate Blanco, President of Costa Rica.

[8] José Figueres Ferrer.
[9] Arnulfo Arias Madrid.

political policies. The Nicaraguan Government has cooperated consistently in all efforts leading to hemispheric defense and few Latin American states are more inclined to our views, particularly in respect to issues in the United Nations, the Organization of American States and other International Organizations. Nicaragua has effectively supported the free world's resistance to aggression in Korea and has solidly aligned itself with the United States in demonstrating an awareness of the threat of international Communism and the necessity to resist it both internally and internationally.

Little progress has been made toward creating among the people of Nicaragua a genuine understanding of our policies or of achieving noteworthy advancement in the institution there of democratic practices or in the betterment of living standards. These are essentially long-term objectives, however, since they depend upon progress in education, the acquisition of technical skills, the formation of adequate capital, the improvement of health and sanitation, the development of initiative, the overcoming of venality by officeholders, and so forth. A good beginning has been made in the institution of our cooperative programs in the fields of health, agriculture, education and so forth, and the Nicaraguan Government has responded enthusiastically with monetary and material support. At this stage, the most that can be said is that the initial efforts have been made, and we have received evidences of small but measurable good work. Aside from these programs which should serve to provide a more satisfactory basis for democratic political development there is little of a positive nature which the United States can do toward hastening such development. In fact, it is necessary to guard against wishful endeavors too rapidly to emplant democracy where the ground is not yet fertile or to seek model institutions there after our own pattern. We have, however, and with some success, due to the prestige and moral stature of the United States, employed our influence in opposition to practices in Nicaragua which were repugnant to the concepts of human and individual dignity.

Problems with respect to United States investments in Nicaragua are rare, and our protection policies, when it has been necessary for us to express ourselves in matters affecting United States interests, have been successful. Nicaragua welcomes United States capital and provides favorable conditions for investment.

547-842—79——97

NAC Files, Lot 60 D 137 [1]

Minutes of Meeting No. 177 of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems, Held at Washington, May 24, 1951

SECRET

[Here follows a list of those present (20).]

1. Proposed Loans to Nicaragua

Mr. Glendinning [2] said that both the Export-Import Bank and the International Bank had requested consideration of a $600,000 loan to Empresa de Luz y Fuerza Electrica, a government-owned corporation, to expand light and power facilities. The Export-Import Bank had been exploring this project with the Nicaraguans for some time. The International Bank had also expressed an interest in this particular project. In addition, the International Bank had requested the advice of the Council with respect to credits to Nicaragua of about $1 million for agricultural machinery, $3.5 million for highway construction, and $500,000 for grain storage facilities. On the technical side no questions were raised in the Staff Committee so far as capacity to repay or the character of the projects was concerned. The loans appeared to be good loans and well within the capacity of Nicaragua to service (NAC Document No. 1145).[3]

Mr. Glendinning added that the matter was being brought before the Council because of the question as to whether it would be more appropriate for the Export-Import Bank or the International Bank to make the electric power loan to Nicaragua in light of the general principles the Council had agreed upon with respect to the areas of operation of the two banks (See minutes of Meetings No. 172 and 173, and NAC Document No. 1122).[4]

Mr. Gaston [5] said that this application was made to the Export-Import Bank by the light and power company in September 1950, and the Bank had had it under consideration since then. There had been some delays in getting the necessary information from Nicaragua. The item had for several months appeared on the Bank's monthly list of pending applications, which goes to the International Bank, without protest or question. The item had been discussed with the staff of the International Bank by the staff of the Export-Import Bank, and the

[1] Master file of the documents of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems for the years 1945–1958, as maintained by the Bureau of Economic Affairs in the Department of State and preserved as item 70 of Federal Records Center Accession 71 A 6682.

[2] C. Dillon Glendinning, Secretary of the NAC.

[3] Not printed.

[4] For NAC Doc. 1122, April 12, 1951, see vol. I, p. 1596. For NAC Minutes No. 172, April 17, 1951, and No. 173, April 20, 1951, see ibid., pp. 1599 and 1615.

[5] Herbert E. Gaston, Chairman, Board of Directors, Export-Import Bank of Washington.

International Bank representatives had stated that they were not interested. The International Bank had come into the picture only after the loan request had come to the NAC for consideration.

Mr. Gaston continued that this was the type of loan which was characteristically an Export-Import Bank type of credit. It involved financing the sale of a specific piece of American machinery, namely, a Diesel electric unit manufactured by the Nordberg Manufacturing Company, which had contracted with Nicaragua to provide this unit to enable it to carry out an expansion program. It was not a general improvement loan. It had never occurred to the Export-Import Bank that it would be considered as an International Bank loan. The International Bank had shifted its ground a couple of times. The IBRD had first raised the question that this loan would be in excess of Nicaragua's capacity to repay, taking into consideration the new loans the IBRD was contemplating making, which were worked up after the Export-Import Bank loan. The IBRD had later come to the conclusion the loan was within Nicaragua's capacity to repay, but that since Nicaragua was a member country it should be handled by the International Bank. Mr. Gaston concluded that he did not think the Council would want to make decisions which would completely debar the Export-Import Bank from making loans in IBRD member countries, from making loans in Latin America, or from carrying out its statutory function of assisting American interests in selling abroad.

Mr. Martin [6] said that the International Bank had no intention of seeking decisions of the type Mr. Gaston had mentioned. The purpose of the Council's discussion in the two previous meetings was to establish the point that the International Bank was a primary source of development lending, unless strategic reasons or special policy considerations would make it more appropriate for the Export-Import Bank, or the United States Government as such, to undertake the financing. The International Bank thought it had been agreed that such was the general policy. If that was not the policy the International Bank would like to raise it for further discussion in the Council.

Mr. Martin continued that on the historical ground that consideration of the loan had started before the Council's action was taken, and regardless of misunderstandings between the staffs of the Bank, the management of the International Bank was perfectly willing to withdraw its request. The reason for wanting the loan was that the International Bank did not feel this was a strategic matter, and since it was making a loan for three items and this could be related to them as a part of an over-all development program the IBRD felt it would be appropriate for this loan to be made by the International Bank. Unless someone wished some discussion of the strategic importance of this loan he was willing on behalf of the International Bank to withdraw the request.

[6] William McChesney Martin, Jr., Chairman, Board of Governors, Federal Reserve System.

Mr. Gaston commented that Mr. Martin's position was that the Export-Import Bank should not make loans abroad except those which had strategic implications. He did not interpret the Council's action as carrying such implication. The Export-Import Bank still had the function of making loans to promote the export and import trade of the United States, and he thought that the action of the NAC to the effect that in the case of development loans there should be primary recourse to the International Bank was not in conflict with that function.

Mr. Thorp [7] expressed the view that the basis on which the Director of the International Bank had stated his position was essentially one that the Council could accept. The Council had accepted the idea that the International Bank was the bank of first resort in development lending, and he gathered that that issue was not being raised here. The Executive Director was saying that in view of the history of this loan he would not want to challenge it on the basis of the general principle that the International Bank was the bank of first resort.

Mr. Thorp added that while he did not think it was necessary to consider strategic considerations in this instance, it was important to the United States Government that this loan be made. The strategic significance was that this electricity was needed to assure proper lighting of an airport and also in connection with the possible expansion of the use of the airport in connection with protection of the Canal Zone. He added that he did not think this needed to be given consideration in the context in which the Council was considering the matter, but it was an additional fact which had some bearing on the problem.

Mr. Gaston said he would not want to let the matter rest on strategic grounds. Mr. Thorp said he was not putting it on that basis.

Mr. Martin observed that Mr. Gaston apparently did not agree with what Mr. Martin believed to be the action of the Council on this matter. It was important, as the Administration approached Congress on the proposed legislation for fiscal 1952, that it be clearly understood what the position of the Council was and perhaps there should be another meeting on this question.

Mr. Gaston commented that if Export-Import Bank were limited to loans having strategic significance it would go a long way to nullify the Act of Congress [8] under which the Bank operated. He could not accept that concept.

---

[7] Willard L. Thorp, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs.

[8] Apparent reference to the Export-Import Bank Act (Public Law 173), approved July 31, 1945, as amended; for text, see 59 Stat. 527.

The Chairman stated that this was not the basis on which the Council was presently considering the loan. The International Bank had withdrawn its request. He understood that it was the sense of the Council that in the proposed action the reference to consideration of the Empresa loan by the U.S. Executive Director of the International Bank would be deleted. The Chairman then inquired what the sense of the meeting was with respect to paragraph 2 of the action concerning the three loans of about $5 million by the International Bank. No objection was expressed, and this item was approved.

The Chairman said that the Council would have an early meeting on this matter after careful review of the action taken in the past, and consultations with Council members.

Action:

The following action was taken (Action No. 469):

1. The National Advisory Council approves consideration by the Export-Import Bank of a credit of $600,000 to the Nicaraguan Empresa de Luz y Fuerza Electrica, S.A., for electric power equipment. It is understood that the credit would have a maturity of approximately ten years, and an interest rate of about 4 percent.[9]

2. The National Advisory Council advises the United States Executive Director of the International Bank that it approves his consideration, in the Board of Directors of the Bank, of loans to Nicaragua in the following approximate amounts: (a) $1 million for agricultural machinery (b) $3.5 million for highway construction and (c) $500,000 for grain storage facilities. It is understood that the loan for farm machinery would be for 7 years, and the other two loans for 10 years, and that the interest rate applicable to all three loans would be about 4 percent.[10]

---

[9] On May 24, 1951, the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank authorized a credit of $600,000 to the Empresa de Luz y Fuerza Electrica to purchase materials, equipment, and services in the United States for the purpose of expanding its production of electricity. For further information, see Export-Import Bank of Washington, Twelfth Semiannual Report to Congress For the Period January–June 1951 (Washington, 1951), pp. 15, 38.

[10] In 1951 the Board of Directors of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development approved three loans for Nicaragua: (1) on June 7 the Board authorized a loan of $3,500,000 to the Nicaraguan Government to help finance the cost of importing equipment and materials for highway construction; (2) also on June 7 the Board authorized a loan of $1,200,000 to the Banco Nacional de Nicaragua for the purchase in the United States of agricultural machinery and spare parts; and (3) on October 29 the Board authorized a loan of $550,000 for the construction of grain storage facilities. For additional information on these loans, see International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, Sixth Annual Report to the Board of Governors, 1950–1951 (Washington, 1951), pp. 38–39, and Seventh Annual Report to the Board of Governors, 1951–1952 (Washington, 1952), p. 33.

717.58/6–1951

The Ambassador in Nicaragua (Waynick) to the Department of State

SECRET MANAGUA, June 19, 1951.

No. 1092

Ref: Department's Instruction No. 67, June 5, 1951.[1]

Subject: The Embassy's Attitude Toward United States Military Mission.

In your communication above referred to, the views and recommendations of this Embassy were invited concerning a proposed U.S. Army Mission to Nicaragua. With the communication you sent me a copy of a memorandum [1] to the Department of State on this subject signed by Major General Maxwell D. Taylor, GSC, Assistant Chief of Staff, in which a favorable attitude toward the Mission by the Department of the Army is indicated.

From time to time responsible officers in the military establishment here have indicated to our Attachés and to me an interest in the restoration of a U.S. Army Mission. On one occasion the President's son, Colonel Anastasio Somoza, Jr., was quoted as saying that a mission was not formally requested because the Nicaraguan military authorities did not desire to risk an embarrassing refusal.

About three months ago our Army Attaché located in El Salvador, Colonel Samuel P. Walker, in a report through channels, recommended re-establishment of a military mission in Nicaragua. Colonel Walker inquired at the time as to my position in the matter. I told him that I would concur in his recommendation, provided he would include in his report that in a choice between a military mission and a resident attaché for the Embassy, I would elect the latter. In 1950, when this Embassy was deprived of its resident Military Attaché, I protested on the theory that the Attaché was needed for contacts in Nicaragua. Col. Walker included this reference to my preference when he forwarded his recommendation.

Last night I asked President Somoza how he would feel about the restoration of a military mission here and he replied immediately that he would welcome it.

Measuring up to your request for the views and recommendations of the Embassy, I offer these observations:

The political opposition to Somoza in Nicaragua harps upon the charge that the United States created the Nicaraguan Army which, according to this opposition, is the force that has kept Somoza in power and continues to support him in power. Repeatedly oppositionists have called upon this Embassy to help break the chains which they claim we forged to bind them under Somoza domination. It is possible that restoration of a military mission would intensify this complaint and be interpreted as our lining up more strongly with the Somoza government for perpetuation of the alleged bondage. This is the sole political objection I see to restoration of the mission. I do not regard it as particularly important.

[1] Not printed.

I have opened conversations with President Somoza with a view to encouraging him to offer a battalion of Nicaraguans to the United Nations through our Department of Defense for service in Korea. These conversations have just started, the President is deliberating the matter and has promised to indicate his course of action to me in a few days. I suggested to him that he would face Communist protests and possibly some unfavorable press reaction, but I suggested the value of being the first government in Central America to make an offer of military aid to the United Nations. We discussed the fact that a battalion of 1080 men from Nicaragua would be equal, populations considered, to about ten times the contribution Colombia is making. I took the position that nothing less than a battalion under a major would be a satisfactory unit.

The President is intrigued by the idea. He unquestionably would like to proceed with it and he informed me that he would discuss the matter with the leader of the opposition party and with some of his key officers with a view to decision. If he decides to make the offer, it probably will be submitted to the Nicaraguan Congress.[2] In the event of such an offer I believe that a military mission should be sent here immediately. In any event the net of my opinion is that the Department of the Army should be encouraged to assign the mission to Nicaragua.[3]

CAPUS M. WAYNICK

---

[2] As of January 15, 1952, the Nicaraguan Government made no offer of ground forces for service in Korea to the United Nations; see United Nations, Yearbook of the United Nations, 1951 (New York, 1952), p. 249.

[3] In a memorandum dated July 13, 1951, not printed, enclosing a copy of the instant despatch, the Special Assistant to the Chief of the Acquisition and Distribution Division, Office of Intelligence Research (Anderson), informed the Chief of the Latin American Branch, Office of the Assistant Chief of Staff, G–3, Department of the Army (Colonel Somerville), that the Department of State concurred with Ambassador Waynick's recommendations concerning the proposed United States Army Mission to Nicaragua (717.58/7–1351). No agreement for such a mission was concluded in 1951.

717.56/10–1151

The Chief of the Lend-Lease and Surplus Property Staff (Murphy) to the Chief of the Division of Investments, Bureau of Accounts, Treasury Department (Barnes)

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, October 11, 1951.

MY DEAR MR. BARNES: Telegraphic information from the American Embassy in Managua, Nicaragua, states that the Nicaraguan

Lend-Lease Settlement Arrangement has been formalized under date of September 26, 1951.[1]

As soon as the relevant documents have been received, the usual mimeographed copies will be prepared by this Department for limited official distribution. In the meantime, you may be informed that the settlement is for $516,000 which amount has been arrived at by reducing the amount of the "contingent account" balance of $4,768.78 by $528.94; therefore, and in order that the records of the Treasury Department may properly reflect this adjustment of the account, you are hereby authorized to charge off the sum of $528.94 against "contingent accounts receivable" and thereby reduce the balance due to $4,239.84 which, added to the residual balance due on the "treaty account", makes $516,000.

The settlement terms, which require payment in full in three years, permit the acceptance of Nicaraguan cordobas instead of dollars at the option of the United States. The first payment, due October 1, 1951, is for $114,200 with scheduled quarterly payments thereafter in the amount of about $33,483 each. The conversion rate is fixed at seven cordobas to the dollar, or better, in case of a fall in the cordoba rate.

Out of the first payment, when made, the "contingent account" first should be liquidated ($4,239.84) with the remainder credited to "treaty account", thus leaving the net balance due at $401,800 on the latter.

By virtue of the conclusion of this settlement, and dependent upon the early receipt of the initial installment, the Nicaraguan lend-lease position may be deemed "current". Hence this Department no longer will be interested in the withholding of any refunds or credits which either have accrued or may accrue to the benefit of the Government of Nicaragua insofar as the lend-lease interest is concerned.[2]

Sincerely yours, F[RANCIS] T. MURPHY

[1] The exchange of notes dated September 26, 1951, at Managua, which constituted the Nicaraguan Lend-Lease Settlement Arrangement, were transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 296, from Managua, October 13, 1951, not printed (717.56/10–1351).

[2] Documents in Department of State decimal file 717.56 through 1954 show that Nicaragua made all scheduled payments under the Lend-Lease Settlement Arrangement, and that the thirteenth and final payment was made on September 29, 1954.

Editorial Note

By an exchange of notes dated November 26 and December 12, 1951, at Managua, the United States and Nicaragua concluded an agreement, which entered into force on the latter date, providing for the free movement of military aircraft of each country through the airspace of the other. The notes were transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 450, from Managua, December 19, 1951, not printed (611.1794/12–1951). For text, see TIAS No. 2460, or 3 UST (pt. 2) 2863.

PANAMA

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND PANAMA[1]

719.5/2–2851

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Chargé in Panama (Wise)[2]

SECRET — PANAMÁ, February 23, 1951.

MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION WITH HIS EXCELLENCY THE PRESIDENT OF PANAMA

FEBRUARY 23, 1951

GENERAL

A few days ago President Arias[3] expressed a desire to see me[4] informally and without the observance of the usual procedures of protocol. The Foreign Office was aware of this, and had expressed its approval of my making the appointment directly with the Presidencia. Accordingly, I called on the President at 11:00 o'clock this morning.

From reports to the Department already made by the Embassy, it will be seen that my call followed by only a few hours the President's radio speech to the nation on the evening of February 21[5] and of the change on February 22 of three members of his Cabinet. Upon greeting the President, I made no reference whatsoever to domestic matters, but did refer to the international aspects of his speech. I stated that the Embassy had been pleased, and I believed that the Department of State would be too, by his public reaffirmation of Panamá's devotion to the democratic cause and Hemisphere solidarity and by his pledge of personal support and of that of his country to the preservation of the free world. I specifically congratulated him upon his resolve to cooperate with the other American republics in the defense of the hemisphere and with the United States in the defense of the Panama Canal, which he said in reality meant the defense of Panamá. I also congrat-

[1] Continued from Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 969 ff.

[2] Transmitted to the Department of State as enclosure 1, under cover of despatch 670, February 28, 1951, not printed (719.5/2–2851).

[3] Arnulfo Arias Madrid, President of Panamá.

[4] Monnett B. Davis had been Ambassador to Panamá, but he had relinquished his duties there on January 23, 1951, after having been appointed Ambassador to Israel.

[5] President Arias' speech had been reported to the Department in despatch 653, from Panamá, February 23, 1951, not printed (719.00/2–2351).

ulated the President on the strong position he had taken against Communism by expressing his unreserved determination to thwart the efforts and influence of the Communists.

COMMUNISM

The President stated that occasionally he liked to talk directly with the Chief of the United States Mission to Panamá rather than to receive from third parties information of major interest to him. He said that today he had various matters that he wished to discuss, and that one of them was Communism, to which I had just made reference. He recalled that he had said to me on a previous occasion that Panamá would appreciate receiving from the Embassy advance notice of any emergency measures of significance to Panamá which the United States might take at home or in the Canal Zone. He said that unfortunately Panamá had received the impression that the United States at home had declared a state of alert rather than a state of national emergency, and that at any rate no significant state of alert or emergency had to date been declared in the Canal Zone. This, he said, made it practically impossible for him and his Foreign Minister [6] to work with the Cabinet, the National Assembly, and the public toward the preparation and promulgation of important measures which he very much would like to institute. He added that Panamá would wish to take emergency measures similar to whatever was done in the Canal Zone, but that rather than follow Zone action, it would prefer to take simultaneous and parallel action, providing coordination was possible. As it has turned out, he indicated, Panamá had been unable to take simultaneous measures or even to follow Zone action since to date there had been no emergency declared in the Zone.

In the above respect, the President referred particularly to Communism, and implied that if the Zone had taken public action against Communism, he would have been in a good position to influence the National Assembly toward enacting the Administration's proposed anti-Communist bill which the Assembly failed to consider before adjournment.

I told the President that I readily understood his position, and that I would make every effort to inform him when possible in advance of any proposed emergency measures in the Canal Zone. I explained that action at the highest levels often had to be taken without advance notice to anyone since all or part of the effectiveness of such action might depend upon it. I also observed that while the President's declaration of a state of emergency was operative throughout all areas under the jurisdiction of the United States, including the Canal Zone, the primary reason for such a declaration was to confer automatically upon the President powers he ordinarily did not possess and that it did not mean specific and defined measures by the United States would result or were mandatory.

[6] Carlos N. Brin.

CIVIL DEFENSE

The President stated that Panamá was quite anxious to prepare for the defense of its civilian population in case the international situation brought emergency of consequence to this area, and accordingly would appreciate guidance from us.

I explained that a civilian defense organization had been started in the Canal Zone (as I had previously informed the Foreign Minister) and that the Director of Civil Defense in the Canal Zone had made a special trip to Washington in order to obtain advice and instruction. I added that some weeks ago, a committee composed of representatives from the Canal, the Armed Forces, and the Embassy had met to consider civilian defense in this area and agreed to invite Panamá to name a representative to meet regularly as a member of a committee of four. I stated that this had been arranged with the Foreign Office. The President replied that his Government had named Antonio De Reuter, ex-Governor of the Province of Colón, as its civilian defense official representative. The President seemed to be unaware of the extent to which the joint civil defense committee had been organized, but said he would see that De Reuter attended the meetings. He expressed his gratitude to the Embassy for its interest and effectiveness in obtaining Panamanian representation on the civil defense committee and his pleasure over knowing that the committee has been meeting regularly to prepare actively for civilian defense.

CENSORSHIP

Dr. Arias mentioned the conversation which the Foreign Minister had had with him concerning our desire to negotiate an agreement covering censorship in case of an emergency, and asked if I would inform him of our interest in this regard.

I told the President that the United States Government had been greatly impressed with the cooperation which Panamá had extended to the United States in placing in effect important emergency measures immediately following the attack on Pearl Harbor in December 1941. I stated that the effectiveness of this cooperation came as a result of planning and agreements reached formally or informally prior to Pearl Harbor. I explained that it was my understanding that the Governor [7] of The Panama Canal and the Foreign Minister [8] informally had agreed some months before Pearl Harbor as to just what cooperative measures would be taken regarding censorship should [7] Brig. Gen. Glen E. Edgerton.

[8] Raúl de Roux.

such control become necessary. I added that, as he would recall, Ambassador Wilson [9] had also reached an agreement with the Foreign Minister through an exchange of notes for the arrest and detention of enemy aliens and others. This preplanning and agreement was so productive, I pointed out, that we were interested now in reaching certain understandings with the Government of Panamá about measures to be taken in case they became imperative. I told the President that I had left with the Foreign Minister the draft of a proposed memorandum of understanding on censorship, but that the Foreign Minister had some question about the existing authority of the Administration to enter into such an agreement. I said that the Embassy and the Canal Zone authorities were most anxious to reach now an understanding on censorship in order that on a minute's notice steps could be taken to impose adequate control. I emphasized that we were not particularly interested in negotiating a formal convention which would require legislative approval or registration with the United Nations, but rather a more or less informal memorandum of understanding on the subject under Article X of the 1936 Treaty.[10] At this point the President gave the impression that he would consider the United States proposal further with the Foreign Minister.[11]

MAINTENANCE OF STRUCTURES AT RÍO HATO [12]

The President remarked that he would appreciate receiving any information which I might be able to obtain concerning United States interest in Río Hato. The Panamanian Government, he said, was having some difficulty in keeping the public from tearing down the last of the structures remaining at Río Hato, and that he was interested in taking steps to prevent further demolition and to preserve as much of Río Hato as possible in case there were to be any need for Río Hato for defense purposes in the future. (The President obviously was endeavoring to obtain a clarification concerning probable requests from the United States for airfields and defense sites. There have appeared notices in the press of rumors that the Coco Solo Naval Base is to be reactivated. (These have since been officially confirmed.) A few days ago the Foreign Minister mentioned the visit of General Eichelberger [13] to the Canal Zone as a houseguest of General Morris,[14] and stated

[9] Edwin C. Wilson.

[10] Reference is to the general treaty of friendship and cooperation between the United States and Panamá, signed at Washington, March 2, 1936; for text, see Department of State Treaty Series (TS) No. 945, or 53 Stat. (pt. 3) 1807.

[11] A memorandum of understanding concerning the application of censorship controls during a state of emergency was signed at Panamá on July 11, 1951. A copy of the memorandum was transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 31, dated July 12, 1951, not printed (611.199/7–1251).

[12] A former defense site utilized by the United States which was located in the province of Coclé.

[13] Lt. Gen. Robert Lawrence Eichelberger (ret.).

[14] Lt. Gen. William Henry Harrison Morris, Jr., Commander in Chief, Caribbean.

that he had heard that Eichelberger had come to direct the assignment of many thousands of troops to Panamá. I commented to the Foreign Minister on the occasion of his inquiry that I had been told that Eichelberger was here merely on vacation.) I told the President that I had received no instructions concerning his inquiry, and that furthermore, I had no official reports of any nature on which to base a statement to him. I said, however, that I had heard certain military authorities express their personal opinion that in case of another war steps to be taken for the defense of the Panama Canal would be quite different from those considered necessary during the past war, and that in all likelihood, the number of troops assigned to the Canal Zone would be much less than before. I made no comment as to what might or might not be needed in the way of defense installations in the Republic of Panamá, but confined myself entirely to the statement that I had received no instructions.

SCREENING OF NATURALIZATION PAPERS

President Arias stated that until now there had been very little which Panamá could do by way of defense measures, but that he did want me to know that all requests of aliens for Panamanian naturalization were being most carefully investigated. He said he wanted to assure the United States of the efforts being made by Panamá to control the activities of aliens. I expressed my appreciation for this statement and the position which his Government had taken.

SPECIAL EXPORT CONSIDERATIONS FOR PANAMÁ

Dr. Arias stated that he and the Foreign Minister were very much concerned lest Panamá would not receive special consideration when the United States began a rigid control of exports. He felt that because of the uniqueness and closeness of United States–Panamá relations on the Isthmus, Panamá should be able to import from the United States on exactly the same conditions which are applied to the Canal Zone. It would help greatly, he explained, if Panamá could import many articles for resale to the Canal Zone, and promised that if Panamá were given special export consideration, there would be no exports or resale outside Panamá except to the Canal Zone. He inquired whether I had received any indication of exceptions which might be made to United States export regulations. I told the President that, as he would remember, during the last war the State Department had made every effort to obtain special consideration from the War Production Board, or its equivalent, for Panamá but that the representation for the most part had been most difficult and largely ineffective. I stated that in a crisis critical materials were in such short supply that very few exceptions to export regulations could be justified.

I added that I had recently seen in a circular instruction from the Department to our embassies that in case of dire emergency rigid controls without exception would necessarily have to be the policy on exports. I added that I would make his hopes for special consideration known to the State Department, which I was sure would be most sympathetic, but that I wanted to be realistic and would have to state that any special consideration for Panamá would at the best involve a great effort which I feared would be attended for the most part by unsuccessful results. The President said he could appreciate the situation, but would continue to reiterate his request for our most sympathetic understanding of Panamá's problems, particularly its economic difficulties.

THE REORGANIZATION OF THE PANAMA CANAL

Dr. Arias remarked that he had viewed with considerable concern the plans for the reorganization of the Panama Canal into a government corporation. He said that he did not wish to say much concerning it for in fact he was uninformed and lacked details about what the reorganization involved. He asked, however, that a study be made of the relation of the reorganization to existing treaty relationships, and hoped that in the process of turning the Panama Canal into a government corporation there would be no violations of the 1936 Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation. I told the President that I understood his concern, that it had been mentioned to me by the Foreign Minister, and that the treaty aspects of the proposed reorganization were being studied.

POINT IV PROGRAM

I reminded the President of various informal references he had made to me over the past year concerning his interest in knowing more about the possibility of organizing a development corporation in Panamá. The President's idea had been to form an organization in which the Panamanian Government and some financial institution in the United States could deposit funds to be made available as credits to local agriculture and industry in need.

I told President Arias that I had not forgotten his interest, and in fact had discussed it with Dr. Henry G. Bennett, the Administrator of the Point IV Program, and with Mr. David Rockefeller, Vice President of the Chase National Bank, both of whom, as he knew, had recently visited Panamá. I remarked that Dr. Bennett and Mr. Rockefeller had misgivings concerning the advisibility of trying to organize anything like a development corporation in a country of approximately 800,000 people. I commented on information which I had obtained concerning similar projects in Chile, Paraguay, Venezuela, and Puerto Rico, and stated that I had come to the conclusion after consultation with Dr. Bennett and Mr. Rockefeller that the best approach to Panamá's present difficulties appeared to be through the Point IV Program. I pointed out that before an effective program of development is to be undertaken, by whatever means, it should be preceded by thorough technical surveys and followed by the assignment for considerable periods of time to Panamá of technicians in various fields of agriculture, industry, and commerce and the training in Panamá and elsewhere of Panamanians to work in these specialties. This, I proposed, could best be obtained through the Point IV Program. I expressed my appreciation of Panamá's budgetary difficulties in participating to the fullest extent in the technical assistance program, but pointed out that in my opinion, Panamá would ultimately benefit greatly if it were to make a real sacrifice now, even to the point of carefully reviewing and rearranging its budget, if necessary, in order to take full advantage of United States cooperation under Point IV. I added that the completion of surveys and the assignment of technicians to Panamá and the training of Panamanians in technical fields in preparation for the scientific development of the country's economy should prepare the way for a determination of where sound economic opportunity exists in Panamá and thus finally encourage investment and more flexible lending of money from private or official financial institutions in foreign countries.

The President appeared to see more possibilities than he had previously recognized in the Point IV Program. However, in concluding my remarks on this phase of development in Panamá, I repeated a statement made by Dr. Bennett to the effect that Panamá might well work through Manuel Diez, its representative on the World Bank, to request that institution to send a representative, perhaps Orvis Smith, to Panamá for the purpose of discussing the pros and cons of the formation of a development corporation here.

In concluding my observations regarding the Point IV Program, I reviewed with the President some of the requests presented as probable Point IV projects. We mentioned that the basic agricultural agreement had been signed late in December,[15] and that the proposed health and sanitation agreement would be ready for signature early next week.[16] I took a few minutes to explain to the President that by way of cooperation on health and sanitation, we were prepared at the present time to contribute financially only on a one-to-one ratio, that we could contribute up to but not exceeding $83,000, but that in view of Panamá's statement that it had only $50,000 for this project, we would contribute a similar amount and that the balance between $83,000 and $50,000, which could have been available, would undoubtedly now be reallocated to use in some other area. The President thanked me for the explanation, said that he understood, and expressed his regret that Panamá could make only $50,000 available for the health and sanitation program.

[15] Reference is to the general agreement for technical cooperation between the United States and Panamá signed at Panamá on December 30, 1950. The agreement was transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 495, December 30, 1950, not printed (819.00-TA/12-3050). For text, see United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), vol. 1, p. 900, or Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 2167.

[16] This agreement, which provided for the joint development of a health and sanitation project in Panamá, was signed at Panamá on February 26, 1951; for text, see 2 UST 655, or TIAS No. 2220. For a press release concerning the agreement, see Department of State Bulletin, March 26, 1951, p. 502.

PURCHASE OF FOOD AND AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS FROM PANAMÁ

I told Dr. Arias that he would be interested in learning that I had just received an encouraging statement from the Army to the effect that it had taken steps to cooperate further and more effectively in obtaining from Washington important exemptions from the Buy American Act,[17] and that this would increase purchases by the Army in Panamá. I commented also on information which I had just received from the Panama Canal concerning its decision to make a thorough survey of all possibilities for purchasing an even greater quantity of agricultural, dairy, and meat products in Panamá. The President appeared gratified and appreciative of this program which had been stimulated and encouraged by the Embassy.

WASHINGTON CONFERENCE OF FOREIGN MINISTERS [18]

I informed Dr. Arias of the importance which the United States Government was attaching to the approaching Conference of Foreign Ministers in Washington, and reviewed the proposed agenda with him. I stated that I had been instructed by the Department to invite the full interest of Panamá in this meeting and to obtain from its officials Panamá's attitude toward the Conference and its plans for it. The President stated that he personally was very much interested and had endeavored to choose an effective representation comprising Foreign Minister Brin, new Minister of Finance and Treasury Herbruger,[19] Minister of Agriculture, Commerce, and Industries Arias,[20] Panamanian Delegate to the United Nations Duncan,[21] and Deputy to the [17] Legislation requiring United States Government agencies, when procuring supplies for domestic use, to purchase only domestic materials and supplies. For text of the basic law, see Title III of the Appropriations Act of March 3, 1933, in 47 Stat. 1520.

[18] Reference is to the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of American States, held at Washington, March 26–April 7, 1951. For documentation on the conference, see pp. 925 ff.

[19] Rodolfo F. Herbruger.

[20] Ricardo Arias Espinosa.

[21] Jeptha B. Duncan.

National Assembly Zurita. The President expressed strong agreement with the agenda and the objectives of the Conference, and remarked that the delegates were preparing themselves in a serious way for participation in the discussions.

He added that these delegates while in Washington would endeavor to interview United States Government officials, particularly the Secretary of State and his assistants, in an effort to find solutions to many of Panamá's worrisome problems. He said these matters were being discussed and that he hoped a decision would be reached promptly concerning the suggestions which would be of greatest interest to Panamá at the Foreign Ministers Conference and for talks with United States authorities.

M[URRAY] M. WISE

819.053/3–1351

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Acting Officer in Charge of Financial and Development Affairs (Cady)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] March 13, 1951.

Subject: Eximbank: Relations of Hotel Financing to Closing of Panama Trust Company.

Participants: OSA—Ambassador Nufer,[1] MID—Mr. Sowash,[2] ED—Mr. Bauer,[3] AR—Mr. Cady; Eximbank—Mr. Arey, Mr. Sauer and Mr. Redway.[4]

On Friday afternoon March 9, following an informal board meeting, Eximbank requested consultation with the Department concerning the possible repercussions on Eximbank financing of Hoteles Interamericanos arising from the closing of the Panama Trust Company and reported efforts on the part of high officials of the Panamanian Government to take over the hotel or acquire ownership interest in it.[5] The bank is not concerned with repayment difficulties since the obligation

---

[1] Albert F. Nufer, Director, Office of Middle American Affairs.

[2] William B. Sowash, Office of Middle American Affairs.

[3] Walter Bauer, Investment and Economic Development Staff.

[4] The Export-Import Bank representatives are identified as follows: Hawthorne Arey, Vice-Chairman, Board of Directors; Walter C. Sauer, Vice President; and Albert J. Redway.

[5] On July 21, 1948, the Export-Import Bank had authorized a credit of $2,500,000 to finance the construction of the hotel, also known as the Hotel El Panamá. Subsequently, the hotel had become indebted also to the Panama Trust Company, a private commercial bank, in which the Panamanian Government sometimes deposited funds. Between December 1950 and early March 1951, the bank experienced a crisis, in part because of overextension and in part because of other financial problems, and it was closed by court order on March 7, not to reopen for the remainder of the year. Pertinent documents are in Department of State decimal file 819.14.

is unconditionally guaranteed by the Republic of Panama [6] but would not be reluctant to use its good offices to help to prevent improper interference with the project.

The bank understood that FinMin Herbruger is coming to Washington and would call on the bank in connection with the hotel situation. It was not known by bank officials what proposals might be made but it was believed that a suggestion on the part of the Panamanians to set up a "watch-dog" committee might be anticipated. The bank feels that such action is uncalled for because the hotel corporation is under the management of a Board of Directors. Moreover, the corporation has contracted for operating management with an American firm. It is the intention of the bank to maintain a firm stand that the provisions of the loan contract should not be abrogated. One of the provisions stipulates that during the life of the loan the management must be satisfactory to the Eximbank. In this connection the bank understands the management company intends to stand by its contract. It is also the intention of the bank to discourage the formation of a "watch-dog" committee should the Panamanians broach the proposition and seek Eximbank cooperation therein.

Department officials assured the bank officials that it was their intention to keep in close touch with the bank regarding the situation and that they would support the position of the bank in insisting that the provisions of the loan contract be scrupulously observed.

---

[6] On July 26, 1951, the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank authorized an additional loan of $1,500,000 to finance the unfunded obligations of the Hotel El Panamá. Pertinent documents are in decimal files 819.10 and 103–XMB. For further information on the loan, see Export-Import Bank of Washington, Thirteenth Semiannual Report to Congress for the Period July–December 1951 (Washington, 1952), pp. 16, 40.

719.11/3–2951

The Chargé in Panama (Wise) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL PANAMÁ, March 29, 1951.

Subject: The Second Administration of Dr. Arnulfo Arias M., November 1949–March 1951; an Appraisal

Background

The most colorful Panamanian figure of the past decade has been Dr. Arnulfo Arias Madrid, a physician and surgeon educated in the United States, current presidential incumbent and chief executive of Panamá for the second time since October 1940. A year after entering office, Arnulfo was deposed by a bloodless coup d' état in October 1941 when . . . he secretly left the country without authorization. . . .

Provisional presidents elected by the National Assembly headed the Panamanian Government from the time of Arnulfo's overthrow in October 1941 until 1948 when popular elections were held. Arnulfo returned from exile in October 1945 and entered the 1948 presidential campaign. The unofficial count gave Arnulfo a majority of votes, but the official count disqualified twenty-seven hundred of the votes cast for him and gave the election to his opponent, Domingo Diaz Arosemena. In the early fall of 1949, an attempt by President Daniel Chanis, Jr., who had succeeded to the Presidency in August 1949 upon President Diaz' death, to remove Colonel Josẽ A. Remón, the Chief of Police, from his post prompted the National Police to a coup d'état. After the Supreme Court held that the succession of Second Vice President Roberto F. Chiari was illegal because Chanis resigned under police duress, Colonel Remón on November 24 placed Arnulfo in the Presidency to begin his second period in office.[1]

Political Problems of Arias' Current Administration

Although Arnulfo entered his present incumbency with widespread popular support, he also had at least one strike against him. The character of his former régime, his activities while in exile, and the manner of his return to office, all gave him an opposition of an intensity and virulence in excess of normal, and at no time since November 1949 has his position as President been secure.

The story of Arnulfo's return to the Presidency in November 1949 and the Embassy's evaluation of his Administration during his first five months in office are summarized in the enclosure, "The Current Political Situation", to Embassy despatch 374 of April 26, 1950 and in telegram 215 of March 30, 1950.[2] By this time it was already evident that Arnulfo's "honeymoon period" with his ministers and Colonel Remón, prolonged by the disorganization of his opposition, was over. But it still remained to be seen just how much authority the President would assume and whether he might return to the tactics and conduct of the Arnulfo of 1940–1941.

The intentions of Colonel Remón were also a matter of speculation. Remón, previously a bitter enemy of Arias, had suddenly put him into the Presidency. Arnulfo clearly was chosen by Remón in order that the Police could clothe their November 1949 coup d'état with some semblance of legality based on the unofficial count of votes which had given Arnulfo a majority in the 1948 election. By then it was public knowledge that Arnulfo's defeat was a result of dishonesty in the electoral jury.

The peculiar power relationship between Arias and Remón created by Arnulfo's second installation was quickly interpreted as a marriage of convenience through which the two sought to acquire mutual political and financial advantages. Whether the arrangement could last and whether the two could operate an effective government could be determined only by time.

[1] For documentation relating to the attitude of the United States concerning these political events in Panama during the latter part of 1949, see Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. II, pp. 761 ff.

[2] Neither printed.

Arnulfo's second administration has been characterized by repeated periods of political tenseness with disclosures of various plans to overthrow him. At first Arnulfo appeared to be well advised and the consensus of observers was that, if shrewd, he would not make the mistakes of his previous presidency and could, through the use of good judgment and by improving his international and domestic policies, become a strong and effective president.

. . . There were a series of political blunders shortly after the National Assembly adjourned in February, 1950 which indicated not only a lack of sober judgment by the President but also a surprising disregard for the best interests of Panamá. This gave rise to widespread dissatisfaction and a feeling of economic and political insecurity while furnishing the opposition with material for a campaign to discredit Arnulfo's administration and to seek ways of causing his downfall. The Administration, however, weathered bitter criticism through August, 1950 and the working arrangement between the President and the Commandant of the National Police appeared still to be mutually advantageous. It continued in effect in spite of efforts by the Liberal Party, the Frente Patriótico and others to persuade Remón to oust the President. From August 1950 until the National Assembly adjourned in February 1951, the situation was quiet so far as threats to the Administration's stability were concerned but political opposition increased in the Assembly.

The activities of the opposition in building a more solid front against the Government have steadily developed throughout Arnulfo's present administration. The Liberal Party, the National Revolutionary Party and dissident elements of the Liberal Reform and Authentic Revolutionary Party worked hard to make the October 1950–February 1951 session of the National Assembly a real source of dissension and embarrassment for Arnulfo's Administration. The President, anticipating this, considered dissolving the Assembly and the Supreme Court before the Assembly met. Early in August the Embassy was reliably informed that Arnulfo was so anxious to declare a de facto government (Embassy telegram 86 of August 22)[3] that he had actually drafted the necessary decree. He made several unsuccessful attempts to persuade Remón to support him in establishing a government to operate by fiat.

Tension rose sharply following the adjournment of the National Assembly because of the President's speech of February 21, 1951 (Embassy despatch 653 of February 23),[3] in which the Assembly was severely criticized for lack of cooperation and in which the Minister of

[3] Not printed.

Government and Justice was reprimanded for actively seeking support for his own candidacy for the 1925 presidential elections. This led to a change of three ministers, reinforcing the President's personal strength within the Administration.

Next came the attempt on the part of the Government to gain a controlling hand in the Panamá Trust Company and the Hotel El Panamá (Embassy telegrams 388 and 394 of March 1 and 5, 1951).[4] In consequence the Panamá Trust Company was "temporarily" closed (Embassy telegram 403 of March 8) [5] and a political crisis resulted (Embtels 405, 408, and 411 of March 8, 9 and 13) [6] which for a few days could have become a serious threat to Arnulfo's incumbency. However, there was virtually no public response to a strong attempt by opposition leaders to make a major issue of this interference by the Government and Colonel Remón failed to act.

One major objective of the opposition in its campaign against the Administration was to win Remón fully to its cause. For a long period Remón seemed interested only in himself and his National Police. However, he has more recently given some evidence himself of aspirations for the Presidency in 1952. (Embassy despatch 623 of February 15).[5]

Administration Achievements

International

From the day Arnulfo took office in November 1949, he adopted a policy of close cooperation with other nations and especially with the United States in a strong bid for power and prestige. He has endeavored to build up his reputation internationally, in contrast to the record he left during the few months of his first administration. He has made numerous public statements strongly supporting the United States and democracy everywhere and has attacked communism and totalitarianism. He has firmly supported the United Nations and the United States in the United Nations. Unlike the immediately preceding Liberal régimes, Arnulfo's administration has not seriously interfered with civil liberties in spite of vitriolic press attacks on him and in spite of serious threats to his tenure of office.

[Here follows further description of the achievements and failings of the Arias administration.]

Conclusion

In initiating his second administration, it seems that Arnulfo was determined, through acts of international cooperation particularly with the United States, to dispel so far as possible the derogatory

[4] Neither printed.
[5] Not printed.
[6] None printed.

opinions of him that had become widespread during his previous presidency, and to ingratiate himself with the United States Government. He seems to have believed, perhaps as a result of his 1941 experience, that good relations with the United States would help assure his continuance in power.

The constant use of official position and power . . . has steadily brought Arnulfo loss of confidence and prestige at home and has encouraged his opponents on repeated occasion to seek his overthrow.

With a relatively large annual budget of some $30,000,000 there is much that the Administration could do on its own initiative and without outside assistance if there were any real concern for the commonweal.

That Arnulfo's second administration is any more corrupt than the régime that immediately preceded would be difficult to prove; that its economic problems are more acute and that accordingly, its activities whether for good or bad are more exposed to the public eye and have more serious consequences, is evident.

MURRAY M. WISE

611.19/3–3051

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. William B. Sowash of the Office of Middle American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] March 30, 1951.

Subject: Matters of current importance in United States–Panama relations

Participants: Dr. Carlos N. Brin, Foreign Minister, Panama
Mr. Rodolfo Herbruger, Minister of Finance, Panama
Mr. Guillermo Endara, Panamanian Chargé d'Affaires
MID—Ambassador Nufer
MID—Mr. Sowash

Foreign Minister Brin, accompanied by Messrs. Herbruger and Endara, called at the State Department today by appointment to discuss nine matters of current interest in United States–Panama relations which Dr. Brin had indicated a desire to review while in Washington in an earlier conversation[1] with Assistant Secretary Miller.[2] In the course of the conversation, he stated that the discussion of these topics with Departmental officials has been one of the main purposes of his trip to Washington and that for this reason he had brought two other cabinet ministers with him. The following subjects were discussed:

[1] Summarized in a memorandum of conversation, by Mr. Ernest V. Siracusa, of the Office of Middle American Affairs, dated March 22, 1951, not printed (819.2612/3–2251).

[2] Edward G. Miller, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.

1. Inter-American Highway [3]

Dr. Brin again stressed the current serious economic situation in Panama, importance of the highway to Panama, and the concern of his Government over the amount allocated to Panama from the current appropriation for the highway. These allocations and the reasons therefor were once again explained to the Foreign Minister. He was told that the allocation for Panama this year would probably be $600,000, that Panama and Costa Rica would receive the largest portion of the second $4,000,000 appropriation, when made, and that the Department is currently endeavoring to secure a much larger amount for the highway in Fiscal Year 1952. Our present goal in Panama was stated to be an all-weather road from Chiriqui to the Canal Zone and Dr. Brin emphasized such a road was a prerequisite if the Chiriqui area is to help supply the Canal Zone in times of emergency.

2. Bridge or Tunnel at Pacific End of Panama Canal

Dr. Brin remarked that this treaty commitment [4] on the part of the United States has existed since 1942 and that no steps were taken by the United States toward its fulfillment in the five year period between the end of World War II and the outbreak of the Korean crisis. Dr. Brin was informed, as he had been on several previous occasions, that while the Department recognizes this commitment it is, nevertheless, not in a position to carry it out at the present time. It was pointed out that fulfillment of this obligation will cost the United States millions of dollars and that the Department had purposely not submitted enabling legislation to the preceeding session of Congress in order not to jeopardize Congressional action on appropriations for the Inter-American highway, which is deemed to be paramount in importance. With the outbreak of the Korean crisis a new emergency has been created which precludes any possibility of Congressional action on this commitment at this time. Moreover, Congressional appropriation of funds for this project is extremely unlikely until a decision has been made regarding future plans for the Panama Canal. Dr. Brin seemed resigned to the impossibility of obtaining United States action on this commitment at this time but remarked that, in his opinion, the uncertainty of future plans for the Canal ought not to constitute an obstacle since the proposed bridge or tunnel would be at Balboa and

[3] Documentation on this subject may be found on pp. 1038 ff.

[4] Reference is to the so-called Twelve Point Agreement effected by an exchange of notes signed at Washington, May 18, 1942. For text, see Department of State Executive Agreement Series (EAS) No. 452, or 59 Stat. (pt. 2) 1289. Under point four of the agreement, the United States was committed to the construction of a tunnel under or a bridge over the Canal at Balboa in order to improve transportation across the Canal.

therefore presumably would not be effected by construction work on the canal further inland.

3. Loan to the Banco Agropecuario for Agricultural Development

The Department's willingness to support a Panamanian loan application for any economically sound project was again indicated to the Panamanians. Dr. Brin stated that Panama has requested the International Bank to make a general economic survey and would probably call upon the Bank's technicians to assist in drawing up development plans and a loan application. He indicated that as an alternative, Panama may decide to request assistance under the Point IV program in drawing up the loan application. He was told that this Government would sympathetically consider such a request and it was agreed that a general economic survey would be helpful in planning future Point IV projects in Panama.

4. Market in Canal Zone for Panamanian Products and Elimination of the 25 Percent Differential

The Embassy's and Department's lively interest in this matter and their continuing efforts to expand Canal Zone purchases of Panamanian products were detailed to the Panamanians. It was explained that the requested elimination of the 25 percent differential would necessitate an approach to Congress, which is not deemed feasible in view of the domestic interests involved. Instead, the Department seeks exemptions for specific Panamanian products by Department heads under the "national interest" clause of the "Buy American Act". The Panamanians seemed somewhat surprised to learn that Canal Zone purchases from Panama now total about $2,000,000 a year. Further increases are expected in view of a recent report from the Embassy to the effect that the Armed Forces and the Panama Canal and Railroad now are anxious to expand their purchases of Panamanian products in order to develop a local source of supply. They were pleased to learn that the Caribbean Command has recently requested that chilled meats and clay products, among others, be placed on the exempt list. Dr. Brin argued strongly that cement also should be exempted and stressed the importance of this new industry to Panama and the current difficulties under which it labors. He was told that the Department would look into the possibility of doing this. Occasion was taken to point out that Panama itself could do a great deal toward increasing the sale of Panamanian products by organizing marketing cooperatives and by taking other steps to facilitate and ensure the delivery of Panamanian products in adequate quantities and quality on specified contract dates.

5. Permission for Panamanian Trucking Interests to Pick up Cargo on the Wharves at Balboa and Cristobal

It was explained to Dr. Brin that this matter has been referred to the Embassy in Panama for investigation and comment and that the Embassy's report has not yet been received. The Foreign Minister was told that the Department would cable the Embassy today to expedite its report in order that this matter may be discussed with Dr. Brin before his departure from Washington.[5]

6. Equality of Treatment for Panamanian Employees in the Canal Zone

The Department's continuing efforts to ensure that Canal Zone labor practices accord with this Government's treaty commitments were outlined to the Panamanians. In view of the broad nature of this subject, Dr. Brin was asked to specify what practices he considers inconsistent with our treaty obligations. He referred to only two: the failure of United States agencies to give equal pay for equal work and the present inadequate retirement payments to Canal and Railroad employees. With regard to the first point, Dr. Brin was informed that the Canal and Railroad periodically review their job descriptions with a view to transferring to United States rate lists those local rate employees whose positions demand a degree of skill equal to that exercised by United States rate employees in similar positions and that a number of positions already have been so reclassified. It was explained that the nature of the problem makes progress necessarily slow but that the Department continues to support moves in this direction. With regard to retirement provisions, Dr. Brin was informed that this Government now has under consideration two plans for increasing retirement payments to employees of the Panama Railroad and Canal, and that both plans are generous and represent a very great improvement over the present admittedly inadequate payments. Early action on a retirement plan is expected. Dr. Brin pointed out that, despite rumors to the contrary, his Government not only does not oppose but actively favors payment of higher wages in the Canal Zone.

7. Importation of Alcoholic Beverages into the Canal Zone

Dr. Brin was informed that the Executive Order of 1935 [6] on this subject is still in effect and that it would be helpful to the Department in preventing the infractions of which he complains if he could supply the Department with specific information regarding these infractions. Dr. Brin said that he did not wish to register a formal complaint but that he has been informed that sizable quantities of liquor are being flown into Panama on military planes in direct contravention of the terms of the Executive Order. He was told that the Department would bring this matter to the attention of the appropriate Canal Zone authorities.

[5] Further discussion of this matter took place at a meeting at the Department of State on April 6, 1951; the meeting was summarized in a memorandum of conversation of the same date, by Mr. Sowash, not printed (611.19/4–651).

[6] Executive Order No. 6997, March 25, 1935, prohibited the direct importation of hard liquor into the Canal Zone; for text, see Executive Orders Relating to the Canal Zone (Canal Zone, 1922), Supplement No. 28, p. 477.

8. Removal of the Railroad Station in Panama City

Dr. Brin inquired regarding the present status of this matter. He was informed that the Department of Defense plans to submit enabling legislation on this project to the Budget Bureau this week for transmission to the Congress and that it was hoped, therefore, that this Government would very soon find itself in a position to proceed with the fulfillment of this commitment.[7] It was pointed out, however, that the commitment of the United States is conditioned by the stipulation that the Government of Panama shall provide free of cost a new site deemed suitable for terminal purposes by both Governments. In view of the cost to both Governments involved in preparing the proposed Curundu site, Dr. Brin continued to urge consideration of the use of the Balboa Station, the railroad withdrawing completely from Panama City. He pointed out that the Curundu site is very close to the Balboa station and that use of the Balboa station should not therefore appreciably reduce the revenues of the railroad. Furthermore, he argued, the hundred-year concession of the railroad will expire in 1965 or 1966 and he questioned the prudence of the United States spending $4,000,000 to build a new terminal in Panama City which might have to be abandoned in another 15 years. He was told that the Department would ascertain the feasibility of using the Balboa station and the hope was expressed that a site could soon be agreed upon since early and favorable action by the Congress is expected.

9. Equality of Treatment for Panama and the Canal Zone in Regard to Allocations and Quotas of Scarce Commodities and Products

Dr. Brin explained that Panama hopes that future allocations and quotas imposed on Panama in the exportation of scarce items and commodities will take into consideration purchases in Panama by Canal Zone residents. Dr. Brin was told that the Department recognizes the problems posed for Panama in this regard by unrestricted purchases of scarce items in Panama by residents of the Canal Zone and he was assured that the Department would bring this problem to the attention of the appropriate authorities. He was warned, however, that the Department had been unable to do much in this regard during the last war.

At the close of the discussion of these nine points, Dr. Brin was asked how the affairs of the Panama Trust Company and the new hotel are progressing. Dr. Brin said that he had had no report since arriving in Washington but that he hoped a satisfactory solution could be arrived at. It was suggested that Mr. Herbruger might wish to discuss this matter with the Export-Import Bank officials while he was in Washington. The hope was expressed that the solution to this problem would be such as would permit the continued fruitful development of the bank and hotel in order that the loan to the hotel might be merely the first of a series for developmental projects in Panama.

[7] Under point ten of the Twelve Point Agreement, the United States had committed itself to the removal of the terminal facilities of the Panama Railroad from their present site.

The exchange of views on these several problems is considered to have been very beneficial and the conversation was at all times cordial. The Panamanians left in what appeared to be a satisfied mood.

719.00/5–751

Memorandum of Telephone Conversation, by Mr. Ernest V. Siracusa of the Office of Middle American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] May 7, 1951.

Subject: Coup d'etat in Panama

Participants: Murray M. Wise, Chargé in Panama
MID—Mr. Siracusa

Murray Wise phoned me from Panama at 11: 20 p. m. to report the following:

1. A large mass meeting before the Presidencia tonight (Monday, May 7) enthusiastically received Government announcement of the following:

(a) Abolition of the 1946 Constitution and restoration of the 1941 Constitution.
(b) Dissolving of National Assembly instituting de facto Government headed by Arias.
(c) Promise of elections in due course.
(d) Appointment of all public officers by the President. No change in the Supreme Court at this time, but some to occur later.
(e) All of the above with full support Remón and National Police.

This move has no doubt been planned for some time and it is known that Arias was desirous of assuming greater powers. It was precipitated by the Banking crisis [1] of the "Caja de Ahorros" in the last two days, which was brought about by opposition elements to embarrass the Government.

The meeting was addressed by José Pezet and the Minister of Government, Obaldía, who read the proclamation setting forth the above conditions. He said that the 1946 Constitution was inadequate and did not give the Government flexibility to control the economic and political situation in the best interests of the country. President Arias then made a radio address, stating that this would launch a promising new era for Panama. He said he would respect all international commitments and assured security and protection of all foreigners and property. He said the move was a protection against Communism, but Mr. Wise tends to discount this.

[1] Telegrams reporting the development of this crisis and its domestic political ramifications are in Department of State decimal file 719.00.

Up to the time of his call no serious disturbances had occurred. Mr. Wise felt that the situation would clarify throughout the night and today, and he will report additional facts and interpretation soonest.

719.00/5–851

Memorandum by Mr. Ernest V. Siracusa of the Office of Middle American Affairs to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) [1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] May 8, 1951.

Subject: Developments in Panama

We have not yet received reports from Panama except for Mr. Wise's telephone call to Mr. Siracusa last night. Our preliminary estimate of the situation is as follows:

Arias' move is the culmination of his long standing desire to consolidate his power and relieve himself of restraints from the National Assembly, the Supreme Court and the opposition parties. The opportunity was afforded by the opposition-inspired run on the Caja de Ahorros and public disturbances that resulted therefrom. The key to the situation continues to rest with Remón and the National Police. Present reports are that he fully supports Arias and no doubt Arias had this assurance before he acted. However, it would seem that Remón, rather than Arias, has improved in strength. Arias is farther out on a limb than he was before and more indebted to Remón. Presumably Remón can increase his price, whatever it may be, for cooperation with Arias. Also, depending upon how he judges reaction to Arias' move, Remón could step in as a benefactor and remove Arias on the ground that he had violated the liberty of the Panamanian people and assumed dictatorial powers. It seems significant that Remón may have endeavored not to identify himself with this move to retain such flexibility. The Secret Police, it is to be pointed out, and not the National Police, have been the only ones reported so far to have participated in the sporadic gun play and arrests.

We tend to discount Arias' statements that his move is really a counter to communist activities which threaten the security of Panama and the Canal Zone. It is true that the Supreme Court and the National Assembly denied him certain requested powers with respect to controlling communist activities. However the basic issues appear to be predominantly local and the communist aspect comes in only in so far as they have exploited the views of the nationalist hotheads and the Liberals who form the strong core of opposition to Arias. Real motivation seems to lie in the normal domestic political struggle for power fanned to some extent by the bitter personal animosities existent there, and the excesses and venality of the Arias regime. One of Arias' motives in wishing to discard the 1946 Constitution was to remove the legal limitation on his tenure in power. The 1941 Constitution which he has restored was tailor-made by him to fit his desires during his first incumbency and provides for a six-year Presidential term.

[1] Addressed also to Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Thomas C. Mann, and Ambassador Nufer.

Our position vis-à-vis Panama would not seem to be affected except in so far as another Latin American Government has lost, at least temporarily, its semblance of democracy. No doubt communists will attack us and accuse us of inspiring it.

719.00/5–851 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Panama

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, May 8, 1951—7 p. m.

359. Pan Chargé called instr Arias request Dept assure CZ facilities not be used give aid opposition to Govt. Dept reiterated position complete neutrality internal matters Pan and requests you bring this attn CZ civ and mil auths. As Emb and CZ auths of course aware important no expression opinion be given which cld be interpreted encouragement either side.[1]

ACHESON

[1] In telegram 508, from Panama City, May 9, 9 p. m., Chargé Wise reported in part the following: "Dept's instructions re non-interference internal matters Pan (Deptel 359, May 8) being strictly observed with full cooperation Gov Newcomer and Gen Morris with whom discussed." (719.00/5–951)

Editorial Note

During May 9–10 the effort of President Arias to assume complete control of the Government of Panamá collapsed, largely because Police Chief Remón withdrew his support from the President. On several occasions, President Arias or his subordinates attempted to elicit aid from or intervention by the United States, but the Department of State adhered to its policy of noninterference. After a brief gun battle at the Presidential Palace on the afternoon of the 10th, President Arias was taken into custody by the National Police. In the meantime, the National Assembly had impeached the President and installed Alcibiades Arosemena, First Vice President, as his successor. Documents pertaining to these events are in decimal file 719.00.

719.00/5–1151 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Panama

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, May 11, 1951—12 noon.

PRIORITY

365. Dept believes question recognition shld not be raised and public statements on this issue shld be avoided if possible. When public order restored and in your judgment Arosemena position as Pres clear you are authorized continue normal contact.

For your info Dept bases position on fact Arosemena first Vice Pres Arias Govt and Supreme Court ruled legality his succession. Dept believes you shld take early opportunity make clear Arosemena US assumes full compliance by Pan Govt internal commitments, including claims settlement,[1] interrupted by disorders.

ACHESON

[1] On January 26, 1950, the United States and Panamá had signed at Panamá a claims convention providing for the settlement of certain long-standing mutual claims. The convention had entered into force on October 11, 1950. For text, see 1 UST 685, or TIAS No. 2129.

719.00/5–1451

Memorandum by the Officer in Charge of Central American and Panama Affairs (Bennett) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller)[1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] May 14, 1951.

Subject: New Administration in Panama

A cursory look at the Arosemena Cabinet would seem to provide little hope for any real stability in the Panamanian political scene beyond the immediate future. The Cabinet is a hodge-podge coalition ranging from extreme right to extreme left. It includes people who as late as last week were ardent supporters of Arnulfo Arias as well as at least one individual who has a record of communist sympathy. Some of the changes lend further credence to the charge made at the time of the 1949 revolution, that Panama is the double crossroads of the Hemisphere.

It should be borne in mind that extreme violence in Government changes in Panama is very rare. I cannot think offhand of any other revolution in recent years in which anyone got killed. The presence of the Canal Zone does not allow reinforcements to be brought into the capital from the interior. Also the tempering influence of the U.S. and the characteristics of the people in Government in Panama have traditionally resulted in palace revolutions in the political game of musical chairs indulged in by the upper classes. The blood letting of last week's fight has probably stunned the country, and we can look forward to a short period of quiet. However, it is too much to expect that a Cabinet as jerry-built as the one announced by Arosemena can long endure. It just isn't in the cards that all these people will suddenly have common interests. After a period of calm we can expect the jockeying to begin again with the various groups represented in the Cabinet looking out for their own interests rather than for the national good.

[1] Addressed also to Mr. Mann, Ambassador Nufer, and Messrs. Siracusa and Sowash.

From our point of view, the Cabinet is decidedly unimpressive. The President himself has been completely chameleonic in his attitude toward the U.S. He has always been a devoted supporter of Arnulfo Arias and has followed all the shifts and turns of the checkered career of that individual. He opposed us in the vital Rio Hato Highway agreement during the war and in the Defense Sites Agreement of 1947.[2] As late as 1945, the office of the Legal Attaché at Panama described him as "always a strong Axis supporter". He has however an attractive personality, is personally wealthy (real estate and cattle), and will probably see the obvious necessity as Arnulfo did of getting along with us. It cannot be said that he is anti-U.S. at the present time although one of his sons, Rodrigo, is a member of the anti-U.S. Ultra Nationalist Patriotic Youth Front and an intimate friend of Ricardo Bermudez (see below).

Unless they have changed their spots entirely, several members of the Cabinet can be expected to play us for what we are worth.

Perhaps a majority of the Cabinet has strong nationalist feelings, tempered with opportunism. The new Minister of Government and Justice, Miguel Angel Ordoñez (ranking member of the Cabinet) was an Arnulfista Deputy and is said to be ultra-nationalist. Juan de Arco Galindo, Minister of Public Health (married to Julio Heurtematte's sister) and Varela [3] are all considered to be opportunists, and Navarro [4] has been something less than friendly to us in the past. Minister of Finance Victor Navas is also quite nationalistic and suffers from a racial complex. He is, however, quite independent in his views and had a good record as Governor of Colón. Molino,[5] the new Foreign Minister, and Samudio,[6] the Minister of Agriculture, are both friendly to us. Molino, who has worked very closely with us in the past, will be a great improvement over Brin. But, he is not particularly popular in Panama and has been the object of attacks by nationalist and leftist elements because of his pro-U.S. attitude and American wife.

The appointment of Ricardo Bermudez as Minister of Education is shocking. A leading member of the Patriotic Youth Front and always

[2] For documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1947, vol. VIII, pp. 881 ff.
[3] José Manuel Varela, Secretary General of the Presidency.
[4] Norberto Navarro, Minister of Public Works.
[5] Ignacio Molino, Jr.
[6] David Samudio.

in the fore in anti-U.S. attacks and projects, Bermudez was described by our Embassy in 1949 as "extremely anti-American with bond of nationalist intellectual sympathy for communists because of their consistent enmity of U.S.". Although Bermudez has apparently never become a card-carrying communist, his record was such as to lead the Embassy to deny him a visa in 1949. This fact is known throughout Panama. In view of his intimacy with Arosemena's son, it is already apparent that he has ready access to the Presidential household. Since the line between him and the communists is so thin, it is not perhaps looking too far to see their hand in his choice of the Ministry of Education as his portfolio.

The assumption of power by the above group may bring, with respect to dealings with the U.S., some responsibility, or at least a recognition of the realities of life. The bite of Panamanian politicians is seldom as bad as their bark once they are actually in power. However, it is definitely not in the interests of the U.S. to have such men as Bermudez in the Cabinet of Panama.

493.009/6–451 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Panama

SECRET WASHINGTON, June 4, 1951—8 p. m.

398. UNGA Res of May 18 [1] re embargo on shipments of strategic materials to Chi Commie and North Korean aggressors recommends that every state apply controls to give effect to embargo and prevent by all means within its jurisdiction circumvention of controls on shipments applied by other states pursuant to Res. We believe this language warrants application of appropriate controls by cooperating states on shipping under their flags, designed to prohibit carriage of items falling within embargo and destined for Chi Commies and North Koreans.

Pls sug to FonOff that it wld be most helpful if, in submitting first Pan report to UN AMC due June 18, Pan cld state that it had taken or wld take action to apply such controls over cargoes carried Pan registry ships. We understand Pans have withdrawn protection from Pan shipping engaging in prohibited operations. If penalties cld now be instituted (See U.S. T–1) these steps wld make excellent impression in US and UN; wld avoid unfavorable publicity re circumvention of UN embargo thru use Pan flag shipping; and, most important, wld tend to increase effectiveness of embargo thus contributing to UN effort to meet aggression in Korea. Having in mind generous offer Pan Govt make available Pan shipping for UN use in connection collective action Korea, Pan Govt may wish consider further step of advice to all ships flying Pan flag that registration will be withdrawn if calls made at Chi Commie or North Korean ports. While such action wld admittedly go beyond May 18 UNGA Res, it wld parallel action taken by Hond Govt on its own initiative last Dec respect its merchant marine. It wld also seem comparable US Govt action last Dec forbidding US registry ships call at Chi Commie and North Korean ports.

[1] For the text of Resolution No. 500 (V), entitled "Additional Measures to be employed to meet the aggression in Korea," see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Fifth Session, Resolutions Adopted by the General Assembly during the period from 16 December 1950 to 5 November 1951, Supplement No. 20A, p. 2. For documentation on this subject, see volume VII.

Pls consult FonOff and refer to Dept questions Pans may raise.

ACHESON

919.534/7–251 : Circular telegram

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic and Consular Offices [1]

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, July 2, 1951—7 p. m.

4. Panama Govt authorizes you acting for it re shipping pick up papers and withhold sailing permit any vessel Pan registry destined North Korean or Chi commie ports. Pan Govt suggests you base action on need verify validity ship's registry. Interested local auths may be informed any action taken pursuant this auth.

Report cases with name of vessel, registry nr and call letters to Pan Govt through Amembassy Pan with info copy Dept and await instrs which will be sent by Pan Govt through Dept. Tokyo and HICOG shld advise appropriate Consulates their jurisdictions.

ACHESON

[1] Sent for action to Algiers, Karachi, Istanbul, Saigon, Tokyo, HICOG (Germany), Calcutta, and Belfast; sent for information to Hong Kong.

919.537/7–2351 : Telegram

The Chargé in Panama (Wise) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL PANAMA CITY, July 23, 1951—6 p. m.

49. Spoke FonMin again noon today re Pan flag shipping saying we very appreciative prompt action being taken Pan Govt with respect individual ships found dealing in cargo for Commie China and North Korea adding strongly, however, that it would appear be in best interest Pan Govt to issue contemplated decree (see last para Embtel 29 July 14) [1] soonest.

[1] Not printed.

FonMin replied he doing everything within his power get Cab agreement, particularly Min Fin Treas on proposed decree which if promulgated as drafted will (1) demand payment fine on any Pan flagship which loads strategic cargo; (2) permit any ship proceed provided it unloads such cargo and (3) authorize cancellation registry if cargo not unloaded.

I explained to FonMin that Dept had just been successful in avoiding bad publicity on Pan flag shipping and that Cab might wish expedite action in hope avoiding adverse publicity which cannot be prevented indefinitely.

Min desires that Dept issue publicity deemed appropriate including names ships on which action and type action already taken and stating FonMin advises decree under consideration to be issued soon.

FonMin says Pan honorary Con Linares (Hong Kong telegram to Dept July 10) [2] has been relieved his duties and that Department may so publicize.

FonMin appears quite embarrassed delay issuance decree but unable yet work draft through Cab. Emb pressing matter urgently through channels other than FonOff. Will report further soonest.

WISE

[2] Not printed.

919.537/7–2351 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Panama

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, July 26, 1951—5 p. m.

48. Proposed terms decree (Emtel 49, Jul 23) place emphasis strategic cargo re control movement Pan ships commie ports. Deptel 398 Jun 4 sought outright ban visit Pan ships such ports as only effective means control traffic. DepCirtel those offices representing Pan re shipping quoted to you in Deptel 3 Jul 2 [1] and based urtel 672 Jun 30 [1] placed emphasis traffic commie ports irrespective strategic or non-strategic nature cargo. This position reaffirmed Emtel 17, Jul 9.[1] Does proposed decree contemplate penalty only when strategic cargo concerned? If so, what guidance will Pan give on what is strategic and what is not? Dept desires reiterate belief effective measures shld ban visits commie ports irrespective cargo.[2]

ACHESON

[1] Not printed.

[2] In telegram 64, from Panama City, July 29, 1951, Ambassador John C. Wiley, who had been appointed Ambassador on June 20 and had arrived in Panamá on July 17, stated in part that he would "endeavor promptly obtain broadening of decree in line with Deptel 48 July 26". (919.537/7–2951)

919.537/8–351 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Panama (Wiley) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL NIACT PANAMA CITY, August 3, 1951—3 p. m.

95. FonMin told Wise this morning Pres has instructed him confer with MinFin and draft decree (Deptels 48, July 26 and 57 July 31 [1]) today along fol lines for possible issuance Saturday:

(1) Prohibit transportation aboard Pan flagships to Commie ports cargo all kinds irrespective strategic or non-strategic nature.
(2) Prohibit operation ships between Commie ports.
(3) Ships handling strategic cargo to be fined heavily and ordered unload before proceeding to non-Commie destination. Registry to be cancelled for non-compliance.
(4) Ships furnishing service between Commie ports to lose registry.

From reliable sources Emb has now learned hesitation (Embtel 71 July 30 [1]) Pan Govt in issuing decree banning visits ships Commie ports due to lack existing legal basis for such action by executive decree or by decree law. Emb informed that owners at least one vessel under Pan registry have protested violently recent instructions and threatened bring suit against Pan Govt.

Emb is certain Ricardo J. Alfaro was consulted upon arrival by both Pres and FonMin re decree and that he advised them least Pan could do by way of cooperation would be ban ships visiting Commie ports and that he sure legal basis could be found.

Wise did not find FonMin entirely clear in his statement. However, from foregoing it would appear that Pan flagships trading with Commie China in violation of Pan prohibition might not be subject to fines or penalties unless it was legally proved that ships had actually carried strategic cargo. It cld of course be difficult to establish case after the fact. Since this may afford loophole we shall press for clarification. Min has promised receive me before proposed decree is sent to President for signature.

WILEY

[1] Not printed.

919.537/8–651 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Panama (Wiley) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY PANAMÁ, August 6, 1951—7 p. m.

108. As Dept will note from Embtel 107,[1] proposed decree basing action on UN resolution May 18 prohibits (1) export or reexport war material from Panamanian ports to North Korea, Commie China,

[1] Not printed.

USSR and satellites, Hong Kong and Macao; (2) transport in Panamanian registered ships of all types of goods and war material toward these areas, (3) export and re-export war material to other areas except by permission Ministry Finance upon presentation certificate issued by authorities country destination and authenticated by Panamanian consul, containing official assurance materials will not be re-exported to these prohibited zones or will not be used for manufacture war material destined prohibited zones. In defining war materials, decree incorporates exact categories of US presidential proclamation 2776.[2]

Decree provides Panama will, after consular investigation, cancel registry ships transporting war material or goods of any type toward prohibited zones unless captains such ships discharges goods and war material in designated port and undertake not to continue to port destinations; if ship carries war material will also be fined $1,000 to $10,000 by consular official and registry cancelled if refuses discharge entire cargo. Panama will cancel registry any ship engaging coastal service between ports prohibited zones. Ship with registry cancelled under decree may reregister only by Panamanian executive resolution, if any UN state cancels registry its vessels on grounds analagous those above, their registry under Panamanian flag will not be permitted if other state adopts same provision.

Comment: Action taken so far to curb traffic by Panamanian flagships with Commie ports may have been successful largely because of element of surprise and effective measures taken locally by US consular reps.

To have situation clarified by a decree as now proposed by Panamanian Govt might worsen rather than help effective control. Such decree might even serve as blueprint for successful evasion of controls. For example, there is no prohibition of traffic per se with Commie ports. Penalties cited are certainly not forceful deterrents. I understand Article 5 Law 80 of 1934 is drafted in general terms only. (This will be checked when office opens.) The fines proposed in decree are insignificant.

Moreover, there are many ports where effective control is difficult under any circumstances. My own experience as Consul General at Antwerp during height of alcohol smuggling to US demonstrated that illicit shipping enjoys great facilities for by-passing obstacles.

That Panamanian law is definitely inadequate to give President Arosemena solid basis for going further is definite conclusion legal experts who have studied question carefully. Memorandum [3] from Bentz [4] general counsel, being air mailed.

---

[2] This proclamation was dated March 26, 1948. For text, see 62 Stat. (pt. 2) 1495.
[3] Not printed.
[4] Paul A. Bentz, General Counsel, Governor's Staff, Canal Zone.

Foreign Minister knows my views. Before discussing matter further with him would greatly appreciate Dept's guidance. Probably can arrange for President Arosemena postpone signature for two or three days.

WILEY

919.537/8–851 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Panama

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, August 10, 1951—8 p. m.

92. Dept appreciates efforts Pan Govt cooperate with UNGA Res May 18 concerning embargo on war materials to areas under control Chi Communists and North Koreans re Embtel 107 Aug 6 [1] and 116 Aug 8.[1] Dept believes Pan Govt as result Emb actions fully aware views this Govt on importance this issue and on need for effective measures. Dept has been hopeful Pan Govt could find way to take action in line Alfaro views urtel 95 Aug 3.[1] Apart from uncertain legal basis for action which cannot be fully appraised here Dept considers decision whether Pan Govt has authority to issue decree or must seek further authority from Natl Assembly is of course a matter which Pan officials must determine for themselves. In latter event, Pan Govt might consider it desirable continue meanwhile handling shipping controls on present individual basis until appropriate legal authority obtained.

Dept believes Emb shld avoid action beyond informally stressing our objectives and shld not be in position urging specific terms of decree.

ACHESON

[1] Not printed.

919.437/8–1451 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Panama (Wiley) to the Secretary of State

SECRET PANAMA CITY, August 14, 1951—9 p. m.

137. In conversation with FonMin today I reiterated US views re importance ban on Pan ships (Deptel 91, Aug 10)[1] calling Commie ports. When FonMin requested my comment on text proposed decree (Embtel 107, Aug 6)[1] I said drafting of text matter Pan Govt only cld decide repeating my personal view was that decree in present form might actually serve as blueprint for evasion of controls and might offer new life to unethical and illicit trade. FonMin greatly interested and seemed fully sympathetic views US Govt re need for effective measures. He said present procedure Pan Govt entirely extra-legal and manifested concern. However, he seemed reassure himself with afterthought observation that Pan commitments to UN were after all pretty clearcut and comprehensive.

[1] Not printed.

Re subject possible legislation I merely mentioned fact that Pan Natl Assembly scheduled convene Oct 1 a date very imminent, and that shld Pan Govt desire further legislation for authority to issue adequate decree, delay involved to introduce bill wld apparently not be excessive. I said while expediency and nature any legislation Pan Govt might seek from Natl Assembly was question Pan Govt alone cld determine it seemed to me that legislation cld be readily justified by realities of situation, namely, that Pan Govt obviously cld not set up effective world wide controls to prevent smuggling contraband Commie ports if Pan ships authorized legally enter such ports. I repeated existing penalties under Pan law inadequate to deter contraband running to Commie ports. I stated that legislation requiring previous authorization of Pan Govt in each instance for Pan vessel call at Commie port appeared as minimum step to meet its commitments. FonMin supplemented my statement by adding there might also be grave danger that Pan ships, without calling at Commie ports, wld transship on high seas to small vessels and thus evade all control. He thought law shld cover this point.

FonMin however expressed considerable concern over possibility adverse publicity in US if publication decree postponed. I replied US press wld closely analyse text any published decree and to promulgate inadequate decree also might have unfavorable repercussions. I suggested he hold matter in abeyance pending study by us both and that we shld have further discussion at very early date.

FonMin stated local agents SS Marcar (Deptel August 6 quoting tel 16 from Kobe)[2] made representations to him along lines reported by Kobe. I remarked it was lamentable that frequently reputable world shipping interest unable resist substantial profits illicit trade. However I expressed confidence Dept wld find means energetically to contact shipping firms involved. I said question Pan ships transporting wheat to India from Commie ports not a compelling reason to accept bona fides such traffic; that alleviation hunger in India might be merely subterfuge or means for propaganda. I pointed out if Commie world seriously interested plight India, Soviet cld easily have given much more substantial evidence. Moreover if Commies needed more vessels transport foodstuffs to India there were available hundreds US lend-lease ships stolen from US by Soviets.

In my conversation with FonMin nothing has been said to commit Dept or me in any way.

[2] Neither printed.

Pending receipt of Dept's further guidance and my next conversation with FonMin, present Pan procedures will presumably be continued. In view cooperative attitude FonMin I hope press can be encouraged show patient reticence.

WILEY

919.537/8–1951 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Panama (Wiley) to the Secretary of State

SECRET PANAMA CITY, August 19, 1951—2 p. m.

152. FonMin and Pres both informed me noon yesterday with satisfaction and evident pride proposed decree on Pan flagships had been redrafted (mytel 149, Aug 18) [1] and that text completely consonant our desires and with requirements situation.

Last night Emb received copy in Spanish which forwarded Dept airmail today. Although Pres does not expect sign decree until after seen by Asst Secy Miller,[2] text was printed in full in local morning papers.

On first perusal Emb finds proposed Pan action comprehensive and as adequate as could be hoped for.[3]

WILEY

[1] Not printed.

[2] In telegram 160, August 21, 1951, Ambassador Wiley reported that President Arosemena had actually signed the decree numbered 631 on August 18, and that his signature had been kept secret temporarily in order to test public reaction (919.537/8–2151).

[3] In a memorandum dated January 8, 1952, Mr. Nufer stated in part that "the Decree has been very effective in reducing the amount of Western flag shipping available for the China trade. Panama's cooperative effort, however, faces the danger of nullification through re-registration of Panamanian vessels under British and Portuguese flags". (919.537/1–752)

Editorial Note

During the period from late August to late October, Panamá was visited by three financial missions representing, respectively, the United States Export-Import Bank, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and the International Monetary Fund. The purpose of the Export-Import Bank mission was to complete the details of the new $1.5 million loan for the Hotel El Panamá which had been authorized the previous July and of refinancing the original loan of $2.5 million to the hotel. The IBRD mission had been invited to come in order to determine what technical assistance might be of benefit to the country. The IMF mission came primarily to examine the general economic situation in the hopes of formulating economic and monetary policies which would allow for the improved utilization of the country's resources. The activities of these missions are described in despatch 289, from Panamá, October 19, 1951, not printed (398.14/10–1951). Additional pertinent documents are in decimal files 103–XMB, 398.13, and 819.10.

819.10/10–1651

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. William B. Sowash of the Office of Middle American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] October 16, 1951.

Subject: Findings of IBRD Mission to Panama

Participants: Mr. Aldewereld, IBRD
MID—Ambassador Nufer
MID—Mr. Siracusa
MID—Mr. Sowash

Mr. Aldewereld having recently returned from his mission to Panama, Messrs. Nufer, Siracusa, and Sowash called on him today for an informal résumé of his findings.

Mr. Aldewereld began his summary by stating that Panama today, just as it has for centuries, depends for its livelihood upon transients and upon the inflow of money from abroad. He found that Panama's sole development plans consist of four projects: the recently built El Panama Hotel, the new racetrack now abuilding, the Colón Free Trade Zone, and the extension of the water supply and sewerage systems to the suburbs of Panama City. Of these four projects, the first three are based upon the traditional dependence upon transients and income from abroad. The result of this way of thinking has been a needless and costly neglect of Panama's own resources, particularly in the field of agriculture. Further, Panamanian capital is chiefly interested in the quick turnover that commerce provides and there is very little investment in the development of Panama's resources. Mr. Aldewereld asserted that Panama's greatest need is a change in this mentality.

Concomitantly, Panama needs a thorough cleansing of its present "rotten" political life and the institution of a civil service system in government employment. He described the amount of graft and corruption in the government as incredible. Panama's virtually complete lack of credit worthiness was stressed and the alarming rate of increase in the national debt, chiefly internal, was noted. An important contributing cause is the non-payment of income taxes by virtually everybody except employees of the government and foreign companies, whose taxes are withheld at the source.

Mr. Aldewereld believes the expansion and development of agriculture to be Panama's principal hope for economic salvation. This program can best be directed by a development (Fomento) company. In many respects, the present Banco Agropecuario is suitable for this purpose. However, the Banco will continue to be ineffectual until it is taken completely out of politics. He opines that a broad economic survey would be helpful but unrealistic at this time in view of its probable cost and the probability that it would be shelved without action by the government.

The importance of improved transportation in Panama also was emphasized. Mr. Aldewereld believes that this must precede agricultural development.

Saying that Panama has great need of experts in many fields, Mr. Aldewereld concluded that, despite his discouraging findings, the Bank probably would send experts to Panama. He emphasized, however, that such aid should be contingent upon Panama's taking certain steps to help itself, including certain long needed internal reforms. Otherwise, the money expended to assist Panama will effect no lasting improvement, as Panama's past has proven.

811F.061/12–2051

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] December 20, 1951.

Subject: Alleged Discriminatory Employment Practices in the Canal Zone.

Participants: Mr. Karl R. Bendetsen, Assistant Secretary of the Army
Mr. Donald Dawson,[1] White House
Col. Beasley
Mr. Edward G. Miller, Jr.

On Thursday, December 20, I had a meeting at the White House with Mr. Donald Dawson, Assistant Secretary of the Army Bendetsen and Col. Beasley, of Mr. Bendetsen's office. The meeting was called by Mr. Dawson to discuss allegations made to Mr. Dawson by representatives of the CIO with regard to discriminatory practices in the Canal Zone to the disadvantage of citizens of Panama.

Mr. Dawson said that according to his understanding wages paid to "local rate" employees of the Canal Zone were substantially lower than those paid to Americans and also that promotion opportunities for "local rate" employees were less than those for Americans.

Mr. Bendetsen made a long review of the employment practices in the Canal Zone and of the very serious fiscal problems that the Canal

[1] Administrative Assistant to the President, and Liaison Officer, Liaison Office for Personnel Management.

Zone administration has had to deal with since Congress placed the Canal Zone on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Mr. Bendetsen and Mr. Dawson reviewed in some detail the composition of the Panama Canal Company. While this review disproved the information which Mr. Dawson had received that the Board of Directors was composed of representatives of private business, it was the consensus that the Board should be gradually reconstituted primarily from the point of view of having representation on the Board which would take into account the interests of Panama.

I set forth at some length the political problems with the Republic of Panama resulting from the Canal Zone. I pointed out that our relations with Panama were in a sense an index of our relations with Latin America as a whole and that Latin Americans tended to judge our attitude to small countries by our treatment of Panama. I also said that we had a particular responsibility toward Panama since we were, in a sense, responsible for its status as an independent country and that Panama seemed to be becoming a second focus (after Guatemala) of communist activity and that this activity was made easier for the communists by any discrimination against the Panamanians. I said that when I visited successively Panama and Venezuela a few months ago I was struck by the parallel between the situations of our oil companies in Venezuela and the Panama Canal on the one hand and those of Anglo-Iranian and the Suez Canal on the other. I said that I felt that as between the oil companies in Venezuela and the Canal Zone administration the oil companies were doing a far better job of public relations with regard to the local population. I expressed agreement with Mr. Bendetsen to the effect that it was not necessarily an objective of our policy to equalize wage scales between Americans and "local rate" employees. However, I felt that we should work in this direction; that we should reduce recruitment of personnel in this country; and that we should give greater opportunities for promotion to Panamanians. I also said that we should immediately improve the situation of "local rate" employees in regard to retirement compensation. Finally I expressed the view that we should completely overhaul the relations between the Canal Zone administration and the Republic of Panama.

Mr. Bendetsen expressed general agreement with my point of view and said that he had become so concerned about the whole problem of the relations between Panama and the Canal that he had taken on Colonel Beasley as a full time consultant on Canal affairs. He also said that Colonel Beasley was leaving for Panama on December 26 and that Mr. Bendetsen himself would go to Panama about January 7. Mr. Bendetsen asked that I accompany him to Panama and also that I send an officer familiar with Panamanian matters to consult with

Col. Beasley during the latter's visit. I agreed to do that and subsequently asked that Mr. Sowash be in Panama by January 2 although I told him that I could not go. Mr. Bendetsen also said that he would begin immediately a reconstitution of the Board of the Company and that as a first step he would like to see me become a member of the Board and I agreed that I would serve if requested. Mr. Bendetsen also suggested the creation of an inter-departmental advisory group to the Secretary of the Army [2] in regard to Canal Zone matters not falling within the competence of the Board of the Company. I supported this proposal and I suggested as a basis for the proposed group's work, the McSherry Report of 1947.[3]

[2] Frank Pace, Jr.

[3] In January 1947, Brigadier General Frank J. McSherry (ret.) was appointed Special Advisor on labor relations to the Governor of the Canal Zone, in part for the purpose of conducting an investigation of labor conditions and practices in the Canal Zone; for documentation relating to the investigation and the subsequent report (known as the McSherry Report), see Foreign Relations, 1947, vol. VIII, pp. 948 ff.

719.001/12–2651

The Ambassador in Panama (Wiley) to the Secretary of State

SECRET PANAMÁ, December 26, 1951.

No. 452

Subject: Communist Progress in Panama

The Embassy reported at some length on the current political situation of Panama in Despatch No. 365, of November 23, 1951.[1]

Since then, Communist activities have become increasingly active and tangible while Communist leadership in the students' strike and civil disturbance has emerged visibly to the forefront.

The proximity of Guatemala, the visits to Panamá of ex-President Arévalo and the suspect activities in Panamá of Sr. Benitez Bone, the Guatemalan Minister, suggest a probable connection between the two countries in the coordination of Communist plans. This is supported in Panamá by the circumstance that every indication points to outside guidance. Indeed, it might be surmised that at least so far as Panamá is concerned Guatemala is the operational headquarters of the Communists and that Arévalo may be the chief of operations.

The Communists invariably aim at targets of strategic value. There are two in this area: 1) the International Railways in Guatemala which connect the Caribbean and the Pacific—Puerto Barrios to San José—and 2) the Panama Canal.

[1] Not printed.

The Communists already may have come close to scoring a fatal hit on the railway. Presumably the Canal comes next. To carry out Communist designs on the Canal, there are two principal techniques which may be employed. The first, of course, is sabotage. This, for obvious reasons, would be reserved for the culminating moment of a great emergency. The second would be to undermine the American position in the Republic of Panamá.

That the second is already being attempted is more than evident. Moreover, the means available for Communist machinations and the propitious conditions of leaderless confusion existing in the Republic itself suggest that this danger should be viewed most seriously.

The Communist Party in Panamá according to reliable information has only a membership of about 700, which is disarmingly small. It has shown no interest in obtaining recognition as a national party.

However, the Communist Party of Panamá may be compared to the Tudeh Party in Iran, and in spite of its diminutive size it may be regarded as a highly effective instrument. First of all, it is unique among the political parties of Panamá in being entirely cohesive and perfectly disciplined. It clearly follows with unquestioning obedience directives from abroad. Moreover, each of the 700 members is undoubtedly a trained agent; thus, the 700 represent leaders, not just rank and file. Viewed in this light, the Partido del Pueblo is far from a negligible factor.

In connection with the card-bearing membership of the Communist Party, it may be pointed out that the Embassy has no information on which to base a calculation of the overall strength of the Communist cadres. Estimates of crypto-Communists, candidates for membership and other neophytes, fellow-travelers, and members of Communist front organizations are not available. Moreover, there are many sympathizers among the economically-depressed, the pseudo-intellectuals, the exotically idealistic, and the anti-Americans. Last, but not least, there are leaders of the conventional political groups who either willingly or tacitly accept Communist collaboration.[2] This phenomenon notably characterizes the coalition of forces opposing the presidential candidacy of Colonel José Remon Cantera.[3] Clearly the illusion persists among them that one may use the Communists politically to one's own advantage.

---

[2] In a memorandum dated July 20, 1951, the Officer in Charge of Central America and Panama Affairs (Siracusa) had stated in part the following: "The United States has no quarrel with Panamanian nationalism per se; the danger lies in the willingness of individuals of this type to cooperate with and lend themselves to the purposes of truly communistic elements, as past experience in Panama and elsewhere has shown". (719.001/7–2051)

[3] Police Chief Remón's decision to accept nomination for the presidency had touched off a political crisis in October. Pertinent documents are in decimal file 719.00.

The Communists, since the overthrow of President Arnulfo Arias, to which they contributed,[4] have consolidated their position and have assumed increasingly great authority in inspiring and leading popular manifestations. Their activities have become more overt and their penetration is deep over a broad and deep front.

Communist influences have penetrated the Presidential Palace, the Government, governmental agencies, the University, the entire school system of the Republic, the Frente Patriótico and the bourgeois press.

Indeed, Communist operations in Panamá have met for many months with almost unchallenged and unbroken success. The United States still has considerable influence with the present government; otherwise, the American position is weak and is deteriorating. There is no American counterweight to Communist penetration of the University or the schools, nor are there any champions of the United States among the organs of the press. In Panamá, the friends of the United States, though sincere, are for the most part platonic or helpless. The opponents, though, are active and the many who are either indifferent or neutral toward the United States may be only counted as liabilities unless they can be reached by propaganda.

The foregoing brief statement of the situation is pointed up when considered in the light of general conditions prevailing in the Republic. As matters now stand in Panamá, the conjuncture of circumstances could hardly be more favorable for Communist activities. There are simultaneously a grave and deepening economic crisis and a bitter, indeed, a vicious political struggle for the Presidency, involving political campaigns without program or platform. All of the economic weakness and the political evils of the structure of the nation have risen to the surface. They might easily erupt.

The economic problems of Panamá, the consequence of ancient and misguided trends, are well known to the Department. However, it now seems evident that while the Department studies or initiates long-range projects with a view to remedying the basic causes of Panamá's economic illness, immediate steps should be taken to alleviate its symptoms in the exigent interests of political expediency.

For example, Canal Zone purchases in the Republic should be increased and expedited in so far as possible and building projects already approved in the Canal Zone should be initiated at the earliest possible moment. This work should be undertaken on a basis of urgency, with maximum employment; there should be as much overtime as possible. Also, some way should be sought promptly to relieve

---

[4] In despatch 50, from Panamá, July 20, 1951, Chargé Wise had stated in part that "despite the fact that the political and governmental confusion in Panamá during and following the overthrow of Arnulfo Arias presented what appeared to be a golden opportunity, the Communist Partido del Pueblo's lack of efficient organization prevented it from taking an active or important role in the change of Government". (719.00/7–2051) the financial situation of the government in so far as public works are concerned.

The presidential elections will take place on May 11. The political campaigns are already in full swing, the country is still harassed by a students' strike, the government is worried by reports of gun-running by would-be revolutionary elements and, finally, all are agreed that there is a probability of serious popular disorders.

It is, therefore, important that any steps that may be contemplated be taken at once if any real advantage is to be gained from them. As the basic line of approach to the problem, I would suggest that emphasis be placed on any measure that would immediately stimulate employment and thus produce a flow of money into the pockets of the people. Such an approach would afford great relief to many, it would sterilize sections of the population ripe for Communist exploitation and it could have profound effect in general—if action were taken without delay.

It is indeed urgently desirable to bring economic alleviation to those strata of the Panamanian people that are particularly hard hit by the current depression. This is illustrated by the fact that it is to them that the present Communist drive is spearheaded. The Partido del Pueblo is now making a complete census of the unemployed, is seeking them out in their houses and proselytizing them in the streets. This is not only true in the terminal cities, but in the interior as well, where something like one-half of the Party membership is actively engaged. It may be added that in addition to the Chiriquí Land Company (United Fruit), special Communist attention is now being dedicated to the villages along the Trans-Isthmian Highway.

The acceleration of the building program in the Canal Zone is presumably an administrative matter susceptible to an immediate solution if the Secretary of the Army and Governor of the Canal Zone should concur. In connection with the financing of the Point Four Program and Panamanian public works, a credit, say, of $500,000 would suffice to give an instantaneous stimulus to reviving existing programs now precariously bogged down by the fiscal difficulties of the Government.

In this connection, it may be added that the new Minister for Public Works, Sr. César Guillen, has shown character, energy and considerable capacity for decision in the short time he has been in office. When he recently entered the Cabinet, he discovered that his predecessor, Sr. Norberto Navarro, had bequeathed him a budgetary deficit of $1,500,000. In consequence, he was obliged to suspend practically all the public works projects of his Ministry, thus precipitating additional unemployment. His decision was made necessary by Panamá's imminent obligation to meet its financial commitment in connection with the forthcoming construction of a sector of the Inter-American Highway.

How such a $500,000 credit or its equivalent could be found or made available is beyond the scope of conjecture of the Embassy. However, the amount is so small in comparison with the stakes involved that I deeply hope the Department can discover the necessary ways and means therefor. The aforesaid amount could prime the pump admirably for the short pre-election period. This is a country and a moment where small sums wisely spent could play an important role. Moreover, there is no substitute weapon at our disposition at this moment.

A purely political approach to the problems of Panamá is more difficult. As the Department will recall, the ex-Chief of Police, Colonel Remón, supported by a very effective political machine, is running for the presidency against Roberto Chiari, wealthy representative of the "collar and tie" class. Behind Chiari is a loose but powerful "anti-militarist" coalition, comprising disparate elements ranging incongruously from the ultra-conservative to the Communist.

Colonel Remón, opposed by the Communists, has long been their avowed enemy. The Communists in opposing him have found ready allies. These alliances have engendered great tolerance of Communist activities, even to the point where the Communists have been able to assume open and undisputed leadership of popular agitation.

The only identity of purpose or program that binds together the Chiari supporters is their common determination to prevent the election of Remón. Very reputable elements among them would not hesitate to provoke serious public disorders for the purpose, and there is no convincing reason to suppose that the Communists would not employ, if necessary, their decisive technique of political murder. The Department will recall the upheaval that followed the killing of Gaitan [5] in Colombia and how effective was the assassination of General Razmara in Iran.[6]

Colonel Remón is known to be friendly toward the United States and to favor close collaboration with the civil and military authorities of the Canal Zone. This alone would make him anathema in Communistic eyes. The possibility of his elimination by violence may not be altogether farfetched.

Were the elections to be held in an atmosphere of political tranquility, Colonel Remón would have a good chance of election. If he had the support of ex-President Arnulfo Arias, which is not impossible, his election would be a foregone conclusion. However, with the prospect of civil strife and Communist determination to prevent his [5] Jorge Eliécer Gaitán, popular leader of the Liberal Party in Colombia, was assassinated on April 9, 1948; for documentation on his assassination and its impact on the Ninth International Conference of American States, which had convened at Bogotá, March 30, 1948, see Foreign Relations, 1948, vol. IX, pp. 39 ff.

[6] For documentation relating to the assassination of Premier Ali Razmara, see volume V.

reaching the Palace, there can, I fear, be no assurance of his gaining the Presidency.

If Colonel Remón can be eliminated and Chiari elected, the latter, as President, would be in a weak position. He could count on no effective strength among his supporters were he to face only the normal opposition which usually confronts the Chief Executive in Panamá. In this connection, it may be noted that in turbulent Panamá only four out of 27 presidents of the Republic have ever completed their elected terms of office. On top of this, Chiari would find his erstwhile friends, the Communists, adroitly manipulating the situation in order to make his tenure of office impossible.

The purpose behind the Communist line in Panamá seems clear; it is to foment a crisis bordering on the chaotic wherein the Panamanian friends of Arévalo, either as a junta or otherwise, would take over the government. Thereupon, Panamá would fall into the pattern of Guatemala.[7]

What has happened in Guatemala affords a foretaste of what might be expected in Panamá. And, in the final analysis, all that would stand in the way of success, should Arevalistas dominate the Government of Panamá, would be the National Police. In such a crisis, the Police would not be pitting its strength against the hard core of 700 Communists alone, but against the "anti-militarist" elements. This would include the same mob that tasted blood in May. Even with Colonel Remón, the "strong man" of Panamá, back in control of the Police, the outcome of a head-on clash may not be too confidently forecast. Colonel Remón, in crisis, is known to have moments of great vacillation and indecision.

The political picture of Panamá affords very little consolation or reason for confidence. Moreover, there is very little that may be suggested in order better to meet the political exigencies of the situation.

The Embassy is prudently careful not to be involved in any way, directly or indirectly, in the current domestic political conflict. Nevertheless, the American eggs all seem to be in one basket, that of Colonel Remón, since he is the sole anti-Communist leader in the entire political panorama. Though the basket, as the Department is well aware, is far from commendable, Colonel Remón still remains an irreplaceable faut de mieux.

To meet the political situation, there seems to be very little that can be done outside of an immediate economic "shot in the arm" except to dedicate vigilant attention to developments and greatly to increase anti-Communist propaganda of all kinds. This difficulty emphasizes the essential importance of prompt economic aid as a purely political measure. But, of course, economic aid by itself is not enough. Much attention should be given to intensifying propaganda efforts.[8]

[7] For documentation concerning United States policy toward Guatemala, see pp. 1415 ff.

If Panamá should fall into the orbit of Guatemala, the security of the Canal will become, of course, a matter of immediate preoccupation. It is certainly desirable that everything feasible and proper be done to forestall any such catastrophe. Pennies spent now could save dollars in the future; perhaps dollars spent too late.

JOHN C. WILEY

[8] This subject was discussed at a meeting at the Department of State on November 29, attended by the following officials of the Bureau of Inter-American Affairs: Mr. Mann, Ambassador Nufer, Director of the Office of Regional American Affairs Edward G. Cale, Director of the Office of South American Affairs Fletcher Warren, Intelligence Adviser Hobart A. Spalding, and Public Affairs Adviser Ralph Hilton. In a memorandum to Mr. Thurman L. Barnard, General Manager of the International Information and Educational Exchange Program, dated December 5, 1951, Mr. Hilton described the meeting in part as follows: "The meeting agreed that the situation calls for a concerted effort by the U.S. to create deterrents to Panamanian tolerance of local Communism. Measures in the field of public opinion should, it was decided, include an informational campaign by USIE on themes designed to stimulate opposition to Communism and increase public awareness of Panama's mutuality of interest with the United States". (719.00/12–551)

PARAGUAY

UNITED STATES INTEREST IN THE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF PARAGUAY

834.10/4–2651

The Ambassador in Paraguay (Tewksbury) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL — ASUNCIÓN, April 26, 1951.

No. 745

Subject: Proposed Credit for Paraguay.

In the latter part of 1950 a plan was developed in Paraguay directed particularly toward the increase of agricultural production in the country. Various Government offices contributed to the project, and officials of the Food Supply Division (STICA) of the Institute of Inter-American Affairs [1] also cooperated. As it developed, the plan contemplated seeking a credit for approximately $10,000,000, which was to be devoted primarily to the purchase of agricultural machinery and equipment. Part of the funds (approximately $654,000) was to be used for the purchase of road making and road maintenance equipment together with trucks and spare parts, and some other funds were to be used for the purchase of insecticides, veterinary supplies, et cetera. It was expected that the importation of this equipment and the utilization of the credit would cover a three year period.

While there was some discussion of the plan by Government officials during the succeeding months, it was not actively discussed and given general consideration by the Cabinet until early in April of the current year. At that time it was decided by the Government that a formal application for a credit of $10,000,000 would be made. It was also decided that Mr. Persio da Silva, formerly Sub-Secretary of Finance and recently named as Secretary to the Paraguayan Embassy in Washington, and Mr. Victor A. Pane, a member of the Administrative Council of the Bank of Paraguay, should present the project to banking authorities in Washington. No decision was reached as to whether the loan application should be made to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development or to the Export-Import Bank.

[1] The Institute of Inter-American Affairs (IIAA) was established in 1942 and it became a United States Government corporation in 1947. Its purpose was to aid governments in the Western Hemisphere by promoting technical programs and projects for health, sanitation, and food supply; as of mid-1950 the IIAA operated in conjunction with the Technical Cooperation Administration (TCA) in Latin America. For background information on the IIAA, see the statement made by Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs Willard L. Thorp before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on June 10, 1949, printed in the Department of State Bulletin, June 19, 1949, pp. 795–797. For information on the activities of the IIAA and its relationship with TCA in 1950, see the editorial note in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, p. 679. For additional documentation on the subject, see pp. 1038 ff.

The fact that Paraguay has been in arrears in the payment of interest and amortization on the Export–Import Bank loans may have been a determining factor in delaying specific action on the new credit. Since the first of this year monthly payments averaging slightly over $200,000 have been made through April. The arrearage, which ran to something over $800,000, has thus been reduced as of April 1 to something in the neighborhood of $350,000. There has been some indication that an effort will be made on or before May 1 to bring this account up to date. Officials of the Government and the Bank of Paraguay realize the importance of clearing up existing arrearages if any new loan is to be obtained. The past difficulties have been due almost entirely to shortages of exchange, but the drastic restrictions imposed on imports during the last half of 1950 and during the current year have materially improved this situation.

The subject of the loan was not officially brought to the attention of Embassy officials until the meeting of the Joint Commission for Technical Assistance held on April 17. At that time the Minister of Finance (a member of the Joint Commission) stated that he desired to inform the Commission of the decision of the Government regarding the loan project. (The only members of the Joint Commission present at the meeting were the Minister of Finance [2] and his alternate, Mr. Victor A. Pane, and the American Ambassador and his alternate, Mr. John C. Shillock, Jr. Others attending this meeting included the Minister of Agriculture [3] and Acting Minister of Foreign Affairs, the Minister of Public Works,[4] Mr. Persio da Silva, and Mr. Antonio Saldivar, General Accountant of the Ministry of Finance.) The Minister of Finance explained that the purpose of the credit was to permit an expansion of agricultural production through a modernization and mechanization of agricultural methods in Paraguay. He also explained that part of the loan would be devoted to road making equipment for the maintenance of existing roads and for the construction of approximately one hundred kilometers per year of new roads to facilitate the transportation of products to market.

The Minister explained that Messrs. da Silva and Pane would visit Washington for the purpose of initiating the negotiations, and explained that they would be prepared to supply all information required to the banking entities with which the discussion will be held.

---

[2] Ramón Mendez Paiva.
[3] Angel Florentin Peña.
[4] Tomás Romero Pereira.

A general discussion of the project then ensued, and it developed that the proposed loan covered exclusively the importation of equipment and materials for agriculture and highway use, and made no provision whatever for financing the farmers, for providing new storage facilities, for marketing the increased production nor for processing this. The Paraguayan Government expects to be able to undertake the guaraní financing of the farmers through agricultural credits or supervised credits, and Mr. da Silva estimated that there would be a thirty to fifty per cent increase in agricultural production under the proposed plan during the first year, and that there would be a gradual increase thereafter.

The Minister of Finance explained that Paraguay hoped to obtain generous terms in any loan arrangement, with repayments extending over a period of fifteen years and interest to commence in the third year. He suggested that the appointment of a joint United States-Paraguay commission to supervise the administration of the loan might make the project more acceptable to banking interests, and indicated that this would be agreeable to Paraguay.

President Federico Chaves, in an address on April 18 before the opening session of the First Congress of Commercial Entities, stressed the importance of improving agricultural methods in Paraguay in order to expand production. He said, "Without mechanization the increase in our production will never be in accordance with the requirements of our progress". He continued, ". . . the Government will be able to announce within a few weeks negotiations leading to the carrying out of a three year plan which will include the procurement of substantial quantities of implements and tools to supplement the individual efforts of the agriculturist for immediate returns and to further the training of rural workers through the preparation of an adequate Professional Institute, and the creation of ten experimental stations where they will receive practical instruction in the use of agricultural implements and better utilization of the land".

While specific reference was not made to loan negotiations, it is clear that the Government is definitely and publicly committed to some program for agricultural development. When the details of the project become public, as they inevitably will, the progress and results of the negotiations will be closely watched and will most certainly have an important influence in the local political situation.

Messrs. da Silva and Pane visited the Embassy on April 19, at which time there was a further discussion of the project. It was explained to them that whether the project was discussed with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development or with the Export-Import Bank, full particulars would be desired regarding such subjects as ways and means of financing the farmers in Paraguay for the full utilization of the agricultural equipment, its distribution, and the plans for servicing the loan and full particulars regarding the handling (transportation, storage, processing, marketing, et cetera) of the increased agricultural production. It was also explained that considerable time would be required to conclude any negotiations of this character, and that it might be desirable for the foreign banking institutions to assign a group of experts to study the entire needs of the country and determine whether the proposed loan met the essential requirements of the country for a sound economic development. Messrs. Pane and da Silva felt that they had adequate material at least to start discussions, and stated that they expected to arrive in Washington on or about May 5.

Messrs. Pane and da Silva offered to supply the Embassy with full details and supporting data for the project, but up to the present time this has not been received. The only information which the Embassy has regarding the project is contained in the "Plan of Expansion of the National Agricultural Production—1951–1953", which contains a general statement regarding the purposes of the credit and a number of tables indicating types of equipment, et cetera, to be obtained under the loan. It is believed that a copy of this report is available in the Department, and that it was prepared almost entirely by officials of STICA.

Preliminary Appraisal of Project

In my opinion it is unfortunate that the Paraguayan Government should decide to propose the negotiation of a credit of $10,000,000 on the basis of the present project. The project comprises only the estimated requirements of the country for the mechanization of its agricultural production with minor attention to highway development, plant disease control, et cetera. Agriculture and livestock combined comprise by far the most important factor in Paraguyan economy, but increased production in itself will not provide a balanced economic development for the country.

The failure of the project to consider and provide for other phases of agricultural development makes the project incomplete and possibly unsound. There are a number of vital problems in the distribution field which should be at least simultaneously considered and provided for. Facilities for storage and processing of agricultural products are entirely inadequate, and before any large scale project for increased agricultural production is undertaken, the over-all requirements of the country should be considered.

The Government proposes that the distribution and financing of equipment for the farmers would be handled through the agricultural credit (crop financing) and the Supervised Agricultural Credit Organization, both of which are departments in the Bank of Paraguay. The administration of the Supervised Agricultural Credit Organization is notoriously bad, and representatives of the Federal Reserve Bank now in Paraguay have recommended that this Department be withdrawn from the Bank of Paraguay since it is not strictly a banking function. The Supervised Agricultural Credit Organization is a combination of agricultural extension work and financing for farmers and homesteaders. According to Messrs. Pane and da Silva, the distribution of agricultural implements and machinery obtained through the credit would be through the Bank of Paraguay. There would be many objections to a provision of this sort. The past record of the Bank of Paraguay in handling the distribution of machinery and parts has been extremely bad.

There is no question but that Paraguay needs outside financial assistance in order to carry out any type of economic development program. Some progress is being made in the solution of internal financial problems, which should provide a sounder basis for the extension of development credits. Although there are certain features of the present project which appear unsound, it is felt that after a full study of Paraguay's needs and capacity there might well be justification for acceptance of a modified plan. It is hoped that sympathetic consideration will be given to the proposals of Messrs. da Silva and Pane in order to assist Paraguay to adopt a sound program for economic development.[5]

HOWARD H. TEWKSBURY

[5] Representatives of the Paraguayan Government arrived in Washington in May to initiate discussions with officials of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD) concerning a loan for agricultural development. A note dated May 28, 1951, by the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs, Edward G. Miller, Jr., to the Director of the Office of South American Affairs, Fletcher Warren, reads as follows:

"As agreed upon at the staff meeting this morning, I telephoned Mr. Black, President of the International Bank, and asked him to give prompt attention to the Paraguayan mission and to inform the mission promptly if it should develop that the Bank is not interested in working with Paraguay." (834.10/5–2851)

834.20/10–2651

The Ambassador in Paraguay (Tewksbury) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL ASUNCIÓN, October 26, 1951.

No. 246

Subject: IBRD Loan for Agricultural Development in Paraguay.

A number of changes have occurred in Paraguay in the six month interval since submitting the Embassy's despatch No. 745 of April 26.[1] Some of these changes substantially alter the comments contained in the despatch referred to, and it is believed that the following may be of value to the Department in any discussions which there may be of the proposed loan.[2]

[1] Supra.

At the time the despatch was submitted, the loan project was for $10,000,000 and the comments referred particularly to a loan of that magnitude. It is understood that after a detailed survey of the situation by experts of the IBRD[3] the proposed loan was reduced to $5,000,000. I believe that a program of this size, part of the funds being utilized for highway equipment, would provide a sound program for agricultural development. The expansion thereby provided in agricultural production would represent a more normal growth, and would present fewer problems in the way of transportation, processing, et cetera.

In despatch No. 745 reference was made to the very unsatisfactory situation existing with respect to the Supervised Agricultural Credit Organization. It is understood that this matter was discussed by Mr. Burland and his associates with officials of the Paraguayan Government. The Government has now a decree-law drafted which completely reorganizes the Supervised Agricultural Credit Organization and sets it up as a separate entity, completely dissociated from the Bank of Paraguay. The decree is understood to have the President's approval, and awaits only the necessary approval of the Council of State.

As mentioned in the despatch, it was suggested to the Minister of Finance that a study of the economic situation in Paraguay by a group of banking experts might be desirable. This was undertaken by Mr. Burland and his associates. We do not have available in the Embassy information regarding the findings of the IBRD Commission, but it is our understanding that all phases of the economic and financial situation were carefully studied and the IBRD group undoubtedly had access to much data which is not available to the Embassy.

While the project in its present size appears to be sound, the Embassy is of the opinion that there should be reasonably close supervision of the loan program. It is believed that the Paraguayan Government would be agreeable to control provisions in the loan agreement, and it is believed that this would provide a valuable safeguard for the future. As pointed out in despatch No. 745, the record of the Bank of Paraguay and the Supervised Agricultural Credit Organization, since the Civil War of 1947, has not been good in matters relating to the distribution of agricultural machinery, et cetera. If controls were established, provision could be made that the funds

---

[2] In telegram 63, October 23, 1951, the Secretary had requested from Ambassador Tewksbury "current comments" concerning the loan proposal in part because "NAC agencies" were questioning the credit-worthiness of the Paraguayan Government (834.20/9–651).

[3] The Bank had sent a four-man mission headed by Mr. Elmer G. Burland, Financial Advisor to the Bank's Loan Director, to Paraguay in August, for the purpose of studying the country's economic position and reviewing the agricultural development program (398.14/8–1051).

would be utilized only as fast as implements and equipment are being efficiently distributed and utilized by agriculturists. If there is no control there would be the danger that equipment might be received in amounts greater than could be efficiently distributed. There have also been reports that Paraguayan imports of small agricultural implements have been clandestinely shipped to Argentina. A control on the part of the lending institution would assist in preventing this type of traffic. I believe that Mr. Burland and his associates are fully aware of the need for adequate controls in order to obtain the maximum benefits from a credit and to safeguard the interests of the IBRD.

It is believed that with reasonable safeguards a loan of $5,000,000 would be justified and would be sound. If there is to be any sound economic development in Paraguay, priority should be given to the development of agriculture.

HOWARD H. TEWKSBURY

NAC Files, Lot 60 D 137 [1]

Memorandum by the National Advisory Council Staff Committee to the National Advisory Council

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] December 4, 1951.

Document No. 1226

Subject: Proposed International Bank Loan to Paraguay

Problem

The U.S. Executive Director [2] on the International Bank has requested NAC consideration of a proposed $5 million loan to the Government of Paraguay to finance the foreign exchange costs of an agricultural development program (NAC Document No. 1209 and NAC Staff Document No. 545).[3]

Discussion

1. The loan application. The proposed loan would finance the foreign costs of equipment, supplies, etc. for agricultural development to be used in about 1½–3 years; some items would be obtained and put to use very quickly, while others would serve Paraguay's needs over a longer period. The largest category, valued at about $3 million, includes chiefly hand utensils and animal-drawn equipment to be sold to individual farmers. The next largest, of $1.2 million, covers veterinary supplies, insecticides, fertilizers and fencing materials. Although these articles are usually viewed as goods used up in the process of production rather than as capital equipment appropriate for long-term financing, in this case it is considered that they are essential to the over-all program. Other items include equipment for farm machinery pools, road building equipment, and a small fleet of trucks.

[1] Master file of the documents of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems (NAC) for the years 1945–1958, as maintained by the Bureau of Economic Affairs of the Department of State and preserved as item 70 of Federal Records Center Accession 71 A 6682.

[2] William McChesney Martin, Jr.

[3] Neither printed.

Interest on the loan would be at 4-⅜ percent. The 14 semiannual amortization payments would begin May 1, 1954, but the greater part of the amortization—$4.4 million—would occur in the years 1957–60. The International Bank is satisfied that private financing of the proposed program is not available.

2. The program. The farm equipment and supplies would be sold for cash or credit by the Credito Agricola de Habilitacion (CAH) or the Bank of Paraguay. To assure proper utilization of the goods, agricultural extension services would be furnished under a reorganized and expanded operation of the CAH. The IIAA and its local affiliate known as STICA, continuing the technical assistance furnished since 1942, would make available supervision on which the over-all success of the agricultural program will largely depend. The loan project was, in fact, prepared in collaboration with IIAA and STICA, which recommend its approval. The loan is also recommended by the U.S. Ambassador to Paraguay, who is co-chairman of the U.S.-Paraguayan Joint Commission for Economic Development.

The proposed agricultural program is expected to increase the land under crop cultivation from 302,000 hectares to 354,000 hectares, leading to greater production of manioc (cassava), cotton, corn, peanuts, peas, sugar cane, tobacco and other crops. The increased exportable cotton production would be about 5 million pounds at 1948–50 average yields and would be worth about $1.5 million at 30 cents a pound. Increased exports might also be expected of tobacco, vegetable oils and possibly other items.

3. Economic development needs. It appears that in a sound economic development program for Paraguay priority should be given to the development of agriculture. It may be noted, however, that transportation facilities (docks, barges, and the railroad) are considered to be inadequate, and loans in excess of $5 million may be sought for their improvement. In addition, power generation has been insufficient in the area around Asuncion, where a large part of the population is concentrated, and the area does not have an adequate water supply; foreign loans may be requested for these purposes within a few years.

4. Debt service capacity. As a point of departure, it may be noted that the NAC Working Group on debt service capacity of foreign countries suggested that Paraguay could service additional external dollar debt of about $4–6 million during the next four years. A recent IBRD staff report also concluded that Paraguay could assume some additional foreign debt service charges, although its creditworthiness in dollars is rather tight.

The largest element of service on outstanding debt is in cruzeiros on two Brazilian loans, one of which Paraguay hopes to settle for local currency without actual transfer of foreign exchange. Even if this is done, Paraguay's cruzeiro service requirements will be far greater than its 1949 or 1950 cruzeiro earnings. This service may require the use of dollars, therefore, unless Brazil, which in recent months has been short of sterling, would accept (with agreement on the part of the British) payment of part or all in pounds sterling. Total dollar and cruzeiro debt service in 1953–56 is expected to average from $1.47 to $2.25 million a year, equivalent to between 10 and 15.5 percent of Paraguay's 1950 dollar and cruzeiro exchange receipts, the upper figures including full service on both Brazilian loans and the lower figures excluding the loan which Paraguay is seeking to renegotiate. The service schedule for the proposed IBRD loan would raise this service requirement by about $.4 million a year in 1954–56, or to 13–18.5 percent of dollar and cruzeiro receipts in 1950. In 1957–60, when the major part of the proposed loan would be retired, the total annual debt service (all in dollars or cruzeiros) would average about $2 million. To the extent that the increased production resulting from the loan program could be sold abroad for dollars, there would be an improvement in Paraguay's ability to carry these relatively heavy debt service burdens.

Conceivably, of course, the dollar receipts of Paraguay might be in excess of its dollar requirements for imports and other purposes, in which case the more pertinent ratio might be the relatively low percentage between total debt service and total exchange receipts, rather than the high ratio in terms of dollars and cruzeiros. During 1950 and January–August 1951 Paraguay did in fact receive more dollars than it paid out. It should be noted, however, that this was possible only by means of stringency in exchange allocations, with a curtailment of dollar imports. It may be difficult for Paraguay to hold dollar imports to such a low level indefinitely. However, Paraguay's dollar situation is expected to be improved by some $600,000 a year as a result of increased U.S. expenditures in Paraguay in cooperative and technical aid program over the next four years.

After full or partial default during 1932–44, Paraguay resumed service on its sterling debt on an adjusted basis in 1945, and the bonds were recently quoted in London about 63, to yield 6.4 percent to maturity at the call price of 70. Service on the two Export–Import Bank credits was usually in arrears from August 1943, until a maximum of arrearages was reached of $950,000 in January, 1951. However, this sum was accumulated almost entirely over the period August 1949–January 1951. Even in this period token payments were continued. As a result of strenuous effort, this arrearage was liquidated and payments became current in July, 1951. Paraguay has a small ($34,000) lend-lease obligation on which no payment has been made since 1945.

5. Paraguay's international economic position. Paraguay's gold and foreign exchange holdings rose from $3.1 million at the end of 1949 to the equivalent of $12.5 million to the end of 1950 and the equivalent of $20.6 million at the end of September, 1951, reflecting chiefly an increased value of exports, a decline of imports and an accumulation of Argentine pesos through non-trade transactions. At the end of August, 1951, the indicated holdings of dollars were $7.3 million, sterling holdings were equivalent to $3.6 million and holdings of Argentine pesos were equivalent to $8.1 million. Paraguay's diversified exports of lumber, quebracho, cotton, meat, hides, tobacco, vegetable oils, etc., and the relative stability of the various items represent factors of strength in its balance of payments outlook. The present multiple rate system of Paraguay which was established in March, 1951, has produced better results than the previous system, although the domestic inflation may weaken the balance of payments if it is allowed to continue unchecked.

6. Paraguay's domestic financial situation. Inflation has been extreme in Paraguay, the cost of living index rising almost 500 percent during the last six years. The inflation can be attributed almost entirely to an expansion of bank credit, especially to the extension of credit by the Bank of Paraguay to the Government. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1952, the Government of Paraguay has budgeted revenues of Gs 140 million and expenditures of Gs 170 million, indicating an expected deficit of Gs 30 million. It is hoped, however, that with the assistance of technicians under the Point IV program [4] the Government will be able to reorganize the Finance Ministry, institute tax reforms and improve its control over expenditures. Success in these matters would materially improve the long-run outlook for the balance of payments and for the ability of Paraguay to service additional debt.

7. Availability of U.S. materials. NAC approval of the consideration of this loan application would carry with it no assurance that the U.S. materials for which financing is sought will be available.[5]

---

[4] In Latin America Point IV technical assistance programs were administered by the IIAA.

[5] On December 4, 1951, the NAC advised the US Executive Director on the IBRD that it approved his consideration in the Board of Executive Directors a loan of $5,000,000 by the IBRD to Paraguay to finance the external costs of an agricultural development program; the Export-Import Bank concurred in the action, but expressed the view that the amount of the loan was excessive (Department of State NAC Files, Document No. 88, December 4, 1951, Lot 60 D 137, Box 369). The loan was publicly announced by the Board of Directors of the IBRD on December 7, 1951. Under the terms of the Loan Agreement, however, the loan could not become effective until the Crédito Agrícola de Habilitación, one of the agencies to receive IBRD-financed goods for resale to Paraguayan farmers, improved certain of its financial procedures. In September 1952, after a number of reforms had been accomplished, the IBRD declared the loan effective up to the amount of $1,900,000. For further information, see International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, Eighth Annual Report to the Board of Governors, 1952–1953 (Washington, 1953), p. 35.

PERU

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND PERU[1]

723.5621/1–1051

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Duncan A. D. Mackay of the Office of Regional American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] January 10, 1951.

Subject: Peruvian Request for Warships

Participants: Ambassador Berckemeyer[2]
Señor Don German Aramburu L.,
Peruvian Minister Plenipotentiary, Counselor
Commander Juan Manuel Castro, Naval Attache
OSA—Mr. Warren[3]
Mr. McGinnis[4]
AR—Mr. Mackay

Ambassador Berckemeyer stated that he had received urgent instructions from Lima to press for the sale to Peru of either a heavy cruiser of the "Wichita" class, or a light cruiser of either the "Brooklyn" or "San Diego" classes; and, in addition to one of these cruisers, three destroyer escorts mounted with three-inch guns. A note of the Peruvian Embassy in this sense, dated January 9, 1950,[5] was presented to Mr. Warren.

Ambassador Berckemeyer explained that, due to the wide publicity given in the Latin American press of the sale to Argentina, Brazil and Chile of two light cruisers apiece,[6] the Junta was under considerable pressure to explain to the public why no naval vessels had been offered for sale to Peru by the U.S. Government at this time.

Mr. Warren reminded Ambassador Berckemeyer that during the visit of Admiral Saldias[7] to the U.S. in August, the Admiral had shown a disinclination to purchase the three 3-inch destroyer escorts which the Navy proposed to offer for sale to Peru, and had remained

[1] Continued from Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 982 ff.
[2] Fernando Berkemeyer.
[3] Fletcher Warren, Director, Office of South American Affairs.
[4] Edgar L. McGinnis, Jr.
[5] The referenced note, not printed, is dated January 9, 1951.
[6] For documentation on the negotiations leading to the sale of cruisers to these countries, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, pp. 599 ff.
[7] Roque A. Saldías, Peruvian Minister of Marine.

adamant in his preference for 5-inch destroyer escorts, which he was informed were not available since there were none in excess of U.S. requirements. Mr. Warren recalled that both he and Assistant Secretary Miller [8] had gone to the highest levels of the Department of the Navy on the matter while Admiral Saldias was here and were given the same reply. Since then no change had been indicated in the Peruvian attitude in this regard.

Ambassador Berckemeyer stated that he understood this perfectly. He indicated that Commander Castro had informed Admiral Miles' [9] office [10] in Navy earlier in the day of the decision of the Peruvian Government to accept 3-inch destroyer escorts if they were offered to Peru, and had also emphasized the prior urgency which the Peruvians attached to the purchase of a cruiser at this time if at all possible.

Mr. Mackay stated that Admiral Miles had informed him just before this meeting that the Navy Department was prepared to enter into naval staff conferences with the Peruvian naval representatives to discuss the terms and conditions incident to the sale of the destroyer escorts, once the Peruvians could indicate who would represent them in these conversations. Further authorization, however, would have to be received within the U.S. Government for the Navy Department to discuss the sale of any other type of vessel to Peru at this time. In this connection he stated the Navy wished to emphasize that the Peruvian Government should not become unduly optimistic, nor at the same time unduly depressed. Mr. Warren stated that the Peruvian Embassy would receive a reply to its note in this sense early next week.

Ambassador Berckemeyer thanked Mr. Warren for this information, and requested that the urgency of this Peruvian request be stressed when the matter is taken up with the Defense Department. Mr. Warren stated that the Department would do all it could to see that sympathetic consideration is given the Peruvian Government in this matter.

---

[8] Edward G. Miller, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.
[9] Rear Adm. Milton E. Miles, Director, Pan American Affairs and U.S. Naval Missions, Department of the Navy, and Senior Naval Delegate, Inter-American Defense Board.
[10] Office of the Deputy Chief of Naval Operations.

Editorial Note

On January 25, 1951, representatives of the United States and Peru signed at Lima a Point IV General Agreement for Technical Cooperation, which entered into force on January 15, 1953. The agreement was transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 773, from Lima, January 26, 1951, not printed (823.00–TA/1–2651). For text, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 2772, or United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), volume 4, page 132. For a press release, dated January 26, announcing the agreement, see the Department of State Bulletin, February 5, 1951, pages 219–220.

723.5621/3–2251

Memorandum of Telephone Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of North and West Coast Affairs (Krieg)

RESTRICTED [WASHINGTON,] March 22, 1951.

Subject: Destroyer Escorts for Peru

Participants: Ambassador Harold H. Tittmann,[1] Lima, Peru
William L. Krieg, Officer in Charge, North & West Coast Affairs

Ambassador Tittmann asked that the following message be transcribed:

"Admiral Saldias reports that he told Ambassador Berckemeyer by telephone this morning that unless Saldias received favorable views with respect to destroyer escorts by tomorrow Friday he will meet President Odria [2] Saturday morning and urge that Naval representatives to Foreign Ministers Conference [3] not accept and furthermore will recommend withdrawal Peruvian Naval Attachés from Washington. Unless he hears something favorable by tomorrow he will assume that no Naval aid will be forthcoming.

"Saldias feels it will be impossible to keep matter out of newspapers much longer and that whole affair will be known here by Saturday. In view of advanced stage of preparation for taking over destroyer escorts Saldias feels his position vis-à-vis his associates and the public will seem ridiculous.

"Contents of Foreign Minister's [4] call yesterday made known to Saldias especially admonition not to precipitate matter but later stated definitely he will proceed to above mentioned step on Saturday morning."

Mr. Krieg replied that he was sorry Admiral Saldias was taking such a high-handed attitude. He said that the Department, including Under Secretary Webb,[5] Deputy Under Secretary Matthews,[6] Mr. Miller and Mr. Warren had all taken a personal interest in this case and that Mr. Miller had gone to the Pentagon to discuss the matter with Admiral Sherman.[7] The present situation is that there appear to

---

[1] Harold H. Tittmann, Jr.
[2] Manuel A. Odría.
[3] Reference is to the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of American States, held at Washington, March 26–April 7, 1951. For documentation on the conference, see pp. 925 ff.
[4] Manuel C. Gallagher.
[5] James E. Webb, Under Secretary of State.
[6] H. Freeman Matthews, Deputy Under Secretary of State.
[7] Adm. Forrest P. Sherman, Chief of Naval Operations and member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

be excellent possibilities of a favorable outcome. The Peruvians should realize, Mr. Krieg continued, that this is not a matter which can be settled entirely within the executive branch of the Government and that it is necessary also to consult with certain important Congressional leaders. Very special efforts are being made to contact the necessary Congressmen, but there can be no guarantee that the consultations will be completed by tomorrow. We would consider it most unfortunate if the Peruvian Naval representatives were withdrawn since this Government does not like to negotiate under threat. Premature publicity in Lima might have the effect of disrupting the carefully laid plans which the Department has worked out in conjunction with the Naval authorities. Mr. Krieg therefore urged that Ambassador Tittmann counsel the Peruvians to "keep their shirts on" and not do anything rash at this time.

Ambassador Tittmann said that he was leaving in five minutes to confer with President Odria and would advise against precipitative action. He was particularly alarmed, however, because Admiral Saldias believes Ambassador Berckemeyer is in agreement with his proposed course of action. Ambassador Tittmann therefore suggested that the Department get in touch with Ambassador Berckemeyer at the earliest possible moment and explain to him as frankly as possible the present status of the affair and urge him also to advise his Government against rash measures.[8]

[8] A memorandum of a telephone conversation between Ambassador Tittmann and Mr. Krieg, dated March 23, 1951, reads in part as follows:

"Ambassador Tittmann telephoned and stated that the Peruvians are delighted with the information that they now have an excellent chance to obtain 3 destroyer escorts from the United States. He added that the Naval Advisers to the Foreign Ministers Meeting will leave Lima Saturday night and arrive in Washington Sunday in time to attend the opening session on Monday." (723. 5621/3–2351)

611.23/3–2251

Policy Statement Prepared in the Department of State

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] March 22, 1951.

PERU

A. OBJECTIVES

The US seeks to maintain Peru's support for our objectives in this Hemisphere and throughout the world. We wish to obtain a fair contribution from Peru to hemisphere security[1] through its continued collaboration in the United Nations and the Organization of American States, and by its acceptance of the role assigned to Peru in an agreed inter-American defense plan. We seek to encourage stability in government and the growth of democratic political institutions. Through positive cooperation in the economic field we seek to contribute to the economic development and stability essential to the attainment of other objectives. We particularly wish that Peru might supply increasing quantities of strategic raw materials for the civil and military economy of the US.

[1] Documentation concerning United States policy with respect to hemisphere defense and related matters may be found on pp. 985 ff.

B. POLICIES

Background. Our policies toward Peru have to take into account basic social and political conditions in that country. There has been bitter antagonism between the poverty-stricken mass of the population and the conservative propertied groups who have controlled the Government of Peru almost constantly since the achievement of Peruvian independence. This economic and social cleavage is aggravated to some extent by a racial issue, since the poor are largely of Indian and mixed blood, while the ruling group is largely of European stock.

The conservative groups, including the large landowners and the "commercial aristocracy", have generally resisted the demands for social reform and for the extension of political democracy. In this they have often been supported by, or have given their support to, military leaders who seize power by coup d'etat.

In 1945, Peru had its first extended experiment in political democracy. José Luis Bustamante y Rivero, a middle-of-the-road leader, was elected President with the support of Alianza Popular Revolucionaria Americana (APRA), the numerically strong anti-communist leftist party which professes to be the champion of democracy in Peru, and to speak for the Indian and mestizo masses. Divergence of objectives and the authoritarian pattern of APRA's party organization quickly cooled this political friendship, until Bustamante was forced to rely entirely on conservative support and the backing of Army leaders. One of the results of the persistent political tension was the boycott of Congress by the anti-APRA bloc, preventing the enactment of any legislation after February 1947.

In early October 1948 an unsuccessful revolt by naval units and civilians occurred. Charging that APRA was behind the attempt, Bustamante outlawed the party. Some of its leaders were imprisoned, while others went into hiding or into exile. Three weeks thereafter Bustamante was overthrown by a military revolt in Arequipa, with the probable financial support of the conservative civilian groups.

The resulting Military Junta, under General Manuel A. Odría, confirmed the interdict of APRA, and also outlawed the Communist Party. The Junta formally dissolved Congress, assumed legislative powers, and until July 28, 1950, governed as a dictatorship. Early in January 1950, the Junta issued a call for elections, which were held on

547-842—79——101

July 2, with Odría the only candidate for the presidency. The Government's control of the electoral machinery ensured a pro-Odría Congressional majority, but some opposition candidates were elected. The new Congress was installed, and the new half-civilian cabinet sworn in, on July 28.

Policies. Our relations with Peru have traditionally been friendly. Peru has been generally cooperative with the US in the Organization of American States, and in most of our inter-American policies and problems. Similarly, in the United Nations, Peru has been generally cooperative and has been of real assistance in promoting United States objectives in the economic and social, non-self-governing territories, and political and security fields. Only where there was a distinct Peruvian interest or bias as in the questions of relations with Spain, status of Jerusalem, and disposition of the Italian colonies has Peru opposed us on issues of the moment.

During World War II, despite some pro-German and pro-Italian sentiment, Peru leased us the military bases we needed, helped in anti-submarine patrols, and cooperated satisfactorily in our various procurement programs. In return we provided Peru with war materiel under the lend-lease, surplus property, and interim arms program agreements, and we continue to assist in arms procurement under MDAP. The US maintains naval, military, and air missions in Lima; the work of those missions and our program of bringing military officers to the US for tours of study or inspection trips bore fruit during the period the military was in full control of the government. Due to the lack of a Congress until July 28, 1950, the Peruvian Government has only lately ratified the Rio Treaty.[2]

Various US groups, particularly labor unions, have charged that the Government of Peru has attempted to control trade union activities and has forcibly eliminated Apristas from open participation in the trade union movement. Our policy has been that such charges are best handled by the International Labor Organization and the UN Economic and Social Council. We have supported the efforts of those international organizations to establish machinery to investigate in any country such alleged violations of trade union liberties and, through publicity which would arouse world public opinion, to help ameliorate such conditions.

We have tried to encourage political and economic stability, the development of democratic principles, and a rising standard of living through various technical aid programs and our cultural and information programs. Under the Institute of Inter-American Affairs,[3] a Food Production Mission, a Health and Sanitation Mission, and an Education Mission are maintained in Peru. These cooperative services have been very successful in securing the financial and political support of all Peruvian administrations, and are generally highly regarded and well received by Peruvians. Technical aid in the fields of agriculture, civil aviation, geology, social anthropology, vital statistics, and census procedures has been granted by the Inter-Departmental Committee on Scientific and Cultural Cooperation.[4] Individual specialists have visited Peru under our technical aid program in other fields. These programs will be expanded under present "Point IV" technical assistance legislation.

[2] For text of the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (Rio Treaty), opened for signature at Rio de Janeiro, September 2, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, December 3, 1948, see TIAS No. 1838, or 62 Stat. (pt. 2) 1681.

Peru has remained primarily a producer of raw materials, of which the most important are cotton, sugar, petroleum, and non-ferrous metals. There has been intermittent Peruvian Government interest in industrialization and economic development. Industrial development has been hindered by the conflicting interests of the controlling conservative groups, especially by the opposition of some of the large agriculturists. The Military Junta commendably determined to assess present problems and future development possibilities. In August 1949, it contracted for the services of a non-governmental group of US technicians headed by Dr. Julius Klein. The Klein Mission[5] studied and made recommendations on a wide variety of subjects, including monetary policy, foreign trade and balance of payments problems, tax structure, budget, customs, and the government administration generally. It also devoted considerable time to the possibilities of economic development. A large majority of the Mission's recommendations were in line with our policies and objectives, and fortunately the Peruvian Government has adopted many of the recommendations.

As a means of gaining tariff concessions for its major export products and to revise the 1942 United States-Peruvian trade agreement, Peru is negotiating with us and with other countries at Torquay for accession to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).[6]

---

[3] The Institute of Inter-American Affairs (IIAA) was established in 1942 and became a United States Government corporation in 1947. Its purpose was to aid governments in the Western Hemisphere by promoting technical programs and projects for health, sanitation, and food supply. As of mid-1950 the IIAA operated in conjunction with the Technical Cooperation Administration (TCA). For background information on the IIAA, see the statement made by Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs Willard L. Thorp before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on June 10, 1949, printed in the Department of State Bulletin, June 19, 1949, pp. 795–797. For information on the activities of the IIAA and its relationship with TCA in 1950, see the editorial note in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, p. 679; for documentation on the IIAA in 1951, see pp. 1038 ff.

[4] Officially in existence from 1938 to 1950.

[5] For information on the Klein Mission and its recommendations, see the editorial note in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, p. 996.

[6] For text of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), concluded at Geneva, October 30, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, January 1, 1948, see TIAS No. 1700, or 61 Stat. (pts. 5 and 6).

We are encouraging Peruvian accession to the GATT both in order to insure a new trade agreement more satisfactory to Peru than the 1942 agreement [7] and to widen the Latin American coverage of the GATT.

It is the policy of this Government to encourage the use of private US capital on a non-discriminatory basis in the financing of petroleum, mining and industrial development projects. This course offers the best means of ensuring the efficient production and continued accessibility of Peruvian strategic resources to the US. There is already considerable US capital invested in Peru, especially in petroleum, mining, textiles, sugar, and transportation. We have indicated our approval of the new mining code, based on the recommendations of the Klein Mission, which encourages the investment of foreign capital, and should promote the development of the mining industry.

Peru's petroleum reserves are important to its economy and potentially to hemisphere security. Their development has been retarded by lack of domestic capital and technical skills, and by the legal, administrative and financial obstacles placed in the way of new foreign investment. For several years we have urged the promulgation of a new petroleum law which would attract foreign capital. A bill is now before the Peruvian Congress, but various interests are making it difficult to pass it in a form satisfactory to US private investors.

C. RELATIONS WITH OTHER COUNTRIES

The present government of Peru has both real and imaginary difficulties in foreign affairs. Relations with Ecuador, long embittered by a perennial boundary dispute, tend to become tense periodically with reciprocal accusations of troop movements and bellicose preparations along the border, most of them based on unfounded rumors.

Peru's relations with Colombia are particularly strained at this time as a result of the asylum granted to the APRA leader Haya de la Torre [8] by the Colombian Embassy in Lima and the conflicting interpretations given to the judgment of the International Court [9] on this

---

[7] For text of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement between the United States and Peru, signed at Washington, May 7, 1942, and entered into force July 29, 1942, see Department of State Executive Agreement Series (EAS) No. 256, or 56 Stat. (pt. 2) 1509. The trade agreement was terminated October 7, 1951, when Peru became a contracting party to GATT; for text of the understanding effected by an exchange of notes signed at Lima, September 12 and 28, 1951, and entered into force on the latter date, see TIAS No. 2421, or 3 UST (pt. 2) 2548.

[8] Víctor Raúl Haya de la Torre.

[9] The International Court of Justice (ICJ) in a series of decisions in late 1950 and 1951 concluded essentially that the asylum granted to Haya de la Torre must end, but that the Colombian Government was under no obligation to surrender him to the Peruvian authorities. Ultimately, the two governments reached agreement for a safe conduct to be followed by Haya de la Torre's expulsion from Peru, which occurred on April 6, 1954. For additional information, see Marjorie Whiteman, Digest of International Law (Washington, 1968), vol. 6, pp. 473–488.

matter by both countries. The Department vigorously urged both countries to settle their differences amicably and thereby to preserve hemispheric solidarity, so necessary in view of the present crisis.[10]

Relations with Chile are lacking somewhat in cordiality. While the loss of Peruvian territory to Chile following the War of the Pacific [11] is no longer an active issue, the Chilean Government's strongly pro-democratic stand in inter-American affairs has been an obstacle to close relations between the two countries ever since the overthrow of the democratically elected government of President Bustamante in Peru by General Odría in 1948. A factor in this situation is the presence in Chile of an active group of exiled APRA leaders.

Relations with Bolivia are occasionally clouded as a result of machinations of Bolivian military plotters receiving some support from military hotheads in Peru. In general, however, relations are cordial.

Neither Guatemala nor Costa Rica maintain diplomatic relations with the Odría Government because the latter assumed power by what those governments consider to be illegal methods. Peru broke off diplomatic relations with Cuba in 1950 because the Cuban Embassy in Lima assisted certain APRA leaders to escape from Peru.

The Peruvian Government is on good terms with the Government of General Perón [12] of Argentina. Latin American liberals have even charged that there is more than a mere affinity of political inspiration between the Governments of Argentina and Peru. There is no evidence, however, of Argentine intervention in Peruvian politics.

The present Peruvian Government has often been attacked by liberal opinion all over the continent as a dictatorship serving reactionary interests. Irked by these repeated expressions of hostility, Peru has often demonstrated an intransigent and uncooperative attitude in the conduct of bilateral relations with its neighbors.

Relations with European countries have little more than commercial and cultural significance. Peruvian cotton and a few other products are exported to the United Kingdom, encouraging the consumption of British manufactures in Peru. The Peruvian wealthy classes maintain particularly strong cultural ties with Spain. This is true in most Latin American countries. However, in the case of Peru, in view of the fact that these classes are still predominant politically, this cultural and social influence of Spain may have somewhat greater significance than in other countries.

Peru does not maintain diplomatic relations with Russia or its satellites.

---

[10] Documents pertaining to the interest of the United States in the case of Haya de la Torre in 1951 are in Department of State decimal file 723.00.

[11] 1879–1883.

[12] Juan Domingo Perón.

D. EVALUATION

In regard to our objective of maintaining Peruvian support of United States policies in world affairs, our policies with respect to Peru have been successful. Wide as may be the gap between US ideals of democratic government and the political philosophy of the government of Peru, Peru sides unequivocally with the US on the international issue resulting from the aggressions of Communist imperialism. This does not mean that Peruvians are fully aware of any responsibility on their part to share our military burdens. Failure to realize such responsibility, however, does not result from any design to stand aloof in the East-West struggle, but rather from implict confidence in US strength. On the whole, Peruvian diplomatic support of US opposition to Soviet Russia has been outstanding.

The USIE Program has been reasonably successful in acquainting the Peruvian Government and people with our views and obtaining support for our policies. However, both information and cultural activities should be intensified and extended, and an expanded program of in-service training grants in the fields of press and radio are desirable.

As regards our objective of economic development of Peru, our policies in this respect have been making slow progress. On the whole, the technical assistance furnished by the US Government, especially in the fields of health and agriculture, is achieving its purpose from a long-term viewpoint. Opportunities, however, for rapid expansion and multiplication of programs of technical assistance are not very many in Peru. This may be due to the fact that the Peruvian Government has not been sponsoring any consistent, national economic development program of its own and there has been little enthusiasm for industrialization under government planning. As to financial assistance for economic development, Peru has not received any considerable credits from the Export-Import Bank or the IBRD. This is due, in part, to the absence in Peru of any enthusiasm in favor of any over-all program of economic diversification or industrialization. Another cause of Peru's failure to obtain financial assistance is the Peruvian Government's rather poor record in the liquidation of its financial obligations. Economic development of Peru is more likely to be fostered by private capital investments, and our policy of encouraging the Peruvian Government to adopt policies favorable to such investments should be continued. The Klein Mission has been of considerable help to Peru in this field.

As regards encouraging the establishment of a stable and democratic government in Peru, this objective is far from realization. Charges have often been directed against our policy, frequently with small foundation in fact, to the effect that our cultivation of normal friendly relations with governments established by force such as that of President Odría of Peru, and even our recognition of such governments, encourages military coups d'etat and dictatorships. This reasoning overlooks the fact that overriding considerations, such as the need for maintaining hemisphere solidarity in the face of world crisis, and the importance of maintaining the principle of non-intervention in domestic affairs preclude our resorting to a policy of discrimination against non-democratic governments in this Hemisphere. Furthermore, our long-term policy objective of encouraging democratic stability is better served by continuing friendly relations with, and extending economic aid to, the people of a country like Peru, irrespective of whether their government meets our definition of democracy.

795B.5/4–651

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Edgar L. McGinnis, Jr., of the Office of South American Affairs [1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] April 6, 1951.

[Subject:] Need for Peruvian Troops for the Unified Command in Korea [2]

[Participants:] Dr. Gallagher—Peruvian Foreign Minister
Señor Berckemeyer—Peruvian Ambassador
General Morla Concha [3]—Chief of the General Staff of the Peruvian Army
Brigadier General Sibert [4]—IADB
Major General Walsh [5]—IADB
Mr. Miller—ARA
Mr. White—AR
Mr. McGinnis—OSA

Mr. Miller described the grave situation in Korea confronted by the Unified Command and the need for fresh ground troops to relieve those troops who have been in the lines since last summer. The Assistant Secretary told Dr. Gallagher that he had not intended to bring up this matter again since his visit to Lima early in March, but that General Marshall [6] had specially requested the Department to discuss

[1] Source text is unsigned copy attached to a memorandum from the Director of the Office of Regional American Affairs, Ivan B. White, to the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs, Livingston T. Merchant, April 12, 1951, not printed (795B.5/4–1251).

[2] For additional documentation on the efforts of the United States to secure offers from Latin American governments of troop participation in Korea, see pp. 985 ff.

[3] Manuel Morla Concha.

[4] Edwin L. Sibert, Director of the Staff, Inter-American Defense Board.

[5] Robert L. Walsh, Chairman, Joint Mexican-United States Defense Commission and member of the Inter-American Defense Board.

[6] George C. Marshall, Secretary of Defense.

it with the Foreign Ministers of certain of the other American republics because of the very serious need for additional troops in Korea. Mr. Miller added that he realized the delicacy of this matter with respect to Peru and did not ask for any comments from Dr. Gallagher.

Mr. Miller said that naturally the question of quantities arose when a possible contribution of troops on the part of Peru was to be considered. He said that it appeared that a combat regiment (4,000 or 5,000 troops) might be in line with Peru's capabilities provided, of course, that that country felt that it were in a position to furnish troops. The Assistant Secretary added that the Unified Command was not in particular need of aircraft or naval contributions but that any offers of this type would nevertheless be considered. He emphasized the need for ground troops and said that the United States would supply any deficiencies in equipment for such troops. This would be done on a reimbursable basis, the amount as well as the terms of payment to be negotiated at some future time. The United States would also supply transportation, medical care, rations, etc.

Mr. Miller said that we were not in a position to furnish all of the equipment necessary and referred to the fact that our resources of military equipment were strained because of the drain to Indo China, Western Europe, for our own rearmament, etc.

Dr. Gallagher said that he was not surprised to hear Mr. Miller refer to this matter and that, while his Government was in agreement that Peru should contribute to the Unified Command in Korea, public opinion in Peru had to be prepared to accept the need of sending Peruvian troops outside the country. He indicated that he himself was convinced of the desirability as well as of the need of Peru to furnish military assistance to the Unified Command.

General Morla remarked that not only Peruvian public opinion but also opinion within the Peruvian military establishment would have to be "reoriented" in order to accept the idea of a Peruvian military contribution to the Unified Command. General Morla said that, since 1949, Peru had made a number of requests to purchase United States military equipment and that these requests had not yet been filled. While there were doubtless good reasons for this, the General said that it was difficult to convince Peruvian military leaders of the need for Peru to assist in Korea when the United States could not furnish basic training and other equipment to the Peruvian forces. The General emphasized the need for training equipment and referred to the fact that 46 percent of the Peruvian ground forces were Indians who required lengthy training and indoctrination.

Mr. Miller replied that the United States had doubtless made errors in the past but that we must look to the future. He said that present legislation only permitted us to make military equipment available against cash payments in advance. He said that he did not know what legislation Congress might pass at this session respecting the sale of military equipment but that it was quite likely that it would require that the delivery of such equipment must be directly linked with the aid that a given country would be able to furnish in Korea.

General Sibert then said that he would be pleased to confer further with General Morla regarding the military aspects of this matter on Monday, and the two agreed to meet to discuss the matter on April 9.

In conclusion, Dr. Gallagher said that he would not return to Peru until April 20 but assured Mr. Miller that he would take up this matter with the President as soon as possible after his arrival there.

723.5/4–1851

Memorandum by Mr. Duncan A. D. Mackay of the Office of Regional American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] April 18, 1951.

MEMORANDUM

Subject: Résumé of Conference held at Suggestion of General Morla to Discuss Peruvian Requests for U.S. Military Equipment.

1. The conference was held at the Department of State at 10 : 30 a. m.

2. Present: General Morla, Chief of Staff, Peruvian Army
Colonel Somerville,[1] Chief, Latin American Branch, G–3, Department of the Army, U.S.A.
Lt. Colonel Jones,[2] G–3, Department of the Army, U.S.A.
Mr. McGinnis, Peruvian Desk Officer, Department of State
Mr. Smith,[3] International Security Affairs, Department of State
Mr. Mackay, Regional American Affairs, Department of State.

3. General Morla referred to a comprehensive list of equipment, submitted by the Peruvian Embassy on April 16,[4] representing Peru's long range requirements for military equipment. It contained, among other items, a complete table of equipment for four infantry divisions. A second list, comprising approximately one-fourth of the items extracted from the comprehensive ("global") list was marked "urgent" requirements. General Morla requested consideration of the "urgent"

[1] Col. Duncan S. Somerville.
[2] Lt. Col. Argyle P. Jones.
[3] Paul Smith.
[4] The Peruvian Government's list of equipment was submitted to the Department of State under cover of a note from the Peruvian Embassy dated April 13, 1951, not printed (723.5–MAP/4–1351).

list, which also contains a number of items which Peru has already requested in previous actions, and asked whether it could be provided Peru and what period of time would be required. General Morla described at some length the desire of Peruvian authorities to furnish troops to the United Nations in Korea and the inability to do so because of the current psychological mood of Peruvian public opinion. He stated that if the U.S. could furnish the equipment for one infantry division, for example, Peru would then be able to furnish one regimental combat team, and that even the initiation of the flow of equipment to Peru would have a beneficial effect upon Peruvian public opinion. He stated that Peru could not afford to reduce her Army at this time by offering a substantial unit to the United Nations for Korea.

4. U.S. representatives assured General Morla that his position was thoroughly understood and that, while no answer could be given without detailed study of the new requests, they would receive the most careful and sympathetic consideration. He was informed that pricing and availability data on the pending requests would be forthcoming at an early date. He was informed that in determining the availability of military equipment for various purposes, there had to be established certain priorities, in which combat equipment for Korea and the strengthening of the NATO forces in Europe had high priorities. It was explained that under existing U.S. laws, military equipment which was available for other areas could be transferred only on the basis of payment in dollars. It was explained that different fiscal and priority terms applied with respect to equipment of forces for action in Korea. In cases where offers of military units for the United Nations in Korea are accepted by the Unified Command, it is legally possible for the U.S. Government to make up deficiencies in the military unit offered to Korea, to assist in training the troops, to transport the contingents to Korea and to maintain them in the field, provided it is agreed that there will be reimbursement to the U.S. The terms and conditions of this reimbursement of units for the United Nations in Korea, it was explained, can be negotiated later with the U.S. if the offering country is unable to pay the U.S. in full at the start. It was explained, however, that equipment for units for Korea was not shipped to the country making the offer, but was instead provided to the Theater Commander after arrival of the unit.

5. General Morla repeated several times that the possibility of a Peruvian offer for the United Nations in Korea would be greatly enhanced by the prior arrival of U.S. equipment for the Peruvian Armed Forces, and that it would be helpful in stimulating such an offer if such equipment could be delivered before the offer were made. The U.S. representatives stated that the Peruvian position was clear and understandable, but that those U.S. persons desiring to support the Peruvian equipment requests would be in much better position to do so if a Peruvian offer for Korea were not delayed and made contingent upon the arrival of appreciable amounts of U.S. equipment. The U.S. representatives pointed out the risks being accepted by the U.S. in shipping a large portion of its continental forces to assist the United Nations in Korea. It was suggested that Peru, relying upon the Rio Treaty, might accept a temporary diminution in its internal forces for the sake of providing a unit to assist the United Nations in Korea.

6. General Morla requested that he be provided informally with a resume of the points which he raised and the replies which were given to him during this conversation.

795B.5/5–1651 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Peru

SECRET WASHINGTON, May 16, 1951.

382. Although Dept anxious encourage in every appropriate way offers troops Korea, we are concerned re apparent Peru attitude tying Korea offer inflexibly to US mil asst in mtg Peru local needs (urtels 573, May 8; 579, May 9).[1] Our view is that Korean operation is mutual UN responsibility. Contributions shld not be regarded as being made to US, and as basis for quid pro quo arrangements, though cannot be denied employment Peru battalion in Korea wld strengthen bonds between our peoples and create favorable US public opinion. In discussing these matters Peru officials, therefore, you shld emphasize separation of two problems, and explain situation orally fol lines:

Re possible Korea offer, US believes Peru offer of battalion wld be widely recognized as highly significant demonstration that govt's awareness of UN responsibilities and determination contribute to collective security against communist aggression. Offer wld be given most sympathetic consideration through normal Unified Command channels. US wld do utmost make up deficiencies in training and equipment, which cannot be met by Peru Govt, on basis negot reimbursement outlined Gen'l Morla in Apr 18 conversations here.

Re Peru requests for mil equipment, these must be considered in relation to overall problem of strengthening defenses of free world, and availabilities within gen framework. At present requirements countries more immediately threatened by commie aggression have higher priority. Furthermore decisions on fulfilment LatAmer requests from stocks which may become available will be based increasingly upon clear evidence that govt's agreement that forces strengthened will be prepared and used if and when necessary in performance of roles or missions essential to collective defense of Continent. Peru requests are being considered with all these factors in mind, but it is doubtful that immed answer can be given.

---

[1] Neither printed; both are filed under decimal number 795.00.

FYI Peru requests appear far in excess of that country's needs and econ capacity to buy and maintain even if materiel were available, which it is not. As illustration cost to Peru under existing legis equipment one infantry div including reasonable supply ammunition wld be neighborhood $93,000,000. Consideration will be given however possibility mtg reasonable amounts if availability situation shld improve, but only on basis outlined above, and after higher priority demands have been met. Suggest that Peru re-analyze requirements and state them in items of equipment rather than in T.O. and E. units. Recommend Peru consult with US Army mission in this matter.

ACHESON

823.00/6–151

The Chargé in Peru (Barber) to the Department of State

SECRET LIMA, June 1, 1951.

No. 1270

Subject: Conference With Minister of Finance [1]

On May 31, 1951 Mr. Turkel [2] and Mr. Bridgett [3] called upon the Minister of Finance at their request to discuss outstanding economic problems. The conversation covered a wide range of subjects; they are listed below in the order of their interest in the Department rather than in the order in which they were discussed.

1. Troops for Korea.
2. Point IV.
3. Loan policy of the IBRD.
4. Peruvian requirements for scarce supplies.
5. Increase in copper ceiling price.
6. Payment of lend-lease obligations.
7. Payment of commercial debts.
8. Peruvian participation in GATT.

1. Troops for Korea

This subject arose owing to a discussion of the size of the expected budgetary surplus for 1951. The Minister of Finance stated that recently in a Cabinet meeting, when the subject of troops for Korea was being discussed, the President turned to Sr. Dasso and asked, "How much is all this going to cost me?" The Minister of Finance replied, "How should I know? You're a soldier. You ought to know." There-

[1] Andrés F. Dasso, Peruvian Minister of Finance.
[2] Harry R. Turkel, Counselor of Embassy for Economic Affairs.
[3] W. Charles Bridgett, Assistant Attaché.

upon the President gave orders for the military member present to draw up a memorandum on the cost of the proposed troop contribution. The Minister of Finance stated that this study is now being made, but that the military experts will have to estimate what the attrition rate will be of the troops in Korea in order to calculate death benefits to families, hospitalization, etc. Mr. Turkel replied that he would request the Department for comparative data on casualties of military contingents of members of the United Nations in Korea.[4] The Minister went on to say that he felt that the proposal to send troops to Korea would not meet with popular favor. Korea is so far away; almost any other place would be better. Mr. Turkel responded that unfortunately Soviet aggression had to be contained where it was launched, and not on the ground of our own choice. In the foregoing conversation no mention was made, of course, of the substance of the Embassy's secret despatch No. 1251 of May 29, 1951.[5]

2. Point IV Operations

In a meeting about ten days earlier with the Minister of Finance, not hitherto reported to the Department, Mr. Turkel had shown the Minister of Finance a list of authorizations of Point IV projects in Peru dated April 17 with a view to overcoming the increasing Peruvian disappointment with respect to actual Point IV accomplishments. Mr. Turkel mentioned that when he was in the Department on May 21, 1951, Mr. Haldore Hanson [6] had shown him an up-to-date account of Point IV authorizations which brought the total for Peru to 1-⅓ million dollars. The Minister was pleased. Mr. Turkel then stated that he had made a considerable point of submitting to the Technical Cooperation Administration the application of the Minister of Fomento [7] in the amount of $250,000 for American engineering services to design dams in five areas in Peru. He had told the TCA authorities that this application was supported by a memorandum drawn up by Mr. Cruise of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and that he was fairly certain that if the engineering studies could be made, IBRD financing for these dams would follow. He felt that this was the key to expanding irrigation developments in Peru, and that all parties concerned must follow through on this project. Mr. Turkel had told Mr. Carlos Gibson [8] of the Peruvian Embassy of his conversations in the Department on this and other economic subjects.

---

[4] Such information was furnished by the Department of State to the Embassy in Peru for transmission to the Peruvian Government in airgram 7, July 7, 1951, not printed (795B.5/6–1251).

[5] Not printed.

[6] Acting Assistant Deputy Administrator, Technical Cooperation Administration.

[7] Carlos Salazar Southwell.

[8] Second Secretary, Peruvian Embassy.

3. Loan Policy of the IBRD

Mr. Turkel stated that the preceding day he had received a visit from Mr. Orvis A. Schmidt, Dr. Harold Larson, and two other officers of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. He told the Minister of Finance in strictest confidence that he felt that this mission was beginning to become somewhat skeptical of the Peruvian application for 1.8 million dollars for port equipment to modernize the Port of Callao. The bank mission is not yet convinced that such equipment would actually facilitate the flow of strategic raw materials through the port. Adm. Stanley's report dealt only with general cargo, and not with bulk cargo such as ores and grain. Mr. Turkel had given them the facts concerning the ore in storage at the port, and the probable amounts of such ores in the future, whether or not these facts support his thesis that the loan ought to be made.

The Minister of Finance stated that the President was becoming considerably annoyed at the large number of missions coming to Peru without producing tangible results. Five eminent authorities have studied the Chimbote coal deposits and submitted favorable reports but without any present results. The Argentinians are talking of building a 400 ton blast furnace at Chimbote using coal as fuel. Mr. Fritz Mandl will return to Peru at the end of June. The Minister is not anxious to have the Argentinians in Peru, but the Peruvians will accept financing, especially private investment, wherever they can get it. Mr. Turkel concluded this phase of the conversation by saying that he felt that developments might shortly be expected in connection with large-scale financing, and that the Minister should not be disheartened because all such studies were necessarily slow.

4. Peruvian Requirements for Scarce Supplies

Mr. Turkel stated that he had spent nearly a day in trying to ascertain the reasons for possible delays in Washington which caused members of the Peruvian Mining Ministry to complain that they were not receiving equipment from the U.S. He told the Minister that the person responsible for U.S. export controls for Latin America is one of our best economic officers, Mr. Claude Courand,[9] of the Office of International Trade. Mr. Courand had said that D.O. ratings for the Peruvian mining industry were now being granted by his office within a period of ten days. Such D.O. ratings entitle the holder to receive, for the month of May, 1/12 of the amount of supplies shipped during 1950; that the D.O. rating will allow a similar amount to be shipped for the month of June; thereafter the Controlled Materials Plan takes over, and the situation should shortly be regularized and facilitated. Mr. Turkel stated that he had put the Purchasing Agent of the Cerro de Pasco Copper Corporation in touch with Mr. Courand in the hope of assisting that corporation. He concluded that the large Peruvian mining companies could pretty well take care of themselves because they have purchasing departments in New York, or representatives in Washington, but that the difficulty would be with the small and medium Peruvian producers. He suggested to the Finance Minister that the Director of Commerce, Dr. Jorge Guerinoni, keep in touch with the Commercial Counselor of the Peruvian Embassy, Sr. Carlos Donayre, who, in turn, would be in contact with Mr. Claude Courand. This procedure was suggested because the Embassy is so short of personnel that it is deeply in arrears in its requirements reporting, and while it is beginning to make progress in catching up, it is expected there will be substantial additions to the critical list, and, therefore, the Embassy ought not be appealed to except in cases of great necessity or urgency. The Minister was grateful for the suggestion.

[9] Claude W. Courand was detailed to the Department of Commerce, May 15, 1950, as Assistant Director, American Republics Division, Office of the Assistant Director for Export Supply, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

5. Increase in Copper Ceiling Price

Mr. Turkel stated that he had spoken to Mr. Getzin of the Office of International Materials Policy in an effort to impress him with the absolute necessity of treating Peruvian copper on the same basis as Chilean copper,[10] as far as concerns price ceiling in the United States. Mr. Turkel stated that as a result of his conversation he felt sure that the final outcome would be that Canadian, Rhodesian and Peruvian copper would all be treated on the same basis as Chilean copper. The President of Cerro de Pasco[11] has stated to Mr. Turkel on May 30 that while copper was still quoted at 24-½¢ per pound on the New York commodity market, blister copper being brought in in bond for refining, and re-exported was quoted at 27-¼¢ per pound. This confused situation is expected to clear up in a week or so. The Minister stated that he was somewhat comforted by these remarks, and reiterated his profound concern for equal treatment for Peruvian copper.

6. Payment of Lend-Lease Obligations

Mr. Turkel stated that he then had to bring up the perennial question of the lend-lease debt, and to state that he had received another instruction[12] to seek early liquidation of this 3 million dollar debt. The lend-lease accounts in Latin America have been 97% settled, and Peru is one of three countries having small balances owing.[13]

---

[10] For documentation on the understanding concerning copper reached between the United States and Chile in April–May 1951, see pp. 1238 ff.

[11] Robert P. Koenig, President, Cerro de Pasco Copper Corporation.

[12] Apparent reference to instruction 140, May 24, 1951, not printed (723.56/5–2451).

[13] In a note to the Peruvian Embassy, dated May 24, 1951, not printed, the Department of State informed the Embassy that the amount of $2,970,742 remained unpaid on Peru's lend-lease debt, and indicated that the United States was still awaiting receipt from the Peruvian Government of a settlement proposal (723.56/5–2451). No such proposal was offered by the Peruvian Government in 1951.

The Finance Minister stated that he was anxious to improve the debt record of Peru, but in view of the budgetary demands for economic development, troops to Korea, commercial and other debts, and so forth, he could not see how he could meet all of these various demands. Mr. Turkel then recalled that the Klein Mission report of November 5th stated that the profits from the revaluation of the reserves of the Central Reserve Bank should be used for debt payment, and inquired what had happened to that money. The Minister stated that of some 45 million soles only 20 million had been utilized, and that the debts involved could not be satisfied from that source alone. Mr. Bridgett then mentioned the possibility of revaluing the "intangible" gold reserves of the Central Reserve Bank. The Minister grinned, and asked us to present a complete plan as to how he could pay all debts, and meet all obligations to the United States and Argentina with the resources at his command. Mr. Turkel stated that the time left before he sails for Greece is so short that he could not undertake such a study, but recommended that the Klein Mission be asked to make this study. The Finance Minister asked that Mr. Turkel get together with Dr. Klein to start the study. Sr. Dasso added that after the adjournment of the next regular session of the Peruvian Congress he hoped to put into effect a widescale plan for the liquidation of all outstanding debts utilizing profits from the revaluation of these "intangible" gold reserves, and possibly other resources.

7. Payment of Commercial Debts

Mr. Turkel stated that he was somewhat disappointed that the month of June had arrived, and no checks had yet been mailed to American exporters entitling them to the difference between the former official rate, and the rate of 14.20 for their registered commercial debts. The Minister of Finance concurred with Mr. Bridgett that while there were only some 400 checks to be mailed, the burden of calculating the percentages was very considerable, and since the Comptroller of the Republic was following a very tough policy, the checks were not mailed this month because of the lack of a few hundred thousand soles, but would certainly be mailed in the month of June.

8. Peruvian Participation in GATT

Mr. Turkel stated that the Department does not expect to accelerate the entry into force the U.S.-Peruvian schedules to the Torquay Agreement; [14] that 15 Contracting Parties to GATT have already approved the membership of Peru, and that it was quite certain that the remaining number necessary to make Peru an acceding Member would shortly be obtained. The Finance Minister was pleased to hear this, and stated that he would shortly meet with Dr. Jorge Guerinoni to discuss the Supreme Resolution to eliminate the existing 25% ad valorum luxury tax on automobiles.

[14] For text of the Torquay Protocol to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, dated at Torquay, April 12, 1951, and entered into force for the United States June 6, 1951, see TIAS No. 2420, or 3 UST 588.

In summary, the Minister of Finance again displayed his usual fine understanding and sympathy, but it seems clear that the Peruvians feel that they are receiving scant assistance from the United States in comparison with other countries of the Western Hemisphere.

For the Chargé d'Affaires a.i.:
HARRY R. TURKEL
Counselor of Embassy for Economic Affairs

Editorial Note

On July 5, 1951, the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank authorized a line of credit amounting to $650,000 in favor of Fermin Malaga Santolalla e Hijos Negociación Agricola y Minera, S. A., of Lima, to assist in financing the purchase of equipment and services required for the expansion of facilities for the production of tungsten at the company's mines (Export-Import Bank of Washington, Thirteenth Semiannual Report to Congress for the Period July–December 1951, Washington, 1952, pages 16–17, 40).

Editorial Note

Beginning in the early summer of 1951, representatives of the Peruvian Government and the Foreign Bondholders Protective Council (FBPC) held a series of discussions in New York concerning the possible resumption of payments on Peru's outstanding external debt, in default since 1931. In a letter to Ambassador Berckemeyer, dated July 12, not printed, the President of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD), Eugene R. Black, stated in part that in anticipation of the Peruvian Government's new offer of a settlement to the FBPC, and providing that President Odría agreed to recommend approval to the Peruvian Congress of the agreement which would presumably be reached, the IBRD was willing to proceed immediately with consideration of the loan requested by Peru to cover the costs of improving port facilities at Callão (823.10/7–3151). From mid-August, the debt negotiations focused primarily on the question of accrued interest. With the solution of this problem, an agreement was signed on November 14, providing for the resumption of payments on the Peruvian debt. For a summary of the agreement and related documents, see Foreign Bondholders Protective Council, Report, 1951 Through 1952 (New York, 1954), pages 201 ff. For previous documentation on the efforts of the FBPC to reach a debt settlement with the Peruvian Government, see Foreign Relations, 1947, volume VIII, pages 998 ff. On January 23, 1952, the IBRD approved the so-called Callão port loan in the amount of $2,500,000; for further information on the loan, see International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, Seventh Annual Report to the Board of Governors, 1951–1952 (Washington, 1952), page 34.

Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26 [1]

The Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) to the Ambassador in Peru (Tittmann)

SECRET WASHINGTON, November 5, 1951.

DEAR HAROLD: I had the good fortune of being in New York on other business Friday and called on Dr. Gallagher at his hotel. He was 45 minutes late for the appointment, having gone to New Jersey for lunch and having been detained by frightful weather on the way back. I remained at his suite for nearly an hour and had one of the best conversations with him that I have ever had.

Dr. Gallagher immediately asked me whether we had talked to General Noriega about troops for Korea. I told him in detail about my conversation [2] with the General and of the General's apparent determination to send some troops. Dr. Gallagher seemed to be extremely pleased about this. He said that Noriega was the key man in the picture and that for some time Noriega had needed some special attention from the United States so that his latent pro-U.S. inclinations could be brought to the fore. Dr. Gallagher said that he would himself give his earnest attention to the troops question, although I understood him to say that he would not go to bat on this issue until Noriega had returned to Lima.

Since there have been so many instances in the last year where Peruvians have expressed the feeling that the U.S. is favoring other countries over them, I decided that I would hit this complaint as hard as I could. I told Dr. Gallagher that we had used two arguments with General Noriega in support of sending troops to Korea. The first argument was that all the military people in our own government realize that although we have had casualties in Korea, the net effect of the Korean operation has been greatly to strengthen our armed might. This is not only because of the impetus that has been given to the rearmament effort but also because of the fact that we have now veteran troops seasoned under fire to feed into recruit divisions. I also pointed out to him that the result of our policy of fairness with all countries in Latin America on all issues had been in our opinion to ease international tensions such as those which had existed between Colombia and Peru, with the result that Colombia had sent a battalion to Korea. I said that this was in my opinion a good proof of Colombia's sincerity and that it had gained for Colombia great kudos in our government as well as contributing in the long run to the strengthening of Colombian armed forces. I said frankly that I thought Peru should have this lesson in mind in orienting its own course of action.

[1] Files of Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Edward G. Miller, Jr., for the years 1949–1953.

[2] General Noriega was in the United States during October and November 1951 for the purpose of inspecting certain military installations; no memorandum of his conversation with Mr. Miller could be found in the Department of State files. In a letter to Ambassador Tittmann, dated October 29, 1951, commenting on General Noriega's visit, Mr. Miller had stated in part that much to his surprise the General had indicated "enthusiastic determination" to send Peruvian troops to Korea, and that he promised to work on the problem after his return to Lima (Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26).

I then pointed out to Dr. Gallagher that we in the State Department had tried very hard to improve the climate for Peru in the United States. I expressed great satisfaction over the debt settlement which Ambassador Berckemeyer had negotiated with the Bondholders Council and said that even though as counsel for the Ministry of Finance of Peru in my private law practice I had felt that the original offer [3] was a fair one, nevertheless it was unquestionable that with the increase in Peru's financial position it was in their own national interest to settle this matter once and for all. I said that the International Bank had shown its good faith by proceeding with the Callao loan without awaiting the debt settlement and that now the International Bank would enter into a relationship with Peru which, in my opinion, would mark the beginning of a new era for Peru and in Peruvian-American relations—an era which would be a new day for Peru's economy.

I said that Peru had earned this cooperation by the wise and prudent fiscal policies pursued by General Odria and the importance which the Peruvian Government had attached to Dr. Klein's recommendations. I reverted to the matter of troops and pointed out that although we badly needed troops for Korea, we had not conditioned our cooperation in any other phase with Peru on this issue but had stimulated the Export-Import Bank and the International Bank to cooperate with Peru and had also worked very hard on getting the DE's. Dr. Gallagher said that he had frequently expressed to colleagues in Peru his deep appreciation of the fairness of our attitude in these matters.

I referred briefly to Colonel Mendoza's [4] visit and the stimulation of our Point Four activities. Dr. Gallagher said frankly that he had entered the Odria cabinet with misgivings about some of the military people in the cabinet but he had been most gratified with the performance of people like Mendoza and Noriega as well as Odria.

---

[3] Apparent reference to the debt settlement proposal offered by the Peruvian Government in 1947, which was rejected by the FBPC.

[4] Col. Juan Mendoza, Peruvian Minister of Public Education.

I told Dr. Gallagher very frankly that I had been worried about the adverse impact of Galo Plaza's visit upon our relations with Peru but I told him what I had previously said to Ambassador Berckemeyer about our having warned Galo Plaza in advance not to use his visit [5] to stir up the boundary issue. I pointed out that, far from having done so, Plaza had acted not as an Ecuadoran primarily but as a Latin American during his visit and had helped us greatly with Congress in getting through our Point Four program. I also said that I would like to bring up President Odria but that for political reasons which he would appreciate it would be counter-productive to do so. He agreed fully on both points.

I brought up the tax on tuna fish and told him about our efforts to block this, but he did not seem to attribute much importance to the matter.

I told him that I was sorry that some of our liberal and press elements sometimes classified the Odria regime with that of Peron and said that I personally thought that there was nothing further from the truth. I referred to the derisive comments which Odria had made about the Perons at the luncheon which Odria had given for me in Lima in March. Dr. Gallagher said that it was absurd for anyone to compare Odria with Peron and thanked me for my efforts to clarify this matter with the press up here.

I referred to the ceremonies honoring Isabela La Católica and pointed out that I had arranged for Ambassador Berckemeyer to be on the platform with me. I said that the sole and only reason for my having put on the show was because of Gallagher's interest in the matter. He said he understood that and appreciated it deeply. I complimented him on his splendid performance in Spain and he also seemed to be glad about this.

We discussed briefly the situation in Bolivia and in Chile. I referred to my apprehensions over the inability of the moderate parties in Chile to get together on a single candidate and the possibility that this would let the election go to Ibañez [6] by default. While he agreed that Ibañez might be a demagog along the Peron type, he did not think he would follow the kind of go-it-alone, anti-U.S. policy that Peron stands for.

We did not get into the Haya de la Torre case or the Peruvian-Ecuadoran boundary dispute except in the most indirect way. He did at one point refer to my public statement on the Haya case when I called in Zuleta [7] and Berckemeyer last year as having been misunderstood in Peru as an anti-Peruvian act on our part, but he merely said this

---

[5] Galo Plaza Lasso, President of Ecuador, made an official visit to the United States during the latter part of June. For documentation on his visit and his discussions with officials in the Department of State, see pp. 1394 ff.

[6] Carlos Ibañez del Campo, President of Chile, 1926–1931.

[7] Eduardo Zuleta Angel, Colombian Ambassador to the United States.

was water over the dam and indicated the situation was much less tense.

He brought up Belaunde's [8] candidacy for the General Assembly presidency in a very general way towards the end of our talk without, however, asking for my intervention. He did say that he assumed he was right in discrediting reports which had reached him that we were agitating for Padilla Nervo's [9] election. I told him that as usual we would stand by the deliberations of the Latin American caucus. He did say he hoped that the Latinos would not kick away their chance for the presidency by failing to get together between themselves in the caucus.

Dr. Gallagher volunteered assurance a workable petroleum law [10] would soon be forthcoming and I told him at some length about my participation in the National Petroleum Convention in Venezuela in September [11] and the favorable impression which had been made on foreign delegates (including those from Iran, Saudi Arabia, Egypt and Mexico) by the state of affairs in the petroleum industry in Venezuela. I spoke highly of Ambassador Garland and praised his initiative in having arranged for a Venezuelan technical oil mission to go to Lima. I told him in some detail about what Herbert Hoover, Jr. had told me in Lima at luncheon in your house two years ago to the effect that every country in Latin America with proven oil resources which had permitted private companies to operate was now a net exporter of oil whereas every country with proven resources of oil which had a nationalized industry was a net importer. He seemed impressed by this and expressed surprise to learn that Mexico was now a net importer and that Argentina was now producing less than half of its petroleum requirements whereas once it had produced almost all.

Sincerely yours, EDWARD G. MILLER, JR.

---

[8] Victor Andres Belaúnde, Chairman, Peruvian Delegation to the United Nations.

[9] Luis Padilla Nervo, Chairman of the Mexican Delegation to the United Nations, was elected President of the General Assembly of the United Nations, November 6, 1951.

[10] During 1951 the Peruvian Chamber of Deputies had under consideration several drafts of a proposed petroleum law, all of which provided for the tighter regulation of the industry and an increase in the government's share of profits. A detailed summary of the content and progress of the proposed legislation is attached to a letter from the Minerals Attaché in Lima (Bramson) to Mr. Dorr, January 3, 1952, not printed (823.2553/1-352).

[11] The Venezuelan National Petroleum Convention was held at Caracas, September 8–18, 1951; Mr. Miller was a member of the Observer Delegation sent by the United States.

723.5/8–1351

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Robert J. Dorr of the Office of South American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] August 13, 1951.

Subject: Peruvian Requests for Armaments [1]

Participants: Ambassador Berckemeyer, Peruvian Embassy
OSA—Ambassador Warren
Mr. Bernbaum
Mr. Dorr

Ambassador Berckemeyer called to advise regarding his recent discussions in Lima on Peruvian requests for armaments. He stated he discussed these with President Odria, General Noriega,[2] Admiral Saldías and others and that all were in general agreement Peruvian requests must be reviewed, scaled down and priority listing established.[3] The Ambassador said this was being done now in Lima and that revised requests would be submitted though the review period might be somewhat lengthy.

With respect to the two submarines Peru has on pending order with the Electric Boat Company, Ambassador Berckemeyer said they are strongly desired by Peru as replacements and that Peru wants construction started on them at once. He said Peru gives them top priority in its armaments request and urged that the Department give the necessary approval to the Electric Boat Company.

Ambassador Warren said that the Department would take action on this revised armaments request as soon as received from Peru though it was emphasized there would not only be delays in supplying the requested armaments but unquestionably some armaments may not be available for very long periods of time. Ambassador Berckemeyer said this aspect was known to and understood by Peruvian officials both here and in Lima.

With respect to the submarines, Ambassador Warren said action would be taken on the Peruvian note on the subject on which action has been delayed pending definite advice from Peru. He also suggested

---

[1] Documents pertaining to Peruvian military requests are in Department of State decimal files 723.5 and 723.5–MAP.

[2] Gen. Zenón Noriega, Minister of War and President of the Peruvian Cabinet.

[3] On June 1, 1951, Mr. Warren, Mr. Jamison, Mr. William F. Gray, and Ambassador Berckemeyer had discussed Peruvian requests for military equipment at the Department of State. The memorandum of that conversation, by Mr. Jamison, dated June 1, reads in part as follows: "During the conversation the potential expense to the Peruvian Government involved in these various requests, the unavailability of many of the kinds of equipment requested, and the necessity that requests be reviewed in terms of the items most needed and most likely to be useful, were emphasized. It was suggested that he [Ambassador Berckemeyer] might wish to submit a new Note summarizing the items which Peru now wishes to request." (723.5–MAP/6–151)

Ambassador Berckemeyer inform Admiral Miles and the Electric Boat Company of Peru's continued desire for two submarines.

Ambassador Berckemeyer also stated Peru had definitely given up the idea of purchasing any jet aircraft but was determined to proceed with the purchase of 25 F–47 craft. Ambassador Warren thanked him for the information and said it would be communicated to the appropriate officer of the Department.

723.551/11–2851

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Robert J. Dorr of the Office of South American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] November 28, 1951.

Subject: Courtesy Call by Admiral Saldías

Participants: Admiral Roque A. Saldías, Peruvian Minister of Marine Minister Germán Aramburú, Peruvian Chargé
ARA—Mr. Miller
OSA—Mr. Dorr

Admiral Saldías called to pay his respects to Mr. Miller and to extend his personal and official thanks as well as the thanks of the Peruvian Navy for the Department's assistance in facilitating the transfer of three D–E's to Peru.[1] Saldías indicated the D–E's would be ready for formal transfer sometime in March as there is considerable rehabilitation to be accomplished as well as training of the crews.

Admiral Saldías said he will call on the Secretary of Navy and the Chief of Naval Operations tomorrow in the company of Admiral Miles. During these visits, he will inquire regarding the possibility of transferring a cruiser to Peru as Peru has funds earmarked for such a purchase which can be used for other unspecified purposes in case a cruiser is not available. The Admiral was appreciative of the information he had received from Ambassador Tittmann and believed his conversations tomorrow were the best means of finding out definitely.

Saldías said he would witness the signing today of the contract with the Electric Boat Co. for the construction of two submarines. Friday he departs for San Francisco to inspect an LST Peru has purchased, will return to Washington briefly and then visit the D–E's at Jacksonville with Admiral Miles before returning to Lima.

Mr. Miller spoke of the good relations between the two countries and mentioned the fine work Ambassador Berckemeyer was doing in obtaining a settlement of Peru's external debt, especially as such settlement presaged considerable benefit to Peru from loans which will be available from the IBRD. Admiral Saldías remarked Peru officially recognized the need for re-establishing its credit rating and was confident the bond settlement would be ratified by Congress. Commenting on Pedro Beltrán's[2] attitude on this matter, Saldías was sure Beltrán recognized the need for such settlement in spite of his previous objection to further dealings with the Foreign Bondholders Protective Council. Saldías also said there had been little press or public comment in Peru on the announced settlement terms and what there had been was favorable.

[1] The United States Congress authorized the transfer of three destroyer escorts to Peru under Public Law 146, approved September 15, 1951; for text, see 65 Stat. 322.

Mr. Miller likewise introduced the subject of a proposed U.S. duty on tuna fish imports. He indicated the Department was seriously concerned with this proposal in spite of the Department's letter on the subject to the House Ways and Means Committee, which had not been cleared with the interested political sections of the Department. Admiral Saldías stated he had received many calls on this subject when his trip to the U.S. became known. He said the cotton and sugar producers in Peru were also financially interested in the exploitation of Peru's fantastically rich fishing resources and that considerable Peruvian capital was tied up in this nascent industry, which would be seriously affected if not killed by our imposition of a duty. The Admiral said he had received complaints that tuna fishing vessels of non-U.S. registry but with U.S. crews or ownership had been violating Peruvian fishing regulations frequently, though he had not ordered any patrol action by the Peruvian Navy as he did not wish to complicate the present situation by any action that might be considered hostile. He said Ecuador had requested Peru's cooperation in presenting a unified resistance front, along with other countries, but indicated Peru officially did not wish to do so at this time, again to avoid complicating the problem. He said Peru officially was remaining calm on the subject in the expectation this threat to its industry would not materialize, although he said the same was not true for those outside the administration. He referred to the verbal attack on Congressman McKinnon,[3] sponsor of the U.S. bill, by Peruvian fishing interests during the Congressman's recent visit to Lima and the proposed legislation introduced in the Peruvian Congress which would triple import duties on many articles imported from the U.S. to provide funds to assist the Peruvian fishing industry. Admiral Saldías indicated these methods were not sponsored nor approved of by the Peruvian Government.

Mr. Miller then turned the conversation to a discussion of possible Peruvian military participation in Korea, mentioning his previous

---

[2] Editor and publisher of the Peruvian newspaper, La Prensa; he had served as Ambassador to the United States, 1944–1946.

[3] Clinton D. McKinnon (D–Calif.).

conversations on the subject with General Noriega [4] and Foreign Minister Gallagher.[5] Prefacing his comments by making a distinction between this subject and the probable future discussions with Peru on hemisphere defense under the Mutual Security Act,[6] Mr. Miller reviewed the financial aspects of a Peruvian contribution to Korea in order that this aspect be clearly understood by Peru. He said that any Peruvian contingent, whether military or naval, would be considered the same as an American unit and be equipped, trained, supplied and serviced the same as American units. While such support would be given only on a reimbursable basis, the matter of reimbursement would be the subject of future negotiations and arrangements. Admiral Saldías expressed his keen interest in this information as he initially had questions on the financial aspects in considering possible Peruvian naval participation. Admiral Saldías said he personally believed Peru should send units to Korea in order to comply with Peru's international obligations and fully agreed with Mr. Miller's opinion that service in Korea was highly desirable from a professional standpoint because of the experience gained by troops. Admiral Saldías stated he had always been in favor of sending naval units to Korea and had so informed President Odria. He spoke, rather vaguely, of one or two frigates, especially since the recent rehabilitation of two frigates and the future receipt of three D–E's will put the Peruvian Navy in a position where it can afford to release units for use in Korea.

The Admiral showed particular interest in Mr. Miller's brief mention of discussing the subject with General Noriega and specifically asked if Noriega had made any special comment on the proposal. When told Noriega had not made any specific comment, Admiral Saldías stated he could only speak for the Navy and not for the Army. His facial reaction reflected the apparent opinion that Noriega was not in favor of sending troops to Korea and that a Peruvian contribution was doubtful without Noriega's express approval. His manner and statements on this subject implied that Noriega was the key to Peruvian assistance and had not been in favor of the idea heretofore.[7]

---

[4] See footnote 2, p. 1600.

[5] Apparent reference to Mr. Miller's conversation with the Foreign Minister, summarized in Mr. Miller's letter to Ambassador Tittmann, p. 1600.

[6] For text of the Mutual Security Act (Public Law 165), approved October 10, 1951, see 65 Stat. 373.

[7] In a letter to Assistant Secretary Miller, dated December 11, 1951, Ambassador Tittmann stated in part the following: "Regarding Peruvian troops for Korea, the outlook, I am sorry to say, is not too bright for the moment. After consulting with Gallagher, I went over to the Ministry of War on December 10 to have a talk with General Noriega in his office. His manner was not enthusiastic when I brought up the subject of the troops . . . . He said that he had promised you when he was in Washington that he would take the matter up with President Odría . . . . This he has done and he therefore considered that his promise to you had been fulfilled. He went on to say that Odría continued to feel that he (Odría) could not order Peruvian soldiers to serve outside of the country without the approval of Congress." (Miller Files, Lot 53 D 26)

Mr. Miller also inquired about the pending petroleum legislation, pointing up his remarks about the benefits to Peru of acceptable legislation by referring to the tremendous advantages Venezuela has obtained through its oil resources and their exploitation. Admiral Saldías expressed the opinion the proposed legislation would pass both the Chamber and the Senate during the present special session in spite of the large number of Deputies who are scheduled to speak on the subject. The Admiral felt many Deputies were trying to gain popularity by nationalistic remarks but believed the people would soon tire of the subject with a resultant rapid close to the debate and approval of the legislation. Saldías said President Odria inquired daily about the legislative debate and had many private conversations daily with interested individuals. The Minister of Public Works [8] is keeping a daily voting and speech record on the many Deputies, a record which Admiral Saldías implied would have an effect on the course of the debate and voting. Referring to "El Comercio's" strongly nationalistic editorial on the subject, Saldías said he had been unable prior to his departure to talk with Pedro Beltran and was not certain what his motivation was. However, the Admiral said "El Comercio" "no pesa ya" and that its nationalistic editorials were not important or influential.[9]

[8] Carlos Salazar Southwell.

[9] In telegram 307, from Lima, dated December 17, 1951, not printed, the Embassy notified the Department of State that the petroleum bill under consideration in the Chamber of Deputies was approved on December 15 (823.2553/12–1751); thereupon it went to the Peruvian Senate.

723.5–MSP/12–1751

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Robert J. Dorr of the Office of South American Affairs

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] December 17, 1951.

Subject: Military Grant Aid Program [1]

Participants: Sr. Germán Aramburú, Minister-Counselor, Embassy of Peru
OSA—Mr. Bernbaum
OSA—Mr. Dorr

At the request of Mr. Bernbaum, Minister Aramburú called this morning and was advised confidentially that Peru had been designated as one of the countries to obtain military grant aid under the Mutual Security Act of 1951. Mr. Bernbaum stated that our Embassy in Lima had been instructed to inquire of the Peruvian Government whether it would be interested in receiving military grant aid and willing to enter preliminary discussions towards that end. Mr. Bernbaum pointed out that while this matter would be handled through our Embassy in Lima, the Department wished to keep the Peruvian Embassy here informed of this matter. Stress was also made of the fact that the negotiations and the designation of countries was a secret matter until such time as military representatives might be sent to participating countries and some joint announcement of their activities is made.

[1] In telegram 314, from Lima, December 19, 1951, not printed, Ambassador Tittmann informed the Department of State that President Odría had orally approved the initiation of conversations looking toward the conclusion of a bilateral military assistance agreement (723.5–MSP/12–1951); a confirmatory note from the Peruvian Government, dated December 19, not printed, was subsequently received by the Embassy (723.5–MSP/12–2251). The negotiations were scheduled to begin on January 7, 1952.

Minister Aramburú expressed his thanks for the information given him and said that it would be brought to the attention of Ambassador Berckemeyer.

723.5621/12-2151

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Duncan A. D. Mackay of the Office of Regional American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] December 21, 1951.

Subject: Peruvian Government Request for Cruiser

Participants: Señor don Germán Aramburú, Minister Counselor of the Peruvian Embassy
AR—Mr. Mackay

Mr. Aramburú called this afternoon to inquire whether we had received any information from the Department of Defense regarding any change in the status of the Peruvian Government's request for a heavy or light cruiser. He stated that he understood that the Navy was disposed to make "certain arrangements" in order to make such a cruiser available for transfer to the Peruvian Government, but were awaiting the favorable recommendation of the State Department. Mr. Aramburú inquired specifically whether there was any possibility that such a recommendation might be forthcoming.

I informed Mr. Aramburú that we had in the last few days received word from the Department of Defense that there was at present no change in the status of availability of a heavy or light cruiser for the Peruvian Government, and that we were prepared to make this reply in further response to the Peruvian note of November 14, 1951.[1] As for any recommendation, I informed Mr. Aramburú that none had been asked or appeared to be called for, in view of the absence of anything concrete at this time on which to make a recommendation. Mr. Aramburú stated that if this was to be the nature of the Department's reply, he would like to consult first with Ambassador Berckemeyer, in order to see whether he would prefer not to receive a reply to the note at this time. Mr. Aramburú stated that he would call back later on the result of his conversation with the Ambassador.

[1] Not printed.

Mr. Aramburú then inquired whether, in the forthcoming bilateral military discussions on the military grant aid program it would be appropriate for Peru to raise the question of their desire to obtain a cruiser and the possibility that part of the amount intended for Peru under the Mutual Security Act could be applied for this purpose. I informed Mr. Aramburú that while the Peruvian negotiators might, of course, raise any subject they wished, it was my understanding that the limited amounts of equipment which would be furnished under this program would be to enable a recipient country to undertake an agreed task in hemisphere defense; and that any additional equipment which might be needed for other defense requirements or its own internal security would continue to be furnished that country on a reimbursable basis. Mr. Aramburú stated that he understood this distinction, but found it difficult to make in the case of large naval units, such as a cruiser, which conceivably could be used both in the general defense of the hemisphere as well as in the defense of the coastal areas of Peru.

URUGUAY

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND URUGUAY[1]

Editorial Note

On March 8, 1951, the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank authorized two credits totaling $2,859,540 in favor of the Republic of Uruguay to assist in the purchase of 26 Diesel electric locomotives and spare parts by the Ferrocarril Central del Uruguay. For additional information, see Export-Import Bank of Washington, Twelfth Semiannual Report to Congress for the Period January–June 1951 (Washington, 1951), pages 15, 40.

[1] For previous documentation concerning United States relations with Uruguay, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 1008 ff.

Editorial Note

By an exchange of notes dated March 14, 1951, the United States and Uruguay concluded at Montevideo a General Point IV Agreement for Technical Cooperation, which entered into force on the same date for those provisions not requiring legislative approval. The notes were transmitted to the Department of State under cover of despatch 875, from Montevideo, March 21, 1951, not printed (833.20/3–2151). For a press release dated March 14 concerning the agreement, see Department of State Bulletin, March 26, 1951, pages 501–502.

795B.5/4–751

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. John K. Havemeyer of the Office of South American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] April 7, 1951.

Subject: Request for Uruguayan Troops for UN Action in Korea [1]

Participants: Foreign Minister of Uruguay Alberto Dominguez Cámpora
Ambassador of Uruguay José A. Mora
Admiral Alfredo Aguiar Carrasco, Uruguayan Navy Chief of Staff
General Carlos Iríbar, Uruguayan Army Chief of Staff
Captain Eduardo Beraldo, NA, Uruguayan Embassy
Assistant Secretary Miller [2]
Major General R. L. Walsh [3]
Brig. General E. L. Sibert [4]
Ivan White [5]
John K. Havemeyer

Mr. Miller said that he wished to reopen the conversation [6] he had had in Montevideo with respect to Uruguay sending troops to assist in the UN action in Korea. He stated that he recognized that Uruguay had political opposition toward carrying out such action and likewise that the United States has the same problem.

At present the U.S. could only offer assistance to Uruguay under the following two arrangements:

One would assist Uruguay in purchasing military equipment. The other would permit the Uruguayans to obtain arms and equipment for the troops that Uruguay could not supply itself, including transportation, food and quarters in Korea, and hospital facilities, provided there was an agreement reached to reimburse the U.S. at a future date.

Mr. Miller said that the U.S. troops have been in Korea now for nine months, and we are strongly desirous of rotating the troops in Korea in order that some of those now fighting with the UN could be supplanted by fresh troops.

Foreign Minister Dominguez Cámpora replied that as Mr. Miller knew he strongly desired to furnish Uruguayan troops for the UN in Korea and that there were political obstacles in Uruguay which had prevented Uruguay from sending troops up until this time. Mr.

---

[1] For additional documentation concerning United States efforts to secure from Latin American governments offers of troop participation in Korea, see pp. 985 ff.
[2] Edward G. Miller, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.
[3] Robert L. Walsh, Chairman, Joint Mexican-United States Defense Commission.
[4] Edwin L. Sibert, Director of the Staff, Inter-American Defense Board.
[5] Ivan B. White, Director, Office of Regional American Affairs.
[6] No memorandum of this conversation was found in the Department of State files.

Dominguez Cámpora is scheduled to leave Washington at 11 a.m., April 11, and that he hopes he might have an answer from his Government prior to that time. He further indicated that he would continue to press his Government to take action with respect to sending troops to Korea. Such action, however, must be cleared through the Uruguayan Congress, and he hoped that action could be taken in the very near future.

795B.5/4–1251

Memorandum by the Director of the Staff, Inter-American Defense Board (Sibert) to the Director of the Office of Regional American Affairs (White)

SECRET WASHINGTON, April 12, 1951.

Subject: Memorandum of Conversation between General Carlos Iríbar Inspector General of the Uruguayan Army; Rear Admiral Alfredo Aguiar, Inspector General of the Uruguayan Navy, and Brigadier General Edwin L. Sibert, Director of the Staff, Inter-American Defense Board.

In compliance with oral instructions from General Bolté [1] I arranged for an informal interview between the Inspectors General of the Uruguayan armed forces and myself, on 10 April 1951, at 2600 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. I opened the conversation by outlining to General Iríbar and Admiral Aguiar the legal position of the United States with regard to the furnishing of arms and military equipment to a foreign country. I also explained to them the relative priority enjoyed by Latin American countries in the present world situation. I told these gentlemen of our desire to have their country participate with the other United Nations forces in the present action in Korea, and suggested that a regimental combat team would be an appropriate size unit.

I also made clear to the Uruguayan representatives what the Department of Defense was prepared to do in the way of assistance, in case a unit were offered. I told them that we were prepared to complete the equipment of the unit in question, assist in its training, transport it to the theater of operations, supply and maintain it there, and return it to its home land upon the cessation of hostilities. General Iríbar and Admiral Aguiar both stated that they were entirely in accord with the United States point of view and would do everything possible to produce an offer from their country for an RCT for service in Korea. They said that the principal obstacles were in the legislature, in public opinion, and, to a lesser extent, in the opinion of the armed forces. They outlined the general situation in Uruguay as set forth below.

[1] Lt. Gen. Charles L. Bolté, Deputy Chief of Staff for Plans, U.S. Army, and Chairman, Inter-American Defense Board.

The Uruguayan representatives pointed out that the armed forces of their country have no direct contact with the administrative and legislative branches of their Government, and do not have channels for affecting public opinion in Uruguay. The point was made that connection between the armed forces and the legislative branch, for example, was much more tenuous than in the United States where Congressional committees may call on any military leader. Most of the difficulty in Uruguay with respect to gaining support for the sending of an expeditionary force outside the country rests on the fact that this cannot be done without legislative approval. While the general climate of public opinion in Uruguay is definitely pro-United Nations and pro-United States, the internal political situation is such that it is difficult to give expression to this sentiment. There are two political parties in Uruguay, the Colorados and the Blancos. The differences between these parties are so slight as to be almost unnoticeable, except in the field of political competition. The Colorados have been in power, by a not too large majority, for 85 years. As a political move, and solely as such, the Blancos have appealed for the support of Peronista elements.[2] Since, vis-à-vis the international situation, the Peron Government of Argentina has adopted a "third position,"[3] the Blanco party, chiefly through the agency of only three or four leaders, finds itself formally committed to the "third position". This is less a sincere belief of the party membership than a political expedient. To state the matter in a different way, this attitude of the Blancos is more a result of politics than a motivation of politics. Indeed, the Uruguayan representatives said, if the position of the parties were reversed, it is likely that the same situation would obtain, but in reverse Uruguay has almost no problem of communism. Indeed the problem might be simplified if there were a real communist threat, since the country would be in large part opposed. As it stands now, however, the situation is one of political commitments, in a way that might be easily compared with the Republican-Democratic competition in the United States.

The Uruguayan representatives made it clear that while there was no question of armed intervention in Uruguay by Argentina, there was a very serious and troublesome economic or commercial connection—one that placed great difficulties in the way of Uruguay's operating freely in accordance with its real beliefs. Emphasizing that Uruguay had not come to the Meeting of Consultation[4] to ask for dollars, and did not wish to do so, the Uruguayan representatives

---

[2] Reference is to the followers of Juan Domingo Perón, President of Argentina.

[3] For documentation on this subject, see pp. 1079 ff.

[4] Reference is to the Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of American States, which met at Washington, March 26–April 7, 1951. Documentation on the meeting may be found on pp. 925 ff.

made the following explanation: Argentina and Uruguay have similar products, e. g., beef, grain, leather, etc. Since the Argentine production greatly outstrips the Uruguayan, it becomes obvious that the prices for these products are set by the Argentines. The result is that Uruguay finds itself "tied to the Argentine chariot" in the commercial field. The result is a constant, unwilling, dependence of Uruguay on Argentina, and a constant struggle to free itself from this situation.

It was also pointed out that Uruguay has always taken a pro-democratic and pro-cooperation stand in inter-American conferences, and Uruguayan leaders keenly feel the inconsistency in their not cooperating by sending forces outside the Hemisphere to resist aggression. Indeed, many urge the necessity of so doing, as a moral and practical commitment. Uruguay, especially the large segment of thought represented by General Iríbar and Admiral Aguiar, clearly understands and sympathizes with the position of the United States. They interpret this to be a need for other democratic countries, and particularly those of Latin America, to support the United States in deed as well as in words. They understand how important this moral and practical support is to the United States in its struggle with Russia.

In summary, General Iríbar said that Uruguayan leaders and public opinion favor strong and practical support of the United States in the terms discussed above, but that the political situation as it is, and the economic situation, with its implications for the political situation, put very definite obstacles in the way. Concerning the provision of an RCT for Korea, General Iríbar stated that his position would be strengthened were we to offer equipment for a unit larger than the one to be provided, in order that a majority of this equipment could be devoted to national defense purposes. He made a suggestion very similar to the one made by General Morla [5] of Peru that if we were to supply arms, less critical items, for a division, the first RTC [RCT] of this division might possibly be offered for service abroad. He stated emphatically that this was an exploratory suggestion, and one with no official standing whatsoever, but that those terms might strengthen his position in urging the contribution in question, upon his return home.

With respect to the personal opinions of the Uruguayan participants in the conversation, it was stated that the Uruguayan Government favored sending an expeditionary force to Korea, but that the legislative majority was small enough that it would be too dangerous, for political reasons, to make this move.

In strictest confidence, General Iríbar and Admiral Aguiar stated that they personally, as Chiefs of the armed forces, had sent a joint memorandum to the proper governmental authorities urging the moral necessity of Uruguay's contributing to the defense of democracy and pointing out that if Uruguay, in the background of its stand on inter-American cooperation, could not, in the moment of danger, make a practical contribution, it could not in the future count on reciprocal action by free American countries in case of Uruguay's need. The officers also said that they had in mind to bring the full story of their visit to the United States, and of the present conversation to an Uruguayan senator, an ex-Minister of Defense. Indeed, Admiral Aguiar had already sent an appropriate letter. The purpose would be to urge this legislator to do everything possible to affect public opinion. It was also pointed out that one desirable, though obviously rather impossible, action would be to eliminate from the press the unfavorable stories originating in the United States—stories which gave the Uruguayan public a wrong impression of the climate of opinion in the United States. The problem in this respect obviously lies in the tendency of newspaper reporting to select the most sensational material. The Uruguayan representatives estimate that 80 percent of the press in Uruguay is favorable to the United States, where only some 20 percent is responsive to Russian propaganda.

[5] Manuel Morla Concha, Chief of the General Staff of the Peruvian Army.

The Uruguayan representatives stated that, in spite of the pessimistic tone of all the above, which they felt obliged to state honestly, they personally were optimistic as to the outcome of the situation. In addition, they stated they both were returning home with a much better and clearer impression of the United States, of why the latter has a moral need for practical support in the present situation, and of the firm determination of the United States to defend itself and other democratic countries.

With respect to the means of effecting what is wished by the United States, the Uruguayan representatives referred to the manner in which public opinion was swayed in the last war. This was accomplished chiefly through the Embassies of the free countries. It was suggested that the possible manner of swaying public opinion in the present case would be through the same channels, for example, the present Ambassador of the United States,[6] they said, is well thought of in Uruguay, and, more to the point, has very good contacts with elements in the Blanco party. If the Department of State of the United States would initiate a carefully planned campaign to sway Uruguayan public opinion through its Embassy, the prognosis would be very favorable.

In the economic and commercial aspect, Uruguay did not ask for dollars or "charity". However, if in some way the United States could help Uruguay to free itself from its commercial dependence and almost automatic link with the Argentine economy, it would greatly strengthen Uruguay's determination, and more important, enable it to act in accordance with its real ideals. General Iríbar used the phrase: "If there were some way to help us get out of this mud hole".

[6] Christian M. Ravndal.

At the conclusion of the discussion, it was agreed that if the various efforts to obtain approval in Uruguay for the sending of an expeditionary force should bear fruit, the official procedure should be as follows: To request, through diplomatic channels, equipment of such and such a type and such and such quantity, to be used in connection with an RCT for service in Korea.[7]

EDWIN L. SIBERT
Brigadier General, USA

[7] In telegram 115, from Montevideo, dated September 19, 1951, Ambassador Ravndal reported that the Uruguayan Cabinet "unanimously approved offering two destroyer escorts about to be purchased" from the United States for service in Korea, and also "unanimously approved organizing, equipping, training regimental combat team [of] ground troops for UN service". As of October 17, 1952, however, Uruguay made no formal offers of military or naval assistance to the United Nations Command for Korea; for further information, see United Nations, Yearbook of the United Nations, 1952 (New York, 1953), pp. 214–215.

433.116/7–1751 : Airgram

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Uruguay

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, August 1, 1951.

A–18. A proposal to establish a temporary surcharge of pesos 0.55 per dollar on the sale of foreign exchange for automobile imports on a quota-free basis during a limited period was submitted to the IMF by Uruguay as reported in your telegram no. 29 of July 17.[1] Uruguay stated that the proposal was not connected with the country's balance of payments, which is favorable, but resulted from disequilibrium between receipts and sales of exchange at a particular level in the multiple rate structure. The Bank of the Republic has an excess of exchange from exports at the rate of pesos 2.35 per dollar and desired to dispose of part of it by sales for imports at the 1.90 rate but to offset the loss by the profit from sales of exchange at pesos 3.00 per dollar for automobile imports.

The Fund did not favor establishment of an additional exchange rate merely for the purpose of earning a profit in one segment of the multiple rate system, especially when the Uruguayan payments position is favorable. The Executive Board of the IMF, in a meeting on July 27, took the following action in which the proposal was not approved:

"The Fund views with satisfaction the general relaxation of import restrictions that the Uruguayan authorities have undertaken since mid-1950. The present proposal contemplates extending this relaxation temporarily to automobile imports, and the Fund does not wish to discourage a move in this direction. The Fund also appreciates the effort of the Uruguayan authorities to explain fully and precisely the reason for the proposed changes in the exchange system. However, in view of the greatly improved balance of payments position of Uruguay the Fund does not consider it appropriate to approve, even temporarily, the proposed increase in the number of rates in the Uruguayan multiple rate system or the proposed widening of the spread between the highest and lowest rates. The Fund considers it necessary to continue consultation looking toward the simplification and, ultimately, the unification of exchange rates."

[1] Not printed.

ACHESON

Editorial Note

The United States Congress authorized the transfer of two destroyer escorts to Uruguay under Public Law 146, approved September 15, 1951; for text, see 65 Stat. 322. The sale of the ships was effected on November 15. Pertinent documents are in Department of State decimal file 733.5–MAP.

733.58/9–1951 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Uruguay (Ravndal) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL MONTEVIDEO, September 19, 1951—5 p. m.

113. Depgam 9, July 14.[1] Emb considerably perturbed by continual delay concluding Air Force Mission contract which has been pending since early 1947. For most part delay has been caused by slowness Urug admin procedures and polit considerations. Urug Congressional approval obtained Oct 6, 1950 and Urug Emb Wash finally instructed July 6, 1951 negot contract. Almost three months have since expired and we unaware causes present delay. However, wish point out that initially US discreetly urged Urug request mission and since June 1947 have pressed Urug for prompt approval. Consequently any reluctance at this time on our part conclude mission contract or deviate from original offer could adversely affect our relations with Urug. We are continually urging Urug lend more effective aid UN forces Korea, ratify FCED Treaty,[2] Bogota Charter,[3] etc. They naturally question

[1] Not printed.

[2] The United States and Uruguay had signed a Treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Economic Development (FCED) on November 23, 1949; the United States Senate consented to ratification on August 9, 1950, but the Uruguayan Parliament had not approved the treaty. For further information, see the editorial note in Foreign Relations, 1949, vol. II, p. 794.

[3] Reference to the Charter of the Organization of American States, signed at Bogotá, April 30, 1948, which entered into force for the United States, December 13, 1951; for text, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 2361, or United States Treaties and Other International Agreements (UST), vol. 2 (pt. 2), p. 2394. Uruguay did not ratify the Charter until August 17, 1955.

delay our part in matter we have constantly urged as vital our mutual interests hemispheric defense.[4]

RAVNDAL

[4] On December 4, 1951, the United States and Uruguay signed at Washington an agreement providing for the establishment of a United States Air Force Advisory Mission in Uruguay; the agreement entered into force on the same date. For text, see TIAS No. 2369, or 2 UST (pt. 2) 2517.

733.5/11-2651

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Special Political Problems, Office of Regional American Affairs (Jamison)[1]

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] November 26, 1951.

Participants: Assistant Secretary Miller
Señor Dr. José A. Mora, Ambassador of Uruguay
AR—Mr. Jamison
OSA—Mr. Havemeyer (during part of the conversation)

Ambassador Mora said that he had called in order to see whether Mr. Miller could inform him with regard to the report obtained by him from the Uruguayan Naval Attaché that a high level U.S. military team would go soon to Montevideo to carry on conversations with Uruguayan military authorities. Mr. Miller said that the information regarding the visit of this team was given somewhat prematurely, since further steps in implementation of the military grant assistance program of the Mutual Security Act[2] require determination by the President, which has not yet been made, and that the Government concerned would, of course, be approached in order to determine whether it wished to engage in detailed negotiations in advance of the sending of any such team of military negotiators. Indicating to Ambassador Mora that he wished to speak frankly and on a confidential basis, Mr. Miller outlined certain of the procedures which are to be followed in initiating the program of military assistance, and stated that it is contemplated that the Uruguayan Government will be approached, should this be authorized by the Presidential determination, which should take place within a week or ten days. He pointed out the general concepts guiding the program, including its relationship to Resolution III[3] of the Foreign Ministers Meeting and to the planning

[1] Edward A. Jamison.

[2] For text of the Mutual Security Act (Public Law 165), approved October 10, 1951, see 65 Stat. 373. For documentation concerning the development of the Mutual Security Program, see vol. I, pp. 266 ff.; for documentation on aspects of the Mutual Security Program for Latin America, see pp. 1038 ff.

[3] For text of the resolutions of the Fourth Meeting of Consultation, see Pan American Union, Fourth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs Held in Washington, D.C. March 26–April 7, 1951: Proceedings (Washington, 1951), pp. 234–268.

of the Inter-American Defense Board. In response to Ambassador Mora's specific question as to whether the "plan" involved in the discussions will be the IADB plan [4] or that referred to in section 401 of the Mutual Security Act, Mr. Miller pointed out that the plan which would be discussed with the Uruguayan authorities, if they agree, is that called for in the Act, although it is entirely consistent with and would be directly related to the IADB plan in any negotiations carried on. Toward the end of the conversation, Ambassador Mora referred to a statement which he said General Goes Monteiro [5] was reported to have made to the effect that the U.S. and Brazil would share jointly the responsibility for defending the eastern coast line of South America, and Mr. Miller relieved any apprehension he may have had that this might be interpreted to mean that Brazil and the U.S. were planning jointly for the protection of an area which was obviously Uruguay's responsibility.

The conversation then turned to other matters, which are being reported on separately.[6]

[4] Apparent reference to the General Military Plan for the Defense of the American Continent, approved by the IADB, November 15, 1951; for information, see the editorial note, p. 1028.

[5] Pedro Aurelio Goés Monteiro, Chief of the General Staff of the Brazilian Armed Forces.

[6] In telegram 345, from Montevideo, dated March 13, 1952, not printed, Ambassador Edward L. Roddan, who was appointed Ambassador to Uruguay, September 19, 1951, and assumed charge of the Embassy on December 27, informed the Secretary of State that the Uruguayan Government on March 7 had authorized the initiation of conversations with United States representatives concerning a bilateral military assistance agreement (720.5–MSP/3–1352). The conversations began on March 31, 1952.

611.33/12–751 : Telegram

The Chargé in Uruguay (Trueblood) to the Secretary of State

SECRET MONTEVIDEO, December 7, 1951—6 p. m.

240. For Asst Secy Miller (distribution as directed by him). As we have reported Dominguez Campora is extremely bitter over way US has in his opinion let him down on UN.[1] Last night at dinner in Emb he was very critical of our procedure in this case and also introduced subject of film festival,[2] stating he understood we will not attend this year. He took me aside to tell me that he had only taken Fon Ministry to advance cooperation with US. Since he now felt he had failed in this purpose he saw no reason to continue to sacrifice his personal interests and stated he would inform Pres today he wished to be relieved of his post.

[1] Reference is to the decision of the United States not to support the candidacy of Enrique C. Armand Ugon of Uruguay for a seat on the International Court of Justice (ICJ) in the elections held at the United Nations on December 6, 1951.

[2] Reference is to the annual Uruguayan International Film Festival.

Frankly it is hard for us here to understand why it was not possible to explain in advance either to Mora or through Emb here US decision support Rau [3] which might have mollified Dominguez to some extent. We are also in dark on US plans participation film festival but realize of course it is difficult to expect Hollywood to participate again in 52. Dominguez also advised me last night wool exports situation here was extremely critical view lack satisfactory offers from US and elsewhere which might oblige Urug accept good offers which had come in from Soviet and satellites not only for wool but also meat, etc. Said this matter now before cabinet and implied he would not oppose acceptance. Our Agri Att reporting on this Embdesp 514 Dec 7.[4]

These developments are prejudicing our traditionally friendly relations with Urug and I believe we should try to clear up situation before it goes any farther. While Dominguez may be dramatizing situation to some extent (and over nursing personal pique) I still feel we should consider any possible remedial action such as personal message from you to Dominguez or frank talk with Mora or both.

TRUEBLOOD

[3] Sir Benegal N. Rau, Permanent Representative of India to the United Nations. Telegram 354, to Paris, December 5, 1951, drafted by Mr. Paul W. Jones, Jr. of the Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs, and repeated as telegram 200 to Montevideo, reads as follows: "Amb Mora called to express strong disappointment re our ICJ position and fact that US had not held prior consultations with LAs before deciding vote for Rau. Dept frankly expressed regret prior consultations did not take place. Re Rau candidacy, Dept stated opinion it was desirable give recognition to belief in Asia and elsewhere that Asia underrepresented on Ct. Mora informed that US wld vote for Rau first ballot and afterwards reexamine position.

"Mora feared reduction LA seats ICJ wld create chain reaction to reduce LA representation other UN bodies. Dept strongly denied this result." (611.33/12–551)

Both Señor Armand Ugon and Sir Benegal were elected to the ICJ on the first ballot.

[4] Not printed.

611.33/12–851 : Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Uruguay

SECRET WASHINGTON, December 8, 1951—7 : 40 p. m.

202. From Miller. No distribution. I agree personnally that ICJ voting was badly handled on our part and that Urugs are entitled to explanation. Such explanation was given Mora fully by Hickerson [1] and me Weds [2] and I am prepared, if you see fit, write personal letter to Dominguez repeating explanation in full and expressing regret over any aspects of matter in which we have been at fault.

[1] John D. Hickerson, Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs.

[2] No memorandum of the conversation between Mr. Miller, Mr. Hickerson, and Ambassador Mora was found in the Department of State files.

However, I have no patience whatever with childish blackmailing tactics of relating Urugs entire coop with us in such matters as wool shipments to USSR and backing Byelorussia for SC to what are essentially details such as our vote on ICJ and participation in film festival. Accordingly any letter I wld write Dominguez wld necessarily have to explain my disappointment that Urug has seen fit threaten US in this manner over such issues. I wld also point out that Soviet threat is aimed just as much at Urugs integrity as against ours and that their policy of opposition to USSR shld be based on this fact and not on any desire to gain approval or favor from us.

If you think letter along this line wld be helpful, which wld of course be written in friendly but firm manner, I will send it next week and you may tell Dominguez immediately that he will be receiving it. However, if in your opinion a letter wld be desirable only if it apologizes for ICJ problem and does not deal with the other much more basic issue which has been raised, I wld not propose to send any letter.[3] [Miller.]

WEBB

[3] In telegram 246, from Montevideo, December 10, 1951, Chargé Trueblood stated in part the following: "Since Mora was given full explanation ICJ voting and since Domínguez Cámpora has now been sharply rebuked by important sectors of local press . . . for tactics at Paris unworthy of Urug tradition believe best do nothing further." (611.33/12–1051)

VENEZUELA

POLITICAL, ECONOMIC, AND MILITARY RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES AND VENEZUELA[1]

731.5-MAP/5-151

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Bainbridge C. Davis of the Office of South American Affairs

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] May 1, 1951.

Subject: Venezuelan Request for Arms and Equipment

Participants:

Department of Defense
Army Officers:
Col. D. S. Somerville, G-3, Latin American Branch
Col. L. S. Bork, G-4, Foreign Military
Col. J. C. Radnor, G-3
Lt. Col. A. P. Jones, G-3
Lt. Col. W. J. Bryde, G-3
Air Force
Captain L. G. Christerson
Office of Secretary of Defense
Mr. Jerome Wisniewski
American Embassy, Caracas
Mr. Edward J. Sparks, Counselor of Embassy
Department of State
S/ISA—Mr. Paul Smith
AR—Mr. Duncan Mackay
OSA—Mr. Bainbridge C. Davis

The meeting was called by Colonel Somerville in his office at the request of Mr. Davis of the State Department in order to discuss the status of the Venezuelan requests for arms and the relationship of these requests to the recent U.S.-Venezuelan military conversations in Panama[2] and to the proposed call of the Venezuelan Foreign Minister [3] on Deputy Secretary for Defense Lovett.[4] Mr. Davis said that the Venezuelan Foreign Minister while in Washington recently had commented to him that there had been a good deal of delay in replying to Venezuela's requests for military equipment. Mr. Davis assumed that this referred primarily to the ten lists submitted with the Venezuelan Embassy's note of December 27, 1950 [5] as a result of the visit to the U.S. last fall of Lt. Col. Moreno [6] (Chief of Staff) and it was suggested that Mr. Lovett should be in a position to tell the Foreign Minister the exact status of the Venezuelan requests and if possible to give him whatever positive reply we could at this time. Mr. Sparks referred to the importance of giving prompt study to the lists of requirements included in the agreement signed at Panama by Lt. Gen. Morris [7] and Lt. Col. Moreno since there appeared to be at least an implied commitment on the part of the U.S. Government. Mr. Sparks suggested that delay on our part might be misinterpreted by the Venezuelans as bad faith in view of the initiative which we took in arranging the Panama conversations.

[1] Continued from Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 1019 ff.
[2] Reference is to the joint United States-Venezuela military planning talks held at Quarry Heights, Canal Zone, March 19-23, 1951. For text of the agreement signed at the conclusion of the talks, see p. 1627.

Colonel Somerville stated that the requirements mentioned in the Panama agreement were not intended to consititute a request by Venezuela until submitted in the usual manner, that they undoubtedly include some if not all of the items requested previously by Venezuela but not yet delivered. The agreement itself is to be presented to the Joint Chiefs of Staff for approval as a basis for further bilateral surveys and talks.

A general discussion followed in which it was stated that much of the delay in replying to the Venezuelan requests for military equipment was due to the manner in which the Venezuelan Government and particularly the Venezuelan Air Attaché, Lt. Col. Calderón,[8] had presented these requests, involving considerable delay and duplication as well as Colonel Calderón's lack of authority to accept on behalf of his government the Defense Department's offer of materials. Furthermore the fluctuating conditions of price and availability as well as the complete unavailability of the more important type of military equipment requested made it extremely difficult to give prompt and satisfactory replies to the Venezuelan government. Perhaps largely because of these difficulties it appeared that there was a substantial amount of confusion and difference of opinion within the Department of Defense as to which requests were currently outstanding and what their precise status might be.

---

[3] Luis Emilio Gómez Ruiz.
[4] Robert A. Lovett.
[5] Not printed.
[6] Félix Román Moreno.
[7] Lt. Gen. William Henry Harrison Morris, Jr., Commander in Chief, Caribbean.
[8] Luis A. Calderón.

Colonel Somerville described the current supply situation including the extreme shortage of supplies for Korea, the difficulty in meeting even a small part of our commitments for NATO and other countries and the fact that Latin America occupies the lowest priority position. He also referred to the present low military productive capacity of the U.S. and the substantial time-lag for reconversion. He emphasized the Top Secret nature of these remarks but the importance of understanding the background for our inability to comply with Venezuela's requests.

Mr. Sparks expressed appreciation for this important background information and made it clear that he had not come to plead for arms for Venezuela at the expense of military operations or high priority needs elsewhere. However, he understood that our Armed Forces looked upon Venezuelan oil as being of high military importance and he asked whether it was feasible to differentiate among the lower priority countries and in that way to give Venezuela an opportunity to secure equipment which would otherwise be unavailable. He said he believed that some of this was implicitly recognized in arranging the recent Panama talks. Colonel Somerville agreed that Venezuela does occupy a special position and said that G–3 would be willing to point this out to JCS. Colonel Bork agreed that upon receipt of such an indication of priority from the JCS, G–4 and the others concerned with meeting Venezuelan requirements would be guided accordingly and would be able to make more equipment available. Colonel Somerville added that it would, of course, be necessary for G–3 to indicate to JCS the "price" (i.e., in danger to our other military needs and objectives) of granting Venezuela high priority.

It was finally agreed that Colonel Bork would prepare a list of the items on which a definite reply could now be made to the Venezuelan government on the Army portion of the ten lists submitted December 27, 1950. It was agreed that an advance copy of this list would be given to Mr. Sparks on May 3 and that another advance copy would be given to Deputy Secretary Lovett to hand to the Foreign Minister if it appeared to the Departments of State and Defense that the items involved were sufficiently significant to the Venezuelan Government to make such a gesture desirable. The original of the reply would subsequently be delivered to Colonel Calderón through the usual military channels. (The purpose of giving this advance copy to the Foreign Minister would be in order to show our good faith to him and at the same time to give him something which he could take back to Caracas with him as one concrete accomplishment during his visit to the U.S. It was explained to those present that there were certain important problems affecting our relations with Venezuela on which the action desired by Venezuela could not be taken at this time and that there were political reasons why it would be desirable to give the Foreign Minister any good news which we could present to him now.)*

*Mr. Phillip Barringer of Mr. Lovett's office decided later that it would not be desirable for Mr. Lovett to hand copies of these lists to the Foreign Minister and subsequently it also became necessary for Mr. Lovett to cancel his appointment with the Foreign Minister. However, with Mr. Barringer's concurrence, Assistant Secretary of State Miller did hand the lists prepared by Army as well as a list prepared by Air Force (all of which total approximately $504,000 in value) to the Venezuelan Foreign Minister on May 7. As none of these lists were available to the Department until late Friday afternoon of May 4 and only one copy was received, it was necessary to hand this set to the Foreign Minister and an additional copy will be obtained for Mr. Sparks. Due presumably to confusion the original of each list was handed to Colonel Calderón by a representative of Defense Department some hours before the "advance copy" was handed to the Foreign Minister. [Footnote in the source text.]

731.56/7–1351

The Acting Secretary of Defense (Lovett) to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, July 13, 1951.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The Commander in Chief, Caribbean (CINCARIB) has forwarded an Agreement Document resulting from joint planning talks with the Chief of Staff of the Venezuelan Armed Forces, held at Quarry Heights, Canal Zone, 19–23 March 1951 (Appendix "A").

It should be noted in the Agreement Document that the Venezuelan conferees pointed out that Venezuela is able and willing to pay for the equipment and urged that their requirements, submitted through diplomatic channels in late 1950 and early 1951, be made available with the least possible delay. The status of U.S. Government action on such equipment requests as of 25 June 1951 is summarized in Appendix "B". It is considered that further military conversations in Caracas and on-the-ground joint United States-Venezuelan survey of the entire security problem would permit an accurate assessment of the implications of the total Venezuelan requirements.

It should also be noted that Venezuelan conferees emphasized that Venezuela asks that the United States make no decisions or arrangements affecting the defense of Venezuela without previous consultation with that government.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff consider that the Agreement Document is acceptable as a basis for further close collaboration and planning with the Venezuelan military authorities, subject to the following revisions:

a. From subparagraph 2 c (1), delete the words "United Nations police action or".

b. In subparagraph 2 g, after the first sentence, insert a new sentence reading: "It is understood that where specific types and models of equipment are listed in subparagraphs 2 g (1), (2) and (3) below and in Annexes "A", "B" and "C",[1] they are mentioned as examples only, and that any similar and equivalent types of equipment can be substituted as requirements."

In view of the fact that the Agreement Document recommends, in paragraph 3, that the points of agreement be submitted to the Governments of Venezuela and the United States for approval, the Joint Chiefs of Staff consider it necessary that, in further discussions with military representatives of Venezuela, CINCARIB inform them that the requirements enumerated under subparagraph 2 g of the Document should not be construed as a commitment by the United States Government to furnish such equipment and assistance. The purpose of this reservation is not to question the need for equipment assistance from the United States, but rather to point out the fact that the United States must balance Venezuelan equipment requests against the equipment demands for the Korean War,[2] for the expansion of the United States armed forces, and for other foreign commitments.

This Department is prepared to approve the Agreement Document, when modified as above, and after deletion of reference to the Organization for American States from paragraph 2(c), as an acceptable basis for further close collaboration and planning with the Venezuelan military authorities. Before any additional talks are held, however, I would appreciate receiving your advice as to whether recent developments with respect to the availability of Iranian oil[3] should be considered in determining the policy of this Government concerning the provision of military equipment for Venezuela.

Faithfully yours, ROBERT A. LOVETT

[Appendix "A"][4]

TOP SECRET 23 MARCH 1951.

RESULTS OF PLANNING TALKS BETWEEN THE CHIEFS OF STAFF OF THE ARMED FORCES OF VENEZUELA AND THE UNITED STATES COMMANDER IN CHIEF, CARIBBEAN AT QUARRY HEIGHTS, CANAL ZONE—PERIOD 19–23 MARCH 1951

1. Included herein are the results of planning talks which were held between the Chief of Staff of the Venezuelan Armed Forces and the

[1] None printed.

[2] For documentation concerning United States policy with respect to the Korean situation in 1951, see vol. VII, pp. 1 ff.

[3] For documentation relating to this subject, see volume V.

[4] The initial two pages of this enclosure, not printed, comprised a letter from the Commander in Chief, Carribean, to the Chief of Staff, U.S. Army, dated March 27, 1951, transmitting the enclosure and listing the participants in the planning talks.

United States Commander in Chief, Caribbean, at Quarry Heights, Canal Zone, during the period 19–23 March 1951.

AGREEMENT

2. Agreement. The Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces of Venezuela and the United States Commander in Chief, Caribbean, have reached mutual agreement on the following points as developed in their joint planning talks:

a. Purpose. The planning talks include:

(1) All the strategic military aspects of the security of the entire oil industry and other strategic materials in Venezuela, including external aggression and internal sabotage.

(2) The military requirements incidental to the security of the oil and the other strategic materials of Venezuela.

b. Key Terminology. For the purposes of this conference, the following definitions apply:

(1) Internal Security. Maintenance of law and order and the control of the civilian population within an area.

(2) Local Defense. Protection of a specific, limited area and/or installation(s) from the action of enemy armed forces or subversive elements.

(3) Over-all Defense. Protection of a large area, included installations and lines of communication, from action by enemy, or enemy-sponsored, forces. Over-all defense generally requires both offensive and defensive action by the defender.

c. Assumptions. All planning for the security of strategic materials in Venezuela herein included is based upon the following assumptions:

(1) In the event that either Venezuela or the United States is attacked, or participate in United Nations' police action or open warfare, the provisions of the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance [5] and the Organization of American States will be effective.[6]

(2) The major threats to Venezuela are:

(a) Sabotage or subversion conducted by subversive elements.

(b) Overt enemy action to include:

1. Submarine attacks on sea lines of communication.
2. Sneak air or guided missile attacks.
3. Raiding action.

[5] For text of the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (Rio Treaty), opened for signature at Rio de Janeiro, September 2, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, December 3, 1948, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 1838, or 62 Stat. (pt. 2) 1681.

[6] The Secretary of Defense on September 19, in advising the Joint Chiefs of Staff that he concurred in their view that the "agreement document" was acceptable as a basis for further joint planning with the Venezuelans, directed that subparagraph 2*c* (1) be amended to read as suggested by the Secretary of State in his letter of August 14, printed on p. 1647. Later, to facilitate talks with the Venezuelans, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, with the informal concurrence of the Secretary of Defense, on November 9, deleted the entire subparagraph 2*c* (1) and renumbered the succeeding subparagraphs.

(3) The Venezuelan Government is capable of suppressing any domestic disorder which may arise in Venezuela.
(4) The fundamental problems included herein are applicable to the Venezuelan oil fields and installations, and in general to those related to other strategic materials.
(5) Without the augmentation of the military means now available to Venezuela, the security of the strategic material areas will be limited.

d. Vital Installations and Facilities. The vital installations and facilities related to the strategic materials of Venezuela are:

(1) Oil refineries
(2) Power plants
(3) Pipelines and pumping stations
(4) Loading terminals
(5) Water supply
(6) Maracaibo Bar
(7) Lagunillas Dyke
(8) Communications
(9) Replacement equipment and supplies
(10) Fields and installations related to other strategic materials

e. Security Measures. The implementation of the following measures is essential to the security of the strategic materials of Venezuela and their vital installations and facilities:

(1) Determination and detention of subversive elements.
(2) Efficient guard forces with adequate authority.
(3) Fire fighting teams organized and trained in modern techniques.
(4) Coordination of emergency plans for the combat of fire, disorder, civil disturbances, and sabotage.
(5) Effective communications between strategic areas to prevent inter alia the suppression of information relative to serious uprisings or civil disturbances in isolated strategic areas.
(6) An adequate and uniform employee identification system.

f. Defense Responsibilities. The responsibilities for defense and security of the strategic materials of Venezuela and their vital installations and facilities are as indicated below:

(1) Internal Security. The Venezuelan military authorities with the cooperation of the respective industries are responsible for the internal security of the areas and vital installations associated with the production of strategic materials.
(2) Local Defense. The Venezuelan military authorities are responsible for the local defense of Venezuelan territory to include the oil fields, vital installations, lines of communications, and all other installations, of military significance.
(3) Over-all Defense. The United States Commander in Chief, Caribbean, will coordinate with the Venezuelan military authorities in the defense of the sea and air lines of communication adjacent to Venezuela to insure a coordinated effort in the protection of these lines of communication.

g. Need for Material Assistance. In accordance with the foregoing, there exists at the present time a requirement for the following equipment and assistance which is in addition to that currently available to Venezuela, in the areas of mutual interest and strategic importance.[7] Field surveys and further studies may indicate a need for additional material assistance. (See Enclosure)*

(1) Army. (For detailed discussion see Annex "A" to Enclosure)*

(a) Equipment for two Transportation Truck Companies.

(b) Additional transportation and communications equipment, gas masks, and riot type chemical ammunition.

(c) Equipment for one Engineer Combat Battalion.

(d) Prefabricated structures similar to the Quonset hut type (amount and capacity to be subsequently determined).

(e) Fire fighting equipment.

(f) A limited amount of antiaircraft equipment.

(g) Service support in the way of medical, ordnance, quartermaster, and signal equipment to support the program outlined above, and to facilitate the planned reorganization of Venezuela's regular military establishment.

(h) Retention of the U.S. Army Mission to Venezuela and an augmentation thereof with technical specialists when required.

(2) Navy. (For detailed discussion see Annex "B" of enclosure)*

(a) Six coastal destroyers of about 320 tons.

(b) Six 80′ sub-chasers.

(c) Equipping of three corvettes with sonar and radar and installing armament presently available in Venezuela.

(d) Equipping of two 83′ patrol boats with engines (total of four engines).

(e) Two minesweepers, AMS type.

(f) Furnish two 400 HP engines for one cutter (R&D[I?]).

(g) One salvage tug completely equipped for fighting oil fires (maximum draft 9′).

(h) Six launches, Eureka type.

(i) Anti-torpedo net for protection of dock areas at Puerto La Cruz and Las Piedras.

(j) Effective mining of Boca del Dragon.

(k) Radars—Three Air-Search Radars.
Three Surface-Search Radars

---

[7] On September 19, the Secretary of Defense concurred in the addition of a new sentence after the first sentence of subparagraph 2*g* as proposed by the Joint Chiefs of Staff (see paragraph b. on p. 1626). To meet Venezuelan objections, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, with the informal concurrence of the Secretary of Defense, on November 9, amended the added sentence to read:

"It is understood that where specific types and models of equipment are listed in subparagraphs 2*g* (1), (2), and (3) below and in Annexes 'A', 'B', and 'C', they are mentioned as examples only, and that any similar and equivalent types and models of equipment requested by Venezuela can be substituted for other types and models at the discretion of the United States but with prior approval and agreement of Venezuela."

*Contained in this Appendix. [Not printed. Footnote in the source text.]

(l) Sixteen short-range voice radio sets.

(m) Equipment for gunnery training center and technical assistance in its installation. (See paragraph VI, Annex "B") †

(n) Naval Base, including United States technical assistance in its planning.

(o) Solution of the problem of construction of six coastal destroyers and six 80′ sub-chasers shown as items (a) and (b) above. (See paragraph IV, 15. a., Annex "B") †

(p) Overhaul sonar equipment in two 83′ patrol boats.

(q) Retention of the U.S. Naval Mission to Venezuela and an augmentation thereof with technical specialists when required.

(3) Air. (For detailed discussion see Annex "C" of Enclosure) †

(a) One Transport Squadron composed of twelve C–47s or Super DC–3s.

(b) One Patrol Squadron composed of twelve Neptune P2V aircraft or one squadron of twenty-four aircraft of a type suitable for coastal antisubmarine patrol.

(c) Four H–5 helicopters for Search and Rescue.

(d) Three squadrons of twenty-four jet interceptors each and three long-range early warning radar sets. AN/CPS–6 complete, or equivalent. With regard to the three interceptor squadrons, two alternatives are presented: [See Note following subparagraph g.] [8]

1. Two squadrons of U.S. jet interceptors plus seventeen more British Vampires.
2. Three squadrons of U.S. jet interceptors of twenty-four aircraft each.

(e) Completion of the military air bases at Palo Negro, El Jaguito, and Maturin; and establishment at the Maracay base (Palo Negro) of depot maintenance facilities and a one-year stock level of supplies and spare parts for aircraft to be provided.

(f) Each military base would require two 400-watt transmitters of the T4/FRC type with two Hammerlund Superpro receivers BC 779, four VHF BC 640 transmitters and BC 639 receivers, and one BC 329 transmitter.

(g) Retention of the U.S. Air Force Mission to Venezuela and an augmentation thereof with technical specialists when required.

Note: Although three jet interceptor squadrons would be required to provide minimum air defense for the strategic areas of Venezuela, the probability of an air attack is considered slight at this time. Accordingly, it is recommended that interceptor aircraft and control radar facilities be allocated in conformance with established U.S. priorities. It is to be noted that should the first alternative be adopted, U.S. assistance in procurement from the British is necessary.

† Contained in this Appendix. [Not printed. Footnote in the source text.]

[8] Brackets in the source text.

(h) Additional measures. In addition, the following measures should be mutually undertaken:

(1) Exchange of appropriate classified military intelligence between the Venezuelan military authorities and the United States Commander in Chief, Caribbean.
(2) Participation as required in a technical advisory capacity of the principal commercial companies engaged in the production of the strategic materials of Venezuela.
(3) Establishment of the means of communications between Venezuelan military authorities and the United States Commander in Chief, Caribbean, in peacetime for utilization in time of emergency.
(4) Subsequent surveys by the Venezuelan Government with the assistance of the United States, if required, in order to assure the close coordination of military plans for security in areas of strategic materials industries.
(5) Designation of non-resident liaison personnel between Venezuelan military authorities and the United States Commander in Chief, Caribbean, if desirable.
(6) Subsequent planning talks to develop close coordination in the military plans for the security of the strategic materials industries is desirable: It is recommended that the place of the next planning talks be Caracas.

(i) It is understood that the Venezuelan Government is prepared to reimburse the United States Government for provision by the latter of military assistance and equipment.

RECOMMENDATION

3. Recommendation. It is recommended that these points of agreement as set forth by the Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces of Venezuela and the United States Commander in Chief, Caribbean, be submitted to the Governments of Venezuela and the United States for approval.

W. H. H. MORRIS, JR.
Lieutenant General, U.S. Army
U.S. Commander in Chief, Caribbean

FELIX R. MORENO
Tonel.Jefe
del Estado Mayor General

Appendix "B"

STATUS OF U.S. GOVERNMENT ACTION ON VENEZUELAN EQUIPMENT REQUESTS TO DATE

1. Naval gunnery materiel, navigational equipment and certain survey and aiming instruments for 155 mm howitzer battery, approximating $50,000, has already been funded for and is in supply action.

2. Pricing and availability lists for engineer, chemical, signal, medical and quartermaster items for 1–105 mm Howitzer Battalion, 1 Engineer Combat Battalion, 2 Truck Companies and 1 Medical Company, plus accessories and spare parts for F–47D aircraft, approximating $500,000, were presented to the Venezuelan representatives in Washington on 4 May 1951.

3. The Air Force is preparing to deliver approximately $419,000.00 worth of spares for B–25 and F–47D aircraft, including bombsight parts, to the government of Venezuela which has deposited with the Department of State the necessary funds to pay for purchase and delivery of the equipment.

4. Pricing and availability studies are currently under preparation with respect to Venezuelan requests for equipment for 1 Light Tank Battalion; ordnance and heavy items for 1–105 Howitzer Battalion, 1 Engineer Combat Battalion, 2 Truck Companies and 1 Medical Company; and parachute and aerial delivery equipment and supplies. It is estimated that the foregoing equipment will cost approximately $17,000,000. It is expected that these lists will be offered to the Venezuelans within the next 30–90 days.

611.31/8–1051

Policy Statement Prepared in the Department of State

[Extracts] [1]

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] August 10, 1951.

VENEZUELA

A. OBJECTIVES

US objectives in Latin America are the security of the United States and of this Hemisphere, the maintenance of peace, the encouragement of democratic representative institutions, and positive cooperation in the economic field in order to help in the attainment of the first three objectives. Within this general framework our specific objectives in Venezuela are: to assure an adequate supply of petroleum, especially, in time of war, and to encourage the development of Venezuela's rich iron ore deposits to supplement US reserves; to foster the economic stability and development of Venezuela and the achievement of a more balanced economy; to contribute to better living conditions for the masses as a sound basis for the growth of democracy and the continuance of a system of free enterprise; and to strengthen the friendship of the Venezuelan people and Government toward the United States and to promote their political development along democratic lines, both as an aid in defending the strategic Caribbean–Canal Zone area and as support for hemispheric cooperation, UN collective security efforts, and other basic US objectives.

[1] The portions omitted from this policy statement duplicate material in the policy statement for Venezuela for the previous year, which is printed in Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, p. 1024.

B. POLICIES

. . . . . .

In view of the predominant position of petroleum in the economic life of Venezuela and its importance to relations with the US the fluctuating world petroleum supply and demand situation is of considerable importance. By the end of 1949 Venezuela had established a new record in production amounting to nearly 1½ million barrels per day. At the same time as a result of the shift from world shortage to world surplus of petroleum, Venezuela was concerned over the possible effect of several developments. With the rapid growth of low-cost petroleum production and of transportation facilities in the Near East it seems likely that Venezuela will largely lose its European markets unless of course developments in Iran should remove that source of supply from western markets; in any event it will face increasing competition elsewhere. For example, the discovery of oil in western Canada threatens eventually to limit seriously the North American market for Venezuelan oil. While the competitive situation between oil companies operating in various parts of the world is a matter primarily for adjustment by the private interests concerned, nevertheless it is US policy to safeguard the nearby Venezuelan resources as of greater strategic importance to us than those of the Near East. Finally the cut-back of oil production in the US in late 1949 and early 1950, particularly in Texas, led to a strong drive in the US Congress to impose quota restrictions or prohibitive taxes on the importation of oil.

During the latter half of 1950 and the first half of 1951 increased demand for oil has created a new situation. While the long-range threats from Near East and Canadian oil remain, Venezuelan production has risen to a new all-time high of 1,700,000 barrels daily production which is close to the maximum efficient rate of production from present producing wells. The cut-back of US oil production has been largely eliminated. At present the independent oil producers in the US are not pressing for restriction on oil imports but the coal interests which have felt increasing competition from both domestic and foreign oil continue to threaten legislative action against imports particularly of heavy fuel oil.

The US-Venezuelan trade agreement, in effect since 1939,[2] reduced the import tax from 21¢ to 10½¢ per barrel on petroleum imports not in excess of 5 percent of US domestic refinery runs in the preceding year. The US-Mexican trade agreement which went into effect in 1943 [3] extended this reduction to oil imports irrespective of quantity and Venezuela benefited by most-favored-nation treatment. Upon termination of the Mexican agreement, effective January 1, 1951, the tariff quota provisions of the Venezuelan agreement again entered into force. It is not anticipated that Venezuelan production or export to the US will be curtailed as a result of this development, although according to industry estimates it will cost the companies and the Venezuelan Government some millions of dollars annually. While the economic effect is not crushing, the psychological and the political aspects coupled with pressure from Venezuela industrialists for higher tariffs on items included in Schedule I of the trade agreement have been substantial. The Venezuelan Government has pressed strongly for renegotiation of the trade agreement or, failing this, its termination. With considerable effort we succeeded in persuading the Venezuelan Government that it would be politically inexpedient to announce trade agreement negotiations involving petroleum at a time when the Congress was considering the extension of the basic trade agreements authority. Immediately upon passage of the 1951 Trade Agreements Act,[4] the Venezuelan Government requested revision of the trade agreement and a joint announcement [5] was made by the two governments to be followed by the issuance of public notice [6] of intention to negotiate.

[2] For text of the United States–Venezuela reciprocal trade agreement, signed at Caracas, November 6, 1939, and entered into force, December 14, 1940, see Department of State Executive Agreement Series (EAS) No. 180, or 54 Stat. (pt. 2) 2375. For documentation relating to the negotiation of the agreement, see Foreign Relations, 1938, vol. v, pp. 956 ff.

There is a further aspect of our petroleum policy in Venezuela concerned with the industry's physical security.[7] It would be difficult to exaggerate the importance of a continuous supply of Venezuelan petroleum to this country in case of a national emergency. In addition to the problem of nationalization, threats to the availability of Venezuelan oil may come from communist sabotage, domestic riot and disorder, or foreign attack.

The Communist Party in Venezuela, which has been well organized and disciplined in comparison with other Venezuelan parties, has had an estimated membership of approximately 20,000; in the 1947 Congressional elections the party polled about 50,000 votes which represented 4.3% of the total vote. This party, sometimes called the Red Communist Party (because of the color of the card used to aid the

---

[3] For text of the United States–Mexico reciprocal trade agreement, signed at Washington, December 23, 1942, and entered into force, January 30, 1943, see EAS No. 311, or 57 Stat. 833. For documentation on the termination of the agreement, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 939 ff.

[4] For text of the Trade Agreements Extension Act (Public Law 50), approved June 16, 1951, see 65 Stat. 72.

[5] For text of the joint announcement, dated June 18, 1951, see Department of State Bulletin, July 2, 1951, p. 17.

[6] For text of the public notice, dated August 29, 1951, and related press releases of the same date, see ibid., September 10, 1951, pp. 433–436.

[7] Documents pertaining to security measures in the Venezuelan oil fields during 1951 are in Department of State decimal file 831.2553 for that year. For previous documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 1019 ff.

illiterate in voting), was declared dissolved by Government decree issued May 13, 1950, charging the party with subversive propaganda, promotion of illegal strikes, sabotage and armed attacks. Its leaders have either left the country, been arrested or gone into hiding. There is a much smaller dissident party, known as PRP [8] or the Black Communists, which has been relatively quiet and continues as a legal party. The power of the Red Communists as an underground organization has not yet had occasion to be tested.

The Communists had some success in organizing the labor movement. It has been estimated that from 10 to 25% of Venezuelan oil workers, some of them very strategically located, have joined Communist trade unions. In May 1950, a strike called primarily for political purposes by the Red Communists and the outlawed Acción Democrática (AD) elements practically paralyzed the Venezuelan oil industry for a few days. In reprisal the Government dissolved the Communist labor federation of oil workers and 20 of its component unions, as well as 24 AD unions all of which participated in this strike. A few Red Communist, AD and Black Communist unions which did not participate were not dissolved. While this strike was directed against the Military Junta rather than the US, it may serve as a reminder that in case of war between the US and the Soviet Union, the Communist leaders will make every effort, as they have publicly proclaimed, to prevent a single drop of oil reaching the United States or its allies. However, if the present Government is in power, it will probably make every effort to prevent sabotage.

After the revolution of November 1948,[9] the Military Junta outlawed the Acción Democrática political party which had supported the previous government,[10] and abolished the labor federations and confederations which had been organized by that party. The individual AD unions were not abolished, but their experienced leadership was largely removed. This gave the Communists an opportunity to infiltrate the non-Communist labor movement, and there were indications that, prior to the Government decree outlawing their party, the Communists somewhat increased their influence over the policies of the former AD petroleum workers' unions. The AD unions have successfully maintained their separate organizational identities, and the degree of Communist infiltration cannot be accurately determined. While the Government has made efforts to create labor unions with leadership acceptable to the Junta, it has been unsuccessful and when it became necessary to negotiate new contracts with the oil companies early in 1951, it was necessary to recognize a Unified Committee of [8] Partido Revolucionario Proletario.

[9] For documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1948, vol. IX, pp. 126 ff.

[10] Reference is to the government of Rómulo Gallegos, who was inaugurated as President of Venezuela in February 1948.

Petroleum Workers composed of labor representatives from the legal unions as well as the Red Communist and the AD elements. These negotiations ultimately broke down and new labor contracts were placed in effect by government decree but the negotiations indicated the necessity for acknowledging the labor union strength of the outlawed political groups.

The possibility of communist sabotage was considered to be sufficiently serious even in 1948 to warrant the sending of a special mission to Venezuela to make a survey of security factors in the petroleum industry in Venezuela and the adjacent Netherlands West Indies. This mission found that, because of the dispersed character of the industry it would be impossible to prevent isolated acts of sabotage, but it did suggest several concrete measures which the companies and the Venezuelan Government could take in order to minimize this danger. The Embassy in Caracas was instructed to consult with representatives of the oil companies and, when desirable, with the Venezuelan authorities in order to put into effect as many as possible of the recommendations. While the oil companies were slow to acknowledge the need for improving the security precautions, considerable progress has been made during the past year and an Industrial Security Council composed of representatives of the oil companies with an Embassy officer as an observer has been meeting at frequent intervals to consider methods of improving security conditions.

Since the control of the Communist union leaders over the rank and file has not been put to any severe test and may in practice be far from complete, we should not limit ourselves to purely precautionary measures. We have been trying through our USIE program to make clear to all Venezuelans that Communist leaders are serving as tools of foreign imperialist power.

The second source of danger to the security of our petroleum supply in Venezuela lies in domestic riot and disorder. Political conditions in Venezuela are not entirely stable and it is possible to envisage a situation where law and order might break down completely and the country be delivered over to anarchy for a brief period of time. In such a case, it is possible that the latent resentment of the ordinary Venezuelans against foreigners could be fanned into flames by agitators, possibly Communist-inspired, and directed into a destructive attack against strategic petroleum installations.

The danger also exists of foreign attack, possibly of the hit and run variety, against petroleum installations. To meet this possibility, as well as to provide for all the strategic military aspects of the security of the oil industry and other strategic materials in Venezuela, conversations were held at Quarry Heights, Panama in March 1951 between the Caribbean Defense Command and the Venezuelan Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces and his advisers. A general agreement was reached regarding the requirements for defense of this area, including Venezuelan needs for additional military equipment. After this draft agreement has been studied by both governments steps will be taken for a further survey of the security requirements. When the results of these conversations as well as of any subsequent survey are approved by the two governments the Venezuelan Armed Forces may be expected to assist in defending sea and air lines of communication adjacent to Venezuela and to be ready to repel raids against strategic installations. Prior to these talks agreement was reached by the Departments of Defense and State that no consideration would be given nor reference made to the possibility of securing Venezuelan permission to land US troops in case of emergency, for the maintenance of order in the oil fields, either in the event of internal disorder or even in the event of war. The Department of Defense in April 1948 recommended that the Department of State explore such a possibility but the Department of State has held it is impossible and will in the foreseeable future continue to be impossible to request such permission from the Venezuelans. The nationalistic sentiments of the Venezuelans would be so outraged by such a suggestion that its rejection would be a foregone conclusion, and, in addition, it would endanger the continuance of the friendly relations now existing. We must at least for the present accept the risk and content ourselves with whatever measures we can take within the framework of our non-intervention policy to increase stability in Venezuela. In the event of war, or immediate threat of war, it is possible, though far from probable, that Venezuela might be persuaded to accept military assistance from the US on Venezuelan territory. Such plans would, however, have to give due consideration to Venezuelan nationalism as was the case with the secret military agreement of 1942.[11]

While access to an adequate supply of petroleum is of outstanding importance to the US in its relations with Venezuela, the existence of tremendous iron ore reserves of unusual purity is potentially of strategic value to the US. The Iron Mines Company of Venezuela, a Bethlehem subsidiary, made its first shipment of ore to the US in March 1951 and expects to increase production to more than 2 million tons annually. The Orinoco Mining Company, a subsidiary of U.S. Steel, has obtained concessions which it hopes to have in production within the next four or five years after dredging the Orinoco River for ocean-going freighters and which would eventually yield 10 million tons annually. Other large US iron mining companies may also seek concessions. This important addition to the dwindling high-grade iron ore reserves in the US and the increase in US private investment in [11] Reference is to the Staff Agreement drawn up at Caracas, January 15, 1942, not printed. The agreement was modified and put into effect by an exchange of notes at Caracas, January 28, 1943; for text of the notes, see Foreign Relations, 1943, vol. VI, pp. 793–794.

Venezuela (which already approximates $1.5 billion) as well as the introduction of American personnel and methods into another section of Venezuela add to the importance of maintaining friendly relations. The development of this additional source of dollar exchange will likewise contribute to Venezuela's economic stability. It is US policy to encourage Venezuela to accelerate its economic development by maintaining its present policies which have attracted private direct investment from abroad, supplemented in appropriate cases by external public investment in the country. Investment from abroad should be regarded as ancillary to internal investment which should be the principal source of funds for economic development. In the granting of the iron-ore concessions the Venezuelan Government has given further indication of its desire to maintain a favorable climate for private foreign investment and to encourage free enterprise.

General Economic Policy.

. . . . . .

The US made an effort in 1950 to encourage Venezuela to accede to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [12] and to negotiate their tariff concessions under the terms of that agreement.[13] However, the Venezuelan Government felt that the only item of major importance in its export trade is oil, that the US is its principal customer and that even if it participated in a multilateral agreement its negotiations would be almost wholly bilateral. Therefore Venezuela hopes through revision of the US-Venezuelan trade agreement to obtain in its own right as our principal supplier of oil the concessions which Mexico had obtained from us in 1943. A further deterrent to Venezuelan participation in multilateral negotiations was the difficulty of offering concessions on Venezuelan import tariffs at a time when protectionist sentiment is strong. Therefore, while our basic commercial policy indicates the desirability of encouraging Venezuelan participation in GATT we recognize the practical necessity of dealing bilaterally with Venezuela at this time.

As a means of diversifying the economy of the country and developing additional sources of foreign exchange, as well as for reasons of national pride, the Venezuelan Government has encouraged the expansion of a Venezuelan merchant marine and civil air carriers. It is our policy to regard this development favorably provided the Venezuelan Government interposes no obstacles to free competition by American carriers for this international trade. In mid-1950 the increasing amount of cargo carried by the Venezuelan Navigation Company and the Gran Colombian Merchant Fleet [14] and their policy of undercutting Grace Line and other Shipping Conference vessels brought a threat of a rate war. The US used its good offices to bring all of the shipping interests together, and an agreement was reached to permit non-conference shipping lines to compete on fair terms with the conference lines.[15] In December 1950 a circular letter [16] was addressed to Venezuelan importers by the Ministry of Fomento which was obviously intended to influence importers to use national merchant vessels. The US Government pointed out that this appeared to be a means of interfering with free competition and the Venezuelan authorities agreed not to send further communications of this type.

[12] For text of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), concluded at Geneva, October 30, 1947, and entered into force for the United States, January 1, 1948, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 1700, or 61 Stat. (pts. 5–6).

[13] For documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 1019 ff.

A bilateral Air Transport Agreement was signed by the US and Venezuela in May 1948 but never ratified by the Junta despite repeated US efforts. For approximately a year the Venezuelan Government has adopted measures which are considered to be discriminatory against US carriers. It is our policy to conclude a mutually satisfactory agreement, or failing this to establish conditions of reciprocity which do not presently exist.

. . . . . .

Encouragement of Democracy and Friendship for US.

. . . . . .

In November 1950 the President of the Military Junta, Lieutenant Colonel Delgado Chalbaud, was assassinated. A civilian successor, Dr. German Suarez Flamerich, was chosen as Junta President by the other two Lieutenant Colonels who comprised the Junta and the same group of military leaders who created the Military Junta in November 1948. At the same time the word "military" was dropped from the official title of the Junta. Despite the fact that the three-man Junta acts as a unit in issuing all decrees, it is generally felt that Lieutenant Colonel Pérez Jiménez,[17] Minister of National Defense, is the most powerful member of the Junta.

The Junta's declared intention to return as rapidly as possible to a democratic form of government has been tempered by its desire to maintain order and to prevent, by whatever means, the return to power of Acción Democrática or any group opposed to the present Government. In this connection it should be remembered that throughout Venezuelan history the armed forces have held almost uninterrupted power and they have no intention of again permitting a civilian gov-

---

[14] Flota Mercante Gran Colombiana, S.A., a shipping line jointly owned by Venezuela, Colombia, and Ecuador.

[15] For documentation relating to the shipping agreement, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 1019 ff.

[16] Not printed.

[17] Marcos Pérez Jiménez.

ernment to gain real control and so end their domination. On April 18, 1951 an electoral statute was promulgated which provides for election of a constituent assembly by a process which will require approximately 14 months. This assembly would decide upon a new constitution and would review the actions of the present government. It is anticipated that from three to six months later there would be an election of a president and a congress as well as municipal officials. Some of the constitutional guarantees have been restored and the elections will be carried out by compulsory voting by all those 18 years of age or over but barring participation by any leaders of Acción Democrática or the outlawed Communist Party. Thus the return toward political democracy is in progress.

. . . . . .

During World War II Venezuela acquired nearly $4 million worth of military equipment under Lend Lease and settlement of this account has practically been completed. Further arms were sold to Venezuela under the Interim Arms Program, but the lack of legislative authority for inaugurating an arms standardization plan and the relatively high cost of American arms were responsible for the fact that Venezuela during the post-war period acquired the greater part of its purchases of arms from European countries, principally Great Britain, Belgium and Czechoslovakia. Present re-armament efforts of European countries are increasingly preventing such sales. Under the terms of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act,[18] Venezuela is able to purchase arms and equipment from the US whenever our own military requirements and our arming of higher priority countries in other parts of the world will permit. Venezuela has indicated a desire to obtain a substantial amount of armament from the US and a portion of the equipment requested is being supplied. While Venezuela has expressed dissatisfaction with the length of time required for processing requests for equipment and our inability to supply certain types of armaments we have endeavored to assure the Venezuelan Government of our desire to meet that country's hemispheric defense requirements as rapidly as possible bearing in mind the higher priority needs created by such situations as the Korean conflict.

It is recognized that some of the Venezuelan requests are in excess of genuine hemispheric defense needs.[19] Accordingly, the US will seek to persuade Venezuela to minimize its military expenditures in time of peace by maintaining only those armed forces necessary to meet its obligations for collective defense. It is emphasized that military cooperation must be held within the limits of Venezuela's economic [18] For text of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act (Public Law 329), approved October 6, 1949, see 63 Stat. 714.

[19] Documentation concerning United States policy with respect to hemisphere defense may be found on pp. 985 ff.

means and no training or equipment will be provided which is likely to be used for aggression or threat of aggression against any other American republic. Recognizing that Venezuela has never engaged in a foreign war and that despite certain minor points of international friction there is no indication of a current threat of aggression, it is nevertheless this Government's policy to discourage any armaments race between Venezuela and any neighboring countries. In matters of inter-American military cooperation for hemispheric defense our policy will continue to be guided by the overall policy set forth in the National Security Council's decision of May 18, 1950 [20] which provided for the creation of a Western Hemisphere Defense Scheme and for the closest coordination between the Departments of Defense and State in the implementation of this program at all stages as well as the timing of the individual steps.

Until such time as Venezuela's defense role has been specifically set forth and agreed upon by both countries, it is our policy to scrutinize with great care all applications for export of armaments to Venezuela and to avoid encouraging any significant increase in Venezuela's military forces and equipment not obviously required for hemispheric defense plans already approved or for commitments to the UN.

C. RELATIONS WITH OTHER STATES

No major friction has existed in recent years in Venezuela's relations with other states, with the exception of the Dominican Republic. This tension arose from the harboring of each other's exiles and reached its peak with a threat of possible hostilities under the Acción Democrática Government. It has nearly disappeared since the November 1948 revolution. Venezuelan resentment toward Cuba for permitting the Inter-American Conference for the Defense of Democracy to meet at Habana in May 1950 and for permitting a Cuban official to publish remarks insulting to the Venezuelan Junta caused a near-rupture in relations in mid-1950; ex-President Betancourt's [21] residence in Habana since August 1950 is another source of irritation. At present, relations with Cuba may be said to be neither strained nor cordial.

The present Venezuelan Government has held some fear of hostile action by a combination of AD exiles and the "Caribbean Legion" [22] possibly operating from Guatemala and conceivably aided by the Communist Party. The principal AD exiles are living in Cuba, Costa Rica, Mexico, and the US and have been active in disseminating propaganda against the government which overthrew them, and it may be assumed [20] Reference is to the decision of the National Security Council (NSC) to adopt the NSC document entitled "United States Policy Toward Inter-American Military Collaboration", designated NSC 56/2, and dated May 18, 1950; for text, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. I, p. 628.

[21] Rómulo Betancourt.

[22] A group of political exiles and military men from countries in the Caribbean with the alleged aim of overthrowing certain dictatorial governments in the area.

they are plotting its overthrow. However, the most careful investigations have failed to substantiate rumors that AD was attempting to procure arms for this purpose in the US. Despite frequent reports that the Caribbean Legion is planning armed attempts to overthrow the Venezuelan and other governments, no significant effort along these lines is at all likely. Our general policy in all these cases of friction has been to urge reliance upon established inter-American machinery for maintenance of hemispheric peace and solidarity, to oppose intervention by one state in the domestic affairs of another either directly or by aiding exiled groups and at the same time to make clear that we consider the denial of democratic rights by any country to its citizens inconsistent with the expressed ideals of the American republics.

The Guatemalan Government was very friendly toward the AD administration and has not resumed relations with Venezuela since the 1948 coup. Uruguay is the only other American republic with which the present Venezuelan Government has not yet resumed relations.

Venezuelan relations with Colombia and Ecuador have been traditionally friendly, although in the case of Colombia because of a variety of problems which have arisen in recent months relations are not perhaps as cordial as they normally have been. These three countries which once formed Gran Colombia have stressed their common cultural tradition and in recent years have endeavored to strengthen economic ties through such efforts as the Gran Colombia merchant fleet. Venezuela has been less enthusiastic than Colombia with respect to these efforts, but is a valued partner because of its large supplies of dollar exchange. The Quito Charter signed by Ecuador, Colombia, Panama and Venezuela in August 1948 envisages among other things a Customs and Economic Union. Only Colombia and Ecuador have ratified this Charter and the Venezuelan Foreign Minister has stated that while many useful steps may be taken by the newly organized Provisional Gran Colombia Economic Council, a customs union is not suitable between countries which lack complementary economies. It is our policy to favor developments which strengthen the economy of Venezuela, so long as they are not in conflict with our commercial policies and do not result in unfair discrimination against US enterprise.

Venezuela has maintained basically friendly, although not close, relations with its other large neighbor, Brazil. A recent affinity has developed with Perú as both military juntas came into power by coups d'état. In contrast, Venezuela's firm friendship with Haiti dates back to its struggle for independence when Bolívar received aid from Haiti.

Venezuela has, at times, desired the independence of the Netherlands West Indies from European rule but there has been no recent agitation. In the past Curaçao and Aruba have been a meeting place for Venezuelan exiles plotting their return to power.

Relations with Great Britain, which have been generally friendly, are affected chiefly by the presence of British oil companies (Shell subsidiaries) producing about one-third of Venezuela's oil. Some passing resentment arose in 1950 from a British proposal to restrict imports of dollar oil from Venezuela, although the British foreign exchange situation which gave rise to the proposal improved sufficiently to eliminate the necessity for any restrictions. Venezuelan dissatisfaction with the 1899 award which settled the boundary dispute with British Guiana flared up again in the Venezuelan press at the beginning of 1951. While Venezuela would like a revision of this boundary and has also indicated that it would welcome the independence of all the European colonies in this hemisphere, it is not believed that this dispute will extend beyond the pages of the Venezuelan press. Reference to such issues is apt to be accompanied by expressions of gratitude for our historical role as a defender of Venezuela's sovereignty.

Venezuela maintains diplomatic relations with the USSR and Czechoslovakia, in the former case by Chargés d'Affaires at present. While many who sought to overthrow Dictator Gómez [23] were trained in Communist revolutionary methods, relatively few Venezuelans had, or have, the slightest interest in cooperating with the international objectives of the USSR. However, the principal Communist Party, until outlawed last year, exerted an influence in organized labor and certain other groups, and is continuing to function as an underground movement.

D. EVALUATION

US policies have been successful in encouraging friendly cooperation between the Venezuelan Government and American oil companies and have thus created a favorable atmosphere for the continuance of US private ownership of the oil industry and have prevented any widespread demand for nationalization by the Venezuelan Government. It is especially important at present that this Government continue to use its best efforts to this end. We should also continue to encourage the economic development of Venezuela along present lines as representative of the effective functioning of the free enterprise system. In this connection the success of our technical assistance programs, encouraging economic development and diversification of industry in Venezuela warrants not only their continuance but their expansion along the lines envisaged under the Point IV program.[24] In fact, Venezuela affords an excellent opportunity for the [23] Juan Vicente Gómez held power in Venezuela from 1908 to 1935.

[24] For documentation relating to organizational and other aspects of the Point Four Program in 1951, see vol. I, pp. 1641 ff.; for documentation concerning the technical assistance policy of the United States toward the other American Republics as a group, see pp. 1038 ff.

effective use of Point IV. While it is certain that any technical assistance which strengthens the economic stability of Venezuela and increases its desire to cooperate with the US is of permanent and real value to our national security, it is important that we not confine our Point IV activities to those fields which make a direct contribution to US security under emergency conditions. We must bear in mind that our concern for the long range economic welfare and development of Venezuela will contribute substantially to the security of the US.

Our efforts to guide the commercial policy of Venezuela along the lines of reduced trade barriers have been successful only to the extent that they have moderated the trend toward protectionism. It now appears that the best interest of both countries will be served by modifying our trade agreement so as to permit Venezuela to effect tariff increases on a limited number of import items covered by the present agreement in exchange for certain compensatory concessions. At the same time Venezuela wishes to obtain in its own right the tariff concession on US imports of oil which was granted to Mexico in our trade agreement with that country. In view of the importance to both countries of avoiding high US tariff barriers against Venezuelan oil this Government must make an effort to work out a mutually acceptable modification of the trade agreement with Venezuela. Efforts should also be continued however to dissuade the Venezuelan Government from imposing high Venezuelan tariffs or restrictive quotas on imports of significance to US exporters.

We were successful, as a result of this Government's efforts in mid-1950, in avoiding a rate-war between Venezuelan and American shipping lines which would have been detrimental to the best commercial relations between the two countries and we have discouraged certain actions by the Venezuelan Government which would have violated the spirit of the agreement between the shipping lines. It is hoped that current efforts to resolve the conflict between US and Venezuelan aviation interests will be equally successful.

It is difficult to evaluate the results of our efforts to encourage restoration of a greater measure of democracy. The slow steps which Venezuela has taken in this direction were undoubtedly due primarily to other factors than the preference for a democratic form of government manifested by the US. Nevertheless, Venezuelans, whether in the Government, among the opposition or among the governed, are not unaware of the preference of the American press and public for civilian rule and democratic processes, and it can be assumed this fact has had some influence on the plans of the ruling clique.

Our efforts to maintain and strengthen Venezuelan friendship at the government and upper-class levels have met with reasonable success. On the other hand much remains to be done, particularly in the direction of greater appeal to the laboring masses and among the students and writers, especially in view of the appeal of Communist propaganda to these groups.

The US Army, Air and Naval Missions in Venezuela have achieved some success in improving the standards of the Venezuelan Armed Forces. The unavailability or high cost of US arms compared with those of European manufacture have militated against standardization of Venezuelan arms along US lines. Although the urgent requirements of the US and our commitments to higher priority non-hemispheric countries make it impossible to grant all of the arms requests received from Venezuela, even within the limits of those which would serve the hemispheric defense needs of that country, nevertheless Venezuela has recently been receiving a portion of the equipment which it has requested. The fact that the Venezuelan Government has sufficient exchange to meet the dollar cost of this equipment has placed it in a better position than most of the other American republics.

It is understood that the Department of Defense has now, in accordance with the stipulations of NSC 56/2, tentatively formulated a specific role which Venezuela should play in the defense of this hemisphere. This development, as well as the study by the Departments of Defense and State of the results of the bilateral military conversations at Panama, should furnish guidance in meeting Venezuela's requests for arms. The State Department has long felt that export of arms to Venezuela as to the other American republics should be limited to what is strictly essential to the performance by those countries of their role in defending the hemisphere from external aggression, in performing such police functions as are called for by the United Nations and in maintaining their internal security. It has felt that additional arms are an economic burden and a stimulant to competitive arming and therefore detrimental to the achievement of important US objectives.

While the changed situation with respect to the supply and demand for armaments has practically eliminated the likelihood of any effort to stimulate export of US armaments to Venezuela it is still essential that there be a clear understanding of the exact role which Venezeula (as well as the other American republics) is to play in hemispheric defense. Our inability to supply Venezuela with some of the arms useful for hemisphere defense may lead us to encourage Venezuela to substitute other military equipment, but there should be an effort to restrict this equipment to types which are genuinely useful to its role in the Western Hemisphere Defense Scheme. Our military missions and any contact between Venezuelan and US officials should be used to persuade Venezuela of the desirability of fitting its requirements to this mutually agreed upon defense scheme.

731.56/7–1351

The Secretary of State to the Secretary of Defense (Marshall)

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] August 14, 1951.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Reference is made to Mr. Lovett's letter of July 13, 1951 to Secretary Acheson transmitting a copy of an "agreement document" resulting from Joint Planning Talks held at Quarry Heights from March 19 to 23, 1951 between the Commander-in-Chief, Caribbean and the Chief of Staff of the Venezuelan armed forces.[1]

The Department of State believes that this document, subject to certain modifications, will provide a useful basis for further conversations between representatives of the Venezuelan and United States armed forces and that it will mark a significant step in the development of the program of inter-American military collaboration set forth in NSC 56/2. The following comments are offered in accordance with the desire of the Department of State to cooperate fully in accomplishing those purposes.

1. Although the modifications to sub-paragraph 2 c (1) suggested in your letter are desirable, for complete accuracy this paragraph should read as follows:

> "In the event that either Venezuela or the United States, or any other party to the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance, is subjected to an armed attack or other form of aggression the provisions of the Treaty will apply."

2. It is noted that the "agreement document" states a Venezuelan requirement for three squadrons of jet interceptors, and related equipment (page 8),[2] with two alternative methods for possible procurement, and that one of these alternatives contemplates U.S. assistance to Venezuela in procurement from British sources ("Note" page 9;[3] also "Note" page 20, annex C[4]). Apart from the question of procurement from NATO sources, which involves procedures not yet worked out, as well as the domestic political implications involved, this would appear to mark a reversal of previous policy regarding standardization on U.S. type equipment by Latin American countries.

3. This Department agrees that the clarification you suggest with respect to the meaning of "a requirement for the following equipment and assistance" (sub-paragraph 2 g) is important in order that the Venezuelan Government shall not gain the impression that we are agreeing to supply this equipment regardless of requirements in the United States and other areas. Recent developments in Iran do, however, emphasize the importance of Venezuelan oil, and make desirable a re-examination of the priorities given Venezuela in the allocation of military equipment. The assignment by the Department of Defense of priorities which would permit Venezuela to obtain such military

[1] Ante, p. 1627.
[2] Reference is to subparagraph 2 g (3) (d), p. 1631.
[3] Reference is to the Note following subparagraph 2 g (3) (g), ibid.
[4] Annex C to Mr. Lovett's letter of July 13 is not printed.

equipment more quickly than has heretofore been possible would meet with the approval of this Department.

This Department appreciates the close cooperation accorded by the Department of Defense in regard to the talks held at Quarry Heights, and will follow further developments with interest.

Sincerely yours,

For the Secretary of State:
H. FREEMAN MATTHEWS
Deputy Under Secretary

611.31/9-2651

The Ambassador in Venezuela (Armour) to the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Mann)

TOP SECRET

CARACAS, September 6, 1951.

DEAR TOM: As you know, we have all here been concerned over the past months at the delay in making available to the Venezuelan Government military material; some of it, as in the case of spare parts for American planes, has been contracted and already paid for, and even more serious, the long delay in approving and implementing the lists of materials agreed upon during the Panama talks last March. I covered this matter quite fully in two or three letters which I wrote to Ed Miller (dated July 26, 27, and two of July 31).[1] I recently received from Mr. Bernbaum [2] a letter [3] in reply to the above letters giving us some useful information and background on such progress as had been made to date. I think you will agree, however, the situation still remains unsatisfactory, and I do hope that everything possible will be done, both by our Department and the Defense Department, to hasten matters.

The other day I found that Captain James H. Davis, head of our Naval Mission, and Colonel William Greenfield, head of the Air Mission, were flying up to the United States on matters connected with their respective missions, and I decided on the spur of the moment that this was too good an opportunity to miss. I, therefore, wrote a letter to Mr. Lovett, Deputy Secretary of Defense, a copy of which I enclose herewith, asking him to give Captain Davis and Colonel Greenfield an opportunity to present either to him or to other high officers in the Department of Defense an up-to-date report on the situation, in the hope that this might have some effect in bringing home to them the urgency, and even seriousness, of the situation.

---

[1] None printed.
[2] Maurice M. Bernbaum, Officer in Charge, North and West Coast Affairs, Office of South American Affairs.
[3] Not printed.

It is true that, as the postscript in my letter to Lovett shows, some of the spare parts for the planes have now been handed over to the Venezuelan authorities in Washington for shipment here, but this is only a small fraction of the material involved, and does not, of course, touch the more important material dealt with in the Panama agreement.

In taking this action, I hope that you and Ed Miller and others in the Department will not feel that I have bypassed you or thrown any monkey wrench into the machinery, which is, of course, the last thing I would wish to do, or had any intention of doing. After all, what we are after, and I feel sure I may include you in this, is to convince the Venezuelan Government, particularly the higher Military authorities here, including Colonel Perez Jiménez and Colonel Félix Moreno, that we mean business, and that we are determined to carry out our promise to make available the material necessary to protect the flow of strategic materials, particularly from the oil fields.

When I told the Foreign Minister the other evening that I had entrusted this mission to Captain Davis and Colonel Greenfield, he seemed greatly relieved and added significantly: "I suppose there is no need to tell you what an unfortunate effect this delay in making this material available has had and is having on other phases of the work here." He undoubtedly had in mind the Bilateral Aviation Agreement, the Orinoco Mining problem, the freight rate question, and other matters requiring final approval of the Military Junta.

In other words, if the question of materials can be satisfactorily disposed of, or put on the road to settlement, this will create an "ambiente" in higher military circles that will facilitate our negotiations in these other apparently extraneous matters.

How much the Junta, and particularly Colonel Perez Jiménez, have this on their mind was brought home to me when Gómez Ruiz told me that the Junta had wished to have incorporated in the Venezuelan Government's reply to the UN Resolution "Uniting for Peace"[4] a statement to the effect that unfortunately the military material required to enable Venezuela to carry out the obligations they were undertaking in connection with this resolution had not to date been forthcoming, owing to failure of the United States Government to supply it. He very properly insisted that any such statement could not and should not be incorporated in a reply to an international organization, but was a matter to be taken up with our Government on a bilateral basis, which he then proceeded to do.

---

[4] Reference is to Resolution No. 377 (V) of the General Assembly of the United Nations, November 3, 1950. For text, see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Fifth Session, Resolutions Adopted by the General Assembly during the period 19 September to 15 December 1950, Supplement No. 20 (A/1775), pp. 10–12.

As to the Venezuelan Government's decision to go elsewhere for some of their material, I am enclosing a further memorandum prepared by the Naval Attaché, under date of August 24,[5] last, giving the latest on the purchase of three destroyers in England and negotiations now under way for construction of certain smaller craft in Italy. As I said in my letter to Mr. Lovett, it does look as though our standardization program for South America, or at any rate in so far as it applied to Venezuela, is rapidly evaporating into thin air.

Sincerely yours, NORMAN

[Enclosure]

The Ambassador in Venezuela (Armour) to the Deputy Secretary of Defense (Lovett)

TOP SECRET CARACAS, August 31, 1951.

DEAR BOB: I am taking advantage of the departure for Washington of Captain James H. Davis, head of our Naval Mission, and Colonel William D. Greenfield, head of the Air Mission, to give them this letter to you, in the hope that you may be able to spare them a few minutes of your busy time in order to explain a matter which has been giving all of us here considerable concern.

It has to do with the question of military material and equipment and the growing annoyance, fast approaching resentment, on the part of the Venezuelan military authorities over our failure to date to help them in meeting their requirements. Worse than that, we have thus far been unable to get any word from Washington on the supplies contracted and paid for months ago. This has to do with spare parts for the 12 F–47 planes we sold them some years ago which are now all grounded. There is also involved spare parts for some of our B–25s amounting to $259,000. Full payment, totalling about $400,000 was made by the Venezuelan Air Attaché, through the State Department I believe, over four months ago, and to date not only has nothing arrived, but, as I say, we are still without word from Washington where it is or when it may be expected.

In the meantime, quite naturally, since we appear to be unable to help them, the Venezuelans are going elsewhere to get their material and our standardization program, at least so far as Venezuela is concerned, appears rapidly to be fading into thin air. A year ago, the Venezuelans bought seven Vampire jet planes. Recently they were able to get the British to reverse their decision not to give them any more, and we have now been informed a contract is soon to be signed with the local De Havilland representative for at least five more Vampires, and this on a cash basis.

[5] Not printed.

As regards the Navy, things are just as bad or worse. Unable to interest our Government in helping them with ships and equipment, they have contracted for three destroyers to be built in England, the keels of two having been laid with appropriate ceremonies a month ago. They are also negotiating with Italy for certain types of smaller craft and equipment. As our Naval Attaché has reported, once the British ships are delivered, the Venezuelans may find it necessary for practical reasons to replace our Naval Mission by a British Mission. Furthermore, if they are forced to replace American planes by British,[6] a British Air Mission later might well seem indicated.

Finally, there is the question of the implementation of the agreement worked out at Panama. I have seen your correspondence with the State Department on this, and note that both Departments are in general agreement on the lists of equipment required by Venezuela, but that the next step planned appears to be another conference down here. Frankly, what the Venezuelans want is action not words, and I strongly recommend that, if it is decided to send a group down for further talks, those chosen be given a list of restricted materials we are prepared to supply now. After all, as the Foreign Minister said to me recently: "You proposed the Panama Conference, not ourselves"; which is entirely correct. Also it is not as if they were asking to be given this equipment; they are prepared to pay for everything they get: In fact, they insisted on including this stipulation in the Panama agreement.

Frankly, I am puzzled by our whole attitude toward Venezuela. We get worked up into a lather over the Iranian oil situation—quite naturally, I admit—but when you consider that Venezuela is the second largest oil producer in the world;—their production is now over 1,700,000 barrels of crude a day,—and the greatest oil exporter in the world; when you consider that their refining capacity taken in conjunction with Curacao and Aruba, which refine only Venezuelan oil, is now close to 1,000,000 barrels a day—about double of Abadan—it seems incredible to me why our people seem disposed to treat Venezuela in what is, in effect, a pretty cavalier manner.

With this tremendous flow of oil in which we are so vitally interested, and which must be protected against possible sabotage or attack in case of war, with the great iron deposits now soon to start moving to their destinations in the United States, surely it would seem that Venezuela merits a place on the priority list ahead of virtually any Latin American country, and, I would think, should not even follow Spain in order of importance. I am, therefore, most anxious that Captain Davis and Colonel Greenfield, while in Washington, should have an opportunity to discuss this matter of materials at a high level, and hope very much that you will be able to arrange this. Of course, if you could see them yourself, even for a few minutes, I know they would appreciate it, and it would furthermore enable them to bring you my greetings.

[6] For documentation on the attitude of the United States toward the sale of jet aircraft to Venezuela, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 1019 ff.

Sincerely yours, NORMAN ARMOUR

P.S. Since the above was written, Colonel Greenfield, head of our Air Mission, tells me he has just been informed by Colonel Felix Moreno, Chief of Staff, that out of the total of $419,000 in spare parts paid for, $259,000 worth in spare parts for the B–25s has now been turned over to the Venezuelan Military Attaché in Washington for shipment here (This was under Venezuelan Contract 8/4). They are still, however, without word of the replacements for the F–47s, totalling $157,000.

Caracas Embassy Files, Lot 64 F 14, "400–Defense Talks US & Ven, 1950–1952" [1]

The Acting Secretary of Defense (Lovett) to the Ambassador in Venezuela (Armour)

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, September 13, 1951.

DEAR NORMAN: The Department of Defense is cognizant of the problems stated in your letter of 31 August 1951. The Departments of State and Defense have been endeavoring to clarify the issues and to make available for purchase by the Government of Venezuela, with earliest possible delivery, the military materiel essential to the security of that country. Your frank statement of the situation will certainly be helpful to me in the further development of military assistance to Venezuela.

The Republic of Venezuela has submitted a number of requests for procurement of various types of Army, Navy and Air Force equipment, under the reimbursable aid provisions of Section 408(e) of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended. The status of these requests are outlined for you in the inclosure.[2]

Information concerning most of the materiel requested has been made available to the Venezuelan Government in various pricing and availability studies. The total value of the requests covered by these studies is approximately $10 million, including accessorial charges. Firm orders have been received from the Venezuelan Government for less than $0.5 million worth of materiel. The availability of the items concerned in these studies varies from ninety days after date of deposit of funds through Fiscal Year 1953.

---

[1] Top secret central files of the Embassy in Caracas, Venezuela, for the period 1948–1956, which are part of Federal Records Center Accession 68 A 5159.

[2] Not printed.

Contracts for spare parts for the F–47D and B–25 aircraft and the bomb-sight servicing equipment were signed 16–24 May 1951 by Colonel Calderon. Shipments began 25 August 1951. Consistent flow should follow with volume dependent upon status of spare parts, i.e., whether from stock or procurement. Original time estimates were for 90–120 days for stock items and longer for procurement.

Information in my office indicates that the three destroyers to be built in England are the result of negotiations begun almost two years ago. Full catalog price of new U.S. destroyer-type vessels varied at that time from $20,500,000 each for new types to $7,500,000 for the DE type built during the last war. The destroyers being built in Britain are estimated to be costing $5 million each. It would appear, therefore, that the matter of price was the controlling consideration in this case.

The agreement reached in conference at Quarry Heights, Canal Zone during the period 19–23 March 1951, with certain changes made by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, provides the basis for further close collaboration and planning with the Venezuelan military authorities. The requirements enumerated therein are not to be construed as a commitment by the United States Government to furnish such equipment and assistance. The purpose of this reservation does not question the need for equipment assistance from the United States, but rather points out the fact that the United States must balance Venezuelan equipment requests against the equipment demands for U.N. forces in Korea, the expansion of the United States Armed Forces, and other foreign commitments. It is considered that further military conversations in Caracas and an on-the-spot joint United States-Venezuelan survey of the entire security problem may be needed to permit an accurate assessment of the implications of the total Venezuelan requirement.

The following brief résumé shows the status of requests for the materiel indicated in the Panama Agreement Document under "Assistance Required from the U.S.":

(1) Army—

No formal requests for pricing and availability have been received from the Venezuelan Government for the additional transportation and communication equipment, gas masks and riot-type chemical ammunition; prefabricated structures similar to quonset huts, firefighting equipment and anti-aircraft equipment. Formal requests for pricing and availability have been received as indicated in the status report for Cases 8, 9 and 11.

(2) Navy—

The assistance required is couched in the broadest of terms. No requests have been received from the Venezuelan Government for any of the materiel listed. Specifications and details should be furnished. Assistance in the form of advice and planning aid is a continuing process through the U.S. Naval Mission in Venezuela and can be expanded.

(3) Air Force—

No specific requests for pricing and availability have been received from the Venezuelan Government for the materiel listed.

Inasmuch as recent developments in Iran do emphasize the importance of Venezuelan oil, I consider it desirable to re-examine the priorities accorded Venezuela in the allocation of military equipment, and I am taking necessary steps to effect this re-examination.

The Venezuelan authorities should, however, submit firm orders and funds for materiel for which pricing and availability data have already been furnished, and should also submit requests for pricing and availability studies on other items desired, including those in the Agreement Document.

With best regards, I am

Very sincerely yours, ROBERT A. LOVETT

731.00/9–1451

Memorandum by Mr. Bainbridge C. Davis of the Office of South American Affairs to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] September 14, 1951.

Subject: Status of Venezuelan Problems

1. Trade Agreement Negotiations. Formal notice of intention to renegotiate the trade agreement was issued August 29. Briefs on Schedules I and II items are to be submitted to Committee for Reciprocity Information (CRI) by September 28 and (on Schedule II "Peril Point" items) to Tariff Commission by September 26. The Tariff Commission's oral hearings open October 2 and the CRI hearings on October 9. The Country Committee is studying the items Venezuela wishes to withdraw or modify in Schedule I and compensatory concessions we might request. Fairly strong opposition to Venezuelan withdrawal of several of these items is expected and the negotiations may be very difficult and protracted. There is a possibility that some labor unions will oppose U.S. concessions on petroleum items, and American organized labor as a whole may oppose the entire negotiations because of labor's dislike of the present Venezuelan Government.

2. Aviation. As a result of our firm stand on the necessity for restoring reciprocity between Venezuelan and United States air carriers the Foreign Minister put before the Junta on August 30 a formula for achieving reciprocity as a basis for negotiation of a United States-Venezuelan air transport agreement. A Foreign Office official reported that the Junta agreed in principle with the Foreign Minister's proposal but withheld approval until technical details could be worked out. Ambassador Armour and Mr. Sparks told me on September 11 that there had been further delay due to the absence of the Foreign Minister and others. They felt that your discussion of these matters with the Foreign Minister next week would carry great weight and they urged that the CAB withhold any drastic action pending the result of these discussions. CAB has agreed to this. It would seem wise for you to emphasize CAB's pressure for a rapid solution so that the Venezuelan authorities understand the importance of the time element. (There is attached a memorandum by Mr. Russell [1] setting forth the aviation problem in greater detail.)

3. Shipping—Freight Rates. The Foreign Minister promised to expedite the Venezuelan Government's study of the freight rate situation as a basis for deciding whether the Venezuelan Navigation Company may be permitted to join the Conference Lines in raising freight rates at this time. (At the request of Andrés Boulton, Venezuelan Grace Line representative, Junta President Suárez [2] asked Dr. González Gorrondona [3] to prepare this study.) Dr. Otañez [4] undoubtedly informed his Government of your remarks to him on this subject.[5] You may wish to consider whether it would be productive to make the additional suggestion that CAVN be permitted to meet with the Conference Lines to exchange views on the freight rate problem while awaiting completion of the freight rate study.[6] (I understand you are taking with you the detailed information prepared by Mr. Russell.)

4. Oil Concessions. The Venezuelan Government is thinking of granting new oil concessions possibly by the end of this year. However, it is believed that it is planned to do nothing until the Iranian crisis is settled and our trade agreement negotiations are well advanced. The present Venezuelan plans are aimed at discovering additional oil reserves and permitting increased operation by several companies now operating unprofitably in small concession areas, in order to encourage these smaller operators to stay in Venezuela and so diversify oil production among a larger number of companies. (It

---

[1] Gerald W. Russell, Office of Regional American Affairs.

[2] Germán Suárez Flamerich.

[3] J. J. González Gorrondona, Vice President of the Central Bank of Venezuela.

[4] Aureliano Otañez, Minister-Counselor, Venezuelan Embassy.

[5] In a memorandum of conversation by Mr. Davis, dated September 5, 1951, Mr. Miller is reported to have made it clear to Minister-Counselor Otañez that the United States Government "was not expressing an opinion with respect to the proper level of freight rates but that we were concerned lest the inability of the Conference lines to discuss this matter with CAVN might lead either to a rate war or to withdrawal of certain shipping services by American members of the Conference." (931.53/9–551) is not expected that the granting of these new concessions to the smaller operating companies will result in substantially increased oil production within the next few years.) However, in a speech at the opening of the Petroleum Convention [7] Dr. Vera [8] reportedly said that Venezuela plans to increase oil production and to dedicate it to the cause of the West. We have no indication that the total oil production will be materially increased or that any of the new concessions will go to the larger companies which presumably could contribute more rapidly to increased oil production. You may have an opportunity to stress the importance to the free world of such action as Venezuela can take which will result in an actual substantial increase in its oil production.

[6] On November 7, 1951, the Venezuelan Government agreed to permit representatives of the CAVN to enter into discussions with representatives of American shipping lines (Grace, Alcoa, Lykes Brothers) concerning revisions in the freight rate structure. These discussions continued intermittently until January 18, 1952, when an agreement was reached. Pertinent documents are in Department of State files 911.53 and 911.5331.

5. U.S. Steel Negotiations. On June 11 the Foreign Minister told Mr. Sparks that the contract between the Venezuelan Government and the Orinoco Mining Company (U.S. Steel's subsidiary) was substantially settled and that there remained only the matter of phraseology. (U.S. Steel had been rapidly approaching a point where it would insist upon some decision and if that were unfavorable it would be prepared to suspend operations in Venezuela.) On August 17 the Government handed a draft contract to Mr. Lake who took it to New York to discuss with U.S. Steel. We have had no word from U.S. Steel or Caracas regarding signature of the contract. The Venezuelan Government has possibly been delaying U.S. Steel not only to obtain the best terms regarding iron ore and future assistance in establishing a steel industry, but also for bargaining purposes in connection with the other problems pending with the U.S. as they are doubtless aware of the importance we attach to expediting shipment of their iron ore.

On September 11 the Under Secretary of the Air Force [9] mentioned to Under Secretary Webb [10] that he understood that steel negotiations in Venezuela had bogged down and he pointed out that high grade iron ore is very important to us just now since it enables us to use blast furnaces which cannot handle lower grade ore. Mr. Webb phoned me for background. I explained the status of these negotiations to Mr. Webb and offered to cable Caracas for possible later information but [7] The Venezuelan National Petroleum Convention was held at Caracas, September 8–18, 1951. The United States sent an observer delegation, headed by Oscar L. Chapman, Secretary of the Interior and Petroleum Administrator for Defense. Mr. Miller, also a member of the delegation, attended the closing sessions of the convention. For a Department of State notice concerning the convention, see Department of State Bulletin, September 24, 1951, p. 516.

---

During Mr. Miller's brief stay in Caracas, he discussed with Foreign Minister Gómez Ruiz current problems in United States-Venezuelan relations; a memorandum of their conversation, by Ambassador Armour, dated September 18, 1951, is enclosed with despatch 461, from Caracas, September 25, 1951, not printed (110.15–Mi/9–2551).

[8] Santiago Vera Izquierdo, Venezuelan Minister of Mines and Hydrocarbons.

[9] John A. McCone.

[10] James E. Webb, Under Secretary of State.

he said this would not be necessary. I reported this inquiry to Ambassador Armour by letter. The inquiry may have been related in some way to a rumor that the Wall Street Journal picked up regarding a hitch in these negotiations.[11]

6. Delivery of Arms. The Foreign Minister has recently indicated to Ambassador Armour that members of the Junta as well as the Chief of Staff have felt strongly that the U.S. was not delivering the military equipment requested by Venezuela and necessary for the performance of its role in hemispheric defense and cooperation with UN military efforts. He also indicated that, in addition to great delay even after contracts had been signed, the equipment delivered had been relatively unimportant items whereas those which were most needed were not forthcoming. Ambassador Armour took advantage of a visit to Washington by the heads of our Air and Naval Missions to Venezuela to send a letter to Mr. Lovett presenting this problem in relation to recent Panama talks, to the Iranian situation and to the importance of our relations with Venezuela. These Chiefs of Mission have taken back to Mr. Armour a report of their conversations and an explanation of the status of deliveries of military equipment. Venezuela has so far requested nearly $10 million of equipment of which not quite $500,000 has been obtained. (Of this latter amount, chiefly aircraft parts, about two-fifths has been shipped and the rest is being procured.) With regard to the remaining $9 million of requests, the Venezuelan Government has been informed of price and availability of all of these items or of substitutes where the requested items are not available in the near future. The major substitution is armored cars in place of light tanks, since the latter would not be available for two years and were considered less suitable for Venezuela's needs.

Mr. Lovett's reply to Ambassador Armour which is being sent today enclosed a detailed statement of the requests received from Venezuela for military equipment and the action taken on them. I am attaching our copy of that letter[12] and a memorandum (both top secret) by Mr. Mackay reporting his conversations in the Pentagon yesterday which indicate the present status of thinking regarding the availability of equipment for Venezuela. You may have an opportunity to make sure that there is not an important difference in the interpretation by the [11] In despatch 837, from Caracas, November 27, 1951, the Second Secretary of the Embassy (Connett) reported as follows: "The [Venezuelan] Government officially announced the signing of a contract between the Orinoco Mining Co. (U.S. Steel subsidiary) and the Ministry of Mines and Hydrocarbons for the dredging of the Orinoco river and the Macareo, following approximately ten months of negotiations. Although the major operating contract, covering such matters as taxes, exoneration of import duties, etc., has not yet been signed, it is generally believed that with the signing of the dredging contract the area of disagreement has been so narrowed that a satisfactory solution will be found to this major problem within a short time." (731.00–W/11–2751)

[12] Not printed as an attachment to the source text, but see supra.

Venezuelan and U.S. military authorities of the points covered in paragraph "b" of Mr. Mackay's memorandum.

7. Steel for Sugar Refineries. Venezuela is now seeking priority assistance for the construction of two sugar refineries (Cumanacoa and Motatán). These are two of the four which Eximbank refused to finance last Spring and which are now being constructed on short term credits obtained elsewhere. The present stumbling block is 970 tons of structural steel now in extremely short supply. We hope to be successful in supporting their request for priority rating, but final action has not yet been taken by the NPA.

8. Eximbank Application. Eugenio Mendoza, leading Venezuelan industrialist, has an application pending before the Eximbank for a $4 million credit for enlarging one of his cement mills. The Eximbank staff has prepared a favorable recommendation and the Board appears to be favorable to the credit which has been referred to NAC for approval.

9. Invitation to Lt. Col. Pérez-Jiménez. Defense is anxious to bring Lieutenant Colonel Pérez-Jiménez to the United States as a guest of the Army in his capacity as Minister of Defense rather than member of the Junta. Since American organized labor is highly critical of the present military government of Venezuela and opposes our negotiating the trade agreement with them, we suggested to Defense that they should defer the Pérez-Jiménez visit until after the October trade agreement hearings, and preferably for several months more until the negotiations were concluded. However, as Defense feels that there is some urgency, we have agreed to their tentative proposal to invite him for early November.

10. Ambassador Armour's Plans. The Department sent to the White House yesterday its request for approval of Ambassador Armour's resignation. We shall, of course, cable you as soon as a reply is received. You will recall that the Ambassador indicated during a phone conversation with me on September 11 that he thought it might be desirable to make his plans known shortly before his departure from Caracas but he wanted to discuss this with you during your visit. I understand that the President makes all announcements of this type and I assume that Mr. Armour had in mind that you and he would agree upon the best timing of such a White House announcement.[13]

---

[13] President Truman accepted Ambassador Armour's resignation on September 14, 1951 (123 Armour, Norman), but the announcement was delayed until September 22. The Ambassador's letter of resignation, dated September 13, and the President's letter of acceptance, released to the press on September 22, are printed in Department of State Bulletin, October 8, 1951, pp. 597–598. Ambassador Armour was succeeded by Ambassador Fletcher Warren, who was appointed on October 3, arrived in Caracas on November 14, and presented his credentials on November 21.

[Annex 1]

Memorandum by Mr. Gerald W. Russell of the Office of Regional American Affairs to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller)

[WASHINGTON,] September 14, 1951.

Subject: Aviation Problems in Venezuela.

To refresh your memory and for ready reference, the aviation difficulties between the U.S. and Venezuela are a result of the Venezuelan Government's refusal to permit Chicago and Southern to carry fifth freedom traffic [14] (traffic from Habana to Maiquetia) on all of its flights. It is restricted by the Venezuelan Government to carrying this traffic on only three of its seven flights. The Venezuelan Government also, on November 1, 1950, refused to permit Pan American World Airways to operate nonstop flights from New York to Caracas but are requiring Pan American to make a stop at Kingston on all of its flights to Caracas. The Venezuelan Government sent a delegation to Washington in June of this year to discuss these problems but we were unable to resolve any of them and the Venezuelan Government was informed that it might be necessary for the U.S. Government to take action under Section 402G of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 [15] to amend the LAV certificate to restore reciprocity in the U.S.-Venezuelan operations. After this information was formally presented to the Foreign Minister he indicated orally to Ambassador Armour that the Venezuelan Government would be willing to negotiate a new bilateral air transport agreement. They also indicated that they would remove the restrictions on the U.S. airlines while these negotiations were in progress. This proposal was based on the condition that (1) upon the coming into force of the bilateral, Pan American would agree to cancel its contracts with the Venezuelan Government and (2) that Pan American would drop some of the points it is serving on its east-west route from Panama to Trinidad.

After we received this informal indication from the Foreign Minister, we requested the CAB to withhold issuance of the show cause order pending clarification of the Venezuelan proposal which supposedly was being submitted to the Junta for approval. We have requested the Embassy in Caracas to determine from appropriate Venezuelan authorities answers to the following questions:

(1) Which contract or contracts does the Venezuelan Government wish to cancel?

(2) What are the "certain" stops it wishes Pan American to drop?

[14] For information on this subject, see the editorial note in Foreign Relations, 1946, vol. I, p. 1450.

[15] For text of the Civil Aeronautics Act (Public Law 706), approved June 23, 1938, see 52 Stat. 973.

(3) Would the Venezuelan Government want to cancel the contracts outright or to reach an agreement in principle to cancel these contracts upon coming into force of a bilateral?

It has been nearly a month and we have so far been unsuccessful in getting any clarification of the Venezuelan proposal or any more definite information from the Venezuelan Government. However, the Embassy has pointed out that the cabinet ministers have been absent from Caracas for the past two weeks.

The CAB wanted to issue the show cause order on September 14, 1951. However, the Department would not agree to this as it was our position that we must fully explore the Venezuelan proposal before taking any further action in this matter. However, it will be necessary for us to obtain, on an urgent basis, a definite proposal from Venezuela in order to continue to be successful in getting the CAB to defer its action.

It is suggested when discussing this matter with the Foreign Minister that you point out to him the urgency of getting the Venezuelan position.[16]

[Annex 2]

Memorandum by Mr. Duncan A. D. Mackay of the Office of Regional American Affairs to the Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Miller) [17]

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] September 14, 1951.

Subject: Meeting in Defense to Discuss Venezuelan Requests for Military Equipment

Present: Col. Buford R. Nyquist, Office of Foreign Military Aid, OSD
Mr. Donald Horton, Office of Foreign Military Aid, OSD
Mr. Layton Cain, Office of Foreign Military Aid, OSD
Lt. Col. Craig C. Davis, Western Hemisphere Branch, Office of Foreign Military Affairs, OSD

Late yesterday afternoon, I met in the Pentagon with the above to discuss the reply which Defense proposes to send to Ambassador [16] During the latter part of October at Caracas, and again in late November at Washington, representatives of the United States and Venezuela held informal discussions on aviation matters in order to explore the points of difference between the two countries. As a result of these discussions, it was decided to enter into formal negotiations, and the United States agreed not to take final action to implement the "show cause" order as long as the negotiations proceeded satisfactorily. Although it was hoped that the negotiations could begin on December 10, they did not actually get under way until January 1952. Pertinent documents are in Department of State file 611.3194.

[17] Addressed also to Ambassador Warren and Mr. Bernbaum.

Armour's letter of August 31, 1951 to Mr. Lovett on the subject of the Venezuelan requests for military equipment and to inquire what additional background information Mr. Miller should have for his trip today to Caracas on (1) the resumption of the bilateral military talks with Venezuela on the security of the oil fields and (2) our proposal to Defense regarding the possible increase in the priority allocation for Venezuela of military equipment, in view of the Iranian situation.

Following are the results of my discussions, as well as some observations which were made on (1) and (2) above:

[Here follow comments pertaining to Mr. Lovett's letter of September 13, 1951, page 1652.]

b. Col. Davis informed me that a letter has been sent in the last day or two by Defense to the Army directing CINCARIB to be authorized to resume the military discussions with the Venezuelans as soon as practicable, on the basis of the "agreement document".[18] The next step which apparently is envisaged is a "joint survey" in Venezuela to determine what use can be made of equipment which is on hand to do the job, and what (and in what relative order) are the items which will be needed in the way of additional equipment. The equipment listed in the "agreement document" as such has no status as a pending request from the Venezuelan Government, unless the items have been already made the subject of a request to the U.S. Government and this apparently was made clear to the Venezuelans in the Panama talks. The interpretation which Defense appears to place on the "agreement" is that the U.S. military representatives agree to accept the Venezuelan list as a basis for discussion and future determination, on the ground, of whether, in fact, this equipment is what is needed for the purpose, rather than agreement by the U.S. and Venezuelan military representatives that this is the equipment required to accomplish this specific task. From what little we know about this whole thing, I'm quite certain the Venezuelans not only accept the latter interpretation, but assume that the list of equipment in the "agreement" is regarded by the U.S. as an official Venezuelan request for equipment. This, it would seem to me, is an important point which should be clarified as soon as possible, if it is not already clear.

c. Col. Nyquist stated that the JCS have now under consideration the proposal for a higher priority for Venezuela in allocation of military equipment; and that, in this connection, each service has been asked for a recommendation on the feasibility of this in view of global U.S. commitments. The availability data which has been supplied the Venezuelans to date has been based on the priority enjoyed by all the Latin American governments. This, as you know, is the lowest after Korea, units assisting in Korea, NATO and domestic requirements.

[18] The Secretary of Defense on September 19, advised the Joint Chiefs of Staff that he concurred in their view that the "agreement document" was acceptable as a basis for further joint planning with the Venezuelans subject to the following modifications: (1) subparagraph 2*c*(1) was to read as suggested by the Secretary of State in his letter of August 14 (printed on p. 1647), and (2) the new sentence proposed by the Joint Chiefs of Staff was to be added to subparagraph 2*g* (paragraph b. on p. 1626). Acting as executive agent for the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Chief of Staff, U.S. Army, furnished this guidance to the Commander in Chief, Caribbean.

Under Secretary's Meetings, Lot 53 D 250 [1]

Notes of the Under Secretary's Meeting, Department of State, 10:15 a. m., October 10, 1951 [2]

SECRET

UM N–405

[Here follow a list of those present (28) and discussion of matters unrelated to Venezuela.]

Venezuelan Loan

4. Mr. Miller stated that ARA and E are sending a memorandum [3] to the Secretary asking that the Secretary call Secretary Sawyer [4] regarding the proposed loan to Venezuela. This matter is coming up before the NAC today. The issue involved is raised by Treasury in that they maintain that Venezuela is a rich country and therefore should not get a loan from the Bank. Private investors have been canvassed and they are unwilling to make the loan. Mr. Miller stated that Venezuela's dollar position should not affect the loan especially since they have not been the recipient of other Bank loans. Mr. Miller pointed out the inconsistency of Treasury's position in that they are recommending against the loan because Venezuela's financial situation is too stable, and, at the same time, they are recommending against loans for other countries because their financial position is too unstable.

5. Mr. Linder [5] stated that NAC probably will take favorable action on the loan but he still felt that the Secretary should make a call to Mr. Sawyer. Mr. Linder's information indicated that probably Treasury would recede from their present position. In response to a question by the Secretary, he added that it is very unlikely that Venezuela could get a commercial loan because insurance companies are the only

---

[1] Master file of records of meetings, documents, summaries, and agenda of the Under Secretary's meetings for the years 1949–1952, as maintained and retired by the Executive Secretariat of the Department of State.

[2] The Under Secretary's meeting convened on a weekly basis; it was customarily attended by the Deputy Under Secretaries of State, Assistant Secretaries of State, and office directors. Under Secretary Webb presided at these meetings.

[3] Not printed.

[4] Charles Sawyer, Secretary of Commerce.

[5] Harold F. Linder, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs.

source for such loans and he doubted that they would make this loan.[6]

[Here follows further discussion of matters unrelated to the Venezuelan loan request.]

[6] On October 10, the NAC considered the proposed credit of $4,000,000 by the Export-Import Bank in favor of C. A. Venezolana de Cementos to assist in financing the external costs of expanding its cement plant at Pertigalete. In the minutes of the NAC meeting, C. Dillon Glendinning, Secretary of the NAC, is recorded as having stated in part that although there was unanimous agreement in the Staff Committee that the loan was sound, "some Staff members" had questioned whether the search for private financing in both Venezuela and the United States had been adequate. Mr. William McChesney Martin, Jr., Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve, is recorded to have remarked that alternative sources of funding had been sought, but none was found available. Thereupon, no further objections having been raised, the NAC recommended consideration of the credit by the Export-Import Bank (Department of State National Advisory Council Documents, Minutes of Meeting No. 183, October 10, 1951, Lot 60 D 137, Box 362). The Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank authorized the credit on October 11 (103–XMB/10–1251). For further information on this credit, see Export-Import Bank of Washington, Thirteenth Semiannual Report to Congress for the Period July–December 1951 (Washington, 1952), pp. 12, 17–18.

731.5–MSP/11–2851

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of North and West Coast Affairs (Bernbaum)

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] November 28, 1951.

Subject: Defense Concurrence in Informal Approach to Venezuela on Grant Aid Under the Mutual Security Act [1]

Participants: Major General R. L. Walsh,[2] USAF
Colonel P. C. Haines,[3] USA, OMA
Colonel B. R. Nyquist, USAF, OMA
Mr. D. F. Horton, OMA
Captain A. P. Calvert, USN, Cincarib
Lt. Col. R. G. Storey, USA, JCS
Col. J. H. Anderson, USA, JCS
Col. J. G. Hill, USA, JCS
Col. S. F. Crawford, USA, G–3
Col. W. M. Connor, USA, OFMA
Col. James D. Alger, USA, OMA
Mr. M. M. Bernbaum, Dept. of State

The principal topic of conversation was whether, and the manner in which, the Venezuelans might be given an opportunity to express themselves on military grant aid. Also discussed were: Venezuela's

[1] Reference is to the Mutual Security Act (Public Law 165), approved October 10, 1951; for text, see 65 Stat. 373.

[2] Robert L. Walsh, Chairman, United States delegation to the Inter-American Defense Board (IADB).

[3] Peter C. Haines, III, Deputy Director, Office of Military Assistance, Department of Defense.

priority position for purchased military equipment; the status of the staff conversations which are tentatively to be continued in Caracas in December or January; and the pending visit in January of Lt. Col. Marcos Pérez Jiménez, Member of the Military Junta and Minister of Defense.

Venezuela and Grant Aid

It was decided that Ambassador Warren should be instructed by the Department to approach the Military Junta shortly before the issuance of publicity on the visits of military negotiating teams to the various Latin American countries on military grant aid.[4] Preferably basing his request to see the Military Junta on another matter, he would then inform the Junta of the grant aid program and congratulate the Venezuelan Government on its status as one of the very few countries in the world able and ready to pay its own way militarily. Ambassador Warren's conversation with the Junta would, in general, be based on the idea that we are by no means encouraging the Venezuelans to ask for grant aid, but are, by discussing the program with them, giving them an opportunity to request participation in it if they so desire.

The above procedure was worked out after a rather lengthy conversation in which Colonel Haines quoted General Olmsted[5] and Mr. Nash as supporting the Department's position while General Walsh was opposed to any approach to the Venezuelan Government at all. He was supported in this view by Colonel Hill who was of the opinion that the JCS directive on the matter prohibited an approach to the Venezuelans with a view to their eventual participation in the program. These objections were, however, withdrawn after I read to them paragraph three of the attached letter[6] to Ambassador Warren which met with General Walsh's approval, and which was considered by Colonel Hill as not contravening the JCS directive.

As regards the timing, General Walsh first advocated that the matter be held in abeyance until the arrival in Washington next January of Colonel Pérez Jiménez. I then expressed the opinion that the Department would prefer an earlier date on the ground that it would be far better to anticipate than to await a possible complaint from the Venezuelan Government over our failure to discuss the matter with it. I stated that although the Department would prefer the earliest date possible, it would go along with holding off the discussion until General Morris' visit to Caracas on or about December 17. It was then decided by all of the military present that regardless of whether General Morris would be able to visit Caracas, it would be preferable to have the matter handled by Ambassador Warren. The feeling was that this was a political, rather than a military matter, and should be handled at the highest political levels. It was confirmed, prior to the termination of the meeting, that the foregoing represented the authorization of the Department of Defense for the Department to issue the necessary instructions to Ambassador Warren for implementation at the proper time.

[4] For documentation on the development of a military grant aid program for Latin America, see pp. 985 ff.

[5] Maj. Gen. George H. Olmsted (USA), Director, Office of Military Assistance, Department of Defense.

[6] Not attached to source text.

Deliveries of Venezuelan Orders for Military Equipment

General Walsh stressed throughout the conference that the Venezuelan Government was interested far more in the expeditious delivery of the military equipment ordered by it than it was in grant aid. He added that Secretary Lovett had issued definite orders to the effect that all Venezuelan orders for military equipment should receive prompt and preferential attention. He went on to say that such orders had been received by the Air Force which has thus far been able to supply more than ninety-five percent of the Air Force equipment ordered by the Venezuelans.[7]

Colonels Hill and Alger remarked that they were not aware of such instructions from Secretary Lovett, and were under the impression that the JCS had denied a higher priority rating for Venezuela. (It was later confirmed by Colonel Nyquist that the JCS directive stated in effect that upon a decision of the criticality of Venezuelan petroleum that country should be furnished immediately with the equipment required for the protection of its petroleum installations. A higher priority would then be granted if necessary.) Although I was unable to confirm from the conversation whether Venezuela did, in fact, have the preferred position alleged by General Walsh, it was clear that it was actually at the top of the Latin American list.[8]

Captain Calvert made the interesting statement that although pending official requests from the Venezuelan Government for military equipment totalled only about sixteen and a half million dollars, the

---

[7] The foregoing paragraph was subsequently revised at the request of General Walsh on December 10, 1951, to read as follows:

"General Walsh stressed throughout the conference that the Venezuelan Government appeared to be interested far more in the expeditious delivery of the military equipment ordered by it than it was in grant aid. He added that Secretary Lovett had talked with Lieutenant General O. R. Cook, USAF Deputy Chief of Staff for Materiel, and it appeared that all Venezuelan orders for Air Force equipment would receive prompt and preferential attention. He went on to say that such orders had been received by the Air Force which has thus far been able to supply more than ninety-five percent of the Air Force equipment ordered by the Venezuelans." (611.31/12–1151)

[8] In a memorandum dated December 18, 1951, the Deputy Director of the Office of Military Assistance (Haines) in the Department of Defense informed Mr. Bernbaum that the Joint Chiefs of Staff had decided not to upgrade the formal priority of military assistance to Venezuela, but that for the current period when Venezuela's oil resources were vital to United States needs, Venezuela's requests for the purchase of military equipment would be considered on a case by case basis, and if a higher priority was warranted it would be assigned (731.5–MSP/12–1851).

value of the equipment submitted by the Venezuelans during the Panama staff talks as constituting their minimum requirements would involve far more than one hundred million dollars.

Continuation of Staff Talks

Captain Calvert stated that General Morris had inquired of the Venezuelan General Staff through the Army Attaché in Caracas whether it would be suitable for the Staff Talks to be resumed in Caracas during December 17–21, 1951, or January 7–11, 1952. No indication has yet been received from the Venezuelan Government of its preference, or, for that matter. of its agreement that Staff Talks should be continued at this time. Captain Calvert added that Cincarib was still awaiting word from the Venezuelans of their reaction to the Department's explanation of the payment terms required on equipment purchased from the United States Government (Deptel 177 of November 2 to Caracas).[9]

He explained that staff talks to be held in Caracas on November 5 had been cancelled due to Venezuelan dissatisfaction with: (1) the wording of the agreement with regard to Venezuela's obligations under the Rio Treaty (considered a political rather than military matter); (2) the wording of a clause providing for substitutions on military equipment ordered by the Venezuelans (insistence upon Venezuelan, as against US, discretion in the determination of substitutions); and (3) payment terms involving payment long in advance of delivery (desire to make a 25% or even 50% down payment with the remainder to be paid upon delivery of the equipment to the port of export).

Although satisfied that the first two objections had been cleared up satisfactorily, Captain Calvert was doubtful whether the Departments explanation of how far we might go to meet Venezuelan desires would be satisfactory enough to permit continuation of the staff talks. I assured him that I would go into the matter with a view to expediting whatever action might be required in the Department and by the Embassy.

Visit of Lt. Colonel Pérez Jiménez

General Walsh stated that he was awaiting Lt. Colonel Pérez Jiménez' acceptance of the invitation extended him for January, and expected the "red carpet treatment" for him by the Air Force. Aside from General Walsh's nodded confirmation, there was no reaction to [9] In telegram 177, Acting Secretary of State Webb explained that nations receiving military equipment under the terms of the Military Defense Assistance Act of 1949 would have to furnish the United States with a "dependable undertaking" to repay the full amount of the contract, and that dependable undertaking was being interpreted as consisting of either an irrevocable letter of credit or initial payment or a firm commitment by the interested nation's appropriate military attaché in the United States that his government accepted the terms of the contract regarding repayment (731.5/10–3151).

my query whether the invitation was firm or had, as the Department understood, been extended in a general manner permitting reconsideration in the event of unfavorable political developments.

411.3131/12-451

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. William F. Gray of the Office of South American Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] December 4, 1951.

Subject: Renegotiation of U.S.–Venezuela Trade Agreement

Participants: Dr. Aureliano Otañez, Minister Counselor, Venezuelan Embassy
Mr. Bernbaum—OSA
Mr. Davis—OSA
Mr. Gray—OSA
Mr. Solana [1]—CP

Mr. Otañez called at his request to discuss the matters set forth below relating to the above-captioned subject:

I. U.S. Tentative Request List

Mr. Otañez first expressed appreciation for our having gone to considerable trouble to meet Venezuela's request for a preliminary list of items. (On November 30, he was given a memorandum [2] from the Department enclosing a tentative list of products on which the United States may request tariff concessions from Venezuela.)

He made clear that, while he was not yet prepared to discuss the items in detail or to take any position regarding the tentative request list, he wished to give us his own general views. First, he had the impression that the list was quite extensive. On some items he felt his Government could grant bindings of existing duties— even duty reductions on some; but he was almost certain that on some others no concessions would be possible. He indicated that the textile group would, in his opinion, be particularly difficult, although concessions might be possible on a few classifications.

Mr. Gray emphasized the tentative character of the list that had been presented. He pointed out, for example, that all items on which the trade had made requests for Venezuelan tariff concessions to the Committee for Reciprocity Information were automatically included in the list; it is therefore likely that some of these items will be eliminated from the U.S. definitive request list. Mr. Solana added that the [1] Joseph R. Solana, Commercial Policy Staff, Office of Economic Defense and Trade Policy.

---

[2] Not printed.

present list was of course not only subject to deletion but also to addition or other modification.

Mr. Otañez said that he fully understood the preliminary nature of the list but that he nevertheless gained the impression that the U.S. Government holds the view that the Schedules of concessions of the two countries should strike a mathematical balance. He called our attention again to the fact that the Venezuelan Government, since it had asked for revision of the 1939 trade agreement, takes the position that the 1939 agreement is out of balance in favor of the U.S. Consequently, his Government is of the view that in the forthcoming negotiations for a Supplementary Trade Agreement, Venezuela should receive more concessions than it gives. [Throughout the conversation the U.S. participants scrupulously refrained from any discussion as to what the basis for negotiations should be and hence did not attempt to argue this point with Otañez.] [3]

Mr. Bernbaum asked in what way does Venezuela consider the existing agreement out of balance. In reply, Otañez referred to the present tariff quota arrangement applicable to oil imports into the United States. He also pointed out that the U.S. remains the preponderant supplier of most exports to Venezuela whereas other countries, to some degree, have been displacing Venezuela as the dominant supplier of petroleum to the U.S. Without pursuing the subject, Mr. Solana and Mr. Gray briefly presented certain statistical information designed to show that it is, at least, a highly debatable question as to whether the existing trade agreement is in fact out of balance to the disadvantage of Venezuela.

Reverting to the tentative list of products, Mr. Otañez then pointed to several other items on which he felt his Government would have difficulty in granting concessions. These were: cotton, beer, cement (Portland), certain iron and steel products, pharmaceuticals and, again, the textile group. Mr. Gray stated that cotton and beer were among the CRI items previously referred to which were automatically included; while he could give no assurances, they might well be dropped from our definitive request list.

Mr. Otañez informed us that he was sending the U.S. memorandum and list today to Caracas; and that his Government would no doubt study the document immediately with a view to determining, and indicating to the U.S. later, the items on which concessions cannot be negotiated.

II. Revision of General Provisions

Mr. Otañez inquired as to our progress on work concerning the revision of the language of the general provisions of the 1939 trade agreement. He was informed that legal officers were actively engaged in formulating the texts of the revisions which the U.S. intends to propose, and that their work was well-advanced. (Previously, Otañez was told in a general sort of way of the nature of the changes which we would probably want to request.) Mr. Otañez asked that he be notified as soon as we have developed the exact wording of the proposed changes.

[3] Brackets appear in source text.

III. Allocation of 1952 Oil Tariff Quota

Mr. Otañez then inquired about the allocation for 1952 of oil imports into the U.S. that would enter at the lower (10½¢ per bbl.) tariff quota rate. He hoped that the new country allocations would not result in a smaller percentage share for Venezuela than in 1951. Mr. Gray replied that this Government was now working on the problem and the prospects appeared good that the country quotas would remain the same as in 1951. Mr. Otañez expressed the hope that such would be the case and asked to be informed when the matter is decided. However, he hoped that a Supplementary Trade Agreement could be concluded that would obviate the need for applying such country allocations, a view concurred in by all present.

Caracas Embassy Files, Lot 64 F 14, "400–Defense Talks US & Ven, 1950–1952"

The Ambassador in Venezuela (Warren) to the Officer in Charge of North and West Coast Affairs (Bernbaum)

TOP SECRET CARACAS, December 6, 1951.[1]

DEAR MAURIE: I refer to your letter of November 13, 1951,[2] concerning the Military Grant Aid Program under the Mutual Security Act. In conformity with the last paragraph of your letter; I have taken no action since you passed on this information to me as of possible assistance in the event that the Department of Defense concurred, in which case the Embassy would then be instructed to discuss it with the Venezuelan Government. A letter [2] just received from Tom Mann expresses his personal belief that our plans should be explained to the Venezuelans as soon as possible.

I consider that the timing of our approach to the Venezuelans on this subject is of paramount importance. As you are aware, there are three problems now pending: 1) The terms that we will impose for the payment of the military equipment and materiel which Venezuela wishes to purchase from the United States; 2) The date when General Morris will come to Caracas to continue the Panama talks; and 3) The visit of the Minister of Defense to the United States.

---

[1] Source text originally dated December 5, but handcorrected to read December 6.

[2] Not printed.

It is difficult to predict what would be the reaction of the Venezuelans should we approach them now on the Military Grant Aid Program prior to the successful conclusion of the three problems enumerated. Certainly we could anticipate that they would be much more exigent regarding the terms for installment payments. They would expect that, if we are prepared to give grant aid to the other Latin American countries, we should be most generous in our terms of payment to Venezuela which will pay. On the other hand, were the installment payments problem satisfactorily disposed of, had General Morris successfully concluded his talks in Caracas, and had Colonel Perez Jimenez terminated a successful and informative visit to the United States, we might then expect that the suggested approach would be reluctantly accepted.

I say reluctantly because the Venezuelans must consider the cost of the equipment and materiel. Estimates run from over $25,000,000 to in excess of $100,000,000, in which case a contribution by the United States would undoubtedly be not only welcome but also needed. It is one thing for Venezuela to express a willingness to pay for military supplies when everybody else is required to do so. However, it would be an entirely different matter to persist in such willingness should the financial shoe pinch hard and were relief being granted to the other Latin American countries. In fact, it is this very financial question, we surmise, that is causing the Venezuelans to make haste slowly with respect to the proposed discussions with General Morris in Caracas. Actually, we believe that they do not wish to fix a date for those conversations until they have received from us definite information on the financial commitments that would be involved in the purchase of the equipment and materiel. In this connection it should be recalled that the statement included in the Panama Document was to the effect that it is understood that Venezuela would be prepared to reimburse the United States for the materiel requested. However, it is equally true that the latter document must be ratified by both governments, which step has not yet taken place. In the light of the development of grant aid to Latin America, the Venezuelan Government might appropriately wish to modify the language in the Panama Document.

Our thinking on timing is along the following lines. Eddie Sparks will endeavor to contact Colonel Moreno tomorrow or early next week and inform him of the payment terms as outlined in Bain Davis' letter of December 4,[3] stressing that they are only indications of what we are prepared to do and are subject to future negotiation on the individual items involved. Should Eddie be successful in convincing Colonel Moreno of our desire to cooperate and be helpful, as well as the reasonableness of the terms—which is the principal stumbling block to the proposed conversations of General Morris in Caracas—we could then go on to the next step which would be the invitation to Colonel Perez Jimenez to visit the United States in January. I would deliver this invitation in person to Colonel Perez Jimenez and, in the expectation that he would be gratified with this distinction, I could then explain to him our policy on Military Grant Aid to Latin America along the lines suggested in your letter of November 13, 1951. If we hold to this timing, we would then be somewhat hopeful that we might be able to discourage a request by Venezuela for inclusion in the Grant Aid Program.[4]

[3] Not printed.

Sincerely yours, FLETCHER WARREN

[4] In a letter to Ambassador Warren, dated December 11, 1951, Mr. Bernbaum stated in part the following: "Although Venezuelan agreement to the resumption of staff talks would certainly be desirable prior to any conversation on military grant aid, I am wondering whether we can continue to wait for the period of time which may be necessary. I am, therefore, inclined to suggest that you take advantage of the opportunity offered by the extension of an invitation to Colonel Pérez Jiménez to visit the United States to bring up the subject of military grant aid. I understand that authorization to extend the invitation will be telegraphed by the Department of Defense on or about December 14." (Caracas Embassy Files, Lot 64 F 14, "400–Defense Talks US & Ven, 1950–1952")

731.56/12–1151

The Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs (Mann) to the Ambassador in Venezuela (Warren)

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] December 11, 1951.

DEAR FLETCH: Maury will answer your letter to him of December 5 [1] and he will know more than I do about the strategy of the timing and manner of approaching the Venezuelans. This note is limited to one point:

As you say in your letter of December 6,[2] it is one thing for Venezuela to express a willingness to pay for military supplies when everybody else is required to do so, and quite another thing to persist in such willingness once they realize that they are the only country in Latin America which has a role to play in hemisphere defense which is not being offered military grant aid. This was precisely my concern and the reason for my suggestion that we inform the Venezuelans about our plans for disbursing military grant aid. We would hope that when the Venezuelans are apprised of all the facts they would continue to be willing to completely pay their own way.

On the other hand if there is to be an adverse reaction—if the Venezuelans show resentment and consider that they are being discriminated against—then my thought was that we should know this as soon as possible so as to go to the Joint Chiefs of Staff before it is too late and have some of the military grant funds allocated to them. I cannot predict whether the Joint Chiefs will agree with us, but given the strategic importance of our interests in Venezuela, I would assume they would consider it prejudicial to the national interest to carry through with their original plans. The fact that the Joint Chiefs have approved a paragraph concerning the Venezuelan problem would support this assumption.

[1] Not printed.

[2] Supra. Ambassador Warren had sent a copy of his letter of December 6 addressed to Mr. Bernbaum to Mr. Mann.

Accordingly if, after advising the Venezuelans, in your opinion our failure to include them in the military grant program would be prejudicial to our overall interests, we would like to know this and attempt to get them included.

I wanted to emphasize this in view of an impression which I got from your letter that you understand our purpose to be to stand firm regardless of what the Venezuelan reaction is.

With kind personal regards,

Sincerely, THOMAS C. MANN

731.5-MSP/1-152

Memorandum of Telephone Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of North and West Coast Affairs (Bernbaum)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] January 1, 1952.

Subject: Invitation to Col. Pérez Jiménez, Venezuelan Chief of Defense and Member of the Military Junta to visit the United States; Venezuela's place in the Military Grant Aid Program

Participants: Honorable Fletcher Warren, Ambassador, Caracas
Maurice M. Bernbaum, Officer in Charge, NWC

Ambassador Warren telephoned me at home yesterday afternoon to state that he had thus far been unable to see Col. Pérez Jiménez in compliance with the Department's telegraphic instruction No. 243 of Dec. 14, 1951.[1] (He was then instructed to take advantage of the opportunity afforded by a Defense invitation to Col. Pérez Jiménez to visit the United States to discuss with him our military grant aid program in a general way.) Ambassador Warren stated that after repeated attempts during the past two weeks to arrange an appointment with Col. Pérez Jiménez he had finally requested the assistance of the Foreign Office which had informed him the day before that it would ascertain "whether and when" Col. Pérez Jiménez would be able to see him. An attempt to speak with Col. Pérez Jiménez this morning during the traditional New Year's reception was also unsuccessful.

---

[1] Not printed.

Ambassador Warren stated that he had telephoned for the purpose of letting the Department of State and the Department of Defense know that the Embassy was continuing in its efforts to get in touch with Col. Pérez Jiménez and that he hoped for results within a few days.

The conversation was carried on in such a manner as to conceal its subject matter.

Comment

These difficulties experienced by Ambassador Warren in seeing Col. Pérez Jiménez follow previous indications of the reluctance of the Venezuelan military authorities to renew staff conversations with General Morris which had been initiated last March in Panama. They indicate the possibility of hitherto unrevealed Venezuelan reservations regarding a military relationship with the United States.

INDEX

INDEX

Abaca Production Act, 1950, 1397*n*
Abbink, John, 1192*n*
Accioly, Hildebrando Pompeu Pinto, 942–943, 977–978
Acheson, Dean G.:
American Republics: U.S. economic and technical assistance for, 1056*n*, 1058, 1066; U.S. military assistance for, 986, 990, 995, 996*n*, 1004, 1008*n*, 1010–1012, 1030–1032, 1035–1036, 1040*n*, 1413*n*
Argentina, U.S. relations with, 1102–1104, 1127*n*, 1131, 1137–1139
Bolivia, U.S. relations with, 1145, 1150–1151, 1157, 1164
Brazil, U.S. relations with, 1184, 1189, 1195, 1197–1198, 1200, 1203–1208, 1211, 1216–1219, 1223, 1228, 1236–1237
Canada, U.S. political and military relations with, 870–871, 874, 876*n*, 881–882, 888*n*, 890, 891*n*, 892–894, 896–898, 903, 906–909, 914
Chief of U.S. delegation to the United Nations, 37–38
Chile, U.S. relations with, 1260, 1266–1267, 1273*n*, 1276–1277, 1279*n*
Chinese representation question in the United Nations, 210–218, 220–226, 230–235, 237–238, 244–248, 250–251, 253–254, 259, 261, 266, 269, 271, 273, 275–285
Colombia, U.S. relations with, 1305–1307, 1309–1310
Colonial questions in the United Nations, 546, 571, 573–574, 577–579, 588, 593, 599, 603–604, 606, 634, 687–690, 695, 705, 707, 709–715, 719–723, 734
Costa Rica, U.S. relations with, 1324*n*
Cuba, U.S. relations with, 1332, 1337–1339, 1343–1344, 1366*n*
Disarmament question, 101–102
Dominican Republic, U.S. relations with, 1367*n*, 1374–1375, 1389–1390
Ecuador, U.S. relations with, 1414*n*
General Assembly of the United Nations: Elections, 79, 81–82, 84–85, 88–89, 91–95, 103, 107, 110, 113–124, 127–132, 135; Sixth Session, 15–16, 22, 24–30, 35, 37–38, 39*n*, 42*n*, 45–46; Uniting for Peace resolution, 340
Guatemala, U.S. policy toward, 1443–1444, 1450–1453
Acheson, Dean G.—Continued
Human rights questions in the United Nations, 740, 760, 765, 767–770, 775, 780, 782, 785, 814–816, 818, 820, 830, 836–841, 845–846, 852–853, 855, 860–862, 865–867
MacArthur, Gen., relief of, 885
Membership problem in the United Nations, 286–288, 294–296, 298, 332, 335, 341–342, 344, 346–350, 353–356, 360, 363–365, 367–369, 372–375, 380, 387–393, 396–399, 402, 405, 410–412, 418, 421–423, 425–429, 431–433, 436, 438–442, 445–448, 451–452
Mexico, U.S. relations with, 1476, 1483, 1486–1488, 1509
Ministers of Foreign Affairs of American States, fourth meeting of consultation, 927*n*, 928–929, 936–937, 960–961, 962*n*, 966–967, 969
Moroccan question, 135–139, 143–154, 157–158, 160
Panama, U.S. relations with, 1536, 1548–1549, 1551–1554, 1556, 1558, 1562
Peru, U.S. relations with, 1593–1594
Soviet charges regarding U.S. interference in affairs of Soviet Union and Soviet satellites, 484–486
Soviet peace propaganda, 455–456, 468–476, 478
Soviet resolution attacking North Atlantic Treaty Organization, 488, 490–493
Soviet threat to withdraw from the United Nations, 461–463
Talks with: British Foreign Secretary Eden, 92, 148*n*, 149*n*, 368*n*; Foreign Secretary Eden and French Foreign Minister Schuman, 92*n*, 148*n*, 368*n*
United Nations, U.S. policy toward, 2, 459
U.N. budget, U.S. share, 162–164, 172–173, 195–198, 200–201, 206–208
U.S.–U.N. Headquarters Agreement, problems concerning, 46, 75–76
Uruguay, U.S. relations with, 1617–1618, 1620
Venezuela, U.S. relations with, 1626, 1628*n*, 1647–1648, 1661*n*, 1662
Yugoslav complaint against Soviet Union, 506, 514, 516
Ackerman, Ralph H., 974–975, 1368*n*, 1370–1375, 1390
Act for International Development, 480, 1038

Adarkar, D. P., 203, 205
Aden, 663
Adjei, Ako, 529
Afghanistan (see also under Country positions), 34, 169, 190–191
Africa, 1273
Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, 1380*n*
Agriculture, U.S. Department of, 1076, 1147, 1166, 1172, 1334, 1381, 1424, 1426, 1467–1468
Aguiar Carrasco, Adm. Alfredo, 1612–1613, 1615–1616
Ahearn, Matthew, 1293
Ailshie, William K., 55–58
Air Force, U.S. Department of the, 1012
Akin, John, 1135*n*, 1136
Alaska, 779
Albania (see also under Membership problem: Candidacies), 27, 478–479, 481, 483–484, 486, 506, 513–516
Alcoa, 1655
Aldewereld, S., 1559–1560
Alemán Valdes, Miguel, 1483–1484, 1491–1492, 1506, 1510–1512
Alexander, Col. William, 1321
Alfaro, Ricardo J., 1554, 1556
Alger, Col. James D., 1024, 1110–1111, 1663, 1665
Allen, James, 1157
Allen, Roger, 143–144
Allen, Ward P., 39, 43, 80–81, 83–84, 87–88, 14–143, 227*n*, 236–237, 241–242, 258, 263, 272, 305, 310–314, 317–320, 357, 421–422, 433–435, 437–438, 442–444, 497–498, 501–503, 559, 564, 574, 591, 650, 652, 684, 717–719, 723–731, 733, 783, 819, 863
Allison, John M., 784–785
Aloé, Carlos Vicente, 1139
Altmeyer, Arthur J., 7
Alvardo Fuentes, Roberto, 1437*n*
Ameh, Tey Kwaku, 529
American Airlines, 1501, 1504
American and Foreign Power Company, 1127, 1250, 1335, 1421
American Federation of Labor, 1123
American-Hungarian Federation, 60–61
American Republics (see also individual countries and Latin American subheadings under Country positions):
  Caribbean Commission. See under Colonial questions.
  Caribbean disputes, 970–984
  Caribbean Legion, 1317, 1320, 1429, 1435, 1642–1643
  Central America, 953
  Central American Union, proposed, 1318, 1431, 1467, 1518
  Committee for Political Defense, 1083, 1213
  Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, Office of, 1044, 1047*n*
  Emergency Advisory Committee for the Defense of the Hemisphere, 933
  Foreign Ministers of American States, third meeting of consultation, 1942, 1213*n*
American Republics—Continued
  Foreign Ministers of American States, fourth meeting of consultation, Washington, Mar. 26–Apr. 7, 1951:
    Agenda, 927–929, 931–940, 943, 946, 958, 1011, 1082–1084, 1089–1091, 1192, 1536
    Asylum, right of, question, 929, 940
    Committee deliberations, 961–967
    Communist threat, 926–928, 931*n*, 932–933, 964
    Country positions: Argentina, 962, 968, 1079, 1082, 1087, 1096–1097, 1126, 1130–1131, 1482; Bolivia, 926*n*, 942*n*, 945, 962, 964, 1141–1142; Brazil, 942–943, 945*n*, 949*n*, 961, 964–967, 1184–1188, 1192; Chile, 926*n*, 943–944, 961; Colombia, 930, 947–949, 962*n*; Costa Rica, 943; Cuba, 949*n*, 962*n*, 963, 965–966; Dominican Republic, 970; Ecuador, 942*n*, 944–945, 964; El Salvador, 949*n*; Guatemala, 929, 940, 961–962, 1482; Haiti, 962; Latin American states, 925–926, 932, 938, 941–945, 947–948, 950–957, 959–960, 964–966; Mexico, 933, 945*n*, 961–963, 1482; Panama, 1536; Paraguay, 949*n*, 1581; Peru, 940, 945, 962; United States, 925–939, 941–942, 946–960, 962–967, 1080–1084, 1085*n*, 1087, 1089–1091, 1267, 1280*n*, 1474, 1535; Uruguay, 942*n*, 949*n*, 962, 964, 1614; Venezuela, 946–947, 962
    Economic assistance and cooperation, 927, 931, 934–939, 941–947, 949–958, 964–967, 1015, 1073, 1083–1084, 1087, 1096, 1192, 1279, 1452
    Internal security and subversive activities, 931, 937, 941–946, 956, 963–964, 1015, 1018, 1083, 1117
    Political-military matters, 926, 931, 937–938, 943, 945*n*, 946–949, 952, 958–963, 969, 985, 988, 992, 993*n*, 996–997, 1001, 1004–1007, 1009–1012, 1014–1015, 1021, 1029, 1083
    Strategic materials, 927, 936, 945, 953–954, 967, 1015
  Hemisphere defense policies, 985–986, 989–992, 994–996, 1003–1007, 1010–1021, 1025–1026, 1028–1036, 1039–1041, 1043, 1056, 1069, 1080*n*, 1110, 1112, 1115, 1123–1124, 1137, 1176, 1199, 1216, 1224, 1227, 1243, 1245, 1278, 1289, 1297, 1303, 1314, 1320, 1389–1390, 1406, 1423, 1465–1466, 1514, 1519, 1619, 1641–1642
  Institute for Inter-American Affairs, 935, 939, 1047*n*, 1059, 1061–1062, 1067–1068, 1075–1076, 1173, 1180,

American Republics—Continued
Institute for Inter-American Affairs—Continued
1252–1253, 1379–1380, 1424, 1438–1439, 1453, 1458, 1569, 1576, 1578*n*, 1585
Inter-American Charter of Social Guarantees, 1948, 964–966, 969
Inter-American collective action for peaceful settlement of disputes, with particular reference to the Caribbean area, U.S. support, 970–984
Inter-American Conference for the Defense of Democracy, Habana, 1950, 1642
Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Continental Peace and Security, Rio de Janeiro, 1947, 1120
Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace, Chapultepec, 1945, 941, 1248
Inter-American Council of Jurists, 963
Inter-American Cultural Council, 964
Inter-American Defense Board, 927, 948, 958, 992, 996, 1004–1006, 1012–1021, 1028–1031, 1034, 1040, 1056*n*, 1083, 1216, 1227, 1245, 1413, 1438, 1620
Inter-American Economic and Social Council, 927, 934–935, 939, 942, 951, 957–958, 964, 1063–1066, 1072, 1074–1075, 1107, 1109, 1326*n*
Inter-American Geodetic Survey, 1424
Inter-American Highway, 931–932, 936, 1055–1056, 1058–1060, 1070–1071, 1316, 1318, 1326–1327, 1424, 1439–1440, 1443, 1467, 1496, 1516, 1542, 1565
Inter-American Institute of Agricultural Sciences, 1316
Inter-American Juridical Commission, 929, 963
Inter-American Peace Committee, 976–983
Inter-American Tropical Tuna Commission, 1318–1319
International Conference of American States, ninth, Bogota, 1948, 925*n*, 931–932, 962–963, 965, 1018, 1093, 1120–1121, 1254, 1294–1295
International Conference of American States, tenth, Caracas, 1954, 963
International Development Advisory Board, 932*n*, 934*n*
Korean conflict, policies toward 926, 938, 947–949, 959–960, 962, 969, 985, 988, 992–993, 995–997, 1000, 1005, 1008–1010, 1015, 1022–1023, 1107 Nonintervention principle, 1440–1441, 1515–1516, 1548*n*, 1589, 1638
American Republics—Continued
Organization of American States:
Caribbean Investigating Committee, 1383–1384, 1429, 1435, 1460
Concept, 492*n*, 494
Council, 39, 929, 932, 937–940, 942, 958, 960, 970–971, 1011–1012, 1083, 1101, 1120
Country positions: Argentina, 1112, 1118, 1120, 1130–1131; Bolivia, 1176; Chile, 1245, 1254, 1257; Costa Rica, 1316–1317; Dominican Republic, 1377; Guatemala, 1423, 1434; Haiti, 1455–1456; Honduras, 1468–1469; Mexico, 1499; Nicaragua, 1515, 1518–1519; Peru, 1582, 1584; United States, 987, 1093, 1120, 1460, 1467, 1627
Role, 959, 1005, 1011, 1014, 1371, 1382, 1628
Technical assistance program, 33, 1039, 1059, 1062–1066, 1075, 1077–1078
Pan American Sanitary Organization, 934, 939
Pan American Union, 1065
Special Committee for the Caribbean, termination, 970–980
U.S. economic and technical assistance policy, 1038–1078, 1200, 1252*n*, 1297*n*, 1450, 1644*n*
U.S. military assistance program, 985–994, 996–1003, 1006–1008, 1012, 1018–1036, 1042, 1054, 1058*n*, 1060, 1069, 1200, 1215, 1227, 1312, 1389–1390, 1664, 1670–1671
Anaconda Copper Company, 1246, 1263, 1277–1278, 1284
Anderson, Eugenie, 131–132
Anderson, Col. J. H., 1016, 1024, 1663
Anderson, Kenneth, 1330, 1525
Andorra, 307
Andrews, Stanley, 9
Angel Ordoñez, Miguel, 1550
Anglo-Iranian Oil Company, 457*n*, 1129, 1561
Anslinger, Harry J., 7
Antarctica, 119, 1121–1122, 1257
Antor, S. G., 528, 582
Apold, Raúl A., 1139
Arab League, 79, 492*n*, 494
Arab states or bloc. See under Country positions.
Aramburú L., Germán, 1579, 1608–1610
Arana, Col. Francisco Javier, 1419, 1432
Araujo Castro, João Augusto de, 413
Arbenz Guzmán, Jacobo, 1418–1419, 1434, 1436–1437, 1443, 1445–1447
Arévalo Bermejo, Juan José, 1416–1417, 1419, 1421, 1428–1430, 1432, 1517, 1562, 1567
Arey, Hawthorne, 1399, 1536
Argentina (see also under Country positions):
Agricultural production, 1045

Argentina—Continued
American and Foreign Power Company, efforts to sell out, 1127
Antarctica, claims concerning, 1119, 1121–1122, 1257
Bolivia, relations with, 1128, 1177–1179
Braniff Airlines, flight permission for, 1126
Brazil, relations with, 1128, 1498
Chile, relations with, 1128, 1244, 1255, 1414
Chilean copper sales to, 1286–1287
Communist activities, 1116–1119
Double taxation treaty with the United States, negotiations concerning, 1125
Economic and Social Council seat, 29, 112, 1101, 1133
Export-Import Bank loans, 1097–1101, 1125–1126, 1133–1135
Export items on U.S. stockpile list, 953
Federal expenditures, 1054
Financial arrears, 1133–1137
Hemisphere defense role, 1025–1026, 1035
Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063, 1066
International Pulp and Paper Committee, request for membership in, 1098, 1104–1106
Korean conflict, policy toward, 996–997, 1010, 1023, 1095, 1118–1119, 1140
La Prensa, expropriation of, 807, 809–811, 1087–1091, 1098, 1105, 1113, 1122–1123, 1139
Military establishment, 1054
Neutrality policy, 1111, 1114, 1119, 1123
Paraguay, relations with, 1128–1129
Peru, relations with, 1587
Petroleum production, 1603
Political situation, 1113–1114, 1122–1123
Presidential elections, 1102–1104, 1111, 1129, 1132, 1135–1136, 1138*n*
Rio Protocol Guarantor, 1398, 1409–1410
Soviet Union, policy toward, 1130
Swift International, transfer of, 1126
Third Position policy, 1081–1082, 1111, 1117, 1119, 1614
Trade relations with the United States, 1124–1125, 1132–1133
Trusteeship Council seat, 852, 1104
United Kingdom, relations with, 1129–1130
U.N. budget, share, 190–191
U.N. Economic Commission for Latin America, policy toward, 1073
United States, policy toward, 1080–1081, 1086–1088, 1094–1095, 1101, 1107, 1109, 1116, 1123–1124, 1130–1132, 1135, 1138–1139
Argentina—Continued
U.S. destroyer escorts, excess, cancellation of transfer to, 1008*n*
U.S. light cruisers, sale to, 1013, 1115, 1579
U.S. meatpackers, problems regarding operations of, 1127
U.S. military assistance, 1026–1027, 1035–1037, 1110–1111, 1115–1116, 1137–1138
U.S. Military Aviation Mission, termination of, 1085
U.S. motion pictures, reentry of, 1126–1127
U.S. petroleum companies, negotiations with, 1127
U.S. policy toward, 1081, 1085*n*, 1087, 1088*n*, 1089, 1091–1098, 1102–1104, 1106–1108, 1112–1133, 1137–1140
U.S. shipping company, discrimination against, 1127
U.S. technical assistance, question of, 1070
Universal Postal Union Conference at Cairo, 211, 214–215, 218, 1118
Uruguay, relations with, 1129, 1614–1616
Visit by Assistant Secretary of State Miller, 1079–1080, 1084–1088, 1280*n*
Arias Espinosa, Ricardo, 1535
Arias Madrid, Arnulfo, 1518, 1528–1541, 1546–1550, 1564, 1566
Armour, Norman, 1020, 1648–1652, 1655, 1656*n*, 1657–1659, 1661
Armstrong, Willis C., 1098*n*, 1285, 1287
Army, U.S. Department of the, 1012, 1248*n*, 1325*n*, 1524–1525
Arneson, R. Gordon, 39, 43, 853
Arnow, Philip, 966
Arosemena, Alcibíades, 1548–1550, 1554–1556, 1558
Arosemena, Rodrigo, 1550–1551
Aruba, 1019, 1643–1644
Arutiunian, A. A., 159
Asare, F. Y., 528
Asher, Robert E., 7
Asian bloc. See individual countries and Asian subheadings under Country positions and General Assembly: Elections.
Atomic Energy Commission, U.S., 1495*n*
Atterberry, Phil R., 1391–1392
Attlee, Clement R., 109*n*, 229, 233, 239
Atwood, Rollin S., 926*n*, 1056, 1133*n*, 1141, 1143–1150, 1152, 1158, 1258, 1261, 1263, 1268, 1270–1273, 1274*n*, 1284, 1292
Auriol, Vincent, 274, 960
Austin, Warren R.:
Chief of U.S. delegation to the United Nations, 5–6, 8, 37–38
Chinese representation question in the United Nations, 221, 249–250, 259, 264, 266–267, 275–277

Austin, Warren R.—Continued
Colonial questions in the United Nations, 578, 588, 593–594, 603–606, 667, 669–670, 694, 707–710
General Assembly of the United Nations: Elections, 79, 81–82, 96, 98–100, 103–104, 107–108, 113–119, 122–123, 127–129; U.S. policies, 19–24, 35
Human rights questions in the United Nations, 760, 764, 767–769, 775–776, 812–813, 815, 818, 838, 846–847, 852–855, 860, 862, 866
Membership problem in the United Nations, 288–289, 321*n*, 329*n*, 330, 332–333, 334*n*, 335, 351, 354–355, 364–365, 402–405, 409–410, 413, 421, 431–432, 441–442, 448, 452
Moroccan question, 154–157
Soviet charges of U.S. interference in Soviet Union and Soviet bloc, 477*n*, 478–479, 482
Soviet policy toward the United Nations, 2
Soviet resolution attacking the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, 488–491
U.N. budget, U.S. share, 178, 195–198, 200–202, 205–207
U.S.–U.N. Headquarters Agreement, problems concerning, 61
Yugoslav complaint against hostile activities of the Soviet Union, 507, 509–512, 515–518
Australia (see also under Country positions), 29, 112, 163, 190–191, 203, 222–223
Australian New Guinea, 632
Austria (see also under Membership problem), 460, 475, 826
Averoff, Evangelos, 123–124
Ayeva, Dermann, 528–529
Azevedo, Abdul Rahman, 112
Azzem Pasha, 136

Bacon, Ruth E., 43, 126, 211–212, 227–228, 236, 243, 255, 277, 320, 778
Badger, Vice Adm. Oscar C., 6, 39, 44, 509
Baeyens, J. F., 259–261
Baig, Osman, 612*n*
Bain, Gordon M., 1500
Baker, George P., 7
Baker, J. R., 65
Balbín, Ricardo, 1081–1103
Ballard, B. C., 579, 582
Ballivián, Brig. Gen. Hugo, 1151*n*, 1170
Balluseck, D. J. von, 423, 438, 445
Bancroft, Harding F., 1–2, 8, 39, 43
Baptiste, Paulin, 538, 541–543, 552, 554, 558–559
Barall, Milton, 1263–1266, 1268–1276, 1281–1282, 1285–1287, 1289–1290
Barber, H. Dale, 1221, 1234
Barber, Willard F., 1594–1599
Barco, James W., 8, 39, 43
Barkley, Alben, 905
Barnard, Thurman L., 1568*n*
Barnes, Edward O., 1339, 1525
Barnes, R. C., 517
Barón, José T., 978
Barquín, Lt. Col. Ramón M., 1330*n*
Barrett, Edward W., 347*n*
Barringer, J. Paul, 1501–1505, 1508–1513
Barringer, Phillip, 1626*n*
Bartelt, Edward F., 7
Bartle, Thomas, 1293, 1296
Battle, Lucius D., 41, 44–45, 86*n*, 280
Bauer, Walter, 1536
Beasley, Col. Peter, 1560–1562
Beaulac, Willard L., 929–930, 962*n*, 979–980, 1363–1366
Bebler, Ales, 503–506, 509, 511, 514, 516–517
Bechhoefer, Bernhard G., 1008*n*
Belaúnde, Víctor Andrés, 28, 270, 341–342, 352, 355, 361–363, 370, 372, 380, 389–392, 414–415, 421, 425–428, 430–433, 435, 444–445, 1603
Belgian Congo, 632, 779
Belgium (see also under Country positions), 29, 112, 191, 1452, 1641
Belize dispute. See under Colonial questions.
Bell, Bernard R., 1234
Bell, David, 909*n*, 911–913, 920, 923–924
Belt, Guillermo, 1008
Belton, William, 1367*n*
Beltrán, Pedro, 1606, 1608
Benard, Jean-Pierre, 555, 557
Bender, Albert F., 56–61
Bendetsen, Karl R., 1321, 1324*n*, 1325, 1360–1362
Benelux. See under General Assembly: Elections.
Bennett, Henry G., 936, 1064, 1068, 1155, 1157, 1403, 1533–1534
Bennett, W. Tapley, 961–962, 974*n*, 976*n*, 1358*n*, 1359*n*, 1549–1551
Benninghoff, H. Merrell, 903–905
Benton, William, 180, 185
Bentz, Paul A., 1555
Beraldo, Capt. Eduardo, 1007*n*, 1612
Berckemeyer, Fernando, 940, 945, 1579–1582, 1589, 1599, 1601–1602, 1604–1605, 1609–1610
Berendsen, Sir Carl, 579, 582, 605
Beriya, Lavrentiy Pavlovich, 389
Berlin blockade, 475
Bermúdez, Antonio J., 1492
Bermúdez, Ricardo, 1550–1551
Bernbaum, Maurice M., 1289, 1312–1313, 1412–1414, 1604, 1608–1609, 1648, 1660*n*, 1663–1669, 1671*n*, 1672–1673
Betancourt, Rómulo, 1384, 1642
Beteta, Gen. Ignacio M., 1481
Beteta, Ramón, 1481, 1492–1493
Bethlehem Steel Company, 1638
Bevan, Aneurin, 109*n*
Bevin, Ernest, 227–231, 233, 236–241
Bieri, Vice Adm. B. H., 6
Bingham, Jonathan B., 1024, 1075–1078
Birgfeld, Clarence E., 1091, 1096–1099

Biritos Guevara, Eduardo, 1097
Bissell, Richard, 1258–1259
Black, Eugene R., 1189, 1219, 1222–1223, 1293*n*, 1397*n*, 1573*n*, 1599
Blanford, John B., 8
Blatnik, John A., 924
Bliss, Don C., 871–875, 877–881, 883–884, 888–889, 910–913
Blume, Isabel, 464
Bohan, Merwin L., 7, 957*n*, 964*n*, 965, 1064*n*, 1066, 1146, 1171–1173, 1181, 1208–1209, 1218–1221, 1223, 1231–1234
Bokhari, Ahmed S., 766
Bolivia (see also under Country positions):
  Argentina, relations with, 1128, 1177–1179, 1498
  Brazil, relations with, 1179
  Chile, relations with, 1177, 1255–1256
  Communist activities, 1179–1180
  Cooperative program, 1051
  Diplomatic relations, resumption by United States, 1150–1151
  Economic and Social Council seat, 29
  Export-Import Bank loans, 34, 1143–1144, 1147, 1172–1173, 1182–1183
  Export items on U.S. stockpile list, 953
  Financial arrears, 1175–1176
  Food supply program, 1050, 1052
  Hemisphere defense role, 1035
  Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063
  Joint Bolivian-United States Economic Committee, 1143*n*, 1146*n*, 1149
  Korean conflict, policy toward, 1145–1146, 1176
  Paraguay, relations with, 1177
  Peru, relations with, 1177–1178, 1587
  Political situation, 1150–1151, 1168–1170, 1281, 1602
  Recognition of government by Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Dominican Republic, Mexico, and Spain, 1151
  Reconstruction Finance Corporation contracts regarding tin, negotiations concerning, 1144–1145, 1152–1155, 1157–1166, 1170–1171, 1175, 1181
  Tin and tungsten production, 1071, 1167–1168, 1170
  Trade embargo of strategic materials to Soviet bloc, 1179
  U.N. budget, share, 190–191
  U.N. Technical Mission, 1950, 1149, 1155–1157, 1174
  U.S. economic and technical assistance, 1141–1150, 1157, 1169, 1171–1172, 1176, 1180–1182
  U.S. Economic Mission to Bolivia, 1941–1942, 1146, 1171–1173, 1181
  U.S. military assistance, 1142–1143, 1169, 1177
  U.S. policy toward, 1166–1182
Bolster, Edward A., 1500
Bolté, Charles G., 39, 43, 266–267, 269, 991–994, 998, 1000, 1009, 1029, 1206, 1211–1212, 1224–1225, 1229–1231, 1274, 1307–1308, 1476, 1613
Bonbright, James C.H., 144–146, 420–421, 902
Bone, Benitez, 1562
Bonesteel, Charles H., 1058–1060
Bonnet, Henri, 135–137, 139–140, 144–146, 149, 283, 552, 555–558, 785
Bonsal, Philip W., 104, 106–108, 139–140, 156, 225–226, 259–261, 786
Bork, Col. L. S., 1623, 1625
Botha, M. I., 693
Boucas, Valentim Fernandes, 1219, 1222–1223
Boulton, Andrés, 1655
Bowers, Claude G., 7, 1280, 1288–1289, 1290*n*
Bowker, Sir Reginald J., 282–283
Boyd, John, 80–81, 320
Boyesen, J., 444
Braden, Spruille, 1092
Bradley, General of the Army Omar N., 899, 1139
Bramson, Bernard A., 1603*n*
Bramuglia, Juan Atilio, 1118, 1130
Braniff Airlines, 1126, 1504–1505
Brannan, Charles F., 1345–1346
Bray, W. H., 997–998, 1038
Brazil (see also under Country positions):
  Argentina, relations with, 1128, 1498
  Bolivia, relations with, 1151, 1179
  Chilean copper sales to, 1286
  Cooperative program, 1051
  Double taxation treaty with the United States, negotiations concerning, 1223
  Export-Import Bank loans, 1185, 1187–1189, 1190*n*, 1192, 1209–1211, 1220, 1222, 1233–1234
  Export items on U.S. stockpile list, list, 953
  Food supply problems, 1052
  Hemisphere defense role, 1017–1018, 1028, 1032–1033, 1620
  Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063
  International Bank for Reconstruction and Development loan, 1185, 1188–1190, 1192, 1195, 1209–1210, 1218–1222, 1234
  International Monetary Fund, drawing from, 1235–1236
  Joint Brazilian-United States Defense Board, 1227, 1230–1231
  Joint Brazilian-United States Economic Development Commission, 1192–1194, 1197, 1204, 1209–1211, 1217–1221, 1228, 1231–1234
  Joint Brazilian-United States Group on Emergency Supply Problems, 1195, 1223
  Joint Brazilian-United States Technical Commission, 1948–1949, 1192

Brazil—Continued
Korean conflict, policy toward, 996–997, 1009, 1015, 1023–1024, 1107–1108, 1192 1195, 1197–1198, 1200, 1203–1206, 1211–1217, 1224–1226, 1229–1230, 1275–1276, 1309, 1371
Lend-lease settlement arrangements, 1228–1229
Manganese production, 1071
Military establishment, 1054
Monazite and monazite products, negotiations regarding U.S. purchase, 1201–1212, 1207–1208, 1237
Paraguay, loans to, 1577
Rio Protocol Guarantor, 1398, 1409–1410
Security Council seat, 94
U.N. budget, share, 181, 190–191
U.N. Economic Commission for Latin America, policy toward, 1073
U.S. economic and technical assistance, 1107, 1187–1188, 1192, 1217, 1221
U.S. light cruisers, sale to, 1013, 1115, 1579
U.S. military assistance, 1025–1026, 1027*n*, 1028, 1033, 1037, 1217, 1226–1228, 1236
U.S. relations with, 1184–1237
Universal Postal Union Conference, 211, 214–215, 218
Venezuela, relations with, 1643
Visit by Assistant Secretary of State Miller, 1085*n*, 1190, 1195, 1280*n*
Bridgett, W. Charles, 1594, 1598
Brin, Carlos N., 1529–1533, 1535, 1541–1545, 1550
British Borneo, 222
British Cameroons, 632
British Guiana, 1644
British Honduras. See Belize dispute under Colonial questions.
British Togoland. See under Colonial questions.
Britnell, George E., 1426*n*
Brito Baez, Alfredo, 975–976
Brooks, Oakley, 1222, 1224
Broustra, Vincent, 283, 394, 397–398, 786
Brown, Benjamin H., 41
Brown, L. Dean, 882–883
Brown, Winthrop C., 967, 1105, 1146, 1157–1159, 1161*n*, 1165*n*, 1258, 1260, 1263
Bruce, David K. E., 148, 212, 279, 283, 373, 506, 546–547, 555
Bruner, Mirko, 497–498, 501–503
Bryde, Lt. Col. W. J., 1623
Budget, U.S. Bureau of the, 196, 987*n*, 1038*n*, 1046*n*, 1053–1055, 1056*n*, 1057, 1058*n*, 1059–1060, 1075–1077, 1111, 1507, 1545
Bueno do Prado, Abelardo Bretanha, 1202*n*, 1208*n*
Bulgaria (see also under Membership problem): Armaments, 502, 507; Greek guerrillas, aid to, 27; Soviet policy toward, 475; U.S. interference, Soviet charges regarding, 478–479, 481, 483–484, 486; Yugoslav charges against, 500, 506, 513–516
Bunche, Ralph, 604–605
Bunge y Alvarez Calderón, César Augusto, 1097
Bunker, Ellsworth, 1101–1102, 1104, 1106, 1109, 1127*n*
Burland, Elmer G., 1574–1575
Burma (see also under Country positions), 29, 112, 191, 222–223
Burns, Sir Alan, 254–255, 532, 534–537, 559–562, 564–567, 569, 572, 574–576, 579–583, 588, 591, 593, 606, 725
Burns, Maj. Gen. James H., 999–1001, 1003
Burr, Jorge, 943, 1263, 1268
Burrows, Charles R., 965–966, 978–979, 1016–1017, 1204–1206
Bustamante y Rivero, José Luis, 1583, 1587
Butler, Robert, 1363*n*
Butterworth, W. Walton, 213
Buy American Act, 1933, 1535, 1543
Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic (see also under Country positions): Security Council seat, 82, 86, 97–98, 100–101, 103–106, 108, 110–111, 113–117, 119–120, 123–124, 126–129, 131–135, 1077, 1622; U.N. budget, share, 172, 190–191
Byington, Homer M., 287, 420

Cabot, Thomas D., 985*n*, 994, 997–1003, 1038*n*, 1206
Cabrera y Rodriguez, Maj. Gen. Ruperto, 1330
Cady, John C., 1536–1537
Caffery, Jefferson, 214–215, 217–219
Cafiero, Antonio Francisco, 1097
Cain, Layton, 1660
Calderón, Lt. Col. Luis A., 1624–1625, 1626*n*, 1653
Cale, Edward G., 1022*n*, 1075*n*, 1344*n*, 1345–1346, 1358, 1568*n*
Calvert, Capt. A. P., 1663, 1665–1666
Cambodia (see also under Membership problem), 222–223
Campos, Eusebio, 1097
Canada (see also under Country positions):
Agricultural production, 1045
Commonwealth role, 13, 891
Continental radar defense system, agreement for extension, 888–890, 894–897
Copper production, 1273
General Assembly Committee of Twelve, member, 28
General Assembly Committee on Representation of China, member, 265*n*
Joint Canadian-United States Boundary Commission, 910, 913–914, 919, 922, 924

Canada—Continued
Joint Canadian-United States defense plans, 875–880, 886–888, 892–893, 898–902
Korean conflict, policy toward, 884–885
North American Regional Broadcasting Agreement, signatory, 1496*n*
North Atlantic Treaty Organization, role, 880, 887, 899, 901
Permanent Joint Canadian-United States Defense Board, 875–877, 881–882, 886–888, 892, 894–895, 898, 900, 902, 1231
Petroleum resources, 1634
St. Lawrence Seaway and Power project, 892, 903–924
U.N. budget, share, 169, 181, 190–191, 202–203, 205–208
United States, political and military relations with, 870–902, 1483
U.S. aid, nonrecipient, 894–899
U.S. lease of portion of Goose Bay Air Base, 878–879, 881–882, 890
U.S. leases of communications sites in Newfoundland, 870–875, 876*n*, 878, 881*n*, 882, 887 893, 897–898, 901–902
Canham, Erwin, 812
Cannon, Clarence, 177–178
Cárdenas, Lázaro, 1430
Cardozo, Michael M., 897*n*
Cargo, William I., 293–296, 300, 538–541, 545, 553–554, 591
Carías Ardino, Gen. Tiburcio, 1466
Caribbean Commission. See under Colonial questions.
Caribbean Legion. See under American Republics.
Carillo Flores, Antonio, 1480
Casas Alemán, Fernando, 1492
Case, Clifford P., 50–52
Cassin, René, 786
Castro. See Araujo Castro, João Augusto de.
Castro, Cmdr. Juan Manuel, 1007*n*, 1579–1580
Catalano, Felice, 293–296, 298, 300, 310–311, 317–318
Central America. See under American Republics.
Central Intelligence Agency, 56–57
Cereijo, Ramón Antonio, 1086–1088, 1102, 1108, 1127*n*, 1135
Ceylon. See Sri Lanka.
Chanis, Daniel, 1538
Chapin, Selden, 91, 93, 216
Chapman, Daniel, 535
Chapman, Oscar L., 1223, 1656*n*
Charles-Roux, Jules, 651
Chase, Elmer E., 1399
Chauvel, Jean, 108–110, 122–123, 142–143, 151–153, 283, 397–398, 411, 429–430, 497
Chávez, Federico, 1571, 1574
Chevrier, Lionel, 906–907, 912, 915–916
Chi Ch'ao-ting, 223
Chiang Kai-shek, 247
Chiari, Roberto F., 1538, 1566–1567
Chile (see also under Country positions):
Agreements with the United States: Advisory U.S. Air Force Mission in Santiago, Chile, Feb. 15, 1951, 1245; Advisory U.S. Naval Mission in Valparaiso, Chile, Feb. 15, 1951, 1245; General Agreement for Technical Cooperation, July 27, 1951, 1238; Technical Agreement for a Cooperative Program of Agriculture and Livestock, Jan. 16, 1951, 1238
Antarctica, claims to, 1257
Argentina, relations with, 1128, 1244, 1255, 1414
Bolivia, relations with, 1151, 1177, 1255–1256
Civil aviation policy, 1253–1254
Communist activities, 1243–1244, 1256, 1275
Compañia Chileña de Electricidad, problems concerning, 1280–1281
Cooperative program, 1051
Copper: Prices and production, problems concerning, 1071, 1239–1243, 1246–1249, 1257–1273, 1276–1281, 1283, 1285–1286, 1288, 1597; sales to Soviet bloc, question of, 1259–1260, 1265, 1269–1270, 1278, 1280, 1288
Economic and financial policies and programs, 1249–1252
Economic and Social Council seat, 29
Export-Import Bank loans, 1241–1242, 1249–1250, 1270, 1279, 1284
Export items on U.S. stockpile list, 953
Food supply program, 1050–1052
General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, participation in, 1252
German Federal Republic, trade agreement with, 1257
Hemisphere defense plan, role in, 1012, 1016, 1018, 1243, 1245, 1278
Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063, 1066
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, proposed loans, 1241, 1250, 1279–1280, 1284–1285
International Monetary Fund, commitments to, 1252
Korean conflict, policy toward, 996–997, 1010, 1015, 1256, 1274–1276
Military establishment, 1054
Nitrate exports and productions, 1240, 1242, 1248–1249, 1252, 1257, 1280–1282
Peru, relations with, 1254–1256, 1587
Petroleum resources, 1249–1250
Political situation, 1243–1244, 1602
Recognition policy, 1254–1255
Rio Protocol Guarantor, 1398, 1409–1410

Chile—Continued
Security Council seat, 29, 94, 97, 111, 113*n*
Shipping policies, 1253, 1281–1282
Soviet Union, policy toward, 1256
Spain, relations with, 1256
Steel production, 1051
U.N. budget, share, 190–191
U.N. Economic Commission for Latin America, policy toward, 1073
United States, attitude toward, 1239, 1243–1244
U.S. Advisory Air Force and Naval Missions, 1245
U.S. economic and technical assistance, 1238, 1242, 1249, 1252–1253, 1258, 1263–1264, 1277–1279, 1533
U.S. excise tax on copper imports, 1239, 1247–1248, 1259–1261, 1265
U.S. light cruisers, sale to, 1013, 1115, 1245–1246, 1579
U.S. military assistance, 1027*n*, 1037, 1289–1290
U.S. policy toward, 1242–1258
Venezuela, relations with, 1254–1255
Visit by Assistant Secretary of State Miller, 1085*n*, 1280
Visit to the United States by President González Videla, 1950, 1124, 1244, 1256
Yugoslavia, reestablishent of diplomatic relations with, 1256
China, People's Republic of (see also Chinese representation question; General Assembly: Trade embargo; Korean conflict: Chinese Communist intervention), 12, 211, 213, 225, 238–239, 251–252, 255–257, 262, 826, 832, 839
China, Republic of (see also Chinese representation question; under Country positions), 29, 93, 112, 190–191, 222–223
Chinese representation question in the United Nations (see also under United Nations: Secretariat; United Nations: Secretary-General):
Anglo-American "moratorium arrangement", 246–248, 251–255, 261, 263–265, 268, 271–274, 277, 279, 280*n*
Country positions: Argentina, 212, 214–215, 218, 245*n*, 1118; Belgium, 90; Brazil, 212, 214–215, 218, 245*n*, 249; Burma, 12, 231; Canada, 266, 268; Colombia, 245*n*; Cuba, 209, 220, 229, 242; Czechoslovakia, 218–219; Ecuador, 249; Egypt, 212, 214, 217–218; France, 212, 214–216, 218, 225–226, 249, 259–262, 283–284; India, 12, 249, 266; Indonesia, 12; Mexico, 245*n*; Netherlands, 93, 214–216, 218, 226, 231, 249; Norway, 248; Pakistan, 233; Philippines, 266; Poland, 266; Soviet Union, 241–219, 221, 222*n*, 225–226, 235, 237–238, 242, 249–250, 255, 264–265, 267–268, 274–278, 281, 284–285; Sweden, 213–214, 218; Thailand, 228*n*, 234, 238, 242, 285; Turkey, 245*n*, 249; United Kingdom, 211–212, 214, 217–218, 222*n*, 224–242, 246–258, 261–268, 271–273, 275–276, 279–285; United States, 209–285, 301, 331; Yugoslavia, 218, 249
Economic and Social Council, considerations, 238, 241
General Assembly, considerations, 38, 209–212, 217, 219–221, 222*n*, 224, 227, 229–231, 238, 241–242, 244, 258, 261–264, 266–282, 284–285, 805
General Assembly Special Committee on Representation of China, considerations, 209–210, 220–221, 265–266, 267*n*, 274
Procedural versus substantive issue, question of, 221, 226–228, 231–233, 235–237, 248–251, 264, 267–268, 282, 284
Security Council, considerations, 238, 240, 247, 249–251, 253
Trusteeship Council, considerations, 221–222, 238, 251, 253–255, 268
U.N. Specialized Agencies, questions concerning, 210–245, 252, 256–258
Chou En-lai, 274
Christelow, A., 164–165
Christerson, Capt. L. G., 1623
Churchill, Winston, 100, 111, 114, 269*n*, 432*n*
Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, 1485–1487, 1659
Civil Aeronautics Administration, 1175
Civil Aeronautics Board, 1175, 1398, 1484–1489, 1496, 1500–1504, 1508, 1510, 1512, 1655, 1659–1660
Civil Rights Congress, 857
Clark, David M., 1482
Clark, Du Wayne G., 1351–1352, 1356–1357
Clark, Edward W., 1444*n*, 1446–1450
Clark, Lewis, 8, 39, 43, 424
Claro Velasco, Benjamín, 1281
Clinkscales, Lt. Col. R. H., 1367
Clubb, O. Edmund, 211, 212*n*, 222–223, 243, 255
Clucas, Lowell, 42, 44
Cochran, H. Merle, 132
Cochrane, Edward L., 1282
Coelho, Lt. Col. Mario Perdigão, 1213
Cohen, Andrew, 651
Cohen, Benjamin V., 5–6, 37, 112, 126–127, 134, 153–154, 179, 187, 197, 390–392, 490–492, 503–505, 509–510, 704, 764, 778, 835–836, 850, 858
Collins, Lt. Col. R. A., 1016, 1024

Colom, Eduardo, 1139
Colombia (see also under Country positions):
Agreement for Technical Cooperation with the United States, Mar. 5 and 9, 1951, 1295
Bolivia, relations with, 1151
Civil aviation policy, 1303–1304, 1509
Coffee exchange, devaluation of buying rate, 1311–1312
Communist activities, 1298–1299
Economic and Social Council seat, 29
Ecuador, relations with, 1410
Export-Import Bank loans, 1291–1292, 1304
Flota Mercante Gran Colombiana, exemption from income tax, 1293–1297, 1304, 1640*n*
Friendship, commerce, and navigation treaty with the United States, proposed, negotiations regarding, 1293–1297, 1301–1302, 1304
Hemisphere defense role, 1016, 1299
Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development loans, 1291–1293
Korean conflict, troop contributions, 996–997, 1009, 1023–1024, 1299, 1305–1311, 1525, 1601
Peru, relations with, 1586–1587, 1601
Political situation, 1298–1301
Protestants, persecution, 1300
Shipping policies, 1293–1297, 1304
U.N. budget, share, 191
U.N. Economic Commission for Latin America, policy toward, 1073
U.S. destroyer escorts, excess, cancellation of transfer to, 1006, 1008*n*
U.S. economic and technical assistance, 1297, 1301–1302
U.S. military assistance, 1027*n*, 1037, 1299, 1312–1313
U.S. policy toward, 1297–1305
Venezuela, relations with, 1643
Colonial questions in the United Nations (see also under United Nations: Secretariat; United Nations: Secretary-General):
Aden, 663
Administering Powers (Colonial Powers), 25, 291–292, 294, 310, 325–326, 332, 334, 345, 348, 373–374, 376, 384–385, 388, 522, 524–537, 539–540, 544–545, 550–551, 553–555, 557, 560–564, 569–574, 577–590, 592, 594, 598–601, 603–604, 607, 612–614, 618–619, 621–623, 626–632, 635–639, 641–643, 649, 653, 656–661, 665, 668–670, 672, 690, 696, 776, 802–803
Administrative Unions, 625, 632–633
Alaska, 779
All-Ewe Conference, 523, 525, 529, 581, 582*n*, 593, 595, 606
Anglo-American talks on colonial matters, 623–655
Colonial questions in the United Nations—Continued
Anglo-American-French discussions concerning Moroccan question, 148–151, 157–158
Aruba, 1019, 1643–1644
Australian New Guinea, 632
Belgian Congo, 632, 779
Belize (British Honduras) dispute between Guatemala and the United Kingdom, 663, 1430–1431, 1498
British Borneo, 222
British Cameroons, 632
British Guiana, 1644
British Togoland, 520, 523, 525–527, 529–533, 535, 537–540, 544–545, 560–563, 569–571, 574, 576, 578, 580, 583–591, 594, 596–598, 600, 602–604, 607, 619, 629, 632, 650, 657
Caribbean Commission, 83, 85, 625, 644–646
Colonial application clause, 640
Comité de l'Unité Togolaise, 523–524, 527, 529–530, 533, 536, 538–539, 541, 543, 548–550, 582*n*, 593, 595, 606
Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, Office of, 1044, 1047*n*
Country positions: Afghanistan, 622; Arab-Asian bloc, 11–12, 25, 136, 141, 145–148, 150–151, 153–154, 156–157, 623, 663, 667, 670, 672, 688, 719, 725, 731, 1101; Argentina, 600, 605, 607, 1101, 1121; Australia, 605, 626, 632, 649, 665, 671, 707, 714, 717, 719–720, 725; Belgium, 533–535, 581–582, 631–632, 643, 664–666, 671, 707, 714, 725; Brazil, 141, 161, 643, 699; Burma, 620; Byelorussian S.S.R., 643; Canada, 154, 155*n*, 157–159, 725; Chile, 143, 157, 643; China, Republic of, 155, 158, 610, 620, 623; Commonwealth, 717, 720, 723; Cuba, 622–623, 627, 658, 699, 702, 704, 705*n*, 707, 708*n*, 714; Denmark, 643, 675, 691, 697, 699, 702, 704, 705*n*, 707, 713, 732; Dominican Republic, 157, 605, 607, 707, 714; Ecuador, 667, 699, 702, 704, 705*n*, 707, 708*n*, 714; Egypt, 25, 135–141, 143–144, 151–153, 155*n*, 159, 161, 669–671, 699, 702, 704, 705*n*, 707, 708*n*, 714; Ethiopia, 620; France, 25, 135–161, 301–302, 523–524, 527, 531–549, 551–562, 564–574, 576–598, 600, 602–607, 629, 631–632, 643, 647–649, 652–655, 663–672, 706, 710, 725; Greece, 663; Guatemala, 663, 699, 707, 714, 1430; Haiti, 1455; Iceland, 609; India, 622–623, 625, 643–644, 658, 688, 699, 706*n*, 708*n*; Indonesia, 620, 699; Iraq, 141, 547–550, 554, 565–

Colonial questions in the United Nations—Continued
Country positions—Continued
574, 597–602, 605, 623, 663, 666–669, 671–673, 702, 705*n*, 707, 714, 725; Latin American bloc, 141, 143–146, 610, 621, 672, 725–726, 731, 1455; Lebanon, 623; Liberia, 622; Luxembourg, 609; Mexico, 155–156, 158, 615, 643, 658, 688, 707, 714; Netherlands, 649, 665, 671, 725; New Zealand, 533–534, 536–537, 582, 605, 626, 649, 707, 714; Norway, 609, 732; Pakistan, 25, 622, 699; Peru, 707, 714; Philippines, 523, 525, 609–610, 620, 622, 658–660, 699, 707, 708*n*, 714; Saudi Arabia, 141, 622–623; Soviet bloc, 608, 612, 626, 631, 707, 714; Soviet Union, 152–153, 157, 159–160, 571, 573, 612, 614, 625, 642–643, 654; Sweden, 609, 732; Syria, 161, 622, 675, 686, 691, 697; Thailand, 157, 603, 605, 607, 610, 620, 622, 675, 691, 697, 702, 704, 705*n*, 707, 713; Union of South Africa, 559, 616, 622, 633, 674–698, 700–706, 707*n*, 708–711, 714–719, 721–724, 726–732, 734, 852–853; United Kingdom, 25, 143–144, 148, 150–151, 154–155, 157–158, 520, 529–532, 534–548, 551–556, 558–562, 564–595, 598, 600, 602–607, 627, 629, 631–632, 636–637, 640, 643–644, 646, 649. 652–655, 658, 664–672, 707, 714, 719–720, 725; United States, 135–139, 144–157, 160–162, 520–526, 534–535, 540, 542–547, 551–556, 558–574, 578–579, 592, 597–605, 607–650, 653–677, 682–684, 687–705, 707, 708*n*, 709–714, 716–721, 723–734, 853; Uruguay, 675, 691, 697; Venezuela, 643, 1643–1644; Western European bloc, 144; Yemen, 663; Yugoslavia, 158, 707, 714
Curaçao, 1019, 1643–1644
Cyprus question, 625, 663
Dependent peoples and territories, 607–623, 626–627, 649–651, 654–657
Eritrean question, 38
Ewe question. See under Trusteeship Council infra.
Falkland Islands, 1101, 1121
Fiji, 648
Franco-American discussions concerning colonial matters, 140–143, 623–655
French Guiana, 301
French North Africa, 11–12, 136–137
French Togoland, 520–521, 523–527, 529–533, 537–542, 544–546, 548, 550, 553–556, 559–563, 569–571, 574–578, 580–581, 583–592, 594–598, 600–604, 607, 619, 629, 650
Colonial questions in the United Nations—Continued
General Assembly, considerations 38, 118–119, 135–162, 292–294, 523–524, 526–527, 530, 539–540, 554, 556, 558, 566, 572–573, 582, 598, 607–611, 613–623, 625–626, 628–631, 633–638, 641, 644, 649–650, 653, 655–664, 667–668, 673–676, 678, 681, 683–697, 701–704, 708*n*, 709–713, 715–724, 727, 731–732, 734, 852–853
General Assembly Ad Hoc Committee of Five on South West Africa, 616, 633–634, 673–678, 680–699, 701, 707–708, 712–714, 721–724, 732, 734
General Assembly Committee Four, considerations 38, 141–142, 152, 159, 323, 325–326, 332, 356, 367, 369, 371, 373–376, 378–379, 382–384, 386–393, 397–403, 523–525, 527, 530–531, 582, 590, 605, 611, 613–615, 620, 624–627, 629, 635, 638, 643–644, 650, 653–660, 663–665, 678, 683, 688, 693–696, 699–700, 702–703, 705–710, 712–733, 778, 851, 853*n*, 858, 868
General Assembly Committee on Information Transmitted Under Art. 73(e) of the Charter, 5, 611, 613–616, 618–619, 625, 630–631, 635–637, 650–651, 664, 666, 668, 670–671
Gold Coast, 525, 540, 559, 575–576, 581–582, 589–590, 592, 594–596, 601, 632
Guadeloupe, 301
Hawaii, 779
Independence movements, 302, 315, 612, 620, 622–623, 642, 654, 779
International Court of Justice Advisory Opinion on South West Africa, efforts towards implementation, 673–679, 684, 687, 689–693, 697–703, 707*n*, 708*n*, 709–710, 714, 716–719, 722, 730, 734
Kenya, 632
Libyan independence, 25–26, 38, 1101
Martinique, 301
Moroccan question, 11, 38, 118–119, 135–162, 373, 620, 623, 663, 665–667, 669–670, 706*n*, 710, 718–719, 776, 787, 817, 852, 859, 866
Netherlands New Guinea, 132
New Caledonia, 647–648
Nigeria, 596, 632
Non-Administering Powers (Non-Colonial), 152, 294, 332, 385, 524, 531, 533–534, 540, 543, 554, 558, 560–561, 565, 575, 581, 588, 603, 605, 607–623, 626–632, 636–638, 643, 649–650, 653, 659–660, 665, 668–669, 671–672, 689, 802

Colonial questions in the United Nations—Continued
Non-Self-Governing Territories:
Associate member proposals, 301
Definition, 630–631
Human rights provisions, question of application, 802
Independence, 302, 622, 654
Political situation, 663–672, 699–700
Right of self-determination, 776–777, 789
Transmission of information concerning, 618, 623, 631, 654, 664, 670
U.N. responsibilities, 611–616, 619, 625, 643, 650, 663, 710
Universal Declaration of Human Rights, question regarding application, 625, 635–636
Papua, 632
Parti Togolais du Progres, 529, 533, 539, 548–550, 559, 582
Ruanda-Urundi, 632
Security Council considerations, 662
Self-government, factors in deciding whether territory has achieved full measure, 618–619, 623, 630, 650
Somaliland, Italian trusteeship, 288, 290–296, 299, 318, 324–326, 329, 334, 345, 348, 356, 373–374, 383, 385, 388, 401, 616–617, 641–642
South Pacific Commission, 625, 646–649
South West Africa, 611, 616, 622, 625, 633–634, 650, 654*n*, 663*n*, 673–674, 850–851, 853, 858, 862
Suez question, 696
Tanganyika, 632
Trust territories, 522, 525–528, 530–531, 537, 544, 560, 562–563, 569–571, 583, 585–587, 594, 603–604, 613–615, 622, 625, 632, 634–635, 638, 641, 643, 655–663
Trusteeship Council:
Administrative Unions, 632–633
Ewe question, 520–606, 619, 625, 629, 650
Functions, 611, 613–614, 618, 622–623, 634–635, 638–639, 644, 650
General Assembly, relationship to, 611, 613, 617–618, 622–623, 625, 628–629, 637, 650
Joint Advisory Council on the Ewes in British and French Togoland, proposed, 576, 579–583, 586, 588–594, 597–598, 600, 602–607, 619, 629
Standing Consultative Commission for Togoland Affairs, 520–531, 533–542, 544–551, 553, 556–558, 560–564, 568–571, 573–575, 578–581, 583–584, 590, 593, 598, 600, 603–604, 606
Trust territories, implementation of resolutions concerning, 655–662
U.S. representative, 3, 7, 41
Colonial questions in the United Nations—Continued
Tunisian question, 11, 719, 787
Uganda, 632
U.S. Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, 614, 638, 656–657, 662
Visiting Missions to Trust Territories, 291, 293, 522, 525–526, 528, 536, 547, 549, 583–584, 586–587, 594, 599, 604, 617, 619, 628–629
Western Samoa, 292
Commerce, U.S. Department of, 905, 998, 1439–1440, 1443–1444, 1449, 1482
Commonwealth (see also under Country positions; General Assembly: Elections), 34, 891, 1381
Communist Information Bureau, 17, 19, 91, 308, 321–322, 342, 346, 352, 360, 368–369, 499–501, 504–505, 507, 512–513, 516, 540
Congress, U.S.:
Blatnik bill, 924
Canadian-American joint defense efforts, 876, 894
Canal Zone legislation, 1545, 1561
Copper imports excise tax, 1247, 1265
Export-Import Bank legislation, 1522
Foreign aid legislation, 33–34, 986, 992–993, 996, 998–1002, 1006–1007, 1012, 1020, 1022, 1025, 1027*n*, 1031, 1033, 1053–1055, 1058–1059, 1061, 1065, 1070, 1075–1076, 1111, 1154, 1161, 1193, 1200, 1215, 1372, 1403, 1438, 1450–1452, 1516, 1582, 1591, 1602
Foreign missions in the United States, protection, 64–65
House of Representatives:
Activities, 162, 303, 360, 1022, 1265, 1323, 1398
Committees: Appropriations, 162, 165–166, 169*n*, 170, 173–174, 177–179, 185, 201; Armed Services, 481, 1006–1007, 1158*n*; Banking and Currency, 1136; Foreign Affairs, 481, 913–914; Public Works, 903, 908–909, 910*n*, 911–912, 914, 916; Ways and Means, 1265, 1606
Inter-American Highway, 1542
Inter-American Military Cooperation bill, 1323
International Covenant on Human Rights, proposed, 742, 766–767, 813
Kem amendment prohibiting U.S. aid to countries exporting certain items to the Soviet bloc, 897*n*, 1103, 1411, 1442
Kersten amendment, 483–484, 485*n*
Long Range Proving Ground for Guided Missiles, 1369
Migrant labor question, 1506–1507
Mutual Security Act of 1951, 480, 483
Nonmember participation in the United Nations, question, 302–304

Congress, U.S.—Continued
Organization of American States, 928, 935
Petroleum questions, 1634
Refugee problem, 826–827, 833–835
Saint Lawrence Seaway and Power Project, 892, 903–906, 908–914, 916–917, 919, 921, 923–924
Senate:
Activities, 162–163, 175, 742, 813, 914, 1022, 1265, 1301*n*, 1618*n*
Committees: Appropriations, 163, 165–166, 169, 172–174, 177–179, 185; Armed Services, 481, 1006–1007; Foreign Relations, 175, 481, 913–914, 935*n*, 1059*n*, 1252*n*, 1380*n*, 1424*n*, 1569*n*, 1585*n*
Sugar quotas, 1344, 1346–1347, 1351, 1380–1381
Trade agreement legislation, 1635
Treaty obligations, 175–176
United Nations, U.S. policy toward, 36, 175
U.N. budget, U.S. share, 162–163, 165–167, 169–170, 172–174, 177–180, 182–188, 190, 194–196, 198–201, 204, 206–207
U.S.–U.N. Headquarters Agreement, 46, 50–52, 73–76
Vandenberg resolution, 1948, 403
Congress of Industrial Organizations, 1123, 1560
Connally, Tom, 905, 1479
Connelly, Bernard C., 688–689, 695
Connett, William B., 1657*n*
Connor, Col. W. M., 1663
Conteras, Lt. Col. Humberto, 1274
Cook, Charles D., 97–102, 133–135, 177–180, 274–277, 430–431, 507–511, 666–670, 700–705, 716–719, 729–733, 763–767, 776–780, 818–820, 831–836, 847–852, 856–859, 862–863
Cook, Lt. Gen. O. R., 1665*n*
Coolidge, Jefferson, 1446–1448
Cooper, John Sherman, 5, 37–38, 99, 171, 179, 184, 196, 423, 490, 508–509, 511, 514–516, 518–519, 718, 732–733, 767, 779, 835–836, 850, 859
Corbett, Jack C. 1397*n*
Cordier, Andrew W., 274, 464, 505
Corliss, James C., 942
Cornwell, Warren H., 1400
Corse, Carl D., 1354–1355
Cortina, Alfonso, 1480
Cory, Thomas J., 39, 43, 101, 126, 503, 509–510, 517
Costa du Rels, Adolfo, 28
Costa Rica (see also under Country positions):
Agreements with the United States: General Agreement for Technical Cooperation, Jan. 11, 1951, 1314; Inter-American Highway, Jan. 13 and 17, 1951, 1326
Communist activities, 1318
Costa Rica—Continued
Cooperative food production program, 1061–1062
Dominican Republic, relations with, 1382–1384
Export-Import Bank debt, reamortization, 1319
Guatemala, relations with, 1429
Hemisphere defense role, 1012, 1320
Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063
Korean conflict, policy toward, 1320
Lend-lease obligations, settlement, 1319
Nicaragua, relations with, 1317–1318, 1517–1518
Peru, relations with, 1587
Political situation, 1315, 1318, 1325
Security forces, 1054
United Fruit Company, agreement with, 1447
U.N. budget, share, 191
U.S. economic and technical assistance, 1316–1318, 1327
U.S. military assistance, 1321–1325, 1328
U.S. policy toward, 1314–1321
Venezuela, relations with, 1642
Coulson, J. E., 267, 269, 349–351, 386–387, 397, 403
Council of Foreign Ministers, 460–461, 466–467, 473, 476
Country positions. See under:
American Republics: Foreign Ministers . . . , fourth meeting of consultation and Organization of American States
Chinese representation question in the United Nations
Colonial questions in the United Nations
General Assembly of the United Nations
Human rights questions in the United Nations
Membership problem in the United Nations
Courand, Claude W., 1223, 1596–1597
Cox, Charles R., 1247*n*, 1262, 1280, 1283–1284
Cox, Gordon E., 903, 911, 913
Craw, Charles C., 532
Crawford, Boyd, 41, 44
Crawford, Col. S. M., 1016, 1663
Crittenberger, Lt. Gen. W. D., 6, 39, 44, 333
Cuba (see also under Country positions):
Agreements with the United States: Agreement providing for control of electromagnetic radiations, Dec. 10 and 18, 1951, 1365; agreement providing for the establishment of a U.S. Army Mission in Cuba, Aug. 28, 1951, 1331*n*; agreement providing for the establishment of a U.S. Naval Mission in Cuba, Aug. 28, 1951,

Cuba—Continued
Agreements with the United States—Continued
1331*n*; Technical Assistance Agreement, June 20, 1951, 1347
American private claims against, 1359–1360
Dominican Republic, relations with, 1382–1384, 1388–1389, 1461
Economic and Social Council seat, 29, 112
Export-Import Bank loans, 1335–1337
Export items on U.S. stockpile list, 953
Guatemala, relations with, 1430
Haiti, relations with, 1461
Hemisphere defense role, 1012, 1016, 1331, 1366
Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, recommendations by, 1336
Joint U.S. Military Survey Team, report on Cuba's defense needs, 1013, 1020–1021, 1330–1331
Korean conflict, troop contribution, 996–997, 1008, 1331, 1347–1349, 1356–1357, 1361–1363
Lend-lease account, settlement, 1339
Nicaragua, relations with, 1517
Nicaro Nickel Plant, rehabilitation and reactivation, 1329
North American Regional Broadcasting Agreement, signatory, 1496*n*
Peru, relations with, 1587
Rice quotas, 1347, 1351–1356
Taxation, discriminatory, against American interests, 1359–1360, 1365
Textile tariff rates, negotiations concerning, 1340–1343
U.N. budget, share, 169, 190–191, 205
U.N. Economic Commission for Latin America, policy toward, 1073
U.S. economic and technical assistance, 1347
U.S. military assistance, 1027*n*, 1030–1031, 1037, 1330–1331, 1336, 1389–1390
U.S. sugar quota, 1332, 1335, 1337–1339, 1343–1347, 1349–1351, 1354, 1358–1361, 1380–1381
Venezuela, relations with, 1642
Culbertson, Paul, 1479
Curaçao, 1019, 1643–1644
Currie, Lauchlin, 1292
Cyprus. See under Colonial questions.
Czechoslovakia (see also under Country positions; Security Council):
Arms sales to Venezuela, 1641
Ecuador, relations with, 1411
Security Council seat, 83–86, 88, 90, 105
U.N. budget, share, 172, 190–191
U.S. interference, Soviet charges regarding, 478–479, 481, 483–484, 486
Czechoslovakia—Continued
U.S. relations with, 807–808
Universal Postal Union Conference at Cairo, 211, 214, 218
Venezuela, relations with, 1644
Yugoslav charges against, 500, 506, 513–514

Dabida, Frico, 529
Dale, William N., 906*n*, 909*n*, 923–924
Daniels, Paul C., 1395–1396, 1399, 1412–1413, 1414*n*
Daridan, Jean, 553–554
Da Silva, Persio, 1569–1573
Dasso, Andrés F., 1594–1599
Davies, Ernest, 651
Davies, Mrs. S. O., 464
Davis, Bainbridge C., 1623–1626, 1654–1658, 1667, 1670
Davis, Lt. Col. Craig, 1024, 1660–1661
Davis, Capt. James H., 1648–1651
Davis, Thomas W. S., 911, 914
Dawson, Donald, 1560–1561
Daza Ondarza, Ernesto, 770–771
Deak, Francis, 1508–1509
Dearborn, Henry, 968*n*, 1089*n*, 1100, 1104*n*, 1110–1111, 1133–1135
De Beers, John S., 1292
De Bourbon Busset, Jacques, 282
Dedijer, Vladimir, 510
Defense, U.S. Department of, 507, 876, 882, 900, 901*n*, 948*n*, 958*n*, 969, 985*n*, 986–987, 989–992, 996, 998–1002, 1008, 1010, 1012, 1014, 1017–1024, 1026, 1030–1031, 1034–1035, 1037, 1038*n*, 1056*n*, 1069, 1110–1111, 1142, 1166, 1176, 1197, 1214–1215, 1231, 1236, 1307–1308, 1324, 1361–1363, 1389–1390, 1482–1483, 1525, 1545, 1580, 1609, 1613, 1624–1625, 1638, 1646–1648, 1652, 1658, 1660–1661, 1665, 1669, 1672–1673
De Gasperi, Alcide, 297*n*, 335–336, 342, 344–348, 350, 353, 356–357, 363, 365–368, 387, 389, 391, 393–394, 396, 4[illegible]
Dehousse, Fernand, 776–777
De la Colina, Rafael, 1476, 1479, 1481
De la Tournelle, Guy, 104, 107, 139–1[illegible] 283
De Lattre de Tassigny, Gen. Jean, 260
Delgado Chalbaud, Lt. Col. Carlos, 1640
Denmark (see also under Country positions), 191, 898
Dennison, Eleanor, 1155
De Reuter, Antonio, 1530
De Roux Raúl, 1530*n*
De Sousa, Augustine, 528, 549, 591
De Wolf, Francis Colt, 10
Diaz, Laura, 53
Díaz Albertini, Oscar, 1345
Díaz Arosemena, Domingo, 1538
Díaz Ordoñez, Virgilio, 974, 983–984, 1367–1368, 1370–1374
Díez, Manuel, 1354
Dihigo y López Trigo, Ernesto, 963, 970, 1332, 1357
Dirkse-van-Schalkwyck, W., 684
DiSalle, Michael V., 1267

Dixon, Sir Pierson, 104, 235, 282–283, 312–313
Doetsch, James, 1281–1282
Domínguez Cámpora, Alberto, 964, 1009, 1612–1613, 1620–1622
Dominican Republic (see also under Country positions):
Agreements with the United States: General Technical Assistance Agreement, Feb. 20, 1951, 1380; Long Range Proving Ground Agreement, Nov. 26, 1951, 1367–1370, 1374–1375, 1391*n*
Bolivia, relations with, 1151
Costa Rica, relations with, 1382–1384
Cuba, relations with, 1382–1384, 1388–1389, 1461
Export-Import Bank loan, 1375, 1379, 1391–1393
Federal expenditures, 1054
Financial Convention of 1940, termination, 1374–1375
Guatemala, relations with, 1382–1384, 1388, 1429–1430
Haiti, relations with, 1382–1383, 1388, 1454, 1456, 1460–1461, 1463–1464
Hemisphere defense role, 1012, 1016, 1035, 1375, 1377, 1389–1390
Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to 1063
Korean conflict, policy toward, 1370–1374, 1385
Mexico, relations with, 1383
Nicaragua, relations with, 1384
North American Regional Broadcasting Agreement, signatory, 1496*n*
Spain, relations with, 1385
U.N. budget, share, 191
United Kingdom, relations with, 1381, 1384–1385
U.S. arms shipments, question, 1377–1378, 1386
U.S. economic and technical assistance, 1379–1380, 1387
U.S. military assistance, question of, 1037*n*, 1389–1390
U.S. Military Mission, lack of, 1022
U.S. policy toward, 1376–1388
U.S. sugar quota, 1332–1334, 1338, 1343, 1350–1351, 1380–1381, 1387
Venezuela, relations with, 1382–1384, 1642
Donayre, Carlos, 1597
Donges, T. E., 126, 128, 678, 696, 699–700, 702*n*, 708, 711, 715, 717, 720–721, 724, 727–729, 734, 866
Dorr, Robert J., 1603*n*, 1604–1609
Dort, Dallas W., 1055
Draper, William H., 7
Dreier, John C., 39, 44, 99–100, 187, 381*n*, 931–932, 934*n*, 935*n*, 938–939, 941–949, 961, 970–974, 976–984, 1065*n*
Dulles, John Foster, 248, 304–305, 391, 457
Duncan, Jeptha B., 1535
Duncan, Lt. Col. William F., 1020
Dunn, James C., 286–288, 298-299, 302, 347*n*, 365*n*, 391, 419–420, 422, 452
Dunnett, D. I., 281, 651

East-west conflict, 679
East-west trade, U.S. policy regarding, 22
Eastern Air Lines, 1504
EBASCO, 1448–1450
Economic and Social Council of the United Nations (see also under Chinese representation question; General Assembly: Elections; Human rights questions; and individual countries):
Economic Commission for Latin America, continuation, 1075
Economic development, financing, 30–31, 33
Functions, 634, 661, 1584
International Finance Corporation, proposed, 23, 33, 36
Polish policy toward, 510
Report, 18
Sessions, 189 1098*n*, 1245, 1280*n*
Soviet policy toward, 193
U.S. representation, 3, 6–7, 40
Economic Cooperation Act of 1948, 480–481; 1950, 1210
Economic Cooperation Administration, 32, 36, 985*n*, 987*n*, 1001, 1003, 1038*n*, 1061, 1094–1095, 1223, 1249, 1257, 1259–1260, 1336, 1384
Ecuador (see also under Country positions):
Abaca program, 1397
Agreement with the United States, for General Technical Assistance, May 3, 1951, 1394
Boundary dispute with Peru, 1398, 1409–1410, 1413*n*, 1414, 1602–1603
Colombia, relations with, 1410
Communist threat, 1396, 1405, 1411
Community development employment plan, 23
Czechoslovakia, relations with, 1411
Export-Import Bank loans, 1396–1397, 1399–1403
Export items on U.S. stockpile list, 953
Flota Mercante Gran Colombiana, 1396, 1404, 1410, 1640*n*
Foreign debt, 1397*n*
Friendship, commerce, and economic development treaty with the United States, negotiations concerning, 1297, 1408
General Assembly Special Committee on Representation of China, member, 265*n*
Hemisphere defense role, 1012, 1016, 1406, 1413
Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, proposed loan, 1397
Panama, relations with, 1410

Ecuador—Continued
Peru, relations with, 1586
Poland, relations with, 1411
Security Council seat, 29, 94, 97, 105, 106*n*
Shipping policies, 1396, 1404
U.N. budget, share, 191
U.S. bases in the Galapagos Islands, proposed, 1396, 1406–1407
U.S. economic and technical assistance, 1398, 1402–1403
U.S. military assistance, 1027–1028, 1031–1032, 1037, 1412–1414
U.S. policy toward, 1406–1412
Venezuela, relations with, 1410, 1643
Visit to the United States by President Plaza Lasso, 1394–1396, 1399–1408, 1602
Eden, Anthony, 92, 96, 104, 107–111, 114, 117–120, 122, 148, 149*n*, 150–151, 157–158, 269, 271–273, 275–284, 368, 373–375, 422
Edgerton, Brig. Gen. Glen E., 1530*n*
Egypt (see also under Country positions): Anglo-Egyptian treaty, abrogation, 136; Economic and Social Council seat, 29, 112; National Petroleum Convention in Venezuela, 1603; U.N. budget, share, 190–191; Universal Postal Union Conference at Cairo, 211, 214, 217–218
Eichelberger, Lt. Gen. Robert L., 1531–1532
Eisenhower, General of the Army Dwight D., 181, 488–492, 1139
Elbrick, C. Burke, 1347–1349, 1351–1352, 1360*n*
Elizalde, Joaquín M., 126
Ellender, Allen J., 1346*n*, 1354
El Salvador (see also under Country positions): Federal expenditures, 1054; Guatemala, relations with, 1429–1430; Honduras, relations with, 1468; Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063; Nicaragua, relations with, 1518; Security Council seat, 29, 94; Trusteeship Council seat, 852; U.N. budget, share, 191; U.S. sugar quota, 1343
Emerson, Earl A., 1136
Endara, Guillermo, 1541
Engen, Hans, 444
Ensor, Michael de Normann, 551, 564–565
Entezam, Nasrollah, 265*n*, 268, 270, 274–275, 284
Epinat, Barthélémy, 786
Erhardt, John G., 677
Eritrean question. See under Colonial questions.
Esso Standard Oil Company, 1250
Estillac Leal, Maj. Gen. Newton, 1212, 1230
Estimé, Dumarsais, 1383, 1460
Estonia, 481, 483
Ethiopia (see also under Country positions), 29, 33, 81–82, 84–85, 169, 190–191, 1307
European Recovery Program (Marshall Plan), 993, 1249
Evans, Barbara, 41, 44
Evans, John W., 9, 1161–1164, 1261, 1268, 1271
Evans, Luther H., 10
Ewe question. See under Colonial questions: Trusteeship Council.
Executive Order 1935, 1544; 7856, 1938, 67; 10108, 3
Export-Import Bank Act of 1945, 1210, 1522
Export-Import Bank of Washington, 30, 32–34, 897*n*, 935, 989, 1070, 1098*n*, 1099–1101, 1125–1126, 1133–1135, 1143, 1147, 1172–1173, 1182–1183, 1185, 1187–1189, 1190*n*, 1194, 1209–1211, 1220, 1222, 1233–1234, 1241–1242, 1249–1250, 1270, 1279, 1284, 1291–1292, 1293*n*, 1304–1305, 1319, 1335–1337, 1375, 1379, 1391–1393, 1396, 1399–1403, 1425, 1439, 1448, 1457, 1477–1478, 1480–1481, 1493–1494, 1496, 1520–1523, 1536–1537, 1545, 1558–1559, 1570–1571, 1578*n*, 1588, 1599, 1601, 1611, 1658, 1662–1663
Fahy, Charles, 74–75
Falck, L. James, 1293, 1296
Falkland Islands, 1101, 1121
Far East, 827, 829, 884, 891–892
Farouk, King of Egypt, 124
Federal Bureau of Investigation, 56–57
Federal Power Commission, 913, 915, 924
Federal Reserve Bank of New York, 1425*n*
Federal Security Agency, 1076
Feller, Abraham H., 48
Fensterwald, B., 77
Ferguson, Homer, 50
Figueres Ferrer, José, 976, 1317–1318, 1325, 1518
Fiji, 648
Finland. See under Membership problem: Candidacies.
Fischer, Maurice, 861
Fisher, Adrian S., 39, 42, 48, 52, 154, 156, 175, 182–183, 186, 194, 277, 280–281, 390–392, 394, 397, 407*n*, 672, 765
Florman, Irving, 1157
Food and Agriculture Organization, 9, 165, 1045, 1120, 1131, 1401
Ford Foundation, 834–835
Foreign Aid Steering Group, 987, 991, 1003, 1038*n*, 1046*n*, 1056–1057
Foreign Bondholders Protective Council, 1175, 1319, 1599–1601, 1606
Foreign Economic Administration, 1044, 1427

Foreign Economic Assistance Act of 1950, 1038*n*
Forsyth, D. D., 688–689, 705–706, 709–710, 852–853
Foster, William C., 1032–1033, 1267, 1361
Foulkes, Gen. Charles, 899
Fowler, J. R., 682–684
Fowler, R. W. D., 269
France (see also under Country positions and French subheadings under individual countries and subjects): Chilean copper sales to, 1270; Economic and Social Council seat, 29, 112; Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, member, 222–223; Security Council seat, 93; U.N. budget, share, 168, 191; U.S. policy toward, 1442; Universal Postal Union Conference at Cairo, 211, 214–215, 218
Francfort, Pierre, 375
Francisci di Baschi, Marco, 434–435, 442
Franco Bahamonde, Francisco, 1256, 1385, 1431, 1498
Franks, Sir Oliver, 216*n*, 217, 227–228, 237, 247
Freeston, Sir Leslie Brian, 646
French Guiana, 301
French North Africa. See under Colonial questions.
French Togoland. See under Colonial questions.
Frondizi, Arturo, 1095
Frost, Leslie, 917

Gainza Paz, Alberto, 1090
Gaitán, Jorge Eliécer, 1566
Galich, Manuel, 962*n*, 1434, 1437
Galindo, Juan de Arco, 1550
Gallagher, Manuel C., 1581, 1589–1591, 1600–1603, 1607
Gallegos, Rómulo, 1636*n*
Gallman, Waldemar J., 695–696, 705–706, 710–11, 715–716
Gálvez, Juan Manuel, 1430, 1466, 1468–1469
Galvin, Michael, 1505, 1507
Gans y Martínez, Oscar, 1359–1360
García López, Augustín, 1509–1512
Garland Roel, Eduardo, 1603
Garner, Robert L., 1222
Garnham Barros, Alberto, 1268, 1271
Garreau, Roger, 532–536, 538–546, 548, 552, 558, 562, 564, 572
Gaston, Herbert E., 1100, 1208–1211, 1222, 1233–1234, 1336–1337, 1399–1403, 1520–1522
Gauss, Clarence E., 1399
Gay, Merrill C., 7, 226, 232, 236
General Assembly of the United Nations (see also under Chinese representation question; Colonial questions; Human rights questions; Membership problem):
Agenda items, 15–16, 24, 30, 38*n*, 89, 91, 110, 112–113, 118, 127, 135–141, 143–162, 220, 300, 307, 310, 322–324, 327, 349, 352, 355–356, 361, 373–376, 380, 383, 473, 477*n*, 478–479, 482, 487–488, 492, 497, 501, 503, 507, 518, 617–618, 641, 661, 691, 710, 720, 774, 843–845, 849, 855, 862–863, 865–866
Anglo-Egyptian dispute, 38, 148
Atomic energy questions, 470, 475, 477, 493, 495–496
Austrian peace treaty question, 38
Budget questions, 163–171, 175–176, 178, 180–181, 183–184, 186, 188–189, 193–194, 197, 199, 201, 208
Burma question, 38
China question, 38
Code of Offenses against the Peace and Security of Mankind, draft, 29–30 Committees:
Ad Hoc Committee of Five on South West Africa. See Colonial questions: General Assembly Ad Hoc Committee.
Ad Hoc Committee on Draft Convention on Freedom of Information, 789, 791–800, 802, 804–805
Ad Hoc Committee on Political and Security Affairs (see also Elections infra), 26, 42, 113, 142–143, 356, 367, 376, 379, 425, 504–505, 510–512, 518, 855–856, 858, 860–861, 863–867
Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, 241, 417, 823, 825–826, 831
Collective Measures Committee, 2–3, 8, 18, 20, 22, 38–39, 43, 493–494
Committee One (see also Elections infra), 42, 95–96, 101–103, 134, 141–143, 356, 374, 382–383, 387, 389–390, 412, 430, 431*n*, 435–440, 443, 446–448, 450, 457*n*, 482–487, 491–494, 496–497, 502, 711, 783, 858
Committee Two (see also Elections infra), 18, 30, 36, 38, 43, 208, 783, 817, 868

General Assembly of the United Nations—Continued
Committees—Continued
Committee Three (see also Elections infra), 18, 38, 43, 636, 640, 763–771, 773–776, 780–784, 786–787, 790, 798, 800, 809, 812, 814, 816–825, 831–833, 836–842, 868
Committee Four (see also Colonial questions: General Assembly Committee Four; Elections infra), 43, 113
Committee Five (see also Elections infra), 18, 38, 43, 113, 163, 169, 178, 181, 183, 188, 197, 199–203, 205–208, 822, 824–826, 831–832, 846, 850
Committee Six (see also Elections infra), 29–30, 38, 43, 74, 113, 656, 659–660, 717–720, 783, 852
Committee of Twelve on Armaments, 28, 248
Committee on Additional Measures, 3, 8
Committee on Administration and Finance, 170–171
Contributions Committee, 164–169, 171–174, 177–180, 183–187, 189–193, 195, 198–200, 201*n*, 202–206, 208, 241
Credentials Committee, 113, 265, 267–268, 276, 278, 283, 285
General Committee, 38, 136–141, 143, 147, 149–162, 285, 382, 477*n*, 482, 510, 517, 666, 669*n*, 852
Headquarters Advisory Committee, 275
Interim Committee, 3, 5, 39, 220–221, 224, 238, 302, 340, 395, 404
Special Committee on Information Transmitted Under Art. 73(e) of the Charter. See Colonial questions: General Assembly Committee on Information . . .
Special Committee on Representation of China. See Chinese representation question: General Assembly Special Committee on Representation of China.
Corfu channel case, 313
Country positions: Afghanistan, 11, 108, 114, 128, 485, 487; Arab-Asian bloc, 10–12, 14, 130, 310; Argentina, 115, 959, 1112, 1118, 1130–1131; Australia, 86–87; Belgium, 89–91, 108, 111, 119; Bolivia, 115, 485, 1176; Brazil, 115; Burma, 11–12, 108, 114, 128, 135, 485, 487; Canada, 37, 111; Chile, 115–116, 128, 134, 1245, 1254, 1257; Colombia, 115; Commonwealth, 12–13, 97; Costa Rica, 115, 1316; Cuba, 115; Denmark, 98, 108, 114, 128, 130–134; Dominican Republic, 115, 1377, 1385; Ecuador, 106*n*, 115–116, 1411; Egypt, 114, 128, 130, 485, 487; El Salvador, 115, 485; Ethiopia, 485; France, 37, 88, 90, 104, 107–109, 111, 114, 118–119, 122–123, 125, 497, 514; Greece, 78–79; Guatemala, 115–116, 128, 134, 485, 487, 1431, 1434; Haiti, 115, 1455–1456; Honduras, 115, 1469; Iceland, 108, 114, 134; India, 11–13, 98, 114, 128, 135, 485, 487, 517; Indonesia, 11–12, 108, 114, 128, 132, 134–135, 485, 487; Iran, 108, 114, 128, 485, 487; Iraq, 128–130, 476; Israel, 114, 128–129, 134–135; Latin American bloc, 13–14, 90, 94, 97, 99, 104, 112–116, 120–121, 123, 125, 187, 192, 456, 468, 470, 1041, 1077, 1103, 1118, 1603; Luxembourg, 90, 108, 111, 119; Mexico, 115, 128, 134, 1477, 1491, 1498–1499; Netherlands, 90–91, 93, 108, 114; Nicaragua, 115; Norway, 98, 108, 114, 128, 130–134; Pakistan, 11, 13, 98, 108, 128, 310, 485, 487, 517; Panama, 115, 485; Paraguay, 115; Peru, 115, 1584; Saudi Arabia, 114, 128–129, 485, 487; Scandinavian bloc, 97, 111, 114; Soviet bloc, 27, 98, 114, 128, 285, 340, 476, 504; Soviet Union, 17–19, 21–22, 27, 38, 45, 79, 83–85, 87, 89, 95–96, 98, 101, 103, 105, 111, 207, 473–479, 484–485, 487–489, 491–497, 502, 510–511, 852, 1254; Sweden, 98, 108, 114, 128, 133–134; Syria, 128, 476, 485, 487; Union of South Africa, 126, 128, 134, 485; United Kingdom, 12–13, 37, 80–83, 85, 87–88, 90, 92–93, 97–98, 100, 106–112, 114, 116–120, 122–128, 133, 334, 340, 504, 514, 517; United States, 14–37, 78–79, 81–89, 91–103, 105–108, 110–115, 120–122, 124–127, 129–131, 133–135, 334–335, 482, 485–487, 489–493, 498–501, 505, 507–513, 515–516, 518–519, 1093, 1120; Uruguay, 115, 128, 134; Venezuela, 115, 1649; Western Europe, 97, 120; Yemen, 114, 128, 485, 487; Yugoslavia, 114, 497–499, 501–505, 514
Cyprus question, 118, 124
Disarmament proposals, 19, 22, 38, 101, 470, 475, 492–496, 711
Economic development proposal, 30
Elections: Ad Hoc Political Committee, 16; Asian and Far East representation, 100, 103*n*; Benelux representation, 80, 89; Committee One, 16, 90; Committee Two, 16; Committee Three, 16; Committee Four, 16; Committee Five, 16; Committee Six, 16, 87; Com-

General Assembly of the United Nations—Continued
Elections—Continued
monwealth representation, 80, 83–84, 87, 105; Credentials Committee, 268; Economic and Social Council, 29, 112, 1101–1102, 1133; General Committee, 87; gentleman's agreement of 1946 regarding distribution of Security Council seats, 79–80, 83–85, 91, 95, 98–100, 102–105, 109, 111–112, 118, 126; International Court of Justice, 87, 103–104, 106, 112–113, 115–116, 120, 187, 192, 207, 1620–1622; Latin American representation, 84, 103–106, 112, 187, 192, 1621*n*; Near and Middle East representation, 78–79, 105; President of Sixth Session, 28, 82, 90, 1603; Scandinavian representation, 80; Security Council, 29, 78–135, 192, 207, 334–335, 852, 1077, 1622; Soviet bloc (Eastern Europe) representation, 78–79, 81–93, 95–102, 105, 110, 114, 118, 120–121, 334–335; Trusteeship Council, 628, 852, 1101; Vice Presidents, 90; Western European representation, 82, 105
German elections, 38, 207, 505, 851–852
German question, 45, 846
Greek question, 26–27, 38, 303, 470, 505, 510, 516
Indians in the Union of South Africa, treatment. See under Human rights questions.
Indochina question, 12
Indonesian question, 470
International Development Authority, proposed, 22–23, 30–31, 33–34, 36
Iranian question, 116, 148, 266, 470
Italian colonies, disposition of former, 286, 303, 310, 1584
Italian peace treaty, revision, 38, 365, 368, 372*n*, 391, 410*n*
Jerusalem, proposed internationalization, 14, 38, 1101, 1584
Kashmir dispute, 38, 470
Korean conflict, 2, 11, 13, 17–18, 21–22, 34, 38–45, 78–79, 89*n*, 105, 112, 178, 189–190, 192, 207, 210*n*, 216*n*, 219, 221, 224, 227, 236–237, 239, 245–247, 252, 257, 262, 265*n*, 286, 378, 414, 431, 469–470, 473, 477, 492–493, 495, 511, 679, 711, 715–716, 730, 926, 1057
Libyan question, 310
Lie peace plan, 38
Mindszenty case, 850
Nonmember participation, 53, 286–290, 302–311, 313–316, 319–321, 326–329, 331–332, 357–360, 376, 381–382, 387, 391, 416–417, 805–806
General Assembly of the United Nations—Continued
Oatis case. See under Human rights questions.
Palestine question, 10–11, 38, 134, 286, 303, 470, 1101
Palestinian refugee problem, 11, 34, 190
Resolutions: 8 (I), 1946 on Displaced Persons, 840; 22 (I), 1946, on General Convention on Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, 70, 74; 39 (I), 1946, on Spain, 1385; 44 (I), 1946, on treatment of people of Indian origin in the Union of South Africa, 855, 864; 103 (I), 1946, on racial persecution or discrimination, 856, 864; 110 (II), 1947, on warmongering, 504; 197 (III), 1948, 440; 217 (III), 1948, on Universal Declaration of Human Rights, 856, 864; 222 (III), 1948, 625; 238 (III), 1948, on budget, 177–178, 183, 186, 189, 193–194, 199; 260 (III), 1948, on Genocide Convention, 806; 265 (III), 1948, on treatment of people of Indian origin in the Union of South Africa, 844, 855, 864; 277A (III), 1948, on Newsgathering Convention, 795; 296 (IV), 1949, on membership, 440; Essentials for Peace, 19, 22, 470, 473, 476; Peace through Deeds, 19, 22, 474; 320, 322, 323, and 324 (IV), 1949, on trust territories, 657; 327 (IV), 1949, on information from Non-Self-Governing Territories, 631; 334 (IV), 1949, on definition of Non-Self-Governing Territories, 625, 630; 368 (IV), 1949, on nonmember participation, 806; 377 (V), 1950, on Uniting for Peace, 18, 22, 305, 317, 340, 345, 347, 364, 427, 622, 927, 948–949, 959–960, 962*n*, 986, 1011, 1014, 1204–1205, 1374, 1649; 384 (V), 1950, on Korean conflict, 229*n*, 230; 385 (V), 1950, on violations of human rights by Bulgaria, Hungary, and Romania, 807; 386 (V), 1950, on Spain, 1385; 395 (V), 1950, on treatment of people of Indian origin by the Union of South Africa, 843, 845, 855–856, 864; 421E (V), 1950, on International Human Rights Covenant, 735–736, 767–768, 770, 788*n*; 428 (V), 1950, on refugees, 840; 429 (V), 1950, on refugees and stateless persons, 821; 430 (V), 1950, on refugees, 841; 435 (V), 1950, on Trust Territories, 625; 436 (V), 1950, on Trust Territories, 638, 656–657, 661–662; 438 (V), 1950, on

General Assembly of the United Nations—Continued
Resolutions—Continued
Trust Territories, 625, 634–635; 441 (V), 1950, on Ewe problem, 521, 524, 526–527, 537–538, 544, 562–563, 569–571, 619; 449 (V), 1950, on South West Africa, 673, 676, 691–692, 697–698, 708*n*, 734; 490 (V), 1950, on Chinese representation, 209–212, 220, 265*n*; 1950, on recognition of representatives of member states, 210–212, 220, 222*n*, 224, 229–233, 238, 256, 258, 263; 1950, on Non-Self-Governing Territories, 625, 635; 498 (V), 1951, on Chinese Communist aggression in Korea, 219, 225, 229, 231, 238, 264, 455–456, 475; 500 (V), 1951, on additional measures to meet aggression in Korea, 1551–1552, 1554, 1556; 509 (VI), 1951, on Yugoslav complaint against the Soviet Union, 519; 1951, on regional and collective defense organizations, 476, 492; 511 (VI), 1952, on treatment of people of Indian origin in the Union of South Africa, 867; 538A (VI), 1952, regarding Convention on Refugees, 842; 538B (VI), 1952, regarding High Commissioner for Refugees, 842; 539 (VI), 1952, regarding draft Protocol on Stateless Persons, 842; 541 (VI), 1952, on freedom of information, 820–821; 543 (VI), 1952, on International Covenant on Human Rights, 771–772; 544 (VI), 1952, on human rights, 772; 545 (VI), 1952, on human rights, 772, 784; 549 (VI), 1952, on human rights, 772; 570 (VI), 1952, regarding Ad Hoc Committee on South West Africa, 734; 570B (VI), 1952, on South West Africa, 734
Role and functions, 340–341, 347, 458, 475, 622
Sanctions against Chinese Communists and North Korea, 340
Secretary-General, extension of term, 339–340, 345, 347, 355, 364, 366
Security Council report, 38
Sessions:
First, 1946, 189
Second, 1947, 74
Third, 1948, 170–171, 790, 795, 812
Fourth, 1949, 171, 657, 679, 791
Fifth, 1950–1951, 19, 171, 210, 220–221, 224, 242, 265, 267, 269–270, 272–274, 282, 302, 317, 331, 457*n*, 523–524, 616–617, 626–627, 634, 657–658, 660, 662, 675, 701, 732, 743, 746–747, 750–751, 755–756, 759–760, 762–763, 766, 772–773, 775–776, 780, 788, 791, 844–845, 848, 856, 1385
Sixth, 1951–1952, 5, 15–19, 24, 37, 85, 92*n*, 136*n*, 146, 163, 166, 170, 175*n*, 206, 258, 261, 263–264, 267, 269–270, 272–275, 277–285, 299, 303, 310, 324, 330, 332, 349, 356, 371, 384, 446, 476–477, 479, 492*n*, 497*n*, 498–501, 518, 617, 626–627, 638, 641, 655, 659, 690, 702, 741, 751, 760, 769, 771–773, 789, 820, 842, 845, 1103
Seventh, 1952, 447*n*, 635, 761, 769, 772, 780, 785, 789, 817, 820–821, 823, 828, 843, 849, 862
Soviet charges of U.S. interference in internal affairs of Soviet Union and Soviet satellites, 478–479, 482–487, 852, 858
Soviet peace proposals, 473–474, 476–478, 498, 508
Soviet resolution attacking North Atlantic Treaty Organization, 487–497
Spanish question, 1385, 1431, 1498, 1584
Taiwan question, 38, 265*n*
Tibet question, 154
Trade embargo against Chinese Communists, 13, 1551–1552, 1554, 1556
Twenty-year peace plan, 783
U.S. representation, 5, 8–9, 37–44
Yugoslav complaint against the Soviet Union, 38, 88, 497–519, 852
George, James, 266, 351
Gerberich, Albert H., 931–933, 1291–1293, 1296, 1312–1313
Gerig, O. Benjamin, 5, 7, 39, 43, 140, 329, 357, 374*n*, 386, 392, 534, 538–547, 553–557, 566–569, 574–577, 588, 593, 599, 606–610, 611*n*, 612*n*, 620, 650–652, 666–667, 669–672, 677–682, 684, 686, 700–702, 704, 712, 778, 850–851
Germany (see also German subheadings under General Assembly), 460, 465, 473, 475
Germany, Democratic Republic of, 475, 852
Germany, Federal Republic of (see also under Membership problem: Candidacies), 511, 826, 1257, 1270
Getzin, Edmund E., 1258–1263, 1268, 1271–1272, 1285, 1597
Giardina, Henry, 1296
Gibson, Carlos, 1595
Gibson, Edwin, 1259–1262, 1273*n*
Gifford, Walter S., 107–111, 117–120, 122, 143–144, 148, 211, 217, 233–237, 246–247, 253, 271, 283, 356–357, 373, 461

Gillen, John J., 10
Glendinning, C. Dillon, 1099, 1235, 1335, 1520, 1663*n*
Godley, G. McMurtrie, 542, 544, 553, 591
Goedhart, J. G. von Heuven, 824, 831–835, 837–839
Góes Monteiro, Pedro Aurélio, 1018, 1023, 1025, 1028, 1107, 1200, 1203–1206, 1212–1217, 1220–1221, 1223–1224, 1229–1231, 1620
Goetzlin, 1597
Gold Coast. See under Colonial questions.
Goldman, Olive Remington, 7
Golunsky, Sergi A., 87, 112, 113*n*
Gómez, Juan Vicente, 1644
Gómez, Laureano, 930, 1298, 1364
Gómez Morales, Alfredo, 1135
Gómez Ruiz, Luis Emilio, 946, 1623–1626, 1649, 1651, 1654–1657, 1659–1660
González, César, 103–104
González Gorrondona, J.J., 1655
González Videla, Gabriel, 1124, 1177–1178, 1243, 1247*n*, 1256, 1260, 1266–1267, 1269, 1274–1275, 1280–1281, 1283–1284, 1288
Gordon, Lincoln, 992–993, 1000–1001, 1003, 1057, 1059
Gorlitz, Samuel J., 1392
Gosálvez, Gabriel, 1150*n*
Gough, Betty C., 41–42, 98, 263–264
Grace Line, 1253*n*, 1404, 1640, 1655*n*
Graves, Hubert, 227–228
Gray, William F., 1604*n*, 1667–1669
Gray, W. Latimer, 1136
Greece (see also under Country positions): Community development employment plan, 23; North Atlantic Treaty Organization, membership, 80, 84; refugee problem, 826; Security Council seat, 29, 78–85, 87–89, 91–92, 94–98, 100–105, 107–111, 113–135, 334–335, 1077; Soviet policy toward, 475; U.N. budget, share, 191; U.S. aid, 486, 1452
Greek question. See under General Assembly.
Green, James F., 39, 43, 301–302, 740, 763–765, 776–777, 780–782, 786, 818, 832–834
Green, Theodore Francis, 906
Greene, Joseph N., 298, 362, 375
Greenfield, Col. William, 1648–1652
Greenhill, Dennis, 236
Greenland, 898*n*
Gromyko, Andrei, 338, 460
Groner, D. Lawrence, 65
Gross, Ernest A.: Aggression, U.S. policy regarding, 1; Chinese representation question, 253–254, 259, 265*n*, 275–277, 280*n*; colonial questions, 571–572, 577–578, 704, 726, 730; Deputy Chief of U.S. delegation to the United Nations, 5–6, 8, 37–38; General Assembly elections, 96, 98, 100, 106–112, 116, 118–119, 122–123, 125–127, 130, 134; human rights questions, 767, 778–780, 851, 858; membership problem, 304, 318, 329, 333*n*, 334*n*, 341–342, 349–351, 362, 364, 391, 397, 399–401, 405, 407*n*, 411, 420–421, 423, 429–430, 433–435, 438–440, 442–443, 445, 448, 451; Moroccan question, 151–156, 158–162; Security Council elections of International Court of Justice representatives, 112; Soviet charges of U.S. interference in internal affairs of Soviet Union and Soviet satellites, 482; Soviet policy toward the United Nations, 1, 457–461; Soviet resolution attacking the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, 488, 490, 492*n*, 497; U.N. budget, U.S. share, 183–184, 186, 188, 196, 204; U.S. policy toward the United Nations, 2; Yugoslavia complaint against the Soviet Union, 511, 515
Guachalla, Luis Fernando, 1165
Guadeloupe, 301
Guano Acts of 1856 and 1913, 1463
Guatemala (see also under Country positions):
Belize (British Honduras), dispute with the United Kingdom concerning, 663, 1430–1431
Communist influence, 1077, 1415–1420, 1425, 1428, 1431–1443, 1445, 1449, 1561, 1567
Costa Rica, relations with, 1429
Cuba, relations with, 1430
Dominican Republic, relations with, 1382–1384, 1388, 1429–1430
El Salvador, relations with, 1429–1430
Empresa Eléctrica (American and Foreign Power Company), problems of, 1421
Hemisphere defense role, 1016, 1019–1020, 1415, 1428–1429, 1436, 1438
Honduras, relations with, 1429–1430, 1468
Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development Economic Survey Mission, 1950, 1426
International Railways of Central America, problems, 1421, 1438, 1444, 1562–1563
Labor troubles experienced by U.S. firms, 1421–1422, 1445, 1447–1448
Lead and zinc resources, 1071
Mexico, relations with, 1430, 1498
Nicaragua, relations with, 1429–1430
Panama, relations with, 1562, 1568
Pan American Airways, problems, 1421
Peru, relations with, 1429–1430, 1587
Political situation, 1415–1419, 1444–1445

Guatemala—Continued
Strategic materials, U.S. interest in production and export, 1426–1428, 1435, 1439
United Fruit Company, problems, 1421–1422, 1426, 1433–1434, 1438, 1444–1448
U.N. budget, share, 191, 194
United States, policy toward, 1107, 1424, 1440, 1444–1445, 1451,
U.S. arms and ammunition, denial of sales, 1438–1439, 1443
U.S. economic and technical assistance, question of, 1424–1426, 1435, 1438, 1443, 1451–1453
U.S. Military Missions attached to Guatemalan Army and Air Force, 1424, 1428–1429, 1438–1439
U.S. policy toward, 1415–1445, 1449–1453
U.S. restrictions on trade with, 1443–1444, 1448–1450
Venezuela, relations with, 1429–1430, 1642–1643
Gudin, Eugenio, 1219
Güell, Gonzalo, 976–978, 981, 1356–1357
Guerinoni, Jorge, 1597, 1599
Guerra, José Antonio, 1355
Guggenheim, 1248–1249
Guidotti, Gastone, 286–287, 290, 318, 342, 350, 354–355, 360–365, 391–399, 412–413, 417–419, 421–422, 424, 429–430, 432–434, 438–439, 441–442, 445
Guillen, César, A., 1565
Gulf and South American Steamship Company, 1253*n*
Gundersen, 130–131
Guzmán, Jacobo Arbenz, 930*n*

Hackworth, Green H., 112, 113*n*
Haines, Col. Peter C., 1663–1664, 1665*n*
Haiti (see also under Country positions):
Agreement with the United States for Technical Cooperation, May 2, 1951, 1464
Cuba, relations with, 1461
Dominican Republic, relations with, 1382–1383, 1388, 1454, 1456, 1460–1461, 1463–1464
Economic and Social Council seat, 29
Export-Import Bank loan, 1457
Export items on U.S. stockpile list, 953
Hemisphere defense role, 1012, 1016, 1459, 1462–1463
Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063
Navassa Island, dispute with the United States concerning sovereignty, 1463
U.N. budget, share, 191
U.N. Economic Mission, 1948, 1456
U.N. technical assistance, 1456
U.S. economic and technical assistance, 1455–1456, 1458, 1462, 1464
Haiti—Continued
U.S. military assistance, 1459, 1462–1463
U.S. policy toward, 1454–1464
U.S. sugar quota, 1343, 1458
Venezuela, relations with, 1461, 1643
Haksar, P. N., 861
Halaby, Najeeb E., 994, 1001, 1003
Hall, Graham, 9
Hall, William O., 5, 39, 43, 48, 55*n*, 56–58, 172–173, 177–181, 187–188, 192–200, 202–204, 206, 208
Halle, Louis J., 1061–1062, 1139
Halpern, Leo, 1261–1262
Hamilton, A. A. M., 854
Hamilton, Thomas, 94
Hamilton, William L., 164
Hamlin, John N., 1395
Haney, Robert, 42, 44
Hansen, Donald A., 1503
Hansen, Lt. Col. K. K., 42, 44
Hanson, Haldore, 1595
Hardy, Benjamin, 1155
Harlow, R., 1293
Harmon, Lt. Gen. H. R., 6, 39, 44
Harriman, W. Averell, 111, 117–118, 987*n*, 1003, 1036, 1038*n*, 1189, 1309, 1336, 1450*n*
Harrison, Maj. Gen. William Henry, 1261–1262, 1267, 1273*n*, 1280
Harvey, George Y., 198
Harvey, Sir Oliver, 279, 283
Haselton, Norris S., 877*n*, 881*n*, 883, 888, 895–896, 900, 907, 911–913, 923
Hasenoehrl, Victor F., 1336
Hassilev, Leonide, 1234
Hauch, Charles C., 974–976, 979–980, 1337*n*, 1367–1370, 1389*n*, 1392
Hauser, Philip M., 7
Havemeyer, John K., 1612–1613, 1619
Havenga, N.C., 695
Hawaii, 779
Hay, D. O., 532
Haya de la Torre, Víctor Raúl, 929, 940, 1255, 1586–1587, 1602
Hayes, Frank, 1258, 1261–1263, 1267–1268, 1271–1272
Hearn, Richard, 907
Hebbard, William L., 994, 1001
Heeney, A. D. P., 874, 884, 891
Heins, Fred G., 1321, 1324, 1326–1328
Helou, Charles, 115
Henderson, Joseph S., 55*n*, 164–166
Henderson, Max, 1056
Heneman, Harlow J., 1066–1068
Henkin, Louis, 272
Henriquez, Enrique Cotubanama, 974, 976*n*
Henríquez-Ureña, Max, 28, 569, 671–673
Henry, Maj. Gen. Guy V., 876, 900, 902
Herbruger, Rodolfo F., 1535, 1537, 1541, 1545
Herrera Jordán, David, 1470*n*, 1474, 1478
Herrick, Harold C., 1470–1471, 1478–1479
Hertzog, Enrique, 1169, 1179, 1255*n*

Heurtematte, Julio E., 1064*n*, 1550
Heurtematte, Roberto, 1109
Hickerson, John D.:
Chinese representation question, 245*n*, 251–253, 256, 265*n*, 269, 272–274
Collective security role of the United Nations, 2
Colonial questions, 572, 574–576, 591–592, 607, 611*n*, 620, 624, 650, 652, 677–681, 684–686, 693–695, 712
General Assembly elections, 83–86, 1621
General Assembly issues, U.S. policy regarding, 19, 35–37, 39*n*, 42*n*
Guatemala, U.S. policy toward, 1442
Human rights questions, 740, 784, 837
Korean conflict, 1008
Membership problem, 288–290, 302, 304, 313–315, 319, 320*n*, 321*n*, 329–334, 335*n*, 344, 347*n*, 348, 354–355, 360, 362–364, 419–420, 422*n*, 423, 438, 442, 445, 449–450, 452–454
Moroccan question, 137, 139, 144, 146
Soviet peace offensive, 1, 471–472
U.N. budget, U.S. share, 172–174, 178, 195–198, 206, 208
U.N. technical mission to Bolivia, 1155–1156
U.S.–U.N. Headquarters Agreement, problems concerning implementation, 52–53, 55*n*, 72
Yugoslav complaint against the Soviet Union, 497–499
Hill, Col. Francis, 1024
Hill, Col. J. G., 1663–1665
Hill, John L., 1303*n*
Hilton, Ralph, 1568*n*
Hitler, Adolf, 457–458
Hitschmannova, Marcelles C.V.B., 73, 75–76
Hochschild, Mauricio, 1183
Holger, Vice Adm. Immanuel, 1274
Hollis, Walter, 1355
Holmes, Julius C., 104, 106–110, 118
Honduras (see also under Country positions):
Agreements with the United States: Cooperative program in agriculture, Jan. 30, 1951, 1465; General Agreement for Technical Assistance, Jan. 26, 1951, 1465
El Salvador, relations with, 1468
Guatemala, relations with, 1429–1430, 1468
Hemisphere defense role, 1012, 1465, 1467
Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063
Nicaragua, relations with, 1518
United Fruit Company: Activities, 1468–1469; agreement with, 1447
U.N. budget, share, 191
U.S. Air and Army Missions, 1467
U.S. policy toward, 1465–1469
U.S. quarantine against Honduran citrus fruit exports, 1467–1468
Hong Kong, 222–223
Hood, Amelia H., 1354–1356, 1392–1393
Hooker, John S., 9–10
Hoover, Herbert, Jr., 1603
Hoover, John P., 1076*n*, 1392
Hoover, William H., 1247*n*, 1262, 1283–1284
Hope, C. P., 356, 651
Horton, Donald, 1660, 1663
Houard, Jacques, 532
Howard, Harry N., 78
Howe, C. D., 905–906, 912, 916
Hudson, William P., 1141–1146, 1155–1157, 1159–1161, 1164, 1165*n*
Hughes, Charles Evans, 176
Hughes, Ruth, 1478
Hull, Cordell, 64–65
Human rights questions in the United Nations (see also under United Nations: Secretariat; United Nations: Secretary-General; United Nations: Specialized Agencies):
Bulgarian, Hungarian, and Romanian violations of human rights, 807, 809
Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Status of Refugees and Displaced Persons, Geneva, 1951, 759, 762, 821–822
Convention on the International Transmission of News and the Right of Correction, 790–791, 795–797, 799, 801, 811–816, 818–819
Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees, July 25, 1951, 759, 762–763, 821–822, 827, 840
Country positions: Afghanistan, 773–775, 782, 786–788; Arab-Asian bloc, 764, 776–777, 782–783, 787, 791, 802, 817, 837, 865, 868; Argentina, 773–774, 811; Australia, 749, 758, 764, 773–774, 865–866, 868; Belgium, 752, 769, 773–774, 776–777, 779, 781, 791*n*, 837, 866, 868; Bolivia, 770–771, 773–774; Brazil, 773–774; Burma, 773–775, 855, 857; Byelorussian S.S.R., 773–774, 840–841; Canada, 752, 764, 773–774, 785, 791*n*; Chile, 749, 752, 758, 767–769, 773, 791*n*, 820; China, Republic of, 749, 752, 758, 773–774, 791*n*; Colombia, 773–774, 839–841; Commonwealth, 833, 837, 843, 846, 849–850, 861; Costa Rica, 773–774; Cuba, 773–774; Czechoslovakia, 752, 773–774, 791*n*; Denmark, 749–750, 758–759, 762–763, 773–774, 785–786, 837, 841; Dominican Republic, 773–774; Ecuador, 770, 773–774; Egypt, 749, 758, 766–769, 773–775, 820; El Salvador, 773–774; Ethiopia, 773–774; France, 749, 752, 758, 773–774, 782–783, 785–787, 791, 811–816, 820, 866, 868; Greece, 749, 758,

Human rights questions in the United Nations—Continued
Country positions—Continued
773–774; Guatemala, 749, 758, 769–770, 773–774; Haiti, 773–774; Honduras, 773–774; Iceland, 773–774; India, 749–750, 752, 758–759, 762–764, 766, 769, 773–774, 781, 791, 820, 844–845, 848–850, 853–857, 860–861, 864–866; Indonesia, 773–775, 855, 857; Iran, 752, 773–775, 791*n*, 855, 857; Iraq, 773–775, 782, 786, 855, 857; Israel, 773–774, 817, 861, 865–866; Latin American bloc, 764, 771, 782, 791, 802, 820, 837, 850, 861, 868; Lebanon, 749, 758, 769, 773–775, 781, 820, 841; Liberia, 773–774; Luxembourg, 773–774; Mexico, 752, 773–774, 791*n*, 820; Netherlands, 773–774, 785, 837, 839–841, 865; New Zealand, 764, 773–774, 841; Nicaragua, 773–774; Norway, 773–774, 865; Pakistan, 749, 752, 758, 766–769, 773–775, 788, 791*n*, 808, 848, 854, 864–865; Panama, 773–774; Paraguay, 773–774; Peru, 752, 773–774, 791*n*; Philippines, 752, 773–775, 791*n*, 820; Poland, 752, 773–774, 791*n*, 817, 819; Saudi Arabia, 773–775; Soviet bloc, 784, 795, 802, 805, 808, 817, 836, 838, 866, 868; Soviet Union, 736–737, 742, 745, 747, 749, 752, 754, 756, 758, 764, 773–774, 783, 786–787, 791*n*, 817, 836, 852; Sweden, 749, 752, 758, 773–774, 791*n*; Syria, 770, 773–775, 786; Thailand, 773–774, 833; Turkey, 773–774, 777; Ukrainian S.S.R., 749, 758, 773–774; Union of South Africa, 773–774, 844–845, 848, 850–858, 860, 862–867; United Kingdom, 749–750, 752, 758–759, 762–764, 766, 773–774, 782–783, 787, 791*n*, 803, 813*n*, 816, 819, 836–837, 839–841, 850, 861, 868; United States, 735–767, 769, 772–785, 789–813, 815–820, 822–828, 831–837, 842–866, 868; Uruguay, 749, 752, 758, 773–774, 788, 791*n*, 839–841, 861; Venezuela, 773–774; Western Europe, 820, 833, 865; Yemen, 773–775; Yugoslavia, 736–737, 749, 758, 767–769, 773–774, 820, 839–840
Draft Convention on Freedom of Information, 763, 789–821, 868
Draft International Covenant on Human Rights, 636, 735–781, 783–789, 793–794, 797, 801–804, 816, 824, 868
Draft Protocol on Stateless Persons, 821, 842
Economic and Social Council, considerations and reports, 736, 739, 741, 743–748, 751–752, 757, 764–770, 772, 774–775, 780, 788–791, 796, 806–812, 815–820, 823–824, 840
General Assembly, actions and considerations, 636, 735–736, 740–748, 750–757, 759–777, 780, 784–786, 788–791, 794–797, 804–806, 808–812, 814–830, 832–833, 837–838, 840–845, 848–849, 851, 854, 856–857, 860, 862, 864–868
Indians in the Union of South Africa, treatment, 12, 38, 138, 149, 679, 686, 700, 706, 710, 842–869
La Prensa, Argentine suppression, 807, 809–911
Oatis case, 781, 795, 806–811, 817–821
Refugees and stateless persons, 759, 763, 817, 821–842
Self-determination, right of peoples and nations, 772–789, 868
U.N. Commission on Human Rights, 735–766, 768–770, 772–776, 780, 782, 784–789, 804
U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, actions and report, 822–826, 828–835, 837–842
Humelsine, Carlisle H., 75–76, 169–172, 1068
Hungary (see also under Membership problem: Candidacies): Armaments, 502, 507; Soviet policy toward, 475; U.S. fliers, treatment, 486; U.S. interference in, Soviet charges regarding, 478–479, 481, 483–484, 486; Yugoslav charges against, 500, 506, 513–516
Huré, Francis, 532, 536, 566, 593
Hurtado Mendoza, Angel, 1427
Hyde, H. van Zele, 10
Hyde, James N., 5, 39, 43, 98, 250, 268, 333–334, 354–355, 363, 386–389, 391–392, 393*n*, 394–397, 399–400, 407–408, 412–418, 430–433, 445, 510–511
Hylander, Grant, 1280

Ibáñez del Campo, Gen. Carlos, 1128, 1244, 1281, 1602
Iceland (see also under Country positions), 191
Idris al Senusi, King of Libya, 25–26
Immigration Act of 1917, 49*n*; 1918, 55; 1924, 54–55; 1945, 55*n*
India (see also under Country positions): Economic and Social Council seat, 29; Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, member of, 222–223; General Assembly Special Committee on Representation of China, member of, 265*n*; International Bank for Reconstruction and Development loan, 33; Security Council seat, 29, 94, 97, 105; U.N. budget, share, 169, 191, 201*n*, 202–

India—Continued
203, 205–206; Universal Postal Union Conference at Cairo, 211
Indochina (see also Cambodia; Laos; Vietnam), 212, 259–260, 262, 321, 475, 603, 947
Indochina question in the General Assembly, 12
Indonesia (see also under Country positions), 191, 222–223
Indonesian membership case in the Security Council, 425
Indonesian question in the General Assembly, 470
Ingram, George, 48, 50–52, 72–73, 77, 164–165, 172, 195, 198
Institute for Inter-American Affairs. See under American Republics.
Institute of Race Relations in the Union of South Africa, 703
Inter-American conferences and organizations. See under American Republics.
Interdepartmental Committee for Scientific and Cultural Cooperation, 1252–1253, 1458, 1585
Interior, U.S. Department of, 1154, 1166, 1346*n*
Internal Security Act (McCarran Act), 1950, 46*n*, 48, 50–51, 53, 57, 70–71, 933
International Air Transport Association, 210, 214
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, 9, 30, 32–33, 1070, 1120, 1133, 1143, 1174, 1175*n*, 1185, 1188–1190, 1192, 1209–1210, 1218–1222, 1234, 1241, 1250, 1279–1280, 1291–1293, 1305, 1336, 1397, 1425*n*, 1426, 1439, 1480–1481, 1493–1494, 1517, 1520–1523, 1543, 1558–1560, 1570–1571, 1573–1578, 1588, 1594–1596, 1599–1601, 1606
International Civil Aviation Organization, 5, 9, 118
International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, 1123, 1491
International Conferences of American States. See under American Republics.
International Court of Justice (see also under Colonial questions; General Assembly: Elections), 112–113, 116, 311, 320, 336–338, 341–344, 346–349, 352–353, 355, 361, 363, 366, 370, 372, 378, 380, 387, 389–392, 395, 400–401, 403–404, 406–408, 410, 413–415, 419, 425–429, 432, 440–441, 444–447, 449, 457*n*, 552, 616, 630–631, 633, 637, 689, 770, 802, 806, 929, 940, 982–983, 1409, 1586–1587
International Development Advisory Board, 932*n*, 934*n*
International Labor Organization, 4, 9, 737, 768, 803, 966, 969, 1442, 1584
International Materials Conference, 1098*n*, 1105, 1120, 1259–1260, 1265, 1278, 1285–1288
International Monetary Fund, 9–10, 1120, 1133, 1149, 1174, 1219, 1235–1236, 1252, 1302, 1311–1312, 1319, 1558–1559, 1617–1618
International Organizations Immunities Act, 4, 53–54, 70*n*
International Pulp and Paper Committee, 1098, 1104–1106
International Railways of Central America, 1421, 1438, 1444
International Refugee Organization, 4, 823, 826–829, 831–832, 834–835, 837, 839–841, 1119
International Security Affairs Committee, 985, 991–994, 998–1003, 1038*n*, 1053, 1069*n*, 1070
International Telecommunications Union, 10, 258
International Trade Organization, 1302*n*
Iran (see also under Country positions), 136, 191, 1563, 1603, 1627, 1634, 1647, 1651, 1654–1655, 1657, 1661
Iranian question. See under General Assembly; Security Council.
Iraq (see also under Country positions), 191, 265
Ireland. See under Membership problem: Candidacies.
Iríbar, Gen. Carlos, 1612–1613, 1615–1616
Israel (see also under Country positions), 11, 169, 191, 205, 359
Italian colonies, disposition of former. See under General Assembly.
Italy (see also under Membership problem: Candidacies):
Chilean copper sales to, 1270
Chinese representation question, 287
Migration problem, 392–393
North Atlantic Treaty Organization, participation in, 325, 336, 355, 365, 378, 389, 395–396, 403
Peace Treaty revision, Three-Power (U.S.–U.K.–France) Declaration regarding, Sept. 26, 1951, 348–350, 354–355, 360, 363–366, 371, 378, 386–388, 390, 393–394, 396, 403, 412
Principal Allied and Associated Power, former, 701
Refugee problem, 826
U.S. military assistance, 1020
U.S. policy toward, 1441–1442
Iverson, Kenneth R., 1059–1060
Ives, Irving M., 1300*n*

Jacob, Leonard, 1136
Jamali, Mohamed Fadil, 130
James, Air Vice Marshal A. L., 889
James, Edwin W., 1326–1327
Jamison, Edward A., 926*n*, 947, 976, 979, 986*n*, 1013*n*, 1016–1019, 1022*n*, 1024–1027, 1030*n*, 1031*n*, 1110–1111, 1223, 1321–1324, 1389*n*, 1604*n*, 1619–1620

Japan (see also under Membership problem: Candidacies), 473, 475, 701, 947
Japanese Peace Conference, 17, 260, 1107, 1359–1360
Japanese Peace Treaty, 248, 315, 457*n*, 1445
Jara, Gen. Heriberto, 464
Jarvie, B. J., 677, 680
Jebb, Sir Gladwyn, 82, 104, 106, 108, 122–123, 133, 151–153, 155, 251–253, 266, 268–269, 281, 283–284, 312–313, 333, 335, 458–460, 514–515
Jerusalem. See under General Assembly.
Jessup, Philip C.: Chinese representation question, 282–283; colonial questions, 717–719, 733; Council of Foreign Ministers, 460; General Assembly elections, 95–96, 98–103, 112, 133–134; human rights questions, 779, 783, 835–836, 858, 860; membership problem, 419*n*, 420, 422–423, 425; Moroccan question, 148, 156–157; Soviet attack on the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, 490; U.N. budget, U.S. share, 186, 188, 197; U.S. representative to the United Nations, 5, 37–38; Yugoslav charges against the Soviet Union, 511
Johnson, Griffith, 1263, 1267–1268, 1272–1273
Johnson, Herschel, 413, 1184–1188, 1195–1198, 1199*n*, 1200–1201, 1202*n*, 1203–1204, 1207*n*, 1212, 1219–1222, 1229, 1236–1237
Johnson, James F., 314
Johnson, John A., 888–890
Johnson, Lyndon B., 1158, 1165
Johnson, U. Alexis, 251
Johnston, Eric, 1127*n*, 1267, 1273*n*
Joint Chiefs of Staff: Canadian-American joint defense efforts, 875–876, 878*n*, 898–900, 902; hemisphere defense plan, 991, 996–997, 1000, 1003–1005, 1010–1011, 1018, 1021, 1026–1028; joint U.S.–Venezuelan military planning talks and agreement, 1016, 1624–1627, 1628*n*, 1630*n*, 1653, 1661, 1664–1665, 1672; Korean conflict, 1010, 1022; Moroccan question, 147–148; U.S. bases in the Galapagos Islands, proposed, 1406–1407
Jones, Lt. Col. Argyle P., 1591, 1623
Jones, J. Jefferson, 83, 538, 551, 559–562, 564–565, 571, 576–577, 579, 589–591, 597–603, 620–621, 693–694
Jones, Lewis, 282–283
Jones, Paul W., 83, 1621*n*
Jones, Robert, 695–696
Jooste, G. P., 126, 677–681, 684–688, 693–695, 712–713, 717, 722–727, 729–730, 732–733, 854, 866–867
Jordaan, J. R., 866–867
Jordan, John E., 1392, 1399
Jordan. See under Membership problem: Candidacies.
Jurgensen, Jean-Daniel, 651
Justice, U.S. Department of, 59, 1507
Kaiser, Philip M., 9
Kardelj, Edward, 506, 509, 514–515
Kashmir dispute between India and Pakistan, 12, 38, 250, 457*n*, 460, 470
Katiejeri, Sawli, 528
Katz, Milton, 7
Kayser, Jacques, 814–815
Keenan, Edward, 1505
Keenleyside, Hugh, 1149, 1155–1157
Kellogg, Edmund H., 40, 43
Kellogg, Frank B., 1303
Kelly, Willard F., 1505, 1507
Kem, James P., 897*n*, 1103, 1411, 1442
Kempter, Charles W., 1474–1476
Kennan, George F., 1093
Kennecott Copper Company, 1246, 1263, 1277–1278, 1280, 1283–1284
Kenya, 632
Kerno, Ivan, 341
Kernohan, Frances K., 8
Kerry, Richard J., 50–56, 59–60, 67–72
Kersten, Charles J., 483–484, 485*n*
Key, David M., 43, 126–127, 135, 779
Khalidy, Awni, 536, 547–551, 566–569, 571, 589–591, 593, 597–602, 605, 666, 725
Kidder, Randolph A., 1030*n*, 1195, 1198, 1199*n*, 1206*n*, 1208, 1213–1216, 1217*n*, 1224, 1230
Kiel, Brig. Gen. Emil C., 1013*n*
Kilcoin, William L., 911–914
Kirk, Alan G., 40, 43, 390–391, 462–467, 509, 511, 779, 858
Klein, Julius, 1585–1586, 1588, 1598, 1601
Knapp, J. Burke, 1208*n*, 1209, 1222–1223, 1232–1233
Knight, Ridgway, 283
Knox, Charles F., 957*n*, 967, 1019, 1258
Knox, Gordon, 464–467
Koenig, Robert P., 1597*n*
Koppelmann, 1448–1450
Korea, Democratic People's Republic of (see also under Membership problem: Candidacies), 475
Korea, Republic of (see also under Membership problem: Candidacies), 222–223
Korean conflict (see also under American Republics: General Assembly; Security Council; and individual American states):
  Armistice proposals, 257, 259–264, 267–268, 275–279, 281, 283, 477, 492*n*, 493, 495, 1205–1206
  Chinese Communist intervention, 11, 13, 221, 224, 227, 230–231, 236–237, 246–248, 252–254, 256–257, 261–262, 264, 265*n*, 278, 472, 475, 926, 1373
  Outbreak, 1950, 1115, 1118, 1152*n*, 1154, 1158, 1170, 1256, 1348, 1433, 1493, 1542
  Military contributions, 12
  Soviet policy toward, 469–470, 473, 475, 477, 495

Kosanović Sava, 503–506
Kotschnig, Walter, M., 6–7, 752
Koushnareff, Serge G., 1293
Kraft, Ole Bjorn, 443
Krieg, William L., 946–947, 1161, 1293, 1296, 1399, 1402, 1404–1405, 1581–1582
Krylov, Sergei B., 403
Kurds, 540
Kutako, Hosea, 722
Kyrou, Alexis, 78, 82, 95, 126, 128 135, 438, 451

Labor, U.S. Department of, 966, 1496, 1507
Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, 933
Lacoste, Francis, 139–140, 151–152, 259, 283, 335, 350, 386–387, 397*n*, 445, 458–459
Laethem, Gabriel van, 144, 591
Lafer, Horácio, 1107, 1219–1224, 1230, 1237
Lafleur, 1470*n*
La Follette, Robert, 1446
Laise, Carol C. 40, 43
Lake, Mack C., 1656
Laking, G. R., 532–534, 536–537
Lange, Halvard M., 90, 248
Lannung, Hermod, 699
Laos (see also under Membership problem: Candidacies), 222–223
Lark, Capt. J. A., 1016, 1018, 1024
Larson, Harold, 1596
Laskey, Denis S., 81–82, 232, 451
Latin American bloc. See under Country positions; General Assembly: Elections.
Latvia, 481, 483
Laugier, Henri, 849, 868–869
Laurentie, Henri, 532, 536, 552, 556, 569, 576, 579, 581–582, 594
Lavalle, Jerome R., 542, 544, 591
Lavalle, Juan Batista de, 945
Lawson, George W., 1057
Lawson, Lawrence M., 1470*n*, 1473–1474, 1478–1479
Lawton, Frederick J., 1060
Lay, James S., Jr., 1011, 1013, 1021
League of Nations, 317, 443, 456, 468, 673–675, 684, 687, 693, 697–698, 700, 709, 722, 832
League of Nations Mandates, 673–676, 683–685, 687, 689, 691–692, 696–702, 713, 715, 718, 721–722, 724, 730
Lebanon (see also under Country positions), 29, 81, 84–85, 191
Leddy, John M., 897*n*, 966–967, 1340–1343
Lenin, V. I., 1432
Lenroot, Katharine F., 7
Lenz, Carl, 1261
Leon y García, Rubén de, 1348–1349
Le Pan, Douglas V., 923
Léparvanche Parparcén, René, 946
Le Tourneau, Jean, 260
Lewis, Col. W. F., 1016, 1020, 1024
Leyva Urdaneta, Jorge, 1291–1292
Liberia (see also under Country positions), 191
Libya (see also under Membership problem: Candidacies), 11, 25–26, 38, 642, 1101
Libyan question, 310
Lie, Trygve (see also United Nations: Secretary-General): Chinese representation question, 265*n*; General Assembly elections, 100, 134; General Assembly session, sixth, 45; human rights questions, 845, 866–867; Korean conflict, 1203, 1205, membership problem, 45, 341, 349; peace plan, 39, 492; Secretary-General, extension of term, 339–340, 347, 458; U.N. budget, 181; U.S.–U.N. Headquarters Agreement, problems concerning implementation, 50–51; World Peace Council, activities, 463–464, 470, 474
Liechtenstein, 307
Lincoln, Abraham, 20
Lincoln, George A., 1059
Linde, H., 61–67
Linder, Harold F., 1267, 1662–1663
Lindsay, Guy A., 904
Linville, Francis, 9
Lithuania, 481, 483
Litvinov, M. M., 479, 484
Liu, S. S., 255
Livingston, Edward, 176
Lleras Camargo, Alberto, 933, 935, 941–942, 957, 971–972, 1062–1065, 1074, 1105
Lloyd, Selwyn, 96, 98, 108–110, 119–120, 122, 282–283
Locke, Edwin A., 8
Lodge, Henry Cabot, 849–850
Lodge, John, 333
Lombardo Toledano, Vicente, 1430, 1491, 1498
López, Salvador P., 266
Lovett, Robert A., 881*n*, 901*n*, 1010*n*, 1022, 1026–1027, 1033–1036, 1137, 1236, 1363*n*, 1389, 1624–1627, 1647–1650, 1652–1654, 1657, 1661, 1665
Lubin, Isador, 6, 9, 36, 40, 42, 112, 126, 193, 196, 510, 765, 820, 835
Luciolli, Mario, 362, 364
Lutz, E. Russell, 1293–1296
Luxembourg (see also under Country positions), 191
Lykes Brothers, 1655*n*

MacArthur, General of the Army Douglas, 883–885
Macatee, Robert B., 8
Machado, Gerardo, 1356
Machado, Luis, 976–978, 1330–1331, 1339*n*, 1343–1347, 1349–1351, 1360*n*
Mackay, Duncan A. D., 1011*n*, 1016–1020, 1021*n*, 1110, 1330–1331, 1579–1580, 1591–1593, 1609–1610, 1623, 1657–1658, 1660–1662
MacKay, R. A., 874, 888–890
Mackey, Argyle, 1505, 1507

MacKnight, Jessie M., 1441
MacVane, John, 42, 44
Macy, Loring K., 1443
Maffitt, Edward P., 40, 44, 99–100, 134, 391, 670, 732, 778, 850
Magloire, Paul E., 1383, 1460
Maktos, John, 40, 43, 778, 858
Malan, D. F., 559, 680–681, 688, 695, 700, 703, 705, 708, 710–711, 715–716, 718, 720–721, 723, 726, 848, 851, 854, 858
Malaya, 222–223, 475
Maleady, Thomas J., 1157*n*, 1164
Malik, Charles, 741
Malik, Yacob A., 95–96, 98–103, 247, 249–251, 411–412, 457–461
Mallory, H., 1327
Mallory, L. D., 968, 1079–1080, 1085*n*, 1086*n*, 1087, 1088*n*, 1096, 1106–1108
Mañas, Arturo, 1345, 1354
Manchuria, 475
Mandl, Fritz, 1596
Mangano, Philip A., 40, 43
Mann, Thomas C., 934*n*, 946–947, 971, 974, 993, 1009, 1058–1059, 1061*n*, 1065*n*, 1091–1096, 1098, 1104*n*, 1133*n*, 1144–1146, 1152–1155, 1218–1221, 1273*n*, 1328–1329, 1345–1346, 1358*n*, 1359*n*, 1389*n*, 1402–1405, 1440–1442, 1446–1449, 1472–1474, 1476–1479, 1481, 1503–1505, 1507–1509, 1549*n*, 1568*n*, 1648–1649, 1669, 1671–1672
Mansfield, Mike J., 5, 37–38, 100–102, 173, 180, 185, 188, 190, 192, 196–198, 201, 372, 374–375, 482, 485*n*, 490, 859
Mao Tse-tung, 13
Mariaca, Guillermo, 1143
Marshall, General of the Army George C., 870–871, 874–876, 881, 893–894, 905, 986, 990–991, 993*n*, 996*n*, 1002*n*, 1004–1006, 1008*n*, 1010, 1012, 1040*n*, 1056*n*, 1094, 1139, 1200*n*, 1223, 1274, 1307–1308, 1310, 1413*n*, 1589–1590, 1628*n*, 1630*n*, 1647, 1661*n*
Martin, Edwin M., 1441
Martin, John, 651
Martín Pérez, Angel, 1485*n*, 1510
Martin, T. R., 1091–1096, 1098
Martin, William McC., 9, 1189, 1222, 1292, 1336, 1521–1522, 1575, 1663*n*
Martínez Trueba, Andrés, 930*n*
Martínez Vargas, Ricardo, 945, 1141, 1143–1146, 1154, 1158–1161
Martinique, 301
Mascia, Luciano, 286, 289, 293, 295–298
Mason, Paul, 651
Massigli, René, 123, 283
Mathieson, W. A. C., 386, 532, 536–537, 579, 581–582
Mathieson Chemical Corporation, 1248*n*
Matthews, H. Freeman, 88, 245*n*, 898, 902, 925, 927*n*, 1011–1013, 1023, 1307*n*, 1308, 1309*n*, 1389–1390, 1441, 1581, 1647–1648
Matthews, W. D., 906*n*, 911–913, 923–924
Matto Grosso, 1237
McCarran, Pat, 46*n*, 48, 71, 834
McCarran Act (Internal Security Act), 46*n*
McCone, John A., 1656
McCormack, John W., 1441
McCormick, Clarence S., 9
McFall, Jack K., 49, 70
McGhee, George C., 78, 1068, 1441–1442
McGinnis, Edgar L., 940, 945*n*, 1394–1405, 1412–1414, 1579, 1589–1591
McGovern, James, 1446
McGrath, J. Howard, 75
McKay, Vernon D., 40, 43, 297, 532, 536, 547–550, 552–553, 566–569, 717, 719, 725–726, 732
McKee, Maj. Gen. John L., 1024–1025
McKeever, Porter, 42, 44, 127, 180, 187–188, 672, 732, 778–779, 783
McKellar, Kenneth, 169, 177–178, 834
McKinnon, Clinton D., 1606
McKinnon, Wylie F., 1157
McMahon, Brien, 180, 185
McNaughton, Gen. A. G. L., 900, 902
McSherry, Brig. Gen. Frank J., 1562
McWilliams, W. J., 920*n*, 927*n*
Meade, C. A. Gerald, 83–85, 87–88, 241–242, 251, 312–314, 319–320, 520, 559, 574
Meeker, Leonard C., 40, 43, 48, 69, 407*n*, 667–669, 740, 848–849, 856–858
Meigs, Carroll M., 1339
Mejía Palacio, Jorge, 973, 1312–1313
Meloy, Francis E., 287*n*, 555*n*
Membership problem in the United Nations (see also under United Nations: Secretary-General):
  Associate membership, proposals for, 286, 288–289, 301, 311, 319, 328, 351, 356, 416
  Candidacies for membership:
    Albania, 306, 313, 330, 337, 346, 378, 411, 436, 439, 450
    Austria, 306, 315, 330, 337, 377, 411, 430, 436*n*, 439
    Bulgaria, 306, 313, 330, 337–338, 346, 356, 378, 403, 411, 436, 439
    Cambodia, 301, 306, 315, 321, 328, 413
    Finland, 45, 306, 330, 337–338, 377, 403, 411, 436*n*, 439
    Germany, Federal Republic of, 301, 315, 321, 328, 331, 413–414, 416
    Hungary, 306, 313, 330, 337–338, 346, 356, 378, 403, 411, 431, 436*n*, 439, 453
    Ireland, 45, 306, 330, 337, 377, 411, 430, 436*n*, 439
    Italy, 45, 286–290, 292–295, 298–299, 302, 304–306, 310–311, 313, 315, 323–324, 326, 330–331, 333, 336–371, 373–425, 428–436, 439, 442, 445, 447–454, 617, 641
    Japan, 301, 304, 306, 314, 321, 328, 331, 391, 413–414, 416, 431, 453
    Jordan, 306, 330, 337, 377, 411, 436*n*, 439

Membership problem in the United Nations—Continued
Candidacies for membership—Con.
Korea, Democratic People's Republic of, 433
Korea, Republic of, 306, 312, 330, 377, 412, 414, 417–419, 422, 430–431, 453
Laos, 301, 306, 315, 321, 328, 331, 413, 436
Libya, 306, 315, 321, 328, 331, 413, 420, 423–425, 430, 433, 436–437, 439, 449–452
Mongolian People's Republic, 306, 313, 330, 337, 346, 351, 378, 411, 418–419, 422–423, 431, 436*n*, 439, 450, 453, 805
Nepal, 306, 330, 337, 377, 411, 436*n*, 439
Portugal, 306, 330, 337, 377, 411, 430, 436*n*, 439
Romania, 306, 313, 330, 337–338, 346, 356, 378, 411, 436*n*, 439
Soviet satellites, 45, 302, 307, 309, 312–313, 315, 321–322, 328, 332–333, 346, 352, 360, 368–369, 377–379, 388–389, 391–392, 402, 409–410, 412–414, 416–417, 419–420, 430–431, 450, 453–454
Spain, 306, 315, 321, 328, 331, 413, 805
Sri Lanka, 306, 313, 330, 333, 337, 349, 351, 356, 377, 411, 436*n*, 439
Vietminh, 433
Vietnam, 301, 306, 315, 321, 328, 331, 412–414, 417–419, 433, 437
Country positions: Arab-Asian bloc, 421, 424, 443, 449–450; Argentina, 289, 293–294, 299, 311, 381, 383, 403–404, 412, 426, 435, 437, 440, 444; Belgium, 445–446; Brazil, 406, 413, 424, 434, 438–439, 442–443; Canada, 289, 330, 351; Chile, 434, 437, 440; China, Republic of, 418–419, 422–423, 432, 434; Colombia, 403, 412, 440; Costa Rica, 446, 447*n*; Denmark, 443; Ecuador, 400–402, 404, 406; El Salvador, 289, 302, 305, 310, 331, 354*n*, 376, 382, 440, 446, 449*n*; France, 330, 369–370, 372–375, 386–387, 393–394, 397–399, 400*n*, 402, 406, 411–412, 418–420, 423–424, 429, 432–434, 445, 452; Greece, 423, 432, 434, 436; Guatemala, 354*n*, 376, 382, 402, 440, 446, 447*n*; Honduras, 354*n*, 376, 382, 440, 446, 447*n*; Iceland, 444; Latin American bloc, 319, 334, 379, 398–400, 403–404, 408, 414, 420, 428, 430, 443–445, 447–450; Lebanon, 440; Luxembourg, 437; Netherlands, 406, 423, 432, 434; New Zealand, 300, 384; Nicaragua, 354*n*, 376, 382, 446, 447*n*; Norway, 437, 444; Pakistan, 424, 430, 434, 451;
Membership problem in the United Nations—Continued
Country positions—Continued
Peru, 341–342, 349, 352, 354*n*, 355–356, 361–363, 368–370, 372, 376–377, 379–380, 382, 387, 389–392, 403–404, 412, 414–415, 421, 425–433, 435, 437, 439–441, 444–445, 447*n*, 448, 450–452; Poland, 400*n*, 402; Soviet Union, 167, 170, 186, 188, 292–294, 300, 304–305, 312–313, 315, 320, 322–324, 328, 330, 332–333, 336–339, 341–350, 352–353, 355–356, 359–370, 372*n*, 373, 376–381, 384, 388–395, 397–407, 409–415, 417–425, 429–436, 438–440, 443–445, 447–454; Syria, 440; Three-Power (U.S.–U.K.–France) Declaration regarding Italian admission, Sept. 26, 1951, 348–350, 354–355, 360, 363–366, 371, 378, 386–388, 390, 393–394, 396, 403, 412; Turkey, 434; United Kingdom, 289, 300, 312–313, 319, 330, 333, 335, 349, 351–353, 355–357, 372, 375, 384, 386, 394, 397, 405–406, 412, 418, 421–422, 432, 434, 451; United States, 286–454; Uruguay, 403; Venezuela, 403
General Assembly, considerations, 38, 286–290, 295, 297, 299–300, 302–311, 313–316, 319–325, 327–328, 330–334, 336–339, 341, 343–344, 346, 348–363, 365, 367–376, 378–386, 388–390, 393–397, 400–405, 408–417, 419–420, 425–433, 435–437, 439–441, 443–444, 446–454, 625, 641
Italian participation in General Assembly sessions, proposed, 310–311, 316–318, 320–321, 323–324, 326–327, 329, 331–332, 334, 346, 351, 353, 356–360, 362–364, 368–369, 371–372, 377–378, 381–382, 387, 390–391, 393, 396, 415–517
Observer status for nonmembers, proposed, 286–290, 293–294, 302, 306–307, 390–391, 415
Package or omnibus deal, proposed, 312–315, 322, 331, 333, 346, 352, 377–379, 410–414, 417–424, 430–436, 438, 443–444, 447–449, 451–454
Security Council, considerations, 288–289, 307, 315, 321–322, 324, 326–327, 330–333, 336–341, 343–356, 359–381, 383–442, 445–449, 451–454, 622, 641
Trusteeship Council, Italian participation, 290–300, 302–303, 310–311, 317–320, 323–325, 327–329, 331–332, 338, 345–346, 351, 353, 356, 363, 367–369, 371–379, 381–385, 387–391, 401, 416, 428, 611, 616–617, 622, 625, 641, 650

Membership problem in the United Nations—Continued
U.N. Specialized Agencies, questions concerning, 305, 326
Méndez Paiva, Ramón, 1570–1571, 1574
Méndez Zebadua, José, 1427
Mendoza, Eugenio, 1658
Mendoza, Col. Juan, 1601
Mercante, Domingo A., 1108
Merchant, Livingston T., 227, 245*n*, 246*n*, 1589*n*
Messersmith, George S., 1079–1085, 1086*n*
Metal Reserve Corporation, 1044
Mexico (see also under Country positions):
Agreements with the United States: General Technical Cooperation, June 27, 1951, 1494*n*; Migrant Labor, Aug. 11, 1951, 1488, 1496–1497, 1505–1507
Air transport agreement with the United States, negotiations concerning, 1484–1490, 1496, 1499–1505, 1508–1513
Belize (British Honduras), claim to, 1498
Bolivia, relations with, 1151
Chamizal Award, 1911, 1470–1472, 1479
Chamizal problem, 1470–1474, 1478–1480, 1489, 1497, 1499
Commercial fishing rights, 1495
Communist activities, 1491
Cooperative program, 1051
Dominican Republic, relations with, 1383
Export-Import Bank loans, 1209, 1477–1478, 1480–1481, 1493–1494, 1496
Export items on U.S. stockpile list, 953
Food supply problem, 1052
General Assembly Special Committee on Representation of China, member, 265*n*
Guatemala, relations with, 1430, 1498
Hemisphere defense role, 1032, 1489, 1495
Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development: Loans, 1481–1482, 1494; Mission to Mexico, 1494
Joint Mexican-American International Boundary and Water Commission, 1470*n*, 1479, 1497
Joint Mexican-American Commission to Control and Eradicate Foot and Mouth Disease in Mexico, 1495
Joint Mexican-American Defense Commission, 1231, 1481–1483, 1490
Mexico—Continued
Korean conflict, policy toward, 996–997, 1009, 1015, 1023, 1476–1477, 1482–1483, 1491, 1499
Lend-lease settlement, 1474–1476, 1494
Military establishment, 1054
Military Project No. 1, procurement of U.S. materials for, 1481–1484
National Petroleum Convention in Venezuela, 1603
Petroleum production and exports, 1494–1495, 1603, 1639
Railroad Retirement Fund claim against the United States, 1475, 1489, 1494
Soviet Union, relations with, 1498
Spain, relations with, 1498
Territorial waters, 1495
U.N. budget, share, 169, 191, 205*n*, 206
U.N. Economic Commission for Latin America, policy toward, 1073
U.S. claims against, 1490
U.S. economic and technical assistance, 1494, 1499
U.S. military assistance, attitude toward, 1025–1026, 1027*n*, 1031, 1037
U.S. Military Mission, lack of, 1022
U.S. policy toward, 1489–1500
U.S. sugar quota, 1343
Venezuela, relations with, 1642
Water distribution problems, 1472–1473, 1497
Meyers, Howard, 40, 43
Meyers, Larry, 1345
Middle East Command, 150–151
Miles, Rear Adm. Milton E., 1024–1026, 1580, 1605
Millard, Hugh, 89–90
Miller, Edward G., Jr.:
American Republics, U.S. economic and technical assistance policy, 1053, 1055, 1061–1062, 1068, 1076
Argentina, U.S. relations with, 1079–1080, 1084–1088, 1091, 1093–1094, 1098, 1100–1102, 1104–1109, 1133, 1135–1136, 1138–1140
Bolivia, U.S. relations with, 1141–1145, 1149, 1155–1160, 1164–1166
Brazil, U.S. relations with, 1189–1191, 1195, 1197–1198, 1200, 1206, 1211–1212, 1219, 1222–1224, 1229–1232, 1237
Caribbean disputes, 971*n*
Chile, U.S. relations with, 1239–1242, 1266–1267, 1269, 1274–1276, 1280–1283, 1285–1286, 1288
Colombia, U.S. relations with, 1300*n*, 1307–1308, 1310, 1311*n*
Costa Rica, U.S. relations with, 1322, 1325*n*, 1326–1327
Cuba, U.S. relations with, 1330–1335, 1358–1359, 1360*n*, 1361–1363
Dominican Republic, U.S. relations with, 1374–1375, 1389*n*, 1391*n*

Miller, Edward G., Jr—Continued
Ecuador, U.S. relations with, 1394–1396
Foreign Ministers of American States, fourth meeting of consultation, 925–929, 929–931, 933–934, 935*n*, 938–939, 943, 945, 957–958, 961*n*, 966–970
Guatemala, U.S. policy toward, 1143–1444, 1446–1447
Hemisphere defense questions, 993–994, 998–999, 1001, 1006–1010, 1018–1019, 1024–1026, 1029–1030, 1031*n*
Mexico, U.S. relations with, 1480, 1508
Panama, U.S. relations with, 1541, 1547, 1549, 1558, 1560–1562
Paraguay, U.S. relations with, 1573*n*
Peru, U.S. relations with, 1580–1581, 1589–1591, 1600–1603, 1605–1608
Uruguay, U.S. relations with, 1612, 1619–1622
Venezuela, U.S. relations with, 1626*n*, 1648–1649, 1654, 1655*n*, 1656*n*, 1659–1662
Mills, Sheldon T., 1195, 1198–1199, 1208*n*
Mills, William, 41
Mindszenty, Cardinal, 850
Moatsis, J., 121, 124
Mohammed Ben Yousef, Sultan of Morocco, 161
Moline, Ed, 1198
Molino, Ignacio, 1550, 1552–1554, 1556–1558
Mollinedo, Alfredo, 945
Monaco, 307
Mongolian People's Republic. See under Membership program: Candidacies.
Monroe Doctrine, 1376
Montgomery, Joseph W., 1446–1447
Monzon, Col. Elfego H., 1432
Moodie, C. T., 86–87, 304–305
Moody, Blair, 913
Mora, José A., 971–973, 1612, 1619–1621, 1622*n*
Moreira Sales, Walter, 1219, 1222
Moreno, Lt. Col. Félix Román, 1624, 1626, 1628–1632, 1637, 1647, 1649, 1652, 1657, 1670
Morgan García, Héctor, 1437*n*
Morgan, John, 1261–1262
Morla Concha, Gen. Manuel, 1589–1593, 1615
Morocco (see also Moroccan question under Colonial questions), 142, 147
Morris, Lt. Gen. William Henry Harrison, 1531, 1548*n*, 1624, 1626–1632, 1647, 1661, 1664, 1666, 1669–1671, 1673
Morrison, Herbert S., 80–81, 118, 245–247, 251–254, 275
Moscoso Cárdenas, Alfonso, 944–945, 963, 1394–1395, 1412–1414
Motion Picture Association of America, 1127*n*
Muller, Walter, 1285–1287
Multer, Abraham J., 1136
Munitions Board, 1164
Muniz João Carlos, 270, 434, 438–439, 443, 1229
Muñoz, Rodolfo, 381*n*, 599–600
Muntassar, Mahmud Bey, 423–425
Murphy, Charles S., 911–914, 920, 1503–1505, 1508
Murphy, Francis T., 1525–1526
Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, 480–481, 993, 1013, 1033, 1115, 1246, 1322, 1378, 1386, 1429, 1641, 1652, 1666*n*
Mutual Security Act of 1951, 189, 207, 478–487, 852, 858, 1027, 1030, 1032–1034, 1036, 1060*n*, 1110, 1137, 1227, 1236, 1289, 1366, 1389, 1412–1413, 1450–1453, 1607, 1609–1610, 1619–1620, 1663, 1669
Mutual Security Agency, 117
Myers, Lawrence, 1344*n*

Nabuco, Mauricio, 1196, 1205
Nash, Frank C., 6, 40, 43, 1664
National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems, 1099–1100, 1188–1189, 1190*n*, 1210, 1236, 1284–1285, 1335–1337, 1457*n*, 1520–1523, 1574*n*, 1575–1578, 1658, 1662–1663
National Foreign Trade Council, 1133–1136, 1138
National Security Council:
Kem amendment, application, 897*n*
Korean conflict, 1005
NSC 56/2, 1950, on U.S. policy toward inter-American military collaboration, 1004, 1011–1017, 1020–1022, 1040, 1642, 1646–1647
Naude, J. F. T., 695
Naudy, André, 140, 386–387, 591–592, 651, 725
Navarro, Norberto, 1550, 1565
Navas, Victor, 1550
Navy, U.S. Department of the, 1006–1007, 1012, 1397, 1580
Near and Middle East (see also under General Assembly: Elections), 26, 136*n*, 826, 829
Nehru, B. K., 203, 205, 861, 866
Nenni, Pietro, 464, 466*n*
Nepal (see also under Membership problem: Candidacies), 222–223
Neruda, Pablo, 464
Netherlands (see also under Country positions), 80–81, 94, 191–192, 211, 214–216, 218, 222–223
Netherlands New Guinea. See under Colonial questions.
Neves da Fontoura, João, 943–944, 964, 966–967, 1009, 1184*n*, 1190, 1195–1198, 1200–1201, 1203–1206, 1207*n*, 1211–1212, 1220–1222, 1224, 1230, 1237, 1276, 1308
New Caledonia, 647–648
New Zealand (see also under Country positions), 192, 222–223

Newcomer, Brig. Gen. Francis K., 1548*n*
Nicaragua (see also under Country positions):
Agreements with the United States: Customs exemptions of diplomatic and consular officers, Dec. 3, 1951 and Oct. 9, 1952, 1517*n*; free movement of military aircraft, Nov. 26 and Dec. 12, 1951, 1526–1527; lend-lease settlement, Sept. 26, 1951, 1525–1526
Costa Rica, relations with, 1317–1318, 1517–1518
Cuba, relations with, 1517
Dominican Republic, relations with, 1384
El Salvador, relations with, 1518
Export-Import Bank loans, 1520–1523
Guatemala, relations with, 1429–1430, 1517
Honduras, relations with, 1518
Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063
International Monetary Fund: Assistance, 1520–1523; Mission, 1950, 1517
Korean conflict, policy toward, 1371, 1525
Panama, relations with, 1518
U.N. budget, share, 192
U.S. economic and technical assistance, 1516–1517
U.S. Military Mission, lack of, 1022, 1524–1525
U.S. policy toward, 1514–1519
U.S. sugar quota, 1343
Nieto del Río, Félix, 938, 943–944, 1247, 1263, 1265–1266, 1273*n*, 1274, 1276, 1279*n*, 1281
Nigeria, 596, 632
Nisot, Joseph, 445, 447
Nitze, Paul H., 927*n*, 997, 1000
Nkrumah, Kwame, 582, 592
Nolan, Charles P., 967, 1293, 1296
Nolting, Frederick E., 40, 43, 188, 193, 276, 391, 394, 396, 511, 669
Nongovernment organizations, 665, 676, 766, 823, 830, 833, 836–837
Norberg, Charles, 42, 44
Noriega, Gen. Zeńon, 1600–1601, 1604, 1607
Noriega Morales, Manuel, 1446*n*
North Atlantic Treaty Organization: Activities, 24, 351, 470; area, 142; Canadian role, 880, 882, 899, 901; Council, 157, 373; Council of Deputies, 886; Greek-Turkish membership, 80, 84; Italian membership, 325, 336, 355, 365, 378, 389, 395–396, 403; military standardization program, 1020; Soviet policy toward, 19, 456, 468, 474–475, 477–478, 488–492; U.S. policy regarding, 480–481, 483, 485*n*, 1005, 1502, 1625, 1662
Norway (see also under County positions), 90, 192
Noyes, Charles P., 5
Nufer, Albert F., 934*n*, 935*n*, 938, 979–980, 1061*n*, 1062–1065, 1321, 1345–1347, 1349–1351, 1360*n*, 1367, 1446–1447, 1480*n*, 1481–1484, 1536, 1541, 1549*n*, 1558*n*, 1559, 1568*n*
Nyquist, Col. Buford R., 1660–1661, 1663, 1665
Nyrop, Donald W., 1486, 1500–1501, 1503–1505, 1508–1512

Oatis, William N., 38, 781, 795, 806–811, 817–821
Obaldiá, José Clemente de, 1546
O'Connor, Lt. Col. Roderic, 1016, 1020, 1024, 1363*n*
Odría, Manuel A., 1581–1584, 1587, 1589, 1591, 1594–1596, 1599, 1601–1602, 1604, 1607–1608
O'Dwyer, William, 1475, 1477*n*, 1483, 1509–1512
Office of Defense Mobilization, 1070, 1190*n*, 1267, 1272, 1289
Ohly, John H., 1000, 1075
Ohmans, John L., 1480, 1505–1507, 1509–1510
Oleschuk, F. N., 461–463, 468
Olmsted, Maj. Gen. George H., 1664
Olympio, Pedro, 528, 539, 548, 582
Olympio, Sylvanus, 522, 525, 528–530, 535, 548–549, 582, 590, 592
Ordonneau, Pierre, 514–515, 517
Oreamuno, Alberto, 1321–1322, 1324–1325, 1327
Oreamuno, J. Rafael, 943, 1321–1322, 1324, 1326–1328
Organization for European Economic Cooperation, 24
Organization of American States. See under American Republics.
Ormachea Zalles, Hector, 1165
Ortega Frier, Julio, 1367–1369
Ortiz, Nestor C., 1198–1199
Otaño, Aureliano, 946–947, 1655, 1667–1669
Otterman, Harvey B., 10

Pace, Frank, 171, 1562, 1565
Padillo Nervo, Luis, 28, 82, 90, 134, 155–156, 270, 666, 669, 672, 696*n*, 702, 728*n*, 729, 734, 1499, 1603
Pakistan (see also under Country positions), 29, 94, 97, 111, 113*n*, 169, 191–192, 205*n*, 206, 222–223
Palar, L. N., 132
Palestine question. See under General Assembly; Security Council.
Palmer, Ely E., 8, 40, 43
Palmer, Joseph, 40, 43
Panama (see also under Country positions):
Agreement with the United States for Technical Cooperation, Feb. 26, 1951, 1534
Censorship questions, 1530–1531

Panama—Continued
Communist influence, 1077, 1529, 1561–1568
Ecuador, relations with, 1410
Export-Import Bank loans, 1536–1537, 1545, 1558–1559
Federal expenditures, 1054
Guatemala, relations with, 1562, 1568
Hemisphere defense role, 1528–1532
Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development: Mission, 1558–1560; proposed loan, 1543
International Monetary Fund Mission, 1558–1559
Nicaragua, relations with, 1518
Panama Canal Zone, matters concerning, 1529–1533, 1535, 1542–1545, 1548–1549, 1560–1562, 1564–1566
Panama Trust Company, closing of, 1536, 1540, 1545
Political situation, 1537–1538, 1546–1551, 1562–1568
Security forces, 1054
Trade embargo on Chinese Communists, North Korea, and Soviet bloc, 1551–1558
U.N. budget, share, 192
U.S. policy toward, 1549
U.S. technical assistance, 1533–1535, 1543, 1565–1566
Panama Canal, 992, 1299, 1406, 1459, 1522, 1528, 1532, 1542, 1562, 1568, 1633–1634
Panama Canal Company, 1561–1562
Panama Canal Zone. See under Panama.
Pan American Airways, 1421, 1505, 1659
Pan American Sanitary Organization. See under American Republics Pan American Union. See under American Republics.
Pane, Victor A., 1570–1573
Panikkar, K. M., 854
Papua, 632
Paraguay (see also under Country positions): Argentina, relations with, 1128–1129; Bolivia, relations with, 1177; Brazil, relations with, 1577; economic development, U.S. interest in, 1569–1578; Export-Import Bank loans, 1570, 1577; export items on U.S. stockpile list, 953; federal expenditures, 1054; hemisphere defense role, 1012, 1016; Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063; International Bank for Reconstruction and Development loan, 1570–1571, 1573–1578; U.N. budget, share, 192, 194, U.S. technical assistance, 1533, 1569, 1578
Paranaguá, Octavié, 1235–1236
Parodi, Alexandre, 283
Parrott, C. C., 211–212, 224–225, 234–235, 257, 281–283, 356, 386, 421–422, 651
Passport requirements, U.S. policy regarding, 67–72
Paton, Alan, 703
Patterson, Jefferson, 8, 40, 43
Patterson, John M., 1098*n*
Patterson, Richard C., 1418
Pawley, William D., 1198*n*
Paz, Hipólito Jesús, 962*n*, 968, 1086–1087, 1096–1099, 1101–1102, 1105–1106, 1108–1109, 1139
Paz Estenssaro, Víctor, 1150*n*, 1152, 1170, 1281*n*
Peachey, Roy, 532
Pearson, Lestor B., 111, 351, 491–492, 882–885, 890–891, 906–911, 915
Pelliza, Oscar Luis, 1097
Peña, Angel Florentín, 1570
Peñaherrera, Luis Antonio, 944–945, 1394–1396, 1399, 1402
Peñaranda Minchin, Juan, 945
Penfield, James K., 224–225
Pereira, Tomás Romero, 1570
Pérez Jiménez, Lt. Col. Marcos, 1640, 1649, 1658, 1664, 1666, 1669–1673
Pérez Matos, Martín, 946
Perkins, George W., 148–149, 245*n*, 283, 344, 347*n*, 373, 890–891, 894–896, 898–900, 902, 908–910, 914, 920–922
Permanent Court of International Justice, 138, 675
Perón, Juan Domingo, 811, 930, 1079–1091, 1094–1095, 1098, 1101–1103, 1108–1109, 1111, 1113–1124, 1128–1132, 1134, 1136–1140, 1177–1178, 1244, 1255, 1587, 1602, 1614
Perón, María Eva Duarte de, 1086–1088, 1108, 1113–1114, 1116, 1123–1124, 1130, 1139, 1244, 1602
Peru (see also under Country positions):
Agreement with the United States for Technical Cooperation, Jan. 25, 1951, 1580–1581
Argentina, relations with, 1587, 1596
Bolivia, relations with, 1151, 1177–1178, 1587
Boundary dispute with Ecuador, 586, 1398, 1409–1410, 1413*n* 1414, 1602–1603
Chile, relations with, 1254–1256, 1587
Colombia, relations with, 1586–1587, 1601
Cooperative program, 1051
Costa Rica, relations with, 1587
Cuba, relations with, 1587
Economic and Social Council seat, 29
Export-Import Bank loan, 1599, 1601
Export items on U.S. stockpile list, 953
Federal expenditures, 1054
Food supply program, 1050
Foreign debt, negotiations regarding settlement of, 1599–1601, 1605–1606

Peru—Continued
Guatemala, relations with, 1429–1430, 1587
Hemisphere defense role, 1012, 1582–1583, 1586, 1594, 1607, 1610
Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development loan policy, 1594–1596, 1599–1601, 1606
Korean conflict, policy toward, 996–997, 1010, 1015, 1589–1595, 1598, 1600, 1606–1607, 1615
Lend-lease debt, 1594, 1597–1598
Petroleum policy, 1603, 1608
Political situation, 1583–1584
U.N. budget, share, 192
U.S. destroyer escorts, excess, transfer to, 1006–1007, 1008*n*, 1397, 1579–1582, 1601, 1605, 1607
U.S. economic and technical assistance, 1584–1585, 1588, 1594–1595, 1601
U.S. military assistance, 1027*n*, 1028, 1037, 1584, 1591–1594, 1604–1610
U.S. policy toward, 1582–1589
U.S. sugar quota, 1332–1334, 1343
U.S. warships, negotiations regarding request for, 1579–1580, 1605, 1609–1610
Venezuela, relations with, 1643
Visit by Assistant Secretary of State Miller, 1085*n*, 1280*n*
Pescatore, Pierre, 437
Peurifoy, John E., 82, 121–124, 127
Pezet, José, 1546
Phelps, Vernon L., 1354
Phelps-Stokes Fund, 703
Philippines (see also under Country positions): Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, member, 222–223; General Assembly Special Committee on Representation of China, member, 265*n*; independence, 642; refugee problem, 826, 832; Security Council seat, 29, 84–85, 89, 91, 94–97, 126; U.N. budget, share, 192; U.S. sugar quota, 1343
Phillip, Cedric C., 1361*n*, 1363*n*
Phillips, Richard I., 40, 44
Picado Michalski, Teodoro, 1315*n*, 1317
Pickersgill, J. W., 920
Pignon, Léon, 140, 396, 577, 579, 591–592, 594–597, 651
Pinto Usaga, Manuel, 1432
Pittman, Key, 65
Plastiras, Gen. Nicholas, 110, 121–122, 124
Plaza Lasso, Galo, 1394–1408, 1602
Plitt, Edwin A., 40, 43, 127, 135, 672, 777
Point Four program, 286, 934–936, 957*n*, 989, 1038, 1040–1042, 1044, 1046, 1053, 1056, 1059–1060, 1062, 1066–1068, 1126, 1141, 1147–1148, 1156, 1171–1173, 1180–1182, 1196, 1200, 1238, 1253, 1258, 1264, 1295, 1301, 1314, 1318, 1327, 1347, 1380, 1387, 1394, 1398, 1402–1403, 1424–1426, 1435, 1438, 1443, 1451, 1456, 1464–1465, 1494, 1533–1534, 1543, 1565, 1578, 1580, 1585, 1594–1595, 1601–1602, 1611, 1644–1645
Poland (see also under Country positions), 86, 90, 168, 172, 191–192, 265*n*, 478–479, 481, 483–484, 486, 500, 506, 513–514, 1411
Polianski, Nikolai D., 60, 62
Politis, Jean, 118–119, 121–127
Pollak, Louis H., 41, 44, 857
Ponce Miranda, Luis Neftalí, 945, 1394, 1402, 1404–1405, 1414*n*
Pool, John C., 1085–1088, 1091–1092, 1094–1096, 1098, 1109
Popovic, Vladimir, 497–499, 507
Popper, David, 80, 243–244, 251–256, 301, 334, 431–432, 449, 497–498, 1008–1010
Porter, Paul R., 7
Portugal (see also under Membership problem: Candidacies), 245*n*, 826
Prebisch, Raúl, 1073–1075
President's Commission on Migratory Labor, 1497, 1507
Price, Byron, 181
Prío Socarrás, Carlos, 973–974, 976*n*, 1008, 1013, 1330–1331, 1348, 1363–1366
Pritchard, Neil, 651
Protitch, Dragoslav, 83, 405
Puerto Rico, 1343–1346, 1350, 1369, 1534

Quaroni, Pietro, 392–393, 396–399, 429
Queiroz, Col. Ademar de, 1217
Quevedo, Antonio, 106*n*, 400–411, 419
Quijano, Hortensio J., 1108
Quintanilla, Luis, 932, 981
Quirino, Elpidio, 95
Quirós, Carlos A., 1097, 1100

Radius, Walter A., 1282, 1484–1488, 1500
Radnor, Jess C., 1321, 1623
Ramírez, Miguel Angel, 975, 980, 982
Randolph, Archibald R., 1104*n*, 1133*n*, 1283–1284
Rau, Sir Benegal, 103*n*, 112, 113*n*, 265*n*, 266, 274, 407, 460, 1621
Ravndal, Christian M., 1616, 1617*n*, 1618–1619
Raynor, G. Hayden, 149, 280–283, 373, 559–560, 677–680, 894–895, 898
Razmara, Ali, 1566
Reconstruction Finance Corporation, 1144–1145, 1152–1155, 1157–1166, 1170–1171, 1318, 1397, 1426–1427
Redding, John M., 10, 210*n*, 212, 214–216, 218–219, 243–244, 252*n*
Redway, Albert J., 1536
Regan, Kenneth M., 1479
Reichelderfer, Francis W., 10
Reid, Escott, 901–902

Remón, Col. José A., 1537–1540, 1546–1547, 1563, 1566–1567
Remorino, Jerónimo, 1087–1088, 1100–1102, 1106, 1108, 1139
Rendis, Constantine, 123
Rennie, J. O., 574
Rentzel, Delos Wilson, 1484–1487
Resendes, Lt. Daniel F., 1206*n*
Restrepo Jaramillo, Gonzálo, 930, 961
Rice, Stuart A., 7, 168, 171, 186, 196
Richter, Ronald, 1086*n*
Ridgway, Gen. Matthew B., 1139, 1197, 1211, 1308, 1348, 1362
Riley, Capt. W. A., 6
Ringwalt, Arthur R., 257–258
Rivery, Lt. Cmdr. Oscar, 1330*n*
Robbins, Robert R., 712–713
Roberti, Guerino, 435, 442–443
Roberts, Edward V., 42, 44
Robertson, David A., 695, 705
Robertson, Norman, 920
Robeson, Paul, 463–464
Robinson, H. B. O., 717, 720
Rockefeller, David, 1533–1534
Rockefeller Foundation, 828
Rockefeller, Nelson, 932–934, 936, 1196
Roddan, Edward L., 1620*n*
Rodieck, Col. L. H., 6
Rodríguez, Luis, 1430
Rodríguez, Mario, 943, 1281, 1285, 1289–1290
Rodzianko, Paul de, 60
Romania (see also under Membership problem: Candidacies), 475, 478–479, 481, 483–484, 486, 500, 506, 513–516
Romero Loza, José, 1141
Romulo, Carlos P., 94–96, 284–285
Rooney, John J., 198, 201
Roosevelt corollary to the Monroe Doctrine, 1376
Roosevelt, Eleanor (Mrs. Franklin D.), 5, 7, 37–38, 100, 102, 111–112, 125–127, 130–131, 133–135, 153, 160–162, 177*n*, 181–182, 185–188, 196, 198, 200–201, 208, 411, 418–419, 421, 423–430, 433–434, 438–441, 445–448, 451, 484–485, 490–493, 510, 700, 703–705, 716, 719–720, 722–724, 726–728, 730, 733–734, 739–743, 752, 765–767, 769–771, 776–788, 814–818, 820, 830–831, 834–842, 847, 849–852, 855–856, 859, 861, 863, 865–868
Roosevelt, Franklin D., 161, 479, 484, 1095, 1230, 1516
Roosevelt, Theodore, 1376
Rosaz, Gabriel, 538, 542, 553–554
Ross, John C., 6, 40, 42, 45–46, 94–95, 98, 100, 187–188, 192–193, 195, 197, 267, 269–270, 275*n*, 333–334, 342, 354, 363, 390–392, 407*n*, 492*n*, 599, 606–607, 668–669, 712–713, 729–730, 836, 851, 858–859
Rossiter, Fred J., 9
Rountree, William M., 78
Rowntree, R. Henry, 1392
Royall, Kenneth C., 1299
Ruanda-Urundi, 632
Rubber Development Corporation, 1044
Rubottom, Roy R., 1391*n*, 1470, 1480–1481
Ruiz Cortines, Adolfo, 1492
Rusk, Dean, 217, 227, 245*n*, 269, 315
Russell, Rear Adm. George L., 1007*n*
Russell, Gerald W., 1296, 1367, 1655, 1659–1660
Russell, Richard B., 1007*n*
Ryckmans, Pierre, 532–536, 579, 581–582

Saillant, Louis, 1437
Saint Laurent, Louis, 886–887, 898*n*, 906–909, 914–918, 920–924
Salade, Pierre, 651
Salah-el-Din Pasha, Mohamed, 115, 159, 161
Salami, Radji, 529
Salazar Gómez, Eduardo, 1402, 1404–1405
Salazar Southwell, Carlos, 1595–1608
Saldías, Adm. Roque A., 1579–1582, 1604–1608
Saldivar, Antonio, 1570
Sale, William B., 412, 417–418, 449
Salgüero, Alvaro Hugo, 1432
Salinas Carranza, Alberto, 1476, 1505
Salt, Barbara, 80, 83, 164–166, 258, 263–264
Salvatierra, Richard C., 1348
Samudio, David, 1550
Sánchez Arango, Aureliano, 983–984, 1366*n*
Sánchez Gavito, Vicente, 1470, 1472–1474, 1478
Sanders, William, 135*n*, 137*n*, 140, 357, 650–655, 740, 963*n*, 1213, 1216
Sandifer, Durward V., 40, 42, 69, 98–99, 101, 106, 112, 126, 156, 180, 185–188, 192, 194, 197, 199–200, 275–276, 280–281, 320, 342*n*, 344, 386, 391–392, 407*n*, 457, 541–544, 560–561, 564–565, 574, 669, 671–672, 704, 726, 733, 739–740, 752, 765, 779, 783, 834–838, 849–851, 857–858, 868
San Marino, 307
Santa Cruz, Hernán, 28, 90, 434, 438, 445, 783
Sardenberg, Col. Idalio, 1213, 1216
Sargeant, Howland H., 1098*n*
Sarper, Selim, 270*n*, 438
Satterthwaite, Livingston, 883–884
Saudi Arabia (see also under Country positions), 192, 1603
Sauer, P. O., 695
Sauer, Walter C., 1399, 1536
Saunders, Robert H., 908, 917
Sawyer, Charles, 905–906, 1485, 1662
Sayre, Francis B., 7, 20, 38, 41–42, 184–185, 222*n*, 254, 277, 296*n*, 297, 299*n*, 532, 534–537, 547–550, 552–553, 561*n*, 566–567, 572–573, 579, 580*n*, 581–582, 588–591, 594, 597–600, 602–603, 605–607,666, 668–670, 672, 699, 702–704, 707*n*, 708*n*, 718–719, 723–724, 726–728, 731–733, 765–766, 835
Sayre, Robert M., 1062*n*, 1076*n*

Scandinavian bloc. See under Country positions; General Assembly: Elections.
Schaetzel, J. Robert, 1309–1311
Schiopetto, Ovidio V., 1097, 1107
Schmid, Bernard, 1505
Schmidt, Orvis A., 1596
Schoenfeld, Hans F. A., 997–999, 1016, 1020, 1024, 1030*n*, 1038–1041, 1110–1111, 1321
Schoenfeld, Rudolf E., 1418, 1444–1445, 1453
Schuman, Robert, 92*n*, 107–108, 119, 122, 137, 143–144, 148*n*, 149–155, 157–161, 181, 280, 283–284, 368*n*, 369–371, 373–375, 429, 445, 725, 814
Schumann, Maurice, 106–109, 118, 122, 140–143, 145, 152, 157–158, 283, 429
Scott, Michael, 653–654, 676–677, 705, 710, 722, 725–726, 730
Scott, Maj. Gen. S. L., 1002*n*
Seagrave, Norman P., 9
Searles, Fred, 1258–1261
Security Council of the United Nations (see also under Chinese representation question; General Assembly; Membership problem):
Agenda item, 138
Atomic weapons, proposed prohibition, 495–496
Chilean position, 1254
Colonial question, 662
Czechoslovak case, 1948, 404, 1254
Indonesian membership case, 425
International Court of Justice elections, 112–113, 116
Iranian question, 138, 250, 457*n*
Israeli membership, 359
Kashmir dispute between India and Pakistan, 12, 250, 457*n*, 460
Korean conflict, 359, 470, 1006
Nonmember participation, question of, 307
Palestine question, 250
Procedural versus substantive questions, 404, 406
Resolutions of June 25, June 27, and July 5, 1950, regarding Korean conflict, 1006
Role and functions, 340–341, 347, 458
Soviet position, 475
U.N. Secretary-General, extension of term, 339–340
U.S. position, 138
U.S. representation, 3, 6
Veto question, 171, 240, 288–289, 293–294, 302, 304–306, 313–314, 320–322, 324, 330–333, 336–339, 341–350, 352–353, 355–356, 359–370, 372*n*, 373, 375–381, 390, 393–410, 412–417, 419, 422–424, 431–432, 434–436, 447, 450–454, 475
Serrano, Colón, 1402, 1404–1405
Setser, Vernon G., 1293, 1296
Sevilla Sacasa, Guillermo, 961
Sforza, Count Carlo, 297, 299
Shakhnazarov, Abram S., 60–61
Sharett, Moshe, 134
Sharkey, Col. T. W., 1024, 1030*n*
Shaw, Robert W., 1321
Sherman, Adm. Forrest P., 1006–1007, 1581
Sherwood, Sidney, 1399
Shillock, John C., 1570
Shipley, Ruth B., 70–71
Shipping Act of 1916, 1253
Short, Joseph, 920
Shuckburgh, Charles A. E., 280–283
Shullaw, J. Harold, 684
Shulman, Marshall S., 41, 44
Shvernik, Nikolai, 60
Sibert, Brig. Gen. Edwin L., 1016–1018, 1213–1216, 1224, 1274, 1589, 1591, 1612–1617
Simsarian, James, 41, 43, 739–744, 786, 818–820
Singer, Jeanne, 42, 44
Siracusa, Ernest V., 1321, 1448, 1541*n*, 1546–1548, 1549*n*, 1559, 1563*n*
Skartvedt, Enoch, 1354
Skylstad, R. I. B., 132
Smith Act of 1940, 933
Smith, Claude H., 9
Smith, Kingsbury, 473
Smith, Orvis, 1534
Smith, Paul A., 9, 1591, 1623
Smuts, Jan Christian, 711, 854
Smyser, Col. Willis, 1016, 1020, 1024
Snow, William P., 132
Snyder, John W., 9, 1100, 1189, 1222–1223, 1293*n*
Solana, Joseph R., 1667–1668
Soldatov, Aleksander, 168, 338
Sole, D. B., 696
Solórzano Fernández, Alfonso, 1437*n*
Somaliland. See under Colonial questions.
Somerville, Col. D. S., 1016–1017, 1019, 1525*n*, 1623–1625
Somoza Garcia, Anastasio, 1317–1318, 1384, 1430, 1514–1515, 1517–1518, 1524–1525
Somoza Garcia, Jr., Col. Anastasio, 1524
Soos, Vilma P., 60
Sosa Molina, José Humberto, 1130
Southard, Frank A., Jr., 10, 1235–1236
South East Asia, 827
South Pacific Commission, 625, 646–649
South West Africa. See under Colonial questions.
Sovereignty, questions relating to, 501, 630, 777, 872, 886, 1095, 1103, 1120–1121, 1167, 1179, 1243, 1316, 1320, 1368*n*, 1376, 1379, 1422, 1434, 1447, 1463, 1491, 1515, 1644
Soviet Union (see also under Country positions and Soviet Union and Soviet subheadings under individual countries and subjects): Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, member, 222–223; human rights, violations, 24; peace offensive, 1–2, 17–18, 21, 260, 455–477, 468–475, 477–479, 508; Security Council seat, 93; U.N. budget, share, 87, 165–169, 172, 178, 191–192, 198, 201*n*, 202–203, 205–206; Universal Postal Union Conference at Cairo, 211, 214–215, 217–218

Soviet Union—Continued
Sowash, William B., 1536, 1541–1546, 1549*n*, 1559–1560, 1562
Spain (see also under General Assembly; Membership problem: Candidacies), 826, 1095, 1151, 1256, 1385, 1498
Spalding, Hobart A., 931–933, 942–944, 946, 979, 1327, 1568*n*
Sparkman, John, 171
Sparks, Edward J., 1623–1625, 1626*n*, 1655–1656, 1670
Spencer, William A., 1293
Sri Lanka (see also under Membership problem: Candidacies), 222–223
Staats, Elmer B., 171, 196
Stalin, Iosif V., 13, 456–460, 462, 464, 468–469, 473, 509, 1432
Stambaugh, Lynn U., 1399
Standard Oil Company, 1173, 1445
Stanley, Adm., 1596
Steelman, John R., 1340
Stein, Eric, 41–42, 152–153, 503, 507–508, 515–516, 857, 862–863
Stenger, Jerome J., 1144*n*, 1399
Stevenson, Adlai, 99, 111
Steyn, D. H., 680, 686–687
Stibravy, William J., 41, 43
Stinebower, Leroy D., 6–7, 1056–1057, 1060, 1233–1234, 1391
Stockholm Peace Appeal, 1950, 455*n*, 465, 469, 474
Stone, T. A., 181, 208
Storey, Lt. Col. R. G. 1663
Stowe, David H., 1505–1508, 1510–1512
Stowell, E. C., 65
Strategic Air Command, 878
Strauss, Anna Lord, 5, 37, 179, 186, 197, 490, 733, 766, 783, 846–847, 849–850, 858, 860–863, 866
Street, Jesse, 464
Strong, Curtis C., 542–546, 564
Struble, Vice Admiral Arthur D., 6
Suárez Costa, Diego, 1291
Suárez Fernandez, Miguel A., 1360
Suárez Flamerich, Germán, 1640, 1655
Subardjo, Ahmed, 132
Suez Canal, 11, 696, 1561
Sugar Acts: 1934, 1380; 1937, 1343–1344, 1346, 1381; 1948, 1333, 1343–1347, 1349–1350, 1358, 1381
Sullivan, Charles H., 1293–1297
Sunde, Arne, 111, 133, 437
Supreme Commander, Allied Powers, Europe, 491
Supreme Court, 176
Sweden (see also under Country positions), 192, 211, 214, 218, 1270
Sweeney, Joseph H., 696
Swift International, 1126
Swingle, William S., 1135*n*
Switzerland, 211, 213–214, 218, 245*n*, 307, 1270
Swyter, Col. Carl, 1367
Symington, W. Stuart, 1152–1155, 1157–1159, 1161, 1163, 1166
Syria (see also under Country positions), 191–192, 205*n*, 206, 208
Szymczak, M. S., 1336–1337

Taiwan, 12, 38, 265*n*
Tanganyika, 632
Tan Shao-hwa, 222–223
Tarchiani, Alberto, 287, 350, 389, 392, 449–450
Tariff Commission, 1654
Tate, Jack B., 48, 175–176, 718, 730, 733, 740, 742–743, 923–924
Taviani, Paolo E., 398
Taylor, Maj. Gen. Maxwell, 1524
Taylor, Paul B., 41–42, 53, 86–87, 97, 102, 110–113, 125, 133–134, 154, 193, 274–275, 301, 305*n*, 315–316, 320–321, 335*n*, 342*n*, 344, 362, 374*n*, 388, 391, 666, 670, 693, 716–717, 729, 776, 783, 819, 852, 856, 858–859
Tebbit, D. C., 545
Technical Cooperation Administration, 935*n*, 936*n*, 1059*n*, 1064, 1067–1068, 1223, 1252*n*, 1380*n*, 1398, 1424*n*, 1458, 1569*n*, 1585*n*, 1595
Tello, Manuel, 962*n*, 1009, 1475–1477, 1479, 1482, 1511–1512
Tewksbury, Howard H., 1569–1576
Thailand (see also under Country positions), 29, 81, 84–85, 97, 191–192, 222–223, 603
Thomen, Luis Francisco, 972–973, 981–982, 1350–1351, 1367, 1374–1375
Thompson, Josephine, 41, 44
Thompson, J. K., 545–546, 551, 559, 564, 574, 651
Thompson, Llewellyn E., 353–354, 356–360, 412, 418–419
Thompson, Malvina, 41, 44
Thorp, Willard L., 935*n*, 957, 960, 966, 967*n*, 969, 1059*n*, 1099–1100, 1166, 1189, 1190*n*, 1222, 1232, 1234, 1239, 1252*n*, 1259, 1261, 1267, 1309, 1380*n*, 1391*n*, 1392, 1424*n*, 1484, 1522, 1569*n*, 1585*n*
Thors, Thor, 114, 444
Thurston, Walter, 1076*n*, 1441, 1477
Tibbetts, Margaret Joy, 650, 652
Tibet, 154
Tito, Marshal Josip Broz, 507, 509
Tittman, Harold H., 1581–1582, 1600, 1605, 1607*n*, 1608*n*
Tobias, Channing H., 5, 37–38, 181–183, 490, 665*n*, 667, 671, 673, 703–704, 717–718, 725–726, 730–733, 765, 767, 779, 781, 821, 836, 851–852, 858
Tomic Romero, Radomiro, 1268, 1270–1273
Tomlinson, F. S., 236, 237*n*, 251, 256, 272–273
Tomlinson, John D., 301
Torres Bodet, Jaime, 1499

Towe, Peter M., 886–887
Townsend, Wilson L., 1399
Townsley, Col. C. P., 6
Trade Agreements Act of 1934, 1333, 1340, 1342–1343
Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951, 1126, 1635
Treasury, U.S. Department of, 985*n*, 987*n*, 994, 1001–1002, 1038*n*, 1189, 1223, 1296, 1339, 1526, 1662
Treaties, conventions, agreements, etc. (see also under individual countries):
Agreement between Cuba and and the United States regarding U.S. Air Force Mission to Cuba, 1950, 1013, 1332
Agreement between Mexico and the United States regarding Railroad Retirement Fund claim, 1946, 1475*n*
Agreement between Nicaragua and the United States regarding construction of Rama Road, 1942, 1516
Air Transport Agreement between Chile and the United States, 1947, 1253–1254
Anglo-Egyptian treaty, 136*n*
Atlantic Charter, 1942, 1040
Austrian Peace Treaty, 38, 475
Boundary waters treaty between Canada and the United States, 1909, 910, 919
Brussels Pact, 89
Charter of the Organization of American States, 1948, 925–926, 928–929, 1093, 1098, 1452, 1618
Claims Convention between Panama and the United States, 1950, 1549
Commercial Air Transport Agreement between Ecuador and the United States, 1947, 1398
Consular Convention between Italy and the United States, 176
Convention for Distribution of the Waters of the Rio Grande, 1906, 1471–1472
Convention of Commercial Reciprocity between Cuba and the United States, 1902, 1333
Convention on Provisional Administration of European Colonies and Possessions in the Americas, 1940, 962
Defense Agreements between the United States and: Brazil, 1942, 1217, 1230, 1236; Iceland, May 5, 1951, 886
Defense Sites Agreement between Panama and the United States, 1947, 1550
Financial Convention between the Dominican Republic and the United States, 1940, 1374–1375
Four-Power Statement at San Francisco on Voting Procedure in the Security Council, 1945, 404, 406
Treaties, conventions, agreements—Continued
French-Moroccan Treaty of 1911, 138
Friendship, Commerce, and Economic Development Treaty between the United States and Uruguay, 1949, 1618
Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation Treaties between the United States and: Argentina, 1853, 1125; Uruguay, 1297
General Agreements for Technical Cooperation between the United States and: Bolivia, Mar. 14, 1951, 1141; Nicaragua, 1950, 1516; Panama, 1950, 1534
General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, 1947, 808*n*, 1120, 1126, 1133, 1247, 1252, 1302–1303, 1332–1334, 1338, 1341–1343, 1350, 1351*n*, 1352–1354, 1359–1360, 1380, 1412, 1421, 1458, 1492, 1517, 1585–1586, 1594, 1598–1599, 1639
General Convention on Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, 1946, 70, 74, 77
Genocide Convention, 779, 806
Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (Rio Treaty), 1947, 629, 986, 996, 1015, 1031, 1039, 1041, 1082, 1095, 1113, 1115, 1129–1130, 1191, 1226–1227, 1254, 1413, 1428*n*, 1429, 1431–1432, 1434–1435, 1452, 1498, 1584, 1593, 1628, 1647, 1666
International Maritime Consultative Organization Convention, 1948, 1295
International Trade Organization Charter, 1302, 1338
International wheat agreements, 23
Italian Peace Treaty, 38, 335, 344, 347–350, 365, 368, 372*n*, 391, 410*n*
Leased Bases Agreement between the United Kingdom and the United States, 1941, 870–875, 877, 879, 887
Lend-lease agreements between the United States and: Cuba, 1941, 1339; Mexico, 1943, 1475
Military Aviation Mission Agreement between Argentina and the United States, 1940, 1085
North American Regional Broadcasting Agreement, 1950, 1496
North Atlantic Treaty, 1949, 336, 458, 491, 879, 887, 1041
Olaya–Kellogg Air Pact, 1929, 1303
Potsdam Declaration, 1945, 365
Quito Charter between Colombia, Ecuador, Panama, and Venezuela, 1948, 1410, 1643
Reciprocal Trade Agreements between the United States and: Colombia, 1936, 1302; Costa Rica, 1936, 1319; Cuba, 1934, 1333; Guatemala, 1936, 1421; Venezuela, 1939, 1634–1635, 1639, 1645, 1654–1655, 1658, 1668

Treaties, conventions, agreements—Continued
Rio Protocol between Ecuador and Peru, 1398, 1409–1410
Roosevelt–Litvinov Agreement, 1933, 479, 484
Saint Lawrence Seaway and Power Project, agreement between Canada and the United States concerning, 1941, 903, 908*n*, 911, 916–917, 921–922, 924
Second Supplementary Trade Agreement between Cuba and the United States, 1941, 1349–1350
Stabilization Agreement between Mexico and the United States, 1941, 1493
Staff Agreement between the United States and Venezuela, 1942, 1632
Status of Forces Agreement for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, 901–902
Trade Agreements between the United States and: Argentina, 1941, 1125–1127; Ecuador, 1938, 1408–1409, 1412; Mexico, 1943, 1492, 1635, 1645; Peru, 1942, 1585–1586
Treaty of Fez, 138
Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation between Panama and the United States, 1936, 1531, 1533
Treaty of Peace, Amity, Navigation, and Commerce between Colombia and the United States, 1846, 1301
Treaty of Peace between the United Kingdom and the United States, 176
Twelve-Point Agreement between Panama and the United States, 1942, 1542, 1545
United Nations Charter, 1945, 3, 46, 69, 70*n*, 71, 77, 79, 89*n*, 95, 102–103, 105, 107, 136–138, 141, 146, 151, 153, 155*n*, 160–162, 175–176, 183–184, 189, 210, 220, 224, 237, 239, 246, 289, 291–298, 304, 308, 311–312, 315–326, 329, 331–332, 334, 336–342, 344–347, 349–350, 352–353, 357–370, 372, 376–385, 388–390, 392–397, 399, 401–402, 404–410, 412, 414–416, 426–430, 432, 435, 440–441, 446, 449, 453, 462, 468, 470, 474–476, 479, 491–492, 501–502, 506–508, 513–514, 520, 534, 540, 586–587, 611–615, 617–618, 623, 637–638, 641, 643–644, 650–651, 658, 660, 662–669, 675, 685, 699, 705–706, 708*n*, 710–711, 715, 718, 722, 724, 728, 734, 738, 765, 773–774, 776–781, 785–786, 789, 810, 840, 844–845, 848, 850, 857, 928, 958, 1011, 1082, 1256
U.S.–U.N. Headquarters Agreement. See under United Nations.
Treaties, conventions, agreements—Continued
Universal Declaration of Human Rights, 136*n*, 138, 146, 625, 635, 736–737, 768, 778, 781, 789, 810, 844–845, 856, 864
Versailles Treaty, 1919, 710
Trieste, 344, 826, 832
Troncoso, J. M., 1339
Trucco, Manuel, 1285, 1287
Trueblood, Edward G., 1620–1621, 1622*n*
Trujillo Molina, Rafael Leonidas, 974–975, 983, 1370–1378, 1382–1388, 1460–1461
Truman, Harry S.:
Address on "The National Emergency", Dec. 15, 1950, 926, 927*n*, 928–929
American Republics, U.S. military assistance for, 1027–1028, 1030, 1032–1034
Argentina, U.S. relations with, 1117
Bolivia, U.S. relations with, 1145, 1150, 1151*n*, 1166*n*
Brazil, U.S. relations with, 1189–1191, 1195–1198
Budget message, 1951, 936
Canada, U.S. relations with, 875, 894, 905, 907, 909–916, 920–922, 924
Chile, U.S. relations with, 1256, 1275
Costa Rica, U.S. relations with, 1326
Cuba, U.S. relations with, 1343–1344
Ecuador, U.S. relations with, 1395, 1396*n*, 1398–1399, 1404, 1407*n*
Foreign Ministers of American States, fourth meeting of consultation, 928, 960
Human rights questions in the United Nations, 740–741, 743
Italian membership in the United Nations, support for, 378
Kem amendment, 897*n*
Korean conflict, 1005
Lynchings in Georgia, 731
Mexico, U.S. relations with, 1479, 1484–1488, 1502–1506, 1508, 1511–1512
Mutual Security Act of 1951, 478
Picketing of offices of the Soviet delegation to the United Nations, Soviet protest regarding, 60
Resignation of Ambassador Armour, 1658
Soviet attack on the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, 490, 492–494
Speech to the General Assembly of the United Nations, Oct. 24, 1950, 28
United Nations, U.S. participation in and policy toward, 1–2
U.N. budget, U.S. share, 162
U.S. delegation to the United Nations, 299
U.S. economic and technical assistance program, 33–34

Truman, Harry S—Continued
Visits by: British Prime Minister Attlee, 229; British Prime Minister Churchill, 100, 111, 432*n*; Chilean President González Videla, 1950, 1124
Truman, Mrs. Harry S., 1395
Truman, Margaret, 1395
Truslow, Francis A., 1208–1209, 1232, 1336
Tsarapkin, Semen K., 98
Tsiang, Tingfu F., 155, 249–250
Tunisian question, 11, 719, 787
Turen, Milton, 1505
Turkel, Harry R., 1594–1599
Turkey (see also under Country positions): North Atlantic Treaty Organization membership, 80, 84; refugee problem, 826; Security Council seat, 78, 80–81, 84, 94, 109, 135; Soviet policy toward, 475; U.N. budget, share, 191–192; U.S. aid for, 486

Ubico y Castañeda, Jorge, 1416*n*, 1421
Uganda, 632
Ugon, Enrique C. Armand, 106*n*, 113, 115–116, 407, 1620*n*, 1621*n*
Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic (see also under Country positions), 172, 191–192
Ulate Blanco, Otilio, 1318, 1321, 1325–1327, 1518
Umansky, Konstantin A., 1498*n*
Unden, Osten, 133–134
Union of South Africa (see also under Country positions and see also South West Africa under Colonial questions; Indians in the Union of South Africa under Human rights questions): Racial policies, 685–686, 688, 700, 724, 731, 844–845, 848–849, 856–858, 864–865; U.N. budget, share, 191–192, 203; withdrawal from the General Assembly, possibility, 126
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. See Soviet Union.
United Fruit Company, 1297, 1320*n*, 1421–1422, 1433–1434, 1438, 1444–1448, 1468–1469
United Kingdom (see also under Country positions and United Kingdom and British subheadings under individual countries and subjects), 93, 163–165, 168, 191–192, 194, 197–198, 200, 205–206, 208, 211, 214, 217–218, 222–223, 1496*n*
United Nations (see also Chinese representation question; Colonial questions; Economic and Social Council; General Assembly; Human rights questions; Membership problem; Security Council):
Aggression question, 1
Armed forces for the Security Council under Art. 43, proposed, 476
Atomic Energy Commission, 3, 6, 28, 40, 227, 230, 232–233
Budget, regular, question of the scale of national assessments for apportionment of expenses, 162–208
Charter. See under Treaties, conventions, agreements, etc.
Collective security role, question of, 1–2, 12–13
Commission for Conventional Armaments, 3, 6, 28, 43, 227, 230, 232–233
Disarmament Commission, 3, 28, 238, 495
Indian withdrawal, question of, 312
International Law Commission, 29, 240
Military Staff Committee, 6, 39
Secretariat: Chinese representation question, 222; colonial questions, 535, 538, 628, 640, 670, 676, 680, 729; functions, 868; human rights questions, 817, 841; U.S. liaison with, 4; U.S.–U.N. Headquarters Agreement, problems concerning implementation, 75
Secretary-General (see also Lie, Trygve): Chinese representation question, 221–222, 241; colonial questions, 527, 636, 638, 655–659, 661–664, 673, 675, 691–692, 697, 699, 722; economic development program, 30; extension of term of office, 339–340, 345, 347, 355, 364, 366; General Assembly agenda items, 24, 138; human rights questions, 750–751, 759, 762, 805–806, 824, 826, 845, 848, 851, 856, 858, 860–861, 863, 865–867; Korean conflict, 470; membership problem, 411, 433; U.S.–U.N. Headquarters Agreement, problems concerning implementation, 76
Soviet policy toward, 1–2, 312, 455–456, 458–463, 468, 470, 472, 474–475
Soviet threat to withdraw, 312–313, 355, 400, 403–404, 455–462, 466–467, 469–470
Specialized Agencies (see also U.N. Specialized Agencies under Chinese representation question; Membership problem): Activities and functions, 644, 1102; budgets, U.S. share, 162*n*, 163, 165, 170–171, 186; human rights questions, 737–738, 841; information required, 639; South Pacific Commission, relationship with, 648; Soviet policy toward, 475; technical assistance program, 36
Technical Assistance Program, 23, 31–33, 36, 190, 195–197, 204, 286, 486

United Nations—Continued
Trusteeship Council. See under Chinese representation question; Colonial questions; Membership problem.
U.S. participation, 1–3, 25
U.S. policy toward, 1–46
U.S. representation, 2–5
U.S. representatives, 5–10
U.S.–U.N. Headquarters Agreement of 1947, problems arising under: Abuse of Privilege of Residence and Deportation, 72–73; correspondents, accreditation and admission, U.S. policy regarding, 50–52, 55–60, 73–76; "immediate vicinity" of U.N. Headquarters, definition, 77; Ninth Proviso procedures, proposed revision, 49–53, 55–56, 59, 73; nongovernment representatives, U.S. policy regarding, 52–53; nonmember representatives, treatment, 53–55, 382; passport visas, U.S. policy regarding issuance, 46–47, 53–58; picketing of offices of Soviet delegation to the United Nations, Soviet protest concerning, 60–67; privileges and immunities questions, 53–54, 62–63, 66, 70, 72–75, 77, 382; travel by U.S. citizens employed by the United Nations, U.S. control over, 67–72; U.S. national security reservation, 48, 76; U.S. responsibility under, 4
U.N. Advisory Council for Libya, 4, 8, 25–26, 39, 43
U.N. Commission for Indonesia, 4
U.N. Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea, 1245
U.N. Commission on Human Rights. See under Human rights questions.
U.N. Conciliation Commission for Palestine, 4, 8, 39–40, 43
U.N. Conference on International Organization, San Francisco, 1945, 91, 175*n*, 403, 458, 489, 667, 728
U.N. Conference on Trade and Employment, Habana, 1947, 1338*n*
U.N. Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, 4, 7, 222–242
U.N. Economic Commission for Europe, 4, 7
U.N. Economic Commission for Latin America, 4, 7, 1072–1075
U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, 5, 10, 165, 170–171, 252, 256, 648–649, 737, 768, 1439, 1456
U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees. See under Human rights questions.
U.N. International Children's Emergency Fund, 7–8, 227, 238, 248, 832–833
U.N. Korean Reconstruction Agency, 9, 165–166, 486, 832, 834
U.N. Participation Act, 1945, 1, 3
U.N. Peace Observation Commission, 8, 27, 248, 498, 500–503, 505–506, 508, 510, 512, 515–517
U.N. Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, 828
U.N. Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian Refugees in the Near East, 4, 8, 486, 832
U.N. Special Committee on the Balkans, 4, 8, 26–27, 40, 43, 505
United States (see also under Country positions and U.S. subheadings under individual countries and subjects), 93, 162–208, 211–219, 222–223
U.S. Federal Maritime Board, 1253*n*
U.S. Steel Corporation, 1188, 1204, 1638, 1656
Universal Postal Union, 10, 210–219, 225, 228, 243–245, 252
Urquidi, Paez, 1480–1481
Urriolagoitia, Mamerto, 1151*n*, 1169, 1179–1180
Uruguay (see also under Country positions):
Agreements with the United States: Technical Cooperation, Mar. 14, 1951, 1611; U.S. Air Force Advisory Mission, Dec. 4, 1951, 1618–1619
Argentina, relations with, 1129, 1614–1616
Export-Import Bank loan, 164
Export items on U.S. stockpile list, 953
Hemisphere defense role, 1032, 1619–1620
Import restrictions, 1617–1618
Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063
Korean conflict, policy toward, 996, 1009–1010, 1015, 1612–1618
U.N. budget, share, 192
U.S. Air Force Mission, negotiations concerning, 1021
U.S. destroyer escorts excess, transfer to, 1006, 1008*n*, 1617*n*, 1618
U.S. military assistance, 1027*n*, 1037, 1619–1620
Venezuela, relations with, 1643
Visit by Assistant Secretary of State Miller, 1085*n*, 1280*n*
Utter, John E., 41, 43, 134, 140, 650, 786

Vallat, Francis A., 397, 407, 445
Vandenberg, Arthur H., 161, 170, 403
Vandenberg, Gen. Hoyt S., 898, 902
Varela, José Manuel, 1550
Vargas, Getúlio Dornelles, 930, 934, 1073, 1184–1188, 1190–1191, 1194–1198, 1200, 1203–1204, 1213–1214, 1217, 1219–1222, 1230, 1237
Varley, Dimitri, 71–72
Varvoutis, George, 123
Vatican, 358
Vaughn, Irwin R., 1327

Veliz González, Humberto, 1427
Venezuela (see also under Country positions):
Belgian arms sales to, 1641
Brazil, relations with, 1643
British arms sales to, 1641, 1650–1651, 1653
British relationship, 1644
British sale of Vampire jets to, 1020, 1650
Chile, relations with, 1254–1255
Civil aviation policy, 1502, 1509, 1640, 1654–1655, 1659–1660
Colombia, relations with, 1643
Communist activities, 1635–1637, 1641, 1644, 1646
Costa Rica, relations with, 1642
Cuba, relations with, 1642
Czechoslovakia, relations with, 1641, 1644
Dominican Republic, relations with, 1382–1384, 1642
Ecuador, relations with, 1410, 1643
Export-Import Bank loan, 1658, 1662–1663
Federal expenditures, 1054
Flota Mercante Gran Colombiana, 1640, 1643
Guatemala, relations with, 1429–1430, 1642–1643
Haiti, relations with, 1461, 1643
Hemisphere defense role, 1016, 1035, 1646, 1657, 1671
Inter-American Economic and Social Council, pledge to, 1063
Iron resources, development of, 1638–1639, 1649, 1656–1657
Joint U.S.-Venezuelan military planning talks and agreement, Mar. 19–23, 1951, 1623–1632, 1637–1638, 1647–1649, 1651, 1653, 1657, 1661, 1666, 1670, 1673
Mexico, relations with, 1642
Military forces, 997
National Petroleum Convention, Caracas, Sept. 8–18, 1951, 1603, 1656
Peru, relations with, 1643
Petroleum policies, 1448, 1561, 1603, 1608, 1625, 1634–1635, 1639, 1647, 1651, 1654–1656, 1665
Political situation, 1640–1641
Security of vital installations, negotiations concerning, 1012–1013, 1016, 1019–1021, 1028, 1628–1629, 1635, 1637–1638, 1661, 1665
Shipping policy, 1639–1640, 1645, 1655
Soviet Union, relations with, 1644
Trade agreement negotiations, 1635, 1639, 1645, 1654–1655, 1658, 1667–1669
U.N. budget, share, 169, 191–192
U.N. Economic Commission for Latin America, policy toward, 1073
U.S. Air Force Mission, 1631, 1646
Venezuela—Continued
U.S. arms and equipment, efforts to expedite purchases, 1623–1627, 1630–1633, 1638, 1641–1642, 1646–1654, 1657–1658, 1660–1662, 1664–1666, 1669
U.S. Army Mission, 1630, 1646
U.S. destroyer escorts, excess, cancellation of transfer, 1006–1007, 1008*n*
U.S. military assistance, question of, 1028, 1033, 1035–1036, 1663–1667, 1669–1672
U.S. Naval Mission, 1631, 1646, 1651, 1654
U.S. policy toward, 1633–1646
U.S. technical assistance, 1533, 1644–1645
Uruguay, relations with, 1643
Vera Izquierdo, Santiago, 1656
Vergara, Roberto, 1260, 1263, 1268, 1270–1272
Vietminh, 433
Vietnam (see also under Membership problem: Candidacies), 222–223
Vigna, Pietri, 1327
Villarroel, Maj. Gualberto, 1168–1169, 1176, 1178
Vincent, John Carter, 213
Vinson, Carl, 1006–1007
Virgin Islands, 1345–1346
Vittone, José Carlos, 1097, 1101
Vorys, John M., 5, 37–38, 108, 173–174, 177, 179–181, 183–188, 190, 192–193, 195–204, 205n, 206, 208, 372*n*, 374*n*, 388, 391–399, 400*n*, 407*n*, 414, 482, 490, 704, 777–778, 852, 858–859
Vyshinsky, A. Y., 100–103, 283–284, 389, 424, 474, 484–485, 489, 494

Wainhouse, David W., 41–42, 78, 86–87, 146, 226, 283, 302–305, 314–315, 320*n*, 329, 330*n*, 334–335, 360–362, 369–371, 374–375, 435, 493*n*
Walker, 1392
Walker Larraín, Horácio, 1268–1276, 1281, 1290*n*
Walker, Col. Samuel P., 1524
Wallner, Woodruff, 152
Walsh, Gen. Robert L., 1024–1025, 1029, 1030*n*, 1231, 1589, 1612, 1663–1666
Walstrom, Joe D., 1096
Walter, Francis E., 48*n*, 50–51
Wan Waithayakon, Prince, 285, 602–603, 681–682, 702
Warren, Fletcher, 934*n*, 935n, 938, 940, 942, 1061n, 1104*n*, 1146, 1152, 1159–1161, 1263, 1268, 1273, 1274*n*, 1283–1284, 1402, 1404–1405, 1568*n*, 1575*n*, 1579–1581, 1604–1605, 1658*n*, 1660*n*, 1664–1665, 1669–1673
Warren, George L., 821, 837
Warren, Lindsay C., 46–47
Watson, Lt. Gen. Thomas E., 1370
Waynick, Capus M., 1524–1525

Webb, James E.:
Alternate U.S. Governor on the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and International Monetary Fund, 9–10
American Republics: U.S. economic and technical assistance for, 1058–1060, 1066, 1068; U.S. military assistance for, 1002*n*, 1006, 1013–1016, 1021–1022, 1027–1028, 1389
Argentina, U.S. relations with, 1098*n*
Bolivia, U.S. relations with, 1161, 1166
Brazil, U.S. relations with, 1232
Canada, U.S. relations with, 875–876, 901*n*, 903–906, 916–920, 924*n*
Chile, U.S. relations with, 1288–1289
Chinese representation question, 234, 236, 240–241, 264–265, 267–268, 270, 273–274
Colombia, U.S. relations with, 1311–1312
Colonial questions, 555–558, 573, 694–695, 708
Cuba, U.S. relations with, 1329, 1361–1363
Foreign Ministers of American States, fourth meeting of consultation, 969*n*
General Assembly: Elections, 82–83, 89, 91–92, 94, 105–106, 117, 120–121, 124–125; session, 16–19, 30–35
Guatemala, U.S. relations with, 1441–1442
Human rights question, 811–813, 846–847
Korean conflict, 1022–1024
Membership problem, 351–353, 367–368, 392, 397, 405–406, 409
Mexico, U.S. relations with, 1484
Peru, U.S. relations with, 1581
Soviet threat to withdraw from the United Nations, 461
U.N. budget, U.S. share, 171–176, 201
U.N. Economic Commission for Latin America, continuation, 1072–1075
Uruguay, U.S. relations with, 1621–1622
Venezuela, U.S. relations with, 1656, 1666*n*
Yugoslav complaint against the Soviet Union, 512–514
Webber, P. A., 696
Wellman, Harvey R., 979, 1008*n*, 1330–1331, 1356, 1358–1361, 1389*n*, 1391*n*
Wellons, Alfred E., 293–294
Wenner, Michael, 83, 312
Wershof, Max H., 888
Wessels, L. H., 723, 727
Western Europe (see also under Country positions; General Assembly: Elections), 23–24, 827
Western Samoa, 292
Wheelock, Sidney, 1234
White, Ivan B., 934–936, 938–939, 945*n*, 947–948, 957, 993–999, 1002, 1053–1054, 1061*n*, 1143, 1191–1195, 1198, 1274, 1322, 1476, 1481, 1589, 1612–1613
Whiteman, Marjorie M., 923
Whittemore, W. D., 1399
Whitten, Maj. Gen. Lyman P., 878–880, 898–899
Wilby, Gen. Francis B., 1402
Wilcox, Francis O., 41, 44
Wiley, John C., 1553*n*, 1554–1558, 1562–1568
Williams, Chester, 42, 44, 851–852
Williams, Edward, 1505
Williams, Phil, 1321*n*, 1324–1325
Williams, Thomas J., 1097–1100
Willis, George H., 1002
Wilson, Charles E., 906–907, 1260, 1267, 1273*n*
Wilson, Edwin C., 1531
Winslow, Richard S., 41, 511
Winters, Robert H., 912, 916
Wise, Murray M., 1528–1541, 1546–1547, 1552–1554, 1564*n*
Wisniewski, Jerome, 1623
Wolf, Joseph J., 886–887
Wolfrom, Jean, 140
Women's International Democratic Federation, 53
Wood, C. Tyler, 1058–1059
Wood, Lt. Col. Glenn Harland, 42, 44
Woodward, Stanley, 871–873, 881*n*, 882–885, 901, 906–907, 914–915, 918, 920
World Federation of United Nations Associations, 868–869
World Health Organization, 4, 10, 163, 165, 170–171, 737, 768
World Meteorological Organization, 10
World Peace Council, 38, 180, 455–456, 460–472, 474, 476
Wrong, Hume, 885, 888*n*, 895–897, 903–905, 907–908, 916, 920
Wythe, George, 966, 1443, 1450

Yalta Conference, 1945, 91
Yao Tsung-wu, 464
Yemen (see also under Country positions), 192, 623
Yeomans, William L., 591–592
Yost, Charles, 110
Younger, Kenneth G., 233–235, 237
Yugoslavia (see also under Country positions):
Chile, reestablishment of diplomatic relations with, 1256
Complaint against the Soviet Union. See Yugoslav complaint under General Assembly.
General Assembly, Vice President, 90
Security Council seat, 29, 78–97, 99–100, 103, 105–106, 112, 115, 125, 334, 507
Soviet policy toward, 475
U.N. budget, share, 169, 191–192
Universal Postal Union Conference at Cairo, 211, 214, 218

Zafrulla Khan, Sir Mohammad, 415
Zaglits, Oscar, 1354–1355
Zapiola, Quesada, 599
Zempel, Arnold, 9
Zilveti Arce, Pedro, 1141–1146
Zinchenko, Constantin E., 457, 459–460
Zoppi, Vittorio, 347–348, 353–355, 363
Zuleta Angel, Eduardo, 930–933, 938, 947–949, 971, 1291, 1602
Zurita Folers, Norberto Rafael, 1536

DATE DUE

GAYLORD			PRINTED IN U.S.A.

80 1011

JX
233
.A1
1951 v.2

JX
233
.A1
1951
v.2

U. S. Dept. of State
Foreign relations of the U.S.