THE MURDER AT CONWAY'S

Sixth Installment

At our conference Wednesday night Chief Ryan told of an escaped convict that might possibly be hiding in one of the nearby canyons.

"He is young, dark and may be the fellow that Yerkey told about seeing at the cabin, his name is Stacey."

"I knew he was being hunted", said Armentraut. "He may be the man we're looking for. And Chief what do you know about this fellow Frank Hayes, who has just been released from the Indiana prison. He lived at Greeley, I understand, and he's back home now. He may have had a hand in this."

"I know his father. His mother is dead. She was a fine woman. The boy had never shown any criminal tendencies and I was surprised when I learned of his arrest and conviction on the charge of stealing a car. Yes, he's back home."

"I'm anxious to find that red headed girl and these two men. I have dismissed temporarily, all the people in the house. None of them knew the boy before he came here. I can't find any motive, except possible robbery, but seldom is it necessary to kill a man to rob him. I feel there is a motive that anti-dates his arrival here. I'm starting out in the morning tracing back toward Greeley and Denver. I'm looking for the red-headed girl, the Spanish looking fellow, and the two convicts, and that step-mother, possibly."

"Mr. O'Brien will you go with me," asked the Chief. "I shall drive my own car. These folks around here don't know you, Mr. Armentraut, but they do know me, and they will spot you if you are seen with me."

"Yes, I know that. We will leave early. I am anxious to get started."

Early Friday morning we were on our way. About six we sighted the girl in a small roadster. Chief Ryan motioned to her to stop and she drove over to the side of the road. As she threw on her brakes she reached into the pocket on the door and came up with a gun.

"This isn't a holdup young lady. I'm Chief Ryan, an officer of the law. Put down your gun."

She hesitated and by that time Armentraut was alongside the car.

"We want to ask you some questions. You have nothing to fear", he exclaimed.

Her name was Jane Smith she said. She was staying alone at a friend's cottage. She remembered Bill. Didn't know him. Never saw him after he drove away. She hadn't seen the dark young fellow since Monday. She didn't know his name. She didn't like him anyway because he wouldn't stay at the cottage with her. She lived in Denver. Got mad at her folks and came up into the canyon to rest.

We left Mr. Armentraut talking with the girl and drove on. We wound up a narrow dirt road and as we emerged upon the bank of a small lake we saw a solitary fisherman. His camp was close by. He looked up and I saw he was a handsome young fellow not more than twenty-five.

"Hello, Chief," he said. "I have been expecting you."

"Not surprised then," The Chief got out of his car leisurely and walked over and sat down by the boy. "What do you know about Bill Yerkey's murder, Frank?" he asked, casually.

"Not much, Chief."

"I figured you might have seen Stacy. He's in these parts. We are looking for him."

"I did see Stacey, Chief. You've always been so square I'm going to tell you all I know, but that isn't much. Last Monday Stacey cameby here looking for some grub. He was in a cottage, and a red-headed girl found him there and wanted him to stay there with her. She said she was afraid to stay alone. But Stacey is really a nice fellow. He says he was railroaded to Canon City to save some big guy. He said that as he was getting ready to leave the cottage Monday, a red-headed fellow driving a red roadster stopped there. Stacey figured the fellow had money and he wanted ne to go with him, follow this guy and get his money and car. I told him I wasn't interested. That night, he or somebody else, borrowed my horse. I heard him galloping away about 9 o'clock. In the morning the horse was here, but I havn't seen anything more of Stacey. That's all I know Chief. When I heard of the murder, I just wondered, that's all."

"Thanks Frank. How are things breaking for you?"

"Chief, if a fellow ever gets in the pen, guilty or not, He's about washed up. I never stole that car in Indiana. Hadn't a thing to do with it. Two guys picked me up to give me a lift. When we got into Winamac they left me in the car while they went to get some food, and an officer came along and picked me up. The car had been stolen allright. I gave a wrong name and address. I didn't want the folks at home to hear of my arrest, and when the police and judge found that out, well- it was just too bad for me. They found me guilty and had me in the pen before I knew what it was all about. I didn't know that innocent men could be sent up. I came home a month ago. My father treats me like a pain in the neck.. No one will give me a job and all my old pals that I went to school with, just pass me up. But there's a little girl who still believes in me, and Chief, I am going to make good if I possibly can."

I came up here to fish and think. I have my horse and I'm planning to go some place where I can get a break. I'll work.
I'm not lazy., and I want to prove to everyone that I am really am not so bad. I want to make this little girl proud of me!

We sat and gazed at the placid lake, the tall peaks in the distance, the wooded steepg, the blue sky over all, each one busy with his thoughts. I was thinking of the hoof beats. Of a horse each Tuesday morning

The Chief stood up. His hand caught something in his hip pocket. I saw a bill-fold. I shall always be interested in bill-folds. He opened it casually and extracted several bills, closed the bill-fold and put it back in his pocket.

"Frank, he said, as he extended the hand with the money in it,"

"I lost my boy, but somehow I feel every boy belongs to me. Here is fifty dollars. It's just a loan. I want you to start South and don't stop going 'til you get to Houston, Texas. Hunt up my brother Henry. He's a prominent lawyer there, and he will have a job for you. I'll write him tonight and he will be looking for you. Don't thank me, good-bye, Frank. Let me hear from you occasionally." Then he was in his car and we were bumping down that awful road toward the highway.

So that's the way Chief Ryan hunts criminals, I thought to myself. But there wasn't any doubt in my mind that Frank Hayes told the truth. And so another one of Armentraut's suspects was eliminated.

Walworth County Fair officials are much pleased with themselves these days. They like the program of races and attractions billed for the '36 show at Elkhorn which opens on Labor Day and continues through Thursday. If someone would just guarantee rainless days and that should be easy - their confidence in the attendance would please them as surely as the show will please the attendance. Jot it down on your calendar that you have a date at Elkhorn the second week in September.

Hel Spence has installed a magic bar. Glasses and other objects when placed on the bar glow with a soft light. It is an interesting novelty and causes wonder as to how it happens. Radio activity is the explanation. There are very few yet installed. Spence is among the first to use the idea on a bar.
