To all who read this little book,
A greeting!
'Tis but a glimpse of college life
With all its joys and sorrows rife,
With all the work and all the play,
That go toward making up a day
So fleeting.

With gladsome heart and willing hand,
With every power at our command,
With labor great, with genius small,
We gladly send again to all
A greeting.

JOHN BUTLER JOHNSON, C.E.

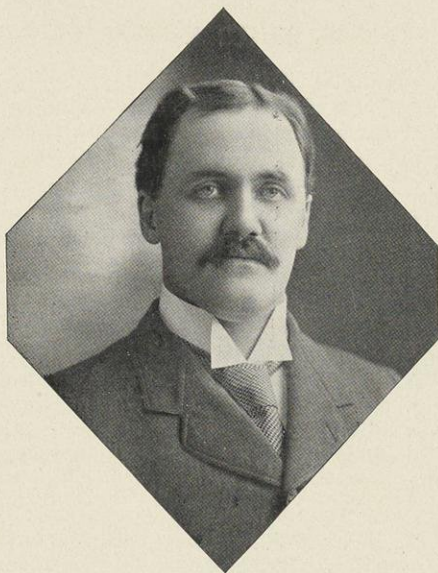

JOHN B. JOHNSON, Dean of the College of Mechanics and Engineering, was born in 1850, at Marlboro, Stark County, Ohio. He taught in the public schools of Indiana for several years and entered the University of Michigan in 1874, graduating four years later in the Civil Engineering Course. He served as a United States Assistant Engineer on the United States Lake Survey and upon the Mississippi River until 1883, when he was elected to the position of Professor of Civil Engineering in Washington University, St. Louis, which position he has continued to hold until elected to the position he now holds in the University of Wisconsin.

While occupying his chair in Washington University, Professor Johnson found time to do a large amount of additional work. He engaged somewhat in consulting practice and designed a number of water-works and sewerage systems. For eleven years he conducted the Index Department of the Journal of Engineering Societies, in which current articles of engineering interest were described. For eighteen years he was a member, and for two years chairman of the Board of Managers of that Journal. Two volumes of the Index Notes have been republished in book form. He has also written a number of engineering works, among which are Theory and Practice of Surveying, Engineering Contracts and Specifications, and The Materials of Construction. He was a joint author with Professor F. E. Turneaure of Modern Framed Structures. All these works have taken very high rank in engineering literature, and are regarded as the best works in the language in their respective fields. These works and his continuous contributions to engineering periodical and society literature, including several upon the Mississippi River and its problems, have made his name known and respected in the entire English-speaking world, and even on the Continent his works are very highly regarded by the professors in the leading Engineering Schools.

Professor Johnson's interest in developing the science of the strength of materials led him to establish a large and well equipped testing laboratory in St. Louis as a private enterprise, and it was in this laboratory that he made some fifty-thousand tests of timber for the United States Government.

Professor Johnson is a member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, London, which is the oldest and largest engineering society in the world; of the American Society of Civil Engineers; of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers; and past president of the Society for the Promotion of Engineering Education, besides being a member or past president of many other scientific and technical organizations of minor importance.

ROBERT ALMER HARPER, Ph.D.

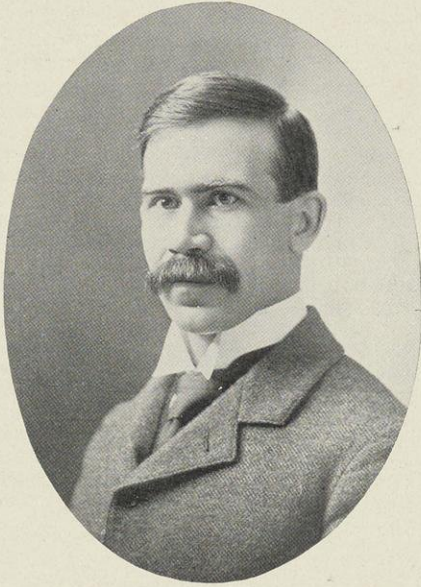

ROBERT ALMER HARPER, Professor of Botany, was graduated from Oberlin College in 1886 with the degree of B. A. During the school year 1888-1889, Professor Harper was a graduate student with Professor Brooks at Johns Hopkins University. He received the degree of M. A. at Oberlin in 1891 and during the same year was elected professor of botany in Lake Forest University. Professor Harper was absent on leave in Germany from 1894 to 1896, during which time he studied with Brefeld at Munster and Strasburger at Bonn. At the latter university Professor Harper received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. Upon his conclusion of graduate work abroad, Professor Harper returned to his position at Lake Forest and came from there to the University of Wisconsin last September.

CHARLES ALBERT CURTIS.

CHARLES ALBERT CURTIS, Captain U. S. A. (retired), was born at Hallowell, Maine, October 4, 1835. He graduated from the Military College of Vermont in 1861 with the degree of B. A. He also received the same degree from Bowdoin College. During the Civil War Captain Curtis served in the Army of the Potomac and on the Rio Grand del Norte; later he was engaged in operations against hostile Indians in New Mexico, Colorado, Arizona, and California. From 1869 to 1880, Captain Curtis was detailed for duty at the Military College of Vermont, he being president of that institution during the last five years of his stay there. He was commandant of the cadets and professor of natural science at the Bishop Seabury Mission (Shattuck School) from 1880 to 1885. From 1885 to 1889, Captain Curtis acted in the same capacity at the East Florida Seminary.

Captain Curtis is an author of very considerable merit. Many serial and short stories from his pen having been published by Harpers and the Century Company.

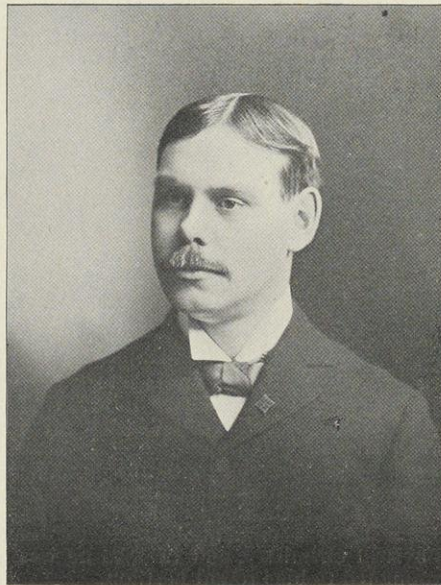

ANDREW ALEXANDER BRUCE, LL. B.

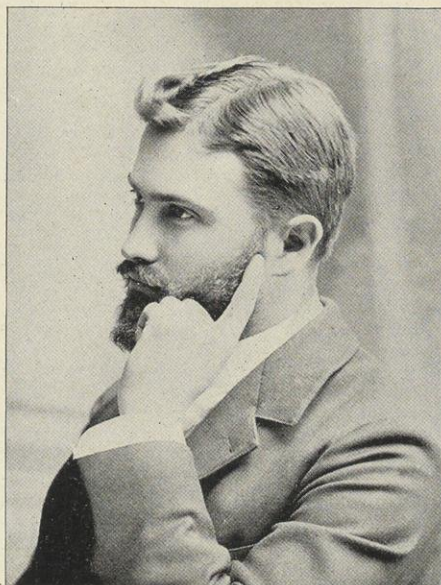

ANDREW ALEXANDER BRUCE was born in 1866 among the hills of Southern India. His early education was obtained in English boarding schools and in Bath College, one of the English "public schools." At the age of fifteen, he was left an orphan, and a few months later came to America. On landing at New York he found himself cast entirely upon his own resources. The next few years were passed in Minnesota. In 1886 he entered the University of Wisconsin and was very active in many branches of college life during his collegiate course.

After graduation he was employed for a time in the law department of the Wisconsin Central lines. Later he began the practice of law in Chicago, becoming prominent in the enforcement of new reform laws and in the Hull House movement. In 1897 he became Professor of Railroad, Constitutional, and Administrative Law in the Chicago Law School. He left this position for the one he now holds, that of Assistant Professor of Law in the University of Wisconsin.

BERNARD VICTOR SWENSON,

BERNARD VICTOR SWENSON, Assistant Professor of Electrical Engineering, was born in Chicago in May, 1872. He graduated from the Chicago Manual Training School in 1889 and in September of the same year he entered the University of Illinois. He took two courses, Mechanical and Electrical Engineering, completing them in four years. During the following summer he had charge of the University of Illinois' Mechanical and Electrical Exhibit at the World's Fair. In 1893, he was appointed assistant in physics at the University of Illinois, and in 1894 was instructor in Electrical Engineering there. The summer of 1894 was spent in Europe by him in study and travel. In February, 1895, he became an Associate Member of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers and in June, 1895, was elected to the Assistant Professorship in Electrical Engineering at the University of Illinois, in which position he continued until called to the University of Wisconsin last fall.

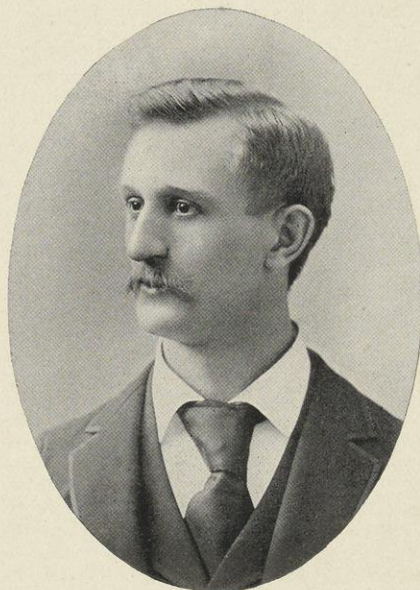

LINNAEUS WAYLAND DOWLING, PH.D.

LINNAEUS WAYLAND DOWLING, Assistant Professor of Mathematics, was born December 7, 1867, at Medina, Michigan. He received his early education in the common schools of Rome, Michigan. From 1885 to 1889, he was engaged in teaching in the schools of Southern Michigan, experiencing many of the hardships of the old time country school-teacher. In 1889, he entered Adrian College. In 1892 Dr. Dowling began his graduate work in mathematics at Clark University, and received his Ph.D. at that institution in 1895. In the Fall of 1895 he entered University of Wisconsin as instructor in mathematics, which position he held until 1898, when he was promoted to his present position.

Dr. Dowling is a member of the American Mathematical Society and the Wisconsin Academy of Science.

LOUIS KAHLBERG, Ph. D.

LOUIS KAHLBERG, Assistant Professor of Physical Chemistry, was born at Two Rivers, Wisconsin. In 1885 he entered the Oshkosh Normal School, but was obliged to leave on account of ill health. After teaching two years, he entered the Milwaukee Normal School, graduating from there in 1890. Next he entered the University and devoted himself to the study of chemistry and allied branches, taking the degree of B. S. in 1892. He was then elected fellow in chemistry and in 1893 was advanced to an instructorship. In the fall of 1894 he went to Europe, where he continued his studies at the University of Leipzig, laying special stress on the subject of Physical Chemistry. In 1895 that University conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, summa cum laude. After his return from Europe he was connected with the School of Pharmacy of the University of Wisconsin. Later he was appointed instructor in physical chemistry, and in 1898 he was promoted to his present position.

MECHANICS AND ENGINEERING

The title is rendered in a highly decorative, blackletter-style calligraphic font. The words are arranged in a descending staircase pattern. The word 'Colleges' is at the top left, followed by 'of' in a smaller, simpler font. 'LETTERS' is to the right of 'of'. Below 'LETTERS' is 'AND' in a small, decorative font. 'SCIENCE' is below 'AND'. A horizontal line is drawn across the middle of the page, passing through the middle of the 'S' in 'SCIENCE'. Below this line is 'MECHANICS' and 'AND' in a small, decorative font. At the bottom is 'ENGINEERING'. A sunburst or starburst symbol is placed between 'SCIENCE' and 'MECHANICS'. The entire design is centered on the page.

Athenae vs. Philomathia

PROFESSOR DAVID B. FRANKENBURGER, - - President

Question

Is the present system of private ownership and operation of the street railway lines of the city of Chicago preferable to a system of municipal ownership and operation?

Interpretation

Street railway lines to mean all surface and elevated lines operating within the city limits, excluding such suburban lines as the "Illinois Central" and "Rock Island."

Conceded

1. That the transfer can legally and constitutionally be made, and at a fair compensation.
2. That such municipal system shall be free from state legislative interference.
3. That all appointments, promotions and rewards shall be made on the basis of efficiency only.

U, Rah, Rah, Wisconsin,
U, Rah, Rah, Wisconsin,
U, Rah, Rah, Wisconsin,
Tiger!

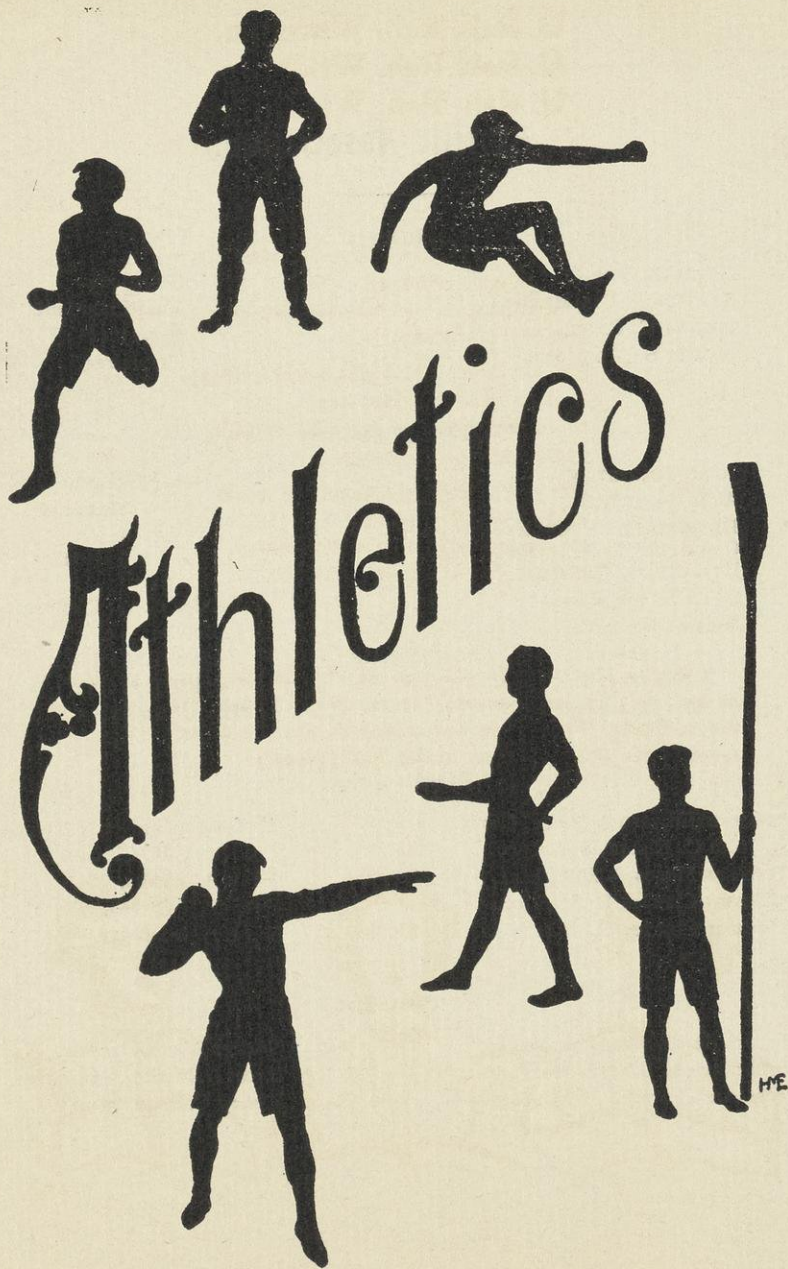

From the Golden Gate to Jacksonville,
And far across the sea,
Rings the good old yell, that we know so well,
Our yell of victory.

The U! Rah! Rah! was heard in camp,
And on San Francisco Bay;
It was heard on the Porto Rican hills,
Just as we hear it to-day.

Our yell is ringing around the world
And ne'er will it abate.
No longer only the 'Varsity yell—
It's the yell of a mighty State.

(NOTE—The U. of W. yell was used by the Wisconsin regiments in the "late unpleasantness;" it was given in San Francisco when the battleship WISCONSIN was launched, and was given by what representatives Wisconsin has in the Philippines.)

Foot Ball Expression - A "Fowl" Tackle.

• Alumni Reminiscences •

It was so long ago that the historian was not even a student of the University of Wisconsin, though he was preparing himself for that dignity by neglecting his studies at a public school. Still the facts herein narrated are within his personal knowledge.

There was a student of the University who will be here designated as X, because, in accordance with the only principle of algebra that survives in the mind of the narrator, that represents an unknown quantity.

The fact had come to the knowledge of other students that X was addicted to flirtation with the muses, and that he had produced a number of poems which he had coyly submitted to the admiration of appreciative friends. It was deemed of public importance that as a poet he should not be allowed to "blush unseen" or "waste his fragrance on the desert air." Accordingly, he was advised to publish his effort, and the suggestion was favorably received by the blushing bard. Under the advice of his friends, he prepared a preface, in which he stated that it had been calumniously represented that his verses were plagiarized, and that he had simply copied the lines of Shakespeare, Milton, and Byron. It was for the purpose of vindicating himself against this imputation that he published the collection therewith offered to the public. (It is to the shame of the Historical Society if no copy of this booklet is preserved).

I recall only two fragments. The first was as follows :

"I plucked a flower and kissed it quick
And said it was for my sweet Dick."

But X also possessed among his chattles :

"The harp of epic song, that Homer's fingers thrilled along."

This was in evidence from a poem descriptive of a battle in the Mexican War, then a subject of recent history; and surely no laurel-crowned child of Parnassus ever achieved anything more graphic than the following :

"Over the field the foaming charger prances,
And the number of dead and wounded was somewhat greater
Than might have been reasonably expected under the circumstances."

There was a school house distant but a few miles from the University, and the trustees had conceived the wise project of having a course of lectures. X was invited to deliver one of these, and responded with unfailing promptness. Some of the other students had learned of the important event, and made themselves a part of the audience. X delivered his lecture with great success, and the students served most efficiently as an amateur committee on applause. At the close, remarks by the audience were asked for, and one of the other students, though conspicuous for his diffidence, arose to the occasion. He need not be designated further than to say that, with the unanimous consent of the University, he now writes all of his initials at the left of his name. He arose and said that he had listened with great pleasure to the lecture just delivered, and that he found the English language inadequate to convey his appreciation of the effort. This forced him to resort to another tongue, and to say in the language of Cicero: "Quousque tandem abutere nostra patientia, which, being freely translated, means 'I greatly admire the orator of the evening.'"

X did not complete his course at the University, but dedicated his talents to the prosaic business of selling fruit trees of questionable heredity, and therein settled his account with at least one of those who had frosted the buds of his youthful promise. But "that is another story."

THE Legislature of Wisconsin, in the earlier days of the institution, was not the Legislature of to-day. Many of the members were noted for their bibulous propensities, when in their hilarious moods they would perambulate the streets radiating from the Capitol and frequently stop to keep the lamp posts straight.

They would often extemporize midnight serenades to nobody in particular, but everybody in general. Each one, taking his own key, would help produce a discord which would make any serenading tom-cat fairly mute with envy.

The attitude of the Legislature toward the University was one of pronounced hostility. It was the regular custom to appoint committees of visitation, which were, in reality, committees of investigation, to ascertain all its weak points and report adversely thereon:

The splendid endowment in lands had been virtually lost by mismanagement in their disposal. The income was not sufficient to meet the expenditures, even with the meager salaries paid to the professors. The denominational colleges were, frequently, active in their opposition. The annual meeting of the Legislature brought all the inimical interests to a focus.

The committees of investigation would wend their way to the South Building on the hill, due notice having been given to Chancellor John H. Lathrop of their coming. It was their expressed desire or command that all the students should be assembled in the chapel to be surveyed by them.

The small chapel would then hold conveniently the whole number of students. The committee would sit in state on the platform and ply the Chancellor with questions. Courteously, dignified, and yet affable, Dr. Lathrop would receive them. With masterly skill he would parry the attacks, and with seemingly limitless powers of evasion, and yet within the strict confines of truth, would bring to light the best features only of the University. Baffled in all their questionings and cross-questionings, the committee would retire, learning nothing except that the institution had within it the possibilities of a magnificent future, and should receive the fostering care of the State. "These young gentlemen before you," said the Chancellor, "are the pledge and promise of the future hundreds and thousands of students who will come to these classic halls. In your hands are the destinies of this noble University. I know you will be true to your most important trust." They came, they saw, they were conquered, and after they were out of hearing, the wild delight of the students found extravagant expression in shouts and cheers for their knightly and scholarly champion and leader.

PITT CRAVATH was one of the notable students of the early sixties. He easily excelled in every department of study, and occupied the first rank as debater and public speaker. A good story is told of his quick-witted method of dealing with a bit of stage fright.

On one occasion he was on the program for an original oration. There was a large attendance, and his performance was looked forward to with general expectancy. In due time he stood before the audience, tall, erect, handsome in face and form. "Ladies and Gentlemen," he began. "Ladies and Gentlemen," he repeated in a dazed way, and every person before him had an attack of cold shivers. A third time he came to the attack—"Ladies and Gentlemen," then continued, "You'd scarce expect one of my age to speak in public on the stage, so I'll read my piece." Suiting the action to the word he took the manuscript from his pocket, read a few sentences, replaced it, and then went on to make the speech of the day.

THE LINCOLN CAMPAIGN was on during my sojourn at the capital, and it is scarcely possible now to realize the intensity of feeling which characterized it. The students were wild in their enthusiasm, and the best of them risked all sorts of penalizing under the temptations of the period. An immense mass meeting was held at the park, September 9th, 1860, at which addresses were made by W. H. Seward, Charles Francis Adams, James Nye, Senators Doolittle, Patterson, and Wilkinson, and others. The hill was nearly deserted that day and evening. Great delegations of "Wideawakes" came from other cities, and their torches made the avenue from the park to the hill seem a river of fire. The great majority of the students were supporters of Lincoln, but the opposition had a few intrepid leaders: I. N. Stewart, G. W. Allen, and Henry and Levi Vilas, I remember particularly. It seemed at times as if the war, which some said was imminent, would begin in our society rooms.

There was a military company in the city which was really a fine organization, but the students bore it no good will, probably for the social prestige which the young warriors enjoyed. On some great public festal occasion the university grounds were put in use, and one feature was the review of the military by the Governor and State officers. But just as their array had passed there appeared, as if springing out of the ground, a student military band of the Callithumpian order, burlesquing the others most laughably. The captain bestrode a horse whose woe of face and ribs would have made Rosinante seem a frisky colt. There was no saddle, only a blanket, while a rope passed over it with a bucket on one side and a herring box on the other for stirrups. The rider's gaunt figure had been amended by stuffing a goodly portion of a bale of straw between his person and the expansive coat which he wore. The first soldier in line was a five footer, with plug hat, and coat tails on the ground; then a rod behind came a six footer, with flat cap and roundabout; and so the costumes and disguises went. The crowd shrieked with laughter, but the school authorities were horrified. Gathering their stampeded wits and breath, they came forward and ordered the "company" off the ground; the captain essayed to turn his horse about to give the order, but his charger stumbled and fell, pitching the unfortunate commander far down the hill; his coat burst, the straw spread out, the stirrups rolled and rattled, and out of the wreckage rose a tall, slim youth, who legged it over the hill and far away. The rest of the company vanished as quickly as they had appeared, and, it is said, thereby saved possible casualties which might have resulted from a contemplated bayonet charge by the outraged military.

E. D. COE.

AT the beginning of the spring term in the year, 1859, I landed at the south dormitory one afternoon, in company with Milton S. Griswold, ready to begin my university career. We had no bed or other furniture. I had with me the sum of $13.60, after paying the drayman, room rent and tuition, with which to worry through the term. Second-hand furniture was procured; it being the last term, we made easy bargains. In two or three days we had enough to sit, sleep and eat, or rather, write-on. Our cooking outfit consisted of a tin cup, a tin basin, a plate and a gill cup apiece. We gradually accumulated a supply of such sufficiency that we could serve coffee, potatoes and meat when we could afford it.

In the room over us was S. S. Rockwood, who had had some school experience, and he was my first university acquaintance. He posted us as to many usages, but that did not save us from having our room filled with hay, sticks, sod and other truck which we could not cook nor yet sleep on; but as we were greenies, we bore it patiently and received Pat's condolences with proper appreciation. I succeeded in getting a few jobs of work and got through the term, helped by an occasional box of food supplies from home. My account book shows that my expense for living, after I had my furniture and books, ran from seventy-two cents to one dollar per week.

The next term I came up better prepared, but lived the same way. I went to the north dormitory and avoided the superfluous hay, and so forth. I found another advantage of which the students were not slow to avail themselves. By taking off the grate in the side wall through which the furnace heat was admitted, and sliding along the bottom of the heat flue a piece of tin turned up at the end, we could roast our potatoes. Of course we shoved them out over the perpendicular opening if we were in a hurry. Then the more aristocratic fellows, who had the upper rooms, and who also wanted their potatoes cooked, would complain down the flue of our cut off and in terms emphatic, order it removed. If not removed, the game was that they should drop down a rock or brick bat, catching our precious stock of nearly roasted potatoes and carrying them down to the inferno whence no potatoes ever returned save in an unsavory smell.

All the boys, nearly, lived as I did. The now celebrated John Muir had but one chair and for most of his first term slept on the floor. His table at first was a box turned on its side and the inside of it, furnished with rude shelves, was utilized as a book case. Among those who lived as I did were O. H. Lagrange, G. W. Carter, Volney Rattan, James L. High, Samuel Watson and W. C. Silverthorn. Rattan is now a professor in San Jose Normal, California, and author of standard works on the botany of the Pacific coast.

As time went on, it came to be my privilege to live up stairs and drop bricks on the potatoes of the freshies below. As my circumstances improved, I opened an account with "the Dutch woman" and had the luxuries of an occasional half-dozen cookies or a herring, sometimes a pie. Once Phineas Clawson, Griswold and myself went into partnership and bought half a barrel or more of crackers. But then we were wont to economize in another way and improve our understanding (not our boots) by starting out Saturday morning and tramping over the adjacent country, seeking what we might learn, of the flora, fauna and geology of our glorious country. We usually came home Sunday night or Monday morning very tired, well fed and with a bottle of milk of which we had relieved some suffering cow which we feared the owner might neglect. If we found any good specimens suitable for our natural history study, it was well; but we were well fed for a day or two anyway. There are very few parts of the country within twenty-five miles of Madison that we did not at some time tramp over. But I often caught others looking for "specimens" a good ways from the University. Sometimes our "specimens" were very good eating.

WE called him "Mercury" from the way he sped down town three times a week to see his girl. One Tuesday night he started forth as usual. We prepared a reception for him on his return. The door in South Hall, North Dormitory, was swung open about a foot, a large snow ball was rolled up and carefully poised thereon so that, when "Mercury" returned with his mind full of the beautiful vision of loveliness he had just left, a slight push upon the door would bring down the heavy snow ball on his head.

All the students were notified and a few sentinels were placed on watch for his return. But alas for the plan! About that time, some "one term" students in another part of the building were engaged in the pleasant pastime of deluging each other with water, making an uproar, which called out Professor Sterling from the neighboring dormitory.

The good man sallied forth through the snow to quell the disturbance. He first started for South Hall. Lightly running up the steps he came to the door fixed for "Mercury." A push, a sound of crunching snow, a Presbyterian exclamation, 'and the professor emerged from the ruins with his high silk hat spoiled for all future Sundays.

Some of us, who were cautiously peering out, saw him struggling with both hands to raise the brim over his cheek bones,

One of the bravest finally assisted him in straightening out the injured tile and hinted at the noise in the other hall, whither he soon bent his steps.

One of the mischief makers there, suspecting the approach of an enemy, dashed a pail of icy water full upon him as he opened the door, and was only aware of his mistake when a strong hand seized him by the collar, and a stronger voice asked in a tone of authority: "Young man, what does this mean?"

The culprit appeared next morning before us all in Chapel. He disclaimed the snow ball act, but acknowledged his hydraulic experiment, asked forgiveness and was duly pardoned by the good professor.

MR. JEFF SIMSON, now a prominent lawyer of Southwestern Wisconsin, was a member of the Ancient Classical Department of the class of 1879. In those days the classical students had only about ten weeks of chemistry.

Their knowledge of the subject could not be very profound. Mr. Simson, however, had great confidence in his ability to pass the final examination. He was asked by Professor Daniells, "Mr. Simson, what is carbon?" "Carbon," promptly replied Mr. Simson, "is a tasteless, odorless, colorless gas." "Yes," said Professor D., "especially in the form of charcoal."

"Pat" (Peace be to his ashes!) was a great favorite with the students. During my college course, Pat had charge of all the college buildings. He was very loyal to the students, and would never report their pranks to the President, unless he felt it absolutely necessary. On some occasions their antics were even more than he could stand. Mr. Howe, who lived at the corner of State and Park streets, where Mr. Porter now resides, was the owner of a fine heifer. One Saturday night the heifer was missing, and nothing could be learned of her whereabouts until Sunday afternoon, when F. N. Hendrix, '77, discovered (?) her hitched to one of the posts in the old south chapel. Pat was notified, and by the time he arrived, an audience of several hundred students had congregated. The heifer, by this time, was frantic, and each time Pat tried to untie her she made a lunge at him, to be met with a rap over the head with a club. Pat finally succeeded in getting her untied. He had left the chapel door open, expecting, of course, that she would take the ordinary means of exit. Great was his surprise when he saw her making a bee-line over the seats for the nearest window. He grabbed hold of her tail and tried to stop her, but to no avail. She went through the window, carrying window, sash and everything with her, and left Pat standing in the window. A shout went up from the several hundred students. I shall never forget the look Patrick gave us as he shouted at us, "Sich a sit of damn fools I niver did see in me life."

Hendrix, above referred to, was a very bright, promising student, and is now a prominent lawyer in Minneapolis. He was short and fleshy. One fall, when grapes were getting ripe on the University farm, Hendrix and four other boys thought it would be the proper thing to sample them. They went down about eleven o'clock one night, and after satisfying themselves that no one was watching, proceeded to fill their pillow cases with grapes. When they had fairly gotten at work, five men from the University farm, who had been watching the vineyard, pounced down upon them. A lively race ensued. The men shouted to the boys to stop, or they would shoot. The more the men shouted the harder the boys ran. Finally they did shoot, hitting one of the boys (Sawyer) in the back with fine bird shot. Hendrix managed to reach the south dormitory in safety, but was so frightened that he ran up stairs four steps at a time, burst into his room and jumped into bed with clothes, boots and everything on. In telling the story on Hendrix afterwards, the boys always said that he ran into the room, pulled up one corner of the carpet and crawled under the carpet, but impartial history would record the event otherwise.

C. E. BUELL, '78.

MY first tale runs in this wise. One morning, just after a rain, a lot of frogs and other small fry were found on the campus. There was at that time a select body of choice spirits who feared neither man nor the faculty, and it struck their lively fancy that it would not be a bad idea to carry up in a bag some of those hopping specimens to the recitation room. The professor, who had charge of this class, began the lesson with his usual stateliness, but had not gone far when he was interrupted by a little hop, skip, and jump of an exhibit. Scarcely had this frog, with the aid of Patrick, been removed, when another one appeared, and then another and another. In less time than it takes to tell it, the room was full of slippery vertebrates and invertebrates. The professor, hors de combat, directed operations against the enemy from across the hall. Patrick was quite unable to cope with the situation and the upshot of it all was, that the class got a well earned vacation.

This distinguished group of students had an organization which was full of reformatory zeal. Among the grievances complained of was the habit of one of the professors of referring in season and out of season to an ancient trip of his to Europe. This, it was resolved, should no longer continue, and a plan of procedure was accordingly drawn up. When the good professor again referred to his foreign experiences, one of the conspirators gravely announced that all he wished to say was that he himself had ridden on the cars as far as Menominee.

Another recitation was enriched by the following: It was the usual thing in one of the classes in physics to illustrate some important principle by an arrangement of mirrors which would reflect objects in an inverted position. The "object" was usually a student, who had to stand in a spot not within sight of the class. This time the student who was sent out stood on his head. You can imagine the consternation of the professor. He labored long and diligently to explain it, but to this day the ideas of the class are a little topsy-turvy on this subject.

Sometimes proceedings in the class room were enlivened by certain responses hardly warranted by the text books. These answers often came from the men who paid much attention to the debating societies, who wished to discuss everything from a constitutional standpoint. Some of us used to think that the rules of mathematics might be condemned as unconstitutional. Then there were a lot of fellows who were always criticising everything that came up, and wanting to know why two and two did not make something more or less than four. And finally there were the men who used to look serenely on all that occurred, good or bad, with arms folded. When asked in rhetoric what oratory was, one of these serene ones said he did not care to commit himself. At another time, the instructor had entered into a long explanation and when about two-thirds through, said to a student, "Do you follow me?" "Yes," was the answer, "I follow you, but if I could find my way back again, I would stop right here."

At the law school, there was another set of tales. A stock question in the law of real estate has been and still is, "What is the rule in Shelby's Case?" This question was usually asked with much dignity and answered with equal dignity and much glibness, for it was about the only thing that everybody in the law was supposed to be really sure of. But once the proceeding was varied, for the student who had in the debating society laid great stress on the principle of equal rights under the Constitution, replied with some warmth that it was just the same as in every other man's case; the law did not respect persons. One of the lecturers used often to resort to imaginary cases to illustrate principles. He would go into a long account of the doings of A and B, and on a certain occasion wound up with, "Now, Mr. Brown, what would you do in such a case?" "Well," replied Brown, "I think I would hire a lawyer."

HENRY CURWEN LORD was a member of the class of '89. and was recognized as an exceedingly bright fellow but one who would probably never suffer from nervous prostration. His work was done in the end, but was always accomplished with due deliberation.

One day the engineers were to make some measurements, and Lord was delegated to throw a rope from the top of Science Hall. The students assembled on the campus below but no rope appeared. Finally one of them called "Lord!" No answer. "I say Lord!" Still no answer.

"Oh, Lord!" and then sotto voice, "Confound it, why don't you answer? Folks will think we are having a prayer meeting all by ourselves down here."

THERE had been some sort of a row down at the sorority house. Things go wrong in the best regulated families, and a sorority is certainly not one of the best regulated sort; therefore it is no wonder that occasionally they had to send for Her. Her clear head and warm heart untangled the most involved "scraps," and the above mentioned row being a very simple affair, five minutes of her valuable time had sufficed. While She was there she felt it incumbent upon her to give the girl a little sisterly advice on the subject of spooning (she probably was remembering her own college days with a little mortification just then).

Now She had a brother in college. If I wrote his name you would remember a very handsome alumnus, upright and honorable, a brother any girl might be forgiven for being proud of, and she ended her dissertation with, "There's one man at least in this college that I'm sure never would spoon with any girl, and that's my brother!"

A strange expression flitted over the face of a blue-eyed, pink-cheeked, golden-haired freshman who was sitting on a pile of cushions and the floor, and She saw it. Quick as a flash she asked, "Does he Nell?"

The freshman summoned all her dignity, and offended dignity it was too, and she sputtered out: "I don't care if you are one of the old girls, you have no right to ask me such impertinent questions."

She was having a nice quiet afternoon talk with the brother. (He was such a good brother, and they had regular "story-book" talks, she said.)

"Johnny dear, aren't you ashamed of yourself spooning with that foolish little freshman girl! Really, how could you? She remonstrated."

A blush was visible on the parts of his face not hidden by a senior beard. "It was too bad, Fan, but when a girl wants to so awful bad, what is a fellow going to do?"

SOME of the liveliest times of college life, either in which I have been an active participator or to which I have been an interested, not to say an apprehensive, witness, have occurred when I have accompanied the glee and banjo clubs en tour. I dare say it is true that the college man is, as he is painted, the highest and boldest type of anarchist extant; but on a trip with the musical clubs he is sui generis. His fund of audacity and terror-inspiring capabilities are no longer potential. It would seem as though some demon of irresponsibility had touched an electric button, that starts, at the same second, the machinery of concentrated human perversity and the wheels of the locomotive that pulls the special train out of Madison. From an experience covering a succession of these trips the following are related. The names of the actors are omitted for the reason that the owners thereof may have gone on record before the faculty as to these same narratives.

"Laying over Sunday" at Rockford enabled the clubs to put in a good, long day Monday. Two of the members concluded to do some shopping. After a somewhat cursory examination of bargains in one of the leading department stores, ostensibly in search of some nameless apparel for "sister", they strolled into a large, four-story furniture emporium. It had been previously arranged that one of the young men, who, for the sake of convenience, may be called John, should pretend to be deaf; and it was the understanding that he, being just about to be married, was looking about in company with his prospective best-man for the items necessary to furnish a home for himself and "Clara." Out of consideration for his double affliction, his friend agreed to do the great burden of talking.

It apparently was not a busy day, and they found no trouble or delay in getting the ear and attention of the proprietor himself—a good natured individual with an irrational desire to see the funny side of things. The deaf man's friend explained the situation with occasional comical references to the approaching marital blessedness of his friend, all of which, of course, were fully enjoyed; and the spokesman and the proprietor became very "chummy."

"You see it is this way with John, my friend here, he's got all the money he knows what to do with, and all he needs is somebody to start him off right, someone with taste, you know. We couldn't get Clara to come; she's the young lady, you know—she's too bashful. But she'll be in this afternoon to look the things over. So we want everything we pick out put in this open space here (indicating about half the rear end of the lower floor) so she can see the things and pass judgment on them this afternoon. That's right, isn't it, John?"

After some delay the latter was made to understand the foregoing explanation sufficiently to venture a reserved acquiescence.

"Too bad," said the spokesman, turning to the proprietor. "He's really a very capable fellow. Her friends were very much opposed at first. But I should say his ought to be the ones to kick. No telling how she might take advantage of his deafness, you know. — Girls will be girls. Hey?"

"Quite right," rejoined the proprietor with a chuckle. "Can't always tell what they'll do. Had a case of that kind right here in —"

"Probably won't want any cases," spoke up John. "Expect to have them built right in the walls. What have you got in sofas?"

"Do you want one like her papa's, or large enough for two?" asked the proprietor in a low voice, with a side-long glance at the spokesman.

This sally was heartily enjoyed, you may be sure, by those who heard it.

"You may set aside that large dining-room table and twelve of those dining chairs," said John; whereupon two stalwart assistants were summoned, and they staid right by the party from that time on, pushing and hauling furniture about for two mortal hours. A refrigerator, large enough for a hotel was "set aside;" likewise, an assortment of half a dozen wooden mantles, five or six huge beds and a pier glass; chairs and tables galore.

"What have you got on the second floor?" asked John. ("Have got" is used in conversation.)

Up stairs they went, joking now and then at poor John's expense. There they found to their taste more tables and chairs, and a tete-à-tete or two, a dainty little desk for "Clara" and furniture for the library.

"Shall I set these things aside up here, too?" asked the proprietor.

"Oh, no," replied the spokesman benignly. "Just have the men run them down the elevator. Clara doesn't like to walk up stairs."

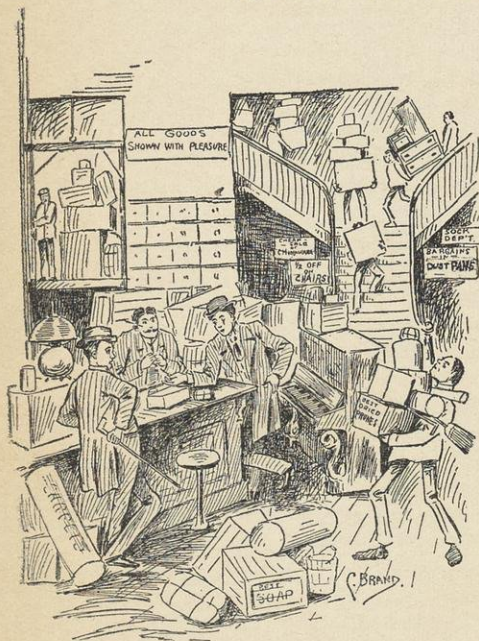

"What's that about Clara?" John looked interested.

"I say she won't like the stairs."

"No, never mind the stairs, my good friend. We'll get stairs somewhere else," said John, good-humoredly. "What have you got on the third floor?"

Up they went, and down the elevator came bureaus, more chairs, tables and sideboards. Huge hair mattresses were selected, albeit with some confusion on the part of the groom-elect; and an old-fashioned reclining chair went into the pool. Up on the fourth floor there were other treasures, and the elevator creaked and groaned with its many burdens. The proprietor rubbed his hands in gleeful anticipation, and (for shame!) laughed at John's frequent faux pas. For a dull Monday this was doing pretty well.

I hate to tell all they selected, but finally they came back to the first floor. The sight was dazzling. Such a confusion and heap of furniture would do credit to the fire patrol after a hotel conflagration.

"Just fix things up sort of home-like, if you please," John suggested. "And I wish you would write down the names of the articles with the prices set opposite. Clara will be in about two I should say."

"Give her a little jolly on the subject of her intended," put in the other. "Tell her what a fine business man he is; but of course he wouldn't positively order anything until she sees it, 'and all that rot you know.' Good-bye to you."

"Good-bye." "Good-bye." There was shaking of hands and farewells said again, as though the three were boyhood friends. The proprietor watched them as they walked gaily down the street; then he looked the other way, and I fancy a tear trickled down his furrowed cheek as he philosophized a bit on youth and happiness and all that.

The shoppers went on.

"We forgot to look at coffins", remarked John gravely.

Soon they came to the W. C. T. U. headquarters. Their cigars had gone out; and they went in. A woman sat at a table with a pile of tickets before her.

"Is Mrs. Lancaster here?" asked John's friend.

"I am a stranger here," replied the woman.

"There are a number of ladies in the next room."

In they went. A lecture was evidently being delivered to about two hundred women and girls, and I suspect, from the account I heard, that it was a Jenness-Miller lecture too. The usheresses rushed towards the intruders.

"Is Mrs. Lancaster here?" asked John's friend.

The only reply was a suppressed murmur of "Sshh——" throughout the room, and the usheresses waved the two away.

"Well, I only wanted to see if Mrs. Lancaster could give us some matches. Our cigars are out," said John with an injured air, as they retired.

They went into a saloon next. Why they should go into a saloon after being turned out of the W. C. T. U. does not appear; but probably Rockford had no Woman's Club. They called for two beers. (This is a true story.) The bartender placed two schooners before them, and they drank them with becoming relish.

"Whose beer is this?" asked John.

"Schlitz," replied the bartender.

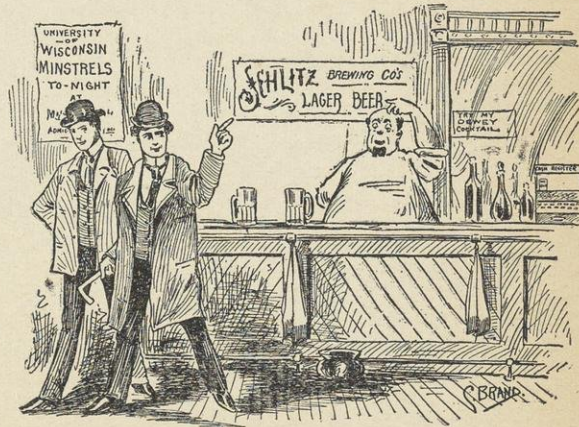

"Well, I know Schlitz. I'll pay him," said John, and they started to go.

"Holdt on, my friend," shouted the saloonman. "Dott's a goot choke. Haf one mit me, now."

There is such a thing as spending years and hundreds of dollars on a college education, and,

"Is Mrs. Lancaster here?"

"Well, I know Schlitz. I'll pay him."

when opportunity first presents itself, of making no practical use of it. Not so, in this case. Here was a rara avis, and trapped, too, by a moss-grown trick.

Farther down the street they met two banjo-club men. The story of the bartender was told. Human nature is apt at imitation, and the new-comers proposed that they try the trick at the next saloon they came to. The "next," however, was, it chanced, the same old saloon. John and his friend said nothing; for good stories, like creeds, often expire "by the process of explanation."

The new-comers ordered four beers.

"Better make it five," suggested the bartender, ingeniously.

"Just as you say," said the one who had given the order. And he winked, slyly, at the others.

The beer was produced, etc. One of the new-comers was an excellent actor. He sipped the beverage in his glass; looked critically at it, and took another sip.

"Whose beer is this?" he asked.

"Why?" rejoined the saloon-man.

This was unexpected. The new-comer didn't know the answer, but he rallied.

"Oh, I don't know. It tastes like Hausmann's." This was funny to the men outside the bar.

"Oh," said the victim, "you mean who makes dott beers?"

"Yes."

"Vell, Schlitz makes it; I pys it off Schlitz; und you py it off me."

"Oh, I see. Five more, if you please, Mr. Bartender."

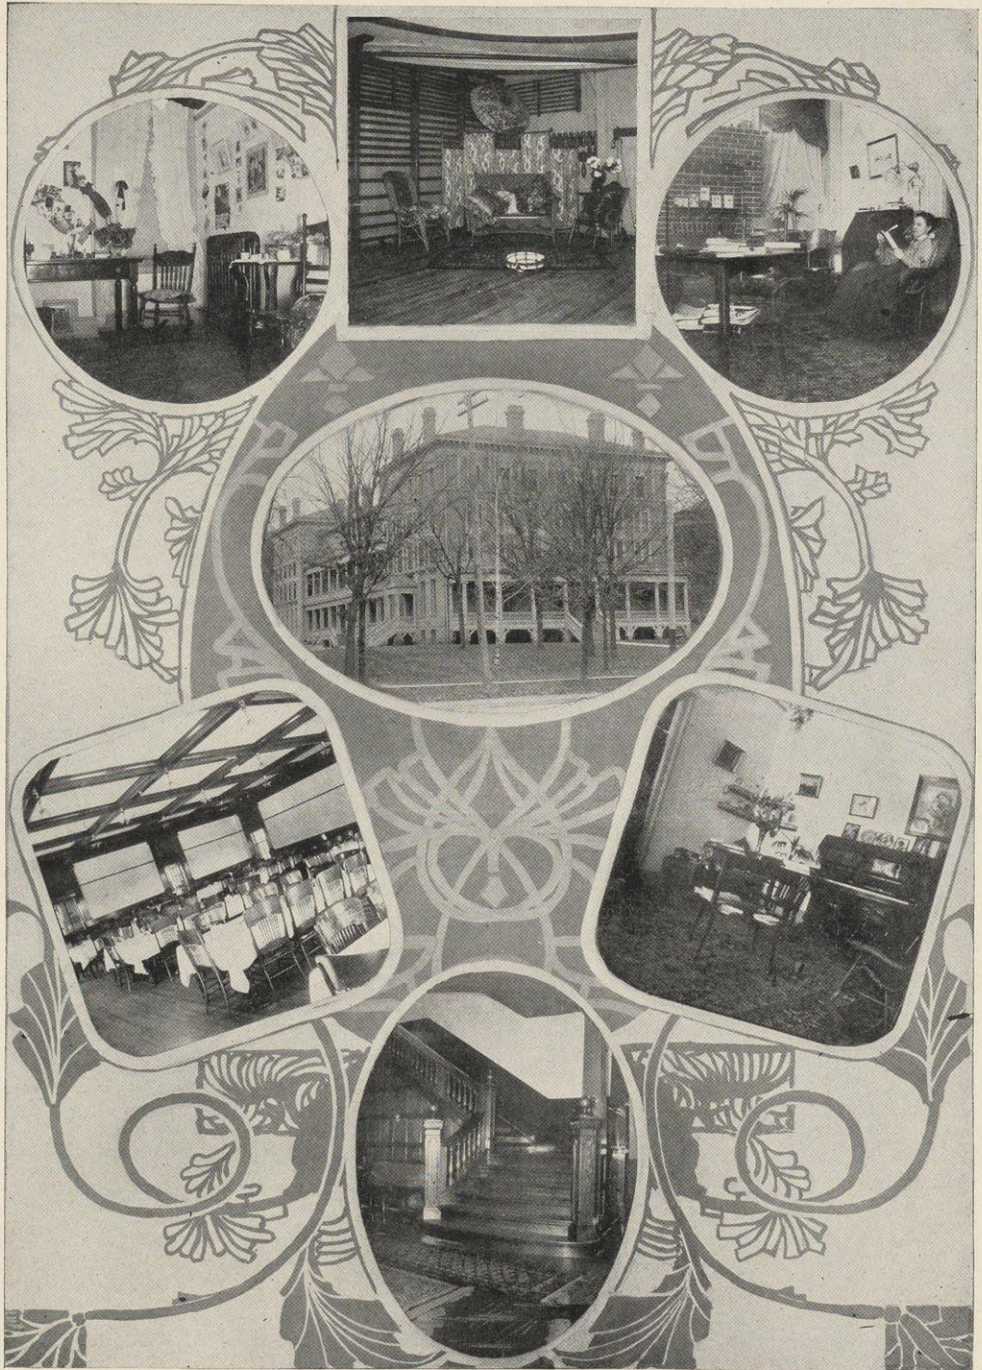

John and his friend left the others outside. They came to a pair of stairs that led to a tailor shop, and mounted them. They looked in and saw six little tailors squatted there, demurely sewing, and snipping, and snipping, and sewing and snipping at pieces of cloth, with huge, long shears.

"Is this where they want a lock fixed?" asked John, as he pulled the key out of the inside of the door, and, stepping back, locked the door on the outside. If that building had burned down then and there, this would't be a funny story. I believe John carried the key for some months expecting an award for him or the key to be offered.

Playing deaf on another occasion, they came to grief. The two went into a little store kept by a dirty, ignorant-looking Italian, and John asked him how much cider was a glass. The proprietor said, "five cent." But John couldn't hear. The proprietor roared at him four or five times, and then picking up a pencil and paper, with a look of despair, turned to John's friend.

"Can he no read, too?" he asked.

KNOX KINNEY, '94.

Ladies' Hall Views :

A CERTAIN Senior maiden, with a fondness for Anglo-Saxon—and several other things,—once had a thesis to write. “I am going to take my thesis under Prof. Hubbard,” she announced. “‘Hubby’ is such a dear, you know, he’ll make an ideal patron saint, and he won’t be a bit hard on me, either. Anglo-Saxon is quite my forte, I believe, and I’ll perpetrate something truly brilliant—just see if I don’t.”

But of course it was much too soon to even dream of a thesis then, in the bright autumn days, and there was really no hurry at all about it, for theses were not due until the middle of May, and May was a long way off. And, besides, the senior told herself, the winter term would be the very time to settle down to good solid work.

But the short, busy winter days slipped by—where did they go to anyway?—and the end of the term approached; but still no sign or symptom of a thesis. Ah, happy thought! Instead of going home to replenish her wardrobe, this virtuous maiden would devote the entire spring vacation to her thesis. Behind the largest and fiercest of “Engaged” signs she would retire from the world, with an arm load of ponderous volumes. She would “burn the midnight oil” into the “wee, sma’ hours” of the morning; she would read until she could read no more, and write until seized with “writer’s cramp,” and emerge triumphant with a thesis which should be the wonder and admiration of all.

The following week a memorandum appeared, posted upon her door:

To Thesis, Debtor.

Monday,	-	-	-	-	-	-	6	hours.
Tuesday,	-	-	-	-	-	-	2½	“
Wednesday,	-	-	-	-	-	-	¾	“

On Thursday she took a holiday, and painted a beautiful “old gold” satin frame for “Hubby’s” photograph. Then she went down town with her very best friend and purchased a gorgeous green candle, and arranged a little shrine in the corner of her room. “So sweet,” and “Such an inspiration,” her friends assured her.

On Friday she received her report for the term: “Anglo-Saxon...Fair.” Down came the shrine, “Hubby’s” picture, green candle, and all, while a certain irate senior meditated upon the mockery of human existence, and the utter uselessness of theses in general—her own in particular.

Next day, by way of consolation, she gave a “spread” to her dearest, most sympathetic friends, from the effects of which it took all Sunday to recover. With Monday the students came trooping back; another short spring term was ushered in, and work began in earnest.

Where was that thesis, anyway?

Weeks later, at the very “eleventh hour,” cheered by “Hubby’s” assurance that she really was not a “lame duck,” this senior maiden “cut” most vigorously on the “hill,” went into solitary confinement for two whole days and a night, and actually produced a thesis.

Now this is a “just-so story,” and if you don’t believe it you can ask Mr. Smith to show you that very identical thesis, reposing under a two-inch layer of dust on the topmost shelf in one of the library alcoves.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE FRESH-AIR FUND

The Famous Thomas Jefferson Concert Company

In Minstrel Role

Gymnasium, Thursday Evening

Admission: Adults, 6 cts.; Children, 3 cts.; 12 cts. per couple

The above show bill conspicuously posted in Ladies' Hall one winter's day in 1893, was the result of a table discussion in the basement dining-room. Three times a day ten of us—all congenial spirits—met there and did justice to the Hall culinary of the old regime. At the head of the table presided a brilliant and dignified senior, who is now doing noble work in the Hull House district of Chicago.

The winter was a glorious one, with plenty of skating and sleighing for us, but our hearts went out in pity to the poor creatures who could not afford to enjoy the out-of-door sports. Therefore we ten determined to give a minstrel show in the gymnasium and devote the proceeds to the Fresh Air Fund.

Preparations were hurriedly made. The old brown curtains were hung before the platform; a suit of duck was procured for our interlocutor, Thomas Jefferson, alias Amanda Johnson; we practiced songs and hunted jokes in old magazines.

On the eventful night the rising curtain disclosed our burnt-corked visages to an appreciative audience composed, of course, entirely of girls, though an outsider might have been deceived by the appearance of several. They applauded our program, but were chiefly delighted with Thomas Jefferson himself, who never before had been seen in so undignified a role.

But if the spectators enjoyed our jokes and songs we in turn were equally entertained by the spectators. Michael O'Flarety was there with his wife and two "children." The "children" were indeed precocious, to get in at half-price. They quarreled the whole evening over a large candy cane which had been given them to keep them quiet. In a box luxuriously fitted up with chairs and plaid shawls, sat two ladies and a gentleman, all in full evening dress.

Shortly after the curtain rose the program was disturbed by the entrance of a crowd of darkies gayly dressed and decorated with sunflowers (pen-wipers). They took seats on the step-ladder and "high bars" at the rear of the room and proceeded to make a "Nigger Heaven" of their locality by vociferous and untimely applause and a lavish distribution of peanut shells.

After the program there was a dance, in which the swell youth from the box waltzed gayly with a dark beauty from the gallery, while the colored gentlemen held tete-a-tetes with the white belles of the audience.

The Minstrel Company was much gratified at the box-office receipts. The munificent sum of three dollars had been raised for sweet charity. The next day a jolly bob-sleigh party might have been seen on the road to the fish hatchery. It was the Thomas Jefferson Concert Company taking a ride in the fresh air.

After Twenty Years

A true account of two important documents and what came of them.

DOCUMENT NO. I.

Discovered in 1896 on the back of a table drawer in Suite 18, Ladies' Hall.

"To whomsoever may inhabit No's. 18 and 19 on the 22nd of February, 1896, be it known that a treat is due you on that day from a bet which Juliet D. Meyer and Helen M. Remington made on the subject of Woman's Rights. If woman votes at the time mentioned Miss Remington treats 18 and 19. If she be still in bondage in '96 Miss Meyer foots the bill. For the address inquire of the Kappa girls or the the Secretary of the Class of '76."

DOCUMENT NO. II.

Letter sent to Mrs. Brown after discovery of above.

LADIES' HALL, U. OF W.,
MADISON, January 13, 1896.

MRS. BROWN (née MRS. JULIET D. MEYER),
Rhineland, Wisconsin.

Dear Madam:—You will doubtless be surprised at receiving this letter, but, a few days ago, one of the occupants of Suite 18, Ladies' Hall, chanced to come across the enclosed bet—which, as you see, has your name attached—written upon the back of a table drawer in the parlor of that suite.

Now, as woman is most certainly "still in bondage," we venture to remind you, the losing party, of the existence of this interesting epistle which you have probably long since forgotten. The anticipating of such a treat is very alluring to a lot of hungry girls to whom a diet of codfish and hash has grown a trifle monotonous; and Mr. Harry Moseley, who says he knows you well, assures us you are "a very charming lady and one certain to meet your obligations."

Thanking you in advance for what we know will prove a most bounteous and enjoyable feast, we are,

Very Hopefully and Cordially Yours,

* * * * *

THE editors of the Badger tried in vain to get an anecdote from the pen of Mr. William Young, '94, now of the New York World, but are forced to content themselves with the following, which he did not contribute.

It is said that as a sophomore Mr. Young objected to doing military duty and in an interview with Dean Birge upon the subject, alleged lameness in the right foot as a valid reason for excuse from the same, wearing a cane and a conspicuous limp as evidence of his good faith.

Dr. Birge was interested, and after listening to the tale, requested Mr. Young to walk across the floor to show how severe his disability really was.

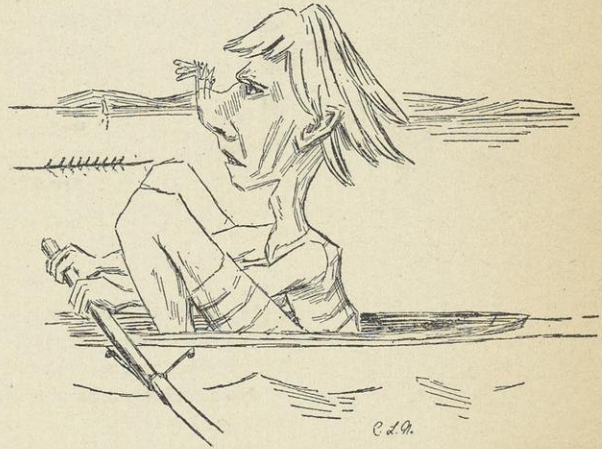

Billy rose to comply. Perhaps the Dean's pertinent questions had somewhat befuddled him, and perhaps he had just forgotten, but at any rate it is a matter of history that he limped painfully and conscientiously, but on the wrong foot.

And the excuse was not granted.

A Prophecy

When you see a finished structure
 On the lower campus rise,
 And the faculty persuaded
 That bi-weekly hops are wise;
 When Schmitt fails to ask a question,
 And the President cuts his hair;
 When the "Laws" no longer gather
 On the steps to talk and stare;
 When you see Doc. Marshall answer
 In a manner sweet and kind
 Questions of a varied nature
 Which perplex a Freshman's mind;
 When you see Van Velzer coming
 Up the hill at eight o'clock,
 And on Prom. night all the Hall girls
 To floor "B" forget to flock;
 When you see a BADGER published
 With no jokes on Pyre and Snow,
 And the entire student body
 To the Y. M. C. A. go;
 When you see theses abolished
 With their agonies galore,
 And the Senior's burdened spirits
 Rise to heights unknown before;—
 Then you may be very certain
 There has dawned a bright, new day,
 And what startling things may follow
 'Tis beyond my power to say.

"This shell shall win if it takes the last drop of blood in my body."

When She Graduated.

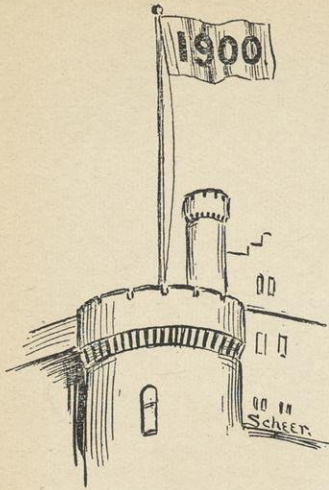

H; she was beautiful;
 He dared scarce look,
 Nor could he turn away;
 So stood with trembling heart, afraid;
 Until he saw, entwined within her hair,
 The roses he had sent,
 And he was glad.

HE—"I saw a half-bushel of people come out of the Palace of Sweets, to-night."

SHE—"A half-bushel?"

HE—"Yes; two Pecks,—Lucile and Roy."

A bright Freshman says that he is surprised that many of the young ladies do not wear short sleeves all the time, for he says, "The Constitution affirms that no one shall be denied the right to bare arms."

Thou too sail on, O Badger Book!
 We know too well the pains we've took;
 We know what hands have writ thy lays,
 And those who wrought for days and days,
 And what a smudge and what a smoke
 Was clustered 'round each little joke.—
 Sail on, sail on! Ye have our tears,
 And worst of all, ye have our fears
 That if the dollars roll not in,
 The Badger Board will lose their tin.
 Sail on, sail on! Ye have our fears;
 Our hopes, our prayers, sometimes our tears,
 Are all with thee, are all with thee.

Lyrics

I play no gentle shepherd's lute,
 No rustic muse is mine,
 No tortoise lyre, nor pipes of Pan,
 No Bacchic songs of wine,
 And yet I love those ancient lays,
 Those carmina divine.

The sunny skies and balmy air,
 Such were their frequent themes,
 And happy hours in shady nooks
 Beside the pebbly streams;
 And glorious old Arcadia,
 The land of love and dreams.

Of Aphrodite oft they sang,
 And of her naughty child—
 Those old, untutored love affairs,
 'Twixt nymphs and satyrs wild,
 When alimony was unknown,
 Nor damage suits were filed.

Though harsh my voice in this dull day,
 Of books and printers' ink,
 Yet love I well those ancient lays—
 From Attic springs would drink,
 And listen to the songs that rose
 Far back on Alphaeus brink.

Echoes from the Trent Lecture

I. As they reached the ears of Mrs. Turner.

Freshman Girl (as the speaker is introduced): "Who's that man?"

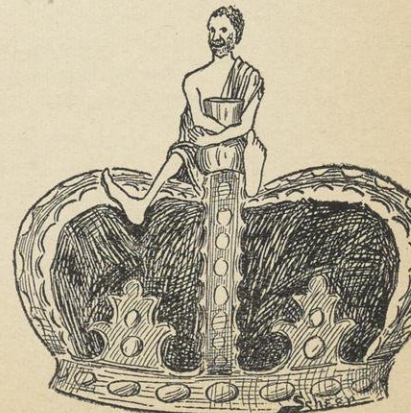

Miss Sylvester: "Why, that's Freddie Turner; he's the finest man on the hill."

II. As overheard by the Professor himself.

Miss Keech (walking up the hill the next morning): "Professor Trent is pretty nice, but he can't hold a candle to Professor Turner."

Post-Sophomoric

A Freshman fresh from pastures green,
 Of charming unsophistication,
 One morning on the street was seen
 With hair in rude abbreviation.

Demosthenes' "On the Crown."

Battle Hymn of Chicago University.

Tune: "America."

Rockefeller, 'tis of thee,
Man with thy cash so free,
Of thee we sing.
Our hands to thee we reach,
We all call thee a peach,
And our professors teach
Thou'rt the real thing.

We really cannot say
How much we spend a day,
Upon our team.
We love thy tanks and mills,
We love thy dollar bills,
Thy cash our pocket fills,
And that's no dream.

(Following verses are sung reverently, and with hats off.)

We have a trainer rare,
He is beyond compare,
We do not brag.
What though the heavens fall,
He is our one, our all,
A man devoid of gall,
His name is Stagg.

And people ought to know,
He loves from top to toe
An amateur.
Should he a player see,
Who had received a fee,
He'd give him the G. B.,
To keep things pure.

Once a whole class got conned in "trig,"
And didn't that young prof. feel big.
But late that night he heard a sound,
And he waked him up, and looked around;
He could not move however much he twisted,
And worse it grew the more that he resisted.
Then came the gollywobbles' gleeful shout,
"He's under the radical and can't get out!!!"

*"Worse than ever before."
(After the Wisconsin Game.)*

His Dying Bed

They sat around his dying bed,
And waited for him to die;
He'd been up town and had a spread,
And eaten much mince pie,

And then they saw, as 'round they sat,
The bed-spring up in pain.
At least, they thought that it was that;
Perhaps 'twas counterpane.

They thought they heard the death-watch sound,
Last warning to the sick,
But when they came 't look around,
'Twas only the bed-tick.

Pray don't believe this fairy tale,
I'm a liar, yes, I am.
This story was made up for sale,
'Tis nothing but a sham.

Freemanisms

Professor Freeman: "Mr. McArdle, where would you look for another description of a tournament?"

McArdle: "In Chaucer."

Professor F.: "Well, in what work of Chaucer?"

McArdle (consulting a neighbor): "The Fairie Queen."

Professor F.: "Say McArdle, I'd kick the man that told me that."

Professor Freeman (holding up a copy of the "Divine Comedy"): "Here is a book which no member of the class should be without. It costs but eighty cents. Heaven for eighty cents, with Hell and Purgatory thrown in."

Professor Freeman (calling roll): "Miss Lipe. Miss Lipe here? Sick? Must be at the University of Leipsic."

Professor Freeman: "Miss Keech—where is Miss Keech?"

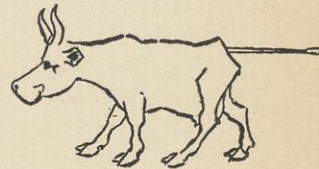

Miss Scribner: "I think she is going to stop this—"

Professor F.: "She can't stop a thing she hasn't begun. Just tell her that, will you?"

Professor Freeman: "Miss Campbell, how do you pronounce 'braes?' I see you have a Scotch plaid in your name."

N old cow wandered down the street,
Looking for something green;
A Freshman young she chanced to meet—
He's never since been seen.

How He Was Caught

(Dedicated to a former Badger Board chairman.)

The shades of evening were pulled down and the moon was hung out to prevent any belated wayfarer from wandering off the earth.

On a great veranda stood a section of fancy railing before a rocking chair. The rocking chair held a very pretty young lady in its arms. The chair rocked back and forth with an almost imperceptible motion. So slowly did it move that the moon-cast shadows on the floor had time to rest after each rock.

On the fancy railing sat a young man of some literary futility and a high-flyer in the community. He regarded the rocking-chair with envy, and hummed gently with half-closed lips: "If I were you! If I were you!" The chair creaked slightly, and the shadow on the floor quickened its pace.

"My darling!" began the young man at last, in strange embarrassment. The shadow on the floor outdid itself in a fierce effort to keep up with the rocker. The fancy railing shook; never before in its varied experience had the railing heard those words spoken to that young lady with such deep significance. In sudden rage it seized the young man's tan-covered foot with its fretted wooden tentacles. Its victim twisted and pulled and wriggled, but in vain.

The rocking chair was shaking now, but not in rage. The moon drew a great cloudy sleeve before her face and laughed, while the little stars winked at one another.

The young man on the fancy railing sat like an ancient malefactor with one foot in the stocks. The blood rushed to his face and neck and ears, but he alone knew this.

With final determination he amateurly contorted himself and made a double-handed pass at the imprisoned extremity; in another moment he sat, in a stock-ing, and gazed with conflicting feelings at the empty rocking chair.

A science Prof. did eat one winter night
A midnight lunch ('twas not what you'd call light),
Then went to bed, and soon was snoring loud,
When o'er his brain there seemed to pass a cloud;
A monster came to him and said, "You'll do,
I'm really very hungry, and I'm going to eat you."
Of horns and hoofs the Prof. he caught a glimpse,
(Pray pardon me, I know my meter limps),
And then he said with courtesy most scant,
"Why you are gramminivorous, you can't."

Santa Claus to Professor Sober (last Christmas): "Poor Professor Sober!"

Professor Sober.—"Why, what's the matter with me?"

Santa Claus.—"You are so thin, there's only room for a stick of candy in your stocking."

Professor Sober.—"Yes, but just think how long it'll have to be!"

Adam and Eve.

The ichthyosaurus danced around in the light of the pea-green moon,
While the rhamphorhynchus hummed and roared in Wagnerian lack of tune,
And the mastodon walked with the dinosaur, or loafed on a low sand-dune.

The crocogators and allidiles were hungry and long and lean,
And they chased the smog and the eight-tailed dog in manner that was mean,
While the plesiosaurus and thermosaur were entirely too often seen.

Then into this chaos of birds and beasts came a common, "ornery"
man;

He was small and slim, and soft and white, until he began to tan;

But you ought to have seen, when the dinosaur chased, how swiftly
then he ran.

Then woman was made, and together the two the fields and forests
scoured,

But when animals chased, no longer he ran, for fear she'd call him
coward;

So he stood still and called them names, and never once was devoured.

For the dinosaur and plesiosaur were shocked at the nerve of the man,
And so, whenever he called them names, they turned around and ran.
(You will not wonder, not at all, if you their names do scan.)

And so to this day in this whole wide world, if man owns all that's made,
Remember all credit is due to her who round in the wilderness strayed;
For man took everything only for fear that woman would call him afraid.

Sapphics

Dark the night; no moon, not a star in heaven;
Sadly moaned the wind through the leafy tree-tops;
From the belfry tower the stroke of midnight
Dismally sounded.

Brightly shown the lamp from an upper window,
Where, with peace of mind and a student's meerschaum,
Lo! the mighty chief of uncounted Freshmen
Bucked for the morrow.

Hist! there comes a sound from the outer darkness,
Like the tread of feet in unwonted numbers;
Then a voice in tones of suppressed excitement:
"Freshie, we want you."

As oftentimes with strength that is born with frenzy,
Dutchmen heap their dikes in the face of the Ocean,
So against the door seven chairs, two tables
Gathered the Freshman.

Then he strode in might to the open window,
Leaned far out and gazed at the shapes beneath him;
Cool the words he spoke, though his heart was thumping:
"Come in and get me."

As the waves sweep in on some struggling seaman,
Raise him high in the air and then send him seaward,
So this human wave carried off the Freshman,
Vainly resisting.

A Census

When Adam first came to the earth, a census he did take;
He started it and it went all right till there came a sudden break.
He started with Saurarodon and Megatherium,
And then came Ceraterpetor and Brontotherium,
Then Glyptodon, Dimorphodon and Hysilophodon,
And Pezophops, Pythonomorphs and Polyptychodon.
The rest were Pterodactyls, Toxodontotheriums,
Basilosaurs, Pelorosaurs, Homalodontotheriums,
And then and there an end came to his census—
He struck Iguandon Bernissartensis.

We've Never Met

YEAR, in sooth, or two or three,
I've gone to class, dear maid, with thee;
I've gone to class, and yet, dear me,
Somehow we've never met.

I know you well, each hat, each dress,
Each tone of voice, and must confess
I like the same, but none the less,
We've never, never met.

When you have failed, the pain was mine;
My prayers were yours at every line;
I shared your triumphs, though in fine,
We two had never met.

Your gentle lesson I've perused
Too oft in class; and I have mused
On fancies in my breast infused,
And wished that we had met.

Dear girl, the goodness that has shone
From your fair face will ne'er be known
By you,—that subtle sweetness flown
To those you've never met.

Freshman girl: "I don't see why they call those six German verbs auxiliaries; they don't help me a bit."

Subject to an attack of the blues

It was in the English literature class and the professor was assigning poems from Burns.

"Miss Meinhardt," said he, "you may have 'A fond kiss and then we sever.' I mean nothing personal."

At the next meeting of the class Miss Meinhardt reported on the piece as follows: "This poem was written by Burns to Clarinda. Indeed, it is a well-known fact that many other poems have been written to Clara Linde."

And Sunny wilted.

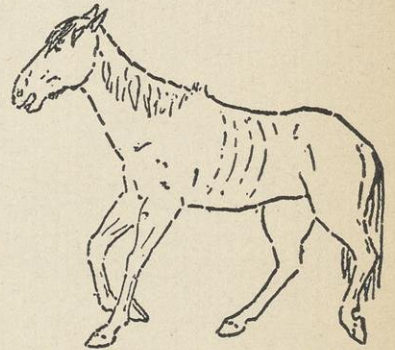

In the Lit. Class

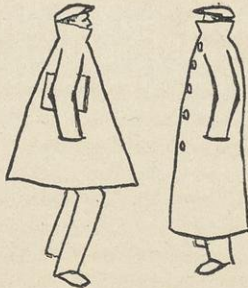

N the Lit. class sat two maidens,
Sat two maidens young and frisky.
Brilliant were their wits and ever
Brilliant was their conversation.
And an inspiration seized them,
Seized them as they sat in Lit. class,
And they reeled off soulful rhymelets—
Rhymelets writ in perfect metre.
But alas for these two maidens!
Sunny's eagle eye lit on them,
(Lit I say for 'twas Lit. class)
As they sat there, giggling, howling,
Roaring at their pretty verses—
And he called on each in order—
And they flunked with many a hard stab,
Flunked disgracefully, and straightway
Swore they'd never more write verses,
As they sat there in the Lit. class.

A Freshman Horse

A Freshman had a little horse,
It knew well how to go,
And everywhere that Freshman went,
The horse went too, you know.
It followed him to class one day,
Which was against the rule;
It made the teacher roar and rage,
To see that horse in school.
And when the teacher turned him out,
The Freshman, pale with fear,
Jumped on the horse and rode away,
And never more came near.

Laundry business increases and Esterly buys a horse.

"Say, was it cold in the room where you had your exam, this morning?"
"Cold? The exam, was stiff."

The Affair of the Dome

Perhaps they were engineers, and perhaps they were members of Professor Williams' class in Hellenistic Greek. You may draw your own conclusions.

The atmosphere of the room was murky. The smoke from the pipes rose unsteadily, swirled around in heavy rings, and finally lost its identity in the general blueness.

"Well," said Farnsworth, as he spat thoughtfully into the waste-basket, "I don't know that I mind telling about it now, but it might have made a lot of trouble awhile ago:—

"It was nearly four o'clock when we reached Main Hall, and it was somewhat later before we got to the top of the building. You know they were repairing it then and the big old dome was built up, inside and out with temporary scaffoldings. Keely carried the bucket of red paint and a brush, and the rest of us lugged a big seven-eighth inch rope. We fastened the rope around Blackford's waist, and let him down on the outside through a hole in the very apex of the dome.

"Scarey? I should say it was scarey. Thirty feet or so to the roof, a short roll to the edge, and then—straight down for four stories. But Blackford did not stop to think about those things—we were all in good spirits, anyway. First he painted the upper half of the 1 as high as he could reach, then he turned upside down, with his heels in the air and his eyes bulging, and painted the rest of the 1.

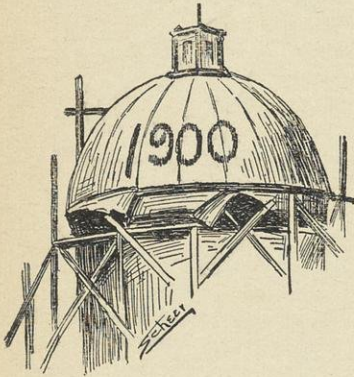

"We pulled him up and another man took his place. Brown painted the 9, Maderson the first 0, and Wild the second 0. Before we were done with the job it was broad daylight, and near breakfast time. There were four good suits of clothes spoiled, and we had all kinds of work to get the red paint off our hands in time for class.

"But it was an artistic piece of decoration when it was finished—1900 in fine, straight figures, six feet high and beautifully red. Everybody in the 'Varsity saw it the next morning. The Freshmen, in particular, didn't like it, which was natural, and two or three days later it leaked out that they were going to do some painting on their own hook. The word was passed quietly among us Sophs, and early that evening a little crowd of us were posted in the shrubbery and rubbish at the rear of the Main Hall.

"But we never carried out the little plan our reception committee had in mind. It was a very nice plan, and would have effectually squelched the ardor of all aspiring Freshmen. But it began to rain, a slow, drizzling, measley sort of rain, that was wet and very cold. A late hour that night found three of us lying under the scanty protection of the dome, way up on the tin roof, waiting for the Freshmen. We had climbed up by a temporary scaffolding on the outside of the building. The rest of the party had gone to rout out reinforcements.

"By and by we heard the enemy; they were coming in swarms. But somehow they had got an idea that we were ready for them, and they were cautious; and just to impress 'em with our numerousness, we fired shingles at them and exposed our heads as suggestively as possible above the sky-line.

"We heard them breaking into the building. They were coming up the stairs. They were just beneath our feet, at the trap that opens onto the roof. They scratched a match, smashed the lock, and tried to push back the sliding door. But we had barricaded it with stray scantlings, and they couldn't budge it.

"Those Freshmen were real inventive, as well as persistent. They hunted around and got a big cedar post from somewhere, and began to use it as a battering ram. Of course our little barricade couldn't stand that. We had no adequate brace, so we grabbed some more scantlings and tried to fix them against the big chimney that runs up from the edge of the slanting roof. But one scantling was too short to reach and two together were too long. So we put one against the door, and the other way down against the foot of the chimney, letting the two ends come together like the top of the capital letter A. Then I crawled out on the flying iron rod that held the big chimney, and balancing myself with this, I put all my weight onto the top of that letter A. And every time those Freshmen hit that door a swing with their cedar post, those two beams would drive together and shoot up, and me along with them.

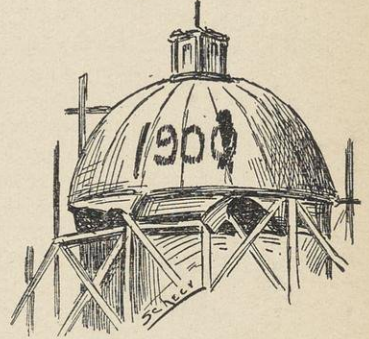

"The end of it all came this way. The Freshmen finally gathered themselves together and gave that post an awful swing. The door gave way with a crash, my scantlings flew up into the air, and I went off into space with all the breath knocked out of me. I struck all in a heap on the slope of the roof, and started to roll. I was too sick to think very much, but I guessed in an impersonal way that my time had come, and I tried to say my "Now I lay me—" I rolled on and slipped, and then bumped into the base of the chimney and lay still.

"Meanwhile the Freshmen had knocked the door away and were trying to come up, and our fellows were slamming them over the heads with clubs and things. At last the Freshmen who were behind gave a mighty push, actually lifting up their foremost men and shooting them up through the hatchway. Our fellows were outnumbered, and the scrap that followed was short, but sweet. Duffey grappled with Kittleson there in the dark and wet; one of them stumbled, and they both went down on that slippery tin roof, sliding towards the edge. Snyder was overpowered, and I crawled up to the scene of the festivities, just in time to be nabbed.

"Meanwhile our fellows had gathered in force, and were coming up the stairs with a yell. The Freshmen had to hurry to empty their pot of black paint over the last 0 in the 1900, and the Sophs were upon them.

"There were some chairs on the top landing which the Freshmen threw together for a barricade. The Sophomores made a rush and used what remained of the chairs as a means of persuasion. It was a lovely time, all in the dark, too. Teddy Brown tells how he would jump onto the necks of two advancing Sophomores and carry them with him to the next landing. Twice he performed this operation, but the third attempt was met by something which caused a shower of stars and a temporary "lapsus memoria."

"In the midst of it all a small voice whispered that the "cops" were coming, and the tumult was stilled. We shook hands all 'round, and sneaked off home through the grayness of the early morning."

The Freshman Asks—

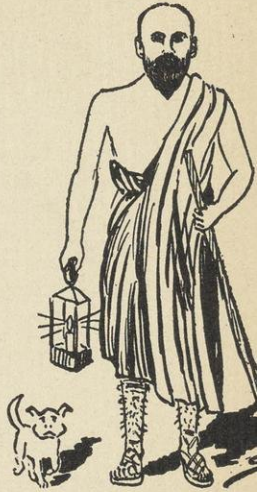

Is Slaughter fierce of mind and mein?
 For why is Lucy Gay?
 Has Hambuechen a porcine look?
 And what turned Eunice Gray?
 O tell me, is Miss Brigham young?
 And what makes Molly Strong?
 Is Honeywell so very sweet?
 And is George Tallman long?
 Oh, what is Theo. Running for?
 Why isn't Sober sad?
 That Nathan Short has length of limb,
 And Grimm is often glad.
 Our Snow seems warm as any man;
 And Frost belies his name;
 And Wolf is of pacific mind;
 And Robert Wild is tame.
 One more, no doubt it's plain to you,
 Perchance I am a dunce:
 Why do our poets always bear
 Euphonic names like Stuntz?

* * *

"Burke," said Stuntz, as he threw a biscuit the length of the table and hit a normalite on the ear, "What column in the Record does that remind you of?"

"Fired at Random," promptly answered Burke.

Winter Scenes at Picnic Point

When Pat Goes Back to Kick

The grand-stand is a howling mass,
The lines are crowded thick;
Now center makes a clever pass,
And Pat goes back to kick.

Ten giant frames protect in front
Like twenty tons of brick;
The captain signals for a punt
And Pat goes back to kick.

Unerringly the pig-skin flies
Above the goal cross-stick;
The rooters' "Rah-Rah" rends the skies
When Pat goes back to kick.

Say, you who never yet have seen
The skillful kicker's trick,
Come out upon the white-washed green
When Pat goes back to kick.

Among the Lawyers

Mr. Olin.—"What is the law in regard to deceit, Mr. Case?"

Mr. Cadby Case.—"The law—ah—used to be—"

Mr. Olin.—"Well, what is it now?"

Cadby ponders (then a bright idea strikes him).—
"The law is now just the same as it was then."

"Next," says Mr. O., and Cadby subsides with a look of astonished remonstrance.

Some Stagnated Stanzas

Mr. Stagg, in his proclamations to the Chicago dailies, says, "Chicago's team was purely amateur."
"They played a nice, clean game," "won easily," etc., etc.

A Warm Girl

Dr. Stearns:—"Miss C., in what respects did Michael Angelo's work excel that of other masters?"

Miss C. (stabbing wildly):—"His color effects, and his execution were——"

Dr. Stearns:—"Miss C., you are warm, but not hot."

You've the cleanest team on earth,
I don't think, Mr. Stagg.
They've been amateurs from birth,
Aber ni't, Mr. Stagg.
We were doubtless very mean,
When we didn't let you screen,
Their past hist'ry that's so clean,
So we think, Mr. Stagg,
Showing up most all the team, Mr. Stagg.

Oh, you played a nice, clean game,
I don't think, Mr. Stagg.
And the slugging was quite tame,
Aber ni't, Mr. Stagg.
But we'd only like to say
Of the man that kicked O'Dea,
He'll go out without delay,
So we think, Mr. Stagg,
And he'll ride home in a dray, Mr. Stagg.

Of course you won with ease,
I don't think, Mr. Stagg.
And for you it was a cheese,
Aber ni't, Mr. Stagg.
But although we feel quite sore,
We are thirsting for your gore;
In another year or more,
So we think, Mr. Stagg,
We will turn about the score, Mr. Stagg.

No matter where an Eau Claire boy is to be found he turns out a true patriot. Here is a letter from Mr. Allard Smith at the University to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Smith:

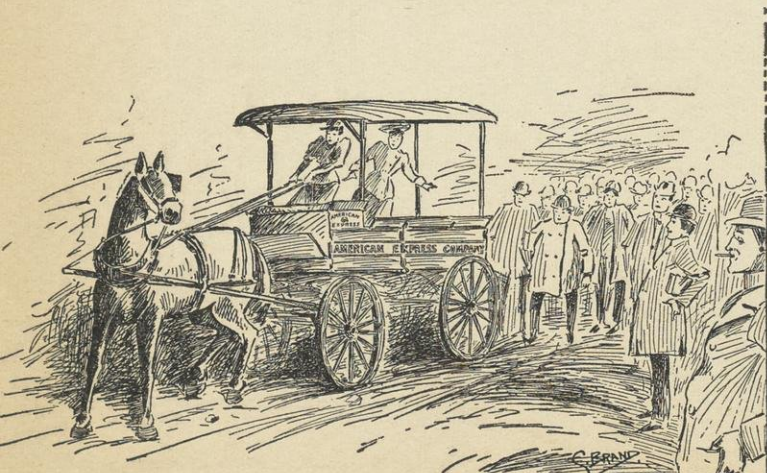

MADISON, Wis., April 25, 1898.
My Dear Parents:—I guess there is going to be war. I and Prexy addressed a rousing mass-meeting of the students today, and then I enrolled over three hundred, professors and students, in my regiment.

Spain is going to be licked, even if I have to interrupt the Military Hops to do it.

Please send me a fifty, as I need some spurs and a campaign hat. Major Schroeder has already procured his.

Your affectionate son,

In the Olden, Golden Days

In the olden, golden days when the earth began to raise
Its face from the waters of the deep,
Lived a tender, slender man, who never walked, but ran,
And always found a cave in which to sleep.

On a very merry day, as this man did chance to play
With two sticks and a bit of twisted bark,
(It was clearly, merely chance but it was a big advance,)
He threw a stick which almost hit a mark.

Then this happy, scrappy man conceived the joyous plan,
Of shooting the big beasts from up a tree,
And his natty, chatty wife could aid him in this strife,
For she early learned to shoot as well as he.

"Dear Father," he wrote, "they have 'conned' me,
The reason I cannot discern;
I've spent many long nights in 'bucking,'
And they say that I readily learn."

Then down came the father in fury,
To learn why his son had been "plucked;"
He found, though the boy was "a bucker,"
'Twas the "Tiger" alas! he had "bucked."

* * *

Jack and Will went up the "hill"
To see Professor Slaughter.
When Jack came down he had a "con."
And Will, they said, "had oughter."

U. W. SONGS:
"The Wisconsin Him."

A Wisconsin Bluff

Fisher hits the C. M. and St. P. Line for a Gain to the Southern Part of the State.

Of course the Wisconsin foot ball aggregation would be expected to accomplish anything, but when its chaplain and left tackle, in the person of Fisher and Holmes, alone and unaided, buck the line of a railroad corporation, and not only make a touchdown, but ride to goal on one of the corporation's trains, even Chicago might open her eyes.

All farmers, even retired ones, deem everything made off from a corporation, just so much treasure laid up in Heaven. So when those two retired farmers, Fisher and Holmes, boarded the train at Blooming Prairie, on their way to Madison, the former said: "Now, Harvey, I have a pass and mileage, both over this road. You just drop down here in the back seat and use my pass, and I'll go up in front and use my book. We'll save that much to help the poor."

The conductor came through, punched the mileage book with his usual liberality, and passed on. A few minutes later he came back.

"There's a man down there with a pass in your name."

The chaplain looked mildly interested.

"I took it up."

The chaplain—m m—well—he made an exclamation. A warm discussion arose. The conductor objected to the chaplain's acting as referee; he said that his line was playing under eastern rules this season, and that these double passes were risky and liable to result in a loss to one side or the other.

"I took it up."

The train drew up to a station and the brakeman called time. The conductor left the car. Fisher followed and tackled again. He explained the situation; he said they didn't want to give the railway line the privilege of kicking off, and they were willing, even anxious, to compromise. All his eloquence was in vain. The conductor held him for downs, and the field felt decidedly slippery. After a period of silent suffering for our men, the conductor sauntered along and returned the pass, thinking to strengthen his line thereby.

Fisher willing to compromise.

At Calmar conductor number one left the line and a substitute took his place.

"Now, Harvey," said Fisher, "we've got to put up a bigger bluff. You sit right down here beside me, and hand up that same pass."

The conductor came along, punched a mileage book for J. L. Fisher, and then examined a pass made out to J. L. Fisher. His gaze met our men's gaze, and he tried the revolving wedge play. Our gaze held firm.

"Are yon twin brothers?"

Fisher smiled an off-side smile, and said: "No, cousins."

The conductor wavered, broke, returned the pass and walked on through the car.

The chaplain and left tackle clasped hands in silent ecstasy, murmuring, "$6.18 to nothing in our favor.

Freshman Lament Before Exams.

I'm almost dead, my eyes they pain;
If they give out I can't remain.
Now as exams. are drawing nigh,
All stiff with fright my fingers lie—
When first I came, I loved to fool.

My lessons were a second thought;
But Ah! 'tis not like our High School—
I haven't studied as I ought.

Young as I am, my course is run.
I've wasted time and spent dad's mon;
I darsn't ask the profs to say
If I have any chance or nay.

My poor gebusted head, if I
For once could cram thee full of brains,
With happy heart I then could die
And save my family undue pains!

Good-bye, dear friends, I'm going home;
Conned out, but maybe not alone.

Two Delta Gamma Freshmen

Two Delta Gamma Freshmen
With two Chi Psis made a bet :
'Twas on that fatal foot-ball game—
Their tears are flowing yet.

Our team was so unselfish
That they let Chicago win,
So a two by two silk pillow
Each maiden did begin.

They fussed and fumed and worried
Long past the wee, wan hours,
To get the "Chi Psi" right side up
And work the purple flowers.

Then in two huge band-boxes,
Completely hid from sight,
In reams of purple paper
With a golden card made tight,

They sent them to the Chi Psis:—
Did they thank them? Not at all—
As yet they haven't found them,
Because they were so small.

Mister Lyman

O long to be remembered
Was the day down at the Gym.,
When Lyman ran away from Nineteen-Two.
He was in abject terror
Lest he'd get into the swim
And so he ran away from Nineteen-Two.

He'd stand around the outer edge,
And yell, "Grab him, Nineteen-One,"
On the day that Lyman ran from Nineteen-Two.
But when the Twos got after him
You should have seen him run,
On the day that Lyman ran from Nineteen-Two.

The other Sophs they all stood up
And met their men that day,
The day that Lyman ran from Nineteen-Two.
But it seems that MR. Lyman
Isn't built in just that way;
And so he ran away from Nineteen-Two.

Miss Challoner:—"I've never been over the road."

Dr. Pyre:—"Who was Pluto, Miss Bertles?"

Miss Bertles looks inquiringly at the class.—Bell rings.

Dr. Pyre:—"Well, I hope you'll make his acquaintance later, Miss Bertles."

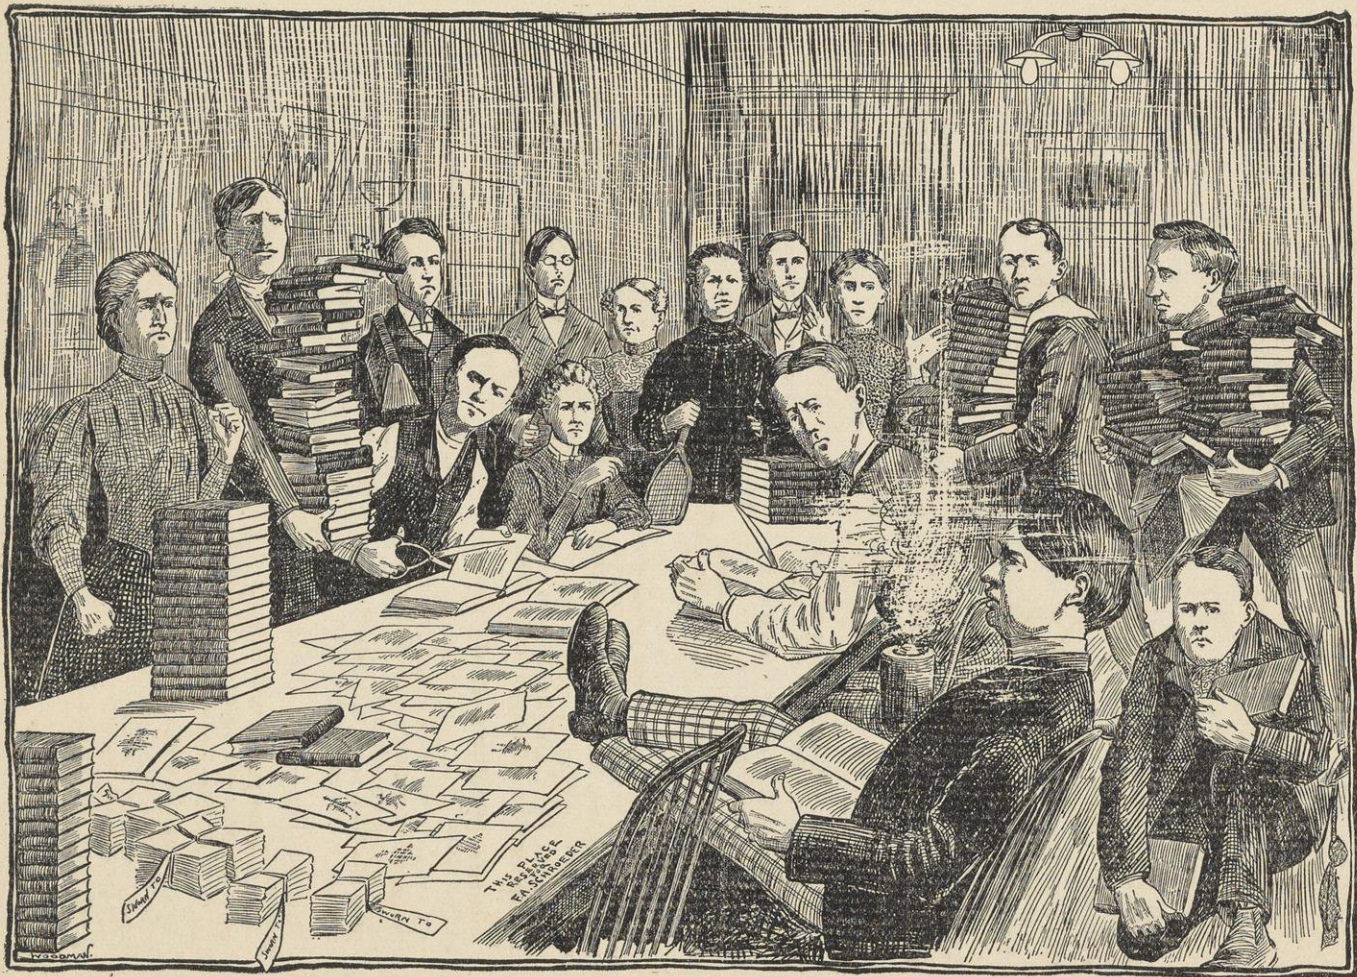

The girls look shocked but Miss B. smiles sweetly.

Miss Emery (graciously), "Certainly, you may have it."

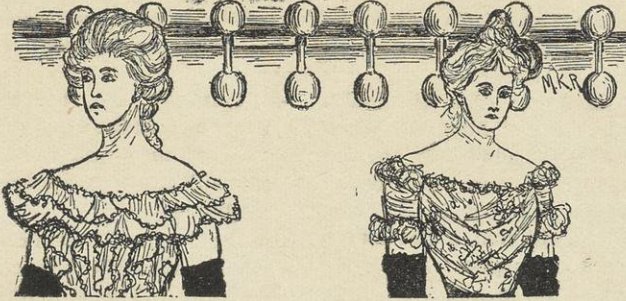

George G., "Would you like my shoulder to write on?"

Miss E., "Oh! No, thank you. It is a very ingenious offer, however."

Problems of Young Men

All inquiries must give full name and address of the writer. Correspondents inclosing stamps or stamped envelopes will be answered by mail.

"FREDDIE" CL-S-N: You will doubtless find the song, "Bliss, All Other Bliss Excelling" admirably adapted to your range. If your music dealer cannot supply you, try L. E. Norr. We think you will find A flat not too high. If it is, rent rooms.

CL-R-CE T-VL-R: Stripes and plaids will continue to be worn this season. However, trousers of plaids will be cut bias, and stripes will run bayadere instead of up and down. We would suggest that a pair in one of these styles, together with a poker-dot tie of some nice cheerful shade, and your checkered career (those like yours are sure not to go out for several seasons), worn with a black and white bull-dog, would be quite the latest shriek.

J-CK F-X: You are all right. Everybody else is mistaken.

MANAGER (with a capital M.) F-SH-R: (1.) Your lady friend really had reason to be offended if, while ice-boating, you said that it was hard to keep both her feet covered with only one blanket. Under the circumstances she is to be pardoned for not remarking how extensive was your regard for her welfare. A box of bitter-sweets might go a long way toward repairing the injury. (2.) The borrowed articles you mention, outlaw as follows: Stamps, twenty minutes; night shirts, five days (and nights); law books, one semester; other books, twelve years and three days; calendars and dictionaries, one year. There is no necessity for returning any other articles. (3.) Letters of condolence and marriage proposals should not be type-written.

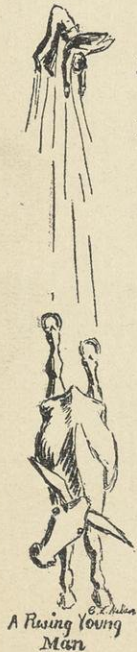

-D. P-HL-W: No, the young woman made no mistake when she said to you, "And all the world wondered that you passed," although she did make a misquotation.

FR-NK K-RTZ: A diet of champagne and chestnuts is said to be excellent for your difficulty. Try it faithfully awhile, massaging the thin parts of neck and face, with olive oil and lanoline. If this does not help your case, we can make but one further suggestion, "Chew Climax Plug" on both sides at once.

LEFT TACKLE H-LM-S: In my opinion you will find no better method of deciding on what young lady you shall invite to a Military Hop, than the one you have already pursued. We can make only one suggestion. After you have made the list of all the ladies of your acquaintance from the directory, and then gone over it several times rejecting various names for one reason or another, until your list is reduced to only a few, our suggestion would be, that you consult, before your final decision, not only the captain of the baseball team, but the entire athletic board.

D-DL-Y ST-TS-N: Color in ties is largely at the option of the wearer, but at the same time should be chosen with due regard to the feelings of others.

C. M. -TH-RT-N: In Eastern circles it is considered very poor form to propose to a young lady before consulting papa. For answers to your questions concerning the duties of a young married man, see Gates on Domestic Relations, volume 37.

PSI US: No, we would not advise that you have your ices so strongly flavored. Accidents will happen, you know. Sassafras and peppermint is strong enough for growing children.

J-Y B. B-LDW-N, ALB-RT H-NN-NG: The estimate which a critical world places upon a young man's abilities is apt to fall below the true one. In such cases, one's own views are vastly more satisfactory, and should be cultivated to the exclusion of others.

COACH McC-NV-LL-: We have been to a great deal of pains to ascertain the facts in the case. It is true that the young lady asked a man if it would be possible to get your head reduced, but we do not think she meant anything objectionable, as the man is a photographer. She probably doubted only his skill. We are the more inclined to this opinion from the fact that she wanted the picture to go in her watch.

H-R-LDS--M-N: I would suggest a look-glass fastened in the inside of your hat. Then when you take it off on meeting your lady friends, you can adjust your hair and tie to your own satisfaction.

MR. AGRIC: I know how hard it must be for a timid, shrinking young fellow like you to assert yourself and claim your share of the sidewalk; but if the ladies were so rude and unmannerly as to persist in taking the whole of it, I certainly would report the matter to the Dean.

DR. -LS-M: We regret extremely our inability to answer your question, "When is a foul not a foul?" in the temporary absence of our sporting editor. We think, however, that this would depend somewhat on the umpire. With regard to the exact distinction between a forward and a basket, we will try to make that clear in our next issue.

RUED: We would diagnose your trouble as a complication of chronic Norwegian and acute egotism. The opinions of others, applied externally and well rubbed in, might be beneficial for the latter, but we fear there is no remedy for the former.

BILLY: We fear that the "tired feeling" that you speak of results from cardiac weakness. This frequently shows itself in a desire to take long daily walks. Such cases are hopeless unless taken in time.

Send dull blades to the Emery. Emery sharpens bills, also.

Literary Note

Messrs. Brahma, Confucius, Dodo & Co., literateurs and publishers, announce to the public a new series of autobiographies, to be known as "Notable Performances of Famous Versatilities." Among volumes soon to be issued are the following:

"How it Feels to be Brilliant," by Marcus Antonius Jacobson.

"The Confessions of a Professional Egotist," by Milton Gray Montgomery.

"The History of My Life, or What I am Going to Do," by Ernst Hildebrand Kronshage.

The following publication is recommended to the attention of the Department of Physical Culture:

"Delsarte Revised"—A valuable treatise by John Buel Crabtree, with illustrations of the author in several new attitudes.

This work is a presentation of the most approved system of physical culture, as modified by original research. A feature of the book is the chapter entitled "What to Do with the Hands."

The first series, to be published immediately upon the author's return from his European tour, will be "From Schoolboy to Supe," by Philip Loring Allen. A brief résumé of the contents will show the feast of good things in store for the admirers of this wonderful personality.

Report of Faculty Committee on Novel and Unusual Punishments.

(Extract from Minutes of Faculty Meeting, January 16, 1899.)

TO THE HONORABLE, THE FACULTY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN :

After thorough investigation and numerous discussions, your committee begs leave to submit the following report :

All earthly institutions have a period of rise and a period of decline, and to this eternal rule methods of punishment are no exception. For many years past, the fact has been forced upon your honorable body that the old style punishments long in vogue at this University are gradually losing their force. No longer do conditions, or even fails, strike terror to the heart of a Psi U. Freshman ; a visit from the patrol has ceased to cause a stir at the Chi Psi lodge ; even the direful threat of expulsion suffices not to restrain the exuberant animal spirits of a Sophomore engineer. In view of these ominous facts, it is incumbent upon the authorities of a great University to bestir themselves, and to institute as the inevitable consequences of student misdeeds a series of punishments which shall serve as an effectual preventive of future crime. Throughout our deliberations we have kept in mind the ancient principle of your honorable body, namely, that the innocent must suffer with the guilty, and if the guilty cannot be reached (as is usually the case), that the innocent must suffer anyway. We have accordingly prepared the following

SCHEDULE.

1. If any disturbance occurs on State Street between the hours of 11 P. M. and 3 A. M., Professor Daniells' class in chemistry shall at its next meeting be subjected to a written quiz.
2. If any object of the value of not less than 19 cents be borrowed from Professor Snow's lecture room without permission, the Senior laws shall recite to Professor Olin on at least two days of the following week.
3. If any portion of the contents of the Badger shall not meet with the approval of the President, each inmate of Ladies' Hall shall be required to read the last number of the Aegis.
4. If during the darkness of night, incendiary or threatening posters be distributed about the city, the use of the bulletin boards shall be denied to the literary societies for three weeks immediately following.
5. If any one shall applaud at a comic opera during a solo by the prima donna, no military hop shall be held within two weeks thereafter,
6. If any one shall throw a peanut upon the stage during such performance, the person sitting immediately behind him shall be suspended from the University until after the adjournment of the legislature, unless such suspension be sooner revoked.

when you meet him at the gym;

Though you take it off to no one else, you'll have to bow to him.

NO SMOKING on the campus, this above all things we say,
 For you thus arouse the Sophomores and your verdancy display.

And when you appear in public don't attempt to carry CANES,
 For it shows a lack of caution and a scarcity of brains.

You must never, never wander from your room to have a lark
 For the streets are not so healthy as they might be After Dark.

To have to give this warning fills us all with deep regret,
 But the Sophs are very mighty and the LAKE IS VERY WET.

So Freshmen, mind your business, of your conduct have a care,
 And the gist of all our teaching is the single word

BEWARE!

P. S. And, above all, please don't cause any more earthquakes.

Freshman to Sophomore (at the 'scrap' at Main Hall, '98):
 "Stand aside or I'll knock your brains out!"

Soph: "True, that's where you have the advantage."

He Meant Swingli.

Prof. Coffin: "Mr. Haight, who was the first great Swiss reformer?"

Mr. Haight (who has his dates mixed):
 "Svengali."

Dr. Libby: "Mr. Powers, how did the Nile affect civilization?"

Mr. Powers (1902):
 "Really, professor, I don't know, but I might stab at it."

The girls who know the Phi Rho Betas,
 All sing the same old song.
 To them there's nothing quite so sweet as
 "Love me, Little, love me, Long."

"Eine Grille kam bei strenger Kalte zu ihrer Nachbarin," etc. Mr. Morgan translates: "A cricket came with a severe cold."

Junior reading: "Der gerade Alonzo—" Prof. Voss, interrupting: "Nicht Alonzo aus Chicago."

Miss Gay: "Mlle B, will you read the next sentence?"

Mlle. B: "'Elle sourit grandement—'"

Miss Gay: "Pas cela 'Elle fit sa bouche aux oreilles.' 'She made her mouth to her ears.' That is the correct French expression."

Upon which the entire class undertook to assume the correct French expression.

When the members of the Wisconsin foot-ball team were gathered in the Victoria Hotel, Chicago, all ready to set out for the Northwestern game, someone noticed the very conspicuous absence of Anderson, and inquired anxiously about him.

"Oh," said Larson, "he is upstairs in front of the mirror, looking to see if his shin-guard is on straight."

Are performed on the Comptometer at a great saving of time and worry. Used in bookkeeping in the offices of thousands of large firms. Used by mechanical and civil engineers. Once used becomes indispensable. Many after trying one have purchased two, three and four.

Scott & Williams, Builders of Knitting Machinery, Philadelphia, write: "We perform by its use all the office calculations incident to an extended business with great rapidity and absolute correctness."

The American Glucose Co., Peoria, Ill., writes: "We have two of your Comptometers in use in our office and are pleased to say that they are giving us the best of satisfaction; in fact, we would hardly know how to get along without them."

The University of Wisconsin

Situation of the University

THE University extends along the north shore of Lake Mendota more than a mile. In point of beauty the site is unsurpassed, if not unequalled. The campus contains 240 acres, besides an athletic field, known as Camp Randall, of 42 acres. On the lower campus are the Gymnasium and the Historical Library building.

Library and Laboratory Facilities

The completion of the new Historical Library building on University grounds, in which will be placed the University library, will afford unsurpassed accommodations for the use of students. The number of volumes contained in the libraries here collected will be about 250,000.

Facilities for Physical Training

The Gymnasium, 200 feet long, 100 feet wide, and three stories high, affords probably the best accommodations to be found in the country. Besides offices, locker-rooms, lecture-rooms, shower and tub baths, bowling alleys, and rooms for other special gymnastic work, it contains a swimming tank 80 feet long by 28 feet wide, a running-track of eleven laps to the mile, a ball cage, and a general gymnasium 165 feet long by 96 feet wide.

Conditions of Admission

Students are admitted either by certificate of graduation from an accredited high school, or upon examination. For detailed information address the Deans of the respective colleges, or W. D. Hiestand, Registrar of the University.
