PRINCIPLES FOR THE COMPILATION AND EDITING OF "FOREIGN RELATIONS"

The principles which guide the compilation and editing of Foreign Relations are stated in Department of State Regulation 2 FAM 1350 of June 15, 1961, a revision of the order approved on March 26, 1925, by Mr. Frank B. Kellogg, then Secretary of State. The text of the regulation, as further amended, is printed below:

1350 DOCUMENTARY RECORD OF AMERICAN DIPLOMACY

1351 Scope of Documentation

The publication Foreign Relations of the United States constitutes the official record of the foreign policy of the United States. These volumes include, subject to necessary security considerations, all documents needed to give a comprehensive record of the major foreign policy decisions within the range of the Department of State's responsibilities, together with appropriate materials concerning the facts which contributed to the formulation of policies. When further material is needed to supplement the documentation in the Department's files for a proper understanding of the relevant policies of the United States, such papers should be obtained from other Government agencies.

1352 Editorial Preparation

The basic documentary diplomatic record to be printed in Foreign Relations of the United States is edited by the Historical Office, Bureau of Public Affairs of the Department of State. The editing of the record is guided by the principles of historical objectivity. There may be no alteration of the text, no deletions without indicating where in the text the deletion is made, and no omission of facts which were of major importance in reaching a decision. Nothing may be omitted for the purpose of concealing or glossing over what might be regarded by some as a defect of policy. However, certain omissions of documents are permissible for the following reasons:

- a. To avoid publication of matters which would tend to impede current diplomatic negotiations or other business.
- b. To condense the record and avoid repetition of needless details.
- c. To preserve the confidence reposed in the Department by individuals and by foreign governments.
- d. To avoid giving needless offense to other nationalities or individuals.
- e. To eliminate personal opinions presented in despatches and not acted upon by the Department. To this consideration there is one qualification—in connection with major decisions it is desirable, where possible, to show the alternative presented to the Department before the decision was made.

1353 Clearance

To obtain appropriate clearances of material to be published in Foreign Relations of the United States, the Historical Office:

- a. Refers to the appropriate policy offices of the Department and of other agencies of the Government such papers as appear to require policy clearance.
- b. Refers to the appropriate foreign governments' requests for permission to print as part of the diplomatic correspondence of the United States those previously unpublished documents which were originated by the foreign governments.

THE GENEVA CONFERENCE ON KOREA
April 26–June 15, 1954

I. INTRODUCTION

A. NOTES ON SOURCES AND PRESENTATION OF MATERIAL FOR THE GENEVA CONFERENCE ON KOREA

1. The nature of the Conference

Essentially the Geneva Conference on Korea was a two-sided affair with 16 Allied delegations confronting 3 Communist delegations. The Conference did not resolve the Korean question, did not reach any agreed positions, and, indeed, did not even vote on any proposals, since the Conference rules were very loose and informal and incorporated no procedures for voting. The Conference terminated with no agreement save the obvious one of continuing to disagree.

While the Conference was not open to the public, the statements and proposals made in the plenary sessions were for public consumption. Speeches were handed out to the press, as were the various proposals, for maximum publicity. The one restricted session on Korea, held on May 1, was restricted only in the number of nations attending—seven rather than nineteen; otherwise, the restricted session was as well publicized as the plenary sessions.

2. Presentation of the material

Due to the maximum use of publicity by the delegations and the quasi-open nature of the sessions, telegraphic summaries have been used to cover the meetings, with footnote references in each case to the minutes of the various meetings. This has been done in order to avoid repetition and save space in the volume.

The documentation is set forth in strictly chronological order, with no topical break-downs. Where telegraphic summaries of meetings were transmitted some time after the events, the documents have been given an italic heading to show the time of the meetings and have been placed in the compilation at that time.

Printed below are complete lists of the plenary sessions and the meetings of the heads of the 16 Allied delegations. (See sections C and D.)

3. Unpublished sources

The principal source of documentation in the Department of State central files is decimal file 396.1-GE. Some preliminary material is contained in file 396.1-BE (the Berlin Conference file), and some additional papers are in the main decimal files for Korea 795.00 and 795B.00.

In addition to the decimal files, several lot files are important. The large, consolidated Conference file, lot 60 D 627, contains the best single collection of material on the Conference. Also of considerable value are three retired lot files of the Bureau of Far Eastern Affairs, FE files, lots 55 D 480, 55 D 481, and 60 D 330.

4. Published sources

Overshadowed as it was by the Indochina Conference, the Korean Conference has not been heavily covered in secondary and memoir literature. For overall views of the Geneva Conference with occasional brief references to Korea, one should consult the list of published sources in this volume for the Indochina phase.

Two publications are useful because they reprint most of the statements and proposals made at the Conference on Korea. The first is a British White Paper, Documents Relating to the Discussion of Korea and Indo-China at the Geneva Conference, April 27-June 15, 1954 (Cmd. 9186). The second is The Korean Problem at the Geneva Conference, April 26-June 15, 1954 (Department of State publication 5609, October 1954). The latter has been used most often for citations to the text of speeches referred to in the telegraphic summaries on the meetings. In addition, some of the statements are printed in appropriate 1954 issues of the Department of State Bulletin.

5. Documentation on United States-People's Republic of China Contacts

As a result of the presence of the two delegations in Geneva for the Conference, contacts took place informally and apart from the sessions, principally on the matter of nationals detained in each country who wished to return to their homes. For documentation of these contacts not printed here, see volume XIV.

B. LIST OF PAPERS PREPARED FOR THE GENEVA CONFERENCE ON KOREA

A Working Group on Korea was set up to prepare position and background papers for the United States Delegation to the Conference. The Working Group was composed mainly of Department of State officials, although the Department of Defense was represented. Below are listed the final versions of the papers prepared for the Conference. Only those five preceded by an asterisk are printed in this compilation; the remainder may be found in FE files, lot 60 D 330.

Dulte 81. Re Tedul 46.<sup>2</sup> I do not think it wise to inform Rhee at this time of the details of our proposals. I think however, it would be wise to transmit to him a personal message from me along the following lines:

"In reference to the negotiations that we are now conducting in restricted sessions of our meeting here on the Far East, I want you to know that I have taken no position which departs from the statements I made in the plenary sessions, the pertinent parts of which have been transmitted to you."

If you concur would you authorize Embassy Seoul to pass message along this line to Rhee.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Dulles was in Berlin for the quadripartite meeting of Foreign Ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom, France, and the Soviet Union, which lasted from Jan. 25 to Feb. 18, 1954. For documentation on the Berlin Conference, see volume VII. Although the main business of the Berlin Conference was the German question, on which no agreement was reached, other matters, such as Austria and European security were taken up. In the course of the meetings, the Foreign Ministers also discussed the Far East, and, in particular, the question of an international conference to resolve the Korean problem. It is with Korea that this telegram is concerned.

"Re discussions on Korean Political Conference, we wonder whether you would approve informing Rhee in general way of proposal now under negotiation. Various aspects of proposal have been leaking gradually to press, and we understand DeJean has informed Bao Dai and others re Indo-China aspects. We fear that if Rhee first hears of result your talks through press, he may react in harmful manner. Our recommendation is you authorize us to have Embassy Seoul informally advise Rhee in confidence substance Western proposal, stating it still under negotiation." (396.1-BE/2-1354)

<sup>3</sup> The reply to telegram Dulte 81 was contained in telegram Tedul 56, Feb. 17, to Berlin, which stated:

"Dulte 81. Believe inadvisable transmit personal message now in view of highly offensive letter Rhee has just sent to President and which we are trying to persuade him to withdraw. Would prefer, unless you object, await close of conference before filling him in on Far Eastern discussions." (795.00/2-1654)

The letter from President Rhee, dated Feb. 4, was withdrawn by Rhee at the request of the Department of State and was not delivered to President Eisenhower. In it, Rhee had stated that Korea saw no hope in the U.S. Government because of the unwillingness of the United States to back the efforts of the Republic of Korea to unify all of Korea, because of the weakness of the United States in the face of Communist intransigence, and because of pro-Japanese policies which the United States pursued at the expense of Korea. (Lot 66 D 204; "Rhee-Eisenhower Correspondence") For the text of the letter, see volume xv.

BERLIN, February 18, 1954—3 a. m.

Dulte 88. For S/S and Phillips.<sup>1</sup> Limit distribution. Regarding Dulte 51 and 86.<sup>2</sup> Following is revised background briefing for USIA and press as to agreement for conference on Korea and Indochina. It should be treated as top secret until Secretary specifically authorizes its use<sup>3</sup> which will be for background only without attribution. Former background briefing should be cancelled.

Verbatim text

I. The United States is committed to do all in its power to try to bring about by peaceful means the unification of Korea as an independent nation free to manage its own affairs under a representative form of government.

To that end the US and the other 15 United Nations members which fought in Korea and the Republic of Korea have been trying to bring into being the political conference which was contemplated by the Korean armistice agreement of July 27, 1953, and which in accordance with the recommendation in that agreement would have been held within three months.<sup>4</sup>

Actually, more than six months have gone by, and no progress whatever has been made. Not a single feature has been agreed to—either place or date or participants. The US sent an important mission to Panmunjom in an effort to break the deadlock by negotiations on the spot, but after months of futile talk, the negotiations have now lapsed.<sup>5</sup>

The US therefore felt that it should make a further effort here at the four power meeting. Item one of the agenda of the four power conference made this topic relevant.

An agreement has now been reached.

<sup>5</sup> The U.S. Mission was headed by Arthur H. Dean who had by this time left Panmunjom and returned to the United States. For related documentation, see volume xv.

II. The first paragraph of the agreement commits the four powers to the need for establishing by peaceful means a unified and independent Korea as an important step toward the reduction of international tensions and the re-establishment of peace elsewhere in Asia. It is useful that the Soviet Union should be thus committed to the importance of Korea being unified and independent because of the fact that it seems that Communist China is in effect incorporating North Korea into China as a colonial province.

III. The second paragraph makes provision for a conference of all the countries directly concerned in one way or another in the fighting in Korea, without distinction among them. All the countries which contributed forces to the United Nations Command in Korea pursuant to the UN Security Council resolution of June 27, 1950, would be given an opportunity to take part along with the Communist regimes in China and North Korea, and the Soviet Union.

The composition of the Korean conference will be precisely as we sought it. The agreement would exclude the participation of "neutrals"<sup>6</sup> in the projected conference. It accepts our choice of place, i.e., Geneva, which was our first suggestion.

IV. The third paragraph deals with the extension of the peace conference method to Indochina. Paragraph 3 stipulates that the conference, in addition to Korea, will further discuss the problem of restoring peace in Indochina. On September 2, 1953, Secretary Dulles, in an address before the American Legion,<sup>7</sup> said:

"We want peace in Indochina, as well as in Korea. The political conference about to be held relates in the first instance to Korea. But growing out of that conference could come, if Red China wants it, an end of aggression and restoration of peace in Indochina. The United States would welcome such a development." The Associated States and other interested states including Communist China would be invited to attend this conference in addition to France, the US, the United Kingdom and Soviet Russia.

V. The concluding paragraph of the agreement makes clear that nothing envisaged by the resolution would involve the US in diplomatic recognition of the regimes which govern Communist China and North Korea.

VI. The agreement involves an outright rejection of the Soviet thesis that the regime which governs Communist China should be brought into world councils on a general agenda as one of the so-called "five great powers." It makes no mention of Formosa or UN membership. It treats the Communist regime as one which from the US standpoint remains unrecognized, one which is dealt with only on a de facto basis in relation to concrete local problems of war and peace where it is a necessary party. We maintain our refusal to give it any position of preferment, or to contribute to the enhancement of its authority and prestige. We are making an earnest effort to find a peaceful solution in Korea and Indochina. Communist China is offered every opportunity to cancel out her aggression in Korea and to cease her support of rebellion and aggression in Indochina.

VII. The agreement fully sustains the principles which have guided the US in relation to Far Eastern matters. It evidences the US desire to have peace, but not to have peace at the price of concessions of principle. We are not committed to any course at the conference. We have not traded US performance against Communist promises. The outcome gives a heartening demonstration of the unity of the three Western countries, where matters of principle affecting their essential interests are involved. The insistent Soviet demand for inclusion of Communist China in a central group of five great powers to deal with questions affecting many parts of the world was emphatically rejected.

The Foreign Ministers of the United States, France and the United Kingdom were as one in seeking opportunity for honorable settlement by peaceful negotiation of the most pressing issues outstanding in the Far East. They were also as one in their refusal to permit the inclusion of extraneous issues.

and he has supported, particularly re composition, neutrals, and Geneva.

Rhee expressed appreciation prompt information. His general reaction was perhaps one of "more in sorrow than in anger", though he did not express opposition in principle to arrangements. He showed discouragement over Korea's future and fear his friends and allies were forgetting his country. We stated this was certainly not intention of President and Secretary. Regarding conference itself, he expressed dismay over additional "indefinite delay" unification Korea, concern over probable duration conference, and his long-standing conviction is useless and will fail. However, he repeated what he has said before—that he will go along with it if his American friends insist. He did not indicate specific ROK reaction to its attendance Geneva Conference.

In connection his discouraged mood, Rhee told us with some anger of alleged efforts by certain Americans and Japanese bring about trusteeship in Korea. He said this supported by newspaper articles and editorials in US. Ambassador and I told him we knew of no official backing any such project.

814. Repeated information Tokyo 497, London, Paris unnumbered. Tokyo pass CINCUNC and CAG. It is readily apparent from ROK Government emanations (Embtel 809 OPI statement February 19 and Korean Republic editorial February 20 transmitted by TWX, and Foreign Minister Pyun's statement quoted Embtel 812)<sup>1</sup> that their immediate reaction to Berlin agreement is one of disappointment, disgruntlement and anger. Korean Republic editorial this morning which accuses big three of (1) acting in secret without consultation with ROK, (2) repudiating armistice agreement providing for conference between belligerents, (3) accepting Russia in nonbelligerent status despite US assurances to contrary and (4) agreeing to bring Red China to conference as sponsoring power, (sic) with ROK invited as afterthought is one of bitterest statements Embassy has seen printed in this government paper. One of principal criticisms by ROK is round-table nature of conference which they allege will permit majority decisions and exclude veto by one of participating sides.

At press conference this morning Foreign Minister elaborated these main points of objection and stated ROK Government will have to study situation and has not yet decided whether to attend. Embassy has been unable to find any evidence to support INS story filed February 19 quoting Foreign Ministry spokesman as stating ROK Government has decided boycott conference.

While Berlin agreement is obviously disappointment and source of resentment to ROK Government one cannot entirely escape conclusion response at least partly motivated by exasperation that conference in fact going to be held. ROK had apparently concluded political conference unlikely and was planning its policy accordingly. On balance Embassy inclined believe they will not boycott conference but possibility some such thoughtless action should not be entirely discounted.

Panmunjom. Only belligerents participate. Complicating problem neutrals eliminated. Obviously must confer with aggressors but arrangements in no way constitute, and American people would not agree to, recognition Communist China. At Berlin we in effect added to Article 60 Armistice Agreement since at Geneva USSR is full participant and party any agreement. Conference inevitably between two sides. Impossible commit ROK or ourselves to proposal if do not agree. No danger agreement by U.S. to coalition government as solution unification as end result such formula Communist domination. Conferences Indo-China and Korea separate requiring different compositions but might be held simultaneously. U.S. intends participate fully in Indo-China conference just as USSR in Korea conference. Berlin genuine diplomatic triumph over Communists. Intangible important result Molotov divisive tactics was closer stronger working relations U.S., U.K. and France.

834. Repeated information Tokyo 511 (pass CINCUNC), London unnumbered, Paris 6, Taipei 86, Saigon 19, Moscow 6. On receipt this afternoon of Deptel 694, February 24 I called on Foreign Minister Pyun to give him copy of official invitation to Geneva conference original of which handed Ambassador Yang in Washington yesterday. Pyun said Yang's report not yet received. After reading invitation he asked whether I had information responsive to four points raised by ROK Government (Embtel 824, February 23).<sup>1</sup>

I thereupon gave Pyun orally following information regarding which he took notes:

(1) Conference will be of participating powers under sponsorship of four countries meeting at Berlin. In context Panmunjom talks, it

"At his regular weekly press conference this morning Foreign Minister Pyun declared ROK government decision re participation in Geneva conference cannot be made until it receives satisfactory clarification on following four points:

1. Conference should be between two sides,
2. USSR should participate on Communist side,
3. Freedom of independent decision by nations participating in conference should be assured, and
4. Conference should discuss only Korean problem and not Indochina.

Pyun added he had not received adequate information on these points in his talk with Young and me." (396.1/2-2354) will not be "two-sided" conference but as practical matter it will probably develop two-sided aspect as meeting between non-Communist side and Communist side. In that connection I emphasized participants would not include neutrals, thus meeting Korean views re composition.

(2) Status of Soviet Russia. I said Russia was sponsoring power and as such had responsibility with other sponsors for the meeting. That is, full participation, and would be party to any conference agreement. Question whether Russia "neutral" (as Communists had demanded at Panmunjom) or "belligerents" (as our side had desired) is by-passed by Russia being responsible sponsoring participant.

(3) I assured Pyun ROK could not be committed to conference proposal which ROK opposed. I pointed out this point, substantively, is by far most important point his government had raised since it involved sovereign right of any country to declare what it would or would not accept.

(4) As to scope of conference I informed Pyun, as set forth Deptel 694, that conferences on Indochina and Korea were separate with different compositions, but might take place simultaneously.

There ensued considerable discussion of foregoing, especially points one, two and four. One and two disclosed few new ideas (Foreign Minister did not like our answers) but Pyun's comments concerning simultaneous discussion of Indochina problem seem worth noting since he declared that this would give Red China "incalculable advantage, probably amounting to control of proceedings". He amplified this by stating that as soon as Korean discussions bogged down because of unacceptable Communist demands, conference would in effect adjourn consideration of Korea and take up Indochina, which would then be discussed at great length while ROK representatives and other participating countries primarily interested in settlement of Korean problem as prerequisite to settlement other matters, cooled their heels and were kept dangling. But since Red China involved in both Korean and Indochina discussion, that would give Communist China de facto control of proceedings. One of "less serious" results of this "capitulation" by three Western powers at Berlin was vastly to increase Red China's stature, no matter what sort of disclaimers we might make about recognition. What you have done in effect, said Pyun, is to accept five power conference on Asian (as distinct from Korean) agenda, and have given Red China controlling voice in proceedings. Your plan for "simultaneous discussion" is really agreement to "alternate discussion", which will allow Communists to sidetrack Korea while they make propaganda indefinitely, on their terms, over SEA.

Pyun then declared ROK Government would now have to consider whether in light of understanding implications of Geneva conference, his Government would find it possible to attend.

I replied that decision obviously one which must be taken by Korea in its capacity as sovereign state. Nevertheless as friend of Korea I hoped President Rhee and he would take into consideration fact that announcement of Geneva conference, in circumstances I had described, was being hailed in countries most friendly to Korea, and allied with ROK through 37 months of joint war effort, as important step on road toward Korean unification to which all of us had pledged our best efforts. I said I hoped decision of ROK Government at this important crossroads would strengthen Korea in eyes of her friends.

842. Repeated information Tokyo 519. Tokyo pass CINCUNC and CAG. In lengthy written interview with INS President Rhee expressed himself on Geneva Conference and problems facing ROK and free world in battle against Communism. Interview preceded by presidential statement appealing to American opinion to recognize struggle for freedom and unification Korea in fact struggle for freedom America and world.

Tenor of Rhee's comments re prospects for success Geneva conference wholly pessimistic. He reiterated well-known views re ROK willingness to give US and UN chance at peaceful attainment objectives in Korea but stressed conviction Communists will never yield anything in negotiations and force only instrument they understand. Rhee expressed hope continuing Communist intransigency will finally open eyes free world to fact latter gaining nothing and losing much by continuing conferences with enemy. He attacked conditions for proposed Geneva conference strongly, particularly USSR status as inviting power rather than belligerent, alleged move in direction recognition Red China and opportunity provided for Communist stalling. He concluded Geneva merely another trap such as Panmunjom and said US-UN gained only one point at Berlin that was demanded at Panmunjom, namely, conference location; he characterized Berlin agreement as "allied-backed site for Communist-supported conference" and stated it saves Soviets enhanced prestige and escape from censure for responsibility in launching Korean war. Questioned whether he was consulted re Big Three strategy at Berlin he stated Secretary Dulles informed him he was not unmindful of Korea's interests and cited remarks at Berlin to effect only way to peace was through political conference envisaged by armistice agreement. Rhee added he was startled therefore to learn Secretary Dulles agreed to another type conference and was hailing it as triumph for free world.

Rhee replied at length to inquiry whether ROK would wait to see conference results before taking unilateral action unify Korea. He made no attempt set new deadline but inquired how long must he wait before his allies realize conference merely stalling tactic and there will be no peaceful withdrawal Chinese Communist forces from Korea and no unification through free UN-supervised election. He concluded that if allies continue to ignore Communist strategy of delay ROK will have to resort to action of its own. He pointed out once again plight of people in north and criticized US pull-out of forces from Korea at moment when Reds bringing war matériel into Korea in violation armistice agreement, adding he does not ask US-UN forces to remain if they do not wish to but only that they give equipment and assistance in training ROK forces to carry on free world's struggle against Communism.

Rhee's interview, which combines reiteration already-known views on dealing with Communists with their specific application to Geneva conference proposal, is eloquent appeal to American opinion and contains no new clue to whether ROK will accept invitation. It is apparent Rhee is deeply disappointed and dissatisfied with Berlin agreement which he regards as unbaptized off-spring resulting from original sin, that is, 1953 armistice agreement. In this connection local press during last few days has given prominence to reports of US Congressional criticism proposed Geneva conference and it is apparent Rhee watching closely to see whether substantial American opinion might support his continuing to oppose conference.

As to Peiping participation in projected discussions on Indochina this agreed on basis Peiping's qualifications "as interested party" resulting from its assistance Viet Minh and not on basis of "big power". The Embassy in the Soviet Union to the Soviet Foreign Ministry<sup>1</sup>

[Moscow, March 5, 1954.]

The following are the views of my government with regard to certain matters preliminary to the convening on April 26, 1954 of the political conference in Geneva, Switzerland. These have been discussed with the Governments of the United Kingdom and France and they have expressed their complete accord with these proposals.

It appears that the only conference rooms in Geneva which are adequate for the holding of the meetings are those in the Palais des Nations. While important international agency meetings are now scheduled to be held in that building during the period in which the political conference would meet, it is considered possible to have them postponed or transferred to other sites in the event negotiations are begun promptly with the responsible officials of the United Nations.

The simplest method would be to use United Nations Secretariat personnel to provide interpretation, documentation and translation services, and to use all other available facilities of the United Nations. While the United Nations Secretariat personnel would perform common conference services, they would not have access to confidential materials or operations of the individual sides or delegations. The costs of the common conference services would need be met by the participating states, and the exact method of sharing these costs could be determined prior to the opening of the conference.

It is therefore, suggested that the United Nations delegations of the four powers jointly approach the Secretary General of the United Nations in order to enlist his cooperation in the initiation of the necessary preparations. Since the United Nations Secretariat should be given sufficient time to make the necessary physical arrangements and to prepare an adequate conference staff, it is hoped that you will be able to give a prompt reply.

SEOUL, March 6, 1954—2 p. m.

861. Repeated information Tokyo 530. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. Reference: Embtel 858, March 5.<sup>1</sup> Foreign Minister Pyun has just sent me copy of following letter dated March 3 addressed to the Secretary:

“Confidential. Seoul, 3 March 1954.

“My dear Mr. Secretary: I should like to remind you that through the visit of you and Assistant Secretary of State Walter S. Robertson,<sup>2</sup> the following understandings were reached either orally or in writing: (a) If it becomes clear that the political conference of Korea has failed to agree upon the means of unifying Korea at the end of the three-months period after its convening, the United States and the Republic of Korea will walk out and discuss measures to be taken with a view to effecting the unification; (b) in the political conference, the United States and the Republic of Korea shall be the principal participants on the side of the free world, while Communist China and North Korea play the principal role for the Communist side. As for the other United Nations having military units in the Korean war, they will naturally form consultant body and thus contribute to the position of the United States in the political conference. They will not exercise votes, however, while the United States and the Republic of Korea do; (c) the political conference shall be confined to the Korean question.

“Under these understandings, we agreed to a political conference provided for in the terms of armistice. Due to the Communist intransigence, however, no political conference has been so much as called, although six full months have elapsed since the signing of the armistice. The Panmunjom preliminary talks broke up without being able to agree upon the date or the place for the political conference. We cannot help, therefore, thinking that it is high time that we were discussing other measures to effect our common objective, the unification of Korea. But instead, the four Foreign Ministers conference has agreed upon the Geneva conference, to which we are now invited.

“We appreciate the invitation very much. We feel we ought to be willing to participate in the conference as one of the principal participants. Before we accept the invitation, however, we wish to get clarifications on the following questions:

“(1) Is the proposed Geneva conference a continuation of the Panmunjom preliminary conference?

“Saw Foreign Minister Pyun this morning with specific reference to Deptel 710, March 3. He said matter in hands of President Rhee who returns to Seoul from Chinhae March 7 or 8. I emphasized we have sought from outset to consult first with ROK with view develop common position on both substantive matters and tactics.” (396.1-GE/3-554)

“(2) Is the Geneva conference to displace the UN-sponsored political conference that was to take up the question of Korean unification only?

“(3) Will our understandings listed above hold good in regard to the Geneva conference?

“(4) If the conference meets on April 26 as proposed, how long is it to be allowed to continue? When will be the deadline?

“(5) If this conference also fails at the end of a given period of time, what steps, peaceful or otherwise, will the United States take to achieve the original objective, unification of Korea?

“(6) Is the Soviet Union not to have more prestige and consequently more weight by being one of the four sponsor-nations than if it had been invited as a neutral? Sponsors of a conference, like charter members of an organization, are usually supposed to enjoy unwritten privileges over ordinary members.

“(7) Is the Communist China not to gain also in prestige or weight by assuming, as a practical matter, the circumstantial status of what may be properly called quasi-sponsor or, at least, a standing member, quite distinct from other members, except the four sponsor-nations, who will be shelved when the other subject, from the discussion of which they are respectively barred, is taken up, again as a practical matter, very much at the pleasure of the five standing members?

“(8) Why is the scope of the proposed Geneva conference to be so enlarged as to include the Indochinese problem? The localization of the Korean War has been so constantly emphasized by the United States as well as by the United Nations. We cannot afford to allow the enemy to shift from the Korean question to the Indochinese one back and forth and gain in his bargaining power.

“(9) The discussion of both the Korean and Indochinese problem in one conference necessarily implies a package deal for the Orient, and the discussion of one problem cannot be entirely free from that of the other, though, from necessity, may be carried on behind the scene. Thus either of the open discussions on two different questions will prove farcical proceedings to justify or implement the secret understandings reached among the five standing members in the course of the other discussion. Can such an arrangement be fair for the Republic of Korea?

“(10) The Communist China, the UN-condemned aggressor, was consulted in the crucial matter of arranging for the Geneva conference while this government was left in the dark. Is it compatible with the often-given pledge that this government will be consulted in advance on all important matters affecting Korea?”

“Your answers to these questions will be greatly appreciated as helpful to the formation of our decision on participation.

“With warmest regards, yours sincerely, Y. T. Pyun, Minister of Foreign Affairs.”

In his transmitting letter dated today Pyun states his communication “was written some days ago, but owing to fact it needed approval of my official superiors it has just gone out by pouch.”

SECRET      PRIORITY

SEOUL, March 6, 1954—7 p. m.

863. Repeated information priority Tokyo 531 (pass CINCUNC). Foreign Minister Pyun's letter (Embtel 861)<sup>1</sup> is clearly designed to obtain certain additional commitments from US Government in return for ROK agreement participate in Korean political conference. It is familiar tactic this government and should, I believe, be dealt with in light history our negotiations with ROK Government during past year on armistice, political conference, economic aid, et cetera. We should also be prepared for possibility early publication of letter.

Sub-paragraph (a) is fundamentally correct although language omits certain important points in Dulles-Rhee agreement August 8.<sup>2</sup> Sub-paragraph (b) is statement of ROK position and not agreement between US and ROK. To my knowledge we made no commitment that remotely resembles this paragraph. Sub-paragraph (c) is correct insofar as it refers to our understanding of language paragraph 60 of armistice agreement.

Numbered questions in remainder of letter appear to be attempt to establish that conference at Geneva is not political conference provided for in armistice, and therefore ROK has basis for obtaining new and more far-reaching commitments than those given ROK by US last year in connection PC envisaged under article 60.

Paragraph 11 which in effect demands we commit ourselves to resume fighting if conference fails to unify Korea is obviously key commitment desired, as it has been ever since armistice negotiations were resumed in April 1953. Rhee has consistently sought by argument, intransigence and misrepresentation to involve US Government in resumption of hostilities within specified time limit, and present letter is merely continuation same tactics toward identical objective. This has been crux of difficulties in US/ROK relations for past eleven months. This has been and remains point of no return in all our recent dealings with Rhee.

With further reference Pyun's numbered paragraphs, I assume answer to question one negative, and to question two affirmative. Re questions three, four and five I take it we are prepared to confirm that our commitments re Korean PC under article 60 apply generally to conference at Geneva (but not as stated by Pyun in introductory paragraphs a, b and c): Questions six, seven, eight and nine appear to be largely expressions of unilateral opinion to which we can probably make explicit (if to ROK perhaps unpalatable) replies; certainly I assume we do not propose to permit those cracks to go by default. Re question (10) recommend we reply categorically that US, UK and France did not consult in any way with Communist China re arrangements for Geneva conference. While we cannot state ROK was consulted in full detail in advance of Berlin communiqué, points can be made that Secretary furnished information to President Rhee re developing discussions on Asia in Berlin, that communiqué was immediately furnished Rhee by Young and me on February 19, and furthermore that Geneva terms of reference include most important points sought by ROK Government during Ambassador Dean's Panmunjom talks including absence neutrals, USSR fully responsible participant, no country bound unless it agrees, and place of meeting.

I recommend I be authorized to make early reply to Pyun on behalf of Secretary answering questions to extent Department deems desirable. In addition I think it should be pointed out (1) that as demonstrated by my talk with Rhee on February 19 and on several occasions thereafter with Pyun (Rhee having been absent from Seoul) US Government has sought to maintain closest possible liaison with ROK Government, as witness invitation for head ROK delegation to visit Washington immediately for consultation; (2) what with time passing and ROK failure collaborate, it becomes increasingly difficult follow procedure desired by US of consulting first with ROK, in advance consultation other UN allies; (3) ROK continuing criticism and re-primination is alienating Korea's friends and benefiting only Communists; and (4) ROK absence from conference would merely deprive it of voice in proceedings bearing directly on ROK future.

Point four above may be key item in our reply, since Rhee is obviously trying to blackmail us into commitments we have hitherto declined to give him, in exchange for ROK agreement to attend. To extent he remains convinced conference cannot be held without his presence, his price may remain high, conversely if he thinks conference can be held without him idea of carping on sidelines instead of donning uniform may become less attractive.

SEOUL, March 6, 1954—8 p. m.

864. Repeated information Tokyo 532, (pass CINCUNC and CAG). While following ideas were blocked out before receipt Foreign Minister Pyun's letter (Embtels 861 and 863)<sup>1</sup> and problems raised by letter are obviously first order of business, this message may be helpful in longer range consideration of our substantive position at Geneva and in approach to problem of consultation with ROK:

With public unmasking Soviet intentions re Europe at Berlin conference fresh in free world's minds believe we should seek to present an imaginative and reasonable proposal at Geneva which might similarly expose Communist intentions in Asia, and specifically in Korea. While there may be scant reason for confidence that free unified Korea likely emerge from Geneva, nevertheless if at very beginning of conference we can present proposal which has free world support and which would put clear onus on Communists for failure reach agreement, we shall at least have achieved one important objective.

Our proposal might follow general pattern of tripartite proposal for Germany at Berlin, with appropriate modification to meet Korean situation. Although there may be no more reason expect Communists will allow its application in Korea than in Germany, it would represent constructive and defensible proposal for solution Korean problem which Communists should find difficult to answer. Main elements of proposal might be: (1) Progressive withdrawal all foreign forces from Korea, to be completed by March 31, 1955, under international inspection with rights of inspecting bodies clearly specified; (2) elections throughout Korea on May 1, 1955 for representatives to National Constituent Assembly, elections to be held under international supervision with preliminary period of three months during which supervisory bodies would be empowered and enabled to determine that conditions of freedom for elections exist throughout Korea; (3) until new Korean Government established ROK Government and North Korean regime would continue exercise jurisdiction North and South of DZ and MAC would retain its authority in DZ; (4) international guarantee of powers represented at Geneva (with right for other states, such as Japan, to adhere) to maintain independence and territorial integrity of unified Korea, with or without buffer demilitarized area on both sides Yalu; (5) renunciation of special privileges in Korea for signing powers but no specific restrictions on freedom of action of Korean Government with respect to security forces, external aid, et cetera; (6) provision might also be made for formal recognition by new Korean Government of instrument of guarantee and reciprocal guarantee to signing powers against aggression by Korea.

Obviously President Rhee and ROK Government may be most difficult hurdle in reaching agreement on free world side of conference on some such proposal, and I am not overly optimistic Rhee's agreement can be obtained. Nevertheless certain new elements in picture and crystallization of other developing factors may assist us in this task. First, Rhee's principal immediate objective remains ejection of Chinese Communists from Korea and plan would provide specific target date for withdrawal prior to elections. He has, moreover, made public references to possibility of eventual US-UN withdrawal and he may be more resigned to this now. Second, Rhee has in recent months come around publicly to acceptance concept of all-Korean elections, albeit to presidency under ROK constitution rather than to Constituent Assembly, and he might now be more amenable to this additional step on assumption elections, if held under conditions of freedom, would be favorable to anti-Communist elements in Korea. While prospect elections might not retain presidency for him would be difficult pill to swallow, his agreement is not wholly inconceivable if plan offered any real hope for achievement his chief objective of Korean unification and if he thought there was good chance he would be elected to presidency. Third, events since armistice have firmly convinced Rhee that Chinese Communists are in North Korea to stay and to consolidate their power and thus no agreement at PC is possible. This factor, above all else, may persuade Rhee to buy some such proposal as one above on assumption Communists will not accept it and substantial propaganda benefit could be derived from it. Rhee has never been satisfied with propaganda advantages as a substitute for material results, however, and he might seek to elicit in return our agreement to support a military effort to unify Korea if PC fails. This, I assume, we would under no circumstances agree to.

As matter of tactics in presenting ideas to ROKs, I recommend we give them unequivocal assurances we do not contemplate and will not support any proposal for trusteeship for Korea. Recent references in Japanese press to this possibility have raised Rhee's blood pressure and clear assurances on this score might help create attitude more conducive to acceptance our ideas. Idea of neutralization, another major bogey for Rhee, should also be avoided, and case can be made that plan outlined above does not constitute neutralization of Korea. Most difficult psychological block to overcome with Rhee, however, may be his fear, based on unhappy history of manner in which great powers permitted Japan to take over Korea early in century, that despite paper guarantees great powers may condone absorption of Korea by China or Japan at later date. I believe we should seek to present convincing case that our interest in Korea and support for her is continuing one.

Re Rhee's inquiries on Korean Conference reported Tedul 36<sup>2</sup> believe we should make clear that while conference procedure will have to be worked out at conference itself, we understand that ROK would not be bound to any matter of substance without its consent. Same would apply of course to US. If ROK and US agree on unification of Korea, it will happen; otherwise not. That is true substance of matter which cannot be altered by voting procedure of conference.

Re relation between Korea and Indochina, believe we should undertake to push Korean matter promptly and not allow it to be bogged down with discussions re Indochina. SEOUL, March 16, 1954—midnight.

904. President Rhee's March 11 letter to President Eisenhower (Embassy's telegram 896)<sup>1</sup> is in substance elaboration of question 11 in Foreign Minister Pyun's March 3 letter to Secretary of State Dulles (Embassy's telegrams 861 and 863)<sup>2</sup> and as such represents further attempt use ROK attendance Korean Political Conference Geneva to obtain additional and important commitments from United States.

Most effective way to deal with both letters insofar as they relate to Geneva Conference would in our opinion be delivery to Rhee and Pyun by Embassy of written statement answering broad problems raised in both letters. Our statement might include points suggested Embassy's telegram 863. We should, of course, make clear United States has not, does not and will not favorably consider alternatives outlined in Rhee letter.

Rhee apparently doubts conference possible without ROK participation and seems correspondingly confident he has us over a barrel. Assuming conference can in fact be held without ROK (query, can it?) it seems important that our reply give Rhee and Pyun no support for belief former's letters to President Eisenhower will delay our preparations for Geneva. Any indication we proposing offer new concessions as price ROK attendance at conference would probably increase Rhee's appetite.

Rhee letter can likewise be interpreted as his reply to President Eisenhower's January 2 letter<sup>3</sup> since Embassy understands Rhee's first reply (copy unreceived here) was not delivered to President Eisenhower (memo Robertson-Yang February 15 conversation).<sup>4</sup> In that connection I interpret fourth paragraph Rhee letter as notification Rhee now considers himself without obligation give us further notice should he contemplate unilateral action. This does not render unilateral action by Rhee more likely but fact this point included in present letter, while exchange ratification mutual defense treaty still pending, is further example of Rhee's failure to accept United States-ROK relations as two-way street. (Embassy's telegram 903, March 16).<sup>5</sup>

With specific reference Rhee's second so-called alternative, creation of 35-40 division ROK army with comparable naval and air developments would self-evidently be impossible burden on ROK economy and manpower even if project were to be underwritten by United States taxpayers. Department will recall this unrealistic proposal was advanced to Army Secretary Stevens by Prime Minister Paik last January (Embassy's telegram 705).<sup>6</sup> Insofar as Embassy aware, our reply is still pending. I also observe that although Rhee states ROK forces would be used "only for purpose of defense" that statement may be interpreted in light his definition ROK territory as extending to Yalu and Tumen rivers.

My recommendation accordingly is that I be authorized deliver statement (rather than letter) setting forth official United States Government position. Suggested statement should clearly set forth United States position in terms sympathetic to objective of unification of Korea while simultaneously leaving Rhee under no misapprehension concerning limits beyond which American Government unprepared to go in underwriting, directly or indirectly, Rhee's objective of unification by whatever means and at whatever cost.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>7</sup> On Mar. 17, General Hull, at Admiral Radford's request, forwarded his views on President Rhee's letter. He rejected both alternatives proposed by Rhee, stating that the Geneva Conference must be held and Rhee must not be allowed to feel that he could extort promises from the United States in return for Korean participation at Geneva. (Telegram C-67435, Mar. 17, from Tokyo; 795.00/3-1054) Admiral Radford sent General Hull's telegram to Dulles on Mar. 17, and expressed general agreement except for the extent to and manner in which the United States would reject Rhee's alternative proposal. "In connection with aide-mémoire of Government of United States of America of March 5 concerning certain questions in preparation for the calling of a conference in Geneva on April 26, 1954, there are transmitted the view of Soviet Government. These views were discussed with Government of Chinese People's Republic which has stated that it shares them.

"The proposal that the conference should be held in the Building of Palais des Nations at Geneva is acceptable.

"Considering the composition of participants of the conference it appears expedient to establish that the official and working languages of the conference should be English, French, Chinese and Russian.

"Furthermore, it should be possible to adopt a procedure whereby the delegates themselves would assure the translation of documents received from other delegates and the dissemination of their own documents in one of the official languages.

"Insofar as oral translation at the sessions is concerned, it should be possible to agree that following the statement of a delegate in one of the official languages an oral interpretation should be made into another one of the official languages and at the same time there would be carried out simultaneously the translation into the remaining official languages using the system existing in the Palais des Nations suitable for simultaneous translation. The question of the order of languages in consecutive translation requires further clarification.

"It would be expedient that the representatives of one of the powers, for example French, should agree on the basis of the above-mentioned considerations, with Secretariat of UN concerning the conditions of use for the conference in Geneva of the Building of the Palais des Nations and its system of simultaneous translation.

"The proposal that the expenses for common services of the conference should be borne by the participating states and that the method of apportioning expenses should be established before the beginning of the conference is acceptable."

*The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Korea*CONFIDENTIAL
PRIORITY

WASHINGTON, March 17, 1954—7:44 p. m.

739. For Briggs from Secretary. Please deliver following to Foreign Minister Pyun.

“March 17, 1954. My dear Mr. Minister: I have your letter of March 3, 1954,<sup>1</sup> which requests certain answers to a list of questions regarding the Berlin agreement and the forthcoming Korean Political Conference to be opened at Geneva on April 26, 1954. In response to earlier questions, representatives of the United States Government have orally explained to you the nature and significance of the Berlin agreement.

The Korean Political Conference, to which the Soviet delegate reluctantly agreed at Berlin, is precisely the kind of conference which the Republic of Korea and the United States long ago agreed to seek. The participants are identical with those contemplated by President Rhee and me in our conversations of last August providing a clear-cut conference between the two sides which were involved in the fighting, uncluttered by neutrals. The objective remains the same, being now clearly defined as “a united and independent Korea.” Geneva was then mutually agreed to be an acceptable place for the conference. The program is consistent with the General Assembly Resolution of August 28, 1953. The results in our opinion are more advantageous to our position than those which Ambassador Dean, with great skill and in close consultation with President Rhee and with you, attempted unsuccessfully to obtain at Panmunjom. We remained firm at Berlin on our basic terms for a political conference. The Communists finally yielded to our position. They accepted a specific date and the location and the actual participants we had long proposed. There will be no neutrals and the Soviet Union will bear a full share of responsibility for the progress and outcome of the conference—a principle we stood for together at Panmunjom.

The U.S.S.R. is not a ‘sponsoring power’ in so far as the Republic of Korea and the nations with forces under the United Nations Command are concerned. The Soviet Government extends invitations only to the Chinese Communist and North Korean regimes. The United States Government, consistent with the General Assembly Resolution of August 28, 1953, invites the participants on our side. This procedure on invitations demonstrates the two-sided nature of the conference.

We will go to the Korean Political Conference determined to press constantly and vigorously to achieve agreement there on our common objectives—the independence and unity of a free Korea. I believe that this Conference will provide a splendid forum for the free world to proclaim the principles of justice and freedom for a united Korea and seek to put them into effect. It will also serve usefully to unmask and challenge the wiles and designs of the Communists. In this great endeavor, it is our firm resolve to work closely with the Government of the Republic of Korea. It was in that spirit that I went to Seoul last August to consult personally with President Rhee on a political conference, as well as on the mutual defense treaty.

In the present circumstances, the United States Government, of course, wishes to consult first with the Republic of Korea. Immediately on my return from Berlin and before I went to South America, I directed that an official invitation be extended to your Government to begin consultations with us as soon as possible to enable us to arrive at a commonly agreed position concerning the Korean Political Conference. I regret that it has not yet been possible to begin these discussions. I trust that an acceptance will soon be forthcoming from your Government, as there is much preparation to be completed before April 26, and as we also wish to consult well in advance of April 26 with the other Governments which have sent forces to Korea. I can not emphasize too strongly the indispensability of the greatest possible unity and common purpose on our side before and during the Conference.

Your letter to me refers to certain oral or written understandings which you believe have been reached between representatives of our two Governments. The points contained in the first and third subparagraphs of the first paragraph of your letter apparently refer to the joint communiqué of August 8, 1953, but go beyond it in some respects. The United States adheres to its agreements expressed in the communiqué, but not to any enlargements of it.

We have no understanding—oral or written—between us regarding subparagraph (b) of the first paragraph of your letter. It is, however, my understanding that the United States and the Republic of Korea would be the principal participants on the side of the free world in the sense that any solution of the Korean problem upon which we jointly agree would, in fact, be effective from the standpoint of our side, whereas any solution with which we disagreed could not in fact be effective. Neither of our countries would, of course, be bound except by its own consent. We do not, however, believe that this differentiation which exists de facto should be formalized by attempting to cast other allied nations whose soldiers fought and died in Korea into the role of mere ‘consultants.’

As to your list of questions, I would answer them as follows :

1. The Korean Political Conference at Geneva cannot be a continuation of the talks at Panmunjom because those talks dealt only with arrangements, and not with substance. Substantive matters will be the principal concern of the Korean Political Conference at Geneva.

2. The Korean Political Conference at Geneva is the type of conference envisaged by the General Assembly Resolution of August 28, 1953. The Secretary General of the United Nations has declared his belief that the conference agreed on at Berlin is in full accord with that resolution. Furthermore, that resolution set forth the composition for the United Nations and authorized the United States, in whatever manner it deemed appropriate, to arrange the time and place. That we tried to do at Panmunjom, and succeeded in achieving at Berlin.

3, 4 and 5. With regard to the duration, objectives, and results of the political conference, I confirm the understandings contained in the joint communiqué of August 8, 1953, and their validity and pertinence with respect to the position of the United States at the Korean Political Conference at Geneva. It should be the common effort of our side to expedite the proceedings of the Conference. Three months should allow ample time to test and expose the intentions of the other side, as envisaged in the joint communiqué.

6 and 7. I believe that my report by radio to the American people on February 24, 1954, provides a detailed response to these questions, for the answer to both is clearly negative. (A copy of my report is enclosed.)<sup>2</sup>

There is no implication of any kind that any nation will enjoy 'unwritten privileges' over any other nation. Certainly, the responsible participation of the Soviet Union in the Conference—and our two Governments have continuously agreed on this essential requirement—is preferable to the Soviet Union's attendance as a 'neutral'. There is not the slightest basis for the assumption that 'as a practical matter' Communist China is a quasi-sponsor and that it will gain in prestige and weight by reason of its attendance at the Conference. At Berlin I brought the Soviet Union to drop its previous insistence upon acceptance of Communist China as a 'great power'. Communist China will attend the Conference neither as a great power nor as a government so far as the United States is concerned. The Berlin communiqué says explicitly that neither the invitation to, nor the holding of, the Korean Political Conference 'shall be deemed to imply diplomatic recognition in any case where it has not already been accorded'. We will deal with the Chinese Communists at Geneva—just as we did at Panmunjom—as the enemy aggressor. The fact that Communist China is involved in two aggressions certainly does not add to its prestige or position in any area outside the Communist bloc.

8 and 9. The Indochina problem is to be discussed at Geneva independently of the Korean problem and by a different group of interested nations. We do not believe that the Government of the Republic of Korea would assume to exercise a veto power over the discussion of Communist aggression in Indochina, where the Republic of Korea is not a belligerent. Obviously, the nations which are involved have a right, if they wish, to discuss their own problems. The fact that both problems may be under discussion simultaneously, but independently, does not imply a 'package deal for the Orient'.

10. The Berlin agreement on the Korean Political Conference did not go beyond the main points on which President Rhee and I had found ourselves in agreement last August. Since the arrangements made at Berlin conform to our understandings in Seoul of last August and the General Assembly Resolution, and with the views of the seventeen (including Korea) meeting in Washington, I did not think it necessary to undertake additional consultations on matters already discussed and agreed upon many times in great detail between our two Governments.

During the course of the Berlin meetings, I asked that President Rhee be kept informed of my statements on behalf of the Republic of Korea and regarding Communist China. The United States representatives in Korea informed you of our shift of effort from Panmunjom to Berlin to obtain the type of conference which both our governments had been seeking. As to your statement that Communist China was consulted regarding the Korean Political Conference at Geneva, I have no knowledge of any such consultations. We have good reason to believe that the Chinese Communist regime is thoroughly dissatisfied with the outcome of the Berlin Conference.

11. The President's letter of November 4, 1953 to President Rhee deals, we believe, with and provides an answer to this question.<sup>3</sup>

I hope that these answers will be closely studied by your Government.

The opening of the Korean Political Conference is rapidly approaching. We should lose no time in consulting and fixing our common position. Therefore, it is my earnest hope that the Republic of Korea will soon accept the invitation which this Government has extended to attend the Korean Political Conference at Geneva. I also hope that the Republic of Korea will as soon as possible send to Washington whoever will be its chief representative at Geneva, in order to enable us to work closely together on procedural arrangements and substantive positions, and to continue the cooperative relationships to which both Governments have devoted their attention and their energies in the past.

Irrespective of the opinions which we may entertain as to the likelihood of the success of the Korean Political Conference, I do not believe that it would be understood or easily forgiven if the Government of Korea should refuse to take part in a conference to be held at a place and under circumstances corresponding to its own choice, designed to bring about 'the establishment, by peaceful means, of a united and independent Korea'.

With my best personal regards,
Sincerely yours, John Foster Dulles"

In order forestall this and in view both sides at Panmunjom included Korean as well as Chinese and English in respect to proposals for official languages at political conference, Department believes we should propose addition Korean language.

Department wishes you to advise Rhee and/or Pyun of U.S. view essential for Korean as working language at Korean Political Conference but that we are not in position propose this provision until we know whether or not ROK will attend and therefore it most important we know this soonest. TOP SECRET      WASHINGTON, March 20, 1954—12:22 p. m.

748. For Briggs from the Secretary. Please deliver following to Rhee from the President.

"My dear Mr. President: I have received your letter of March 11<sup>1</sup> making alternative proposals for United States support in military action to unify your country or in enlarging and strengthening your defense forces.

My letter of November 4 which Vice President Nixon gave you when he talked with you last November expresses the position of this Government with respect to unilateral military action by your Government.<sup>2</sup> As I then wrote, if you should initiate such military action, my obligation to both United States forces and to other United Nations forces would be to plan how best to prevent their becoming involved and to assure their security. I also said that in my judgment the Republic of Korea cannot alone achieve the unification of Korea by a military decision, and unilateral action by your Government would expose your armed forces to disastrous defeat and possible destruction. I well understand your concern for the misfortune of the people in north Korea living under ruthless communist tyranny, but I believe such an attempt to unify Korea, far from freeing your compatriots in the north, could only result in needless misery and irrevocable loss to the people of your country.

Therefore, I cannot comply with your request for support in military action to unify your country.

Your alternative proposal for support in the strengthening of your defense forces has several aspects. The United States Government fully subscribes to your desire to assure the Republic of Korea sufficient means for preventing a surprise enemy breakthrough. We will continue to press forward with the program for training and equipping a twenty-division Republic of Korea Army.

However, the real sanction against unprovoked Communist aggression in Korea is the knowledge which is conveyed in the Sixteen-Power Joint Policy Declaration<sup>3</sup> and our Mutual Defense Treaty,<sup>4</sup> when it comes into force, that any future aggressor will meet prompt, resolute and effective resistance. I reemphasize to you our readiness and capacity to react instantly if the Communist forces renew hostilities. United States forces will quickly and in strength come to your assistance and powerfully strike the enemy.

As to your request for the immediate training and equipping of an additional 15 or 20 divisions, the United States Government has been studying this matter pursuant to previous requests from officials of your Government. The United States Government will expect to convey to your Government its final conclusion when full analysis has been made from the political, economic and military point of view. As a preliminary reaction, my advisers and I believe that full compliance with your request would dangerously overtax the human and material resources of your country. However, it may be feasible to develop a joint Republic of Korea-United States program to build a carefully trained and mobilizable reserve in the Republic of Korea. This essential aspect of your security would require additional study by both Governments to determine the prudent scale on which to develop such a reserve. As for the assignment of General Van Fleet, this matter can be considered to determine whether the psychological as well as the practical military benefits to be sought would justify requesting General Van Fleet to undertake such a task.

With reference to the Geneva Conference, it is of course for your Government to decide whether or not it will participate. I can only give you friendly advice based on my sincere and unshaken admiration for your patriotism and my desire that whatsoever differences may at the moment exist between our two Governments will not alienate our peoples to the serious harm of both.

A political conference to deal with the problem of Korea was one of the armistice provisions, and it was a provision your Government accepted. It has taken us a long time, longer than the armistice agreement recommended, to get the conference set up at a place, with a composition and on terms which would not be in themselves prejudicial. We have finally succeeded. Throughout the world there are many people who sincerely believe that the opportunity thus afforded ought at least to be availed of. Very many in my own country who are dedicated friends of yours and your Government would not understand if after your protestations of desire to unify Korea, you should virtually alone of all the nations on our side refuse to attend a conference, the avowed purpose of which is peacefully to create a unified and free Korea. We can all be skeptical of whether or not the conference will in fact achieve that result. However, none of us can wisely ignore the world opinion which demands that in these matters all peaceful processes should be exhausted, however remote may be the chance for success.

We on our side will of course remain faithful to the understanding, in the agreement reached between you and Secretary Dulles, which dealt with the duration of the conference. It will be our effort jointly with you to bring the issues quickly to a head and if in fact, as we must anticipate, the Communist side is unwilling peacefully to unite Korea on acceptable terms, then we must expose that fact to all of the world.

I do not foresee that our two Governments are likely to have any serious differences with respect to tactics and negotiation at the conference. However, it is important that we should concert our positions promptly. We have been holding up discussing these matters with other participants as we think that throughout there ought to be a basic ROK-US position, but technical arrangements must be promptly settled.

With warm regard,
Sincerely, Dwight D. Eisenhower.”

	NA—Mr. Young	S/S—O—Mr. Van Hollen
	UNP—Mr. Popper	S/S—O—Mr. Trulock
	EE—Mr. Thurston

1. Secretary-General

Mr. MacArthur said that, since the Soviets had not accepted our proposal regarding a Conference Secretariat, we propose that our side establish a secretariat of its own. The Secretary approved and said that this would help establish the two-sided nature of the Conference. It was agreed that it would be desirable for the British to provide the Secretary-General.

2. *Languages**

It was agreed that there would be two advantages in having only three official languages (English, French and Russian), plus such working languages as might be required:

a. The use of Chinese and Korean as official languages would present grave technical difficulties.

b. The elimination of Chinese as an official language would remove any "Five-Power" stigma from the Indochina phase of the conference should there be no need for another language such as Annamese.

3. Soviet Statement in their Aide-Mémoire<sup>2</sup> that they had consulted the Chinese Communists

Mr. Thurston said that the British Embassy had informed us orally that Eden did not believe we should mention in our reply the Soviet reference to consultation with the Chinese Communists. The Secretary stated that we should include in our draft aide-mémoire a statement which recognized the right of the Soviets to consult whoever they pleased, but emphasizing that we do not accept any special status for the Chinese Peoples' Republic or any of the other invited powers.

*Since this meeting, we have agreed with the British and French that 5 official languages should be used in the Korean phase. [Footnote in the source text.]

4. Seating

In discussing the difficulties involved in having 19 countries represented at the conference table, the Secretary said that while this would be a source of confusion during the first week or ten days, he expected that the conference would "shake down" so that following the opening speeches of the foreign ministers, the smaller countries would accept roles which would place them more in position of observers.

The Secretary stressed the importance of the representatives of the Republic of Korea sitting next to us. He said that we should take a strong line on this and should oppose any purely alphabetical seating arrangement which would make it impossible for us to sit next to them.

In reference to a paper<sup>3</sup> outlining several alternatives for organizing the conference, the Secretary agreed that Mr. MacArthur might broach this problem with the British and French in order to obtain any views they might have.

In connection with three possible seating arrangements in the conference hall, the Secretary favored the alternative which would make it possible for each representative to have one adviser at the table with him with four advisers seated behind.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: I have studied your letter of March 17, 1954 with utmost interest and attention it fully deserves. In connection, however, with answers you gave me orally through Ambassador Briggs to my earlier questions publicly raised and answers you so kindly set forth in your letter in response to batch of fresh questions couched in my letter to you dated March 3, 1954,<sup>3</sup> I should like to say that I would doubt my own loyalty owed to my own nation and to its great and beneficent ally, US, if I were to refrain from frankly reiterating views still persisting unchanged and doubts still remaining unresolved by your kindly and elaborate answers and so warning, at least, against dangers we would face unitedly, if this government should decide to participate in coming conference at Geneva, in which case, by way, I shall have pleasure of letting you know of it through your worthy and able representative Ambassador Briggs.

GA resolution sponsored by fifteen United Nations,<sup>4</sup> seeking, I believe, to preclude certain dangers and pitfalls clearly envisaged and anticipated, insisted on having Soviet Union come in as belligerent, on having it as two-sided conference, not round-table one, on insuring each participant nation freedom not to be bound by any majority-supported resolution or decision, and above all, on confining conference to Korean question.

Now it seems, Mr. Secretary, that all obstacles Communists chose to see in these crucial propositions and fought with all their demoniacal energy and truculence, have been removed at one stroke by Berlin four foreign ministers conference proposing new conference at Geneva freed from all Communist-hated restrictions. In short, we can hardly, I must confess, bring ourselves to agree with you this is type of conference we sought after.

I do not share your view Soviet Union is not sponsoring nation so far as my country is concerned. If Soviet Union is sponsoring nation only in regard to invitation of Communist participants to coming Geneva conference, while US sponsors conference for free nations concerned only, then, where do England and France come in for sponsoring? We understand recent four foreign ministers conference as body sponsored proposed Geneva conference and, therefore, any of four nations represented in Berlin conference is sponsoring nation, absolutely and unconditionally, regardless of procedural matter of who issued an invitation to whom.

Your oral answer reaching me through Ambassador Briggs regarding nature of coming Geneva conference was, I remember, that technically it is not two-sided conference but it is as practical matter, for conferees will naturally be divided into Communists and non-Communist groups. This interpretation applies to UN itself, and, for that matter, to any conference or meeting where problem, when taken up, is almost invariably tending to divide members into supporters and opposers of certain proposal on it. I hope you will not be offended to be told we drew little assurance from answer you gave me.

You will agree, I believe, with me in view there is much difference between seeking not to be bound by majority decision with agreed consent of entire assembly making such decision and doing so by simple assertion of national sovereignty, which unfortunately grows odious or even offensive nowadays, so far [as] its possible effect on world opinion is concerned.

As regards proposed Geneva conference handling also Indochinese question, I should like to state unequivocally we do not mean, in slightest, "to exercise a veto power over the discussion of Communist aggression in Indochina," so long as it is carried on in perfectly independent manner, say, in separate manner, say in separate conference from that dealing with Korean problem. In my previous letter to you, I simply expressed my fear of certain dangers that might develop from same conference handling two different and, as you seem to say, disconnected problems. I need not tell you here these dangers are same dangers UN spokesmen for free cause clearly saw, though they did not all say so as clearly.

I whole-heartedly concur in your view "we should lose no time in consulting and fixing our common position". I am sorry to say I am in no position give you perfectly satisfactory reply in this connection, since this government has yet to decide on participation in Geneva conference, to which it is invited. I should like to make, however, suggestion here which I hope you will find acceptable and which also happens to represent our best effort to comply with your request under circumstances. How would you consider idea of having pre-Geneva discussions in Seoul between your Embassy here and this government or, if you prefer, between latter and whomever you will designate for occasion? Considering fact we have not all facilities of communication you have, it may be fair arrangement, after all. As to propriety of such a procedure pending our decision on matter of participation, I feel we need not question it at all, for I see only its necessity and no possible harm coming from it. I earnestly hope you will find it workable at least.

I must not pass this occasion, however, without recognizing with much satisfaction and appreciation your confirmed determination to carry out, in reference to Geneva conference, understanding of setting three-month time limit to political conference on Korea as declared in joint communiqué of August 8, 1953. I assure you in advance this heartening assurance from you, along with deep, implicit trust US Government and people have inspired in us that you will not see us betrayed in our fundamental and intrinsic interests, will yet help incline us to take favorable view of our participation in coming Geneva conference, in spite of all its forbidding aspects we seem to descry.

I beg to remain, my dear Mr. Secretary,

Yours sincerely, Y. T. Pyun.

931. Repeated information Tokyo 571. Tokyo for CINCUNC. While Foreign Minister Pyun's March 23 letter (Embtel 930) is couched in less assertive and distorted terms than his March 3 letter, it re-emphasizes fact ROK Government considers its bargaining position stronger so long as it has made no commitment to attend Korean PC Geneva. I interpret Pyun's last letter as [meaning?] none of considerations still regarded as unsatisfactory by ROK will necessarily be obstacle their attendance once they decide they have obtained maximum possible returns from their dilatory tactics. Consequently, I recommend we reply promptly and briefly without further attempt discuss points reiterated by Pyun.

It is also apparent ROK wishes to use its decision on attendance as bargaining level in substantive discussions and in that connection I recommend we make plain to them that there would be no useful purpose served by commencing substantive consultation until decision on attendance reached. It might even be useful begin substantive discussions with British and French in Washington to demonstrate our intention move ahead on Geneva preparations. I believe it would be helpful, however, to state in our reply that we are agreeable to having consultation, when held, take place in Seoul between Embassy and Foreign Ministry. I believe ROK desire have consultation here is probably sincere, being motivated in part by President Rhee's real need for Pyun's assistance in coming weeks, particularly in connection projected Asian anti-Communist conference, and Rhee's reported fear Ambassador Yang might be too susceptible US influence if consultation held Washington and Pyun unable be present.

Secretary's and President's letters provide best US answers to and positions on various substantive questions raised by Rhee and Pyun in their letters and in reported press interviews. We understand and sympathize with ROK concern but believe assurances and answers we have given in our communications make it clear nature, organization and procedures conference will protect ROK interests especially so long as US and ROK work in close concert.

Re consultations we appreciate Pyun's suggestion but do not believe useful purpose would be served by commencing substantive discussions with ROK until ROK has determined attend conference. Re locale these consultations time and other factors make it impractical consult in Seoul. US positions being currently developed in Washington and chief US participants in conference are here. Also necessary consult with other participating Governments and this can best be done here especially since time factors preclude delays which would arise from long telegraphic exchanges. In August Secretary went Seoul consult with Rhee and Pyun on conference and it therefore appropriate as well as matter practical necessity for Pyun (or whoever is to be chief ROK representative and is able speak with authority for ROK) to come Washington for consultations now.

940. Repeated information priority Tokyo 574. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. Substance Deptel 756, March 25,<sup>1</sup> conveyed to President Rhee and Foreign Minister Pyun this afternoon at meeting which featured lengthy restatement by President of ROK position. This concluded by Rhee's asking me thank Secretary on his behalf and to say ROK's attitude toward Geneva attendance still undecided. As to possibility mentioned Department's telegram that Rhee perhaps unfamiliar Secretary's March 17 letter to Pyun,<sup>2</sup> it quickly became apparent that President fully informed both as to contents Secretary's letter and of Pyun's further letter March 23 (Embtel 930).

Following my presentation of contents Department's telegram Rhee asked if I would provide him and Pyun with memorandum confirming certain statements made. Memorandum based on fact [last?] two paragraphs Deptel 756 has accordingly been furnished.

As to pre-conference consultation, Rhee and Pyun now understand we are not prepared engage therein until ROK has decided attend conference. This useful point to clarify. It also paves way for us to begin discussions with other allies without further delay should we desire do so. As to Pyun's going to Washington (assuming affirmative ROK decision on attendance), Pyun remains reluctant and unconvinced, and he reiterated matters ought to be susceptible of handling by discussion through Embassy Seoul. (Please see Embtel 931, March 24; memorandum based on Deptel 756 will I hope be useful in this connection).

Rhee then made long, somewhat rambling, statement recapitulating his letter March 11 to President<sup>3</sup> after which he characterized President's reply as rejection of Korean views in almost every particular and hence "terribly disappointing." He noted one exception was statement US still studying Korean alternative proposal re additional ROK divisions; Rhee said that while that pending it might be difficult for him make up his mind on what to do. He declared Korea faces tragic future with no assurance of support by her allies in event of Geneva Conference failure. (What Rhee apparently means is this. It has been and remains US policy not attempt influence decision of any participants this matter. In case of South Africa, South African Ambassador<sup>1</sup> here feels very strongly his country making major mistake in refusing invitation. By participation they have built up close and friendly international relationship with the fifteen other participants which in his eyes has been important as a counter to well-known South African tendency towards isolationism. By refusing invitation he feels his government tossing away this asset and to what purpose. Presumably he has put these views his government but appears doubtful this will result in change of position. His counselor<sup>2</sup> on several occasions has hinted but not requested that perhaps a word from you to Prime Minister<sup>3</sup> on matter might be considerably more effective than his own representations. You note further South Africa is only Korean participant which has declined such invitation. It has been policy U.S. Government not to attempt influence decision of any participant this matter and you are not now attempting do so in case South Africa. You are wondering however whether this decision is really in interest South Africa. By participating in Korean operation South Africa not only struck a blow in defense of principles of collective security but from point of view of its own enlightened self interest developed a close international relationship with the other participants as evidenced by the frequent Washington and New York meetings of the participants. While we would hope to continue to include South Africa in such meetings almost inevitably from this point on the meetings will be closely tied to Geneva, may be held there and likely result, despite our efforts to contrary, will be that South Africa in time will lose its place in the group. You are wondering therefore if South African declination invitation will not in effect result in South Africa tossing away an asset without as far as you can see obtaining any advantage thereby.

If you decide wise talk as above it should of course be done most informally, be a one-shot operation and you should make it clear U.S. Government not attempting change South African position but that you merely wanted make these observations as a friend of South Africa and solely in interest South Africa.<sup>5</sup> with emphasis on qualification noted last paragraph thereof namely, estimate of ROK position based on analysis ROK views from information heretofore available and not new consultations with government.

1. In formulating proposals (1) and (2) Embtel 864<sup>2</sup> Embassy was mindful of fact that US Government position has previously been that troop withdrawal should follow rather than precede political unification of Korea, and of security consideration which dictated that position. One important respect however in which present situation differs from that in 1948-50 is that US and its UN allies are now publicly committed to come immediately and forcefully to aid of ROK in event of further Communist aggression, a commitment which did not exist in earlier period and which in our opinion now constitutes even more important deterrent than actual presence US forces in Korea. It amply evident moreover that no chance exists for fair elections in North Korea so long as Chinese Communist forces occupy that area; to this extent President Rhee's repeated insistence on withdrawal such forces as pre-condition to unification of Korea is entirely realistic. Although withdrawal US-UN forces from South Korea prior to political unification of country would inevitably involve risks from our point of view, it is believed such risks would be substantially reduced by effective international inspection and supervision envisaged those proposals. Although we see little reason to believe Communists would seriously consider solution along these lines which would in fact permit such effective inspection and supervision, and while we believe US should not accept any proposal of this nature which did not embody such safeguards, it is believed proposal along lines that outlined reference telegram would receive wide degree of support and be effective means smoking out Communists and making clear latter's predatory motivation in this regard.

In addition these general considerations following factors were considered by Embassy in connection proposals (1) and (2) :

(a) Impression US-UN forces likely be reduced to token force by next spring anyway and desirability relate this probability to our Geneva position and extract maximum benefit therefrom;

(b) One of principal advantages which has arisen from retention US forces Korea has been their potential effect in influencing ROK Government, but Embassy inclined believe our influence in future likely be about same whether or not we have token force here;

(c) As noted above, Rhee has publicly and privately specified withdrawal Chinese Communist forces as prior requirement for holding elections Korea;

(d) In addition taking initiative from Communists by incorporating withdrawal all foreign forces in package proposal for Korea, there might be advantage in demonstrating inseparability these two facets Korean settlement and thus strengthening our position in opposing possible Communist proposal for agreement on withdrawal before discussion other aspects problem;

(e) It would be effective demonstration of fact US does not have imperialistic ambitions in Asia;

(f) Presumably by time proposal implemented ROK forces would be built up to presently envisaged maximum strength and would be backed by US power in Japan, Okinawa, etc;

(g) Such relatively early withdrawal might be embarrassing to Communists if their control North Korea without military forces therein not fully established by that time (altho this seems doubtful); conceivably it might also stimulate Sino-Soviet dispute over domination North Korea.

2. Since one of principal Chinese Communist objectives appears be withdrawal US-UN forces from Asian continent this gives us certain bargaining leverage with them. This tempered however by fact they must already be aware US contemplating withdrawal in view public discussion such withdrawal in US. Even with Communist awareness our general intentions, which seems unavoidable in circumstances, believe we should exploit our agreement withdrawal to maximum in seeking satisfactory package proposal including unification under acceptable conditions. To this extent believe we should avoid public official statements re future withdrawals US forces from Korea for duration Geneva Conference on Korea (Embtel 841).<sup>3</sup>

(3) Seems likely ROK Government will initially insist on Chinese Communist withdrawal from Korea as first order business and may even wish obtain agreement thereon prior discussion other measures but believe they can be brought see advantages using withdrawal US-UN forces as part of package proposal to seek satisfactory unification Korea. This matter primarily of presentation of problem to ROK. While Rhee has stated clearly withdrawal Chinese Communist forces prior elections is essential, he has never to Embassy's knowl-

"During my talk with General Hull February 24 he outlined in general terms planning which proceeding in Defense Department re redeployment US Forces Korea. In connection with eventual dissemination this information I urge that Department consider this question in relation to our substantive position on withdrawal forces from Korea at Geneva conference. While as I understand it decision on redeployment can be expected soon, I recommend strongly that information regarding that decision be held as closely as possible. I recognize that it has to be discussed with a number of other governments including that of ROK but would hope that in doing so we should take every precaution to avoid plans becoming public knowledge. It becomes increasingly apparent that major Red Chinese objective at Geneva will probably be to obtain withdrawal foreign forces from ROK. To make known publicly in advance of or during conference fact we are contemplating withdrawal bulk our forces might give Communists substantial tactical advantage at conference table." (795.00/2-2854) edge specifically rejected idea reaching simultaneous agreement on withdrawal and unification.

(4) Believe ROK position this question may depend on assurances, or absence thereof, from US re measures to unify Korea if Geneva fails do so. On assumption US cannot satisfy Rhee on supporting attainment his objective by military means, whether by affording logistic, naval and air support or otherwise, Rhee's attitude may be determined by his analysis of likelihood embroiling US in military adventure before our forces actually withdrawn. From this viewpoint he may wish delay our withdrawal unless he concludes such withdrawal essential obtain Chinese Communist withdrawal and considers this objective overriding. In this situation period between conclusion Geneva Conference and final withdrawal US-UN forces would be period maximum risk for US and we may have to be prepared deal firmly with Rhee on this problem.

(5) This question answered partly by preceding paragraph. Rhee would probably consider withdrawal all forces from Korea without unification agreement in relation to his overriding objective Chinese Communist withdrawal and his analysis chances engaging US in unification effort by military means before our withdrawal completed, as discussed above. In other words he probably would not like such agreement but might accept it in light of developments at conference itself. Recommend it not be broached as possible ROK-UN proposal until situation at conference becomes clearer.

(1) Investigating conditions throughout North and South Korea, proposing to the parties the measures necessary to bring about conditions which would ensure free elections throughout Korea, and assuring that these measures are put into effect: these shall include freedom of movement, freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention, freedom of association and assembly, freedom of speech, press, and broadcasting, and freedom of political parties to organize and carry out their activities.

(2) Preparation of uniform electoral laws in consultation with the ROK and the PDROK.

(3) Determination, in consultation with the ROK and the PDROK, of the number of delegates to be elected and the number of election districts which shall be in direct proportion to population distribution in Korea.

(4) Supervision over the implementation of the electoral laws, registration of qualified voters, and observance of the elections at national and local levels.

(5) Observation of steps leading to the establishment of a reunified government. During the period between the end of the elections and the full assumption of control by the all-Korean Government, the KRSC will remain in operation in order to prevent action after the elections which would impair the conditions of genuine freedom under which they will have been held.

(6) Observation of the withdrawal of foreign military forces.

(7) Certification of results of elections and troop withdrawals.

The details of these terms of reference shall be worked out subsequently within this framework by the signatories to this agreement and shall come into effect at the same time as this agreement. The KRSC shall have the power to adopt measures not specifically described and which are necessary to carry out their task herein, in so far as they are consistent with this agreement.

The KRSC shall have its primary headquarters in the demilitarized zone and shall report and make recommendations at its discretion to the parties to this agreement.

2. Establishment of Conditions for Free Elections

Preparatory to the holding of free elections throughout Korea for a National Constituent Assembly the KRSC shall, pursuant to its terms of reference, observe political conditions throughout Korea and shall, where it deems appropriate, propose to the parties concerned the measures necessary to insure free elections and in particular these measures shall include the following :

- Freedom of movement throughout Korea.
- Freedom of presentation of candidates.
- Immunity of candidates.
- Freedom from arbitrary arrest or victimization.
- Freedom of association and political meetings.
- Freedom of expression for all.
- Freedom of press, radio, and free circulation of newspapers, periodicals, etc.
- Secrecy of the vote.
- Security of polling stations and ballot boxes.

3. Free Elections throughout Korea for a Constituent Body

The KRSC shall also draft electoral laws and procedures in consultation with the authorities in both South and North Korea, who shall promulgate these laws and procedures simultaneously. In particular, election procedures approved by the KRSC shall ensure that candidates reflecting varying viewpoints will be permitted to campaign freely; that the electorate will be able to express its choice of candidates freely and without duress or intimidation; and that the election procedures shall be uniform throughout Korea.

Within six months after concluding this agreement, elections shall be held throughout Korea for a National Constituent Assembly on the basis of adult suffrage and by secret ballot. Representation of the Constituent Assembly shall be apportioned on the basis of the population of each election district. The total number of Korean nationals in the ROK and in the PDROK is deemed to be respectively, 22 million and 5 million. In the event that the KRSC shall fail to certify the election of a representative he shall not be seated in the constituent body and new local-by-elections shall be held as soon as possible under KRSC supervision. The vote of a majority of the members of the KRSC shall be required to rule that the election of any candidate is not valid. If two-thirds of the representatives should be certified and seated the Constituent Assembly shall be considered to have been established; otherwise, it shall not be considered established.

4. Convocation of Constituent Assembly

The elected representatives shall meet as a Constituent Assembly in Seoul within 30 days after the KRSC has certified the free election of two-thirds of the designated number of representatives. †

† The Communists have indicated in earlier proposals for joint north-south legislative sessions that Seoul is the appropriate site for reunification talks. If they now demur, Panmunjom could be suggested as an alternative site. [Footnote in the source text.]

5. Adoption of a Constitution, Formation of a Reunified Government and Transfer of Powers from Predecessor States

The Constituent Assembly shall draft and adopt a Constitution for a reunified government as soon as possible. Meanwhile, it may form a provisional all-Korean authority charged with assisting the Assembly in drafting the constitution and with preparing the nucleus of the future all-Korean ministries. As soon as the all-Korean Government has been formed, the Assembly will determine how the powers of the ROK Government and the Korean authorities in north Korea shall be transferred to the all-Korean Government and how the former shall be brought to an end.

These and other acts taken by the membership of the Constituent Assembly in accordance with the Constitution shall be accepted and complied with by the ROK and the PDROK.

6. International Security for a Reunified Korea

On the establishment of the reunified Government of Korea, the signatories to the agreement shall pledge their respect for the territorial and political integrity of Korea in conjunction with a declaration by the reunified Government of Korea to undertake not to use force against any other country except in self-defense in protection of its peace and safety. The reunited Korea shall have the authority to assume the international rights and obligations of the ROK and the PDROK and to conclude such other international agreements as it may wish.

7. Completion of Withdrawal of Foreign Military Forces from Korea

The withdrawal of all foreign forces shall be completed within 12 months after the completion of elections and the establishment of a reunified government. The KRSC shall observe and verify the withdrawal of all foreign forces at all times. The KRSC may submit a report to the General Assembly of the UN that foreign forces have withdrawn from Korea and Korea has been unified.

8. Dissolution of KRSC

Following reunification of Korea under a sovereign and independent government as outlined above and following the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Korea, the KRSC shall declare itself dissolved.

9. Termination of the Armistice Agreement

Immediately following the declaration by the KRSC that it is dissolved, the Armistice Agreement shall be considered terminated.

1161. Repeated information niact London 173, Paris 232, Geneva and Seoul unnumbered. I handed Kuznetsov text aide-mémoire given Deptel 597 5 p m (Embtel 1156).<sup>1</sup> Kuznetsov who reads and speaks English quite fluently read aide-mémoire and after saying he would communicate it to Molotov said he would like to make a preliminary comment on sentence which refers to status and responsibility of other powers (third sentence first paragraph dealing with Soviet consultation with other powers). He said that according to communiqué published in Berlin, Geneva Conference was a conference at which two subjects would be dealt with and at which five powers would attend with other interested countries depending on the subject. He felt therefore that sentence in question was at least debatable and not fully justified by Berlin communiqué.

I told Kuznetsov that I had nothing to add to the sentence but having been at Berlin it was perfectly clear that the four powers had assumed responsibility for calling and organizing the conference as evidenced by the fact that all other powers including Communist China had been invited and had in fact been invited by US and Soviet Governments as agreed at Berlin. I said it was difficult to see how there could be any misunderstanding on this point since Soviet Government had taken action to invite Communist China and North Korea in conformity with Berlin agreement.

Kuznetsov did not contest the point in regard to responsibility of the four powers for the invitations and organization of the conference and his subsequent remark to effect that once at Geneva China would be on an equal footing with every other participant seemed to me to indicate that he had somewhat misunderstood the sentence in question. I did not argue this point with him and he showed no further disposition to pursue the subject.

I had rather expected that he would contest inclusion of Korean as an official language but he did not and he merely asked question for clarification in order to assure himself that Chinese would be an official language under our proposal. I explained to him that for the Korean political conference the proposal was to add as official languages both Korean and Chinese, making five in all. He seemed satisfied with this point but inquired what would be done about languages in regard to Indochinese discussions. He said he assumed that organization of Indochinese phase would be discussed at Geneva. I told him I had no instructions on this point and at present aide-mémoire dealt only with preparations for Korean conference.

Comment: I am inclined to believe, as indicated above, that Kuznetsov misread sentence re consultation with other powers and was interpreting it as meaning that once conference began China and other countries would be on different status than four inviting powers. Without going into that aspect of the matter I believe I convinced him that sentence in question referred to the responsibility of the four powers for calling and organizing Korean political conference.

From Kuznetsov observation I believe that in its reply Soviet Government will stress point that once conference convenes China and all other participating countries will be on equal footing insofar as substantive work of conference is concerned. For Indochinese phase they may interpret Berlin agreement to mean that invitations for other participants to Indochinese discussions will be extended by five powers rather than four. We should therefore be prepared to deal with this point which is not definite in wording of agreement and as I recall was left somewhat unclear at Berlin.

[WASHINGTON,] April 5, 1954.

Subject: ROK Participation in Planning for Korean Political Conference

Participants: Ambassador You Chan Yang, Korean Embassy
Philip Han, Counselor, Korean Embassy
Walter S. Robertson, Assistant Secretary, FE
Noel Hemmendinger, NA

Mr. Robertson expressed regret that there was no representative of the ROK present to participate in the consultations with respect to the line to be taken at the Korean Political Conference. He said he could not understand the public position of the ROK in this matter. Mr. Dulles had won a great diplomatic battle in Berlin in getting agreement on a conference which put the aggressors in Korea on one side and the defenders of Korea on the other. This was the kind of conference, with no neutrals present, on which the ROK had insisted. The USSR was not a co-sponsor of the conference, but a sponsor of the Communist side. It issued invitations only to them.

Ambassador Yang said that his government had serious misgivings about the conference. Mr. Robertson said that it was natural for Korea to have misgivings about the future, but that the refusal to consult with its friends was adverse to Korea's interests and only helped the Communists.

Ambassador Yang referred to the desire of the Korean Government that consultations take place in Korea and said he understood from news reports that the U.S. was consulting in other capitals in Europe.

Mr. Robertson stated that this was untrue and suggested that the Korean Embassy look to him for information on matters of this character rather than to the newspapers. He pointed out that the Secretary had flown to Seoul in the past to consult with President Rhee, and that given the enormous responsibilities which the Secretary was bearing for problems the world over and the necessity to consult with many other countries, it was only reasonable to ask the ROK to consult with this Government in Washington.

Ambassador Yang said that he would telegraph his Government on this matter promptly.

"In connection with aide-mémoire of Governments of United States of America, France and England of March 29 on question of preparations for convocation Geneva conference, Soviet Government, with agreement of Government Chinese People's Republic, considers it necessary to communicate following observations:

"In aide-mémoire of Governments United States of America, France and England there is raised question responsibility and status of participants in conference which is being convoked at Geneva. In connection with this, it is considered necessary to call attention of above-mentioned governments to fact that decision taken by Ministers Foreign Affairs of four powers at Berlin regarding convocation Geneva conference provides that this conference shall be conference of representatives United States of America, France, England, Chinese People's Republic and USSR, which shall take part in discussion Korean question and question of re-establishment peace in Indochina which are on conference agenda, with participation other interested states for appropriate questions. From this it is clear that representatives of all five indicated powers shall take part on equal basis in examination all questions relating to conference.

At same time it seems natural to establish system whereby Korean language, together with English, French, Chinese and Russian languages, should be considered one of official languages during consideration Korean question.

"There is noted statement of agreement of Governments France, United States of America and England with proposals contained in Soviet Government's aide-mémoire of March 17<sup>2</sup> regarding system of written and oral translations at conference.

"Agreement is expressed with proposal of three governments that official languages should be used in daily sequence for consecutive oral translation. As concerns oral translations into official languages, it is understood that for this purpose there shall be obtained appropriate qualified interpreters by agreement among conference's participants.

"Proposal of three governments that expenditures for common services should be divided equally among all conference participants is acceptable.

Moscow, April 5, 1954—5 p. m.

1197. Repeated information niact London 184, niact Paris 244. After reading contents aide-mémoire when handed me by Kuznetsov I of course noticed reference to agreement with Chinese and sentence concerning equality of Communist China at conference. I said that, as I had pointed out to him previously, Berlin agreement seemed to me, having been present, to be perfectly clear: That four powers and four powers alone assumed responsibility for invitations and organization of conference.

Kuznetsov replied that he understood this and that question of invitations and preparatory work was one thing but he considered that once conference assembled all members would be on equal basis. I answered that, speaking personally, I thought Communist China would be on same basis as other invited powers. (Since I was not aware there was any agreed tripartite position on this point (Deptel 605),<sup>1</sup> I felt it wise not to pursue subject. Had I been acting solely on behalf US Government I believe reference of Kuznetsov to fact that four powers issued the invitations might have been utilized as occasion to pin him down on Indochinese invitations).

The only other remark of interest made by Kuznetsov was that these measures of preparation were in effect to facilitate work of conference and that conference itself would have ultimate decisions as to languages and matters of this kind. I made no comment on this point for reason given above and also since I recall it was standard US doctrine that in last analysis a conference decides its own procedural and other matters. Having made point re my interpretation of Berlin agreement I told Kuznetsov I would transmit aide-mémoire to my government and also to British and French Ambassadors here. As to aide-mémoire itself, it will be noted that Russians, while agreeing to Korean as official language for Korean phase, nonetheless sought to give special status to Chinese. Since we are not prepared to deal with Indochinese phase prior to assembly at Geneva, it might be wise to treat present Soviet proposal in effect as acceptance of five official languages for this phase and merely state that problem of languages for Indochinese discussions will be considered at Geneva.

In accordance with past practice, we will merely tell press here that reply to our aide-mémoire of March 29 on preparations Geneva conference has been received without disclosing contents.

982. Repeated information Tokyo 593. Tokyo pass CINCUNC and CAG. Following is text of letter dated April 6 from Foreign Minister Pyun to Secretary Dulles which Pyun has requested me to telegraph to Secretary. Signed original being forwarded by pouch through Ambassador Yang.

(Begin Text)

My dear Mr. Secretary: There are strong indications some of Asian neutrals headed by India will get into Geneva conference to be convened on April 26, 1954. Considering fact that, in UN meetings, US delegates openly invited India to any extended discussion of Asian problems other than Korean one, from which they were then seeking to exclude India, and that Indo-Chinese question contemplated to be handled simultaneously with Korean problem in proposed Geneva conference is certainly Asian problem earmarked for extended discussion, it is quite foreseeable neutrals will insist on coming in and succeed in doing so, with no opposition even from US, ostensibly for their participation in discussions of Indo-Chinese question only.

It is true this Government does not feel called to raise any objection to neutrals participation on Indo-Chinese question, if it were treated by separate conference. As it is, Indo-Chinese question will be bundled up with Korean one by being simultaneously handled in same conference. It is, therefore, clear this Government's opposition to neutral participation stands, unless simultaneous treatment of Indo-Chinese question is replaced by consecutive treatment to be given after Korean question has been dealt with with finality.

Now picture is complete, Mr. Secretary, complete, I am sorry to say, as Communists limned. Communists wanted to have it as round-table conference. And it is going to be round-table conference. Communists wanted to have Soviet Union come in as neutral. And now Soviet Union is coming in as sponsor, a thing never hoped for even by most sanguine of Communists. In addition, Communist China will be only standing member, beside four sponsor nations, thus achieving prestige and status of semi-sponsor. Communists insisted on dealing with Korean and other Asian problems. And here Indo-Chinese question is to be simultaneously handled with Korean one. Communists wanted to let in neutrals to do their errands, and now they are all coming in. Communists disliked freedom of participant nation not to be bound by majority-supported decision it does not endorse. And now principle of freedom is completely ignored.

Furthermore, Mr. Secretary, history will have it that it was Indo-Chinese car of conference hitchhiked by Korea; that political conference on Korea as stipulated in armistice and defined by UN had died at Panmunjom preliminary conference and consequently Geneva conference was one mainly on Indo-Chinese question conducted in a manner satisfactory only to Communists and at time Communists might have chosen themselves; that four sponsoring nations and one other standing member constituted composite tribunal, as it were, before which poor Korea stood as trembling defendant.

In short, Mr. Secretary, scheduled Geneva conference is very likely to prove cruel travesty of what free world wished armistice—provided political conference on Korea to be. There is every danger and even indication it will all end up in legitimizing loss of Korea and Indo-China to free world and thus virtually handing rest of Southeast Asia over to Communists. I do not believe I am speaking for interests of Korea alone, oblivious to those of free world as whole. For my part, I refuse to alienate destiny of my country from that of free community it belongs to. I likewise refuse to believe that what is fatal to my own nation could be of benefit to rest of free world.

As you already know, we will, however, go along with our allies in matter of Geneva conference, only if we are supported by assurances as to means of counter-balancing enemy build-up meanwhile and thus not endangering our security while being pulled around by conferences. To be more to point, ROK forces should be so expanded and strengthened that we can afford to attend Geneva conference and, for that matter, any conference without fearing of slipping into indefensible military position.

With best regards, My dear Mr. Secretary, I remain, yours sincerely.

While I doubt whether further attempts satisfy Pyun on his numerous grievances against Geneva would be particularly helpful, I believe we should seek give Rhee and Pyun early reply re extent to which US prepared support build-up ROK forces (Embtel 951, March 30).<sup>2</sup> In particular, clarification of naval and air expansion to accompany 20 division program already seems somewhat overdue. I recognize that reply concerning ROK build-up far from easy since it may involve simultaneous consideration such matters as US redeployment plans, question of retaliation should Communists violate armistice, and speculation concerning Geneva Conference results. Nevertheless failure to reply probably capable being seized upon by Pyun as pretext refuse to attend on ground US withholding implementation of Rhee-Dulles agreement last August.

As for 15 to 20 additional divisions, although Rhee's disappointment when we refuse this request may be considerable, further delay in replying may only raise false hopes and thus aggravate our relations. In other words trouble over this phase perhaps unavoidable in best of circumstances.

796. For President Rhee from Dulles.

“My dear President Rhee: As the date for the Geneva Conference approaches, I still await word as to whether or not your Government accepts our invitation to attend. Since the location, composition and subject matter of the Conference are as we had agreed between us, and since it is our continuing purpose if you attend to look upon your Government as our principal associate, I naturally hope that you will be represented. I quite recognize the unlikelihood of a result which would satisfy our two Governments. On the other hand, it would I think be a great mistake if your Government, by its absence, gave the impression that you were responsible for the failure to bring about peacefully the unification of Korea and its freedom from foreign forces as is the purpose of the Conference.

Since the situation with reference to Communist China is becoming more tense, and since I am trying to organize a strong anti-Communist front in relation to Indochina, I believe you would find it to your advantage to be at Geneva. I believe that your Government's voice there would contribute to preventing the Chinese Communists from gaining any political advantage and would help us in our efforts to expose Communist China as the danger that we believe it is. I had hoped that we could be united in this political effort as we were united when our forces came to Korea. Our unity will not, however, achieve maximum effectiveness unless our representatives can talk together in advance and do some planning.

Rhee then read Secretary's letter aloud and made following comments:

(1) With regard to our being entitled to "courtesy of reply" President pointed out that exchange of correspondence among President Eisenhower, Secretary, himself and his Foreign Minister indicated invitation under active and serious consideration by ROK Government and hence no discourtesy involved;

(2) Rhee said he is completing further letter to President Eisenhower text of which he would shortly ask me to telegraph Washington.<sup>2</sup> Rhee said letter short and indicates Korean Government prepared attend Geneva Conference if President Eisenhower, in light ROK misgivings, nevertheless still believes it desirable do so. I gather letter also takes up again Rhee desire for assurance on military build-up.

With regard to Secretary's reply to Pyun (Deptel 792) I said this in form of statement recapitulating points previously set forth, plus indication that ROK request for armed forces build-up is under active study by US Government whose views will be furnished as soon as they are available. (Point 11; I did not say reply likely "next week" since this would almost certainly have guaranteed further Korean delay pending receipt thereof). I also indicated that US Government will attend conference whether or not ROK attends (Point 10).

Although I was with President and advisors for approximately 1 hour during which Rhee covered much familiar ground, no points were developed.

Because of short remaining period April 26 opening date, seems doubtful whether there will be much time for Washington consultation, even assuming ROK Geneva attendance. Begin text.

My dear President Eisenhower: Not knowing what to do at this darkest moment in our fight for survival of Korea, I am appealing to you once again by asking you to advise me what can be done.

Our friends are urging us to join in Geneva conference. They complain we are not cooperating with them. Have we not cooperated with US to extent of wasting over eight months, knowing as we did nothing would come out of Panmunjom or political conferences? What is result? Our enemies are today in infinitely stronger position than they ever were and UN Forces are talking about going home. We do not blame them. They see no reason why they should stay here while there is no war to fight and while their governments are trying to settle matters peacefully either one way or other.

Regarding Geneva conference, we were told Russia would not be admitted as neutral. Now we find Russia is one of sponsors of conference, sending out invitations. Again we were told positively India would not be allowed attend conference, but we hear Indian delegates are already in Geneva. I need not mention other points equally difficult to understand. [Here follow portions of President Rhee's message that were excluded from this publication at the request of the Republic of Korea Government.]

Allow me to tell Your Excellency, frankly and earnestly, that UN statesmen do not seem to know what they are doing. They are playing with fire. By trying to resist Armed Forces with talks, they can never save Indochina or Korea or even their own nations. When it is too late, young men of their own countries will pay dearly for it. I am saying this with prayers in my heart. May God Almighty give you wisdom and courage that pass all understanding.

With assurances of my continued friendship and high esteem,
 Very sincerely yours,

WASHINGTON, April 8, 1954—6:59 p. m.

797. Afternoon April 7 Robertson presented informal paper<sup>2</sup> and discussed general US views on substance and tactics Korean phase Geneva Conference with Australia, Canadian, New Zealand and UK representatives along following lines:

1. Noting we had studied various Commonwealth proposals, Robertson stated US and Commonwealth in general agreement basic objectives seek agreement from Communists on independent, united Korea; withdrawal foreign forces from Korea with adequate safeguards and in connection with Korean unification; maintain strong united allied and UN position; emerge with moral and propaganda victory; and take only positions at Geneva which maintain position of strength for UN in Korea.

2. US proposes seek allied agreement to begin Geneva conference with proposals for resuming UN plans for Korean unification which Communists frustrated by political opposition and aggression. Such plans based on GA resolutions of November 14, 1947,<sup>3</sup> October 7, 1950, December 1, 1950,<sup>4</sup> and August 28, 1953.<sup>5</sup> in North Korea under UNCURK observation. This would bring area of North Korea by new constitutional act under ROK. Such arrangements would safeguard UNC security requirements in Korea. Such proposal would be combined with phased withdrawal foreign forces staged before and after elections and establishment single national government for Korea. For several legal and practical reasons situation Korea different from Germany in terms applying tripartite unification formula at Geneva automatically to Korea.

4. In discussion tactics US position Robertson emphasized (a) importance principle maintaining integrity ROK and not liquidating it constitutionally without its consent and starting de novo as Commonwealth proposes; (b) no agreement at Geneva valid as practical matter without joint US-ROK endorsement; (c) ROK has primary interest Korean unification and at opening stage would violently oppose Commonwealth generalized plan for elections and new government; (d) in negotiations with Communists dangerous begin conference with final fixed formula since Communists always oppose initial position; and (e) US proposal on Korea in general better to combat possible Communist proposals on Indochina.

5. US Government strongly feels undesirable, dangerous and unwise at this stage anticipate seeking extensive compromises with Communists on any ameliorating arrangements less than unification after failure reach agreement on unification.

Commonwealth representatives indicated their Governments would (a) dislike US approach either as matter of tactics or principle; (b) prefer generalized plan for all-Korea elections which would be defensible to advance at beginning conference and stand on firmly and (c) do not recognize sovereignty or authority ROK in North Korea (and neither does US), and uncertain GA Resolutions cited definitely support preserving and extending ROK integrity by new constituent act.

Robertson emphasized principle safeguarding UN resolutions and ROK integrity and need for earliest possible consultations with ROK if ROK decides go Geneva determine how far it will go towards Commonwealth viewpoint eventually at Conference.

KOREAN PHASE

DRAFT INITIAL PROPOSAL FOR REUNIFICATION OF KOREA
(Alternative A)

The attached paper, drafted by Mr. Drew, NA, contains the initial proposal on Korean Reunification (Alternative A) which the U.S. plans to support at Geneva. This proposal has been drafted to take account of the Secretary's desire that the initial U.S. position should support a resumption of the UN Reunification program set forth in the GA Resolution of October 12 [?], 1950 as well as in previous UN Resolutions.

The draft proposal of the minimum U.S. position (Alternative B) is contained in GK D-4b<sup>1</sup> and the basic U.S. position on the over-all question of Korean Reunification is to be found in GK D-4/1c.<sup>2</sup>

DRAFT PROPOSAL FOR REUNIFICATION OF KOREA
(Alternative A)

Preamble

The Korean people, who for 4,000 years have had a common civilization with a common language, culture, and traditions, desire to be reunited under a single government of their own choosing and to resume their traditional peaceful life. Virtually the entire world has long recognized that this is a proper and commendable aspiration, and the United Nations has repeatedly supported measures designed to realize this objective. The United Nations General Assembly adopted resolutions in 1947, 1948, 1949, 1950, 1951, 1952, and 1953 which supported a free, independent, and unified Korean Government, representative of the wishes of the Korean people. The principles enunciated in these resolutions are just and equitable and constitute a broad framework upon which any political settlement for Korea should be based. The fundamental principles are as follows:

1. The Central People's Government of the [People's] Republic of China, having engaged in aggression in Korea, should cause its forces and nationals to withdraw from Korea. (UNGA Res. Feb. 1, 1951).

2. The Korean question "is primarily a matter for the Korean people itself" and it "cannot be fairly resolved without the participation of representatives of the indigenous population." (UNGA Res. Nov. 14, 1947).

3. The selection of representatives of the Korean people should be on the basis of adult suffrage and by secret ballot; the number of representatives from each voting area or zone should be proportionate to the population; and the elections should be under the supervision of a United Nations commission of representatives of various non-Korean nations. (UNGA Res. Nov. 14, 1947).

4. The Government of the Republic of Korea was duly established in conformity with the above principles and is the only such lawful Government in Korea. (UNGA Res. Dec. 12, 1948). Subsequent elections in the Republic of Korea have been observed and endorsed by United Nations Commissions as reflecting the will of the electorate.

We therefore advance the following proposal for the reunification of Korea in accordance with the above principles enunciated by the United Nations.

Method of Reunification of Korea

1. Responsibilities of UNCURK as the Supervisory Commission.
2. Withdrawal of United Nations forces and forces and nationals of the Central People's Government of the [People's] Republic of China from Korea.

3. Establishment of conditions for free elections.

4. Free elections for representatives to National Assembly of Republic of Korea from areas of Korea not already represented in National Assembly.

5. Action by expanded National Assembly to establish national administration for all Korea.

6. International security for a reunified Korea.

7. Residual functions of UNCURK after reunification.

8. Supersession of Armistice Agreement.

1. Responsibilities of UNCURK as the Supervisory Commission.

The present United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea (UNCURK) was established by a resolution of the United Nations General Assembly on October 7, 1950, to (i) assume the functions hitherto exercised by the United Nations Commission in [on] Korea (UNCOK); (ii) represent the United Nations in bringing about the establishment of a unified, independent and democratic government of all Korea; (iii) exercise such responsibilities in connection with relief and rehabilitation in Korea as may be determined by the General Assembly after receiving the recommendations of the Economic and Social Council. The functions hitherto exercised by the UNCOK under United Nations General Assembly resolutions of December 12, 1948, included the responsibility to (a) lend its good offices to bring about the unification of Korea and the integration of all Korean security forces in accordance with the principles laid down by the General Assembly in the resolution of 14 November 1947; (b) seek to facilitate the removal of barriers to economic, social, and other friendly intercourse caused by the division of Korea; (c) be available for observation and consultation in the further development of representative government based on the freely expressed will of the people; and (d) observe the actual withdrawal of the occupation forces and verify the fact of withdrawal when such has occurred. The principles for bringing about the unification of Korea embodied in the United Nations General Assembly resolution of November 14, 1947, include elections under the observation of the Commission on the basis of adult suffrage and by secret ballot to choose representatives, which representatives would constitute a National Assembly and which may establish a National Government of Korea, the number of such representatives from each voting area or zone to be proportionate to the population.

These terms of reference for UNCURK shall be specifically revised and expanded with the consent of the United Nations General Assembly to give UNCURK responsibility for observing and verifying the withdrawal of foreign forces from Korea as set forth herein and for supervising the plan for the reunification of Korea as set forth herein. The specific terms of reference of UNCURK shall include the following:

(a) Observation and certification of withdrawal of United Nations forces and forces and nationals of the Central People's Government of the [People's] Republic of China.

(b) Investigation throughout areas of Korea not already duly represented in the National Assembly of the Republic of Korea of conditions affecting the holding of free elections, freedom of movement, freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention, freedom of association and assembly, freedom of speech, press, and broadcasting, and freedom of political parties to organize and carry out their activities.

(c) Preparation of electoral laws for these areas in consultation with the Republic of Korea and the civil authorities of these areas concerned.

(d) Determination, in consultation with the Republic of Korea and the civil authorities of the area concerned, of the number of delegates to be elected and the number of election districts, which shall be in direct proportion to the population distribution in Korea.

(e) Supervision over the implementation of the electoral laws and registration of qualified voters, and observation of the elections at all administrative levels.

(f) Certification of results of elections.

(g) Observation of steps leading to the establishment of a reunified government. During the period between the end of the elections and the effective assumption of control over all of Korea by the reunified Korean Government, UNCURK will remain in operation in order to prevent action after the elections which would impair the conditions of genuine freedom under which they will have been held. The details of these terms of reference shall be worked out by the signatories within this framework and shall come into effect simultaneously with this agreement. UNCURK shall have the power to adopt measures not specifically described and which are necessary to carry out their task herein, provided that they do not otherwise conflict with this proposal.

The UNCURK shall have its primary headquarters at Pyongyang and shall report and make recommendations at its discretion to the parties to this agreement. The parties to this agreement shall facilitate the work of UNCURK and comply with recommendations made by UNCURK within its revised terms of reference as set forth above.

2. Withdrawal of United Nations Forces and Forces and Nationals of the Central People's Government of the [People's] Republic of China.

The withdrawal of all forces and nationals of the Central People's Government of the Chinese People's Republic shall be carried out in pursuance of the February 1, 1951, resolution of the United Nations General Assembly, which calls for such action. This withdrawal shall take place as expeditiously as possible, and shall be completed at the latest within twelve months after the acceptance of this proposal.

The withdrawal of UN forces shall be carried out in pursuance of the October 7, 1950, resolution of the United Nations General Assembly which provides that United Nations forces should not remain in any part of Korea otherwise than so far as necessary for ensuring conditions of stability in Korea and for the establishment of a reunified government. This withdrawal should be completed within twelve months from the date that UNCURK notes that an effective reunified government of Korea has been established.

UNCURK shall observe and verify the withdrawal of UN forces and forces and nationals of the Central People's Government of the [People's] Republic of China, and when appropriate it may submit reports to the General Assembly of the United Nations that all forces and nationals of the Central People's Government of the [People's] Republic of China have been withdrawn from Korea and that all United Nations forces have been withdrawn from Korea.

3. Establishment of Conditions for Free Elections.

Preparatory to the holding of free elections in areas of Korea not already duly represented in the National Assembly, UNCURK shall, pursuant to its terms of reference, observe political conditions throughout the areas concerned and shall, where it deems appropriate, propose to the parties concerned the measures necessary to insure that elections are held in a free atmosphere wherein the democratic right of freedom of speech, press and assembly would be recognized and respected. In particular these measures shall include the following :

Freedom of movement throughout the area.

Freedom of presentation of candidates.

Immunity of candidates.

Freedom from arbitrary arrest or victimization.

Freedom of association and political meetings.

Freedom of expression for all.

Freedom of press, radio, and free circulation of newspapers, periodicals, etc.

Secrecy of the vote.

Security of polling stations and ballot boxes.

4. Free Elections for Representatives to National Assembly of Republic of Korea from Areas of Korea not already Represented in the National Assembly.

In consultation with the authorities in the ROK and in the local areas concerned, UNCURK shall draft electoral laws and procedures for areas of Korea not already duly represented in the National Assembly. The civil authorities for all the areas concerned shall promulgate these laws and procedures simultaneously. In particular, election procedures approved by UNCURK shall ensure that candidates reflecting varying viewpoints will be permitted to campaign freely; that the electorate will be able to express its choice of candidates freely and without duress or intimidation; and that the election procedures shall be uniform among all the areas concerned.

Not later than 18 months after concluding this agreement or not later than six months after the withdrawal from Korea of forces and nationals of the Central People's Government of the [People's] Republic of China in the event that this is accomplished in less than twelve months, elections for representatives to the National Assembly shall be held on the basis of adult suffrage and by secret ballot in areas of Korea not already duly represented in the National Assembly.* The number of representatives to be elected to the National Assembly from such areas shall be determined according to the size of the population of each election district. It is estimated that not more than six million persons reside in areas not already duly represented in the National Assembly. In the event that UNCURK shall fail to certify the election of a representative he shall not be seated in the National Assembly, and new local by-elections shall be held as soon as possible under UNCURK supervision. The vote of a majority of the members of UNCURK shall be required to rule that the election of any candidate is not valid.

5. Action by Expanded National Assembly to Establish National Administration for all of Korea.

Within thirty days after UNCURK has certified the free election of two-thirds of the number of representatives designated to be elected under its supervision, the National Assembly shall seat the newly elected representatives. After these newly elected representatives have been seated the National Assembly shall take prompt and appropriate action to provide uniform national laws for all of Korea and to render null and void all preceding sectional laws not specifically reaffirmed by the expanded National Assembly. When this action has been taken and effectively implemented a reunified Korean Government shall be considered to have been established.

6. International Security for a Reunified Korea.

The reunified Government shall declare its adherence to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and at such time the parties to this agreement shall pledge their respect for the sovereignty and the independence of the reunified Korea. The reunited Korea shall have the right to conclude such international agreements as it may wish.

7. Residual Functions of UNCURK.

Following the establishment of a reunified Korean Government with effective control over all of Korea as outlined above, UNCURK shall note the fact and shall henceforth confine its activities to such responsibilities in connection with relief and rehabilitation as may be determined by the General Assembly of the United Nations.

8. Supersession of Armistice Agreement.

Notation by UNCURK that a reunified Korean Government with effective control over all of Korea has been duly established shall constitute for purposes of supersession of the Armistice Agreement, under Article 62 of that Agreement, "appropriate agreement for a peaceful settlement at a political level between both sides."

642. Urtels 1196 and 1197<sup>2</sup> re substantive issue raised second paragraph Soviet aide-mémoire, Department's view is Soviets should be left no doubt as to views Western powers this regard. We have proposed to British and French, and British have agreed that aide-mémoire be dealt with in two separate exercises: (1) a short tripartite aide-mémoire to be delivered by you with respect to administrative and technical arrangements dealt with in the remainder of Soviet note, text of which being transmitted by separate telegram;<sup>3</sup> and (2) delivery of identic notes to Soviets by three Western Ambassadors on substantive issue. Text of U.S. note follows:

"With reference to the Soviet aide-mémoire of April 5, the Government of the United States points out that the characterization therein of the forthcoming Conference at Geneva as a 'conference of representatives of the United States of America, France, England, Chinese People's Republic and USSR which shall take part in discussion Korean question and question of re-establishment peace in Indochina which are on conference agenda, with participation other interested states for appropriate questions', does not correspond to the letter or the sense of the agreement reached by the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the Four Powers at Berlin on February 18, 1954.

The concept embodied in the aide-mémoire of April 5 was explicitly rejected at the meeting of the four Foreign Ministers at Berlin.

The Resolution agreed to by the four Foreign Ministers on February 18 does not contemplate a conference limited to five participants as to either the Korean or the Indochinese question. Arrangements concerning the Geneva Conference which are not dealt with equally by all of the participants will be the special responsibility of the governments of the United States, France, the United Kingdom and the USSR."

U.K. have agreed identic text and Ambassador Moscow being instructed coordinate timing and delivery with you and French Ambassador. Hope French Government will issue similar instructions French Ambassador. Have informed French and U.K. that Department does not consider delivery should necessarily be joint but leave manner delivery discretion three Ambassadors Moscow. Tripartite aide-mémoire should not be delivered until French Ambassador instructed deliver note.

“The Governments of France, the United Kingdom and the United States note from the Aide-Mémoire of the U.S.S.R. dated April 5 that the U.S.S.R. has now agreed on the technical and administrative arrangements for the Geneva Conference.

Although it has been agreed that English, French, Russian, Chinese and Korean should be official languages for the discussion of the Korean problem, the decision on the official languages for the discussions on the problem of restoring peace in Indochina can, of course, only be made after agreement has been reached at Geneva on all the participants for the discussions about Indochina.

With reference to the U.S.S.R.'s proposal that qualified interpreters for oral translations into official languages be obtained by agreement among the conference participants, it is assumed the U.S.S.R. will have at Geneva as soon as possible appropriate officials authorized to discuss the necessary arrangements in this regard as well as other technical and administrative details prior to the conference, with representatives of France, the United Kingdom, and the United States who are now in Geneva.”

Reference Deptel 642.<sup>1</sup> From beginning of exchanges with Soviet Government concerning preparations Geneva conference the desirability of not leaving Soviet Union in any doubt on these points has been repeatedly stressed by this Embassy. Furthermore, as reported, I have on every occasion emphasized these points to Kuznetsov, particularly that the four powers and the four powers alone were responsible for the conference and that Communist China had no different status nor more rights than any other invited power. I am therefore in entire agreement as to desirability of a note on the subject to Soviet Government but I believe note would be more effective and of greater help at Geneva if Western interpretation as given in last paragraph was made somewhat more precise. I feel, as written, it will offer Soviet Union an opportunity for confusing the issue in hope of causing differences between three western powers. First sentence in last paragraph is not strictly accurate since portion of Soviet aide-mémoire of April 5 quoted in first paragraph does not state that conference at either stage should be limited to five participants. Soviet reply would probably pick up this technical discrepancy to our embarrassment. Also, the last sentence is somewhat ambiguous in reference to arrangements "which are not dealt with equally by all the participants". This might provoke an inquiry by Soviet Government as to difference between two types of arrangements contemplated.

It would appear that main point we must seek to establish clearly is that under Berlin Agreement Communist China has no different status than the other invited countries and in no way shares the responsibility of the four for any phase of conference. It seems to me there are two points of substance which must be dealt with in order to safeguard this basic position concerning role of Communist China. One deals with invitations to other participants in Indochinese discussions. While it is true Berlin decision is less precise on this point, its intent, by analogy with Korean phase, is sufficiently clear for us to assert, and at this time, that four powers and four powers alone will agree and invite in their names representatives of the other countries which will participate. For this purpose Communist China could be considered as having already been invited. The second point is the status of participating countries once the conference has convened. Here it would appear that one method of avoiding any possibility of special status for Communist China would be to adhere to principle that all participating powers will be on equal footing once conference has convened. Alternate possibility would be to assert continuing responsibility of four powers as inviting powers from organization and handling of conference business during actual sessions conference.

If we are going to attempt to clarify our position with Soviets at this juncture, and I feel we should, it would be better to meet these points head on rather than leave any obscurity in language which Soviets could seize upon for hair-splitting argument. Something along following lines might therefore be substituted for last paragraph proposed note:

"At Berlin it was agreed that four powers would take the initiative in calling conference at Geneva to discuss, in different compositions, the Korean and Indochinese questions and that for this purpose the four governments would undertake to invite other interested countries to participate. The responsibility for the issuance on invitations, the preparations and other related matters in regard to both phases of the conference rests clearly on these four governments and these four governments alone. In accordance with the Berlin decision, other countries including CPR have already been invited by the four powers to attend the discussion on Korea. The CPR has likewise been invited to attend the discussions on Indochina. Once agreement has been reached by the governments of France, US, UK and USSR as to the other countries to be invited to participate in the discussion on Indochina, invitations will in like manner be extended to them in the name of the four governments. In conformity with accepted international practice, all participating countries, inviting as well as invited, will take part in the work of the conference on a basis of equality."

An alternate for last sentence (but in my view less desirable) could be: "The US, UK, France and USSR in accordance with their position of inviting powers will continue to bear a special responsibility for the arrangements and organization of the conference even after it is convened."<sup>2</sup>

Deptels 642<sup>2</sup> and 646.<sup>3</sup> French Ambassador has had no word from Paris concerning note at all and British Ambassador has not yet received approval for revised text.

On assumption approval will be received from both Paris, London, we tentatively agreed as follows regarding delivery :

1. I should as separate operation hand to Kuznetsov aide-mémoire. Press would be told, as previously, that I had delivered tripartite answer to Soviet aide-mémoire of April 5 dealing with practical preparations and arrangements for Geneva conference.

2. Method of delivery note concerning interpretation Berlin decision depends primarily on how three governments from point of view public opinion wish to handle subject. If it is desired to make three-power demonstration, emphasizing our interpretation Berlin decisions, preferable method of delivery would be by three Ambassadors personally calling separately on Molotov. It would be difficult if not impossible to keep fact of calls by three western Ambassadors on Molotov secret and it would probably therefore be necessary to reveal to press purpose of calls. This would necessitate statements from three governments in order to insure public understanding of issue involved. On other hand if governments wish merely to keep record clear with Soviet Government without publicity, delivery by messenger as has been done in past without personal call by Ambassadors would offer best chance of keeping matter confidential. French Ambassador favors method of personal delivery since he feels demonstration of western solidarity is enhanced by personal call of Ambassadors whereas British Ambassador is in general more inclined to delivery by messenger. Provided three governments are prepared to deal with publicity on contents of note and difference with Soviet Government on interpretation Berlin agreement, I see considerable merit in personal delivery, but only on that basis. Would appreciate guidance before final decision on method delivery. British and French Ambassadors communicating along similar lines with London and Paris.<sup>4</sup>

*Memorandum by the Coordinator for the Geneva Conference

Subject: Position on Korean Unification for Geneva Conference.

The ROKs have not yet indicated their intention to attend the Geneva Conference, however all indications are that they will in fact attend but are deferring any announcement in order to extract maximum concessions from us and to avoid consulting with us prior to the Conference in order to retain a free hand at the Conference.

Over the past weeks we have repeatedly reiterated to the ROKs our desire to honor our commitment to consult with them prior to consulting with anyone else concerning positions to be taken at the Conference and the difficulty of doing so until they have reached a decision on whether to attend. Last week we informed the ROK that in view of the very short time before the Conference we could no longer delay consulting with other members of the Allied side. The ROK expressed no objection and merely asked to be kept informed of the results.

We have thus far carried out preliminary consultations with U.K., the Commonwealth and France. We have made it clear in our consultation that we are not going to permit our Allies to bargain us down on our position prior to Geneva so that we have no "give" by the time we start negotiations with the Communists. We have taken the position that at least the opening Allied position at Geneva should be support of the ROK position which provides for extension of ROK sovereignty over North Korea and the holding of elections under U.N. observation for the seats in the ROK Assembly provided for North Korea under the ROK Constitution. We have attempted to support this position by, among other arguments, stating that it would be a logical completion of the U.N. plans for the unification of Korea interrupted by the outbreak of the Korean War.

The U.K. and the Commonwealth have expressed strong opposition to this position even as an opening tactical maneuver. France has not yet replied, but I expect that its position will be one of somewhat grudging support, or at least not opposition, in the hope of obtaining U.S. support for French positions with respect to Indochina.

The Commonwealth position is that a plan for all-Korean elections to a constituent Assembly should be put forward at Geneva, similar to the Allied plan put forward at Berlin for Germany. While having a superficial plausibility, such a plan ignores the great differences between the Korean and the German situation. It in effect places the ROK and the North Korean regimes on the same basis and "starts from scratch" in Korea. Although Rhee and his supporters could be expected to win overwhelmingly any such election, the ROK could be expected violently to oppose the plan, which also ignores the basic U.S. position of the maintenance of the integrity of the ROK.

There is a position upon which I believe we could take a firm stand at Geneva which would be more consistent with basic U.N. resolutions than the present ROK position; which would be entirely consistent with our position on the maintenance of the integrity of the ROK; which I think has a reasonable prospect of obtaining support of Rhee if it is carefully and sympathetically explained to him, and upon which I believe we could obtain a very considerable degree of international support. This position would be to hold an election under international observation for the ROK Assembly throughout both North and South Korea within the framework of the present ROK Constitution, possibly accompanied by a popular election for President. Rhee has previously indicated publicly (with many qualifications) his willingness to have an all-Korea popular election for President.

We are not going to be able to accomplish much in the way of concerting our position with Pyun at Geneva. Therefore it is urgent that an appropriate individual be prepared to go to Korea to see Rhee immediately upon ROK announcing its decision to attend the Geneva Conference.

I discussed the situation with Mr. Robertson and the Secretary along the foregoing lines. As I indicated to you, the Secretary gave his approval to attempting to obtain ROK agreement and to Mr. Morton<sup>2</sup> discussing with Senator Knowland<sup>3</sup> an emissary to Rhee for the purpose.

<sup>4</sup> In a memorandum to the Secretary, Apr. 14, Johnson stated that Morton had talked with Knowland about a trip to Korea by Arthur Dean. Knowland's reaction, said the memorandum, was to suggest that General Van Fleet might be more effective, but he—Knowland—would not oppose Dean's going. Johnson indicated his belief that Dean should be sent to Seoul immediately upon Korean announcement of intention to attend the Conference. Under Secretary Smith concurred in the recommendation. On the following day, Secretary Dulles in a brief memorandum to Johnson indicated his agreement to asking Dean to go if Van Fleet also went to Korea. (795.00/4-1454)

During the following week, it was announced that General Van Fleet had been chosen by President Eisenhower as his Special Representative with the rank of Ambassador to make a military survey to the Far East. SECRET      NIACT

LONDON, April 13, 1954—3 p. m.

4523. Repeated information Paris niact 622. For the Acting Secretary from the Secretary. Paris for Secretary's party. Following is résumé of my final meeting with Eden this morning :

5. Korean phase Geneva Conference.<sup>1</sup>

(A) I said we had two basic thoughts: We must carry ROK with us in any proposal which we put forward at Geneva since without their acceptance proposal was meaningless.

(B) We regard Geneva as serious negotiations and while not over hopeful wish to try for settlement involving unification and independence at [of] Korea, therefore we should have some give in our position so that we can make concessions. We should not give up all our trading possibilities. While we would fully consult with other 16, US should have pretty much control of tactics. The Communists at Geneva will show a single will and if all 16 try to quarter-back operation we will get nowhere. Since US seems to have principal responsibility for trying to reach agreement and bringing ROK along we must have a tactical flexibility.

I outlined our view on opening position at Geneva based on UN Commission designed to oversee Korean elections explaining that this Commission's work had been interrupted by aggression in 1950 and that we could make a plausible and honorable case that it should carry on with the task given it by the UN. I recognized this would not be acceptable to the Communists but felt that we could stand before the bar of world opinion in putting it forward. Eden said that my presentation cast different light on situation, thus far he had only seen reports that we intended to have elections in North Korea and not in South Korea. Propagandawise this would be a very difficult position to maintain and he stressed the importance of carrying not only British but world opinion with us. He said UK had been thinking of a German type formula similar to Berlin. In light of my comments, however, he felt UK might be able to support opening position I had outlined above. He believed Communists would come forward with specious proposals and UK would like to counter with something that seemed eminently reasonable but probably would not be accepted by Communists. He had not liked what he heretofore understood US proposal to be since he thought it tactically unsound to put forward a case which would be shot down and then produce another proposal. Now that he understood the proposition we had in mind he felt much better. He asked whether we could spell out for his people our presentation and I told him we would be glad to do so, and could probably discuss it in Paris next week.<sup>2</sup> (Alex Johnson should draw up draft of US presentation at Geneva for my consideration next Monday).<sup>3</sup>

Selwyn Lloyd<sup>4</sup> doubted that we would obtain unified Korea and asked whether we envisaged other measures which might make the armistice safer and more durable. For example, if the neutrals on UN Commission were no longer willing to remain in Korea what would we do and what would replace UN Commission. I said we would also give thought to this point.

GK D-4/9

GENERAL UNITED STATES VIEWS ON KOREAN PHASE OF GENEVA CONFERENCE

PURPOSE OF CONFERENCE

1. In accordance with Paragraph 60 of the Armistice Agreement and the Berlin Communiqué of February, the two belligerent sides are to meet to seek a peaceful settlement of the Korean question, considering that the establishment by peaceful means of a united and independent Korea would be an important factor in reducing international tension and in restoring peace in other parts of Asia. It will be a two-sided conference.

2. We are confident that all the allies are agreed our primary purpose at Geneva is to seek Korea's unification on terms that would not result in turning Korea over to the Communists and thus lose at the Conference table what we fought so long to prevent in Korea.

OBJECTIVES

1. Maintain position of strength and stability in free Korea, avoid confusion, weakening of morale, or public turmoil within the ROK, and take account ROK fear of abandonment.

2. Maintain the constitutional framework of the ROK State and the validity of past UN resolutions to the greatest extent possible.

3. Maintain a united front at the Conference among the allies, the United States and the ROK in the tactics of presentation and proceedings, and work out suitable procedures for consultations among Allies at Conference.

4. Determine whether the Communists will insist on controlling part or all Korea, or renounce any special position in Korea in order to set up "a united Korea for free Koreans", and unmask Communist intentions.

5. Emerge from the Conference in a strong moral and political position by presenting proposals commending themselves to the world at large and which if not accepted by the Communists will make clear their responsibility for failure to reach agreement at Geneva.

BASIC CONSIDERATIONS

1. The Communists at Geneva will do their utmost to broaden discussions on deceptive lines, such as a general Far East security pact, lessening of tensions and recognition of the independence and security of all states. The Communists will not agree to a "united Korea for free Koreans" or any plan of unification acceptable to us on Korea.

2. Allied proposals must take into consideration the fundamental interests and position of the ROK in the future unification of Korea. The ROK is a sovereign state and not a pawn. Without the endorsement and support of the ROK, proposals or agreements at Geneva on Korea will be ineffective and invalid.

3. It is essential, from the United States point of view, to preserve the framework of legitimacy, sovereignty and integrity of the ROK State in principle. Proposals based on this principle would:

(a) preserve the integrity of the nation and people which fought, with much allied and United Nations blood and treasure, for three years against Communist aggressors;

(b) emphasize the interrupted efforts of the United Nations since 1947 in good faith to establish the independence and unity of Korea.

(c) give voice to the viewpoint of the overwhelming majority of the Korean people; and

(d) not put the ROK on a par with the North Korean regime.

4. The situation in Korea is substantially different from that in Germany so that the exact parallel of unification plans for Germany do not apply rigidly as a precedent for Korea.

UNITED STATES PROPOSALS

1. Continuation of United Nations Resolutions. We believe we should begin the Geneva Conference with proposals in the general spirit of the United Nations plans for unification of Korea which the Communists frustrated by political opposition and aggression. We have in mind specifically the General Assembly resolutions of November 14, 1947, December 12, 1948, October 7, 1950, December 1, 1950, and August 28, 1953. The principal points of these resolutions are:

(a) The United Nations has frequently attempted to assist the Korean people in re-establishing their freedom, independence and unity which are the urgent and rightful claims and that the Korean question is primarily a matter for the Korean people.

(b) National independence of Korea should be re-established and foreign forces withdrawn thereafter.

(c) Elections should be held on the basis of adult suffrage and by secret ballot and the number of representatives from the voting districts should be proportionate to population; elections should be observed by an international commission with freedom to observe and consult throughout Korea.

(d) The ROK is the only lawful sovereign government in any part of Korea in so far as the United Nations is concerned.

(e) The United Nations has in being a commission with personnel and experience to carry out the terms of reference on Korean unification established in the General Assembly Resolution of October 7, 1950.

(f) The United Nations has in being an agency to rehabilitate all Korea once it is unified.

2. Variant Plans. There are two general formulas for obtaining a free and united Korea by peaceful means:

(a) to carry forward the plans contained in existing UN resolutions by completing the constituent act of elections in North Korea, within the framework of the constitutional structure of the ROK State.

(b) to start completely de novo by holding elections throughout Korea supervised by an international commission to set up a constituent assembly, draft and adopt a new constitution, and form a new national government. The United States favors the first formula. It would (a) avoid turmoil and disorganization in ROK, and (b) provide some negotiating flexibility.

3. Elements of Unification Plan.

(a) International Commission with authority to move throughout Korea to observe elections and advise local authorities thereon.

(b) Minimum Conditions for Free Elections.

(c) Elections in North Korea, or possibly also in South Korea, in such a way as to retain the constitutional entity of the ROK State.

(d) Establishment of an all-Korea National Assembly on basis proportional to population in South and North Korea.

(e) Assembly would have right and authority by terms of new elections to retain, amend or replace ROK constitution.

(f) Phased withdrawal of foreign forces before and after elections to be completed "X" months after all-Korean Assembly and President elected.

(g) Possible election of President simultaneous with elections for National Assembly.

WASHINGTON, April 14, 1954—3:43 p. m.

362. At meeting April 13 of countries that have accepted invitation participate Geneva Conference, group was given briefing on current military situation in Korea, including estimate Communist capabilities, and intelligence estimate overall Communist objectives. Unlikelihood of Communists accepting any proposals dislodging them from Korea emphasized.

Recalling bases from Geneva Conference in Armistice Agreement and Berlin Communiqué, Johnson expressed confidence allies agreed primary purpose Geneva to seek Korean unification on terms that would not result in turning over Korea to Communists, thus losing at Conference what we fought so long to prevent. He emphasized following objectives:

(1) maintain position of strength and stability in free Korea taking account ROK fear of abandonment, not causing confusion, weakening of morale or strong public opposition within ROK; (2) maintain constitutional framework ROK state and, to greatest extent possible, validity of past UN resolutions; (3) maintain united front at Conference, despite mechanical difficulties of coordinating position in fast-moving conference situation with number of participants, which would require study; (4) determine whether Communists willing surrender control over any part Korea, or if not, unmask Communist intentions; (5) emerge from Conference in strong moral and political position by presenting proposals commending themselves to world opinion and which, if rejected by Communists, will demonstrate Communist responsibility for Conference failure.

Basic considerations underlying allied position at Conference enumerated:

(1) Communists would do utmost broaden discussions on deceptive lines (e.g. general Far East security pact) and allies must keep Conference to basic issues; (2) allied proposals must take into consideration fundamental interests and position ROK in future unification since without ROK endorsement and support, proposals or agreements will be ineffective and invalid; (3) ROK is sovereign independent state, not pawn; (4) any proposals put forward must (a) preserve framework of legitimacy, sovereignty and integrity ROK State in principle, (b) emphasize interrupted UN efforts since 1947 establish Korean independence and unity, (c) give voice to views of overwhelming majority Koreans, and (d) not equate ROK with North Korean regime. Johnson emphasized substantial differences between Korean situation and Germany so that German unification plans not rigidly applicable as precedent for Korea.

US believed proposals in general spirit UN plans for Korean unification (GA Resolutions Nov 14, 1947; Dec 12, 1948;<sup>2</sup> Oct 7, 1950; Dec 1, 1950; and Aug 28, 1953) should be submitted at outset. Principal points those resolutions were:

(1) frequent UN attempts assist Koreans in reestablishing their freedom; (2) reestablishment national independence Korea and withdrawal foreign forces thereafter; (3) elections on basis of adult suffrage by secret ballot, numbers of representatives from voting districts proportionate to population, and elections to be observed by international commission with freedom observe and consult throughout Korea; (4) ROK is only lawful sovereign government in Korea so far as UN concerned; and (5) UN has in existence Commission to carry out terms of reference Korean unification established in Oct 7, 1950 GA resolution and agency to rehabilitate unified Korea.

Johnson noted two unification plans generally suggested: (1) carry forward plan within existing UN framework; or (2) start from scratch by holding elections throughout Korea for constituent Assembly to form new government. US favored position conforming to UN resolutions. This would mean elections under international observation in those parts of Korea where UN not previously able observe elections and within framework ROK constitution. Such a plan would not necessitate destroying present ROK constitutional structure and would avoid misunderstanding, turmoil and administrative disorganization within Korea. Johnson cautioned that in considering initial allied position at Geneva important that group not now bargain proposals down between selves to point no flexibility remaining for negotiation with Communists at Geneva. In plan such as US favored, he envisaged phased withdrawal troops from both sides under international supervision but withdrawal would not be completed until after elections held and unification implemented. Important no withdrawal begin until performance at least started by other side. In answer to questions he agreed possible bargaining range within above position lay in extending elections from only North Korea to all Korea, while still preserving ROK constitution. Also pointed out that of course new all-Korean Assembly could amend ROK Constitution.

Johnson said our estimate success achieving this proposal not very high, depending naturally upon whether Communists willing see non-Communist Korea. If they are, formula can be found; if not no formula can overcome this fact.

UK representative expressed view his government would largely agree with above proposal, putting great deal stress its flexible aspects. Several mentioned importance avoiding impression North Korea would be placed under South Korea.

In answer inquiry re probable ROK attitude Johnson said US assumed ROK would want (1) complete withdrawal CCF forces; (2) extension ROK administration North Korea; (3) elections NK to fill vacant seats ROK Assembly.

Group also discussed alternative methods sharing allied costs. Several emphasized importance separating Korean from Indochinese expenses. Johnson said US continued favor plan by which US, UK and France would share 50%, and other thirteen would divide remaining 50% equally. Several expressed preference for adoption UN scale, which Johnson said unacceptable to US since would mean US pay approximately 56%. No decision.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> On the same day, the Department of State suggested that the Embassy in Ankara inform the Turkish Foreign Ministry of the acceptability to the 16 nations of Adnan Kural as Secretary General of the Allied side at the Geneva Conference (telegram 1150 to Ankara; 396.1-GE/4-754). They were informed that under no condition would US sit at table with Communist Chinese and North Koreans unless seating arrangement provided for two sides, that is Communist countries on one side and allied countries on the other. Also that we could not agree to rotation of chairmanship among 19 countries whereby North Korea and Communist China would preside as chairman.

Acting Secretary further stated that in our opinion Geneva conference was direct outgrowth Korean war and Panmunjom negotiation and therefore US should have some freedom of choice in matter of organization of conference and that unless we can agree on seating arrangement acceptable to US probable we would not attend conference except as observers.

Since UK and France objected two sided seating arrangement and Communist agreement thereto not likely US willing to agree seating plan whereby three rows of tables or ranks of chairs with desks would be arranged in semi-circular fashion. Each row would allow seating 8 delegates with one adviser each. There would be sufficient room between first row and second row and between second row and third row for from 2 to 4 advisers sitting behind each delegate. Third row to provide room for only 3 delegates. US proposing plan on basis UK and France would join in proposing to Soviets Communists take one block of seats arranging selves in any order they desired and allies taking remaining block and also arranging order between selves so that ROK and US adjacent. If Communists refused agree such seating order US willing agree delegations sit according to English alphabet left to right facing rows of chairs or tables so arranged US delegate immediately behind ROK. Rostrum from which delegates would speak would face delegates and be immediately in front of chairman.

Daridan stated he was in favor of this arrangement and believed his government would be inclined to agree. Makins stated that he would report to Foreign Office with observation that although he understood US making seating arrangements matter of principle he did not believe that UK should do so. Acting Secretary requested that respective Foreign Offices instruct their representatives in Geneva directly if they could agree to this plan.

With respect to chairmanship Makins agreed that rotation among 19 countries would be "fantastic". Acting Secretary stated that Spender, Australian Ambassador had suggested that a permanent chairman be Hammarskjold.<sup>3</sup> US thought this good idea. Makins and Daridan agreed proposal has merit and should be given serious consideration.

"My dear Mr. President: I have your further letter of April 8<sup>2</sup> expressing renewed misgivings in regard to the Geneva Conference and requesting increased support of the Korean armed forces.

I fully appreciate your expression of misgivings in the situation with which we are confronted. I myself am under no illusions as to the difficulties of negotiating and reaching satisfactory settlements with the Communists. Still it is my deep conviction that we should go to Geneva prepared to exhaust every possibility of obtaining the peaceful unification of Korea. That is fully in keeping with the spirit and terms of the Armistice Agreement and our own previous understanding. Therefore, I want to add my own earnest appeal to that of Secretary of State Dulles, most recently expressed in his message of April 7,<sup>3</sup> that you join with us and our other allies at Geneva in a concerted and earnest attempt to attain the peaceful settlement of the Korean problem which we all ardently desire. As we had sought all along, Soviet Russia will be at Geneva on the one side flanked by her Chinese Communist and Korean Communist allies. Neither India nor any other neutral nation will attend the Korean Conference. If the Republic of Korea participates we shall be there sixteen strong on our side with determination to strive to the best of our abilities to obtain a satisfactory settlement. In addition, I believe that Korea's presence at Geneva would be immeasurably helpful in maintaining the unity of the free world at a time when we are attempting to forge a common front to cope with Communist activities.

Once having met at Geneva, should the Communist side stall or act in bad faith, we shall be prepared, pursuant to the understanding reached between you and Secretary Dulles, to consult about what further steps we can properly take to deal with the then existing situation. But you must understand that, for the reasons set forth in my letter of March 20,<sup>4</sup> I cannot comply with your requests for United States support in military action to unify Korea.

With respect to your desire to strengthen the armed forces of the Republic of Korea, I can assure you of my sympathetic understanding. In studying these requests we have had to consider the whole strategic position of the free world, the necessity placed upon us for supplying equipment to help the forces of the French and the Associated States in their struggle against Communist aggression, and the assistance previously furnished to the Republic of Korea. We have also considered the manpower and budgetary requirements for the program of economic rehabilitation upon which we are jointly engaged, as well as the requirements for the defense of your country.

After weighing the foregoing factors, we are considering the following program for the continuing improvement of ROK forces with additional United States assistance:

1. Continued development of the ROK Army to a field army, capable in itself of sustained combat operations.
2. Continued modernization of the ROK Navy and the addition to it of antisubmarine, amphibious and auxiliary-type vessels including two destroyer escorts.

3. Reorganization of the ROK Marine Corps from a brigade of scattered small units to a combat-capable division.

4. Modernization of the ROK Air Force by reequipping the existing fighter wing with jet-type aircraft, and by the establishment of an efficient tactical control organization. Training of ROK pilots for transition to jet aircraft will begin as soon as practicable.

To this end, I am asking General Van Fleet to go to Korea to consult with you and your military advisers, to study the situation thoroughly, and to develop recommendations in concert with General Hull both as to the future size and composition of the active armed forces of the Republic of Korea and the practicability of a joint United States-Republic of Korea program for Korean reserve forces.

I am confident that if the United States and the Republic of Korea work in close concert to carry out the strengthening of your defense forces and to push forward the program of economic rehabilitation, we can continue to build the position of strength in Korea which we both realize is essential to your interests, to ours, and to those of the free world as a whole.

With personal good wishes and warm regards."

When delivering foregoing message you should orally inform Rhee final action on any plans for aid to our allies rests in Congress and no such plans can be implemented until Congressional action is completed.

You should when delivering letter plainly intimate to Rhee carrying out of any plans such as those referred to in letter would of course be predicated upon continuing ROK cooperation with US, including ROK attendance at Geneva Conference.

Please confirm when letter delivered and report Rhee's reactions.

DRAFT PROPOSAL FOR REUNIFICATION OF KOREA

(Alternative B)

Preamble

The Korean people, who for 4,000 years have had a common civilization with a common language, culture, and traditions, desire to be reunited under a single government of their own choosing and to resume their traditional peaceful life. Virtually the entire world has long recognized that this is a proper and commendable aspiration, and the United Nations has repeatedly supported measures designed to realize this objective. The United Nations General Assembly adopted resolutions in 1947, 1948, 1949, 1950, 1951, 1952, and 1953 which supported a free, independent, and unified Korean Government representative of the wishes of the Korean people. The principles enunciated in these resolutions are just and equitable and constitute a broad framework upon which any political settlement for Korea should be based. The fundamental principles are as follows:

1. The Korean question "is primarily a matter for the Korean people itself" and it "cannot be fairly resolved without the participation of representatives of the indigenous population." (UNGA Res. Nov. 14, 1947).

2. The selection of representatives of the Korean people should be on the basis of adult suffrage and by secret ballot; the number of representatives from each voting area or zone should be proportionate to the population; and elections should be under the supervision of a United Nations commission of representatives of various non-Korean nations. (UNGA Res. Nov. 14, 1947).

4. The Government of the Republic of Korea was duly established in conformity with the above principles and is the only such lawful Government in Korea. (UNGA Res. Dec. 12, 1948). Subsequent elections have been held in the Republic of Korea in accordance with its constitution and observed and endorsed by United Nations commissions as reflecting the will of the electorate.

We therefore advance the following proposal for the reunification of Korea in accordance with the above principles enunciated by the United Nations and within the framework of the constitutional structure of the State of the Republic of Korea.

Method of Reunification of Korea

1. Responsibilities of UNCURK as the Supervisory Commission.
2. Establishment of conditions for free elections.
3. Free elections for a President and for representatives to National Assembly of Republic of Korea.
4. Action by expanded National Assembly to establish national administration for all Korea.
5. Phased withdrawal of Foreign Forces.
6. Residual functions of UNCURK after reunification.
7. Supersession of Armistice Agreement.
8. Rehabilitation of all Korea.

1. Responsibilities of UNCURK as the Supervisory Commission.

The present United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea (UNCURK), established by the resolution of the United Nations General Assembly of October 7, 1950 is empowered to (a) lend its good offices to bring about the unification of Korea and the integration of all Korean security forces in accordance with the principles laid down by the General Assembly in the resolution of 14 November 1947; (b) seek to facilitate the removal of barriers to economic, social, and other friendly intercourses caused by the division of Korea; (c) be available for observation and consultation in the further development of representative government based on the freely expressed will of the people; and (d) observe the actual withdrawal of the occupation forces and verify the fact of withdrawal when such has occurred.

These terms of reference for UNCURK shall be specifically revised and expanded with the consent of the United Nations General Assembly to give UNCURK responsibility for observing and verifying the withdrawal of foreign forces from Korea as set forth herein and for supervising the plan for the reunification of Korea as set forth herein.

The specific terms of reference of UNCURK shall include the following:

(a) Observation and certification of withdrawal of United Nations forces and forces and nationals of the Central People's Government of the Republic of China.

(b) Investigation throughout areas of Korea not already duly represented in the National Assembly of the Republic of Korea of conditions affecting the holding of free elections, freedom of movement, freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention, freedom of association and assembly, freedom of speech, press, and broadcasting, and freedom of political parties to organize and carry out their activities.

(c) Preparation of electoral laws for these areas in consultation with the Republic of Korea and the civil authorities of those areas concerned.

(d) Determination, in consultation with the Republic of Korea and the civil authorities of the areas concerned, of the number of delegates to be elected and the number of election districts, which shall be in direct proportion to the population distribution in Korea.

(e) Supervision over the implementation of the electoral laws and registration of qualified voters, and observation of the elections at all administrative levels.

(f) Certification of results of elections.

(g) Observation of steps leading to the establishment of a reunified government. During the period between the end of the elections and the effective assumption of control over all of Korea by the reunified Korean Government, UNCURK will remain in operation in order to prevent action after the elections which would impair the conditions of genuine freedom under which they will have been held. The details of those terms of reference shall be worked out by the signatories within this framework and shall come into effect simultaneously with this agreement. UNCURK shall have the power to adopt measures not specifically described and which are necessary to carry out their task herein, provided that they do not otherwise conflict with this proposal.

The UNCURK shall have its primary headquarters in the vicinity of Panmunjom in the demilitarized zone. The UNCURK shall report and make recommendations at its discretion to the parties to this agreement. The parties to this agreement shall facilitate the work of UNCURK and comply with recommendations made by UNCURK within its revised terms of reference as set forth above.

2. Establishment of Conditions for Free Elections.

Preparatory to the holding of free elections in areas of Korea not already duly represented in the National Assembly, UNCURK shall, pursuant to its terms of reference, observe political conditions throughout the areas concerned and shall, where it deems appropriate, propose to the parties concerned the measures necessary to insure that elections are held in a free atmosphere wherein the democratic right of freedom of speech, press and assembly would be recognized and respected. In particular these measures shall include the following :

- Freedom of movement within north and south Korea but not between the two areas across the demilitarized zone.
- Freedom of presentation of candidates.
- Immunity of candidates from arrest or coercion.
- Freedom of expression.
- Secrecy of the vote.
- Security of polling stations and ballot boxes.

3. Free Elections for President and for Representatives to National Assembly of Republic of Korea.

The UNCURK shall advise the authorities in the ROK and in North Korea regarding the establishment of conditions for free elections and assure conformity of electoral laws and procedures to the requirements of the above paragraph 2. In particular, election procedures approved by UNCURK shall ensure that candidates for President and a National Assembly of Korea, who reflect varying viewpoints, will be permitted to campaign freely; that the electorate will be able to express its choice of candidates freely and without duress or intimidation; and that the election procedures shall be uniform among all the areas concerned.

Not later than 12 months after concluding this agreement, elections for representatives to the National Assembly shall be held on the basis of adult suffrage and by secret ballot in Korea. The number of representatives to be elected to the National Assembly shall be determined according to the size of the population of each election district. It is estimated that not more than six million persons reside in areas not already duly represented in the ROK National Assembly. In the event the UNCURK shall fail to certify the election of a representative he shall not be seated in the National Assembly, and new local by-elections shall be held as soon as possible under UNCURK supervision. The vote of a majority of the members of UNCURK shall be required to rule that the election of any candidate is not valid.

4. Action by National Assembly of Korea to Establish Constitution and Basic Laws for all of Korea.

Within thirty days after UNCURK has certified the free election of two-thirds of the number of representatives designated to be elected under its supervision, the National Assembly of Korea shall seat the newly elected representatives. After these newly elected representatives have been seated the National Assembly shall take prompt and appropriate action to accept or amend the Constitution of the Republic of Korea enacted on July 12, 1948. The President shall recommend to the National Assembly, for its consideration and action by two-thirds majority of those present and voting, uniform basic laws for all Korea. When these actions have been taken and effectively implemented, a National Government of Korea shall be considered to have been established.

5. Phased Withdrawal of Foreign Forces.

The withdrawal of Chinese Communist forces and United Nations forces from Korea shall begin before elections in Korea, shall proceed in accordance with a prearranged schedule and shall be completed within 12 months after the date of the formation of the National Government of Korea as certified by the UNCURK. The detailed schedules for mutually phased withdrawals of both Chinese Communist and United Nations forces from Korea are contained in Annex A to this agreement.<sup>4</sup> The UNCURK shall observe the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Korea and report to the Secretary General of the United Nations in accordance with Paragraph 2(c) of the Resolution of the General Assembly of the United Nations of October 7, 1950.

It is agreed that the United States in its capacity as the Unified Command and the Chinese People's Republic shall instruct their respective military Commanders in Korea:

a) to certify to the UNCURK within 7 days after the formation of the National Government of Korea the strength of their respective forces as of that date;

b) to accomplish a phased withdrawal of their forces from Korea through the ports of entry prescribed in the Armistice Agreement and in accordance with Annex A to this agreement;

c) to report to the UNCURK, within 7 days after the end of each phase of the agreed schedule in Annex A, that their forces have been reduced to the agreed level;

d) to certify to the UNCURK upon completion of the withdrawal of their respective forces from Korea that none of their forces remain in Korea.

6. Residual Functions of UNCURK.

Following the establishment of a reunified Korean Government with effective control over all of Korea as outlined above, and the verified withdrawal of all foreign forces from Korea in accordance with paragraph 2(c) of the General Assembly Resolution of Oct. 7, 1950, UNCURK shall certify the fact in a report to the Secretary General of the United Nations. Thereafter, UNCURK shall confine its activities to such responsibilities in connection with observation of the independence and security of Korea as may be determined by the General Assembly of the United Nations. Its headquarters shall be moved to Seoul.

7. Supersession of Armistice Agreement.

Certification by UNCURK that a reunified Korean Government with effective control over all of Korea has been duly established and that all foreign forces have been withdrawn from Korea in accordance with agreement thereon shall constitute for purposes of supersession of the Armistice Agreement, under Article 62 of that Agreement, "appropriate agreement for a peaceful settlement at a political level between both sides."

8. Rehabilitation of all Korea.

Upon such certification the United Nations Reconstruction Agency for Korea, established by the Resolution of the General Assembly of Dec. 1, 1950 shall develop and carry out a program of relief and rehabilitation of all Korea. Such a program shall be worked out in close consultation with the National Government of Korea.

SEOUL, April 18, 1954—5 p. m.

1022. Repeated information Tokyo 613, Saigon 30, Taipei 97, Paris 9. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. My immediately preceding message.<sup>1</sup> Delivered President's letter at 9 this morning to President Rhee in presence Foreign Minister Pyun and Mrs. Rhee, Pyun and I having traveled from Seoul last night. After reading letter I conveyed orally two points concerning dependence on Congress for funds, and dependence of program on continued collaboration by ROK. Pyun took notes.

Rhee expressed warm satisfaction with contents President's letter insofar as it relates expansion US military aid and forthcoming assignment General Van Fleet. "Please tell President", said Rhee, "that by that alone he has assured us happy Easter in Korea". After further tribute to Van Fleet, Rhee said hoped General could come here soonest and he would like make announcement here simultaneously with Washington. Rhee asked date of announcement be soonest because of favorable effect that would have and also because of speculation and danger of leaks. (I agree sooner announcement made the better.)

President went on to say his satisfaction Van Fleet assignment should not be interpreted as implying lack of confidence in General Hull, referred to by President Eisenhower in connection Van Fleet visit, for whom Rhee said he has highest regard.

<sup>1</sup> In telegram 1021, Apr. 18, Ambassador Briggs reported that he had delivered President Eisenhower's letter to President Rhee in the morning and that the Republic of Korea would announce its intention to attend the Geneva Conference at 9 a. m. on Apr. 19 (396.1-GE/4-1854).

Rhee referred in that connection to his last conversation with Hull on February [April] 14 which he said had been helpful to him in formulating ROK position (see Embtel 1015, April 16).<sup>2</sup>

Turning to Geneva, Rhee said Pyun would head delegation and would leave within 48 hours. Rhee still doubts whether any good will come of conference, but he noted President Eisenhower himself had stated in letter he under no illusions about dealings with Communists. Rhee declared Pyun would do his best collaborate with Secretary Dulles and that Rhee appreciates consideration American Government has shown in connection with problems Rhee faces in seeking improve prospects Korea's future.<sup>3</sup>

With regard announcement ROK Geneva participation it was decided this would be made Seoul 9 tomorrow morning, April 19, and Rhee thereupon showed me draft statement prepared day before, of course without reference to President's letter. Draft was pessimistic, contentious and generally unhelpful, and after reading it I told Rhee effect could hardly fail be unfortunate insofar as Korea's relations with Allies concerned, and by emphasizing differences among us would certainly give comfort to Communist enemy. I urged ROK statement avoid re-hash past argumentative declarations about Russia as sponsor, conference not two-sided, etc.

<sup>2</sup> Not printed. In it, Ambassador Briggs said that he had talked with Hull prior to the latter's meeting with Rhee at which time Hull and Briggs agreed that Hull should mention the Geneva Conference to Rhee if a suitable opportunity arose. In view, however, of recent statements by Korean officials as well as Rhee's comments to Hull, Briggs did not feel that the Republic of Korea would decide on the question of attendance at Geneva until a reply was received to Rhee's letter of Apr. 8 to President Eisenhower. (795.00/4-1654)

In an unnumbered telegram of Apr. 14, General Hull reported to the Joint Chiefs of Staff on his meeting with Rhee. Hull said that he had offered Rhee his personal opinion that it would be a serious mistake for the Republic of Korea to refuse to participate in the Geneva negotiations. Hull's conclusion, after the talk, was that Rhee would agree to participate without further argument if he could find any face saving device in the form of some sort of reassurance from the United States on the matter of further aid to Korea. (Department of Defense files)

"Reference Deptel 829, repeated Tokyo 2292 and Embtel 1022, repeated Tokyo 613.

"With reference to observations made orally in accordance instructions to President Rhee and Foreign Minister Pyun yesterday in connection delivery President's letter, I considered it desirable confirm in writing statement on dependence of program of assistance on Congressional implementation. I accordingly sent Pyun following confidential letter dated April 18:

"My dear Mr. Minister: It occurs to me that it may be convenient for you to have written confirmation of an observation which, under instructions from my government, I made to President and you in presenting President Eisenhower's letter to President Rhee this morning.

"In that connection I reminded you that final action on plans for assistance to our allies, and specifically projects described in President Eisenhower's letter, rests in US Congress, so that such plans can only be implemented when Congressional action is completed.

"I am et cetera. . . ." (396.1-GE/4-1954)

After considerable discussion Rhee agreed and it was left that Pyun and Rhee's American advisor Glenn (chief editorial writer for Korean Republic who drafted original text at Rhee's direction) would return with me to Seoul and prepare revised ROK statement. During trip back, Glenn, Pyun and I accordingly rewrote statement to approximately 50% original length and also toned down contents. Final text, assuming Pyun introduces no more problems, follows separate telegram.

Only other subject raised by Rhee in connection with conference was situation in Indochina regarding which Rhee expressed profound concern, stating that way things now going he discouraged over prospects any settlement short of Communist victory unless French agree to complete independence at very early date to three Associated States. "French," said Rhee, "must go. Unless French leave, I shall be tempted suggest amalgamation of all anti-Communist elements in Indochina in move to get rid of French because so long as French there, problem of colonialism exists, and with colonialism, indigenous effort against Communism will be half-hearted and feeble." He declared population Indochina will not fight to help French or keep French in Indochina. (My interpretation these observations is that Pyun at Geneva is likely plunge into Indochinese question at drop of hat.) Although neither Rhee nor Pyun referred except as above to ROK attitude toward Southeast Asia problems, question of "exclusion" of Korea from possible collective declaration or action will undoubtedly remain sensitive subject. In this connection statements made yesterday to Ambassador Yang (Deptel 835)<sup>4</sup> will be helpful in future talks with ROK officials.

In it, the Department of State reported on a conversation between Ambassador Yang and Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Far East Affairs Everett Drumright; for the memorandum, see volume XII. In reply to Yang's expressions of concern over Korea's exclusion from collective defense arrangements in Southeast Asia, Drumright pointed out that these were only in a preliminary stage and that Indochina was now a most critical area; he also suggested that Korea indicate more interest in collective action by expressing its intention to attend the Geneva Conference. Geneva conference participation, for release 9 a. m., Korean time Monday morning April 19. Foreign Minister Pyun asks Department please pass Ambassador Yang.

"This Government finally has decided to accept the invitation of United States to attend Geneva conference. Some may wish to know why we have delayed acceptance so long. Our reasons are these: (1) We have been highly dubious about achieving any results at Geneva conference; (2) we have been apprehensive lest conference provide Communists with still more time to make preparations for war; and (3) there is risk that conference will be made known all over world as great success, thus making our situation infinitely more difficult of solution.

"While we were waiting during last several weeks, we made every effort obtain definite and positive assurances from United States. We are happy to say that assurances received now are very clear and encouraging, and that they will enable us to go to Geneva with confidence and considerable hope.

"Decision to attend has been made, however, because of desire to show our spirit of cooperation with our great friend and ally, United States. We hope sincerely that should the conference fail, America will have come to realize—finally and conclusively—that further negotiation with Communists would be both futile and perilous.

"For Korea, this conference must represent final time-consuming attempt to attain unification by peaceful means. We obviously cannot continue to sit idly by while Communists exterminate or exile our people of North and make Red Chinese province out of half our country. We hope, therefore, that if and when Geneva conference has failed, United States and our other friends in free world will join with us in employing other means to drive the enemy from our land.

"We shall do our level best to cooperate with United States in seeking peaceful unification. But it is only fair to declare that we can accept no compromise. It must be unification under full democratic auspices, and it must include complete withdrawal from our soil of all Chinese Communist forces.

"The Republic of Korea will be present at Geneva as wholly sovereign nation, and as such it must reserve, at all times, right and duty of following and protecting its own interests. We trust that United States and other countries on our side will do no less, and that Communists thereby will be prevented from making gains and from dividing us among ourselves.

"If reasonable period of time has passed without conference results, we know United States will consult with us, as it has promised to do, on abandonment of discussion as way to peace with Communism and Communists. Once our friends have come to realize great improbability of expecting negotiated settlement, there may be hope for achievement of peace in Korea and elsewhere in world.

"It is in this spirit, and in expression of our friendship for United States, that we shall attend Geneva conference."

839. Following for Rhee from Dulles:

"April 19, 1954. My dear Mr. President: I am gratified to have received from Ambassador Briggs the news that the Republic of Korea has decided to participate in the Conference at Geneva.<sup>2</sup> As the President and I have so often stated to you, we want to stand shoulder to shoulder with you and your Government at this Conference. Some decisions with regard to arrangements for the conference have had to be taken prior to your decision to participate. I am satisfied that you will find that these decisions fully protect the interests of your Government and are in accord with our common view of the Conference. However, many important items remain to be decided and will require decisions during the course of the Conference. I look forward to working closely with your Foreign Minister at Geneva. However, in order that you may yourself have the direct benefit of our latest thinking here, I will make arrangements for our common friend Arthur Dean to proceed immediately to Korea as my personal emissary to you. He can directly explain to you the lines of my thinking and in turn pass on to me your thoughts with respect to the Conference and the problems we will face together there. Sincerely yours, John Foster Dulles."

SEOUL, April 19, 1954—5 p. m.

1034. Re Deptel 817.<sup>1</sup> During conversation with Foreign Minister Pyun this morning he requested information regarding probable US position on substantive questions at Geneva. I informed him I understood it to be view of US Government that most logical means of effecting unification of Korea would be to proceed with implementation of existing GA resolutions on Korea by holding UN-supervised elections in those parts of Korea in which UN not previously able observe elections. I added that I believed our thinking on troop withdrawal was that there should be phased simultaneous withdrawal begun before elections and completed within specified time thereafter. I explained however that so far as Embassy aware US had not reached agreed position with its other allies and that until it had done so it would be impossible to know exactly what US position at conference would be.

Insofar as elections concerned, Pyun said US position appeared be entirely compatible with that of ROK. Re troop withdrawal, however, he said position his government was that Chinese Communists, since they were acknowledged aggressors and also since they entered Korean conflict after UN forces, must be withdrawn from North Korea not only prior to elections but also prior to withdrawal UN forces from South. I told Pyun I believed it unrealistic to believe there existed any chance obtaining acceptance such withdrawal plan by either side, and that, whatever timing might be, I believed withdrawal would have to be simultaneous.

From viewpoint ROK cooperation at Geneva, believe it desirable initial US position on unification procedures be along lines alternative A, Document GK D-4/B April 5.<sup>2</sup> Should Communists reject this proposal as anticipated, US could move by gradual stages toward proposal for supervised elections throughout all Korea. ROK likely object vociferously at each modification but might reluctantly accept them as

The tenor of the comments here would appear to indicate that the reference should be to Document GK D-4/7, Apr. 9, p. 82, known as Alternative A, which called for elections in North Korea and incorporation of that area into the Republic of Korea.

For Alternative B, see Document GK D-4/10, Apr. 16, p. 105.

only possibility early unification, if convinced US has no intention backing unification by force. From past experience in negotiations with ROK appears we must resign ourselves to bitter bargaining, probably punctuated by irresponsible public outbursts whenever these seem to ROK advantage.

President Rhee's willingness entrust his political fate to de novo elections throughout Korea may to some extent be influenced by outcome May 20 elections,<sup>3</sup> particularly if latter produce clear-cut electoral decision either for or against his supporters.

The Secretary said that he very much appreciated this opportunity to meet to discuss the problems of the Geneva Conference in relation both to Korea and Indochina. He explained that he was planning to leave later in the day for Paris for a meeting of the NATO Ministerial Council and planned to go to Geneva April 24.

Mr. Dulles began by pointing out a number of practical problems which would have to be resolved at the outset of the Conference. These involved such matters as seating arrangements, chairmanship, languages and a mass of similar procedural problems that had not yet been settled and which he supposed would not in fact be settled until the very eve of the conference.<sup>1</sup>

The Secretary recalled that at the Berlin Conference many such problems remained unsettled until just before the session actually convened when he had spent a few minutes alone talking with Mr. Molotov and agreement was reached. He pointed out that of course it was not as difficult to reach an agreement at Berlin because only four countries were involved, and although Berlin was technically not a CFM meeting, certain CFM practices could be followed. The Geneva Conference would be much more complicated.

Mr. Dulles went on to say that the Soviet Union had manifested a certain tendency in the preliminaries to try to shape Geneva up as a five-power conference and to insist upon physical and other arrangements reflecting this position, thereby placing the other participants in a subordinate capacity; these efforts would have to be countered. He recalled that this had been one of the main disputed issues at Berlin. Just such a Soviet proposal had been stoutly opposed, and the USSR finally accepted the Western objections with the result that the

<sup>1</sup> Agreement had already been reached on some procedural questions. On the previous day, the Department of State informed the Embassy in Seoul of certain of the arrangements that had been made: (1) documentation on the Allied side was to be translated only into English and French; (2) documentation prepared on the Communist side would be translated by the Allied secretariat into English and French—translations into Korean would be the responsibility of the Korean Delegation; (3) costs of services provided by the U.N. for the conference as a whole, such as heat and light, would be shared equally by all 19 participants; (4) costs of services provided by the Allied secretariat for the 16 nations would be shared on a formula not yet determined. (Telegram 843, Apr. 19, to Seoul; 795.00/4-1954)

On the last mentioned point, the Allied side subsequently agreed on a cost-sharing formula for the Allied secretariat based on a proposal by Hughes Le Gallais, Luxembourg's Minister in Washington, which called for the United States to pay one-third of the costs with the remaining countries paying according to the U.N. formula. The United States had objected to use of the U.N. formula without some adjustment since this would have meant the United States would have had to pay 56 percent of Allied costs. The agreed formula apportioned the Allied costs according to the following percentages: ROK .26; Australia 4.51; Belgium 3.56; Canada 8.5; Colombia 1.06; Ethiopia .26; France 14.82; Greece .54; Luxembourg .15; Netherlands 3.22; New Zealand 1.24; Philippines 1.16; Thailand .46; Turkey 1.68; U.K. 25.25; U.S. 33.33. communiqué containing the invitation to the Geneva Conference was devoid of any suggestion of a five-power conference. That communiqué, the Secretary pointed out, made clear that every state invited would participate on the same level. If the USSR intended to reopen this question on the threshold of the conference, it could cause serious difficulties. Moreover, if the Berlin Agreement were to be thrown over, the general question arose as to whether it was worthwhile to reach agreements at all with the Communists. Mr. Dulles emphasized that this might become a question of considerable importance.

Subject to this qualification, however, he thought that the practical details would probably be worked out. For example, he understood that there was general acceptance of the idea that the seating arrangements would be of the auditorium variety rather than around a table which would create difficult questions as to where different participants would sit. Another difficult problem was the chairmanship. Possibly a chairman might be drawn from some neutral nation, perhaps Switzerland itself. It had also been suggested that Mr. Hammarskjöld might serve in his personal capacity as distinguished from his role as UN Secretary-General.

The Secretary said that it would be necessary to make contact between allied governmental representatives at Geneva quite early and also to arrange a meeting at a fairly high level with the Communists to settle these practical matters. It was our experience that they were never settled at a low level where the Soviet representatives were inclined to dig in on extreme technical positions.

Mr. Dulles believed that the Communists wanted the conference to proceed and did not want another Palais Rose situation at Geneva.<sup>2</sup> He commented that if they intended to have that kind of conference, it would have to be without him.

The Secretary requested suggestions or comments on the technical and procedural matters involved in the Korean phase of the conference.

Referring to the five-power conference issue, Ambassador Politis (Greece) said that he had thought that once the other participants were invited this question was over once and for all. He asked whether the US had any information that the USSR might raise this issue again. Mr. Dulles replied that the Soviet technical representative at Geneva had stated that his instructions were to work out arrangements for setting up a five-power conference.

Turning to substantive aspects of the Korean phase of the Conference, the Secretary said that he was pleased that the ROK would be represented at Geneva, observing that it would not be possible to have an effective conference without ROK representation. He expressed the hope that the ROK would take an active and leading part in the presentation of its case since after all it was the country primarily concerned in this matter, representing as it did the only lawful government recognized by the UN and having 75-80 percent of all the Korean people.

The Secretary stated there was one matter of substance which he knew had been considered in previous meetings and which he had discussed in London with Mr. Eden. It went very much to the fundamentals. It was the question whether this conference should be regarded as one which we would try to make succeed in achieving the unity and independence of Korea, or whether as a conference in which we more or less concede in advance that our objective is impossible of achievement and, therefore, look upon it as a conference for propaganda utterances by the two sides.

Mr. Dulles said that the US was disposed to the view that our side should make a really earnest effort to bring about the unity and independence of Korea at this conference. Of course he recognized that the chance of success was not great, and if he were making up a book, he would have to give considerable odds against a successful conference. The ROK, he noted, felt even more strongly on this point. On the other hand, the United States did not feel that the situation should be looked upon as utterly hopeless. We should at least begin the conference with the genuine desire to make it succeed.

In this connection, the Secretary noted a certain gain at Berlin in getting the Soviet Union to agree to include in the resolution constituting the invitation to the conference, the statement that the independence and unity of Korea would be a step that would increase the likelihood of peace and the relaxation of tension generally. In this way the principle of the unity and independence of Korea had already been established in the resolution which was the Charter of the Geneva Conference; in his opinion that represented a substantial advance. Mr. Dulles did not mean that the USSR would necessarily try to bring this about, but it was a step in the right direction; the conference could start out with a concept of recognition on the part of those who extended and accepted the invitation that the unity and independence of Korea is important in the relaxation of tensions and the cessation of fighting elsewhere in Asia. Mr. Dulles noted also the implicit, if not explicit relationship between the unification and independence of Korea to the end of the fighting in Indochina.

The practical significance of approaching the conference on the basis of trying to bring about unification, the Secretary indicated, was that we should not put forward our final position first. He explained that trading with the Communists was a painful type of proposition, and that it was necessary to have some possibility for compromise or exchange if we expected to get results.

Mr. Dulles went on to say that the general position which the United States had in mind at the beginning of the conference would reflect the fact that the United Nations had already established a program for the unification and independence of Korea that would do precisely what the Berlin communiqué said should be accomplished. In 1950, the General Assembly had set up a commission to take the necessary steps to achieve unification. Because of the Chinese Communist intervention it had not been practical for the UN Commission to proceed with its task. It therefore seemed logical to suggest, now that the fighting was over and when it was incumbent upon Communist China to purge itself of wrongdoing, that the interrupted UN program should be carried forward.

That program, Mr. Dulles continued, was sound and entirely moral, and it also included certain elements about which we could bargain later if it seemed necessary or desirable to do so. It would mean holding elections in the area not yet covered by UN elections, and in that way completing the task that the United Nations began in 1948.

He appreciated that there were a number of governments, perhaps including his own, who recognized that probably a finally acceptable solution would not be achieved. However, if we were to start out by having traded down our position among ourselves to what might be our final best position, we would have nothing to trade with the Communists later. Our experience with them, Mr. Dulles said, pointed to the desirability of proceeding on a trading basis rather than putting forward a final, ideal position to which we would have to stick. If the conference were solely a propaganda exercise, of course we should begin with a generous, liberal position which the world would regard as fair. If, however, we started on that basis with a non-trading position, we must also assume that the conference could not succeed in achieving Korean unification. It might still succeed as a good propaganda demonstration, but we had to choose between the two theories. Faced with this choice, the United States considered that we should go into the conference with a position that is on the one hand entirely moral, but on the other hand, on which it might be possible to make some concessions.

Mr. Dulles went on to say that he had discussed this general position in London with Mr. Eden who had indicated that the position seemed sound to him. He repeated that we should begin the conference with a vague and general approach and not burn our bridges behind us until we find out what moves and proposals the other side has in mind.

The Secretary cautioned that what he had said was subject to further discussions with the ROK Delegation at Geneva; there was of course no possibility of accomplishing the desired result except in terms acceptable to the ROK. The conference could not impose a settlement on the ROK which is rejected. As the subject of the conference, the views of the ROK were entitled to carry a great measure of weight.

CONFIDENTIAL      PRIORITY

PARIS, April 20, 1954—6 p. m.

3960. Repeated information priority Geneva 83, London 944. Re-Deptel 3689, April 15.<sup>1</sup> Chauvel and Lacoste, who have just returned from Geneva, sent for Achilles this morning to discuss seating arrangements. Achilles said these discussions going on in Washington and could not be duplicated here, to which they agreed but wished in any event to explain situation with help of plan of Council Chamber they had brought back. Briefly their view was that "auditorium type" arrangement would be difficult and expensive to install, would presumably result in there being only one microphone at rostrum instead of one at each place which would change character of meeting from that of conference to that of an assembly. To avoid this they favored closing fourth side of existing three-sided table.

Achilles reminded them of strength of US position as stated reference telegram that US might attend conference only as observer rather than accept seating arrangement which did not make clear distinction between Communists and other participants. They had not realized we felt so strongly (it was not clear whether French Embassy Washington had softened its report or whether Chauvel and Lacoste had merely not seen it) and indicated considerable concern. They mentioned possibility of assigning one side of square table to Communist bloc and seating remainder around other three sides.

Achilles reiterated strength of our feeling on subject and that it must be negotiated in Washington rather than here but said he would forward their views.

*The Secretary of State to the Embassy in France*CONFIDENTIAL
PRIORITY

WASHINGTON, April 20, 1954—6:35 p. m.

3767. For the Ambassador. Please deliver following personal message to Bidault from the Secretary :

“My dear friend: I am very disturbed to learn that you do not find it possible to agree with the proposals that have been made for the physical arrangement of our meeting place in Geneva. As you know, this has been under discussion by our representatives in Geneva and was also discussed with UK and French representatives in Washington by the Acting Secretary on April 15. The UK has agreed to our proposal in this regard, and I had not until today understood that France perceived any objection thereto.

You are of course aware of discussions that have thus far taken place at Geneva between our representatives and the Soviet representative and the determined attempt by the Soviet representative to transform the Geneva Conference into a “Big Five” conference in flagrant disregard of the understanding we reached at Berlin. I am sure that you agree we cannot permit this. In an effort to meet the problem we have suggested a seating arrangement of three rows with eight delegates and advisers in the first two rows and three delegations in the third row seated according to English alphabet left to right, with speakers rostrum facing delegates. There are numerous precedents for such arrangements in conferences of this kind.

I earnestly hope that you will reconsider your decision in the light of the foregoing so that our representatives in Geneva can be appropriately instructed.

If the Conference is to meet April 26, the physical arrangements must be decided and the work undertaken immediately. Since the Soviet representatives at Geneva have shown no disposition to discuss seriously the necessary arrangements with a view to reaching an agreement, I think it is essential that our side agree on instructions to the UN which will permit the Conference to begin on April 26. If this done the Soviets will have to bear the responsibility for any delay in the opening of the Conference arising from a failure on their part to accept reasonable physical arrangements.

I look forward to seeing you Thursday,<sup>1</sup> but I believe this matter to be so urgent it should not await my arrival. Sincerely, John Foster Dulles.”<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> No direct reply from Bidault has been found, nor is it likely that one was sent since Dulles' message probably arrived in Paris early on Apr. 21. By the time of the meeting on Apr. 22, the French Government had agreed to the idea of auditorium seating, but without a speaker's rostrum (see the minutes of the Apr. 22 meeting, p. 127). Documentation in file 396.1-GE indicates that French acquiescence in the US-UK seating plan was transmitted from the Foreign Ministry to Geneva by telephone, so that arrangements could be begun to have the Conference room ready by Apr. 26.

tion with question of composition of participants of forthcoming conference in Geneva, is in full accordance with communiqué of Berlin conference of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of USA, England, France and USSR.

Assertion in above-mentioned note of Government USA alleging that at Berlin conference agreement was reached concerning special responsibilities of four powers in connection with calling of conference in Geneva does not have any basis since, as is known, at Berlin conference there was no other agreement on question of calling conference in Geneva except that announced in joint communiqué on Berlin conference. Above-mentioned communiqué does not envisage any limitation or concession of any special rights to individual participants in conference. Only distinction between participants conference, according this communiqué, is that representatives of USA, England, France, Chinese People's Republic and Soviet Union will participate on equal basis during consideration at conference of both Korean and Indochinese questions, whereas other states will participate on basis of equality in discussion only of that question in which they are directly interested.

Therefore, statement in note of Government US about special responsibility of four powers in relation to conference in Geneva is arbitrary interpretation of communiqué of Berlin conference and is in contradiction with spirit and letter this communiqué.

In connection with communiqué of Berlin conference, representatives of five powers mentioned above should participate on equal basis in examining all questions pertaining to conference."

PARIS, April 22, 1954—4 p. m.

Reply to Latest Soviet Note on Geneva

M. Bidault opened the meeting by stating that there was no fixed agenda and as the host he would make the first statement. Referring initially to the tripartite reply to the Soviet Note regarding the inviting powers for the Indochina phase of the Geneva Conference, M. Bidault read a U.S.-French draft of a reply (See Tab A).<sup>2</sup> He stressed the need to reply clearly to the false Soviet allegations regarding composition of the Geneva Conference. He stressed that it had always been understood that special responsibility devolved on the four Berlin powers, and that in any event we should not open the Geneva Conference by violating the basis of the understanding on which the meeting was set up.

Mr. Eden suggested that the last sentence of the draft be put in the positive rather than the negative sense and that it should stress the fact that the Geneva Conference must be held on the basis under which it was established at Berlin. M. Bidault and the Secretary agreed with this thought.

Seating Arrangements

Mr. Eden said that unfortunately there were certain procedural arrangements which must be settled today, especially the question of seating, since it was his understanding that otherwise the wiring of the hall at Geneva would not be ready on April 26th. He said he was willing to accept any arrangements that his colleagues wanted, but felt that a decision must be reached.

The Secretary said that it was his understanding, from talking with Geneva by telephone and from a telegram we had received,<sup>3</sup> that substantial agreement had been reached with the Soviets accepting the U.S.-U.K. proposal. He noted that the Soviets had proposed certain changes, including daily rotation of seats. The Secretary said we were opposed to this and favored a fixed seating plan, but would not break up the Conference on this point and would accept the Soviet position if they insisted. The Secretary said that the Soviets wished four seats in the front row and four seats behind for each delegation—an arrangement which required too many seats since the hall only seated a total of eighty-four and there were nineteen delegations.

In conclusion the Secretary said he believed that there was general agreement on seating arrangements, and he believed the outstanding problems were easily soluble. He said we understand M. Bidault's desire to have a microphone before the Chairman of each delegation in order to avoid having every speaker proceed to a rostrum. He said that while the installations might not be everything that we wanted when the Conference opened, they would be ready in a few days. Mr. Eden said that he was gratified to see that we were all in agreement and said that our representatives at Geneva should be informed accordingly.

Chairmanship

Mr. Eden said that he thought we should take a preliminary look at the chairmanship problem, especially if we want help from the outside. He said he favored rotation among the Big Four but realized this was impractical because the Soviets would propose rotation among the Five, including Communist China which was unacceptable. Therefore, he said we must see if there was some other rotation scheme, or if there was one man who could be selected as chairman. With regard to the suggestion that the Secretary-General of the UN be chairman, Mr. Eden stated that he considered this undesirable since the UN had taken a position opposing the aggressor in Korea, and accordingly could hardly be considered an impartial judge in hearing the Korean case.

The Secretary said that we had one other suggestion. He said he agreed with Mr. Eden's analysis of the problem, including the undesirability of having the UN Secretary-General as permanent chairman, but thought we might find a Swiss personality who could serve as chairman. The Secretary stressed that he would not be representing his Government. M. Bidault agreed that we should explore this possibility. The Secretary listed the names of four people who had been suggested by our Ambassador in Switzerland. M. Bidault agreed that three of the four would be worth examining but that Mr. Stucki, who was one of the candidates, would not be desirable from the French viewpoint because of a book which he had written regarding the Vichy regime. The Secretary and Mr. Eden agreed that Rappart, who was one of the suggested candidates, was probably too old, and too professional a personality. It was agreed that we would examine carefully the other two candidates, Burckhart and de Salis, both of whom it was thought would be excellent candidates, though it was far from certain whether either would accept.

Other Topics

M. Bidault said that he feared we would have to meet again on Indochina before Geneva since we were faced with many procedural difficulties and still had not settled the participation question.

Mr. Eden said that Mr. Pearson and Mr. Casey had raised with him in London the problem of how to maintain contact with the delegations of the other anti-Communist countries at Geneva. He said he was willing to repeat the formula which had been worked out at Berlin where all of the free-world delegations met together to exchange views at the expert's level every morning. He said he also thought one meeting of all the Foreign Ministers on our side should be held before the Geneva meeting opened, Sunday afternoon or Monday morning.<sup>4</sup>

M. Bidault stated that France had made certain concessions on arrangements regarding seating, while the U.S. had made a concession regarding the elimination of a rostrum. He said we would, of course, begin with the conference on Korea which we were ready to start talking, but would have to hold parallel talks outside on Indochina on which phase, even though it is a more urgent problem, we were not ready. He concluded saying he did not believe there would be any activity on any item for two or three days after April 26, though we should, of course, get on as fast as possible.

[Here follow three paragraphs which dealt with a brief discussion of a reply to the Soviet note of March 31 concerning a European security pact; for text, see volume V.]

In concluding the meeting, M. Bidault stated that at least we had today agreed to the reply to the Soviet note rejecting the five-power concept for Geneva and had, he hoped, laid to rest that Soviet scheme. It was agreed that the press would be informed only that we had held a preliminary review of preparations for Geneva. It was also agreed that the three Foreign Ministers would meet again on Saturday, April 24 at 4:00 p. m. to continue their talks, and that the press would be so informed.<sup>5</sup>

[Annex—Tab A]

U.S.—French Draft Reply to Soviet Note of April 21 (As revised on April 22—and delivered on April 23)

“U.S. Government refers to note of Soviet Government of April 21 concerning forthcoming conference at Geneva.

“U.S. Government rejects contention of Soviet Government that ‘Chinese People’s Republic’ should enjoy any special position with respect to conference at Geneva. This issue was fully debated at Berlin, and agreement reached between Four Powers represented at Berlin with reference to Geneva Conference clearly excludes any special position for ‘Chinese People’s Republic’. It follows that it will be special responsibility of four sponsoring governments to reach agreement as to States to which invitations will be issued for Indo-China discussions.

“Government of U.S. expects that Berlin agreement will be scrupulously observed and [is not willing] that Geneva Conference [should be predicated upon a violation of the basic agreement upon which Geneva Conference rests] <sup>6</sup> shall take place under conditions laid down by that agreement.” <sup>7</sup>

BASIC POSITION PAPER ON KOREAN REUNIFICATION

The attached paper, revised by Mr. Young, contains the three alternative plans which would each meet the U.S. objectives of a non-Communist, independent and representative government in Korea.

A full description of each of these three alternative plans is contained in the following documents:

Plan A—Administrative Incorporation of North Korea into the Existing Republic of Korea (GK D-4/7)<sup>1</sup>

Plan B—Elections in North and South Korea for Establishment of Korean National Government within the ROK Constitutional Structure (GK D-4/10)<sup>2</sup>

Plan C—All-Korean Elections for Constituent Assembly, New Government and New National Government (GK D-4b)<sup>3</sup>

GK D-4/1e

Problem

To develop a plan for Korean reunification and the withdrawal of foreign forces which will be in consonance with United States national policies on Korea, and which will resolve the different views of the ROK, the United States and our other allies.

Purpose of Conference and Basic U.S. Objective

The Geneva Conference on Korea is called pursuant to Paragraph 60 of the Armistice Agreement and the Berlin Communiqué, whereby the two belligerent sides are to meet to seek a peaceful settlement of the Korean question considering that the establishment by peaceful means of a united and independent Korea would be an important factor in reducing international tension and in restoring peace in other parts of Asia.

The general purpose of the United States at Geneva is to seek an agreement to a plan for the reunification of Korea which will establish a non-Communist, independent and representative government constituted by independently supervised elections, and which will provide for the orderly, phased withdrawal of foreign forces synchronized with that plan.

General Principles and Considerations:

The United States, the Republic of Korea, and their Allies should:

1. Maintain a position of strength and stability in free Korea which will lessen ROK fear of abandonment, and avoid actions which in the ROK may cause confusion, or public turmoil, leading to a weakening of public morale.

2. Affirm that the ROK is the only sovereign, lawful government in Korea; that it must not be equated with the North Korean regime; that the ROK cannot legally or morally be liquidated without its consent, which it is unlikely to give; and that the ROK has the fundamental and primary interest in the manner of unifying Korea.

3. Seek the unification within the constitutional framework of the ROK State, and in keeping with the spirit and purposes of past United Nations resolutions to the greatest extent possible, recognizing that any constitutional changes desired by the new Assembly can be worked out within the ROK constitution.

4. Maintain a united front at the Conference among the allies, the United States and the Republic of Korea (a) in the presentation and negotiation of the unification of Korea, and (b) in restricting the Korean phase of the Conference solely to Korean matters, despite Communist attempts to introduce broader issues.

5. Assume that the Korean Phase of the Geneva Conference will be a serious negotiation to bring about, if at all possible the independence and unification of Korea. Therefore, maintain some flexibility for manoeuver, while at the same time develop a full and common understanding of the basic principles regarding unification and withdrawal on which they will not compromise.

6. Acknowledge that the United States should assume leadership on the allied side in close partnership, if possible, with the Republic of Korea, in view of the heavy sacrifices and commitments made by both the US and the ROK to repel Communist aggression in Korea. Without ROK-US endorsement or support, no proposal will be effective.

7. Determine whether the Communists will (1) insist on controlling part of all Korea, or (2) renounce any special position in Korea and agree to set up "a united Korea for free Koreans"; if the former is the case, recognize that no formula can succeed, and unmask Communist aggressive intentions.

8. Although recognizing that the Communists may not agree to any proposal put forward by our side on Korea's unification, formulate our plans and proposals in such a way that their implementation would protect and preserve our interests if they were accepted by the Communists and make clear our implementation of such plans will be conditioned on Communist performance.

9. Compose existing differences on various phases of plan for unifying Korea in order to arrive at a common formula that can be strongly and favorably presented and negotiated at the Conference, if the Communists have any intention of entering into real discussions rather than just propaganda.

10. Emerge from the Conference in a strong moral and political position by presenting and negotiating proposals commending themselves as fair, reasonable and workable to the world at large and which, if not accepted by the Communists, will make clear their responsibility for failure to reach agreement on Korea's unification at Geneva.

The Republic of Korea Position

The Republic of Korea will probably subscribe in general to the above objectives and principles.

Specifically, the Republic of Korea will :

1. Oppose any unification plan violating ROK sovereignty and any proposals for a "neutralized Korea", a coalition government or north-south arrangements placing the North Korean regime on an equal basis with the Republic of Korea.

2. Propose first the withdrawal of all Chinese forces from Korea, extension of ROK sovereignty over North Korea, and elections held by the ROK in North Korea to fill the seats in the ROK National Assembly available for representatives from the North.

3. Argue against simultaneous elections in South Korea, but possibly acquiesce in such elections provided ROK sovereignty is preserved.

4. Reject plans for a constituent assembly, new constitution and new government as an initial position and possibly all through the Conference.

5. Accept phased withdrawal of foreign forces, if coupled with reunification.

Position of Other United States Allies

Our other allies, and particularly the Commonwealth, will :

1. subscribe in general to the above principles ;

2. go along with the general US position at the beginning of the Conference, but question proposals for elections only in North Korea.

3. prefer a formula for reunification along the general lines of that proposed by the United States, France and the United Kingdom for Germany, i.e., completely fresh start in Korea to form a new government ;

4. possibly insist on such a formula as the final Allied position after others fail ;

5. object strongly to any proposal that simply provides for incorporation of North Korea into South Korea without some new constitutional act ;

6. emphasize the importance of proposals that will appear reasonable and acceptable to world opinion;
7. insist on tactical flexibility at Geneva.

Communist Position

The Communists will probably :

1. Do their utmost to broaden discussions on specious, deceptive lines, such as a general Far East security pact, lessening of tensions and recognition of the independence and security of all states;
2. Oppose any plans that would remove or weaken their control and hegemony in North Korea, and not make real concession that would create a free, united Korea;
3. Propose (a) withdrawal of all armed foreign forces in Korea so that the "Koreans themselves" may bring about their own unification; (b) elaborate measures for the establishment of a provisional government over all Korea designed to give the Communists predominance and based on equal status of the north and south; and (c) national elections to take place at some indefinite time after the establishment of this provisional government and to be carried out "by the Koreans themselves" without any international supervision.

General United States Position

In the light of United States policies in Korea, the ROK attitude, and the Allied position, the United States position should be based on the following two general propositions:

1. Utilization of ROK Constitutional Structure

A. It is essential, from the United States point of view, to develop proposals within the framework of legitimacy, sovereignty and integrity of the political system, and constitutional structure of the ROK State in principle. This would :

- (1) preserve the integrity of the nation and people which fought, with much allied and United Nations blood and treasure, for three years against Communist aggressors;
- (2) give voice to the viewpoint of the overwhelming majority of the Korean people; and
- (3) not put the ROK on a par with the North Korean regime.

2. Continuation of United Nations Resolutions

A. Our proposals should serve in general to resume the program for Korea's unification which the UN undertook in 1948-1950 and which the Communists frustrated by refusal to cooperate by North Korean aggression in June 1950 and by Chinese Communist intervention in November 1950. Allied plans for the unification of Korea should apply the general principles of previous United Nations plans for unification of Korea, which are contained in the General Assembly resolutions of November 14, 1947, December 12, 1948, October 7, 1950, December 1, 1950, and August 28, 1953. The principal points of these resolutions are :

(1) The United Nations objective is to assist the Korean people in re-establishing their freedom, independence and unity which are their urgent and rightful claims, recognizing that the Korean question is primarily a matter for the Korean people ;

(2) National independence of Korea should be re-established and foreign forces withdrawn thereafter ;

(3) Elections should be held on the basis of adult suffrage and by secret ballot and the number of representatives from the voting districts should be proportionate to population ; elections should be observed by an international commission with freedom to observe and consult throughout Korea ;

(4) The ROK is the only lawful sovereign government in any part of Korea in so far as the United Nations is concerned ;

(5) The United Nations has in being a commission with personnel and experience to carry out the terms of reference on Korean unification established in the General Assembly Resolution of October 7, 1950 ;

(6) The United Nations has in being an agency to rehabilitate all Korea once it is unified.

Specific Plans for the Unification of Korea

1. Generally speaking, there are three possible plans which might bring about a non-Communist, independent and representative government in a united Korea, if the Communists were to cooperate in implementing any one of them. These plans are consistent with the above two propositions in different and varying degrees.

Plan "A"—Incorporation of North Korea into the Existing Republic of Korea (GK D-4/7).

1. The key elements of Plan "A" would include :

(a) free elections to be held only in north Korea for representation in the ROK National Assembly to complete processes carried out under UN supervision in 1948 in the area south of the 38th Parallel. That election was held to effect the unity and independence in Korea and was regarded by the electorate and the Temporary UN Commission as a "step" in reestablishing the independence in Korea. The General Assembly considered it a "further development" of representative Government in Korea.

(b) the elections should be supervised and observed in north Korea by the UNCURK in a manner similar to the work of the UN Temporary Commission of 1948 with regard to conforming north Korean electoral laws and conditions to the principles of General Assembly resolutions of 1947 and 1950-53 in order to establish at least minimum conditions for free elections during a period of 90 days before elections. UNCURK must have authority to: (1) move and observe freely ; (2) propose measures for insuring an atmosphere of free elections ; (3) set date for such elections ; (4) determine the number of representatives to be elected proportionate to the relative population in north and south Korea; (5) certify election of valid expression of the will of the people; and (6) make recommendations and observe the orderly transfer of functions and authority from all administrative levels of north Korea where elections in accordance with the foregoing have been properly carried out, to the lawful government of a united Korea.

(c) application of ROK constitutional authority over all Korea after completion remaining constituent act, under UN resolutions, of elections in North Korea, with inherent right of expanded National Assembly to amend constitution as now provided for, if it desired;

(d) withdrawal of foreign military forces before and after convocation of expanded ROK National Assembly, observed and verified by UNCURK during stages and on completion;

(e) application by United States of US-ROK Mutual Defense Treaty to entire Korean Peninsula;

(f) supersession of the armistice agreement, after UNCURK verifies completion above steps;

(g) rehabilitation of all Korea by the United Nations Reconstruction Agency for Korea.

2. General Comments

(a) Plan A meets the requirement for preserving the ROK constitutional system. The ROK will probably endorse it and would become the government and State for all Korea. Our Allies will only reluctantly support this Plan because it calls for elections only in north Korea. The Communists will certainly reject Plan A.

(b) Plan A is not inconsistent with past efforts of the UN to achieve Korea's unification if it is viewed as additional step to complete the program begun in 1948 in south Korea. However, the General Assembly resolution of October 7, 1950 and its legislative history imply that UNCURK was to set up elections throughout Korea for a government of a united Korea, although under the conditions then prevailing the ROK would have won overwhelmingly in north and south.

(c) If the Communists really complied with the UN Commission's terms of reference to the same extent as U.S. military government and the interim South Korean authorities did in 1948, the elections in north Korea would be free and the results safeguarded. Under such conditions, the ROK would win a large majority.

Plan "B"—Elections in North and South Korea for Establishment of Korean National Government within the ROK Constitutional Structure

1. The key elements of Plan B are:

(a) free elections would be held throughout Korea under the ROK constitution of which Article 32 provides that elections shall be arranged by legislation passed by the Assembly and Article 4 refers to the entire territory of Korea.

(b) Pursuant to the provisions of Chapter IX, Article 98 of the Constitution of the ROK as adopted July 12, 1948, and amended July 4, 1952, the expanded National Assembly would be expected after these elections to meet in its constituent capacity to consider adoption or amendment of the Constitution in whole or in part, so as to provide a form of constitutional government satisfactory to the entire Korean people. The Constitution may be amended by two-thirds' vote of the National Assembly. This would be consistent with UN resolutions. While preserving the framework of the existing constitution and political system, it would permit the people of a unified Korea to choose their own form of government in accordance with the existing constitution.

(c) Elections to be observed by UNCURK in the same manner as indicated in paragraph (b) of Plan A and in accordance with the 9A Resolution of October 7, 1950. Minimum conditions for free elections to be established and verified by UNCURK in Korea 90 days before election date and to include :

- (1) Freedom of presentation and movement of candidates within North and South Korea respectively, but not between both areas;
- (2) Immunity of candidates from arrest or coercion;
- (3) Freedom of expression;
- (4) Secrecy of vote;
- (5) Security of polling stations and ballot boxes.

(d) Representation in all-Korea National Assembly to be based on population ratio between North and South Korea.

(e) Convocation of all-Korea National Assembly to consider ROK Constitution and pass basic uniform laws for all Korea.

(f) Election for President for all Korea on basis universal suffrage and secret ballot in all Korea.

(g) Phased withdrawal of foreign forces before and after elections to be completed within 12 months after formation of National Government of Korea and observed and unified by the UNCURK. Withdrawal to start 90 days before election date.

(h) Application by U.S. of U.S.-ROK Mutual Defense Treaty to entire Korean Peninsula, coupled with such assurances of Korea's political independence and territorial integrity as are feasible.

(i) Supersession of the Armistice Agreement, after UNCURK has verified above measures have been carried out.

(j) Rehabilitation of all Korea.

2. Comments

(a) Plan "B" is more likely to obtain the approval of both the ROK and our other Allies which is not the case with Plan "A" or Plan "C". The Communists will probably oppose it.

(b) Plan B contains the essence of our two general propositions. Plan "B" reflects the spirit and the provision of General Assembly resolutions on the unification of Korea more than Plan "A" does. While Plan "B" provides for elections in both North and South Korea for a National Assembly and President, it would do so under the ROK Constitutional system.

(c) In addition to holding elections throughout Korea, the feature distinguishing Plan "B" from Plan "A" is the intention to have the Assembly act in a constituent capacity to consider the ROK Constitution. The Assembly could also provide for presidential elections.

Plan "C"—All-Korean Elections for Constituent Assembly New Government and New National Government

1. The key elements of Plan "C" are:

(a) Formation of a new commission to supervise elections and bring about new all-Korean government to replace ROK and PDROK.

(b) Establishment of conditions throughout Korea for free elections.

(c) Free elections throughout Korea for a constituent assembly.

(d) Convocation of constituent assembly.

(e) Adoption of constitution, formation of reunified Government for all Korea, and transfer of power to such government from predecessor states.

(f) International assurances on the territorial integrity and political independence of a reunified Korea.

(g) Mutual phased withdrawals of foreign military forces from Korea to be completed 12 months after date of formation of new national government for Korea, and to be observed and verified by the new commission.

(h) Dissolution of the Commission and supersession of the armistice agreement.

(i) Rehabilitation of all Korea through international contributions and international agency.

2. Comments

(a) The ROK would be strongly opposed to Plan "C" because the ROK would be superseded, and it would be on a par with the North Korean regime.

(b) The Commonwealth and general opinion in many countries of the world would prefer Plan "C" to Plan "B" on the grounds that Plan "C" is more objective and impartial vis-à-vis the present Korean authorities, and gives the entire voting population in Korea a chance to make a completely new start, and thus fulfill UN resolutions. Another argument for Plan "C" is that the same general plan proposed by the three powers for Germany should be applied to Korea. Plan "C" does resemble the Eden Plan for Germany.

(c) The Communists probably would not accept such a plan unless they considered it necessary as a precedent for Indo-China.

United States Courses of Action Regarding Specific Plans:

To retain initiative and flexibility in an attempt to negotiate an agreement at Geneva on the unification and independence of Korea, the United States should:

1. Obtain ROK and allied endorsement to the two propositions and the general principles and considerations outlined above;

2. Seek ROK agreement to Plan "B" on the understanding that the ROK, if it desires, may present Plan "A" as its opening position at the Conference;

3. Limit ourselves, at the beginning of the Conference, to:

(a) a review of the frustrated history of Korean unification and the reasons for holding a conference on Korea, and

(b) an exposure of Communist conduct in Korea, particularly their circumvention of the Armistice Agreement;

4. Manoeuvre to have the Communists show their hand during the Conference before the United States and its allies advance any basic proposals;

5. Arrange with our allies to have the ROK lead off, with our side's general endorsement, with Plan "A", particularly with regard to elections only in North Korea;

6. Have Plan "B" introduced with full allied backing at an appropriate time after the Communist position and the initial ROK position have been hopelessly deadlocked.

7. Keep Plan "C" in reserve possibly for consideration, if it develops that the Communists show signs of desiring seriously to negotiate the peaceful settlement of the Korean question that will provide for the independence and unification of a free Korea;

8. Insist on the coupling of the withdrawal of foreign forces with acceptable plans for Korea's unification, and refrain from any consideration of second-stage plans during the discussion at the Conference of the unification and independence of Korea.

Secto 14. Repeated information Geneva 118, London 965, Moscow 320, Saigon 472, Seoul 2. At tripartite meeting this afternoon between Secretary, Eden and Bidault, it was agreed Bidault would transmit note dated 24 April to Eden, Secretary and Molotov, calling for a meeting at Geneva 11:30 a. m. 26 April, to discuss "a certain number of points touching on the organization of the conference with regard to Indochina.<sup>1</sup> It was also decided Eden would request a meeting with Molotov Monday<sup>2</sup> morning to resolve outstanding questions on Korean phase conference. Principal unresolved question now appears to be chairmanship. On chairmanship, it was agreed first position should be rotation chairmanship among US, UK, French and USSR. Any Soviet proposal for rotation among US, UK, France, USSR and Communist China will be categorically rejected and rotation among 19 also be rejected. Second position will be choice of permanent chairman from among delegations eliminating "Big Four" from consideration and rejecting North Korea or Communist China. Will accept anyone our side putting forward Pearson, Prince Wan, Ambassador Xueleta [Zuleta]. For third position, will suggest Swiss national, Jean de Salis. Are also considering possibility Swedish nationals Ekeberg. President Court of Appeals Stockholm, Richard Sandler and Bertil Ohlin. (Separate telegram<sup>3</sup> being sent Stockholm asking views on these men.) Failing agreement foregoing, suggestion will be made conference meet under provisional chairman (chosen so as exclude any possibility Communist China, North Korea) but with first order business conference selection permanent chairman presumably by majority vote.

Question composition Indochinese phase discussed, Bidault making suggestion three Associated States and three limitrophes states. Eden stated Casey would be "bothered by" inclusion Thailand and Burma and exclusion Australia. Secretary pointed out if Australia invited, probably would have to invite Indonesia and strongly reiterated fact that Communist China had been invited only as it was the source of aggression in Indochina and had in its power the control Indochinese war and not in any "Big Five" sense. Bidault stated French desire keep conference small as possible and difficulties excluding Ho from conference. Three Ministers agreed that initial position on participation would be four plus Communist China and three Associated States.

Bidault made suggestion that French, English, Russian and Chinese be considered official languages for Indochinese phase and that technical arrangements be left to experts in light of Korean phase precedents.

Eden suggested meeting of fifteen allied side prior to opening of conference and Secretary agreed to hold such a meeting at US delegation offices 11 a. m. Monday.<sup>4</sup>

5. Repeated information Department Secto 4 Tokyo 4. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. Seoul for Briggs and Dean. Secretary and Robertson met this morning with Pyun and Yang. Secretary proposed Pyun make opening statement for our side at conference on [?] which Pyun welcomed. Secretary has proposed US and ROK exchange ideas on content statement. Pyun agreed. No mention made of written "notes"

Dean discussed with Yang who has shown them to Pyun.<sup>1</sup> Pyun stated he under strict instructions from Rhee first propose unconditional withdrawal Chinese Communist forces before UN withdrawal and unification. Secretary replied such proposal could cause much trouble for our side because Communists will propose simultaneous withdrawal all foreign forces, conference would focus on question withdrawal rather than main issue independence and unity of Korea, and UN withdrawal before unification could weaken our security position in Korea if actually carried out. Secretary used tripartite position at Berlin on German unification as illustration heart of matter should be unification and freedom for Korea as was done regarding Germany in Berlin. Secretary suggested ROK statement emphasize that theme with withdrawal of forces as part larger problem. He also said no objection Pyun including in speech desirability Chinese Communist withdrawal from Korea as evidence purging themselves of aggression but connected with unification and freedom for all Korea. Pyun also raised question general elections in Korea stating he feared Communists would make such proposal in order set precedent for Indochina where they would thereby win control by peaceful means. Secretary replied we fully aware possible consequences for Indochina proposals on Korea, therefore we are proposing as initial position elections only in North Korea. Secretary made clear to Pyun this was not final position. Pyun said since he under rigid instructions from Rhee make above proposal re withdrawal he would have refer Secretary's views to Seoul.

It was agreed with Pyun that we would also refer matter to you for discussion with Rhee in hope he w'll change instructions to Pyun to emphasize primary importance seeking unification and freedom Korea rather than unconditional unilateral withdrawal Chinese Communist forces as first order precedence.

Since opening statement might have to be made Monday or Tuesday depending conference developments Secretary wishes you see Rhee soonest.

“The following constitutes my latest instructions in connection with Geneva Conference :

“Our friends want us to make unification the first requirement while we want Chinese Communist withdrawal as first requirement. We will cooperate if our friends will make an agreement to effect that there will be no peace until Chinese Communists have withdrawn from Korea, and that no outside nation will interfere with unification program when we hold elections under United Nations’ observation.

Secto 17. Repeated information Seoul 9, Tokyo 7, London 79, Paris 127, Moscow 15. Tokyo for CINCFE. Department pass Defense. At first regular meeting deputy representatives of 16, Johnson outlined in general terms US position on substantive questions, following document GK D-439 [D-4/9], April 14.<sup>2</sup> Johnson emphasized we should not be willing to set forth detailed proposals lest Communists pick on details and divert attention from their failure to accept fundamental principles.

Allen (UK) said his government subscribes general objectives although there might be differences in emphasis and method of achieving them. He stressed need for treating these objectives as genuine, not merely propaganda, and have proposals towards these objectives also genuine and appearing reasonable to world opinion. Proposals should be difficult for Communists to reject so that if conference fails, it will be clear failure due to Communist rejection reasonable proposals.

Watt (Australia), supported generally by Allen (UK) and La Coste (France), stressed desirability of avoiding impression that all 16 reach identical positions and speak with one voice. He said so long as objectives are common, there is virtue in degree of variety in tactics and presentation.

Sarasin (Thailand), however, questioned whether it was wise to have difference of opinion appear in public and favored common approach.

Johnson (US) supported Sarasin, noting Communists will be operating as one side and no reason why 16 should not work as one side. He said that while there would, of course, be no identity of language, it is important to avoid appearance that Communists are creating differences among us.

In reply to Philippine question, Johnson gave us impressions as to probable Communist position. He said they would probably insist on withdrawal foreign forces, and unification by joining North and South Korean assemblies, which would give Communists large majority in Assembly although North Korean population only small fraction of ROK. In regard to withdrawal of forces, Johnson said that even if Communists carry out in good faith, Chinese withdrawal would be only across the Yalu, whence they could come back at any time.

Turning to tactics for afternoon meeting, group agreed with US suggestion that if Molotov seeks to bar ROK, which is inscribed as first speaker, from speaking first, point of order would be made by Colombia, but extended floor fight would be avoided.

Johnson informed group that Secretary inscribed himself so that he could speak in event it became necessary to reply to any statements Molotov might make as chairman; otherwise he would probably withdraw his name and not enter debate today.

Johnson also said he anticipates possibility Molotov might raise question of agenda. He noted that Prince Wan had stated yesterday that purpose of meeting was set forth in Berlin communiqué. US believes we should insist on Berlin communiqué as only agenda, but Communists might propose instead paragraph 60, Armistice Agreement.

Yang (ROK), when called upon by Ambassador Johnson to give ROK views, merely took occasion to express gratitude Korean people to 16 nations which came to their aid. In reply to inquiry by Allen (UK) as to what ROK intended to say in opening statement, Yang said that it would be general historical presentation stressing unity of Korean people, North and South, and United Nations action to achieve unification.

Urrutia (Colombia) said his Ambassador will also make general presentation along lines of substantive views expressed by Ambassador Johnson.

said to open North Korea to UN-observed elections was only way complete UN task in manner compatible with UN resolutions. He described North Korean aggression and UN action repel and punish aggressors, saying Chinese Communist attackers should withdraw from Korea entirely accordance February 1951 UN resolution. He said linking withdrawal UN forces to Chinese departure not justified by facts, and described Communist China as Soviet puppet occupying North Korea. He called on Chinese Communists to resume traditional peaceful Chinese role Korean affairs, but said if they extended their aggression they would be encircled. He added Communists repudiating armistice terms and that if ROK decides armistice terms no longer binding it will be Communists' fault. He concluded ROK had suffered greatly as result Communist attack, but could not buy peace at price of freedom. Accordingly, he recommended cooperation all concerned achieve united, independent and democratic Korea by peaceful means.

Molotov then called representative DPROK.

After statement endorsing Geneva conference, Nam Il described principal task was achieving Korean unity by converting armistice into lasting peaceful reunification Korea on democratic principles. He recalled Korea's long history as free independent nation. He paid tribute role Soviet army in 1945 liberation which he alleged was subverted by US occupation authorities. Mentioned December 1945 Moscow agreement<sup>3</sup> and read paragraph therefrom referring provisional democratic government (he avoided all reference trusteeship provisions, however), blaming US for failure to carry out agreement and for responsibilities division of Korea as well as for holding separate elections under "police pressure" and contrary Moscow agreement.

Nam then quoted from UNTCOK report passage concerning election irregularities and fact election held in only part of Korea. He alleged much progress made in North Korea in agricultural, economic and cultural fields. He contrasted North Korean adherence "peaceful unification" following August 25, 1948 elections with US control "anti-democratic" elements South Korea where no progress made. He reported DPROK had made three unification proposals which ROK failed to answer and that ROK at US instigation had attempted impose its regime North Korea. Three years war blamed on US "intervention," while he paid tribute to Communist China for help against "interventionists" who also threatened China. He continued saying 1953 armistice now opened way to peaceful unification, but said South Korea wants resume hostilities while US pouring arms into ROK with which it has concluded mutual security pact. North Korea POW question ignored but mention made 48,000 Communist prisoners retained and allegedly impressed into ROK and Chiang armies. Withdrawal all foreign forces essential, he said, within six months, while there should be agreement all-Korea elections establish government representing whole country. He added measures preparing for elections required conference representatives North and South to establish all-Korea committee. He added committee should take measures facilitate contact between North and South. Finally, he made specific proposal Korean settlement text which already telegraphed Department (Secto 18<sup>4</sup>).

Molotov then called on Colombian representative (Zulueta)<sup>5</sup> who said Colombia present as logical consequence her response UN appeal help repel Communist aggression Korea. He said basic principles united, independent and democratic Korea embodied four UN resolutions, Cairo declaration of 1943,<sup>6</sup> Moscow agreement of 1945 and Article 60 armistice agreement. Colombia considers method unification clearly outlined November 1947 UNGA resolution which envisaged general election on basis secret vote adult population and set up UNTCOK, subsequent resolution added elections should be held in all Korea. Question remains, he continued, by what means free elections achieved, and concluded UN resolutions binding on this point. Purpose Geneva conference thus essentially to arrange genuinely free elections. These are possible only under auspices and with assistance UNCURK, he said. ROK is only legitimate Government Korea, he said, adding one possible means unification is extending to all Korea free expression will of people as already done that part Korea where UN commission operative. Second possibility is new all-Korea elections. Third possibility that North Korea and ROK decide without third party on formula for elections and unification. If elections based principle representation proportional to population this formula might be useful, he added, if North Korean elections really free. Fourth possibility might be joint North-South commission. This would be effective only if membership reflected difference in population North and South. Colombian representative concluded with following points: (1) solution must assure democratic and representative regime which will represent proportionally trends and groups in Korea, (2) no violation UN resolutions, and (3) supervision by UN. Said Colombia cannot accept premise that UN is one of belligerent powers.

Said Colombia represented at Geneva conference solely out of respect for UN decisions.

At end Colombian speech Molotov announced since only remaining speaker was US, which had indicated preference speak tomorrow, he would adjourn meeting unless some delegation objected. Since no response, he adjourned meeting at 5:15.

Comment: Meeting was conducted in extremely quiet atmosphere. Molotov presided in strictly formal fashion merely introducing speakers and making no comment on proceedings at any point. Unlike Prince Wan who summoned Turkish and US representatives to his side, Molotov was flanked by Gromyko and Troyanovsky (interpreter) and announced at outset he would be assisted by Zoldaty (USSR) and Shih Che (Communist China) who sat behind him with Zarubin throughout being consulted. All three speakers were heard passively and with no visible reaction from any other delegate.

Luncheon Meeting of Dulles, Eden, and Bidault, Geneva, April 28, 1 p. m.: Memorandum of Conversation, by the Ambassador in Switzerland (Willis)<sup>1</sup>

GENEVA, April 28, 1954.

Participants:

France	UK	US
Mr. Bidault	Mr. Eden	Secretary Dulles
(Mrs. Bidault)	(Mrs. Eden)	Ambassador Willis

After the luncheon had progressed a few minutes, the Secretary stated that he would like to give consideration to the question of how to get the conference on Korea beyond the preliminary stage. He remarked that at the rate it was going the entire week might be taken up by speeches. Mr. Eden suggested that as he would be in the chair at the afternoon meeting and as no one other than the Secretary had indicated a desire to speak at the meeting, he might suggest a break at 4:00 approximately, when it was anticipated the translation of the Secretary's speech would be finished. During the break Mr. Eden said that possibly he might consult with the other two Presidents as to what the next step might be. Mr. Eden also tentatively suggested that it might be possible for the Bureau<sup>2</sup> to give consideration to this question.

It was agreed that one way to put an end to the introductory speeches would be to rule that no one who was not inscribed before noon of April 29 could speak in the preliminary phase.

The Secretary then indicated that the possibility of negotiation on Korea lay in the fact that if North Korea could be demilitarized and neutralized as a preliminary to unification, the United States would be willing to forego its rights under the treaty with the Republic of Korea to establish bases in the south and to withdraw its troops. He suggested that one way of getting things started would be for him to sound out Mr. Molotov along the above lines. Mr. Eden demurred at this suggestion and came back again to the possibility of getting discussions started in the Bureau. He admitted that that group was also probably too big for satisfactory discussion, but added that an approach there would not be as cumbersome as in the full conference.

The Secretary asked what Mr. Bidault and Mr. Eden would think of having the Five powers, plus the representatives of the two Koreas, meet together and consider ways of making progress. Both Mr. Eden and Mr. Bidault indicated a favorable reaction. The Secretary then asked Mr. Eden if there would be any difficulty in excluding Australia or New Zealand, to which Mr. Eden replied that he would not anticipate any difficulty on that score. The Secretary added that it would be necessary, before adopting such procedure, to clear it with the other Sixteen. It was considered that it might be possible to do this tomorrow (Thursday April 29) and that if the suggestion made earlier that an agreement could be reached that only those inscribed before noon of the 29th would be given the floor to speak in the full conference in this initial stage, then it might be possible at an early date to have a meeting of the Seven.

The Secretary indicated that he wanted very much to make some progress on this matter before his departure. Mr. Bidault replied that he also very much hoped it would be possible to begin to confer on Indochina. The Secretary concurred in this wish.

In the course of the luncheon, the Secretary also described Mr. Molotov's visit yesterday.<sup>3</sup> The Secretary said Mr. Molotov had come and handed him a paper in Russian, which he obviously could not read.<sup>4</sup> As Mr. Molotov merely sat there the Secretary suggested that they might talk about Indochina. Mr. Molotov indicated assent, but said nothing. The Secretary raised the question as to why Mr. Molotov had come, as surely it could not have been merely to deliver the document. Mr. Eden expressed the opinion that possibly the motive had been to obtain the credit for having made a friendly gesture and having taken the initiative in calling on the American Secretary. Mr. Bidault said Mr. Molotov's purpose might well have been to compare what the Secretary said and what he, Mr. Bidault, had said to Mr. Molotov.

In the course of the luncheon, Mr. Bidault was called to the telephone. He returned to the table at 20 minutes past two and said that he had just received information from his press attaché that Mr. Molotov's press conference, which was to have been held at 1:30, had been postponed for 45 minutes and had therefore kept some 400 to 500 correspondents assembled and waiting impatiently. The story was going around that Mr. Molotov was going to say to them that it was his suggestion that it was agreed that the British, Soviet and Siamese representatives should act as presidents of the conference. Although it was agreed that this appeared far-fetched, Mr. Bidault pointed out that the Communists were apparently determined to give Mr. Molotov the credit for this suggestion as the same report had appeared in Humanite a day or two ago.

It was generally agreed that it was important as soon as possible to find a means of getting the conference down to substantive business.

<sup>1</sup> A set of minutes of this meeting (US Verb Min/3) is in Conference files, lot 60 D 627, CF 267. The minutes indicate that the meeting convened at 3:05 p. m. and adjourned at 5:28 p. m.

During course Dulles speech Chinese delegation requested be inscribed and Chou En-lai delivered hour-long speech<sup>3</sup> (with interpretation) following which session broke briefly for intermission and then adjourned following intermission.

Chou opened statement by defining aim of Geneva conference as relaxation tensions and achievement peaceful solution world problems. He specifically commented on fact this first time US, UK, USSR, France and PRC as well as other interested nations have met together to solve important problems Asia. Citing long struggle Asian peoples for liberation from foreign imperialist control he charged influential circles in America with obstructing liberation movement in order enslave Asia. Thus American plans create aggressive bloc and spread war in Asia source of tension there. He followed these statements with lengthy panegyric on achievements PRC in China and declared no force can stop their march to create strong and prosperous China. Chou professed China had no aggressive intent against others and will not tolerate others aggressions.

Observing more than 20 countries recognize PRC, including great friend USSR, he stated others, US first and foremost, still refuse recognition and discriminate against PRC illegally. He stated this attitude hindered peaceful settlement questions and aggravated tension; Geneva conference should therefore lay basis for change.

He then turned to Korean question and summarized familiar Communist version origins Korean war. In this connection and again later in speech he charged US had occupied Taiwan illegally as base for attack on China. Stating US crossing 38th parallel endangered Chinese security by seeking use Japanese plan for Korean base to attack China, Chinese had no choice but come to assistance Korean people. Referring to armistice negotiations Chou charged US and ROK had continually created obstacles to agreement both sides including forcible retention over 48,000 PWs. He stated this question in no way closed and cannot escape attention Geneva conference. Attacking ROK he alleged it and US have openly violated armistice since paragraph 60 explicitly provides for consideration withdrawal forces whereas US and ROK recently concluded mutual defense pact and ROK threatened "march to North". Cited ROK threats as proof who wants peace and who wants war in Korea.

Chou stated PRC fully supports North Korean proposal Korean unification with provision for all-Korean elections without foreign intervention. Contrasted ROK statement calling for retention US forces Korea as indicating ROK required foreign support maintain itself. In expressing hope Nam Il's proposal will form basis for settlement Chou said unification matter for Korean people themselves and foreign forces must withdraw.

In his peroration Chou again charged US occupation Taiwan will not be tolerated, cited growing Jap militarism and actions US in Indochina and in attempt create SEA bloc menace peace of Asia. He then demanded that interference in internal affairs Asian countries be stopped, all foreign forces in Asia be withdrawn, all military bases be removed, all economic restrictions dropped. He concluded Dulles' speech contrary these requirements and therefore government PRC cannot agree with it and considers Asian countries should consult among themselves to solve these problems. Speech concluded with reference to US actions in Europe and in atomic energy field which threaten world peace. He expressed regret certain Asian countries (India, Burma, Indonesia) unable participate and stated conference should consider this problem.

Comment: Chou's speech ranged over full spectrum Asian and world problems, and, as anticipated, sought create impression five great powers meeting (with other interested states) to solve general problems Asia and world problems. Speech emphasized importance PRC attaches to diplomatic recognition but made no specific mention admission UN. Most of speech was standard CC boiler plate propaganda line in phraseology as well as content contrary to speculation Chou would adopt more sophisticated approach. Speech as whole appeared designed for propaganda appeal in Asia. Specific comments re withdrawal forces from Korea and allegations US occupation Taiwan suggest particular Chinese Communist sensitivity these points. Speech gave no indication any flexibility PRC position.

fense. At meeting chief delegates of 16 today, Secretary emphasized primary issue is purpose and quality of supervised elections in Korea rather than territorial scope of elections. He also raised for consideration moving from plenary sessions into smaller group for more informal negotiations or adopting restricted sessions.

After long discussion both subjects, Ministers agreed set up working committee of ROK, US, UK, Australia, Colombia, France, Philippines, Thailand, Turkey to formulate unification plan present either in smaller group or restricted session or during plenary session after completion general debate. First meeting working group morning April 30.

No final disposition re composition or nature restricted sessions or smaller group. General consensus general debate would end Saturday<sup>3</sup> for lack of speakers and restricted session could probably take place immediately after plenary session. Only Philippines and Thailand expressed intention participate general debate.

In discussing issue supervised elections in North Korea, Secretary pointed out ROK already subject to test and Communists would probably not accept. He hoped statements would be avoided imply ROK on par North Korean regime since such statements would undermine prestige and authority ROK which we should seek maintain. He said geographical scope elections not really decisive issue as are purposes and auspices such elections.

Regarding restricted or smaller meetings, Secretary suggested sign of weakness move this way too soon because Communists might assume we over-eager. We should be ready make such move when right time comes in order develop any possibility re negotiation. Secretary described bargaining possibilities in particular role which Communists accuse us wanting to play in using Korean bases for attack on China.

Eden several times pressed for termination general debate and presentation an agreed final position within next few days or 48 hours possibly followed by smaller meetings or restricted sessions to get down to business soon. He agreed with Secretary Communists would not accept principle supervised elections and thought this issue should be drawn clearly and soon on basis public position similar to tripartite position on German unification which public can understand. Other Commonwealth representatives supported Eden's viewpoint that something must be done immediately counter Communist plans and our basic and final terms should be tabled quickly so that positive issue presented to Communists on which conference can break if they reject it as expected.

Pyun explained to meeting he strongly feels appropriate for ROK rebut allegations of North Korean, Chinese Communist and USSR delegates. Fourth Plenary Session on Korea, Geneva, April 29, 3:05 p. m.: The United States Delegation to the Department of State<sup>1</sup>

GENEVA, April 29, 1954.

Secto 41. Repeated information Seoul 18, Tokyo 13, Paris 147, London 93, Bonn 41, Vienna 12, Oslo 1, pouched Moscow. Bonn and Vienna for PAO; Tokyo for CINCFE. Department pass Defense, CINCPAC, COMSAC. April 29 plenary session opened at 1505 with Prince Wan in chair. There were only two speakers: Casey of Australia<sup>2</sup> and Molotov, each of whom spoke about 30 minutes.

Casey said Australia approached conference in spirit restrained optimism. While fully cognizant of difficulties in reaching solution of Korean problem, solution nevertheless must be found. This is no time for recriminations about the past. Efforts should be directed toward finding solution. Basis for achieving one already present in UN Charter and UN Resolutions. Specifically, following should be elements of solution:

1. Solution must be achieved by peaceful means.
2. Principle of self-determination calls for free elections. While strong case can be made for holding such elections in North Korea only, since UN-supervised elections have already been held in South Korea, Australia hopes ROK will, if necessary, agree to elections throughout Korea as gesture of helpfulness in achieving agreement.

<sup>1</sup> A set of minutes (US Verb Min/4) is in Conference files, lot 60 D 627, CF 267. The minutes indicate that the meeting convened at 3:05 p. m. and adjourned at 4:50 p. m.

Government to be set up by elections should be based on principle of representation proportionate to population. Free atmosphere both before and during elections should be assured by appropriate guarantees and UN supervision. UNCURK is body already in Korea for express purpose of observing, helping and advising in conduct elections.

Needs of Korean people call for great rehabilitation efforts. Such have been made in past and no doubt will continue to be made. But only stability and security in Korea can assure real progress. To assure these is task of conference.

While North Korean proposals made by Nam Il are inadequate from Australia's point of view in a number of important points, proposal deserves careful examination. Clarification, however, should be furnished regarding following points:

1. Is membership in Joint Commission mentioned by Nam Il to be made proportionate to populations in North and South Korea? Australia thinks it should be.

2. How can free elections be assured without international supervision? Australia thinks Communist proposal that matter should be handled by Koreans themselves without interference is unrealistic in view bitterness which has grown up between two parts of country.

3. How can long delays in work of Joint Commission be avoided? How can deadlocks be broken? Will time limit be established within which Commission must complete preparatory work for holding elections?

North Korean proposal regarding withdrawal of troops deceptively simple. As Dulles pointed out, Chinese Communists would have much shorter distance to withdraw and could return in much shorter time than UN forces. While all desire early withdrawal, dangers over-hasty withdrawal have been demonstrated. Formula might be found so that withdrawal could begin at early date. Australia believes, however, that some units should stay until elections carried out. Provision could be made to assure that there would be no interference by troops in conduct of elections.

Chou En-lai, in effort to obscure facts of case, repeated charges that aggression in Korean war had been committed by South Korea and US. UN Commission observers on June 24, 1950 made field trip inspecting ROK dispositions along 38th parallel and reported that South Korean forces were not in position to launch wide-scale attack. While Commission unable to observe conditions in North Korea, subsequently captured Communist documents show that preparations for offensive had been made in North prior to attack.

Conference has two tasks before it: Solution of Korean and Indochinese problems. When war in Korea broke out, Communist aggression was already under way in Indochina although at that time of different sort and on different scale. Hope that Korean war which provided first example in history of enforcement collective security will provide lesson for Communist World.

Molotov then took floor,<sup>3</sup> said: Geneva Conference can be said to be devoted to question of Asia. Both Korean question and that of Indochina are among most essential questions relating to Asia. Cannot help feeling conference hurt by fact that such Asiatic states as India, Indonesia, Burma, Pakistan, and other Asiatic countries not taking part in conference. At same time, shouldn't underestimate fact that for first time in recent years all great powers, France, Great Britain, US, Chinese People's Republic and Soviet Union are taking part in conference. Particular emphasis should be laid on fact that great power of Asia, Chinese People's Republic will be able to contribute.

First problem is to establish by peaceful means united and independent Korea. Stands to reason that solution of Korean problem primarily matter for Korean people themselves. No solution imposed upon Korean people by other countries can satisfy Korean people or contribute to lasting settlement Korean problem.

Korean people's struggle for independence went on for many years. Japanese imperialists seized Korea and turned peninsula into their principal stronghold for aggression against China and sought spread rule over whole of China and Southeast Asia. Under pretext of struggle against Communism they concluded anti-Comintern pact with Hitlerite Germany and schemed to divide world. Everyone remembers outcome.

Due to circumstances of military nature at end World War II Korea found itself divided into two parts. Problem of creating united, independent and democratic state not solved in immediate postwar years. ROK, however, succeeded in carrying out democratic reforms of paramount importance. This activity interrupted by war imposed from outside and brutal US military intervention under UN flag.

All countries seeking to reduce international tension are interested in peaceful solution Korean question. Cannot fail to notice, however, fact that under pressure exerted upon UN on part some states it adopted one-sided attitude and proved inability to settle Korean problem. False story of Korean events reiterated here by US representative has been repeatedly refuted and its falsity exposed by Soviet representative in UN.

When considering Korean question we cannot fail to take into account recent basic changes in political development Asiatic countries especially those taking place after World War II. For many years Asiatic countries were dominated by non-Asiatic states and other peoples were deprived of possibility of being masters of own fates. At present failure of attempts to apply old policy of colonialization becomes more and more obvious. 1917 Revolution in Russia and formation of USSR which broke with imperialist policy of Tsarism could not fail to encourage other peoples struggling for freedom and independence.

People with old-fashioned views are unable to grasp historical changes which have taken place in Asiatic countries and sometimes regard these developments in entirely false light. They are constantly on outlook for intrigues of Communists, agents of Kremlin, etc.; they attribute to Communism every movement of oppressed people toward freedom and national independence. As for views Soviet people, we make no secret of our sympathies and warm feelings for national liberation movement of peoples including those of Asia. Fundamental changes in Asia have their supreme example in China where democratic regime has been founded and economic, social, and political changes are taking place. Not to take this into account means not to reckon with events of greatest historical importance. Furthermore, who can deny that such country as India . . .<sup>4</sup> has entered historical arena. Importance of countries such as Indonesia, Burma, and others constantly being enhanced although process of establishing real independence not without struggles or difficulties in relations with some states.

No secret that firm and friendly relations have been established between USSR and CPR. Many other countries have also established relations with Chinese People's Republic. Britain is known to attach great importance to development of its relations with Chinese People's Republic. Also known that number of other countries have not established normal relations with Chinese People's Republic for sole reason that they are being prevented from doing so from without.

Open aggressive policy of US in regard to Chinese People's Republic is affecting whole situation in Asia. After establishment CPR one aggressive act after another has been taken against it. US ruling circles seized Taiwan and remnants Chiang clique masters of the island. They prevent CPR from taking legitimate place in UN, made UN pass resolution imposing embargo on trade with China, are making preparations for establishment Japanese armed forces thereby creating threat to China, charged China with aggression in Korea, are constantly threatening China's borders with invasion, etc. Under pretext of defending puppet regimes in Indochina, they have recently made plans to form military alliance in Southeast Asia although not one self-respecting Asian state proposes to participate.

Secretary Dulles' April 16 statement<sup>5</sup> calling loss of China mainland grave disaster and warning that loss of Southeast Asia and Pacific islands would compound this disaster shows how strong is desire follow old outworn colonial policy in some circles. His statement does not contain one word about international interest and rights of peoples of China, Southeast Asia, and Pacific islands.

Geneva Conference affords possibility of examining thoroughly those problems of Asia which have been recognized as the most urgent ones at present moment. Conference will be successful if it proceeds from principle that peoples of Asia have full right to settle their affairs themselves. Other states should assist Asian peoples by their friendly efforts.

Chou En-lai spoke about desirability of uniting efforts of Asian countries in securing peace in Asia. Soviet delegation fully in accord with that view. Delegation believes that North Korean proposals can serve as basis adoption [of adequate decision]<sup>6</sup> on Korean question.

GENEVA, April 29, 1954—8 p. m.

Dulte 27. Repeated information Brussels 7, Seoul unnumbered. For Acting Secretary from Secretary. Brussels for the Ambassador, Seoul info Ambassador and Dean. Spaak expressed to MacArthur this morning definite reservations regarding Republic of Korea proposal for elections in North Korea. He said North Koreans had countered with proposal to hold elections in all Korea. While North Korea conditions for such elections were quite unacceptable, Western European opinion would not believe Republic of Korea proposals for elections only in North Korea reasonable and he would not be able rally support for Republic of Korea proposal in Belgian Parliament. His information was that other Allied governments share this view. He felt that unity of non-Communists idea at Geneva was most essential objective of Geneva Conference from Western viewpoint, and expressed strong hope that Republic of Korea could be induced to counter with a proposal for all-Korean elections under effective supervision of United Nations. This would expose Soviet hand and make clear that failure to reach agreement on Korea was fault of Soviets. It would also preserve full Allied unity and prevent Soviets from winning propaganda victory at Geneva.

I, therefore, asked Spaak to lunch with me. I explained to him in detail our problem with Rhee and the United Nations background and basis for the position put forward by Republic of Korea. I told Spaak I believe there is chance of getting Rhee to modify his position along lines of all-Korean elections under effective United Nations supervision, but that this was extremely delicate problem and would require time and most careful handling, in view of Rhee's oriental mentality and feeling that European countries were willing to sell him down river for advantages they might gain for themselves in Europe. I also explained we had sent Dean, in whom I had great confidence, to Korea to assist in handling Rhee.

*MacArthur-Spaak Meeting, Geneva, April 30, 11:45 a. m.:

I called on Mr. Spaak this morning at 11:45 pursuant to the Secretary's instructions. I said to Mr. Spaak that the Secretary had asked me to come to see him informally to lay before him a very serious problem and to seek his advice how best it might be met. I then described the problem in the following terms:

The Geneva Conference has been in session almost one full week and thus far not a single Western European country has made any statement at the Conference or attempted in any way to rebut the Soviet thesis. The Plenary sessions, I understood, were scheduled to end very soon. If some of the Western European countries do not make statements rebutting the Communist charges American Congressional and public opinion will most certainly interpret it as meaning that the Western European countries ask us to stand up and be counted with them whenever they are in difficulty and also ask us for all kinds of material and moral assistance, but at the same time they are unwilling to face up to the Soviets when purely European interests are not involved. This is not calculated to inspire confidence among the American people in the determination of Western Europe to stand together with the United States in attempting to prevent the Soviets from taking over not only Asia but also Europe. I thought there would be a direct effect on the Congressional support we could get for our

The second point which I wished to mention was the fact that Chou En-lai, because it is the first time he has spoken in any international gathering of this kind, had largely captured the headlines throughout the free world and also in Asia. If his accusations against the United Nations and general deformation of history were not rebutted, the Soviets would have the cheapest and most extensive propaganda victory in recent years. I felt we should recognize that the impact on public opinion of Geneva Conference would probably be its most important single outcome, just as had been the case of the Berlin Conference. As Mr. Spaak had said yesterday, we could not get agreements with the Soviets because they did not wish to reach reasonable agreements. To accept the Soviet and Chinese Communist declarations and statements at the conference table without rebutting them was certainly not calculated to gain the support of public opinion in the free world for what we were doing.

I said that I was not suggesting that Mr. Spaak get up and make a speech on the South Korean proposal for unification of Korea. I was fully aware of the difficulties which he would have in supporting the opening ROK proposal. What I was suggesting was that possibly himself and other Western European Foreign Ministers make statements attacking the false Soviet and Chinese charges against the United Nations and in general pointing out the total Communist distortion of history in their statements. I felt that both in terms of Western and Asiatic opinion, it was most important to develop the theme of Soviet imperialism which has manifested itself in the Eastern European satellites, East Germany, Austria, and also in North Korea and Indochina.

Mr. Spaak replied that he had not thought about the impact on American opinion of a failure of the Western European countries to stand up and speak. If it was our judgment that there would be such a reaction, it was essential that some of the Western European countries make statements. He had talked with most of his European colleagues including Mr. Eden and he had the strong impression that there was a feeling of lassitude and inutility in just a series of speeches rebutting the same old Soviet charges. There was however another point which made them instinctively shy away from making a statement. This was the fact that if they were to make a statement, it should be aimed at the problem which was the establishment of a unified, free, and independent Korea. The ROK had put forth a position which none of the Western countries liked. The North Koreans had countered with a plan calling for all-Korean elections. Actually under the present circumstances the North Korean plan which came second and could be construed as a counter proposal was really the basis for discussion. It was not in anybody's interest to have the North Korean proposal the basis of discussion and this was why it was so important to counter with a ROK proposal for all-Korean elections supervised by the UN. Mr. Spaak inquired whether Rhee would agree to such a plan by the beginning of next week. I said in my judgment there was no hope and that it would probably take at a minimum a week to bring Rhee around if indeed he could be brought around. Mr. Spaak said that under these circumstances he could make a speech along the lines which I had outlined, but it would be negative with respect to Korea, which he regretted. He said the problem now is to decide when he should speak. He is obliged to leave for Brussels tonight to meet with the other new Cabinet Ministers tomorrow<sup>2</sup> and Sunday morning, since the new Cabinet will be presenting itself to the parliament next Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. If the Prime Minister agreed, he could possibly fly back to Geneva Monday morning, make his speech and return to Brussels Monday night. This would be a very difficult thing but he would be glad to see what could be done, and in any event he would be glad to come back next Thursday, May 6, if he could not get away on Monday. The Dutch Foreign Minister, who he said was due to arrive today, had sent him a message that he would not make any statement at Geneva unless Spaak did. The thing now to do was to get the Dutch to make a statement also, and he would be glad to approach the Dutch with us at the conference meeting this afternoon. He asked whether I would make such an approach with him. I said I would be glad to, although I thought the Secretary would wish to talk to him this afternoon and might wish to make the approach with him.

Mr. Spaak then said that he is totally unclear as to what is going to happen here at Geneva next week. Are there going to be restricted sessions on Korea? If there are, what is going to be the basis of the discussion of the Korean problem at such restricted sessions? Restricted sessions are pointless if each side simply rests on its present position, and to be very frank he said that the North Korean position, unless it was exposed for what it really was, was a much sounder position in terms of general public impression than the ROK position. He personally thought it was extremely unwise to have restricted sessions on Korea until the ROK's had some kind of a better position involving UN supervision for all-Korean elections. This however was simply his own personal thought. I said to him that if the Dutch would come along and we could get some other European countries to make statements rebutting the Communist charges, we could probably schedule two or three speeches for each day next week, and we might be able to consume several days. Mr. Spaak said that he thought it was better to engage in this process rather than to go into restricted sessions without adequate preparation and the best possible case. He wondered if several days next week could be taken up with procedural questions on Indochina. If this were not possible, maybe it would be preferable to recess for two to three days until we had a better position on Korea. He made clear that none of these were suggestions and that he was simply thinking out loud.

It was agreed that Secretary Dulles would see him at the meeting this afternoon to discuss:

1. When it seemed best for Spaak to speak next week (Monday or Thursday)
2. To approach the Dutch jointly to get them to make a statement
3. To exchange any further ideas which might be forthcoming on how the conference was to be handled next week.

Dulles-Eden Meeting, Geneva, April 30, 12:15 p. m.: The United States Delegation to the Department of State

TOP SECRET      PRIORITY      GENEVA, April 30, 1954—8 p. m.

Dulte 33. Repeated information London 99. Eyes only for Acting Secretary. For President from Secretary. Eyes only Ambassador. Following is memorandum of conversation I had alone with Eden at his villa in Geneva at 12:15 p. m. on April 30:

I said to Mr. Eden that I was greatly disturbed over the present position and its bearing upon the cooperation of our two countries. We had, I thought, agreed to sit down with other directly interested countries to try to work out a common defense for the Southeast Asia area,<sup>1</sup> but now the British were unwilling to go ahead with the agreement which Eden and I had reached at London. On top of that was the fact that in the face of the vicious attacks by Molotov, Chou En-lai and Nam Il on the United States for what it had done in Korea, there was not a single Western European power which was prepared to get up and say a word in defense of the United Nations or United States position.<sup>2</sup> The only speakers on the non-Communist side had been South Korea, Colombia, the United States and Australia, and no one else was inscribed to speak.

I said it was particularly galling to the United States to have to accept this attack on it as being an "imperialist" power. I said that the United States was eager to beat the Communists at their own game and to sponsor nationalism in the independent colonial areas, which was in accordance with our historic tradition, but that we were restrained from doing so by a desire to cooperate with Britain and France in Asia, in North Africa and in the Near and Middle East. This, however, did not seem to be paying any dividends because when the chips were down there was no cohesion between us. Here at Geneva we were presenting a pathetic spectacle of drifting without any agreed policy or purpose. The United States had presented a program which, after it had been apparently accepted, had been repudiated and there was no alternative offered.

I said as far as the Korean problem was concerned, we were being forced by our Western Allies to abandon our original position of backing the United Nations resolutions so that Western leaders could show how generous they were at South Korea's expense. I thought, however, that it was rather pathetic that we had to make our concessions to our Allies before even starting to negotiate with the Communists, where the concessions might have some negotiating value. If the effort to develop a united position with reference to Southeast Asia collapsed, we would be faced by the problem of going it alone. This would probably mean increasing the close relations with Syngman Rhee and Chiang Kai-shek, who, whatever their defects, were at least willing to stand strong against the Communists. I mentioned that there was considerable pressure for the United States to complete a mutual security treaty covering Formosa. This had been deferred and I felt that its negotiation at the time of the Geneva Conference and after my proposal for a united defense of Southeast Asia might be embarrassing. However, if there was to be no united defense for Southeast Asia and no agreed program for Geneva, then we would have to consider who there was upon whom we could depend.

I emphasized that despite what I gathered the British might have inferred from Radford's talks<sup>3</sup> the United States was not seeking either war with China or a large-scale intervention in Indochina. In fact, these were the two things we were seeking to avoid and thought could be avoided if we had a show of common strength.

I greatly feared that if I return to Washington under present conditions and had to meet with the Congressional committees and give explanations as to what had happened, the consequences would be disastrous for the close United Kingdom-United States relations which we wanted to maintain.

Mr. Eden then handed me the memorandum,<sup>4</sup> a copy of which is annexed. He said that they had been working very hard to prevent the Colombo Conference from taking a strong anti-Western position, particularly in relation to Indochina, and he felt that they had been quite successful.

I referred to the paragraph in the United Kingdom memorandum calling for immediate and secret joint examination between the United States and the United Kingdom. I said that this might be useful, but certainly it would not be useful if that was all there was, because we had already invited other countries, such as Thailand, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand to share in creating a Southeast Asian defense; and the two first had definitely agreed and the two latter were interested. I also said I was confident we could not now rebuff them without serious consequences for the future. They would have to be brought in on some discussions, although probably not those of the intimate nature which were customary between the United States and the United Kingdom. I referred to the fact that the North Atlantic Treaty had developed progressively, the first conception being the Brussels Pact, then the addition of the United States and Canada, then the addition of Scandinavian countries, then the addition of Portugal and Italy, and most recently the addition of Greece and Turkey.<sup>5</sup> I said that surely any Southeast Asian arrangement would have to include at least Thailand, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand, as well as the United States, the United Kingdom and France, and the Associated States; and I did not see why we could not get started with that nucleus and let it develop as seemed natural. Mr. Eden made no reply.

Mr. Eden then said that he felt that the Western powers had not participated in the general debate because they did not want to get tied to the South Korean election formula. I said that the issues in the general debate far transcended this rather minor technical point—that the burden of the speeches of Molotov and Chou En-lai had been that Asia was for the Asians, and that all Western influence should be eliminated, particularly that of the United States. Also, they had viciously attacked the United Nations, and made the most grotesque falsifications of history. Surely, I said, that presented issues to which the Western powers could address themselves if they believed in the United Nations and believed that the principle of solidarity extended beyond Europe. Mr. Eden said he would give thought to the possibility of his making some speech.

use that we had not had in Berlin. At Berlin we could not pull out United States and United Kingdom troops because this would collapse the forward strategy of NATO. In Korea there was no general Allied strategy, and United States troops could be pulled out in exchange for a united Korea, which would have sufficient demilitarization in the North so as to constitute no threat to Vladivostok and Port Arthur. Mr. Eden suggested that we might have a restricted meeting of the Four inviting powers, plus China and North Korea and South Korea to try to get into this matter before I left. I said I would not be indisposed to have such a meeting on Saturday afternoon.<sup>6</sup>

I told Mr. Eden that I was seeing Molotov at 11 on Saturday morning on the atomic energy matter.<sup>7</sup> I was disposed not to seek a joint communiqué which would indicate that the President's plan had been rejected. I felt that to throw this in the present international situation would greatly aggravate and deteriorate affairs, and would particularly cause a deep resentment in the United States. Mr. Eden agreed to this handling of the matter.

I reminded Mr. Eden that I had had no reply from him with reference to our economic aid to Egypt.<sup>8</sup> He said he would talk to me about this before I left.

"At second regular meeting deputy representatives of 16 Johnson opened with analysis North Korean proposal presented yesterday (Secto 18). He pointed up striking similarity between North Korean proposal and Soviet proposal at Berlin on Germany and analyzed reasons it unacceptable, emphasizing equating of North and South Korean Governments and fact equal representation for them gives veto to Communists in unification process.

Would appreciate being advised as soon as conditions warrant what your current thinking is on our probable alternate proposal for achieving unification and whether we should now be trying to orient President's thinking accordingly.

At present time he heartily approves of Pyun's and Secretary's speech on unification. Despite what Secretary told Pyun, we have hesitated to discuss with President possibility of holding elections for National Assembly in South as well as in North under UN supervision.

In an informal meeting with President on Tuesday<sup>2</sup> he somewhat emotionally and tearfully pleaded for permission to allow Korean delegation to come home and quite apparently is afraid he will be asked to whittle down Pyun's present position. We were able to change subject without discussing it and emotion passed. Mention only as showing his state of mind and current state negotiations here and reluctance embark in new discussions unless we are fairly clear route we are going, the timing of troop withdrawals, etc.

With May 20 elections for National Assembly approaching and criticism by opposition party and possibly UNCURK of extent to which candidates are free to file and to run, he will probably resist any formula for the holding of elections for Assembly all over again in the South under UN supervision unless he is really convinced all-over national elections in both North and South will really facilitate workable non-Communist unification in best interests of country. Would appreciate guidance along following lines as soon as feasible :

1. Your probable timing on any new or alternate proposal.
2. When we should broach such proposal to President.
3. General lines such proposal may take.

Apart from discussion of your number 5 to Seoul<sup>3</sup> last Monday, want you to know conversations so far have been very general, and to inquire whether you have any suggestions for guidance. Present plans are to leave here next Friday<sup>4</sup> for Tokyo returning by way of Honolulu and San Francisco.

"Yang raised question whether general agreement existed on UN program for unification as basis our position, to which there was no dissent. In this connection, Johnson observed that we already have plan for unification as presented by Pyun yesterday and it is primarily question of when to table it in more specific form. Meeting agreed heads delegations should meet soon to reach decision this point."

CONFIDENTIAL

GENEVA, April 30, 1954—10 p. m.

Secto 57. Repeated information Seoul 23 Tokyo 15 London 101 Paris 158 Moscow 31 Oslo 2. Tokyo for CINCUNC. Department pass Defense, CINCPAC, COMSAC. Only speakers at short Fifth Plenary Session today over which Molotov presided were Cevat Acikalin of Turkey and Prince Wan of Thailand. In opening speech<sup>2</sup> Acikalin stressed importance UN action Korea in terms upholding principle of collective security and support UN decisions. Pointing out modern science has so shrunk world that security individual nation depends on security all nations, Acikalin said our sons who fought on battlefields of Korea serve not only common cause but also cause of own countries. While sacrifices in Korea resulted goal we set out achieve, "glorious martyred Korea" ruined by war still awaits justice. Our duty is restoration united free and independent Korea in conformity with UN resolutions to which we solemnly committed. Any other approach betrays justice and harms organization which guarantees our own security. Asserting Turkish delegation could not accept proposals by North Korean delegation which disregarded UN authority and would tend create chaotic situation likely bring about communist designs which resolute UN action has prevented, Acikalin expressed hope those who caused the ills have learned the lesson of events and will take the road we are determined to follow.

Stressing Thailand's firm support of UN as demonstrated its quick response to call for military and economic assistance ROK, Prince Wan declared Thai people understood significance UN action Korea, which turned principle collective security from abstract idealism to living reality.<sup>3</sup> Stating that task of conference was to conclude permanent peace in Korea, Wan quoted from Berlin resolution statement that establishment united independent Korea important factor in reducing international tensions and restoring peace in other parts of Asia. He cited Indochina as part of Asia in which Thailand "particularly interested as close neighbor and adjacent country."

Stressing that Thailand, particularly as Asian country strongly favored principle that "Asian people should form united independent states not divided in any way or subject to colonialism or imperialism in any form, old or new", Wan pointed out Thailand has kept independence throughout colonial period because pursued open-door policy granting equal opportunities for all powers and cooperating with them. In apparent but unspoken reference Chou En-lai and Molotov's speech, Wan declared: "Thailand, no less than other Asian nations, considers that peace in Asia should be ensured, that the independence and sovereignty of Asian nations should be respected and that the national rights and freedom of the Asian peoples should be safeguarded"; but added not necessary that good Asian be exclusive Asian, but to contrary Thai national experience indicated to be good Asian as well as good European, American or African, one has to cooperate peacefully with other nations organized in world community of free nations. Peace is world-wide, one and indivisible. Thus Thailand cooperates with US, UK and French as well as Southeast Asian neighbors with view promoting peace in that part of world. In closing Wan stated key to solution Korean question could be found in adapting and applying to present situation UNGA resolution of October 7, 1950.

Comment: Though short both speeches today gave strong support to principle collective security and to idea solution Korean problem along lines UN resolutions. Thai speech especially effective as answer to Chou En-lai pretense speak for peoples of Asia.

Following speeches, Molotov stated general agreement next plenary session May 3 and that only speaker inscribed was ROK delegate.

Robertson-Johnson-Pyun Meeting, Geneva, April 30, Afternoon: The United States Delegation to the Embassy in Korea

CONFIDENTIAL

GENEVA, April 30, 1954—10 p. m.

22. Repeated information Department Secto 58. For Briggs and Dean. Robertson and Johnson saw Pyun this afternoon with regard to proposal that there be restricted meeting of 7 (US, ROK, UK, and France from our side, and USSR, Communist China and North Korea from other side) to probe Communist intentions with regard Korean settlement. We told Pyun other side had indicated willingness to have such a meeting and we were inclined to feel it would be worthwhile, particularly before the Secretary's departure, in order make maximum effort determine whether any intent by other side reach settlement acceptable to ROK and US. However, before reaching decision US desired discuss with Pyun. If, as anticipated, others of 16 agreeable, restricted meeting will probably take place afternoon May 1. We told Pyun that at such a meeting Secretary would expect make it explicitly clear that we could not compromise on principle of elections under UN auspices, while stating we saw no reason that elections need be held other than in North Korea, that question of withdrawal foreign troops subject some scope in negotiations and possibility of demilitarized zone on both sides northern boundaries could be considered. We made it clear to Pyun that Secretary would be speaking entirely for US and would not commit ROK. This presentation would be in very general terms and designed so as to elicit Communist reactions and thus obtain some indication their intent. We indicated to Pyun the necessity for flexible position with respect scope of elections; but he made no comment except the necessity of not making "concessions" except in return for concessions from the other side.

Pyun stated he had no objection to such a meeting and that he "now" had entire confidence US not going to "sell ROK down the river". Pyun exhibited little interest in presentation Secretary would make at meeting and turned conversation to Indochina disclaiming any ROK interest, but pointing out disadvantages to US in reaching settlement too quickly in Korea, thus closing that front and releasing Chinese forces for use in Indochina.

He expressed view Communists anxious to reach settlement in Korea and professed fear Communists would accept present US-ROK unification proposal, thus forcing us into "premature" settlement in Korea before Indochina question is settled.

Pyun stated he had been approached on two occasions by number two man North Korean delegation in apparent attempt arrange meeting between Pyun and Nam Il. Pyun stated he replied that as it was hard to get out beyond the Iron Curtain, North Korean delegation should defect. Pyun stated in speech he proposes to make Monday at plenary, he will offer amnesty to North Koreans. He added he was doing this without authorization from Rhee and that if he could not "deliver" he would quit.

Secto 60. Repeated information Seoul 25, Tokyo 17, London 104, Paris 161, Moscow 33. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. Department pass Defense. This morning Secretary held chief delegates meeting to discuss suggestion for restricted meeting this afternoon of ROK, US, UK, France our side and USSR, Communist China and North Korea other side. Secretary referred to previous discussion among 16 of restricted meeting and repeated purpose would be try put discussion of Korean unification on more realistic basis. Secretary explained we would not present any position at small meeting but would suggest possible breakdowns into several major phases. Purpose of meeting would be discuss what would be most effective consideration these phases which are as follows: (1) Elections to be under UN auspices; (2) scope and character of elections; (3) disposition foreign troops in Korea;

(4) provision to protect Korean independence, including demilitarization of border area. After further comments by Secretary, Pyun and Eden no objection was expressed to holding smaller session and meeting adjourned.

Re scope elections Secretary said he feels strongly, and hoped 16 would agree, any concessions should be made in negotiations with Communists and not in free world offers. If there is any chance serious negotiation Korean unification and independence as he still thinks there is slight possibility, our side should not bargain away everything at once. However if conference is nothing more than propaganda show then we might put our best position forward first. If there is to be serious negotiation we should keep trading points in reserve as long as there is some hope of having the conference produce formula for unified Korea. Secretary said our two main trading points are scope of elections and removal foreign forces. He feels small group is necessary to feel out whether there is any possibility negotiations produce at Geneva genuine results.

Eden agreed on usefulness of smaller meeting for negotiations. Regarding scope of elections, he said UK would not say anything more about it until we see what happens in restricted meeting.

Pyun said he agreed with all of Secretary's remarks. ROK is prepared for small compromise in return for compromises from Communists. He emphasized it was not safe to show our hand before other side.

<sup>1</sup> A set of minutes of this meeting (SP Verb Min/1) is in FE files, lot 60 D 330, box 14824. The seven powers in attendance were the United States, the United Kingdom, France, the Republic of Korea, the Soviet Union, the People's Republic of China, and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. This was the only restricted session held on Korea.

assistants. General Smith, Robertson and Johnson accompanied Secretary. Secretary suggested and Molotov agreed to Eden as informal chairman on basis his turn chairman of the day. Seating was informal, non-Communist group contiguous.

At opening Secretary expressed satisfaction ability hold informal talks on assumption all were seriously seeking solution to problem faced by conference. Secretary then distributed "memorandum of principal points to be resolved in connection with the creation of a united and independent Korea"<sup>2</sup> containing following:

(1) Elections to be under UN auspices; (2) scope and character of elections; (3) disposition of foreign troops in Korea; (4) provision to protect Korean independence, including the demilitarization of border areas. The Secretary stated that these points seemed to be controversial aspects which would have to be resolved. In explanation memorandum, stated there seemed to be agreement on election some sort in some area, and it was important they be under auspices of UN. Whether the elections be only in North Korea or be nation-wide in scope was one of points of difference. We thought elections only in North Korea were required.

Then there was a question of foreign troops in Korea; that is, the UN forces in the south and the Chinese Communist forces in North Korea, and what should be done about them and the timing of their evacuation if they were to be evacuated in whole or in part.

There was then question of when Korea had achieved unity and independence, how maintenance could best be assured. In this regard might include demilitarization border areas both sides so as prevent any sudden attack and maintenance of no troops in areas having proximity to sensitive areas on either side.

Secretary then welcomed any suggestions as to whether this useful analysis, questions possibly being discussed in the order suggested, in some other order, or simultaneously in subcommittees.

Molotov stated he believed would be useful hear views North and South Korea. Nam Il then made long statement along lines his statement in plenary, rejecting any international supervision or observation of elections reiterating North Korean proposal and stressing elections throughout Korea, and withdrawal of foreign forces, stationing of any foreign troops in Korea being "foreign interference", UN and Chinese forces to be withdrawn "simultaneously" within six months. In this statement and several other times during course of meeting he asked how "renewal of war is to be prevented" if foreign troops not withdrawn.

Pyun stated preferred hear others before making statement. Molotov then made statement referring his speech at plenary and reiterating support of North Korean proposals, stressing Korean problem should be solved by Koreans themselves. He stated all foreign troops should be withdrawn "at least three months before elections". Chou En-lai then made statement supporting North Korean proposals saying that "they could become basis for discussion in reaching agreement". Criticized Secretary's memorandum on basis did not list divergent views nor include "concrete proposals". He repeated line on Koreans solving own problems and all-Korean elections, rejecting elections under UN auspices or while foreign forces in Korea. He reiterated Nam Il's statement withdrawal of forces should be within set time limit and simultaneously.

At close Chou statement Bidault asked how volunteers could be withdrawn "when they have not been sent". Chou replied with some heat Mr. Bidault failed recall armistice was signed on our side by UNC and on other side by DPRK and Chinese People's volunteers and that if armistice valid, why would agreement for withdrawal troops not be valid?

Molotov then made reference belligerent status UN in Korea and rejected elections under auspices of UN. At this point Secretary referred to draft Soviet resolution October 2, 1950,<sup>3</sup> observing that at that time Soviet Union apparently saw no incompatibility in UN having forces in Korea and its ability observe elections in Korea. Molotov obviously caught by surprise and did not recall resolution. After Secretary passed him our copy there was prolonged huddle in Soviet delegation while resolution being translated for Molotov and discussed. During huddle by Soviets, Eden made statement that while it was inescapable UN was party to dispute in Korea, everybody recognized elections must be supervised. Mentioned precedents for UN supervision and stated there must be UN supervision "in some form or other" if results to commend themselves to world opinion.

During this period Chou reiterated belligerent status UN in Korea, stating Communist China and DPRK "had no relation to UN" and stated if DPRK proposal accepted, question "representation DPRK in UN would not arise until after establishment unified Korea". During course of meeting Chou several times reiterated "this conference has nothing to do with UN".

Molotov finally replied Secretary's query by stating October 2, 1950 Soviet resolution had "provided indispensable participation of states bordering on Korea" and asked whether it was "now a question of such a commission". In reply Secretary stated question could possibly be discussed, but in meanwhile Chinese Communist regime had been declared aggressor, and therefore probably disqualified itself for such a role. Molotov replied with some heat branding UN resolution as "shameful, unjust and taken behind back of China", thereby disqualifying UN for any role in elections.

Chou then made flat statement that Korean war started by US, which also occupied Formosa and therefore US was aggressor. Passage of UN resolution had made UN lose moral authority. Eden replied UK could never accept fact disarmed South Korea had attacked North Korea or that US, which had withdrawn its troops from Korea had somehow become aggressor, and former UK Government had voted for resolution because it considered it in accordance with facts.

Pyun then asked whether commission proposed by North Koreans contemplated representation by population ratio or equally between north and south, pointing out population South Korea above 24 million, and asking Nam Il for population North Korea. By persistent questioning Pyun finally obtained clear statement from Nam Il that representation on commission would be equal between north and south and any decisions would require agreement both sides. Nam Il gave no answer on North Korean population.

Toward close of meeting Pyun made careful and reasoned statement reiterating ROK position, to which Nam Il and Chou replied and Pyun rejoined, there being considerable fencing as to who would have last word.

Secretary stated meeting had been "enlightening to US" but that he could not say he had been encouraged.

Eden expressed opinion had not gotten very far, to which Molotov replied that there had been "little effort toward getting together".

It was agreed no decision as to any further meeting would be taken until plenary Monday.<sup>4</sup> It was agreed that in pattern restricted meetings at Berlin, no statement would be made to press other than fact meeting had been held and countries attending. Secretary stated Eden would brief other 12 on confidential basis.

Meeting to brief 12 on today's meeting scheduled 10 a. m. Monday. In meantime US liaison officers will, as occasion arises, informally inform other delegations negative results of meeting.

Comment: No cracks apparent in solid Communist front nor slightest indication any willingness whatever modify their positions. Molotov was obviously sitting back letting Chou and Nam Il take the lead.

preliminary discussion among 16 and in working committee on counter plans, we have drafted tentative proposals along lines plan B. Text draft paper below. Have not shown to ROK or any other delegation.

Appreciate your views soonest on draft paper. Also if your discussions with Rhee on plan B warrant, suggest you inform him tentative contents draft paper for his comments and general approval if possible for developing plan with 16 and using in conference as situation develops.

Would give USDel strong hand and help us direct and control negotiating situation if US and ROK together take initiative among 16 on draft papers. Appropriate time and auspices for use such proposals in conference not yet discussed with ROK or other delegates. Draft paper contains essential principles on UN observation, elections, and troop withdrawal, but leaves room for changes on formulation of specifics if negotiations should develop at this stage, we have advantage UK and French views apparently similar to our plan B. They include specific reference UNCURK, elections within ROK constitutional structure, and permissive provision for assembly amend ROK constitution. Provision for UNCURK not unalterable if other satisfactory form UN auspices developed. But, UK and French delegates agree proposals should begin with UNCURK.

Bracketed phrases in part II A<sup>3</sup> of draft paper designed to get ROK reaction in first instance to questions scope and purpose of elections. If brackets deleted, believe proposals certain get general allied backing. USDel as yet still reserve position on these two points pending discussions with ROK.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Technical Secretary of the United States Delegation (Van Hollen)<sup>1</sup>

GENEVA, May 3, 1954.<sup>2</sup>

Participants:	The Secretary	Ambassador Johnson
	The Under Secretary	Mr. Phleger
	Mr. Robertson	Mr. Young

Subject: Guidance on Korea and Indochina Phases of Geneva Conference

Korean Phase

Support for UN—Ambassador Johnson asked the Secretary for guidance on the future of the Korean phase of the Conference, pointing out that all plenary speeches would probably be completed by Wednesday or Thursday<sup>3</sup> and that last Saturday's restricted session had not indicated any flexibility in the Communist position. Although it was hoped that the Allied side would be in a position to put forth a positive position—Plan B—within a short time, it did not appear that there was much likelihood or practicability of continuing the Korean phase for an extended period.

Mr. Robertson said that the Communists would probably press for the "international supervision" of elections in Korea as distinguished from elections under "UN supervision". He felt it important that we clearly specify to our Allies that we were insistent upon UN supervision, otherwise our Allies would urge us to accept "neutralist" countries as members of a supervisory commission. Ambassador Johnson agreed but pointed out that UN supervision of elections would not necessarily preclude the possibility of the USSR, India, or other similar countries serving on a supervisory commission.

The Secretary stated that we should stand firm on the proposition that the Geneva Conference should not degenerate into a repudiation of the United Nations. Although the Communists would say that the UN had intervened in the war in Korea, that such intervention was outrageous, etc., it was of utmost importance that the UN be upheld.

<sup>2</sup>The meeting must have taken place in the morning of May 3. The minutes of the meeting of 16, cited in footnote 1, infra, indicate that Eden left to bid farewell to Dulles who was leaving Geneva around midday and did not return for the balance of the Conference.

In fact, the issue of the UN and the entire concept of collective security was a much bigger issue at the conference than Korea. Should the conference end with a repudiation of the United Nations, the results could be tragic and actually lead to the end of the UN itself. While the Allies might attempt to derogate from the position of the UN, it was important that the US urge its Allies to continue to give strong support to the UN principle.

General U.S. Position—The Secretary agreed that the U.S. should adhere to a general position which would provide for the holding of all-Korean elections within the framework of the ROK constitution and under UN supervision. He felt we should take this position and stand on it.

Allied Proposal—Pointing out that the French wanted to have each country put up a proposal in its own name with the right of other delegations to comment on or amend such proposals, Mr. Phleger said that it was important that all Allied delegations reach agreement on a single proposal and that they stand together in support of this proposal. With reference to an Allied proposal, the Secretary felt the Communists would reject any supervised elections because of the repercussions of the acceptance of such supervision in Germany. On the question of supervised elections, the Communists would have Germany in mind, while the Allies should keep Indochina in mind.

Second Phase—Ambassador Johnson explained that when it is apparent that the unification efforts at Geneva had failed, we would be under considerable pressure, particularly from the British, to enter into some type of "second phase" in Korea. The British have in mind (1) a possible withdrawal of troops from their present positions and the establishment of a 40-50 mile buffer zone; (2) a ROK-North Korean transportation and communication arrangement; (3) customs union. Mr. Young added that if reunification failed at Geneva, the British also were thinking in terms of some type of permanent sub-commission, composed of the so-called "Big Five" plus the ROK and North Korea, which would be set up following Geneva in order to ameliorate tension between the two sides. It was generally agreed that such attempts to establish a modus vivendi between the ROK and the North Koreans would prove completely unacceptable to the ROK.

Mr. Phleger suggested that rather than say that the Geneva Conference had failed or consider the establishment of a "second phase", it would be advisable to refer the entire Korean question back to the UN, with an indication that the matter had always been before the UN and was, therefore, simply being sent back to the UN for further consideration.

Fourth Meeting of the Heads of the 16 Allied Delegations, Geneva, May 3, 11:10 a. m.: The United States Delegation to the Department of State<sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

GENEVA, May 3, 1954—11 p. m.

Secto 84. Repeated information Seoul 33, Tokyo 20, London 115, Paris 180, Moscow 39. Department pass Defense; Tokyo pass CINC-UNC. Fourth meeting chief delegates held this morning with General Smith presiding. Eden summarized Saturday's restricted meeting. He pointed out Molotov and Chou very sensitive on point of UN supervision elections; Pyun had successfully elicited Nam Il's views on North Korean proposals; and restricted meeting definitely useful showing clearly where representatives stood.

General Smith said even in light his experience negotiating with Russians he was surprised at vehemence against allies and particularly US at restricted meeting. He emphasized it would be policy US delegation meet false allegations and slander and solicited support other delegations. He also emphasized Secretary's view Communist assault on UN is serious and grave challenge to its integrity, good faith and future, and he solicited defense of UN from among delegations.

Considerable discussion followed on next steps in Korean conference. Eden pointed out question of future restricted meetings had been left open on Saturday so that matter could be reported back to heads of delegations for their consideration. Consensus of opinion: (1) Communist allegations and distortions should be countered; (2) important formulate definitive allied position soon as possible; and (3) this week's proceedings might develop with two or three plenary sessions, their [then?] postponement for no speakers until Friday<sup>2</sup> when allied proposals can be laid on line, completion of draft proposals by committee of nine, possibly another restricted small meeting, and possible informal discussion among certain delegations on preparations for Indochina phase.

Commonwealth delegates and Garcia (Philippines) emphasized lack concrete proposals puts allied delegations in awkward and difficult position. They urged definitive allied position soon as possible. Zuleta (Colombia) pointed out certain consultations were needed before allied proposals could be developed, and suggested committee of nine complete its work, plenary sessions be reduced, and interim be used counter Communist proposals. General Smith agreed weakness our present position is its purely negative character, pointed out time and difficulties faced in concerting among 16 governments, reported consultations proceeding in Seoul, and urged that committee of nine complete its business as rapidly as feasible. Acikalin (Turkey), while agreeing usefulness small restricted meetings to grasp root of other side's intentions, cautioned against permitting impression question of Korea is being dealt with only by great powers and China. General Smith and Eden agreed small meetings consultative only and all allied delegations should make publicly clear big powers not deciding Korean issue. Acikalin endorsed categorical refutation Communist distortions to improve our present position re public opinion.

Pyun said absolutely necessary develop common approach to Korean problem but also essential study Communist proposals item by item to formulate our definite position on which Communist terms we can accept or which not. He suggested plenary sessions could be used analyze Communist proposals. Pyun said ROK would reject North Korean proposals because they (1) set up All-Korea Commission superseding ROK and establishing coalition and (2) eliminate UN altogether by substitution international organization of their own.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Adviser to the United States Delegation (Calhoun)

CONFIDENTIAL

GENEVA, May 3, 1954.

Participants: Foreign Minister Pyun, ROK Delegation
 Ambassador Ben Limb, ROK Delegation
 Ambassador Johnson, United States Delegation
 Mr. Robertson, United States Delegation
 Mr. Young, United States Delegation
 Mr. Calhoun, United States Delegation

Subject: ROK Intention to Submit New Proposal to Plenary Session, May 3.

Following a telephone conversation between Mr. Robertson and Foreign Minister Pyun in which Mr. Robertson sought to dissuade

Dr. Pyun from including a specific new proposal in his speech to the Plenary on May 3, the above members of the American Delegation called on Dr. Pyun at his office.

Dr. Pyun opened the discussion by referring to Secretary Dulles' statement regarding the withdrawal of forces from Korea and stressed the necessity for not tying together the withdrawal of Chinese Communist and UN forces. He cited the points he had made in his first statement on this subject and stated that he understood the Secretary supported this view. He said also that the ROK could not retreat from opposition to the proposed all-Korean Commission and must attack the North Korean proposal. He said that failure to attack it would damage the allied cause and he therefore could not keep silent.

Mr. Robertson observed that Dr. Pyun had missed the point which he was trying to make. He emphasized the importance in maintaining solidarity among the 16 allied delegations on the details of any proposals presented, pointing out that the Communists always have full solidarity on their side and we must not weaken our position by taking steps in the conference without advance notification to the other delegations. Any division among the 16 resulting from the submission of a new specific proposal would benefit only the Communists. Ambassador Johnson interjected that he thought there was a misunderstanding and that we were referring only to the six-point proposal with which Dr. Pyun intended to conclude his speech.

Dr. Pyun suggested as a possible solution that following the plenary session on May 3 he would have a press conference and state that the specific proposal in his speech was put forward by the ROK and not by the 16. He mentioned the Australian delegation statements as being another example of failure to consult among the 16 before presenting a new idea to the conference. He said that he did not wish to follow this example. He added that since his first statement the other 15 delegations had not indicated disagreement with the proposal introduced by him in general terms. He added that if we do not attack the North Korean proposal and submit additional proposals on our side, the Communists will think there is no objection to their proposal.

Ambassador Johnson emphasized that we all agreed in rejecting the Communist proposal and will support the ROK position generally. He pointed out that in the meeting of the 16 that morning Dr. Pyun had said nothing about his intention to submit a new proposal.

Following consultation with members of his own delegation, Dr. Pyun agreed to delete the specific proposal from his speech that afternoon.

Sixth Plenary Session on Korea, Geneva, May 3, 3:05 p. m.: The United States Delegation to the Department of State<sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

GENEVA, May 4, 1954—1 a. m.

Secto 85. Repeated information Tokyo 21, London 116, Paris 183, Oslo 4, Seoul 34, Moscow 40. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. Department pass Defense, CINCPAC, COMSAC. Following is sixth plenary meeting May 3 summary :

Eden noted receipt of message from Prime Minister Ceylon transmitting extract South Asian Prime Minister's conference communiqué on Indochina.<sup>2</sup> He then called on ROK representative.

Pyun in long oratory rebutted April 27 Nam Il, April 28 Chou En-lai and April 29 Molotov speeches and reiterated unacceptability Nam Il unification proposal. Ambassador Yang gave English interpretation.

Pyun began by noting that free world concepts of peace, freedom, democracy, etc., have been perverted by Communists to become covers for own misdeeds. As example described terroristic activities of people's committees in north following liberation and noted Communists called this "democratic reform".

Pyun noted Nam Il allegation that US failed to live up to 1945 Moscow agreement, planned division of Korea and carried out separate 1948 elections with police interference. Pyun said facts were that in accordance with Moscow agreement of US-USSR, joint commission met for two years but broke down over USSR demand that nationalist elements comprising majority of population be excluded. USSR subsequently refused to permit UN Commission entry into North Korea. On eve 1948 elections in south, Communists attempted violent sabotage. Pyun concluded that Communists claim police interference only when their own terroristic activities are interfered with.

Pyun then directed attention to Nam Il's quotation from 1948 UNCOK report. Said quoted portion was communiqué which reported biased opinion only of one delegate, Mughir (Syria). According to Pyun, Mughir wanted to delay election until unity with those opposing elections, i.e., Communists, was achieved. Thus communiqué represented biased opinion of one man, not of commission as a whole.

<sup>2</sup> The meeting of Prime Ministers of Burma, Ceylon, India, Indonesia, and Pakistan took place in Colombo from Apr. 28-May 2. For the text of the communiqué, see Documents on International Affairs, 1954 (issued under the auspices of the Royal Institute of International Affairs; London, Oxford University Press, 1957), pp. 166-169.

In disparaging Nam Il's praise for North Korean achievements, Pyun noted that over four million North Koreans fled over 38th parallel to safety of ROK. Praised ROK land reform program. Said iron curtain precluded expose true conditions North Korea.

Regarding Nam Il's statement on POW's "forcibly retained by ROK," Pyun said ROK's regarded all Koreans, including Nam Il, as brethren and as ROK citizens. He noted that not one of thousands of Koreans abducted by North Korean regime during autumn 1950 retreat has been sent back to ROK.

Pyun then asked Nam Il whether he still believed in Communism, after Communist China has trampled on Korea's sovereignty. Communist China now has one adviser beside each nominal North Korean official, and one million Chinese Communist troops live off Korean land. North Koreans are being deported to make room for incoming Chinese peasants. Therefore, Nam Il and others should now repent and join ROK, which would "embrace them in warm brotherly love" and offer them all possible assistance.

Characterizing Chou and Molotov statements as lies and distortions, Pyun selected Chou's charge that US was obstructing Asia's desire for liberation. Pyun said that fact was imperialist is Red China, or USSR, since Red China is merely stooge of USSR. Cited destruction of nationalism in European satellites. Stated that bloc being formed by US in Asia is defensive, although he personally impatient and regretted present indecisive leadership in free world. Said better to smash python's head than try to twist its tail.

Pyun then deflated Chou's assertions that CPR represented Chinese people and that it has made progress, calling it merely satellite cringing at feet of Molotov.

Repeating appeal Communist brethren to return to ROK, Pyun called North Korea a "satellite's satellite".

Noting Molotov's urgings that Koreans evict foreigners and settle own problems themselves, Pyun said he suspected there would be Communists in North Korea for some time regardless of any agreements reached, and ROK had right to keep its own friends around. Referring Molotov's allegation Americans had intervened in Korea, ROK felt that if what US had done for ROK was intervention it is exactly what ROK desired and only complaint not quite as much as we desire. American intervention does not imply taking things away from native population, but rather assisting them.

Pyun dismissed Molotov's contention that US was aggressor in Korea and Formosa and asked whether Molotov thought UN should condemn US rather than Communist China. Pyun said USSR used Security Council veto some 50 times including veto ROK admission but complains about US opposition admission Red China to UN.

Pyun said USSR protestations of love of freedom for other nations not persuasive. He said contrary to US position USSR did not propose use of Korean language at Geneva and this shows Communist China and USSR oblivious of North Korean regime as separate entity.

In conclusion, Pyun said Nam Il proposal was unacceptable because it (1) provided for an all-Korean government on a coalition basis, means of establishing other Soviet satellites; (2) excludes UN; and (3) provides interference by international body of countries of own choice replacing UN Commission.

During above speech Nam Il impassive but slowly wrote notes, presumably changes in his speech, which he passed other members North Korean delegation for comment.

Eden then called on Nam Il,<sup>3</sup> who said he would rebut certain other statements made at conference and clarify certain points of his own proposal. Asserted that reference to certain UN resolutions adopted in absence DPROK unacceptable and without foundation.

Nam Il then quickly reiterated highlights of his April 27 proposal and launched into explanation of troop withdrawal item saying six months period originally specified, but other times could perhaps be worked out. Said US opposition to simultaneous withdrawal suggests US has intentions to use Korea as springboard for attack on China. Felt troops have a long way to go in event evacuation, Korean people do not look forward to their return.

Nam complained that Secretary Dulles said nothing about point three of his proposal. Stated participating nations must agree on measures to create improved conditions which would prevent renewal of hostilities as a basis of peaceful development of Korea. The great powers should further undertake specific obligations to guarantee independence of Korea and refrain from interference in Korean affairs.

Nam alleged US and other delegations insist elections in only North Korea, under supervision of UN and ROK, while demanding withdrawal of Chinese forces. Asserted Australian representative had admitted justice of DPROK proposal to hold all-Korean elections. Nam then drew on US and UK press stories and UN Commission reports covering period from 1948 elections through summer 1952 ROK political crisis to show that ROK is police state and that original elections invalid.

Nam also attempted historical citations including alleged September 1949 Rhee letter to Oliver and captured map in effort prove US and ROK guilty of 1950 aggression. Stated US intervened militarily in Korea before appropriate UN resolution was passed, and called attention to Rhee's demand for march to north even after armistice. Nam warned if this was tried "Korean people" would deliver crushing blow. Speech also contained veiled undercurrent of threat to renew hostilities if agreement not reached at Geneva. Nam said preceding Pyun address such slanderous, fallacious, false statement obviously not worthy of rebuttal.

Referring to request of Australian representative for clarification of DPROK proposal for all-Korean mixed commission, Nam Il said he had in mind bilateral body which would adopt decisions by mutual agreement of both sides. Organizational procedure and number of members should also be subject to mutual agreement. He said that any difficulties such as Australian representative was worrying about could be easily surmounted by Korean people themselves.

Following break Greek Foreign Minister Stephanopoulos briefly pointed out that forces his government provided in defense of Korea were sent to fulfill obligation to uphold UN Charter and UN principle of collective security. Stephanopoulos stated that he would not support North Korean proposal.<sup>4</sup>

Chou En-lai, who had inscribed himself during Pyun's speech, began by long attack on US insistence upon use of UN resolutions as basis solving Korean question, which was largely rehash his first speech in plenary.<sup>5</sup> Relied heavily on old arguments that resolutions "illegal" and that UN disqualified itself from dealing with Korea because of its belligerency.

According to Chou, US has opposed Nam Il's demands for withdrawal of foreign forces on grounds that US forces are of a different character. He said this true, but difference is that US forces are aggressors. Picking up analogy from Nam Il speech above, he suggested that US forces should be able to withdraw full 5,000 miles that they had come to engage in hostilities in Korea. Said withdrawal must be simultaneous and within definite period.

Chou then supported point three Nam Il's proposal, as clarified, as basis for agreement at Geneva. Chou castigated Foreign Minister Pyun's statement as slanderous ravings uttered for benefit of his master, Syngman Rhee. Said shameless that Pyun's only complaint was that there was not enough US intervention.

Re prisoners of war, Chou asserted that US refusal to abide by repatriation provisions of Geneva convention was root of all difficulties. Recounted alleged US connivance at ROK June 1953 unilateral release of 27,000 prisoners of war, US obstruction of work of NNRC and impressment of POW's in ROK and Chiang Kai-shek armies in violation armistice.

In conclusion Chou put forward proposal, which he stated had DPROK concurrence, providing that :

(1) Measures be taken to return nonrepatriated Korean and Chinese POW's impressed in June 1953 and January 1954;

(2) Commission of US, UK, France, USSR, DPROK and ROK be established to solve this problem;

(3) Joint Red Cross team, representing these nations, be sent to present location of POW's for inspection.

Eden closed meeting at 6:25 p. m. after stating that Canada and Netherlands were inscribed for tomorrow.

Comment: Nam Il's statement followed standard Communist line, and centered upon singling out US as aggressor, whereas Chou sought discredit UN role in Korean reunification. Nam Il's speech was first admission in nonrestricted session that commission under his plan would have equal number Communist members and would give Communist veto over its decisions.

question for his determination on which we technically had no right to make suggestions, but since we were supporting ROK Government in every way we could, wanted to make suggestion purely on a friendly basis in order that ROK might stand in best possible light before world.

President made long and somewhat rambling dissertation on lack of confidence of Korean people in DNP and alleged interference of UNCURK in previous elections and seemed particularly grieved and critical about their report to General Assembly in fall of 1952.

Then we emphasized fundamental importance of appearance democratic elections as well as being so in fact.

Then turned to brief review of events of last few days and outlined Casey's public proposal and Cuenco's private proposal made inside group<sup>6</sup> and explained urgent necessity of ROK and ourselves putting forward a plan which would demand unanimous and enthusiastic approval all on our side. Then explained plan B in some detail and said we were confident his government would receive overwhelming approval in south. Explained simultaneous elections in north and south far more convincing evidence of democracy and in accordance UN resolutions, and that it would prove to world that his was a completely free and constitutional government. Emphasized importance that USSR should not be able to point to any division on our side or to any plan on our side which somewhat approximated Nam Il's plan to combine north and southern Assemblies in order to bring in new government.

President was very mild and pleasant throughout and said that even under plan A he envisaged as essential to have before elections not only complete withdrawal of Chinese Communist forces but even complete withdrawal of North Korean Communist army or its complete surrender. He said its complete surrender would be followed by immediate pardon for all those who renounced Communism and declared their allegiance to ROK Government and that others would be placed in custody. Further, he said that if thereafter there were elections in north alone under UN supervision he was completely prepared put up to people of both north and south in form of a plebiscite question whether they then wanted simultaneous elections in both north and south for both National Assembly and President, and that if people voted they did in plebiscite he was quite prepared to have elections for Assembly and President in both north and south under UN supervision and that he would in no sense stand in way if people wished to elect a new government or new President.

Explained that while we had visualized phased withdrawal of Chinese Communist troops together with UN troops in south starting in part before elections, we had not visualized complete withdrawal Chinese Communist forces before election or surrender or handling of North Korean Communist armies as he visualized. He insisted this was only practical way to handle it.

We explained that our plan B, except for timing of troop withdrawal, was same as he outlined above except we would eliminate necessity for plebiscite first. He replied he wasn't dictator and considered plebiscite essential.

Explained I wasn't asking for any decision on plan B but was merely discussing it with him in order to get benefit of his judgment for you.

He continued to emphasize futility further negotiations at Geneva and we explained necessity allow all our allies who had contributed troops in fighting to have their complete say and to listen to their proposals, and for our side to put forward entirely acceptable plan with his approval.

He said there was no point to unification if immediately thereafter Communists would come south, and emphasized that if Eisenhower government gave him military divisions and logistical support he needed, he would promise not to attack Communists in north if they did not attempt to come south. He evidently believes he is going to receive such complete promises military support from Van Fleet mission that prospect of total withdrawal of UN forces is unimportant.

Again urged him to give matter thorough and careful study.

As he appeared to be tired ended interview and will see tomorrow. He said he regarded discussion as most constructive and helpful. While have nothing conclusive to report, interview on whole went quite favorably with reasoned discussion and no fireworks.

With reference to criticism of current elections he is issuing statement promising to act immediately if anybody has any evidence of illegality with respect to May elections. Evidence continues to point to very complete police intimidation of opposing candidates, threats to businessmen contributing to opposition, tearing down posters, mass demonstrations to stifle opposition, etc., and news may continue bad. With reference to Department's telegrams 874, 881, and Geneva's 21,<sup>7</sup> while fully appreciating importance of world opinion to ROK Government, would like guidance on how strong we should go about making representations concerning necessity of holding free, unsuppressed, and democratic elections on May 20 and urging him to allow UNCURK full facilities for observation. For if he follows our recommendations respect May 20 elections and they are regarded by UNCURK as democratic and satisfactory have we not to certain extent hurt ourselves in connection with urging necessity of plan B? Also, if we urge UNCURK to get really active and there is an adverse report with respect to May 20 elections haven't we accentuated publicity?

Re Geneva's 26,<sup>8</sup> Dean will delay departure subject Secretary's further instructions. Please notify office and family.

It left to the discretion of the Embassy in Korea the possibility of further discussions with Rhee on this subject. (795.00/5-354)

SEOUL, May 4, 1954—11 a. m.

1108. Repeated priority USDel Geneva 40. For Secretary from Dean. Reference Geneva's 32,<sup>1</sup> following very preliminary comments:

1. In view our 38<sup>2</sup> you may wish define "foreign". If procedures as to NNSC under armistice agreement followed, will UNCURK really be allowed supervise withdrawal Communist troops? In interview Dean had with General Mohn last Friday, who succeeded Grafstrom on NNSC, Mohn strongly recommends NNSC's complete abolition under armistice agreement on account its complete unworkability and complete refusal Communists respect any wording except in highly uncooperative technical sense defeating intended meaning and hence enormous advantage Communists have with their inspections over US who live up to spirit in south.

2. In view our 38 should we amplify "necessary conditions?"

2. [II] B. Should there be same length of home residence required in one part of Korea as other? What will be definition of "citizens?" Will Chinese Communist immigrants into North Korea be citizens? Will Communists who are not pardoned by ROK be counted as citizens et cetera; namely will ROK decrees depriving Communists of citizenship be recognized for voting purposes?

2. [II] F. Does freedom of movement mean Communists in North Korea can freely come South during elections? Suggest adding freedom to file petitions without molestation or police intimidation of signers, affording proper police protection for meetings. How large do you envisage UNCURK forces in North at time of elections will really be before complete withdrawal Communist forces? Who will house and feed them?

4. [IV] Is not "both sides" hold over from armistice as will be only one all-Korean Government?

Will not Korean Communist forces have to be disarmed and ROK forces recognized as only legitimate army in all of Korea after organization all-Korean Government?

Mohn ridiculed to me "ports of entry" in armistice agreement and said everything came through other nondesignated ports with no way for NNSC to supervise so might as well rely on Communist good faith, since their ability to inspect our honest records in South gave them tremendous intelligence advantage and therefore we are really kidding ourselves about advantage in North of having any so-called neutral agency do checking.

Do you still plan on recommendation (C) of 7 October, 1950 about cooperation of representative bodies in view previous Communist experience this regard?

Also refer you to recommendation (D).

In II B. presume you mean "X" representatives to "Y" population and not technical system of proportional voting designed to give minorities a voice—would spell out a little more.

II E [D]. Actual voting can be in secret but if Chinese Communist troops not withdrawn voters can be intimidated at homes before voting or threatened or kept from polls or roughed up afterwards so fear may keep many from voting or may sway their vote. Difficult for temporary commission to have much effect.

II E. Who will appropriate authorities be before elections? Will law of North Korea be co-related with those of South Korea before elections?

II F. With government controlled press and radio doesn't mean much.

II G. This requires collaboration between ROK and Communist North Korean authorities with Rhee recognizing latter for this purpose before elections.

III B. What is meaning "constituent"?

IV. Will be extremely difficult to govern North for a year if Chinese Communist forces are to remain there. In this period what do you visualize relation of present North Korean forces will be?

V. Would unified Korean Government be free to adopt mutual defense pact with US and one or more treaties of alliance with USSR and her satellites now in effect with North Korean Government?

VII B. Would this require US to give up bases and right to station troops under defense pact—in other words unified government won't be free to extend bases to US as in Spain, Holland, et cetera.

Seventh Plenary Session on Korea, Geneva, May 4, 3:05 p. m.: The United States Delegation to the Department of State<sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

GENEVA, May 4, 1954—11 p. m.

Secto 102. Repeated information Tokyo 22, London 120, Paris 199, Oslo 5, Seoul 40, Moscow 45. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. Department also pass Defense, CINCPAC, COMSAC.

Seventh plenary session May 4 consisted speeches by representatives Canada, Netherlands and Ethiopia.<sup>2</sup> At conclusion session Prince Wan Thailand presiding announced no further speakers were inscribed. Suggested that Wednesday and Thursday could profitably be spent in informal discussions and proposed next plenary session be held Friday, May 7. Proposal accepted.

Pearson, head Canadian delegation, delivered eloquent defense of United Nations and US, attacked Molotov and Chou speeches and dissected North Korean unification proposal. Pearson stated Canada represented at conference because she is UN member and that responsibilities of conference derive solely from decisions taken by UN on Korean question. He stated that Canada has supported and remains bound by UN decisions and that Canada will not support any proposal which denies their validity or which would equate moral and political status of UN with aggressors in Korea.

Pearson quoted Molotov's expression of sympathy with movements for national freedom and expressed hope that any people attaining freedom would do better than Lithuania, Bulgaria or Mongolian People's Republic. Pearson also observed that right to be free does not include obligation to be Communist. He further remarked that it would be no contribution to Asian peace or prosperity, independence or dignity, if East Asian co-prosperity sphere were exchanged for Chinese East Asian co-Communist empire.

Pearson vigorously defended US against Communist charges of aggressive imperialism, citing Canadian experience with her powerful neighbor as proof of nonaggressiveness of US people.

Pearson explicitly rejected Communist charge that US began Korean hostilities and compared such charges with "those which came out of Moscow and Berlin in September 1939, to prove that peace-loving Nazi Germany had been the innocent victim of aggression by Poland".

Pearson asked if Chou's call for removal of foreign troops from Asia included Russians at Port Arthur. With respect to Chou's injection of POW issue, Pearson stated that it is difficult to understand why Chou raised this issue if he sincerely desired to press forward to a solution of the Korean problem.

Pearson expressed suspicion that North Korean reunification plan includes "words and phrases designed to camouflage a scheme which would bring to Korea the reverse of freedom and independence". He particularly attacked the proposed all-Korean commission with its built-in Communist veto. He asked several penetrating questions concerning North Korean plan: (1) Would "democratic social organizations" exclude anti-Communist or non-Communist organizations; (2) how would representatives of these organizations be chosen for this all-Korean commission?; (3) does phrase "terror groups" mean anti-Communist political parties?; (4) if no UN or other impartial international supervision, how can free elections be guaranteed in districts where bitter animosities, fears and local tyrannies make impartial Korean supervision quite impossible?; (5) "Does Nam Il really wish us to believe that representatives of North Korea feel they can work amicably and constructively on all-Korean commission with representatives of what he contemptuously calls the 'Syngman Rhee clique'?"

Pearson stated solution for unification problem must be found in principles of UN resolution providing for union of all Korean people under government chosen by those people. United Korea, he added, will need some international guarantee against aggression and some international economic assistance to repair destruction of war.

In concluding Pearson referred to Colombo Conference resolution as "an important and constructive effort by group of free Asian states to assist in, and I hope take some responsibility for, peaceful settlement of Asian problems in their part of the world." In unspoken reference to Chou's allegation UN had lost moral authority in Asia he called attention to importance attached in Colombo resolution to role of UN.

Pearson's final word was warning that "failure here may well necessitate further collective consideration by those who, as result of such failure, will feel increasingly threatened, of further ways and means to meet that threat."

Luns, Netherlands Minister for Foreign Affairs, followed with a deliberate defense of the US and UN. He skillfully answered many allegations made by Nam Il and Chou En-lai in their speeches of May 3. He stated that reason Netherlands Government is represented is to maintain principle of collective security and to realize UN ideals that unification in Korea must not be achieved except by will of people freely expressed in secret elections. He reiterated Netherlands Government will "not be found guilty of having failed to confer full justice to this principle." He likened general statements of Soviet Union, People's Republic of China, and DPROK to those introduced in eight years of UN debate by representatives of Communist Governments. He expressed surprise that same technique was being used in special conference for establishment of peace in Asia. Luns doubted any agreement could be reached "if everything which is in conformity with a dogmatic blueprint of Communist theory is being labeled as good, and everything which is not fitting in with this blueprint is being condemned in offending terms."

In answer to the Communist allegations that US was guilty of aggression against Korea, he stated that four years of investigation and endless discussion in UN have made it abundantly clear who was responsible for war.

Referring to Nam Il's speech on 3 May relating to character of 1948 elections in ROK, Luns expressed amusement that Communist representatives are "lecturing us with regard to democratic processes and freedom of elections." He pointed out UN investigations found character of ROK elections satisfactory and quoted resolution of temporary commission on Korea adopted by General Assembly on 12 December 1948, which he stated erased all doubts.

Regarding Nam Il's proposal of April 27 for free and democratic elections, Luns expressed view that such concept sounds democratic but in reality has nothing in common with true democracy nor with free expression of wishes of Korean people.

Referring to Chou En-lai's vigorous attack on UN of 3 May, he stated that he failed to see what common base is left to this conference for fruitful discussion leading to mutually satisfactory agreements. He made point that if it was Chou's intentions to split ranks of free world by making it appear that interests of Asian countries lie elsewhere than interests of non-Asian ones, or that countries which recognize PRC are divided on Korea, he desired to remind him of some well-established facts. He then referred to Security Council resolution of June 27, 1950 which determined North Korea as aggressor, supported by India's vote; to General Assembly resolution of October 7, 1950 which reaffirmed aim of unified, independent and democratic Korea with UN forces remaining until no longer required; and the resolution introduced in Security Council November 10, 1950 calling inter alia for withdrawal of Chinese forces from Korea and assuring China protection its legitimate interests, supported by Norway and the UK. He added fact that this resolution was killed on November 30 by Soviet veto.

Luns also referred to fact that group of 13 Asian states, a considerable number of which had recognized People's Republic of China, and all members of UN, had appealed to the Peiping Government not to allow its forces to cross 38th parallel. He cited General Assembly resolution of December 14 which brought Ambassador Wu as Chou En-lai's representative to Lake Success to negotiate an end to conflict in Korea. He emphasized that Wu was ordered to leave by Chou En-lai on December [19,] 1950 and did not meet with UN Commission.

Luns used long Communist delay accepting principles December 3, 1952 General Assembly resolution submitted by India to offset Chou's argument that US was responsible for delaying armistice negotiations.

Luns expressed hope that this misrepresentation of facts by Communists will not continue.

Ethiopian delegate, Zawde Gabre Heywot, briefly reaffirmed his nation's loyalty to UN and to principle of seeking establish just and durable peace through collective security. Defined purpose of conference as completion task of unification of Korea by peaceful and democratic means as called for in UN resolutions. Noted that under UN sponsorship representative government had been established in South Korea and referred to ROK as only legal government in Korea. Made only general references to issues before conference. Said problem of elections was where and by what means they should be conducted. In this connection, called attention to fact UN Commission already in existence. Concerning withdrawal problem, merely stated UN had no desire keep troops in Korea indefinitely.

Comment: Net effect day's session was strengthen picture broad Allied unity which had become somewhat blurred due to failure many friendly delegations respond promptly with strong defenses UN and US and with rebuttal Communist charges. Pearson's analysis North Korean unification plan and reassertion basic principles of UN resolutions particularly effective.

SECRET      PRIORITY

SEOUL, May 4, 1954—4 p. m.

1110. Repeated information priority Tokyo 654, priority Geneva 41. Tokyo pass CINCUNC exclusive for General Hull. For the Secretary from Dean. Ambassadors Briggs and Dean called on President Rhee and acting Foreign Minister Cho this morning and delivered copy of tentative draft.<sup>1</sup> In retyping we omitted brackets and left in text words formerly in brackets. In II-D we left in "throughout Korea" and struck out "in Korea". We also handed President following statement:

"Our draft for establishment of united and independent Korea, if it meets with President Rhee's approval, would give American delegation and ROK strong negotiating hand versus Communists.

"It would help US and ROK to direct and control negotiating situation at Geneva, and enable US and ROK to take initiative among 16 UN nations contributing troops in proposing sound and constructive plan. An appropriate time and auspice for use such proposals at Geneva conference has not yet been discussed with other delegations. Draft paper contains essential principles on UN observation of elections and troop withdrawal, but leaves room for changes as situation develops.

"Proposed plan is in accordance with UNGA resolution of 14 November 1947, of 12 December 1948, of 21 October 1949, and of 7 October 1950: 'that all constituent acts be taken, including holding of elections, under auspices of UN, for establishment of unified independent and democratic government on sovereign state of Korea.'

"At this stage of conference we and ROK have advantage of UK and French views which are apparently similar to our tentative plan. These views include specific reference to UNCURK, to elections within the ROK constitutional structure, and to permissive provision for newly elected National Assembly to amend ROK constitution as provided by its terms."

President Rhee read out loud above statement and tentative draft proposal. He asked two specific questions:

- (1) Will the Communists accept it?
- (2) If he agreed to it could he have the Secretary's assurances that we would stand on this and that we would not feel compelled to go to some other proposal in order to appear reasonable before the world in relation to the Communists?

He feels that the more intransigent position the Communists take the more we feel we should make concessions in order appear reasonable before the world and since Communists are not impressed by the concessions he wondered whom we were trying to impress. In answer to first question we said that at closed meeting Molotov and Chou En-lai had supported Nam Il's proposal of merging two Assemblies and rejecting UN supervision and at present could not see much real prospect of Communist acceptance. As to second question we said we would ask instructions. President very pleasant and agreeable throughout.

With reference penultimate paragraph your 41, we do not think Communists will accept in view of unequivocal statements of Nam Il, Molotov and Chou En-lai. However it is essential that if and when conference fails that US-ROK proposals upon which it breaks enjoy full support not only of 16 nations but of free world opinion. This is not a question of conference tactics but of maintenance of unqualified US public opinion as well as other free world support for ROK in future.

With reference Rhee's second question, we are prepared to stand firm on basic principles embodied this proposal.

Plenary sessions have been suspended until Friday, May 7. Highly important that by that date ROKs, US and others of sixteen have agreed upon formal proposal embodying plan B.

SECRET NIACT

SEOUL, May 5, 1954—5 p. m.

45. Sent priority Department 1115, repeated information Tokyo 657. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. For the Secretary and Smith from Dean. Ambassador Briggs and Dean called on President early this morning. Acting Foreign Minister Cho, Minister of Defense and Prime Minister present. Reference Geneva's 39,<sup>1</sup> explained probably intransigent attitude USSR and Chinese Communists at Geneva and apparent small possibility agreement and therefore imperative necessity free world standing together and presenting united front and united proposal which would command unquestioned free world opinion. Told him we were prepared to stand firm on basic principles set forth in plan B and urged him to authorize Pyun accept without necessity of any [troop withdrawal?] as condition to holding of elections in both North and South.

We were interrupted by necessity his going to make scheduled public appearance at children's festival and will go back at 2 p. m.

They are all sincerely troubled by provisions in plan B which presupposes simultaneous elections in North and South although Chinese Communists in North have only begun to withdraw according I and IV plan B.

Referring to supposed free elections elsewhere, where Soviet troops present, they asked if we seriously believed it would be possible to hold anything like free elections in North so long as Chinese Communist troops still in North or North Korean troops remain unsurrendered. They ridiculed idea of a civilian organization such as UNCURK, even though enhanced by numerous civilian observers, bringing about free elections and again cited experience east European countries.

They cannot understand why, since Chinese Communists are aggressors and UN forces were invited by UN and ROK, there should be any corresponding withdrawal from South as envisaged by IV and President insists we are merely paving way for repetition 1949 withdrawal and 1950 aggression. Cites long experience General Hodge <sup>2</sup> in attempting to get Soviets to agree and to carry out anything even when agreed.

They are also fearful that next step after elections in North with Chinese Communist armies present would be demand for coalition government which they say Korean people would never accept. They also feel simultaneous elections somehow constitute reflection on existing ROK Government which they regard as sovereign and as so recognized by United Nations after free elections. (Plan not very clear that ROK constitution remains in effect throughout. Believe II (e) (g) bothers President as presupposes North Korean legislation and co-operation Communists.)

Urged President keep open mind and not to draft anything before we return at 2 p. m. At that time will urge necessity revised instructions to Pyun along line your 39 and that it is an essential favorable American public opinion re ROK that we stand together at Geneva. They have basic fear that plan B is merely first step in whittling-down process. President made long plea for collective security pact for entire Pacific with instantaneous striking power. Fact ROK Government was not included in Secretary's recent discussions still rankles.

Do you think possible amend plan B by making provision for Chinese Communist withdrawal much more specific before elections actually held? Such as: "Before elections are held under observation of UNCURK all Chinese forces shall have been withdrawn from Korea, or such withdrawal shall have taken place to the point where UNCURK shall certify that the remaining Communist troops constitute no threat to the holding of democratic elections free from intimidation", or some similar general provision. Believe President will also want same assurance about North Korean Communist army. Again, since ROK is sovereign and not the aggressor they can't understand why they should be stripped of protection in order to get aggressor out if they desire United Nations forces stay.

Fundamentally, they don't trust any piece of paper either the Soviets or the Chinese or North Korean Communists will sign. They further believe once paper signed, we will urge them to cooperate even though Soviets do not in order satisfy world opinion which will leave them in undefendable position.

Dean-Briggs-Rhee Meeting, Seoul, May 5, 2 p. m.: The Ambassador in Korea (Briggs) to the United States Delegation

SECRET      PRIORITY

SEOUL, May 5, 1954—8 p. m.

48. Sent Department 1119, repeated information Tokyo 659, Tokyo pass CINCUNC. For the Secretary and Smith from Dean. Re Embassy telegram 1115, repeated Geneva 45.<sup>1</sup> Ambassadors Briggs and Dean saw President Rhee, Prime Minister, Acting Foreign Minister Cho and Minister Defense at 2 o'clock. Again presented reasons why we felt essential modify instructions to Pyun and authorize presentation plan B. Their reasons against were (1) plan derogates from sovereignty of ROK Government, (2) no authority to have elections proposed by plan under ROK constitution, (3) announcement of such new elections for Assembly and President would cause great consternation in Korea and cause ordinary people to believe Communists gaining so much this concession was demanded by Communists, (4) in effect we are asking Rhee to resign, (5) utterly impossible to hold elections while Chinese Communist forces in Korea and Soviets constitute mass threat on border and unless ROK gets complete administrative control of North Korea before elections take place.

We again pointed out very important that American public opinion should not believe there is any lack of cooperation between ROK and US at Geneva and essential present plan commanding respect and constitution amendable.

After much discussion and against arguments of Prime Minister and Defense Minister, President Rhee tentatively agreed following draft:

“(1) Upon the condition that the Chinese Communist forces withdraw from Korea;

“(2) Upon the promise of the Chinese Communists and the USSR that they will not re-enter Korean territory with armed forces and again become aggressors against Korea, then the ROK is willing to undertake that pursuant to ROK constitution and its electoral laws, free and democratic election, without Communist or outside interference for the National Assembly and the President of Korea shall be held in North and South Korea under the observation of the UN”.

Term UN rather than UNCURK used because President objects to that organization and we let pass this afternoon in hopes to get an agreement on principle. Also realize USSR not declared aggressors.

After above agreed draft was typed President insisted there should be inserted after “aggressors against Korea” words to following effect “and if US stands by us”.

Pointed out that Korea already had military defense pact although Acting Foreign Minister Cho indicated they are somewhat concerned that it had not been formally ratified and published and President indicated there was certain amendments to it which they wish discuss. (See Embassy telegram 1107, May 3.<sup>2</sup>) Did not seem advisable to mention to him joint declaration of July 27, 1953 in Washington of 16 UN members contributing troops to respond in case of aggression but pointed out did not seem appropriate to refer to any agreement with US in proposed presentation of plan B at Geneva or in effect to use language which would appear to commit US beyond precise text mutual defense pact already ratified by Senate. President left matter to Ministers to decide.

Prime Minister and Defense Minister again argued publication of this draft would cause great consternation in Korea and would afford Communists much propaganda. Seemed quite obvious President was trying to extract some further promise and was tiring. So after two hours ended discussions this afternoon and arranged to see him tomorrow. Discussion friendly.

Would appreciate knowing status mutual defense pact and whether any serious discussions for its amendment under way and suggestions above language.

In going over above draft with President, President fully appreciates not in accord plan B I and IV. President is thoroughly familiar so-called free elections with Soviet troops present in Europe and extremely difficult, if not impossible to sell them idea of elections in North if Chinese Communist troops present or North Korea Communist troops have not been disarmed. He considers this complete appeasement.

Reference plan B in view President's dislike of UNCURK would suggest elimination last sentence plan. After some unified and sovereign government established in Korea, why should UNCURK function further in Korea?

In IV would suggest using term "unification" rather than "reunification" and standard terminology such as "unified Korea" or "unified government of Korea" throughout rather than "all-Korean Government" which conveys idea of coalition.

In III A suggest revision so as not to indicate ROK government not presently legitimate government in Korea or that new government is necessarily formed.

SECRET      NIACT

WASHINGTON, May 5, 1954—3:15 p. m.

Tosec 75. Secto 72 sent Seoul 32.<sup>2</sup> Department has following suggested modifications draft paper presenting Plan "B". These take account Ambassador Dean's comments.

1. Use word "shall" instead of "will" or "should" wherever provision is mandatory.

2. Section II A should be revised to read "Within period of blank months from adoption of these proposals and following determination and announcement by UNCURK that necessary conditions for free elections exist, there shall be held throughout Korea at a date selected by UNCURK elections for the president and National Assembly of unified Korea."

3. Modify first sentence II E to read, "Elections shall be supervised and observed by UNCURK." Delete second sentence since Commission can not insure these things. Modify final sentence to read, "Results of the elections shall be considered valid expression of free will of people of Korea where Commission has so certified." This modification makes clear power of Commission to declare results invalid.

4. Section II F. "Freedom of movement in Korea" is ambiguous and in pre-election period presents disadvantage of making possible Communist infiltration South Korea. Prefer elimination of phrase.

5. Rewrite II G as follows to tape down UNCURK's rights and endeavor avoid NNSC type difficulties:

"All authorities within Korea shall cooperate fully in ensuring that elections are properly conducted under necessary safeguards as determined by UNCURK. The Commission shall have the right to travel freely throughout Korea so as to make such observations and investigations as it deems necessary."

6. Section IV. Suggest substitute here and throughout paper "non-Korean forces" for "foreign forces". Phrase "will be coordinated with both sides" should read "shall be coordinated with military commanders non-Korean forces".

7. Section V. Suggest rephrasing to read as follows:

"Parties to agreement pledge their respect for territorial integrity and political independence of unified Korea. This pledge shall become effective when unified government shall have declared its intent abide by purposes and principles of UN Charter in its international relations. Unified Korea shall have authority assume such existing international rights and obligations and conclude such agreements as it may wish". Believe could not make provision penultimate sentence mandatory and that last sentence would permit such arrangements without placing unified government under compulsion to enter agreement Communist China. Change in first sentence avoids separate operation to secure pledge of respect for territorial integrity etc. at time unified government comes into existence.

8. Section VI. For consistency, rehabilitation proposal should be under UN auspices as long as UNCURK is proposed as supervisory commission. Communists likely seize on omission UN here to support argument against use UNCURK.

9. In order clarify manner and particulars in which Armistice Agreement shall be amended suggest following as substitute for first sentence Section VII:

"Parties to Armistice Agreement shall direct their military commanders to modify paragraphs blank of Armistice Agreement in order enable UNCURK to carry out above arrangements leading to unification Korea."

10. Suggest (b) section VII be revised read as follows: "All non-Korean forces have been withdrawn from Korea in accordance with provisions section IV this agreement."

11. Believe desirable delete last sentence section VII since this involves sovereignty new government.

12. Note that under General Assembly resolution might be argued UNCURK limited to seven representatives and seven alternates. Doubt that this constitutes adequate force for supervision.

13. Endorse Dean's suggestion Seoul's 1119 repeated Geneva 48<sup>3</sup> should use "unification" instead "reunification" in Section IV and "Government of unified Korea" instead "all-Korean Government" in Sections V and VI.

14. Foregoing comments made without reference principal substantive points Seoul's 1119 or Geneva's Secto 107 rptd Seoul 42<sup>4</sup> which just arrived. Will comment those in subsequent message.

4. Language in agreed draft paragraph 1 together subsequent discussion seems indicate Rhee might agree withdrawal US and other UN forces as well as Chinese Communist forces if both accomplished before elections. We do not believe feasible propose withdrawal Chinese Communist forces only although recognize logic and force Rhee's comments as reported Seoul's 1115<sup>3</sup> and 1119. Withdrawal both Chinese Communist and UN forces probably wipes out armistice which may not be unbearable for us in view NAC [MAC?] and NNSC difficulties and fact armistice is not the real sanction against renewal aggression. Withdrawal all non-Korean forces of course raises possibility Communists would stall all further implementation elections once they have secured their primary objective which is withdrawal UN forces. It might help Rhee's problem somewhat if Section IV Plan "B" were changed to require withdrawal most non-Korean forces before elections take place. If necessary we might also consider possibility total withdrawal before elections which would have distinct propaganda advantage. This position not cleared by Defense. Clearance being sought. Will notify soonest.

5. No objection to substituting UN for UNCURK supervision elections and making appropriate changes in draft of Plan "B".

6. Language at beginning agreed draft paragraph 2 seems apply more specifically Chinese Communists than USSR but we have all along insisted USSR should also be one of guarantors of Korean independence and territorial integrity and draft Plan "B" meant make that clear. Perhaps Section V draft Plan "B" as amended according our suggestion should be further amended to make pledge effective at once.

7. Troubled by language re elections in agreed draft paragraph 2 since it seems imply ROK would run elections with only some minor observation UNCURK-style by UN rather than supervision. Unless Dean certain agreed draft means essential acceptance draft Plan "B" by Pyun and Yang at Geneva he should attempt secure appropriate modification conformity Plan "B".

8. Re Mutual Defense Treaty. Know of no proposal, suggestion or discussion leading to amendment except press report in Seoul's 1107.<sup>4</sup> You may tell Rhee we expect bring Treaty into effect near future by exchange ratifications Washington. It is impracticable to amend Treaty as this would require resubmission to Senate and almost certain delay until next session. Therefore urge Dean and Briggs discourage ROK making any such proposals.

Editorial Note

In the evening of May 5, Eden and Molotov met for dinner, during the course of which substantive discussions on Korea and Indochina took place. Eden gave an account of the meeting to Smith, who reported to the Department in telegram Secto 115, May 6, not printed. The telegram contained the following brief passage on Korea:

"Eden said he was not optimistic over prospects of any settlement on Korea unless Russians could prevail upon Chinese and North Koreans to abandon their wholly unreasonable attitude. He did not envisage this happening but thought continuation of status quo in Korea not too bad. Molotov indicated agreement." (396.1 GE/5-654)

Pressure for presentation some plan along lines "B" mounting among other delegations, and while a few more general debate speeches are anticipated, we cannot get much further until all on allied side have proposal around which they can rally.

Do not understand Rhee's preference for UN over UNCURK. We cannot expect to have more favorable composition on any UN body than present membership UNCURK. Substitution of unspecified UN body at this stage reopens question of composition of UN commission, and to that extent goes back on past UN resolutions which we insist should be maintained. Insistence on UNCURK at this stage gives us much better bargaining position. Therefore suggest Department will wish modify instructions contained paragraph 5 Tosec 81.

Entirely concur paragraph 7 Tosec 81 on necessity UNCURK supervision rather than simply observation.

While we appreciate Rhee's point with regard to withdrawal Chinese Communist forces prior to elections, must recognize impracticable without simultaneous withdrawal UN forces and dangers inherent in completing withdrawal UN forces prior to assurance unification plans being implemented in good faith by Communists.

Full protection for ROKs under Plan B lies in (1) recognition ROK only lawful government in Korea; (2) elections under UNCURK supervision only after safeguards for conditions genuine freedom before, during and after elections assured; (3) proportional representation of North Korea in National Assembly.

Important we not get bogged down in drafting details between Geneva, Washington and Seoul, but stick to basic principles in discussions with Rhee. Communists are not going to accept any proposal containing these principles. If through any chance they do accept basic principles, negotiation of agreement would be long process in which details of drafting would be very important and in which closest consultation between Geneva, Washington and Seoul would be essential.

Phrases such as "formation of all-Korean Government", paragraph III proposal, should be accepted by Rhee as desirable "window-dressing", the substance of the US-UN position that ROK is only lawful government in Korea.

Will telegraph clean draft taking into account points brought out Washington and Seoul telegrams.

Yang said last night Pyun and ROK delegate had strongly urged Rhee accept proposal with amendments agreed upon with Robertson and Young.

49. Sent priority Department 1122, repeated information Tokyo 660. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. For the Secretary and Smith from Dean. Re Embtel 1119 repeated Geneva 48, Tokyo 659.<sup>1</sup> While we realize UK, Commonwealth, and France have formed and expressed opinion that it is essential there should be simultaneous elections north and south and Plan B so provides, is this necessarily so? While Soviets refused to allow UNTOCK north of parallel in 1948, south cooperated completely, democratic elections were held and UN recognized ROK as only legitimate government in Korea even though it only recognized it south of parallel in UNGA 21 October 1949. Now because of wording UNGA resolution 7 October 1950, it is said correct interpretation thereof demands simultaneous elections north and south and such elections also necessary command respect free world opinion.

Whereas, really all that necessary is to have Communist forces withdrawal in order that free elections may be held in north under UN observation in connection with unification.

Understand UK-Commonwealth attitude motivated in part by unfavorable reports by former Australian member UNCURK as to extent of democracy in ROK Government. Some UNCURK members seem to take for granted complete lack of freedom of elections in Communist north but compare rather turbulent workings of new Asian democracy in south to theoretical maximum ideals of textbook Anglo-Saxon democracy and to concentrate almost entirely on criticizing admitted faults of present ROK regime.

If Communist armies remain in north and North Korea Communist regime remains in power during elections there, despite UNCURK observation, don't see how we can avoid having but one Communist slate with nothing but Communist assemblymen elected in north followed by demand for coalition government. This fact and apparent harmful result does not seem to bother advocates of simultaneous elections, but they balk at accepting forthcoming May 20 elections of admittedly sovereign government as sufficient even though faulty in some respects.

As practical matter under Plan B don't see how you can operate national elections under one electoral law in north and ROK's in south. Somehow can't visualize North Korea Assembly at request of UNCURK ever adopting ROK election law. Will south therefore have to enact Communist election law in south in order to have unified electoral law?

Believe Rhee shrewd enough to know UK and Commonwealth do not think highly of his government. Casey's speech about necessity for simultaneous north and south elections in order to impress free world does not move him but rather he regards such demand as vote of lack of confidence in his government. He asks how many times ROK must be certified as sovereign and assuming ROK really is sovereign, what business UNCURK has to observe working of ROK election laws and whether UNCURK authority will be same in north and south and precisely what its authority will be.

Shall continue to use all persuasive powers to convince him necessity for simultaneous elections but thought you might be interested in his thinking and hard practicable nature of his questions.

SEOUL, May 7, 1954—2 a. m.

1125. Repeated information Tokyo 663, information niact Geneva 52. Geneva for Smith. Tokyo for CINCUNC. For Secretary from Dean. Ambassadors Briggs and Dean saw President Rhee, Prime Minister, Minister of Defense and acting Foreign Minister Cho after social visit of General Van Fleet had ended.

Told President was your plan formally to conclude ratification defense pact within next few weeks and since it had been consented to by Senate it would not be possible to make any changes therein unless whole matter was put off for year or more which would be unfortunate. President said Korean pact could be denounced by either party on one year's notice whereas Japanese treaty had longer life and he wanted same benefits without "discrimination". We said without making any commitment would investigate but considered essential Korean defense pact be promulgated as signed and consented to.

Said considered urgently important that all free world nations should agree upon pact for unification of Korea which could be announced at Geneva tomorrow. Suggested section IV plan B be modified to provide that withdrawal of substantially all North Korean forces shall be completed or substantial progress made thereon in manner satisfactory to UNCURK during a blank day period immediately prior to holding of elections on date to be announced by UNCURK. Prime Minister did not like word "substantially" and President objected to mutually-phased withdrawal, maintaining in any event it was unconditionally essential (a) that Chinese Communist and North Korean Communist forces should be withdrawn or surrendered in north in such manner as absolutely to ensure free elections in north and did not like idea of leaving this to judgement of UNCURK, (b) insisted it was unalterable requirement that there be no cooperation or collaboration in any form between his government and Chinese or North Korean Communist Government, which presumably goes for cooperation on electoral laws, (c) declared there must be assurances by Chinese Communists and Soviets there would be no actual or threatened interference with elections in north, (d) insisted nations on UNCURK had never had ROK approval and that matter had to be administered by United Nations itself. We assured him you saw logic of his insistence that Chinese Communists be withdrawn before elections in north but that only practical way of getting Chinese Communists to withdraw was to phase coordinated withdrawals of United Nations forces in south and to require substantial withdrawals but to give UNCURK some such discretion as outlined above.

Prime Minister and Defense Minister both gagged at only requiring substantial withdrawal before free election.

Rhee insisted no strings could be attached to absolute requirement of Communist withdrawal as precedent to elections and requirement of no interference by Soviets and no requirement of collaboration by his government with Communists. He further said his offer to have elections in both north and south for assembly and presidency after free elections in north if people so demanded by plebiscite were only his personal views.

Minister of Defense then handed President statement he had written out last night in which he expressed fear that elections in north and south would bring about degeneration of morale in ROK armed services and possible disorders. Minister insisted situation would be comparable to that during US-Soviet conferences 1946 and 1947 and that requirement have election for presidency with possibility of replacement of chief executive would throw consternation into ranks of ROK Army. They evidently fear solid Communist bloc in north with coalition of opponents of Rhee's Liberal Party in the south.

Again urged necessity of complete unity between US and ROKs at Geneva and essential no nation on free side should present plan different from our presentation and absolute necessity of not having Geneva talks fail because of lack of unity between US and ROKs and called attention to news stories that West was paralyzed at Geneva and essential this situation be corrected.

President finally said only solution was to have General Van Fleet make such commitments as would augment ROK armed forces to such an extent that they could freely move north and annihilate Communist forces.

President was obviously extremely tired after Van Fleet welcoming ceremonies at airport and President's house this afternoon and we suggested postponement further discussions until 8:30 tomorrow morning.

At dinner later this evening explained to Minister Defense in some detail necessity of our presenting combined constructive plan which would command instant respect. He replied he had already spoken what he sincerely believed and if President and ourselves worked out program he would interpose no further objection though Prime Minister inclined to believe President's position final. However, will push on tomorrow.<sup>1</sup> ister of Defense, and acting Foreign Minister Cho one hour this morning. On broad general principles outlined as forcefully as possible basic reasons why we should present united plan soonest at Geneva. President seeing General Van Fleet at 2:30 and obviously wants to see what he can get out of him before making any final commitments. Have always stayed on basic principles and have not discussed drafting changes with President. However, they have been so continually insistent on complete and total withdrawal Chinese Communist forces and surrender North Korean Army before elections can be held and complete unwillingness to leave this to determination of UNCURK. We have suggested "such substantial withdrawal" Chinese Communists as in opinion of UNCURK would permit free elections and this morning suggested "such preponderant and substantial withdrawal, et cetera", but President and Prime Minister rejected all of this as mere phraseology and insisted on unconditional withdrawal. Pointed out on basis of phased withdrawal this would require complete UN withdrawal also before elections. Again President is so positive he is going to get his entire asking price for complete build-up of Korean divisions this does not bother him in slightest and in fact he looks forward to day. He spoke with great bitterness fact he had not been allowed to move because we had locked up "ammunition and gasoline". He is basically and fundamentally unreconciled to armistice and to its inconclusive nature and spoke with great fervor on that subject.

He insists constitution does not permit him to agree to hold elections for Assembly immediately after the impending May 20 elections for National Assemblymen four-year term. He also insists he has no right to agree to hold new elections for President and claims that his idea of plebiscite in all Korea by people is correct after elections in north.

We pointed out constitution could be amended by two-thirds National Assembly and suggested he undertake to recommend to National Assembly that the constitution could be amended to permit elections desired.

Prime Minister and Defense Minister strongly objected on grounds if such elections held in south would cause consternation and confusion and insisted Communists would argue they had forced Rhee's abdication and that ROK Government though sovereign, had been placed by Geneva on par with Communists.

Reference fifth paragraph subdivision (1) your 44, until elections are held under Plan B in north and south, North Korean Communist Government there remains in power in north and must adopt electoral laws requested by UNCURK. Rhee takes violent exception to this. Further if free elections are held President repeatedly asks me if I can guarantee present ROK Government will be returned to power and Rhee elected President.

After President had turned me down flatly, at least six times, we again urged interest US-ROK relations he cooperate with allies to present something at Geneva we regard as fundamental. He still bitter against Casey's speech and Philippines proposal and past critical reports of his government by UNCURK and every time UNCURK mentioned he objects and insists on UN.

Would it be appropriate to use some such language as "United Nations or appropriate commission thereof" in order to avoid specific use of UNCURK?

My suggestions wording Plan B were in response for request for them but unless specifically noted in cables have not discussed them with Rhee.

At conclusion my strong plea for action President asked me to put suggestions in writing and to send them over. President also asks if he did agree to what we were requesting whether I could promise in writing there would be no further demands for concessions of any kind and if he would get build-up ROK Army he desires; I of course replied had no such authority and question ROK Army entirely within province General Van Fleet.

They are extremely allergic to first sentence IV Plan B and if we do agree complete withdrawal before elections this would of course disappear.

They cannot understand why having supported them on Plan A we are now moving to Plan B in order to achieve unity at Geneva when we do not believe Communists will accept Plan B. All efforts to persuade them essential to preserve unity of free nations have fallen flat. President extremely bitter about our announcement proposed South-east Asia pact against Communists which includes European nations but excludes Korea and Nationalist China. He considers we stole his idea and then left him out and are including weak sisters and colonial powers.

Would appreciate instructions soonest and whether Defense clearance mentioned Washington 893 subdivision 4<sup>2</sup> obtained.

Secto 131. For the Secretary. Inability obtain Rhee's agreement plan B facing us with increasingly difficult situation here. If Rhee's agreement not obtained shortly we must, in spite our best efforts here, anticipate probability some delegation will come forward with proposal calling for all-Korean elections under UN supervision and simultaneous phased withdrawal foreign forces which will command support from all others on allied side (and I believe, majority US public opinion) facing us with decision whether we continue stand with ROKs on plan A and bring about open break with our other allies. Allies of course recognize that without US-ROK agreement no plan can be implemented, and we will do utmost bring home to them possibilities Communist exploitation such a move on their part would create. However, pressure so strong probably cannot indefinitely continue prevent allied side from putting forward "reasonable" proposal. In any event we can expect virtually no support for breaking negotiations on our present position.

It is probable Rhee estimates by holding out agreement on plan B he can, in light of Van Fleet mission, improve bargaining position for obtaining commitment increased forces. Therefore suggest Van Fleet be instructed discuss situation with Dean and to give Dean full support his negotiations, emphasizing the urgent necessity of submitting reasonable proposal without further delay. Also suggest Hull discuss with Rhee military implications this position on troop withdrawal.

I would also appreciate your instructions tactics we should pursue here if Rhee remains adamant. That is, do we (a) join with other allies in putting forward proposal along lines plan B, facing Rhee with decision as to whether he will at that point walk out of conference, or as we would hope, refrain from public opposition to plan pending Communist reaction, or (b) do we continue stand with ROK on plan A to extent if necessary joining ROK in walkout from conference? I recommend course (a) after informing ROK we cannot stand with them on position which would not receive support from any of our allies, US public opinion, and public opinion elsewhere in free world.<sup>1</sup>

Today's plenary session (eighth) most satisfactory presentation so far of general Allied position. Summary texts being transmitted in clear to Seoul and Department as Secto 139.<sup>2</sup> Philippine, New Zealand and Colombian representatives<sup>3</sup> spoke strongly for:

(1) Authority and integrity of UN as basic issue in view of Communist challenge UN has no authority in Korea or Asia and conference has nothing to do with UN. Consensus of today's speakers was UN members have no business at conference if Communists reject UN.

(2) Conformity of proposals on Korea with UN resolutions and particularly resolution of October 7, 1950.

(3) General proposals on Korean independence and unification including (a) supervision and observation by UN; (b) assurance of proportional representation on basis population ratio between north and south; (c) free elections and adequate safeguards for conduct of elections; (d) adequate assurance of stable conditions and unification of Korea prior to withdrawal all UN forces from Korea.

These three basic concepts and three speeches today highlight ROK Allied case at Geneva in clear, uncontrovertible, eloquent terms.

Molotov failed to give speech although apparently had prepared text in front of him. All Communist delegates left Palais immediately after session without usual mixing in lounge and without any of usual jocular exchanges with free world delegates.

Molotov announced as no speaker inscribed for Saturday,<sup>4</sup> no plenary that day. No date set for next plenary.

our allies introduce Plan B. We convinced Communists will promptly reject. Therefore Rhee has nothing to lose if he instructs Pyun say nothing, reserving his position. US would withhold open support temporarily as some our allies have done re proposals made by Pyun and Secretary. If Communists query whether plan acceptable all 16 and especially ROK our public posture will be insist Communists give answer to reasonable proposal and if they willing accept and sign on dotted line that will be fine and we perfectly willing start preparing document for signature. SEOUL, May 8, 1954—3 p. m.

1134. Repeated information Tokyo 668, niact Geneva 59. Tokyo for CINCUNC. For Secretary from Dean. Drafted following message and handed to President in two and one-half hour conference this morning at which Prime Minister and Acting Foreign Minister Cho also present.

"If the Communist aggressors will withdraw from my country, so that genuinely free elections can be held throughout Korea, under UN supervision and observation, I, Syngman Rhee, President of the Republic of Korea, pledge my complete cooperation and will recommend to the National Assembly the adoption of such amendments to the constitution as may be necessary to have national elections for the National Assembly and the Presidency.

But there must be no repetition of the Communist aggression of 1950, after the peaceful withdrawal of the United States forces in 1949. Therefore, as President of the Republic of Korea, I plan to ask the United Nations to allow UNC forces to remain in Korea until after the elections in order to ensure that the Communist promises with respect to genuinely free elections shall this time be honored and observed, and a truly united free and independent Korea shall come into being."

Told President we considered situation exceptionally grave and that he must not consider we were merely trying please English and the French, but that we must make proposal which will command universal free world respect and command majority American public opinion, and that it was imperative administration command broad American public opinion support not only for its proposals at Geneva, but in order to get public support for appropriation for continued Korean rehabilitation and build-up ROK forces.

Emphasized phased withdrawal UN forces in south was not because we had lost interest or because we no longer desired to have American boys fight but was essential condition to obtain withdrawal Chinese Communist forces in north.

While talking to President, your 897<sup>1</sup> was handed me. Summarized provisions first paragraph to him, stated you regarded joint action along lines Plan B imperative and would be extremely difficult hold allies in line if not made.

He at first said he was not going to make any commitments until he had received all the commitments from General Van Fleet which he expected.

Pointed out our initial philosophy was to stand by and not to abandon him, but psychologically abandonment is uppermost in their minds. Believe they think we are using phased withdrawal as excuse to do what we want to do anyhow. Assured him our basic philosophy was to build-up ROK divisions as UNC forces withdrawn and was sure he and General Van Fleet would work everything out in harmony but that mission was essentially fact-finding, and decision today on Plan B was imperative and could not wait. Stated further we were allies and must act together and we would not be urging him to go forward on Plan B unless we thought it was in best interests Korean people. He stated he would not issue statement unless we guaranteed to resume fighting in Korea if Communists refused to withdraw. Pointed out UN not compelled to withdraw if Communists do not and that I had been authorized state to him mutual defense pact would be promulgated and he therefore had that treaty in the event of renewed Communist aggression.

For some time he held out for guarantees by President Eisenhower Korea would be united and US should take full responsibility therefore, because he claimed it was through our original mistakes in allowing Soviet troops in north that country was divided.

Reviewed our response to aggressors, number of American lives lost, and terrific over-all American expenditure in Korea.

Contrary to Geneva's 54,<sup>2</sup> President read aloud to us telegram from Pyun in which Pyun denounced Plan B in scathing terms, termed it unmitigated surrender to Communists and urged President to stand firm on Plan A. Again pointed out disaster such procedure and stated Plan must be accepted by Communists in whole, and not in part, and doubted whether Communists would accept because our insistence UN supervision elections. President replied that argument was often used on him in connection with armistice and eventually Communists always accepted. Prime Minister and Acting Minister Cho both urged President to stand on Plan A.

Said failure endorse Plan B most disastrous US-ROK relations and Communists would regard lack of unity between us at Geneva as great victory.

Fall of Dien Bien Phu announced while we were there and President made long statement to effect we made big and resounding promises about fighting Communists but could not keep them because of American and Congressional opinion against use of American troops in Asia.

Again made strong plea to him to issue statement and he promised to discuss and call me later today. Explained possible strategy outlined Geneva's 51<sup>3</sup> and reasons therefore but he still unalterably opposed any Chinese Communist troops remaining in north before elections, demands complete surrender North Korean Communist forces, and insists ROK electoral laws must be used in elections.

With respect to above quoted statement, explained we preferred leave in words "and the Presidency" but that he could omit in his discretion.

60. Sent Department 1135, repeated information Tokyo 670. Geneva for USDel. Tokyo for CINCUNC. From Dean for Smith. Reference Geneva's 50.<sup>1</sup> Following preliminary comments for your guidance only; not discussed with Rhee except as previously noted substantively.

Assuming present ROK electoral laws were originally drawn up by UN Commission, would simplify if II E provided such laws were to govern in north. This would eliminate necessity Rhee working with North Korean Communists on new electoral unified law and hence recognizing them as an "authority".

If change made, make appropriate changes in II F and twice in G.

IV A. Since according to General Mohn, Communists are not using ports of entry in north but are using other ports of entry which NNSC not now free to inspect, he points out such provisions completely inoperative in north as far as we are concerned but provisions bind us to great detail in south with which provisions we are frequently in technical violation.

Would IV D require withdrawal US training forces, educational pilots, technicians, et cetera; and would this prevent investigatory mission such as Van Fleet current one? Realize language must be reciprocal.

II F. Understood freedom of movement from north to south was to be eliminated. In any event this provision cannot come into operation while armistice agreement remains in effect. See particularly movements in and across DMZ.

Since you don't expect Communists to accept would greatly reduce irritation here if you could use UN or appropriate agency thereof in lieu of UNCURK but in view Washington 898<sup>2</sup> suggest leave UNCURK for present.

Assume you consider impracticable make any provision for disarming North Korean Communists as long as ROK forces remain under arms but believe non-provision for this as well as provision for even residual Chinese Communist forces remaining here till after election will continue to be substantial barrier acceptance here since in their minds implies aggressor has right to remain.

Don't follow why second paragraph D applies more specifically to Chinese than UN forces.

1. Recommend against alternative course action suggested final paragraphs Tosec 97 <sup>3</sup> except as last resort. To follow such course at this time would show up allied disunity and place us in highly vulnerable position. Doubtful Communists would fail realize and exploit situation, as at Panmunjom, where Communists, ignoring our proposals, were beginning capitalize on fact ROK not supporting our position when Dean broke off talks. Believe preferable delay presentation allied proposal until agreement reached within 16 even if means stalling until some time next week.

2. Speeches Eight Plenary Session leave us in stronger position for time being with three clear-cut issues but do not believe possible stall more than few days at best. While opening Indochina phase may divert attention away from problem Korean negotiations Seoul as well as Geneva, we about run out of speakers for general debate on Korea. We reaching stage of repetition general themes or presenting proposals on basis general position thoroughly developed in general debate. Can anticipate only one or possibly two more plenary sessions general debate on Korean problem. Can count on Allied Delegates again speaking in support general principles when we in position submit proposal. Accordingly, our immediate tactic is (1) obtain firm 16-nation endorsement draft proposal, but (2) not present it to Communists at this time unless they indicate willingness accept UN role in Korea. However, plan would in any event be tabled in plenary session before adjournment conference.

3. Therefore believe should complete work not later than Tuesday <sup>4</sup> on US-ROK agreement draft proposal. We should inform Rhee we consider we must be ready present plan B proposal within next few days. His refusal to go along with it will have serious adverse effect our relations and may require re-examination (1) whether mutual defense treaty should be brought into effect and (2) extent our military and economic aid programs. Recommend this strong line only because convinced ROK interests fully protected by our proposal and failure present some such proposal would have extremely bad effect. Moreover, Pyun and other members ROK delegation appear convinced desirability ROK backing our proposal.

4. Hope arguments outlined Tosec 98 will convince Rhee desirability proposing UNCURK in first instance as UN body in Korea. Further point which should be considered and advanced to Rhee is fact his opposition might play into Communist hands by giving them reason propose new body perhaps including neutralist nations and even one including Communist China (see Secto 150 repeated Seoul 59, Tokyo 32 re Chinese reactions at press briefing on UN question).<sup>5</sup> We would anticipate that if serious negotiations commence here on proposal we would be prepared agree creation suitable new UN commission but from tactical viewpoint seems best insist initially on UNCURK. Rhee's objection to UNCURK does weaken our negotiating position, particularly since Communists will oppose UNCURK but may as concession later be willing accept UN commission with composition favorable Communist interests. Nevertheless, if Rhee adamant, we would reluctantly agree to phrase such as "appropriate UN commission".

5. In order stem impatience growing among some Allied Delegations we are considering meeting of working group of nine, probably Monday, to discuss draft proposal for first time, whether or not we have Rhee's approval by then. ROK Delegation would, of course, participate on ad referendum basis.

Secto 150. Repeated information Seoul 59, Tokyo 32, Hong Kong 9. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. In Chinese Communist press conference following May 7 plenary spokesman Huang Hua reacted sharply to three speeches, particularly with respect to speakers attacks on Chinese Communist denunciation UN role in Korea. Reiterating Chou En-lai's charge UN belligerent in Korea and its resolutions illegal, Huang equated idea UN supervision Korean elections with supervision by "US occupation forces".

Referring Webb's comments on inconsistency Chou attack on UN activities Korea and Peiping demands admission UN, Huang praised UN Charter and professed desire uphold UN prestige. He quoted as saying:<sup>1</sup>

"We consider UN Charter good one leading to establishment peace and security. . . . China is one of sponsors UN. Tung Pi-wu, official PRC, was one of signatories. . . . it is precisely for purpose of upholding prestige UN that illegal resolutions adopted in past should be eliminated. . . . it was also because these illegal resolutions could not carry UN any further that Geneva Conference was arranged through other quarters. . . . after Chiang, who was kept and supported by US, was thrown out and Chinese people had chosen government of its own—PRC—it is natural that this government should secure its rightful position UN."

Comment: While Huang's charges against UN role in Korea follow familiar pattern, there is possibility his statement designed hint Communists will agree UN supervised elections provided Peiping admitted UN. This possibility indicated by (a) alleged support UN Charter; (b) claim Peiping regime (through Tung Pi-wu) somehow responsible for charter; (c) implication UN resolutions though illegal in past could be legal in future provided Peiping regime in UN; (d) claim that convening of Geneva Conference demonstrates UN impotent (in absence Peiping membership) deal matters such as Korea and Indochina; (e) equating UN supervision with supervision "US occupation forces," leaving door open to acceptance provided US troops withdraw and Peiping admitted UN.

While Huang statements may have simply been effort offset telling points made by speakers in plenary session, they highlight danger of Communist maneuver gain admittance UN by accepting principle UN election supervision as quid pro quo. Perhaps greatest deterrent Communist making such counter-proposal would be necessity abandonment principle elections held only under supervision North Korean ROK Commission with both parties represented equal footing. But whether Communists actually make counter-proposal or not continued emphasis by 16 on UN responsibility Korean settlement does involve danger Chinese Communists countering at least with strong implication they agreeable so long as Peiping is member. Countries recognizing Peiping might be receptive such appeal even though it would be case UN performance in return Communist promise.

“After the Communist aggressors have withdrawn from my country so that genuine free elections can be held throughout Korea under UN observation I will recommend to the National Assembly the adoption of such amendments to the constitution as may be necessary to have national elections for the National Assembly.

The withdrawal of Chinese troops should be completed and the Korean Communist Army should either leave the country or surrender to the ROK Government and the USA should pledge to act on the USA-ROK Mutual Defense Pact immediately if Communist forces invade Korea again.

There should be no repetition of the Communist aggression of 1950 which took place after the withdrawal of the USA forces in 1949.”

(With respect to foregoing statement President adds parenthetically that although no reference to elections for the presidency are to be included, when proper time comes he will personally ask National Assembly to amend constitution to include election of president, and “I may be willing run for re-election”.)

Pointed out to Cho first this wording would presumably require phased simultaneous withdrawal in south of all UN forces before election; second, along lines Deptel 898<sup>1</sup> said would prefer use UNCURK since no Communists on present commission appointed 7 October 1950 resolutions and other side would certainly insist on Communists if Secretary General appointed today; and third, in view our conversation with President Rhee this morning, was my clear understanding if this message satisfactory to our government, President Rhee would authorize Pyun to have plan B, modified along these lines, presented at Geneva.

Cho confirmed this was his understanding of his conversations President Rhee; stated President Rhee did not wish issue instructions Pyun until sure this statement satisfactory our government.

Assume you can devise appropriate language with respect to action on Defense Pact. Sorry about inclusion surrender North Korean Communist Army but without this I am afraid can get no statement whatsoever and further believe necessary avoid rupture after plan is announced.

Sincerely hope this statement which really represents maximum effort our part and pushing President to limit can be used to put forward plan B at Geneva promptly with full approval our allies and we can iron out essential details later.

General Van Fleet has been south on inspection trip all day and will have no opportunity discuss messages with him until probably very late tonight or tomorrow morning. 3. We urge Rhee be faced with choice of (a) presenting united front at conference which fully protects his and ROK position and which will result in Communists bearing responsibility for failure conference; or (b) isolate ROK from allies which will result in relieving Communists of onus for failure of conference. Tosec 111. Secto 149<sup>2</sup> and 156<sup>3</sup> sent Seoul 58 and 60 and Tokyo 31 and 38.

1. Department has no objection proposed meeting working group in Geneva to discuss draft Plan B (Secto 149).

2. Unless Rhee is prepared accept Plan B shortly suggest Dean and Briggs tell him ROK appears to be faced with alternatives cited paragraph 3 Secto 156. United States Delegation on basis full and regular discussions other allied delegations is convinced of necessity presenting Plan B and is therefore moving ahead with preparations do so at appropriate time. We believe it in best interests ROK to cooperate in development and presentation plan.

3. Once this choice is presented to Rhee it may be desirable refrain from pressing him further for few days while following Delegation's suggestion of concentrating at Geneva on Communist failure accept United Nations role and obtaining common acceptance Plan B.

4. If as last resort it becomes necessary present Plan B without Rhee's support Department believes it desirable minimize so far as possible appearance of open break between ROK and US. This might be achieved by (a) having Rhee agree not openly oppose until Communist position becomes clear and (b) having some other delegation such as Philippines put plan forward and having other allies speak in support of it first.

As alternative volunteered have Van Fleet go alone if he thought that preferable. He has been most generous with time and has given thoughtful consideration to problem but on balance declined and recommended we continue.

We have also reviewed strategy and tactics of our approach to Rhee and invited Van Fleet's frank criticism. He thinks general line we are following of soliciting Rhee's complete cooperation on basis of friendship as his ally is best possible approach, and Van Fleet does not recommend threats or ultimatum.

Before you break publicly with ROKs at Geneva and support program of 16 and solicit ROK silence or risk Communist taunts on question of ROK support, all here agree we should approach Rhee again and outline distinct advantages to him for military defense standpoint in event sudden Communist attack of retaining some UN forces until after elections at same time getting him to eliminate specific demand for North Korean surrender or withdrawal.

Had pleasant lunch with President today, Sunday, but decided better not mention problems. Will see him Monday morning. Allies on plan B, because he considers friendship Rhee here more important than to stand with them. He frankly concedes he is not sufficiently familiar with over-all picture to attempt make decision. We mention this only as indicating his frank thinking. It would be helpful if Pyun and Yang would really wire what they tell you, rather than what they actually wire, including strong criticism Philippine position whom they consider under our domination.

As to UN and UNCURK, believe we can sell Rhee UNCURK for reasons you have advanced.

Statements of Judd<sup>13</sup> criticizing omission Nationalist Chinese and ROK from proposed Southeast Asian pact prominently featured here, including criticism inclusion colonial powers. Fully understood reasons for such omission, but might be helpful if we could orient Rhee to your thinking. Could we also orient him on current de-emphasis military aid to Japan, or is this still secret? His apprehensions, based on lifetime struggle for united independent Korea, are: (1) fear of abandonment based on American publicity regarding return on US divisions; (2) fear we plan to use Japan as spearhead; (3) fear UNCURK will give only nominal attention to elections in north because of pressure from remnants of unwithdrawn Chinese Communists and North Korean Communist army; (4) fear his government and Communist aggressors are being put on a parity; (5) fear solid Communist bloc in north will unite with DNP in south against him.

We have found it best to use tactics of partnership with Rhee, rather than to use "or else" tactics, and while former perhaps so far not too successful, hesitate to change at this point.

If we have to unite with 16 allies on plan B (without Rhee) and Communists then turn it down, and we have thereby antagonized Rhee, won't we be in somewhat difficult position in reference to our practical operations here?

If you disapprove present tactics would appreciate guidance. Will try improve batting average.

pass CINCUNC. Ambassadors Briggs and Dean saw President Rhee, Prime Minister and acting Foreign Minister Cho this morning.

Explained that demand for complete withdrawal Chinese Communist forces would be accompanied by demand for phased withdrawal all UN troops and if sudden Communist attack occurred such complete withdrawal might permit Communist penetration considerably south of Seoul-Inchon line whereas if number of troops suggested could remain until after elections were completed, we could probably hold approximately present line until aid brought in from Okinawa.

President said whatever the military consequences to his country or people he could not agree to one single Chinese Communist soldier remaining in Korea before elections, that we should demand Communist aggressors get out of Korea and we should not agree phased withdrawal which constitutes surrender to aggressors.

We explained alternatives faced at Geneva, cited substances paragraph 3 Geneva's 58,<sup>1</sup> but did not tell him which one we favor but did say Plan B without US and ROK support or Plan A with only US and ROK support would be tremendous victory for Communists at Geneva and that we were carefully considering necessity putting forward Plan B.

We suggested we should put forward Plan B with the other 15 nations and if ROK could not agree they should maintain silence. President said he would maintain silence provided we agreed secretly in writing that if Communists accepted our proposal rather than rejected as we expect, we would join ROK in attack on Communists. We said that was out of question. Note, if they do maintain silence and Communists were to accept what do we do then ?

As to withdrawal or surrender North Korea Communists, he visualizes moment agreement reached at Geneva to hold free elections that his army will be able to go north and take surrender North Korea Communist army. We explained why we did not think this could occur but nothing we could say would deter him from that position. Otherwise he regards elections as complete farce with Communist Government remaining in north. What, he asks, would ever induce them to surrender and how can we govern even if elections are held ?

We told him we had discussed with Generals Van Fleet and Taylor<sup>2</sup> and they concurred Plan B should be put forward with ROK approval. He again flatly refused and said we were recognizing Communist Government in north.

General Hull has offered to come over tomorrow to discuss military situation with him if that will help. We may go Tokyo confer with him.

President said he had cabled to Pyun statement he gave me Saturday (Embtel 1137, repeated Geneva 62)<sup>3</sup> and Pyun was authorized to negotiate with American delegation within framework that statement and to wire his recommendations to Rhee. Gained impression President would like to get strong wire from Pyun and believe if considerable pressure placed on Pyun he might be induced to wire support Plan B which would help materially or at minimum to maintain silence when that plan put forward though consider latter not very realistic. Definitely believe Rhee wants promise ROK build-up.

Explained great regret our inability to arrive agreement and explained fear such disunity at Geneva would materially affect American public opinion, seriously jeopardize what we were trying to do in cooperation with Korea and encourage Communists.

President launched into long speech that we did not have courage to fight Communists and therefore he would have to stand alone and free world would fall. Commented only that our plans would defeat Communists and must stand together. President very firm and said his position was final and no further discussion could change him although indicated again he would like Pyun's recommendations.

Dean would like to leave in any event not later than Friday<sup>4</sup> this week and unless you instruct contrary plans to leave earlier if possible in connection urgent matters at office.<sup>5</sup>

SECRET      PRIORITY

WASHINGTON, May 10, 1954—7:47 p. m.

Tedul 52. Personal from Secretary to Under Secretary. For the first time today, I have had a chance to give thought to Korean phase of Conference. The general lines of my thinking are :

1. We should not attempt coercive pressures on Rhee to compel him to accept a plan which he with some justification feels might jeopardize the non-Communist status of the Republic of Korea. I am quite aware of the fact that there is very little chance that Plan B would be acceptable and that therefore to propose it is a good gamble. However, it is one thing to gamble with something affecting one's own country but another thing to force a gamble on the government of the country which is itself at stake.

2. Am suggesting that the present impasse might be overcome by dropping out of Plan B the provisions dealing with the withdrawal of forces and suggesting paragraph to general effect that obviously the free elections will require withdrawals of foreign forces and such disposition of domestic forces as will insure non-intimidation and that this will be dealt with at a subsequent stage.

At the Berlin Conference, the Western allies ducked the question of troop withdrawals, as proposed by Molotov, and I see no reason why the Western allies should not permit Rhee to do the same.

3. In view of our desire to develop a strong anti-Communist position, with particular relation to Indochina, and the prospect that we might still intervene there and that this might involve a clash with Communist China, I think it important that we basically follow a line which will keep the confidence of our anti-Communist allies in Asia rather than seem to be working against them with a view to winning favor of Western European countries which are not disposed to be very helpful to us in Asia.

4. Am disposed to proceed with exchange of ratifications of Korean Treaty, as I told Pyun, and as was indicated to Rhee when he agreed to send delegation to Geneva. I doubt whether we should get in position of trying to get him to try to buy same horse twice.

Section IV. Eliminate.

Section VII B. Eliminate.

Section VIII. Following word "provisions" add phrase "and for withdrawal and disposition of non-Korean and Korean military forces".

Believe this might be more acceptable Rhee since it will put basic issue of free elections up to Communists thus gaining propaganda objectives without incurring risks Rhee fears. In doubtful event Communists accept principle free elections troop issue of course would then be dealt with in drafting agreement this subject.

Possible but less desirable alternative would be new paragraph under II indicating appropriate arrangement for withdrawal and disposition non-Korean and Korean military forces would have to be made subsequent reaching agreement general plan in order ensure elections genuinely free and without coercion.

Defense clearance being sought.<sup>3</sup>

SEOUL, May 11, 1954—11 a. m.

1155. Repeated information priority Tokyo 685, niact Geneva 72. Geneva for Smith; Tokyo pass CINCUNC. For the Secretary from Dean. Head other mission<sup>1</sup> said this morning he conceived mission to be (1) to get more effective military service for less money, (2) to train and equip more Asians so as to permit withdrawal from Asia American divisions to US mainland in order permit more maneuverability, (3) to teach Asians how to use simpler weapons in order to utilize greater Asian manpower and not necessitate matching our excessively expensive standards, (4) to match our withdrawals with greater number ROK troops but with lighter weapons or equipment.

Said further in interviews with KMA&G and ROK commanders he found them copying our tables of organization and expensive equipment to last detail whereas Eighth Army was emphasizing cutbacks, and greater number of tighter divisions, with fewer men and less equipment. Further, our generally publicized statements of fighting communism to the limit in Far East and supporting ROKs were therefore somewhat inconsistent with our daily practices in Korea and current inquiries into possible cut of expenses and men. Therefore all this was leading to progressive lack of confidence by President Rhee in our government and its over-all policies and to a sense of Korean discouragement. Rhee told him he gets similar feeling from Formosa, Burma, Vietnam and Thai and that somehow they think they are not being treated fairly.

In reply, we said we were trying to put forward basic formula at Geneva which would preserve US-ROK allied unity and put onus for failure on Communists but that Rhee refused to consider anything as purely propaganda formula reputedly not acceptable to Communists but insisted rather on looking through formula to what active practical operating results in Korea would be if Communists actually accepted formula.

Said further that based on eastern philosophy Rhee believed something was either right or wrong and you could not confuse fundamental principles of strength and weakness and of pushing and yielding. For to Rhee Chinese Communists were aggressors and must be so labelled.

But under our plan B, part of aggressors could stay in north during elections, plus 350,000 North Korean Communist soldiers and to Rhee Communists were Communists whether Chinese or North Korean and our program for alleged free elections under UNCURK which Rhee regarded as having totally inadequate civilian manpower and without army support of communications and transportation in north together with substantial withdrawal of troops and facilities in south before elections was completely unrealistic.

Rhee says such program would force him publicly to backtrack on statements that he would never deal or cooperate with Communists, and result our program was nothing but bringing into play coalition government with Communists which we were trying to force down his throat just as General Marshall had attempted with Chiang Kai-shek and end would be the same, i.e., complete loss of Korea to the Communists.

Further Rhee asks, if we are sincere about helping Indochina, why do we not bomb factories and supply lines on Chinese mainland from advanced air bases in Korea rather than from Philippines, Okinawa or Japan and if we are going to pull our forces out of Korea we must therefore be getting ready to abandon Korea to her fate just as we did in 1949, assuming, of course, phased withdrawal means we can't come back later and use bases under mutual pact.

Rhee's questioning raises doubts in our minds whether we could use Japanese bases to drop atomic bombs on China mainland or USSR, and whether Japan might deny or withdraw such bases use for such purpose in which doubt General Hull and Ambassador Allison<sup>2</sup> concur. If we withdraw from Korea and concentrate on Okinawa question arises whether that base might not be knocked out, and doesn't that warrant re-examining question of having unquestioned right to use advanced Korean air bases even though we don't wish to fight a war in Korea?

Inasmuch as our economic rehabilitation program has had hard work getting off the ground, and have not outlined it to Rhee in its entirety, and we are still antagonizing him by forcing Korea to buy in Japan if latter is low bidder which according to Rhee builds up a Japanese economy already relatively prosperous from Korean war, while Korea, our ally, is still struggling along in some cases from our own bombing, we have no tangible visible proof of our aid to Korea.

For all these reasons Rhee is getting increasingly allergic to talk that does not promise some immediate, definite tangible result, and he cries out against any more general talk.

To solve problem reference plan B acceptance believe there are at least two alternate solutions:

1. In order obtain Rhee's acceptance plan B, believe we should think out immediately at highest level basic principles of our over-all military security program in Far East on a unified rather than bilateral basis for Formosa, Philippines, Okinawa, Korea and Thailand with concentration on Asian ground forces backed up by atomic weapons immediately available which forces can be moved from one place to another as needed and as needed supplemented by our Navy and Air Force. Not necessary or advisable bring Japan in such open-ended program for moment. This, of course, assumes armistice ended by plan B or otherwise we are restricted as to weapons by its terms.

Work out immediately for Korea its precise relationship to the whole program and give Rhee soon as possible definite principles for building up ROK divisions and total dollar value equipment we plan for him to have on a truly realistic basis and tell him very plainly that there is not going to be any more.

Explain precisely why 20 divisions just about limit he can man and pay for and we supply with available equipment and that we and he cannot possibly man and pay for and we equip 35 divisions. Explain we will give him artillery that is interchangeable conventional weapon and atomic cannon but presently would not supply atomic ammunition. To demonstrate effectiveness of latter we would put on demonstration for him at Okinawa.

Tell him precisely what we will do over next few years in the way of economic aid on a hard realistic basis with no nonsense about it and just how it is going to be administered by the US including Japan purchases and why in both North and South Korea if plan B put into effect and Korea unified.

Explain precisely the function of our military pact and when it will and won't work.

Or if he won't take plan B,

2. Tell him frankly that without any attempt at political settlement with the Communists we will work out independently a mutually phased timetable for withdrawal of our own troops and the Chinese Communists, reduce economic aid to ROKs to a minimum, reduce our military aid to him to the minimum, bearing in mind there may be possible Korean strikes or sabotage and active interference with our troop and equipment withdrawal. We would then denounce mutual defense pact, assuming it is promulgated.

Tell Rhee he then free to work out any political basis he pleases with the Communists which we will examine but with no commitment to aid or recognize.

Further that if the Communists unprovokedly attack him we will come to his aid in accordance mutual defense pact while in effect. But tell him in no uncertain terms we won't aid him if he attacks or provokes attack.

Tell him this is high-level long term program which will not be changed under pressure and must have his approval to whole plan and promise of cooperation.

Believe we should also tell him frankly about our Japanese program and that he has nothing to fear. Since we have explained this Japanese program to Commonwealth believe we should tell Rhee so he can be fully informed on our thinking and he can stop worrying about our rearming Japan.

Rhee can then take his choice of cooperating with us on proposed plan B or not if that's what we still want.

Rhee and ROK generals are intelligent enough to know that if we fight in Indochina, the important Chinese bombing targets are from Peiping northwestward to Anshan, Mukden, Harbin and Vladivostok for which neither Philippines nor Okinawa bases are as suitable as Korea and with Okinawa knocked out and Japan bases possibly forbidden for that purpose we must be really withdrawing from Far East if we are willing to give up Korean bases in complete withdrawal. For if Communists can't come back, can we maintain right to use bases in Korea under mutual pact?

To attempt to carry out plan B without ROK cooperation will not seem realistic to Communists and hence its announcement without ROK's blessing will not be very convincing.

Believe we must have something definite and basic to tell Rhee which will arouse his continuing interest and allay his fears of abandonment.

In this event believe there is excellent chance of getting his cooperation.

If he refuses then without question we should be prepared without wobbling to carry out alternative two above and its consequences should be carefully considered before making statement to Rhee.

Even our top military commanders and ambassadors have not been briefed on our overall thinking in Far East and hence small wonder Rhee dismayed by piecemeal briefing, newspaper accounts of withdrawal and vague rumors of cutbacks without specific information believe there is enough general information in Washington to formulate such basic principles immediately without waiting several months for detailed report of current mission and believe serious danger deterioration US-ROK relations which can set in very fast if something is not done promptly or if we announce plan B without ROK concurrence.

Whoever is authorized to brief Rhee should make sure these basic principles after being formulated at high level will be carried out without any further backing or filling or it will do no good to adopt this program.

Such a program could make American manpower much more mobile, would permit doing job with Asian ground forces supplemented by US Navy and Air Force and use the atomic cannon and other weapons as need be.

Foregoing outlined generally today at meeting in Tokyo with Generals Hull and Taylor and Ambassadors Allison, Briggs and Dean after extended discussion. Except for Briggs and Taylor, others have not seen actual text this message but they concurred in its formulation and advisability and necessity of its presentation. General idea also discussed head of other mission.

Ninth plenary session Korean phase May 11 consisted speeches by Molotov (USSR), Spaak (Belgium) and Pyun (ROK).<sup>3</sup> At conclusion four-hour session Eden presiding announced understood Indochina meeting scheduled tomorrow and that Secretariat would inform delegates time next Korea session.

Molotov propaganda speech lasting nearly two hours flatly rejected UN role Korean unification claiming all UN activities in Korea from beginning 1947 illegal. Other two chief points were status Communist China as one of Big Five and vague statement on desirability collective security arrangement for all Asian peoples.

Molotov attack on UN role Korean unification developed from lengthy historical review Korean problem 1945 to present. Noteworthy specific charges included alleged US proposal of trusteeship for Korea for 1945 Moscow agreement, lack of competence under Article 107 of Charter to deal with Korean problem 1947-1949, and Asian nations' reluctance participate UN military intervention 1950 and non-independent status those which did.

Following historical commentary he concluded that UN, as result of illegal Security Council and General Assembly resolutions, became a belligerent in Korea and thereby deprived itself of competence to serve impartially in solving Korean problem. Asserted Geneva conference had no relation to UN and that Communist China clearly belongs on Security Council as one of Big Five, this status being shown by its position as one of only five powers participating both phases Geneva. Made somewhat plaintive note of fact that while "torrents of speeches filled with excessive and persuasive praise of US" no word said by any non-Communist power on "seizure of Formosa". He specifically attacked October 7, 1950 UNGA resolution establishing UNCURK, saying it was intended to impose South Korean regime on North Korea. Also asserted UNCURK membership composed primarily of interventionists and colonial powers.

Recapitulated Nam II proposal and added that USSR prepared to cooperate in implementing paragraph 3 concerning peaceful development of Korea. Replying to criticism of all-Korean commission he said agreement by both sides is essential to any solution Korean problem and DPROK cannot be asked subordinate itself to South Korean regime. Then described the virtues of DPROK regime in improving welfare of people and contrasted alleged defects in South Korea. Said all-Korean Commission would preserve DPROK achievements and that plans based on extension of undemocratic and corrupt South Korean regime to North Korea are unacceptable.

Saying US attitude is key to solution of Korean problem Molotov led into attack on US hostility to Communist China and plans of US and others to form aggressive military bloc in Southeast Asia. Comparing situation with Western Europe he said all Asian States should unite to ensure collective security arrangements for all peoples of Asia.

Spaak outstanding brief address on high note reminded conference that problem before it was Korea, not world or even Asia. Rebutted Communist aspersions on UN collective security efforts in Korea and on alleged US imperialism. Noted inconsistency Chinese Communist desire for admission to UN at same time it condemned UN. Said everyone apparently agrees goal is united, free and democratic Korea and that everyone also advocates free elections. He said point at issue is whether (1) there should be no international supervision and foreign forces should be withdrawn before elections. (2) There should be no prior withdrawal foreign forces and elections should be under international supervision and under UN auspices. He supported latter. Closed with appeal for moderation and a little mutual trust among conference participants.

Pyun's speech largely rebuttal to previous Communist speeches although fundamental importance UN role in solving Korean problem emphasized throughout. Challenging professed Communist desire prevent any international intervention in Korean unification, Pyun rejoined that point 3 of Nam II proposal calls for intervention by "appropriate states" and concluded Communists wanted only foreign intervention by nations they chose. He again attacked Nam Il proposal for All-Korean Commission as "legislatural [legislatorial] coalition". Chiding Chou En-lai on professed concern over security of China from Korea, Pyun asserted ROK has no aggressive intentions and went on to describe Chinese Communist imperialism in North Korea, mentioning mass deportation North Koreans and forcible marriage of Korean women to Chinese men. Rebutting Chou accusation of aggressive US intervention in China (Formosa), Pyun said that US intervention in China prevented Japanese conquest and thereby saved base of operations for Chou.

Saying that Korea "terribly eager for success" of conference, Pyun said important in case conference fails that people of world know Communists are to blame. Defined fundamental question as whether Communists would lower iron curtain in North Korea and permit free elections under UN auspices. State ROK had held four elections and May 20 elections are under "close and direct observation of UN". "Whole problem of unification would be solved" if UN could observe elections NK. Left somewhat obscure whether talking about single nation-wide elections or separate elections NK.

Reiterated earlier statement 45,000 anti-Communist Korean and Chinese mentioned by Communists are no longer POWs but citizens recovered from illegal Communist domination. Then proceeded to make long eloquent plea that Communists permit International Red Cross send representatives behind iron curtain to find, assist and repatriate civilians abducted from South Korea in 1950.

In additional comments drafted during meeting in response Molotov address Pyun defended October 7, 1950 UNGA resolution, said if aggressive USSR military bloc dissolved other blocs would disappear also, and deprecated Soviet role in defeat of Japan. Castigating uncomplimentary references by Molotov to President Rhee, Pyun repeatedly called Molotov a liar.

64. Repeated information Tokyo 45, Department Secto 170. Department pass Defense. Toyko for CINCUNC. For Van Fleet and Hull from Smith. Rhee's refusal agree so far on draft proposal apparently based primarily on his attitude re withdrawal non-Korean forces creating increasingly difficult situation here. Key point is his insistence Chinese Communist forces be withdrawn and North Korean forces demobilized before elections. This position totally unrealistic since neither ROK nor United Nations in position victor in Korea. Rhee must made realize insistence on total Chinese Communist withdrawal can only mean concurrent total UN withdrawal.

It is possible that part his tactic is to use this position as bargaining lever to get commitments on further military assistance. He has not perhaps fully considered dangers to ROK in complete United Nations withdrawal before testing Communist performance on unification Korea, assuming any agreement here and implementation of agreement possible.

I would appreciate anything you may be able to do to explain frankly to President Rhee from military standpoint problems involved withdrawal all non-Korean forces before elections.

In addition point outlined above, following considerations might be advanced:

(1) Our basic objective here is to challenge Communists with constructive workable plan for achieving free unified Korea which Communists probably will never accept.

(2) We do not consider total Chinese Communist withdrawal before elections as crucial element in unification plan if we obtain acceptance principles outlined paragraph II our draft proposal. Later provisions designed to insure, among other things, safeguards against interference by foreign forces in elections.

(3) In reality we are compelled choose between total simultaneous withdrawal before elections, with danger Communists upsetting situation after United Nations withdrawal, or concurrent phased withdrawal before and after elections to protect against non-performance by Communists but with danger Communist forces might frustrate free elections.

We have accordingly sought formula along lines paragraph IV draft proposal which would require withdrawal bulk Communist forces before elections but would leave UNC in south, although reduced in size, during and after elections in event Communist failure implement unification agreement.

with the Koreans have made it very clear that while they are willing to admit that Plan B is a gamble, they still think it is a gamble which the Communists might accept. Ducking the question of troop withdrawals will be more difficult here than at Berlin, here we have to convince 14 other nations of the logic and correctness of our proposals, limited though they may be. All are aware that the basic objection of Communist diplomacy is to get troops out of Korea, but they will find it very difficult to rationalize Rhee's demands, and we will have to answer questions as to how the troop withdrawals might be handled. As a first thought, it seems to me we might suggest that as our own withdrawals will take considerable time and it would be undesirable unduly to postpone political action leading toward unification, the Chinese Communist troops might be withdrawn to concentration areas at the ports of entry on the Korean side of the Yalu, while United Nations troops would withdraw to concentration areas in the vicinity of our base ports. The foreign troops could, under the supervision of the international authority, be insulated from any effect on elections. The North Korean and ROK troops would, as at present, be deployed facing each other along the neutral zone, and could likewise be insulated. If the international authority were unable to carry out its functions, or were interfered with, presumably the United Nations troops would reassume their previous positions and we would again be faced with the present situation.

I am beginning to believe that our suspicion that Pyun and Yang were saying one thing to us and another to Syngman Rhee is unjustified. They are sending another message to Rhee urging acceptance of at least the basic principles of Plan B, which I think we can modify in accordance with your suggestions. I have had some trouble avoiding an early meeting of the 16, but we are scheduling it for Thursday,<sup>2</sup> and it cannot be put off longer than Thursday, with a Korean plenary probably on Friday. *Memorandum of Conversation, by the Adviser to the United States

CONFIDENTIAL

GENEVA, May 12, 1954.<sup>1</sup>

Participants: Dr. Pyun, ROK Delegation
Ambassador Yang, ROK Delegation
Ambassador Limb, ROK Delegation
Mr. Hong, ROK Delegation
Mr. Walter S. Robertson, US Delegation
Mr. Kenneth T. Young, Jr., US Delegation

After congratulating Dr. Pyun for his speech in the Plenary, May 11, Mr. Robertson said he wished to inform the ROK Delegation that it would be advisable to hold a meeting of the 16 on Thursday morning. Among other reasons, Mr. Eden had to return to London over the weekend and hoped there could be such a meeting before his departure.

Dr. Pyun indicated no objection and asked whether we intended to table our draft proposal with the 16. Mr. Robertson replied that we would not, since the United States and the Republic of Korea are not in agreement.

Mr. Robertson pointed out that Dr. Pyun should be prepared for questions from other delegations as to whether the ROK is ready with a counter proposal. Mr. Robertson suggested that Dr. Pyun make the following two general points, in view of the lack as yet of US-ROK agreement on Plan B:

(1) Reiterate, from his speech of May 11, that the issue is whether the north Koreans will agree to free and fair elections under supervision of the United Nations.

(2) Take the position that, until the Communists concede on the fundamental issue, our side should not make concessions on a detailed proposal which would be based upon UN supervision.

Mr. Robertson assured Dr. Pyun that the United States Delegation would take this same position in the meeting of the 16. The ROK Delegates expressed particular satisfaction and complete agreement with this approach. They said they would meet with certain other delegates today to develop the above position.

During the course of the discussion, Dr. Pyun proposed to make to the 16 tomorrow the six-point proposal which he had intended to present to the plenary on May 3 but had deleted at our urgent suggestion. He also said he might mention President Rhee's willingness to hold a plebiscite in the south to determine whether the people would agree to nation-wide elections in the south as well as the north. Mr. Robertson strongly urged Dr. Pyun not to mention either idea because it would create great confusion and underscore the lack of agreement among the 16. Moreover, it would be completely impractical for the Conference to wait indefinitely for a plebiscite to decide whether there should be elections. Ambassadors Yang and Limb concurred. Dr. Pyun agreed not to mention these matters in view of his complete endorsement of the above approach.

Ambassador Yang informed Mr. Young privately after the meeting that the ROK Delegation had received a telegram from President Rhee insisting on complete withdrawal of all Chinese forces and, in effect, not accepting Plan B. Because of this message and continued lack of US-ROK agreement on a proposal, Ambassador Yang said the ROK Delegation would adhere to the general approach outlined above as the only possible tactic under present circumstances.

GENEVA, May 12, 1954—5 p. m.

Secto 182. Repeated information Seoul 68, Tokyo 50. Tokyo for CINCUNC. At meeting of heads of Big Three delegations this noon, General Smith explained futility of engaging in endless attempt to work out details of plan with Rhee when any solution we proposed must be based on authority of UN, which Molotov had yesterday categorically rejected. He explained why we should not press Rhee too hard, including need for Congressional support on Indochina. He also mentioned possibility of suggesting, in restricted meeting of seven, regrouping of Chinese and UN forces prior to elections. We had reached an impasse and there would be no communist concessions. Pyun was right that North Korea had become a Chinese province. It had gone and we were not going to fight global war for it. Issue should be joined on whether or not communists would accept UN authority.

Eden said he wanted to speak next plenary in reply to Molotov and particularly to discuss question of where freedom was found in Asia. He would also like to speak on principles. It was agreed that Bidault would speak first in general terms, that Eden would then follow up with statement of principles and that Asian representative, presumably Philippines, would if possible obtain 16 agreement present specific proposal on principles. Smith suggested it be put to communists on basis that if they accepted, there would be further discussion in restricted sessions, otherwise, there would seem to be no further point in continuing Korean discussion.

Secto 194. Repeated information Seoul priority 71, Tokyo 56, London 158, Paris 251, Moscow 67. Department pass Defense; Tokyo pass CINCUNC. At fifth meeting of chief allied delegates held this morning at Palais with Kural presiding, it was agreed that, in lieu of a detailed plan, the committee of nine (US, UK, France, ROK, Thailand, Australia, Colombia, Philippines, Turkey) should meet tomorrow at 10 a. m. to begin effort to draft an agreed set of general principles upon which allied side could stand. It was obvious that all in group except ROK's and ourselves strongly felt that for propaganda reasons and because of domestic public opinions, it was highly desirable such general principles include support of all-Korean elections. Pending formulation such principles was agreed no need hold plenary sessions unless two or more allies prepared speak or unless plenary called by Commies. Also no indication other members 16 desired another restricted session unless apparent Commies ready to make some new proposal.

General Smith opened meeting by reporting that, despite complete cooperation Pyun, we were unable to reach agreement on detailed plan. Felt this not particularly regrettable, however, in view Molotov's speech yesterday<sup>2</sup> which crystallized two issues on which we could stand firm: (1) Absolute necessity uphold authority of UN; (2) requirement that free elections reflect honest will of people and that representation be directly proportionate to population. Said that while inadvisable present detailed counterproposal at this time, it would be helpful if we could present set of basic principles which had been developed by allies in plenary to date and upon which there was general agreement among allies.

In response to question from Garcia (Philippines) who pressed Pyun as to whether Rhee categorically rejected all-Korean elections and as to whether any flexibility ROK position, Pyun replied ROK position reflected by General Smith's opening remarks that allies should not explore detailed controversial points but rather wait to see whether Commies change their position re UN and free elections. Added Rhee would be ready accept all-Korean elections provided that voters so desired. Admitted such procedure would take time but pointed out all-Korean elections created constitutional problem for ROKs.

Spaak (Belgium) agreed unwise to go into details at this time but emphasized we must present a set of clear simple principles in order extricate ourselves from difficult propaganda position resulting from specific North Korean proposal. As example such principles, cited general all-Korean elections, UN supervision, withdrawal foreign forces. During discussion which followed, Eden and Commonwealth representatives, Turks and Colombia supported Spaak. Eden, after paying tribute Pyun, said that while Molotov's repudiation UN made allied task easier, we should still be in position to put up three or four point general proposal and stand on it. Said he planned to outline certain general principles in plenary speech this afternoon but would fuz question of whether elections in both North and South Korea. Lacoste added Bidault also planned to talk general principles this afternoon although did not specify what Bidault planned to say re elections.

Pearson, while supporting Spaak and Eden, went further by saying did not want to be placed in position at home of supporting only North Korean elections or withdrawal only Communist troops prior to election. Stressed importance of maintaining united front lest Communist charge that conference broke down over allied disagreement, but hinted that if general approval allied proposal not obtained might be necessary for several allied representatives to voice objections to such proposal either at Geneva or at home.

General Smith agreed need for allied unity on simple formula but urged that if agreement unattainable on general principles we should be prepared to stand on question UN authority and free elections based on representation in National Assembly proportionate to population. He also pointed out ROK Government and constitution only ones recognized by UN as legal and valid. However, no support expressed for our position we could stand on these two points in event disagreement. Instead, general consensus as stated by Watt (Australia), McIntosh (New Zealand), Zuleta (Colombia), Acikalin (Turkey) was that we must somehow reach agreement on basic principles and that such principles must contain more than broad generalities.

For Washington and Seoul.

Telegram follows<sup>3</sup> on Robertson, Young conversation with Pyun following above meeting and delegation's suggestion on set of principles to be discussed urgently with Rhee. We do not plan to table any proposal in committee of nine, without prior effort at obtaining ROK agreement on text.

Secto 196. Repeated information Seoul 73, Tokyo 57. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. Following meeting of 16 this morning, Robertson and Young met with Pyun and Republic of Korea delegation to discuss meeting of May 9. Robertson stressed:

(1) Both delegations should refrain from getting involved in details, but support general principles on which can all agree.

(2) Communists here are trying alienate United States away from its Allies by attacking only United States and not any other country.

(3) It would be playing right into Communist hands if United States put in position of agreeing only with Republic of Koreans, and not with Western Allies.

(4) United States has major problems, as well as other alliances to consider in critical areas around the world and must resist Communism wherever possible as the only country with the power and resources to lead in this effort along with other Allies.

(5) United States Government would be in difficult position with United States public opinion if we can not find common ground on basic principles with other Allies.

(6) United States delegation stressing Republic of Korea only Constitutional authority and that elections should take place under Republic of Korea Constitution.

(7) Other delegations here agree with United States on central issue United Nations supervision and drafting common set general principles, instead detailed plan which they would prefer. This is great advantage for United States, since many delegations not agree with initial position introduced by Republic of Korea and United States delegations on elections only in North Korea and Chinese Communist withdrawal first.

(8) Molotov's second speech is such an unequivocal rejection of principle United Nations supervision that Communists undoubtedly can never repudiate it which gives United States and Republic of Korea opportunity for great political victory in free world over Communists, if we can now seize opportunity by stating general issues on which 16 insist Korean unification be based and leave Conference on that positive note when Communists reject them.

Pyun and Republic of Korea delegation concurred in desirability drafting general principles and leaving details for later development in unlikely event Communists should accept statement principles. Pyun and Yang asked United States to draft such principles and discuss with them later today which we will do.

country and (2) elections must be held in conditions of freedom and certified by neutral observers with adequate authority. Communists have hitherto rejected these principles but it is hoped that they would reconsider and agree to place elections as well as withdrawal or movement of troops under international control. Most qualified organism to supply such control is UN.

Bidault attacked Communist accusation that UN is accomplice in aggression. This, he said, is not merely false but its repetition is dangerous to all and would threaten very existence of UN.

Bidault rejected suggestion US was aggressor in Korea and showed that facts hardly consistent with any imperialism on part US.

In apparent allusion to Indochina phase, Bidault stressed "this Geneva Conference which should be a peace conference and which we firmly continue to hope to see become truly a peace conference". Later he said "it is already much that an armistice has been signed we are the first to recognize it, we who wish to see the contagion of peace spread to all Asia".

Bidault ended on a note expressing hope that constructive efforts will yet bring Korea the unity and liberty which it deserves.

Eden also said he would avoid going into past history but stressed that UN did its duty in Korea and if US bore majority share it is measure not of US imperialism but of its loyalty to UN and deserves tribute. He also expressed regret that Communist China found it necessary to raise PW question which for UK has been settled some time ago in accordance with armistice agreement and Geneva Convention.

Alluding to charge of imperialism in Asia against UK, Eden stressed that facts are that UK has contributed to advance of national liberation, citing India, Pakistan and Burma. He referred to Asian members of UK Commonwealth which continues in close voluntary relation to UK, and asked whether real freedom was in Colombo or in Ulan Bator, in New Delhi or Pyongyang. Communists appeared unable to recognize concept of voluntary and equal association founded on cooperation and not compulsion. He also cited Colombo plan with participation other Asian countries and working hand in hand with UN and US technical assistance.

UK belief in freedom, Eden said, underlies its insistence that Korea shall have freedom—that freedom must be genuine and methods achieving it fair and practical. Nam Il's proposal could not lead to desired results since it does not recognize numerical disparity between North and South and could not lead to agreement, there being no provision even for neutral chairman or arbitration tribunal. Also, withdrawal with country divided under plan which can only lead to deadlock would result in chaos, and perhaps renewal of hostilities. Eden noted similarity to Molotov's Berlin proposal and said in both situations elections would either not be free or would not take place at all. Communist proposal for packed commission, for elections free in name but rigged in fact.

Unacceptability of Communist proposal, Eden said, does not mean that last word has been said. He stressed general agreement on following points: (a) Desire for peaceful settlement; (b) unification; (c) after unification no foreign interference in Korean affairs; (d) appropriate guarantee for Korean integrity by other nations; (e) common desire to withdraw forces as soon as can be without again endangering peace. In light of this area of agreement, Eden suggested desirability of agreement on following basic principles: (1) Elections for all-Korean Government; (2) elections should truly reflect will of people taking into account distribution of population between North and South; (3) universal adult suffrage and secret ballot, as soon as possible under conditions of freedom; (4) elections to be under international supervision, in UK view should be under UN but members need not be chosen from among Korean belligerents but could be panel acceptable to Geneva Conference; (5) program must include withdrawal of forces as soon as international peace and security achieved, as provided for UN forces in GA resolution, October 7 in General Assembly.

Eden concluded by saying that if there could be agreement on these principles then conference could get down to terms and stages, perhaps in restricted session then reporting back to conference as a whole.

Please discuss draft with Rhee, emphasizing following points:

1. As pointed out Secto 116,<sup>3</sup> Molotov's repudiation of principle UN supervision gives us opportunity for political victory in free world over Communists. It was consensus of 16 delegates at meeting today that we should now capitalize on this fact to present basic principles on which 16 insist unification must be based.

2. Draft emphasizes cardinal importance UN as basis progress for unification Korea through reference UN resolutions and requirement for supervision of elections and withdrawal forces by impartial UN body.

3. It provides that elections will be held in accordance with constitutional processes of ROK which would permit Rhee request amendment constitution for this purpose which he pointed out would be required if elections held subsequent to May 20 Assembly elections. Proposal also provides for continuation in effect of ROK constitution, another important ROK requirement.

4. It provides for representation in proportion to population throughout Korea, thus, rejecting concept of parity between North and South Korea contained North Korea proposal.

5. In accordance Tedul 52 (Seoul 907)<sup>4</sup> formulation of provision re withdrawal forces generalized to avoid difficult question whether Chinese Communists should withdraw first or whether there should be concurrent withdrawal UN and Communist forces. (We are still

Meeting of the Allied Working Group of Nine, Geneva, May 14, Morning: The United States Delegation to the Department of State

Secto 210. Repeated information Seoul 77, Tokyo 60. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. Re Sectos 194,<sup>1</sup> 196,<sup>2</sup> 200.<sup>3</sup> Johnson opened Korean working group meeting of nine this morning with statement purpose to seek agreement on basic position which sixteen delegations can stand on and give full support too. He enumerated following points as his understanding principles to be agreed: (1) Korea to be unified state; (2) UN role in Korea must be maintained; (3) elections to be held under UN supervision; (4) representation in body elected proportionate to total population in Korea; (5) legitimacy of ROK must be maintained; (6) following unification and achievement stability in Korea non-Korean forces to be withdrawn (does not preclude commencement withdrawal earlier); (7) UN to certify unification accomplished; (8) assurances to be given for territorial integrity of unified Korea. He emphasized these should be spelled out somewhat but would be advantage in keeping statement principles short. If agreement reached in conference on principles then would have basis for negotiating detailed agreements.

Philippines (Briones) stated delegation had proposal to make which contained following points: (1) ROK and DPROK to unite under one government and constitution; (2) constitutional convention to be elected by Korean people on basis one representative per 200,000 population; (3) convention would approve and ordain new constitution;

(4) election laws to be agreed by Geneva conference; (5) elections to be supervised by UN body; (6) subsequent elections under constitution also to be supervised by UN body; (7) non-Korean forces would remain in Korea but avoid interference in elections and withdraw after establishment of government. (This proposal similar to that suggested by Philippines earlier in conference at meeting of sixteen.)

ROK (Pyun) attacked proposal vigorously emphasizing ROK Government for all Korea, constitutional convention runs counter to principles enumerated by Johnson, particularly maintenance legitimacy ROK. He stated he would study Philippine proposal but it contrary principles his government accepted. He then criticized point four Eden's statement principles in plenary yesterday (Secto 203),<sup>4</sup> stating this would open path for Communists to suggest neutral members on commission to supervise elections. Following considerable discussion this point, during which Johnson pointed out only UN itself can make decision on body to perform functions in Korea and its present decision is for UNCURK, it was generally agreed that "UN supervision" was essential point on which we must stand, without getting into specific question whether UNCURK or not.

Meeting then turned to Philippine proposal and lively triangular exchange among US, ROK and Philippine delegates ensued, including lengthy historical lectures by Philippines. ROK supported by US pointed out proposal for constitutional convention destroyed UN resolutions and actions on Korea. Johnson stressed fact proposal counter to legitimacy ROK principle and observed latter recognized by UN and some thirty countries and nation for which we have all been fighting. He pointed up danger of playing into hands of Communists, who wished to equate North and South Korea, by any proposal which wipes out ROK. He also observed Communists have not raised this issue since North Korean proposal provides only for elections to National Assembly. Philippines then posed direct question to ROK as to whether it ready accept principle general elections throughout Korea and stated Philippines would accept concept general elections throughout Korea under effective UN supervision if ROK would. Discussion ended on this note which seemed to indicate Philippines using their proposal chiefly as rather crude tactic to push ROK into acceptance general elections thruout Korea.

At Secretary General Kural's suggestion it was agreed at conclusion two-hour meeting that US and ROK delegations would seek to draft statement principles for consideration other fourteen delegations.

Possible modification which might help with President Rhee without disturbing rest of 16 too greatly would be add at end first sentence paragraph 3 of proposal, "after UN commission has determined conditions existing in Korea make possible genuinely free elections."

It could be explained to Rhee "conditions" include problem north Korean forces and UN commission thus given power defer elections until some satisfactory solution reached

Another possibility which would provide further safeguard would be modify paragraph 5 to read "Specific arrangements for withdrawal from Korea of non-Korean forces shall be agreed upon by parties accepting these principles, and withdrawal shall be observed, etc.". 1. After plenary session May 13 Young discussed draft basic proposal with Pyun and ROK delegation. As they were disturbed and even angry over Eden's five points and especially his fourth point (Secto 203<sup>4</sup>), their initial reaction was critical:

(a) Pyun and other delegates objected to phrase "throughout Korea" in first paragraph draft. He said scope of elections should be left unspecified in basic principles. He repeated ROK would agree to general elections in Korea if Chinese Communists withdrew completely from Korea prior such elections;

(b) ROK delegation strongly preferred specific reference to UNCURK instead of to United Nations Commission. Their insistence on this point reflected their deep concern over the vagueness Eden's proposal for a commission composed of a "panel acceptable to Geneva conference". ROK delegation interprets Eden's phraseology possibly include neutrals such as India and Communists United Nations members such as Czechoslovakia and Poland. Pyun and ROK delegates said any such commission totally unacceptable. Young referred to Rhee's objections to UNCURK as reported by Briggs and Dean. Pyun said he would persuade President insist on UNCURK since its composition satisfactory.

(c) Pyun considered any reference to question withdrawal non-Korean forces, even such vague wording as paragraph 5 draft proposal, should be omitted. Young pointed out impracticability no reference this matter.

ROK delegation reacted negatively to draft proposal in contrast to affirmative reaction draft of plan B. Their initial criticism explained tentative idea could be included within wording paragraph five basic proposal.<sup>5</sup>

In Secto 200 (sent Seoul 74)<sup>6</sup> or as revised in Tosec 164. Such arrangements would be developed only if Communists accepted basic principles.

3. Re Geneva's 70 (sent Washington Secto 187)<sup>7</sup> USDel considers draft basic proposal Secto 200 and plan B Secto 149<sup>8</sup> 2 different ideas. Plan B is detailed counter proposal. As long as Communists repudiate UN authority, UN supervision and genuinely free elections so categorically at Geneva, 16 have agreed inadvisable proceed with any detailed plan for peaceful unification Korea, particularly since agreement on such plan not yet possible among allies. On basic issues we can be in solid position and have strong case free world opinion as USDel has noted several telegrams. Presentation detailed counter proposal such as plan B would give Communists chance move from defensive to offensive attack and distortion of secondary issues in any detailed plan rather than fundamental issues. Basic principles on other hand do not represent specific plan or concessions bring about unification, but fundamental requirements free and orderly establishment of unification and independence Korea. If 16 could agree on them, particularly on general elections, set of positive principles thus would present to world single position all 16 and determine whether basis exists for subsequent detailed negotiations. If Communists accept principles, negotiations would be necessary on detailed implementation which would be worked out only with ROK concurrence. However 16 consider Communist rejection basic principles most likely. This would achieve political result here of great value in world wide struggle against Communist bloc.

4. By concessions Pyun seems to mean ROK changing position from proposing elections only in North Korea to accepting general elections with constitutional amendment determine will of people. He also may have in mind some modification ROK position on total withdrawal Chinese Communist forces prior elections.

5. USDel cannot overemphasize importance Rhee's agreement. It would solidify allied support in many forms for ROK and demonstrate firm unity of 16 which Communists trying to fracture.

"In the proposed draft statement of principles I handed you yesterday you will note the words in paragraph 3 'by the United Nations (or UNCURK)'.

"In one of our earlier conversations you will recall you objected to supervision by UNCURK so I suggested to Geneva, in order to meet your views, the use of some phrase such as 'United Nations or an appropriate committee or commission thereof.'

"As you know the existing membership of UNCURK is made up of representatives from Australia, Chile, Netherlands, Pakistan, Philippines, Thailand and Turkey, all of whom constitute members of the free world.

"If we get away from UNCURK and use another agency of the UN, the Communists or nations somewhat more friendly to them than to us may demand representation.

"So in our own interests let's stick to UNCURK.

"Nothing in this world is perfect but the draft of principles we left with you Saturday enables us to proclaim the free world solidarity against communism and you affirm your moral willingness to let the people of all Korea decide under UNCURK supervision. Further we maintain the ROK constitution and sovereignty, a cardinal article of our faith.

"Time is running out. It is important that we issue this statement of principles promptly at Geneva. We can work out the details later.

"While I have no authority to make commitments to you with respect to your army or its equipment, it seems to be quite apparent there must be no rupture in the US-ROK relations here or at Geneva if we are to get the most propitious results from the Van Fleet mission when its recommendations are announced at home so you will be in a position to repel any attack within the framework of our mutual defense pact.

"And in view of our other commitments against communism in the free world, it is essential we and you have no break with the rest of our allies at Geneva.

Succeeded this morning in arguing him out of number of points and he suggested we redraft proposal and bring back this afternoon.

After combined group from National War College had called on him, Ambassadors Briggs and Dean again stayed and submitted revised draft substantially in line with draft submitted Saturday except changed his new paragraph to read "ROK and its immediate neighbors shall agree not to invade nor to infiltrate the other and not to interfere in any way with the internal affairs of the other. In case of a military attack the UN parties to these principles shall at once take adequate steps to end the aggression in accordance with the principles of the UN Charter." Struck out specific exclusion Communist Party and its members and provided right to vote should be in accordance with the appropriate electoral laws and struck out provision UNCURK could not interfere with elections and again provided supervision should be in accordance with appropriate electoral laws.

He took our draft for reading but then launched into exceptionally long criticism of our entire economic aid program, requirement Korea must buy from lowest bidder which in practice often means Japan, failure of Congress to appropriate all money promised, criticism of provisions of proposed power contract with Bechtel organization and tirade against Japan's actions in connection proposed resumption Korean-Japanese negotiations. (During 3 weeks of negotiations this is first time Rhee has raised issue of aid program.)

1. Afternoon May 17 Young at Robertson's request met with Pyun and ROK delegation sound them out on making revision, more acceptable to ROK, re language on withdrawal of foreign forces in basic proposal (Secto 200<sup>1</sup>). Young suggested deleting paragraph V and adding language at end paragraph I such as "and with subsequent agreement on withdrawals foreign forces and such disposition of domestic forces as will ensure non-intimidation of the electorate". Also suggested as alternate following two sentences added end paragraph I: "The holding of full elections will necessitate agreement on withdrawals of foreign forces and such disposition of domestic forces as will ensure non-intimidation of the electorate. Specific arrangements in regard to these forces shall be agreed upon as soon as all parties accept these principles." Language based on paragraph 2 of Tedul 52 repeated Seoul 907, Tokyo 2481.<sup>2</sup>

Young pointed out such action by Pyun would be contrary charter of 16 to committee of 9 to formulate general principles and understanding among 14 as well as committee of 9 US and ROK presently engaged in such endeavor. Pyun replied if committee of 9 agrees on set of principles such as US has submitted to ROK, his delegation would disassociate itself completely and publicly, and he would be even more inclined proceed with plenary speech giving his proposal.

4. Pyun and ROK delegation objected strongly any reference to "disposition domestic forces" and insisted that no reference be made to this idea in any draft on withdrawal question. They said it would put ROK forces on par with North Korean forces and would open door for Communists demand dissolution ROK forces.

5. Pyun has received no word from Rhee regarding draft basic proposal, and specifically on generalized language concerning withdrawal foreign forces. Obvious Pyun's reactions on this question based on unchanged instructions. GENEVA, May 18, 1954—8 p. m.

86. Repeated information Department Secto 250, Tokyo 70. Seoul for Briggs and Dean ; Tokyo pass CINCUNC.

1. Robertson and Young had long unproductive talk ROK delegation May 18. While their discussion with US most friendly on personal basis their mood has become brittle, apprehensive and even very antagonistic to UK since Eden's May 13 speech in plenary on Korea.

2. Pyun reiterated rejection any generalized language on withdrawal question and continued insist on explicit provision prior total withdrawal Chinese Communists before elections in any basic principles. He again informed us he has had no word from Rhee on draft basic proposal.

3. Conversations with ROK delegation May 17 and 18 clearly indicate Pyun has no leeway and adheres to letter Rhee's instructions last week re total prior Chinese Communist withdrawal. He appears unwilling suggest to Rhee any changes in ROK position this question. He will not accept proposition that Allies can agree on generalized provision withdrawal foreign forces leaving ROK freedom of action concur or non concur subsequent negotiations on withdrawal and other questions as we pointed out paragraph 3 Secto 216 (repeated Seoul 80, Tokyo 63).<sup>1</sup> Robertson stressed this point over and over again today with still no positive reaction from ROK delegation. Believe this argument could be used with Rhee if you agree.

4. Re Pyun's 14 points (Secto 239 repeated Seoul 84, Tokyo 67<sup>2</sup>), our impression is ROK delegation has not yet transmitted ROK draft to Seoul for Rhee. Robertson told Pyun today we prefer our shorter version which Briggs and Dean discussing with Rhee past few days. We have also studied his 14 points and made some changes which we showed him in the redraft. Chief changes were few editorial revisions paragraphs 1 and 2 conform US draft proposal, deletion paragraph 10 and substitution our paragraph 5 (Secto 200<sup>3</sup>) as two sentences for 12 and 13. Pyun and Yang objected to our wording on withdrawal for familiar reasons.

5. Robertson made strong case ROK seemed prefer clear break now with US and other Allies on general principles which Communists most likely reject rather than accept principles in 16-nation endorsement and break some indefinite future date with Communists on withdrawal question should they accept general principles. He stressed again importance US-ROK agreement and 16-nation endorsement single basic proposal on Korea. Also stressed Congressional and public opinion would react sharply if ROKs could not even agree with US and Allies on general principles which might have adverse effect on Congressional consideration appropriations for Korea.

6. Nevertheless Pyun said he saw no harm present ROK point of view inasmuch as other delegations and particularly Eden had done so on their own without concerting with ROK or 16. All ROK delegates joined in bitter attack on Eden and UK. They are obviously smarting over Eden's speech which we believe cut ground from under progress we had made in developing close collaboration and identity of view with ROK delegation here.

7. ROK delegates are contacting other delegations to support ROK thesis on Communist withdrawal. ROK delegation argues million Chinese Communists in north will allow Communists manipulate Eden's (USDel is informed by other sources ROKs have approached Belgians, Canadians, and Netherlands all of whom reacting negatively ROK thesis.) ROK delegation particularly uncommunicative with us on details this matter.

8. Robertson pointed out US and ROK have responsibility report something to committee of nine before taking any unilateral action. ROK delegation agreed with us at least on that.

9. It is apparent ROK delegation is adhering standing instructions and we can expect make no further headway here on question withdrawal foreign forces unless and until Rhee can be persuaded change ROK position.

SECRET      NIACT

SEOUL, May 18, 1954—10 p. m.

93. Sent Department 1202, repeated information Tokyo 710. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. For Smith from Dean. President at Wilson review all morning. Sent him revised text statement and pointed out extreme urgency unanimous action at Geneva.

Ambassadors Briggs and Dean saw President Rhee, Prime Minister, Minister of Defense, and Acting Foreign Minister Cho for two hours this afternoon. Finally persuaded them to eliminate clause excluding Communist Party and its members from voting by inserting after "candidature" in subdivision 2 "in accordance with the appropriate electoral laws then in effect" and pointed out they could amend electoral law.

They strongly insist on providing for withdrawal Chinese Communist aggressors and North Korean Communist Army and not UN forces. We said must have proposal commanding unanimous agreement and commanding respect at home and not too insulting Communists. President asked if we must please Communists on our side, then why not omit them from statement and if we are sure Communists will not accept why not draft the statement the way we want it.

We pointed out subdivision 4 did not necessarily require phased withdrawal and as ROK is one of parties, they must agree to specific arrangements for withdrawal.

President again offered to agree if I would make secret arrangements to support them in fighting if North Korean army refused to disband and, I of course, refused.

Again carefully reviewed all arguments and President said they would give the statement thoughtful consideration.

Tried best sell absolute necessity for action today, but President obdurate. Said morale commonwealth forces bad which was affecting morale of Korean forces and they had better go home.

Following is the text with corrections we left with them today. Took their changes insofar as not affecting substance.

"1. In conformity with the UN resolutions on the question of Korean unification and independence, the unification of Korea under a single democratic and independent government for all of Korea shall be achieved by the people of Korea in free elections throughout Korea to the National Assembly of a unified Korea. These elections shall be held under conditions of genuine freedom and in accordance with the constitutional processes of the Republic of Korea. The Constitution of the Republic of Korea shall remain in effect except as it may be amended or superseded by the action of the National Assembly before the above elections. After the election the Constitution may be amended in accordance with its terms.

"2. The representation in the National Assembly shall be in direct proportion to the indigenous population of all Korea, and shall be based on secret ballot and universal suffrage free of political or other obstacles or discrimination with respect to qualifications for voting or for candidature, in accordance with the appropriate electoral laws then in effect.

"3. In order to fulfill the above requirements effectively and to assure that conditions of freedom exist during elections, in accordance with the appropriate electoral laws then in effect, the UNCURK shall supervise and observe the elections, which shall be held as soon as possible after the UNCURK has determined that conditions existing in Korea make possible genuinely free elections. The UNCURK in accordance with the appropriate electoral laws then in effect shall have full freedom of movement and observation in all areas, with no interference of any kind, and its recommendations and requests for facilities including safe conduct shall be binding on the authorities concerned.

"4. Specific arrangements for withdrawal from Korea of non-Korean forces before the election shall be agreed upon by the parties accepting these principles, and withdrawal shall be observed and verified by the UNCURK in order to ensure that elections are accomplished under conditions of genuine freedom.

"5. The parties accepting these principles shall cooperate in carrying out these proposals, and shall pledge their respect for the territorial integrity and political independence of a unified Korea. The government of the latter shall undertake to abide by the purposes and principles of the UN charter.

"6. UNCURK shall submit its report to the United Nations when the government of a United Korea has been established with effective governmental control over all Korea.

"7. The Republic of Korea and its immediate neighbors shall agree not to invade nor to infiltrate the other, and not to interfere in any way with internal affairs of the other. In case of a military attack, the UN parties to these principles shall at once take adequate steps to end the aggression in accordance with the principles of the UN charter."

In subdivision 4 we could probably settle for Chinese Communist aggressors and United Nations forces in lieu of "non-Korean forces" although they object violently to putting forces on a parity.

Claim we are asking them to sacrifice principles.

President considers we are somehow binding him to coalition government merely to have unity at Geneva which he considers nonsense. Says British and French will never support us and we had better get on bandwagon with Formosa and Korea and stop diplomatic maneuvering. Also fears by signing this statement he starts a new ninety day period running before he is free to walk out at Geneva.

We are not familiar precisely with what was said to him about any ninety day period at Geneva.

Message follows.

SECRET      NIACT

SEOUL, May 18, 1954—midnight.

94. Sent Department 1203, repeated information Tokyo 711. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. For Smith from Dean. Re: My immediately preceding message.

Since drafting foregoing message, Ambassador Dean received following letter dated May 18 from President Rhee:

"Reference is made to our discussion of this afternoon and to the proposals set forth in a secret document submitted to me, dated 18 May 1954.

"As a result of this discussion, it is agreed by the Republic of Korea Government as follows:

"To paragraph 2 of this document, following the words, 'in accordance with appropriate electoral laws' should be added the words 'then in effect' as suggested by you.

"From paragraph 3 after the words 'the UNCURK shall' the words 'supervise and' should be omitted.

"Paragraph 4 is accepted in its entirety. However, it should be understood between our two governments that to safeguard against any future misunderstanding regarding this agreement, this government will exercise its own sovereign rights without any foreign interference in bringing the North Korean Communist Forces or any other subversive elements into submission, by force if necessary before the elections. I would like to receive your agreement to this understanding.

“Paragraph 6 is entirely unnecessary and we request its deletion. To all other proposals we agree.”

Propose reply expressing gratification his acceptance, subdivision 4 and recognizing that his government is of course sovereign to extent already recognized by UN and our government, and to extent ROK chooses to exercise sovereign authority within its recognized jurisdiction, or extent to which ROK Government agrees to specific arrangement for withdrawal non-Korean forces within terms of paragraph 4 above, that is entirely within ROK's province.

We, on the other hand, are parties to the armistice agreement and are bound by its terms and cannot now be bound by a secret agreement with the ROK which would derogate from our publicly expressed obligations.

In order to be free to agree with ROK on the hoped for augmentation of the ROK army in accordance with the as yet unannounced recommendations of the Van Fleet investigatory mission and be free to introduce new equipment into Korea, we must be legally and appropriately freed from armistice provisions and to that end believe essential to achieve unity at Geneva.

In addition, we cannot agree to any terms which would bind our government beyond the terms of the publicly announced mutual defense pact.

But within these limits, we are gratified he has accepted provisions of subdivision 4 as set forth above and express our appreciation thereof and that consequent freedom to announce this statement of principles at Geneva will redound to our mutual benefit.

While we would much prefer inclusion of subdivision 6, which ROK wishes omitted, nevertheless if now omitted, could its provisions not be worked out later as pragmatic matter?

Reference Geneva's 83.<sup>1</sup> Would hold up further drafting changes there suggested pending further negotiations here. If you deem wise, suggest you advise Pyun hold up 14-point proposal pending result of negotiations here.

SECRET NIACT

SEOUL, May 19, 1954—3 p. m.

95. Sent Department 1204, repeated information Tokyo 712. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. For Smith from Dean. Acting Foreign Minister Cho called early this morning to see if we had received letter from President delivered last night, text of which is in Embtel 94, repeated Secretary of State 1203, Tokyo 711.<sup>1</sup> Ambassadors Briggs and Dean called on President Rhee, Prime Minister, Acting Foreign Minister Cho at 11 a. m. Ambassador Dean delivered to President Rhee following letter:

“My dear Mr. President:

“On behalf of my government permit me to say I am deeply grateful at the very distinct progress we have made in discussing the proposed joint statement of principles.

“In the statement made by you as President of the ROK and John Foster Dulles, Secretary of State of our government, on July 27, 1953, you jointly said:

“‘There are no other agreements or understandings stated or implied resulting from these consultations other than those herein contained’.

“The ‘herein’ referred to draft mutual defense treaty between our two governments. That treaty has since been consented to by our Senate and is about to be formally published and ratified between our two governments.

“When Secretary of State Dulles was testifying before the US Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs he was asked if there were any secret agreements or understandings and he repeated the paragraph quoted above. The consent of the US Senate followed.

“We again recognize the inherent sovereignty of the ROK to deal with its own affairs in the territory now under its administrative control or hereafter recognized by our government as lawfully brought under its administrative control.

“In agreeing to the ‘specific arrangements for the withdrawal of non-Korean forces’ to which you must agree in subdivision 4 of the proposed statement of principles you will, of course, be exercising your own sovereign power, in so agreeing.

“As you know we are a signatory to the armistice agreement of July 27, 1953, and until it is lawfully superseded we must abide by its terms with which you also agreed to [sic] in the joint statement above referred to, to the extent therein set forth.

“We are also a signatory to the ‘declaration of the 16 nations’ relating to the armistice of July 27, 1953, in which we affirm that if there should be a renewal of armed attack against your government, challenging the principles of the UN, we will be prompt to resist.

“We believe the achievement of unity of Geneva on the basis of the statement of joint principles will enable us to command the respect of the free world and public opinion at home and will enable us promptly to carry into effect the recommendations of the Van Fleet investigation mission now in the Far East to the end that your army will be equipped to repel any attack.

“In addition you will have the mutual defense treaty. As to the elimination of subdivision 6, your government has already been reognized by the UN in its declaration of December 12, 1948, as the only sovereign government in Korea. The extension of your administrative control in North Korea will, of course, have to be established to other governments' satisfaction and subdivision 6's inclusion is useful, but I leave that to your good judgment.

"I am very sure it will not be in your or our interest to make the further commitment you suggest in your letter of May 18, 1954, but if you will agree promptly to the ROK being a party to the joint statement of principles at Geneva it will greatly encouraged the free world and redound to the joint benefit of our respective governments and permit us jointly to go forward on the tasks envisioned by you and President Eisenhower.

"I again urge the necessity of prompt action as the opportunity for us to act at Geneva may pass from our hands.

"With renewed admiration and respect, I am, Mr. President, Faithfully yours, Arthur H. Dean. Special Ambassador to Korea".

President Rhee read letter out loud. President in substance said again had to have guarantee of US in secret letter from Ambassador Dean that if he marched north against the North Korean Communist Army after withdrawal of Chinese Communist Army we would support him, or we had to insert "North Korean Communist Army" in subdivision 4 as well as non-Korean forces.

We again explained tremendous advantage our side issuing joint statement of principles promptly and utter impossibility of having any secret agreements or understanding.

President Rhee said Secretary Dulles had assured him among our basic objectives was to bring about united and free Korea. He asked could we honestly and realistically believe we could have free elections in north if Chinese Communist Army remained or that he could ever extend his jurisdiction to north if that Army remained?

We again pointed out what the situation would be if no joint statement issued at Geneva with possible slow disintegration UN forces, grumbling American opinion at lack of unity and difficulty such fact imposed on administration in maintaining ROK Army at appropriate level capable of resisting attack.

President very amicable and reasonable aside from renewed attack on economic aid program and Japanese. He said we were really wasting our time in further discussions unless we were either prepared (a) to bring about withdrawal North Korean Communist Army or (b) back him in a military move.

We again urged him essential necessity his cooperation in order that we could continue our cooperation and continued to emphasize his position made our ability to act much more difficult.

Finally President said he would discuss further with his Cabinet officers and expressed appreciation for the good nature with which the discussions had been conducted on both sides.<sup>2</sup>

72. Department pass Defense. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. For Briggs and Dean. Re Seoul's 93 and 94.<sup>1</sup>

1. USDel deeply gratified progress your efforts and hopes confirmation Rhee's acceptance will come soon. Russians have been pressing for plenary on Korea today or Thursday<sup>2</sup> which we managed stave off. Doubt we can hold off beyond Saturday, possibly not beyond Friday. Urgent have US-ROK final agreement draft basic proposal Friday at latest. Our position on being unable present single proposal backed by 16 is becoming increasingly untenable. Unless we can do so by next plenary, situation likely deteriorate to point where we will have abandon all hope united support for single proposal. World opinion would then say we could not agree with Communists because we could not even agree among ourselves. In meantime, we will hold off further discussions with ROK delegation or others and schedule no meetings committee of 9 or 16 pending confirmation Seoul and Washington on revised text.

2. ROK delegation is so upset by Eden's speech (as noted our previous telegrams), which they interpret as sinister device obtain UN commission similar in composition to NNSC or NNRC, that they may reverse previous recommendations to Rhee. Eden has assured us several times ROK delegation completely misunderstood and misinterpreted his position and that no such inferences should be drawn from his fourth point of May 13 speech in plenary on Korea. Important Rhee understand in view our experience concerning implementation armistice agreements, US would join with ROK in refusing accept any such commission.

3. USDel has following comments on Seoul's redraft basic proposal :

(a) Last two sentences paragraph 1 seem confuse constitutional action necessary before elections provide for them again in ROK territory and possible constitutional action after elections on amendment or supersession ROK constitution by expanded National Assembly. Suggest ending paragraph after "National Assembly" in next to last sentence, but can take paragraph as is if necessary.

(b) We regret deletion "supervise and" in paragraph 3 because undercuts Allied reiteration in plenary as well as in one restricted session on Korea genuinely free elections require UN supervision. This is what Communists have unequivocally rejected. However, last clause second sentence, paragraph 3, is supervision in effect.

(c) Insertion phrase "before the election" in paragraph 4 concerns USDel. Instead complete ambiguity in timing of withdrawals before and after elections, paragraph can be interpreted only mean 15 UN members committed make specific arrangements for withdrawal all UN forces as well as Chinese Communist forces before elections. If true, appears conflict with present US policy and JCS views favoring retention some UNC forces Korea until after elections. USDel hopes you can still change this key wording by (1) deleting phrase "before elections" and making withdrawal plural so as to not imply total withdrawal or (2) in addition (1) reinserting phrase "and establishment of government of unified Korea", as in Secto 200,<sup>3</sup> or (3) substituting "the establishment of government of unified Korea" for the words "the election" after "before". Changes would give us needed flexibility on UN forces remaining Korea after elections and not appear commit US general principle total withdrawal in advance any negotiation on arrangements.

(d) USDel agrees delete paragraph 6. Such report to UN is part commission's terms reference laid down in resolution October 7, 1950 as well as prior GA resolutions on Korean independence.

4. Re final paragraph Seoul's 93, if it would help your discussions with Rhee, inform him USDel opposes coalition of any sort with Communists in Korea. This idea of Rhee's is nonsense. In all meetings here as well as Washington prior Geneva, US Government has strongly supported sole legitimacy and sovereignty of ROK in Korea and necessity maintain constitutional structure ROK state. As we indicated in our 57 to Seoul repeated Secto 140,<sup>4</sup> and 29 to Tokyo our proposed plan B deliberately avoids collaboration between Communist puppets in North and legal sovereign Government of ROK. All safeguards for free elections and representation on basis population should ensure non-Communist results elections precluding any coalition. Same is true basic principles. USDel confident Allied delegations here will continue support these views. As far as USDel concerned, ROK agreement basic proposal and presentation with Allied endorsement has nothing to do with any 90-day period. If Rhee signs statement question then is one of discussion in 9 and 16 to obtain their endorsement draft proposal and then its presentation for maximum advantage our side Geneva.

5. Re proposed reply described Seoul's 94 USDel concurs, subject comments paragraph 3(c) above.

Language para 4 proposal Seoul's 1202 clearly implies withdrawal all non-Korean forces before elections. This is not acceptable Defense. See Deptel 902 to Seoul sent Geneva Tosec 107 and Tokyo 2465.<sup>5</sup> Reluctant request Defense reconsideration since still no assurance proposal as whole will be acceptable President Rhee and since both here and in Delegation Geneva considerable doubt exists concerning desirability proposing total withdrawal before elections. Original formulation Secto 200 sent Seoul 74 and Tokyo 58<sup>6</sup> was blurred in order avoid posing this issue and do not see how can be accepted when phrase "before the election" makes it explicit. Can that phrase be dropped?

As pointed out in Seoul's reference telegrams, supplementary secret understanding proposed by Rhee is of course completely unacceptable.

Also concerned over deletion "supervise and" in para 3 of proposal since this is major substantive change. Effective UN supervision is essential ingredient which all Allied delegations have emphasized in their speeches and on which our present position rests. Addition of reference to UN resolutions as suggested Seoul's 1206 sent Geneva 97 and Tokyo 714<sup>7</sup> does not help since they call only for observation and consultation.

Central issue at moment appears to be question of withdrawal of Chinese Communist forces and disposition North Korean forces. Possibly undesirable raise problem re supervision in para 3 unless some satisfactory formulation can be found for question withdrawal in para 4. However leave this Seoul's discretion. If Rhee should accept proposed para 4 in Seoul's 1202 and if Delegation Geneva agrees Department will ask Defense reconsider question total withdrawal before elections. If Rhee and we can agree on some formulation re withdrawal non-Korean forces, perhaps issue re supervision can be handled through drafting discussions at Geneva with subsequent presentation this single issue to Rhee.

We recognize this still leaves issue of North Korean forces unsettled and may therefore not solve Rhee's problem as clearly stated concluding portions Seoul's 1204. Nevertheless believe this is problem which we cannot solve and which must be fuzzed over if there is to be agreement among 16 on proposal embodying basic principles for unification.

Department believes it clear 90-day period began on April 26 and knows of no oral or written statement to anybody which would imply new 90-day period starts running with introduction new plan or proposal at Conference.

SEOUL, May 19, 1954—9 p. m.

99. Sent Department 1208; repeated information Tokyo 716. Geneva for Smith; Tokyo for CINCUNC. From Dean. At 5:15 this afternoon, special messenger from Prime Minister's office left with Ambassador Dean statement in exact form cabled in Embassy telegram 1202<sup>1</sup> except in subdivision 4 they changed "non-Korean forces" to "all foreign forces including North Korean Armed Forces" and instead of adding "in accordance with the resolution of the UNGA 7 October 1950" as agreed this morning in lieu of "supervise and" in subdivision 3, they added after "observe elections" words "consult regarding them".

Exact text of letter from Prime Minister to Ambassador Dean follows:

"After consultation with the President and Vice Foreign Minister, I present to you this final copy of the Republic of Korea Government statement of principles.

In paragraph 3, we accept your suggestion that "the UNCURK will observe and consult regarding the elections". I believe this will be satisfactory to all concerned. If reference to the UN resolution of 7 October 1950 is made, some other questions and discussion may unnecessarily arise.

In paragraph 4, we have inserted the five words, "including North Korean Armed Forces". We believe that this insertion is essential because the mere absence of foreign forces does not ensure free elections. The withdrawal of "foreign" forces alone does not mean anything to us unless the Communist forces also withdraw from Korea or completely surrender to the Republic of Korea Armed Forces. Under no circumstances can we change this unless there is some clause included whereby we have a guarantee that we are protected against any eventuality resulting from the non-withdrawal of the North Korean Armed Forces.

We will be pleased to sign this document in this form and have it released simultaneously.

Thank you for your cooperation."

You will note reference of "final copy" and that they cannot change unless a guarantee that they are protected against any eventuality arising from non-withdrawal of North Korean forces is added.

This seems to be stumbling block of substance which they are just unable to surmount. Unless there is some clause we can accept, am afraid this is their final answer and further negotiations futile.

Have hesitated to suggest Rhee must accept existing situation as "fait accompli" until West is in stronger position to move against North Korea for fear we would have explosion and charge of breaking Cairo declaration et cetera and string of abusive public statements which would not be very palatable at home following fall of Dien Bien Phu.

We are sending separate cablegram outlining arguments which might possibly be made along these lines but frankly don't believe Rhee will buy at least at this time.

1210. Repeated information Tokyo 718, Geneva 101. Priority for the Secretary and Under Secretary from Dean. With meeting this morning described in Embassy telegram 1204,<sup>1</sup> negotiations with President Rhee appear to revolve about one single apparently unsoluble topic with Rhee continuing demand commitment to support him in march north as price for agreeing to general principles favoring overall elections with prior withdrawal North Korean Communist Army.

In discussing matter with Briggs, we agree only ammunition this far unused, if it be ammunition, is to inform Rhee politely but firmly, that our government does not propose to resume Korean war for purpose unifying Korea. We could state that unification of Korea under Republic of Korea still remains our basic objective and we intend work sincerely toward that objective by every means short of war. This, of course, may mean shorter or longer period during which Korea remains un-united and, in fact, actual unification may have to await some broader settlement between Communist and non-Communist world than settlement limited to Korean Peninsula alone. While we have most profound sympathy for all Rhee's views concerning unification, fact remains to seek it once more by force of arms is not consonant with our present global and strategic responsibilities.

Such presentation, if deemed advisable, might perhaps be accompanied by suitable explanation our Asian strategy and expectations in immediate future, stressing that we shall continue to support Republic of Korea as long as that government really works with us, maintains mutual security pact as insurance against renewed Communist aggression, and seeks to rebuild Republic of Korea economy, as well as to assure Republic of Korea military establishment capable of resisting armed aggression, pending arrival United States support.

At some stage of this presentation it might be necessary to describe position of Japan in Far East strategy and necessity for Republic of Korea taking steps toward settlement outstanding difficulties with Japan, though currently this issue and necessity foreign aid purchase in Japan are highly explosive ones with Rhee.

It must be clearly realized that this kind of approach to Rhee without some definite quid pro quo as outlined our 1155,<sup>2</sup> although perhaps overdue in our discussion with him, will in all probability not be well received at end of over three weeks of daily negotiations, even though it must be made some day. It is outlined here so that you may follow our current thinking, and as possible solution admittedly difficult situation. We really believe, however, Rhee's fear of Communist infiltration from north is so basic, we must either find some solution, or admit inability obtain agreement.

SEOUL, May 20, 1954—noon.

104. Sent Department 1214, repeated information Tokyo 722. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. For Smith from Dean. Assuming Rhee would be willing to issue statement of principles satisfactory to us eliminating added words in subdivision 4 (Seoul 1208)<sup>1</sup> and assuming further Communists were to accept principles, the Chinese Communist armies were to withdraw, free elections are held and UNCURK certifies there is united government for all Korea and then North Korean Communist armies refuse to disband so that ROKs cannot effectively extend their civilian government to north, have we not then estopped ourselves from coming to his aid? For under UN Charter would seem conflict then would be internal problem and not an act of aggression or an international dispute. Or after such theoretical unification would not conflict between South and North Korea alone be a matter of domestic jurisdiction and pursuant Article 2 subdivision 7 therefore outside of UN Charter?

Am assuming, of course, we cannot give guaranty mentioned Prime Minister's letter (Embtel 1208, repeated Geneva 99) as we would in Note May 19 letter from Prime Minister to Dean proposes simultaneous release statement of principles.

Hope you can impress on President Rhee and Prime Minister on suitable occasion that such release procedure highly undesirable since would diminish impact on world opinion and would evade US-ROK responsibility coordinate with other 14 delegations at Geneva. Proper procedure following US-ROK agreement on statement would be referral to group of nine at Geneva, which would in turn report to meeting of 16, which would then coordinate presentation statement at plenary conference meeting to assure maximum effect.

1. Following suggestion may help resolve impasse over question North Korean forces and enable agreement upon principles to present to Conference.

2. Can Rhee be persuaded agree delete all reference explicit or implicit to withdrawal of forces from proposed statement principles Seoul's 1202 sent Geneva 93 Tokyo 710? <sup>4</sup>

3. It would be understood that ROK would agree speak in support proposal as thus modified but could go on to point out difficulties securing free elections so long as aggressor Chinese troops remain in North Korea and so long as North Korean Communist army remains in position influence elections despite any efforts UNCURK can put forth. Emphasis could be on difficulties securing genuinely free elections under such conditions but willingness ROK go ahead with elections which could in fact be free.

4. As an alternative to approval by Rhee of any detailed statement of principles perhaps it might be possible get Rhee send Pyun general instructions authorizing him agree some formulation basic principles along lines already extensively discussed between ROK and US but with complete omission question withdrawal forces on understanding Pyun could speak along lines indicated preceding paragraph and Allied delegations could say it obvious some satisfactory specific arrangements re withdrawal forces must be made in order assure genuinely free elections.

5. If Delegation Geneva considers foregoing course action may possibly meet its problem at Conference it should so notify Seoul niact so Dean and Briggs can approach Rhee along this line.

6. While it seems desirable stick to proposed statement principles already agreed with Rhee except for withdrawal provision Department would have no objection use Pyun 14 point draft contained Secto 239 sent Seoul 84 and Tokyo 67.<sup>5</sup> We do not know whether Rhee has seen it but except for South Korean plebiscite provision paragraph 2 and withdrawal provisions paragraphs 12 and 13 it seems preferable statement principles Seoul's 1202.

TOP SECRET      NIACT

SEOUL, May 20, 1954—5 p. m.

1216. Repeated information Tokyo 723 and niact Geneva 105. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. For the Secretary from Dean. Geneva for Smith.

Discussed Embtel 1155<sup>1</sup> with General Anderson,<sup>2</sup> Commander, Fifth Air Force, who had also discussed with General Taylor. Anderson feels very important we retain air bases in Korea and quite skeptical of wisdom our agreeing to full withdrawal UN forces if that also includes Air in order to obtain only theoretical unification Korea.

At General Anderson's suggestion mentioned matter to General Partridge, Commander, Far East Air Force[s], Tokyo, and said would be most interesting to have his comments.

General Anderson has furnished us with following comments from General Partridge and authorizes us transmit Department.

"Personal Anderson from Partridge.

"This message in eight parts. Reference last night's conversation with Dean and you regarding his message to State dated 11 May, his entire dispatch not currently available and I rely on exclusive for Ridgway from Hull dated 13 May for basic provisions upon which to comment.

"Part 1. Based on acceptance of plan B. (a). Agree completely with thought US must deal with overall security program in Far East rather than on bilateral basis. (b). Agree we should tell Rhee where he stands with respect to military and economic aid. . . .

"Part 2. Dispatch mentions military and economic considerations, but program must go far beyond this point. Weight of political and psychological factors is so great that these aspects of US relationships with ROK are primary. Our overall program should be founded on a strong educational plan which as by-product will indoctrinate the young people of Korea in US ideologies.

"Part 3. With respect to rejection of plan B, any thought that we can work out a mutually phased time table involving both the withdrawal of our own troops and those of the Communists is unrealistic. Mention is made also of denouncing the Mutual Defense Pact. It would appear impractical to denounce a pact once it is made. A better course, by far, would be to reject such a pact prior to its promulgation. Since the Koreans provide the only native forces in the Far East ready and willing to fight in support of Western ideals, the latter course certainly should be adopted only as a last resort.

"Part 4. With regard to implementation of a mutual defense pact based on who makes the first attack, the proposed course of action may be a good talking point, but from the military and political point of view, it is difficult to decide upon at the critical moment. At the outset of hostilities, it is extremely difficult to determine which side is actually the aggressor. Although we probably should not tell Rhee so, I feel strongly that we have a moral obligation to support the ROK whenever it gets in trouble and until such time as it is proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the ROK forces are the aggressors. With respect to permitting Rhee to take his choice between cooperating with us under proposed plan B or acting otherwise, it seems highly desirable that we adopt a course of action which will insure South Korean support over a long term. In other words, we should avoid pushing Rhee to point of decision between two courses, neither of which is optimum from our point of view.

"Part 5. Agree that important Chinese bombing targets lie from Peiping northward, but feel that paragraph regarding bases for offensive operations against these targets is overdrawn. Our pacts with Korea and Japan must without fail include authority to operate from their bases. Moreover, capacity of Russians to knock out Okinawan bases is doubtful unless atomic weapons are employed in massive attacks. Such enemy action would touch off World War III in which case Air Force is prepared to carry out atomic strikes from other islands of Pacific as situation demands. (a) Much more important to military position of US in Far East than availability of Korean bases for US air operations is implication of possible use by Communists of air bases in South Korea. Presence of Communist air forces in these fields would jeopardize security of Japanese home islands. (b) Agree with statement that attempt to carry out plan B without ROK cooperation will not seem realistic or convincing and, in fact, believe this is putting the situation too mildly. I fail to see how plan B could be implemented without the fullest cooperation of the ROK's, and, furthermore, without some assistance from the Government of North Korea.

"Part 6. With respect to last paragraph above, and portion of message saying that top military commanders are not up to date on the overall thinking in the Far East, believe time has come to accept down-to-earth position on status quo in Korea. It is my opinion that Korea can be re-united only by force of arms, a course of action Rhee would applaud, but which would raise the most serious objections on the part of our allies as well as the people of the US. Realistically, therefore, we must accept the status quo and work out the best solution possible under existing circumstances. Although it will come as a blow to Rhee, I consider that the only solution is to arrange a mutual defense pact with the ROK, withdraw our military forces from Korea as rapidly as feasible, and leave there only ROK forces. These military forces should have sufficient strength to exert pressure on North Koreans and provide cushion in point of time in which US could come to the aid of South Korea before it is overrun.

"Part 7. US should not attempt to match strength in ground forces with combined North Korean and Chinese Communist armies, but should leave Rhee a ground arm of less than 20 divisions yet capable of executing delaying action against North Korean Army alone. He will not like this suggestion, but to do otherwise invites him to attack northward on his own initiative.

"Part 8. Major emphasis in US effort should be placed on economic, political and psychological stabilization of Korea and on a program of realignment of Korean sympathies toward Japan and its other neighbors outside Communist orbit in Far East rather than on military considerations. This statement is predicated on fact that the military force available to the US is of order of magnitude far exceeding anything previously visualized and that immediate prospect exists for hundred-fold amplification of even this new military power. We should start on long-term program to cure the causes of our Far East troubles and give this cure the full weight of our effort".

All military commanders here seem to accept view no way actually to unite Korea except by force of arms and coalition government might possibly cost us use of bases in south with army commanders well satisfied about hundred per cent withdrawal ground troops as ROK army reaches strength. ROK Air Force, of course, not equal to North Korean.

So far as Korea is concerned our present problem is to secure some statement basic principles upon which ROK, US and rest of allied delegations can all agree. 90. Repeated information Department Secto 266, Tokyo 77. For Briggs and Dean; Tokyo pass CINCUNC; Department pass Defense.

1. Morning May 20 Pyun sent us text statement proposes make next plenary. Contains same 14 points transmitted to Seoul in our 84 repeated Secto 239 Tokyo 67.<sup>1</sup> Subsequently Robertson and Young met with Pyun and ROK delegation. Explained to Pyun next plenary probably Saturday and that Chou En-lai inscribed. Pyun said he desires present his 14 points as ROK proposal when next plenary held. Indicated proposal not ROK final position and they might accept changes later.

2. Again explained Pyun we regret his insistence making unilateral proposal because we are missing tremendous opportunity formulate and present single proposal all 16 can endorse. Pyun urged USDel endorse his 14 points which we said would be difficult in view his paragraph 12 and 13 on withdrawal although many points acceptable. Made strong efforts persuade Pyun delete proviso in paragraph 2 of his proposal and substitute "in accordance constitutional processes ROK". Pointed out his language not only would be ambiguous to US and free world but also appears ignore ROK constitution, ROK Government and particularly functions National Assembly. ROK delegates seemed convinced this argument but Pyun disinclined make revision presumably because his language conforms with instructions from Rhee regarding plebiscite or special vote whether new elections should be held in South Korea for unification purposes. We still have impression Pyun has not transmitted 14 points to Rhee since Pyun omits reference North Korea forces which Rhee is so emphasizing.

3. Re Seoul's 1208 to Department repeated Geneva 99, Tokyo 716<sup>2</sup> and Seoul's 1202 to Department repeated Geneva 93 Tokyo 710<sup>3</sup> USDel would point out Pyun's proposal better than 6 points Rhee has worked out; namely (a) Pyun provides for UN supervision in his first point; (b) requirement UN withdrawal prior elections but instead formulation in his paragraph 13 like US views; (c) no mention of North Korean armed forces; (d) his paragraph 14 simpler than Rhee's last paragraph.

4. We are concerned that if text Pyun's 14 points made available to Rhee, he will instruct Pyun to amend less acceptable form. Therefore, while continuing efforts here obtain minor changes, we inclined accept Pyun's 14 points as best formulation obtainable from ROK at this time. We would hold meeting 16 Friday giving Pyun opportunity present and defend his proposal to group. We estimate most of group will be willing give general support to all except Pyun's points 12 and 13. We would in meeting 16 and private conversations urge others give wide degree support as possible, focusing on points most acceptable to them and remaining silent on others. We would expect give general support by speech in following plenary.

5. Under circumstances USDel reluctantly sees no alternative for time being but proceed to Pyun's 14 points in plenary because:

(a) He is wedded to them and determined present proposal in plenary to extent he now refuses make revisions in already mimeographed statement;

(b) Except for paragraphs 12 and 13 proposal<sup>4</sup> satisfactory in principle<sup>5</sup> and even paragraphs on withdrawal have merit from negotiating point of view of ROKs putting tough position up to Communists, particularly if ROK delegation willing amend position later;

(c) Pyun's proposals represent some progress and take pressure off USDel and other 14 for making some move on Korea after long delay and as long as US and ROK have not resolved difficult problem withdrawal in 6-point proposal;

(d) Going ahead as outlined paragraph 4 does not preclude also continuing attempt formulation single proposal 16 can endorse and present at a later date. This will take more time in view problem resolving paragraph 4 of 6 points, (Tosec 213 repeated Seoul 932 and Tokyo 2566<sup>6</sup>) and need for other delegations here consult governments when and if US and ROKs table joint proposal in committee of 9 or 16. Also conceivable after Chou's speech Saturday we may have clearer picture how proceed in general situation.

Editorial Note

In telegram Dulte 92, May 20, 6 p. m., from Geneva, Smith transmitted to Secretary Dulles for his eyes only an appraisal of the duration of the Geneva Conference. Most of the message dealt with Indochina; for the complete text, see page 864. The following extract, however, dealt with Korea:

"On Korea there is nothing whatever to be expected from them [the Communists]. Dean's latest message indicates that it will be impossible to produce proposals agreed to by all 16. Best we can hope to do is avoid open opposition by our side when Pyun produces his 14 points. Others of the 16 will possibly then present proposals of their own or speak in support of Eden's points. We will continue, and try to induce others to continue, to hammer as hard as possible on repudiation by all Communist delegations of authority and moral force of United Nations. World public opinion seems becoming conditioned to negative results. Unless something unexpected happens the Korea phase will drag along with an occasional plenary session while Indochina discussions go on." (396.1 GE/5-2054)

Under existing ROK constitution elections being held today to National Assembly are for 4-year term. President Rhee insists if we are going to have new north and south elections present ROK constitution must be amended before such elections to curtail term of currently successful candidates and then after elections constitution can of course be amended by its terms in order to permit Assemblymen from north and from south to choose appropriate form of government by constitutional process within framework ROK constitution. Since he was adamant about inclusion of words “before the above elections” at end of penultimate sentence in paragraph one, obtained his permission insert last sentence.

Reference subdivision 3b we only agreed delete "supervise and" when President agreed insertion "in accordance UNGA resolution 7 October, 1950" which agreed upon change later yesterday deleted in letter from Prime Minister quoted Embtel 99, repeated Department 1208, Tokyo 716.<sup>2</sup>

No matter what we say President adamant there must not be a single Communist soldier in North Korea at time elections are held. When discussing our draft statement principles which provided for withdrawal only Chinese Communists, pointed out to him on numerous occasions his insistence such complete withdrawal would also require UN forces complete withdrawal before elections which was contrary to our wishes. His consistently repeated answer is that since UN forces were invited and Communists are aggressors and since we expect Communists to reject statement, why are we compelled to agreed phased withdrawal our forces and not just demand withdrawal Chinese Communist forces? Not only is there nothing we can say on this question which seems convince him but for some reason assuming ROK armies are built up he looks forward to withdrawal of UN forces, perhaps for reason that he will then be free to march north. It is becoming more and more difficult to carry on reasoned discussions with him on this and related issues.

Reference subdivision 4, have made arguments therein set forth many times. Reference Geneva 86<sup>3</sup> have made arguments outlined to subdivision 5 in carefully reasoned way several times with Rhee and went over whole matter yesterday pointing out extreme difficulty he would face even with build-up ROK army if he did not have continuous pipeline to US and that without it he probably would be defeated by North Koreans alone in several months. Have also repeatedly made arguments Geneva 86 subdivision 3 with same results you describe. In passing, this particular provision worries General Taylor on ground it may give Rhee veto power over withdrawal of our forces which has already been determined upon by JCS even without phased withdrawal Chinese Communists.

Fully realize utmost importance unanimous declaration at Geneva but for your information, in reviewing situation separately with Generals Taylor, Partridge and Anderson they each wonder whether advantage joint declaration at Geneva, if accepted by Communists, may not be unduly restricting our freedom military movements and whether would not be better retain such freedom and accept proposition that Korea cannot be united except by force of arms and do best we can with South Korea as presently constituted.

Generally cordial atmosphere prevailed. All delegations, except Philippines recognized that Republic of Korea proposal best obtainable under circumstances, in view Pyun determination to speak tomorrow. No delegation ready to give wholehearted support Pyun proposal because of language in point two, requiring South Korean referendum approving election principle (to Seoul 92, repeated information Secto 276, Tokyo 78<sup>3</sup>) and obvious difficulty all have with points 12 and 13 regarding total withdrawal only Chinese Communists troops before election. However, general consensus was that Republic of Korea proposal was far better than one presented by North Koreans because Republic of Korea had agreed to principle of all-Korean election.

2. General agreement reached on Pearson (Canada) proposal that :

(a) Republic of Korea make clear that it was presenting proposal only in own name with understanding none of 16 would take exception to any points at tomorrow's plenary.

(b) Next week members of 16 could indicate general support Republic of Korea proposal while possibly recommending certain changes in detail.

(c) If Communists showed any willingness negotiate, consideration should be given next week either to (1) proposing in plenary that Republic of Korea 14-point proposal and North Korean proposal be referred to subcommittee of plenary where possibly 16-nation agreement could be reached, or (2) continuing efforts to get agreement among 16 for general proposal which would be presented in plenary without necessitating use of subcommittee.

3. Smith opened meeting by saying that the Republic of Korea felt it necessary to present some proposal at plenary on Korea tomorrow, since Chou En-lai inscribed to speak and since other delegations our side had put forward proposals. Added that Republic of Korea proposal would be presented without prejudice to formulation of set of general principles in future on which 16 could agree. Smith said that in general Republic of Korea principles seemed to recommend themselves to us and that we planned give them general support at the first plenary after Saturday's.<sup>4</sup> Although we had some reservation as to language on withdrawal of forces, we saw certain merit in proposing withdrawal of Chinese Communist forces first as negotiating tactic.

4. Pyun made a good presentation his proposal pointing out he was restricted by his instructions, but had attempted to develop his proposal within the broad general framework previously accepted by 16. During ensuing discussion, all delegations focused on point two proviso that elections could be held in South Korea "providing that the majority of the people residing in South Korea wished them" and on language in points 12 and 13 requiring total withdrawal of Chinese Communist troops prior to elections. In connection with point two, Pearson, supported by Eden, felt that some better phrase might be worked out which would not leave impression that Republic of Korea was still maintaining built-in veto over election proposal. Smith explained we had suggested alternate phrase "in accordance with constitutional processes of Republic of Korea" be used and that Pyun had agreed to ask for instructions. Pyun, after emphasizing the Constitutional problem for Republic of Korea, confirmed he had agreed to substitute wording suggested by Smith and that he had cabled Rhee for authority to use suggested language tomorrow.

5. During discussion withdrawal question Pearson, supported by Eden and Acikalin (Turkey) stressed importance of trying to modify language regarding withdrawal to prevent Communists from being in position to reject proposal flatly. Eden said frankly was unhappy with two points as presently written, since hoped would be in position to talk about phased withdrawal on both sides, thus maintaining strong propaganda position. Zuleta (Colombia) proposed that since all delegations were agreed on Pyun's points one through eleven (assuming point two amended), Pyun should propose only those points, excluding all reference to withdrawal of troops. Pyun replied that Republic of Korea agreement on all-Korean elections premised on: (1) requirement that Republic of Korea Constitution be adhered to, and (2) agreement that Chinese Communist troops be withdrawn first. Smith, while agreeing with Eden that we would have preferred language referring to phased withdrawal of forces on both sides, said fact remained that Pyun desired to speak tomorrow and could not delete present withdrawal language without specific authorization of his government. Stressed importance that withdrawal not distract us from upholding principle of United Nations authority, and free elections based on representation proportionate to population.

6. Garcia, (Philippines) maintained interrogatory attitude throughout meeting, closely questioned Pyun on details of his proposal and contended that Pyun's unilateral presentation proposal was contrary to the earlier agreement by 16, that effort be made to put forward an agreed 16-nation proposal. Recommended that Pyun postpone statement until 16 reached agreement, but obtained no support this position. (Obvious Garcia considerably rankled because we talked him out of presenting earlier Philippine proposal and also because he himself had hoped to be one to put forward an agreed 16-nations proposal.)

SEOUL, May 21, 1954—10 p. m.

We tried to get President Rhee change subdivision 4 of draft statement principles to read as follows: "Before the elections specific arrangements for withdrawal from Korea of non-Korean forces shall be agreed upon by the parties accepting these principles, and withdrawal shall be observed and verified by the UNCURK in order ensure that elections are accomplished under conditions of genuine freedom".

Thought this would accomplish purpose Deptel 932. Emphasized to President with this proposed language that before elections were held ROK as one of the parties would have to be satisfied with the specific arrangements.

President replied that he had given matter great thought and would never under any circumstances be satisfied unless we stated in so many words that (a) all the Chinese Communist armies had to be withdrawn from Korea before the elections and (b) North Korean Communist army would either have to withdraw or surrender before election. We emphasized this was not in our mutual best interests.

Reviewed again that we were missing unique opportunity at Geneva to formulate and present before the world single proposal all 16 Allies could endorse in order to command world respect, retain Allied unity, put onus on Communists, win American public opinion and congressional support for economic aid program, and Van Fleet proposals. Pointed out Communists were gleeful at division among Allies at Geneva.

Further emphasized by agreeing on principles ROK had complete details in their control and by refusing they were risking lack of unity with US which might have serious repercussions at home whereas if they accept principles break with Communists could come in course of negotiations on details and power to break lies with ROK Government.

President stressed the fact he was afraid US was losing battle against communism. had already lost China and was in process of losing not only Indochina but all Southeast Asia and that he was not prepared to accept idea that Korea must remain divided. Insisted time to fight in North Korea was now.

We pointed out proposed strengthening of ROK army and proposed withdrawal UN forces would mean greater mobility and add greater strength to our military power and with military pact would enable us help them better than if we stayed and did not build up ROK army.

President insisted he would never permit elections while any Communists remained in country.

Outlined in forceful terms as we dared without making any threats disastrous consequences of President's stand and offered to add in subdivision 4 after "non-Korean forces" following words "and for the restoration of peaceful conditions in North Korea" pointing out that before elections could be held this gave him right to have voice in what conditions in North Korea must actually be before elections could be held.

President again insisted that this would postpone matters for many months, insisted conditions were deteriorating in north and again begged me to support him in march north and use personal influence to get him necessary arms and ammunition required.

We flatly declined. Told him such course would spell his defeat and even if he were victorious would take many months or years to win.

President definitely promised not to go beyond the Yalu but told him such course was utterly out of question and complete folly on his part.

Rhee was exceptionally pleasant, cordial and philosophical and when Ambassador Dean informed him he was leaving for home tomorrow, President expressed great regrets and thanked him for cordial and constructive conversations and understanding heart.

Ambassador Dean again made strong plea for cooperation now and expressed his complete confidence US ability to win war against communism and its ability to work in close harmony with staunch Allies such as Korea, but President said he had made decision and could not in good conscience accede to Ambassador Dean's request.

Ambassador Dean then urged he permit Foreign Minister Pyun to support at Geneva statement of principles without any provision on withdrawal but to outline conditions essential for free elections but President said it was essentially the same thing.

Did not mention Pyun's 14 points in view Geneva's 90.

In view President's very firm and unyielding attitude seemed clear to both of us that further discussions would be unproductive and that President was holding out for some commitment, we did not have, so at 4:30 p. m. we said cordial goodbyes to President and Mrs. Rhee and Cabinet Officers present and President expressed regret at departure. wish for early return, et cetera.

Sincerely sorry could not influence him. His stand has noticeably hardened since fall of Dien Bien Phu and he constantly wonders if USA is on winning side.

Dean leaving for Tokyo 8:30 Saturday morning.

CONFIDENTIAL

GENEVA, May 22, 1954—midnight.

Secto 286. Repeated information Seoul 96, Tokyo 82, London 203, Paris 318, Moscow 81. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. Department pass Defense. Eleventh Korean plenary with Molotov in chair opened with speech by Chou En-lai,<sup>2</sup> most significant aspect of which was proposal, later supported by Nam Il, that all-Korean elections be supervised by Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission. Chou proposed following "supplement" to Article I of Nam Il's April 27 proposals:

"In order to assist the all-Korean Commission in holding all-Korean elections in accordance with the all-Korean electoral law, in free conditions which preclude foreign intervention, a Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission be formed to supervise the all-Korean elections."

In putting forward proposal, Chou acknowledged that war had "left deep scars upon relationship between North and South Korea" and consequently "necessary that neutral organization be set up to render assistance to Korean machinery in charge of holding all-Korean elections". Rejecting United Nations as supervising agency because "a belligerent". Chou said "neutral organization should be composed representatives from neutral nations to be agreed upon by Conference, that did not participate in Korean war".

After submitting foregoing proposal Chou concluded speech by drawing attention his proposal of May 3 on non-repatriation prisoners of war, again asking Conference give it serious consideration since question of prisoners of war "can not be considered closed".

In opening part of speech, Chou replied various attacks on his previous statements, particularly those relating Asian aspirations, attitude toward United Nations, and North Korean proposals. Reacting sharply to speeches by other delegations criticizing his pretensions speak for Asians, Chou denied Chinese Communists claim monopoly as "champions national aspirations in Asia", but at same time attacked "delegates of some Asian States" who "sang praises of United States aggression", claiming they constitute tiny fraction of minority among Asians. Said this "handful of people" typified by Chiang Kai-shek and Syngman Rhee cliques. Chou alleged overwhelming majority Asians would never agree Colonial policy United States aggressors and still less formulation military blocs using "Asians fight Asians".

Calling Nam II proposals "reasonable beyond dispute", Chou again stated they should serve as basis for reaching agreement and warned that continued insistence, or "illegal" United Nations Korean resolutions at Conference "will not be able to settle anything". Referring to criticism that Chinese Communist denunciation United Nations, Korean resolutions and request to join United Nations, self-contradictory, Chou then made definite in statement Peiping's attitude on its admission to United Nations: "The question is not that the People's Republic of China asks to join the United Nations, but that the right which the People's Republic of China should have to participate in United Nations has been deprived and hence the rightful place of People's Republic of China in United Nations should be restored". Claiming such deprivation of People's Republic of China "rights" constituted "flagrant violation United Nations Charter and seriously damaged vestige of United Nations", Chou indicated People's Republic of China absence made United Nations Korean resolution illegal and rendered United Nations incapable dealing with Korean question. He cited Colombo powers as supporting Peiping's seating in United Nations.

Turning to procedure for unifying Korea, Chou said "not impossible find common ground" and that he had not heard opposition to principle question of unification should be settled by Koreans themselves. He again called for withdrawal of all foreign forces prior elections and within "specified period of time", alleging presence United States troops Korea "not only threatens peace in Korea and security of China, but will inevitably lead interference in Korean domestic affairs".

Referring next to criticism of all-Korean Commission proposed by Nam II, Chou said same delegates "utilized principle of proportional representation to oppose principle of mutual agreement between two sides", but this nothing but "attempt impose will of one side on other" and cited Nehru May 18 statement that unity cannot be imposed by one side on another.<sup>3</sup> He said proportional representation problem for electoral law and no question its application to composition all-Korean Commission.

Nam Il, who had inscribed shortly before the meeting opened, followed Chou with a long discursive speech<sup>4</sup> apparently intended as general refutation of past Allied speeches, discreditment of Republic of Korea, and endorsement Chou's new proposal. Speech contained usual themes on illegality of United Nations resolutions, charges that United Nations was under complete domination of United States, and that it was impossible for United Nations to maintain an impartial position on the Korean question, since United Nations was one of the belligerents. Called for a rapid withdrawal of all foreign forces, and demanded right of Koreans to exercise all sovereign rights in internal affairs without outside influence. Alluded briefly as had Chou, to prisoners of war question, saying that over 48,000 prisoners of war, of whom 34,000 were North Korean, still held in South Korea in violation of Armistice Agreement. Contention of Canada and United Kingdom that prisoners of war question already resolved was contrary to facts.

Pointing out that United Kingdom, Australia and Colombia had already called for all-Korean elections, Nam Il said that ROKs, being subservient to United States, were afraid to give people opportunity to express their will. Then spun out series of allegations that May twenty ROK election was held under conditions of violence, police persecution, terrorism, et cetera, and cited number of press despatches to prove that both candidates and voters deprived of democratic rights. Followed this with lengthy discourse comparing political, social and economic conditions in North Korea with those in South Korea during which North Korea emerged as land of milk and honey while Rhee's realm pictured on verge of bankruptcy and starvation.

As clarification of what he contended was distortion of earlier North Korean position on proportional representation, Nam Il distinguished between all-Korean commission, which would be composed of equal number representatives North and South Korea with the subsequent all-Korean National Assembly, which would have representation based on population. Opposed proportional representation in electoral commission by saying such an arrangement completely unacceptable because would enable South Korea to impose its demands on North Korea.

In endorsing Chou's proposal for neutral nations commission for supervision of all-Korean elections, Nam Il used rationale that existing tensions between North and South Korea made rapprochement and unification difficult and therefore nothing should be overlooked which might make task of all-Korean commission easier. Recognizing he was on poor wicket because of earlier statements, added that it was understood that the establishment of such international supervision would not violate Communist principle that there be no intervention of "foreign states" into the internal affairs of Korea.

Pyun made relatively short statement directed primarily at refutation of Nam Il's speech and proposal of April 27 and Molotov's supporting statement of May 11. At conclusion, tabled 14-point proposal (contained in Seoul 84, repeated information Secto 239, Tokyo 67<sup>5</sup>) with last phrase in point two amended, as we had hoped, to read ". . . in accordance with the constitutional processes of the Republic of Korea."<sup>6</sup> (Pyun informed USDel that Rhee had cabled approval revised wording.)

In statement, Pyun exposed Communist 50-50 electoral commission as device designed to permit infiltration and subversion entire country and pointed out that, while Nam Il proposal contained time limit for withdrawal of foreign forces, it avoided specifying time for elections. Defended UNCURK and US-ROK Mutual Defense Treaty and charged that Communist-proposed security guarantee was aimed at communication of entire country. Pyun also charged that Chinese Communists were puppets of Moscow, that there were "tens of thousands" Soviet advisers in Communist China and that ROKs would seriously consider a Soviet guarantee only if USSR ordered Chinese invaders out of North Korea. Answered Molotov's statement that Communist China, as one of 5 great powers, was entitled permanent membership on Security Council, by pointing out that Nationalists still occupied permanent seat and that Communists could not shoot way into United Nations with "guilty hands all red with its victims' blood."

After completion prepared text, Pyun made impressive refutation of Nam Il's charges about May 20 election, emphasizing that: (1) 91 percent of the registered voters turned out for election in which 2,000 candidates were contesting 203 seats; (2) the Liberal Party elected only 131 members of Assembly; (3) two of Rhee's strongest opponents (P. H. Shinicky, Chough Pyong Ok) had won in their districts despite widely-heralded charges of police intervention against them. Ended saying that the world outside the Iron Curtain was content to await

GENEVA, May 22, 1954—9 p. m.

Secto 280. We have been considering possible alternative methods, and timing, for termination of Korean phase, on assumption continuing impasse.

Method of termination: Delegation continues to believe that at appropriate time Korean phase should be terminated completely and unconditionally. In doing so Allies could make statement of referral problem to UN which in any event would inevitably be considering question, presumably at 9th GA. (Department will recall August 28 Resolution GA already calls for report by Allied side on Geneva Conference.)

Complete break off at Geneva would reflect total lack of agreement and emphasize Commie refusal to accept reasonable proposals. Together with referral to UN it would help maintain UN character of Korean action. It will also contribute to Communist uncertainty re ROK-US military plans concerning Korea. It would avoid giving false impression such as Communists tried to give free Germany that there has been reduction of tension.

Efforts in this direction might get some resistance from Allies, particularly if there has been no agreement on firm Allied proposal on Korea. It may also run into pressure for "second stage" agreements on less than unification such as UK suggested before conference, but there have been no indications as yet of any move in this direction from Allies at Geneva, although Communist statement and Nam Il plan might be interpreted as hinting to some such measures which would formalize the division of Korea.

Prince Wan has suggested to USDel establishing continuing negotiating body, perhaps seven countries (Big Four, ROK, North Korea, Chinese Communists) to resume negotiations whenever prospects improve. USDel believes this has disadvantages chiefly, it might seem to establish "Big Five" machinery (with Korea attached) as quasi-substitute for UN Security Council where Chinese Communists not admitted. ROK would probably not agree such proposal, though Allies might prefer it as softer way of ending Conference, keeping alive hope and forum for negotiation, and perhaps assisting in keeping Rhee from unilateral action.

Timing: Time of break off might be either shortly after Communists reject new Allied proposal (or if none introduced after probable Commies rejection of Eden principles of May 13.) Alternatively, Korea phase can be continued in slow tempo and minor key pending Indochina developments. Prompt termination would please ROK, remove Korean question as factor which Communists might exploit, in timing as well as substance, in connection Indochina negotiations. It would reduce strain on other delegations who have little to do in Geneva and might also sharpen propaganda effect of rejection of reasonable Allied proposal by Commies. Key Allies however will resist termination at least until Indochina phase clarifies, fearing adverse effect on Indochina. Also, from our point of view, if Indochina phase develops in manner not satisfactory to us it might be desirable to have Korean and Indochina phase end together to improve total effect.

Timing of break off should also take into account Van Fleet mission and post-Conference consultations with ROK.

Delegation tends to believe decision on timing should await clearer picture as to how Indochina is going, and developments in Korea.

Department's comments and guidance requested.

Editorial Note

On the evening of May 22, following dinner at Molotov's residence, Smith and Molotov held a long conversation dealing with Indochina and a range of other subjects. Smith reported the meeting to the Department of State in telegram Dulte 101, May 23, from Geneva: for the complete text, see page 895. The portion of the telegram dealing with the Korean phase of the Conference follows.

"I then mentioned Korea, pointing out that discussion in plenary session today had again emphasized deep cleavage and bitterness of feeling between North and South Korea. Molotov agreed and said that this was obviously a matter which would require a great deal of time to produce a solution. He thought that political settlement in Korea would come about possibly as a result of some years of living together. I mentioned a recent statement of Nehru's, saying that while I did not by any means subscribe to most of his statements, his recent one regarding Korea had interested me. Mr. Nehru, I understood, had said, in effect, that he did not expect a political solution for Korea to arise from Geneva conference, but that it might be that some loose association as a result of trading together would, after a period of time, reduce the tension and produce some form of agreement. The interpretation I gave this was, I now understand, a good deal different from what Nehru actually proposed. Molotov repeated that a period of "living together" and some form of commercial or other contact over a period of time might reduce the bitterness and permit some political solution. He obviously expects none here." (751G.00/5-2354)

[WASHINGTON,] May 25, 1954.

Reference Secto 280<sup>2</sup> without reference to effect termination of Korea phase might have on Indo-Chinese phase, following would seem to be optimum conditions for termination of Korean phase.

While we were negotiating the Armistice in 1953, JCS decided we no longer needed to maintain bases on the mainland of Asia and that we were quite prepared with or without phased withdrawal Chinese Communists to withdraw our troops in South Korea down to a corps, while at the same time strengthening ROK army so it could hold in event of attack until we could return.

But since then, the problems we face in Indo-China, location of strategic bombing targets north of the Yalu and uncertainty of availability of Japanese bases make essential re-appraisal of JCS's opinion of Korea in spring and summer of 1953.

If we are to accept that there is no practical method of getting Communists to withdraw from North Korea short of resuming hostilities, should we not again review whether our real objective is to obtain withdrawal of Chinese Communists from North Korea in consideration of phased withdrawal UN forces from South Korea or whether we are not prepared to accept fait accompli of divided Korea and to decide to stay or not to stay in South Korea solely in our own discretion without necessity of having to withdraw ground troops or air forces pursuant to some definitive schedule under approval of some commission comparable to NNSC.

In view of our possible entry into the Indo-Chinese situation and in view of current conditions in Japan requiring complete review of conditions for use of Japanese bases, and inability without use of force or co-equal phased withdrawal to obtain withdrawal Chinese Communist forces from North Korea, it consequently seems better to recognize, however regrettable, that North and South Korea must remain separated. We must then strengthen ROK forces or at least increase our share of military cost of ROK army operations and enter into program of economic aid designed to alleviate continued severance of North and South Korea.

Assuming allies will agree to a clean-cut break on Korean phase and assuming further Communist rejection Pyun's proposal, we will have clean-cut method of breaking. The result will in fact give us opportunity of either (a) maintaining military status quo in South Korea indefinitely, or (b) withdrawing ground troops down to a corps in our discretion and maintaining all or part Fifth Air Force in our discretion, without reference to any "phased withdrawal" of our and Chinese Communist armies. Moreover, "phased withdrawal" of Chinese Communist armies does not really solve problem if augmented North Korean Communist armies remain.

If we agree with Prince Wan's proposal of establishing negotiating body of perhaps seven countries we (a) tend to by-pass the UN, (b) blur the clean-cut nature of Pyun's proposal and the Communist rejection, (c) afford the Communists a talking point with which to confuse issues and possibly persuade allies to make concessions, and (d) irritate Rhee, possibly leading to South Korean withdrawal from Geneva Conference, thus evidencing lack allied unity.

Against the foregoing we might cite (a) possible inability to get allies to agree to clean-cut break, (b) possible greater publicity value of setting up some continuing body rather than announcing clean-cut break, and (c) greater facilities for airing problem in sixteen than in UN.

After weighing the foregoing, the balance would seem to be in favor of a clean-cut break on the Korean phase and we should therefore attempt to persuade as many of our allies to agree to it as possible. (a) to make the break plausible in world opinion and (b) to get as much support as possible for maintaining the status quo on Korea when the matter comes up in the UN.

Further, we should endeavor to persuade the Swiss and the Swedes to withdraw from the NNSC, and give wide publicity to the futility of the NNSC, thus undercutting the Communist hints that some such allegedly neutral body, rather than the UN, might be acceptable for working out all-Korean election laws, overseeing all-Korea elections, etc. Once the NNSC has been abolished, we should also explore the legal possibility, because of Communist violations, of freeing ourselves from the restrictions of the armistice, though we have no intention of resuming hostilities.

This series of moves—clean-cut breaking off of the negotiations, abolition of the NNSC, possibly freeing ourselves from the restrictions of the armistice, exchange ratification of the Mutual Defense Treaty, implementation of the Van Fleet mission report—by demonstrating a hard position in the Korean situation may help our bargaining position vis-à-vis Indo-China.

This is my thinking before we hear from the Communists on Wednesday<sup>3</sup>—depending on what they say it may have to be revised.

I am sending copies to FE and UNA requesting they send you their comments.<sup>4</sup>

I told Rhee again of satisfaction USDel with reception Pyun's May 22 proposals (Geneva telegram 98, repeated Department 289, Tokyo 84<sup>2</sup>) whereupon Rhee, again in contrast attitude yesterday, said that as for unity, that is "only paper proposition among talkers", and as for Pyun, Rhee had been on point of recalling him from Geneva for failure include in 14-point proposal provision covering surrender or withdrawal of North Korean Communists. Rhee said that even if Chinese Communists withdraw unless there is included provision covering North Korean Communists, North Korean territory will be infiltrated with Communists, both Koreans brought in from Manchuria and Chinese disguised as Koreans, with result absolutely impossible hold fair election. Hence President said he wanted us to know he views Pyun's proposal as something Rhee has accepted "with mental reservations". However, rather than withdraw ROK delegation from Geneva, which President admitted would have rocked boat, he was taking no action for time being.

I told Rhee that withdrawal ROK delegation would have had deplorable effect particularly at time when ROK proposal apparently receiving gratifying support from our friends and furthermore at time when Communists have not yet expressed themselves regarding it. My impression from this part of conversation is that although Rhee evidently much annoyed when he first read Pyun's text he unlikely at moment go beyond possible reprimand of his Foreign Minister. (If Rhee had seen text in advance he would unquestionably have changed it to cover North Korean Communists).

President next turned to mutual defense treaty (please see Embassy telegram 95 to Geneva, 1204 to Department, 712 to Tokyo, May 19<sup>3</sup>) informing me of message from ROK Chargé d'Affaires Washington who said State Department preparations now completed for exchange ratifications and promulgation. In this connection Rhee again asked whether it would be possible modify text in two particulars. First a termination clause similar to US-Japan treaty (I assume Article IV although Rhee did not specify) and second "an aggressor clause" which would cover US assistance in ROK military action to eject Communist aggressors from north. After considerable conversation reminiscent Rhee's efforts obtain secret letter from Dean, Rhee agreed not insist now on second modification. But he declared Korea must have improved termination clause lack of which he described as discrimination.

I pointed out any modification or amendment of treaty would have to follow same Washington procedure as treaty itself including Senate approval and that delay probably until next session would be caused by attempt to modify present already approved text. Also said executive of course not in position guarantee Senate approval.

Rhee then said he desired to have statement from State Department approving desired termination provision and agreeing to recommend such provision to Senate. Rhee asked if I would give him such letter and if not would I request one from Secretary Dulles. Whether Rhee plans instruct Chargé d'Affaires to defer exchange ratifications until this point clarified remains to be seen.

I gave Rhee no encouragement Secretary would accept different termination clause, much less Rhee's proposed "aggressor clause".

Lastly Rhee brought up question of Ambassador Dean's last letter to him to which he said he wished reply "for the record" and that he would shortly send me reply with request it be telegraphed Washington. I find letter in question (dated May 20) not previously transmitted Washington. Text in following telegram.<sup>4</sup>

"My Dear Mr. President: In Prime Minister's letter to me dated May 19, 1954, I was sincerely sorry to note you had thought it necessary to add the five words 'withdrawal of North Korean forces' in paragraph 4 of proposed statement of general principles.

Our inability to agree on a statement of principles at Geneva will, I believe, have an exceptionally unfavorable effect on public opinion in United States and of Congressional opinion, and be extremely detrimental to the purpose of cooperative effort in working out of an economic aid program and your military forces build-up to combat the Communist menace which we both have in mind.

Faithfully yours, signed Arthur H. Dean, Special Ambassador to Korea". (795B.5/5-2654)

In telegram 1249, also dated May 26, Ambassador Briggs sent the following further message to the Department of State :

"Inform Ambassador Dean. If we wish to do so I think we can legitimately interpret President's Rhee's remarks today re defense treaty (Embtel 1247, repeated Geneva 127, repeated Tokyo 739) as basis for further postponing exchange of ratifications, at least until Rhee has received and considered Secretary's reply to request for commitment on future amendment of termination clause." Defense. Twelfth Korean plenary May 28, Eden presiding, opened with speech by General Smith (see USIA Wireless File for text) <sup>2</sup> upholding role of UN in solution in Korean problem and endorsing ROK May 22 proposals.

Colombian delegate Urrutia spoke next.<sup>3</sup> He complimented ROK delegation for his "spirit of conciliation" and for his "truly remarkable spirit of understanding and cooperation", without directly endorsing ROK proposals of May 22. Urrutia in rather legalistic analysis declared North Korean reunification plan unacceptable, emphasizing that any acceptable plan must recognize authority of UN.

Turkish delegate, Acikalin, then delivered short attack on North Korean proposals and defended authority of UN in Korean problem. He concluded by characterizing ROK proposals as "an excellent working basis upon which, with aid of reason and good will, it may be possible to erect edifice whose achievement is purpose of our conference."

Prince Wan of Thailand delivered brief defense of principle of collective security as embodied in UN. He noted that both ROK and North Korean proposals admitted need for some external supervision of Korean elections and some external guarantee for Korea. Stated essential difference in two proposals lies in fact that Communists propose (1) neutral nations supervisory commission to supervise elections, and (2) guarantee by the great powers, while ROK proposes UN for both supervision of elections and guarantee. Wan stated Thailand "wholeheartedly supports 14-point proposal of ROK as basis for discussion".

Fifth speaker was Watt (Australia)<sup>4</sup> who dismissed May 24 Chou En-lai proposal for neutral nations organization to assist all-Korean commission as academic since unworkable all-Korean commission still keystone of formula. After reasserting authority of UN and principle of collective security re Korea, he offered general support to ROK 14 points as workable formula which "conference should examine carefully". Reserved detailed comment 14 points until "later stage of discussion".

Kindynis (Greece)<sup>5</sup> spoke last. Like Watt, he examined May 22 Chou proposal and ROK 14 points. Based rejection of Chou proposal on failure to recognize proper role of UN in solution Korean problem. Unequivocally endorsed ROK 14 points in toto as democratic and consonant with UN responsibilities in Korea and as only way to restore Korea's unity and independence. Specifically endorsed ROK point 12 on withdrawal Chinese Communist forces before elections as "very natural".

Eden then said no more names on list and noted Indochina meeting tomorrow. Said next Korea meeting would be announced later.

We will also within the next two days be squarely up against the final phase of Korea. There are two ways of meeting this issue.

One is to stand and break squarely on the basic issue of the United Nations, without another closed session, and probably with only one more plenary. This presents a clear-cut issue but exposes us to the charge of intransigence and unwillingness even to explore for a few points of agreement in principle.

The second way is to have a closed session and consider the North and South Korean proposals. The result of such a session might be a report to the following plenary that the two sides had been able to agree in principle:

- a. That Korea should be reunited;
- b. That there should be elections in the North and in the South;
- c. That CC and UN troops should be withdrawn;
- d. That both sides agreed that they could not agree on method, timing, supervisory authority, details of procedure, et cetera.

If this were done it would not slam the door entirely and would, I believe, automatically return the problem to the UN, at least as far as we are concerned. It would also avoid the charge of obstruction and intransigence which we are likely to get from Britain and some of the Dominions, particularly India. I recommend it, with some diffidence, as I note my most recent recommendations have not been received with great enthusiasm. But I must know at the earliest possible moment, and certainly before Wednesday,<sup>1</sup> which line of action the Secretary considers preferable.<sup>2</sup>

Issue on which we should not hesitate to break, namely authority of UN, was defined in early allied argument. By characterizing UN as belligerent, Communists have given us exceptionally wide target. Furthermore, unity among allies on 14 points is probably now near maximum (and might disintegrate in debate, over point 12 for example).

Agreement on new detailed allied proposal before breaking off seems unnecessary unless Communists shift position drastically, and might result in obscuring fundamental issues. While some other allies may argue that break-off on Korea would imperil Indochina discus-

We agree desirability early termination Korean phase conference. should have widest area discretion subject following general comments:

(1) Key to successful break-off from our viewpoint is maintenance unity among all 16 Allied side. Simplest and cleanest means achieving break-off while maintaining reasonable degree Allied support will probably serve our purpose best.

(2) We have no objection per se to another closed session to consider proposals for Korean unification now before Conference. However we are concerned about agreement you envisage as possibly coming out of it. Propaganda aspects would require exceedingly careful handling. As presented Dulte 134 UN issue might well be lost and general impression created that agreement reached on principles but both sides wrangling over relatively unimportant details. In addition ROK likely object this arrangement which seems imply their proposal and that of North Koreans about equally good. If (a) closed session is necessary in your judgment maintain Allied unity, (b) ROK willing to go along and (c) through handling of closed session report in subsequent plenary session importance of Communist refusal accept UN role can be reemphasized so that world will understand both that issues mentioned your subparagraph d on which agreement not reached are vital and also why they are vital, then we would not object to your proposal. Perhaps it would be possible to have closed session without coming to agreement on principles listed your a through c.

(3) We assume Delegation will oppose any suggestions for so-called "second stage" agreements re Korea.

(4) Prince Wan's proposal for continuing negotiating body has number of disadvantages including especially (a) probability ROK will vigorously oppose as suggested Seoul's 1270 repeated Geneva 139<sup>6</sup> (b) its composition which would be interpreted by Communists and much of world press as Big Five plus ROK and North Korea, and (c) it is not in keeping our effort emphasize UN role. However this proposal may be made by Communists especially since it is now public knowledge. In that case if ROK is willing to go along with it you may want to try to have composition of group modified (perhaps to include Thailand which first suggested it and others) but emphasize United States would only agree meet with such group if and when Communists accept UN role in Korea. Do not see how we can accept continuing group with composition suggested by Prince Wan.

1272. Repeated information Tokyo 755, Geneva 140. Geneva for USDel; Tokyo pass CINCUNC. Reference Embtel 1247, May 26, repeated Geneva 127, Tokyo 739. President Rhee in accordance conversation has today sent me letter dated May 29 addressed to Ambassador Dean. Text follows.

“My Dear Mr. Ambassador :

I have received your two letters of May 20.

One of the matters you mention is the Van Fleet mission and the build-up of ROK armed forces. As you say, General Van Fleet’s investigating mission has to be approved by the US Government, but I am sure you are fully aware that the planned increase of ROK armed strength is very much in the interests of the US as well as Korea.

I would like to point out that, in the years of 1948-1950, if the US Government had granted our request to build-up ROK armed forces, the war, with all the American casualties, might have been avoided.

The State Department of the US declared, more than once, that Korea had no strategic value to the US and therefore was not included in the American defense perimeter which extended only to Japan and the Philippines. Later events proved this judgment an error. America sent its troops to help defend Korea, demonstrating that Korea had some value for America. Meanwhile, General Van Fleet quietly trained and equipped Korean manpower which now holds nearly two-thirds of the front line. I believe the authorities in America have come to realize that the ROK defense forces are of inestimable value and help in fighting the Communist aggressors and President Eisenhower has seen the wisdom of strengthening such forces.

[Here follow several paragraphs of the source text which were excluded from this publication at the request of the Republic of Korea Government.]

With regard to the proposed Geneva statement of general principles we asked you to insert in paragraph four the words ‘including the North Korean armed forces’. Our Foreign Minister, Doctor Pyun, without approval, (due to the delay in exchange of messages), presented a proposal which was made public. I could, of course, recall him and announce that he had exceeded his authority, but my further thought is to let the matter ride until such time as circumstances may force us to make our position public. I am sure our friends will agree with us that as long as any Communist armed forces remain in Korea, either Korean or Chinese, free elections will be impossible.

With personal regards. Yours sincerely, signed Syngman Rhee”.

*Memorandum of Conversation, by the Adviser to the United States

GENEVA, June 1, 1954.

Participants: Dr. Y. T. Pyun, ROK Delegation
Ambassador Yang, ROK Delegation
General Walter Bedell Smith
Mr. Walter S. Robertson
Mr. Kenneth T. Young, Jr.

Dr. Pyun and Ambassador Yang came in this morning at their request and spent an hour with General Smith discussing the final phase of the Korean Conference. Since they were greatly disturbed over press reports of Prince Wan's idea for a committee of 7 to meet indefinitely in Geneva to discuss the Korean question after the conclusion of the Geneva Conference, most of the discussion revolved around this matter.

General Smith emphasized and reiterated that, firstly, the United States Delegation had absolutely no foreknowledge whatsoever that Prince Wan was going to disclose any such idea to the press without consulting with the United States or with the Sixteen, which we deplored as much as the ROK Delegation did; and secondly, that the United States Delegation does not like the idea and would not join in supporting it. Prince Wan had broached this idea informally to a member of the United States Delegation a couple of weeks ago, but General Smith said neither he nor Mr. Robertson had ever discussed it with Prince Wan. When he had first heard of the idea, General Smith said it had so many disadvantages that he was against it. And so was the State Department.

However, he had just been discussing the idea with Mr. Robertson and Mr. Young in an effort to anticipate subsequent stages of the Korean question in the United Nations after the Geneva Conference ended. General Smith pointed out that both the United States and the Republic of Korea must recognize as a real possibility that the Communists or certain other delegations may seriously propose some sort of a standing committee, whether we like it or not. While we would try to discourage such a proposal from being put forward, General Smith said that we are now wondering among ourselves if it might not have one advantage, if it is unavoidably raised. The existence of such a committee, even if it met only a few times and recessed indefinitely, might head off any invitation from the General Assembly to the Chinese Communists and the North Koreans to sit as observers during consideration of the Korean question, if as seems likely, the General Assembly resumes debate on Korea. Such a motion might eventually create very great difficulties for the United States in view of the fact that the marginal majority opposing such invitation has been decreasing, and could reach a point where it might even turn into a majority for bringing in the Chinese Communists and the North Koreans. That could bring about a crisis in the United Nations, if the Republic of Korea declined an invitation and if the United States had to abstain or absent itself. But if there were some sort of post-conference machinery including the Chinese Communists and the North Koreans, we could argue that an invitation to them was unnecessary and inappropriate, particularly in view of the fact that they had categorically rejected and repudiated the authority of the United Nations in Korea.

If, by some chance, a proposal for such a committee were under serious discussion, General Smith stated that the United States would insist on adding Thailand, the Philippines and Australia.

Mr. Robertson pointed out that, if there were such a committee, the Republic of Korea and the United States would have the same full sovereign powers as at the Geneva Conference, and that neither could be out-voted, nor could any decisions be made binding if either the Republic of Korea or the United States opposed them. Mr. Robertson also pointed out several times to the ROK Delegates that, under the terms of the resolution of August 28, 1953 of the General Assembly, the fifteen United Nations members on our side at the Geneva Conference are obligated to report back to the United Nations. Accordingly, subsequent consideration of the Korea question by the General Assembly is practically automatic. That is an additional reason for considering the question of a post-conference committee along the lines of General Smith's suggestion.

Making clear he had no current instructions from President Rhee, Dr. Pyun completely opposed the idea of a committee of 7 as suggested by Prince Wan. Not only would it serve no useful purpose, it would be harmful in that it would give the Communists just the means they want in order to prolong indefinite talks on Korea, as, Dr. Pyun said, they were trying to do on Indonesia [Indochina]. All in all, he thought it was an extremely bad idea. He suspected that the "chicanery" of other delegations, and particularly the United Kingdom, had put Prince Wan up to this idea for some ulterior purpose. He regretted that Prince Wan had made the suggestion public before consulting with the ROK or any other Delegation or in the meeting of the sixteen. Dr. Pyun said that he was glad to receive General Smith's clarification of the United States attitude toward this idea. He agreed to General Smith's suggestion to see Prince Wan as soon as possible to express the opposition of the ROK to the idea of a standing committee.

With respect to the United Nations, Dr. Pyun opposed the referral of the Korean question to the United Nations as vehemently as he did the idea of a permanent committee. His arguments were that the United Nations had nothing to do with the Geneva Conference and that it had not sponsored the Geneva Conference. Therefore, it would be wrong for the matter to be returned to the United Nations. He said he was sure his government would oppose this.

Towards the end of the conversation, Dr. Pyun stated very frankly that it was the understanding of the ROK Government that there would be no further negotiation or discussion of the Korean question after the Geneva Conference if it did not succeed in arriving at an agreed upon solution. That was the fundamental reason for his rejection of Prince Wan's idea or referral of the Korean question to the United Nations. His Government was opposed to indefinite talk, and wanted it terminated once and for all. In that connection, he suggested that the United States should be more inclined to ignore public opinion in the allied countries as well as the opinion of its allies, except the ROK.

General Smith told Dr. Pyun very frankly that the United States has allies to a far greater extent than does the Republic of Korea and that some of these allies do not appreciate or support the ROK nearly as much as the United States does. He hoped that Dr. Pyun would understand how different the position of the United States is in this respect from the Republic of Korea and what a difficult time the United States has in carrying along all its allies.

Dr. Pyun and Ambassador Yang inquired as to how long General Smith thought the Korean phase of the conference would last and how it should be terminated. General Smith replied that in the opinion of himself and the United States Delegation the conference should end fairly quickly on the question of the United Nations authority which was a clear-cut issue for our side. There might be a restricted session to put the question directly to the Communists as to whether or not they would accept the authority of the United Nations in Korea. If they continued to reject this principle, as we fully expect them to, then there could be a final plenary session for each side to state its case, after which the conference would adjourn sine die. General Smith explained that this was just the view of the United States Delegation, that we were waiting for the final instructions from the Secretary of State, and that other delegations might not share this view. Dr. Pyun and Ambassador Yang both responded favorably to the suggestion for a restricted session followed by a final plenary with United Nations authority as the principal issue.

General Smith emphasized that the final phase of the Korean Conference would require the most careful planning and the closest possible cooperation between the United States and the ROK Delegations. Dr. Pyun concurred wholeheartedly. General Smith went on to say that he wanted to compliment Dr. Pyun for the effective way in which he had presented his government's point of view at this conference. General Smith told the ROK Delegates that at the beginning of the conference many of our allies had been skeptical over ROK intentions and convinced that the ROK would be completely intransigent. However, they had been considerably surprised and gratified over the 14 points which Dr. Pyun had put forward for his government. The allied delegations now have a very favorable attitude towards Dr. Pyun and his delegation, which, it is important to maintain. For that reason also, General Smith emphasized, it is essential to plan the conclusion carefully so as to leave the conference on that basis.

During the course of the conversation, General Smith also mentioned Krishna Menon's idea of agreeing to disagree, which General Smith said in his opinion contained some merit; the tendency of some of our allies and particularly the United Kingdom to prefer mediation and discussion as long as possible in an effort to reach a combination; and his anticipation in the restricted session on Indochina yesterday, before they made it, of the Communist proposal for a supervisory commission similar to the one that is working so poorly in Korea.

During the course of the conversation, Dr. Pyun expressed great alarm over the Colombian suggestion in the plenary May 22 on changing the composition of the Supervisory Commission in the United Nations. Dr. Pyun said this was an extremely dangerous idea and hoped the United States Delegation would talk the Colombians out of it. Dr. Pyun also produced a clipping from The New York Times of May 28 on Korea which he believed "showed how the wind was blowing in Geneva". Dr. Pyun became extremely agitated over this clipping until General Smith told him that it was quite inappropriate for him to come in to discuss with the United States Delegation one single newspaper article and that if he, as chief of the United States Delegation, spent his time on inaccurate press stories nothing would ever get done. General Smith asked Dr. Pyun why he did not pay more attention to the very favorable New York Times editorial on the Korean proposals instead of getting upset over one correspondent's story. After replying that the editorial was indeed very satisfactory, Dr. Pyun put the clipping back in his pocket, as much as to say he was dropping the subject.

Dulte 138. Eden asked for a private meeting this noon with Bidault and myself. After apologizing for passing out "the usual British bit of paper", he handed each of us the following, saying at the same time that "British would support the position of France in Indochina and would go along with Americans in Korea".

"II. Korea.

"1. Are we agreed that the next meeting (or two) should be in restricted session, and that we should seek there

"(A) To explore the possibilities of further negotiations and

"(B) Failing that to agree upon a few general principles?

Hand over our draft.

"2. Do we agree that this move would be preparatory to the winding up of the Korean part of the conference at a subsequent plenary session?

"3. Can this idea be pursued further with Molotov and Chou En-lai (and Prince Wan)? What may be said to Chou En-lai tonight?"

[Here follows a portion of the telegram which dealt with discussion of Part I on Indochina; for text, see page 993.]

With regard to Korea, I presented the views of the Department, stating that we had in the question of UN authority a clean-cut issue that would be understood by our own public opinion and that of practically all of our associates. We would not oppose a restricted session, but at this session the first and basic question would be the acceptance or rejection of the UN authority in Korea. None of us felt the Communists, after having taken publicly a firm stand on this matter, would now recede, and that the answer would be that there was rejection on their part of UN authority. The British are extremely unhappy that we cannot follow their suggestion of agreeing upon a few general principles, but their major concern, like ours, is what may happen later in the UN. They do not wish the issue of Communist Chinese participation to be raised in the UN at this time, since they understand our difficulties and desire to avoid a proposal on which we might be voted down. We see in Prince Wan's suggestion, probably as modified by our own ideas with regard to the inclusion of Australia, the Philippines, and Thailand, a formula which might prevent the issue from arising in the UN. Eden will not discuss this with Chou En-lai tonight, as it is not of such urgency as the matter of Indochina. He understands that our final position cannot be arrived at until possibly day after tomorrow.

The entire Korean War was fought to establish UN principle of collective security. Korea happened to be the symbol. Since we are not going to get at this time any unification of Korea, it would seem to me most unfortunate not to keep the UN symbol to the forefront. This would be a tremendous gain for the Communist side which has throughout sought to obtain a virtual western repudiation of the UN at least in its Korean role. It seems to me that if the Communists succeed in this they will have gained at Geneva a repudiation of the very principle for which so many UN members made great sacrifices. We have to our own people justified their sacrifices on the ground that it was worthwhile for Americans to fight and die to establish for the first time in history the workability of an organization for collective security. Those representations will sound hollow if in the end we should seem virtually to repudiate that organization by compromising with the Communist view that the UN must be ignored as itself a tool of aggression.

GENEVA, June 1, 1954—11 p. m.<sup>1</sup>

Dulte 137. Repeated priority Seoul 107. Further to Dulte 134<sup>2</sup> re Korea. There is a third possibility which would combine some of each of two outlined reference telegram.

We could have one restricted meeting to see if there is any room for compromise by Communists on UN issue. We could also propose to Communists that conference consideration of Korean question be reported to UN for its further consideration, in view inability to reach agreement here on issues of UN auspices and supervision. Communists would probably reject these proposals. We would have made an effort seek agreement. We could then go into a final plenary for each side to state its case. We could propose agreement among 16 on having conference adjourn sine die on UN issue as far as we are concerned.

Under this third possibility I would not propose that restricted session report any agreement in principle along lines of 4 subparagraphs Dulte 134. That might avoid possibility Communists would suggest addition of agreement in principle on measures and obligations for "insuring peace in Korea" along lines their point 3 of April 27 proposals, which would create difficulties for us particularly in Seoul. But this third possibility of combining a restricted session with a final plenary both on UN issue might satisfy many other delegations and offset any charge US intransigence.

I see no particular problem with other allied delegations except ROK on question of final phase of Korea. Anything less than complete and unconditional termination will probably create major problems for US with ROK. ROK Government will no doubt oppose any compromise formula to end conference in such a way as not to register complete disagreement and which would make possible, at least in theory, later consideration of Korean question. ROK may even be opposed to UNGA consideration, as Pyun has already expressed apprehension over New York Times story Friday May 28 on UN referral Korean question. 1278. Repeated information Tokyo 758, niact Geneva 144. Re Geneva's 107 (Dulte 137 to Department).<sup>1</sup> In existing circumstances I agree that anything short of "complete and unconditional termination" at Geneva will probably create major problem with ROK. That, however, has been inherent in Rhee's attitude ever since last year when we insisted on armistice, against his passionately held conviction that stalemate on battlefield would not lead to unification of his country within predictable time. All Rhee's views—toward POW exchange, toward neutrals and neutralism, toward Communist advance into Southeast Asia, toward fall of Dien Bien Phu, and now toward his exclusion (as he sees it) from forthcoming Washington military talks<sup>2</sup>—derive in substantial measure from Rhee's hatred of armistice and his belief that whatever develops from deadlock created by armistice, time is running out.

If we ever had any doubts on that score, four weeks of almost daily negotiations with Rhee while Ambassador Dean was here ought to have dissipated them.

As Rhee views it from Seoul, clean break at Geneva with no left-overs and no cold salad gathering mould in UN icebox is least unproductive result likely to follow conference deliberations. Moreover, anything that Rhee interprets as temporizing or appeasement will multiply possibility he may publicly denounce Geneva thereafter withdrawing ROK delegation.

GENEVA, June 2, 1954—10 p. m.

Secto 363. Repeated information London 236, Paris 373, Seoul 109. In conversation with Bidault this morning we outlined considerations contained Tedul 145<sup>1</sup> and stressed these represented Secretary's strong personal views. Bidault stated that if we did not adhere to these views whole principle collective security would dissolve. He then referred to Eden's proposal (Dulte 138<sup>2</sup>) that the conference agree to a few general principles on Korea. This proposal reads as follows:

"The conference reached agreement on the following principles:

"(a) Korea, within its historic boundaries, should be unified as a free, independent and democratic state.

"(b) To this end, elections should be held throughout Korea to establish a single, truly representative government for the whole of Korea.

"(c) The elections should be held in conditions of genuine freedom under international supervision.

"(d) The settlement of the Korean question should provide for the withdrawal of foreign forces.

"2. The conference has not been able to agree on the timing or methods or procedure for carrying out these principles and concludes that further discussion of the Korean question cannot usefully be pursued at the present time."

Bidault, while agreeing that fundamental issue was UN principle collective security, wondered whether reconciliation could not be made between this and Eden's principles. We took firm position that this would obscure basic issue. Bidault did not press point and concluded by stating that as US bearing main burden Korea as France was in Indochina, he would readily yield to our position. He also agreed we should endeavor arrange meeting of "16" on June 4 to be followed by

1. Re Prince Wan's idea of standing committee of seven after conference as reported in the press, Robertson and Young met with Prince Wan this morning to find out what his ideas really are. He said press stories were entirely inaccurate and misleading. He had made no such proposal and did not intend to. He is only "thinking" along following lines:

a. The 16 should meet decide on the next stages regarding Korean question;

b. He believes there should then be one or more restricted meetings of committee of seven to determine whether further negotiations are possible; whether Communists will modify their repudiation of UN competence and authority; and in order convince world opinion we have "exhausted" every possibility for trying get agreement;

c. He agrees 100 percent with Secretary's views (Tedul 145 repeated information Seoul 970 and Tokyo 2658 <sup>1</sup>) on UN issue;

d. If Communists reject UN authority in restricted sessions there will be no need for further meetings. He agreed with us there should be final plenary and conference should conclude on clear-cut issue of UN;

e. If Communists by chance modify their position on UN it might be useful to have controversial details deferred to committee of seven possibly enlarged by Thailand, Australia and Philippines. Its existence would divert debate on Korea in special session eighth GA or in ninth. If conference breaks off, he is sure India will push for resumption Korean question in GA which he believes would be "bitter and futile". If committee were set up along lines he envisages, he hopes that Korean question can stay out of GA until tenth session in fall 1955. He agreed to suggestion any such group of seven should be expanded to Asian countries participating in Geneva conference. We mentioned Thailand, Philippines and Australia. He said he had discussed his views fully in detail with Pyun and Yang yesterday afternoon and would do so again this evening at dinner. Pyun and Yang agreed to meeting of 16 and restricted session but opposed standing committee or referral Korean question back to UN.

ported in press. Pyun said his delegation would oppose it since in his opinion such committee would serve no useful purpose, and fit into Communist plans to prolong talking on Korea indefinitely, and since his government had assumed there would be no more discussion or negotiation on Korea question after conclusion Korean conference. He also said he opposed referring Korean question to UN. Clear from his remarks he wants Korean conference terminate completely, although he pointed out he is without current instructions these matters. General Smith told him we had no foreknowledge Prince Wan's disclosure to press of his idea and informally discussed matter with Pyun along lines paragraph 3 below. Stressed to Pyun great importance most careful planning and closest cooperation between US and ROK regarding final phase Korean conference. He concurred. Smith also stressed importance ROK help wind up conference in helpful way in order conserve good-will and support ROK delegation has created among other 14 who came Geneva sure ROK would be completely intransigent and difficult. Also mentioned to him possibility closed session on Korea to put question to Communists whether or not they will accept UN authority, with final plenary to follow for closing statements on clear issue of UN. Pyun and Yang responded favorably to this suggestion.

3. Much appreciate Tedul 145 and Tosec 321.<sup>3</sup> Have proposed to UK, French, Canadian, Australian, Thai, Netherlands and Colombian delegations (1) UN issue must be clear final position, (they agree and are much impressed with Tedul 145) (2) Meeting of 16 on Friday (3) No objection to restricted meeting of committee of seven next week if other Allied delegations desire it, (4) Final plenary on UN issue if Communists intransigent and (5) Some form of report to UN by 15 UN members here. Korean phase, particularly relative emphasis on elements of question to be put to Communists in restricted session.

2. Under Secretary began discussion by noting general debate has made clear that Communists reject authority UN to take collective action to resist aggression and to supervise restoration of peace and security in Korea. Said under circumstances we could only lose by allowing conference to drag on, permitting Communists to obscure basic issues, and therefore we should terminate talks on these UN issues and tell Communists we continue to desire unification under UN principles and will make further efforts to that end when they accept competence and authority UN. Under Secretary presented Secretary's views (Tedul 145<sup>2</sup>) on importance UN issue and continued avoidance of any action which would permit Communists obscure this issue or fact of Communist aggression and their obstruction UN efforts unify Korea since 1947 and aggression.

Under Secretary noted that Plenary tomorrow June 5 called at request Nam Il, who might make some spurious gesture toward UN in expectation we seeking restricted session to bring fundamental UN issue to head. Stated would be desirable have Allied speakers tomorrow.

3. Under Secretary then outlined proposed tactics for restricted session of seven at which substance of question would be asked "Are the Communists prepared to agree to unification of Korea on the basis of free elections and the condition of genuine freedom under the control and supervision of the United Nations?" This restricted meeting would be followed by another meeting of 16 and then by final Plenary late next week in event Communists said no, or spurious "yes" which in fact meant no.

General agreement all delegations on sequence restricted session followed by meeting of 16 to determine tactics for final Plenary. Also general agreement to ask Communists above question. Eden backed by other Commonwealth delegations said free elections would be key element of question put to Communists. Under Secretary, supported by Philippines (Garcia), Netherlands (Bentinck), ROK (Pyun), Turkey (Acikalin), Belgium (De La Chevalerie) and Greece (Kindynis) emphasized that UN role in Korea an essential element. Prince Wan (Thailand) saw problem as which of two linked issues should be given primary emphasis. Under Secretary stated no difficulty if both elements kept together, as in case with his proposed question to Communists. Ronning (Canada) agreed asking Communists question as originally worded but stated re UN issue, he was under instructions to stand fast against Communists only on specific issue of supervision acceptable to UN rather than general principle of UN role Korea. New Zealand supported Canadians. Kural stated appeared to be general agreement and adjourned meeting.

4. Urrutia (Colombia) during above discussion raised question of form and timing of report to UN. Kural stated next meeting of 16 would be appropriate place to consider.

5. Pyun (ROK) early in meeting stated present instructions did not permit ROK participation another restricted session of seven. Said was asking Seoul for authorization attend but in event not forthcoming might cause some embarrassment. Under Secretary noted restricted meeting could always be postponed if necessary. Australia (Watt) wondered if timing of restricted meeting for Monday perhaps too tight, especially if Nam Il should present unexpected proposal tomorrow.

6. Bidault proposed, in event failure reach settlement here on Korea, 16 should issue "collective statement" on two basic elements of UN authority and free elections under UN supervision. Prince Wan agreed.

I summarized views of Secretary set forth Department telegrams 970<sup>4</sup> and 983. I said despite all roadblocks and difficulties created by Communists we now in excellent position Geneva and have reached point where we can consider early ending Korean phase, this to be accomplished through public demonstration Communist unwillingness accept UN role in Korean settlement, and also through Communist rejection ROK 14-point proposal. I said Communists have already denounced UN, and if Communists now reject ROK proposal, that rejection in judgment Secretary and USDel Geneva should provide opportunity for clean break, with Allied unity intact, and should demonstrate to world opinion Korean unification impossible because of Communist intransigence.

With these elements in mind, timetable has been prepared by USDel Geneva envisaging restricted meeting Monday June 7, possibly followed by additional restricted meetings if progress appears to have been made on Monday. If Communists reject, we shall then seek final plenary session on Korean issue before end of next week.

Rhee listened but showed no enthusiasm.

I then said these matters already fully discussed between USDel on one side and Foreign Minister Pyun and Ambassador Yang on other side, and I had been instructed to see Rhee on urgent basis, to clarify purposes of forthcoming meetings and to express confidence we could count on ROK to help us conclude Korean phase of conference soon as possible, on above lines.

I said our delegation understands Pyun may require authorization from President Rhee to attend so-called restricted meetings, which authorization I was sure in light my discussion Rhee would telegraph to Pyun.

Rhee expressed satisfaction at Secretary's views and especially Secretary's intention terminate Korean phase soon as possible. Rhee then entered into lengthy declaration about futility of dealing with Communists, this his standard "I told you so" line, concluding that only way to end present "dealing with nonsense" is to end it, and that Rhee is accordingly considering ordering ROK delegation to return to Korea. Rhee said he could see no profit in "any special, or restricted, or any other kind of Geneva talks or meetings. Therefore, Rhee continued, he could not see his way clear to authorize Pyun to attend proposed June 7 meeting. Rhee declared this or any further meetings of same futile character would play directly into Communist hands by giving them heaven-sent opportunity to give impression of acceptance (or even partial acceptance) of 14 point plan, plus "some polite if insincere reference to UN" which would then be seized upon by neutralists ("like UK, now under domination of Nehru") as proof that Communists intend to cooperate.

Seems from this part of Rhee's remarks that he apprehends Communist effort, with some chance of success, may be made to smoke out UK and France in meeting June 7, who may admit pending ROK proposal is not supported in toto by other 15. Therefore, Rhee reiterated, it would be better for ROK to withdraw from Geneva now, if possible with US support, but in any case withdrawal which would be “dramatic demonstration” of inability free world do business with Communists.

I then found it necessary to remind Rhee that his statements concerning dealing with Communists were not news to us and that we certainly had never been under any illusion as to difficulties facing us at Geneva in our dealing with Communists. I said it was precisely for that reason Secretary Dulles last August had agreed with Rhee on withdrawal from conference, in specified circumstances, at end of 90 days. I reminded Rhee that less than half of 90-day period has elapsed, and I said we are coming to Rhee now to tell him that in our opinion Korean phase should be terminated as promptly as possible, on terms he must recognize as favorable to us. Whether that can be accomplished within next few days, as we hope, remains to be seen. We cannot guarantee it. But surely it would be tragically unfortunate if Korea after having maintained with US and our Allies for past six weeks stalwart and impressive unity, should suddenly take unilateral action to abandon Geneva, thus destroying all we had gained at Geneva since April 26.

Unilateral ROK action of that sort I told Rhee would be impossible for my government to reconcile with Dulles-Rhee August 7 agreement.

Rhee then dropped subject of ROK withdrawal, but resumed attack on idea of ROK delegation attending any further meetings except “one final plenary called for purpose ending conference”.

After much further discussion, during which I continued to emphasize how foreign to ROK’s real interests Pyun’s boycott of restricted meetings would be, Rhee finally said he would telegraph Pyun and authorize him to attend June 7 “restricted meeting” on understanding that such meeting constitutes “regular part of Geneva conference machinery” (which I assured Rhee it was). Rhee said on that understanding he would telegraph instructions to Pyun in time for him to attend on June 7 restricted meeting.

During this conversation, also was able to set Rhee straight on Prince Wan’s views (Geneva’s 110, repeated Department Secto 365, Tokyo 105<sup>5</sup>). I said newspaper report on this project had obviously been distorted, to which Rhee replied he had nevertheless been disturbed thereby. (Press account of Wan’s proposal probably contributed to Rhee’s state of mind as reflected this afternoon’s conversation.)

While I hope as result this meeting with Rhee, Pyun may receive instructions satisfactory to us, it is clear that if Communists either at tomorrow’s plenary (Saturday) or if they on Monday come up with some soft attractive answers, and some of our Allies are beguiled thereby, we shall find Rhee harder each day to handle, and perhaps more and more difficult to keep in line.

My views on this remain as stated Embtel 1278, June 1. From Rhee's point of view, worst possible Geneva outcome would be any sort of standing committee arrangement, gathering UN conversational mould, while ROK perishes.

GENEVA, June 5, 1954—noon.

Dulte 152. I may be borrowing trouble but think you should know in advance my personal estimate what may develop during this afternoon's Korean plenary, asked for by Nam II. View of British and Dominions was expressed very clearly at yesterday's meeting of sixteen. This view is that the issue of free elections is paramount, and that this, and not the principle of the authority of the United Nations, should be emphasized. Eden's tentative memo on "possible points of agreement" sent you by Secto 363<sup>1</sup> omitted any reference to the UN. Both Watt (Australia) and McIntosh (New Zealand) have had very definite instructions from their governments to emphasize the "free election" principle and not the UN principle which I wish to make the clear-cut issue, and both of them had to a certain extent to "interpret" their instructions in order to give us a measure of support.

I am sure that the Chinese and North Koreans are well aware, via Menon, of this difference in emphasis and think it probable that at this afternoon's plenary Nam II may try to intensify difference by some form of proposal for "free elections under international supervision acceptable to the UN side" which, though spurious to us, could seem plausible to some of our allies. As I informed you, Eden told me yesterday he had "heard that Nam Il would touch his hat to the United Nations". If this happens, it could put us in a very difficult position, as many of the sixteen will take the view that if the purposes of the UN re unifying Korea by free elections can be accomplished it would be unreasonable to frustrate them by insisting that Communists make here a public acknowledgment of UN authority which we have been unable otherwise to impose on them and which they have publicly repudiated, particularly since the UN itself has branded them as unfit for membership.

Many of our sixteen associates now take the view that the UN itself is actually a belligerent, regardless of the form and purpose of the resolution which made it so. We have two possible speakers for this afternoon, and I have a statement in reserve quoting the statements of the Swiss and Swedish members of the NNSC which can be used as a stopgap. Phleger, Robertson and I believe that we may want to delay Monday's planned restricted session on Korea until later in the week, in order to allow time for you more accurately to assess possibilities.

*Thirteenth Plenary Session on Korea, Geneva, June 5, 3:04 p. m.:
The United States Delegation to the Department of State*<sup>1</sup>

GENEVA, June 5, 1954—midnight.

Secto 391. Repeated information Tokyo 114, London 250, Moscow 108, Paris 391, Seoul 115. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. Department pass Defense. Korean plenary Saturday, June 5, opened with Prince Wan (Thailand) in chair. First speaker was delegate of Ethiopia who rejoiced that the principle of collective security had been upheld in Korea through efforts of those nations contributing forces and other assistance, and stated that with signing of armistice military objective of UN had been achieved. Went on to comment on proposals of North and South Korea delegations. Referring to North Korean proposal, stated that it intentionally denied role of UN in supervision of elections, thus undermined UN authority, did not insure proportional representation, instituted power of veto in commission, was not workable and thus was not acceptable to Ethiopian delegation. Reference South Korean proposal, stated it was reasonable, provided a basis for discussion and had support of Ethiopian delegation because provided for all-Korean elections and UN supervision thereof. Urged all delegations to accept in principle role of UN and stressed necessity that public in all countries understand that this conference has not abandoned UN.

Nam Il then took floor and in long speech of primarily propagandistic content attacked ROK 14-point proposal and supported Chinese Communist proposal for NNSC as good basis for settlement. According to Nam, DPROK proposal re all-Korean commission good since it makes it impossible for one side to impose its will on other side. ROK proposals, on other hand, represent attempt extend authority Rhee regime to North Korea. ROK proposal that supervisory commission be under UN authority is unacceptable since UN was belligerent in Korean war. Supervision in Korea should be carried out by neutral nations, i.e., states which did not take part in Korean conflict. ROK proposal shows that ROK fears free elections since it provides for election to be held in South Korea prior to withdrawal US forces. Simultaneous withdrawal of US forces and Chinese Peoples Volunteers necessary to insure truly free election. DPROK not in principle against phased withdrawal foreign troops but considers that such withdrawal must be proportional. As already stated, DPROK delegation willing to negotiate re date by which withdrawal must be completed. ROK proposal for UN guarantee of Korea security is unacceptable and represents attempt drive conference away from proper course. Conference should not wait until unification achieved to undertake definite decision on method of guaranteeing maintenance of peace and security in Korea. As previously stated, DPROK favors guarantee by states most interested maintenance, peace and security in Far East.

Saying basic Korean law was matter for future all Korean assembly to decide and thus not within competence of Geneva conference, Nam then stated ROK proposal provided for spreading authority of ROK constitution to North Korea, and launched into long attack on allegedly anti-democratic, anti-popular nature ROK constitution, ROK failure carry out land reform, exploitation industrial workers, police terror, etc.

Chou En-lai then took floor<sup>2</sup> and referred to three proposals put forward by Nam Il which were supported by USSR and CPR. Stated these provided broad possibilities for Korean unity through free elections. Added that on 22 May CPR made supplementary proposal that elections be supervised by neutral nations commission. Chou then referred to ROK 14-point proposal also submitted 22 May which he said sought unified Korea with support of foreign armies. Said this no basis for peace and condemned attempt of US and other delegations to seek support for ROK proposal by invoking illegal resolutions UN. Contended must seek other solution and common ground could be found. Further contended peaceful settlement Korean question could be found through free elections in accordance with principles of proportional representation. Re withdrawal of foreign forces, stated only few delegations differ in principle on this point. Cited Eden's statement that common ground could be found and that conference should not despair of agreement. Claimed some delegations wanted to delay withdrawal of foreign forces, but stated there must be no delay since Korean settlement related to peace in Far East. To this end urged conference find concrete solution and not let ROK proposal stand in way.

Next section Chou speech devoted to attack on ROK and on Rhee regime. Denied assertion that ROK represents all Korean people. Charged that since it does not it fears free elections and opposes joint North-South Korean organ for all-Korean elections. Charged ROK still wants to dominate all Korea and impose its constitution while opposing withdrawal of UN, chiefly US, forces. Asserted Korean people should be enabled to settle Korean question themselves and cited NY Times article 28 May in support of charge that this issue being obscured by ROK and others.

Chou then continued in support of Nam Il proposal that free elections be prepared and held by commission composed by two sides. Further stated that because Korea divided for years and strained situation exists, necessary to have elections supervised by neutral nations commission saying that UN supervision untenable because UN a belligerent party which had lost its competence and moral authority to deal impartially with situation. Referred to successes of Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission in supervising Korean armistice. Asserted that armistice formula for neutral (nation not participating in Korean hostilities) should be adopted. Said NNSC played positive role in armistice supervision, that it had worked out effective procedures in rotation of personnel and military equipment, has established regular inspections in North and South Korea. and has conducted specific investigations as requested by both sides. Stated that although commission has met with difficulties its contributions and achievements cannot be denied, thus no reason why neutral nations commission cannot carry out supervision Korean elections.

Further stated withdrawal all foreign forces prerequisite for holding free elections. Stated CPR and DPROK have stood for withdrawal foreign forces whereas ROK and US unwilling withdraw UN forces simultaneously. This is proof they plan to keep troops in Korea to interfere with elections.

In concluding, Chou cited statements several UN delegates (New Zealand, Australia, and UK) who expressed common desire withdraw forces Korea as soon as would be done without endangering peace. Stated to prevent recurrence fighting in Korea nations most interested in peace in Far East should assume obligation for peaceful development Korea and saw no reason why conference could not agree on withdrawal of foreign forces and guarantee peaceful development Korea by nations most interested in peace in Far East.

Philippine representative then made eloquent speech<sup>3</sup> criticizing Communist spokesman for disregard UN authority in proposals for Korean settlement, strongly supported UN authority, validity its resolutions, etc., and expressed "heartly approval and support" for 14-point ROK proposal.

After recess Molotov took floor.<sup>4</sup> Outlined following principles on which he said agreement could be reached now in principle and submitted draft resolution, adoption of which he indicated would be favorable influence on further work of conference :

"Participants in Geneva conference have agreed on following fundamental principles in regard peaceful settlement of Korean problem :

"1. With view to unifying Korea and to establishing united, independent and democratic Korean state, free elections shall be held throughout territory Korea.

"Elections shall be held within six months after conclusion of present agreement.

"Elections shall be conducted by secret ballot and universal suffrage.

"Representation in all-Korean legislature will be in proportion to population of Korea as whole.

"2. With view to preparing and conducting free all-Korean elections and to facilitating rapprochement between Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Republic of Korea, all-Korean body shall be set up composed of representatives of Democratic People's Republic Korea and Republic of Korea.

"Composition and duties of this body shall be subject of further examination.

"3. All foreign forces shall be withdrawn from Korea within specified periods.

"Periods and phases for withdrawal of all foreign forces from North and South Korea prior to holding of free all-Korean elections shall be subject of further examination.

"4. An appropriate international commission shall be set up to supervise holding of free all-Korean elections.

"Composition of this supervisory commission shall be subject of further examination.

"5. Recognizing importance of preventing any violation of peace in Korea, it is deemed necessary for states most directly concerned in maintenance of peace in Far East to assume obligations for ensuring Korea's peaceful development, so as to facilitate settlement of problem of Korea's national unification.

"Question of which states are to assume obligations regarding ensuring of Korea's peaceful development and of nature of these obligations shall be subject of further examination."

Molotov then noted outstanding differences of views expressed so far in conference and said importance of these should not be minimized. In particular in this connection mentioned difference concerning all-Korea commission and withdrawal foreign forces. Conference, he said, should proceed to detailed and concrete examination of these differences in effort to reconcile them.

Molotov then launched violent propaganda attack on United States whose representative on May 28, he said, had tried to present United States in light of defender principles of United Nations Charter, human rights, peace and security when "facts" showed that United States had undertaken aggression contrary to principles UN Charter, and even now while settlement Korea problem still under discussion was taking action in Southeast Asia which constituted new threat to peace and security. In conclusion, Molotov in current standard Soviet propaganda language drew contrast between UN actions allegedly undermining UN authority and alleged Soviet support for principles collective security, citing in latter connection Soviet policy prior World War II, Soviet European security proposals, offer to join NATO, and support for Chinese Communist proposals regarding maintenance of security in Far East.

Netherlands delegate spoke next. Noted that conference has been under way for six weeks and that positions are still far apart on some issues. Expressed belief of his delegation that common ground does exist. Cited as example that both North and South Korean delegations propose all-Korea elections. Found it encouraging that Nam Il agrees with principle of proportional representation but emphasized that central problem is how to organize free elections.

Cited DPROK proposal that elections should be organized by all-Korea commission and said Netherlands delegation believes this impractical and unrealistic. This conference convened because North and South Korea could not solve their problem. How then can we expect these parties to agree on the organization of elections? Said in his view conference cannot afford to give election commission responsibilities it never will be able to carry out.

Further cited Chou En-lai's admission of necessity for assistance in elections supervision from outside referring to Chou proposal for neutral commission, but noted this commission would take action only after all-Korea commission had agreed on conditions for free elections. Stated it doubtful that such all-Korea commission could ever reach stage of necessary agreement.

Then referred to ROK proposal for unification. Stated that Netherlands delegation feels it presents excellent possibilities for solution and that most important part of proposal is role attributed to UN in conduct of elections. Noted that several delegates had attacked and discredited UN as aggressor. Said he would not take up these allegations since Netherlands Foreign Minister previously dealt with them.

Labelled collective security cornerstone UN and principle that commands loyalty of peace-loving nations. Referred to action in Korea as ray of hope for freedom and peace of mankind. Stated that free elections were way to goal of settlement Korea problem, agreed assistance from outside essential, and that this should be provided by UN.

In conclusion, stated that Netherlands delegation listened to USSR proposals made earlier in session and stated that Netherlands delegation will study them with care in light of statement just made.

Pyun, ROK, then took floor and spoke from notes for purpose refuting view Communist fallacy which, he said, appeared in Nam Il's statement today among many old lies and distortions. Pyun took heated issue with effort Nam Il had made to support principle of equal representation in all-Korea commission (in spite of seven to one population ratio) by drawing analogy with US and Swiss historical precedent. Pyun emphasized division of Korea not administrative one like US states or Swiss cantons, but one brought about by foreign imposition.

General Smith spoke last. Verbatim text sent USIA for Wireless File.<sup>5</sup> Although past 7 p. m., chairman permitted Chou make brief statement saying that views re NNSC quoted by General Smith had only been those of Swedish and Swiss members; that he would distribute letters from Polish and Czech members to delegations, and reserve his right to reply to other parts of General's speech.

<sup>5</sup> For the text, see The Korean Problem at the Geneva Conference, pp. 149-153. In his statement, Smith criticized the Communist proposal for an all-Korean commission to prepare for elections in Korea, since, he said, North Korea would have equal representation on such a body, despite the disparity in size between the two Koreas, and hence would have a built-in veto on proposals for genuine, free elections. He also sharply opposed the Chinese advocacy of a Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission to monitor the elections, stating that the NNSC agreed on for the Korean Armistice had been a dismal failure because of Communist trickery and intransigence. Finally, he emphasized that genuinely free elections in Korea could only be held under the supervision of the United Nations.

Comment: Communist speeches seemed designed partly for immediate internal propaganda consumption, partly (in pretending to outline rational way for conference to pursue its work toward agreement) so that contrast could later be drawn between "sincere" Communist efforts achieve agreement and anticipated desire of other delegations to terminate Korean phase. In addition, Communist speakers, especially Nam Il, seemed to imply that security guarantees for Korea should be established whether or not agreement achieved on unification.

GENEVA, June 6, 1954—2 p. m.

Dulte 155. Yesterday's plenary session on Korea until Molotov's speech was everything we could have asked for. Nam Il and Chou En-lai repeated with vehemence all of the charges, spurious allegations, and unacceptable proposals which they had advanced previously, and gave no indication of the slightest willingness to compromise in any direction. They also categorically rejected the ROK proposals. At the time of the five o'clock break practically all of our associates were convinced that our case had been made for us, and even the Canadian delegate told us that he had no further concern about his public opinion nor did he think there was any need to proceed further.

During the last hour of the session, however, Molotov spoke in an attitude of sweet reasonableness, presented and circulated the proposals sent you in Secto 391.<sup>1</sup> However, he concluded with a vicious attack on thesis. As we analyze these proposals, they are a combination of some of Krishna Menon's "principles" combined with a rephrasing of the unacceptable North Korean formula, together with acceptance of the idea of international supervision. This latter, which of course is spurious, as well as the all-Korean body are sugar-coated with the phrase that "composition and duties are to be examined further"

While we have not yet talked with our 15 associates, we greatly fear that Molotov's proposals may have destroyed the chance of an immediate clean break, in full association with the other 15, on the issue of the United Nations.

To those of the 15, headed by Britain and the Dominions, who wish to return home with the report of an "area of agreement on principle and relaxation of tensions" the Molotov proposal will probably make a strong appeal.

I had believed until the last hour yesterday that it would not even be necessary to hold a restricted meeting, as the issues then seemed very clearly drawn. My estimate now is that we will have to have such a meeting to examine the Molotov proposal in order to satisfy a number of the 16. It will not be possible until tomorrow afternoon to give you any accurate estimate. Our present plan is to wait until the last minute tomorrow and then call off the restricted meeting on Korea which had been announced as probable. The only one to whom I have talked about this is Bidault and he concurs, as it gives him another day to avoid an Indochina plenary. I would also prefer not to have a meeting of the 16 tomorrow, as we need time to ascertain by private contact what the various individual attitudes are, and plan our tactics. Doubt if we can avoid a meeting of the 16 Tuesday morning.<sup>2</sup>

As reported in our Secto 378,<sup>3</sup> our present differences are in emphasis. We wish to emphasize any break on the United Nations issue. All of our associates except the Commonwealth bloc will in the end support us, not because all of them agree, but because they accept our leadership. The Commonwealth bloc prefers to emphasize the issue of free elections. Canada, Australia, and New Zealand have quite definite instructions in this regard.

I asked Eden to give us a little help with the Dominions, saying that actually we had the same song with two verses, and it didn't make much difference which verse we sang first, as long as we all sang the same song. He agreed, and said that both would be sung with equal loudness as far as he was concerned. But this was before Molotov.

The UN role in Korea has been vigorously rejected by the Communist bloc. The Molotov proposal ostensibly offers a negotiating basis for the views expressed by the Commonwealth bloc. Our dilemma is how to go along with the Commonwealth bloc in exploring the Molotov proposals without compromising our position that the UN role in resisting aggression and its authority and competence in establishing the peace is basic to all of the other issues involved. I would be extremely grateful for your thoughts and suggestions to reach me by Monday evening, as we may really need them on Tuesday.

WASHINGTON, June 7, 1954—11:30 a. m.

1. My feeling is resolution forwarded by Molotov should be rejected on the ground that it gives spurious sense of accomplishment although in reality it does not resolve any major issue except that of proportionate representation. This, however, is itself illusory until there is agreement as to the supervision of elections which will determine composition of all Korean legislature.

2. With respect to composition and duties of preparatory body; with respect to withdrawal of foreign forces; with respect to supervisory commission; and with respect to states assuming obligations to insure greatest peaceful Korean development, all "subject to further examination". The Berlin communiqué agreed that there should be "the establishment through peaceful means of a united and independent Korea". The Molotov resolution, using many words to create the illusion of progress, in fact does little more than repeat what was agreed to at Berlin. I feel it would be a fraud upon the peace-loving peoples of the world who are eager to see Korea peacefully united if a resolution were adopted which would inevitably lead to subsequent disillusionment if, as we assume, the communist bloc adhere to their view that the United Nations must be publicly humiliated by being excluded from any role in consummating its program first undertaken in 1947 to create an independent and united Korea.

3. The position of the 16 has too many unresolvable difficulties to allow any of us to play this dangerous game of Molotov's. President Rhee has gone as far as he is likely to go and is becoming very restive. Only an excellent piece of persuasion by Briggs induced him to authorize Pyun to attend a final restricted session (Seoul's 1303 sent Geneva 156 Tokyo 773<sup>3</sup>). He may at any point call the ROK delegation home. Our position before world opinion is certainly much better if we break off the Conference now while we are united than if we pursue a mirage of negotiation until we are divided from each other.

4. We have two good issues. I have already emphasized the prime importance of the UN issue in my own thinking. (Tedul 145.<sup>4</sup>) This is one that free world opinion will understand. The other is the issue of genuinely free elections. I see advantages if the Commonwealth will emphasize this issue if they will also speak in support of the UN. We can also cover both points with some difference of emphasis. And I hope in talking about Molotov's proposal there will be less note of welcome and more tone of regret that he gives no evidence of real willingness to yield on the fundamentals.

Secto 402. Repeated information Tokyo 115, London 257, Paris 401, Seoul 119, Moscow unnumbered. Department pass Defense. Tokyo pass CINCUNC.

1. Eighth meeting of 16 morning, June 8 conference reflected gratifying consensus opinion and agreement on situation and tactics among all delegations.

2. Smith confidentially informed group he had explored question composition of body to supervise Korean elections informally with Molotov last night<sup>2</sup> and latter made it quite clear Communists would agree only to supervisory body consisting equally Communists and non-Communists, i.e. complete counterpart of NNSC established under armistice agreement. Smith said this only confirmed our feeling that Saturday's plenary session had clarified and sharpened issues between 16 and Communists. Communists entirely firm in rejecting our fundamental principles of free elections and UN supervision. Smith quoted at length Secretary's views (Tedul 166 information Seoul 992 and Tokyo 2708<sup>3</sup>) that these two are very strong issues on which all 16 agree even if some would emphasize one of issues more than other, and that Secretary felt also too many minor points of difference among us which might be revealed if we were dragged into exploring Molotov proposal and it is much better to stand firm and united on major issues as 16 now are. It would be highly desirable for other delegations to address themselves to Molotov's speech emphasizing disagreement on fundamentals and expressing regret that he gave no evidence of willingness to yield on basic issues.

3. Turning to tactics, Smith said we believe that after Saturday's session it no longer necessary to have restricted session in order to clarify and sharpen issues with Communists. Indeed restricted session would be undesirable now since it might give impression that we consider Molotov's proposal genuine and were anxious to negotiate on basis of it. Our side should now concentrate on exposing Molotov's proposal in plenary. It might be better, however, wait little while see if Communists take initiative in requesting next Korean plenary as they might do in view of Chou En-lai's statement Saturday he reserves right to make full reply to Smith's speech.

4. Other delegations (UK, Canada, ROK, Philippines, Australia, Netherlands, Thailand, Colombia, Turkey) expressed agreement points made by Smith. It was generally recognized that Molotov's speech contains no concession on fundamentals but was superficially attractive and might confuse public opinion. They agreed restricted session now unwise and desirable to have plenary to expose Molotov's proposal. They agreed it would be desirable to have few days to consult governments, and let Communists take initiative in demanding next Korean plenary, but it would be undesirable to wait too long and leave Molotov proposal before public without having additional replies to it. Pyun (ROK) preferred sponsor plenary session for our side make "clinging statement and wind it all up".

5. Garcia of Philippines suggested that at next plenary some delegations might wish to ask Communists directly question it had been intending to put to them in restricted session i.e. whether Communists would accept authority of UN.

6. UK, Netherlands, Australia, however, reserved position on desirability of restricted session in light developments at next plenary.

7. Group agreed that nothing should be done until Thursday morning.<sup>4</sup> If by then Communists had not requested plenary, Kural would make contact with them and inquire whether they desire plenary in view of Chou En-lai's expressed intention of speaking again. He would suggest plenary on Friday and if Communists refuse would insist on having one Saturday.

PRIORITY

SEOUL, June 10, 1954—9 p. m.

1326. Repeated information Tokyo 785, priority Geneva 166. Geneva for USDel; Tokyo pass CINCUNC. President Rhee has just sent me following message via Acting Foreign Minister Cho:

"Informed that at Geneva today 16 nations agreed that Communist proposal offered no encouragement and must be rejected. They also agreed time has come end Korean negotiations. US and some countries want break emphasizing UN issue while England and her sister countries want to stress free election issue."

Cho said President would appreciate it if I would convey this most urgently to Secretary Dulles and USDel Geneva emphasizing his belief Korea phase should be terminated without further delay or parley otherwise Communists will succeed in obscuring issues and dividing allies.

I reminded Cho that President had expressed approximately the same thoughts at our last talk re Geneva (Embtel 1303, June 4, repeated Geneva 156, Tokyo 773<sup>1</sup>) and that his views are accordingly already a matter of record. I said I should be glad nevertheless to telegraph again as requested by Rhee.

I also told Cho that I hoped instructions to Dr. Pyun would give latter sufficient leeway to permit him continue for at least a few days more, should that be necessary in order preserve united front UN side.

My conversation with Cho underlines views expressed Embtel 1307, June 7 (repeated Geneva 158, Tokyo 775)<sup>2</sup> that we are likely have great trouble keeping Rhee in line unless Geneva phase ends very soon. While I shall continue do my best dissuade Rhee from ordering his delegation home, unless there is something definite I can tell him prospect unpromising.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Not printed. It stated that at their meeting on June 4, Rhee had spoken to Briggs of withdrawal of the Korean Delegation from Geneva. Rhee had not made any threat to recall Pyun, said Briggs, but the Ambassador wished the Department of State not to overlook the possibility of early withdrawal of the Republic of Korea from the Geneva Conference. (795.00/6-754)

<sup>3</sup> Telegram 1327, June 11, 1 a. m., from Seoul conveyed the following message from Ambassador Briggs:

"Later conversation with Acting Foreign Minister Cho this evening [June 10] indicates that message from President Rhee to me quoted reference telegram [1326] probably originated in Geneva from Pyun and that Rhee seeking capitalize thereon to support his thesis that Geneva Korean phase should be ended soon as possible." SECRET      PRIORITY

GENEVA, June 10, 1954—9 p. m.

1. Korean plenary has been scheduled for Friday afternoon.<sup>1</sup> UK, New Zealand, Canada and possibly Thailand will speak for our side. Hope also for Spaak and short statement from Garcia.

2. Thereafter, USDel tentatively plans to lay following tactical recommendations before meeting of 16 Saturday June 12.<sup>2</sup> Believe good possibility general acceptance by 16. Communist tactics are the problem.

A. Basic Considerations.

1. Our tactics should be based on probability that unlike Berlin, the Communists will not agree to any termination formula. They will make major propaganda issue out of our "breaking up" or "wrecking" conference, while they still wish negotiate. They will maneuver to keep Korean phase conference going.

2. Continued sessions will only renew possibilities for confusing the basic issues, for creating differences among 16, and for propaganda which may have some effect on our respective public opinions. Nothing more can be achieved since Communists have shown no slightest intention to compromise on basic issues.

3. Therefore, Allies will probably have to terminate conference unilaterally, but on issues which will stand up before world opinion.

B. Preferable Plan.

1. We should hold no more meetings either plenary or restricted. Such meetings would invite further Communist delaying tactics such as elaboration Nam Il's point 3.

2. Representatives 3 Allied inviting powers (US, UK and France) could send joint written memorandum to Molotov informing him, as representative 4th inviting power, that they, and their 13 associates, are agreed that the 2 basic issues on which they insist, i.e., authority of UN and provision for genuinely free elections, have been repeatedly rejected by other side. Therefore, 16 are agreed that further consideration and examination Korean question by conference would serve no useful purpose as long as Communist delegations reject these two basic requirements.

3. The 16 could issue joint declaration drafted broad terms simultaneously with delivery letter to Molotov. Letter and joint declaration could be issued soon as necessary consultations between delegations of 16 and their governments can be completed preferably by Tuesday June 15.

Eden may wish first see Molotov in attempt obtain his agreement to no further meetings. Some of other 16 would probably support this. This would probably not be successful and in that event we should be prepared promptly to implement foregoing plan. If it is successful, the letter from the 3 on our side could be eliminated.

4. General outlines of a report to UN by 16 should be agreed to if possible at meeting of 16 June 12, and detailed drafting should be referred to working group of 15 in Washington.

C. Alternative Plan.

1. As a less desirable alternative to above procedure in event some of 16 insist on another meeting, we should tell rest of 16 we would be willing have one more plenary or one more restricted meeting.

2. At close such meeting, letter to Molotov would be delivered and declaration of 16 would be issued.

3. Would appreciate Department's comments soon as possible.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup>The Department of State's response was conveyed in telegrams Tosec 396 and 397, June 11, to Geneva, which indicated a preference for the plan set forth in paragraph B2 but stated that there was no objection to the plan in C2 if Smith thought it desirable in order to maintain Allied unity. The Secretary concurred in this judgment. (396.1 GE/6-1054) ments for all-Korean commission. Claimed US opposed to commission because US wants to impose ROK will on DPROK, which failed to do in war.

PROC cannot accept UN supervision since UN is a belligerent. It would be "inconceivable" that PROC or DPROK could agree to this.

NNSC has had its problems. These have been caused, not by Polish and Czech representatives, but because US has violated armistice on many occasions. US not only wants to prevent agreement on Korea, but wants to disband NNSC so that the US can proceed with arming ROK. Moreover, US objects to an NNSC in Indochina so as to keep war going there.

He closed by stating that peaceful settlement of Korea was closely related to peace in entire world. He claimed conference already achieved agreement on several points and no reason why conference should not continue. World opinion would not permit conference to break off.

Ronning of Canadian delegation devoted opening part his speech<sup>2</sup> to answering "challenge" of Communist delegation to authority of UN. Voicing Canada's unqualified support of UN as "preeminent international agency for making and keeping peace", he expressed belief any agreement on Korean unification must be in accordance UN principles. If conference cannot reach agreement on procedure for unifying Korea, UN will continue effort with Canadian support. Ronning then stressed danger of agreement on generalized principles when there remain serious questions as to meaning and details. Canada would like to be able to agree to Molotov's proposals, but this would be dishonest, since so many essential questions of detail are unresolved. In long run, it is more important to register actual disagreement on fundamental points than to fool people of world by indicating agreement on broad and fuzzy principles.

New Zealand delegate then spoke,<sup>3</sup> pointing out spirit of give and take was lacking in Communist delegation, especially on issues vital to cause UN members pledged to uphold. He continued in much same vein as Ronning. Although could agree with platitudinous statements of Molotov, free world has learned to examine such statements for their real meaning. It would be of little service to world if agreement was reported on these broad principles when there exists, in fact, fundamental disagreement on the basic issue of the preparation for and conduct of free elections. NNSC was an experiment in international cooperation—one that did not work, may have been disastrous and is not likely to be repeated. By abandoning their perverse attitude toward the UN, the PROC could open up way for a settlement of Korean problem and for wider settlement of Far Eastern problems. By deliberate design Communists have made acceptance versus denial to UN key issue both for Korean settlement and for the reconciliation of China with majority of nations.

Nam-Il followed with comparatively short speech which (a) emphasized that there was general agreement many questions of principle; (b) endorsed Molotov draft resolution of June 5; and (c) replied to General Smith's indictment of NNSC. In supporting Molotov resolution, Nam-Il reiterated Communist position on all-Korean commission, withdrawal foreign forces prior election, international supervisory commission and guarantee peaceful development Korea by interested states. Blaming US military authorities for difficulties NNSC in Korea, Nam-Il alleged North Koreans had completely cooperated while UN command violated armistice and obstructed work of commission.

Eden then spoke,<sup>4</sup> pointing out two fundamental issues before conference are authority of UN and question of free all-Korean elections. In Korea UN demonstrated its worth as organization for implementing collective security. Only by carrying out purpose and principles of UN charter can conference find solution to Korean question. Far from having lost its moral authority by its actions in Korea, UN by defending ROK against aggression, strengthened its authority.

While all say we agree must unify Korea by free elections, we do not agree on methods and procedures. This is same difference in principle which we faced in Berlin. Impartial international supervision essential for truly free elections. Supervisory commission must be so composed that it can take effective decisions and must have authority carry them out. UN is most appropriate body from which to choose impartial international commission. If all-Korean commission which gives veto to North Korean Communist minority, has main responsibility for elections result would be no elections or elections which not free. Communist proposal for NNSC supervision not only leaves unaltered all-Korean commission, but is same type which already unsatisfactory.

How does Molotov's draft resolution help since it is just on methods of application where we differ. UK stakes stand on principles UN authority and free elections. If no way found resolving differences on these two issues, must admit conference unable complete its task. As UN members we should then report back that organization. This would insure search for political settlement in Korea could be resumed at right moment.

Thai delegate in brief speech expressed view UN supervision over free elections was essential. Draft resolution of Soviet delegation is unacceptable because it is a "skeleton" rather than plan for settlement. Thai delegation cannot agree to establishment of commissions without their composition and duties being known beforehand.

Spaak then made eloquent extemporaneous speech<sup>5</sup> with much dramatic force. He noted that conference had come to "decisive" stage. Molotov's speech was of considerable importance, but was too optimistic in its claims of agreement on many issues. Agreement possible in principle, but so many matters of detail remain unsettled that there are still many important divergencies. If UN ignored in Korean settlement it would doom both concept of collective security and UN organization. Among 60 member countries in UN it would be possible find panel of impartial nations acceptable to both sides. At close of speech Spaak said he had tried to put his thoughts in writing and read following:

"In order to prepare and to organize free general elections throughout Korea, the UN shall appoint a commission, members of that commission will be selected impartially in order to enjoy the trust from both sides involved. That commission shall act in close cooperation with the representatives of the ROK and with those of the DPROK. The questions pertaining to the final constitution and other terms of reference of that body shall be the subject of a supplementary consideration."

He said if Molotov could embody such text in his proposal Geneva conference would make decisive step forward. If not, then we must face conclusion expressed by Eden today.

Bidault who had not previously indicated he was going to speak and inscribed himself late in the session spoke last.<sup>6</sup> He pointed out France could not subscribe to attacks on UN. He noted that Molotov's proposal was designed to obscure disagreement on fundamental issues. Emphasized that French delegate was moved by a spirit of reasonableness and desire to compromise in both facets of conference. He closed by stating his delegation "adheres in principle to ideas enunciated by one of our presidents, which may be summed up as follows:

"1. Korea, within her historical frontiers, should be united as a free, independent and democratic state.

2. To this end, elections should be held throughout the territory of Korea to establish a single and really representative government for the whole of the country.

3. The elections should be carried out under conditions of true freedom under international supervision.

4. The settlement of the Korean question should make provision for the withdrawal of foreign forces.

5. When once the unification has been carried out under number maximum conditions, the UN would be called upon to give their sanction to this settlement thus reached”.

Comment : Communists may seize on Bidault's closing statement as invitation to continue Korean phase. Bidault's 5 points bear close resemblance to Eden's statement of "basic principles" in May 13 Korean plenary, although 5th point seems to be Bidault's very own. USDel had no prior knowledge contents French speech.

GENEVA, June 11, 1954—7 p. m.

Secto 424. Repeated information priority Seoul 121, Tokyo 126. Tokyo pass CINCUNC. Reference Secto 418.<sup>1</sup> Following is draft declaration by 16 which we will begin discussing tomorrow with UK and possibly some other key delegations with view introducing in meeting 16 Monday.<sup>2</sup> Would appreciate Department's comments. Department will, of course, appreciate that delegation will require some negotiating flexibility on final text in order quickly obtain agreement all 16.

Draft declaration by the 16.

“Pursuant to the resolution of August 28, 1953, of the United Nations General Assembly, and the Berlin communiqué of February 18, 1954, we, the 16 nations who contributed military forces to the United Nations Command in Korea, have been participating in the Geneva Conference for the purpose of establishing a united and independent Korea by peaceful means.

We have made a number of proposals and suggestions in accord with the past efforts of the United Nations to bring about the unification, independence and freedom of Korea; and within the framework of the following two principles which we believe to be fundamental:

1. The United Nations, under its Charter, is fully and rightfully empowered to take collective action to repel aggression, to restore peace and security, and to contribute its good offices to seeking a peaceful adjustment in Korea.

2. There should be established a united and independent Korea through the holding of genuinely free elections under the supervision of an appropriate United Nations body, for representatives in the National Assembly, in which representation shall be in direct proportion to the indigenous population in Korea.

The Communist delegations have rejected our every effort. The principal issues between us, therefore, are clear. We accept and assert the authority of the United Nations. The Communists repudiate and reject the role of the United Nations in Korea and have labelled the UN itself the tool of aggression. We desire genuinely free elections. The Communists, while asserting a corresponding desire, insist upon procedures which would make free elections, as we understand them, completely impossible. It is only too apparent that the Communist states will not accept impartial supervision of free elections. Plainly, they have shown their intention to maintain Communist control over North Korea. They have persisted in the same attitudes which have frustrated United Nations' efforts to unify Korea since 1947.

However attractive it might be to state that some agreement in principle had been reached at this point, we believe that in the long run it will be better if we squarely face the facts of our disagreement and acknowledge them than to delude ourselves with false hopes and lead the people of the world to believe that there is agreement when there is no real agreement.

In the circumstances, we have been compelled reluctantly and regretfully to conclude that, so long as the Communist delegations reject the two fundamental principles which we consider indispensable, further consideration and examination of the Korean question by the conference would serve no useful purpose. We reaffirm our continued support for the objectives of the United Nations on the establishment of a united and independent Korea."

Secto 429. Department pass USUN as Geneva's 16; repeated Usun 16. Urrutia called on Smith by appointment pursuant to instructions and exchanged views on Korean phase at Geneva and next steps. Following points were made :

1. Smith outlined proposed tactics for termination, along lines Secto 418.<sup>1</sup> Urrutia agreed that this was reasonable and indicated he would support. He had some doubt, however, as to whether we could avoid an additional meeting if Communists asked for one but in any event he said if we have our position agreed, we could break off and issue declaration immediately following such further meeting. Urrutia stressed need for time to bring around public opinion in European and LA countries to recognize fundamental Communist responsibility for failure conference. He also expressed satisfaction with Spaak speech June 11, particularly since it emphasized we prepared to accept new UN commission not necessarily UNCURK, since latter generally discredited.

2. Smith outlined proposed declaration along lines Secto 424.<sup>2</sup> Urrutia reacted favorably. He approved particularly idea that declaration would leave talks in the penumbral state, i.e., not necessarily adjourned with implication that if Communist accepted fundamental principles they could resume. He thought this would help us with Rhee since we could argue conference not fully broken off and therefore no action of other kind should be considered. He thought also it would help us postpone consideration of Korea in UN until Ninth session. In this connection, he suggested proposed report to UN should be addressed specifically to Ninth session. If we announced this intention it would make it easier for us to resist having Korea come up earlier, e.g., if GA meets to consider Thailand appeal.

3. Urrutia raised question paragraph 62 Korean Armistice Agreement. Smith confirmed that armistice is in effect perpetual and that armistice is really more than merely a military agreement. He said however that it is not necessarily desirable to emphasize this publicly since there are advantages in keeping Communists guessing as to what our intentions in Korea are. Smith expressed personal view that Rhee's threats to march north are largely bluff.

4. Urrutia urged necessity for full consultations before Korea comes up in GA again and suggested desirability of having preliminary talks on this aspect take place here before 16 depart. He stressed particularly need for UK-US agreement on positions and timing UN consideration.

I told Rhee we hoped stress two principles, viz. (1) united Korea through genuinely free elections and (2) authority of UN. I said it was proposed spell out these principles with sufficient detail so world would understand issues and put blame on Communists for blocking solution. Indicated we hoped draft might also contain reaffirmation of continued UN support after conference toward establishment united and independent Korea. I did not discuss text contained Secto 424 since that might have confused issue by eliciting specific suggestions or demands from President. Moreover no matter what text is adopted he will probably think it should have been stronger. For instance he will undoubtedly object to any phraseology he interprets as apologetic or appeasing in tone.

Rhee thanked me for information and remarked albeit cheerfully that "quicker we end this Geneva thing, the better". His general attitude was one of satisfaction and barring some further delay or altercation among allies leading to weak draft, I do not believe he is at the moment contemplating withdrawing ROK delegation. We have made a number of proposals and suggestions in accord with the past efforts of the United Nations to bring about the unification, independence and freedom of Korea; and within the framework of the following two principles which we believe to be fundamental:

1. The United Nations, under its Charter, is fully and rightfully empowered to take collective action to repel aggression, to restore peace and security, and to extend its good offices to seeking a peaceful settlement in Korea.
2. In order to establish a unified, independent and democratic Korea, genuinely free elections should be held under (appropriate) UN supervision, for representatives in the national assembly, in which representation shall be in direct proportion to the indigenous population in Korea.

We have earnestly and patiently searched for a basis of agreement which would enable us to proceed with Korean unification in accordance with these fundamental principles. We have failed.

The Communist delegations have rejected our every effort to obtain agreement. The principal issues between us, therefore, are clear. Firstly, we accept and assert the authority of the United Nations. The Communists repudiate and reject the authority and competence of the United Nations in Korea and have labelled the United Nations itself as the tool of aggression. Were we to accept this position of the Communists, it would mean the death of the principle of collective secu-city and of the UN itself. Secondly, we desire genuinely free elections. The Communists insist upon procedures which would make genuinely free elections impossible. It is clear that the Communists will not accept impartial and effective supervision of free elections. Plainly, they have shown their intention to maintain Communist control over North Korea. They have persisted in the same attitudes which have frustrated United Nations efforts to unify Korea since 1947.

We believe, therefore, that it is better to face the fact of our disagreement and not to raise false hopes and mislead the peoples of the world into believing that there is agreement where there is none.

In the circumstances, we have been compelled reluctantly and regretfully to conclude that so long as the Communist delegations reject the two fundamental principles which we consider indispensable, further consideration and examination of the Korean question by the conference would serve no useful purpose. We reaffirm our continued support for the objectives of the United Nations in Korea.

In accordance with the resolution of the General Assembly of the United Nations of August 28, 1953, the member states parties to this declaration will inform the United Nations concerning the proceedings at this conference."

text 16-nation declaration. Discussion centered on draft declaration by 16 (Secto 436<sup>2</sup>) and particularly use word "appropriate". Pyun remained adamant to his insistence on its exclusion. Other participants generally urged him accept it for sake unanimity, stressing that phrase would refer to UNCURK in present circumstances though no one could bind UN as to body it might consider appropriate in future.

Finally Prince Wan suggested that since ROK finds word "appropriate" insurmountable obstacle, solution might be to omit word from declaration, but in text of report to UN which UN members will be sending, this word could be included.

Deadlock broke when Canada in prepared statement said that though they would prefer inclusion word "appropriate" as umbrella to cover those who had expressed different views on appropriate composition supervisory commission, declaration is on this subject basically contrary to Canadian position regardless of inclusion or exclusion word "appropriate". Canada prepared to accept declaration as is and would not make any public statement derogating from unanimity. It wanted its friends to know, however, that it reserved its position for the future, and whenever issue properly arose would feel free to take position that important question was impartiality and effectiveness of supervision whether or not it is strictly supervision by UN.

Smith said that we would have preferred inclusion of "appropriate" for opposite reason, i.e., there might theoretically be some kind of UN supervision we would consider inappropriate. For sake of unity, however, we are prepared accept text without this word.

McIntosh (New Zealand) who had supported Canada's position said that his government would not wish to remain sole holdout and will go along, but reserved its position for future along lines Canada.

Text draft declaration approved, therefore, without word "appropriate" and with deletion sentence "we have failed", end fifth paragraph. Subject unforeseen developments, it will be signed this afternoon and issued immediately following close plenary tonight.

would raise question of continued validity of armistice. Smith said that if this happened, he would ask to speak before recess for caucus and would on behalf UNC assert that validity of armistice is not an issue at conference, that it continues in accordance paragraph 62, and there is no need for conference to deal with question. Canada supported need for making such statement.

Pyun said that he hoped none of 16 would make statements which would in effect promise Communists we would continue abide by armistice even if Communists violate it. He warned that it might be necessary for him to speak on this subject. Smith reminded him that ROK was not party to armistice and that US would speak for UNC and for all UN members and would have declaration on armistice which would accord with our commitments under it.

<sup>1</sup> A set of minutes of this meeting (US Verb Min/15) is in Conference files, lot 60 D 627. The minutes indicate that the meeting convened at 3:05 p. m. and adjourned at 8:35 p. m. Eden presided at the meeting. This message was transmitted in three sections.

"Nam Il Proposal. On the insurance of peaceful conditions in Korea. The States (which are) participants in the Geneva conference agree that they shall continue their efforts with a view to reaching agreement on the peaceful settlement of the Korean question on the basis of creating a united, independent, and democratic Korean state. In the interests of insuring peaceful conditions in Korea (it is agreed)

"1. To recommend to the governments of the appropriate states that measures should be taken to withdraw from the territory of Korea all foreign armed forces as soon as possible with the observation of the principle of proportionality. The time limit for the withdrawal of foreign troops from Korea is subject to an agreement by the participants in the Geneva conference.

"2. To reduce, within the period not exceeding one year, the strength of the troops of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea, establishing the limit of troop strength for each of the states not exceeding 100,000 men.

"3. To form, from the representatives of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea, a commission to consider the question of creating conditions for gradual liquidation of the state of war, of transition of the subject to it rejected the June 5 proposals of the USSR, and that differences of opinion existed among the delegates primarily on question of Korean elections, but that nevertheless it was necessary to reach agreement on other questions since peoples of Korea and of world demanded lessening of international tensions. He asserted that conference should reach some agreement leading to peace in Korea. He went on to charge South Korea with continuing to threaten resumption of hostilities under US orders by having increased its army from 16 to 20 divisions and planning to add an additional 15 divisions. He claimed that if the US and South Korea really want to preserve peace, conference should make provisions for transition from the armistice situation to peaceful rapprochement between North and South Korea, withdrawal of foreign forces, reduction of domestic forces, and end of US blockade of North Korea. To this end, he said, his delegation tabled proposal.

Chou En-lai was second speaker. He regretted that US and other delegates following its lead had rejected constructive Nam Il April 27 and Molotov June 5 proposals and obstructed any agreement on peaceful unification of Korea. Said that ROK and some US leaders trying to undermine armistice and that ROK-US mutual defense treaty not "permissible". Said remaining job was consider ways to convert present war situation in Korea to peace. Specifically endorsed today's Nam Il proposals and recommended conference go into restricted session of seven (China, USSR, UK, US, France, DPROK and ROK) to consider "peaceful development of Korea".

Molotov [said]<sup>3</sup> Soviet delegation shares UK view desirability of arriving at agreement on basic principles which would be step forward in restoration Korean unity. Urged adoption Soviet delegation's proposals. Noted that Soviet delegations proposals concurred in by troops of both sides to a peacetime position, and to submit to the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and to the Government of the Republic of Korea proposals for the conclusion of an appropriate agreement.

"4. To recognize as incompatible with the interests of the peaceful unification of Korea the existence of treaties between one or the other of the other part of Korea and other states insofar as such treaties involve military obligations.

"5. For the purpose of creating conditions for the rapprochement between North and South Korea to form an all-Korean committee to work out and to implement agreed measures for establishing and developing economic and cultural relations between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea, trade, settlement of accounts, transport, frontier relations, freedom of movement of the population, and freedom of correspondence, cultural and scientific relations. etc.

"6. To recognize the necessity to insure by the states participants in the Geneva conference the peaceful development of Korea, and to create thereby the conditions facilitating the speediest solution of the task of the peaceful unification of Korea in a united, independent, and democratic state." (396.1 GE/6-1554)

DPROK and ROK and chided UN side for failing to submit constructive proposals of their own.

In referring to Canadian delegate's statement June 11, Molotov accused him of giving up attempts to reach agreement on some subjects while at the same time ignoring the USSR proposal which attempted to do just that. Continued by chiding French delegate for statement also on June 11 adhering to views of Canadian delegate while submitting five-point proposal of his own which was more or less similar to the Soviet and UK proposals. Referred to Spaak's reference that Soviet proposal mortal for UN and said Spaak forgets Geneva conference set up without help of UN and this not considered inadmissible by delegations here. Even Eden, he continued, did not refer on June 11 to his own earlier five-point proposal and was preoccupied only with the questions of elections and formation of a UN commission. Contended that authority of UN can be defended in several ways not all of which strengthen UN, and cited as example use of UN as cover for Korean aggression.

Molotov then went on to reiterate Soviet delegation's views in support of all-Korea body to set up conditions for free elections, and registered his support for proposals of DPROK which would be first step in direction Korean unification. Specifically stated support of Soviet delegation for withdrawal of foreign forces within shortest possible period, reduction troop strengths in North and South Korea, formation of all-Korea commission to consider question of bringing about conditions for transition from state of war to peace and abolition by US and others of blockade and embargo of Korea. Called on conference to recommend that existence of treaties of a military nature between North and South Korea and other countries is incompatible with interests of Korean unification mentioning US-ROK mutual defense treaty specifically as means by which US planned using Korean territory as springboard for new military adventures. Stated that Soviet delegation supports formation of all-Korea commission for development of economic and cultural relations between North and South Korea. Concluded by submitting draft declaring: For possible adoption by conference (full text sent Secto 449<sup>4</sup>).

Chairman (Eden) noting no further speakers inscribed at moment was in process of calling for short recess when Garcia (Philippines)

"The States participating in the Geneva conference have agreed that, pending the final settlement of the Korean problem on the basis of the establishment of a united, independent and democratic state, no action shall be taken which might constitute a threat to the maintenance of peace in Korea.

"The participants in the conference express their confidence that both the People's Democratic Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea shall act in accordance with the present declaration in the interests of peace."

arose and moved for recess. See Secto 447 for account meeting 16 during recess.<sup>5</sup>

Following recess, General Smith made statement rebutting Molotov proposal, noting that existing armistice agreement is formal definitive arrangement with more force than declaration suggested by Molotov could have. (Full text follows in Secto 450.<sup>6</sup>)

Casey (Australia) made short trenchant rebuttal of today's Nam Il and Molotov proposals.<sup>7</sup> Said proposals designed to mislead public opinion from understanding that Communist obstruction reason why conference cannot reach agreement. Nam Il proposals equate aggressive North Korean regime and lawful, legitimate ROK. Molotov's proposed resolution would reduce ROK defense strength to same level as North Korea which has only one-third population and would deny ROK treaty access to its friends while asking UN believe DPROK has no such link with Peiping. Noted in particular second paragraph Molotov resolution expresses confidence DPROK and ROK would act in interests of peace and that while we confident ROK will do so we have no such confidence about DPROK. Concluded that Communist statements today offered nothing new and nothing which could serve as basis further discussions.

Garcia (Philippines) then took floor and in an impassioned statement<sup>8</sup> summarized the fundamental differences existing between Communist and non-Communist delegations, charging that Communist accusations against UN as belligerent in Korean war designed to be rejected, and concluded that after two months Communist position fundamental issues unchanged. He reaffirmed faith of Philippine delegate in UN and support for two basic principles upheld by non-Communist delegates. Maintained continued willingness to continue negotiations but asserted no purpose would be served unless Communists accept fundamental principles of free elections and control there-

<sup>5</sup> The plenary session recessed from 4:40 p. m. until 5:30 p. m. During the recess, the heads of the 16 Allied Delegations held their 11th meeting from 4:50 to 5:15 p. m. The minutes are in FE files, lot 60 D 330, box 14824 (AD Verb Min/11). The summary of the meeting in telegram Secto 447, June 15, from Geneva, read:

"At meeting of 16 during intermission between halves of Korean plenary, Smith suggested that in view of statements made today it might be best to revert to original suggestion and have declaration read at session rather than issued after close of conference. Spaak agreed and also suggested that it would be very difficult to vote against Molotov resolution (Secto 449) and wondered whether it could not be accepted. Smith said Molotov resolution unnecessary and some parts of it undesirable but he would be willing to state that matter of continuing effective armistice taken care of by armistice itself referring to paragraph 62.

"It was agreed that following Smith statement, Casey would give arguments against Nam Il resolution (Secto 449) then Garcia and Spaak would speak and Prince Wan would read declaration." (396.1 GE/6-1554) of by appropriate UN body. Said Philippine delegation wanted unified Korea but not at price of destruction of UN.

Spaak (Belgium), speaking fluently from notes,<sup>9</sup> expressed hope that after conciliatory UN delegation speeches Friday<sup>10</sup> and Eden's grave warning headway could be made but hopes again dashed after Communist statements in first half of session. He referred to three charges made by Molotov :

(1) That non-Communist delegates wanted to subject North Korea to South Korean enslavement ;

(2) That certain delegations wanted to end conference ; and

(3) That non-Communist delegates had not seriously considered his proposals. In refuting these charges, Spaak said :

(1) We desire democratic elections in Korea wherein Korean people can express themselves freely ;

(2) It is not our desire to end conference but cause of peace will not be gained by interminable speeches ; and

(3) We have seriously considered Molotov proposals and commented on them last session. Further asserted Communists today had made no reply to fundamental questions asked of them in last session. Reiterated previous thought that if UN considered to be aggressor this would mean destruction of UN. In referring to Nam Il statement, said this no better than his earlier statement and dealt only with withdrawal of forces.

Spaak then mentioned that one delegation will read a final statement ; that this delegation not most powerful among them which demonstrates principle equality of states. Said statement not intended to end discussions on Korea and referred to necessity of reporting back to UN on results since conference convened pursuant to UN resolution. Spaak then referred to supplementary proposal of Molotov which he thought would have good effect and to which he could give support except that, as General Smith had said, armistice agreement serves same purpose and states case better. Spaak cautioned against expressing same idea in two ways since this leads to confusion. Nevertheless, he said he was glad to note the text and its spirit and he was sure all were in agreement with it. The time had come, he continued, to separate, but in doing so all should realize that nothing was lost. When time has passed and passions have subsided parties can meet to discuss and reach agreement. He emphasized that conference work not useless and hoped all could meet again, re-examine situation, and establish conditions for unified, democratic, independent Korea.

Pyun (ROK), who inscribed during Spaak statement, briefly and cogently dissected Communist statements today on peaceful development of Korea as scheme for infiltrating ROK and diverting attention from primary subject of conference.

Prince Wan (Thailand) after short introduction read text 16-nation declaration on behalf of 16. Full text sent Tousi 79.<sup>11</sup>

Molotov, who inscribed while Wan reading declaration, then delivered relatively long and intemperate, partly extemporaneous, attack on 16, saving severest invective for ROK which he called "rotten, semi-Fascist, etc.". Apparently speaking largely for benefit domestic Communist audiences, he denied "questions" posed by 16 had not been answered and asked whether 16 had hidden their previous proposals under their tables. Said only conclusion to be drawn from conference was that the 16 had tried to impose Rhee regime on DPROK through Geneva discussions, but failed and, therefore, obstructed any agreement and took clear initiative in ending talks. He specifically accused 16 of not studying today's 16 [6]-point proposal of Nam Il, characterized Casey's rebuttal of Nam Il as saying in effect that nothing which would strengthen peace in Korea is acceptable, and said Smith's expression of surprise at resolution proposed today by Molotov to guarantee peaceful development of Korea inappropriate in view of talk coming from "Syngman Rhee regime" and elsewhere about crusade to conquer [DPROK by] war. In conclusion, said USSR now as always on the side of democratic forces and that USSR would continue fighting for them.

Chou En-lai spoke next, stating he could not agree with position in 16-nation declaration, repeated view that conference had nothing to do with UN and besides China denied rightful place in UN. Expressed regret 16-nation declaration announced determination to end conference. Chou went on to support Molotov proposal that states participating in conference issue declaration on Korean question and regretted even such a simple expression of common desire was rejected by Smith. Stated that despite differences of opinion conference has objective reaching certain agreements on unification of Korea and for this reason made following proposal, the rejection of which, he said, could only have an unfavorable effect on future international conferences:

"The states participating in the Geneva conference agree that they will continue their efforts toward achieving an agreement on the peaceful settlement of the Korean question on the basis of establishing a united, independent and democratic Korea.

As regards the question of the time and place for resuming appropriate negotiations, it shall be decided separately by the states concerned through negotiation."

Nam Il then spoke deploring 16-nation declaration which said that conference should be ended. He recalled initial proposal of DPROK and his subsequent acceptance of Chou En-lai proposal on formation neutral commission to supervise elections. Referred also to DPROK acceptance Molotov proposal re agreement by conference on major questions of principle and noted that ROK and its supporters had rejected these proposals. Said that today ROK and its followers again turned down new proposals for establishment of peace in Korea thus showing other delegates trying to disrupt conference. Concluded by supporting proposal made by Chou En-lai earlier in session.

Prince Wan then addressed brief remarks with dignity and effectiveness to Molotov's charge that the 16 were taking the initiative in breaking up conference. This, he rejected and denied saying Thailand and others of 16 will continue to work for unification of Korea on basis two fundamental principles set forth UN declaration.

Spaak then again intervened extemporaneously and stated that there appeared to be a misunderstanding. The proposals of Molotov and Chou En-lai, he said, did not contradict the declaration of the 16. None of the 16, he said, consider that their action calls into question continuation of armistice agreement or leads to resumption of hostilities. 16 appeared to differ with Molotov proposal in that they believe his idea is already in armistice agreement and that the same applies to Chou's statement. If we separate now, he continued, we do not abandon Korean problem. Therefore, it was his opinion that disagreement should not be interpreted as rejection of initial Molotov and Chou proposals and that disagreement existed simply because these ideas were already embodied in armistice agreement and in 16-nation declaration.

In a brief intervention, Molotov registered support of USSR delegation for Chou En-lai proposal.

At this point, Lord Reading (UK) spoke in support of Spaak. He regretted conference had not made more progress but as 16-nation declaration said we have done everything possible. However, he continued, if we fail here we still do not abandon hope for the future. Spaak's views, he thought, reflected those of signatories of 16-nation declaration.

Chou En-lai then asked for floor by raising PROC sign. Belgian Foreign Minister, he said, stated proposal of PROC was included in armistice agreement. This assertion was groundless. There is no provision in armistice agreement for calling on participants in Geneva conference to attempt settlement of Korean question. He said he had brought spirit of negotiation and conciliation to this, his first international conference, and if his proposal was rejected by "UNC side" he would regard fact with greatest regret and peace-loving people of world would pass own judgment.

Rising to Chou's bait Spaak again intervened stating he feared Chou had not listened carefully to what he had said. He did not say Chou's proposal was included in armistice agreement but simply that it conformed to spirit of 16-nation declaration and also with his previous statement that if Geneva Conference met with no success conference should be prepared to seek a settlement at later date. UK delegate and others, he thought, shared this sentiment.

Chou En-lai then continued the exchange with Spaak and stated that if sixteen-nation declaration and proposal of PROC shared common desire then declaration of 16 is only one-sided statement. In Geneva Conference there are 19 states represented. Why not express desire of all in common statement. If not even this much agreement could be reached, he added sadly, he regretted to have had to learn this at the first international conference. Having risen to the bait Spaak then bit with a short statement expressing readiness to accept either a vote on or affirmation by the conference of Chou En-lai's proposal.

Molotov then immediately intervened stating that the conference was about to wind up its consideration of the Korean question. It could do so by a one-sided or a joint decision. He then asked rhetorically if the conference was ready to make its decision reflect the views of all.

Eden, from the Chair, apparently realizing that the exchange had already gotten out of hand then asked somewhat unhelpfully if he could accept as the [sense of] the delegates that the proposal of PROC expressed spirit of the conference.

General Smith immediately took the floor with statement (repeated in Secto 450)<sup>12</sup> to effect that this conference could not accept responsibility for settlement of Korea question indefinitely since it is not a permanent body. He was not prepared accept Chou's proposal and 16-nation declaration made clear conditions to be made by Commies for any resumption negotiations.

Eden then seemed to recover his footing and remarked from the Chair that conference has no procedure for voting and that it acts simply on common agreement. He pointed out that conference would not be able to reach agreement on any of the various texts as part of record of conference. If that were possible he stated he would add that further progress appeared impossible and hoped that day would come when task conference had set itself could be carried to successful conclusion.

Molotov spoke next saying conference had heard statement from Chair to effect all should take note of statement of Belgian delegate in support of PROC proposal inasmuch as Chou proposals reflected views of conference and that since another statement had been made US delegation conference could also take note of it.

Chou En-lai then said he was pleased to note spirit of conciliation shown by Spaak and noted chairman asked for consent of conference for proposal of PROC delegation. He then referred to immediate opposition US delegation had stipulated and asserted this showed how US delegation has been obstructing conference and preventing it from arriving at even minimum agreement. Asked that this statement be noted as part of record of conference. Pyun then made a vigorous impromptu remark referring to 16-nation declaration and stating that if Communists wish to make a similar statement or one with the same content they are free to do so but that a joint statement is "not right". The Belgian delegation, he said, does not represent all of the 16 and specifically does not represent the ROK.

Eden from the Chair again remarked that the conference does not vote but that it was his understanding that the conference could take note of views expressed and in so doing does not implicate delegates any more than they want to be implicated.

Casey then spoke in helpful manner supporting statement of US delegate and of Chair. He reminded conference that 16 were not here in their individual capacities but as those who resisted aggression in Korea. He did not believe that second paragraph of Chou proposal could be accepted since it appeared to make 16 a "chance collection of countries". Any revival of conference should be done in UN context.

Molotov then asked for floor and said conference had heard [proposal] to effect that it should take note of statements made today. Therefore, he concluded, it was necessary to take note that Belgian delegation joins with views of PROC delegation and that former believed those views expressed sentiment of conference. Spaak replied, attempting to extricate himself from deteriorating situation, that he understood Chou proposal to mean Chou hoped discussions on Korea were not ended. Spaak said he agreed with that but would add that any further discussions must be within framework of UN. Spaak said he meant he did not oppose future discussions, for to do so would be serious and unfortunate. Chou then asked if he could interpret what had been said to mean that PROC would be excluded from future discussions on settlement of Korea question. If this were so, he added, agreement on Korea question would seem impossible.

Eden from Chair concluded lengthy session by suggesting conference could not adopt any drafts as representing collective agreement but that such drafts and statements of delegates formed part of record of conference. This he thought was only thing conference could do since there was no procedure for voting. He asked if there were any objections and there were none. He then expressed the personal hope that the day would come when "our joint task" could be carried through to successful conclusion. Meeting adjourned at 2035.

DECLARATION BY THE SIXTEEN, GENEVA, JUNE 15, 1954<sup>1</sup>

Pursuant to the Resolution of August 28, 1953, of the United Nations General Assembly, and the Berlin Communiqué of February 18, 1954, we, as nations who contributed military forces to the United Nations Command in Korea, have been participating in the Geneva Conference for the purpose of establishing a united and independent Korea by peaceful means.

We have made a number of proposals and suggestions in accord with the past efforts of the United Nations to bring about the unification, independence and freedom of Korea; and within the framework of the following two principles which we believe to be fundamental:

1. The United Nations, under its Charter, is fully and rightfully empowered to take collective action to repel aggression, to restore peace and security, and to extend its good offices to seeking a peaceful settlement in Korea.

2. In order to establish a unified, independent and democratic Korea, genuinely free elections should be held under United Nations supervision, for representatives in the National Assembly, in which representation shall be in direct proportion to the indigenous population in Korea.

We have earnestly and patiently searched for a basis of agreement which would enable us to proceed with Korean unification in accordance with these fundamental principles.

The Communist delegations have rejected our every effort to obtain agreement. The principal issues between us, therefore, are clear. Firstly, we accept and assert the authority of the United Nations. The Communists repudiate and reject the authority and competence of the United Nations in Korea and have labelled the United Nations itself as the tool of aggression. Were we to accept this position of the Communists, it would mean the death of the principle of collective security and of the United Nations itself. Secondly, we desire genuinely free elections. The Communists insist upon procedures which would make genuinely free elections impossible. It is clear that the Communists will not accept impartial and effective supervision of free elections. Plainly, they have shown their intention to maintain Communist control over North Korea. They have persisted in the same attitudes which have frustrated United Nations efforts to unify Korea since 1947.

We believe, therefore, that it is better to face the fact of our disagreement than to raise false hopes and mislead the peoples of the world into believing that there is agreement where there is none.

In the circumstances we have been compelled reluctantly and regretfully to conclude that, so long as the Communist delegations reject the two fundamental principles which we consider indispensable, further consideration and examination of the Korean question by the Conference would serve no useful purpose. We re-affirm our continued support for the objectives of the United Nations in Korea.

In accordance with the resolution of the General Assembly of the United Nations of August 28, 1953, the member states parties to this declaration will inform the United Nations concerning the proceedings at this Conference.

GENEVA, June 16, 1954—noon.

Dulte 185. Personal for Secretary from Under Secretary. My personal reactions on final Korean plenary may interest you and supplement our report Secto 451.<sup>1</sup> In first place, preparatory missionary work and drafting by our own people here was superbly done. It was like herding a flock of rabbits through a hole in a fence, and there were causes for extreme exasperation, but everyone remained patient and persuasive, and it paid off. We had most unusual degree of cooperation from Canada, Australia, and New Zealand even though their basic views on some important matters differed from ours. It might be worth while if you sent a brief and very personal message to Webb and Pearson expressing appreciation. You can thank Casey personally when in Washington. He is not the world's most brilliant statesman, but he loyally stepped into the breach at last minute when some loss of control of conference by Eden in Chair and bad blunder by Spaak seemed likely to leave the US alone in declining without further instructions to associate itself with a final resolution which as we saw it would in effect have made the Geneva Conference a self-perpetuating body outside the UN but including Red China.

Until Spaak allowed himself to be baited, the session went very much as planned for most of the more than six hours, and though the final exchanges between Spaak, Pyun, and others on our side furnished the Communists a good deal of amusement and an excellent propaganda line, the real issues on which the Allies are in some disagreement never came to the surface. On the whole it was about as good as could be expected, though not as good as I had hoped from the unusual success we had during the preceding two days in holding the sixteen together on tactics and wording of final declaration.

We have operated under one great disadvantage. The Communists knew, and indeed the whole press knew almost within minutes, every-

Said that "he could not stand" another rebuff of his efforts at conciliation and was concerned over Indochina situation. obliged to abide by Korean armistice, collapse of Geneva talks means armistice "invalidated" and ROK now feels free to take any action it wants when time comes. He also said that either Chinese Communists in North Korea should leave of their own free will or be forced to go. He turned down UN taking up Korean question, as UN has "no competence" judge it. Other delegations are disturbed and feel such remarks in public contradict 16-nation declaration.

2. In recent conversations with USDel and in meetings of 16, Pyun has expressed strong view that as far as ROK concerned, armistice should not be perpetuated, Geneva Conference is last on Korea, matter should not be referred to or taken up in UN, and report to UN by 15 should contain no recommendations. Pyun in drafting committee on declaration also objected strongly to all suggestions insert phrase "by peaceful means" in connection UN objectives Korea.

3. Pyun's remarks prompted in large part by his deep distress and consternation over Spaak's and Eden's acceptance Chou En-lai proposal closing hour final plenary. Pyun felt Spaak had "betrayed" 16 nation declaration. He explained his press remarks were no different those he had made in meetings of 16 and represented his firm convictions. Young pointed out his personal regret and disappointment such statements made public day after closing plenary characterized by good measure allied solidarity in declaration and successful efforts beat back clever Communist tactics obscure issues and prolong conference. Young pointed out Pyun's public statements would be interpreted as running counter to General Smith's statement in plenary on armistice which had successfully neutralized and turned back proposals of Molotov and Nam Il. Also pointed out to Pyun his statement was already being interpreted by press and other delegations as contradicting and undercutting declaration of 16. Pyun hoped answers to press would be helpful and not harmful.

2. Agreed to following procedure :

(a) No further meeting in Geneva ;

(b) Working draft will be sent 6 respective governments for comments ;

(c) Representatives of 6 will then meet in Washington finish preparation of report ;

(d) It will then be submitted to full committee of 15 and their governments for consideration and approval ;

(e) Completed report will be submitted to SYGUN at suitable time, i.e., 9th GA session.

Group felt this procedure might help keep 8th GA or special session Thailand resolution <sup>3</sup> from taking up Korean question.

3. Principal point today's discussion was armistice agreement. All representatives expressed considerable concern over Pyun's press remarks Wednesday on invalidation armistice. Owing to these remarks, Urrutia (Colombia) proposed and others supported adding General Smith's statement in 15th plenary (Secto 450 <sup>4</sup>) to report itself. They all stressed important report contains some reference to continued validity and effect of armistice agreement. Young reported briefly on Pyun's explanation and circumstances underlying his remarks (Secto 464 <sup>5</sup>) which had been made sharper in press versions than he had apparently intended. However, Young suggested and group agreed possible addition Smith's statement or short reference to armistice should be referred to delegations or governments, because it involved several important matters, before being incorporated in working draft at later stage.

4. Group also suggested ending report with hope expressed by Eden as chairman last plenary that day may soon come when task of conference can be carried through to successful conclusion. Agreed that this question, like one above, should be referred to delegations or governments of six and taken up later by Washington working group.

Smith-Molotov Meeting, Geneva, June 18, Evening: Editorial Note

This meeting, which was held at Smith's request, was reported to the Department of State in telegram Dulte 202, June 19, from Geneva. Most of the discussion dealt with Indochina; for the complete text of the telegram, see page 1189. Concerning Korea, Smith made the following brief comment:

“With regard to Korean phase, I had only to say that in reserving our position re final Chinese proposal had not implied to exclude Communist China from future discussions on Korean question. As matter of fact, China was belligerent there against UN and for practical reasons would have to be party to settlement.” (396.1 GE/6-1954)

[WASHINGTON,] June 23, 1954.

OUTLINE OF GENERAL SMITH'S REMARKS TO THE PRESIDENT AND BIPARTISAN CONGRESSIONAL GROUP, 8:30 A. M.

1. General Smith spoke first of the Korean phase of the Geneva Conference, in which the US was as one of the belligerents a principal. He said that the US had maintained its principal positions:

1. The authority of the UN.
2. Good relations with the ROK.
3. Good relations with the other UN nations participating in Korea.
4. Demonstration that the failure to reach agreement was the fault of the Soviets.

He expected that the US would report to the UN, and that the existing situation would continue until some further conferences were held.

[Here follows the remainder of the document which dealt with Indochina; for text, see volume XIII.]

Editorial Note

On November 11, 1954, the 15 member nations contributing to the United Nations effort in Korea (Australia, Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Philippines, Thailand, Turkey, the United Kingdom, and the United States) submitted their report on the Geneva Conference to the Ninth Session of the United Nations General Assembly. The text of the report is in United Nations document A/2786. It reiterated the points made in the Declaration of the Sixteen on United Nations authority and the need for free, supervised elections in Korea. noted that the Communist delegations rejected these points, and stated that the Geneva Conference should be regarded as the political conference referred to in Article 60 of the Korean Armistice Agreement and in United Nations General Assembly Resolution 711 (VII) of August 28, 1953. The report also specified that the failure of the Geneva Conference to solve the Korean question did not prejudice the armistice in Korea, which remained in effect. After debate, the Assembly adopted by a vote of 50 in favor (including the United States) to 5 opposed (Byelorussian S.S.R., Czechoslovakia, Poland, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.), with 4 abstentions (Burma, India, Indonesia, and Syria), Resolution 811 (IX), December 11, 1954, sponsored by the 15 powers, which approved the report on the Korean Political Conference.

For documentation on the report and its adoption by the United Nations General Assembly, see volume XV.

THE GENEVA CONFERENCE ON INDOCHINA
May 8–July 21, 1954

I. INTRODUCTION

A. NOTE ON SOURCES AND PRESENTATION OF MATERIAL FOR THE GENEVA CONFERENCE ON INDOCHINA

1. The nature of the Conference

The Indochina phase of the Geneva Conference began on May 8, the day after the fall of Dien Bien Phu, and continued until July 21. Although the line between the two sides was not as clearly drawn as it was in the Geneva Conference on Korea, the Geneva Conference on Indochina was essentially a two-sided affair. France and her allies, Cambodia, Laos, the State of Vietnam, the United Kingdom, and the United States, confronted three Communist Delegations, the Democratic Republic of Vietnam, the People's Republic of China, and the Soviet Union.

The negotiations which moved at a fairly steady rate of progress were carried out in formal plenary and restricted sessions and at many private meetings and social occasions. In addition to negotiating a settlement to the war in Indochina, the representatives of France, the United Kingdom, and the United States engaged in considerable discussion on the question of collective security in Southeast Asia.

While the plenary sessions were not open to the public, statements and proposals made in these sessions were summarized in press briefings and in most instances the texts were made available to the press. The restricted sessions were closed entirely and only a very small amount of information on the deliberations was made available to the press.

2. Presentation of the material

In compiling the documentation on the formal proceedings of the Geneva Conference on Indochina, telegraphic summaries were used to cover the plenary and restricted sessions, with footnote references to the verbatim or summary minutes of each session. Proposals and statements made in the sessions were handled in the same manner.

Except for the presentation of the final Conference documents, the documentation is set forth in strictly chronological order, with no topical breakdowns. Where telegraphic summaries of meetings were transmitted some time after the events, the documents were given an italic heading to show the time of the meeting and have been placed in the compilation at that time.

Because of the close interrelationship between the pre-Conference and Conference deliberations and the events in Indochina, volume XIII, Indochina, must be consulted. Additional relevant documentation is also included in volume VI, Western Europe; volume VII, Germany and Austria; and volume XII, East Asia and the Pacific.

3. Unpublished sources

The principal source of documentation in the Department of State central files is decimal file 396.1 GE (the Geneva Conference file). Some preliminary material is contained in file 396.1 BE (the Berlin Conference file), and additional papers are in the main decimal files for Indochina, 751G.00 and 751G.5.

Several Department of State lot files are important. The large, consolidated Conference file, lot 60 D 627, contains the best single collection of material on the Conference. Also of considerable value is a lot file of the Bureau of Far Eastern Affairs, FE files, lot 60 D 330, and a lot file of the Policy Planning Staff, PPS files, lot 65 D 101.

In addition, various groups of files, in particular the papers of John Foster Dulles, in the Dwight D. Eisenhower Presidential Library in Abilene, Kansas, contain considerable material on Indochina and the Geneva Conference.

4. Published sources

The minutes of the plenary and restricted sessions, proposals made by the delegations, and final documents adopted by the Conference on Indochina were printed in Conférence de Genève sur L'Indochine (8 mai-21 juillet 1954), issued by the Ministère des Affaires Etrangères of France in 1955. Many of the proposals and statements made in the sessions were printed in two British White Papers, Documents Relating to the Discussion of Korea and Indo-China at the Geneva Conference, April 27-June 15, 1954 (Cmd. 9186, June 1954) and Further Documents Relating to the Discussion of Indo-China at the Geneva Conference, June 16-July 21, 1954 (Cmd. 9239, August 1954).

Some materials which appear in this compilation were printed in the "Pentagon Papers"—United States Department of Defense, United States-Vietnam Relations, 1945-1967 (12 volumes; Washington, Government Printing Office, 1971).

A number of public pronouncements were printed in the Department of State Bulletin for 1954 and in the Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States: Dwight D. Eisenhower, 1954 (Washington, Government Printing Office, 1960).

Two unofficial accounts of the Indochina phase of the Geneva Conference are Philippe Devillers and Jean Lacouture, End of a War: Indochina, 1954 (New York, Frederick A. Praeger, 1969) and Robert

F. Randle, Geneva 1954: The Settlement of the Indochinese War (Princeton, Princeton University Press, 1969). In addition, three works which contain considerable information on the Conference are Allan W. Cameron, Viet-Nam Crisis: A Documentary History, Volume I, 1940-1956 (Ithaca, Cornell University Press, 1971); Anthony Eden's memoirs, Full Circle (Boston, Houghton Mifflin Company, 1960); and Dwight D. Eisenhower, Mandate for Change, 1953-1956 (Garden City, Doubleday, 1963). The Department of State assumes no responsibility for the accuracy of fact or interpretation in these unofficial publications.

WASHINGTON, February 19, 1954.

COMMUNIQUE ISSUED AT THE CONCLUSION OF THE QUADRIPARTITE MEETING OF THE FOUR FOREIGN MINISTERS AT BERLIN, FEBRUARY 18, 1954<sup>1</sup>

A meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the United States, France, the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union, Mr. John Foster Dulles, M. Georges Bidault, Mr. Anthony Eden, and M. Vyacheslav Molotov, took place in Berlin between January 25 and February 18, 1954. They reached the following agreements:

(A)

The Foreign Ministers of the United States, France, the United Kingdom and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, meeting in Berlin,

Considering that the establishment, by peaceful means, of a united and independent Korea would be an important factor in reducing international tension and in restoring peace in other parts of Asia,

Propose that a conference of representatives of the United States, France, the United Kingdom, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Chinese People's Republic, the Republic of Korea, the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, and other countries the armed forces of which participated in the hostilities in Korea and which desire to attend shall meet in Geneva on April 26 for the purpose of reaching a peaceful settlement of the Korean question;

Agree that the problem of restoring peace in Indochina will also be discussed at the conference, to which representatives of the United States, France, the United Kingdom, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Chinese People's Republic and other interested states will be invited.

It is understood that neither the invitation to, nor the holding of, the above-mentioned conference shall be deemed to imply diplomatic recognition in any case where it has not already been accorded.

[Here follows the portion of the communiqué dealing with disarmament, Germany, Austria, and European security; for the full text of the communiqué, see volume VII.]

SECRET PRIORITY

BERLIN, February 19, 1954—3 a. m.

Secto 177. For Robertson and Bonbright from McConaughy. We have frustrated Communist five-power effort and obtained agreement to conference on Korea essentially on our own terms.

I hope you can prevail on press not to portray Geneva conference erroneously as five-power gathering.

Unconditional commitment to discuss Indochina at same conference may give us trouble, although it does not compromise any basic principle and was made inescapable by pressure on Bidault. We have a difficult negotiation ahead of us.

Believe we should start now to insure participation of Thailand and Philippines in Indochina phase of conference as well as Korea phase. Early recognition of Associated States<sup>1</sup> by Philippines and if possible by other states of Southeast Asia increasingly imperative. Strong anti-Communist participation of Associated States in conference must be actively sought.

Arriving home 21st.

[WASHINGTON,] February 23, 1954.

Subject: Preparations for Geneva Political Conference.

Discussion:

To plan efficiently for the Geneva Conference, I suggest that you designate an officer of the Department to coordinate all preparations. Perhaps Douglas MacArthur would be the appropriate man.

I would also recommend that two small task forces be set up for substantive preparations. One, on Korea, might be steered by UNP, with NA, CA and EE participating. The other, on Indo-China, could be steered by PSA, with CA, WE, EE and UNP participating.

The Division of International Conferences will provide the usual administrative support.

<sup>1</sup> Drafted by Popper of UNP.

Recommendation:

That you approve the foregoing designations.<sup>2</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

PARIS, February 24, 1954—7 p. m.

3050. Repeated information Saigon 332. Foreign Office made following comment on opening session permanent committee High Council French Union February 23:

Principal event was presentation by Bidault of developments at Berlin leading to Geneva conference and assurances given by him in presence Coty (presiding) to representatives Associated States that French position for Geneva would be prepared with concurrence Associated States and that no decision would be taken at Geneva without their approval. Representatives Associated States appeared well satisfied with Bidault's report and results obtained by him re Geneva.

Question participation Associated States at Geneva not discussed at yesterday's meeting nor is it expected this subject will be decided during balance committee session. Although French Government position this regard likely be determined in large measure by US views, Foreign Office inclined view participation Associated States undesirable since this could lead seating Viet Minh. Associated States aware this possibility and may well not press for participation for this reason.

Memorandum by Edmund A. Gullion of the Policy Planning Staff to the Director of That Staff (Bowie)

[WASHINGTON,] February 24, 1954.

Subject: Negotiations on Far Eastern Questions at Geneva.

In this paper I explain my misgivings, some of which I know you share, about the effect of the announcement of Geneva and about the possible results of a negotiated settlement in Indochina. A suggestion for further discussion with the French is included at the end of the paper.

I. The Impact of the Announcement

1. In the United States

During the Berlin Conference, public and Congressional opinion at home was occupied with the discussion of how to strengthen the effort in Indochina (the O'Daniel Mission;<sup>1</sup> Secretary Wilson's press statement, etc.). The announcement of imminent negotiations comes to many as a surprise.

The inconsistency cannot be entirely explained by saying that fighting will go on until a better bargaining position is obtained: the conference is to take place before any appreciable improvement in the French Union military position can occur.

There may be some difficult questions to answer to Congress or elsewhere with respect to the purposes of our aid to France. We decided to increase our contribution by another $385,000,000 on the basis of French assurances that this should enable us to win a decisive victory, not merely to "improve our bargaining position".

2. In France

It will be very difficult to mobilize French opinion in full support of the war once it has been relaxed and beguiled by the prospects of a compromise peace. M. Bidault may believe, and no doubt has told us, that he cannot afford to appear unreceptive to any possibility of ending the war, but I believe the mere announcement of negotiation will set in motion forces which cannot be reversed. We and M. Bidault are both embarked upon a slippery slope.

It seems to me that the French military effort in Indochina (the Laniel-Navarre Plan)<sup>2</sup> has been seriously compromised. Its objectives have been subtly modified to the attainment of a "better bargaining position" rather than a real victory. Although the French Army is a professional one, its will for the offensive is bound to be somewhat inhibited by the prospect of negotiations.

It may have been argued that negotiations could be carried on without giving up any vital position in Indochina, and that this was necessary in order to ensure French ratification of EDC.<sup>3</sup> I fear that the opposite may be the case. With the prospect of the conference and an

end of the war, the French may defer all urgency in EDC. And if the war in Indochina should be settled, I believe that the French, instead of building up EDC or NATO, will go in for a period of "normalcy" and a general relaxing of effort.

We must also reckon with the effect on France of offers from India to mediate or to promote an armistice.

3. In Vietnam

It is in Indochina where the announcement of the negotiations is of critical importance. Here I think we should be prepared for trouble, including military defections and the appearance of islands of armed neutralism. Although the Vietnamese who have collaborated with the French and ourselves have for years suspected that the French would "sell them out", I fear this development has taken them by surprise. They are not likely to be impressed with the theory that negotiations in order to conciliate French parliamentary opinion can be undertaken without loss to themselves or to their territory. Regardless of the outcome of negotiations, the Vietnamese are bound to fear either

- a) the emergence of coalition governments eventually dominated by the Communists, or
- b) a partition.

Leaders and organized groups will now begin to make their arrangements in accordance with the way in which such an outcome would affect them. Those who have worked with us and the French may scurry for cover in fear of Viet Minh retribution; others may defect to the Viet Minh, and still others, perhaps the Cao Dai, may decide to play a lone and desperate game against the Vietnamese, the French, or the Americans who would urge a negotiated peace.

Most Vietnamese would prefer free elections or some accommodation with Ho Chi Minh to a partition of the country. In the latter, they would see the negation of independence, which to them has been tantamount to unification of the country. Moreover, they would fear the transformation of their country into another Korea if the UN attempted to guarantee the line against the north.

I am not sure, however, that partition would not be the French choice if public opinion forced them to sue for peace.

- a) It has an historical basis, both post-Potsdam and in the colonial era.
- b) A beachhead could be preserved in the hope that the world situation might improve, or the Communist Chinese regime might fall or something else might turn up somewhere.
- c) The principal French economic and cultural preserves would be retained. (The looming of partition is one possible explanation for the composition of the government recently installed under Prince Buoloc [Buu Loc] with a majority of Cochin-Chinese at a time when the new Cabinet was expected to be one of national union, headed by men from the north.)

The effect of these prospects upon the formation of the Vietnamese Army and upon the process of incorporating in it irregulars and the troops of the armed sects is obvious. At best the Army will become increasingly passive, looking upon itself merely as a guarantee against French return; at worst, elements of it may point their guns the wrong way.

II. The Hypotheses of Negotiation

In preparing our position for the negotiations, we must be fully aware of the possible pitfalls in the various hypotheses. As I see them, they are the following:

1. Cessation of arms aid by both sides

This might emerge as the minimum area of agreement, or the only proposition upon which the Chinese, the Viet Minh and the French might agree, together with whatever representatives of the Associated States the French are able to persuade to be present. It might be considered independently of territorial settlements, political arrangements, or supervised elections. Our side or the French might propose cessation of Chinese aid without promising to halt aid on our side. The Viet Minh are most unlikely to accept such a proposition unless it is accompanied by other very solid concessions in the way of political or territorial settlements. Let us assume, therefore, that arms aid would stop on both sides. All other things being equal, I am not confident that our side could win. The Viet Minh fought the war very effectively without Chinese aid for some three or four years, using mere pickup stocks. From about 1950 on, our aid to the Associated States was scores of times greater in tonnage than Chinese aid to the Viet Minh; we had more men under arms, better communications, and a great food supply base in our territory. Yet all this superiority has not been translated into offensive gains by our side. Moreover, the Viet Minh travels "light" while we travel "heavy". If our arms aid ceased, the war machine in Indochina might clank to a halt for want of gasoline, bombs, ammunition, spare parts and servicing.

I stress this point because in the various hypothetical peace settlements many persons are prone to assume that if only Chinese aid were interrupted, our problems would be solved. Even if arms aid were stopped, we should make certain that this actually meant a closed frontier. As it is, the enemy can make very effective use of the fire-power he has, because he has a secure base and a line of communications in China itself.

2. An overall settlement, probably including stipulations with respect to cessation of aid

a) This might take the form of a cease-fire to be followed by an interval of recuperation and consolidation, to be followed in turn by supervised elections. There might be either a provisional coalition government, or the elections might result in a coalition government. To my mind, this is the most dangerous possibility for us while it is the solution most likely to be favored in extremis by the Associated States, or whoever claims to speak for them. Here it must be recalled that, unfortunately, to a great number of Indochinese in both loyal and rebel zones, the French are still the principal enemy. A real understanding of the nature of the Viet Minh or of the changes that have come over the Viet Minh since 1945 has only slowly gained headway. The spirit of the Vietnamese Army is still not such as would drive it to exterminate its compatriots in the Viet Minh Army. The consequences of this psychology, the enormously heightened prestige of Ho Chi Minh as the victor and a desire to ride with the "wave of the future" would, in my opinion, promptly lead to consolidation of all of Vietnam under the Communists, with the subversion of all of South-east Asia to follow thereafter.

b) "Buying Time"

Obviously, our side would strive for an arrangement which would defer elections until we had been able to make effective propaganda and until arms and troops were disposed in the best possible positions. We would try to phase out any withdrawal of French troops over a long period. Yet we must not delude ourselves that time would not be working equally strongly (if not more strongly) for the enemy for the reasons already cited. Moreover, the Viet Minh are apt to make stringent stipulations about the withdrawal of French troops as the price of any settlement. The French would find it hard to resist especially since they know that the dwindling rearguard will always be in mortal danger.

3. A Partition of Indochina

I have already cited some of the consequences of this solution.

The first problem would be to achieve any basic line of demarcation. If this were to run, say, along the 16th Parallel, (which was the line dividing the Chinese Zone from the Franco-British Zone, post-Potsdam), it would leave above the line the key to the whole of South-east Asia in the Tonkin Delta; the most numerous and warlike part of the population; the north of Laos with its contacts with the Thai areas in the Shan States of Burma, in Yunnan and in Thailand; the upper courses of the Mekong and the principal communications links with China. If, on the other hand, an attempt was made to freeze the zones of control along lines coinciding with present military occupation, the result would be an impossible patch of enclaves, of pockets within pockets, with the advantage clearly with the Viet Minh.

There is no neat line of demarcation like the battle line in Korea. Nor does the parallel with Korea hold good in any important way. In Korea, there were 20 million South Korean south of the line and only four or five million north of it. In Indochina, the population is broken up about evenly with approximately eleven million people on either side of a ubiquitous and indeterminate bamboo curtain.

While it is true that the partition formula would offer the vague hope of later improvements in the Asian or world situation, it would be considered as the ultimate sell-out by most Vietnamese. After a period in which all of Vietnam on both sides was broken down into many warring groups with divergent interests, the whole population on both sides would settle down for a century of effort, if need be, to throw out whoever was trying to hold them apart. If this were the UN, it would doubtless mean that US troops would be involved: if US troops were involved, we could expect Chinese involvement. Clearly there is actually little to choose between this catastrophe and the catastrophe of an overall settlement in which all of Indochina might fall at one time as a unit.

It will be apparent at this point that a question arises as to the wisdom of completely identifying US policies with French policies in Asia. While for four short years they have coincided in many particulars, they are not necessarily identical. We, not the French, would probably be the principal sufferers if we are held responsible for a multilateral partition of Indochina, completely losing what credit we have remaining in Asia. It might be better, if such a catastrophic settlement must be made, that the responsibility be borne by the French alone and be undertaken in direct negotiations with Ho Chi Minh.

4. Neutralization and Demilitarization

It seems to me most unlikely that the Communists would accept such a proposal. They have never yet agreed to pull back their zone of control beyond the line occupied by Communist forces. Even if they did accept such a proposal, we could expect the Viet Minh Communists eventually to take over control. The example of a Red Indochina would have a powerful impact in Southeast Asia. Of course, neutralization would mean a fairly rapid withdrawal of French troops.

Presumably demilitarization and neutralization would have to be insured and inspected on a continuous basis by the UN or some collective body. In this case, we ought to put the Asian powers to the fore rather than ourselves.

This neutralization solution is possibly the least dangerous formula but the most unlikely to be realized.

IV [sic]. A Settlement in Indochina in the Framework of a General Far Eastern Settlement

It is conceivable that a settlement free from some of these overriding objections could be reached in Indochina if we were to offer the Chinese Communists or the Viet Minh sufficient inducements outside of Indochina. However, this course seems politically almost impossible for the United States and may lose us more than we stand to lose even in Indochina.

Which of the following would a US administration which has condemned Yalta and the loss of China be prepared to grant?

- a) recognition of Red China
- b) more trade with Red China
- c) scuttling of Formosa
- d) abandonment of EDC
- e) abstention from all arms and matériel aid in Asia
- f) abandonment of thesis of unification of Korea

Merely to cite these questions is to expose the difficulties. Moreover, even if we were to offer China trade and recognition as the price for ending the Viet Minh war, it is by no means certain that they could achieve it.

In one form or another, the present war is an expression of rebellion against white rule which has been going on for some 80 years with intermediate periods of quasi-pacification. If the Communist Chinese undertook to end the war, it would not merely have to close the frontier, but take more active measures against the Viet Minh.

This, of course, would for a time mean that the main menace of Communist China expansion had been exorcised—but it is a necessary corrective to any exaggerated hopes we may cherish.

Moreover, there is no assurance that China would keep this or any other bargain. The situation in South Asia is so fluid that “indigenous” movements would always carry on the struggle for Communism while Peiping and Moscow ostensibly disavow it.

An enlarged frame of reference for the negotiations may include still other possibilities. It is conceivable that the Soviet Union and the Communist Chinese might wish to trade unification of Korea for advantages in Southeast Asia. This might give them as a bonus a chance of splitting France and the United States. The transformation of the Korean stalemate into apparent total victory for the UN through the restoration of the integrity of Korea would be a difficult inducement for this country to resist—and it might be presented in the form of a proposal for free elections in both Korea and Indochina.

Confronted with this perhaps most dangerous of all the hypotheses, we must carefully weigh up the relative importance for us of Korea and Indochina. In my opinion, the loss of Indochina would be much more menacing to the free world than the loss of Korea.

V. Where do we go from here?

1. We should arrive in this government at an understanding of the possible consequences of a negotiated peace. Such a consideration should also take up the question of whether we ought to be a party to any negotiated peace in Indochina. It may be better for us for the Conference in Geneva to end inconclusively than to put our signature to a partition or "sell-out" of our Asian allies.

2. At the earliest possible moment we should consult with the French, persuading them to take the initiative in explaining their thinking on the substantive part of the negotiations. Unless they can reveal to us some alternative more feasible than those discussed above, we should make clear to the French our firm opposition to a settlement on any such basis. We should try to persuade the French that the war should go on, using whatever inducements we can.

3. If the French are determined to negotiate, we should decide: (a) whether this should be done unilaterally; or (b) multilaterally, and with what degree of responsibility for ourselves.

My own recommendation would be that the war in Indochina should continue but that we should raise our sights with respect to needs in manpower, and in the political basis for sincere Vietnamese participation. If, in spite of everything the French should decide unilaterally to quit the war (which I for one do not believe they can or will do) I should recommend not a compromise peace on the bases listed above, but an internationalization of the war under the UN, with the participation of US forces, if necessary, recognizing that the Chinese might retaliate massively.

Memorandum by the Deputy Director of the Executive Secretariat (Kitchen) to the Under Secretary of State (Smith)

[WASHINGTON,] February 27, 1954.

The Secretary has designated Douglas MacArthur to coordinate preparations for the Geneva Conference.

The Secretary has also approved a recommendation originally made by David Key that two "Task Forces" be established to begin substantive preparations. It is expected that Mr. Kenneth Young will head the group making preparations on the Korean item and Mr. Philip Bonsal the group making preparations on the Indochina item.

A meeting has been scheduled for today at 12:30 in the Secretary's office to discuss preparations and receive additional guidance from the Secretary.<sup>1</sup> In particular, the following should come under discussion:

(1) MacArthur anticipates that virtually no progress can be expected on the Korean items and the Communist will not concede anything. Therefore, he believes the question of the designation of a senior officer to advise the Secretary on Indochina (and you if you succeed the Secretary at Geneva), is of vital importance. This person must have a balance of experience and knowledge divided between the Franco-EDC complex and the Indochina-Communist military drive complex. It has been suggested that some one like Ambassador Alex Johnson would be ideal on Korea and what is needed is someone comparable to him on Indochina.

(2) The use of UN administrative and technical machinery and the cost of this operation has been discussed by Mr. Key, Mr. Popper and others in UNA. There is agreement that we should make as full use as possible of the UN machinery both because of the magnitude of the Conference and to avoid procedural squabbles between the two "sides".

The question of whether the entire UN membership, the membership participating in the Conference, or just the four host powers should pay the cost of the Conference has also been considered. In general, Mr. Key is inclined to believe that having the four hosts pay the costs (estimated at approximately $250,000 or $80,000 each) would be preferable to an assessment of either participants in the Conference or the UNA membership since the establishment of an assessment against Red China and North Korea is bound to have political implications.

(3) The question of participation in the Conference by small nation belligerents such as the Netherlands and Greece has also been raised. Doc Matthews has reported that the Dutch have indicated they would accept our guidance on this if we desired to reduce participation to keep the Conference more flexible. The Greeks have also inquired as to our attitude.

Understanding here is that initiative for organization Indochina phase of Korean political conference is primarily French responsibility just as United States has such responsibility for Korean phase. On specific subject of participants in Indochina phase there is involved (a) agreement between France, US and UK with French views being given major weight and (b) discussion with USSR of tripartite position and resulting quadripartite agreement on invitations to other participants. It would be our hope that the taking of these steps could be deferred until meeting of Foreign Ministers of France, UK, USSR and US at Geneva on April 26. Invitations could then be issued for Indochina discussions to take place some weeks later. SECRET

In addition to the points covered in this morning's Staff Summary concerning preparations for the Geneva Conference, the following emerged from Saturday's meeting<sup>1</sup> with the Secretary on this subject:

1. The Secretary's basic approach is that this Conference, particularly as it relates to Indo-China, is a holding action in order to provide time for the French to ratify the EDC and to permit a favorable military build-up and execution of the "Navarre plan". For this reason, the Secretary does not wish us to approach the French and the British with a view to settling as many procedural and substantive problems in advance as possible, but rather to merely obtain the views of those governments and indicate that we believe it best for most problems to be settled by direct conversation after the Secretary has arrived at Geneva.

2. Top priority is to be given to consulting with the Government of Korea with a view to the establishment of a mutually acceptable position or line of action on Korea<sup>2</sup> which we will then discuss with the British and French.

3. The Secretary wants all participating countries to contribute to the cost of the Conference. He does not want the Four Powers to act as "hosts".

<sup>2</sup> For documentation on pre-Geneva Conference discussions between the United States and the Republic of Korea, see pp. 14 ff.

4. The Secretary believes that the group should "hire" the UN physical facilities and secretariat at Geneva for the administration and conduct of the Conference.

5. We do not expect that all smaller nations contributing forces to the Korean fighting will be represented at the Conference nor do we wish to encourage their participation at this time.

In connection with plans for the Conference, Mr. MacArthur indicated that he had considerable doubt as to the desirability of proceeding at this time toward the conclusion of a Mutual Security Pact with the Government of China which had been proposed earlier in the week by Mr. Robertson.<sup>3</sup> Both Livy Merchant and David Key had indicated their doubt in writing on the staff study on Friday. The Secretary instructed that this matter be turned over to Bob Bowie for submission to the National Security Council's Planning Board for consideration. He hoped to have the NSC Staff's reaction in ten days upon his return from Caracas.<sup>4</sup> Apparently his intention was that the State Department should submit the question without a recommendation. He asked that the matter be handled with extreme caution because any leak would cause controversial discussion and many difficulties would arise as a consequence. Mr. Bowie has been informed of the Secretary's instructions.

[WASHINGTON,] March 2, 1954.

Subject: Korean and Indochinese Conferences in April.

Participants: His Excellency, Pote Sarasin, Ambassador of Thailand
Walter S. Robertson—FE
Kenneth P. Landon—PSA

The Thai Ambassador called at his request and said that he had been instructed by his Government to inform the Department of State that it accepted the invitation to attend the Korean Conference in Geneva in April and that it desired to know what would be the U.S. approach to the conference in terms of policy objectives. The Ambassador was informed that the Department would pursue the well-known policy objective of achieving an independent, unified, peaceful Korea, which has always been the objective of the United Nations. The Thai Ambassador expressed some doubts as to the possible achievement of this objective and asked if the United States had in mind lesser levels of achievement with which it might be satisfied. He was informed that no lesser objectives were being considered. The Ambassador was further informed that the housekeeping arrangements as to costs and other details were being worked out.

The Ambassador then turned to the subject of Indochina and asked if the participants in the Korean Conference would automatically deliberate on Indochina. The Ambassador was informed that the Department was waiting for the views of the French but that our tentative thinking was that there might be two separate conferences with different nations represented and that the two conferences might be held simultaneously. The Ambassador was reminded that the original statement issued regarding Indochina indicated that "interested states" would participate and presumably by "interested states" was meant not only the principal powers named such as France, the U.K., the U.S., Communist China and USSR but also the Associated States.

The Thai Ambassador said that his Government was interested because of its shared geographic boundaries with Indochina and inquired whether the Thai Government might send a representative as an observer. He was assured that this request would be given consideration.

He said there was no hurry since Franco-Vietnam talks<sup>2</sup> would continue through most of March. Perhaps last ten days before Geneva conference met would be sufficient time.

3035. Your 3149 repeated Saigon 346.<sup>2</sup> Secretary's position regarding desirability inclusion Associated States in Indochina phase Geneva conference based upon following:

(1) Analogy with Korean situation. South Koreans and North Koreans were included with question "recognition" specifically reserved.

(2) Absence of Associated States would mean conference would be held without major "interested states." US has recognized Associated States along with 35 other countries, has advocated their membership in UN and has stressed defense their independence as equal sovereign members of French Union as objective US support current war effort. Department believes strongly Associated States should participate in any discussion of restoration of peace in Indochina. Effect of their absence on public opinion here and presumably also in Indochina would be highly adverse.

(3) Discussion from which Associated States were absent and which was confined to four Berlin powers plus Communist China would in effect be five power conference on Indochina. We joined with UK and French in rejecting "five power conference" concept at Berlin.

(4) While Department recognizes disadvantages presence Ho's representatives at Geneva, Department considers this more or less inevitable consequence of French acceptance of negotiations without any prior conditions.

(5) It appears essential to Department that there be present at Indochina discussions Asians speaking for people of area fighting against Communist domination. We cannot envisage discussion where Communist China would be only Asian country represented.

Department does not plan make known its position except in context discussions which it is assumed French will initiate.

1597. Repeated information Paris 491, Moscow 5. As yet there is no evidence that French are exerting pressure on Associated States to refrain from participating Indochina phase Geneva Conference (Deptel 1570 repeated Paris 2988<sup>1</sup>), but I have no doubt that it is Bidault's settled policy to exclude them from conference if possible.

I saw De Jean before his departure this morning for Paris. He indicated desire of French Government that initial phase of Indochina conference be confined to discussions by the four powers. (cf. Deptel 2986 sent Paris repeated London 4450, Moscow 550, Saigon 1569.<sup>2</sup>) De Jean said that principal objective was to get Communist China to cease aiding Viet Minh, and that if this were main topic for discussion he saw no reason why three Associated States should participate. He likewise sought to argue that situation here differs from that in Korea since in Indochina Viet Minh permeate body politic, whereas in Korea there is a hard and fast line of demarcation between north and south.

Latter argument of course has nothing to do with seating of Associated States at forthcoming conference, but does indicate that De Jean feels under compulsion to justify exclusion of these governments from Geneva Conference if at all possible. Such a policy we feel is foolish and will merely serve to confirm suspicions here and elsewhere in Asia that Associated States are not in fact independent. We thoroughly concur in Department's opinion Associated States should be present as full participants at Geneva.

De Jean arrives Paris March 6 and I suggested utility of his getting in touch with Achilles.

Quat, Minister Defense, departed same airplane this morning with De Jean. He whispered to me that prospect of Geneva Conference has shaken Vietnamese people and in particular has had a disastrous effect on morale in Vietnamese armed forces.

In line with its responsibility under the Berlin agreement, United States extended invitations on February 24<sup>4</sup> to "The Korean Political Conference," scheduled to begin Geneva April 26. The Secretary of Defense (Wilson) to the Secretary of State

WASHINGTON, March 5, 1954.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: There have been several discussions between representatives of our respective Departments regarding preparation for the Geneva Conference and the organization necessary for the expeditious development of position papers and other arrangements for the Conference. This Department is interested in assisting the Department of State in every way possible in preparing for the Conference.

It is believed that Department of Defense participation can be most effective if the informal views of this Department and necessary military information are available to the Department of State during the preparation of position papers. In this way, also, interested offices in the Department of Defense will be aware of positions being developed and final processing can be handled rapidly. Further, it is believed that the Geneva Conference is of such importance to the interests and the security of the United States in the Far East area that maximum effort should be devoted by all interested agencies to the development of the United States positions for the Conference.

Accordingly, it is recommended that consideration be given to the following procedure.

(a) Establishment of a steering committee consisting of senior Department of State and Defense representatives through which all position papers developed by working groups would be processed.

(b) Establishment of two working groups consisting of working level representatives of both Departments, one working group developing positions on Korea and the second working group, positions on Indochina. Various ad hoc committees as may be deemed appropriate would consider specific items in each area.

(c) The papers as developed in the working groups would be processed through the steering committee. After approval by the steering committee, they would be cleared formally by the Departments of State and Defense.

If you concur in the above suggestions, the names of Defense Department representatives on the steering committee and working groups will be furnished you.<sup>1</sup>

Sincerely yours,

C. E. WILSON

<sup>1</sup> In a letter of Mar. 9, Acting Secretary of State Walter B. Smith informed Secretary Wilson that the Department of State was in agreement with his suggestions as to the procedures for State-Defense coordination and that the Secretary had designated MacArthur as Coordinator for the Geneva Conference, Young as Chairman of the Working Group on Korea, and Bonsal as Chairman of the Working Group on Indochina. PARIS, March 6, 1954.

3240. Repeated information Saigon 362, London unnumbered. Summary highlights Laniel statement Assembly March 5 follow: <sup>1</sup>

In recalling that the Assembly's Ordre du Jour October 27 had called on Government to conclude by negotiation a general pacification in Asia, Laniel stated that "my government is the one that has publicly formulated the clearest statements on the French will to negotiate. I said it October 27, on November 12 at Tribune Council of Republic, I stated that, no more than the Americans in Korea, we did not demand an unconditional surrender of the adversary in order to speak with him and that France would be happy on the contrary to welcome a diplomatic solution of conflict. November 24 at Assembly Tribune I stated that we were ready to discuss tomorrow, in agreement with Associated States, reasonable 'cease-fire' proposals transmitted to us by adversary." In labelling Ho's responses as "propaganda gestures destined neutralize effect of statements French Government", Laniel stated that "nothing since that date has given us reason to believe that any change in true intentions of Viet Minh has taken place."

In stating that "happily the French effort looking toward negotiations was not especially oriented towards conversations with the adversary", Laniel stated that he had indicated in each of his statements that "there were reasons for motives of hope on the Chinese Communist and Soviet side as well as on American side in view of a diplomatic solution." Laniel then posed following questions "does not China have need of peace for internal consolidation? Can it not fear that concrete advantage from occidental powers in return for its contribution toward restoration of peace? Does not the search for an agreement with the occidental powers on pacification of Asia respond to wishes of Soviets in keeping with its desire for withdrawal of American troops from Korea and perhaps its apprehension regarding any independent initiative of China in FE and particularly SEA? As for great democracies, their presence at these negotiations would be not only valuable but essential, for it would multiply the chances for an agreement. Such has been the orientation of our diplomacy for some time. No occasion has been lost either at Washington or Bermuda <sup>2</sup> to have our point of view prevail progressively. It is at Berlin that our prime objective has been attained, and under the best conditions, i.e., in full solidarity with our allies, thanks to effective action Foreign Minister”.

“Question of IC can be approached at same time as Korea at Geneva and we have the possibility, which we consider basic, of inviting the Associated States.”

Although stressing importance of Geneva in preparing for a general pacification in Asia, Laniel stated “we will not, however, have the right—when men die on the field of battle—of neglecting, if in the interval an occasion presents itself to put an end to hostilities in an honorable and effective manner. On this principle I am in perfect agreement with what has been said at this Tribune. It is not because the war has lasted seven years that we will have the right to neglect a chance to end it one day sooner.”

Although paying tribute laudable motives of Nehru in launching his cease-fire proposal, Laniel stated that Nehru’s proposal<sup>3</sup> could not be considered an offer of mediation but that it did pose a question to which it was necessary to reply. “Our reply is dictated by a main preoccupation, that of the security of our Expeditionary Corps, the French and the friends of France during the perhaps long and [apparent omission] “we consider as unacceptable any proposal, which, under color of an immediate ‘cease-fire’ would begin by putting in peril our soldiers and our friends without our having obtained sufficient guarantees to assure the development of a normal negotiation and the chances for a durable peace.” These guarantees Laniel outlined as follows: “(1) The total evacuation of Laos by troops having infiltrated there; (2) although military situation in Cambodia different, analogous precautions would be required there; (3) in northern Vietnam a sort of no man’s land would have to be created around the periphery of the Tonkin Delta and the Viet Minh units that have infiltrated the Delta would have to withdraw under strictly controlled evacuation; (4) in central Vietnam the Viet Minh units would have to withdraw to delimited zones in such manner as to guarantee security of our troops and the people; (5) in southern Vietnam, the Viet Minh forces should be disarmed or evacuated. To all these guarantees ought to be added other measures of security and control designed to assure that with suspension of fighting our adversaries cannot carry out certain activities, or proceed to reinforcement or regroupment, as was the case in Korea during the long period of conversations.”

“A suspension of fighting then will only be the result of carefully conducted negotiations for which we will be ready very shortly when we will have carried out the necessary studies with the Associated States, negotiations which are presented at Geneva under the best conditions possible thanks to the efforts of our diplomacy. If before Geneva we receive a concrete proposal, it would be examined in the state of mind that I have just defined."

In pointing out that he had responded to question giving rise to debate, Laniel stated he would like to add that "today, these polemics ought to cease. We are unanimous in effect in wishing henceforth to settle the conflict by way of [garbled group]."

Laniel stated that "it goes without saying that our military effort ought not to be relaxed" prior to Geneva "since it is thanks to it that we have obliged the adversary to change his speech, if not his conduct, since it is thanks to it that we have adversary in a position where he cannot hope for a victory by force."

In emphasizing that it would be necessary to maintain discretion in preparing for Geneva, Laniel concluded by stating that "a peace negotiated respecting national honor, the liberty of individuals and the security of the Expeditionary Corps, is our objective. We are at the hour of hope. In the name of France, I salute all the combatants, of the Associated States and the French army, who, by their sacrifices of yesterday and tomorrow, make possible this hope."

NOTES ON A MINIMUM POSITION REGARDING INDOCHINA FOR THE GENEVA CONFERENCE

The U.S. objective for Indochina at Geneva is presumably to avoid Communist control of the area and, as in the case of Korea, to secure the control of the entire area by indigenous non-Communist elements capable of sustaining themselves against internal subversion. Although the U.S. would be pleased with governments in Indochina firmly aligned on the side of the free world, the U.S. would presumably not reject governments of the nature of India or Indonesia the foreign policy of which would be neutralist.

<sup>1</sup> Bonsal in a covering memorandum to Robertson indicated that the attached paper was "designed to serve generally as a working paper in order to stimulate discussion. It will not be considered as representing Departmental views." (396.1 GE/3-854)

The principal obstacle to the achievement of this goal whether by military means or at the conference table is the existence of eight well equipped, trained and undefeated Vietminh divisions of high morale and under complete Communist control. Until and unless these divisions are defeated or disarmed and dispersed, any peace negotiation or cease fire in Viet-Nam can result only in a Communist take-over sooner or later, probably sooner. Any formula of coalition or of territorial division, any procedure of elections or plebiscite would be powerless to deter the overwhelming political and military significance of these eight divisions with their great prestige of years of successful resistance against France, Viet-Nam and the support furnished by the United States.

Our side will not obtain at the conference table a united non-Communist Viet-Nam, any more than we will obtain a united non-Communist Korea unless we make clear to the enemy that, in the event of a breakdown of negotiations, our side is not only able but willing to do what is necessary to secure the objective by force of arms.

In the case of Korea, it is almost certain that we will not obtain a satisfactory basis through negotiation for a united, free Korea. It is perhaps equally certain that the failure of negotiations will not result in a resumption of hostilities. In other words, the Communists will continue to hold North Korea as they have since 1946 while the Republic of Korea holds the South, as it has for the past few years. This status quo will probably continue to be guaranteed by the allies and sponsors of the respective Korean governments. Korea, like Germany, will remain a helpless symbol of the world division until a basic change in the dynamics of that division takes place.

In the case of Indochina, there is no status quo susceptible of being formalized in the Korean or German manner. Throughout the area, the major centers of political and economic power have remained firmly in French Union hands through seven years of war. On the other hand, the enemy controls perhaps half the population of Viet-Nam militarily and politically. A military defeat or withdrawal of French Union forces would mean sooner or later the control of the country by the indigenous Communist dominated Vietminh army and hence by Communist China. Whether this result was achieved by plebiscite, or through a temporary division of the country with the Communists holding only the North at first or through a coalition government would be of little eventual importance. This particular conflict, because of its very nature, must end with either a winner or a loser; there can be no tie as in Korea.

Therefore, the major trump card in our side's hand at Geneva would be a recognized military ability and determination to defeat the enemy's regular armed forces in the field. To the extent that we and the enemy believe our side possesses that ability and determination, to that extent will successful negotiation be feasible. Conversely, to the extent that the enemy believes that our side's will to fight on to victory is waning, to that extent will negotiation be the equivalent of capitulation.

Our whole policy toward Indochina has been based upon this central objective, that of helping to create, maintain and demonstrate a Franco-Vietnamese ability and will to win this war. Our current efforts in support of the Laniel-Navarre Plan are further steps in a policy steadily followed, in spite of disappointments, since 1950 when the Chinese Communists revitalized the Vietminh and when, but for the magnificent leadership of de Lattre, Hanoi might have fallen to the enemy.

Laniel, Bidault and Pleven would probably agree with this diagnosis. Yet they are confronted in the French Assembly and within their own government with a powerful movement for peace at practically any price. Those who lead this movement argue that even the degree of military progress envisaged by Navarre is unattainable, that France can no longer bear the burden in spite of increased American help, that the Vietnamese non-Communist elements are not making and never will make the necessary effort, that these elements do not support the French Union concept and that some way must be found of ending what they term a hopeless struggle. They do not advocate any particular type of settlement nor do they face the fact that any settlement leaving the Communist army intact would be a victory for the Communists. But they will fall and fall hard for the most specious type of proposal which may be advanced by the Communists at Geneva.

It must be recognized that the agreement in Berlin in February that there should be negotiations about Indochina at Geneva has improved the position of the French Government and made it practically certain that that Government will take measures, including military measures, to improve its negotiating position for Geneva. There should be full agreement in Saigon, Paris and Washington on fullest and most energetic pursuit of the Laniel-Navarre Plan particularly at a time when the enemy may also be expected to do his utmost to improve his military position in anticipation of the Geneva negotiations.

Another element in the situation which must be recognized is the fact that, in French eyes, the decision to discuss Indochina in an international framework represents a considerable triumph for French diplomacy. When the French recall the negative or evasive stand on this subject taken by the Secretary and by General Smith last summer,<sup>2</sup> they undoubtedly experience a sense of gratification at their own powers of persuasiveness and a hopeful confidence that those powers may still have some successful scope in directions related to the Indochina problem.

In this connection, there is no doubt that the Communists will exploit to the utmost factors which may divide the United States from its allies and pillory us in the spotlight of war-weary French public opinion as the country whose intransigence is responsible for continued bloodshed. This will be done by suggesting that Communist China's influence could be brought to bear on the side of an honorable peace in Indochina, a peace that would, in appearance at least, maintain the principle of the French Union and hence justify the French in their own eyes, if, in return, France could find a way to support such C.P.R. objectives as recognition, membership in the U.N. and perhaps even support for a formula which would eventually destroy the Chinese Nationalists on Formosa. Neither the French nor the British would be as unwilling to make concessions on these points as we are. Our intransigence on these points could conceivably give the French a basis for assuming a greater liberty of action than we would wish in dealing with the C.P.R. and the USSR in regard to Indochina.

In appraising the French pre-Geneva position, it must be borne in mind that no French Government, regardless of its private opinion, can express public scepticism regarding negotiations to end the Indochina conflict. The concept of negotiations can no more be rejected in Paris than it was in Washington with regard to Korea. A hopeful attitude must be maintained—a willingness to examine proposals made by the other side. Prime Minister Laniel's response to Nehru's suggestion of a cease-fire is a useful indication of the type of action it may be hoped the French will take in regard to proposals for negotiations. Laniel did not reject, in fact, he welcomed the idea of a cease-fire. At the same time, he laid down conditions designed to insure the security of the French expeditionary corps and of the national armies and of friendly elements in Indochina which, if accepted by the enemy, would radically change the military situation in favor of our side.

These conditions for a cease-fire were roughly as follows:

- (1) Withdrawal of Vietminh forces from Laos and Cambodia.
- (2) Establishment of a neutral zone around the Tonkin Delta and withdrawal of Vietminh forces from within the Delta.
- (3) Confinement of Vietminh troops in central Annam to designated points.

---

- (4) Evacuation or surrender and disarmament of Vietminh troops in south Annam.
- (5) Other measures of control and supervision.

The Vietminh would probably only accept terms of this kind—particularly the evacuation of the Tonkin Delta and the establishment of a neutral zone around the Delta—if it thought the alternative was military defeat. The acceptance by the Vietminh of such conditions would consequently be the equivalent of an admission of military defeat.

Whether a cease-fire results from an agreement along the above lines or from the carrying out of the Navarre Plan for military decision, the next step would obviously be the establishment of a truly national government based on some sort of popular consultation. It would be neither desirable nor, in all probability, possible for the Bao Dai-Buu Loc governing formula to establish an adequate control of the entire country. A formula of national pacification and union would impose itself. Nevertheless, in order for the necessary transition to take place under the most favorable possible circumstances, it would be necessary to find some sort of interim system. This might be done on a regional basis, drawing heavily on non-Communist nationalists, on fence sitting elements and on loyal Vietnamese not too tied up or compromised in the eyes of their fellow citizens by their relations with the French.

So far as fundamentals at Geneva are concerned, the principal objective should be to convince the French to take a position based firmly on the probability of a military decision favoring our side and crowning seven years of struggle. Our own support for the French military effort must be unstinted and unquestioning. If, at any time at Geneva, there is any prospect that an offer of U.S. support, air, naval or even ground forces to supplement the Franco-Vietnamese military effort will cause the French to refuse to capitulate, we must be in a position to make or not to make such an offer as a result of a firm U.S. policy decision at the highest level. This involves a decision as to whether holding Indochina warrants a sacrifice of American lives and the risk of starting World War III. The following paragraphs from a PSA memorandum of December 18, 1953, are pertinent :

“If the interested agencies conclude that even with maximum quantitative increase in present US financial and end-item assistance the Navarre Plan is not apt to succeed within existing time limits, a recommendation should immediately be prepared for the National Security Council as to additional types of aid to be considered. This recommendation should be formulated even in the absence of any specific request from the French or the Vietnamese. (If the Navarre effort is to fail, our observers should be able to tell us about it before the French and the Vietnamese make up their minds to admit it.)

"The recommendation referred to above would presumably include the furnishing of US service and, if necessary, combat troops who would serve under French command within the general framework of the present strategic concepts. The communication to the French and Vietnamese of an affirmative decision in this respect might well prevent the reaching on their part of a decision to enter into negotiations or to abandon their present military effort in Indochina. Any further US contribution to the holding of Indochina is apt to be both more effective and less considerable the sooner it is made after a conclusion has been reached that current resources are inadequate. The longer we wait the bigger will be the commitment we will be called upon to make."<sup>3</sup>

The point here is not a recommendation that U.S. forces should or should not be engaged in Indochina but rather that a decision, positive or negative on the subject cannot be evaded—unless it is believed that it has already been taken in a negative sense as a result of the President's press conference of February 10th.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>4</sup> At his press conference on Feb. 10 President Eisenhower stated that U.S. training and administrative personnel in Indochina, including mechanics who recently had accompanied aircraft shipped there were "only maintenance troops" and would not be used in combat. He said the United States "is supporting the Vietnamese and French in their conduct of the war." [WASHINGTON,] March 9, 1954.

The terms outlined in the Assembly debate are almost sure to be unacceptable to the Viet Minh and may have been framed for that reason. This is all to the good if one accepts, as I do, the thesis that a compromise settlement on any of the bases now apparent (see my memorandum of February 25<sup>3</sup>) would be tantamount to opening up Southeast Asia to Communist control. However, if they are taken merely as the opening gambit for further bargaining, they may contain the germ of a dangerous settlement on the basis of territorial division.

More significant than the terms themselves is the apparent effort of the French to present the forthcoming conference as a general Far East conference.

Following are detailed comments:

1. The "terms" (Paristel 3240) in effect outline a solution which would be all the Navarre Plan of military operations might hope to obtain if it were prosecuted to the utmost. With reference to the enumerated guarantees sought by M. Laniel; (a) it is most unlikely that the Viet Minh would evacuate Laos. The position they have gained there may be said to correspond to that reached by the Chinese Communists at the end of the "long march"—i.e., an inexpugnable base to be maintained however Communist fortunes may fluctuate. Moreover, the Laos base is convenient for the exercise of pressures in other areas of Southeast Asia besides Viet Nam, and for the eventual flanking of the Tonkin Delta position; (b) the Viet Minh might for the present evacuate Cambodia and thus gain quite a bit of sympathy in Southeast Asia; but when any eventual flanking movement was begun they would reappear in this vulnerable area; (c) the Viet Minh now controls as much of the area of the Tonkin Delta and almost as many "souls" as do the French. It is hardly likely that they would evacuate upon demand; in fact, between now and April 26 the battle for control of the Delta will intensify; (d) the settlement proposed for Annam is very obscure but would set up a patchwork kind of arrangement which would not seem durable; (e) the Viet Minh is not likely to consent to evacuate Cochinchina unless they gain compensating advantages in the North.

2. Although the Viet Minh would not accept terms as at present drafted, they would not be so forbidding to them if considered as an opening gambit. They could even turn out to be dangerous for our side. These draft proposals tend more to the territorial division of Indochina than to the hypothesis of coalition governments and free elections. In other words, I see in them a possibility that the French might eventually consider withdrawal of French and loyal Vietnamese in Tonkin in exchange for Viet Minh evacuation of the Saigon Delta. This, then, is an important indicator for the French position at Geneva (for the dangers of such a territorial settlement, see my memorandum of February 25). It shows that some French are at least thinking in terms of some kind of partition.

3. It seems to me that these terms will be too harsh, not only for the Viet Minh but also for French parliamentary opinion, which has demanded that the French Government declare itself. I believe they are directed at least as much to the forthcoming talks with the Bao Dai Government at Paris as they are towards Geneva. It would be very difficult for the French to go to Geneva with the support of the Bao Dai Government unless it had declared a position which the loyal Vietnamese could conceivably—although painfully—accept.

4. Although, as the Paris Embassy suggests, Laniel's speech may have been designed to head off premature offers of a cease-fire or a Nehru intercession, I am not sure it will have this effect. In fact, Laniel's remarks about not prolonging the war if there is a chance to "end it one day sooner" might encourage rather than discourage Nehru.

5. In my opinion the most significant aspect of Laniel's speech is the indication that France continues to think of a settlement for Indochina in terms of a general Far East settlement. (See Ambassador Dillon's comment that "It is not difficult to discern in Laniel's speech that if settlement is to be reached on Indochina at Geneva, it will be up to France's allies to make concessions to Communist China with all that that implies for the United States." <sup>4</sup>)

It seems to me that the working levels in the State Department and elsewhere can hardly prepare position papers for the Geneva Conference until their own government at the highest level determines whether bargaining is to be confined to (a) Indochina; or (b) Indochina and Korea; or (c) Korea, Indochina, the two China's, etc.

Recommendations are that:

(a) We request officially from the French, perhaps from General Ely, the details and background of the Laniel proposal.

(b) That further clarification be sought of the French bargaining position at Geneva.

(c) That we ask for an indication of the position of this bargaining position to the Laniel-Navarre Plan.

(d) That the relation of the Geneva Conference to an overall Far Eastern settlement be clarified in our minds as soon as possible.

(e) That the French be left in no doubt as to our thinking on this score.

(f) That our position now and at Geneva continue to be on the necessity of continuing the fight.

(g) That we be no party to a Far Eastern settlement partitioning Indochina or which is likely to hand it over to the Viet Minh.

(h) That as a final resort we plan for the employment of US force in Indochina, preferably in the framework of an internationalization of the problem.

Editorial Note

On March 9 working groups on Korea and Indochina were established within the Department of State as part of the Department's preparations for the Geneva Conference. One, chaired by Kenneth T. Young, Jr., Director of the Office of Northeast Asian Affairs, was given the responsibility for preparing position papers, etc., with respect to Korea; the other working group, chaired by Philip W. Bonsal, Director of the Office of Philippine and Southeast Asian Affairs, was given the responsibility for doing the same thing for Indochina.

The position papers prepared by these two working groups are filed in Northeast Asian Affairs files, lot 60 D 330.

PARIS, March 10, 1954—9 p. m.

3294. Repeated information Moscow 261, Saigon 374. Limit distribution. We are concerned with extent to which hopes for finding Indochina settlement at Geneva are rising in France and with growing belief that United States "concessions" to China will be necessary for such settlement. Laniel's statement in Parliament March 5 (Embassy telegram 3240 March 6<sup>1</sup>) reflects this thinking, as did yesterday's debate (Embassy telegram 3293 March 10<sup>2</sup>). We are constantly stressing in private conversations inadvisability of counting either upon willingness of Russians or Chinese seriously to negotiate or upon United States concessions to China, but so far without appreciable effect.

Of somewhat different character was Pleven's expression to Symington (Embassy telegram 3205 March 5<sup>2</sup>) of hope that United States would say at Geneva that Communist planes over Indochina would be met by United States planes. In this connection, Bohlen, when here after Berlin, told us he thought Russian worry over possibility of Indochina war spreading might conceivably predispose them to favor its termination. Warning note contained in Secretary's September 2 St. Louis speech<sup>3</sup> and declaration at time of Korean Armistice<sup>4</sup> was helpful and well received here but, between now and Geneva, we should seek to avoid connotations of A-bomb-rattling or premature United States conclusion Geneva can produce no Indochina settlement.

Within narrow limits which we assume will circumscribe United States freedom of action at Geneva, we fear it will be difficult to place blame for failure to reach Indochina settlement squarely upon Chinese or Russians insofar as French and presumably other European opinion is concerned. If British, as appears likely, are reluctant to go along with a rigid United States position, we may find ourselves in uncomfortable isolation. We know that intensive consideration of Indochina problem is taking place in Washington and we believe effect at Geneva upon major United States interests will depend to considerable measure upon such answers as may be found within next few weeks to questions like following:

How far are we prepared to go, in terms of United States national interest, to prevent further Communist expansion in Southeast Asia through (a) fighting or (b) negotiation involving United States concessions?

Will United States delegation have sufficient freedom for maneuver to enable it to explore possible differences of interest between Peiping and Moscow and to capitalize upon them if found?

In view of very substantial dividends which thorough tripartite preparation paid at Berlin and even more difficult situation which we will apparently face at Geneva, we strongly recommend maximum advance tripartite consultation on Indochina as suggested by Maurice Schumann (Embassy telegram 3176 March 4<sup>5</sup>).

Subject: Minimum Position for Geneva Conference (Comments on Paper by Bonsal)<sup>1</sup>

I am in complete agreement with what appear to be the principal features of this paper:

a) That we must set our face against any compromise peace at Geneva that would leave the Viet Minh army intact.

b) That, as a last resort, we should be ready to use US force to save Indochina. Yet I believe it will be difficult if not impossible to maintain this position. Our paper should, therefore, take account of more detail. I have the following observations to make:

1. Although I realize that the paper is only a basis of discussion, I believe it falls short of defining the US minimum position at Geneva. The prospects of military victory upon which so much of our policy, as well as this paper is hinged, are not convincing even to most Frenchmen, much less so to the Communist conferees. I do not think that we can hope to convince the French that they are going to win after all (even though M. Bidault and M. Plevin believe it) or that the chances of our victory are so certain as to cause the Communists to accept something like the recent Laniel terms. In other words, the "major trump card in our side's hand at Geneva" which is characterized as the "recognized military ability and determination" to defeat the enemy's regular army, cannot be counted on to take tricks.

2. I am afraid that at Geneva or shortly thereafter we will have to contend with a series of proposals, either from the French or from the Communists, looking to a compromise peace; and, therefore, that our "minimum position paper" must deal more in detail with these possibilities.

3. As to the paper's major point—that we be ready if necessary to promise the use of US forces, I fear that we simply cannot make that promise. We have been progressively moving away from it during the period of the "linking" of Korea and Indochina as "two fronts on the same war"; the enunciation of the "New Look" with reliance on atom weapons; the formulation of the "disengagement" policy, and the declaration of a resolve not to become involved in the war, forced upon us by Congressional clamor over the deployment of a few technicians to Indochina.

4. If US forces were to be employed, I believe consideration should be given to whether it should be in the framework of a UN action or some collective action. Presumably, the PSA memorandum of December 18<sup>2</sup> does not exclude the collective approach but it appears to be conceived in terms of a Franco-Vietnamese-US action. If US forces were to be engaged, I believe that the prospects of success would be greater, and the chances of Congressional support greater if it were put on the basis of a new deal; i.e., a collective operation. This would also involve a redefinition of the status of the Associated States within the French Union.

5. As a general observation, I do not see how we can settle on a minimum position until the Administration has definitely determined that the negotiation on Indochina will not be linked with deals to be made in Korea, elsewhere in the Far East or Europe. If this determination is made, it should be included in the minimum position paper.

6. It seems to me that before a detailed position paper can be settled, we should urgently examine once more within this Government whether a military solution is feasible, what further support from France, the United States and Vietnam is required for it, and what steps should be taken to furnish that support.

Attachment B—A longer list of Questions on Indochina prepared by Mr. Bonsal

Attachment C—Possible Advance Tripartite Consultations on Indochina

DOUGLAS MACARTHUR II

Attachment A

THE PROBLEM OF INDOCHINA AT GENEVA: SOME QUESTIONS TO BE USED AS A GUIDE FOR DISCUSSION

1. What is the U.S. position regarding possible Communist proposals to:

a. hold a plebiscite in Indochina as the basis for the formation of a government for the whole country.

<sup>2</sup> In a memorandum to MacArthur, Mar. 11, not printed, Trulock of S/S-O summarized decisions reached at the Mar. 11 meeting that papers would be prepared on the five questions listed in Attachment A. The first of these papers would summarize questions 1, 2, and 3, and would include a summary of the U.S. estimate of the probable Soviet and Chinese Communist intentions regarding the Indochina phase of the Geneva Conference. Trulock suggested that this paper could serve as a basis for either another Assistant Secretary level meeting or for a meeting with the Secretary on this subject. (Conference files, lot 60 D 627, CF 262)

b. establish a coalition government which would include Ho Chi Minh or his followers.

c. cease fire and establish a demarcation line roughly along the 16th parallel with the area north of that line being handed over to the administration of Ho Chi Minh and his supporters.

2. What should the U.S. say and do with respect to the French if the latter are approached by the USSR and/or Communist China with a proposal to cease aid to the Viet Minh in return for French support for Chinese Communist entry into the UN or other steps to legitimize the Chinese Communist regime?

3. What should be the U.S. position in regard to the conditions for a cease fire put forward by M. Laniel on behalf of the French Government on March 5. (See Paris' unclassified telegram 3240, dated March 6.<sup>3</sup>)

As a tactical matter in our efforts to keep the French in line, if the Laniel conditions are in general acceptable to us, we might be able to hold the French to them whereas we might have great difficulty in holding them to proposals which emanated from us.

4. The U.S. may be confronted with a situation where the French would demand more active U.S. participation in Indochina in return for their rejecting Communist proposals unacceptable to us. How far should we go in giving assurances to the French in such a situation?

5. How far should the U.S. go at Geneva in committing itself to substantial contributions to the reconstruction of Viet-Nam, Cambodia and Laos after the end of hostilities? This might have an important effect in keeping the Associated States (and possibly also the French) in line.

Attachment B

SOME QUESTIONS ON THE INDOCHINA PHASE OF THE GENEVA CONFERENCE

1. Until we give the French Government our views regarding the composition and objectives of the Indochina phase of the Geneva conference, we run the risk of a crystalization of French attitudes and particularly the making of undesirable commitments by French leaders to their political followers. What is the latest date at which we should communicate our thinking to the French and British?

2. It is desirable to delay the Indochina discussions at Geneva. The Secretary envisages a discussion at Geneva among the four Berlin powers to determine the participants and the method of issuing invitations for the Indochina phase. Can we envisage a date such as June 15 for the start of the Indochina phase of discussions on the basis that agreement on invitations could be reached early in May?

3. Unless we are willing either to make concessions to the Chinese Communists in certain fields or to take a positive stand regarding U.S. participation in the struggle, we will achieve no more through negotiation at Geneva than the Communists believe the Franco-Vietnamese forces have the capacity and will to achieve militarily. To what extent do we still believe that the French and Vietnamese possess the will and the capacity to achieve decisive results in Indochina in accordance with the Laniel-Navarre principles in the event of a breakdown of negotiations?

4. It is possible that a desirable peace in Indochina could be obtained in return for concessions in other fields to the CPR and perhaps to the USSR. We are unwilling to recognize Communist China, to admit the CPR to the UN, to withdraw our support from the Chinese Nationalists on Formosa or to relax current trade embargoes against Communist China. Are there any other items desirable by the CPR or the USSR which we would be willing to consider as entering into a possible negotiating position?

5. It is probable that we could work out with the French and Vietnamese a minimum acceptable position for a negotiated cessation of the Indochina war. Such a settlement might include a cease fire along the lines recently set forth by Laniel,<sup>4</sup> general disarmament of native troops except for Vietnamese troops needed to maintain order, withdrawal of French Union troops to stated bases pending conclusion of regular Franco-Vietnamese arrangements, provision for a transitional period of political activity looking to eventual elections etc. Such a minimum acceptable position might be accepted by the enemy if the alternative were that the U.S. would consider continuation of hostilities by the Vietminh beyond a certain date as an aggression warranting "massive retaliatory action" against Communist China. Would the U.S. be willing to envisage such a position?

6. Unless the U.S. is willing to take an affirmative position as indicated above or unless the French and Vietnamese are willing and able to carry the Navarre plan to a conclusion, we will be confronted with a negotiated settlement which will leave the eight enemy divisions in Indochina undefeated and armed. This will make it highly likely that the whole area will fall to the Communists sooner or later. Do we agree that in the eventuality of this type of negotiated settlement, a partition which would turn Tonkin and northern Annam over to the Communists (a bitter loss of hundreds of thousands of friends) but would leave Laos, perhaps Cambodia and southern Annam and Cochin China within the French Union with French Union air and naval bases (under arrangements similar to those which we have in the Philippines) would be preferable to any other arrangement such as a plebiscite or a coalition government for the entire area?

7. A willingness on our side to contribute substantially to the reconstruction of Viet-Nam, Cambodia, and Laos after the end of hostilities might be an important factor in stiffening the will to resist of the Vietnamese (and possibly the French) and in persuading them to adhere to an acceptable negotiating position. Can we be in a position to make definite commitments at Geneva?

Attachment C

POSSIBLE TRIPARTITE CONSULTATIONS REGARDING INDOCHINA (IN ADVANCE OF GENEVA)

Both the French and the British have posed the possibility of tripartite consultations in Paris concerning the Indochina phase of the Geneva meetings. No definite ideas as to timing have been put forward, this aspect being somewhat complicated as regards the French because of the current talks with the Viet-Nameese.

If it is decided that such consultation should take place, a tripartite group might begin work in Paris about April 15 with a view to completing their work in time for the Ministers consideration when they arrive in Paris for the NATO meeting. This would be Apr. 21-22.

The advantage of such consultation is that it would enable the three ministers to concert their tactics in advance of the Geneva meeting. On the other hand, such consultation might result in stimulating the Indochinese question, when our basic purpose has been to gain as much time as possible for the military situation to develop in a favorable manner.

Should we encourage the idea of such consultation or should we maintain our present relaxed attitude and agree to such consultation only if the French push for it?

In any event, the opportunity must be found in Paris, prior to the Geneva meeting, for the Secretary to impress on M. Laniel and M. Bidault in unmistakable terms the U.S. position with regard to the Indochina phase of Geneva.

Subject: Order of Priority of Discussions at Geneva

Participants: Mr. Millet, Counselor, French Embassy
Mr. McBride, WE

Mr. Millet called at Ambassador Bonnet's instruction to state that the Ambassador was concerned over the statements attributed to Mr. Suydam at the daily press conference today. He said that the statement carried in the UP to the effect that the French Government "understood" that the Korean phase would come before the Indochinese discussions at Geneva was not correct, and that the French Government, on the contrary, hoped the talks would take place simultaneously.

I stated that the position of the U.S. Government was, so far as I knew, governed by the Berlin communiqué from which it would certainly seem clear that in fact it was intended to start talking about Korea before getting to Indochina, which seemed definitely to be item No. 2 on the agenda. Therefore, the AP and UP stories quoting Mr. Suydam did not seem to be out of line, and Mr. Suydam's statements were in accordance with my understanding of the situation.

Mr. Millet concluded that the French Embassy here did not see it that way, and anyway the National Assembly now expected the two subjects to be discussed concurrently. Finally he said statements of this nature would cause harm to public opinion in France. I said I was sorry he felt that way, but did not see what other line we could take in response to queries. I concluded that we were in no way seeking publicity for our views, but pointed out that the Geneva meeting was a subject of great interest, and that accordingly the press would doubtless be following it continuously. I promised to convey the Ambassador's views to Mr. MacArthur as the Ambassador requested.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>The Department of State in telegram 3166 to Paris, Mar. 15, informed the Embassy about this conversation and indicated that the Berlin resolution implied that the Korean discussions would begin first at Geneva. There was no indication as to how soon after the start of the conference the Indochina phase should begin. The Department felt this question should be left open pending further development of the procedural arrangements and the U.S. position regarding Indochina. (396.1 GE/3-1254)

WASHINGTON, March 12, 1954—7:07 p. m.

1661. Cambodian Ambassador<sup>2</sup> called Department March 11 to inquire regarding Indochina phase Geneva Conference. He was told until Secretary had returned from Caracas, Dept could offer very little additional information.

Apparently on instructions his Government, Ambassador informed Department "informally" that Cambodia desired attend Geneva if invited and desired recognition of her "special position" which he said more similar that of Thailand than of Laos or Viet Nam. He also asked about possibility that invitation be issued by United States, stressing that this was not suggestion or expression of preference but purely request for information.

Department representative stated that while Department assumed Cambodia will be invited although no decision yet taken by Berlin powers, invitation to Associated States including Cambodia would presumably be issued by France in accordance with principles developed at Berlin and agreed quadripartitely in case Korean Political Conference.

Department representative stated assumption that Cambodian inquiry regarding conference plans addressed to U.S. also being addressed France. Ambassador gave impression Cambodia would find it difficult discuss this matter with French unless latter take initiative.

CONFIDENTIAL

LONDON, March 12, 1954.

No. 3094

Subject: British Preparations for Geneva Conference

The following is a distillation of information obtained in a series of conversations with desk officers in the Foreign Office immediately concerned with planning for the Geneva Conference.

[Here follows Section A, dealing with Korea, which is not printed.]

B. Indochina.

1. In conversations with the Foreign Office, the French Embassy has explained that French willingness to continue the struggle in Indochina depends on the following factors in the order of their importance: (a) Pleven's report on his findings in Indochina, (b) the outcome of the conversations with Buu Loc in Paris, and (c) the trend of public opinion in Paris. If the military situation in Indochina is not too bad and if the probabilities are that the fighting qualities of the Vietnamese troops will soon show a marked improvement, then the French Government might be willing to brave an increasingly impatient and pessimistic public opinion and carry on at about the present scale for another year. Any indication that Buu Loc's demands are reasonable and that he is not out to jettison the French Union will, of course, be helpful. The French are increasingly concerned over the new Communist propaganda attack on United States military assistance to the French and Vietnamese forces in Indochina, as it will make it difficult for the French at Geneva to call on the Chinese to stop military assistance to the Vietminh.

2. In replying to the French, the Foreign Office has taken the position that it is primarily up to them and to the Americans to decide on what position to adopt at Geneva, although the British will, of course, wish to be consulted. In the British view, it will be difficult to keep the participation down to the Five Powers. It would be expected that the Associated States would wish to be represented and if they send delegates it would be difficult to oppose Vietminh representation. If other than the Five Powers are to be present, Australia and New Zealand will wish to have representatives there.

C. Make-up of British Delegation to the Conference.

1. The Foreign Secretary will, of course, attend the opening sessions of the Conference, and other sessions as needed. In his absence, the Delegation will be headed by Lord Reading. Assistant Under-Secretary Denis Allen, with the experience gained from participation in the Berlin Conference behind him, will head the working party. John Addis, the assistant to the head of the Far Eastern Department and specialist on Korean and Sino-Soviet relations, will do the spade work on Korea; he will be assisted by Julian Bullard. John Tahourdin, in charge of the South-East Asia Department, will do the spade work on Indochina.

2. On March 5th, the Foreign Office telegraphed Humphrey Trevelyan, in charge of the British diplomatic mission in Peiping, asking him unless he perceived objection to make arrangements to be present at the Geneva Conference with the understanding that he would return to his post after the Conference was over. Having received no reply from Trevelyan, the Foreign Office assumes that he is prepared to go to Geneva and is conducting negotiations with the Chinese authorities to obtain the necessary exit and re-entry permits. It was the Foreign Office thought that Trevelyan's experience in Peiping would be of value to the British Delegation, that he himself would be helped by a change of scene . . . and that the Foreign Office representatives could benefit by an opportunity to discuss at first hand problems confronting him in Peiping.

Mr. David H. Popper—UNP

Mr. de Beus came in to present the attached note <sup>2</sup> accepting on behalf of the Netherlands Government the invitation to the Korean Political Conference. He stated that a public announcement to this effect would be made at 4:00 p. m. today in The Hague.

In response to queries from Mr. de Beus, I indicated that we would not get our consultations with other governments fully in train on the Korean question until we had responses to all of the invitations. I also indicated that we expected the French, generally speaking, to take the lead on Indochina.

Mr. de Beus told us his Ambassador had already informed FE that the Soviet Ambassador <sup>3</sup> had told the Dutch Ambassador <sup>4</sup> here that the Communists intend to suggest India, Indonesia, Burma and Thailand as "other interested states" for inclusion in the Indochina phase of the Conference. On other hand, Embassy does not consider question participation Associated States IC conference Geneva appropriate subject for US to raise with Associated States and is of opinion that any initiative taken to express our views in this regard should be vis-à-vis French Government and in manner reflecting our full appreciation existence French Union relationship. As indicated in Embtels 3175,<sup>2</sup> 3176,<sup>3</sup> and 3209,<sup>4</sup> French have stated that their position will be determined after reaching agreement Associated States and consultation with UK and US, and that our views will play important role in determination their position.

Question participation Associated States is one French presumably desire to discuss in tripartite IC talks Paris prior April 26. Embassies London and Paris are requested urgently to discuss situation with FonOffs in light Moscow's and this message and to request them to instruct their Ambassadors in Moscow to concert with Bohlen on reply along following lines if USSR raises "Five Power" idea:

"Bohlen would receive Soviet communication and state that he would transmit it to US Govt and to his British and French colleagues.

He should state however that he is authorized to say that as far as Three govts are concerned, Korean Political Conference in Geneva could not be convened on any terms differing from those agreed by four Foreign Ministers in Berlin, and Three govts are quite sure there was no misunderstanding of those terms on part of Soviet Union. The Korean Political Conference was called for in the Armistice Agreement<sup>3</sup> and the United Nations Resolution of August 28, 1953.<sup>4</sup> It is exactly what we endeavored unsuccessfully for six weeks to arrange at Panmunjom. It is a clear-cut conference between the two sides engaged in the fighting uncluttered by neutrals. The sole objective is to negotiate a peaceful agreement for a unified independent Korea. Geneva was agreed upon last August between Secretary and President Rhee as one of the places which would be acceptable. Recognition de facto or otherwise for CPR is neither involved nor implied. ROK and those nations under the United Nations Command are negotiating with the Soviet-Communist side as the enemies responsible for the aggression. Berlin Communiqué and other data sent you in our opinion made this abundantly clear. Conference on Indochina to be held simultaneously with Korean Political Conference will include USSR and CPR as quasi belligerents. Obviously no agreements could be effective which did not bind the perpetrators of the conflict. If our Chiefs of Mission are confused by communists propaganda about Geneva it is small wonder that our Asian allies are more so.<sup>5</sup>

Memorandum by the Counselor (MacArthur)

[WASHINGTON,] March 13, 1954.

Subject: Questions Relating to the Geneva Conference

1. Proposed letter from Secretary to Bidault

Our Paris Embassy is increasingly concerned with the extent to which hopes for finding an Indochina settlement at Geneva are rising in France, with the growing belief that U.S. "concessions" to China will be necessary for such a settlement. Plevin's most unfortunate briefing of five American correspondents is indicative of the attitude of certain allegedly friendly members of the French Government. If the French Government is not now given clearly to understand the way the U.S. views the Indochina aspects of the Geneva Conference, the situation in Paris can get completely out of hand. Accordingly, it is believed that the Secretary should send a personal message to Bidault.

2. Composition of the U.S. Delegation

The composition of the U.S. Delegation is of great importance for it is manifestly impossible for the Secretary to remain at Geneva for the duration of the Conference. If the Under Secretary is to head the U.S. Delegation at Geneva after the Secretary's departure, it seems imperative that he be at Geneva with the Secretary from the opening of the Conference. It is also important that the Under Secretary have the best possible support we can give him, and it is suggested that his principal advisers throughout the Conference be Ambassador Dillon, Assistant Secretary Robertson, Ambassador Heath, and presumably Admiral Davis of the Department of Defense. It is recommended that Ambassador Johnson from Prague act as Coordinator and "Chief of Staff" of the Delegation, assisted by Mr. Young (for Korea) and Mr. Bonsal (for Indochina). The foregoing individuals would be supported by lower level advisers from the Department and the field as appropriate (Mr. Gibson of the Paris Embassy should be included in this group).

3. Duration of the Secretary's stay at Geneva

It is suggested that the Secretary might wish to stay at Geneva for a period of not more than ten days or two weeks. If the Conference develops the way we want it to, beginning with Korea, the Secretary might actually not be at Geneva when the Indochina item comes up. (It is recognized that the French will wish to have parallel discussions on Korea and Indochina from the very beginning of the Conference.) There are advantages in not having the Secretary deeply involved in the Indochina discussions at Geneva. Furthermore, it seems most important because of the hazards and problems connected with Indochina aspects of the Geneva Conference, that the Secretary be in Washington where he could lay before the U.S. Government and congressional leadership, first-hand, certain problems and alternatives which the Geneva Conference may pose. The U.S. Delegation in turn would then receive instructions on the position it should take. In this connection, it would be logical that the Secretary return to Washington if he and the Under Secretary both were at Geneva, since it could be pointed out that they both could not be absent for more than a relatively short period of time.

4. Tripartite Coordination

Both the British and the French have asked our views on preliminary tripartite coordination regarding Indochina. On the one hand, there are disadvantages in beginning tripartite coordination very far in advance of the Geneva meeting. Too early preparation could lead to pressures from the French to get out invitations to participants in the Indochina part of the Conference so that such participants could be at Geneva on April 26. On the other hand, if the French are permitted to develop their own position with respect to Indochina, without benefit of U.S. guidance, we might find ourselves faced with a frozen French position at Geneva with which we could not live and which would in part be based on concessions which France would expect the U.S. to make to Communist China. Also, refusal to have any tripartite coordination could lead the French to adopting a fixed position and then saying we were responsible because obviously France had developed a position and we had been unwilling to cooperate with her and therefore she had been obliged to prepare a position without our advice and views.

In the light of the above dilemma, the following schedule for tripartite coordination is suggested :

April 15-20, tripartite working group in Paris. The U.S. Principal member would be Ambassador Dillon, with an appropriate deputy and such supporting personnel as necessary.

April 21, 9 a. m., Secretary and Under Secretary arrive in Paris. Afternoon, tripartite meeting with Bidault and Eden.

April 22, tripartite meetings of the Secretary, Bidault, and Eden.

April 23, NATO Council meeting.

April 24, Proceed to Geneva.

The Ambassador at Saigon (Heath) to the Department of State

SAIGON, March 15, 1954—noon.

1688. Repeated information Paris 523. It seems most probable that at Geneva the Communists will confront us with a proposal for a cease-fire followed by genuinely free elections for a national assembly—possibly under UN supervision—for all of Vietnam. They must know that if such elections were held today with a slate of Ho candidates camouflaged as genuine nationalists riding on the peace wave lined up against some sort of Bao Dai combination unfortunately linked in the popular mind with alleged French domination, they would almost certainly win, both in the controlled zones and in Viet Minh areas. In addition to this natural present advantage the Viet Minh would constitute the only strong, well organized political group, proposed by querulous, ill-organized, fiercely competitive and narrowly partisan groups.

The Communists may be expected either to open the conference with such proposal, or to use it as dramatic response to any initial Western proposal. The present Laniel-Pleven conditions for a truce and political negotiations (Paris telegram 3240 repeated Saigon 362<sup>1</sup>) will certainly not be acceptable to the Communists, who may be expected to ask the world why they should abandon diplomatically advantages which the French have not been able to force them to give up by force of arms, e.g.—withdrawal from South Vietnam and the Tonkin Delta and cessation of Chinese aid. Brushing aside such details as legalistic and unnecessary, they could pose as the truly democratic party and offer us free elections.

If we failed to accept such an offer we would open ourselves to most telling attacks as the opponent of democracy and the proponent of continued war, greatly damaging our cause and our prestige in Vietnam and before world opinion. It is thus of paramount importance either to forestall this Communist gambit if possible, or, if presented, to counter it effectively without losing the psychological initiative and preventing the development of a situation which the Communists could use to smear us with an anti-democratic label.

(1) In searching for solutions, possible course of action meriting immediate exploration is to contrive to have the Vietnamese hold national elections prior to the Geneva conference, and thus present the Communists there with the fact of a functioning elected government, either negotiating accords with the French to perfect the country's independence or already in possession of completed agreement. If such elections were possible, they would not only limit the scope of possible Communist proposals, but would also strengthen the Vietnamese-French position before world opinion and help provide a political apparatus throughout the controlled zones which would strengthen the social fabric, satisfy nationalist and democratic aspirations thus diminishing the Viet Minh appeal, and improve the basis for a political counter attack against the Viet Minh. Many difficulties lie in the way of such elections, the fact of newness and lack of strength of Buu Loc

Government, the inertia and confusion of Vietnamese themselves, lack of strong political leaders and the opposition of Bao Dai. In addition time is short, and the necessary organization and technical facilities will be difficult to assemble in so little time by inexperienced personnel. Still, the reward would be great, and the present political climate seems ripe for such development, with former President Huu <sup>2</sup> saying last week that there is a "general upsurge of popular feeling in favor of elections and a national assembly". (See Embtels 1638 <sup>3</sup> and 1653, <sup>4</sup> sent Paris as 506 and 515.) It will be remembered that ex-President Tam <sup>5</sup> told us while he preferred indirect elections to national assembly he saw the possibility of "safe" direct elections for such a body.

(2) Whether or not such controlled zone elections could be held prior to the conference, a Communist proposal to hold free nationwide elections might be countered with an acceptance of the principle, and a demand to hold such elections simultaneously in Vietnam and in Germany. The comparison of the two situations might be somewhat more valid if elections for a Vietnamese Government could be held first, but in any event we could make a powerful case for linking the two problems. A Communist demand for free elections throughout Vietnam would probably be similar to the recent allied position at Berlin and this could be pointed out tellingly. Having presented such a proposal for Germany, only to be rebuffed by the Communist world, we now find the same principles in their proposal for Indochina. We point out the similarity, which they have perhaps not noticed, merely because the parallel is so striking, and, now that they have accepted the principle of genuinely free elections, they surely would not desire to extend this benefit to Indochina without offering it simultaneously to Germany, thus solving two of the world's most difficult problems at a single stroke. Although the terms of reference of the Geneva conference may preclude this maneuver and the French, desirous of an end to the fighting in Indochina, may refuse to permit it (Bidault has stated his opposition to "global" solutions) we feel that such a counterproposal would stymie a Communist offer of free elections here while regaining the psychological initiative for the West, since it seems highly improbable that the Soviets would be willing to accept a united,

The Department stated that it did not believe it was possible to contemplate countering a Communist proposal to hold free nationwide elections in Vietnam with demands that such elections be held simultaneously in Vietnam and Germany. The Department felt that such a counterproposal would involve an implicit admission that the Western position with respect to Vietnam was roughly equivalent to the Soviet position regarding East Germany. Memorandum by the Director of the Office of Philippine and Southeast Asian Affairs (Bonsal) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs (Robertson)<sup>1</sup>

[WASHINGTON,] March 15, 1954.

Subject: Indochina Discussions at Geneva.

Before becoming immersed in the position papers and working groups which will characterize our preparations for Geneva, I would like to set down, with a view to securing your concurrence, certain principal guidelines which, if you agree, I should like to use as defining FE's position:

(1) A substantial part of US aid to and support of France and the Associated States is predicated on French determination and ability to carry out a military plan described in Bidault's note of September 29, 1953,<sup>2</sup> to Ambassador Dillon in the following terms ". . . the strategic plan of the French Command consists essentially of retaking the offensive with a view to breaking up and destroying the regular enemy forces. Convinced that the military problem in Indochina can be settled only in conformity with such a plan, the French Government confirms that it intends to carry forward vigorously and promptly the execution thereof".

(2) There is growing evidence of a waning determination, if not ability, on the part of the French to carry through to a conclusion the plan above described. Regardless of the reasons for this changed attitude or of its justification, we are not currently in a position to draw any practical consequences from this apparent falling away from the Franco-American understandings of last September. In other words, we cannot currently alter our policy of financial and military end-item support for the French in Indochina even though the French appear to be altering the concept on which that support has been based. The maintenance and, to the extent possible, the improvement of the present military position and the avoidance of anything which might contribute to its deterioration are essential elements of our policy.

(3) Our side will not obtain at the conference table, whether in Korea or in Indochina, any more than the enemy believes our side has the ability and determination to achieve on the field of battle. At best, if we can convince the enemy that we have the ability and determination to achieve a given result, we may be able to avoid having to demonstrate them practically.

(4) We will maintain at Geneva our firm position regarding non-recognition of Communist China by the US, US refusal to admit Communist China to the UN, US support of Nationalist China and the non-lifting of the embargo on trade with Communist China.

(5) It appears unlikely that we will be in a position to bolster the French with assurances of US military intervention in Indochina in order to prevent a settlement unacceptable to us or to insure military victory for our side. We will probably not be in a position to use the threat of massive retaliatory action against China to enforce an acceptable solution in Indochina.

(6) Thus, assuming that we do get to a point of actually discussing Indochina at Geneva, we will be able to achieve a negotiating result no more favorable than is warranted by Franco-Vietnamese capacities and will power at the time. We have no fresh political or military contribution to make to a settlement.

(7) Every effort will be made by the enemy to divide France and the United States, to contrast a peace-loving, reasonable France anxious to stop the death of her sons with a warmongering United States eager to continue a slaughter in which American soldiers are not engaged.

(8) Since France, the UK and the US will be unable to present a strong, united front in the matter of China policy or of the stepping up of the military potential of our side, it is particularly important that they do present such a front with regard to a proposal for peace in Indochina to be submitted as a French initiative at Geneva with the full support of Vietnam, the US and the UK. I conceive of agreement on such a proposal as a major task in the preparations for Geneva. A proposal of this kind should involve the acceptance of the principle that a country divided by eight years of bitter civil war needs a cessation of hostilities, a radical reduction of armed forces and a fairly lengthy period of political and economic reconstruction before it can achieve a reunited national existence. The necessary controls for the operation of such a proposal could be supplied by the UN or in some other mutually agreed manner. Some major elements in a specific proposal might be the following (submitted purely for illustrative purposes) :

(a) A cease-fire based on the conditions recently set forth by Laniel and presumably including also return of all prisoners.

(b) Arrangements for reciprocal reduction of native armed forces and armament under controlled conditions.

(c) Concentration of non-native armed forces at stated bases and their reduction in accordance with a timetable geared to the reduction of native forces. (Substantial non-native forces should remain until final establishment of representative native government in order to guarantee the lives and property of the French residents and their native supporters.)

(d) No change in status quo of Vietnamese Government or of Democratic Republic of Vietnam so far as international relations are concerned. This would mean in effect that the question of Vietnam's definitive membership in the French Union would not be settled until the formation of a unified national government in 1957 (see below), although present and prospective constitutional and treaty relationships between France and Vietnam would continue in force as long as the present Vietnam Government endures.

(e) Provisional arrangements for local administration including an allocation of provinces more or less on a status quo basis. This would amount in effect to a continuation for a couple of years of the patchwork which has characterized the eight war years. Provision for a gradual restoration of freedom of movement throughout the country would also be required although in the case of outstanding political or military leaders this would be a delicate matter and might be considerably delayed.

(f) Provisions for the prompt restoration of major roads, railroads and communications throughout the country. France and the US might announce a willingness to devote a substantial portion of the money they are now spending on fighting the war to the intensive reconstruction of Vietnam.

(g) Provisions for the political reconstruction of the country including the announcement of January 1st, 1957 (for example) as the date for nation-wide elections to a national assembly which would draw up a definitive constitution for Vietnam.

(9) The above is of course far from being even an outline of a complete proposal. I am not convinced myself of the workability of all the suggestions made. But I do think that our side can and should work out a proposal, which, if accepted by the enemy, we could live with. It should also be one which, if refused by the enemy, would at least give us the "conference" advantage of having taken, at the opening of the discussions on Indochina, a comprehensive and reasonable attitude. Furthermore, the fact of having made a real effort to find a workable solution through negotiations should improve the position of the three governments most concerned on our side (France, Vietnam and US) with their own public opinions should it prove necessary and feasible to develop further military assets in order to seek a solution through military means.

Moscow, March 17, 1954—8 p. m.

1087. Repeated information niact London 158, Paris 217. Report of my conversation with Kuznetsov follows (Embtel 1085<sup>1</sup>):

Kuznetsov read and then handed me aide-mémoire given in my immediately preceding telegram.<sup>2</sup>

I told him I would of course, communicate it immediately to my government but, with reference to statement in first paragraph concerning consultation with Chinese Communist Government, I wished to remind him that in accordance with Berlin decision the four powers and the four powers alone were responsible for organizing the conference and that while Soviet Government of course had the right to consult with any government it wished, this could not be interpreted as indicating that CPR had any special right whatsoever as compared with other invited countries nor any role to play in the organization of the conference.

Kuznetsov said that Soviet Government of course had right to consult as it desired and considered that was useful to know the views of the parties in the conference.

I repeated that that would apply equally to any other countries invited to attend and read to him the pertinent paragraphs from the Russian text of the Berlin agreement which made it plain that the four Foreign Ministers of the four countries were proposing the Korean political conference at Geneva and hence were responsible for the arrangements, repeating that CPR was an invited country on the same basis as all others invited.

Kuznetsov did not attempt to argue the point. He did not contest my interpretation of the Berlin agreement and in fact stated that we (meaning, I presume, officials) had no right to alter an agreement reached by the four Foreign Ministers.

I believe it would be important in replying to this aide-mémoire the point that the Chinese Communists were consulted by Soviet Government by its own desire and not by any right should be reemphasized. It will be noted that Soviet reply raises in substance certain points not contained in my aide-mémoire of March 5 based on Deptel 548<sup>3</sup> such as official and working languages at the conference and method of interpretation which I read to be similar to system used at Berlin ACC Building. Apart from this and reference to Chinese consultation, Soviet reply accepts most of our suggestions. Suggestion that French should speak for four powers in dealing with SYG is part of current Soviet attempt to play up to French sensibilities and is clearly designed to get away from the idea of four in order not to underline the absence of Communist China. Contents of document would appear to confirm fact that delay was due to discussions with China and reference to consultation and suggestion that Chinese would be official and working language is probably result of compromise designed to create appearance that Communist China if not fully on parity with four powers is at least not quite on same level as other invited powers.

4850. British Embassy has approached Department re possibility Soviet may raise European questions at Geneva. They have showed us copy Foreign Office cable summarized below and requested Department's views.

Begin summary. Nothing to be gained by reopening Berlin discussions on Germany and Austria unless Russians prepared to modify their position. While they would seem to have no interest in resuming discussions they have given increasing attention recently to security proposals tabled by Molotov at Berlin. Already agreed composition and agenda for Geneva should preclude discussion such European items and we should "presumably" refuse consideration on these grounds.

If Soviet suggest further talks re European matters by Four Foreign Ministers (without Communist China) Western powers should point out views of four governments fully expressed at Berlin and no useful purpose served by further negotiation unless and until Soviet government prepared to agree to free elections in Germany and withdrawal of additional demands re Austria. We would then meet at time and place mutually agreed but not at Geneva conference, task of which already sufficient.

Another possibility is Soviet attempt at Geneva to obtain agreement to (A) Five Power conference to consider international tension or (B) reconvening Four Power conference to consider European matters. Re (B) we should not commit ourselves to hold conference unless and until we feel it can serve a useful purpose. Re (A) "Our final attitude must to some extent be dependent, so far at least as the Far East is concerned, upon whatever progress is made at Geneva over Korea and Indochina." End summary.

We have informed Embassy we think it unlikely European issues will be raised by Soviets at Geneva. 1. Embassy officer asked call this noon at Foreign Office where he given oral statement UK position as follows:

(a) We agree (i) We must do all we can prevent principle from being established at Geneva that the five powers are recognized as being in a special position as a kind of inner directing group, and (ii) before substantive talks can begin on Indochina procedural question must first be settled as to which are the "other interested states" to be invited.

(b) But we think that to insist too formally and rigidly that this procedural question is a matter for decision by the four powers might merely compel Communists press thesis it is matter for the five; moreover in practice the procedural question cannot be settled without consultation of some kind with the Chinese.

(c) Therefore, our best hope of making progress without precipitating the five-power issue lies in maintaining principle that all powers at Geneva are there on same footing, in avoiding formal establishment of any inner group whether four power or five power and in keeping all consultations outside the conference meetings as private and informal as possible and our procedures reasonably flexible.

<sup>1</sup> The Department in telegram 4818 to London, Mar. 18, asked for confirmation that Britain agreed that after opening of the conference, four Foreign Ministers at Geneva would take up and decide the questions of (1) participants in the Indochina phase, (2) issuance of invitations, and (3) the date on which substantive discussions could begin. (396.1 GE/3-1854)

<sup>2</sup> In telegram 4053 from London, Mar. 20, the Embassy informed the Department that the Foreign Office had offered the tentative view that the U.S. position might be too rigid and that "while we can avoid substantive talks on Indochina beginning concurrently with substantive talks on Korea, it may prove quite impossible avoid procedural talks on Indochina beginning immediately conference opens." (396.1 GE/3-2054)

2. In telegram sent Washington yesterday evening Foreign Office outlines for British Embassy its thinking on number of related points. Foreign Office believes we will have difficulty in preventing use of Chinese as official language, especially as Chinese is recognized as official language in UN. If Soviets insist on use of Chinese as official language, we might initially counter by proposing English, French and Russian as official languages and Chinese and Korean (and perhaps others) as unofficial languages. We must not however let ourselves be maneuvered into a position where conference could break down merely over relatively minor question of procedure, and in event strong opposition from Communists should be prepared give in on language question. As might be expected, Foreign Office concerned not so much over issues of prestige (including whether or not Chinese Communists gain qualified recognition as great power) as over necessity of having western position at Geneva defensible in eyes of as many nations as possible.

The Secretary of Defense (Wilson) to the Secretary of State

WASHINGTON, March 23, 1954.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Pursuant to a recommendation of the Under Secretary of State, the Department of Defense has considered the military implications of a negotiated settlement to terminate the hostilities in Indochina. The views and recommendations of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on this matter were submitted to me in a memorandum dated 12 March 1954. These views, together with the views of General G. B. Erskine, USMC (Ret), Chairman of the Subcommittee of the President's Special Committee, were submitted to the Special Committee in a memorandum dated 17 March 1954.<sup>1</sup> It is understood that the Department of State is presently considering General Erskine's report.

I am fully in accord with General Erskine's recommendations and the views and recommendations of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in this matter. Accordingly, there is forwarded herewith for your information a copy of the aforementioned documents which represent the views of the Department of Defense. It is recommended that these views be carefully considered in preparation of the United States position on Indochina for the forthcoming conference at Geneva.

Sincerely yours,

C. E. WILSON

[Enclosure 1]

Memorandum by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the Secretary of Defense (Wilson)

WASHINGTON, 12 March 1954.

Subject: Preparation of Department of Defense Views Regarding Negotiations on Indochina for the Forthcoming Geneva
Conference

1. This memorandum is in response to your memorandum dated 5 March 1954, subject as above.

2. In their consideration of this problem, the Joint Chiefs of Staff have reviewed United States Objectives And Courses of Action With Respect To Southeast Asia (NSC 5405),<sup>2</sup> in the light of developments since that policy was approved on 16 January 1954, and they are of the opinion that, from the military point of view, the statement of policy set forth therein remains entirely valid. The Joint Chiefs of Staff reaffirm their views concerning the strategic importance of Indochina to the security interests of the United States and the Free World in general, as reflected in NSC 5405. They are firmly of the belief that the loss of Indochina to the Communists would constitute a political and military setback of the most serious consequences.

3. With respect to the possible courses of action enumerated in paragraph 2 of your memorandum, the Joint Chiefs of Staff submit the following views:

a. Maintenance of the status quo. In the absence of a very substantial improvement in the French Union military situation, which could best be accomplished by the aggressive prosecution of military operations, it is highly improbable that Communist agreement could be obtained to a negotiated settlement which would be consistent with basic United States objectives in Southeast Asia. Therefore, continuation of the fighting with the objective of seeking a military victory appears as the only alternative to acceptance of a compromise settlement based upon one or more of the possible other courses of action upon which the views of the Joint Chiefs of Staff have been specifically requested in your memorandum.

b. Imposition of a cease-fire. The acceptance of a cease-fire in advance of a satisfactory settlement would, in all probability, lead to a political stalemate attended by a concurrent and irretrievable deterioration of the Franco-Vietnamese military position. (See paragraph 27 of NSC 5405.)

c. Establishment of a coalition government. The acceptance of a settlement based upon the establishment of a coalition government in one or more of the Associated States would open the way for the ultimate seizure of control by the Communists under conditions which might preclude timely and effective external assistance in the prevention of such seizure. (See subparagraph 26b of NSC 5405.)

<sup>2</sup> For the full text of NSC 5405, Jan. 16, 1954, and related documentation, see

d. Partition of the country. The acceptance of a partitioning of one or more of the Associated States would represent at least a partial victory for the Viet Minh, and would constitute recognition of a Communist territorial expansion achieved through force of arms. Any partition acceptable to the Communists would in all likelihood include the Tonkin Delta area which is acknowledged to be the keystone of the defense of mainland Southeast Asia, since in friendly hands it cuts off the most favorable routes for any massive southward advance towards central and southern Indochina and Thailand. (See paragraph 4 of NSC 5405.) A partitioning involving Vietnam and Laos in the vicinity of the 16th Parallel, as has been suggested (see State cable from London, No. 3802, dated 4 March 1954<sup>3</sup>), would cede to Communist control approximately half of Indochina, its people and its resources, for exploitation in the interests of further Communist aggression; specifically, it would extend the Communist dominated area to the borders of Thailand, thereby enhancing the opportunities for Communist infiltration and eventual subversion of that country. Any cession of Indochinese territory to the Communists would constitute a retrogressive step in the Containment Policy, and would invite similar Communist tactics against other countries of Southeast Asia.

e. Self-determination through free elections. Such factors as the prevalence of illiteracy, the lack of suitable educational media, and the absence of adequate communications in the outlying areas would render the holding of a truly representative plebiscite of doubtful feasibility. The Communists, by virtue of their superior capability in the field of propaganda, could readily pervert the issue as being a choice between national independence and French Colonial rule. Furthermore, it would be militarily infeasible to prevent wide-spread intimidation of voters by Communist partisans. While it is obviously impossible to make a dependable forecast as to the outcome of a free election, current intelligence leads the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the belief that a settlement based upon free elections would be attended by almost certain loss of the Associated States to Communist control.

4. The Joint Chiefs of Staff are of the opinion that any negotiated settlement which would involve substantial concessions to the Communists on the part of the Governments of France and the Associated States, such as in c and d above, would be generally regarded by Asian peoples as a Communist victory, and would cast widespread doubt on the ability of anti-Communist forces ultimately to stem the tide of Communist control in the Far East. Any such settlement would, in all probability, lead to the loss of Indochina to the Communists and deal a damaging blow to the national will of other countries of the Far East to oppose Communism.

5. Should Indochina be lost to the Communists, and in the absence of immediate and effective counteraction on the part of the Western

<sup>3</sup> The Embassy in London reported in telegram 3802 to the Department, Mar. 4, that "if US and France object to an amalgamation of Vietnam and Viet Minh administrations, they can agree to a division along 16th parallel. Some such solution would tend to guarantee China's southern frontier." (396.1 GE/3-454)

Powers which would of necessity be on a much greater scale than that which could be decisive in Indochina, the conquest of the remainder of Southeast Asia would inevitably follow. Thereafter, longer term results involving the gravest threats to fundamental United States security interests in the Far East and even to the stability and security of Europe could be expected to ensue. (See paragraph 1 of NSC 5405.)

6. Orientation of Japan toward the West is the keystone of United States policy in the Far East. In the judgment of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the loss of Southeast Asia to Communism would, through economic and political pressures, drive Japan into an accommodation with the Communist Bloc. The communization of Japan would be the probable ultimate result.

7. The rice, tin, rubber, and oil of Southeast Asia and the industrial capacity of Japan are the essential elements which Red China needs to build a monolithic military structure far more formidable than that of Japan prior to World War II. If this complex of military power is permitted to develop to its full potential, it would ultimately control the entire Western and Southwestern Pacific region and would threaten South Asia and the Middle East.

8. Both the United States and France have invested heavily of their resources toward the winning of the struggle in Indochina. Since 1950 the United States has contributed in excess of 1.6 billion dollars in providing logistic support. France is reported to have expended during the period 1946-1953, the equivalent of some 4.2 billion dollars. This investment, in addition to the heavy casualties sustained by the French and Vietnamese, will have been fruitless for the anti-Communist cause, and indeed may redound in part to the immediate benefit of the enemy, if control of a portion of Indochina should now be ceded to the Communists. While the additional commitment of resources required to achieve decisive results in Indochina might be considerable, nevertheless this additional effort would be far less than that which would be required to stem the tide of Communist advance once it had gained momentum in its progress into Southeast Asia.

9. If, despite all United States efforts to the contrary, the French Government elects to accept a negotiated settlement which, in the opinion of the United States, would fail to provide reasonably adequate assurance of the future political and territorial integrity of Indochina, it is considered that the United States should decline to associate itself with such a settlement, thereby preserving freedom of action to pursue directly with the governments of the Associated States and with other allies (notable the United Kingdom) ways and means of continuing the struggle against the Viet Minh in Indochina without participation of the French. The advantages of so doing would, from the military point of view, outweigh the advantage of maintaining political unity of action with the French in regard to Indochina.

10. It is recommended that the foregoing views be conveyed to the Department of State for consideration in connection with the formulation of a United States position on the Indochina problem for the forthcoming Geneva Conference and for any conversations with the governments of the United Kingdom, France, and, if deemed advisable, with the governments of the Associated States preliminary to the conference. In this connection attention is particularly requested to paragraphs 25 and 26 of NSC 5405; it is considered to be of the utmost importance that the French Government be urged not to abandon the aggressive prosecution of military operations until a satisfactory settlement has been achieved.

11. It is further recommended that, in order to be prepared for possible contingencies which might arise incident to the Geneva Conference, the National Security Council consider now the extent to which the United States would be willing to commit its resources in support of the Associated States in the effort to prevent the loss of Indochina to the Communists either:

a. In concert with the French; or

b. In the event the French elect to withdraw, in concert with other allies or, if necessary, unilaterally.

12. In order to assure ample opportunity for the Joint Chiefs of Staff to present their views on these matters, it is requested that the Military Services be represented on the Department of Defense working team which, in coordination with the Department of State, will consider all U.S. position papers pertaining to the Geneva discussions on Indochina.

Subject: Military Implications of the U.S. Position on Indo-China in Geneva

1. The attached analysis and recommendations concerning the U.S. position in Geneva have been developed by a Sub-committee consisting of representatives of the Department of Defense, JCS, State and CIA.

2. This paper reflects the conclusions of the Department of Defense and the JCS and has been collaborated with the State Department representatives who have reserved their position thereon.

3. In brief, this paper concludes that from the point of view of the U.S. strategic position in Asia, and indeed throughout the world, no solution to the Indo-China problem short of victory is acceptable. It recommends that this be the basis for the U.S. negotiating position prior to and at the Geneva Conference.

4. It also notes that, aside from the improvement of the present military situation in Indo-China, none of the courses of action considered provide a satisfactory solution to the Indo-China war.

5. The paper notes that the implications of this position are such as to merit consideration by the NSC and the President.

6. I recommend that the Special Committee note and approve this report and forward it with the official Department of State views to the NSC.

[Subenclosure]

MILITARY IMPLICATION OF U.S. NEGOTIATIONS ON INDO-CHINA AT GENEVA

I Problem

To develop a U.S. position with reference to the Geneva Conference as it relates to Indo-China, encompassing the military implications of certain alternatives which might arise in connection with that conference.

II Major Considerations

A. The Department of Defense and the JCS have reviewed NSC 5405 in the light of developments since that policy was approved from a military point of view and in the light of certain possible courses of action as they affect the Geneva Conference. These are:

1. Maintenance of the status quo in Indo-China.
2. Imposition of a cease-fire in Indo-China.
3. Establishment of a coalition government.
4. Partition of the country.
5. Self-determination through free elections.

B. The Department of Defense and the JCS have also considered the impact of the possible future status of Indo-China on the remainder of Southeast Asia and Japan and have considered the effect which any substantial concessions to the Communists on the part of France and the Associated States would have with respect to Asian peoples as a whole and U.S. objectives in Europe.

C. Indo-China is the area in which the Communist and non-Communist worlds confront one another actively on the field of battle. The loss of this battle by whatever means would have the most serious repercussions on U.S. and free world interests, not only in Asia but in Europe and elsewhere.

D. French withdrawal or defeat in Indo-China would have most serious consequences on the French position in the world; the free world position in Asia; and in the U.S. on the domestic attitude vis-à-vis the French. It would, furthermore, constitute a de facto failure on the part of France to abide by its commitments in U.N. to repel aggression.

E. Unless the free world maintains its position in Indo-China, the Communists will be in a position to exploit what will be widely regarded in Asia as a Communist victory. Should Indo-China be lost to the Communists, and in the absence of immediate and effective counteraction by the free world (which would of necessity be on a much greater scale than that required to be decisive in Indo-China), the conquest of the remainder of Southeast Asia would inevitably follow. Thereafter, longer term results, probably forcing Japan into an accommodation with the Communist bloc, and threatening the stability and security of Europe, could be expected to ensue.

F. As a measure of U.S. participation in the Indo-Chinese war it is noted that the U.S. has since 1950 programmed in excess of $2.4 billion in support of the French-Associated States operations in Indo-China. France is estimated to have expended during the period 1946-1953 the equivalent of some $5.4 billion. This investment, in addition to the heavy casualties sustained by the French and Vietnamese, to say nothing of the great moral and political involvement of the U.S. and French, will have been fruitless for the anti-Communist cause if control of all or a portion of Indo-China should now be ceded to the Communists.

III Facts Bearing on the Problem

A. NSC 5405, approved 16 January 1954, states U.S. policy with respect to Indo-China.

B. The French desire for peace in Indo-China almost at any cost represents our greatest vulnerability in the Geneva talks.

IV Discussion

For the views of the JCS see Tab A.<sup>4</sup>

V Conclusions

A. Loss of Indo-China to the Communists would constitute a political and military setback of the most serious consequences and would almost certainly lead to the ultimate Communist domination of all of Southeast Asia.

B. The U.S. policy and objectives with respect to Southeast Asia as reflected in NSC 5405 remain entirely valid in the light of developments since that policy was approved.

C. With respect to possible alternative courses of action enumerated in paragraph IIA above, the Department of Defense has reached the following conclusions:

1. Maintenance of status quo in Indo-China. It is highly improbable that a Communist agreement could be obtained to any negotiated settlement which would be consistent with basic U.S. objectives in Southeast Asia in the absence of a very substantial improvement in the French Union military situation. This could best be accomplished by the aggressive prosecution of military operations.

2. Imposition of a cease-fire. The acceptance of a cease-fire in advance of a satisfactory settlement would in all probability lead to a political stalemate attended by a concurrent and irretrievable deterioration of the Franco-Vietnamese military position.

3. Establishment of a coalition government. The acceptance of a settlement based upon this course of action would open the way for the ultimate seizure of control by the Communists under conditions which would almost certainly preclude timely and effective external assistance designed to prevent such seizure.

4. Partition of the country. The acceptance of this course of action would represent at the least a partial victory for the Viet Minh and would constitute a retrogressive step in the attainment of U.S. policy and would compromise the achievement of that policy in Southeast Asia.

5. Self-determination through free elections. Many factors render the holding of a truly representative plebiscite infeasible and such a course of action would, in any case, lead to the loss of the Associated States to Communist control.

IV [VI] Recommendations

A. That the U.S. and U.K. and France reach an agreement with respect to Indo-China which rejects all of the courses enumerated above (except No. 1 on the assumption that the status quo can be altered to result in a military victory) prior to the initiation of discussions on Indo-China at Geneva. Failing this, the U.S. should actively oppose each of these solutions, should not entertain discussion of Indo-China at Geneva, or having entertained it, should ensure that no agreements are reached.

B. If, despite all U.S. efforts to the contrary, the French Government elects to accept a negotiated settlement which fails to provide reasonably adequate assurance of the future political and territorial integrity of Indo-China, the U.S. should decline to associate itself with such a settlement and should pursue, directly with the governments of the Associated States and with other Allies (notably the U.K.), ways and means of continuing the struggle against the Viet Minh in Indo-China without participation of the French.

C. The Special Committee has reviewed the findings and recommendations of the Department of Defense and considers that the implications of this position are such as to warrant their review at the highest levels and by the National Security Council, after which they should become the basis of the U.S. position with respect to Indo-China at Geneva. The Special Committee recognizes moreover that certain supplementary and alternative courses of action designed to ensure a favorable resolution of the situation in Indo-China merit consideration by the NSC. These, and the Special Committee recommendations with respect thereto, are:

1. The political steps to be taken to ensure an agreed U.S.-U.K.-French position concerning Indo-China at Geneva. That the NSC review the proposed political action designed to achieve this objective with particular attention to possible pressure against the French position in North Africa, and in NATO, and to the fact that discussions concerning implementation of course 2 and 3 hereunder will be contingent upon the success or failure of this course of action.

2. Overt U.S. involvement in Indo-China. That the NSC determine the extent of U.S. willingness, over and above the contingencies listed in NSC 5405, to commit U.S. air, naval and ultimately ground forces to the direct resolution of the war in Indo-China with or without French support and in the event of failure in course 1 above. That in this connection the NSC take cognizance of present domestic and international climate of opinion with respect to U.S. involvement and consider the initiation of such steps as may be necessary to ensure worldwide recognition of the significance of such steps in Indo-China as a part of the struggle against Communist aggression.

3. The development of a substitute base of operations. That the NSC consider whether this course of action is acceptable as a substitute for 1 and 2 above and recognizing that the hope of implementation thereof would be one of major expenditure and long-term potential only.

Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs (Raynor)*

[WASHINGTON,] March 24, 1954.

Subject: Geneva Conference

Participants: Ambassador Spender, Australian Embassy Minister Blakeney, Australian Embassy
Mr. Robert Murphy, Deputy Under Secretary
Mr. H. Raynor, Director, BNA

Ambassador Spender called this afternoon at his request accompanied by Minister Blakeney. He handed to Mr. Murphy the attached Aide-Mémoire<sup>1</sup> indicating that Australia considered itself an "interested State" in so far as the Indo-Chinese phase of the Conference is concerned and would desire to participate in that phase of the Conference if participation is extended beyond the Four Powers, Communist China and the Associated States.

Mr. Murphy received the Aide-Mémoire and indicated that the matter of the composition of the Indo-China phase of the Conference had not yet been determined; in fact might possibly not be determined until Geneva itself.

Ambassador Spender then asked a number of questions attempting to ascertain what position the United States and also the French intended to take on Indo-China at the Conference. He expressed the view that while probably agreement could not be reached with the Communist at the Conference that it was important that the Western participants develop a firm position prior to the Conference and also emerge from the Conference with a united Western position. He expressed the view that the Communist side would probably hold out for one or more of the three following concessions from the West: (a) recognition of Red China; (b) admission of Red China to the United Nations and (c) relaxation of trade barriers with Red China.

The Ambassador expressed some concern at waiting too long for the development of a French position being apprehensive that the French might desire to go to Geneva without a position and thus have full maneuverability at the Conference. The Ambassador also inquired about the military situation in Indo-China but agreed that more serious factors were the political situation in Paris and also the political problem vis-à-vis the Associated States.

Mr. Murphy indicated that although we were keeping in close touch with the French we did not yet have any indication of what their position would be at Geneva. He indicated that we have not thus far been pressing the French too hard as we were not anxious to expedite the beginning of the Indo-China phase of the Conference. He indicated to the Ambassador that we hoped the Conference would open on Korea and exhaust that subject before beginning on Indo-China although he admitted that events might not work out in that manner. He admitted that a French desire for maneuverability at Geneva might be a contributing factor in their delay in developing a position but he thought also that there were many diverse opinions in Paris and that the government might be having real difficulty in developing a government position.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> In a staff meeting on Mar. 26 attended by the Secretary, Murphy, Robertson, Merchant, MacArthur, Bowie, and others, the Secretary reported on the conversation with Ambassador Spender. He said the Ambassador was very concerned that the Allies be organized in order to take action quickly if the situation in Indochina deteriorated. The Secretary inquired how many votes could be obtained in the United Nations if the United States proposed action on the Indochina problem. He remarked that it would have to be clear to every country in the world that the Associated States were truly independent. MacArthur suggested that it might be useful to ask Ambassador Spender to discuss the matter with the British, indicating that "the rather indifferent U.K. attitude tended to support the French desire for peace at practically any cost." MacArthur thought "it would be very useful if the Australians would ram home the hard facts of life as to what else would happen in Southeast Asia if Indochina fell." US POSITION ON PARTICIPATION IN THE INDOCHINA PHASE OF THE

Background

At Berlin, the four Foreign Ministers agreed, so far as the Indochina phase of the Geneva Conference is concerned "that the problem of restoring peace in Indochina shall also be discussed at the conference to which representatives of the United States, France, the United Kingdom, the USSR, the Chinese People's Republic and other interested states will be invited." The four Foreign Ministers did not agree as to what the "other interested states" would be or as to how the invitations would be issued to the participants when agreed.

<sup>1</sup> A cover sheet indicated that this position paper was prepared by Bonsal of PSA and that it was revised and approved by the working group on Mar. 23.

Timing of Four-Power Agreement on Participants

It is considered desirable that the question of participation in the Indochina phase of the Geneva Conference be decided by the four Foreign Ministers at Geneva after April 26. No sentiment has apparently yet developed either on our side or in Moscow for a more rapid solution. (This may well mean that substantive discussion of the Indochina problem cannot begin at Geneva until some weeks after the date scheduled for the Korean discussions.) It is important, however, that US, UK and French agreement as to the position to be assumed be reached prior to the Geneva meeting.

Participation in the Indochina Discussions

Since the definition "other interested states" is extremely vague, there are several possible formulas. The following appear to be the principal ones:

Formula A—Restriction of conference to four inviting powers plus Chinese People's Republic.

This formula has the obvious disadvantage of a five-power discussion of the Indochina problem and hence is totally unacceptable to the U.S. However, it might conceivably be supported by the French on the basis that it is desirable to prevent Ho Chi Minh's government from being represented at Geneva. The French would then represent the interests of the Associated States and the Chinese People's Republic would represent the Viet Minh. Our position should be contrary to such a formula and in favor of one which would include the Associated States as participants at Geneva.

Formula B—Inclusion, in addition to the four Berlin powers plus the Chinese People's Republic, of the States of Indochina including on our side Viet-Nam, Cambodia and Laos and on the other side the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam (we should resist inclusion of the negligible Communist-controlled nationalist movements in Cambodia and Laos).

This formula has the advantage of being in close approximation to the formula already accepted in the case of Korea since it would involve in addition to the four Berlin powers only those states directly involved in the conflict. It would have the disadvantage that outside of the four Berlin powers and Communist China, there would be no other states participating in both the Korean and the Indochina phase of the conference. This could be taken to mean a partial acceptance of the five-power concept so persistently and unsuccessfully advanced by Molotov at Berlin.

Formula C—Inclusion in addition to the states included under Formula B of others having land boundaries with Indochina, i.e., Thailand and Burma.

This formula would have the advantage of obviating any five-power nucleus for both phases of the conference since Thailand is already included in the Korean phase. Furthermore, the Thai interest in developments in Indochina has been frequently expressed, having almost resulted in a Thai presentation to the UN. The "land boundary" concept seems to offer a good factual limitation on the "interested states" definition. I believe that we could live with the Burmese and that we might in fact reasonably hope that Burmese participation could be useful at Geneva and educational in its end results.

Formula D—Inclusion in addition to the states included under Formula C of a number of other states in the general area of South and Southeast Asia.

Certainly the interest of states in the general area in the restoration of peace in Indochina cannot be denied. There would be included in this formula such friendly countries as the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand (in addition to Thailand) and such neutralist countries as Indonesia and India (in addition to Burma). Pakistan might also be included. This formula would produce an unwieldy conference "cluttered" with neutralists especially India and Indonesia. It would permit countries rejected by us from the Korean phase to be present at Geneva and would undoubtedly therefore produce some of the disadvantages which we are seeking to avoid.

Recommendation

On the basis of the above considerations, Formula C best serves the interests of the U.S. Under this formula, the four Berlin powers, the Chinese People's Republic, the three Associated States of Indochina, the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, Thailand and Burma would participate in the Indochina phase of the conference.

He said that yesterday Vinogradov had called on him, accompanied by a counselor of Embassy and had talked for about an hour. Three quarters of an hour had been devoted to the Geneva Conference and 15 minutes had been devoted to the EDC. Vinogradov had made no attempt whatsoever to connect the two subjects. Bidault had the impression that Vinogradov was really and sincerely concerned with Geneva and that his representations regarding EDC were merely for form's sake.

On Geneva, Bidault said his personal impression was that the Soviets were really frightened of their Chinese ally. He felt that the Soviets for their own reasons sincerely desired a period of peace, and that they were deeply afraid that their Chinese friends might drag them into an adventure which they themselves did not at all desire.

For this reason, Bidault said, he felt that the Soviets were really desirous of achieving peace, or at least a cease-fire in Indochina. He felt that the Soviets at Geneva, in spite of any position they might feel they had to take publicly, would be hoping for US assistance in controlling Communist China. Bidault said that this was his strong personal impression which he had gathered at Berlin and which had now been reinforced by his conversation with Vinogradov.<sup>1</sup> He asked that his views be conveyed personally to the Secretary.

On contrary our position which we have stated firmly and categorically to UK and French Embassies here is that we will not agree to any procedural arrangement which gives or implies that Communist China has some special position different from other participants. In particular we would not agree to any proposal that Communist China would be consulted by US, UK, France or USSR re composition of Indochina phase of Geneva Conference. As practical matter we would expect that Soviets on their part would in fact consult China but tripartite agreement at Berlin clearly would preclude any consultation with China by Western Big Three since in fact such consultation would give China a special status.

To sum up we would reject any proposal, procedural or otherwise, which would give Communist China a special place or imply a "Five Power" concept.

3353. For the Ambassador. I am seriously concerned by what appear to be growing expectations in France that Geneva will produce a settlement for Indochina as a result of US concessions to Communist China. Apart from our estimate that, given present military and political situation in Indochina, any settlement negotiated in immediate future could only result in ultimate complete control of all Indochina by Communists, there is no possibility whatsoever of concessions by US to Communist China in return for any promises or agreements they might indicate their willingness to enter. Long experience has taught us that exchange of US performance for Communist promises is a swindle and we will have no part in it.

I cannot believe that France with its great history and its understandable desire to continue in a role of world leadership with the US and UK could contemplate acceptance of a settlement which under existing conditions would abandon millions of loyal Vietnamese, Laotians and Cambodians to the mercies of a cruel and ruthless enemy. This would be incompatible with the high moral purpose which has characterized France's long history. To do so would result not only in the loss by France of her position in the Far East but in an abrupt decline in French prestige throughout the world with almost incalculable consequences.

I have no doubt of Bidault's comprehension of this matter and I know that his resolution is shared by many Frenchmen in and outside the government. I believe, however, that you should lose no effective opportunity to make the foregoing points forcefully with individual French leaders and particularly with those who show signs of wavering. They said they would welcome any indications, however informal or preliminary, as to US thinking with respect to Indochina phase of conference as of assistance to them in formulating recommendations as to French position.

There are certain questions, partially procedural and partially substantive, on which they would particularly welcome our thinking. One was states to be included for Indochina phase. If, as they thought might be desirable west wished Thailand and Australia included, and USSR wished to have India and Indonesia, participants would be numerous. In these circumstances what would be US view concerning some sort of working sessions limited to representatives of five-powers? Chauvel said one possible way of meeting problem of Associated States-Viet Minh representation would be to follow UN procedure of having anyone of them called by chairman to participate on ad hoc basis rather than full participation at all sessions. He would welcome our reaction.

They have made similar approach to British.

In view of present fluid nature and early stage of French thinking, believe it would be to our advantage communicate as much preliminary US thinking as we can as soon as possible without waiting for such tripartite talks as may be agreed upon.

Editorial Note

On March 29, 1954, Secretary Dulles delivered an address on "The Threat of a Red Asia" before the Overseas Press Club of America at New York City. The Secretary outlined the position of the Eisenhower Administration with respect to Indochina and reaffirmed the support of the United States for the struggle being waged there by the French Union forces. Secretary Dulles referred to recent statements made by himself and President Eisenhower "designed to impress upon potential aggressors that aggression might lead to action at places and by means of free world choosing, so that aggression would cost more than it could gain." He sought to clarify further the United States position by stating: "Under the conditions of today, the imposition on Southeast Asia of the political system of Communist Russia and its Chinese Communist ally, by whatever means, would be a grave threat to the whole free community. The United States feels that the possibility should not be passively accepted but should be met by united action. This might involve serious risks. But these risks are far less than those that will face us a few years from now if we dare not be resolute today."

Draft Position Paper Prepared for the Indochina Phase of the Geneva Conference<sup>1</sup>

U.S. POSITION WITH FRENCH

In developing a US position on Indochina to be taken with the French, we should use as a point of departure the understandings reached at Berlin where it was clearly understood that neither the US nor France would countenance a solution leading directly or indirectly to a turnover of the area to the Communists. Prevention of such a development is of course our essential objective at Geneva. Therefore, we should attempt to obtain British agreement to the position in Section I below, and then present it to the French in an effort to get tripartite agreement before the Geneva talks on Indochina start. The position in Section II, which implies a French sliding from their Berlin commitment, should remain purely a US position for later use if necessary. (It should be borne in mind throughout the paper that the term "French" refers to the elements of the Laniel cabinet who have heretofore opposed immediate negotiations with the Viet Minh. Any "French" decisions and conclusions at Geneva are probably valid only to the extent they can obtain Assembly support.)

I. POSITION TO BE TAKEN WITH FRENCH IN FIRST INSTANCE

1. At Berlin it was understood with Bidault that we, and presumably the French also, would retain full freedom of action at Geneva and were committed to nothing. We are confident France will not take any step at Geneva which will jeopardize our Berlin understanding.

2. There is no possibility whatever of extending any concessions to Communist China (such as recognizing the regime, favoring UN admission, liberalizing trade controls or altering our Formosa policy) in exchange for promises or agreements they might indicate willingness to enter. Long experience has taught us that exchange of our performance for Communist promises is a swindle and we will have no part of it.

3. We consider it highly unlikely that Communist agreement can be obtained at Geneva to a negotiated settlement which would meet the basic conditions for the protection of the US position and interests in Southeast Asia (as stated in NSC 5405).<sup>2</sup> However, we likewise consider it desirable to have a positive basis for our own planning and thinking.

<sup>1</sup> A covering memorandum indicated that this paper was prepared by McBride of WE and that it was revised to reflect comments on an earlier draft.

4. We are of course fully cognizant of the French domestic situation, the pressures to end the war in France, and the warweariness of the French people after eight years of warfare. We also realize the Vietnamese also strongly desire the end of the war.

5. We agreed to having Indochina discussed at the Korean Political Conference at Geneva for the purpose of helping the French Government to resist these domestic pressures, and in order thus to assist France to get ahead with the Navarre Plan.

6. If the French are determined to carry on the war in the absence of a settlement at Geneva, we will of course continue our policy of assisting the French war effort and even of seeking for additional means to help within the general scope of our present arrangements.

7. We believe in the worldwide interests of France that it is essential she continue the struggle to a satisfactory conclusion if no progress is made at Geneva. If France were to abandon Indochina and the millions of anti-Communist Vietnamese her whole position in the world would suffer irreparable harm.

8. Finally, France should reiterate its commitment to carry on under the Navarre Plan in the absence of a settlement emanating from the Geneva talks. From present indications we believe that the French Government will probably agree to giving us a commitment to carry on the struggle if it can be demonstrated convincingly that failure to make progress at Geneva is clearly due to Communist intransigence. If so, we can adopt at Geneva a position based on the above points, with the further understanding with France that this represents a firm position. We should not tell the French that they should consult with us prior to changing their position, if they find it necessary to shift, since this would imply we admitted the French might in fact weaken. Nevertheless, we would certainly become aware immediately of a shift in position, and, in this event, we should consider other courses with the French as follows:

II. POSITION TO BE TAKEN BY U.S. IF FRENCH POSITION WEAKENS

A. If US Decides to Intervene Directly

1. If there are no concrete results at Geneva, the US should make an offer of prompt US intervention beyond that envisaged in NSC 5405. This of course requires new NSC action, and it is understood this entire question is now under discussion in the NSC. We should communicate this decision to the French in case of necessity, as appears most effective from a timing and tactical viewpoint. A favorable NSC decision in this sense would of course greatly strengthen our position with the French and make continuation of their own effort much more likely.

2. If the French, even upon being informed that the US has decided to participate directly in the war, say they must negotiate in disregard of US security requirements, we should then take the position as follows: (a) we are not prepared to abandon the area; (b) we will proceed in collaboration with the Associated States (if such a course is possible) and other states which might be willing to go along with us, in trying to prevent the loss of Southeast Asia to the Communists. Presumably this course of action would involve departure not only of the US but of the Associated States from Geneva. This would obviously be the most extreme course, and would presuppose that every other possibility had been tried with the French and failed.

B. If US Decides Not to Extend Scope of Its Involvement in Indochinese War

1. In the absence of a favorable decision of the NSC to broaden US direct participation, we should still expect the French Government to carry out its commitment of September 1953 to press forward under the Navarre Plan. We should make sure that the French have taken into account the following possible results stemming from a renegeing of their commitment:

(a) If France through one means or another countenances a Communist takeover in Indochina, it will mean far more than the end of France's position in the Far East. Rather it will be a public exhibition of France's inability to carry on any longer as a member of the three-power alliance in which she has placed such great stock.

(b) The effect of abandonment would be so severe in North Africa as to have serious repercussions not only on the French position there, but also on the nature of the relationship between France and the US in that area.

(c) If the Indochina war ends on terms not offering the minimum essential guarantees, US dollar aid to France would of course automatically cease. If, however, a satisfactory armistice were arranged, and we entered a reconstruction period, France could plan on continued dollar expenditures as a major part of our contribution to the common cause. We know the present favorable French dollar position is due to the Indochina aid program.

(d) Beyond these points, conclusion of negotiations by France resulting in Communist domination of Indochina, an area of extreme strategic interest to us, would result in consequences which we cannot envisage now in Europe as well as elsewhere.

2. If the NSC decision on US participation is negative, and we are confronted with a weakening of the French position, we are faced with a most difficult dilemma. This is a situation which in fact may arise. Under these circumstances, we can either continue the talks or break them off. In the latter event (presupposing a US refusal to participate directly), breaking off the talks would not achieve our objectives, since we have assumed the French are determined and feel it necessary to have negotiations which would not meet US requirements. In this circumstance our interests would best be served by attempting to hold the French to ways and means of continuing the anti-Communist struggle. In this case we might have to take a position on negotiations at variance with NSC 5405 (which rules them out). The best initial approach would doubtless be to take the line that France held a heavy moral responsibility for the millions of loyal Vietnamese who have been on her side not to mention the safety of the French Expeditionary Corps. Furthermore, Laniel was committed to his proposals to the National Assembly on March 5 (see attachment A<sup>3</sup>) on which we might comment as follows:

(a) We regard the Laniel six-point program as a firm position and cannot permit erosion therefrom. While the French may wish to bargain from this position, we can note that Laniel did obtain a vote of confidence on this basis. On the other hand, we realize that we cannot go further. This is his maximum position (and our minimum) so we all must stick to it.

(b) Laniel's Point 6, which bars Viet Minh reinforcements during negotiations, should be spelled out to provide for additional controls by permitting inspection by a specified organism, preferably international. In addition there should be international control of all points covering the means of communication between Communist China and Viet Minh territory.

Thailand and Burma could, if necessary, be included as limitrophe states without opening way for others, but French would prefer not to have Australia since this would open way for participation of Indonesia and others. British supported Australian participation but understood that neither India nor Burma wished to attend. UK also believed Associated States should be full participants and that Chauvel's suggestion of inviting them on ad hoc basis might reflect on their full sovereignty.

(2) British stated Hammarskjold during recent visit to London had sought invitation to send personal representative as observer. British thought this would raise considerable and needless difficulties and proposed advising him that it would be discussed at Geneva and that, in any event, he could be kept appropriately informed through Western channels. French saw legitimate UN interest in Korean phase but none in Indochina phase and disliked idea of SG having "personal" representation. Achilles doubted Washington would favor Hammarskjold proposal.

Reilly said Dennis Allen would represent UK in any such talks and would be available at any time after April 12. Achilles expressed views in Deptel 3401. Chauvel felt strongly tripartite unity would be at least as important at Geneva as it had been at Berlin and that it would be far better to have three powers ascertain in advance what differences might exist between them and endeavor to work them out in advance rather than to have them crop out at Geneva where Russians could take greater advantage of them. Lacoste stated Bidault and Foreign Office most definitely shared our concern at French public expectations of IC settlement at Geneva as result US concessions. He believed Bidault and Foreign Office fully understood US position and state of public and Congressional opinion. (He states that as result meeting reported Embtel 3654 steps had already been taken to emphasize to Cabinet members and ministries concerned that essence of US position was no concessions in exchange for Communist promises.)

Lacoste stated that despite French official realism, government must take into account fact of currently excessive French hopes for Geneva. For example Foreign Office shared our view that any IC agreement reached quickly at Geneva would lead to its ultimate loss and was fully aware of time and difficulty which have been required to reach Korean armistice, but that French public opinion was obviously expecting quick results, as IC debate in Assembly had made only too clear. Part of French Government's job between now and Geneva would be to reduce this excessive optimism, but it would be neither popular nor easy task.

He hoped Bidault and other French Ministers would publicly express thoughts along lines paragraph 2 Deptel 3353 but that US officials would not since these were things which Frenchmen could well expound patriotically but which would sound patronizing to French ears when expressed by others.

He fully shared conviction that we must avoid any misunderstanding as to each other's positions. Close tripartite unity would be essential and it was of paramount importance that failure, if there was failure, at Geneva to produce satisfactory IC settlement must be clearly attributable to Russians and Chinese despite undoubted Communist efforts to put blame on US.

At same time it seems important to find some satisfactory way of developing in advance as much tripartite common ground as possible in order to reduce Western vulnerability to Soviet divisive tactics at Geneva. Berlin was excellent example of benefits of such careful preparatory work. French, and apparently British, are most anxious that preliminary talks be held as soon as possible.

While Embassy can of course reiterate positions given in Deptel 3401 at such tripartite talks as French may call before ministers arrive late in month, believe it would be far preferable to exert maximum influence on French (and British) thinking through positive presentation of US substantive position on specific question as rapidly as Department is able to send it. Even brief visit here, preferably during week beginning April 12, by MacArthur, Robertson or Bonsal would also be desirable or, if Department considers that level too high, anyone else Department may wish to send.

I feel that we must be careful to avoid giving impression to French that we consider US and French positions to be so fundamentally opposed that we do not feel it worthwhile even to attempt tripartite coordination in advance.

Memorandum by the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Aldrich) to the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Eden)<sup>1</sup>

[LONDON, April 6, 1954.]

The position of the United States Government with reference to certain matters arising out of preliminary discussions of the Indochina phase of the forthcoming conference at Geneva is as follows:

1. The United States delegation at Berlin clearly understood from the French Foreign Minister that the agreement to discuss the question of Indochina at Geneva was on the condition that France would not agree to any arrangement which would directly or indirectly result in the turnover of that area to Communist control. The United States presumes that the United Kingdom, because of its vital security interests in the area as well as its role in the free world, would solidly support this position. For the French to agree to any arrangement leading to the surrender of the area would result not only in the loss by France of her position in the Far East but in an abrupt decline in French prestige throughout the world with almost incalculable consequences.

2. The United States is seriously concerned by what appears to be growing expectations in France that Geneva will produce a settlement for Indochina as a result of United States concessions to Communist China. The basic position of the United States on Communist China has been set forth in Secretary Dulles' speech of March 29.<sup>2</sup> Especially pertinent was Secretary Dulles' statement that "We shall not, however, be disposed to give Communist China what it wants from us merely to buy its promises of future good behavior." Apart from the United States estimate that, given the present military and political situation in Indochina, any settlement negotiated in the immediate future could only result in ultimate complete control of all Indochina by the Communists, there is no possibility whatsoever of concessions by the United States to Communist China in return for any promises or agreements they might indicate their willingness to enter. Long experience has shown that the exchange of performance for Communist promises is a swindle; the United States will not participate in any such arrangement.

3. With reference to any special position for Communist China at Geneva, the United States has already made clear its position that it does not consider procedural matters as unimportant and unconnected with substance. It is the firm position of the United States that it will not agree to any procedural arrangement which gives or implies that Communist China has some special position different from other participants. In particular, the United States would not agree to any proposal that Communist China would be consulted by the United States, the United Kingdom, France, or the U.S.S.R. with reference to the composition of the Indochina phase of the Geneva Conference; nor would it agree to the French proposal to constitute a five-power working group on Indochina. As a practical matter, the United States would expect that the Soviets, on their part, would in fact consult China, but the tripartite agreement at Berlin<sup>3</sup> clearly would preclude any consultation of China by the Western Big Three, since in fact such consultation would give China a special status. In summary, the United States remains unalterably opposed to any proposal, procedural or otherwise, which would give Communist China a special place or imply a "five power" concept.

4. On the important question of participation in the Indochina talks, the United States at present envisages that the following states would be present: the United Kingdom, France, the United States, the U.S.S.R., Communist China, and the Associated States. The United States is giving further thought to this matter in preparation for tripartite discussions at Geneva.

5. The United States believes it to be essential at this time that the three Western Powers have complete understanding on the above basic points, and the United States would hope for the strong support of the United Kingdom in discussions on these matters with the French Government.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Chinese Affairs (McConaughy)

[WASHINGTON,] April 7, 1954—3:45 p. m.

Subjects: 1. Chinese Aide-Mémoire Regarding Geneva Conference
2. Consultations Regarding Security of Southeast Asia
3. Postponement of Consideration of Proposed Sino-American Security Pact

Participants: Dr. Wellington Koo, Chinese Ambassador
Mr. Robertson, Assistant Secretary, FE
Mr. McConaughy, Director, Chinese Affairs

Ambassador Koo called at Assistant Secretary Robertson's request. Amb. Koo said he was about to request an appointment with Mr. Robertson when he received the call from Mr. Robertson's office.

Mr. Robertson asked Amb. Koo to state his business first.

1. Chinese Aide-Mémoire Regarding Geneva Conference<sup>1</sup>

Amb. Koo said that he had been instructed by the Chinese Foreign Office to inform the Department of the substance of an Aide-Mémoire as to the Geneva Conference which was being delivered immediately to the American Embassy at Taipei. Amb. Koo said he anticipated that we would receive the full text shortly from our Embassy at Taipei.

Amb. Koo summarized the Aide-Mémoire as follows:

As to the Geneva Conference, the Chinese Government felt it desirable to indicate its attitude and expectations. At the same time the Government wished to express its appreciation for and admiration of the Secretary's excellent speech of March 29<sup>2</sup> setting forth the U.S. position with regard to the non-recognition of the Chinese Communist regime, and its non-admission to the UN.

The Chinese Government felt that the scope of the Geneva Conference should be strictly limited to the two specified items:—Korea and Indochina.

The Chinese Government would not consider itself bound by any decision affecting it which might be reached at the Conference, since the Chinese Government would not be a party to any agreements reached.

The free world side should avoid any agreements which would not be in keeping with UN principles:—there should be unconditional withdrawal of Chinese Communist troops from Korea and unconditional cessation of Chinese Communist aid to the Viet Minh in Indochina.

If the discussions should prove fruitless, the Conference negotiations should not be protracted indefinitely. Prolongation of the Conference would only serve Communist propaganda objectives.

(396.1 GE/4-2054)

The Department responded to Ambassador Koo in a note dated May 15, not printed, indicating that the U. S. views with respect to the Geneva Conference were given to him by Robertson on Apr. 7 and were contained in Secretary Dulles' speech of Apr. 28 at Geneva (see footnote 2, p. 153). (396.1 GE/4-2054)

As to Indochina as well as Korea, a definite time limit for the discussions should be fixed.

There should be no departure from the original UN objective of a unified, independent and democratic Korea.

The three Associated States of Indochina should be invited to the Indochina phase of the Conference, but the Viet Minh should not be allowed to participate in the Conference.

Chinese Communists action in training and supplying the Viet Minh forces constituted in itself an act of aggression and a threat to the peace. Therefore, the UN should take some collective action. Communist China was carrying out covert aggression. Covert aggression was as bad as overt aggression. Communist China is responsible for aggression in Indochina, regardless of whether the Peiping Regime has actually sent Chinese Communist armed forces to participate in the fighting.

The free world side should agree that no regime fostered and supported by the Communists will be recognized as a legitimate government. This principle is a logical outgrowth of the Secretary's speech of March 29 in which he said that the free world could not be indifferent to the grave threat which would result from the imposition by force of the Communist political system over the States of Southeast Asia.

Finally, the embargo on strategic war material to Communist China should not be abandoned or relaxed.

Mr. Robertson said that he was glad to have this exposition of the views of the Chinese Government. The Aide-Mémoire would be considered carefully when the full text arrived. He said that he hoped the Ambassador would make it clear to his Government that the arrangements for the Conference were ideal from the Allied standpoint. There appears to have been some misunderstanding on this score in Taipei. The Geneva Conference will not be a general conference on Far Eastern issues with Communist China playing the role of an accepted power. It is necessary for Communist China to be there, since it is impossible to settle a dispute without talking to one's opponent. It is necessary to talk to the other side in order to seek peace. It would make no sense to talk to representatives of countries having nothing to do with the fighting while ignoring the aggressors who are responsible for the breach of peace. The Korean Political Conference is set up exactly in the form which we have been striving for since last September and October. It is the sort of conference Mr. Dean had sought unsuccessfully at Panmunjom. It was clear after Mr. Dean broke off the talks at Panmunjom pending the receipt of a Chinese Communist apology that no agreement would be reached at Panmunjom, because the Chinese Communists do not make a practice of apologizing. Mr. Dulles had picked up the ball at Berlin and had seized an opportunity to get precisely the kind of conference we had envisaged as best suited to our purposes.<sup>3</sup> The Conference would be uncluttered by neutrals; it would be a two sided Conference; the Russians would be present as a responsible participant on the Communist side along with Communist China and the North Korean Regime; the agenda was limited to the two essential questions of Korea and Indochina; all the countries who fought on the UN side were invited; it was expressly provided, in the face of strong Soviet opposition which had been maintained until 6 PM on the last day of the conference, that no diplomatic recognition was implied. Mr. Robertson said that the terms of the Resolution represented a very considerable diplomatic triumph for Mr. Dulles. He felt that the criticism of the resolution was based largely on a misreading, or actual neglect to read, the text of the resolution.

As to the composition of the Indochina phase of the Conference, the French were entitled to take the lead on the Allied side. They would take the principal initiative in setting up the Indochina phase. We certainly felt that the Associated States should be at the Indochina phase of the Conference. Under the principle which he had just enumerated, of the necessity for talking with your enemy in order to make peace, it might also be necessary for the Viet Minh to be present in some capacity. However, the composition of the Indochina phase was not yet determined, and nothing conclusive could be said on the subject.

In response to a question from the Ambassador, Mr. Robertson said that the Conference would not be a round table one and that decisions binding on all participants of course could not be taken by Conference vote.

Mr. Robertson said that Communist China would not be at the Conference as a recognized Asian power, but, in the Secretary's words, as a culprit brought before the bar of justice.

Ambassador said that he was very glad to hear the Assistant Secretary's exposition which gave him a better understanding of the nature and purpose of the Conference. He said he would transmit the substance of the explanation to the Foreign Office.

2. Consultations Regarding Security of Southeast Asia

Mr. Robertson said it was the conviction of the Department that if Vietnam should be lost to the Communists, all of the rest of Southeast Asia would eventually be lost. The actions of Communist China in supporting the Viet Minh approached very closely to outright aggression. In the face of the grave threat to all the free community of the Pacific Area, there was a need for united action to meet the threat. Consultation among the States of Southeast Asia was a necessary prelude to united action and the Secretary was in the process of discussing with the diplomatic representatives here of the various Governments what might be done to reach agreement on political action to meet the threat.

The Ambassador inquired if some sort of a joint declaration was contemplated. Mr. Robertson said that something of the sort might be considered. The Secretary had called in the Ambassadors of all the Governments particularly concerned and was reviewing the problem with them.

The Ambassador asked about possible action which might follow if a joint warning by a community of free nations were not heeded by the Communist side.

The Assistant Secretary said that agreement of course was prerequisite to any sort of action, political or otherwise, and that the current consultations were to explore the possibility of agreement as to what should be done under various circumstances.

3. Postponement of Consideration of Proposed Sino-American Security Pact

Assistant Secretary Robertson said in reference to the proposal of the Chinese Government for a bilateral security pact,<sup>4</sup> that we had made a recommendation that such a pact be negotiated, and that negotiations be opened before the Geneva Conference convened.

However, there was much detailed spade work to be done before authorization to negotiate such a pact and agreement as to the provisions it should embody, could be obtained throughout all the interested quarters of the Executive Branch of the Government. Furthermore, members of both Houses of Congress had to be consulted. The Secretary felt that it was a physical impossibility to complete this process in the short time remaining before the Geneva Conference. Many of the officials who would be involved in obtaining clearance for a pact were deeply involved in preparations for Geneva.

The Ambassador asked if it would be correct to say that the matter had been placed before the Secretary; that the Secretary had not made a decision on the policy question involved, but had decided that consideration of the matter would have to be postponed in view of the lack of opportunity to examine it adequately before Geneva?

Mr. Robertson said he thought this was a reasonably accurate description of the situation.

Memorandum of Conversation, by Walter Treumann of the Office of Northeast Asian Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, April 7, 1954.

Subject: Soviet Aide-Mémoire of April 5 regarding the Geneva Conference<sup>1</sup>

Participants: Mr. Joy of the British Embassy
Mr. Millet of the French Embassy
Mr. Young, NA
Mr. Treumann, NA

Mr. Joy and Mr. Millet dropped in on their own initiative after today's meeting of "the sixteen." They wished to discuss the Soviet aide-mémoire of April 5 regarding arrangements for the Geneva Conference.

Mr. Millet outlined his government's reaction to the Soviet aide-mémoire as follows:

1. With regard to the second paragraph of the Soviet aide-mémoire, the French Government believes that the Berlin decision implied that the four powers invite all other interested governments to Geneva. Whereas the invitation itself was made by the four major powers, the participation of all governments at Geneva would be on an equal basis. There had never been the implication in the Berlin decision that "representatives of all five indicated powers shall take part on an equal basis in examination of all questions relating to the conference." Rather, it was the implication that all nineteen participating delegations at Geneva should be on an equal basis.

2. With regard to paragraph three of the Soviet aide-mémoire, the French Government wishes to reserve its position on languages used in the Indochina phase of the Geneva Conference until this question comes up. When it does, a decision should be reached at Geneva.

3. With regard to paragraph five of the Soviet aide-mémoire, the French Government believes that the question of interpreters should be decided at the conference itself. In the meantime, we should let Moscow know that we will use UN and our own interpreters.

Mr. Joy expressed agreement with the French interpretation of the Berlin decision, but offered no other comments concerning the Soviet aide-mémoire at this time. He said that the UK would offer formal comments on this matter after a draft U.S. reply is received.

Mr. Young, Mr. Millet and Mr. Joy then discussed the question of expenditures for common services by the participants. It was decided that alternative formulas would be put before the next meeting of the sixteen nations for their comments.<sup>2</sup>

Participants: Mr. M. G. L. Joy, First Secretary, British Embassy
Mr. Kenneth T. Young, Jr., Director, Office of Northeast Asian Affairs

Mr. Joy called Mr. Young to inform him of the following Foreign Office views on the Soviet aide-mémoire of April 5, 1954:

1. It is hoped that the State Department will not think it is necessary to argue further about the position of the Chinese. The Soviet note is not inaccurate, even if misleading. Therefore, the Foreign Office suggests that we ignore paragraph 2 in our reply.

2. It is suggested that we simply note agreement on 5 languages for the Korean phase and settle languages for Indochina at the Conference itself.

3. Soviet Aide-Mémoire is vague and inconclusive on enlistment of qualified interpreters, which must be decided before Conference meets.

4. Soviet Aide-Mémoire does not reply to the suggestion to send an administrative officer to Geneva to discuss details. A prior condition is to send a Soviet officer.

Mr. Young told Mr. Joy that the Department of State could not accept point one above, but that it would agree in principle on the other points.

TERMS OF REFERENCE FOR THE PARIS WORKING GROUP ON INDOCHINA PHASE AT GENEVA

1. Objectives and Tactics of Working Group

a. The objective of the Working Group is to shore up the French so that they do not adopt a position at Geneva which would mean, directly or indirectly, the loss of Indochina to the Communists. Its role would be to conduct a holding operation pending the arrival of the Secretary in Paris on April 21 or 22. The Working Group, which will include a representative of the Department of Defense, will commence talks with the British and French on Tuesday, April 13, in Paris. A brief press statement to this effect will be released then, although the Paris press already has this information.

b. The tactics of the Working Group are to advance no general position but rather to listen to the French proposals. Our representatives should express their views along the following general lines:

2. US Position To Be Presented by Working Group

a. At Berlin it was understood with Bidault that France would not agree to any arrangement that would directly or indirectly result in the turnover of the area to the Communists, while we would retain full freedom of action to refrain from any agreement at all at Geneva. We are confident France will not take any step at Geneva which will jeopardize our Berlin understanding.<sup>2</sup> This is our point of departure.

b. Insofar as the possibility of US concessions to the Chinese Communists is concerned, the US position was made clear in the Secretary's March 29 speech,<sup>3</sup> and we should stand firmly on this position. This point should be made to the British and French, with especial reference to the following paragraph:

"The United States Delegation will go to Geneva in an effort to bring about a united and independent Korea, from which Communist China will have withdrawn its army of invasion. Also, we hope that any Indochina discussion will serve to bring the Chinese Communists to see the danger of their apparent design for the conquest of Southeast Asia, so that they will cease and desist. We shall not, however, be disposed to give Communist China what it wants from us, merely to buy its promises of future good behavior."

c. We are of course fully cognizant of the French domestic situation, the pressure to end the war in France, and the warweariness of the French people after eight years of the struggle. We agreed to having Indochina discussed at the Geneva Conference for the purpose of helping the French Government to resist these domestic pressures by exposing the real Communist position. We realize that because of these pressures the French Government must give the appearance of exploring every possibility for reaching a settlement which would safeguard France's interests, responsibilities and commitments with regard to the Indochina war.

d. The Working Group should set forth and endeavor to secure French and British agreement to the general principles which the US believes must be firmly adhered to in any solution of the Indochina problem. The general principles which should be established are that the US, the UK, and the French have common obligations to see to it that any settlement with the Communists would not: (1) Result in or tend to result in a turning over of the politically important and strategic area of Indochina to Communist control; (2) Jeopardize the security of the French Union forces; (3) Jeopardize the freedom of the peoples of Indochina who have been loyally supporting the anti-Communist effort; (4) Endanger the prestige and status of France or her allies.

e. Having established these general principles the Working Group should explore with the French and British whatever types of settlements the French or British might propose (such as plebiscite, partition, coalition government, etc.), drawing out the French and British on how such settlements might work out in practice, testing the possible results of such settlements against the established general principles, and indicating how such settlements fell short of meeting the general principles. The Working Group should be prepared to question the French on the Laniel proposals and to raise, through questioning, the various guarantees and safeguards which would be necessary to make such a plan conform to the general principles.

f. The Working Group should be authorized to express the hope that before Geneva, or at least before substantive discussions at Geneva with regard to Indochina are begun, it will be possible to announce the conclusion of current Franco-Vietnamese negotiations since an announcement to this effect will have favorable repercussions in Vietnam and therefore in the other free-world countries most directly concerned.

3. Procedural Questions

a. Participation

(1) Emphasize strongly the quadripartite aspect of the decision agreed to at Berlin regarding participation and the US firm opposition to any five power discussion of this issue. The decision as to who will participate in the Indochina discussions in addition to the four Berlin powers and Communist China must be made by the four Berlin powers.

(2) Convey the Secretary's view as stated above again, repeating our position on participation so far is definite only for the US, UK, France, USSR, Communist China, Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos, and that our position on further participants is not yet firm. Australia, the Philippines and Thailand have expressed an interest in participating to us.

(3) Under any circumstances we insist on a formal invitation by the four inviting powers to Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos. If the French inquire whether this means inviting the Associated States even if it means also inviting Ho Chi Minh, the group should reply in the affirmative.

(4) We will find it easier to make our own decisions when the French and British have given us their definite views which the Working Group will transmit to Washington.

b. Other Procedural Questions

(1) Details of technical arrangements should be referred to the group already working on these questions in Geneva.

(2) Other important procedural points (seating arrangements, chairmanship, western secretary-general) can hardly be settled until the participation question is decided. These points accordingly should await determination at Geneva.

Participants: Nong Kimny, Ambassador of Cambodia
 Tran Van Kha, Ambassador of Viet-Nam
 Ourot Sovannavong, Minister of Laos
 FE—Mr. Drumright
 PSA—Mr. Getz

The representatives of the Associated States remained to talk with Mr. Drumright following the meeting in which they were informed, along with the Ambassador of Thailand and the Counselor of the Philippine Embassy, of the Secretary's departure for London and Paris.<sup>1</sup>

The Cambodian Ambassador took the initiative in expressing his great distress that the Associated States had not yet been invited to participate in the Geneva Conference, and pointed out that only eighteen days remained before the Conference opened. For his part,

<sup>1</sup>Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs Drumright called in the representatives of Thailand, Cambodia, Vietnam, Laos, and the Philippines at 12:30 p. m. to inform them that Secretary Dulles expected to leave on Apr. 10 for conversations in London and Paris "to explore further the question of united action and the steps which might be taken to assure the defense of Southeast Asia against Communism." Memorandum of conversation by Getz of PSA, Apr. 8, not printed. (396.1 GE/4-854)

he stated, he could say that it was Cambodia's firm desire to participate as a full member and not as an observer which would have unfavorable repercussions on the people of his country.

Mr. Drumright replied that two considerations were involved. In the first place, France was expected to take the initiative in this question, and we had as yet heard little from the French. It was possible that this would be discussed in Paris next week. Secondly, it appears that the question of participation can be decided finally only by the four Berlin powers in meeting together, and this would probably not occur before the actual opening of the Conference. The Ambassador acknowledged this explanation, but gave the strong impression that he was not satisfied. He referred to the Berlin communiqué and its reference to the participation of "interested states" in the Indochina talks at Geneva; he asked if any states could be more interested than Cambodia, Laos, and Viet-Nam.

The Ambassador of Viet-Nam and the Minister of Laos volunteered nothing, but confirmed to Mr. Drumright that their Governments had not made known their position on the subject of participation in the Conference.

Subject: Formula for an Indochina Settlement

Problem: To formulate a position on an Indochina settlement which would be acceptable to the United States and which although unacceptable to the Communists would appear reasonable to world opinion, and which in the unlikely event that the Communists were willing to sacrifice their position in Indochina, would provide some face-saving elements to facilitate their capitulation.

Elements of the formula:

From the point of view of the United States a settlement in Indochina should provide for a disarmament of the Vietminh forces, and a cessation of all Chinese Communist assistance to the Vietminh forces. These two provisions, if carried out, would in effect provide for a French and Associated States victory in Indochina. From the point of view of the United States free elections, or the withdrawal of

A handwritten notation on Bowie's memorandum indicates that the Secretary saw it.

French forces, should occur only after the disarmament of Vietminh forces and the cessation of Chinese Communist assistance. Nevertheless from the point of view of world opinion any formula for an Indochina settlement should provide at some stage for free elections and the withdrawal of French forces. To be acceptable to world opinion the formula should also provide for full freedom of the Associated States, amnesty for the disarmed Vietminh, and international supervision of free elections. The following formula attempts to incorporate these elements in a manner which will assure that elections will be carried out only after disarmament of the Vietminh has actually occurred.

Formula:

1. France affirms the independence and sovereignty of the Associated States of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, and declares that as an instance of their sovereign equality they are completely free to elect for themselves whether to remain in or to depart from the French Union.

2. All parties to the agreement (including the U.S.S.R., Communist China, and the Vietminh), in the interest of establishing those conditions of peace and order which are the prerequisites for the full and free expression of the popular will of the peoples of the states of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, agree to cease all hostile acts or support of such acts against the present governmental authorities of the three states, and to call on all individuals and groups who have hitherto been undertaking hostile action against these authorities to lay down their arms and cooperate in the establishment of peace and order, and to cooperate with the authorities of the three states in the establishment of peace and order.

3. The Governments of the Associated States agree that individuals and groups who have hitherto been conducting hostile acts against these Governments but who now lay down their arms and cooperate with these Governments will be granted amnesty for their previous acts against these Governments and will be assured of personal safety and freedom.

4. The parties to the agreements agree to invite the United Nations to constitute a Peace Commission to assist in the establishment of peace and order in the Associated States and to grant to this Commission all facilities, privileges, freedom of movement and assistance which the Commission may deem necessary to ensure:

a. That all acts of hostility against the Governments of the Associated States cease, and that all those individuals and groups who have hitherto been conducting such hostilities lay down their arms and cooperate with the Governments of the Associated States in the establishment of peace and order ;

b. That all assistance of any kind to individuals or groups who fail to lay down their arms or fail to cooperate with the Governments of the Associated States cease, including the provision of supplies, military advice, or military training or assistance in areas within or outside the territories of the Associated States.

c. That all individuals or groups who lay down their arms and cooperate with the Governments of the Associated States in the establishment of peace and order receive adequate guarantees of personal safety and freedom.

5. At such time as the United Nations Peace Commission is able to report that all hostile acts or support of such hostile acts against the Governments of the Associated States has ceased ; that all individuals and groups who have hitherto been conducting hostile acts against these Governments have laid down their arms and are cooperating with these Governments in the establishment of peace and order, and that all such individuals have received adequate guarantees of personal safety and freedom, the Governments of the States of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia agree to invite the United Nations to send Electoral Commissions to their territories and to grant to these Commissions all facilities, privileges, freedom of movement, and assistance which the Commissions may deem necessary to ensure :

a) Preparation of electoral laws acceptable to the Commission including guarantees, among others, of freedom of movement, freedom of presentation of candidates, immunity of candidates, freedom from arbitrary arrest or victimization, freedom of association and political meetings, freedom of expression for all, freedom of the press, radio, and television and free circulation of newspapers, periodicals, etc., secrecy of voting, and secrecy of polling stations and ballot boxes ;

b) Holding of free elections ;

c) Effective supervision by the Commissions of such elections to insure that the elections take place in genuine freedom and in strict conformity with the provisions of electoral laws.

6. France agrees that following the holding of free elections, or at such time as the United Nations Electoral Commissions may recommend as advisable to ensure complete freedom of the elections in the three States of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, it will undertake the withdrawal of French forces from Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia. Nothing in this agreement, however, shall be held to debar France from providing such military assistance and advice as any one of the three States may request.

7. All parties to the agreement agree to respect the political independence and territorial integrity of the three States of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, and undertake to give support and assistance to the three states, in accordance with the principles of the United Nations, and in accordance with their own constitutional processes, should there be any attack against the political independence or territorial integrity of any of these states.

The Ambassador in Japan (Allison) to the Department of State

TOKYO, April 10, 1954—4 p. m.

2468. 1. In examining implications Geneva conference for Japan, important to note at outset that government has not sought representation. When Right Socialist Diet spokesman raised question early March Prime Minister stated flatly government would not attempt seek participation. This not due lack of interest but realistic appreciation that having received no invitation, any bid for participation would not be favorably received and to make such a bid would only embarrass US and result in public snub.

2. Beyond this general motivation probably lies feeling Japan stands gain little or nothing from participation since conference is not expected by most Japanese to produce any basic or lasting settlement Far Eastern problems. Conclusion of Japanese policy planners is probably that Far East likely remain fluid state for considerable period and Japanese interests therefore best served by waiting until nation strong enough to play more independent role than now possible due Japan's political and economic dependence on US.

3. In spite of above little doubt that Geneva proceedings will be followed with keen interest here in contrast Berlin conference which in their minds was concerned with problems relating to another world. There is wide recognition here that Geneva deliberations will have potentially vital significance for Japan even though no change in Far Eastern status quo likely result from conference. Japanese feel US statements indicate no room for compromise and Communists not likely retreat from present positions of power in North Korea and Indochina unless high price paid.

4. Few Japanese in responsible positions expect unified Korea or any other kind of Korean settlement to emerge, but most Japanese continue indulge in good deal of wishful thinking on subject. Japanese Government and people would probably welcome idea of unified Korean "buffer state", neutralized under effective international guarantee by great powers, including Japan due general feeling it would eliminate primary source of tension in Far East between US (sic) and Communist world, reduce to minimum danger of clash in which Japan might become involved, and facilitate establishment normal diplomatic and economic relations between Japan and China-USSR. (Danger Communist infiltration and eventual control under such circumstances unfortunately not taken seriously; many Japanese in fact think danger greater under present circumstances, with inefficient and corrupt ROK Government providing "hothouse" for Communist growth.) Also hopefully believed unified neutralized Korea under new government might be easier for Japan to deal with than present ROK Government. In this connection it has been suggested Japan go slow on negotiation settlement with ROK until dust settles and Korean situation "stabilized".

5. Looming behind Korea and Indochina issues and of overriding importance to Japan is question of what kind of relationship between Japan and Chinese mainland can be evolved. Japanese press and official reaction to Berlin decision to hold Geneva conference characterized by strong feeling status of Peking regime greatly enhanced, that US agreed to what in essence will be five-power conference, and that ability of Chinese Communists to speak on Asian problems increased. Press also speculated that regardless of Geneva outcome, Chinese Communists now convinced of need for foreign trade to carry through their program of national development, and this offers possibilities which Japan cannot ignore.

6. In order consolidate regime's internal control and develop nation's industrial and military power, Chinese Communists might conceivably agree at Geneva to settlements of Korean and Indochinese struggles embodying major concessions to free world positions those areas. One respected Foreign Office source has expressed fear such conciliatory course of action on Communists' part, presumably resulting in major relaxation of tension in Far East, could have disastrous effect in Japan. With threat of Communist aggression apparently removed, emotional Japanese people would be strongly inclined to let down their guard and "buy" Communist peace offensive. Japan's embryonic rearmament effort might then receive setback, disposition toward neutralism would be strengthened here, and pressure increased to remove controls on China trade and establish diplomatic relations with Peking. In move toward latter step Japan might be receptive to Soviet move to seat Japan and Communist China in UN on link basis.<sup>1</sup>

7. In event Geneva conference breakdown that results in renewal of aggressive Communist Chinese or Russian action, Japan would have no choice but to abandon its hopes for normalization of relations with China and the Soviet Union. Tightening of security and economic ties with US and free world would result, and rearmament effort would presumably move forward.

8. In more likely eventuality that Geneva conference results in no change in present unsettled state in Far East probable effect in terms Japanese policy expected to be closer that described paragraph 7 than in paragraph 6. Much will depend on light in which US and Communist-bloc representatives appear at conference. If failure to achieve any real solution of major Far Eastern issues clearly due to Communist recalcitrance and it could be shown that basic aggressive aims of Communists remained unaltered, Japanese realization of need to cooperate closely with free world would be strengthened. If, however, Communists were to succeed in giving impression they had put forward reasonable proposals which US had rejected because of its refusal to recognize international existence of Peking regime, Japanese neutralism and anti-American sentiment might well receive fillip.

9. Foreign Office officials have emphasized importance of Western unity at Geneva, referring to outstanding success this respect at Berlin conference. They believe Japanese will quickly interpret any signs of discord between American, British and French allies over either Korea or Indochina as indications that a Far Eastern Munich, with grave potential complications for Japan, is in the cards.

<sup>1</sup>The Embassy at Paris reported in telegram 3702 to the Department, Apr. 3, that the Vietnamese Delegation in Paris had told the French Government that a definitive position concerning Associated States representation at Geneva would have to await Buu Loc's return to Paris or his instructions from Saigon. The delegation had intimated that the presence of Viet Minh representatives in any status equal to that of the Associated States, however, would have an adverse public effect in Indochina. (396.1 GE/4-354) of more vocal leaders of anti-Communist political and religious groups would fear Viet Minh participation at Geneva as leading to loss face by Vietnamese Government and concurrent increase stature and pretensions Viet Minh Government. However, it equally probable great mass of people would experience secret satisfaction at seeing Viet Minh—especially Ho Chi Minh in person—at council table bearding French and other Western powers. Much depends in this connection on outcome at Dien Bien Phu.

There is fear on part anti-Communist Vietnam that Viet Minh would not fail capitalize on Geneva as springboard to increase tremendously their stature in eyes of Vietnamese and other Asian people. It is argued that there would be much more interest shown in Viet Minh delegates by press and photographers than in rather colorless Vietnamese delegation and that Viet Minh would steal show. Viet Minh would follow line of Red Chinese in attempting build up international position and profit to greatest extent possible opportunity develop their propaganda line through press conferences and public statements. They would present Bao Dai and Buu Loc Government in most unfavorable light possible while building up case for “legitimacy” Ho Government. Persons supporting these views believe it would be better not have Associated States represented if that would mean inclusion Viet Minh.

Buu Loc told me personally he would not head government which had to sit at conference table across from Viet Minh. His present feeling is that Vietnam should be represented but only by an observer. Cambodia would have no objection sit across from Viet Minh and Laos, while it would not object, would probably do whatever France wanted.

2. United action in Southeast Asia. I told Eden I intended to press French re real independence for Associated States, and hoped he would use influence in same direction. Also told Eden after we completed this trip we would get in touch with British to see how best we might proceed in organizing united will to resist aggression in SEA. One possibility was to establish informal working group in Washington. Eden thought this good idea and said Makins would be available.

[Here follows discussion of Trieste, the United Nations Disarmament Commission, and the Korean phase of the Geneva Conference. For the portion of discussion relating to the Korean phase, see page 95.]

6. There was brief discussion on the composition of the Indochina phase of the Geneva Conference. Eden fully agreed that the Big Four would invite all participants. He also believed that very early at Geneva we would have to discuss composition of Indo-China phase. Last night at Churchill's dinner I mentioned to Eden possibility of having following participants in addition to Big Four and Communist China: Three Associated States—Thailand—Burma—Ho Chi Minh. Eden said he rather liked the idea of Thailand and Burma and thought Ho's participation essential. Re possible participation of Ho we agreed that it would be unwise for us to press the French and Associated States on this or take any initiative in raising it.

Am reliably informed certain American patriotic groups such as Committee For One Million (against admission Red China to United Nations), American Legion, Veterans Foreign Wars, DAR, Gold Star Mothers, etc are considering sending representatives here from US and posting pickets protesting against Red China in vicinity Palais Des Nations UN headquarters here during conference. This proposed demonstration would consist some twelve pickets displaying such messages as "Bar Red China from UN", "No Deal With Red China". For obvious reasons Department may wish consider doing everything possible prevent or at least discourage any such plan. PRIORITY

SAIGON, April 13, 1954—8 p. m.

(1) We have certain reservations in regard to recommendation in paper on "participation in the Indochina phase of conference (GI D-7a)"<sup>3</sup> that in addition to China and the four Berlin powers the three Associated States of Indochina, Viet Minh, Thailand, and Burma be also invited. We urge that no public position be taken on possible participation of the Associated States until opportunity has been had in Paris three-power talks to consider most carefully the views of the Vietnamese Government itself.

The Vietnamese Government is deeply disturbed at prospect of facing Viet Minh delegation across the conference table.<sup>4</sup> They feel that lacking concrete evidence that Chinese Communists would be willing to consider cessation of aid to Viet Minh, the conference would be merely a Communist propaganda exercise. They conceive no advantage to Vietnamese Government in participating in such "propaganda" conference but definite loss of its position by de facto recognition of Viet Minh Government which would follow on Viet Minh participation. In order to prevent such de facto recognition of Viet Minh, which would in itself be an achievement and net gain for the Communists, Vietnamese Government is thinking in terms of sending observers to Geneva rather than formal delegation claiming a participating status. This is the view of Bao Dai and Buu Loc and I may add is shared by Ambassador DeJean.

Two obvious disadvantages to non-participation of the Associated States come immediately to mind: (1) Danger of having the Indochina phase resemble a five-power conference, and (2) possible reflection upon independence of the Associated States should France appear to be deciding their fate without their participation. The following considerations must be weighed against this, however: (1) assumption that in any event there is little chance for successful resolution of the problem which would lead to cessation of Chinese Communist aid to the Viet Minh and (2) real advantage to Viet Minh in prestige and status to be recognized at such a conference with no compensating advantage to Vietnamese.

Should it be decided that Vietnamese Government not participate, they could issue statement explaining reasons for non-participation. Properly worded this could serve as counter to charges that non-participation was evidence of lack of status as sovereign power. This matter can be thoroughly explored at Paris before a firm stand is taken and the fears of the Vietnamese Government should be given due weight. Invitations to Cambodia and Laos should be considered in light of decision re Vietnam.

(2) With regard to position paper on US aid in post-war reconstruction of Indochina (GI D-10A)<sup>5</sup> we doubt that it would be advantageous psychologically at Geneva to indicate to the French and Vietnamese that if the war is won in 1954 the President will appropriate funds for post-war reconstruction in Indochina and that in later years we intend to urge Congress to continue aid for Indochina reconstruction.

I do not believe any such promise would have much effect at the present time in determining French willingness to continue the war here nor would it have an important present effect on Vietnamese Government. Our advice is to defer such commitments to later date when they might be effective in persuading Vietnamese Government and public opinion to better political and military performance.

particular emphasis on broad lines French position as indicated therein.

1. French raised various procedural aspects Geneva conference indicating desirability obtaining four power agreement delegate responsibility their respective representatives Geneva to resolve such matters as those concerning conference security guards and conference seating arrangements. Re latter, French indicated desirability having US sit with ROK on right facing North Korea/CPR/USSR across table in Korea phase. French expressed concern lest unresolved question conference chairmanship delay opening Korea phase. There was agreement that there are established lines for dealing such matters and present group should not inject itself.

2. Re timing IC phase Geneva conference, French agreed question participation one for resolution by four powers and expressed hope four Foreign Ministers could meet as soon as possible after arrival Geneva to reach decision. Although recognizing substantive consideration must await resolution organization problems including participation and invitations, they added it would be most helpful for French public opinion to know consideration being given IC problem at opening of Geneva conference. We expressed full agreement regarding quadripartite nature of decisions to be taken this regard and desirability raising these questions at Geneva.

3. Re participation Associated States IC phase, the general French position indicated, although qualified as representing preliminary thinking on French side only, does not favor Associated States being invited as full participants IC phase conference. French stressed that they had not yet discussed this question formally with Associated States although they recognize necessity and intend to do so as soon as possible.

On one hand, French desire keep IC conference small in size and within manageable proportions and avoid if possible it becoming propaganda forum. On other hand, French understand Vietnamese fear consequence possible consecration status Viet Minh as state arising from presence latter if invited as full conference participant and believe propaganda use made of presence Viet Minh as full participant would have harmful effect on course military campaign and Vietnamese opinion. In French view, if Associated States participate conference, difficult see how Viet Minh could possibly be excluded although presence puppet governments Laos and Cambodia could probably be resisted. French do not think that Vietnamese Government will for this reason desire participate in conference. This connection, French pointed out that if Associated States invited Cambodia would certainly accept (with all that that would imply in view instability evidenced at times by Cambodians), which would probably prompt Vietnamese to participate for prestige reasons regardless presence Viet Minh.

While French do not consider full participation Associated States as invited powers desirable, they feel this problem best handled by giving three Associated States and Viet Minh Government (and perhaps puppet governments Laos and Cambodia under these circumstances, but this questionable), special status as limited conference participants deriving in essence from the immediacy of their conflict of interests. These states would neither be observers nor full participants but their representatives would be readily available at Geneva for participation as occasion required thus avoiding any discussion legal basis these governments and confrontation at conference table of belligerents. French thinking this subject, however, not yet very clear.

On the other hand, in order avoid five power connotation and as best means keeping conference as small as possible, French inclined favor limitrophe principle with four powers, CPR, Burma and Thailand constituting participating powers for IC phase.

We stated view that failure invite Associated States to conference where their fate at stake would be widely misunderstood in US and in Asia generally and would tend cast doubt on status these states. We expressed belief Associated States should receive formal invitation with decision as to acceptance or rejection up to them. We said we would be willing oppose inviting Viet Minh if reasonable formula could be found although pointing out that western powers have already accepted conference presence of CPR and North Korea without according recognition.

4. In general terms, French tentative thinking is apparently in direction finding, as first step at Geneva, some basis for a cease-fire on purely military grounds with political negotiations to follow achievement of cease-fire. French emphasized basic French preoccupation with cessation hostilities in IC and importance French public opinion pressures this regard. French indicated that they do not favor negotiations with Viet Minh nor evacuation with agreement with Viet Minh. They said that military experts were studying Laniel's March cease-fire conditions <sup>4</sup> to determine guarantees and safeguards needed so that these conditions could in effect achieve Laniel objective of guaranteeing security of French and Associated States forces and of friendly elements. On military situation, French hazarded prediction present military equilibrium might become somewhat more favorable to French union particularly if Associated States forces are developed as planned. French pointed out that they thought the following elements might favor negotiations for a cease-fire and for an eventual settlement: (a) Soviets may not care see IC in Chinese hands or care risk generalized war (French attach considerable importance to expressions of goodwill and of a desire to be of service which they have received from Soviet Ambassador here); (b) Chinese fear possibility US intervention; and (c) both Vietnamese and Viet Minh do not care see extension Chinese influence in Vietnam. Although admitting extreme nature difficulties involved in attempting find political settlement IC, French indicated that it was conceivable that there could be a cease-fire in IC without political settlement as in Korea.

US delegation limited itself to statement regarding necessity keep IC out of Communist hands and expression of interest in French military study of Laniel cease-fire conditions in view extreme importance of controls and guarantees.

The Director of the Office of Foreign Military Affairs of the Department of Defense (Davis) to the Coordinator for the United States Delegation to the Geneva Conference (Johnson)

WASHINGTON, April 15, 1954.

DEAR ALEX: This Department is becoming increasingly concerned regarding the lack of a U.S. position in preparation for the Indochina phase of the Conference to be held at Geneva. I fully appreciate the difficulties which, up until this time, have made it very difficult to draft a position on Indochina. However, in view of the short time remaining until the Conference convenes at Geneva, it is essential that consideration be given to the U.S. position.

It appears to me that ample guidance is available to provide the basis for an initial draft of a U.S. Government position on Indochina for Geneva. NSC 5405<sup>1</sup> as well as reports of the Special Committee<sup>2</sup> set forth, in positive terms, U.S. policy with respect to Indochina and Southeast Asia. At the meetings of the Indochina Working Group the need for a U.S. position on Indochina has been discussed at considerable length, but to date no progress has been made. In order to initiate action on a draft position, the Defense representatives at the working level submitted an outline of views to the State members of the Indochina Working Group. A copy of this paper is attached for your information.

In view of the foregoing I strongly recommend that immediate action be taken to draft a U.S. position paper on Indochina for the Conference at Geneva. I would be glad to discuss this matter further at your convenience or at a meeting of the Assistant Secretaries.<sup>3</sup>

Sincerely yours,      For the Assistant Secretary of Defense (ISA) :
A. C. DAVIS

DRAFT

UNITED STATES POSITION ON INDOCHINA TO BE TAKEN AT GENEVA

Assumptions

1. NSC 5405, approved 16 January 1954, continues to be the policy of the United States with respect to Southeast Asia.

2. It is highly improbable that Communist agreement could be obtained to a negotiated settlement which would be consistent with basic United States objectives in Southeast Asia. (JCS memorandum, 12 March 1954).<sup>4</sup>

3. At Geneva, the French Government under continued domestic pressure will favor a negotiated settlement of the fighting in Indochina at almost any price.

Graves B. Erskine, Chairman of the working group of the Special Committee, see p. 475.

<sup>3</sup> A meeting scheduled for Apr. 20 between Admiral Davis and Johnson. Merchant, Robertson, MacArthur, Bowie, and Phleger to consider this letter was cancelled at the request of the Department of Defense. It was not rescheduled. For additional documentation on Admiral Davis' letter see Conference files, lot 60 D 627, CF 263.

Discussion

The French Government has been under considerable domestic pressure to terminate the hostilities in Indochina. In order to forestall a showdown prior to Geneva, M. Laniel, in a public statement, proposed six points as conditions for a cease-fire in Indochina.<sup>5</sup> These six points would unquestionably be unacceptable to the Communists, particularly if reinforced by additional conditions to assure enforcement of the armistice terms. However, domestic pressure on the French Government to terminate hostilities is expected to increase during the course of the Geneva Conference, rather than decrease. In view of this, it would be extremely difficult for the French Government not to accept an agreement which would be less than the conditions of the Laniel proposal. It should be noted that although the above factors make it almost certain that the French Government will seek agreement at Geneva at practically any price, there has been no indication that this "price" has been considered realistically by the French Government or public.

Communist tactics at Geneva are likely to follow closely those tactics employed by Communist negotiators at Panmunjom. Communist intransigence and other tactics, short of actually breaking off negotiations, led to prolonged discussions which worked to the disadvantage of our side. As a result, the Korean Agreement in its final form produced an armistice bringing about a cease-fire but with which it has been impossible to assure Communist compliance.<sup>6</sup> On the other hand, in Korea the United Nations Command is required to live up faithfully to the terms of the armistice. It should be noted that this problem would be considerably more complex and disadvantageous to the French in Indochina.

The Department of Defense has considered the military implications of terminating the fighting in Indochina under conditions less than a military defeat of organized Viet Minh forces. It was the conclusion of the Department of Defense, as indicated in Assumption No. 2 above, that inasmuch as it is highly improbable that Communist agreement could be obtained to a negotiated settlement which would be consistent with basic United States objectives in Southeast Asia, a continuation of fighting with the objective of seeking a military victory appears as the only alternative in Indochina. (JCS memorandum, Tab A.<sup>7</sup>)

Conclusions

If the Communists follow the same tactics they employed at Panmunjom, they will be prepared for a long and difficult negotiation. The French will find it almost impossible to withstand pressures for a weakening of their position (the Laniel proposal) and will most likely give way under these pressures. Further, the French, once engaged in a negotiation, will of necessity be required to seek every possible means of settlement.

The United States should not join with the French in any Indochina negotiations at Geneva unless there is prior French commitment not to accept terms leading directly or indirectly to the loss of Indochina. This commitment should be positive and definite, for it would be difficult, if not impossible, for the United States to disassociate itself from the negotiations once they had begun. Thus, if the negotiations result in a settlement leading to the ultimate loss of Indochina, the United States would have participated in this loss.

Recommendations

It is recommended that :

a. The United States adopt the position that it is highly improbable that the Communist agreement could be obtained to a negotiated settlement at Geneva which would be consistent with basic United States objectives in Southeast Asia ;

b. The United States position for Geneva be positive and definite that we will agree to no settlement which would in any way compromise our objectives with respect to Southeast Asia ;

c. The French Government be informed of the United States position (a and b above) at the earliest possible date ;

d. Concurrently with informing the French of the United States position, consideration should also be given to the following pressures to be brought on the French if circumstances dictate :

(1) If France through one means or another countenances a Communist takeover in Indochina, it will mean far more than the end of France's position in the Far East. Rather it will be a public exhibition of France's inability to carry on any longer as an equal member with the United States and the United Kingdom of the Big Three ;

(2) The effect of abandonment would be so severe in North Africa as to have serious repercussions not only on the French position there, but also on the nature of the relationship between France and the United States in that area ;

(3) If the Indochina war ends on terms considered unsatisfactory by the United States, our dollar aid to France would, of course, automatically cease.

(4) Beyond these points, conclusion of negotiations by France resulting in Communist domination of Indochina, an area of extreme strategic interest to the free world, would result in consequences in Europe as well as elsewhere whose seriousness would have no apparent limitation.

e. If the French Government refuses to agree to the United States position, the United States Government should not participate in the Indochina discussions at Geneva;

f. The United States immediately determine whether in the event of (e) above, we should approach the Governments of the Associated States and our allies with a view to continuing the struggle in Indochina either jointly with the French, in concert with our allies, or, if necessary, unilaterally.

PARIS, April 16, 1954—1 p. m.

3919. Repeated information Saigon 441. Following tripartite analysis participation question United States element working group Indochina phase Geneva conference recommends US adopt following position:

1. US, UK, France and USSR are inviting powers.
2. Communist China was designed [designated] by four powers as power to be invited at Berlin and will attend. Under no circumstances, however, will Peking be considered inviting power or take part deliberations at Geneva to discuss other participants.
3. France should invite formally Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos attend as full participants.
4. Formula restricting conference to adjoining countries should be adopted and accordingly France should convey invitations Burma and Thailand. France should convey these invitations same as United States has done in Korean phases.
5. We do not favor presence Viet Minh and presumably case against such presence will be made by French. However, if Soviets insist neither we nor French would presumably break on this point. If Soviets insist on presence Viet Minh, they should do the inviting.
6. If Soviets propose invitation to Pathet Laos and Khmer Issaraks we should strongly oppose on grounds they do not exist and have not been recognized even by Soviets.
7. Australia, Philippines and Ceylon who have expressed interest in attending should be informed (Australia and Ceylon by United Kingdom, Philippines by United States) participation limited to big four, Governments of Indochina and bordering states (of which Communist China of course one). Other inquiring states could be given same answer. From what British tell us they could probably explain this formula to satisfaction Commonwealth states.
8. Above would be conveyed by working group to French and British representatives Paris on Tuesday April 20 as United States position which we hope is acceptable to them as tripartite one to be taken by Foreign Ministers with Russians when question discussed with them at Geneva.

In reaching above recommendations working group feels position generally acceptable British and French though former would find it easier have Commonwealth nations present. On balance therefore it is probably good compromise. We feel it highly desirable have non-Communist Asian States other than Associated States present since then even if Communist propaganda attacks legitimacy these states and disparages their presence, conference would still have seven other participants including two Asian states whose legitimacy they can hardly question. In addition there are obvious psychological and other advantages accruing our side from presence Burma and Thailand. We would not favor other participants because there is no other formula which would prevent India, Indonesia and others from applying for membership. Therefore although we realize Australia for instance would be most helpful, we inclined attempt restrict participants to eleven indicated above.

We would appreciate Department's comments above proposed position. We realize considerations Washington working party united action Southeast Asia may cause Department adopt position including ANZUS powers and Philippines as well, from viewpoint working group discussions, however above formula appears most easily acceptable on tripartite basis.

French preliminary thinking this connection takes line that Laniel's March conditions for cease-fire<sup>2</sup> would probably be viewed by Communist representatives at Geneva as too harsh and as representing terms of victor and therefore do not permit sufficient latitude for negotiating purposes and in exploring Communist position at Geneva. Hence, French apparently contemplating possibility attempting secure psychological initiative by first offering disengage Laos and Cambodia from Indochina military scene and then moving on to consideration possibility achieving cease-fire Vietnam.

UK agreed and expressed hope that negotiations with Vietnam would have reached point that it could come Geneva as fully independent state. UK also stressed importance this connection convincing Asian opinion that AS speak for themselves.

Re number participants IC phase, French reiterated desirability finding formula that would keep conference small as possible and yet sufficiently flexible permit occasional enlargement (reflecting French view desirability according special status AS and Viet Minh). UK expressed preference for five plus three AS and Viet Minh as opposed to including limitrophe countries citing pressures which would be encountered from Commonwealth countries if participation extended beyond IC borders. French reiterated preference for five plus two limitrophe with special status being accorded AS and Viet Minh on theory this best formula keep conference small and avoid confrontation Vietnam and Viet Minh. French, nevertheless, prepared accept presence AS if Vietnam so desires in spite possibility being on equal footing with Viet Minh. In response our question how Viet Minh could be kept out, both French and UK admitted this would be extremely difficult in face anticipated Soviet arguments. French stated they would accept Viet Minh presence only on Berlin formula that presence did not involve recognition. General agreement that distinction could be drawn effectively between status Viet Minh and Soviet Governments Laos and Cambodia, French pointing out that they had no knowledge of Soviet recognition of Pathet Lao or Issarak "governments".

2029. Repeated information Paris 670, Hanoi 377. In conversation with Australian Foreign Minister Casey with regard to Indochina phase of Geneva conference, he said that merely "thinking out loud" it seemed to him that there were only two pieces of "bait" which would induce Communist China to stop aiding Viet Minh. One would be American recognition of Communist China and other would be an allotment of a part of Vietnam—Northern part—to Viet Minh. He remarked humorously that there seemed to be no possibilities of first "bait" being offered due to present American feeling against China and second "bait" had every sort of objection against it.

We discussed present reluctance of Vietnamese Government to participate in Geneva conference on ground that if they participate they would have to admit a Viet Minh delegation on an equal basis which would constitute a de facto recognition of Viet Minh regime. Casey remarked that he could not see how peace could be obtained unless both Vietnamese Government and Viet Minh sat down together. I remarked that present feeling of Buu Loc was that Viet Minh had no intention of making peace at least for present and purpose of their having delegation at conference would be propaganda attack on allegedly non-representative and non-democratic character of Bao Dai Government.

There ensued discussion in which Alan Watt (who formerly was Australian Minister in Moscow) and Casey participated as to possibility that Communist China could be brought to conviction that in her own interest she should cease aiding Viet Minh since continued aid might result in renewal of hostilities in which China might suffer. Both Casey and Watt agreed that it was unlikely that in any publicized conference China would publicly agree to "drop" Viet Minh. Only hope was that in side line conversation she might be brought to see wisdom of taking such action—without publicity.

[WASHINGTON,] April 17, 1954.

Subject: Secretary's Trip to London and Paris and Geneva Conference

Participants: Ambassador Spender, Australia
 Ambassador Munro, New Zealand
 Ambassador Heeney, Canada
 Acting Secretary Smith
 Mr. Merchant—EUR
 Mr. Horsey—BNA

The three Ambassadors came at the Acting Secretary's invitation. The course of the discussions in London and Paris was described in detail.<sup>1</sup>

We had felt that, because of the deterioration in Indochina, there were essentially only two alternatives for the Indochina phase of the conference: disguised capitulation by the French or disguised capitulation by the Communists. It was therefore necessary to have an additional element of strength, such as the demonstration of a united will to take whatever action was necessary.

The Secretary felt that his trip had been successful in removing misunderstandings as to our purposes and in reaching substantial agreement. Both Governments had agreed in the communiqués to discuss collective arrangements here in Washington.

All three Ambassadors emphasized the importance which public opinion attached to a convincing demonstration of French intentions of granting real independence to the three Associated States. Ambassador Heeney said that this was particularly important in obtaining the support of those not directly involved. He also mentioned the importance of Indian reaction. The Acting Secretary called attention to Bidault's emphasis on French public opinion. The satisfactory agreement with Laos was noted. As to Vietnam, the limitations imposed by the French constitution and by the continuation in office of local French officials with a colonial mentality were recognized. As to how Vietnam would be represented at Geneva, this had not been discussed in Paris. It was not in fact known whether the Vietnam Government wished to be represented formally, since their participation might lead to the presence of Ho. The Acting Secretary said he thought it would be an advantage to get Ho to the conference table.

In reply to a question by Ambassador Spender, Mr. Merchant said there had been no discussion in Paris on any specific French proposals for terms of settlement in Indochina, beyond what had been publicly put forward by Laniel some weeks ago.<sup>2</sup> The Acting Secretary mentioned, however, that at the working level in Paris there were suggestions for a settlement along territorial lines. We did not feel that these offered a practicable solution.

On Korea, which the Acting Secretary said was after all the main purpose of the conference, there was discussion of our differences with the British on the seating arrangements.<sup>3</sup> The Acting Secretary said that consideration was being given to the Australian Ambassador's suggestion that Hammarskjold act as permanent Chairman of the Conference. Rhee had not yet agreed to attend and of course he had to be there as one of the principals. He was in the meanwhile asking increased military support. We were ourselves anxious to reduce our commitments in Korea and were proposing to offer certain forms of increased military support without, however, building Rhee up to the point where he could take independent action.

On the substance of the Korean phase, Eden had come to agree with our position, after it had been presented as a logical continuation of the UN unification process interrupted by the 1950 aggression. The various proposals for unification by some form of election were canvassed. The Acting Secretary stressed that we should not give away all of our bargaining position in preliminary negotiations between ourselves. The Communists always started from an extreme position and it was essential for us also to have a retreat position. The three Ambassadors expressed great appreciation to the Acting Secretary for the briefing which they had received.

1. I first went over with the President the draft of a statement which might be issued either by him or by me. I said that Mr. Hagerty was of the opinion that it would be better if I made the statement as it would be useful to get it on to the newsreels. The President agreed. The President made a few verbal changes and he proposed what became the final paragraph.<sup>2</sup>

2. I reported on my trip to London and Paris,<sup>3</sup> with which the President was already familiar so far as the main lines were concerned. I added a little "color" with a view to giving a more vivid impression with reference to Churchill and Eden and Laniel and Bidault. I said that our trip had been useful not only in regard to Indochina, but also in regard to EDC, where the talks which MacArthur and I had had with Laniel had, I thought, played a decisive part in helping Laniel to make up his mind in announcing the date for debate in the Chamber on the EDC Treaty.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Secretary Dulles accepted an invitation from President Eisenhower to visit with him at Augusta, Georgia (telegram 3546 to Paris, Apr. 14, 110.11 DU/4-1454) by letter of Apr. 15. In his letter to the President the Secretary wrote: "I would like to have this chance to tell you of the results of my present trip and obtain your guidance before I leave for the NATO Meeting and Geneva Tuesday evening [Apr. 20]. I had useful meetings with Bidault and Laniel in Paris yesterday, which I think will help in moving forward toward some of our objectives in Indo-China and EDC." James C. Hagerty wrote in his diary: "He [the Secretary] had prepared two statements: one by himself and another by the President—Asked for my advice—recommended that he as Secretary make statement for prestige purposes since he was leaving for NATO and Geneva meetings Tuesday night." (Eisenhower Library, Hagerty papers, Hagerty Diary, Apr. 19, 1954)

The President expressed some chagrin that the Senators had publicly stated that they had not been consulted. It seemed that they had forgotten.<sup>5</sup>

3. I referred to the fact that Mr. Eden had insisted upon calling off the prospective meeting of the 10 Southeast Asia countries to make a beginning on creating the collective defense. I explained that we had compromised on an arrangement which "fuzzed" the matter by combining the 10 with the 16 Korean countries.<sup>6</sup> I said that I thought this was probably largely due to pressure from Nehru.<sup>7</sup>

4. I told the President that there was still some risk that the Geneva Conference might fail because of Soviet insistence that it should be organized as a "Five Power" conference, including Red China. I said I felt that the Russians, who had vainly fought for this at Berlin, were trying to take advantage of the buildup of world hope in the Geneva Conference to repudiate their Berlin agreement and to put us in a position of either having to accept the five-power concept or be responsible for breaking up the conference. I said I regarded it as vital that the five-power concept should not be accepted. The Berlin understanding was to the contrary and was the "charter" of the Geneva Conference and I saw little use in going into a new conference with the Communists if they started out by repudiating the agreement on which the conference was based. I added that American public and Congressional opinion would be deeply resentful of our throwing away the principle which we had defended, and the acceptance of which we had won at Berlin.

The President was in entire agreement. He suggested that I should hint in my going-away statement that there was still a possibility of the conference breaking on the "five-power" issue. I indicated I would not want to deal with this on other than a very delicate basis before consulting with the British and French, who so far had stood fast with us.

The President asked what the position would be if we refused to attend and if the others went on without us. I said I felt this was unlikely to happen in relation to the initial, i.e. Korean phase, of the conference because I was confident that the ROK would follow us in this matter, and that any conference about Korea which was not participated in by both the ROK and the United States would be a farce. I said as regards the Indochina conference, that was different because France was principally concerned. However, this phase of the conference had not yet been arranged and the invitees had not been designated.

WASHINGTON, April 19, 1954.

MY DEAR BEDELL: I put to the Foreign Secretary the suggestion which was made when I called on the Secretary of State and you that the meeting tomorrow at the State Department should be a meeting of the "Sixteen" and regarded as a general "briefing" meeting before the Geneva Conference.<sup>1</sup> The Associated States will be added in view of the Indo-China item on the Conference agenda. It could if necessary be explained that the Secretary had seen all the Ambassadors separately before he left for London and Paris and was seeing them together on account of the time factor.

I have now heard that Mr. Eden agrees to this proposal. He suggests that it might be best to lay the main emphasis on Korea, and that the Indo-China question might rest on the substance of the communiqués issued in London and Paris. In this way any implication that the meeting is to begin the work of constituting the proposed South East Asia defence arrangement would be avoided.

Yours sincerely,

ROGER MAKINS

Memorandum of Conversation, by Elizabeth Brown of the Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, April 20, 1954.

Subject: Special Briefing Meeting, April 20, 1954

[Here follow the list of participants, Secretary Dulles' opening remarks, and that portion of the briefing concerned with the Korean phase of the Geneva Conference; for text, see page 119.]

Turning to Indochina, the Secretary said no decision had as yet been reached as to who would be invited to the Indochina phase of the conference. Five states were indicated by name in the Berlin communiqué, together with "other interested states". Who those other interested states were had not yet been determined and no invitations sent. He expected that the four sponsoring powers would hold early conversations in this regard. He had already had an informal exchange of views with M. Bidault; the matter had not arisen in his discussions with Mr. Eden. He assumed, however, that the Associated States would be invited if they wished to attend, and he recalled that they had been present at the Japanese Peace Conference and had signed the resulting treaty. He would think they were equally concerned in this case. It was easy to think of other states who might also be regarded as "interested".

Noting the language in the Berlin communiqué on this point, Mr. Dulles recalled that there had been some controversy at Berlin as to whether other interested "states" should be invited or other representatives of the region. As he recalled, the USSR had originally proposed "representatives", but the Western powers had insisted upon "states" on the ground that it would be more difficult to bring in Ho Chi Minh on this basis. He repeated that there was no agreement among the three Western powers, much less with the USSR, as to the composition of this phase of the conference.

Referring again to the connection which the Berlin communiqué made between a Korean settlement and peace in Asia, the Secretary said that there was also a strong inference that what happened on the Korean phase would have a bearing on what happened in Indochina. Nobody desired to give priority to Korea over Indochina from the standpoint of importance and urgency, but it was generally recognized that peaceful intentions on the part of the Communists would probably be developed positively or negatively with respect to Korea, before they could be developed on Indochina. He also thought that the conference would probably discuss Korea first since the composition of the Indochinese phase of the conference was still undecided.

Mr. Dulles said he assumed that those present who were particularly concerned with Indochina and Southeast Asia would be interested if he also reported briefly on the talks he had just concluded regarding the creation of a defense coalition to protect Southeast Asia from possible conquest by international Communist forces.<sup>1</sup> The origin of our thinking on this proposal derived from the feeling that if we entered the Geneva Conference, and more particularly its Indochina phase, without greater cohesion and strength, the Communists could legitimately entertain the hope and expectation of being able to take over Southeast Asia piece by piece. If they thought they could do so, there was no reason why they would not proceed on that basis.

Without cohesion for defense it had seemed likely to the United States, Mr. Dulles said, that the Geneva Conference would encourage rather than discourage Communist ambitions which presumably embraced the entire area. The best hope for peaceful solution seemed to lie in creating such conditions that the Communists would realize their ambitions would encounter an obstacle so formidable as to oblige them to write off the area. He recalled that this was what happened in Greece when the Communists finally realized they could not succeed there. We knew from the Greek experience that the Communists were without scruples when it came to writing off an adventure that was not paying off.

Therefore, Mr. Dulles believed that the first thing necessary for a possible peaceful solution was to take whatever steps were necessary to make it perfectly apparent that the Communists would not be able to succeed in their presumed grandiose plans in Southeast Asia. For this reason it seemed wise to make some preliminary arrangements to this end before the conference began; otherwise what we did would not have the same impact upon the Geneva Conference.

Observing that he had had discussions along these lines with a number of those present, the Secretary said that it had seemed useful to supplement those conversations with personal discussions with Messrs. Eden and Bidault in order to ensure mutual understanding. For that purpose he had gone to London and Paris last week.<sup>2</sup> Noting the two communiqués from London and Paris covering these discussions, the Secretary stated that the essence of both was the recognition that the Communist threat in Southeast Asia constituted a danger to the vital interests of many countries in the area, and that this situation made it desirable to explore the possibilities of united defense measures to create a collective defense arrangement within the framework of Article 51 of the UN Charter.

The Secretary went on to say that in the Paris conversations considerable emphasis was placed upon the desirability of the independence of the Associated States, as forecast in the July 3 statement by the French Government.<sup>3</sup> All, including France, recognized that collective defense in the area would have to be defense of genuine freedom and independence and not the defense of colonialism which the French had taken the initiative in beginning to end in the area.

Mr. Dulles informed the group that no final conclusion regarding the ultimate composition of the defense system had been reached. There were certain countries so closely in the path of the present Communist threat that they obviously would be necessary and proper parties to a defense arrangement; other countries in the general neighborhood might also be useful parties. He thought, and he believed Mr. Eden shared this view, that the question of composition could not be settled hurriedly.

In this connection, Mr. Dulles recalled that the original concept of collective defense in Europe was a grouping of the United States, the United Kingdom, Canada and the Western continental powers. The question of adding the Scandinavian states then arose, later Portugal and Italy, and still later Greece and Turkey were added, although both of them were far away from the North Atlantic area.

This experience, Mr. Dulles indicated, showed that the problem of composition had to be solved in an evolutionary process, taking account of varying needs and the measures that states were willing to take to meet the Communist threat. The important thing was that this concept had been launched and had found a good reception among countries in the immediate area. In the Secretary's judgment, the idea had already taken hold sufficiently to make clear to the Communists before the Geneva Conference that Southeast Asia was not going to be a push-over that they could take bit by bit. They now knew that if they persisted in their present tactics they would meet united opposition.

The Secretary said that, in discussing this situation in Augusta yesterday with the President,<sup>4</sup> he had recalled the fact that past aggressive Communist moves had brought reaction from the free world. NATO, for example, was due perhaps more than anything else to the takeover of Czechoslovakia which brought new fears into Europe. The original concept of NATO had not, he thought, included its implementation by supplementary defense arrangements. He recalled that when it was discussed in the Senate, both he and Senator Vandenberg had thought the pledges in the treaty were sufficient.

However, after the conquest of China and the Communist aggression in Korea, the fears of the free world led to its increased strength. The US, the Secretary observed, began to create a system of collective security in the Far East through mutual security treaties with Australia, New Zealand, the Philippines and Japan.<sup>5</sup> If instead of collapsing in fear we were spurred to more vigorous measures of collective self-defense, Mr. Dulles considered that there was a fair chance that the ambitions entertained by the Communists would be written off, and there might be an opportunity to enlarge the area of peace in the world and to bring an end to the fighting in Indochina where so far the forces of the French Union had made a valiant contribution.

The Secretary repeated that the problem was to achieve a peace that would be secured not by surrender or retreat, but by a demonstration that peace for free men meant strength, unity, cohesion and the pooling of our strength to protect the freedom of each of us. He believed that if it became clear that the nature of the threat in Indochina would arouse such a united response, in that fact lay the best hope for all of us, not only those interested in the area, but for all free countries because otherwise the threat of aggression would become so menacing that it might plunge us into general war.

The Secretary suggested that the group should agree upon the text of a statement for the press. In his view it was of the utmost importance that there should be no discussion of any questions of strategy or tactics because this would defeat our own purposes at the conference. This group must be able to discuss such matters frankly and confidentially knowing that there would be no leaks, for if there were, it would not be possible to have such discussions in the future. Mr. Dulles suggested that the press should be told simply that there had been an exchange of views preliminary to the Geneva Conference and that he had reported to the group for information purposes on the discussions which he had carried on last week in London and Paris. He added that he would indicate that there had been present at the meeting representatives of the sixteen states participating in the Korean phase of the Conference, together with representatives of the three Associated States.

Memorandum by the Deputy Director of the Office of Philippine and Southeast Asian Affairs (Day) to the Coordinator of the United States Delegation at the Geneva Conference (Johnson)<sup>1</sup>

WASHINGTON, April 20, 1954.

Subject: Philippine participation in Indo-Chinese phase of the Geneva Conference

1. In his conversation with Mr. Robertson on April 15,<sup>2</sup> Philippine Chargé, Emilio Abello, stated that if the Philippines were asked to participate in a defensive coalition to deter Communist aggression in Southeast Asia but were not invited to participate in the Indo-Chinese phase of the Geneva Conference, very strong, unfavorable reactions could be expected from Philippine political leaders. Mr. Abello anticipated that such a development would be vigorously exploited by the ultra-Nationalist element in the Philippines which is attempting to seize control of Philippine foreign policy and to drive a wedge between the Magsaysay administration and the United States.

2. The Embassy, in a telegram of April 19, stated its agreement with Abello's warning and added that no Filipino, including President Magsaysay, would understand our asking the Philippines to participate in a coalition but not in the Conference.<sup>3</sup>

3. Recent developments in the Philippines with respect to the Bases Agreement, the Trade Agreement, reparations from Japan, and demands for an "Asia for the Asians" foreign policy are all indicative of the vigorous ultra-Nationalism and a climate of opinion in which the Magsaysay administration might find it impossible to obtain the necessary political and public support for participation in any defensive coalition, if at the same time they were denied an opportunity to attend the Indo-Chinese phase of the Geneva Conference.

4. It is most likely that if the Philippine Mission, which has already left Manila to participate in the Korean discussions, is not invited to participate in the Indo-Chinese discussions, the Philippine government will be obliged to reject the proposal to participate in the coalition. It

They verified fact that for all practical purposes basic Franco-Vietnamese negotiations had now been concluded. Foreign Minister stated that French had accepted Vietnam's revolutionary suggestions in spite of fact they were contrary to French constitution itself. He spoke appreciatively of problems French Government faced in Parliament and public opinion in doing so. There would be two treaties, first declaring Vietnam's independence and second setting the manner of future association between two countries. Treaties will not actually be signed until the economic and financial conventions are also ready but they believed that arrangement could be made to make statement before Geneva conference that negotiations had been successfully concluded.<sup>1</sup>

Foreign Minister spoke at length of Vietnamese concerns at participating in Geneva conference if Viet Minh were also to be present. Reply to Latest Soviet Note on Geneva

M. Bidault<sup>2</sup> opened the meeting by stating that there was no fixed agenda and as the host he would make the first statement. Referring initially to the tripartite reply to the Soviet Note regarding the inviting powers for the Indochina phase of the Geneva Conference, M. Bidault read a U.S.-French draft of a reply (See Tab A).<sup>3</sup> He stressed the need to reply clearly to the false Soviet allegations regarding composition of the Geneva Conference. He stressed that it had always been understood that special responsibility devolved on the four Berlin powers, and that in any event we should not open the Geneva Conference by violating the basis of the understanding on which the meeting was set up.

Mr. Eden suggested that the last sentence of the draft be put in the positive rather than the negative sense and that it should stress the fact that the Geneva Conference must be held on the basis under which

On Apr. 19 Secretary Dulles in personal messages contained in telegrams 3749 to Paris and 5508 to London suggested to Bidault and Eden the possibility of meeting at Paris on Apr. 22 to discuss preliminaries regarding Geneva. (110.11 DU/4-1954)

For the portion of these minutes pertaining to the Korean phase of the conference, see p. 127.

<sup>2</sup> In telegram Dulte 5 from Paris, Apr. 22, Secretary Dulles informed Acting Secretary Smith that for "background you should know that at tripartite meeting this afternoon Bidault appeared totally exhausted mentally and unable to preside coherently. He is obviously under great strain as a result of developments I reported in my earlier telegram to you today [French leaders considered Dien Bien Phu situation hopeless; see Dulte 2, Apr. 22, in volume XIII.] and infirmity due to this rather than other causes." it was established at Berlin. M. Bidault and the Secretary agreed with this thought.

Participation in Indochina Phase

M. Bidault then passed to the question of participants in the Indochina phase of the Conference, and said that we might consider as a formula the four Berlin powers plus the three Associated States and the limitrophe states of Communist China (already invited), Thailand and Burma. He said that there was a problem which did not involve the French Government but rather the Vietnamese Government in the presence of the Vietminh. He said that Vietnam was, of course, an independent Associated State within the French Union and whose Government would strongly prefer that Ho Chi Minh not be present. Therefore the French position will be to oppose the presence of the Vietminh and to propose an invitation to the three Associated States. If the first French position is rejected by the Soviets, the second French position would be to accept Vietminh presence in some restricted capacity. If the Soviets insist on the same status for Ho as for Vietnam, the French Government will consult the Bao Dai Government before taking a position. Therefore, the French position, after proposing full participation for the Associated States, if the Soviets press the point, will be to seek some formula which will give the appearance of avoiding Vietminh participation at the same level.

The Secretary commented that there was one question not bearing on the substance of this problem but on the Note we had agreed upon. He said that the sentence which stated that all participants should be equal after the Korean and Indochinese talks had got underway might block the French search for some different status for Ho, which could give the appearance that he was not on the same level as the Vietnamese Government. The Secretary noted that perhaps we could claim that the Vietminh delegates did not represent a state, while the Berlin communiqué had specified that invitations would be extended to representatives "of other interested states", but he did believe that the sentence in question might make it more difficult to create any special and subordinate status for the Vietminh.

M. Bidault stated that France does not consider the Vietminh a state though the Soviet Union, which has recognized the Ho regime, and the Communist Chinese who help it do. He noted that France considers the three governments of the Associated States which received thirty-three votes for admission to the UN and with whom France maintains diplomatic relations as the only legitimate governments of the area. He said that, by the French definition, the idea that only states should participate would exclude the Ho regime. However, he would accept the presence of Ho if it would facilitate the end of the Indochina war, even though he could not be considered a representative of a state. He was particularly anxious to avoid the de facto acceptance of Ho which we had avoided at Berlin.

French Reaffirmation of Independence of Associated States

M. Bidault continued stating that the text of the Note which he had read seemed to reject clearly the Soviet proposal, and reaffirmed the special status of the four powers. He then said he was making a separate supplementary proposal, and read a statement regarding French reaffirmation of the independence of the three Associated States. The statement, after reaffirming the full independence of Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos, stated the resolve of the French Government to safeguard the freedom of the Indochinese peoples, and guaranteed that France would do everything possible so that they could exercise this independence, and live at peace. France also was resolved to safeguard the territorial integrity of the Associated States, and to prevent all attempts at disrupting the status of independence which had been freely accorded them. M. Bidault concluded that this declaration by the French Government would supplement the declaration of July 3, 1953.<sup>4</sup> He said that this had not been shown to the French Government yet, but he felt the Cabinet would approve it.

The Secretary inquired whether the statement which M. Bidault had just read would be appended to the Note to the Soviets which we had agreed upon earlier in the meeting. M. Bidault said that the statement which he had read regarding the independence of the Associated States was, of course, intended only for the French Government to make, and that this was just a rough draft, not intended to be issued right away.<sup>5</sup>

M. Bidault continued stating that insofar as the Indochinese phase of the Geneva Conference was concerned, Communist China was so far the only invited power, though she was clearly not an inviting power. He said we were sure to have a long and difficult fight on this issue with the Soviets at Geneva. He noted that the French position was in entire agreement with the U.S. stand.

Reverting to the draft note which he had read at the opening of the meeting, M. Bidault stated that the essential word in the sentence regarding the equality of all participants after the talks got underway was the word "commence". The Secretary stated that we might want to have some states as observers, so it would be preferable to omit the sentence entirely. Mr. Eden indicated that it would be better to stick as closely as possible to the terms of the Berlin agreement to avoid creating other problems, and thus he also favored deleting the sentence. M. Bidault agreed to omit the sentence and the text of the Note was amended accordingly.

M. Bidault stated that it was essential that there be Tripartite agreement on various problems before the opening of the Geneva Conference and accordingly he asked for a frank expression of the views of his colleagues, stating that he would later give his own frank opinions.

Collective Defense in Southeast Asia

The Secretary stated that last week in Paris and immediately before in London we agreed that our Governments and other interested States in the area would study a collective defense of Southeast Asia. In the view of the U.S. Government, these talks should now proceed as exploratory conversations as soon as practical without delineating initially the scope of the exact final number of participants in advance. He compared the situation with the initial talks which led to the formation of NATO, noting at first a small group of countries had been involved, that the framework had later expanded and had continued to expand ever since.

The Secretary added that some States were so obviously involved that they could be easily identified while others, such as the United States, were not so immediately threatened but realized the danger in the long run. Whether other States not immediately threatened recognized the danger as we did was not clear as yet. None of this precluded initial talks as laid out in the London and Paris communiqués. The Secretary noted that Thailand, the Philippines and Australia had confirmed their willingness to proceed with talks, while he was under the impression that New Zealand had also accepted. The Secretary said we envisaged initially talks by our political representatives possibly receiving advice from their military advisers as desirable. He was well aware of the delicacy of the task but believed it was essential regardless of the outcome at Dien Bien Phu, and of the campaign in the Tonkin Delta though the situation would, of course, be more urgent if these battles were lost.

The Secretary concluded that the knowledge by the Soviets that a common defense system was in prospect would strengthen our hand at Geneva and help convince the Soviets that they should come to a reasonable agreement. He said this was not for action within a matter of days, but that he would like to hear from the British and French Governments along the lines of last week's communiqués. The Secretary said that he reserved the right to talk later on details of the Geneva Conference. In view of the NATO meeting tomorrow<sup>6</sup> which we all had on our minds, and over which M. Bidault must preside, the

INDOCHINA PHASE

PROSPECTS FOR "UNITED ACTION" IN INDOCHINA<sup>2</sup>

The purpose of this paper is to examine the political prospects and implications of a military "united action" in Indochina which would add sufficient military assets to the present Franco-Vietnamese forces to ensure a defeat at least of the Vietminh regular divisions.

The Franco-Vietnamese effort in Indochina has to date been based upon the following factors:

(1) A military strategy<sup>3</sup> involving the destruction of the Vietminh regular divisions during the 1954-55 fighting season by a Franco-Vietnamese striking force to be built up eventually to some 20 Groupes Mobiles or regimental combat teams. About half these units would be constituted by the French expeditionary corps and the remainder would be the best elements of the Vietnamese National Army. (The proportion of Vietnamese soldiers involved would, however, be considerably in excess of 50% owing to the large numbers of Vietnamese included in French expeditionary corps units). The assumption has been that once the Vietminh regular divisions had been defeated or dispersed, the Vietnamese military and civil authorities would be able to handle the remaining rebel elements and restore peace and security throughout the country.

(2) A political strategy involving the creation of an independent Vietnamese Government with all the attributes of sovereignty and the association of that Government in a French Union conceived of as a group of sovereign states freely banded together to further their mutual interests. This French Union concept has probably been the major factor in keeping French parliamentary support for the war effort in Indochina above the danger point.

The impact of an application of "united action", i.e., effective US air and naval support for the Franco-Vietnamese forces would be as follows:

1) On the military plane, a recognition of the failure of the earlier strategy. In other words, a demonstration of the fact that the French expeditionary corps of 180,000 men and the Vietnamese army of perhaps 200,000 men plus massive U.S. end-item assistance are not strong enough to defeat a purely Vietnamese Vietminh army of 300,000 (of whom about 100,000 are regulars), supported by considerable but nevertheless comparatively small Chinese Communist assistance in end-items. Not only is the Navarre plan for decisive military results in jeopardy, but it also appears from recent indications that General Navarre may not even be able to maintain a stalemate. In other words, "united action" will be not only designed to achieve an early victory in this eight years war but also to avoid a very possible defeat of the Franco-Vietnamese forces.

2) On the political plane there will be three major implications:

(a) From the point of view of France, a demonstration of the fact that France is either unable or unwilling to do what is necessary to defend the French Union against aggression;

(b) That the attempt to form, in accordance with the Bao Dai formula, a strong nationalist Government and army in opposition to the Vietminh has failed;

(c) That whatever regime may be established in Vietnam depends for its existence less on its own political force and military power or on that of the French Union than on the factor of US willingness to intervene forcibly when and as necessary. The possibilities open to the Vietminh and the Chinese Communists for an infinite variety of guerrilla, terroristic, sabotage and generally subversive activities with a strong nationalistic appeal would be infinite.

Conclusion: Every effort must be made to convince the French and the Vietnamese that a failure to achieve success within the present framework, a failure to furnish all the means necessary to that end (including French conscripts and a major stepping up of American material aid) would be suicidal from the point of view of French interests generally, of the interests of the current Vietnamese regime and of free world interests in the Far East. The "united action" alternative, useful as it may be in improving the chances of a negotiated settlement, is a very poor second choice, if carried to the action stage. Its ultimate political success seems highly dubious both in terms of Indochina and in terms of South and Southeast Asia and the Far East generally.

RÉSUMÉ OF INFORMAL US-UK-FRENCH PREPARATORY TALKS IN PARIS ON INDOCHINA PHASE OF GENEVA CONFERENCE

1. Participation

The French indicated that their preliminary thinking does not favor formal participation of the Associated States. If they participate, the French do not see how the Viet Minh could be excluded, although the presence of the Communist puppet governments of Cambodia and Laos could probably be resisted. France feels the problem could best be handled by giving the Associated States and the Viet Minh (and perhaps the Laotian and Cambodian puppet governments) a special status as limited conference participants deriving in essence from the immediacy of their conflict of interests. They would be neither full participants nor observers but their representatives would be readily available for participation as the occasion required, thus avoiding any discussion of the legal basis of these governments and confrontation across the conference table. In order to avoid the Five Power connotation and to keep the Conference as small as possible the French are inclined to favor the Big Four, Communist China, Burma and Thailand as the participating powers.

The Vietnamese Foreign Minister, now in Paris, told the French he fully expected the French to propose Vietnamese participation but to object to the expected Soviet proposal for Viet Minh participation and to try instead to get the Ho government considered under a different status from Vietnam. We and the UK stated our hope that the Associated States would not only be invited but would accept. The UK prefers keeping participation down to the Big Four, Communist China, the Associated States and the Viet Minh only, citing the anticipated pressures from Commonwealth countries and others if participation is extended beyond Indochinese borders. All agreed it would be difficult to keep out the Viet Minh, the French adding that they would accept the Viet Minh presence only under the Berlin formula that it did not involve recognition.

2. Possible Military Settlement

In general terms, the French position is apparently in the direction of finding, as the first step, some basis for a cease-fire on purely military grounds with political negotiations to follow. The French military experts are studying Laniel's March 5 cease-fire conditions (Attached) to determine the needed guarantees and safeguards which could achieve Laniel's objective of guaranteeing the security of the French and Associated States forces and other friendly elements. The French believe, however, that Laniel's conditions would be viewed by the Communists as too harsh and would, therefore, not permit sufficient latitude for negotiating purposes. Hence, the French are thinking of securing the psychological initiative by first offering to disengage Laos and Cambodia from the military scene (i.e. by mutual withdrawal of all forces from the two countries except for the basis of Xieng Khouang and Seno which the French are permitted to garrison under the terms of the Franco-Laotian treaty. They emphasize that French Union forces could be moved by air within little more than an hour to any point endangered in Laos if the Royal Army was unable to cope with the situation.) Then consideration would be given to a possible cease-fire in Vietnam.

The British were not too concerned and thought it might at least give the French a talking point initiative in the negotiating process.

The French seemed to think there could be a cease-fire in Indochina without a political settlement, as was the case in Korea. They apparently attach considerable importance to recent expressions of goodwill and a desire to be of service from the Soviet Ambassador in Paris. They emphasize their thinking on the subject, however, is tentative only.

3. Timing of Indochina Phase

All agreed that timing (and participation) must be resolved by the Big Four Ministers. The French hope the issue will be raised as soon as possible at Geneva.

LANIEL CONDITIONS <sup>2</sup>

In his speech of March 5, Prime Minister Laniel laid down certain conditions or guarantees which would have to precede negotiation, as follows:

1. Total evacuation of Laos by Viet Minh.
2. Total evacuation of Cambodia by Viet Minh.
3. Evacuation by Viet Minh of Tonkin Delta and creation of no-man's land around its periphery.
4. Withdrawal by Viet Minh from central Viet Nam area to certain specified and restricted areas.

5. Disarmament or evacuation of Viet Minh forces in southern Viet Nam.

6. Other measures of security and control providing assurances that suspension of fighting would not enable Viet Minh to reinforce itself or strengthen its position during conversations.

Laniel stressed that the actual cease-fire would only be the result of negotiations incorporating these safeguards, and that a cease-fire of the kind proposed by Nehru would be unacceptable since it would not afford the minimum tolerable security guarantees for the French Expeditionary Corps and Viet Nam troops.

The Secretary of State to the Department of State

GENEVA, April 24, 1954.

Secto 1. For Phillips from McCardle. Following is Secretary Dulles' statement made on arrival at Geneva, April 24, 1954:

“We come to Geneva on a mission of peace made necessary by communist aggression in Asia. We shall be working on behalf of the Republic of Korea and the Associated States of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, whose lands have been invaded and whose peoples have been ravaged by war. We think of the courageous forces of the French Union at Dien Bien Phu who, under the gallant leadership of General DeCastries, are at this very moment suffering cruelly because ambitious rulers seek to extract some profit which they can use at this Geneva conference.

"We hope to find that the aggressors come here in a mood to purge themselves of their aggression, and that it will thus be possible to achieve a durable peace which will restore to the brave Korean people their unity and independence, and enable the peoples of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia to enjoy and perfect the political freedom which is now theirs.

"I take this occasion to express the friendship which is felt by the American people for the people of Switzerland and their appreciation of the manifold services which Switzerland has rendered throughout its history for the cause of peace and humanity".

GENEVA, April 25, 1954.

Participants:	UK	US
	Mr. Eden	Secretary Dulles
	Mr. Shuckburgh	Mr. MacArthur
	Mr. Caccia

Time: 10:15-11:00 p. m., April 25, 1954

Place: Hotel Beau Rivage, Geneva

I sent word to the British Delegation that I would be glad to see Mr. Eden upon his arrival in Geneva this evening if he thought it would be useful. At 10 p. m. I received word that Mr. Eden had just arrived and would be very glad to see me. I called upon him in his quarters at the hotel Beau Rivage immediately thereafter.

Mr. Eden opened the conversation by saying he was very glad to bring me up to date on the results of his trip to London. He had met with the Prime Minister, the Cabinet, and the British Chiefs of Staff. He said he was afraid that the news which he had for me would not be exactly what I wanted to hear. However, he did have certain positive proposals to lay before me.

He then said that the British Chiefs of Staff were certain that air intervention at Dien Bien Phu would have no decisive effect on that battle; therefore, since such action would be ineffective, it would be a great mistake in terms of free world opinion to undertake it since nobody could foresee where it would lead. Mr. Eden added that until it is clear what kind of action can be undertaken, it seemed better to wait and be sure where we are headed. He said that under the British proposals, which he would give me, the Communists would be kept guessing as to what we would do if Geneva failed, since they knew already we were considering the possibility of united action. He then said, the UK position resulting from his trip to London was as follows:

1. The British would give the French all possible diplomatic support at Geneva to keep them firm with a view to reaching a satisfactory settlement on Indochina.

2. If such a settlement is reached, the UK will be willing to join with the US and other interested countries of Southeast Asia in guaranteeing that settlement.

3. The UK is prepared at once to study secretly with the US the military measures which might be undertaken to defend Thailand and the rest of Southeast Asia if the French capitulate at Geneva.

Eden said that this latter US-UK exercise excluded Indochina but would deal with the remainder of the area. I asked Eden if the proposed US-UK secret study excluded all of Indochina or just Vietnam. He replied that it excluded all of Indochina. He went on to say that if the Geneva negotiations did not lead to a settlement the British would of course examine urgently with us what should be done about united action. Mr. Eden said that the British Government felt that the foregoing suggestions were not negative, but positive in character. This course of action in the British eyes was infinitely preferable to intervention in the present battle in Indochina. He repeated that under the British proposal the Communists would be kept guessing and might be led to be fairly reasonable since if they were not, and the conference failed, some other course of action might be adopted by the non-communist states with vital interests in Southeast Asia.

He said that he had two points to add in connection with the foregoing. The British had recently reassessed the situation in Malaya. They had at present 22 battalions (one third UK, one third Malaya, one third Ghurkas) and 100 thousand well armed and trained native policemen. If Indochina collapsed the British felt confident that the situation in Malaya would be in hand. He said there was no parallel between the situations in Indochina and Malaya.

I said to Eden that the British position was most disheartening. I was very skeptical that there was much in it for the French and I doubted that it would be sufficient to keep them in fight. It seemed to me that the prospects of French capitulation were increased in the light of the British position.

Mr. Eden replied "None of us in London believe that intervention in Indochina can do anything". I repeated my belief that if the French did not have some hope that they would have new allies in the Indochina war that they would be unwilling to continue on themselves.

Mr. Eden said that he had stopped at Orly on his way to Geneva (to pick up Mrs. Eden) and had a brief meeting with Bidault. He said that he had outlined for Mr. Bidault in less detail the position of the British Government and had specifically told him that it was as follows:

1. The UK will give the French all possible diplomatic support at Geneva with a view to aid them reach a satisfactory settlement on Indochina.

2. If such a settlement is reached, the UK will be willing to join with the US and others in some form of guarantee for that settlement.

3. If Geneva fails, the UK will be prepared to join with others to examine urgently the situation to see what best should be done.

I said to Eden that I had some reservations myself about immediate air intervention at Dien Bien Phu because we did not believe Dien Bien Phu could be saved by it, and also because our responsibility would be engaged without a sound and adequate political basis for carrying on military action there. In other words, it would seem to involve us very deeply on an unsound basis. However, if we could not give the French some hope for future support, I did not believe that they would be able to stand the loss of Dien Bien Phu. In this connection, I thought it a serious error to write off the loss of all of Indochina and assume that the rest of Southeast Asia could be held. It would have a vital effect on Thailand, Malaya, and Indonesia which was balanced precariously. Its long term result could lead to the loss of Japan. I said I believe the non-communist states having vital interests in the area, which certainly included Britain, should concert now to work out a joint defense and one which would at least attempt to hold the maximum part of Indochina. This would of course require assurances from the French that they would hold on and also a real guarantee from them regarding the full independence of Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos. I mentioned that in thinking about the problem of the defense of Southeast Asia, President Eisenhower had commented that to defend the area after the loss of Indochina with its 300 thousand native troops would make the task infinitely more difficult.

While it seemed manifestly impossible to intervene militarily in Indochina before the loss of Dien Bien Phu because of the necessary political arrangements which would have to be made, the French should feel that there was the real prospect of getting more support after the loss of Dien Bien Phu than they had had before. If they did not have such a feeling, I feared that they would throw up their hands in despair.

Mr. Eden said there was obviously a "gap" between the US and UK views but that the British Government had gone just as far as it possibly could. He mentioned that the British Chiefs of Staff looked forward to discussing the situation in Indochina and Southeast Asia with Radford in London on Monday with a view to getting a better understanding of the differing estimates.

I asked Eden whether the British envisaged a partition in Indochina. Mr. Eden replied that this was a possible course which might save a substantial part of the area. He then produced a staff study map of Indochina prepared by the British Chiefs of Staff which Lord Alexander had given him. The map indicated by red lines that virtually all of Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia is under, or subject to, imminent Vietminh control. He said to clear Indochina up the British believe that a strong force must be committed to the Hanoi Delta and that it would have to work gradually outwardly in concentric circles. As it advances, the area it freed of Vietminh control would have to be consolidated by loyal and effective Indochinese administrators. The British believe that this was a "tremendous project involving lots of time and considerable ground forces". I commented on a broken black line at about the seventeenth or eighteenth parallel which ran from the coast of Vietnam across to the border of Thailand. Mr. Eden indicated that this was a possible line of partition, although such a line might have to be bent a little to the south in Vietnam because of the strong control which the Vietminh had over one area on the coast through which this line ran. (Caccia subsequently confirmed that in a partition solution the UK is thinking about a partition of Vietnam and not also of Laos.)

Mr. Eden reiterated that the UK could give no commitment in advance of Geneva guaranteeing Indochina, or implying its defense. If no settlement were reached, the British would join with the allies to consider urgently what should be done. When he had explained the British position at Orly earlier in the evening, Bidault had not raised any question and had seemed resigned.

I said that I feared the French were being put in a position where they might go for what almost amounted to an unconditional surrender. Mr. Eden simply stated "We think this Indochina business is a very big operation in terms of soldiers, time, and commitments." I said that there was no reason why we could not develop the Vietnam forces so that they matched in quality and spirit the Vietminh forces which were receiving infinitely less in the way of supplies. This would of course require real independence but that I felt was understood. To develop the Vietnam forces and a real spirit that they were fighting for their independence would take time. Mr. Eden replied that unfortunately the Vietminh forces seemed to have faith, whereas the Vietnam did not.

In conclusion, Mr. Eden said that he realized the British position was not what we would have wished, but that the position outlined was just as far as the UK Government felt it was possible to go.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs (Robertson)

GENEVA, April 25, 1954.

Participants: The Rt. Hon. R. G. Casey, Australian Minister for External Affairs
John Foster Dulles, Secretary of State
Walter S. Robertson, Assistant Secretary of State

Place: Geneva

Subject: Indo-China

Minister Casey called on the Secretary at 12:20 p. m. (April 25). He opened the conversation by saying that Mr. Eden, before leaving Paris for London the evening before, had conveyed to him the gist of his conversation with the Secretary late Saturday afternoon.<sup>1</sup>

The Secretary then read Casey the letter he had written M. Bidault on April 24 and Bidault's reply.<sup>2</sup> Casey asked that if Dien Bien Phu should fall, would the Secretary feel that the pressure of public opinion in France would force the French to "check in". The Secretary then summarized his talk with Laniel Saturday night just before leaving for Geneva.<sup>3</sup>

Laniel had stated that the fall of Dien Bien Phu would in all probability cause the fall of the French Government and would mark the end of French resistance. It was therefore necessary that the United States take immediate action to prevent such a catastrophe. The Secretary said he had explained to Laniel that (1) the United States

<sup>2</sup> The text of Secretary Dulles' letter of Apr. 24 to Foreign Minister Bidault was transmitted to the Department in telegram Dulte 1 from Geneva, Apr. 24; Bidault's reply of Apr. 24 was transmitted from Paris to the Secretary in telegram 121 to Geneva (telegram 4058 to the Department of State), Apr. 24. could not intervene without Congressional approval, (2) that Congressional leaders would not be willing to intervene in any event except in collaboration with the British and with the independence of the Associated States guaranteed, and (3) that the procedure of obtaining Congressional approval would take weeks, thus making it necessary that the French should hold on now at any cost. He further explained that he, the Secretary, did not yet know what the attitude of the British and Commonwealth nations would be. He realized that both the Australians and British were hampered by political difficulties at home, but he emphasized to Laniel that he would do everything possible to ensure that the French could count on at least two allies. He stated further that the purpose of his quick trips to London and Paris was to create fresh assets to offset the probable loss of Dien Bien Phu.

The Secretary emphasized to Casey that everything possible should be done to support Bidault and Laniel because in the event of the fall of their Government they would probably be succeeded by a Mendes France or some neutralist which might refuse an offer of intervention even if it could be made. The Secretary said that Admiral Radford thought that the fall of Dien Bien Phu might threaten a massacre of the French population which would make it extremely difficult for the French troops to withdraw. Casey expressed his own feeling that even should Britain and Australia agree to intervene, if they should do so without UN backing it would greatly antagonize Asian opinion. The Secretary explained that we would of course expect to rely upon Vietnamese troops which could probably be wielded into an effective fighting force under training by a man like General Van Fleet.

The Secretary stated that President Eisenhower had asked Admiral Radford to ask the British why they were willing to wait until one of their greatest assets, some 300,000 Vietnamese troops, had been destroyed before deciding to take collective action. Casey replied that it was the British fear that British and American intervention in Indo-China at this time would bring in the Communist Chinese and get us all embroiled in a war with Red China.

GENEVA, April 25, 1954—midnight.

Dulte 4. Eyes only for Acting Secretary from Secretary. Please pass to the President.

“Eden advises Winston has in mind primarily discussions re certain plans and projects relating to new weapons which he would like to talk over.<sup>1</sup> He would of course expect to review generally world situation, including Indochina, but without any expectation of taking any decisions. Under circumstances and particularly in view of negative attitude which I am reporting concurrently, I suggest that any definitive decision await my return and consultation in light of developments here as to whether a greater vitality could be given to our relationship both in Europe and in Asia. In this connection the risk of failure of your meeting popular expectations must be weighed against the background of increasing inability of Winston to lead his Cabinet and increasing inability of Cabinet to cope with Parliament. This latter consideration is, I think, paramount factor in unwillingness to face up to Indochina issues.

Faithfully yours, Foster.”

CONFIDENTIAL      PRIORITY      GENEVA, April 25, 1954—midnight.

Secto 6. For Phillips from McCardle. Following is transcript of Secretary's background meeting with American correspondents Geneva April 25. This material should be used in same way that it was used at Berlin conference.<sup>2</sup> That is, it should be used as guidance for their information program. It can also be used for any briefing which is held in the Department, but there should be no reference that this comes from Secretary. Any such briefing in Department should be confined to the views expressed by Secretary but with no mention textually or otherwise that they come from the Secretary. Following is the Secretary's background briefing:

“Dulles: I don't expect I shall be having very many of these background conferences myself because I do not expect to stay here in Geneva very long. I hope that matters will work out so that General Bedell Smith can come to replace me toward the end of this week or the first of next week . . . .

I would not say I approach this conference in any great spirit of optimism. I joined at Berlin in the agreement to hold the conference because, as far as Korea is concerned, such a conference had been agreed upon and in my opinion it is always appropriate to accept occasions to try to bring about by peaceful means a result which seems to be a desirable result and one which is right and one which in the long run will prevail. It takes a measure of faith to believe that it will prevail, but I have that faith and I'm willing to give a chance for the forces of righteousness, as I call them, to prevail, even though my reason may tell me that it is unlikely that it will happen.

The experience which we have had with the Soviet Union and in relations to areas where they got them, 'temporarily' under their control has been that the temporary character has always been turned into permanent, at least in so far as the present time goes and there has been no willingness on their part to relax their grip and I frankly do not see much more likelihood that they would do so in the case of Korea than in the case of Germany, although the situation is somewhat different and there is a slightly greater hope permissible, I think, in the case of Korea than in case of Germany. Certainly the importance of Korea to the scheme of affair is not comparable to the importance of Germany. There are compensations which can properly be made on the free world side in relation to Korea which were not permissible in relation to Germany, having in regard the fact the German area is part, and a very vital part, of the strategy of NATO.

Therefore, I think there is a chance which we are entitled to, and should pursue, that Korea might be peacefully united under acceptable terms. Certainly we will do the best we can to explore that fully we will not be disposed to agree to a unification on terms which would likely mean that the entire area would fall under Communist control. The terms of unification which the Soviet Union proposed for Germany were such that if the election machinery had been as they proposed it, in fact the Communists would have almost had a monopoly of voting throughout all Germany. And that, of course, was rejected and anything similar would be rejected as far as Korea is concerned. Unification, in our opinion, and I think our opinion coincides with that of the Republic of Korea, is not to be had as the price of the sacrifice of real liberty and independence. The war was not fought with its ghastly toll of misery and suffering merely to win a freedom which would be surrendered at the conference table. I have spoken of the Korean phase of the conference.

As far as the Indochina phase of the conference is concerned, the composition of that conference has not yet been determined. I don't know when that agreement will be reached. Certainly there will be serious problems involved. It took somewhat over—I think it was approximately nine months—to reach agreement about the composition of the Korean conference. Incidentally, what was finally agreed upon, both in terms of composition and in terms of place, was precisely what we had offered immediately after the armistice of last July, so that you can judge where the responsibility for the delay.

I wouldn't want to guess what the processes will be of agreeing on the composition of an Indochina conference. It could take a long time. It could take a short time. There are, of course, pressures at work there which were not present in relation to the Korean political conference because already in Korea there was an armistice, whereas the fighting goes on very intensively in Indochina. So in that respect the two situations are not comparable. Still there may be, probably will be, considerable problems involved.

One problem which is already manifesting itself in the preliminaries is the effort being made by the Soviet Union to reverse the decision of the Berlin agreement, that was that there would be no Five-Power conference and that Communist China would not be here in any capacity different from the Republic of Korea or Colombia or any other participant at the conference. At Berlin Mr. Molotov opened up that conference with a demand for a Five-Power conference. He fought for it all the way through. We opposed it all the way through and he finally gave in at the end. Now he is attempting to make this Geneva conference into something other than had been agreed upon at Berlin.

As I pointed out in Washington before I left to come here,<sup>3</sup> it is not the position of the US to start this conference out on the basis of a breach of the agreement which is the charter of the conference itself. And I see little use in trying to make new agreements at a conference where the opposing parties start out by breaking the agreement on which the conference was called.

If you have any questions I would be glad to try to answer them.

Question. Mr. Secretary, why are you going home in such a short time, whereas you stayed in Berlin four weeks?

Answer. Well, one reason I'm going home is because I did stay in Berlin for four weeks. I can't be away all the time. And I announced at Berlin when Molotov originally wanted to make this a conference of Foreign Ministers, I refused to make it a conference of Foreign Ministers and made it a conference of representatives.

I explained at the time that Molotov wanted to know why I changed the words from 'Foreign Ministers' to 'representatives' and what it meant. I said it meant that I would expect to be at this conference at the opening days and that I would expect to go back to Washington.

Q. Does that mean, sir, that you will not participate yourself in the actual discussions on Indochina when that phase of the conference is reached?

<sup>3</sup> A reference to the Secretary's statement made on Apr. 20 in Washington prior to his departure for Europe. Issued as Department of State press release 207 and printed in the Department of State Bulletin, May 3, 1954, p. 669.

A. If I carry out my present intention of going back in a week or less, it seems to me unlikely that the Indochina phase of the conference would be organized within that time. There may of course be, as there usually are at the conferences, informal talks. I have already had some talks with Mr. Eden and Mr. Bidault about that matter. I might say that as far as the attendance is concerned, I think that both Mr. Eden and Mr. Bidault do not expect to be here for the duration of the conference, although that of course is for them to decide. But that is my impression.

Q. Mr. Secretary, you don't, I take it, intend to return at a later time, if the Indochina phase comes up say in June?

A. Well, that is possible. Nowadays, when you can get across to Europe over night, it should be looked upon as a possibility. I came over the week before for just two or three days and it could be that I would come back if it seemed necessary.

Q. Mr. Secretary, what do you expect actually to happen tomorrow? How is this conference going to start? What will be the procedures the first day, and so on? Is it anywhere near as well organized in the preliminaries as Berlin was?

A. I do not think that it is as well organized as Berlin was, although even at Berlin there were some unresolved procedural matters which I settled with Mr. Molotov just about a half hour before we actually convened. Now, the problems are somewhat more stubborn this time. There are more people here, and we have less in the way of precedents to guide us.

Q. Mr. Secretary, do you expect to see Mr. Molotov before tomorrow's opening?

A. I have no plan for seeing Mr. Molotov.

Q. What actually happens tomorrow at three o'clock? If presumably that is the time.

A. I don't know. I expect I will be going out to the building and we will see what happens.

Q. Mr. Secretary, what are the compensations that might be made to China, I suppose you meant, in return for a settlement in Korea?

A. Well, what I meant there was that there are possibilities of withdrawal of forces in the case of Korea which here were not available in the case of Germany so long as Western Germany plays a part in the NATO forward strategy.

Q. Mr. Secretary, can you tell us what your attitude is likely to be if the opposing side requests that priority be given to a discussion of a cease-fire in Indochina instead of an immediate discussion of Korea?

A. Yes. As to what I would do?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Well, that would be a matter which would primarily be the responsibility of those who are doing the firing, I suppose. The US is not one of those which is doing any firing in Indochina. It is quite possible our friends would want to consult with us in the matter, but I would say that if that matter would come up, the primary responsibility would devolve upon those who were carrying the burden fighting.

Q. Mr. Secretary, there have been frequent suggestions in the last two days that we might very soon be participating in the action in Indochina as a result of the crisis at Dien Bien Phu. Have you anything to say about Dien Bien Phu and the severity of the crisis there and our likely response to it?

A. I think it's apparent from the reports which are available in the press and which do not depart or vary a great deal from the official information I get that the plight of the defenders is increasingly difficult. They are putting up a very gallant and magnificent struggle, but the capacities of continuing air support are diminishing. Our reaction would be, as it has been for a long time, one of very great sympathy. We have taken, you might say, all steps short of actual belligerency to assist. We have drawn a line of belligerency which we have not crossed and I see no present reason to anticipate that we will cross that line.

Q. Can we afford to see Indochina fall?

A. Well, that question—can we afford to—we certainly wouldn't like to see it fall, but some things have happened that we don't like and can't practically prevent. I don't mean to suggest that I think Indochina is going to fall.

Q. Mr. Secretary, there are reports today that French have asked us to intervene more directly and that we have told them that constitutionally, it's impossible to go farther than we have at the present time. Can you say anything about that?

A. No.

Q. Can you confirm or deny, sir, the story that was printed in The New York Times that you did tell the French that we would not fulfill a request from them for American planes with American crews?

A. Not other than to say that that has been the well-known and recognized policy of the administration, not to take part in active belligerency. As has been explained in Washington, there are a few technicians there working in non-combat activities, in non-combat areas. The air-lift operation that was just carried on would merely let the people off at a non-combat zone, and come back again. And it has been a policy of the United States, in accordance the limitations on the President's authority, to avoid Executive action which might be an act of belligerence, an act of war.

Q. May I ask again question are you not confirming and not denying the Times story, then?

A. I have not seen the Times story.

Q. Well, the story, as I have reported, is that France has asked for direct, large-scale intervention in Indochina by United States aircraft, manned by American crews, but was told it was impossible for President Eisenhower to sanction such a grave move. That is the way it was written in the Times.<sup>4</sup>

A. I prefer not to comment on the story.

Q. Mr. Secretary, is there any possibility at all of your meeting the Chief of the Chinese Delegation separately before you return home?

A. Not unless our automobiles collide.

Q. Mr. Secretary, can you give us any guidance on what prompted Mr. Eden to return to London for a Cabinet meeting before returning here?

A. No, I am afraid I cannot comment on that.

Q. Have you been informed, Mr. Secretary, of the statement Mr. Nehru made in his Parliament yesterday regarding a series of proposals made for settling the Indochina problem?<sup>5</sup>

A. I have not been officially informed of that. My own information comes from the press. There was in the local Geneva paper this morning what purported to be a text of his proposal, but I had nothing more official than that.

Q. Mr. Secretary, what do you think should be the answer of the West to the fall of Dien Bien Phu, if it does fall?

A. I do not want to say anything that would sound as though I think Dien Bien Phu is going to fall. Of course, there are always possibilities of military reverses. We have had plenty of them in our time; and so far, a local military reverse has never changed the course of history to such an extent that the forces opposed to us have ultimately prevailed.

Q. Mr. Secretary, do I take you literally that you have no anticipation of getting together with the three other principal Foreign Ministers that invited the nations in this conference to arrange details for tomorrow at three o'clock? You plan, just literally to go to the building at three o'clock and see what happens?

<sup>4</sup> The New York Times, Apr. 25, 1954, p. 1. This article by C. L. Sulzberger also prompted questions from the press in Washington. The Department of State in telegram Tedul 5 to Geneva, Apr. 25, said it was "urgently waiting report your background briefing session with American correspondents in Geneva. We are under considerable pressure here to forward background briefing session to press which we are deferring pending your report of what has been given them in Geneva." (110.11 DU/4-2554)

<sup>5</sup> For Prime Minister Nehru's proposals made on Apr. 24 in New Delhi, see the memorandum by Stelle to Bowie, Apr. 30, p. 635. The proposals were transmitted to the Department of State from the Embassy in New Delhi in telegram 1596 from New Delhi, Apr. 25, printed in volume XIII.

A. I expect that there will be continuing efforts to iron out the remaining difficulties. There is a working committee—Mr. Johnson is on it for US—which is working with corresponding members of the British, French, and Soviet Delegations on these mechanical details of seating arrangements and things of that sort, I have not heard the latest report. He has been working on it, I know, today, and I suppose the work will still go on tomorrow morning, will it not?

Mr. Johnson: Yes.

Q. Have the Chinese sought to get in at that level, Mr. Secretary?
Secretary Dulles: No.

Q. Do you know, Mr. Secretary, who will preside tomorrow?

A. No.

Q. One other question: Can you say what our attitude is on the participation or nonparticipation of Viet Minh in the Indochina phase of the conference?

Secretary Dulles: We would be primarily guided by the French views in that respect. We have taken the position in Korea, not always with complete success but, at least, we have taken position that the Republic of Korea and the United States, which bore the great burden of the battle there, should have a primary voice in the conference decisions in relation to Korea, and I feel the same way with reference to Indochina, that the forces of the French Union, including the forces particularly of Vietnam, should have a very influential voice in matters of that sort. And while we would perhaps be consulted, we would be inclined not to try to interpose our veto, in any sense as against what they might want to do.

I have talked in Paris with Emperor Bao Dai about that matter. He feels very strongly against the admission here into the discussions of the representative of the Viet Minh. I do not think the French have finally made up their minds as to what they want, but we ourselves are rather waiting to see the ideas of those who are carrying the burden of the fighting. We are carrying a good deal of the material burden, but in the last analysis, it is the people who fight and die who have the right to the last word on these matters.

Q. Does that apply to the substantive provisions of the Indochina conference, as well, that the French and the people doing the fighting will have to decide the basic decisions and—

A. I would think that would be true up to the point at least where we felt that the issues involved had a pretty demonstrable interest to the United States itself. The United States does have pretty considerable interests in the Western Pacific, and there are some solutions there which we would regard as so disadvantageous that we would seek to prevent them. And if we failed in that respect, we would probably want to disassociate ourselves from it.

Q. Mr. Secretary, is it clear in our own minds whether the Red Chinese will participate in the rotation of the chairmanship of this conference on Korea, or not?

A. There has been no decision of any kind reached yet as to who the chairman will be or how he will be determined.

Q. But we have not taken an absolutely definite position on that, then?

A. Well, there has been no proposal of which I know that the chairmanship should rotate.

Q. Mr. Secretary, can I go back to your earlier statement about the administration's policy about not taking part in active belligerency in Indochina, and ask, if you could, to explain a little bit on that, and to explain how that would fit in with your trip a week ago to discuss united action in the Southeast Asia Pact with the French and the British. Would some policy have to be changed for that? That is, that seems to imply the active belligerency if the pact was brought into force.

A. It did. But it is one thing to create an agreed defense arrangement which would have the approval of Congress, either through a joint resolution or through a treaty; it is another thing for the Executive to go off on his own.

Q. Couldn't the Executive go to Congress in this current situation, Mr. Secretary, if the Executive desired to send military forces into Indochina to keep it from falling to the Communists?

A. He could do so, I suppose. Executives have gone to Congress before, but whether the circumstances are such, whether the President would feel prompted to do so at this particular juncture, I don't know.

Q. Mr. Secretary, do you feel the present situation in Indochina makes urgent the need for your plan for an Asiatic NATO?

A. I do.

Q. Mr. Secretary, have we come to this conference with anything like the solid front you had in Berlin on the part of our own allies?

A. Well, I think we have a pretty well-agreed position on Korean matters. We have been meeting off and on, with considerable regularity in Washington, with the representatives of the 16 Ambassadors—15 others. We have not had a recent full exchange of views with the representative of Korea, which is, of course, vitally concerned—the most vitally concerned. But I did have, this morning, a very full and satisfactory exchange of views with the Korean Foreign Minister, and I see no reason to anticipate any serious divergencies of views. Of course, when you have 16 people on one side, there is always a chance for variations of emphasis or the order in which you put things. You cannot have it quite as closely coordinated as when we were only three. But I don't anticipate any serious differences on Korea. The question of Indochina is somewhat different because there you are in the middle of a battle, with a constantly fluctuating situation. The governmental position in France is not as solid as one would perhaps like to see it, and there are more variables in the situation which have made it impractical to reach full agreement for the purpose of this conference. One of the reasons why I came over here to see Mr. Eden and Mr. Bidault ten days ago was to try and get things in somewhat better order, at least in terms of our long-range position, which is extremely important.<sup>6</sup> If we have a solid long-range position, then your day-by-day decisions can be related to that; if you have no fundamental position of agreement, then you are driven hither and thither by the vagaries of daily interests.

Q. Mr. Secretary, how solid do you think the Soviet-China front is, especially at this conference? To what degree do you think Russia will control China?

A. I expect that whatever differences there are will not be discernable to the naked eye.

Q. Sir, is the United States position opposed to any sort of idea of any partition in Indochina?

A. Broadly speaking, it does not seem to lend itself to partition, as has been the temporary situation in Korea. As you know, there is no line there. The fighting breaks out here, there, and the other place—all over the area. It is not confined to Vietnam, but extends to Laos and Cambodia, and it is very difficult to think of the line which would in fact be an acceptable compromise.

It is conceivable, and I could take a map and draw a little bit of a place up in the mountains, and say, 'if all the Communists would go up here, I would be very happy,' and let them stay there. That might not be acceptable to them.

Q. Did you find your colleagues in Paris shared your own view about the urgency of setting up the Asiatic NATO?

A. I did not find any change last week from the position which we have developed during the preceding week. I did find in France a preoccupation with immediate, daily problems which was occupying their minds so that there was not quite as much opportunity to develop their long-range planning as would have been otherwise desirable.

Q. Is there no way in which that Asiatic pact could be applied to their day-to-day problems?

A. Well, not until it is brought into being.

Q. Generally assuming, Mr. Secretary, that the negotiation of such a pact would be a very prolonged procedure, do you share that view—a matter many months?

A. No, I do not share that view. You see, if you will check back with the statement which I made, the two communiqués that were issued in London and Paris, there is no reference made there to a pact.<sup>7</sup> Now, it might take the form of a formalized treaty, but not necessarily. You will see that I referred to the organization of what I call a 'common defense'. That does not necessarily mean that one would have to await all the processes of the negotiation of something like the Pacific NATO. That was done deliberately because of our awareness of the fact that the situation might not permit of that leisurely processing.

Q. In that form, how would Congressional participation or assent be gained, by resolution?

A. It would, presumably, be in terms of a joint resolution rather than a treaty ratified by the Senate.

Q. Could I just check one brief statement I have in my notes. I believe you said we had already taken all steps short of actual belligerency in Indochina.

A. Perhaps 'all steps' is a little bit more comprehensive than the facts warrant. But broadly speaking, we have done everything that the French have asked us to do short of acts which would involve belligerency. That is not literally true. They have once or twice asked for things which did not make sense on consideration. They have asked for planes which they did not have any airfields to handle, and things of that sort. But, within reason, we have met every request of the French short of doing what would be involved in an act of belligerency.

Q. Didn't they ask for anything which would be an act of belligerency, Mr. Secretary?

A. I would say on that, that they do not have perhaps the same experience as we have on constitutional problems, and know just where the limit of authority in the President lies. Possibly, some of the things they ask for overstep what we would think could be done by the Presi-

I will see the President this afternoon and am arranging for a Congressional briefing either this afternoon or tomorrow morning.<sup>2</sup> The President covered things pretty well with the Republican leaders this a. m.<sup>3</sup> However, reports that the French asked us to intervene actively in Indochina have already appeared in the papers and will undoubtedly leak with considerable accuracy either in Paris or here. The President will probably have to cover this matter in his press conference on Wednesday, as he will undoubtedly be questioned; so we are preparing a statement for his possible use. If you have any suggestions please wire me.<sup>4</sup>

Bonnet came again last night but he had nothing new to offer, simply to re-urge the importance of direct and immediate intervention at Dien Bien Phu, not to save the place but for the general effect on French morale in Indochina. Reports this morning indicate that the French were able to get additional ammunition in both yesterday and the day before.

The President instructed the Secretary to "make sure the British Government fully appreciates the gravity of the situation and the great danger of French collapse in that region. I said that there were at least many critical military problems arising out of Indochina which need to be explored, and I thought explored with the French. I pointed out that there are vast stores of military supplies which the US might want to recapture and that quite possibly many of the French forces would seek to pass from Indochina into Siam. All of this would bear upon the defense of the area even assuming all or part of Indochina area excluded. [GENEVA,] April 26, 1954.

At the Delegation meeting in Paris on April 24 you asked my opinion of General O'Daniel's report and recommendations (Dept. telegram to Paris 3818 of April 23).<sup>2</sup>

I. General O'Daniel in effect recommends that training of the Vietnamese Army for combat be taken away from the French, whose training concepts are insufficient and turned over to the United States. If this were done he feels sure nine Vietnamese divisions could be organized for combat by next November.

Comment: I naturally believe that if we went ahead full steam we could train a better Vietnamese Army faster than the French. However, since our policy continues to be to keep the French fighting in Indo-China in good spirits, we should not raise with them at this moment the controversial question of taking away their training function in Indo-China. In any case O'Daniel's ideas are merely in "concept" stage. Before we throw the idea at the French, he should have completed a real staff study of his project provided that he can prepare such a study without its coming to the knowledge of the French. If the latter knew he were doing it, it would have a serious effect both on U.S. relations with Navarre and on French will to continue fighting. He might be instructed to prepare his study but at the same time instructed not to take it up with the French until authorized. O'Daniel's personal relation with Navarre and the French command are not yet good and we don't wish to increase tension and provide any additional fuel to the French tendency to turn the whole defense of Indo-China over to us.

Unless we made a really remarkable effort it is to be doubted that O'Daniel could have nine Vietnamese divisions combat-ready by November. It is the opinion of Lt. Col. Taber, assistant military attaché, now detailed to the conference, that it is doubtful that U.S. training advice would have much impact on the Vietnamese battle field in less than one year. A copy of Taber's written comments to me on O'Daniel's training idea is attached.

II. O'Daniel also submits a battle plan of using these nine "combat-ready" Vietnamese divisions for a sweep from the South to the North beginning next November.

Comment: This is only a "concept" unsupported by a detailed study or plan. I may add that this is a very controversial concept. I believe that General Trapnell, who was Chief of MAAG until General O'Daniel arrived ten days ago and General Cogy, commanding the French forces in North Vietnam, believe efforts should be concentrated in the North as soon as possible and not follow a complete clean-up of the South and Center. General O'Daniel might be asked to prepare a detailed study of his plan.

III. O'Daniel believes that sending U.S. troops or other reinforcements would be wasteful under the present French command set-up, because of the latter's inability to handle large scale operations and its stubbornness in resisting outside advice and help. Lt. Col. Taber and I concur that it would be confusing and frustrating as well as wasteful but we both believe that limited combat support may be necessary on a short range basis in order to get the French to remain and fight long enough to give us time to train the Vietnamese national army.

IV. O'Daniel concluding statement is that General Navarre does not have the requisite ability to wage war in Indo-China on a scale that is necessary to win. I must regretfully agree with that conclusion. Navarre did quite well up until his decision to dig in at Dien Bien Phu when he underestimated enemy supply capabilities and the strength of his own forces and position there. He has certainly, in the last few days, shown defeatism.

I suggest that it might be desirable to detail Major General Trapnell to act as a special adviser on the military situation in Indo-China. Trapnell has the best and broadest view of that situation and a sound optimism that the battle can be won without massive increase of the forces now present there plus the new Vietnamese units whose formation is already programmed. Trapnell enjoys the liking and respect of the French military.

Vice Admiral Davis is in general agreement with this memorandum except my comment on Point III. Admiral Davis observes that O'Daniel's report was sent to the JCS and is probably receiving intensive consideration there and at the White House.

LT. COL. TABER'S COMMENTS ON O'DANIEL'S REPORT

Concur with statement "feel that Vietnamese Army must be gotten underway at once. This can be done if American methods are applied but are beyond French concept." However, do not concur with statement ". . . the first increment of nine Vietnamese divisions could be organized and employed by November." Assuming that by "organize" General O'Daniel means to activate and train Division Headquarters and build remainder of division by merely regrouping existing Vietnamese National Army battalions into regiments, I believe his time schedule unrealistic. Nine divisions would require 27 Regt. (Mobile group) Headquarters and service companies. Only 6 now exist in VNA. Schools would have to be expanded, training areas established, interpreters and leaders selected. These problems can be solved but in my opinion not in time to put nine combat-ready divisions in the field "by November", 6 months from now. It might be possible to have one or two divisions combat-ready if work could be started immediately. I doubt that U.S. training and advice would have much impact on the battlefield in less than one year. The lack of strong political leadership in Vietnam and the lack of a real will to fight make the training and advice problem much more difficult than it was in Korea with the ROK troops.

Ref. statement "This type operation gotten underway without delay I believe can save the situation and solve the problem". True only if the French Regular Army (F.T.E.O.) stays in Indo-China in present strength and continues to fight.

Dulte 9. Repeated information London 73, Paris 122. Department eyes only Acting Secretary from Secretary. Paris and London eyes only Ambassador. I met for about an hour this afternoon with Eden and Bidault at latter's villa. Meeting was called at latter's request with no indication its purpose.

After some discussion procedural problems Indochina conference (reported separately<sup>2</sup>) discussion turned to Bao Dai's declaration in Paris and current attitude. Bidault told us that he understands Bao Dai named as his personal representative and observer a former member Ho Chi Minh's cabinet but that Bidault has not been able to confirm observer's arrival at his station in Evian.

Bidault then launched into rather confused discussion of problem his government faces with regard to establishing position for Indochina negotiation which he said was extremely difficult during progress of Dien Bien Phu battle. He touched lightly on whole range of possibilities including collective defense, cease-fire and partition. He mentioned further deterioration in political situation in Associated States.

Eden picked up the question of cease-fire and encouraged further discussion by Bidault this subject with cryptic remark that a month ago British had felt cease-fire due to general infiltration was dangerous but that now without having any clear view they were not so sure. I pointed out that cease-fire at Dien Bien Phu locally would be in fact surrender and that cease-fire generally would involve serious risk of native peoples' rising with resultant massacre of French. Side conversations later made it clear French believe with support of their military authorities in Indochina that general cease-fire lacking any control or safeguards would make it impossible for French Union forces to resume fighting once cease-fire established. Bidault said that the French Government had queried French High Command in Indochina and had received a reply that there would either have to be a final cease-fire or further reinforcements would have to be sent to Indochina during the conference.

As indicative of Bidault's continuing courage, he said that when he saw Molotov tomorrow he intended to stand on Laniel's statement of March 5<sup>3</sup> and attempt to draw Molotov out without ceding ground himself and without getting involved in detailed discussions of substance on an Indochina settlement.

In my judgment, Eden has arrived with instructions actively to encourage French into almost any settlement which will result in cessation hostilities in Indochina. My guess is that behind this lies British fear that if fighting continues, we will in one way or another become involved, thereby enhancing risk Chinese intervention and possibility further expansion of war. This estimate of mine is confirmed by fact that Chauvel told MacArthur that French believe Eden's instructions are to press actively for a cease-fire.

I made clear to Bidault privately that we would have no part in settlement at Geneva of Indochina war which constituted surrender of Indochina to Communists, and that France has better chance by fighting on rather than by attempted withdrawal which would be under most difficult conditions. I intend to see Eden alone tomorrow morning to talk with extreme bluntness to him expressing my dismay that British are apparently encouraging French in direction surrender which is in conflict not only with our interest but what I conceive theirs to be.

Dulles-Eden Meeting, Geneva, April 27, Morning: The Secretary of State to the Department of State

SECRET      NIACT

GENEVA, April 27, 1954—midnight.

Dulte 13. Repeated information London 77 Paris 127. Eyes only Acting Secretary. Eyes only Ambassadors. I saw Eden and his immediate advisors for a few minutes before his luncheon April 27. I opened by saying that I wanted to speak frankly concerning our own immediate affairs. I said I considered it great mistake to push French in direction cease-fire which I believed would be a disaster. I said I considered it of utmost importance that we both keep French in mood to fight on in Indochina. If that mood is lost surely disaster would follow with little chance of limiting its scope and indeed little chance of French extricating themselves.

Eden replied with some heat that he was not advocating a cease-fire though he admitted that he had told Bidault that he was less sure today than a month ago that a cease-fire was out of the question. He insisted that all he had been thinking of had been a cease-fire with adequate safeguards and controls. His purpose he said had been to concentrate French thinking on latter points.

I interjected that I did not think three of us were presenting a very impressive or cohesive position. I reminded him that I wanted immediate ad hoc plans covering Southeast Asia including Indochina if Geneva failed but that British were against this. French I said had in effect no government and were at a loss as to what to do. They were drifting toward disaster. I was concerned that we were not doing all possible between us to shore up French resolution. I said there was a basic difference between us in that British seemed to think that plans for a joint defense were more apt to spread conflict than absence of any plans.

Eden said that what worried them in London apart from political aspects was that they felt military intervention would be "terrific business", a bigger affair than Korea, which could get us nowhere. They just did not believe that it was a realizable military exercise considering the military means available. Moreover Eden said it would be most unpopular in Asia let alone with British home opinion.

Eden then asked if our tripartite position was really as bad as I had painted it. He said he felt that other side was properly worried.

I agreed but said in all frankness they were more worried about United States than British.

Eden did not deny this, and said that we must see how things go here in next few days and do what we can to buck French up particularly if Dien Bien Phu falls.

I said I was deeply worried over French situation not alone in its relation with Indochina. NATO was directly affected. The fall of Laniel might result in a left-of-center government coming to power which would exist by Communist sufferance, thereby increasing Communist influence domestically in France and by contagion in Italy which country was also a source of serious concern. I said EDC would be affected, and our entire defense structure in Europe. At this point Bidault arrived and we broke off our conversation.

might jointly take to shore up the French will. I told both of them that the British abandonment of the terms of the communiqué of April 13<sup>2</sup> had cut the legs out from under the Secretary's project for an ad hoc coalition. I said they did not seem to appreciate that it was intended as a deterrent, which by creating restraints on the other side would reduce the risk of our being forced to intervene. They both denied that this would have been its effect. I replied that in fact the failure to create the coalition was actually increasing the risk of intervention. We argued this back and forth for a time.

With regard to the French we agreed that both our delegations should take every occasion to buck up the French and to attempt to get them to see Dien Bien Phu in proper perspective. They felt strongly, and I was inclined to agree, that the best course would be to get on with the Indochina negotiations rather than delay. They admitted that in the absence of their willingness to consider intervention there was little in the way of concrete support they could offer.

GENEVA, April 27, 1954—9 p. m.

Dulte 15. Repeated information Moscow 16. Eyes only Ambassador. Eyes Only Acting Secretary. Molotov called on me at noon April 27 at his request. He was accompanied by Zaroubin and Troyanovsky. Merchant was with me.

Molotov opened immediately by handing me single copy in Russian of eight page note which he described as Soviet reply to US note of March 19 containing our atomic energy agency proposal.<sup>2</sup> He said that it contained Soviet Union views on this proposal and also dealt with Soviet atomic proposal of December 21. It was agreed that after I had read note in translation we might usefully meet again before my departure for Washington.

When this matter concluded, Molotov made no move to raise other subjects with me (as I had rather expected he might). I inquired if he would object to my speaking on Indochina. He indicated he would be most interested.

I said that whereas neither of us were belligerents, matter was of direct concern to both. I recalled my suggestion to him at Berlin that I was fearful of chain of events starting in Indochina with far-reaching consequences which United States did not desire and assumed Soviet likewise did not desire. I said that my concern had not been diminished by events since Berlin, and that there had been created in our minds growing fear that large aggressive movement might be under way vitally affecting our interests. I said I did not myself see clearly any solution, but hoped Molotov might see a possible solution which would avoid undesirable consequences to which I had alluded. I said that I hoped we could find ways of avoiding a growing sense of crisis and the belief that enlarged struggle was almost inevitable.

Mr. Molotov replied with great seriousness that Soviet Union had but one interest in this case which was to contribute to establishment of peace in Indochina. He felt first step was to hear both sides. Molotov said no country, including far away Soviet Union, wished enlargement Indochinese war and he stated his belief that in this respect a great deal depends on United States policy. He said it should be possible by serious attention at Geneva to find solution.

Molotov then briefly reported his talk with Bidault an hour earlier on composition conference (which talk is being reported at length in separate telegram <sup>3</sup>).

In summary, he stated his view that participants should be Big Four plus Communist China plus three Associated States plus Viet Minh and these nine delegations might agree later on adding other Asian nations with India notable possibility as country particularly interested in Indochina and in position wield conciliatory influence.

I replied that I thought it indispensable that some at least, and, perhaps, all of the Indochinese authorities he had mentioned should have opportunity to participate. I hinted that Indochinese perhaps lack sufficient experience in international affairs to be able alone to find proper solution. I concluded by saying that I would be happy to have the benefit of any idea regarding substance of an acceptable solution before I returned to Washington, and suggested that he might pursue matter at a later meeting when I had had opportunity to study note he had just given me.

After some further inconclusive discussion of subject, Molotov took his leave having failed to rise to any of the flies I had cast.

This, however, does not mean that visit had no significance. Obviously, Molotov would not have to come to see me merely to be a messenger boy to deliver Russian text note. I gather he was anxious for opportunity to see whether I had any substantive suggestions to make to him.

Compared to his appearance at Berlin, Molotov appeared tired and unwell.

At luncheon with Eden and Bidault following this talk, I gave them both gist of this conversation and Bidault reported in full his earlier talk with Molotov on composition Indochina conference.

Memorandum by the Special Adviser to the United States Delegation (MacArthur) to the Secretary of State

[GENEVA,] April 27, 1954.

I had a long and private conversation with Chauvel after luncheon today on a personal basis. He gave me his own estimate of the French situation as follows:

The news which the French received the middle of last week that Dien Bien Phu would probably fall in a few days caused an emotionalism in Paris bordering on hysteria. The fact that Dien Bien Phu has not yet fallen has given a little time for further reflection on the part of those French officials who believe that capitulation would be a disaster for France. The problem, as these officials see it, is, in essence, that of gaining time. However, when Dien Bien Phu falls, there is apt to be a wave of emotional defeatism in the parliament and among certain members of the Cabinet which will result in sweeping the Laniel-Bidault team out of office and the formation of a new government dedicated to the proposition that its single mandate is to get out of Indochina. Mendes-France might head such a government. Such a government would also probably be unwilling or unable to push ahead with EDC.

Chauvel said that quite frankly the only hope that Bidault and Laniel see is in rapidly getting on with the Secretary's proposal for united action in Southeast Asia. He asked whether anything was being done in Washington in the way of consultations or otherwise to get on with the project. He stressed when Dien Bien Phu falls the present French Government must have something to point to to offset the loss of Dien Bien Phu. In other words "There must be something on the fire even if it isn't entirely cooked." If there is something in prospect, the present government could point to it and would be much more able to prevent the French parliament and certain leaders being swept away by an emotional wave which would lead them to decide quickly and immediately to abandon Indochina. While obviously armed intervention would be the best thing to be able to point to as evidence that France had gained support from the US, and possibly others, in Indochina, he understood that this was probably not possible because of the attitude of the UK. The next best thing to point to would be a declaration of common purpose such as was envisaged by you. This declaration, as he understood it, would proceed by setting up ad hoc machinery for political and military consultation looking to see what might be done with respect to the defense of Southeast Asia, including Indochina. If it were not possible to get such a declaration, it would still be useful if a public announcement that representatives of the states who have vital security interests in Southeast Asia were consulting with a view to the defense of Southeast Asia. Obviously this latter device would have less appeal than the first two, but it was still something which the French Government could point to. If they had nothing to point to, he did not know what would happen. He said very frankly that neither Laniel nor Bidault knew what the effect of the fall of Dien Bien Phu would be, although the atmosphere in Paris yesterday and today was substantially better than it had been last week during our visit. This however could change with dramatic suddenness with the loss of Dien Bien Phu. When Dien Bien Phu falls, a sudden and violent reaction leading to the disappearance of the Laniel-Bidault Government must be avoided if at all possible. French leaders must weigh the advantages of getting out of Indochina against the great disadvantages in terms of France's long term interests, but to have time to reflect, they must have hope, and such hope can only come from the prospect of some form of united assistance to France in Indochina, and the US alone can supply this.

He said that Bidault and Laniel's efforts now are to exercise a calming influence on the situation in Paris. Bidault's terms of reference at Geneva which the Cabinet approved last Saturday were that outwardly at least the French should treat Geneva like any other international conference. They should stand pat in the first instance on the Laniel cease fire proposals of March 5<sup>1</sup> and should not go running helter-skelter to the Communist side with a series of new proposals. This would simply lead the Communists to believe that they were on the run and would cause them to raise their ante. In other words, they should wait for the Communists to come to them with propositions and then weight [weigh?] these propositions rather than leading with their chins. The Cabinet agreed to the foregoing on the basis that the U.S. was the key to the situation and that there was considerable hope that U.S. aid would be forthcoming.

Chauvel said that when the Secretary visited Paris two weeks ago the French had been apprehensive that he would ask them then to agree to certain specific courses of action which would give the appearance that France, prior to Geneva, committed itself to a course of action which made any negotiated settlement of Indochina impossible. They were therefore not only relieved but very pleased with his proposal and with the communiqué which was issued.<sup>2</sup> They felt that the communiqué would indicate to the Russians and the Chinese that courses of action were being studied, although not definitively decided upon. This was why they had agreed to the establishment of a working group of interested states in Washington. Since the Secretary's visit two weeks ago, the situation had evolved very considerably and now that the Geneva Conference had begun, the French felt that it was possible and understandable in terms of their own public opinion to proceed ahead with the establishment of some form of ad hoc international machinery to examine the possibility for outside action in the defense of Southeast Asia. He recognized that the British were opposed to doing anything but hoped that he could persuade them or [to] do something of some kind that could be pointed to by Bidault and Laniel even if the British would not come along. He emphasized repeatedly that it was desperately important to have something to point to before the time when Dien Bien Phu had fallen.

He said that he had recommended to Bidault and the latter had agreed that in any talks he has with Molotov dealing with a solution to Indochina, he should continue to stand pat on the Laniel proposals and wait for a Communist counter-proposal. Such a counter-proposal would be examined on its merits and would of course have full consultation with us and the British. He said that Bidault believed that if Molotov could be led to expect that if the Communists did not let up in Indochina the war would be expanded, this would be one of the best means of keeping pressure on the Communists. I gathered that Bidault is toying with the idea in some future conversation with Molotov with remarking that if Dien Bien Phu falls, a situation will arise involving additional outside support for France in Indochina with the inevitable possibility of extension of conflict. In other words, to imply that if the Communists do not wish to expand the war and have the U.S. and possibly others join France, they should not try to carry Dien Bien Phu by assault.

[GENEVA,] April 27, 1954.

I asked Chauvel today what he thought the British position was. He said that the British are unwilling to join in united action in Southeast Asia, and what they are really hoping for is some kind of negotiated solution at Geneva. They would expect that any solution agreed to would be guaranteed by all the participating powers, which would involve guarantees not just by the UK and our side but guarantees by the Soviets and Chinese Communists. In other words, when the British talk about joining in a guarantee of any possible solution reached as a result of the Geneva Conference, they are probably thinking in terms of a general guarantee involving the Communist side, rather than a guarantee which would result from united action by the non-Communist states in Southeast Asia.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Adviser to the United States Delegation (Bonsal)

[GENEVA,] April 27, 1954.

Participants: M. Roux, Head of Far Eastern Section of French Foreign Office
Ambassador Donald Heath, Special Adviser U.S.
Delegation
Philip W. Bonsal, Adviser U.S. Delegation

Subject: Bao Dai's Statement of April 25<sup>1</sup>

Ambassador Heath stated that the Secretary had read Bao Dai's statement of April 25 with surprise and concern. The Secretary had been under the impression that Franco-Vietnamese relations were currently characterized by harmony and mutual confidence. The statement, although somewhat enigmatic, seemed to cast a shadow on what we had hoped was a happy state of affairs.

M. Roux replied that M. Bidault and his associates had also been much surprised by Bao Dai's declaration of which they had had no previous knowledge. Roux stated that immediately after the tripartite conversations on April 24,<sup>2</sup> Bidault had called together the representatives of the three Associated States and had given them a full statement regarding the position of the French Government in relation to Geneva. This statement had included a position on (a) the independence and integrity of the Associated States, (b) their possible participation in the conference and (c) opposition to the admission of the Viet Minh. The statement also set forth the French Government's intention to maintain the closest possible contact with the representatives of the Associated States, the latter being invited to have such representatives available at Geneva. Reference was also made to the desire of the French Government to see if a cease-fire could be arranged along the lines of the Laniel proposal which would assure the security of friendly military forces and of civilian elements.

Ambassador Heath described the conversation with Bao Dai<sup>3</sup> mentioning that the Secretary has stated his understanding that the French and Vietnamese delegates had reached agreement on the main political issues. Bao Dai confirmed this and said that he had expected that it would be possible to sign the two basic political accords (independence and association) prior to Geneva but that the French Government had preferred, for their own reasons, merely to initial these basic accords and to delay the final signing until the pending economic, cultural and military agreements had been concluded. Bao Dai stated that he had accepted this point of view although he would have preferred to have the formal signature of the political accords at this time.

M. Roux told us that the French proposal had been that a declaration covering agreement in principle should be issued at this time, that the basic accords should be initialed and made public and that work should continue on the subsidiary accords of a more technical character. (M. Roux pointed out that this whole subject is one on which the French Government may anticipate considerable parliamentary difficulties and that, although the determination of the government is firm as to principles involved, it believes that it will be in a better position to go before Parliament if it has the complete text of all the agreements in hand.) It appeared possible to M. Roux that on this matter there had been something less than perfect coordination between Bao Dai and his Foreign Minister who had been concluding the negotiation.

Ambassador Heath stated that the Secretary also inquired as to his attitude toward the Geneva Conference and Bao Dai had replied that he would, of course, accept the invitation, but if the Viet Minh were to be invited on equal status it would present a "delicate" problem to his government which did not recognize the Viet Minh as constituting a state. Bao Dai said he did not reject the idea that a peaceful solution might be found in Geneva although he appeared doubtful, and stated that, of course, Viet Nam could not accept any solution which would involve the partition of Viet Nam or the integrity of his government.

Ambassador Heath stated that the Secretary has been giving some thought to the desirability of having Ambassador Heath see Bao Dai on his behalf. The Ambassador stated that he wished M. Roux to be informed and to have an opportunity of making any comment which he might wish to make regarding his proposed interview. Roux appeared to react favorably, adding that he would discuss the matter with M. Bidault and let us know if the latter had any particular comments to make.

M. Roux expressed appreciation of Ambassador Heath's call and of the many occasions on which the Ambassador has contributed to the improvement of Franco-Vietnamese relations. He added that he would recommend that M. Bidault hand a copy of the statement made to the Associated States representatives to the Secretary for his information.

(Later—same day—news was received that Bao Dai had left Paris for Cannes and the project for Ambassador Heath to call on him was dropped.)

Mr. Bonsal raised with Roux the additional information promised last week to the working group regarding certain aspects of the Laniel proposals for a cease fire in Indochina. Roux replied that this material as received from General Navarre is now being reviewed by the civil and military authorities in Paris and that it will presumably be brought here by Colonel Brebisson within the next day or two. Roux will let us know and will call a meeting of the tripartite working group as soon as possible.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Adviser to the United States Delegation (McBride)

CONFIDENTIAL

[GENEVA,] April 27, 1954.

Participants: Mr. Cable, United Kingdom Delegation
Mr. McBride

Subject: Indo-China Phase of Conference—Procedural and Substantive.

Mr. Cable of the United Kingdom Delegation called at his request to discuss the Indo-China phase of the Conference. He said that on procedural arrangements for Indo-China, he agreed with us that the settlement of all other problems depended upon the firm solution first of the participation question. Accordingly, he was gratified that Bidault was meeting Molotov today, and hoped a settlement of this issue might be forthcoming. He asked if we would be satisfied to have Bidault speak for the three Western delegations if this would solve the four-power vs. five-power problem and I said so far as I knew, we would.

Mr. Cable said that the British position on participation was that the three Associated States should be invited as full participants as well, of course, as the five states mentioned in the Berlin communiqué.

He added that the British would not take the initiative in inviting Ho, but would not strenuously oppose such an invitation. I said I believed our position was about the same. We discussed the problem the French had with the Vietnamese if Ho were invited on a basis of equality, but he felt the French would not make a major issue of this point, and indeed could hardly do so. If Rhee accepted the North Koreans at the table, it seemed totally illogical for Bao Dai to make such an issue of the Viet Minh, he thought, though he admitted Rhee had much more support in his country than Bao Dai, who had none.

Beyond the nine (U.S., U.K., France, U.S.S.R., Communist China, Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, and the Viet Minh) the British had no position, since they believed any additions such as Burma and Thailand would cause them serious trouble with the Australians and possibly elsewhere in the Commonwealth. The Australians had said again today they definitely wanted to be included if participation went beyond the nine. Therefore, the British would much prefer to have just the nine, and if it were decided to have more, then would have to support Australia. He mentioned that the U.K. also had to reply substantively at some point to the notes from Thailand and the Philippines, formally requesting an invitation. He added a similar note had been received from Cambodia but in that case the U.K. had said they would consider this request "sympathetically".

He said the best argument he could think of for including Burma and Thailand was that it might solve a chairmanship problem that would otherwise exist. With just the nine, he did not see how the chairmanship would work. Conceivably the Russians might suggest a rotation of France and Communist China, which the U.S. could not accept. If the two adjoining states were added, the present arrangement might continue, or if this were rejected for some reason, a permanent Burmese chairman might be a possibility, inasmuch as the Soviets seem generally to accept Burma as a neutral.

Passing to the question of timing, Mr. Cable said it was the U.K. opinion that time was working against us and accordingly we should proceed as fast as possible. I reiterated our feeling that the participation question obviously must be settled first. He agreed but said as soon as it was settled, invitations should probably be sent to the Associated States and others who might be involved. He said that there might not be much delay, since the Associated States had people in France now, and he understood that Ho had a delegation in the vicinity also. He asked if we visualized that, after the chairmanship, participation, seating arrangements, etc., had been settled for the Indo-China phase, talks could begin and continue simultaneously with the Korean phase. I said this was presumably being discussed at higher levels in our delegation, and I did not know the answer. He repeated that the U.K.

felt strongly the situation was deteriorating in the area, that time was on the side of our enemies, and that the sooner we could actually begin the talks, the better, especially from the point of view of maintaining the French position at a relatively satisfactory level.

Mr. Cable added that his delegation would also like to talk about questions of substance. I said that I was not qualified to go into this, but that I did know a number of things that were definitely unsatisfactory from our viewpoint. I said that I realized this was a negative position, and that we would of course be working on something more substantive which would be discussed with his Delegation by the senior members of our own delegation. I gathered that the British position is well-advanced, and from Mr. Cable's remarks, that it involves a participation [partition] plan for Vietnam. He said that the U.K. definitely was not opposed to partition, and indeed believed that both the Soviets and the Communist Chinese might be well satisfied with a buffer state in Tonkin. He said it was not necessarily true that the Viet Minh would continue guerrilla warfare south of an agreed line, and that indeed they might be quite satisfied to observe such a division and leave Cochin China and Annam, south of the line, in peace. He said the status of Cambodia and Laos was not involved as the Viet Minh attack was a foreign aggression in these two cases.

It was agreed that Mr. Cable and Mr. Tahourdin of the U.K. Delegation would meet again with Mr. Bonsal and myself when we might be in a position to discuss the situation more in detail.

(396.1 GE/4-2754) In telegram 4085 from Paris, Apr. 26, not printed, Ambassador Dillon reported that Defense Minister Pleven had that evening entered a request with General Norstad for U.S. assistance in airfield construction in Indochina and for additional U.S. transport aircraft and crews. Dillon and Norstad recommended that the requests be granted for political and psychological reasons. (751G.00/4-2654)

Bonnet visited me again this afternoon and renewed strong plea for action, suggesting possibility that joint declaration might be made without UK participation, in view of apparently strong concern of Australia and New Zealand. I told him it would be very difficult for the US to suggest such a thing but that if such suggestion came from Australia or New Zealand, or both, it would certainly deserve our careful attention.

The above should be considered against the background of Dillon's 4089, repeated niact Geneva 134.<sup>3</sup> I am sure that Dillon's estimate is correct and that this matter will be raised with you at Geneva if it has not already been brought up. I would be very grateful for your views.

[GENEVA,] April 27, 1954.

Sir Harold Caccia dropped in to see me this evening. He referred to your conversation with Mr. Eden on Sunday night<sup>1</sup> regarding the situation in Malaya and showed me a brief memorandum dealing with the Civil Security Administration. In essence he said that, aside from the 22 battalions which the British have there, they also have 25,000 constables, 40,000 special police, and 200,000 home guards. He said that as a result of the progress they have made in cleaning up the situation in Malaya, during the past few months they have been able to lift restrictions in four areas so conditions are very much as normal. He also showed me a tabulated list of the number of incidents, security police killed, and Communists killed, over the past two years. These figures indicated there had been a very substantial decrease in the number of security police killed and an increase in the number of Communists which [sic] had been liquidated and a reduction in the overall number of incidents. In conclusion he said that while the situation in Malaya was by no means cleaned up, very substantial progress had been made and should Indochina collapse, the British felt that they had the internal situation in Malaya pretty well in hand and did not believe that any large scale successful uprising could be staged.

Caccia then asked me whether we planned to respond favorably to Eden's suggestion for secret US-UK talks on the defense of Southeast Asia. The British proposal was that we exclude Indochina from this study exercise. I replied that the British proposal seemed to have virtually nothing in it to appeal to the French and seemed to be based on the assumption that Indochina was already finished. Caccia replied that the British hoped very much that the French would not give up in Indochina, but if they did, a study of the kind proposed by Eden would enable us to have some plans which could perhaps be implemented rapidly when and if the Indochina collapse came. I believe that the prime purpose of Caccia's visit was to talk about this, rather than to show me the memorandum on Malaya which to me was a flimsy pretext.

Secto 16. Repeated information London 76, Paris 126, Saigon 5. Margerie states what French Government hopes to obtain in Indochina is not "cease-fire" but "armistice". He described difference as being that cease-fire merely meant local laying down of arms, which in case of Indochina would be tantamount to French surrender, while armistice as in case of Korea provided safeguards and political as well as military conditions. He regretted expression "cease-fire" had come to be so widely used of late and hoped it would be possible to get word "armistice" into press usage in its place.

While some suggestions as to possible partition arrangements had been made in French Government and considered, Bidault was as of now by no means prepared to accept them. He regretted publicity on favorable British disposition toward partition as doing less than no good and as having prompted Bao Dai's explosive statement.<sup>1</sup> He added incidentally that Vietnamese representative expected here had not arrived and that only communication delegation had with them was through Foreign Office.

Dulte 16. Repeated information London 80, Paris 130. Paris and London information Ambassador. Reference Dulte 15.<sup>1</sup> Following is account of Bidault-Molotov meeting this morning given me by Bidault and supplemented by Chauvel:

Molotov was mild and friendly. Discussion was confined to procedural questions relating to Indochina phase of Conference and did not touch upon substance of possible solution regarding Indochina. Molotov said that it was not possible for the four Berlin Powers to meet to discuss Indochina phase of Geneva without presence of Chinese Communists. However, to avoid creating needless difficulties he was glad to discuss and endeavor to work out arrangements with Bidault.

Bidault said that three Western Powers believed that the composition of the Indochina phase of Geneva should be kept small and had in mind confining it to the four Berlin Powers, the three Associated States, and the three Limitrophe States (Communist China, Thailand, and Burma). Molotov replied by saying that no solution of Indochina could be made at Geneva unless the Viet Minh were represented. (Bidault and Chauvel had expected that in addition to Viet Minh, Molotov might suggest participation at Conference of recently announced Communist governments of liberation of Laos and Cambodia, but Molotov never mentioned these.) Molotov idea of composition was "Big Five", Associated States, Viet Minh, (a total of nine) and that Burma, Indonesia, and India might also well be included. He said India, in particular, had deep interest in Indochina and had already suggested possible solutions. There was brief discussion regarding who would send invitations to other participants. Molotov put forward idea the nine might invite additional participants, such as India. Bidault indicated great reserve and Molotov put forward idea that "two permanent chairmen" (i.e., United Kingdom and USSR) might issue invitations.

Bidault referred to participation of India and Indonesia and said it would raise question of participation of Australia and other countries in the area which would create difficulties and make Conference too large. Insofar as the Viet Minh was concerned, the Associated States whom he would have to consult were strongly opposed. He would, of course, also have to consult United States and United Kingdom regarding this point. (Bidault has already sent telegram to Paris asking Foreign Office to contact representatives of Associated States urgently this afternoon to try to get affirmative reply regarding Viet Minh participation.) Bidault then suggested possibility of having some form of separate status for certain of the participants. Molotov confined his reply to the comment that it was obviously essential to have the Viet Minh represented if any solution were to be reached.

Molotov told Bidault his schedule "had gotten mixed up" and that he had an appointment to see me at twelve o'clock about the atomic question which did not give him as much time today as he would like to discuss Indochina. They, therefore, agreed to meet again tomorrow morning at 11 a. m. to pursue this discussion.

Bidault is trying to devise some formula which will permit Viet Minh to participate, but not on full membership basis. Eden, Bidault and I agreed to meet tomorrow morning at 10:15, prior to Bidault-Molotov meeting. Following that meeting, Eden and Bidault will lunch with me so that we can have full report and can see where we stand.

Chauvel tells us French have been thinking how they might try to limit Indochina discussions of Geneva to Vietnam. The Laniel proposal of March 5<sup>1</sup> calls for a Viet Minh withdrawal from both Laos and Cambodia, but French recognize that Soviets may counter with suggestion of French withdrawal from these states. Therefore, French asked Navarre for his estimate as to whether from military viewpoint French could withdraw their forces from Laos and Cambodia without overthrow of present Laos and Cambodia regime by Communist insurrectionists. Navarre replied that if Viet Minh withdrew from Laos and Cambodia, French could also withdraw since existing Laotian and Cambodian forces are sufficient to keep situation in hand and prevent successful insurrectionary uprising.

We expressed some doubts and Chauvel replied that French Government accepted Navarre's estimate which was considered judgment of French High Command in Indochina and best estimate available.

Time: 10:15 a. m., April 28, 1954

Place: Bidault's Residence, Joli Port, at Versoix

The meeting was called at Mr. Bidault's request in advance of his eleven o'clock engagement with Molotov. Mr. Bidault opened by saying that he had received no instructions from Paris nor any word of the official attitude of the Vietnamese Government on the question of participation in the Indochina conference.

Mr. Bidault said that he was increasingly concerned over the effect in Vietnam of the presence at the conference table of Vietminh representatives, and he was searching for some formula to depreciate their role. In his talk with Mr. Molotov this morning,<sup>1</sup> he intended to raise the question of a cease-fire at Dien Bien Phu in order to permit the evacuation of the French wounded. A refusal by the other side of this request he believed would harden public opinion in France and Indochina. The formula which he is considering is to have invitations issued to the US, UK, USSR, France, China, and the three Associated States, making an initial conference of eight. This conference of eight would then invite the Vietminh to appear. Presumably they would participate fully thereafter, but at least a distinction would have been drawn in the matter of precedence.

Mr. Bidault also mentioned his desire to get on with the Indochina talks.

The Secretary referred to the ground we had lost in Indochina since the Berlin Conference. He also mentioned our intelligence advice that two prominent Vietminh political figures had arrived at Geneva. Neither Mr. Bidault nor Mr. Eden had any confirmation but both were obviously interested.

Mr. Bidault made the point that he would not consider a general cease-fire, and that when the French used this term, what he had in mind was a formal armistice with all the necessary controls, safeguards, and machinery.

The three Ministers noted that no speakers had been inscribed so far except the Secretary. There was some general discussion of how to advance the work of the conference in this situation. Mr. Eden proposed that thought might be given to a restricted meeting which each member of the conference would attend with a single adviser for a frank discussion of advancing the work of the conference.

Mr. Bidault then read the tabulation of casualties in Indochina for the first three months of this year. The total figure, which was 12,600, was about equally divided between Vietnamese and non-Vietnamese French Union Forces, including Africans and the Foreign Legion. The losses constituted deaths, missings in actions, desertions, and permanently crippled. Of the Vietnamese losses, 2,022 were listed as defections.

The meeting broke up at about 10:45, and it was understood that Mr. Bidault would report the results of his conversation with Mr. Molotov to Mr. Eden and the Secretary at the latter's luncheon for the three of them today.

CONFIDENTIAL

GENEVA, April 28, 1954.

Participants: Prince Wan, Thailand Foreign Minister
Ambassador Pote Sarasin
Secretary Dulles
Walter Robertson
U. Alexis Johnson

Place: Geneva

Prince Wan asked to see the Secretary today following the Conference session.<sup>2</sup> He opened the conversation by expressing appreciation of the Secretary's nomination of him as one of the three rotating Presidents of the Conference. The Secretary replied that Prince Wan well knew the esteem with which he is regarded by the United States, and that the Secretary hoped it would in some very small measure make up for our inability to support Prince Wan for the Presidency of the last General Assembly.

Prince Wan referred to the prompt Thai response to the united front concept in S.E. Asia, and the Secretary expressed great appreciation of the U.S. therefor. The Secretary stated that the matter is not moving as rapidly as we had hoped because the UK was inclined to wait until it sees what happens at Geneva with respect to Indochina. France is also confronted with a very difficult situation and their Cabinet is so badly divided on this issue that there is virtually no government.

In reply to the Secretary's query as to whether Prince Wan had any information with regard to consultations in Washington with the Thai government, Prince Wan replied in the negative. The Secretary stated he thought things would develop much more rapidly after his return to Washington, which would probably be on Sunday;<sup>3</sup> that immediately upon his arrival he would consult with Congressional leaders and in general be in a better position to carry forward the concept.

Prince Wan stated that Thailand wondered whether it would not be possible to concert at least on military plans in the area, mentioning that at present Thailand has its own defense plans and the British had their plans in Malaya, but there was no coordination. He stated that Thailand stood ready to conclude a pact because of public opinion in Thailand and the "many lawyers in Parliament". He felt it would be desirable to have a more formal arrangement.

In reply the Secretary pointed out that the drawing up of a formal defense pact was very time consuming. He stated that in the conversations in London, leading up to the communiqué by Mr. Eden and himself, there had been very considerable discussion of the phrase in the communiqué now reading "consider the creation of a common defense"; the word "assistance" having been deliberately left out. The situation which had to be faced in the area was such that it would probably not permit the time-consuming procedures for drawing up and ratifying a pact.

Upon Prince Wan's expressing the opinion that consultations should be undertaken, the Secretary inquired whether there was anyone in the Thai Embassy in Washington with whom at least the quasi military aspects of the situation could be discussed, agreeing that talks should start quickly. Ambassador Sarasin replied that the Chargé in Washington was available for consultations, and that on the military level, the military attachés were also available.

Prince Wan stated that in reply to press inquiries he had answered he did not believe that proceeding with the united front concept would in any way prejudice the Geneva Conference. The Secretary stated that he fully agreed and expressed appreciation for Prince Wan's having taken this stand. The Secretary stated that he would immediately telegraph Washington in regard to the undertaking of consultations there with Thai representatives.

In reply to Prince Wan's question as to whether France would keep on in Indochina, the Secretary pointed out that it is one thing to talk about quitting, but another thing actually to quit. If faced with responsibility, the present leaders in France who are urging withdrawal from Indochina would probably find that it is not easy to do so. If such persons came into power and found that the situation would in fact not permit a withdrawal, the people of France would probably be more inclined to accept the fact than they are at present. The Secretary stated that he was inclined to think that there would be no hasty French retreat from Indochina; however, if there was a change of government, it might well attempt to obtain a cease fire with no conditions, which he compared to entering into an agreement with a burglar in your house not to shoot.

In reply to Prince Wan's inquiries regarding the Indochinese phase of the Conference, the Secretary stated that no agreement had yet been reached on the composition of the Conference. He explained the French attitude toward participation of Ho Chi Minh; their attempt to find some status for him other than a full participant in the Conference. However, the Soviets have refused a second-class membership for Ho. At the moment Bidault is trying to get in touch with Bao Dai. Bidault is also anxious to get agreement regarding evacuating the wounded from Dien Bien Phu. Molotov has told him that no such agreement can be reached until the question of composition of the Indochina phase of the Conference is decided.

[GENEVA.] April 28, 1954.

Subject: Consequences of the Fall of Dien Bien Phu

In response to your recent request CIA and State Department intelligence have prepared the following joint estimate of the consequences in France of the early fall of Dien Bien Phu.

1. We believe that the fall of Dien Bien Phu alone would not cause the collapse of the Laniel government or a radical change in French policy in Indochina so long as the Geneva conference offers some prospect of a settlement in Indochina. However, it would reduce the willingness of the Laniel government to continue the war. To the French public and parliamentary opinion this military defeat would represent the failure of the Navarre plan. It would strengthen the French belief that France cannot win in Indochina, and it would increase parliamentary pressure upon the French government to reach an Indochina settlement at Geneva. It would also reduce support for US policies in France, particularly if the Laniel government in its explanation of the military defeat should emphasize US refusal to provide air support for Dien Bien Phu and if the US stand at Geneva should appear intractable to the French.

2. The French people and government have concentrated their hopes upon Geneva for a settlement in Indochina. They have almost certainly abandoned hope that the threat of US involvement would force the cessation of hostilities or that a settlement might be obtained through US recognition of Communist China or Communist Chinese admission to the UN. The failure of these hopes and the fall of Dien Bien Phu might impel the Laniel government to press for US-UK approval of an Indochina settlement based upon a partition of Indochina or a cease-fire which would necessarily involve such a partition.

3. Following the fall of Dien Bien Phu, we believe that the French government would announce that it was sending additional forces from France to Indochina, but that this announcement would be designed primarily to impress the Communist states at Geneva with French resolution. For the same purpose of strengthening the French hand in the Geneva negotiations, the French would continue to press the US for further support of the Indochina war, including commitment of US troops. On the other hand, we believe that the Laniel government fears the internationalization of the conflict in Indochina, because it would increase the risks of general war. However, if the Communists refused to negotiate an "honorable" settlement and demanded immediate French withdrawal from Indochina, we believe that the French government would probably accept, as a last resort, internationalization of the conflict in Indochina.

4. State and CIA feel strongly that the delegation has the best interpreters of the French political scene plus vastly greater detailed information. Hence, we express no opinion on a possible successor Prime Minister or the party line-up if the Laniel government falls. We see no reason to dispute Paris views that such a government would be neutralist and nationalist re European as well as Southeast Asian issues.

The above estimate was to have been discussed at today's meeting of the IAC. We have been promised further word if this discussion reveals any differing views on the part of the other intelligence agencies.

TOP SECRET      PRIORITY      WASHINGTON, April 28, 1954—5:43 p. m.

Tedul 16. Following is R. Cutler's summary of principal points made by the President in his talk with Republican leaders, April 26, 1954.

"(1) The United States would not intervene with combat forces in the Indochina conflict, except as part of a grouping of interested nations formed to prevent the spread of communism in Southeast Asia. The forming of such a grouping would provide a basis to ask Congress for the necessary authority to intervene.

"(2) The United States is doing everything to get concerted action in Southeast Asia. At first, it was thought that the U.K. would be likely to join in such concerted action, but more recent news indicates a negative position on Britain's part. Today the outlook seems pretty grim.

"(3) There does not now appear to be any great need for the United States to provide ground troops, for it should be possible adequately to train the large indigenous population for ground combat.

"(4) If there is to be intervention in Southeast Asia, such intervention should come before the French and indigenous troops are defeated. It will be a harder job to intervene later on. But it would be a 'tragic error for the United States to go in alone as a partner of France in this struggle.' The effort of the United States is to get up a regional grouping, of which it will act as a part. Our principal role would not be to use ground forces.

"(5) The United States holds to its determination to lead the free world into a unity which will make further inroads of communism impossible. As the complicated situation in Southeast Asia continues to evolve, the Executive will continue to consult with the Republican leaders of Congress. None of us should permit ourselves to be misled by day-to-day details. Nor should we try now to decide what will be the measure of our participation. We should keep an open mind, and decide on the basis of the facts existing at the time when decision has to be taken.

"(6) Should our allies prove unwilling to go along with us in a fair sharing of responsibility, we might have to take a fresh look at the whole situation. It does not make much sense, however, to talk about returning to a 'Fortress America' position. What has happened at Dienbienphu shows the result of trying to defend yourself in a position of isolation. The United States can never safely rest in such a posture."

Tosec 32. For Yager. NIE 63-54, Consequences Within Indochina of the Fall of Dien Bien Phu approved by IAC today,<sup>2</sup> has following conclusions: 1. The fall of Dien Bien Phu would have far reaching and adverse repercussions but it would not signal the immediate collapse of the French Union military and political situation in Indochina. As a consequence of the fall of Dien Bien Phu, the morale of French Union forces would receive a severe blow. A crucial factor however in the military situation thereafter would be the reliability of native units particularly the Vietnamese. There would almost certainly be increased desertions and the possibility cannot be excluded that the native components of French Union forces might disintegrate. However, we believe that such disintegration would be unlikely during the ensuing two or three months, and that for at least this period the major part of the native troops would probably remain loyal. 2. Assuming no such disintegration, the fall of Dien Bien Phu would not in itself substantially alter the relative military capabilities of French Union and Viet Minh forces in Indochina during the next two or three months. The French stand at Dien Bien Phu has produced certain compensatory military results. It has prevented the overrunning of Laos and has resulted in the inflicting of casualties upon the Viet Minh comparable in number to the total French force committed at Dien Bien Phu. The bulk of Viet Minh forces released by the fall of Dien Bien Phu would probably not be able to move, regroup, and re-equip in time to be employed in new major operations during the next two or three months although some lightly equipped infantry battalions might be made available more rapidly for operations in the Delta region. 3. Although the Viet Minh have a substantial capability to organize demonstrations and carry out sabotage and terrorist activities in the major cities of Indochina, we believe that French Union forces could maintain control in those cities. 4. The political consequences in Indochina of the fall of Dien Bien Phu would be considerably more adverse than the strictly military consequences and would increase the tempo of deterioration in the over-all French Union position in Indochina, particularly in Vietnam. There would probably be a serious decline in the Vietnamese will to continue the war and to support the Vietnamese military programs. However, we believe that general collapse of French and native governmental authority during the next two or three months would be prevented by the continued existence of organized French Union forces and the hope among Indochinese that the US might intervene in Indochina. 5. We believe that although the fall of Dien Bien Phu would not immediately lead to collapse of the French Union position in Indochina, it would accelerate the deterioration already evident in the French Union military and political position there. If this trend were not checked, it could bring about a collapse of the French Union position during the latter half of 1954. It should be emphasized that this estimate does not consider the repercussion of major decisions in France or Geneva and elsewhere, which could have a decisive effect on the situation in Indochina.

Molotov replied that he sympathized with wounded but that this matter could be discussed by Vietnamese and Viet Minh once both were at Geneva. Bidault said matter urgent and one for discussion between commanders in field rather than between diplomats at Geneva and he reiterated importance of Viet Minh showing goodwill. At this point, Molotov appeared to become angry and accused Bidault of attempting to introduce precondition to admission of Viet Minh Government as interested state which he considered incompatible with Berlin agreement. Bidault denied he was making precondition. Both parties reiterated their arguments at length, Molotov several times stressing importance of direct contact between Vietnamese and Viet Minh at Geneva. Bidault finally terminated acrimonious discussion with statement they were getting nowhere and he would consult further with his associates.

Molotov then hastily called press conference and gave his account of interview.

Bidault is furious. He had previously invited Molotov for dinner this evening but plans to refuse to discuss any matters of substance with him pending satisfaction on wounded and to tell Molotov there is no point in discussing business when latter immediately thereafter calls in press to receive his version.<sup>2</sup>

GENEVA, April 30, 1954—3 p. m.

Secto 47. Repeated information Paris 150, Saigon 15, London 96. Following is Ambassador Heath's report to the Secretary of his talks with Bao Dai yesterday at Cannes:

I went to Cannes yesterday on the same plane as Falaize, Bidault's Chef de Cabinet. Falaize had asked me to let him see Bao Dai before I did. However, Bao Dai sent for me shortly after my arrival at 7:30 a. m. and saw Falaize only later.

Bao Dai told me very promptly that he had independently arrived at the conclusion that it was necessary for the Vietnamese to take part in the conference and not interpose objections to Viet Minh being present. He would send his Foreign Minister to head a delegation to Geneva. He was not afraid of encountering the Viet Minh in international conference and his delegation would know how to reply forcefully to Communist lies and impertinences. I had planned to take the noon plane back, but he asked me to stay over to see his Foreign Minister Dinh, arriving later that morning.

Unfortunately, Dinh rather complicated Bao Dai's outright acceptance of both Vietnam and Viet Minh participation by insisting there must be some precedence and differentiation in invitation to Vietnam. Accordingly he suggested procedure set forth in Secto 35, April 29,<sup>1</sup> to which Falaize readily agreed and said he would recommend by telephone to Bidault.

I thought it better not to discuss my trip on the telephone and that the Secretary's decision could await my return this morning. Bao Dai had refused to give assurances on Vietnam participation to Jacquet when the latter was there two days ago. Bao Dai was evidently awaiting word from American delegation and possibly from Bidault through Falaize, before finally making up his mind.

Bao Dai explained the declaration he made last week,<sup>2</sup> to the consternation of French official opinion, as motivated by the refusal of French President to call a meeting of High Council of French Union. Bao Dai said that under previous agreements any Associated State had the undoubted right to call a High Council meeting. Bao Dai, without criticizing Navarre, said he understood latter's recall was imminent and if it occurred, he planned to recommend General Cogny be appointed to High Command. I observed that Cogny had already spent three and one half trying years in French expeditionary force. Bao Dai had talked with Cogny a few weeks ago and Cogny had said only time he had suffered from over-fatigue was the year he had spent as head of LeLattre's military household. Bao Dai thought it would be a mistake to send General Guillaume since it would take latter months to learn how to wage war in Indochina. It would be the Navarre experience repeated over again. He praised Cogny's military ability, tact and loyalty.

In Paris I recall Admiral Radford suggesting to me that Cogny would be a good successor to Navarre.

Editorial Note

At his news conference on April 29, 9:30 a. m., the President received numerous questions on the subject of Indochina. In his replies he stated that the United States would not become involved in the war "except through the constitutional process which, of course, involved a declaration of war by Congress." He indicated that United States involvement in Indochina had been conducted within the limits of the Mutual Assistance Pact by providing technical assistance, funds, and equipment. The President said in response to whether it would be desirable to have a modus vivendi in Indochina that it "wouldn't be acceptable, I should think, to see the whole anticommunist defense of that area crumble and disappear." The President indicated on the other hand that the United States "certainly cannot hope at the present state of our relations in the world for a completely satisfactory answer with the Communists," and that "the most you can work out is a practical way of getting along." With reference to reports that the French had asked the United States for air intervention and whether the request had been refused at British urging, the President commented that "no British advice or counsel whatsoever has entered in any conversations between the British and ourselves as to what we should do in any specific instance, of the kind of help we should give to France." He refused to answer whether or not the French Government had asked the United States Government for air assistance and whether the United States had turned down such a request. The President said he had no objection to answering that question at an appropriate time, but that "right now we have got a conference going on in Geneva" and that the United States was trying to get a solution there. He said "I think it is a good time not to say too much about it."

Dulte 21. Eyes only Acting Secretary for President from Secretary. Developments have been so rapid and almost every hour so filled with high-level talks that evaluation has been difficult. My present estimates follow:

(1) Indochina: Delay in fall of Dien Bien Phu has resulted in some French discounting of this development. Nevertheless, it must be assumed the French will not continue in any long-range operation unless it will definitely relieve the strain on French manpower in Indochina. Present French Government holding on because their Parliament in recess and probably no one eager to take over at this juncture. Bidault given considerable discretion because present Cabinet cannot make up its mind on any course. Therefore, we do not have anyone on French side with whom we can make any dependable agreements. After deputies return and Dien Bien Phu falls, there may well be a change of government, probably to the left, committed to liquidate Indochina. However, this is more easily said than done and it is possible that as this fact develops a French Government might be prepared to sit down with us seriously and consider some joint program which is something that so far they have evaded.

I do not know whether from military standpoint it would be deemed feasible to end the scattering and exposure of military forces for local political reasons and withdraw present forces to defensible enclaves in deltas where they would have US sea and air protection meanwhile retain enough territory and enough prestige to develop really effective indigenous army along lines suggested by O'Daniel.<sup>2</sup> This might, I suppose, take two years and would require in large part taking over training responsibility by US. Also full independence and increased economic aid would probably be required to help maintain friendly governments in areas chosen for recruitment.

I do not have any idea as to whether this is militarily feasible and Admiral Davis inclines to view that it is not. However, from political standpoint this type of program appears to offer best hope of France staying in war. If France and US agree on such a plan, there would be fair chance of Australia and New Zealand coming along. However, this estimate can be improved in next day or two after I have conferred further with Foreign Minister Casey and Prime Minister Webb. It is unlikely that the UK would initially participate and would probably use its influence to prevent participation by Australia and New Zealand. The UK situation would be difficult internally and externally, and there would probably be undesirable repercussions upon other NATO partners. Thailand could be expected to cooperate if we act promptly. Foreign Minister Wan gave further assurance today and urges quick military conversations.<sup>3</sup>

(2) UK attitude is one of increasing weakness. British seem to feel that we are disposed to accept present risks of a Chinese war and this, coupled also with their fear that we would start using atomic weapons, has badly frightened them. I have just received a note from Eden referring to my paper read before NATO restricted council where Eden again urges necessity of consultation before any use. He says, "You know our strongly-held views on the need for consultation before any decision is taken."<sup>5</sup>

(3) General: The decline of France, the great weakness of Italy, and the considerable weakness in England create a situation where I think that if we ourselves are clear as to what should be done, we must be prepared to take the leadership in what we think is the right course, having regard to long-range US interest which includes importance of Allies. I believe that our Allies will be inclined to follow, if not immediately, then ultimately, strong and sound leadership. In saying this, I do not underestimate the immense difficulty of our finding the right course in this troubled situation. Nor do I mean to imply that I think that this is the moment for a bold or war-like course. I lack here the US political and NSC judgments needed for overall evaluation.

TOP SECRET PRIORITY

COLOMBO, April 29, 1954—4 p. m.

339. Repeated information Geneva priority 1. For Secretary of State. Prime Minister Ceylon <sup>1</sup> as token of personal esteem has shown me copies of official transcript yesterday's sessions South Asian Colombo conference. He told me these not shown anyone else and I therefore request greatest secrecy use and source information. Summary is as follows:

Conference <sup>2</sup> agreed discuss Indochina and hydrogen bomb as first two topics.

Nehru explained his six point proposal re Indochina <sup>3</sup> as follows:

(1) "Climate of peace". Cease-fire necessary sooner or later and the sooner the better. Military situation Indochina has now worsened but there also indications that belligerents had begun giving serious thought cessation fighting.

(2) Cease-fire. Obvious first step was cease-fire. Burma, Indonesia, Canada, and even France, as well as several other nations had agreed to this. Cease-fire should have priority Geneva agenda.

(3) Independence. France and US have agreed complete transfer of sovereignty in Indochina.

(4) Negotiations. Nehru then quoted stating he did not say to whom and in what form sovereignty should be transferred. This matter of agreement between parties concerned. He did not say French should withdraw their forces immediately and leave vacuum in Indochina. These matters to be discussed by principal parties to conflict which was substance his fourth point. He did not say settlement of issue should be completely divorced from Geneva Conference but visualized machinery for direct negotiation between French and Indochina might proceed, as it were, through Geneva Conference as "sort of subcommittee of Geneva Conference."

(5) Non-intervention. He called for non-intervention in Indochina in any form by the great powers, UK, US, USSR and China. There was no doubt that both US and China were intervening in Indochina and they have in effect not denied this. He felt that if problem could be localized by reducing all possibilities of intervention of outside powers the onus of finding a settlement could be thrown on the parties in conflict themselves.

(6) UN. He explained it was intended to bring UN into picture as there might be need for broad supervision by UN of implementation of any settlement.

Prime Minister Burma <sup>4</sup> stated afraid of vacuum being created in Indochina. He recommended there must be careful approach so that neither side could derive any advantage from it. He thought that conference should be quite explicit on this point and that whatever agreement was reached there should also be statement elaborating desire Asian countries to avoid giving an advantage to one side or the other.

Prime Minister Indonesia <sup>5</sup> agreed with Nehru's approach but wished get two points clear.

(1) He saw situation Indochina as being directly related to power politics of great powers and Geneva Conference was bound become forum of power politics. Recent increase in violence of fighting in Indochina was proof of power politics where each side was striving build up position of strength in Geneva through Indochina. China actively supported Ho Chi Minh. China known to be pressing demand for admission to UN. He therefore thought acceptance cease-fire by Viet Minh would be more likely if some indication given that China's demand would soon be satisfied. Conference therefore should consider cease-fire in relation admission China to UN.

(2) He was concerned over question of sovereignty and wished to know to whom independence would be given, either to Ho Chi Minh or Associated States. What guarantee would there be for independence? Ho Chi Minh has been branded as Communist but to his followers he is national leader.

Rest of session devoted discuss these points. Mohammed Ali <sup>6</sup> argued strongly that cease-fire in itself not sufficient, that if there was a choice between colonialism and communism former was less dangerous since it could be persuaded by pressure at world opinion to foster nationalism and would eventually lead to independence, that on other hand Communist occupation was a means to an end and brought danger to world peace closer to home, that conference should do nothing to prejudice or anticipate results of Geneva Conference, that he was against any "accusation of intervention", that he would accept first three points Nehru's plan, i.e., climate of peace, cease-fire, and independence but not points four and five re conference calling for direct negotiations between forces in Indochina and non-intervention agreement. Indonesian Prime Minister insisted on his view of linking admission Communist China to UN with cease-fire but Nehru, Mohammed Ali and Kotelawala opposed. (Nehru added that China's admission UN would however go long way toward relieving existing tensions.)

There was unanimous approval of Prime Ministers on Nehru's first two points and it also was agreed that conference should not embarrass Geneva Conference.

Discussions continue on topics today.

The Secretary of State
Philip W. Bonsal

Subject: Participation in the Indochina Phase of the Geneva Conference

Vice President Garcia called to ascertain the situation regarding participation in the Indochina phase of the conference and to state the Philippine point of view.

The Secretary described the recent exchanges of views on this subject between Bidault and Molotov<sup>2</sup> and indicated that at present the French are consulting with Bao Dai regarding the Soviet insistence that the Viet Minh participate as well as the Associated States.<sup>3</sup> He referred to the Soviet attempt at blackmail in the matter of the wounded at Dien Bien Phu.<sup>4</sup>

The Secretary stated that our position on further participation was not yet firm. He described various possible solutions of the problem. He indicated that we were fully aware of the Philippine interest in and claim to participation and said that we would of course be very glad to have the Philippines present. He added, however, that in order to get the conference under way without delay agreement might be reached on a limited participation formula (for example the four Berlin powers, Communist China and the four belligerents in Indochina) with a later expansion to be envisaged. A limited conference might deal with military aspects while the broader political aspects would be considered by an enlarged group. The Secretary described the problem involved in enlarging the group in view of the fact that not only the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand who would be welcomed by us, but the claims of Thailand and of Burma together with India, Indonesia and possibly Pakistan would have to be considered.

Mr. Garcia thanked the Secretary for his statement of the situation. He then said that the Philippine position would be one of accepting the absence of the Philippines from the Indochina phase if that phase were to be limited only to the four inviting powers, Communist China and the four belligerents in Indochina, but that the Philippines believed that if any other states were invited then the Philippines should be included.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>5</sup> In a conversation on Apr. 29 between Bonsal and Felino Neri, former Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs in the Quirino government and a member of the Philippine Delegation, held prior to the conversation between the Secretary and Garcia, Bonsal reminded Neri that the United States and the Philippines had been in agreement as to the desirability of keeping neutrals out of the Korean phase of the Geneva Conference and that so far as Bonsal was aware the same reasoning would apply in the case of the Indochina phase. Neri agreed but said that it was very important from the point of view of Philippine internal politics that, if states other than the Berlin Four, Communist China, and the belligerents were included, the Philippines also be asked to participate. They are that Bao Dai received argument that Viet Minh be present at Geneva with less objection than had been feared. Although His Majesty dwelt at length on disadvantages from standpoint Vietnam public opinion and insisted on need consult ministers before making final decision, Jacquet convinced he will come around in day or two after oriental sensibilities have been assailed. He believed Ambassador Heath's visit today should help accelerate process.

Jacquet's argument was that failure agree present plan for participation nine countries in Indochina phase Geneva might result in inclusion India, Indonesia and other undesirables. Bao Dai was impressed. Opinion of Vietnam ministers now in Cannes, including Dinh, Vinh

Memorandum by the Adviser to the United States Delegation (Bonsal) to the Special Adviser to the United States Delegation (Robertson)

[GENEVA,] April 29, 1954.

Subject: Current Indochina Situation

Here are my views on the Indochina situation.

1) The Franco-Vietnamese military effort (which we have supported) and the Franco-Vietnamese political effort to create a stable Vietnamese Government with effective popular support are bankrupt or nearly.

2) A further application of force from the outside against the purely Vietnamese Viet Minh army, supported as it is with Communist Chinese material aid, would not produce political results with which we could live, i.e., a victory through the application of overwhelming outside force would not bring about a satisfactory Western-oriented government in control of Indochina enjoying the consideration of other Asian nations and able to maintain itself in power without an almost indefinite commitment to the area of outside force.

3) Nevertheless, our best card at Geneva is uncertainty as to whether we and other likeminded countries will in fact take measures to intervene effectively with armed force in Indochina should no acceptable solution be found at Geneva. It is essential that that uncertainty be kept alive just as long as possible.

4) Using that uncertainty as a major asset, we must support a solution at Geneva which would involve as its major features the following:

a) A cease fire in Cambodia and Laos and withdrawal of outside forces (except possibly as provided in Franco-Laotian military treaties) and the installation in these countries of peace observation machinery, perhaps under UN auspices, to see that their territorial integrity and internal security are respected.

b) A cease fire in Viet Nam, as nearly as possible along the line of the Laniel proposals. Since these do not reflect the relative military position of the two parties we may have to be flexible here. The question of controls is of course vital. We should be able rapidly to develop our thinking on this point when we receive the plans and views of the French Government which have been promised us on an urgent basis.

c) Provision for a rapid disarmament under international control of the armed forces of both sides in Viet Nam to a point where they will be within the means of Viet Nam to maintain.

d) A phased reduction of foreign forces in Viet Nam over a stated period of time (perhaps three to four years) with their eventual status to be determined in agreement with the definitive government of the country.

e) A period of transition for the restoration of political normality. During this transition period there would be in fact a political division of the country corresponding very roughly to the present military division.

f) A reconstruction program for Viet Nam to be conducted both directly by France, the US and the UK and perhaps also through the UN.

g) An announced date for the holding of national elections to form a definitive government for all Viet Nam. We might propose July 1, 1957.

The purpose of this program is to see whether we can not, under the threat of further armed intervention, create conditions under which our side could continue the struggle against Communism under relatively peaceful conditions with some chances of success.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Secretary of State, at Geneva<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET      PRIORITY      WASHINGTON, April 29, 1954—7: 01 p. m.

Tedul 20. Eyes only Secretary.<sup>2</sup> Following brief of discussion this morning<sup>3</sup> will be helpful until I give you a fuller account personally:

Meeting terminated with briefing by me on developments at Geneva during which I read extracts from your most recent and informative

<sup>2</sup> Accompanying message from the Department of State contained an instruction that telegram Tedul 20 "should be handed only to the Secretary, Mr. Merchant or Mr. MacArthur and to no other persons on direction of the Acting Secretary."

<sup>3</sup> The 194th meeting of the National Security Council, Apr. 29, 1954, 10: 00 a. m. For extracts from the memorandum of discussion at the 194th meeting of the National Security Council, see volume XIII.

telegrams, which President had already seen. Radford then gave estimate of military situation and read full text of report made when he returned from London. As you are aware, he felt very depressed after his conversation with Churchill and the British Chiefs of Staff.<sup>4</sup> I think he does not quite realize that the British position is not always quite as rigid as such conversations might indicate. His report precipitated a series of recommendations, most drastic of which was that we must proceed alone to retrieve the situation in Indochina in event of a French collapse. The President reiterated his previous opinion with regard to impossibility of direct intervention in the absence of a common declaration of intent joined in by most exposed and interested nations. He feels sure that neither Congressional nor public opinion would accept a last minute partnership with the French in the absence of this other association. After various conflicting views had been expressed, some of them quite vehemently, I attempted to summarize by stating substantially the following:

(1) We have underwritten the Navarre Plan on the advice of our military experts, who considered it a sound plan and one which would produce a position of strength if it were energetically and effectively implemented.

(2) It is acknowledged by the military authorities that the loss of Dien Bien Phu, from a purely military standpoint, was not by any means a mortal blow to the Navarre Plan.

(3) The French have asked for United States air intervention, not in the hope of saving Dien Bien Phu, but to raise French military and political morale in order to continue resistance in Indochina. This assurance is worth little if there should be a change in the French Government or if a further deterioration in the military situation should produce a collapse.

(4) It was impossible for me to assess whether the type of intervention requested by the French would have any real effect. However, if the United States is to take any action in the present situation it can only be in concert with other nations and if we seek a different association of nations from that originally contemplated it should be done in such a way as not unduly to offend British or Dominion opinion and should leave the door open for subsequent association by the ANZUS nations, or even by Britain, if future developments make this possible.

(5) No decision should be taken until you return from Geneva, when you will be able to give a clearer picture of the position of our allies and of the Russians and Chinese.

(6) In the intervening time it is possible only to do the following:

(a) Inform our ANZUS colleagues, possibly during an informal briefing, that we continue to be deeply concerned about the situation in Southeast Asia, that we do not share the more optimistic views of the British Chiefs of Staff, and that we are reviewing the situation. It could be hinted that we may, without embarrassment to them, consider some other consortium of nations for the declaration of intent which we had previously proposed.

(b) Through military channels continue to urge the French to hold out, extending by implication the possibility that some formula may be found which would permit additional aid of some sort.

Just after writing this Makins came in for a private talk. His purpose was to ask what the situation was with regard to the suggested Churchill visit. We of course discussed the Asiatic situation. He stated in confidence, but quite frankly, that the British position had been taken as a result of careful consideration, and he surprised me by telling me that when consulted more than a week ago he had reported to London his estimate that when confronted with the British position the United States probably would, after some consideration, decide "to go it alone". By "going it alone" he meant act without the UK. He also gave his opinion that the British position was not as rigid as the statements of the British Chiefs of Staff and of Mr. Churchill had seemed to indicate. He was obviously very much surprised by Casey's speech reference North Korea.

Radford has just sent me the following paragraphs, which he asked be transmitted to you, as representative of JCS opinion :

"The proposal to withdraw French Union forces into delta enclaves to take up defensive positions while regrouping and being augmented by Viet Namese forces, which would be recruited and trained within the enclaves is certainly not desirable from the military standpoint. If pursuant to a negotiation with the Communists, it would probably involve a violation of any cease-fire or armistice terms that would be accepted by the Viet Minh. If undertaken as a military movement under existing conditions or as they can be envisaged following the fall of Dien Bien Phu, it would be extremely difficult to accomplish; would involve abandonment of large areas of all of the Associated States to Viet Minh exploitation; and would commit us to a defensive concept at a time when an offensive spirit would be most important to enhance the morale and support of the native populations.

"Finally the recruitment of a native army of sufficient size might be difficult or impossible if populations within enclaves were only source."

their UN delegation was night before last invited privately to dine by Chechyotkin of Soviet delegation, who spoke along following lines:

Time had come to stop fighting in Indochina. This could be arranged within 48 hours. Soviet Russia could not appropriately propose it but French could, and would have support of British, if they would do it "free from American influence". Important thing was strictly military cease-fire. Political arrangements should be made later but "eventual settlement should be political rather than territorial".

Margerie commented that Soviet and Communist press in recent days had been savagely attacking Associated States and particularly Bao Dai Government (Molotov this afternoon referred to Associated States as "puppets"). Margerie believed Chechyotkin's approach fitted into picture and that Communist campaign here, once Viet Minh had arrived, would be to attempt to discredit Associated States in eyes of Indochina and world public opinion, and to advocate formation of new provisional government on coalition basis to be followed by elections. This would conform to pattern of North Korean proposal on Korea and would obviously fit Communist strategy for Indochina.

Margerie said French were still studying necessary military and political safeguards for any armistice. Problems would not be too difficult in south where, except for Viet Minh pockets, population was relatively loyal. It would be far more difficult in north where Viet Minh were all over the place.

[GENEVA,] April 29, 1954.

This is an effort to take stock after three hectic weeks. The salient facts which to me emerge are:

1. The weakness of France, which is greater than we suspected even two weeks ago. For practical purposes she is without a government and is likely to remain in that position for several weeks and possibly much longer.

2. EDC hangs in perilous balance, but in Spaak we have a new and fresh ally who may give it enough lift to get even France to ratify. At best, this will be late June.<sup>2</sup>

3. The Saar business is stuck, but Adenauer remains restrained and cooperative. We should make our joint approach with the British shortly to both the French and the Germans.<sup>3</sup>

4. The British are weaker than we thought, and they are more scared of the H-bomb. We frightened them badly and this multiplied their timidity.

5. Formation of your projected ad hoc coalition for united action in Southeast Asia is out the window, until this conference ends, thanks largely to the British repudiation of their agreement of April 13.<sup>4</sup>

6. Molotov's attitude in his talk with you<sup>5</sup> and his last talk with Bidault,<sup>6</sup> the Soviet reply to our March 19 note,<sup>7</sup> the apparent cohesion of the Chinese and the Russians, and lastly the arrogance of Chou En-lai's statement to the conference April 28,<sup>8</sup> all combine in my judgment to force a substantial upward revision in our past estimate of the risk of Chinese intervention if we intervene in Indochina, and also of the possibility of ultimate Soviet intervention.

7. All of the principals on the Western side are harassed and terribly tired.

8. The Communists must be terribly confused as to what our intentions actually are.

9. Our alliances have been put under greater and more sudden strain in the last few weeks than at any time since the war ended. In consequence, great effort is required to repair the situation.

From the above items, and a number of inarticulated premises, I draw the following conclusions and recommendations.

1. With respect to Indochina, I think it clear that we should not consider intervening with any of our military forces unless we have a plan which is militarily feasible, welcomed by the indigenous governments, and acceptable to the French. Assuming these conditions are met, it would thereafter, in my judgment, be necessary before acting, to have a firm commitment for its execution by a French government with a longer life expectancy than Laniel-Bidault.<sup>9</sup>

British participation, and preferably participation by other countries in the immediate area, and finally sufficiently broad bipartisan support in Congress to give assurances that we could in fact stay with what would be by its nature a long term operation, would also be necessary before we should consider taking military action. My own judgment is that these essential pre-conditions cannot be fulfilled and that in consequence the odds are overwhelmingly in favor of the loss of Indochina to the Communists.

2. Regardless of whether or not Indochina is lost, we should start constructing a coalition committed to hold and fight for a line preserving as much of the rest of Southeast Asia as we can recruit allies. I think the British will fight for Malaya, and I think we can get Australia, New Zealand, and the Philippines in. We can probably get Thailand, and I think we should exert all possible pressure (presumably through the British) on Burma to come in. If we can't get Burma in, I think we should seriously consider an effort to persuade India to guarantee the political independence and territorial integrity of Burma and the three Associated States. We would have no link with such a guarantee, since our fighting line would be to the south.

3. Apart from extreme quiet and unobtrusive action on the steps suggested in (2) above, I think we should lie back and let the situation develop, maintaining an appearance of calm confidence and composure. I also think that you should get at least three days on Duck Island.

4. It goes without saying that we should disassociate ourselves from any part in any surrender at Geneva by the French of Indochina. If this happens, there will be strong pressure at home to abandon France and possibly Europe. We must resist this of course.

Secto 45. Repeated information Moscow 28. Reference joint State-USIA message Tosec 31 of April 28.<sup>1</sup> To date there has been no development in Geneva of which this delegation is aware which would tend to indicate anything but complete Communist bloc unity. Chou, Nam and Molotov speeches all emphasize this factor. Today there was atmosphere of particular cordiality and almost triumphant unity among Communist delegates in lounges after Molotov's speech. While this delegation has no information on mechanics joint Sino-Soviet policy determination at Geneva, there has been nothing to date indicating any differences of opinion between Soviet Union and Communist China. Both delegations endeavoring create impression that Communist China is great power which will insist on making up her own mind on policy. It is in this context that Hsiung Hsiang-hui's [Huang Hua's] remark (reference telegram) should be interpreted.

Delegation feels utmost caution should be taken in any statements attributed to official US source to avoid implication there are major Sino-Soviet differences at Geneva. Allegations of Chinese independence of policy can only contribute to Asian wishful thinking that Communist China is somehow more Asian than Communist and can therefore be dealt with in more reasonable way than Soviet Union. Rather particularly in Asia we must encourage more realistic view that governments of Communist China and Soviet Union have important political and strategic reasons for working out joint policy within framework sort of senior-junior-partnership.

GENEVA, April 30, 1954—12:15 p. m.

PERSONAL AND PRIVATE

MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION WITH MR. EDEN

I said to Mr. Eden that I was greatly disturbed over the present position and its bearing upon the cooperation of our two countries. We had, I thought, agreed to sit down with other directly interested countries to try to work out a common defense for the southeast Asia area, but now the British were unwilling to go ahead with the agreement which Mr. Eden and I had reached at London.<sup>2</sup> On top of that was the fact that in the face of the vicious attacks by Molotov, Chou En-lai and Nam Il on the United States for what it had done in Korea,<sup>3</sup> there was not a single Western European power which was prepared to get up and say a word in defence of the UN or United States position. The only speakers on the non-Communist side had been South Korea, Colombia, the United States and Australia, and no one else was inscribed to speak.

I said it was particularly galling to the United States to have to accept this attack on it as being an "imperialist" power. I said that the United States was eager to beat the Communists at their own game and to sponsor nationalism in the independent colonial areas, which was in accordance with our historic tradition, but that we were restrained from doing so by a desire to cooperate with Britain and France in Asia, in North Africa and in the Near and Middle East. This, however, did not seem to be paying any dividends because when the chips were down there was no cohesion between us. Here at Geneva we were presenting a pathetic spectacle of drifting without any agreed policy or purpose. The United States had presented a program which, after it had been apparently accepted, had been repudiated and there was no alternative offered.

I said as far as the Korean problem was concerned, we were being forced by our western allies to abandon our original position of backing the UN resolutions so that western leaders could show how generous they were at south Korea's expense. I thought, however, that it was rather pathetic that we had to make our concessions to our allies before even starting to negotiate with the Communists, where the concessions might have some negotiating value. If the effort to develop a united position with reference to southeast Asia collapsed, we would be faced by the problem of going it alone. This would probably mean increasing the close relations with Syngman Rhee and Chiang Kai-shek, who, whatever their defects, were at least willing to stand strong against the Communists. I mentioned that there was considerable pressure for the United States to complete a mutual security treaty covering Formosa.<sup>4</sup> This had been deferred and I felt that its negotiation at the time of the Geneva conference and after my proposal for a united defense of southeast Asia might be embarrassing. However, if there was to be no united defense for southeast Asia and no agreed program for Geneva, then we would have to consider who there was upon whom we could depend.

I emphasized that despite what I gathered the British might have inferred from Radford's talks,<sup>5</sup> the United States was not seeking either war with China or a large scale intervention in Indo-China. In fact these were the two things we were seeking to avoid and thought could be avoided if we had a show of common strength.

I greatly feared that if I return to Washington under present conditions and had to meet with the Congressional Committees and give explanations as to what had happened, the consequences would be disastrous for the close UK-US relations which we wanted to maintain.

Mr. Eden then handed me the memorandum, a copy of which is annexed. He said that they had been working very hard to prevent the Colombo Conference from taking a strong anti-Western position, particularly in relation to Indochina, and he felt that they had been quite successful.

I referred to the paragraph in the UK memorandum calling for immediate and secret joint examination between the US and the UK. I said that this might be useful, but certainly it would not be useful if that was all there was, because we had already invited other countries such as Thailand, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand to share in creating a southeast Asian defense; and the two first had definitely agreed and the two latter were interested. I also said I was confident we could not now rebuff them without serious consequences for the future. They would have to be brought in on some discussions, although probably not those of the intimate nature which were customary between the US and the UK. I referred to the fact that the North Atlantic Treaty had developed progressively, the first conception being the Brussels Pact, then the addition of the US and Canada, then the addition of Scandinavian countries, then the addition of Portugal and Italy, and most recently the addition of Greece and Turkey. I said that surely any southeast Asian arrangement would have to include at least Thailand, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand, as well as the US, the UK and France, and the Associated States; and I did not see why we could not get started with that nucleus and let it develop as seemed natural. Mr. Eden made no reply.

Mr. Eden then said that he felt that the Western Powers had not participated in the general debate because they did not want to get tied to the South Korean election formula. I said that the issues in the general debate far transcended this rather minor technical point,—that the burden of the speeches of Molotov and Chou En-lai had been that Asia was for the Asians, and that all Western influence should be eliminated, particularly that of the US. Also, they had viciously attacked the UN, and made the most grotesque falsifications of history. Surely, I said, that presented issues to which the Western Powers could address themselves if they believed in the UN and believed that the principle of solidarity extended beyond Europe. Mr. Eden said he would give thought to the possibility of his making some speech.

We then discussed the details of the Korean matter. I said I was not hopeless of the possibility of an agreement, because we had an asset to use that we had not had in Berlin. At Berlin we could not pull out US and UK troops because this would collapse the forward strategy of NATO. In Korea there was no general allied strategy, and US troops could be pulled out in exchange for a united Korea, which would have sufficient demilitarization in the North so as to constitute no threat to Vladivostok and Port Arthur. Mr. Eden suggested that we might have a restricted meeting of the Four Inviting Powers plus China and North Korea and South Korea to try to get into this matter before I left. I said I would not be indisposed to have such a meeting on Saturday afternoon.<sup>6</sup>

I told Mr. Eden that I was seeing Molotov at 11 on Saturday morning on the atomic energy matter. I was disposed not to seek a joint communiqué which would indicate that the President's Plan had been rejected. I felt that to throw this into the present international situation would greatly aggravate and deteriorate affairs, and would particularly cause a deep resentment in the US. Mr. Eden agreed to this handling of the matter.

I reminded Mr. Eden that I had had no reply from him with reference to our economic aid to Egypt. He said he would talk to me about this before I left.

SOUTH-EAST ASIAN DEFENCE

1. Communism in Asia cannot be checked by military means alone. The problem is as much political as military; if any military combination is to be effective, it must enjoy the widest possible measure of Asian support.

2. We should aim to get the support of Burma as well as Siam as the immediate neighbours of Indo-China. But Burma will not come in unless the project commands some sympathy from other Asian countries, particularly the Asian members of the Commonwealth.

3. If we cannot win the active support of all the Asian countries of the area, it is important that we should, at the very least, secure their benevolent neutrality.

4. To secure this widely based Asian support, we must prepare the ground carefully for what is, in any case, intended to be a lasting defensive organisation, not a hastily contrived expedient to meet the present crisis.

5. This does not mean that we desire to delay. On the contrary, we have already been actively using our influence, particularly with the Asian members of the Commonwealth, with encouraging results. Pakistan and Ceylon have already promised not to oppose a South-East Asian Collective Defence on the lines we envisage, and we have succeeded in diverting Mr. Nehru from his original intention of condemning it root and branch. We have thus averted the danger that the Asian Prime Ministers at Colombo would unite in condemning our project, and have grounds for hoping for the actual support of some of them.

6. Mr. Nehru's latest statement<sup>8</sup> shows that his ideas have moved closer to our own. With persistence, we may even secure his endorsement of the kind of negotiated settlement in Indo-China that would be acceptable to us.

<sup>7</sup>The U.K. memorandum was transmitted to the Department in telegram Dulte 30, Apr. 30. (790.5/4-3054)

<sup>8</sup>Made on Apr. 25 in New Delhi; see telegram 339 from Colombo, Apr. 29, p. 610, and memorandum from Stelle to Bowie, Apr. 30, p. 635. For Prime Minister Nehru's proposals transmitted to the Department of State in telegram 1596 from New Delhi, Apr. 25, see volume XIII.

7. While we do not believe that a French collapse in Indo-China could come about as rapidly or as completely as the Americans appear to envisage, this danger reinforces the need to lay the foundations of a wider and viable defence organisation for South-East Asia.

8. We propose therefore that the United States and the United Kingdom should begin an immediate and secret joint examination of the political and military problems involved in creating a Collective Defence for South-East Asia, namely :

- (a) nature and purpose ;
- (b) membership ;
- (c) commitments.

This examination should also cover immediate joint measures to stiffen Siam.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Special Adviser to the United States Delegation (Merchant)

SECRET

GENEVA, April 30, 1954

Participants: Mr. Pearson, Secretary of External Affairs of Canada

Mr. Livingston T. Merchant, US Delegation

Time: 1 p. m., April 30, 1954

Place: Hotel de la Paix, Geneva

I called Mr. Pearson this morning and asked if I could see him for a few minutes. He invited me to luncheon, which I accepted, at his hotel. We talked for about one hour and a half.

I opened by saying that I came to him not under instructions or in fact officially, but for the primary purpose of seeking his views on several subjects which were increasingly troubling to us. I said that I had not seen since the war our alliances so weakened, or the Russians so close to their objective of totally isolating the US from its allies. For example, I said it was to me incredible but nevertheless true that on the fifth day of the Geneva Conference during the entire course of which the US (and only inferentially the UN) had been the object of vicious attack by the Russians, Chinese, and the North Koreans, there had not been raised in the conference hall the voice of a single one of our European allies. I said no American would think of asking to be defended by his friends, but that I would have thought someone would have come to the defense of the UN and that some effort would have been attempted to correct the perversions of history put out by the Communists. There was not, I said, in my judgment, a single American newspaperman or columnist worth his salt who would not recognize that his Sunday headline story would be built on the simple fact that every European ally had sat by silently during this past week.

Mr. Pearson expressed what I honestly believe was genuine amazement. He said the thought I had expressed as to how American press and public would react to sequence of speakers this week had never occurred to him. He said that he had intended to speak next week when he felt it would be more effective in restricted session but that in the light of the appearances which I described to him, he most decidedly would want to speak as soon as possible in plenary session. I said I had not come to ask him to speak, but to seek his advice. He insisted that he wanted to speak and would do so, although he stated that he could not address his remarks in favor of our initial proposal on Korean elections. He said however there was a good deal he could usefully say, and he said further that he thought it was important that as many as possible on our side speak in plenary session in the next few days, if only for five or ten minutes. Webb, he said, he knew would speak and he would discuss this with him. He also said that he wanted to talk to Mr. Spaak and impress on him the importance of the Europeans speaking up. I quickly interjected that Doug MacArthur and I had been talking over the situation and that when I decided to speak to him, Mr. MacArthur had decided that similarly he would speak to Mr. Spaak, and that I believed he was doing so at approximately the same time. Accordingly, I said I felt Mr. Spaak would have this general thought in mind.

I then went on to what I said I thought was a related matter but more serious; that this was the division on Far Eastern problems which the Russians were apparently succeeding so well in exploiting. I went over the history of the Secretary's effort to create a stronger and united position for Geneva by initiating plans for an ad hoc coalition for collective defense in Southeast Asia. I described how he felt this would create an asset at least to offset the intensified military action of the Vietminh. I said that after the Secretary's quick trip to London and Paris two weeks ago,<sup>1</sup> we had all felt that we had secured the agreement of the British and the French Governments to this proposal, but that within five days the British had walked out on it, and within two weeks the French had in fact abandoned it due to the crisis of Dien Bien Phu and the dissolution of any effective government in Paris.

Mr. Pearson interjected that he thought Mr. Eden had been disturbed by our rushing the pace on the eve of Geneva by calling together the consultative group in Washington. He said that he felt Mr. Eden would not insist on waiting until Geneva was over to move ahead on this front but thought that if things went no better at the conference in the first few days of next week, the British would be willing to start moving ahead on the coalition idea. I said that I thought the Secretary's original purpose had been stultified, but that we should move ahead as rapidly as possible.

Mr. Pearson said that he had had several long talks with Mr. Eden and that we must realize that he is preoccupied with the Asian angle of the Commonwealth. Also, he said he would tell me in all frankness that the presentation made by Admiral Radford last Saturday in Paris to Mr. Eden<sup>2</sup> had "almost frightened him to death". He said it can be accepted that Foreign Offices are easily frightened, but that Mr. Eden had told him that Admiral Radford at his dinner Monday night with the Prime Minister<sup>3</sup> had also frightened the old gentleman who, Mr. Pearson said, is normally a man of action and not easily frightened. Mr. Pearson said the British also had gained the impression that not only were we trying to pull them into military action on a crash basis, but that we are also trying to pull the French along with us. He intimated that he felt we had prompted or encouraged the series of unrelated emergency requests for intervention made to us by the French.

We discussed the problem of Indochina inconclusively but at some length. Mr. Pearson said that coalition was obviously surrender on a time basis only, that a cease-fire without safeguards made no sense and risked slaughter, and that partition meant giving up great assets in loyal people and resources in the north and retaining behind one's lines large areas strongly held by the enemy. He asked if we had given any thought to withdrawal to the Delta areas and then building up the native forces for ultimate extension of the area of control by the local authorities. I said we had given thought to this and were continuing to do so as one possibility which would preserve the area from total surrender, but that I did not know whether or not it was still militarily feasible. I then said I had gained the impression that the British were inclined to favor partition as the least undesirable solution for a settlement. Mr. Pearson said that he didn't think so, and that Mr. Eden had expressed great doubts as to the wisdom and feasibility of partition. I then said that I was uncertain when Mr. Eden had told us earlier that if partition was the result of Geneva, the British would be prepared to militarily guarantee the new frontier, whether or not he was thinking in terms of a guarantee by a coalition or participation by the UK in a joint guarantee which would include the Soviets, China, and possibly the US. Mr. Pearson was emphatic that it was the former that Mr. Eden had in mind.

Mr. Pearson then said that he wondered whether in extremis it might be useful to get other Asians involved in the problem. He said he thought possibly there might be something in Nehru's proposals as modified by the Colombo Conference. He suggested that if we could get a Pakistani here at Geneva to speak for the five Colombo countries, we might be able to work something out. I questioned him as to what he had in mind and it was clear that he had not carried the idea further in his thinking.

We broke up at 2:30 with Mr. Pearson saying that as a result of my talk he was going to see Mr. Eden before the plenary session started. He also reiterated that he was going to speak to Prime Minister Webb.

Marquis Childs in confidence told me of a talk he had had with Eden. Mark urged that his name not be mentioned in any way, but this, in substance according to Childs, was what Eden told him: The British were very much disturbed and angered by Radford's coming over to London and trying to pressure the Cabinet and the Chiefs of Staff to come into Indo-China with sea and air power. They knew that this wouldn't work, said Eden, because it would require land forces as large as Korea.

The British had a suspicion that Radford wanted to use this as a means of launching what Eden said was "Radford's war against China". They felt that that would be disastrous and they couldn't go along with it, but that was the reason they are staying out of the thing.

Eden said he had had the same feeling while in Paris, but he wanted to be sure of this policy as being the same as the English Government.

It was the reason he flew back and he found the Cabinet and the Government supported him. They don't believe in Bao Dai and are not willing to give any support.

WASHINGTON, April 30, 1954.

DEAR WALTER: I would like to pass on in this manner a report of a brief talk which I had last night with Roger Makins when we met at the Japanese Embassy. I have known Roger for some time and worked closely with him when he was in the Foreign Office and I was in the Embassy, which may account in part for the frankness with which he spoke.

At the outset of the conversation, Roger said that he was very concerned over the "serious situation" involving Indochina and the Geneva Conference. I expressed regret that his country and mine appeared farther apart than usual in their efforts to cope with the problem. He said that was most unfortunate and mentioned differences between British public opinion and American public opinion on a number of international problems, including Indochina. He then said that he did not know any quick remedy for this ailment but felt that if every effort could be made to keep the Geneva Conference in session "for as long as possible" the British public could be convinced that the United States and its allies were making a sincere effort to achieve something at the Conference but were prevented from doing so by the uncompromising and unreasonable attitude of the Communists.

As he knew that I had recently returned from Singapore, Roger asked about the effect of a Communist-dominated Indochina on the rest of Southeast Asia. I told him that it was my personal opinion that such a deplorable condition would have a fatal effect, and added that it was Malcolm MacDonald's viewpoint several months ago that if Indochina should be lost to Communism, Malaya would be near the top of the list of next victims. Roger quickly and emphatically agreed.

All of this, doubtless, is of little value but Drum and I felt that it might be of some interest to you.

I hope the going is not too rough and that you are finding it possible to have a breathing spell now and then.

Best regards,

[GENEVA,] April 30, 1954.

GENEVA CONFERENCE, APRIL 1954
INDOCHINA PHASE

POSSIBLE WESTERN PROPOSAL FOR "RESTORING PEACE IN INDOCHINA"

The purpose of this memorandum is to examine a possible Western proposal for "restoring peace in Indochina" which might be made at the Geneva Conference either in anticipation of or as a reply to an expected Communist proposal. The Western proposal must be acceptable to the United States and appear reasonable to world opinion. Also, in the unlikely event it was seriously considered by the Communists, it should provide some face-saving elements (not of substance) to facilitate acceptance by them. The Communists will, it is expected, make a proposal of their own including such features as the withdrawal of foreign troops, the holding of "free elections" and the recognition of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam.

The negotiating position of the two sides at Geneva will depend upon the following major factors:

(1) The military situation and prospects, including especially the outcome of Dien Bien Phu and its effect on French and Vietnamese official, public and military opinion.

(2) Franco-Vietnamese relations including the result of current negotiations and their impact on French and Vietnamese official and public opinion.

(3) The degree to which the United States is successful in forging a "united action" concept which the Communists as well as the French and the Vietnamese believe gives promise of contributing overwhelming added military assets on our side in Indochina in the event of a breakdown at Geneva.

(4) Development of US position regarding intervention in Indochina.

(5) The extent to which the Russians and the Chinese Communists are ready to risk World War III in order to hold the Communist position in Indochina.

(6) The risks which our side is willing to take to preserve Indochina from the Communists.

The following considerations seem basic to the formulation of our position:

(1) Any settlement which leaves Ho Chi Minh's regular divisions intact and undefeated will result in a turn-over of the country sooner or later to the Communists.

(2) It is essential from the point of view of French public and official opinion that our side at Geneva make what appears to be a constructive and united attempt to end the fighting in Indochina. If such an attempt is made sincerely, and fails, the chances that the Franco-Vietnamese military effort will be continued will at least be improved.

(3) It is also essential from the point of view of French public and official opinion that nothing be done or said at Geneva to indicate that we do not understand that the French Union concept as a free association of equal, sovereign states is what justifies the heavy French contribution to our common objective of keeping Indochina from Communist control. (There appears to be no need to insist on a spelled out right of withdrawal at a time when the very existence of the new states is being assured only because of their membership in the French Union; the relationship between them will be an evolving one in accordance with circumstances.)

(4) In the case of Cambodia and of Laos, all that is required is a withdrawal of Vietminh invading forces in order to leave the administration of their countries to governments enjoying a satisfactory degree of popular support. Neither elections nor plebiscites are needed except as provided by the functioning constitutional machinery in the two states. We should emphasize our own sense of the "separateness" of Cambodia and Laos from Vietnam by promptly appointing a resident Ambassador in Phnom Penh and a resident Minister in Vientiane.

In view of the above summary analysis, a program for restoring peace to Indochina might be envisaged which would include:

(a) On the military side, (1) In Cambodia and Laos: a withdrawal of Vietminh troops and the establishment, perhaps under UN auspices of peace observation machinery which will guarantee the security and territorial integrity of these two states. (2) In Vietnam, a cease fire followed by progressive demobilization of indigenous forces and a phased withdrawal of foreign forces to specified areas and their gradual reduction. The current French concept of a cease fire first with all other military and political factors in an eventual settlement to be deferred until later, seems a highly dangerous one. (The question of the impact of a demobilization proposal in Indochina on the situation in Korea would require careful consideration, nevertheless, where, as in Vietnam, the opposing armed forces and zones of influences are inextricably mixed and confused, the urgency of demobilization immediately following a cease fire is very much greater than in Korea, where there is one accepted dividing line between the opposing forces.)

(b) On the political side, a plan for the restoration of normal conditions looking toward the holding of elections after a transitional period of perhaps three years.

(c) On the economic side, the undertaking of prompt and energetic measures for the restoration of war damaged roads, railroads, other utilities and for general reconstruction activities on a large scale. This program should be so designed as to have a major political impact.

The rationale for any plan which our side might propose would be that, in view of the eight years of civil war which have taken place, it is essential that a transition period of military deflation, political pacification and economic restoration occur before there can be envisaged the creation of a responsible representative regime for the entire area. The details of any plan would obviously have to be worked out by the French and the Vietnamese. International controls would be an essential feature. Some of the major points to be covered would be the following:

(1) Military

The cease fire should be based on the Laniel proposals of March 5 with provision for international controls, including control of the Chinese frontier. The nature of the international control mechanism, the extent to which it would include Communist and neutral representation would be delicate and difficult problems, especially in view of our Korean experience. Presumably provisions would be made for a return of all prisoners and for a general amnesty for all those on the Vietminh side guilty only of bearing arms in the rebellion. (See separate memorandum for an analysis of the Laniel proposals.)<sup>1</sup>

The cease-fire phase should be closely tied to a demobilization phase to be administered by the same apparatus of international controls as the cease fire. The stated purpose here would be to reduce the Vietnamese and the Vietminh armed forces to proportions related to the ability of the country to support them without outside help and to return to peaceful occupations the bulk of the 700,000 natives now under arms. (Taking into account the relative populations of Vietnam and of the United States, these 700,000 men in Vietnam would correspond to over five million in the United States.) The arms recovered might be held by the international control mechanism and be eventually disposed of for the benefit of the new national Vietnamese Government to be constituted at the end of the proposed period of transition. (The U.S. might, however, wish to reclaim some or all of the arms it has furnished under MDAP.)

This disarmament phase would not result in the complete disarmament of the Vietnamese National Army or of the Vietminh. It would be designed, however, to produce a situation readily controllable by the government which we recognize in the event of further Vietminh aggression.

Closely tied in with the disarmament phase would be the gradual withdrawal, under international control, of foreign forces (French expeditionary corps), to specified positions. A gradual reduction of their numbers might also be contemplated. Their definitive status would be at first as set forth in current Franco-Vietnamese agreements although in the long run the new national Government to be formed after the proposed transition period would make a definitive arrangement on this matter. At all times, these troops should continue to be available in numbers and in positions sufficient to guarantee their own safety, that of foreign residents and that of the non-Communist Vietnamese against a renewal of aggression.

(2) Political

Bao Dai's Government with French Union military help controls the key cities and some other areas of Vietnam including half the population while the other half is controlled by Ho Chi Minh's Government and its indigenous forces. Ho's Government is recognized by Peking, Moscow and presumably by a number of the satellites. In view of the present equilibrium of military and political forces in the area, it is hard to conceive of an arrangement under which Ho would straightway relinquish his political control to Bao Dai. In fact, the essence of Ho's position has been one of willingness to negotiate a cease fire and a withdrawal of foreign forces with the French while at the same time he has completely ignored Bao Dai and his government.

Since the military and political situation of Bao Dai's Government is inferior, comparatively speaking, to that of Syngman Rhee's, it is probably not feasible, no matter how desirable it would be, to include, in the proposal to be made by our side (except perhaps as an initial bargaining position), a complete submission to Bao Dai's regime on the part of Ho and his supporters. In fact, the acceptance of a cease fire in the absence of complete surrender would probably presuppose the continued existence of the Ho regime during the ensuing transitional phase.

It is probable therefore that the relative positions of the two governments, complicated as they are by the absence of any frontiers between their two jurisdictions which in fact overlap and fluctuate, will have to be continued (in the absence of complete victory for our side) with all the attendant disadvantages through a transitional period. This would, however, be preferable to the immediate formation of a single government through elections or a coalition, an eventuality which most observers believe would be highly favorable to the Communists.

While neither government would be required to recognize the other during the transitional period, it is clear that some sort of an arrangement for an allocation of territory, perhaps based roughly on the cease fire disposition, would have to be worked out. As the disarmament and demobilization of native forces as described above was being carried out, it would be desirable, also under international control, to provide for a gradual restoration of freedom of the legal movement of people and goods throughout the country.

The culmination of this period of political reconstruction would be the holding of nation-wide elections to an assembly which would draw up a definitive constitution for Vietnam. A date for such elections (July 1st, 1957) might be announced at the outset of the transitional period. The elections themselves should be under international supervision. They would result in the creation of a single government for the entire country. Even with the safeguards and delays contemplated, an appreciable number of Communists and anti-free world elements would presumably be elected although it is to be hoped they would be a manageable fraction of the total.

(3) Economic

An important part of our proposal would be an economic restoration program designed to have the greatest possible popular impact. France and the U.S., as well as the Government of Vietnam, might effectively announce a willingness to devote a substantial portion of the money they are now spending on fighting the war to the intensive reconstruction of Vietnam. In those parts of the country controlled by Bao Dai's Government this program could be conducted directly by France and the U.S.; in other areas, provisions for international control and supervision could be worked out. Such a program, which would cover a period of years, perhaps as much as ten years, could if successfully devised and initiated, be a major factor in ensuring that the proposed elections returned a majority favoring a free world, Western orientation rather than one wishing membership in a Communist Chinese satellite system.

The initial purpose of this program would be to restore the roads, railroads and communications as a prerequisite to the reunification of Vietnam after the interruption of eight years of civil war.

Subject: The Nehru Proposal on Indochina <sup>1</sup>

Substance of Proposal

Nehru, speaking in the House of People on April 24, made a proposal with regard to Indochina as follows:

1. A climate of peace has to be promoted and the atmosphere of threats that prevails ought to be dissipated. To this end the government of India appeals to all concerned to desist from threats and to the combatants to refrain from stepping up the tempo of the war.

2. The item of a cease-fire should be given priority on the Indochina conference agenda. The cease-fire group should consist of the actual belligerents, that is, France, the three Associated States, and the Vietminh.

3. The Conference should decide to proclaim that the essential solution to the conflict is the complete independence of Indochina and that termination of French sovereignty should be placed beyond all doubt by an unequivocal commitment by the Government of France.

4. The Conference should initiate negotiations between the parties directly and principally concerned and should give them all possible assistance. Such direct negotiations would assist in keeping the Indochina question limited to the issues which concern and involve Indochina directly. These parties would be the same as would constitute the cease-fire group.

5. A solemn agreement of non-intervention, denying aid direct or indirect with troops or war material to the combatants for purposes of war, to which the United States, Soviet Union, United Kingdom and China shall be the primary parties, should be brought about by the Conference. The United Nations, to which the decision of the Conference shall be reported, shall be requested to formulate the convention of non-intervention in Indochina embodying the aforesaid agreement and including provisions for its enforcement under United Nations auspices. Other states should be invited by the United Nations to adhere to this convention of non-intervention.

6. Nehru stated that the United Nations should be informed of the progress of the Conference.

Analysis of Proposal

a. The Indian proposal does not provide for any particular type of political settlement to follow a cease-fire. At Colombo Nehru has said that he carefully avoided saying to whom and in what form French sovereignty should be transferred, feeling that this should be left for negotiation among the parties concerned.<sup>2</sup>

b. The Indian proposal is ambiguous as to whether the "Conference" on Indochina should be conducted at Geneva or separately from the Geneva Conference. Nehru, at Colombo, has said that he was not advocating that a settlement in Indochina should be completely divorced from the Geneva Conference but that he visualized the machinery for direct negotiation between the belligerents as being a sort of subcommittee of the Geneva Conference.

c. The Indian proposal pointedly excludes both the United States and Communist China as parties at interest in negotiations for an Indochina settlement. Nehru rationalizes this on the grounds that only by limiting participation to actual belligerents can the Indochina issue be separated out from other Far Eastern issues. Nehru thus arrives at a recommendation for direct negotiations between the French and the Vietminh which has been repeatedly urged by the Russians and the French Communists for some time.

d. A primary element of the Indian proposal is that there should be an immediate cease-fire. According to the proposal this cease-fire should be arranged by the actual belligerents as a matter of priority. In this respect Nehru also echoes earlier Communist recommendations. He does not, however, call for immediate withdrawal of French troops, an item which has hitherto been a constant element in Communist propaganda. The Indian proposal does not provide for any external enforcement of a cease-fire.

e. Another primary element of the Indian proposal is the advocacy of agreement by the U.S., USSR, UK and Communist China to abstain from intervention in Indochina or from rendering any help of a military nature to any of the belligerents. The proposal does provide that this agreement should be enforced by the UN.

Disadvantages of the Indian Proposal

The Indian proposal has been picked up by parts of both the British and French press and will probably have to be dealt with in some form at Geneva. From the U.S. point of view it has the following disadvantages:

a. Given the obvious eagerness of the French to reach some sort of an agreement and the disinclination of the French to reckon the costs too carefully, exclusion of the U.S. from negotiations for an Indochina settlement would undoubtedly tend to weaken the Western position in the negotiations. On the other hand, since the Vietminh are apt to be more interested in immediate complete victory than either the Russians or the Chinese exclusion of the other Communists from the negotiations would tend to harden the Communist negotiating position.

b. An immediate cease-fire, without any agreed terms for a political settlement, would redound greatly to Communist advantage. The local population would understand this to be a clear victory for the Vietminh and a signal that the Communists were about to achieve political control. Accordingly such local support as the French now have would quickly disintegrate. The French would be in no position to renew hostilities again, even in the face of utmost recalcitrance on the part of the Communists in political negotiations.

c. The absence of any provisions for enforcement of a cease-fire would also work to the advantage of the Communists. The French, being so inclined, would probably observe an agreement fairly strictly, while the Communists would undoubtedly continue to exert forceful measures, if not against the French, at least against the local population.

d. The provisions for a cessation of all outside military assistance would clearly be disadvantageous to the U.S. and the French. The French Union forces depend completely on U.S. military assistance and would be drastically weakened by its cessation. Although the Vietminh are importantly assisted by Chinese Communist matériel, the quantity does not compare with what the U.S. is providing the French, the Vietminh are not nearly as dependent on outside assistance as are the French, and in any case, on the basis of Korean experience, there could be no expectation that Chinese Communist assistance would in fact cease, regardless of any UN enforcement machinery.

In sum the Indian proposal picks up those items of the Communist position—direct negotiation, cease-fire, and non-intervention—which have a dangerous appeal to the French public, and which in themselves would be damaging to the Western position, and neglects any of the safeguards—political settlement, and controls—which might be calculated to make the non-Communist position in Indochina tenable.

We have not entered into any new political or military commitments. My right hon. of Communist uncertainty as to possible Western intentions. Premature publication of Bao Dai's willingness to attend had incidentally further removed any possibility of bargaining with Viet Minh on their participation. He felt he had little solid support at home.

As things now stood, he saw nothing to prevent a Communist victory throughout whole area. There was nothing to stop or moderate them. If this disaster happened, effects would not be limited to Indochina or even to EDC but would threaten whole NATO structure. Next French Government would give lip service to NATO but no more and might not even give that very long. He was going to Paris Tuesday<sup>4</sup> to appear before the Assembly but would refuse to answer any questions and state merely that they could either express confidence in him or remove him as Foreign Minister.

I said that as far as US was concerned, situation would not be finalized until after I returned. I was not without hope that UK could be brought with others into discussions which would at least revive Communist doubts as to Western intentions. Also, I said I was not confident that the military had completely exhausted the possibilities in the situation. They did not seem to me to be very ingenious. Something might be done short of total surrender to get the war on to a basis which would reduce expenditure of French manpower and not involve bringing in US and UK manpower, by permitting certain positions to be held and indigenous people to be trained to resume the struggle. Bidault said this thinking was not without merit.

After Bidault's departure, I told Eden I thought we should at least announce the beginning of discussions on what would be done if the conference failed to produce a satisfactory solution. He reacted rather negatively, but said he would think about it.

GENEVA, May 1, 1954.

Participants:

France	US	UK
Mr. Bidault	Secretary Dulles	Mr. Eden
Mr. Chauvel	General Smith	Lord Reading
	Mr. MacArthur	Mr. Shuckburgh

Time: 12:15 p. m., May 1, 1954

Place: Bidault's Residence, Joli-Port, in Versoix

The Secretary opened the discussion by outlining his talk with Molotov this morning on the peaceful uses of atomic energy. After giving them a full account of his talk with Molotov this morning, the Secretary read to Messrs. Eden and Bidault the paper which he had read to Molotov this morning. Both Eden and Bidault asked if they could have copies, and the Secretary said that he had only his reading copy with him but would send them copies.<sup>1</sup>

Mr. Bidault then said that Molotov has something on his mind. When Bidault saw Molotov yesterday, Molotov asked him when he (Bidault) was leaving. Mr. Bidault replied that he probably would be going to Paris sometime Monday<sup>2</sup> evening so that he could be there when the Assembly reconvenes on Tuesday, but would of course be returning to Geneva. Molotov had then said that Secretary Dulles was leaving on Monday and complained that this was supposed to be a Foreign Ministers meeting. Mr. Bidault said that in his judgment Molotov thinks that his only peer and equal is the Secretary, and he is probably saying to himself, "How can I stay on with inferiors when my only equal, the American Secretary of State, is leaving?" Mr. Bidault said that Molotov does have a problem of how long he remains in Geneva in the form of Chou En-lai. However, he felt Molotov's unhappiness about Secretary Dulles' leaving was because

Molotov "does not like to negotiate with persons whom he considers inferior in status to himself".

Mr. Bidault then said to the Secretary that he had sent the new note to Bao Dai regarding Vietnam participation at the Geneva Conference and that the original letter which he, Eden, and the Secretary had signed had been retrieved.<sup>3</sup> He said that Bao Dai's Foreign Minister would be arriving at the Swiss frontier at about 2:30 or three o'clock this afternoon with, he understood, Bao Dai's approval for the Vietnamese to participate in the Geneva Conference even if the Vietminh is present.

Mr. Bidault then said that it was important to try to get the Indochina phase of the conference started on Monday or Tuesday. With Bao Dai's approval of Vietminh participation, either he (Bidault) would approach Molotov today, or Chauvel would see Gromyko, to inform them that the Vietnamese accepted Vietminh participation. Mr. Bidault said that it was Molotov's turn to come and see him, but he was somewhat reluctant to ask him to come to see him so quickly. The Secretary asked Bidault if he meant that he might invite Molotov to dinner tonight, and Mr. Bidault replied that he would not invite him because it was too soon after Molotov's dinner for him. If he invited Molotov tonight, Molotov would invite him back tomorrow for another meal, and he did not wish to get involved with him in too many bilateral dinners.

Mr. Bidault said that when they communicated Bao Dai's positive reply to Molotov later today, two questions would come almost at once. The first was chairmanship of the Indochina phase and the second was composition. Regarding chairmanship, Mr. Bidault hazarded that Molotov might propose an Indian chairman, and would probably have in mind Krishna Menon. After some discussion, it was agreed that India would be very unsuitable under almost any circumstances, although Mr. Bidault said that Madame Pandit would not make a bad chairman, if it was to be an Indian. However, he reiterated that India was unsuitable. Mr. Bidault said that the only chairman of the three rotating chairmen of the Conference that might be acceptable would be Eden. Mr. Eden immediately interjected saying that he really did not want to be the chairman. He had thought about suggesting the idea of having Mike Pearson<sup>4</sup> as permanent chairman for the Indochina phase but if this were done Molotov would immediately reply that this was an Asiatic conference and would then probably suggest an Asian, such as Krishna Menon. Mr. Eden said another possibility which had occurred to him was to ask the chairman of the Colombo

Conference (the Prime Minister of Ceylon)<sup>5</sup> to chair the meeting. Secretary Dulles said he did not see why the present three chairmen could not continue for the Indochina phase. He had worded his proposal for chairmanship carefully so that it could be construed that the three present rotating chairmen were chairmen of the conference rather than just of the Korean phase. Mr. Bidault and Mr. Eden were both enthusiastic and said this was a good idea. They had not been aware of the way the Secretary's proposal, which the conference had accepted, had been worded.

Mr. Bidault said that Molotov had suggested that "the two permanent chairmen" chair the Indochina phase. This meant the UK and the USSR. He was not happy about this idea as he did not like the thought of having the chairmen rotate on a 50-50 basis. He mentioned preferring the two-for-one basis which would result if the present chairmen were continued. Mr. Eden became somewhat confused and raised a question as to Prince Wan's continuing as one of the rotating chairmen if Thailand was not a participant. The Secretary pointed out that Eden's proposal for the chairman of the Colombo Conference to chair the Indochina phase called for an outsider whose country would not participate in the discussions. With respect to chairmanship, it was agreed that when the French see the Russians later today, they would put forward the position that the three present rotating chairmen should continue. If the Russians refused this, consideration should be given to having a single chairman, but no definite agreement on who that chairman should be was reached. The Prime Minister of Ceylon as chairman of the Colombo Conference was a possibility which should be kept in mind. It was also agreed that Prince Wan or Mike Pearson would be acceptable in the role of a single chairman.

The discussion then turned to composition of the Indochina phase of the conference, and it was agreed that Bidault would stand fast on the proposal that there be 9 participants (US, UK, France, USSR, Communist China, the three Associated States, and the Vietminh). It was agreed that this should be the initial composition of the conference, although the possibility was not excluded that this group might add additional members later. However, for the purposes of the French discussion with Molotov later today, the French should stand on the nine.

Mr. Bidault then inquired what the purpose of this afternoon's restricted meeting on Korea at 3:30 p. m. was.<sup>6</sup> The Secretary explained that he planned to table a paper containing four points which were

1. Elections to be under UN auspices
2. The scope and character of the elections

<sup>6</sup> For a summary of the meeting, see telegram Secto 69, May 2, p. 174.

3. Disposition of foreign troops

4. Provision to protect Korean independence, including demilitarized border areas.

The Secretary indicated that he did not expect there would be substantive discussion this afternoon of these points and believed that the discussion this afternoon would cover the procedural aspect of how the conference would deal with such points. For example, should they be discussed in plenary or restricted sessions, etc.

At the conclusion of the meeting, Mr. Bidault said that he would endeavor to get Molotov's acceptance today that there should be 9 participants for the Indochina phase which had been agreed above and that the present chairmen should continue to chair the Indochina discussions. He promised to keep both the Secretary and Mr. Eden fully informed. The Secretary and Mr. Eden indicated approval of this position, and the Secretary said that while we recognized that France had primary responsibility in connection with the Indochina discussions, the US would find it very difficult to accept an Indian chairman such as Krishna Menon. Mr. Bidault reiterated that an Indian chairman would certainly not do, although if deadlock were reached on the Western proposal for the present chairmen to continue, there was merit in having an outside chairman, such as the Prime Minister of Ceylon or Prince Wan or Mike Pearson. Mr. Bidault concluded by saying that he did not exclude the possibility that Molotov might even suggest that France and Communist China alternate in the chair for the Indochina discussions or that even the Vietnamese and Vietminh alternate the chair. This was just a possibility which had occurred to him while the present discussion was going on and one that possibly might be put forward by the Soviets.

Subject: U.S. Participation in an Unsatisfactory Indochina Settlement

If negotiations on Indochina reach a point where it is clear that the French are willing to enter into arrangements which are going to be unsatisfactory from the U.S. point of view, and if at that time the U.S. concludes that it does not have sufficient leverage to prevent the French from concluding such an agreement, the U.S. will have to decide whether it should at that time disassociate itself from the negotiations or continue to be a party to them. Such a decision would obviously have important U.S. domestic political implications. The following analysis, however, does not deal with domestic U.S. political aspects.

Disadvantages of U.S. Participation

1. U.S. participation in an unsatisfactory Indochina settlement will be taken as evidence throughout Asia and the rest of the world that the U.S. has in effect backed down in the face of the Communist threat in a critically important area. As a result there will be an unavoidable loss of U.S. prestige.

2. U.S. acquiescence to and participation in an unsatisfactory settlement will probably have particularly acute effects on U.S. prestige in the remainder of Southeast Asia—notably in Thailand. The Thais may well feel that the U.S. has marched up the hill and back again on the question of Indochina, and be tempted to believe that the U.S. would behave in similar fashion if a showdown came with respect to Thailand. Consequently the value of U.S. promises of protection and assistance may be severely depreciated in Siamese eyes.

3. U.S. readiness to participate in an unsatisfactory settlement might amount to relinquishment of the last available card that the U.S. has to play against French acceptance of such a settlement—French fear of provoking a profound breach between France and the United States.

Advantages of U.S. Participation

1. U.S. participation in negotiation of a settlement would keep the U.S. in a better position to play off the Associated States against the French, to stimulate the Communists to overreaching themselves, and in general to attempt to whittle down the degree of unacceptability of an Indochina settlement.

2. U.S. participation in an Indochina settlement, despite the undoubted loss of prestige involved, would place the U.S. in a better position to insert itself into the protection and shoring up of whatever remained of a Western position in Indochina and Southeast Asia after an unsatisfactory settlement. This would be particularly true in the case of a settlement involving territorial partition.

3. U.S. participation in an unsatisfactory Indochina settlement would assist in dispelling that fear of U.S. intransigence and suspicion of U.S. eagerness for drastic action against Communist China which has quite evidently contributed to present U.S. difficulties both with its Allies and with the neutralist countries.

4. U.S. participation in a settlement would lessen the possibilities of a severe breach between the U.S. on the one hand and the British and the French on the other, and would make more promising the possibilities of united action to counter the damaging effects of the settlement in Southeast Asia, as well as improve prospects for Allied cooperation in Europe.

Conclusion

Unless there are good grounds for estimating that a U.S. threat to withdraw from the negotiations would in fact have the effect of preventing French acceptance of an unsatisfactory settlement, it would seem, on balance, that it would be in the U.S. interest to stay with the negotiations whatever might be the outcome.

Subject: The Indochina Phase of the Conference

1. Participation

At Bidault's meeting with Molotov on April 27,<sup>2</sup> there appeared to be agreement that the participants—at least in the first instance—should be: The U.S., U.K., USSR, France, the Associated States, Communist China and Viet Minh. Bao Dai's acceptance of the second letter<sup>3</sup> would seem to pave the way for an invitation from the French to the 3 Associated States.

<sup>3</sup> For an informal translation of the letter to Bao Dai, see footnote 1, p. 620.

Recommendations:

(1) That the U.S. position on participation be that the 9 Powers listed above should be the only participants.

(2) That invitations shall be extended to the Associated States by France and to the Viet Minh by the USSR.

(3) That we absolutely reject any attempt by the Soviets to include their puppet regimes in Laos and Cambodia.

(4) If the Soviets insist on the participation of India, Indonesia and Burma (or any combination thereof), we should insist on having Thailand, Philippines and Australia.

If it seems tactically wise in order to settle the question to have one state from each group included, we should accept Burma and Thailand on the limitrophe principle.

2. Opening Date of the Indochina Phase

While we should not be in the position of attempting to delay the Indochina Phase of the Conference, it is recommended that the Indochina discussions not begin before Monday, May 10 in order to avoid conflict with next week's Korean sessions.

3. Chairmanship

If the participants are limited to the 9 listed above, it is recommended that our position on chairmanship be that the chair be rotated by the U.K. and the USSR. If Thailand is included as a participant in the Indochina Phase then our position should be that the chairmanship follow the procedure of the Korean Phase, rotating among the U.K., Thailand and the USSR.

4. Seating

It is recommended that once the participants are finally decided upon, the French Deputy Secretary-General of the Allied Secretariat take the initiative in working out with his Soviet counterpart an auditorium-type seating plan similar to the one now in use for the Korean Phase.<sup>4</sup>

5. Languages

As a practical matter we see no alternative to French, English, Russian and Chinese (the Associated States will use French and the Viet Minh will use Chinese) as the official language for the Indochina Phase.

This has the disadvantage of having only the languages of the Berlin Powers plus Communist China.

<sup>4</sup> Handwritten notation by Johnson to paragraph 4: "The Secretary believes we need not be rigid on this point. With only 9 a table arrangement would be practicable. Chauvel told me tonight they were thinking of an individual desk arrangement in an ellipse. I said would be OK with us. U. A. J."

6. Secretariat

It is recommended that the Secretariat organization and procedures now in use for the Korean Phase be continued throughout the Conference, except for appropriate modifications in the cost-sharing formula.

We plan to resume on Monday Tripartite discussions with the British and French on the Indochina Phase of the Conference.

GENEVA, May 1, 1954—6 p. m.

Secto 67. Repeated information London 105. British tell us that at Molotov's luncheon yesterday for Eden and Chou En-lai, host raised no question of substance but seemed interested rather in encouraging cordiality between his guests. Chou said he would like to see better relations with UK. Eden replied relations were two-way street, that Britain had recognized Communist China but that latter seemed reluctant to recognize Britain. Chou dwelt on theme that China under Peking Government was world factor which could not be ignored and was being unrightfully deprived of its position as member of UN. Eden said that this was question quite apart from subject under consideration at Geneva and he did not wish to discuss it.

GENEVA, May 2, 1954—8 p. m.

Dulte 42. Repeated information London 107. Limit distribution. London eyes only Ambassador. After Palais meeting yesterday, I asked Eden if British would not reconsider decision and agree now to participate in ad hoc group of ten, informal talks starting promptly in Washington. I told him of Bidault's press conference with selected group Americans previous evening, of which he was uninformed. I stressed that as matters stood, French literally had no alternative to disguised surrender. Eden indicated he would give matter thought, but closed conversation with remark he had congenital dislike for giving public impression of talking about something which he was not prepared to do, i.e., intervene militarily in Indochina.

After dinner I gave last night for Eden, General Smith<sup>1</sup> and I hit Eden (with Reading present) again on this subject. I made point we were seeking some form military support of French in Indochina which would reduce drain on French manpower without calling for replacement by Allied ground forces. I said I did not believe this was beyond the military wit to devise. I then said what we sought was British support and if military support was not available then at least moral support in the common endeavor to prevent loss all of Indochina. Failure of British to rally to our side would almost certainly produce consequences extending beyond that area. Between General Smith and myself, I believe we gave Eden far clearer detailed picture of our intent and purposes than he had had before. I feel that Eden was definitely impressed and during course of prolonged conversation indicated he recognized distinction between fighting in Vietnam on one hand and aggression against Laos and Cambodia on the other. He also tentatively indicated willingness join coalition which would fight external aggression in area to include Thailand and Burma (which he was hopeful being able persuade to join) as well as Malaya.

The Ambassador in Australia (Peaslee) to the Department of State

CANBERRA, May 1, 1954—11 p. m.

251. Sent USDel Geneva unnumbered. Limit distribution. Following reports interview with Prime Minister Menzies at Canberra Embassy residence Friday evening, April 30, 1800 to 1915 hours Canberra time, at his request, related in approximate chronological sequence of statements for your appraisal.

Principal points are first, Prime Minister statement re Casey's advocacy of general Korean elections, second consideration which Prime Minister gave to himself leading the Australian delegation at Geneva, and, third Prime Minister opposition to any thought of territorial concessions in SEA.

Prime Minister's request for interview was first since our conferences April 5-11, reported Embtels 210, 213, 215, 217, 218 and despatch 343 April 13.<sup>1</sup> Conference was on eve of Prime Minister's departure from Canberra for election campaign. I assumed it was for purpose of friendly explanation some Australian current press speculations re UK, Australia, and US lack of complete agreement. After preliminaries he launched into sub SEA crisis. He said government profoundly appreciated importance of Geneva conference to Australia future but that pendency of general election embarrassed it respecting any major moves in international affairs. Said the election foreclosed move which he might otherwise have taken if himself heading the Australian delegation to Geneva, in which case he would have requested "Winston" to go and would have hoped President Eisenhower might have considered it.

He then described several recent conferences with UK High Commissioner in which High Commissioner had complained about Australian press suggesting Australia not following UK, to which Prime Minister said he replied that Australia was not an authoritarian state and did not control its press but pointed he had already made a statement deploring suggestions of any rift between UK and US which he said still did not seem to satisfy High Commissioner.

Re Indochina, Prime Minister then said "of course the people have to be prepared for these things. If US and UK and Australia should invade Indochina now neither the white nor the yellow people would understand us." He referred to division of opinion in US as well as elsewhere. He said it was obviously important to get other countries associated, mentioning particularly Thailand and Burma.

I told him of UK High Commissioner's conversations with me April 11, reported despatch 343 April 13, in which High Commissioner had referred to UK thought of making some territorial concessions in Indochina. At this Prime Minister declared emphatically his "personal, unalterable opposition to anything of that kind." He referred rhetorically to the obvious desirability if it were possible of drawing line between those who really want to be Communists and those who do not, but indicated that this was not feasible geographically.

I then referred to brief Australian press statements which had just appeared suggesting possible Casey-Dulles divergence re Korean elections, saying I knew nothing except press reports and was not disturbed. Prime Minister replied knew nothing but press reports either but that press always gave only half story and that he assumed, interpolating with some emphasis "unless Casey is completely deviating from Cabinet policy," that what Casey had said was that "of course everybody would be glad to see such general elections if that would bring a solution to the problem" and that Casey had then gone on to point out obstacles and difficulties.

I referred to other press reports that Casey will return shortly to Australia and that there may be further Cabinet discussions and asked whether Casey was needed generally in election campaign. He replied Casey not needed but if does not participate he might lose in his district.

In course of foregoing discussions Prime Minister referred to UK leadership difficulties "Winston's failing health" and "Eden's demonstrated incapacity for getting along with his US opposite numbers, including both Acheson and Dulles," according to the Prime Minister.

There was also discussion of possible future role of Prime Minister personally in international discussions after election if government returned. Prime Minister said his personal acquaintance our President only one short interview.

There are some indications of confusion in Australian press re Casey's Geneva speech.<sup>2</sup> Today's Sydney Telegraph, for example, sets forth as contrasting parallel columns Reuter dispatch headed "Reuter says the speech was part of a British Commonwealth bid to change tactics at the talks" and the other column headed "Rohan Rivett asks, is Australia's role simply that of a supporter and echo of Washington?"

Consul General Stebbins, Melbourne, reports recent talk with Cabinet member Kent-Hughes (which parallels similar information are [of?] other Cabinet members) in which Kent-Hughes said Dulles position on Indochina expressed exactly his own point of view, though he felt US had been somewhat late in realizing seriousness of situation.

Memorandum by the Special Adviser to the United States Delegation (Bowie) to the Secretary of State

GENEVA, May 2, 1954.

Regardless of how things develop in Indochina, one of our primary objectives is to protect and preserve as much of the area as feasible. In particular, it is highly desirable to prevent any debacle in Vietnam from spreading to Cambodia and Laos. One device for this purpose might be the designation by the UN of a peace observation commission for Cambodia and Laos which might serve to block Vietminh invasion of those two states. Moreover, if Asians such as India, Pakistan, or Burma could be named for such a commission, this would tend to engage them, at least to this extent, in shoring up the area.

This approach would be especially useful if the French decide to give up some or all of Vietnam. But it would not seem to be prejudicial even if the defense of Vietnam can be kept going.

To take this step would presumably require action by Cambodia and Laos with the approval of the French. The events of the past few weeks may have changed the attitude of the French on such a proposal. It is hard to see how they can properly object under present conditions.

ACTIONS TO PREPARE FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF ALTERNATIVE U.S. POLICIES IN INDOCHINA

Problem

Consideration is herewith given to those actions which the U.S.:

(a) should take to strengthen its position in Southeast Asia before resolving the question of whether it would, if necessary, be prepared to commit its forces to prevent Indochina from succumbing to communism;

(b) should not take, until this question has been resolved, at least tentatively or conditionally, and whose nature will depend on that resolution.

Discussion

The present position is obscure, since it is not known what course the French will adopt after the probable fall of Dien Bien Phu. It is unknown to what extent the French will desire and be able to continue resistance in Indochina and whether hostilities may not be terminated by a cease fire and the eventual partition of Indochina at the Geneva Conference.

The French have asked for immediate and direct U.S. air intervention to save Dien Bien Phu. This has been rejected by the U.S. on grounds that constitutional procedure prevents the U.S. from entering into a state of belligerency in the present case without congressional approval. The French were further informed that the Administration would not be able to seek such authorization until plans had been developed for Indochina's defense by united action.

The Secretary in his background press conference at Geneva April 25<sup>2</sup> stated that the U.S. is assisting the French in Indochina by all feasible means short of belligerent action. The Secretary seemed to have intended to imply that the U.S. would continue with such assistance by special measures, such as the airlift from France, over and beyond the aid agreement concluded last September.

The proposal that the U.S., U.K., Australia, New Zealand and Thailand hold secret military talks to devise measures to bolster Thailand's defense if French resistance should collapse in Indochina has been shelved for the reason that it would produce an adverse reaction on the French if it became known.<sup>3</sup> It is now proposed instead that the present Five Power Military Staff Planning Organization (U.S., U.K., France, Australia and New Zealand) meet in Bangkok, with Thai representation, to engage in planning which will include measures for a defense of Indochina also.

Nehru has indicated that he will oppose the U.S. proposal for united action for Asian defense and he has suggested instead that the countries participating in the Ceylon meeting opening April 28 put forward a plan for a cease fire in Indochina as a preliminary to a solution for the independence of all of Indochina and which would be guaranteed against outside interference.<sup>4</sup> Nehru apparently envisaged prohibiting intervention by the U.S. and Red China but seemed not to have excluded further French action, on the presumption that the French had committed themselves to Indochina's independence.

Initial Measures Required

Lacking the certainty that the French will maintain their stand in Indochina, the measures suggested in paragraph (a) of the problem statement should initially be of an immediate and contingent nature designed to do the utmost to ensure that the French will keep up their resistance. They should take the following form :

(1) The U.S. should insist with the French that the grant of sovereignty to the Associated States involves a commitment to defend the integrity of these States.

(2) Extraordinary aid short of belligerency should be continued and the British should be urged to participate.

(3) As a first step towards implementing the concept of united action, an effort should be made to obtain commitments from as many free world states in the area as feasible that they support independence for the Associated States and the maintenance of that independence against threats from any outside quarter.

(4) Voluntary contributions should be requested from the interested countries in support of the extraordinary assistance which the U.S. is furnishing the French short of belligerent action.

(5) To match any increase in effective assistance supplied by the above means, the French should be urged to send conscript levies to Indochina.

<sup>4</sup> Prime Minister Nehru's proposals made on Apr. 24 were transmitted to the Department of State in telegram 1596 from New Delhi, Apr. 25; see volume XIII.

(6) Common negotiating position vis-à-vis the communists should be developed which would envisage an ultimate solution safeguarding the southern frontier of Red China by the possible establishment of a neutral zone to be placed under the control of a UN peace observation committee. This would cut off further intervention by Red China and at the same time would assure world opinion that united action was aimed to protect Indochina and not to overthrow the Peking Regime.

(7) United action support should be given to Thailand for the building up of its defenses as a precautionary measure.

The Secretary opened the meeting stating that he had asked his Australian and New Zealand colleagues to meet with him under the terms of reference of the ANZUS Pact which provide for such consultation when any part of the area is threatened. The Secretary said he felt the situation in Southeast Asia was such that it required consultation as called for in the ANZUS Pact. Furthermore, since all three Ministers were present in Geneva, he thought it would be useful to exchange views again, especially since the present situation requires a broad unified front.<sup>2</sup> He said he had discussed the situation with the Philippines under the terms of our pact with them and also with the French and the Associated States, and with the United Kingdom because of her interest in Malaya. He said that he had also talked with the Thais, and because of their special concern had held military conversations with them in Washington. Finally, he had talked on the general subject of the Southeast Asian situation with the Ambassadors of India, Pakistan, Burma, Indonesia, Ceylon, Japan, Nationalist China and the Republic of Korea. Conversations with the latter group of Ambassadors in Washington had been merely for the purpose of keeping them informed.

The Secretary continued saying that the present situation was due in large part to the lack of any strong French Government, and the French failure to put the situation on a sound basis politically in Indochina earlier. He noted that for the Western powers to appear to be engaged in Southeast Asia in helping France preserve a colonial regime would certainly not win us support from the Asian states. The Secretary said he was, however, fully aware of the problem in France where public opinion insisted that the French effort in Indochina be in support of the French Union, and pointed out it was somewhat difficult to reconcile full independence with the French Union concept. He added the French had made some progress along the lines of the British Commonwealth although their concept was not quite so liberal. He said that the Governments of the Associated States were feeble, and that Bao Dai and the King of Cambodia had hardly demonstrated qualities that would make people enthusiastic about dying for them.

The Secretary continued that some progress on achieving a united front in Southeast Asia had been made, but the situation remained unsatisfactory. He stressed that the peoples of the area were uncertain as to what issues were involved, and that it was difficult to obtain their support until the issues had been made clearer.

The Secretary then passed to the question of United States aid which he said had been enormous, and had stopped short only of acts which we felt could be considered as open belligerency. He said we could not pass to actions of this type without Congressional approval, and that it was undesirable to request such action from Congress when fundamental questions remained unanswered.

The Secretary stated that Bidault was extremely disheartened, felt that he had no remaining assets and was ready for virtual unconditional surrender. He continued that no one had yet devised any compromise that would save the situation. Partition is undesirable because it would be followed by large scale Communist infiltration south of any line that might be drawn, and furthermore the situation was unlike that in Korea because the Communists were all over the country. The solution of the problem of how to keep the south non-Communist in the event of partition had not been answered. If elections were held now the Communists would probably win, and in any event it was difficult to envisage holding elections under present circumstances, and finally, if a coalition government were established, the Communists would probably quickly take it over. Therefore our negotiating position is not encouraging. In conclusion the Secretary asked his colleagues for their thoughts on the problem.

The Foreign Minister of Australia said that his thoughts were largely negative ones, but he doubted very much whether we could hold Indochina, or any of Southeast Asia, by military means without the support of the Asian countries concerned. He noted efforts had been made by the United Kingdom to make sure no damaging resolutions on the subject emerged from the Colombo Conference. Mr. Casey continued that it was absolutely essential to avoid war with Communist China since such a war would be long and terrible and the outcome was uncertain.

Mr. Casey continued recognizing the importance of United States aid to Indochina and said that the French greatly appreciated this aid and had spontaneously mentioned it to him. However, he said this was not in itself a solution. He said he saw some signs that the military situation would not develop so rapidly or so disastrously as we had feared. Dien Bien Phu might not fall, and in any event we tended to overlook the disabilities of the other side, such as the fact that the monsoon season was starting, the Communists had suffered heavy losses at Dien Bien Phu, and they would be exhausted perhaps even if it did fall.

The Australian Foreign Minister stressed no military action should be envisaged in any event during the Geneva Conference since this could be most damaging in Asian public opinion. He expressed the view that perhaps the UN should participate in the Southeast Asian problem, but did not have any specific ideas as to how this might be brought about. He mentioned Australia had already agreed to talks looking toward common action in Southeast Asia but warned the forthcoming Australian elections inhibited his Government from taking any positive action at this time. He said it would be quite wrong to commit Australia now since the Government might change in a few weeks.

He continued saying that Australia was inclined to give Geneva a chance to reach a solution during the next few weeks and that we should see if anything came out of it. He mentioned talks were going on behind closed doors, not with the other side however, regarding partition. He said he agreed with the Secretary's analysis of the disadvantages of partition. He noted furthermore that Bao Dai was opposed to partition and that the other Asian states feared it, though militarily partition at the 18th parallel might be feasible. He added possibly an alliance in the Southeast Asia area was the only answer, but stressed such a grouping should have all possible Asian participation, while we must watch very closely the colonial issue which he knew was important in the United States, and was heavily stressed in the area.

Mr. Casey said he would see Mohammed Ali and Zafrullah Khan in Karachi on Tuesday and would talk to them along these lines as he already had with Eden. He said Ceylon might give us at least moral support, and that even in Burma the situation might not be hopeless, particularly if Ceylon should participate. He mentioned Siam had already joined in, but concluded that it would be undesirable to try to get Indonesia because that would raise the Dutch problem. He concluded if his party won the elections, Australia would take a much more positive position in this field.

The Foreign Minister of New Zealand said his delegation had been going around in circles on this problem without coming up with any answers. He said New Zealand had no enthusiasm for going into the Indochina war since it was the view of his Government the problem derived to a very large extent from French failure to grant independence to the Associated States at the proper time, as a result of which the latter were demanding much more now than they would have been satisfied with a few years ago. He said that much as we dislike Communism we were now in a difficult position because the Communists had been handed an issue on a platter by the French.

He said New Zealand could, in any event, give very little material assistance, but would not give even moral support while the Geneva Conference was in session. He said the reaction to common action outside the framework of the UN would be bad, especially with the Asians. Therefore it would be better to have the Indochina problem introduced initially into the UN. He said common action would, of course, be vetoed by the Soviets in the Security Council but that he thought the General Assembly would approve some sort of collective measures. He said that this might be the quickest way to get action anyway and such an exercise would have to be attempted before New Zealand could consider coming in.

Discussing the various alternatives Mr. Webb said it is true it would be very difficult to hold elections now and perhaps the possibility of holding a line following partition might represent the best prospect. He also noted the military situation was not too bad. Dien Bien Phu appeared to be holding out fairly firmly, and not just because the Communists were refraining from taking it for political reasons. He noted the Communists also had suffered considerably, and we should not underestimate their losses. Mr. Webb said Molotov was not keen apparently for Communist Chinese intervention in Indochina so perhaps there was some prospect for negotiations. In any event he thought negotiations should be attempted before there was any thought of military action. He added he presumed common action in Indochina would require French consent and for reasons of pride and prestige so far France had not asked for any such assistance.

In conclusion he said that New Zealand recognized her responsibilities in the area so she would join in talks looking toward a defensive alliance of the area, but stressed it was essential to keep the South Asian countries at least neutral and if possible to try to get them on our side. He concluded with an appeal for caution.

The Under Secretary then referred to recent NSC consideration of the Indochina problem.<sup>3</sup> He agreed with the conclusions of the Foreign Minister of New Zealand that our present problem had been created to a large extent by French mistakes in the past and made the point that we had urged the French to grant independence to the Associated States at a much earlier moment.

Insofar as the military situation is concerned, he said that none of us should have any illusions about Dien Bien Phu. He said the fortress area was already so reduced that the remainder could fall at any time. He mentioned further critical positions had been lost today and the Communists can now probably take it within 24 hours. He said militarily this would not cause a collapse of the French Union effort as the French Union forces had committed much less to this effort than had the enemy. In fact he concluded the Dien Bien Phu operation had already paid dividends from the French viewpoint. However, unfortunately it has become a symbol in France and Bidault is extremely gloomy as to the effect of its fall on the morale of the French people and the National Assembly. The Under Secretary added even after the fall of Dien Bien Phu there would remain in Indochina quite strong, very well equipped, and not badly trained French Union forces.

The Under Secretary recapitulated the original plan of General Navarre and repeated that it was a sound plan which had offered a good chance of success if it were well carried out. If carried out, it would have provided a position of strength in the area, and would have resulted in effective armies of the Associated States. He noted that it provided for the establishment of 54 light battalions over each of two years. The Under Secretary added the United States contribution to this effort had been 1¼ billion dollars during the present fiscal year alone, and even this figure did not include certain additional emergency requests. The Navarre plan had kept up to schedule until three months ago and the principal disappointment had been in the quality of training. The Under Secretary stated the United States had offered to assist in this training but for reasons of sensitivity and pride the French had refused our offer though there was some possibility they would accept if we were to repeat the proposal now. He added we had been successful in the past in training forces under similar circumstances in Greece and Korea.

The Under Secretary said it had never been intended U.S. ground forces, Australian or New Zealand ground forces either for that matter, should be committed to Indochina, but pointed out that unless some new element were introduced the situation would remain very discouraging. He said if hostilities were to terminate unsatisfactorily the long border of Laos would be virtually indefensible while Thailand would urgently need assistance. He said unless strong action were taken the Communists would reach the Malayan frontier, where it would be too late to defend Malaya even if British troops were rushed to the frontier, especially in view of the Communist infiltration which has already taken place in the area. The Kra Isthmus would then be indefensible without an outside action.

Admiral Davis added most of his military information confirmed Dien Bien Phu was on its last legs, and could fall even without any large-scale Communist assault. He said after its fall the French Union forces would still have the strength to carry on militarily but it was a question whether they had the will. The Under Secretary stated the Viet Minh had put 20-25% of their assets into Dien Bien Phu, while the French Union had committed only 5-6% of its assets, and that the Communists had already lost more men than the French Union has committed in the Dien Bien Phu garrison. However, the effect in France, especially after so many years of warfare, would be greatly felt, and the officers and noncommissioned officers were French, so the effect of casualties had been felt all over the country.

The Under Secretary stated the West could not afford to commit its ground troops on the mainland of Asia, since the creation of our forces was simply too expensive to permit such a commitment. He noted the Chinese Communists had accepted an Armistice in Korea not in any sense because of losses they had suffered but because they concluded we were about to bomb their only industrial plant in Manchuria. Therefore he thought it was very desirable for us to state now that we were consulting together since it might prove a deterrent to the Communists, while if we do nothing a very grave threat will present itself in the future. Finally, he said that we do after all still have the capacity of retaliatory bombing, if the decision were taken in that sense. Admiral Davis noted from his viewpoint he also believed consultations were desirable and could certainly do no harm to anyone as no commitments were involved.

The Secretary turned to the statements made by the Australian and New Zealand Foreign Ministers with reference to the desirability of "giving Geneva a run" before taking any action. He said we agreed we could not take any military action while the Conference was in progress, but felt strongly it would be a disaster for us just to sit around. He asserted only Communist self-restraint would prevent the fall of all of Indochina now. He said neither he nor the French could see a deterrent at the present time. Accordingly, Bidault was correct when he said he had no cards to play. Furthermore Bidault's mandate, if any, is to liquidate the Indochina war, and to guarantee that no more Frenchmen are killed in Indochina after the end of the Geneva Conference. That is what the French Government and the National Assembly want, the Secretary concluded. Furthermore, he added, Bao Dai and the King of Cambodia are both playboys and have no leadership whatever to offer. They are certainly not going in any way effectively to deter the Communists.

The Secretary continued saying the choice facing the Communists was merely whether to grab Indochina all in one bite, or in little pieces and digest it as they went along. The only reason they might not take it all now is for fear of scaring the other side too much. At the present time there was not even the appearance of any alternative to eventual Communist domination of all of Indochina.

Therefore the Secretary declared he was trying to bring together a group of anti-Communist nations with interests in the area, as the knowledge such a group was consulting might cause the Communists to moderate their demands. If no action is taken until after Geneva and a disaster occurs, it will be too late. Therefore the Secretary said he would like to see military talks going on in Washington, where we have considerable information on the situation, as soon as possible.

The Secretary went on to say Eden had agreed to these talks two weeks ago when the Secretary was in London but he was not quite clear whether this agreement still stood.<sup>4</sup> However, he thought the British might come along if no intervention were involved. He said he agreed, of course, war with Communist China would be a dreadful thing, and assured the others that the United States had no intention of getting into any provocative posture with Communist China. If the Peking Government openly intervenes, then another situation would be created and we must, of course, be ready to fight at some point to preserve our fundamental values. However, the Secretary stressed that we did not intend to give the Communist Chinese any justification to attack Indochina openly.

If we take no action whatever while the Geneva Conference is in progress the French, who have no will to fight, and the Associated States who have no capacity to fight, will not continue resisting and will enter into a lonely and hopeless negotiation. The Secretary agreed that the French situation was deplorable and that there was virtually no Government at the present time. For this reason above all it was urgent to have discussions among ourselves now so that we could at least make up our own minds. For example, he said, if agreement was reached on a line in Vietnam, what would we do to hold that line? At least we should examine that question among ourselves.

The Secretary added that as Mr. Casey had said the time factor was perhaps not quite so bad as it might be, and we do have the asset that the French have their troops in Indochina, and cannot evacuate them in less than several months anyway during which time the native population might turn against them. He pointed out that, since the French would in any event want to guarantee the safety of their expeditionary corps, this was a factor which might prove to be an asset on our side. He agreed that we should draw no cheer from the fact that Dien Bien Phu has not fallen as yet, as the situation there is desperate.

The Secretary added the French had made no formal request of any kind for additional United States participation except two informal requests for an air strike at Dien Bien Phu. The first had been made following General Ely's visit to Washington,<sup>5</sup> when Pleven and Bidault asked Ambassador Dillon if we could take such action, indicating they thought it might be decisive. We informed the French Government then the President considered this would be an act of war which could be taken only with Congressional consent, which he did not believe he could request at that time for various reasons, including the fact that the political situation did not appear sound to us in the Associated States nor did it to the other Asian states either. Furthermore if the states of the area did not take as grave a view of the situation as we did it would not be possible to convince the United States people of the necessity of such action.

In any event these requests were very informal, the Secretary stressed, and were not accompanied by any French suggestion for a broader United States-French relationship along lines that should be established before the creation of a wartime alliance. The French have never offered us a partnership in Indochina, and we have had nothing to do with campaign plans, training policy, etc. The Secretary added on April 22 Bidault had shown him a telegram from General Navarre stating a United States air strike was the only way to save Dien Bien Phu. The Secretary reiterated this was a very informal way to request such a momentous action. Accordingly he had informed Bidault at that time there was not sufficient time for Congress to act, and furthermore this request should be made in a somewhat broader framework, providing for a partnership etc.<sup>6</sup> The Secretary concluded that these are the only French requests that we have turned down except for perhaps a few minor delays in sending equipment etc. and these requests were turned down because they appeared to us to cross the line of belligerency. He said we had gone to great effort to meet other requests, and had even obtained civilian pilots for example to conduct operations which the French wanted and which we did not believe our Air Force should carry out.

Mr. Webb questioned whether the mere fact that we were discussing a common policy for the area would in fact be a deterrent and whether we would inform the Communists at Geneva that we were holding talks in Washington. He added that, of course, a point would be reached beyond which we could not go. The Secretary mentioned that at the present time no agreement existed among ourselves on what we would not tolerate from the Communists, and that accordingly at the present time they could presumably assume we would not draw the line anywhere.

The Under Secretary added it was a question of what assets we could salvage from the Indochina situation and what will emerge from the present critical problem, what is left and how we could save it. As an example, the Thais had offered to double their army. The Under Secretary did not think they could reach the 125,000 total which they had proposed, but believed an effective force of 90,000 could be built up with adequate training. Perhaps something could be done in Laos and Cambodia, he added, as well as supplying military equipment to Burma through the British mission. Finally perhaps southern Vietnam could be held and an effective force trained there, while there might also be other enclaves in Vietnam open to us. The Under Secretary pointed out until we had talked these things over among ourselves it was quite unclear where we stood. Admiral Davis added the point discussions of this type would require a long time and accordingly should get underway, noting what we were looking for now were military appreciations and not commitments.

Mr. Casey said that the Five Power Staff Agency had probably already done much of this work. The Secretary stressed again the need for some new element and made the point that the holding even of military staff talks might stiffen the French a little, and make them slightly less willing to accept surrender. The effects of French capitulation in Indochina furthermore were not limited to Asia the Secretary pointed out. The sudden descent of France into the role of a fourth-rate power would have a profound effect in North Africa, on NATO and on EDC.

The Secretary told the Australian and New Zealand Foreign Ministers it looked now as though we would start the Indochina phase here with nine powers—the four Berlin powers, the Associated States, Communist China and Viet Minh. As of the present time no tripartite position existed, and there had not even been exchanges of views. The Secretary said the French doubtless had some ideas but they had not communicated them to him, while the British had not talked to him either, and it was very questionable whether the French would accept any British play anyway. The Secretary concluded he had tried to sound out Molotov on his plans but had found out only that he was planning to sit back apparently and make our side put forth proposals.

Mr. Casey inquired whether we could not make useful propaganda of the fact the French had finally given independence to Vietnam. The Secretary stated this had not really happened yet and, while an announcement had been made, the treaties had not actually been signed. He said he understood the political treaty was now ready but the Vietnamese did not want to sign it until they had seen the draft of the economic agreement which contained certain privileges for France. Mr. Webb concluded the Vietnamese did not trust the French and accordingly we could not make much use of this. The Secretary added there was one ambiguity in the treaty and that was as to whether the Associated States could withdraw from the French Union.

Mr. Critchley of the Australian Delegation noted that the work which had been done to date by the Five Power Staff Agency was based on the assumption of an open aggression by the Chinese Communists, and accordingly its conclusions would not be useful in the present context. Therefore he said a new estimate was needed by the five powers as to what was likely to happen and what countermeasures we would take.

The Under Secretary said there was even disagreement between the appreciations of our own and the British Joint Chiefs, so it was imperative to have broader talks and evolve a common policy. He said we must decide where we would hold the line, and must prevent erosion of our position. He repeated that if for example Communist troops ever reached the Malayan frontier it would then be too late to defend that area.

The Under Secretary stressed the importance of also giving full weight to political considerations. Mr. Webb indicated his agreement that political considerations, especially colonialism as an issue, were most important. The Under Secretary agreed noting we must have a full answer on this problem when we went to Congress to ask for additional aid for Indochina.

The Secretary concluded that the Communists had invented a type of warfare for which we had no ready antidote. They exploited any injustice in the world, and fed military power into minor dissident movements until they had become an explosive force. The problem was, that when you opposed these movements, unless you were very careful, you appeared to be supporting injustice.

Mr. Casey noted Mr. Eden's difficulties in coming along very far while the Geneva Conference was in progress, and indicated his view that perhaps working within the formula of the Five Power Staff Agency would be best from the British viewpoint. He said Australia would be glad to take part in talks on a multilateral basis, but, of course, could make no commitments until some weeks after the elections on May 29. He said Australia very much hoped that the UK would participate.

Mr. Webb asserted the New Zealand position was much the same as the Australian and agreed with the United States conclusion that we must develop a position to which we would stick. Accordingly he was willing to participate in talks on the same basis as Australia, with the general aim of stopping Communist expansion in Southeast Asia. Mr. Casey added again that we should make every effort to get the Asian states on our side.

In closing the meeting the Secretary stated he thought Mr. Casey's talks in Karachi would be useful, and noted he had already talked with the Pakistan Ambassador in Washington on this subject. The Secretary made the point that East Pakistan was nearer to the danger than even India, and accordingly Pakistan might recognize the danger. The Secretary stated that since Australia and New Zealand agreed to the general idea of talks, we should explore the question with the other members of the five (UK and France) and see if they are willing also to join in talks. He asked the Australian and New Zealand delegates if they had any objections to Thailand participating in view of her obvious concern, and no objection was made.

The Secretary concluded the meeting reading the attached communiqué to which the Australian and New Zealand Foreign Ministers agreed.

GENEVA, May 2, 1954.

DEAR ANTHONY: I am taking back to Washington for discussion with the President the Memorandum on South-East Asian Defence, which you gave me on April 30.<sup>2</sup> I think there is much in it with which we would go along. However, it does not seem to me that the eighth paragraph proposing immediate and secret joint examination between the US and the UK is in itself adequate.

Your paragraph 7 says that you do not think that a French collapse in Indochina could come about as rapidly or as completely as we appear to envisage. I hope you are right. I think, however, that our pessimistic view will almost surely prove correct if France is left at this moment with virtually no alternative to a lonely, hopeless negotiation, which will amount to unconditional surrender. I think it imperative that we inject some new element into the situation, and I believe that the least we should do would be to invite the French into at least certain phases of our talks and let this be known.

We have just had a meeting of the ANZUS Council at which Australia and New Zealand indicated a willingness to proceed with military discussions with your Government and mine and France, and with the desirability of Thailand being brought in.<sup>3</sup> This last is in accordance with the concluding paragraph of your Memorandum.

If we do nothing in the way of planning a common defense until every last detail of nature and purpose, membership and commitments is agreed upon between our two Governments acting secretly, then I fear circumstances will move against us so rapidly that what we do agree upon will have been rendered obsolete by events. Could not your Government reconsider its position as expressed in your Memorandum at least to the extent of enabling us to help provide Bidault with some element of hope, which might enable him to gather the political strength to hold off from the surrender which otherwise seems inevitable.

Faithfully yours,

JOHN FOSTER DULLES

Dulles-Dinh Meeting, Geneva, May 2, Evening: The Under Secretary of State (Smith) to the Department of State

GENEVA, May 4, 1954—1 a. m.

Dulte 50. Repeated information Saigon 25, Paris 182. Secretary, evening May 2nd received Vietnam Foreign Minister Dinh presented by Ambassador Heath. Dinh stated that Bao Dai had arrived at decision that Vietnam must participate in conference and would interpose no objection to Viet Minh being invited to Geneva. Vietnamese Government could not expose itself to accusation of sabotaging an international effort to find a peaceful solution of Indochina war by refusing to participate in negotiations although his government had no great hopes of their success. His government was definitely resolved to resist any proposal of partition whether at 16th, 20th or any other parallel. It would likewise refuse any proposal affecting integrity of regime, i.e., coalition government with Viet Minh. If such proposals were agreed upon by other participants, Vietnamese delegation would withdraw from conference. Secretary inquired whether that meant Vietnamese Government would prefer to have conference break up without reaching agreement, regrettable as that would be, rather than accept a proposal which would not really bring a lasting peaceful settlement. Dinh replied emphatically in affirmative. Secretary then inquired as to will of Vietnamese Government and people to continue fight if a peaceful solution were not reached in Geneva, observing that any nation determined in decision to preserve its independence would find friends and allies but would find none if there was no will to continue struggle. Dinh replied that government and people were resolved to continue fight.

Reverting to question of partition, Secretary observed that there was hardly case in history where people of country had themselves proposed or agreed to territorial partition. Partition proposals came from foreigners. He inquired whether Ho Chi Minh could logically propose partition since allegedly he was fighting for independence and territorial integrity of Viet Minh. Dinh replied that Viet Minh could not logically recommend partition.

Dinh went on to say that one Vietnamese hope was that discussions at conference would tend to induce non-Communist elements of Viet Minh to break away from Ho Chi Minh.

Dinh expressed regret at Secretary's departure and Secretary explained that he had been absent most of this year and it was necessary to renew his consultations with Congress. Dinh remarked that while American executive might have difficulties with Congress, Vietnamese Government was in even a more difficult position because there was no Congress. It was obliged before inaugurating new measures to consult opinion of numerous political groups who were without organizational responsibility or legal standing.

Mr. Chauvel outlined for the Secretary this evening the discussions which the French have had today with Mr. Dinh (Vietnamese Foreign Minister) and the conversation he had with Mr. Gromyko as follows:

In the course of the discussions with Mr. Dinh, the latter pressed very strongly for a formal letter from Mr. Bidault indicating that the French would not agree to any settlement in Vietnam involving a partition of that country. Mr. Chauvel said that Mr. Bidault had already given formal verbal assurances that France would not agree to a territorial division of Vietnam and that if now a new written assurance had to be given and carried back to Bao Dai, time would be consumed and the discussions on Indochina could not begin. Mr. Chauvel said that after some discussion (and we gathered a telephone call from Mr. Dinh to Bao Dai), it was agreed that the formal note requested by Mr. Dinh would not be a necessary precondition for the French to inform the Soviets that the Vietminh could participate in the conference. Mr. Chauvel indicated that the French had agreed that some form of letter regarding French non-acceptance of a division of Vietnam would subsequently be given to Mr. Dinh. The Secretary said that he had talked to Mr. Dinh this afternoon <sup>1</sup> and the latter had made the point that neither the Vietminh nor the Vietnam could agree to a division of their country. Whichever side first agreed to this or suggested it, would put themselves in an impossible position. The

Secretary made the point that this was true of Vietnam as it was in the case of Germany and North Korea where the division of the country had been imposed by occupying powers and not by the peoples of the country themselves who would not have agreed to their being divided.

Mr. Chauvel said that on the basis of the agreement with Dinh he had seen Gromyko at six o'clock this evening. He had informed Gromyko that the French and the Vietnamese Governments agreed to the participation of the Vietminh and had proposed that the invitations be sent out tomorrow morning at ten o'clock. The Soviets would invite the Vietminh and the French would invite the governments of the three Associated States to attend the conference. Mr. Gromyko replied that there might be a more formal way of inviting the Associated States and the Vietminh to participate. (Mr. Chauvel believed that he was suggesting that the invitations go out in the name of the US, UK, USSR, France, and Communist China.) Mr. Chauvel replied that there seemed to be no more need of formality with respect to the invitations to the Indochina phase of the conference than there had been at Berlin with respect to the participants of the Korean phase. Mr. Gromyko did not argue the point. After some discussion it was agreed in principle that the French would issue the invitations to the three Associated States at 10 a. m. tomorrow morning, at which time the Soviets would invite the Vietminh. Mr. Gromyko said that he would have to consult, but it was left that if he did not inform Chauvel to the contrary by 10 a. m. tomorrow the invitation would be issued on the above basis. Mr. Chauvel then said that it was important from the very beginning of the Indochina phase of the conference to separate the question of Vietnam from that of Laos and Cambodia. He had in mind that in their opening statements the representatives of Laos and Cambodia would make a statement clearly indicating that they were separate from the discussions on Vietnam. The Secretary said that he felt it was important to bring the UN to the support of this position and the thought was put forward that one possibility was to have a UN peace observation committee proposed to see that aggression did not occur against Laos and Cambodia. Mr. Chauvel said he had no clear ideas but that this was a definite possibility and one worth thinking about immediately. When asked whether the Cambodian and Laotian Governments had representatives readily available, Mr. Chauvel said that he frankly did not know. They did have representatives in Paris and one of the two governments had a high level representative at the WHO meeting at Geneva who might serve as representative, but he did not honestly know the views of the two governments as to their representation at Geneva.

He then said that in the opening statement by the French on Indochina they might make it clear that Laos and Cambodia were excluded from the area of negotiation. It was suggested to him that if the French made the opening statement in this sense, the Communist side might reply with charges that the French could not speak for the Laotians and Cambodians and at the same time the Communist side might introduce counter claims or suggestions that the problem of Vietnam could not be separated from that of Laos and Cambodia. With this possibility in mind, it would seem preferable to endeavor to arrange procedural questions so that in the first instance, the Laotians and Cambodians could speak for themselves and say that the discussions involved Vietnam and not either of the other two Associated States. Mr. Chauvel said that he felt there was merit in this idea and it should be kept in mind when the procedural arrangements regarding the order of speakers were negotiated with the Communist side.

In conclusion, Mr. Chauvel indicated a strong desire to keep in very close touch with the American Delegation, and particularly General Smith.

Smith-Eden-Bidault-Dinh Meeting, Geneva, May 3, Morning: The Under Secretary of State (Smith) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

GENEVA, April [May] 4, 1954—1 a. m.

Dulte 49. Repeated information Saigon 24, Paris 181. Upon Vietnamese request, Eden, Bidault and I met with Vietnam Foreign Minister Dinh morning May 3 in Bidault's office.

Dinh expressed Bao Dai's thanks for the invitation to the conference. He said Bao Dai had naturally hesitated before accepting the invitation because it involved meeting with the Viet Minh and the Communist powers. He remarked it would be necessary for him to have frequent meetings with the three of us. We replied individually that we would keep in touch with him and would undertake no important action without prior consultation with him.

Bidault said that we had a moral interest, particularly in view of the plight of the wounded at Dien-Bien-Phu, in getting the Indochina phase of the conference promptly under way and not let it bog down in procedural and organizational differences. He observed there had been agreement in Berlin that Russia would invite the Chinese and the Viet Minh while Foreign Ministers of the free countries would invite the Associated States. He suggested that the oral invitation extended at this meeting should be sufficient but Dinh replied that Bao Dai preferred written invitation. We agreed.

Dinh went on to say that his government could not justify before the people Vietnamese participation in the conference unless he were given full support against any proposal directed against the territorial integrity and political unity of Vietnam. Secondly, he made it clear that the presence of the Viet Minh should not be taken as implying recognition of the latter as constituting a state. The Viet Minh were mere insurgents. Thirdly, his government was in favor of some action being taken at the earliest moment of the conference to permit the evacuation of the wounded in Dien-Bien-Phu. Bidault and I reassured him that acceptance of the presence of Viet Minh did not constitute recognition of them. I reminded him that we did not recognize Communist China. The Viet Minh, however, constituted a fact of this war and we could not ignore this fact by refusing to confer with them in this conference. Bidault said he had tried to exclude the Viet Minh but had had to retreat from this position in the face of violent Russian intransigence. In view of the Soviet attitude it would not have been possible to have staged the conference had we insisted on barring Viet Minh attendance.

We disclosed the problem of the chairmanship of the conference and agreed that in the meeting with the Russians this afternoon the French would endeavor to get definite agreement that the chairmanship would rotate between UK, USSR and Thailand. The sharing the chairmanship would not constitute participation by Thailand in the conference. On his two days off the Thai Minister would be merely an observer. Chauvel said that in his meeting with Gromyko yesterday, the latter had concurred that the Thai Minister might be the third chairman. We agreed that if the Russians did not confirm this arrangement it would be necessary to find an outsider as a third chairman, which would be a matter of some difficulty.

Subject: Guidance on Korea and Indochina Phases of Geneva Conference

[Here follows the initial portion of the conversation dealing with the Korean phase of the Geneva Conference; for the text, see page 182.]

Indochina Phase

Participation—Turning to the question of the Indochina Phase, the Secretary said that he understood that while our initial position was that there should be nine participants (US, UK, USSR, France, the three Associated States, Communist China, and Viet Minh), the question of additional participants should be dealt with by the conference itself at a later stage. It was particularly important, therefore, that Thailand, Australia, and the Philippines not be given a complete rebuff at the onset, and that the door be left open for their later participation. The Secretary recalled that he had assured the Philippines that, in the event the participation exceeded nine countries, he would raise the question of Philippine attendance. It was likewise agreed that the participation of Australia and Thailand might also be raised at the later stage in the Conference, particularly in view of their proposed participation in the “united action” effort in Southeast Asia.

Chairmanship—The Secretary commented that some consideration had been given to the possibility of asking either Prince Wan or Mr. Pearson to assume the permanent chairmanship of the Indochina phase of the Conference. Pearson had already been approached about this possibility and had indicated that, while his government probably would not be enthusiastic about his assuming such a position, they would probably go along.

The Secretary explained, however, that he had deliberately worded his resolution of April 26<sup>1</sup> recommending rotation of the chairmanship among Prince Wan, Eden, and Molotov in such a fashion that the same rotating chairmanship pattern could be retained through the entire Conference rather than through the Korean phase alone. The Secretary then read from the Communiqué of the Berlin meeting and pointed out that the words “the conference” cited in that communiqué referred to a single conference at Geneva rather than two separate conferences. Therefore, he recommended that the US adhere to the rotation of chairmanship among Prince Wan, Eden and Molotov with the understanding that if Thailand were not a participant in the Indochina phase Prince Wan could attend sessions as an observer on those days when he was not in the chair.

Bidault indicated that there was great reluctance in Paris to send reply at this juncture. After further urging he said he would do his best to obtain French agreement so that it could be dispatched later this week. I have strong impression French are unwilling to move until after French Parliament reconvenes and possibly discusses foreign policy and till after conversations on Indochina have begun at Geneva. Memorandum by the Special Adviser to the United States Delegation (Heath) to the Under Secretary of State (Smith)<sup>1</sup>

GENEVA, May 3, 1954.

Subject: Outline of U.S. Position and Tactics on Indochina Question at Geneva

Presently Approved U.S. Policy

1. Approved NSC policy applicable to the Geneva Indochina negotiations is as follows (NSC 5405, para. 25-29 approved by the President January 16, 1954) :<sup>2</sup>

25. "Employ every feasible means to influence the French government and people against any conclusion of the struggle on terms inconsistent with basic U.S. objectives. In doing so, the United States should make clear :

- a. The effect on the position of France itself in North Africa, in Europe, and as a world power.

<sup>2</sup> For the full text of NSC 5405, "United States Objectives and Courses of Action with Respect to Southeast Asia," and related documentation, see volume XII.

- b. The free world stake in Indochina.
- c. The impact of the loss of Indochina.

26. Reiterate to the French :

a. That in the absence of a marked improvement in the military situation there is no basis for negotiation with any prospect for acceptable terms.

b. That a nominally non-Communist coalition regime would eventually turn the country over to Ho Chi Minh with no opportunity for the replacement of the French by the United States or the United Kingdom.

27. Flatly oppose any idea of a cease-fire as a preliminary to negotiations, because such a cease-fire would result in an irretrievable deterioration of the Franco-Vietnamese military position in Indochina.

28. If it appears necessary, insist that the French consult the Vietnamese and obtain their approval of all actions related to any response to Viet Minh offers to negotiate.

29. If the French actually enter into negotiations with the Communists, insist that the United States be consulted and seek to influence the course of the negotiations."

The Present Situation

2. With discussions on Indochina imminent at the Geneva Conference the essential elements of the present situation appear to be :

a. The military situation in Indochina is unfavorable. The fall of Dien Bien Phu though not in itself militarily catastrophic, will have an unsettling effect on the morale of French Union and particularly Vietnamese forces, and will expose the Delta to intensified Viet Minh activity.

b. The French Government, wobbly at best, is under heavy pressure to stop the fighting in Indochina and will spare no efforts to achieve this end. The Government may not survive the fall of Dien Bien Phu. If the present Government falls, a successor government will probably be even more willing to agree to unfavorable terms. The degree to which French concern with the French Union and France's position as a world power, the value the French place upon U.S. cooperation and assistance, French interests in North Africa and Indochina, French pride, and the technical difficulties of arranging an armistice or withdrawal may operate to inhibit the French from entering into a disastrous agreement remains to be seen. At present there are indications that certain French elements are leaning toward the idea of a coalition government as a means of stopping the fighting although as yet the French have probably reached no firm position.

c. The British are obviously firmly opposed to military participation in Indochina at this stage, and appear to be most concerned to end the fighting in order to avoid any possibility of its expansion. The British appear to be in favor of partition of Indochina as a form of settlement, although there are indications that they also would not be averse to a simple cease-fire, particularly since the British are making every effort to work out a joint position with the Asian Commonwealth powers.

d. The degree to which the Vietnamese can or will effectively oppose French inclinations cannot be accurately foretold. They are obviously concerned over the Geneva negotiations and the likelihood of French weakness in these negotiations. They have tended to look to the United States to bail them out of any situation which such French weakness might lead them to. In the absence of evidence of U.S. willingness to undertake such a rescue it is possible that they may feel that they have no choice but to fall in with French inclinations. Thus far there is no firm evidence as to what type of settlement the Vietnamese would prefer, and it is clear that there may be differences of view between the Northern Vietnamese and the Bao Dai government.

e. It appears that the Communists, although aware of the local superiority of their military and political position, are still apprehensive over the possibilities of U.S. intervention, and the possibilities of a spreading of the war. Accordingly, while sacrificing nothing of their long term interests, it is possible that they will attempt to shift from a military to a political pursuit of their objectives in Indochina, and may in fact be willing to agree to some sort of settlement in the expectation that they will in any case eventually secure control of all the area.

f. The U.S. has thus far been unsuccessful in attempts to organize an effective ad hoc coalition for the defense of Southeast Asia. The U.S. position also suffers from widespread foreign feeling that the U.S., in the absence of such a coalition, will not use its own forces in Indochina. There remains, however, a valuable residue of uncertainty as to U.S. intentions, particularly on the part of the Communists.

U.S. Tactics

3. U.S. tactics in the first instance should be directed toward influencing the course of the negotiations to the end that no agreement will be reached which is inconsistent with basic U.S. objectives. Toward this end the U.S. should adopt the following tactics:

a. Increase as feasible Communist and Allied uncertainty as to U.S. intentions with regard to U.S. action in Indochina, and exploit whatever successes may be achieved in the organization of U.S. and Allied cooperative action in Southeast Asia.

b. Continue to make it clear to the French that we will retain full freedom of action to refrain from any agreement at Geneva.

c. Continue to set forth and endeavour to obtain French, British and Associated States agreement to the general principles which we believe must be firmly adhered to in any solution of the Indochina problem, namely that any settlement with the Communists must not (1) result in or tend to result in a turning over of the politically important and strategic area of Indochina to Communist control; (2) jeopardize the security of the French Union forces; (3) jeopardize the freedom of the peoples of Indochina who have been loyally supporting the anti-Communist effort; (4) endanger the prestige and status of France or the U.K. or ourselves.

d. Be prepared to demonstrate to our Allies, and for that matter to the Communists, the ways in which various types of settlement that may be proposed by the Communists or by our Allies are incompatible with these general principles. To this end the Working Group is preparing detailed arguments on how such various types of proposals as (1) cease-fire, (2) partition, (3) coalition government, (4) plebiscite, or (5) immediate elections, would fail to meet our general principles and are therefore unacceptable.

e. Endeavour to place the French and the Associated States in the forefront of any negotiations with the Communists, toward the end that the French may experience to the fullest degree the difficulties, frustrations, and exacerbations of such negotiations.

f. Endeavour to stimulate the Communists to the adoption of harsh negotiating tactics and inflexible positions. The Working Group is preparing detailed suggestions of fruitful ways of playing on Communist and particularly Chinese Communist sensitivities.

g. Cultivate Associated States resistance to a sellout.

h. Wherever possible make use of possible British assistance in strengthening the resistance of the French to an unacceptable settlement.

4. The U.S. should decide whether or not it is desirable for the U.S. to put forward a proposal of its own. There can be points made for and against the U.S. putting forward a plan of its own. On the one hand the U.S. would gain something in initiative and leadership if it came forward with a concrete proposal. On the other hand a foolproof proposal which would have any chance of appearing reasonable to the French and the British is difficult to devise; the U.S. might have less freedom of action if its own proposal were made the basis for discussion; and the tactic of keeping the French in the forefront might be rendered more difficult by the U.S. making its own proposal. The Working Group is attempting to prepare a possible U.S. proposal so as to be prepared in the event it is decided to put one forward.

5. If the negotiations on Indochina reach a point where it is clear that an agreement is likely to be reached which is going to be unsatisfactory from the U.S. point of view, the U.S. will have to decide whether it should at that time disassociate itself from the negotiations or continue to be a party to them. Since such a decision would obviously have important U.S. domestic political implications, guidance from the highest level would be required. Some of the pros and cons, purely from the foreign affairs point of view, are listed below:

A. Disadvantages of U.S. Participation

1. U.S. participation in negotiations which seemed clearly to be leading toward an unsatisfactory Indochina settlement will be taken as evidence throughout Asia and the rest of the world that the U.S. has in effect backed down in the face of the Communist threat in a critically important area. As a result there will be an unavoidable loss of U.S. prestige.

2. U.S. participation in the negotiation of an unsatisfactory settlement will probably have particularly acute effects on U.S. prestige and influence in the remainder of Southeast Asia—notable in Thailand. The Thais will feel that the U.S. has marched up the hill and back again on the question of Indochina, and be tempted to believe that the U.S. would behave in similar fashion if a showdown came with respect to Thailand. Consequently the value of U.S. promises of protection and assistance may be severely depreciated in Siamese eyes.

3. U.S. readiness to participate in the negotiation of an unsatisfactory settlement might amount to relinquishment of the last available card that the U.S. has to play against French acceptance of such a settlement—French fear of provoking a profound breach between France and the United States.

B. Advantages of U.S. Participation

1. U.S. participation in negotiation of a settlement would keep the U.S. in a better position to play off the Associated States against the French, to stimulate the Communists to overreaching themselves, and in general to attempt to minimize the undesirable features of an Indochina settlement.

2. U.S. participation in the negotiation of an undesirable Indochina settlement, despite the undoubted loss of prestige involved, might place the U.S. in a better position to insert itself into the protection and shoring up of whatever remained of a Western position in Indochina and Southeast Asia after an unsatisfactory settlement. This would be particularly true in the case of a settlement involving territorial partition.

3. U.S. participation in the negotiations of an unsatisfactory Indochina settlement would assist in dispelling that fear of U.S. intransigence and suspicion of U.S. eagerness for drastic action against Communist China which has quite evidently contributed to present U.S. difficulties both with its Allies and with the neutralist countries.

4. U.S. participation in the negotiation of a settlement would lessen the possibilities of a severe breach between the U.S. on the one hand and the British and the French on the other, and would make more promising the possibilities of united action to counter the damaging effects of the settlement in Southeast Asia, as well as improve prospects for Allied cooperation in Europe.

Summary

Decisions required

1. Whether or not the U.S. should put forward its own proposals.
2. Whether or not the U.S. should disassociate itself from the negotiations if they seem likely to lead to an unsatisfactory agreement.

The Secretary of State to the French Minister for Foreign Affairs (Bidault)<sup>1</sup>

GENEVA, May 3, 1954.

DEAR MONSIEUR BIDAULT: I leave today for Washington with regret. You will recall, however, that I said to you, Mr. Eden and Mr. Molotov at Berlin that it would only be possible for me to stay in Geneva for the first days of the Conference. As it turns out, I think that I can perhaps contribute more at Washington than at Geneva to the success of the Conference. It will be difficult to achieve an Indochina peace here unless there is some alternative which can be pursued if the Communists do not make honorable proposals. The United States can, I hope and believe, make a contribution to that alternative. So far, there has been no clear decision in that respect, because the elements of the problem have been so rapidly changing. I feel confident, however, that if no honorable peace is available by agreement, you and we with others can find ways whereby we can win it by our efforts and resourcefulness; and this very fact will make more likely the possibility of an acceptable negotiated settlement.

I assure you that I return to Washington animated by a desire to contribute there to the continuing cooperation of our nations and peoples and close contact between our Governments which have been so rich in rewards both to us and to others so long as we have pursued them with fidelity.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN FOSTER DULLES

The comment which he makes on the statements he made at the time of his press conference constitutes a valuable restatement of the inexact reports given in the newspapers of the continent. I need not tell you, furthermore, that I share all the sentiments you express to me on the necessity of continued and trustful cooperation between our two Governments during this Geneva conference. I know that I can count on all your personal support in that respect. Our conversations of those last few days permitted me to set forth to you with full frankness the difficulties of our position. You have seen them for yourself, and it is therefore with a full knowledge of the facts that you will be able to guide your steps in Washington along a path that is in accord with the common interests of our two countries. No French Foreign Minister has the right at this time to disregard a reasonable chance of winning acceptance of a peaceful solution of the war in Indochina; but there is the no less pressing duty of considering the measures to be taken in case the powers of the Communist bloc should not accept any of our proposals, or should themselves offer wholly unacceptable ones. I have full confidence that you will be able to bring about an understanding in Washington of the various aspects of this complex and grievous question, the developments of which, far from keeping us apart, should be an additional cause for understanding and collaboration between our two countries.

Dulte 48. For the Secretary. Terribly sorry to miss saying goodbye to you, but could not leave the meeting of 16.<sup>1</sup> I asked Eden to wish you safe home and give you affectionate farewell for me.

After the meeting Alan Watt, now head of Australian delegation and my former colleague in Moscow, stopped in for a private talk. He said that he and Australian delegation all deeply disturbed and distressed at position taken by Britain.

As former Minister of Defense, he was one of those who early appreciated danger inherent in SEA situation and double danger of British attitude that the "tight little island" must be considered first, was aware that in event of trouble there was only one source from which Australia and New Zealand could expect real aid and that was United States. He went on to say that the Australian delegation had been unable at any time to ascertain real British position and was never informed of events until "about five minutes too late to do anything useful". I reviewed our own position and gave him a good deal of the background, including some of Churchill's statements to Radford<sup>2</sup> which confirmed his own opinion. He concluded by saying how regrettable it was that impending election made it impossible for Australia at the moment to take a stronger line, but he felt confident that if the government won, we could count on full measure of support. He said, quite correctly, that if the government lost and the Labor Party came in, the entire defense program of Australia in which we were so greatly interested through ANZUS would break down.

AN EMERGENCY PROGRAM FOR INDOCHINA

The purpose of this memorandum is to present a checklist of the various actions which might be taken by France, Vietnam and the United States (short of outright U.S. intervention) to meet the grave political and military emergency:

By France

(1) An announcement of an intention to continue the struggle in accordance with France's French Union obligations.

(2) Certain concrete measures of a military nature including

(a) Completion of prompt despatch of two parachute battalions already earmarked.

(b) Further reinforcements including but not limited to Groupe Mobile and armoured elements already earmarked.

(c) Speeding up of program for air force reinforcements including personnel, planes and airfields.

(d) Announcement of U.S. participation in training and supply program involving specific Vietnamese units (say three Groupes Mobiles to start). This would involve Franco-Vietnamese agreement to permit direct U.S.-Vietnamese relationship in limited aspects of military program.

(3) Rapid conclusion of political negotiations with Vietnam and Cambodia and implementation thereof at all levels.

By Vietnam

(1) An announcement of a determination to continue the struggle to guarantee Vietnamese independence and territorial integrity including emphasis on support being received from France in accordance with French Union obligations and from the United States and other nations in accordance with free world solidarity and security interests.

(2) Military measures designed to increase the tempo and the efficacy of the build-up of the Vietnamese National Army. Among these measures would be included the announcement of a U.S.-Vietnamese agreement for the training by the U.S. of, say, three Groupes Mobiles to be ready for active combat duty November 1, for example.

(3) A statement of political principles and intentions including an appeal for national unity based on complete independence, and, perhaps, an announcement of an intention to hold national elections as rapidly as possible after the war.

By the United States

(1) Reiteration of intention to support Franco-Vietnamese war effort by all possible means, including emergency airlift, planes, added technical personnel, etc., as needed.

(2) Negotiation, after consultation with French of agreement with Vietnamese Government providing for U.S. sponsored training program designed to produce by a certain date, say November 1, three or more new combat-worthy Groupes Mobiles.

(3) Direct U.S.-Vietnamese arrangements for covert operations and psychological warfare.

(4) Strong approval of new Franco-Vietnamese political arrangements.

(5) Continued energetic leadership in forging of "united action" concept into an effective instrument for use, if necessary, in attaining free world goals in Southeast Asia in the event Geneva Conference proves fruitless.

(6) Appointment of a U.S. Ambassador in Cambodia and a U.S. Minister in Laos replacing present arrangement whereby these two positions are filled by U.S. Ambassador [in] Vietnam. This measure would be politically helpful in Cambodia and Laos.

ARGUMENTS AGAINST PARTITION, COALITION GOVERNMENT, PLEBISCITE, AND IMMEDIATE ELECTIONS IN INDOCHINA

A number of types of political settlement in Indochina that may be proposed at the conference must be viewed as unacceptable in that they would probably lead to the eventual loss of the area to the Communists. This paper presents the arguments against: 1) partition, 2) coalition government, 3) plebiscite, and 4) immediate elections.

I. PARTITION

The immediate adverse consequences of any type of partition are obvious. The area under Communist control would be expanded, anti-Communist populations would be abandoned to Communist rule, and French and US prestige would suffer. The secondary effects of partition upon areas left initially under non-Communist control are, however, equally serious. The nature of these secondary effects may be explored by considering three hypothetical cases representing different methods of partitioning Indochina :

- (a) Partition of Vietnam at the 16th parallel
- (b) Partition of Laos as well as Vietnam at the 16th parallel
- (c) Separation of all of Vietnam from Laos and Cambodia

In each case, it is assumed that French Union forces would be withdrawn shortly after partition.

A. Partition of Vietnam at the 16th Parallel

Partition of Vietnam at the 16th parallel would give the Communists unchallenged control over more than half of Vietnam's population, including the more energetic and virile segment of the nation's people. Economically, the Communists would gain control of Vietnam's major mineral resources, although they might encounter some minor difficulty in meeting their food deficit. Both the Chinese Communists and the Vietminh would benefit from use of the port of Haiphong.

Politically and militarily, partition would leave the Communist regime in the north at a considerable advantage relative to the non-Communist government in the south. The Communists already firmly control the bulk of the population that they would receive under the partition, and they would encounter little difficulty in consolidating their hold over their entire area. They would claim credit for the cessation of hostilities, launch a propaganda campaign for unification, and apply maximum efforts toward the overturn of the non-Communist government in the south.

In contrast to the situation in the north, the non-Communist government in south Vietnam would be hard pressed to deal with popular demoralization resulting from partition. The general public in the south would view partition as a betrayal, would be fearful of Communist military strength, and would be convinced that partition was merely the prelude to Communist control over the entire country. Even many anti-Communist politicians would believe that prudence required them to avoid identification with the non-Communist government of the south.

Communist subversive operations would find a fertile field in the south and in time the Communists would probably be able to reestablish the civil war south of the 16th parallel. Eventual destruction of the government of south Vietnam from within would be likely. A possible Communist decision to hasten the fall of the southern government by external attack cannot be excluded, although it would probably be viewed as involving unnecessary risks.

B. Partition of Vietnam and Laos at the 16th Parallel

Partition of Laos, as well as Vietnam, at the 16th parallel would amount to the virtual destruction of the former nation. Only about one-fifth of the land area of Laos and one-fourth of its population would remain in non-Communist hands. The area which would be left to the government of Laos by partition is a rugged and insecure region in which dissident pro-Communist Vietnamese and Laotian guerillas have been active for year. It is doubtful that any Laotian government could long rule this insignificant and insecure area.

The principal consequences of extending the partition line across Laos, however, would be the effect on Thailand. A long stretch of the Thai border would be thrown open to Communist military pressure and subversion. The danger to the Thais would be increased by the existence immediately across the border of a sizeable Vietnamese minority which already sympathizes with the Viet Minh.

The position of Cambodia would also be markedly worsened, even though Cambodia would be temporarily separated from the Communist zone by the remnant of Laos south of the 16th parallel.

The Communists would also achieve the incidental advantage of extending a buffer zone across the entire length of Communist China's border with Indochina.

C. Separation of Vietnam from Cambodia and Laos

If the Communists were to gain all of Vietnam in a negotiated settlement, they would control roughly five-sixths of the entire population of Indochina. The process of extending Communist control throughout the large areas of central and southern Vietnam now held by the French Union would presumably take somewhat longer than consolidation of the northern portion alone. There would be some opposition, particularly in South Vietnam, to Communist efforts to consolidate control, based as much on regional animosities as on ideology. It is probable, however, considering the powerful military and political organization that the DRV could apply to these problems, that they could establish control over the entire country in a relatively short period of time.

The political pressures that a Communist Vietnam would apply against the smaller and weaker Laos and Cambodia would be great. There would be little prospect, barring extensive foreign assistance, that Laos and Cambodia would be able long to withstand the pressure of a Communist Vietnam.

II. COALITION GOVERNMENT

Little basis exists for formation of coalition governments in Laos and Cambodia. Therefore, examination of this type of settlement may be confined to Vietnam.

A coalition government in Vietnam might take one of two general forms: a) inclusion of non-Communists in the Ho government or, b) inclusion of Communists in the Bao Dai government.

The former arrangement would at best create a "democratic" facade for a thoroughly Communist regime. The insignificant role played by the so-called democratic personages in Peiping serves to illustrate the best that non-Communist ministers could hope for in the Ho government. At worst, and this result would appear the more likely, the fate of the non-Communist members of the Ho government would be similar to that of non-Communist members of the post war governments in Eastern Europe.

If coalition government took the form of bringing Communists into the Bao Dai government, complete Communist control of Vietnam would not come about immediately but would almost certainly result eventually. The number and nature of the ministries assigned to Communists in the coalition government would make little difference. By the mere fact of forming a coalition government most military and police restrictions on Communist activities would be removed. The Communists with their efficient political organization would soon overcome their relatively disorganized adversaries. A "legal" Communist takeover by means of "elections" or through a Czech-style coup would probably follow. In the unlikely event that political means proved insufficient to achieve their objectives, the Communists could at any time employ their overwhelming military and paramilitary superiority to seize power by force.

III. PLEBISCITE

If a plebiscite were held to permit a popular choice between the Communist and non-Communist regimes in the Associated States, the Communists would probably lose in Laos and Cambodia, but would almost certainly win in Vietnam. In the two smaller states, the absence of strong indigenous Communist organizations and the popular prestige of the two royal houses would probably insure a non-Communist result. In Vietnam, however, the general acceptance of Ho Chi Minh as the standard bearer of Vietnamese nationalism, and, even more important, the extensive and efficient Communist organization would make Communist victory in a plebiscite almost certain.

If a plebiscite were held without effective outside supervision, the Communists would return virtually 100% of the vote in the areas that they now control. Since Communist areas now probably contain 60% of the population of Vietnam, the Communists could muster a majority, irrespective of the large vote that they might expect to obtain in non-Communist areas. Outside supervision might reduce the margin of Communist victory, but even in the best of circumstances could not be expected to change the final result.

IV. IMMEDIATE ELECTIONS

As in the case of plebiscite, immediate elections for national assemblies in each of the Associated States would probably result in non-Communist victories in Laos and Cambodia and in a Communist victory in Vietnam. The result of such an election in Vietnam is, however, somewhat less predictable than is the result of a plebiscite. Local issues and the personalities of candidates would complicate the situation, and non-Communist nationals who might vote for the Ho regime in a plebiscite would find other choices open to them in an election. Nevertheless, it appears likely that superior Communist organization would achieve at least a plurality of seats in an assembly election in Vietnam. Any government formed in these circumstances would probably contain Communist ministers, with consequences discussed above under the heading "coalition government". If a government was formed without Communist participation—which appears most unlikely—the Communists would still be in a position to exercise their formidable political and paramilitary potentials and would constitute a serious threat to the new government.

SECRET

[GENEVA,] May 4, 1954.

. . . . .

4. Following is a summary of the Under Secretary's remarks on our position in Indochina:

a. Our present official position is that:

1) We have underwritten the Navarre Plan and we will stick with it.

2) The fall of Dien Bien Phu should not deter the French or us from going ahead with the plan to put down the rebellion.

Although this is our official position, there are various alternatives which we should consider and develop our position and tactics on. A major factor is the French political reaction to the events at Dien Bien Phu.

The French ideas about a cease-fire and withdrawing into enclaves would probably result in the loss of the whole area.

We should not be in a great hurry to get on with the Indochina phase of the Conference although both the British and the French are.

The Under Secretary summarized his talk with Eden last night :

1) Eden will give General Smith on an eyes only basis, a paper which will state the strongest language the British can use in any announcement re military staff talks on Southeast Asia. It will be necessary for them to tie these talks in with the end of the Geneva Conference.<sup>2</sup>

2) It was agreed that the U.S. will work on Thailand the UK on Burma and we will see what we can do with the French and the Associated States in order to minimize our losses in Indochina.

The General said that he believed we could get more from the British than was indicated from his talk with Eden. He referred to his possible visit to London to see the Prime Minister. He believed that we could get out an announcement in a day or two on military staff talks in Washington.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Adviser to the United States Delegation (Bonsal)

GENEVA, May 4, 1954.

Participants: Ambassador Pote Sarasin, Ambassador to Washington and Member of Thai Delegation

Philip W. Bonsal

Subject: General Conference Topics

The Thai Ambassador lunched with me. He raised the question of participation in the Indochina phase of the Conference. I told him that, so far as I was aware, the initial organization would be on the basis of nine countries, i.e., the four Berlin powers, the three Associated States, the Vietminh and Communist China. I said that it was not excluded that at a later date other interested states would be invited.

The Ambassador stressed the importance of an extremely close contact between the Thai Delegation and ourselves regarding developments at the Indochina discussions. I agreed fully and said that I thought we would wish to arrange for a regular machinery for contacts of this kind. After some discussion we arrived at the very tentative personal conclusion that presumably the British would brief the Commonwealth countries (Australia and New Zealand) and the US would keep Thailand and the Philippines up to date on Indochina developments. The Ambassador will discuss this further with Prince Wan.

The Ambassador was pleased to note that conversations are about to begin in Washington in which the Thai representatives (the Chargé and the Military Attaché) will participate and at which ways and means of strengthening the Thai military position will be examined. The Ambassador said that if necessary he himself would be glad to fly back to Washington. He could be replaced here by someone from the Thai Foreign Office.

The Ambassador expressed the view that the unsatisfactory British attitude toward the concept of "united action" was not due so much to opposition to what we had in mind as to a desire to maintain an apparent independent UK and British Commonwealth position to avoid any appearance of ready acquiescence in American proposals no matter how meritorious they might be. I expressed interest in this analysis. I said that whatever the reasons, British reluctance to proceed vigorously with the "united action" concept was making the whole problem of developing a strong free world position at Geneva and in Southeast Asia more difficult. He said that he agreed but he expressed confidence that the British would eventually line up with us and that they would get considerable Commonwealth support. He asked me about the attitude of Australia and New Zealand. I said that I had no information about New Zealand but that it was my impression Australia was fully aware of the urgency of a united free world attitude in the face of the Communist design to seize all or a part of Indochina.

In speaking of Cambodia and Laos the Ambassador expressed the view that he expected the relations of those two countries to grow ever closer with Thailand.

GENEVA, May 4, 1954—7 p. m.

Secto 95. Repeated information Saigon 29, Paris 193. Limit distribution. This afternoon Heath spoke with Jacquet, French Secretary of State for the Associated States just before the latter's departure to Paris to consult with his party (URAS) which, Jacquet said, was "getting out of line" and with Bao Dai and Prime Minister Buu Loc.

To the question as to how he saw the conference developing Jacquet replied "speaking not as a minister, but personally and very frankly", he saw only one "possible peaceful solution". That "solution" was national elections to be deferred as long as possible while the United States poured in money in economic aid on a scale almost equivalent to its present program of arms aid and budgetary support. He thought it would be unnecessary to have a cease-fire during this period of waiting for the elections. The Franco-Vietnamese forces were strong enough themselves to handle the situation in the south and center. In the north, the French would have to concentrate their positions perhaps in a zone 40 kilometers or so wide between Haiphong and Hanoi including both cities. He said he would not discuss Cambodia and Laos which presented a separate and lesser problem.

Partition, he said, was no solution. It would be rejected both by the Vietnam Government and the Viet Minh. France could not even suggest such a solution.

He then went on to say again, speaking "personally", that the "solution" of deferred national elections was no true solution. Within a year or two after them, the Chinese and the Viet Minh would take over Indochina by military force.

The only real solution, he felt, would be for United States to intervene militarily in limited force on the side of French and the Vietnamese. He, of course, did not know whether the United States would or could so intervene. He felt certain that American intervention confined to furnishing air and naval support would be sufficient. If we were at all considering intervening, we should do so or decide to do so within the next two months. If delayed beyond that time, our intervention would occur "on the ruins" of the French military effort in Indochina and there would be bitter feeling in France over the delay. From his personal point of view, it was regrettable that we had not judged it desirable or possible to intervene to save Dien Bien Phu where the fortifications might fall even tonight.

Jacquet said that he personally was glad that the Secretary had decided to return to the States in order to present there the grave problems of Indochina and the Conference.

He was wryly amused and assured us that French had had no contact with British on subject and that they were almost as annoyed with British as we were for preventing progress toward united action and for talking about partition.

Margerie explained that sole reason they had not communicated any proposals to us was that they had so far been unable to agree upon any among themselves. He commented on mutual dislike of Bidault and Jacquet and said delegation had so far been unable to get both their agreement to anything, which augured ill for obtaining Cabinet approval. He repeated earlier indications of French thinking that they would like to propose complete evacuation by Viet Minh of Laos and Cambodia to be followed by cease-fire arrangements in different parts of Viet Nam at different times under international control with regrouping of French forces in key areas. He felt satisfactory arrangements might be made for Laos and Cambodia much more quickly and easily than for Viet Nam but one problem was to avoid impression in France that government was ducking difficult Viet Nam problem which was most acute militarily. He indicated full realization of near impossibility of preventing communists from profiting by any cease-fire or armistice arrangement but said that in a thoroughly bad situation it was necessary to seek course with least evil consequences and he repeated hope France could make proposals early in Indochina phase with US support. He was told US would much prefer to support French proposals than to oppose them but that our policy was still that anything short of prosecution of Navarre plan to victory was not good enough. [GENEVA,] 4 May 1954.

Subject: Outline of U.S. Position and Tactics on Indochina Question at Geneva.

Reference: Paper on above subject submitted by Chairman of the Indochina Working Group, dated May 3, 1954.<sup>1</sup>

1. The referenced paper gives me concern because, in general terms, it tends to suggest favorable consideration of U.S. participation in the negotiation of an undesirable Indochina settlement.

2. I continue to believe that, while we should seek to influence the course of the negotiations, as required by paragraph 29 (quoted on page 1 of the reference) of NSC 5405, the U.S. should, nevertheless, have no part in the negotiation of an undesirable Indochina settlement.

3. Our present position as stated by General Smith this morning is, of course, entirely sound. Every effort should continue to be made to brace up the French to the end that they accept the practicability of continuing the war as against the impossibility of any "settlement" that would not lead now or shortly to the loss of Indochina.

4. The question is, how to influence the course of negotiations without being tarred with a sell-out brush. It seems clear to me that we should, in addition to continuing the effort to rally French morale:

a. Obtain U.S. authorization on highest levels now that we take a firm position with the French that we shall not accept any unsatisfactory terms (terms leading now or shortly to the loss of Indochina); and that we shall definitely disassociate ourselves from any such negotiations.

b. Make every effort now to obtain French agreement neither to offer nor accept any terms, or negotiated modifications of terms, that would amount to an unsatisfactory settlement.

c. Let the French know now that we shall not be a party to an unsatisfactory settlement.

5. The foregoing is based on my opinion that it would be illusory to believe that our association with unsatisfactory terms could, even at best, alter appreciably the fact that the terms were unsatisfactory; and that there could be no better way to encourage a French sell-out than to give them any impression, now or later, that any form of sell-out would have U.S. blessing or support. Conversely, the actions recommended in paragraph 4 above have a better chance of preventing agreement by the French to unsatisfactory terms than would our helping them in the crime.

6. I realize, of course, that we must await French reaction to the fluid military situation in Indochina before reaching firm conclusions as to what the French position may be. Meanwhile, however, we shall be helping to encourage the development of a French sell-out position if we imply in any way that we might go along with it.

7. In consistency with the foregoing, I strongly recommend with respect to the "Decisions Required" in the referenced paper that the U.S. by no means get entangled in the predictably unsatisfactory results of negotiations by submitting its own proposals.

8. You may regard this memorandum as political. I submit it because I regard it as political-military. In any case, it reflects the viewpoints of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Secretary of Defense.

ferences and the probability that the Secretary of State will himself have something to say, and because, also, of the delicate nature of the issues now pending before the Geneva Conference, I shall limit my comments on the Indo-China situation to a brief written statement.

United States foreign policy has consistently supported the principles on which was founded the United Nations. A basic expression of this policy was the Vandenberg Resolution of 1948. The United States believes in assuring the peace and integrity of nations through collective action and, in pursuance of the United Nations principle, has entered into regional security agreements with other nations. Examples are the Inter-American Agreement, the NATO Agreement, and a whole series of Pacts in the Pacific. These arrangements are invariably to assure the peaceful security of the contracting nations and to prevent likelihood of attack; they are not arrangements designed primarily for waging war.

The Geneva Conference, now nine days old, has produced no surprises. The expressed fears of some have proved unfounded.

It has not been a "five-power" conference as the Soviet Union tried to make it.

It has not involved establishing express or implied diplomatic recognition by the United States of the Chinese Communist aggressors.

The Korean phase of the Conference has been organized. Here the Communists came up with a scheme for Korean unification which was a Chinese copy of the Soviet scheme for the unification of Germany. Under their proposal no election measures could be taken without Communist consent, and there could be no impartial supervision of the election conditions or of the voting.

This scheme was rejected for Germany. Secretary Dulles tells me that it is equally unacceptable to the Republic of Korea and United Nations members which took part in the Korean War under the United Nations Command now represented at Geneva.

The Indo-China phase of the Conference is in process of being organized and the issues have not yet been clarified. In this matter a large measure of initiative rests with the Governments of France, Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, which are the countries most directly concerned.

Meanwhile plans are proceeding for the realization of a Southeast Asia security arrangement. This was publicly suggested by Secretary Dulles in his address of March 29th. Of course, our principal allies were advised in advance. This proposal of the Secretary of State was not a new one; it was merely reaffirmation of the principles that have consistently guided our post-war foreign policy and a reminder to interested Asian friends that the United States was prepared to join with others in the application of these principles to the threatened area. Most of the free nations of the area and others directly concerned have shown affirmative interest, and conversations are actively proceeding.

Obviously, it was never expected that this collective security arrangement would spring into existence overnight. There are too many important problems to be resolved. But there is a general sense of urgency. The fact that such an organization is in process of formation could have an important bearing upon what happens at Geneva during the Indo-China phase of the Conference.

The countries of the area are now thinking in constructive terms, which include the indispensable concept of collective security. Progress in this matter has been considerable and I am convinced that further progress will continue to be made.

Following are questions and answers:

Q: Secretary Dulles has drawn his sharpest criticism since taking office because of what some people are contending is a major diplomatic defeat for American foreign policy at Geneva. Do you have any comment on that?

A: You can't count a battle lost that is still going on; but I would say further United States' foreign policy, like the foreign policy of all other nations, is designed in this belief: that it serves the enlightened self-interest of the country that it is supposed to reflect, that it is drawn up in favor of.

Now, we continue to work along that line. If any ally disagrees or if someone with hostile intent is able to put over some idea of his, you continue to work; you never give up working persistently and as intelligently as you know how for the best interests of the United States. So there is no such thing as acknowledging a defeat in the execution of foreign policy, as I can see it.

Q: Are you fully satisfied with Secretary Dulles' handling of the Geneva negotiations, and do you expect him to return there?

A: The need for his return or not returning will be determined by himself. After all, he is a mature man and an experienced man.

I would say this: I would never answer a question with respect to anyone, did he over a period of weeks act exactly, let's say, according to standards of perfection.

I will repeat this; Foster Dulles, in my opinion, is the greatest Secretary of State in my memory, and he has my unqualified support in what he is doing, and so far as I know, I have agreed in advance to every policy he has ever brought forward.

Chauvel summoned Achilles and Dennis Allen this morning to state that French Parliamentary situation was serious both for government and Bidault personally and that Bidault might have to return there tonight. He would decide after talking to Falaize who was returning from Paris this afternoon. In this situation Bidault felt it important to make beginning on Indochina phase as soon as possible, preferably by routine organization meeting tomorrow with no substantive discussion before next week. He understood Cambodian and Laotian Ambassadors in Washington had reached Paris last night and assumed delegations from all three Associated States could be here tomorrow. French could not be in position of dragging feet should Russians propose meeting tomorrow. Chauvel has appointment with Gromyko for four this afternoon to discuss chairmanship and opening date.<sup>1</sup> On chairmanship, he would again propose three existing chairmen continue throughout conference but suggested that as second choice we propose Prince Wan in individual capacity as single chairman for Indochina phase. 1. Vietnam problem is purely Vietnamese with no question of partition, only military struggle for control of government.
2. Situation different in Laos and Cambodia which are victims of external aggression.
3. Under Berlin agreement purpose of Geneva conference is to establish peace in all three countries. To this end there should be a cease-fire guaranteed by adequate military and administrative controls under supervision. Cease-fire would take effect only when such guarantees had been embodied in armistice conventions, which might be different for each three states, and when control machinery had been established and was in place. Controls would be based upon Laniel's March 5 conditions.<sup>2</sup> When cease-fire occurred, regular troops would be regrouped into delimited areas and all other forces disarmed. The control machinery would be "international" and would require considerable body of personnel.

4. After peace had been re-established by the cease-fire, political and economic problems could be examined.

In discussing this draft proposal Chauvel said French assumed Russians would propose immediate cease-fire followed by political settlement based on coalition and immediate elections, which would force West into position of opposing cease-fire. French public desire for cease-fire was emotional and French Government could defend its proposal, even though it would in effect delay any cease-fire for long time if not indefinitely, on grounds that conditions demanded were essential for safety of troops themselves. The continued resistance at Dien Bien Phu long after public opinion had discounted its fall had conditioned French opinion to believe its loss would not mean loss of war. He did not exclude possibility of conference calling on opposing forces not to undertake new military operations during negotiations. He assumed very lengthy negotiations would be necessary to reach any armistice agreement and felt that during this period Communist uncertainty as to united action or US intervention might be increased.

Allen inquired whether at some stage in proceedings working out of armistice details might be left to combatants themselves as suggested in Colombo communiqué.<sup>3</sup> Chauvel did not like this idea but said it might be considered. In response to question as to whether he envisaged conference turning into indefinite Panmunjom Chauvel said it might turn armistice negotiations over to working group and adjourn to reconvene when warranted.

In response to Achilles inquiry as to whether "international" meant "UN" supervision, Chauvel stated French had no firm position on this but subsequent discussion indicated French continue to oppose use of UN machinery as establishing precedent which would be used against them in North Africa and elsewhere and that British definitely share

We are asking French for written text proposal as approved by Cabinet and warning them time required obtain US Government decision on whether support their proposal after text received. Believe outline in reference telegram provides basis urgent preliminary consideration Washington. Request instructions soonest.

Meanwhile, preliminary USDel comments follow :

1. Unless or until we have firm support in the United States for some other solution we are not in a position in Geneva to prevent the French from making such a proposal, which is far below a successful prosecution of the Navarre plan.

2. Draft proposal, if accepted by French Cabinet, would provide somewhat better French initial position than might have been feared.

3. Distinction drawn between Vietnamese situation one hand and that Laos and Cambodia on other, is valid and should be useful negotiating point.

4. Key element of draft proposal is that cease-fire should take effect only when "adequate military and administrative controls under supervision" have been embodied in armistice conventions, and when control machinery has been established and is in place. It is perhaps encouraging that proposal is predicated on a long if not indefinite delay in negotiating the armistice conditions and that French believe they can justify this to French opinion on grounds that the conditions are essential for safety of French troops themselves. On the other hand, we must realize that pressure will be very great for hasty conclusion of an agreement.

5. French statement they are not excluding "possibility of conference calling on opposing forces not to undertake new military operations during negotiations" makes it clear that once discussions of armistice have begun there will be real danger of military operations slacking off into what may be in effect de facto cease-fire prior to agreement on control conditions.

6. If the French in effect take the Laniel statement<sup>2</sup> as their starting point this is probably the best initial French position that could be expected, given the present French mood.

7. Allen's suggestion that working out of armistice details might be left to combatants themselves is obvious echo of Nehru proposals<sup>3</sup> and would seem dangerous in that it might weaken US capacity to influence negotiations.

8. In view firm position we taking in Korean negotiations on UN supervision it would seem advisable for us urge French accept UN auspices for control machinery if it is decided we should support French proposal.

9. We doubt whether French would in fact remain firm in negotiations for satisfactory controls, and believe they would slide rapidly toward almost inevitable Communist counter proposal of immediate cease-fire without controls. Important element in blocking French capitulation will be, as French have suggested, the degree to which we on our part can strengthen the French hand by increasing Communist uncertainty as to possibility of US intervention and by achieving success in organization some form South East Asian coalition.

Our soldiers have never told us the minimum we can accept. If we knew this I am confident I can persuade the British to go along with us.

"It will depend tomorrow on the Viet Minh, which is invited to the Geneva conference, to realize the hopes we have placed in it (for a counterproposition leading to a cease-fire). But one must not expect from us a pure and simple capitulation. To accept a cease-fire today, at the demand of Ho Chi Minh, would simply mean to lay down our arms. Parliament never gave us (the government) such a mandate. If it had it would be up to another government than mine to carry it out. Dulte 51. London eyes only Ambassador. Repeated information London 122. Eden has just given me the memorandum which follows:

"In his statement in the House of Commons on April 27, the Prime Minister said:

'Her Majesty's Government are not prepared to give any undertakings about United Kingdom military action in Indochina in advance of the results of Geneva. Her Majesty's Government have not entered into any new political or military commitments. My Right Honorable friend has, of course, made it clear to his colleagues at Geneva that if settlements are reached at Geneva, Her Majesty's Government will be ready to play their full part in supporting them in order to promote a stable peace in the Far East.'

"I am ready to recommend that Her Majesty's Government should take part at once with the United States, France, Australia and New Zealand in an examination by the Five Power staff agency of the Indochina and South East Asia situation, both now and subsequent to the Geneva conference, in the light of this statement, including the implications of any Geneva settlement. In addition to military questions, there will certainly be political and economic problems which will require urgent examination. For this purpose we suggest that political and economic experts should be attached to the agency as appropriate.

"This study would be of direct interest to a number of other countries, notably the powers represented at the Colombo conference and Siam. It would be understood that these countries would be informed of the intention to initiate the study, kept suitably advised of the progress of the work and, where appropriate and by agreement, invited to take part.

"A joint public announcement of our intentions would be issued. It would, of course, be essential that this should be carefully considered and agreed upon.

"The present terms of reference of the Five Power staff agency would require amendment in order to make clear the circumstances to which the study is to apply."

This represents a number of redrafts since I received his proposed draft note late yesterday evening. We have had lengthy and I believe frank discussions, and I am sure the British understand our position as we understand theirs. The note represents a considerable compromise on their part and includes suggestions made not only by me but by Phleger and Admiral Davis. We believe here that if accepted it will have a good effect on the conference and on the public opinion of both countries, and should produce a coordinated military view, which is now lacking. Eden has suggested informally that the Five Power agency be strengthened by the assignment of some senior and experienced officers. He went so far as to imply that General Templar, who will shortly become CIGS, might take part in the examinations and plans which are proposed. Our recommendation is that you concur in this proposal.<sup>1</sup> If so, please give me your views as to the form of joint public announcement which would be acceptable. Allen stated British thinking in general agreement French proposal along right lines and hoped it would be presented at outset of Indochina discussions as clear cut proposal which would capture headlines. British feared that if Bidault spoke only in general terms, Communist bloc would present concise proposal which would take headlines and leave West in position of trying to formulate counter-proposal. Chauvel recognized importance of French obtaining initiative insofar as public concerned and said he would urge Bidault to table short and specific proposal.

In his response to question as to United States attitude, Achilles said this depended on Washington, since current instructions were that anything short of complete victory unacceptable. We would need precise French proposal soonest. Delegation liked French insistence armistice be concluded only under satisfactory safeguards, which implied time for strengthening Western position in Southeast Asia, but frankly feared pressures in France for earlier agreement to unsatisfactory armistice. Chauvel recognized this danger, but felt immediate future most critical time and that if we survived (1) tomorrow's confidence vote, (2) commit attempt to extend possible Dien Bien Phu truce into general cease-fire, and (3) fall of Dien Bien Phu, we would have several months during rainy season when pressure of French opinion would be less than in recent weeks, or at present time.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Adviser to the United States Delegation (Bonsal)

TOP SECRET

GENEVA, May 6, 1954.

Subject: Indochina Phase of Conference

Participants: M. Jacques Roux, Chief of Far East Section of French Foreign Office and Member of French Delegation
Philip W. Bonsal

I lunched with M. Roux today. Our discussion of (a) Chinese Communist participation in the invitation to the Vietminh and (b) the chairmanship of the Indochina phase of the conference have been covered in a separate memorandum.<sup>1</sup>

M. Roux said that although the conference would open with only the nine participants which had been agreed upon, it seemed to him certain that the other side, following the line taken by Molotov and by Chou En-lai in their recent speeches, would propose that other Asian powers be included, particularly India, Indonesia and Burma. We might take either one of three positions:

1) reject the Soviet proposal and urge that the conference be kept to nine;

2) accept the Soviet suggestions on condition that Thailand, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand be also included, or

3) propose that the other states of the general Southeast Asian or South Asian region be invited to the conference as (a) observers of the Indochina phase, i.e., the discussions to see whether an armistice is possible as a prelude to restoration of peace in Indochina and later (b) as guarantors and controllers of the armistice and of whatever political arrangements including elections may eventually be agreed upon.

I did not comment other than to say that our conception of the two phases of the Geneva Conference had been that the two sides in the conflict would be represented and that neutrals would not be included. M. Roux said that the British are apparently very anxious to get the Indians in.

I referred to the oral explanation of the possible French position with regard to an armistice in Indochina given by Ambassador Chauvel to Mr. Achilles and Mr. Allen yesterday.<sup>2</sup> M. Roux said that the French Delegation is rather uncertain in this matter at present stating that it has not yet received definitive instructions from Paris, i.e., M. Bidault has not been told what the attitude of the cabinet may be. M. Roux recalled the divergence of views within the cabinet (Pleven, Jacquet, Reynaud, Faure, etc.). He also told me that General Navarre currently favors a cease-fire as soon as possible.

I said that from the point of view of our Delegation, it was most important that we receive a full statement of the position which the French Delegation plans to take on substantive matters regarding Indochina so that we could refer this position to Washington and seek instructions as to the attitude which our Delegation should take in regard to it.

He understood this and said that he would do his best to see that we receive such a paper just as soon as possible.

I took occasion to say that obviously it was of the greatest importance that the politico-military position of our side be made to appear as strong as possible if we were to have any prospect of success at the conference. I said that for example, the enemy must be left in no doubt that we are actively engaged in preparations for next year's campaign, i.e., that replacements, reinforcements and additional equipment, etc., are being forwarded in accordance with our preparations, if possible, even beyond the previously estimated requirements of the Navarre Plan. He agreed fully and pointed to the fact that reinforcements and replacements will be sent out to Indochina.

Turning to the international aspects of reinforcement of the position of our side, Roux wondered whether the five-power staff agency which had been established some time ago might not serve as a nucleus for the formation of the defensive coalition which we had in mind. Its terms of reference would have to be expanded and its membership possibly increased. I said that I was not in a position to speak with authority but that I understood in part from the press that this idea was being actively explored.

that he facilitate contact between Viet Minh and French commanders on spot to arrange such truce. Chinese said merely that he would look into possibility. French felt that while this might mean nothing, it contrasted with Molotov's extreme negative attitude (Dulte 20, April 28 repeated London 86, Paris 137, Saigon 8<sup>2</sup>).

Chinese Secretary General sent for French this morning and stated that after discussing request with Viet Minh and Russians, Chou En-lai felt that this issue could best be discussed between French and Vietnamese and Viet Minh delegations here, at any time anyone wished.

French were struck by similarity of this reply to that given by Molotov (Dulte 20) and believe it meant Russians clearly calling tune. Much more serious from their point of view is possibility that Communists intend to propose immediate cease-fire at Dien Bien Phu to be expanded to rest of Indochina. They feel this would strike French public opinion at its most sensitive nerve and now suspect this Communist design may be reason Viet Minh had not already overwhelmed Dien Bien Phu.

The Department of State to the United States Delegation<sup>1</sup>

TOP SECRET      PRIORITY      WASHINGTON, May 6, 1954—9:35 p. m.

Tedul 37. Secretary held hour and half briefing of 25 leading members Congress yesterday.<sup>2</sup> Generally friendly, constructive atmosphere, no direct criticism, although considerable discussion on future plans and weakness of British and French.

Secretary described set-up of Conference and briefly went over Korean developments. Explained difficulty with Allies on all-Korean elections and trouble finding someone to speak up in defense of US against Communist vilification. Congressmen showed interest in this and asked about positions our various Allies.

Turning to Indochina, Secretary traced developments in our thinking and plans since inception massive aid program last fall. Three prerequisites demanded from French had then seemed to be met: understanding A.S. become independent, effective program for rapid training of natives, aggressive military plan. Prerequisites would lead to our desired objectives. Navarre Plan still sound, but French will for offensive action and even ability govern themselves disintegrated. Following development united action concept and as French military situation deteriorated, we began think of US military intervention. In April 3 meeting with Congressmen agreed objectives of earlier prerequisites must be met to increased degree and other interested nations must join in before such intervention could be authorized.<sup>3</sup> Secretary described London-Paris trip and Eden's renegeing on communiqué.<sup>4</sup> Some adverse Congressional comment on latter and Secretary said thought Nehru had pressured British.

<sup>4</sup> For information on the Secretary's visit to London and Paris on Apr. 11-14, 1954, see pp. 514 and 517. Text of Dulles-Eden communiqué was sent to the Department of State from London in telegram Secto 2, Apr. 13, printed in volume XIII.

Secretary described two informal French requests for US air intervention on April 4 and 22 and his replies thereto.<sup>5</sup> Described French mood of extreme urgency and British Cabinet confirmation of reversal of agreement in communiqué of April 13. British terrified by H-bomb, pressured by Nehru, contrasted their giving up India with French call for help to keep Indochina, and gave higher rating to risk of Chinese intervention and global war if West intervened. Secretary read from memo of conversation in which he had chastised Eden for British stand.<sup>6</sup> Number adverse Congressional comments on British position, especially Judd.<sup>7</sup>

Secretary said had reached three conclusions. US should not intervene militarily until and unless prerequisites agreed on at April 4 meeting<sup>8</sup> were fulfilled. Conditions must exist for successful conclusion of war and such was not now case. Participation other allies academic since French had not fulfilled prerequisites. Considerable opposition to internationalization of war in France anyway. This was Administration position on intervention. No Congressional comments on this.<sup>9</sup>

Secondly, US must push rapidly for development of SEA community, probably without Vietnam but hopefully with Laos and Cambodia. British might come in and they might want Burma and India too. We were agreeable to Burma. This community might offer fair chance "insulate" rest SEA against possible loss of Vietnam.

Third conclusion was we should not write off British and French in spite of their weakness in Asia. Lack of 100 per cent cooperation one of welcome disadvantages of democratic system.

Dulte 51<sup>10</sup> then received and Secretary read pertinent parts. Considerable discussion ensued on Eden's idea of "five white powers" consultation and conclusions 2 and 3 above. Judd strongly against Eden "plan", wanted Asians in even without UK and France. Know-

If you deem it useful, you may point out to your colleagues that all of these stories represent a garbled version of a confidential meeting and that they are not to be relied upon. The US position is as stated by President Eisenhower yesterday and as I will state in my speech tomorrow." land<sup>11</sup> agreed on importance of Asians, as did several others. Knowland said we should have commitments from UK, Australia, New Zealand and others to help us if needed in Korea or Japan, et cetera, if we were to have collective security pact with them for SEA, which he personally favored. Secretary said Burma, Thailand, Philippines plus A.S. would help and that he told Eden he wanted Formosa in if British brought in India. McCormack and Smith<sup>12</sup> supported Secretary on conclusion three and several others did too.

Secretary described effect of Indochina developments on French government and EDC. Russell<sup>13</sup> paid fine tribute to Secretary for briefings and cooperation with Congress and others expressed appreciation.

Secto 126. Repeated information Paris 213. Re Secto 109 repeated Paris 202,<sup>1</sup> Eden tells me that at dinner last night his discussion with Molotov of Chairmanship covered same ground as ref tel, with Molotov willing to agree only to rotation among nine or five or four (without France) or two. Eden rejected all of these (although he and we see no objection to UK-USSR).

At this morning's Chauvel-Allen-Achilles meeting additional possibilities discussed: (1) France-USSR, (2) UK-USSR-France or (3) UK-USSR-one Associated States, probably Laos. UK and US prepared accept any of these with French preferring (2) and putting all three to Bidault in addition to further consideration of UK-USSR.

Molotov appeared in no hurry begin Indochina discussions but he and Eden discussed possibility of having organizational meeting tomorrow with Korean Plenary postponed until Saturday.

Later this afternoon Eden informed me Bidault was consulting Paris but probably would not be ready for IC organizational meeting tomorrow. (Lacoste confirms this, but adds that there is possibility Paris will instruct them attempt to call IC meeting tomorrow afternoon).

I told Eden we would be agreeable IC meeting either day, or if French still not ready, early next week. I suggested no Korean Plenary Saturday,<sup>2</sup> but agreed possibility meeting sixteen that day.

Colombia and Philippines inscribed for Korean Plenary tomorrow. If New Zealand does not speak tomorrow, will probably speak Monday. Achilles-Allen-Chauvel Meeting, Geneva, May 7, Morning: The United States Delegation to the Department of State

GENEVA, May 7, 1954—4 p. m.

Secto 134. Repeated information Paris 216, London 133. Re Secto 124 May 6 repeated Paris 212 and London 131.<sup>1</sup> At this morning's Chauvel meeting, he reported Bidault had withdrawn objections to UK-USSR alternating in chair. It was agreed Eden should informally advise Molotov to that effect and at same time seek latter's agreement to Eden chairing the first meeting. In view French difficulties in getting Cabinet approval of their position, they are anxious that no Indochina meeting be held before Monday at earliest and Eden will suggest this to Molotov on grounds Bidault may have to return to Paris for weekend and that Laotian and Cambodian heads of delegations arriving only Sunday. While three delegates would like to postpone beginning of substantive Indochina discussion as long as possible, it was recognized that in view of fighting at Dien Bien Phu and elsewhere it would not look well to have first meeting adjourn after merely brief procedural discussion. Furthermore, French felt that at first meeting they must say something about truce for evacuation of wounded which would presumably touch off substantive discussion from Communist side.

French wish to speak first and their request to that effect to Eden as chairman considered already filed. French hope to be able to table their specific proposal then. They reported Vietnamese not certain whether they would prefer to speak before or after Viet Minh and subsequent batting order accordingly left open with expectation US and UK will not speak until after at least one Communist speech.

Secretariat for Indochina phase was discussed, with French proposing their present Deputy, Paul-Boncour, head secretariat for Indochina phase. Allen and Achilles recognized French interest but hoped present secretariat could be kept intact (since it appears technically feasible to separate expenses incurred for each phase). We understood Paul-Boncour much less capable than Kural. Allen proposed secretariat be kept intact with Kural as Secretary General but delegating responsibility to his Deputy, Paul-Boncour, for Indochina phase. This would be discussed further but we would like to have Kural retain substantive charge of secretariat for Indochina phase with minimum substantive delegation of responsibility to Paul-Boncour.

It was agreed it would be desirable to have meeting of heads of six delegates late Sunday.

GENEVA, May 7, 1954—1 p. m.

First sentence in second paragraph of initial British draft read as follows: "I am ready to recommend that HMG should take part at once with the US, France, Australia and New Zealand in a study to be undertaken by the Five-Power staff agency of the implications of such support for an Indochina settlement."

This sentence in latest draft now reads: "I am ready to recommend that HMG should take part at once with the US, France, Australia and New Zealand in a preliminary examination by the Five-Power staff agency of the Indochina and Southeast Asia situation, both now and as it may be after the Geneva Conference, in the light of this statement."<sup>2</sup>

It is possible that British desire initially was to change our own proposal, which was intended primarily to start machinery on military

<sup>2</sup> Unsigned memorandum for the record, May 7, indicated that the President thought the U.S. reply to Eden's proposal should make clear (1) that the Five-Power Staff Agency, alone or with other nations, was not a satisfactory substitute for a political coalition of Southeast Asian countries, (2) that a Staff Agency examination was acceptable to see how these nations could give military aid to the Southeast Asian countries in their collective defense effort, and (3) that the United States would not agree to a "white man's party" to determine the problems of the Southeast Asian nations. (Eisenhower Library, Dulles papers, "1951-1959, Indochina") levels for general consideration of Southeast Asia and Indochina situation and to improve bargaining position at Geneva, into a proposition amounting primarily to our committing ourselves in advance to association with and support of any Indochina settlement at Geneva no matter how unacceptable to us. This British position probably based on view that British political situation requires that in advance of Geneva settlement or failure, no step be taken indicating possibility of failure and British planning on that basis.

Feel it is clear from comparison of two versions quoted above that British have yielded considerably with respect to their initial position. In this connection, the shift in British position resulted not only from our persuasion and British fear of rift with US but also from pressure by Australians and New Zealanders.

Although current British press stories have apparently been based on original British effort to commit us in advance to support of any Geneva settlement, it is possible British public opinion might now be shifting somewhat because of President's recent statement.

We think best method of sounding present state of British thinking is to reply to Eden's proposal on basis of provisions contained in subparagraphs 1 and 2 of Tedul 36 as representing US understanding and basis its acceptance of proposal. In light of foregoing do not see why this might not be acceptable to British provided provision subparagraph 1 is not wholly exclusive.

This reply should, of course, be made informally and orally in the hope that it would produce further favorable development in British position before anything is committed to paper on either side.

What I want to emphasize is that the British propose staff examinations by an already constituted agency as a matter of common prudence. They realize the necessity of this, yet they are caught on the horns of a dilemma, resulting on the one hand from the widespread feeling in Britain that in some way or other the Geneva Conference is going to produce agreements which will solve all of the problems of Asia, and on the other the inevitability of criticism that staff examinations and long-range planning should have been under way long ago. They see developments very much as indicated, the second and third conclusions mentioned in Tedul 37. Eden said "at the proper time you will bring in Thailand and we can probably bring in Burma, although this will take some doing." They will of course be very sensitive as to the form of any public statement, for the reasons I have just mentioned. I would like as much latitude as possible in discussing this with Eden, as unfortunately it has leaked in all directions and in many distorted forms. As a matter of fact, press speculation has reached the point now that almost any public announcement might be a letdown. It might be just as well to proceed quietly and unostentatiously with the action contemplated and avoid any public statement.

Smith-Bidault Meeting, Geneva, May 7, Afternoon: The United States Delegation to the Department of State

SECRET NIACT

GENEVA, May 8, 1954—11 a. m.

Dulte 54. Repeated information Paris 220. Had long talk yesterday afternoon with Bidault. He was dog-tired but thoroughly lucid and wanted to cry on somebody's shoulder. Told him that Dien-Bien-Phu, while tragic loss,<sup>1</sup> was not military disaster and need not be psychological one. Question now was what could be saved in Indochina and what any of us could do to help.

Bidault said it was hard to forecast psychological reaction in France. He had asked his government to give him instructions to be firm but his draft proposals were being made vaguer and he was seriously disturbed by word Jacquet had brought back (Secto 133, repeated Paris 215<sup>2</sup>). He would be talking with Laniel by phone and if he did not get the instructions he wanted, he would be much tempted to go to Paris to try to get them by personal persuasion. He felt it would be easier to get a firm position from government on Saturday than on Monday<sup>3</sup> but was not sure whether his trip to Paris at this time would produce instructions he wanted or be straw that would break government's back. Man in street in France was beginning to count hours until cease-fire could be arranged.

I asked him how nearly alone he was in his fight. He said others felt the same way but he was almost only one to speak out. He had been accused in press at least three times of having imposed his will on Cabinet and was not sure he could do it fourth time. He would under no circumstances surrender but he might lose his hide. Pressure would be very strong to agree to a cease-fire and then see what could be done. Even if he could get government to reject this approach, pressures would develop for worse solutions.

I agreed present moment was critical but thought that if he could persuade the government not to capitulate immediately, things would shortly get better. I hoped he would be able to propose something we could support. He interjected that if French position was something we could not support, he would not himself present it. I reiterated that if he could steer his government through this immediate period, future would be much better. He remarked on difficulty of trying to fight Indochina and EDC battles at same time. Obtaining support for continuing fight in Indochina required appeals to elementary patriotism, whereas support for EDC required rejection of simple patriotism. EDC required support of Socialists who were in entirely wrong camp on Indochina.

I reiterated fall of Dien-Bien-Phu should not mean loss of all of Vietnam let alone southeast Asia. US was seeking additional ways to help and possibilities of more active support. I told him that you were making good progress since your return and that US was more determined than ever to organize some form of collective security in southeast Asia. We were convinced that some form of southeast Asian NATO was necessary but that would take time. Could French provide it? Bidault said he would gladly give us time but was not sure his colleagues would give it to him. Proposals for partition could not be entertained. He thought we would probably have to accept military conditions under which Vietnamese would not be in control of all Vietnam territory but we could not tolerate establishment of Communist state in any part of Vietnam.

I remarked that tragic as was loss of Dien-Bien-Phu, its loss had at least deprived Communists of powerful lever upon French opinion. Bidault said he would do his best to obtain firm instructions.

I told Eden of foregoing talk and he is considering what British can do to encourage Bidault and strengthen his position.

Secto 132. Repeated information Paris 214, London 132, Saigon 37. Re Secto 106 from Geneva, 5 May.<sup>1</sup> Following is informal translation of paper given us last night containing French proposals as sent Paris by Bidault. In giving it to us, Lacoste stated that delegation had considered adding proposal based on "Eden plan" for Germany with respect to future elections but was currently inclined not to do so on grounds it would be merely needless complication. Chauvel discussed paper with Vietnamese representatives last night and reports their agreement to it.

"(1) It should be pointed out first that what is presently called 'the Indochina problem' is essentially a problem of internal order. Thus neither the existence of the state of Vietnam nor its territorial integrity are at stake. What is involved, during the hostilities in progress, is the allegiance of the population of that state to this or that regime.

"(2) It is only recently, and somewhat as a side issue, that a new element has been introduced into the Indochinese question, the fact of the invasion of the other two states of the peninsula, that is to say Laos and Cambodia, by armed forces foreign to those two states.

"(3) As a result, however, of that extension of hostilities to Laos and Cambodia, the establishment of peace in Indochina envisaged by the Berlin communiqué should include the termination of hostilities in the territory as a whole of each of the three states.

"(4) This being the goal—re-establishment of peace in one country, Vietnam, ravaged by a war whose primary characteristic is that of being a civil war, and in two countries, Laos and Cambodia, victims of an external aggression, a foreign aggression, there remains to be settled the conditions under which peace should be re-established.

"The cease-fire which must necessarily mark the beginning of the first step of the return to peace cannot in itself suffice to insure peace. It must be accompanied by the immediate and effective putting into operation of provisions of both a military and administrative nature destined on the one hand to insure the security of the troops on the spot and the population, and on the other hand to guarantee each of the two parties in conflict against an abusive utilization of the cessation of combat by the other party.

"(5) It follows that the cease-fire can take place only following the signature of armistice conventions in which would be included clauses whose purpose has just been defined and whose coming into effect should coincide with the cease-fire.

"With the aim of avoiding the risks of hostilities breaking out again accidentally or otherwise, partially or generally, other stipulations should be written into the armistice conventions having the effect of regrouping in separate noncommunicating and strictly delimited zones the military forces of both parties.

"(6) Finally, the armistice conventions should establish an international control which would become effective at the same time as the conventions themselves. The particular situation in Vietnam, in Laos and Cambodia being different in each of these states, separate conventions should be concluded for each of them.

"(7) Once hostilities are terminated by the entry into force of these different conventions, the political and economic problems whose settlement would be necessary to insure a stable character to the peace, can be examined."

 Ray L. Thurston, US Delegation

[Here follows the first portion of the conversation dealing with the Korean phase of the Geneva Conference.]

After a preliminary remark to the effect that Turkey was not a participant in the Indochinese discussions, Acikalin asked General Smith how things were going on that side. General Smith emphasized that the problem at this stage was primarily one for the French and the Associated States. The US has not yet formulated a definite position, but it was our thought that we might be able to save Laos and Cambodia in any event. In his remarks the Turkish delegate took a very pessimistic line on Indochina and with fervent gestures to a map of the Far East on the wall asked how he could contain the Communist march on Southeast Asia once a Communist state obtained control of a part of Indochina. He was critical of the French on the colonial aspect and talked about the importance of the free Asian nations having a role to play. He referred to the color consciousness of the Asians as a factor we had to take into account.

"Your Majesty: On behalf of the American people I should like to express to you and the people of Viet-Nam our admiration for the gallant men of the Vietnamese forces who, together with their comrades of the French Union, for two months so heroically defended Dien Bien Phu against insuperable odds. It is sad indeed that the fortress and its brave defenders have fallen to the enemy, but we can be heartened in the knowledge that their sacrifice has not been in vain. Not only have they taken a terrible toll of the enemy, but, I think more important, their heroic resistance to the evil forces of Communist aggression has given inspiration to all who support the cause of human freedom. Those brave men made their sacrifice in order that individual freedom and national independence for the people of Viet-Nam should not be lost to Communist enslavement. Memorandum of Conversation, by the Adviser to the United States Delegation (Getz)<sup>1</sup>

GENEVA, May 7, 1954.

Participants: Ambassador Heath
 Mr. McBride
 Mr. Getz
 Mr. Dac Khe—Minister of National Democratization
 Member of Vietnamese Delegation
 Mr. Buu Kinh—Adviser to the Vietnamese Delegation

Subject: Vietnamese Views on the Indochina Phase of the Conference.

Mr. Dac Khe entertained the above members of the US delegation at dinner.

Dac Khe opened the conversation by expressing to Ambassador Heath the very strong Vietnamese view that they did not want this conference; they expected and wanted the conference to be a failure; but they would do nothing to "sabotage" the gathering.

Dac Khe and Buu Kinh, apparently as a result of the story in the Herald Tribune this morning,<sup>2</sup> expressed some anxiety over the possibility of the US "writing off" Viet-Nam and concentrating on saving Cambodia and Laos from the Communists. They were assured that this was not the intention of the US.

The main point upon which Dac Khe dwelt for most of the evening was that the Vietnamese delegation firmly believes that a military solution to the Indochinese problem cannot be separated from a political settlement. He is afraid that the French are so taken up with the serious military problem that they might accept a cease fire without political guarantees. He returned time and time again to this subject, and stated that this was the firm view of Bao Dai.

The Vietnamese "plan" would be:

1. The French proposal must include the negotiations of an armistice as part of a complete military-political program.

2. The Laniel program<sup>3</sup> was acceptable as a basis provided it was expanded providing for UN inspection teams along the Chinese border. The Viet-Minh forces would disband [disband?] and lay down and surrender their arms to the Vietnamese Government under an amnesty declaration which would be guaranteed and supervised by a

United Nations Commission. Sometime after the armistice had been concluded national elections would occur under United Nations supervision. If the elections so resulted a coalition Government might then occur, but not before. He said that he had discussed in general terms this Vietnamese "plan" with the French but had not mentioned the United Nations supervision which he feared was unacceptable to the French.

When asked by Ambassador Heath as to Vietnamese [views?] on UN action, both Buu Kinh and Dac Khe [stated?] the belief that this would be desirable, but that it should be under the Security Council rather than the General Assembly. In the Security Council, they said, they could count on the veto of the US or Nationalist China to block any undesirable Russian proposals, and would not risk the possibility of Indian leadership in General Assembly with probable unfavorable results. Mr. McBride pointed out that because of this veto power the Security Council had become a rather sterile organization, and that the necessary majority in the Assembly for any desirable proposal could probably be attained with very little risk. The prestige would be much greater in this forum. The Vietnamese, however, persisted in believing the Security Council offered the greater insurance.

The discussion then turned to tactics in the conference. Dac Khe stated that the Vietnamese delegation was of the opinion that they should let the Viet-Minh representatives speak first; in this way, the Vietnamese, twenty-four hours afterwards could both rebut and attack in their first speech. This would also permit them to let the Viet-Minh take the blame for initiating name-calling and the abuse, to which they would have no hesitation in responding. Dac Khe agreed that it might be best to let either the Cambodians or the Lao lead off for our side.

Ambassador Heath stressed the importance of having good English translations of their speeches ready to hand out to the press immediately after they speak, and said that members of the US delegation would be pleased to assist in this work. Dac Khe said that he had translators, but hoped that we would be able to check their work.

SECRET      PRIORITY

GENEVA, May 7, 1954—8 p. m.

Secto 136. Repeated information Paris 217, London 134, Moscow 51. Following agreement between Bidault and Molotov regarding issuance invitations to Indochina phase Geneva Conference, US, UK and French delegation heads joined in invitations to Vietnamese, Cambodian and Laotian representatives. Soviets, presumably taking as pretext fact invitations our side had not been issued by single state was case in Korean phase, issued invitation to Viet Minh in name of USSR and Chinese People's Republic (as reported by Tass). This obviously violation of Four-Power Berlin Agreement.

We have discussed matter with French and British delegations making suggestion that French delegation as Berlin power on our side chiefly interested in Indochina, should make statement for the record to the effect that form of invitation to Viet Minh violated Four-Power accord. There would be no question of contesting right of Viet Minh to be present or of demanding that correct invitation be forwarded.

French and British have now indicated their unwillingness to make such a statement on matter which they apparently regard as purely procedural. They believe that while Soviet violation exists, our side has not accepted or agreed to such violation and in any case they do not see utility of raising issue at this point. They apparently wish avoid any risk of debate or loss of time on this issue which their public opinions would regard as very minor in context major Indochina problems.

We believe we should not let this incident pass unnoticed although we do not believe that critical importance should be attached to it. We would not wish to be put in position that because we have not raised issue in case of invitation to Viet Minh, we are obliged to accept Five-Power principle in event additional invitations are issued. Furthermore, passing mention this violation of agreement by USSR would serve again highlight Secretary's success in completely blocking manifold Soviet attempts to secure acceptance Five-Power principle at Geneva.

US delegation believes matter could be handled either (a) through brief statement for the record at opening meeting on Indochina or (b) through statement by General Smith at press conference. Choice of methods would seem to depend in part on extent to which issue has been played in American press. (We have seen only editorial mention New York Times May 4.) We would wish to avoid strong reaction by USSR which would be designed put US in position of having raised purely procedural issue on which we would have little support from our friends and which would delay cessation of fighting in Indochina generally.

If statement on this point is made by US delegation at plenary meeting, it would follow a general expression of the US delegation's satisfaction that the Indochina phase of the conference has now opened and of the delegation's determination to work with other delegations for the restoration of peace in Indochina under conditions that will guarantee the integrity and freedom of Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos. Proposed text on invitation issue follows:

"The United States delegation takes this opportunity to recall that at Berlin, the US joined with France, the UK and the USSR in agreeing to organize a conference at Geneva to consider the problems of Korea and of Indochina. Subsequently, the same four powers reached agreement as to the composition of the Indochina phase of the conference, an agreement reflected in the presence here today of the nine delegations in this hall. As in the case of the Korean phase, there are only four inviting powers, the UK, France, the US and the USSR. Therefore, if, as has been stated in press reports, the invitation issued to the so-called Democratic Republic of Vietnam appears in the name of both the USSR and the Communist Chinese regime, that invitation is, in its form although not in substance, at variance with the clear understanding of the Foreign Ministers present at Berlin last February. Assuming the press reports to be accurate the US delegation can only regret that the Indochina phase of this conference should be initiated by a procedural evasion on the part of the USSR of previously reached agreements."

Please instruct urgently.<sup>1</sup>

THE ISSUES AT GENEVA

I welcome this opportunity to talk with you about the Conference now going on in Geneva and the related aspects of our foreign policy.

First of all, I join with you in paying tribute to the gallant defenders of Dien Bien Phu. May it be given us to play a worthy part to defend the values for which they gave their lives.

THE PROBLEM OF SOUTHEAST ASIA

Let me turn now to the problem of Southeast Asia. In that great peninsula and the islands to the south live nearly 200 million people in seven states—Burma; the three states of Indochina—Laos, Cambodia and Vietnam; Thailand; Malaya; and Indonesia. Communist conquest of this area would seriously imperil the free world position in the Western Pacific. It would, among other things, endanger the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand, with all of which the United States has mutual security treaties. It would deprive Japan of important foreign markets and sources of food and raw materials.

In Vietnam, one of the three Indochinese states, war has been going on since 1946. When it began, Indochina was a French colony just liberated from Japanese occupation. The war started primarily as a war for independence. What started as a civil war has now been taken over by international Communism for its own purposes. Ho Chi Minh, the Communist leader in Vietnam, was trained in Moscow and got his first revolutionary experience in China.

In the name of nationalism, the Communists aim to deprive the people of Vietnam of their independence by subjecting them to the new imperialism of the Soviet bloc.

What is going on in Indochina is a perfect example of the Soviet Communist strategy for colonial and dependent areas which was laid down by Lenin and Stalin many years ago and which the Communists have practiced to take over much of Asia.

The Indochina area was vulnerable. The Governments of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia had not yet received full political independence. Their peoples were not adequately organized to fight against the Communist-led rebels, and they did not feel that they had a stake in the struggle which justified great sacrifice.

President Eisenhower became familiar with the problem when he was the Supreme Commander of NATO in Europe. He had seen the strain and the drain which the Indochina war put upon France. He was aware of the growing discontent in France resulting from the long war where the French were assuming the principal burden of the fight and where human and material costs were mounting.

I recall in December 1952 when General Eisenhower, as President-elect, was returning from his Korean trip on the cruiser Helena, we discussed gravely the problem of Indochina.

We realized that if Vietnam fell into hostile hands, and if the neighboring countries remained weak and divided, then the Communists could move on into all of Southeast Asia. For these reasons, the Eisenhower Administration from the outset gave particular attention to the problem of Southeast Asia.

Our efforts took two complementary lines. We sought to strengthen the resistance to Communism in Indochina. We sought also to build in Southeast Asia a broader community of defense.

INDOCHINA MEASURES

In Indochina itself, the following steps seemed to us important :

1. The French should give greater reality to their intention to grant full independence to Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia. This would take away from the Communists their false claim to be leading the fight for independence.

2. There should be greater reliance upon the national armies who would be fighting in their own homeland. This, we believed, could be done if the peoples felt that they had a good cause for which to fight and if better facilities for training and equipment were provided for them.

3. There should be greater free-world assistance. France was carrying on a struggle which was over-burdening her economic resources.

Much progress was made in each of these respects. The French Declaration of July 3, 1953, pledged full independence to Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia. Already, a treaty of independence has been concluded with Laos, and Emperor Bao Dai told me, in Paris, two weeks ago, that he felt that Vietnam was assured of its independence.

On the military side, a two-year plan was worked out by General Navarre. It was designed to speed the training of native forces.

The cost of this operation would be considerable. The United States, which was already paying part of the cost of the war, agreed to bear the greater part of the total cost. We are now paying at the rate of about $800,000,000 a year, plus a very large provision of military equipment.

Despite the gains on these fronts, there has been a growing belief by the French people that France was over-extended, in view of its responsibilities in Asia, in Africa and in Europe. As a result, when I met in Berlin last January and February with the Foreign Ministers of France, Great Britain and the Soviet Union, the French Government asked that the projected conference on Korea be expanded to discuss also the problem of peace in Indochina.

Shortly after the Berlin Conference adjourned, the Communists, as was to be expected from them, began to expend their military assets, human and material, in a desperate effort to win some victory which they would exploit for political purposes. They concentrated on a mass assault against one of the French outposts—that of Dien Bien Phu. That assault was pushed with a callous disregard of human life.

Now, Dien Bien Phu has fallen. Its defense, of 57 days and nights, will go down in history as one of the most heroic of all time. The defenders, composed of French and native forces, inflicted staggering losses on the enemy. The French soldiers showed that they have not lost either the will or the skill to fight even under the most adverse conditions. It shows that Vietnam produces soldiers who have the qualities to enable them to defend their country.

An epic battle has ended. But great causes have, before now, been won out of lost battles.

The Chinese Communists have been supplying the forces of Vietnam rebels with munitions, trucks, anti-aircraft guns, radar, and technical equipment and technical advisers. They have, however, stopped short of open intervention. In this respect, they may have been deterred by the warnings which the United States has given that such intervention would lead to grave consequences which might not be confined to Indochina.

COLLECTIVE DEFENSE

Throughout this period the United States has also followed the second course of trying to develop strength in Southeast Asia through collective measures.

Back in 1951, I negotiated treaties with the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand. These recognized that this area was one of vital importance to the United States. These treaties also recognized that they were only initial steps toward the development of a more comprehensive system of collective security in the area.

This we have constantly sought. However, it has proved difficult to achieve this result. There were differences of race and culture and differences in the development of national self-government. The countries which had won or were winning their independence from Western colonialism and Japanese imperialism were often more concerned with past dangers from which they were extricating themselves than with the threat of new peril. The memories of the past blind them to the present perils of Communist imperialism. They were not disposed to make the sacrifices inherent in any collective security system.

However, this situation began to change and by the spring of this year it seemed that there could be a broader program of collective defense.

On March 29, 1954, after consultations with Congressional leaders of both parties, and after having advised our principal allies, I stated: "The imposition on Southeast Asia of the political system of Communist Russia and its Chinese Communist ally, by whatever means, would be a grave threat to the whole free community. The United States feels that that possibility should not be passively accepted, but should be met by united action."<sup>2</sup>

This declaration was nothing new, although the circumstances of the moment gave the words a new significance.

President Eisenhower speaking almost a year earlier, in his address of April 16, 1953, had said that "aggression in Korea and in Southeast Asia are threats to the whole free community to be met by united action."<sup>3</sup>

After having explained our purposes to the American people, we promptly conferred with the representatives of nine free nations having immediate interest in the area, namely Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia, Thailand, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand, France and the United Kingdom. We informed others whose interests could be affected.

The Governments of the United Kingdom and of France asked me to visit their capitals to develop further our concept. After conferences at London on April 12 and 13 with Sir Winston Churchill and Mr. Eden, we issued a joint U.S.-U.K. communiqué which, after reciting the danger to the entire area of Southeast Asia and the Western Pacific caused by Communist warfare in Indochina, concluded: "Accordingly we are ready to take part, with the other countries principally concerned, in an examination of the possibility of establishing a collective defense within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations to assure the peace, security and freedom of Southeast Asia and the Western Pacific."<sup>4</sup>

A similar agreement was reached in Paris with Prime Minister Laniel and Foreign Minister Bidault.<sup>5</sup>

The progress thus made was that which the United States had sought. We had never sought any sudden spectacular act such as an ultimatum to Red China. Our goal was to develop a basic unity of constructive purpose. We advanced toward that goal. I feel confident that unity of purpose persists, and that such a tragic event as the fall of Dien Bien Phu will harden, not weaken, our purpose to stay united.

The United States and other countries immediately concerned are giving careful consideration to the establishment of a collective defense. Conversations are taking place among them. We must agree as to who will take part in the united defense effort and what their commitments will be.

It must be recognized that difficulties have been encountered, but this was expected. The complexity of the problem is great. As I have pointed out, the complications were such that it was not possible even to get started until recent months. Under all the circumstances, I believe that good progress is being made. I feel confident that the outcome will be such that Communist aggression will not be able to gain in Southeast Asia the results it seeks.

This may involve serious commitments by us all. But free peoples will never remain free unless they are willing to fight for their vital interests. Furthermore, vital interests can no longer be protected merely by local defense. The key to successful defense and to the deterring of attack is association for mutual defense. That is what the United States seeks in Southeast Asia.

The question remains as to what we should do about the current hostilities in Vietnam.

In Korea we showed that we were prepared under proper conditions to resort to military action, if necessary, to protect our vital interests and the principles upon which stable peace must rest.

In Korea, we, along with others, joined in the defense of an independent government, which was already resisting an armed assault. We did so at the request of the Republic of Korea and under a United Nations mandate. The Korean people were inspired by a deep sense of patriotism and eager to develop a power of their own. The issues were clarified before the world by decisions of the United Nations. Under these circumstances, we and our allies fought until the enemy sued for an armistice.

In Indochina, the situation is far more complex. The present conditions there do not provide a suitable basis for the United States to participate with its armed forces.

The situation may perhaps be clarified as a result of the Geneva Conference. The French have stated their desire for an armistice on honorable terms and under proper safeguards. If they can conclude a settlement on terms which do not endanger the freedom of the peoples of Vietnam, this would be a real contribution to the cause of peace in Southeast Asia. But we would be gravely concerned if an armistice or cease-fire were reached at Geneva which would provide a road to a Communist takeover and further aggression. If this occurs, or if hostilities continue, then the need will be even more urgent to create the conditions for united action in defense of the area.

In making commitments which might involve the use of armed force, the Congress is a full partner. Only the Congress can declare war. President Eisenhower has repeatedly emphasized that he would not take military action in Indochina without the support of Congress. Furthermore, he has made clear that he would not seek that unless, in his opinion, there would be an adequate collective effort based on genuine mutuality of purpose in defending vital interests.

A great effort is being made by Communist propaganda to portray it as something evil if Asia joins with the nations of the Americas and Europe to get assistance which will help the peoples of Asia to secure their liberty. These Communist nations have, in this connection, adopted the slogan "Asia for the Asians".

The Japanese war lords adopted a similar slogan when they sought to subject Asia to their despotic rule. The similar theme of "Europe for the Europeans" was adopted by Mr. Molotov at the Berlin Conference when he proposed that the Europeans should seek security by arrangements which would send the United States back home.

Great despotic powers have always known that they could impose their will and gain their conquests if the free nations stand apart and none helps the other.

It should be observed that the Soviet Communist aggression in Europe took place only against countries which had no collective security arrangements. Since the organization of the North Atlantic Treaty, there has been no successful aggression in Europe.

Of course, it is of the utmost importance that the United States participation in creating collective security in Asia should be on a basis which recognizes fully the aspirations and cultures of the Asian peoples. We have a material and industrial strength which they lack and which is an essential ingredient of security. Also they have cultural and spiritual values of their own which make them our equals by every moral standard.

The United States, as the first colony of modern history to win independence for itself, instinctively shares the aspirations for liberty of all dependent and colonial peoples. We want to help, not hinder, the spread of liberty.

We do not seek to perpetuate Western colonialism and we find even more intolerable the new imperialist colonialism of Communism.

That is the spirit that animates us. If we remain true to that spirit, we can face the future with confidence that we shall be in harmony with those moral forces which ultimately prevail.

SAIGON, May 8, 1954—10 a. m.

2277. Sent Geneva 66, Paris 786, London 50. We have given preliminary consideration to Bidault's proposed position at Geneva as set out Secto 106, repeated Paris 201, London 121, Saigon 33<sup>1</sup> and to valid comment of US delegation as indicated Secto 110, repeated Paris 203, London 123, Saigon 34.<sup>2</sup> Department and USDel Geneva will have already seen De Jean's preliminary reactions as described my telegram 2276 today.<sup>3</sup>

De Jean put his finger on essential point which is what guarantees will exist for fulfillment in good faith of terms of any cease-fire and armistice agreement which might ensue from Geneva conference. Obviously from oversimplified French view it would be splendid if US would take up this burden.

I am strongly opposed to such a concept. Situation in Indochinese war has reached point that very soon both French and Vietnamese, who presumably are our friendly clients, will seek to blame US for whatever disaster may befall them. Furthermore, so far as Asiatic opinion generally is concerned, there will be a tendency to blame US for acts of commission and non-commission.

If this analysis is valid, it seems to me that we should with utmost insistence demand that United Nations be brought into picture. If Geneva conference arrives at an agreed cease-fire and armistice, conference should then request United Nations Security Council to assume responsibility for providing guarantees of armistice conditions and for supervision execution thereof. I do not see how Russians would be in a position to veto such a fair proposal and furthermore, from their policy point of view, they might find it advantageous to permit Security Council to assume jurisdiction here. Under President's recent pronouncement that no military action will be taken in this theatre without following constitutional processes,<sup>4</sup> again it seems to me that recourse to United Nations would afford President much greater liberty of potential action since Senate has already consented to treaty which is United Nations Charter, and police action under Chapter 7 of Charter could in fact be contemplated in event Security Council's supervision of armistice were flouted by Communists here. If Soviet veto aborted Security Council action we might still be able to work out some arrangement for collective self-defense under Article 51.

Foregoing is largely devoted to juridical aspects of problem. We should not blind ourselves to practical fact that if a cease-fire and armistice brings an ostensible end to military conflict in Indochina, it will have little effect on that clandestine but even more dangerous conflict which will continue; namely that cold war whereby Viet Minh can easily infiltrate all of this peninsula and eventually by legitimate democratic means take over this area.

At Berlin we agreed that "the problem of restoring peace in Indochina" would be discussed at this conference "to which representatives of the United States, France, the United Kingdom, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Chinese People's Republic, and other interested states will be invited."

At Geneva the four inviting powers have agreed that in addition to the participation specified at Berlin there should be representatives at this conference of the Governments of Laos, Cambodia, and Viet Nam, and of the Vietminh.

The United States cannot agree that non-existent so-called governments or states, such as the so-called Pathet Lao or Free Cambodians can in any way be considered as qualifying for invitations to this conference under the Berlin Agreement.

The United States proposes that any idea of inviting these non-existent so-called governments be rejected. If there is opposition to this United States proposal, the United States suggests this meeting be adjourned to allow for further discussions on this point between the four inviting powers.

“The United States will not associate itself with any proposal from any source directed toward a cease-fire in advance of an acceptable armistice agreement, including international controls. Secto 145. Repeated information niact Paris 224, niact Saigon 43. For his opening speech on Indochina Bidault originally planned something essence as follows: (British found text too strong for them fully to support but we considered it good).

“French Government, recognizing aspirations of people of three Associated States for independence and liberty, and noting their desire to be preserved from scourge of war, to practice toleration and to live in peace with other peoples as good neighbors, is firmly decided to follow policy which it is pursuing, of which essential is to assure these peoples their full national sovereignty as well as benefits of fundamental freedoms of peoples and individuals in exercise of their democratic liberty. To this end French Government is determined to take all appropriate measures to preserve against any danger of external aggression the territorial integrity of these states and to counter (prevenir) all attempts from whatever quarter to undermine their free institutions.”

However, this morning French delegation submitted following to Bidault which is obviously weaker and less satisfactory from our viewpoint:

“Recognizing the aspirations of the peoples of Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos for national independence and liberty the French Government declares its decision to extend, for its part, to the sovereign states of Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos the benefits of the undertaking to which it has subscribed in the term of the San Francisco Charter for the purpose of assuring the nations members of the UN of the respect for their national sovereignty and the benefits of fundamental liberties of peoples and of individuals and the functioning of democratic institutions.”

Paris 226, Saigon 45, London 138, Moscow 53, Tokyo 33 <sup>4</sup>). Next meeting tentatively scheduled Monday 3:00 p. m.

Eden opened session announcing chairmanship arrangements (he and Molotov alternating), official languages (English, French, Russian, Chinese). Bidault gave effective presentation French position in which he attacked Communists bitterly, particularly over failure grant evacuation wounded Dien Bien Phu. He stressed particularly independence already granted Associated States and fraudulent nature Viet Minh allegations of fighting for freedom Indochina. He then gave general outline French reasoning on what was required in Indochina and concluded by tabling proposal.

Viet Minh Vice President Pham Van Dong followed, (he spoke in Vietnamese) and devoted virtually entire speech plea for invitations to Pathet Lao and Khmer Issarak along strictly Communist lines (they represent struggle of those peoples for independence from foreign imperialism, etc.). He ended with formal motion invite these two.

I then made statement contained Secto 153 following which Chou En-lai immediately spoke holding conference had right discuss its own composition and calling for adoption Viet Minh motion. Molotov followed with harangue dedicated both Viet Minh proposal and my remarks re inviting powers. On former he alleged these regimes controlled much of territory of two countries and were leading war of national liberation. He spent most of time inviting powers problem, reading paragraph from Berlin communiqué re Indochina. He interpreted this meant one of five "named powers" had any special status, and accordingly said it was perfectly proper for Communist China join with Soviets in inviting Viet Minh. He concluded saying all of nine powers present today had right propose additional states, and he thus hoped Viet Minh proposal to extend two more invitations would be accepted. In closing he referred to my suggestion that 4 Berlin powers meet to settle question and countered with proposal additional invitations be considered by five powers named Berlin communiqué.

Bidault and Eden supported US position. Bidault appealed to conference to avoid sterile procedural arguments while Eden characterized Viet Minh proposal as something quite new which four Berlin powers should discuss.

Cambodian delegate (Sam Sary) asked for floor saying he had not intended speak so soon but felt he must reject Viet Minh proposal. In effective rebuttal he said Cambodia at peace until invaded April 3, 1954 so any so-called government must have been created for purpose of Geneva conference. He stressed complete control Royal Cambodian Government except for minor shifting pockets of invaders. He said remaining dissidents were mostly foreign invaders and asking them represent Cambodia was like asking Pole to represent Soviet Union. Finally he pointed out "Khmer Issarak" were nationalist rebels who rallied to King, and people using that name now were foreign Communist invaders.

Chou En-lai intervened again calling for acceptance Soviet proposal for five-power talks on Viet Minh proposal. Viet Minh followed with additional peroration denying Pathet Lao and Khmer Issarak were ghosts and calling also for acceptance Soviet proposal for five-power talks on invitation problem.

Eden noted he had two mutually irreconcilable proposals before him, US for four-power and Soviet for five-power talks. Accordingly he proposed simple adjournment, although Laotian had previously asked for recognition. Laotian (Phoui Sananikone) insisted on recognition and spoke on nonexistence Pathet Lao which dissolved itself in October 1949. He noted its "chief" was discredited member Royal family who had joined Viet Minh and to invite his regime would be to admit any dissident individual or group anywhere could claim recognition as a government.

First Plenary Session on Indochina, Geneva, May 8, 4: 35 p. m.: The United States Delegation to the Department of State

GENEVA, May 8, 1954.

Secto 153. Repeated information Paris 226, Saigon 45, London 138, Tokyo 33, Phnom Penh and Vientiane unnumbered. Department pass Defense. Tokyo pass CINCFE. Following is statement by US representative in first Indochina plenary session :

"The United States delegation takes this opportunity to recall that at Berlin, the US joined with France, the UK and the USSR in agreeing to organize a conference at Geneva to consider the problems of Korea and of Indochina. Subsequently, the same four powers reached agreement as to the composition of the Indochina phase of the conference, an agreement reflected in the presence here today of the nine delegations in this hall. As in the case of the Korean phase, there are only four inviting powers, the UK, France, the US and the USSR. Therefore, if, as has been stated in press reports, the invitation issued to the so-called democratic republic of Vietnam appears in the name of both the USSR and the Communist Chinese regime, that invitation is, in its form at variance with the clear understanding of the Foreign Ministers present at Berlin last February. Assuming the press reports to be accurate the US delegation can only regret that the Indochina phase of this conference should be initiated by a procedural evasion of previously reached agreements.

At Berlin we agreed that 'the problem of restoring peace in Indochina' would be discussed at this conference 'to which representatives of the United States, France, the United Kingdom, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Chinese People's Republic, and other interested states will be invited'.

At Geneva the four inviting powers have agreed that in addition to the participation specified at Berlin there should be representatives at this conference of the governments of Laos, Cambodia, and Vietnam, and of the Viet Minh.

The United States cannot agree to the suggestion which has just been made that non-existent so-called governments or states, such as the so-called Pathet Lao or free Cambodians, can in any way be considered as qualifying for invitations to this conference under the Berlin agreement.

The United States proposes that any idea of inviting these non-existent so-called governments be rejected. If there is opposition to this United States proposal, the United States suggests this meeting be adjourned to allow for further discussions on this point between the four inviting powers."

TOP SECRET      NIACT

GENEVA, May 9, 1954—noon.

Dulte 57. The Communist maneuver of yesterday, reported in Secto 154,<sup>1</sup> could put us in a very difficult position if we allow the problem to boil down to whether the Big Four, as proposed by me, or the "Big Five", as proposed by Molotov, consider the participation of Pathet Lao and Khmer. Should this occur, and thus delay or possibly prevent serious discussions leading to the end of bloodshed in Indochina, it will intensify and broaden the already critical attitude of segments of European and Asiatic political and public opinion, which consider our attitude on Communist China to be obstructive and intransigent. I should think that in France it would ultimately have a particularly bad effect, as it will seem to the French that we are protracting a procedural wrangle to maintain our position while French lives are being lost. This would give the Communists and anti-EDC protagonists a particularly powerful weapon.

We cannot possibly acquiesce in Molotov's proposal, as to do so would really make this a Big Five conference in every sense and would immeasurably increase the position of Communist China.

I doubt that either Eden or I can persuade Molotov to drop his "Big Five" proposal and go along with us. He stands to gain too much even at the risk of broadening the war in Indochina and Asia.

The best way out to us seems to continue the debate in the plenary sessions, letting the issue "Big Four versus Big Five" fade out, and trying to concentrate the procedural issue on admission of the two phantom governments. At the same time we and our associates would continue to press discussion of the real question; i.e., ending the war in Indochina on a satisfactory basis of security in SEA. The advantage is that for the next few days at least it puts us in the superior position. The disadvantages are that the Chinese will assert themselves more and more, taking advantage of French weakness, lukewarm attitude of Britain, and support of Soviet Union. There is possibility of them emerging from this phase recognized as a really dominant factor, but this is likely to happen anyway.

We are trying today and tomorrow to develop British and French positions and will report. Meanwhile, grateful for any suggestions on

SMITH

<sup>2</sup> In The New York Times of May 7, James Reston reported that the "United States, Britain, and France are now in substantial agreement on a compromise plan for a 'protected armistice' in Indo-China." He said it was "understood that the Laniel Government in Paris has told Washington that it is prepared to fight on in Indo-China unless the Communists agree to evacuate Laos and Cambodia and withdraw to certain 'fixed areas' in the third independent state of Vietnam." Reston reported that the "Eisenhower Administration, determined to block the Communist conquest of the whole peninsula, but unwilling to intervene at this time in the war with United States military power, is prepared to go along with Paris in its attempt to negotiate this compromise in Geneva." He indicated that Secretary of State Dulles was reported to have discussed the compromise arrangement with members of the Senate and the House of Representatives and that the Secretary "also outlined to them his own plans for the negotiation of an 'extended' Southeast Asia security arrangement that would be designed to guarantee the terms of any honorable armistice that could be arranged." (New York Times, May 7, 1954, p. 1)

<sup>3</sup> In a follow-up message (telegram Dulte 60, May 9), Under Secretary Smith reported that the "British and French concurred in tactics recommended. . . . British believe that Communists will drop two phantom governments after another day or two of discussion in plenary as they dropped East Germans at Berlin. French commented that all six non-Communist delegations were resolute against their admission and that continuation of Communist obstructionism during next two or three days would help Bidault in Paris, assuming Western delegations continue to press for substantive discussions and keep onus of obstructionism on Communists. French hoped that first day or two of substantive discussion would bring short statements from US and UK, giving general support for broad lines of French proposal, but with Associated States doing most of talking." (110.11 DU/5-954)

Secretary of State Dulles replied in telegram Tedul 45, May 9, that he agreed "best course is to keep discussion of additional participants in plenary and to stress sham character of Pathet Lao and Khmer regimes and relationship these regimes to basic Communist techniques for subversion and takeover. Above course seems best way to avoid getting bogged down in procedural discussion of Four versus Five with bad effects you describe." (396.1 GE/5-954)

1. Proposal contains major elements contained in previous French drafts (Secto 106<sup>4</sup> and Secto 132<sup>5</sup>) and comments already submitted (Secto 110<sup>6</sup>) remain valid.

2. Proposal continues differentiate between Vietnam one hand and Laos and Cambodia other, calling for evacuation of all regular and irregular Viet Minh forces from Laos and Cambodia, and disarming "all elements which do not belong either army or police forces" which on face of it would call for elimination all rebel forces of any character in Laos and Cambodia. We continue believe separation out of Laos and Cambodia issues is justified by facts of situation and is valid point.

3. Proposal contains important point hostilities should cease only after an agreement is reached which provides for (a) definition of assembly areas for regular units; (b) disarming of "elements not belonging either to the army or to police forces"; (c) release of POWs and civil internees, and (d) supervision under international commissions. Proposal thus has characteristics of armistice rather than simple cease-fire. But since assembly of troops and disarming of forces, according to proposal, will unavoidably follow rather than precede cessation of hostilities there is a major loophole here which could in effect make a simple cease-fire out of a paper armistice agreement.

4. Proposal contains new point, which has, however, been talked about by the French before, namely, that agreements "shall be guaranteed by the states participating in Geneva conference". It is unclear whether this refers, as presumably it does, only to states participating in Indochina phase of conference. This part of proposal obviously requires clarification and careful consideration since it might amount, on our part, to undertaking some obligation for underwriting a settlement which at best will be highly unstable. The responsibilities of the "guarantors" are, however, probably purposely left vague, consisting as they do of "immediate consultation" for the "purpose of taking appropriate measures either individually or collectively". It is probable that French set considerable store on an underwriting of settlement, particularly by the United States, and that United States response to this part of proposal will have an important bearing on how firm French will feel they can be in negotiating other conditions of an armistice.

It is possible that French view this provision as possible prelude to eventual UN membership and guarantees for the Associated States or that they are thinking of a link with possible collective action in Southeast Asia. This section, taken literally, could paradoxically require consultation between ourselves and the Communists in the event of Communist violation. The Communists might also, of course, attempt to steer such a provision in the direction of a Communist sponsored all Asian security pact.

5. Another new point is suggestion that assembly areas in Vietnam should be defined by the conference "on the basis of proposals by the Commanders-in-Chief". This could be merely an indication of the obvious requirement for military staff work, or it could be an entering wedge for on-the-spot technical conversations between the combatants which might, under certain circumstances, substitute for formal agreements, and thus might circumvent the conference proceedings.

6. On the whole French proposal is amorphous, and as compared with earlier French drafts somewhat more sketchy and loose. We fully realize danger that under pressures which French will experience they will move rapidly in direction of making so little insistence on nature of supervision or controls they will in fact agree to a simple cease-fire. The French proposal is purely an outline, and a vague one at that. The French will be under severe temptation make no efforts to fill it in satisfactorily.

7. If at this point United States does not support French in negotiations there can be little doubt that French would rapidly agree to a cease-fire, and that in process there would be severe damage, not only to United States interests in Indochina, but also to our relations with French. If we do support French proposal we certainly run a major risk of becoming deeply involved in an unsatisfactory settlement, but we might be able strengthen French hand sufficiently so they will pursue negotiation of "an acceptable armistice agreement, including international controls" (NSC language) and come out with maximum salvage from Indochina situation, and without a radical dislocation of their relations with United States and of their world position.

8. We will probably be in better position win British and Australians and New Zealanders over to more active role in defense of Southeast Asia if at this stage we support French in these negotiations than if we keep hands off.

9. On balance, well realizing difficulties of situation and risks involved, we recommend that at this stage we give general support present French proposal in the negotiations, that we try strengthen French position by what we do here at Geneva and particularly by what we do at home, while continuing make it clear to French that our support is premised upon French not agreeing to cessation of hostilities without an acceptable armistice agreement.

I said that this was as far as I thought it wise to go publicly in indicating what had on many previous occasions been made clear, namely that the United States was prepared to sit down and talk with the French about what the French called "internationalizing" the war and working out a real partnership basis. I said that as far as the immediate present was concerned, I assumed that the French Government would still not want this. Secto 157. Repeated information Paris 229, London 143. At his meeting this morning, Chauvel inquired as to outcome of NSC meeting yesterday.<sup>1</sup> Achilles stated we could not associate ourselves with any arrangement for cease-fire in advance of adequate and controlled armistice, but that we could support initiation of negotiations for such an armistice agreement. He added that French proposal<sup>2</sup> as tabled had been received in Washington only after NSC meeting, and that it was, therefore, not dealt with specifically, but that we assumed we would be in position to support general lines of French proposal as minimum. We might have to disassociate ourselves, should that proposal be weakened in negotiations.

In discussion of French proposal it became clear that French have not thought through much of it. In discussion of paragraph I (1), questioning brought out their tentative thinking that framework for regrouping would be established by conference, that commanders in field would then be asked to work out details, which would in turn be submitted for approval by conference. There was no answer to Allen's remark that Eden did not wish to spend next two years in Geneva.

With respect to I (4), French had no definite idea as to composition of control commission other than that they need not necessarily be same nationalities as guarantors in paragraph III. Chauvel indicated less opposition than previously to United Nations responsibility for control and selection of control commissions.

There was considerable discussion of paragraph III on guarantees. In answer to British question as to nature of obligations contemplated, Chauvel stated only specific obligation was consultation, although they wish this provision to involve each of the nine in some political responsibility. Allen remarked that consultation with Communists might take time but Chauvel said that any government could act immediately, particularly those with forces in field. We stressed desirability of providing framework for action by six,<sup>3</sup> with possible addition of other governments prepared to participate in united action. Allen felt proposal as phrased might be helpful in associating Colombo powers<sup>4</sup> with some form of united action, whereas they would be reluctant to join in framework limited explicitly to non-Communist powers. We stressed importance of avoiding any possibility of Communists or neutralists, delaying or paralyzing collective action. French felt that reference to "individual or collective measures" avoided this possibility, since any single nation or group of nations could act. They stated their intent was to facilitate united action. British said proposal would help them, as would any agreement reached here, to secure both UN and Commonwealth support for united action. Achilles reiterated US would not participate in negotiating, let alone guaranteeing, any unsatisfactory settlement. Allen stated that the less satisfactory any settlement reached here might be the greater and more urgent would be the need for united action. Objective was to check the rot in as much of Indochina as possible and prevent its spreading elsewhere in Southeast Asia. Question of "guarantees" will obviously require careful consideration as to how we might utilize it to facilitate development of united action and prevent its complicating picture.

Secto 158. Repeated information Paris 230, London 144, Saigon 49. Ambassador Heath saw Dac Khe of Vietnamese delegation this morning for discussion of positions taken at yesterday's plenary. Dac Khe expressed understanding and approval of US, France and UK positions on matter of inviting powers and on status of Lao and Khmer "ghost" governments. He expressed concern at French armistice proposal on following grounds:

(1) Vietnamese position (as set forth in Secto 144 repeated Paris 223, Saigon 42)<sup>1</sup> is that military arrangements should be concluded at same time rather than independently of political settlement. Dac Khe fears that purely military armistice would result merely in highly illusory and dangerous cease-fire.

(2) Vietnamese criticize French armistice proposal which they consider vague and unsatisfactory from their standpoint on two counts:

(a) Franco-Vietnamese forces are apparently to be given same treatment in matter of withdrawal and regrouping as those of rebel Viet Minh. (We note that Laniel proposals referred only to Viet Minh troops<sup>2</sup>).

(b) French plan fails to make any provision for internationally supervised zone along Chinese border. Vietnamese consider establishment such zone imperative if any political or military arrangements are to have chance of stability.

It is to be noted, that French proposal which Dac Khe considers weaker than requirement his country's safety is probably stronger than proposal which this or a successor French Government will in long run adhere to under present circumstances, i.e., in absence injection new positive elements on our side.

The present tactical plans of Vietnamese delegation in the next two or three plenary sessions are as follows:

(a) Delivery of short speech against the admission to the conference of delegations of phantom "free governments" Cambodia and Laos.

(b) Immediately or twenty-four hours after the conclusion of Viet Minh delegation's opening address (which was interrupted by debate on the candidacies free Laos and Cambodia "governments") to address the conference or rather the Viet Minh delegation, urging the latter, now that Vietnam's independence has been obtained, to end the war, free themselves from foreign Communist direction and elements, and rally to the legal government. Tedul 48. For Under Secretary from Secretary. Re Dulte 51<sup>2</sup> and 53<sup>3</sup> Tedul 36<sup>4</sup> and 37.<sup>5</sup> Eden's proposal reflects considerable progress in providing UK and French participation in some visible form of collective planning prior to conclusion Geneva Conference. But even as modified (Dulte 53) it contains major defects from our point of view. The most serious is that the five powers represented on the Staff Agency are all non-Asian. If this becomes nucleus of military, political and economic planning, this will be resented by Asian public opinion as recalling colonial past, despite provision for possible participation by invitation of certain Asian countries. Communist propaganda machine can be expected to concentrate on absence any Asian charter membership. Incidentally we note absence specific mention Philippines in Eden draft which exclusion would not be acceptable to us.

US admittedly faced by dilemma resulting from (1) our desire quickly to establish common front with Western powers directly concerned with problem defense Southeast Asia for earliest possible establishment collective defense for that area and (2) our desire which UK apparently does not share to avoid planning during Geneva Conference which would imply Associated States have been written off. To counter with argument that France would represent and speak for Associated States would merely underline in Asia existing skepticism as to their independence.

In the light of this dilemma, our objective must be to handle the discussions for a regional grouping in such a way as (1) to move forward rapidly to creation of minimum coalition, if Indochina should be lost, and (2) in so doing to avoid creating impression that Associated States are already written off and (3) to leave question of actual inclusion or exclusion of some or all of Associated States to be decided in light of outcome at Geneva.

In practical application we would propose to pursue two parallel lines concurrently.

The first would be five-power staff talks concerned exclusively with development military plans (hence our unwillingness to attach political and economic experts to such agency) which plans would be regarded as for benefit of all countries directly threatened by developments in Southeast Asia.

The second line would be the continued effort at political level to construct a collective defense grouping of the Western and Asian countries. As latter assumes definite form, five-power military group would contribute results of its work to entire group.

At its special meeting on May 8 NSC<sup>6</sup> again considered this question and reached decision (superseding that contained Tedul 36) "Agreed that the United States should be willing to participate in an examination by the US, UK, France, Australia and New Zealand of the military situation in Southeast Asia (including Indochina); provided that: (1) the purpose of such examination is to explore, through secret and existing military channels in Washington, means by which these participating governments may assist the countries of Southeast Asia in a cooperative effort to defend themselves. (2) It is made clear that such an examination is supplementary to continued efforts by the US to organize a regional grouping pursuant to NSC Action No. 1086-b or 1104-b and is neither a substitute for nor the nucleus of such a grouping."<sup>7</sup>

FYI. Reference in quoted NSC decision to "secret and existing military channels" reflected desire results of work would be secret but not intended preclude public knowledge such planning was under way. End FYI.

Form of public announcement, if any, of five-power military planning activity is of course crucial, particularly from point of view Asian public opinion. Hence we are most anxious to see soonest suggested draft of such announcement. It may prove better, as suggested your Dulte 53, to avoid any formal public statement. Radford favors Washington because the talks here could be less ostentatious and avoid the degree of speculation inevitable in converting to high-level five-power military talks at Singapore.<sup>8</sup>

(The purpose of having the US speak last is because of the understanding that you will address yourself not only to the proposal regarding the ghost governments but also will wish to express your general support of Bidault's proposals.)

b) The Vietnamese Delegation, for the purpose of getting the jump on the Vietminh, is sending a letter to the Chairman (Molotov) asking that the Conference take the position that it is necessary that the problem of the evacuation of the wounded from Dien Bien Phu be considered without delay and before the examination of the problems regarding the armistice and the restoration of peace in Indochina. c) In the event that proceedings are such that the Vietminh Delegate concludes his substantive speech, it is the present plan for the Cambodian Delegate who has a speech ready, to be the first to speak in reply. The Vietnamese Delegate wishes to reflect and to prepare his answer.

d) The further possibility is that Molotov will immediately recognize the Vietminh Delegate and ask him to proceed with his substantive speech. If this occurs you should arise on a point of order pointing out that the Conference still has before it the Vietminh proposal to admit delegations from Free Cambodia and Pathet Lao on which you desire to make some brief remarks.

Attached are (a) the text in French and English of Chou En-lai's communication to Molotov and (b) French text of the letter the Vietnamese representative is sending to Molotov on the wounded.<sup>3</sup>

Dulte 65. Repeated information The Hague 12, Djakarta 2, Canberra 8. Luns called on me at his request May 10 to discuss united action in Southeast Asia. I told him that we regarded Dutch as one of our staunchest allies in Europe and referred to early Dutch ratification of EDC and many evidences close-working cooperation between our two countries. I said that it was regrettable to have to tell one of our closest European allies that it was not possible to invite their participation in alliance in Asia for reasons which were apparent to him.

Luns said that he understood this completely. He said that Dutch have large investments and interests in Southeast Asia which they were prepared to defend. He said that they would not let New Guinea go and that Australians were in complete agreement on this point. He added that Dutch were sending additional forces to area, replacing territorials with Marines and adding cruiser and possibly two destroyers to their naval forces there. He said that these units would be available if needed. All he asked is that Dutch be kept informed of developments. I assured him that we would do this.

Second Plenary Session on Indochina, Geneva, May 10, 3 p. m.: The United States Delegation to the Department of State

NIACT

GENEVA, May 10, 1954.

Secto 161. Repeated information Paris niact 233, Saigon niact 52, London niact 145, Tokyo niact 39, Moscow 58, Phnom Penh and Vientiane unnumbered. Tokyo for CINCFE. Department pass Defense. Following is statement by United States representative today in second Indochina plenary session :

“The United States delegation warmly welcomes the proposals made and accepted this afternoon for the evacuation of the long suffering wounded of Dien Bien Phu and hopes sincerely that this evacuation will be effected without delay.

“Regrettably, for the subsequent two hours of our session we listened to a remarkable distortion of the events of the past few years in Indochina. The Viet Minh spokesman is well trained in the Communist technique of distorting history and calling black white. The world has learned to evaluate such spurious allegations. The charges made against the United States by the Viet Minh representative are substantially identical with those made by other Communist representatives during the opening phase of the Korean discussion. They have been already amply and adequately refuted, and I see no reason to divert this Conference from its important task by according them further attention at this time. I cannot refrain, however, from commenting on his remarkable effrontery in describing the brutal Viet Minh aggression against Cambodia and Laos as a movement of ‘liberation’. At present, I will merely say that after his statement, it is extremely difficult to believe that the Viet Minh representative has come to this Conference with any intention of negotiating a just and durable peace.

“The United States has come here with sincere hopes that the work of this Conference at Geneva will result in the restoration of peace in Indochina and in the opportunity for Cambodia, Laos and Vietnam to enjoy their independence under conditions of a real and lasting peace.

"The United States has watched with sympathy the development of the peoples of Indochina toward independence. The United States and many other countries have recognized the three States of Cambodia, Laos and Vietnam. We have followed with great interest the negotiations which have been undertaken by France and the Associated States to perfect the independence of the Associated States.

"The United States has shown in many ways its sympathy for the effort of the Associated States to safeguard their independence. We have provided material aid to France and the Associated States to assist them in this effort and have given them support to enable them to resist open and covert invasion from without their borders. We will continue to do so, for the simple reason that it is the wish of the American people to assist any nation that is determined to defend its liberty and independence.

"The United States maintains that the first principle of any settlement in Indochina must be to assure the independence and freedom of the States of Cambodia, Laos and Vietnam.

"The United States also maintains that any settlement in Indochina must give assurance of real and lasting peace. To this end, the United States believes that any settlement must be preceded by an armistice agreement which incorporates effective and adequate safeguards.

"The United States maintains that such an armistice agreement can be effective only under international supervision. The United States, therefore, believes that any settlement must include provisions for effective international supervision and assurance of powers and privileges on the part of the international supervising authority equal to enable it to carry out its various responsibilities.

"The United States welcomes the French initiative and believes the French representative has made a helpful contribution toward the restoration of peace in Indochina. The French proposals are consistent with the general principles to which any satisfactory settlement must conform. In our opinion, they should be accompanied by a program for the resolution of political problems. We look forward to hearing the views of the government of Vietnam on such a program.

"The United States notes the French proposal that 'agreements shall be guaranteed by the States participating in the Geneva Conference'. The United States has already demonstrated its devotion to the principle of collective security and its willingness to help in the development of collective security arrangements in Southeast Asia, as elsewhere. Until it is possible to see more clearly, the exact nature of the agreement to be guaranteed and to determine the obligations of the guarantors, we will, of course, not be able to express any judgment on this section of the proposal.

"The United States delegation suggests that the Conference adopt the French proposal as a basis of discussion and hopes that we will move forward constructively and rapidly in bringing about a restoration of peace in Indochina.

"The American delegation has listened with sympathy to the factual recital of the representatives of Cambodia and Laos and will study with interest their proposals for the restoration of peace in Cambodia and Laos."

Pending the establishment of the unified governments in the three States, the economic and cultural relations of Indochina with France will temporarily remain without a change, such as they exist now. However, in the areas where communications and trade ties have been broken off, they can be re-established on the basis of understanding between both sides.

"The citizens of both sides will enjoy the privileged status to be determined later, in matters pertaining to domicile, movement and business activities on the territory of the other side.

"6. The belligerent sides undertake not to prosecute persons who collaborated with the other side during the war.

"7. Carrying out mutual exchange of prisoners of war.

"8. Implementation of measures referred to in paragraphs 1-7, should be preceded by the cessation of hostilities in Indochina and by the conclusion to this end of appropriate agreements between France and each of the three States which should provide for :

"a. Complete and simultaneous cease-fire throughout the whole of the Indochina territory by all armed forces of the belligerent sides: ground, naval and air. Both sides in each of the three States of Indochina for the purpose of strengthening the armistice will carry out a necessary settlement of territories and of the areas occupied by them, and it should also be provided that both sides should not hinder each other during the passage, for the purpose of the above-mentioned settlement, by the troops of the other side over the territory occupied by the other side;

"b. Complete termination of transportation into Indochina from abroad of new ground, naval and air units or personnel, or any kind of arms and ammunition;

Smith-Molotov Meeting, Geneva, May 10, 7:30 p. m.: Memorandum of Conversation, by the Adviser to the United States Delegation (Keppel)<sup>1</sup>

SECRET

GENEVA, May 10, 1954.

Participants: W. B. Smith, Under Secretary of State
Molotov, Soviet Foreign Minister
Troyanovski, Soviet Delegation
J. Keppel, US Delegation

Place: Molotov's Villa, Geneva

General Smith arrived at Molotov's villa for a courtesy call at 1930 and was greeted by Molotov, Gromyko, and Kuznetsov. Molotov then led General Smith into a small sitting room and, with Troyanovski and Keppel being the only others present, opened the conversation with a few remarks about Geneva.

When the conversation turned to the subject of the Conference, General Smith remarked that while he did not have Mr. Molotov's experience in international conferences, it seemed to him that the present conference was "the worst" he could remember. Molotov exhibited mild surprise at this and General Smith amplified his remark by pointing to the extreme seriousness and explosive possibilities in the Indochinese situation. He indicated that while the US had come to the Geneva Conference hoping that progress could be made on the Korean issue, at least there was no fighting in Korea. The Indochinese situation, on the other hand, he said, was fraught with dangers.

Molotov agreed that the Indochinese situation was much "hotter" than the Korean question. During this part of the conversation he gave every appearance of understanding what General Smith was talking about and adopted a similarly serious manner. Molotov then said that it was too bad that Secretary Dulles had had to go home so early. He said that there had been all sorts of rumors in the press as to the reasons for the Secretary's departure but added that, of course, one shouldn't necessarily believe all such stories. General Smith agreed and explained the Secretary's departure in terms of preventing certain extremists in both parties from disrupting bi-partisan support for US foreign policy. Molotov then indicated the hope that since General Smith was a military man rapid progress could be made at the Conference.

Returning to the Indochinese question General Smith said that the situation was made complex by the absence of clearly defined lines. Molotov agreed that this was so and asked what kind of a solution General Smith had in mind. The latter said that this was something about which he had thought a great deal but has as yet no final ideas. Molotov indicated his belief that something could be worked out. He said that despite the excitable nature of Pham Van Dong's speech he thought that the proposal which it contained represented a real attempt to find a solution. In particular, he said, it sought to solve the question of Indochinese-French relations, "up to and including participation in the French Union."

Molotov then asked General Smith how long he thought that they should all stay at the Conference. The General replied that he thought they should stay as long as there were any chance of making progress toward a solution of the Indochinese problem. He indicated that a certain number of speeches of a general character had to be made before one could get down to business and Molotov indicated his understanding and implied that these were of no real significance. General Smith then said that things were after all not too bad so long as they "were talking," a remark to which Molotov subscribed.

Toward the end of the conversation General Smith said that Eden had mentioned his anxiousness to have both Vietnamese and French wounded evacuated from Dien Bien Phu. The General said he had agreed with Eden to take the matter up when he saw Mr. Molotov that afternoon. To evacuate both the Vietnamese and the French, instead of just evacuating the French as Pham Van Dong had apparently proposed would, the General said, be one step that could be taken to relax the tension somewhat. Molotov said that it was inconceivable to him that Dong had not had this in mind when he made his proposal. He said that he had discussed the matter with Chou En-lai after the session and that it had been Chou's understanding that Dong's proposal had contemplated the evacuation of both French and Vietnamese seriously wounded. A member of his own delegation, Molotov added, had also discussed the matter with the delegation of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam. Molotov and General Smith agreed that the press on both sides should be kept from building this question up into an issue owing to a misunderstanding of Dong's proposal.

After a few remarks of a courtesy nature General Smith took his leave. The conversation throughout was translated by Troyanovski.

If the French Government is disposed to evacuate these wounded, the representatives of both Commands will undertake on-the-spot practical measures necessary for carrying out this evacuation.'"

Vietnamese delegation immediately asked Chairman Molotov what had happened to his letter asking conference take up this question, and regretted letter had not been brought to attention of conference before this time. Molotov replied letter just received and being translated.

Bidault replied proposals by Viet Minh and Vietnam corresponded to wish of his government. Hoped Commands in field could take measures he had asked for since beginning of conference, saying better late than never.

Just before end session, Vietnamese intervened to call attention that written text Viet Minh proposal provided only for evacuation French wounded, and asked that Vietnamese be included. Memorandum by Chester L. Cooper and Joseph A. Yager to the Special Adviser to the United States Delegation (Heath)<sup>1</sup>

[GENEVA,] 10 May 1954.

Subject: Joint State-CIA Estimate on Communist Intentions Regarding Indochinese Phase of Conference

In response to your request, State Department Intelligence and the

<sup>1</sup> In addition to this memorandum, Cooper and Yager drafted and circulated another intelligence paper entitled "Intelligence Notes—II." (396.1 GE/5-1054)

Office of National Estimates, CIA, prepared a joint estimate on Communist intentions regarding the Indochinese phase of the Geneva conference. There follows a text of the estimate which was received here this morning. You will observe that this estimate appears to use the term "cease-fire" to refer to both an armistice and a simple cessation of hostilities.

Intentions with Respect to Cease-Fire

1. On the basis of present indications, it appears probable that the Communists will propose or assent at Geneva to a cease-fire in Indochina, without prior guarantees for the withdrawal of French forces. The Communists may, however, insist on French initiative in calling for a truce, in order to underline a Communist military "victory" in Indochina.

2. The Communists may estimate that under a cease-fire negotiated between Ho and the French and possibly even the Associated States, Communist prospects would be favorable. They may estimate a cease-fire would forestall US military intervention, would enable the Communists to maintain and possibly increase their military strength, and would enhance Communist political capabilities. Moreover, the Communists estimate the French would find it difficult to resume the war once hostilities ceased. On the other hand, a cease-fire would confront the Communists with the risk of a possible build-up of French Union forces through massive US aid. Furthermore, the Communists could not be certain a cease-fire period would not be utilized by the US to create anti-Communist alliance in Southeast Asia for "united action" in the event of renewed hostilities in Indochina. If a cease-fire contained safeguards against military build-up, the Communists would benefit, since such safeguards would be difficult to enforce against the Viet Minh. Finally, they would hope by proposing or agreeing to an unconditional cease-fire they could further their political warfare objectives in Europe and Asia.

3. These advantages to the Communists of a cease-fire would in general apply also to a cease-fire based on territorial division. While the Communists have rejected the Laniel formula of March 5 on the grounds that it would require Communist withdrawal from areas now held, the Communists have not categorically rejected partition as a formula for a cease-fire (as distinct from political settlement). A cease-fire involving partition would place the Communists in a favorable political position in both halves, and need not greatly prejudice Communist espousal of Vietnamese "nationalism".

Intentions with Respect to Political Settlement

4. While indications of possible Communist terms for political settlement are at best vague, it is possible to ascribe some order of probability to various possible Communist demands. In any event, it is possible a cease-fire would be followed by long drawn out and inconclusive political negotiations.

5. Partition of Vietnam as a political solution appears to be made unlikely by the logic of the Communist position, not only on Indochina but also on Korea and Germany, and by popular resentment that would be aroused in Vietnam by proposals for permanent partition of the country. Insofar as private Communist hints concerning partition may reflect Communist policy, they must probably be taken as referring not to political settlement but to terms for a cease-fire.

6. Coalition government of some type, with or without elections, is a more probable Communist proposal. However, it should be noted that the Communists have taken great pains during recent weeks to build up the DRV as a regime recognized not only by the people it governs, but also by French-held areas, and even by France itself. The Communist view of the relative status of the DRV and the Government of Vietnam are not analogous to the Communist view of the status of two Korean or two German governments, since the latter never governed all their respective countries. Therefore, if the Communists advance a coalition formula for Indochina it may differ somewhat from the German or Korean formulas. For example, Communists may offer merely to broaden the present DRV regime, possibly through new elections, to include members or supporters of the present government of Vietnam. Conversely, the Communists will almost certainly reject any formula providing merely for Communist participation in the present Bao Dai government.

7. Although the ultimate Communist objective is control of all Indochina, their immediate concern is victory in Vietnam. Communists have given little indication of their position with regard to Laos and Cambodia, although it appears probable that Communist demands for these countries, centering on claims of two Communist "regimes", will be advanced at Geneva, but only as a tactic to delay or even prevent agreement or as a likely bargaining counter. In any event, moreover, the Communists are unlikely to relinquish control over northern Laos.

The Head of the United States Delegation (Smith) to the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Eden)<sup>1</sup>

[GENEVA,] May 10, 1954.

MY DEAR ANTHONY: The following summarizes the message<sup>2</sup> which I had from Washington this morning and which we have just discussed:<sup>3</sup>

"We are pleased at the progress reflected in Eden's proposal toward some visible form of UK and French participation in collective planning before the end of the Geneva Conference. From our point of view, there are, however, still major defects, most serious of which is that all five powers on the staff agency are non-Asian. Asian opinion would resent non-Asian staff agency becoming the nucleus of military, political and economic planning. Communist propaganda would seize on absence of Asian charter membership. Particularly unacceptable from US point of view would be absence of Philippines. We want to (1) move forward rapidly to create a coalition in case of loss of Indochina, (2) avoid any impression that Associated States have been written off, and (3) leave for decision in the light of Geneva outcome the question of inclusion or exclusion of some or all of Associated States.

"We propose that to secure these objectives we move forward concurrently on two parallel lines: (1) The first line should be staff talks by the five powers, to be exclusively concerned with the development of military plans (and so without the attachment of political or economic experts), with such military plans being regarded as developed for the benefit of all countries directly threatened in Southeast Asia; (2) The second line would be a continued effort to construct, at the political level, a collective grouping of Asian and Western countries for defense. As this grouping assumes definite form, the results of the work of the five power military group would be contributed to the entire group.

"The way public announcement is made, if at all, of five power military planning activity is crucial from point of view of Asian opinion. We are eager to see draft of possible announcement. It might, in fact, be better to avoid a formal statement. We are inclined prefer Wash-

<sup>1</sup> Under Secretary Smith's letter was delivered to Eden on the morning of May 11 by Reinhardt of the U.S. Delegation. Shuckburgh informed Reinhardt that Eden would have some comment on the letter later in the day and added, as his personal view, that "the only thing which seemed to be troubling Eden was whether or not we were moving a little too quickly with respect to the Ten." (Conference files, lot 60 D 627, CF 308)

Shuckburgh's reference to "the Ten" was probably to the issue of whether the five-power staff talks between Australia, France, New Zealand, the United Kingdom, and the United States should be expanded to include additional nations such as Thailand, the Philippines, and some of the Colombo Powers (India, Pakistan, Ceylon, Indonesia, and Burma).

I am rather pleased with this, and if you agree I will report to Washington that you are undertaking to present it to London. Also, that you consider, as do I, that it might be as well to avoid any formal public statement. If, however, it becomes necessary to make such a statement in Washington, a coordinated Washington-London statement should be issued. Summary

French object to use of word “armistice” as it combines both military and political considerations. It is also psychologically bad as word associated with the long negotiations at Panmunjom.

French want agreements for cessation of hostilities in Indo China to be guaranteed by the great powers now at Geneva. On-the-spot inspections for compliance with agreements should be accomplished by a neutral commission.

After cessation of hostilities opposing regular forces would move to previously designated zones. Maintenance of forces would be allowed but reinforcement or tactical movement prohibited. Ports, airfields and frontier entry points would be controlled by neutral commission.

French would retain north part of Tonkin Delta including Hanoi and Haiphong. Viet Minh would be given Southern part of delta except Catholic areas of Phat Diem and Bui Chu which would be neutralized. A ten kilometer demilitarized zone would separate French Union and Viet Minh areas in Tonkin Delta.

Viet Minh would hold area from south edge of delta south to Song Giang (river). French would hold area from Song Giang to Faifo (inclusive). Viet Minh from Faifo (exclusive) to Qui Nhon (exclusive). French would continue to hold plateau, area taken during operation Atlante and the coastal area south to Phan Thiet (inclusive). There would be four small Viet Minh zones in South Viet Nam.

Detailed Record

At Colonel de Brebisson's invitation above-named persons attended a briefing on preliminary plans for the implementation of the military phase of possible French agreement with the Viet Minh. Colonel de Brebisson started the briefing saying that the French Government wanted to avoid the use of the term "armistice". He said there were two reasons for this—one, juridical, and the other, psychological. Juridically, an armistice contains both military and political considerations and must be agreed to by a government, not a commander-in-chief. Therefore, it takes longer to negotiate. Psychologically, the French feel that people's minds are still influenced by the Panmunjom negotiations and there is a tendency among the French to feel that an armistice would take several years to negotiate. In reply to a question as to what the French call their plan, he said it had no name but it could well be called a "cessation of hostilities" or "suspension of hostilities." He added that a simple cease-fire would be dangerous and must be avoided. The French believe that a "cessation of hostilities" guaranteed by the great powers can be worked out at Geneva. This agreement would include the acceptance of regrouping zones for regular armed forces and the delimitation of these zones. The details could then be worked out in the field. The French suggested a neutral commission, with advisors from opposing forces attached, to supervise the implementation of this agreement in Indo China.

Colonel de Brebisson said the French continue to consider Cambodia and Laos as separate problems which will be relatively easy to solve. The French will insist on the withdrawal of Viet Minh invaders in Laos and Cambodia. The Viet Minh could logically ask that all French military be withdrawn. During recent negotiations with Laos, the Laotians requested that a French mission remain with the Lao Army and, in addition, that the French maintain four bases with garrisons. The French had little interest in maintaining bases in Laos but finally agreed to keep Xieng Khouang and Seno. In view of the accords which they have signed, the French will insist on keeping those bases if the Laotians still want them to do so. In Cambodia, the French have no bases and no garrisons but they do have a small mission with the Royal Khmer Army. The French are prepared to listen carefully to Laotian and Cambodian suggestions for the cessation of hostilities and will give their views consideration.

Considering the question of control measures, de Brebisson said there would be no question of identification of Viet Minh units in Cambodia and Laos as General Navarre's headquarters had excellent order of battle information on these areas. However, the length and character of the frontier would complicate the control problem. The well-known hostility of the Cambodians and Laotians to the Vietnamese would facilitate the detection of Vietnamese border crossings since the population can be expected to report to neutral observers all known Vietnamese frontier crossers. Preliminary studies of control measures have indicated that a neutral group of three or four hundred people would be needed to observe and control the frontier. The Laotians and Cambodians have been given a general briefing of the French plan for their countries but have not yet been given the details. De Brebisson said they would be given complete information soon, as obviously the French must have their consent to any proposal.

The control problem in Viet Nam is much more complicated because the troops of opposing forces are well mixed throughout the country. The establishment of regrouping zones would require giving up, to the Viet Minh, certain areas now controlled administratively by the Vietnamese Government. Also, there is the question of turning over areas in which the population has been friendly to the French and thus exposing these people to Viet Minh terrorist counter-measures. These people could be moved to Vietnamese controlled zones if they wished, but that would raise additional problems. Certain zones, particularly Catholic areas, should be neutralized and possibly administered by the neutral commission.

At this point Major Debarnot, Deputy G-2 in General Navarre's headquarters, presented the military plan in some detail. As background he explained that there are two types of terrain in Indo China, first, mountain and hill country—generally covered with heavy vegetation, and second, rice paddy. The Viet Minh are expert at moving undetected in both of these types of terrain. Also, there are vast areas with low population density and, conversely, other areas which are extremely over-populated. Either condition facilitates undetected Viet Minh movement and infiltration. Another important consideration is the feeling of the population, which varies throughout Indo China.

Major Debarnot then gave a brief summary of the military situation in Indo China. This summary is omitted from this memorandum as it presented no new information.

Debarnot then stated that the military proposal that he was about to present was tailor-made for the unusual military situation in Indo China and that it had different solutions for different areas. He also stressed the fact that this proposal was based on a "preliminary" study. The guiding principles for this study were as follows:

(1) the proposal must guarantee the security and existence of French Union Forces during any cessation of hostilities;

(2) there must be adequate guarantees to prevent the Viet Minh from reinforcing during the truce or making troop movements to improve positions;

(3) the French must avoid any conditions which would in practice be more restrictive to French Union Forces than to the Viet Minh. As an example, certain movement restrictions might be very easy to enforce on French Union troops but difficult or impossible to enforce on Viet Minh;

(4) conditions must allow French Union Forces to be maintained in such a way that they would be able to fight to defend themselves or to recommence hostilities in case of a breakdown of negotiations.

As previously stated, the French expect that the general conditions for a cessation of hostilities would be agreed at Geneva and the following minimum conditions are desired for this initial agreement:

(1) cessation of hostilities must be complete in all areas and be accompanied by suitable inspections by a neutral commission.

(2) agreement should be made that opposing forces would give adequate warning in the event of unilateral re-opening of hostilities.

(3) the Viet Minh must be prohibited from reinforcing or creating new units.

(4) there must be neutral control of ports, airfields and frontier entry points.

(5) movement of rations and maintenance supplies and the rotation of troops must be allowed.

(6) training should be authorized.

(7) the French Expeditionary Force should have the right of replacement by individual or unit from areas outside Indo China.

(8) in the case of French Union losses from attrition which are not immediately replaced, the French should be given credit for these losses in order to allow replacement at a later time.

(9) free movement in respective zones and on agreed inter-zone lines of communication must be guaranteed.

(10) the French must be guaranteed free use of air transport for supply, liaison and movement of replacements.

Major Debarnot next discussed the zones of relocation for opposing regular forces, pointing out that these zones were proposed by General Navarre's staff and have not yet been approved by the French Government. Movements for regrouping of troops must be gradual and there must be agreement at Geneva on phasing of these movements.

North Viet Nam—Delta: The French will retain the area delimited by the following points—RN-1 from Mon Cay to Hon Gay, RN-18 to Sept Pagodes, along river to Dap Cau, Da Phuc, Lap Thrach, Viet Tri, Son Tay, Xuan Mai, Phu Xuyen, Hung Yen, along the Canal des Bambous to Ninh Giang and down the Song Thai Binh to the sea. A demilitarized zone, 10 kilometers wide, extending outside of this line will separate the present forces.

The Viet Minh would be required to regroup their regular forces in Thai Binh province. The area Phat Dien, Ninh Binh, Phu Ly, Nam Dinh, Quat Lam would be neutralized, probably under the control of a neutral commission. In northwest Tonkin certain areas between the Red and Black Rivers and the Red and Clair Rivers would be set aside for French Union maquis. In center Viet Nam, the Viet Minh would continue to hold the area from the south edge of the Tonkin Delta to the Song Giang River. The French would retain control of the area from the Song Giang south to, and including, Faifo. The Viet Minh would regroup in the area they presently hold between Faifo and RN-19, excluding Qui Nhon, and west to the eastern limit of Kontum Province. The French would relocate in the plateau, the area recently captured by operation Atlante and along the coast to Phan Thiet. In South Viet Nam there would be four Viet Minh zones—the western half of the Ca Mau peninsula, the Plain des Jones, “War Zone D” area northeast of Saigon, and along the Annam-Cochin Chinese border, excluding Phan Thiet. Many of the above delimitations were quite vague. Major Debarnot explained this by saying that they were recently transmitted from General Navarre’s headquarters by cable and that the cable had some omissions and garbles.

Viet Minh regionals would be considered as regular troops and would be moved to Viet Minh controlled zones. The Viet Minh guerrillas or “Troupe Populaire” would be disarmed, although Debarnot added that he thought this would probably be impossible.

De Brebisson stressed the fact that this is a military plan, not political, and it would be part of the larger overall Indo China solution. General Navarre considers it a minimum position that he could accept militarily in Indo China and it is one that would leave the French Union Forces in a position to resume combat under relatively favorable conditions if that were required. The plan has not yet been discussed with the Vietnamese. It is admittedly a far from perfect solution but the French state they have been unable, after much study, to come up with anything better and they believe that it fits the situation as it actually exists in Indo China. They believe it is imperative that opposing forces regroup after cessation of hostilities and not remain scattered throughout Indo China as at present. A cessation of hostilities, with troops remaining in present dispersed positions, would expose French Union Forces to the possibility of a massacre such as they experienced in Tonkin on the night of 19 December 1946. De Brebisson stated he believed that the problem in Viet Nam was primarily a political one. He said he would not be surprised if the Viet Minh would ask for a capital, probably Hanoi.

In reply to a question as to what the French military plan to do if negotiations break down at Geneva, Debarnot stated it is obvious there is only one thing they could do—continue fighting. He said General Navarre has asked for reinforcements and realizes that he may have to abandon certain areas of Indo China in order to hold the more important ones. French air power in Indo China is his greatest asset and it will be much more effective, now that the Dien Bien Phu operation is over, as targets will be much nearer the departure airfields. The history of the war in Indo China has been one in which French Union Forces have repeatedly been given missions and objectives requiring an effort far greater than their capabilities. Debarnot likened the war to a poker game where each side is continually raising the ante on logistical support. This year the Viet Minh had more artillery than before and next year they may have tanks and airpower. De Brebisson ended the briefing by saying that the French were open to suggestions and would appreciate any comments we might have on their proposal.

Members of the American delegation said they would study the proposal. No commitments were made.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Special Adviser to the United States Delegation (Heath)

CONFIDENTIAL

GENEVA, May 11, 1954.

Participants: Cambodian Delegation: Tep Phan, Foreign Minister; Nong Kimny, Cambodian Ambassador to Washington; Sam Sary and Sonn San, members of the Cambodian Delegation.

Under Secretary of State, Walter Bedell Smith
Ambassador to Cambodia, Donald R. Heath

Subject: The Cambodian Program for the Conference

The Under Secretary received the Cambodian Delegation and gave them our view of the conference to date, congratulated Sary on his political speech in the initial session against the candidacy of the "free Cambodian Government" proposed by the Vietminh Delegation, and he expressed the intention of the American Delegation to support Cambodian efforts to obtain an equitable peace settlement. He suggested that it would be well, in view of adverse communist propaganda, for the Cambodian Delegation to neglect no occasion during the conference to proclaim the full independence of Cambodia. Tep Phan agreed heartily with this suggestion.

Tep Phan then outlined Cambodia's program for the conference. Cambodia intended to press for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Cambodia, that is, the withdrawal of the Vietminh aggressors and the French battalions which the Cambodian Government had called in to help fight against the invaders. There should be a United Nations commission to oversee the withdrawal and the disarmament of the Vietminh aggressors and an international guarantee against reinvasion. Cambodia warmly sympathized with Secretary Dulles' proposal for a mutual defense pact for Southeast Asia.

Sonn San and Tep Phan then said that the entire Cambodian population was ready to take up arms against the aggressors but were in no position to obtain armament. Tep Phan had been ordered by the king to purchase 5,000 rifles in Paris so the Cambodian army could be expanded. Several months ago they had passed an order for 500 military rifles to the French but had been unable to get delivery. The only real source of armament was the United States and they inquired whether, in view of recent developments the United States could not now give direct arms aid to Cambodia instead of through the French as heretofore. The Under Secretary stated the Cambodian army had already received a considerable quantity of arms and equipment from the United States through the French but he agreed that the present situation necessitated some alteration of arrangements and he thought some changes in line with the Foreign Minister's request should and could be made.

shall contact more senior UK representatives to ascertain whether these views represent top-level UK thinking).

British policy on Indochina now concentrating on involving nations represented at Colombo conference in supervision and guarantee of Geneva Indochina settlement. India, Pakistan, and Ceylon have been kept completely informed all aspects conference and have been encouraged to submit policy recommendations. Nehru has indicated India would favorably consider contribution of troops for supervision and guaranteeing of peace in Indochina. UK has envisaged major troop contributions by India and Pakistan with Indonesia, Burma, and Ceylon providing only token troops.

Nehru appears to be thinking of guarantee for Indochina along lines of Asian Locarno: Colombo countries would join countries participating in Indochina phase Geneva conference in pledge to use force against any country violating agreement.

UK delegation hopes to introduce proposal along these lines as soon as Commonwealth approval received, feels early introduction would pay important propaganda dividends and might strengthen French determination to maintain strong position. As far as UK delegation knows Nehru has not indicated Communist China admission to UN would be quid pro quo Indian participation.

UK delegation is very tentatively exploring possibilities one of Commonwealth Prime Ministers would call Southeast Asia defense conference. UK prefers to avoid participation in Southeast Asia defense pact in which Colombo countries not represented, and feels these countries must be present at earliest stages negotiations which could follow Geneva conference. Nehru, worried about losing initiative for "Indian leadership in Asia," feels he must go along with some such proposal. He has raised possibility that Asian Locarno for Indochina might be extended into similar guarantee for all Southeast Asia. UK now has strong indications from all Colombo countries except Indonesia that they are concerned about possibility Communist expansion in Southeast Asia.

by foreign means. Unless we are careful they could effectively spike any NSC program for training of, and operational planning in, Vietnamese National Army.

GENEVA, May 11, 1954—6 p. m.

Secto 174. Repeated information Paris 239, London 150, Saigon 56, Tokyo 46, Phnom Penh, Vientiane, Moscow 62. Pass Defense Department; Tokyo pass CINCFE. Preliminary analysis Viet Minh proposal (Secto 162)<sup>1</sup> confirms that it is totally unacceptable and its adoption would amount turnover Indochina to Communists.

Following are delegations comments:

(1) Most obviously unacceptable element is clear indication Viet Minh (Democratic Republic of Vietnam) would determine question association with French Union (paragraph 4) and presumably handle other pertinent problems as well. For example, during discussion free elections it is specified Viet Minh will in meantime speak for country. From this it seems logically and obviously Viet Minh would organize elections, win them and quickly or gradually convert Vietnam into Communist state.

(2) References to French Union may be serious and not purely for propaganda. Conceivably Communists might envisage Communist states in French Union. In any event tactic of not unfriendly references to French Union is interesting.

(3) Insofar as Cambodia and Laos are concerned, it is apparent Communists have dropped invitations to Geneva for Khmer Issaraks and Pathet Lao as issue, and Viet Minh now simply speak in name all three peoples (though Cambodian and Laotian representatives challenged this sharply yesterday). Viet Minh objective for these countries is certainly same as for Vietnam though because central governments now have fuller control over these two countries process would probably be somewhat slower.

(4) References in paragraphs 1 and 8 to unified governments three states Indochina obviously intended refer Viet Minh, Pathet Lao and Khmer Issarak and not any of three presently constituted governments.

(5) Viet Minh launch appeal Asian nationalism by calling for elections which categorically reject any foreign intervention (paragraph 3), and thus follow pattern Communist elections proposals laid down by North Koreans.

(6) Paragraph 8 of Viet Minh proposal which is to precede paragraphs 1-7 is in effect a cease-fire though it is ostensibly linked with certain other considerations. Proposal is furthermore tantamount rejection Bidault's plan tabled Saturday.

(7) Viet Minh program doubtless for French consumption has certain elements reminiscent some of Bidault's proposal. For example:
