Mr. Henry Chester Tracy Hollywood California

Dear Mr. Tracyy:--

It is, as you would know, very important to me to have such a same and definite response to my story. If the story reached even one that would be enough, but especially one to whom it replies rather than reveals. I rather think that nothing can reveal this. "We who know that which we cannot tell", Will Levington Comfort puts it.

letter postmarked Jan, 9, 1922 From Zona Gale to Mr. Henry Chester Tracy

Do you know Mr. Comfort? He is,or was recently, speaking every week --sometimes at the Hollywood Library. If you do know,you will know that it is this heightened level of perception of which he is treating in his Letters, sent out once or twice a month to those who tell those who tall those... and now published in two volumes. You ought to know each other. In case you do not, he is at 4993 Pasadena avanue,Los Angeles --where I hunted him out when I was out there two years ago.

I wonder how far you are familiar with the literature of it all. Not that the literature is the thing, or necessary, but it gives companionship. I think that the fundamental book about the modern growth is in Dr. Bucke's Cosmic Consciousness, now unhappily out of print, though most libraries have it; and you might be able to get it in that fascinating library in the Black Block; or in the East and West bookshop, in the basement of the Arlington at Santa Barbara. Particularly if the bookman there takes you to the inner room where are the books which he will not sell, but will lend if he sees that you know and care. .. And the two Evelyn Underhill books -- "The Mystic Way" and "Mysticism", which she treats intellectually only, but with a mass of wonderful material. None of these, or Mr. Comfort, is associated with any group or "cult" . .... The most wonderful book of all, next to the Bucke which it quotes from largely, is Tertium Organum , by the Russian Quspensky , and translated by another Russian ,Bessaraboff, a mechanician in Rochester,New York. With him I have talked, and he read us a letter from Ouspensky, discussing the possibility of in some-way associating loosely those who understand this. But after all, since the letter, or an institutionalization so often kills, the most potent, and certainly the most fascinating, is this present moder of mere recognition. Only it is a lonely business until this comes. And yet there is both profit and preparation in that aloofness.

The truth is briefly, is it not, that the race is about to break through to a new level of perception, some extansion of faculty, some heightened plane of seeing, of being. Even since Bucke wrote, the proportion of these cosmically conscious has enormously increased. And most wonderful of all are the children. As a Pasadena friend says: The New Race is here.

The great question is precisely the question which you raise: What to do about it. I feal with you that to those who have it, it is the matter of supremest importance. And it certainly is exoterically at least, at war with the social consciousness. But I think the time comes when, in its blinding possession of one, one's social, civic, direct-action service --once so compelling --- becomes to one a definite temptation. One must go through it to the last impulse, but presently to fall into the temptation of definite fetching-and-carrying is to act almost with a conviction of sin, of disloyalty to this subtler mood. For that mood and its expression are not alone service, racial service; but they are creative, they set in motion currents which bear ships which one never dreamed. A better service than cleaning the deck of some social ship providing one has done a deal of deck cleaning first. when that time comes one recognizes it, knows that he is at last free to serve on this inner plane, and finds at last the highest social service of his utmost dream. ... If you feel this--and by every sign that I know you do authentically know it, the call will come to you with such urgency that your doubt will answer itself; and you will know . ... The great task of the novel, of all art is to bring into sight these overhanging levels of life. To keep saying that they are not mysticism, they are streets and houses and people and animals in their true aspect. The word mysticism is used by Evelyn Underhill and the others much as -the word occultism was used when all the physical sciences which we know now were called occult and doubted. The great business for every one who understands and who has any artistic expression is just to find out that technique which is to be his own peculiar method of "getting it across." The difficulties are simply tremendous. But -- the thing itself is creative. If one makes oneself a channel ,I believe that the thing will be there , instant to be interpreted and will bring its own interpretation. Always providing one works meanwhile at one's art, honestly; it is literally Work and pray.

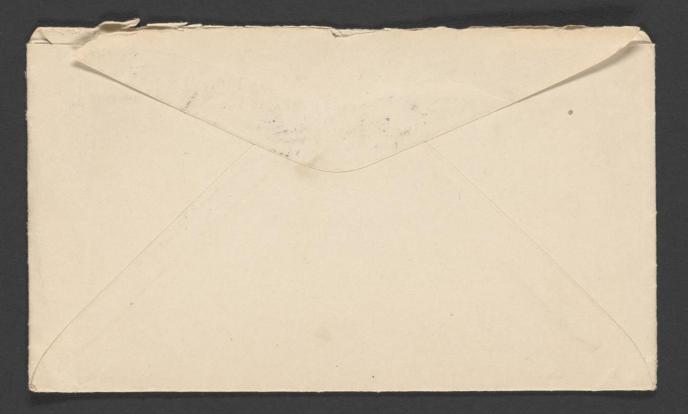

Thus in practice I believe that it is compatible with any circumstances, providing those circumstances are consciously filled ,flooded with this other power in the handling of them. I believe that Simon would never lose it, for long, in his solution; never, at least, permanently. It is fine to know that you mean to put this into literary work. I believe that you will do so and that you will work out a technique for its interpretation. Your letter and your spirit seem to promise that.

Faithfully yours,

Dear Mr. Tracey :---

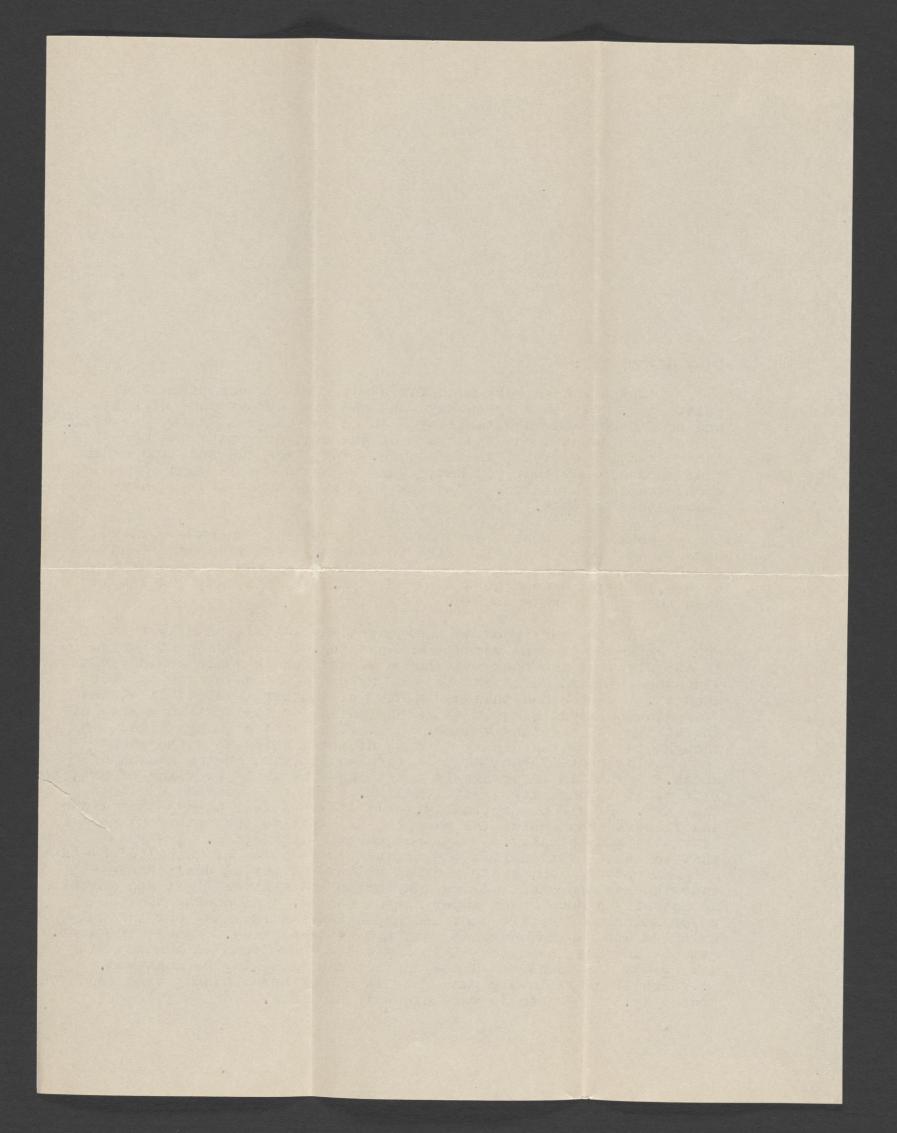

Postscripted Van, 28, 1922

Thank you so very much for sending me the word from the Quiet Star. It is very lovely--and has that sure touch of poise and confidence and inevitability which is the great thing needful. There is no doubt about the charm of the content, but I was more interested, if possible, in the style. For, given the substance which I divined already that you had, I was eager to see if your orchestration was there. I think that it is there-and you have placed this at 4918!

would you care to send me the libretto of Ramona--would you care to do that? T should like to see it. And if your friend of the fascinating Cambridge address would mail me the sketches which he has, I should have a good deal of data. If, this is, you should wish to suggest this to him.

You are very good to the secret Way --it is chiefly that I would rather have done verse than anything. The fragment quoted in the first of the book is from a wondeful book which would yield you much--Richard Jeffries' Story of My Heart--in case you do not know it. He too had this certainty of another level of life, and I imagine believed himself all alone in it for the sixteen years of the writing of the tiny volume. ....You said a thing filled, I thought, with extraordinary wisdom, of not wishing to write about that world, but of "actually lifting to it, through the medium of words." That is so precisely the thing--the whole province of art, to lift to it through its special medium. And the province of other than art. Of all beauty, really, isn't it? I feel always that flame and flowers and music, for example, all lift to the other plane literally and actually. Fragrance, certain lights, too. I suppose that to be the rationalization of the ceremonies of atholicism--the original perception, probably usually lost--or not, I don't know--that incense and candle-flame and organ and stained light and intoning do actually induce that super consciousness. Of course the reformation called this cant and hypnotism -- and we have our terrible shingled and gabled churches with a lecture-service. Something went. yet one doesn't need to get it any other where than in contact with living--if that rich immediate contact can momently be achieved. ... There are some lovely passages in a book here which I will send you presently. Bergson is very close to all this.

Postscripted. Jan 28, 1922

To-morrow, there will leave Bochester, New york, for Hollywood, where her little adopted boy is in school at Krotona, a very near friend of mine to whom all this is known. Will you go to see her--play or no play? She will not be there for a great while--a month or more I think, I mean she will not remain there longer than that. But I think you should not miss each other. She is Jewish, with all that immemorial sadness and detachment of her race, but with strong spiritual consciousness--and I think that she will have with her certain books. Isn't it delightful--she Jewish, with the little boy at a theosophical school, and no cult at all claiming her. She is Miss Laura Greshemer and she will be at 2599 Men. Men. I am enclosing you a word to her--rather an absurd formality under the circumstances which I should not sand if T felt that you would see her without it. She is a friend of W. L. C's.

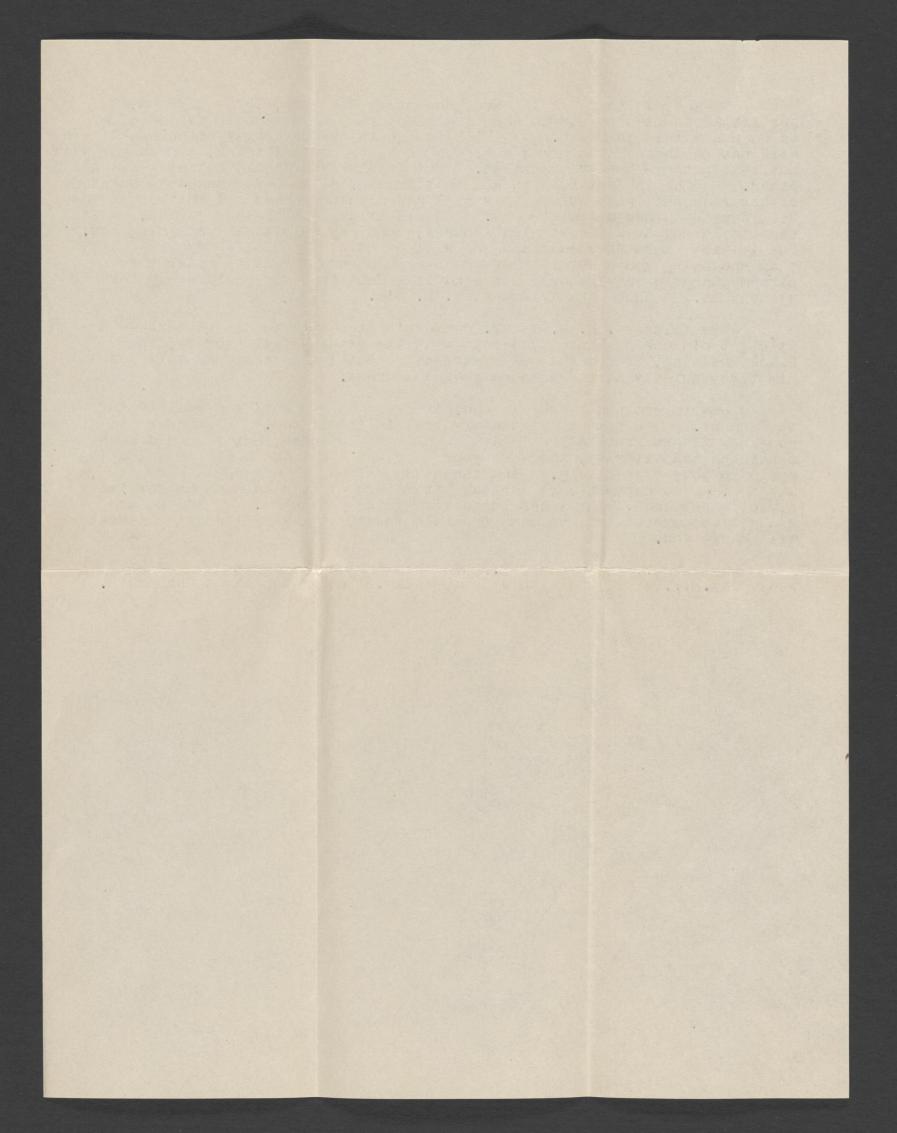

His talks--W. L. C. is Mr. Comfort's signature to the Letters--- are at eight o'clock on Thursday evenings at the Metaphysical Library, the Black Building, Fourth and Hill streets. But I hope that you will see him first quietly at the Pasadena avenue address.

How impertinent workn is -- how it may shut you out from reality for the moment. But it is intensely real in itself too. I wonder if you know Krtøns krotona? I have been there but once, but I should have mentioned that library, there at your door, with all the books of which I spoke to you, very likely. And the Metaphysical Library would have the m all too. You may not care for the literature of this as much as for its direct experience..your inner urge will guide you there. If you are ready, like garethustra, to come from aloofness, it may be that the literature will serve you.

Meanwhile..Miss Greshemer. She should reach there this coming Wednesday. ... Every good wish with the play..that it too may touch truth.

Dear Mr. Knopf :---

Postscripted Jul 25, 1922

By chance I have been shown some sketches, fragments of impression and mood, which their author has been writing and laying away--his recreation from days of teaching biology in a Los Angeles high school. These sketches seem to be a lovely catching and crystallizing of high moments, moments so delicate that one such can make a day worth while to some of us.

But I thought: These are not for American readers. I am going to ask him to let me send them to some English reviews, or to an English publisher. And then a second thought made this seem rather absurd and last century!

So will you look at them? In fact they go to you with this. Will you remember as you read them that these are only a few of many which I have selected--there are some Asiatic sketches which are not included. The author was born in Asia Minor but he is American. I feel as if some care and a better selection might make a little volume which would have ho wide audience--but would be a thing which an American hasn't written--or published--before now.

And then I have great faith in the sketch form, especially in this coming day of lovely little impalpable things, too frail for fiction or for the essay either.

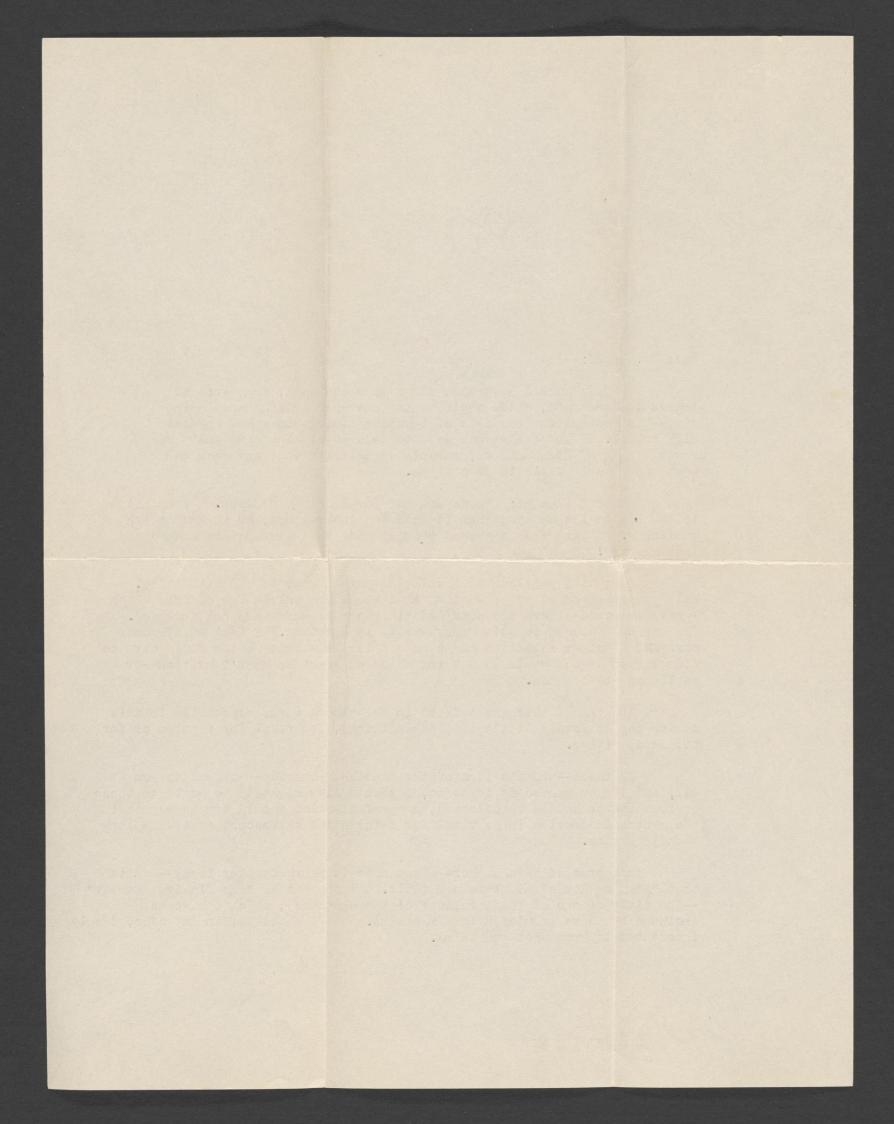

If these--and the idea of the sketch-in-America---appeal to you at all, and if you wanted me to do so, I should like mightily to write to these or to whatever should be selected, a preface which should try to say that the sketch in America is as vital for netting the evanescent as it has long been in France.

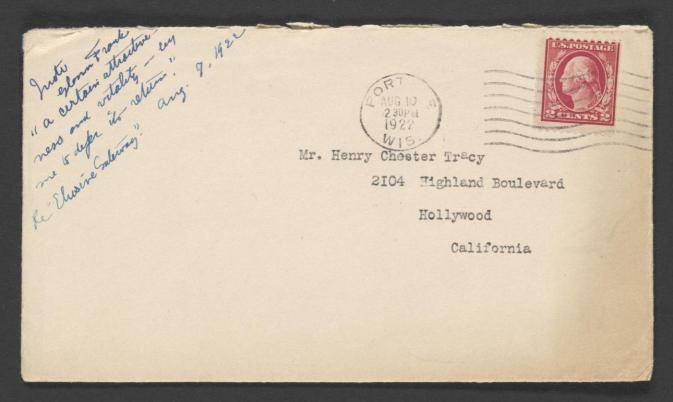

Much pressed this author--whose name is Henry Chester Tracy--admits that "Morning Roads" might make a title. I thought of "The Elusive Gateway" --the title of one of the loveliest of the sketches, which I have not included but have submitted to a magazine. I shall be, in any case, deeply interested to know what you think.

Faithfully yours,

(Zona Sale)

My dear Zona Gale:

I am criminally late in answering your letter of July twenty-first; my only plea for leniency is that I have been trying to do three jobs at once this summer.

The thing that interests me most just now is a book on "The Approaching Renaissance" which I am trying to write. Everytime I undertake to work out a chapter I find myself wishing you were here to criticize it. I do hope you will get to New York before long.

I am looking forward with great eagerness to seeing your novel. I am starting Johan Bojer's "The Last of the Vikings" in my November issue. It will run six months at least. This will give you some idea of the time I could publish your novel if we can agree about it.

The paper by the biologist,"The Elusive Gateway" is one of those things that make decision very difficult. I have read it several times, and each time put it aside because I did not quite see its place in The Century Magazine, and yet a certain attractiveness and vitality have each time led me to defer its return. I am going to read it again, and then either print it or send it back to you.

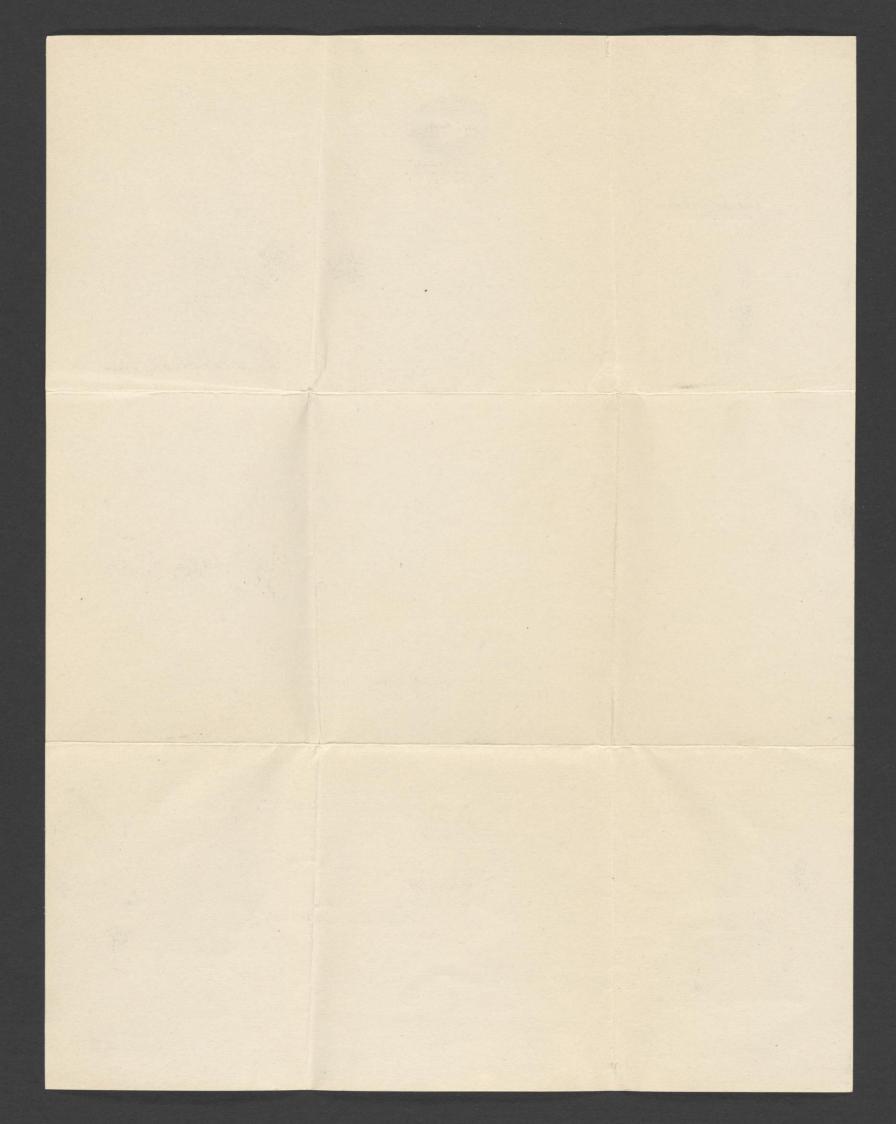

If you get to New York before September fifteenth, I hope you will spend a week-end with us at a very beautiful country place we have taken for the summer near Stamford.

With all good wishes, I am

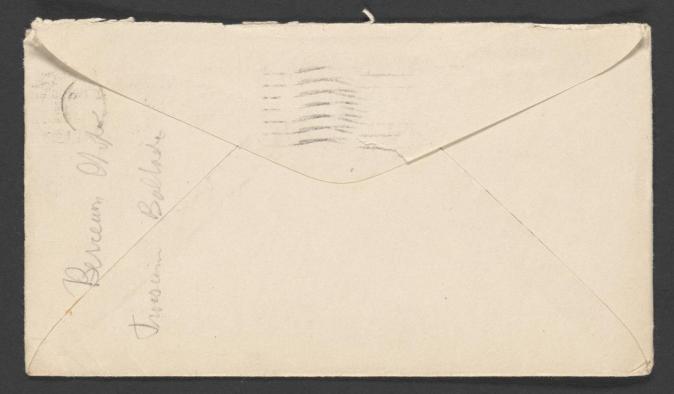

Very sincerely yours

Why I Shall Vote for Senator Robert M. La Follette

By ZONA GALE

HOPE for Senator La Follette's return to the United States Senate because I believe that he is one of the few great figures in the nation's politics today.

That he has the highest social and prophetic vision and voice which have ever served Wisconsin.

That he is a man dedicated to human welfare.

That he has the insight and experience to meet the issues of human welfare in politics and that his years at Washington are priceless to us in this hour of the nation's history. "I want Senator La Follette to be returned to the Senate because he stands for the common welfare and can neither be bought nor hypnotized."

It was a Portage man who said that, and to one who has watched the Senator's progress in Congress the words repeatedly return. "Neither bought nor hypnotized." It is a brilliant record for any statesman in these days.

Consider that record:

I. His record against militarism, his tremendous conviction against the militarism of the United States.

The Senator sets at the head of his published speech the following table, with which every woman should be familiar before she goes to the primaries:

Distribution of Government Appropriations for 1920.

Research, public health,

recreation\$ 57,093,661 Public works 168,203,557	$\frac{1.01\%}{2.97\%}$
Legislative, executive, judicial	3.19%
Future	92.83%
Total$5,680,005,706	100 %

The figures speak for themselves. If a man is against a program like that he is neither bought nor hypnotized. He is a sane man, a voice in a wilderness. And if we can believe in the sanity of the American people, then we believe the Senator when he said, in a speech against a naval appropriation of $500,000,000 for 1922:

"I say that when you get the truth of all this before the American people, when the enlightened womanhood of America understands the barbarous, appalling character of any future war, they will sweep from power and from place representatives who dare to oppose prompt and effective disarmament."

It is significant of a life-long attitude of Senator La Follette's, of his respect for the influence of women in politics, that he asked to have printed in the Congressional Record with his address, extracts from appeals of Carrie Chapman Catt and M. Carey Thomas, begging women to consecrate themselves to drive war out of the world.

Wisconsin women have one of the greatest opportunities of any women in the nation to share in this consecration by sending back to Washington a man not only passionately opposed to war, but one long practiced in meeting the determined supporters of the military program.

II. On the Soldiers' Bonus Bill.

Is there a soldier's wife or mother who does not know how Senator La Follette stands on the Soldiers' Bonus bill? "I say that our first obligation is to pay just compensation to the soldiers. I say that it should be paid out of the war profits and not out of the general taxes. This is where our first obligation rests."

On every question of public policy he stands where he has always stood: Uncompromisingly for the common people whom Lincoln said God must have loved because he made so many of them.

I believe in his power to serve the people:

Because the battles which he fought almost alone in the nineties, with the Wisconsin press, political machinery and money opposing him, have now been fought in state after state, and the results written into their laws as they are written into our laws. The story can never be told often enough—how the abolishing of a corrupt convention system, and of a system whereby farmers and manufacturers paid double the taxes paid by the railroads; and of the secret rebate system were driven out of Wisconsin by Senator La Follette's initiative and courage and this legislation has since then spread over the country.

Because of the thirteen planks—largely on social measures—proposed by him at the republican national convention of 1912, eleven of which, in spite of the spectacular opposition which he then encountered, have now become the law of the land.

Those who oppose the La Follette program are fond of dismissing the great issues by the use of one single adjective: Wet.

I, for one, have stood for prohibition always. I stand for it now and rejoice that it is a law. But it is a law. And the fact that Senator La Follette voted "no" on the Volstead act cannot be used to blind me to the tremendous issues which greed would like to cover. For the greatest menace to the people today is not that a constitutional amendment shall, without precedent, be repealed. The greatest menace is one which Senator La Follette has always opposed with all his force and that is special privilege.

This is the first time that the women of Wisconsin have had opportunity to vote for the man who for twenty years has advocated suffrage for women. Twenty years ago Governor and Mrs. La Follette opened the Executive Residence to a suffrage convention in session in Madison and this gave equal suffrage the countenance it then so sadly lacked. Today I believe that the majority of the women of the state are with the Senator, not because he was with them then, but because he and they alike are dedicated and consecrated to the common welfare.

I wish so much that you would take this in to Mr. Sedgwick, while you are there. The length of time between now and time for publication might or might not bother him, but this would serve as another angle of introduction. Take it in, I would say, on your own hook with no word of my suggestion. You know it is undoubtedly true that editors love to make discoveries better than to accede in a"recommendation". It is Chicago's attitude to a play which is produced there first--open arms and pleased understanding. But let it come there with the ring of the applause of New York all over it, and the critics are suspicious, on the defensive, at best grudgingly admitting the truth. ( "So this, then, is Lightinin's, said they after the three-year New York run, when it opened at the Blackstone in Chicago. Yet it ran there three years and three months -- was not to have closed until December 9, had not Frank Bacon died.) Well: This is borne in upon me as a great psychological truth which I think Mr. Sedgwick might illustrate. Anyway, will you do this. .. For gouvenir of October is unbearably lovely ---I have just read it through again this morning and felt the air in the room melt to its implications and its cadences. It belongs to the Great Family as surely as Hudson or Fabre. You have no right not to seek its place for it, and for all the rest, and to seek it to the end.

When I opened Mrs. de gelincourt's envelope containing this Mss, and her letter, and your letter to Mr. Frank, I did not recognize its source and chanced to begin first on "My dear/Frank"--which meant nothing to me, and connotated some Frank somebody, whose letter for some reason was being enclosed to me. As I went on, it got to me what it was, and when I had read her note, and perceived that you had thought of the Mss. and Mr. Frank's note, perhaps, as going straight to him; or, # to him through me -- I did what I had to do, with assurance purloined that letter to Mr. Frank and kept it here. You may sue me. But that was no letter to send to an editor -- forgite me. To make light of your accomplishment and his public and say it was no use, in one and the same breath, carrying an undertone -- oh, but forgive me again -- of superiority, as unconscious as the song of a thrush, as true as the blue, but no way to greet an editor. Did you say that you forgive me? The letter is still here--you shall have it back. Long experience convinces methat no letter at all is better with a Mss. if one sends it oneself -- merely name and address, an implied Take-it-or-leave-it whose impersonality is a good background. How do you like me when I lecture? Not at all? You must forgive me really because the beauty and being of the manuscript ase so tender and tremendous both that I would risk more, to give it its best chance. And you see that Mr. Van Doren sees hhese. Of course you were also, in that letter, acknowledging Mr. Franks steamer letter to That meant nothing to me beside my anxiety to have the October sailfree you. free on its own wings. As it will --- you'll see.

I am eager to know how you and Mr. Follett got on -- he would so entirely SEE your work and you. And I really think would be of enormous service. Did I tell you that I asked him to read Faint Perfume professionally, and that he gave me the most valuable suggestions as to a dozen details which had quite escaped me, which I didn®t, in fact, know. He is a great critic. Of fiction, of course, primarily. But you cannot be a critic of that without universal feeling.

Don't you want to go to see my dear Josephine Preston Peabody ,while you are in Canbridge? Mrs. Solon Marks? I am enclosing a letter to her-- you know The Piper? And her poems? But she is better than all. And her children, when I saw them some years ago, were exquisite.

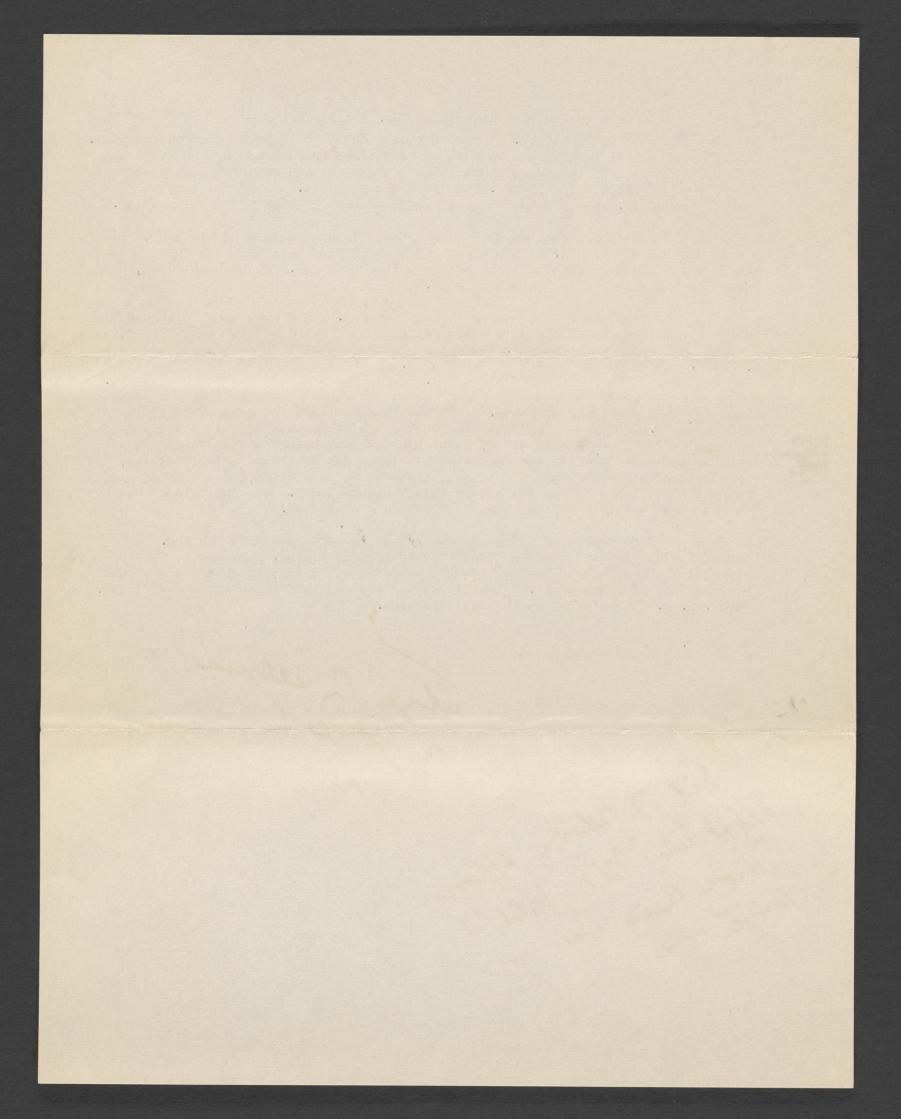

No--I had no news other than I gave you. The Small one did go to to the Atlantic first--I couldn't resist that-- which wasn't quite right for it, as I ought to have known, though Mr. Sedgwick's letter, which I cannot find, was very charming. He now has The Elusive Gateway. And the Small One is at the Ladies Home Journal, where you first destined it. These are mere matters of routine. I can no more conceive your feeling "down" about them than about the fruit or bread which you send away on your plate. It all takes infinite patience, but it is so well worth it. And you haven't to work up through callowness and immaturity--you have the finished product to offer, your only task now being somehow to adjust the mechanism, so that it will be a receiving station, which it already completely is, but a delivering station along a channel which we can all enter, (or enough of all) to ensure the exquisite wares you have, within, their delivery. And this course has for you , hasn't it, an ethical import? You have no choice!

There are other things to say but it is cold here this morning. I hope that you will find your Cambridge corner to your liking. You know, do you not, that there some unbelievably lovely postcards of Boston, in case you are looking for Christmas greeting cards. I don't know where you get them--like the enclosed. But Mr. E. A. Filene's secretary could tell you.

Dear Miss Gale :-

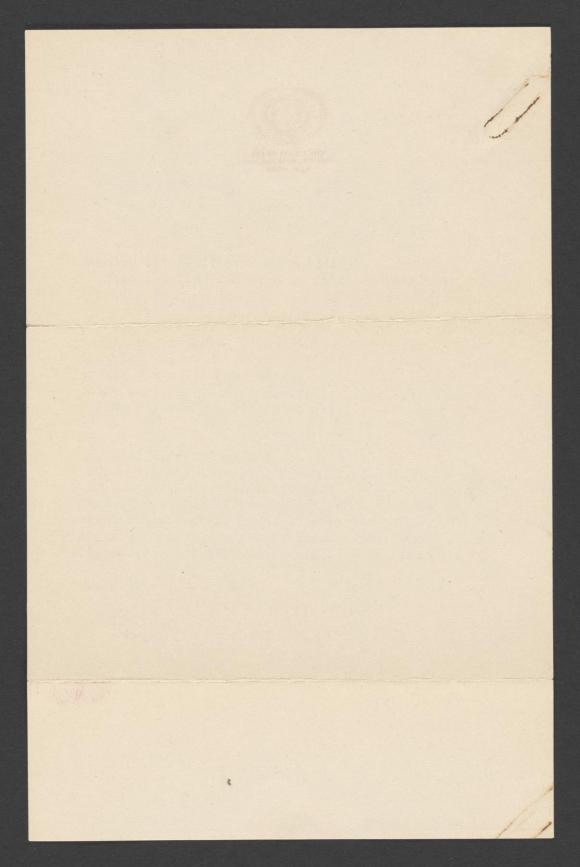

Although we have liked Mr. Tracy's "Souvenir of October" we have not felt quite so much impressed with it as to make us feel disposed to accept it for publication so far in advance as next October. Nor, in the circumstances, should we feel disposed to publish it at any other time of the year. Possibly Mr. Tracy would prefer to look elsewhere for an editor who will agree now to accept it; and possibly, if he does not find such a person, he will let us see it again early next summer.

I have not had a chance to tell you how much pleased I am with "Faint Perfume." The other night I read the first installment aloud to three or four exceedingly intelligent friends and rather to my surprise we found ourselves not only delighted but all bursting out into laughter again and again. The Century was very lucky to get it.

Very sincerely yours,

I am writing to you on a typewriter because I have hurt my hand a little and the machine is more legible. I am of course following you on that interminable journey to which your heavy heart must be adding so many miles. I cannot tell you how sorry I am . The suddeness hardly makes the event any other--its weight lies beyond the manner of its occurrence. And yet it must be a pathless way to go . "Early or late, it always comes too soon." How does one meet it at all who has not your resources and your inner calm and essential poise? To meet it as you do with values placed , however, cannot heal the soreness of the heart . I wish that your friends could help to do that. It is a regret to me that I might not have seen you, and I should so have loved to hear all the news with which you must be filled. Now I shall not hear it until it has been in a measure forgotten by you, dimmed away by other things. yes, it is difficult to write of such things as your visit to Far End -- how can that be written, or she be written? But they can be told--perhaps because their very area comes, a little, with the one telling. That is an instance of your memorable comment on not telling about a thing, but lifting one to its very plane. Probably that is why the old ballad makers and singers, the Homers of the world, are nearer the hearts of the people than anybody who must be strained through print. And yet print is not to be despised. .. Well, tell me what you can, when you can. I was not of course in Washington, or east at all, or I should have tried to catch you up there somewhere. I have been completely here, and here I expect to remain for some time. About California this Winter I do not know--but then we have not known so many winters, and have gone. Ten times in all, in a few more years than ten, leaves a most expectable chance for any year at all. I haven't much mathematics but this seems to me to hold water and even reason. Mr. Miller writes to us to come soom -- " so arrive on the scene early", quoth he. I don't know at all. It would be very nice to have you come over by interurban, and you and Miriam come by the interurban to meet the organ and me. "I hope so". T wonder if it isn't true that any word whatever of disapprobation would better not be spoken. Of course I wish, just now, that my laughing comment on your letter to Mr. Frank, which is at this moment on its way to you from Fresh pond Parkway, to which it was addressed I think last Monday--had not been written. I thought as I mailed it," Surely he will SEE me laughing." But you couldn't do that, after all--another case of the superiority of the ballad method. However, you would not, that is certain, give it undue weight. I am always thinking that I will never express a breath of disapproval of anything again, and then I go and do. But there is in it for some, I am sure of it, the connotation of a poison. .. The telegram from Mr . canby-- Dr. Canby I believe he is, and he does not object to it as you do--was splendid. When you are ready to send the Mss. they should know that Mr. Marsh had read and liked it. But he, too, wanted the thread, the something. "It ought to be a spiritual autobiography", he said," but it must then have more continuity ... "or did he say more event? It must have been, you know, one of the last manuscripts which he ever read, here on the lower porch that day. It was a month from that same afternoon that he was killed. But it augurs well to have him take the trouble to telegraph. I hope that you saw him; and Mr/ Frank too. You will have some free time now, will you not, before you need go back to the school; in a place where you will be warm and cared for. How glorious must that California sun seem to you, BE to you, after English November and Boston December. That is a bit of what we flee t o every winter that we flee--and is one of the delights of the going. In fact, one of the reasons for going to California is to get off the train. The mss. of The Lifted Land and Sirdis too are with Mr. Follett, who tried to get you, I gather, on the very day that you went through New Haven. Shall it be sent to you now? I will leave it where it is until I hear.

This must go if it is to catch the morning post. It carries with it, you know, everything of sympathy.

These cards I came on in a drug store here the other day--I had never seen them before. Will you tell Miriam that this is the way that we look in summer?

What a lovely new vein to have struck--for it is new, with all the quiet and charm of the old. Events uncelebrated! What a perfect mood. There is something overwhelming in the fashion in which you have been able to impart the mood and the holy stillness about the man, to picture him even. But not less notable is his audience. "If I forget, I forget." How he must ,wherever he is, love an audience like that. ...There is to me in these a flavor of Gissing--do you know him? Taking the time to celebrate the uncelebrated. Un're,

I am enclosing the Century letter. It voices the thing I know-- that deep within the undoubted power to make decisions difficult, The Elusive Gateway has another power and a vitality which cling like a vine. And I think that these new things have something of the same quality, expressed in another way. The title is lovely. The ideax of First Evening, Second evening is ,to me, just right. There is something of Hearn in them, but far more delicate. "Exottcs and Estrospectives" you recall was one of his titles.

Night before last two young girls and I took a basket to a point I love a little way from here, where we meet the river face to face. At this time the sun is setting just above the water from that point. The sunset was overwhelming. We watched it in silence, saw it melt and arrive in form after form, for a half hour. And when at last we were opening the basket, one of the girls--the one of whom I have sometimes told you, said: " perhaps we have watched --is there such a word as era?-perhaps we have watched a whole era, or eras, (aeons, cycles, I said) to some vast multitude of beings living in that place. They have been born, lived, died for generations --while we have watched."

Thès must be closed if it is to go to-day. But I must tell you that the radiance between is there, quite clear and bright. Palpable. Impalpable. Glad of the knowledge a its ways and yours.

How amazing that all this time has gone and I have not yet told you my thanks for the lovely fragment of life which you sent. It is so lovely, so compact of loveliness and truth. All that you say of it and of that which it may grow into give on to know its inevitability. I am mindful of your request for its return and shall obey it. .. I am drawn to Hill of Dreams, and was anyway; had had it in my mind, where it had been tugging from time to time for some days. It is interfesting, how one's food finds one--sometimes making its approach from various directions, as now. No, I have not yet seen it, but a Madison friend is sending her copy for me to read. Not however until our return--mother and I are leaving to-morrow for Syracuse, where I have to be at the University on Monday evening to say something about the Novel, as if I knew. Then we shall play about Rochester for a few days. Which reminds me of your word about a recess, about Ashville. Isn't it strange, with that strangeness to which one grows accustomed, that I had within a few days observed to somebody: "Ashville is a place which has always rather beckoned me." But the rest, the part about being tired, always fills me with acute amazement. Never, never, you know, save when I clear out desks and bureau drawers. Never otherwise. I feel as if I were new, at other times. My own work never tired me. And duty-bound -- no. There is nothing in the world, save inclination, which keeps me here. I stay here because I would rather be here than anywhere else in the world, while I am at work. There is perfect peace, there is stillness, nobody invites me in the evening here because I'm not married, so I sleep from ten o'clock nightly and have fresh to-morrows. I do not play bridge, so I have my Afternoons. My share in the machinery of the house is negligible so that I have my mornings. (The two Madison offices take really very little time and afford much interest.) In addition to Lucile on our right, there is a little new baby on our left. The river opened last week. The martins are back. There is the little sedan for earthly wings. And the distance straight up is interminable for such other wings as offer. I have had one of the finest winters of my life, and I look forward to an uninterrupted summer right. here. A four-part serial first. Then some work on Faint Perfume for the stage. And always the lawn to the river is green (YOU cannot say that of Your lawn and Your river) And But it was extremely nice of you to think of that. .. I suppose that I am content. my silence, in addition to the impalpable paralysis which occasionally seizes me, has been due to the completing of a three-part serial whose departure mother and I are celebrating in our little spree, in addition to the university engagement. And then this week, I took two engagements at Rockford, five hours away, at the college there and a unique woman's club, and went via Chicago, and saw the Moscow players. I wish that you might have seen them. Madame Chekova was in the cast that night -- The Three Sisters. A tremendous thing, so free and strong that the language barrier was nothing, after the first cold shock. Really, the theme is all that one needs, excepting for humor. The humor being a finer quicker vibration deals in other than ordinary registerings. Yet sometimes that came through. The marvel of that use of detail, infinite detail to express the dreariness and boredome there in the provinces, the longing to get to Moscow--the mere use of a candle and a lamp to give to the high bare room the sense of monotony and desolation. It was overwhelming. But all the men in uniforms, dedicated to the business of killing. And all the women untaught to follow any self-expression channel. So masy, so easy to heal all that ailed and defeated them. First, the social measures of normality and labor, creatively done. Then the light other value, light, fine, high, swift, let into life as I tried to let it in in Simon-surely these would have given them some measure of admittance to their own beings and to hhe nature of being.

Your writing on a Mission Inn envelope was a happy anomaly. I quite felt as if I had sat for a morning on that roof-top. What wonder it is, to be able to see it with some eye of reality, actually see it, maxthat roof-top, and the mountains "in a key of snow floating above mist." (Take that back unto yourself and do not let it die.) What miracle it is to be able to reconstruct, indeed the point is unconsciously to reconstruct, the detail of the fringes. To know that the little fountain, the flower boxes, the tower, the glass doors of the rooms, the stone out-looks, the tops of trees are about one, to have them silently in place when one happens to turn ones eyes that way, and have them remain there when one looks away. How is it? What happens? And how slight a step to be able to transcend that miracle and project oneself as well as one, s sight. They will do that Perhaps not even suspend. Why Suspend , and materialize oneself by radio. sometime. not the multiple the me's whom I know? What a world with the millions multiplying me's. .....Have you caught the wonder of the Capek Theatre Guild play now in Not yet! New York--with its manufactured men, its ribots, to do the heavy work of the world, to be manufactured for industry and for war; and then their revolt--the revolt of the ribots; the loss of the formulatfor making them; the two ribots who are besought to give themselves alive for dissection in the hope of disogvering how they have been put together; and each of the two, the man and the woman, bring willing, but frantic with unwillingness that the other should be sacrificed. Which solves all through love. "No, Adam. Go, Eve." A wonderful allegory of exactly what we are doing to the race. If only the race can rise ... I have a wonderful book called The Life of the Spirit abd the Life of to love! To-day, by Evelyn Underhill. Have I told you of it. But it is new. And that she is the only woman who has ever been invited to lecture at Oxford on religion -- I don't know why one mentions that but one does. It is a book of great treasure. .. To return to giverside: If I had known that you were to be there I should have begged you to go to see the girl who to whom I took the projections which you made of the Monad -- the invalid girl, who has been all life's and now must lie quiet. Irene Hunter -- whose father was the presbyterian minister for years at Riverside and who died two years ago. She is so eager for touch with life--and gets it somewhat through some New York brothers. And all this world of essential reality, which said something to you in Simon, is opening to her. She has a remarkable little mother, whom I took to be the eternal type of the beautiful and mormal minister, s wife, the beautiful and normal wife of a minister that means, until I saw on the walls of their home some striking great oils, of a quality of wonder and of praise, and upon my inquiry, found that she herself had done them in a girlhood life of paris art study. She gave it all up to marry her minister, according to the idiotic character of But I hope that you will go there when you are there again -society as we have known it. Mrs. William Hunter, Rubidoux Drive. They would know--they would remember the monad, and I have mentioned you to her again, more than once; once in connection with Mrs. de selincourt. I send on all letters and such, from those whose names she knows, which I think would interest her, and I sent her Mrs. de Selincourt's note. Perhaps you will go again? I will send you a letter to thes. Hunter.

The notes on dynamic thought are of course as good as written, read, revolted against and assimilated. You will do it, you may already have done it. I could not resist sending on the notes to Mr. Thayer and telling him that it is coming. Just now I am stunned by the thought that you may not have intended it to go there. Well, it needn't if you want it to go somewhere else. Everything is possible. Write another and send that to him. A sea, being which changes in one's hand to another facet of truth.

I am almost tempted to say, How fine about Keith. The schools are no place for a child. Or an adult either. I see you back at your desk with that convistion. Only--only, I have enough of a Purital complex to feel that there has to be practice in life. Just as one has to learn typewriter or --piano. So school and family and community give that practice at the life job. It is a job as well as a dream--like music again, or like writing. It sounds like a kindergarten principle and yet our highest wisdom is in that too. "What matter to me whether I am hot or cold....." said the Emperor. So keith is putting off her practice, putting off the acquiring of the mechanism and will have it in something else. Yes, I know! That's no reason for the typewriter to rattle and the piano to be tin. It is true that we ought to have perfect machines, perfect instruments, perfect schools. So let's hurry and pass on the word and DYNAMIC THOUGHT is going to help.

I like An Island in Time infinitely better as a title. Oh much better. And the Lifted Land will not be lost, I hope. You will certainly use it for something else?

A copy of The American Review goes to you. I hope that you will like it--I do, on the whole. And I look to see The Educable Being appearing there shortly.

"All one's universe is one's relation to it." When one,s relation to it is paralyzed, the thought of obliteration is NOT logigal. On the contrary it is the absurd deduction in perfect example. The thought of immediate re-adjustment is the logical thing. When the writing doesn't go right, is the logical thing to obliterate the type-writer? Would that correct the spirit in the paper? Instead-- one writes "in a key of snow, floating aboye mist." Of intercepting beauty and of breathing the blue. And of harvesting the graciousness.

Dear miss Gale:

I think mr. Brown has already set up Dr. Tracy's article. I'r was not difficult to read & I sent it to him early. I have asked him to send you the proof. - ) think the suggestions for the article on dynamic thinking most promining also 2) should like to have Dr. Tracy develop the fragments into the article .) ing the paper for this purpose.

What a nice reaction to Dynamic Thought--I am enclosing Mr. Thayer's word on the subject--so please do it soon. And here is the table of contents for March, as you see. March-April, that is--it will have six numbers a year. Do send some suggestions for articles and reviews. Haven't you some people out there who could so something for this axt magazine? He has just asked for articles or reviews on "movements"--- he is to have one soon on the Open Forum movement. These are just little things in the department Books and Movements.

I am submitting to him The Elusive Gateway --- do you mind?

This is only a line to send you this-because I am about to go for a walk with a little girl who is most impatient and has just called up to know whether I am not coming. So this is all for now..... both all and now being continuous.

I am enclosing a copy of my letter to Mr. Brownell. Now that Mr. Murry has, or will soon have, Dust of Reflection, I should think that these might wait Mr. Brownell's word, though of course there is nothing to prevent submitting them in England and here simultaneously. But waiting the fortnight or so will save making new copy, or else letting both be out of your hands, and mine.

To-day if possible I will write subscribing for the Adelphi, and mentioning my pleasure in the connection, the correspondence which he has already made.

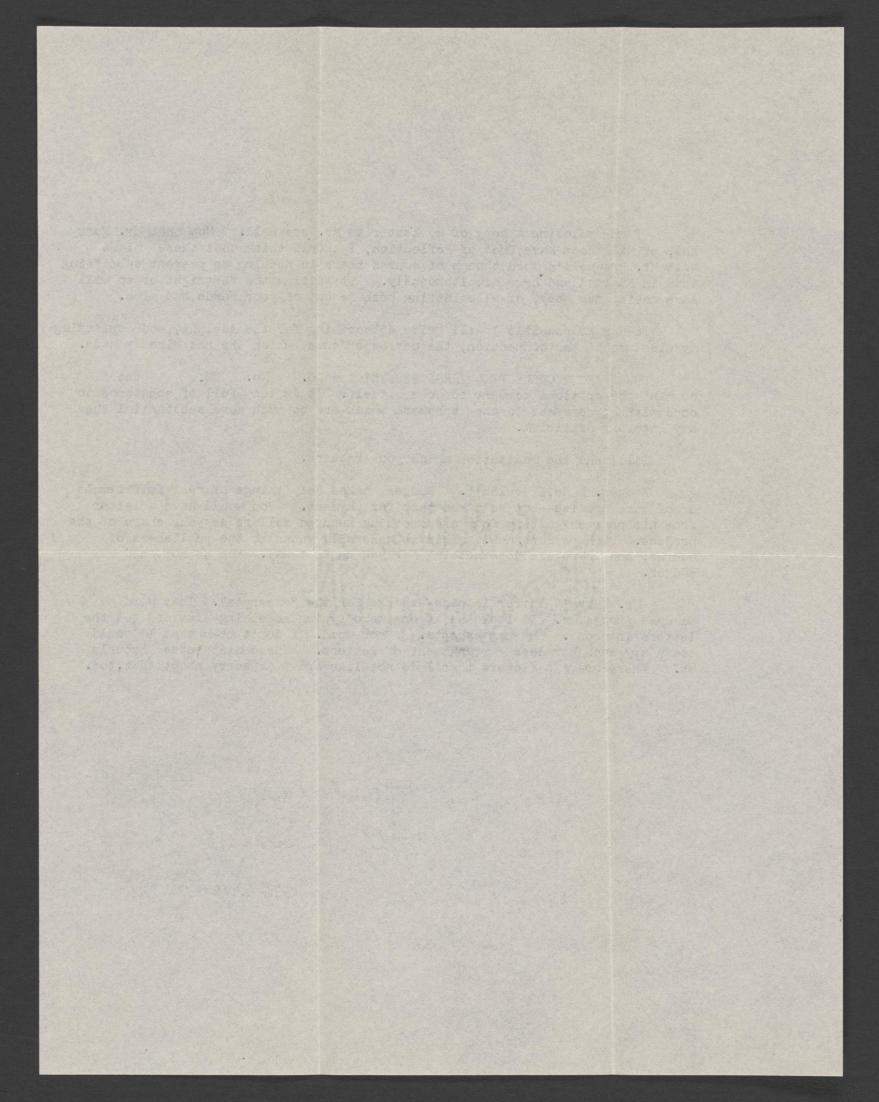

DOUBT ABOUT COLLECTING THESE ESSAYS? NO. No. NO. But I do want the critical comment to go by itself. It is too full of substance to cope with a nearness to the ephemera which are so much more substantial than any literary criticism.

I'll send the meditation which you require.

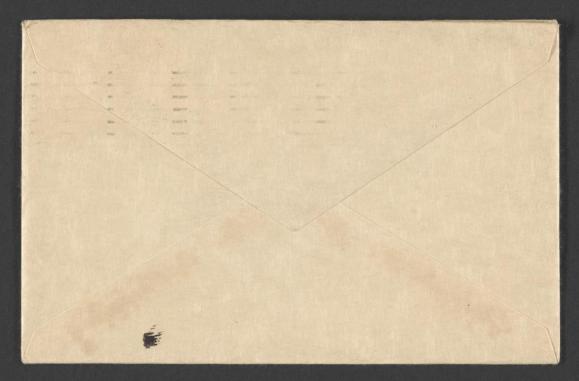

Badger. No,I wouldn't. Badger takes only things of real fulfillment or of sure promise--but he takes them for payment. You would have a letter from him next suggesting four or something hundred dollars as your share of the project. Perhaps more, now. This is generally known to the publishers of course, and therefore does nothing for you in that way. You do not need Badger.

Mr. Murry's letter is nice--thanks for the "excerpts". That word always annoys me. It looks as if one were typing something else and got the letters in wrong. Why not exrepts. Poor word. I don't mean that I would scorn any such harmeess arrangement of letters. These distates trouble me. There are two flowers that I do not like and I am sorry about that, too.

Dear Author, how nice it all is. First, in Chicago last Tuesday, I am given the November Adelphi to read on the train, by a lovely lady who knew nothing of my interest, specifically, in hat number. And there, on the train, I came on Exits, looking very well in its publicity, and standing it admirably. What a lovely thing it is -- and what a mersect title. (I may say that I haven't subscribed for Adelphi yet, on account of mot being able to read how much it is. Will you tell me, in decent American figures? I don't know whether the legend on the cover is the price or a decoration.) The is isn't anything new--I never could read English money.) Then, next day, I am sent my copies of American Review, and there is Belloc of the Roads, rambling down all its pages as delightfully as a cataract of country lanes. And I was mud again. Next day after that comes a letter from Wilson Follett saving that the contracts are ready (in case you do not vote for a more "sumptuous" edition -- and what a amptuous word sumptuous is: --- ) and asking me to write an introduction. But I await our final word on that, both as to sumptuousity, and as to my response, on my own acfant. I personally recommend Anne Bouglas Sedgwick, but that is as you wish. .... And best of all was that which preceded all this bursting into print, and it was Fr. Brownells letter--or that part of it which you quoted me. How perfect that is. TNot that we didn't know it--or I did; but it is so right to have it from him. Bow this letter exhibits his qulity--that pianstaking conscienceful motion of assimilation and response. I feel happy that we sent it there. And what an antidote for that miculous Scribner letter, which I put in the waste-basket. (What do you do when your typewriter behaves like this, once a line?) ... So that altogether I feel very glad and good over your progress. It is an inevitable thing, but I shouldn't want it ALL to ome after you are carved in stone, rising expectant from that bench of folded stone, of ripples in the stone. A lot of it will come then--but oh, some of it should come now. Enough, if possible, to release you from doing anything else. Yet we all have to offer up some service which is not specifically our chosen measure, and all in all, teaching is as radiant a service as might well be. And --I mean AND, it leaves you three for three months a year. Be quiet in your blessings, your raiment of blessings.

Here mild and sunny. Asters still in the gardens. Yesterday, on a walk, a bloom of russet black-berry leaves by the road. Trees still garmented, albeitin brown and gray. But the winter gran spread abroad as bright as Spring.

I am not defeated by this typewriter. But I am modified by it. To silence, by all that is measurable.

I have and have just read the Shoemaker's days and nights in the Second World, and have been in the enchantment both of that world and of him. It is so deeply and dearly beautiful, all; so filled with excesses of splendor, quiet and gentle splendor, spaandor almost distrait --- as of cousee splendor would be, in the Second World. I love it all. I love with a kind of dizziness that bit about the veery. Do you know that I have never heard one? But for some time it has seemed to me the combined fairy and angel among birds, and on the day when I first hear one, I confidently expect a Great Wonder to befall me. It seems so. " I hope so." But that is not the subject. The subject is you. I want so intensely that you shall do nothing but write. Oh, that is all wrong. Your karma is evidently to do many other things besides write, and to do them all well. That, or something like it, may have been indicated -- or what WAS indicated - by the outcome of that blissful hegeira to Oxford. Often I wish that you had taken a year at the beach instead, pen in hand. And as a matter of fact, you seem to be getting an extraordinary amount done, as it is, of writing I mean, and carrying on biology and such as well. .. I talked with Mr. Cape about you in New York a fortnight ago. He is Mr. Murry's friend, Jonathan Cape, and you may have known all about him long before. He seems on your trail -- a nice man and a good publisher, I hear. He was at the P. E. N. dinner, where Sherwood Anderson was guest of honor. But those dinners bore me SO -- I have been to only two. Nobody speaks, everybody brings a guest or two, you get seated with the guests, and it is terrible. Never own that you are an author inside New York or they will grab you. .. But that is not the subject. The subject is you. Not whether you write all the time or do not write, but something else. Tell me of the rest of the Shoemaster. Is it all wild-wooding? What could be better. And yet, and yet --- I find myself wishing that the craft had a bow as well as a sail. Where is it going? Isn't that disgustingly like the theatrical producers who ask for punch? I mean something else---the apotheosis ... I have been thinking .... first tell me: Has it an outline, at of punch. Even as much of a story as Hudson has in Green Mansoons -- why should you not all? You could make a perfect thing out of nothing, as he did: A girl do that? sought, and found, and not found--that is all that is necessary. This lovely being in his garden -- the garden chapters, say, of those first sketches, of the one at the desert's edge and the song-bird whom you observed "without rancour." Then the intimation of the girl--by letter, by what you will! Only you have not seen her. Then the leisurely search for her---having these heavenly adventures Perhaps she is in a camp in the woods. Or you come out of the all the way. And the Shoemaster goes back to his woods. And that is all. camp and meet her. But isn't there something which can become an I don't know--nobody knows. outline .... And all the time you may have more outline that I know anything about, to this second world. ... Or perhaps you are content, gloriously content, with hhe second world otself, and so why inhabit it with any beings, any progression ...

And yet, my friend, there is something to form. To Form. It has come home to me lately with all the force of a knowledge of a presence. Form is life. At least, without Form life is not at its most radiant. And therefore art. But of course, there are standards of Form which we have not approached, and perhaps this Form of the Second World chapters is one of them. Or the chapters which I have not yet seen. In any case, this brings me to Eli Faure's History of Art --- a revelation of the development of man through his art. Have you seen it? It is not a book at all, but an experience. So much beauty, sheer beauty, but so much of all rishness. It quickens one, relaases one in a quite extraordinary fashion. I am moved by it beyond anything that I have read in years. I shall always be reading it. It is in four volumes. But you, if you have not seen it, take the first volume and dip into Egypt, and end by reading those last three or four pages of Egypt, and you will know what I mean. This man was like a living thing whom growth is accelerated , as motion is accelerated in motion pictures, and before your eyes you see any subject which he touches come alive, touch maturity, die and be born again--all in a paragraph. in a sentence. And again and ggain he reverts to this word about form. "FOrm-geometrical valumes penetrating one another according to innumerable laws of attraction -- the remembrance of the common form from which all others came." (The italics are mine.) "Any Form adapted to the universal condition is more living, even if it exists only in our imagination, than a form based on reality but ful-"The modeling flows between the absolute lines filling its function badly." of a geometry in movement --- space continues the block of basalt or of bronze by taking up from the surface the confused illumination that arises from its And of the Egyptian sculpture --- "an insensible line of light depths." burns about them, slowly caresses xh an invisible form which its embrace reveals." "-... that prodigious sense of mass that concentrates life in a decisive form of which all the surfaces seem to rejoin the infinite through their unlimited curves." ... He writes as you do, with that utter freedom and abandon to the infinite -- you rejoining your home by this same means, such as he describes for Egypt. But his sense of form, his constant harping upon it did something for me. And I think of it for you --- in that superb impertinence of one friend for another, even when that other is artist. I feel profoundly that if you strike a certain -- shall we say, gait? -- and begin to write about something, ABOUT something, as he is writing, then all this exquisite but formless richness of yours will flow with the flow of that form, and the whole will indeed rejoin the infinite and take us with it. . Is it to tie all this with your biological wisdom -- is that it? I noted that you did not even give the name of that small trim bird who was one of the voices of that memorable day. Nor of the bird at night. Well, nobody knows but you and the spirit which moveth in you, but you'll forgive me for landing like a boulder among the stems of hare bells will you not? Or will you?

I have just come back from a month in New York and Boston and Washington. I have decided that Boston is my spirit's home, as it was the home of my ancestors nine generations ago. I went out to Waltham and saw the house which two brothers of my ancestor of five generations ago built in the midst of the original I630 farm on the River Charles. The house stands on Waltham Main street now, but walls and woodwork and fireplaces and all are intact--a dignified dreaming house, now a double house , with its old domed library ceiled over---but it could be released, that library ceiling. And I got the refusal of the house, for romance. And you may yet come and have tea with me, in Waltham High street. Will you?

I wish you would write me a record of all that has been happening to you---all! Including your enjoyment of Robert Nichols, who sounds a wonderful being. But please, if you don't mind, type your record to me, which you see I am taking for granted that you will send, --type it, because you are rising, sinking to the illegibility of genius. My remembrances to Miriam and the Gracchi. My remembrances to you.

Don't you think this sounds perfect? It sounds as if you would have something wonderful to send to The Winged Arts. And will you do so? I don't know what. you will know. ... I have as yet only dipped in these fascinating pages which you have sent. Dipped for refreshment and rest. "Dipping" recalls the new Algernon Blackwood, "Tongues of Fire", and the two gorgeous stories, or sketches, therein, called "Picking Fir Cones", and "Malahide and Forden." Do get them and read deep. ... The reason I have only dipped is , for one thing, that I have twenty-three stories by Negroes, in a short story contest, in which I am one of the judges. And a dozen or more short stories (by Whites) in a social service contest -- I mean ope-act plays , not stories. Oh, my friend, where is it not difficult to get a chance to set pen to page? Who is there nat who would not be'set aside', for such an opportunity. Can you picture me--with all that there is The First to "see to" here, and with more than I can tell you crowding in. Presbyterian church would have a pageant celebrating its 75th anniversayy, and will I do it? The University appropriation is about to be cut off, and will I spend two days in Madison at the hearing, and speak there? In another part of the Capitol a dollar-diplomacy bill is up, and will I speak there( I didn't) I am to go to Minneapolis April 5, and to Imlianapolis April 9--both missions which draw me inevitably. A family in Caledonia is burned out, root and branch. One has only to lift one's hand to have things flocking to them, but it takes time. From that family emerges a little lad, acute and wistful and--deficient. He must go to Madison to the new (and free) hospital, for observation -- and is there now. But first he walked in here, eight miles, in rubbers, and no shoes or socks, his feet wound in Ingrain carpeting-and this through snow. .. And the these are only SOME. No, there is no 'setting aside' --- but oh, how well I know One has to invent one's own leisure--and I almost think that what you mean. one gets it by yielding to the other pressure. That then it lets go, while so long as one pulls and stretches away, it holds all the closer. "You conquer nature by oberying her!" And experience too. ... My room here is sweet with pine boughs which have been brought in--the whole house smells of them. Have you pine boughs in California? Well, yes, I must admit that you have. But ... And DID I tell you of our Kentucky not Wisconsin pine boughs. cardinal? That has lived on our river bank all winter? We have seen him, bight and red against the ide of the river, and later feeding on the dark ground; "and with the first warm days, he began to sing, clear, sweet, varied, adorable. Caame a March snow, and he sang in the snow. But oh, before Christmas, when it was 22 below, I was in agony. How could he bear it, who the bird books say comes no farther north than northern Illinois? And then, on Christmas day, I heard his note. He has stood everything. And now I know that he was here all last winter too, because when I came home in March, he was singing, and I saw him, but I did not think of his having been here right along; and father had not seen him before. One other year, some time ago, father and mother and I saw one, which came to the house in a snow storm, and used to feed at the box. This one never came to thhe box that we know of. Isn't it a heavenly thing to have happen?

I am not suggesting that you make gemss I am but looking round for heavenly enough white flour. Do you gather what I mean to mean?

Have you read Mary Johnston's Sweet Rocket? If not, I shall lend you mine. But get Tongues of Fure, meanwhile.

Dud you see the eclipse? If it was not so long ago that you have forgotten---ah,no. One could never forget that. I saw it from the roof of the Gotham Hotel in New York, total save for a blazing point of light on the lower rim; and as it was like that, the lights of the city sprang out in that queer coppery dusk, and the electric signs sparkled; and from the roofs of some lower buildings, servants or others cried out, a clamor of sound, like a chorus heralding the event.

And the two little girls next door, five and six, spent Saturday night here. One of them has a song, which every few minutes she demands to know if she shall sing. And I always said yes. The song goes:

> The time to be happy is now. The place to be happy is here. The way's to be happy and make others happy And make your own heaven wite here, Wite here, And make your own heaven wite here.....

...only she can not stop there, but keeps on, with wite here inserted, quite all down the page. It is too darling...and too true? Then they sing together something which they call American.being the well-known hymn.

Now I must go down and read Whe Negro stories--which are thrilling me through and through. Such an experience I did not dream that I should have---I would not have missed it for worlds. Is it not strange that it is impossible to give anything at all that one does not get it back at once, multiplied.

You knew, of course, what happened: How I put the mss. in the envelope, intending to follow it with a letter in a few hours. And than that I .... well, you didn't know what. How could you know that I went to Minneapolis, and Indianapolis(literally! So that the little girls next door talked about my going to Mindinapolis, naturally.) And Bloomington, and Terre Haute, and then Madison. .. But oh, you knew too, or you must have known, how utterly charming I thought the chapters were. Like cobwebs with ropes inside, carefully concealed by mauve and iris and peach and dove and silver, but ropes all the same, firm and compact. Your English is a delight to me beyond words to fathom or to climb or to circumscribe or to penetrate with any word of comment of my own. But it is a style so liquid, so flexible, so musical, so true that I flow with it from page to page; when I come down to earth, to alight at all near the earth in fact, I am still moving on, as a ship's motion moves in one after the ground is found. .. Why do we worry about your having opportunity to write? You will write, you DO write as you breathe, and you cannot help ethher. I can see that. .. Still, of course, as I wish for you bright and brighter air, so I wish for you more and more and more sheer time to write IN.

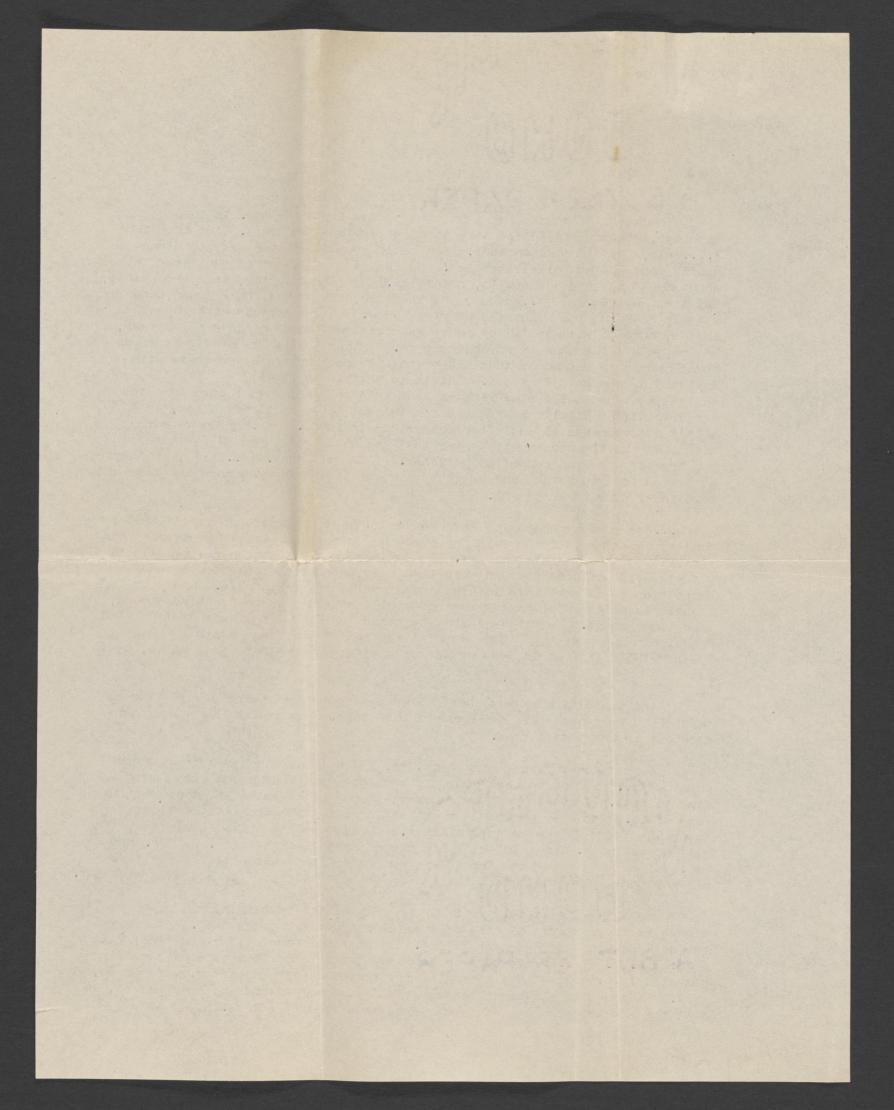

...Are you any nearer? Have you heard anything from anywhere? And I wonder, sometimes, if there is any place anywhere which would not devour your time, if you were teaching at all. A place in which they permitted you to put yourself would devour you more than ever, perhaps, because there the temptation to do ever more in class work would be irresistable. Now your trouble is, after all, partly that they will not let you be creative enough, take time enough! Still---have you heard anything, from anywhere? Did Meikeljohn say anything? Have you written to Yellowsprings again? COULD I DO ANYTHING? If I could, you would not hesitate a breath to tell me so, would you?

And whatelse have you done? You oughtn't to wait for a word from me before you write and tell me what you have done. You are the turn and turn aboutest person that I know.

I am enclosing something from Mrs. Bailey's new book," A Treatise on Cosmic Fire." A marvellous book, from which I shall send you bits from time to time. I honestly do not know what you, as a biologist, would say to some of it. But yet a biologist who is three fourths occultist would say the right thing--I can be sure of that. This, for example, I know that you will accord with. Even ,I think, to the words"subtler beings". Mr. and Mrs. Bailey have been here for a day, en route from Minneapolis to New York-and now that I see the book,I think, Can it be true that I have spoken with her.

One thing I must tell you: On the day of the full moon, in May, there is always in the Himalyas a time of special outpouring on humanity. This year the day falls on May 8---next Friday. The time for you, Pacific time, will be 5:43 A. M. .. If you care to keep that time--make it a time of receivingconsciously... to give it a period of meditation before and after... if you do, you will. A sense of alighment between the Ego, the Thinker, and ones bodies, so that the Ego is a channel of force---you know it all, I know.

"The Winged Arts"--that's the title. I already have the strongest group of free imaginative spirits ever gathered together under one banner to my khowledge. Norman Bel Geddes, Alfred Stieglitz, Georgia O'Keefe, Don Marquis, Stephan Bourgeois, Zona Gale, Percy MacKaye, Walter Damrosch, Witter Bynner, Karl Schmitt, Hugh Ferris, Lewis Mumford, others from dance, music, all kinds of visioning easily to be had; these all glad to unite in one set of wings to see where they can fly; backer unbelievably understanding; 1st issue set for June 1st; to be made by best printer in America; isn't it a joke?

I like your Hollywood man and would like to have something from him if he can isolate his stuff into incandescent sentences; crystallize it into gems of experience, not for beauty but for truth; give us the truth and we will attend to the beauty. No one living is big enough to force on us chunks of paragraphs; a bas the disquisition. Don't you think you should go through your stuff and cull me something under the head of "Sententia"? I am not asking anyone to write; I am asking them to give me some of the best of themselves that has been chucked back in corners under dust because they did not dare to show it: they would tremble so to see it pawed by dirty hands. And that is the kind of stuff we are getting. I don't think there will be much trouble. What should one do about Mr. Hollywood? I'd better get his book, I suppose. Good bye.

Dear friend, just now, this Saturday morning, the little maid --- yclept Marguerite -- in sweeping , found back of the hall radiator, fastened between the wall and the table which covers that radiator, a letter. It was yours of April I2, telling me the good news that Chatta and Windus are to publish your book. What must you have thought of my failure to congratulate you about that? It is too beautiful to have it come out so, publication on the other side first. Oh, and now that makes your American course so easy. It should be published simultaneously, there and here, and it must be. Have you done anything about that? I do not wonder at your not telling me. Because I realize, and have realized for a long time, something much worse than an announcement like this stuck behind a radiator -- that I never have told you a word of my reaction to that outline which you sent to me of that book. The other day, here, a dealer in antiques was shown by me a tray which a prisoner had made for me, an inlaid tray, she said: " It is beautiful. It is so beautiful that I can't say a word." I think that it must have been something analogous with me. I was overwhelmed -- not only by the scope and originality of the thing, but by the fact that it was YOU who had projected it. I might as well confide to you that I had thought of you all along as the Shoe-maker. the glorified shoe-maker, who uses clouds for leather and cobwebs for laces and drops of dew for buttons, and gives the shoes away, gives them to fairies turned human, whom alone the shoes will fit. This outcropping of a fundamental granite --you gather that only a veritable salad in metaphors will meet the moment -- this if you like it better, sudden breaking down of leather -clouds and dew buttons into their original atoms of electricity left me dumb. Electricity! Atoms! Prana: The stuff of which life and spirit are made and made one. The basic atonement. You compiled them in a table of contents and offered them to me on a page, nonchalently, as if they were fruit on a plate. I ate and apparently slept. For I never have told you. But then, you knew. I challenge you to say that you did not know ....

So I am glad. First for your power. Second for its application. Third, for its publisher. Fourth for its mission--fourth, which is really first. And fifth that you will let me have some shall part in the American end. Of whom have you thought. Of Macmillan---dignity without advertisement. But, if the book carries its own, that will not matter. Knopf or Harcourt, youth and vigor and novelty and the future and good advertising, but no background. Appleton, who would almost with certainty snap it up. What do you say? What do you decide? Of course the English appearance will be so much---and Macmillan and Appleton both have English branches, but Knopf and Harcourt, I believe, haven't. Or is there another name, floating in your mind?

Well, then, there is a sixth and most important gladness which besieges me. It has done so ever since you told me your summer plans. For do not I, too, know Cora Williams? Did not Mr. Markham himself send me her Creative Involution some winters ago. And did not I, of my own initiative, find one day last summer, in the Madison University library, her enchanting little book about the San Francisco fair, and did not I bear, and do not I bear in my mind unto this day, its frontispiece of a roomsturned inside out? That concept never leages one. It is a delicion brand on one's brain. It is more. I swam and floated through that book, knowing what it meant but not what it said. Knowing that I knew and always had known and was merely recognizing. But resigned to the old fact that I know by other means than my mind, which doesn't foot up to much when I do its addition. Of all the kinds of schools that there are, I should have said that the best possible one is this school of yours, for you, and now. What a lovely way you are led. And how essentially in harmony you must be to have things draw to you like this, things of your own. You evidently go about charging and re-charging yourself with exactly the kind of electrical currents which will attract to themselves the particples which you need. For food, for air, and for vision. This is true. As of course you know. I am more and more impressed with the fact that one is or is not harmonized with an inner power and that this is all there is to it. I found a letter of my  $\frac{400}{400}$ mother's the other day, written to me when I was in New York, which quotes from Emerson to the effect that a great to-do is made over the struggl6 of right with wrong, but that there is nothing to this. "God wither is in the heart or he is not." Is that not profound? If He is in the heart, all is arranged, because there will be attracted there nothing that is alien to him. Really, the religions of the world, though they have so slipped down and floundered in their theologies, have come unanimously to a great method: The method of prayer, of meditation, of Prayer that God will inhabit the heart. And a technique of keeping it quiet. clean for him. I suppose that all this can be summed up in two sentences. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God".... and "Be still and know that I am God." How wonderful to have added to this, out of the abundance of its life, the teaching of Jesus that it isn't hard work, or fear, or sacrifice alone --- but love. It is easy! I mean, it would be easy if we were a little more freely inducted into Tell me then, about the school. Which our higher consciousness. is, I take it, a practical means of exploring one's higher consciousness and making it the center of one energy. No?

Meanwhile Alice A. Bailey in New York, has put out her Cosmic Fire, received from Thibet telepathically. Two volumes, a thousand pages or so. As the London Morning Post remarked, after Balfour and the others had conducted their grave experiments of receiving telepathically a word or an idea impulsed from an adjoining room, What is such a childlike proceeding as that compared to Alice Bailey's feat of receiving three books thus? I saw much of her in New York Last winter, and in Minneapolis this Spring. And she and her husband stopped over here, on their way east. She told me this. That once, in Thibet, she was going over a mountain pass, dry and barren, desert for miles at their feet, when abruptly they passed a cavern in the rock. Over these rocks trickled and gyshed a fresh spring of cold water. Everywhere in these rocks grew masses of maidenhair fern, freshly green. And all the air of the cavern was filled with the twinklig wings of innumerable little blue butterflies. ..... She was in Thibet to teach the Bible to the British soldiers, and knew nothing of other planes of perception until long after her return, until, in fact, ten years ago or less. But it had been all the same, for she had had her quite terrific novitiate of living sacrifice --- a sine qua non, apparently.

Write to me. Your pen is more living than mine. Write to me with it, even when mine lies supine and all but unconscious on its blotter. My typewriter says Yes, I do all the work but you must have a poetic figure. Poetic? Well, a figure at any cost. My love to you, with grace and remembrance.

You ought to write me a long letter telling me all the things that you think and feel about the school and about Involution (?). Why do you not? I am reading her book Creative Involution (?) and I am enormously impressed not only by what she says but by her economy in saying it. Too great economy almost. It is so packed, so concentrated. Picture Herbert Spencer saying what she says. He would require five hundred pages. But yet I wish that she had said more. She rould so easily have said so much more. It is the new word, isn't ? Dear friend, yes, the letters did cross, and this I read at once, and I consider it your own, and delightful. The Harcourt letter is strange, or so I thought, but the manuscript came in just now and I haven't read it of course, but I have glanced through its pages to see if what I feared is true--that the Humanism chapter was indeed a facsimile of the copy you sent them. Unquestionably what ails them is that this is such desperated copy! Frightful copy, villainous copy. I beg your pardon. criminal copy. In the first place they should never have had a carbon, that is very nearly fatal. But in the MOST place, there should have been a good copy sent to them, a copy without all these corrections. James Branch Cabell is the only writer of whom I ever heard who will not send in copy with even one word on one page crossed off, but insists always on a perfect copy but one word is about the limit. The reason is psychological. You break the thread of the readers attention and he has no longer a true judgment, the current is cut off, the thread is snapped, his judgment is flawed. This is the truth. If all your copy has been like this ... . well, I marvel that so much of it has found its homing, in the pages where it has appeared at last, kempt and groomed. I do beg your pardon. But you ought, really, to be shot. At sunrise.

Letter postmarked Dec. 27, 1925. from Zona Gale to Dr. Henry Chester Tracy

When I have finished with this, I want glenn Frank to read it, so that he will have an impression of you. Next, I should like to mail it to Dutton, but to be returned to you if they do not wish it, for some reason. Or, which I should prefer, much, to be handled by Elisabeth Marbury, who is a wonder. An agent is so much the best way. What do you say?

Now that I am on the subject, and am writing a pleasant holiday letter, may I please tell you that if you don't speedily get where you are bound to be, it will be because you lack humor. Did you know that you do? To get a manuscript back, and to attribute its return to (I) the case of the United States being much worse than you feared and (2) that the enlightened have not yet felt as a perceptible force ." To be sure you add," most of all,"etc., but the first two----but you were laughing, weren't you? That was said with a sniff and a wrinkle, wasn't it? I couldn't bear it, if it was not. All this quite regardless of its truth, of course -- its manifest truth. Tell me it was a joke! Still, you did write:" "You shall have the privilege of reading the book, all of it, in Ms." That shakes my faith that you were joking at all. What shall we do? Oh, PLEASE be a little deprecating, even if you don't mean it. PLEASE sometime say: " I can't believe that you want a big mss. like that one, but if you really do, I'd be proud to send it on." Am I wrong? Am I discounting honesty and begging for artifice? Well, then I do, that's all.

A happy new year and God bless us every one.

This was to have gone back to you with my letter, and then it seemed a shame to make it travel in the same enevlope with such a letter, to say nothing of the inherent shabbiness of letting you pay the postage on a letter such as that. So this has waited, and now goes to you with this decorous and humanistic note, to say my thanks for the privilege of reading it. It seems to me full of fine things, as you know that it is; and especially did I gloat over what you said regarding the teaching of literature. .. That concerning "likes and dislikes" is exquisitely robust and tenuous -both, assuredly. And that propaganda gives "the illusion of effectiveness" is direct and keen, and a little hard on everyone who has left in him anything of the itinerant preacher -- as I have recently read of somebody saying of him-The Dewey quotation is packed full. But this whole chapter is self. packed full--and I suspect that therein lies the difficulty for the average reader, as sensed by Harcourt, Brace. I suspect that what they want is that he should be helpedalongby "headings"! Not that, exactly, but by some chinks in the walls of page. of prose, wherein he can dig in his toes as he tries to mount their sheer sides. There is a point in that, too. It would be easy to do, without making this seem elementary, I think! The old Firstly, secondly, thirdly is not demanded, but it had its points for the sleeping ears to which it washaddressed. And then, O Teacher, and master of many, are exactly the ear's hich you are addressing. Please, pleasedonit include BOTH of mine, will you?

I am keen to read the rest, which I have not yet done. Or begun. For is it not the Christmas beason, no? Keen, in spite of my utterances of a few days hence. To which I still adhere, what's worse. But you know that theseare the foam of flowers on the tides of my deep, deep appreciation. If you did not know that, I should not have dared play teacher, for a minute.

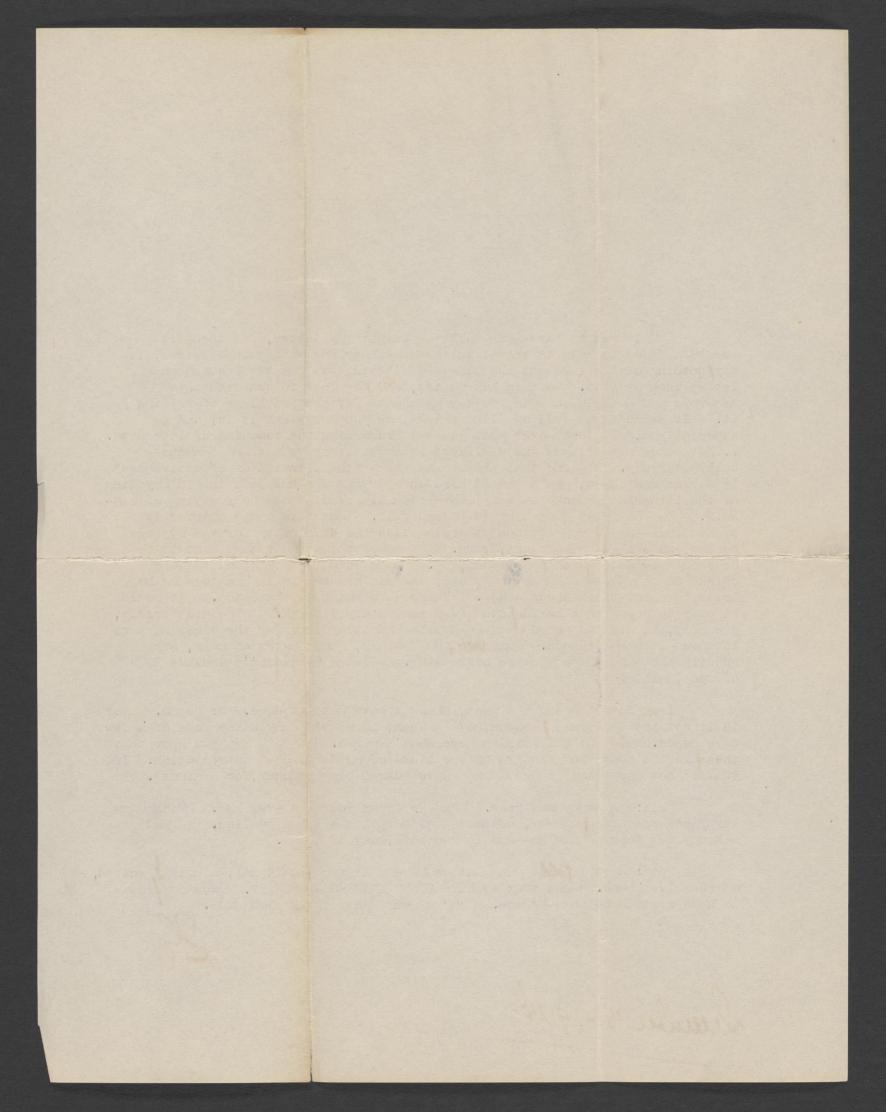

Well: A Happy new year. Happier than you have ever had. With many surprises all along the way, connected with publishers and publics. And a happy New Year to Miriam--and to you both, many of these.

Note: Have It field, you that we have a Kentucky cardinal, a pair i susped, on the river bank. And that we have EIGHT EVENING GROSBEAKS. How much better to have written of them before. And of our deep thick slow snow.

This is the word from Dr. Meiklejohn at last which reached me day before yesterday. I am afraid that holding the manuscript for him to see delayed it, for it will only reach Duttons tomorrow. With it I sent the enclosed letter.

Dr. Meiklejohn's letter seems to me very stimulating and challenging and though not completely understanding, still as much so as one might hope for with his sudden introduction to the manuscript and to you. My thought is, and yours I hope will be the same, that you might write to him now much as you did earlier, telling him about that early letter if you thought well. And bring to bear on his guess as to your fort as teacher whatever might be permissible. And if he does indeed want to see the writer and talk with him why doesn't he? I can't make out his one word in that next to the last paragraph--that he would not carry what with him.

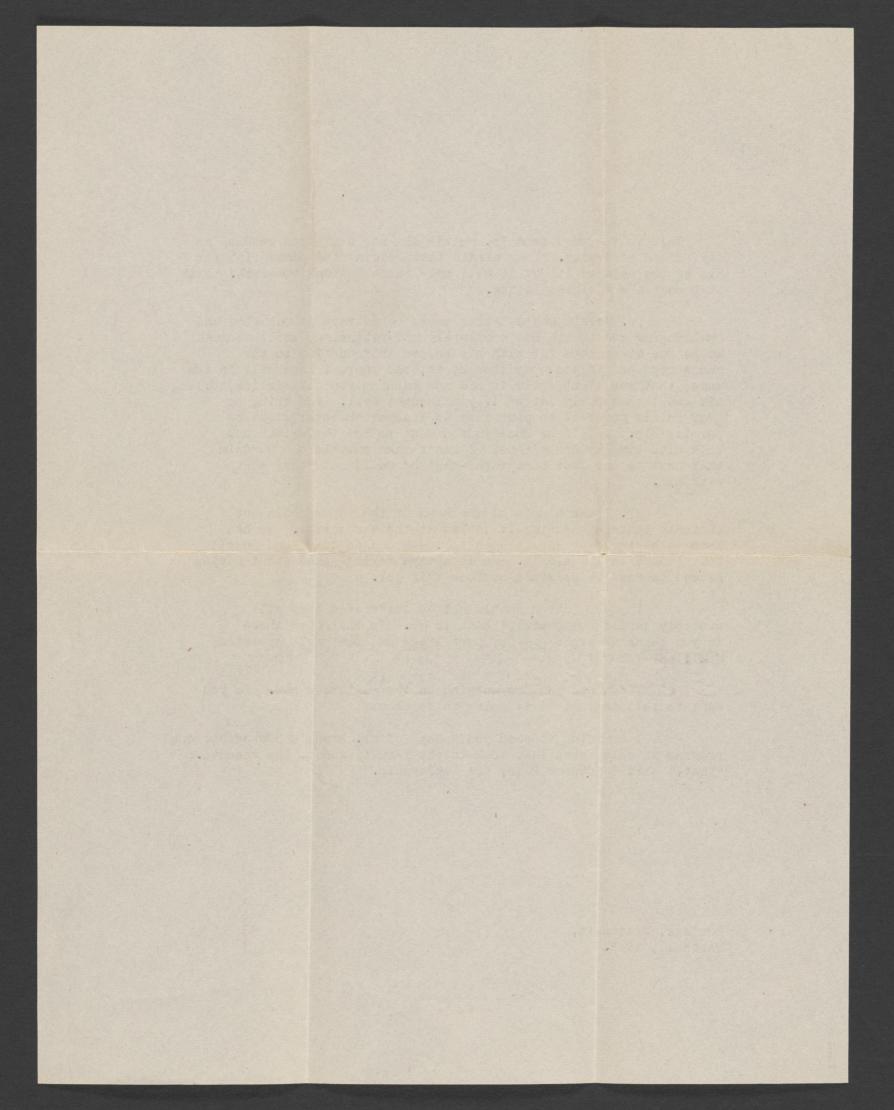

Mr. Frank's note at the head of the paper would not indicate that he had himself looked at the manuscript. He has been so besieged by engagements to speak and so tired and unwell that I dare say he didn't. He is always making jokes about having ceased to read books since he took this job.

In case Dutton should not be interested they will probably send the manuscript back to me. In that case where do you think it might go--Harcourt Brace and Company? Appleton? McMillan? Where?

I do hope you are working on the next book now. Do you want to tell me what it is going to be about?

I am going to send you a copy of Mr. Frank's new educational program which he read last week to the faculty and to the regents. "That," said Professor Ross, "is leadership."

Portage, Wisconsin, March 11, 1926.

Gentlemen:

Postmarked Mar 11, 1926

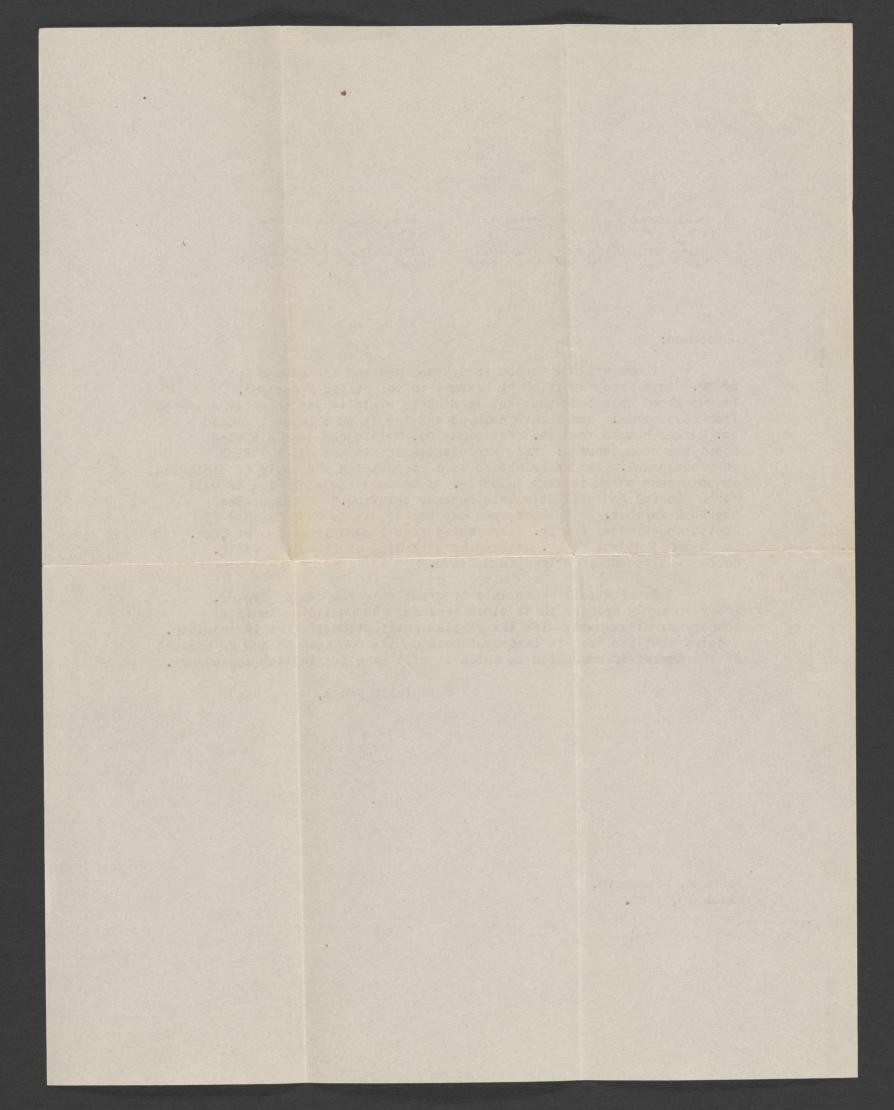

There will go to you today from Madison the manuscript by Dr. Henry Tracy entitled "A Preface to Scientific Humanism". It was about this book that Robert Nichols wrote to you recently from California. And I have delayed sending it on because I wanted Dr. Mieklejohn to read it. Yesterday Dr. Meiklejohn sent his word about the book, saying: "His whole statement is one which I find very congenial. And he brings to it a preparation and basis of biological acquaintance which is very valuable. I am sure the book will be well worth reading and will stimulate further thinking." He discusses the book further. The book, you may recall, is to be published by Chatto and Windus, and Dr. Tracy asked that I send it to you at once. The delay incident to Dr. Meiklejohn's reading of it was my fault. He has but recently arrived in Madison.

But I should appreciate it greatly if you could give Dr. Tracy an early opinion on it since it should be published in this country simultaneously with the English publication if that is possible. I think that the book is important both on its own account and on account of the moment in education in which it will make its English appearance.

Faithfully yours, Jun July

I cannot forgive myself about the letter. It is the first one, really, which I had not addressed to you myself. This little secretary -- I have had her for a year and more now, seems to have it in for you. My letter to Dutton about your book was returned to me nearly ten days after it was written, from the English department of Pennysylvania State college, whose letter had presumably gone to Dutton. I telgpaphed to Dutton at once that my letter had been delayed and would follow, and they had, your letter says, written to you that they would hold the Mss. till the end of the month anyway. So that one was all right. But this one is annoying--though not, I hope, more serious. For I can tell you nearly everything that was in Dr. Meickeljohn's letter to Dr. Framk. It was about like this: That he had read nearly the whole of the mss., that he found it most stimulating, that he should like to meet the writer of it "it would be," I recall that he said, " very exciting." But he also said that in his opinion you seemed to be feeling your way toward conclusions rather than --- something, was it thinking? -- toward them. But the tletter was most complimentary on the whole, as you see. It is written, he said, evidently by one in full tide of revolt against the present methods of teaching. You get the import of it. And so I said if he Suffyi thinks it would be exciting to meet you, why doesn't he? And that you should write to him, telling him of your previous letter to him, and saying mome more. My letter was about as much a loss as his, please, and I cannot remember what I said! But I think that I told you -- and asked you not to mention it much since it is all tentative yet -- that there is here a dream of an educational experiment, an experimental school within the walls of the present University plant. Dr. Frank told me of it, saying that at all educational conferences for years they had wished for an experimental university, but had always felt that it involved a great plant and a large faculty and millions of dollars. His proposal is to announce such an experiment here, and to ask for volunteers from among the faculty, and presumably to bring in others, to teach in it. And then to ask for volunteer students to study in it. No one, obviously, will be required to enter, but if anybody wants to enter and have the benefit of the experiments he will be welcomed. The experiments will include everything that is being discussed in education to-day, including the scrapping of the lecture system. I think that I told you also, of Dr. Meickeljohn's first class in Philosophy at Madison a fortnight ago. It is called an Introduction to Philosophy. And , as reported to my by Dr. Frank, Dr. M. said at the opening: " I am supposed to introduce you to philisophy. Philosophy is a system which may be applied to the perplexities of life. Have any of you any perplexities?" And he sath down. The class was stunned for a space, having arrived with note books and all, confidently expecting reams of mimeographed stuff. Then a little flapper recovered and said she: "Well, Dr. Meickeljohn, we girls have trouble adjusting our personal relationships among ourselves. Would that be what you mean?" He replied: "That would be so much what I mean that you will find that Plato devoted such and such a chapter of the Republic to discussing just that perplexity."

(Jab)

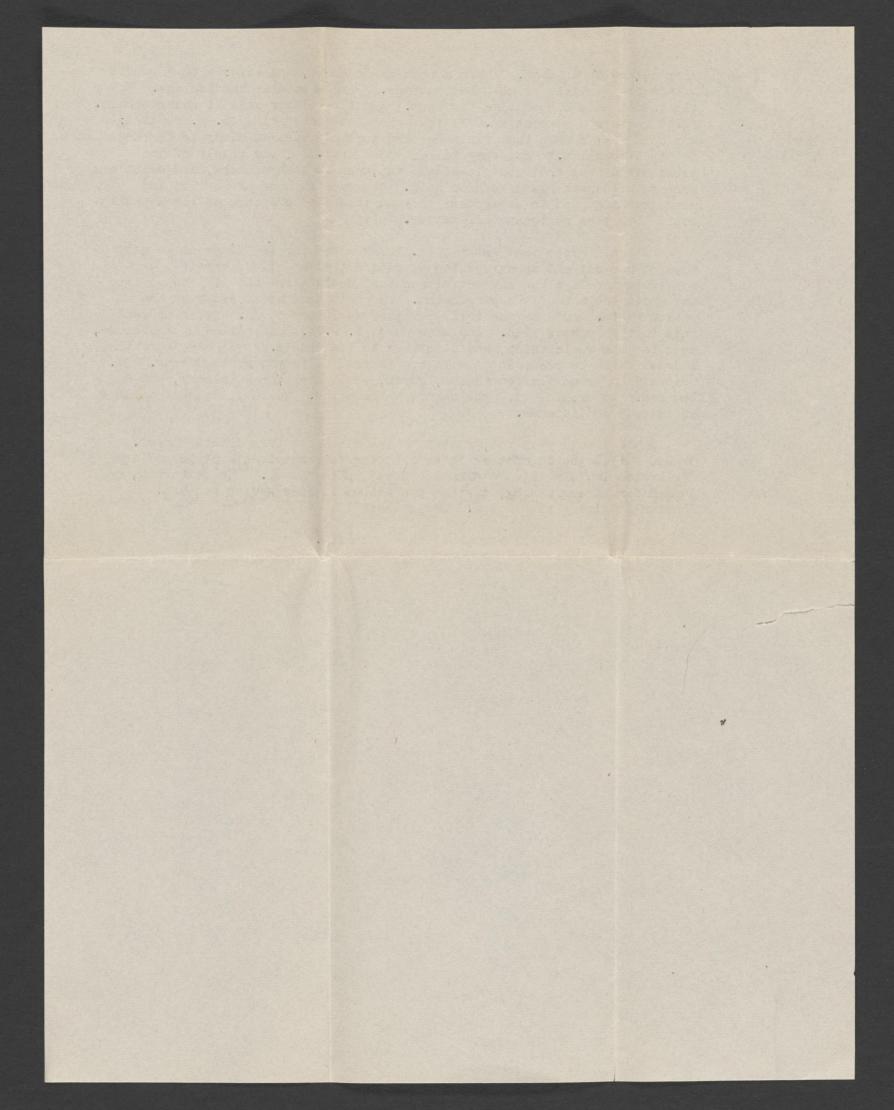

They talked about that. Then a vast Swede arose, and said: " Some bandit --name not familiar to me-- had courage. And a soldier has courage. But the bandit uses his courage for harm. And the soldier uses it under orders. Isn't courage a perplexity. Is that what you mean?" And Dr. M. replied: "So much what I mean that Plato devoted such and such arters in the Republic to its discussion." And they talked about that. The result of the "recitation" was that the class went out,keen on both matters, and doubtless keen to read what Plato said on both. Whereas an hour of lecture and mimeographing, and an assignment to read those two chapters of the Republic would have been quite another matter.

Since I wrote that letter, Dr. Frank asked for the floor at Faculty meeting one day and announced the appointment of an All-University commission(I love the way we imitate the Russians in that All) to go into the whole subject of the curriculum. He said that he should keep the chairmanship. And then he told what they would try to do. Later he read this to the regents also. And afterward Dr. E. A. Ross called up the house, keen for the whole thing, and said "That is leadership.#" I have here that address which he read, and I will try to mail it to you by to-morrow. Dr. Meickeljohn is on the commission, Guyer, Schlichter, Dean Sellery, and a law man. Guyer, biology; Schlichter, Mathematics. Sellery, dean of college of letters and science.

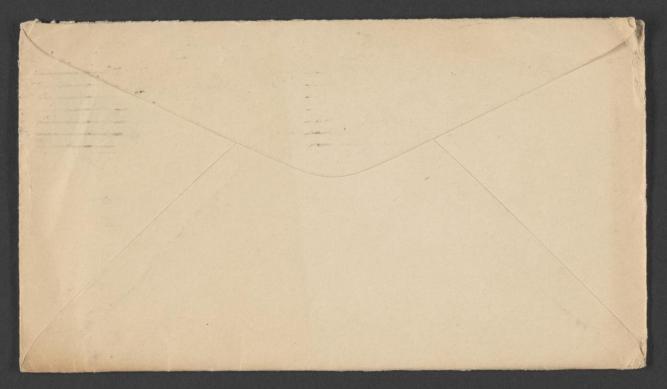

Maybe I told you, too, that I am invading your friend this summer. Or did I tell you in another letter? Going to Pennsylvania State college for a week in July to give six "lectures" on the Novel. No text book, no demand for mimeographing, just my own things in Yale Review and Mrs. Wharton's Writing of Fiction! How's that?

March 23:1926:

Dear Sir:

About March IO a letter went from here addressed to Dr. Henry Tracy, 2104 Holland avenue, Los Angeles. By an error of my secretary, Holland was written for Highland. Two days later se she discovered this error, but I did not worry about it, for Dr. Tracy, a teacher in the Los Angeles High School, and a resident there for nearly twenty years, could not, I thought, be mislaid. Still, I sent a letter to him informing him of the error, so that in case the letter should not reach him, he could inquire.

BEN F. FAAST. VICE PRESIDENT

A letter received from him to-day informs me that he did not receive that letter of mine, that he has inquired both at branch and main post office, and has interviewed officials, and that the letter seems to have disappeared.

Dr. Tracey's name appears both in the telephone and the city directory of Los Angeles. I am unable to believe that these were not consulted by your department people before this letter would have been destroyed.

But, that failing, inside the letter was absenclosure -- not the letterhead on which the letter was written, for there was none--but an exclosure with the letter head of the President of the University of Wisconsin. You would not, certainly, have returned the letter to that letter-head; but it would have indicated that the letter was of sufficient importance so that your city directory might be consulted for the addressee. In Chicago a letter sent bearing no address at all will be delivered ,on time, if the name is in the city directory. This is also the case in New York. I find myself unable to believe a that the Los Angeles postoffice can have destroyed a letter sent to a resident of years, a public school teacher whose name appears in all your directories. Will you not go into the matter since the left Will you not go into the matter, since the letter your directories. was of the first importance, and the enclosure is irreplacable.

One feels the greatest sympathy for the Postmaster of Los Angeles with all its thousands of tourists, and their correspondents, who will not put on return addresses nor have their addresses verified. And yet in Chicago and in New York a letter is delivered only a mail or two late with no address at all, if only the name appears in the city directory. I want Los Anegles, to which I profess devotion, to be not a whit behind these other towns. And I want extremely that Dr. Tracy shall locate that letter which contained an enclosure on the letter-head of the Bnesident of the University of Wisconsin, since the letter is of the first importance, and the enclosure irreplaceable. Will you be good enough to have someone make inquiry for me?

Very truly yours,

Dr. Meiklejohn has no authority in any case--I should think it would be much better to see President Frank. The experimental school was adopted last week by the faculty with only a few dissenting votes--it will mean a hundred and twenty six volunteer pupils to live together in the new commons with the instructers-also volunteers--from the faculty and some new ones.

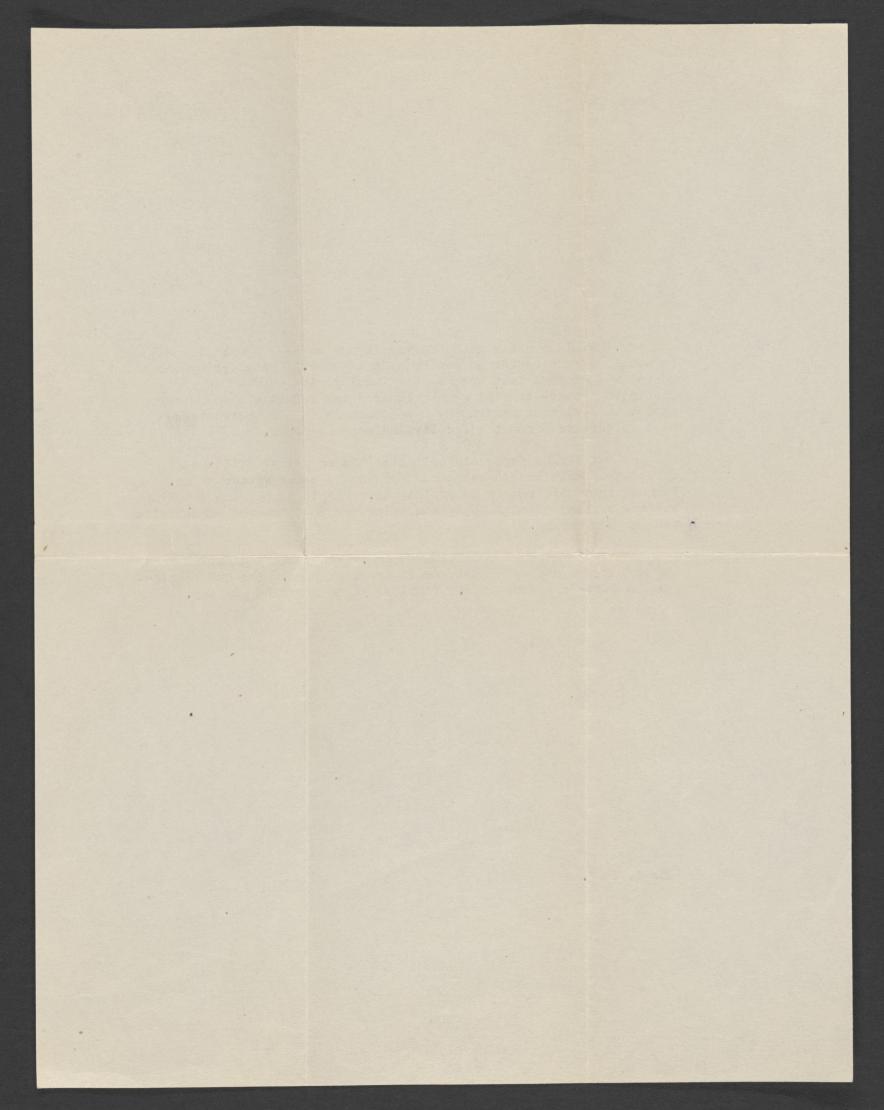

And yet I know perfectly well that the wonderful Williams offer which does indeed seem made for you is a far better thing. I know that with some kind of insight. For it is not the teaching but the writing which is the main thing for you, however wonderful a * teacher you may be.

I haven't heard a word from Dutton. How could you take the manuscript off my hands when it isn't on them. The new people--Charles Boni--are very good. I'd love to do anything you say.

Here is Dr. Frank's memorandum to the faculty---may I ask you to return it as early as you can without in the least curtailing your own time with it. I am thrilled by it--especially by the co-ordination idea; but it may all have been in your own thought. Last Saturday at Harvard and last Monday before the Wisconsin Alumna in New York, he have a compact statement of the whole, and on Saturday and Monday the New York World gave him two columns, each day, one on the front page, the second day with opinions from educators to whom they had telegraphed for an opinion on his curriculum ideas. It would be fine if you were to write to him, on this, and with any wish of your own to co-operate with these points of view. Rather fields of view than points, I should say.

I am glad that the letter reached you--I hope that I quoted myself correctly. That will be a sharp test of one's recollection of what oneprobably did not say, in a letter. I'm afraid I shouldn't be very much good for an accurate witness for myself. But I am glad that you had Dr. Meickeljohn's own letter. And am I not glad that I substituted my last paragraph to the post-master! Would that I had substituted a certain paragraph in a letter to you, fairly recently. But that we have forgotten.

After three joyous days of sun, with the robins back and the bimebirds here, and the evening grosbeaks still with us and the cardinal joyous too on the river bank, now, this morning, it is softly snowing. Not seriously snowing--merely a thoughtful reminiscence, but not the less SNOW: And as the river had not yet been persuaded to open, though it was hopefully darkening in all its ways and had spots open and running blue, now it is covered with a frown of white and doesn't look as if it would recover, or rather uncover, until April. But then, one does smell spring in the inside of the air--that is unmistakable.

What the new work is, I shall wait to hear. God speed to it--what a nice word. Now breakfast time.

Friday. Sixty five years ago to-day my father came to Portage from Ohio, intending to stay two weeks. He was nineteen, and walked down from the station through a little grove. And that day there was a foot of snow on the ground. The world is growing better.

Letter postmarked Mar. 21, 1927 from Zona Gale to Professor H. C. Tracy Thus Jon need 201 nothing & the Suith to Mr. Mac Crae ..... unless Jon chasse.

My dear Mr. McCrae; --

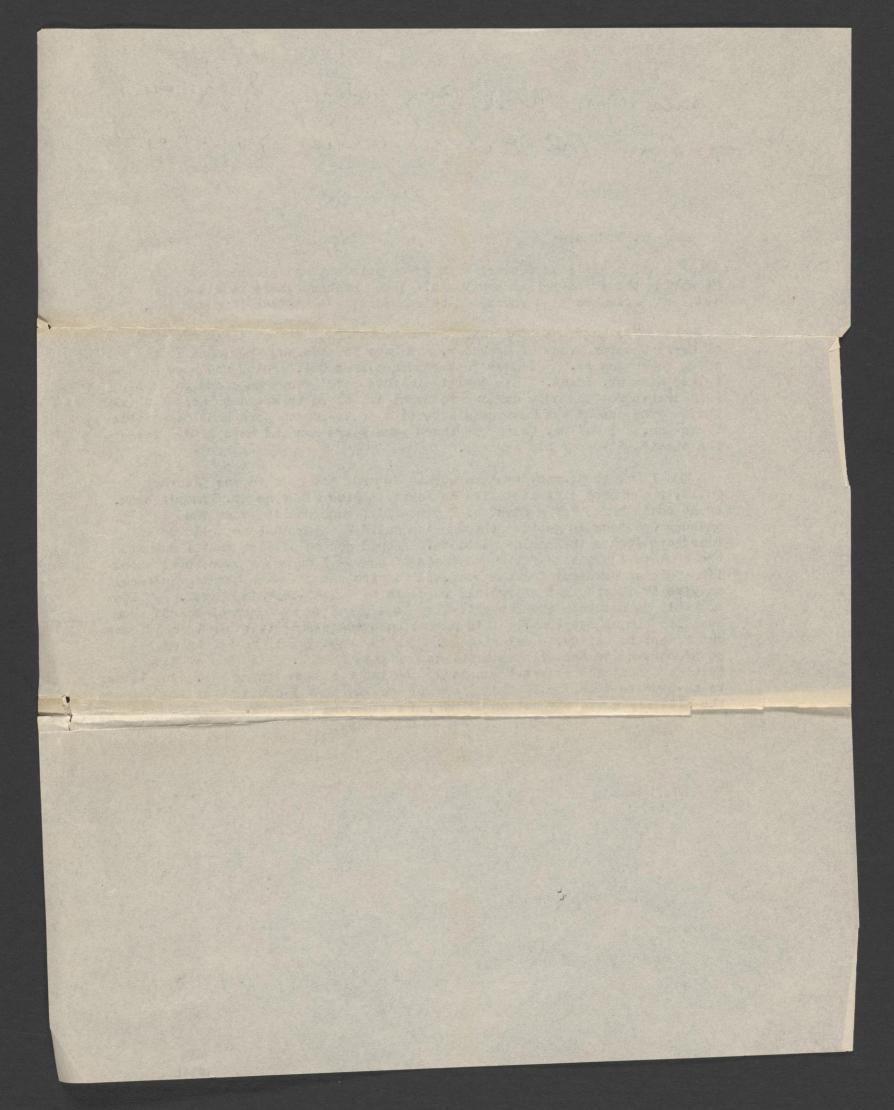

I shall look forward with great interest and pleasure to receiving the three Welliamson books. I do not know these novels at all, but belief such as yours, and being yours, is a perfect introduction.

Ypu have a belief which I greatly share, and that is in the work of Henry Chester Tracy of Berkeley. I have Towards the Open, and I am going to review it. I have just returned from California, and have talked with Mr. Tracy. His quality in this work brings us close to certain fulfilments not commonly our own to boast of, or so it seems to me/ I think Shadow gros one of the most exquisite bits of to-morrow here made digestible by To-day. I met Mr. Tracy out there some years ago and have always felt the inevitability of his arrival.

I am, then, very keen to submit Tpwards the Open to the Literary Guild, in the hope that its third or fourth choice might be Mr. Tracy's book. If he could have, for a first book , virtually, such publicity at the Anthony Comstock is getting through the guild, I think that he would be an immediate figure in American letters. Would you be willing that I submit the book to the Guild--for whose taste, of course I cannot answer, but I should like this opportunity for the book and for its author --- who has a great deal to give if they do not starve him to death at school-teaching first. You probably do not know the struggle that he has had to keep school-boards from quelling him, as they can! This part-time arrangement gives him some leisure but almost no salary, as salaries go. He is probably at the height of his power now, and he has written a unique and potent look. As one of his friends I feel the greatest gratitude to you for discovering him. And I want to co-operate with you, if I can, and in any way that I can, whether you approve the giterary Guild suggestion or not, in furthering his work.

Faithfully yours,

Portage, Wisconsin March 9,1927:

Afat heaven fish Professor Heury Chester Fracy 2637 Hillegass evenue Berkelegtonia

I don't know why this silence should fall upon me, beyond the exigencies of that which brought it on, namely, a week's absence, and then four day's absence, and then ten days of house-cleaning and kalsomining and resurfacing and wall-washing, and all that frenzy which attacks one in the spring. And why do they say that spring is not to be spelled with a capital letter? If anything is ever to be spelled so -- though why should anything so be spelled? --- why, then, I think that the seasons should claim their capital. I hereby invoke a capital for Spring, and do now bestow it. But that does not make Spring any warmer here and now. Maybe it will. If it grows warm to-morrow, I shall know the causes as one cause. So, then, that silence fell. But I mourned that it did so fall just as the lovely images and representations went back to you, and thus without a word. They came while I was in St. Louis and Indianapolis and Terre Haute and Quincey, were here on my return, were set up about and revelled in. Especially, ESPECIALLY, that heavely fish, that dolphin-like fish, careening with a bored look into the depths, the while those two calm ladies, as expressionless as space, sat on his back and received their experience. THAT is the way to accept life! Or is it, now? Well, it was for them--mother and child, with the look of indifference to all the waves and the wet, the tremble and the tint, the fish and its falling. That was magnificent. I adored it. I adored them all. The woody bird, in his safe covert -- so safe, so inestimably safe, from all past, all the futures, even from the present. THAT is the way to live! Or is it, now? The one lone lily-like, bridal beauty of a flower -- that was perfect too. With that precious line, outline, cut into the spaces about it, revealing more of space, a riper, mellower aspect of space, which reveals itself only in the near, the intemate presence of that bloom. And the bloom itself -- so removed, so detached, yet so woven into its own experience which, adorably, is seen to be the experience of all. The aloof plus the woven. THAT IS THE WAY TO LIVE. And no question about it. Well, thank you for my brief and beautiful glimpse of these things. I remember too the iridesence in the wave abd the sky --perhaps even in the paint. But it was, I know, more than paint. It was power. .... And how I was regreteful for that attendant psychology of yours, when the charming thigs went back to you, without a word. They were, said you, not much. They were, you began to say, perhaps not worth sending. I know that psycholgy well. If ever I read over a returned manuscript, it -- that mind--descends upon me. Why did I ever send that manuscript out at all? On the other hand, when I read the proof of something, I may, once in was a way, think that it isn't so bad. And when I see it in print, I may possibly think the same, providing it is between magazime covers. But let it once be bound into the finality of a book, and I am more likely to return to the returned manuscript psychology and think very little of it. This is a circle, very vicious.

Why, why should a coma which seizes on me, seize also on you. When my pen is not pointed to letter, my typewriter to type, why should also that strange paralysis prove itself contagious, and you too fall into sleep. Couldn't you write on, with the same bland indifference to waves and wet, to cold and chill, to distance and disaster, which affects that heavenly and earthly mother and child? You fall silent with the speed of an infection. Or maybe you welcome the chance to fall silent? Oh, of course, in that case...; I refuse to deal with anything pathological, save my own comas.

And now I have new shelves, six of them, extending across one whole wall of my room, so that I lift mine eyes as I write and look upon Gandhi and Ouspensky, Faure and Anthony Comstock, and even James Thompson. It is very nice even to see some empty shelf room, at last. But you are over in the corner behind me, in the case with the autographed books. You are also lying on the table downstairs--for Books sent me a copy of you when they asked me to review you. I shall send you a copy of that review within a few days--it is late, too late, and not femished now. But it goes. Such as it is---and so little such, I feel.

This review copy I mean to take over to Dr. Frank, when I have finished with it; because I have marked and marked it. I had the book with me on the St. Louis trip--and read it much on the train. Every word is being read before the review is sent. I marvel at you all over again--really, the book is not only magnificent, it is a thing rooted in asphodel, and the fragrance of Other Meadows breathes from the pages, so practically set with the soil and seeds of here and now. You have written of this world, with the second world showing through all the way, and what could anybody wish to do more than that.

Mr. McCrae asked me to name a dozen to whom he could send copies. I named the enclosed, who may have been also on the list which we made before the fire, on a forenoon still not so long ago; but in any case, thse are people whom two copies wouldn't hurt. However he will know if we have duplicated. I am suggesting to him that he ask Cornelia Stratton Parker to write something about it. Her word carries a long way.

Now I must go to work. Isn't it curious that all letters are not work? The stars of the daytime, may they shine for you.

Oh, but I love the new address. I shall use it and can remember it. I could use and remember ANY address, rather than that irrelevant and unreasonable Hillegass which means nothing and never did. This -- what could be lovelier. And the straight consideration of the "inanimate", in having the same figures as the Hollyowwod home. So you go there, for the summer, afterward. That is fine, with the roof-tree doubly sheltered by a canvas, and I hope that it may mean all.

Lately a Mrs. Johnson came tp see me. She was at Wisconsin looking for an English teacher for her school in the south, which as she told me about it, seemed a wonderful school indeed. She took your addr. address and said that she wald send you material about the school, as I recall it. But she paid only one hundred dollars a month, and settled in her mind that there would be no possibility of getting you. However she was so thrilled by your book that she may have hoped beyond hope. Her address as the moment I will send you -- she is still in St. Paul, I think. I did think for a moment that one hundred for nearly all leisure in a warm climate might be virtually being paid for taking one's own time to write. If you think anything of it, --but I do not believe that you will. Her system is wonderful, and her ideas are all, as mearly as I could see, those which fit in with your own.

The Mountain of Jade was here on my return from a weeks absence, in Minneapolis for a banquet of Theta Sigma Phi, the national convention of that jour malistic sosority, where I held forth. And then went by day, an eleven hour trip to Indianapolis, where I had three days at the sessions of the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored people convention. A great experience. One ese evening Mr. and Mrs. Ransome, fine and landed colored people, gave a dinner --- Mr. du Bpis, James Weldon Johnson, William Pickens, Bishop and Mrs. Vernon, Mr. Spirgarn and me, the last named and I, incidentally, being the only white folk present. Did you know that August 26th was your birthday? And that it was mine? This is the first time since we knew that we had collaborated on birthdays that we have not exchanged greetings. My thought came just a day too late for yours to reach you on the day. And I did not send you a telegram because I did not want to put you to the extreme of sending me one. And then, that birthday afternoon, four relatives arrived and stayed for eight days, with three other guests here for a day and a night in the course of that time. So that there really and literally hasn't been a time when I could send you an adequate word until now. Have you such a good reason as that for your honorable silence, as good a reason as I for my miserable silence? For your sake as well as my own, I hope so. A happy birthday, and many more things and days.

> But that isn't what this letter is about. That which this letter is about is the following. I recall a brief paragraph in your letter, once this summer, to the effect that I received certain things with the aplomb, or the indifference, or the unconsciousness of the two who took their heroic plunge on the back of the dolphin-fish. Well, then, recently I sat in a chair in my work-room beside which is drawn a little table covered with books. I lifted one. And there lay a folded paper. I unclosed the folded paper; and what do you think smiled u p at me? What but the lines and curves of ---- Given. No less. That lovely and limpid and opal thing, all this time, had lain unread and unregarded beneath a book which must have been hard at hand when your letter, enclosing Given, was read. What happened? Wad I called away--did the telephone ring--was I taken whether in the body or out of the body I know not, into a dream. What happened? In any case, never , never have I seen Given until at that moment. X And how beautiful beyond words it is. It made me ache and joy and cease-tobe, and be-more than might be, beginning with always. Oh, you should have this year, you must have this year; and the teaching of classesful is nothing as compared to this year and that which you shall give from it to all the people. But yet my joy in Given was so terribly tempered by wondering what, and what on earth, you must have thought of no comment at all from all that loveliness and treasure. Not that it mattered to you, but I should hate to give you such reason to feel that the Middle West is SO. Let me, on that, ask you about something else: What has gone on about Introvert, of which you once sent me such an engaging beginning? That must be given all its other wings. There was, you may recall, in it a purple and plum and pearl sky. That was a perfect sky. There might .. In the proof of the new book by Elizabeth be also peach, at twilight. Madox Ford (You saw her first book, In the Time of Man?) there was this: "She sat, in actor green > day in late April", so and so. That is nice. This new book, Green Pastures, I did not like so much as a whole, though the detail of it is rich and thick. By the way, she has been living at some beach -- Hermosa? Rodondo? --- not far from you. I think the former. She must be a marvel. She has suffered terribly. If you are there, why not look her out. I do not know her, but what does that matter. We do, as a matter of all fact and more fancy. Y "A Cold Inten day" I tro.

But, as a thought, what does the year off do to your chances for a Carnegie pension? Or is that only for Universities? And have you no teachers retirement fund in California? Here every human being who pays income tax pays a per cent toward the teachers pension and retirment fund, applicable to all teachers. Have you none such? I confess I had not thought of you as near the retirement limit -- the twenty-six years seems simply incredible. But doubtless you have looked into all that --- not so doubtless, after all, you being you and concerned with better matters. Still, after all, it is vital now to have a period of leisure, some stretching years, conserved to you. A time to teach two hours a day would be wonderful, somewhere; then you would have your continuing labaratory. Far from Towards The Open being your "was my contribution" it is but the beginning, the first horn, of your will-be my contribution." You have many millions of motions to make, through words and dreams and facts and such. Oh, many birthdays to you ....

Was this not strange--or , if strange is not the word, then there must be a better. The enclosure to you was sealed and ready to go yesterday afternoon when your letter came in, with its query about a reply to your reader who had asked about personal survival. And, in my same out-going mail, sealed and ready or nearly so, was the enclosed review of Basil King's The Spreading Dawn, which I did last week for BOOKS, and a copy of which , with a letter, I had ready to send to him. In my letter to him, I had told him of an Indianapolis friend who was playing golf with a friend of his whom he had never credited with that sort of thought; yet suddenly he heard this man saying: "Do you think there is any chance of it--survival?" -- and realized that this man was thinking of the daughter whom he had lost, and longed to see again. ... So when your letter came, I added a post-script about it to my letter to Mr. King. .. The book is really wonderful --- and I recommend it entirely to meet any such query. He is only supposing, and yet his speculations drop into ones mind just the tone color, or whatever, to leave one in the mood for .. There is another book, a tiny one, called "They Are immortality. Not Dead", which is a compilation of all that various great ones, from Plato, and on, philosophers, poets and lit'ry men in general, have said on the matter of immortality, all positives. I do not reachl the one who compiled the book, or who published it, but Brentano would know, and if you gave your correspondent the title, he could doubtless find it for himself. That would have very little of the East, in it by name at least. And Mr. King's has none at all, by name.

And now at this point I wish that I could get in an air-plane and go on up. For I have to tell you that I am forwarding your letter to the Literary Guild to Mr. Van Doren, TOGETHER WITH THE COPY OF JADE MOUNTAIN. Yes, I know. Isn't it. Wasn't it. Deal with it as you must. Forgive it you cannot. And I shall not wonder nor complain. But my apologies and my peccavis --is it spelled so--echo across the desert in a long thick dense mass of trailing sound.

Your outline is enticing in the extreme, particularly, for me, your inspired classing of the literature of disillusion with the literature of decadence. These are, of course, facets of one and the same thing--but I had never before so seen them. What a blow to the discoverers of disillusion!  $W_E$  are merely repeating the slump of the Mineties, in a varying chord. Please send some more of this. ..And for what you say of Y. G. A. Dear Zona:

I have some sort of a recollection of getting "Toward the Open" but for the life of me I don't remember anything about it and I cannot find it around my desk to; day. I get literally carloads of books in the Book of the Month list and from publishers, and when I get done with the Book of the Month list, I am generally pretty ragged. But if you can get another copy of "Toward the Open" I will certainly read it. I want to read anything that you like.

I read this month "Bad Girl" and voted for it as the choice of the Book of the Month only to find after my letter had gone that you people of the Guild had chosen it. What a beautiful book it is! Yet I think it would have been just as beautiful with half a dozen lines deleted in the seduction scene.

Gosh! Why?

I am sixty years old today and I wonder if that has something to do with it. Would I have enjoyed it thirty years ago?

Anyway it has been a good show and I feel in the midst of the big second act. Lord how I hate to get up and go out and catch the 5:15 for God knows where.

Affectionately yours

Your letter was waiting for me when I reached home last night. I am writing the acknowledgement which you waived because I hope you realize that anything I said yesterday about book reviewing had nothing to do with this situation - in which I am wholly at fault. I received the book last fall, read the first two chapters while sitting of with my camera on a bank waiting for a beaver to appear his dam, found it interesting and provocative...and then, on my return, promptly forgot all about the implied (and accepted) obligation to review it. I say accepted because before leaving I wrote to Mr. MCrae, thanking him and maxim saying I would be glad to do the review.....I have brough the book to the office and have, at 3.30, read past page 200. I shall write the review next week. .....Yes, I shall write an explanation to Mr. McCrae but not, if you please, till I can say the review has been done.

Restore them if you will, he said, but do not ply me with foods, for it is useless. And he opened his eyes, found hers. They spoke a known language. It is old. It is new. Peter was at home there, more than in the wide still spaces of the palace, more than in its a carved panels, its air of ancient closure. Take me, he said, to your parden. We shall be alone there.

They went to the plum tree that flowered and leaned over a dark water. Why, She said, did you delay so long? It is almost done blossoming. And he saw that those white blooms were indeed falling. Each one as it fell, floatedxamile lay for an instant on that dark water, in which flakes of ice were floating.

It is true, he said, I am late. Yet it is early as seasons go, for you see there is still ice in the current. I was delayed, but I am here. I will delight in what I have, not mourn what I have not.

So they met and were parted before Day came, who is the great destroyer-before that stern Mandarin, the Sun, had seen them.

It was nothing. It was comething to remember. It was one of many adventures of which the men of Daylight keep no record but the men of dusk and dream hold important.

And while Dr. Cross admired them very much I imagine he found them not quite right for him, and he returned them. Perhaps the books have been too recently reviewed by them and thus not long enough ago reviewed to be handled in this way by him. Some of the other chapters of Paths of Perception will go to him as soon as I hear from the Atlantic, either for or against. These must be kept going, for they are quite too lovely not to be read. I should say there is no question about them as a book later in one of the university presses or elsewhere.

Dear Miss Gale:

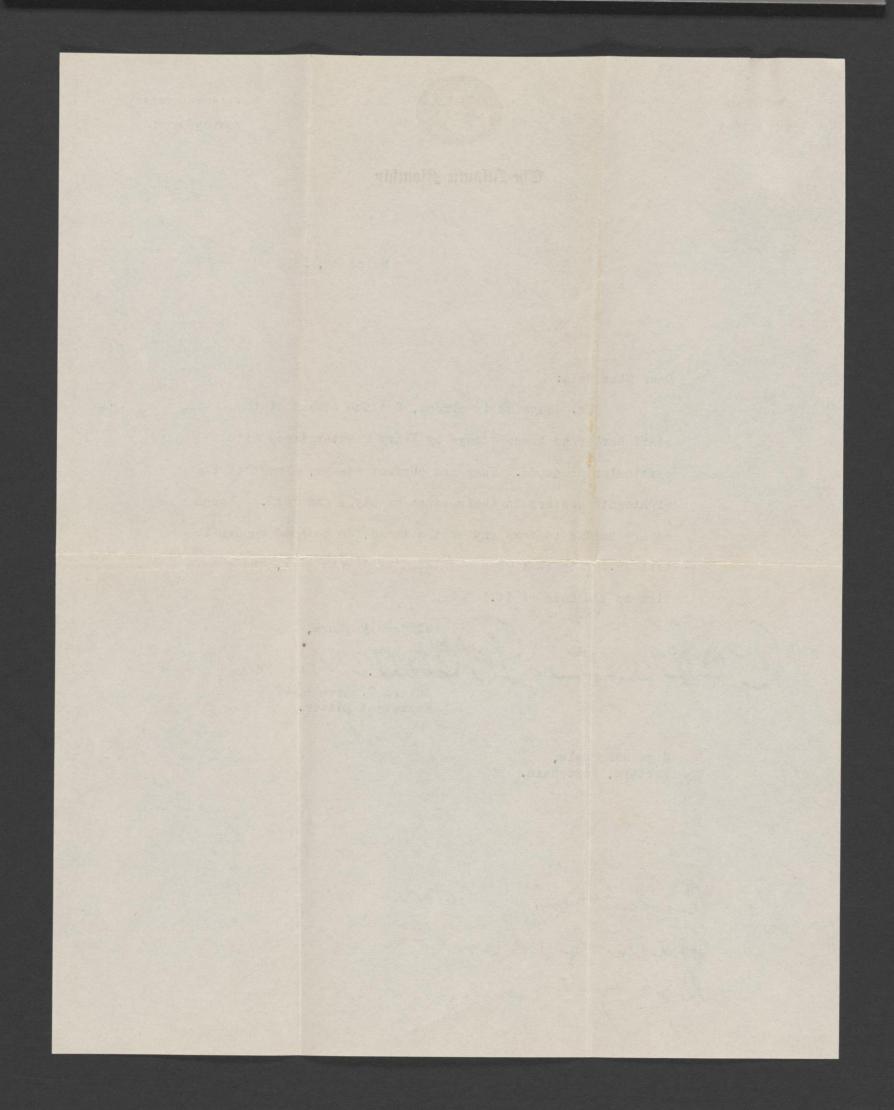

Mr. Sedgwick is abroad, but the others of the staff have read these essays by Henry Chester Tracy with particular pleasure. They are perfect essays, almost of the eighteenth century in their sense of style and form. Though we are unable to take any of the three, do be good enough to tell Mr. Tracy that we are interested in his work, and should like to see more of it.

Dear Miss Gale:

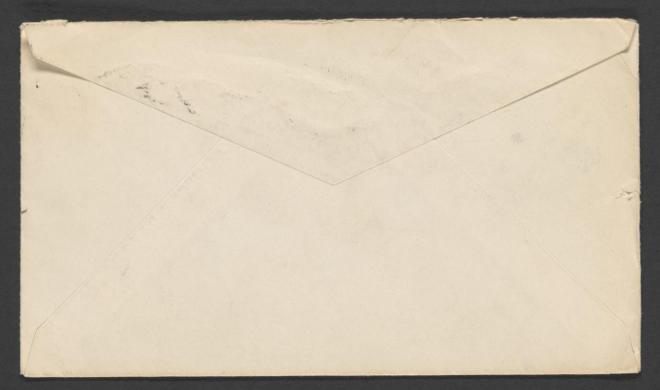

We are sorry not to see a way of using Mr. Tracy's "Paths to Perception" in The Yale Review. The manuscript, which seems to us very well written, suggests rather book publication with fuller and more leisurely development. We thank you, however, for letting us read it.

Very sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Tracy:

One more charming comment which brings you nearer to all that you were near before.

I shall of course do as you suggest about the agent. But when my eye fell on this enclosure I wondered if Doubleday might be interested. Very likely it is too lovely, however, because "jovial" seems to connote something less sensitized. Curiously one cannot be both. Or can one? It may be merely a matter of kind. Jane Addams is not jovial and Chesterton is, and so forth. Well, you are not Chesterton, thank your stars.

Nice about the Orage magazine. Of course England is your habitat and not Hollywood, except for climate and central heating plants. Fortunately the mails work, so that one may have both. How would it be to center on England for a while? If you get a success over there American publishers will sit up quite as do impressarios at a Paris or Munich success. They say that no grand opera singer has a hearing in America until she has succeeded abroad. There is more in this, however, than that. England does have the audience and America has merely audiences.

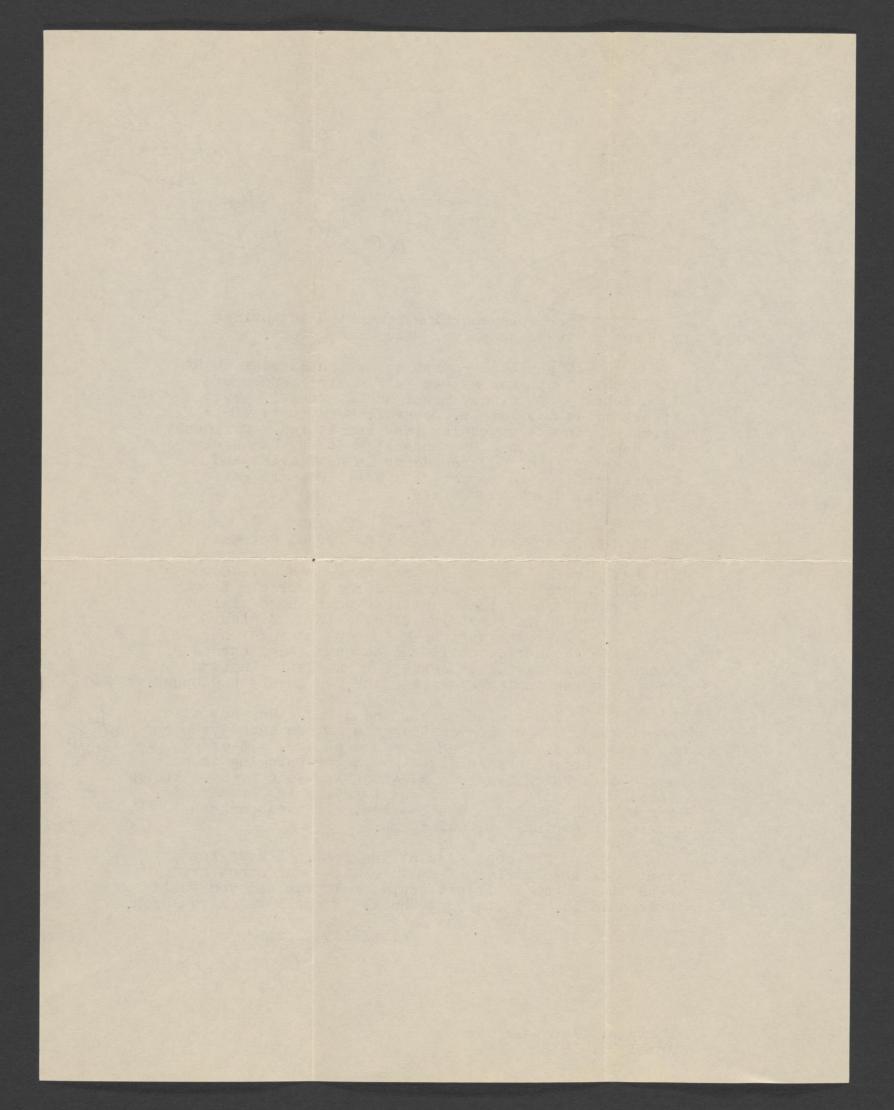

And how about all the other. Why not at least keep me posted even though my times have jyves as well as yours. Heavens! what a sentence. It drags like chains and creeks like iron work--swinging iron work--on a March night. A March Wisconsin night. Though this, to be sure, is April and I am looking at a robin. A robin, an elm bud and a bonfire, all these make a spring in a single window frame.

The best news at the last. I have found your book absolutely. I am sure that you cannot have read it, though it is not new, for if you had you would have said so. It is your book. It shall reach you soon.

Faithfully yours,

Miss Zona Gale Portage, Wisconsin

Dear Miss Gale:

I want to thank you for the manuscript by Mr. Henry Chester Tracy, which you were so kind as to send. This paper is everything that you say about it and I feel with you that Mr. Tracy is a stylist and philosopher to be cultivated.

From the special standpoint of the Scholastic, however, I do not believe our pages are the logical place for this essay. It is too adult in thought and in a sense too negative in thesis. The function of the Scholastic as a classroom magazine compels us to devote most of our space to information rather than opinion. Of course, you know our fundamental sympathies, and no school magazine has gone, or could go, I am sure, farther than the Scholastic in criticism of the basic assumptions of American life. We have been trying to do what we can to awaken students to an enlightened skepticism. But when we get letters from teacher subscribers complaining that Wells and <sup>S</sup>haw are dangerous reading for juveniles, you can understand how carefullywe have to tread in order to carry with us what constituency we have.

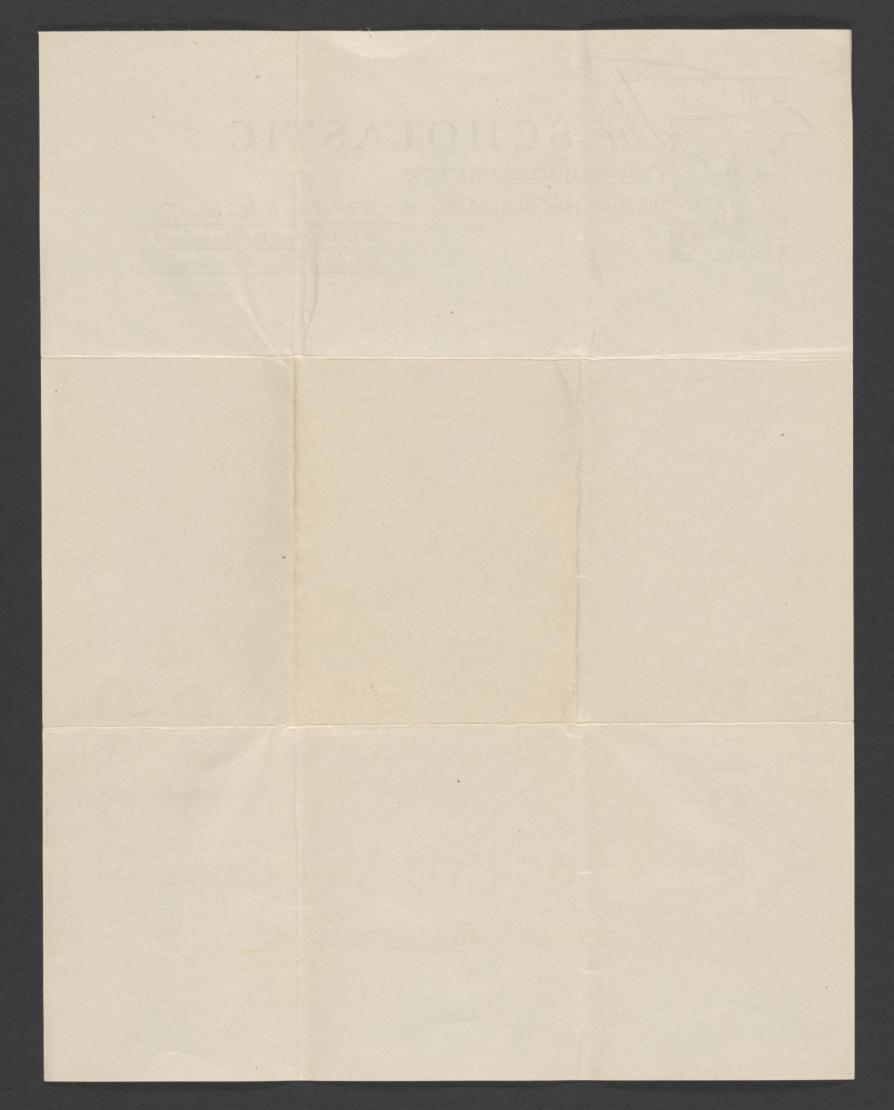

For all of these reasons, I feel that Mr. Tracy's paper would be much better adapted to one of the quality adult magazines and I am taking the liberty of sending it to Mr. Alfred Dashiell of Scribner's, because I think it might find a welcome there, as well as earn far more money for Mr. Tracy there than it could in the Scholastic.

I much appreciate your thoughtfulness and shall be happy to write Mr. Tracy and send him some sample copies of the Scholastic. It seems to me quite possible that he might produce some other manuscript that would be better adapted to our needs.

Dear Miss Gale:

Thank you very much for your note about Mr. Tracy's book of essays. It has just reached us with a communication from him. I regret very much that I was obliged to write him that on account of the present condition of the book market we were unable to undertake the publication of the manuscript. From what you say I am sure the manuscript is work of outstanding quality.

I had the rhythm, when the letter came, an hour ago; and when I read Introvert. Then things intervened, telephone, duty, words. But now I have read the letter to Murry and the rhythm stirs again. This that you say of that is a profound truth, and for me newly lifts its head as you stroke its hair. It is true that the time to answer a letter is while the last chords of the finale still open and close. So:

But what IS the overture? There are so many--such as your friends the Clapps, how immediate and demanding they sound, as if it were laid upon one happily to meet them instantly. How can one not have met them? And the edicational venture, adventure, well, that should come about by mere fortuitous concourse, as things DO come. And perhaps this will. In a bright heaven not known to superintendents. Heavens what a word -- I just saw it, tall and lean and pale and gaunt, with thin arms: Superintendent. Then in the overture a black note at the absurdity of waiting until Spring for the book. I nearly had to for mine--I was so impossible about the corrections, making them and making them past all decency, asking for page proofs and some on--I don't see how they stand it. It will be a month yet, though the last phanges were telegraphed, three days ago, in three fat telegrams. So bungling, that is -- one ought to write and let it be, as I imagine you do. I am an amateur at nearly everything. On that sad note the overture ends. But here comes the main theme. A letter from Carl Van Doren, saying that there is to be formed The Literary Guild, which will publish twelve books a year through the Viking Press. He is to be editor, and he asks me to be one of the associates. A phase of the duty of an associate will be to look out and report to him choice manuscripts, in the making. Do you see? The theme swells and sails and leaves the ground. You must have ready something that I can suggest to them--something lovely and second worldly. I expect anything of the nature of the new book , to follow, must, in the nature of things, go to Dutton and Chatto. (What, by the way, is the first title of the book? Only preface to Scientific Humanism stays with me.) But all the rest of you, the near and far you, the wing you, the innerized you , must be getting together the book which you will let me show to these people. The casual writing--yes; but threaded, in some way threaded. Think through, in what way this shall be. Not the Machen way, not even the Hudson way. The you way, not yet appearing. Not a fiction way. A Better Way. It may be something in the nature of a task to find it, to lay hold upon it, where it is, waiting. It may be an approach to the task of tasks. But it is yours to do. Please , soon! And now the second movement which is a wonder whether the Literary guild might not, just conceivably, like an organ. Whether The Adelphi isn't it. Whether ..... In short, I am brazenly sending on to Mr. Van Doren your letter to Murry----but it is necessary that nothing be said, even to Murry, now. Because the Literary Guild is not yet announced. I am merely telling you, as if you had dreamed it.

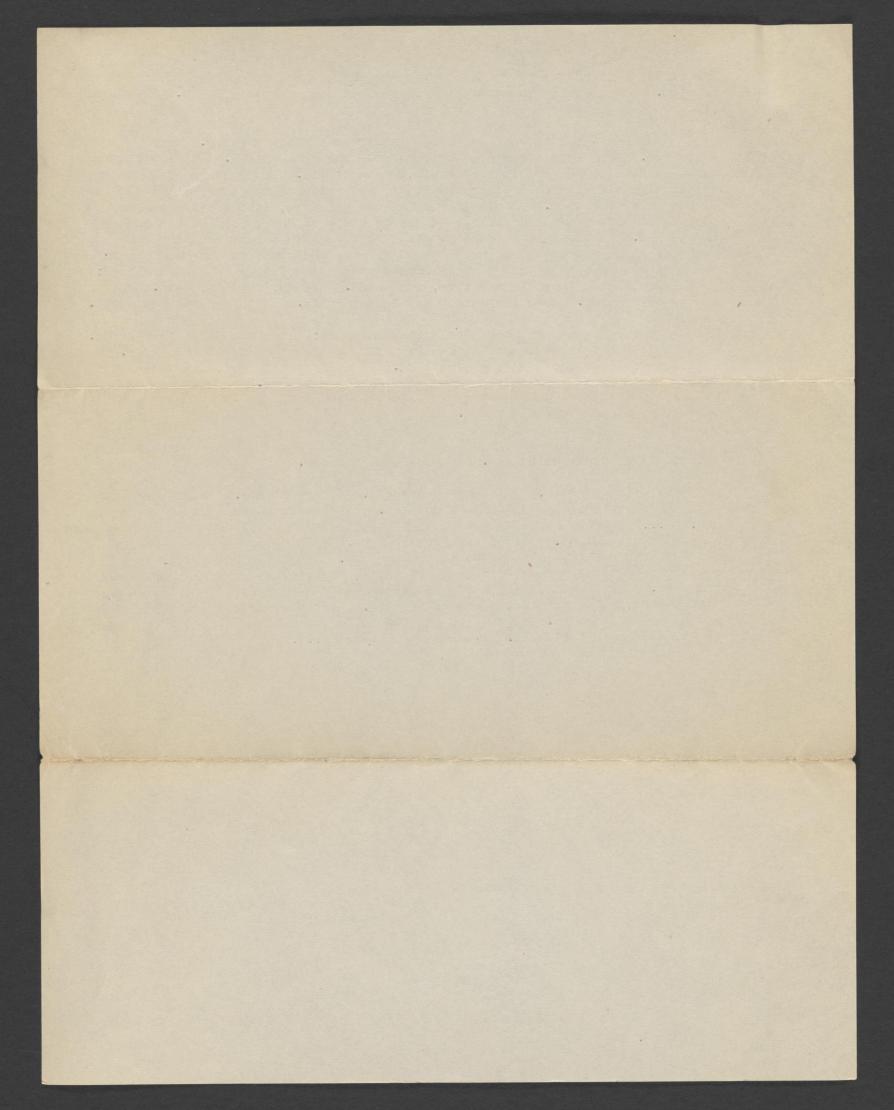

Has it already ceased? How marvellous of an Adelphi could come to America. But that is the next thing in the heirarchy above a dream. What would its bright name be?

And now the main, the swelling Ninth Wave of the symphony. The Introvert. How exquisite these things are--like snow-flames. I marvel at you--you seem to be a divine reservoir, inexhaustable. These things flow up in sprays like a fountain of fire and light, and mix with the air so that the air is the purer for them. But sheaking of the Universe, It is saying to you that these things must be integrated into a web of God, for the healing of the people. Well--that friend whom the Universe might form from the raw material which you are good enough to dignify by the name, such an one thanks you and asks you to think of that one as somebody chanting one lasting word: Mold these, shape them, thread them, the them . Let me, somehow, help. But not by suggestion. Nor by power, for I haven't it. But by something quiet.

Now the Hagen note, the Black Alberich snarl: The Long Island incidence. Like the black of trunks and earth among such a heaven of feathered green. It doesn't, of course, mean anything else. It didn't reach you, did it?--did it? Didn't you --well of course you did-"knit your aura." But not so tightly that that black geometry of winter, lacing together the light leaves of spring, might not take its place.

And now the whole thing goes to pieces on the single human word which you said to Murry about being ill. Really? But not now?

Yes, that address. I looked everywhere. I have it now. And I perceive that the rhythm, being begun, does not end. So let it go on, even though I do end. ...Two weeks ago somebody brought me a great mass of blue fringed gentimes --that says gentians. Did I tell you? ...I know some of those Berkeley hills--through one morning spent in them, alone. The Piedmont Hills. I recall some sort of winding park, with sloping paths, and violets growing sparsely at the side. And a little inn, with nobody there--a woodcraft,rustic,one room. place, warm, with curtains, and nobody there. I sat alone and had a sandwich and a glass of sherry. The hills and the violets and the sherry and the being alone, and again the hills. And the word Piedmont....

SANTY

THY, land's sake, child, of course they is. I reckon I've saw him nigh onto a hundred times myselfand he'll be here drecktly, too. He's jest a whoopin' down across them icebergs on his way here, licketty split, an' you betchy he'll be here on time, too. Never knowed him to fail yit, an' I reckon they ain't nobody's had more ex-per-ience in these matters than me. No, course you ain't saw him yourself, but you got a purr-r-ty fair idee how he looks, now hain't you? Sure! I knowed you had. Why, I ree-collect jest as well's 'twas yestiddy the first time I see him. Let's see. what year was that? Um-m. Brother Jim was born in-well, if I hain't clean forgotten. Well, well, well, 'pears like my mem'ry's kind o' failin' me on little things like that, but when it comes to Santy Claus-you betchy I don't forgit anything about him.

I kin dee-scribe old Santy with my eyes shet. Tall? No, not exactly tall.

Kind of a little squatty roly-poly feller, if I remember right, with the funniest little eyes you ever see. Reg'lar little weasel eyes, but so full o' fun that they jest plum brim over and spill out on his cheeks. Not what you'd call a real handsome man—but, oh, powerful good-natured. Jest do anythin' fer you if he takes a shine to you. If you're real good an'—

How? How do I know he's comin'? Well, well, well, jest listen to the child. How do I know? Why bless ve. I know the signs as well as I know beans. You know how a new Noev's Ark smells, don't ye? Well, that's one of the signs. Whenever you go down to the store and ketch a whiff o' new Noey's Arks, you c'n make up your mind that Old Santy's powerful imminent. And another thing, too, along in the late fall when th' year's gettin' kinda old an' decrepid like, jest hobblin' along to'rd December, you c'n jest taste the Santy Claus feelin' in th' air. Why, goodness me, it's jest as plain as spring fever is along in April. You know what spring fever is, don't ye? No? Well, well, what in th' world do they learn ye in school nowadays? That too, they take off their clothes and wave their ga'nt arms as a kind o' signal. Always 'peared strange t' me that the trees take off their clothes in winter when it's turrible cold and put 'em on in the summer when it's so warm. I've thought about that a heap, but I never quite got it figgered out. I'm goin' to start on it again next week. How? Oh, to be sure, I'll tell you.

Well, as I was a sayin', Old Santy sends this yere advance agent down to notify people. Then, purty soon, he follers him up with another oneold Mr. December First. Along he comes to politely hint about Santy, and then old Mr. December Tenth, he speaks to you mighty plain. "You better begin gettin' ready," sez he, and off he goes, an' along comes a whole bunch of 'em, each gettin' more an' more ex-asperated. I tell ye the excitement is jest about near the bustin' point by the twenty-fourth of December. If Chris'mas had came two days later the strain would be too much. Old Nature would jest throw up both hands an' call in th' doctor. But you see they figgered 'n this, so Chris'mas comes two days earlier than it would if it came two days later an' so ever'body manages to live through it safely. Talk about excitement! Why the buzz o' childern talkin' an' the thumpin' of little hearts on the night afore Chris'mas is enough t' plum drown'd out the sound o' sleighbells, to say nothin' o' th' crunch o' fur boots on the housetops.

I tell ye, folks begin to hurry 'round like all git-out, jest afore Christmas. But nobody gits mad. They all git more good-natured right along. Kinda funny about Santy that way. Whenever I feel Santy a comin' I begin t' feel a heap better man than at any other time o' th' year. 'Pears like a big revival meetin' was goin' on in me. All the good in me wakes up and I feel sort a friendly to'rds ever'body and ever'thin', regardless. That's the nice thing about Old Santy. He makes you fergit your little worries and yer orn-ryness. You fergit your own self an' begin to think about other folks and how to make 'em happy. A kind a warm feelin' seems to squeeze all through you an' you feel heaps better fer it.

Old Mr. Grouch-What! never heard o' him? Well, he's a cantankerous old party that's always hangin' around makin' folks disagreeable. Him an' Santy's bitter enemies-have been for a thousand years, I reckon. You betchy, when Santy comes along th' first thing he does is to chase old Grouch away, an' the old Mr. man keeps away as long as Santy's around the neighborhood, I tell ye. Santy's what they call a an-ti-dote, as the feller sez. How? Why don't Santy stay all th' time? Well, you see the fact is, Santy's got a heap o' office work to do up at his shop. He has to keep the Book. He has t' put all th' names of the childern in a great big book, and that keeps him purty busy most all year. Ever' new baby has to be put in that book of his'n. He keeps gittin' reports all th' time ever' day—ever' minute, almost. You see, the Stork tells him.

Yep, the Stork's another advance agent. I reckon he's the principal advance agent because he is a couple of years older'n Santy himself. I can't exactly explain it, but you can work it out by 'rithmetic some day when you git older. Jest add an' subtract an' then you have th' answer, slick as a whistle. Well, anyway, this Stork keeps track of all th' new babies an' he hustles back an' ree-ports to Santy-a verbay-tim ree-port, I reckon-not jest an ever'day kind o' ree-port. He notifies him about another stockin' to be loaded up with goodies, an' Santy puts it all down in his Book. Once in a while, pore feller, he has t' scratch a little tad's name 'cause his mother has folded up the little stockin' an' laid it keerfully away in a trunk.

Then they hain't no use fer Santy to call there no more. Pore little tad's flew away again back to Never-Never Land. That's what they call the place the fairies live, you know. Lots o' wonderful people there-Sinbad th' Sailor, Jack an' the Beanstalk, Little Jack Horner-they all live there. My little gran'son, pore little boy-he's jest gone there, an' his mother's folded up his little stockin' an' laid it away. .... High ho, where was I? Oh. ves. Santy Claus! Well, he's a little roly poly-what? Sure enough, I deescribed that, didn't I? How old? Let's see. I used to know-almost to a day. I reckon about a thousan' years, more or less. I first heerd o' him when I was 'bout three years old - that makes him at least sixty-nine years old. You heerd of him when you was three, an' you're six now. That's three years more, so atween us two he's seventy-two years at least. Your brother heerd o' him when he was three, an' he's ten now. So there's seven years more. It's kinda hard to calcalate, offhand. You see, you got to 'low fer th' difference in time, as th' feller said. F'r instance, when it's ten o'clock out there in Chiny, it's yistiddy or to-morrow here.

All them things has got to be took in consideration when you figger out how old Santy is. I reckon I'm safe in sayin' he's purty well past middle age anyhow, ef the truth be known. But the funny part is he's got a heart like a little child, jest as young an' happy as a chipmunk. He's more fun'n box o' monkeys. He al'ays dresses in red clothes with a little red cap all trimmed with white wool. I reckon this wool was gathered by childern friends of his'n. Wool gatherers. Hi' jiminy, that's funny. I never thought o' that before.

Well, as I was sayin', Old Santy is a pretty busy man, in season an' out.

You might think that President Roos-velt was busy, but he hain't a patch alongside o' Santy. Why, I reckon he has to keep tab on nearly a hun'dred million thousand childern, from one end of Chris'endom to the other. An' he has to take presents to all of them. Now, f'r instance, sposin' they was five hundred million thousand childern. an' sposin' each one of 'em lived a mile apart, there you have five hundred thousand million miles. all to be covered in one night. That's a right smart chore, I tell you what-a pretty big ja'nt, when you figger delays an' sech. So he ap'pints assistants-deppity Santys, so to speak, two or three to ever' fam'ly. These here deppity Santys do all th' work an' give Santy all th' credit, so's to cause no ill feelin'. These deppities keep track of all th' different childern. Ever' time a little tad wishes f'r anything one o' these deppity Santys makes a memorandum of it an' goes out an' getsit. F'r instance, ef a little kid, one of these little Storkites, mumbles somethin' or other, the lady deppity Santy translates it to mean "doll," or somethin' o' that sort. Sometimes a little kid sez he wants a pony or a train o' cars, an' if the house is very small th' lady deppity has t' translate it to mean "rubber ball" or some little jimcrack o' that sort.

You c'n see these deppity Santys downtown ever' day in December, hustlin' around like a chicken with its head off, totin' bundles and spendin' money to beat th' Old Harry. Yer ma's a deppity Santy. So's yer pa. I used t' be but I hain't been workin' much o' late years. Reckon I ain't spry enough t' tackle them big stores an' the crowds o' folks. Kinda stiff in my j'ints an' my eyes seem to be goin' back on me. One o' these days I reckon I'll be startin' off to Never-Never Land, child. Take you? Why, bless your little heart, no! You want to stay here a long time with yer pa and ma, 'cause you ain't ready to go yet an' I am—an' you can't go till they call ye, you know....

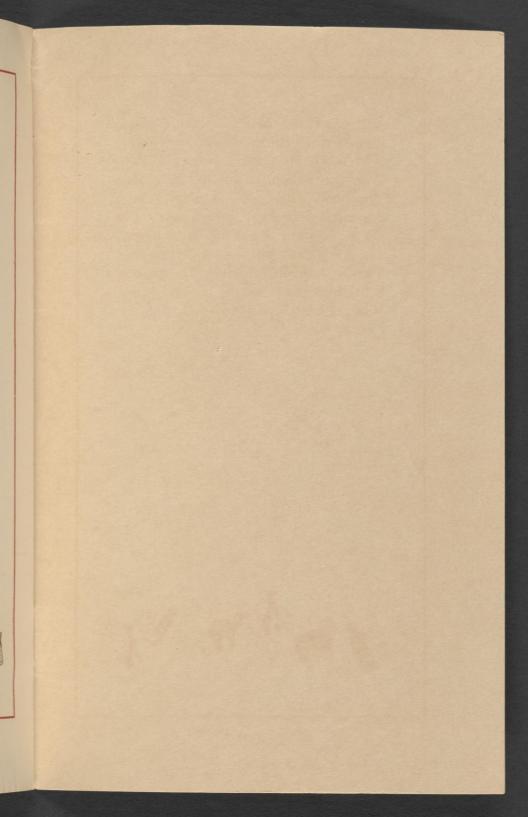

Course I can't vouch fer any o' these things I've been tellin' you 'bout Santy. Like as not they ain't true at all. Sometimes I jest say these things fer fun, you know. If they ain't true they don't count ag'in me, bein' jest in fun, you know.

Oh, yes, the toys. Well, old Santy has a wonderful workshop, leastways they say he has. I read it in a picture book. Well, anyway, they say that this here shop is quite wonderful—has three doors, one for Santy to go in, and one for him to come out so's to avoid runnin' into himself, and one t' keep burglars out. Kinda funny arrangement, ain't it? He's got a hired man t' make th' toys. This party makes all the toys an' hangs 'em out on the Ar'tic Circle to dry, an' along comes old Mr. Northwind and dries 'em. When they are all ready fer delivery, Santy hists 'em on his back an' goes kitin' away in his sleigh to fill up these stockin's I was speakin' of. Lots o' little detectives set up an' try to ketch him when he comes along, but none of 'em ever succeed. He's too sharp fer 'em. You see he sends along old Mr. Sand Man, who puts 'em all to sleep jest afore he comes, so he never gets ketched. Sometimes he can't get into a house on account of the Wolf. Lots of little houses have wolves at the door-not t' keep people away, but wolves that want to get inside, t' eat up everybody inside. Sometimes Santy gets scared away by a wolf, and the little stockin's inside don't get anything in 'em....

Well, land's sake, four o'clock! Who'd a thought it was so late? Run along now, child, an'—don't tell your ma what I've been tellin' you. Get her t' tell you about th' little Chris'mas Boy that lived a long time ago. That's a beautiful story fer you to hear, lots nicer'n th' Santy story. You get her t' tell it to you.

NEW W. H. HUDSON IS

HENRY TRACY, SAYS ZONA GALE

"Towards the Open" and "English as Experience" She Regards as "Most Significant of Modern Books"

By ZONA GALE

ENGLISH AS EXPERIENCE

is Henry Chester Tracy's new book. Mr. Tracy is the author also of "To-wards the Open," and "The Shadow Eros," both published last year. The present sketch by Zona Gale is taken from her brilliant biographical article. Copies furnished on request. E. P. Dutton & Co., Inc.

If it were known that one could look out from a routine world, with its mechout from a routine world, with its mech-anized attitudes and reactions, into "the open," upon the essence of person, thing, event, no one would fail of the privilege. For a flash of time that is the experience —or the illusion! — which Professor Henry Chester Tracy brings to his readers. And because of his blend of sound biology in both standardized and experimental schools, and because of an artistic percep-tion and expression well beyond that of most scientific men, he is called one of the greatest revealers of life. I should call him also one of its great entertainers. also one of its great entertainers.

For what else is there to write about or to talk about than the wild, the standard ized, the iree, bue bound plight in which we find ourselves, toward the year 2000? And when, in the welter of the hack-neyed in which man lives his days, one arises and lays magnifying glasses over man, and invites man to look at his per-sonality, his place and his path, and this with humor and with beauty, why then, there is a man whom mankind needs to read! For what else is there to write about or read!

Such a writer, for me, is Henry Chester Tracy. His "Towards the Open," and "English as Experience" I regard as among the most significant of modern books. If he knows life and its meaning as well as he knows English and its adventure, we shall do well indeed to follow him.

The "straight facts" of his unusual history are these:

He is the second son of Charles Chapin He is the second son of Charles Chapin' Tracy, of East Smithfield, Pennsylvania, and Myra Park Tracy, of Athens, of the same county in Pennsylvania (Bradford), born August, 1876. The Tracys were pioneers and hewed their own home in Penn's Woods; were of the Norwich, Connecticut, branch, from English stock, the Particular descent the Parks of Huguenot descent. *

At two he was taken from a Susque-hanna side home and spent all of child-hood in Marsovan, Turkey, where C. Tracy taught in a seminary which he afterwards developed as a college, becom-ing its architect and president, building it up with conspicuous success till the cataclysm of 1914, when it passed into the hands of the Turks. the hands of the Turks.

At twelve, homeward bound, Henry Tracy wintered in Switzerland, toured Greece, Italy, England and Scotland with bis parents and returned to Pennsylvania, to a private school for a year; then to Ohio, where he was established in the Oberlin (preparatory) Academy, while his parents returned to the Near East.

and adventured for three years in the west: was principal of a high school at Verna, Utah; homesteaded there; cut trails in Glacier Park for the Great Northern Railway: kept bees in Idaho; was married there to Miriam Lee. He wrote to Berkeley, Calfornia, asking for a position as assistant in Zoology; received the position; studiel also for his M.A. degree and received it the following year (1911).

While in Berkeley, on leave, he taught for a time in the Williams Institute, the subject of English, seeking an opportunit to try out experimental ways. During the later months of the Berkeley period he was invited by a Junior Supervisor of the University High School to demonstrate methods of interesting English classes in the sight and sound values of words. He determined as a result of eichteen months determined, as a result of eighteen months of observation, to write something on English as a human experience. He found English as a human experience. He found it needful, as a preliminary, to present a view of English differing from the com-moner one, attempting a more vital ap-proach. This expanded to the volume ENGLISH AS EXPERIENCE, which be came in itself a manual of aesthetic succ as a normally alert reader would which to use as a guide to active appreciation, and not passive submission to a tradition of not passive submission to a tradition of literary values handed down by experts. While reviewing, for this book, the literature of impression, he saw the need of a volume for the treatment of this new and special form of literature, and laid plans for it. AMERICAN NATURISTS will be a future book.

The story of his reaction to the formalism of present day education is told in "Towards the Open"-told with detachment sometimes, but with a kind of celestial zest always.

In varied ways he had tasted life: had found birds, as an emotion, and had written of them. He had come to love and to know music, to paint, starting! well in water colors and oils. Above al, to write as, to my mind, no one but Hud-son writes—exquisite English, not only interpreting the essence of all that he touches but taking the reader to the very but taking the reader to the very plane of the beauty which he interprets. And whether it is biology or Englisl, man or education, everything that he touches yields up beauty. In a day when the sordid is modish, Mr. Tracy writes about beauty with imaginative delicacy and without a trace of sentimentality. He helieves in heauty believes in beauty.

"Civilization," he says simply, "began when things began to be more beautiful than they need to be."

Such a man, writing about man as an organism. writing about the quest of "significant persons," or writing about English as literal experience, to be partic pated in, like life—such a man brings to everything that he touches a vitality that is electric. His books haunt one.

It is no wonder that Julian Huxley says in his appreciative introduction to "Towards the Open:"

And that William Allen White writes of it:

"As the centuries roll on, the truth that makes men free will come out of books like this.

But then there is the whole area of But then there is the whole area of Mr. Tracy's sketches and snatches written in a mood to evoke pure beauty, and with a power of English to make the evocation both power and process. In "Shadow Eros" there is again proved Mr. Tracy's power of writing rhythmic prose in words long-used but now first em-ployed as he employe them ployed as he employs them.

"An intimate light was upon them all, and upon the wide hollow of the ravine; not like the white whip of Day that drives through the busy hours, but diffused and softened. They breathed. He awoke near a needle-drane of pine."" a needle-drape of pine .

It might be absurd to call another man by another name than his own, but it is not absurd to call Henry Chester Tracy a new W. H. Hudson. A Hudson who to the biologist and to the student of English alike, speaks his own language. A Hudson who speaks and writes in some exquisite vernacular which every lover of beauty and of the understands and remembers. and remembers.

His four books are varied, lit with many lights, as if the poet, the biologist, the educator of tomorrow and the lover of English wrote in one, together with the soul of the east—the Armenian, the Turk, the Kurd . . .

His first book, "An Island in Time," reflected the impression of the Armenian upland and its people in an unspoiled state, and in a serenity of old culture as he knew it, idealized only as such a thing must be, to be grasped as a spiritual whole.

His second, "Towards the Open" reflected his life-conflict with the stereotyp-ing influence in schools, and was the pro-test of his entire spirit and mind against that dead hand on children's souls, and on populations, and on the life of adults —for he saw it all as one system of conformity and conventionalism in social life.

His third, "The Shadow Eros," grew out of exhaustion and self-spending; was a return to nature as to an allegorical Second World, in which the lost spirit of an early nature-love may live again, and a pre-erotic beauty be adored.

His fourth, "English as Experience," comes of another love, long latent but grown conscious through its own need to find words. For if the grown conscious through its own need to find words. For if the nature-world was one large continent of impression in his life, the word-world was another. But this last included other word-powers than those of symbol and image. It included sound, sense and something of the air of the numinous, which had come to him through the hearing of English read aloud.

To those who know him best, he bears the signs of the great and the simple— the reticence, the shyness, the precise knowledge of his subject withheld until it is asked for, then the quiet certainty; and withal the gentleness. The mother of a pupil in his biology class in a Los of a pupil in his biology class in a Los Angeles high school told me that her daughter counted her time from that class to that class. In the Williams Institute in Berkeley, where he taught for a time, the annual of his first year there bears this inscription: "To Henry Chester Tracy. He led us into athe of the imed Tracy: He led us into paths of the imag-ination . ...' laurel enough for any man. From the office of The Adelphi in Lon-don, ics editor, John Middleton Murry, Katherine Mansfield's husband, writes in effect to Ma. There his forenet in effect to Mr. Tracy, his frequent contributor of poignant prose, that he is, in appre-ciation, American audience enough. Anne Douglas Sedgwick, who knows him well, Douglas Sedgwick, who knows him well, writes of his power to make the English language new. Robert Nichols finds in him one of the American minds whom the rest of the race ought to pension to express itself. And the experimental edu-cation groups, the progressive educationists of this country, welcome Mr. Tracy as one who restrict the experimental as the one who regards the experimental as the norm of human endeavor, who offers a program at once socialized, spiritualized and practical, and who writes with the detachment of an auditor, the evangelical fire of a seer and with the artist's approach.

After graduation from Oberlin (Acad-emy and College) he was employed there as a teacher for two years. He resigned

"His book should be reassuring those who think that the inevitable break down of the old systems of thought and belief must bring chaos and degradation."

POST CARD

Dear Friends,

Your letters have been gifts. As expressions of sorrow and sympathy, they have been companions. But also such letters do actually join with other forces of strength from unknown sources of energy. It is the inflow of that energy which variously sustains us now: In a new awareness of life and love which is, so strangely, love's gift through death. In the knowledge that wifehood and motherhood, as we know them now, are correspondences to some profound spiritual order, but faintly felt on earth. And then in the unsuspected knowledge that as God is love, and as life is love, so death is literally love. Thus the wonder of being is clarified by her again, as she has always clarified it for us; and she is still under some divine provision to minister to us as she has always ministered.

You who know how she laid hold on the strength of love and how dynamic was her sense of righteousness, will know how that long consonance of hers deepens to us her reality now. Her intuition, her humor and her "merry tender knack" are seen to have been not merely her qualities but expressions of fundamental light and substance. Her name, Eliza Beers Gale, becomes a still deeper symbol of some mystery in which we share.

So do not think of us only as separated from her whom we love; but think of us as participating newly in her essence, permeated by her, identified with her and with those further projections of her whose dear semblance we so infinitely miss.

Dear Mr. Gilbert:

The book came and I wish that I could tell you properly what pleasure we have had in it. It seems to me a delightful narrative, charmingly told. I can see no reason in the world why it should not have a publisher. I have wondered if you will let me send it somewhere. Did you try Appleton or Bobbs Merrill--the latter at Indianapolis so keen about folk material. I should like so much to send it if you are willing.

Will is writing to you himself about it. I wish you knew how many times he has re-counted to friends the delicious bits in the book. I do congratulate you on it. Do you mind my confessing that I had no idea that one who has spent many years in other work should be able to turn out such sustained entertainment. I am eager to have a copy of it, and I am keeping your letter to make it an autographed edition when it is published!

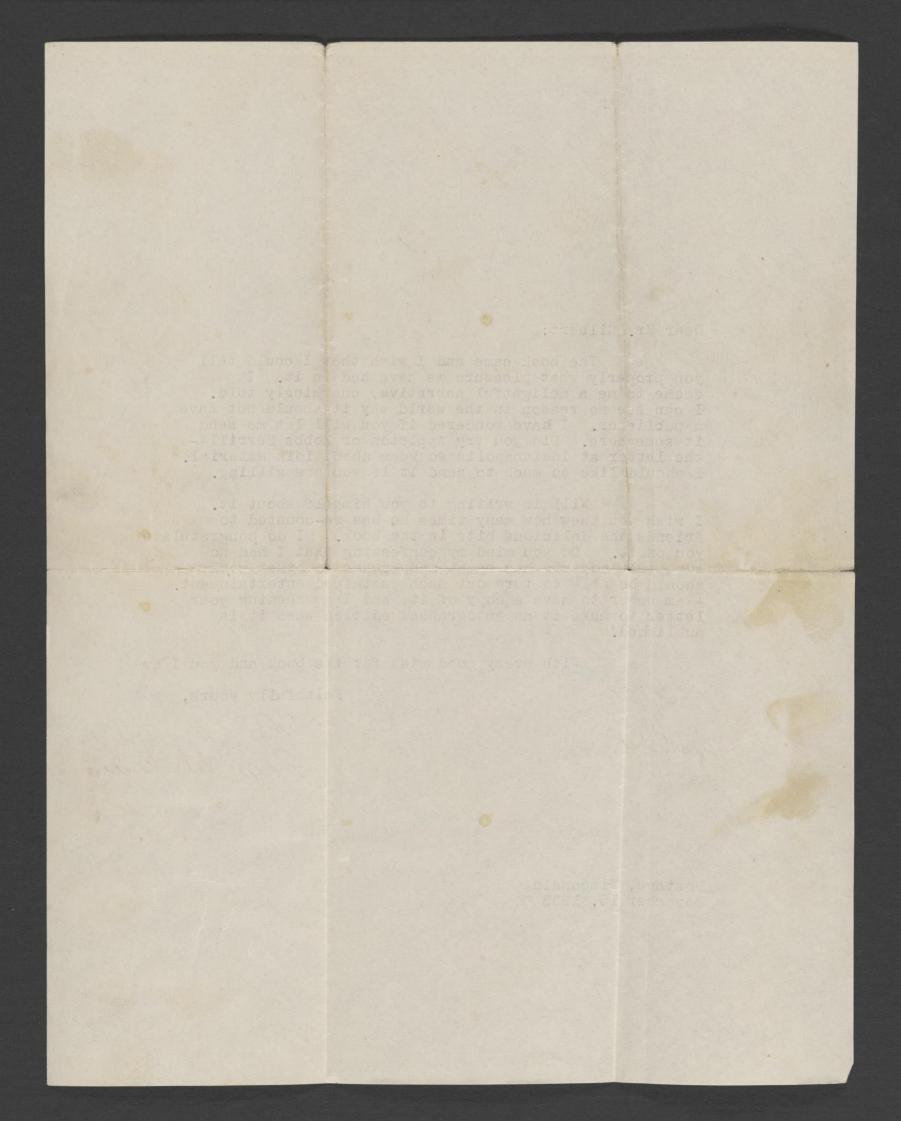

With every good wish for the book and you I am

Dear Sir:

Zona Gale Material

You probably recall that you obtained from us recently a pretty early Zona Gale story in an obscure magazine--The Four O'Clock--1897. Glad you got it and I think you'll agree that our price was very reasonable. It must have been one of her very earliest things.

I have somemore Zona Gale for you.viz .:

The Smart Set-Vol. XI No 3. November 1903 Ballad of the Deep White Wood-32 pages

Same- Vol. 18, No. 2 February 1906

The Interest --- short story -- pages 119 to 125 incl.

Same - Vol. 16, No.1 May 1905

The Motor Adventures of Lady Sybil -short storypages 101 to 113 inclusive.

Not having any biblography to consult, I naturally do not know whether or not these pieces were later published in book form, but they certainly antedate her first published b ook. You may have the Smart Set in bound volumes but even in that case I imagine you keep your Gale collection separate. I quote you for the three items----$2.00 post paid and believe them to be woith acquiring.

Thanking you for past courtesies, I am

Dear Mrs. Stout:

Thank you for your letter of March 15, which has just come to my desk. We should indeed appreciate receiving for the Library your mother's letters from Zona Gale as well as the other Gale materials you mention. It was kind of the Teichmanns to put in a good word for Wisconsin and the Memorial Library, and we are most grateful to them and especially to you for your thoughtfulness and generosity.

INVENTORY APPRAISAL

The library has received one inscribed and signed copy of a first edition of a book of poems by Zona Gale, plus a package of letters and clippings written by her or pertaining to Miss Gale and a photograph of her. The donor is Mrs. Frank Stout, who took this material from the estate of her mother to present it to our library. This gift has been acknowledged and is being added to the Zona Gale materials in the Rare Book Department. I have appraised this material for inventory purposes and arrived at a sum of $275.

Dear Sir:

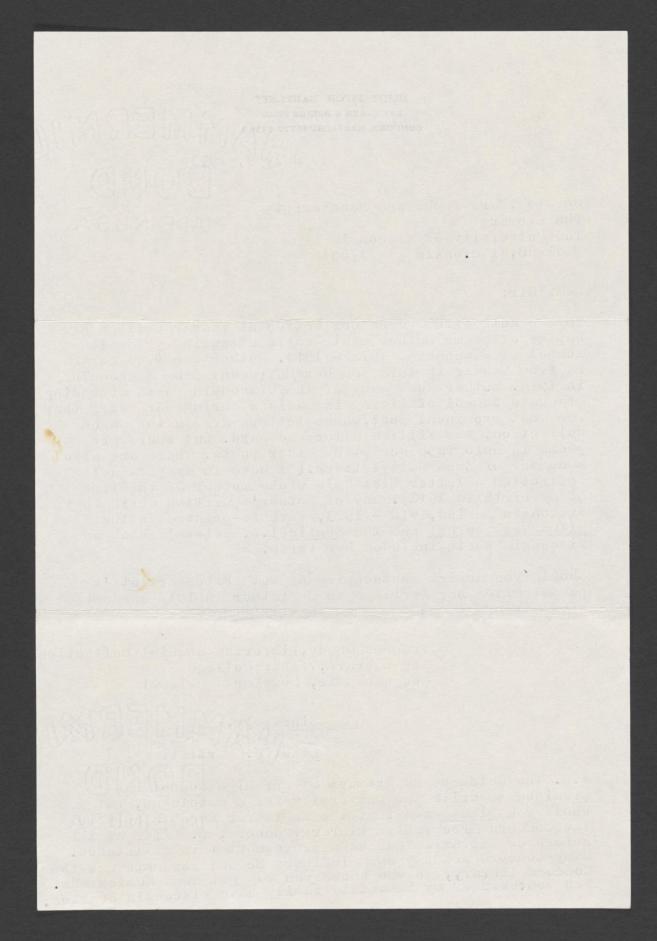

In the Ruth Fitch Mason Collection at Vassar College are copies of poems Mother wrote while attending graduate school at Wisconsin, 1912 - 1914. Mother received her BA from Vassar in 1912 and her MA (Econ) from Wisconsin in 1914. Mother knew many of the Wisconsin poets attending graduate school of living in Madison during her years there The most prominent poet, whose letters are in the Mason Collection, was William Ellery Leonard. But there are poems in holograph script by other poets. There are also a number of Zona Gale letters. (I have in my personal collection a letter Miss Gale wrote mother at the time of my birth in 1918). Many of Mother's written during her Wisconsin period, 1910 - 1923, were re-printed in the Milwaukee Journal and the Sentinel. A. Derleth's book on Wisconsin poets includes her verse.

Should you desire photecopies of Ruth FitchBartlett's poems( after her marriage to my father in 1917 she used his patronymic ) the person to write to is

Mr. Eliot F. Bartlett 261 Heath's Bridge Road Concord, Massachusetts 01742

Dear Mr. Bartlett,

I've asked our Registrar to send our present catalogues to the Concord Free Public Library, as you requested.

Thank you for your permission to let us obtain photocopies of your mother's poems and, we presume, correspondence and other materials in the Vassar College Library collection. Whenever we have money for photo-duplication of Wisconsin-related materials, we shall avail ourselves of your offer and contact Frances Goudy.

We do have a small Zona Gale collection here, consisting almost exclusively of original materials, and if you ever feel inclined to part with Miss Gale's letter to your mother, we would appreciate adding it to our holdings. Our Historical Society Library has a larger manuscript collection than we have, particularly Wisconsiniana, and you may want to get in touch with them regarding other materials you may have.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Felix Pollak Curator of Rare Books
