30 Years Ago, Sept. 1962

Resusci-Annie, the life-sized doll that is being used by Police Chief Ed Schultz and the Fort Atkinson Safety Council to teach proper mouth-to-mouth resuscitation techniques, is very life-like. Just ask Lorene Niedecker of the Fort Atkinson Memorial hospital staff. Miss Niedecker walked into the hospital cafeteria the other day but promptly walked out again with the complaint, "There's some woman lying on one of the tables in there." Investigation proved that the "woman" was just Resusci-Annie.

50 Years Ago, Sept. 1942

All of the staff for the new Fort Atkinson hospital has been hired, according to Superintendent Mary Callows. All are Fort Atkinson residents. The hospital is expected to open in early October.

75 Years Ago, Sept. 1917

The first heavy frost of the season came Tuesday morning, September 11, and considerable garden truck was damaged. The mercury during the night went down to 32 degrees and tomatoes, cucumbers and like truck were killed in many places. Corn and late potatoes were not damaged much. Tobacco fields in Rock county were turned brown for a heavy loss.

100 Years Ago, Sept. 1892

The Kreglow portable steam thresher from Hebron is in East Oakland again, and as usual the grain stacks are being taken down at a lively rate — at J. Wagner's today.

Piece of history

In 1988, Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis accepted the Democratic presidential nomination at the party's convention in Atlanta.
