I have a somewhat different view of the situation arising from our sole possession of the technical and scientific insight necessary to sound judgments. This problem is in part technical, since many of the facts at our disposal, but not now generally known, are indeed relevant to questions of feasibility, adequacy, and safety. It is also in part a psychological problem in that insight depends not only on having facts available, but on having a sense of assurance that the relevant facts have not been withheld. I believe that it is premature to discuss the precise extent to which basic scientific information should be made available to the Atomic Energy Commission. It is clear, on the one hand, that such information neither must, nor with propriety should, include detailed engineering specifications for plants and for weapons; on the other hand, our experience would indicate that the Smyth Report ^{72a} as it stands is probably far from sufficient. We shall be in a better position to judge this at our next meeting.

3. In order to evaluate the proposals that I should like to make, it may be well to consider extreme examples, which have been suggested from time to time, of proposals that I regard as unworkable. Almost everyone has, at one stage or another in his acquaintance with this problem, considered prohibiting further work on atomic energy, and devising a system of inspection adequate to insure that this prohibition is carried out. It is not only that this proposal would make impossible the application of existing knowledge to constructive ends; it would be so contrary to the human patterns of exploration and exploitation that no agreement entered into by heads of state could command the interest or the cooperation of the people of the world.

An apparently less radical solution would be the separation of the functions of development and of control according to which the only responsibility of an international authority would be the inspection of work carried out under a purely national or private initiative, and the possible prohibition of some of this work. The negative approach to the problem of control would leave the inspecting agency with inadequate insight, both into the technical state of the subject, and into its motivation and the organic characteristics of its growth. It would provide inspectors who are less informed and less enlightened than those whose evasions they were trying to prevent; it would provide inspectors with a motive pathetically inadequate to the immense and dreary task which such inspection would involve, and who would no doubt be in a poor position to apply to their work the technical ingenuity and inventiveness which alone can make it an undertaking of finite dimensions and some prospect of success. One sees these difficulties most clearly if the problem is considered as it may appear in the almost immediate future. On the one hand, I believe that no one would be willing to wait for the institution of a system of controls until such time as many nations had a flourishing atomic energy industry, and no doubt a flourishing atomic armaments program; on the other hand, it is probably true that at the present time there is pitifully little to inspect in any countries but the United States, the ^{72a} Henry D. Smyth, "A General Account of the Development of Methods of Using Atomic Energy for Military Purposes," the official report on the development of the atomic bomb by the United States, 1940-1945, prepared by the Chairman of the Department of Physics of Princeton University, a consultant for Manhattan District; released by the War Department on August 12, 1945, and published as Atomic Energy for Military Purposes (Princeton, N.J., Princeton University Press, 1945).

United Kingdom, and Canada. It is unclear what primary deposits would be exploited in the future, what plans would be made for the production of fissionable materials, and what laboratories and scientists will in the end be chosen to carry out this work. It is just this circumstance which would make the task of inspection so unenlightened and so vast as to be prohibitive. It is also clear that this approach to the problem would sacrifice almost wholly whatever advantages there are in the fact that atomic energy developments are nowhere else in the world an established and flourishing activity, representing a vested interest and a living organization.

4. Against this background of the difficulties of control as an isolated and negative function, I have thought it essential at least to consider combining the functions of development and of control in a single agency. It is fairly certain that there are now, and will increasingly be, activities having to do with atomic energy which are not vital to control and which, for human, or organizational, or political, reasons should not be included among the functions of the controlling authority; but there are certainly several such functions which, as matters now appear, should be so included among them: the development of raw materials, the exploration of atomic weapons, and the application, in its more dangerous forms, of atomic energy to power and technology.

a. I thus propose that the international authority have a monopoly on the study, development, and exploitation of uranium: That this could be an interesting activity some of our discussions of last week clearly showed, and apart from considerations of security a coordinated attack on a worldwide scale is the more appropriate way of exploiting the raw materials. An agency which was well informed about the location of deposits and the most highly developed means of working them, and their relation to each other, would be in a strong position to detect and discourage illegal enterprises of a more private nature. It would also be in a position to provide the basic accounting and material control for an ingredient which is at present, and probably will remain for a long time to come, uniquely necessary. Technical arguments suggest that the same machinery should be applied to the exploitation of thorium.

b. A second activity of the international authority, which is doubtless far less urgent, but for which provision must ultimately be made, is research and study of atomic explosives. You will remember from our discussion that this is a field in which we are by no means confident of the facts; it is, of course, possible that such atomic explosives may be useful to the peacetime economy of the world, but quite apart from this it is only by their exploration that any agency can have a reasonable chance of insuring that developments beyond its control are not of great danger to the world.

c. It would be an essential function of the international authority to develop atomic energy for industrial purposes and as a source of power, and to carry out the technical advances necessary to make these developments practical, and to extend their range. In conducting this program, it is clear that economic, technological, and even sociological considerations will be as important as purely scientific ones, and it is further clear that the solution of the resulting conflicts will involve compromise and good will which only an agency with authority and adequate technical competence can bring to the problem.

d. As we pointed out, there are a number of potential applications of atomic energy which can be made relatively safe, either by denaturing procedures, or because plants are involved which destroy, rather than create, atomic explosives; or because the scale of the operations is small enough to be immaterial for atomic weapons. There may be strong arguments (and there probably are) for conducting these developments under a license system, with nations or with more private organizations, but the line between safe and dangerous activities should not remain fixed where we would draw it today, so that I should be reluctant to make a final apriori definition at this time.

e. It would seem to me desirable and, in fact, essential, that the international authority cooperate with scientists, engineers, industrialists, and others who are not members of their organization but who have an interest in, or a contribution to make toward, the work of the authority. This openness would contribute in an important way to making the authority subject to enlightened criticism and to making its findings available for more private exploitation wherever this could be done effectively and safely.

5. There are a number of questions which probably should be discussed in connection with the above proposals, although I do not feel qualified to discuss them. In particular, the organizational structure of the international authority, whether it be a commission or a corporation (or take another form), will have to be settled in the light of conflicting views as to the best methods of providing initiative, responsibility, and integrity. The machinery set up for providing a reasonable, forward-looking allocation of atomic power and atomic products, the machinery required for financing undertakings, many of which in the earlier times may not be economically profitable, and the contributions that might be expected in the form of labor, technical competence, and raw materials, all would need a fairly prompt discussion. Other questions on which there will be differences of opinion are the appropriate scale of development and the priorities that should attach to various phases of the work. In all of these matters one will have to draw both on the technical ingenuity of those familiar with the field of atomic energy, and on all useful precedents of effective organization.

6. There are a few questions which it seems to me not very profitable to discuss at present. One has to do with the complex of problems that would arise should there be abrogation of agreements by a nation or a group of nations, or activities in serious violation of these agreements. Such discussions will inevitably bring one to the problem of sanctions, which seems to me essentially separable from the questions we have been asked to consider. Related to these questions is the provision of an adequate physical security for installations operated by the international authority but susceptible to diversion for military use, and the question of whether any useful purpose can be achieved by stockpiling atomic weapons to facilitate the application of sanctions. It is inevitable that all these questions will be asked; in my opinion their discussion cannot contribute in a constructive way to the solution of our primary problem.

501.BB/1-2546 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Stettinius)

CONFIDENTIAL URGENT WASHINGTON, February 14, 1946—6 p. m.

1526. Undel 212. 1. State-War-Navy Ad Hoc Subcommittee on Security Functions of the UN ⁷³ has considered JCS paper (1567/28) on armed forces to be made available to SC and has recommended SWNCC approval subject to minor amendments, including a new text of a proposed standard agreement. SWNCC will consider this at an early date.⁷⁴ It is understood US members MSC already have JCS 1567/28.

⁷³ The State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee (SWNCC) was the principal interdepartmental body concerned with the coordination of foreign and military policies in 1946. For a description of the organization and functions of SWNCC, see footnote 3, p. 1112. SWNCC made provision for planning with respect to United Nations political-military matters in 1945 by establishing the Ad Hoc Committee to Effect Collaboration Between the State, War, and Navy Departments on Security Functions of the United Nations Organization (subsequently known as the Ad Hoc Committee on Security Functions of the United Nations). Such a body had been suggested by Joseph E. Johnson, Chief of the Division of International Security Affairs, in a memorandum to John D. Hickerson, the Department of State Member and Acting Chairman of SWNCC, on July 20, 1945. The Ad Hoc Committee, which became the principal formal machinery for formulating and recommending unified United States policy on UN security matters, first met on August 18, 1945, and subsequently concerned itself with matters before the United Nations Preparatory Commission and the Executive Committee at London. The Department of State was represented on the Ad Hoc Committee by personnel from the Office of Special Political Affairs; Alger Hiss, Director of SPA was the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee in 1946. The Military Establishment was represented by members of the Joint Strategic Survey Committee of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; regarding the functions of that body, see footnote 68, p. 738.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff took into account recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee and its parent body in instructing their deputies, the United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee, regarding UN forces and other matters. (SWNCC Files)

⁷⁴ The State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee approved the recommendation of the JCS paper on February 27 as SWNCC 219/8; with respect to that document, see USMS/12/Rev. 1 (the text of the principles later extracted from it) and Blaisdell's memorandum of April 1, pp. 759 and 769, respectively.

2. Subcommittee also considered relation between discussion of armed forces in MSC and discussion of same subject in SC, with specific reference to Item 10 of SC agenda⁷⁵ (reported deferred in Delun 148).⁷⁶ State Dept members presented political desirability of having MSC consider question of armed forces in pursuance to directive from SC. Service members pointed out that SC would need advice of MSC in preparing such directive and that informal discussion on military level may have already occurred.

3. Dept does not know what were intentions of SC in deferring Item 10 (Delun 148). Possibly SC intended to return to Item 10 after arrival of remaining members of MSC and after organization of latter committee had been completed. If this is the case, it is of interest that the Ad Hoc Subcommittee agreed that a satisfactory procedure would be for the SC, in returning to Item 10 to request the MSC to prepare recommendations as to the best means of arriving at the conclusion of the special agreements referred to in Article 43 of the Charter. At the same time, it was recognized that you and the US members of the MSC might wish to work this out by consultation in the light of the existing situation.⁷⁷

BYRNES

SPA Files⁷⁸

Memorandum by Mr. Howard C. Johnson of the Division of International Security Affairs to the Director of the Office of Special Political Affairs (Hiss)

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] February 25, 1946.

Subject: Consideration of the Regulation of Armaments by the SWNCC Ad Hoc Subcommittee on Security Functions of the United Nations

In December 1945 the Joint Strategic Survey Committee prepared a paper for the approval of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on the regulation of armaments,⁷⁶ a paper designed to serve as guidance for the U.S. members of the Military Staff Committee. JCS considered the paper unsatisfactory and referred it back to JSSC for further study

⁷⁵ Item 10 on the Security Council agenda read as follows: "Item 10. Discussion of the Best Means of Arriving at the Conclusion of the Special Agreements Referred to in Article 43 of the Charter."

⁷⁶ Not printed.

⁷⁷ At its 23rd Meeting, February 16, the Security Council decided that the Military Staff Committee need not meet again at London. For the text of the resolution adopted at the same meeting concerning the future work of the MSC, see Blaisdell's memorandum of April 1, p. 769.

⁷⁸ Lot 55D323, certain files of the Office of Special Political Affairs and its successor offices, 1946-1951.

in the light of additional factors suggested by JCS. JCS also forwarded the attached memorandum to SWNCC, suggesting that the SWNCC Ad Hoc Subcommittee on Security Functions of the United Nations undertake a preliminary study of the matter.

On December 28, 1945 SWNCC referred this memorandum to the Ad Hoc Subcommittee for necessary action. No action has been taken as yet in the Subcommittee. It has not been pushed by the State Department since it was considered desirable that the Department have its own position somewhat clarified before entering discussions with the service departments; it was understood informally that War Department staff officers also believed that some initial guidance from the State Department would be essential.

IS expects to complete next week a paper which might be used as a basis for discussion;⁸⁰ it will not set forth a definitive position on the regulation of armaments. We believe that there would be substantial advantage in bringing together a State-War-Navy working group as early as practicable for further work on the subject.

It is recommended that you, as chairman of the Subcommittee now charged with action on the development of the U.S. position on the regulation of armaments, raise informally with the other members of the Subcommittee the desirability of setting up a working group to draft papers on the subject for the consideration of the Subcommittee. It would be desirable to have at least two members from each Department on the working group. IS considers it essential that IS be represented on the working group, and suggests that it would be desirable to have EUR represented if possible.

[Annex]

*The Joint Chiefs of Staff to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee*⁸¹

CONFIDENTIAL
SM-4531

WASHINGTON, 21 December 1945.

Subject: U.S. Guidance as to Disarmament and the Regulation of Armaments.

It is the understanding of the United States Chiefs of Staff that the subject of the regulation of armaments, and possible disarmament, may be raised for discussion in early meetings of the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Military Staff Committee of the ⁸⁰ Presumably an antecedent draft of SWNCC/MS UNO Doc. 28, June 5, prepared in the Division of International Security Affairs; for partial text of that document, see p. 833.

⁸¹ Circulated as SWNCC 240/D, December 28, 1945.

United Nations. The United States Chiefs of Staff will wish to furnish adequate guidance on this subject to their representatives on the Military Staff Committee and to insure that such guidance is carefully coordinated with the views expressed by the United States representative in the Security Council.

For the present, the United States Chiefs of Staff propose to instruct their representatives not to discuss the regulation of armaments, and possible disarmament, in the Military Staff Committee until the Security Council calls upon the Committee for advice and assistance with respect thereto.

In order that U.S. views might be ready when needed, it would appear to be most desirable for a preliminary study of the problems involved in the regulation of armaments, and possible disarmament, to be undertaken as early as practicable. It would appear that this a proper function for the State-War-Navy Ad Hoc Subcommittee on Military and Security Functions of the United Nations Organization, on which the armed forces are represented by the members of the Joint Strategic Survey Committee.

For the Joint Chiefs of Staff:
 A. J. McFARLAND
Brigadier General, U.S.A.,
Secretary

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Mr. Bernard M. Baruch*⁸² to the Secretary of State

[NEW YORK,] March 13, 1946.

MY DEAR JIM: I have just been able to get the atomic energy resolution⁸³ which I read over very carefully.

Section 5, paragraphs B, C, and D are the crux. Any proposal will have to be based upon a better observance of promises. In the present circumstances that would be worth very little judging by your notes to Russia.

There is no reason why Section A should not be undertaken, although this immediately raises the question of patents in connection with all scientific processes, particularly those of peace, which are being industrialized and which help to raise the standard of living of everyone. In war one can seize those patents, but in peace they must be protected.

⁸² Civic leader and investment banker; chairman of the War Industries Board during World War I; government consultant during World War II. In late February, Byrnes had asked Mr. Baruch to be United States Representative on the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission.

⁸³ The resolution on atomic energy adopted by the United Nations General Assembly, London, January 24, 1946; for text, see GA (I/1), Resolutions, p. 9.

When it comes to the others, I do not see how we can proceed at present. If Russia will not permit entree of news men or others, can we believe they will permit any inspection? That would immediately stop the discussion regarding atomic energy.

Unless we get a better working UNO which is the only hope of the world, we will be unable to discuss the elimination of the atomic bomb from armaments because we will be the only ones who will have them.

I must confess that paragraph B is a puzzler to me. Indeed, I feel I should like to have you expatiate a little more on the terms of reference of the commission. I understand it had to be more or less indefinite but I would like to know more about what exactly lies in your mind.

Another thing, I can only work between the hours of 10 and 12 in the morning and from 2:30 to 4:30 in the afternoon. I cannot go to any night sessions.

I feel very strongly we ought to work everything through the UNO and try to uphold that, but I do not see any point in our discussing any of the questions this will bring up unless a better understanding—a two-way street—is had with other countries, particularly Russia and that all contracts and promises should be lived up to. There is no good making new ones unless we live up to the old ones.

I understand also that this will not stop me from expressing my views on any other questions. It will stop me from making any statement regarding atomic energy which will be the work of the commission. Anything I will have to say will have to be said to the commission. I then become a part of the machinery as long as I remain a member of it.

This is a very important matter and I do not want to say No, but I should like to have an alternate or assistant—a man like Eberstadt,⁸⁴ Hancock,⁸⁵ Searls⁸⁶ or Swope,⁸⁷ besides the scientific advisers.

In view of all this, if you still want me to serve I will accept.

Sincerely yours,

[File copy not signed]

⁸⁴ Ferdinand Eberstadt, banker, served on the War Production Board during World War II.

⁸⁵ John M. Hancock, investment banker, served with the War Resources Board during World War II.

⁸⁶ Fred Searls, Jr., mining corporation executive, served with the Office of War Mobilization during World War II.

⁸⁷ Herbert Bayard Swope, former editor of the New York World and head of the New York State Racing Commission; served with the War Industries Board during World War I.

IO Files : USMS/12/Rev. 1⁸⁸

Memorandum by the United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee

SECRET

[NEW YORK,] 15 March 1946.

PRINCIPLES TO BE ADVOCATED BY U.S. IN PREPARING MILITARY AGREEMENTS BETWEEN SECURITY COUNCIL AND MEMBER NATIONS OF U.N.O.⁸⁹ (INCLUDES U.S. DELEGATION'S COMMENTS)

1. The Security Council of the United Nations shall establish a pool of armed forces which shall be maintained by the respective contributing member nations at operational strength and in readiness for combat in order that units may be drawn upon promptly under conditions recognized by the Security Council as requiring the use of forces under the United Nations Charter.

2. The pool shall include land, sea and air force units so organized and distributed geographically as to enable the United Nations to bring military pressure to bear in any part of the world in so far as practicable. In particular, national air force contingents would be held immediately available to enable the United Nations to take urgent military measures as stated in Article 45 of the United Nations Charter.

3. Armed forces contributed by member nations shall habitually be based within the respective borders or territorial waters of each contributing nation, or its possessions, or within areas occupied by them under international agreements except at such times as such forces are acting under the direction of the Security Council. (Submit to J.C.S.)

4. The permanent members of the Security Council shall provide the major portion of the security forces initially with the contributions of smaller nations being integrated into the pool of forces as they become available.

5. The permanent members of the Security Council shall agree to contribute forces of comparable over-all strength but which may differ widely as to the strength of separate components, land, sea or air. Other member nations will be given an opportunity to offer contributions in the form of armed forces and/or installations, services, transportation, rights of passage or items of common military supply. The Military Staff Committee will be prepared to confer with military reprerepresentatives of nations not permanently represented on the Security Council as to what appropriate contributions might include.

⁸⁸ Documentation produced by the United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee bears the designation "USMS".

⁸⁹ The principles contained in this document were extracted, after consultation with representatives of the Department of State, from State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee document SWNCC 219/8; in regard to that document, and for information on subsequent developments with respect to the present document, see Mr. Blaisdell's memorandum of April 1, p. 769.

6. Forces, or any part thereof, contributed by member nations shall come under the control of the Security Council at the time and place designated by the Security Council.

7. United Nations forces, when operating under direction of the Security Council, shall serve under the over-all commander designated by the Security Council. The over-all commander shall act under the strategic direction of the Military Staff Committee. Except when required for use by the Security Council, armed forces listed as available to the United Nations shall remain under the exclusive command of the respective contributing nations.

8. The Security Council and any member or group of members of the United Nations shall have the right to reopen negotiations for an increase or decrease of the contribution of that member or group.

9. Each member nation shall be responsible for the supply and maintenance, including replacement personnel, of the forces it contributes to the United Nations forces. Each member nation shall also provide transportation for its forces acting under the Security Council to the extent of its capabilities.

10. In case of inability of any member nation to provide the required transportation to move its contingent of the United Nations forces operating under the Security Council, the transportation shall be obtained from other member nations as part of such other nations' agreed contribution to the support of the enforcement powers of the Security Council, or it shall be found and chartered by the Security Council.

11. In general, agreements between the Security Council and member nations shall include general guarantees providing for rights of passage and for the furnishing of services and facilities required by forces acting under the Security Council, within the limits of each nation's capacity, rather than including a detailed determination of them. Such services and facilities shall be provided at the request of the Security Council, and the expenses therefor shall be borne as the appropriate authorities may determine.

12. No member nation shall be urged to increase its military strength or create a particular component thereof for the purpose of providing a contingent to the United Nations forces.

13. The United Nations forces should be established with the least practicable delay.

14. Separate agreements shall be prepared for negotiation between the Security Council and each member nation. If practicable, these agreements shall be on a standard form.

S11.2423/3-1746

The Secretary of State's Committee on Atomic Energy to the Secretary of State

WASHINGTON, March 17, 1946.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Your committee was appointed on January 7, 1946, with the following terms of reference:

"Anticipating favorable action by the United Nations Organization on the proposal for the establishment of a commission to consider the problems arising as to the control of atomic energy and other weapons of possible mass destruction, the Secretary of State has appointed a Committee of five members to study the subject of controls and safeguards necessary to protect this Government so that the persons hereafter selected to represent the United States on the Commission can have the benefit of the study."

At our first meeting on January 14, the Committee concluded that the consideration of controls and safeguards would be inseparable from a plan of which they were a part and that the Commission would look to the American representative to put forward a plan. At that meeting we also agreed that it was first essential to have a report prepared analyzing and appraising all the relevant facts and formulating proposals. In order that the work should be useful, it was necessary to designate men of recognized attainments and varied background, who would be prepared to devote the major part of their time to the matter.

On January 23, 1946, we appointed as a Board of Consultants for this purpose:

Mr. David E. Lilienthal, Chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority, who acted as Chairman of the consulting Board,

Mr. Chester I. Barnard, President of the New Jersey Bell Telephone Company,

Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer, of the California Institute of Technology and the University of California,

Dr. Charles Allen Thomas, Vice President and Technical Director, Monsanto Chemical Company, and

Mr. Harry A. Winne, Vice-President in Charge of Engineering Policy, General Electric Company.

The Board of Consultants has spent virtually its entire time, since the date of appointment, in an intensive study of the problems, and has now completed its report, which is transmitted herewith.⁹⁰

A preliminary draft of this report was first presented to your Committee ten days ago. Extensive discussion between the Committee and the Board led to the development of further considerations embodied in a subsequent draft. Still further discussion resulted in the report now transmitted.⁹¹

⁹⁰ A Report on the International Control of Atomic Energy, March 16, 1946, Department of State Publication 2498 (Washington, 1946). The report, formally released on March 23, is often referred to as "The Acheson-Lilienthal Report."

We lay the report before you as the Board has submitted it to us "not as a final plan, but as a place to begin, a foundation on which to build." In our opinion it furnishes the most constructive analysis of the question of international control we have seen and a definitely hopeful approach to a solution of the entire problem. We recommend it for your consideration as representing the framework within which the best prospects for both security and development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes may be found.

In particular, we are impressed by the great advantages of an international agency with affirmative powers and functions coupled with powers of inspection and supervision in contrast to any agency with merely police-like powers attempting to cope with national agencies otherwise restrained only by a commitment to "outlaw" the use of atomic energy for war. In our judgment the latter type of organization offers little hope of achieving the security and safeguards we are seeking.

We are impressed also by the aspect of the plan which concentrates in the hands of the international agency only the activities which it is essential to control because they are dangerous to international security, leaving as much freedom as possible to national and private research and other activity.

We wish to stress two matters brought out in the Board's report—matters of importance in considering the report's proposals as they affect the security of the United States both during the period of any international discussion of them and during the period required to put the plan into full effect.

The first matter concerns the disclosure of information not now generally known. The report points out that the plan necessitates the disclosure of information but permits of the disclosure of such information by progressive stages. In our opinion various stages may upon further study be suggested. It is enough to point out now that there could be at least four general points in this progression. Certain information, generally described as that required for an understanding of the workability of proposals, would have to be made available at the time of the discussions of the proposals in the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, of the report of the Commission in the Security ⁹¹ The Secretary of State's Committee on Atomic Energy and its Board of Consultants held joint meetings at Dumbarton Oaks, Washington, D.C., on March 7 and 8, and March 16 and 17. Handwritten notes of those sessions by Carroll Wilson, and Miss Anne Wilson's shorthand stenographic notes, exist in the Atomic Energy Lot File, Department of State. For an account of the meetings, see Hewlett and Anderson, pp. 540-553.

Council and General Assembly of the United Nations and in the national legislatures which would be called upon to act upon any recommendations of the United Nations. We have carefully considered the content of this information, and in our discussions with the Board have defined it within satisfactory limits. We estimate the degree of its importance and the effect of its disclosure to be as follows: If made known to a nation otherwise equipped by industrial development, scientific resources and possessing the necessary raw materials to develop atomic armament within five years, such disclosure might shorten that period by as much as a year. Whether any nation—we are excluding Great Britain and Canada—could achieve such an intensive program is a matter of serious doubt. If the program were spread over a considerably longer period, the disclosure referred to would not shorten the effort appreciably.

The next stage of disclosure might occur when the proposed international organization was actually established by the action of the various governments upon the report of the United Nations. At this time the organization would require most of the remaining scientific knowledge but would not require the so-called technical know-how or the knowledge of the construction of the bomb.

By the time the organization was ready to assume its functions in the field of industrial production it would, of course, require the technological information and know-how necessary to carry out its task. The information regarding the construction of the bomb would not be essential to the plan until the last stage when the organization was prepared to assume responsibility for research in the field of explosives as an adjunct to its regulatory and operational duties.

The second matter relates to the assumption or transfer of authority over physical things. Here also the plan permits of progress by stages beginning in the field of raw material production, progressing to that of industrial production, and going on to the control of explosives.

The development of detailed proposals for such scheduling will require further study and much technical competence and staff. It will be guided, of course, by basic decisions of high policy. One of these decisions will be for what period of time the United States will continue the manufacture of bombs. The plan does not require that the United States shall discontinue such manufacture either upon the proposal of the plan or upon the inauguration of the international agency. At some stage in the development of the plan this is required. But neither the plan nor our transmittal of it should be construed as meaning that this should or should not be done at the outset or at any specific time. That decision, whenever made, will involve considerations of the highest policy affecting our security, and must be made by our government under its constitutional processes and in the light of all the facts of the world situation.

Your Committee, Mr. Secretary, awaits your further instructions as to whether you believe it has performed the task you assigned to it and may now be discharged or whether you wish it to go further in this field under your guidance.

Respectfully submitted,

DEAN ACHESON
Chairman
 VANNEVAR BUSH
 JAMES B. CONANT
 LESLIE R. GROVES
Major General, USA
 JOHN J. McCLOY

501.BC/3-2046

*Memorandum Prepared in the Division of International Security Affairs*⁹²

[WASHINGTON,] March 19, 1946.

PRELIMINARY VIEWS OF THE U.S. SECURITY COUNCIL GROUP⁹³ (POLITICAL) ON THE NEXT STEPS IN THE PREPARATION AND NEGOTIATION OF THE AGREEMENTS REFERRED TO IN ARTICLE 43

1. On February 16, 1946, the Security Council directed the Military Staff Committee substantially as follows: (a) to meet at the temporary headquarters simultaneously with the Security Council, and (b) as its first task, to examine from the military point of view the provisions in ⁹² The present document accompanied a memorandum of March 20 from Dean Rusk of the Division of International Security Affairs to Alger Hiss, Director of the Office of Special Political Affairs.

The Division of International Security Affairs (IS) of the Office of Special Political Affairs was the area within the Department of State directly concerned with the subject of United Nations security matters. Primary responsibility for the formulation of Department of State positions on this subject in the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee and its Ad Hoc Committee on Security Functions of the United Nations, and for drafting instructions for the United States Delegation at the United Nations on the matter rested with IS.

⁹³ The United States Security Council Group consisted of Department of State and military officials concerned with the question of placing armed forces at the disposal of the Security Council. Department of State representation included political officers from IS, SPA, and other areas. Military membership included the United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee. The Security Council Group met in London and Washington prior to the establishment of the United States Permanent Delegation office at the United Nations in New York on March 19. It does not appear that the body as such met thereafter. However, the office of the United States Representative on the Security Council (the Permanent Delegation) maintained close contact with the United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee and provided them with guidance on the political aspects of their work.

Article 43 of the Charter and submit the results of the study and any recommendations to the Security Council in due course. The Military Staff Committee now plans to meet in New York on March 25.

2. It is understood informally that the U.S. Representatives on the Military Staff Committee plan to propose to the Committee at its first meeting that, in order to proceed to comply with the above directive, the Military Staff Committee deal with problems arising in connection with the special agreements of Article 43 in the following four phases :

(a) Formulation of general principles applicable to the special agreements ;

(b) Estimation of the total pool of forces which the Security Council might require ;

(c) Contributions which the permanent members of the Security Council might make by way of armed forces, assistance and facilities ; and

(d) Similar contributions which other Members of the United Nations might make.

3. It is also understood that the U.S. Representatives will, if the above phasing is acceptable to the Military Staff Committee, recommend that a sub-committee be appointed immediately to consider general principles. The U.S. member of this sub-committee would then introduce a paper setting forth broad principles which he will propose be adopted. This paper has already been prepared and consists of broad principles extracted from SWNCC 219/8.

4. At an informal meeting of the staff of the U.S. Representative on the Security Council, held on March 15, it was concluded that the next steps toward preparing and negotiating the agreements referred to in Article 43 should be :

(a) The U.S. Representatives on the Military Staff Committee should propose to the Committee that it proceed along the lines indicated in par. 2, above.

(b) If the Military Staff Committee agrees and appoints a sub-committee to consider general principles, the U.S. member of the subcommittee should introduce U.S. views to the general principles involved, basing such views on SWNCC 219/8.

(c) As soon as the Military Staff Committee has arrived at a formulation of general principles, these should be forwarded to the Security Council for approval, prior to the consideration by the Military Staff Committee of the application of these principles to the quota forces.

(d) If the above procedure is halted by disagreement in the Military Staff Committee, the U.S. Security Council Group (political and military) should meet at once to determine the next step.

(e) Close liaison between the political and military members of the U.S. Council Group will be required at all times.

SPA Files

Memorandum by the Assistant Chief of the Division of International Security Affairs (Rusk)

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] March 22, 1946.

VIEWS OF THE U.S. SECURITY COUNCIL GROUP (POLITICAL) ON THE PREPARATION AND NEGOTIATION OF THE SPECIAL AGREEMENTS REFERRED TO IN ARTICLE 43

The U.S. Security Council Group agreed that it would be desirable for the U.S. Representatives on the Military Staff Committee to introduce the following memorandum at the next meeting of the Military Staff Committee:⁹⁴

PROCEDURE FOR COMPLYING WITH SECURITY COUNCIL DIRECTIVE OF 16 FEBRUARY 1946 REGARDING THE PREPARATION OF MILITARY AGREEMENTS

Memorandum From the U.S. Delegation on the Military Staff Committee

1. At its meeting of 16 February 1946, the Security Council decided that the next meetings of the Military Staff Committee should be devoted to the study of Article 43 of the United Nations Charter.

2. As a method of accomplishing this task, the United States Delegation proposes the following procedure be carried out in the sequence given:

a. Formulate recommendations to the Security Council as to the basic principles which should govern the organization of the United Nations forces. (A subcommittee should be appointed at once to study this question and submit its recommendations to the Military Staff Committee as a whole).

b. Formulate recommendations to the Security Council as to the contribution of forces to be made by each of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

c. Formulate recommendations to the Security Council as to the contribution of forces which should be made by each member nation which is not a permanent member of the Security Council.

It was also agreed that it would be desirable for the Military Staff Committee to forward its recommendations as to general principles (under a, above) to the Security Council for approval before using such principles as a basis for examining the contributions of forces to be made by Members of the United Nations.

⁹⁴ The Military Staff Committee convened in New York on March 25, at which time the United States Representatives submitted as document MS/20 the proposal printed here. It was agreed to establish a subcommittee on basic principles. (10 Files)

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Mr. Bernard M. Baruch to President Truman*⁹⁵

WASHINGTON, March 26, 1946.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I was, of course, very much gratified that you should have expressed such great confidence in me as to appoint me the United States representative on the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission.⁹⁶ I do not underestimate either the honor or the responsibility but, as I have become more familiar with the situation, there are certain elements of it which are causing me concern, and which I, therefore, want to discuss with you. As I understand my duties and authority, they consist presently solely of the obligation of representing United States policy on atomic energy, as communicated to me by you directly or through the Secretary of State, before the United Nations Organization. I see nowhere any duty or responsibility on me to participate in the formation of that policy.

This situation has been brought very forcibly to my attention by the press announcements of the report rendered by Mr. Acheson's Committee. I do not underestimate the effect of this publication in the United States or in the world at large, and while I have not had an opportunity to examine the report with care and cannot state my own definite views with respect to it, the letter from Secretary Byrnes to me transmitting the report⁹⁷ states that it was unanimously recommended by a Committee headed by the Under Secretary of State. This brings the report pretty close to the category of the United States Government policy.

I have no doubt that the public feels that I am going to have an important relation to the determination of our atomic energy policy. There is no legal basis for this view and now that the Under Secretary of State's Committee Report has been published, the determination of policy will be greatly affected by the contents of this report. Even the superficial and incomplete examination of the subject that I have been able to make in the last few days convinces me that this report is likely to be the subject of considerable and rather violent differences of opinion. Its publication, which I understand to have been unauthorized, does not render the situation any less difficult.⁹⁸

⁹⁵ Presented in person at the White House, March 26; for an account of this Truman-Baruch meeting, see Hewlett and Anderson, pp. 557-558.

⁹⁶ The appointment had been announced on March 18. In regard to the circumstances of the appointment, the selection and functions of Baruch's staff, and the establishment of liaison between Baruch's office and the Department of State, see Hewlett and Anderson, pp. 554-576.

⁹⁷ Letter of March 21, not printed.

⁹⁸ Accounts of the report had appeared in the press on March 25 although the document was not formally released by the Department of State until March 28.

These are the things that have been bothering me, and I wanted to talk them over with you before coming to a final conclusion myself as to whether, in the circumstances, I can be useful to you. I will need a little more time to reflect. As it presently stands, I think that embarrassment all around would be avoided if you would ask Chairman Connally of the Foreign Relations Committee to postpone any action on confirmation of my appointment until I have had a little more time to think things over.

Respectfully yours,

[File copy not signed]

501.BC Atomic/3-2946

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Acting Secretary of State

[WASHINGTON,] March 29, 1946.

At the end of Mr. Makins' ⁹⁹ call upon me, the principal subjects of which have been described in other memoranda, he told me that he was reading with very great interest the report of the Consultants on the international control of atomic energy which was released last night. While he had not finished it he was finding it a most thoughtful paper. He believed that it was not very far from ideas which were developing in London. He mentioned specifically that part of the report which dealt with the control of raw materials. He did not express himself on the international control of primary producing plants or of the production of explosives. I stressed to Mr. Makins that the report was, of course, only a working paper and did not reflect established Government policy. He said that he understood this. He asked when I expected the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission to meet and when I thought the United States Government policy would be crystallized. I told him that I could not offer an opinion on these subjects beyond saying that a great deal of work remained to be done. He said that Sir Alexander Cadogan ¹ had expressed a desire to come to Washington to discuss these matters with me. I replied that I should be delighted to see Cadogan and would be most happy to discuss with him the ideas expressed in the report. I could not, however, as of the present time be very helpful to him on the other matters he mentioned.

DEAN ACHESON

⁹⁹ Roger Makins, British Minister in the United States.

¹ British Representative on the Security Council and Atomic Energy Commission.

SPA Files

Memorandum by the Associate Chief of the Division of International Security Affairs (Blaisdell)

[WASHINGTON,] April 1, 1946.

NOTES REGARDING STATUS OF SWNCC 219/8 "U.S. GUIDANCE AS TO THE ARMED FORCES TO BE MADE AVAILABLE TO THE SECURITY COUNCIL OF THE UNITED NATIONS"²

1. Development of SWNCC 219/8; the paper originated with the Joint Chiefs of Staff and was revised in collaboration with the State Department. In its present form it has the approval of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee which means the approval among other things of the Secretary of State. It has also been discussed in-

² SWNCC 219/8 was a basic interdepartmental statement of United States policy with respect to Security Council armed forces. It was a revision of SWNCC 219/6/D, a document circulated within the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee by the Joint Chiefs of Staff on February 1. SWNCC referred SWNCC 219/6/D to the Ad Hoc Committee to Effect Collaboration Between the State, War, and Navy Departments on the Security Functions of the United Nations Organization which considered it on February 8 and recommended changes which were incorporated into SWNCC 219/7. SWNCC 219/8 represents the Ad Hoc Committee's recommended text slightly revised and approved by the parent body on February 27.

SWNCC 219/8 contained the following conclusions:

"That the agreements establishing the numbers and types of forces, their degree of readiness and general location and the nature of the facilities and assistance to be provided should preferably be concluded between the Security Council and each individual member nation, although negotiations leading to individual agreements may be facilitated by dealing simultaneously with groups of nations in generally similar circumstances."

"That a standard form of agreement along the lines of the annexed draft agreement may be used as found convenient by the Security Council as a basis for negotiations with member nations." A draft standard form of agreement was included; that draft was submitted to the Military Staff Committee as MS/58, May 18.

The United States should provide one corps comprising two divisions, a balanced task force of 5 wings, one carrier task group, amphibious and sea transport lift for the above forces to the extent available, plus adequate surface support.

"The contribution by any member and especially by smaller nations should not exceed their military capability of maintenance and should be based on the ability and willingness of each member nation to make available such force."

"No fixed limit should be set for the entire Security Force at this time. Therefore, the size and composition of the entire force cannot now be determined."

Transportation and other assistance and facilities should be provided for.

"The permanent members of the Security Council should agree upon and announce their respective quotas initially."

"No reduction should be made in their quotas merely to maintain the total Security Force at a fixed over-all strength; any reductions in their quotas should be based on developments in the world situation and the ability and willingness of member nations to contribute."

"The Security Council should set the earliest practicable target date for the availability of the pool of forces to be furnished. Subject to legislative processes, it is now estimated that U.S. forces as far as military preparations are concerned might be ready by 1 January 1947." (SWNCC Files) formally by Mr. Acheson with the President, who has indicated his agreement.³

2. Document 219/8 contains proposals which are political in character as well as military. For example, the proposal that the governments of the five permanent members of the Security Council provide the major portion of the security forces initially. The Security Council to which the Military Staff Committee reports is composed of representatives of six other members as well as of the five permanent members.

3. In view of paragraph 2 above, it has been felt that the Military Staff Committee should operate with respect to Article 43 under a Security Council directive setting out the principles to be followed in negotiating the agreements.

4. The Security Council adopted a directive at its last meeting in London on February 16, 1946. There follows an excerpt from the Journal of the Security Council for its meeting of this date. Sir Alexander Cadogan, the United Kingdom, proposed: ". . . 'that the Security Council should request the Military Staff Committee to meet at the temporary headquarters of United Nations simultaneously with the first meeting of the Security Council at the temporary headquarters in New York and that the Council should direct the Military Staff Committee as its first task to examine from the military point of view the provisions in article 43 of the Charter and submit the results of the study and any recommendations to the Council in due course.' . . ."

This was agreed to without objection.

5. After discussion among the Security Council group of the United States Department of State, a suggested procedure was developed for complying with this directive (see Mr. Rusk's paper of March 22, 1946,⁴ particularly paragraph 2, a). The recommended principles, which it is felt the United States should advocate, have been extracted from SWNCC 219/8 and have been set out in a separate paper.⁵

6. The Military Staff Committee has adopted the procedure suggested by the United States representative, the subcommittee has been set up, and it was agreed in the Military Staff Committee to have the subcommittee receive draft principles from each of the members represented. The principles extracted from SWNCC 219/8 are being presented to the subcommittee as the United States proposal.⁶

³ Mr. Acheson described his discussion with President Truman on March 27 in a memorandum of the same day. The President approved transmitting SWNCC 219/8 to Stettinius and to the United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee as a tentative basis of discussion. During the same conversation, President Truman suggested that the views of Senators Connally, Vandenberg, and Thomas (of Utah), on SWNCC 219/8 be solicited. (501.BC/3-2646)

⁴ Ante, p. 766.

⁵ Ante, p. 769.

SPA Files

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Associate Chief of the Division of International Security Affairs (Blaisdell)

[WASHINGTON,] April 1, 1946.

NOTES OF A CONFERENCE BETWEEN STATE DEPARTMENT OFFICIALS AND CERTAIN SENATORS, APRIL 1, 1946, 2:30 p. m., SENATE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE ROOM IN THE CAPITOL

At the suggestion of the President and on the instructions of the Under Secretary, Messrs. Hiss and Blaisdell conferred today with Senators Connally, Thomas of Utah,⁷ Vandenberg and Austin⁸ regarding SWNCC 219/8 and the statement of principles to be advocated by the United States in the negotiating of agreements under Article 43 of the Charter. Senator George was invited but was unable to attend because of illness. There were also present Mr. R. V. Shirley, Clerk of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and Mr. Francis Wilcox, Head International Relations Analyst in the Library of Congress Legislative Reference Service.

At the beginning of the conference, copies of SWNCC 219/8, "U.S. Guidance as to the Armed Forces to be Made Available to Security Council of the United Nations," and the paper, "Principles to be Advocated by U.S. in Preparing Military Agreements between Security Council and Member Nations of U.N.," dated March 29, 1946,⁹ were distributed. Most of the discussion was focused on the latter paper; there was no attempt made to read through the former paper, the principal reference being to the suggested quota for the United States (pages 84 and 86).

The questions raised by the Senators and their comments relate principally to the following four matters: 1) the responsibility for meeting the expenses of operations engaged in by contingents under the authority of the Security Council; 2) the size of the proposed U.S. contingent; 3) regional use of earmarked forces; and 4) the atomic bomb.

⁶ The United States Representatives presented the principles under reference to the Military Staff Committee as MS/28, April 1.

⁷ Elbert D. Thomas, United States Senator from Utah.

⁸ Warren R. Austin, United States Senator from Vermont; United States Representative-Designate at the Seat of the United Nations.

⁹ Printed as USMS/12/Rev. 1, p. 759.

1. Cost.—Senator Vandenberg queried the suggested principles in paragraphs 9, 10 and 11 for meeting the expenses of operations engaged in by earmarked United States forces. As a general principle, he thought that the cost of such operations, exclusive of pay of troops, should be borne by the organization. Senator Austin agreed. Mr. Hiss and Mr. Blaisdell agreed to have these paragraphs examined in the light of this suggestion.

2. Size of Proposed U.S. Contingent.—Senator Vandenberg thought that an aggregate of earmarked forces numbering in the neighborhood of a million from the five permanent members was too large, in as much as the forces cannot be used against them but only against other powers. Following a discussion of paragraph 2 (see below), Senator Vandenberg said that total contingents in this number from the five permanent members would probably be all right if the concept of regional use were taken care of adequately. He wondered how many men would be involved in the proposed U.S. contingent of one corps comprising two divisions and of a balanced task force of five air wings. Senator Vandenberg said he did not believe that the forces would ever be used, but that in any event they would only be used on the “little fellow.” He was apprehensive over the possible effect on American public opinion of a U.S. contingent of the size suggested. He wishes to have it made as small as possible so as to avoid “soapbox” attacks. Instead of one corps comprising two divisions, he would prefer a single division, a proposal with which Senator Thomas agreed. Senator Vandenberg emphasized that a great progress had been made in getting the United Nations accepted by the American people; the objective now should be to get them to remain tied to the United Nations. Senator Thomas suggested listing the air and naval forces in that order followed by ground forces.

3. Use of Forces Regionally.—With reference to paragraph 2, both Senator Vandenberg and Senator Austin expressed a dislike of the paragraph in its present form, particularly the phrase “in any part of the world.” Senator Austin would like to exclude non-American forces from the Western Hemisphere in order to show that the Monroe Doctrine is unaffected. He would not want Soviet forces brought into Latin America. Senator Vandenberg said that paragraph 2 at present makes no specific reference to the purposes of the Charter. Several amendments to the present text of paragraph 2 were proposed to have it read as follows:

The pool shall include land, sea and air force units so organized and distributed geographically as to enable the United Nations to bring prompt and appropriate military pressure to bear in the particular part of the world where a threat to the peace may occur.

In addition, Senator Vandenberg would insert a sentence following the present text of paragraph 3, to read as follows:

Armed forces, in the first instance, so far as practicable, shall be drawn for use from the geographic or regional areas involved.

4. The Atomic Bomb.—Senator Vandenberg asked whether the atom bomb was included in the weapons of the proposed U.S. Contingent. When Mr. Hiss answered in the negative, Senator Vandenberg said that this question was sure to be raised on the floor of the Senate. He urged that if no specific reference is to be made in the agreement, the reasons why should be at hand. Mr. Hiss stated what he felt to be the real reason, with which Senator Vandenberg concurred, namely, that until the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission has made proposals for international control, it would be premature to take any definite position regarding the use of the bomb. Incidentally, Senator Vandenberg stated he thought that sooner or later the United Nations would acquire the bomb for its use.

Several amendments to the text of other paragraphs were suggested. Senator Vandenberg felt that the text of paragraph 4 indicated that other members, Canada, for example, does not have as emphatic an obligation to provide forces as the five permanent members. He felt that the statement of the principle in paragraph 4 should not leave the impression that there were primary and secondary obligations, the first attaching to the five permanent members and the second to the other members.

The word "contribution" to describe the earmarked forces and facilities was questioned by Senator Vandenberg, Senator Austin and Senator Thomas on the ground that it does not connote an obligation. The word "participation" was suggested as a possible substitute.

There is attached a copy of those paragraphs to which amendments were proposed, the original matter being stricken and the new matter being underlined.¹⁰

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

The Director of the Office of Special Political Affairs (Hiss) to the Under Secretary of State (Acheson)

[WASHINGTON,] April 11, 1946.

JOINT CHIEFS VIEWS CONCERNING MILITARY IMPLICATIONS OF
ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

You will recall that on the 25th of January last a Joint Chiefs of Staff paper (JCS 1567/26) entitled "Guidance as to the Military Implications of the United Nations Commission on Atomic Energy" was distributed to the members of the State, War and Navy Coordinating Committee (SWNCC 253).¹¹ Mr. Blaisdell prepared under date of January 25 a brief commentary on the Joint Chiefs' paper¹² which was sent forward to you together with a supplementary memorandum dated January 29 from Mr. Ross.¹³ Copies of the papers referred to are attached for convenient reference.

¹⁰ The attachment is not printed.

In Mr. Ross' memorandum the question was raised of the attitude the Department should take with regard to this paper when it came up for consideration in SWNCC the following afternoon. It was suggested that this paper might be referred to the SWNCC Committee on Security Arrangements for further consideration with a view to concerting the views of the three Departments.

If my understanding is correct you discussed this matter with Mr. Matthews¹⁴ and Mr. Ross and authorized Mr. Matthews, as the State Department Representative on SWNCC, to inform the Committee that you were keeping the Secretaries of War and Navy currently informed on the progress of work of your Committee on Atomic Energy and that it would seem, therefore, for the time being no further action on the Joint Chiefs' paper would be required. This was in effect the decision of the Committee.

An officer of the War Department General Staff and Joint Staff Planners has told Mr. Blaisdell informally that the Joint Chiefs are considering revision of the paper under reference and its resubmission to SWNCC. Also Mr. Baruch is scheduled next Monday to discuss with General Eisenhower and Admiral Nimitz the question of his relations with the two Services with regard to atomic energy matters. It is understood that the General and the Admiral have under consideration recommending that the United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee serve as advisers to Mr. Baruch with regard to military implications of the work of the Atomic Energy Commission. This would be consistent with the Joint Chiefs' paper under reference which states one of its objectives as being "to provide guidance to the Representatives of the United States Chiefs of Staff on the Military Staff Committee of the United Nations as to military advice to be given to the United States Representative on the Commission on Atomic Energy".

In view of this information it would seem essential for the Department to take the initiative to the end of assuring civilian clearance among the three Departments of any material to be sent to our Mili-

¹¹ Ante, p. 738.

¹² Not printed.

¹³ Not printed; John C. Ross, Deputy Director of the Office of Special Political Affairs.

¹⁴ H. Freeman Matthews, Director of the Office of European Affairs.

tary Staff Committee Representatives and, in turn, used by them in advising Mr. Baruch.

It is recommended that this initiative be taken in two ways: first, Mr. Blaisdell should be authorized to discuss informally with officers of the Joint Chiefs with whom he is in more or less constant contact, any current revisions which may be contemplated of the Joint Chiefs' paper under reference; second, it is recommended that if the Joint Chiefs of Staff decide to resubmit a revised paper to SWNCC the Department's view should be to refer this paper to the SWNCC Committee on Security Arrangements.

The subject of this memorandum is closely related to the question of organizing the Department's work in regard to atomic energy matters both generally and with particular reference to Mr. Baruch's plans. A separate memorandum on this subject is being sent forward to you.¹⁵ I think a very useful purpose would be served if we might discuss this entire subject with you on the basis of these memoranda at your early convenience.

SPA Files

Memorandum by Mr. George H. Haselton of the Division of International Security Affairs to the Associate Chief of the Division (Blaisdell)

[WASHINGTON,] April 12, 1946.

Subject: Comment on memoranda from the Chinese and United Kingdom Delegations.¹⁶

THE CHINESE MEMORANDUM

1. The basic principles governing the organization of the United Nations forces proposed by the Chinese Delegation follow closely the line of reasoning laid down in the United States proposal, and although it does not enter into quite so much detail, no new points are raised therein which are not already covered in the United States paper. In short, it seems adequate and conservative, with little in it which might arouse controversy.

¹⁵ Not printed.

¹⁶ The Subcommittee on Basic Principles of the Military Staff Committee first met on March 28 and adopted at that time a United States resolution which required each delegation to furnish the other delegations with a statement of principles which should govern the organization of United Nations forces not later than April 3. The principles submitted by the United States Representatives on April 1 are printed in document USMS/12/Rev. 1, p. 759. The United Kingdom, Chinese, and French statements, not printed, were submitted on April 2, and 8, respectively. In answer to a letter from the Principal Secretary of the Military Staff Committee of April 22 requesting the time when the Soviet statement could be expected, the Soviet Delegation indicated that study and examination of the question was continuing. (IO Files)

THE BRITISH MEMORANDUM

2. Several principles are proposed in the United Kingdom memorandum which do not appear in that of the United States Delegation.

The statement is made in paragraph 2 "that it [the United Nations Force] will only be employed against any Nation or combination of Nations other than the five permanent Members." This thought is contained in SWNCC 219/8 but it does not appear in the United States statement of principles.

In paragraph 4 the memorandum states "the force will have behind it the whole weight of the available resources of the United Nations. Its size should be governed by this principle." Although this principle may have been assumed, or implied, in the United States paper, it nevertheless is not mentioned therein and it does raise some interesting conjectures. The implication is that although a nation may contribute only a small fraction of its military establishment to the United Nations Force, there will be behind this fraction the entire logistical organization and resources of that state. This principle, if accepted, would indeed affect the size of the total United Nations Force.

Although the United States paper states that the five permanent powers will initially provide the United Nations Force the British memorandum, in paragraph 5, makes a stronger case for this transitional condition. The first sentence of this paragraph reads "until such time as experience has been gained in the control and operation of an integrated international force, the greater the number of national contingents, the greater will be the practical difficulties, in its organization and operation". The result of this principle, if accepted, might be that the five powers would be the sole custodians and providers of the United Nations Force for a very considerable time, to the dissatisfaction perhaps, of some of the smaller nations. Here again, I think, the implications should be carefully considered.

In paragraph 7 the memorandum states that "there should be no delegation of sovereignty over bases, which would continue to be manned and operated by the nation to whom they belong unless such nation wished otherwise". This may be an obvious rule but the United States statement of principles makes no mention of the subject and it may be that it should be incorporated into our paper.

In its treatment of command, paragraph 10 of the British memorandum says that "the Security Council will appoint a Commander or Commanders, on the recommendations of the Military Staff Committee". The important point here is, I believe, that the nomination of a Commander will originate, according to the British version, with the Military Staff Committee, a subject again which the United States paper has not approached so specifically.

501.BC Atomic/4-1946

The Secretary of State to the United States Representative on the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch)

WASHINGTON, April 19, 1946.

DEAR B. M. B.: Summarizing for the record our discussion of April 18 in which Mr. Hancock¹⁷ and Mr. Searls¹⁸ participated, I have asked you to give me the benefit of your advice when, with the President, I attempt to determine the policy of the United States which is to guide you in your representation of the United States on the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission.

You have pointed out that under the statute you are not called upon to determine policy. The fact is that under the law the President determines the policy and transmits such policy through me to the United States representative on the Commission. However, as a practical matter, I know that the President will ask for my views in determining the policy and I, in turn, will ask for your views. That is why I had asked you to be good enough to fully explore the subject.

I have advised you that I am favorably impressed by the report which has come to be called the State Department report and which was prepared under the direction of Mr. Acheson. I have, however, advised you that I am not of the opinion that it is the last word on the subject and, on the contrary, that I shall give careful consideration to any views that may be presented by you after you consider the problem.

I have suggested that submission of your advice should be informal. I hope that you will give me the benefit of your advice from time to time as your study progresses. I suggest this because from time to time I may be called upon to discuss the matter with the President. I would want to give to him, or have you join me in giving to him, any views we thought might be helpful to him in his consideration of the subject.

There is to be no formal report. The decision as to policy is the President's. You and I will advise him just as I advise him on many other matters. While it is the duty of the President to determine the policy, it is my thought that when determined it should not be made public by him but should be transmitted to you and you, as the representative of the United States, should announce at the meeting of the Commission what is the policy of this Government. However, this will be for the President to decide.

¹⁷ John M. Hancock, Associate United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission.

¹⁸ Fred Searls, Jr., Associate United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission.

Once the Commission is in operation, there must be close cooperation between you and the Secretary of State. Matters will arise which cannot be foreseen and you must be given discretion to exercise your own judgment as to all such matters, only avoiding positions that would be in conflict with the President's policy.

I do not believe that you will have any difficulty about these matters. You will be acting toward me just as I act toward the President. I know what his basic policies are. Knowing that, I do not hesitate to take positions as to matters which could not be anticipated. If they are matters of great importance I try to communicate with him. We have never had any difference in views that was not quickly reconciled. I am sure that will be your experience.

If you need any help from the State Department I am sure it will be granted without question. Should there ever be a question this letter is your authority to call upon the officials of the Department of State for assistance.

I expect to leave Washington Tuesday morning.¹⁹ Good luck to you!
Sincerely yours, JAMES F. BYRNES

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. John M. Hancock of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission*²⁰

[Extract]

[NEW YORK,] April 19, 1946.

. . . . In going over the substance of the report²¹ he [Dr. Oppenheimer] added some points which I thought worth noting:

First, that Western Europe is very much concerned about atomic energy and atomic bombs.

Second, he recognizes the difficulty of developing tests without accepting other nations into the program. The committee thinks some plan has to be worked out which will not infringe sovereignty beyond an acceptable extent. Happily the problem is made easier by the fact that there are no vested interests outside of our own.

Third, he thinks it is important to get the knowledge in the intelligence field as to what Russia has, what she plans to do.

¹⁹ April 23.

²⁰ This memorandum describes a discussion with Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer which occurred at Mr. Baruch's home on April 5; it has not been determined which members of the United States Delegation other than Mr. Hancock were present. (Department of State Atomic Energy Files)

²¹ A Report on the International Control of Atomic Energy, March 16, 1946, Department of State Publication 2498, (Washington, 1946), the report of the Secretary of State's Committee.

Fourth, he thinks the proposed system is entirely incompatible with the present Russian system. He thinks the plan of procedure should be to make an honorable proposal and thus find out whether they have the will to cooperate.

Fifth, he seems to put great faith in the idea that the American people will act quickly if some foreign nation gets off the reservation. I wonder whether it will be a repetition of the German and Japanese naval and military rearmament program which lacked only official statement as to its existence. Everyone knew quite well what Germany and Japan were doing, but the rest of us did not prepare and I doubt that we would have gone to war had we had the information officially. I think it will take a lot of a strain on the moral fibre of America to make an attack with the atomic bombs because some foreign nation gets off the reservation. At any rate, that is the crux of the issue before us.

J[OHN] M. H[ANCOCK]

501.BC/4-2346

Memorandum of Telephone Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Special Political Affairs (Hiss)

[WASHINGTON,] April 23, 1946.

I called Senator Vandenberg yesterday morning and said that in view of the fact that I understood he was leaving for Paris ²² I wanted to talk to him about the questions relating to provision of armed forces which we had taken up with the Senator and with Senators Connally, Thomas and Austin earlier this month.²³ I said that we had not completed our discussions with the military authorities but that it looked as though they would find that the suggestion that the costs of operations being prorated among the members was too complicated to be worthwhile. I said also that they had felt that the proposed size of the U.S. land forces contingent could not be reduced below two divisions without raising serious questions as to command. The purpose was to have one corps which would include headquarters troops. The Senator wondered if we could list one combat division and one headquarters division or something of that sort. He said, humorously, that he was particularly interested in unit one. I said that the military had suggested calling it one corps without specifying its composition. He said he thought this would be preferable to specifying two divisions. He did not fully commit himself on this point but he gave the impression that he did not feel very strongly that the maximum would have to be one division.

²² Senator Vandenberg was departing to join the United States Delegation at the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers; for documentation on that session, see vol. II.

²³ For the record of that meeting, see p. 771.

I then said that the most important question and one which warranted my calling him when he must be busy getting ready to leave for Paris dealt with the sentence he wanted included with respect to regionalism. I told him that the changes in language which Senator Austin had suggested were agreeable to everyone but that there was a feeling that for us to spell out the regionalism approach quite so specifically as he had suggested would get us into trouble with other regions. I added that our military authorities felt that they could assure that the desires of the Senators in this respect, which the military fully share, could be made effective through our representation on the Military Staff Committee but that they feared that specification of the regionalism formula might enable other countries to exclude us from participation in other regions. The Senator indicated no adverse reaction to the points I made and then said that anything which was worked out which was satisfactory to Senator Austin would be satisfactory to him.²⁴

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum for the Files, by Mr. John M. Hancock of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission

[WASHINGTON,] May 1, 1946.

This memorandum is aimed to touch upon the matters which I have discussed in Washington the last two days.²⁵

As to Mr. Acheson and my talk with him, I will first outline the matters which I had covered in my agenda before leaving New York.

The first item was the matter of determining policy. In general terms, Acheson would like us to develop our views in outline form at as early a date as feasible and then to come to Washington with them and discuss them with all groups that might properly be asked in. At the moment he thinks of these groups as the State Department (and he is concerned about the immediate absence of Secretary Byrnes), certainly the War and Navy Departments, also the political leaders at some proper stage in the meetings, and certainly the President; and after that has been gone through, any statement of policy and attitude described by the President. In general terms, he would expect us to keep the work of drafting all the necessary papers, including a tentative draft of what we would look upon as the final report of the Atomic Energy Commission to the Security Council.

²⁴ On June 24, Hiss discussed with Robert V. Shirley, clerk of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, clearance of Article 43 agreements with Senators Vandenberg and Connally in Paris. Mr. Shirley agreed with Mr. Hiss that under the circumstances only Senator Austin need be consulted. (Lot 55D323)

²⁵ During this period, Mr. Hancock met with Under Secretary of State Acheson, Secretary of War Patterson, General Groves, and Senator McMahon.

He strongly advises our developing a charter, which would be a sound, fair-minded statement of policy and procedure. While he pretends that this would not be left to Russia and all other nations to accept or reject, still that is about the net result of his thinking so far.

He is very much concerned about the pressure from the public to get this policy determined soon. When I threw out the suggestion that it might take three months to get to that point, he thought there ought to be an organization meeting, at least, held at an early date. He is quite satisfied that all of the nations represented on the Council already have access to all of the published material and presumably it has been thoroughly studied by the delegates chosen. I saw in the press about the appointment of Gromyko²⁶ and the report was in Washington that the Mexicans would appoint their delegate by the end of next week. Acheson agreed that if a statement were made regarding the organization meeting, there might be no public unrest for as short as sixty days or up to about 120 days.

For the time being he prefers that contacts between the State Department and ourselves be channeled from him to me and return.

As to the Committee of Scientists, he believes we can get along in our policy without much reliance on the scientific group. He told me of something I didn't previously know and that is the unexpurgated Acheson report had a great deal of validation of the report—that there were some 20 scientists of top standing who had agreed with the conclusions of the report.²⁷

I bored in every direction I could to find out whether there was any desire that we attach ourselves to the State Dept. He said he thought it would be a convenience to us from the point of view of staff and contact with people in Washington if we were there. He didn't push the matter at all. He has no men working on the problem except Herbert Marks²⁸ and Fahy.²⁹ Acheson agrees without reservation that they expect us to take the initiative. He admits that he is concerned—probably in large part because of his own lack of knowledge of what

²⁶ Andrey Andreyevich Gromyko, Permanent Representative of the Soviet Union at the United Nations; Soviet Representative at the General Assembly and on the Security Council and the Atomic Energy Commission.

²⁷ An "unexpurgated Acheson report" has not been found in the files of the Department of State, nor is there evidence that the final report of the Secretary of State's Committee on Atomic Energy was abridged prior to publication. While the Board of Consultants had sought the opinions of members of the scientific community, it does not appear that validation based on such opinions constituted an unpublished portion of the final report. For information on the development of the report, see Hewlett and Anderson, Chapter 15.

²⁸ Herbert S. Marks, Special Assistant to the Under Secretary of State.

²⁹ Charles Fahy of the Office of the Legal Adviser; appointed Legal Adviser June 19, 1946.

we are doing—about the possibility of our coming up with the outline of a plan in as short a time as say sixty days. He offered to get us an administrative assistant, and if we see Rothwell³⁰ here, it will be arranged for.

He has no projects under way or in prospect which would call for the formation of any committees or the assignment of any duties involving atomic energy. I asked whether there were any open ends or further avenues to explore, because all through the Acheson report they kept touching upon more information being needed in certain fields, and he said he had not been impressed by it. Marks cut in to say that was merely a means of saying they didn't pretend to know all about the specific subject, and that they knew of no specific fields of inquiry that would properly be undertaken at this time.

As to appointments here, Acheson called in his Administrative Assistant and the discussion rolled around a great deal without my getting any clear view of what they want. They would like us to work out some plan as to employment, oaths of office, and secret documents in order that we will be less likely attacked by Congress and will have fitted ourselves into the ordinary Government routine.

As to budgets, they don't know of anything but a small amount of money which is available until the end of June and suggest that we see Rothwell quickly and work out any budgets for the periods after July 1, 1946.

I should emphasize throughout that Acheson was very gracious, very friendly and most helpful in his whole attitude. I find nothing to criticize in the whole day's discussion. . . .

I had raised the question with General Groves as to whether, by any chance, the desired course of action could be carried out through a United Nations Statute. Incidentally, I raised the same question with McMahan. Neither had any views on the matter, but Acheson was clear that it had to be a Treaty. I told Acheson, it appears from the Wilson Foundation reports, that they were committed to the Treaty procedure. But my query was also, what if the Russians or someone else should take a reverse view and want to strengthen the United Nations—then what would be the answer? And he said there would be no power in the United Nations to pass legislation along these lines.

I asked him whether he had any thoughts regarding the kind of an organization to operate when the body was finally set up. He did not express any desire that it would be in the State Dept. or anywhere else.

I have been somewhat concerned about the apparent conflict between the authority of the United States Commission proposed under the ³⁰ C. Easton Rothwell, Executive Secretary of the Central Secretariat.

McMahon bill³¹ and the proposed United Nations' action. The McMahon bill, of course, provides for over-riding power of any international agreement. In developing that, I asked whether they had any thoughts about the men to represent this country should the McMahon bill be passed. He had no suggestions to offer. I think it would be helpful to us if we could have that man fairly well picked out in our minds and attached to our own staff here so that he could pick up the threads from here and save a great deal of time and effort in getting into the problem.

In reference to this matter of preparing a finished report for the first meeting, with the implied statement to the world that they could take it or leave it, I question the wisdom of that and purely on my own thinking feel that is not the best method of proceeding with the Russians and some of the other nations. I wondered whether the delegates of foreign countries wouldn't want to be able to take credit for some of the principles of the final document, and I feared it would be too dogmatic an action on our part. He did not argue the merits of the case, and he thought all along that it would be taken for granted that we would give them a fair, sound plan and invite cooperation by our action. I am sure Acheson doesn't reasonably expect general acceptance of any plan we might propose. With it, the main element of negotiation will be as to the time in which information will be given in the secret aspects of the utilization of atomic energy.

[Here follow further comments on Mr. Hancock's discussion with Mr. Acheson, and on his conversations with Secretary of War Patterson, General Groves, and Senator McMahon. Matters treated include, in addition to international control, domestic legislation and negotiations with the United Kingdom with respect to continued cooperation in the development of atomic energy. A portion of this memorandum dealing with the last mentioned subject is printed on p. 1242.]

SPA Files

*Memorandum by the Assistant Chief of the Division of International Security Affairs (Rusk)*³²

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] May 3, 1946.

Russian delay in submitting statement of general principles to subcommittee of Military Staff Committee.

At a meeting on Tuesday, April 30, the senior members of the U.S. Delegation of the Military Staff Committee discussed at great length ³¹ With respect to Congressional legislation on atomic energy in 1946, see Hewlett and Anderson, Chapter 14.

³² This memorandum was directed to Messrs. Hiss, Raybor, and Blaisdell.

the problem raised by the failure of the Russian Military Delegation to submit a statement of general principles which the Russians considered applicable to the special agreements referred to in Article 43 of the Charter. Such a statement has been overdue since April 3; statements were received on time from the United States, Great Britain, France and China.

Our Military Delegation came to the conclusion that the United States should not undertake to heckle the Russians on this statement of general principles. They thought that the matter could best be handled through some official agency such as the Secretary-General or the current Principal Secretary of the Military Staff Committee. The present Principal Secretary is Chinese; inquiries as to when the Russian paper might be expected have thus far been unavailing.

Our Military Delegation agreed that General Ridgway (the U.S. member of the Military Staff Committee subcommittee on general principles) should find a suitable opportunity to inquire of General Vasiliev³³ informally as to when the Russian statement of principles might be expected. It is already generally known in the Military Staff Committee that the Russian statement is being drawn up in Moscow in the light of the statements of the other four powers.

It was also agreed that General Ridgway should attempt to ascertain General Vasiliev's views as to whether the Military Staff Committee subcommittee should proceed to discuss the four other statements of general principles already in hand, without prejudice to any comments or suggestions which the Russians might wish to make later. In this connection, it is recalled that the French reaction in early April was that the general principles should not be discussed until all five papers have been submitted.

In a conversation with me Captain Knoll³⁴ stated that our Military Delegation do not yet attach sinister implications to the Russian delay in submitting a paper. Captain Knoll, who was a member of the U.S. military mission in Moscow for over two years, expressed a personal opinion that the situation would not be normal until the delay had extended at least three months.

Captain Knoll asked that no political representations be made by Mr. Stettinius or through other channels in an effort to expedite the Russian paper without the fullest prior coordination with the U.S. Delegation, Military Staff Committee. He felt that a very useful working basis is being established in New York between the American and Russian Military Delegations and that the greatest care should be exercised to protect this relationship from unnecessary irritation. I have passed this point on to Mr. Stettinius and Mr. Johnson ³⁵ in New York.

³³ Lt. Gen. Alexandre F. Vasiliev, Soviet Representative on the Military Staff Committee.

³⁴ Capt. Denys W. Knoll, Secretary to the United States Delegation to the Military Staff Committee.

I believe we should leave this matter in the hands of the U.S. Delegation, Military Staff Committee, at least for the time being; however, I believe the political staff should follow this matter very closely since there will come a time when further delay in submitting the Russian paper will have serious political aspects. Paragraph 3 of Article 43 of the Charter requires that the special agreements be negotiated as soon as possible. The statement of U.S. policy contained in SWNCC 219/8 ³⁶ also urges expeditious action. The draft paper on the regulation of armaments prepared in IS recommends a special instruction to the U.S. Representative on the Security Council along the same line.³⁷

D[EAN] R[USK]

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*The United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission
(Baruch) to the Secretary of State*

[NEW YORK?] May 6, 1946.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have delayed answering your letter of April 19th ³⁸ until I might be in receipt of a letter from the Under Secretary in keeping with our extended telephone talk on the afternoon of April 22nd. At that time it was not clear whether Mr. Acheson was planning the creating of a large and varied staff within the State Department or whether he advised us to create such a staff in order to carry on our work. I thought it would be more fruitful of the results we have in common, if Mr. Hancock were to go over the entire matter with him, which he did on April 30th, in a thoroughly satisfactory interview.

I am quite in accord with you on the first two paragraphs of your letter of April 19th. It was because I thought "the report which has come to be called the State Department Report and which was prepared under the direction of Mr. Acheson" had opened up constructive and practical avenues of approach to the general subject, that I asked you to have the Board of Consultants continued in order that they might explore further those approaches and give us the benefit of the ³⁵ Herschel V. Johnson, Deputy United States Representative on the Security Council; Acting Representative at the United Nations from June 6, 1946.

³⁶ See footnote 2, p. 769.

³⁷ The draft paper under reference has not been identified. SWNCC/MS UNO Doc. 28, prepared in the Division of International Security Affairs, discusses the Military Staff Committee but does not present the specific recommendation cited here; for partial text of SWNCC/MS UNO Doc. 28, June 5, see p. 833.

³⁸ Ante, p. 777.

intensive study which they had already given to it. I knew of no other group which could pick up the problem so well, without a material loss of time.

It was with very great regret to me that the members found that they could not continue the Committee and its sub-committee.³⁹

Mr. Lilienthal expressed his view that a new group would require an additional eight weeks of intensive study to arrive at the same points of progress as the groups in question, and that I would have to spend an equal amount of time to post myself on the problem.

As you know, some of both groups have placed their services at my disposal and, of course, I am grateful to them. My plan is to use these men to the greatest possible extent.

The reply of the Committee of Experts brought out the fact that there were some very complex questions that must be studied, none of which is more than adverted to in the Report. It was just these problems which I thought best be met by the former groups. Now with the appointment of the Mexican delegate (completing the list) and the pressure for an early meeting, we must avoid any appearance of procrastination that might arouse suspicion on the part of the general public, and particularly of any of our associates in the United Nations. We shall endeavor to move rapidly but surely in view of the difficulties which they spoke of so graphically.

In our conversation over the telephone I was glad to clear up one point and that was—when asked my opinion you agreed that there should be a written statement by me, not for the purpose of publication but to have as a matter of record. As to what becomes of such a statement—that rests entirely with the State Department or the President.

Mr. Lilienthal, Dr. Bush and Mr. Acheson had all spoken of the necessity of a large “battery” of experts. You referred to the appointment of Mr. Fahy for legal work on this problem within the State Department. My understanding is that, as discussed at the Acheson-Hancock meeting, you are not planning to build any large group in the State Department at this time to help in developing the policy to be followed by me in my work with the Atomic Energy Commission. I plan to set up an adequate but small staff to develop the facts in order to better understand the problems.

Of course, I assume that when the Commission reports to the Council, my official work will be done and that the State Department will take over the further responsibility. I am not planning an organization with the thought of carrying my work beyond that point. I assume, however, that the State Department will take appropriate steps to set up such an organization as it may wish for carrying on the work beyond this point, to cope with the problems which would involve work with the heads of Government and the Assembly as well as the treaty forming work and the early discussions of the Authority, should it be set up.

³⁹ With respect to the decisions by the Acheson Committee and its Board of Consultants to decline further service as formal bodies, see Hewlett and Anderson, pp. 559-560.

Sincerely yours,

[File copy not signed]

SPA Files

The Director of the Office of Special Political Affairs (Hiss) to the Under Secretary of State (Acheson)

[WASHINGTON,] May 8, 1946.

Suggested Procedure for Initial Meetings of the Atomic Energy Commission

We know that the United Nations Secretariat has for some weeks been anxious to speed up the formation of the Atomic Energy Commission. Official letters asking the member governments to name representatives to the Commission were sent out weeks ago and a follow-up letter was sent more recently. Last Friday the Secretariat inquired of us whether May 20 would be a convenient date for the initial meeting of the Commission. We replied that it would not be convenient and that we would let them know soon what our views were on this subject. Today the Secretariat has again raised the subject, this time asking whether May 27 would be convenient and we have replied that we would give them our views tomorrow.

The Secretariat's desire for speed in this matter is understandable. More than three months have passed since the General Assembly on January 24 adopted a resolution establishing the Commission. In urging the Assembly to approve the resolution, Secretary Byrnes on January 24 stated: "I hope that the Commission will promptly set to work on its tasks." There has been great public interest in the prompt establishment of the Commission and our own press has in recent weeks been particularly insistent that no further time be lost in calling the Commission together.

Our own responsibility is especially acute. The Secretariat has told us that most of the other governments concerned had been agreeable to the May 20 date. Already we have had evidence that other countries are suggesting to the press that the delay thus far has been caused by the United States. This was an inaccurate charge up until last Friday. However it is clear that unless we agree to a prompt meeting of the Commission we will be accused of being responsible for current delays. This would be particularly undesirable in view of our predominant role in the atomic energy field and the fact that the whole idea of and the creation of the Commission was on our initiative.

For the foregoing reasons it is recommended that we should inform the Secretariat that we see no objection to an organizing meeting of the Commission being held on May 27 and succeeding days until the committee organization and work program have been agreed upon. It is further recommended that at the initial meeting Mr. Baruch should make a statement as to the interest of the United States in this whole field and the role which the United States has played to date. It is especially recommended that Mr. Baruch also present to the Commission for comment by the other members of the Commission the report on the International Control of Atomic Energy by the Secretary's committee. It is suggested that Mr. Baruch say that he is presenting it simply as a basis for discussion and that the United States will welcome not only the comments of the other members of the Commission but similar proposals for discussion being submitted on their part.

If the foregoing recommendations are approved it is anticipated that after several days of determining the organization and procedure of the Commission the Commission would wish to adjourn until the other members had had an opportunity to consider the report of the Secretary's committee and to prepare their comments or proposals of their own. The organization details which will have to be settled relate to the determination of the chairmanship (whether a single chairman for a specified period of time or a rotation of the chairmanship), staff arrangements, methods of procedure, place of meetings, schedule of work, et cetera. It is to be assumed that except for the initial meeting when Mr. Baruch made his statement and opportunity was afforded for other members to make opening statements, these organizational meetings would be private.

Our information is that there is a very excellent prospect that the War Department would be entirely agreeable to the submission of the report of the Secretary's committee as a basis for discussion. This would be directly in line with the attitude which this Government has consistently taken toward the Commission and its functions. It has been our position that the object of the Commission is to permit a joint study of the whole subject without fixed positions being taken in advance. It would not be consistent with this approach for us to do more than submit proposals as a basis for discussion, to invite the submission of similar proposals by other members of the Commission and to welcome orderly discussion of such proposals by the Commission. To limit the initial meetings to purely organizing aspects with no prospect of early discussion of matters of substance would almost certainly result in adverse public comment in view of the delay which has already occurred since the Commission was created and in view of the continuing public interest in the subject of atomic energy which will result from the Bikini tests.⁴⁰ For the reasons indicated above it could be anticipated that most of the adverse comment would be directed primarily at this Government.

Department of States Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. John M. Hancock of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission

[NEW YORK,] May 15, 1946.

Mr. Baruch and I met with Mr. Acheson on May 9. We discussed the date of the forthcoming meeting. Mr. Baruch was very clear in his position that he had been embarrassed by the declination of the two committees to go forward with their work without change in set-up.⁴¹ He told of the public opinion that the Acheson report has become understood as the government policy and that it was certainly going to be the minimum in the point of view of other governments. Mr. Acheson was very firm in the view that the President was not committed to any policy, that while he had seen the Acheson report and thought well of it, there had been no pressure upon him to accept it. I told Mr. Acheson, and the Chief [Baruch] restated it, that we were sure he had been very careful in his statements to refer to the report in both aspects. First, that it was a basis for study and second, that it was not a statement of policy and that I felt we would have to decide the question as to how far we should go in mentioning specific reservations. It was my feeling at the time that unless we went rather far in listing our reservations we might be condemned by our silence into a position of accepting the report as a statement of policy. On the other hand, I didn't want to go so far with a statement of our reservations as to appear to reject the report because I thought it was an exceptional document.

On this matter of ownership, Mr. Acheson used the word dominion in place of ownership and I would not be adverse to using the expression absolute dominion, more from the point of view of preventing abuses, in contrast with ownership and its problems.

We discussed the desirability of the meeting in Washington with the members of the two groups on May 17, 18 and 19.

JOHN M. HANCOCK

⁴⁰ For documentation on the Bikini atoll atomic bomb tests, see pp. 1203-1248, passim.

⁴² The two committees under reference are the Secretary of State's Committee on Atomic Energy and its Board of Consultants.

501.BC/5-1646 : Telegram

The United States Representative at the United Nations (Stettinius) to the Acting Secretary of State

SECRET

URGENT

NEW YORK, May 16, 1946—3:45 p. m.

[Received May 16—2:55 p. m.]

188. Personal. The Soviet Delegation on the Military Staff Committee still has not introduced their paper on the general principles applicable to the proposed military agreements. Our military representatives have tried repeatedly to obtain further information as to the date when the Russian paper will be forthcoming, but have been unable to obtain either information or any commitment. The paper was promised by the Russians for April 3.

Our best estimate on the information available is that this matter is out of the hands of the representatives here and that the matter is being held up in Moscow, on the political level. Gromyko's comments and attitude when I broached the subject to him a few weeks ago do not encourage hope that any progress is to be made through that channel. The Military Staff Committee cannot proceed on this subject until the Russian paper has been submitted. Furthermore, this subject is basic to the greater part of the Military Staff Committee's substantive work.

I, therefore, recommend that the Department ask Bedell Smith⁴² in Moscow to request information from the Foreign Office regarding the present status of this matter and, if possible, to get them to speed action on it. Ambassador Smith might well state that the work of the Military Staff Committee is being held up due to failure of the Russians to submit their paper; that the other four powers have all submitted theirs; that all these papers are without prejudice and without any commitment by the governments involved; that the matter is being dealt with by a subcommittee of the Military Staff Committee; and that there will be no final commitment until the whole question is reviewed and settled by the Security Council itself.

STETTINIUS

 Department of State Atomic Energy Files
The Board of Consultants to the United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch)

[WASHINGTON,] May 19, 1946.

DEAR MR. BARUCH: At the close of the meetings with you in the Blair Lee House yesterday,⁴³ you asked us to summarize the main ⁴² Walter Bedell Smith, Ambassador in the Soviet Union.

⁴³ The Acheson Committee, its Board of Consultants, and Mr. Baruch and his assistants, met at Blair-Lee House in Washington on May 17 and 18. The par-features of a policy that would reflect the conclusions in our Report on the International Control of Atomic Energy. We are glad to try to make a summary that may be helpful to you, although you will appreciate that in order to be understood and evaluated any statement of this kind will have to be read in the context of the entire Report.

The first basic conclusion of the Report is that an international agreement leaving the development of atomic energy in national hands, subject to an obligation not to develop atomic energy for war purposes and relying on an international inspection system to detect evasions, will provide no security and indeed will be a source of insecurity.

The second basic conclusion is that avoidance of an atomic armaments race can only be achieved by entrusting to an international organization managerial control of all activities intrinsically dangerous to world security. If an international agency is given sole responsibility for the dangerous activities, leaving the non-dangerous open to nations and their citizens and if the international agency is given and carries forward affirmative development responsibility, furthering among other things the beneficial uses of atomic energy and enabling itself to comprehend and therefore detect the misuse of atomic energy, there is good prospect of security. In our Report the international agency is called the Atomic Development Authority.

The fundamental features of a plan which would give effect to these basic conclusions are as follows:

1) As to the raw materials—uranium and thorium. Once the Atomic Development Authority has been set up, its first purpose will be to bring under its complete control world supplies of uranium and thorium. Wherever these materials are found in useful quantities, the Authority must own them or control them under effective leasing arrangements. One of its principal tasks would be to conduct continuous surveys so that new deposits will be found, and so that the agency will have the most complete knowledge of the world geology of these materials. It will be a further function of the agency constantly to explore new methods for recovering these materials from media in which they are found in small quantities so that if, and when, it becomes practical to recover uranium and thorium from such sources, means of control can also be devised for them.

In this way there will be no lawful rivalry among nations for these vital raw materials, and one of the most serious causes of friction between nations will be avoided. As will appear from what follows, by placing exclusively in the hands of the Authority the other dangerous participants of the conference sought to reconcile the Acheson-Lilienthal Report with the views of the Baruch group which had been studying the question of international control since early April. Minutes of the Blair-Lee House sessions exist in the Atomic Energy Lot File, Department of State; for an account of the proceedings, see Hewlett and Anderson, pp. 562-567.

activities relating to atomic energy, rivalry between nations as to them, and the potential friction which it would cause will also be eliminated.

2) As to primary production plants. The Atomic Development Authority must exercise complete managerial control of the production of fissionable materials. This means that it must actually own and operate all plants producing fissionable materials in dangerous quantities and own and control the product of these plants.

3) As to atomic explosives. The Authority must be given exclusive authority to conduct research in the field of atomic explosives. When the plan is fully in operation there would be no stockpiles of atomic bombs anywhere in the world, either in national or in international hands. But research activities in the field of atomic explosives are essential in order that the Authority may keep in the forefront of knowledge in the field of atomic energy and fulfill the objective of preventing illicit manufacture of bombs. For only by preserving its position as the best informed agency will the Authority be able to tell where the line between the intrinsically dangerous and the non-dangerous should be drawn. If it turns out at some time in the future, as a result of new discoveries, that other materials or other processes lend themselves to dangerous atomic developments, it is important that the Authority should be the first to know. At that time measures would have to be taken to extend the boundaries of safeguards.

4) Strategic distribution of activities and materials. The activities entrusted exclusively to the Authority because they are intrinsically dangerous to security, as well as stockpiles of raw materials and fissionable materials, must be distributed geographically throughout the world in such a way as to establish a strategic balance.

5) Non-dangerous activities. Atomic research (except in explosives), the use of research reactors, the production of radioactive tracers by means of non-dangerous reactors, the use of such tracers, and the production of power in plants which use up, rather than produce, fissionable materials, are to be open to nations and their citizens under reasonable licensing arrangements from the Authority. Denatured materials necessary for these activities would be furnished, under lease or other suitable arrangement by the Atomic Development Authority.

The foregoing emphasizes the fact that the production of these denatured materials can only be accomplished through dangerous activities; that is to say the promising non-dangerous, beneficial applications of atomic energy become possible only if dangerous operations first occur.

It is important to be aware at all times of the necessity for taking advantage of the opportunity for promoting decentralized and diversified national and private developments and of avoiding unnecessary concentration of functions in the Authority. It would, therefore, be a primary function of the Authority to encourage developments by nations and private enterprise in the broad field of non-dangerous activities.

6) Definition of dangerous and non-dangerous activities. All activities relating to atomic energy from the mining of raw materials through the production of the active materials, and including research in atomic explosives, must be classed as dangerous to security. All other activities in the field are classed as non-dangerous, although for some of them (such as the production of power in plants which use up denatured fissionable materials) close questions as to security must be faced. This is merely a rough classification. Although a reasonable dividing line can be drawn between the dangerous and the non-dangerous, it is not hard and fast. Machinery must therefore be provided to assure constant examination and reexamination of the question, and to permit revision of the dividing line as changing conditions and new discoveries may require.

7) Inspection activities. By assigning intrinsically dangerous activities exclusively to the Atomic Development Authority, the problem of inspection is thereby reduced to manageable proportions. For if the Atomic Development Authority is the only agency which may lawfully conduct the dangerous activities in the field of raw materials, primary production plants, and research in explosives, then any visible operation by others will constitute a danger signal. This situation contrasts vividly with the conditions that would exist if nations agreed that each of them would conduct those dangerous operations, but would do so solely for proper purposes; for surreptitious abuse of such an agreement would be very difficult to discover by any system of detection that might be devised. It is far easier to discover an operation that should not be going on at all than to determine whether a lawful operation is being conducted in an unlawful manner.

The plan, therefore, does not contemplate any systematic or large-scale inspection procedures covering the whole of industry. Many of the inspection activities of the Authority should grow out of and be incidental to its other functions. The chief measure of inspection will be those associated with the tight control of raw materials, for this is one of the keystones of the plan. The continuing activities of prospecting, survey and research in relation to raw materials will be designed not only to serve the affirmative development functions of the agency but also to assure that no surreptitious operations are conducted in the raw material field by nations or their citizens. Inspection will also occur in connection with the licensing functions of the Authority. Finally, a means should be provided to enable the international organization to make special "spot" investigations of any suspicious national or private activities.

8) Personnel. The personnel of the Atomic Development Authority will have to be recruited on a truly international basis, giving much weight to geographical and national distribution. Although the problem of recruitment of the high-quality personnel required for the top executive and technical positions will be difficult, it will certainly be far less difficult than the recruitment of the similarly high-quality personnel that would be necessary for any purely policing organization.

9) Negotiation stage. The first step in the creation of the system of control we envisage is the negotiation among the nations of the world of a Charter spelling out in comprehensive terms the functions, responsibilities, authority, and limitations of the Atomic Development Authority. Once a Charter for the agency has been written and adopted, the Authority and the system of control for which it will be responsible will require time to become fully organized and effective. The plan of control will therefore have to come into effect in successive stages. These should be specifically fixed in the Charter or means should be otherwise set forth in the Charter for transition from one stage to another.

10) Stages of operations. After it is created, one of the first major activities of the Authority must be directed to obtaining cognizance and control over the raw materials situation. There are probably other activities in which the Authority would have to begin its work almost as soon as it is set up. But except for control of raw materials, most of the operations of the Authority are, from the standpoint of the practical workability of the plan, subject to scheduling. Some of them, merely because of the time required to get them under way have to come at later stages. But the schedule for most of them—that is, outside the raw materials control—is properly a matter for negotiation and the manner in which we and other nations treat their scheduling may affect the acceptability of the plan but not its workability.

11) Disclosures. In the deliberations of the United Nations Commission on Atomic Energy, the United States must be prepared to make available the information essential to a reasonable understanding of the proposals which it advocates. If and when the Authority is actually created, the United States must then also be prepared to make available other information essential to that organization for the performance of its functions. And as the successive stages of international control are reached, the United States must further be prepared to yield, to the extent required by each stage, national control of activities in this field to the international agency.

12) Security achieved through the Atomic Development Authority. When fully in operation, we believe that the plan proposed can provide a great measure of security against surprise attack. Once the operations and facilities of the Atomic Development Authority have been established and are being managed by that agency within other nations as well as within our own, a balance will have been established among the nations of the world. Protection will lie in the fact that if any nation decides upon a program of aggression and seizes the plants or the stockpiles of raw and fissionable materials that are situated in its territory, other nations will have similar facilities and materials situated within their own borders so that the act of seizure need not place them at a disadvantage; protection will lie in the further fact that if a would-be aggressor seizes facilities, a year or more would be required after seizure before atomic weapons could be produced in quantities sufficient to have an important influence on the outcome of war. Thus all the nations of the world would receive well in advance of the possible time of attack by atomic weapons clear, simple, and unequivocal danger signals that would enable them to prepare all measures of protection that would be available—an opportunity which would be wholly lost to them in the event of surprise attack.

As the plan goes into operation and continues, it can, moreover, create deterrents to the initiation of schemes of aggression, and it can establish patterns of cooperation among nations, the extension of which may even contribute to the solution of the problem of war itself.

In this response to your request of yesterday for a summary, we fear that we may have sacrificed something of clarity and completeness to our desire to comply with your request as quickly as possible. If there is anything that you wish in the way of clarification or enlargement, or if there is any way at all in which you feel this Board can be helpful, in further discussion or otherwise, please be assured that we are anxious to cooperate with you in your enormously difficult task.

In this letter we have not attempted to touch again upon the many matters that were discussed during the Blair Lee House meetings. If as to them it would be useful to you to have a memorandum from us stating the views that we offered in the discussions, we shall of course be glad to prepare it.

Sincerely yours,

CHESTER I. BARNARD
J. ROBERT OPPENHEIMER
CHARLES A. THOMAS
HARRY A. WINNE
DAVID E. LILIENTHAL,
Chairman

SWNCC Files

The Joint Chiefs of Staff to the United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee ⁴⁴

SECRET

WASHINGTON, May 24, 1946.

GUIDANCE AS TO COMMAND AND CONTROL OF THE ARMED FORCES TO BE PLACED AT THE DISPOSAL OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL OF THE UNITED NATIONS

1. The following are the views of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on certain matters which may be subjects for discussion in the Military Staff Committee of the United Nations. In arriving at these views, the Joint Chiefs of Staff considered USMS/25 . . . and USMS/19/1/Rev/1 . . .⁴⁵

2. Armed Forces to be Placed at the Disposal of the Security Council of the United Nations. Agreements should be completed as soon as possible as to the size of the armed forces to be made available to the Security Council by each member nation and as to the broad principles for employment of these forces in accordance with J.C.S. 1567/32⁴⁶ and this memorandum.

3. Establishment of Permanently Available International Military Forces. Establishment of international armed forces on a permanent basis is contrary to present United States policy, except in the case of such security forces as may be required for the internal policing of areas under United Nations trusteeship.

4. Command and Staff Arrangements for Security Forces. The following general policies will govern for the present :

a. Predetermined rules covering establishment of international command and staff arrangements for security forces are deemed inadvisable. However, it is recognized that the Representatives of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on the Military Staff Committee should have available a statement of general principles for guidance in the event discussion of command and staff arrangements is precipitated by the representatives of other nations.

b. Arrangements in each instance for the command and staff of combined security forces of the United Nations should not be made until

⁴⁴ This document, a report by the Joint Strategic Survey Committee dated May 22, was approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff on May 24. The JCS forwarded the report to the United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee on May 24 "as an expression of the views of the Joint Chiefs of Staff . . . pending receipt of comments from the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee." The U.S. Representatives on the Military Staff Committee took note of the report at their 11th Meeting, June 3 (IO Files). The JCS also presented the report to SWNCC on May 24 for concurrence or comment; it was circulated as SWNCC 219/9, May 27. SWNCC approved it on June 20. (SWNCC Files) immediately before such forces are to be placed at the disposal of the Security Council.

⁴⁵ Neither printed.

⁴⁶ SWNCC 219/8; for a description, see footnote 2, p. 769.

c. It is undesirable and impractical to establish any rigid criteria for the designation of a supreme commander. The Representatives of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on the Military Staff Committee should seek clearly to establish the principle that their advisory responsibilities extend to the question of command designation but should leave the question of arriving at their choice for resolution when occasion arises.

d. In event discussion of the question of command is precipitated by representatives of other nations on the Military Staff Committee, the following may be presented as the views of the Joint Chiefs of Staff:

(1) There should be unified command under a supreme commander of a United Nations military force and attached civilian personnel for the execution of a particular mission assigned by the Security Council, under the provisions of Article 48 of the Charter of the United Nations.

(2) The United States will not agree to choice of a supreme commander nor to the designation of commanders of air, naval or ground components, nor to the designation of commanders within regions, until immediately prior to the time such forces are to be placed at the disposal of the Security Council.

(3) Other than those appointments reserved for the Security Council, the appointment of commanders of subordinate forces of mixed nationalities should be the responsibility of the supreme commander of a United Nations military force and such appointments should be made from officers made available to him for this purpose by the nations furnishing the armed contingents. The appointment of the senior commander and subordinate commanders in any national contingent should be the responsibility of the nation which furnishes that contingent.

(4) Any agreement approved by the United States must include provisions to permit senior commanders to communicate directly with the military authorities of their own governments.

(5) When armed contingents of two or more nations participate in an operation, the nations concerned should provide suitable officers, acceptable to the supreme commander, for service on the operational, administrative, and civil government staffs of the supreme commander.

(6) It is essential that any supreme commander:

(a) Receive instructions for strategic direction of the armed forces under his command directly from the Military Staff Committee (paragraphs 1 and 3, Article 47).

(b) Have military operational command of all contingents assigned to his forces, to be exercised through the respective commanders of these contingents. Internal discipline and administration should remain as responsibilities of the commander of each national contingent.

(c) Administer within the theater of operations all matters pertaining to external and intercontingent logistical problems of the forces under his command.

(d) Have administrative and disciplinary control (except courts-martial jurisdiction) over all personnel accompanying the forces under his command, including observers appointed by the Military Staff Committee.

5. General. The Representatives of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on the Military Staff Committee should refrain from expressing opinions to representatives of foreign governments and from entering into any commitments, express or implied, on major matters on which they have not received guidance from the Joint Chiefs of Staff, with whom this responsibility rests and who may freely be consulted.

Appendix

DISCUSSION

1. On 24 August 1944, at Dumbarton Oaks, the representatives of the Soviet Union proposed the establishment of an international military force, particularly an international military air force corps, to be permanently available to the Security Council for the enforcement of world peace and security. They supported this proposal with the arguments that the Security Council should have "the most effective means to bring to bear against an aggressor either to force him to stop the aggression or to bind him until national forces can be thrown into action." They thought an international force best met this requirement and, further, that the very existence of such a force would create fear in potential aggressors, which would make them think twice before undertaking actual acts of aggression.

2. The United States and British delegates rejected the principle of permanent international forces. The Charter of the United Nations reflects this rejection in Article 43 of Chapter VII, which specifies that armed forces shall be made available to the Security Council "on its call." Although Article 45 of Chapter VII provides that national air force contingents shall be held immediately available for combined international enforcement action, the rejection of the principle of a permanent international air force corps is nevertheless implicit in this article. When the United States ratified the Charter, the United States objection to the principle of permanent international security forces became national policy. Further, the United States position has always been that specific operational plans would be developed within the United Nations only in the event of an existing or potential threat to the peace. Therefore, the Representatives of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on the Military Staff Committee of the United Nations should initiate no discussion of the formation of permanent international armed forces and under no circumstances should they indicate approval of such a proposal.

3. When considering problems relating to the command, control and employment of armed forces made available to the Security Council of the United Nations, the following factors should be kept constantly in mind :

First, the existence of the veto power makes use of force by the Security Council highly improbable, and in any event force can be used only against the small nations.

Second, under the provisions of the United Nations Charter, "The Security Council shall, where appropriate, utilize . . . regional arrangements or agencies for enforcement action under its authority" (paragraph 1, Article 53).

These two considerations make elaborate predetermined arrangements for international command and staff for the security forces, or combined maneuvers to train them, both unnecessary and impractical. If subsequent developments remove the veto power such matters should be re-examined in the light of the then existing situation.

4. Paragraph 4 of Article 47 of the Charter, which refers to appropriate regional agencies, taken in conjunction with Articles 52, 53, 54, 106, and 107, recognizes regional arrangements or agencies as appropriate international agencies for implementing decisions of the Security Council. An example of an appropriate regional arrangement is the Inter-American system. If the decisions of the Security Council requiring the use of force are in fact carried out by utilization of regional arrangements or agencies (paragraph 1, Article 53) :

a. Our desire, as expressed by members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs (conference between State Department officials and Senators Connally, Thomas of Utah, Vandenberg and Austin, 1 April 46), to exclude non-American forces from the Western Hemisphere and keep the Monroe Doctrine unaffected by United States ratification of the Charter of the United Nations will be facilitated. However, since regional arrangements are subject to the final authority of the Security Council and since non-American forces can operate in the Western Hemisphere only on its authorization, our most practical means for excluding such forces lies in the actions of our members on the Military Staff Committee and on the Security Council.

b. It would be both possible and practicable for the United Nations security forces to take speedy action against adjudged aggressors; and

c. It would be unlikely that substantial United States ground forces would be called upon to operate as a part of United Nations security forces under foreign command, particularly in Europe or in Asia.

5. However, there are numerous bilateral alliances in existence, particularly alliances between Russia on the one hand and England, France, China, Yugoslavia and Poland on the other, which might be construed by parties thereto as "regional arrangements or agencies" appropriate for enforcement action under authority of the Security Council and (keeping the veto in mind) used to exclude American armed forces from participating in action by the Security Council in Europe and Asia. It is for this reason that the United States desires the relevant sections of the Charter to apply to regional arrangements already in existence when the charter was drafted (the Inter-American System) or to other regional systems which might develop through natural evolution. In any event the United States does not believe that the Charter was intended to promote the artificial development of regional arrangements for security purposes. Considerations such as those outlined above serve to illustrate the undesirability from the United States point of view of concluding predetermined principles for the selection of commanders and the employment of United Nations security forces. Furthermore, the drawing up of principles for selection of commanders might cause theoretical debate in the Military Staff Committee on questions involving power politics. This should be avoided. The establishment of technical or temporary rules beyond the scope of the broad principles enunciated below is also undesirable. The functions of the Military Staff Committee in these matters are advisory, and the United States members should seek clearly to establish that their advisory responsibility extends to the question of command designation, leaving the question of the method of arriving at their choice for resolution when occasion arises.

6. With regard to USMS/19/1/Rev/1 (J.C.S. 1670/1), it is considered that the United States representatives should not introduce for discussion in the Military Staff Committee the subject of principles relating to command of United Nations armed forces. However, it is recognized that the Representatives of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on the Military Staff Committee should have available a statement of general principles for guidance in the event discussion of command and staff arrangements is precipitated by the representatives of other nations. In such case, the United States representatives should express opinions which conform to the following :

a. There should be unity of command, under a supreme commander, of a United Nations military force and attached civilian personnel for the execution of a particular mission assigned by the Security Council, under the provisions of Article 48 of the Charter of the United Nations.

b. The United States will not agree to choice of a supreme commander nor to the designation of commanders of air, naval or ground components, nor to the designation of commanders within regions, until immediately prior to the time such forces are to be placed at the disposal of the Security Council. This is realistic in that the considerations of command, composition of forces and the method of application of forces must in each case be affected by both the political and the military situation which then prevail.

c. Other than those appointments reserved for the Security Council, the appointment of commanders of subordinate forces of mixed nationalities should be the responsibility of the supreme commander of a United Nations military force and such appointments should be made from officers made available to him for this purpose by the nations furnishing the armed contingents. The appointment of the senior commander and subordinate commanders in any national contingent should be the responsibility of the nation which furnishes that contingent.

d. Any agreement approved by the United States must include provisions to permit senior commanders to communicate directly with the military authorities of their own governments.

e. When armed contingents of two or more nations participate in an operation, the nations concerned should provide suitable officers, acceptable to the supreme commander, for service on the operational, administrative, and civil government staffs of the supreme commander.

7. A supreme commander should have military operational command of all contingents assigned as a part of his force, exercising this command through the respective commanders of these contingents. Internal discipline and administration should remain as responsibilities of the commander of each national contingent. A supreme commander should administer within his theater all external and intercontingent logistical matters for the forces under his command.

8. It is not considered advisable to burden commanders with observers responsible only to the Military Staff Committee and reporting directly and only to the Military Staff Committee. Certainly the supreme commander must have administrative and disciplinary control (except courts-martial jurisdiction) over all personnel accompanying the armed forces under his command, including observers appointed by the Military Staff Committee. Further, copies of all reports should be furnished him to facilitate and expedite corrective action when appropriate. It must, of course, be borne in mind that no arrangement as to observers obviates the normal necessity for operational reports and other information that will be made available to the Military Staff Committee by the supreme commander.

9. By ratifying the Charter of the United Nations, the United States subscribed to the general principles and objectives therein, but the means of implementing them are yet to be agreed upon. The character and extent of United States participation in the implementation are matters which necessarily still remain subject to decision on the highest governmental level. In consequence the Representatives of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on the Military Staff Committee should refrain from expressing opinions to representatives of foreign governments and from entering into any commitments, express or implied, on major matters on which they have not received guidance from the Joint Chiefs of Staff, with whom this responsibility rests and who may freely be consulted.

501.BC/5-1646: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Stettinius)

SECRET

WASHINGTON, May 28, 1946—6 p. m.

80. The Department would prefer not to take at this time the action suggested in your 188 of May 16. General considerations make it desirable to handle a matter of this sort through existing United Nations machinery if possible rather than by unilateral action on our part in Moscow. Further, a slight additional delay would not be entirely unwelcome to us for the following reasons: We have not yet completed our discussions with Senate leaders on the general principles applicable to the special agreements and on the size of the proposed U.S. contingent. The Joint Chiefs of Staff are now preparing comments from a military point of view on certain points for our use in further conversations. Senators Connally and Vandenberg are both involved and have just returned from the Paris Conference.

The Department will try to complete its conversations with Senate leaders as soon as possible and will notify you when that has occurred. If by that time the Russian paper has not been received by the Subcommittee of the Military Staff Committee, action might then be taken within the Committee itself or by consultation among the Representatives of the permanent members of the Security Council either to attempt to hasten the submission of a Russian paper or to proceed with discussions without such a paper. It seems desirable to leave for later decision whether further steps by appropriate diplomatic action might thereafter be required.

If the Russian paper is submitted prior to the conclusion of our conversations with the Senators, our representatives should proceed, of course, with discussions in the Subcommittee of the Military Staff Committee subject to the possibility of some amendment of our views at later stages based on our further discussions with Senators.

The War and Navy Departments have concurred informally in this message and we suggest that copies be furnished to the U.S. Delegation, Military Staff Committee.

BYRNES

 Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. John M. Hancock of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission*⁴⁷

[WASHINGTON,] May 30, 1946.

Those present were Messrs. Byrnes, Acheson, Baruch and Hancock. I cannot attempt to outline in detail the entire compass of the talk

⁴⁷ Messrs. Baruch and Hancock met with Messrs. Byrnes and Acheson in Washington on May 30 and 31 with a view to drafting a statement of United States this morning. The discussion roved over many points which have been discussed by all of us, and I don't plan to cover those in this memorandum.

Mr. Byrnes stressed the importance of laying on the table a working document on the day before it was up for discussion in the general meeting or in a subcommittee. The difficulties of language make this very important as a matter of procedure. He stressed the danger of using the word "present" in connection with any documents we offer, because the word "present" implies that it has our validation. As to the several documents we proposed to give to the delegates, he and Acheson both thought it wiser to have them available without any formal presentation on our part.

This brought me to the clear conviction that we should not present the Acheson Report unless we were to be under the embarrassment of being accused of having validated such report. There is no objection to having the backbone of our approved policy embodied in Mr. Baruch's speech, but whatever is included should be supplied to the delegates also as a working paper. I believe that this backbone will have to be discussed in the Committee as a whole and that it will not lend itself with reference to the subcommittee.

The old query arose as to what we would say if the Russians were to query us about stopping making bombs. I pointed out that under my approach under which we outlaw the possession of bombs and dangerous projects in general, there would necessarily be some agreement covering both the further making of bombs and the disposal of all bombs then in being. I don't want to see us open the door as to the best plan of disposing of bombs. Any plan for entrusting them to the scattered bases or of turning them over to the Security Council will have to be discussed by the Security Council. This is going to be a very difficult determination, which will require our approval, and I don't want to see us use any words which would imply any approved plan as to the manner of disposal or transfer to anyone else. Of course, we could always convert that material back to use in power plants.

A long discussion was had as to the manner of handling the other weapons of mass destruction. Mr. Byrnes' statement, made upon his return from Moscow, indicates his thought at the time that it related only to weapons using atomic energy. He says, however, that in discussions in Moscow reference was made to biological warfare. Byrnes thinks it would be a serious mistake to attempt to cover these other weapons as a part of our present assignment.

Mr. Baruch was very strong in pointing out that the problem of policy to guide Baruch in the preparation of his statement to the Atomic Energy Commission; for an account of those conferences and subsequent events culminating in Presidential approval of a statement of United States policy on June 7, see Hewlett and Anderson, pp. 567-574. The meeting here described occurred in the Department of State.

atomic energy is a problem of the hearts of men and that no plan so far proposed gives any guarantee or assurance. Every plan offers lots of hope, but in the end the best any plan gives, even if it works, is an advance warning. Men will differ as to the time of the warning, but, at best, this advance warning is too short a time to meet the needs of our people's frame of mind in which they shrink from going to war except in reply to an overt act.

We had a long discussion about penalties. We will discuss it further tonight. I think Mr. Acheson will have no objection to penalties, but he still will feel that it will not be self-operative under any plan we can now conceive of, and as a matter of fact, any nation that has in mind to violate the plan as we propose it would already have in mind the making of alliances and the marshaling of the tools of war, and before a violation of this kind took place, the nation would be ready to go to war. As a result, the only sanction is war.

Mr. Baruch raised the question about a provision in the Constitution of all the nations, similar to the provision General MacArthur⁴⁸ has inserted in the Japanese Constitution. He also referred to the principle back of the Nuremberg trials, that of individual responsibility for violations of international law. They were not commented upon at length this morning.

Mr. Acheson pointed out this morning that there always has to be some ultimate authority to enforce a Treaty and that the only such authority is going to war.

I proposed that big power plants using material which would be potentially dangerous should be authorized by the A.D.A. only subject to approval of the Security Council. I think this is necessary; otherwise there might well be plans for granting Russia the power to build a number of large plants which would be very near in point of time to the utilization of their construction for the manufacturing of bombs. This plan of requiring the Security Council to approve construction of such plants would make the veto in the Security Council a very powerful weapon. I do not believe that the power to disturb the military balance should be left in the A.D.A. without some further control. I assume the Security Council would naturally take the same view.

When we raised the question of our relationships to Canada and Britain, Mr. Byrnes thought that we should work with them in advance of our meeting. He was not concerned about charges of a compact block because he felt our joint effort put us all in a similar position.

⁴⁸ General of the Army Douglas MacArthur, Commanding General, United States Army Forces in the Pacific; Supreme Commander, Allied Powers in Japan.

Byrnes spoke at length of the difficulties of language and the importance of starting out with one word and continuing to use it. He said that whenever a word was changed, there was always a query as to why it was changed. He felt that we should avail ourselves of the expert treaty draftsmen of the State Department. He has no thought that we should lay down the form of a Treaty at an early date. He thought the parts should be drafted as principles are established.

We had some discussion about the make-up of the Atomic Energy Authority. It would seem to me that if true internationalists of competence could be found, they would make the best body to handle the problem. We felt, however, that we would have to follow a pattern somewhat similar to the Security Council and that we would have to have national representation in the body. We doubted that in [any] body of trustees of international character would win the support of our people. The question in the end is, however, do we balance national interests in the make-up of the Board of Directors. In the discussions the name of Nils Bohr ⁴⁹ arose as one ideal type.

In regard to the exchange of information and the survey plans with regard to raw material, Byrnes thought the suggestion would be worthless because the Russians would disagree. He does agree that it should be a part of the Treaty. He feels that our proposing it as a part of our national platform would invite an early breakdown without a clear and adequate basis for such a breakdown.

We had quite a long discussion about the dangers of the leakage of scientific data and the plans for limiting the fields for inspection. Nothing very definitive came out of the discussion beyond our own present thoughts in these respects. The question naturally was whether foreign inspectors might seek to do espionage work under the cover of a geological survey. There was willingness to trust the Atomic Energy Authority for a decision in such matters, and it was thought that this would be enough safeguard regarding the danger of snooping as a part of the inspection process.

Mr. Baruch was very strong as to the matter of penalty and told Mr. Acheson (as Byrnes was leaving for the Carter Glass funeral) that he had to be in the position of advocating something in which he believed.

This summarizes down to this: That we omit from our statement of policies (May 30th draft) the last item regarding the raw material survey; that we present the statement of policies of this Government as the working document; that we embody them in Mr. Baruch's speech or not, as we wish; that we avoid endorsing any document as United States policy except the working paper we present.

⁴⁹ Niels Bohr, Danish theoretical physicist; pioneer in nuclear physics.

Every impression I gained was that they are relying in the State Department upon a development of policy on the initiative of B.M.B. When B.M.B. asked Mr. Byrnes what his policies were, Byrnes replied, as nearly as I can recall, "Oh hell, I have none. What are your views?"

Acheson was willing to have the inspection in the field of raw materials be empowered to go beyond, in the event any diversion were discovered, to tracing down the destination of such diverted material.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by the Special Assistant to the Under Secretary of State (Marks) to the Under Secretary (Acheson)

[WASHINGTON,] May 30, 1946.

The "Report on the International Control of Atomic Energy" outlined proposals for international action but expressly left numerous questions of procedure and substance for later consideration. This was done in part because of the limited time which the Board of Consultants had in preparing the Report and in part because the nature of the questions seemed to require different qualifications or different terms of reference from those of the Board.

If the proposals in the Report are to be advocated as a basis of discussion in the United Nations Commission these questions will have to be carefully investigated by the United States in order to equip our representative for the deliberations of the Commission.

General procedure—In many ways the procedural problems of the United Nations Commission on Atomic Energy will not differ from those of other international meetings, for example, the Bretton Woods or Dumbarton Oaks Conferences. The organization of the Commission and its sub-committees, the question of open and closed sessions, liaison between representatives of the several member nations—in dealing with these and many similar matters the practices followed in other international meetings should provide a guide.

In view of the extensive experience which Mr. Alger Hiss and his staff have had in such matters, I assume that they should work intensively on them and give Mr. Baruch and his associates all possible assistance. I understand from Mr. Hiss that some work has already been done along these lines and that he feels that much more should be done. Definite arrangements should be worked out between Mr. Hiss and Mr. Baruch's staff for providing the most effective cooperation on a continuing basis.

Procedure in relation to disclosures—One of the most important aspects of procedure, is peculiar to the subject itself. The Board's Report states that at an early stage in the Commission's deliberations, we must be prepared to make available enough presently classified information to enable the representatives of other nations to understand and appraise our proposals. In dealing with this issue there are two main questions: (1) At what stage in the deliberations and under what conditions should we make such disclosures and (2) what should be the scope of the disclosures to be made.

(1) There are doubtless a good many possible alternatives as to the time and circumstances of disclosure. Perhaps a reasonable proposition might be worked out under which we would not make any disclosures until other nations agreed to do something in return, either in the way of reciprocal exchange, or in some other form. But, I think it fair to say that none of us who worked on the Report have been able to think of an arrangement of this character which would be generally acceptable to other nations or at any rate acceptable if it involved their supplying us with anything that we would really be interested in getting. However, it may be that the Secretary of State and Mr. Baruch will have ideas on this subject and it would certainly be worth-while to give further consideration to the possibility if anyone in a position of responsibility feels that it may be feasible.

Another alternative would be to proceed in the following manner. Submit the Report as a basis for discussion. Be prepared to discuss the Report as it now stands and without any reference to classified information. Discussion on this basis might be pursued as long as necessary to make certain that the essential features of the Report are understood by other nations and that they are seriously interested in it. During this stage our representatives would have to state frankly that the scientific premises on which the Report is based would have to be accepted for the time being without discussion of underlying classified information. However, as our own internal meetings have shown, there is a great deal of unclassified information, technical and nontechnical which is not included in the Report but which can be used to illuminate the Report itself. An example of this is Doctor Rabi's⁵⁰ introduction to the Doubleday-Doran edition of the Report. Because our scientists and public officials have given so much thought to the subject, they are perhaps in a better position to draw upon and organize this unclassified information in ways that could be of great assistance in promoting a clear preliminary understanding of the Report itself among the representatives of other nations.

This preliminary consideration of the Report might take several weeks or much longer. If skillfully conducted, it might evoke rather clear signs of understanding and interest on the part of other nations and when these occur we might then begin to take up the classified material which your Committee agreed the Commission would require "for an understanding of the proposals" and which you found it possible to define "within satisfactory limits".

⁵⁰ Dr. Isador I. Rabi, a Columbia University physicist; consultant to Manhattan Engineer District.

A third alternative would be to make the information in question available at the outset as a sign of our own seriousness and good faith.

Whether one of these or some other alternative is to be adopted, the point that needs to be emphasized now is that a decision of major policy must be made in resolving this question of procedure.

(2) The scope of information to be made subject to disclosure will have to be carefully worked out in advance. When in the meetings between your Committee and the Board, this information was "defined . . . within satisfactory limits", the definition was of necessity based upon consideration of very general categories of data. In preparation for the Commission meetings these categories will have to be examined in detail and decisions made as to the numerous specific items which may be used in discussion.

In short, a second "Smyth" report⁵¹ will be needed to guide our representatives or in some other way responsibility will have to be fixed and authority conferred to enable our representatives, in the language of the Report, to make available the "limited category of information which should be divulged in the early meetings of the United Nations Commission".

This advance preparation is of critical importance. For it is quite likely that the better we prepare, organize and present information, the less information we shall have to use. A limited amount of data presented effectively and at the right moment in the deliberations may well provide necessary understanding. On the other hand, if data is not readily available as required and if it is not presented in the most orderly and effective form, the resulting confusion may well involve more disclosures than would otherwise be necessary or may preclude satisfactory understandings.

Other questions of procedure—At least one other question of procedure which should be given consideration now concerns the order in which matters should be taken up. Assuming that the Report is adopted as a basis of discussion, and discussions proceed far enough to establish a serious interest and understanding of the proposals by other nations, it seems probable that the next step would be to commence work on drafting a charter or treaty. At this point, or before, it is probable that other nations will raise questions as to the steps in the transition period.

⁵¹ See footnote 72a, p. 751.

When this occurs we may want to urge that the problem of the transition should be deferred until after substantial progress has been made in the drafting of a charter. If we are unsuccessful in this, we shall have to face at the outset of the drafting or even before, the extremely difficult problem of the transition steps. During the extensive discussion of the transition steps in the meetings between your Committee and the Board, you will recall that quite a number of the participants pointed out that the most intensive kind of study would have to be given to this problem in order to determine how it should be handled from the standpoint of negotiations. This then is one of the most important matters to be thought through as soon as possible and will require the assistance of the most highly qualified people.

Substantive questions—As the Board of Consultants stated, a succession of processes like that involved in preparing the Report itself will be necessary, each building on the preceding analysis, before even the major ramifications of the problem can be understood and the major questions partially answered. Numerous matters which are adverted to in the Report in the most general terms will have to be made the subject of analysis in order that our representative may be prepared to deal with them in the negotiations. Among the more important are the following:

(1) Raw Materials—The discussions in the Blair Lee House meetings sufficiently indicated how complicated the raw materials problem is. Even if the general recommendation in the Report with respect to raw materials is adopted it is clear that the precise pattern of control would have to vary, depending upon the facts in different types of situations. But, until the available geological, mining and economic facts concerning the occurrence, distribution and use of uranium and thorium have been closely examined it will not be possible to spell out the detailed measures of control. Intensive study undertaken now should go a long way toward simplifying this problem.

(2) Strategic Distribution of Dangerous Facilities and Stockpiles of Raw Materials and Fissionable Materials—This problem likewise requires immediate study with the help of geographers, economists, military personnel and people experienced in political affairs. With such help, the experts in the field of atomic energy should be able to give some indication of the pattern of distribution that would afford a sound strategic balance geographically. Many questions which would otherwise be extremely troublesome in the negotiations can be avoided through such advance preparation. For example, the point has been made that if a single primary production plant were located in each of the five major nations that might place any two of the nations at a numerical disadvantage if the others took aggressive action in concert against them. But if, as seems probable, investigation of the scientific facts shows that any nation controlling one or two of these plants could wage just as effective atomic war as a nation which controlled three, then the problem of shifting political alignments becomes less troublesome.

(3) Financial Problems—The Blair Lee House discussions and the Report itself sufficiently indicated the difficult financial questions that would have to be solved. Since they are bound to arise in some form before the negotiations have proceeded very far, advance preparation in this field also seems necessary.

(4) Personnel Problems—This was another matter touched upon at the Blair Lee House and on which there appeared to be agreement that considerable advance study by experts in the field would be desirable.

(5) Management Problems—There are numerous questions concerning the organization of the Authority which need to be explored. Some of these are mentioned in the Report but none of them are discussed at length and there are many others that are not touched upon.

(6) The “Veto” and “Sanctions”—In relation to these matters it is evident that considerable confusion exists and that there are many serious questions which need to be thought through and answered. The scope of the problem was pretty well defined during the Blair Lee House meetings. There is a related matter which so far has not been discussed. This has to do with the definition of evasions. Some types of evasions would have to be regarded as so serious that they signify a complete breakdown in the plan. Others could be safely regarded as minor and subject to disposition under some form of administrative machinery provided in the plan itself. These definitions and the machinery would have to be spelled out in considerable detail in the charter. To do this will require very careful advance preparation.

(7) Scientific Problems—In the various discussions of the Report these problems have not received much attention. However, they are among the most important of all. The definition of the dividing line between safe and dangerous activities, the conditions under which research in atomic explosives should be undertaken by the Authority, the measures by which security can be “built” into the facilities of the Authority and into licensed facilities—these are all enormously complicated scientific and technical problems. In order that they may be sufficiently simplified so that the negotiations can make progress it will be necessary for us to put our qualified scientists and technicians to work on them as soon as possible.

HERBERT S. MARKS

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. John M. Hancock of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission ⁵²

[WASHINGTON,] May 30, 1946.

Those present at the apartment of Mr. Byrnes in the Shoreham Hotel were Messrs. Byrnes, Acheson, Baruch and Hancock.

In a way, this will be a continuation of the morning's discussion. After some conversation about general procedure, Mr. Acheson laid out the things he had wanted to talk with Mr. Byrnes about insofar as atomic energy was concerned. He thought there ought to be a means of coordinating the position of Government and that there should be a group set up in the State Department which would be able to gather for us the answers to any questions which might arise in the conduct of our discussions in New York. He even broached the point that it would be helpful if our body were here. He went on developing his idea, and I can see no disadvantage in an interdepartmental board, with appointees from each agency of Government who would get together the facts from the branches of Government concerned or would develop a statement of policy on the part of the departments concerned. The purpose of this would be to have a group in the State Department who would be in close contact with the President and get authoritative rulings on America's position. Up to this point I can see advantages but no disadvantages.

Mr. Acheson went on to outline the idea that he might reconstitute, as a board, the Lilienthal Committee ⁵³ for the purpose of advising the State Department. As to this I demur, because I believe it could only complicate our problem. The scientists as a body do not agree, and I feel we have to make our determination with our staff as to what should be our policy. These problems are not often purely scientific problems. They blend very quickly into political problems. If we were able to keep the scientists onto the purely scientific aspects, I wouldn't look for any trouble because there is fairly general agreement among the scientists as to the purely scientific aspects. The divergences come in when you start interpreting these scientific facts into a political policy. The scientists tend to be unbending and calculating in the field of science—which is natural—but they carry over their inelasticity into arguments in the field of international affairs, politics in the proper sense, and negotiation. They generally seek to have the whole story laid out before committing themselves to it and that doesn't lend itself to this plan of handling the problem. Mr. Baruch and Mr. Acheson are to talk that matter over further.

⁵² The meeting here described occurred on the evening of May 30.

⁵³ Reference is to the Board of Consultants which advised the Secretary of State's Committee on Atomic Energy.

I told Mr. Acheson that I thought the military problems were entirely cleared now by the appointment of General Groves to act as the interpreter of military policy on behalf of the Chiefs of Staff and on behalf of the American delegation to the Military Security Committee [Military Staff Committee] of the United Nations Security Council.⁵⁴ Mr. Acheson thought General Groves would be speaking without the support of the military authorities and, when I said that I had seen nothing in General Groves' conduct to lead me to support that belief, he was pleasant but firm in restating his position. Apparently, this is a relic of the fight of false issue about military versus civilian control, and also it may be a by-product of the feeling of the scientists toward General Groves. I understand that the most vehement of the group against General Groves is Dr. Urey,⁵⁵ and I also understand, on good authority, that General Groves kept Dr. Urey, on four different occasions, from making the wrong practical interpretation of the scientific fact of which Dr. Urey was fully possessed.⁵⁶

I think the matter of drafting is quite cleared up now. There had been a view expressed earlier that we should start men drafting early. I expressed my view that there wasn't anything to draft at this stage of the operation, and yet it would be helpful to have assigned to us the men who were going to do the drafting and that they would be in a better position to do the drafting if they sat in on the decisions on policy matters which were later to be embodied in the form of a treaty draft. To me, it would be putting the cart before the horse to start drafting before policy decisions are made. We expressed our entire approval of having a man from the State Department to aid us in this work. When Mr. Byrnes emphasized the language difficulties and the suspicions that arise when a word is changed, it seemed clear to me ⁵⁴ In a letter of May 27, Fleet Adm. Chester W. Nimitz, Chief of Naval Operations, had informed Mr. Baruch that General Groves would represent the Joint Chiefs of Staff with respect to technical and security matters confronting the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission (Department of State Atomic Energy Files).

⁵⁵ Dr. Harold C. Urey, Professor of Chemistry and member of the Staff of the Institute for Nuclear Studies, University of Chicago.

⁵⁶ In a memorandum of June 2 to Hancock, Tolman stated the following: "On page 3, it is stated that General Groves kept Dr. Urey, on four different occasions from making the wrong practical interpretation of scientific facts. This I think comes from me, and needs a little correction. What I said was that I could give four instances of where General Groves' scientific and engineering intuition was better than that of the scientists. Only one of these applies to Urey. This, however, was the very important one, that Urey thought that the diffusion process, for which he was the top scientist, ought to be abandoned, and Groves was the one who forced it through to its very successful conclusion, and thus really saved Urey's scientific reputation." (Department of State Atomic Energy Files) that in any statement of policy which we draft and submit to the Commission, it would be helpful to have such drafts reviewed by the treaty drafters, as in that way we would be getting into our first draft the same language as we would expect to use in the final draft.

Going back to this matter of organization, I can see advantages in having a staff group in the State Department to dig up facts and to act as a clearing point with the President for a statement of our policies. I cannot see a situation in which the State Department would attempt to present to the President for approval some different content of a statement of policy than one in entire keeping with our views. If we have to go into battles before the President in case of a difference of point of view, then I think we want to carry our own banner before the President rather than have differing recommendations submitted by people who may feel entirely free to alter our statements, or might not knowingly do so.

It became very clear that we should work this out closely with the President and the Department of State. The purpose of this would be primarily to keep the President informed so that he would not say something in his press conferences which would be contrary to the position we might be taking in the Commission.

We distributed copies of the Ten-Point Policy Statement,⁵⁷ which were read over by all concerned.

There were two points discussed at quite some length. The problem of automatic sanctions was gone over again, and I don't recall anything significant which was new. Mr. Baruch was again firm in his argument that we must get some automatic penalties, or that otherwise we had to tell the world that this plan gave us a warning of between three months and a year, which was zero in our form of Government. I think Mr. Acheson quite doubts the wisdom of the suggestion. He argued quite objectively for his point of view and didn't insist upon it at all. Mr. Byrnes thinks the penalties would be some deterrent. Mr. Byrnes is going to see the President about the whole statement of policy.

The other point of argument was with regard to uranium ore in the ground. Mr. Acheson wants the Authority to be given the responsibility of preventing diversion and so do we. He does not think the inspection can be as good as ownership, and he even wants to go so far as to give the right to take ore in the ground for power plants. I don't see this argument at all. If we advance the argument favoring the right of eminent domain, we will to some degree facilitate the production of bomb material and certainly that isn't our purpose. At the same time the amounts required for the so-called beneficial uses are almost negligible. I see no reason to give Government the power to seize the property of one citizen, with the object of converting it to purely commercial purposes. If we don't make bombs and don't create potentially dangerous power plants, there is more uranium readily and immediately available to meet the needs of the so-called beneficial uses.

⁵⁷ The memorandum under reference is not printed; for a summary of its substance, see Hewlett and Anderson, p. 567. A redraft dated June 4 is printed on p. 827.

Mr. Acheson's argument is that Russia will not consent to inspection, and my argument—equally as firmly asserted—is that inspection can't be any more difficult for the Russians to accept than to accept ownership by an international body in any country in which the State is supreme and the private property does not exist as such. It would seem to me that if we try to assert the right of ownership, we will have a more difficult time with Russia than if we ask merely for control or dominion. Mr. Acheson's reply was that unless we own we cannot stop diversion in Russia. I do not see where an ownership gives us any advantage against inspection. On the other hand, I think, the nations which do believe in private property would demur to a Treaty asserting the right of eminent domain. Mr. Acheson claimed he did not quite understand my statement about ownership. We didn't get very far in a discussion of it, but the last thought expressed by him was that he wanted the Authority given the responsibility to safeguard uranium supplies and to prevent diversions in any and every way which it was [saw] fit. And I did not demur to ownership in some cases, leases in other cases, licenses in some cases, or in other words to a plan of operation in which the Authority would be free to use its judgment as to the best means of carrying out its responsibility. One difficulty is the inherent difficulty I see in all administrative law procedures. Unless some guides are set down for the administrative law authority, almost inevitably the authorities are anxious to grab a lot of power.

When I brought out the problems of the financial set up, capital funds, working funds, etc., Mr. Acheson said no work had been done in that field, and when he volunteered to get a group for it, I told him that Eberstadt would be free today and that he had that assignment. I plan to write Mr. Acheson and ask him for any work which has been done on this problem in connection with other international groups. I emphasize my concern that with the ending of the war and the desire of Congress to cut expenditures, with the inability of many parts of the world to benefit from our plans and their probable lack of desire to contribute to the work, I fear the international Authority will break down and do such a poor grade of work, because of lack of funds, that the Authority will lose public favor and support and become defunct. I fear that the entire financial obligation in the end will rest upon us, and I do not look upon this prospect as favorable to the general project.

We had a long discussion about the reference to weapons of mass destruction. Mr. Byrnes said that the only intent back of the final resolution was to handle the matter of atomic energy and atomic bombs. He said that there had been mention made of biological warfare and that the broad term was used so that it might include biological warfare. I pointed out Mr. Byrnes' statement made after Moscow, to the effect that the problem was the atomic bomb and other matters related to it which, of course, would seem to exclude biological warfare. It looks frankly as if the intent now is being made to exclude it so as to simplify our job and that the effort is being made to build up the argument that this reference was a bit of window dressing so far as gaining support for the entire program. I agree with Mr. Byrnes that our major effort should be in the field of atomic energy at this time. I also agree with Mr. Baruch that we cannot dismiss the problem from our presentation. (In talking with General Groves on Friday morning, May 31, he brought out a suggestion that when we list the crimes in connection with atomic energy, we also mention the use of biological warfare and provide a penalty for it without pushing for an exact definition of all the crimes which might be set up in this connection.) While there wasn't any outspoken approval of either the content or the manner of expressing the other points, there likewise was no demurring to them.

During the day Mr. Baruch had questioned the wording in my memorandum—"It will readily be seen at this time that this is not the endorsement of the creation of national Authorities". He thought we should cover both sides of the issue rather than leave it in the present form which is one sided. He didn't use this expression, but I think his thought is that we neither endorse nor condemn the idea of having national bodies. In the discussion on this point last night, it seemed that the international bodies might wish to refer certain problems to national Authorities. For example, an international body might give a national body a certain quota of material for research or power plant use inside any one country. The international body could keep out of local politics by having allocations made by the national body.

I raised the query again as to whether it wouldn't be a good plan to provide that large power plants should be permitted by the international body only, with the approval of the Security Council. The difficulty in this matter is that with the uncertainties of development in the field of denaturing, we might be setting up in the Atomic Development Authority a power which would permit the location of civilian power plants in one country. In the uncertainties regarding denaturing, in particular of plutonium, a permission given to one nation to build a large number of power plants might disturb the military balance among the nations to an extreme degree. It would be a factor of safety to have the location and the existence of such plants approved by the Security Council where such projects would come under the view of the military security group. This, of course, contemplates an advancement in power plant development and the right in the Authority to change its position regarding these large power plants. The difficulty is that if the Authority once permits a certain large power plant to use material which seems safe at the start, it might later have to draw back the potentially dangerous material and allow operation only with material which was safe in accordance with the changed standard. Have it explicitly stated that changing standards might require change of material. This would create a definite friction between the Atomic Development Authority and the nation involved, particularly if the nation involved were trying to set up large power plants so as to have larger production of bomb material more readily available in the event of need. While no specific assent was given to this idea, there was no demurring on the part of Messrs. Acheson or Byrnes.

There seemed to be a good deal of confusion in regard to the matter of licensing. Admittedly, I have not been trying to write a statute which would grant to the Atomic Development Authority any specific powers in the granting of licenses or any right to include in the terms of the license any specific project. I deliberately avoided doing this because I thought that an attempt to develop the terms of such licenses at this time would only take our eyes off the main problem. I certainly have no objection to a more specific statement than the ones I have used with regards to this license, their granting or their terms.

On the morning of May 31, Mr. Baruch and I talked with General Groves in the Shoreham Gardens. We reviewed the delegation of authority to him; the talk with Messrs. Byrnes and Acheson of last evening; the need of posting the Chiefs of Staff regarding our policy before any decision was made by the President as to national policy. We also went over our statement of the ten-point policy program and mentioned the two additional points which we had been discussing. These two points are a consideration of the MacArthur plan to embody in the Constitution of Japan a prohibition against war, and the idea developed from the Nuremberg trials that the individual has responsibility for violating the laws. General Groves commented on the second point to the effect that if the President ordered him to do something contrary to the Treaty, Gen. Groves would be aware of the criminal liability in international law in the event we lost the war. We didn't press the point, but I would guess that any military man would be skeptical on this point.

Gen. Groves used one very pat expression which impressed me very much. It arose in a discussion of what are weapons of mass destruction. In the suggestion previously discussed regarding a prohibition regarding biological warfare, he said we must make it impossible for any major nation to start a war. He didn't satisfy himself with the statement that in the event war comes, all the forbidden weapons will be used. His statement rather was that as these terrible weapons will be used if war once starts, the only course of the nations to follow is to prevent any nation from starting a war. This is nothing particularly new by way of concept, but, I think, it is a better way of expressing the idea than I have previously heard.

I gave Gen. Groves my Ten-Point Program, and he went over it carefully. He thought the penalties should be "immediate and certain" rather than "prompt and certain" as I had written it.

I forgot to mention that Mr. Byrnes justifies the exclusion of biological warfare from our work at this time on the ground that these weapons have never proved themselves in warfare as has the atomic bomb. Mr. Byrnes thought that if we can solve this one problem of the atomic bomb, we can then go on to solve the others. I pointed out to him that the kind of inspection which might be adequate for controlling abuses with atomic energy quite certainly would not be adequate for these other kinds of warfare.

General Groves thinks that it is too strong a statement to say that it can be regarded "as probable" that atomic energy will in the course of years provide an important supplement to other methods of power production. He would not demur if the words "as probable" were changed to "quite possible".

[Here follows an account of further discussion with General Groves concerning personnel and the release of classified information.]

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. John M. Hancock of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission*⁵⁸

[WASHINGTON,] June 1, 1946.

I didn't take notes so this memorandum will likely omit some matters which were discussed last evening.

For a long period we discussed various aspects of the Paris negotiations, the difficulties encountered there, the attitudes of the different nations—particularly Russia—the difficulties encountered in dealing with them—all as a background for our conducting ourselves in the negotiations coming up with reference to atomic energy.

⁵⁸ This memorandum, written on the morning of June 1, describes a meeting attended by Messrs. Byrnes, Baruch, and Hancock.

Mr. Byrnes handed me a memorandum which, he said, Dean Acheson had dictated in about a half hour.⁵⁹ Mr. Byrnes asked me to look it over in comparison with our policy statement. There wasn't a clean-cut, sharp presentation of the reason for the Acheson rewrite, except that Mr. Byrnes wanted it put in the usual form of a State Dept. paper, in order to make it more in keeping with the practice of informing the President about contemplated national positions to be taken during the course of the negotiations. The first line of the Acheson statement is significant to me in that the document purports to be a "basis of discussion", whereas I had thought it would purport to be a statement of policy. When put forward in its present form, it gives me the impression that we are much softer in our attitude than if the same material were to be presented as a matter of national policy. I am told that this is the diplomatic procedure in matters of this kind. I told Mr. Byrnes it would be more in support of Mr. Baruch and would put him in a stronger position—a position less likely to be traded against if Mr. Baruch would always be able to say that the statement was a definition of our position. Apparently the words have a different meaning in diplomatic procedure than I am accustomed to.

The Acheson statement was rather supposed by Mr. Byrnes to be a restatement of my ten-point memorandum of "policies for discussion May 30, 1946".⁶⁰ (The eleventh point, the exchange of information about raw materials and the survey, was dropped from our memorandum following our evening session on May 30.) The Acheson memorandum, of which I have only one copy, attached to the original of this memorandum, wasn't an attempt to restate my memorandum in keeping with the views of the State Dept. It really was nothing but a review of the Acheson plan. Also in a copy attached to the original I marked the items in my statement which were not included in the Acheson statement. When I pointed this out to Mr. Byrnes, he emphasized that the statement was written for form rather than content, though it was partly to inform the President.

In reporting to the President, Mr. Byrnes had told him of the meetings and he approved the idea of the penalties as laid down in our memorandum. Mr. Byrnes recommended that it be included and the President assented. Mr. Byrnes told him that there were other minor points of difference which, he thought, could be worked out in the ordinary course.

⁵⁹ The Acheson memorandum is a slightly revised version of the memorandum by the Board of Consultants to Mr. Baruch, of May 19, which is printed on p. 790.

⁶⁰ The memorandum under reference is not printed; for a summary of its substance, see Hewlett and Anderson, p. 567. A redraft dated June 4 is printed on p. 827.

I told Mr. Byrnes that the Acheson memorandum did not have the content of my memorandum, and that I thought the best thing for me to do was to revise my statement of policies so as to make it as brief as possible, thus avoiding argument on the part of people who query why any change of wording occurs in successive drafts or handling of the idea. I had quite a discussion about the form, and I proposed that I would be glad to work with Ben Cohen⁶¹ after I once revised my statement. The purpose of working with Cohen would be to see that the form was acceptable to the State Dept. I made it very clear that I wasn't in accord with the content of the Acheson memorandum. It isn't too clear to me that the Acheson memorandum avoids all argument. Mr. Byrnes wants my statement in the form of conclusions without argument, and this is understood to be the usual procedure. I have not looked over the Acheson memorandum critically so as to see that it has no argument, but my impression is that it departs from the standard which Mr. Byrnes is aiming at.

I told Mr. Byrnes of my attempt to find the legislative history back of the expression, "other weapons of mass destruction", but that I had gotten only his statement of the evening before. I told him that Gen. Groves, yesterday morning, had offered the suggestion that in the statement of crimes in connection with atomic energy, we might also work in a reference to the use of biological warfare as a crime calling for a penalty, and we might bring in the reference in an indirect way through some such statement as this. Later on in this conference we may want to consider the advisability of providing a penalty for the use of biological warfare and to set up an appropriate penalty at a proper time in our proceedings. We would not be advocating that as a part of our national policy. I have no sharp view as to whether this could be better handled as a statement of U.S. policies or as a part of Mr. Baruch's personal talk. Mr. Byrnes reviewed the legislative history back of the expression, and in exactly the same form as I reported upon for the evening of May 30th.

The other matter which Mr. Byrnes had in mind as the difference which, he thought, could be reconciled, related to the matter of ownership of uranium ore in the ground. I had told Mr. Byrnes on Thursday night of the views we had in this matter, but apparently I had not been clear, as Mr. Byrnes said last night that he didn't see the issue entirely in the clear.

I told Mr. Byrnes that when I first read over the Acheson Report, I felt sure there would be a flareup over the word "own" and that before I talked to any mining men and before I read over the report of the Carnegie Foundation, the report also known as the Kerr Report, I had grave concern over that approach to the problem. It will be recalled that in a previous memo in reporting this discussion, I had used the word "control" rather than "own." Dean Acheson had replied with the word "dominion," and I had replied in turn with the word "absolute dominion." I don't believe there is much difference in position, although Mr. Acheson may feel that ownership adds some safety to control measures.

⁶¹ Benjamin V. Cohen, Counselor, Department of State.

When the issue was made clear to Mr. Byrnes, it was quite fully discussed. I stressed that I want the International Authority to be the only owner of ore from "birth to death" from the mine mouth on. I mentioned the characteristic of ownership which would be documented by the filing of a deed in the Court House. I mentioned that I wasn't sure of any similar concept in other parts of the world, particularly where there were not adequate maps and surveys to serve as a basis of the deed. Mr. Byrnes thought there was some benefit of ownership, particularly if the property were posted, and some neighbor came in to operate what was known as international property. I agreed that there might be signs posted or fences put up around known deposits. There is no possible way of owning unknown deposits, and presently unknown deposits could be mined in remote parts of the world without any discovery except the kind of discovery which would be a part of the inspection function as much as a part of the owning function.

I then pointed out that the best way to control atomic energy would be to keep the uranium in the ground so there was no reason to buy a lot of stuff which would only remain in the ground if we, in the A.D.A., were not prepared to buy it. The exception to this would be if a nation decided to violate the Treaty and do it in a way to escape attention. There would be no commercial benefit to their taking such action, and it certainly would be very difficult to produce enough such material for a bomb without revealing the existence of the metallurgical plants required to convert the ore into bomb material. I stressed the point that we were entirely in accord with A.D.A. ownership, management, control, and dominion over the final material ready for bombs. In the middle of the life history of the ore above ground until final use in a bomb, we were stronger than the Acheson Report with regard to so-called safe materials in large power plants. We feel that these plants will likely require the same kind of control as for bomb material, whereas the Acheson Report, relying largely on the denaturing process and its effectiveness, was willing to allow such plants to operate under private control.

I reviewed the argument about the application of eminent domain, agreeing that it would be entirely right and acceptable to our standards and that of other capitalistic countries to use that right in producing material for national security or for war. As our purpose is to prevent war, I see nothing to be gained by setting up the right of eminent domain.

I pointed out that I can see every benefit in favor of our plan as against the Acheson plan insofar as Russia might be concerned. I would think Russia would be more likely to object to international ownership than an international inspection. I cannot conceive Russia agreeing to turn over to an international sovereignty her own State property. I think it is more likely she would consent to inspection, particularly if we can set up some machinery which will keep espionage activities outside of the inspection activities.

On the other hand, I point out that the Acheson plan will have many difficulties with the capitalistic States, particularly in connection with the mines producing uranium as by-products.

I refer to the need of purchasing the entire Rand mines and taking over a control of a large part of the international mining activities, thus destroying or seriously limiting private enterprise in the capitalistic countries. I believe that America, Canada, Britain, Belgium (probably), the Belgian Congo, the Union of South Africa would certainly object to the Acheson plan. This plan would seem to all men in the capitalistic economy as the first start to an international socialized State. Even if the Acheson plan of ownership were to gain the approval of Russia, in preference to my plan of inspection, I think the capitalistic nations would check off that aspect of the plan as being thoroughly distasteful.

I told Mr. Byrnes that I thought it would be very difficult to provide the funds with which to do the purchasing of all of the uranium mines; that I thought the burden would fall upon us to provide the capital and the operating deficits; that Congress would be adverse to large appropriations for the purpose; that other nations could only be induced with great difficulty to carry on their share of the appropriations, because many of them could not get any remote gain from the beneficial uses so far discussed. I feel the ultimate result would be that we would cut down the funds, that the Authority would have to live within its funds, and that the character of its operations would suffer with the result that they wouldn't have even a good inspection, as a result of which the whole operation would be a failure.

We discussed at some length the difficulties of a truly international managing personnel, the problems of local labor, the difficulty of setting up such a large organization as would be necessary, and the benefits of undertaking a smaller program. Of course, I wouldn't argue for my point of view, if I were not convinced that inspection can be as efficient to control diversions as if ownership were added to this same inspection. We discussed at some length the means of detecting diversion from mines and the fairly complete devices for locating radio-active materials, whether in the ground or on the person of anyone trying to steal such material, even if this stealing were attempted at the direction of Government.

I feel that if an International Authority tries to operate mines in various parts of the world, it will raise all sorts of questions which can only interfere with the local economy in a way which could not take place if private capital in the country were operating the mine. I did not argue the relative merits of Government operation against private operation, although I see no reason for favoring Government operation, except when it is necessary for the safety of the people or of the nation.

I pointed out that if the Authority had lots of money and were obligated to own, that there would be all sorts of difficulties in determining values and that in many places in the world, there would be low grade mines sold to the International Authority with tremendous pressure for high valuations; and I thought the bickering over the ore content in the mines and the basis of valuation would tend to break down international harmony rather than add to it. On the other side of this picture, if the International Authority doesn't have the money and if it is the only possible purchaser of a mine, there will be charges of favoritism on the part of the International Authority toward a nation or its nationals desiring to sell their mining deposits. The fact is that we want the International Authority to have dominion. We want to rely upon punitive laws, and we believe that if we take title at the ground, we accomplish everything that is accomplished by the other plan of ownership and we do it with a lot less personnel and a lot less financial risks. With reference to the by-product mines, every one of the same complications would exist.

I agree that there ought to be dominion over the tailings. I also agree that the license given to a by-product mine should be very strict and should be made effective by inspection. I would control the maintenance of the stockpile of tailings, any movements from it, any handling of it by license, and I would make the penalties very severe. I certainly see no reason why—if a clear case is made out that the tailings are not being controlled in terms of the license or if there is any substantial reason to suspect diversion—the Authority should not clamp down, even to the extent of closing the entire mine. I believe that the complicated metallurgical processes, which are required for converting the ore along with the plants required, make it almost as easy to detect diversions at this point as at the earlier point of taking out of the ground. I think a nation which wanted to avoid detection would find it far easier to get the material in several big power plants, denature it, and prepare it for use in a bomb, than to start back with the raw ore and go through all of the processes through which the ore goes before it is ready for use in big power plants.

While I have probably missed some points of the argument insofar as this memorandum is concerned, I think I have devoted enough space to the argument last night. At the end I pointed out our policy of desiring to interfere as little as possible with the private, Governmental and State economy, with the only reason for stepping into that field being one of national safety. In other words, I feel that the International Authority should not dip any further into established local customs or rights than is absolutely necessary for national safety. I question the fairness of any plan which seizes one man's property, even at fair compensation, in order to give it to another man for a commercial purpose. This argument has been reviewed before. If we plan to provide for ownership, we shall have to set up standards, court practice, etc., and frankly I fear that the Authority may become liable to large payments if valuations are made by national courts against the International Authority. Having seen what has happened in Washington from pressure groups, I don't want to further the activities of such groups. In the background of all this argument, of course, is my belief that if war uses are prevented, there isn't any possible use for the metal now in sight.

There were two other points, outside of our ten-point memorandum, which were discussed. One was the matter of personal responsibility as set up in the Nuremberg trials. Mr. Byrnes' view is that there is now in being adequate international law to cover the matter of personal responsibility for acts of war. He sees no reason to make that as a special point of our program, though he sees no objection to a mention of it. The discussion as to modifying National Constitutions wasn't pressed to any conclusion.

Mr. Byrnes placed great emphasis upon the desirability of a Treaty, and I placed great emphasis upon a good, effective Treaty. He emphasizes agreement more than I do, because he thinks that the making of agreements gets people into a right frame of mind which will insure the maintenance of the Treaty relationships.

We reviewed at some length the warning given and our concern over the over-selling of the denaturing plan, and we thought it would be helpful to argue for the penalty provisions even if we failed to get them, because the country would see that in our opinion the Treaty wasn't as good as we would like. I mentioned the situation in which we would find ourselves before the Senate when the confirmation question arises, because at the same time we would not be able to press unreservedly for ratification. We would, in effect, be saying:—This is not as good as we wanted. It is as good as we can get. The Treaty does afford some protection, but the protection ranges from say three months to a year after the plan is in operation and assuming that it works up to our hopes. There, first, is the problem of the interim period during which we rely upon the incapacity of the world to produce a bomb within say five years. We will then be back to reliance upon the Treaty, with such faith as we have in its being lived up to. In order to avoid emphasizing the dangers, we should point out our belief that at the time of any discovered evasion, we would still probably have a head start over other nations because of our body of scientists, our experience, our industrial capacity, etc.

This morning, June 1, Mr. Byrnes telephoned me and we went over our conversation of last evening with reference to the difficulties between my 10 points and the Acheson memorandum, Mr. Byrnes' statement to the President about the minor points of difference, my pointing out that the contents were entirely different, and Mr. Byrnes picking out of our conversation our general approval of the Acheson Report. He asked me to give him a memorandum which would point out the differences, with his purpose to give the memorandum to the President so that the President would be informed and would not make any slip or possibly be misled through Mr. Byrnes' emphasis upon the minor points of difference, which could be reconciled.

We had planned to see Dean Acheson at 12:30 on Saturday, June 1st, and I arranged that if we didn't find the time, I would cancel that engagement.

Mr. Byrnes told us he does not approve of the Acheson plan for reestablishing the Scientific Committee under the State Department. This was referred to in our memorandum.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by Mr. John M. Hancock of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission to the Secretary of State

[WASHINGTON,] June 1, 1946.

With reference to our telephone conversation this morning concerning the points of difference between Mr. Acheson's draft of May 31st and my memorandum of policies for discussion of May 30th,⁶² I think there's one substantial point of difference in the matter of ownership of the uranium ore in the ground as contemplated by Mr. Acheson and what I have chosen to call dominion or control short of ownership. I think ownership by the Atomic Development Authority should be permissive in its own decisions, but that the Authority should not be required to own all uranium in the ground. The reasons for it were discussed last night, and I would be glad to summarize my views if that seems desirable. I do not believe Mr. Acheson has made an adequate treatment of the problem of ownership with reference to mines producing uranium as a by-product.

⁶² The May 31 Acheson draft is a slightly revised version of the memorandum by the Board of Consultants to Mr. Baruch of May 19 which is printed on p. 790. The Hancock memorandum of May 30 is not printed; for a summary of its substance, see Hewlett and Anderson, p. 567. A redraft dated June 4 is printed infra.

It is my belief that there should be as little interference, as may be, with the economic plans and customs in the present private, corporate and state relationships in the several countries involved. I want us to attempt only as little as is necessary for national security. Each of us in our drafts emphasizes different points, depending upon judgments as to their importance.

I have taken some time to point out the beneficial results and our willingness to make them available to the world. I have tried to lay a foundation for understanding by pointing out that any international control is going to involve some surrender of jurisdiction.

Mr. Acheson does not include in his memorandum the penalty provision which has been so much discussed. I understand it is agreed that this matter will be included in the statement of United States policy.

The essence of our suggestions regarding penalties is that this may be a way of getting around the veto. There isn't any use in blinking that fact. Otherwise, penalty for violation will not be immediate and certain. One can only speculate about the deterrent effect of our penalty provisions.

I think I rely a little more than Mr. Acheson upon the terms of licenses which could, if properly authorized, be well within the framework of administrative law. I see every reason to set up specific provisions as to licenses, rather than to refer the problem to this Atomic Development Authority for its decision.

I doubt that I have the same reliance upon the denaturing process which seems to be the background of the Acheson Report. I also believe that there is more uranium and thorium ore in the world than any probable demands to serve peaceful purposes. I question whether America has not oversold the possibilities of commercial power plants operating under private control. This whole problem is going to become a matter of judgment on a changing set of facts. As of today, I would want such plants operated under the Authority.

Should certain conditions be met, the best we get is an advance warning of from three months to a year—not a year or more as Mr. Acheson states—assuming a forcing nation had the will to create an atomic bomb. That is not enough time to marshal public opinion for a declaration of war by this country.

I treat with the point that any National Authority should be under the direction of the International Authority.

As to the virtue of operation versus policing, I don't go as far as Mr. Acheson. I agree with his principle. I differ in the extent of its application. Of course, I am not proposing a mere policing organization.

If it can be done smoothly without creating a break in the negotiations, I think we should try to find out early what each nation has in the way of information about its uranium and thorium deposits and, that likewise, if a survey can be arranged for we might determine additional unknown resources and test the willingness of the world to accede to "complete access—free ingress and egress" for the purpose of detecting violations of the Treaty. We agree that this is not a matter of present statement of policy. In either event, it will be an essential of the Treaty and the only question is whether it is wise to take it up earlier so as to know what the raw material situation is, as it may affect the negotiation of the Treaty.

Other differences would be found on critical examination with a little more time available, but I think this memorandum summarizes the high-lights. Our differences are largely matters of choice of subjects, of manner of procedure, of taste in expression, and of emphasis except in the matters of ownership and penalties.

I understand that I am to redraft my 10-point program for submission to you at an early date.

As a matter entirely outside the two memoranda, I have mentioned the importance of the military aspects of any Treaty and the need of working closely with the military authorities to complete any plan involving national security as much as this plan does. For this reason I think clearance of the policy statements with the military is important. Shall we undertake this or will you?

As another matter outside the two memoranda, Mr. Baruch wishes the President's approval for his writing to the Chiefs of Staff for their views upon their ability to get ready for war in the event we receive only ninety days advance notice—or even a year's notice—of a substantial violation of the Treaty. The second point of such an inquiry would relate to the effect on military planning if the Treaty should set up a plan for retaliation or penalty in the event any foreign nation were to commit any of the serious offenses set up in the Treaty as equivalent to an act of war. If this is approved by the President, may I be so advised?

JOHN M. HANCOCK

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Draft Statement Prepared by Mr. John M. Hancock of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission*⁶³

[WASHINGTON,] June 4, 1946.

STATEMENT OF UNITED STATES POLICY

The proposals in this paper, put forth as a basis of discussion, grow out of three basic conclusions:

1. It is believed that an international agreement leaving the development of atomic energy in national hands, subject to an obligation not to develop atomic energy for war purposes and relying solely on an international inspection system to detect evasions, will not provide adequate security and indeed may be a source of insecurity.

2. It is believed

(a) That a treaty merely outlawing possession or use of the atomic bomb would not be an effective fulfillment of the directions under which the Commission is to proceed; therefore, that an international atomic development authority be set up, with adequate powers:

(b) That in addition to the greatest safeguards which can be established through a competent international authority in this field, there should be immediate and certain penalties for certain defined crimes which the Commission should set up as a part of its plan; and

(c) That penalties of as serious a nature as the nations may wish and as immediate and certain in their operation as possible, be set up for such acts as

- (1) Use or possession of an atomic bomb, or possession or separation of atomic material suitable for use in an atomic bomb;
- (2) The seizure of an international authority plant;
- (3) Construction of a plant for building atomic bombs;
- (4) The creation or operation of dangerous projects in a manner contrary to or in the absence of a license to be granted by the international control body. Other offenses with other procedures and penalties will doubtless be a part of a control plan.

(d) It will be obvious that this necessarily involves an agreement for the disposal of all bombs and atomic material suitable for use in an atomic bomb.

(e) That the plan might also include a statement as to the employment of biological warfare and provide appropriate penalties therefor.

3. It is further believed that the aim of preventing atomic warfare can only be achieved by entrusting to an international organization

(a) Managerial control of all atomic energy activities intrinsically dangerous to world security;

⁶³ This document is a revision of Mr. Hancock's statement of May 30, p. 811, in view of the discussions between Byrnes and Baruch and their assistants on May 30 and 31 (Department of State Atomic Energy Files).

(b) Power to control, inspect, and license all other activities and stages.

If an international agency is given sole responsibility for the dangerous activities, leaving the non-dangerous open to nations and their citizens and if the international agency is given and carries forward affirmative development responsibility, furthering among other things the beneficial uses of atomic energy and enabling itself to comprehend and therefore detect the misuse of atomic energy, these afford the best prospect of security.

For purposes of discussion, the following measures are proposed as representing the fundamental features of a plan which would give effect to the conclusions just stated. In this paper the proposed international agency is referred to as the Atomic Development Authority.

1. General—The Atomic Development Authority should seek to set up a thorough plan of control through various forms of ownership, dominion, licenses, operation, inspection, research and management by competent personnel.

It is believed that the plan of control in all its aspects must be adequate not only in concept—a combination of responsibility for developments as well as control—but in type of organization and in choice of personnel to guarantee the most effective control required to provide for the security of the nation. After this is provided for, there should be as little interference as may be with the economic plans and the present private corporate and state relationships in the several countries involved.

2. Raw Materials—The Atomic Development Authority when set up should have as one of its earliest purposes to bring under its complete dominion world supplies of uranium and thorium. The precise pattern of control for various types of deposits of such materials will have to depend upon the geological, mining, refining, and economic facts involved in different situations.

The Authority should conduct continuous surveys so that it will have the most complete knowledge of the world geology of uranium and thorium. The agency should also constantly investigate new methods for recovering these materials where they occur in small quantities so that as their recovery from such sources becomes practical, means of control can be devised.

It seems to be the minimum content of any plan that the international authority shall be given authority to license all production and shall be the sole buyer of any material from which uranium or thorium can be produced, sales to any other buyer being forbidden.

(a) On account of the character of the problem involved in mines where source materials may exist as by-products of other mining operations, all such operations must be carried on under license of the international authority. Such licenses should include every reasonable protective device to insure that source material of no matter how low a grade shall be handled, protected and disposed of only in accordance with the directions of the international authority. A license should permit the international authority to stop mining operations involving source materials except in keeping with the terms of such a license. It is assumed that if proper safeguards are established for the maintenance, protection and care of tailings, such materials may be permitted to accumulate when properly safeguarded. If our world demand should not require the normal output of this by-product uranium or thorium it is not our thought that the power should be given without restriction to the international authority to stop the entire mining operation.

(b) On the other hand, mines producing uranium or thorium not as a by-product of other mining operations, but operating under license from the international authority might be closed not only for violations of their licenses but also because of a surplus of production. It is conceivable, until world supplies are surveyed, that there may be situations in which the Authority should have power to require operation if the owners should decide not to operate such a mine—of course under proper provision for "fair compensation".

(c) When the Atomic Development Authority finds it advantageous to own a mine producing source materials, it may buy such a mine.

(d) In the case of every mine, there should be absolute dominion and control by the international authority over the products containing source materials.

Under this plan, when ore gets to the mine mouth, or in the case of a by-product operation, when the ore starts toward the metallurgical process for the production of uranium, it is contemplated it belong to the Atomic Development Authority and be subject to its sole control thereafter.

3. Primary Production Plants—The Atomic Development Authority should exercise complete managerial control of the production of fissionable materials. This means that it should control in all cases, and ordinarily should operate all plants producing fissionable materials in dangerous quantities and own and control the product of these plants.

4. Atomic Explosives—The Authority should be given exclusive authority to conduct research in the field of atomic explosives. Research activities in the field of atomic explosives are essential in order that the Authority may keep in the forefront of knowledge in the field of atomic energy and fulfill the objective of preventing illicit manufacture of bombs. Only by preserving its position as the best informed agency will the Authority be able to tell where the line between the intrinsically dangerous and the non-dangerous should be drawn. If it turns out at some time in the future, as a result of new discoveries, that other materials or other processes lend themselves to dangerous atomic developments, it is important that the Authority should be the first to know. At that time measures would have to be taken to extend the boundaries of safeguards.

5. Strategic Distribution of Activities and Materials—The activities entrusted exclusively to the Authority because they are intrinsically dangerous to security should be distributed throughout the world, with the approval of the Security Council. Similarly, stockpiles of raw materials and fissionable materials should not be centralized.

6. Non-Dangerous Activities—Atomic research (except in explosives), the use of reasearch reactors, the production of radioactive tracers by means of non-dangerous reactors, the use of such tracers, and to some extent the production of power should be open to nations and their citizens under reasonable licensing arrangements from the Authority. Denatured materials necessary for these activities should be furnished, under lease or other suitable arrangement by the Atomic Development Authority.

It should be an essential function of the Atomic Development Authority to promote to the fullest possible extent the peacetime benefits that can be obtained from the use of atomic energy. In the field of pure science, the radiations and radioactive isotopes, produced as a consequence of atomic fission, are already being used in this country, though the supply is not yet adequate, for fundamental researches in physics and biology. In the field of applied science, these same radiations and isotopes will become available for medical and industrial utilization. And in the field of engineering, it can be regarded as quite possible that atomic energy will in the course of years provide an important supplement to other methods of power production for the national economy of all countries.

It is necessary at all times to take advantage of the opportunity for promoting decentralized and diversified national and private developments and of avoiding unnecessary concentration of functions in the Authority. It should, therefore, be a primary function of the Authority to encourage developments by nations and private enterprise in the broad field of non-dangerous activities.

7. Definition of Dangerous and Non-Dangerous Activities—The Atomic Development Authority should have power to decide what activities relating to atomic energy are dangerous or non-dangerous and to change its decisions as conditions change. Although a reasonable dividing line can be drawn between the dangerous and the non-dangerous, it is not hard and fast. Machinery should therefore be provided to assure constant examination and re-examination of the question, and to permit revision of the dividing line as changing conditions and new discoveries may require.

8. Management and Licensing—It is believed that at the proper stage in the progress contemplated in a control plan, any plant dealing with uranium or thorium after it once reaches the potential of dangerous use must be not only subject to the most rigorous and competent inspection on the part of international authority, but also that its actual operation shall be under the management, supervision, and control of the international authority. The international authority shall also have powers to license operation by others until such time as the international authority is prepared to take on the responsibilities involved in this character of operation, but with a clear understanding that the international authority will not permit any such operation if in its judgment, such operation will lessen the security of the nations.

9. Inspection Activities—By assigning intrinsically dangerous activities exclusively to management by the Atomic Development Authority, the difficulties of inspection are thereby reduced to manageable proportions. For if the Atomic Development Authority is the only agency which may lawfully conduct the dangerous activities in the field of raw materials, primary production plants, and research in explosives, then visible operation by others than the Authority will constitute a danger signal.

The plan does not contemplate any systematic or large-scale inspection procedures covering the whole of industry. The delegation of authority for making inspections will have to be carefully drawn so that the inspection may be adequate for the needs and responsibilities of the Authority and yet not go beyond this point. Many of the inspection activities of the Authority should grow out of and be incidental to its other functions. An important measure of inspection will be those associated with the tight control of raw materials, for this is one of the keystones of the plan. The continuing activities of prospecting, survey and research in relation to raw materials will be designed not only to serve the affirmative development functions of the agency but also to assure that no surreptitious operations are conducted in the raw materials field by nations or their citizens. Inspection will also occur in connection with the licensing functions of the Authority. Finally, a means should be provided to enable the international organization to make special "spot" investigations of any suspicious national or private activities.

10. Personnel—The personnel of the Atomic Development Authority should be recruited on a basis of proven competence but also so far as possible on an international basis, giving much weight to geographical and national distribution. Although the problem of recruitment of the high-quality personnel required for the top executive and technical positions will be difficult, it will certainly be far less difficult than the recruitment of the similarly high-quality personnel that would be necessary for any purely policing organization.

11. Negotiation Stage—The final step in the creation of the system of control is the spelling out, in comprehensive terms of the functions, responsibilities, authority, and limitations of the Atomic Development Authority. Once a Charter for the agency has been written, and adopted, the Authority and the system of control for which it will be responsible will require time to become fully organized and effective. The plan of control will therefore have to come into effect in successive stages. These should be specifically fixed in the Charter or means should be otherwise set forth in the Charter for transitions from one stage to another, as contemplated in the resolution of the U.N. Assembly which created this Commission.

12. Disclosures—In the deliberations of the United Nations Commission on Atomic Energy, the United States must be prepared to make available the information essential to a reasonable understanding of the proposals which it advocates. Further disclosures must be dependent, in the interests of all, upon the effective ratification of this treaty. If and when the Authority is actually created, the United States must then also be prepared to make available other information essential to that organization for the performance of its functions. And as the successive stages of international control are reached, the United States must further be prepared to yield, to the extent required by each stage, national control of activities in this field to the international agency.

It should require a still longer time to produce enough atomic bombs to have an important influence on the outcome of war. Thus all the nations of the world should receive well in advance of the possible time of attack by atomic weapons clear, simple, and unequivocal danger signals that would enable them to prepare all measures of protection that would be available—an opportunity which would be wholly lost to them in the event of surprise attack. This warning in time should bring into operation the plan for the “immediate and certain penalties”. Our working together here should help build a broad confidence among the peoples of the world and the plan which emerges from our work should still further advance this confidence.

As the plan goes into operation and continues, it can, moreover, create deterrents to the initiation of schemes of aggression, and it can establish patterns of cooperation among nations, the extension of which may even contribute to the solution of the problem of war itself.

14. International Control—There will be questions about the extent of control allowed to national bodies, should an international body be established and in this respect, it is believed that any control by an atomic energy authority set up by any state should be subordinate to direction and absolute dominion on the part of the international authority. It will readily be seen at this time that this is not an endorsement or disapproval of the creation of national authorities, or a definition of their jurisdiction. This problem will be before the Commission and it should deal with a clear separation of duties and responsibilities of such state authorities if such are included in any plan, with the purpose of preventing possible conflicts of jurisdiction.

Department of State Disarmament Files ⁶⁴

Memorandum Prepared in the Division of International Security Affairs

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] June 5, 1946.

SWNCC/MS UNO Doc. 28

REGULATION OF ARMAMENTS

U.S. COMMITMENTS UNDER THE UNITED NATIONS AS GUIDANCE TO FORMULATION OF A PROGRAM ⁶⁵

PROBLEM

1. To set forth U.S. commitments under the Charter of the United Nations as guidance in formulating a United States program for the regulation of armaments.

⁶⁴ Lot 58D133, a consolidated lot file in the Department of State containing documentation on armaments, regulation of armaments, and disarmament, 1943-1960.

⁶⁵ This paper was prepared in response to the request by the Joint Chiefs of Staff contained in SWNCC 240/D, December 28, 1945; for text, see the attachment to Johnson's memorandum to Hiss, February 25, 1946, p. 755. The present paper was submitted to the Policy Committee on Arms and Armaments at its 2nd Meeting, June 5; with respect to the establishment and functions of PCA, see footnote 72, p. 840. The present paper was intended for eventual transmittal to the Ad Hoc Committee to Effect Collaboration between the State, War, and Navy Departments on Security Functions of the United Nations, where it was to serve as the basis for discussion in determining a United States position. PCA Chairman Hilldring appointed a Sub-committee on the Regulation of Armaments to consider the present paper. The Sub-committee's preliminary report, PCA D-5/5, not printed, was submitted to PCA at its 26th Meeting, December 6, 1946. The report consisted of a list in outline form, "Topics to Be Considered in Connection with the Formulation of Specific United States Proposals for the Regulation of Armaments." PCA took no decision on PCA D-5/5 in 1946, nor did the Ad Hoc Committee actually undertake the formalization of a United States position. (Department of State Disarmament Files)

2. To recommend procedures by which the United Nations can meet its responsibilities in respect to the regulation of armaments.

FACTS BEARING ON THE PROBLEM AND DISCUSSION

(See Enclosure "A")⁶⁶

CONCLUSIONS

3. The United States and other permanent members of the Security Council have an obligation under the Charter to participate in the Security Council in the formulation of plans for the regulation of armaments in such manner that peace is maintained with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources, to the end that the Purposes and Principles of the Charter are upheld, and to the end that armaments are not a deterrent to the stability and well-being of members.

4. Under the Charter, the permanent members of the Security Council have not only equality of status before international law in all respects possessed by states by virtue of being sovereign but also have equality of special responsibility with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security. A logical development of this principle would be for these members to have a practical equivalence in readily available armaments. (For definition of armaments, see page 3 of Enclosure "A".) This would discourage aggression by any one or any two of the five in combination and would thus enhance the chances of lasting peace.

5. In achieving this practical equivalence, emphasis should be placed on reducing the readily available armaments of the more powerfully armed of the permanent members, the United States and the Soviet Union, rather than on augmenting the forces of the others.

6. A United States policy of shipping arms to other permanent members of the Security Council should be judged in the light of the principle of equivalence and should be consistent with the Charter obligations to reduce the total burden of armaments as far as possible.

⁶⁶ Not printed. It contains the following sections: Charter provisions pertaining to the regulation of Armaments, positions taken at Dumbarton Oaks on regulation of armaments, definition of terms, military obligations of permanent members of the Security Council under the Charter, military obligations under the Charter of other members of the United Nations, other Charter obligations affecting regulation of armaments, weighing military and other obligations of United States under the Charter, the necessity for adjusting the readily available armaments of the permanent members in line with Charter obligations, U.S. armaments policy with respect to other permanent members of the United Nations, urgent problems of regulation, present status of problems, and procedure

7. While the medium and small powers have military obligations under Article 43 of the Charter, these will not be great. However, it is evident that in addition to any contingents or other contributions which such governments may make available to the Security Council, these governments will, as in the case of the great powers, require additional forces for self-defense and the maintenance of internal order.

8. The Security Council should provide appropriate machinery for handling matters relating to the regulation of armaments. This machinery, however, should be supplemented by conversations, bilateral or otherwise, between the United States and other permanent members.

RECOMMENDATIONS

9. That the conclusions in paragraphs 3 through 8 be approved.

10. That the following program for further development of this Government's position be adopted :

A. The development through SWNCC of a statement of general principles in extension of paragraphs 4 and 5 of these conclusions.

B. The discussion of these general principles with the other permanent members as soon as possible after the completion of A.

C. The development concurrently with A of a paper in response to SWNCC 240/D containing the outline of a general plan for the regulation of armaments, including the traffic in arms. The general plan as outlined would embody the principles emerging from the study scheduled under A.

D. Upon the completion of A, B and C, or sooner if the question of the regulation of armaments is raised in the United Nations, the making of a recommendation that the Security Council establish a committee on the regulation of armaments to consider and report to the Council on all matters referred to it.

E. The introduction in the Committee on the Regulation of Armaments the positions outlined in A and C.

11. That the United States Representatives on the Security Council and Atomic Energy Commission be informed that the United States considers :

A. That the Commission for the Control of Atomic Energy should seek as a matter of highest priority a plan for the prevention of the use of atomic energy for destructive purposes.

B. That the consideration of major weapons adaptable to mass destruction other than atomic weapons should not be permitted to delay the formulation of the plan indicated in A above.

12. That the Department of State be requested to implement paragraph 11 above.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by the Under Secretary of State (Acheson) to the Secretary of State

[WASHINGTON,] June 6, 1946.

Comments on "Statement of United States Policy" (John M. Hancock Draft June 4, 1946)⁶⁷

It is assumed that this Statement, if approved by the President, is designed to serve as the instructions to the United States Representative, and that Mr. Baruch's opening speech to the United Nations Commission would be based upon it. Study of the draft suggests the following comments:

A. The provisions of 2(b) and 2(c), pages 1 and 2, propose a system of penalties for violations of the control plan. As indicated by 2(e) the violations in question are of such a serious character that if committed by a major power they would result in complete collapse of the plan.

The treaty establishing the control plan would of course have to contain comprehensive provisions covering the grave crisis that would occur in the event the plan collapsed. But for reasons which have been described in discussions with Mr. Baruch and Mr. Hancock, it is believed that the proposed system of penalties does not represent a realistic or effective approach to the problem.

B. Paragraph 2(e), page 2, is concerned with the possibility of covering biological warfare in the plan and penalty system. As to the penalties, the same comment applies as in A above.

C. Paragraph number 2, pages 3 to 6, deals with Raw Materials control. This paragraph is in substantial conflict with the corresponding provisions of the memorandum of May 31, 1946 "Proposed Statement of United States Policy", which was discussed with the President (copy attached)⁶⁸ and with the Report on International Control of Atomic Energy which was the basis of the memorandum of May 31.

The effort made in the draft of June 4 to leave major production activities relating to uranium and thorium in private or national hands would nullify one of the keystones of the Report on International Control of Atomic Energy. It is believed that the memorandum of May 31 indicates the maximum degree of flexibility that can safely be suggested in a general statement of position on Raw Materials. The draft of June 4 goes very much further and in so doing opens the door to an insistence by other nations on national or private operation of mines under inspection arrangements which the United States could never accept as adequate for security.

⁶⁷ The June 4 Hancock draft is printed on p. 827. On the basis of the comments contained in the present document, Messrs. Acheson and Marks completed revision of the June 4 Hancock statement on June 6. The document presented to and approved by President Truman on the following day (post, p. 846) was identical with the Acheson-Marks revision with two exceptions. In paragraph 2b of the final statement, the word "penalties" replaced the word "procedure" in the Acheson-Marks draft. Secondly, paragraph 7a of the final statement had not appeared in the draft. (Department of State Atomic Energy Files)

⁶⁸ Not printed.

D. Paragraph number 4, page 6, "Atomic Explosives", is similar to the corresponding paragraph of the memorandum of May 31 except for the omission of the sentence, "When the plan is fully in operation there would be no stockpiles of atomic bombs anywhere in the world, either in national or international hands." Possibly the same thought was intended in paragraph 2(d), page 2, June 4 draft, and in that case the omission in question could be supplied by merely making paragraph 2(d) somewhat more explicit.

E. Paragraph number 5, page 6, "Strategic Distribution of Activities and Materials", is phrased somewhat differently from the corresponding provision of the May 31 memorandum. It is not clear whether the change was intended to alter the substance of the earlier paper. Specifically, the suggestion in this paragraph of the June 4 draft that intrinsically dangerous activities should be distributed throughout the world with the approval of the Security Council has serious implications which it is believed require further consideration before the United States position becomes fixed.

F. Paragraph 7, page 8, "Definition of Dangerous and Non-Dangerous Activities", proposes that the Atomic Development Authority should have power to decide what activities relating to atomic energy are dangerous or non-dangerous and to change its decisions as conditions change. Within limits, the Authority should have this power but the problem is so complicated that it is believed the initial United States position should be left more fluid (Compare Report on International Control of Atomic Energy, G.P.O. edition, page 46). Omission of the first sentence in this paragraph would be helpful on this point.

G. Paragraph 8, page 8, is headed "Management and Licensing". The purpose and effect of this provision is not clearly understood.

H. It is assumed that paragraph 12, page 10, "Disclosures", would not foreclose the plan of procedure outlined in pages 2-4 of Mr. Marks' memorandum of May 30 (copy attached).⁶⁹

I. It is not clear whether the first full paragraph on page 11 relates to protection against surprise attack during the transition period or is intended to cover both the transition and the period of full operation. The paragraph seems to require clarification.

⁶⁹ Ante, p. 806.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Memorandum by the United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch) to President Truman*⁷⁰

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] June 6, 1946.

I have no other purpose than to serve. My presence here is, first, to get from you my instructions as to major policy and, second, to decide with your help and JFB's, whether I am the best instrument of carrying out your policy.

Frankly, I believe that the only possible issue that can arise is as to how far this country wants to go in the declaration of policy. I have been immersed in this for almost two months now, with greater intentness than in any other work that I have assumed. I am deeply convinced that any expression which falls short of bringing a sense of security and a sense of truth to the public would be a gigantic error.

In fact, I have convinced myself that this is the only course I can follow with justice to the job. It may not be the best from the standpoint of the country—on that I shall not presume to judge—but I know it is the best from the standpoint of my serviceability.

That policy is to set a goal for which we should strive. Necessarily it must be inclusive of a statement of regulations, controls, and above all, punishment or sanctions. In this last lies the essential difference between the Acheson-Lilienthal Report and my own position.

There is no difference between the Acheson Report and my own view, except this:

I want to go further than the text of that document, while the authors are content with its limitations. Those limitations I regard as dangerously restrictive. Quite apart from the fact that no punishment is provided or indicated for violators of the regulations, it is admitted that we would only have from 3 months to a year in the way of warning, and as time goes on and as the art and science of the bomb improve, that factor of safety will be diminished.

I give you this high light, relating to the Acheson-Lilienthal Report, because of my unrest at a disposition I have observed, to take that document as our basic policy and to have further policy grow out of committee meetings and negotiations.

If you will permit me to say so, I doubt that that is the proper method. It may be the best course to pursue in the ordinary processes of diplomacy but, as I see this question, it is one that strikes to the very heart of public thinking and feeling and, therefore, you and this country should be the first to proclaim an intention of reaching not merely a basis of negotiations but a formula of a secure peace.

⁷⁰ Mr. Baruch prepared this memorandum for his meeting with the President and the Secretary of State on June 7. At that meeting, the President signed it as an indication of general approval. (Hewlett and Anderson, p. 574)

There are two courses open to us:

1. To . . .⁷¹ these people and express the hopes of finding a solution to the problem, as laid down by the terms of reference, in the statement of Messrs. Truman, Attlee and King, and at the Moscow Conference, and which has been laid down by Mr. Byrnes on many occasions. "Here is the Acheson Report which we give you as an approach to the subject and, as has been indicated by some, there will be developed in the discussions and negotiations an understanding and a meeting of minds that will bring results."

2. The other course is to state the necessity of the Atomic Development Authority, of an international organization, outlining it not in complete detail but so that it can be grasped with its control of raw materials up to the final use of atomic energy. And further bringing to the attention of the American people the short-comings so as not to have their hopes or that of the world raised, and showing the necessity of adding enforcement to the engagements entered into by the nations. At this time I must bring to your attention that denaturing, which has raised the hopes of the people, has been overplayed in the Acheson plan. At the same time I want to tell you that our secrets are not as secret as we think they are.

Let me make plain to you, Mr. President, that I think the Acheson Report is a very good document within very sharp limitations. I do not believe that it represents a plan on which you can stand, but it is an important plank in that platform. And incidentally, may I add, that I have a very high opinion of the Under Secretary personally.

In saying to you that I regard penalization as being the sine qua non of our policy, I am quite aware of the fact that it may bring us athwart of the veto power, for this particular purpose, since it might require war as an ultimate penalization. If so, then either the penalty must be dropped or the structure of the United Nations must be changed or this is a separate body functioning outside of the provisions of the United Nations Charter.

I cannot, at the moment, supply an outline of the mechanism whereby punishment is to come, but that might be developed in the course of negotiations, if there were true intent on the part of all the nations to eliminate the atomic bomb—eventually to eliminate war—and eventually to abolish the use of other instrumentalities of destruction with the eventual purpose of eliminating war.

⁷¹ Word or words omitted in the source text.

Department of State Disarmament Files

*Memorandum Prepared in the Central Secretariat of the Policy Committee on Arms and Armaments*⁷²

TOP SECRET
PCA D-5

[WASHINGTON,] June 7, 1946.

ARMS CONTROL POLICY AND PROBLEMS

GENERAL POSITION

The Department does not have an explicit general policy on arms control. The President and the Secretary of State have publicly endorsed the principle of limiting world armament by international agreement; and this country is committed to the use of procedures for the regulation of armaments such as those found in Articles 11 and 47 of the United Nations Charter. The Department's representative has presented to SWNCC the view that plans for the regulation of arms traffic by the United Nations Organization fall within the jurisdiction of the Security Council, acting with the advice and assistance of the Military Staff Committee, and that its discussions should not be limited to private traffic in arms (see SWNCC 219 series).⁷³

PRESENT POLICY

Policy has been formulated on such points as:

⁷² The Secretary of State established the Policy Committee on Arms and Armaments by a directive dated May 20, 1946, and circulated as document PCA D-1, May 27. The directive designated Assistant Secretary for Occupied Areas John H. Hildring Chairman of the Committee. The Chairman of PCA, also Department of State Representative on the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee, was responsible for the coordination of Department of State policy with respect to all matters concerning arms and armaments. The membership of PCA included representatives of the Assistant Secretary for Economic Affairs, the geographic offices, the Office of Special Political Affairs, and the Office of Controls. With the establishment of PCA, the Armaments Working Committee, the Arms Policy Committee, and the Working Committee on Arms Control were abolished. PCA first met on May 31. The Committee's minutes, numbered documents, and other papers are located in the consolidated disarmament lot file.

The present memorandum was considered by PCA at its 3rd Meeting, June 12. Various questions discussed in the document were referred to competent sub-committees for study.

For documentation on general United States policy on the question of military assistance to foreign governments, see pp. 1110-1196 passim.

For documentation on United States policy with respect to military assistance to specific areas of the world or individual nations, see regional and bilateral compilations elsewhere in the Foreign Relations series.

⁷³ See documents SWNCC 219/4, January 15, and SWNCC 219/5D, January 18, pp. 730 and 731, respectively.

1. The disarmament and demilitarization of Germany (SC-106,⁷⁴ SC-107,⁷⁵ the Potsdam Communiqué);
2. The disarmament and demilitarization of Japan (SWNCC 70/10⁷⁶ and the publication, 22 Sept 45, of the U.S. Initial Post-Surrender Policy Document for Japan);⁷⁷
3. The limitation of military establishments for Italy and the principal satellite states to what is necessary to maintain order and protect borders (Secretary's statement in Press Conference, 12 Feb 46; a document [SWNCC 244 series]^{77a} on the treaties of peace with Rumania, Bulgaria and Hungary is before SWNCC);⁷⁸
4. The prevention of shipments of military equipment and capital equipment for arms manufacture to Argentina, and the attempt to secure the cooperation of the United Kingdom and Sweden in this policy (Secret Summary of Developments for 16, 18 Jan 46,⁷⁹ the Working Committee on Arms Control⁸⁰ and the Staff Committee have considered documents on this);
5. The refusal to sell military equipment of any kind to Spain (Secret Summary of Developments, 3 Jan 46,⁸¹ Public Statement, 29 Jan 46);⁸²
6. The reduction to a minimum of plans for military assistance to China (SWNCC 83/16, approved on 10 Jan 46);⁸¹
7. The restriction of the use of United States surplus military-type equipment for arming other nations to those special cases where specific commitments exist (Secretary's Staff Committee, 5 Feb 46);⁸⁴
8. The reduction to a minimum of the supply of arms and military equipment to the other American republics under the Arms Standardization Program, and the Department's recommendation of a full review of the Arms Standardization Program particularly in view of its possible effect on international efforts to control arms traffic (Secretary's Staff Committee, 12 Jan 46);
9. The rigid limitation of disclosures of classified military information to foreign governments and their nationals (Armaments Committee Document approved by the Coordinating Committee 17 Oct 45 and by SWNCC 206/9, 21 Jan 46);⁸¹

⁷⁴ "SC" is the designation of documents circulated in the Secretary of State's Staff Committee; for information on that body, see footnote 15, p. 1118. SC-106 consists of the directive to the Commander-in-Chief of United States forces of occupation regarding the military government of Germany, April 26, 1945, the Acting Secretary of State's memorandum of March 23, 1945, on which the above directive was based, and the Acting Secretary of State's memorandum of April 26, 1945, transmitting the directive to the President for his approval; for texts, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. III, pp. 484, 471, and 483, respectively.

⁷⁵ Comments of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on the April 26, 1945, directive cited in footnote 74 above; for text, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. III, p. 509.

⁷⁶ September 10, 1945, not printed.

⁷⁷ Department of State Bulletin, September 23, 1945, pp. 423-427.

^{77a} Brackets appear in the source text.

⁷⁸ SWNCC 244, June 5, 1946, not printed.

⁷⁹ None printed.

⁸⁰ A predecessor of the Policy Committee on Arms and Armaments in the Department of State.

⁸¹ Not printed.

⁸² Department of State Bulletin, February 10, 1946, p. 218.

⁸⁴ See the Summary of Action of the 184th Meeting of the Secretary of State's Staff Committee, February 5, 1946, p. 1141.

10. The creation of the Atomic Energy Commission, as part of a program to seek world agreement on means for preventing the destructive use of atomic energy (Joint US-UK Declaration 15 Nov 45 and the terms of reference of the Atomic Energy Commission).⁸⁶

POLICY PROBLEMS

Policy problems relating to arms control which are now facing the Department can be divided into two groups: (a) those arising directly from the liquidation of the war; and (b) those emerging in the post-war world.

LIQUIDATION OF THE WAR

The first includes the disarmament and industrial demilitarization of former enemy states and the disposal of captured matériel and Allied surplus military equipment. The principal remaining problems in this area for which no clear policy has been developed are:

1. The size of military establishments to be allowed to Italy and the satellite powers;
2. Final questions on the de-industrialization of Germany, particularly the disposition of the Ruhr and Rhineland; and
3. The possibility that another Allied power might seek to dispose of surplus military equipment to some third state, especially in Latin America.

LIMITATION OF ARMS

The second group of policy problems includes: (a) the limitation and concerted reduction of military establishments throughout the world; and (b) the control of future international arms traffic. On the question of arms limitation, our existing policy is extremely general and leaves most of the specific problems to be decided. The Department should formulate its position on such questions as:

1. Whether we should take the lead in an effort to achieve international arms limitation;
2. The extent of multilateral disarmament which we should be prepared to propose, support or accept;
3. The relation of our announced general policy of favoring disarmament to existing programs for military assistance to certain other states (especially China, France and Turkey);
4. The relation of our national security program to the same overall policy objective (See SC-169b, Action of Joint Chiefs of Staff Statement of United States Military Policy);⁸⁷ and
5. The military use of atomic energy.

CONTROL OF ARMS TRAFFIC

At present there is no stated policy on the control of international arms traffic; but recommendations for an interim agreement on arms

⁸⁶ Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 1504, or 60 Stat. (pt. 2), 1479.

⁸⁷ Post, p. 1123.

traffic are pending before the Working Committee on Arms Control, and the Department has referred our policy of military cooperation with the other American republics to SWNCC for thorough review. The whole problem of control of arms traffic is particularly acute for this country because the chief market for such trade is in Latin America. Specific problems to be dealt with in the near future are:

1. The interim agreement on arms traffic;
2. The relation of our military assistance program for Latin America to our general policy objectives;
3. The practicality of closing the Latin American market by other means than the program for the standardization of Latin American arms on American models.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by the United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee to the Joint Chiefs of Staff

TOP SECRET

[NEW YORK,] 7 June 1946.

USMS 334 CCAE

Subject: Visit to Office of Mr. Bernard Baruch.

1. At 1030 hours on 6 June

General Kenney⁸⁸
 Admiral Turner⁸⁹
 Lt. General Ridgway⁹⁰
 Rear Admiral Ballentine⁹¹
 Colonel Gilmer⁹²

called at the Office of the Chairman of the U.S. Atomic Control Commission⁹³ on the 64th floor of the Empire State Building.

2. The members of the Atomic Control Commission present were:

Mr. Bernard Baruch, Chairman
 Dr. Richard C. Tolman, Scientist
 Mr. Ferdinand Eberstadt, Adviser
 Mr. Fred Searls, Jr., Adviser
 Mr. John Parks Davis, Executive [Officer]

3. No representatives of the State Department were present.

⁸⁸ Gen. George C. Kenney, United States Representative on the Military Staff Committee.

⁸⁹ Adm. Richmond K. Turner, United States Representative on the Military Staff Committee.

⁹⁰ Lt. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, United States Representative on the Military Staff Committee.

⁹¹ Rear Adm. J. J. Ballentine, Member of the United States Delegation to the Military Staff Committee.

⁹² Col. Dan Gilmer, Adviser, United States Delegation to the Military Staff Committee.

⁹³ The organization under reference is the United States Delegation to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission.

4. It was explained to Mr. Baruch that the US MSC Representatives had made the visit in order to become acquainted and to offer assistance.

5. Mr. Baruch indicated that he had taken the job but that a clear piece of paper had not been given him; that there were many reservations already indicated such as the Acheson Report, the personal thoughts of President Truman, those of Mr. King (Canada), and those of Mr. Attlee (Great Britain). He mentioned also that Mr. Stassen⁹⁴ and a Mr. Woodward of Oxford University had propounded certain theories on this subject.

6. The matter of a treaty was discussed in considerable detail. Mention was made that such treaty would cause a profound change on our entire governmental structure, the power of Congress and also the government structure of all nations as well.

7. Mr. Baruch stated that he was struck by General Arnold's⁹⁵ exposition on a series of bases around the world. Here he mentioned that our methods of offense and defense would be changed drastically now that we have to deal with the atomic bomb.

8. Mention was made by Mr. Searls of the possibility of establishing bases of strategic readiness with stock piles of four to six bombs at specific locations over the world; that base commanders could have sealed orders. It was pointed out (1) that with different nationalities under the security force it would be difficult to expect them to participate against their own countries, and (2) that the United States would not desire to have foreign powers near the United States with atomic bombs at their disposal to drop on us without notice.

9. Mr. Baruch said, "It will be too late, if something is not done by prior agreement outside the Security Council on such happenings. The need is so great that we must re-examine every possibility for an international authority. If it can't be done the whole argument (for an international Atomic Authority) is no good."

10. Mr. Baruch stated that he proposed to be very frank with the President on this matter; that he felt "dreadfully hobbled."

11. Mr. Baruch felt that the military should be warned on the great implications of the atomic matter and that he would like to get the J.C.S. answer "before the President approves the proposal."

12. The following statement was made by Mr. Eberstadt: "Can we do anything worth while or is what ever we do worthless." He felt that the elimination of bombs was not in itself important.

13. General Kenney pointed out the difficulties we were having in the MSC; that the J.C.S. of no nation agree; that the policies must stem from the politicians before the military can operate.

⁹⁴ Harold E. Stassen, former Governor of Minnesota; Member, United States Delegation to the San Francisco Conference, 1945.

⁹⁵ General of the Army Henry H. Arnold, Commanding General, Army Air Forces, 1942-March 1946.

14. Mr. Baruch stated that he did not want to offer anything that the Army or the Navy does not consider feasible; that the safety factor of from three months to one year, now estimated by the scientists under a strict method of inspection, would diminish rapidly.

15. Mr. Baruch stated that a warning by itself was not "worth a damn."

16. Mention was made that General Groves had "consented to the Acheson Report."

17. Mr. Baruch stated that if Atomic Control could not be made an international matter that it (a treaty) would not be worth "ten cents"; that if we did have international control that it would mean "an immediate and drastic transformation of our form of government."

18. Mr. Eberstadt offered three possibilities:

a. Effective world control of war (counter-part of our own Federal Government).

b. Warning approach implemented by prompt action.

c. Warning approach without prompt action.

19. There was considerable discussion of these three approaches. Some felt that if the bomb was eliminated war would be eliminated.

20. Admiral Turner stated as a personal opinion that he believed it would be impossible to obtain agreement at present on an over-all sovereign world government having an International Army constantly ready, and believed any such proposal would involve a very prolonged debate. He felt that about all that should now be proposed (and referred to world action on Chemical Warfare for an analogy) would be an agreement to:

a. Seek renunciation by all nations of the use of atomic energy in warfare, except in retaliation for the improper use of atomic bombs.

b. Agreement among all nations to accept international supervision of atomic energy, approximately along the lines of the Acheson Report.

c. Confine to the Big Five alone punitive action in case anyone violates agreement. Such punitive action would be taken after "consultation" among the Big Five.

d. It would be necessary also to agree that the veto power would be relinquished in deciding on such action.

21. It was made quite clear to the Baruch group that:

a. We in the MSC were discussing these matters among ourselves, but cannot give effective advice without going to the J.C.S. We, of course, cannot discuss this matter with representatives of the other nations until so instructed by the J.C.S. (Mr. Searls has gained the impression that nothing is being done.)

b. General Ridgway gave his personal opinion (and General Kenney and Admiral Turner concurred) that of course there should be a penalty clause—sanctions for violations of agreements.

c. General Ridgway made it clear that military men agree that a plan is needed, however improbable we think the success of it might be. That as far as we know to date no such plan exists.

d. General Ridgway made it clear to the Baruch group that “we withhold nothing” from them.

The meeting ended at 1220 hours.

DENYS W. KNOLL
Secretary

501.BC Atomic/6-746

*Memorandum by President Truman to the United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch)*⁹⁶

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, June 7, 1946.

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. BARUCH: Because you requested it I herewith attach a statement of the United States policy with reference to atomic energy. This statement is solely for your guidance in your deliberations as the Representative of the United States on the Atomic Energy Commission of the United Nations.

The statement is general in character because I want you to have authority to exercise your judgment as to the method by which the stated objectives can be accomplished.

If as negotiations progress you conclude that there should be changes in this statement of policy, I will expect you to advise me and to frankly give me your views.

I know that you will keep me advised as to the negotiations. However, I want you to know that I am relying upon you to exercise your own discretion in those negotiations, subject only to the general statement of policy attached, unless you should receive from me through the Secretary of State a further statement of policy.

HARRY S. TRUMAN

[Annex]

June 7, 1946.

STATEMENT OF UNITED STATES POLICY⁹⁷

The proposals in this paper, put forth as a basis of discussion, grow out of three basic conclusions:

⁹⁶ The President approved the enclosure in the presence of Mr. Baruch and Secretary Byrnes on June 7. He dictated the covering memorandum to formalize his approval. (Hewlett and Anderson, p. 574)

⁹⁷ In the source text, the President's initials appear opposite most paragraphs.

1. It is believed that an international agreement leaving the development of atomic energy in national hands, subject to an obligation not to develop atomic energy for war purposes and relying solely on an international inspection system to detect evasions, will not provide adequate security and indeed may be a source of insecurity.

2. It is believed

(a) That a treaty merely outlawing possession or use of the atomic bomb would not be an effective fulfillment of the directions under which the Commission is to proceed; therefore, that an international atomic development authority be set up, with adequate powers;

(b) That in connection with the greatest safeguards which can be established through a competent international authority in this field, there should be a clear statement of the consequences of violations of the system of control, including definitions of the acts which would constitute such violations and the penalties and concerted action which would follow such violations;

(c) That one of the objectives of the plan should be that when the system of control is fully in operation there would be no stockpiles of bombs in existence;

(d) That the plan might also include a parallel statement as to a system of control for biological warfare.⁹⁸

3. It is further believed that the aim of preventing atomic warfare can only be achieved by entrusting to an international organization

(a) Managerial control of all atomic energy activities intrinsically dangerous to world security;

(b) Power to control, inspect, and license all other activities and stages.

If an international agency is given sole responsibility for the dangerous activities, leaving the non-dangerous open to nations and their citizens and if the international agency is given and carries forward affirmative development responsibility, furthering among other things the beneficial uses of atomic energy and enabling itself to comprehend and therefore detect the misuse of atomic energy, these afford the best prospect of security.

For purposes of discussion, the following measures are proposed as representing the fundamental features of a plan which would give effect to the conclusions just stated. In this paper the proposed international agency is referred to as the Atomic Development Authority.

1. General—The Atomic Development Authority should seek to set up a thorough plan of control through various forms of ownership, dominion, licenses, operation, inspection, research and management by competent personnel.

It is believed that the plan of control in all its aspects must be adequate not only in concept—a combination of responsibility for developments as well as control—but in type of organization and in choice of personnel to guarantee the most effective control required to provide for the security of the nations.

⁹⁸ Opposite this sub-paragraph, the President placed a check mark rather than his initials.

2. Raw Materials—The Atomic Development Authority when set up should have as one of its earliest purposes to bring under its complete dominion world supplies of uranium and thorium. The precise pattern of control for various types of deposits of such materials will have to depend upon the geological, mining, refining, and economic facts involved in different situations.

The Authority should conduct continuous surveys so that it will have the most complete knowledge of the world geology of uranium and thorium. The agency should also constantly investigate new methods for recovering these materials where they occur in small quantities so that as their recovery from such sources becomes practical, means of control can be devised.

3. Primary Production Plants—The Atomic Development Authority should exercise complete managerial control of the production of fissionable materials. This means that it should control and operate all plants producing fissionable materials in dangerous quantities and own and control the product of these plants.

4. Atomic Explosives—The Authority should be given exclusive authority to conduct research in the field of atomic explosives. Research activities in the field of atomic explosives are essential in order that the Authority may keep in the forefront of knowledge in the field of atomic energy and fulfill the objective of preventing illicit manufacture of bombs. Only by preserving its position as the best informed agency will the Authority be able to tell where the line between the intrinsically dangerous and the non-dangerous should be drawn. If it turns out at some time in the future, as a result of new discoveries, that other materials or other processes lend themselves to dangerous atomic developments, it is important that the Authority should be the first to know. At that time measures would have to be taken to extend the boundaries of safeguards.

5. Strategic Distribution of Activities and Materials—The activities entrusted exclusively to the Authority because they are intrinsically dangerous to security should be distributed throughout the world. Similarly, stockpiles of raw materials and fissionable materials should not be centralized.

6. Non-Dangerous Activities—Atomic research (except in explosives), the use of research reactors, the production of radioactive tracers by means of non-dangerous reactors, the use of such tracers, and to some extent the production of power should be open to nations and their citizens under reasonable licensing arrangements from the Authority. Denatured materials necessary for these activities should be furnished, under lease or other suitable arrangement by the Atomic Development Authority.

It should be an essential function of the Atomic Development Authority to promote to the fullest possible extent the peace-time benefits that can be obtained from the use of atomic energy.

It is necessary at all times to take advantage of the opportunity for promoting decentralized and diversified national and private developments and of avoiding unnecessary concentration of functions in the Authority. It should, therefore, be a primary function of the Authority to encourage developments by nations and private enterprise in the broad field of non-dangerous activities.

7. Definition of Dangerous and Non-Dangerous Activities—Although a reasonable dividing line can be drawn between the dangerous and the non-dangerous, it is not hard and fast. Machinery should, therefore, be provided to assure constant examination and re-examination of the question, and to permit revision of the dividing line as changing conditions and new discoveries may require.

7(a) Any plant dealing with uranium or thorium after it once reaches the potential of dangerous use must be not only subject to the most rigorous and competent inspection by the international Authority, but its actual operation shall be under the management, supervision and control of the international Authority.

8. Inspection Activities—By assigning intrinsically dangerous activities exclusively to management by the Atomic Development Authority, the difficulties of inspection are thereby reduced to manageable proportions. For if the Atomic Development Authority is the only agency which may lawfully conduct the dangerous activities in the field of raw materials, primary production plants, and research in explosives, then visible operation by others than the Authority will constitute a danger signal.

The plan does not contemplate any systematic or large-scale inspection procedures covering the whole of industry. The delegation of authority for making inspections will have to be carefully drawn so that the inspection may be adequate for the needs and responsibilities of the Authority and yet not go beyond this point. Many of the inspection activities of the Authority should grow out of and be incidental to its other functions. An important measure of inspection will be those associated with the tight control of raw materials, for this is one of the keystones of the plan. The continuing activities of prospecting, survey and research in relation to raw materials will be designed not only to serve the affirmative development functions of the agency but also to assure that no surreptitious operations are conducted in the raw materials field by nations or their citizens. Inspection will also occur in connection with the licensing functions of the Authority. Finally, a means should be provided to enable the international organization to make special "spot" investigations of any suspicious national or private activities.

9. Personnel—The personnel of the Atomic Development Authority should be recruited on a basis of proven competence but also so far as possible on an international basis, giving much weight to geographical and national distribution. Although the problem of recruitment of the high-quality personnel required for the top executive and technical positions will be difficult, it will certainly be far less difficult than the recruitment of the similarly high-quality personnel that would be necessary for any purely policing organization.

10. Negotiation Stage—The first step in the creation of the system of control is the spelling out in comprehensive terms of the functions, responsibilities, authority, and limitations of the Atomic Development Authority. Once a Charter for the agency has been written, and adopted, the Authority and the system of control for which it will be responsible will require time to become fully organized and effective.⁹⁹ The plan of control will therefore have to come into effect in successive stages. These should be specifically fixed in the Charter or means should be otherwise set forth in the Charter for transitions from one stage to another, as contemplated in the resolution of the U.N. Assembly which created this Commission.

11. Disclosures—In the deliberations of the United Nations Commission on Atomic Energy, the United States must be prepared to make available the information essential to a reasonable understanding of the proposals which it advocates. Further disclosures must be dependent, in the interests of all, upon the effective ratification of this treaty. If and when the Authority is actually created, the United States must then also be prepared to make available other information essential to that organization for the performance of its functions. And as the successive stages of international control are reached, the United States must further be prepared to yield, to the extent required by each stage, national control of activities in this field to the international agency.

12. International Control—There will be questions about the extent of control allowed to national bodies, should an international body be established and in this respect, it is believed that any control by an atomic energy authority set up by any state should to the extent necessary for the effective operation of the international control system be subordinate to direction and absolute dominion on the part of the international authority. It will readily be seen at this time that this is not an endorsement or disapproval of the creation of national authorities, or a definition of their jurisdiction. This problem will be before the Commission and it should deal with a clear separation of duties and responsibilities of such state authorities if such are included in any plan, with the purpose of preventing possible conflicts of jurisdiction.¹

⁹⁹ At this point the President made the marginal comment: "most important."

HARRY S. TRUMAN

811.2423/6-846

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] June 8, 1946.

Participants: British Ambassador, Lord Inverchapel;
Canadian Ambassador, Mr. Lester B. Pearson;
Secretary Byrnes

I asked the British and Canadian Ambassadors to call at my office this morning, so that I might present to them a statement of United States policy with reference to atomic energy.

Using the President's memorandum of June 7² as a basis, I explained the plan fully and in some detail.

I told the Ambassadors that Mr. Baruch would get in touch with Sir Alexander Cadogan and General MacNaughton (Canadian representative)³ the early part of next week to discuss the plan, at which time their two representatives might wish to present their views and submit any plans which they might have as a basis for discussion.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

The Chief of Staff to the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy (Leahy) to the United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch)

WASHINGTON, 11 June 1946.

DEAR MR. BARUCH: Thank you for the compliment contained in your request for advice in the problem faced by you in obtaining a treaty that will be effective in preventing the employment of atomic bombs in war.⁴

¹ The President wrote the following above his signature: "Above general principles approved June 7, 1946."

² Supra.

³ Gen. Andrew G. L. McNaughton, Canadian Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission.

I realize that the difficulties before you must appear almost insurmountable and I believe that from a military point of view and in the interest of the National Defense of the United States, the only practicable line of approach is to endeavor to obtain from the United Nations an agreement that the employment of atomic bombs in war is outlawed except when authorized by a majority vote of the Security Council in retaliation for an unlawful use of atomic bombs.

Acceptance by the United Nations of the use of atomic bombs in retaliation when authorized by a majority vote of the Security Council involves a repeal of the "veto" provision of the United Nations Charter on this one particular problem.

Difficulty in obtaining agreement on such a repeal is foreseen. It is my belief that the most aggressive nations that can now be foreseen would hesitate long before becoming outlaws under such a world statute as the charter of the United Nations by the use of atomic bombs in war with a practically certain retaliation in kind by a majority of the United Nations of the world.

The present advantage held by the English speaking world through possession of atomic bombs should be advantageous in negotiating with our former enemies treaties that are designed to preserve world peace.

It therefore appears apparent that the United States should not enter into a treaty that would limit our possibilities of producing atomic bombs until:

1. Treaties of peace with our former enemies are ratified by the Allied Nations.
2. Effective and workable methods of inspection and control of manufacture are developed, tested, and found effective.

The only promising means of creating in the minds of all men a desire to comply with such a treaty is through fear of punishment for its violation.

Automatic and certain punishment for violation of the treaty must be within the authority of a majority vote of the Security Council.

I do not know of any short cut to the elimination of war that appears to be an intermittent acute disease with which the human animal has been afflicted since his appearance upon the earth.

⁴Mr. Baruch had solicited the views of Generals Eisenhower, Spaatz, MacArthur, and McNarney, and Admirals Leahy, Nimitz, and King in letters of May 24. He had requested suggestions on not only international control of atomic energy, but also as to how war itself could be outlawed. The Baruch letters and replies from those mentioned above with the exception of General MacArthur exist in the Department of State Atomic Energy Files. The United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission received additional military guidance in the form of a memorandum by General Groves dated January 2, 1946, "Our Army of the Future—As Influenced by Atomic Weapons," which General Groves transmitted to Mr. Hancock on June 10; for text, see p. 1197.

Widespread education in the material advantages of peace, illustrations of the horrors of war, convincing assurances that net losses in war are shared by the victor and the vanquished and that there can be no profit to anybody in an international war spread to all people of all nations by every possible means of modern methods of communication, and with world approval through the United Nations, might incline even the "have not" peoples toward our desire to keep the peace between nations and induce those people that already have more than their just share to meticulously avoid interfering with the governments of other nations.

I realize fully that these brief observations of mine based on military considerations of the national defense of the United States, which is my principal interest, will be of very little assistance to you in the solution of your most difficult problem, but they are the best reply that I can make to your inquiries.

With expressions of high regard, I remain always

Most sincerely,

WILLIAM D. LEAHY

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

The Chief of Naval Operations (Nimitz) to the United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch)

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, 11 June 1946.

DEAR MR. BARUCH: I will attempt to give you briefly my views concerning the atomic bomb. The fundamental objective is to outlaw the bomb and prevent its use.

The only course which now appears to offer real prospect of reaching the objective is through a program which by stages will attain international control of the mining and reduction of uranium and thorium ores, the distribution of the metals, and the production and use of fissionable matter together with completely effective international inspection to assure compliance with the control agreement. This program, to be fully effective, should ultimately include a prohibition against the possession of atomic bombs by any individual nation.

The United States is now in a position of advantage with respect to the atomic bomb. We should exploit that advantage to assist in the early establishment of a satisfactory peace and should relinquish it no more rapidly than is justified by the proven development of agreed controls. It will be desirable for international agreements concerning the atomic bomb to follow the European peace treaties and definitely to precede the time when other countries could have atomic bombs.

No plan of peacetime control will surely prevent the use of atomic weapons in a prolonged war. However, a plan which prevents the possession of atomic bombs by individual nations will prevent their use in a surprise attack.

The problem of punishment for violations of a treaty concerning atomic warfare is difficult. I have grave misgivings about the effectiveness of any international agreement to take concerted action, and I urge that no program be adopted which places major reliance on one. I feel that despite the sincerity with which all parties might enter into any such agreement, the formation of blocs or coalitions, particularly around powerful nations, will impair or destroy the will and power to carry it out.

I do not believe that the people of this country are prepared now to enter into an agreement for automatic punishment of other nations for acts which do not directly concern the United States. In other words, the people of the United States will in fact insist on the power of their elected representatives to veto the deliberate entry of the United States into war. I do believe that after it became known that another nation was violating the treaty and preparing to use atomic weapons, the people of the United States could then be induced to take action.

The ideal way to outlaw the bomb would be to outlaw war itself. In my opinion, it will not be possible to outlaw war or to dispense with armaments in our time. It will probably be possible to outlaw atomic bombs long before we could succeed in outlawing war. The method may be to make the penalties attendant on its use greatly outweigh the potential advantages.

I can offer no formula for surely preventing wars. The likelihood of war can be reduced only by eliminating conditions which breed wars. The likelihood of defeat in war can be reduced by keeping our own country sufficiently strong to make the eventual penalties of attacking us severe, obvious, and certain.

Very sincerely yours,

C. W. NIMITZ,
Fleet Admiral, U. S. Navy

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

The Chief of Staff of the United States Army (Eisenhower) to the United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch)

SECRET

WASHINGTON, 14 June 1946.

DEAR MR. BARUCH: The Joint Chiefs of Staff have agreed that their views on the complex questions raised in your letters of 24 May 1946 can best be dealt with individually. My personal views follow.

General. I completely agree with you that only through effective international control of atomic energy can we hope to prevent atomic war. Arriving at the methods for such control is, of course, the difficult task. The national security requires that those methods be tested and proven before the U.S. can enter any international agreement limiting the production or use of atomic bombs.

Approach to the Problem. The procedures outlined in the Acheson report appear to offer the most practicable initial steps towards international control, provided that in the step by step accomplishment of those procedures, the U.S. does not recede from its position of advantage faster than realistic and practical reciprocal concessions are made by other powerful nations. We must not further unbalance against us world power relationships.

Inspection, the First Step. An essential primary step is to establish, and prove in operation, a system of free and complete inspection. We must satisfy ourselves of complete good faith on the part of the other great powers; their past and current policies are not altogether reassuring. In this connection, as I understand present atomic energy production techniques, no system of inspection can be expected to guarantee completely against the construction of some atomic bombs.

Preventive Measures. For the present, I am sure you agree that there must be force behind any system for preventing aggression. There must exist for deterrent purposes, provisions for retaliation in the event other control and prevention devices should fail. Further, the sanctions employed against a willful aggressor by law-abiding nations can be no less effective in character than the weapons the aggressor nation is capable of using. To my mind, this means, for the present, that to prevent the use of atomic weapons there must exist the capability of employing atomic weapons against the recalcitrant.

Decisive Weapons in War. Biological, chemical, and other as yet unforeseen weapons may prove no less effective than the atomic bomb, and even less susceptible to control. Another major war may see the use of such destructive weapons, however horrible, including the atomic bomb. The problem of controlling, and finally preventing, the use of atomic bombs (and other decisive weapons) thus becomes the problem of preventing war itself.

The Dilemma. If we enter too hurriedly into an international agreement to abolish all atomic weapons, we may find ourselves in the position of having no restraining means in the world capable of effective action if a great power violates the agreement. Such a power might, in fact, deliberately avoid the use of atomic weapons and embark on aggression with other equally decisive weapons. If, on the other hand, we enter into agreements providing for the maintenance of atomic weapons under international control, we face extraordinary difficulties. First, in providing adequate control and inspection systems and second, the possibility that the national leaders of a totalitarian state, possessing a supply of the weapons, might choose to strike first rather than to compromise. This dilemma, unless other approaches to a solution come to hand, must be solved before we should proceed to any treaty, abolishing atomic weapons.

Fundamental National Interest. The U.S. should be party to no control treaty which militates against our vital security interests. I have touched upon aspects of this scarcely debatable point. However, the fundamental interest and security of the American people is bound up with a solution to the problem you face. We can yield much, even certain points of our sovereignty, to reach this solution. Whether our people could be brought to see this necessity at present is a question. There will exist practical difficulties in keying up the American people to accept even the necessity for immediate preventive military action with conventional weapons in case an aggressor violates measures for inspection and control. Historically, in the face of threats of unmistakable import and seriousness, our practice has been to indulge in wishful thinking rather than to undertake decisive action.

To summarize:

a. The existence of the atomic bomb in our hands is a deterrent, in fact, to aggression in the world. We cannot at this time limit our capability to produce or use this weapon.

b. We must move, by steps, toward international control of atomic energy if we are to avoid an atomic war. The Acheson report is a practicable suggestion for an approach to such control. A first step is to prove a system of inspection.

c. Atomic weapons are only a part of the problem. There will be other equally terrible weapons of mass destruction. The whole problem must be solved concurrently with the problem of controlling atomic energy. To control atomic weapons, in which field we are preeminent, without provision for equally adequate control of other weapons of mass destruction can seriously endanger our national security.

I will continue to consider this problem and will communicate to you any ideas which might assist your difficult decisions.

Sincerely,

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

[At the First Meeting of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission at Hunter College, The Bronx, New York, June 14, Mr. Baruch presented the United States proposal for the international control of atomic energy. The U.S. plan provided for the creation of an international Atomic Development Authority to which all phases of atomic energy development and control were to be entrusted. For the text of Mr. Baruch's statement, see United Nations, Official Records of the Atomic Energy Commission, First Year, Plenary Meetings (hereafter cited as AEC (I), Plenary), pages 4-14 or Department of State Bulletin, June 23, 1946, pages 1057-1062. A complete set of the records of the AEC and its committees and subcommittees is located in the files of the Office of International Organization Affairs, Department of State. For an account of negotiations in the AEC in 1946, see Hewlett and Anderson, pages 576-619.]

501.BC Atomic/6-2746

Memorandum by the Chief of the Division of Eastern European Affairs (Thompson) to the Deputy Director of the Office of European Affairs (Hickerson)

[WASHINGTON,] June 27, 1946.

Ambassador Smith's view as reported in his telegram 2013, June 27 [26],⁵ that basic issue in the atomic control question is that of inspection is certainly correct. If his proposal that we state we are prepared to discuss regulation and control of all weapons of war would in fact recapture moral ascendancy for us and re-emphasize the basic issue of inspection, then it might be worth trying. I feel obliged to point out, however, that such a move might have the opposite effect and obscure the issue.

So far as the Soviet Union is concerned, I fear that they would interpret such a move as indicating that our basic motive in our atomic control proposal is to break down the present "closed shop" system upon which the Soviet Union operates. Also, by getting involved in a discussion of this wider field of control, they may be able to detract attention from the essential matter of atomic control. The Russians are probably not concerned about our basic military establishment as they will always tend to maintain a larger standing army than our own.

LLEWELLYN E. THOMPSON

⁵ Telegram 2013 is printed in vol. VI, p. 766. Ambassador Smith feared that Gromyko's remarks at the 2nd Meeting of the Atomic Energy Commission, June 19, had had the effect of seizing the initiative for the Soviet Union. The Soviet Representative had proposed an international convention prohibiting the production, possession, and use of atomic weapons. The Soviet proposal made no provision for international control of atomic energy, inspection, or penalties in the event of violation. For the text of Gromyko's statement, see AEC (I) Plenary, pp. 23-30, or Department of State, Documents on Disarmament 1945-1959, vol. I, pp. 17-24. The Ambassador suggested that the United States recapture leadership by re-emphasizing the issue of inspection and stating the willingness of the United States to discuss the regulation and control of all weapons.

501.BC Atomic/6-2746

Memorandum by Mr. James E. Doyle, Assistant to the Counselor (Cohen), to the Under Secretary of State (Acheson) ⁷

[WASHINGTON,] June 27, 1946.

I think the most important thing by far is that the current negotiations on the UN Atomic Energy Commission should be held strictly to exploring the nature of the problem of the control of atomic energy. This means that the discussions should be directed to the functions of an international authority on atomic energy. It seems to me unwise even to branch out to the enforcement problem now, and clearly unwise to branch out from atomic energy to the entire field of disarmament.

SPA's views on the telegram (through Mr. Blaisdell) are that the USSR has not in fact seized the moral leadership, that inspection is probably not the "basic issue" presently, that the USSR has not grasped the initiative, that the United States may not desire to agree to "unhindered inspection of military establishments and means of production", and that the Embassy in Moscow may be unable to evaluate more than "the one vital factor" to which it refers.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

The Acting Secretary of State to the United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch)

WASHINGTON, July 1, 1946.

DEAR MR. BARUCH: In my memorandum to you of June 26⁸ I replied to that portion of your letter of June 23⁸ which concerned the dissemination of your opening statement before the Atomic Energy Commission and the reaction to it abroad. You may be sure that we are doing and shall continue to do everything we can to give your statement the widest circulation throughout the world.

I have delayed answering the other points in your letter until I could talk to the President about them. While I was awaiting that opportunity, a telegram on this subject arrived from Ambassador Smith in Moscow. I am attaching to this letter a copy of the telegram.

When I saw the President, we discussed your letter and Ambassador Smith's telegram.⁹ The President's desire, and he expressed it very clearly, is that the efforts of the Atomic Energy Commission not be diverted by the Soviet or by anyone from the task of devising practical and specific measures for the international control of atomic energy. He feels that for us to raise the question of general disarmament would be to distract attention from the task at hand and to confuse the public mind about the nature of our proposals.

⁷ The source text bears the following handwritten addition by Mr. Doyle: "This refers to Moscow's 2013 of June 27, 1946."

⁸ Not printed.

⁹ The discussion occurred on June 27.

As he told you in his letter,¹⁰ the President believes that you are off to a fine start. He does not share Ambassador Smith's opinion that the Soviet has seized the initiative and feels, on the contrary, that through your efforts the United States has the initiative and shall keep it. The best way to maintain the initiative, the best way to achieve some tangible progress in the negotiations, and the best way to discover whether the others genuinely desire to get on with the work, he thinks, is to confine the discussions as closely as possible to the stubborn and real difficulties connected with the control of atomic energy.

I explained to the President your general plan of procedure for the immediate future, as I have understood it from my conversations with you and Mr. Eberstadt and Mr. Evatt.¹¹ I told him that you did not contemplate further general discussions and that you and your staff were working with Mr. Fahy¹² on an outline of the specific topics or subjects raised by your proposal. I explained your hope that as these topics are thrashed out in the Commission it will become possible to start drafting on specific points. The President considers this a very intelligent plan and feels that it promises the greatest chance for success.

I am sure that you will find Mr. Fahy and his associates very helpful. Whenever you feel that the Department can be of assistance in any way, I hope that you will let me know.

Sincerely yours,

DEAN ACHESON

¹⁰ President Truman had written Baruch on June 27 expressing support. That communication is quoted in Joseph I. Lieberman, The Scorpion and the Tarantula: The Struggle to Control Atomic Weapons 1945-1949 (Boston, Houghton Mifflin Company, 1970), p. 316. In his memoirs, Baruch quotes a letter he addressed to President Truman on July 2 summarizing the differences between the United States and Soviet positions and recommending that the United States should remain firm on its position (Bernard M. Baruch, The Public Years, New York, Holt, Rinehart, and Winston, 1960, p. 373). In a letter to Baruch dated July 10, the President agreed that "we should stand pat on our program." (Baruch, p. 374; Lieberman, p. 327)

¹¹ Herbert V. Evatt, Australian Minister of External Affairs; Representative on the Security Council and Atomic Energy Commission (Chairman at 2nd, 3rd, and 4th Meetings).

¹² Mr. Fahy, the Department's Legal Adviser, had been instructed to have a draft treaty for the control of atomic energy prepared in his office. Henry G. Ingraham, Special Assistant to Mr. Fahy, had been detailed to Mr. Baruch's office. (Department of State Atomic Energy Files)

501.BC Atomic/7-946

The United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch) to the Under Secretary of State (Acheson)

NEW YORK, July 9, 1946.

MY DEAR MR. ACHESON: Referring to your letter of July 1st, as to the dissemination of the atomic energy statement, that can best be done by sending copies of the full text to the embassies. General Smith would have had a different idea if he had gotten the full text and not the garbled report prepared for their own purposes in Pravda. I presume that General Smith will, by this time, have received a copy of the full report.

You misunderstood my reference to disarmament. It wasn't that I wanted to raise the point but to say that a wide opening had been left if there was anybody considering that matter. Everyone discussing atomic energy or other weapons of mass destruction says that elimination and outlawing of war are the only answer. But, as the President and you say, that is not my task. My associates and myself have gone ahead with ours as expeditiously and unremittingly as possible.

I wish there was some way of saying to the Australian Government how helpful Evatt has been, especially in his understanding of the matter and of his driving it forward.

I understand there is to be a meeting of the National Committee for Civilian Control of Atomic Energy, at which the Secretary of the Lilienthal Board of Consultants, by the name of Carroll Wilson, is to speak and, also, Secretary Wallace.¹³ I hope they understand that the statement delivered by me to the Atomic Energy Commission is the proposal of our Government, the President and the Secretary of State and is not to be considered the Baruch proposal. Word might be sent to them in order that men representing the Government should not be taking a position contrary to the American position.

I know you are being kept posted as to what is going on.

Sincerely yours,

BERNARD M. BARUCH

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Mr. George F. Kennan to the Under Secretary of State (Acheson)

[WASHINGTON,] July 18, 1946.

MR. ACHESON: The demands of my new job with the War College have forced me to study a good deal of the basic material on the problem of the international control of atomic energy.

¹³ Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Commerce.

To clarify my own thoughts on the position of the USSR with relation to this subject, I have written them out in the form of a few questions and answers.

I thought you might find these of interest, and attach a copy.

I am off for a speaking tour in the far west, and will be back in the end of August.

GEORGE KENNAN

[Enclosure]

THE SOVIET POSITION WITH RESPECT TO INTERNATIONAL CONTROL OF ATOMIC ENERGY
(As of July, 1946)

1. Original Effect on the Russians of our Development of Atomic Weapons.

Q. Has our monopoly of atomic weapons made the Russians more hostile towards us?

A. No. To the Soviet leaders all forces are considered hostile which they cannot control, quite regardless of the weapons these forces may possess. We were viewed as an inimical element before we developed atomic energy. We continue to be viewed as an inimical element today. Thus, atomic energy has changed nothing in the basic attitude and objectives of the Soviet Union with respect to us.

Q. Did our monopoly of atomic weapons have any effect on the behavior of the Russians and their attitude toward us?

A. Yes. It upset their previous estimate of the military-political potential of the Soviet Union in the immediate post-war period. It caused them to revise this estimate basically. It forced them to modify their internal economic and their foreign political plans. For these reasons, it has caused them intense vexation and irritation.

Q. Has it made them more suspicious of our actions?

A. Probably it has; but principally in the sense that it has given a welcome set of opportunities to those elements within the Soviet system who have reason to fear improved relations between Russia and the west and who lose no chance to cast suspicion deliberately on the actions of the United States. Presumably, these elements have not been slow to interpret as threats of atomic retaliation any instances of American firmness in the face of Soviet demands and in this way to fan the existing bitterness over our possession of atomic weapons. It must not be forgotten that the men in the Kremlin, who would themselves never hesitate to use atomic energy as a means of extortion if they themselves had the exclusive possession of it, would be particularly loathe to believe that we could really withstand the temptation to do this.

2. Background of the present Soviet Proposals.

Q. What is the predominant motive of the proposals which Gromyko has advanced in the U.N. Atomic Energy Commission?

A. The predominant motive is a desire to turn the tables on us and to produce a situation in which the Soviet Union, rather than the United States, would be the sole power able to use atomic energy in war.

Q. How does this jibe with the Soviet proposal that existing stocks of atomic bombs be destroyed and that further production and storing of the weapons be prohibited?

A. This proposal is designed primarily to effect the earliest possible disarming of the United States with respect to atomic weapons. Once that disarming had been achieved, the Soviet Government would feel itself in a far stronger position to put forward its further desiderata in connection with the international control of atomic energy.

Q. But would not the Soviet Union then likewise be inhibited from developing atomic weapons?

A. Not at all. In making this proposal, the Russians are counting on the American conscience and on the merciless spot-light of free information and publicity in the United States, supplemented by the vigilance of the communist fifth-column, to guarantee the faithful fulfillments of such obligations on our part. At the same time, they are counting no less confidently on their own security controls to enable them to proceed undisturbed with the development of atomic weapons in secrecy within the Soviet Union. If their proposal were to be accepted, they could thus look forward with confidence to the day when the democratic powers, caught in their traditional respect for solemn international engagements and in the overriding power of public opinion, would be stripped of atomic weapons where as Russia, having been secretly developing them behind the scenes, would be their sole possessor.

Q. But the Russians have implicitly acknowledged the desirability of some scheme of control. Do they not fear that this would hamper them in secretly developing atomic energy?

A. No. They do not fear this. They feel that if they could once get the weapon formally abolished they could easily prevent the maturing of any international agreement which could seriously hamper the clandestine development of atomic weapons in the Soviet Union. Furthermore, they know that their internal controls are so elaborate that they would have good facilities for evading any ordinary international control system. They are well aware that the only really effective type of control would be that which we have proposed: namely the entrusting to an international atomic development authority of all phases of the development and use of atomic energy, starting with the raw material. Once they were able to get agreement to the abolition of atomic weapons as such, they could oppose the establishment of such an authority, as being illogical and unnecessary. Hence, their time-table, and particularly the emphasis on the early destruction of existing stocks.

Q. Is this not direct bad faith on the Soviet side?

A. To the communist mind, all words are relative. Once in possession of the bomb, Russia could confidently risk an outbreak of war between the Soviet Union and the western powers. In modern wars, all holds are fair; and once hostilities were in progress the sudden revelation that Russia had the bomb could be exploited propagandistically as a demonstration of the wisdom and foresight of Soviet leadership, which had once more outsmarted the capitalist world and foiled its most evil designs. It should be remembered that a state propaganda machine would find no difficulty in producing evidence to indicate that western nations, too, had been ratting on their obligations not to produce atomic weapons and that Russia had been saved only by the vigilance and decision of the Kremlin.

3. The Soviet Reaction to our Plan.

Q. What is the basic Soviet objection to our plan?

A. The basic objection is that our plan provides no loophole through which the Soviet Union could itself achieve monopolistic possession of the atomic weapon.

Q. Are there other objections as well?

A. Yes. Our plan implies a breaching of the security controls which exist in Russia and which are anchored in the selfish interests of the all-powerful secret police. It further implies a certain derogation of the absolute and unlimited power which the Soviet leaders now exercise over economic processes and property relationships within the Soviet Union. Finally, it implies the participation of foreign elements in scientific work conducted within the Soviet Union, thus introducing foreign influence into Soviet science and providing opportunities for the satisfaction of foreign scientific curiosity.

Q. Why are the Russians so averse to the limitation of the veto power in the case of atomic energy?

A. Partly because they see in it an attack on the veto power in the Security Council as well as on the principle of the veto in general. But also because they have every intention to proceed independently with the development of atomic weapons, regardless of any engagements they may have entered into, and do not want any international agreement outstanding which could penalize them if there should be undesirable revelations. In this sense, it is precisely the penalties for the preliminary evasions of restrictions on atomic weapon production which worry them most and where they are most concerned for the preservation of the veto power.

4. Chances for obtaining Soviet acquiescence to our Plan.

Q. Is it then useless to hope that the Soviet Government can be brought to accept our plan, in its general outlines?

A. No—not if it can be proved to them that not only is there no possibility of their actually attaining monopolistic possession of the weapon, but that the further pursuit of it may even prove actually dangerous to the security of their state.

Q. By what arguments can this be proved to them?

A. There are no arguments by which this could be proved to them. It can be proved to them only by facts. They will not be amenable to any presentation of ideas on our part.

Q. By what set of facts could they then be influenced?

A. By the policies we ourselves adopt with relation to our own defense and our collective arrangements with other nations. If we follow a resolute policy of preparing for all eventualities: if, while carefully continuing to press for full international agreement, and holding the door open for such agreement, we quietly and vigorously proceed to develop the U.S. capacity to absorb atomic attack and to effect instant retaliation; if we adapt our armed forces to the demands of atomic warfare and effect intelligent dispersal and “compartmentation” of essential services within our own country; if we do not hesitate, in the absence of Soviet agreement, to enter into international agreements with other countries for the joint development of atomic energy as far as this is consistent with our own security; if in this way we make it evident to the Soviet Government that the idea of using atomic weapons against this country is a dangerous pipe dream that has little prospect of successful realization and might well lead to the atomic isolation rather than the atomic superiority of the Soviet Union—then there is a possibility that we might eventually maneuver Moscow into a grudging acceptance of the main points of our program.

Q. Could such a change of front on Russia’s part be a whole-hearted one which would mean clear sailing in the future for an eventual atomic energy development authority?

A. No. Unfortunately, the execution of Russia’s participation in any such a scheme would encounter deep-seated inhibitions in the nature of Soviet society and powerful elements within the Soviet Union would try at every turn to sabotage the efficacy of the authority, as far as the Soviet Union is concerned. Soviet acceptance of our proposals would mean only the beginning, not the end, of our difficulties; and we would have to fight a long and practically constant battle to achieve a real and successful functioning of the authority within the Soviet Union itself. For this reason, we would have to maintain at all times some instruments of pressure, through which we could present the Soviet Government with some sort of ugly and undesirable alternatives, in the events that Soviet collaboration in the execution of the agreements should prove unsatisfactory.

501.BC Atomic/7-2446

Mr. John M. Hancock of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission to the Secretary of State

NEW YORK, July 24, 1946.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In keeping with my promise on the phone a few minutes ago, I am inclosing three documents: ¹⁴ one, the tentative outline of items for Committee No. 2 as presented at the meeting today; two, a copy of the record of Mr. Gromyko's speech; ¹⁵ three, the copy of the press release given by the Press Division.

There wasn't anything unexpected in the speech and there wasn't any new problem presented by it. This speech had been in the making for some time and I think Mr. Gromyko felt that he was being thwarted in his desire to make it. When the question arose today about his right to comment upon our #3 Memorandum, ¹⁶ I advocated that we depart from the strict terms of the Agenda because his desire was quite well inside of the first item on the Agenda, which was then in tentative form and is now undergoing a minor textual revision.¹⁷

As to the tentative agenda, Mr. Gromyko's four points were that the agenda did not cover these points: First, the prohibition of production of atomic weapons. (My reply was that I had no objection to any sharpening of the words but that I was willing to have the idea embodied in more specific terms. It already is included in the ¹⁴ The enclosures are not printed here.

¹⁵ At the 3rd Meeting of the Atomic Energy Commission, June 25, a Working Committee (Committee 1) consisting of one representative of each member of the Commission, was appointed. The Working Committee agreed to establish Committee 2 at its 2nd Meeting, July 12; the new body was directed to concern itself with the basic issue of international control. Regarding the development of the Commission's committee system in June and July, and negotiations during that period, see Hewlett and Anderson, pp. 584-590.

For the text of the summary record of the 2nd Meeting of Committee 2, July 24, during which Gromyko delivered the address cited here, see United Nations, Official Records of the Atomic Energy Commission, First Year, Special Supplement, Report to the Security Council (1946), pp. 114-120 (hereafter cited as AEC, I, Special Suppl.)

¹⁶ In elaboration of its proposal of June 14, the United States Delegation submitted three memoranda to the Commission (July 2, July 5, and July 12); for texts, see AEC, I, Special Suppl., pp. 92-102, and 106-111, or Documents on Disarmament 1945-1959, vol. I, pp. 25-42.

¹⁷ Mr. Hancock represented the United States on Committee 2.

first two (I and II) broad classifications.); Second, the destruction of bombs. (My comment was that that was included in I, in specific terms in the expression "elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons" and in IA in the word "storing."); Third, punishment by nations. (I pointed out that that was covered by our V on the Agenda in which we referred to enforcement agencies, actions by national governments, etc.); Fourth, definitive action and more definitive terms used as to the exchange of scientific and technical information. (I reminded him that this had already been specifically assigned to the Scientific and Technical Committee.)¹⁸

I don't want to show an impatience over the delay on purely procedural matters, but it is very irksome. I haven't wanted to argue about committee set-ups. I think the present attempt to split the problem into beneficial uses and dangerous uses by assignment to separate committees is unrealistic. The uses are safe up to the point that somebody decides to convert them into a dangerous use—as you so well know. The attempt to handle these problems as if they were separable will finally result in a merger, and finally the Working Committee will handle all policy matters. There seems to be a desire to handle policy matters as if they were unrelated to the scientific and legal aspects. People will have to learn that this is a problem in the whole, that one can view any problem from several aspects but one cannot insulate many bits of this problem until there is a general understanding of both the scientific and legal aspects and the reasons for the kind of control involved in our plan.

We are not going to fight for conducive votes on these matters. We have arranged to go along, develop points of agreement, ascertain points of disagreement without bringing the latter to a vote, and hope that in the orderly process of education, we will bring all to the same conclusion we have ourselves reached. I don't like to use this expression educational process because it might give the impression that we think we are the only educated ones. After the session was over today, I talked to Mr. Gromyko, told him we would have an answer for his observations—all of which we appreciated—when we came to the problems in the order set forth in the tentative Agenda. His objections, you will note, are not keyed to the order of points for study, nor did they contain any matter of substance.

¹⁸ Committee 3, the Scientific and Technical Committee, had been appointed at the 2nd Meeting of the Working Committee, July 12, to arrange the exchange of information and explore the peaceful uses of atomic energy. Committee 3 first met on July 19. Information submitted by the United States Delegation is contained in the following Department of State Publications: The International Control of Atomic Energy; Scientific Information Transmitted to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, June 14, 1946–October 14, 1946 (Washington, n.d.) and December 15, 1946 (Washington, 1947).

There was a curious misunderstanding during the meeting. The Chairman¹⁹ had proposed that the Agenda be modified and brought up at our fourth meeting a week from today. I deferred moderately to a week's delay on the procedural matters and argued that we get into the substance without waiting for a week for agreement upon the precise wording of the Agenda. The French alone were a little hesitant about pushing too fast but the French Delegate²⁰ had not been in touch with developments of the past three weeks. He made some reference of desiring to hear from his home government, but in a subsequent talk with his right-hand man, Lacoste,²¹ I think I cleared up that point with him.

Going back to my talk with Gromyko, he is willing to meet in Committee No. 2 every day and he plans to be actively interested in going ahead with the very long Agenda which might well occupy the Committee for some months.

I think this is all in accordance with your desires and while it is not a complete review of the day's events, it does cover the things at the top of my mind and those which would normally arise in the mind of anyone who might see the afternoon papers. We had a press conference this afternoon at 5:00 P. M., too late for the afternoon papers, and I think you will find a much saner atmosphere in the papers tomorrow.

Your Representative, Porter McKeever,²² was at the press conference and at the end of it, he was unreserved in his approval. I had emphasized that this was an explanation of Mr. Gromyko's previous document which we were glad to have, that in no respect were we surprised, that there was nothing in the nature of a crisis, and that we were going ahead with our long Agenda with the consent of all concerned. I took plenty of time to give the reporters a lot of background. I am not sure they will use it as intended but the conservative ones were very appreciative of the time I had given them. Of course, they wanted me to tell them what we were going to do next, and I had foreclosed that question in the early part of the conference by stating that I was willing to discuss history, but that at this time I was not prepared to state what we would do in the future. I did make it plain that when we took action they could expect to hear of it in normal course.²³

Very truly yours,

JOHN M. HANCOCK

¹⁹ Capt. Alvaro Alberto da Motta e Silva, Brazilian Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission.

²⁰ Alexandre Parodi, Permanent French Representative at the United Nations.

²¹ François Lacoste, Adviser, French Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission.

²² Adviser, United States Delegation to the General Assembly.

²³ The following handwritten addition by Mr. Hancock appears at the bottom of the source text: "No atomic bomb blew up here. We wanted to get their position defined a lot more and we will get it as the days go by—and in the process I hope we will get the educational process carried forward too."

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Notes of an Informal Meeting of Members of the United States, French, Canadian, and Australian Delegations to the Atomic Energy Commission, New York, July 24, 1946, 3 p. m.

CONFIDENTIAL

Present :

United States: John M. Hancock, Dr. R. C. Tolman, John P. Davis, Lincoln Gordon, Frank Lindsay and Gordon Arneson.

France: M. LaCoste.

Canada: General A. G. L. McNaughton, G. C. Lawrence and G. Ignatieff.

Australia: Ralph Harry.

MR. HANCOCK felt that Committee #2 should be allowed to wither away since it is essentially a duplicate of the Working Committee. MR. LACOSTE and GENERAL MCNAUGHTON were in full agreement with this point.

As to the Legal Committee and the Scientific and Technical Committee, MR. IGNATIEFF felt that they were primarily advisory and could operate most effectively if the chairmanship were made relatively permanent. MR. LACOSTE felt, and GENERAL MCNAUGHTON agreed, that if rotation was to be continued, then it should be among all members and not merely between two such as Gromyko had proposed.

MR. HANCOCK suggested that the question of terms of office could be left to the Committees themselves with some provisions for continuity. DR. TOLMAN thought that the chairman should hold office "at the pleasure of the committee".

GENERAL MCNAUGHTON then stated that he favored allowing Gromyko to present his proposal for a convention at the next session.

MR. DAVIS asked if Mr. Gromyko should be cross-examined on his proposal. GENERAL MCNAUGHTON felt that there was danger that the preparation of fixed questions would appear to be a gangup on the Russians. At this point MR. HARRY arrived and the plan to consolidate the Working Committee and Committee #2 was reviewed for him. MR. HARRY did not favor this consolidation and suggested instead that the Chairmen should be the same for the two Committees.

MR. GORDON, in reference to questions that might be put to Gromyko, believed that a demonstration of the inadequacy of a convention should be stressed.

GENERAL MCNAUGHTON suggested that the question should be carefully phrased with the thought in mind that the record would be sent to Moscow and that it might influence the people who call the plays there. Suggested that the past experience of the U.S.S.R. with pacts of this sort should be brought out.

MR. HARRY expressed the fear that Gromyko will try to maneuver us into a position of refusing to sign a convention. MR. HARRY believed that ultimately there should be no bombs held by the Security Council or any other organization.

GENERAL McNAUGHTON agreed.

MR. HARRY suggested that the Russians might ask for disclosure of the records of bombs produced and for the right to supervise disassembly.

MR. HANCOCK expressed agreement, at the proper time.

GENERAL McNAUGHTON suggested that we should indicate that it is not the U.S.S.R. we fear but rather some unknown government which may be developed at some time in the future.

MR. LACOSTE believes that the initiative now lay with the United States as a result of Gromyko's reply to the United States' proposals. He suggested that it was not [now?] up to the United States to state that a convention is essential, but that it is not sufficient in itself. He thought that Gromyko's first speech was written before Mr. Baruch's speech was delivered and that Gromyko's plan must be fully answered at this time in order to force new instructions for Gromyko.

MR. IGNATIEFF believed we should now concentrate on developing the questions or plans which had already been presented.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Notes on a Staff Conference of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission, New York, August 1, 1946, a. m.*²⁴

RESTRICTED

Present: Mr. Bernard M. Baruch
 Mr. John M. Hancock
 Mr. F. Eberstadt
 Mr. John Parks Davis
 Mr. Lincoln Gordon

This conference was preceded by a general discussion of the meeting of Committee No. 2 on July 31²⁵ and the problems raised by the reference to the Scientific Committee of the question of the technical possibility of control of atomic energy and the most effective means of carrying out such control. There was some speculation as to the considerations which motivated Mr. Parodi in breaking into the discussion of the Soviet proposal with his suggestion for this reference to the Scientific Committee. Some concern was also expressed, particularly by Mr. Eberstadt, that the discussions in the Scientific Committee might eventuate in a complaint that the United States was impeding progress by withholding technical information necessary to an understanding of proposed control measures.

²⁴ Drafted by Lincoln Gordon.

²⁵ For the summary record of the 4th Meeting of Committee 2, July 31, see AEC, I, Special Suppl., pp. 123-128.

The conference then proceeded to a review of the present status of the work of the Atomic Energy Commission and the desirable course of action in the immediate future.

Mr. Baruch stated emphatically that he felt that we have no real cause for disappointment at the progress to date. He felt that we had come along as quickly and as well as we should expect at this time.

Our goal remains a unanimous report adopting the principles of the American Plan. He said that no alternative to this goal is now under consideration and that no member of the Delegation should suggest in any manner that any thought was being given to alternatives.

Mr. Baruch said that we must endeavor to draw out the Russians on their ideas as fully as possible, and that we must avoid at all costs any humiliation of the Russians—even to the extent, if necessary, of some personal humiliation to ourselves. If any breach in the negotiations arises at a later date, it must not originate with us, and we must make it crystal clear that we have explored every possible avenue of agreement.

Mr. Baruch also said that in his judgment our plan was generous and just, and that we had the right as well as the power on our side. He saw no reason to believe at this time that the Russians would not be brought around, when they had had an opportunity for complete understanding of our proposals.

Mr. Hancock then outlined four lines along which he thought work should progress. They were as follows:

1. Continuing Educational Work to attain complete understanding of the American proposals among the other Delegations. This should include a much more detailed explanation than had as yet been given of the considerations which led the Lilienthal Board members to the conclusions in the Acheson-Lilienthal report. He suggested the possibility of talks by Dr. Oppenheimer, Mr. Charles Thomas and General Groves to joint sessions of the scientific and political delegates. Mr. Eberstadt suggested that we lay out a specific program for carrying out this educational work. This will, of course, have to be preceded by clarification of the effect of Section 10 of the McMahon Act.

2. Informal Contacts with Other Delegations. Mr. Hancock noted that members of our staff had been making increasingly useful contacts with staff members of the other Delegations. He felt that there was a need for systematic informal discussion at frequent intervals with the heads of other Delegations by the heads of our Delegation. Mr. Eberstadt suggested that a regular timetable be developed for this purpose, so that we are sure that no Delegation is overlooked.

3. Treaty Drafting. Work is already under way on the early stages of drafting a treaty incorporating the American proposals, under the supervision of Mr. Fahy. Mr. Hancock suggested that Professor Manley Hudson might usefully be brought into this work. There was no decision on this point.

4. Stages. The elaboration of the stages in which the American plan would be implemented is a major substantive task for the Delegation at this time. Mr. Hancock felt that it may be desirable to develop our proposal on stages as part of the draft treaty. Mr. Eberstadt suggested that a Working Committee including Dr. Oppenheimer (or Dr. Bacher) and Messrs. Fahy, Volpe and Gordon devote a period of two weeks of concentrated effort to this problem, developing a memorandum for further consideration by the Delegation.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Notes on a Conference Between Members of the United States and Canadian Delegations to the Atomic Energy Commission, August 1, 1946*²⁶

CONFIDENTIAL

Present :	U.S.	Canada
	Mr. B. M. Baruch	Gen. McNaughton
	Mr. John M. Hancock	Mr. G. Ignatieff
	Mr. F. Eberstadt
	Mr. John Parks Davis
	Dr. R. C. Tolman
	Mr. F. Lindsay

General McNaughton referred to the interrelation between current negotiations at Paris Peace Conference and negotiations here. The French have told him that they believe that the Russians may attempt to shift the focus of world attention from the Paris Conference to New York. They may try to condemn the United States for its failure to implement its professed desire to eliminate the atom bomb because of its refusal to sign the proposed Russian convention.

Ignatieff referred to the French move during yesterday's meeting which resulted in diverting the questioning of Gromyko on his proposals.²⁷ He believed that Parodi was simply trying to be helpful and to forestall any possibility of an immediate crack-up.

Mr. Baruch felt that possibly the various delegations did not even now fully understand each other. For the present, discussion must continue.

Mr. Hancock believed that the Russians would consider it to their interests to continue negotiations and avoid an open break.

²⁶ Drafted by Franklin T. Lindsay.

²⁷ For the summary record of the 4th Meeting of Committee 2, July 31, see AEC, I, Special Suppl., pp. 123-128.

Mr. Baruch stated there has been a tremendous change in public attitude toward Russia. We must do everything we can to reach an agreement; nevertheless, ultimately we must face the facts. If we have made every effort to reach an agreement, we can then face a break with a clear conscience. He further stated that the United States would not trade and that this problem was far too important to do any trading about.

Mr. Eberstadt agreed that our negotiations must be studied in light of concurrent negotiations at Paris and at the forthcoming General Assembly. He asked General McNaughton if he thought Russia had anything to gain by forcing a break at this time. General McNaughton replied that he believed that if Russia finds that she is going to lose the initiative at Paris with respect to her political domination of Europe, it may become advantageous to transfer the center of attention to New York.

Mr. Eberstadt believed there was an additional danger that the Scientific Committee might report that it was impossible to further consider the problem because of the refusal of the United States to make available the necessary scientific information.

General McNaughton suggested that the next meeting be opened by statement from one of the delegates requesting Gromyko to further elaborate his ideas on how effective control might be achieved through the Security Council. He added that Canada would assume the chair when the meetings would be resumed at Lake Success. He believed that it would be an opportune time to review the work that had been done and to re-focus the Commission's attention on the basic problems to be solved. He asked whether or not the United States Delegation had any suggestions for such a statement.

Mr. Baruch said that the American Delegation would be glad to review the situation and to make suggestions to General McNaughton.

Mr. Baruch made a further statement that we must be fair and decent in our relations with the Russians, but that at the same time we must also be fair and decent to those people we represent.

Dr. Tolman arrived and reported that the Scientific meeting today had gone along more successfully than any previous meeting.

Mr. Hancock stated that he still had not a definitive answer to the question General McNaughton had raised at the previous meeting concerning the interpretation in the McMahan Bill on the provisions limiting publications of technical information.

Mr. Gordon stated he felt there was a danger that there might be a premature discussion of the Security Council during the next session of the Legal Committee and that this discussion might upset plans for discussion on the same subject in the next meeting of Subcommittee No. 2.

It was decided that the United States Delegation would discuss this problem with Van Kleffens²⁸ before the Legal Committee meeting and attempt to work out a solution with him. Mr. Ignatieff said that the Australians appear to be pushing for a showdown and that he was quite concerned over this. Apparently Evatt had left instructions to the Australian Delegation to force the issue on the veto as much as possible.

General McNaughton said that he planned to leave for Ottawa on August 8 and to return the 15th. He would then have a few days before the first meeting at Lake Success during which he could work out with United States and other delegations a plan of action to be followed.

Mr. Hancock suggested that general report from the various American scientific societies outlining research projects which they had on their books might be helpful to the general situation. General McNaughton suggested that visits to a few laboratories or plants, or to the Canadian Chalk River Plant might be desirable.

SWNCC Files

Minutes of the Twelfth Meeting of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee Ad Hoc Committee on Military and Security Functions of the United Nations Organization, Washington, August 14, 1946, 11:30 a. m.

SECRET

Present

Rear Admiral Davis²⁹
 Captain Gladney
 Commander Moore

Mr. Hiss, Chairman
 General Crain
 Mr. J. E. Johnson
 Mr. Haselton

Major General Lemnitzer³⁰
 Major General Anderson³¹
 Colonel Cress
 Colonel Griffin

Absent: Mr. Hickerson

Mr. Hiss opened the meeting by explaining that it had been called to review the present status of the work of the Military Staff Committee. The specific purpose was to deal with the problem created with

²⁸ Dr. Eelco Nicolaas van Kleffens, Foreign Minister of the Netherlands; Representative on the Security Council and the Atomic Energy Commission and in the General Assembly; presumably, at the time the present document was drafted, Chairman of the Legal Advisory Committee of the Atomic Energy Commission.

²⁹ Rear Adm. Arthur C. Davis of the Joint Strategic Survey Committee of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

³⁰ Maj. Gen. Lyman L. Lemnitzer of the Joint Strategic Survey Committee of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

³¹ Maj. Gen. Samuel E. Anderson of the Joint Strategic Survey Committee of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

respect to work on the special military agreements provided for in Article 43 of the Charter by the fact that the Soviet Delegation to the Military Staff Committee has not yet submitted a statement of basic principles.

Mr. Hiss added that it has now been proposed by the U.S. Delegation to the Military Staff Committee that General Kenney, in his capacity as Chairman of the Military Staff Committee, address a letter to the Soviet military representative reminding them that they have promised the paper and asking them when it might be expected. Mr. Johnson then presented a brief history of the matter, stating that a Military Staff Committee subcommittee, charged with the formulation of recommendations as to basic principles, had agreed on March 28 that all delegations should hand in a statement of basic principles by April 3. This subcommittee has held only one meeting, on April 3. The statements of the other four delegations were submitted at that time, but the Soviets presented no paper. Being thus stymied in the subcommittee the other delegations agreed to establish a separate subcommittee to make recommendations regarding a standard form of agreement for the provision of armed forces. This body has met regularly; the Soviets, however, have not participated in its discussions although they have sat in the meetings.³²

The opinion was expressed by members of the Ad Hoc Committee that the Russians were doubtless waiting for all the other delegations to show their hands and that the present situation therefore placed the Soviet representatives in an advantageous position. It was also the view of the Army and Navy members of the Ad Hoc Committee that there might be further unfortunate publicity regarding this long delay which would, unless something were done about it, be directed not at the Soviets who deserve it, but at the Committee as a whole.

It was agreed that General Kenney should send such a letter as was proposed, doing so in his capacity as Chairman. It was suggested that, following the anticipated unsatisfactory reply from the Soviet delegation, General Kenney might propose in the Military Staff Committee that, since no further substantive business could be transacted in the circumstances, the Military Staff Committee might adjourn pending receipt of the Soviet paper. Mr. Hiss pointed out at this point that the U.S. Delegation to the Military Staff Committee should be careful not to give an impression that it was withdrawing from the Committee, but should merely indicate that there is no further business requiring the Committee to meet. He thought that if other delegations desire periodic meetings, the U.S. Delegation could agree, leaving junior officers to attend. The Ad Hoc Committee agreed that this might be the best procedure.

³² On August 27 the subcommittee, considering a standard form of agreement, submitted to the Military Staff Committee a draft based on the United States proposal, not printed, which had been used as a basis for discussion. The Military Staff Committee, however, took no action on the subcommittee report pending agreement on basic principles. (IO Files)

General Lemnitzer stated that General Kenney, before sending his letter, desired direct assurance that the State Department has no objection on political grounds to this action. It was agreed that Mr. Hiss should confer with Mr. Acheson the following day and then transmit the State Department's views directly to General Kenney informing General Lemnitzer as well.³³

Admiral Davis asked whether the U.S. Delegation to the Military Staff Committee has instructions to reveal the U.S. position beyond submission of the statement of principles. In reply, it was stated that the U.S. views on a standard form of agreement have been presented to the appropriate subcommittee as authorized by instructions, but that no further material contained in SWNCC 219/8 has been given to other delegations on the Military Staff Committee.

Mr. Johnson raised the question whether there might be a way around the difficulties presented by the Soviet refusal to submit a paper on basic principles. Specifically, he suggested that, if the Soviet Delegation does not submit a statement of principles, the U.S. Delegation might inquire whether the Soviets have any suggestions as to other ways in which the Committee might proceed with its work. It was the sense of the Committee that such a procedure would not be desirable at the present time. It was also the sense of the Committee that the U.S. Delegation to the Military Staff Committee should pursue a less active and vigorous role and should not continue to press ahead in the absence of a Soviet paper on basic principles.

In reply to a question as to whether the State Department now feels that the matter might be taken up through diplomatic channels, a procedure that had been decided against when the question was raised in May by Mr. Stettinius, Mr. Hiss said that he had spoken to Mr. Hickerson on this matter and that the latter felt that any representations through diplomatic channels would be both ineffective and politically undesirable.

Colonel Griffin inquired as to the reason why the United States

³³ In a memorandum of August 15 Mr. Hiss indicated that he had discussed the subject with Mr. Acheson that morning. Mr. Acheson had felt that there were no objections from a political point of view to the General's proposed action. Mr. Hiss accordingly informed General Kenney of that by telephone and told General Lemnitzer of this action. (501.BC/8-1546) General Kenney addressed a letter, dated August 14, of the nature contemplated at the present meeting, to General Vasiliev, the Soviet Representative on the Military Staff Committee. General Vasiliev replied by letter on August 23 that the Soviet Delegation was continuing to study Article 43 but was not yet in a position to present its views or renew discussion. (IO Files) wished to expedite arriving at special military agreements, apart from the fact that the Charter mentions haste in concluding the agreements. Mr. Hiss replied that public-relation-wise it would benefit the United Nations if the Military Staff Committee actually could conclude the special military agreements. It was pointed out at this juncture that some publicity might be discreetly given to the press if it were desired to indicate the cause of the delay in going forward with the agreements. Mr. Hiss remarked, however, that the press in the United States was already familiar with the delay in the Military Staff Committee and the cause of it, adding that the Military Staff Committee's report to the Security Council would, when published, indicate the lack of progress which the press, again, could not fail to see and analyze, since it already knew that the Military Staff Committee had a directive from the Security Council to proceed with this work.

Mr. Johnson indicated that at the San Francisco Conference a number of delegations indicated a suspicion that the U.S.S.R.'s support of Article 106 of the Charter was based on the possibility of using it to postpone indefinitely the conclusion of special military agreements.

General Lemnitzer inquired as to the result of the conference with certain Senators who had raised some objections to the United States statement of basic principles. Mr. Hiss informed him that at the last conference the Senators had agreed to withdraw their objections.

[Here follows brief discussion of other subjects.]

General Anderson pointed out that a British proposal had been received by the U.S. Delegation to the Military Staff Committee which provided for a member nation placing all of its military forces at the disposal of the Security Council. The opinion was expressed that agreement to such a plan would be very difficult to obtain in the United States. When the question was asked whether a working group should prepare a position on this subject, it was decided that the Ad Hoc Committee would wait until comment on the subject had been received from the U.S. Military Representative in New York. It was pointed out that General Kenney had indicated that a number of other Delegations apparently would favor such a proposal. It was further agreed that the Ad Hoc Committee would consider the matter further when the views of the U.S. Military Representative on this British suggestion had been received in Washington.

The Committee rose at 12:40.

JOSEPH E. JOHNSON
Executive Secretary

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

The Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer District (Groves), to Mr. John M. Hancock of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission

SECRET

WASHINGTON, August 16, 1946.

DEAR MR. HANCOCK: I am inclosing two copies of the memorandum on stages which we have been working on and discussing over the past several weeks.

These are for your files.

Sincerely yours,

L. R. GROVES
Major General, USA

[Enclosure]

Memorandum for Discussion With the United States Delegation

Subject: Stages of Transition to Full Control by the Atomic Development Authority

The proposals put forward by the United States for the establishment of the ADA envision a series of progressive stages so designed as to furnish safeguards against breach of faith by any nation or nations. This is particularly important in view of the reliance now placed by the United States on the atom bomb as a counter balance to the enormous military establishment maintained by Russia. In the event of a breakdown in international cooperation, security, not only for the United States, but for the world, will be impossible if the military strength of this country, and this means the atomic bomb, is seriously impaired. While it is essential that our timing be such as to avoid an impasse, yet it is vital that we come to grips at the outset with troublesome political problems which are inherent in the proposed step-by-step evolution of an internationally controlled agency.

The spelling out of a comprehensive plan in terms of the functions, the responsibilities and the authority of a control agency will entail lengthy discussions to bring about a reasonable understanding of the proposals advocated. Yet such discussions should not require any material change in the special position of the United States. The information essential to this understanding has already been disclosed. A large body of additional scientific information will probably be published in the near future with the approval of the Manhattan District. Accordingly, an outline of proposed stages may be limited to that which will follow after a treaty or charter has been ratified by the necessary nations.

Recognizing that the preparation of a timetable or scheduling of steps is dependent on negotiation and the requirement of agreement, the initial importance of any consideration of stages lies in the formulation of a plan which provides a basis for agreement and at the same time affords the security desired. The rights and obligations of the signatory powers will have to be most carefully defined. The problem of the participation of countries not now represented, and therefore without voice in the Atomic Energy Commission, cannot be postponed indefinitely. These countries must accept the plan before the initial stages are put into effect.

In the following outline an attempt is made to spell out a suitable sequence of events or stages. It will be evident that certain of the proposed stages leave little room for compromise. Where the authority or powers of ADA must be firmly fixed, comment is made outlining the reasons for this position.

First Stage: Unrestricted Survey by ADA of World Resources of Raw Materials in the Ground.

a. Establishment of complete access to all sections of the world by ADA representatives with the requirement that all countries will cooperate in facilitating their travel and work.

Note: ADA engineers, geologists, and surveyors must be able to inspect thoroughly all known mines and occurrences which they think are of interest and to explore all sections of the world to locate undisclosed or unknown deposits. They must be able to acquire such samples and make such assays as they desire.

b. Establishment of means for carrying forward development work and for setting up research facilities to determine new or improved methods of extraction and concentration particularly in the field of low-grade ores.

Note: This will assist in determining a safe cut-off percent. The failure to achieve this stage in practice will mean that any cooperative effort will fail.

Second Stage: Interchange of Information on Deposits of Raw Materials.

a. Disclosure by all countries of complete information on deposits of raw materials within the jurisdiction of each country. This would include the furnishing of all desired information concerning geological occurrences, specimens, prospects, assays, ores and residues.

b. Review of such data and other published information by ADA geologists, mining engineers, and surveyors.

c. Development of additional information as required by ADA.

d. Establishment of facilities for sampling and assaying and for obtaining samples or specimens by ADA representatives.

e. Organization and maintenance of inspection of known and newly discovered sources.

Note: This system should be progressively expanded as subsequent stages are undertaken.

f. Disclosure by all countries of current and past production figures of worked deposits.

Third Stage: Establishment and Maintenance of Control Over Deposits of Uranium and Thorium and Other Materials Vital to an Atomic Energy Program and Over Facilities Used for Their Extraction and Concentration.

a. Establishment of control over mines.

Note: The form of control will depend on the type of occurrence and the amount of the estimated reserves. It will also be greatly influenced by whether the materials occur in conjunction with other products of value and in such case whether they are the primary or the by-product. The form of control might be mere inspection; licensing of production with ADA control or ownership of tailings; exclusive purchasing plus inspection; or outright ownership.

b. Establishment of control over facilities used for extraction and concentration of uranium and thorium.

Note: Form of control may vary as in the control over mines. With full accomplishment of this stage some curtailment of U.S. operations in the atomic energy field will be inescapable.

Fourth Stage: Establishment and Maintenance of Control Over Any Facilities Devoted Exclusively to the Refining or Processing of Uranium or Thorium.

[Note:] The form of control may vary as in the control over mines. The possibility of illicit operations by industries in allied fields will be greatly reduced by rigid controls over the ore itself. The obligations of participating countries must be clearly defined.

Fifth Stage: Establishment of Research Facilities Under ADA.

a. Furnishing by U.S. of scientific and technical information essential to peacetime uses.

b. Establishment of ADA research facilities to carry on development work in the field of "safe" activities.

c. Establishment under ADA control and supervision of small nuclear reactors and similar scientific research tools within the several States.

Note: Such piles would be designed, constructed, and operated as determined by ADA.

Note: Once this stage is initiated the U.S. will be under great pressure to furnish active materials in increasing quantities of enriched active materials of varying concentrations. This stage will require broad discretion and authority on the part of the U.S. government authorities to deal with private interests and governmental agencies.

Sixth Stage: Disclosure by U.S. of Scientific and Technical Information Including Data Dealing With Design, Construction and Operation of Large Scale Production Plants.

a. Disclosure of all data essential to "safe" operations.

b. Disclosure of all data essential to "dangerous" operations up to but not including the atomic bomb itself.

Seventh Stage: International Ownership and Operation of Primary Production Plants.

a. Turning over to ADA by the U.S. of its primary production plants, (and by any other country having such plants).

b. Construction and operation of similar plants in such places as might be provided for under the convention or by later agreement.

Note: Scientific and technical advances will determine the technical and economic desirability of duplicating U.S. plants or the feasibility of adopting new methods.

Eighth Stage: Turning Over to ADA by U.S. and by All Other Countries of All Scientific and Technical Data in Their Possession Concerning Atomic Weapons.

Ninth Stage: Destruction or Turning Over by U.S. of All Stocks of Bombs. Turning Over by U.S. of All Stocks of Material for Peaceful Endeavors (and by Any Other Country Having Such Stocks). The ADA Assumes Exclusive Control Over All Dangerous Activities.

Assuming that the ADA will develop into an effective operating agency and that there would be full and effective cooperation by the important participating countries the following timetable would seem to be reasonable. It must never be forgotten that the degree of completion of each stage must govern the rate of progress rather than any calendar.

Stage	Possible Time of Starting Stage, Measured in Months from the Starting of the First Stage
First	0
Second	18 to 24
Third	24 to 30
Fourth	30 to 38
Fifth	32 to 44
Sixth	33 to 50
Seventh	42 to 60
Eighth	48 to 66
Ninth	50 to 72

For the purpose of discussing this problem within the Commission itself when an appropriate occasion arises a paper should be prepared using this document as a basis. The paper, however, should be more general in its approach. The introductory remarks could well be expanded while the detailed schedule should be replaced with a discussion of the gradual evolution and development of the ADA as envisaged by the U.S.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Notes of an Informal Meeting Between Members of the United States and Canadian Delegations to the Atomic Energy Commission, New York, August 20, 1946, 3: 30 p. m.*³⁴

RESTRICTED

Present: Mr. B. M. Baruch
Mr. Hancock
Mr. Eberstadt
General McNaughton
Mr. Ignatieff
Mr. Jarvis
Mr. Gordon
Mr. Lindsay
Mr. Arneson

MR. HANCOCK stated that he had been able to get no definite time schedule on the work of the Scientific and Technical Committee. It seemed likely that its preliminary report would be somewhat delayed.³⁵ He stated that we were prepared, now that we are perfectly clear on the interpretation of the McMahan bill, to bring such men as Lilienthal and Thomas to speak before the Scientific and Technical Committee, Committee No. 2, or both.

MR. BARUCH pointed out that he has been most anxious that the pace not be forced; that we do not drive Gromyko into a corner so that a reasonable attempt to understand could not be forthcoming. He stressed the conviction that a slower educative approach was necessary and that our present emphasis on the work of the Scientific and Technical Committee was a concrete manifestation of this conviction.

³⁴ This document was drafted by Mr. Arneson and dated August 21.

³⁵ At its 4th Meeting, July 31, Committee 2 had requested Committee 3 (the Scientific and Technical Committee) to present a report on whether effective control of atomic energy was possible and to provide an indication of the methods by which effective control could be achieved. Committee 3 completed this report by the end of August, but final action was not taken until September 26 due to reluctance on the part of the Soviet Union to accept it. For text of the report, see AEC, I, Special Suppl., part IV.

GENERAL McNAUGHTON agreed emphatically that we could not push for a break now simply because the matter has not as yet been fully explored.

MR. IGNATIEFF reported on his recent conversations in Ottawa with the Undersecretary of State. Mr. Ignatieff said that the Undersecretary felt as we did that any further pursuing of the political aspects would simply bring about a deadlock or a complete breakdown of the negotiations. He felt, therefore, that we should concentrate for the present on the scientific and technical aspects of the problem. Mr. Ignatieff suggested that it would be wise strategy to allow the break if it must come between the Western World and the U.S.S.R. to occur somewhere else in the world, rather than in these particular negotiations. He urged that we must concentrate on securing the allegiance of world opinion to our plan and that every endeavor should be made to secure the support of all nations who must join in any international control which may be established if that control is to be effective.

In reply to a query from Mr. Gordon as to how the Scientific and Technical Committee report might be discussed in Committee No. 2, MR. IGNATIEFF suggested that the report should be considered only an interim report and that Committee No. 2 should refer back to the S. & T. Committee requests for more detailed information.

MR. EBERSTADT [said] that he thought the S. & T. Committee report was an admirable document, one which had avoided quite successfully the ticklish political aspects of the problem. For example, while setting off danger points against points of control, the report does not say who shall exercise the control that seems necessary. He thought it was perfectly clear that even if the Soviets do eventually accept international control of atomic energy they would make every attempt to secure all the advantages they could possibly obtain by a program of delay. Yet, it must be remembered that our work is only a part of a much larger picture and that our tactics would have to be oriented to the progress of negotiations in other places, as, for example, the Paris Peace Conference. He felt that, whatever we do and however we may proceed in the negotiations, it was quite likely that we would finally come out with a 10 to 2 report. We must have patience but that patience must be tempered with the realization that we may not get a unanimous AEC report.

MR. EBERSTADT suggested three alternatives:

1. A preliminary progress report by the AEC to the Security Council—

The AEC might very well prepare a preliminary progress report as a means of summarizing negotiations to date. This might well be done at the end of General McNaughton's chairmanship and should not contain any recommendations or hard-and-fast conclusions, but merely bring the events of the preceding 90 days together in one document. Mr. Eberstadt thought this procedure would constitute a sort of minor warning to the world and to the United Nations that time was running out and that soon the AEC would have to come to close quarters with the real points of divergence.

2. A draft convention.

The draft convention might be presented toward the end of General McNaughton's term after the preliminary report of the S. & T. Committee had been received. Preparation of the draft convention obviously would be difficult at this stage, inasmuch as many facets of the problem had not yet been fully explored, as, for example, the matter of "stages". This alternative would be a much sharper challenge to the Soviets and would bring the disagreements to a head more sharply.

3. Continuation of the seminar technique.

Continuation of more detailed discussion of the elements of control and of the scientific and technical facts lying behind the American proposal would, if not supplemented by more specific action, bring about increased public impatience with the progress of negotiations.

MR. IGNATIEFF felt that public opinion was already resigned to the concept of two worlds. The public was thinking that a break was inevitable and was resigning itself to it. He queried whether something could be done to change this public attitude.

MR. EBERSTADT replied that he thought a statement could be in the preliminary report of the AEC to the Security Council which would help to dissipate this prejudgment which the public has been tending to make. He thought that after reviewing the record of proceedings for the past three months the report might state that the next stage of negotiations would be a reconciliation of points of view and a further analysis of the technical and scientific facts underlying the problem.

MR. BARUCH felt that General McNaughton might very well make an opening statement, as the new chairman, in which he would review the proceedings of the past two months, ending with a statement of the problem as indicated by the discussion thus far but without any specific recommendations. He went on to say that he planned to talk with Gromyko on Wednesday³⁶ in order to ascertain, if possible, just what was going on in the Soviet mind. He supported the idea of a preliminary survey of negotiations to date with stress on the fact-finding character of the next stage of negotiations and the attempt to secure a reconciliation of points of view.

³⁶ August 21.

GENERAL McNAUGHTON expressed strong approval of the report of the S. & T. Committee, pointing out that it was in reality the first official report of the Atomic Energy Commission and its subcommittees. He thought that the report was essentially sound, that it did not weaken the American view, and that it had the real merit of being a new source document to which all could refer in future discussions. In other words, while it followed the lines of the Acheson report and the Baruch Plan, it did not suffer from their disabilities in that it was not an American report but an AEC report.

MR. EBERSTADT said it was more important that we have a sound report, even if that meant a split in voting, than simply to get a unanimous vote on a report which was too weak.

MR. BARUCH pointed out that the tide of public opinion is running very strongly against the Soviets. He remarked that even many of the so-called liberal groups had commented to him that they were no longer able to support many of the actions which the Russians have recently taken. Jokingly, he commented that he was being branded a communist, since he was trying to work with Gromyko in a patient and understanding fashion. He remarked cryptically that we must be prepared one day to say: "Good Morning Death!"

MR. IGNATIEFF remarked that the chief preoccupation of all nations was for security and that the concept of two worlds offered precious little in the way of security. Therefore, we must make every attempt to join these two worlds.

MR. EBERSTADT asked what the alternatives would be if a real split occurred. He pointed out the difficulties of determining what nations would have to be excluded from our world, citing, as an example, Poland. He mentioned Section 51 of the United Nations Charter, commenting that we might, at some time in the future, have to remind the Soviets of the power inherent in that Section. He pointed out the danger that was inherent in any two world alternative. If this came to pass we would be accused by public opinion of having devised a plan which was obviously unacceptable to the Soviets with the full realization that they would reject it and then having revealed our real intentions by proposing an atomic alliance against them.

GENERAL McNAUGHTON stated that he would press for the completion of the preliminary report of the S. & T. Committee with the idea of having it presented formally to the full Atomic Energy Commission. He promised to talk to Captain Alberto about some sort of resume of the past two months of negotiations.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Notes of a Meeting Between the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission and the United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee, New York, August 22, 1946, 3 p. m.*³⁷

CONFIDENTIAL

Present: Mr. Baruch	Admiral Turner
Mr. Hancock	General Kenney
Mr. Eberstadt	Lt. Gen. Ridgway
Mr. Searls	Lt. Gen. Haislip
Dr. Tolman	Maj. Gen. Lemnitzer
Mr. Gordon	Maj. Gen. Groves
Dr. Fleming	Brig. Gen. Kibler
Mr. Johnson	Brig. Gen. Cabell
Mr. Lindsay	Colonel Gilmer
Mr. Howard	Colonel Harris
Mr. Arneson

In welcoming the United States Members of the Military Staff Committee to the meeting, Mr. Hancock stressed our desire to have any views they might wish to make at any time. He said that we were open to suggestions and observations of whatever sort they would care to make on any occasion. This meeting was called primarily to cast up a number of problems on which we thought the Military Staff Committee would be especially well qualified to make recommendations. Taking up the points raised by the memorandum distributed to the group the discussion that ensued was as follows:

A. Relations of the Atomic Energy Commission to the Security Council on security matters

MR. HANCOCK suggested that the Military Staff Committee might attempt to formulate a precise meaning of Paragraph 2(b) of the Resolution of the General Assembly of January 24, 1946, which states that any matters affecting security the Security Council shall issue directions to the Commission and that on security matters the Commission shall be accountable for its work to the Security Council.

B. Other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction

Pointing out that the terms of reference of the AEC included recommendations for the elimination from national armaments not only of atomic weapons but of all other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction, MR. HANCOCK asked for the views of the Military on this point.

³⁷ This document was drafted by Mr. Arneson and dated August 23.

GENERAL RIDGWAY felt strongly that we should not attempt to expand the scope of our work at this time to include other weapons. GENERAL KENNEY strongly concurred in this view, as did General GROVES. GENERAL GROVES expressed the view that the problem would become hopelessly complicated if effort were made to expand the terms of reference at this time. He thought that we should keep the "other weapons" in mind and plan to recommend at a later stage that negotiations be started on them. ADMIRAL TURNER pointed out that if the terms of reference were expanded at this time we would be faced with a very difficult job of definition, that, in fact, the term "weapons of mass destruction" was as vague as the term aggression which the United Nations has carefully avoided trying to define.

MR. HANCOCK expressed concern about the fact that there is no known means of effective control over biological warfare and that an attempt to include BW in our work might play into the hands of Gromyko, inasmuch as all we could propose for BW would be a mere convention. MR. SEARLS said that the problem was further complicated by the fact that the Commission might very well end up with a split report.

C. Stages

Referring to the U.S. proposal which recommends that the establishment of an ADA should proceed by stages, MR. HANCOCK enquired whether the Military had any concern about this phase of our proposal. No criticism was raised. He stated that we were anxious to get the views of the Military on this as quickly as possible, since we would probably have to be prepared to make some presentation to the Commission on this question within the next three or four weeks.

MR. BARUCH pointed out that both Senators Connally and Vandenburg had been most emphatic on the need to proceed by stages and that the stages idea was deeply embedded in the Acheson-Lilienthal report.

GENERAL GROVES differentiated two different concepts on stages as follows:

- (1) the stages relating to the progressive inclusion of other weapons after the atomic bomb had been handled, and
- (2) a sort of stages-within-stages concept in which control over a given weapon would proceed step by step. He reported that Secretary Byrnes had assured and reassured him on several occasions that it was the Secretary's intention that the problem of atomic energy and the establishment of an international control body should proceed stage by stage.

ADMIRAL TURNER pointed out that there was some confusion between the idea of stages in the establishment of the ADA and the idea of having the work of the AEC proceed by separate stages. The original tri-partite statement (Truman, Attlee, King) called for the establishment of an International Authority by separate stages. On the other hand the Resolution of the General Assembly stated that the work of the Commission should proceed by stages. When Senator Vandenburg saw the Resolution he insisted on a clarification. On his return from London Secretary Byrnes did clarify the meaning of this concept, insisting that the establishment of an International Authority should be by separate stages so devised as to assure a balance of security among the participating nations.

1. Destruction of the bombs.

ADMIRAL TURNER pointed out that we have made no definite commitment to destroy our stocks of atomic bombs. We have simply stated that we propose that existing stocks of bombs should be disposed of at a late stage in the establishment of the ADA "pursuant to the terms of the treaty". There seems to be a general feeling in the public mind that the United States has agreed to destroy the bombs once an ADA has been established and is in effective operation. Admiral Turner felt that this opinion might be dangerous and there might be some occasion to clarify this at a later date. He felt that before we give any definite commitment on this point we should seek a final opinion of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

MR. HANCOCK stated that our thinking had not completely jelled on the question whether there should be any atomic bombs anywhere in the world or not. He did indicate, however, that the problem would seem to be an easier one if there were no bombs anywhere in the world. That, of course, raised the question of how a violator would be dealt with if no bombs existed. MR. BARUCH considered this a question on which we wanted help from the Military people.

GENERAL RIDGWAY remarked that it was his understanding that our position was that bombs would be disposed of only after actual proof of good faith on the part of all nations had been demonstrated through every stage of the establishment of the ADA. This he thought was the only sound position that could be taken on the matter. MR. HANCOCK pointed out this difficulty however: the decision as to when bombs should be disposed of could not be made in our discretion alone. It is probable that some formula would be written into the treaty which would leave that decision to the ADA itself. In any event the treaty would have to state very specifically just what conditions had to be met and who would decide that those conditions had been met.

GENERAL KENNEY suggested that the Military Staff Committee should be the organ to check on whether specified conditions actually had been reached. This would have the merit of retaining the veto, in the sense that the Military Staff Committee reports to the Security Council. MR. EBERSTADT thought that General Kenney's suggestion was a very good one, at least on certain types of conditions. GENERAL GROVES pointed out that the stages will probably have to overlap in order to avoid undue delay. Even in providing for overlap he found that a minimum of five years was required. The overlap feature might complicate this matter of certification and make it more difficult for the Military Staff Committee to check. He suggested that the Military Staff Committee would probably have to take the testimony of the ADA as first evidence that a particular stage had been met. This was so because many technical considerations were involved which only the ADA would really be in a position to understand. MR. EBERSTADT pointed out that giving this kind of function to the Military Staff Committee would tie in very nicely with their general responsibility for recommendations on disarmament.

MR. HANCOCK asked whether this question of Military Staff Committee participation in the stages picture could be raised formally with the military. In reply ADMIRAL TURNER said he thought that the question should be raised by us directly with the Government. He thought that the Joint Chiefs of Staff would need a specific request in writing in order to consider the question. MR. HANCOCK replied that much discussion would be needed on this point and said he was not sure that it should be raised formally at the moment. He hoped that the Military Staff people would think about this question.

MR. BARUCH remarked that we had been depending on General Groves to keep the Chiefs of Staff fully informed of our operations and likewise to keep us informed of questions that the Joint Chiefs had on their minds.

2. Alternative plans.

GENERAL GROVES felt that if we were unable to get a unanimous report through the Security Council the alternative would be nothing at all. MR. EBERSTADT felt very strongly that we should not even contemplate an alternative plan at this stage. He felt that there was grave danger inherent in any situation that might lead to our proposing an alternative plan simply because many would think that we had purposely put forward an original plan which was obviously unacceptable, and that what we were really trying to do was to come out with an atomic alliance against Russia.

MR. HANCOCK said that it is not our job to consider alternative plans but that this question was one with which the Military Staff Committee should be very much concerned. GENERAL GROVES remarked that the Military Staff Committee might inform the Joint Chiefs of Staff that the Delegation has no alternative plan in mind.

MR. SEARLS remarked that we were obliged to report a plan, even if that plan could not be unanimously agreed to. Mr. Eberstadt insisted that this plan must be fully adequate and must be one which would necessarily provide that all nations must join in.

MR. BARUCH stated that we would be interested in another plan only if it were stronger and better than the one we have already put forward.

GENERAL GROVES stressed the need of conducting the negotiations in such a fashion as to make it perfectly clear to the world that the plan we sponsor is a fair and reasonable plan which has been worked out openly and patiently. It must be clear that Russia had been given every possible chance to understand and to accept. He thought this sort of procedure was essential whether we felt that the Russians would accept it or not. Then in the event that the plan is rejected by the Russians we could be sure of the support of the world and especially the support of American scientists on any course of action we might then find necessary.

MR. HANCOCK explained that he had carefully avoided using the word compromise in reply to Gromyko's accusation that we were offering a take-it-or-leave-it proposition. This was a bit of tight rope-walking with the view in mind of not falling into Gromyko's trap, while at the same time, avoiding any implication that we were willing to compromise. He stated categorically that we have no intention whatever of compromising the basic principles of our plan. In fact, our plan represents the minimum that is required to bring about an effective, workable system of control. He pointed out that there were, of course, certain aspects of the plan that had not yet been elaborated and that in these cases we would want to accommodate the views of other delegations as far as this was possible without compromising our basic requirements.

D. Strategic balance

MR. EBERSTADT expressed the view that the ADA could not be given unlimited power to decide the location of plants and the general question of strategic balance. He thought that the ADA might be required to confer with the Military Staff Committee on this kind of question and, indeed, to secure approval from the Military Staff Committee on its proposals. GENERAL KENNEY thought that the ADA might be required to secure at least recommendations from the Military Staff Committee. GENERAL GROVES felt that the Military Staff Committee might be given the same power on the question of location of plants as on the question of stages. He did not feel that the Military Staff Committee should be empowered to pass on location of all ADA installations but primarily on the location of large plants. In response to a question from Admiral Turner, General Groves said he thought the Military Staff Committee's power should extend to the physical location of individual large plants.

ADMIRAL TURNER thought that the question of locating plants would not be very difficult, inasmuch as the Big Five are not only strong militarily, but are the chief industrial powers and that primary production plants would logically be placed in their respective territories. MR. EBERSTADT, however, pointed out that there would be considerable pressure from backward countries to have power plants located in their territory.

E. Destruction of Atomic Bombs

MR. HANCOCK stated that this was one of the most difficult of problems on which to arrive at a sound decision and that he was anxious to have views of the Military men present.

GENERAL KENNEY thought that the United States should retain a stockpile of bombs to be held in trust and available to the Military Staff Committee force on call from the Security Council. MR. EBERSTADT posed two alternatives: (1) a quota of bombs to be turned over to a common pool, or (2) to have no bombs in existence. He did not think that the proposal that the U.S. keep a stock of bombs as its contribution to the Military Staff Committee force would be an acceptable one to other nations. He felt that if bombs were to remain in existence they would have to be possessed physically by the United Nations force. He felt, furthermore, that not to have any bombs was more in accord with the overall objectives of the United Nations. GENERAL LEMNITZER remarked that while it might be much easier to get agreement on a treaty which provided there would be no bombs, he felt that the absence of bombs in the hands of an international body would put a premium on a nation's getting atomic bombs and using them.

MR. EBERSTADT suggested that the stages concept might be a useful one to consider here. A formula might be devised looking toward a period when bombs would finally be destroyed, but that a series of stages leading up to this final objective might provide first, for a period of trusteeship by the U.S., later possession of bombs by the United Nations force and so on to final destruction. He pointed out that calculated risks must be taken all the way along in this problem. Risks cannot be avoided. We must simply try to make them as balanced as possible. MR. SEARLS expressed full agreement with this idea. MR. GORDON pointed out that one of the more serious aspects of this question was the fact that with bombs existing in the world, the warning period would be very short, while, if all bombs were destroyed and possession of them made illegal, nations would have a considerably longer period of warning.

ADMIRAL TURNER pointed out this difficulty: in an atomic age a premium will be put on speed of reprisal for any violation of the treaty. If atomic bombs remain in existence reprisal could be much quicker and more effective.

There was some discussion of a point raised by GENERAL CABELL that bomb components might well be distributed among several powers in such a way that no one nation could use them. These components could be called in by the Security Council for use, if this were necessary. Among the objections raised to this idea were the following:

1. Big Power veto.
2. Loss of instantaneous use of the weapon which would in turn negate the purpose of having bombs available at all. This objection would apply even if it were provided that the bombs could be called into use by a simple majority vote of the Security Council.

F. Other uses of atomic energy

GENERAL KENNEY asked if atomic energy were prohibited for use in bombs, could it be used to make other weapons more effective. DR. TOLMAN replied that in the present state of the art, the use of atomic energy for ship propulsion seemed to offer some real possibilities. GENERAL KENNEY then asked whether such a possibility was prohibited. MR. EBERSTADT'S view was that such use would be prohibited, inasmuch as the terms of reference speak of atomic weapons, rather than merely atomic bombs. He said this was not an easy question to answer but that it was his impression that this interpretation was correct. He cited the fact that Gromyko always refers to atomic weapons and not to atomic bombs.

ADMIRAL TURNER expressed the view that it would be absurd to encourage the utilization of atomic power for freighters, while prohibiting its use for warships. DR. TOLMAN pointed out, however, that there was far less likelihood of, or need for, use of atomic power in freighters than in warships. MR. HANCOCK pointed out that there would be real danger in allowing battleships to employ atomic power plants, inasmuch as these power plants could manufacture fissionable material.

On the question of the use of radio-active materials as a kind of weapon for war, DR. TOLMAN felt that this possibility did not now seem feasible and could not be until a satisfactory method of dispersing the material by fine sprays had been worked out.

G. Commercial Problems

MR. HANCOCK raised the question about providing some sort of quota system on raw materials to prevent on the one hand, hoarding of fissionable materials by any one nation, and on the other hand, the depletion of supply in another country. GENERAL GROVES pointed out that the value of uranium and thorium is so great in a national security sense that there would be tremendous pressure to search out all possible sources of supply. There would also be great pressure to increase technical mining efficiency so as to get at the low-grade deposits. He stated that it was within the realm of possibility that one day a method would be devised for recovering uranium from the ocean.

H. Inspection

There was some general discussion about the question of opening industrial plants and military reservations to inspection by an International Authority. GENERAL GROVES felt that it would not be difficult to hide any of the Oak Ridge processes in some of our larger industrial plants. ADMIRAL TURNER thought that we should be willing to open up all of our industrial plants to inspection, provided reciprocal concessions were received from other countries. He recognized that the chief difficulty with this idea had to do with preservation of trade secrets in industry.

I. The moral issue of using the bomb

MR. HANCOCK mentioned that he was somewhat concerned that pressure would be built up in this country condemning the use, and continued manufacture, of the atomic bomb. He queried whether we should not take steps in the near future to ward off this sort of public opinion development. GENERAL GROVES felt that it would be quite unwise to have this question debated but thought that it might be wise to do whatever could be done privately to head off this kind of development.

In closing the meeting, MR. HANCOCK said that we might have to be ready with specific proposals on stages within a period of three or four weeks. He hoped that the Military Staff Committee members would give us the benefit of their views on this question as soon as possible. He reiterated that the Military Staff Committee members should feel free to talk with us at any time on any problem on which they might care to express their views.

501.BC/8-2946 : Telegram

*The Acting United States Representative at the United Nations
(Johnson) to the Secretary of State*

URGENT

NEW YORK, August 29, 1946—midnight.

[Received August 29—11:30 p. m.]

527. The following is an unofficial translation for the press of statement by Ambassador Gromyko, before the Security Council, 29 August,

1946 proposing that UN members report on their troops stationed in certain foreign territories :

“In connection with the war the United Nations waged against their common foes—Hitler Germany and militaristic Japan—troops of certain powers, members of the United Nations, were situated on the territory of several countries, members of the United Nations, and certain countries which had not participated in the war, for the purpose of driving out the German and Japanese aggressors, or to prevent invasion by Axis troops. After these tasks had been completed and the war had ended and Germany and Japan were put under the control of Allied occupation forces, some Allied troops were withdrawn from the above-mentioned territories. However, according to the available information, Allied troops still continue to be situated on the territory of several member states of the United Nations and other states, not including the former enemy territories.

The presence of Allied troops for so long a time after the end of the war, a presence which is not called for by military necessity, must provoke natural uneasiness in the peoples of those countries in which foreign troops are still stationed. Further, world public opinion, which is interested in the establishment of peace as soon as possible and the maintenance of collective security, follows with open concern the situation which has been created in the above-mentioned countries.

The Security Council should therefore study the question of the maintenance of Allied troops at the present time on the territory of member states of the United Nations and other states, with the exception of former enemy territories. The Security Council, however, has not at its disposal information on where in the territory of member states of the United Nations and other states, excepting former enemy territories, troops of other member states of the United Nations are situated, and on the number of these troops. Taking into account the duties of the Security Council provided for in Chapter 7 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Security Council should be informed on the question of where the armed forces of member nations of the United Nations are stationed in the above-mentioned territories and on the number of these troops. In connection with this, I submit, on instruction of the Soviet Government, the proposal that the Security Council should take the decision to require states members of the United Nations to submit to the Security Council within two weeks the following information :

1. In which places in the territories of member states of the United Nations or other states, with the exception of former enemy territories, and in what number are armed forces of other members of the United Nations stationed.

2. In what places in the above-mentioned territories are situated air and naval bases, and the strength of their garrisons, belonging to the armed forces of other member states of the United Nations.

3. The information mentioned in paragraphs 1 and 2 should be submitted as of August 1, 1946.”³⁸

JOHNSON

³⁸ For the official translation of Gromyko's statement including the Soviet proposal, see United Nations, Official Records of the Security Council, First Year, Second Series, No. 5, pp. 141-142. Hereafter cited as SC, 1st yr., 1st series, No. 5.

740.00119 Council/8-3046: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Secretary of State, in Paris

TOP SECRET

WASHINGTON, August 30, 1946—6 p. m.

4508. Secdel 791. I discussed with Judge Patterson³⁹ and Acting Secretary of Navy Kenney this morning Gromyko's statement to SC yesterday (unofficial translation being relayed to you separately)⁴⁰ proposing that UN members report on their troops in foreign territories. We agreed as follows:

1. Purpose of Soviet proposal is obviously propaganda.
2. Best counter propaganda would be for our representative to state in SC when proposal comes up, possibly next Tuesday or Wednesday, that we see no objection in principle, that we have nothing to hide, but we feel basis should be broadened to include armed forces located in former enemy territories. We would then move that Soviet proposal be amended by striking out exception of former enemy territories.
3. If Soviet vetoed our amendment we would then feel free to veto their original proposal.
4. If Soviet accepted our amendment we would make all information called for available; reporting all combined U.S. forces in excess of 100.
5. With regard to bases referred to in section 2 of Soviet proposal we interpret meaning as calling for report from us only on eight 99-year lease bases plus Panama and Cuba.

We urge that you discuss foregoing with Bevin before making such a proposal in view of UK position in Greece and the Near East. If you approve proposed course of action we shall instruct Johnson in New York accordingly.

ACHESON

501.BC/8-3146: Telegram

The Acting United States Representative at the United Nations (Johnson) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

URGENT

NEW YORK, August 31, 1946—10 p. m.

[Received August 31—9:48 p. m.]

534. Cadogan has received instructions from the Foreign Office and comment from Mr. Bevin regarding Soviet proposal that the Security Council ask for full data regarding military forces stationed in foreign countries.

Following is substance of Foreign Office instructions to Cadogan.

³⁹ Robert P. Patterson, Secretary of War.

⁴⁰ Telegram 527 from New York, August 29, supra.

This telegram was repeated to Mr. Bevin in Paris and his comment will be outlined later.

British Foreign Office comments that the scope of the Soviet proposal is by no means clear. They suggest two alternatives.

(1) That a robust line be taken by the British representative as soon as the provisional agenda on which this item appears is under discussion. Cadogan should denounce the Soviet move as another typical and irresponsible maneuver designed to damage the prestige of the Security Council, and to declare that he will vote against placing it on the agenda provided his U.S. and French colleagues can be brought to agree.

(2) It is suggested that the British representative inquire at the Council meeting what provisions of the Charter are involved in the Russian proposal and on what grounds the Security Council could properly call for such information. Perhaps the Russians have chapter 7 of the Charter in mind. British Foreign Office points out that this line of approach would afford an opening to comment on the manner by which the Military Staff Committee has been hamstrung in its work through lack of instructions to the Soviet representative. The type of information called for by the Soviet demand should normally be asked for by the Council on the advice of the Military Staff Committee. The fact that this is not so in the present case coupled with the urgency of the Soviet demand suggests that the Council is being asked by Russia to presume some danger to the maintenance of international peace exists in the presence of troops in foreign countries. If that is the real intention of the Russians, their request should be re-framed to make this point clear. Until this is done, the Soviet proposal is irrelevant and inconsistent with the procedure of the Charter.

The British Foreign Office itself prefers this second alternative. It feels that this method would serve to expose to public view the Russian attitude to the Military Staff Committee and would also offer an opportunity to force into the open the Russian attitude toward foreign troops in former enemy countries, expressly excluded in the Russian request. (See penetrating comment in leading editorial, New York Times, August 31.)

Mr. Bevin has sent a telegram to Cadogan commenting on the foregoing. He states that he prefers the first alternative providing Cadogan can bring his U.S. colleague to concur. Mr. Bevin says the British cannot take a stronger line than the U.S. and points out that the Russian proposal is aimed at the presence of U.S. troops in China as well as British troops in Greece and elsewhere. Cadogan is instructed by Mr. Bevin to make every effort to secure concurrence of both his American and French colleagues in this matter. In a passage of his telegram which was garbled and the meaning of which the British here consider to be uncertain, Mr. Bevin apparently instructed Cadogan under no circumstances to vote in favor of the Russian request being placed on the Council's agenda.

I understand from telephone conversations with officers in the Department that we are considering meeting the Russian demand openly and giving full information as we have nothing to hide or apologize for. There may well be advantages in following this line rather than either of the lines suggested by the British. I think it important, however, that our action in this matter be carefully concerted with the British and that we agree together and follow the same line. From the Russian point of view, we are both in the same position and our rejoinder would be greatly weakened in effect if we take divergent lines. Whatever line we take, we should consider a counterblast at Russia with well-documented details.

There was nothing in Cadogan's message from the Foreign Office or the one from Mr. Bevin to indicate that Mr. Bevin had discussed this matter with the Secretary. He may have done so. In any event, I request that this telegram be immediately repeated to the Secretary in Paris for his consideration.

JOHNSON

501.BC/9-246

The British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Bevin) to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL IMMEDIATE

PARIS, 2 September, 1946.

DEAR JAMES: Before we meet this afternoon I ought to let you know that I have been in touch with London about the suggestion which you made to me yesterday that we should counter the Gromyko resolution at New York by challenging the Russians on their troops in the ex-enemy countries.⁴¹ I am confirmed, after these consultations, in my original conclusion that your suggestion would lead to very grave difficulties for the British Commonwealth and I must tell you frankly that we are absolutely opposed to it. There are very fundamental reasons for this attitude which I will explain to you confidentially this afternoon.

For our part we shall feel obliged to instruct Cadogan to vote against the question being put on the agenda of the Security Council.

Yours sincerely,

ERNEST BEVIN

501.BC/9-246 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Acting Secretary of State

SECRET

URGENT

PARIS, September 2, 1946—11 p. m.

[Received 8:18 p. m.]

4396. For Acting Secretary for Johnson from the Secretary. Reference New York's 534, August 31. Soviet proposal that the Council ask for full data regarding military forces is of course propaganda. My first reaction was to advise offering an amendment to make certain that it would apply to Russian troops in ex-enemy states. However, British believe it would be followed by request for number and location of naval vessels. They will oppose placing subject on the agenda. Therefore, I advise that we take same position showing that request would not require statement from Soviets as to their troops in ex-enemy states. Johnson should assert it is ridiculous so far as we are concerned because newspapers daily publish the number of our troops in foreign territories and that no American soldier is in any country which has not requested the presence of such soldiers except those in ex-enemy states.

⁴¹ No record of the conversations under reference has been found in the Department of State files.

[BYRNES]

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by the United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch)

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] September 3, 1946.

On reading the scientific reports, the only query I had—because of my ignorance of the subject—was whether we were releasing information that was not necessary to an understanding of the subject. Dr. Tolman, General Farrell⁴² and General Groves have assured us that practically all of it is information that has been given out at different times in the Smyth and Acheson-Lilienthal reports and various scientific newspaper and magazine articles. It only has been correlated here—something that could be done and doubtless has been done by others.

I have always been puzzled about the amount of secrecy that was connected with the production of atomic energy. We do know that certain pumps have been ordered by the Russian government. We do know they try to buy certain raw materials. We do know they have received information and small samples through their spies in Canada and probably in other places.

The object of the scientific report was to show the necessity of controls at various points. I think it clearly does that. I hope that it will convince those who heretofore did not approve of the American proposals that the proposals were fair and just in the circumstances. The acceptance of this report will be evidence that controls and inspections are necessary. The public should be acquainted with the facts that there is nothing new and the security of the United States has not been affected, as evidenced by the statement of those who best know (Dr. Tolman, Gen. Farrell and Gen. Groves). We should be careful not to put ourselves in the position of really having told anything that was not necessary. As a matter of fact, it now appears that they already had all that was necessary and it had only to be correlated—which, as stated above, they doubtless had already done.

⁴² Maj. Gen. Thomas F. Farrell, Associate United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission.

This makes all the more puzzling to me the paragraph referring to the necessary giving of information to make the proposals more understandable in the Acheson-Lilienthal report. I appreciate that later on, if the A. D. A. is set up and it progresses, that more information of a secret nature will have to be made available, but only after a treaty is signed for controls, inspections and punishment.

We have to face very soon the fact that Brazil, Egypt and Mexico will be replaced. Therefore, some decisions must be heard before their exit and others come on the scene.

BERNARD M. BARUCH

USUN Files ⁴³

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. M. Gordon Knox, Adviser, Permanent United States Delegation to the United Nations

[NEW YORK,] September 4, 1946.

De Rose (France), in answer to a query, said his delegation had received no instructions on the Soviet request for military information. He added it was his personal and unofficial guess that France would support the U.K. and U.S. in this matter.

He said that the matter did not concern France directly, but that France was concerned by the Soviet attitude at the Peace Conference ⁴⁴ during recent weeks and might be inclined to adopt an anti-Russian viewpoint to this Soviet inquiry if it should become a political rather than a purely technical matter. His delegation would not want to discuss the question now because it lacked instructions. However, if instructed to oppose its placement on the Agenda he could think of many reasons. Two reasons he advanced were: There was no complaint, hence the matter was outside the Charter; the question is properly the concern of the MSC which has been blocked for months by Russian recalcitrance.

⁴³ Files of the United States Mission at the United Nations.

⁴⁴ For documentation on the Paris Peace Conference of 1946, see volumes III and IV.

USUN Files

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. M. Gordon Knox, Adviser, Permanent United States Delegation to the United Nations

[NEW YORK,] September 5, 1946.

Dr. Hsu⁴⁵ told USdel on September 5 that his chief (Hsia)⁴⁶ had strong opinions on the Soviet request for military information, but would be influenced by the American viewpoint. He said China would not like a prominent part in any debate, because of the present situation in China.⁴⁷

The Chinese delegation's opinion was that the matter should not be admitted to the Agenda because it is not covered by the Charter and to admit it would open a "floodgate" for other inappropriate inquiries. An alternative possibility of broadening the inquiry to include enemy states would be useful, but would not offset these objections, in the view of the Chinese.

Department of State Disarmament Files

*Position Paper Prepared in the Office of Special Political Affairs*⁴⁸

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] September 5, 1946.

PCA D-5/2

TENTATIVE UNITED STATES POSITION AT THE FORTHCOMING MEETING OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY WITH REGARD TO REGULATION OF ARMAMENTS

STATEMENT OF THE PROBLEM

If it is proposed that the subject of the regulation of armaments or disarmament be placed on the agenda of the General Assembly what position should the United States take?

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. While it is the traditional and present policy of the United States to support the regulation of armaments this Government does not believe an effective system for the regulation of armaments, except as regards atomic weapons and the international traffic in arms, can be established under present world conditions. Thus the United ⁴⁵ Dr. Shunsi Hsu of the Chinese Delegation to the Security Council.

⁴⁶ C. L. Hsia, Alternate Chinese Representative to the Security Council.

⁴⁷ For documentation on United States policy with respect to China, see volumes IX and X.

⁴⁸ This paper was a revision of an earlier draft in accordance with the suggestions of the Policy Committee on Arms and Armaments of September 3. It was transmitted to the United States Delegation at the United Nations as position paper SD/A/C.1/29, undated, titled "Regulation of Armaments." (IO Files)

States is not prepared to take the initiative of placing the matter on the agenda of the General Assembly and would prefer that the question not be raised at this meeting of the Assembly. If the general subject of the regulation of armaments or that specific phase of regulation dealing with the international traffic in arms is formally proposed for inclusion on the agenda, the United States representative should not oppose and should vote in favor of placing the matter on the agenda.

2. Once the matter is placed on the agenda of the General Assembly, the United States should recommend its reference to the Political and Security Committee for study and for report at the next session of the General Assembly.

3. If the Political and Security Committee should have the subject of the regulation of armaments under discussion, the United States representative at an appropriate time should propose the examination of the problems of the international traffic in arms by a subcommittee established for that purpose.

4. Should the subject of arms regulation arise in informal discussions, representatives of the United States should express to other delegations the view of this Government that while progress is possible at this time toward the regulation of atomic weapons and the international traffic in arms, action with respect to the overall regulation of other armaments appears premature in view of the major unsettled problems of peace and security. Foremost in their relation to armaments are the problems of the peace settlements, the enforcement of disarmament of the enemy states and the provision of forces to the Security Council in accordance with Article 43 of the Charter. It should be emphasized that the United States considers that the manner of the solution of these problems will affect substantially the eventual military requirements of member states, particularly the states having permanent membership on the Security Council.

DISCUSSION

1. Charter Provisions

a. Article 11 (1) of the Charter of the United Nations states that "The General Assembly may consider the . . . principles governing disarmament and the regulation of armaments, and may make recommendations with regard to such principles to the Members or to the Security Council or to both".

b. The jurisdiction of the General Assembly on this subject should be considered in connection with Article 26 which makes the Security Council "responsible for formulating, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee referred to in Article 47, plans to be submitted to the members of the United Nations for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments". Although the right of the General Assembly to discuss the problems of armament regulation and make recommendations thereon cannot be questioned the responsibility for making plans in this field lies with the Security Council.

2. United States position on regulation of armaments

A definitive position on the regulation of armaments has not been formulated by this Government primarily because of the unsettled problems of peace and security referred to (3) below. However, careful study of the problem is being made and it is possible that the United States may initiate discussion of the subject in the Security Council or the Military Staff Committee sometime within the coming year. As the Security Council is responsible for formulating plans in this field it appears highly desirable that substantive proposals for armament regulation originate in the Security Council.

3. Factors affecting timeliness of regulation proposals

There is nothing to be found in the Charter or in the discussions leading up to its adoption to show that steps toward the regulation of armaments or disarmament should be taken prior to or independently of the solution of other problems affecting peace and security. Instead, the Charter provisions relating to the regulation of armaments reflect the current and widely accepted concept that armaments are a factor contributing to security and cannot be considered independently of other problems affecting international security. It can be argued that the adoption by the General Assembly at this time of a declaration of principles to govern armament regulation in the postwar period might accelerate action toward the settlement of other pending problems of peace and security. The pending problems are of such a nature, however, that until they are settled the armament requirements of the United States cannot be determined. Included among these problems are:

- a. The conclusion of the peace treaties,
- b. the enforcement of the disarmament upon the enemy states, and
- c. the conclusion of agreements for providing contingents to the Security Council pursuant to Article 43 of the Charter.

It can hardly be expected that an effective system for the regulation of armaments, exclusive of the urgent and special problems now being dealt with by the Atomic Energy Commission or of the international traffic in arms, the United States position on which is discussed elsewhere in this paper, can be established while these issues remain unsettled.

4. Procedure for dealing with proposals, if submitted

There has been no intimation that proposals for the regulation of armaments or disarmament will be submitted to the General Assembly nor has the subject reached the agenda of the Assembly. It appears unlikely, therefore, that the General Assembly will consider this matter at the coming session. It is possible, however, that a member will submit a resolution on the subject or will request its inclusion on the agenda. In such event the United States should take no formal action which might be construed as opposing the consideration of the subject. The representative of this Government should support any formal action to include the regulation of armaments on the agenda.

If the General Assembly determines that the regulation of armaments should be considered at this time, the United States should recommend reference of the matter to the Political and Security Committee for study and for report to the General Assembly at its next session.

5. International Traffic in Arms

At the first session of the General Assembly in London, it was expected that the British would advance a proposal relating to the distinct phase of armament regulation which deals with the international traffic in arms. A tentative United States position was adopted with regard to the supervision of this traffic but the matter did not reach the agenda of the General Assembly at this meeting. Should a member propose the inclusion of the international traffic in arms on the agenda of the General Assembly the United States should give the proposal its full support. On the other hand if a proposal of this nature is not made and there is referred to the Political and Security Committee the question of the over-all regulation of armaments, the United States representative should at an appropriate time propose that consideration be given to the problem of the international traffic in arms. The United States should also propose the establishment of a subcommittee of the Political and Security Committee to examine this matter. A position along the line of that set forth in the addendum should be adopted. A more specific position on this subject will be made available if necessary.

Addendum

UNITED STATES POSITION WITH REGARD TO THE SUPERVISION OF THE INTERNATIONAL TRAFFIC IN ARMS

If the occasion arises the United States should be prepared to discuss the establishment of an international system of supervision over the traffic in arms (other than atomic weapons) in the forthcoming meeting of the General Assembly.

The position of this Government should be that a system of this nature can be instituted despite the unsettled character of arrangements for peace or the delay in establishing the security system provided for by the Charter. Generally speaking, it is felt that any system for the supervision of the international traffic in arms should contain the following elements:

1. Uniform domestic legislation to be enacted by states signatory to a convention for the supervision of this traffic. Such legislation should provide for:

a. Supervision by each government of the manufacture of arms, ammunition and implements of war within its jurisdiction, and

b. Licensing of exports and imports of arms, ammunition and implements of war.

2. A uniform definition of all articles to be considered as arms, ammunition and implements of war for the purposes of the system.

3. The systematic reporting to the United Nations of all manufacturing for export, and export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war.

4. The undertaking that exports of arms, ammunition and implements of war will be sanctioned by their governments only if such exports can be regarded as contributing to conditions of stability in recipient countries and to international peace and security. The interest of the Security Council in significant shipment of arms should be specifically recognized.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Memorandum of Conversation, by the Chief of the Division of International Security Affairs (Johnson)*⁴⁹

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] September 9, 1946.

PLANS AND PROSPECTS RELATING TO THE WORK OF THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION AND THE RELATION OF THE COMMISSION'S ACTIVITIES TO OTHER ASPECTS OF AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. John Hancock	} of Mr. Baruch's staff
Mr. Lincoln Gordon
Mr. Frank Lindsay
Mr. Joseph E. Johnson—IS
Mr. Marks—U
Mr. Blaisdell—IS
Mr. Hiss—SPA

I went to New York by previous agreement to have a discussion with Mr. Hancock and other members of Mr. Baruch's staff, on matters of common interest. During the discussion they indicated that:

(1) Mr. Baruch, and they themselves, have become increasingly conscious of the fact that their plans and activities have to be conceived in terms of the fact that U.S. participation in the work of the Atomic Energy Commission is very closely related to other aspects of U.S. foreign policy. They demonstrated a strong desire to make sure that what they are doing and will do is in line with over-all foreign policy considerations.

⁴⁹ The conversation here described occurred in New York on September 5.

(2) They stated that the first report of the Scientific and Technical Committee had been completed and that it was expected the report would be adopted by the Committee at a meeting on Friday, September 6. They believed that there was a fair chance that the Soviet Representative, who had already indicated his personal agreement with the report, would receive instructions to accept it. (They realized that such instructions might not be forthcoming.)

(3) They desire to avoid raising political issues for as long as possible and believe it may be feasible to postpone any further discussion of political issues for a period of from a month to three months.

(4) They hope that the Scientific and Technical Committee can continue its work for as long as six weeks, exploring technical problems related to raw materials and production of atomic energy. They are not yet clear as to how much can be done in this field within the limitations imposed by considerations of security of information.

(5) There is also a possibility that the Soviets may again raise, at any time in the next three months, major political questions, possibly by forcing a vote on the original Soviet proposal.

With respect to (1) above, they asked me what bearing I thought the present acrimonious temper of discussions in the Security Council might have on the work of the Atomic Energy Commission. In reply I stated in effect that the temper of discussions and character of issues in the Security Council are not primary considerations. They result from general over-all relations to which the key is, in my opinion, the situation in Paris. I added that we in the Department who are concerned with Security Council affairs, constantly refer important policy decisions to the Secretary in Paris. This is done not so much because he is the Secretary of State but primarily because the peace conference and the Council of Foreign Ministers are at the present time the focal points in major international relations, particularly those with the Soviet Union. I endeavored to hint as strongly as I could that I felt Mr. Baruch would wish to consult the Secretary in Paris before making major policy decisions, for precisely the same reason. Mr. Hancock and his colleagues appeared to concur in my views and to agree that the policy decisions should be made in the light of over-all developments, particularly of the Secretary's policy in Paris.

With respect to (5) I was asked whether I thought it likely that Mr. Gromyko would force a decision soon on the Soviet proposal for the control of atomic energy. I replied that while I could speak with no assurance on this point I felt it unlikely that he would do so, saying that I could see no advantage from the Soviet point of view in forcing an early decision on this matter. Moreover, it seemed to me if the Soviets seek additional issues with which to point up their differences with the West there are a number which they would choose before they choose that of the international control of atomic energy. Mr. Hancock and his colleagues appeared to agree that my estimate might be the correct one. Mr. Hancock added, however, that they are preparing material to be used when the political issues are raised again in the Atomic Energy Commission. Mr. Hancock nevertheless indicated clearly that Mr. Baruch's present desire is to avoid such issues. In this connection he inquired whether it might not be desirable for the Atomic Energy Commission to take a recess during the meeting of the General Assembly. I gave it as my personal opinion that this might be a good idea and suggested that it might be quite feasible to bring about such an adjournment. I pointed out that many of the Delegates on the Commission have several roles already and that the sessions of the Assembly would greatly add to their labors. I thought, therefore, that they might welcome, and possibly even initiate, a move for the adjournment of the Commission's work.

JOSEPH E. JOHNSON

501.BC/9-246 : Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Acting United States Representative at the United Nations (Johnson)

SECRET

WASHINGTON, September 9, 1946—7 p. m.

185. 1. The following comments concern USSR proposal that Council obtain certain information regarding military forces and take into account Secretary's instructions on this subject (reference secret telegram 4396, September 2 from Paris).

2. We believe you should informally sound out those Council members likely to oppose USSR proposal to determine their positions and indicate to them we desire USSR proposal should be kept off agenda pointing out obvious propaganda nature of USSR proposal, inconclusive manner in which the Council's jurisdiction is invoked, and, if desirable, any further arguments mentioned hereafter. If it appears that there will be sufficient votes to preclude placing USSR proposal on the agenda in its present form, we feel that extended discussion in Council should be avoided. We hope in this manner to bring on early vote so Council can pass on to matters more in keeping with its responsibilities and dignity. It seems to us that under these circumstances short statement by you to this effect would suffice.

3. Should it appear doubtful from your informal conversations with other members that there is assurance of keeping this matter off agenda, and if you, therefore, will need to make extended arguments in Council, then you may in your discretion take initiative in Council in seeking to keep matter off agenda, provided others are unwilling to do so. You may argue that we do not stand on technicalities when complaints are brought to attention of Council and indeed encourage full discussion of problems that concern Council. However, in this instance, USSR statement in no way indicates any relation to international peace and security or to the work of the Council.

a. The statements of "unconcealed anxiety" of world public opinion or of "natural uneasiness" cannot conceivably establish basis for considering the matter as dispute or situation under Chapter VI. Furthermore, USSR statement does not refer to Chapter VI.

b. While USSR statement refers to Chapter VII, there is nothing in that statement that can be construed as being threat to peace, breach of peace, or act of aggression.

c. We do not see what useful purpose, in relation to work of Council, desired information would serve. It is pertinent to inquire whether information is intended to relate to matters at present assigned by Council to MSC. How will it facilitate work of MSC if that is intention?⁵⁰

CLAYTON

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Notes of the Meeting of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission, New York, September 10, 1946, 11 a. m.

CONFIDENTIAL

Present: Mr. Bernard M. Baruch
 Mr. John M. Hancock
 Mr. Ferdinand Eberstadt
 Mr. Fred Searls
 Mr. Herbert B. Swope
 Mr. T. F. Farrell
 Dr. Richard C. Tolman
 Dr. D. F. Fleming
 Mr. Lincoln Gordon
 Mr. Franklin A. Lindsay
 Mr. Albin E. Johnson
 Mr. Henry G. Ingraham
 Mr. Joseph Chase
 Mr. R. Gordon Arneson

The staff had before it a draft of a letter to the President concerning the status of negotiations and possible alternatives of future action. The alternatives were: (1) to push ahead toward an open break, or (2) to proceed cautiously avoiding any votes and any aggressive action against the Russian intransigence.

⁵⁰ The Security Council considered the question of placing the Soviet proposal on its agenda at its 71st Meeting, September 23, and 72nd Meeting, September 24; see SC, 1st yr., 2nd Series, pp. 423-442 and 443-460, respectively. At its 72nd Meeting, the Council decided not to admit the subject to the agenda by a vote of seven to two (Soviet Union and Poland) with two abstentions (France and Egypt).

MR. HANCOCK: While the draft memorandum to the President is an excellent one, it should not leave the President in the dark as to the course we would propose to take unless instructed otherwise by him.

MR. BARUCH: We have a clear duty to report in writing to the President the present status of the negotiations. It is obvious that the AEC negotiations are now only a sideshow in the international picture. In fact, these negotiations seem to have become more and more a State Department affair, rather than our affair. The sideshow must be tied in with the main rings of the circus. It may be that our group should become advisory to the State Department, thereby tying it in with general diplomatic maneuvers. In any event, it is important that we inform the President now how things stand.

We are handicapped by the failure of the President to appoint members of the domestic Atomic Energy Commission. Until this Commission is appointed, the situation regarding the disclosure of information remains very foggy.

MR. HANCOCK: Whether the members of the domestic Atomic Energy Commission are appointed soon or not, makes little difference to our operations. It cannot materially influence the course of our negotiations, nor can it simplify the problem of disclosure of information.

MR. BARUCH: Two alternatives that we could consider are these: (1) get work started in the Commission on the drafting of the treaty, or (2) prepare an interim report from the Commission to the Security Council. If we must adopt a temporizing procedure this might better be carried out by the bureaucrats.

MR. EBERSTADT: The draft statement should be amended to include this third alternative of preparing an interim report to the Security Council. (Mr. Eberstadt presented a draft paragraph which would accomplish this end).

MR. SEARLS: The statement should contain a specific recommendation from us as to the course of procedure we think should be followed. The statement should remind the President that whatever course of action is taken serious consideration must be given to the military needs of the country in the event negotiations break down.

MR. HANCOCK: In his statement of 27 August, Secretary Patterson clearly stated that the War Department must plan its operations on the contingency that no international agreement for the control of atomic energy may be reached.

MR. BARUCH: In strengthening our military potential against the day that negotiations may break down, efforts should be redoubled to accumulate stockpiles with raw materials and atomic bombs.

MR. HANCOCK: We should follow our present course of avoiding any definite break and avoid the taking of any votes and inform the President that we are doing so unless we receive different instructions. At the same time we must consider the question of whether it may be necessary to begin using threats to force the issue. We might raise this question with the President in the interim.

Concerning the report of the Military Staff Committee about which Mr. Baruch inquired, it is being sent to the Joint Chiefs of Staff in part as a means of needling them into action. As far as military policy as it relates to our negotiations is concerned, our group should receive these instructions not from the Joint Chiefs of Staff, but from the President.

MR. EBERSTADT: The value of using the Military Staff Committee in determining when the various stages to the treaty have been reached lies in the fact that the veto remains with the Big Five in the Security Council. There are four possibilities that might be considered in deciding when certain stages have been completed.

(1) The decision might be left with the United States alone. (It is most unlikely that any other nations would agree to this).

(2) Give the Military Staff Committee responsibility for determining when the stages have been completed.

(3) Leave this decision to the Security Council; and

(4) use the present Atomic Energy Commission as the review board to determine when stages have been completed. (Mr. Hancock felt this was the best alternative, since it would obviate the veto).

MR. EBERSTADT: We should describe to the President very clearly the impasse we have now reached and state that unless we receive instructions to the contrary we will continue our present methods of avoiding a break. We should express regret that the members of the domestic Atomic Energy Commission have not yet been appointed. We should point out that even though we continue to attempt to avoid a break, the President should be aware of the necessity of laying plans concerning our national security in the event negotiations fail, and should appoint the members of the domestic Atomic Energy Commission as soon as possible.

MR. BARUCH: There is urgent need for a coordination of our work with that of the domestic Atomic Energy Commission, the State Department, and the military authorities.

MR. FARRELL: We should press for a vote on the report of the Scientific and Technical Committee and throw the discussion of the whole issue back into the political committees.

MR. HANCOCK: We cannot afford to let the issue come to a head in the Atomic Energy Commission before the middle of November.

MR. EBERSTADT: We must bear in mind that we cannot control the other delegates to the AEC. The British, French, and Canadian delegations had indicated pretty clearly that they do not want the issue forced. If the decisions were taken, however, to present an interim report to the Security Council, the other delegations would probably go along with us on this proposal.

MR. HANCOCK: Our group is not directly concerned with the nation's military policy. Responsibility on these matters rests with the President. We are charged with responsibility of carrying out an already established policy as regards negotiations leading to the establishment of an ADA and we must proceed in carrying out that objective unless and until our instructions are changed by the President. While we can remind the President of the military implications that flow from the progress of our negotiations, we should not presume to tell him how the military problem should be handled.

MR. FARRELL: An important point to make in connection with the need for the prompt appointment of the domestic commission is that until the commission is established no thorough program for the procurement of raw materials can be established.

MR. EBERSTADT: The advantage of the first alternative of pressing for a break lies in the fact that the public would be aroused to the dangers that confront us and the world, and it would result in widespread, popular support for military preparedness. Adoption of a policy of avoiding a break makes the necessity of prompt military preparations nonetheless imperative but the necessity appears less clear-cut.

MR. BARUCH: The statement to the President should point out the deleterious effect on the international situation of the disintegration of our economy at home.

MR. SWOPE: It may be necessary to effect an open rupture with the U.S.S.R. on the return of Secretary Byrnes from the Paris Peace Conference. The memorandum to the President should underscore Gromyko's specific refusal to accept our proposals either in whole or in part.

MR. BARUCH: In the absence of Secretary Byrnes there is no alternative but to report directly to the President on this situation. The President is entitled to know how things stand in order that he may decide whether any change of instructions is indicated. He is entitled to know all of the things we know about the negotiations and what our views are.

MR. SWOPE: Mr. Baruch should see the President personally and talk to him at length on the basis of points prepared in advance. There is no use kidding ourselves about the main issue. Russia is the stumbling block.

MR. BARUCH: It is quite clear that the other delegations would not go along with us at this time if we attempted to force the issue with the Russians. We have lost the initiative to Russia, and other nations are beginning to waver more and more. The longer we hesitate and the more we retreat, the more other nations will shift away from us. We are losing ground every day and we are in danger of losing the support of some of the nine we have had with us. It was quite clear in the discussion with Mr. Ignatieff that Canada wants delay. The same appears to be true of other delegations, notably the British and French and probably the Chinese as well.

MR. EBERSTADT: If we attempt to set a deadline for a vote on our proposal versus the Russian, it is quite probable that the French, British, Canadian, and Chinese delegates would not support us.

MR. HANCOCK: In the memorandum to the President we should point out that we are continuing to push forward on the policy established with the approval of the President immediately prior to the opening of the negotiations. We should remind him of the need for considering what steps this nation should take in the event our negotiations fail.

MR. BARUCH: We are all perfectly clear in our own minds that we must do everything we can to bring about the successful conclusions of our negotiations. Nevertheless, we are also clear in our own minds that we must tell the President now what the situation is.

MR. FARRELL: Whatever the outcome of these negotiations may be, our position will be strengthened if we refuse to retreat from our basic proposals. Even if we fail we must be able to say that we stood firm on our position.

MR. HANCOCK: The initiative has passed to the Russians and they may take advantage of these in forcing a break. For our parts we must not push for a breakdown unless we are instructed to do so by the President.

Concerning the report of the Military Staff Committee to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, it contains three recommendations which are quite controversial:—

(1) That the Navy should go ahead to develop atomic power for use in battleships. This proposal is absolutely contrary to established U. S. policy as transmitted to Mr. Baruch and cannot be countenanced if we are to have any effective system of international control of atomic energy.

(2) That a set of bombs should remain in existence for punitive purposes after the ADA is established. Strong arguments can be made on either side of this question. It is obvious that the chances of getting a treaty are much better if it provides that there should be no bombs in existence.

(3) That the Military Staff Committee should have responsibility for deciding when the various stages have been reached and for passing upon the location of large atomic energy installations, including power plants. This raises the question of whether the Military Staff Committee would be infringing on the administrative operations of the ADA.

MR. SWOPE: In view of the confusion that exists in the public mind as to the provisions to the Baruch Plan, it would seem desirable to put out a reaffirmation of the Baruch proposals.

It was generally agreed that the draft of the memorandum to the President should be rewritten in the light of the comments above and that when rewritten it should be sent to Mr. Swope for final editing.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Position Paper Prepared in the Division of International Security Affairs*⁵¹

WASHINGTON, September 11, 1946.

STATEMENT OF THE PROBLEM

If the question arises in the forthcoming General Assembly session as to whether the General Assembly should ask for a report on the work of the Atomic Energy Commission, what position should the United States take?

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. The United States should not take the initiative to request a report on the Atomic Energy Commission.

2. If another member of the General Assembly proposes that a report be requested on the Atomic Energy Commission, the United States Delegation might attempt to discourage the move informally but if there is substantial support for such a request he should not formally oppose it.

3. If a report is requested, the United States Delegation should take the position that it would be preferable that the Security Council be asked to request a report from the Atomic Energy Commission for the information of the General Assembly.

The United States Delegation should give the following reasons for the above positions:

⁵¹ This paper was transmitted by the Chief of the Division (Johnson) to Lincoln Gordon at the Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission on September 11. Mr. Gordon replied in a letter of September 20 that it was entirely satisfactory to the Delegation. (Department of State Atomic Energy Files)

A report from the Atomic Energy Commission at this time would be preliminary and inconclusive and of little value to the General Assembly.

Since the General Assembly by its own Resolution of January 24, 1946, has obligated the Security Council to forward reports when appropriate, it is to be expected that the General Assembly will receive a report from the Security Council on the Atomic Energy Commission after the Commission has had more time to consider the problem. However, in line with the policy of this Government not to oppose discussion of questions it will not oppose any move to request a report if there is a substantial desire on the part of the members to request a report.

If a request for a report is initiated, it should be communicated preferably to the Security Council and not directly to the Atomic Energy Commission, in order that the Security Council, which is responsible for directing the security aspects of the Commission's work in accordance with the General Assembly Resolution, could establish guidance in terms of security directions for the preparation of the report.

DISCUSSION

1. Can the General Assembly request a report on the Atomic Energy Commission?

Article 15 of the Charter states, "The General Assembly shall receive and consider annual and special reports from the Security Council; these reports shall include an account of the measures that the Security Council has decided upon or taken to maintain international peace and security". Article 24, paragraph 3 states, "The Security Council shall submit annual and, when necessary, special reports to the General Assembly for its consideration". It is clear from the above Charter provisions that the Security Council has an obligation to make reports and the General Assembly has a right to receive reports.

The General Assembly, however, by its own resolution of January 24, 1946 established the procedure for the transmission of atomic energy reports to the General Assembly. "The Commission shall submit the reports and recommendations to the Security Council, and such reports and recommendations shall be made public unless the Security Council, in the interest of peace and security otherwise directs. In the appropriate cases the Security Council shall transmit these reports to the General Assembly and the members of the United Nations . . .".

The General Assembly, therefore, will receive reports on the Atomic Energy Commission in appropriate cases from the Security Council. However, there appears to be no restriction on the General Assembly assuming the initiative to request the Security Council for a report on the Atomic Energy Commission. The General Assembly has a right to receive reports from the Security Council. The General Assembly established the Atomic Energy Commission and could modify its terms of reference, although as a political actuality this would be extremely difficult without general concurrence and backing of the permanent members of the Security Council. Finally, there is no evidence that the Charter silence on the question as to whether the General Assembly can take the initiative and ask for a report establishes a prohibition on the General Assembly action.

There is also no specific provision which would bar the General Assembly from requesting the Atomic Energy Commission directly for a report. However, inasmuch as the Security Council is responsible for directing the Commission on certain aspects of its work in accordance with the General Assembly Resolution of January 24, 1946, which states, "In view of the Security Council's primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security the Security Council shall issue directions to the Commission in matters affecting security", and inasmuch as the reports from the Commission must be cleared by the Security Council, it would seem preferable that the request for a report should be communicated to the Security Council for transmittal to the Atomic Energy Commission. This would allow the Security Council to send security directions, if considered necessary, to the Commission in order to provide guidance for preparing the report. The substance of the report and its time of transmittal might be affected, however, by questions of international peace and security which the Security Council alone can decide.

Conclusion: The General Assembly, therefore, has a right to request a report on the Atomic Energy Commission, and it would appear preferable that the Security Council be asked to request a report from the Atomic Energy Commission for the information of the General Assembly.

2. Should the General Assembly request a report on the Atomic Energy Commission this year?

The Atomic Energy Commission has been organized less than four months. In that time concrete but general proposals have been placed before the Commission. These proposals have been discussed but not in conclusive detail. It would not appear fruitful to the General Assembly nor judicious at this time to open up the discussion of these general proposals in the General Assembly through the vehicle of a report from the Commission. There would be the danger that the special problem of atomic energy control would be closely associated with the political lines drawn in the Assembly on general international problems. The development of such a situation at this preliminary stage might decrease the chances of resolving the problems before the Atomic Energy Commission.

The General Assembly itself has recognized the special nature of the atomic energy problem. That special nature is being examined at the present time in the Atomic Energy Commission by scientists as well as representatives on the Commission. Until the Commission has had more time to examine the problem and discuss the proposals in detail a report would be inconclusive.

Conclusion: It would be inadvisable to have a report from the Commission at this time because such a report would be preliminary and inconclusive and, therefore, of little value to the General Assembly. Also a discussion on the report at this time might intensify problems rather than assist in their solution in the Atomic Energy Commission.

IO Files

*Summary of the Sequence of Events Relating to Work of the United Nations Military Staff Committee on Article 43 of the United Nations Charter, New York, September 12–September 18, 1946*⁵²

SECRET

On 12 September 1946, General Kenney arranged a private visit with General Vasiliev with a view to encouraging some action on the part of the Soviet Representatives. General Vasiliev was advised that the U.S. Delegation was about to submit a proposal for the subcommittee on basic principles to reconvene and continue with its work. General Vasiliev was encouraged to do everything possible in order that the Soviet Delegation could take part in the work of the subcommittee when it was reconvened.

On 13 September 1946, to further confirm the comment General Kenney had made to General Vasiliev, the U.S. Delegation submitted a proposal outlining the directive which the Military Staff Committee had received. The resolution which the subcommittee had adopted was also reviewed with emphasis placed on the fact that four members had complied with the resolution but since all members had not complied, the second meeting of the subcommittee had been delayed indefinitely. The U.S. Delegation therefore proposed that the Military Staff Committee consider whether or not it was desirable for the subcommittee to resume its work at an early date with instructions to study all available oral and written statements which may be presented by any members and to submit recommendations to the Military Staff Committee as soon as possible.

⁵² This document is an excerpt from document USMS/54/2, Enclosure "B," a summary covering the period February 15–October 24, 1946, submitted to the Joint Chiefs of Staff by the United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee on October 25. Paragraph letter designations and references by document symbol to unprinted Military Staff Committee documentation which appear in the source text have been omitted. (IO Files)

On 18 September 1946, at the 18th meeting of the Military Staff Committee, the U.S. proposal to resume work of the subcommittee on basic principles was considered. The Soviet Delegation made a long statement, it pointed out the question of the armed forces to be made available to the Security Council was a new question in history and a rather complicated one. In the course of the statement, the Soviet Delegation submitted a proposal entitled "The Purpose of the United Nations Armed Forces".⁵³ In submitting the proposal, the Soviet Representatives pointed out that they were only submitting the first question, namely the question of the Purpose of the United Nations Armed Forces, for consideration. It was pointed out that it was quite obvious that other questions such as the basic principles governing the organization of the armed forces and the employment of the armed forces would have to be discussed. General Kenney proposed that the subcommittee should resume meetings at an early date. The Soviet Representatives proposed further that the subcommittee should keep to an order of sequence in their discussions. The first principle questions which the subcommittee should consider and discuss was the question

⁵³ The Soviet proposal was as follows :

"1. All Armed Forces, made available to the Security Council by Member Nations of the United Nations, in accordance with Articles 42 and 43 of the Charter, are intended for the sole purpose of prevention or suppression of acts of aggression with the object of maintaining or restoring international peace and security.

2. The Armed Forces, made available to the Security Council by Member Nations, are placed at its disposal only for the period necessary to prevent or to suppress aggression.

3. The Armed Forces, made available to the Security Council by Member Nations of the United Nations, may be employed only by decision of the Security Council and only in such cases when measures, taken in accordance with Article 41, would be or have proved inadequate to prevent or suppress aggression and when the threat to world peace and security is such that it necessitates the employment of these Armed Forces.

4. These Armed Forces may not be employed for purposes inconsistent with the principles and the spirit of the United Nations Charter, with principles of equal rights and self-determination of nations, or for the purpose of suppressing national liberating movements or interfering in the internal affairs of a State.

5. After the Armed Forces, made available to the Security Council, have fulfilled their task of prevention or the suppression of aggression, they shall be withdrawn to their national territories in not more than days from the date of the termination of such activities, unless otherwise decided by the Security Council.

6. If for any reasons these Armed Forces remain in territories or territorial waters granted for the use of such Forces, under special agreements between the Security Council and other Member Nations, for the passage, stationing or action of these Forces against an aggressor, they shall be withdrawn to their national territories not later than 30 days after the termination of activities undertaken for the purpose of prevention or suppression of aggression, unless otherwise decided by the Security Council." (IO Files) of the Purpose of the United Nations Forces. After the subcommittee had completed work on the subject of "Purpose" it should submit its recommendations to the Military Staff Committee for its consideration and approval. The proposal of General Kenney with the modifications proposed by the Soviet Delegation were adopted by the Military Staff Committee.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by Mr. Franklin A. Lindsay⁵⁴ to the United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch)

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] September 14, 1946.

Subject: Notes on Conversations With Australian, Canadian and Netherlands Delegations.

Mr. Ralph Harry, Evatts' Deputy, returned to New York yesterday after two weeks in Washington. He, together with McNaughton and Ignatieff, made a round of the other delegations in order to determine the general attitude toward the future of negotiations. Harry stated that he found among delegations other than Russia and Poland a fairly widespread feeling that agreement would prove to be impossible. They believe that the main consideration has now become the determination of the proper issues and timing so that the break will be made on terms to our advantage rather than to the Russians' advantage.

He indicated that there is general approval of the McNaughton plan of procedure for the next phase,⁵⁵ and that a major break should be avoided until after the minor treaties have been completed at Paris. However, he felt strongly that there was no weakening in any of the delegations on the substance of the American Plan.

He stated that it was his own opinion that very shortly work should be initiated on an outline treaty which could be submitted by majority vote to the Security Council. This treaty should be in sufficient detail to permit the possibility of last-minute Russian acceptance in the Security Council.

Such an outline treaty might be submitted to the Security Council together with a request for approval. If approval was forthcoming (including the five permanent members), the Security Council might then refer the document back to the Commission to be used as the basis of preparing a final treaty for signature. If, on the other hand, we are not to get acceptance by the five permanent members, the outline treaty would be far more desirable from our standpoint as it would not be necessary to settle all the questions upon which disagreement between the "friendly" members might arise. If we were to attempt to settle such disagreements at this stage, we would give the Russians the opportunity to exploit our differences to their own advantage.

⁵⁴ United States Delegation staff member.

⁵⁵ Regarding General McNaughton's proposal, see Mr. Baruch's memorandum to the President, September 17, part III, p. 926.

At luncheon today, Beelaerts van Blokland, of the Netherlands Delegation, said that apparently there is a general stop order out from Moscow on the signing of all pending United Nations documents. The Russian Member of the Headquarters Commission has refused to sign their report pending approval from Moscow. In the Security Council, Russian approval of the report to the General Assembly has been likewise held up. He thought that the delay in signing our scientific report was due to a general order and was not directed specifically against atomic energy negotiations. It was probably a result of Paris disagreements.

He indicated approval of the McNaughton proposal and stated further that a break should be avoided until after the Paris conference.

He and van Kleffens have been working on a draft treaty which he stated was a "dressed-up edition of the American Plan". They had in mind that this might be submitted to the Commission to be used as a basis of discussion in preparation of recommendations to the Security Council. It seems to me that if we find that this document does not basically differ from the United States' proposals, it would be extremely advantageous to have it used as a basis of discussion, rather than submitting an American draft. He also expressed an opinion that if useful work can be done, there should be no adjournment during the period in which the General Assembly will be meeting.

FRANKLIN A. LINDSAY

501.BC/9-1446

The State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee to the Secretary of State

SECRET

WASHINGTON, 14 September 1946.

SWN-4744

Subject: Guidance for J.C.S. Representatives on the Military Staff Committee, U.N., on Making all National Forces Available to the Security Council.

Reference: SWNCC 219/8. The following memorandum is forwarded to the Secretary of State at the request of the Joint Chiefs of Staff:

"The United Kingdom representatives on a subcommittee of the Military Staff Committee of the United Nations have proposed inclusion in the Standard Form of Agreement concerning the size and composition of the armed forces to be made available to the Security Council an article as follows:

[Member Nation] guarantees to place, if requested by the Security Council, the whole of its national forces at the disposal of the Security Council so far as its other commitments and transport resources permit.⁵⁸

"The British members on the subcommittee of the Military Staff Committee presently drafting a Standard Form of Agreement have already agreed to inclusion of Article II as set forth in the draft agreement in SWNCC 219/8. It is, therefore, concluded that the British intend their proposed article to be in addition to Article II instead of a replacement for it. It is noted, however, that in the memorandum proposing the new article to the subcommittee, the British representatives stated, 'An agreement of this nature would seem to eliminate the need for large predetermined forces under Article II,' and that a British representative stated in effect in a subcommittee meeting on 22 August that national contributions should be kept as small as possible and that, in order to do this, member nations should agree to reinforce these contributions by the method set forth in the proposed article. These statements indicate a trend of thought which, if adopted by all other member nations, might result in the Security Council having on call armed forces insufficient to cope with even foreseeable situations. The purpose of making contributions under Article 43 of the Charter which is 'in order to contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security' may be vitiated by this trend. Aside from the proposed article itself, this trend of thought on the part of the British is objectionable from the military point of view.

"If member nations pledge quotas commensurate with their resources, the forces permanently available under the provisions of Article 43 of the Charter should be ample for any need that can develop, short of major war. The outbreak of war among the major powers will mean that the United Nations has failed to achieve its purpose and will terminate the organization as constituted under the present Charter.

"It is considered that the political importance of the matter is paramount. Its military implications are nebulous because of the indefiniteness of the phrase 'so far as its other commitments and transport resources permit' and because possible political and popular interpretations of the proposed article are unknown. The question is primarily whether additional forces, if required, will be made available to the Security Council by negotiation between the Security Council and member nations when or after an emergency arises, or whether the United States will agree beforehand that all forces not required for other commitments will be made available if needed. This and other political implications contained in the British proposal are outside the competence of the Joint Chiefs of Staff but appear to be of major importance to the United States. The Joint Chiefs of Staff, therefore, feel they should have advice from proper governmental authority as to the attitude of the United States Government toward the British proposal before preparing and forwarding to their representatives on the Military Staff Committee a statement of the position to be assumed toward it. It is possible that in the light of the advice received, military objections will become apparent which are not now perceived because of the obscure nature of the implications surrounding the British proposal.

⁵⁸ At the 3rd Meeting of the Sub-Committee for the Consideration of a Standard Form of Agreement Between the Security Council and Member Nations of the United Nations Concerning the Provision of United Nations Forces, the British representative raised the possibility of including such an article. The United Kingdom mentioned the proposal at several subsequent meetings without eliciting support from the other delegations. At the 7th Meeting, August 23, the United Kingdom offered two alternative drafts which simply specified that member nations had an obligation to provide additional forces should those listed in the annexes to the initial agreements prove inadequate. Later in the meeting, the United Kingdom accepted the view of the United States that the purview of the Sub-Committee was limited to agreements with respect to agreements providing for specific forces. It did not abandon the principle upon which its proposal was based. Therefore, while the Sub-Committee took no action on the British proposal, the possibility of subsequent discussion of it by the Military Staff Committee existed. (IO Files)

"It is requested that this memorandum be forwarded to the Secretary of State with the request that he furnish the Joint Chiefs of Staff, as a matter of priority, a statement of the United States Government's attitude toward the British proposal."

It is requested that the information desired by the Joint Chiefs of Staff be forwarded to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee for transmittal to the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

For the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee:

ERNEST A. GROSS
for J. H. Hilldring,
Chairman

501.BC Atomic/9-2046

*Memorandum by The United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch) to President Truman*⁵⁷

SECRET

NEW YORK, September 17, 1946.

Subject: Request for Further Statement of Policy for U.S. Representative, United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, in the Light of Proceedings to Date

The first stage of the work of the Atomic Energy Commission, which began three months ago with my statement of the United States

⁵⁷ Mr. Baruch came to Washington on September 18 to report to the President, but due to the fact that their conversation was devoted to the Wallace incident (see Mr. Hancock's memorandum, p. 932), Mr. Baruch did not deliver this paper at that time, instead transmitting it from New York on the following day. On September 26, the Department forwarded a copy to Secretary Byrnes in Paris. On September 25, Acting Secretary Clayton asked President Truman to defer a decision on Mr. Baruch's recommendations until the Acting Secretary had studied the memorandum and had had an opportunity to discuss it with the Chief Executive. (Department of State Atomic Energy Files) plan for international control, is now coming to an end. A new phase is about to begin. The Commission's future course is so dominated by the general development of international policy that I feel it essential to report to you on the progress of our negotiations to date, to acquaint you with the issues, and to seek your instructions as to the alternative courses of action likely to face us in the near future.

I. ORGANIZATION AND APPROACH OF THE U.S. DELEGATION

The Staff of the United States Delegation has been organized so as to include experts in all of the various specialties required for our task. In my long experience, I have never been associated with a group of men of such outstanding calibre and unqualified devotion to the public interest. Many are serving entirely at their own expense. All are unstintingly sacrificing their personal interests and willingly undergoing inconvenience in order to further this work, so important to this nation and to the entire world.

In addition to the distinguished full-time scientific members of our staff, we have had the continuous assistance of a panel of outstanding scientists through whom we have kept closely in touch with the scientific profession at large. We have also maintained close contact with the Department of State, with the Joint Chiefs of Staff, with the United States members of the United Nations Military Staff Committee, with Major General Leslie R. Groves, representing the Manhattan Project, and with members of the Lilienthal Board of Consultants who prepared, last March, the State Department "Report on the International Control of Atomic Energy".

In accordance with the basic United States policy, confirmed in your instructions to us, we have provided other members of the Commission with the underlying scientific information "essential to a reasonable understanding of the proposals" we have advocated. It has been possible for our Delegation to fulfill this commitment without disclosing any information not contained in previously published scientific or official literature or not properly cleared under security provisions.

No secret information has been released in the course of the discussions. Obviously, even the mere discussion of published information inevitably helps to clarify the picture to some extent for the scientists of other countries. Such clarification has been contemplated as a part of our national policy ever since the Agreed Declaration of Washington announced by you and Prime Ministers Attlee and MacKenzie King last November, and is, of course, a prerequisite to any attempt to negotiate a treaty of the kind sought by our government.

In this connection, you should be aware that there is considerable doubt as to the precise extent of real secrecy surrounding the science and technology of atomic energy. Much information has necessarily been revealed through the publication of the Smyth Report, the Acheson-Lilienthal Report, and scientific literature authorized for release in accordance with our national policy. Information has also been given in publications not presented for official clearance. We know of efforts by other nations to acquire a few items of industrial equipment specially adapted for use in certain atomic energy manufacturing processes. We also know of attempts by other nations to acquire atomic raw materials. Certain secret information and small samples of secret materials have been obtained through espionage activities in Canada, which are now a matter of public record. Similar activities are probably going on in this country. While expert testimony suggests a period of at least five years before any other country will be in a position to produce atomic weapons, we are not ourselves able to assess accurately the length of this margin of time. It is conceivable that this margin may be cut, especially under the pressure of an atomic bomb race.

Throughout the deliberations to date, we have adhered rigorously to your original instructions, on which my initial statement of the U.S. position was based. We have encouraged the presentation of other proposals which would meet the mandate given the Commission by the General Assembly last January, and have indicated that we would welcome suggestions to strengthen the U.S. proposals. Yet only a single alternative proposal has been put forward—that of the Soviet Union—and, for the reasons stated below, their plan in no way meets the Commission's instructions from the General Assembly.

We have steadfastly refrained from the use of pressure or threats of any variety. Nor have we suggested plans for dealing with the situation which might arise if unanimous agreement on effective international control proves impossible. We have regarded it as our single task to work toward complete agreement on a plan fully satisfying the Commission's terms of reference as interpreted in your instructions to us.

II. WORK OF THE COMMISSION TO DATE

The work of the Commission to date may be briefly summarized in three phases as follows:

1. Presentation of Original Positions of the Several Delegates

This phase occupied the Commission in meetings from June 14 through July 15. Only two proposals were put forward. In my address of June 14, I stated in broad outline the United States proposals as approved by you. Our plan was subsequently elaborated in three supplemental memoranda.

As you know, the U. S. plan called for the establishment of an international Atomic Development Authority responsible for the supervision, inspection, and control of all activities in the field of atomic energy, starting with the raw materials as they come out of the ground and including ownership or management of the necessary refineries, plants for the production of nuclear fuels, and major installations producing atomic energy for peaceful purposes.

The Authority would be supported by a system of rapid and effective punishments for violations and by free access for geological surveyors and other necessary inspectors to prevent misuse and insure compliance. The Great Powers' veto in the Security Council would not be permitted as a device for nations to protect themselves or their friends from punishment for violations of a treaty controlling atomic energy which they had previously accepted. Thus we proposed to eliminate the veto in the atomic energy field, not on unforeseeable policy issues which might arise in the future, but on punishment for crimes specifically defined in advance by voluntary agreement.

After a system of international control has been brought into effective operation by appropriate stages, we proposed to cease bomb production and dispose of then existing bombs pursuant to a treaty, properly ratified according to our constitutional processes. We left open the question as to whether the treaty should provide for dismantling of the bombs or for their transfer to an international agency for possible use against aggressors.

The Soviet proposal, presented on June 19, called for an international convention merely outlawing the production and use of atomic weapons and requiring the destruction of all stocks of atomic weapons, whether in a finished or unfinished state, within three months after entry into force of the convention.

This agreement would be implemented only through national legislation and through international action by the Security Council under the present provisions of the U. N. Charter. Other features of the Soviet position are discussed in point 2 below.

The U.S. position was generally supported by nine other delegates, representing Australia, Brazil, Canada, China, Egypt, France, Mexico, the Netherlands, and the United Kingdom. Their statements ranged from an unqualified endorsement by Egypt to a general indication of agreement by others. The Soviet position was supported only by Poland.

2. Consideration of the Soviet Views

The Soviet views were elaborated by Ambassador Gromyko in a series of closed meetings from July 24 to August 6. We then learned that the Soviet plan envisages no systematic measures of prevention, control or inspection, other than through national legislation. Such national legislation might prevent misuse of atomic energy by private individuals within a country, but it would of course have no effect on the national governments themselves.

As a practical matter, the Soviet proposal bears a strong resemblance to the many abortive and ineffectual agreements of the past for disarmament or nonaggression. The only form of international implementing action which the Soviet plan contemplates is punitive measures to be taken by the Security Council under the present provisions of the Charter. We do not see how such measures could be either swift or certain, as is essential from the very nature of the problem, or how they could be kept free from willful obstructionism through the employment of the veto.

Although Mr. Gromyko repeatedly stated a willingness to discuss details of "how the Security Council should carry out its functions as regards sanctions against a possible violator", he consistently failed to indicate any fruitful line which such discussion of "details" might take. Despite repeated efforts by the Mexican, Netherlands, French, Australian, and other Delegates, as well as ourselves, to have the Soviet representative make plain the workings of his proposal, he refused to consider international preventive control measures (as contrasted with punishment after an offense) and failed to recognize any need for special international arrangements to aid the Security Council in enforcing an atomic energy agreement. He stated, in effect, that the atomic bomb was to be viewed exactly as any other weapon and that it could be handled entirely within the existing framework of the U.N. Charter.

In our judgment preventive measures are the very essence of control. Without them, we do not see how the Security Council could even have knowledge of prospective violations. The very establishment of the Commission and the terms of the Moscow Resolution demand the creation of special safeguards aimed at anticipating and preventing the use of atomic weapons. In the face of this, the Soviet government is apparently proposing that a convention outlawing atomic weapons be signed immediately and that the Commission proceed later to the discussion of controls, safeguards, and sanctions, although every indication suggests that such later discussion would be utterly fruitless.

These meetings had the effect of building up a clear record before the entire Commission of the weakness of the Soviet position, which completely violates the express mandate to work out effective controls and safeguards. That mandate, as you know, was unanimously approved by the General Assembly last January on the basis of the Moscow Declaration of the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom, and the United States. Thus the Soviet Government's present position is sharply at variance with the position it endorsed only a few months ago.

In fact, as pointed out by Dr. Padilla Nervo⁵⁸ of Mexico, the Soviet proposal adds almost nothing to the commitments already undertaken in the United Nations Charter itself, since all members have already agreed to "settle their international disputes by peaceful means" and to "refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force". (Article 2)

During these same discussions, the Soviet representative stated flatly that his Government could not accept the U.S. proposals as now presented, "either as a whole or in their separate parts." He regarded our plan as incompatible with Soviet views on national sovereignty which would be violated, he asserted, by any form of international inspection. He also objected vigorously to any change in the application of the veto, although we have proposed to forbid the use of the veto only (1) to prevent escape from punishment for violation of crimes specifically defined in a treaty voluntarily agreed to by all participants, and (2) in the day-to-day administrative operations of the Atomic Development Authority. He assailed any suggestion for modifying the veto as "undermining" the United Nations, although in our opinion adoption of the U.S. proposals would greatly strengthen the United Nations. In his view, the importance of inspection, which, along with access, we regard as essential, was "greatly exaggerated" and "a superficial approach" to the problem.

Two of the chief fundamental issues separating the Soviet and Polish views from those held by other ten nations may be summarized as follows:

(1) The Soviet proposal relies for compliance solely on the good faith and mutual trust of nations, backed up by punitive action through the Security Council with the Great Power veto intact, and without any systematic means of warning the Security Council of prospective violations; whereas the U.S. plan calls for an effective international organization to prevent in advance, so far as possible, the misuse of atomic energy, and to provide adequate warning and swift and certain punishment, unimpeded by the veto, for violations if they do occur.

(2) The Soviet proposal calls for the immediate outlawry of the production and use of atomic weapons, and the destruction of existing stocks, prior to the erection of international safeguards to ensure compliance and without any provision for swift and certain punishment of violators; whereas the U.S. proposal requires as a prerequisite to the elimination of atomic weapons that there be established effective preventive safeguards and machinery for punishment.

⁵⁸ Dr. Luis Padilla Nervo, Mexican Representative at the General Assembly and on the Security Council and the Atomic Energy Commission.

The U.S. plan includes the Soviet proposal in the sense of also embracing a convention outlawing atomic weapons. But the Soviet plan stops at that point, while we insist on simultaneous, effective, and enforceable safeguards to ensure that the production and use of atomic weapons is not merely illegal but is in fact prevented.

We see no possibility of reconciling these views. Agreement could be effected only through a drastic change in the Soviet position or through a sacrifice by us of the very principles which were unanimously endorsed by the United Nations last January and restated in your instructions to me. Abandonment of those principles would mean defrauding the peoples of the world.

3. Work of the Scientific and Technical Committee

By the end of July, it was generally recognized that no further progress could be made by discussions on the policy plane, without serious risk of breaking negotiations in advance of a general understanding of the scientific aspects of the problem. We also appreciated the particular importance of avoiding any open rupture at that time, when the Peace Conference in Paris was just getting under way.

In view of our instructions from the State Department, we therefore acquiesced in the motion of the French Delegate, to adjourn the discussion of policy for the time being, and to request the Scientific and Technical Committee to prepare a report on "the question of whether the effective control of atomic energy is possible, together with an indication of the methods by which the Scientific and Technical Committee considers that effective control can be achieved." The Scientific Committee has been working intensively over the last five weeks. Its report was completed on September 3rd, but still awaits formal action by the Soviet Delegate.

Early in the discussions of the scientists, it was found that a direct reply to the request before their Committee would inevitably involve policy considerations. The Committee, therefore, limited itself to a discussion of the basic underlying facts in the production and use of atomic energy, together with an indication of the possibilities of misuse at each stage through diversion of nuclear materials, through seizure of installations, or through clandestine activities. The members also reached the important conclusion that there is no basis in the available scientific facts for supposing that effective control is not technologically feasible.

The report is significant in providing a general international scientific recognition, in contrast with ex parte American assertion, of the basic facts on which our proposals for control are based. While the report on its face avoids reference to any particular system of control, the facts there set forth point inescapably, in our opinion, toward the U.S. proposals, once the necessity for effective control is recognized.

The report received the unanimous concurrence of the members of the Scientific Committee, including Soviet members, in informal meetings. However, the Soviet Government has not yet authorized formal approval of the report. This step has been promised and then postponed, without stated reasons, on three successive occasions. In a conversation on September 11 with the Chairman of the Commission, Ambassador Gromyko indicated that he was in personal agreement with the report, but that he would like a little more time for the experts of the Soviet Union to study it. He indicated that their report would be ready very soon, perhaps in a few days. If other delegations thought it was important to proceed earlier, he had no objection, and in this case the Soviet Union would merely refrain from voting for the present. Mr. Gromyko indicated that he did not think that particular importance should be attached to the report of the Scientific Committee in the work of the Atomic Energy Commission.

If formal Soviet approval is not forthcoming in the near future, the Scientific Committee will presumably submit its report without Soviet (and probably without Polish) concurrence.

III. FURTHER WORK IN THE IMMEDIATE FUTURE

The late Chairman of the Commission, General McNaughton of Canada (who was succeeded by Dr. Hsia⁵⁹ of China on September 15), has proposed that immediately on receipt of the Scientific Report, and working with it as a foundation, the policy committee proceed to a further development of the factual problems of control, delaying for the time being any crystallization of the political issues. This process would involve a review of each stage in the production and use of atomic energy, with a discussion of the types of technical control measures needed to prevent diversion or clandestine operations. This course would not require the disclosure of additional scientific or technical information.

This line of discussion appears useful, and will assist in further clarifying the problem and promoting general understanding of the complex technical considerations involved in devising workable measures of control. We cannot be certain that the Soviet representative will agree to pursuing any discussions along this line. In any event, it can last only a month or two. Then the basic issues of policy will again be sharply before us.

⁵⁹ Dr. C. L. Hsia, Alternate Chinese Representative on the Security Council and the Atomic Energy Commission; Secretary, Chinese Delegation to the General Assembly, New York.

IV. CONCLUSIONS

In the light of the discussions to date, and barring a drastic shift in the Soviet position, it seems clear that unanimity on the fundamental issues of policy facing the Atomic Energy Commission cannot be achieved in the now foreseeable future. In these circumstances, the best we can presently hope for on any vote in the Commission on such issues is a 10-2 majority for an international control plan along the lines we have advocated.

The question of exactly when and in what manner the issue shall reach decision in the Commission seems to us a matter of high policy, intimately related to the general course of our international relations and the entire worldwide diplomatic situation. The deliberations of the Commission are inevitably becoming dominated more by influences of the international political atmosphere, notably the peace negotiations in Paris, than by our specific problem of preventing the misuse of atomic energy.

Once the short-term work of the Commission is concluded, we can see only two possible courses of action. These are:

Alternative No. 1. We might recognize frankly the difficulty of reaching unanimous agreement on the fundamental issues, press the matter to a probable 10-2 vote in the Commission, and then render a divided report to the Security Council.

The majority report would consolidate the record of our position, which has thus far stood up against all assaults. Our proposals appear to have received the almost unanimous endorsement of all nations in the world outside the Soviet sphere. We would also take the appropriate opportunity for a public statement of the total inadequacy of the Soviet proposals.

Such a divided report would doubtless be the subject of bitter debate in the Security Council, and might further aggravate the frictions already present in that body. It might also force a premature decision on the treatment of the atomic energy problem in the world outside the Soviet sphere—a matter which lies outside our assignment and involves the most vital diplomatic and military considerations.

Moreover, it is by no means certain that we would have the support of all the friendly delegates in bringing the matter to a vote promptly. However, if actually forced to a vote, we believe that we would have the support of all except Poland and the Soviet Union.

If a showdown is inevitable, both its proper timing in relation to the whole international picture and the manner in which the issues are presented to the world are clearly of crucial importance.

Alternative No. 2. A sharp cleavage in the near future could be avoided by recessing the Commission to permit the delegates to consult with their governments. Some delegates, notably the French, have already made this suggestion informally, on the ground that the questions remaining before the Commission, once the short-term phase of technical exploration is concluded, involve matters of high international policy.

At the same time, the Commission might render an interim report to the Security Council, summarizing the discussions up to that point, and pointing up the issues without seeking to resolve them or to create a break. Depending on the general course of international relations, following such recess the work of the Atomic Energy Commission could (1) be resumed after a reasonable interval, (2) be suspended until a brighter outlook in the broad international scene gave promise of a successful outcome, or (3) await advice from the Security Council or the General Assembly.

V. RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Short-Term Policy

Our oral instructions from the Acting Secretary of State make it clear that we should not take the initiative in precipitating a break in the negotiations. Assuming that the initiative remains with us, these instructions call for continued efforts at joint exploration of all aspects of the subject, with special emphasis on the technical problems of effective control and safeguards. In the absence of altered instructions, we shall continue along the course now indicated for the short-run future. I must emphasize, however, that this line of discussion can hardly last more than another 30 to 60 days.

It is of course always possible that the Soviet Union may initiate a break. In this event, we would be forced immediately to mount a vigorous counter-attack on the Soviet position, aimed at demonstrating the utter inadequacy of the Soviet plan and its repudiation of the Commission's mandate which they themselves sponsored in the Moscow Declaration.

2. Long-Term Policy

Within the next 30 to 60 days, it will become necessary to choose one of the two alternatives outlined in Section D [IV] above. This decision on the longer-run action requires new instructions taking into account the relation of the negotiations on atomic energy to the overall pattern of our foreign policy.

A decision as to the course which we shall pursue is essential before the end of this year, because three present members, namely Egypt, Mexico, and the Netherlands, retire on January 1, 1947. These three nations are all supporters of the U.S. proposals. They will be replaced by three others selected by the General Assembly. The successors that have been discussed are Belgium, Colombia, and Syria. It is impossible to be certain of the position that they will take, and in any case a considerable period of time must elapse before they can express themselves formally on the proposals. Present indications do not point to the likelihood of obtaining the acquiescence of Poland or the Soviet Union to our proposals in the near future. The possibilities are rather that we may lose present support than that we can gain new support.

In these circumstances we feel that, unless overriding international considerations dictate a different course, it would be advisable to follow Alternative No. 1 and bring the U.S. proposals to a vote within a reasonable period. Such action would be a clear indication to the American people and to the world of the views of the several nations on the control of atomic energy. Action in this Commission is, of course, not final or binding on any nation. As you know, its recommendations go to the Security Council, where they can be acted upon by way of approval, modification, or rejection.

On the other hand, considerations of general foreign policy may suggest that we follow Alternative No. 2. We do not possess the necessary knowledge to appraise such factors. For this reason, we now seek instructions based on the international situation as a whole so that our efforts may become a positive, rather than a passive, factor in the overall foreign policy of the United States.

3. Necessary National Action

Regardless of the progress of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, I cannot emphasize too strongly the vital importance of readiness to take the necessary national measures in the event of failure to achieve an adequate plan for the international control of atomic energy. We cannot afford to base national security on the assumption of success in our negotiations. Pending establishment of the national Atomic Energy Commission on a fully operating basis, there must be assurance that there is no lack of decisiveness in any aspect of our atomic energy program. These considerations add further weight to the importance of a prompt appointment of very able men to that body.

I shall welcome the opportunity of further discussions with you on the matters covered in this report and on the future course of action which I should pursue.

Respectfully submitted,

BERNARD M. BARUCH

IO Files : USMS/46

*The United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee to the Joint Chiefs of Staff*⁶⁰

17 September 1946.

BASIC PRINCIPLES GOVERNING THE ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS FORCES

THE PROBLEM

1. To determine the advisability of resuming subcommittee discussion of the basic principles governing the organization of the United Nations Forces.

DISCUSSION

2. The trend of developments within the Subcommittee on a Standard Form of Agreement has demonstrated that considerable progress is possible in the work of the Military Staff Committee even though one of the national Delegations does not participate in the discussion. Recent incidents within the Military Staff Committee clearly indicate that the Soviets not only have no intention of participating in substantive work of the Military Staff Committee but also that they are committed to a policy of obstructionism.

3. In view of the foregoing, it is evident that if there is not to be a complete breakdown in the function of the Military Staff Committee, some constructive action must be taken. It is proposed that the resumption of the work of the Subcommittee on Basic Principles Governing the Organization of United Nations Forces would serve as a means to further progress of the Military Staff Committee.

4. At its meeting in London on 16 February 1946, the Security Council directed the Military Staff Committee as its first task to examine, from the military point of view, the provisions in Article 43 of the Charter and to submit the results of the study and any recommendations to the Council. As a method of accomplishing this task, the Military Staff Committee, at its 5th Meeting on 27 March 1946, by resolution, established a subcommittee with terms of reference directing it to study Article 43 of the Charter and to formulate recommendations to the Military Staff Committee as to the basic principles which will govern the organization of the United Nations forces.

5. At its first meeting on 28 March 1946, this subcommittee adopted a resolution that: "Each national Delegation shall, not later than 3 April, furnish each of the other national Delegations, in writing, a statement of the principles which shall govern the organization of the United Nations forces, and that this subcommittee shall meet on 5 April to consider these several statements." Four members of the subcommittee complied with the aforementioned resolution. Since all members had not complied therewith, the second meeting of the subcommittee was postponed indefinitely. The fifth member has not been able to indicate to the subcommittee a definite foreseeable date on which a statement of the principles which shall govern the organization of the United Nations forces may be expected.

⁶⁰ This memorandum, approved by the United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee at their 26th Meeting, September 16, was forwarded to the Secretary, Joint Chiefs of Staff, for information. (IO Files)

6. While subcommittee discussion on a five-Power basis is preferable, it is evident that it will be necessary to proceed, at least initially, on a four-Power basis as has the subcommittee discussion on the Standard Form of Agreement. Further delay in meeting this issue plays squarely into the hands of the Soviets and contributes to their policy of obstructionism.

7. Several advantages would accrue by pursuing the action outlined above. In the first place, it would lead to a showdown in the Military Staff Committee and possibly within the Security Council, and would contribute to a showdown in the General Assembly. It is possible that it would force the Soviets into acting in concert with the other four Powers. On the other hand, if it should force an open break, as long as the action is that of the Soviets, such a break might be preferable to the present condition of stalemate.

8. Assuming that the Soviets will enter into the discussion within the reasonably foreseeable future, initiating the discussion on a four-Power basis would have the effect of disclosing and solving many minor but troublesome points as in the case of the Standard Form of Agreement. Thus much preliminary work will have been accomplished by the time the Soviets see fit to participate.

9. Assuming that the Soviets will indefinitely delay their participation, four-Power discussion nevertheless will be of value, inasmuch as it will have produced prior agreement between the United Kingdom, China, France, and the United States on principles which are likely to be required in the event of a complete breakdown of the United Nations organization.

10. Furthermore, although the proceedings of the Military Staff Committee are restricted, should information reach other nations, through the Security Council or the General Assembly, as to the work in progress, it is considered that it would have the effect of pointing up the attitude of the Soviets and its deleterious result in implementing the Charter of the United Nations.

11. There are certain unfavorable factors to be considered. It may be objected that by four-Power discussion with Soviet observation we disclose our position. However, the plane of the discussion and the general terms involved are such that no information of substantive value accrues to the Soviets. This is borne out by the proceedings of the Subcommittee on a Standard Form of Agreement. In addition, the United States, along with three other national Delegations, have submitted written statements (MS/28, MS/29, MS/30, MS/31/Rev. 1) on the basic principles.⁶¹

12. Another objection might be that without Soviet participation no substantive action is possible. Here again experience with the Standard Form of Agreement indicates that considerable progress is possible. Furthermore, should an open rupture occur, considerable advantage in time required for organization will have accrued.

CONCLUSION

13. It is concluded that it would be advisable to resume subcommittee discussion in the Military Staff Committee of the basic principles governing the organization of the United Nations forces.

RECOMMENDATION

14. That the U.S. Representatives on the Military Staff Committee forward a proposal in substance as attached as the Enclosure to the four other Delegations of the Military Staff Committee, to be placed on the provisional agenda of the next meeting of the Military Staff Committee.⁶²

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by Mr. John M. Hancock of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] September 19, 1946.

Early yesterday morning Mr. Baruch called me about the Wallace letter which appeared in the morning papers—the letter of July 23.⁶³ I went over it, Mr. Baruch and I talked about it, we talked to our Associates here, and saw Mr. Clayton⁶⁴ at the State Department, out-⁶¹ MS/28, the United States statement of principles, is printed as USMS/12/Rev. 1, March 15, p. 759. The other documents are not printed.

⁶² The enclosure, proposing resumption of sub-committee discussion on basic principles, had been circulated in the Military Staff Committee on September 13; see the Summary of the Sequence of Events, p. 914.

⁶³ The letter under reference, from Secretary of Commerce Wallace to the President, was critical of United States policy with respect to the Soviet Union, especially in the field of international control of atomic energy. For text, see the New York Times, September 18, 1946. For a detailed account of the incident arising from the publication of the letter, see Hewlett and Anderson, pp. 597–606.

⁶⁴ William L. Clayton, Acting Secretary of State.

lined to him what we were going to say to the President, and were informed that the President was seeing Mr. Wallace at 3:30 and would likely issue a statement shortly after. Mr. Clayton was satisfied the statement would be to the liking of both ourselves and the State Department. Clayton went with us to the White House.

The President seemed very pleasant but grim when we got on to the Wallace issue. Mr. Baruch told the President of his respect for the office of President, his regard for Mr. Truman personally, his purpose in coming down to make the report, and the progress of negotiations but his belief that there wouldn't be time, and that it would not be wise to go into the report itself then.

He referred to the new situation in which we found ourselves on account of the Wallace letter's release to the Press. He told the President in a very firm but very friendly manner that so far as he could see there were three choices of courses open to us. First, a full retraction on the part of Mr. Wallace; second, an utter repudiation of Mr. Wallace's statements; or third, that we resign, as our usefulness was ended. The President told us of his plan to see Wallace, asked us not to be in a hurry about resigning, and told us that he thought his action in the afternoon would be satisfactory to us. Mr. Baruch used some such words as these—that our position was in nowise an ultimatum, but that we still saw only those three courses open. We told the President these general observations: (1) That we had first seen the July 23 letter the same morning. We were told by the President that he showed the letter to Byrnes immediately before Byrnes' leaving for Paris, that the letter was of such a character that it did not require any action by the State Department, this explanation apparently being made to remove any attack on Mr. Byrnes. (2) Mr. Wallace's comment is not based factually on the U.S. Plan or on any action we have taken. (3) Mr. Wallace has made no attempt to establish the facts by inquiry of us. We assured the President that we could have disproved all of his assumptions and assertions in a 5-minute talk. (4) We pointed out that Wallace understands the Russian plan better than he does the U.S. Plan. (5) We argued that Mr. Wallace should be required to reveal his source of information, because it quite obviously came to him from somebody who was trying to preach Red doctrine. (6) We pointed out that Mr. Gromyko had told us well over a month ago that we were not aware of the differences in American public opinion, the principal implication of that statement being that it was the Russian plan to propagandize and undermine our position. The chain [blame?] was not directed to the person who informed Mr. Wallace of the stuff on which he bases his letter, but it would pay the government to find out who this person was.

We referred to the obvious lack of teamwork on the part of Mr. Wallace in irresponsible statements about fellow government officials. (7) We referred to one line in Mr. Wallace's statement that under certain conditions he believed Russia would negotiate. My comment was that I could not assume that Mr. Wallace had any authority from Russia for making such a statement, but that if he didn't have authority, he was a trouble-maker and a repeater of gossip. At any rate, such an opinion was an irresponsible opinion which could only divide American opinion and give comfort to people who are trying to tear down America's objective. (8) We asked why Mr. Wallace assumed that Russia was not competent to speak for herself. We said that Mr. Gromyko had never told us of the "Pravda" argument, but that Wallace was speaking in a manner which Gromyko had not used. We said that Gromyko had been perfectly frank as far as we knew, that he had been tone-full, but definitely in opposition to our point of view.

It was interesting to find that the President was under a misunderstanding. He thought that Wallace's letter was written before the American Plan was presented. We pointed out to him that this was not the fact and that not only was our plan initially presented on June 14 but that we had filed three supplementary memoranda before Wallace's letter was written. The American position had been made public and widely spread, and there was no excuse for misunderstanding the exact American position so far as it was revealed.

I don't recall whether we told the President about Wallace's assumptions regarding raw material. We did talk to Will Clayton about it. We pointed out that it stemmed from the meeting with the Acheson Group arranged for us under State Department auspices, and that somebody there had leaked and had assumed what we were going to do.

Afterward I recalled that I had been a speaker at the session of the Atomic Scientists in Washington on July 15. Wallace spoke there in my presence but he was not present during my talk. Wallace did hear Auger's⁶⁵ foolish talk at that dinner, in which the bad negotiating was referred to by Auger, and in which he asked that we make the gesture of stopping the making of bombs.

I still don't know how Wallace's letter got to the Press. The President told us he had tried very hard to stop it on the day before. He asked Mr. Clayton to support his statement of these efforts. Clayton did assent. The statement then made was that the efforts were too late, that copies were already in the hands of "P.M." and some other paper, and that it was therefore released.

⁶⁵ Alternate French Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission.

The President seemed as much incensed as he is capable of being over the release of a private and confidential memorandum. During the day I heard that Drew Pearson,⁶⁶ who was apparently the man who found the copy of the July 23 letter, gave out a statement saying that he had not gotten it from the Department of Commerce, and Mr. Truman expressed his gratification that the leak had not taken place in the Department of Commerce. I am not convinced of the accuracy of the statement. I do understand that after the President's efforts were found unavailing in stopping the release, then the statement was given out. I am under the impression it was given by Charlie Ross, the White House Secretary, but I have not heard this stated officially.

I don't know all the facts, of course, because we were flying home yesterday afternoon. If the Press is to be relied upon, the President had not settled either of our problems. He did give us authority to put out any statement we wished after we saw what he had done with Wallace in the afternoon. I feel that facing the Delegates in the Commission and our own public, we must issue a statement on the pattern of Al Smith's "Let's look at the Record" in which we would take Wallace's factual statements, quote them, in as a subjective manner as we can, but for myself I will put on plenty of heat. There would be, I think, an additional gesture in telephoning Wallace as to whether he wants to retract any portion of his letter. I doubt that it would produce any results because Wallace has said today, according to the Press, that he will not speak on any public matters for one month.

My view at the moment is that the President misled us or changed his mind when he faced Wallace. This one month's muzzle does not affect either of our purposes of getting a retraction of the facts or a repudiation by the President. I have read the statement in the "Tribune" this morning in which the President generally supports our program. To me that is not enough.

In order to handle Wallace personally, my present feeling is that our wise course is to write him as sharp a letter as we wish, characterizing his misinformation, his trouble-making attitude, his failure to cooperate, his ability to get the facts from us in a 5-minute talk, if he had so chosen—and further along the same line. Mr. Wallace could easily be made a martyr in the present position if we were to attack him publicly for the silly ideas and conclusions he draws. To give him ammunition for a reply in a month from now when the gag comes off wouldn't do him much good either.

JOHN M. HANCOCK

⁶⁶ Syndicated newspaper columnist.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum of Telephone Conversation, by Mr. John M. Hancock of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] September 19, 1946.

At 11:30 a. m. I talked with Mr. Clayton at the State Department. I am dictating this memorandum immediately thereafter.

The first point was that the President had not given out a statement but that he is contemplating a press conference tomorrow and will unquestionably give out a statement tomorrow regarding the Wallace statement.

I told Clayton that we were considering and were studying to carry out three courses of action.

First: We were preparing a cold analysis of what Wallace said and we were putting against it what the American plan is, as contained in the document, along with any analysis or comment that seemed appropriate. We plan to give this out to the press because we have an obligation to our people and to the delegates of the other nations.

Second: We plan to write a letter to Mr. Wallace, with copies to the President and the State Department, in which we will go into our views of Mr. Wallace's conclusions. This would be more the character of a personal letter, not intended for publication and not to be released by us at this time. I don't want this to be any understanding of a commitment not to release it at some future time if conditions warrant, and we will make it very clear to Mr. Wallace in the letter itself.

Third: Mr. Baruch is probably now talking with Mr. Wallace to the general effect that Mr. Baruch has been a friend for years; that Wallace's assumption of facts were very wrong; that they could have been verified in five minutes by telephone conversation; that Mr. Baruch is giving out a statement to the press regarding these facts; that he insisted in addition that Mr. Wallace retract his statement of facts.

I stress the fact that Mr. Baruch is offering the opportunity for Wallace to fly up here and get the facts as early as this afternoon or tomorrow morning.

Clayton was in thorough accord with all this. He expressed detailed approval of various aspects. He said that telephone conversation with Europe was very difficult and that apparently the President had not concluded to handle the conversation by teletype because of the telephone difficulties. Clayton had seen the President twice this morning already; was thoroughly dissatisfied with the present situation because it settled nothing. When I told Clayton that the muzzling for a month meant that the muzzling would come off at the end of the month, Clayton said this is no time for a truce on matters like this; the matter has to be settled conclusively.

Clayton knows Byrnes is not satisfied but due to the bad telephone connections he does not know what the final position is going to be. He said he would welcome our letting him know what we do, and I told him we were out of touch with the news and would appreciate him letting us know what they do. I told Clayton we want to be on the same front with them and at least know what the other is doing. Clayton is in entire accord.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Memorandum of Telephone Conversation, by Mr. R. Gordon Arneson*⁶⁷

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] September 19, 1946.

At 12:50 PM Secretary Wallace returned Mr. Baruch's call. Messrs. Hancock, Swope, Farrell, Gordon, Johnson, Lindsay, and Arneson were present while Mr. Baruch talked to him.

Mr. Baruch told the Secretary that he was sorry to learn about his letter of July 23. If Mr. Wallace had spent just a few minutes with us before writing it, the various mis-statements of fact that the letter now contains could easily have been avoided. He said that their associations in the past had been such that he thought it was incumbent on each of them to discuss such matters in advance. He felt that both of them were anxious to do what was right, and their associations in the past had been on the basis of mutual understanding, and that he was sorry that the Secretary had not kept this necessity in mind in the instant case.

Mr. Baruch invited Mr. Wallace to come up to see him in order that they might go over the public documents in which the United States position has been amply spelled out. Whoever furnished Mr. Wallace with the information on which the letter was based had clearly transmitted gross errors of fact. He urged Mr. Wallace to come up as soon as possible in order that the rift that now existed between them might be prevented from becoming deeper. Mr. Baruch pointed out that he was as concerned as Wallace was about the increasing difficulty of seeing eye to eye with the Russians. The U.S. Delegation to the A.E.C. has exercised extreme care in working with the Russian Delegation and was doing everything in its power to understand and to take into account their point of view.

Mr. Baruch urged that Mr. Wallace consider seriously correcting the errors of fact in the July 23 letter. To this Mr. Wallace apparently replied that since he had been muzzled by the President he was in no position to make any public statement whatever on this matter. In reply, Mr. Baruch stated that the decision of course was up to Mr. Wallace, that we wanted him to make such corrections, and that if he felt that he was unable to do it himself, we would undertake to say it for him—and in our own words.

⁶⁷ Staff member, United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission.

Mr. Baruch reminded Mr. Wallace that the proposals put forth on June 14 were in fact the official U.S. policy which had been approved paragraph by paragraph by President Truman himself. Mr. Wallace's attack, therefore, on the Baruch Plan was actually an attack on official U.S. policy.

Mr. Baruch urged again in the interests of the country and in the interest of relations between them, that Mr. Wallace come up promptly to discuss this matter in detail. Mr. Wallace had clearly been misinformed as to the facts concerning our proposals and it was time that he got the facts straight. We are faced with a delicate situation which requires prompt attention.

In response to Mr. Wallace's suggestion that he would like to bring Dr. Condon⁶⁸ with him, Mr. Baruch replied that Mr. Wallace could bring with him anyone he wished to. He urged, however, that it be done soon, otherwise their relations would be very seriously damaged. Mr. Baruch stated that the decision was up to Mr. Wallace whether he wanted to come up or not, but that he should understand that if he didn't we would be compelled to bring this issue to the attention of the public.

After he had finished talking with Mr. Wallace, Mr. Baruch told us that Wallace would call him back in a short while.

R. G. ARNESON

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by Mr. Franklin A. Lindsay⁶⁹ to the United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch)

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] September 25, 1946.

Subject: Conversation with de Rose⁷⁰ of French Delegation

This morning Linc Gordon and I called on de Rose, Parodi's assistant, to discuss the coming Scientific Meeting, and the course which the Commission might follow after that meeting. De Rose stated that he believed Parodi would be opposed to bringing the Scientific Report to a final vote tomorrow. He stated the Russians were proud people and ⁶⁸ Dr. Edward U. Condon, Director of the National Bureau of Standards.

⁶⁹ United States Delegation Staff Member.

⁷⁰ François de Rose, Adviser, French Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission.

that if we forced a decision before they were ready to sign, they might later decide not to sign at the bottom of the list. He thought that there would be nothing gained by forcing a 10-2 approval tomorrow.⁷¹

He reiterated the position taken by Parodi at luncheon with us a month ago that after receiving the Scientific Report the Commission should recess in order that the Members might report to their Governments and receive further instructions.

Apparently, both he and Parodi had understood you and Mr. Eberstadt to have approved the suggestions (a) that there should be no discussion of political questions until after the Paris Conference and the General Assembly had adjourned, and (b) that the Commission should recess and seek further instructions from the various Governments. He was apparently not familiar with the Canadian proposal to begin examination in a sub-committee of Committee No. 2 of the specific measures of control which would be required at each stage in the technological processes outlined in the Scientific Report. He was not sure how Parodi would receive such a proposal. He was certain that Parodi wished to avoid political discussions until after the General Assembly, and thought that he might wish to delay this type of discussion also.

At the end of the discussion he reassured us of the French support of the principles of our plan. He stated that sooner or later a final decision would have to be taken, and that if the Russians refused to participate in international control, we would then have to examine the question as to whether or not we desired to set up an international control agency excluding the Russians.

FRANKLIN A. LINDSAY

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. R. Gordon Arneson*⁷²

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] September 27, 1946.

Notes of Meeting with Mr. Wallace⁷³ and his Aide, Mr. Hauser,
10 a m, Friday, September 27, 1946

When he first arrived, Mr. Wallace spent about 15 minutes with Mr. Baruch while Mr. Hauser exchanged pleasantries with Mr. Hancock, Mr. Gordon, Mr. Lindsay, and Mr. Arneson.

⁷¹ The Scientific and Technical Committee adopted its report on the feasibility and nature of effective controls at its 2nd Meeting, September 26, subject to the following reservation by the Soviet representative: "The information at the disposal of the Committee was, as the report acknowledges, limited and incomplete. For this reason, the majority of the conclusions in the Committee's report are hypothetical and conditional. It is with this reservation that I vote for the adoption of the report."

⁷² Staff member, United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission.

⁷³ President Truman had asked for and received Mr. Wallace's resignation as Secretary of Commerce on September 20.

At 10:15, Mr. Baruch and Mr. Wallace were joined by Mr. Hauser, and Messrs. Hancock, Eberstadt, and Swope. After some minutes of discussion, Messrs. Farrell, Gordon and Arneson were asked to join the meeting. The notes which follow are based on notes I took on the discussions that preceded intermittently during the remainder of the day.

MR. HAUSER considered that the Baruch Proposals were quite ambiguous on the question of stages. He felt that there was considerable room for interpretation as to whether those proposals had in mind retaining for the United States "unfettered discretion" in determining when specific stages had been reached and also as to what the content of stages should be. He agreed, however, that the previous discussion that the group had just finished had convinced him that we did not contemplate leaving "unfettered discretion" in the hands of the United States but that we did in fact intend to wrap the entire agreement in a "single package."

MR. HAUSER stated that much of Mr. Wallace's letter of July 23rd had been thought about, and in fact written, before June 14th and that references to the Baruch Proposals had been added somewhat as an afterthought.

He agreed that our position on the substance of stages was sound. The question remained, however, of the timing on stages and he referred to that part of the Baruch Proposals which states that securing dominion over raw materials should be one of the earliest duties of the ADA.

MR. EBERSTADT pointed out that the Soviets are the ones who have refused to accept an agreement in a single package. They have proposed a convention outlawing the production and use of atomic bombs to be followed at some indefinite future date by vague considerations of control. We have found it necessary to accept the Russian view that this problem can be solved piecemeal. [sic] This is the real rub of our difficulties in negotiating with the Soviets. MR. HAUSER agreed with this analysis and went on to point out that atomic energy negotiations are merely a part of the much broader problem of overall relations with Russia. MR. GORDON stated that Mr. Gromyko himself has never raised any question about the order of events involved in setting up the ADA. MR. EBERSTADT went on to say that Mr. Gromyko was in no position to argue about stages because we have not yet spelled those stages out. They have proposed a sort of stage scheme of their own in which they want the job tackled piecemeal. Meanwhile, it would be perfectly legitimate to build atomic energy plants and to do research on military weapons. The Russian Proposal outlawing the bomb has no teeth in it.

MR. HAUSER referred to items 2 and 13 of the Baruch Proposals which deal with raw materials and disclosures. In his view these sections state that we proposed full disclosure of raw material sources before we would be willing to disclose any technical and scientific information concerning atomic energy. MR. HANCOCK pointed out that we did propose that dominion over raw materials should be one of the "earliest" purposes of the Authority, not necessarily the first, and that this would be done not before the treaty was agreed to but after it was agreed to and the Authority had been established. As to disclosures of information, he stated that here also the question of timing would have to be settled by negotiation and specifically set forth in the treaty. There was certainly no "take it or leave it" concept in this. He said that during the discussions which Mr. Baruch and his associates had had with the Acheson-Lilienthal group at the Blair Lee House last May, the question had been discussed whether we should insist on getting information on raw materials during the negotiations stage as a means of testing the good-faith of other countries. This proposal, while discussed, had not been taken seriously by anyone. He felt that the views reflected in Mr. Wallace's letter on this question of raw materials may have sprung from a leak concerning these discussions. Our present position, which is fully reflected in published documents, is that no nation is required to show its "trump cards" during the negotiations. Obviously, all nations must know about, and agree to, the contents to be set forth in the treaty, governing not only stages and disclosures but all other facets of the problem. Each nation is free to accept or reject the conditions that might be arrived at by negotiations. After the treaty is agreed to, there are no trump cards to be played. MR. WALLACE agreed.

MR. HAUSER asked why we did not clarify this matter of stages. He stated the position of the Federation of Atomic Scientists which proposed that the first step should be the wide dissemination of atomic energy information and that dominion over raw materials should be the second step. He thought that a clear statement of our position on stages would go a long way to rally additional support for our proposals. He felt that the ambiguity that exists concerning the timing of stages was the very center of our present deadlock with the Russians. Gromyko has proposed that all bombs should be destroyed; we have declined to accept his proposal. What point is there then in going on with an elaboration of stages unless they are revised to meet him half way. MR. BARUCH reminded Mr. Hauser that progress by stages matched with adequate safeguards by way of inspection and other means was specifically laid down in the terms of reference of the Atomic Energy Commission. MR. EBERSTADT said that we have been unjustly accused in Mr. Wallace's letter of asking for trumps in the negotiation stage and that the letter alleged that we had taken a one-sided position concerning stages, whereas, as a matter of actual fact, we have not yet spelled out our ideas on the substance or timing of stages. We have not yet gone beyond the basic declaration that the ADA should be set up by a series of stages which will be fair, equitable, and applicable to all nations who join in.

MR. SWOPE felt that while Mr. Wallace was perfectly correct in sending his letter to the President, inasmuch as the President has asked him to do so, there was gross error in not having checked the facts with our group before the letter was sent. MR. HANCOCK agreed with this pointing out that Mr. Wallace has a right to hold any opinions he wishes to but that he did have a responsibility for checking the facts on which such inferences and opinions were based.

After that portion of Mr. Baruch's letter to the President dealing with the question of the veto had been raised and discussed in some detail, MR. WALLACE stated: "I am in full accord with your explanation of the veto problem." He went on to say that he thought that the whole handling of the veto in this field should be spelled out in the treaty itself.

MR. WALLACE urged that we should seek some face-saving device which could be presented to the Russians to induce them to go along with our proposals. The Soviets must be convinced that we are not out to destroy them. He felt that their intransigence, as exemplified by their stand on the veto, stemmed from a deep distrust of other nations and the unhappy developments under the League of Nations Covenant. He felt that atomic energy negotiations were only a part of a much broader problem of working out mutual confidence and trust between the USSR and the western powers. He hoped that Mr. Baruch and his associates would find it desirable at a later date to meet with other government groups to work out a common policy of bringing about mutual trust and confidence.

MR. EBERSTADT inquired of Mr. Wallace what essential departure we could make from our plan in order to save face for the Russians. MR. WALLACE replied that we could agree to stop the manufacture of bombs and perhaps allow the Security Council to inspect to make sure that we had in fact stopped. MR. EBERSTADT then pointed out that we would be in a very bad position if negotiations broke down and we found it necessary in the interests of national security to resume manufacture. He said that Mr. Wallace's proposal would have some weight if we had any real assurance of completely getting agreement of international control of atomic energy. MR. WALLACE agreed that the time was not yet ripe to make any such face-saving move. He urged, however, that we should be prepared to make some such move at the appropriate time.

As Mr. WALLACE was about to leave, he summed up his view of the discussion by stating: "It is obvious that I was not fully posted." After Mr. Wallace left, Mr. HAUSER stated that he was going to suggest to the Secretary that he bring the matter up to date. He thought that Mr. Wallace would probably want to issue a statement.

Mr. HAUSER went off to another room to prepare a draft statement of the sort he thought Mr. Wallace had in mind and Mr. SWOPE discussed the matter with him in some detail. When Mr. SWOPE returned to the meeting, he reported that Mr. Wallace planned to put out a pamphlet which would contain his Madison Square Garden speech and also his July 23rd letter to the President. It was proposed that the section of the letter dealing with atomic energy would be left intact but would be followed by an addendum which would contain our memorandum to the President plus a short statement to the effect that Mr. Wallace agreed with the corrections of fact which our letter contained. Mr. SWOPE stated that he thought it would be completely wrong to circulate a letter which contained so many errors even though the addendum device was used to attempt to correct those errors.

Mr. EBERSTADT felt that we should have no part of Mr. Wallace's pamphlet; that we should publish our letter to the President plus a statement from Mr. Wallace in which he would admit his errors. Mr. SWOPE agreed that we should publish our own letter plus Wallace's retraction but that in addition we might have our letter printed in the addendum to the pamphlet. Mr. BARUCH stated that whether Wallace published a pamphlet or not was entirely his own affair and that we should have nothing whatever to do with it. To this, both Mr. Hancock and Mr. Eberstadt expressed their full agreement.

After lunch, Mr. HAUSER met again with Messrs. Hancock, Swope, Gordon, Johnson, and Arneson. We read to him a draft of the statement we wanted Mr. Wallace to agree to. (Attached, Tab A). Mr. HAUSER expressed some doubts as to whether Mr. WALLACE would agree to it, and that the text could be remedied so that he would—by adding a short 5 sentence summary of the points of correction on which Mr. Wallace had agreed.

After interminable discussion, which extended late into the afternoon, the text of Wallace's statement was agreed to by all. (Attached, Tab B). Mr. HAUSER expressed his conviction that he would be able to sell this statement to Mr. Wallace and would undertake to do so immediately.

After MR. HAUSER had left to return to Washington, the staff continued its discussion of strategy. MR. HANCOCK summed up his views by saying that if Mr. Wallace agrees with the text of the statement which had been arrived at with Mr. Hauser, we should then put out that statement along with Mr. Baruch's letter to the President. If Mr. Wallace does not agree to the text as written, then we should not consider ourselves bound to any course of action but should feel free to proceed in any manner we see fit.⁷⁴

R. G. ARNESON

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Notes of a Meeting Between Members of the United States, United Kingdom, and Canadian Delegations to the Atomic Energy Commission, New York, October 1, 1946, 3 p. m.*⁷⁵

CONFIDENTIAL

Present

Mr. B. M. Baruch
 Sir Alexander Cadogan
 Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton
 Mr. J. M. Hancock
 Mr. F. Eberstadt
 Sir George Thompson
 Dr. R. C. Tolman

Dr. W. B. Mann
 Mr. V. Lawford
 Mr. Lincoln Gordon
 Mr. F. A. Lindsay
 Mr. G. E. Cox
 Mr. R. G. Arneson

In response to Sir Alexander's question on how best to proceed at tomorrow's meeting,⁷⁶ MR. HANCOCK said he thought it was of great importance that we proceed in such a manner as to achieve a full understanding of the Scientific and Technical Committee report. Tentatively, it would seem that two or three formal sessions might be devoted to talking out the report and its broad implications. Procedurally, he felt the chief point to bear in mind was that we should avoid at all costs precipitating political debates in Committee No. 2 at the outset. Referring to General McNaughton's suggestion for informal meetings, he thought that the idea was a good one. It did, however, present the difficulty that representatives other than those officially on Committee No. 2 might be appointed to attend these informal meetings. We should, if possible, make sure that the official ⁷⁴ The attachments are not printed here. Mr. Wallace subsequently refused to endorse a statement acceptable to Mr. Baruch. Consequently, the latter released "Tab A," "Tab B," and a memorandum he had addressed to President Truman on September 24 which answered Mr. Wallace's criticisms point by point; for texts, see the New York Times, October 3, 1946.

⁷⁵ Drafted by Mr. R. Gordon Arneson of the United States Delegation Staff.

⁷⁶ Sixth Meeting of Committee 2, October 2.

representatives of Committee No. 2 shared in the educative process involved in informal meetings.

In response to a question from Sir Alexander, GENERAL McNAUGHTON elaborated his views on the desirability of proceeding on an informal basis. The Scientific and Technical Committee was the first committee to achieve any basic agreement on the facts of the problem before us. During his month's tenure as chairman, General McNaughton had studiously avoided any activity on the part of the political committees which would interfere with the work of the Scientific and Technical Committee. This approach has achieved the conspicuous result of a unanimous report of the Scientific and Technical Committee. This report is a unanimous statement of the basic facts of the problem which points out where controls might be applied if the will exists to apply them. To be sure, the report contains nothing that was not already well-known before the Committee began its work. The importance of the report lies in the fact that twelve nations have agreed on the facts which it contains. It has cleared the way for further action, if we have the will to proceed.

We must now be prepared to grapple with the political implications of these facts. General McNaughton made it a point of talking to most of the delegations to ascertain whether they would agree to adopting an informal procedure for Committee No. 2. This would involve nominating political representatives from each of the twelve countries who would sit informally to go over the political implications of the report. The work should proceed by developing the basic facts of the problem and their implications, rather than by taking votes. Experts should be invited to participate whenever desirable. This procedure would build up a climate of opinion among the twelve nations favorable to a solution along the lines of the U.S. proposals. This procedure would also aid in educating the rest of the world to the implications and imperatives of the problem of control. In the course of these informal meetings it would be desirable to secure additional volumes of scientific information from the U.S. Delegation.

GENERAL McNAUGHTON stated that he was prepared to move the adoption of this procedure in Committee No. 2, if there was general support for this approach. He would propose that the discussions proceed from the least contentious to the more contentious aspects of the problem. For example, phase one might deal with measures to prevent diversion of materials. Under this the following aspects would be considered:—(a) mining; (b) extraction of ore; (c) production of metal; (d) production of nuclear fuels (primary reactors); (e) secondary reactors. Phase two would consider measures to prevent clandestine operations. Phase three would discuss measures to prevent seizures. Phase one could be handled in such a way as to minimize any political discussion, for these measures of preventing diversion could be considered either in national or international terms. It was presumed that several weeks might be taken in completing the discussion of phase one.

GENERAL MCNAUGHTON said that when this program was first considered, he had hoped that he might take a major role in pushing it along. Recently, however, he has agreed to undertake the job of working out the Canadian Control Board for Atomic Energy and consequently, will have less time than he had hoped.

MR. HANCOCK expressed full support for the idea of both formal and informal meetings of Committee No. 2. He reported that a number of other delegations seem to be vacillating as to what ought to be done—some of them being in favor of compromise. He was sorry to hear that General McNaughton would not be able to participate full time in the program he proposed. He wondered who else might be considered.

SIR ALEXANDER likewise gave full support to the general procedure suggested by General McNaughton and suggested that this method of approach should be proposed at tomorrow's meeting.

GENERAL MCNAUGHTON said that he would be prepared to move at tomorrow's meeting that Committee No. 2 should take up the discussion of the report of the Scientific and Technical Committee in informal meetings—these meetings to be attended by political representatives of the delegations and open to whatever experts the Committee might wish to invite. Any reports that the informal committee might wish to draw up on the basis of its discussion should be submitted to Committee No. 2 in formal session. The informal discussions should proceed along the lines of the topical outline mentioned above.

MR. BARUCH stated that he thought it most desirable that we have a plan of action ready for tomorrow's meeting in order to forestall any alternative proposals which might prove unacceptable.

In discussing General McNaughton's proposal around the table, MR. HANCOCK stated that he thought the approach was a good one. Admittedly, it would be a slow process but might achieve real results in terms of education. He reported that Dr. Hsia appeared to want a restatement of the U.S. position in terms of its minimum essentials with the view of working out some compromise solution with the Russian proposals. GENERAL MCNAUGHTON reported that Mr. Parodi seemed to be leaning toward some kind of compromise also. With these two exceptions, however, the majority of the delegates seem to favor an approach along the lines of his proposal. SIR ALEXANDER expressed strong support for the proposed plan, stating that the nature of the problem lent itself to working up from the bottom. He felt strongly that any attempt to reopen the issue of general principles would be doomed to failure. GENERAL McNAUGHTON felt that through this process of education the delegates would find themselves ending up with a solution of the problem which would be virtually identical to the Baruch proposals. He stated his intention of raising in a meeting of Committee No. 2 the question of whether adequate steps were being taken to inform the world generally of the nature of this problem and the work of the Commission in moving toward a solution. MR. EBERSTADT pointed out that the proposed approach had the merit of being exploratory rather than consummative and avoided creating a crisis. SIR ALEXANDER was particularly in favor of the idea of exploring what might be done, rather than taking of votes on whether anyone was willing to do what was indicated. This procedure would build up a logical structure starting from the Scientific and Technical Committee report which would be most useful to world opinion whether we attain final success or not. GENERAL McNAUGHTON saw the additional merit in the plan in that while it provoked no crisis, it was sufficiently flexible so that once the international situation improved the more political questions could be drawn into the discussions.

GENERAL McNAUGHTON raised the question about the reservations that some delegates might have about discussing raw materials in phase one. In the discussion that followed it was agreed that mining in the terms of preventing diversion should proceed along general lines and should avoid any implication that the control mechanism would necessarily have to be international. All the delegates should be invited to participate in this discussion and draw upon his knowledge of how control is achieved in his own country. In no event should discussions in phase one be pushed to a point where delegates would balk at carrying the discussion forward. Questions that involve serious political conditions whether on the subject of mining or production of nuclear fuels should be put aside until phase two and phase three. In fact, phase one would be a softening-up process which might lay the groundwork for more crucial consideration of political problems in a later phase. For example, the question of undisclosed mines—that is mines not yet discovered—should not be discussed in phase one but should be left to a later period. As regards information on raw materials, GENERAL McNAUGHTON stated that he was authorized by his government to say that he was prepared to discuss all information concerning the raw materials situated in his country, if other countries would undertake to do likewise.

DR. TOLMAN pointed out that as far as raw materials were concerned, we wanted to know not only about reserves of the twelve countries represented on the Commission, but reserves in all nations throughout the world. To this SIR GEORGE replied that precise knowledge concerning world reserves of uranium and thorium would not be important in the first phase of discussion.

GENERAL McNAUGHTON felt that the Scientific and Technical Committee should remain in being and that out of informal discussions of Committee No. 2 might come specific requests to the Scientific and Technical Committee to prepare reports on different phases of the problem as they arose. He hoped that the members of the Scientific and Technical Committee would not be drawn in too closely into any political discussions that might go on in Committee No. 2. He thought that the scientists should be invited to attend these informal discussions and participate as individuals.

MR. HANCOCK summarized his understanding of the proposal as follows: Committee No. 2 should resolve itself into an informal working committee for the purpose of considering the question of controls as raised by the report of the Scientific and Technical Committee. Its discussions should proceed along the lines of the tentative outline proposed by General McNaughton. The heads of the several delegations should be asked to send as their representatives to these informal meetings anyone they chose. Individual members of the Scientific and Technical Committee should be invited to participate in these discussions as individuals. Whatever conclusions might be arrived at in these informal discussions should be written up in reports for presentation to Committee No. 2 in formal session for whatever action it deemed desirable.

GENERAL McNAUGHTON thought that such reports as might be developed in informal discussion ought to be presented to the formal committee via the Chairman of the informal group. MR. HANCOCK said this raised the question of whether it might be possible to break through the established pattern of the monthly rotation of chairmanship. GENERAL McNAUGHTON proposed that a way to do this would be to have a deputy chairman appointed to Committee No. 2 who would be specifically charged with responsibility of chairing informal meetings. This suggestion was generally agreed to. DR. TOLMAN and MR. GORDON suggested that an excellent choice for this post would be Dr. Vallarta.

There was general agreement that General McNaughton would take the initiative on tomorrow's meeting to move the adoption of a procedure along the lines he had discussed earlier.⁷⁷ It was generally agreed also that Dr. Vallarta⁷⁸ or Dr. Nervo would be our candidates for deputy chairman.

The meeting adjourned at 4:15 PM.

R. GORDON ARNESON

SPA Files

Memorandum by the Associate Chief of the Division of International Security Affairs (Blaisdell)

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] October 2, 1946.

SD/S/727

PROPOSAL BY THE SOVIET DELEGATION TO THE MILITARY STAFF COMMITTEE "THE PURPOSE OF UNITED NATIONS ARMED FORCES TO BE PLACED AT THE DISPOSAL OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL BY THE MEMBER NATIONS OF THE UNITED NATIONS"

VIEWS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE

1. This memorandum sets forth the views of the Department of State on the proposal advanced on September 18, 1946 to the Military Staff Committee by the Soviet Delegation entitled "The Purpose of United Nations Armed Forces To Be Placed at the Disposal of the Security Council by the Member Nations of the United Nations."⁷⁹ An expression of opinion by the Acting Representative of the United States on the Security Council was requested by the representatives of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff on the Military Staff Committee in a memorandum of September 18, 1946 from Dennis W. Knoll, Secretary, United States Delegation to the Military Staff Committee, to Mr. Herschel V. Johnson.⁸⁰ Comment of the Department was requested in a memorandum of September 19, 1946⁸⁰ from J. W. Scott⁸¹ to Joseph E. Johnson. The views presented in the present memorandum are for the use and guidance of the Acting United States Representative on the Security Council in complying with the ⁷⁷ At its 7th Meeting, October 8, Committee 2 accepted the Canadian proposal that it conduct informal meetings on subjects considered in the Committee 3 report; regarding the nature of the meetings which occurred between October 15 and the end of the month, see Hewlett and Anderson, p. 607.

⁷⁸ Dr. Manuel Sandoval Vallarta, Mexican Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission.

⁷⁹ For text, see footnote 53, p. 915.

⁸⁰ Not printed.

⁸¹ Joseph W. Scott of the Division of International Security Affairs.

request of the representatives of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on the Military Staff Committee.⁸³

2. The Department is of the opinion that the Joint Chiefs of Staff representatives on the Military Staff Committee should take the position that in the absence of a specific directive from the Security Council, the Soviet proposal is not an appropriate matter for the Military Staff Committee or its subcommittees to deal with.

3. The Department is further of the opinion that if the Soviet representatives in the Military Staff Committee and its subcommittees consider that the establishment of the principles embodied in the Soviet proposal or of modifications of those principles is a prerequisite to the formulation of the principles of organization of the United Nations forces or is a prerequisite to the adoption by the Military Staff Committee of a draft standard form of agreement concerning the provision of armed forces for submission to the Security Council, the matter should be referred to the Security Council without delay.

4. The Department holds the views expressed in paragraphs 2 and 3 above because the Soviet proposal does not deal primarily with the military aspects of the purpose or employment of the armed forces to be made available to the Security Council or with the principles of organization of those forces. In addition, the proposal, in effect, constitutes interpretations of Charter provisions dealing with the authority of the Council to employ such armed forces and thus raise questions of a political nature. The Military Staff Committee is charged, both under Article 47 of the Charter and under Section II (c) of the Revised Draft Statute (MS/87),⁸⁴ with responsibility for advising and assisting the Security Council on questions relating to the "employment" of forces placed at its disposal. But it appears to be clear from the provisions of Article 47 and of the Draft Statute that unless otherwise directed by the Security Council the Military Staff Committee should, so far as concerns matters relating to the employment of these forces, deal only with matters related to the military aspects of that employment.

⁸³ The Ad Hoc Committee on Military and Security Functions of the United Nations Organization discussed the Soviet proposal at its 13th Meeting, September 26. It was agreed that the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Department of State should transmit parallel instructions to their representatives in New York based on consensus achieved at that meeting. (SWNCC Files) The present document was forwarded by Mr. Hiss to the Delegation in New York on October 3 as the tentative position of the Department, and transmitted by the Acting United States Representative at the United Nations to the U.S. Representatives on the MSC on October 10. The JCS despatched instructions to the U.S. Representatives on the MSC on October 8 which were substantially the same as those contained in the present document. The JCS instructions were circulated among the U.S. Representatives as USMS/50/12 and in the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee in SWNCC 219/14. (IO Files)

⁸⁴ Not printed.

5. The Department holds the further view that if the members of the Subcommittee on Principles of Organization, other than the Soviet member, fail to support the position taken by the United States representative in accordance with the position set out in paragraphs 2 and 3 above, the Joint Chiefs of Staff representatives should obtain further instructions from the Joint Chiefs of Staff before adopting any substantially different position.

6. The adoption of the position set forth in paragraph 2, 3, and 5 above with respect to the Soviet proposal would necessitate similar action with respect to proposals concerning the purpose of United Nations armed forces or any other matters outside the terms of reference employed by the Security Council in directing the Military Staff Committee "as its first task to examine from the military point of view the provisions in Article 43 of the Charter" which may appear in papers submitted by other members of the Military Staff Committee.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Memorandum by Dr. Richard C. Tolman to Mr. John M. Hancock*⁸⁵

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] October 4, 1946.

Subject: Immediate cessation of bomb manufacture

1. In accordance with your request I am transmitting herewith an analysis of certain points with reference to the question of immediate cessation of bomb manufacture.

2. The principal argument given for the immediate cessation of bomb manufacture by the United States is that such action would demonstrate the sincerity of our desire to outlaw the use of this weapon, and would thus contribute to a better atmosphere and to better prospects of success for the UNAEC negotiations.

3. Such an action would certainly be regarded by some persons and for some length of time as a demonstration of sincerity, but it is not clear that it would contribute either to the success of the negotiations or to the security of the world.

4. Doubts as to whether we had really ceased bomb manufacture would soon be spread. On the one hand this would impair confidence in our sincerity. On the other hand it would emphasize the need for inspection which we believe to be an essential part of international control.

5. Rumors would be circulated that we already had a sufficient stock pile of bombs so that the cessation of bomb manufacture was meaningless.

⁸⁵ Members of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission.

6. Demands might soon be made for destruction of existing bombs, disposition of existing fissionable material, and discontinuance of the manufacture of further fissionable material. This last would in time have a bad effect on development for peaceful uses.

7. Resumption of bomb manufacture after a specified time, or on approaching breakdown of negotiations would have a serious adverse effect on international relations.

8. Many nations would lose the sense of security that they now derive from the U. S. possession of the bomb and would cease to support U. S. positions.

9. U. S. bargaining position for a system of international control would probably be weakened.

10. Timing of cessation of bomb manufacture and disposition of existing bombs are appropriate items for inclusion in treaty.

11. U. S. security would be adversely affected at a time when demobilization of armed forces has already been great.

RICHARD C. TOLMAN

740.00119 Council/10-846 : Telegram

*The Acting Secretary of State to the Secretary of State, in Paris*⁸⁶

SECRET

WASHINGTON, October 8, 1946—7 p. m.

5378. Secdel 1075. 1. In view of our repeatedly stated position that GA may discuss any topic within the scope of the Charter and because its scope of discussion is thus wider than that of SC, we believe we should not oppose addition to GA Agenda of Soviet proposal re presence of forces of states members of UN on territories of non-enemy countries (re Dept's 5321, October 5).⁸⁷

2. Under GA rules all proposed Agenda items are passed upon by GA. Consequently, our position does not have to be taken definitively until GA convenes. However, we recommend that in order to make our position clear as well as to minimize risk of having Soviet proposal debated in its present form, we should promptly inform SYG our intention to move for a revision of the Soviet proposal or, if necessary, to propose a new Agenda item to include the question of troops of UN

⁸⁶ Repeated to New York as telegram 231.

⁸⁷ In a letter to the Secretary General, October 3, the Soviet Delegation requested that the question of the presence of troops of United Nations members on non-enemy territory be placed on the agenda of the General Assembly; for text, see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, First Session, Second Part, First Committee, p. 332. Telegram 5321, not printed, informed the Secretary of State of the Soviet request. (740.00119 Council/10-546)

On October 7, Mr. Hiss and Senator Austin discussed the matter by telephone. Mr. Hiss indicated that in view of United States advocacy of freedom of discussion in the General Assembly the Department intended to recommend to Secretary Byrnes that the United States not oppose the placing of the item on the agenda. Senator Austin concurred. (740.00119 Council/10-546) members in territories of non-member states (Dept's telegram 4508, August 30), and that at the same time, we should request SYG to communicate notice of this intention to UN members. Our position should be determined promptly.

3. It is Dept's view as well as that of War and Navy (Dept's 4508, August 30) we should be willing to make available such information regarding US troops.

4. In view your prior consideration this matter with Bevin when proposed for SC consideration, you may wish to discuss it again with him. (Ur 4396, September 2)

ACHESON

501.BC/9-1446

*Department of State Position Paper*⁸⁸

SECRET

WASHINGTON, October 14, 1946.

SD/S/734

BRITISH PROPOSAL TO MAKE THE WHOLE OF A NATION'S FORCES AVAILABLE TO THE SECURITY COUNCIL

The Joint Chiefs of Staff have requested the views of the Department of State on the following article which was proposed by the United Kingdom representatives on a subcommittee of the Military Staff Committee of the United Nations for inclusion in the Standard Form of Agreement concerning the size and composition of the armed forces to be made available to the Security Council:

"[Member Nation] guarantees to place, if requested by the Security Council, the whole of its national forces at the disposal of the Security Council so far as its other commitments and transport resources permit."

The Department of State holds the view that the United States should oppose the inclusion of this article in the Standard Form of Agreement. The reasons for holding this view are as follows:

1. The article would not be in agreement with United States law.

Section 6 of the United Nations Participation Act of 1945 (Public Law 264-79th Congress) reads as follows:

"The President is authorized to negotiate a special agreement or agreements with the Security Council which shall be subject to the approval of the Congress by appropriate Act or joint resolution, providing for the numbers and types of armed forces, their degree of readiness and general location, and the nature of facilities and assistance, including rights of passage, to be made available to the Security Council on its call for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security in accordance with article 43 of said Charter. The President shall not be deemed to require the authorization of the Congress to make available to the Security Council on its call in order to take action under article 42 of said Charter and pursuant to such special agreement or agreements the armed forces, facilities, or assistance provided for therein: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as an authorization to the President by the Congress to make available to the Security Council for such purpose armed forces, facilities, or assistance in addition to the forces, facilities, and assistance provided for in such special agreement or agreements."

⁸⁸ This paper was prepared in response to SWN-4744, September 14, p. 917. On November 27, the Joint Chiefs of Staff advised the Department of State through the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee that the United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee had been furnished guidance substantially as recommended in the present paper. (SWNCC Files)

The wording of this section makes it clear that the special agreement to be entered into by the United States will have to be approved by Congress and that Congress expects the agreement to mention a specific quantity of armed forces, any commitment beyond which would require further authorization by the legislative branch.

2. The article would be out of harmony with congressional opinion.

During conversations held on April 1, 1946 by representatives of the State Department with Senators Connally, Vandenberg, Austin and Thomas, it was the judgment of these Senators that the number of forces, and particularly of the ground forces, should be small; otherwise, the possibility of public disapproval was foreseen.

3. The article overvalues the effectiveness of the Charter from the security point of view.

As stated in SWNCC 219/9 (page 97, paragraph 3), the existence of the unanimity requirement makes it highly improbable that the Security Council will ever take action by armed forces. Action against any of the permanent members of the Security Council is practically impossible. The only conceivable action which the Security Council could take would be against small nations. It would, therefore, be unnecessary to place large forces at the disposal of the Security Council.

In making this proposal, the United Kingdom probably wished to strengthen the United Nations and to increase its prestige. The United Kingdom has not, however, proposed the abolition of the unanimity rule, which would appear to be a necessary condition to strengthening the United Nations in the way suggested in this article. However, if such is the intention, it would appear to be useless to attempt to strengthen the United Nations in such an indirect manner at this time. If, at some future date, it seems likely that the unanimity rule could be eliminated, the question of providing larger forces might then properly receive further consideration.

For these reasons, the Department of State is of the opinion that the United Kingdom proposal should be opposed by the United States.

The same view would apply to other proposals which provide for the placing of anything but limited and specific number of armed forces at the disposal of the Security Council.

The Department recognizes, however, that the Security Council in some conceivable situation might need more armed forces than were made available to it in the special agreements. With this thought in mind the present article 8 of the Draft Standard Form of Agreement was included. In order to meet the wishes of other Governments, the Department would not oppose the inclusion in this article of a clause by which the member states would undertake to consider a request for additional troops made by the Security Council as rapidly as is possible in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

It is, therefore, recommended that the Department should advise the Joint Chiefs of Staff that, if they concur in the above views, they may wish to instruct their representatives on the Military Staff Committee of the United Nations as follows:

(1) The U.K. proposals or any other proposals which would cause the member states to commit anything but a limited and specific number of armed forces to the Security Council should be opposed.

(2) The reasons for this position should be explained informally to the other Delegations. An effort should be made to get the U.K. representatives on the Military Staff Committee to have this proposal withdrawn. If such an effort does not succeed, the Department should be informed through the U.S. representatives on the Security Council.

(3) A clause might be included in the Draft Standard Form of Agreement making it obligatory for member states to consider a request made by the Security Council for additional troops as rapidly as is possible in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

A request should also be made to the Joint Chiefs of Staff to advise the Department if their representatives on the Military Staff Committee are instructed in the above sense.

Moscow Embassy Files: 713—Atomic Bomb

Memorandum by Mr. Franklin A. Lindsay⁸⁹ to the United States Representative on the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch)

SECRET

[NEW YORK,] October 21, 1946.

On Saturday evening, October 19, Mr. Eberstadt, Dr. Herring,⁹⁰ and I dined with Mr. Sobolev, Assistant Secretary General of the United Nations. The meeting was arranged through Herring with the purpose of establishing a point of contact with the Russian ⁸⁹ Staff member, United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission.

⁹⁰ Edward Pendleton Herring, Secretary, Atomic Energy Commission.

Government in addition to the official contact established through Gromyko.

Sobolev began the discussion by asking why we refused to stop bomb production. He stated that we would still have our plants, personnel, and technical skill, and could start again at any time as we had an absolute monopoly at the present time. He acknowledged that the use of the bomb was "possibly" decisive in the Japanese war. But he asked what purpose we could possibly have for more bombs at this time. He felt that in the present international situation that our continued production was an unstabilizing force in the world and made more difficult the conclusion of any international agreements or understandings. Sobolev stated that he based his statement that we were continuing bomb production on press reports.

Mr. Eberstadt stated that approximately six weeks ago he had come to the conclusion that the Soviet Government did not wish to reach an agreement for the international control of atomic energy. He had gone over all of Gromyko's statements on the subject, as well as various articles which had been written expressing the Soviet viewpoint. He found in these objections to the American Plan no insurmountable obstacles, with the exception of our provision for international inspection and control. That seemed to be completely unacceptable to the Soviet Government.

Sobolev replied that the United States plan was in essence a plan for world government. The world, he stated, was not ready for world government. The Soviets, themselves, had attempted a similar proposal in 1927, but this proposal had been rejected by the world as attempting to go too far too fast.⁹¹ He asked whether or not we thought that the American Senate would approve a proposal for world government.

Mr. Eberstadt replied that he thought the Senate would probably not approve a proposal labeled "World Government", but he did think a proposal such as ours, designed to accomplish specific objectives, could be passed by the Senate.

Sobolev stated that the question of world government had also been examined at Dumbarton Oaks⁹² and in San Francisco,⁹³ and had been rejected on the grounds that the world was not ready for it.

⁹¹ Litvinov had made a proposal for complete and immediate disarmament, offered at the fourth session of the Preparatory Commission for Disarmament, at Geneva, on November 30, 1927. For proceedings of this session, see League of Nations, Documents of the Preparatory Commission for the Disarmament Conference Entrusted with the Preparation for the Conference for the Reduction and Limitations of Armaments, Series 1 (C667.M.225.1927.IX), p. 11.

⁹² For documentation concerning the Dumbarton Oaks Conference, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 1, pp. 713 ff.

⁹³ For documentation concerning the United Nations Conference on International Organization, San Francisco, California, April 25-June 26, 1945, see ibid., 1945, vol. 1, pp. 1 ff.

Mr. Eberstadt brought up the Kuh article which had appeared in "PM". He felt that perhaps this article expressed legitimate cause for concern on the part of the Soviets. Sobolev did not indicate that he was the source for this article, but showed great interest in whether or not we considered it to be a legitimate article.

We attempted to demonstrate to him that our proposals in no way would be directed unfairly against the economic development of Russia. Mr. Eberstadt stated that an initial division of plants might be agreed to in the treaty, and that additional plants might be constructed only upon approval of the Security Council with the veto intact. This would make it possible for the Russians to veto our further use of atomic power as well as our vetoing of their expansion. Thus, the American Proposals would apply equally to both nations.

Sobolev replied that the Soviet Union was not seeking equality, but, rather, freedom to pursue its own policies in complete freedom and without any interference or control from the outside. He made at this point rather an oblique reference to two previous attempts which had been made by foreign nations to deprive the Russian people of their freedom, both of which had failed.

Sobolev said that he had been trained as an engineer, and that he knew engineering projects of this type could not be allocated on purely political considerations, as a great many factors were required to provide adequate conditions for the construction of plants. If those conditions did not exist, it would not be possible to construct plants allocated by political means.

Sobolev further stated that the United States at this time had a tremendous advantage. We had all of the plants already and the skill to operate them, and all the subsidiary industrial potential to support such a complex project. It was inconceivable that any of this would be torn down.

Sobolev then returned to his argument for stopping bomb production. Mr. Eberstadt stated that we were perfectly willing to stop bomb production as a stage in the transition to ultimate international control. However, the final stage of international control must be provided for and agreed to before we would stop bomb production. He stated that although he did not know the official United States position on this, he would be prepared to argue the point with his Government for making cessation of bomb production the very first step in the transition stage. This would be done immediately upon signing of a satisfactory treaty. However, it would be futile to even consider such a program without adequate guaranties on the part of other nations. The American people would not support such a move and without such support the Government could not conceivably take such action.

He referred to the joint declaration of foreign ministers which envisaged an international control agency and controls sufficiently effective to protect complying states in the event of violations.⁹⁴ He did not know what the Soviet interpretation of this declaration was, but the American interpretation was that it certainly required effective and international control. [I cannot recall any reply that was made by Sobolev to this statement.]⁹⁵

Herring at this point suggested a possible compromise in which the initial disposal of plants would be provided for in the treaty in return for acceptance by the Russians of international inspection of the plant or plants located in their territory. Any nation would be perfectly free to construct additional plants at its own expense and where it desired, provided that it submitted to inspection. I stated that I doubted that such a proposal would provide for the minimum of security which we believe to be essential. I suggested, however, that the problem of inequality in requirements for power plants, which would cause a corresponding inequality in military potential, might be circumvented at least in part by permitting nations which did not desire to construct plants up to the agreed international quota to hold stocks of fissionable material equivalent to the working stocks that would be required in such plants. In this way they would be able to preserve their proportionate military potential.

Mr. Eberstadt suggested an alternate plan in which an initial quota of plants would be distributed throughout the world, and that construction of future plants would be up to Security Council approval. He emphasized, however, that he was speaking as an individual and that he had no idea whether such a proposal would be acceptable to his Government. Sobolev made no comment on either of these statements.

Sobolev again returned to the aspect of international control and repeated that the U.S. proposals were too ambitious, and that it was completely impossible for the Russians to accept them. He suggested the only possible way would be by slow stages as the world became more ready for international world government. He suggested that stopping of bomb production would be a first step, but that further steps could not be agreed upon now or could even be foreseen. He thought that it might be that after a period of years a situation could possibly be reached which would be quite similar to the situation envisaged by the U. S. proposals, but reiterated that our ultimate conditions could not possibly be accepted at the present time. He did, however, suggest that the compromise proposal suggested by Eberstadt and Herring might be the subject of discussion between Molotov and Byrnes while both are in New York. He stated that he thought Molotov would not take the initiative in such discussions, and that Byrnes would have to bring up the subject. Eberstadt asked who else he thought should be present at those discussions. Sobolev replied that at least at first no one besides those two should be present.

⁹⁴ See section 7 of the Report of the Conference of Foreign Ministers at Moscow, in telegram 4284, December 27, 1945, from Moscow, Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, p. 815.

⁹⁵ Brackets appear in the original.

Mr. Eberstadt remarked that he thought it might have been a mistake to bring the United States and Soviet proposals into the Commission without having previously discussed them privately. Sobolev made no comment.

At one point in the conversations, Sobolev referred to the anti-Soviet attitude of the American press. He stated that the figure of ten million men in Russian concentration camps was ridiculous. He stated that the United States would not believe officially-published statistics of the Russian Government. He said that it was true the Russians were planning to build a Navy, but with the industrial potential of the country it should be perfectly obvious to us that the size of the Navy could not possibly approach the size of the American Navy in the foreseeable future.

He stated that the current 5-Year Plan had been interpreted in this country as a war plan. The reason for the emphasis on basic steel production was not for war purposes, but to rebuild the railways and bridges that had been destroyed during the war.

Eberstadt brought up the question of the Red Army. Sobolev replied the figures quoted in the American press for the size of the Russian Army were fantastic, that the size of the Russian Army could be obtained by anyone from official Russian statements. For example, they had announced that they had already demobilized 20 classes. He inferred that the size of the Red Army could be determined by such information. He summed up this part of the discussion by saying that the United States knew fully as much about Russia as Russia knew about the United States.

The discussion ended with a reiteration by Sobolev that he spoke only for himself and did not speak as a Soviet official.

Comment:

This is by far the frankest discussion with a Soviet official in which I have participated. Based on my previous work with the Russians, I believe it to be an accurate statement of official Soviet policy.

I believe the main conclusions which can be drawn from the talk are:

1. The Russians are most anxious to get us to stop bomb production, temporarily, at least. They probably think that if they can get us to stop production now they can use pressure of public opinion to prevent resumption of production later.

2. Stopping bomb production will in no way induce the Russians to accept any form of international inspection and control, the real obstacle to agreement.

3. The statement that the Soviet Union does not desire equality, but requires unlimited freedom to pursue its own policies, strongly indicates that no general understanding based on mutual trust and cooperation is possible between the two systems of government.

4. The proposal for discussions between Molotov and Byrnes was probably prompted by the hope that the Russians might get some concession from us, rather than by a desire to try to reach a general agreement.

The Soviet government is confronted with two alternatives:

a. To conclude an agreement which will mean world government in a limited and specific field, a system which might result in serious changes in their internal social and political structure.

b. Accept no international dominion of any sort; accept for the time being the superiority of the United States in atomic weapons; try to neutralize this superiority by all possible methods; and wait for the "inevitable" crack-up of capitalism.

We can only achieve success by making the second alternative more undesirable to them than the first.

FRANKLIN A. LINDSAY

501.BB/10-2146

Memorandum of Telephone Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Special Political Affairs (Hiss)

[WASHINGTON,] October 21, 1946.

Participants: Mr. D. D. Maclean, First Secretary of the British Embassy
Mr. Alger Hiss

Mr. Acheson informed me Friday evening ⁹⁶ that the Secretary had agreed with the recommendation made to him by the Department in Secdel 1075 of October 8 ⁹⁷ that we should not oppose the addition of the above item to the General Assembly agenda but instead should move for a clarification of it to ensure the inclusion of Austria as a non-enemy state and also for its expansion to cover troops in ex-enemy states. Mr. Acheson agreed that the British Embassy should be notified promptly of our views and that the Delegation in New York should be instructed not to notify the Secretary General of our intentions until after giving the British advance notice. Mr. Acheson suggested that we might simply notify the British that we intended to send our notification to the Secretary General on Tuesday or Wednesday and were giving the British advance information because of their interest in the matter.

⁹⁶ October 18.

⁹⁷ Ante, p. 952.

Accordingly I informed Mr. Maclean of the British Embassy last Saturday of our intentions and pointed out that we were giving consideration to making public our own troop dispositions in the course of the Assembly discussion, probably at an early date in the particular committee to which the matter would be referred.

Mr. Maclean thanked me for this information and said he would immediately communicate it to London. He added that he thought our plans would be viewed with concern in London although he recognized the differences between the limited jurisdiction of the Security Council and the general authority of the General Assembly to discuss all subjects.

This morning Mr. Maclean called to say that the Embassy had received a preliminary reply on this subject which stated that the Foreign Office is giving urgent consideration to the problem which they regard as a joint problem since the Russian's initiative in their opinion is aimed at the United States and Britain. Mr. Bevin had expressed the hope that we would not make our communication to the Secretariat until we had heard further from him. Mr. Maclean assured us that their further views would be forthcoming shortly. He added that the Ambassador was being instructed to take the matter up directly with the Secretary.⁹⁸

Mr. Maclean said that in view of what I had said on Saturday, namely, that we do not contemplate communicating our views to the Secretary General until Tuesday or Wednesday that he assumed we would be able to wait a short time further until Mr. Bevin's further views had been received. I assured Mr. Maclean this was the situation.

⁹⁸ The file copy of the present document is accompanied by the following handwritten chit, addressed by Mr. Byrnes to Mr. Hiss, which is date-stamped Office of Special Political Affairs October 21, 1946: "Bevin asks we do not talk to Lie about Soviet Resolution as to armed forces until he communicates with me. I have told Ambassador would delay action but urged that he advise me promptly."

501.BB/10-2346

*The British Embassy to the Department of State*⁹⁹

TOP SECRET

Paraphrase of a Telegram Received from the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, of October 23rd 1946

"I have been considering the line to be taken in the General Assembly in answering the Soviet item on Allied troops abroad. To my mind the over-riding consideration is that in no circumstances can we admit the obligation to disclose all our troop strengths and dispositions abroad. It would be disastrous to reveal at the present time the exact strength and composition of our forces abroad, for the reasons I explained to Mr. Byrnes in Paris. Furthermore to agree under any circumstances that the General Assembly has a right to this information would establish a precedent consequences of which would require to be carefully thought out. Once the figures of service strengths overseas are given to the United Nations, there is nothing to stop a recurring request by the General Assembly or Security Council for the figures to be brought up to date. In other words every replacement or reequipment of land and air units overseas and every movement of naval units outside home waters might have to be notified. Powers with a high proportion of air and naval forces and scattered bases would have far more to lose by publicity of this sort than a land power depending mainly on an army inside its own frontiers, such as the Soviet Union.

2. "Similar objections apply to the idea of extending the proposal to cover ex-enemy territories. It is quite possible that Monsieur Molotov would jump at this offer and provide figures whose accuracy, although it might well be highly dubious, we should have no means of checking. In exchange the whole world would know the precise strength of British and United States forces in Germany and Austria, as well as elsewhere, which it is certainly not in our common interest to divulge at the present time.

3. "For these reasons I cannot take any line in the Assembly which, even if the Russians turned the item down when extended to cover ex-enemy territories, would admit the obligation to disclose our troop ⁹⁹ The source text bears the following marginal notation by Mr. Hiss: "Left (in single copy) with Mr. Hiss by Mr. Maclean 3: 45 p. m. 12/23 [10/23]." The source text is accompanied by the following handwritten chit directed by Mr. Cohen to Mr. Acheson: "You will be interested in the enclosed note from Bevin. When you have finished reading it, please give to Mr. Reams [R. Borden Reams, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State] to bring to the Secretary's attention immediately on his return from N. Y.

"My thought is that we might let the Russian proposal for the agenda go on as submitted and hold our amendment until the matter comes up in the Committee after the item has gone on the agenda."

Regarding discussion of the issue by Maclean and Cohen at the time of the delivery of the note, see Mr. Acheson's memorandum to Mr. Byrnes, October 26, p. 966.

dispositions abroad. Even the Military Staff Committee, if it were a united and effective body, would still not be entitled to have this information beyond what is required for Article 43, and it seems to me out of the question to concede the point at the present time.

4. "I quite agree that the difference in procedure between the Security Council and the General Assembly makes it impossible to keep the Soviet item off the Assembly agenda, as was done in the Security Council. Apart from this, however, I would propose to take much the same line as was taken then, namely that this is a Soviet propaganda move, that British troops abroad are not a menace to peace and security and that nobody seriously believes they are. I am of course assuming, as I think is bound to be the case, that the Soviet spokesman in the Assembly will take essentially the same line as Monsieur Gromyko took in the Security Council. I understand that Article 11 will be invoked in the Assembly and this Article, though more widely drawn, seems to give as much scope for such a Soviet line as Article 34 did in the Security Council. I should then observe that the Soviet item specifically excludes those countries who cannot speak for themselves and yet have to bear the burden of a quite excessive number of Soviet troops. I should also point out that if any Governments feel aggrieved it is up to them to raise the question for themselves.

5. "I cannot be certain that a motion exonerating British and United States troops would get a clear two-thirds majority as there might be a number of abstentions. On the other hand, it is most unlikely that a Soviet motion on the lines of their Security Council argument would get a two-thirds majority. Our tactics should therefore be to get them to propose a motion which, provided the United States and United Kingdom delegates take a similar line, we should have no difficulty in defeating."

Mr. Bevin very much hopes that Mr. Byrnes will agree with the foregoing and with the course of action suggested. If he does not Mr. Bevin hopes Mr. Byrnes will make no move until he has had an opportunity of discussing the matter further with him on his arrival in New York.

[WASHINGTON,] October 23, 1946.

501.BC Atomic/10-2446

Mr. Fred Searls, Jr., of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission, to the Secretary of State

NEW YORK, October 24, 1946.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: You will have heard from Mr. Baruch, who has also reported to the President, the status of negotiations within the Atomic Energy Commission and the high lights of efforts that have been made during your absence. No doubt, you have already formed some opinion as to the degree of success likely to attend further attempts at a unanimous agreement to a treaty, or recommendations to the Security Council.

It is assumed very generally indeed, not only by Mr. Wallace and the Communist-scientist group, but by almost everyone else who has spoken or written on "The Atomic Bomb," that failure to reach an agreement by the Atomic Energy Commission or some other creature of the United Nations, means acceleration of an atomic armament race, which most—but not all—of the writers and speakers believe will lead to war. Laurence of California,¹ who is one of the realists, suggests that if the Russians do not soon agree, we should increase production of fissionable material, speed up the program for bases and B-36 planes, and in effect give notice that we are the future police force of the Security Council.

However, my efforts in trying to assist Mr. Baruch have been chiefly in the field of "raw materials" and the contacts I have had with the Russians, particularly with Alexandrov,² and with the Manhattan District activities, convince me that there is perhaps another, less openly belligerent route that we can follow—indeed are following—which, if handled with great wisdom and not made subject to interference by radicals, can accomplish years of delay in competitive atomic weapon production, even if the Atomic Energy Commission fails of agreement.

This procedure of growing importance lies in the field of continuation and stimulation of preclusive and cooperative contracting in the field of raw materials, particularly, of course, of the ores of uranium and thorium but also of some other metals.

I know that, as a member of the Combined Policy Committee,³ you are familiar with the May 13th and previous agreements and, generally speaking, with the activities of the Combined Development Trust.⁴

These activities have been of great importance but, if the Atomic Energy Commission fails, it appears to me that they may become of surpassing importance. It is, therefore, of the very greatest interest that they shall remain in the most competent hands.

The attitude, questions, desires, and general behavior of the Russians, of which I can give you details, support intelligence reports of declarations by Alexandrov at Bikini of the lack by them of workable high-grade deposits, and references to their consequent feverish activity in development of processes for treatment of their abundant very

¹ Presumably Ernest O. Lawrence of the University of California, inventor of the cyclotron and participant in Manhattan Engineer District.

² Mr. S. P. Alexandrov, Adviser, Soviet Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission.

³ See footnote 14, p. 1205.

⁴ See footnote 15, p. 1205.

low-grade ore. It now seems to me that it may well be ten years before they can become possessed of an adequate supply, if we can prevent their obtaining it from other countries. Ten years may well mean everything in relations with the Russians since, surely, it is only a question of time before internal opinions will force a change in their government's behavior to its own people and to foreign nations.

What I am afraid of is that this most delicate and important series of negotiations will fall into the wrong hands. So far, I think it has been very well done; but if the Atomic Energy Commission fails, it will need to be expanded wisely and promptly, particularly in the thorium field, and particularly in Asia and the East Indies. It is for this reason that I asked Donald Russell⁵ to send Bain of the Manhattan District with the delegation to the London Tin Conference.

It will be a tragedy if, just at the time this activity needs the greatest care and wise expansion, it becomes a bureaucratic prize, or subject to change of policy and public criticism or even knowledge because of ideological theories. This can easily happen, and probably will happen, if wrong appointments are made to the commission created by the McMahon Bill. As you doubtless know, the transfers agreed to by the Combined Policy Committee by the compromise agreement of May 13th have been held up until the new commission is appointed and acts. It is certain, even required, that the new commission will have "cognizance" (in the naval sense of the word) of all of the Combined Trust's activities, even in dealing with foreign countries.

Nothing has been made quite so clear in the discussions of the Atomic Energy Commission as that no nation is willing to surrender actual ownership of deposits of these ores. With the possible exception of the United States, it is, I believe, indisputable now that all nations will vigorously resist any attempt to have an international agency actually take over ownership and operation of such deposits. One by one, the delegations of Canada, Brazil, Australia, France, United Kingdom, and China have expressed their relief at our willingness to depart in this respect from the original proposals of the Acheson-Lilienthal report. There is clearly distinguishable to anyone now engaged in the metal business, a new interest and growing determination on the part of all nations to regard as essential to sovereignty all metal deposits—not only metals with the very high atomic numbers—but all metals. As C. K. Leith⁶ says, there is little metal crossing the water these days, save by government action or, at least, with government approval.

The most stubborn advocate of international ownership of atomic energy ores has been Lilienthal. If surrounded and encouraged by other left-wingers . . . , I think we can probably fold up the newborn hope that little by little we can draw other nations in with the United States, the United Kingdom, and Canada, to form a group that will control atomic energy through possession of such an overwhelming proportion of the raw materials, that those nations left without the circle must pay the price of admission—real arrangements for permanent peace—or, failing that, realize that they will be hopelessly behind in an atomic energy race for many years to come.

⁵ Donald S. Russell, Assistant Secretary of State for Administration.

⁶ Charles K. Leith, a United States trustee, Combined Development Trust.

I do not say that this is a permanent solution. There is too much uranium and thorium available for that. But it may well provide a delay of many years beyond the date, at which the Russians can make an atomic bomb or two. I am convinced they already know how to make them, and that they are bending every effort to get the material for many of them; but if the work initiated by the District and furthered by the Trust is let alone and wisely handled, it could provide the way to peace.

And it may be wise to include certain other metals in such a program. There are several others important in the peaceful application of atomic energy; and there are others still that will be needed, beyond the limits of stockpiles plus production, when the next war comes. In view of the growing importance of raw materials, it would be well if one member of the new commission were a man like Leith or some younger man, approved by Groves, who is experienced and informed on this subject.

It is not evident that Mr. Baruch has so far been successful in exercising influence in the choice of the members of the new commission and, while my fears may be founded on rumor, I think the importance warrants the anxiety. Could you yet get Baruch another hearing, or intervene yourself, or, if it is too late for that, could you get a Presidential edict, to which the appointees must accede before their appointment, which would be so worded as to leave this raw material program heading up to you and Patterson and Forrestal? If something is not done, I fear we may throw away one of our best approaches to the solution of an important segment of the world's difficulties.

Respectfully,

FRED SEARLS, JR.

501.BB/10-2646

Memorandum by the Under Secretary of State (Acheson) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] October 26, 1946.

Subject: Russian Proposal with Respect to Troops in Non-Enemy States

There is attached hereto the memorandum from Mr. Bevin⁸ which I mentioned to you on the telephone the evening of Wednesday, ⁸ Ante, p. 962.

October 23, while you were still in New York. The British Embassy, in leaving it with us, emphasized that it was a personal message from Mr. Bevin for you.

Also on Wednesday, General Sir Henry Maitland Wilson of the British Joint Chiefs of Staff mission left a similar memorandum at General Eisenhower's office (the General was not available). General Norstad⁹ immediately informed us of this and said that he was sure the General would wish to afford the British Joint Chiefs the courtesy of hearing General Wilson's arguments. General Norstad said that as our Joint Chiefs would be meeting on Friday, October 25, he would see that the British representations were made by then and a Joint Chiefs' decision reached this week. Meanwhile he knew that General Eisenhower would wish to recommend to the Department that no action be taken by us in New York until General Wilson's presentation of the British views had been obtained. In the light of my conversations with you, General Norstad was assured that we would take no action prior to your return next Monday.

On Friday, October 25, we learned that General Eisenhower had told General Wilson that he had never thought that military considerations were involved in the issue, and that after Mr. Churchill's inquiry in the House of Commons about total Soviet forces outside of Russia he thought the British had no case at all. We were told that the Joint Chiefs will make no further recommendation to the Department, which means they were not impressed by any military aspects of General Wilson's arguments.

Our Delegation in New York was also informed on the evening of Wednesday, October 23, that they should take no action on this matter until further communication to them following your return next week. They were also told that the British will not oppose the item going on the agenda and, of course, neither should our Delegation.

The British Embassy was also informed on Wednesday evening, October 23, that we would take no action in New York until your return next week.

The British Embassy has informed us that Mr. Bevin is sailing on the Aquitania on Saturday, October 26, and is due to arrive in New York the following Saturday, November 2. It is quite possible that as early as Wednesday or Thursday, October 30 and 31, the Soviet proposal will be taken up for discussion in Committee 1 (Political and Security) on which Senator Connally is our representative. The Delegation has, not unnaturally, been pressing us for our position on this subject. If it is raised for formal discussion in committee before you have a chance to confer with Mr. Bevin it may be embarrassing unless Senator Connally is authorized to take a definite position either of simple opposition to the Soviet motion or of proposing an amendment to include ex-enemy states. Having this in mind, Mr. Cohen observed to Mr. Maclean of the British Embassy, when Mr. Maclean brought in Mr. Bevin's personal message to you on Wednesday, October 23, that while in response to Mr. Bevin's request you might (as in fact you did a few hours later) be able to agree that we would take no affirmative action before the General Committee or in plenary sessions of the Assembly when the agenda was being adopted, other than to support the inclusion of the Russian item on the agenda, it might be necessary for us to propose our amendment to the Russian proposal if the subject came up in committee before Mr. Bevin's arrival here. This warning has been communicated to Mr. Bevin by the British Embassy.

⁹ Maj. Gen. Lauris Norstad, Director of Plans and Operations, War Department General Staff.

The British Embassy have informed us that in view of the considerations set forth in the preceding paragraph their delegation in New York will seek to postpone consideration of the Russian proposal in Committee I until after Mr. Bevin's arrival. We have informally asked our delegation not to oppose such a British proposal. (In view of the British Embassy's request that their representations be regarded as top secret, we have not informed our delegation on this point and have merely said that you were personally considering our position). On the basis of our latest information from New York, we think that other items now on Committee I's agenda will keep the issue from arising until after Mr. Bevin's arrival. If it should arise, a British proposal for postponement would almost certainly be accepted.

In view of the foregoing I should like to recommend that you promptly send the attached wire to Mr. Bevin on the Aquitania stating that as he knows you were glad in response to his request to drop our intention to take positive action in the General Committee or in plenary sessions of the Assembly and that you will be glad to confer with him about the matter upon his arrival, but that in the unlikely event the Russian proposal is raised in committee before he arrives, you feel it necessary to instruct our Delegation to propose an amendment of the proposal expanding it to cover ex-enemy states. The British Embassy has facilities for sending messages in code to Mr. Bevin on the Aquitania. I also recommend that a day or so later the Delegation be authorized to propose our broadening amendment if the proposal comes before Committee I before you communicate further with them, and that in talking to other Delegations who may inquire as to our views and in response to press inquiries, the Delegation should say that we consider the Russian proposal one-sided inasmuch as it does not cover troops in ex-enemy states.

You may be interested in the attached extract from a summary of press comments on our action in the Security Council when we opposed the same Russian proposal.¹⁰

[Annex]

*Draft Message From Secretary Byrnes To Be Sent to Foreign Minister Bevin Aboard the Aquitania*¹¹

I have carefully considered the message which you sent to me on October 23 about the Soviet item on allied troops abroad. In view of your problems on this subject I was glad, as a result of your request that we take no action until you and I have an opportunity of discussing the matter further, to give up our plan of promptly informing the Assembly that we favor amending the Soviet proposal to include troops in ex-enemy states. I will, of course, be very glad to discuss this whole matter with you on your arrival but the course of events in the General Assembly may force us to state our position before you and I can confer further. Consequently, I want you to realize that in the unlikely event that this issue is raised for discussion in the appropriate committee of the General Assembly before you and I have been able to discuss the matter, our representative will state that we consider the Soviet proposal one-sided, inasmuch as it excludes the ex-enemy states, and will propose an amendment covering the ex-enemy states if an actual proposal along the lines of the Soviet thesis is presented to the committee.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Lincoln Gordon*¹²

SECRET

[NEW YORK,] October 28, 1946.

An informal discussion was held from 11 to 12:15 AM at Senator Austin's office in the Hotel Pennsylvania¹³ at which the following were present: Senator Austin, Mr. Charles Fahy, Mr. Jack Ross, Mr. Wilder Foote of the General Assembly Delegation; Mr. Baruch, Mr. Eberstadt, Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Gordon of the AEC Delegation.

Senator Austin stated that, contrary to his earlier intention, he had ¹⁰ The summary of press comments is not printed.

¹¹ Delivered to the British Embassy on October 28 for transmittal to Mr. Bevin; see Mr. Hiss' memorandum, October 30, p. 978.

¹² Staff member, United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission. The source text is labelled "rough draft;" however, no subsequent draft has been found in the files of the Department of State.

¹³ For information regarding the organization and composition of the United States Delegation to the Second Part of the First Session of the General Assembly, see p. 37.

now decided to participate in the general debate in the plenary sessions of the General Assembly.¹⁴ His speech will come toward the close of these sessions. In his speech, he will state that the United States proposes [opposes?] any amendment at this time of the Security Council voting provisions as set forth in the Charter.¹⁵ The United States will favor clarification and interpretation of the intent and desirable practice, particularly with respect to the peaceful settlement of disputes under Chapter 6, so that the unanimity principles will not hinder the peaceful settlement of disputes under this Chapter.

The subject of atomic energy will come up in the speech in the context of a discussion of specialized agencies of the United Nations. The speech will stress the constructive activities of such agencies and the flexibility and breadth of the constitutional arrangement in their organizations. It will point out that the voting principles in the charters of these specialized agencies normally called for decision by two-thirds or simple majorities. In this connection, his speech will cite the proposal for an Atomic Development Authority as an example of the flexibility which is possible under the existing Charter. The ADA is to be given the necessary power to insure that atomic energy is developed only for peaceful purposes and to give protection for complying states against violations and evasions. These purposes, the speech will say, are in accord with the General Assembly resolution of last January setting up the Atomic Energy Commission.

At Mr. Eberstadt's suggestion, and after some discussion, it was agreed that a sentence or two would be inserted into the speech saying that the United States position on the Security Council voting principles is entirely consistent with the United States atomic energy proposals as set forth by Mr. Baruch, in connection with which Mr. Baruch has repeatedly stated that there is no intention to modify the general requirements of Great Power unanimity in the Security Council substantive decisions.

It was agreed that Senator Austin's position and ours are perfectly in accord on the voting question.

There ensued a discussion of the possibility of a debate in the General Assembly on the work of the Atomic Energy Commission and its future course of action. Mr. Baruch summarized for Senator Austin the substance of our progress report to the President of September 17, pointing out that after completion of the present discussion of controls, we would be faced with a clear choice and form of stalling on the one hand and bringing the basic questions of principles to a vote on the other hand. Mr. Baruch stated that he favored the latter course. He had been awaiting instructions from the President on this matter for six weeks, and felt it of the highest importance that the President make a decision promptly. He felt that the decision should favor a clear decision on principles unless broad considerations of international policy, of which Mr. Baruch is not aware, dictate the other course. Mr. Baruch stressed the importance of a decision before the change in membership of the Atomic Energy Commission early in January. He indicated that Senator Austin might be faced with the necessity of saying something on this subject, either in the General Assembly or at a later time in the Security Council.

¹⁴ The "general debate" included inaugural statements of broad policy objectives by the heads of national delegations. This phase occurred immediately after the General Assembly organized itself.

¹⁵ For documentation regarding United States policy with respect to the question of voting in the Security Council, see pp. 251 ff.

Senator Austin pointed out that the subject was not now on the Assembly agenda. He agreed that, if it were raised (as suggested by the British), he could say nothing of substance unless or until further instructions from the President had been forthcoming. Mr. Baruch indicated his concern that the initiative on this subject might be taken by other nations, and in particular the fear that great pressure might be exerted to adopt the Soviet proposal for a mere convention, on the ground that this is something that could be done immediately.

Mr. Eberstadt reviewed in some detail the progress of the negotiations to date and the manner in which the policy questions are likely to arise after completion of the present phase of discussion on the practicality of controls.

Mr. Fahy raised the question as to whether, before pressing the policy questions to a vote, it might be desirable to discuss the Russian position privately with Mr. Molotov. Mr. Eberstadt indicated agreement with the desirability of so doing, if the President and Secretary Byrnes should be in accord. Senator Austin also felt that it was most desirable that any change in the AEC program be discussed privately with the Russians in advance, and stated that he was making it a point to have such discussions with Mr. Vyshinski¹⁶ on questions of General Assembly procedure.

501.BB/10-546: Telegram

*The Secretary of State to Senator Austin*¹⁷

SECRET URGENT [WASHINGTON,] October 29, 1946—7 p. m.

253. USdel 648, Oct. 5.¹⁸ Re Soviet item presence of forces of states members of UN on territories of non-enemy states Delegation should ¹⁶ Andrey Yanuaryevich Vyshinsky, Soviet Representative to the General Assembly.

¹⁷ The source text includes the following marginal notation by Mr. Hiss, the drafting officer: "Cleared in substance with War & Navy Depts."

¹⁸ Not printed.

feel free to propose expansion of item so as to include forces in ex-enemy states, if an actual proposal along lines of Soviet thesis is presented in the appropriate committee prior to further communication from me or the Department.¹⁹

We understand item is not likely to come up this week in committee and that in event it does the British Delegation will move for postponement of consideration until Bevin's arrival in view of his personal interest in the matter. We have assured British Embassy you would not oppose such postponement.²⁰ We do not regard our amendment as requiring placing of a new item on the agenda and therefore do not feel that proposed agenda deadline will adversely affect our freedom of action.

It occurs to me that you may wish to tell other delegations and the press, if inquiry is made of you, that we do not oppose open discussion in the Assembly of the Soviet proposal but that we consider it one-sided in as much as it does not cover ex-enemy states.

It does not seem to me that it would be wise for us to make disclosure of locations and strength of U.S. troops in advance or in absence of the adoption by the GA of a resolution requesting such information from members. You should, however, feel free to point out that we have nothing to hide with regard to our forces abroad and that in no case are our forces in friendly countries remaining there against the consent of such countries. Our forces entered these countries to prosecute the war against our enemies and where they are still present they are remaining for legitimate purposes growing out of the end of hostilities. For your information, any resolution the Assembly may adopt should not call for information as to troops except in excess of 100 in any particular country as we see no useful purpose that would be served in including such minor contingents. It is also important that you make clear that we regard Austria as not being an ex-enemy country.

BYRNES

[At the 42nd Meeting of the General Assembly, October 29, during the general debate phase, Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov delivered an address dealing with a wide range of issues confronting the United Nations. His remarks included criticism of the U.S. proposal for the ¹⁹The U.S. Delegation discussed the matter briefly at its 12th Meeting, 9 a. m., October 29, but took no decisions with respect to it. The minutes of the meeting include the following: "Senator Vandenberg stated that abstractly the Soviet proposal certainly dealt with the maintenance of peace and security. To oppose it would be fantastic. Since consideration of it could not be escaped, it should be arranged in the way the United States wanted it to be. He continued that it would be just as fantastic not to broaden the proposal." (IO Files) international control of atomic energy. He also read the Soviet resolution on troop reporting which had been presented to the Security Council on August 29, expressed regrets that the Council had refused to place the matter on its agenda, and contended that "It is essential for the General Assembly to state its weighty opinion on this subject." Molotov concluded by introducing a Soviet proposal on the general reduction of armaments which read as follows :

²⁰In regard to the position of the present telegram in the flow of events, including discussions with the British Embassy, see the bracketed note infra, and Mr. Hiss' memorandum of October 30, p. 978.

"1. With a view to strengthening peace and international security in conformity with the aims and principles of the United Nations, the General Assembly recognizes the necessity of a general reduction of armaments.

"2. The implementing of the decision concerning the reduction of armaments should include, as its primary object, the prohibition to produce and use atomic energy for military purposes.

"3. The General Assembly recommends that the Security Council should ensure the effective implementing of the principles laid down in paragraphs 1 and 2 above.

"4. The General Assembly appeals to the governments of all the States to give to the Security Council all the assistance necessary to enable it to discharge its responsibilities arising out of this task, the achievement of which lies within the scope of its mission to establish an enduring peace and maintain international security. This task is also in the interest of the peoples who would be released from the heavy economic burden caused by the excessive expenditure on armaments which do not correspond to peaceful post-war conditions."

For the full text of Molotov's speech, see GA (I/2), Plenary, pages 832-847.]

501.BB/10-2946 : Telegram

Senator Austin to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET

NEW YORK, October 29, 1946—11 p. m.

URGENT

[Received 11:15 p. m.]

726. Personal for the Secretary. Following is the text suggested by Senator Vandenberg²¹ and Mr. Dulles²² which I read to you over the telephone.²³ An alternative text will follow by separate telegram.

²¹ Arthur H. Vandenberg, United States Senator from Michigan ; Representative to the General Assembly.

²² John Foster Dulles, Alternate United States Representative to the General Assembly.

²³ This text was suggested for incorporation into Senator Austin's address in the general discussion phase of the work of the General Assembly ; it was anticipated that Senator Austin would be called upon to present the views of the United States on October 30.

The source text bears the following marginal notation by Mr. Hiss : "The Secretary talked by telephone directly to Senator Austin."

"I refer in beginning to the brilliant speech yesterday of our distinguished colleague from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.²⁴ In the candor which is permissible between friends, I express my deep regret that he found it necessary to deal in implications and invectives aimed at the good faith of the Foreign Policy of the Government of the United States. This has been a far too consistent pattern throughout the discussions in recent months in Paris. It is not conducive to the peace climate for which we join him in pleading. I hope we may all find it advisable to avoid recriminations here. I repeat what was said by an American representative in the final Plenary Session of the recent Paris Conference who found it necessary to say: 'The United States will leave its motives to the verdict of history; it will not plead as a defendant among allies to whom it has given every ounce of cooperation, in blood and sweat and tears, of which a great and unselfish nation is capable.!' ²⁵ That closes the chapter so far as we are concerned.

But now I am happy to open a new and brighter chapter. I want to say to Mr. Molotov that the United States warmly welcomes his proposal for an immediate study of universal disarmament—much the same proposal which Mr. Litvinoff offered to the League of Nations many years ago which included adequate international inspection. What he has said is of grave importance because he says it. Just as our American testimony is of paramount value in respect to the control of atomic energy because we are at the moment in possession of an atomic monopoly, so Soviet testimony is of paramount value in respect to other disarmament because they now maintain by far the greatest armies in all the world and keep them in occupation of many critical points in central Europe. We mean what we say when we tell the world that we would outlaw atomic bombs forever, anywhere, any time, any place on earth, and when, in return, we ask only for effective guarantees against bad faith. We accept Mr. Molotov's eloquent and sturdy interest in world disarmament as being in the same pattern of complete earnestness and purpose. We assume that he, too, would wish assurance that disarmament shall be totally protected by international inspection in all aspects against bad faith.

I can assure the distinguished Soviet statesman that the Government of the United States—long since a world pioneer in cooperative disarmament—will join with him enthusiastically in the exploration of such a proposal to take the tools of war from the arsenals of men."

AUSTIN

²⁴ See the bracketed note, supra.

²⁵ The reference is to Senator Vandenberg's address at the 46th Plenary Meeting of the Paris Peace Conference, October 14; for text, see Department of State Bulletin, October 27, 1946, pp. 744-746. For additional documentation on United States policy at the Paris Peace Conference, see vols. III and IV.

501.BB/10-3046: Telegram

Mr. John C. Ross, Adviser, United States Delegation to the United Nations General Assembly, to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET URGENT

NEW YORK, October 30, 1946—7 a.m.

[Received 8:12 a.m.]

727. Personal for the Secretary from Ross. Following is the alternative text Senator Austin said he would send to you.²⁶ Senator Austin, who has not yet seen this draft, will discuss it with you at 9 this morning.²⁷

At the outset of what I have to say to the General Assembly I must refer briefly to the address made yesterday by the representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Parts of Mr. Molotov's speech indicated distrust and misunderstanding of the motives of the United States and of other members of the United Nations. I do not believe that recriminations among nations allied in war and in peace promote that unity which Mr. Molotov so rightly points out is essential to the success of the United Nations.

I shall not participate in any exchange of recriminations.

The policy of the United States speaks for itself. It was summed up by President Truman in fifteen words last week: "The United States will support the United Nations with all the resources that we possess."²⁸

That policy the Soviet Union must surely understand for Mr. Molotov said virtually the same thing yesterday when he declared, "the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics stands unshakeably for the respect of the United Nations organization and deems essential that its charter be honestly and consistently observed." May I say on behalf of the United States that we warmly welcome this renewed assurance.

²⁶ See telegram 726 October 29, from New York, supra., footnote 23 thereto, and the bracketed note on p. 972.

The present text was substantially incorporated into the initial portion of Senator Austin's statement delivered at the 44th Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly, October 30, 4 p. m. Mr. Austin's remarks also included the following:

"The Government of the United States understands Mr. Molotov's statement to mean that the Soviet Union is fully prepared to report on its armed forces in ex-enemy states as well as in other foreign territories. Therefore, the United States urges prompt fulfillment of this policy. The United States has nothing to hide with regard to our armed forces at home or abroad. The United States will promptly fulfil that policy. In no case are the United States forces in friendly countries except with the consent of those countries.

"It is our opinion that the proposed inquiry should include all mobilized armed forces, whether at home or abroad."

For the full text of Austin's address, see GA (I/2), Plenary, pp. 893-908.

²⁷ The source text includes the following marginal comment by Mr. Hiss: "Taken up with the Secretary and discussed personally with Senator Austin."

²⁸ For the text of President Truman's address before the 34th Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly, October 23, see GA (I/2), Plenary, pp. 682-689, or Department of State Bulletin, November 3, 1946, pp. 808-812.

We welcome especially the confidence expressed by Mr. Molotov that unanimous agreement among all the nations both large and small can be achieved on such vital matters as the control of atomic energy and on steps to lighten the burden of armaments and military expenditures which still rest so heavily upon the peoples of the world. It is hardly necessary for me, the representative of the United States, to say that my country supports wholeheartedly the objectives of the resolution Mr. Molotov introduced for the reduction of armaments. The United States believes that Mr. Molotov's proposal should be placed on our agenda and fully considered and discussed. The initiative of the Soviet Union in this matter is appropriate, because of its mighty armies: just as the initiative of the United States was appropriate in proposing measures to prevent the manufacture and use of atomic weapons.

I recall to you the initiative taken by the United States at Washington in November 1945 in the conversations among President Truman, Prime Minister Attlee and Prime Minister MacKenzie King—at Moscow in December 1945 in the conversations between Mr. Byrnes, Mr. Molotov and Mr. Bevin—in the Assembly last January when the resolution creating the Atomic Energy Commission and establishing its terms of reference was unanimously adopted—and since then in the work of the Commission itself where the distinguished United States representative, Mr. Bernard M. Baruch, has presented proposals expressing the policy of the President of the United States.

Nor does the United States stop there. As President Truman emphasized again last week we attach the greatest importance to reaching agreements that will remove the deadly fear of other weapons of mass destruction in accordance with the same resolution passed by this Assembly.

And I might add that Mr. Baruch pointed out last night that we are ready to accept the Soviet proposal to outlaw the bomb and destroy our present stock—but only as a part of the whole.

So far as Mr. Molotov's resolution concerns the regulation and reduction of other armaments, the whole world knows where the United States stands and has always stood. For 20 years before the war and in the 15 months since the fighting stopped the United States has consistently been in the forefront of those striving to reduce the burden of armaments upon the peoples of the world. Since the end of the war in Europe and the Pacific the United States has progressively and rapidly reduced its military establishment.

After the last war we made one mistake. We disarmed unilaterally. We shall not repeat that mistake.

The United States is prepared to cooperate fully with any other member of the United Nations which is sincerely devoted to the goal of disarmament. We cannot reduce armaments by talking about the "regulation of armaments and possible disarmament" or the "heavy economic burden caused by excessive expenditures for armaments".

We can not achieve it without positive acts which will establish the "peaceful postwar conditions" to which Mr. Molotov also referred.

Nor can a system for the regulation of armaments and possible disarmament as contemplated in articles 11, 26, and 47 of the Charter be effectively planned except in relation to progress in the negotiation of the armed forces agreements called for by article 43. At the beginning of April, four of the five members of the Military Staff Committee made specific proposals concerning the principles which should govern the negotiation of these agreements. In September the Soviet Union submitted for the first time a statement of its views on the problem.

I am happy to note that Mr. Molotov referred to the work of the Military Staff Committee. I hope it will now be possible for this Committee to make rapid progress. The conclusion of these agreements, providing the Security Council with peace forces adequate to prevent acts of aggression, is essential to carrying out the objectives of Mr. Molotov's resolution for the reduction of armaments.

Mr. Molotov also referred to article 43 in connection with the Soviet proposal concerning the presence of armed forces of the United Nations on foreign territories. He said, "In this connection it is natural that the Security Council should know the actual situation, namely where and what armed forces of the United Nations are situated at present outside the confines of their countries . . . for its part the Soviet Union is prepared to submit this information to the Security Council. . . ."

The Government of the United States understands Mr. Molotov's statement to mean that the Soviet Union is fully prepared to report on its armed forces in ex-enemy states as well as in other foreign territories.

The United States has nothing to hide with regard to US armed forces abroad. In no case are United States forces in friendly countries except with the consent of those countries.

The United States welcomes wholeheartedly the statement of Mr. Molotov that "as to the Soviet Union there is no hesitation and doubt among our people that peace among nations, and peaceful competition between them, which also means the possibility of increasing friendly cooperation and understanding among big and small states, be entirely in keeping with the interests of our country . . . it reflects the firm will to achieve universal peace and readiness to enter into peaceful competition in the social and economic sphere between states and social systems."

That is exactly the position of the Government and people of the United States. Peaceful competition and friendly cooperation are words every American understands because they are fundamental in our system and in our attitude toward other nations and other systems. We are very happy to receive such definite assurances that the government and the people of the Soviet Union feel the same way.

Warren R. Austin.

[Ross]

501.BB/10-546

*Memorandum by the Director of the Office of Special Political Affairs
(Hiss)*

[WASHINGTON,] October 30, 1946.

Subject: U.S. Position in the General Assembly on Soviet Proposal Relating to Information on the Disposition of Forces of United Nations Members

After the Secretary had signed telegram 253 of October 29 to New York on the above subject, Mr. Ross and Senator Austin both talked to me on the telephone from New York about the Molotov speech.²⁹ In connection with Molotov's references to the Soviet proposal relating to troop dispositions, Mr. Ross and the Senator felt it was essential that the Senator say today in the General Assembly (or tomorrow if he is not reached before then) that the United States will accept the Soviet proposal if it is expanded to cover troops in ex-enemy states. I told Mr. Ross and the Senator that the Secretary had earlier in the evening signed a telegram on this subject prior to any information about the Molotov speech. This telegram, I said, restricted its authorization to a statement along the lines suggested by Mr. Ross and the Senator in committee if the Soviet proposal were raised in committee before further communication from the Secretary. I said that I would take up with the Secretary the question of whether, in view of Mr. Molotov's speech, the Secretary would extend the authorization along the lines desired by Mr. Ross and the Senator.

I subsequently called the Secretary at his apartment and in the course of passing on to him other views of the Senator about the Molotov speech I mentioned the foregoing point. The Secretary said that the Senator should feel free to use the information contained in the telegram in his speech in the General Assembly. I then promptly communicated this information to Mr. Ross and the Senator in New York.³⁰

I also called Mr. Maclean of the British Embassy at his house and asked him to inform the Ambassador promptly this morning of the fact that after the Secretary had seen the Ambassador last evening he had sent instructions to the Delegation along the lines he had discussed with the Ambassador and had mentioned in his personal message to Bevin of October 28 [26].³¹ I added that subsequently, in view of statements on the subject in Mr. Molotov's speech, the Secretary had authorized the Delegation to make a statement in the General Assembly today or tomorrow of our willingness to support the Soviet proposal if broadened to include troops in ex-enemy states. I asked Mr. Maclean to inform the Ambassador promptly this morning of these new developments and pointed out that they were in our opinion entirely consistent with the warning the Secretary had sent to Mr. Bevin in his personal message.

²⁹ Regarding Austin's speech, see telegram 727, October 30, from New York, supra, and footnote 26 thereto.

³⁰ See the bracketed note on p. 972.

³¹ For text, see the annex (p. 969) to Mr. Acheson's memorandum to the Secretary of State, October 26, p. 966.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by Mr. Joseph Chase³² to Mr. John M. Hancock of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission

[NEW YORK,] October 30, 1946.

Subject: Preliminary Comments on Molotov's Speech

1. Stalin, in his answers to Alexander Werth³³ and Hugh Baillie,³⁴ stated that, as regards the atom bomb: ³⁵

- a. Its monopoly cannot endure;
- b. Its use will be prohibited;
- c. It should be under strong international control.

2. Taking as relevant, only points "b" and "c", it seems to me that Molotov, in carrying out this program, has reiterated Gromyko's arguments and added some new features, all of which point to a reaffirmation of the original Soviet position. By considering the atom bomb as merely another weapon, Molotov tied it to a general discussion of disarmament. Now, under the Charter, the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Military Staff Committee are directed to study the problem and make recommendations concerning the regulation of armaments and possible disarmament (Articles 11, 26 and 47). This new "angle" merely reaffirms the Soviet position that existing organs of the United Nations are empowered and able to deal with atomic weapons and presumably all other phases of the problems of atomic energy. This is undoubtedly what Stalin means by strong international control and may even be an attempt to by-pass the Atomic Energy Commission eventually, and certainly rejects, by implication, an A.D.A. This latter statement is further borne out by Molotov's reference to the veto, especially in connection with his attack on the Baruch Plan.

3. This new approach is an attempt to divert the discussion of atomic weapons from the Atomic Energy Commission to other organs of the United Nations and also attempts to separate the discussion of peaceful and dangerous aspects of atomic energy.

³² United States Delegation Staff member.

³³ Correspondent for the Manchester Guardian.

³⁴ President of United Press.

³⁵ Regarding the answers under reference, see vol. VI, pp. 784, 786, 793 (bracketed note), and 794.

4. I believe that in our reaction to the speech we should keep in mind that we are working for our plan, or a better one if such a plan is suggested or develops. We should not lose sight of our main objective, however strong the urge to react to the personal attack. Any reaction to this attack will make sensational reading, will becloud the real issues involved, and would play into Soviet hands. They just love "to fish in muddy waters".

JOSEPH CHASE

USUN Files

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. John C. Ross, Adviser, United States Delegation to the United Nations General Assembly

SECRET

[NEW YORK,] November 1, 1946

DISCUSSION WITH SENATOR AUSTIN ON DISARMAMENT

Following Mr. Molotov's speech on Tuesday³⁶ raising the disarmament issue and Senator Austin's speech on Wednesday³⁷ accepting the Molotov proposals with regard to disarmament, I had a long discussion with Senator Austin this afternoon with regard to the next steps we should take to implement our acceptance of the Russian proposals. As a result of this discussion, which dealt primarily with the question of atomic energy disarmament, it was decided that I should go down to Washington for the weekend and discuss with Mr. Acheson, Mr. Cohen, and others the Senator's views and get from the people in the Department their reactions and their own views.

It was understood at the outset and throughout our conversation that the Senator's views were not to be taken as committing himself to any particular positions. He wanted, in effect, to think out loud.

We first discussed security measures to protect those who comply against those who violate. There must be some way whereby the Security Council would administer and be responsible for the administration of inspection and enforcement without the veto. It was necessary to eliminate the veto for the purpose of expediting action against violators.

It would seem to be better to have the Security Council responsible for the inspection than a special organ. Thinking in terms of trying to reach a compromise position with the Russians, we would be with them in taking inspection into the Security Council instead of some separate unit but we would be going against them by eliminating the veto.

³⁶ Regarding Molotov's address before the General Assembly, October 29, see bracketed note, p. 972.

³⁷ With respect to Senator Austin's address in the General Assembly on October 30, see footnote 26, p. 975.

We then discussed the Soviet idea of inspection by national inspection forces. Our plan, the Senator said, goes against them on this. He asked whether there is a middle ground wherein national operating agencies can be brought nearer to, but not into, an international organization.

Our problem of seeking a compromise was to maintain the autonomy of the United Nations, its jurisdiction, and at the same time to accommodate the nationalism which is still strong with regard to inspection.

The Senator then indicated that our military intelligence experts must have a great many precedents to guide them. This is not based on treaties, he said, but on practice. There has always been a certain amount of inspection by intelligence forces.

There are two extreme positions, the international represented by our proposal and the national represented by the Soviet proposal. We should get the two together, something in between. Our proposal is absolute, a very extreme position.

The Senator then went on to say some bookkeeping scheme so far as the rare products of the soil are concerned is possible. This means that the United Nations or the Atomic Development Authority can get control of uranium and thorium; we can't do that, however, with bacteria and gasses.

I asked the Senator if he could give me a definite impression that I could convey to Mr. Acheson with regard to Baruch's proposal to force a vote in the Atomic Energy Commission on the Baruch proposals in line with Mr. Baruch's request for support when he called on the Senator some days previously. The Senator said that with the proviso that I make clear to Mr. Acheson his reaction was indefinite and immature [premature?], he would prefer to have the State Department say to Mr. Baruch, no, we are not going to force this issue now. The Senator then went on to comment that, "When you have the power you must stand back and get the perspective as to when you ought to use it. This relates to wisdom, not timidity."

501.BC Atomic/11-146: Telegram

Senator Austin to the Secretary of State

SECRET

NEW YORK, November 1, 1946—9:35 p. m.

[Received 10:01 p. m.]

745. Acheson from Hancock. At the end of the scientific and policy group, on the staff level, in atomic meetings yesterday,³⁸ it was clear that Dr. Alexandroff, the Russian, was quite embarrassed by the almost unanimous views in opposition to him, and when the meeting broke up, he came to Dr. Vance, of the Chemistry Department of Yale, who was presented by us as more or less of an expert witness, and, after exchanging greetings, he said that it would be much easier to make progress if there were a clear policy on the part of the Russians.

³⁸ The meetings under reference were the final sessions of the informal talks regarding safeguards conducted by Committee 2 between October 15 and October 30.

George Ignatieff, the Russian-born Canadian now with the Canadian delegation, joined the circle and asked what Dr. Alexandroff had in mind. The Doctor referred to the Molotov speech and the Stalin speech. (He meant, of course, the Stalin press interview where he had said that Russia wanted a strong international control.) So, when that came clear in conversation, George asked him what Mr. Stalin meant. Alexandroff replied: "He meant exactly what he said." It was clear in the conversation, without trying to repeat words, that Alexandroff realized that his position, Molotov's position, and Gromyko's position, were contrary to what Stalin had said. Then he went on to say that Mr. Molotov was going to clear up the matter in a speech before the General Assembly—I assume at an early date. [Hancock.]

AUSTIN

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

The United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch) to the Under Secretary of State (Acheson)

NEW YORK, November 2, 1946.

MY DEAR MR. ACHESON: Yesterday, I tried to get you on the phone, and in turn, doubtless, you tried to reach me. What I wanted to discuss with you was the delay in answering the question contained in the letter of September 17, to the President and Secretary of State, asking for a decision as to the course that should be taken.

The Soviets have taken advantage of our indecision, have moved in, and now apparently have become the advocates of disarmament. As you may recall, I strongly advocated that we should do it first. I refer you to the letters addressed to you on June 23³⁹ and July 9,⁴⁰ and your subsequent replies.

It is disheartening, to say the least, to see the moves that can and so apparently must be made, only to find that somebody else makes them, and we are fighting rear-guard actions. We cannot deal with this matter with dignity only. We are dealing with police court lawyers, to whom the truth is of no importance and the only goal is ³⁹ Not printed.

⁴⁰ Ante, p. 860.

their particular selfish ends, without reference to the rest of the world.⁴¹

Sincerely yours,

BERNARD M. BARUCH

USUN Files

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. John C. Ross, Adviser, United States Delegation to the United Nations General Assembly

TOP SECRET

NEW YORK, November 2, 1946.

Comments by Dean Acheson on Disarmament with Particular Reference to Conversation with Mr. Baruch on October 28,⁴² to Mr. Molotov's Speech on October 29, and to Senator Austin's Speech on October 30

I spent three hours with Mr. Acheson Saturday morning⁴³ during which time he developed his whole philosophy on the matter of atomic energy as it related to the general question of disarmament.

He said, first, that it was important to distinguish between international and national control. Second, he said that a clear distinction must be made between enforcement and inspection. On both of these points he said there had been a great deal of public misunderstanding; with particular reference to the enforcement question he said that Mr. Baruch and his people had been trapped in this cul-de-sac.

On the question of enforcement, Mr. Acheson said that there just is not any United States marshal or sheriff who automatically can enforce the law. He said that the situation was very much like that of the relations between the states of the United States. There is no United States Federal authority that can step in in disputes between the states.

It is asserted, he said, that there must be an automatic sanction against a violator. He asked what sanction is automatic, and answering his own question said there just is not any.

He said that the misunderstanding with regard to this matter of enforcement is based on misunderstanding of the true nature of big power relationships. This question must be considered in the light of the basic industrial and economic structures of the big powers.

⁴¹ Baruch concluded a memorandum to Senator Austin, also dated November 2, as follows:

"I warned the State Department on June 23, that the Soviets would be likely to make this latest move, and I wanted to make it first.

There must be closer coordination of the work in the United Nations. The present disjointed method cannot bring results, even with all the ability and good will of our delegations." (USUN Files)

⁴² Regarding this conversation, see Ross's memorandum to the Secretary of State, November 3, p. 988.

⁴³ November 2.

Supposing armaments were reduced to the level of peace forces, you would have to get a treaty with a tremendous emotional driving force. Every nation would be obligated by the treaty to take action against an aggressor, that is, a violator of the treaty.

He then asked who is the possible aggressor? It wouldn't be any of the small powers because that is not our problem. The possible aggressor in everybody's mind in the United States is the Soviet Union. What kind of a situation would you have should the Soviet Union violate a treaty? The answer, he felt, was quite simple. Whether within the United Nations or among the signatories of a treaty there would be an almost immediate division into two blocs: Eastern Europe, India, probably China would come under Soviet domination; the United Kingdom, Canada, probably Latin America, and Western Europe would come under United States domination. There would be a rough balance of power and the treaty would, therefore, really be ineffective because you would have war. This is actually the situation which confronts us today without a treaty.

Summarizing what he had said, Mr. Acheson went on that the talk of enforcement is really paper talk. The main point, he said, is treaty or no treaty, will governments take action or will they not. If a treaty would help a little, let's have a treaty by all means. But meanwhile let's not kid the American people along. It is perfectly clear that the peace forces envisaged in the Charter would be no good against a major power.

He said that in a recent speech he had tried to touch on this problem subtly by saying that you don't solve a difficult problem by turning attention to an insoluble one. He said that Mr. Baruch, by his emphasis on enforcement, had gotten us into an insoluble problem.

I then outlined to Mr. Acheson the very tentative views which Senator Austin had expressed the day before (see notes of this conversation on November 1),⁴⁴ with particular reference to the possibility of finding some middle ground of accommodation with the Russians.

Mr. Acheson commented that he thought Mr. Austin was probably now in the same position that Mr. Byrnes was in a year ago when Mr. Byrnes was thinking along similar lines.

Stating his personal conviction, Mr. Acheson said he felt the Russians were using the United Nations as an instrument for their own purposes and that they do not subscribe to the fundamental spirit of the United Nations.

He said that this situation in the United Nations seemed to him to be comparable to the theory of the liability of government depending directly on its acceptance by the very large majority of the people. He said that any organization, any government, is based on the emotional, spiritual acceptance of it by 95% of the people. When you have 20% of the people who are not going along, the government just does not work. He said this is true in our own country with our strikes and labor difficulties. He said it has been true with the British in Ireland, and [in] Palestine [and] in India. He said that when 20% of the people are against the government its entire ethical foundation is lost.

⁴⁴ Ante, p. 980.

Going on from this point Mr. Acheson said there were two possible approaches: first, we could support the United Nations and continue our efforts patiently to draw the Soviet Union towards an accommodation with us. Second, plan to lick the hell out of them in 10 or 15 years. It was clear that we were committed to the first and should do it and not diminish our efforts, but that as practical men we should realize that our efforts might not succeed and that we must therefore be prepared, should it be necessary, to adopt the latter course.

He said we obviously must set up an enforcement system but that we should not rely on it too heavily.

This brought him to an analysis of what was meant by inspection. Here again he said there was a great deal of confusion and misunderstanding. He made it clear that in the case of atomic energy, inspection as ordinarily conceived made no sense at all. There was absolutely no way by sending inspectors around looking at things to tell what was going on until the very last stages of the production of atomic energy for destructive purposes. At this point the discovery was too late because the final processes were extremely speedy. He said that inspection as ordinarily conceived was misleading in the same way that the lawyer's doctrine of probing into the intent of the human mind was misleading. He said that any lawyer who had ever engaged in criminal practice realized how extremely difficult, if not impossible, it was to determine criminal intent. Lawyers had been trying for a long time to get away from this doctrine. It was necessary in the matter of atomic energy inspection to get into the field of administrative action. This meant getting all the best people concerned working together in this field toward the use of atomic energy for beneficial purposes.

Relating what he had just said to the question of international or national control, Mr. Acheson said that it was very, very important to realize that by the very nature of the atomic energy enterprise there was no half-way point. It was impossible to stop leaks or diversion of atomic energy for war purposes by inspection at one point or another. There were three great steps in the atomic energy field—mining, production of fissionable materials, and use of fissionable materials. International operation at all three steps was essential. Inspection or international operation at any one or two of the steps was simply worthless.

Digressing somewhat on the subject of the popular conception of inspection, Mr. Acheson said that as in the case of the prohibition, as in the alcohol factory, the whole situation is geared to trick the inspector. Under the circumstances of international control involving the participation of people of various nationalities in all three steps in the atomic energy process, foreign nationals would be in the atomic plants not as aliens but as operators; inspection would be an incidental function growing out of operation.

Mr. Acheson then discussed other weapons of mass destruction. The problem here was considerably more difficult because less tangible. On the other hand, there was some room for speculation whether the same principle we had been endeavoring to apply in the atomic energy field might not be applied in the other weapons field. If we could get into the other weapons field the best people, that is, scientists, whether Russian, British, French, or American, for the positive development of our knowledge towards beneficial purposes, the best people then would simply not be available for destructive development. In this way, for example, we might make great strides in developing the science of immunology and related sciences.

Digressing a moment, Mr. Acheson said that when people talked about stopping the production of fissionable materials they failed to realize that this was not quite as simple as the apparently similar concept of sinking navies. It would be impossible for us to stop the production of fissionable materials without losing the tremendous investment it was possible for us to make as a result of the war pressure and which we could hardly hope to regain. The vast potentialities of atomic energy for peaceful purposes would thus be lost.

Mr. Acheson then went on to say that Mr. Baruch had added the concept of sanction in the veto to our atomic energy presentation. He said that Mr. Swope was sick of it and would like to get away from these two points. The Baruch staff was trying to get out of this situation by some interpretation of Article 51 in the sense of there being not only a right but an obligation of self-defense. This is what Eberstadt probably thinks. Mr. Acheson thought that this was not a very important concept. Mr. Acheson then went on to mention a telegram which had been sent down the night before by John Hancock for him which referred to Stalin's statement about the Soviet willingness to accept international control and a conversation which had taken place with Alexandroff, the Russian scientist attached to the Atomic Energy Commission.⁴⁵

Coming specifically to the question which Mr. Baruch had raised with Mr. Acheson and which he had previously raised with the President and Secretary Byrnes, namely, whether we should not press for a showdown vote in the Atomic Energy Commission with the Russians, Mr. Acheson said it seemed to him that there were two considerations involved; one, possible relationship of such a vote to the work of the Council of Foreign Ministers and, second, whether as a matter of policy it would be a good thing to have such a vote anyhow. On the Council of Foreign Ministers point, this, of course, was something which the Secretary himself would have to decide.

⁴⁵ Telegram 745 from New York, November 1, p. 981.

On the question of policy, Mr. Acheson said that we had to decide whether we had reached a point of irreconcilable difference or not with the U.S.S.R., or whether taking the recent report of the scientists attached to the Atomic Energy Commission as a basis, we could not proceed intelligently by a committee process to the examination of the consequences of control or lack of control, national or international, at each of the three atomic energy steps. Such a study, he said, might reasonably be completed in thirty or ninety days and would really give a scientific, rather than a political, basis for determining whether there is some possibility of reconciling our differences with the Russians.

Digressing again for a moment, he said that some people say you should be able to control atomic energy much as the traffic in opium is controlled, but the situation here was entirely different. In the opium case violators were individuals and could readily be punished. In the atomic energy case, or the disarmament case, violators are states and you could hardly expect states to police themselves.

Further on the question of pressing for a vote in the Atomic Energy Commission, Mr. Acheson doubted whether Mr. Baruch actually had the ten votes he thought he had. He doubted whether the other governments actually agreed with Mr. Baruch's position. He said he had definite information that the British did not agree.

Mr. Cohen, who came into the room at about this time, said that even if some country did agree, they would perhaps not want to vote against the Russians on such an important issue.

Mr. Marks at about this point had also come into the room and our discussion continued with particular reference to the Molotov general disarmament proposals. The thought was developed more or less jointly among us that we should avoid any line of playing into the Russian hand to such an extent that general disarmament would swamp our atomic energy objectives. Mr. Marks made a very strong case against Soviet intransigent unwillingness to consider the necessity of international control with adequate safeguards. He argued strongly in support of the Baruch proposal to force a showdown vote.

Mr. Cohen and Mr. Acheson had a somewhat softer attitude and it was more or less generally agreed that it was important to let Mr. Baruch take his vote but that the vote should not be taken in the sense of any drawing of a final issue but more in the sense of a definitive taking stock of progress to date.

It was agreed that Mr. Baruch should not be dissuaded, that Senator Austin and Mr. Baruch should both consult Mr. Byrnes, that while the sharpening of a final issue should be avoided, sharpening of the fundamental issue of Soviet intransigence against international control was necessary.

USUN Files

*Memorandum by Mr. John C. Ross, Adviser, United States Delegation to the United Nations General Assembly, to the Secretary of State*⁴⁶

TOP SECRET

[NEW YORK,] November 3, 1946.

In the course of a long and cordial conversation on Monday, October 28, Mr. Baruch sought Senator Austin's support for the proposal Mr. Baruch had made to the President that he be authorized to bring the United States proposals to a vote in the Atomic Energy Commission before November 15. He expressed confidence that the United States would win this vote by 10-2.

Senator Austin was noncommittal in his reply since neither atomic energy nor disarmament were on the Assembly's Agenda and since there was no evidence at the time that anyone intended to propose these subjects for the Agenda.

On the following day, Tuesday, Mr. Molotov in his Assembly speech proposed that the question of disarmament, including the control of atomic energy, be put on the Assembly's Agenda. On Wednesday, Senator Austin in his Assembly speech welcomed this proposal.

Thus the two questions of Atomic Energy Control and General Disarmament, which had previously not been considered together, were brought together, and the Soviet proposal was approved for inclusion on the Agenda at a plenary session of the Assembly on Thursday afternoon, October 31.

This whole matter, probably the most important question by far to be considered at this Assembly session, thus became one of immediate concern to Senator Austin, in view of his present Assembly responsibilities and in view of the effect which any action taken by the Assembly will have on his responsibilities after the first of the year as United States Representative to the United Nations. After a long discussion with him on Friday it was decided that I should go to Washington over the weekend to communicate his initial views and explore the thinking in the Department on this subject.

⁴⁶ Transmitted to Mr. Benjamin V. Cohen, Adviser to the United States Delegation and Counselor of the Department of State, for the Secretary, on November 4.

As a result of discussions in Washington on Saturday with Mr. Acheson and Mr. Cohen, in which Mr. Hiss, Mr. Marks and I participated, it was agreed to submit to you and Senator Austin for approval the course of action which is set forth in the first of the two attached papers. The second paper is a draft outline of the speech on disarmament which Senator Austin might make.⁴⁷

[Annex]

Memorandum by Mr. John C. Ross to the Secretary of State

CONCLUSIONS AND PROPOSALS ON DISARMAMENT

November 4, 1946.

1. The objective of Mr. Molotov's disarmament proposals is probably to obfuscate the fundamental issues which have been developed in the Atomic Energy Commission in recent months. The purposes to be served probably are:

(a) to lead thinking in this country and throughout the world away from the present emphasis on control of atomic energy and other weapons of mass destruction and the fundamental issue of whether we are going to have international control with adequate safeguards or national control without adequate safeguards;

(b) to lead thinking into a maze of technicalities concerning the size and equipment of armies, navies, and air forces which come under the heading of "general disarmament";

(c) to capitalize on the widespread sentiment in this country and abroad for the drastic reduction of armies, navies and air forces (and cessation of production of fissionable materials)—a sentiment which does not take account of the consequences of such action, in terms of our own certain weakness vis-a-vis the Soviet Union, in the absence of a system of international control with adequate safeguards applicable in the first instance to atomic energy and other weapons of mass destruction.

2. Negatively, we should avoid a course which would follow the Soviet lead and which would commit us and the United Nations to involvement in the technicalities of "general disarmament" at the expense of loss of time and emphasis on our primary objective of international control with adequate safeguards of atomic energy and other weapons of mass destruction. Affirmatively, we should promptly develop a course which would (a) counteract the adverse effects which the Soviet proposals (and the manner of their presentation) have already had and which would (b) regain the initiative and leadership for the United States in the interest of the United Nations. A very important part of our approach would be a well organized and effectively carried out program of public education to dispel widespread misunderstanding of the issues involved and to clarify and lead public thinking, not only in our own country but throughout the world, with regard to this whole subject. Our proposed course is set forth in the following points, the timing and presentation conditional, of course, upon the requirement of your work with the Council of Foreign Ministers.

⁴⁷ The draft outline is not printed.

3. Mr. Baruch should be authorized to seek the vote he feels is essential at this time in the Atomic Energy Commission. He and his staff would presumably wish to re-canvas the other members of the Atomic Energy Commission to make sure of getting the best possible majority. It was our thought that this purpose might best be served if we were to avoid the drawing of a final issue as might be the case, for example, if we were to force a vote at this time on the American proposals as such. It would be preferable we felt to seek in this vote at this time to sharpen the simple but fundamental issue of whether the Soviet Government is intransigently opposed to international control with adequate safeguards of atomic energy and other weapons of mass destruction. Based on this objective a resolution could be framed so as to avoid putting other governments under the formal necessity of voting for the United States or against the Soviet Union.

4. The proposed vote would set the stage for a major policy speech by Senator Austin in which he would develop the objectives set forth under point 2 above and chart our course for dealing with this subject in the Assembly.

501.BC Atomic/11-446

*The United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission
(Baruch) to the Secretary of State*

CONFIDENTIAL

NEW YORK, November 4, 1946.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: On September 17 I addressed to you and the President a memorandum asking for a statement of policy to govern our action in the U.S. Delegation to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission.

At that time we were trying, and have since been pursuing the course of discussing the scientific and technical aspects of control, largely avoiding the political questions except as they arose by implication. At the middle of September it was clear to us that we could continue that course another month or two. There have been some unexpected delays, but we will certainly finish this phase of the work by the end of November at the latest. We now have two choices, as we pointed out:

- a. To push into the political issues, or
- b. To slow down the whole work of the Commission, going to the extreme of recess or adjournment.

At this moment we can reasonably expect a ten-to-two vote favoring our position on matters of policy. So far as our own problem is concerned, it is thoroughly feasible to move into the policy questions and attempt an agreed statement of policy to be completed by the year end—again on a ten-to-two basis. Again, purely from our own point of view, we will face a considerable delay and a good deal of uncertainty if we wait until after the first of the year. At that time three members of the Commission—Egypt, Mexico, and The Netherlands—all strong supporters of ours, will be replaced by presently unknown nations. These new delegations would require a long period of education, in all probability. It would be helpful to have even a ten-to-two vote on matters of principle arrived at during the present membership of the Commission. We couldn't look for any more than that as a result of the changes at the year end in the personnel of the Commission.

It is our thought to start immediately our staff work in concluding our views on the statements of policy and the matters to be covered by a ten-to-two interim report by the end of the year. We will need this month to complete the policy statement and to obtain clearances.

You probably have clearly in mind the original letter of September 17, but an additional copy is readily available in any event.

Incidentally, the Molotov move made here is a neat political maneuver which was implicit in the Russian attitude when I wrote to Dean Acheson on June 23. For the moment Molotov grabbed the initiative, but I think our people will see through the maneuver and that in the end he will not be the gainer. It may be that the maneuver is designed to back out of the commitment on controls and safeguards included in the Moscow Declaration and the January Assembly Resolution on atomic energy. We may attach undue importance to our part of the incident because early in our sessions we pointed out to Mr. Gromyko the ridiculous character of the Russian plan in that it was a proposal for unilateral disarmament and we told him we wondered whether he was going to match the proposal with a proposal to demobilize nine-tenths of the Red Army. I think Senator Austin is handling the matter very well and of course we will keep in closest possible contact to insure that there is no unintentional "crossing of wires."

In view of the time and membership problem mentioned above, we will need a prompt decision. In the alternate, we will face a long delay—quite certainly six months—before the issue is joined on the political matters and even an interim report made to the Security Council or the Assembly.

Sincerely yours,

BERNARD M. BARUCH

501.BC Atomic/11-446

Memorandum by the Chief of the Division of International Security Affairs (Johnson) to the Legal Adviser (Fahy)

TOP SECRET

[NEW YORK ?] November 4, 1946.

Subject: Soviet Position on Atomic Energy Commission

On Friday, November 1, 1946, when I was in Washington, Mr. Frank Lindsay of Mr. Baruch's staff telephoned me to give me the following information:

Ambassador Bedell Smith went to see Mr. Baruch and members of his staff (I gather, on Thursday) to have a general discussion. When Ambassador Smith left Mr. Lindsay accompanied him downstairs and held a brief conversation with him. Mr. Lindsay told me that he had raised with Ambassador Smith the question of the possibility of a direct approach to Stalin after a vote has been taken in the Atomic Energy Commission on the Baruch proposals. According to Lindsay, Ambassador Smith thought this would be a good idea and promised to take it up with the Secretary in the near future.

Mr. Lindsay made it clear to me that the idea would be for Mr. Baruch to go to Moscow for this purpose. Mr. Lindsay also indicated that the Baruch people here think of the vote taking place before the composition of the AEC is changed by the replacement of Mexico, The Netherlands and Egypt.

I gave no indication of what I thought of this proposal. I merely asked a question in order to be sure that the idea was to have the approach to Stalin made after a vote was taken. Lindsay did make this very clear. At Lindsay's request, I agreed not to mention the matter in Washington, but urged him to speak about this to Mr. Bohlen⁴⁸ when he saw him, which Lindsay hoped to do shortly after Bohlen's arrival in New York.

I should like to make to you the two following comments :

(1) I think it would be a great mistake to have the approach to Stalin made after a vote in the AEC. I think an approach to the Soviet Government, presumably by the Secretary speaking to Molotoff, should be made before any such vote. If a vote is taken before the approach to Stalin, the chances of a démarche being successful appear very small.

(2) If anyone is to go to Moscow, I think Baruch should not be the senior. The Secretary would be the logical person.

501.BB/11-446 : Telegram

Senator Austin to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET

NEW YORK, November 4, 1946—8 p. m.

URGENT

[Received 8:02 p. m.]

757. Chinese Ambassador Wellington Koo⁴⁹ in conversation with me today said he had interpreted my remarks October 30 with regard to armed forces as indicating US assent to giving information on forces and bases in all countries outside national boundaries.⁵⁰ I told Mr. Koo that my remarks extended to information concerning armed forces at home as well as abroad.

The Ambassador said he wished to be frank in stating that this might be very embarrassing to his government. Referring to relations of Chinese Government with Communists in China he said his Government would scarcely wish to reveal to the Communists the size and disposition of government forces, bases, and airfields in China.⁵¹

I thanked Mr. Koo for bringing this aspect of the matter to my attention and assured him that my Government would wish to weigh it carefully in developing its position with regard to the armed forces item.

Foregoing has been communicated to Cohen for the Secretary with special reference to Deptel 253 of October 29.⁵² ⁴⁸ Charles E. Bohlen, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State.

⁴⁹ V. K. Wellington Koo, Chinese Delegate to the General Assembly.

⁵⁰ In regard to Mr. Austin's address to the General Assembly on October 30, see footnote 26, p. 975.

⁵¹ For documentation on United States policy with respect to the situation in China, see volumes IX and X.

⁵² Ante, p. 971.

Department of State Disarmament Files

Record of a Special Meeting of the Policy Committee on Arms and Armaments, Department of State, November 4, 1946, 11 a. m.

SECRET

PCA M-23 (Supplement)

Present:

General Crain,⁵³ A-H, Deputy Chairman
 Messrs. Cummins, A-R, Executive Secretary
 Sohm, ESC, Secretary
 Blaisdell, SPA
 Dreier, IA
 Exton, MD
 Labouisse, EUR
 Matlock (for McGhee, UE)
 Ringwalt, FE
 Timberlake, NEA

Consultants:

Messrs. Brown, Le
 Hiss, SPA
 Elliott, IS Jamison, ESC
 Lacy, SEA
 Wainhouse, OA

UNITED STATES POSITION WITH RESPECT TO REGULATION OF ARMAMENTS

1. Action: After considerable discussion of the situation resulting from the position taken by Mr. Molotov on regulation of armaments in the General Assembly on October 29, 1946, THE COMMITTEE AGREED that:

a. It would not at this time draft a proposed resolution for presentation to the UN;

b. The Russian motives in asking for disarmament, whether genuine or propaganda, should not affect the establishment of the U.S. position;

c. The United States should agree with the Russian position with respect to the importance of controlling atomic energy but insist that the Security Council be guided in its actions by reports and recommendations from the Atomic Energy Commission;

d. The United States should agree with the Russian position concerning the regulation and reduction of armaments other than weapons of mass destruction with the understanding that any such regulation or reduction must be implemented by effective safeguards by way of international inspection and other means;

⁵³ James K. Crain, Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State for Occupied Areas.

e. Solution of the problems with respect to the peace settlements and the forces to be provided under Article 43 of the United Nations Charter should not be brought forth as essential preconditions to an agreement upon regulation of armaments.

2. Discussion of above principles (The numbered paragraphs below correspond to the paragraphs above) :

a. Position due to instructions from higher authority.⁵⁴

b. The opinion of the people of this country and world opinion will be based upon the contents of the Russian resolution and not upon the motives actuating it.

c. This reiterates the present stand of the U.S., and of the United Nations as expressed in the resolution of the General Assembly of last January.

d. & e. The position of the U.S. will be improved by positive support of general disarmament rather than by attempting to attach conditions; however, the U.S. must insist upon adequate safeguards to be provided by international inspection and other means to insure that the disarmament will be multilateral.

Should the Russians object to international inspection they would be obstructing disarmament; should they agree to this inspection their present position with respect to control of atomic energy would be exposed as capricious.

501.BC Atomic/11-546

The Secretary of State to the United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch)

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] November 5, 1946.

DEAR B. M.: Replying to your letter of the fourth, I have not had an opportunity to discuss the matter with the President.

I read your letter of September 17 and I think you should follow the course set forth in your recommendation a. There should be an expression of opinion by the present members of the Commission, who have participated in the study of this question for many months.

If you do not⁵⁵ follow this course, you will have to grant those who become members of the Commission on January 1 an opportunity to familiarize themselves with all that has taken place since the Commission was organized. That means a long delay.

⁵⁴ Presumably the Secretary of State.

⁵⁵ In the source text, the handwritten addition of the word "not" has been made after the word "do." However, the letter went out without this correction. (Department of State Atomic Energy Files)

I am submitting your letter, together with my recommendation, to the President and will advise you when I hear from him.⁵⁶

Sincerely yours,

JAMES F. BYRNES

811.002/1-2446

Minutes of the Meeting of the Secretaries of State, War, and Navy, Washington, November 6, 1946, 10 a. m.

[Here follows discussion of various subjects.]

DISARMAMENT

MR. ACHESON stated that following Mr. Molotov's proposal before the General Assembly on disarmament the State Department has been considering how to avoid having the General Assembly discussions develop into useless arguments on details and comparisons between various types of armament such as air forces versus land troops and land troops versus naval vessels. He said that feeling in the Department of State is that we should endeavor to keep the discussion on important fundamentals. He went on to say that both as regards a regime for atomic energy control and a system for the reduction of other types of armament he feels that an international inspection system is of crucial importance. He said that he felt that the United States representative should handle this whole subject in such a way as to focus attention on the importance of an international inspection system. The Soviet Government had adamantly declined to agree to any international inspection system. Mr. Acheson said that he felt that we should endeavor to keep attention on this rather than be drawn into a useless discussion of details. MR. FORRESTAL and MR. PETERSEN⁵⁷ expressed agreement.

SPA Files

*The United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee to the Joint Chiefs of Staff*⁵⁸

SECRET

[NEW YORK,] 6 November 1946.

Subcommittee on basic principles has completed study of purpose and have submitted final report to Military Staff Committee indicating divergent views.⁵⁹

⁵⁶ Mr. Byrnes submitted the papers under reference to the President on November 5. The file copy bears Truman's handwritten indication of approval. (501.BC Atomic/11-546)

⁵⁷ Howard C. Petersen, Assistant Secretary of War.

⁵⁸ The source text indicates that this communication was a despatch. A marginal notation reads as follows: "To Mr. Hiss from Col. Cress."

⁵⁹ In accordance with the decision taken at the 18th Meeting of the Military Staff Committee, September 18 (see the Summary of the Sequence of Events, p. 913), the Subcommittee on Basic Principles had resumed meetings on September 25. (IO Files)

Chinese, French, U.K. and U.S. representatives on Subcommittee accepted French proposed paragraph 1 as amended (U.S.M.S./50/16).⁶⁰ U.S. reserved commitment as to whether final document of the MSC on basic principles should include article on purpose. Chinese, U.K., and U.S. representatives on Subcommittee rejected all of Soviet proposed paragraphs and paragraphs 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 of French proposal, but agreed that paragraphs 5 and 6 of both the French and Soviet proposals could be discussed later under other headings of basic principles. French favored retention of French paragraphs 3 and 4. Soviet adhered to its original proposal.

Security Council directed MSC to examine from the military point of view (not the military aspects) the provisions of Article 43 of the Charter. Since Article 43 mentions purpose and the French paragraph 1 as amended does not amend or alter the meaning of the Charter, the U.S. Representatives consider this one paragraph entirely suitable for inclusion in final basic principles report to Security Council. Unless instructions to the contrary are received, the U.S. Representatives will take that position at the next meeting of the MSC on 13 November.⁶¹

501.BB/10-2246

The Acting Secretary of State to the Acting United States Representative at the United Nations (Johnson)

SECRET URGENT WASHINGTON, November 6, 1946—7 p. m.

272. For US Gadel. Ur tel 692, Oct. 22, 10 p. m.⁶² Department has prepared additional guidance on that part of position paper "Prob-

⁶⁰ Not printed.

⁶¹ The Military Staff Committee at its 22nd Meeting on November 13 agreed on the following definition of the purpose of United Nations armed forces and agreed to include it in its final statement of basic principles:

"1. Armed Forces, made available to the Security Council by Member Nations of the United Nations are intended for the maintenance or the restoration of international peace and security in cases:

- a. of existence of any threat to international peace,
- b. of any breach of international peace and security,
- c. of any act of aggression.

when measures undertaken by the Security Council in accordance with Article 41 of the United Nations Charter would be inadequate or have proved to be inadequate and when the threat to international peace and security is such that it necessitates the employment of these Armed Forces.

"2. These Armed Forces may not be employed for purposes inconsistent with the purposes, principles, and the spirit of the United Nations Charter as defined in its Preamble and Chapter I."

The Subcommittee on Basic Principles did not complete its work as a whole in 1946. (10 Files)

⁶² Not printed. It requested additional guidance in view of strong criticism within the Delegation of the recommendation contained in SD/A/C.1/35a, not printed, that in the event that a proposal were made to criticize the work of the Military Staff Committee, the Delegation should seek further guidance. Senator Vandenberg had expressed the view that the United States should support a resolution expressing the concern of the General Assembly with respect to the lack of progress. (501.BB/10-2246) lems raised by the Report of the Security Council to the General Assembly" (SD/A/C.1/35a) which deals with the MSC and special agreements under Article 43. Text which follows supplants Section III, Subsection 1 (pages 3 and 4) of reference paper:

SD/A/C.1/44 Rev. 1

November 5, 1946

SECURITY COUNCIL REPORT TO THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY
(PART II, MILITARY STAFF COMMITTEE)

GUIDANCE FROM THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE

I. Suggested Position

1. It is the Department's feeling that an active role for the Delegation in the debate on Part II of the Security Council Report is not indicated except to oppose motions or resolutions, the intent or effect of which would be critical of the Military Staff Committee.

2. It is suggested that the Delegation should not attempt to direct the course of the debate towards criticism of the Soviet Government, if such criticism is not made by other Delegations.

3. It is suggested further that the Delegation should not attempt to divert criticism leveled at the Soviet Government for the lack of progress of the Military Staff Committee, if such criticism is made by other Delegations.

4. If questions of fact are asked by Delegations not represented on the Military Staff Committee, the Delegation should feel free to consult Delegations of the other members of the Military Staff Committee in order to concert efforts in supplying answers.

5. It is suggested that motions or resolutions dealing with Part II of the Report of the Security Council be forwarded to the Department in order that additional guidance may be furnished the Delegation.

II. Background

In connection with the Security Council Report to the General Assembly (Part II, Military Staff Committee), it was suggested that the Delegation seek guidance from the Department "if proposals expressing the Assembly's concern, or calling upon the Security Council for further information or explanations, or urging it to direct the Military Staff Committee to take more vigorous steps in discharge of its responsibility are put forward" for the Assembly's consideration (SD/A/C.1/35a, page 4). In secret telegram 692 of October 22 from the Delegation guidance was requested from the Department, in consultation with the War and Navy Departments, in advance of any particular recommendations arising in the consideration of Part II of the Security Council Report.

III. Discussion

The Department has been in consultation with the War and Navy Departments and presents the following views for the guidance of the Delegation.

It is a delicate matter to prepare guidance on this subject in as much as the United States is in possession of fuller and more accurate information regarding the work of the Military Staff Committee than is the General Assembly. In the absence of authorization by the Security Council to supply the General Assembly with information regarding the Military Staff Committee's activities since July 15, it is not believed that the United States Delegation should be the vehicle for the transmission of such information to the General Assembly. It is for the Security Council to decide whether and when to make this latter information available.

However, unofficial information regarding the work of the Military Staff Committee after July 15 is generally available through press reports. Although incomplete and not entirely accurate such reports lead to the conclusion that the Soviet Delegation was entirely to blame for the little progress achieved. Especially is this so if such reports are read in conjunction with Part II of the Security Council's Report.

Thus Members of the Assembly may raise questions regarding the activities of the Military Staff Committee not covered by the Report; about the reasons for the limited progress made; about the prospect of more rapid progress in the future. If Delegations were to attribute to all governments represented on the Military Staff Committee equal blame for the slow progress made, it is believed that this would be unjustified by the facts. In such case, the Delegation should feel free to point out in debate that delegations of four governments represented on the Committee submitted promptly their proposals of principles for the organization of forces to be made available to the Security Council while the fifth, that of the Soviet Government, did not make its proposals until a date after that covered by the Report and then in a form which has not facilitated progress.

Moreover, the Department shares the view of the representatives of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on the Military Staff Committee that it is the Soviet Government and not its delegation which must bear responsibility for the Military Staff Committee's limited progress.

On the other hand, the Department desires that no action of the General Assembly should reflect adversely upon the Military Staff Committee. The Department is particularly anxious that the representatives of the Joint Chiefs of Staff should not come in for criticism.

IV. Conclusions

In the light of these considerations, it is the Department's view that while the Delegation should not oppose debate on Part II of the Security Council Report, it should not take a prominent part in the debate by (1) attempting to direct its course towards criticism of the Soviet Government or (2) diverting such criticism if the Soviet Government comes in for criticism at the hands of Delegations for the lack of progress of the Military Staff Committee. In general, it is felt that an active role in this debate is not indicated, except to oppose motions or resolutions, the intent or effect of which would be critical of the Military Staff Committee.

However, if questions of fact are asked, the Delegation should feel free to consult Delegations of the other members of the Military Staff Committee with a view to supplying answers.

Motions or resolutions dealing with Part II of the Report of the Security Council should be forwarded to the Department in order that additional guidance may be furnished the Delegation.⁶³

ACHESON

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

The Under Secretary of State (Acheson) to the United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch)

WASHINGTON, November 7, 1946.

MY DEAR MR. BARUCH: Even before receiving your letter of November 2, I had spoken with Mr. Byrnes regarding your concern in receiving an answer to the question contained in your letter of September 17 to the President and to him. Mr. Byrnes told me that he would go over the matter with you in New York and I now learn from him that by his letter to you of November 6 he has expressed his views. This morning the President told me that he was approving Mr. Byrnes' recommendation.

In regard to your comments regarding the general disarmament procedures, we here in the Department have been and are in communication with Mr. Byrnes about the matter. I presume that, if he has not already done so, he will soon be in touch with you and Senator Austin regarding a strong position in this matter which will give full support to the position which you have been taking in the Atomic Energy Commission.

⁶³ At its 55th Meeting, December 11, the General Assembly unanimously adopted the following resolution: "The General Assembly, having received and discussed the report of the Security Council, resolves to pass to the next item of the agenda." (United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, First Session, Second Part, Plenary Meetings, p. 1133). No debate on the substance of the report occurred in Plenary meetings or in the First Committee to which it had been referred.

With kindest regards.

Sincerely,

DEAN ACHESON

501.BC Armaments/11-546

Memorandum by the Under Secretary of State (Acheson)

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] November 7, 1946.

MEMORANDUM FOR SECRETARY BYRNES

Subject: Analysis of Molotov's Resolution on Disarmament⁶⁴ and Recommendations as to Method of Dealing With it.^{64a}

On its face, the Molotov proposal appears to be a forward step in achieving United Nations objectives. Actually it will have an opposite effect. For the result of the proposal is to divert attention from the untenable position in which the Russians find themselves in the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission.

American policy should be aimed at making this vital fact explicitly clear and should seek to focus attention on the real elements of any disarmament program. Otherwise we are likely to be forced into the dangerous position of discussing in detail the technical problem of reduction and elimination of various types of armaments, while the Russians will avoid (as they have so far succeeded in doing in the Atomic Energy Commission) any genuine collaboration in the working out of the international safeguards which are the heart of any effective disarmament program.

It is believed that these conclusions as to the Molotov proposal and the dangers for us in joining in it, are borne out by the events that have occurred in the United Nations since last January.

Molotov now proposes that the General Assembly resolve: first, that a general reduction in armaments is necessary; second, that "a primary objective" in such a program should be "the banning of the manufacture and use of atomic energy for military purposes"; and third, that the Security Council should see to it that these two objectives, that is, ⁶⁴ For the text of the resolution on disarmament proposed in Molotov's address to the General Assembly, October 29, see p. 973.

^{64a} A draft memorandum for the Secretary of State prepared by Mr. Hiss and dated November 5, not printed, had the same title as the present document and advanced substantially similar arguments. It included a draft resolution to be introduced in the General Assembly of the type described in the penultimate paragraph of the present memorandum. Although the Hiss draft is not a recognizable antecedent of the present document with respect to phraseology, the Office of the Under Secretary presumably considered its content in drafting the memorandum printed here. (501.BC Armaments/11-546) general reduction of armaments and the banning of atomic weapons, are achieved.

The Molotov proposal has been made to appear as a new and far-reaching approach to the problem of disarmament. This is a quite erroneous impression. Nearly a year ago the General Assembly took action which, in its main features, represented a much more hopeful approach to the problem. In the popular stir created by the current Molotov proposal, many observers have lost sight of this significant circumstance.

The resolution of the General Assembly adopted on January 18, 1946 not only recorded the desire of that body to bring about the elimination of the most important weapons of war, but also provided specifically for practical machinery through which this immense task could be undertaken.⁶⁵ That resolution set up a Commission directed, among other things, to "proceed with the utmost dispatch" and "make specific proposals . . . for the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons and of all other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction."

The resolution clearly recognized that the heart of the disarmament measures must be the establishment of safeguards to cope with the hazards of secret violations of the terms of a treaty. To give effect to this view, the General Assembly further directed the Commission to make "specific proposals" "for effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying states against the hazards of violations and evasions."

The Commission, thus established by the General Assembly on January 18, has been in session for the past five months. During these months the Russians have repeatedly professed approval of international measures to eliminate atomic weapons. But at every stage in the proceedings, they have stubbornly refused to consider or discuss any measures of genuine international control. It has become plain that what the Russians mean by international control is a mere paper agreement to ban atomic weapons. The only teeth they would countenance in such an agreement would be a provision that "the government signing the convention would, by national legislation, take steps to insure that the convention is applied and would in particular provide for the most severe punishment." In short, each nation would have to take the word of every other nation that the treaty was being observed.

The only other "safeguard" advanced by the Russians is contained in the vague suggestion that "the Security Council would guarantee the enforcement of the convention as a part of its duties in connection with maintenance of international peace and security." But despite the most persistent questioning by the representatives of other nations, the Russians have never been willing or able to explain what measures they believe the Security Council could possibly use to make this guarantee effective.

⁶⁵ The reference is to General Assembly Resolution 1 (I), "Establishment of a Commission to Deal with the Problems Raised by the Discovery of Atomic Energy," approved January 24, 1946; for text, see GA (I/1), Plenary, pp. 258-59, or Department of State, Documents on Disarmament 1945-1959, vol. I, pp. 6-7.

When in the course of the proceedings, the United States representatives have proposed real safeguards involving inspection and access to the various countries of the world by an international organization, the Russian representatives have responded that inspection is not reconcilable with the principle of sovereignty of states. This attitude, which is hardly consistent with the terms of the Resolution of January 18, 1946, is amplified in the following paraphrased translation from the Russian, issued to the press on July 31. The press release covered statements which the Russian representative was reported to have made in a committee meeting of the Atomic Energy Commission on that day:

"Mr. Gromyko said that the proposed inspection is not reconcilable with the principle of sovereignty of states. 'No inspection as such can guarantee peace and security.' And, he added, 'This idea of inspection is greatly exaggerated in importance. It is a too superficial understanding of the problem of control.' The Soviet Delegate repeated that inspection had assumed undue importance in the course of the discussions and said that the only real underlying method of control is 'by the cooperation of the United Nations.'"

The statement just quoted is typical of the position which the Russians have taken throughout the deliberations of the Atomic Energy Commission. In the process of discussion it has become increasingly clear that they are evading the main issue. The repeated attempts by the representatives of other countries to draw the Russians out have highlighted this fact, and in consequence the position of the Russian representatives has become more and more awkward. It is this situation which probably accounts for the rather conflicting statements of Alexandrov, Gromyko, Molotov, and Stalin in recent weeks. They are certainly aware of the difficulties of their stand in the Commission and of the impracticability of maintaining that stand indefinitely, and they have been searching for a way out.

It is in this setting that the proposal of Molotov should be appraised. As already suggested, its effect would be to divert attention from the untenable position in which the Russians find themselves. If the Molotov resolution or something similar is adopted it will mean that discussions of disarmament will be carried on in broader terms and in a new forum and the proceedings of the Atomic Energy Commission will be minimized. Attention will be centered instead upon such matters as "banning the manufacture of atomic weapons", reducing the size of navies, reducing the size of air forces, and reducing the size of armies, and the issues as to safeguards will be buried in a maze of generalities and technicalities.

This is the serious danger in any attempt to develop in company with the Russians a broad new approach to the problem of disarmament in the General Assembly. To guard against it our representatives in the General Assembly should emphasize the futility of any proposals for reduction in armaments unless there is some real possibility of agreement upon effective international safeguards; they should emphasize that effective international safeguards are impossible without some form of inspection, or international operations, or other measures which involve ready access by an international organization to the various nations of the world.

Our representatives should point out that the most important aspects of disarmament have already been acted upon by the General Assembly in its resolution of January 18, 1946; that the Atomic Energy Commission, the special organ of the Security Council set up to implement this action, is the agency through which the work ought to be continued with all possible vigor; that it can only serve to confuse the problem and give the world a false sense of hope for the General Assembly to adopt, as a dramatic new measure, a resolution which in fact would be less effective than the measure adopted a year ago.

In view of the paramount importance of atomic weapons and other weapons of mass destruction, the main purpose of the United Nations should be to make progress in disarmament in those fields. Obviously, if the ambitious program already voted can make no progress, it is foolish to believe that a still more ambitious program, such as that which Molotov professes to advocate, could have any hope of success.

An early decision should be reached as to what, if any, formal action on this subject the United States should advocate in the General Assembly. If we do not propose or join in an affirmative measure of some kind, it may appear that the Russians are taking the lead in pressing for disarmament, a widely popular move, and that we are opposing this policy. Effective exposition of our true position as suggested in this memorandum, should go a long way toward meeting this danger. And Mr. Baruch's proposal in his memorandum of September 17, which the President and you have approved, should serve to complement this line of action. In addition, however, it may well prove desirable for us to propose a specific measure in the General Assembly.

One possibility for such action would be a resolution by the General Assembly reaffirming that the resolution of January 18, 1946 is the most important step in approaching the problem of disarmament, expressing the conviction that the establishment of safeguards by way of international inspection and other means is basic to any measures of disarmament, and recording its sense that the expeditious fulfillment by the Atomic Energy Commission of its terms of reference with respect to atomic weapons and other weapons of mass destruction is of the highest importance. The foregoing is merely one suggestion.

There are doubtless a number of other possibilities for action which would serve the purpose as well or better, and the discussions which Senator Austin and Mr. Baruch are having should be very helpful in determining the best course to take. Through these discussions it should be possible for Senator Austin and Mr. Baruch to work out a program in which each would strengthen the other's position.

DEAN ACHESON

USUN Files

Memorandum by Mr. John C. Ross, Adviser, United States Delegation to the United Nations General Assembly

SECRET

[NEW YORK,] November 7, 1946.

PRESENT STATUS—FORMULATION OF DISARMAMENT POLICY

1. The United States has indicated (Senator Austin's speech) that it welcomed the general disarmament proposals made by Mr. Molotov the day before. Our action in so doing has been publicly and privately acclaimed.

2. Considerable doubt has been expressed concerning the sincerity of the Soviet Union's motives in advancing its disarmament proposals. Until this doubt is clarified it is essential that the United States restore and maintain its position of leadership in this field.

3. Up to the point of Molotov's speech we were in a position of at least partial leadership based on the initiative we had taken and maintained with regard to atomic energy. Our proposal for the establishment of an Atomic Energy Commission, which was adopted by the General Assembly in London, covered two of the three areas of the disarmament field, namely, (a) atomic energy and (b) other weapons of mass destruction. We have made specific proposals concerning the control of atomic energy but we have made no specific proposals concerning the control of other weapons of mass destruction. Moreover, we have made no proposals at all in regard to the third phase of disarmament which concerns the reduction of armies, navies, air forces, et cetera. The Soviet Union has made proposals which cover this third phase as well as the other two. Although we have welcomed their proposals we must be honest with ourselves and admit that until we take some positive, affirmative, constructive action the leadership rests with them.

4. There is general agreement among us that adequate safeguards are an essential component of any system of disarmament. Exactly what we mean when we use the term "adequate safeguards" is not, however, entirely clear and this subject will require further study and development.

5. There is also general agreement among us that the United States must not disarm unilaterally. Here again our meaning is not entirely clear and will require further study and development.

6. Beyond the area of agreement concerning adequate safeguards and unilateral disarmament there is a considerable difference of views as to what policy we should pursue generally with regard to this whole subject of disarmament and, more specifically, what action we should take in the current Assembly.

7. One view which, generally speaking, Senator Austin seems to have held consistently for a long time is that the disarmament field must be considered and dealt with as a whole. Atomic energy, other weapons of mass destruction, armies, navies, air forces—all of these and perhaps more are closely related aspects of a single problem which, in turn, is closely related to other problems such as the provision of armed forces under Article 43 of the Charter, and the Soviet agenda item concerning troops on foreign territories. This generalized approach was stated in effect by Molotov in his speech. It is an approach which has very widespread public support in this country. Molotov was presumably not unaware of this fact, which is evidenced by public and governmental reaction to Senator Austin's speech. The principle of general disarmament has also received much support in the Congress. At the last session a considerable number of Bills on the subject were introduced, Senator Tydings' proposal for a general disarmament conference to reduce armaments by January 1, 1950 down to the level of the peace forces required under the Charter being perhaps the most notable. With a Republican and economy-minded Congress the additional and very natural motives of Republican Party leadership in the Congress and economy through reduction of armaments (by far the largest item in our national Budget) must be added as strong factors to the already strong desire for general disarmament. Unless there is real responsiveness to all of these factors through adoption of a policy which is at once bold, imaginative and creative, positive, affirmative and constructive, there is a great danger that we shall be caught in a wave of irrational, unilateral disarmament without any quid pro quo from the Soviet Union or the rest of the world generally, a situation which would immeasurably weaken our capacity for self-defense, our position in the United Nations, and in our whole foreign relations program. Even if this danger were not great, even if the risk were only a very small one, we cannot afford in this vital area of our national security to take lightly even the smallest risk.

On the other hand the broad, sweeping approach characterized by Senator Tydings' Resolution may fairly be described as an oversimplification of an exceedingly complex problem. Moreover, it would be more appropriate for the United States to take the initiative in the establishment of appropriate machinery within the framework of the United Nations rather than having our President, as suggested by Senator Tydings, convene an international conference. Furthermore, the job of disarmament is a very tough as well as complex one and an international conference is not the best machinery for this kind of job.

A broad generalized approach would be most responsive to Molotov's proposals. This might presumably be considered as a fact that would facilitate the negotiation and speedy conclusion of mutually satisfactory arrangements with the Soviet Union and other United Nations. However, while we want to be as responsive as possible to Soviet views the Molotov proposals are stated in very general terms and carry no assurances that would be considered essential by us. We cannot, therefore, risk jumping to the conclusion that virtually complete responsiveness to the Molotov proposals will produce satisfactory results and allow ourselves meanwhile to be sidetracked and lose the advantage we have gained and hitherto maintained, through our atomic energy proposals. I believe Senator Austin and everyone else would now agree, therefore, that whatever else we may decide to do, we must re-focus attention on the necessity of international control and development of atomic energy with adequate safeguards against diversion for non-beneficial purposes.

8. If I understand correctly, Mr. Herbert Marks feels strongly and Mr. Acheson tends to agree that the emphasis should be placed on atomic energy control to such an extent as virtually to exclude any action at this time with regard to other aspects of disarmament. If correctly represented this seems to be a somewhat extreme position. It would not be sufficiently responsive to the Russian proposals to offer real hope that progress could be made with them even in the atomic energy field. It would not be sufficiently responsive to public and Congressional opinion in the United States to avoid the danger of unilateral disarmament referred to above. It would not be sufficiently responsive to the general sentiment in the Assembly in favor of disarmament. Finally, it would in effect repudiate what was said in Senator Austin's speech about disarmament.

9. A less extreme alternative is embodied in a resolution drafted by Alger Hiss and reviewed by Ben Cohen (copy attached).⁶⁶ The essential parts of this resolution are contained in the first three paragraphs. The first paragraph reaffirms the desirability of general disarmament and "recommends that the Security Council give prompt consideration to the practical measures essential thereto" and recognizes that disarmament must be general and not unilateral. The second paragraph recognizes the necessity of "effective safeguards". The third paragraph re-focuses attention on the atomic energy problem and "recommends that the Atomic Energy Commission expedite its deliberations".

This draft resolution accomplishes the purpose of re-focusing attention on the work of the Atomic Energy Commission. Beyond that, however, it could hardly be considered as responsive to any of the various elements referred to above; on the contrary it is a very weak response. It is hardly to be expected that the Security Council which is already heavily burdened with work could at this time be expected to take on this additional very big and difficult job and discharge its responsibilities toward that job very effectively. Furthermore, the veto would be a serious deterrent to real progress. As in the case of atomic energy, specialized machinery consistent with the Charter and the responsibilities of the Security Council with regard to disarmament is necessary. (See Quincy Wright's letter.)⁶⁷

10. This leads to the suggestion that we propose in the Assembly a resolution which would (a) emphasize the necessity of expediting the work of the Atomic Energy Commission, in this connection underscoring the essentiality of international control with adequate safeguards, (b) emphasize the close inter-relationship of all phases of disarmament, including atomic energy, other weapons of mass destruction, armies, navies and air forces, and the provision of armed forces, the presence of troops abroad, et cetera, (c) emphasize the necessity of close correlation of all of these factors as parts of a comprehensive whole in the development of a rational program along parallel and integrated lines, and (d) propose, in order to achieve this correlation and establish the broad political principles and objectives which are necessary to achieve practical results at the technical level (tonnages, et cetera), the establishment of a Permanent Disarmament Commission related to the Security Council in much the same way as the ⁶⁶ The draft resolution under reference is not attached to the source text and has not been found in the files of the Department of State. See, however, the text of the resolution ultimately introduced by the United States, p. 1076.

⁶⁷ Letter not identified.

present Atomic Energy Commission is related to the Council. The best organization of this Commission would be as indicated on the attached Chart No. 1,⁶⁸ namely, a Commission composed of three or more panels to deal respectively with atomic energy, other weapons of mass destruction, armies, navies, et cetera, and possibly related questions such as armed forces under Article 43, et cetera. This Permanent Disarmament Commission might best consist only of the Members of the Security Council in view of the Council's particular responsibilities.⁶⁹

[Here follows a detailed description of the proposed Permanent Disarmament Commission and of parallel United States machinery to facilitate participation in its work.]

501.BC Armaments/11-846

Memorandum by the Under Secretary of State (Acheson) ⁷⁰

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] November 8, 1946.

I have had two conversations with Mr. Reams regarding our memorandum of November 7 to Secretary Byrnes entitled "Analysis of Molotov's Resolution on Disarmament and Recommendations as to Method of Dealing With It". The result of the two discussions is that Mr. Byrnes has read the memorandum carefully and agrees with it. He wishes to note one reservation for the time being. This runs to the next to the last paragraph on page 5 of the memorandum. Mr. Byrnes, as I understand it, is not questioning the propriety of such a resolution as that described in this paragraph should it be considered necessary at some stage to introduce a resolution. His point is that he thinks the time is not now opportune to introduce any resolution.⁷¹

He, therefore, wishes us to proceed with whatever work we can do and are doing on the subject matter of the memorandum along the lines of the memorandum but until we put the matter up to him again not to propose a resolution.

DEAN ACHESON

⁶⁸ The chart is not attached to the source text and has not been found in the files of the Department of State.

⁶⁹ In regard to the proposal contained in this paragraph, see the USUN draft resolution of November 26, p. 1061.

⁷⁰ This memorandum was directed to Messrs. Hilldring, Hiss, and Marks.

⁷¹ At a November 20th meeting of the Three Secretaries, Acheson, representing the Department of State, circulated his memorandum of November 7, informing the service Secretaries that Secretary Byrnes had approved it subject to the reservation with respect to the submitting of a resolution. (811.002/1-2446)

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Franklin A. Lindsay*⁷²

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] November 21, 1946.

Subject: Conversation with Dean Acheson, Friday, Nov. 8, 1946
(Messrs. Hancock and Lindsay)

With respect to proposed University of Chicago meeting, Mr. Acheson stated that he had asked Kennan not to attend the session.

Acheson had seen the President that morning concerning our proposed course of action and the President was writing Mr. Baruch a letter confirming the Secretary of State's recent note.⁷³

We discussed the form in which the political questions should be put. Acheson fully agreed that there was no advantage in bringing up the easy questions first, but that we should begin with the basic fundamentals of international control. He took the position that this report should not be considered as final but rather as an interim report. We suggested that it might be in the form of a single report which could be accepted unanimously by the Commission and which would include:

- a) Areas of complete agreement,
- b) The principles which the United States and its friends supported, and
- c) The position held by Russia and Poland.

Such a report would have the advantage of highlighting the basic differences between us without forcing the Russians at this time to take a public stand against our proposals. This might make it easier for them to reverse their position at a later date.

In respect to the Molotov resolution on disarmament, rather than an attempt to revise the Molotov resolutions (an indirect attack) except when final action and vote is in order, Acheson agreed with Hancock that our initial approach should be a direct attack and should say in effect, "We have already been negotiating for nearly a year on disarmament in the field in which the Russians are weakest and in which we are the strongest. We have had no success whatsoever. Under such circumstances, it seems unthinkable that the Russians are sincere in their proposal for general disarmament in other fields in which they hold the advantage." Acheson asked that he be kept informed of our progress and added that the Secretary of State sometimes neglected to keep him informed.

F[RANKLIN] A. L[INDSAY]

⁷² Staff member, United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission.

⁷³ Dated November 5, p. 995.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Franklin A. Lindsay

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] November 12, 1946.

Subject: Notes on Conversation Held on Friday, November 8, between George F. Kennan of State Department, and Messrs. Hancock and Lindsay.

Mr. Hancock opened the discussion by referring to the University of Chicago meeting in December to discuss alternate atomic energy proposals. Kennan stated that he thought he would not be able to attend the meeting.

We outlined briefly our current status and our plan for bringing the political issues to the fore again before the end of the year. He agreed in general with this proposal, but felt that it should not be regarded in any way as a final step but rather as an interim step in long and drawn-out negotiations. He thought when the question of atomic energy came before the Politburo, the question was undoubtedly asked, "What will the Americans do if we don't sign up?" At the present time the Soviets probably answered that question by assuming that we will do nothing. Under such circumstances they would undoubtedly reason that it was not necessary for them to take any action now. Kennan believes that we should begin a series of moves designed to convince the Russians of our serious intent and of the consequences if they chose to continue their present course. Such a series of steps might, for example, include Military Staff conversations between ourselves, the British and the Canadians or the construction of a new bombproof General Staff headquarters in a remote region. He firmly believes we must keep a constant and firm pressure on the Russians. We must show no sign of weakening whatever in the position which we have taken. Despite his realistic and rather pessimistic attitude, he feels that ultimately it may be possible to reach a satisfactory agreement with the Russians.

He believed that there was a slight possibility that Stalin and the Politburo really did not understand our proposals in the spirit in which they have been put forward. He considers that a direct appeal, therefore, to Stalin would be very desirable. This appeal should be made quietly and without publicity and should be made by Ambassador Smith and one or more qualified men from the United States. He also thinks that either he or Chip Bohlen should go along to interpret because of the personal confidence that Stalin has developed through long association with them.

FRANKLIN A. LINDSAY

501.BB/11-1846: Telegram

Senator Austin to the Secretary of State

SECRET URGENT NEW YORK, November 18, 1946—10:15 p. m.
[Received November 19, 12:58 a. m.]

822. The following position on Soviet troop proposal, approved by Secretary, will be presented to Delegation tomorrow morning for approval: Recommendations

A. Substantive

(1) We should immediately take steps to broaden the inquiry so as to include all mobilized troops at home and abroad, including those in ex-enemy territories.

(2) We should indicate from the beginning complete readiness to comply with an appropriate request to furnish such information.

(3) Neither Austria nor Korea is to be regarded as an ex-enemy country.

(4) Only troops in excess of 100 in any particular country should be reported.

(5) If troops in home territories are to be included, only total figures should be required, without giving locations and breakdown.

(6) Should circumstances make it appropriate to do so, we should reaffirm the importance which we attach to adequate safeguards in the field of armament regulation.

B. Proposed tactics

The Soviet representative will presumably open the debate on the item relating to the disposition of troops of United Nations in other than ex-enemy countries.

The following tactical moves are recommended:

(1) The United States should endeavor to speak soon, if possible immediately, after the Soviet representative.

(2) The initial statement of the U.S. representative should be a brief and forceful one making it clear that we have a clear conscience and nothing to hide, and embodying the points made in A, 1-4, above.

(3) The U.S. should endeavor to avoid raising the issue as to whether broadening the resolution is within the Committee's competence. If the question is raised by others, we should insist that such an amendment as we propose is entirely appropriate.

(4) Before any statement is made in open committee, the U.K. Delegation should be consulted and, if possible, their concurrence with the U.S. position obtained.

AUSTIN

IO Files

Minutes of the Twenty-second Meeting of the United States Delegation, New York, Hotel Pennsylvania, November 19, 1946, 9 a. m.

SECRET

[Here follow list of names of persons present (31) and discussion of other questions.]

THE REPORT ON LOCATION OF TROOPS QUESTION

Mr. Sanders⁷⁵ noted that Committee I was going to postpone further discussion on the veto for a few days and turn to the question of the location of troops in ex-enemy territories. This item had been placed on the agenda by the Soviet Union. However, no Russian resolution had yet been submitted, although doubtless there would be one. He noted that the Russian intention was to have troops withdrawn throughout the whole world. Particularly in the long run this applied to the United Kingdom. He noted that Mr. Molotov in his opening speech had said, that the purpose of the Russian motion was to allow the Security Council to proceed under Article 43 of the Charter on forces. However, in the Security Council when this question had been discussed, the Russians had refused to agree that there was any connection between the two items. They had then claimed that the presence of troops in other countries was a source of uneasiness.

Mr. Sandifer⁷⁶ then read the recommendations from position paper US/A/C.1/54 (Rev. b)⁷⁷ as follows:

a. Substantive

1. We should immediately take steps to broaden the inquiry so as to include all mobilized troops at home and abroad, including those in ex-enemy territories.

Senator Connally pointed out that Secretary Byrnes had suggested the word "mobilized" in order that there might be included the large mobilized reserves. The Secretary's thought was that a report should be made on all troops wherever they might be. Senator Austin noted that this might refer to the United States troops since we were quite likely to have a large reserve and a small active force.

Senator Vandenberg inquired about the meaning of the word "mobilized". Did it mean prepared and ready to shoot? He thought it ⁷⁵ William Sanders, Associate Chief of the Division of International Organization Affairs; Adviser, United States Delegation to the General Assembly.

⁷⁶ Durward V. Sandifer, Chief of the Division of International Organization Affairs; Adviser, United States Delegation to the General Assembly.

⁷⁷ The recommendations under reference are printed in telegram 822, November 18, from New York, supra.

connoted readiness for war. Senator Connally said that this was the case.

Mr. Dulles said he wanted to question the desirability of including a report on troops at home. He thought the reason for the Soviet proposal was clearly that it was a propaganda effort to show that the United States had troops in China and the United Kingdom had them in Greece. Now the United States was coming back to say that it would not tell about its troops in China unless the Russians told about their troops in Russia. He thought that most people felt that the home forces were properly a matter of secret military information, just as we thought was the case with the atomic bomb. He thought that the proposal as put forward, was too wide to be on sound ground, and that we were over-playing our hand. He pointed out that the United States was not willing to disclose information regarding the atomic bomb which was our principal weapon. We would put forward our information regarding our subsidiary weapon while asking the U.S.S.R. to disclose information regarding its primary weapon.

Senator Austin pointed out that this was in line with United States views on disarmament. He said his own choice was to put the whole matter together and to consider this item as a matter of military intelligence with inspection accompanied by a disarmament proposal on a well arranged and organized plan. Disarmament obviously could not be accomplished in a day. The question is how to handle the report on troops—whether it could be taken up now or in connection with the general disarmament.

Senator Connally said that some of the advisers were insisting on combining the whole proposition into one. He did not agree, for he thought it lost the entire character of the proposal. He thought the Russians would not want the proposal if it was changed in this way. He did not expect that we would get far with disarmament at this session of the General Assembly. He said he was for disarmament but with a good many “ifs” and “whens”. He did not want disarmament when someone else had a bead on us. Senator Austin said that this was exactly right, that Senator Connally had never spoken truer words. He said that the United States had no idea of reducing its military posture until security was acquired through the United Nations Peace Force.

Mr. Cohen reported that the Secretary’s suggestion on mobilized troops came as a result of a talk with Mr. Bevin. Mr. Bevin’s view was that if there were any resolution it should cover all mobilized forces. Mr. Cohen thought that feeling arose from the fact that the Soviet Union had large troops close to other territories and that this was relevant to the maintenance of security. He supposed that “mobilized" meant troops in a position to be ordered out of the country for combat. At Senator Vandenberg's request, Colonel Bonesteel replied that mobilized troops meant troops under military discipline and control as opposed to inactive or reserve status. Senator Connally noted that when press reports spoke of mobilization [it] meant a call to the colors putting soldiers on active duty. Senator Austin noted that the United States system gave a less specific meaning to the word mobilized. Senator Vandenberg thought that the word had a belligerent atmosphere. Mr. Cohen said that he was sure that the phrase was used in a lay sense and he thought that the advisors might consider whether there was a more appropriate phrase.

Senator Connally reported that the Secretary had told him that he wanted the resolution to cover all troops everywhere. This was on the theory that the information was necessary when there was talk on disarmament. He did not think that the military and naval people wanted the clause regarding inspection to check on the information submitted. He thought that some of our military units were not strong enough to stand inspection.

Mr. Cohen said that he did not know whether the word "mobilized" was necessary. Mr. Ross suggested that the term "on active service" or "on active duty" might better be used.

Mrs. Roosevelt said that she believed with Mr. Dulles that we were making a mistake to expect the Russians to say what forces they had within their borders. We had a perfect right to ask what troops there were outside. She thought that to ask what troops there were at home, unless the request was implemented with an inspection provision, was not going to produce information of much value. It was asking a good deal of others. She said she was not sure this government would be perfectly glad to let the world know about our military situation. Senator Connally remarked that the world knows how many troops we have.

Mr. Dulles said that everyone wanted to keep the United States strong militarily as long as it was under the guns of a threatening power. He thought that the Soviet plan was a subtle one to disarm the United States unilaterally. If the American people were led to believe that the United States was militaristic, then we will disarm. He thought that the Soviet proposal regarding the presence of troops abroad and their attitude on the Japanese mandated islands question⁷⁸ were being used to the same propaganda end. He thought that the United States had to play a propaganda game as skillfully as the Russians. We would be over-playing our hand, from a propaganda viewpoint, to demand the number of troops at home in return for giving the figures on those abroad for this would be considered an unreasonable condition.

⁷⁸ For documentation on United States policy with respect to the Japanese mandated islands question, see pp. 544 ff.

Mr. Cohen said that it was not suggested that the information should not be disclosed unless the proposal were broadened. He noted that the United States position paper did not say that the United States would not join in disclosing all troops. He thought there should be no distinction between disclosing the troops abroad whether or not the Russians went along with disclosing the troops at home. There was no suggestion that in pressing for a broadened resolution, that the United States was unwilling to disclose its troops abroad.

[There follows further discussion of the subject. The formal Record of Decisions of this meeting indicates that the Delegation agreed to the substance of the recommendations contained in US/A/C.1/54 (Rev.b). The Record concludes as follows: "It was agreed to give Senator Connally discretion in handling this matter in Committee I, particularly with reference to the degree to which the U.S. should press to have the resolution cover the reporting on troops at home." (IO Files)]

Matthews Files ⁷⁹

The Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Smith) to the Director of the Office of European Affairs (Matthews)

TOP SECRET

Moscow, November 19, 1946.

DEAR DOC: While I was in New York Mr. Baruch gave me a memorandum of a conversation on October 19th between Mr. Franklin A. Lindsay and other members of the Atomic Energy Commission and Mr. Sobolev of the Soviet Union.⁸⁰ I assume you have a copy of this memorandum which is extremely interesting.⁸¹

It has been gone over carefully by the political officers of this Embassy, who believe that the conclusions reached by Mr. Lindsay as a result of this meeting are eminently sound. In fact, from close study of public pronouncements by Soviet officials, the position assumed by Soviet representatives at various international conferences, the authoritative statements of Communist Party ideologues and the line ⁷⁹ Lot 5, files of Messrs. H. Freeman Matthews and John D. Hickerson who were in 1946 Director and Deputy Director, respectively, of the Office of European Affairs.

⁸⁰ The memorandum is printed p. 955. For a memorandum by Mr. John Paton Davies, First Secretary of the Embassy in Moscow, on the memorandum of the conversation with Mr. Sobolev, see vol. VI, p. 806.

⁸¹ Mr. Matthews wrote "I have not." in the margin opposite this sentence.

followed by the Soviet press, our people had reached the same general conclusions which I quote below.

“The Soviet attitude toward American production of atomic bombs and the more general issue of adequate control and inspection is based upon and directly derives from the Soviet world outlook. This outlook is inspired by and inextricably bound up with the Leninist-Stalinist interpretation of historical materialism—a predetermined and dogmatic explanation of all human phenomena. The political philosophy of the men who rule Russia, despite its confusing tactical flexibility, is as intolerant and dogmatic as that which motivated the zealots of Islam or the Inquisition in Spain.

“By the terms of the Soviet outlook, the world is an arena of struggle between the forces of ‘progress’ led by the Soviet Union and the forces of reaction led by the United States and the British Commonwealth. According to Leninist-Stalinist dogma, there can be no compromise between the two camps. One or the other must be destroyed. Because the USSR is advancing along the ‘scientific’ path of historical materialism, the Soviet system is the one predestined to survive. But it is not likely to survive without a struggle. The decaying forces of capitalism are likely, by the same ‘scientific’ rule, to attempt to crush the Soviet Union.

“Because the western world is regarded as organically hostile, because there can be no compromise with the western world excepting for temporary tactical maneuvers, and because there is every likelihood of a war between the imperialist west and the Soviet system, Sobolev was speaking a Stalinist truth when he stated that the USSR was seeking to pursue its own policies in complete freedom and without control from the outside. For the same reason it may be assumed that Sobolev accurately reflected Kremlin thinking when he stated that the world was not ready for world government. The Stalinist doctrine preaches that the Soviet state must grow in strength and authority so long as ‘capitalist encirclement’ continues and that it cannot wither away until ‘capitalist encirclement’ has been eliminated. It is clear from the pronouncements of Soviet ideologues that ‘capitalist encirclement’ will not even diminish until the relative strength of the United States and the British Commonwealth has been drastically reduced below that of the Soviet empire.

“With the foregoing in mind, it is evident that the USSR will not voluntarily cooperate in any effective international scheme for inspection and control of atomic energy. If under pressure it consented as a matter of tactics to pro forma inspection and control, it would still employ every ruse and stratagem to prevent such inspection and control from fulfilling the purposes for which they were designed.

“As basic Soviet strategy is to weaken its ‘enemies’, it is wholly logical that the USSR should exert every effort to bring about the cessation of atomic bomb production in the United States. If the USSR succeeds in this, it will certainly attempt to prevent the resumption of American bomb production. It would, of course, be utterly naive to assume that the cessation of bomb production in the United States would induce the USSR either to abandon its own gigantic atomic research project or to participate sincerely in an effective program for atomic control and inspection. The Kremlin creed is one of implacable hostility, not collaboration; unremitting preparation for war with the democratic west, not conciliation; the existence of two worlds now and the establishment of one world only when it will assuredly be a Soviet world.

"Mr. Lindsay's final conclusion, that the proposal for discussion between Molotov and Byrnes was probably prompted by the hope that the USSR might obtain concessions from the United States, would seem to be accurate, for reasons stated above.

"Having said the foregoing, the question arises—what should our future policy with regard to the control of atomic energy be? It is felt that nothing is to be lost and a good deal to be gained by continued pressure for genuine control and inspection. At the same time, production of atomic bombs should, of course, be continued. It might be well to broaden the proposals for control and inspection to include reduction, control and inspection of all armaments (as was suggested in the Embassy's telegram 2013, June 26 ⁸²).

"From a security point of view, the United States probably has little to lose in the unlikely event that the USSR accepts such a proposal. The USSR presumably already has extensive information regarding American military strength, while the United States has comparatively slight information regarding the Soviet military position.⁸³

"It is essential, however, in undertaking such a program that the United States attempt to regain from the USSR the moral initiative and leadership in the whole question of armaments reduction, control and inspection. If this is done and non-Soviet world opinion is mobilized behind the United States, we should be able to put the Russians on the spot sufficiently, if not to force adequate control and inspection measures, at least to place our own good faith indelibly on record and expose Soviet 'peaceful intentions' for what they are worth and thereby awaken the non-Soviet world to the peril which now threatens it."

My own opinion is that the ultimate and logical developments of our proposals for the control of atomic energy and the results which would seem to provide the greatest obtainable security for the western world and for ourselves, is the extension of our confidence ⁸⁴ to those nations which are willing in good faith to accept and cooperate with the control measures which we have proposed. This would eventually include most of the nations of the non-Soviet world who are, of course, vitally interested in the security as well as in the economic benefits which might be expected to result if the combined scientific and productive capacities of a group of democratic nations were directed toward the development of atomic power.

⁸² See Mr. Thompson's memorandum to Mr. Hickerson, June 27, and footnote 5, p. 857.

⁸³ Mr. Matthews placed a vertical line and a question mark in the margin opposite this paragraph.

⁸⁴ Mr. Matthews underlined the word "confidence," placed a question mark opposite it in the margin, and wrote "What does this mean?"

Such a result would inevitably be interpreted by the Soviet Union as a direct threat, and might produce a violent reaction instead of their cooperation for which we have been hoping. However, I can see very little chance of any other really satisfactory solution, and if we now discard our last trump card we have nothing left to play.

I suggest that you furnish a copy of the above evaluation to Mr. Baruch for the information of the appropriate personnel of his Commission. I am sure he will find it interesting.

Sincerely,

BEDELL

501.BB/11-1846

The Director of the Office of Special Political Affairs (Hiss) to the Under Secretary of State (Acheson)

[WASHINGTON,] November 19, 1946.

Subject: Position of our Delegation on Soviet Proposal for Information About Location of Troops

Three main points have been under active consideration for the past few days and will probably arise again in the debate in Committee. Our initial position is, of course, settled by telegram 822 of November 18 from New York which you saw this morning.

1. Our proposal to broaden the inquiry to include troops at home.

It has been recognized in New York that many of the smaller countries are likely to resist this extension for the reason that without such an extension the proposal would not apply to them at all in as much as they have no troops abroad. The only suggestions any of us in the Department have made to New York on this topic have been that the possible adverse reaction from a number of the smaller countries to this broadening of the proposal made it appear unwise for the United States to submit an actual resolution at the outset of the debate. (There were other reasons which we also advanced as to why we should not initiate a resolution at this time.) The Delegation and the Secretary are agreed that we should not propose a resolution at this time.

I learned today that Mr. Dulles and others of the Delegates actually opposed including troops at home. Mr. Dulles in particular thought that if adopted it would simply lead the Soviets to say that numbers of troops were of less importance than some types of weapons and that they would thereupon ask that the inquiry be broadened to include a report on stocks of atomic bombs, etc. This must be the opposition the Secretary mentioned to you. It is, as you know, now settled that we will continue to assert our support for this extension. Whether we will formally propose it will depend on reactions of other delegations.

2. Inspection and relationship to disarmament proposal.

The British apparently continue to hope to have the whole proposal dropped. In line with this they have advocated the requirement of inspection to enable verification of any figures submitted. They have also indicated a desire to combine consideration of the troop proposal with consideration of the disarmament proposal.

Our Military Staff Committee representatives in New York have also favored inspection as they fear that otherwise our figures, which would be accurate, would appear to the public as unduly large in comparison with the Soviet figures which would probably be markedly understated.

We have suggested to New York that it might be confusing and inconsistent with our major objectives in the disarmament field to combine these two topics. We have also said that the troop proposal would be a poor issue on which to fight out the question of inspection. Most of the smaller countries (on the assumption that we would still be supporting the inclusion of troops at home) would be apt to favor minimal inspection. Our people in New York, apart from the Military Staff Committee representatives, agree with us on both points. They are keeping in close touch with Ben Cohen on this.

3. Unilateral disclosure of our troop dispositions.

We have suggested to New York that in view of the British desire not to disclose the locations of their troops it would be unfair for us to make unilateral disclosure before any Assembly request for such disclosure. This would force the British to do the same against their will. We have suggested that any consideration for unilateral disclosure should therefore be checked with the Secretary through Ben Cohen who would know the effect of this on our commitments to the British.

Our Military Staff Committee representatives in New York have also opposed unilateral disclosure as they think it would weaken our bargaining position in trying to get the Soviets to disclose their troops in territories where the Soviets have not wanted to make such a disclosure.

Ben Cohen thinks that for public relations reasons we may have to state figures of our troops in particular countries, such as China, in the course of debate. He thinks also that we may have to release all our figures at the last moment if the resolution is being smothered to demonstrate that we have nothing to hide and have not tried to kill the resolution in order to cover up. He will keep in close touch with the British and clear the matter with them before making unilateral disclosure.

SPA Files

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of Special Political Affairs (Hiss) to the Under Secretary of State (Acheson)

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] November 19, 1946.

DEVELOPMENTS WITH RESPECT TO SOVIET DISARMAMENT PROPOSAL IN
THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

I told Mr. Ross today, following up conversations I have had with you recently on this subject, that in view of the Secretary's approval of your memorandum of November 7, copies of which are in Mr. Baruch's and Senator Austin's hands, it appeared that our Delegation in New York now have available material on which to prepare Senator Connally's statements in Committee 1.

I made clear to Mr. Ross that the Secretary's approval of your memorandum was subject to the proviso that the Secretary did not think it profitable to consider at this time the terms of any possible resolution.

Mr. Ross said that Senator Austin plans in the near future to talk to the Secretary about your memorandum. Mr. Ross says that he is confident that the Senator is in full agreement on the major points of the importance of safeguards, the primary significance of control of atomic energy, and the impossibility of unilateral disarmament. Mr. Ross is also confident that the Senator is aware of the dangers of getting into a consideration of the technical details of regulation of armaments. However, it is likely that the Senator may have somewhat different views as to how to accomplish the general objectives of your memorandum and wishes to discuss the question of tactics directly with the Secretary.

The foregoing is simply for your information and, so far as I can see, calls for no action on your part at this time.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Notes of a Luncheon Meeting Between Members of the United States and Soviet Delegations to the Atomic Energy Commission, New York, November 20, 1946

RESTRICTED

Present:	Prof. Alexandrov	Mr. Hancock
	Dr. Mescheryakov	Mr. Burton
	Mr. Vavilov	Mr. Lindsay
	Mr. Kondratiev	Dr. Fine
		Mr. Chase

In a general discussion at the start of the luncheon, Mr. Hancock observed that the problem of atomic energy is unique in his experience in that it seems to have no limits. Prof. Alexandrov stated that this was quite understandable since the problem concerns every aspect of humanity.

However, we must, in our work, put the problem within certain limits based on what we know. Otherwise, we can't arrive at any solution. Dr. Mescheryakov remarked that in the field of research, distant limits or no limits at all are desirable and, for that reason, confessed to a certain pessimism. Prof. Alexandrov replied that we are now talking of controls, and that he felt optimistic about the possibilities of setting certain limits and also of getting agreement within this area. The problem is almost one of what to exclude rather than what to include.

Mr. Hancock stated that he too was of an optimistic nature and felt that an agreement not only must, but could be reached. Prof. Alexandrov added that we must confine ourselves to the area of what is known, or certain. No one can foresee the full possibilities of atomic energy now, just as no one could foresee the possibilities of electricity when that form of energy was discovered. He felt that it would be better to centralize all development in this field for the present. The French suggestion of decentralizing this work throughout the universities is quite premature. That is for the future. We should so work that only those activities that are fully understood become decentralized or "democratized." We cannot foresee all such developments, and for this reason, we must not tie ourselves too firmly to any particular line. Dr. Mescheryakov added that students the world over are a wild lot and they should not be permitted to fool around with atomic energy. They might start making bombs.

Prof. Alexandrov prefaced his answer to this question by remarking that he was a scientist, engineer and pedagogue and not a political man. However, it seemed to him that we should look for progress in the field of atomic energy to our superiors. Mr. Molotov had suggested (a) general reduction in armaments and (b) in this connection, the banning of atomic energy for military purposes. Mr. Stalin had also stated that a strong international control is necessary in the field of atomic energy. If Mr. Molotov could meet with a corresponding individual from the United States to agree on the general principles or policy of control, the Atomic Energy Commission could move forward very rapidly. At present, the members of the Atomic Energy Commission are working in the general background of this problem. They are handicapped by the fact that there is no agreement in principle on the part of the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. It is surprising that we have been able to progress as far as we are now in view of this lack of agreement.

Mr. Hancock stated that he agreed that agreement in principle or in policy must be achieved but feared that tying the problem of control of atomic energy to the general problem of disarmament might submerge this important problem in the overall debate and discussion.

Prof. Alexandrov replied that he did not think that this was possible, that he has felt all along that it was unfortunate that the problem of atomic energy has always been so isolated from the other problems affecting the entire world. If our Ministers of State, or other individuals empowered to deal with such problems could be persuaded to take up the problem of atomic energy while they are discussing problems of, let us say Trieste, Germany, the Far East and general disarmament, an agreement in principle might be reached in the field of atomic energy which would fit this problem into the general pattern of world problems and would permit the Atomic Energy Commission to proceed rapidly in the working out of the details. Prof. Alexandrov asked Mr. Hancock's permission to bring up this subject with his superiors with the view of persuading them to take up this problem with corresponding U.S. officials.

Mr. Hancock gave Prof. Alexandrov blanket authority to report everything that was being said during the luncheon and added that he had no objection to such a proposed line of action. He stated that such added problems are not within his competence but that he understood that the U.S. was preparing to deal with this problem at the level suggested by Prof. Alexandrov. Mr. Hancock further added that the Moscow Declaration and the General Assembly Resolution had given a clear mandate to the Atomic Energy Commission on how to proceed with this problem. Prof. Alexandrov agreed but added that in the light of the Moscow Declaration and the G.A. Resolution the U.S. had proposed the plan known as the Baruch Plan and the Soviets had proposed a plan put forth by Mr. Gromyko. These plans are not in agreement, and Prof. Alexandrov felt that we have gone about as far as we can under these directives. He felt that a further agreement on policy was necessary before any appreciable progress could be made in the Atomic Energy Commission. When such an agreement is reached, and after the G.A., he felt that more frequent meetings of the Atomic Energy Commission would be possible in order to expedite our work. He again asked Mr. Hancock for permission to report the result of this conversation to his superiors with a view of having appropriate action taken. He also asked Mr. Hancock what his opinion was on this course of action.

Mr. Hancock repeated that this was outside his competence but that he understood that the United States was awaiting a further clarification of the Soviet position prior to taking any action. Mr. Hancock said that it was felt that the Soviet position was unclear, that recent statements by Mr. Stalin and Mr. Molotov were not entirely consistent with statements made earlier in the proceedings of the Atomic Energy Commission. The United States felt hesitant about pressing the U.S.S.R. representatives for a clarification, feeling that Mr. Molotov would give this clarification in the general debate on disarmament before the General Assembly.

Prof. Alexandrov asked whether he could look upon this present meeting as a gesture of friendship on the part of the United States representative and as an indication of a genuine desire on the part of the U.S. to come to an agreement as soon as possible. He further asked whether the United States would like to receive advance notice of Mr. Molotov's clarification of what was meant by a strong international control mentioned by Mr. Stalin. He added that every nation is entitled to its own guess as to what was meant by a strong international control, and that it seemed to him, speaking as an individual, that this statement meant, a strong control that was international, and shared in by all nations, beginning with raw materials and going through the entire process of atomic energy development. Discussions to date had indicated that a technical or scientific control was feasible, except for some blank areas in the final stages in atomic energy development. He hoped that physicists and scientists could eventually solve these technical problems. A policing method of control also seemed to be indicated. He repeated that the agreement on a higher level on general policy or principle in this problem was necessary. This agreement should cover the fields of (a) general disarmament, (b) the banning of atomic weapons in connection with general disarmament, and (c) some form of control. He added that with an incorrect solution on overall problems, agreement on atomic energy would be of little value. He added that if international inspection were established he hoped he might be the inspector in the United States and Mr. Hancock in the U.S.S.R. Mr. Hancock laughingly agreed.

Mr. Hancock assured Prof. Alexandrov that the present luncheon was more than a gesture of friendship and that the United States was sincerely and genuinely interested in solving the problems as soon as possible. He favored many more such meetings. Mr. Hancock added that he feared we might slow down the tempo of our work after the first of the year because of the necessity of educating three new members in the complexities of our problem.

Prof. Alexandrov thanked Mr. Hancock for this gesture of friendship and added that he himself had thought of approaching the United States representatives in a similar way, but had refrained because of a general atmosphere of suspicion and a possible misunderstanding of his motives. Such meetings would expedite our work as no agreements are ever possible without such frequent contacts.

Prof. Alexandrov agreed readily when it was suggested to him that it might be a good idea to make a breakdown of the various problems in the general field of atomic energy control so that areas of agreement and disagreement would be clearly delineated. Such a breakdown would greatly aid our superiors in their considerations of the entire problem.

After the luncheon, Prof. Alexandrov, enroute to the elevators, asked Mr. Chase whether he would be at the meeting on Thursday.⁸⁵ Upon receiving an affirmative answer, he stated that he might be able to give some advance information of the Soviet clarification of their present position at that time. He added that he would probably be a member of the U.S.S.R. Delegation for some time and looked forward to working for an agreement. After the luncheon Prof. Alexandrov stated that he expected Prof. Skobeltsyn⁸⁶ to return to the United States.

JOSEPH CHASE

USUN Files

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. John C. Ross, Adviser, United States Delegation to the United Nations General Assembly

SECRET

[NEW YORK,] November 21, 1946.

Subject: Disarmament; Atomic Energy Commission

Participants: Senator Austin
 Mr. Bernard Baruch
 Mr. John Hancock
 Mr. Ferdinand Eberstadt
 Mr. John Ross

Mr. Baruch, at his request, came in to see the Senator at 11:30. The discussion continued until one o'clock.

While we were waiting for Mr. Hancock and Mr. Eberstadt to arrive Mr. Baruch made a few preliminary remarks. He made a reference to the importance of punishment and said that in developing the other cardinal principles of our atomic and disarmament policy, we should not neglect this factor. He also said that he and his associates had in mind, among other things, to discuss evidences of a conciliatory attitude on the part of the Russians which they felt they had seen. Mr. Baruch said that he was always wary of Greeks bearing presents but at the same time he also always thought that it was sometimes a good thing to have a look at the presents.

⁸⁵ November 21.

⁸⁶ Professor D. V. Skobeltsyn, Adviser, Soviet Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission.

When Mr. Hancock and Mr. Eberstadt arrived, Mr. Eberstadt stated the purpose of their call, roughly along the following lines. In their work in the Atomic Energy Commission during the past two or three weeks they had seen evidence of a softening in the Russian position. It was becoming clearly more apparent to the Russians that they were in a situation, from which they had no good way out, of a very substantial majority of the Commission being for the United States proposals and against them. He said that they had had a test vote a week or ten days ago which they had anticipated would come out nine in favor of the United States with France abstaining and the Soviet Union and Poland voting in the negative. What actually happened was that there were ten votes for the United States, France voting with us, and two abstentions, namely, the Soviet Union and Poland.

Mr. Eberstadt went on to say that at the second and third Russian levels there had been evidence of a more conciliatory, softening attitude. Based on these sources he thought the Russians might be trying to find a way out of their present dilemma with regard to the atomic energy work in two ways; first, by using the Molotov general disarmament proposals as a means of confusing the atomic energy issues, second, by suggesting that with regard to the latter issues the time had perhaps come for a discussion between Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Molotov. It was the view of Mr. Baruch and his associates, Mr. Eberstadt said, that we should not allow ourselves to be misled in either of these directions. On the former point it was very important that we do not allow the general disarmament proposals to confuse the atomic energy matter. On the second point Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Molotov had discussed this matter fully in Moscow last December and again at the Assembly in London; they had agreed upon the fundamental principles. At this time it was felt further discussion would merely serve to take the focus off the Commission's work as such.

Senator Austin turned his attention to the first of these points, namely, the question of disarmament. He said that we have been giving a good deal of thought to this question, having in mind the importance of not detracting from or delaying the atomic energy work, that he and I yesterday afternoon had read over a long paper which was set up in the form of a draft resolution which was probably much too long as a resolution, but that regardless of its form it was, in effect, a statement of all of the objectives and problems involved in the disarmament question, particular attention being paid to the constitutional basis under the United Nations Charter for the various specific proposals made.⁸⁷ The Senator then asked me to read this paper which I did.

⁸⁷ The paper under reference is a preliminary draft of a resolution prepared in Senator Austin's office; for the text of the 4th Draft, November 26, see p. 1061.

After I had read it, Mr. Eberstadt was kind enough to say that he thought it was a magnificent paper, and that with regard to the atomic energy program he thought that it filled the bill and hit the nail on the head completely.

Mr. Baruch and Mr. Hancock appeared to agree with this general estimate.

Senator Austin queried whether the other gentlemen did not think that the paper was much too long. Mr. Eberstadt said he thought that while some of the matters relating to procedures, et cetera, might be taken out, he nevertheless felt that for a matter of this great importance there was much value in having a very full statement of all of these important points, having in mind that we would be establishing here, in effect, in such a resolution a worldwide basis for full public understanding of the principal points and issues involved. Mr. Baruch and Mr. Hancock appeared to agree.

We then discussed the preamble material in this paper, Senator Austin raising the question whether all of this preambular material might not be boiled down to the fundamental issue of the whole objective of the United Nations. Mr. Baruch seemed to react favorably to this idea. Mr. Eberstadt seemed to feel that while some boiling down could be accomplished, he nevertheless felt that there were some points in the preambular material which should be retained. I suggested that it was of great importance that the two fundamental principles contained in the paragraphs relating to multilateral, rather than unilateral, disarmament and to effective safeguards should be covered in the preamble and strongly affirmed. These were such fundamental principles, from our point of view, that it was perhaps not realistic to assume that any substantial progress could be made in the disarmament field unless these two principles were accepted. This did not, of course, mean that we would be putting forward any preconceived or half-baked ideas about, for example, the particular forms that safeguards might take in the different phases of disarmament. These were all open questions and part of the work of the proposed disarmament commission itself. Mr. Eberstadt and the others appeared to agree with this viewpoint.

There was then general agreement that in addition to eliminating the procedural material, the draft resolution could be further boiled down by omitting some of the itemizing of particular things that would be done and by attempting to cut down on some of the repetitious material. We then discussed some of the relatively minor points which Mr. Eberstadt raised as follows.

1. He had some doubt whether Canada should be included by name and by right as a permanent member. This was, of course, vital in the atomic energy case because of Canada's particular relationship to this problem. We indicated that we saw no real reason why Canada should be included in this way.

2. Is a treaty necessary in order to establish and make the commission operative or can we operate on the basis of a General Assembly resolution? I pointed out that we were not here attempting to set up an operating agency which probably would require a treaty, but a policy-making and planning agency which, I thought, was clearly within the powers of the General Assembly and would not require any treaty implementation.

3. On the general question of reporting by the proposed commission, Mr. Eberstadt said he would like to study this more carefully. He had one thought and that is whether we had adequately covered the point of the commission being able to report on its own authority.

4. With regard to the paragraph on relationships between the Permanent Disarmament Commission and the Atomic Energy Commission, where we state that the former should not infringe upon or impede "unduly" the work of the latter, Mr. Eberstadt felt that the word unduly was unfortunate and could be twisted by the Russians. We readily agreed that this word was not at all necessary.

5. He hoped that it would be possible to get in something about nipping aggression in the bud. (This, in a way, is the same idea as Senator Austin expressed yesterday about "removing the means for conducting aggressive warfare".)

There was then some further general discussion about presentation with particular reference to Mr. Baruch's experience in the Atomic Energy Commission and the procedure they had followed of making, first, a fundamental statement of principles which they then followed up by fuller statements setting forth in greater detail some of the aspects of the principles originally stated. It was indicated that copies of these various papers would be sent to us.

With reference to the paragraph under the statement of functions which concerns the proposed commission as a clearing house and coordinating center, Mr. Hancock, while indicating his understanding of an agreement with the objective sought, thought that the wording could be improved in order to avoid some of the unfortunate wording used so much, during the war, in Washington.

Mr. Baruch then said that he would like to make a few off-the-cuff comments. He said that the first statement by Senator Austin will attract much more attention than any second, third, or fourth statements he might make. He said that the first statement, therefore, he felt, should be based fully on "high grounds". For this reason he would incidentally leave out anything more than the bare minimum relating to procedures and put this kind of material into supplemental papers.

Reverting to the theme of high grounds, Mr. Baruch said he hoped that Senator Austin would find it possible to develop the theme of elimination of war as an objective. He said he fully realized that this was considered to be an unrealistic sort of thing, but that he nevertheless thought the human yearning for the reestablishment of this objective in terms which were associated with some reasonable hope of accomplishment was tremendous and should be met. He said when he had discussed with the State Department the original presentation of his material in the Atomic Energy Commission he had been advised that the best thing to do would be merely to lay the Acheson-Lilienthal Report on the table. He said he had told Secretary Byrnes that he had to do more than this. He said that if he were going to do a job he had to get into it the basic convictions that he had held strongly for a long time.

He then went on to say that his second major point was a plea that in his statement Senator Austin should discuss the question of punishment. He said there must be no interference with the daily operations. He said that also there should be no interference with the punishment. He said that they must not veto the daily operations and they must not veto punishment.

Mr. Baruch said that he knew his views with regard to the veto were not exactly popular. He made it clear that he was for the veto given present circumstances, but he thought (and Mr. Eberstadt subsequently developed this point a little more fully) that when the United Nations reached the point of going beyond the Charter and making a solemn agreement in a field as important as atomic energy or disarmament, they must be willing to go beyond the Charter as well with regard to the veto.

Discussion of this point developed that in effect Mr. Baruch was suggesting the addition of a fourth cardinal point, namely, enforcement to the three cardinal points which we already had, that is, no unilateral disarmament, effective safeguards, and get on with the work of the Atomic Energy Commission.

In response to Senator Austin's question whether it would be necessary in dealing with the enforcement question to get into the veto, Mr. Baruch and Mr. Eberstadt both said that there was no possibility of ducking the question, that it would be asked and it would be said that there is no possibility of enforcement because of the veto or if there were going to be any enforcement what would you do about the veto.

Mr. Baruch, apologizing to the Senator for being so vehement and explaining that he was only because of his deep conviction and sincerity, said that he hoped from the bottom of his heart that in the initial statement on this disarmament proposal nothing would be reserved that the Senator has in the back of his head. He said he thought we must speak out very plainly on these fundamental questions.

By agreement I gave a copy of the paper which I had read to Mr. Hancock, explaining to him that it was very much of a first draft working paper which Senator Austin and I had been over only yesterday evening, that no one else had copies of it.

The discussion then concluded on a very friendly and cordial and cooperative note, it being understood that each group would keep in the very closest touch with the other.

After Mr. Baruch and his associates had left Senator Austin telephoned Secretary Byrnes and made an appointment to see him at 2:30 Friday. It was agreed that meanwhile I should try to boil down this present paper to somewhat more manageable proportions taking into account as much as possible of the discussions we had just had as a basis for discussion with the Secretary.

501.BB/11-2146: Telegram

Senator Austin to the Secretary of State

PRIORITY

NEW YORK, November 21, 1946—12:30 a. m.
[Received 12:47 a. m.]

831. Text of resolution on armed forces proposed in Committee I November 20 by Molotov follows:

“General Assembly recommends to Security Council to take a decision to effect that states-members of UN should submit following information to Secretary General and Security Council within a month:

1. At what points in territory of UN members or other states with exception of former enemy territories and in what number are armed forces of other UN members.

2. At what points in former enemy states and in what number are armed forces of Allied powers and other UN members.

3. At what points in above mentioned territories are air and naval bases and what is size of their garrisons belonging to armed forces of other UN states members.

4. Information to be provided under paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 should refer to the situation as it existed November 1, 1946⁸⁸.

AUSTIN

⁸⁸ The First Committee took up the question of United Nations members reporting on their troops stationed on non-enemy territories at its 24th Meeting, November 20; for the record of that meeting, see GA (I/2), First Committee, pp. 127-130. Molotov reiterated the Soviet position and submitted the resolution contained in the present telegram. Senator Connally responded that United States troops were stationed on foreign territory with the consent of the governments concerned. He emphasized that the United States was willing to report on all troops as it had nothing to hide, but stated that the Soviet proposal just offered would have to be studied before he could comment upon it.

501.BB/11-2146

Memorandum of Telephone Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Special Political Affairs (Hiss)

[WASHINGTON,] November 21, 1946.

Subject: Soviet Proposal for Reports on Disposition of Troops

Participants: Senator Warren Austin (USDel-New York)
Mr. John C. Ross (USDel-New York)
Mr. Alger Hiss

Mr. Ross called me this afternoon on the above subject and said that Parodi had supported Molotov's position that the subject of troops at home should be taken up under the subject of disarmament.⁸⁹ Molotov had then stated, in answer to Cadogan's question of yesterday,⁹⁰ that the Soviets believe this information would be helpful in connection with the preparation by the Security Council of agreements for the supply of forces under Article 43. He also referred, although more indirectly than in the past, to the political aspects of the presence of troops in other countries.

Bevin had then spoken and had said that the British would be prepared to give information of this kind in connection with the negotiation of agreements under Article 43. However, he thought that the whole question of reporting on troops should be considered in connection with disarmament and he made a formal motion to this effect.

This morning the Turkish Ambassador⁹¹ had called on Senator Austin and had expressed great anxiety about our suggestion that members of the United Nations should report on the number of their troops at home as well as those abroad. The Turkish Ambassador said it would be most embarrassing for his country at this time to report on this subject.

Mr. Ross said that Senator Austin wished to propose to the Secretary that in order to avoid confusing the troop question with the more important question of disarmament we should tomorrow express our willingness to support the Soviet-French proposal.⁹² In order to meet the British position as far as possible, Senator Austin would propose ⁸⁹ The first two paragraphs of this memorandum relate to the 25th Meeting of the First Committee, November 21; for the record of that meeting, see GA (I/2), First Committee, pp. 131-137.

⁹⁰ At the 24th Meeting of the First Committee, November 20, the United Kingdom Representative, Sir Alexander Cadogan, had asked Molotov to explain the exact purpose of the Soviet proposal.

⁹¹ Huseyin Ragip Baydur, the Turkish Ambassador in the United States; Head of the Turkish Delegation to the General Assembly.

⁹² "Soviet-French proposal" refers to the fact that the French Delegation had expressed support for the Soviet resolution at the 25th Meeting of the First Committee.

an amendment to the Soviet motion which would recite that information on troops at home would of course be furnished by member states in connection with any disarmament program which might in the future be adopted by the United Nations. The Senator felt that in view of the fact that we would be differing from the British it would not be practicable for us to propose our own resolution along the lines of the Soviet-French proposal but differing in detail. He felt that this would confuse the parliamentary situation and he had been told that our proposal would get lost in the shuffle. Instead, therefore, he was going to suggest to the Secretary, unless we saw objection, that we support the Soviet proposals (the text of which is set out in New York's telegraph 831 of November 21) with simply the amendment referred to above about information being given on troops at home in connection with any subsequent disarmament program.

Mr. Blaisdell discussed this suggested course of action with Colonel Giffen and Colonel Bonesteel and found that the Army would find it very burdensome to report as to what points in various countries our troops were located or the numbers at those points. Our present reporting system does not cover these matters and it would be necessary to ask for special reports in all cases. Colonel Bonesteel and Colonel Giffen felt that this effort was not warranted by the importance of the proposed resolution. They confirmed our feeling that reporting on specific locations would be particularly disagreeable to the British. They felt, however, that there was no real strategic disadvantage to the British or ourselves in this respect but they recognized that the British might disagree with their view on this. They did feel that the political question which we, of course, have been particularly concerned with was of major importance, namely, having it appear that the Soviets had succeeded in driving a wedge between us and the British. On the subject of our bases they said that they would prefer not to report on the size of our garrisons at particular bases and questioned whether the resolution was of sufficient importance to warrant such reports by us. They did not, however, feel that this was as important to them as the question of specific location of our forces in other countries.

After going over all the foregoing with Mr. Acheson I called Senator Austin and told him that Mr. Acheson thought it would be highly desirable for us to make every effort to get the British to agree to go along in support of a resolution asking for reports on troops both in friendly countries and in ex-enemy countries. However, he felt that it was more important to avoid confusing the troop reporting problem with the vital question of disarmament. He felt that if we pointed out to the British the great importance of emphasizing in the disarmament discussion the necessity for adequate international inspection they might agree with our position. In any event he thought avoiding confusion in the disarmament field was more important than avoiding a split with the British on the troop question.

I then pointed out the views of the Army as set forth above with respect to the difficulty of reporting on exact locations of our troops and pointed out that this would probably be particularly objectionable to the British. With British support it might be feasible for us to propose desirable amendments to the Soviet proposal. I said that if we could not get an amendment making express provision that reports need not be made on troops below 100 in any country, our representative should get an expression of the committee's agreement that whatever resolution was adopted was not meant to cover such small units. I pointed out that we had military attachés with their staffs in practically every country in the world and that if we reported on all these units propaganda could be made that we had troops in a very large number of countries.

Senator Austin appeared to appreciate the importance of each of the points which I made.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by Mr. John M. Hancock of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission

[NEW YORK,] November 21, 1946.

I want to marshal all the arguments relating to the suggestion that we stop making bombs.

This argument takes these obvious forms with all sorts of permutations of them.

1. Truman should have offered to stop making bombs at the time of the Moscow Declaration.

2. The United States should now offer to stop making bombs.

3. When the advocates of #2 realize the futility of that argument, then they propose that the United States should stop making fissionable materials.

4. Beyond this, the first step in the appeasement process is to dispose of the present fissionable material.

5. The next step in the appeasement process is to offer the world the right to inspect to be sure that we are keeping our word.

6. The United States should turn over its atomic energy plants to an international trusteeship.

The various forms in which this argument appears make it very difficult to grab hold of the whole concept.

There seem to be two general ideas rolling around in the back of the minds of those who approach our difficulties by urging any one of the six suggestions above. One argument takes the form of urging that it would create a better attitude on the part of the other nations, particularly Russia, and that this better attitude would be of some tangible benefit in the negotiations. The difficulty I find is that at best the idea is only a gesture, which would be utterly ineffective unless it went the whole way, and if it should go the whole way it would be very dangerous because it would be the first step in the start of a general policy of appeasement, and the making of the first step would only lead to further demands.

The second argument in the minds of the advocates seems to be that it would be desirable to equalize the bargaining position of the nations. I don't see any benefit in equalizing the bargaining positions if we expect thereby to get an effective treaty. The equalizing of the bargaining positions would be a fair guarantee there would be no effective treaty. If we start out with the theme that we are going to equalize the bargaining position, the first question is whether we mean to equalize it in (a) the atomic energy field, or (b) in the general disarmament field. If we talk of equalizing it in the atomic energy field, I don't see any limit to which the demand would go. Certainly we couldn't equalize it unless we gave up all the information, destroyed all our plants, killed the scientists, destroyed the know-how of production and the plants in which such know-how could be applied. It obviously would do no good for us to destroy all these things and leave the rest of the world free to go as far as it could in arriving at our present position.

As to the proposition that we stop making bombs, the advocates of that idea forget that we would have to stop making fissionable material, or the promise to stop making bombs would have no meaning. The production of fissionable material would put us in a position to make a bomb in a very short time. This fact shows the unsubstantial nature of the gesture to stop making bombs. If we go the whole way of stopping the production of fissionable material, we would interfere seriously with the research work and with the entire peaceful industrial program.

No one would assert that any one of these forms would not be a friendly gesture. The only answer is that the making of the gesture would be utterly ineffective.

So far as I am aware, no nation has asked us to do this, and quite surely no delegate has made the suggestion, but Dr. Auger did make the suggestion last July.

Some small nations have expressed opposition to the idea and have urged us not to accept the suggestion. It seems logical that some small nations would feel safer with a bomb in our possession in the present condition of troublesome world affairs.

The suggestion has been made that we stop making the bombs for a specified time, disregarding for the moment the lack of clarity as to what we should stop making, and whether the request was limited to bomb manufacture alone or not. It would seem clear that any such offer would have to be conditioned in either of two ways: (a) for a specified time, or (b) under certain conditions. As to the first suggestion regarding the time limit, it seems obvious that at the expiration of the time there would be a heavy responsibility on this country if it were to decide to resume manufacture. It would be quite a terrifying notice to the rest of the world that an arms race really was starting and that war was imminent. The resumption of manufacturing would add to the terrors of the world in a very marked degree. Our stopping of the making of bombs would be regarded as an act in aiding the peace. Quite obviously, the resumption of manufacturing would be regarded as a threat to the peace.

As to the alternate suggestion it would be difficult to outline the conditions under which we would no longer be bound to stop production at this time, but if they were outlined, quite obviously we would face the alternative of having the decision as to compliance with the conditions rest with ourselves alone or with some other body. If we left it to our sole discretion, we would have the problem to meet that we met in the Wallace argument regarding the matter of stages. No one in that case, however, proposed that this matter should be handled at our sole discretion, but, still, we were accused of having that view. As to the bodies to decide whether conditions were met, I don't want now to advocate any such decision except as a part of a treaty.

The argument seems to me to boil down to about this—that the advocates of these various ideas want us to do now what we are proposing to do under our plan in the treaty by well-defined stages, with some organization set up in the treaty to decide that the stages have been obtained. I don't know at this time what that body should be, and, yet, I am sure that if we pursue the arguments for appeasement, we will be in that position very promptly.

Underlying this whole argument is a lot of confusion of mind about the duty and responsibility of this Government. It seems to me clear that this Government has a responsibility to its own people to protect them as a nation. Under our plan we are proposing that we surrender this responsibility in the field of atomic energy provided that no other nation is in a position to achieve what we are giving up.

People seem to forget that the atomic bomb is only one weapon involved in the disarmament program. If other nations could get us to give up the bomb unconditionally or by the mere exchange of promises, my guess is that disarmament in the broad pattern would be doomed.

Take the specific case of Russia and her views of the atomic bomb and the treaty to deal with it. It seems clear to me that if Russia will not agree to inspection in that field where she gives up no weapon, she certainly will not agree to an effective disarmament in other fields where she will have to give up weapons. What she is after now is unilateral disarmament in the field where she has nothing to surrender. All we ask is that she surrender the chance to make bombs at some future date without our knowing that she has started to make bombs. Until the time arrives when Russia is able to make bombs, she gives up not even the opportunity to use them. Our own theme is that we will not lessen the security of any nation by any plan to which we will agree in connection with the atomic bomb.

One great difficulty with the suggestions is that they overlap each other, and whatever might be done in this matter would not create a uniform frame of mind on the part of those considering our action or attempting to interpret it. Any move by us should be calculated to have one certain logical effect, but that seems impossible in this particular case.

The Russian position regarding the surrender of sovereignty in the field of atomic energy seems to show a strange concern for their sovereignty with very little regard either for our sovereignty or for the sovereignty of the rest of the world, and still less regard for our national security.

On the one hand Russia has rejected the United States Proposals because it is an undue interference with national sovereignty. On the other hand the Russian proposal, made by Gromyko during the opening sessions of the Atomic Energy Commission, provided a very material infringement on United States sovereignty. In addition, the proposed Russian treaty would force an infringement on the national sovereignty of all nations who might not ratify the treaty, provided only 51% of the nations did ratify it.

It is very strange that some people think that Mr. Molotov has really scored a victory in referring to disarmament before the General Assembly at this time when the fact is that it was discussed at San Francisco almost two years ago that the Russians are the only ones up to now who have delayed action in this field insofar as the Military Staff Committee is concerned. There isn't anything new in their suggestions. The real fact is that the discussions started so long ago that people have forgotten about these discussions of almost two years ago.

SWNCC Files

*The Joint Chiefs of Staff to the United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee of the United Nations*⁹³

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] November 23, 1946.

SWNCC 219/15, Enclosure "A"

U.S. POSITION WITH RESPECT TO FURNISHING INFORMATION OF ALLIED TROOPS IN COUNTRIES NOT EX-ENEMY

1. Reference is made to your memorandum to the Joint Chiefs of Staff dated 19 November,* concerning the position of the United States with respect to a Soviet proposal for information of Allied troops in territories not ex-enemy. The Joint Chiefs of Staff perceive no objection from the military point of view to the position approved by the Secretary of State as indicated in Annex (E) of the enclosure to your memorandum.⁹⁴

2. The Joint Chiefs of Staff understand that the U.S. Delegation will not in the discussion of troop information raise the question of safeguards in the field of armament regulation as indicated in paragraph A 6 of Annex (E) of your enclosure unless the subject of troop information is considered together with the question of armament regulation. The Joint Chiefs of Staff concur in this plan not to raise this issue except under the circumstances indicated above. In the event, however, that the subject is considered jointly with the question of armament regulation, the Joint Chiefs of Staff concur with the position indicated in paragraph A 6 of Annex (E), and with the amendment suggested by you that there be added the phrase "with appropriate measures of international verification."

3. In general, the Joint Chiefs of Staff consider that the U.S. position regarding the importance of safeguards, including appropriate measures for international inspection (verification), would be more appropriate for consideration with the important issues of international control of atomic energy and armament regulation ⁹³ This memorandum was prepared by the Joint Strategic Survey Committee of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; it was approved by the JCS on November 22 and circulated in the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee for information on December 4. The Joint Strategic Survey Committee report submitting the present document to the Joint Chiefs of Staff indicated that a Department of State representative, Hiss, had been consulted in its preparation and perceived no objection to the guidance it provided.

*Transmitted Enclosure "B". [Footnote in the original.] Enclosure "B" is not printed. In that document the Military Representatives summarized the situation created by the Soviet proposal, indicated that they had consulted with the United States Delegation on the matter, and requested guidance from the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

⁹⁴ Annex E of Enclosure "B", telegram 822, November 18, from New York, is printed on p. 1012.

rather than with the lesser subject problem of providing information regarding the location of troops.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. John R. Burton, Jr.*⁹⁵

[NEW YORK,] November 22, 1946.

Subject: Talk On French Disarmament Proposal at Luncheon Given by Mr. deRose of the French Delegation, Attended by Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Burton.

Had lunch with Mr. deRose of the French Delegation on Thursday, November 21. The general subject of the proposed French disarmament agreement was discussed. It seems certain that the French intend to submit some kind of a disarmament proposal in the near future. They are not certain in their mind yet, however, exactly what form this will take, and it might be that the copy we have is more in the nature of a trial balloon. The conversation developed the fact that the drafting was hurried and had not yet received the entire approval of either the local delegation or the French Foreign Office.

The only feature which was discussed at this particular luncheon with Mr. deRose was the inclusion of the concept of atomic energy control within the framework of any general disarmament proposal, and particular reference was made to any features involving an atomic truce while negotiations proceeded. The French point of view which, incidentally, is not shared by the entire French Delegation, is that some form of atomic truce would have a beneficial effect on negotiations. The length of time of the truce was stated to be six months. That had been chosen since the French were led to believe that it took six months to manufacture an atomic bomb from fissionable material. There was no thought that the United States should cease the manufacture of fissionable material which, of course, had peacetime applications but only cease the manufacture of atomic bombs. It was called to Mr. deRose's attention that the subject of general disarmament which would be discussed during this six months was so vast that it was doubtful whether agreement could be reached within that time on even a majority of the problems involved. He was asked what the reaction would be at the end of the six months period when we announced recommencing of atomic bomb manufacture. He admitted that this would have a disastrous and depressing effect on world opinion and might cause more harm in the long run than if the atomic truce had never been mentioned in the first place. He again stressed at this point that the atomic truce was not favored by all the members of the delegation but evidently there is some substantial pressure behind this idea from undisclosed members. In closing, he was asked his opinion of the French reaction to a statement by this Government that it had ceased the manufacture of atomic weapons. He stated, "The average Frenchman in the street will simply say, 'Oh, the United States has so many of the bombs anyway that they do not need to make any more' ". It was pointed out to him that based on this very frank statement, he could see what an empty gesture any such move on our part would be, and its failure to have any real beneficial effect on international negotiations at this time.

⁹⁵ Staff member, United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission.

JOHN R. BURTON, JR.

IO Files

Minutes of the Twenty-fifth Meeting of the United States Delegation, New York, Hotel Pennsylvania, November 22, 1946, 9 a. m.

SECRET

[Here follow a list of persons (29) present, consideration of another subject, and discussion of the Soviet resolution on reporting by United Nations members of their troops on non-enemy territory.]

Mr. Cohen said that the Secretary's view was that it was advisable to support a merger of the two questions, making it clear that we did not want to delay disclosures of the number of our troops.⁹⁶ That is, the United States should support consideration of the two items together but it should also vote for fairly prompt disclosure of the information requested in a matter of thirty or sixty days or some such time.

Mr. Dulles inquired whether when the Delegation voted on the Bevin resolution, that meant that we would disclose or would not disclose the number of our troops abroad. Senator Connally said that it was simply a question of discussing disarmament in the course of the debate and that some resolutions would certainly be brought in but that there were none before the Committee yet.

Mr. Dulles said that he thought it was all right to support the Bevin resolution if it was made clear that we will make the disclosures of the location of our troops whether the Bevin resolution passed or not. He said that the Soviets were of the opinion that our troops were scattered around the world engaged in some nefarious activities.

⁹⁶ The merger under reference was proposed by British Foreign Secretary Bevin at the 25th Meeting of the First Committee on November 21; in regard to that meeting, see the memorandum of telephone conversation by Hiss, and footnote 89, p. 1031.

This was another kind of Soviet trap. The United Kingdom wanted to be evasive about giving this information. If we went along with them it would make us parties to the evasion. The alternative was to go along with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics against the United Kingdom. If we went along with the Bevin resolution it should be made clear that we would none the less report on the presence of our troops abroad.

Mr. Cohen said that he thought that he had made it clear that the Secretary's position was that we should support considering the two items simultaneously, that is, the resolution on reporting and the discussion of disarmament. It should be made clear that we did not want to delay the prompt disclosure of the troops abroad. Mr. Dulles observed that the reporting might be delayed unless the date for giving the information were set. Mr. Cohen pointed [out] that if the Bevin resolution were passed it amounted to considering the two agenda items, the report on the number of troops and disarmament, as one item. Mr. Fahy pointed out that the discussions might be held together but that the problems could be separated when it came to voting.

Mr. Yost⁹⁷ observed that it was likely that Manuilsky,⁹⁸ the Chairman, would push for a vote on the Soviet resolution and he thought it likely that there might be a wrangle over this question.

Mr. Sandifer said that he thought it was important that the point which Mr. Cohen had made should be perfectly clear; our support of the Bevin motion was with the understanding that it did not affect our position regarding the prompt disclosure of our troops abroad. Mr. Dulles agreed that this was a good idea.

Senator Austin said that he wished to poll the Delegation as where [as to whether?] it supported the Bevin resolution for merger of the two questions, at the same time serving notice we were ready to disclose troops in the home territory and everywhere else.

Senator Connally said the matter should not be made contingent, for that would give our hand away. Senator Austin said that he did not intend to make the matter contingent and he restated the Delegation position to be that this Delegation favored the merger of the resolution relating to information regarding troops and that relating to disarmament to be accompanied by a statement of our willingness to reveal the number of our troops abroad. This position was unanimously approved by the Delegation.

[Here follow additional discussion of the troops question and discussion of other subjects.]

⁹⁷ Charles W. Yost, Adviser, United States Delegation to the General Assembly.

⁹⁸ Dmitri Z. Manuilsky, Minister for Foreign Affairs and Deputy Chairman of the Council of People's Commissars of the Ukraine; Chairman of the Ukrainian Delegation to the General Assembly.

USUN Files

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. John C. Ross, Adviser, United States Delegation to the United Nations General Assembly

[NEW YORK,] November 22, 1946.

SECRETARY BYRNES' VIEWS ON ARMED FORCES MATTER

In the course of a discussion on a number of matters, the Secretary handed Senator Austin the attached, "Possible Redraft of Resolution on Armed Forces".⁹⁹ He expressed the thought that we should not go along with the British on anything that looked like a stall. He said that in a phone talk he had with Ben Cohen during the Delegation Meeting this morning¹ he had expressed this thought and thought we ought to put up something which would make it clear that we were fully prepared to provide this information in 30 or 60 days.

The Secretary said he thought we could get the Bevin idea in in a paragraph in this resolution.

(The Secretary apparently had in mind the first paragraph of the attached redraft.)

The Secretary said that all the British were doing was to try to expose what they considered to be nothing but a Soviet propaganda effort.

Senator Austin mentioned the position of the Turks and Chinese who were reluctant to report on their troops at home. The Secretary said that could be taken care of by eliminating the phrase "at what points" in the Molotov draft. He said that is what gives them concern. It is the pin-pointing which would be involved as a result of this language.

Secretary Byrnes then went on to say that there was another point which affects us with reference apparently to paragraph 3 of the draft resolution circulated at the United States Delegation Meeting this morning. The Secretary said that the language "at what points in their own territories including territories outside their metropolitan areas for whose administration they may be responsible". He said that this was very confusing because this might cause us to report on our troops in Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and other places. He said this would give us the appearance of having thousands and thousands of troops all over the world. He said he thought this difficulty could very well be taken care of by paragraphs 2 and 3 of the attached redraft.

Upon returning to the Pennsylvania Hotel I discussed this redraft ⁹⁹ Not printed, but see resolution contained in telegram 843, November 23, infra.

¹ The minutes of the 25th Meeting of the Delegation, November 22, 9 a. m., are printed supra.

somewhat further with Senator Austin. It was agreed that it would be submitted to the Delegation for discussion at the meeting Saturday morning.² Before having it reproduced for distribution, however, we would have to straighten out the reference to the regulation of armaments in the first paragraph. The Senator felt that this language, particularly the verb "to implement" was too rigid and that the whole reference to disarmament would have to be made more flexible and somewhat more vague.

501.BC/11-2346 : Telegram

Senator Austin to the Acting Secretary of State

SECRET

NEW YORK, November 23, 1946—1 p. m.

URGENT

[Received 1:30 p. m.]

843. Re troop question, delegation decided November 23 on following course:

1. Confirmed decision to support Bevin motion to merge items 4 and 5 and consider them simultaneously;³ (on understanding that this would not involve making issuance of information on troops subject to delays involved in question of disarmament);

2. Will immediately request views of Secretary of State as to whether Senator Connally should in Committee I Monday⁴ make statement that U.S. will by December 1 issue information as of latest practicable date covering:

(a) Total number of US uniformed personnel on active service wherever stationed (including personnel of armed forces and military organizations);

(b) Number of such personnel in active service within US territory;

(c) Number of such personnel on territory of each other country in which such personnel are presently maintained;

3. That over week-end experts be authorized to discuss with experts of other delegations possibility of securing resolution along lines of following US revised draft:

"The General Assembly, in order that the United Nations may have available information relating to armed forces necessary to assist the Security Council in giving effect to article 43 of the Charter, and relating to the general reduction of armaments,

a. Recommends that each member of the United Nations should submit the following information to the Secretary-General and to the Security Council:

² November 23.

³ With respect to the decision under reference, see extract from the Minutes of the 25th Meeting of the United States Delegation, November 22, p. 1039.

⁴ November 25.

1. The total number of its uniformed personnel on active service wherever stationed, including personnel of the armed forces and in military type organizations;

2. The number of such personnel in active service within its own territories;

3. The number of such personnel on the territory of each other country in which such personnel are presently maintained;

b. Recommends that the requested information be descriptive of the situation existing on November 1, 1946 and that such information be supplied to the Secretary-General within thirty days after the adoption of this resolution; and

c. Instructs the SYG after the expiration of thirty days after the adoption of this resolution to publish promptly all information received and to furnish copies to the Security Council and to all members of the United Nations."⁵

USdel agreed informally yesterday to drop limitation contained in draft previously cleared with War and Navy Dept's, that troops only in excess of 100 in each particular country need be reported.

AUSTIN

USUN Files

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. John C. Ross, Adviser, United States Delegation to the United Nations General Assembly

SECRET

[NEW YORK,] November 23, 1946.

Subject: Troops Matter

Participants: Secretary Byrnes Senator Austin
 Senator Connally
 Mr. Ben Cohen
 Mr. Charles Fahy
 Mr. John Ross
 Mr. Robert Shirley

Senator Austin outlined to the Secretary the Delegation discussion at its meeting this morning on the question of reporting on troops.⁶ In particular, Senator Austin raised the question whether the United States should, through Senator Connally, make a statement on Monday⁷ of our intention, as of a given date before the Assembly closes, to publish information on our troops at home and abroad along the lines of the draft resolution discussed in the Delegation this morning and regardless of whether any resolution is passed or whether any other government released similar information.

⁵ This draft resolution had been presented to the Delegation as position paper US/A/C.1/69, November 22.

⁶ Regarding the Delegation's decisions on the subject, see telegram 843, November 23, supra.

⁷ November 25.

After considerable discussion of the various reasons for and against this proposal, the Secretary clearly indicated his strong opposition to such a unilateral declaration on our part and it was agreed, therefore, that no such declaration would be made.

The Secretary's principal reason was that if we were unilaterally to publish information of the character indicated, this would merely provide a target for other people to shoot at without our information being considered in the light of similar information provided by other governments. Rather than being improved our public relations would thereby be very considerably impaired. On the other hand, the Secretary felt that our public relations position would be very strong if our information were published as he felt it should be, together with similar information from the other countries.

There was then considerable discussion of the position which the United States should now take. It was agreed that for the present our political officers would not discuss with representatives of other delegations any specific resolution, but that they would discuss with them the fundamental points in our position, and that Senator Connally would make a statement in Committee 1 on Monday which would state these points with such explanation and amplification as may seem desirable.

These points were enumerated and agreed to as follows:

1. The United States agrees with the views expressed by Mr. Molotov, Mr. Bevin and others that the question of information concerning troops is related to and should be considered in connection with the Article 43 armed force agreements.

2. The United States agrees that information concerning troops is related to and should be considered with the question of a general reduction of armaments. The United States therefore supports Mr. Bevin's suggestion that these two matters should be considered together, provided, however, that, as the Secretary stated, we would support Mr. Bevin's suggestion if it envisaged that meanwhile the information called for would be provided within thirty days after passage of an appropriate resolution by the Assembly, and as further stated by the Secretary, if this were not the case then we could not support the British suggestion.

3. The United States believes that each Member of the United Nations should submit the following information to the Secretary General and to the Security Council:

- (a) The total number of its uniformed personnel on active service wherever stationed, including personnel of the armed forces and in military type organizations;

(b) The number of such personnel in active service within its own territories;

(c) The number of such personnel on the territory of each other country where they are stationed.

4. The United States believes that this information should be descriptive of the situation existing on November 1, 1946, and that it be supplied to the Secretary General within thirty days after the adoption of an appropriate resolution by the Assembly.

5. The United States believes that the Secretary General should publish promptly all information received and should furnish copies of such information to the Security Council and to all Members of the United Nations.

The Secretary stated that if the resolution contemplated failed of passage the United States had a free hand to furnish the information independently and to consider when and if it would do so regardless of the course of the resolution in the Assembly. This would not be said in Senator Connally's statement.

On the question of supporting the British motion to combine consideration of this matter with the disarmament matter, the Secretary very clearly stated if the purpose of the British motion were merely to assure in all good faith that at the proper time the two matters would be considered together then he was for it. If, however, the British proposal meant that there would be any delay in action by the Assembly on the troops matter considered separately, then he would oppose it. In other words, the Secretary felt very strongly that whatever action is taken in Committee 1 and by the Assembly should include a provision calling for the information in question within thirty days after approval of a resolution. The Secretary said he had, in effect, told Mr. Bevin from the very beginning when they first discussed the matter in Paris and he would tell him the same thing over and over again as much as might be necessary and seemed to indicate that he would definitely speak with Bevin about it this afternoon.

SPA Files

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Elwood N. Thompson of the Office of Special Political Affairs

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] November 23, 1946—5 p. m.

After the conversation with Mr. Joseph Johnson and Mr. William Sanders in New York, reported in my memorandum of conversation of 11:30 A. M., same date,⁸ I arranged for Mr. Acheson to receive an advance copy of telegram 843 of November 23 regarding the troop question. This telegram reports the Delegation position as of November 23 and contains also a revised US draft on the subject of troops.

I suggested that the position of US Del stated in telegram 843, and as outlined by Messrs. J. Johnson and Sanders in my earlier conversation with them, linked the troop reporting proposal rather closely to disarmament whereas I had understood the Department's position was to keep these issues separate. I also pointed out the omission of the previously held U.S. view that reports on troops need not cover countries where less than 100 foreign troops are stationed.

Mr. Acheson telephoned the Secretary in New York to discuss these and related issues raised by telegram 843. Mr. Acheson learned that the Secretary had talked directly with Senator Austin, Senator Connally, and other members of the Delegation, and there would be no unilateral disclosure of US troops stationed in other countries as recommended by the Delegation in the telegram of November 23.

The Secretary told Mr. Acheson that Senator Connally might indicate to the Committee on Monday⁹ that the US does favor prompt disclosure of troops and believes that the US or any other country could report within thirty days after a GA resolution on the subject was adopted. The Secretary also indicated that Senator Connally might use the substance of the three points stated in the draft US resolution contained in Telegram 843 of November 23 when stating the US position on Monday.

Mr. Acheson had told the Secretary of his concern that the Delegation was omitting that part of our former position which would preclude the necessity of reporting on troops where less than 100 were stationed. Mr. Acheson pointed out that this might even include posts where there were military attachés and that would mean reporting on troops in nearly every country in the world. Mr. Acheson said the Secretary shared his concern and that the Secretary said he would indicate to Senator Connally that the US should not drop this part of its position.

Mr. Acheson also expressed to the Secretary his concern that the Delegation in its draft resolution was linking the subject of disarmament too closely with the question of reporting on troops. The Secretary had said that there was discussion of a new resolution containing two parts, one concerned with reporting on troops and the other concerned with disarmament, inspection, etc. The Secretary had felt that part 2 would take care of the US desire that the subject of reporting on troops should not be confused with disarmament proposals.

⁸ Not printed.

⁹ November 25.

Mr. Acheson suggested that we should in addition telephone the New York Delegation emphasizing our concern that the question of reporting on troops was being too closely linked to disarmament and also that the Secretary and Mr. Acheson had agreed that we should continue to maintain our point that there was no necessity to report on troops where less than 100 were concerned. With respect to the latter, Mr. Acheson said that he thought such a provision should actually appear in any resolution adopted or, at a minimum, the US should make clear in its public statements in Committee 1 that this was an accepted interpretation of any resolution that may be adopted.

Mr. Acheson also hoped that the Department would receive additional texts of proposed resolutions on the troop and disarmament questions as soon as they were formulated in New York, and suggested further that we obtain from the Delegation their understanding of the agreements reached in their conversation today with the Secretary.

Mr. Hiss subsequently talked with Mr. Ross in New York concerning the above points and again on Sunday to Mr. Acheson. These conversations are reported in separate memoranda.¹⁰

501.BB/11-2446

Memorandum of Telephone Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Special Political Affairs (Hiss)

[WASHINGTON,] November 24, 1946.

Subject: Question of Disclosure of Disposition of Troops

After learning from Mr. E. N. Thompson that Mr. Acheson talked to the Secretary in the afternoon, November 23, on the above subject, I called Mr. Ross in New York and told him of Mr. Acheson's talk with the Secretary.¹¹ I said that I understood that the Secretary would be getting in touch with Senator Connally about this subject and would urge the Senator to be sure that any resolution that was adopted did not require us to report on our naval attachés, military attachés and other smaller missions of less than 100. I said that Mr. Acheson would prefer to have an express statement to this effect in the resolution but I understood that he was more interested in substance than in the form by which our objective would be accomplished. Mr. Ross said he felt confident that the result would be accomplished. He pointed out that neither the British nor the Soviets would presumably want to have to report on their naval and military attaché missions. He added that if, however, despite a statement of our understanding of the resolution, a majority of the delegations were to ask for a report on naval and military missions, we would not be able to accomplish our objective. (I talked Sunday morning, November 24, with Colonel Bonesteel who said that G-2¹² had no objections in principle to reporting on our attachés in small missions; they merely felt that such a report was silly and not really in keeping with the objectives of the proposed resolution.)

¹⁰ See memorandum of conversation by Mr. Hiss, November 24, infra.

¹¹ For an account of the Byrnes-Acheson conversation under reference, see Mr. Thompson's memorandum of November 23, supra.

I also said that Mr. Acheson was particularly anxious to avoid any confusion over the issue of safeguards and inspection with respect to disarmament. He had understood from the Secretary that the Delegation would be drafting a resolution on the troop question which would have some references to disarmament. The Secretary felt confident on the basis of his discussions with the Delegation that the references to disarmament would fully protect our position with respect to safeguards. Mr. Acheson would like to see a copy of the resolution before it is introduced. Mr. Ross told me that it seemed very unlikely that the Delegation would introduce a resolution in the near future and that no drafting of a resolution would at present be undertaken.

In connection with Mr. Acheson's desire to avoid confusion as to the disarmament question, I said it was my understanding that the Secretary in talking to the Delegation had said that we should take the position that information as to troops should in any event be made available within thirty days after the adoption of a resolution calling for such information by the General Assembly. In other words we should make it plain that any reference to the connection between the troop question and disarmament is not to result in delaying the publication. Mr. Ross said that the Delegation understood this clearly.

I said I understood that the Secretary had quite emphatically stated that there should be no unilateral disclosure by us of our troop dispositions. Mr. Ross said that this was clearly understood by the Delegation.

On Sunday afternoon, November 24, Mr. Ross called me and read a copy of a draft resolution which had just been received from the British Delegation and which the British would introduce on Monday, November 25, if opportunity afforded. (See New York's telegram 849, November 24,¹³ which sets forth this resolution.) Mr. Ross said that ¹² War Department General Staff, Intelligence.

¹³ Not printed. For a description of the British draft resolution, see US/A/C.1/72 (Rev. a), the text actually submitted in the First Committee, and footnote 17 thereto, p. 1050.

the Delegation would consider the British draft resolution at its meeting on Monday, November 25 at 9:00 a. m.¹⁴

I then called Mr. Acheson and read the text of the British draft resolution to him. On the basis of his comments I subsequently told Mr. Ross that Mr. Acheson thought the Delegation should make a strenuous attempt to persuade the British not to confuse disarmament and the troop question. He thought we should point out to the British that this would tend to confuse the whole question of disarmament and particularly the question of safeguards. He thought that the phrase in the second paragraph of the British draft resolution "as a first step in a study of this question", i. e., regulation of armaments, was objectionable as tending to give impetus to a drive for consideration of technical details of a disarmament program rather than clearing up at the outset the vital question of safeguards. Mr. Acheson also felt that the final clause of the British draft resolution, namely, that the troop information "should be immediately subjected, on the spot, to an effective United Nations system of verification", was most unfortunate. Mr. Acheson said that this latter provision seemed to him really inconsistent with the Secretary's decision that we should oppose any delay in making the figures as to troop dispositions promptly available after adoption of the resolution. He thought that the British argument that the verification provision would permit prompt publication of figures was disingenuous as obviously there would be prolonged discussion in the committee of the verification provision. Its effect would really be to delay and sidetrack the troop census proposal. In addition, Mr. Acheson thought that it was impractical and most unwise as tending to jeopardize the much more important question of safeguards for disarmament. He thought that if we could not persuade the British to eliminate this provision we should tell them that we would support its elimination on the foregoing grounds.

Mr. Acheson agreed that in view of the fact that the British themselves were now suggesting specification of the particular points where troops are located we could not oppose such a provision. He thought we might still interpret such provision as calling for a listing of the points where troops are located but with simply an over-all figure as to our troops within any particular country. He also felt that we could not as a practical matter argue against specification of air and naval bases and their garrisons.

¹⁴ For a summary of the decisions taken by the Delegation at its meeting on the morning of November 25, see telegram 851, November 25, from New York, infra.

501.BB/11-2546: Telegram

Senator Austin to the Acting Secretary of State

SECRET

NEW YORK, November 25, 1946—11:20 a. m.

URGENT

[Received 11:39 a. m.]

851. Re armed forces USdel decided this morning:¹⁵ 1. To make early statement along lines determined on November 23 (now embodied in US/A/C.1/69, Rev. A),¹⁶ except that we would not give out information on our armed forces unilaterally;

2. To seek to secure agreement among the several draft resolutions in a subcommittee (of Committee I);

3. If situation permits, to present provisions for reporting forces at home and paragraphs b and c of US/A/C.1/69, Rev. A, as amendments rather than as separate resolution;

4. To oppose provisions for verification of reports and to authorize political officers to inform British to this effect.

AUSTIN

IO Files: US/A/C.1/72 (Rev. a)

United States Delegation Document

[NEW YORK,] November 25, 1946.

UNITED KINGDOM RESOLUTION ON ARMED FORCES¹⁷

The Committee considers that items 4 and 5 on the Agenda are concerned with two aspects of the same question, the reduction and regulation of armaments.

As a first step in a study of this question, and to assist in the imple-¹⁵ 28th Meeting of the United States Delegation, 9 a. m.

¹⁶ United States Delegation position paper US/A/C.1/69, November 22, a draft resolution approved by the Delegation on November 23, is printed in telegram 843, November 23, from New York, p. 1042. US/A/C.1/69 (rev.a) differed from the original draft only in matters of minor wording and in its sub-paragraph A.3 which read as follows: "The number of such personnel on the territory of each other country in which they are stationed." (IO Files)

¹⁷ The present document is identical with the draft submitted by the United Kingdom Delegation at the 27th Meeting of the First Committee, November 25, 11 a. m.; for the Record of that Meeting, see GA(I/2), First Committee, pp. 143-151. The tentative draft of the present document transmitted by the British Delegation to the United States Delegation on November 24, not printed, differed from the present document in the following respects: it made no reference to Article 43; it made no provision for reporting on "military type formations;" and it did not specify that the system of verification would be one established by the Security Council prior to January 1, 1947. In the Minutes of the United States Delegation Meeting of 9 a. m., November 25, Sanders is reported as saying that the present document had been drafted "as a result of conversations with the British over the week-end." (IO Files)

At the 27th Meeting, Senator Connally expressed agreement with the British proposal to broaden the request for information to include all uniformed personnel in active service with military type organizations at home and abroad. He mentation of Article 43, the Committee propose that the Assembly recommend that all members of the United Nations furnish the following information to the Secretary-General for communication to the Security Council and to other members of the United Nations and for publication.

1. At what points in the territory of members of the United Nations, or other States, with the exception of former enemy territories, and in what number, are armed forces of other members of the United Nations, including military type formations?

2. At what points in the former enemy States and in what number, are armed forces of the Allied Powers and other members of the United Nations, including military type formations?

3. At what points in the above-mentioned territories are air and naval bases, and what is the size of their garrisons, belonging to the armed forces of States of members of the United Nations?

4. What is the total number of their uniformed personnel on the active list, wherever stationed, at home as well as abroad, including military type formations?

This information, which should be furnished not later than January 1st 1947, should relate to the situation on that date, and should be immediately subjected to an effective United Nations system of verification on the spot by a Committee to be established by the Security Council before that date.

IO Files : US/A/C.1/79

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. G. Hayden Raynor, Adviser, United States Delegation to the United Nations General Assembly

SECRET

[NEW YORK,] November 25, 1946.

This morning before the opening of Committee 1 Mr. Escott Reid¹⁸ handed to me a revised copy of the Canadian proposal on disarmament. He inquired firstly if I had any comments on the earlier draft of this proposal which he had given to me a week ago.¹⁹ I told him that it was under study in my Delegation and in the State Department but to date I had received no comments on it. He then stated that the also stated that in the long run there must be verification of the reports on troops to make disarmament effective. The record of Senator Connally's remarks includes the following: "His delegation emphatically rejected any implication in this discussion that the information was needed to quiet uneasiness over the presence of United States forces abroad. In this connexion he expressed appreciation for the statements made by the representatives of (China), Panama, Brazil, and Ecuador, which had absolved the United States from any inference that their troops were in those States for any improper purposes."

¹⁸ First Secretary, Canadian Embassy; Adviser, Canadian Delegation to the General Assembly.

¹⁹ For text of the Canadian proposal introduced in the First Committee at its 30th Meeting, November 28, see GA (I/2), First Committee, p. 335. This proposal was a revision of the Soviet draft. The United States Delegation had transmitted a very similar version of the Canadian proposal to the Department of State in telegram 844, November 23, not printed (501.BB/11-2346).

Canadian Delegation was under pressure from Ottawa to submit this proposal at once but before doing so they want to know if that action would embarrass us in any way or if there was any reason we would prefer they not take this action.

After talking to Mr. John Ross on the telephone, I informed Mr. Reid later in the day that while we did not wish to make any request of the Canadians to defer this action we would appreciate their considering in this connection the points which I would make to him. I then explained that at very high levels in our Government a comprehensive plan on disarmament was being developed for presentation to this Assembly and that we expected our proposal would be a very important one. I explained that while I could not yet disclose its contents as it was not completed I could say that while parts of the Canadian proposal were along the same line as ours there were several points in the Canadian proposal which were at considerable variance from what our plan would probably propose. I said that we had expected all along, and still desired, to consult with the Canadians on our plan and that we hoped that we would be prepared for such consultation toward the latter part of this week.

Mr. Reid agreed to bring the points which I had made to the attention of Mr. St. Laurent.²⁰ He later told me that he had done so and Mr. St. Laurent was referring the matter back to Ottawa and that there certainly would not be any action on their part for another twenty-four hours. Mr. Reid added, however, that he did hope the consultation would be a consultation and that we would not wait until our plan was so definitely frozen that there would be no opportunity for it to be revised and that the consultation would not be a consultation but the giving of information to them.

Mr. Reid, at the reception tonight, told me that he had been talking to the Australians on this matter as they also have a resolution which they plan to submit immediately. He asked if I would say something to the Australians along the same line as I had said to him as he then thought they might be able to work out an agreement between themselves so that each would postpone submitting its proposal.²¹

²⁰ Louis S. St. Laurent, Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs; Head of the Canadian Delegation to the General Assembly.

²¹ In a memorandum also dated November 25, Raynor stated the following: "Following Mr. Escott Reid's request, referred to in a separate memorandum of this date, I spoke to Mr. Paul Hasluck at the reception this evening on the matter of disarmament. I repeated to him almost exactly what I had said to Mr. Reid relative to the development of our comprehensive proposal which we feel to be very important. I also said that we wished and planned to consult with the Australians on this matter. As a result of this conversation, Mr. Hasluck said he would telegraph Canberra in an effort to get permission to defer the submission of the Australian proposals until consultation with us could take place. Apparently, Mr. Hasluck, as have the Canadians, has been under pressure from home to submit their proposals to the Assembly promptly." (USUN Files)

For text of the Australian proposal introduced at the 30th Meeting of the First Committee, November 28, also a revision of the Soviet draft, see GA (I/2), First Committee, p. 337.

USUN Files

Memorandum of Conversation, by Senator Austin

TOP SECRET

[NEW YORK,] November 26, 1946.

I called on Secretary Byrnes by appointment at ten o'clock this morning and told him my purpose was to discuss, if he chose to do so, the draft relating to regulation of armaments and disarmament which we left with him last Thursday.²² He replied that he had not been able to study that, that he had been so tied up by his duties in reference to the treaties that he had been obliged to postpone the consideration of it. Thereupon, I told him that I felt time was of importance in this matter and that we are getting pressures from many sides to make our position clear. He said that he had not noticed pressures from other delegations, and I referred to papers that had been circulated showing that the Australians intended to make a proposition unless we did and wanted to know whether we were going to make one, and that the French likewise had indicated a similar position.

He then turned to the subject of troops and stated, in effect, that he had already told Mr. Bevin that the Delegation yesterday voted to oppose that part of the British proposal relating to troop disclosures which called for verification and that Mr. Bevin was coming to see him and might be there before I left, and that he intended to state our firm position on that matter in opposition to verification.

By way of bringing up to date the situation respecting regulation of armaments and disarmament I handed him the worksheet which I had made dealing with the possible speech to be made by me on this subject,²³ and I said that I was particularly anxious to call his attention to the last three pages containing a reference to his statement publicly; then I read those three pages and asked him if I had correctly set forth the position he took and he said no, that he had never said he would have a proposal to make, that he did not make that statement at the Foreign Press Association Meeting, but that the substance of his remarks were a reply to Mr. Molotov's speech made that night,²⁴ that we would have a further statement which, "I intend making". He remarked that this is a government matter. "First," he said, "we will get to the atomic thing and have a showdown on that."

This is not a complete statement but is my recollection of features of his statement which is to the effect that during the past six months

²² Reference is to a draft, presumably the 3rd draft dated November 21 (Thursday), of a disarmament proposal prepared in Senator Austin's office; for text of the 4th draft, November 26, see p. 1061.

²³ Not found in Department of State files.

²⁴ Both Byrnes and Molotov addressed the Foreign Press Association in New York on the evening of November 11.

he had been so engaged that he could not consider this subject. "Whether we are ready now to sponsor a proposal," he said, "has not been decided. When the plenary session is held on December 6 I am going to discuss the atomic resolution, the troop business and our position on disarmament. This is a matter of highest policy and must be studied by the President and the Joint Chiefs. I will turn it over to the President to be submitted to the Joint Chiefs and give you a prompt answer."

Then I said that this, in effect, answered some questions that I had not yet asked but intended to ask, namely, to what extent I should go in getting views, and that I had in mind asking him whether it was wise to get the views of Mr. Acheson and the War and Navy Departments, say on tomorrow when they meet. He replied no, that this is not in the scope of their meeting, that they meet on other subjects and not on a high policy like this, that this could only be handled by the President and the Joint Chiefs. Then I said I had wanted to ask him about taking the matter up with Senators Connally and Vandenberg and perhaps other members of our Delegation but that I had not yet turned over to them any copy of this draft and what he said warned me, put me on notice. He said, "You are right. This ought not to go to them now." I said, "Perhaps I have stubbed my toe in one respect. I have turned it over to Mr. Baruch." He said, "Well, if you want to avoid the press getting access to this you couldn't have done worse than turn it over to Mr. Baruch. He has with him Mr. Swope who has access to the papers and there is danger of its going out through him." He said, "I will get in touch with Mr. Baruch promptly and caution him that this draft must be kept secret until after he hears from me further."

"Now," he said, "I will take the draft you handed to me the other day and get copies made. I will send them to the President with a view to having him submit it to the Joint Chiefs." I said, "We have done a little work on that draft since then and I think it would be wiser to let me give you the latest draft for that use," and he said, "Do that; get it ready and send it right up here."²⁵

So the matter stands like this. At the next plenary session he will make an address covering this subject as well as the other two. The question whether a definite proposal shall be made by us has not yet been decided but will be decided promptly and we will be informed. In the meantime the draft is to be kept secret except as above stated.

²⁵ The following notation by Austin appears on the bottom of the last page of the source text: "Nov. 29—Sec. phoned he had sent to the Pres. two copies (one for Gen'l Eisenhower). Pres. expressed objection to hurrying."

IO Files

Minutes of the Twenty-ninth Meeting of the United States Delegation, New York, Hotel Pennsylvania, November 26, 1946, 9 a. m.

SECRET

[Here follows a list of persons (28) present.]

Resolution on Armed Forces

Mr. Sanders, at the request of Senator Connally, introduced the subject of the Resolution on Armed Forces. He reported that the United Kingdom on November 25 had submitted its resolution on the subject (US/A/C.1/72 (Rev. a)).²⁶ The question now before the Delegation he said was whether the United States should go along with the verification provision, which was set forth in the British resolution as follows:

“This information which should be furnished not later than January 1, 1947, should relate to the situation on that date, and should be immediately subjected to an effective United Nations system of verification on the spot by a Committee to be established by the Security Council before that date.”

Mr. Sanders continued that other than this paragraph the British resolution was acceptable to the United States.

Senator Connally pointed out the principle [principal] difference was that the United Kingdom provided for inspection in its resolution. He reported that on the previous day in Committee 1 he did not make a stand on the question, for the Secretary had said that he did not want to support the verification procedure. At the same time, Senator Connally said that he was hesitant, following the speech of Noel-Baker,²⁷ to come out strongly against the British. He said he did not want to throw a wet blanket at that point. Therefore, the Delegation was now still in a position to talk about the verification procedure from either point of view.²⁸

Upon being asked by Senator Connally, Mr. Cohen replied that he had not had an opportunity to discuss the question with the Secretary since the previous day.

Mr. Sanders said that it might be possible to have both the Russian and United Kingdom proposals referred to a subcommittee. Senator Connally said he was not sure that such a move would be successful. Mr. Sanders pointed out that the essential question was what the Delegation wished to do on the inspection provisions.

²⁶ Ante, p. 1050.

²⁷ Philip Noel-Baker, British Representative at the General Assembly.

²⁸ Regarding Senator Connally's remarks at the 27th Meeting of the First Committee, November 25, see footnote 17, p. 1050.

Senator Connally recalled that at its previous meeting the Delegation²⁹ had taken a position against the inspection provision because of the Secretary's views. Senator Connally said that he was going to oppose the verification proposal although his own feeling was that the verification was necessary in the long run at least. He recalled that it had been asked in the proposals on atomic energy. However, he realized the difficulties in establishing a verification procedure on short notice.

Mrs. Roosevelt³⁰ said that if the inspection were established by the Atomic Energy Commission then a similar or the same procedure could be used for inspecting for all kinds of armaments. However, she thought that the last sentence of the British proposal was very difficult when it said that the information should be verified on the spot by a Committee established by the Security Council. She said that she thought the proposal would have some sense if it were to say that when a system of inspection was established for general disarmament then there should be verification of the reports.

Mr. McClintock^{30a} reported that Cadogan had told him on a previous day that the United Kingdom was willing to publish where their troops were located first and then have a check made later. He added that this was told him in a private conversation. Senator Connally observed that of course the information could not be verified until it was published. He said that he agreed with Mrs. Roosevelt that any comprehensive arms plan must have an inspection system. Mrs. Roosevelt added that she thought it would be top-heavy if there were separate inspection systems for each type of armaments.

Mr. Sandifer reported that following the meeting of November 25, Mr. Ross had called the Department. It was Mr. Acheson's view that it was politically impractical, and would be considered as a delaying move, to support the verification procedure. Mr. Acheson was most anxious that the reporting provisions should be put through soon.

Mr. Dulles said that he did not see why we should vote against the verification procedure. It was a fundamental principle that the United States has voted for previously. He did not want to delay the reporting but asked why we should not request the various nations whether they would be willing to permit verification on the basis of reciprocity. If they were willing to do so, then the Security Council should be asked to set up machinery.

²⁹ The reference is to the 28th Meeting of the Delegation, November 25; in regard to the decisions taken at that meeting, see telegram 851, November 25, from New York, p. 1050.

³⁰ Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, widow of the late President Roosevelt; United States Representative at the General Assembly.

^{30a} Robert M. McClintock, Adviser, United States Delegation to the General Assembly.

Mr. Cohen said that he agreed that we should not oppose verification as a principle, but he thought we should be slow to allow verification to be brought into this resolution in the vague and all inclusive way in which it was proposed. He thought it was likely to endanger the effective safeguards which might be established later. If it were proposed that outside inspectors would be able to pry everywhere before there was an effective system of disarmament established, the effect would be to discredit all verification procedures. He thought it would be impossible in advance to define an effective verification method. He believed it was right to make clear that effective safeguards were the essence of disarmament. It should be pointed out that the United States did not think that the form of verification proposed for this purpose had been sufficiently worked out to warrant United States support for it.

[Here follows additional discussion of the troops question and of other subjects.]

Mr. Dawson observed that he would not like to have to go to the Latin American states and tell them that the United States was going to vote against inspection. He said he had the distinct impression that the speech of Noel-Baker had greatly impressed the Latin American delegates on the previous day. He thought that if the matter came to a vote and the United States had to inform the Latin American states that we were going to vote against the verification procedure, we would be in a most difficult position.

Mr. Sandifer reported that he understood that Mr. Acheson was also concerned lest hasty action of this kind might work to the detriment of the atomic energy inspection proposals.

Mr. Stevenson said that he wanted to concur in the opinion which Mr. Sandifer had just reported. He said it seemed to him that it was quite possible that the inspection proposal would be interpreted as a disingenuous manner of sabotaging the entire reporting procedure. Mrs. Douglas said that she agreed strongly. She believed that one of the reasons that the United Kingdom made the proposal was to delay and she thought that if we went along with this we would be falling into the trap.

Mr. Dawson explained that he did not mean that the British verification scheme should be supported, but he thought it would be embarrassing if it were necessary to oppose it flatly.

Mr. Dulles said that he had not heard anyone present advocate supporting the British proposal for verification, there being general agreement that it was playing right into the Russian hands. He said that the only question he was going to raise was whether we were going to reject the principle of verification, even admitting that it could not be put into effect now. He maintained that the Soviet proposal had been intended to show a militaristic picture of the world. He pointed out that under this each country could draw its own military picture and there was no way of checking the reality. This followed the general Soviet propaganda line which painted the picture of the Soviet Union which it desired and which it was not possible to check. Pictures of other military establishments might also not always be accurate. It was his opinion that verification as proposed under the U.K. statement should not be approved but he thought it was entirely different to vote against the principle.

Mrs. Roosevelt inquired whether it could be argued that the principle of verification must apply to the whole disarmament question. Perhaps some temporary method of verification could be applied to this situation that would not be as satisfactory as might be devised when the whole picture developed. She thought that it might be pointed out by Senator Connally that the United States was not going to vote for this specific proposal but wanted it clearly understood that it agreed that eventually there must be verification procedures and methods set up to enable us to see the whole picture of disarmament. At present, we did not want to delay the information which should be given. Future arrangements for verification will change with altered circumstances.

Senator Vandenberg said that the last paragraph was out of harmony with the rest of the British proposal. The first paragraphs of the British proposal were a set of preliminary premises on which to base later study. To move from the general statement to the very specific one in the last paragraph, which in itself was not remotely adequate to defend the principle of inspection, would result in defeating that principle by its very inadequacy. He felt there should be a change in approach to indicate that this preliminary information was a specific instance and to establish any system for immediate verification was incompatible with what had been set forth in the preceding paragraphs.

Senator Connally said that on the previous day in Committee I the delegation had not been committed as to how we would vote. He reported that he had gone on to say that any disarmament proposal must have a verification procedure as an essential. He had recalled that that had been insisted on in the Atomic Energy Commission proposals. He noted that the British were greatly irritated at the Russians over this question, Mr. Molotov had as well as said that the purpose of the Russian resolution was to get foreign armies out of the overseas territories where they were stationed. Since the British felt that this was essentially a political question, it was no doubt part of their motive to introduce a paragraph which the Russians did not want.

Senator Connally continued that he was not anxious to leave the British open to the assaults of their enemies by announcing right after Noel-Baker's statement that the United States would vote against the United Kingdom proposal. He pointed out that it would be possible to vote on the resolution piece-meal and to avoid voting on the last paragraph or try to substitute a paragraph for it.

Senator Vandenberg pointed out that the United Kingdom paper described the information procedure "as a first step in the study of this question". He thought that was the point of view which should be maintained. It should not be attempted to make of this motion more than an exchange of information. To go further would need many other provisions which were not included in the United Kingdom resolution.

Senator Connally pointed out that part of the point of the United Kingdom proposal would be met if there were included in the resolution a report on the number of troops at home.

Mr. Dulles pointed out that the original Russian resolution did not make a connection with disarmament, it did not speak of any first step towards disarmament, it merely asked for the disclosure of information on the location of troops abroad. The connection would be established only if the United Kingdom resolution were passed.

Mr. Sandifer said that he thought that Senator Vandenberg had put his finger on the heart of the question. He inquired whether it was realistic to expect acceptance of an indefinite, ill-defined system. He was sure that other nations would not accept such a proposal.

Mr. Dulles pointed out that the delegation was unanimous in opposing the last paragraph of the British resolution. What he wanted to know was what was going to be said regarding the principle of verification.

Senator Connally left the meeting at this point to talk with the Secretary. Senator Vandenberg took the chair.

Senator Vandenberg remarked that he thought that this question should be referred to the Secretary who had the power to act on this matter.

Mr. Wadsworth reported that the British Political Officer for the Near East had on the previous day given him to understand that the British were bringing pressure to bear on the Arabs to vote for the resolution as it stood. With respect to the last paragraph of the British resolution, the British official had said that they wanted to go along with the United States realizing the difficulty the U.S. faced. He suggested that a great deal could be accomplished if only the United States would make some suggestion regarding the common ground. Mr. Wadsworth continued that he thought Mr. Dulles and Mrs. Roosevelt had found that common ground, that was to make the resolution more general to approve the principle of verification and to assign the means and time for making such verification to the Security Council.

Mr. Fahy suggested that the difficulty might be resolved by the adoption of an amendment along the following lines "the information with respect to the numbers and location of armed forces shall be subject to such method of verification or inspection as may be adopted in connection with reduction of armaments or otherwise."

Mr. Stevenson observed that he thought that linking the question in this way was going to get us into a long discussion. He said it seemed to him that Senator Connally should say repeatedly that the United States insists on the principle of verification. However, this was a one-shot job to get the figures on the location of troops and close the matter there. He was sure that if verification were insisted upon there would be no action taken. He pointed out that this was not a continuing matter of verification or reporting on a month-to-month basis. Such reports would be provided under general disarmament machinery.

Senator Vandenberg observed this was essentially a questionnaire. He continued that it was fantastic to think that the verification could be handled by the procedure set up under the last paragraph of the British draft. However, he thought that the discussion could be most profitably resumed on the following day.³¹

501.BB/11-2846

*Memorandum by the Director of the Office of Special Political Affairs
(Hiss) to the Under Secretary of State (Acheson)*

[WASHINGTON,] November 26, 1946.

Mr. Ross informed me today by telephone that this morning the Secretary spoke both to Senator Connally and to Mr. Bevin to the effect that he is strongly opposed to any resolution on the disposition of troops containing an inspection provision. This apparently settles our position on this point clearly. (It will be recalled that Senator

³¹ The record of decisions of this meeting indicates that the following decisions were taken:

"1. Resolution on Armed Forces

The decision of the Secretary of State was reported that the United States should not agree to the British proposal for verification in connection with the furnishing of information on armed forces. The Delegation decision of the previous day, November 25, on this question was then reaffirmed.

It was agreed that the Delegation should move at the appropriate time for the substitution of paragraph B of the draft US resolution (US/A/C.1/69 Rev. a) for the final paragraph of the British resolution, with a change of the date November 1 to December 15."

For text of US/A/C.1/72 (Rev. a), see p. 1050.

Connally in his statement of yesterday on this subject did not make clear our opposition to such provision being in the resolution relating to troops. His emphasis, instead, was upon the importance we attach to safeguards, including inspection, in regard to disarmament.) Mr. Ross said that both the Chinese and French Delegations are also opposed to inspection in connection with reporting on troop dispositions.

Molotov today stated in Committee I that the U.S.S.R. is prepared to report on troops at home only in connection with the consideration of disarmament. He said that if such troops are to be reported upon then their armament, mentioning in particular jet-propelled planes and atomic bombs, should also be reported. He also indicated that the Soviets will be prepared to discuss the question of inspection in connection with disarmament. At that time, he said, they will have specific proposals to make with respect to inspection.³²

USUN Files

*Draft Resolution on Disarmament Prepared by the Staff of the United States Delegation to the United Nations General Assembly*³³

TOP SECRET
4th Draft

[NEW YORK,] November 26, 1946.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY:

With a view to strengthening peace and international security in conformity with the aims and principles of the United Nations* (Preamble, Chapter I of the Charter) ;

³² The reference is to Molotov's statement at the 28th Meeting of the 1st Committee, November 26, 11 a. m. ; for the record of that meeting, see GA (I/2), First Committee, pp. 151-158. In the course of the meeting, Senator Connally offered an amendment to the United Kingdom resolution (p. 1050) which eliminated the provision for the verification of information. Molotov then submitted an additional Soviet proposal which was subsequently resubmitted in connection with disarmament; it read as follows: "The General Assembly deems it necessary that all States Members of the United Nations should submit information regarding armed forces and armaments in their own territory, this information to be submitted when the Security Council will consider the proposals for general reduction of armaments."

³³ The first draft of this resolution, November 17, and subsequent drafts, are similar in configuration to the present paper, emphasizing the advisability of creating a United Nations Permanent Disarmament Commission. The third draft, November 21, was transmitted for comment to Ferdinand Eberstadt of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission on November 25, Eberstadt's reply of November 29 suggested certain changes in the language of the portions of the resolution directly related to the international control of atomic energy. It did not comment on the advisability of actually presenting the resolution to the General Assembly. (USUN Files)

The source text of the present document bears a marginal notation indicating that the original copy of the 4th draft was transmitted to Secretary Byrnes on November 26 to be forwarded by him to the President and thence to the Joint Chiefs of Staff for comment.

*This language is quoted from the text of the Soviet Resolution. [Footnote in the source text.]

With a view to determining the principles governing disarmament and the regulation of armaments, and recognizing its responsibility for making recommendations with regard to such principles to the Members of the United Nations or to the Security Council or both (Article 11, paragraph 1) ;

In order to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources, and recognizing the responsibility of the Security Council for formulating with the advice and assistance of the Military Staff Committee plans to be submitted to the Members of the United Nations for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments (Article 26) ;

Recognizing the necessity of a general reduction of armaments,† thereby progressively removing the means of conducting aggressive warfare ;

Recognizing that the provision of peace forces by the special agreements called for by Article 43 of the Charter should be considered in close relationship to the question of the general reduction and regulation of armaments, and that the ultimate objective of disarmament should be the reduction of armaments to the level of these peace forces together with the forces necessary to maintain domestic order and tranquility under law ;

Recognizing that the provision of information concerning the armed forces of Members of the United Nations, whether at home or abroad, should be considered in close relationship to the question of the general reduction and regulation of armaments and disarmament, as well as to the provision of peace forces under Article 43 ;

Recognizing that progress toward the general reduction and regulation of armaments and disarmament depends upon the accomplishment as a first step of the purposes and objectives of the Resolution adopted unanimously by the General Assembly at the first part of its first session at London, January 24, 1946, which established a Commission, known as the Atomic Energy Commission, "to deal with the problems raised by the discovery of atomic energy and other related matters", and which set forth the terms of reference of the Commission ;

CALLS UPON the Atomic Energy Commission to proceed with the utmost dispatch to complete its task of formulating, in the spirit of unanimity contemplated in the Charter, specific proposals for the international control of the production of fissionable materials and of the production and use of atomic energy, including effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means at all stages of production and use to protect complying States against the hazards of violations and evasions, to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes, and to prohibit the production and employment of weapons based on the use of atomic energy for the purpose of mass destruction;††

†This language is quoted from the text of the Soviet Resolution. [Footnote in the source text.]

AFFIRMS the fundamental principle that the general reduction and regulation of armaments and disarmament must be progressive, international and multilateral in character and not unilateral on the part of any Member of the United Nations;

AFFIRMS the fundamental principle that effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying States against the hazards of violation and evasion are essential to the general reduction and regulation of armaments and disarmament;

RESOLVES, under the authority conferred by Article 22 of the Charter, to establish as a subsidiary organ of the General Assembly a Permanent Disarmament Commission, the composition and organization of the Commission, its functions and responsibilities, its relationship to other organs and agencies of the United Nations and its procedures to be as set forth in the following paragraphs:

1. Composition and Organization. The Commission shall be composed of one Representative of each of those States represented on the Security Council, and of four additional Members of the United Nations.§ The four additional Members shall be elected for a term of two years. Each member on the Commission may have such assistance as he may desire. The Commission shall be so organized as to be able to function continuously and each member of the Commission shall for this purpose be represented at all times at the seat of the organization. The Commission may establish subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions.

2. Functions and Responsibilities. The functions and responsibilities of the Commission, being directed toward the general reduction and regulation of armaments and disarmament, shall be as follows:

(a) To provide a coordinating center for the activities of all United

††The last phrase is quoted from the title of the Soviet draft convention introduced in the Atomic Energy Commission on 1946. [Footnote in the source text.]

§ N.B. This would be a Commission of fifteen members. The additional four members are added for the twofold purpose of diluting somewhat the relative weight of the five permanent members who would thus have one-third of the voting strength but would of course be permanent members of the Commission, and of giving broader representation to other Assembly Members in view of the Assembly's responsibilities in disarmament matters. By providing a more broadly representative Commission of fifteen members the political handicap of a possible Soviet veto in the Security Council of recommendations made to the Council by the Commission would be watered down, at least in the early stages of the Commission's work. The interests of the United States would be protected by our own veto power in the Security Council, should the occasion to use it arise. The non-permanent Members of the Security Council would rotate on the Commission as a result of the system of election to the Council. A similar electoral system is provided in the case of the additional four members of the Commission. [Footnote in the source text.]

Nations organs and agencies concerned with the general reduction and regulation of armaments, disarmament and related matters.

(b) To consider all matters relating to the general reduction and regulation of armaments and disarmament; to prepare studies and reports and to formulate recommendations to the General Assembly or to the Security Council, or to both with regard to such matters; and to make an annual report jointly to the General Assembly and to the Security Council on its progress.

(c) To advise the General Assembly with regard to the principles governing disarmament and the regulation of armaments (Article 11, paragraph 1) and related matters and in carrying out this responsibility to make such special reports and recommendations to the Assembly as it deems appropriate or as the Assembly may request.

(d) To formulate for submission to and consideration by the Security Council plans to be submitted to the Members of the United Nations for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments (Article 25) and in carrying out this responsibility to make such special reports and recommendations to the Security Council as it deems appropriate or as the Council may request.

(e) To provide such advice and assistance as may be requested by the Council of Foreign Ministers with regard to the relationship between plans for the demilitarization and permanent disarmament of ex-enemy countries, in particular Germany and Japan, and plans for the general reduction and regulation of armaments and disarmament.

(f) To maintain, following the establishment of a comprehensive system for the general reduction and regulation of armaments and disarmament, constant surveillance over the effectiveness of the system, with particular reference to the effectiveness of safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying States against the hazards of violations and evasions, to report annually to the General Assembly and to the Security Council jointly on the progress of the system and to submit special reports as it deems appropriate or as may be requested by the General Assembly or by the Security Council, and to make recommendations as it deems appropriate in the light of changing circumstances to the General Assembly, or to the Security Council, or to both with regard to any matter within its field of responsibility.

(g) To bring immediately to the attention of the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Members any situation it considers to be a violation or an evasion of the terms of the system to be established for the general reduction and regulation of armaments and disarmament, together with its recommendations in regard to such situation.

3. Relationships with other organs and agencies of the United Nations. In addition to its relationships with the General Assembly and the Security Council as set forth above, the relationships of the Commission with other organs and agencies of the United Nations shall be as outlined in the following paragraphs.

(a) Military Staff Committee. The Military Staff Committee, consistent with its responsibilities as set forth in Article 47, paragraph 1, and other Articles of the Charter, may, upon the request of the Commission, advise and assist the Commission in any or all aspects of its work.

(b) Atomic Energy Commission. In carrying out its responsibilities the Permanent Disarmament Commission, having in mind the primary and urgent importance of the work of the Atomic Energy Commission, shall avoid any action which might infringe upon the responsibilities of the Atomic Energy Commission or impede or delay the prompt accomplishment of its task of formulating specific proposals for the international control with effective safeguards of atomic energy for peaceful purposes only and for prohibiting the production and employment of weapons based on the use of atomic energy for the purpose of mass destruction. The two Commissions shall work in close cooperation and whatever reports and recommendations the Atomic Energy Commission may submit to the Security Council under the Resolution of January 24, 1946 shall be made available to the Permanent Disarmament Commission.

(c) Economic and Social Council. The Economic and Social Council shall, under Article 66 of the Charter and upon the request of the Commission, prepare studies and reports and advise and assist the Commission with regard to expenditures for armaments and the costs of armaments in terms of the world's human and economic resources and the relationship between the general reduction and regulation of armaments and disarmament and the attainment of the objectives set forth in Article 55 and elsewhere in the Charter.

(d) Secretariat. The Secretary General shall serve as Secretary General of the Commission with the right to participate fully in the discussions and deliberations of the Commission but without the right to vote. The Secretary General shall provide all necessary staff and facilities to carry on effectively the work of the Commission and shall defray all necessary expenses of the Commission from the Budget of the Organization.

4. Procedures. The Commission shall adopt its own rules of procedure, being guided as a matter of convenience and to the fullest extent practicable by the Rules of Procedure of the General Assembly; provided that decisions of the Commission on procedural matters shall be by simple majority vote and that decisions on all other matters shall be by two-thirds majority vote.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY:

CALLS UPON the Government of all the Members of the United Nations to give to the Permanent Disarmament Commission all the assistance necessary to enable it to discharge its responsibilities arising out of this task, the achievement of which lies within the scope of the mission of the United Nations to establish an enduring peace and maintain international security. This task is also in the interest of the peoples who would be released from the heavy economic burden caused by excessive expenditures on armaments which do not correspond to peaceful post-war conditions.||

IO Files : US/A/C.1/80

Memorandum of Conversation, by Charles W. Yost of the United States Delegation to the United Nations General Assembly

SECRET

[NEW YORK,] November 27, 1946.

Subject : French Attitude on the Troop Case

Participants: Mr. Lawford, of the United Kingdom Delegation
 Mr. Dejean, of the French Delegation ³⁴
 Mr. Charles W. Yost

Separate conversations were held with Mr. Lawford, of the United Kingdom Delegation, and Mr. Dejean, of the French Delegation, on this subject.

Mr. Lawford said that Sir Alexander Cadogan had had a long session with Mr. Parodi, of the French Delegation, last night at which Sir Alexander had taken him to task for the uncooperative French attitude on the troop case. It appeared that Mr. Parodi was adamant in refusing to support the principle of reporting on forces at home and that he was even considering presenting a resolution urging the early withdrawal of armed forces now on the territories of other United Nations. Sir Alexander had been able to persuade Mr. Parodi to drop this latter project. The British feel that the French Delegation has had recent instructions from Paris obliging them to support the Russians on this whole question.

A little later I discussed this same matter with Mr. Dejean. Mr. Dejean insisted that the question of forces at home is properly a part of the problem of reduction of armaments and should not be considered in connection with armed forces abroad which is after all, whatever may be said, basically a political issue. He said that there might be, of course, some cases in which the Security Council should have information about forces on home territories in connection with action it might wish to take concerning forces on foreign territories. He said that, for example, if the Security Council should be considering the question of the withdrawal of British troops from Greece, it might wish to ask the Yugoslav Government for information with regard to Yugoslav troops in Yugoslavia. In order to provide for cases of this kind the French Delegation believed that it would be proper to amend the resolution on armed forces now before Committee 1 to authorize the Security Council to take action of the sort he had just described. He handed me the text quoted below of a paragraph on this subject but indicated that the French Delegation did not itself propose to introduce this paragraph as an amendment at this time.

||This paragraph is very close to a direct quote from the last paragraph of Molotov's disarmament proposal. [Footnote in the source text.]

³⁴ Maurice Dejean, Alternate French Representative to the General Assembly.

“If the Security Council decides that, in addition to the information prescribed in the three preceding paragraphs, information should be obtained concerning troops stationed on their own national territory, it will request the presentation of this information by the Governments concerned under the same conditions as in the case of the information indicated in the preceding paragraphs.”

501.BB Summaries/11-2746 : Telegram

Senator Austin to the Acting Secretary of State

NEW YORK, November 27, 1946—8: 10 p. m.

[via Courier]

Daily Plain Summary

865. *Committee I (29th Meeting)*³⁵

With eight roll-call votes in a five-and-a-half hour meeting November 27, the Committee adopted the U.K. amendments to the U.S.S.R. troop proposal, providing for a report to the SC by all UN members of troops and military type organizations on foreign territories and uniformed personnel at home. The U.S. amendment was adopted 25-19, calling for the report of January 1 of the situation as of December 15, and eliminating the need for verification.³⁶

³⁵ For the Record of this Meeting, see GA (I/2), First Committee, pp. 158-177.

³⁶ The original Soviet proposal is printed in telegram 831, November 21, from New York, p. 1030. The resolution as amended by the United Kingdom is printed in US/A/C.1/72 (Rev.a), November 25, p. 1050. For text submitted in the Report of the First Committee on the Presence of Armed Forces of Members of the United Nations on Non-enemy Territories, see GA (I/2), Plenary, pp. 1504-1505 (Annex 49). That text consisted of the resolution adopted here, differing slightly as to wording and couched in the form of a General Assembly draft resolution. With respect to the action of the General Assembly on the resolution, see telegram 962, December 13, from New York, p. 1099.

The Committee decided 24-18 not to consider a U.S.S.R. amendment to the U.K. text which would have required a report at the same time on armaments on home territories.³⁷ By the same vote, the Committee refused to consider this as a separate U.S.S.R. amendment. A Soviet amendment which would have delayed the report on home troops until SC consideration of disarmament was rejected 31-10. An amendment introduced by Fawzi (Egypt) calling for a GA recommendation of withdrawal of troops where they are stationed on foreign territory without conformity to the letter and spirit of the Charter³⁸ was warmly supported by Molotov. When Noel-Baker (U.K.) and Senator Connally asked for more time to consider the amendment, the Committee decided 29-13 to defer consideration. Chairman Manuilsky (Ukraine) announced the Egyptian amendment would be considered at 10:30 a. m. November 28, as well as the U.K.-U.S.S.R. resolution as a whole and the Argentine resolution.³⁹

[Here follow a more detailed description of the meeting and accounts of the November 27 proceedings of other United Nations bodies.]

501.BB/11-2846: Telegram

Senator Austin to the Acting Secretary of State

NEW YORK, November 28, 1946—6 p. m.

[Received 6:37 p. m.]

871. Following is text of Soviet proposal referred to by Molotov at end his speech Committee 1 today:⁴⁰

“To supplement the proposal of the USSR delegation regarding the general reduction of armaments of October 29, 1946⁴¹ by the following paragraph:

To ensure the adoption of measures for the reduction of armaments and prohibition of the use of atomic energy for military purposes there shall be established within the framework of the Security Council, who bear the main responsibility for international peace and security, international control operating on the basis of a special provision which should provide for the establishment of special organs of inspection for which purpose there shall be formed:

³⁷ For text, see footnote 33, p. 1061.

³⁸ For text, see GA (I/2), First Committee, p. 160. Hiss stated the following in a memorandum to Mr. Acheson, November 27, in regard to a telephone conversation with Ross concerning the Egyptian amendment: “Mr. Ross and I were in complete agreement that for obvious reasons the Delegation will oppose the amendment in its present form. It obviously makes no sense in its present form as the Charter simply does not cover the question and any such action by the Assembly would only lead to complete confusion and recrimination.” (501.BB/11-2746)

³⁹ For text of the Argentine resolution, see GA (I/2), First Committee, p. 333 (Annex 8b).

⁴⁰ 30th Meeting.

⁴¹ For text of the Soviet proposal of October 29, see the bracketed note, p. 972.

(a) A commission for the control of the execution of the decision regarding the reduction of armaments.

(b) A commission for the control of the execution of the decision regarding the prohibition of the use of atomic energy for military purposes.

AUSTIN

SPA Files

Memorandum by Mr. John C. Ross, Adviser, United States Delegation to the General Assembly, to Senator Austin ⁴²

SECRET

[NEW YORK,] November 29, 1946.

The situation on disarmament in Committee 1 when it adjourned at about two o'clock is as follows: ⁴³

Molotov was not present; Vyshinsky represented the Soviet Union. Senator Connally had made the speech we prepared last night and discussed with him before he left for Lake Success.

Following Senator Connally's speech Shawcross, the British Attorney General, ⁴⁴ asked Vyshinsky four questions which he said he would like to have answered tomorrow. These questions were:

1. The United Kingdom Government assumes that the Soviet Union has no intention by its proposals to replace or sidetrack the Atomic Energy Commission. He asked Mr. Vyshinsky to reaffirm the Soviet Government's support of the Commission.

2. He asked Vyshinsky whether the Soviet Government advocates the prompt establishment of an effective system of control. He apparently did not relate this question to atomic energy or any other particular phase of disarmament.

3. Assuming that atomic energy would be controlled by a separate agency, he asked Vyshinsky whether the Soviet Government advocates that the Security Council under the unanimity rule (veto) should control all other weapons.

4. After stating that the Canadian and Australian Governments had put forward proposals which were somewhat more detailed than the Soviet proposals, he asked Vyshinsky whether the Soviet Govern-

⁴² The source text accompanied the following handwritten covering note:

"11/29. Dear Alger [Hiss]: Copies of attached were supposed to go down to you and Dean [Acheson] tonight but I'm not sure and am sending this as precaution. Will you see that Dean sees if he didn't get his copy. Austin talked to Sec. at length tonight—not much on attached—but Austin is sending original to Sec. 1st thing in morning. This is very rough dictation in course of busy afternoon. Yours, Jack [Ross]."

A copy was also sent to Mr. Cohen.

⁴³ For the record of the 31st Meeting of the 1st Committee, November 29, see GA (I/2), First Committee, pp. 185-199.

⁴⁴ Sir Hartley Shawcross, British Representative at the General Assembly.

ment sees any difference in principle among these three proposals. If no difference in principle is seen, would the Soviet Government agree to setting up tomorrow a drafting subcommittee which could boil down the three proposals into one which might then be unanimously accepted by Committee 1?

5. Vyshinsky spoke somewhat later on to the effect that (a) the Soviet Union is in favor of complete disarmament involving all weapons in every country; (b) Mr. Molotov has made abundantly clear the Soviet position in favor of controls; (c) disarmament must come first before security; (d) the Australian and Canadian paragraphs relating to atomic energy were not as good as the original Russian paragraph on this subject. (The Australian-Canadian paragraphs are close to our own views; the Russian paragraph is, of course, based on their position in the Atomic Energy Commission.)

6. Vyshinsky indicated that a revision of the Soviet resolution incorporating the new paragraph proposed by Molotov yesterday, and bringing back into the picture the Molotov proposal of several days ago linking the reporting on troops at home to reporting on armaments, was being circulated and would be distributed later today. Vyshinsky raised no objection to the British proposal of a subcommittee.

7. Subsequently Shawcross probed into the Soviet position on the veto saying that Vyshinsky had not answered his question on this subject and that it looked as though the Soviet Union was trying to interpose the Security Council between the Atomic Energy Commission and any system of international control. He expressed the hope that the prospect of disarmament would not be broken down by any misuse of the unanimity rule.

8. Vyshinsky, replying to Shawcross, said that everyone knew where the Soviet Union stood on the unanimity rule and that it would be a bad omen if the abolition of the veto should be considered a condition precedent to accomplishment in the disarmament field.

9. Meanwhile some of the British advisers had sounded out our people indicating that the Canadian resolution might be acceptable to them and asking whether we can support it.

10. Since then I understand that the Canadians and Australians have gotten together and agreed on a consolidated text which we should have available later this evening.⁴⁵

The situation we will be in at 10:30 tomorrow morning is as follows:

1. The only real difference between the Australian and Canadian proposals, on the one hand, and the Soviet proposals on the other, is with regard to atomic energy. It is clear to me, however, that the Russians could readily accept, aside from details, the Australian-Canadian formulation in this regard without weakening to any substantial degree what, I am sure, is their simple objective of getting atomic energy, general disarmament, reporting on troops, the Article 43 agreements, and related matters all jumbled together into the Security Council at the earliest possible moment.

⁴⁵ In a letter to the Secretary-General, November 29, the Canadian Delegation submitted a revision of the Soviet draft which combined the earlier Canadian and Australian proposals; for text of the letter, see GA (I/2), First Committee, p. 340.

2. I doubt whether Vyshinsky is likely to raise any strong objection tomorrow to the appointment of a subcommittee.

3. If we raise no objection to those proposals tomorrow our failure to do so may be considered equivalent to agreement in principle to their content.

4. The principal question we have to decide before tomorrow morning, therefore, is whether we do have any objections to those proposals. If so, Senator Connally would presumably state them in Committee tomorrow morning.⁴⁶

5. Having stated any objections we may have, the next question we must consider is whether we will have any alternative to propose, if not tomorrow then at an early date.

It is my strong personal view that these resolutions contain a number of objectionable features as set forth below :

1. First of all, the second paragraph of the Soviet proposal which reads, "The implementing of the decision concerning the reduction of armaments should include as a primary objective the prohibition to produce and use atomic energy for military purposes" is objectionable on two counts: (a) it links too closely together the general reduction of armaments and atomic energy and thereby weakens the focus we want to maintain on the latter; (b) it is based upon the Soviet position in the Atomic Energy Commission which emphasizes the prohibition of atomic weapons rather than the necessity of international control with effective safeguards which is the United States position. The Canadian-Australian formulation with regard to the work of the Atomic Energy Commission which "urges the expeditious fulfillment by the Atomic Energy Commission of its task" under its terms of reference, would be more acceptable to us.

2. All three resolutions in one form or another would have the General Assembly recommend that the Security Council take action in this matter. The Soviet paragraph incorporating this recommendation is the most objectionable, not only because it is incomplete but because it would have the effect of referring to the Security Council for implementation both atomic energy and the general reduction of armaments. It seems clear that Vyshinsky evaded this issue under questioning by Shawcross today. The Canadian-Australian formula is an improvement over the Soviet formula because, having in a separate paragraph emphasized the work of the Atomic Energy Commission, the recommendation to the Security Council would be limited to the general reduction of armaments. Beyond this, however, there are a number of objections to the reference of even the general reduction of armaments to the Security Council at this time as set forth below:

⁴⁶ Although the 32nd Meeting of the First Committee, November 30, was devoted to the question of the regulation of armaments, neither the United States nor Soviet representative was called upon to speak. The 33rd Meeting, December 1, concerned itself with another subject.

(a). The most serious objection is that despite all the efforts we have been making to keep the related questions of atomic energy and general disarmament in separate channels the reference by the Assembly of the general disarmament question to the Security Council at this time would throw the two subjects immediately together since we are making every effort in the Atomic Energy Commission to get a vote in the Commission referring our specific proposals to the Security Council before the end of the year. That is, the reference from the Atomic Energy Commission of specific proposals on atomic energy would arrive in the Security Council almost simultaneously with the recommendation from the Assembly that the Security Council take up the general reduction of armaments. Once brought together in this way in the Security Council, it would be extremely difficult to keep them separated so that we could keep the emphasis on the atomic energy proposals. In the course of a telephone conversation just now with Mr. Eberstadt, who called me on another matter, I asked his reaction to this point and he agreed with my analysis.

(b). As a result of Molotov's initiative in the Assembly on October 29, the world has been led to expect some progress in the general disarmament field. Because of the veto power the Soviet Union would be in a position to block any progress in this field except on their own terms from the outset and at every step of the way.

(c). On the other hand, it is possible to respond to the strong pressures which have built up to do something about general disarmament without interfering in any way with the progress of our atomic energy program if we can deflect the general disarmament question away from the Security Council and into another channel.

(d). The Canadian-Australian proposal speaks of the advice and assistance of the Military Staff Committee. However competent in their highly specialized field, the members of the Military Staff Committee may be, we are here dealing with matters of the highest political importance: the professional and technical details of tonnages and the like, while important, are of a distinctly subordinate character. While the MSC should certainly assist in any program, they cannot fairly be expected to do the job that needs doing. Another suggestion has been a subcommittee of the Security Council comparable presumably to the so-called Committee of Experts which has worked on the veto. Again because of the highly political character of the subject it is not believed that any such subcommittee would be effective.

(e). In view of the emphasis which has been placed on disarmament as the principal issue at this Assembly, failure of the Security Council to accomplish any tangible result whatever in this field for the reasons stated above will further seriously damage the status and reputation of the Security Council which was established as one of the vital organs of the United Nations.

3. The three resolutions also have in common the idea of establishing some kind of control commission. In the case of the Canadian-Australian proposals such a control commission would be based upon a general disarmament treaty or convention. The principal objection to this proposal is that it greatly over-simplifies one of the key points in our policy which is the necessity of effective safeguards by way of inspection in application to any phase of disarmament. This over-simplification is bound to confuse the already badly confused thinking on this subject and fails to take into account that the nature of safeguards and of the instrumentality to apply them requires very careful and patient study and could probably vary considerably from one phase of disarmament to another. It is believed that Dean Acheson would feel particularly strongly about this point.

If the foregoing objections are valid, the next question is whether in stating these objections we will be in a position to offer any alternative approach. The only alternative which seems at all feasible would be the proposal of appropriate machinery which would, on the one hand, deflect the general disarmament question away from the work of the Atomic Energy Commission and the Security Council but which would, on the other hand, provide a realistic opportunity for some accomplishment in the general disarmament field in response to the demand for such accomplishment.

501.BB/11-2946

*Memorandum by the Director of the Office of Special Political Affairs
(Hiss) to the Under Secretary of State (Acheson)*

[WASHINGTON,] November 29, 1946.

Subject: Resolutions on Disarmament

Mr. Ross has told me of his telephone conversation today with you in which the above subject was discussed briefly. In as much as you may be called upon to give opinions on this subject in the course of the next day or so, I am attaching hereto copies of the documents now before the Assembly. They are (1) the Canadian amendment to the Soviet proposal, (2) the Australian amendment to the Soviet proposal, and (3) the Soviet proposal itself. The latter is at the moment in three parts: Molotov's original resolution of October 29, the addition he proposed on November 28, and the proposal with respect to troops and armaments at home which the Soviets proposed but did not press during the debate on the troop proposals. They have now said that they will incorporate this in their disarmament resolution. A consolidated Soviet text is not yet available.

I gather from Jack Ross that the feeling in New York is that it will not be feasible simply to oppose any Assembly resolution on the subject of disarmament. Secondly, they are all now much concerned about the confusion which would be created were the disarmament matter to be referred to the Security Council along the lines of any of the pending resolutions. They are apparently of the opinion that as a result of these resolutions it would now be too late for us to propose that the matter be referred to the Security Council but only to be considered after the Security Council had disposed of the subject of atomic energy on the basis of the Atomic Energy Commission report. The alternative they are thinking of is apparently the creation of a new disarmament commission similar to the Atomic Energy Commission which would in due course report to the Security Council. They feel that this would meet the pressure for action with respect to disarmament (which they apparently consider practically irresistible) but would prevent the whole matter being thrown into the Security Council with resulting jeopardy to our position on atomic energy and on safeguards generally. Obviously any such new commission could not possibly report to the Security Council before the Atomic Energy Commission's crisis has come and gone (or at least been disposed of in some manner).

I have suggested to Mr. Ross that they might want to give consideration to the possibility of referring the subject of disarmament, with safeguards as first priority, to the Atomic Energy Commission itself. This might accomplish the objectives they are seeking in New York without the confusion likely to arise from having two commissions working in very closely related fields at the same time.

501.BB/11-2946

Senator Austin to the Secretary of State

SECRET

NEW YORK, November 29, 1946—12:40 a. m.

[Received 1:45 a. m.]

877. In informal talks with US and UK delegates Thursday, Fawzi (Egypt) tentatively agreed, without commitment on any side, on revision of his resolution ⁴⁷ along following lines:

⁴⁷ With respect to the earlier Egyptian proposal, see telegram 865, November 27, from New York (p. 1067) and footnote 38, p. 1068.

“The General Assembly considers that according to the letter and spirit of the Charter of the United Nations and to the principle of sovereign equality, no state member can station its armed forces on the territory of another member except under the terms of a treaty freely negotiated with the latter member or otherwise with that member’s free consent in accordance with the principles of the Charter.

The General Assembly recommends that, except as provided above, the states members having such armed forces stationed on the territory of other members withdraw them without delay.”

Shawcross informed member US Delegation that draft cleared with London.

AUSTIN

501.BB/11-3046

Senator Austin to the Acting Secretary of State

NEW YORK, November 30, 1946—12: 03 p. m.

[Received 12: 25 p. m.]

891. Mytel 886, November 29.⁴⁸ Full text Soviet proposal concerning general reduction of armaments (A/C.1/87) follows:

“1. With a view to strengthening peace and international security in conformity with the aims and principles of the United Nations, the GA recognizes the necessity of a general reduction of armaments.

2. The implementing of the decision concerning the reduction of armaments should include as primary object the prohibition to produce and use atomic energy for military purposes.

3. To ensure the adoption of measures for the reduction of armaments and prohibition of the use of atomic energy for military purposes, there shall be established within the framework of the SC, which has the primary responsibility for international peace and security, international control operating on the basis of a special provision which should provide for the establishment of special organs of inspection for which purpose there shall be formed:

(a) A commission for the control of the execution of the decision regarding the reduction of armaments;

(b) A commission for the control of the execution of the decision regarding the prohibition of the use of atomic energy for military purposes.

4. The GA deems it necessary that all states members of the United Nations Organization should submit information regarding armed forces and armaments in their own territory, this information to be submitted when the Security Council will consider the proposals for general reduction of armaments.

⁴⁸ Not printed.

5. The GA recommends that the SC should ensure the effective implementing of the principles laid down in paragraphs 1, 2, 3 and 4 above.

6. The GA appeals to the governments of all the states to give to the SC all the assistance necessary to enable it to discharge its responsibilities arising out of this task, the achievement of which lies within the scope of its mission to establish an enduring peace and maintain international security. This task is also in the interest of the peoples who would be released from the heavy economic burden caused by the excessive expenditure on armaments which do not correspond to peaceful post-war conditions".

AUSTIN

501.BB/12-146 : Telegram

Senator Austin to the Acting Secretary of State

US URGENT

NEW YORK, December 1, 1946—6:30 p. m.

[Received 8:28 p. m.]

895. Following proposed resolution on disarmament received from Secretary and submitted to Committee I, November 30:⁴⁹

"1. With a view to strengthening international peace and security in conformity with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, the General Assembly recognizes the necessity of an early general regulation and reduction of armaments. Accordingly, the General Assembly recommends that the Security Council give prompt consideration to working out the practical measures, according to their priority, which are essential to provide for the general regulation and reduction of armaments pursuant to international treaties and agreements and to assure that such regulation and reduction will be generally observed by all participants and not unilaterally by only some of the participants.

"2. The General Assembly recognizes that essential to the general regulation and reduction of armaments is the early establishment of international control of atomic energy and other modern technological discoveries to ensure their use only for peaceful purposes. Accordingly, in order to ensure that the general regulation and reduction of armaments are directed towards the major weapons of modern warfare and not merely towards the minor weapons the General Assembly recommends that the Security Council give first consideration to the report which the Atomic Energy Commission will make to the Security Council before December 31, 1946, and facilitate the progress of the work of that commission.

⁴⁹ For the record of the 34th Meeting of the 1st Committee, December 2, during which Senator Connally formally introduced the United States proposal, see GA (1/2), First Committee, pp. 220-225. Following Senator Connally's statement, Vyshinsky requested time to study the proposal. At the same meeting, Parodi, the French representative, expressed the belief that no fundamental differences existed between the U.S. and Soviet positions on disarmament. The French Delegation subsequently submitted a proposal in the form of a revision of the Soviet draft; for text, see GA (1/2), ibid., pp. 344-45.

"3. The General Assembly further recognizes that essential to the general regulation and reduction of armaments is the provision of practical and effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying states against the hazards of violations and evasions. Accordingly, the General Assembly recommends to the Security Council that it give prompt consideration to the working out of proposals to provide such practical and effective safeguards in connection with the control of atomic energy and other limitation or regulation of armaments.

"4. The General Assembly calls upon the governments of all states to render every possible assistance to the Security Council and the Atomic Energy Commission in order to promote the establishment of international peace and collective security, with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources."

AUSTIN

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Sir Hartley Shawcross of the United Kingdom Delegation to the General Assembly to Senator Connally of the United States Delegation

[NEW YORK,] 2 December, 1946.

The Political Committee is now faced with four separate proposals on disarmament. It seems to me most desirable that we should all try to evolve some concrete and constructive plan on which we can secure at least substantial agreement, and it may be useful, therefore, if I indicate in a little more detail than I was able to do in the Committee how we see the position.

It appears to us that any disarmament proposals ought to be based on the following four general principles:

(1) The atomic side of regulation and disarmament must continue to be handled by the Atomic Energy Commission. The Assembly must do nothing to interfere with or discourage their work.

(2) No partial system of disarmament must be agreed to in the sense that we must not get into a position where, for instance, the manufacture of atomic bombs is prohibited, but the manufacture of other weapons of mass destruction, e.g., rockets, is not. If we agree to the abolition of the atom bomb before we get agreement on other weapons subsequent agreement as to these might be vetoed. Therefore, the Atomic Energy Commission should complete its present work and put forward a plan for control. When this has been generally accepted, its actual coming into force should be suspended until a similar plan (which would not present anything like the same difficulties) has been agreed for other weapons.

(3) Any system of disarmament must provide for an immediate and effective system of control and inspection. Disclosure of information about armaments must not precede agreement on the system of control and inspection.

(4) The operation of the control and inspection agency and the extension of its work to newly invented weapons must not be subject to the veto.

In the light of these principles, I am not altogether happy about your present draft resolution.⁵⁰ If it goes any further than the Assembly has already gone in these matters, it may be thought that it throws added emphasis both on priority of regulation for the atomic bomb, and on the position of the Security Council. Paragraph 2 appears to give precedence to the question of the prohibition of atomic weapons by requiring the Security Council to give first consideration to the report which will be made by the Atomic Energy Commission. Paragraph 3 recommends the Security Council to give prompt consideration to the working out of a control system in regard to atomic energy. Might this not possibly prejudice the proposal which may eventually come forward from the Atomic Energy Commission for the establishment of an Atomic Development Authority? It might be said hereafter that the Assembly had, in Paragraph 3, adopted the view that the control system in connection with atomic energy and other forms of armaments was to be established within the framework of the Security Council, which is, of course, what the Soviet propose.

On the other hand, I do not think there is anything in the Canadian and Australian proposals which involved any interference with the work of the Atomic Energy Commission. Paragraph 3 of the Canadian Resolution, on the contrary, urges that the Commission should proceed expeditiously with its task. Paragraph 5 recommends the establishment (under a treaty to be formulated by the Security Council in accordance with Article 26) of a permanent International Commission of Control, with power to make inspections, etc. This is not necessarily intended to take the place of the suggested Atomic Development Authority: indeed, that authority might itself be the proposed Commission. Alternatively, since the problems of atomic control may differ from those concerning other weapons, it might be better to have two permanent International bodies, the one dealing with atomic matters, the second with other weapons of mass destruction. The vital thing, as I see it, is that these bodies should operate quite independently of the veto; should be able to establish whatever system of control and inspection which appeared appropriate from time to time, and should be able to bring newly invented mass destruction weapons under control without danger of a veto.

⁵⁰ Supra.

A further point in the Canadian plan is that the prohibition of atomic weapons is linked with that of other weapons of mass destruction.

It seems to me that it may be possible (and it is certainly desirable that we should attempt it) to find some solution which we can all support, and which includes the best points in the American, Canadian and Australian proposals. I particularly like the direction to the Security Council that they should draw up a draft convention in the light of the Atomic Energy Commission's eventual report, for this does require action.

The Soviet Resolution in its present form includes a provision for the disclosure of full information about all armaments "this information to be submitted when the Security Council will consider the proposals for general reduction of armaments." This means, of course, that the information is to be submitted before the Security Council has decided to do anything but talk. We shall feel it necessary to oppose the disclosure of information until a control organization has been established.

As you said you are going to discuss with your Delegation the way in which your proposals should be presented to the Committee, I felt it might be helpful if I explained our present attitude.

IO Files : US/A/C.1/86

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Charles W. Yost, Adviser, United States Delegation to the United Nations General Assembly

SECRET

[NEW YORK,] December 2, 1946.

In response to a question as to how he felt the Assembly session is going in general, Mr. Gromyko replied that it is too early to say. He declared that the most important subject before the General Assembly is the reduction of armaments and that it is not yet clear whether effective action will be taken on this matter. He said that this is a question which concerns primarily the United States and the Soviet Union and that the responsibility rests with these two countries to take effective steps. He said that he considered it most important that these two countries attempt to harmonize their attitudes toward this question. I replied that I was certain that we would be very happy to hear any suggestions which the Soviet Delegation might have for harmonizing our policies on this matter. Mr. Gromyko replied that he too would be happy to hear any suggestions which the United States Delegation might have with this end in view. He emphasized that he did not believe there is any sharp difference between the United States and the Soviet position as now stated. He indicated that the Soviet Delegation is very carefully studying our proposal.

Mr. Gromyko inquired whether the United States saw any objection to tying in the machinery for the reduction and control of armaments closely with the Security Council. I replied that it would seem logical that any general plan for the reduction and control of armaments should be drawn up by the Security Council, the Military Staff Committee or some other body under the immediate control of the Council and that adoption of the final plan should be subject to the unanimity principle. I added, however, that we are concerned that whatever executive control or inspection body may be established by the plan shall be able to carry out inspections whenever and wherever it feels necessary without being subject to a veto of any kind. I pointed out that while we attach great importance to this matter, there is some question as to the extent to which it need be spelled out in the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at this time.

501.BB/12-446

Senator Austin to the Secretary of State

SECRET

NEW YORK, December 4, 1946—12:36 a. m.

[Received 1:11 a. m.]

913. Reference my telegram 877, November 29 and phone conversations today with Dreier concerning Department's view that 1st paragraph of tentative Egyptian resolution on troops in foreign territories should if submitted be revised to read as follows:

"The General Assembly considers that, according to the letter and spirit of the Charter of the United Nations and to the principle of sovereign equality, no state member can station its armed forces on the territory of another member, except under the terms of a treaty or other agreement freely negotiated with the latter member, or with that member's free consent given in some other form in accordance with the principles of the Charter".

Sanhoury⁵¹ informed Villard⁵² today that instead of submitting resolution Egyptians will in connection with consideration of troops ⁵¹ Abdel Razak A. El-Sanhoury, Egyptian Representative to the General Assembly.

⁵² Henry S. Villard, Adviser, United States Delegation to the General Assembly.

census question or disarmament in plenary session make statement along lines of above draft. However, reference to "terms of a treaty or other agreement" would be omitted.

Sanhoury asked if United States would make supporting statement but indicated he would rather have United States not speak than to make statement mentioning treaties or agreements as in text.

Since we understand Department attaches importance to reference to terms of treaty or agreement in this general context we informed Egyptians that we would prefer not to speak on subject, since our statement would need to include reference to treaties and agreements. For Department's information additional consideration was that such statements if made might evoke series of supporting statements in plenary which Soviet group might exploit and use to push through resolution on subject.

Egyptians indicated that our silence would be satisfactory to them and that they will make unilateral statement.

United Kingdom delegation will, however, support Egyptian statement, making specific reference to treaty or agreement and are cabling London for clearance of text tonight.⁵³

Both Sanhoury and Fauzi [Fawzi] expressed their regret that their original proposal had led to complications and made clear that their decision to abandon the resolution resulted largely from a desire to avoid possible difficulties for United States in accepting the text of their proposed resolution.

AUSTIN

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by Mr. John M. Hancock to the United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch)

[NEW YORK,] December 4, 1946.

I am seriously concerned about a letter from Sir Hartley Shawcross to Senator Connally under date of December 2. This letter contains his suggestion that we go ahead with the atomic energy problem, get it into treaty form, and then put it on ice until other weapons have been covered by a similar plan.

There would be an obvious advantage if this result could be attained, but I am convinced that his suggestion is not one which should be countenanced by our government. It would be an attempt to introduce a new element in the negotiations and it would go to our good faith [sic] in making our original proposals with reference to atomic energy. In fact, we did propose unilateral disarmament in the field of atomic energy, and we did it without implying any such thought as Sir Hartley Shawcross now advances. We were the only nation to have the bomb and we offered to give it up on conditions which were briefly stated in your June 14 speech as follows :

⁵³ The statements contemplated here were delivered by Egyptian and United Kingdom representatives at the 53rd Meeting of the General Assembly, December 10; for texts, see GA (I/2), Plenary, pp. 1077 and 1084.

“When an adequate system for control of atomic energy, including the renunciation of the bomb as a weapon, has been agreed upon and put into effective operation and condign punishments set up for violations of the rules of control which are to be stigmatized as international crimes, we propose that—

- “1. Manufacture of atomic bombs shall stop ;
- “2. Existing bombs shall be disposed of pursuant to the terms of the treaty ; and
- “3. The Authority shall be in possession of full information as to the know-how for the production of atomic energy.”

The only out we would have would lie in the following words :

“But before a country is ready to relinquish any winning weapons it must have more than words to reassure it. It must have a guarantee of safety, not only against the offenders in the atomic area but against the illegal users of other weapons—bacteriological, biological, gas—perhaps—why not?—against war itself.”

I think this second paragraph as contained was intended to introduce the idea of the outlawry of war itself. I don't regard it as a withdrawal of the other specific provisions with regard to atomic bombs. Certainly there has never been any thought that we would not go through with the disarmament in the field of atomic energy unless we had a total disarmament. The reference to the “other weapons—bacteriological, biological, gas” seems to me to be used primarily as an introduction to the idea of abolishing war itself.

I believe that if an open attempt is made to put the atomic energy plan on ice awaiting general disarmament, we are going to be accused of bad faith. The whole basis of our approach has been that if we could get perhaps disarmament in the atomic field in which we alone have possession of the weapon, we might have a good atmosphere in which to go on toward the effective outlawing of other weapons.

While one might be inclined to sit on the side lines and take no position should the British press this plan of theirs, I don't see how we here can be in such a position. If the British, for their own reasons, prefer not to ratify the treaty, that's another matter.

I don't believe we should give any countenance to a joint move in this direction, and if the matter gets to public discussion I believe we are going to be forced to take a position in opposition. The danger lies in the possibility that the British will make this plan public without knowing of our position in advance.

If you agree with me, I think the matter should be discussed with Secretary Byrnes, Senator Austin, and possibly Senator Connally.

JOHN M. HANCOCK

501.BC Atomic/12-446

Memorandum by Mr. Henry G. Ingraham⁵⁴ to the Legal Adviser (Fahy)

CONFIDENTIAL

NEW YORK, December 4, 1946.

For your information, Messrs. Baruch and Hancock today had lunch with Gromyko and Alexandrov upon Gromyko's invitation. Mr. Baruch showed Gromyko a copy of the proposed findings and recommendations which Mr. Baruch is to present formally at tomorrow's meeting at 6:00 P.M. of the full Commission.⁵⁵ Gromyko read them and commented that the United States and the U.S.S.R. are now not far apart. He did not say how he would vote, and Mr. Baruch does not plan to propose and does not favor any vote tomorrow. But Gromyko's comment, combined with the affable atmosphere and Molotov's statement this morning with respect to the veto, appear to have made Mr. Baruch very optimistic. Mr. Hancock also seems optimistic, though more cautiously so. Both of them talked with Secretary Byrnes on the telephone following the luncheon.

Another new development, as you probably know, is that Shawcross made a statement in the Political Committee indicating that the control of atomic weapons should not precede, but should go into effect concurrently with, the control of other weapons (rockets, etc.) adapted to mass destruction.⁵⁶ He made this point to Mr. Baruch also. Mr. Baruch replied to the effect that he was interested but that a question of good faith was involved and that he (Mr. Baruch) was not in a position to decide the United States' stand on the point. Mr. Baruch has reported this conversation to Secretary Byrnes.

HENRY G. INGRAHAM

⁵⁴ Special Assistant to the Legal Adviser detailed to the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission.

⁵⁵ At the 6th Meeting of the Atomic Energy Commission, November 13, the first plenary session since July 18, the AEC had approved a motion by Mr. Baruch that the Commission submit a report to the Security Council by the end of the year. All members of the Commission voted in favor of the motion with the exceptions of the Soviet Union and Poland who abstained. The document under reference here was a resolution containing points to be included by the Commission in its report which Mr. Baruch presented at the 7th Meeting of the AEC, December 5. The resolution contained a summary of the United States proposal for the international control of atomic energy. The Commission adjourned to permit studying of the proposal without setting the date for its next meeting. The United States resolution is printed as AEC(I), Supplement 3, Annex 4.

⁵⁶ The statement under reference was delivered at the 38th Meeting of the First Committee of the General Assembly, December 4.

IO Files : US/A/C.1/90

Memorandum of Conversation, by Mr. Robert McClintock, Adviser, United States Delegation to the United Nations General Assembly

SECRET

[NEW YORK,] December 4, 1946.

I had a long conversation on the evening of December 4 with the Turkish Ambassador, Mr. Baydur. The Ambassador is an expert on the Soviet Union, having served a total of nine years on two separate tours of duty as Turkish Ambassador in Moscow.

Commenting on Molotov's more conciliatory proposal on disarmament and control of armaments presented that morning to Committee 1,⁵⁷ the Ambassador said that he could not possibly conceive of the Russians admitting any effective system of inspection no matter what Molotov had said in this regard. He thought that it was utterly contrary to the Russian nature, to say nothing of the inclinations of the Soviet regime, to admit foreign or international observers to check on the Soviet military position.

At the same time Ambassador Baydur said that he thought the Government in the Kremlin was seriously concerned by the internal situation in the U.S.S.R. He thought that the varied reports of dissatisfaction throughout the Soviet Union over high prices and the scarcity of consumers' goods had undoubtedly a large basis of fact. He said in his opinion the Soviet people were utterly weary from the long strain that had been imposed upon them through successive five-year plans and the final crucial test of the war itself. Their primary desire as a people was peace and the Soviet Government, despite its bellicose statements, was now forced to recognize this desire.

The Ambassador said that the Soviet Government, following the termination of hostilities, had followed a policy of attempting to grab as much as possible in terms of power and territory, and that it had only been checked in this course by the final decision of the United States Government to stand firm against further encroachment. The firm American policy was now bearing fruit in this new conciliatory line now adopted by the Soviet Foreign Minister.

The Ambassador concluded by saying that the Russian high political command had learned a great deal from Hitler and would not repeat his mistake of pressing the rest of the world too far. He recalled in this connection the Fable of Aesop about the division of spoils between the lion, the fox, and the ass, the ass having been killed in the process. The Ambassador thought that the Russians would profit by the example of Hitler.

⁵⁷ Regarding the Soviet proposal under reference, see memorandum by the United States Naval Representative on the Military Staff Committee, December 5, and footnote 58, p. 1085.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by the United States Naval Representative on the Military Staff Committee (Turner) to the Army and Air Force Representatives

RESTRICTED
USMS 388.3

[NEW YORK,] 5 December 1946.

Subject: Comment by U.S. Naval Representative on Soviet Amendments to U.S. Proposal concerning the General Registration and Reduction of Armaments, in General Assembly Committee I, 4 December 1946.⁵⁸

1. The United States proposal (A/C.1/90 of 30 November 1946) together with the Soviet amendments proposed on 4 December 1946 are quoted (deletions are dashed out, and additions underlined) :

1. With a view to strengthening international peace and security in conformity with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, the General Assembly recognizes the necessity of an early general regulation and reduction of armaments. Accordingly, the General Assembly recommends that the Security Council give prompt consideration to working out the practical measures, according to their priority, which are essential to provide for the general regulation and reduction of armaments pursuant to international treaties and agreements and to assure that such regulation and reduction will be generally observed by all participants and not unilaterally by only some of the participants. (Note: Molotov stated that paragraph 1 must be amended so that regulation of armaments would be by resolution of the Security Council.)

~~2. The General Assembly recognizes that essential to the general regulation and reduction of armaments is the early establishment of international control of atomic energy and other modern technological discoveries to ensure their use only for peaceful purposes. Accordingly, in order to ensure that the general regulation and reduction of armaments are directed towards the major weapons of~~

⁵⁸ Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov proposed the amendments printed here at the 38th Meeting of the First Committee, December 4. He stated that the Soviet Union was prepared to accept the United States proposal as a basis for discussion "in the interest of unanimity." Earlier in the meeting he had contended that while the Soviet Union insisted on preserving the principle of unanimity in Security Council decisions, the veto would have "no relevance to the work" of inspection and control instruments. The Committee agreed to establish Subcommittee 3, a twenty-member body, to consider the various disarmament proposals before the Committee. Subcommittee 3 first met on December 5. Subsequently, a drafting group consisting of representatives of Canada, Egypt, France, the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom, and the United States prepared a text which was adopted by the Subcommittee at its 6th Meeting, December 12. The report of the Subcommittee contains the text of the recommended resolution, the membership of the Subcommittee, its terms of reference, and a summary of its work; for text of the report, see GA (I/2), First Committee, pp. 346-48. Subcommittee 3 documentation exists on microfilm in the IO Files.

modern warfare and not merely towards the minor weapons the General Assembly recommends that the Security Council give first consideration to the report which the Atomic Energy Commission will make to the Security Council before 31 December 1946, and facilitate the progress of the work of that Commission.

2. As an essential step toward the urgent objective of eliminating from national armaments atomic weapons and all other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction, the General Assembly urges the expeditious fulfillment by the Atomic Energy Commission of its terms of reference as set forth in section 5 of the General Assembly resolution of Jan. 17, 1946. Accordingly, in order to insure that the general regulation and reduction of armaments are directed toward the major weapons of modern warfare and not merely toward the minor weapons, the General Assembly recommends that the Security Council expedite consideration of the report which the Atomic Energy Commission will make to the Security Council before 31 December 1946, and facilitate the progress of the work of that commission and also that the Security Council expedite consideration of a draft convention for the prohibition of atomic weapons.

3. The General Assembly further recognizes that essential to the general regulation and reduction of armaments is the provision of practical and effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying states against the hazards of violations and evasions. Accordingly the General Assembly recommends to the Security Council that it give prompt consideration to the working out of proposals to provide such practical and effective safeguards in connection with the control of atomic energy and other limitation or regulation of armaments. To insure the adoption of measures for the reduction of armaments and prohibition of the use of atomic energy for military purposes there shall be established within the framework of the Security Council, who bear the main responsibility for international peace and security, international control operating on the basis of a special provision which should provide for the establishment of special organs of inspection for which purpose there shall be formed:

(A) A commission for the control of execution of the decision regarding the reduction of armaments.

(B) A commission for the control of the execution of the decision regarding the prohibition of the use of atomic energy for military purposes.

4. The General Assembly calls upon the governments of all states to render every possible assistance to the Security Council and the Atomic Energy Commission in order to promote the establishment of international peace and collective security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources.

2. An analysis of the Soviet proposal indicates that, in the Soviet view, an international convention or treaty is required only for the prohibition of atomic weapons but that reduction of armaments must be handled by a resolution of the Security Council. This is shown by the following excerpt from the Soviet proposed paragraph 2:

“that the Security Council expedite consideration of a draft convention for the prohibition of atomic weapons.”

In Mr. Molotov's Statement, the Soviet views on agreements relative to the reduction of armaments are clearly expressed :

“If we take the view that the reduction of armaments is to be carried out by means of international agreements, this will give rise to a good many pretexts for all sorts of delays. For this reason, the Soviet Delegation is of the opinion that the decision on the reduction of armaments should be taken by means of a resolution of the Security Council. . . . The wording of the first paragraph (of the U.S. proposal) must be amended accordingly.”

3. The Soviet proposals reject the idea of an international treaty for setting up the rules for operation, control, and inspection by an Atomic Development Authority, and punishment of violators without veto in the Security Council, in favor of having the Security Council formulate the rules.

4. With respect to the possible veto in the A.D.A., Mr. Molotov stated :

“But when decisions regarding the composition of the control commissions are taken and the control commissions begin their task, they will, of course, work in accordance with those rules drawn up for them by the Security Council.”

It should be noted that Mr. Molotov has also made it clear that in the formulation of the rules by the Security Council, the veto right must be unimpaired.

It appears from the foregoing that such rules regarding operation, control, and inspection by the A.D.A. as are approved by the Security Council, with the unanimous agreement of the five permanent members, may not be disregarded by the A.D.A. However, it is also clear from Mr. Molotov's statement that these rules will cover only the day-to-day operations of the A.D.A. and will not give the Security Council the right to punish a violator of the atomic treaty except in the case of unanimity of the five major Powers. This right will remain in the Security Council, with no derogation of the veto. Hence, the Soviet position is directly contrary to the United States position that the veto cannot be used to protect a wrongdoer in the field of atomic energy; and does not constitute any advance in this respect from the Atomic Energy Proposals made by the Soviet on June 19th.

5. The Soviet proposal reiterates their previous proposal for an A.D.A. with the same powers of "control" as given in paragraph (3) of the Soviet proposal of 19 June 1946 regarding the Atomic Energy Control Committee of the Security Council (AEC official records, No. 2, Second Meeting, 19 June 1946, p. 29). By omission, the current Soviet proposal rejects the power of the A.D.A. to recommend a draft convention as in paragraph (1) of their proposal of 19 June.

6. To summarize, the Soviet position with regard to Atomic Energy remains exactly the same as it was. The only part of their current proposals which may be considered an advance toward the United States position is a clear statement that there will be no right of veto in the A.D.A., but that the A.D.A. will function under rules prescribed by the Security Council; and their statement that the Soviet will accept some degree of control and inspection by an international authority.

R. K. TURNER

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by Mr. Franklin A. Lindsay to Mr. John M. Hancock of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission

[NEW YORK,] December 6, 1946.

Subject: Recommendations for Modifications of Disarmament Resolution Now Being Considered in a Sub-Committee on [of] the General Assembly⁵⁹

1. Paragraph 1 has been tentatively agreed upon by all members of the Sub-Committee. It contains the following sentence: "The plan formulated by the Security Council shall be submitted to States Members of the United Nations for ratification in accordance with their constitutional processes." This statement should be expanded to include the states which are not members of the United Nations.

2. Paragraph 2 has not been finally accepted by the Sub-Committee. The U.K. has proposed an amendment to the following sentence: "The General Assembly recommends that the Security Council expedite consideration of the report which the Atomic Energy Commission will make to the Security Council before 31 December 1946," which eliminates the last part "before 31 December 1946."

In respect to the Soviet addition to the original American text, which provides that the Security Council should expedite consideration of a draft convention also, it is recommended that if possible this Russian amendment not be accepted. If this is not tactically possible the statement should be amended as follows: "The General Assembly further recommends that in the light of such proposals which the Atomic Energy Commission may make within its terms of reference, the Security Council expedite consideration of a draft convention or conventions for the prohibition of atomic and other weapons of mass destruction and for the establishment of a system of international control and regulations."

⁵⁹ Regarding the subcommittee under reference, see footnote 58, p. 1085. For text of the resolution adopted by the General Assembly on December 14, see p. 1099.

3. The Russians have proposed that the United States' Paragraph 3 be amended to include their statement establishing the two control Commissions. It is strongly recommended that the General Assembly resolution contain no proposals for the establishment of any specific agencies of control. It is the function of the Atomic Energy Commission in accordance with its original terms of reference to make recommendations to the Security Council for the establishment of the proper Commission or Commissions for the execution of the system of control which the Atomic Energy Commission will devise.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by the United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission (Baruch) to the Secretary of State

[NEW YORK,] December 8, 1946.

The Atomic Energy Commission has been given a definite task—in no mistakable language—by the Assembly, on the suggestion of the Foreign Secretaries and, originally, of the Chiefs of State.

The American representative on this Commission has made proposals aimed at carrying out the duties of the Commission, regarding atomic energy, which may well serve also to set a pattern for control of any other instrument of mass destruction, or indeed for all instruments of war.

In the United Nations General Assembly's Political and Security Committee, discussions are taking place concerning atomic energy. The Atomic Energy Commission is about to bring forward a report on its own work which, necessarily is related to practically all of the points now being discussed in the Political and Security Committee. The adoption, by the Political and Security Committee, of specific resolutions relating to atomic energy, other than one asking the Atomic Energy Commission to expedite its report, may prejudice or even render impossible an unbiased report by the Commission, since certain of its members are bound to be affected by their superiors now functioning in the General Assembly.

No one knows exactly what some of the words in these proposed General Assembly resolutions mean. Why pass them? Why not wait until the Atomic Energy Commission has made its report. Passing oblique resolutions may result in confusion and delay.

These declarations of principle should be referred to the Atomic Commission, which is charged with responsibility for an authoritative plan to be placed before the Security Council, while the General Assembly has only the right of recommendations. The Atomic Energy Commission should not be impeded by new and limiting instructions.

The American delegates are hampered more than others. We have not even had the benefit of a full exchange of views between those who are dealing with disarmament and those charged with atomic matters. There should be a close and constant liaison between them.

As you may recall, I suggested at the time Stettinius was our representative, that he, Winant, and I ought to discuss the subject of our duties. This you did not believe wise at the time. In addition, I was instructed to keep out of disarmament discussions, even though it was apparent such discussions would be closely connected with atomic energy and other weapons of mass destruction. The President, you and Senator Connally were especially emphatic that I try to avoid the subject of disarmament in my atomic energy actions.

I have not seen anything, so far, on disarmament, other than pious resolutions. On the other hand, the Atomic Commission is in the midst of preparing a definitive formula of action. But the program is bound to be deteriorated by pressures from outside sources.

Therefore, I ask that instructions be issued to our representatives on the Political and Security Committee, that all matters relating to atomic energy be referred to the Commission organized to deal with the subject. Also, that it be pointed out that if atomic energy is successfully dealt with in the Commission—and I believe it may be—other categories of armaments can be similarly treated.

What I ask for is support in the effort the President and you requested me to direct, instead of permitting it to be submerged in a sea of words which, unless canalized, will result only in harm, through obscurity and delay.

Delay is dangerous. Action is essential. I know that course has your warm approval. The way to get action is to concentrate the efforts in the one place where final responsibility exists. It is to that end that I address this letter to you.

B. M. BARUCH

501.BC Armaments/12-1346

*Memorandum by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the State-War-Navy
Coordinating Committee*⁶⁰

SECRET

WASHINGTON, December 9, 1946.

SWNCC 240/1

Subject: Military Guidance on the Regulation of Armaments.

In connection with the discussions now taking place in the General Assembly of the United Nations on disarmament and the regulation of armaments, the Joint Chiefs of Staff would suggest that, from the military point of view, the positions taken by the United States Representatives should be based on the following:

a. Proposals for disarmament or the regulation of armaments should not be agreed to unless they are applicable to and accepted by all member nations.

b. There must be effective safeguards by way of international inspection and other means to protect all nations against the hazards of violation and evasion. The implementation of these safeguards must not be subject to veto or obstruction.

c. All matters pertaining to international control of atomic energy, including inspection, should continue to be dealt with by the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, which was established specifically for that purpose and in which the United States position has been adequately defined by Mr. Baruch.

d. Until final action has been taken on the United States proposals submitted to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, it is premature and futile to go beyond the discussion stages concerning other aspects of the problem of disarmament or the regulation of armaments.

e. No commitments concerning disarmament or regulation of armaments, other than those pertaining to atomic weapons referred to in subparagraphs c and d above, requiring action on the part of the ⁶⁰ This memorandum was prepared in response to a request by the Chief of Staff, U.S. Army, November 26, that the Joint Chiefs of Staff prepare as a matter of priority, guidance from the military point of view on reduction and regulation of armaments in the light of the discussion of this subject in the United Nations General Assembly. It was circulated in the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee as SWNCC 240/1 on December 9 and transmitted to the United States Representatives on the Military Staff Committee on the same day. At the request of J. H. Hilldring, Chairman of SWNCC, the Department of State forwarded copies of this document to Secretary Byrnes and Senator Austin on December 13. (501.BC Armaments/12-1346; SWNCC Files; IO Files)

United States, should be made until a reappraisal can be made of the world situation existing upon :

- (a) Conclusion of the peace treaties and enforcement of those terms of the treaties having predominant military implications, and
- (b) Conclusion of agreements for providing contingents of armed forces to the Security Council pursuant to Article 43 of the Charter of the United Nations.

It is requested that this information be transmitted to the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy.

For the Joint Chiefs of Staff :

A. J. McFARLAND
Colonel, U.S. Army,
Secretary

501.BC Atomic/12-946

*The United States Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission
(Baruch) to the Secretary of State*

NEW YORK, December 9, 1946.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY : Supplementing my memorandum to you of December 8th, on the same general subject, I take the liberty of calling to your attention some disturbing elements in the present drafts of Paragraphs 1. and 2. of the "proposal concerning the general regulation and reduction of armaments", as passed by Subcommittee 3 of the first Committee of the United Nations General Assembly.

The Russians have contended, before the Atomic Energy Commission, that the first step in control of atomic energy should be "a convention", as they always call it, outlawing the production and use of atomic weapons and providing, within a short time after the convention has been executed, for the destruction of existing atomic weapons. They have contended that this should be the initial step and should be taken separate and apart from definite commitments in other respects. They also have urged the formation of two committees, one of which should occupy itself with scientific matters and the other with controls.

We have not opposed the inclusion of an international agreement along the lines of the proposed Russian "convention" in a treaty providing a full and effective system of control. We have, however, declined to accept any such convention, apart from safeguards in the way of an international authority, fortified with powers of control and inspection to supervise and enforce the system of control and the terms of the convention.

Paragraph I of the proposals referred to above recommends that "the Security Council give prompt consideration to formulating the practical measures, according to their priority, which are essential, etc."

The last clause of paragraph 2 reads as follows ". . . The General Assembly recommends that the Security Council . . . expedite consideration of a draft convention or conventions for the prohibition of atomic weapons, . . . and the creation of an international system of control and inspection." It will be noted that the last clause of paragraph 2. refers to two things :

(a) a convention or conventions for the prohibition of atomic bombs, and

(b) the creation of an international system of control and inspection.

Our fears in connection with this language, taken in connection with the instructions in paragraph 1. about priority, are that the Russians will continue to insist that the first priority belongs to a convention for prohibition of production and use of atomic bombs and their destruction promptly thereafter.

As you know, I am not authorized to concur in such a program, either by the President or by you, and you will, I am sure, agree with me that Congress would not in any event accept it. The language of the proposed resolutions, however, might give the Russians who, as you know, are very close readers and construers of language, a basis for insisting that the General Assembly had approved this order of procedure.

Paragraph 3. of the disarmament proposals of the Subcommittee of the first Committee in the General Assembly is now in draft. The Russian proposal there calls for two commissions under the Security Council, the function of one of which is to carry out the "decision on atomic energy".

I appreciate the difficulties involved in changing the present language in paragraph 2. If the pertinent part of this paragraph could be changed to read as follows :

"That the Security Council expedite consideration of an international system of control and inspection including a convention or conventions for the prohibition of atomic weapons, etc."

that would bring clarity. If this is not possible, it seems to me that the American representative should at every stage where this resolution is acted upon in the subcommittee, before the committee, and before the Assembly itself, emphasize the fact that in voting for the resolution, the United States construes its meaning, not as recommending a separate convention, but as calling for a system of international control, including safeguards by way of inspection and other measures of which system such a covenant would be an integral part.

I also feel that the final draft of paragraph 3., now under discussion, should eliminate all specific reference to the form of organization to be adopted for carrying out the control of atomic energy. Such measures should await receipt by the Security Council of the report of the Atomic Energy Commission which, I hope, will be completed and delivered to the Security Council very soon.

Sincerely yours,

BERNARD M. BARUCH

10 Files

Memorandum by the United States Representatives to the Military Staff Committee

RESTRICTED

NEW YORK, 9 December 1946.

USMS/50/28

UNITED KINGDOM'S PROPOSAL REGARDING USE OF UNITED NATIONS ARMED FORCES AGAINST PERMANENT MEMBERS OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL

1. The United Kingdom Representative on the Subcommittee on Basic Principles informally circulated to the U.S. Representatives a draft of their proposal on the subject of Strength under item 3 of the Program of Work.⁶¹ This proposal is as follows:

"Item 3: Strength.

Principle affecting the total strength of Armed Forces placed at the disposal of the Security Council.

(i) The United Nations Armed Force can only be employed with the unanimous support of the Five Permanent Members of the Security Council and will therefore only be used against any nation or combination of nations other than the Five Permanent Members.

(ii) The United Nations Armed Force must be of sufficient strength to command the respect of all nations and to meet any commitments likely to exist under paragraph 1 above, but not so large as to prejudice swift and effective action when called upon by the Security Council.

(iii) The United Nations Armed Forces shall be kept to the minimum strength consonant with the principles stated in paragraphs (i) and (ii) above."

2. The U.S. Representatives informed the United Kingdom Representative on the Subcommittee that the U.S. Delegation on the Military Staff Committee could not accept paragraph 1 of the United Kingdom proposal under any circumstances for the following reasons:

⁶¹ The program of work under reference is that adopted by the Subcommittee at its 9th Meeting, October 29, contained in the record of that meeting, MS/UNF/10, not printed.

(a) It added to the provisions of the Charter and, in a sense, was considered as an amendment to the Charter.

(b) It was believed an unwise policy to make such a statement in the Basic Principles because of the probable unfavorable repercussions among the smaller nations and the general public. (Vide "Veto" debate.)⁶²

(c) The statement that the United Nations Armed Forces could never be used against any of the five major powers was directly contrary to the United States Atomic Energy proposal for decision without veto on punishment of treaty violators, and was contrary to similar views made by both the United States and United Kingdom Delegations to the General Assembly on the subject of the Regulation and Reduction of Armaments.

3. The U.S. Representatives also informed the United Kingdom Representative on the Subcommittee that the use of the word "minimum" in paragraph 3 was not believed to be as good usage as the word "limited." The word "limited" had been included in the instructions to the U.S. Representatives from the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and is believed to leave a wider freedom for future decision.

4. The United Kingdom Representative subsequently submitted informally a new proposal on the subject of Strength, as follows:

"The strength of the United Nations Armed Force should be governed by the following principles:

(i) Enforcement action under Chapter 7 of the Charter requires unanimity on the part of the Five permanent members. The moral weight and potential power behind such a unanimous decision will therefore be very great, and will directly influence the size of the force required.

(ii) The United Nations Armed Force must be of sufficient strength to command the respect of all nations and to meet any probable commitments but not so large as to prejudice swift and effective action when called upon by the Security Council.

(iii) The United Nations Armed Force shall be limited initially to the strength consonant with the principles stated under paragraph (i) and (ii) above."

5. The U. S. Representatives informed the United Kingdom Representative that paragraph 1 of the new United Kingdom draft proposal was still unacceptable to the U.S. Representatives because it seemed unnecessary, and, to some extent, was objectionable for the same reasons previously stated.⁶³

6. Mr. Herschel Johnson has been informed of the position of the ⁶² For documentation on the veto question, see pp. 251 ff.

⁶³ The United Kingdom submitted a draft to the 15th Meeting of the Subcommittee, December 17, identical with that printed here except that paragraph 1 read as follows: "The moral weight and potential power behind any decision taken in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter will be very great, and will directly influence the size of the force required." The Subcommittee continued to discuss the subject of strength at its three subsequent meetings in 1946, but failed to complete its consideration of the matter. (IO Files)

U.S. Representatives on the United Kingdom proposal and personally concurs.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Memorandum by Mr. Joseph Chase*⁶⁴

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] December 9, 1946.

REMARKS ON VARIOUS PROPOSALS IN THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY ON THE REGULATION AND REDUCTION OF ARMAMENTS WHICH TOUCH ON THE WORK OF THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

BRIEF:

Three main points are made in this memorandum. The first is that, upon close inspection and reading, it is impossible to state the extent, if any, of recent U.S.S.R. concessions on inspection, veto and controls. The second is that it is impossible to know what Mr. Molotov meant when talking about *conventions, international control and inspection, and irrelevance of the veto, until we get down to concrete cases and smoke him out. The third is that the position of various countries on the use of the veto in the application of sanctions may not be in conformity with the United States' plan for the control of atomic energy.

In his speech before Committee 1 of the General Assembly on December 4, 1946, Foreign Minister Molotov made a number of points whose meanings are either not yet clear or are not in conformity with the United States' plan for controlling atomic energy.

1. The first point concerns the creation of two control commissions; one, "for the control of the execution of decision regarding the reduction of armaments"; the second, "for the control of the execution of the decision regarding the prohibition of the use of atomic energy for military purposes". The Security Council will establish these commissions which would be international and would have at their disposal "means of inspection for verifying the situation in all countries".

It has not yet been made clear just what was meant by control, inspection and verification of the situation. The U.S.S.R. presses for passing these resolutions, leaving clarification to be worked out later. As a minimum it may mean a body with international representation which would audit the figures on troops and weapons supplied to it by national governments.

What form inspection is to take is not yet clear. In reality, no concession was made on this point by Mr. Molotov. He merely voiced acceptance of a principle that had previously been agreed to in the terms of reference of the Atomic Energy Commission, etc. In this connection, it will be recalled that Professor Alexandrov has refused to participate in the discussions of the last two informal meetings of Committee 2 because aerial photography and ground surveys were being discussed as a means of detecting clandestine atomic energy activities. Aerial photography was taboo because it was military reconnaissance, and both were "political" questions.

⁶⁴ Staff member, United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission.

*In Russian, a convention is synonymous with a treaty but usually means a multilateral treaty. [Footnote in the original.]

2. It is significant that the original proposal for a commission for the control of the execution of the decision regarding the prohibition of the use of atomic energy for military purposes did not mention the necessary parallel control of this energy for peaceful purposes. This separation may be corrected by paragraph 2 of the American plan for the regulation and reduction of armaments (accepted by the U.S.S.R.) which calls on the Atomic Energy Commission to expedite its report and on the Security Council to expedite its consideration of that report. The control commission may be the one recommended by the Atomic Energy Commission. There was a positive development in this connection when Mr. Molotov accepted an amendment on 6 December to ensure that atomic energy and other scientific discoveries and technological developments would be utilized for the benefit of mankind.

3. The original U.S.S.R. amendment also urged the original Gromyko convention and called on the Security Council to expedite consideration of a draft convention for the prohibition of atomic weapons. The meeting on 6 December added to this convention, or in separate conventions, the prohibition of other weapons for mass destruction and the creation of an international system of control and inspection. These conventions may be the treaty we are working for; but we must make sure that they will be based on the recommendations of the Atomic Energy Commission and therefore include the control of atomic energy for peaceful purposes. This point has not been clarified as yet.

4. The U.S.S.R. has continued to maintain that the veto will not operate in these commissions, which shall be established within the framework of the Security Council. The United States' proposals submitted to the Atomic Energy Commission on 5 December placed the agency within the United Nations. They have refused, to date, to include these statements in the terms of reference of these commissions as unnecessary. A careful reading of their proposals indicates that, at most, the U.S.S.R. will waive the veto right in the day-to-day operation of the control commissions. The Security Council will still "bear the main responsibility for international peace and security", and anything bearing on punishments and sanctions will still be subject to the veto. It will be recalled that after Molotov spoke on 4 December accepting Senator Connally's plan with Soviet amendments, Wilgress,⁶⁵ Canada, agreed that the veto would not apply during the work of the control commissions, but that when it came to the application of sanctions arising out of inspection reports the use of the veto would be in "strict accord with the realities of the situation". He further added that since such application of sanctions would amount to a state of war, the veto was unimportant. Parodi had previously made a similar analysis, and the Australians have also expressed approval of this analysis. The United Kingdom has not been clear on this point either. China has indicated that it was willing to forego the veto on atomic energy matters, but it is not clear whether this includes the use of force in the application of sanctions. It is not known whether this is the official position of these countries or whether there is a lack of coordination between the political representatives and the atomic energy representatives of these countries. It may be advisable to get clarification on this point at the highest level.

5. There are some factors making for optimism in assessing the chances for agreement to the United States' plan for the control of atomic energy.

(a) Poor economic situation in the U.S.S.R. Reports indicate that the economic situation is not improving as anticipated in the Soviet Union. Stalin has indicated interest in a huge loan and Vyshinsky recalled at Madison Square Garden on 2 December⁶⁶ that Stalin had said in 1927 that Communist Russia and the capitalist states could get along economically. The U.S.S.R. needs help in reconstruction and will compromise to the extent necessary.

(b) In the atomic energy field, there may be a shortage of raw materials and certainly of equipment and trained personnel. The diversion of these latter is all the more difficult because of the economic situation in the U.S.S.R. Compromises may be made by the U.S.S.R. to gain the benefits of atomic energy.

(c) The U.S.S.R. seems to have decided that the possibilities for gains by being "tough" have been exhausted and has adopted a more conciliatory attitude.

All the above, with the possible exception of (b) are temporary phenomena and it seems desirable to proceed as rapidly as possible toward our goal. It is particularly desirable to get clarification on what is meant by inspection, control, convention, veto power in the control commissions and also whether the United States' plan submitted via the Atomic Energy Commission to the Security Council will form the basis for the control commission mentioned by Mr. Molotov.

A further possibility, and one to be guarded against, may be the result of Soviet difficulty in making headway in developing atomic energy. They may agree to the initial stages for the sake of gaining information and then attempt to pull out of international agreements.

JOSEPH CHASE

⁶⁵ L. D. Wilgress, Alternate Canadian Representative to the General Assembly.

⁶⁶ Reference is to Vyshinsky's address before a rally sponsored by the National Council of Soviet-American Friendship.

501.BB/12-1346 : Telegram

Senator Austin to the Secretary of State

URGENT

NEW YORK, December 13, 1946—1 a. m.

[Received 1:21 a. m.]

962. Following is text of resolution approved by subcommittee of Committee I to replace resolution on reports on troops:⁶⁷

“The GA

Desirous of implementing, as soon as possible, the resolution of the . . . Dec 1946 on the principles governing the regulation and reduction of armaments, Calls upon the SC to determine, as soon as possible, the information which the states members should be called upon to furnish, in order to give effect to this resolution.”

AUSTIN

SPA Files

*United Nations General Assembly Resolution Adopted on December 14, 1946*⁶⁸

A/267

PRINCIPLES GOVERNING THE GENERAL REGULATION AND REDUCTION OF ARMAMENTS

1. In pursuance of Article 11 of the Charter and with a view to strengthening international peace and security in conformity with the Purpose and Principles of the United Nations, ⁶⁷The General Assembly had discussed the report of the First Committee on the question of the presence of United Nations forces in non-enemy territories at its 52nd Plenary Meeting, December 8, and at its 53rd and 54th Meetings, December 10. In regard to the report which contained the resolution originally adopted, see telegram 865, November 27, from New York, p. 1067.

At its 54th Meeting, the General Assembly referred the First Committee's report to Subcommittee 3 of the First Committee. The Subcommittee, unable to arrive at a text acceptable to both the Soviet Union and the United Kingdom, concluded that the resolution it had drafted on the regulation of armaments had dealt adequately with the question of United Nations troops on non-enemy territories and therefore recommended that the resolution providing for reporting on troops originally approved by the First Committee be replaced by the text contained in the present telegram. The Soviet representative opposed the decision. For the text of the report of Subcommittee 3 on troop information reporting, see GA (1/2), First Committee, p. 334. The First Committee adopted the substitute resolution at its 44th Meeting, December 13. For the report of the First Committee to the General Assembly, see GA (1/2), Plenary, pp. 1506-1507. The General Assembly approved the present text at its 63rd Plenary Meeting, December 14.

⁶⁸The First Committee unanimously adopted this text at its 44th Meeting, December 13, having made a few minor drafting changes in the text recommended by Subcommittee 3; with respect to the latter's work, see footnote 58, p. —. For the text of the report of the 1st Committee transmitting this text to the General Assembly, see GA (1/2), Plenary, pp. 1557-1559. The General Assembly discussed the resolution at its 62nd Meeting, December 13, and its 63rd Meeting, December 14. The consensus of the delegations was highly favorable to the resolution and optimistic as to its significance for the future of the regulation of armaments. Addressing the 63rd Meeting, Secretary Byrnes described the resolution as “a splendid contribution to the cause of peace”. At the same meeting, the General Assembly approved the resolution by acclamation.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY,

RECOGNIZES the necessity of an early general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces.

2. Accordingly,

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY,

RECOMMENDS that the Security Council give prompt consideration to formulating the practical measures, according to their priority, which are essential to provide for the general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces and to assure that such regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces will be generally observed by all participants and not unilaterally by only some of the participants. The plans formulated by the Security Council shall be submitted by the Secretary General to the Members of the United Nations for consideration at a special session of the General Assembly. The treaties or conventions approved by the General Assembly shall be submitted to the signatory States for ratification in accordance with Article 26 of the Charter.

3. As an essential step towards the urgent objective of prohibiting and eliminating from national armaments atomic and all other major weapons adaptable now and in the future to mass destruction, and the early establishment of international control of atomic energy and other modern scientific discoveries and technical developments to ensure their use only for peaceful purposes,

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY,

URGES the expeditious fulfilment by the Atomic Energy Commission of its terms of reference as set forth in Section 5 of the General Assembly Resolution of 24 January 1946.

4. In order to ensure that the general prohibition, regulation and reduction of armaments are directed towards the major weapons of modern warfare and not merely towards the minor weapons,

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY,

RECOMMENDS that the Security Council expedite consideration of the reports which the Atomic Energy Commission will make to the Security Council and that it facilitate the work of that Commission, and also that the Security Council expedite consideration of a draft convention or conventions for the creation of an international system of control and inspection, these conventions to include the prohibition of atomic and all other major weapons adaptable now and in the future to mass destruction and the control of atomic energy to the extent necessary to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes.

5. THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY,

FURTHER RECOGNIZES that essential to the general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces is the provision of practical and effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying States against the hazards of violations and evasions.

Accordingly,

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY,

RECOMMENDS to the Security Council that it give prompt consideration to the working out of proposals to provide such practical and effective safeguards in connection with the control of atomic energy and the general regulation and reduction of armaments.

6. To ensure the adoption of measures for the early general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces, for the prohibition of the use of atomic energy for military purposes and the elimination from national armaments of atomic and all other major weapons adaptable now or in the future to mass destruction, and for the control of atomic energy to the extent necessary to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes,

THERE SHALL BE ESTABLISHED, within the framework of the Security Council, which bears the primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, an international system, as mentioned in paragraph 4, operating through special organs, which organs shall derive their powers and status from the convention or conventions under which they are established.

7. THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, regarding the problem of security as closely connected with that of disarmament,

RECOMMENDS the Security Council to accelerate as much as possible the placing at its disposal of the armed forces mentioned in Article 43 of the Charter;

IT RECOMMENDS the Members to undertake the progressive and balanced withdrawal, taking account of the needs of occupation, of their armed forces stationed in ex-enemy territories, and the withdrawal without delay of armed forces stationed in the territories of Members without their consent freely and publicly expressed in treaties or agreements consistent with the Charter and not contradicting international agreements;

IT FURTHER RECOMMENDS a corresponding reduction of national armed forces, and a general progressive and balanced reduction of national armed forces.

8. Nothing herein contained shall alter or limit the resolution of the General Assembly passed on 24 January 1946, creating the Atomic Energy Commission.

9. THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY,

CALLS upon all Members of the United Nations to render every possible assistance to the Security Council and the Atomic Energy Commission in order to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and collective security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human economic resources.

Lot 54D394 ⁶⁹

Memorandum of Conversation, by G. Hayden Raynor of the United States Delegation to the United Nations General Assembly

SECRET

[NEW YORK,] December 14, 1946.

Participants: Mr. Paul Gore-Booth, of the United Kingdom Delegation
 Mr. Percy Wells, of the United Kingdom Delegation
 Mr. Hayden Raynor

During the course of the Secretary's speech this evening ⁷⁰ Mr. Gore-Booth expressed to me rather strong concern on the part of the United Kingdom Delegation over the fact that the United Kingdom Delegation had not been informed in advance of the substance of this speech. He was referring, of course, to the portions thereof in which we gave certain information with respect to our troops stationed in foreign territories. (In this connection it should be recalled that Mr. Bevin voted against switching the order of the agenda so that this question would be taken up tonight.) It seemed apparent from the way Mr. Gore-Booth spoke that the British were considerably nettled and felt that the disclosure by us of certain information with respect to troops abroad placed them in a difficult position. He did in the conversation indicate appreciation of the desirability, or almost necessity, of our taking this step but stressed that if they had had some advance information, although Mr. Bevin could not have included like information in his statement, he would have been able to prepare more comprehensive remarks than were possible on the spur of the moment.

Saturday, while talking generally to Mr. Percy Wells, I found occasion to ascertain discreetly from him as to whether Mr. Bevin had in fact been seriously discommoded the previous night. He disclaimed, I felt sincerely, that Mr. Bevin had been upset or resentful about the matter. From the manner in which he spoke, I believe that in the heat of the moment Mr. Gore-Booth had perhaps over-stated to me the feeling of the British Delegation on this matter.

⁶⁹ Certain files of the Office of European Affairs.

⁷⁰ The reference is to Mr. Byrnes' statement at the 62nd Meeting of the General Assembly, December 13, in which he described where and in what number United States troops were stationed in foreign territory; for the text of his address, see GA (1/2), Plenary, pp. 1289-1296.

In this connection it should be recalled that on Saturday morning Mr. Gromyko expressed a willingness to accept the troop resolution as amended by the United States Delegation to include information on troops at home, but omitting the British provision on verification, and also omitting the Soviet amendment on the disclosure of information on armaments. I took occasion to point out to Mr. Gore-Booth that we could have accepted this offer made by Mr. Gromyko as it met all the points for which we had been fighting. I suggested to him that if we had had any desire to make it difficult for them which, I of course know he appreciated we did not, we could have accepted Mr. Gromyko's proposal rather than voting against it and voting in favor of the innocuous proposal on this matter presented by Committee 1.⁷¹ Mr. Gore-Booth appreciated this situation, and I feel certain that any possible lingering resentment or concern brought about the night before was dissipated as a result of this course of action by the United States Delegation.

Matthews Files

Memorandum by Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State, to the Director of the Office of European Affairs (Matthews)

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] December 27, 1946.

I have read General Smith's letter giving an analysis of a memorandum of conversation between Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Sobolev in New York.⁷² While in New York I had seen the memorandum of conversation in question (a copy of which at my suggestion was sent to the Secretary and is in his files).

I am basically in entire agreement with the Embassy's analysis of the Soviet attitude. My only comment is that while it is certain that the Russians would try to exploit any international scheme for control to weaken the non-Soviet world without weakening the Soviet world, I feel it does not necessarily follow that we should permit them so to use any international authority. It seems to me that that is a question for proper and intelligent handling of the problem on our part. Indeed with proper implementation the international control of atomic energy might force the beginning of a change in the Soviet structure.

⁷¹ The reference is to the proceedings of the 63rd Meeting of the General Assembly, December 14.

⁷² For Ambassador Smith's letter, dated November 19, see p. 1016. For memorandum of conversation, dated October 21, see p. 955.

The Kremlin will obviously do everything in its power to prevent this, but the basic contradiction between a police state and an international authority does not automatically mean that the international authority would lose out. I gather that it was some such possibility that General Smith had in mind in the paragraph on page 3 that you marked which at first glance appears to be inconsistent with the considerations set forth earlier.

As to the paragraph on page 4 which you question, I think General Smith feels that we should proceed with the international control of atomic energy in cooperation with any nation that accepts it in good faith and not hold up international control because of the failure of the Soviets to join in such control. I am not entirely sure that I agree with that thesis since the net effect might be to water down our advantage as the possessors of the atomic bomb without any appreciable gain if the Soviets stay out. I am more inclined to the view that if a completely adequate arrangement cannot be made with the Soviet Union it would be better to drop any scheme for international control, which would only be partial if Russia were out, and leave our hands free to develop atomic energy on a national scale.⁷³

500.A/12-2846 : Telegram

*The Acting United States Representative at the United Nations
(Johnson) to the Secretary of State*

US URGENT

NEW YORK, December 28, 1946—3 : 30 p. m.

[Received 3 : 42 p. m.]

998. Following letter from Gromyko to SYG⁷⁴ regarding implementation of GA resolution on reduction of armaments, dated December 27, was received by the delegation at 3 p. m. December 28 over the UN news line with notation that it was for press release at 6 p. m. December 28 :

“I have the honour to request you to include in the agenda of the next meeting of the SC on 31 December an item on the consideration of the following proposal which I make on behalf of my government.

‘Considering that the general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces is the most important measure for the strengthening of international peace and security and that the implementation of the GA’s decision on this question is one of the most urgent and most important tasks facing the SC, the Council resolves :

⁷³ Mr. Acheson, to whom Mr. Matthews transmitted the file copy on February 1, 1947, made the following marginal notation beside the final sentence : “In cooperation with UK and Canada.”

⁷⁴ Secretary General of the United Nations (Trygve H. Lie).

1. To proceed with the working out of practical measures on the implementation of the GA's decision of 14 December 1946, on the general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces and on the establishment of international control assuring the reduction of armaments and armed forces.

2. To establish a commission of the representatives of countries members of the SC which has to be charged to prepare and submit to the SC within a period of from one to two months but not later than three months its proposals in accordance with paragraph 1 of this decision?

Please accept, Mr. Secretary-General, the assurance of my very high esteem to you."

JOHNSON

500.A/12-2846 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Acting United States Representative at the United Nations (Johnson)

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, December 30, 1946—7 p. m.

U.S. URGENT

327. Urtel 998, Dec. 28. 1. You should at appropriate point during consideration of placing on agenda of Dec. 31 meeting Soviet proposal re armaments make statement along following lines:

a. US does not oppose placing this proposal on agenda.

b. This Govt feels, however, that the agenda item should preferably be, not consideration of Soviet proposal, but consideration of GA resolution of Dec. 14 on "principles governing the general regulation and reduction of armaments". This seems more desirable approach as it places discussion in proper perspective. In this connection other delegations will doubtless also have views as to best way in which SC should deal with its responsibilities under GA Resolution. It would be most in conformity with SC's responsibilities to consider all such proposals on equal basis rather than give priority to any one.

c. US also has proposal on this subject which it desires to have considered by SC, copies of which are being distributed for consideration of SC members.

d. However SC may resolve this procedural question which we do not wish to press, consideration of topic should be postponed until first meeting in 1947, and it should be clearly understood that our proposal and any other proposals relating to implementation of GA resolution which may be introduced will be considered concurrently and on equal basis with Soviet proposal. Postponement would have added advantage that SC would begin what will surely be very important and quite extended discussions of whole problem of regulation of armaments with membership which will be continuing consideration of problem in 1947.

2. Following is text of US draft resolution which should be distributed in accordance with paragraph 1 (c) above :

“The Security Council resolves that: (1) Pursuant to the General Assembly Resolution of December 14 concerning the ‘Principles governing the general regulation and reduction of armaments’, it gives first priority to the establishment of international control over atomic energy and, accordingly, it will consider and act upon the forthcoming report of the Atomic Energy Commission as soon as received; ⁷⁵ (2) It will thereafter consider what further practical measures it should take and in what order of priority for the implementation of the said General Assembly Resolution.”

3. It is not believed you will need to speak in support of US Resolution at meeting on Dec. 31. Further instructions with respect thereto will be communicated subsequently. In the meantime you will wish to bear in mind that my speech of Dec. 13 ⁷⁶ has already clearly established order of priorities which US believes should govern consideration of GA Resolution of Dec. 14. Moreover, with respect to Gromyko’s proposal, it is our view that no additional commission should be established in general field of arms regulation at present time.

4. Please communicate above to Baruch immediately.

BYRNES

500.A/12-3146 : Telegram

*The Acting United States Representative at the United Nations
(Johnson) to the Secretary of State*

SECRET URGENT NEW YORK, December 31, 1946—4:30 p. m.
[Received 4:52 p. m.]

1002. Paragraph 2 of Dept’s 327, December 30. In connection with the American proposal which delegation presented to the SC today,⁷⁷

⁷⁵ The Atomic Energy Commission had debated the subject of its report at its 8th Meeting, December 17, and 9th Meeting, December 20. At the latter session, it voted to establish a Working Committee (the Commission itself in executive session) to prepare the Commission’s report on the basis of the United States proposal on findings and recommendations (see footnote 55, p. 1083), the General Assembly Resolution on the Regulation of Armaments of December 14, and the report of AEC Committee 2 on safeguards and control, adopted by that Committee on December 18. The Soviet Union and Poland opposed this procedure. The Working Committee agreed at its 5th Meeting to submit a report to the AEC which presented all texts of disputed passages. At the 10th plenary meeting of the Commission, December 30, the majority position on the report of the Working Committee was accepted as the Commission’s report to the Security Council by a vote of ten members with the Soviet Union and Poland abstaining. The First Report of the Atomic Energy Commission to the Security Council, December 31, 1946, is printed as AEC (I), Special Supplement.

⁷⁶ The speech under reference was that delivered by Mr. Byrnes at the 62nd Meeting of the General Assembly.

⁷⁷ The reference is to the 88th Meeting of the Security Council.

British delegate Cadogan passed a note at the Council table to Herschel Johnson which expressed regret that the first paragraph of the American proposal called for consideration and action on the AEC report "as soon as received" (by SC).

The note stated :

"I rather regret the last phrase of your paragraph 1. I had hoped a pause might ensue before bringing the Atomic Commission report before the Council. We don't want to rush head-on into a veto, and are we clear enough yet as to the position that might be produced by an 'abstention'? I should have liked time for reflexion."

At the close of today's Council meeting, the delegation was informed by De Rose (France) and Hasluck (Australia)⁷⁸ that the Council should not consider the AEC report for 3 weeks in order to give the Russians an opportunity to reflect on the AEC subcommittee's vote yesterday, which found all members in favor of the report except Russia and Poland who abstained.⁷⁹ Both De Rose and Hasluck felt that it would be better tactically not to force consideration and quick action on the AEC report but instead to give an opportunity for the implications of the vote to have an effect in Moscow.

JOHNSON

500.A/1-447

*Memorandum by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the President*⁸⁰

SECRET

WASHINGTON, 31 December 1946.

In accordance with your directive, the Joint Chiefs of Staff have examined a resolution on disarmament proposed by Senator Austin and forwarded to you by letter from the Secretary of State.⁸¹

The proposed resolution has been overtaken by events since on 30 November 1946 the United States submitted a materially different resolution on the subject and on 14 December 1946 the General Assembly, prior to adjournment of the 1946 session, formally approved a general resolution on disarmament. In view of the fact, however, that disarmament and the regulation of armaments seem now to be destined for further and more specific consideration in the Security Council of the United Nations, the Joint Chiefs of Staff are submitting their ⁷⁸ Paul Hasluck, Australian Representative on the Security Council; Acting Representative on the Atomic Energy Commission.

⁷⁹ The reference is to the 10th Plenary Meeting of the Atomic Energy Commission at which its report to the Security Council was adopted.

⁸⁰ This memorandum was forwarded by the President to the Secretary of State on January 4, 1947.

⁸¹ For the draft resolution under reference, see p. 1061.

views on the proposals contained in Senator Austin's resolution for consideration in connection with future developments in this field.

Except for certain broad statements made in the fourth and fifth paragraphs of the preamble on the subjects of aggressive warfare and United Nations security forces, respectively, comment on which is made below, the Joint Chiefs of Staff perceive no objection to the provisions of the proposed resolution from the strictly military point of view.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff do not regard, nor do they believe the world regards, the current military establishment of the United States as a menace either to world peace or to international security. They believe that armaments are a consequence and not a cause. The need for them, today as throughout history, arises from the existence of conflicting international aims and ideologies, and will pass only with the passing of such fundamental reasons for conflict between nations. Consequently the Joint Chiefs of Staff do not consider that commitments toward the regulation of armaments or disarmament should be made prior to or independently of the solution of other problems affecting world peace generally and, specifically, the security of the United States. They believe that United States armaments are a vital factor contributing to our own as well as to international peace and security and should not be considered independently of other problems affecting that security. Prior to the settlement of such problems the military requirements of the United States cannot be determined. Foremost among these problems, from the military point of view, are the establishment of a system of effective international control of atomic energy along the lines of that proposed by the United States in the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission; the conclusion of the peace treaties and enforcement of those terms therein having predominant military implications; and the conclusion of agreements for providing contingents of armed forces for the Security Council of the United Nations.

In connection with the inference in paragraph four of the preamble of the proposed resolution that a general reduction of armaments will remove the means of conducting aggressive warfare the Joint Chiefs of Staff would point out the position of the United States vis-a-vis the Soviet Union in this regard. The military strength of the United States rests in limited, but highly developed, ground, air and naval forces employing weapons and equipment of great technical complexity, whereas that of the Soviets rests principally on the large size of its ground armies which are not so dependent on technical armaments for possible aggressive operations, particularly on the Eurasian continent. Therefore, any attempt at disarmament or the regulation of armaments on the superficially attractive and seemingly logical basis of eliminating or regulating "offensive" ("aggressive") weapons (atomic bombs, strategic aircraft and naval combat vessels) would only serve to limit our own ability to defend the United States or retaliate against aggression without being correspondingly effective in depriving the Soviets of their large ground armies which could, in the absence of effective opposition, be used offensively to overrun Europe and Asia if the Soviets chose to do so.

It would appear unnecessary and unwise for the United States to state, as indicated in the fifth paragraph of the preamble of the proposed resolution, that the "ultimate objective of disarmament should be the reduction of armaments to a level of . . . (United Nations security forces) . . . together with the forces necessary to maintain domestic order and tranquillity." Such a statement implies that the United Nations, under the present Charter, will possess the full capability of utilizing the forces called for by Article 43 of the Charter to maintain world peace and security. Such a statement is unrealistic since the veto provisions in the Security Council make it impossible for the security forces to be used against any one of the powers possessing the veto, or against a satellite or ally of one of those powers if the latter wished to prevent such action. Such a statement would be misleading to the American people and would encourage them to underestimate the military strength required to insure their own security.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff firmly believe that until the problems mentioned in the fourth paragraph of this memorandum are resolved it is premature to go beyond the discussion stage of disarmament and regulation of armaments. In this connection they would invite attention to their views on this general subject as transmitted to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee on 6 December 1946 for forwarding to the Secretaries of State, War and Navy as follows:

[Here follows text of SWNCC 240/1, printed on p. 1091.]

For the Joint Chiefs of Staff:

WILLIAM D. LEAHY

Fleet Admiral, U.S. Navy,

Chief of Staff to the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy

UNITED STATES NATIONAL SECURITY POLICY: THE EXTENSION OF MILITARY ASSISTANCE TO FOREIGN NATIONS; ESTIMATES OF THREATS TO THE NATIONAL SECURITY; COORDINATION OF POLITICAL AND MILITARY POLICY; UNITED STATES POLICY WITH RESPECT TO THE ACQUISITION OF MILITARY BASES AND AIR TRANSIT RIGHTS

Editorial Note

A substantial portion of the documentation printed in the Foreign Relations series for 1946 concerns subjects of relevance to the national security. Documentation in the present compilation is related to the formulation of high level, general policy. It is necessary to consider this material in connection with papers on specific issues and areas found elsewhere in the Foreign Relations volumes for 1946 for examination of policy implementation and for appreciation of the role of specific circumstances in the development of general policy. The compilations noted below are most directly related to the more general documentation printed here.

For documentation on United States policy at the United Nations with respect to the regulation of armaments and collective security, see pages 712 ff. Regarding foreign policy aspects of United States development of atomic energy, see pages 1197 ff. For documentation on the Soviet Union and national security, see volume VI, pages 673-817 passim. Regarding discussions relating to joint United States-Canadian defense measures, see volume V, pages 53 ff. To locate documentation on United States policy with respect to military assistance to individual nations or areas, see the indexes of volumes V, VII, VIII, IX, X, and XI.

For documentation on United States policy regarding questions relating to the establishment of an international trusteeship system under the United Nations Charter, including President Truman's declaration of November 6 proposing a strategic area trusteeship with the United States as administering authority for the Pacific islands under mandate to Japan, see pages 544 ff. To locate documentation on United States policy with respect to the acquisition of bases and military air transit rights in various areas of the world, see the indexes of volumes V, VII, VIII, and XI.

811.20/11-145

Memorandum by the Secretary of War (Patterson) to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET

WASHINGTON, November 1, 1945.

Because of the interdependence of demobilization and U.S. foreign policy, it is believed the State Department will be interested in the War Department's over-all demobilization plans. At the same time the War Department would benefit by State Department guidance as to State Department objectives and policies which require implementation by the War Department.

Under present accelerated demobilization plans the Army may be reduced from its peak strength of over eight million men in August 1945 to approximately one point six million early in April 1946, instead of July as originally planned. Our forces in Europe will be reduced from their present strength of about one million six hundred thousand to less than four hundred thousand. Similarly, the one and one-half million men in the Pacific will be reduced to about four hundred thousand men, with approximately half of them in Japan and Korea.

To accomplish this drastic demobilization, a separation policy has been established which permits men with the longest service to be discharged first. While this is the most equitable plan as far as each individual is concerned, it greatly reduces the experience level throughout the Army and will require extensive reorganization and several months of training before any one of the three major components of the peacetime Army can be considered an effective fighting force. During this period our national commitments will continue without fully trained forces to implement them.

If present demobilization plans are permitted to continue unaltered, every man now overseas can be discharged prior to September 1946.

Since a time lag of four months must necessarily elapse between the adoption of any major change in personnel policy and its service-wide execution, decisions as to our occupational requirements after 1 March 1946 should be made immediately. The rate of repatriation can then be adjusted to provide at all times the necessary occupational troops. This, in turn, will in large measure determine the planning assumptions on which to base the over-all strength of the Army. Realistic assumptions to support the planned size of the Army—which must be defended before the Bureau of the Budget and the Congress—cannot be made without State Department guidance on occupational policy and occupational requirements.

While it is realized that the determination of ultimate objectives with regard to occupied countries is complicated by many unknown and constantly changing factors, the trend of current State Department thought would be most helpful in permitting the War Department to make plans to meet these occupational requirements and to determine the interim and ultimate size of the Army. The attached appendix contains questions, answers to which would prove most valuable to the War Department.² To permit the expeditious completion of the necessary studies, it is suggested that partial answers be furnished when they become available. A complete reply by early November is necessary to permit the War Department to make the necessary arrangements to implement National policy after 1 March 1946.

In summary, the War Department is endeavoring to underwrite at minimum cost a National insurance policy. What is needed is the State Department's estimate of the nature and extent of the probable hazards against which the War Department should be prepared to provide this insurance.

ROBERT P. PATTERSON

SWNNC Files ³

Memorandum by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] 7 November 1945.

SWNCC 38/25

Over-all Examination of U.S. Requirements for Military Bases and Rights ⁴

² The questions which comprise the appendix are contained in the reply (November 29, 1945, p. 1128) by the Secretary of State to the present memorandum.

³ Lot 52M45, the files of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee located in the National Archives under the administration of the Department of State. The State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee was the principal inter-departmental organization concerned with the coordination of foreign and military policies in 1946. Documentation regarding the establishment of SWNCC is printed in Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. 1, pp. 1466-1470. In 1946, the Department of State was initially represented on the committee by James C. Dunn, Assistant Secretary for European, Far Eastern, Near Eastern, and African Affairs; representing Mr. Dunn in his absence was H. Freeman Matthews, the Director of the Office of European Affairs. After the creation of the office of Assistant Secretary for Occupied Areas in April, Assistant Secretary John H. Hilldring became State representative. The War Department was represented by Assistant Secretary of War Howard C. Petersen, the Navy Department by Under Secretary of the Navy John L. Sullivan.

SWNCC held its first meeting on December 19, 1944, and met twice more in that year, approving a substantive policy paper on December 29. In 1945, SWNCC held 31 meetings and initiated 241 policy paper series. In 1946, SWNCC met 20 times, continued or completed the series begun in 1945, and commenced work on 104 additional series. In 1946, SWNCC was vitally concerned with problems relating to the occupation of Germany and Japan, but dealt with policy

Footnote 3 continued on following page.

⁴ Circulated in the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee as SWNCC 38/25, November 8, 1945.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff, in response to the suggestion of the Department of State in its letter to the Secretaries of War and the Navy dated 7 July 1945 (SWNCC 38/11—JCS 570/24),⁵ have completed an over-all examination of U.S. requirements for military bases and base rights outside the continental limits of the United States.

Appended hereto is a list of those bases and base sites for which diplomatic negotiations in the near future will be required in order to obtain the desired rights, together with appropriate information regarding each of the bases. This division of areas into essential and required is a general indication of the suggested priority for negotiations to obtain the indicated rights. It is appreciated that in practice the sequence of negotiations may be affected by other considerations. Failure to obtain a base listed in a higher category may require the reclassification of a base listed in a lower category.

In view of the political complications and difficulties involved in maintaining U.S. personnel and installations in foreign territory in peacetime and because of the elements of cost and manpower, it is believed that the State Department should give serious consideration to arrangements by which other nations undertake the load of maintaining required installations in certain areas in return for payment in one form or another by the United States.

In any instances where the State Department considers that installations should be maintained by other nations the matter should be referred to the Joint Chiefs of Staff for approval before final negotiations with respect thereto. The provisions of this paragraph will not apply to primary bases or primary base areas.

In connection with the appended list the following factors should be noted:

a. The Joint Chiefs of Staff consider that the comprehensive base system which will result from obtaining the desired rights is not only an inescapable requirement for United States security in the event of a failure of the United Nations Organization to preserve world peace, but that the provision of this system of bases will contribute materially coordination on a broad variety of matters. SWNCC subcommittees with the regional purview and subcommittees created for the consideration of specific questions were active. In addition to its policy formulation role, SWNCC repeatedly served as the liaison unit through which the Department of State requested and received military estimates on matters related to foreign policy.

(Footnote 3 continued)

In Foreign Relations volumes for 1945 and 1946, SWNCC documentation is presented according to subject in bilateral and general compilations. For additional information on the establishment, organization, and functions of SWNCC, see "The State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee," by Harold W. Moseley, Colonel Charles W. McCarthy, and Commander Alvin F. Richardson in the Department of State Bulletin, November 11, 1945, p. 745, and "The State-War-Navy Committee," by Major General John H. Hilldring in Logistics, April, 1947, p. 7.

⁵ Not printed.

to the effectiveness of that organization in maintaining peace throughout the world. It is anticipated that in drafting the contemplated agreement for furnishing military facilities to the Security Council, these bases, along with existing and projected ones of all member nations, would be considered in determining the availability of bases for carrying out such enforcement measures as may be directed by the Security Council.

b. The Joint Chiefs of Staff consider that no action is required in the case of bases now under lease to the U.S. as a result of transfer of U.S. destroyers to the Government of the United Kingdom.⁶ In the case of bases projected for the Philippine Islands no immediate action is required because of current U.S.-Philippine agreements.⁷

c. [Here follow views on the Japanese Mandated Islands and Central Pacific Islands detached from Japan.]⁸

d. In order to operate the U.S. system of bases and to provide alternate routes for movement of U.S. aircraft, the United States should have rights for air transit and technical stop at certain non-United States air bases and air base sites. Locations at which such rights may be desired are not included in the enclosed list but will be submitted at a later date in respect to areas where negotiations with other countries will be required.

e. The Joint Chiefs of Staff assume that Joint rights to numerous airfields in South America will be obtained by negotiations in implementation of the Act of Chapultepec⁹ and the joint United States-Brazil Agreement.¹⁰

⁶ For texts of notes, the exchange of which in Washington on September 2, 1940, constituted the agreement under reference, see Foreign Relations, 1940, vol. III, pp. 73-75; for text of the implementing agreement signed on March 27, 1941, at London, see Department of State Executive Agreement Series No. 235, or 55 Stat. (pt. 2) 1560.

⁷ For the text of the Preliminary Statement of General Principles Pertaining to the United States Military and Naval Base System in the Philippines To Be Used as a Basis for Detailed Discussions and Staff Studies, signed in Washington by President Truman and President Osmena on May 14, 1945, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. VI, p. 1208.

⁸ For information on this subject, see editorial note, p. 550.

⁹ For text, see Pan American Union, Final Act of the Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace, Mexico City, Mexico, February-March, 1945 (Washington, 1945). See also Department of State, Publication 2497, Conference Series No. 85, Report of the Delegation of the United States of America to the Inter-American Conference on War and Peace, Mexico City, Mexico, February 21-March 8, 1945 (Washington, 1946).

¹⁰ For text of the Military Aviation Agreement between the United States and Brazil signed at Rio de Janeiro on June 14, 1944, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. VII, pp. 560-565. For information on United States-Brazilian wartime cooperation, see Stetson Conn and Byron Fairchild, The Framework of Hemispheric Defense, in the official Army history United States Army in World War II, issued by the Office of the Chief of Military History, Department of the Army (Washington, 1960).

f. The Joint Chiefs of Staff assume that military base rights and air transit privileges required in Canada will be obtained in extension of present U.S.-Canadian agreements or through a satisfactory substitute therefor.¹¹

The enclosed list of base areas and of sites at which rights for air transit privileges are required is forwarded to the Secretary of State for his information and guidance and for such use as he may require in negotiations with countries concerned. The Joint Chiefs of Staff have, in the past, furnished the Department of State with specific military requirements for certain bases. Further details regarding specific bases and base sites and elaboration of the rights desired, including rights to install, maintain, operate and control aids to navigation, communications facilities and weather and warning stations, together with other pertinent information will be forthcoming.

In approving the above conclusions of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee agreed that the attached list is subject to revision by the addition of Formosa if a pending study by the Joint Chiefs of Staff concludes that it should be included in the list of required bases.

The State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee also noted that:

“On October 4, 1945, the Secretary of the Navy addressed a letter to the Secretary of State (SWNCC 38/20)¹² in which he listed locations in areas to which other powers claim sovereign or mandatory rights at which rights for naval bases and/or naval air bases are desired. The list contained in that letter is identical with the attached list except as follows:

(1) Rabaul and Formosa are included in the Secretary of the Navy's letter but not in the attached list. The Joint Chiefs of Staff are currently reconsidering inclusion of these two areas.

(2) Transit rights in the Marquesas (Nuka Hiva) and at Aitutaki were included in the Secretary of the Navy's letter but not in the attached list. Presumably these two locations will be included in a subsequent statement by the Joint Chiefs of Staff relative to rights of air transit and technical stop.

¹¹ For text of the Agreement Between the United States and Canada Relating to Flights of Military Aircraft, effected by exchange of notes signed at Ottawa, February 13, 1945, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts (TIAS) No. 2056, or 62 Stat. (pt. 3) 3943. For information on United States-Canadian wartime cooperation, see Stanley W. Dziuban, Military Relations between the United States and Canada, 1939-1945, in the United States Army in World War II series (Washington, 1959).

¹² Not printed.

(3) In the Secretary of the Navy's letter the maximum rights desired at Manus and at Ascension were listed as "exclusive". In the attached list the maximum is listed as "joint". The latter should be considered as controlling.

(4) Certain bases listed by the Secretary of the Navy's letter are listed in the attached list only for air use. This is consistent since the only naval use at these locations is for naval air purposes."

Appendix

Base	Sovereignty	Rights		Use
		Max.	Min.
1. Essential:
Galapagos Is.	Ecuador	Exclusive*	Joint	Naval and Air
Manus	Aus. Man.	Joint †	Joint	Naval and Air
Iceland		Exclusive	Joint	Naval and Air
Panama Republic (airfields)		Exclusive	Joint	Air
Canton	U.S.-British	Exclusive	Exclusive	Naval and Air
Greenland	Denmark	Exclusive	Joint	Naval and Air
Azores Is.	Portugal	Joint	Participating ‡	Naval and Air
Cape Verde Is.	Portugal	Joint	Participating	Naval and Air
Ascension Is.	British	Joint	Joint	Air
2. Required: (If reasonably obtainable by negotiations, but not absolutely essential to the base system.)
Tarawa	British	Joint	Joint	Naval and Air
Funafuti	Disputed U.S.-British	Exclusive	Joint	Naval and Air
Talara	Peru	Joint	Participating	Air
Canary Is.	Spain	Joint	Participating	Naval and Air
Morotai	Dutch	Joint	Participating	Air

*Exclusive: The long term right to use as a military base under the exclusive control of the United States. [Footnote in the original.]

†Joint: The long term right to use as a military base jointly with the government of original sovereignty. [Footnote in the original.]

‡Participating: The long term right to participate with other nations, on the most-favored-nation principle in the use of a military base. [Footnote in the original.]

Base	Sovereignty	Rights		Use
		Max.	Min.
Biak	Dutch	Joint	Participating	Air
Guadalcanal-Tulagi	British	Joint	Participating	Naval and Air
Espiritu Santo	French-British	Joint	Participating	Naval and Air
Noumea	French	Joint	Participating	Naval and Air
Viti Levu	British	Joint	Participating	Naval and Air
Christmas	U.S.-British	Exclusive	Exclusive	Air
Bora Bora	French	Joint	Joint	Naval
Clipperton	French	Exclusive	Joint	Air
Edmonton-Whitehorse route to Alaska	Canada	Joint	Joint	Air
Fort Chimo-Frobisher Bay route to Greenland	Canada	Joint	Joint	Air
Goose Bay	Newfoundland	Joint	Participating	Air
Upolu	New Zealand	Joint	Participating	Air
Salinas	Ecuador	Joint	Participating	Air
Batista Field	Cuba	Joint	Participating	Air
St. Julian-Lafe	Cuba	Joint	Participating	Naval and Air
Curacao	Dutch	Joint	Participating	Air
Surinam	Dutch	Joint	Participating	Air
Casablanca-Port Lyautey		Joint	Participating	Naval and Air
Dakar	French	Joint	Participating	Naval and Air
Monrovia	Liberia	Joint	Participating	Naval and Air
Formosa ¹³	China	Exclusive	Joint	Naval aid Air

The above list is predicated on the following assumptions:

a. [Here follows comment on the Japanese Mandated Islands and Central Pacific Islands detached from Japan.]

b. Base rights in the Philippines will be as required by U.S.

c. Additional rights in Canada will result from agreements under the Joint Canadian-U.S. Basic Defense Plan.

d. Rights in Mexico, Central and South America will be obtained as required in implementation of the Act of Chapultepec.

¹³ Added by a corrigendum of November 9 (SWNCC Files).

Secretariat Files¹⁴

*Minutes of the 167th Meeting of the Secretary of State's Staff Committee, Department of State, Washington, November 13, 1945, 9:30 a. m.*¹⁵

TOP SECRET

Present:

The Secretary (presiding)
 The Under Secretary¹⁶
 The Counselor¹⁷
 Messrs. Clayton¹⁸
 Dunn¹⁹
 Hackworth²⁰
 McCormack²¹
 Pasvolsky²²
 Russell²³
 Hiss²⁴
 Gange²⁵
 Lewis²⁶
 Rothwell²⁷

Absent:

Messrs. Benton²⁸
 Braden²⁹

¹⁴ Lot 122, a consolidated lot file consisting of records of inactive or terminated committees of the Department of State or inter-departmental committees on which the Department of State was represented. This material was retired by the staff of the Executive Secretariat of the Department of State.

¹⁵ The Secretary's Staff Committee, organized in 1944 by Secretary of State Stettinius to formulate and coordinate Departmental policy, included the Under Secretary and the directors of the major areas of the Department. This body met thrice weekly from December 20, 1944, and continued to function on a regular basis after Byrnes succeeded Stettinius as Secretary of State in July, 1945. The Committee met 171 times in 1945 considering a wide range of subjects relating to the war, the liquidation of the war, and the establishment of the United Nations. The 30 meetings which were held in 1946 were devoted primarily to matters relating to the internal organization of the Department, Congressional relations, public information policy, and Latin America. The records of the Committee are located in the Secretariat Files.

¹⁶ Dean Acheson.

¹⁷ Benjamin V. Cohen.

¹⁸ William L. Clayton, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs.

¹⁹ James Clement Dunn, Assistant Secretary of State for European, Far Eastern, Near Eastern, and African Affairs.

²⁰ Green H. Hackworth, Legal Adviser.

²¹ Alfred McCormack, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State for Research and Intelligence.

²² Leo Pasvolsky, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State for International Organization and Security Affairs.

²³ Donald S. Russell, Assistant Secretary of State for Administration.

²⁴ Alger Hiss, Director of the Office of Special Political Affairs.

²⁵ John F. Gange of the Central Secretariat.

²⁶ James H. Lewis of the Central Secretariat.

²⁷ C. Easton Rothwell, Executive Secretary of the Central Secretariat.

²⁸ William Benton, Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs.

²⁹ Spruille Braden, Assistant Secretary of State for American Republic Affairs.

The Committee met at 9:30 a. m.

AGENDA ITEM

Action on Joint Chiefs of Staff Statement of United States Military Policy. (Document SC-169a; Agenda Item 1)³⁰

MR. PASVOLSKY requested MR. HISS to present document SC-169a, which included a statement of United States military policy prepared and approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff,³¹ and recommendations regarding the action to be taken by the Department with respect to the statement.

MR. HISS said the Joint Chiefs of Staff statement had come to the Department through the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee.³² It was submitted for the comments of the Department of State and eventually would be presented to the President for approval. MR. HISS said that the statement had been studied by the Counselor and by the directors of all of the geographic and economic offices of the Department, and on the basis of their comments the recommendations had been drafted.

MR. HISS said that the first recommendation was that the general observation should be made to the War and Navy Departments that because of the necessarily general terms of such a statement, its application will require careful consideration and close coordination between the State, War, and Navy Departments.

MR. HISS also pointed out that a general criticism of the statement as drafted was its emphasis on the possibility of a breakdown in friendly relations between the Great Powers and its failure to emphasize the necessity for insuring that the United States has adequate Allies.

MR. HISS then outlined the specific comments which it was proposed to transmit informally to the Secretaries of War and the Navy and to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee, as set forth in Annex II of the document. With reference to paragraph 2 of the Annex, he pointed out that the "four principal tasks" which President Truman, ³⁰ SC-169a is not printed; SC-169b, a revision thereof, November 16, is printed infra.

³¹ The Joint Chiefs of Staff approved this statement of military policy on September 19, 1945, and forwarded it to the Secretaries of War and Navy requesting that it be transmitted to the Secretary of State and the President. For text, see SWNCC 282, March 27, 1946, p. 1160.

³² The JCS statement of military policy was submitted to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee on September 26, 1945, by Assistant Secretary of War John J. McCloy. Subsequently, at the request of Assistant Secretary of War Howard C. Petersen, the statement was republished as SWNCC 282, March 27, 1946.

in his address at New York on October 27th,³³ had said determined the kind of armed might we propose to maintain, differed in order and emphasis from the determining policies listed in the Joint Chiefs of Staff statement. MR. HISS suggested that the statement might be revised to correspond with the President's definition.

Referring to paragraph 3 of the Annex, MR. HISS pointed out that the Joint Chiefs of Staff statement did not place sufficient emphasis on the task of enforcing the terms of peace upon Germany and Japan. In paragraph 4 the point was made that the responsibilities of the United States as a principal member of the United Nations should figure more prominently in any statement of United States military policy. It was also pointed out that the United Nations was built upon the power relations existing among the wartime Allies. If the balance of that relationship in military potential were to be impaired, the fabric of the United Nations would be weakened. Therefore, greater recognition should be given to our duties and responsibilities under the United Nations Charter as determinants of our military needs.

MR. HISS also referred to paragraph 6 and to his previous comment regarding the failure of the Joint Chiefs of Staff statement to emphasize the need for the support of our principal Allies in the event of future conflict. He also called attention to the several economic considerations mentioned in paragraph 7 which seemed to require further study.

MR. HISS informed the Committee that Mr. Benton had sent him a memorandum³⁴ endorsing the approach taken in Annex II but suggesting that certain further points should be considered for possible inclusion in the military policy statement, including mention of the atomic bomb, military and naval bases, and compulsory military training.

THE SECRETARY said that to refer the Joint Chiefs of Staff statement to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee seemed to be the best procedure. He asked who had prepared the paper for the Joint Chiefs of Staff. MR. PASVOLSKY said it had probably been prepared under the direction of Admiral Willson and Generals Fairchild and Embick,³⁵ and the general tenor of the paper seemed to reflect the views of General Embick. MR. PASVOLSKY said the critical question raised by the whole statement was whether we are to focus attention on our independent military strength or on our new position in the world as a member of the United Nations Organization.

³³ For text of President Truman's Navy Day address, October 27, 1945, see Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States: Harry S. Truman, 1945 (Washington, Government Printing Office, 1961), p. 431, or Department of State Bulletin, October 28, 1945, p. 653. For the "four principal tasks", see document SC-169b, infra.

³⁴ Not printed.

³⁵ Vice Adm. Russell Willson, Maj. Gen. Muir S. Fairchild, and Lt. Gen. Stanley D. Embick of the Joint Strategic Survey Committee of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

MR. CLAYTON, referring to paragraph 7 in Annex II, said he agreed that the economic aspects of the Joint Chiefs of Staff statement would require very careful consideration, particularly the one calling for "the maintenance of a large merchant marine, both active and reserve". He pointed out that before the war the United States merchant marine had amounted to about 10 million tons. The Joint Chiefs' recommendation might mean anything—perhaps 25 or 30 million tons. He said no one believed we could operate economically a merchant fleet of more than 12 or 15 million tons, and one of 25 or 30 million tons would have disastrous effects on the merchant marines of such countries as Great Britain and Norway, and would adversely affect our international trade position. He said the references to the maintenance of industries essential to the war effort and to the stockpiling of strategic material also required further careful study.

THE COUNSELOR agreed that the several points mentioned by Mr. Clayton required further study but he pointed out that even greater difficulty arose in connection with the question of how the general policies set forth in the document would be construed in practice. He said he would hesitate to say that such a statement should not be put down on paper at all but he thought there were as many disadvantages as there were advantages in so doing. If the statement is to be put down on paper, however, THE COUNSELOR said it was important that the statement should clearly recognize the importance of constant cooperation between the State, War, and Navy Departments, and that some provision should be made for requiring reconsideration and revision of the statement at least once a year. He referred to MR. BEN-
TON's suggestion regarding inclusion of a statement on the atomic bomb and said, for example, that while it might be inappropriate to include such a reference at the present time, it might be possible to do this in the next revision of the statement. THE COUNSELOR suggested that clarification of the statement regarding the merchant marine was particularly important since any Army or Navy officer who had seen the reference to this topic in the general statement would feel free to make public statements in the same vein. THE SECRETARY agreed with THE COUNSELOR that the statement as drafted was practically a mandate to go ahead with a shipping program such as that advocated by Admiral Land.³⁶

(The Secretary and Mr. Clayton left the meeting at this point.)

MR. HACKWORTH asked what use would be made of the paper after its approval and especially whether it would be made public. MR. HISS said that he understood that there was no intention of making it public but he pointed out that it must always be remembered that it might be considered desirable at some future time to publish the statement. THE COUNSELOR said that even if it should not be made public, other nations would doubtless learn of it and he thought that even friendly nations might misunderstand some of its features as it was now drafted.

³⁶ Vice Adm. Emory S. Land, U.S. Navy (retired), Chairman of the Maritime Commission.

MR. McCORMACK said he thought the analysis in the document was rather poor and needed to be strengthened. MR. PASVOLSKY said that one point in Annex II which should be improved was the reference to the regulation of armaments. He pointed out that we had built the United Nations Organization on the principle that the regulation of armaments could be deferred for future consideration. However, he felt that the atomic bomb had brought the question to the fore and that it required greater emphasis. He suggested that a special paragraph be included in Annex II on this point.

THE COUNSELOR suggested that in requesting the sub-committee of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee to revise the paper, it should be made clear that such revision should not be limited to the suggestions submitted by the Department (as outlined in Annex II) but that the whole statement should be carefully considered and revised in the light of staff study.

There was also a discussion of procedure in the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee in this connection. MR. HISS informed the Committee that the Joint Chiefs of Staff statement had come to Mr. Matthews, as the acting representative of the Department on SWNCC, and that SWNCC had held up action on the matter until the Department's comments could be obtained. MR. PASVOLSKY pointed out that the Joint Chiefs of Staff were not represented on SWNCC and asked whether the time had not come to provide for their regular representation. MR. DUNN said the Secretaries of War and Navy would not agree to this since they wished to keep political decisions in their own Departments and had set up SWNCC for the purpose of excluding the Joint Chiefs of Staff from actual formulation of such decisions. He said the Joint Chiefs of Staff were, of course, consulted by the Secretaries of War and Navy before political decisions were made.

THE COMMITTEE agreed that Annex II should be revised in the light of the discussion at the meeting. It was also suggested that members of the Committee should inform MR. HISS of any further suggestions they might wish to make regarding the statement. THE COMMITTEE further agreed that the document, as revised, should be submitted for approval at the next meeting of the Committee, prior to its presentation to the Secretaries of the War and the Navy and then to SWNCC. [Here follows discussion of other subjects.]

Secretariat Files

*Memorandum Prepared for the Secretary's Staff Committee*³⁷

TOP SECRET
SC-169b

[WASHINGTON,] November 16, 1945.

ACTION ON JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF STATEMENT OF UNITED STATES MILITARY POLICY

THE PROBLEM

The Secretary has received through the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee a statement of United States military policy prepared and approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff (Annex I).³⁸ It is necessary to decide what action the Department shall take with respect to this statement.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. It is recommended that the Department comment on the statement by observing generally that in the carrying out of the policy as finally adopted it will be essential, because of the necessarily general terms of such a statement, that there be close coordination between the State, War, and Navy Departments;
2. That the Department's more specific comments be along the lines of Annex II;
3. That these comments be transmitted informally to the Secretaries of War and the Navy; and
4. That the Department propose that the statement with the comments be referred to SWNCC for revision by a special subcommittee to be set up for this purpose.

BACKGROUND

1. . . . "United States Military Policy", (Annex I) is a statement prepared by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and approved by them. It has been forwarded to the Secretaries of War and Navy with the request that they approve it and transmit it to the Secretary of State and to the President for the latter's approval "as a present expression of United States military policy".

³⁷ Prepared in light of discussion at the 167th Meeting of the Secretary's Staff Committee, November 13; the relevant portion of the minutes of that meeting is printed supra.

³⁸ For text, see SWNCC 282, March 27, 1946, p. 1160.

2. The Joint Chiefs of Staff paper, which is in summary form, is divided into two sections of unequal length. The first and longer part (pp. 1 to 5 of Annex I) is entitled "Basis for the Formulation of a Military Policy", and the second (pp. 5 to 7) is called "Statement of United States Military Policy".

DISCUSSION

The Joint Chiefs of Staff paper requires the most careful scrutiny by the Department, in respect both to its general content and tone and to much of the detail. It is necessarily couched in general terms, as must be the case with a policy statement intended to guide the Executive branch of this Government in the future. However, precisely because the terms are so general it is of fundamental importance that they be clearly and accurately phrased. This is particularly true of the broad generalizations contained in the first section of the statement. They will be given concrete content only as they are carried out under specific conditions and in specific cases. For these reasons the application of military policy finally adopted is of equal if not greater importance than the formulation of the policy itself. The Department should, therefore, not only contribute to the formulation of the policy but should participate continuously with the War and Navy Departments in the carrying out of significant aspects of it.

Throughout the paper, but most specifically in paragraph (4) of the first section, there is an emphasis upon the possibility of a breakdown in friendly relations between the great powers and upon "potential enemy powers". In stressing these points the paper slights the necessity for insuring the United States adequate allies as well as the possible effect of U.S. military policy on our friendly relations with other countries. It also ignores the need for making clear that our military policy must conform with our obligations under the Charter of the United Nations to employ force only under conditions there stipulated.

Both in the first section and in the second, "Statement of United States Military Policy", certain general military policies and supporting policies are proposed which should be carefully analyzed in the light of their probable effect upon our relations with other countries.

In Annex II attached, there are set forth certain comments with respect to the Joint Chiefs of Staff paper. These comments are not meant to be exhaustive but should be regarded as illustrative and as intended to demonstrate the relationship of this statement to foreign policy and to the Department's responsibility, and, consequently, to show the need for participation by the Department in the revision of this paper before it is finally approved.

Annex II

COMMENTS OF DEPARTMENT OF STATE ON "UNITED STATES MILITARY POLICY" . . .

1. The Department of State recognizes its interest and concern in the Joint Chiefs of Staff statement on "United States Military Policy". Therein it is stated (paragraph 1) that "the basic purpose for maintaining United States armed forces is to provide for our security . . .". As the principal concern of statecraft is to obtain the maximum degree of security, it follows that the Department should scrutinize closely any formulation of military policy.

2. It is the view of the Department of State that the maximum degree of security can be obtained only if our foreign policy and our military policy are mutually helpful. Our foreign policy should not hamper our military policy. Neither should our military policy handicap the carrying out of our foreign policy. In fact, the demands placed upon our armed forces are based upon our foreign policy, as stated by President Truman in his address at New York on October 27, 1945.³⁹ This relationship was stated in terms of the "four principal tasks" which, the President said, determined the kind of armed might we propose to maintain :

"First, our Army, Navy and Air Force, in collaboration with our Allies, must enforce the terms of peace imposed upon our defeated enemies.

"Second, we must fulfill the military obligations which we are undertaking as a member of the United Nations Organization—to support a lasting peace, by force, if necessary.

"Third, we must cooperate with other American nations to preserve the territorial integrity and the political independence of the nations of the Western Hemisphere.

"Fourth, in this troubled and uncertain world, our military forces must be adequate to discharge the fundamental mission laid upon them by the Constitution of the United States—to 'provide for the common defense' of the United States.

"These four military tasks are directed not toward war—not toward conquest—but toward peace.

"We seek to use our military strength solely to preserve the peace of the world. For we now know that that is the only sure way to make our own freedom secure.

"That is the basis of the foreign policy of the people of the United States."

³⁹ Department of State Bulletin, October 28, 1945, pp. 653-656.

3. In the Joint Chiefs of Staff statement the place assigned the task of enforcing the terms of peace upon Germany and Japan seems to the Department of State to be less prominent than it should be. Hostilities with Germany came to an end a bare six months ago. Operations against Japan ceased less than three months ago. In neither case has the formal end of hostilities been proclaimed. Nor have treaties of peace been formulated, fixing among other things the period within which military forces of this country and of others of the United Nations will occupy German and Japanese territory. In the Joint Chiefs of Staff statement the significance of joint occupation and of joint enforcement of peace terms as parts of the job of securing the victory achieved through joint efforts has been largely overlooked. Politically, no aspect of our foreign policy carries greater potentialities for our future security than those relations with our allies involved in the enforcement of surrender and peace terms. It seems to the Department of State that a correspondingly important place should be given to this task in a statement of military policy.

4. Moreover, the responsibilities of the United States as a principal member of the United Nations should figure more prominently in making the estimate of our future military requirements. The political leadership we took in this venture was made possible primarily because of the military strength we mobilized during the war. It will continue in proportion to the relative military strength we maintain in the future. The United Nations is built upon the power relations existing among the United States, Great Britain, Russia, China, France, and the other members of the war-time coalition. Its future will depend upon power relations which will exist hereafter among the principal members. If the balance of this relationship in military potential were to be impaired or upset, the fabric of the United Nations would be weakened or at least would require reexamination. We do not wish this balance to be upset. Therefore, we should retain our military power in greater strength than that which would be needed merely to fulfill our strictly military obligations under the Charter. The question is: how much greater? This estimate can be made only on the basis of developing political factors. As our relations with other countries are conditioned by our duties and responsibilities under the United Nations Charter, greater recognition should be given these factors as determinants of our military needs.

5. It is believed that the analysis of our military needs postulated on a breakdown in peaceful relations among Britain, Russia and the United States receives undue emphasis (paragraphs 4, 5, and 6). It is given more space than that based on the continuance of peaceful relations. This disproportion should be corrected. In this connection the last of the major national policies said by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to determine our military needs is overemphasized. This statement of policy is: "maintenance of the United States in the best possible relative position with respect to potential enemy powers, ready when necessary to take military action abroad to maintain the security and integrity of the United States" (paragraph 2*g*).

6. The hypothesis that our security may require extensive military operations overseas needs close examination for its possible effect on the relations with our principal allies in the recent war. This hypothesis runs through the entire statement (paragraphs 2*g*, 8*b*, 9, 13*a*). The need for examination is emphasized by the further hypothesis that such operations would be preventive in purpose (paragraphs 8*b* and c, 9). Despite our strength, our chances of survival in a future conflict would be increased were we to be assured of the help of allies. This political need must be a constant pre-occupation of our foreign policy. If a given hypothesis, such as the two just referred to, might handicap the Department of State in its conduct of foreign policy, a re-examination of this hypothesis should be made.

7. The Department of State believes that certain of the subsidiary policies listed in paragraph 13 of the Joint Chiefs of Staff statement also stand in need of examination before becoming part of our stated military policy. The examination should be undertaken from the point of view of our relations with other countries and particularly with our principal allies. As a matter of national policy "the maintenance of a large merchant marine, both active and reserve" (paragraph 13*i* (2)) might in time weaken the economic strength (hence the military potential) of certain of our potential future allies, and thus might defeat its purpose of contributing to our national security. The "maintenance of industries essential to the war effort" (paragraph 13*i* (5)) needs examination on economic as well as foreign policy grounds. The "stockpiling of critical strategic materials" (paragraph 13*i* (6)) likewise should be scrutinized from both economic and foreign policy angles. It is also questionable whether our policy should be to support the "development" of the armed forces of the other American republics, as stated in paragraph 13*k*.

8. In addition to studying most carefully the foreign policy implications of the statement as it stands, the addition of certain new items seems to the Department of State to merit consideration. Respect for the territorial integrity and political independence of certain states, China, for example, might be considered for inclusion as a national policy determining our military needs (paragraph 2) since we are bound by treaty to accord this respect. Moreover, the United States as a member of the United Nations has agreed to refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state (Article 2, 4). Consideration should be given to adding this principle as a national policy determining our military needs. Multilateral regulation of armaments in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations is also proposed as a policy determining our military needs which might be added to those already listed in the statement. Finally, consideration might well be given to including, as an additional policy determining our military needs, the political policy of maintaining friendly relations with other countries so as to prevent the actual outbreak of hostilities, or, in the event of such hostilities, to give us the maximum number of allies.

811.20/11-145

The Secretary of State to the Secretary of War (Patterson)

TOP SECRET

WASHINGTON, November 29, 1945.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Careful consideration has been given to your memorandum of November 1, 1945 and to the three questions set forth in the enclosure to your memorandum.

I am enclosing a memorandum which has been prepared in the Department of State, setting forth answers to the questions propounded in your memorandum.

Twice in your lifetime and mine, the United States has, while engaged in a World War, demonstrated that our country can build up and effectively utilize military strength at a prodigious rate, perhaps faster than any other country has ever done in history. We seem to be in a fair way of demonstrating a second time that our country can demobilize and tear down its military strength more rapidly than any other country in the world.

I am deeply concerned at the rate at which we are losing our military strength. It is not so much that I am unduly pessimistic about the international situation with its admitted uncertainties. It is rather that I know that this is a time when our country should be united and strong in order that it may make its influence for good, for peace, and for justice effectively felt in the councils of the world and on the peace settlements.

As the President said in his address on October 27 (after listing the "four principal tasks" which determine the kind of armed might we propose to maintain) :

"These four military tasks are directed not toward war—not toward conquest—but toward peace.

"We seek to use our military strength solely to preserve the peace of the world. For we now know that that is the only sane [sure] way to make our own freedom secure.

"That is the basis of the foreign policy of the people of the United States."

I am sure that you will understand that it is not possible to answer some of the questions which you put to me as definitely as both of us would desire. I shall, of course, be glad to work in the closest possible cooperation with you and with the Secretary of the Navy in jointly endeavoring to meet the problems which face us in the field of foreign affairs and defense.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES F. BYRNES

[Enclosure]

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS CONTAINED IN THE MEMORANDUM DATED NOVEMBER 1, 1945 FROM THE SECRETARY OF WAR TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE

Question:

1. Is it your estimate that as of 1 July 1946, 1 Jan 1947, and 1 July 1947, the situation will require occupation forces in the countries listed below? If you so estimate, what will the functions of these forces be in each listed country?

Answer:

a. Europe:

(1) *Germany:*⁴⁰ It is anticipated that occupation forces will be required in Germany on July 1, 1946, January 1, 1947 and July 1, 1947. The precise functions of these forces in Germany on the indicated dates are difficult to determine at this time. If by these dates considerable progress has been made in the Control Council on the reestablishment of German agencies, the possible transition from military government to a general supervisory civilian control, it is conceivable that a police type force of occupation would be sufficient. It is understood that the War Department is already developing plans for this type of occupation force.

If this system can be developed, the functions of the occupation forces would presumably be limited to the maintenance of order and the many functions of military government now in effect could be transferred to German agencies and to Allied civilian control. This transition in the occupational system of Germany will, however, require negotiations with the other powers represented on the Control Council in Berlin and will no doubt require a modification of the present agreement on control machinery for Germany. The Department of State cannot predict with any certainty at this time when or exactly how this transfer of functions may be effected.

⁴⁰ For documentation on United States policy with respect to the occupation of Germany, see vol. v, pp. 481 ff.

(2) Austria:⁴¹ The Department of State expects to initiate discussions shortly with the War Department for the purpose of presenting proposals in the Allied Council at Vienna for a reduction of Allied occupation forces in Austria.

We shall require military advice as to how this proposal can most effectively be presented. The Department of State would like to obtain agreement in the Allied Council in the near future for a reduction of occupation forces in Austria. It would certainly be desirable to have the occupation forces in Austria transposed into a police type by July 1, 1946 and, if possible, withdrawn entirely by January 1, 1947. The qualified recognition which has now been extended to the Renner Government in Austria is the first step in this direction.

(3) Czechoslovakia:⁴² The American Government and the Russian Government have now agreed that American and Soviet forces should be withdrawn from Czechoslovakia by December 1, 1945.

(4) Italy and Venezia Giulia:⁴³ The Italian campaign was initiated and carried through as an Allied campaign. Allied Military Government was set up in the liberated territory as a joint organization, and both British and American forces have been used for the maintenance of order. There would appear to be at least a moral obligation on our part to maintain American forces for AMG as long as required.

The establishment of Allied Military Government in Venezia Giulia, as a disputed area, and the continuation of AMG in that area, and perhaps in Bolzano as well, until the final peace settlement, was approved by the President on September 19, 1944. This approval was confirmed to the Secretary of War by the Acting Secretary in a letter dated April 26, 1945, in which it was also stated that participation of American forces in these areas was a "sine qua non" in British agreement to the establishment and maintenance of AMG.

On April 28, 1945, the Combined Chiefs of Staff recommended that the forces necessary in Venezia Giulia be provided jointly by the US and UK, and directive in this sense was despatched to SACMED on April 30, 1945.⁴⁴

⁴¹ For documentation on United States policy with respect to the occupation of Austria, see vol. v, pp. 283 ff.

⁴² For documentation on United States interest in the reestablishment of democratic government in Czechoslovakia, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. iv, pp. 420 ff.

⁴³ For documentation on United States policy with respect to Italy and Venezia Giulia, see ibid., pp. 1103 ff., and ibid., 1946, vol. vi, pp. 824 ff. passim.

⁴⁴ For a description of the directive, see telegram 323 to Caserta, ibid., 1945, vol. iv, pp. 1120-1121.

*b. Far East: Japan*⁴⁵

(1) Occupational forces will be needed on a fairly wide scale on July 1, 1946. By January 1, 1947, if progress continues at the same rate as at present toward achievement of the objectives of the occupation, it should be possible for the occupation forces to be concentrated in a few important strategic places and their numbers perhaps reduced in comparison with the forces maintained on July 1, 1946. Occupation forces will continue to be required on July 1, 1947. If the same tendency as mentioned above continues in Japan, it may be that a further reduction by July 1, 1947 will be possible. Perhaps by that time a minimum number of mobile occupational units will be needed to assure the continued control over Japan, but that, of course, depends upon developments.

The functions of the occupation forces, after the complete disarmament and demobilization of the Japanese forces is completed, will be to assure that Allied policies, as implemented by the directives of the Supreme Commander, are carried out. These forces will act primarily as enforcement agencies and may also be required to carry out the inspection of Japanese industry to prevent the growth of Japan's war-making power.

*Far East: Korea*⁴⁶

(2) It is hoped that by July 1, 1946 an international trusteeship will be in operation in Korea. If so, only those armed forces requested by the High Commissioner for Korea (provided for in the trusteeship draft) and approved by the proposed Executive Council for Korea for the maintenance of internal law and order will remain in Korea. The same answer applies to occupation forces as of January 1 and July 1, 1947. Since it is hoped that native police and a native constabulary will, to an increasing degree, assume responsibility for the maintenance of law and order in Korea, it should not be necessary for the High Commissioner to request that large numbers of troops be made available to assist him.

Question:

2. a. Forces presently planned to be available in Europe on and after 1 January 1946 will be capable of policing Germany and enforcing surrender terms. These forces will not be capable of making a show of force to implement political policies should a firm stand against a militant power prove desirable. Are these military capabilities in consonance with foreign policy of our government?

⁴⁵ For documentation on United States policy with respect to the occupation and control of Japan, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. VI, pp. 710 ff. and 1946, vol. VIII, pp. 85 ff.

⁴⁶ For documentation on general political policies of the United States toward Korea, see vol. VIII, pp. 1018 ff.

Answer:

a. It is undeniable that the presence of large numbers of United States forces in Europe gives tangible evidence of the interest of our Government in European affairs and lends authority and support to the position taken by our Government on political questions. This is true even though no conscious effort is made, or should be made, to create "a show of force". It seems unlikely that the size of the occupation force in Europe by next July (probably under 200,000) will be large enough to be impressive in providing support for our political policies. The situation would not be greatly improved if the size of the force were double that figure next July. The important thing is that our Country must have sufficient military strength at home and abroad to give evidence of a determination to back up the policies of our Government anywhere that may be necessary. Our influence and prestige throughout the world are to a large extent dependent on this. Our military potential, demonstrated in 1917-1918, was not enough to keep us out of World War II.

Question:

b. (1) What is the maximum proportionate military participation which the U.S. will allow our Allies in the occupation of Japan? The composition of Allied occupational forces depends upon the answer to this question.

b. (2) In connection with granting our Allies certain rights in Japan, what, if any corollary involvement in continental affairs in the Far East do we foresee and accept? ⁴⁷ From a military point of view, this determines what military steps must be designed against unacceptable aggression in the Orient. For instance, it would be most valuable to have a clear cut statement of minimum interests from which the U.S. will not retreat in the event of a clash of interests in the Far East, particularly concerning Manchuria, Inner Mongolia, North China and Korea.

Answer:

b. (1) In a memorandum from the JCS to the SWNCC of October 24 it is stated:

"General MacArthur considers, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff concur, that if the United States is to maintain the controlling voice in the occupation of Japan, U.S. participation in the occupation forces must be at least equal to that of all other nations combined."

The Department feels that it is essential for the United States to maintain the controlling voice in the occupation of Japan. The proportionate United States military participation in the occupation necessary to maintain this position is considered to be primarily a military question. Therefore, in accordance with General MacArthur's view, the Department feels that the maximum proportionate military participation which the United States should allow our Allies in the occupation of Japan is not more than fifty per cent.

⁴⁷ For documentation on United States policy with respect to China, see volumes ix and x.

b. (2) In the absence of any indication as to the character of "certain rights" which we might grant to our Allies in Japan, it is difficult to answer this question. If the reference is to stationing of military contingents by our Allies in Japan, we do not understand how such stationing of contingents would give rise to any corollary involvement by the United States in continental affairs in the Far East. As to your request for a statement of minimum interests from which the United States will not retreat in the event of a clash of interests in the Far East, the Department does not believe it possible to give any such statement which would be sufficiently reliable or certain as to furnish the basis on which the War Department might determine in advance the military steps to be taken against possible aggression in the Far East. It is believed that the problem posed by your question in regard to this Department's contribution of political guidance to the Armed Forces can best be met by consistent and close cooperation between the Departments concerned.

Question:

3. Are there any U.S. requirements other than military which will necessitate continuation of the operation of ATC facilities by the War Department in occupied areas or on foreign routes? If so, what are these requirements in detail, including length of time and specified operation to be continued?

Answer:

3. We do not know of any U.S. requirements other than military which will necessitate continuation of the operation of ATC facilities in occupied areas or on foreign routes. It seems likely that military requirements will for some time necessitate operations by the ATC to Berlin and certain other places in Europe. Since our only means of communication with Berlin is over ATC service it is our hope that it will be continued until regularly scheduled commercial services are instituted. The same situation applies at various other places in Europe and in the Far East. In these circumstances it is hoped that the War Department will confer with the Department of State informally in advance before reaching a decision to terminate important ATC services to Europe and the Far East.

Answers regarding Japan, Korea and Far Eastern matters based on memoranda prepared by FE.⁴⁸

⁴⁸ Office of Far Eastern Affairs.

Policy Planning Staff Files ⁴⁹

Memorandum Prepared in the Department of State ⁵⁰

[Extracts]

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] December 1, 1945.

FOREIGN POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES

FUNDAMENTALS

President Truman has set forth the following "fundamentals" of our foreign policy:

1. We seek no territorial expansion or selfish advantage. We have no plans for aggression against any other state, large or small. We have no objective which need clash with the peaceful aims of any other nation.

2. We believe in the eventual return of sovereign rights and self-government to all peoples who have been deprived of them by force.

3. We shall approve no territorial changes in any friendly part of the world unless they accord with the freely expressed wishes of the people concerned.

4. We believe that all peoples who are prepared for self-government should be permitted to choose their own form of government by their own freely expressed choice, without interference from any foreign source. That is true in Europe, in Asia, in Africa, as well as in the Western Hemisphere.

5. By the combined and cooperative action of our war allies, we shall help the defeated enemy states establish peaceful democratic governments of their own free choice. And we shall try to attain a world in which Nazism, Fascism, and military aggression cannot exist.

6. We shall refuse to recognize any government imposed upon any nation by the force of any foreign power. In some cases it may be impossible to prevent forceful imposition of such a government. But the United States will not recognize any such government.

7. We believe that all nations should have the freedom of the seas and equal rights to the navigation of boundary rivers and waterways and of rivers and waterways which pass through more than one country.

⁴⁹ Lot 64D563, files of the Policy Planning Staff, Department of State, 1947-1953. The source text is filed in this lot although the Policy Planning Staff did not come into existence until May 7, 1947.

⁵⁰ This document consists of two sections. The first, pp. 1-25, treated general aspects of United States policy, and was considered as a possible public statement. The second part, pp. 26-106, dealt with policy with respect to specific areas of the world. It was never intended for public use, but was entirely for working purposes. The document was transmitted to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee for the information and comment of the War and Navy Departments on December 17, 1945.

8. We believe that all states which are accepted in the society of nations should have access on equal terms to the trade and the raw materials of the world.

9. We believe that the sovereign states of the Western Hemisphere, without interference from outside the Western Hemisphere, must work together as good neighbors in the solution of their common problems.

10. We believe that full economic collaboration between all nations, great and small, is essential to the improvement of living conditions all over the world, and to the establishment of freedom from fear and freedom from want.

11. We shall continue to strive to promote freedom of expression and freedom of religion throughout the peace-loving areas of the world.

12. We are convinced that the preservation of peace between nations requires a United Nations Organization composed of all the peace-loving nations of the world who are willing jointly to use force if necessary to insure peace.⁵¹

Secretary Byrnes has stated in recent addresses :

Today there can be no doubt that the peoples of this war-ravaged earth want to live in a free and peaceful world. But the supreme task of statesmanship the world over is to help them to understand that they can have peace and freedom only if they tolerate and respect the rights of others to opinions, feelings and ways of life which they do not and cannot share.

It is not enough to banish atomic or bacteriological warfare. We must banish war. To that great goal of humanity we must ever rededicate our hearts and strength.

To help us move toward that goal we must guard not only against military threats to world security but economic threats to world well-being. Political peace and economic warfare cannot long exist together. If we are going to have peace in this world, we must learn to live together and work together. We must be able to do business together.

Today the world must make its choice. There must be one world for all of us or there will be no world for any of us.

OBJECTIVES

Our foreign and domestic policies are directed to the same end : the maintenance of peace and security and the advancement of the welfare of the people. The principal objectives of our foreign policy are :

1. To promote our national interests energetically but with full realization that the welfare of our people is inescapably linked with the welfare of all peoples.

⁵¹ Quoted from the President's Navy Day address, October 27, 1945; for full text, see Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States: Harry S. Truman, 1945 (Washington, Government Printing Office, 1961), p. 431, or Department of State Bulletin, October 28, 1945, p. 653.

2. To maintain the unity of purpose and action of the major United Nations and of all the United Nations to the end that the association which successfully prosecuted the war will build and maintain—by force if necessary—an organized peace.

3. To contribute to the effectiveness of the United Nations Organization by meeting our full responsibilities and by providing leadership in the Organization.

4. To prevent the misuse of atomic energy and to direct it into channels of service to mankind.

5. To prevent Germany and Japan from again acquiring the power to wage war.

6. To encourage, as conducive to international order and peace, the establishment of democratic governments.

7. To encourage conditions of life within nations, and relations among nations, favorable to the development by men and women everywhere of free and democratic institutions, in accordance with their own customs and desires.

8. To promote a greater expansion of our foreign trade and of productiveness and trade throughout the world, and thus contribute to the maintenance of full and productive employment and rising standards of living in the United States and in all countries.

9. To promote a spirit of good neighborliness and fair dealing in international relations and to encourage other nations to do likewise.

The policies and programs which this Government is following in our foreign relations in attempting to attain these objectives are summarized below.

.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Our policy toward the Soviet Union should be to continue our efforts to convince the Soviet authorities that it is to our mutual advantage to collaborate in all decisions in the international relations field. In order to attain this end, we should not hesitate to make clear to the Soviet authorities and, if necessary, to the American public that we cannot continue collaboration with the Soviet Union if it insists on making unilateral decisions and taking unilateral action in its dealings with other nations of the world. In pursuing the policy of collaboration, however, we should always be prepared to stand firm against Soviet demands when acceptance of these demands would mean that we would have to compromise any of our fundamental principles. The most effective way of following this policy is for us to use our full influence in backing the United Nations Organization in order to strengthen it and make it in fact an effective organization for the maintenance of peace. We should not hesitate to resist to the full any effort to weaken the organization and should be prepared to go along with all other nations who wish to make it an effective organization.

While considerable progress has been made in reaching a satisfactory relationship with the Soviet Union, it is just the beginning and there are still a number of very fundamental unsolved questions, many of which have been brought about by the unilateral action taken by the Soviet authorities. Some of these are :

1. The fact that totalitarian political regimes have been established under direct Soviet control in certain countries of Southeastern and Central Europe. We should continue to maintain that events in these countries are the responsibility of the three nations signatory to the Yalta Declaration on Liberated Europe. The fact that we have been unable to bring the Soviet Government to live up to the principles of this Declaration does not mean we should cease our efforts directed toward its implementation. We should, under all circumstances, avoid any action which would appear to accept any "democratic" incipient totalitarian regimes in these countries without on the other hand making it clear that we renounce any responsibility for these areas because of the unacceptable character of the political regimes which are in the process of being established. While we should not withdraw formal diplomatic recognition from regimes, such as Yugoslavia, which have not permitted the holding of democratic elections, we should make it clear that the maintenance of diplomatic relations with such regimes does not imply in any way our approval of the policies of such regimes, their methods of assuming control, or their failure to implement the guarantees of personal freedoms. We should refrain from according diplomatic recognition to the governments of Rumania and Bulgaria as now constituted but, on the other hand, should accord recognition to countries, such as we have done in the case of Hungary, where free elections have been held.

2. The establishment of almost complete Soviet economic control over the countries of Eastern and Central Europe through war booty and reparation deliveries, by bilateral barter trade agreements, and in certain cases by "agreements for economic collaboration", all of which in effect mean an economic blackout in these areas for all other nations. In conformity with our announced policies of favoring access to all raw materials by all nations and of equal economic opportunity in all areas, we should use our full influence to break down the firm hold which the Soviet Government is endeavoring to fasten on Eastern and Central Europe. We should be prepared to grant credits on an approved transaction basis to those countries in Eastern and Southeastern Europe in which sincere efforts are being made to establish representative democratic regimes. In granting such credits, however, we should be sure that the credits are not used as an indirect method for the payment of reparations to the Soviet Union. In connection with the economic developments in Eastern Europe, we should insist upon protecting all legitimate American interests and property in that area and demand compensation for the value of the American interests involved in the event that property owned directly or indirectly by United States nationals cannot be retained.

We should not accord credits to the Soviet Union until we have received concrete and tangible assurances and supporting evidence that its economic policies are in general accord with our announced international economic policies. In order to protect the basic interests of the United States we should not accord global credits but should grant credits only on an approved transaction basis, thus permitting a review of the situation each time an application is made for an advance for a specific purpose. Because of the comparatively limited facilities the Soviet Government has for obtaining foreign exchange, the total amount of credit granted should be limited to a sum for which there are reasonable assurances that repayment can be made in the normal processes of international trade.

3. The Soviet policy of endeavoring to prevent full news reports from being sent to the outside world from areas under Soviet domination makes it difficult for the American public to evaluate developments in these areas. Now that we have obtained permission for American correspondents to enter these areas, we should continue our efforts to see that they are permitted freely to send factual reports on developments.

4. The indications of the adoption of a policy by the Soviet Government in the Far East of giving indirect support to communist elements in that area. While we have primary responsibility for the control of Japan and therefore the establishment of normal conditions in the Far East, we should nevertheless, as far as circumstances permit, make a full effort to consult with the Soviet Government in all matters affecting this area. As is the case in Europe, we should use our full influence, however, to assure that democratic regimes are established in the area, rather than Soviet-sponsored totalitarian governments.

In our policy in dealing with countries under Soviet domination we should, when possible, work out a concrete program, both political and economic, designed to support all the democratic elements in these countries but should not take any action which would strengthen the totalitarian left. On the other hand, since in general the non-communist left appears to have the broadest basis of popular support in this area, we should be prepared to assist these groups whenever possible. Present indications point to the possibility that the Soviet Government may realize that its efforts completely to control the areas under Soviet domination are not meeting with success and are in fact proving to be a liability. This development appears to be taking place because of the growing resistance to Soviet methods and the disrupting influence which contact with these countries is having on Soviet occupation troops. Since the Soviet Union itself has many internal problems to solve in the next few years, it is possible that because of the difficulties encountered in Eastern and Central Europe and because it needs to exert its maximum efforts internally, the Soviet Government may decide to abandon its policy of full control in these areas. We should adapt our policy to encourage them in this direction without loss of face, if circumstances permit.

In the conduct of our relations with the Soviet Government we must always bear in mind that because of the differences between the economic and political systems of our two countries, the conduct of our relations requires more patience and diligence than with other countries. We should be prepared to overlook minor grievances, explain carefully and in detail our reasons for all of our actions or requests, and if it is deemed advisable to take a firm position regarding the Soviet Union, we should always be as careful as possible to assure that our facts are correct. The adoption of a firm and friendly attitude in our dealings with the Soviet Government when our interests are involved will put our relations on a much more satisfactory basis than yielding in the hope of securing greater consideration in the future, or the adoption of half-way measures, or failure to make our position clear in each case. On the other hand, in order to minimize Soviet suspicions of our motives we should avoid even the appearance of taking unilateral action ourselves.

SWNCC Files

Memorandum by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee

SECRET
SM-4827

WASHINGTON, 25 January 1946.

Subject: Foreign Policy of the United States

The Joint Chiefs of Staff have considered the first twenty-five pages of a document entitled "Foreign Policy of the United States" which was forwarded to them by the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee for comment. The Joint Chiefs of Staff perceive no military objections to public issuance of the proposed statement provided additional paragraphs from the speech of the President quoted in the document are included, in order to inform both other nations and our own people that the United States proposes to maintain military forces to support its foreign policy.

To this effect, the Joint Chiefs of Staff recommend that additions and amendments be appropriately introduced in the first twenty-five pages of the document by direct quotation from, or paraphrase of, those passages from the President's speech of October 27 reproduced below:

"The foreign policy of the United States is based firmly on fundamental principles of righteousness and justice. In carrying out those principles we shall firmly adhere to what we believe to be right; and we shall not give our approval to any compromise with evil."⁵²

"We have assured the world time and again—and I repeat it now—that we do not seek for ourselves one inch of territory in any place in the world. Outside of the right to establish necessary bases for our own protection, we look for nothing which belongs to any other power.

"We do need . . . armed might, however, and for four principal tasks:

"First, our Army, Navy and Air Force, in collaboration with our Allies, must enforce the terms of peace imposed upon our defeated enemies.

"Second, we must fulfill the military obligations which we are undertaking as a member of the United Nations Organization—to support a lasting peace, by force if necessary.

"Third, we must cooperate with other American nations to preserve the territorial integrity and the political independence of the nations of the Western Hemisphere.

"Fourth, in this troubled and uncertain world, our military forces must be adequate to discharge the fundamental mission laid upon them by the Constitution of the United States—to 'provide for the common defense' of the United States.

"These four military tasks are directed not toward war—not toward conquest—but toward peace.

"We seek to use our military strength solely to preserve the peace of the world. For we now know that that is the only sure way to make our own freedom secure.

"That is the basis of the foreign policy of the people of the United States."

For the Joint Chiefs of Staff:
A. J. McFARLAND
Brigadier General, U.S.A.,
Secretary

⁵² The following omissions indicated in the original.

Secretariat Files

Summary of Action of the 184th Meeting of the Secretary of State's Staff Committee, Department of State, Washington, February 5, 1946, 9:35 a. m.

SECRET

SC/R-184

Present:

The Secretary (presiding)

The Under Secretary

Messrs. Benton

Braden

Clayton

McCormack

Russell

Henderson ⁵³Matthews ⁵⁴ } (for Mr. Dunn)Vincent ⁵⁵ }Culbertson ⁵⁶ (WE)Jamison ⁵⁷

Lewis

Absent:

The Counselor

Messrs. Hackworth

Pavolsky

Policy of the Department Regarding Disposal to Foreign Governments of Military-Type Surplus Equipment ⁵⁸

The Under Secretary requested the Committee's agreement to the following policy regarding disposal to foreign governments of military-type surplus equipment:

That no disposals of military-type surplus equipment should be made to arm other nations, except for (a) the transfer en bloc of military equipment left in England; (b) the program for equipping the French Army to a reasonable extent; (c) completion of the program for China begun during the war; (d) equipping Philippine forces and (e) fulfilling commitments made in the interim program for the other American republics. ⁵⁹

⁵³ Loy W. Henderson, Director of the Office of Near Eastern and African Affairs.

⁵⁴ H. Freeman Matthews, Director of the Office of European Affairs.

⁵⁵ John Carter Vincent, Director of the Office of Far Eastern Affairs.

⁵⁶ Paul T. Culbertson, Chief of the Division of Western European Affairs.

⁵⁷ Edward A. Jamison, Chief of the Policy Analysis and Reference Section of the Central Secretariat.

⁵⁸ For documentation on United States policy with respect to the liquidation of Lend-Lease and the provision of military supplies to individual nations or to nations in particular areas of the world, see the appropriate bilateral and regional compilations elsewhere in the Foreign Relations series.

⁵⁹ At its 187th Meeting, February 21, the Committee:

"AGREED that the statement of policy regarding disposal to foreign governments of military-type surplus equipment, approved by the Committee on February 5, 1946 (SC/R-184), should be amended by adding the following additional exception to the general policy that no disposals should be made to arm other nations: '(f) transfers to Canada when consistent with the program for joint defense.'"

AGREED that an effort should be made to have all identifying U.S. markings removed (so far as possible) from equipment transferred to other governments.

APPROVED the policy as outlined by the Under Secretary.
[Here follows discussion of another matter.]

SWNCC Files

*Memorandum by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the State-War-Navy
Coordinating Committee*⁶¹

TOP SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] February 11, 1946.

SWNCC 38/30

Subject: Over-all Examination of Requirements for Transit Air Bases and Air Base Rights in Foreign Countries.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff request that the Secretary of State be informed as follows:

“In furtherance to the memorandum of 8 November 1945 from the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee (SWNCC 38/25), the Joint Chiefs of Staff have reviewed the requirements for military rights of air transit and technical stop at locations other than those enumerated . . . and have determined that such rights should be obtained at the locations listed in Appendix ‘A’.

“Requirements for air transit rights in Canada have not been included, since the Joint Chiefs of Staff assume that such rights, among others, will be obtained in extension of present United States-Canadian agreements, or under satisfactory substitutes therefor, and have initiated action leading to a determination of such requirements by the Permanent Joint Board on Defense, Canada-United States.

“With the exception of air transit rights in Mexico and Central America necessary to provide air access to the Panama Canal, requirements for air transit rights in Latin America have been excluded also, as the Joint Chiefs of Staff assume that such rights will be obtained in implementation of the treaty expected to be concluded as a result of the declarations in the Act of Chapultepec. The Joint Chiefs of Staff have under study the determination of the military views on this matter.

“The airfields listed in Appendix ‘A’ are those which it is expected will be operated by commercial or foreign military interests. In the event that during negotiations it appears that any airfield specifically listed by name is to become non-operational and that some other airfield in the vicinity is to be operated by commercial and/or foreign military agencies, it is requested that negotiations for that specific airfield be suspended and the Joint Chiefs of Staff be so advised in order that United States military requirements in the area may be further examined.

⁶¹ Approved by the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee by informal action on February 14.

“Military air transit rights for the United States along the North Africa-India route, as indicated on the maps in Appendix ‘B’,⁶² are considered highly desirable because of strategic considerations. The Joint Chiefs of Staff recognize that in the deliberations of the Security Council of the United Nations it is possible that the United States, along with other powers, may obtain all the air transit rights along this route which may be necessary; on the other hand, it may develop that the arrangements agreed to by the United Nations will not satisfy United States requirements. The Joint Chiefs of Staff therefore consider that so long as the strategic importance to the United States of air transit rights along this route is fully appreciated, the procedure and timing of negotiations to secure these rights whether multilaterally through the United Nations Organization or bilaterally with each nation concerned, is a matter for determination by the Department of State.

“Rights of air transit and technical stop, as used herein, are defined in Appendix ‘C’.

For the Joint Chiefs of Staff:
A. J. McFARLAND
Brigadier General, U.S.A.
Secretary

⁶² Facing p. 1144.

APPENDIX "A"

Annex "A" to Appendix "A"

LOCATIONS AT WHICH MILITARY AIR TRANSIT RIGHTS ARE DESIRED

Location	Sovereignty	U.S. Expenditures	British Expenditures (Reciprocal Aid)	Remarks
Algiers, Algeria (Maison Blanche Airport)	France	$1, 576, 367	$16, 894	{The French Government is of the opinion that present rights, effected by local agreement for the prosecution of the war, have expired. Additional expenditures not listed are: French—$3,564,515 and British—$4,333,084.
Tripoli, Libya (Wheelus Field)	Italy	8, 187, 236	None	{Present agreement implies rights to continue for duration of the war.
Cairo, Egypt (Payne Field)	United Kingdom	3, 181, 523	109, 292	{Present agreement states that all operational use will have to come up for review on cessation of hostilities.
Dhahran, Saudi Arabia (Dhahran Airport)	Saudi Arabia	4,000,000 (Est.)	None	{Present agreement provides for U.S. use for a period not exceeding three years following cessation of hostilities.
Karachi, India (Karachi Airport)	United Kingdom	None	4, 046, 679	{So far as is known, all rights of use and occupation of airfields in India by the United States are limited to the duration of the war, with U.S. requirements being met wherever possible by the Government of India on the basis of reverse lend-lease.
Agra, India (Agra Airport)	United Kingdom	442, 800	3, 180, 840
Kharagpur, India (Dudhkundi Airport)	United Kingdom	1, 055, 974	2, 494, 964	{No existing formal agreement.
Rangoon, Burma (Mingaladon Airport)	Thailand	None	None
Bangkok, Thailand (Don Muang Airdrome)	France	None	None	{No existing formal agreement.
Saigon, French Indo-China (Tan Son Nhut Airport)	Mexico	1, 989, 720(A.D.P.)		{No existing formal agreement.
Vera Cruz, Mexico (Las Bajadas Airport) (Vera Cruz Harbor)*	Mexico	3, 440, 729(A.D.P.)		{In general military air transit rights in Mexico expire whenever either government decides no further threat exists to security of either country.
Tehuantepec, Mexico (Tehuantepec Airport)	Mexico	3, 136, 452(A.D.P.)		{The U.S. exercises no current base or air transit rights.
Merida, Mexico (Merida Airport)	Mexico	None
Acapulco, Mexico (Acapulco Harbor)*	Mexico	None		{The U.S. exercises no current base or air transit rights.
Mazatlan, Mexico (Mazatlan Harbor)*	Mexico	None
Managua, Nicaragua (Las Mercedes Airport)	Nicaragua	1, 094, 784(A.D.P.)		{Present agreement expires not later than six months after the peace treaty is signed.
San Jose, Guatemala (San Jose Airport)	Guatemala	985, 766(A.D.P.)		{Present agreement expires with the signing of the peace treaty.
Cayenne, French Guiana (Rochambeau Field)	France	3, 245, 371		{Present agreement provides for U.S. use to continue for one year after cessation of hostilities.
Nuku Hiva Island (Comptroller and Anaho Bays)* (In Marquesas Group)	France	None		{The U.S. exercises no current base or air transit rights.
Aitutaki Island (Tauta Seaplane Base)* (In Cook Islands)	New Zealand	50, 000		{Present agreement gives the United States military air transit privileges for the duration of the war.

*Landing and anchorage for seaplanes.

Airport Development Program.

Fold out
To Large
To Scan

1870
1871
1872
1873
1874
1875
1876
1877
1878
1879
1880
1881
1882
1883
1884
1885
1886
1887
1888
1889
1890 1891
1892
1893
1894
1895
1896
1897
1898
1899
1900

APPENDIX "C"

RIGHTS OF MILITARY AIR TRANSIT AND TECHNICAL STOP

1. The right of military air transit and technical stop is the long-term right to operate military aircraft into, over and away from a designated territory, and to land at one or more specific airfields or seaplane landing areas therein to refuel, effect repairs, or avoid unfavorable weather conditions, without restriction except as mutually agreed between the United States and the nation exercising sovereignty, mandate or trusteeship.

2. In the exercise of the above right, the United States to have the following attendant rights:

a. To install, maintain, and operate such aids to navigation, communications, and weather reporting facilities as may be required, subject to mutual agreement.

b. To operate seaplane tenders, as required in the exercise of the rights accorded, in territorial waters in the vicinity of specified seaplane landing areas, such operations to include use of anchorage facilities in those waters by such vessels, without restriction except as mutually agreed.

c. To import, station, store in, or remove from a designated airfield the minimum personnel, supplies, and matériel necessary for transit operations, free of customs, duties, taxes, and imposts of any kind.

d. Exemption of United States official personnel, aircraft, supplies and equipment in transit, from customs, duties, taxes, imposts, and inspections other than those required for quarantine or similar purposes.

e. To contract with persons, companies, or government agencies for services and supplies locally required.

SWNCC Files

Report by the Subcommittee on Rearmament to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee

TOP SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] March 21, 1946.

SWNCC 202/2

POLICY CONCERNING PROVISION OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT MILITARY SUPPLIES FOR POST-WAR ARMED FORCES OF FOREIGN NATIONS ⁶³

PROBLEM

1. To study and advise the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee with respect to the extent to which the United States will support

⁶³ The present paper had its origins in a request by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, approved by the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee as SWNCC 202/D on foreign countries with United States military supplies for their post-war armed forces; to determine whether certain lend-lease items still in existence should be withdrawn from particular foreign nations as a matter of United States or international security is a corollary in the implementation of the primary problem.

Footnote continued on following page.

NOTE: For the purpose of this paper the term "United States military supplies" is understood to mean naval vessels, arms, ammunition and implements of war obtainable through United States surplus channels or obtainable through the recapture of lend-lease articles in the hands of foreign military authorities.

DISCUSSION

2. See Appendix.

GENERAL CONCLUSIONS

3. As a general guide, the State, War and Navy Departments agree that it is consistent with United States policy to support forces of foreign countries with United States military supplies to the extent stated in the "Specific Conclusions" of this paper subject to the "General Conclusions". These conclusions should not exclude consideration of requests for minor quantities of United States military supplies, which requests should be considered on their individual merits.

4. Any support with United States military supplies should be implemented, so far as is possible within the framework of existing legislation, appropriations, etc., except enabling legislation will be necessary to avoid the mandatory recapture of certain vessels and craft. It is possible, however, in so far as surplus property located within the United States or its territories may be needed to implement such programs, that an amendment to the Surplus Property Act may be needed. The general policy guidance set forth in paragraph 3 should be considered when requests are made for new legislation or appropriations, etc.

5. The United States has the right to require the return or recapture of lend-lease military supplies. An examination of our relations with all countries indicates that it is not desirable at this time to exercise generally this right of return or recapture of such items. It is recognized, however, that the right of return or recapture may necessarily be exercised in cases where the War or Navy Department deems

October 3, 1945, that the Subcommittee on Rearmament prepare a report on policy with respect to lend-lease and the support of foreign countries by the provision of military supplies. The initial Subcommittee report was circulated as SWNCC 202/1, January 24, 1946, "Policy Concerning Settlement of Lend-Lease Obligations." That document was similar in form and content to the present paper. At its 35th Meeting, February 7, the Committee considered SWNCC 202/1, agreeing upon amendments which were incorporated into SWNCC 202/2. After undergoing certain minor additional revision, SWNCC 202/2 was approved by the Committee on March 21 in the form in which it appears here. (SWNCC Files) such action essential to meet its requirements. Any assertion by the War or Navy Department of the right of return or recapture should, however, be made only after consultation with the State Department in order that foreign policy factors may be considered.

6. In order to safeguard the future interests of the United States in the use of such items, the United States should obtain from those foreign governments which are permitted to retain lend-lease military equipment, an agreement providing that such Government will return lend-lease items on demand of the United States; and an agreement that such items will not be transferred to third governments for military use or to any party for civilian use by sale or otherwise, without the consent of the United States unless previously agreed, and then only upon such terms and conditions as the United States may impose; provided that the rights of recapture and restrictions as to use or disposition of military items of lend-lease origin may be waived only in case specific agreements to that effect are concluded within the United States Government. It is not intended that the retention of the rights of recapture expressed in this paragraph should apply in the case of lend-lease items paid for in full or in accordance with the terms of specific treaties or agreements.

8. [sic] It is neither desirable nor essential to set aside a reserve, or to disrupt existing disposal procedures, of equipment presently available to the United States, for the purpose of meeting equipment requirements that may result from these General and Specific Conclusions.⁶⁴

SPECIFIC CONCLUSIONS

NOTE: The State Department wishes to invite attention that the following observations were obviously based upon foreign policy considerations at the time this paper was written, and that accordingly changes in policy are likely in the future which would affect these conclusions. In this connection it is recognized that the policy of the United States pursuant to its responsibilities in the United Nations for the regulation of armaments is now being formulated. To the extent that the specific conclusions which follow may be found not to be in harmony with such policy, modification of these conclusions may be required. It is understood by the War and Navy Departments that the State Department will initiate action to revise these specific conclusions whenever changes in foreign policy so dictate. It is assumed that the State Department will be consulted at the time any new policy or major program is proposed with respect to the furnishing of military supplies to a foreign country.

⁶⁴ In memorandum SWN-3830, February 4, the Department of State approved SWNCC 202/1 subject to the addition of this paragraph and of the words "In this connection . . . may be required" in the Specific Conclusions immediately below. Neither item had appeared in any form in SWNCC 202/1. (SWNCC Files)

The following specific conclusions are intended to set the permissive limits within which implementation would be consistent with present national policy.

Latin America

9. It is consistent with United States policy to support with U.S. military supplies the armed forces of the other American Republics to the extent necessary to effect collaboration for the defense of the Hemisphere.

Far East

China

10. It is consistent with United States policy to support with U.S. military supplies, in reasonable amounts, the armed forces of China to the extent required to accomplish the establishment of a military organization capable of discharging Chinese national and international responsibilities for the maintenance of peace and order.

Philippines

11. It is consistent with United States policy to support the armed forces of the Philippines with U.S. military supplies to the extent required to permit them to provide for the security of the Philippines and for the mutual protection of the Islands and the United States.

Siam

12. It is consistent with United States policy to consider requests for strengthening the armed forces of Siam by the United States on their individual merits.

Korea

13. It is consistent with United States policy to provide a Korean National Civil Police Force with equipment adequate for the internal police requirements of that country as outlined in SWNCC 232/1.⁶⁵

Europe

The United Kingdom and the British Commonwealth

14. It is consistent with United States policy to positively support and aid the United Kingdom and British Commonwealth with United States military supplies in maintaining strong post-war armed forces.

⁶⁵ SWNCC 232/1, Police Force and National Defense Forces for Korea, was approved by the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee on December 29, 1945. For the directive on this subject from the Joint Chiefs of Staff to General MacArthur, Commanding General, United States Army Forces in the Pacific, see telegram Warx 92187 to Tokyo, January 9, 1946, in Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. VI, p. 1156.

France

15. It is consistent with United States policy to support with United States military supplies the armed forces of France, but pending further clarification of the situation in Indo-China provision of U.S. military supplies should be suspended in cases which appear to relate directly to that area.

Portugal

16. It is not considered consistent with United States policy to support with United States military supplies the armed forces of Portugal, except to the extent that they may be used to aid negotiations for permanent base rights.

Italy

17. United States policy favors the establishment within treaty limits of a military force sufficiently strong to maintain internal order in Italy, and sufficiently strong for defense of her borders against local violations and any support to Italy should be in accord therewith.

Belgium, Denmark, Norway and Sweden

18. At this time the United States does not anticipate the rearming with United States military supplies of the armed forces of Belgium, Denmark, Norway and Sweden. It is consistent with United States policy, however, to give favorable consideration to specific requests by these countries for a limited number of aircraft. It is also consistent with United States policy to give favorable consideration to Danish requests for naval equipment for use in Greenland.

Netherlands

19. The State Department is of the opinion that requests for strengthening Netherlands armed forces by the United States should be considered on their individual merits, but that pending further clarification of the situation in the Netherlands East Indies, provision of U.S. military supplies should be suspended in cases which appear to relate directly to that area.

U.S.S.R.

20. The Soviet Government is in a position to meet its own military needs. Requests for strengthening the armed forces of the U.S.S.R. should be considered on their individual merits.

Other Countries of Europe

21. It is not considered consistent with United States policy to support with United States military supplies the armed forces of Poland, Rumania, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Austria, Hungary, Albania, Spain, Finland, Switzerland, and, of course, Germany. At this time the support of the armed forces of Czechoslovakia with United States supplies is not contemplated.

Near and Middle East

22. In accordance with the United States' firm political policy of aiding the countries of the Near and Middle East to maintain their independence and develop sufficient strength to preserve law and order within their boundaries, it is consistent with United States policy to make available additional military supplies, in reasonable quantities, to those countries.

RECOMMENDATIONS

23. It is recommended that the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee approve the above Conclusions and transmit this paper to the State, War and Navy Departments and the Joint Chiefs of Staff for their guidance.

Appendix

DISCUSSION

1. In order fully to meet the requirements of the study under reference, an approach to the problem has been made by the Subcommittee from the standpoint of determining :

a. The extent to which the United States, in accordance with our foreign policy, will support in the foreseeable future foreign countries with military supplies for their post-war armed forces, and

b. Whether, in accordance with United States or international strategic security, lend-lease military equipment still in existence should be withdrawn from particular foreign nations.

2. In reaching its conclusions and recommendations the State-War-Navy Coordinating Subcommittee on Rearmament is of the opinion that so far as it is possible no new legislation is desirable for the implementation of any of the conclusions reached in this paper. It is possible, however, in so far as surplus property located within the United States or its territories may be needed to implement such programs, that an amendment to the Surplus Property Act may be needed. Also, it is believed necessary that enabling legislation must be enacted to clarify the matter of the disposition of craft now subject to mandatory recapture under Public Law No. 1, 78th Congress (H.R. 1446), and to provide for future transactions in which naval vessels and craft are involved.

3. The State-War-Navy Coordinating Subcommittee on Rearmament is in accord with the conclusions . . . that "the State Department will recognize and make appropriate use of the bargaining power of foreign lend-lease obligations to the United States".

4. In order to make sure that lend-lease equipment is not used in the future for purposes against the interests of the United States and to make sure that in case of future need the United States will be in a position to call for the return of this material, it would seem most desirable that before various governments are permitted to retain this equipment indefinitely they should be obliged to agree to return it upon demand.

5. The conclusion that foreign governments must agree not to transfer (by sale or otherwise) to third countries without our consent lend-lease military equipment or supplies is based generally on two considerations:

a. A factor in not recapturing this equipment from a certain country is that we want to see it in the hands of that country for security reasons, and this might or might not be the case with respect to the country of proposed retransfer, and we would want the opportunity to consider that question from the security angle case by case as they arise.

b. From the political angle, we would want the opportunity to consider whether the United States rather than the other country should get the credit for the transfer.

c. In the cases of sales, we would want the opportunity to consider whether the sale should be made for our account with proceeds payable to us.

6. It is the feeling of members of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Subcommittee on Rearmament that a more appropriate title to this paper would be "Policy Concerning Provision of United States Government Military Supplies for Post-War Armed Forces of Foreign Nations".⁶⁶ As explained in paragraph 1 above, this paper deals with the larger problem of United States foreign policy toward the support of post-war armed forces of foreign countries, as well as with the immediate problem of the recapture of lend-lease military equipment. Moreover, the scope of this paper goes beyond countries which have been furnished lend-lease equipment. Furthermore, the initial request by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee was for guidance for the War and Navy Departments "with respect to the extent to which the United States will support foreign countries with military supplies for their post-war armed forces".

⁶⁶ Documents SWNCC 202/D and SWNCC 202/1 are titled "Policy Concerning Settlement of Lend-Lease Obligations" (SWNCC Files).

7. While it is unquestionably the function of the War and Navy Departments in the first instance to determine those lend-lease items which should be recaptured to meet their respective military requirements, the final determination in respect to recaptured items should of necessity give full consideration to this Government's basic policies toward the post-war strength and position of any given country from which lend-lease material might be recaptured. For example, in the cases of France and Great Britain consideration should be given to the fact that it is our policy and it is in our national interest to have those countries politically, economically and militarily strong. While there would be no conflict with that policy on the recapture of items surplus to the needs of those countries, recapture of war materials which would materially weaken their military positions might well run counter to our basic interest. Accordingly, any request for the return of lend-lease items should only be made after full consideration has been given whether the recapture might involve the weakening of the military organization of a friendly country.

Latin America

8. The general problem of providing military aid to Latin America is discussed in SWNCC 4/10⁶⁷ and in other papers (ref. SWNCC 246 and SWN-3658) now before SWNCC.^{67a} The objective embodied in these papers, and set forth in paragraph 8 of the Specific Conclusions is the development of such relations with the armed forces of other American republics as will contribute the maximum to hemisphere security in the light of both military and political considerations.

Far East

China

9. There is an urgent need for reorganizing and modernizing China's armed forces in order that they may be forged into an instrument capable of discharging China's national and international responsibilities for the maintenance of peace and order. To meet this need, the President has laid down as a principle of American policy toward China that "As China moves toward peace and unity . . . the United States would be prepared to assist the National Government (of China) in every reasonable way to . . . establish a military organization capable of discharging China's national and international responsibilities for the maintenance of peace and order." In keeping with the President's policy as enunciated above, the United States should be prepared to support with United States military supplies the armed forces in China to the extent needed to accomplish the establishment of a modern and effective military organization.

⁶⁷ For text, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. ix, p. 251.

^{67a} Neither printed.

Philippines

10. The Tydings-McDuffie Act of March 24, 1934 authorized the retention of military installations in the Philippines after they become a free and independent state on July 4, 1946. In a Joint Resolution of Congress (Public Law 380, 78th Congress) approved June 29, 1944, this policy was reaffirmed and the President of the United States was authorized to acquire and retain bases and necessary appurtenances thereto in the Philippines, and all rights incident thereto, in addition to those provided by the Act of March 24, 1934, "for the mutual protection of the Philippine Islands and the United States". It can, therefore, be said that there is an obligation to aid the armed forces of the Philippines by making available to them United States military supplies not only for their own security but also for the security of the United States. In addition, it is essential that measures be taken to insure peace and order in the Philippines following the granting of complete independence on July 4, 1946.

Siam

11. The Department of State believes that favorable consideration should be given to requests by the Government of Siam for U.S. military supplies. However, in view of the international political implications of any such transaction, it is believed that such requests should be considered on their individual merits.

Korea

12. In approving SWNCC 232/1, it was considered inadvisable to authorize anything beyond the arming of Korean military police until such time as U.S. and Soviet occupying forces had been withdrawn or a responsible Korean government created which could support a military organization.

Europe

France

13. In late August 1944, the British Embassy approached the State Department, and the British Chiefs of Staff approached the Combined Chiefs of Staff, with reference to the adequate equipment of the forces of the Western European Allies, to enable them to maintain security in their own countries and to take part in occupying Germany. The question was asked whether the United States Government would be willing to reequip a French Army for such purposes from American sources during the next few years, having in mind that present French land forces are provided with American munitions and material. British Chiefs of Staff suggested a continuance of British supply to Norway, Denmark, the Netherlands and Belgium.

The United States Chiefs of Staff, through Admiral Leahy, stated to the Department of State that there was no objection on military grounds to the Division of responsibility proposed but that no commitments should be made that will be rigidly exclusive for the future.

Acceptance of the British proposal was recommended to President Roosevelt, who gave his approval. In the memorandum approved by President Roosevelt it was stated "Our present policy toward France is based on the belief that it is in the best interests of the United States that France resume her traditional position as a principal power capable of playing a part in the occupation of Germany and in maintaining peace in Europe. The recruiting and equipping of French military forces would be a natural corollary of this policy, and politically such a move could be portrayed as a further evidence of American friendship for France and a proof of our desire to see her as a strong nation. The furnishing of arms by the United States to France may provide this Government with a lever to exercise a certain measure of influence on French policy for a number of years. However, it must be borne in mind that France will make every effort to obtain arms from any source." This continues to be State Department policy.

In March 1945, President Roosevelt approved a program of additional military equipment for the French military force. This program involved the equipment of eight additional French divisions. This program was only partially completed by V-E Day.

Due to the unsettled conditions at present prevailing in Indo-China, the Department of State finds itself in a somewhat difficult position. As indicated above, it believes that as a general principle, the United States should support the armed forces of France with military supplies. On the other hand, it does not at this juncture desire to strengthen the hand of the French Government in its current attempt to restore by force the pre-war position of France in Indo-China.

It is obvious that any material delivered to the French Government could easily find its way to Indo-China for purposes to which this Government is currently opposed. It goes without saying that once combat material is delivered to the French it will be extremely difficult to determine the ultimate use to which it is put.

Whereas the position taken in this juncture by the Department of State may not result in its desiderata being obtained in all respects, it is felt that the application of paragraph 12 ^{67b} of this paper can best serve the current interests of the United States.

^{67b} The reference is to paragraph 15 under "Specific Conclusions" herein, p. 1147.

Italy

14. Approval has been given (SWNCC 188 Series) to the sale to the Italian Government of approximately 150 P-38 aircraft now on loan to that government, and (SWNCC 170 Series) to the sale to Italy of military material furnished Italian troops. United States policy favors the establishment within the limits of treaty arrangements of an Italian military force sufficiently strong to maintain internal order and also strong enough for defense against outside encroachment.

Portugal

15. JCS document 1289/2,⁶⁸ November 12, 1945, sets forth the desires of the Joint Chiefs of Staff with respect to post-war military rights in the Azores Islands. Negotiations for those rights have not yet been undertaken.

In view of the fact that the Department of State will shortly undertake negotiations with the Portuguese Government looking to securing for the United States permanent base rights in the Azores, it would be most useful if the American negotiators were in position to indicate to the Portuguese authorities that the supplies envisaged in the staff talks and possibly additional supplies might be made available to Portugal at preferably an extremely favorable price. Portuguese agreement to base rights might be the more readily obtained. It seems logical also that if this base is to be a joint Portuguese-American undertaking the Portuguese should have modernized equipment preferably United States standard equipment.

United Kingdom and British Commonwealth

16. It is recognized that it is in the interest of the United States that the United Kingdom and the British Commonwealth have forces sufficiently strong to discharge their defense responsibilities. A strengthening of the armed forces of Canada, Australia and New Zealand is favored.

In any program of recapture of lend-lease equipment from the United Kingdom and the British Commonwealth, consideration should be given to the basic United States policy with respect to these countries and caution should be exerted in filing requests for recapture lest an actual weakening of the armed strength of those countries might result.

Netherlands

17. At the present time the Department of State finds itself in a somewhat difficult position due to the uncertainty of developments in the Netherlands East Indies. On the one hand it is agreeable to furnishing the Netherlands Government with United States military supplies intended for the defense of the metropolitan area, while on the other it does not, at this juncture, desire to assist that Government in an attempt to restore by force its pre-war position in the Netherlands East Indies. It is obvious that the Dutch might ship war material secured on the basis of use in the metropolitan area, to the Netherlands East Indies, for purposes to which this Government is currently opposed, and it is equally obvious that once combat material is delivered to the Dutch it would be extremely difficult to trace such material further.

⁶⁸ Not printed.

Whereas the position taken at this juncture by the Department of State may not result in its desiderata being obtained in all respects, it is felt that the phrase "individual merits", plus the caveat on the Netherlands East Indies contained in paragraph 16^{68a} of this paper, can best serve the current interests of the United States until the situation in the Indies is further clarified.

Belgium, Denmark, Norway and Sweden

18. Although United States policy favors a strong Belgium, Denmark, Norway and Sweden, it is expected that these countries will receive outside support of military supplies from the United Kingdom. However, any requests from Denmark for naval equipment for use in Greenland should be favorably considered particularly as it would aid our negotiations for rights in that area.

Individual requests for commercial and trainer-type aircraft in limited quantities are to be expected from these countries and should be favored. Some requests for commercial-type aircraft have been received.

Other Countries of Europe

19. State Department policy with respect to the support of these countries with United States supplies is set forth in paragraph 20[21] of the Specific Conclusions.

Near and Middle East

20. The State Department advises as follows with respect to United States foreign policy regarding nations of the Near and Middle East:

In general, the United States had adopted the firm policy of aiding the countries of the Near and Middle East to maintain their independence and to develop sufficient strength to keep a reasonable degree of law and order within their boundaries. None of the governments of the area are believed to possess excessive armaments, and few of them have sufficient strength at present to police its territory adequately.

^{68a} The reference is to paragraph 19 under "Specific Conclusions" herein, p. 1149.

By and large, therefore, we favor the according of additional military supplies, in reasonable quantities, to those countries of the area which may be able to purchase them.

As regards recapture, relatively little in the nature of military supplies has been furnished these countries under lend-lease with the exception of Turkey. Even in the case of Turkey, the supplies furnished were far less than those promised to Turkey by Prime Minister Churchill, with President Roosevelt's concurrence. A few LST boats were furnished to Greece, and small amounts of military supplies may have been retransferred to Iran and Egypt by Great Britain. We are not aware of any instance in this area where an effort to recapture military supplies would be advisable, although the United States military authorities may find an instance here and there in which some country may have an excessive supply of some particular item of United States military lend-lease origin.

Afghanistan

21. United States foreign policy favors a government in Afghanistan which is capable of controlling the tribes and maintaining internal security. The country already possesses a moderate amount of military equipment but will need new supplies and replacements. We should examine sympathetically any Afghan requests to purchase such supplies from the United States in moderate amounts, for internal security purposes and to enable Afghanistan to defend its frontiers against marauders.

A complicating factor in the case of Afghanistan is British desire to have no such equipment transferred to Afghanistan without British approval, since the security of Northwest India is closely tied to that of Afghanistan. American representatives in London in 1944 concurred in the view that no arms should be sold by the United States to Afghanistan without prior consultation with the British. While this was an informal arrangement, without suggestion as to the duration and applied primarily to the existing war situation, the Department of State will undoubtedly feel it desirable to discuss with the British authorities any Afghan requests to purchase arms. Other military supplies such as uniforms, communications, supplies, et cetera, might be sold without prior consultation, although prior notification would be a proper courtesy. Decision regarding consultation in the latter type of case can be made in each case as it arises. The Afghan Government has indicated a desire to acquire certain surplus United States military supplies in India but no formal request has yet been received. If such a request were received, we should view it sympathetically.

Egypt

22. A treaty between Great Britain and Egypt gives Great Britain preferential treatment in the training of its Army by British military instructors and in furnishing military supplies which are to conform, as far as possible, to British specifications. As long as the foregoing treaty provisions are in effect, Egypt is understood not to be in a position to obtain military equipment without British concurrence. We should consider favorably any reasonable Egyptian requests which have British approval.

Ethiopia

23. In accordance with our policy of affording all appropriate assistance to the Ethiopian Government to enable it to maintain the independence of the country and in fulfillment of our assurances of aid in Ethiopia's rehabilitation, it is recommended that the United States provide such military supplies as competent American and Ethiopian military authorities may deem necessary to ensure domestic tranquillity. From the international aspect, it is difficult to envisage a future armed threat to Ethiopian independence from any of her present neighbors, but border incidents may continue to occur as a result of the Government's present inability to maintain complete order throughout the 350,000 square miles of its domain. The furnishing of additional military supplies should assist the Government to augment its police and military forces and to increase its ability to deal with unstable border elements.

The Ethiopian Government has recently furnished the State Department a long list of supplies which it desires to obtain, including various items of military equipment. It is not yet certain, however, how the Ethiopians intend to handle this request formally. When this request is received in proper fashion the State Department considers that the request should be viewed sympathetically.

Greece

24. It is desirable to cooperate with the British to enable Greece to maintain security, especially along North and Northwestern frontier. The amount of arms necessary for this purpose will depend on the extent of armament in neighboring countries, a subject on which the Big Three are in disagreement. In principle, United States foreign policy favors the further strengthening of Greek forces.

Iran

25. United States foreign policy toward Iran envisages a strong national entity capable of maintaining internal security. To attain this objective, we would look with favor on the furnishing of arms and equipment to the Iranian Army, police and gendarmerie. We have, in fact, been furnishing such equipment during the war under cash reimbursable lend-lease, through requisitions filed by the heads of the two American Military Missions to Iran. It is recommended that we continue to furnish any military supplies to Iran, against payment, which may be recommended by our military missions there.

Iraq

26. As long as the present Anglo-Iraqi treaty of alliance remains in effect, Iraq is presumably precluded from obtaining any military supplies except with the concurrence of Great Britain. In any event, it would seem advisable for us to cooperate closely with Great Britain in any program for supplying arms to Iraq.

Liberia

27. Liberia occupies a special position in our foreign relations. We have been looked to as "next friend" ever since Liberia was founded by American philanthropic institutions. Our policy has been to support internal order and to give economic and political assistance when required. We should support Liberia with military supplies for its small post-war armed forces, should requests for such supplies be considered necessary by American representatives in Liberia. The United States, during the course of the present war, undertook the defense of Liberia for the duration, and in that connection provided arms and training for the Liberian Frontier Force.

Saudi Arabia

28. The United States has every interest in assisting the Government of Saudi Arabia in maintaining peace and order in the country, where an American company has an oil concession of great potential importance to American strategic as well as commercial and political interests. Furthermore, some 1200 American citizens are residing in the country without protection from possible tribal disturbances and the most feasible means of protection is to strengthen the Government with adequate military supplies.

It should be added that this Government has indicated willingness to continue to assist Saudi Arabia in the development of a modern post-war Army, both ground and air force, through military missions and other means. From October 1944 to July 1946 a small United States Military Mission consisting of 12 officers and men was stationed in Saudi Arabia to train the Saudis in the use and care of military lend-lease items being shipped to that country. In response to a request from King Ibn Saud a new military mission to Saudi Arabia was organized in March 1945, but during subsequent negotiations the King expressed fears that further military assistance would be misinterpreted and opposed by his tribal chieftains, by his external enemies and by the British. For the time being at least, the King has declined such military assistance. On the other hand, he has let it be known that his decision is not final. It is quite possible, therefore, that the King may yet request military assistance in some form, and this Government would then be under commitment to render such assistance.

Syria and Lebanon

29. Syria and Lebanon, especially the former, are in urgent need of military supplies if they are to be enabled to maintain internal security. It is recommended that we furnish such supplies as requested to the greatest extent feasible. These two countries are just now emerging into independent status and are endeavoring to establish rudimentary armed forces sufficient to enable them to maintain order. We have recognized their independence and assured them of our willingness to assist them in their efforts to create firm governments.

Turkey

30. We should continue, in general, to sell the Turks such reasonable amounts of arms and equipment as they may wish to buy. We must guard against a charge of actively and aggressively arming Turkey against the U.S.S.R., but there seems no likelihood of Turkey's developing aggressive tendencies and any arms they obtained would be for defensive purposes.

SWNCC Files

*Memorandum Prepared by the Joint Chiefs of Staff*⁶⁹

TOP SECRET
SWNCC 282

[WASHINGTON,] March 27, 1946.

BASIS FOR THE FORMULATION OF A U.S. MILITARY POLICY

1. The basic purpose for maintaining United States armed forces is to provide for our security and to uphold and advance our national ⁶⁹ This document was approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff on September 19, 1945, and forwarded to the Secretaries of War and Navy for transmission to the Secretary of State and the President. The Assistant Secretary of War submitted it to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee on September 26, 1945. It was examined at the 167th Meeting of the Secretary's Staff Committee on November 13, 1945; for the minutes of that meeting, see p. 1118. SC-169b, an evaluation of the present document prepared in the Department of State, is printed on p. 1123. At the request of the War Department, the JCS statement of policy was republished as SWNCC 282 on March 27, 1946, and referred to an ad hoc committee for study and revision in accord with comments by the State, War, and Navy Departments. The ad hoc committee did not meet in 1946. On December 13, 1946, the Department of State recommended that action with respect to the paper be cancelled. However, in view of the desire of the War Department that further action be taken, the ad hoc committee prepared and circulated a revised draft of the present paper on February 6, 1947. This draft failed to receive full approval of all members of the ad hoc committee itself. No other draft was prepared subsequently. Events having overtaken it and a project of the newly-formed National Security Council having dealt with its subject, SWNCC 282 was removed from the agenda of the State-War-Navy-Air Force Coordinating Committee in 1948. (SWNCC Files) policies, foreign and domestic. The essentials of our military policy are determined by our national policies.

2. The major national policies which determine our military policy are:

a. Maintenance of the territorial integrity and security of the United States, its territories, possessions, leased areas and trust territories.

b. Advancing the political, economic and social well-being of the United States.

c. Maintenance of the territorial integrity and the sovereignty or political independence of other American states, and regional collaboration with them in the maintenance of international peace and security in the Western Hemisphere.

d. Maintenance of the territorial integrity, security and, when it becomes effective, the political independence of the Philippine Islands.

e. Participation in and full support of the United Nations Organization.

f. Enforcement, in collaboration with our Allies, of terms imposed upon the defeated enemy states.

g. Maintenance of the United States in the best possible relative position with respect to potential enemy powers, ready when necessary to take military action abroad to maintain the security and integrity of the United States.

3. These policies in the aggregate are directed toward the maintenance of world peace, under conditions which insure the security, well-being and advancement of our country.

4. In the last analysis the maintenance of such a world peace will depend upon mutual cooperation among Britain, Russia and the United States. The possibility of a breakdown in the relation between these major powers and the resulting necessity to exercise individual or collective self-defense requires, for our own preservation, that we be so prepared that if necessary we can maintain our security without immediate or substantial assistance from other nations. Such an eventuality presents the maximum problem from the military point of view. A military policy that will maintain the security of the United States, standing alone, would meet all other military requirements. Any future conflict between major foreign powers will almost certainly precipitate a third world war, in which we could not hope to escape being involved. Any nation, which in the future may attempt to dominate the world, may be expected to make her major effort against the United States and before we can mobilize our forces and productive capacity. The power, range and prospective development of modern weapons are such as to favor such an attack. As a result, there will be a marked reduction in the degree of invulnerability to ready attack that has been provided in the past by our geographical position.

5. It is to be borne in mind, however, that, in correspondingly equal degree, we will possess the means for retaliatory or punitive attack against other powers who may threaten the United States or the international peace structure in general. The means for preserving peace under the United Nations are both tacit and explicit. They are primarily tacit with regard to the major powers in that, whereas the existence of effective military power must be real, its implementation or assertion must be avoided, if possible. If the stability of the international structure is to be maintained, unbalanced power factors or stresses must be guarded against. From the point of view of the United States, this means that our country, if she is to play her proper part toward the maintenance of international peace, must have sufficient military power to make it unwise for any major aggressor nation to initiate a major war against the opposition of the United States. The relative military power required for fulfilling the potential role of this international sanction should not exceed that required for national security purposes, as set forth in the preceding paragraph. It would not be maintained for, nor used in any way as, an international threat, nor for purposes of asserting world domination.

6. More explicit is the maintenance of an international security force. The United Nations Charter provides for the use, if required, of certain armed forces made available to the Security Council, by previous agreement, to maintain international peace and security. Under its terms concerted military action by the United Nations can be taken only when all five of the permanent members of the Security Council, plus two non-permanent members, agree that other means are inadequate to maintain or restore international peace and security. It may therefore be assumed that the total requirement of the Security Council for armed forces will be small, and consequently, that the United States commitment will be only a small part of the military forces which will be required in any event for national security against the in no way remote possibility of a breakdown in the relation of major powers.

7. The other definite military commitment, and the one that is most immediate, is to provide the necessary forces for the occupation and demilitarization of Germany and Japan, and the prevention of their resurgence as aggressor nations.

8. It is recognized that the maintenance of overwhelmingly strong forces in time of peace is politically and economically unacceptable to the people of the United States. However, they should accept as requirements essential to their security :

a. The maintenance of sufficient active forces to afford assurance of the security of the United States, its territories and possessions during the initial period of mobilization of national means—manpower, resources and industry.

b. Readiness and determination to take prompt and effective military action abroad to anticipate and prevent attack.

c. An intelligence system which would assure this government information concerning military, political, economic and technological developments abroad and hence provide the necessary forewarning of hostile intent and capability.

d. A national organization which will promote and coordinate civilian and military activities in technical research and development.

e. Maintenance of an adequate system of overseas bases.

9. It may be assumed that the United States, relative to other great powers, will maintain in peace time as armed forces only a minimum percentage of its war time potential. It is imperative therefore that these forces be the best trained in the world, and equipped with superior matériel and so disposed strategically that they can be brought to bear at the source of enemy military power, or in other critical areas in time to thwart attack by a potential aggressor. These forces must be supported by an adequate system of bases and machinery for the rapid mobilization of our national resources. Plans and preparations must be kept abreast of developments of new weapons and counter-measures against them and provide for exploitation of our superior mechanical and industrial capabilities. When it becomes evident that forces of aggression are being arrayed against us by a potential enemy, we cannot afford, through any misguided and perilous idea of avoiding an aggressive attitude to permit the first blow to be struck against us. Our government, under such conditions, should press the issue to a prompt political decision, while making all preparations to strike the first blow if necessary.

10. In view of the above, the United States military policy may be stated as follows:

STATEMENT OF UNITED STATES MILITARY POLICY

11. Basic Military Policy. To insure the security of the United States and to uphold and advance its national interests by military readiness to support its national policies and international commitments.

12. General Military Policy. To be prepared to take prompt and effective military action wherever necessary with the armed forces of the United States:

a. To maintain the security of the United States, its territories, possessions, leased areas, trust territories and the Philippine Islands.

b. To secure and to maintain international peace within the Western Hemisphere, acting collectively with other American states, but if necessary acting alone.

c. To fulfill our military commitments in the maintenance of international peace and security as a member of the United Nations.

d. To fulfill our military commitments in the enforcement, in cooperation with our Allies, of the terms imposed upon defeated enemy states.

e. To maintain the United States in the best possible relative position with respect to potential enemy powers.

13. Principal Supporting Military Policies:

a. To maintain mobile striking forces in strength, composition and state of readiness for prompt and adequate action and to provide necessary fixed and mobile logistic support for such forces.

b. To maintain adequate forces required by our commitments for the enforcement of terms imposed on defeated enemy states.

c. To provide security for vital areas in the United States, its territories, possessions, leased areas and trust territories against possible enemy attacks, including attacks with newly developed weapons.

d. To maintain an adequate reserve of appropriate composition, both as to personnel and matériel, which is capable of rapid mobilization.

e. To develop and maintain an adequate system of supporting establishments within the continental United States for our operating forces, capable of rapid expansion.

f. To develop and maintain a system of outlying bases, adequately equipped and defended, for the support of our mobile forces, and capable of rapid expansion.

g. To develop and maintain an intelligence system which would assure adequate information concerning military, political, economic and technological developments abroad and provide the necessary warning of hostile intent and capability.

h. To promote research, development and provision of new weapons, processes, matériel and countermeasures, and in so far as possible and desirable to deny such knowledge and capacity to possible enemy states.

i. To provide for the rapid mobilization in an emergency, of national means—manpower, resources and industry—by supporting:

(1) Universal military training.

(2) Maintenance of a large United States Merchant Marine, both active and reserve.

(3) Development and maintenance of United States domestic and international commercial air transport systems.

(4) Plans and preparations for the mobilization of manpower, resources and industry.

(5) Maintenance of industries essential to the national war effort so designed and located as to give maximum insurance against destruction by enemy attack.

(6) Stockpiling of critical strategic materials.

j. To develop and maintain close coordination and mutual understanding between the State, War and Navy Departments, and those other agencies of government and industry which contribute to the national war effort.

k. To maintain liaison with and to support the development and training of the armed forces of the American republics, the Dominion of Canada, the Philippine Islands, and other nations which contribute to the security of the United States, its territories, possessions, leased areas, trust territories, and the Western Hemisphere.

l. In concert with political and economic measures taken by the other departments of the government, to maintain the United States in the best possible military position with respect to potential enemy powers.

711.00/3-2946

*The Joint Chiefs of Staff to the Secretary of State*⁷⁰

SECRET

WASHINGTON, March 29, 1946.

SWN-4096

FOREIGN POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES

[Extracts]

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. From a military point of view, the consolidation and development of the power of Russia is the greatest threat to the United States in the foreseeable future. While clashes of vital interest are unlikely to occur immediately, the expansion of Russia in the Far East may ultimately bring about serious conflict with United States policies directly, and its expansion to the west and south may involve clashes with Great Britain into which we might well be drawn. The "adoption of a firm and friendly attitude in our dealings with the Soviet Government" is strongly indorsed with, however, the emphasis upon "firmness". Collaboration with the Soviet Union should stop short not only of compromise of principle but also of expansion of Russian influence in Europe and in the Far East. Support of nations threatened by such expansion should be extended, not only through the United Nations but through direct economic means if necessary. (Military support at present would be difficult if not impracticable.) In considering such support, however, the realities of nations already definitely penetrated by Soviet influence should be recognized in order that a position of antagonism may not be unfruitfully assumed.

⁷⁰ This document was transmitted by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the State-War Navy Coordinating Committee as SM-5062 dated February 21. It was forwarded by SWNCC to the Secretary of State under the cover of SWN-4096, March 29. It consists of the comments of the JCS on pp. 26-106 of Department of State paper "Foreign Policy of the United States," extracts from which are printed on pp. 1134-1139.

In conclusion the Joint Chiefs of Staff offer the following observations on U.S. foreign policy in general:

Reliance can not be placed upon the efficacy of the United Nations Organization to prevent all war. Many incipient disputes can no doubt be quenched, but power is lacking for, and procedure precludes, the arbitrary settlement of a major conflict of policy among major nations. In such case war may follow. So long as the United Nations Organization functions under its present charter, the security of the United States will by necessity require safeguards beyond those of that Organization.

Appreciating this fact, one of the fundamentals of national power and prestige must be borne in mind, namely the ability to back with force the policies and commitments undertaken by our government. Two world wars in which we have fought have brought about our participation in the conflict at a time when we were militarily incapable for many months thereafter of keeping pace with our political action, though a fortunate geographical position and the fact of our allies holding the enemy at bay have given us the time in which to gather our strength for the offensive.

In the future neither geography nor allies will render a nation immune from sudden and paralyzing attack should an aggressor arise to plague the peace of the world. Because of this, determination of United States foreign policy should continually give consideration to our immediate capabilities for supporting our policy by arms if the occasion should demand, rather than to our long term potential, which, owing to the length of time required for mobilization of the nation's resources, might not be sufficient to avert disaster in another war.

In the final analysis the greatest single military factor in the security of the world is the absolute military security of the United States.

For the Joint Chiefs of Staff:

A. J. MCFARLAND

Brigadier General, U.S.A.,

Secretary

SWNCC Files

Memorandum by the Acting Department of State Member (Matthews) to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee

TOP SECRET

WASHINGTON, April 1, 1946.

Subject: Political Estimate of Soviet Policy for Use in Connection with Military Studies ⁷¹

For the purpose of this paper there is no value in attempting any exhaustive interpretation or analysis of the possible motives or reasons which underlie present Soviet policy. Recent despatches from the Embassy at Moscow (especially nos. 511 of February 22 and 878 of March 20)⁷² have set forth in full the most probable explanation of present Soviet policies and attitudes. The U.S. Government must take cognizance of actual Soviet policies and actions in the international field at the present time. As long as present Soviet policies and attitude in regard to other countries continue unchanged, the U.S. must accept the fact that it is confronted with the threat of an expanding totalitarian state which continues to believe and act on the belief that the world is divided into two irreconcilably hostile camps, i.e., Soviet and non-Soviet. As long as Soviet actions continue to support this thesis, the U.S. must accept that this policy of expansion by direct and indirect means will be continuous and unlimited.

The only interpretations of present Soviet policy which would be of value to consider in this paper are those concerning which there is current misapprehension in the U.S. The first of these is the belief that present Soviet actions and policies are motivated primarily by a legitimate desire to obtain security for the Soviet Union against the threat of hostile action on the part of "capitalist encirclement." The very use of the words "capitalist encirclement" as a justification of present Soviet action prompts the logical conclusion that Soviet expansionist aims are unlimited and not confined to areas of immediate concern to the Soviet Union.

⁷¹ This memorandum was prepared in response to a request submitted by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee on March 13. In that request, SM-5244, the JCS had stated that they were conducting studies regarding military support for governmental policies. In connection with these studies, the JCS asked the Department of State to "provide them with a political estimate of Russia and, so far as possible, an outline of future United States policy with reference to Russia, and any requirement for its implementation on the part of the armed forces." (SWNCC Files)

⁷² Vol. VI, pp. 696 and 721, respectively.

Another misconception frequently held is that Soviet policies and actions can be explained on the basis of Soviet "suspicions" of the motives of other countries. Without going fully into this aspect of Soviet psychology it can be stated on the basis of experience that Soviet suspicion of the motives of other countries is a deliberately artificial thesis spread by the Soviet Government primarily for internal reasons, but for consumption both at home and abroad, and not a conclusion reached by an objective and honest evaluation of the actions of other countries. Soviet "suspicion" of foreign governments is thus not susceptible of removal by the actions of foreign governments since its source lies within the border of the Soviet Union. Ill-considered and unintelligent actions or statements by foreign governments or individuals, however, serve to assist the Soviet Government in developing or supporting this suspicion to its internal and external advantage. Moreover we must be prepared to face the fact that any actions or statements evidencing interest in various areas (bases, for instance) do form a basis which permits the Soviet authorities to use such actions and statements, internally and externally to place in as favorable light as possible unilateral moves they are making, or to interpret them as confirmation of their suspicions. They are already using the presence of American troops in China, Cuba, and Iceland, etc. in this manner, thus making it more difficult for us effectively to oppose Soviet unilateral action in other areas.

At the present time the Soviet offensive against the non-Soviet world may be divided into the following two categories:

1. The extension of Soviet power and territorial control by the use or threat of armed force. This aspect of Soviet policy is confined to the areas which the Soviet military power, composed principally of ground armies, can actually dominate, i.e., Finland, Scandinavia, Eastern, Central and South Eastern Europe, Iran, Iraq, Turkey, Afghanistan, Sinkiang and Manchuria.

2. Concurrently with 1, Soviet political and psychological attack in areas in which the threat of armed force is either non-existent or as yet not fully effective. This attack, carried on through the medium of Communist parties and affiliated organizations, is psychological warfare designed to exploit every weakness in the non-Soviet world in order to render it incapable of resisting, on an international scale, the expansionist policy of the Soviet Union.

For the purpose of this paper considerations need be given only to aspect no. 1 since it is only in this field that the question of the eventual use of military forces of the United States would arise. The problem presented by aspect no. 2 must be met by means other than of military force.

U.S. Policy in Regard to the Soviet Union

The fundamental principles of U.S. foreign policy find their expression in many international agreements and statements and in particular in the Charter of the United Nations. In this sense the U.S. has basically no especial policy in regard to the Soviet Union. Such problems, difficulties, and in the last analysis, dangers as are present in Soviet-American relations arise from past and present actions and policies of the Soviet Government. Due to these policies and actions on the part of the Soviet Government, the U.S. is forced to regard its relations with the Soviet Union in a special category.

Whereas as outlined above the Soviet Government from all evidence is acting on the belief that irreconcilable hostility exists between the Soviet and the non-Soviet world, the U.S. together with other countries of the non-Soviet world believes that there is no objective reason why the so-called capitalist system and Communist system cannot peacefully exist provided neither attempts to extend the area of its system by aggressive and ultimately forcible means at the expense of the other. However, in order to provide any basis for such peaceful coexistence of the two systems, the U.S. at the present time must demonstrate to the Soviet Government in the first instance by diplomatic means and in the last analysis by military force if necessary that the present course of its foreign policy can only lead to disaster for the Soviet Union.

With respect to the extension of Soviet territorial control the U.S. should use the best methods at its disposal to check the actual physical extension of Soviet power beyond its present limits. Diplomatic and other non-military action represent the only means at the disposal of the U.S. to check this extension of Soviet power until such extension involves the seizure of regions in which the power of the Soviet armies can be countered defensively by the Naval, amphibious and air power of the U.S. and its potential allies. The Charter of the United Nations affords the best and most unassailable means through which the U.S. can implement its opposition to Soviet physical expansion. It not only offers the basis upon which the greatest degrees of popular support can be obtained in the U.S. but it also will insure the support and even assistance of other members of the United Nations. If, as may occur, the United Nations breaks down under the test of opposition to Soviet aggression it will have served the purpose of clarifying the issues before American and world public opinion and thus make easier whatever future steps may be required by the U.S. and other like minded nations in the face of a new threat of world aggression. We must be sure, however, to conduct our diplomatic opposition realistically and with full realization of:

- (a) Our military ineffectiveness within the land masses of Eurasia.
- (b) The state of public opinion regarding the use of force or for full out use of our economic resources in support of foreign policy.

If, despite diplomatic action, Soviet territorial expansion should reach areas wherein our naval, amphibious and air power is potentially capable of interposing effectively, it will still be desirable to use such power through the medium of the United Nations Organization if that Organization has survived its use in the previous phase and continues to be an effective organization of the non-Soviet world.

The problem of opposing Soviet expansion first by diplomatic means and eventually if these prove ineffective by military force is not a problem of the U.S. alone. Thus, the question of U.S. relations with Great Britain and other non-Soviet countries assumes special importance and should be viewed in the light of this problem. If Soviet Russia is to be denied the hegemony of Europe, the United Kingdom must continue in existence as the principal power in Western Europe economically and militarily. The U.S. should, therefore, explore its relationship with Great Britain and give all feasible political, economic, and if necessary military support within the framework of the United Nations, to the United Kingdom and the communications of the British Commonwealth. This does not imply a blank check of American support throughout the world for every interest of the British Empire, but only in respect of areas and interests which are in the opinion of the U.S. vital to the maintenance of the United Kingdom and the British Commonwealth of nations as a great power.

U.S. Armed Force as Required for the Implementation of U.S. Policy

In the diplomatic phase involving UNO the success of U.S. diplomatic opposition to present Soviet expansion will depend in large measure upon the Soviet estimate of U.S. military capabilities and the determination of the American Government and people to employ armed force in opposition to Soviet expansion. There is no evidence that the Soviet Union desires a major war at this time. On the contrary, there are many indications that it needs and wishes a period of reconstruction and development. The great danger therefore is that the Soviet leaders may extend their expansionist policies to a point beyond that which Great Britain or the United States in their own vital security interest, could tolerate. It is wise to emphasize therefore the importance of being so prepared militarily and of showing such firmness and resolution that the Soviet Union will not, through miscalculation of American intentions and potentialities, push to the point that results in war. In support of the American foreign policy it is essential that:

(1) Steps be taken in the immediate future to reconstitute our military establishment so that it can resist Soviet expansion by force of arms in areas of our own choosing should such action prove necessary and to protect, during the period of diplomatic action, areas which would be strategically essential in any armed conflict with the Soviet Union; and

(2) To create as soon as possible an informed public opinion concerning the issues involved.

Should the foreign policy of the U.S. be successful in checking physical Soviet expansion and in bringing about a reorientation of Soviet political thinking involving the acceptance of the thesis that the two systems can peacefully coexist, the U.S. could then put into effect the positive and constructive program of relations with the Soviet Union designed to produce maximum cooperation and harmony in international relations.

H. FREEMAN MATTHEWS

SWNCC Files

Memorandum by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee

TOP SECRET
SWNCC 285

[WASHINGTON,] April 11, 1946.

WITHDRAWAL OF U.S. FORCES FROM BASES ON THE TERRITORY OF FOREIGN NATION ⁷³

THE PROBLEM

1. To determine the action that is required by the Joint Chiefs of Staff at this time on the question of withdrawal of U.S. troops from overseas bases on the territory of foreign nations.

FACTS BEARING ON THE PROBLEM

2. See Appendix "B",⁷⁴ page 8.

CONCLUSIONS

3. There are military considerations which make inadvisable the withdrawal of U.S. forces from overseas bases on the territory of foreign nations in every instance in strict accordance with the "time limitation" provisions of the existing agreement with the foreign government concerned.

⁷³ This document, a report prepared on March 24 by the Joint Staff Planners of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on their own initiative, was approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff on April 9.

⁷⁴ Not printed.

4. Since the State Department is the agency of the U.S. Government responsible for negotiations with foreign governments and, correspondingly, for U.S. policies in respect to these governments, the policy to be followed in the withdrawal of U.S. forces from the territory of foreign nations must be decided on a governmental level after due consideration of all aspects, including the military.

5. Accordingly, the Joint Chiefs of Staff should inform the Secretaries of State, War and the Navy of the military considerations concerning this matter, emphasizing the effects on the future security of the United States, and should request advice as to the governmental policy to be followed in the withdrawal of U.S. forces from overseas bases on the territory of foreign nations.

RECOMMENDATION

6. That the Joint Chiefs of Staff forward this study to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee, recommending that the memorandum in Appendix "A", page 3, be forwarded to the Secretary of State.

Appendix "A"

Draft

MEMORANDUM TO BE FORWARDED BY THE STATE-WAR-NAVY COORDINATING COMMITTEE TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE

United States military forces are presently stationed on the territory of foreign nations (other than continental Europe, Korea, China, Japan and the Japanese Mandated Islands) pursuant to agreements made during the war. In most cases, these agreements include provisions for withdrawal of U.S. forces ranging from "immediately on conclusion of hostilities" as for Surinam, Aruba and Curacao (Netherlands) to "one year after date of peace treaty" as for Panama.

While the United States Government has not established or recognized, either domestically or internationally, the date for the "cessation of hostilities", "the end of the war", "the conclusion of the peace", or any of the other terms used in the wartime agreements mentioned above, it has become evident that many of the foreign nations upon whose soil U.S. troops are stationed consider the date of the end of the war to be 2 September 1945. For example, in the case of the Azores, which is an "Essential" base area and is required to support occupation forces, it is understood that the Portuguese Government considers 2 September 1945 as the end of hostilities with Japan and expects the United States to withdraw forces from, and turn over facilities in, the Azores to the Portuguese within nine months, or by 2 June 1946.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff recognize the moral obligations of the United States to abide by these agreements. Action has been, and is being, taken by both the Army and the Navy to withdraw from a large number of bases on foreign soil where there is no further military necessity for the maintenance of U.S. forces. The Joint Chiefs of Staff point out the military aspects of the retention of U.S. forces at various locations on the territory of foreign nations as follows:

a. The United States is obligated to enforce the surrenders of Germany and Japan. Hence, the United States must continue to maintain occupational forces in Germany and Japan for a presently unpredictable period of time. The retention by the United States of certain intermediate air bases and ports, with their supporting and ancillary facilities on the lines of communication to Germany and Japan, is essential to the administration, supply, and support of U.S. occupational forces. The Joint Chiefs of Staff therefore consider that the maintenance of U.S. forces at these intermediary points (as listed in the Annex hereto) is a military necessity until the strength and disposition of occupational forces are such as to permit adjustments.

b. At certain of the locations indicated in the Annex, there is a requirement for long-term U.S. base rights. The Joint Chiefs of Staff refer to their view, expressed in . . . (SWNCC 38/25),⁷⁵ that the comprehensive base system which will result from obtaining the desired rights is an essential requirement for United States security in the event of a failure of the United Nations to preserve world peace; furthermore, the provision of this system of bases will enable the United States to contribute more effectively to that organization in maintaining peace throughout the world. A total withdrawal of U.S. forces from bases now occupied and listed as "Essential" and from certain of those listed as "Required" would tend to weaken the security of the United States. In addition to the security aspects mentioned above, not only would it be difficult to withdraw forces from these "Essential" and "Required" bases and later replace them pursuant to a new agreement, but also such a procedure would be unnecessarily costly.

c. The Joint Chiefs of Staff have recommended to the State Department that negotiations be conducted for long-term U.S. military rights of air transit and technical stop for military aircraft at places set forth in . . . (SWNCC 38/30).⁷⁶ The Joint Chiefs of Staff consider that, from a military standpoint, U.S. personnel should be maintained at these places, including those responsible for weather reporting, aids to navigation, and communication facilities necessary for the operation of these air routes, until such time as the local governments or commercial interests are prepared to assume maintenance and operation of the essential airport and air route facilities.

It is to the advantage of the War and Navy Departments to close out as expeditiously as possible those bases and facilities for which no peacetime garrison is presently planned, or which are not necessary in connection with occupational responsibilities.

⁷⁵ Ante, p. 1112.

⁷⁶ Ante, p. 1142.

The Annex ⁷⁷ hereto contains a list of locations (other than occupational areas and China) at which U.S. troops are currently stationed, and at which there is a requirement either for long-term U.S. base or transit rights, or for purposes incident to occupation. Also indicated thereon are the reasons for continuing to maintain U.S. troops at these bases.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff recommend:

a. That prior to the date for withdrawal mentioned in the present agreements, the Secretary of State complete, where practicable, negotiations for long-term rights at those locations listed in the Annex where there is a requirement for such rights.

b. That where long-term rights cannot be negotiated prior to the expiration of present agreements, the Secretary of State conclude interim arrangements for U.S. forces to remain at those locations which are required to support occupational forces, or where the continued presence of U.S. troops is necessary to further negotiations for long-term military rights.

c. That, where no long-term rights are indicated, but where there is a need to support occupational forces, the Secretary of State conclude short-term arrangements for the maintenance of U.S. troops at these locations.

d. That the Secretary of State furnish to the Secretaries of War and the Navy a list of those locations at which there is a requirement indicated in columns 4 and 5 of the Annex where U.S. forces may be withdrawn at any time without adversely affecting the negotiations for long-term rights.

SWNCC Files

Memorandum by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee ⁷⁸

TOP SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] June 5, 1946.

SWNCC 38/35

Subject: Over-All Examination of U.S. Requirements For Military Rights.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff request that the Secretary of State be informed as follows:

"In view of the course of events during the past six months, the Joint Chiefs of Staff desire to supplement the matter contained in their memorandum of 23 October 1945 (SWNCC 38/22) ⁷⁹ relative to the military rights desired on the territory of foreign nations.

"The utilization of the word 'base' in that memorandum, in connection with the areas in which military rights are desired, was not intended to imply necessarily the permanent garrisoning of troops or stationing of aircraft or naval vessels in foreign territory during peacetime or even during wartime. There is a distinction between 'rights' desired which can be exercised when necessary, and the actual establishment, garrisoning, or maintenance of bases. Whether or not the United States intends to take advantage of rights at any particular site will depend on a number of factors, such as current strategic concept, the international situation, new weapons of war, and the material and manpower resources available to the armed forces of the United States.

⁷⁷ Not printed.

⁷⁸ Approved by the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee by informal action on June 14.

⁷⁹ SWNCC 38/22 is not printed; SWNCC 38/25, a revision thereof, is printed on p. 1112.

"A reconsideration of the situation in the South Pacific leads the Joint Chiefs of Staff to recommend a reduction in the category of certain bases, particularly those located below the equator. There are also certain modifications in requirements which can be made in the Caribbean and in Africa. These have been summarized in the Appendix which the Joint Chiefs of Staff recommend be substituted for the Appendix to SWNCC 38/25.

"Of the 30 locations listed, only six are listed as essential. Of these six, Iceland, Greenland, and the Azores are of outstanding importance. The other three are Casablanca-Port Lyautey (or Canary Islands, if rights at Casablanca-Port Lyautey are unobtainable), the Galapagos, and the Panama airfields.

"The other 24 locations are classified as required if reasonably obtainable, but not absolutely essential to the base system. Three of these (Canton, Christmas, and Funafuti) are in disputed sovereignty between the United States and the British. The remaining 21 are grouped below in order of importance:

- | | |
|---------------------------|--|
| "1st Group | |
| Admiralty Islands (Manus) | Dakar (or Cape Verde Islands, if rights at Dakar are unobtainable) |
| Ascension Island | Goose Bay |
| "2d Group | |
| Monrovia | Batista Field |
| Surinam | St. Julian—La Fe |
| Curacao-Aruba | Talara |
| | Salinas |
| "3d Group | |
| Viti Levu | Espiritu Santo |
| Guadalcanal—Tulagi | Biak—Woendi |
| Tarawa | Morotai |
| Upolu | New Caledonia |

"It is desired to emphasize that failure to obtain the minimum requirements outlined above for any particular area will necessitate a re-evaluation of the importance of adjacent areas. For example:

"a. If joint or participating rights at Casablanca-Port Lyautey are obtained, there would be no need for any rights in the Canary Islands.

"b. If joint or transit rights at Dakar are obtained, there will be no need for rights at the Cape Verde Islands.

"c. If joint or participating rights in the Galapagos Islands are obtained, transit rights at Talara and Salinas would suffice. However, if the Galapagos are not available for U.S. use, joint rights at Talara are required.

"The Joint Chiefs of Staff request, therefore, that they be kept advised of the progress of negotiations for all bases in order that they may promptly revise the rights desired at alternate sites should the need arise.

"Revision of the various detailed statements of rights in the subject areas, which have previously been furnished the Secretary of State, by countries, is now in process and will be forwarded promptly upon completion."

For the Joint Chiefs of Staff:

C. J. MOORE
Captain, U.S. Navy,
Deputy Secretary

Appendix

Base	Sovereignty	Rights Desired		Use
		Max.	Min.
1. Essential Iceland		Joint*	Joint	Naval & Air
Azores	Portugal	Joint	Participating† (With British Commonwealth only)	Naval & Air
Greenland	Denmark	Joint	Joint	Naval & Air
Galapagos	Ecuador	Joint	Participating (Other American nations only)	Naval & Air
Panama Republic (Airfields)		Joint	Participating (Other American nations only)	Air
Casablanca-Port Lyautey	French	Joint	Participating	Naval & Air
(or Canary Islands if Casablanca-Port Lyautey are unobtainable)	Spanish	(Joint)	(Participating)	(Naval & Air)

*Joint right is the right to use for military purposes, in common with the nation exercising sovereignty, mandate or trusteeship, an area, installation or facility; and to debar any other nation from such use unless it is mutually agreed between the United States and the nation exercising sovereignty, mandate or trusteeship, that another nation or nations may share such use. [Footnote in the original.]

†Participating right is the right to share, on the most-favored-nation principle, with the nation exercising sovereignty, mandate or trusteeship, and with any other nation which that nation may accord the right to participate, in the use for military purposes of an area, installation or facility. [Footnote in the original.]

2. Required (If reasonably obtainable by negotiations, but not absolutely essential to the base system).

Base	Sovereignty	Max.	Min.	Use
Admiralty Islands (Manus)	Australian Mandate	Joint	Joint	Naval & Air
Ascension Is. Canton	British U.S.-	Joint	Joint	Air
	British	Sover-	Joint	Naval & Air
	U.S.-	eignty
Christmas	British	Sover-	Joint	Air
	U.S.-	eignty
Funafuti	British	Sover-	Transit†	Naval & Air
	U.S.-	eignty
Guadalcanal-Tulagi	British	Joint	Transit	Naval & Air
Espiritu Santo	British-French	Joint	Transit	Naval & Air
Viti Levu	British	Joint	Transit	Naval & Air
Tarawa	British	Joint	Transit	Naval & Air
Upolu	New Zealand	Joint	Transit	Air
New Caledonia	French	Joint	Transit	Naval & Air
Dakar (or Cape Verde Islands, if Dakar is unobtainable)	French (Portuguese)	Joint (Joint)	Transit (Transit)	Naval & Air (Naval & Air)
Biak-Woendi	Dutch	Joint	Transit	Naval & Air
Morotai	Dutch	Joint	Transit	Air
Surinam	Dutch	Joint	Transit	Air
Curacao-Aruba	Dutch	Joint	Transit	Naval & Air
Salinas	Ecuador	Joint	Transit	Air
Talara	Peru	Joint	Transit	Air
Batista Field	Cuba	Joint	Transit	Air
St. Julian-La Fe	Cuba	Joint	Transit	Naval & Air
Monrovia	Liberia	Joint	Transit	Naval & Air
Goose Bay	Newfoundland	Joint	Joint	Air

The above list is predicated on the following assumptions:

- a. [Here follows comment on the Japanese Mandated Islands and Central Pacific Islands detached from Japan.]
- b. Base rights in the Philippines will be as required by U.S.
- c. Rights in Canada will result from agreements under the Joint Canadian-U.S. Basic Defense Plan.
- d. Rights in Mexico, Central and South America will be obtained as required in implementation of the Act of Chapultepec.

†Transit: Long term rights of military air transit and technical stop as defined in SWNCC 38/30. [Footnote in the original. SWNCC 38/30 is printed on p. 1142.]

SWNCC Files

The Secretary of War (Patterson) and the Secretary of Navy (Forrestal) to the Chairman of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee (Hilldring)

CONFIDENTIAL
SWNCC 314

[WASHINGTON,] July 1, 1946.

FORMULATION OF NATIONAL POLICY WITH RESPECT TO FOREIGN TRADE IN RELATION TO NATIONAL SECURITY

1. On 28 November 1945, the Joint Chiefs of Staff made recommendations to the War and Navy Departments that the subject of the export of critical matériel be studied with a view towards the establishment of a system of control that would prevent the diminishing of our own war potential or the increase of the war potential of possible enemies.

2. A thorough study of the subject reveals the necessity for the formulation of a national policy that: will insure that critical matériel is conserved for our own use; prevent possible enemies from augmenting their war potential by virtue of our exports; and prevent the exportation of technological information and inventions to possible enemies.

3. In order to implement such a program it is requested that the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee initiate early action to: (1) formulate and recommend to us means and methods of insuring proper consideration of military (national security) interest in the formulation of national policy with respect to foreign trade; (2) recommend means and methods of implementation of the national policy, including need for legislation; (3) recommend representation with the appropriate civilian agencies by the Army and Navy Munitions Board, which is being charged with the duty of presenting the military interest.

4. It is also requested that your committee study the question of the export control of technological information and invention insofar as military interests require that such information or inventions not fall into the hands of possible enemies.

5. Upon the completion of the studies detailed above, please prepare for our signatures a joint letter to the Secretary of State requesting his cooperative action in securing appropriate legislation covering the legal handling of the entire question of export control of matériel, technological information and inventions insofar as the national security interests are concerned.

6. Please forward your report to us via the Army and Navy Munitions Board, furnishing both the War and Navy Departments with advance copies thereof.

JAMES FORRESTAL
The Secretary of the Navy

ROBERT P. PATTERSON
The Secretary of War

SWNCC Files

Memorandum by the Acting State Member, State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee (Hickerson).

TOP SECRET
SWNCC 285/1

[WASHINGTON,] July 24, 1946.

Reference is made to SWNCC 285, Appendix "A", Paragraph D of Page 7,⁸⁴ wherein the Secretary of State is requested by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to furnish to the Secretaries of War and Navy a list of those locations at which there is a requirement indicated in the Annex where U.S. forces may be withdrawn without adversely affecting the negotiations for long-term rights.

In accordance with this request, there is set forth in the enclosure (Appendix)⁸⁵ a report indicating the views of the Department of State with respect to the effect upon future negotiations of the withdrawal of U.S. forces from bases where we have long-term requirements.

The following phrases are used to indicate the recommended line of action:

"Proviso" meaning at time withdrawal is effected an agreement should be made that such action is without prejudice to possible future negotiations.

"None" meaning withdrawal will have no effect on possible future negotiations.

"Stay"

"Stay for time-being" meaning existent situation is not sufficiently clear to enable us to pass on the SWNCC request and thus troops should remain until the picture becomes clearer.

"Covered by post-war agreement" meaning our line of action has already been determined.

⁸⁴ Ante, p. 1171.

⁸⁵ The Appendix printed here is as slightly revised, July 31.

Appendix
Country and Location	Facility	Requirement	Recommended Action
BRITISH COMMONWEALTH
Ascension Island	Airfield	Essential	Proviso
Australian Mandate
Admiralty Islands	Airfield	Essential	Proviso
	Naval Base
Bahamas
Oakes Field, Nassau	Airfield, AACS	Required	Proviso
South Caicos	Weather, AACS	None	None
Burma
Mingaladan Airport, Rangoon	Airfield	Transit & Tech. Stop	None
Canada
Whitehorse—Fort Nelson—Edmonton Route (includes Fort St. John, Watson Lake and Port Hardy)	Airfields (Weather) (AACS)	Required	None
Fort Chimo—Frobisher Bay Route to Greenland	Weather Airfields	Required	None
Mingan	Weather, AACS	None	None
River Clyde	AACS	None	None
Padloping Island	AACS	None	None
Lake Harbor	AACS	None	None
Ellice Islands
Funa Futi (Disputed Sovereignty)	Airfield	Required	Proviso
Fiji Islands
Nandi (Viti Levu)	Airfield	Required	Proviso
	Weather, AACS
Gilbert Islands
Tarawa	Airfield	Required	Proviso
	Weather
India
Karachi Airport	Airfield	Transit & Tech. Stop	None
Agra Airport	Airfield	Transit & Tech. Stop	None
Kharagpur-Dudkhundi	Airfield	Transit & Tech. Stop	None
Calcutta	Airfield	Transit & Tech. Stop	None
Dum Dum Airport	Weather	Transit & Tech. Stop	None
Barrackpore Airport	Weather AACS	Transit & Tech. Stop	None
Line Islands
Christmas Island (Disputed Sovereignty)	Airfield	Required	Stay
Newfoundland (other than 99-year bases)
Goose Bay, Labrador	Airfield	Required	Stay
Cape Harrison, Labrador	Weather, AACS	None	None
Hebron, Labrador	Weather, AACS	None	None
St. Johns	Airfield	None	None
Wesleyville	Weather	None	None
New Hebrides
Espiritu Santo (French-British)	Airfield	Required	Proviso
	Weather
	Naval Base
	AACS
New Zealand
Aitutaki Island	Airfield	Transit & Tech. Stop	None
Upolu (Mandate)	Airfield	Required	Proviso

Country and Location	Facility	Requirement	Recommended Action
BRITISH COMMONWEALTH—CON.
Phoenix Islands
Canton Island (Disputed Sovereignty)	Airfield	Essential	Stay
United Kingdom
London	Headquarters	None	None
Bovington	Airfield	None	None
Prestwick (Scotland)	Airfield (Navigational Aide Alternate)	None	None
Exeter	Naval Facilities	None	None
Solomon Islands
Guadalcanal—Tulagi	Airfield Weather	Required	Proviso
CUBA
Batista Field	Airfield	Required	None
San Julian	Airfield	Required	None
La Fe	Seaplane Base	Required	None
DENMARK
Greenland
BW-1 (Narsarsssuak)	Airfield Naval Base	Essential	Stay
BW-3 (Simiutak)	AACS, Weather	Essential	Stay
BE-2 (Ikateq)	Airfield, AACS	Essential	Stay
Marrak	Airfield	Essential	Stay
BW-8 (Sondrestamfjord)	Airfield, AACS, Weather	Essential	Stay
Grondal	Naval Base	Essential	Stay
ECUADOR
Galapagos	Airfield	Essential	Stay for time-being
EGYPT
Payne Field Cairo	Airfield	Transit & Tech. Stop	None
FRANCE
Algeria
Maison Blanche Airport, Algiers	Airfield	Transit & Tech. Stop	None
Biskra	AACS	Transit & Tech. Stop	None
French Guiana
Rochambeau Field, Cayenne	Airfield Weather AACS	Transit & Tech. Stop	None
French Indo-China
Tan Son Nhut (Airport) (Saigon)	Airfield	Transit & Tech. Stop	None.
French Morocco
Cazes Field—Casablanca	Airfield	Required	Stay
Port Lyautey	Naval Air Base	Required	Stay
New Caledonia
Tontouta (Noumea)	Airfield Weather, AACS	Required	Stay
Bora Bora	Weather Facilities	Required	Stay
Senegal
Dakar	Naval Base Airfield	Required Required	Stay Stay
GUATEMALA
San Jose Airport	Airfield	Transit & Tech. Stop	None
ICELAND
Meeks Field, Keflavik	Airfield	Essential	Stay
Reykjavik (Fossvogur)	Naval Facilities, Airfield	Essential	Stay
Hvalfjord	Naval Base	Essential	Stay

Country and Location	Facility	Requirement	Recommended Action
ITALY
Libya Wheelus Field, Tripoli	Airfield	Transit & Tech. Stop	Stay for time-being
Eritrea Asmara	Army Detach- ment	Provision for Retention for in- definite period	Stay for time-being
LIBERIA
Roberts Field (Monrovia)	Airfield	Required	None
NETHERLANDS
Biak	Airfield Weather, AACCS	Required	None
Curacao Hato Field	Airfield	Required	None
Morotai	Airfield	Required	None
Surinam Zandery Field	Airfield Weather, AACCS	Required	None
NICARAGUA
Las Mercedes Airport, Managua	Airfield	Transit & Tech. Stop	None
PANAMA
Several Airfields in Republic of Panama	Airfields	Essential	None
PERU
Talara	Airfield	Required	Stay for time-being
PORTUGAL
Azores Lagens Field, Terceira	Airfield	Essential	Covered by post-war agreement
Santa Maria	Airfield	Essential	Covered by post-war agreement
SAUDI ARABIA
Dhahran Airport	Airfield	Transit & Tech. Stop	Stay
SIAM
Don Muang Airport, Bangkok	Airfield	Transit & Tech. Stop	None

Editorial Note

Memoirs: Sixty Years on the Firing Line (New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1968), by Arthur Krock, Washington correspondent of the New York Times, 1932-1953, contains as Appendix A a report titled "American Relations with the Soviet Union," 62 pages, prepared by Clark M. Clifford, Special Counsel to President Truman. Chapter headings are as follows: Soviet Foreign Policy; Soviet-American Agreements, 1942-1946; Violations of Soviet Agreements with the United States; Conflicting Views on Reparations; Soviet Activities Affecting American Security; and United States Policy Toward the Soviet Union.

Clifford's letter of transmittal to President Truman states that in the course of drafting the memorandum, he consulted the Secretaries of State, War and Navy, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and others, assembling and summarizing their statements, studies, and opinions. Krock indicates that the report was laid on the desk of the President on September 24, 1946 (Memoirs, p. 223). No copy of the report has been found in the files of the Department of State.

Secretariat Files

*Memorandum by the Acting Executive Secretary of the Executive Committee on Economic Foreign Policy (Dennison) to the Members of the Committee*⁸⁶

[WASHINGTON,] November 6, 1946.

On October 26, 1945 the Executive Committee approved a statement of its views with respect to the proposed stockpile program, which was to be submitted to the appropriate authorities after legislation, then pending, had been enacted. The legislation, entitled Strategic and Critical Materials Stockpiling Act, was approved by the President, July 23, 1946, and an initial appropriation of $100,000,000 has been provided for the current fiscal year. In indicating his approval the President issued a statement regarding the "Buy American" provision of the law which presumably may be taken as a guide in its administration. Copies of the Act and of the President's statement are attached to the document (sent to ECEFP members only).⁸⁷

Since the legislation approved in July contains certain provisions which were not anticipated by the Executive Committee in October 1945, it seems advisable to make some changes in the Committee's original statement. The original statement, D-140/45,⁸⁸ has not yet been ⁸⁶ For information regarding the organization and functions of the Executive Committee on Economic Foreign Policy, see footnote 36, p. 1283.

⁸⁷ Not reproduced.

⁸⁸ ECEFP D-140/45, November 14, 1945, which was sent to the chiefs of all United States missions, reported that on October 26, 1945, the Committee had taken the following action with regard to the establishment of stockpiles of strategic materials:

"If and when pending stockpile legislation (S.1481) is enacted, the following views of the Executive Committee should be submitted to the appropriate authorities for consideration in the administration of a stockpile program in so far as those views are found to be consistent with the provisions of the law and provided that administration in accordance therewith shall be entirely subservient to the requirements of national security:

"1. The stockpiles established for national defense purposes should not be used as buffer stocks for purposes of regulating prices.

"2. Purchases and sales made under such a program should in so far as may be practicable and consistent with the purposes of the program be timed to avoid undue stimulation or depression of markets, either foreign or domestic.

"3. The program should, in so far as may be practicable, be geared into a possible program for the conservation of resources and for the lowering of tariffs on imported materials. (By giving the domestic industry a reasonable period in which to adjust itself to less mining and more dependence on imports, it should

Footnote continued on following page.

submitted to the Secretaries of War, Navy, and Interior, and it is now proposed that a revised statement, D-85/46, be substituted for it.⁸⁹

ELEANOR E. DENNISON

[Attachment]

Establishment of Stockpiles of Strategic Materials

CONFIDENTIAL
ECEFP D-85/46

[WASHINGTON,] November 6, 1946.

The Executive Committee on Economic Foreign Policy submits to the Secretaries of War, Navy, and Interior the following statement pointing out considerations of economic foreign policy in the administration of the stockpiling program:

1. The stockpiles established for national defense purposes under the Strategic and Critical Materials Stockpiling Act should not be used as buffer stocks for purposes of regulating prices. It is noted in this regard that the law, although making necessary provision for the disposal of stocks subject to deterioration or obsolescence, prohibits the sale of materials from stockpile except under national emergency.

2. So far as practicable and consistent with the main purposes of the stockpiling program, it should be the policy in making purchases for the stockpile, particularly in the immediate future, to refrain from purchases of a kind, whether domestic or foreign, which might interfere with or otherwise impede the reconversion of industry to peacetime conditions and the furtherance of the United States program for the expansion of international trade.

3. As a matter of long-range policy, purchases of materials for a stockpile should, as far as practicable, be made at time of ample supply rather than at times of short supply, so as to avoid undue stimulation or depression of markets at home or abroad.

4. Particular note should be made of the statement made by the President upon his signing of the legislation, with particular reference to the "Buy American" provision of the law, that "the stockpiling program should not be used as a means of generally subsidizing those domestic producers who otherwise could not compete sucbe possible to shift workers to other employment, and to readjust financial structures without undue burden.)

"4. In making purchases, account should be taken of Allied countries whose mining industries have been greatly expanded to meet war needs and which require assistance to adjust their economies to peacetime conditions without severe economic shock.

"5. Expenditures should be made with due regard to prudent use of funds, so as to provide such economic protection as may be needed without undue cost or undue encouragement of high-cost producers." (Secretariat Files)

⁸⁹ The Committee took no further action on this matter in 1946.

cessfully with other domestic or foreign producers" and to the effect that the Act "should not be used as a device to give domestic interests an advantage over foreign producers of strategic materials greater than that provided by the tariff laws."

Secretariat Files

Minutes of the 206th Meeting of the Secretary of State's Staff Committee, Department of State, Washington, December 20, 1946, 9:20 a. m.

SECRET

Present:

The Under Secretary (presiding)
 The Counselor
 Messrs. Eddy ⁹⁰
 Fahy ⁹¹
 General Hilldring ⁹²
 Messrs. Russell
 Thorp ⁹³
 Henderson
 Hiss
 Hulten ⁹⁴ (for Mr. Benton)
 Matthews
 Vincent
 Green ⁹⁵ (DA)
 Gange
 Jamison
 Reber ⁹⁶

Absent:

The Secretary
 The Under Secretary
 for Economic Affairs ⁹⁷
 Mr. Braden

The Committee met at 9:20 a. m., the Under Secretary presiding.

POLICY RELATIVE TO THE TRANSFER TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES OF MILITARY SUPPLIES OF U.S. ORIGIN (Document SC-208) ⁹⁸

1. Action: THE COMMITTEE APPROVED the recommendations of the document subject to amendment of the second sentence of paragraph 1

⁹⁰ William A. Eddy, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State for Research and Intelligence.

⁹¹ Charles Fahy, Legal Adviser.

⁹² John H. Hilldring, Assistant Secretary of State for Occupied Areas.

⁹³ Willard L. Thorp, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs.

⁹⁴ Charles M. Hulten, Deputy to the Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs.

⁹⁵ James F. Green, Associate Chief of the Division of Dependent Area Affairs.

⁹⁶ James Q. Reber, Chief of the Committee Coordinating Section of the Central Secretariat.

⁹⁷ William L. Clayton.

⁹⁸ Infra.

to read "pending effective United Nations action to bring about a satisfactory system for the regulation of armaments in accordance with the United Nations General Assembly Resolution of December 14, 1946,⁹⁹ on that subject and until . . ."

2. IT IS FURTHER AGREED that paragraph 9, page 8 of the document should be similarly revised and that paragraph 13, page 9 should be revised to make it clear that the arms program for China, temporarily suspended, is to be handled on an ad hoc basis pending a decision to seek enabling legislation.

3. Discussion: GENERAL HILLDRING, in presenting the document, stated that it had originated in and been approved by the Policy Committee on Arms and Armaments.¹ He said that the recommendations owed much to the five months experience of that Committee in dealing with the problems for which they were intended to offer guidance. The Arms Committee at its inception, he said, had been confronted with the lack of any overall policy guidance on transfers of military supplies, although there were several isolated bits of policy here and there both written and unwritten. Two documents, SWNCC 202/2² and SC/R-184,³ as amended, covered transfers of supplies from surplus, but there were no definite policies dealing with transfers from other governmental and non-governmental sources. The document before the Committee, he said, represented an attempt to merge all pertinent policy papers and at least one informal understanding and to make those modifications deemed desirable as a result of the Arms Committee's experience.

4. GENERAL HILLDRING outlined the chief points of the document, stating that, while several specific categories of military transfers were given standing approval, it had been felt necessary to leave the door open for certain other types of transfers which could not be spelled out in advance. He mentioned specifically the assignment of small amounts of arms to a country for police purposes and pointed to the procedures recommended for handling such transfers. He said that SWNCC 202/2 had set forth the policy on transfers from surplus on a country-to-country basis but it was generally agreed that there were so many variables that such a listing soon became unwieldy. It was recommended, therefore, that any exceptions from the specific categories approved in this document should be considered by the Arms Commit-⁹⁹ Ante, p. 1099.

¹ Regarding the organization and functions of the Policy Committee on Arms and Armaments, see footnote 72, p. 840.

² Ante, p. 1145.

³ Ante, p. 1141.

tee and recommendations submitted to the Secretary of State. GENERAL HILLDRING emphasized that, while it was generally agreed that the long-term United States policy should be to cut transfers of military supplies to foreign countries to a minimum, it was also recognized that it would be necessary in the foreseeable future to make exceptions to this in the interests of general international security and that of the United States. He reviewed the extensive preparatory work on the document, and indicated that it had been brought before the Staff Committee with a view to getting approval so that it might be taken as the expression of the State Department's policy on this subject for presentation to the War and Navy Departments before January 2, 1947.

5. THE UNDER SECRETARY asked how the possible furnishing of military supplies and equipment to China was covered in the document, and GENERAL HILLDRING and MR. VINCENT replied that any such transfers were to be handled on an ad hoc basis as outlined in paragraph 4 of the Recommendations. There was some discussion of the advisability of including specific reference to a program for China, but GENERAL HILLDRING indicated that such reference had been deleted at the specific request of the representative of FE on the Arms Committee. THE UNDER SECRETARY suggested inclusion of language which would indicate that a program for aiding China would be carried out under certain conditions, but MR. VINCENT thought this was not desirable, since the projected program for that country had so many different aspects. At the suggestion of Mr. Thorp and the Under Secretary, IT WAS AGREED that the reference to the Chinese program in paragraph 13 of the Discussion section of the document should be clarified to remove any possible ambiguity. GENERAL HILLDRING stated that it was his view that, since the program for China was temporarily suspended at the request of high authority, a decision to renew that program would have to be reviewed by the Arms Committee and handled as an exception rather than as one of the categories specifically listed in paragraph 2 of the Recommendations.

6. MR. VINCENT indicated that a program for China would be carried out if, after General Marshall gives approval, the necessary legislation is put through the Congress. THE COUNSELOR asked whether the China program did not have a limited phase to be carried out through disposal of surplus property and THE UNDER SECRETARY pointed out that such aid had not been military.

7. MR. MATTHEWS asked whether the new standardization program for Latin America was included, and GENERAL HILLDRING stated that the Latin American program referred to in the category listing was only the interim program being accomplished through disposal of surplus.

8. MR. MATTHEWS asked whether the War and Navy Departments had been consulted on the general principle of drastic limitation of arms transfers as set forth in the first recommendation. GENERAL HILLDRING replied that representatives of both Departments were aware of the fact that this would be the State Department's position. He pointed out further that the language of paragraph 9 of the Discussion section of the document had been very carefully phrased so as to meet the possible objections of War and Navy. MR. HENDERSON said that it was his view that the section referred to covered this point adequately and he joined with Mr. Matthews in commending the officers responsible for preparing the entire document.

GENERAL HILLDRING referred to a recent meeting of the National Munitions Control Board which, although a lengthy meeting with no definite action resulting, had involved considerable discussion of the location of responsibility for determining policy on the export of arms and armaments. GENERAL HILLDRING said that he had gone to the meeting with a brief prepared in Le in which the position had been taken that the Secretary of State should have full authority to make decisions on the export of arms without consulting the Secretaries of War and Navy, although such consultation is acceptable on questions on the import of arms. He said that he had been unable to secure War and Navy Department assent to this position as they had insisted on being consulted with respect to both export and import of arms. THE UNDER SECRETARY indicated his view that the position of those Departments was understandable and sound. It was the consensus that on both questions of import and export the War and Navy Departments should be consulted by the State Department.

9. THE COUNSELOR inquired with reference to the China program whether it was planned to press for the enabling legislation when Congress convened in January. THE UNDER SECRETARY stated that General Marshall had requested that action on the proposed legislation be suspended until he could report a more favorable situation in China.

10. MR. FAHY said that the document appeared to have been prepared without reference to the United Nations General Assembly resolution on the regulation and limitation of armaments, and he suggested that this action should be mentioned specifically. IT WAS AGREED that paragraph 1 of the Recommendations and paragraph 9 of the Discussion should be so revised.

[Here follows discussion of another subject.]

Secretariat Files

*Memorandum Prepared for the Secretary of State's Staff Committee*⁴TOP SECRET
SC-208

[WASHINGTON,] December 20, 1946.

POLICY RELATIVE TO THE TRANSFER TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES OF MILITARY SUPPLIES OF U.S. ORIGIN

The attached document containing recommendations originating in the Policy Committee on Arms and Armaments is presented for the consideration of the Committee. The policy set forth herein, if approved, will supersede the previous Staff Committee decision expressed in SC/R-184, February 5, 1946,⁵ as amended by SC/R-187, February 21, 1946,⁶ and provide the State Department representative on SWNCC with a policy paper for guidance in recommending a revision of SWNCC 202/2, March 21, 1946.⁷

[Annex]

PROBLEM

To set forth a policy governing all transfers to foreign countries, whether by sale or otherwise, of military supplies of U.S. origin whether such supplies are of U.S. Government or private ownership.

Both SWNCC 202/2 and SC/R-184, as amended deal only with United States Government-owned military supplies. They do not purport to state policy governing the exportation through private channels of arms, ammunition or implements of war. These policies are limited in scope and, to some extent, inconsistent and out of date. It is, therefore, desirable to restate the policy to govern all transfers.

RECOMMENDATIONS

It is recommended that:

1. It be the long-term policy of the United States to limit drastically the transfer to foreign countries of military supplies of U.S. origin.

⁴ This document, as revised in accordance with decisions taken at the 206th Meeting of the Secretary of State's Staff Committee (see supra), served as the basis for SWNCC 202/4 submitted by the Department of State to the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee on January 8, 1947. Although different in format, that document closely resembles the present paper in both phraseology and substance; large sections are identical. (SWNCC Files)

The decision to revise United States policy with respect to providing military assistance to foreign governments was taken in connection with U.S. concern regarding the independence and territorial integrity of Greece, Turkey, and Iran; see vol. VII, pp. 222-281, passim; pp. 856-923, passim; and pp. 507-547, passim; respectively.

⁵ Ante, p. 1141.

⁶ See footnote 59, p. 1141.

⁷ Ante, p. 1145.

Pending effective United Nations action to bring about a satisfactory system for the regulation of armaments and until the United States is satisfied that its national security as well as the security of other peace-loving states is assured, the implementation of this long-term policy must be qualified by factors of more immediate concern.

2. Except as provided in paragraph "4" below, it be the policy of the United States to authorize no transfers to foreign countries, by sale or otherwise, of military supplies of U.S. origin unless such transfers fall within one of the following categories:

a. Retransfers by the United Kingdom to British Commonwealth forces in Japan of military supplies, whether acquired by the United Kingdom under lend-lease or under the surplus property agreement, subject, in the case of equipment of the lend-lease inventory, to the qualifications specified with respect to such retransfers by the Policy Committee on Arms and Armaments;

b. Sales to France by the Foreign Liquidation Commissioner of reasonable quantities of military supplies, except in cases which appear to relate to Indochina;

c. Transfers to the Philippine Republic pursuant to Public Law 380, 78th Congress, approved June 29, 1944, and Public Law 454, 79th Congress, approved June 26, 1946 ("Republic of the Philippines Military Assistance Act");

d. The interim program for the sale of specified amounts of military, naval and air equipment to other American republics as proposed by the War and Navy Departments and approved by the State Department. The program is being executed under the provisions of the Surplus Property Act;

e. Transfers to Canada for joint defense, pursuant to the request of the Canadian Government. These transfers are being made under the provisions of the Surplus Property Act; and

f. Transfers of small quantities of military supplies of U.S. origin, when such transfers are not considered to have any special political or military significance.

3. Transfers falling within any one of the categories set forth in paragraph "2" above, excepting those in category "f", may be made without reference to the Policy Committee on Arms and Armaments, but that Committee shall be kept currently informed of any such transfers as from time to time are made. Transfers falling within category "f" of paragraph "2" above shall be made only upon approval of the Policy Committee on Arms and Armaments or in accordance with such rules as that Committee shall from time to time promulgate for the purpose.

4. In addition to the transfers mentioned in paragraph "2" above it may from time to time be in the interest of the United States to authorize transfers to foreign countries by sale or otherwise of military supplies of U.S. origin under one or more of the following conditions:

If the transfer is determined to be reasonable and necessary;

a. To enable a country to maintain internal order in the reasonable and legitimate exercise of constituted authority, or

b. To enable a country to provide for and to exercise its right of self-defense against armed attack, a right recognized in Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations, or

c. To assist a country to discharge its international responsibilities for

(1) Furnishing contingents to the Security Council pursuant to Article 43 of the Charter of the United Nations, and

(2) Carrying out military occupation in enemy or ex-enemy territory.

The determination as to whether or not a transfer will meet one of the foregoing conditions and is otherwise in the interests of the United States, shall rest with the Secretary of State to whom the Policy Committee on Arms and Armaments will make appropriate recommendations.

5. Military supplies of U.S. lend-lease origin now in the hands of foreign governments may remain in the hands of such governments except to the extent that the United States may wish from time to time to recapture them. The United States shall continue to reserve the right to recapture all military supplies of U.S. lend-lease origin except such as may from time to time be sold to third governments by or with the consent of the United States. Transfers by sale or otherwise by a presently-holding government to a third government shall be subject to the provisions of paragraph 2, 3 and 4 above.

6. A statement be prepared for adoption by SWNCC for the purpose of formalizing U.S. policy among the three departments concerned and for the purpose of establishing an appropriate mechanism for action on applications for transfers, as these Recommendations (paragraphs 1 to 5 above) have not been formally cleared with the War and Navy Departments.

7. The term "military supplies of U.S. origin" as used herein shall mean all articles which may be defined from time to time by or pursuant to Presidential Proclamation as arms, ammunition and implements of war, except as otherwise provided by the Policy Committee on Arms and Armaments, acting in accordance with established procedures.

FACTS BEARING ON THE PROBLEM

1. The President and the Secretary of State have publicly endorsed the principles of limiting world armaments by international agreement, and this country is committed to the regulation of armaments under Article 26 of the United Nations Charter. No definitive international action has as yet been taken to this end.

2. Certain national policies have been formulated (see paragraphs 3 and 4 below) with respect to the transfer of certain types of U.S. Government-owned arms. These policies are limited in scope and, to some extent, inconsistent and out of date. There is no clear statement of policy controlling the transfer to foreign countries of U.S. Government as well as privately owned military supplies of U.S. origin.

3. The following policy regarding disposal to foreign countries of military-type surplus equipment was agreed upon by the Secretary's Staff Committee at its meetings of February 5 and 21, 1946:

"No disposals of military-type surplus equipment should be made to arm other nations, except for (a) the transfer en bloc of military equipment left in England; (b) the program for equipping the French Army to a reasonable extent; (c) completion of the program for China begun during the war; (d) equipping Philippine forces; (e) fulfilling commitments made in the interim program for the other American republics; and (f) transfers to Canada when consistent with the program for joint defense." (SC/R-184, as amended by SC/R-184 [187])

4. The State, War and Navy Coordinating Committee on March 21, 1946, approved SWNCC 202/2. The following comments as to the purpose and scope of SWNCC 202/2 are pertinent to the present paper:

a. Its purpose was to set forth a policy "with respect to the extent to which the United States will support foreign countries with United States military supplies for their post-war armed forces" and with respect to "whether certain lend-lease items still in existence should be withdrawn from particular foreign nations as a matter of United States or international security . . ."

b. It dealt only with military supplies obtainable through U.S. surplus channels or through the recapture of lend-lease articles in the hands of foreign military authorities.

c. It stated a general conclusion that "as a general guide the State, War and Navy Departments agree that it is consistent with United States policy to support forces of foreign countries with United States military supplies to the extent stated in the 'specific conclusions' of this paper . . ."

d. The "specific conclusions" were intended to set the permissive limits within which it would be consistent with the then existing national policy to support the forces of individual foreign governments. In setting forth the specific conclusions, it was recognized that they would require modification from time to time. The policies set forth under the specific conclusions are not entirely consistent with the policy set forth in SC/R-184, as amended (paragraph 3 above).

e. One of the paper's general conclusions was to the effect that any support with U.S. military supplies should be implemented, so far as possible, within the framework of existing legislation, appropriations, et cetera.

f. With respect to lend-lease military supplies in the hands of foreign governments, it was concluded that it was not desirable to exercise generally the right of recapture, although the United States should reserve such right and should obtain agreements providing for the return of lend-lease items on demand.

5. Both SWNCC 202/2 and SC/R-184, as amended, deal only with United States Government-owned military supplies. They do not purport to state any policy governing the exportation through private channels of arms, ammunition or implements of war. Pending determination of a policy to govern private exports, the Department has used the provisions of SWNCC 202/2 and SC/R-184, as amended, as general guidance where private exports were involved.

DISCUSSION

6. It is desirable to restate the policy to govern all transfers to foreign countries, whether by sale or otherwise, of military supplies of U.S. origin, whether such supplies are of U.S. Government or private ownership.

7. In formulating any policy to govern the transfer of military supplies of U.S. origin to foreign countries, consideration should be given to the long-range objectives of the United States with respect to the regulation of armaments. These objectives arise out of the obligations shared by all members of the United Nations to work for the regulation of armaments in such a manner that :

a. The use of armed force be restricted to that authorized by the Security Council of the United Nations, except in cases of self-defense against armed attack, and for the maintenance of internal order by governments in the legitimate and reasonable exercise of constituted authority;

b. There may be minimum diversion for armaments of human and economic resources which are needed for constructive purposes in creating a peaceful and orderly world;

c. Every encouragement be given in accordance with the principles of the United Nations Charter to the application of peaceful procedures for the settlement of international disputes.

8. It must therefore be the long-term policy of the United States to limit drastically the transfer to foreign countries of military supplies of U.S. origin, since any general increase in or dispersion of armaments would jeopardize the achievement of the foregoing objectives. Over the long run, such transfers should usually be limited to those necessary to the maintenance of internal peace and order by a foreign government in the legitimate and reasonable exercise of constituted authority, or to provide for self-defense in the event of an armed attack, or to enable a country to discharge its international responsibilities.

9. Pending effective United Nations action to bring about a satisfactory system for the regulation of armaments and until the United States is satisfied that its national security as well as the security of other peace-loving states is assured, the implementation of the above-mentioned long-term policy must be qualified by factors of more immediate concern. Accordingly, in addition to transfers mentioned in paragraph 8 above, the United States may appropriately authorize the transfer of military supplies of U.S. origin to a foreign country when it is determined that such transfer is reasonable and necessary to preserve the independence and territorial integrity of a nation whose independence and territorial integrity are important to the security of the United States.

10. Unsettled world conditions and unstable conditions within certain countries, which countries may justifiably wish and need certain types of military supplies, make it impracticable to determine at this time, with any degree of specification, what types of supplies should be permitted to be transferred to what countries. Such determination must depend on the facts in each case, such as need and proposed use.

11. As it is believed that the implementation of a policy of control over transfers of military supplies can more readily and effectively be accomplished on an ad hoc basis, it is considered desirable that the policy determinations of SWNCC 202/2 be modified to conform to the Recommendations set forth herein.

12. It is considered that existing policies with respect to retention by foreign governments of lend-lease military supplies should be expressly reaffirmed (see paragraph 4*f* above).

13. Except for that relating to China, the programs mentioned in SC/R-184, as amended (see paragraph 3 above) are considered to be consistent with the policies suggested in paragraphs 8 and 9 above. However, it is desirable to re-define the scope of two of these programs, having in mind that SC/R-184, as amended, related to surplus equipment and that the passage of time has brought about changes in the nature of certain of the programs. For example, a. SC/R-184 authorized the "transfer en bloc of military equipment left in England". That transfer has been made. However, under the terms of agreement with the British relating to U.S. Army and Navy surplus property, retransfers of that equipment to third governments cannot be made without the consent of the United States. SC/R-184 does not authorize such retransfers, nor does it authorize retransfers of lend-lease military equipment held by the British.

Requests are from time to time received from the British for authority to make retransfers to third governments of equipment in their lend-lease military inventory as well as equipment transferred pursuant to the surplus property agreement. The matter of retransfers of equipment from their lend-lease inventory to British Commonwealth Forces in Japan was discussed at the 18th and 19th meetings of the Policy Committee on Arms and Armaments. The Committee "approved in principle" retransfers of this type, such retransfers being subject to the following qualifications:

1. "The articles shall remain subject to recapture by the United States Government. But this recapture may be waived with respect to any item transferred from the British lend-lease military inventory to the British Commonwealth occupation forces in Japan, provided payment for such items is made to the United States and provided also that such waiver is cleared with the War and Navy Departments.

2. "The British Army Staff will give subsequent notification to the Department of State of the types and quantities of articles retransferred.

3. "The matter will be subject to review at the time when the British Commonwealth forces withdraw from occupation duty in Japan."

As the British are permitted to retransfer lend-lease military equipment to British Commonwealth forces in Japan, it would appear that they should also be authorized to transfer to those forces military equipment previously sold to the British pursuant to the agreement relating to U.S. Army and Navy surplus property.

b. SC/R-184 approved "the program for equipping the French Army to a reasonable extent". The United States furnished military supplies to French forces from time to time during the war. The last approved extensive program was that authorized by President Roosevelt in March 1945 which involved the equipment of eight additional French divisions. This program was only partially completed by V-E Day, and it can no longer be considered a "program" in the sense originally authorized. Subsequent to V-E Day, an understanding was reached with the French with respect to the sale of military equipment, whereby the French would purchase from the Foreign Liquidation Commissioner such military equipment in the European theater as should be mutually agreed upon and as should be declared surplus for that purpose. No definite program of deliveries has been developed, but it is considered that the transfer of military supplies by the Foreign Liquidation Commissioner would fall within the authorization of SC/R-184. However, no such transfers should be made which appear to relate to Indochina, as it is not consistent with U.S. policy to support with military supplies French military activities in relation to that area.

It is considered that SC/R-184 should be modified to reflect the foregoing points and also to conform to the Recommendations set forth herein.

14. As the views expressed in paragraphs 6 to 13 above have not been formally cleared with the War and Navy Departments, and as some machinery should be agreed upon to facilitate ad hoc decisions on proposed transfers, it is considered desirable that a statement be prepared for adoption by SWNCC for the purpose of formalizing

U.S. policy among the three departments concerned and for the purpose of establishing an appropriate mechanism for action on applications for transfers.

15. The term "military supplies of U.S. origin" as used herein is intended to mean all articles which may be defined from time to time by or pursuant to Presidential Proclamation as arms, ammunition and implements of war, except as otherwise provided by the Policy Committee on Arms and Armaments, acting in accordance with established procedures.

FOREIGN POLICY ASPECTS OF UNITED STATES DEVELOPMENT OF ATOMIC ENERGY ¹

Department of State Atomic Energy Files ²

Memorandum by the Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer District (Groves) ³

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] 2 January 1946.

Our Army of the Future—As Influenced by Atomic Weapons.

In planning for our Army of the future, two distinct situations with respect to atomic weapons should be given consideration.

First Assumption: That satisfactory world agreements with respect to atomic energy have been made which ensure that atomic bombs will not be used under any circumstances.

Such agreements must provide for complete information at all times as to the activities of all nations in the atomic field. To get that information, it will be essential that our representatives have the right to travel freely anywhere, at any time, to observe and raise questions about any activity which they may suspect is related to the use of atomic energy.

This means the abandonment of all rights of privacy—that of the home, the laboratory and the industrial plant throughout the world including the United States.

Should such agreements be accompanied by the destruction of our present supply of atomic weapons and by measures which would prevent manufacture of additional ones, then our Army of the future would not be influenced greatly by the non-existent atomic weapons until the agreement was broken or threatened. If the agreement were broken, the world would head directly into an atomic weapons armament race with the assurance of supremacy if she chose to assume it for the nation winning that race. Unless the United Nations Organization achieves an unprecedented success in establishing genuine world government and a reduction of national ambitions and suspicions—in other words, unless the UNO genuinely abolishes all chance of major wars—this eventuality will be most probable.

¹ For extensive information on the formulation and execution of United States policy with respect to atomic energy, see Richard G. Hewlett and Oscar E. Anderson, Jr., The New World, 1939-1946: A History of the United States Atomic Energy Commission, vol. I. University Park, Pennsylvania: The Pennsylvania State University Press, 1962. Chapters 15 and 16 are of special interest in connection with the present compilation. For documentation on United States policy with respect to the international control of atomic energy, see ante, pp. 712-728, passim. For documentation on United States national security policy, see ante, pp. 1110 ff. For documentation on the attitude of the Soviet Union with respect to atomic energy, see vol. VI, pp. 683-866, passim.

² Lot 57D688, the consolidated lot file on atomic energy, 1942-1962, located in the Department of State, including the records of the Special Assistant to the Secretary of State on Atomic Energy and the records of the United States Delegation to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission.

³ "Manhattan Engineer District" was the wartime code name of the atomic bomb development program; the designation continued to be employed after the nature of the project became public knowledge. General Groves transmitted this memorandum to Mr. John M. Hancock of the United States Delegation to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission on June 10, 1946 (Department of State Atomic Energy Files).

If the world agreement provided for the retention of a small number of atomic weapons for the purpose of enforcing peace,

- a. by some international agency,
- b. by the United States as the trustee agency of that organization, or
- c. by each of the major powers as agents of that organization, our Army of the future must be planned with due regard for the unprecedented power of the weapon and its potentiality for sudden, crippling delivery. A small number of such bombs could give an enormous initial advantage but would not ensure final victory unless they were followed up by more bombs.

Second Assumption: That satisfactory world agreements have not been reached and atomic bombs will be available to each of the three major nations within the course of 15 or 20 years or even 5 or 10.

Should there be an armament race in atomic weapons,—and the world could not long survive such a race—then the United States must for all time maintain absolute supremacy in atomic weapons, including number, size and power, efficiency, means for immediate offensive use and defense against atomic attack. We must also have a worldwide intelligence service which will keep us at all times completely informed of any activities of other nations in the atomic field and of their military intentions.

If we were truly realistic instead of idealistic, as we appear to be, we would not permit any foreign power with which we are not firmly allied, and in which we do not have absolute confidence to make or possess atomic weapons. If such a country started to make atomic weapons we would destroy its capacity to make them before it had progressed far enough to threaten us. If there was only some way to make America sense now its true peril some 15 to 20 years hence in a world of unrestricted atomic bombs, the nation would rise up and demand one of the two alternatives essential to its very existence. Either we must have a hard-boiled, realistic, enforceable, world-agreement ensuring the outlawing of atomic weapons or we and our dependable allies must have an exclusive supremacy in the field, which means that no other nation can be permitted to have atomic weapons. The United States is in a position now to get and enforce one of those alternates—five years from now will be too late to initiate the agreements. Genuine and proven mutual confidence between the great nations is the prime essential requirement for the agreement.

The atomic bomb is not an all-purpose weapon. One would not use a pile-driver for driving tacks when a tack hammer would do a better and a cheaper job. It is a weapon of tremendous, devastating power, capable of being produced in more than adequate numbers to influence decisively the outcome of any future conflict. It can be simplified and improved from its early models and if we are to judge from past developments of other weapons future bombs should be more powerful than the bombs used at Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

The atomic bomb is exclusively an offensive weapon—a weapon of rapid attrition. With it war can be carried to the enemy's heart and vitals and there it can utterly destroy his capacity to fight and even to live. If used in sufficient numbers, it can completely destroy the densely populated centers of any nation on earth. It is a weapon of suddenness, completeness and totality. Two disciplined nations each using the bomb can destroy each other's entire national life, yet neither could invade the other with large armed forces in the face of atomic bombs used on the convoys, beachheads or airheads. It thus makes war unendurable. Its very existence should make war unthinkable.

The atomic bomb cannot stand alone in the nation's arsenal. To put all our reliance on that one powerful weapon is to court disaster. It could be captured or sabotaged. One or more might prove to be "duds" at the wrong time. The bomb must be transported safely to bases from which it can be sent against any enemy. These bases must be held safe against the enemy and new bases closer to the enemy may need to be won. The bomb must be delivered on enemy targets in spite of enemy resistance. The territory attacked must be occupied and controlled. For our protection the air and sea lanes around our lands and toward any enemy must be dominated by our arms and adequate forces, air and ground and possibly sea, must be used for the defense of our large centers of population and industry. All these considerations mean that we must have adequate, diversified, well-rounded military forces, trained for almost instantaneous action. Furthermore the entire nation must be disciplined to withstand cataclysmic destruction of key cities at home and still be able to win the war.

The size of an Army mobilized for a war would be materially smaller than that for the recent war, because it is inconceivable that a war carried on with an ample supply of atomic weapons on one or both sides could last long enough to mobilize, train, equip and maintain a vast Army. The force mobilized at the start of a war could perhaps be doubled or trebled in time to be useful.

For the next 5 to 10 years, our Army will have the major tasks of occupying former enemy territory, garrisoning overseas bases, carrying on a large military training program and executing the administrative, supply and overhead functions for the Army. For those tasks there will necessarily be required a large force, both ground and air, without considering the effects of atomic weapons. The size, composition, organization and equipment of the forces concerned with the essential tasks mentioned above will be such as will best meet the changing mission over the next several years.

The mobile forces of the Army outside those mentioned in the preceding paragraph will be definitely and markedly affected by the impact of the atomic bomb. Just how and to what extent is not yet clear. It will be largely influenced by what effective measures, if any, are taken to control the atomic problem. For the next several years study, experiment, invention, development and training will point the way toward the best kind of an Army to build around the all-powerful atomic weapons. One would be rash indeed to try and state now in detail what that Army will be ten years hence. Certain indications are clear, however, and preliminary conclusions can be drawn from them. Some of those follow :

1. Should we engage in a major war within the next five years, the atomic bombs used will be much like those used at Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Delivery of the bombs probably will be made by airplanes with selected crews. Assembly and technical supervision of the bombs will be done by scientific and technical personnel from the Manhattan project. The bombs are still a long way from being standard or routine weapons. What will come in the future depends on the development of new weapons and methods of delivery.

2. Special air units, with most modern aircraft and other equipment, trained for instant attack, located at bases primarily in the United States will have to be assigned the mission of delivering atomic bombs anywhere in the world.

3. There should be several highly mobile ground units, trained and equipped for rapid movement by fastest transportation for the purpose of seizing and holding bases and critical areas. Those mobile units should be backed up by a number of slower-moving, more heavily armed units to act in support.

4. There should be available as mobilized units or available for instant mobilization, sufficient forces (land, sea, and air) to control the sea and air lanes surrounding the United States and its possessions and for safe distances beyond so as to protect our cities and industries.

5. Overseas bases needed for launching attacks against potential enemies should be adequately equipped, guarded and supplied.

6. All possible methods of delivery of atomic weapons including aircraft, guided missiles, rockets and submarines should be studied and developed. Units for using best methods of delivery should be made part of our armed forces.

7. Our intelligence forces must be strengthened many-fold, made world-wide and be competent to always know and to give prompt, accurate and complete answers to the question: "What are other nations doing in the atomic weapon field"?

8. Many governmental and military installations must be arranged by construction, concealment, dispersal and other means so as to continue to function during an enemy attack with atomic weapons. Our atomic weapons installations, including certain manufacturing plants, storage points, launching sites and airbases, would be in that category. General dispersal of industry does not appear feasible because of the dislocations involved. If dispersal of key critical industries is undertaken, it should be for self-contained plants and not just the component parts. An atomic weapon war is visualized as one of short duration; hence it is believed that the war will have to be fought largely with our initial stockpile of weapons and equipment, augmented by all-out production of essential items.

9. Forces of 8 to 10 million men in the Army for a war are not now visualized, for the reason that an atomic weapon war should have reached a decision before such great forces could be mobilized, equipped, trained and maintained. Forces of perhaps one-third that number might be required and their assembly in time seems feasible. However since atomic war will be truly a war for survival, our total manpower should have had military training and be disciplined to withstand the tremendous shock of atomic attack.

10. Because an atomic weapon war will not let us have months to prepare in comparative security, a larger percentage of our war force unit must be kept always ready. Much of that force should be in components, including air, which can be ready to carry immediate offensive war against the enemy. With atomic weapons, a nation must be ready to strike the first blow if needed. The first blow or series of first blows may be the last.

11. Elaborate, fixed coast defenses in their present type will lose their importance. Some of the present installations should be retained and manned to protect our most important harbors and naval anchorages against sudden forays from the sea.

12. Defense against the atomic bomb will always be inadequate. The only defense which we can yet foresee is to stop the carrying vehicle. So long as the bomb is carried by aircraft, it will be possible to stop a large percentage of those aircraft attacking our vital centers but only one or two need get through to wreak great destruction. Our defenses against atomic attack by air will therefore require considerable forces. There must, nevertheless, be continued research of the highest quality and urgency in the defensive field.

13. While this subject is not in my field of responsibility, it is clear that a strong properly equipped Navy to ensure our freedom of the seas is an essential part of our national defense. The Navy is taking full advantage of all the lessons which can be learned from studies of atomic weapons including the data which will be available after the forthcoming tests against naval vessels.

14. Detailed plans concerning size, organization, composition, and equipment of the Army to utilize effectively atomic weapons are now under intensive study. As these plans crystallize such of them as require Congressional action will be presented promptly for consideration by the Congress.

The atomic bombs dropped on Japan had two primary effects: first, the sudden and unexpected ending of the war with the consequent saving of the lives of thousands of our men; and second, a complete revolution in future military thought. The atomic bomb is a terrifying advance over other weapons. It will influence warfare more than did gunpowder or the airplane. Its destructiveness makes it imperative that world peace be achieved. If the peoples of the major powers of the world really knew or could understand the peril inherent in atomic weapons they would demand of their various governments a real solution to the problem of war.

However, until such time as, by UNO or other action, all chance of major wars is truly nil, no policy is sound which is based on the assumption that atomic weapons will be outlawed for all time to come. Time will be needed for the gradual evolution of national and international thinking and resultant policies on the use of atomic energy in general, and of atomic weapons in particular. Presumably any international agreements reached will contain provisions for the exploitation of atomic energy for peacetime uses. As has been stated to the Senate Committee, in this exploitation there will be built up supplies of active materials sufficient for many bombs. Thus there will always be a vast military potential which must not be forgotten. Furthermore I understand that the time for conversion of peacetime atomic energy plants to war purposes would be dangerously short. It should be realized that we risk the security of our country when we gamble that there will be time to detect and to take decisive action against any nation that violates its agreements before atomic disaster is upon us.

Our military establishment must not be excluded from research and development in the atomic weapon field. We cannot lean exclusively on any agency which concerns itself primarily with possible peaceful uses of atomic energy. Any commission such as that proposed in the May-Johnson Bill must have as its primary concern the military security of the United States. To accomplish that end the Army and Navy must have a major part in determining how atomic energy will be applied to national defense. If there are to be atomic weapons in the world, we must have the best, the biggest and the most; and the Army and Navy must not be divorced from their responsibility of defending the United States.

811.2423/1-546

Memorandum by the Secretary of State to President Truman

[WASHINGTON,] January 5, 1946.

The British have requested that a British scientific team be permitted to attend the forthcoming atomic bomb trials.⁴ The Secretaries of State, War, and Navy approve the idea, particularly since the British have various experts with special knowledge who would be of considerable assistance in connection with the tests, and from the military standpoint their participation would be desirable. The officer in charge of the atomic bomb project⁵ has indicated informally that he has no objection.

We should like to have your approval before proceeding.⁶

JAMES F. BYRNES

811.2423/2-546

*Minutes of the Meeting of the Secretaries of State, War, and Navy, Washington, February 5, 1946, 10:30 a. m.*⁷

TOP SECRET

Present: The Secretary of State
 The Secretary of War⁸ accompanied by Assistant Secretary Petersen⁹
 The Secretary of the Navy accompanied by Admiral Blandy and Mr. Hidalgo
 Mr. Matthews¹⁰

ATOMIC ENERGY

MR. FORRESTAL stated that he had asked Admiral Blandy to accompany him in case Mr. Byrnes wanted to raise any question in connection

⁴ For information regarding the origins of the Bikini tests, see Hewlett and Anderson, pp. 581-582.

⁵ Vice Adm. William H. P. Blandy.

⁶ The President's initialled "OK" appears on the source text.

⁷ The Secretaries of State, War, and Navy, or their representatives, met on an almost weekly basis in 1946.

⁸ Robert P. Patterson.

⁹ Howard C. Petersen, Assistant Secretary of War.

¹⁰ H. Freeman Matthews, Director of the Office of European Affairs.

with the proposed invitations for foreign observers to attend the forthcoming atomic bomb tests. ADMIRAL BLANDY stated that the three departments had now agreed to recommend to the Joint Chiefs of Staff that two foreign observers be invited for each country represented on the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission except for the British for whom a team of ten officers and civilians should be asked. MR. FORRESTAL stated that he was making inquiry as to the number of places aboard ship which might be available since this might be helpful in limiting the number of foreign observers and press representatives to be invited. MR. BYRNES said that he felt it was wise to limit foreign observers to the countries who are members of the Atomic Energy Commission because naturally from motives of curiosity every country would like to be present. He said that he would like to inform Molotov of our plans for foreign observers and that Molotov would naturally wish to know what their presence would mean.¹¹ ADMIRAL BLANDY said that with the exception of the British Delegation the observers would see no more than the press. He said that he had drafted the security provisions of the Congressional Resolution which will reserve full authority to prevent any violation of basic security requirements. MR. BYRNES raised the question as to whether the public should be told that the British observers are to see more than the others. As soon as the plans for observers are approved by the JCS he wants to clear the question with the President. (Admiral Blandy left at this point.)

[Here follows discussion of various other subjects.]

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by the Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer District (Groves), to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET

WASHINGTON, 13 February 1946.

1. At its meeting on 4 December 1945, the Combined Policy Committee appointed a subcommittee consisting of the Honorable L. B. Pearson,¹² Major General L. R. Groves and Mr. Roger Makins¹³ to draw up an agreement to take the place of the Articles of Agreement signed at Quebec on 19 August 1943¹⁴ and to recast the Trust Agreement of 13 June 1944,¹⁵ if necessary. The documents were to be in accord with the recent memorandum signed by the President and Prime Ministers of the United Kingdom and Canada, a copy of which is attached as enclosure 1.¹⁶ The Heads of the Agreement agreed to by General Groves and Sir John Anderson,¹⁷ a copy of which is attached as enclosure 2,¹⁸ were to be used as the basis. The documents were to be in a form suitable for execution as executive agreements.

¹¹ In telegram 237, February 7, the Embassy in Moscow was instructed to inform the Soviet Government of United States plans to conduct atomic tests; for text of telegram 237, see vol. VI, p. 691.

¹² Lester B. Pearson, Canadian Ambassador in the United States.

¹³ British Minister in the United States.

2. The subcommittee has met a number of times and has reached an agreement which will be presented at the meeting of the Combined Policy Committee scheduled for Friday, 15 February 1946. It has also prepared in accordance with the minutes of the Combined Policy Committee drafts of letters to be exchanged between the President and the Prime Ministers, which will effectively eliminate the restrictions placed upon post-war commercial participation by the United Kingdom.¹⁹

3. The scope of the new arrangements extends far beyond that ever contemplated by the Quebec Agreement and in effect will constitute an outright alliance, which can only be terminated by mutual consent between the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada, in the entire field of atomic energy. The military, political, legal, and international implications require the closest consideration by the highest authorities of the possible consequences which may result from this alliance if it is consummated in the present form.

¹⁴ The Combined Policy Committee was established under the terms of the Roosevelt-Churchill "Articles of Agreement governing collaboration between the authorities of the U.S.A. and the U.K. in the matter of Tube Alloys" (i.e. atomic energy research and development) signed at Quebec, August 19, 1943 (Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 2993: United States Treaties and Other International Agreements, vol. 5, pt. 1, p. 1114). For documentation on the First Quebec Conference, August 14-24, 1943, see Foreign Relations, Conferences at Washington and Quebec, 1943, pp. 391 ff.

For extracts from the minutes of the meeting of December 4, 1945, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, p. 86.

¹⁵ Reference is to the Agreement and Declaration of Trust, signed by President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill on June 13, 1944, establishing the Combined Development Trust, of which General Groves was Chairman; for text, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. II, p. 1026-1028. The Trust was to operate under the direction of the Combined Policy Committee. Its main function was to secure control and insure development of uranium and thorium supplies located outside the jurisdiction of the United States, the United Kingdom, the Dominions, India, and Burma.

¹⁶ Reference is to the memorandum of November 16, 1945, expressing intention to continue cooperation; for text, see telegram 3400, April 20, 1946, to London, p. 1235. For text of the Agreed Declaration by President Truman, Prime Minister Attlee of the United Kingdom, and Prime Minister Mackenzie King of Canada, signed at Washington, November 15, 1945, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 1504, or 60 Stat. (p. 2) 1479.

¹⁷ Chairman, British Advisory Committee on Atomic Energy; former Chancellor of the Exchequer.

¹⁸ For text, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, p. 75.

¹⁹ For text of the report, including drafts of letters to be exchanged, see infra.

4. The Quebec Agreement was an executive agreement made under the President's power to conduct war. The stated principle with respect to exchange of information was that in the field of scientific research and development there should be full and effective interchange of information and ideas between those in the two countries engaged in the same section of the field. This principle was applied wholeheartedly throughout the war period although the exchange was almost entirely from the United States to the United Kingdom. Since V-J Day, its application has been lessened.

5. The type of cooperation now being sought by the United Kingdom must be considered primarily in terms of its military aspects, for, in spite of all of the discussions in this country of peaceful potentialities of atomic energy, its primary, almost sole, importance will remain military until world peace is assured or until effective control proves feasible. We do not yet know how successful will be the efforts of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada to effect international control of atomic energy and prevent its use for military purposes. I feel that it would be an easier task to outlaw war itself. Until control is achieved, and at the best it will take years to accomplish this, atomic energy will continue to be the most strategically important military weapon in existence. The proposed form of cooperation in the field of atomic energy could well be considered as tantamount to a military alliance.

6. The memorandum signed by the President and the Prime Ministers of the United Kingdom and Canada intends cooperation in the field of atomic energy but does not expressly or by implication provide for any joint venture of the three governments. The financial and developmental burdens since the inception of this project have rested almost solely upon the United States. The true relationship and the basis of collaboration between the United States and United Kingdom has been kept from the American people and the Congress. There is a general feeling that the United Kingdom played an important role in the development of the atomic bomb. This is not the case.

7. Serious consideration should be given to the effects of the provisions of Chapter XVI of the United Nations Charter, namely, that all treaties and international agreements shall be registered with the Secretariat at the earliest possible time. Consideration should also be given not only to the validity but to the wisdom of an executive agreement. The advent of atomic energy has caused considerable apprehension not only in Congress but among all thinking Americans as well. Initial steps have been taken on the international level to bring about agreement among all nations in this field. The temper of the people and of the Congress is such that any secret arrangement at this time would, if it became known, be subject to severe criticism and might result in serious complications. The bringing to light of such an agreement during a period in which the United States is fostering international cooperation and a community of responsibility to maintain peace would very likely cast grave reflection on the sincerity of this effort and furnish the opportunity which certain countries may be seeking to discredit us in the eyes of the world.

8. It is extremely important that we arrive at a definition of "full and effective interchange of information" at this time. Dr. Chadwick has acquainted me with the probable intentions of the United Kingdom government to develop a large scale plant for production of fissionable materials in England. The information and assistance which he has stated he will request from us to enable the United Kingdom to carry out its program include practically all of the processing techniques and plant designs and specifications of the entire Manhattan Project less the gas diffusion method, and even some of the personnel. The project would depend on American knowledge, not British. I have discussed the matter with General Eisenhower. He feels very strongly that cooperation must include wholehearted consideration of our views on keeping large scale installations out of England. Any large British installation should be built, not in the United Kingdom, but in Canada.

9. In any consideration for utilizing the existing American-British agreements as bases for agreements for the exchange of information and for cooperation in the field of atomic energy, there should be included provisions for cooperative planning on the location of any new large scale installations developed for the production of fissionable materials.²⁰

L. R. GROVES
Major General, USA

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Draft Report to the Combined Policy Committee by a Sub-Committee*²¹

TOP SECRET

[WASHINGTON, February 15, 1946.]

The Sub-Committee (Major General L. R. Groves, the Hon. L. B. Pearson, and Mr. Roger Makins) was appointed by the Combined Policy Committee on December 4th to draw up, in accordance with ²⁰ Regarding United States negotiations with the United Kingdom and Canada in 1946 concerning continued cooperation in the postwar period, see Hewlett and Anderson, pp. 477-481.

²¹ The source text bears a number of handwritten changes of undetermined origin which have not been reproduced.

the Memorandum signed by the President and the Prime Ministers of the United Kingdom and Canada, a document to take the place of the Articles of Agreement signed at Quebec on August 19th, 1943. The Sub-Committee was instructed that this revised document should be in the form of an executive agreement, and that the obligation in the fourth provision of the Quebec Agreement should be eliminated.

2. The Sub-Committee has held three meetings. It has had before it the Quebec Agreement; the Agreement and Declaration of Trust signed on June 13th, 1944; and the Memorandum addressed to the Chairman of the Combined Policy Committee by General Groves and Sir John Anderson on November 16th.

3. The Sub-Committee considered the fourth provision of the Quebec Agreement in the light of the discussion in the Combined Policy Committee on this point. It concluded that this matter could best be dealt with by an exchange of letters between the President and the Prime Minister in the form set out in Annex A to this report.

4. The Sub-Committee agreed upon the text of a Memorandum of Agreement between the three Governments. This text is contained in Annex B to this report.

5. The Sub-Committee also agreed on the revised text of the Agreement and Declaration of Trust between the three governments. This text is contained in Annex C to this report.

Annex A—Part I

DRAFT LETTER FROM PRESIDENT TO PRIME MINISTER

I have given full consideration to the Fourth Provision of the Articles of Agreement governing collaboration between the authorities of the United States of America and the United Kingdom in the matter Tube Alloys signed by President Roosevelt and Mr. Winston Churchill at Quebec on August 19th, 1943.

2. I have also taken into consideration the Memorandum of Agreement signed at . . . and . . . on . . ., 1946, providing for the continuation of co-operation in the field of atomic energy between the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada.

3. In view of the provisions of this Memorandum of Agreement of . . . 1946, I hereby determine and declare that it is fair and just, and in harmony with the economic welfare of the world that there should be no restrictions placed upon the Government of the United Kingdom in the matter of the development and use of Atomic Energy for industrial or commercial purposes.

Annex A—Part II

DRAFT REPLY TO PRESIDENT FROM PRIME MINISTER

I have received your letter of and on behalf of the Government of the United Kingdom I take note of and accept the determination and declaration which you have made under the Fourth Provision of the Articles of Agreement governing collaboration between the authorities of the United States of America and the United Kingdom in the matter of Tube Alloys signed by President Roosevelt and Mr. Winston Churchill at Quebec on August 19th, 1943.

Annex B

DRAFT MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT

WHEREAS the President of the United States, the Prime Minister of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the Prime Minister of Canada have expressed the desire that there should be full and effective cooperation between the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada in the field of atomic energy;

WHEREAS for this purpose the Combined Policy Committee already established should be continued in existence; and

WHEREAS a Combined Development Trust has been set up for the purpose of acquiring supplies of uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals;

The Government of the United States, the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the Government of Canada are agreed as follows:

1. None of the three Governments will use atomic weapons against other parties without prior consultation with each of the other two governments.

2. None of the three Governments will disclose any information to or enter into negotiations concerning atomic energy with other governments or authorities or persons in other countries except in accordance with agreed common policy or after prior consultation with each of the other two Governments.

3. Each of the three Governments will take measures so far as practicable to secure control and possession, by purchase or otherwise, of all deposits of uranium and thorium situated in areas comprising respectively the United States, its territories or possessions, the United Kingdom and its colonial dependencies, and Canada. They will also, severally or jointly, use every endeavour with respect to the remaining territories of the British Commonwealth and other countries to acquire all such supplies of uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals as may be agreed to be desirable. All supplies acquired under the provisions of this paragraph will be subject to allocation by the Combined Policy Committee.

4. The supplies acquired under the arrangements provided for in the preceding paragraph shall be allocated by the Combined Policy Committee to the three Governments in such quantities as may be needed, in the common interest, for scientific research, military and humanitarian purposes. Such supplies as are not allocated for these purposes and are not already in the ownership of the Combined Development Trust, shall be offered for sale to the Trust. The disposal of unallocated supplies shall be determined by the Combined Policy Committee at a later date in the light of the then existing conditions and on a fair and equitable basis. Supplies in the ownership of the Trust allocated to any Government will be transferred to that Government by the Trust under such arrangements as may be determined upon by the Combined Policy Committee.

5. The Combined Policy Committee will settle the policy to be followed in the mining and producing of uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals, and the Combined Development Trust will not be obliged to purchase supplies mined and produced otherwise than in accordance with the policy thus laid down.

6. There shall be full and effective cooperation between the three Governments in regard to the exchange of information concerning atomic energy required for their respective programmes of atomic energy development. This exchange will be implemented by arrangements approved from time to time by the Combined Policy Committee.

7. The Combined Policy Committee, already established and composed of six members, three from the United States, two from the United Kingdom, and one from Canada, shall carry out the policies set out in the present Memorandum subject to the control of the respective Governments. To this end, the Committee shall:

1. Review from time to time the general programme of work being carried out in the three countries.

2. Allocate materials in accordance with the principles set forth in the fourth paragraph above.

3. Settle any questions which may arise concerning the interpretation and application of arrangements regulating cooperation between the three Governments.

8. This Memorandum of Agreement supersedes all agreements relating to atomic energy existing between the three Governments or any two of them prior to the date hereof, with the exception of the Agreement and Declaration of Trust signed on , the Patents Memorandum of October 1st, 1943 as modified by subsequent agreement on September 19th, 1944 and March 8th, 1945,^{21a} and the ^{21a} The three documents relating to patents, copies of which exist in the records of the Combined Policy Committee in the Department of State Atomic Energy Files, are not printed. In regard to wartime patent arrangements, see Margaret Gowing, Britain and Atomic Energy 1939-1945 (London, St. Martin's Press, 1964), pp. 244-245.

Exchange of Letters between the Acting Secretary of State and His Majesty's Ambassador of September 19th and 24th, 1945.²²

9. The provisions of the present agreement are subject to any wider agreements for the control of atomic energy to which all the three governments may subsequently become parties.

Annex C

RE-DRAFT OF DECLARATION OF TRUST

THIS AGREEMENT AND DECLARATION OF TRUST is made by on behalf of the Government of the United States of America, by on behalf of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and by on behalf of the Government of Canada, (the said Governments being hereinafter referred to as "the three Governments");

WHEREAS it is in the common interest of the three Governments to ensure the acquisition of an adequate supply of uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals; and

WHEREAS it is the intention of the three Governments to secure to the fullest extent practicable supplies of uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals within the boundaries of such areas as come under their respective jurisdictions; and

WHEREAS it has been agreed that the three Governments will use every endeavor to acquire all such supplies of uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals situated in territories outside their jurisdiction as may be agreed to be desirable; and

WHEREAS it has been decided to establish a joint organization for the purpose of securing supplies of uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals;

NOW IT IS HEREBY AGREED AND DECLARED AS FOLLOWS:

1. (1) There is established in the City of Washington, District of Columbia, a Trust known as "The Combined Development Trust" (hereinafter called "the Trust").

(2) The Trust shall be composed of and administered by six persons, three from the United States, two from the United Kingdom and one from Canada, who shall be appointed, and be subject to removal, by the Combined Policy Committee established by the three Governments.

(3) The Trust shall carry out its functions under the direction and guidance of and as agent of the Combined Policy Committee.

2. The Trust shall use its best endeavours to develop the production of uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals and for that purpose shall take such steps as it may in the common interest think fit to:

²² For texts, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, pp. 44 and 47, respectively.

(a) Explore and survey sources of uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals.

(b) Develop the production of uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals by the acquisition of mines and ore deposits, mining concessions or otherwise.

(c) Provide with equipment any mines or mining works for the production of uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals.

(d) Survey and improve the methods of production of uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals.

(e) Acquire and undertake the concentration and disposal of uranium and thorium materials.

(f) Provide storage and other facilities.

(g) Undertake any functions or operations which conduce to the effective carrying out of the purpose of the Trust in the common interest.

3. (1) All uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals and other property acquired by the Trust shall be held by it in trust for the three Governments jointly, and disposed of or otherwise dealt with only in accordance with the direction of the Combined Policy Committee.

(2) The Trust is not obliged to acquire supplies mined and produced otherwise than in accordance with mining and production policy settled by the Combined Policy Committee.

(3) Supplies in the ownership of the Trust allocated by the Combined Policy Committee to any government will be transferred to that Government by the Trust.

(4) The Trust shall submit such reports of its activities as may be required from time to time by the Combined Policy Committee.

4. For the purpose of carrying out its functions, the Trust shall utilize whenever and wherever practicable the established agencies of any of the three Governments, and may employ and pay such other agents and employees as it considers expedient, and may delegate to any agents or employees all or any of its functions.

5. The Trust may acquire and hold any property in the name of nominees.

6. All funds properly required by the Trust for the performance of its functions shall be provided as to one-half by the Government of the United States of America and as to the other half by the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

7. In the event of the Combined Policy Committee ceasing to exist, the functions of the Committee under the Trust shall be performed by such other body or person as may be designated by the President for the time being of the United States of America, the Prime Minister for the time being of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the Prime Minister for the time being of Canada.

8. This Agreement and Declaration of Trust shall supersede, as from its date, the Agreement and Declaration of Trust made on June 13th, 1944 by the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Great Britain. It shall remain in full force and effect from the date hereof until terminated by mutual consent on the request of any of the parties and shall be subject to revision or extension at any time by mutual consent.

(Signed) _____

ON BEHALF OF THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

(Signed) _____

ON BEHALF OF THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND

(Signed) _____

ON BEHALF OF THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Minutes of the Meeting of the Combined Policy Committee at the Department of State, February 15, 1946, 4 p. m.

TOP SECRET

Present: Members

The Secretary of State (in the Chair)

The Secretary of War

The Rt. Hon. Earl of Halifax ²³

Field Marshal Sir Henry Maitland Wilson

By Invitation

The Canadian Ambassador, Mr. L. B. Pearson
(representing the Hon. C. D. Howe) ²⁴

Mr. Dean Acheson ²⁵

Sir James Chadwick ²⁶

Joint Secretaries

Major General L. R. Groves

Mr. Roger Makins

I. *Minutes of the Meeting Held on December 4th, 1945.*²⁷

Various amendments were proposed to the Minutes. The Secretariat was instructed to circulate a revised copy for approval at the next meeting.

²³ British Ambassador in the United States.

²⁴ Canadian Member, Combined Policy Committee.

²⁵ Under Secretary of State.

²⁶ Scientific Adviser to the British Members of the Combined Policy Committee.

²⁷ For extracts from the minutes in the form ultimately approved, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, p. 86.

II. Revision of Agreements.

The Committee had before it a report of the Sub-Committee appointed at the last meeting. The Sub-Committee had drawn up, on the basis of the Committee's instructions, a document to take the place of the Articles of Agreement signed at Quebec on August 19th, 1943, in the form of an executive agreement. The Sub-Committee had also revised the Agreement and Declaration of Trust and had drafted an exchange of letters to cover the fourth provision of the Quebec Agreement. The report of the Sub-Committee is attached as Tab NN.²⁸

THE CHAIRMAN referred to Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations. It was the policy of the United States Government, and he was sure also of the British and Canadian Governments, to be scrupulous in their observance of the obligations of the Charter. It seemed clear that the revised agreements as presented to the Committee would require to be registered with the Secretariat of the United Nations.

LORD HALIFAX and MR. PEARSON said that the same point had also been present to their minds.

A discussion followed on the form of any revised agreements.

MR. PEARSON suggested that the revised arrangements might be covered by an exchange of letters of declarations on the part of the three Governments to the effect that, pending the working out of an international scheme for the control of atomic energy by the United Nations Commission, they intended to proceed in their relations with one another on certain lines.

It was suggested in the discussion that, apart from the question of form, and of Article 102 of the Charter, there might well be advantage in making the revised arrangements agreed upon by the three Governments public in any event.

THE COMMITTEE decided :—

(a) That, having regard to the obligations of Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations, the question of the form of any revised arrangements should be referred for consideration to the appropriate legal authorities of the three Governments.

(b) That the three Governments would also consider the desirability of making public in any event any revised arrangements which might be concluded.

It was suggested that the draft exchange of letters proposed by the Sub-Committee to deal with the Fourth Provision of the Quebec Agreement might require revision in the light of the discussion.

The Secretariat was instructed to submit a revised draft²⁹ at the next meeting of the Committee.

An inquiry was made whether cooperation could not proceed on ²⁸ Supra.

²⁹ Not printed.

on the basis of existing agreements until an international scheme was developed by the Atomic Energy Commission.

It was pointed out that since the existing agreements had been concluded before the coming into force of the Charter, they did not require to be registered with the Secretariat of the United Nations.

LORD HALIFAX said that the Quebec Agreement provided for full and effective collaboration between the two countries "in bringing the project", that is to say, the development of the Atomic Bomb, "to fruition". It did not, as at present interpreted, provide a sufficient basis for cooperation in present circumstances particularly in the field of exchange of information. He referred to the Memorandum signed by the President and the Prime Ministers of the United Kingdom and Canada on November 16th, which represented the decision on which His Majesty's Government had been basing their policy and programme.

THE CHAIRMAN said that he would discuss this matter further with the President.

III. Programme of Research and Development in the United Kingdom.

LORD HALIFAX made a statement on this subject, the text of which is contained in Tab OO.³⁰

The Committee:—took note of this statement.

IV. The Combined Development Trust.

The Committee was informed that Sir Charles Hambro, Deputy Chairman of the Trust, had resigned. The appointment of Mr. Roger Makins to succeed to this vacancy was approved.

The Committee then adjourned.

L. R. GROVES
Major General, U.S.A.
Joint Secretaries
ROGER MAKINS

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Statement by the British Ambassador (Halifax)*³¹

TOP SECRET

[WASHINGTON, February 15, 1946.]

At its meeting on October 13th, 1945, I informed the Combined Policy Committee that His Majesty's Government had decided to set up a Research Establishment in the United Kingdom to deal with all ³⁰ Infra.

³¹ Delivered at the meeting of the Combined Policy Committee, February 15, the minutes of which are printed supra.

aspects of atomic energy, and that they were considering plans for large-scale production of fissile material.³²

2. His Majesty's Government have now further considered this question and have decided to put into effect the following programme:—

The Experimental and Research Establishment will be situated in Harwell near Didcot. It will be concerned as much with the development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes as with its military application. In addition to work on the determination of the necessary physical, chemical and metallurgical data, the activities of the establishment will include the construction on a pilot scale of plants for the production of useful energy from fissile materials. The equipment of the establishment will include a small air-cooled graphite pile dissipating 6,000 kilowatts. In addition, a small number of units of the type used in the electro magnetic process for the separation of U.235 will be installed, for the separation of other isotopes as well as those of uranium and for general experimental purposes. The establishment will be the source of supply of tracer elements, both stable and radioactive, for use in biological and chemical research. It is intended that, subject to the needs of military security, the work of this establishment will be carried on under conditions which, as regards freedom of discussion and publication of results, will approximate as closely as possible to those of a university.

2. In order to produce adequate supplies of fissile material—

(a) for the use of the Research Establishment and

(b) for eventual industrial or military application, His Majesty's Government have decided to undertake the construction of a large-scale graphite pile for the production of plutonium. His Majesty's Government have, of course, in mind the fact that the conclusions reached by the United Nations Commission on Atomic Energy will affect the eventual use to be made of any material produced in the United Kingdom.

3. His Majesty's Government are also preparing a Bill for the control of all atomic energy activities in the United Kingdom which will be shortly introduced into Parliament.

811.2423/2-146

The Assistant Secretary for American Republic Affairs (Braden) to the Chief of the Military Intelligence Service, War Department (Peabody)

SECRET

WASHINGTON, March 1, 1946.

MY DEAR GENERAL PEABODY: I am writing in reference to your secret memorandum of February 1, 1946³³ enclosing a memorandum ³² For extracts from the minutes of the meeting of October 13, 1945, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, p. 57.

³³ Not printed.

from the Military Attaché at Buenos Aires recommending that the subject of inter-American control of uranium and other radioactive materials be considered as a matter for the agenda of the approaching Rio conference.³⁴

While recognizing the value of this recommendation, it seems clear that it would be premature to place this subject on the agenda of the Rio conference.

Any consideration of inter-American control of uranium and other radioactive materials must wait on the formulation of United States policy with regard to domestic controls and wider international controls. It seems highly unlikely that domestic legislation will have been passed by the Congress by the time the Rio conference convenes. Furthermore, our policy with regard to inter-American control of radioactive materials must be considered in the light of the recommendations of the Commission for the Control of Atomic Energy recently established by the General Assembly.

I want to take this opportunity to express appreciation that this important matter was brought to the attention of the Department of State and to assure you that it is receiving careful study.

Sincerely yours,

SPRUILLE BRADEN

811.2423/3-1446

Memorandum by the Secretary of State to President Truman

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] March 8, 1946.

Subject: Allocation of Observers and Press Representatives for Atomic Bomb Tests.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff on advice of the Commander, Joint Task Force One, have now established specific allocation of observers and press representatives for the forthcoming atomic bomb tests. The allocations are in accordance with the general plan already presented to you, except that they accord to the Canadian Government the privilege which was proposed for Great Britain—that of sending additional observers. Although the authorization of additional observers to selected nations may and probably will cause adverse comment from foreign nations not favored, it is considered that special treatment of Great Britain and Canada is fully justified. The development of atomic power resulted from a combination of the resources and scientific skill of the United States, Great Britain and Canada, and it is only fitting and proper that our associates be given special consideration.

³⁴ The Rio De Janeiro Conference for the Maintenance of Continental Peace and Security was held from August 15 to September 2, 1947.

For your information the specific allocation of observers and press representatives is:

Observers
U.S. armed services	116
U.S. civilian scientists	30
Members of Congress	60
Foreign nations having membership on UNO Atomic Energy Commission, two per nation	22
Additional British observers	8
Additional Canadian observers	4
Total Observers	240
Press Representatives
U.S. press, radio, newsreels, lecturers, magazine writers:
On board press ship	147
On board other ships of task force	20
On shore at Kwajalein	20
Foreign press, one per nation having membership on UNO Atomic Energy Commission, plus two extra for Great Britain:
On board press ship	13
Total Press	200

The Secretaries of State, War and the Navy have approved the above.³⁵

JAMES F. BYRNES

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Proposal by the British Members of the Combined Policy Committee ³⁶

TOP SECRET

[WASHINGTON, undated.]

DRAFT CONCLUSIONS OF COMBINED POLICY COMMITTEE RECOMMENDING ARRANGEMENTS FOR CONTINUANCE OF CO-OPERATION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES, THE UNITED KINGDOM AND CANADIAN GOVERNMENTS

The Committee took note that on 16th November, 1945, President Truman, Mr. Attlee and Mr. Mackenzie King had:—

(i) Recorded their wish that full and effective cooperation should continue in the field of atomic energy between the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada;

³⁵ The following appears in handwriting on the last page of the source text: "March 14, 1946

Approved with the proviso that an equal number of the members of Congress shall come from the Military Affairs, Naval Affairs and Appropriations Committees of each House.

This will prevent either service from being favored.

Harry S. Truman"

In a circular telegram of May 4, appropriate United States representatives abroad were instructed to issue invitations for the tests; for the text of telegram, see vol. VI, p. 751.

³⁶ This document was considered at the Combined Policy Committee Meeting of April 15; for the minutes of that meeting, see p. 1227.

(ii) Agreed that the Combined Policy Committee and the Combined Development Trust should be continued in suitable form:

(iii) Requested the Combined Policy Committee to work out appropriate arrangements for this purpose.

2. There was general agreement in the Committee that it would be undesirable to propose the conclusion of a new and formal agreement between the three Governments at this moment. Having regard to the obligations assumed under Article 102 of the United Nations' Charter, it would be necessary to publish the agreement; and it would be inopportune to do this so shortly before the opening of discussions in the United Nations Commission on Atomic Energy.

3. On the other hand, close cooperation between the three Governments which was begun during the war was a matter of public knowledge and the Declaration issued at Washington last November had made it clear to the world that this cooperation had not been broken off. The three Governments would not be open to criticism if they were to continue this cooperation on the same footing, until the outcome had been seen of the discussions in the United Nations Commission.

4. This cooperation might appropriately be based upon the existing documents. Since, however, these documents, and, in particular, the so-called Quebec Agreement, were in certain respects related to war conditions, certain adaptations and additions were required to render them suitable for the future.

[5.] The Committee:—

(1) Agreed to recommend, for the approval of the three Governments:—

(a) that cooperation should be continued, for the present, on the basis of the existing agreements, subject to the points shown in the schedules attached to these minutes;

(b) that these arrangements should be subject to revision later, in the light of any international agreement, which might be reached, as a result of the recommendations of the United Nations Commission on Atomic Energy;

(2) Took note that if the recommendation in (1) above was approved by the Canadian Government, they would acquire the same rights and assume the same obligations as if they had been parties to the Quebec Agreement and the Declaration of Trust.

SCHEDULE OF AMENDMENTS

(i) ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT APPROVED AT QUEBEC ON 19TH AUGUST, 1943
BY PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AND MR. CHURCHILL³⁷

Preamble and First Article to be deleted.

³⁷ For text of the Quebec Agreement, see Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 2993; United States Treaties and Other International Agreements, vol. 5, pt. 1, p. 1114.

Second Article to be revised to read:—

“None of the three Governments will use atomic weapons against other parties without prior consultation with each of the other two Governments.”

Third Article to be revised to read:—

“None of the three Governments will disclose any information to, or enter into negotiations with other Governments, or authorities or persons in other countries concerning atomic energy, except in accordance with agreed common policy or after consultation with each of the other two Governments.”

Fourth Article to be deleted in view of the exchange of letters between President Truman and Mr. Attlee which has the effect of putting an end to this provision.

Fifth Article to be deleted and the following inserted:—

“5. Each of the three Governments will take measures so far as practicable to secure control and possession, by purchase or otherwise, of all deposits of uranium and thorium situated in areas comprising respectively the United States, its territories or possessions; the United Kingdom and its colonial dependencies; and Canada. They will also use every endeavour to acquire all supplies of uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals situated in other countries as may be agreed to be desirable. The three Governments will agree in each case whether the action referred to in the preceding sentence will be taken by one of them alone or by all three Governments or any two of them jointly.[”]

6. All supplies acquired under the provisions of the preceding paragraph (including those acquired by the Combined Development Trust) will be subject to allocation by the Combined Policy Committee and paid for by the Government to whom they are allocated. These allocations shall be made to any of the three Governments in such quantities as may be needed in the common interest for scientific research, military and humanitarian purposes. Such supplies as are not allocated for these purposes and are not already in the ownership of the Combined Development Trust shall be offered for sale to the Trust. The disposal of unallocated supplies, whether in the hands of the Trust or of any of the Governments, shall be determined by the Combined Policy Committee at a later date, in the light of the then existing conditions and on a fair and equitable basis.

7. The Combined Policy Committee will settle the policy to be followed in the mining and producing of uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals, and the Combined Development Trust will not be obliged to purchase supplies mined and produced otherwise than in accordance with policy thus laid down.

8. There shall be full and effective cooperation between the three Governments in regard to the exchange of information concerning atomic energy required for their respective programmes of atomic energy development. This exchange will be implemented by arrangements approved from time to time by the Combined Policy Committee.

9. The Combined Policy Committee, already established and composed of six members, three from the United States, two from the United Kingdom, and one from Canada, shall carry out the policies set out in the present memorandum subject to the control of the respective Governments. To this end the Committee shall:—

- (i) Review from time to time the general programme of work being carried out in the three countries;
- (ii) Allocate materials in accordance with the principles set forth in the sixth paragraph above;
- (iii) Settle any questions which may arise concerning the interpretation and application of arrangements regulating cooperation between the three Governments.”

(ii) THE DECLARATION OF TRUST SIGNED BY PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AND MR. CHURCHILL OF 13TH JUNE, 1944 ³⁸

Preamble

First Paragraph

- Add: “and by on behalf of the Government of Canada”
- For: “The Two Governments”
- Read: “The Three Governments”

Second Paragraph

- Delete: this paragraph

Third Paragraph

- Delete: this paragraph and substitute:—
“Whereas it is in the common interest of the three Governments to ensure the acquisition of an adequate supply of uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals; and”

Fourth Paragraph

- For: “The Two Governments”
- Read: “The Three Governments”
- For: “control” substitute “secure”
- For: “uranium and thorium ore”
- Substitute: “uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals”

³⁸ For text, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. II, p. 1026.

Fifth Paragraph

Delete: this paragraph and substitute:
 "Whereas it has been agreed that the three Governments will use every endeavour to acquire all such supplies of uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals situated in territories outside their jurisdiction as may be agreed to be desirable."

Sixth Paragraph

Delete: "gaining control of the uranium and the supplies in certain areas outside the control of the two Governments and of other Governments of the Dominions and of India and of Burma"

Substitute: "securing supplies of uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals"

AgreementClause 1 (2)

After the words "six persons"

Insert: "three from the United States, two from the United Kingdom and one from Canada"

For: "Quebec Agreement" substitute "three Governments"

Insert: new sub-clause (3):

"The Trust shall carry out its functions under the direction and guidance of, and as agent of, the Combined Policy Committee."

Clause 2

Omit: "gain control of and"

For: "uranium and thorium" throughout this clause

Read: "uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals"

Delete: "supplies situated in certain areas other than areas under the jurisdiction of the two Governments and of the Governments of the two Dominions and of India and Burma"

Sub-Clause (a)

Delete: "supplies"

Sub-Clause (e)

Delete: "treatment and disposal of uranium and thorium"

Substitute: "the concentration and disposal of"

Clause 3Sub-clause (1)

Delete: "the Trust shall carry out its functions under the direction and guidance of the Combined Policy Committee and as its agent and"

For: "all uranium and thorium and all uranium and thorium ores and supplies"

Substitute: "all uranium ores and concentrates and thorium minerals"

For: "the Two Governments"

Read: "the Three Governments"

After "deal with" insert "only"

After sub-clause (1) insert two new sub-clauses:

"(2) The Trust is not obliged to acquire supplies mined and produced otherwise than in accordance with mining and production policy settled by the Combined Policy Committee.

(3) Supplies in the ownership of the Trust allocated by the Combined Policy Committee to any Government will be sold to that Government by the Trust."

Re-number sub-clause (2) as sub-clause (4)

Clause 4

For: "the Two Governments"

Read: "the Three Governments"

Clause 7

Add at the end of clause: "and the Prime Minister for the time being of Canada"

Clause 8

Delete this clause and substitute:

"This agreement and Declaration of Trust shall remain in full force and effect from the date hereof until terminated by mutual consent on the request of any of the parties and shall be subject to revision or extension at any time by mutual consent."

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*The Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer District (Groves), to the Secretary of State*³⁹

TOP SECRET

WASHINGTON, 2 April 1946.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: At their last meeting on March 29, 1946, the members of the Combined Development Trust discussed the possibility of being called upon to disclose information, reports, and other data on world resources of uranium and thorium to the United States, United Kingdom and Canadian delegates to the UNO Atomic Energy Commission.

³⁹ General Groves was Chairman of the Combined Development Trust; Secretary Byrnes was Chairman of the Combined Policy Committee.

In view of the Top Secret classification which has been applied to all activities and even the existence of the Combined Development Trust, we believe that the disclosure of raw materials information, if it becomes necessary, should be made through the medium of other agencies rather than directly by the Combined Development Trust.

It is requested that the Combined Policy Committee consider this matter and that the Trust be advised as to the policy adopted.

Respectfully submitted,

L. R. GROVES

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

The Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer District (Groves), to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET

WASHINGTON, April 2, 1946.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: At the July 4, 1945, meeting of the Combined Policy Committee⁴⁰ it was agreed that for the duration of the war all uranium supplies being received by the Combined Development Trust for the joint account of the United States and the United Kingdom should be allocated to the United States Government for the production of weapons to be used against the common enemy, that insofar as the uranium materials received by the Combined Development Trust exceeded the quantity required for the production of weapons for use against the common enemy they should be held by the Combined Development Trust to be disposed of or otherwise dealt with in accordance with the directions of the Combined Policy Committee, and that in making future allocations all relevant factors should be reviewed.

The Combined Development Trust requests that the Combined Policy Committee review the subject of allocation of raw materials and that appropriate instructions governing the allocation and disposition of all raw materials thus far acquired by the Combined Development Trust be issued.

Respectfully submitted,

L. R. GROVES

⁴⁰ For extracts from the minutes of that meeting, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, p. 12.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Memorandum on Allocation by the British Members of the Combined Policy Committee*⁴¹

TOP SECRET

[WASHINGTON, undated.]

At its meeting on July 4th, 1945, the Combined Policy Committee determined that while the war lasts all uranium supplies received by the Combined Development Trust for the joint account of the United States and the United Kingdom should be allocated to the United States Government for the production of weapons for use against the common enemy. The Committee's attention, having been called to the fact that this policy will leave Great Britain without any reserve of supplies of this material for the future use, the Committee noted this statement of the British members and agreed that insofar as the material received by the Trust exceeds the quantity required for the production of weapons against the common enemy in the present war, it should be held by the Combined Development Trust to be disposed of or otherwise dealt with in accordance with paragraph 3(1) of the Agreement of 13th June, 1944, and that in making future allocations all relevant factors should be reviewed.

2. Since this decision related to "the production of weapons against the common enemy in the present war" it now needs to be reviewed.

3. The principles on which it is proposed that allocations of raw materials should be made in future are set out in paragraph 4 of the revised memorandum of Agreement at present under consideration by the Committee. But in the opinion of the British members, the Committee should take a decision in respect of the interim period between V-J Day and February 28th. It is therefore suggested that all supplies received since V-J Day should now be allocated to meet the requirements of the three Governments, as approved by the Combined Policy Committee, after consideration of representations from each member Government. The unallocated balance (if any) should be held by the Combined Development Trust.

4. The British members suggest that the principle that the supplies allocated by the Combined Policy Committee should be paid for by the Government receiving the material, should be applied to this allocation.

5. It is further proposed that the Combined Policy Committee should also consider the allocations for the supplies which it is anticipated will be received for the ten months from March 1st to December 31st, 1946.

⁴¹This document was considered at the Combined Policy Committee Meeting of April 15; for the minutes of that meeting, see p. 1227.

6. Finally, the British members wish to draw attention to the fact that, as the programmes of atomic energy development in the United States of America, the United Kingdom and Canada progress, raw materials may well become in short supply. The Combined Policy Committee may therefore wish to decide that immediate consideration should be given to any possibilities of a more economical use of material.

[Annex]

DRAFT PROPOSAL ON THE SUBJECT OF ALLOCATION

It is proposed that in application of the principles laid down in the paper circulated at the last meeting of the Combined Policy Committee by the British members on the subject of allocation, a decision should be reached on the following basis, both in respect of the interim period since V-J Day and for the period up to December 31st, 1946.

2. The raw material supplies received from the territory with which the Combined Development Trust is concerned should be divided on a 50-50 basis between the United States of America on the one hand and the United Kingdom and Canada on the other. This basis corresponds with the basis of the Trust's financial arrangements.

3. It is considered that this basis of allocation should cover not merely the materials received during the remaining period of 1946, but also all the material received since V-J Day. In accordance with the decision of the Committee of July 4th such material was to be held by the Combined Development Trust.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*Memorandum by the United States Members of the Combined Policy Committee*⁴²

TOP SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] April 9, 1946.

SUGGESTED DRAFT OF MINUTE RE ALLOCATION BY U.S. MEMBERS

The subject of allocation of raw material was discussed.

Reference was made to Minute 6 of the 4 July 1945 meeting which provided that all uranium materials being received by the Combined Development Trust were to be allocated to the United States for such time as those materials would be required for the production of bombs for use against the common enemy and that insofar as the quantity of materials received by the Trust exceeds the quantity required for that purpose, it should be held by the Trust to be disposed of or otherwise dealt with in accordance with the Agreement of 13 June 1944.

⁴² This document was considered at the Combined Policy Committee Meeting of April 15, the minutes of which are printed infra.

It was agreed that for the time being the principle of allocation should be based upon the current requirements of the member Governments for their respective programs.

It was agreed that:

(a) All Trust materials which have actually been received and utilized as of March 31, 1946, by the respective Governments are hereby allocated to those Governments.

(b) Subsequent to March 31, 1946, a quantity of 250 tons of contained U_3O_8 per month is to be allocated to the United States to fill stated plant requirements.

(c) The remainder of the materials being received by the Trust will be held for allocation by the C.P.C. to the member Governments in accordance with requirements of their respective programs and upon application to the C.P.C.

(d) All uranium materials recovered on the European continent by Allied Forces during the war are allocated to the United States.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Minutes of the Meeting of the Combined Policy Committee at the Department of State, April 15, 1946, 2:30 p. m.

TOP SECRET

Present: Members

The Secretary of State (in the Chair)

The Secretary of War

Dr. Vannevar Bush ⁴³

The Rt. Hon. Earl of Halifax

Field Marshal Lord Wilson

By Invitation

The Canadian Ambassador, Mr. L. B. Pearson

(representing the Hon. C. D. Howe)

Mr. Dean Acheson

Sir James Chadwick

Secretariat

Major General L. R. Groves

Mr. Roger Makins

Mr. George Bateman

I. Minutes of the Meetings held on December 4th, 1945 and February 15th, 1946.

These minutes were approved.

⁴³ Director of the Office of Scientific Research and Development.

II. Report by Chairman of the Combined Development Trust.

(a) Disclosure of information to the representatives of the three Governments on the United Nations Atomic Energy Committee.

The Committee had before it a letter from the Chairman of the C.D.T. to the Chairman of the Committee (copy of which is attached as Tab PP ⁴⁴) enquiring whether the C.D.T. was authorized to communicate information on its activities to the representatives of the three Governments on the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission.

The Committee decided that their respective representatives should receive information and instructions direct from the Governments and that the Trust and the Trustees as such should take no action in this regard.

(b) Elimination of Special U.K. Bank Account for C.D.T. Funds.

The Committee had before it a letter from the Chairman of the C.D.T. ⁴⁵ reporting that the Trust had agreed that a special account which had been opened in the Bank of England should be discontinued.

The Committee took note of the decision of the Trust in this matter.

III. Declassification of Information Regarding Atomic Energy.

GENERAL GROVES stated that a Committee under the Chairmanship of Doctor Tolman ⁴⁶ had reported on the question of releasing for publication classified material relating to atomic energy. The Committee had recommended that certain types of material should be released forthwith. A set of rules for declassification had been prepared to give effect to the recommendations of the Tolman Committee and copies had been communicated to Sir James Chadwick and to the Canadian authorities at Chalk River. In conformity with the Third Provision of the Quebec Agreement the approval of the C.P.C. was required before action could be taken under these rules.

After discussion, the Committee approved action to give effect to the proposed procedure on declassification of information, subject to confirmation by the U.K. Government.

IV. Allocation of Material.

The Committee had before it (a) a letter from the Chairman of the C.D.T.; ⁴⁷ (b) a memorandum by the British members ⁴⁸ which had been circulated but not discussed at the last meeting of the Com-

⁴⁴ Ante, p. 1223.

⁴⁵ Not printed.

⁴⁶ Richard C. Tolman, scientific adviser to the Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer District.

⁴⁷ Ante, p. 1224.

⁴⁸ Ante, p. 1225.

mittee with a specific proposal which had since been added; and (c) a proposal by the U.S. members.⁴⁹

LORD HALIFAX said that the proposal of the British members was an endeavour to find an equitable and simple solution of the problem of allocation of material received by the C.D.T. since V-J Day. He regarded the proposal put forward by the U.S. members as inequitable, in that it gave a large allocation to the U.S. and none to the U.K. Such a proposal would be quite unacceptable to the British Government. He pointed out that in a period when there was intended to be full and effective cooperation in the field of atomic energy between the three Governments, the British Government was not only receiving no material, but was financing the acquisition of material by the U.S. through the Trust up to 50% of the supplies received.

GENERAL GROVES said that the principle of the U.S. members' proposal was allocation on the basis of need. This principle had first been laid down in paragraph (3) of the Quebec Agreement. The U.K., unlike the U.S., had no current needs for the operation of plants. Acceptance of the proposal put forward by the British members would mean a partial shutdown of the U.S. plants which required the maintenance of a long pipeline.

GENERAL GROVES asked that the present flow of material should be continued pending a decision.

LORD HALIFAX agreed, providing that a very early decision was reached.

After further discussion, the Committee agreed that the present flow of material should be continued pending a decision and appointed a group consisting of Mr. Dean Acheson, Dr. Bush, General Groves, Sir James Chadwick and Mr. Makins to work out a proposal for the allocation of material in the light of the discussion in the Committee. If agreement was reached in this group, it would not be necessary for the matter to be referred back to the Committee.

V. Revision of Agreements.

The Committee had before it a proposal by the British members that cooperation between the three Governments pending the outcome of the discussions with the U.N. Commission, should be based on conclusions recorded in the minutes of the Committee. A draft of such conclusions had been circulated.⁵⁰

In introducing this proposal LORD HALIFAX said that it had the effect of basing cooperation between the Governments on the Quebec Agreement and the Declaration of Trust, subject to such amendments as were necessary to apply these documents to the circumstances of the postwar period. The proposal would have substantially the same effect as the report submitted by the Sub-Committee at the last meeting.

⁴⁹ Supra.

⁵⁰ Ante, p. 1218.

LORD HALIFAX hoped that this proposal would meet the point which the Committee wished to reach, namely, to find a method by which the decision to favour the continuance of cooperation taken on November 16th, 1945 by the two Prime Ministers and the President could be implemented.

THE U.S. MEMBERS said that in the opinion of the U.S. legal advisers, the U.K. proposal did not surmount the difficulty presented by Article 102 of the Charter, since its effect was to change the basis of the cooperation established by the Quebec Agreement.

MR. PEARSON said that from the legal point of view the Canadian Government shared the opinion of the U.S. Government that the proposal of the U.K. members constituted a new agreement to which Article 102 of the Charter would apply.

THE U.K. MEMBERS pointed out that this left the decision taken on November 16th, 1945 by the two Prime Ministers and the President without effect. Cooperation was neither full nor effective at the present time. In particular, the U. K. was not receiving from the U. S. information it required for the execution of its atomic energy programme.

THE U.S. MEMBERS replied that they felt that nothing should be done which could in any way compromise the success of the discussions within the United Nations.

THE U.K. MEMBERS stated that the question was to give effect to the decision taken on November 16th, 1945, which in Mr. Attlee's mind almost certainly involved mutual assistance among the three countries in the development of their atomic energy programmes. Some months had elapsed since this decision was taken and the matter had now become pressing. It was desirable either that some arrangement could be come to or that instructions should be issued to enable the information required for the British programme to be made available.

After further discussion THE CHAIRMAN said that he did not feel that the Committee could carry the matter further than it had done, and suggested that it was now necessary to refer to the signatories of the original decision and ask them to communicate with each other as to the effect which should be given to it. He himself would immediately refer the matter to the President.

LORD HALIFAX agreed that the matter could not be carried further at the present meeting and said that he would report to the Prime Minister. He added that the course of the discussion had left him with a very uneasy feeling. Owing to various considerations on different planes, and political difficulties of one sort or another, there appeared to be a great danger that while we were trying to work out full United Nations collaboration, which might or might not succeed and might in any case take a long time, we were likely to impair the background of collaboration which had been drawn up between us around atomic energy. He thought that his report of this meeting would be found gravely disturbing in London.

MR. PEARSON said that he would refer the question to Mr. Mackenzie King.

The meeting then adjourned.

L. R. GROVES
Major General U.S.A.

Joint Secretaries

ROGER MAKINS
G. C. BATEMAN

Department of State Atomic Energy Files : Telegram

*The British Prime Minister (Attlee) to President Truman*⁵¹

TOP SECRET

LONDON, 16 April 1946—10:00 p. m.
[Received 16 April—9:50 p. m.]

29. Lord Halifax has reported to me what happened at the meeting of the atomic energy Combined Policy Committee of 15th April and Mr. Byrnes has no doubt made a report to you.

I am gravely disturbed at the turn which the Combined Policy Committee's discussions have taken over the implementation of the second and third paragraphs of the short document which you, Mr. MacKenzie King and I signed on 16th November last. I feel that unless you and we and the Canadian Government can reach a satisfactory working basis of cooperation at least to cover the period until we see the outcome of the discussions in the United Nations Commission on atomic energy, we in this country shall be placed in a position which, I am sure you will agree, is inconsistent with the document. As you know, the document stated that it was our desire that there should be "full and effective cooperation in the field of atomic energy between the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada"; and it seems to me that this cannot mean less than full interchange of information and a fair division of the material. Moreover, the interchange of information was implicit in the Washington declaration, paragraph 4 of which recognized as a matter of principle that our three countries possessed the knowledge required for the use of atomic energy, and paragraph 6 of which stated our willingness, subject to suitable safeguards, to share with other states information about the practical industrial applications. The declaration contained nothing about the sharing of information among ourselves and the clear indication is that this was already provided for. The wartime arrangements under which the major share of the development work and the construction and operation of full scale plants were carried out in the United States have naturally meant that technological and engineering information has accumulated in your hands, and if there is to be full and effective cooperation between us it seems essential that this information should be shared. I would therefore urge most strongly that the Combined Policy Committee should make a further attempt to work out a satisfactory basis of cooperation. In the last resort a solution might be that the heads of the three governments should each issue instructions for the interchange of information, including, in particular, the technical information which each of us requires for the implementation of immediate programmes.

⁵¹ Transmitted via United States military channels. Submitted to the President at 8:15 a. m., April 17.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*The Secretary of War (Patterson) to the Secretary of State*⁵²

TOP SECRET

WASHINGTON, April 17, 1946.

DEAR JIM: I am enclosing a narrative, with annexed papers, showing discussions and transactions that I had with the British last November in the field of atomic energy. The narrative was prepared by Captain Arneson who participated actively in all discussions and transactions.⁵³

You will note that the so-called "Memorandum of Intention" was prepared by the same people and at the same time as the short note of November 16, which speaks of "full and effective cooperation".⁵⁴ The "Memorandum of Intention" (Tab F), which was signed by Sir John Anderson and General Groves and was intended as a recommended guide for the preparation of a new agreement, states as follows:

"5. There shall be full and effective cooperation in the field of basic scientific research among the three countries. In the field of development, design, construction, and operation of plants such cooperation, recognized as desirable in principle, shall be regulated by such ad hoc arrangements as may be approved from time to time by the Combined Policy Committee as mutually advantageous".

⁵² The source text is date-stamped the Office of the Under Secretary, April 19; it bears no indication of having been examined by the Secretary of State.

⁵³ For text of the Arneson memorandum, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, p. 63.

⁵⁴ The document referred to here as the "Memorandum of Intention" is that signed by General Groves and Sir John Anderson on November 16, 1945; for text, see ibid., p. 75. The document referred to here as "the short note" is that signed by President Truman, Prime Minister Attlee, and Prime Minister Mackenzie King; for text, see telegram 3400, April 20, to London, p. 1235.

It seems clear to me, that quite apart from the course of action looking to United Nations control of atomic energy, our British friends could not have had the impression that "full and effective cooperation" included imparting industrial information and "know-how" to them.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT P. PATTERSON

855.646/4-1846 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Belgium (Kirk) to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET

BRUSSELS, April 18, 1946—2 p. m.

[Received 11:17 p. m.]

481. See Embassy's telegram 465, April 16, 6 p. m.⁵⁵ Replying to my question Foreign Minister⁵⁶ yesterday expressed increasing anxiety concerning possible cross questioning on subject of disposition of uranium resources of the Belgian Congo. He stated that Lalmand, Communist Minister of Food had, at a recent Cabinet meeting, questioned the Minister of Economic Affairs on the subject of uranium. M. Deveze had replied evasively, as had Spaak, but temporizing could not be prolonged indefinitely. The Minister assured me, however, that he would take no steps prior to consultation with British Ambassador and myself.

I think [we] should recognize that sources of uranium ores are naturally of world-wide interest, including much guessing on the part of the press. Also that any nation which possesses such deposits will be the object of envy by others. This may result in the popular mind placing an enhanced or fictitious value upon such resources. From the above it follows that the force of public opinion may demand answers to questions as to how their government proposes to handle such assets. In addition there will always exist the likelihood that other nations may inspire such inquiries designed either to gain information or to cause embarrassment.

As local newspapers are devoting more space to the Congo and its potentialities, and as questioning within the Cabinet has begun, it seems to me we should in consultation with British formulate our line of action. I feel that at some point it will be best policy to be honest and with concurrence of both Belgians and British to announce frankly ⁵⁵ Not printed.

⁵⁶ Paul-Henri Spaak.

what has been agreed to and why.⁵⁷ It may be preferable to have Belgians take initiative in any such announcement.

My main point is that the disclosure of our agreement may be forced by events and I suggest we should have a definite plan to forestall criticism. Perhaps the Acheson report on atomic energy,⁵⁸ which is not yet available to me, may contain features providing us an easy and frank solution. In any case I recommend the problem be studied to determine (a) what degree of secrecy is still required and (b) the question of timing if any announcement is to be made and by whom.

KIRK

811.2423/4-1846

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] April 18, 1946.

Lord Halifax called at his request to see the Secretary.

The Secretary opened the conversation regarding the request of the United Kingdom to have information and technical assistance necessary for the construction of an atomic energy plant in Great Britain made available to them. The Secretary and Lord Halifax discussed the sequence of events of the meeting of the three heads of Government in Washington last November when the Declaration on atomic energy was made.⁵⁹ The Secretary pointed out that the memorandum of intention did not provide for making available to the UK such information and assistance.⁶⁰ He said such action would weaken the effectiveness of the Atomic Energy Commission of the United Nations and that public sentiment in this country would be strongly opposed to such a move. He said he had discussed the matter with the President. Neither he nor the President were aware of the memorandum signed by Sir John Anderson and General Groves a few hours after the two Prime Ministers and the President had signed a memorandum, but that memorandum proves, and so states specifically, that cooperation shall be ⁵⁷ For text of the Memorandum of Agreement Regarding Control of Uranium between the United States, the United Kingdom, and Belgium, September 26, 1944, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. II, p. 1029.

⁵⁸ See the letter from the Secretary of State's Committee on Atomic Energy to the Secretary of State, March 17, p. 761, and footnote 90 thereto.

⁵⁹ For text of the Agreed Declaration by President Truman, Prime Minister Attlee of the United Kingdom, and Prime Minister King of Canada, signed at Washington, November 15, 1945, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 1504, or 60 Stat. (pt. 2) 1479.

⁶⁰ The "memorandum of intention" referred to by Mr. Byrnes is the document signed by the President and the two Prime Ministers on November 16, 1945; for text, see telegram 3400, April 20, to London, infra.

in the field of basic scientific research.⁶¹ The development, design, construction and operation of plants is considered separately and arrangements toward this end must be approved by the Combined Policy Committee. The construction of a plant in this country would bring bitter criticism and Congressional approval could probably not be obtained. It will be a little more difficult to get approval for a plant in Great Britain.

Lord Halifax said that he understood the Secretary's thoughts on the subject and suggested that a message to Attlee from the President along these lines be sent. He also suggested that if, while in Paris, the Secretary could find time to go to London to talk with Attlee about this it would be helpful. The Secretary said he might be able to do this.

841.646/4-2046 : Telegram

President Truman to the British Prime Minister (Attlee) ⁶²

TOP SECRET US URGENT WASHINGTON, April 20, 1946—4 p. m.

3400. The Secretary of State has informed me of the discussion in the Combined Policy Committee with reference to the request of the representatives of the United Kingdom that they be furnished with full information as to the construction and operation of the atomic energy plants in this country in order that they may proceed to construct a plant somewhere in the United Kingdom.

The Secretary advises me that the request is based upon the construction placed upon the memorandum dated November 16, 1945, signed by Harry S. Truman, C. R. Attlee and Mackenzie King. That memorandum reads as follows:

"1. We desire that there should be full and effective cooperation in the field of atomic energy between the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada.

"2. We agree that the Combined Policy Committee and the Combined Development Trust should be continued in a suitable form.

"3. We request the Combined Policy Committee to consider and recommend to us appropriate arrangements for this purpose."

I would regret it very much if there should be any misunderstanding by us as to this memorandum.

I think it is agreed by all of us that during the war under the Quebec Agreement the United States was not obligated to furnish ⁶¹ For text of the Groves-Anderson memorandum, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, p. 75.

⁶² Drafted by the Secretary of State.

to the United Kingdom in the post-war period the designs and assistance in construction and operation of plants necessary to the building of a plant. Therefore, the question is whether this situation was changed and such an obligation assumed by the United States under the language of the memorandum above quoted.

The language "full and effective cooperation" is very general. We must consider what was the intention of those who signed the memorandum. I must say that no one at any time informed me that the memorandum was proposed with the intention of having the United States obligate itself to furnish the engineering and operation assistance necessary for the construction of another atomic energy plant. Had that been done I would not have signed the memorandum.

That such a change in our obligation was not intended at the time is indicated by the working paper prepared by Sir John Anderson and General Groves, a few hours after the signing of a memorandum by you and me. I admit that I was not aware of the existence of this paper, but it shows conclusively that even in the minds of those gentlemen who prepared the agreement we signed, the words "full and effective cooperation" applied only to the field of basic scientific information and were not intended to require the giving of information as to construction and operation of plants whenever it was requested.

Paragraph 5 of that memorandum of intention reads as follows:

"There shall be full and effective cooperation in the field of basic scientific research among the three countries. In the field of development, design, construction, and operation of plants such cooperation, recognized as desirable in principle, shall be regulated by such ad hoc arrangements as may be approved from time to time by the Combined Policy Committee as mutually advantageous."

As to our entering at this time into an arrangement to assist the United Kingdom in building an atomic energy plant, I think it would be exceedingly unwise from the standpoint of the United Kingdom as well as the United States.

On November 15, the day prior to the signing of the memorandum first above referred to, the United Kingdom, Canada and the United States issued jointly a declaration of our intention to request the United Nations to establish a commission to control the production of atomic energy so as to prevent its use for military purposes. Our action led to the adoption later by the General Assembly of a resolution creating a commission for that purpose. I would not want to have it said that on the morning following the issuance of our declaration to bring about international control we entered into a new agreement, the purpose of which was to have the United States furnish the information as to construction and operation of plants which would enable the United Kingdom to construct another atomic energy plant. No such purpose was suggested by you or thought of by me.

We were inspired to issue our declaration by the demands of people the world over that there should be some international control of atomic energy. Ever since, we have been working toward that goal.

In view of our advocacy of international control, public sentiment in the United States would not permit us to construct another plant until the United Nations Commission has had an opportunity to report upon the subject. I believe that it would be more critical if at this time we entered into a new arrangement to assist the United Kingdom in designing, constructing and operating a plant.

I have written you frankly because I am sure that it is what you would have me do.

HARRY S. TRUMAN

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by the Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer District (Groves), to the Under Secretary of State (Acheson)

TOP SECRET

WASHINGTON, 29 April 1946.

In view of Ambassador Kirk's recent cables⁶³ concerning the feasibility of timely disclosure of our arrangements with the Belgium Government, I discussed the matter fully with Mr. Edgar Sengier, President of African Metals Corporation and Director of Union Minière du Haut Katanga.

As you know, Mr. Sengier participated in the arrangements which have been made between the Belgium Government and the United States and United Kingdom Governments. In large measure, he has been an influencing factor with respect to the policy followed by Mr. Spaak and other Belgian officials. For this reason, great weight should be placed on his recommendations. He feels that full disclosure at this time would be a mistake since such action would probably be followed by a movement to abrogate existing agreements both political and commercial. He further believes that any friction or conflict over such matters at this time will jeopardize our proposed action within the United Nations Organization. In view of these considerations, Mr. Sengier is convinced that Mr. Spaak will not wish to make any statement which will "muddy the waters" during the critical period of the next few months. I am in full agreement with Mr. Sengier. I suggest that a statement of the general tenor of that given below be transmitted to Ambassador Kirk for discussion with Mr. Spaak.

⁶³ See telegram 481, April 18, from Brussels, p. 1233.

The United States Government like that of Belgium is vitally concerned with the success of the United Nations Organization. The question of atomic energy is being seriously considered at present by the American, British and Canadian Governments. The proposals which will be submitted for consideration by the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission depend to a great extent on existing circumstances. Belgium should not take at the present time an attitude which might upset the proposed plan for an Atomic Development Authority under the United Nations.

The United States delegate to the United Nations Organization Atomic Energy Commission, Mr. Bernard Baruch, is presently studying this matter for the United States Government. The Congress is taking steps to enact domestic legislation consistent with international cooperation in this field. The cooperation of the Belgium Government is necessary to the fulfillment of these objectives. Mr. Sengier is acquainted with this matter and will be in Brussels on or about 12 May 1946.

L. R. GROVES

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by the Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer District (Groves), to the Under Secretary of State (Acheson) and the Director of the Office of Scientific Research and Development (Bush)

TOP SECRET

WASHINGTON, April 29, 1946.

1. In accordance with the arrangements we made after the last C.P.C. meeting,⁶⁴ I have met three times with Mr. Makins and Sir James Chadwick to work out a tentative proposal for the allocation of raw materials. Sir James Chadwick has submitted a statement (Inclosure No. 1) summarizing the proposed United Kingdom atomic energy program and his estimate of the raw material requirements therefor. I have prepared a similar statement (Inclosure No. 2) indicating the United States program and requirements. We have agreed upon an estimate of the minimum amount of raw materials to be received from the Belgian Congo (Inclosure No. 3).⁶⁵

2. Mr. Makins proposed initially, and argued most vehemently, that all materials received since VJ-Day should be allocated on a 50-50

⁶⁴ Reference is to the April 15 meeting of the Combined Policy Committee.

⁶⁵ The enclosures are not printed.

basis. I refused completely to consider such a proposal for the following reasons:

a. Such an allocation would require us to decrease the present scale of the operation of our plants.

b. Such a plan completely disregards the principle of need; it would permit the British to build up stockpiles of material for which they have no immediate requirement, but which would be available at some future date to supply plants which will be built with the advantage of all of our costly scientific and technological developments as well as directly or indirectly with our money.

c. Such a plan neglects the fact that the contributions to the Atomic Energy Program have not been on a 50-50 basis. The contributions of the British have been very small indeed.

d. Since any future war would involve a United States-United Kingdom joint military effort, we would again carry the major war burden. We should take advantage of our present production capacity to build up a strategic reserve of atomic weapons.

e. The supply of material is not sufficient to justify the building of additional plants by a nation destined to be a partner of ours in any major military operation.

f. The real purpose, in my opinion, is to build up a stock of materials to take advantage of potential commercial uses.

Mr. Makins then proposed a compromise plan which would permit the British to build up stocks which they claim they would require in 1946 if they started their program, and which would permit us to operate the Manhattan District plants approximately in accordance with our established program, but would not permit us to lay up stock. This plan is summarized below:

To Be Available to the United States:

All C.D.T. materials received as of 31 March 1946, by allocation of the C.P.C.	1134 short tons of contained U_3O_8
½-share of estimated deliveries of C.D.T. materials from 1 April to 31 December 1946, by allocation of the C.P.C.	1350 short tons
Materials captured in Europe by American troops, which, in accordance with established governmental policy, are already the property of the United States	525 short tons
By purchase from Canada, the current production rate of approximately	30 short tons per month

To Be Available to the United Kingdom:

½-share of estimated deliveries of C.D.T. materials from 1 April to 31 December 1946	1350 short tons
--	-----------------

As a part of the plan, we would deliver to the British 50 tons of Mallinckrodt oxide and 15 tons of uranium metal, which represents in all approximately 100 tons of contained U_3O_8 . The refining costs were not mentioned, but would, in accordance with previous practice, be reimbursed to us by the British.

3. On the basis of this plan, the United States would receive a total of 2752 tons for 1946. Subtracting from this total the 100 tons referred to above (50 tons of Mallinckrodt oxide and 15 tons of uranium metal) would leave us a total of 2652 tons for 1946 as against our stated requirement of 3060 tons.

4. This plan is not fair to the United States because it is contrary to the principle of "need". That principle, furthermore, should forbid the building of atomic energy plants by the British when raw materials are admittedly in short supply.

L. R. GROVES

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by the Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer District (Groves), to the Under Secretary of State (Acheson)

TOP SECRET

WASHINGTON, April 29, 1946.

1. In accordance with my promise of this morning, I have prepared this paper which you should read along with my earlier memorandum of today⁶⁶ before you hold your discussion with Lord Halifax.

2. In view of the limited supply of raw materials from proven ore sources, the British are anxious to build up stockpiles to meet a three-year requirement for their proposed plutonium piles and uranium-separation plants. They estimate this requirement to be 5400 tons of contained U_3O_8 . Our present requirements, to maintain present operating scales and to provide for such contingencies as process improvement and additional research, are 3060 tons for 1946 and 230 tons per month thereafter. Since the present estimate of proven high grade reserves in the Belgian Congo is approximately 7700 tons, it is obvious that the British program cannot be carried out without effecting a shut-down of our own plants in about two years.

3. From the point of view of joint American-British security, it would appear to be inadvisable to curtail our capacity for producing atomic bombs in order to permit the building up of stockpiles of uranium ore in England. Moreover, it would be economically wasteful not to take advantage of the productive capacity of the costly, complex, and highly integrated investment which the Manhattan District represents. It would be even more wasteful to attempt to duplicate our plants in England when, admittedly, there are not sufficient foreseeable reserves of high grade raw material to satisfy even our own requirements for the next three or four years.

⁶⁶ Supra.

4. Another question which arises is the military advisability of constructing large-scale plants in the United Kingdom. It is a foregone conclusion that, in the event of any future war, such plants most certainly would be neutralized, if not completely destroyed, during the first few days of hostilities because of their strategically poor location. It would appear to be much more advisable, if the British are to build any such plants, that they be located in such a place as not to render them susceptible of immediate destruction by the enemy. Canada, for instance, appears to be a more desirable location from the standpoint of military security.

5. Since the Congo is at the present time the only commercially-exploitable source of uranium ore, the desire of the British to share the output on a 50-50 basis is not in consonance with the atomic energy program as a whole. That the United States made by far the major contribution to the success of the program is not disputable. In spite of all the discussions about the commercial application of atomic energy, its overwhelming importance for many years to come will be its use as a military weapon. The United States, therefore, is still continuing to produce atomic bombs which, if they are ever to be used, would be used against a common enemy. Commercial application of atomic energy can come only when international control has been definitely assured. Our present predominance in the military atomic energy field will undoubtedly help to bring about such international control. Such stockpiles as the British intend to build up may well be utilized for commercial application at that time. A decision to divide the raw materials on a 50-50 basis would, in effect, be penalizing the United States for using its raw material to insure peace, while permitting the British to stockpile their raw material for future peaceful uses.

6. Turning over to the British of stockpiles of raw material, as well as information on our scientific and technological developments of the past four years, will materially alter the atomic energy situation as it exists today. As long as we have expectations or hopes that the United Nations Organization will attempt to achieve a solution to the problem of control of atomic energy, it seems a mistake to weaken the hands of the United States in securing a satisfactory solution to the problem by strengthening the hands of any other nation including Great Britain, as to do so will make our task of achieving a satisfactory solution much more difficult.

L. R. GROVES

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum for the Files, by Mr. John M. Hancock of the United States Delegation to the Atomic Energy Commission ⁶⁷

[WASHINGTON,] May 1, 1946.

[Here follow comments on Mr. Hancock's conference with Under Secretary of State Acheson on April 30; this portion of the memorandum is printed on page 780.]

Gen. Groves had spoken to Mr. Baruch on Sunday,⁶⁸ regarding a new British request that they be given one-half of all the material now being acquired from the Belgian Congo and Canada so that when they do complete their plant, they will have a stockpile. The present ore in sight now in the Congo is about 7,500 tons which, in view of our present plant capacity, would last about three years. The British have been paying one-half of the cost. They see this mine running out, and they are making a strong plea to get one-half of this ore as it is coming in.

You will recall that there had been a previous British request that we give them the technical know-how and that we supply scientists to proceed with the construction of an atomic energy plant in Britain. The military had opposed it and for the moment the Policy Board ⁶⁹ has opposed it. Byrnes was to see the President the day after he saw our group.

The Quebec agreement would provide that we would not use the atomic bomb against each other, that we would not use it against a third party without the others consenting, that we would not communicate it to others. The agreement wasn't in the terms previously described by Mr. Byrnes. It would not give the President control at the end of the war, except that his control was assumed to be a reasonable one and was to relate to our having the advantage in the commercial element which would flow from the great expenditure we have made in time and effort in the war. Unhappily, nobody knows whether our Government is going to stand on the fact that Truman did not know of the Quebec agreement when he made his new agreement describing in such general terms as full and effective cooperation. The result, of course, is that the door is wide open for the British.

As to the second point as to sharing the ore from the Congo and Canada received after VJ Day, the Joint Policy Board ruled that the British had gone along quietly with the situation since the end of the war and, as I recall, they signed their demand on April 16 of this year, with the result that the Policy Board has said that they have waived all rights on any material prior to the time of their asserting their claims. The Joint Policy Board has left the matter with Groves to work it out in some way with the British.

⁶⁷ This memorandum consists of notes on Mr. Hancock's meetings with Under Secretary of State Acheson, Secretary of War Patterson, General Groves, and Senator McMahon on April 30 and May 1. A portion of this document dealing with the international control of atomic energy is printed on p. 780.

⁶⁸ April 28.

⁶⁹ The body under reference is presumably the Combined Policy Committee.

Groves showed me his whole arguments against the case and I think he will try to make some sort of a deal, but I also think the cards are stacked against him because Bob Patterson and Acheson both feel the British have a just claim. There are some grounds for argument, but I think both men are in the mood to rule Groves out because they feel the British have a good case.

Let me interrupt here to state what Patterson told me this morning. The British are asking for all of the secret information. Patterson has said they want to send 100 men over here, maybe have us send 100 men over there to help them build the plant. Patterson says there is no trace of an obligation to do any such thing, and so far as he is concerned, he is not going to do it. To my mind that is going to operate to slow up the British request for the material, and certainly they are not going to be in a position which will give them an opportunity to interfere with our action in the United Nations Conference or to handicap us.

I think this now covers the essential facts with regard to the agreements with the British.

[Here follow additional comments on meetings with Messrs. Acheson, Patterson, and Groves, and Senator McMahon; subjects treated include international control, domestic legislation, and negotiations with the United Kingdom.]

855.646/4-1846 : Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in Belgium (Kirk)

TOP SECRET

WASHINGTON, May 2, 1946—2 p. m.

458. Reference your telegram 481 April 18 British have been considering this same problem in London and here and we have discussed it with them. I share your apprehensions that disclosure of our agreement may be forced by events and that so far as possible we should have a definite plan to forestall criticism. However, pending clarification of basic questions of policy especially as affecting United Nations action on atomic energy, it is our hope that Spaak will not be forced to make disclosures. If at any time he feels that he cannot further postpone some kind of public statement we hope that he can give you and your British colleague sufficient notice so that we and

British can have time to consult with Spaak and determine whether we need to take any concurrent action.⁷⁰

ACHESON

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State (Acheson) to President Truman

TOP SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] May 6, 1946.

You will recall that the Secretary spoke with you about a meeting of the Combined Policy Committee at which there was discussion regarding the meaning of the memorandum of November 16 initialed by you and the Prime Ministers of the United Kingdom and Canada. This involves interpretation of the phrase "full and effective cooperation in the field of atomic energy". The attached letter from Mr. Stone, Counselor of the Canadian Embassy, is directed to that point. Mr. Stone and the Canadian Ambassador have told me that Mr. Attlee communicated with Mr. Mackenzie King urging him to take a strong position on the interpretation of this document. Mr. King declined to do so and this letter is, I believe, a method of escaping from the predicament of undertaking any interpretation at all.

DEAN ACHESON

[Enclosure]

The Counselor of the Canadian Embassy (Stone) to the Under Secretary of State (Acheson)

WASHINGTON, April 29, 1946.

DEAR MR. ACHESON: You will recall that at the last meeting of the Combined Policy Committee it was decided to ask for clarification of the interpretation of the Agreement of November 16th between the President, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the Prime Minister of Canada concerning "full and effective co-operation in the field of atomic energy".

In the Ambassador's absence in Canada, I am instructed to say that Mr. Mackenzie King's understanding of the Agreement in this respect is indicated by the fact that the Canadian authorities, both during the war and in the postwar period, have provided the United States authorities with full information on all Canadian activities in this field. In particular, the United States authorities have had access to full information as to developments at Chalk River. In fact, a United States official is stationed there permanently and is in a position to secure a complete picture of the work going forward in the plant.

⁷⁰ In telegram 530, May 2, Mr. Kirk reported that the views expressed in the present telegram had been transmitted orally to Mr. Spaak, who had concurred in the desirability of delaying a statement and had agreed to inform the United States and United Kingdom Ambassadors in advance of any action on his part (855.646/5-546).

Yours very sincerely,

THOMAS A. STONE

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by Mr. Dean Acheson, Dr. Vannevar Bush, and General Leslie R. Groves⁷¹ to the United States Members of the Combined Policy Committee

TOP SECRET

WASHINGTON, May 7, 1946.

Out of the discussions of the Sub-committee, consisting of Acting Secretary of State Dean Acheson, Dr. Vannevar Bush, and Major General Leslie R. Groves on the American side, and Mr. Roger Makins and Dr. James Chadwick on the British side, appointed by the Combined Policy Committee for the purpose of discussing allocation of raw materials, has come a general understanding of what will be a satisfactory plan to the British. This plan contemplates that all raw materials received by the United States as of March 31, 1946, will be regarded as allocated to the United States, but that, for the remainder of the current year, the Combined Policy Committee shall allocate 1350 tons to the British and 1350 tons to the United States. It is estimated that such allocation would dispose of all materials becoming available to the Combined Development Trust from April 1 to December 31, 1946. The United States will make available 50 tons of Mallinckrodt oxide and 15 tons of uranium metal which represents in all approximately 100 tons of contained U_3O_8 . The refining costs of this latter material will be reimbursed to the United States by the United Kingdom.

The American members propose and believe that the British will accept the qualification that the supplies to be allocated to either nation during the remainder of 1946 will not exceed 1350 tons of contained U_3O_8 . They also propose to include a statement to the effect that the "allocation will be made without prejudice to establishing a different basis for subsequent years". It is believed that the British will probably accept this proposal also.

⁷¹ The Under Secretary of State; the Director of the Office of Scientific Research and Development; and the Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer District, respectively.

In our opinion, the British will not be satisfied with any allocation materially less than the proposed compromise, and a failure to reach agreement on this basis will threaten the future of the Combined Development Trust and of our mutually-advantageous collaboration with them in the field of raw materials. In view of this, and of the necessity of making an allocation, we believe that an allocation on the basis of the proposed compromise is the best obtainable.

The undersigned believe it is desirable that discussions with the British be continued with the purpose of reviewing the advisability of erecting atomic energy plants in England. It is not known, of course, whether any such plants will be built in the near future. It has been pointed out by General Groves that, from the point of view of joint American-British security, it is inadvisable to spread the existing short supply of uranium ores unnecessarily. In the event of any future war, such plants in England most certainly would be neutralized, destroyed, or captured during the first few days of hostilities because of their strategically poor location. Moreover, the Army feels that if the British are to build any such plants, they should be so located as to render them less susceptible of immediate destruction or capture. From the standpoint of military security, Canada is a much more desirable location.⁷²

DEAN ACHESON
VANNEVAR BUSH
L. R. GROVES

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by a Subcommittee of the Combined Policy Committee to the Committee

TOP SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] May 13, 1946.

Pursuant to the action taken at the April 15, 1946 meeting of the Combined Policy Committee, the undersigned Sub-Committee which was appointed to work out a proposal on the allocation of raw materials has considered the matter and agreed as follows:

(1) All raw materials received by the United States as of March 31, 1946 and subject to allocation by the Combined Policy Committee, and those materials captured in Europe, shall be regarded as allocated to the United States.

(2) For the remainder of the current year, April 1, 1946 to December 31, 1946 the Combined Policy Committee shall allocate 1,350 tons of contained U_3O_8 to the United Kingdom and 1,350 tons to the United States. The supplies to be allocated to either nation during the remainder of 1946 shall not exceed these amounts. This allocation is to be made without prejudice to establishing a different basis of allocation for subsequent years.

⁷² The handwritten approvals of the President (July 10, 1946) and Secretary of War Patterson (undated) appear at the bottom of the source text.

(3) In addition, the United States will transfer to the United Kingdom under suitable arrangement 50 tons of Mallinckrodt oxide and 15 tons of uranium metal.

ROGER MAKINS
J. CHADWICK
VANNEVAR BUSH
DEAN ACHESON
LESLIE R. GROVES

855.646/5-1846 : Telegram

The Ambassador in Belgium (Kirk) to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET NIACT
US URGENT

BRUSSELS, May 18, 1946—3 p. m.
[Received 8:33 p. m.]

594. Prime Minister called meeting this morning British Ambassador, Spaak, Minister of Colonies Godding and myself on subject Government's reply to Libois⁷³ interpellation (my 582, May 15, 8 a. m., and 586, May 16, 7 p. m.).⁷⁴ Van Acker states reply must be given Wednesday 22 May at 2 p. m., local time. Van Acker calm and unflurried and proposes simple and natural treatment of topic. He believes it definitely preferable to take this action now rather than to permit pressure to grow by continuing to refuse statement. Question and reply may provoke some discussion but combination Van Acker and Spaak will keep situation well in hand in my opinion.

Libois question follows "I wish to have precise information on the intervention of the Government (during the war and at present) in questions relative to the uranium deposits of the Congo. I must insist on the importance of the question of atomic energy, on its immediate interest, and on the responsibilities of the Belgian authorities both to the nation and before world opinion."

The Government intends to reply in a general manner and if in the course of the debate questions of a really definite nature are put concerning the destination of the Congo uranium during the war and whether an agreement on this subject existed, they will reply:

1. That the regime applied to uranium during the war was similar to that for all other raw materials of strategic importance such as copper, cobalt, rubber, et cetera.

⁷³ A Communist Senator.

⁷⁴ Neither printed.

2. That it was with the knowledge of the Government that the Union Miniere sold uranium to the UK and USA in the same way as other raw materials and the contract had a certain duration. (If pressed as to the period of the contract they will say this is a matter which will depend on the action of the Atomic Commission of UNO).

3. That the commercial contract made on this occasion had the approval of the Government because they knew that if Belgium had need of a certain quantity of raw material for her own research requirements it [would] be made available.

4. The Government has in mind legislation for controlling the use of uranium but that such legislation can only be effective when the Atomic Commission of the UNO has announced its conclusions.

The above reply was formulated with full agreement all five of us and Van Acker perfectly agreeable both British Ambassador and I transmit it to our Governments. Also quite willing you should make any statements in conformity this position which you may deem advisable. I will of course give you prompt notice of course of debate in Senate here and would appreciate notice of any action you may intend to take.⁷⁵

My own view is that some discussion by press is to be expected with Communist elements possibly critical. Of interest however, is fact that one Socialist Senator has filed formal question in general similar to Libois indicating increasing curiosity.

KIRK

811.2423/6-1446

Memorandum by the Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer District (Groves), to the Joint Chiefs of Staff

RESTRICTED

WASHINGTON, June 1, 1946.

Subject: Invitation to Mr. Trygve Lie to Attend Operation CROSSROADS.

1. It is recommended that an invitation to attend operation CROSSROADS be extended promptly to Mr. Trygve Lie, Secretary-General of the United Nations. The commander, Joint Task Force One, has told me that the invitation to Mr. Lie must be approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

⁷⁵ Mr. Kirk reported in telegram 622, May 22, that the Senate interpellation of that afternoon was quiet and that agreements between Belgium, the United States, and the United Kingdom had not been questioned. He stated that the statement by the Belgian Government had apparently at least temporarily relieved the pressure for information on the subject. (855.646/5-2246)

2. I have been informed by Mr. Baruch that Mr. Lie desires such an invitation, although he probably will not accept it, and further that issuance of such an invitation will be helpful to the negotiations which Mr. Baruch is about to enter upon in the Atomic Energy Commission.⁷⁶

L. R. GROVES

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*The British Prime Minister (Attlee) to President Truman*⁷⁷

TOP SECRET URGENT
PERSONAL

[LONDON,] 7 June 1946—12:36 a. m.
[Received 2:15 p. m.]

3019. Your telegram of the 20 April about the exchange of information on atomic energy.⁷⁸

I have held back my reply until I had been able to discuss the matter with Halifax and with MacKenzie King.

I should like first to go back a little over past history. In the early years of the war, in 1940 and 1941, our scientists were amongst the first to become convinced of the enormous military possibilities of the atomic energy project, and it will not, I think, be denied that both then and later, if we had been willing to face the diversion of industrial effort that would have been needed, we had the resources and the scientific and technical skill that would have enabled us to embark on the development of the project in this country. But to do that we should have had to reduce our efforts in other directions in which we were already heavily engaged, both in comparatively new but highly important fields of development such as radar and jet propulsion, and in the more established forms of war production. To do so at that time would not have been opportune, particularly so long as the threat of invasion lasted and while our principal centres of production were subject to air attack. Nevertheless, if we had continued to stand alone, I do not believe that we could have afforded to neglect so revolutionary a development and to gamble on the chance that the war would end without our enemies succeeding in developing it. At whatever cost, we should have been bound to make the attempt to develop it in this country. Whether or not we should have succeeded before the war ended, we should certainly have gained much knowledge and experience.

⁷⁶ The Joint Chiefs of Staff informed the Secretary of State, through the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee, on June 14 that they had no objection to an invitation being extended to the Secretary General. Mr. Lie was invited on June 20, but declined on June 24 due to commitments in New York and in Europe. (811.2423/6-1946, 6-2046, 501.BC Atomic/6-2646)

⁷⁷ Transmitted through military channels to the White House as telegram 3019.

⁷⁸ Ante, p. 1235.

Fortunately, however, it was not necessary to make the choice. President Roosevelt had become interested in the idea of an atomic weapon and had decided to engage upon it all the vast resources of the United States. In October, 1941, he wrote to Mr. Churchill and proposed that any extended efforts in this field should be coordinated or even jointly conducted.⁷⁹ It was thus possible for us to decide that we would concentrate on assisting to the best of our ability the development of the enterprise in the United States. It is not for me to try to assess what that assistance was worth, but we gave it in the confident belief that the experience and knowledge gained in America would be made freely available to us, just as we made freely available to you the results of research in other fields such as radar and jet propulsion, on which, as a result of this decision, we were able to concentrate. It was part of that wise division of effort and pooling of resources which was made possible by the system of reciprocal aid which, without attempting to compare and measure the aggregate contribution on each side, enabled both countries to concentrate their efforts on those fields where they seemed likely to be most productive. I must repeat that, but for that system, we should have been forced to adopt a different distribution of our resources in this country, which would not have been so advantageous to the common interest.

As I have said, we entered on these arrangements in a spirit of partnership and in the belief that both countries would pool the experience which they gained. It was, in fact, later expressly provided in the Quebec agreement that there should be complete interchange of ideas and information on all sections of the project between members of the policy committee and their immediate technical advisers, and, at the lower level, interchange of information in the field of design and construction of large scale plants was not ruled out but was made subject to ad hoc arrangements to be approved by the Combined Policy Committee. At the same time it was left to the President of the United States to specify the terms on which any postwar advantages of an industrial or a commercial character should be dealt with as between the United States and Great Britain.

In the latter days of the war, we considered more than once whether under the existing arrangements we were making the best use of our resources and whether the time had not come when we ought to undertake a policy of more active development in this country if we were not to fall too far behind in a field of development in which we had, but a short time before, been in the forefront. But, on each occasion, after full deliberation, we came back to the principle of the Quebec agreement that the earliest possible realization of the project must come first and before any separate national advantage and that, while our scientists could still contribute anything to the work in the United States, they should not be withdrawn. We felt that we could rely on the provisions of the agreement to ensure that we should not suffer, that we should be given full access at the highest level to the knowledge of all sections of the project, and that the dissemination of such information to lower level would be limited only by considerations of security.

⁷⁹ President Roosevelt's letter of October 11, 1941, and Prime Minister Churchill's reply are described in Hewlett and Anderson, p. 259.

This situation continued until the goal had been reached and the first bomb dropped. At that point, we considered, we might reasonably prepare to undertake a more active programme of development in this country and might expect to be able to make use of the experience which had been gained up to that point in the joint enterprise.

Almost immediately the war came to an end, and we were told that until new arrangements could be concluded, the supply of information must be stopped. When I visited Washington, therefore, in November, it was an important part of my purpose to secure that, as President Roosevelt had promised Mr. Churchill at Hyde Park in September 1944, the cooperation which had existed during the war should be continued and that it should be full and effective.⁸⁰ I was very much reassured, therefore, when you agreed that this should be so and that the Combined Policy Committee should be asked to recommend arrangements to that end. It seemed a natural and a logical continuation of the previous agreement that the arrangements for peace time collaboration would cover at least the same ground as before and would take account of the fact that this country was now free to devote a substantial industrial effort to the atomic energy project. The matter was discussed, in the first instance, at a conference held in Judge Patterson's room at the War Department and afterwards in greater detail by Sir John Anderson with General Groves and Mr. George Harrison, and together they drew up the memorandum to which you refer. I can find no support in the paragraph of that document, which you quote, for the view that there was no obligation to exchange information about the construction of large scale plants. It is indeed clearly laid down that, while the principle was not in doubt, the best means of giving effect to it should be considered further by the Combined Policy Committee.

⁸⁰ The pertinent portion of the Aide-Mémoire of conversation between President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill, September 18, 1944, is printed in Foreign Relations, The Conference of Berlin (The Potsdam Conference), 1945, vol. II, p. 1371. Additional documentation on the agreement, which was negotiated following the Quebec Conference of 1944, will appear in a subsequent Foreign Relations volume.

Such discussions did, in fact, take place and lasted many weeks. Finally, a unanimous report was submitted to the Combined Policy Committee by a Subcommittee on which your Government was represented by General Groves. The draft agreement which the Subcommittee drew up provided that there was to be full and effective cooperation in the exchange of information required for the development programmes of the two countries. We made it clear in the discussions that our own programme would include the construction of large scale plants in this country.

When the Subcommittee's report was considered by the Combined Policy Committee, it came as a surprise to us to find that your Government was not prepared to enter into any agreement, nor to proceed on the basis of the agreements previously reached between us, nor yet to agree that cooperation should, in fact, continue by administrative action. The clause of our agreement, signed in November, by which the Combined Policy Committee was to recommend the arrangements required for continued cooperation has thus remained a dead letter.

I cannot agree with the argument that to continue such cooperation would be inconsistent with the public declaration on the control of atomic energy which you and MacKenzie King and I issued in November. That our three Governments stand on a special relationship to one another in this field is a matter of record and was, in fact, the reason why we took the initiative in issuing the declaration. It is surely not inconsistent with its purpose that the cooperation begun during the war should continue during the peace unless and until it can be replaced by a wider system. And until recently, at any rate, I think it is fair to say that it was generally assumed in both our countries that this cooperation was continuing. And, indeed, in one important part of the field it is: I am referring to our joint control of raw materials. We have not thought it necessary to abandon that—in my opinion, quite rightly. Why then should we abandon all further pooling of information?

You evidently feel that it would be inconsistent with the declaration issued at Washington that another atomic energy plant should be constructed and that the United States should assist in its construction. The purpose of the Washington declaration was to promote the development of atomic energy for peaceful ends and to ensure that it should not be used as a means of destruction. It was certainly not intended to stifle all further development in other countries, any more than it was suggested that the development which has already taken place in the United States should be abandoned. We have made no secret of the fact that we intend to produce fissile material, though naturally the use which we shall make of it will be much affected by the deliberations of the Atomic Energy Commission.

In the meantime, I can see nothing in the Washington declaration, or in the assembly resolution, which requires us to dissolve our partnership, either in the exchange of information or in the control of raw materials, until it can be merged in a wider partnership, I should be sorry to think that you did not agree with this view.

I have set out the position fully and frankly as I am sure you would have wished me to do. I realize that an additional complication may arise from the fact that the McMahan bill containing stringent provisions about the disclosure of information has within the last few days been passed by the Senate.⁸¹

I would nevertheless most strongly urge that for the reasons I have given our continuing cooperation over raw materials shall be balanced by an exchange of information which will give us, with all proper precautions in regard to security, that full information to which we believe that we are entitled, both by the documents and by the history of our common efforts in the past.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

The Acting Secretary of State to the British Minister Counselor (Makins)

TOP SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] July 1, 1946.

MY DEAR MR. MAKINS: In our recent conversation, we discussed the effect which passage of S. 1717 (the McMahan Bill) might have on the operations of the Combined Development Trust.

Careful perusal of S. 1717, as it passed the Senate, indicates that it does not contain any provision which automatically affects the Combined Development Trust or which makes it mandatory for the proposed Atomic Energy Commission to take action which would affect adversely the Trust Agreement. It is true that the independent commission contemplated in the bill might conceivably proceed in such a manner as to affect adversely the Trust Agreement. In assessing the likelihood of such a development, however, two important considerations should be understood. The first is that it could result only from affirmative action by the commission. The second is that the proposed commission will undoubtedly be informed in detail about the Combined Development Trust. To interfere with the operations of the Trust, therefore, the commission would find it necessary to take positive action with full realization that its course was not in harmony with the intent of the Trust Agreement.

⁸¹ For information on legislation on atomic energy in 1946, see Hewlett and Anderson, chapter 14.

In the event that an independent commission of the kind provided for in S. 1717 is ultimately established, the situation will not differ from many others in which it is necessary to coordinate the policies and programs of two or more Departments or agencies of this government in matters affecting the foreign relations of the United States. This coordination has been achieved with reasonable success in the past and I am confident that it can be achieved in this matter.

Sincerely yours,

DEAN ACHESON

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by the Joint Secretaries of the Combined Policy Committee (Groves, Makins, Bateman)

TOP SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] July 26, 1946.

STATEMENT TO COMBINED POLICY COMMITTEE ON COMBINED DEVELOPMENT TRUST FINANCIAL POLICY

1. Under the Agreement and Declaration of Trust, the Combined Development Trust is directed, among other things, (2(e)), to "acquire and undertake the treatment and disposal of uranium and thorium and uranium and thorium materials."⁸²

2. Under paragraph 3(I) "The Trust shall carry out its functions under the direction and guidance of the Combined Policy Committee, and as its agent, and all uranium and thorium and all uranium and thorium ores and supplies and other property acquired by the Trust shall be held by it in trust for the two Governments jointly, and disposed of or otherwise dealt with in accordance with the direction of the Combined Policy Committee."

3. The financial provision of the Trust Agreement is as follows: "All funds properly required by the Trust for the performance of its functions shall be provided as to one-half by the Government of the United States of America and the other half by the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland."

4. The only source from which the Trust has received significant quantities of raw material is the Belgian Congo under the Tripartite Agreement signed on September 26th, 1944.⁸³

⁸² For text of the Agreement and Declaration of Trust, signed by President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill on June 13, 1944, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. II, p. 1026.

⁸³ For text, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. II, pp. 1029-1030.

5. The quantities received by the Trust from this source and their cost, including freight, are approximately as follows:—

- (1) Before V–J Day.
293 short tons of contained U_3O_8 $885, 468.
- (2) Between V–J Day and March 31st.
850 short tons of contained U_3O_8 $2, 582, 260.
- (3) Since April 1st.
1,969 short tons of contained U_3O_8 $7, 113, 956.

6. An agreement on allocation of raw material until the end of 1946 was reached on May 13th.⁸⁴ This allocation was retroactive to V–J Day. Pending this agreement, all the material had been shipped to the United States.

7. The British Government have raised the question of the financial consequences of the agreement about allocation. They have pointed out that the expenditure of the Trust is of three kinds:

- (1) Administrative.
- (2) Research, Development, and Geological Survey work.
- (3) Acquisition of Raw Material.

No issue arises on the expenditure in the first two categories which, it is agreed, should continue to be borne in equal shares by the two Governments. Nor does any issue arise in regard to the material shipped to the United States of America prior to V–J Day, which was used in the production of weapons against the common enemy.

8. The only question raised by the British Government concerns the raw material which was received from the Congo since V–J Day and which was the subject of the allocation agreement of May 13th. They believe that the right course is for each Government to pay the Trust for the raw material which that Government has actually received or will receive under the allocation agreement. Otherwise one Government is in the position of financing the acquisition of material by the other. The British Government suggest that this is inequitable, and that, after the end of the war, and, the termination of the special arrangements between the two Governments for Lend-Lease and Reciprocal Aid, the fair principle is that each Government should pay for the raw material which is allocated to it.

9. This matter was brought up before the trustees of the Combined Development Trust but they agreed that it was not a matter lying within the scope of their authority.

⁸⁴ Ante, p. 1246.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Minutes of the Meeting of the Combined Policy Committee at the Department of State, July 31, 1946, 10:30 a. m.

TOP SECRET

Present: Members:

The Acting Secretary of State (representing the Secretary of State) (in the Chair)

The Secretary of War
Field Marshal Lord Wilson*By Invitation:*The Right Honorable Lord Inverchapel ⁸⁵Mr. Herbert Marks ⁸⁶*Secretariat:*

Major General L. R. Groves

Mr. Roger Makins

Mr. George Bateman

I. *Minutes of the Meeting of April 15, 1946.*⁸⁷

The Minutes were approved.

Mr. Makins pointed out with reference to Section III of the Minutes that the proposed procedure on declassification of information regarding atomic energy had been approved at the last meeting subject to confirmation by the U. K. Government.

This confirmation had subsequently been received.

II. Appointment of Lord Inverchapel as U. K. Member of the Combined Policy Committee.

The Committee approved the appointment of Lord Inverchapel as a U. K. member of the Combined Policy Committee in succession to Lord Halifax.

III. Appointment of Mr. Gordon Munro as U. K. Member of the Combined Development Trust.

The Committee approved this appointment.

IV. Confirmation of Agreement on Allocation of Raw Materials.

The Committee had before it a memorandum of agreement on the allocation of raw materials which had been drawn up and signed on ⁸⁵ British Ambassador in the United States.⁸⁶ Special Assistant to the Under Secretary of State.⁸⁷ Ante, p. 1227.

May 13th by Mr. Makins, Sir James Chadwick, Dr. Bush, Mr. Acheson and General Groves in accordance with the decision of the Committee at its last meeting.⁸⁸

The Committee confirmed this agreement.

V. Combined Development Trust Financial Policy.

The Committee had before it a paper by the Joint Secretaries on this subject, the text of which is annexed to these Minutes.⁸⁹ There were two questions; whether the principle should be adopted that a government should pay for the raw material it received through the Combined Development Trust; and secondly, if this principle were accepted, from what date it should be applicable.

After discussion:

The Committee agreed that the principle should be adopted that a government should bear the cost of the raw material which it received through the Combined Development Trust; that this principle should be applied as from V-J Day; and that the Combined Development Trust should be guided accordingly.

VI. Other Business.

The attention of the Committee was drawn to the passage by Congress of an Atomic Energy Bill.

The Secretary of War said that he would have a study made of the possible effects of this legislation on the activities of the Combined Policy Committee and the Combined Development Trust.

The Chairman said that, in the first instance, this concerned the United States members of the Committee, but the United Kingdom and Canadian members would be kept informed on the matter.

The Committee then adjourned.

(These minutes have not as yet been formally approved by the Committee.)⁹⁰

Joint Secretaries

L. R. GROVES
Major General, U.S.A.

ROGER MAKINS
G. C. BATEMAN

⁸⁸ Ante, p. 1246.

⁸⁹ Ante, p. 1254.

⁹⁰ The minutes were approved by the Committee at its next meeting, February 3, 1947.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

Memorandum by the Commanding General, Manhattan Engineer District (Groves), to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET

WASHINGTON, October 24, 1946.

Because of the importance of the Congo to the atomic energy program of the United States, it is essential to maintain as friendly relations as possible and to keep developments in the Congo and Belgium under close observation. The situation in these areas, as it affects the atomic energy program, has been the subject of numerous dispatches from Ambassador Kirk to the Department of State.

Such dispatches have indicated attempts by Communist-inspired elements to infiltrate and to "organize" workers in the Congo. They have also indicated certain economic and social unrest in the area which might be deterred through positive action by this country. To date, in cooperation with the Belgians, we have been able to operate to our mutual benefit and satisfaction and generally any developments adverse to our interests have been forestalled.

In view of the foregoing, as well as the planned expansion of our activities in the Congo, it appears that our interests would be further served by stationing additional trained observers in the Congo. The situation in Belgium is thoroughly and accurately covered. As for the Congo, however, we are at present relying on reports from Union Minière in conjunction with reports from occasional visitors from this country.

Direct "on-the-spot" reports from the Congo by one or two consular officials who are apprised of the importance of the area in the atomic energy program and who while devoting a major portion of their time to normal State Department activities, would yet serve as a source of information for atomic energy matters, would be of measurable value in assuring the success of the program. Specifically, the staff at Leopoldville might be increased to permit the office there to devote a portion of its time to surveys and reports of particular interest to our affairs. Of even greater importance would be a consular office at Elisabethville, operated by an officer who, preferably, speaks French and who has a working knowledge of mining or geology. Such a consul could provide the badly needed surveillance of activities in the Jadotville area and would enable us to be kept as well informed as the British are through their consul at Elisabethville. In addition, we should have consular representation at all points in the Belgian Congo at which British or Russians representatives are stationed.

I suggest, therefore, that, if practicable, consideration be given to augmenting the consular staff in the Congo.

L. R. GROVES

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

*The British Prime Minister (Attlee) to President Truman*⁹¹

TOP SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] December 17, 1946.

You will remember that on 6th [7th] June this year I telegraphed to you,⁹² urging that steps should be taken to establish full and effective co-operation in the field of atomic energy between our two countries. I have not pressed you earlier for a reply to that message because I have been mindful of your difficulties arising from the passage through Congress of United States legislation for the control of atomic energy. Now, however, your act has been passed and the Commission which is to control these matters in your country has been appointed. Moreover, it is evident that the establishment of an effective system of international control is likely at best to take some time. In the meanwhile, however, we attach the highest importance to the continuation, in an effective form, of co-operation in the field of atomic energy, both with the United States and with Canada. I feel bound, therefore, to ask you now how in your view the understanding which we reached together in Washington a year ago can best be put into effect.

Department of State Atomic Energy Files

President Truman to the British Prime Minister (Attlee)

TOP SECRET

WASHINGTON [December 28, 1946.]

I wish to acknowledge the receipt of your message of December 17 concerning cooperation in the field of atomic energy between our two countries. Unhappily the exchange of communications between us earlier in the year revealed a considerable difference in understanding as to the purpose and meaning of the memorandum of November 16, 1945. The complexity of the problem has been increased by the legislation recently enacted by the Congress.

I am giving your messages the most careful consideration with my advisers including the newly created U. S. Atomic Energy Commission and hope in the near future to reply to you on the substance of these messages.

May I take this opportunity to send you my warmest greetings and best wishes for the coming year.⁹³

⁹¹ Delivered at the Department of State by the British Ambassador on December 17.

⁹² Ante, p. 1249.

⁹³ In telegram 3036, transmitted from London to the White House via United States military channels, Prime Minister Attlee replied as follows: "Many thanks for your letter of 28 December about atomic energy. I note that you will be sending a further reply. Thank you for your good wishes, which, I warmly reciprocate." (Department of State Atomic Energy Files)

BASIC FOREIGN COMMERCIAL POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES TO RESTORE FOREIGN TRADE TO PRIVATE CHANNELS

Editorial Note

For interim or emergency measures undertaken by the United States at this time in conjunction with other governments (particularly the United Kingdom and Canada) to continue wartime trade controls on the production, distribution, or pricing of certain international commodities during the immediate postwar recovery period, see Department of State Bulletin, 1946, under appropriate entries. This United States policy to continue controls during the transition period from war to peace on items mainly in short supply was approved at a meeting of the Executive Committee on Economic Foreign Policy on August 31, 1945 at which time it was recommended that “. . . in cases in which it is necessary to maintain controls for purposes of stability, reconversion, or rehabilitation, the responsibility therefor be transferred as quickly as practicable from the Anglo-American Combined Boards to international commodity committees composed of representatives of the principal producing and consuming countries” (ECEFP document D-119/45, August 31, 1945, Lot 122, Box 22). This position was used as a basis for negotiation with the United Kingdom and Canada, and on December 10, 1945 a joint statement was issued by the three governments terminating the Combined Raw Materials Board and the Combined Production and Resources Board as of December 31, 1945, but providing where necessary for continuance of the commodity committees established under those Boards; the Combined Food Board was continued until July 1, 1946 at which time its functions were taken over by the International Emergency Food Council (see documentation regarding the world food crisis, page 1439 ff.). The decision of August 1945 was reconfirmed by the Executive Committee on January 25, 1946.

The Department of State, however, regarded such governmental intervention in the channels of international trade as abnormal. As early as December 1944 the Executive Committee had drafted a basic policy statement regarding the relationship between basic foreign commercial policy and wartime trade controls in which it was declared that the burden of proof for continuation of such controls after the original reasons for imposing them had disappeared should rest with those who advocated such action (ECEFP document D-87/44, Lot 122, Box 21). It was the fundamental policy of the Department to move as rapidly as possible in the direction of removal of government controls and restrictions from international trade, in line with traditional United States foreign commercial policy and with the program which this Government was pushing during these same years for the removal of trade barriers and the expansion of world trade and employment through the establishment of an International Trade Organization under the United Nations. In furtherance of this policy the Executive Committee on January 25, 1946 approved a program looking towards the discontinuance of the foreign wartime trading missions in this country, and the diplomatic missions in Washington of the concerned governments were notified of this in aide-mémoire on April 2.

FW 611.0031/4-246

*The Department of State to Certain Diplomatic Missions Located in Washington*¹

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

The Government of the United States recognizes the services performed by the several purchasing missions which were established in this country by other Governments during the war emergency. These services have encompassed among others the expediting of shipments, the handling of lend-lease transactions, the screening of requirements, and the direct procurement of essential supplies. However, the war having come to a victorious conclusion, it now becomes necessary to set forth the policy of this Government with reference to the continuance of these wartime agencies.

This Government favors the use of private channels in international trade as most consistent with the principles of liberal trade policy. At the same time it is recognized that the prompt conversion of the economies of the world, stabilization of prices, and equitable distribution of available supplies may make necessary the continuation of government participation in trade during the transition from war to peace. In such cases, it is the policy of this Government that state trading agencies should conduct their trade in accordance with usual commercial considerations.

¹ Australia, Belgium, China, Greece, India, Italy, The Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, the Union of South Africa, and the United Kingdom. A somewhat similar aide-mémoire was transmitted to the Soviet Union, which took account of its traditional pre-war trading pattern. In the case of France, the substance of the policy was discussed with French representatives during the financial and economic negotiations which took place in Washington during April and May. No record has been found of the communication to Poland, but there is a record of conversations with its representatives.

With this in view it is the desire of this Government that existing foreign purchasing missions in the United States limit their operations during the transition period to the procurement of those commodities which are necessary to meet essential civilian requirements for relief and rehabilitation. Also it is this Government's position that purchasing missions should use normal trade channels to the maximum extent practicable and that their purchasing methods should be consistent with commercial considerations.

Finally, as the transition period draws to a close and the emergency need ceases to exist the United States Government believes that these wartime missions should be disestablished.²

WASHINGTON, April 2, 1946.

² Some weeks later the Department of State engaged in conversations with representatives of the fifteen nations having purchasing missions in this country in which it reiterated its position as to the desirability of returning international trade to private channels in conformity with the principles of a liberal trade policy. At the same time the Department recognized that certain adjustments would have to be made during the transitional period. In conversations with representatives from the British Embassy, the Department accepted points made in the British gloss on the aide-mémoire, and concurred in the necessity of foreign government procurement activity with respect both to purchases for government account and for commodities that were in short supply and subject to international allocation. The Department also agreed that the purchasing missions might be used during the transition period to expedite shipping and transactions between private traders in this and other countries.

There was general agreement with the United States position, except on the part of the Chinese, Indian, Polish and Soviet representatives. A detailed summary of these conversations may be found in the Department's classified bulletin "Current Economic Developments" No. 50, June 3, 1946.

UNITED STATES INTEREST IN INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC COLLABORATION FOR THE EXPANSION OF WORLD TRADE AND EMPLOYMENT¹

560.AL/1-446: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

LONDON, January 4, 1946—4 p. m.

[Received January 4—11:57 a. m.]

94. For Wilcox² and Brown³ from Hawkins⁴ and Fowler.⁵ We have discussed at some length with Liesching,⁶ Helmore,⁷ Stirling⁸ and Shackle⁹ questions relating to the preliminary trade meeting¹⁰ as follows:

¹ For previous documentation relating to United States proposals for the expansion of international trade, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, pp. 1328 ff.

² Clair Wilcox, Director of the Office of International Trade Policy.

³ Winthrop G. Brown, Chief of the Division of Commercial Policy.

⁴ Harry C. Hawkins, Minister-Counselor for Economic Affairs, United States Embassy, London.

⁵ William A. Fowler, First Secretary of Embassy, United States Embassy, London.

⁶ Sir Percival Liesching, Second Secretary, British Board of Trade, until July, 1946 when he became Permanent Secretary to the British Ministry of Food.

⁷ James R. C. Helmore, Under Secretary of Commercial Relations and Treaties Department, British Board of Trade, until July, 1946 when he succeeded Sir Percival Liesching as Second Secretary, Board of Trade.

⁸ John A. Stirling, Assistant Secretary, British Board of Trade.

⁹ R. J. Shackle, Principal Assistant Secretary, British Board of Trade.

¹⁰ The United States Government published on December 6, 1945 a document entitled "Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment", copies of which were transmitted on a world-wide basis to other governments (with certain limited exceptions) for their consideration. The Proposals set forth the views and objectives of this Government within the sphere of international economic relations and proposed that the United Nations convene in 1946 a conference to consider early and effective cooperative action on an international basis in the fields of trade and employment. For text of the Proposals, see Department of State Bulletin, December 9, 1945, p. 918.

At the same time invitations were issued by the United States Government to fifteen governments, considered to represent the principal trading nations of the world, to appoint representatives to attend a preliminary meeting in early 1946 at a place to be determined. Such a preliminary conference would negotiate, for the consideration of the proposed general conference, concrete arrangements for the relaxation of tariffs and non-tariff trade barriers. The preliminary meeting would also consult to reach a preliminary understanding with regard to other topics on the proposed agenda for the projected general conference (i.e., questions of employment, policy regarding surplus commodities, cartel policy, and an international trade organization).

For documentation regarding these events, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, pp. 1328 ff. For the text of the invitation issued to the fifteen governments, see ibid., p. 1344.

1. Location for meeting. Liesching said the British Govt is definitely agreeable to holding the meeting in England provided a suitable place for it can be found. He and his staff are actively exploring the possibilities and have already made preliminary investigations. Oxford seems to be a definite possibility although some difficulties have been encountered which would have to be worked out. The facilities there probably would not be available before the first of July. The catering problem also presents difficulties. They are also investigating the possibilities of taking over a hotel or hotels in one of the evacuated south coast towns, which may offer a possibility in cases in which hotel property has not been restored to the owners. They appreciate the importance of deciding upon a place as soon as practicable and we expect to hear more from them shortly on the subject.

2. Liesching and his staff also had questions regarding the exact procedure to be followed before and at the meeting in the formulation of tariff schedules. In the course of the discussion the point was made that if we rely on each country presenting prior to or at the opening of the meeting a schedule of offers it will make to the other participants, we may meet with disappointment either because of the reluctance of countries to make any offers at all until they have some idea or at least have studied the possibilities of what they might get; or, if offers were made, they might be so unsatisfactory as to get the meeting off to a very bad start. The most common procedure in trade negotiations is for the parties to present their requests and it would be difficult to get many of them, particularly the continental countries, to understand and adopt the opposite procedure. In other words, if the initial step by each country were to submit to all the others a list of the concessions sought from them, prompt action is much more likely to be forthcoming, and each country would then be in a better position and more disposed at least to attempt to formulate a list of worthwhile offers for presentation when the meeting convenes. Also if all participating countries were asked to present request lists as soon as possible after the acceptance of the invitation to participate in the meeting, each country in formulating its offers for presentation at the meeting could do so with better knowledge of the expectations and needs of the others. This should not preclude any country that desired to do so from presenting a consolidated list of offers at the time it submits its request lists. We feel that in view of our key role in trade matters it would be highly desirable for the U.S. to do this, provided of course our offers are sufficiently attractive to make it clear that the negotiations are going to be worthwhile.

3. There are some indications that there may be a serious lack of understanding and hesitancy regarding our trade proposals and participation in the meeting on the part of some of the continental countries. This possibility is suggested by the attitude of Dr. Kunosi, Assistant Director of the Economic Dept of the Czechoslovakian FonOff, who recently called on Stirling and expressed doubt and skepticism. Kunosi even intimated that acceptance by the British of these proposals may to some extent have been forced upon them in connection with the financial negotiations,¹¹ and conjectured that our trade proposals may represent only a scheme by the U.S. to capture world market. Stirling immediately sought to set him straight on these points and suggested that he see us, which he did yesterday. We explained the proposals to him and offered to discuss them further at any time with the Czechoslovakian Commercial Counselor here. In view of the foregoing we consider it extremely important that arrangements be made for someone from Washington or from here to discuss the proposals and the arrangements for implementing them fully with the appropriate officials of the various continental countries concerned. This should be done promptly in order to prevent first misconceptions and prejudices from becoming solidified. It might also speed up acceptances that have not been forthcoming and help to facilitate preparations for the meeting in those cases where acceptances have already been received. We had considered in Washington the desirability of calling a meeting in London of our economic counselors on the continent with the idea of explaining these matters fully to them so that they in turn could explain them to the Govts to which they are accredited. However, it would be much quicker and more effective if someone thoroughly familiar with the proposals, accompanied by the appropriate economic counselor, were to go into them fully with officials at least of the countries invited to attend the preliminary meeting. It would be desirable before doing so to have a definite understanding on the procedural steps referred to in paragraph 2 above.

The British have offered to cooperate fully in supporting our position in any way we think may be useful. We suggested and they agreed that a joint approach would not be desirable in view of the appearance of ganging up, but whoever carries on the discussions for us in the various capitals should keep the British economic representatives informed so that corroboration could be provided as need arose and occasion afforded and Liesching said that if you act on the above suggestion, British representatives would be appropriately briefed and instructed to cooperate. In any case he thought it desirable to brief them and to cover particularly the point that our proposals were agreed to wholeheartedly by the British Govt and not under pressure in connection with the loan negotiations. [Hawkins and Fowler.]

¹¹ For documentation regarding the financial negotiations between the United States and the United Kingdom in 1945 leading to the Loan Agreement of December 6, 1945, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. vi, pp. 1 ff. For a scholarly study of American-British joint efforts in the field of international economic relations in the late World War II and early postwar periods, see Richard N. Gardner, Sterling-Dollar Diplomacy (Oxford, The Clarendon Press, 1956).

WINANT

560.A.L./1-746 : Telegram

The Chargé in the Soviet Union (Kennan) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

Moscow, January 7, 1946—noon.

[Received January 7—noon]

46. ReDeptel 2648 December 28.¹² Have asked for appointment with Mikoyan¹³ for purpose of presenting preliminary discussions on trade and employment. Statement I propose to make to him follows at end of this message. Since some days may still elapse before he receives me, I would appreciate being informed if Dept feels that any modifications of this statement would be in order. Dept will note that statement has been worded in such way as to cover contingency that we may wish to ask Soviets to make other concessions, as, for example, along lines of minimum purchase commitments, in place of tariff reductions.

Substance of statement follows :

“It will be noted that purpose of proposed preliminary discussions (to which some fifteen nations are being invited) is, first, to negotiate certain concrete arrangements for relaxation of tariff and other trade barriers and, second, to consult and to reach such preliminary understandings as may be practicable, with regard to other topics on proposed agenda for later conference. (Agenda for later conference, as envisaged by US Govt, were indicated in ‘Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment’, a copy of which was delivered to Soviet Embassy in Washington on December 6 and another copy of which was submitted with Ambassador Harriman’s letter of December 21¹⁴ referred to above.

With respect to first of these two purposes of preliminary discussions, it is hope of US Govt that there will be discussion of concessions which each country would be prepared to make as its contribution toward general lowering of trade barriers of all kinds and an increase of world trade and employment. It will be noted that in ‘proposals’ referred to above, particularly chapter 3, reference is made to questions concerning manner in which state trading might be fitted into general framework of international economic collaboration. It is expectation of US Govt that these questions will form a subject of discussion at preliminary meeting in connection with general problem of reduction of trade barriers.

¹² Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, p. 1355.

¹³ Anastas Ivanovich Mikoyan, People’s Commissar for Foreign Trade.

¹⁴ Not printed.

It is hope of US Govt that discussion will afford opportunity for consultation with regard to other questions treated in 'proposals', such as employment, 'surplus' commodities, policy toward cartels, and form of international trade organization.

US Govt anticipates that tentative agreements reached among countries participating in preliminary meeting (excluding possible agreements on tariff schedules) would be subject to possible alteration or modification at subsequent general conference in light of considerations advanced by other countries. US Govt envisages that general conference would also consider questions of adherence of other states to draft agreement reached at preliminary meeting and of treatment to be accorded those which do not accept it as well as those not invited to participate. US Govt feels that drafting countries, i.e., those participating in preliminary meeting, should propose in general conference that non-drafting countries be considered as provisionally adhering to agreement provided (a) that they accept non-tariff provisions and (b) that they obligate themselves to undertake bilateral tariff negotiations, or negotiations for equivalent concessions, with countries adhering to agreement.

In view of US Govt, drafting countries should also propose that benefits of agreement should, after reasonable period of time, be withheld from trade of those countries which have failed to adhere to it or which, having adhered, have failed to negotiate tariff reductions or such analagous reductions of trade barriers as would be judged by international trade organization to be in conformity with spirit of agreement."

KENNAN

560.AL/1-446 : Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

SECRET US URGENT WASHINGTON, January 9, 1946—6 p. m.

251. Dept believes it would be helpful in connection with preparations for preliminary trade meeting if Hawkins would spend a day or two at each of American missions at Paris, Brussels, The Hague and Praha. Purpose of these visits, which should be made in January or early February, would be to give appropriate Embassy personnel background of proposed meeting based on his experience and detailed knowledge of "Proposals" and of Anglo-American economic and financial discussions. Additional important purposes would be for Hawkins to impress upon missions necessity of making every effort to assure that foreign governments concerned are making adequate preparations for meeting, and to this end to participate in initiating informal explanatory discussions with appropriate officials of govts concerned. Dept is inclined to agree with conclusion in urtel 94, Jan. 4, that this procedure would be more effective in advancing immediate job of preparing for preliminary meeting than would general discussion of subject (together with other matters not intimately related) at wider gathering of all economic counselors on the continent, urtel 202, Jan. 8.¹⁵ Discussion at the meeting of counselors would not, however, be precluded. Unless you perceive objection, therefore, Hawkins is authorized to make these trips during the period indicated. Travel order follows. Please cable Dept approximate dates of each visit in order that it may inform missions concerned.¹⁶

In connection with these visits, Hawkins will wish to have following additional information:

1. All invited Govts have now accepted the invitation to attend the preliminary meeting except USSR, Czechoslovakia and Luxembourg.¹⁷

2. Current thinking in Dept, still subject to change, is that US may urge ECOSOC to call general world conference on trade and employment for some time late this year (the exact time to be set by the host Government), and to designate the nuclear group of countries¹⁸ to serve as a preparatory committee for this conference. Purpose of this arrangement would be to avoid confusion of having two separate international groups engaged in preparing proposals for general conference and to give impetus to proposals which would emerge from nuclear meeting. No decision on this procedure will be reached, however, without consulting you and US delegation to UNO.

3. Dept intends to prepare within the next week or ten days and to send to all American missions in countries accepting invitations to the preliminary meeting a detailed and comprehensive memorandum setting forth a) the objectives of the preliminary meeting, b) the preparations necessary to achieve these objectives and c) the pro-

¹⁵ Not printed.

¹⁶ Mr. Hawkins went to the Continent for such discussions later in the month, and was in Paris from January 24–February 2; Brussels, February 3–5; and The Hague, February 6. He submitted to the Department a report of these talks in London despatch 28276, February 11, not printed.

¹⁷ The acceptances were received as follows: Australia, December 21; Belgium, January 2; Brazil, January 7; Canada, December 15; China, December 31; Cuba, December 19; France, December 31; India, December 29; The Netherlands, January 3; New Zealand, December 17; and South Africa, January 2. Luxembourg and Czechoslovakia communicated acceptances on January 9 but the information had not been received in the Department at the time of the drafting of this telegram. United Kingdom acceptance of the principles of the "Proposals" had been indicated in a Joint Statement issued by the United States and the United Kingdom regarding the "Proposals" on December 6, 1945, at the same time that announcement was made of the conclusion of the Financial Agreement between the two governments.

¹⁸ That is, the fifteen governments to whom invitations had been sent for the preliminary meeting.

cedures which might be followed in carrying on actual negotiations at the meeting (i.e. committees to be established, etc.). This memorandum would be in form suitable for transmission to foreign governments concerned. Among other things, it would urge that each Govt participating in meeting transmit to each other participating Govt (where appropriate), as soon as possible and well in advance of the meeting, a list of the products on which it would wish to receive tariff concessions and an indication of the concessions desired. Urtel 94, Jan. 4. This procedure would not preclude, and would even appear to lead up naturally to presentation at meeting of schedules of offers by all countries.

4. It is hoped that by late February or early March it will be possible for Dept to transmit to all other participating Govts for their consideration a preliminary and tentative draft text of the Charter of the ITO, including provisions relating to trade barriers, cartels, commodity policy, employment and organization. To this text would be appended a draft protocol dealing with the independent entry into force of the schedules of tariff concessions and of the related provisions of the Charter (i.e. quotas, most-favored-nation treatment, national treatment for internal taxes, etc.) essential to safeguard the value of the tariff concessions.

5. Bilateral economic and financial discussions with French are planned for some time in February or March¹⁹ and Monnet, High Commissioner for the Modernization of Industry and Agriculture, will arrive in Washington within next few days for purpose of agreeing upon agenda. In so far as commercial policy is concerned, our objective will be to obtain general support of the "Proposals" by the French. US position on "Proposals" will not be modified during these or other bilateral discussions prior to preliminary meeting.

Dept will be glad to give special attention to answering any questions regarding proposed meeting which may occur to Hawkins in connection with proposed trips.

ACHESON

560.AL/12-2045 : Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in Norway (Osborne)

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, January 12, 1946—10 a. m.

21. After careful consideration, it is felt that it would not be practicable to extend to the Norwegian Govt an invitation to participate in the preliminary meeting on trade and employment.²⁰ This not only would add to size of group already large in view of complicated negotiations envisaged but would doubtless lead other Govts to press for invitations. Dept has already been approached informally by other Govts regarding such invitations.

¹⁹ For documentation regarding this subject, see vol. v, pp. 399 ff.

Morgenstierne has taken up with Dept the desire of his Govt to be invited to preliminary meeting (reurtel 808 Dec. 28 [20]²¹). In explaining to him reasons for omission of Norway and why it would not be possible to increase number of countries participating, following points were made: (1) in selecting countries invited, primary emphasis was placed on assuring that group would be broadly representative as to types of trade barriers and economies and would include principal trading nations; (2) USSR included as member Big Five and as principal state-trading nation; (3) necessary to include all British Dominions because of their contractual obligations regarding tariff preferences and importance of action on imperial preferences; (4) Cuba included because of US-Cuba tariff preferences; (5) Luxembourg included as member of Belgo-Luxembourg Economic Union (re item 4 urtel 808); (6) no country was selected as representative of particular geographic area (re item 1 urtel 808); (7) shipping will not be discussed at conference (re item 2 urtel 808); (8) agreement reached at preliminary meeting will be opened to scrutiny of later world-wide conference; meanwhile views of Norwegian Govt on "Proposals for the Expansion of World Trade and Employment" will be welcomed and this Govt hopes Norway will look favorably on these proposals and will support them at world trade conference (re item 3 urtel 808); (9) finally, because of magnitude of task of negotiating detailed tariff concessions, this Govt has been compelled to limit number of countries participating in initial discussions.

It is suggested that you adopt similar approach in any discussion of matter with FonOff. Exclusion of Norway from preliminary meeting does not imply any lack of desire on part of this Govt for close trade relations with Norway.

ACHESON

²⁰ For an approach made in this sense to the Department by the Norwegian Ambassador (Morgenstierne) on December 14, 1945, and to the Ambassador in Norway (Osborne) by the Norwegian Permanent Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs (Prebensen) at Oslo about December 20, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, pp. 1349 and 1352, respectively. Ambassador Morgenstierne had further conversations with the Department on this matter on January 5, 1946 and again on January 14.

²¹ Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, p. 1352. This transmitted Ambassador Osborne's report of his conversation with M. Prebensen.

560.AL/1-1446 : Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

SECRET U.S. URGENT

WASHINGTON, January 14, 1946—7 p. m.

405. For Hawkins and Stinebower.²² Dept will shortly transmit to US member²³ of ECOSOC instructions relating to the calling by ECOSOC of the proposed world conference on trade and employment. This will require the taking of decisions as to what proposals we should make in respect of the time and place of the conference, the countries to be invited, and the international machinery for preparing for the conference. A suggested position on the whole subject is outlined below. It is requested that you examine critically the various points indicated and cable the Dept your views and comments.

The outline follows:

1. ECOSOC should indicate the time of the conference in general terms only (e.g. late 1946), leaving the exact time to be announced by the preparatory committee (see 3 below) after consultation with ECOSOC. Purpose of this arrangement would be to avoid need for making prediction now as to the particular date by which preparations for the conference will have been completed. Dept considers it would be a mistake to hold world conference before preliminary trade meeting could produce concrete results on which conference could take action.

2. The following countries or categories of countries should be invited to the conference:

- a. Countries members of the United Nations in good standing at the time of the conference.
- b. Italy.
- c. Neutrals other than Spain.
- d. Ex-enemy states or liberated areas recognized by the Big Three.
- e. Any country which ECOSOC may later designate in the light of a change in political status.

3. We should urge that ECOSOC approve arrangement whereby the countries attending preliminary trade meeting (i.e. the nuclear ²² Leroy D. Stinebower, Deputy Director of the Office of International Trade Policy, and Adviser to the United States Delegation to the First Part of the First Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations which convened at London on January 10. Regarding the organization and functioning of the United States Delegation to the London meeting of the General Assembly, see ante, pp. 5-7.

²³ John G. Winant, United States Ambassador to the United Kingdom. Ambassador Winant was appointed United States Representative on the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations by President Truman on January 12. The Council, along with other organs of the United Nations, was being organized by the General Assembly at this time, and its first meeting was held on January 23.

group) would serve as the preparatory committee for the world conference. If necessary in order to obtain ECOSOC agreement to this procedure, US might agree to arrangement whereby Economic and Employment Commission²⁴ would be consulted and kept informed as to steps being taken by preparatory committee. Also, there would be no objection to appointment by ECOSOC of observers (i.e. representing ECOSOC and not individual countries) to attend preliminary trade meeting. Every effort should be made to avoid situation in which ECOSOC would entrust preparatory work to group other than that suggested above. If preparations for conference on matters of substance are carried forward by distinct or even overlapping groups confusion may result and the objectives of the conference may be impeded.

4. With regard to agenda, it appears to us that US should not attempt to force "Proposals" as sole item and preclude suggestions by others. Satisfactory arrangement might be one whereby ECOSOC would ask all invited countries to submit suggestions for agenda to ECOSOC which would transmit them to preparatory committee (i.e. the nuclear group).

5. Conference should be held in territory of member of the preparatory committee, and preferably in country where seat of ECOSOC is located. Additional reasons for holding conference here are that preliminary trade meeting would be elsewhere, US could offer best physical facilities, and finally, action by Congress on results of conference might be influenced favorably.

Your views regarding the foregoing should be communicated to the Dept as soon as possible.

ACHESON

560.AL/1-1646 : Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

US URGENT

LONDON, January 16, 1946—2 p. m.

[Received 7 : 41 p. m.]

528. From Stinebower and Hawkins. Following are our comments and suggestions on proposals in your 405, January 14.

We are in general agreement with the proposal as outlined which runs along the same lines as our thinking. The Department should bear in mind the delicate nature of the attempt to induce ECOSOC to sponsor not only our main idea but machinery which we have already begun to develop. Some of our following comments are conditioned on the assumption that the most important element in the outline is securing ratification of the preparatory (nuclear) group as the agent of ECOSOC (your paragraph 3). If we can obtain this, it may be worthwhile to give way on some other items.

²⁴ The Economic and Employment Commission was one of five "nuclear" commissions established by the Economic and Social Council at its first session which extended from January 23 to February 18. For the proceedings of the first session of ECOSOC, see United Nations, Official Records of the Economic and Social Council, First Year, First Session (hereafter cited as ESC (I)).

The prospects of securing approval for the essentials of your outline are strengthened by fact that 8 of the 18 members of ECOSOC are among the countries which have accepted invitations to prepare our negotiations and two countries (USSR and Czechoslovakia) are among the invitees.

At this stage we are not able to judge the prospects of getting the full list of countries set forth in your paragraph 2 invited to the conference but will bear them in mind as our desiderata. On this point and location of the conference we think the US should, if necessary, take the same flexible position as set forth in paragraph 1 relating to date.

We agree that agenda, your paragraph 4, need not be rigidly held to our "proposals" but believe that we should seek to limit the agenda to the five major subjects of our "proposals" and any additions should be such as to fall in one of them. Ecuador has already reintroduced the proposal on which they were defeated in PRECO²⁵ to call a conference on the stabilization of international prices by which they explain they mean measures to increase the prices of raw materials in comparison with prices of finished goods. We shall oppose but cannot yet forecast what action General Assembly will take.

First meeting of ECOSOC now set for January 23. We shall presumably have to introduce any agenda proposals very soon thereafter and therefore need prompt indication whether you want to proceed along the lines above indicated.²⁶ [Stinebower and Hawkins.]

WINANT

²⁵ This refers to the Preparatory Commission of the United Nations which met at London in November and December, 1945; documentation on certain United States interests that were advanced at this meeting is found in Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. I, pp. 1433 ff., although the subject adverted to here is not covered as such.

²⁶ The Economic and Social Council began its session on January 23 as indicated. Documentation including briefing papers and position books for United States delegations to the Economic and Social Council beginning with the second session of ECOSOC is found in the files of the Reference and Documents Section of the Bureau of International Organization Affairs in the Department of State (hereafter referred to as the IO files). No preparatory documentation as such seems to have been made up for the delegation to ECOSOC's first session.

560.A.L./1-1646: Telegram

The Chargé in the Soviet Union (Kennan) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

Moscow, January 16, 1946—3 p. m.

[Received 3:36 p. m.]

148. Although it is now well over a week since request was made I have still been unable to arrange for appointment with anyone in Foreign Trade or Foreign Affairs Commissariats to present explanations which were subject of my 46 January 7, noon. This delay means, I think, that Soviets are subjecting our "proposals" to very careful study. Following are some of questions which I think are particularly occupying their attention:

1. They will wish to be entirely clear concerning relationship of tasks of proposed preliminary meeting and of later general conference to those of Economic and Social Council of UNO. I think it likely that they would prefer in general to pursue internatl economic questions through this latter council which, particularly if Internatl Labor Organization should be admitted to membership, would appear to present a more suitable medium for promulgation of Soviet internatl economic aims, which are so often political and tactical in nature, than would a special organization for trade and employment designed to enforce general and permanent principles. Indeed I think it possible that they may try to have entire question of preliminary talks on reduction of trade barriers submitted for prior consideration by Economic and Social Council before they will take a definite position.

2. Overall objective of increase of internatl trade as means of promoting peace and security and assuring general employment is not one which would naturally find ready enthusiasm in Soviet circles. Soviet instincts are autarchic. They view internatl trade for themselves a means of increasing Soviet strategic economic strength and of achieving economic independence. They would never admit that there was any problem of employment at all in Soviet Union or that employment problem in capitalist countries was susceptible of solution by increased foreign trade.

3. With respect to provisions relating to state trading, Department is of course correct in noting that they have accepted in past certain minimum purchase commitments. These were however with individual countries and did not necessarily reveal anything of total Soviet plans for foreign trade. Even though a global commitment would not require Soviet Government to increase its trade beyond point to which it had otherwise planned to carry it, it would be equivalent to publication of annual [apparent garble] import plan, and suggestion of entering into any discussion of such a commitment is obviously one which would seem to Russian officials to call for careful study from policy standpoint.

4. Soviet economic experts will also wish to study global purchase proposal carefully from standpoint of general principles of their trade monopoly. Although they have not suffered much financially from foreign tariff provisions (two-thirds of their modest prewar exports to US were free of duty and in certain remaining items, duty was paid in effect by US consumers) they have laid great stress as a matter of tactics on establishing principle that most favored nation treatment in Soviet Union in tariff and other matters was equivalent to most favored nation treatment abroad. In this way they have hoped to secure for their state trading system universal most favored nation position beyond Soviet borders while reserving to themselves full freedom of action, even where necessary to evade or make meaningless most favored nation principle, in their own practice. Owing to ignorance or indifference of foreign negotiators they have had no small success with this in past and will not easily part with these aspirations. They will therefore weigh carefully sacrifice in principle which they would be asked to make in undertaking global purchase commitment against modest immediate gains by way of reciprocal tariff concessions which they might conceivably achieve through accepting such an obligation.

Sent Department 148; repeated London 27.

KENNAN

560.AL/1-1746: Circular Telegram

*The Acting Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Officers*²⁷

WASHINGTON, January 17, 1946.

Please inform appropriate officials of Govt to which you are accredited that Govts of following countries have now accepted invitation of Govt of US to participate in preliminary meeting on trade and employment: Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, France, India, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, South Africa and United Kingdom. Reference appropriate instruction or circular telegram cited in Depcirtel Dec 13, 1945.²⁸ You may also inform them that, on basis of replies received to US invitation, and in light of need for more preparation generally, it appears desirable to postpone meeting for several weeks, possibly until late June or early July.

²⁷ Sent to the United States missions accredited to the fifteen governments that had been invited by the United States to the preliminary conference.

²⁸ Not printed.

ACHESON

560.AL/1-1646 : Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant)

SECRET US URGENT

WASHINGTON, January 18, 1946—8 p. m.

605. Undel 89. For Hawkins and Stinebower. 1. Dept agrees with views expressed your telegram no. 528, Jan 16 (not Undel series) regarding calling by ECOSOC of proposed world conference on trade and employment and relation to preliminary trade meeting. You are accordingly authorized to proceed along the lines indicated in that telegram and to prepare appropriate draft resolution which should, however, be cleared with Dept before formal introduction in ECOSOC.

2. In connection with foregoing, you will be interested in following excerpt from cable we have received from Embassy Moscow setting forth Kennan's views regarding probable Russian reaction to proposed preliminary trade meeting :

"They [the Russians]²⁹ will wish to be entirely clear concerning relationship of tasks of proposed preliminary meeting and of later general conference to those of Economic and Social Council of UNO. I think it likely that they would prefer in general to pursue internatl economic questions through this latter council which, particularly if Internatl Labor Organization should be admitted to membership, would appear to present a more suitable medium for promulgation of Soviet internatl economic aims, which are so often political and tactical in nature, than would a special organization for trade and employment designed to enforce general and permanent principles. Indeed I think it possible that they may try to have entire question of preliminary talks on reduction of trade barriers submitted for prior consideration by Economic and Social Council before they will take a definite position."³⁰

3. Czechoslovakia has accepted our invitation (Depcirtel of Jan 17), which means that at least 9 of 18 members of ECOSOC will be represented at preliminary trade meeting.

4. We have had some further thoughts regarding character of observers which ECOSOC might appoint to attend preliminary trade meeting. We had thought that if, with our influence, Norway could be appointed as ECOSOC observer this would to some extent soften the effect of our having had to resist the strenuous efforts Norway has made and is continuing to make to get invited to the meeting. We feel, however, that it would be preferable if the observer or observers from ECOSOC were to be members of the secretariat rather than representatives of a particular country. If national representatives are selected (in which case we should probably press for inclusion of Norway) then it would seem desirable to have a committee of observers rather than only one. Your reactions to this general problem would be appreciated.

²⁹ Brackets appear in the quotation in the original.

³⁰ The Soviet Union never accepted the bid to a preliminary trade meeting.

ACHESON

501.BB/1-2246 : Telegram

*The Secretary of State to the Acting Secretary of State*³¹

SECRET

US URGENT

LONDON, January 22, 1946—midnight.

[Received January 23—2: 57 a. m.]

798. This is Delun 117. Re Delun 118 following. The draft resolution is submitted for Dept's approval or comment. It will at once be discussed with the British and we will cable promptly any reactions or suggestions by them. It is still not certain what deadline will be imposed on the introduction of draft into ECOSOC hence it is most imperative that we have Dept's reactions immediately. It will be observed that recital of considerations is practically a direct quotation of Section A of our "Proposals." It does not seem wise to suggest that ECOSOC merely send observers to preparatory group. We have therefore proposed that ECOSOC should constitute nuclear group as Preparatory Committee with the addition of two members and a representative of the Secretariat designated by the Council. These persons presumably would not participate in the tariff negotiations but only in the consideration of agenda for Conference.

BYRNES

501.BB/1-2246 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Acting Secretary of State

US URGENT

LONDON, January 22, 1946.

[Received January 23—6: 11 a. m.]

797. Delun 118. Resolution regarding an International Conference on Trade and Employment proposed by the United States Delegation.

³¹ Secretary Byrnes was in London from January 8 to January 25 during which time he served as Head of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly.

a. The United Nations have already taken important steps toward the establishment of international machinery for the promotion of economic cooperation among nations with the object of preventing and removing economic and social maladjustments, of achieving fairness and equity in economic relations among states and of raising the level of economic well-being among all peoples. The Food and Agriculture organization of the United Nations, the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development have already been established as contribution in their respective fields toward the achievement of these objectives. The Economic and Social Council has been established as the agency for integrating the activities of all of these agencies into an effective whole.

b. It is essential that the cooperative economic measures already taken be supplemented by further measures dealing directly with trade barriers and discriminations which stand in the way of an expansion of multilateral trade and by an undertaking on the part of nations to seek full employment.

c. Cooperative action with respect to employment is indispensable to the success of such other measures as those dealing with monetary and exchange stability and the flow of investment capital. Effective action in regard to employment and to trade barriers and discriminations must therefore be taken or the whole program of international economic cooperation will fail and an economic environment conducive to the maintenance of peaceful international relations will not be created.

d. The Government of the United States has proposed that the United Nations should call such a conference in 1946 and has published a set of proposals for the expansion of world trade and employment for consideration by the peoples of the world and to serve as a basis for discussion in an international conference. In the belief that previous international conferences in the field of commercial policy have had but limited results because they were for the most part confined to policies in the abstract and not closely enough with arrangements for concrete action, the United States Government has further invited a number of governments to meet together for the negotiation of reduction of specific trade barriers and discriminations in advance of the general International Conference. Similar negotiations are to be proposed to all other countries of like mind as rapidly as possible.

e. These initiatives have been welcomed by a number of delegations in the opening debate of the General Assembly.³²

f. The Economic and Social Council has been authorized in general by Article 62 of the Charter³³ of the United Nations to call international conferences on matters falling within its competence and specifically by Supplementary Rule T of the provisional rules of procedure of the General Assembly to call a conference on international trade and employment.

The Economic and Social Council therefore

1. Agrees in conformity with Supplementary Rule T to sponsor and to convene an International Conference on Trade and Employment to meet in the latter part of 1946.

2. Proposes that the major chapters of the agenda of this conference be as follows:

a. International agreement relating to the achievement and maintenance of high and stable levels of employment and economic activity.

b. International agreement relating to regulations, restrictions and discriminations affecting international trade.

c. International agreement relating to restrictive business practices.

d. International agreement relating to intergovernmental commodity arrangements.

e. Establishment of an International Trade Organization to be a specialized agency of the United Nations having responsibilities in the field of (b), (c) and (d) above (responsibilities in the field of full employment transcend the field of any one specialized agency and should as recognized by the Charter of the United Nations be vested in the Economic and Social Council rather than in a specialized agency).

3. Hereby constitutes a Preparatory Committee of the Economic and Social Council to elaborate an annotated draft agenda taking into account suggestions which may be submitted to it by the Economic and Social Council or directly by members of the United Nations. This Preparatory Committee shall consist of the countries participating in the preliminary negotiations for the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers referred to in paragraph d above with the addition of ³² This refers to the general discussion on the Report of the Preparatory Commission of the United Nations that began with a speech by Secretary of State Byrnes on January 14 and was terminated by a speech by the Representative of Syria on January 19; see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, First Session, First Part, Plenary Meetings, pp. 111 ff. (hereafter cited as GA (I/1)). For specific references by the Representatives of Denmark and the Netherlands, welcoming the initiative taken by the United States "in tackling the question of freer trade and commerce", see ibid., pp. 127 and 134, respectively.

³³ For text of the Charter of the United Nations, signed at San Francisco, June 26, 1945, see Department of State, Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS) No. 993, or 59 Stat. (pt. 2) 1031.

two representatives designated by the Economic and Social Council and a representative of the Secretariat of the Council.³⁴

560.AL/10-746

Memorandum Prepared in the Division of Commercial Policy

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] February 6, 1946.

PREPARATIONS FOR PRELIMINARY INTERNATIONAL MEETING ON TRADE AND EMPLOYMENT

The Government of the United States published, on December 6, 1945, a document entitled "Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment", copies of which were transmitted to other governments of the world for their consideration.

These Proposals urged the view that world security and well-being require the adoption by all countries of a code of commercial conduct embracing the fields of governmental barriers to trade, cartels, inter-governmental commodity agreements, and permanent international machinery to deal with these matters on a continuing basis. Recognizing the close relationship between levels of trade and conditions of employment, the Proposals also made clear the importance of domestic measures to maintain employment and the need for continuing international consultation on employment policies.

With a view to bringing about the implementation of the Proposals, the Government of the United States suggested that the United Nations Organization convene a general world conference for this purpose. At the same time, in order to assure adequate preparation for the world conference, the Government of the United States extended invitations to the governments of fifteen other countries to participate in a preliminary meeting on the subject.

The purpose of the present memorandum is to indicate the views of the Government of the United States regarding a) the objectives which should be sought at this preliminary meeting, b) the procedures which appear to be necessary before and at the meeting in order to achieve these objectives, and c) the methods whereby the results of the preliminary meeting can be broadened internationally at the general world conference on trade and employment which it is hoped the United Nations Organization will convene later on.³⁵

³⁴ From January 23 to February 4 a steady exchange of ideas regarding the proposed draft resolution passed between the Department and the United States Delegation at London. In this exchange the Delegation also transmitted views and suggestions of the British Board of Trade. Documentation is found in the 501.BB file, Department of State central indexed files. The text of the United States draft resolution as submitted to the Economic and Social Council is found in ESC (I), p. 124, annex 1*a*. The draft resolution was submitted by the United States Representative on the Economic and Social Council (Winant) on February 11; for text of Ambassador Winant's remarks on this occasion, see ESC (I), pp. 64 ff.

Objectives of the Preliminary Meeting

It is considered that the best means of preparing for the general world conference would be to develop in advance a body of definite and concrete international commitments on the various aspects of the Proposals which a broadly representative group of nations, including the major trading nations, would be prepared to support and adopt.

Accordingly, it is believed that the objective of the preliminary meeting should be to negotiate, and reach substantial agreement upon, a detailed international instrument incorporating such commitments. It is suggested that this multilateral instrument should be called the Charter of the International Trade Organization of the United Nations. This Charter, like the Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund, would contain not only provisions relating to the machinery of the Organization but also provisions embodying positive and substantive commitments as to the reduction of trade barriers of all kinds, as to the procedures to be followed in dealing with cartels, as to the principles and procedures which would govern the negotiation and operation of intergovernmental commodity arrangements, and as to the international aspects of domestic employment policies in the member countries. As explained below, the provisions of the Charter dealing with trade barriers would have a more definitive status (in respect of the countries participating in the preliminary meeting) than would the remainder of the Charter.

As an essential part of the undertakings for the reduction of trade barriers, provision must be made for the reduction of tariffs. However, in view of the thousands of tariff items involved, and the need for proceeding with tariff reduction on a selective, product-by-product basis, provisions effectuating actual tariff reductions cannot be incorporated in the Charter itself. It is proposed, therefore, that to the Charter there be appended a Protocol in which each country participating in the preliminary meeting (except, of course, countries having a complete state monopoly of foreign trade*) would agree to reduce individual import tariffs, or bind them against increase, in accordance with a schedule setting forth and describing the various products on ³⁵ Regarding the conveyance of copies of this document to the governments of the fifteen "nuclear" countries, see the Department's circular telegram of February 12, 6 p. m., infra.

*With regard to such countries, it is suggested that, in lieu of reducing its tariffs, the country having a complete or substantially complete state monopoly of foreign trade might agree to purchase annually from the other countries concerned products valued at not less than an agreed amount. This commitment would be the subject of negotiations at the preliminary meeting and would, like the tariff schedules, be provided for in the Protocol. [Footnote in the original.]

which that country would grant tariff concessions and the agreed maximum rate of duty for each such product.

It has been the past international practice, with few exceptions, to confine negotiations on tariffs to agreements between two countries. In these bilateral agreements, such as those heretofore concluded by the United States under the reciprocal trade-agreements program, each of the two countries parties to the agreement granted reductions or bindings of its import tariffs on products of which the other was a principal or important supplier. While these concessions were as a rule generalized to third countries, either by virtue of most-favored-nation obligations or as a matter of policy, third countries had no contractual right to them independently of the existence of the bilateral agreement in which they were embodied. In other words, tariff reductions have been effected in the past either unilaterally or by means of a network of bilateral instruments, each separate from the other and dependent for its existence and continuation in force upon the policies and decisions of the particular pair of countries concerned.

It is now suggested that the purely bilateral method of negotiating tariff concessions should be modified in connection with the proposed negotiations relating to the Charter of the International Trade Organization, and that a multilateral procedure be developed under which tariff reductions effected in conjunction with these negotiations may stand on all fours with the multilateral commitments relating to other trade barriers which would be incorporated in the Charter itself. In this way each country subscribing to the relaxation of trade barriers other than tariffs under a multilateral plan affecting many products and many countries, would also be assured that equally broad and precise action would be taken with regard to tariffs.

It is proposed, therefore, that the tariff schedules which it is envisaged would result from the negotiations at the preliminary meeting would be multilateral, both in scope and in legal application. Under this plan, there would result from the negotiations a total of 14 schedules of tariff concessions, each schedule setting forth a description of the products and of the concession rates of duty thereon which would be applicable in respect of the imports into a particular country. The products listed in the schedule pertaining to the imports into each country would include those of which the other countries are or are likely to become, principal suppliers, individually or in combination. Each country participating in the arrangement would be contractually entitled, in its own right and independently of the most-favored-nation clause, to the concessions in each of the schedules of the other countries.

It is clear from the foregoing that the negotiations contemplated with regard to tariffs represent an undertaking of considerable magnitude and will constitute a main task of the preliminary meeting. The tariff aspect of the negotiations will accordingly require particularly careful and extensive preparation in advance of the meeting. Suggestions as to certain preparatory steps which might be taken are set forth elsewhere in this memorandum.

The Government of the United States hopes that within the next six or eight weeks it will be able to transmit to the other governments intending to participate in the preliminary meeting, for their study and consideration, a detailed draft text of the proposed Charter of the International Trade Organization³⁶ and of the general provisions of the Protocol. Meanwhile, it may be noted that under the Protocol certain Articles of the Charter (e.g. those relating to most-favored-nation treatment, quantitative restrictions, national treatment in respect of internal taxes, et cetera) would be susceptible of being brought into force independently of the remainder of the Charter and in conjunction with the entry into force of the tariff schedules. The purpose of this arrangement is to assure that the tariff schedules, together with those related trade-barrier provisions of the Charter which are designed to safeguard the value of the tariff concessions and which have customarily been included in trade agreements in the past, can be made effective as a separate international instrument in the event of any delay in the general acceptance by the legislatures of the various countries of the Charter as a whole.

The procedures for conducting the tariff negotiations at the preliminary meeting should be such that failure of any pair of countries to reach satisfactory agreement on particular tariff rates would not obstruct the completion of a broad multilateral agreement. In such cases provision might be made for continuing or supplementary negotiations between the countries concerned.

³⁶ This optimistic prognostication fell far short of fulfillment in respect of the projected time-table. It was not until February 28 that first drafts of the proposed Charter (none of which have been found in the Department's central indexed files) were completed in the Department, and forwarded to the appropriate inter-departmental committee which in this case was the Executive Committee on Economic Foreign Policy (hereafter cited as ECEFP). The ECEFP about March 15 distributed the various chapters of the draft Charter, based on the Proposals of December 6, 1945, to the interested subcommittees of the ECEFP, for consideration and revision as required. For the progress of this item in the work of the ECEFP, see footnote 73, p. 1328.

The Executive Committee on Economic Foreign Policy was established on April 18, 1944 under authority of a letter from President Roosevelt to the Secretary of State dated April 5, 1944. Its terms of reference were to examine problems and developments affecting the economic foreign policy of the United States and to formulate recommendations in regard thereto for the consideration of the Secretary of State, and, in appropriate cases, of the President. Its membership included two members from the Department of State, at the Assistant Secretary or comparable level, to act as chairman and vice-chairman of the committee, one member each with an alternate from the Departments of the Treasury, Agriculture, Commerce, Labor and the United States Tariff Commission, and one observer each from the Bureau of the Budget and the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion. The secretariat of the committee was drawn from the Department of State.

Preparatory Steps in Advance of the Meeting

The following suggestions are made as to the steps which it is believed should be taken to assure adequate preparations for the preliminary meeting:

1. Each Government should endeavor to formulate, with a view to definitive discussion at the meeting, its position and views as to the various principles set forth in the Proposals published by the United States and as to the provisions of the detailed draft Charter, referred to above, in which these principles would take concrete form. The Government of the United States would be glad to receive, in advance of the meeting, the views of any of the other Governments regarding any aspect of the Proposals or the draft Charter.

2. The Government of each country should transmit to the Government of each other country from which it wishes to receive tariff concessions a statement setting forth (1) a list of the products on which it will request concessions of that country, and (2) the actual reductions or bindings of tariff rates which it plans to request in respect of such products. This statement containing both types of information should be transmitted as soon as possible. However, since it is relatively easy to prepare a list of products alone, without an indication of the tariff concessions to be requested, and since even such a list would provide some assistance to the various countries in preparing for the negotiations, it is suggested that a list of this kind might well be sent in advance of the more complete statement containing detailed requests for tariff concessions. The work of all concerned would be facilitated if, in preparing the list of products and the concessions to be asked, use would be made of the statistical or tariff nomenclature of the country of which the concessions are requested.³⁷

3. In preparing requests for tariff concessions, it is suggested that the participating Governments may wish to apply the principles outlined in the Proposals relating to cases in which there is a state monopoly of the trade in an individual product (Chapter III, Section E, paragraph 2 of the Proposals). These principles suggest that, in the case of such monopolies, the protection afforded domestic producers by means of price disparities similar to those caused by import tariffs can be effectively reduced or bound against increase by negotiating a ³⁷ In a circular telegram of February 26, 4 p. m., to the fifteen missions concerned, the Department asked that the "need for treating as confidential requests made by one country of another for tariff concessions on specific items" be emphasized to the appropriate officials of the government to which they were accredited (560.AL/2-2646). On March 11 the Department transmitted under instruction to the interested missions copies of a publication entitled "Statistical Classification of Imports into the United States". It was requested that this document be handed informally to officials of the government concerned "stating that it may be found useful in identifying particular commodities upon which tariff concessions may be requested of the United States in connection with the preliminary trade meeting". (560.AL/3-1146) maximum margin between the landed price at which the monopoly can buy the foreign product and the price at which the monopoly sells the product in the home market. Such negotiated margins would be set forth and provided for in the tariff schedules along with the negotiated rates of customs duty. These margins would, of course, be exclusive of transportation, distribution and other expenses incident to the sale of the imported product.

4. In addition to import tariffs, each Government should also examine the export tariffs or taxes which may be maintained by certain of the other governments participating in the meeting with a view to determining whether it wishes to request concessions on individual export tariffs affecting its sources of supply. As in the case of import tariffs, requests for concessions on export tariffs should be communicated to the appropriate government or governments in advance.

5. The requests for tariff concessions which each Government would have made of the others, and the requests which each Government would have received from the others, should make it possible for each Government to have formulated, by the time the meeting begins, a schedule of the offers which it would be prepared to make to all of the other governments as a group in the light of what it would expect to receive from each of them. It is suggested that, for convenient reference in transmitting requests for tariff concessions prior to the opening of the preliminary meeting, the Schedules which would pertain to the various countries might be numbered in alphabetical order, as follows:

Name of Country	Schedule
Australia	Schedule I
Belgo-Luxembourg Economic Union and Belgian Congo	Schedule II
Brazil	Schedule III
Canada	Schedule IV
China	Schedule V
Cuba	Schedule VI
Czechoslovakia	Schedule VII
France and French Empire	Schedule VIII
India	Schedule IX
Netherlands and Empire	Schedule X
New Zealand	Schedule XI
Union of South Africa	Schedule XII
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics	Schedule XIII†
United Kingdom, Newfoundland, Southern Rhodesia, Burma and colonial dependencies	Schedule XIV
United States	Schedule XV

† If the principles indicated in Chapter III, Section E, paragraph 3 of the Proposals should prove to be acceptable to the USSR and to the other participating countries, this Schedule would relate, not to tariff concessions, but to an undertaking to purchase annually products valued at not less than an aggregate amount to be agreed upon. [Footnote in the original.]

Procedures for Conducting Negotiations at the Preliminary Meeting

In order that the work of negotiating arrangements of the complexity and scope of those under consideration may proceed in an orderly and expeditious fashion, it is essential that the preliminary meeting be well organized. The following suggestions bearing upon the make-up of the delegations and the committee structure of the meeting are advanced for consideration:

1. Make-up of the Delegations. It is believed that the main considerations to be borne in mind with regard to the make-up of the delegations are that a) the meeting is intended to be preliminary to the world conference on trade and employment and would not therefore be of the same order of importance as the world conference, and b) the primary work of the meeting would be highly technical in character, requiring the services of persons competent in the various specialized fields embraced under the following headings:

- i) Employment policies;
- ii) Tariffs (including technical tariff policies in respect of individual products as well as technical tariff, tariff nomenclature, and customs administrative problems);
- iii) Exchange and international financial controls;
- iv) Agricultural policies bearing on international trade;
- v) Policies in respect of intergovernmental controls over the production of, or trade in, primary commodities;
- vi) Cartels;
- vii) Commercial policy in general (including broad questions of tariff policy such as most-favored-nation treatment, generalization of duties, et cetera); and
- viii) International organizational problems.

2. Organization of the Meeting. The first task of the meeting will be to agree upon the committees or other groups which will need to be established in order to conduct the negotiations on substantive matters. In the light of the various subjects to be discussed, and the need for proceeding more or less simultaneously over a broad field, it is suggested that committees consisting of representatives from each of the participating governments may need to be established to cover the areas indicated below. The outline which follows is intended to be tentative and suggestive only, and is merely put forward for the purpose of indicating the organizational problems involved.

A. Committee on Employment Policies. (This Committee would deal with provisions relating to the international aspects of domestic employment policies.)

B. Committee on Tariffs. (This Committee might deal with questions of most-favored-nation treatment and generalization of duties as well as with the broad aspects of the detailed negotiations for the reduction of tariffs. Since the matter of a particular tariff concession, offered by one country in respect of a product of which another is the principal supplier, is not usually of primary interest to countries other than the two countries immediately concerned, it is probable that the detailed negotiations for tariff concessions would be very largely conducted in the groups representing pairs of countries. In other words, although the tariff schedules, as finally worked out, would be multi-lateral in scope and would be subject to general approval by the Committee on Tariffs, decisions as to the particular concessions on particular commodities would be taken in the small negotiating groups, which would usually be of a bilateral character.)

C. Committee on Non-Tariff Trade Barriers. (This Committee might deal with quantitative restrictions, exchange controls, and subsidies.)

D. Committee on General Commercial Provisions. (This Committee might deal with such questions as customs formalities, marks of origin, tariff valuation, freedom of transit, and miscellaneous commercial provisions.)

E. Committee on Cartels. (This Committee would deal with provisions relating to the curbing of restrictive business practices.)

F. Committee on Commodity Policy. (This Committee would deal with provisions relating to the principles and procedures which should govern the negotiation and operation of intergovernmental agreements which restrict the production of, or trade in, primary commodities.)

G. Organization. (This Committee would deal with provisions relating to the functions and structure of the International Trade Organization.)

In addition to the foregoing, there would appear to be need for 1) a legal and drafting committee, and 2) a general committee, consisting of the heads of delegations, to pass upon the work of the meeting as a whole.

Relation Between Preliminary Meeting and Proposed World Conference on Trade and Employment

If the negotiations at the preliminary meeting are successfully carried forward along the lines indicated above, there would emerge from the meeting the draft Charter of the ITO and the Protocol.

It is proposed that the draft Charter should be submitted to the world conference on trade and employment for its consideration and that the provisions of the Charter should be open to amendment at that conference in the light of the new considerations introduced as a result of the larger number of countries participating.

With regard to the tariff schedules provided for under the Protocol, however, it seems clear that these cannot practicably be reopened, as among the countries participating in the preliminary meeting, for consideration and possibly renegotiation at the general world conference. Nor would such action seem to be required or appropriate on grounds of equity.

It is proposed, therefore, that the Protocol, consisting of the tariff schedules and of the non-tariff trade barrier provisions of the draft Charter which it may be agreed to incorporate in the Protocol by reference, should, at the close of the preliminary meeting, be signed and published by the countries participating in that meeting and should come into force, independently of the Charter, in accordance with provisions to be worked out. In order to make perfectly clear the relationship between the Protocol and the Charter, provision might be made whereby the Protocol could later be adapted to any changes in the provisions of the Charter relating to non-tariff trade barriers which might result from the action of the world conference.

The question will arise at the preliminary meeting, and later at the world conference, as to what treatment should be accorded to the commerce of countries which fail to adhere to the Charter of the ITO or which, having adhered, fail to carry through tariff reductions comparable in scope to those which it is expected the countries participating in the preliminary meeting will have effected as a result of the prior negotiations.

Related to the foregoing is the question as to what procedure should be followed in conducting tariff negotiations a) between those countries which have participated in the preliminary meeting (and which have, therefore, already agreed upon tariff concessions over a wide range of products) and newly adhering countries, and b) between the newly adhering countries themselves.

With regard to the first question, it is suggested that any final decision involving the concerted withholding from the trade of non-adhering countries of the benefits of the provisions of the charter relating to non-tariff trade barriers, or involving the denial of tariff concessions to the trade of countries which, having adhered to the Charter, fail to carry out adequate tariff reductions, can only be taken at the general world conference in the light of the views of all interested countries. It is clear, however, that the countries participating in the preliminary meeting should formulate and make recommendations to the world conference on this point. The following suggestions are put forward as to the policy which these recommendations might urge for adoption :

1. The members of the ITO, i.e. those countries which adhere to the Charter, should pursue a common policy regarding the generalization to the trade of non-members of the benefits of the trade provisions of the Charter, including tariff concessions granted pursuant to the Charter.

2. In order to facilitate the foregoing, the countries participating in the world conference should agree, at the conference, that they will not invoke prior most-favored-nation obligations for the purpose of obtaining the benefits under reference.

3. Subject to exceptions authorized by the International Trade Organization, and to any temporary or conditional exceptions which the world conference may agree to make in respect of countries that may not have had an opportunity to participate in the formulation of the Charter, countries adhering to the Charter should, after a reasonable period, withhold the benefits of the Charter from the trade of countries which refuse to adhere to it. Similarly, and subject to exceptions authorized by the ITO, those countries adhering to the Charter which have completed adequate tariff negotiations might, after a reasonable period, become entitled to withhold the tariff concessions resulting from such negotiations from the trade of countries which, although having adhered to the Charter, fail to negotiate tariff reductions judged by the ITO to be in conformity with the spirit of the commitments to negotiate tariff reductions contained in the Charter.

4. The policy suggested in 2 and 3, above, should also apply, of course, in respect of member countries which withdraw from the ITO or which terminate the tariff concessions they have made.

With regard to the related question of the procedure for assuring, by negotiation, the reduction of tariffs on the part of adhering countries other than those which have reduced their tariffs in connection with the preliminary meeting, the following possibilities occur to the Government of the United States:

1. Countries which have completed tariff negotiations among themselves at the preliminary meeting would negotiate separate bilateral tariff-reduction agreements with adhering countries not present at that meeting, and the latter would negotiate such agreements between themselves. The requirement would be made that these negotiations must proceed as soon as practicable upon the request of either party.

2. It may be possible to establish within the ITO a mechanism whereby the multilateral tariff negotiations initiated at the preliminary meeting may be continued on a multilateral basis with adhering countries not present at that meeting. Under this procedure, each adhering country which had not yet undertaken tariff negotiations would offer to negotiate with those that had, a multilateral schedule of concessions similar in scope and legal application to the schedules emerging from the preliminary meeting; and the countries already having such multilateral schedules in effect would offer to amend them to the extent necessary to assure appropriate concessions on products of which the newcomer was a principal supplier.

Whatever procedure is adopted, due weight should be given in the negotiating process to concessions already made as a result of prior negotiations.

560.A.L./2-1246: Circular telegram

*The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Officers*³⁸

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, February 12, 1946—6 p. m.

Dept will transmit to you, within next few days, third person air mail instruction enclosing copies of a memorandum dated Feb 6 entitled "Preparations for Preliminary Meeting on Trade and Employment".³⁹

Please transmit copies of this memorandum to appropriate officials of Govt to which you are accredited, stating that it represents the ideas of the Govt of the US regarding a) the objectives of the meeting, b) the procedures which appear to be desirable before and at the meeting to achieve these objectives and c) the relation between the preliminary meeting and the proposed general world conference on trade and employment. You may also add that Govt of US would be glad to receive views of Govt to which you are accredited regarding any of suggestions put forward in memorandum.⁴⁰

Copies will also be made available informally to missions of nuclear countries in Washington.

In connection with foregoing, US delegation to UNO has introduced resolution in Economic and Social Council for calling of world conference on trade and employment which will be discussed by Council in next day or two. Text of resolution follows in subsequent circular telegram.⁴¹

BYRNES

501.BD/2-1746: Telegram

The United States Representative at the United Nations (Stettinius) to the Secretary of State

URGENT

LONDON, February 17, 1946.

[Received February 17—2:41 p. m.]

1998. For Wilcox. Delun 355. Drafting Committee on Trade Conference resolution reached quick agreement on Saturday on text quoted below. Practically all of preamble is omitted as having served ³⁸ Sent to the fifteen United States missions accredited to the governments invited by the United States to the preliminary conference.

³⁹ The memorandum was transmitted under cover of instructions dated February 15, none printed. On the same date, February 15, the Department sent a circular telegram to the same missions instructing them to withhold conveyance of the memorandum to the government concerned until informed by the Department that ECOSOC had acted on the proposed resolution on the trade and employment conference (560.A.L./2-1546).

⁴⁰ The Department authorized transmission of the memorandum to the appropriate governments in a circular telegram of February 20, 7 p. m. (560.A.L./2-1546).

⁴¹ The draft of this resolution is printed in telegram 797, January 22, p. 1277.

a useful purpose in initial stages but as being unnecessary for final recitation. Resolution comes before Council Monday afternoon. No discussion in full Council yet as to names of additional number of countries to be added to paragraph (f).

"The Economic and Social Council considering it essential that the cooperative economic measures already taken be supplemented by further international measures dealing directly with trade barriers and discriminations which stand in the way of an expansion of multi-lateral trade and by an undertaking on the part of nations to seek full employment, therefore

(a) Decides to call an international conference on trade and employment in the latter part of 1946, for the purpose of promoting the expansion of production, exchange and consumption of goods.

(b) Constitutes a Preparatory Committee to elaborate an annotated draft agenda including a draft convention for consideration by the conference, taking into account suggestions which may be submitted to it by the Economic and Social Council or by any member of the United Nations.

(c) Suggests, as a basis of discussion for the Preparatory Committee, that the agenda include the following topics:

(I) International agreement relating to the achievement and maintenance of high and stable levels of employment and economic activity.

(II) International agreement relating to regulations, restrictions and discriminations affecting international trade.

(III) International agreement relating to restrictive business practices.

(IV) International agreement relating to intergovernmental commodity arrangements.

(V) Establishment of an international trade organization, as a specialized agency of the United Nations, having responsibilities in the fields of (II), (III) and (IV) above.

(d) Requests the Preparatory Committee, when considering the foregoing items, to take into account the special conditions which prevail in countries whose manufacturing industry is still in its initial stages of development, and the questions that arise in connection with commodities which are subject to special problems of adjustment in international markets.

(e) Requests the Preparatory Committee to report to a subsequent session of the Council recommendations as to the date and place of the conference, the draft agenda including the draft convention, and as to what states, if any, not members of the United Nations, should be invited to the conference on trade and employment.

(f) Appoints as members of the Preparatory Committee the representatives of the governments of the following countries: Australia, Belgium-Luxembourg, Brazil, Canada, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, France, India, Netherlands, New Zealand, South Africa, USSR, the United States, the United Kingdom."

501.BD/2-1946: Telegram

The Acting United States Representative at the United Nations (Stevenson) to the Secretary of State

LONDON, February 19, 1946.

[Received February 20—10:19 a. m.]

2076. Delun 360. At public portion of ECOSOC meeting on Monday afternoon action was taken as described below:

Report of drafting subcommittee on Trade Conference resolution (E/22) was adopted without discussion. This is revision of latter part of original US proposal (E/4) and contains formula concerning agenda as follows: "ECOSOC suggests as a basis of discussion for the Preparatory Committee that the agenda include the following topics". Agenda topics thus suggested are same as those in earlier paper. It also contains extra paragraph as follows:

"ECOSOC requests the Preparatory Committee when considering the foregoing items to take into account the special conditions which prevail in countries whose manufacturing industry is still in its initial stages of development and the questions that arise in connection with commodities which are subject to special problems of adjustment in international markets". It furthermore gives names of members of Preparatory Committee which are same as countries listed in earlier paper. To these were added names of Chile, Norway and Lebanon. First two had been suggested by US and when Lebanon, Yugoslavia and Greece all sought seats either by addition to existing list or by substitution, Chairman's suggestion that Lebanon should also be added was accepted by Council.⁴²

[Here follows discussion of other ECOSOC matters.]

STEVENSON

560.AL/2-2346: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL

LONDON, February 12 [23?], 1946—noon.

US URGENT

[Received 12:12 p. m.]

2233. For Wilcox and Brown from Hawkins and Catudal.

1. We had long talk with officials from Board of Trade, Ministry of Works and Conference Department of Foreign Office regarding site for preliminary trade meeting. Board Trade is very reluctant to consider London for site for several reasons particularly that if meeting were held in London it would throw a double burden on their officials who would find it practically impossible to escape from their desks.

⁴² For the final text of the resolution as adopted by ECOSOC on February 18, see ESC (I), p. 173.

2. Accordingly British have diligently explored possibilities of holding meeting in a provincial town, but they would have a most serious problem of rehabilitating suitable hotels (which have in most cases been used for military purposes) in site chosen in view of acute shortage of labor and other difficulties. Oxford was abandoned because not available for more than two months. Thereupon, the possibilities of Brighton, Bournemouth, Blackpool and Southport were all investigated and for one reason or another each has been found impossible within time available. However, Ministry of Works people have heretofore been working on assumption meeting would take place around June 15.

3. Liesching indicated that the British would consider London as last resort if necessary rather than abandon idea of holding meeting in England but they would be most reluctant to do so. However, regardless of whether held in London or elsewhere, British feel it essential that a definite date be fixed immediately in order to give them time to make the necessary arrangements. If the meeting were delayed until August 1 or September 1 it would probably be possible to complete necessary rehabilitation work in one of provincial towns mentioned (probably Brighton or Southport) if they have notice at once.

4. British have asked us to get a decision from Washington on a definite date within a week in order to give them time to plan and make arrangements. Despite the desirability of holding preliminary trade conference at as early a date as possible, we are impelled, if we must fix on a definite date at this time, to suggest September 1 as perhaps the earliest date which we could feel reasonably certain would not have to be postponed. We consider that the British request for an immediate decision is a reasonable one in view of their manpower and other difficulties. The September 1 date would give sufficient leeway to permit delaying the issuance of public notices so as not to adversely complicate other current matters and would also give all countries available additional time for preliminary work. The Department will, of course be in a better position than we are to take into account all the factors involved. [Hawkins and Catudal.]

WINANT

560.AL/2-2346 : Telegram

*The Secretary of State to the Chargé in the United Kingdom
(Gallman)*

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, February 26, 1946—6 p. m.

1806. For Hawkins. Reurtel 2233, Feb 23. 1. Dept agrees Sept 1 satisfactory date which can reasonably be held to barring unforeseen developments re other current matters and you may so inform British.⁴³

2. Dept is considering desirability of holding a short session of Preparatory Committee to last not more than a few days sometime in June or July possibly immediately following second session of ECOSOC. Main purpose of meeting, which might be in New York, would be to exchange ideas on preparations for and procedural aspects of full meeting in September. Additional purposes would be to bring out general reactions to Proposals and to offset somewhat loss in sense of urgency and importance tending to result from postponement of definitive negotiations until September while retaining advantages of having tariff negotiations in progress at same time as discussion on other points. Please telegraph your reactions to this proposal.

BYRNES

560.AL/2-2846: Telegram

The Chargé in the United Kingdom (Gallman) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

URGENT

LONDON, February 28, 1946—6 p. m.

[Received March 1—9:59 a. m.]

2439. For Wilcox, Stinebower and Brown from Hawkins. We transmitted Wednesday copies of February 6 memorandum on preparations of preliminary meeting to Shackle and Stirling, Board Trade, with covering note embodying substance of Paragraphs 3 and 4 of Department's circular telegram, February 12, 6 p. m. on which they will give us their comments soon; conveyed substance of Department's circular telegram, February 26, 4 p. m.;⁴⁴ informed them (Paragraph 1 urtel 1806, February 27) that Department considers September 1 satisfactory date for preliminary meeting barring unforeseen developments; and discussed the suggestion contained in Paragraph 2 urtel 1806, February 27 [26], concerning possible short session of Preparatory Committee to exchange ideas on preparations for full meeting in September and to bring out general reactions to our "proposals".

2. In light of informal discussion with Shackle and Stirling (Liesching being ill) and of previous consideration of subject Fowler, Catudal, and I have arrived at following conclusions; which represent only our own views.

a) Postponement of preliminary meeting to September 1 will give opportunity for more thorough preparatory work than would otherwise have been possible. The most important use to which this additional time could be put would be to get an agreement among the nuclear countries on our "proposals" with which only the British, Canadians and ourselves are thus far in agreement.

⁴³ Other discussions between the Embassy and the Board of Trade followed in March. London was finally selected as the site for the conference.

⁴⁴ See footnote 37, p. 1284.

b) We question whether a brief meeting in New York in June after the ECOSOC meeting would be well suited to this purpose. Some adverse reactions to our proposals seem inevitable. Since we could not safely let the matter rest until September meeting with important issues unresolved, we would probably have rather protracted discussions. Putting off settlement of these issues would transfer time-consuming debates to a time when we would be overwhelmed with difficult and detailed tariff negotiations, and the September meeting would be unduly protracted. There is also the consideration that our negotiating position tends to be stronger if we consider the principles independently of their detailed implementation. Unless our schedule of offers embodies maximum reductions on all key items of interest to the countries concerned, they would be inclined, knowing our desire to have the general provisions accepted, to withhold their acceptance with the idea of putting pressure on US to make the maximum tariff reductions. However, whether or not this makes any real difference in negotiating position, this mixing of negotiations on general provisions and schedules at the September meeting would leave in a state of confusion the basis for the preparatory work of formulating the schedules. If there is doubt about the acceptability of essential principles on the part of important nuclear countries, there will be confusion and uncertainty in the preparations for the preliminary meeting. If, for example, important countries refuse to agree to the principle of general elimination of import restrictions, other countries will find it difficult to know how to formulate specific requests. Brazil might ask France for larger quotas whereas our requests of France might be based on assumption of a general prohibition against quantitative restrictions. For these reasons we believe June meeting as contemplated in your reference telegram could not and should not be a brief exploratory meeting but should seek to establish a solid basis for the negotiations in September by reaching firm agreement among all the nuclear countries on our "proposals". It is true that even if the principles were accepted they would not be binding until satisfactory schedules had been agreed to and they naturally will make the effectiveness of the general provisions contingent upon satisfactory schedules. But the important difference is that if the general principles of our "proposals" can be conditionally agreed to first, a solid basis for formulating requests and offers on items for the schedules would be established.

c) In view of above we feel that meeting should be held earlier than June. Also, if meeting held for purpose of accomplishing what we think should be accomplished started as late as June it could not be completed long enough before September meeting to give nuclear countries opportunity to complete their preparatory work on firm basis of general agreement on our "proposals". British consider it necessary to have meeting of Empire countries prior to September meeting and have previously talked in terms of holding such meeting some 6 weeks before the preliminary meeting. There might be insufficient time for this if meeting you have in mind started in June and were as protracted as we think it would be. Earlier meeting, held before Empire meeting, would enable us to help persuade any dissenting member of Empire to accept key points in our "proposals".

d) British raised manpower problem, with particular reference Empire countries, in connection with June or earlier meeting. While recognizing problem, we pointed out that only few people for each country required for such a meeting; that manpower requirements for preparatory work for September meeting would be reduced if it could be carried out on basis of solid commitments on essentials; and that meeting considerably earlier than June might be completed in time to permit Empire representatives to return, if necessary, to home bases to assist in preparatory work and then come to London for Empire meeting, which would be shorter than otherwise as result of prior meeting on principles, in advance of September meeting. Although bearing of timing and place of meeting on manpower problem not fully explored, there might be considerable saving for Empire countries and most of the others if meeting you have in mind could be held in London.

e) All the foregoing considerations seem to us to argue for holding the meeting in early April rather than June and in London rather than New York.

f) The draft charter referred to in the memorandum on preparations for and procedure at the conference should, we believe, be withheld from distribution until we have gotten further along with agreement on principles. The effect of distributing GA detailed draft in advance of general agreement on our "proposals" might be to make it more difficult to reach agreement on basic principles because countries not yet committed in principle would be inclined to study the details of the draft charter, and argue about them, before agreeing to the underlying principles.

g) As to the participants in the June or April meeting, we feel that all the countries on the ECOSOC Preparatory Committee should participate. The meeting would be called as a meeting of the ECOSOC

Preparatory Committee for the purpose of beginning to carry out the task assigned by the Council. The Committee might, at this meeting agree on an annotated draft agenda in line with our "proposals", leaving the draft convention for a later meeting. Prior to such later meeting the draft charter could be circulated to all members on the Committee. We should warn the nuclear countries prior to the first meeting of the Committee, that we intend to seek agreement at the meeting on our proposals so that delegates from those countries can come properly prepared.

h) There may be a by-product of considerable importance from an early meeting of the Preparatory Committee called for the purpose we have in mind. Although USSR has not to our knowledge accepted US invitation to preliminary meeting of nuclear countries, Soviet representative participated in ECOSOC discussion of resolution on trade conference and voted for resolution. USSR, being one of the countries designated to compose Preparatory Committee, would probably find it difficult to decline to participate in discussion of principles if this is handled by Preparatory Committee in carrying out its task rather than by a preliminary meeting called by the US. [Hawkins.]

GALLMAN

560.AL/3-446: Telegram

The Chargé in the United Kingdom (Gallman) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

US URGENT

LONDON, March 4, 1946—6 p. m.

[Received 7:22 p. m.]

2573. Embtel 2561, March 4, 4 p. m.⁴⁵ For Wilcox, Stinebower and Brown from Hawkins. In further discussions with Liesching and Shackle, they gave reasons for objecting both to the meeting in June, as suggested in urtel 1806 of Feb 27 [26] and to the earlier meeting for getting agreement on our proposals as suggested in Embtel 2439, of Feb 28, 6 p. m.

A specific objection to the June meeting is that the delegates attending the meeting of ECOSOC would not be those best qualified to consider and give their reactions to our proposals. They point out that only three Empire countries are represented on the Council and that if those not represented were to send representatives, they might be only officials designated for the purpose from diplomatic missions in Washington rather than qualified people who would be preoccupied at home with preparing for the September meeting.

⁴⁵ Not printed.

They think our memorandum on procedure,⁴⁶ supplemented as may be required, should be sufficient to cover the preparatory steps and that it would be preferable to seek agreement on substance through bilateral discussions with the countries concerned. They say that countries which have accepted invitations to the September meeting have implicitly agreed to our proposals as the basis for discussion and that this affords sufficient basis for the preparation of schedules.

The British also object that the Preparatory Committee, if it should meet in April or June, would take over the direction of procedural and other preparations for the September negotiations among the nuclear countries.

They also object to any meeting for the purpose of seeking agreement on principles, because they feel that the countries concerned will be more interested in the tariff schedules than in the general principles and will be much more inclined to accept the latter if the two are considered at the same time. They believe that there will be much greater pressure on countries to come to agreement at a more formal and more publicized meeting such as the one in September than would be the case in a meeting on principles alone. A further consideration is that they feel committed to have a meeting among the Empire countries before they participate in any broader international meeting on this subject, and they feel that it would be impracticable to hold the Empire meeting earlier than about 6 weeks in advance of the September meeting.

2. We are inclined to think that the underlying reason for the Board Trade attitude is that by getting a solid Empire front regarding US tariff rates of interest to the Empire before all of the Empire countries have agreed to the general provisions, they would enter the September negotiations with the strongest possible bargaining position to obtain maximum US tariff reductions. There was no indication that Liesching had consulted British officials concerned with ECOSOC matters. [Hawkins.]

GALLMAN

560.AL/3-446: Telegram

*The Secretary of State to the Chargé in the United Kingdom
(Gallman)*

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, March 13, 1946—8 p. m.

2268. For Hawkins. 1. We have been giving careful thought to viewpoints expressed in urtels 2439, Feb. 28, and 2573, Mar. 4, re April or June meeting on Proposals as such.

⁴⁶ i.e., the February 6 memorandum, p. 1280.

2. While we recognize advantages you cite of having wider agreement on principles before proceeding to definitive negotiations, general reactions from various Govts thus far lead us to belief that such agreement, which would have to be sought in absence of use of our tariff bargaining power, might be extremely difficult to get. Failure to get it might put us in worse position than before. We also feel that meeting to discuss Proposals in full detail could not well be superficial affair but would require fairly large preparations. This might slow down preparatory work for detailed negotiations in September. On balance, therefore, we are inclined to agree with Liesching that meeting to discuss Proposals as such should not be held.

3. Re meeting to discuss procedures only, we have consulted Canadians who thought this would be desirable. We do not feel strongly about it, however, and in view of British opposition are inclined to drop idea unless you think it should be explored further with British.

4. An alternative to foregoing might be to begin definitive discussions on or before August 1 instead of September 1 and to use first month or six weeks to negotiate, and get out of the way if possible, those parts of Proposals dealing with surplus commodities, cartels, employment measures and structure of the international organization, leaving until last the general provisions relating to tariffs, quotas and closely related matters and the detailed tariff negotiations. Advantages of this would be 1) discussions could begin earlier even though preparations for tariff negotiations were not completed here, 2) manpower and housing situation would be eased to extent Govts used different people for different subjects, and 3) procedurally, meeting might be easier to handle by eliminating need for simultaneous discussion of all matters including detailed tariff negotiations. At same time, discussion of nontrade-barrier provisions would not be so far removed in time from tariff negotiations as in your proposals.

Please discuss this with British if you think desirable and in any event give us your own reaction.

BYRNES

560.AL/3-2046 : Telegram

The Chargé in the United Kingdom (Gallman) to the Secretary of State

SECRET US URGENT

LONDON, March 20, 1946—3 p. m.

[Received March 21—2:40 p. m.]

3237. From Hawkins to Clayton, Wilcox, Stinebower, and Brown. Following are our reactions to ideas in urtel 2268, March 13, 8 p. m.:

1. With regard to your point that it would be difficult to get wide agreement on principles in absence of use of our tariff bargaining power, we recognize that negotiated tariff schedules embodying not only our own offers but the aggregate offers of other nuclear countries, would undoubtedly exert a favorable psychological influence on countries otherwise reluctant to accept certain of our "proposals", e.g., general abolition of quantitative restrictions. However, we think that a separate meeting on the "proposals" in advance of tariff negotiations which afforded opportunity for thorough elucidation and discussion would result in a very large measure of, although probably not complete, agreement. The "proposals" on first study seem complicated and the flexibility provided to meet varying situations in which countries find themselves may easily be overlooked. A good deal of explanation and discussion will be necessary before general acceptance can be expected and we doubt whether this could be done effectively through bilateral discussions which would involve uneconomical use of our manpower and which probably would not be taken seriously enough by the other parties. Much of this time-consuming work could be disposed of and a large measure of agreement could be reached through round-table discussions before the nuclear negotiating meeting takes up its heavy load. Under this procedure the bargaining power of tariff schedules would not be wasted on matters concerning which wide agreement is possible in absence of tariff schedules; it would be conserved for the few precise issues still unresolved.

2. A further consideration to which neither we nor the Brit may have given sufficient attention is the need for carrying out the ECOSOC resolution establishing the preparatory committee to prepare an annotated draft agenda and draft convention as it seems to us that when the preparatory committee meets it must necessarily discuss and attempt to obtain at least tentative agreement on bases and principles if it is to carry out its assigned task. The first meeting of this committee, called to work out the annotated draft agenda, would naturally afford what seems to us an ideal opportunity to seek to obtain a large measure of, although probably not complete, agreement on our "proposals" in advance of tariff negotiations.

3. In the light of the foregoing, the following procedural steps, in chronological order, are suggested :

(a) Meeting of ECOSOC preparatory committee to prepare annotated agenda. In this meeting we would seek to get the largest possible measure of agreement of our "proposals" without, however, setting up complete agreement as our goal (this reflects a change in our thinking, in the light of urtel 2268, from that expressed in our tel 2439, 28th, 6 p. m.). Any unsettled points of substance would be put over for further consideration, particularly in the nuclear meeting, when they could be considered in relation to the overall results attained in those negotiations. Even though agreement was not reached on all points at the initial meeting of the preparatory committee we would make the point that on preparing schedules for the nuclear negotiating meeting, tariff rates only should be considered; that non-tariff trade controls should be dealt with in the general provisions to be embodied in the convention;

(b) At or near the end of the preparatory committee meeting the US would distribute its draft convention or "charter" for consideration first at the nuclear meeting and later by the preparatory committee. The draft convention would, of course, deal with any unresolved points in accordance with our own views.

(c) Nuclear meeting to negotiate tariff schedules and convention would meet after sufficient lapse of time to permit adequate preparatory work. Non-nuclear members of the preparatory committee could attend nuclear meeting and participate in consideration of the convention, but since the nuclear meeting may last for 3 or 4 months, these members might prefer to await the outcome of the nuclear negotiations before attending another meeting of the preparatory committee at which the text of the convention worked out by the nuclear group would be gone over by the full committee.

4. If the Dept should view favorably program along the above lines our first task would be to try to convince Brit of desirability of separating negotiations on schedules from those on the principles to the extent above suggested. This might be possible since we feel a very strong case can be made for it. Even if Board of Trade should continue to object it seems unlikely that Brit Govt as a whole would oppose earlier meeting of ECOSOC committee for above purpose if a considerable number of the countries concerned should advocate it with or without a lead from us.

5. There would remain the question timing. If the nuclear meeting is to be held in September the Brit would raise objections to prior consideration of our "proposals" on the ground that it would take the time of people in many countries who are busily engaged in preparing for the Sept negotiations. They might be persuaded to drop this objection if we could convince them of the desirability of trying to get the maximum possible agreement on the "proposals" prior to the nuclear negotiations, but in that event they might take the view that interruption resulting from meeting on principles would require more time for preparatory work for nuclear meeting and consequently suggest that the Sept meeting be postponed in order to allow for this. However, this would provide a better reason for postponement than domestic considerations (our 2907, Mar 12)⁴⁷ in the event the Dept should consider a few months delay desirable on the latter grounds.

6. The foregoing suggestions differ from your ideas for an August 1st meeting in that we would not deliberately hold over until the nuclear meeting the difficult and important section on non-tariff trade barriers but would try beforehand to narrow down to precise points the issues arising in that section, or even to resolve them. They resolve them. They differ also in that the formal setting of the discussions we contemplate would be the first meeting of the preparatory committee called to work out a draft annotated agenda. This distinction seems important to us for the reason that it should be relatively easy to postpone the attempt to resolve any matters of critical importance to the nuclear meeting. If the first meeting of the preparatory committee did not result in agreement on a draft annotated agenda satisfactory to us it should be relatively easy also to get the meeting adjourned until sufficient progress had been made in the nuclear negotiations to insure satisfactory results at second meeting of the preparatory committee. On the assumption of a Sept negotiating meeting we think the timing of your August meeting would come too late to lay the basis for the preparatory work on schedules.

⁴⁷ Not printed.

7. In general the consideration that dominates our thinking on these matters is the need for thorough and careful preparation for an undertaking of such great complexity and difficulty as the nuclear meeting most certainly will prove to be. In our minds this consideration outweighs even the objections to postponing the nuclear meeting if this should prove to be necessary.

8. We have not discussed the foregoing with the Brit. Nor have we as yet advised the Brit of your acceptance of London as a site as authorized in your 2291, Mar 14⁴⁸ as this would cause steps to be taken and commitments to be made on the basis of Sept as the definite and final time for the nuclear meeting. We cannot, however, delay advising the Brit very long and it is therefore important that decisions be reached as soon as possible. [Hawkins.]

GALLMAN

560.AL/3-2146: Telegram

The Chargé in the United Kingdom (Gallman) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

US URGENT

LONDON, March 21, 1946—6 p. m.

[Received March 21—5:30 p. m.]

3259. For Wilcox, Stinebower, and Brown from Hawkins. Peterson, Fowler and Hawkins attended a meeting held in Board of Trade today on invitation of Liesching to discuss various matters relating to Trade and Employment Conference and preliminary meeting as follows:

⁴⁸ Not printed.

(1) Your procedural memorandum February 6 is considered by the British to be satisfactory. They have been advised by the Government of India that latter has not yet received it and ask that prompt steps be taken to provide the Indian Government with copies. We have sent copy of Dept's instruction and memorandum open airmail in event Dept's instruction to New Delhi was delayed.

(2) They showed us the text of a tentative draft statement intended to be made in the House of Commons probably during the first week in April describing the preliminary meeting and what is expected to be accomplished by it and at the trade and employment conference and inviting interested parties including organizations such as the Federation of British Industries, National Union of Manufacturers and Trades Union Congress to make known their views re concessions to be sought and offered. This procedural step corresponds roughly to our public notice of intention to negotiate.

(3) It should be noted that the statement is based upon the assumption that the preliminary meeting will begin in September and that our public notice and list of products will be published about the middle of May. We made a few suggestions particularly in a sentence calling for views concerning preferences now accorded to British products in Commonwealth and Empire markets having in mind possible reactions in the US and in the other countries which they indicated would be adopted.

(4) They said that in making the above statement they must be able to state the time and place for the meeting. Having in mind the considerations set forth in our 3237, March 21 we said that we had already indicated our agreement to September as the date of the preliminary meeting and felt sure that there would be definite agreement on London as a site but that in order to make assurance doubly sure we would communicate our final position to them on these points before the statement is to be made in the House.

[Here follows discussion of other subjects.]

[Hawkins]
GALLMAN

560.AL/3-2046 : Telegram

*The Secretary of State to the Chargé in the United Kingdom
(Gallman)*

SECRET U.S. URGENT

WASHINGTON, March 27, 1946—6 p. m.

2713. For Hawkins from Wilcox, Stinebower and Brown. Will discuss with Clayton ideas urtel 3237 Mar 20 and their relation to points your letter Mar 6.⁴⁹ Meanwhile, following represents our own thinking:

⁴⁹ Letter of March 6 not found in Department files.

1. Success our plans will ultimately depend extent US tariff reduction and no amount preparation for meeting will compensate for inadequate contribution by us. This outweighs every other consideration.

2. Therefore, until beginning definitive negotiations first care must be on home front, and neither Clayton, Wilcox, Brown or key people in other agencies can afford long absence from Washington, or divert attention to other issues, during critical period between public notice and close hearings. Present timetable May 1–Aug 1.

3. International gathering on Proposals before end of hearings would be misconstrued by domestic opponents. While we would not be discussing tariff concessions, this could not easily be proved, and pressures would mount for commitments against action on specific items. If effective such pressures could prove fatal.

4. We think meeting on Proposals as such would be crucial since it would inevitably influence and possibly determine fate of subsequent negotiations. We must therefore assess its negotiating risks as well as advantages. We doubt that we could postpone real issues to later negotiations and fear we would be forced to compromise principles for which we could possibly have obtained general approval with adequate tariff inducements. Public reaction to inconclusive adjournment should also be considered. Moreover, to seek wide agreement on principles, postponing until some later date any real demonstration of our concrete tariff contributions would, we fear, deepen skepticism our intentions undoubtedly existing some quarters.

5. Suggested procedure whereby Preparatory Committee refers matters to nuclear group and vice versa tends sharpen and preserve distinction between two groups, which we hope can be eliminated later (see last para Undel 133, Jan 28 and first para Undel 137, Jan 29).⁵⁰

6. Meeting on Proposals would delay preparation tariff requests and offers. Natural tendency would be to await outcome of meeting.

7. Believe meeting Preparatory Committee on principles, followed after interval by meeting nuclear group to conduct negotiations, followed by another meeting Preparatory Committee, would distract and confuse and fail to achieve momentum which should develop from single meeting.

8. We fully agree need for thorough preparation to avoid breakdown in extremely difficult and complicated negotiating task ahead. However, believe this can best be done bilaterally, which may sometimes (e.g., current French discussions) offer possibility major results because of financial tie-in.

⁵⁰ Telegram Undel 133 not found in Department files; telegram Undel 137 not printed.

9. Whatever course is decided upon should be decided soon and adhered to thereafter. We suggest following:

a. All members Preparatory Committee, which by then might be identical nuclear group, should meet London August 1 to agree text Charter and negotiate Protocol Trade Barriers referred to memo Feb 6. Discussions trade barriers probably would not start until Sept 1.

b. We would advance preparations for meeting by all practicable means, including bilateral discussions and advance transmittal draft Charter other countries.

10. We hope discuss with you Mar 29, by teletype, all these matters in more detail.⁵¹ [Wilcox, Stinebower and Brown.]

BYRNES

560.AL/4-246

*The Director of the Office of International Trade Policy (Wilcox) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs (Clayton)*⁵²

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] April 2, 1946.

We have reached the point in our trade program where a definite date (subject to change only if the British loan fails or is unduly delayed)⁵³ must be set for the preliminary trade meeting. Physical and other preparations for the meeting require this, and the British have asked us for an immediate answer.

When a date is agreed upon, the British plan to announce it in Parliament together with an invitation to industry and trade (in general terms without mention of specific products) to express their views on concessions to be asked and offered.

I recommend that we set September 1 as the definite date for the opening of the meeting. This would mean that our public notice of intention to negotiate should be issued not later than June 1. A detailed time-table is set out in the attached memorandum.

Before we commit ourselves to this time-table, however, I think we should take precautions to be sure we can carry through notwithstanding the pressures which are certain to develop when our public notice is issued.

You have read Harry Hawkins' letter to you on this subject. Two ⁵¹ The teletype conference took place on March 30, but no record of it has been found.

⁵² Marginal notation by John M. Leddy, Adviser on general commercial policy, Division of Commercial Policy: "Read to Mr. Clayton by Mr. Wilcox, Apr. 3, '46".

⁵³ For documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. vi, pp. 1 ff.

points stand out. 1) We must be sure that, once we have agreed to September 1, we are not going to let the fear of political pressures result in postponement of the public notice until after the elections. 2) We must be sure that such pressures in the months following public notice will not be permitted to hamper the operation of the trade-agreements organization and thus defeat our objectives.

With this in mind, I have prepared the attached memorandum to the President⁵⁴ which I feel should be discussed personally with him by the Secretary or the Acting Secretary and yourself. Only in this way, I believe, can we be reasonably certain that we will not be saddled with commitments that could wreck the whole program.

The British have asked us for a reply by April 4.⁵⁵

[Annex]

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] April 2, 1946.

TIME-TABLE OF PREPARATIONS FOR PRELIMINARY MEETING ON TRADE AND EMPLOYMENT

The following is a tentative time-table for completion of the various stages of preparation for the preliminary meeting on trade and employment.

March 15	Transmittal of draft Charter of ITO to TAC and subcommittees of ECEFP. This has been done.
April 15	TAC and subcommittees of ECEFP to complete consideration of draft Charter.
April 22	Transmittal of revised draft Charter to ECEFP.
April 23–May 7	ECEFP action on draft Charter.
May 15–30	Issuance of public notice of intention to negotiate.
May 22	Transmittal of Charter recommended by ECEFP to countries members of ECOSOC Preparatory Committee (prior clearance with President).
July 1–15	Closing date for submission of briefs and applications to be heard.
July 15–30	Public hearings to begin.
Sept. 1	Preparatory Committee to begin consideration of non-trade barrier provisions of Charter.
Aug. 15–30	Public hearings to close.
Sept. 1–15	Final recommendations to President as a result of public hearings.
Sept. 15–Oct. 1	Trade-barrier negotiations to begin.

⁵⁴ Draft not printed; see memorandum of April 4, p. 1307.

⁵⁵ Reported by the London Embassy in telegram 3635, April 1, not printed; subsequently the Embassy reported that the British Government had agreed to postpone the proposed announcement in Parliament until April 15.

560.AL/5-446

Memorandum by the Department of State to President Truman

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] April 4, 1946.

Last December the United States invited fifteen countries to negotiate reciprocal reductions of tariffs and other trade barriers under the Trade Agreements Act.

This invitation was an essential part of the broad trade arrangements in our Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment, for which we obtained British support during the negotiation of the Financial Agreement.

We have now reached the point in our discussions and preparations where a definite date must be set for the opening of the international meeting at which trade-agreement negotiations will be conducted.

It is proposed that this meeting be held at London and that it begin on September 15. This date would be subject to change only if Congress fails to approve the Financial Agreement or unduly delays action on the agreement.

When Congress has approved the Financial Agreement, we would issue formal public notice of intention to conduct trade-agreement negotiations with the countries concerned. This notice, which is required under the Trade Agreements Act, should be issued not later than June 15 in order that there will be ample time to complete our preparations for the September meeting.

The notice would be accompanied by a list of products on which tariff concessions would be considered and the usual public hearings held. This list will be submitted to you for consideration before publication.

Experience has shown that once this list is published, minority interests will put strong pressure on the Administration for commitments that particular tariff rates will not be cut.

The dangers in this situation are very real. Commitments not to reduce the tariff on particular items, on which concessions are considered essential by the other countries concerned, might easily defeat the objectives of the Trade Agreements Act, wreck the pending negotiations, and bring to nothing our Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment.

These dangers can be guarded against if all those concerned are prepared to meet them. It is suggested, therefore, that you may wish to warn all interested members of the Cabinet and to indicate to them the only safe procedure to be followed in dealing with representations of the kind described. The main points are as follows :

1. Because of the number of countries involved, the list of products will necessarily be long and will include many items likely to arouse vigorous opposition by special interests. Cabinet members are therefore likely to be approached by persons seeking commitments against action on particular rates of duty. It is of vital importance that no such commitments be given.

2. Under trade-agreements procedures, no decisions can be made until after all interested parties have had an opportunity to present views at the public hearings and until the interested agencies of the Government have been fully consulted as provided by law. The mechanism for this consultation is the Interdepartmental Trade Agreements Committee.

3. It should be explained to persons protesting possible tariff cuts that the Administration must consider all United States interests before reaching a decision on a particular rate of duty, and must so weigh the various interests as to serve the national interest as a whole. Such persons can be assured that their interests will be given the most careful consideration.

4. Whatever the concessions eventually made, the United States will insist upon including in the prospective trade arrangements an adequate "escape clause" which will permit this country to take prompt and effective action in any emergency. This should go far to allay reasonable fears of injury to established industries.

In this connection it may be useful to refer to your letter of May 25, 1945 to Speaker Rayburn, in which you said "I have had drawn to my attention statements to the effect that this increased authority [under the Trade Agreements Act] might be used in such a way as to endanger or 'trade out' segments of American industry, American agriculture, or American labor. No such action was taken under President Roosevelt and Cordell Hull, and no such action will take place under my presidency."

5. The actual concessions to be granted and received will not become known until the negotiations are completed and the resulting agreement published. This will probably not be until the end of this year and possibly not until early next year.

If you approve, it is proposed to inform the other interested governments that September 15 is a satisfactory date for the opening of the trade meeting, it being understood that our formal public notice and accompanying list of products will be issued not later than June 15, barring unforeseen developments in connection with the Financial Agreement.⁵⁶

560.AL/4-546

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of International Trade Policy (Wilcox) to the Assistant Secretary of State (Clayton)

[WASHINGTON,] April 5, 1946.

The attached telegram⁵⁷ indicates that British Cabinet members are finding it increasingly difficult to delay some public announce-⁵⁶ It cannot be determined precisely when this memorandum was sent to President Truman; it occurred in the week between April 5 and April 12.

⁵⁷ Refers apparently to London's telegram 3635, April 1, 7 p. m.; see footnote 55, p. 1306.

ment about the date of our preparatory trade negotiations. Yesterday morning Mr. Fowler telephoned to me from London to say that the Government wanted to make an announcement in the House of Commons next Monday, April 8. On the basis of the discussion which we had in your office the night before, I asked him to try and get a postponement. As the attached telegram relates,⁵⁸ the Embassy was able to get a postponement for a week but the British are insistent on making an announcement on April 15, and the Embassy needs word from us not later than Thursday morning April 11. That means that it is important for us to make every effort to get the President's approval for September 15 in time for us to send a telegram on Wednesday, April 10.

560.AL/4-146 : Telegram

*The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom
(Winant)*

SECRET

WASHINGTON, April 9, 1946—6 p. m.

NIACT

US URGENT

3060. For Hawkins. Urtel 3635, Apr 1.⁵⁹ Please inform Brit that they can make no statement on our authority at this time regarding approx date preliminary trade meeting, that we will give them a definite answer by Apr 16 or 17 and that decision will probably be to postpone negotiating meeting until early 1947.

BYRNES

560.AL/4-1046

Memorandum of Transatlantic Telephone Conversation, by the Chief of the Division of Commercial Policy (Brown)

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] April 10, 1946.

Participants: Mr. Harry C. Hawkins, Counselor for Economic Affairs, American Embassy, London
Mr. Brown, CP

I explained to Mr. Hawkins that the last sentence of our telegram no. 3060, dated April 9, to the effect that the decision was likely to be for postponement of the trade-agreement negotiations, was purely for his information. He said that he had to tell the British this in any event. I explained that the motive behind any postponement would be the desire, at the highest level in the Department, to put us in the position to make the best offers we could when the time came.

⁵⁸ The drafting is not clear here. Apparently "as the attached telegram relates" refers to a marginal notation on London's telegram 3635; see footnote 55, p. 1306.

⁵⁹ Not printed.

Mr. Hawkins said that point of view would be helpful to him. He also said he understood that the way was still open to a preliminary conference on the Proposals.

Mr. Hawkins said the British were pretty upset at the news and that he was working out alternative time-tables with them which he would cable promptly. He would like an early decision on whether a preliminary meeting on the Proposals should be held and when.

560.AL/4-1046: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

SECRET
 NIACF

US URGENT

LONDON, April 10, 1946—9 p. m.
 [Received April 10—5:10 p. m.]

4000. For Wilcox and Brown. 1. Helmore BOT given close paraphrase Deptel 3060, April 9. Liesching absent on leave.

2. Helmore was somewhat disturbed. He pointed out that in good faith BOT had gone some distance in sending out official letters to elicit points of industry and trade interest in nuclear meeting heretofore contemplated for September.

3. Despite possibility that nuclear meeting may be delayed several months, he felt that Ministers would consider it necessary to proceed with Parliamentary statement.

Reference to Paragraph 2 Embtel 3259, March 21 and statement discussed in our teletype conversation March 30. Accordingly draft of statement was revised leaving out dates of either Empire or nuclear meeting and indicating that in view of large amount of preparatory work to be done it should proceed expeditiously particularly with respect to Empire meeting. Revised British statement is pointed primarily toward Empire meeting which is to precede nuclear meeting. Plan is that revised statement will be made in Parliament April 15. It would fit either the eventuality of a September meeting or deferring meeting for several months.

4. Helmore pointed out that if they postpone making of statement until they have our final decision next opportunity for making it would be April 29 because of Parliamentary procedure and Easter Holiday. If decision were to hold meeting in September, Empire meeting would be held July 1 and statement made as late as April 29 would seriously cut down time available to prepare for Empire meeting. British originally contemplated that preparatory work would be for both Empire and nuclear meeting and would have to be completed before Empire meeting convenes as there would be very little time left if negotiating meeting held in September.

5. In suggesting revisions to Parliamentary statement we sought to avoid any basis for an impression in US that British in initiating consultations with the trade were obtaining a head start over American interests. If American interests should press for opportunities to be heard because British trade interests are being consulted, it can be pointed out that British procedure has to take account of Empire meeting which will precede nuclear meeting.

6. Helmore thought that if our decision should be to defer nuclear meeting Empire meeting would be correspondingly deferred but Parliamentary statement would do no harm.

7. Helmore urges strongly that whatever decision is reached on time for nuclear meeting, presentation of lists of concessions desired by each country should not be deferred as these are needed for preparatory work on schedules of offers. He felt that whatever decision is reached on the time for the nuclear meeting the preparatory work should be pushed steadily ahead to greatest extent possible. In our recent meetings with British there has been evident concern over possibilities of [loss of?] momentum in this whole program. We indicated that we saw no objection to going forward immediately with preparation and presentation of tentative request lists on understanding that changes and additions could be made after we had held our hearings.⁶⁰

WINANT

611.0031/4-1146

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State (Clayton) to the Secretary of State

[WASHINGTON,] April 11, 1946.

In your foreword to the Trade Proposals last December you urged all countries to prepare immediately for a World Conference to meet "not later than the summer of 1946." On that schedule, we said that trade agreement negotiations would start in March 1946. They have now been postponed to September. The considerations for holding to this date are:

⁶⁰ The Embassy at London cabled the Department in telegram 4018, April 11, 11 a. m., that "BOT informed us Herbert Morrison (supplementing Embtel 4000, April 10) Lord President of Council, decided to make in Parliament revised statement as described reference telegram. Text will be cabled April 15 when released." (560.AL/4-1146)

1. Public opinion is prepared for action. We have enlisted the enthusiastic support of business, farm, labor, church, peace, and women's organizations for the Trade Agreements renewal, the British loan, and the Trade Proposals mainly on the ground that we planned to expand world trade. If we delay further, our friends will be discouraged and even resentful and we may lose their strong backing.

2. We have delivered our Proposals to all other governments. We have persuaded Britain, France, and Belgium publicly to endorse them. On our urging, the Economic and Social Council has voted unanimously to call the World Conference to meet "in the latter part of 1946." Fourteen countries have accepted our invitation to meet for tariff negotiations and, in accordance with our suggestions, are actively preparing for them. If we delay now, this momentum will be lost, other countries will question our intentions, they will doubt that they can depend on us to carry through, and we may forfeit our leadership in trade policy.

3. The enlarged trade agreements authority will be a year old in June. If we put off announcement of negotiations until November, we cannot meet to negotiate until March 1947, a full year from the date we first suggested and almost two years after the renewal of the Act. That meeting will take several months. The new agreements, the World Conference, and the submission of the resulting World Trade Charter for ratification will therefore come dangerously close to the next renewal of the Trade Agreements Act and to the election of 1948.

4. Other countries are now deciding on trade policy. Pressures for increased barriers to American trade are strong. Our active sponsorship of the Proposals has temporarily restrained a new flood of trade restrictions abroad. If we delay further, the dam may break. We run the risk of losing all of the concessions we have sought.

611.0031/4-1246

Memorandum by President Truman to the Secretary of State

WASHINGTON, April 12, 1946.

I read your memorandum of the fourth in regard to Trade-agreement Negotiations with a lot of interest and I approve your suggestions on informing the other Governments.

Have you any objection to my reading your whole memorandum to the Big Four next Monday.⁶¹

H[ARRY] S. T[RUMAN]

⁶¹ April 15.

560.AL/4-1446

Memorandum of Transatlantic Telephone Conversation, by the Director of the Office of International Trade Policy (Wilcox)

[WASHINGTON,] April 14, 1946—11 a. m.

Participants: Harry C. Hawkins, American Embassy, London
Clair Wilcox, ITP

Harry Hawkins reported that American correspondents in London said that the President and the Secretary of State had decided to postpone tariff announcements and negotiations until after the election. Herbert Morrison was planning to make a statement in Parliament Monday, April 15,⁶² leaving all dates indefinite. Hawkins said it would be embarrassing to the British Government if a decision had been made and announced in Washington and they were not informed.

I assured Mr. Hawkins that no decision would be made until Monday, April 15, and that we would cable him the results on Tuesday, April 16.

Hawkins urged that no statement be made here until the British are informed so that the release in both countries can be simultaneous.

560.AL/4-1846: Telegram

*The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom
(Winant)*

SECRET U.S. URGENT

WASHINGTON, April 18, 1946—7 p. m.

3329. For Hawkins from Wilcox. Decision has been made to postpone negotiating meeting until next year. No announcement being made by Department. Will send you recommended program as soon as possible. [Wilcox.]

BYRNES

560.AL/4-2346

The Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Harriman) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

Moscow, April 23, 1946.

No. 51

The Ambassador has the honor to refer to the Department's secret instruction no. 969 of January 17⁶³ transmitting documents prepared for inter-Departmental use concerning items for consideration in connection with possible concessions in a trade agreement with the Soviet Union.

⁶² Parliamentary Debates, House of Commons, 5th Series, vol. 421, col. 2330.⁶³ Not printed.

In this instruction, the Department invited the Mission's comments and suggestions on the documents in question and listed the following specific points in this connection :

(1) Is it likely that the U.S.S.R. will not be interested in tariff reductions or bindings on some of the items to be listed ?

(2) Are there any other items for which the U.S.S.R. might desire tariff concessions from the United States ?

(3) Are there any other forms which might be used to obtain a quid pro quo from the U.S.S.R. in return for tariff reductions ?

1. The answer to the first of these questions is as follows : In general we do not believe that the Soviet Union is much interested in American tariff rates. Not only have a large portion of its exports to the United States always been duty free, but its entire relationship to foreign tariffs is different from that of capitalist countries. From the Soviet standpoint, exports to other countries are not desirable. They represent a sacrifice to the Soviet State. Their purpose, in the case of exports to the advanced western nations, is only to bring in foreign exchange. Wherever tariff duties can be passed on to the consumer (in other words, wherever Soviet goods dominate the market), the Soviet Government is not interested in them. Their interest arises only in cases in which they are forced to take a lower compensation in foreign exchange than would have been the case had there been no duties or had the duties been lower. Just what such price differences could conceivably amount to in case of trade with America, the Department will be able to calculate. According to our estimate, however, they could not amount to more than a few hundred thousand dollars in the very utmost. Compared to questions of credit, this is an item of almost negligible significance. The amount of credit we propose to give to Russia merely in connection with the sale of surplus property alone would probably compensate for all Russia might suffer financially over several decades from American tariff duties. In these circumstances Soviet interest in our tariff rates is naturally minor, compared to their interest in credits.

The answer to the Department's first question can thus be broken down as follows :

A. With respect to a number of the items listed for tariff reductions or bindings, these items are now deficit in the U.S.S.R. and the Russians will have only a remote interest in them.

B. With respect to other items, the Russians will not be interested, because the duty can be passed on to the consumer.

C. With respect to the remaining items, the Russians will have a financial interest, but this interest will be so insignificant that it is not likely to play any appreciable part in Soviet policies on international economic matters.

2. In answer to the second of the Department's questions, this Mission knows of no other items for which the U.S.S.R. is likely to desire tariff concessions from the United States at present.

3. The third of the Department's questions raises again the problem of what quid pro quo the Soviet Union could give for tariff concessions on our part. The Embassy has now given careful thought to this question and wishes to advance the following views:

A. We reject the global purchase commitment as a satisfactory approach to this question. It is against the policy of the Soviet Government to publish either its foreign trade plans or the statistics of the actual trade conducted. To accept a global purchase commitment would be in effect to publish the main outlines of the annual import plan. We do not believe that in reality the Russians would ever engage themselves internationally to any import program which they had not already decided unilaterally to carry out. Furthermore, in the absence of adequate Soviet statistics, it would be a major job for a research institute to ascertain from the statistics of other countries to what extent such a commitment had actually been carried out. All in all, we consider the global purchase commitment impractical, unlikely to find Soviet agreement, and unlikely to bring about any appreciable increase in the volume or stability of Russian import trade.

B. We do not believe that there is any alternative quid pro quo which Russia could offer in the form of a treaty obligation which would be satisfactory as a means of fitting Russia into an international lowering of trade barriers. It can not be emphasized too often that the Soviet system is not a system of law as we know it. Public affairs in the Soviet Union are not conducted on the basis of binding norms laid down for given periods in the form of laws or regulations. Soviet authority is 98 per cent administrative, and the central power in Moscow insists on retaining effective freedom of administrative action in all matters of any importance to the State. The Soviet leaders will never consent to have their administrative freedom of action limited by any effective provisions of law or treaty. Just as their power over the individual is unlimited and subject to no restraints of law or usage, so in all other matters, including economic, they always assure to themselves freedom to treat every individual question, if they like, on its merits according to the political exigences of the moment. It is the experience of this Mission that the Soviet Government is profoundly reluctant to accept any treaty obligations which could possibly bind it to act in hypothetical questions in ways which might run contrary to the interests of the Soviet State. In other words, they will generally obligate themselves to do only those things which they know they would otherwise have done anyway in their own interests; and even these obligations they will undertake only when they can see substantial concessions to be gained thereby. For these reasons, we do not feel that there are any concessions which the Soviet Government could and would make by way of treaty obligations which could essentially alter existing Soviet practice in a way which would be beneficial to other countries. This judgment finds support in the entire history of the foreign economic relations of the Soviet State. We could point to no instance in which general obligations assumed by the Soviet Government with respect to the treatment of the goods or nationals of foreign countries have ever been of appreciable value to the foreign nation concerned.

C. Since the character of Russia's activities in the field of foreign trade is going to be determined in any case on day by day administrative actions of the Soviet authorities, the motives of which will never be discussed with foreign countries, it is our belief that each country must remain the judge of the degree to which Soviet trade practices meet its requirements in the line of international economic collaboration. We would therefore recommend that the question of tariff concessions to the Soviet Union be left as a question to be settled individually between the U.S.S.R. and each of the countries with which Russia may conduct trade.

D. In the case of the United States we feel that the following procedure should be adopted. If, as we assume to be the case, the Trade Agreements Act does not permit us to extend our minimum tariff concessions to the Soviet Union except in pursuance to treaty obligations, then we should recognize frankly that the Act as it stands does not fit the case of a country which has a complete government monopoly of foreign trade. We should then initiate legislation which would give the executive branch of our Government the authority to extend or withhold tariff concessions (within the limits of the Trade Agreements Act) at its own discretion in the case of countries having a complete governmental monopoly of foreign trade—such concessions to be granted or withheld in accordance with the degree of helpfulness and willingness to collaborate which we meet at the hands of the country in question. Such legislation would enable us to make the initial gesture of extending our lowest tariff concessions to the Soviet Union, and we feel that this should be done. It would also enable us to withdraw these concessions in the event that Soviet trade practices might not, in our opinion, justify their retention or that Russia should decline to cooperate with an international trade organization. It would leave our Government the judge of whether or not Soviet collaboration in international economic matters was satisfactory and would obviate all wrangling with the Russians over the question of whether treaty provisions had been fulfilled.

E. We wish to reiterate, however, that this a matter of small importance to the Russians; and it is by no means certain that any action on our part either in the granting or withholding of tariff concessions would have any appreciable influence on Russian economic policies. The main points in our trade with Russia are Russian need for our products, our willingness to grant credit and our willingness to accept gold as a medium of exchange. Of these, the first two are of far the greater importance.

560.AL/4-2446: Telegram

The Chargé in the United Kingdom (Gallman) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

LONDON, April 24, 1946—5 p. m.

[Received April 25—12:18 p. m.]

4423. For Wilcox and Brown from Hawkins. 1. We advised Liesching and his colleagues Tuesday morning of the decision to postpone negotiating meeting. Re Dept's 3329, April 18, 7 p.m.

2. Liesching read from a long telegram from Magowan⁶⁴ giving the story as he had obtained it from you and therefore knew in some detail the reasons for postponement, including the fact that the unexpected delay in getting congressional approval of the loan had affected the time-table.⁶⁵ Liesching assumed public statement would sooner or later have to be made and thought best reason to give for delay would be need for more preparation. He felt, however, that it would be necessary to tell Dominion Government officials in conference [confidence] the considerations as outlined by you to Magowan, on which decision to postpone was based. We told him we expected to hear from you shortly on the question of when and in what terms a public statement should be made.

⁶⁴ Sir John Magowan, British Minister in the United States.

⁶⁵ The Administration at this time viewed the loan as the economic fuel necessary to revitalize trade, to secure British acquiescence in American views on commercial policy, and to secure a more favorable position for the United States vis-à-vis the sterling bloc's trade preference system. Despite Administration pressure, however, Congress appeared reluctant to move on the issue. A number of factors besides traditional national attitudes were involved in Congressional resistance to the proposed loan, some Congressmen feeling that the interest rates were too low, others believing that the Bretton Woods institutions should be called on rather than the United States, and still others preferring the multilateral rather than the bilateral approach to the whole loan question. For a detailed analysis, see Gardner, Sterling-Dollar Diplomacy, pp. 236-254. For documentation regarding the Bretton Woods institutions, see pp. 1384 ff.

3. The British then raised the question of what our program should be between now and the negotiating meeting next year. We said your telegram indicated that a recommended program would be sent to us as soon as possible. They then commented on ideas regarding the program which apparently had come up in your discussion with Magowan. They thought that perhaps the questions of organization and commodity policy, which you apparently had mentioned to Magowan as the subject matter for interim discussion, would not be very hearty fare for the ECOSOC Preparatory Committee.

4. Liesching seemed to take it for granted that the next step of a formal character would be the convening of the ECOSOC Preparatory Committee; that this would assist in maintaining momentum of program. He inquired who would take the initiative in convening the committee. We surmised that US would. The British also raised the question whether it would not be possible to accomplish a good deal in getting understanding and acceptance of our "proposals" by continuing bilateral discussions with the various countries that will participate in the nuclear meeting.

5. The British strongly urged that there be no let-up in the preparation of request lists by the US and all other countries. They wanted to know whether you could give them a date when the US request lists will be sent out stating that it is essential for the British Empire countries to have them prior to the Empire meeting.

6. The British are not clear now when the Empire meeting will be held but ask us to remember in considering the timing of any other meetings that an Empire meeting has to be worked in somewhere. They mentioned January 1 as a possible date.

7. The British asked the status of the draft convention [charter]. We told them it was far advanced. In accordance with your instruction 6534, March 20, we have not, of course, transmitted the draft or indicated that we have it.

8. Please cable comment on initiative paragraph 4 and date for US lists paragraph 5. [Hawkins.]

GALLMAN

560.AL/4-2546 : Telegram

*The Acting Secretary of State to the Chargé in the United Kingdom
(Gallman)*

SECRET US URGENT WASHINGTON, April 25, 1946—4 p. m.

3496. For Hawkins. Deptel 3329, Apr 18. In view postponement negotiating meeting Dept proposes following plan of action designed to maintain momentum and interest both here and in other countries :

1. Meeting ECOSOC Preparatory Committee would be held about July 1, in New York, as tentatively announced by Mudaliar at London meeting.⁶⁶ Purpose of meeting would be to organize Committee, to begin consideration of work assigned to it by ECOSOC, to discuss Proposals on general exploratory basis, and to establish drafting subcommittee of five or six countries (e.g. US, UK, USSR, Canada, France, Cuba) to draft detailed Charter of ITO on basis of Proposal discussions and drafts submitted by various countries (e.g. our draft of Charter⁶⁷). We would not set agreement on Proposals as avowed goal of this meeting but would hope that substantial measure of agreement on main lines of Proposals might emerge. Toward close of meeting we would transmit our draft Charter to all members Preparatory Committee and ask that it be considered by drafting subcommittee.

2. Drafting subcommittee would begin to meet shortly (say Aug 15) after close of Preparatory Committee meeting and would continue in session until drafting job had been completed and formally transmitted to all members of Preparatory Committee for study (say Oct 15).

3. After sufficient interval for such study, the length of which we could probably control, second meeting of Preparatory Committee would be called for thorough review and revision of draft Charter. This meeting could and probably should coincide with negotiating meeting on trade barriers (see 4, below).

4. Our public notice intention to negotiate would be issued about Nov 15, and negotiating meeting would be held about Mar 15.

5. During entire period covered by above points, and beginning as soon as technical preparations completed here, we would push program of transmitting other countries our preliminary and tentative requests for concessions on US exports and would continue urge other countries transmit their corresponding requests to us. We would also press forward with program of bilateral discussions on Proposals and our draft of Charter.

Foregoing is very similar plan urtel 3237, Mar 20 except for drafting subcommittee. Advantage of this device is that participation in drafting subcommittee commits no country definitively yet will in fact reveal extent of agreement among countries concerned and thus forward preparations. Essential therefore that countries selected for drafting subcommittee be important and representative, although all other members of Preparatory Committee would be free to make their views re Charter known to drafting subcommittee.

⁶⁶This refers to the first meeting of the Economic and Social Council, London, January 23–February 18, 1946. Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar of India was President of the Council.

⁶⁷For the progress in the formulation of the draft of a charter within the United States Government, see footnote 73, p. 1328.

Please discuss foregoing with Brit (in your discretion) and cable us urgently their views and your own. In discussing with Brit suggest you may wish emphasize point that agreement on Proposals will not be main object of July meeting (thus possibly forestalling demand for prior meeting of Empire countries) and that we envisage this meeting as relatively small, with not more than a few persons from each country attending.

ACHESON

560.AL/4-2946 : Telegram

The Chargé in the United Kingdom (Gallman) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

LONDON, April 29, 1946—8 p. m.
[Received April 29—5:41 p. m.]

4581. For Wilcox and Brown from Hawkins. 1. Discussed with Liesching and colleagues this morning plan outlined your 3496, April 25, 4 p. m. Their tentative reaction was generally that you had done a good job of thinking out the problem but they did not want to commit themselves in any way until they had opportunity for full consideration and for consultation with Ministers. Liesching pointed out that uncertainty regarding the loan legislation makes it difficult for them to make plans; that since British participation probably depends on getting the loan, Ministers may hesitate to commit themselves to a program which seems to disregard this. We suggested that the only course to pursue would be to make plans on the assumption of passage of the loan; that otherwise no definite plans could be made for weeks or months and the whole program would be delayed. Liesching remarked that if they proceed on this assumption, Ministers might feel that it would be necessary to make suitable reservations.

2. Other tentative British comments on the plan were as follows: Shackle suggested that decision on membership of drafting sub-committee be deferred until near the end of the July meeting when it will be possible to see what positions are being taken and the membership can be determined accordingly; Liesching pointed out that since the ECOSOC resolution calls for holding the formal conference in the latter part of 1946, the Council sooner or later will have to change this; Liesching also raised question whether the meeting of the Preparatory Committee would be convened without further reference to the Council but presumed it could; referring to your suggestion that each country be represented at the July meeting by only a few persons, Liesching thought that in view of the subjects to be covered the British would need a delegation of 8 to 10 people; Liesching had some doubt about holding the initial meeting in New York and questioned whether representatives attending the ECOSOC meeting would in many cases be the same as those attending the Preparatory Committee meeting; Geneva was mentioned as a possibility and as Liesching seemed inclined toward that location it is possible British will propose this.

3. Liesching said the plan would be studied carefully and British position regarding it would be formulated promptly, but he probably could not give us a final view before next week. We stressed urgency.

4. Our own views are that the plan outlined in your reftel is satisfactory. We think Shackle has a point in suggesting deferring selection drafting sub-committee until late in initial meeting of Preparatory Committee; that New York is satisfactory location but that Geneva is worth considering.

5. Geneva would probably appeal to European members of UNO who tend to feel that UNO work is being concentrated too much in US or UK. It offers good physical facilities, good mid-summer climate and quick travel facilities for UK and continental countries which is important in view of staff shortages. With improvement in recent months in Soviet-Swiss relations, former might be agreeable to Geneva. On the whole, would provide good environment for extended and arduous work of Preparatory Committee and drafting sub-committee. Translation and secretarial facilities will be available in New York but may exist or might be provided in Geneva.

6. Regarding your paragraph 5, we suggest that other countries also be urged to exchange request lists among themselves.

7. We assume that in giving us discretion to consult British, you did not imply possibility of concluding arrangements with ECOSOC without advance British concurrence in program, as this would jeopardize full British cooperation which is indispensable. [Hawkins.]

GALLMAN

560.AL/4-2946: Telegram

*The Acting Secretary of State to the Chargé in the United Kingdom
(Gallman)*

SECRET US URGENT WASHINGTON, April 30, 1946—6 p. m.

3636. For Hawkins from Wilcox and Brown. Urtel 4581 Apr 29.

1. Appreciate need for consultation with Ministers and as you stated, must assume loan passage.

2. Re tentative British comments our plan, we agree decision membership drafting subcommittee could well be deferred until near end of Preparatory Committee meeting; if plan goes through, it should be relatively easy to arrange for postponement formal conference until 1947 in view of additional preparatory time needed; we assume Preparatory Committee already has sufficient authority to convene without further reference to Council; our representatives at Preparatory Committee meeting would generally be not same as those attending ECOSOC; we will consider change from New York to Geneva or other site if British and others so desire.

3. Re your paragraph 6 we would of course urge a general exchange of request lists.

4. Re your paragraph 7 your assumption is correct, but we need definitive British reaction soon.

5. Urtel 4423 Apr 24, paragraph 4, we would expect to take initiative, assuming British and other support. Re preparation of request lists by US, we are continuing to push committee work as rapidly as possible. Cannot yet estimate date of completion UK list.

6. Brown has visited Ottawa to explain decision to Canadians and sound out their reaction to new plan. Mixed reaction with some disappointment at postponement and some doubt as to desirability discussion of Proposals in advance of tariff talks.⁶⁸ More definite Canadian opinion expected next week. Will call you. [Wilcox and Brown.]

ACHESON

560.AL/5-946 : Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Harriman)

SECRET US URGENT WASHINGTON, May 9, 1946—noon.

3850. For Hawkins from Brown. Deptel 3636, Apr 30. Canadians have expressed general concurrence with program outlined.⁶⁹ They suggested addition shipping problems, i.e. discrimination and subsidies, to Preparatory Committee agenda and integration of work of cotton study groups and Wheat Committee with work of Preparatory Committee. Robertson expressed surprise Brit had not insisted inclusion shipping problems in conference agenda. I explained we ⁶⁸ A memorandum by Mr. Brown of his discussion with Canadian Government officials at Ottawa on April 29, 1946 may be found in the Department's central indexed files (File No. 560.AL/4-2946).

⁶⁹ A lengthy discussion at Ottawa on May 6 included on the Canadian side Mr. Norman Robertson, Under Secretary of State for External Affairs; Mr. Max Mckenzie, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce; Mr. Hector McKinnon, Chairman, Tariff Board, Mr. Sydney Pierce, Member of Economic Division, Department of External Affairs; Mr. David Sim, Deputy Minister of National Revenue; and Mr. Hubert Kemp, Director, Commercial Relations, Department of Trade and Commerce. Mr. Brown's memorandum of this meeting, dated May 6, is found under File No. 560.AL/5-646.

had left these matters for separate discussion as part of later over-all shipping conversations. Believe, however, Canadians will press this point.

Canadians also considering bilateral tariff negotiations with other nuclear countries in advance of nuclear negotiation but believe they will abandon this idea if we and others get request lists to them soon. They feel strongly that they do not want to receive requests for actual concessions until very shortly before March meeting. They would be embarrassed to receive these requests and feel it would be impossible to keep them confidential.

We hope advise French this week of change in program but are waiting for official Brit reaction.

Dutch advise they and Belgians will not have customs union rates until Nov or Dec and therefore cannot negotiate tariffs until early next year. [Brown.]

ACHESON

560.AL/5-1646 : Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Harriman) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

LONDON, May 16, 1946—8 p. m.

[Received May 16—5:34 p. m.]

5202. For Wilcox and Brown from Hawkins. The following memorandum handed us by Liesching this afternoon is official British reply, approved by Ministers, to our proposed plan for trade meetings:

“(a) We fully appreciate the circumstances in which the US Government have proposed this new programme and accept the necessity to postpone the detailed discussions on tariffs until March 1947. We share their desire to keep interest alive and make some progress in the meantime. But, having undertaken to use our best endeavours to bring the discussions to a successful conclusion, we feel bound to say that, in our view the new programme in its entirety would not serve to further this object.

“(b) We see considerable advantage in a meeting of the Preparatory Committee (lasting preferably not more than 4, and certainly not more than 6 weeks) for the purpose of (I) exchanging views and removing any doubts about the intentions of the American proposals, (II) of expounding the considerations which led up to the joint statement by the US and the UK which was issued on their publication on the 6th December, and (III) of enlisting support of the principle of a worldwide reduction of trade barriers.

“(c) On the other hand, we see no merit in the proposed drafting sub-committee. We do not see how such a sub-committee could do any useful work. Either there would be constant reservations which would thwart hopes of positive progress or some degree of commitment would be involved for which governments would not be ready until commitments on actual tariff reductions were also under negotiation, that is to say until the 'drafting' countries meet in March. Indeed, if for such reasons governments were led to take firm positions on points of difficulty, we feel that the establishment of a drafting sub-committee might positively impede the successful outcome of the later conference.

“(d) Moreover, we consider that July is too soon for the meeting of the Preparatory Committee. Owing to the close connection between the published proposals on commercial policy and the financial position we, for our part, could not attend a meeting of the Preparatory Committee appointed by the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations until Congress has acted on the financial agreement, and we consider that 6 weeks' notice should be given, in order that members of the Preparatory Committee may have time to make the necessary arrangements to attend.

“(e) Our view is, therefore, that a decision on the date of the meeting of the Preparatory Committee should be deferred. Provided Congress has acted on the financial agreement in time, the aim should be to hold a meeting early in the autumn. We should have been inclined to suggest September, but as meetings in the United States of the General Assembly of the United Nations and of the Economic and Social Council have already been arranged for the 1st September, the 1st October appears to us to be the earliest practicable date.

“(f) We consider it extremely desirable, for reasons which we feel sure are appreciated by the US Government, that the proposed meeting should be held in Europe (preferably in London or Geneva).

“(g) Meanwhile, we welcome their proposal that we and they should continue to have informal exchanges of views with other countries such as have already served to remove misunderstandings and to promote the ideas which both countries share.”

[Hawkins]
HARRIMAN

560.AL/5-1646

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador to the United Kingdom (Harriman)

SECRET

WASHINGTON, May 17, 1946—7 p. m.

4119. For Hawkins from Wilcox and Brown. Urtel 5202, May 16. Our reactions to British counter-proposals follow:

1. We accept idea July may be too soon for Preparatory Committee meeting, and suggest Oct 15 but in no case later.

2. We feel strongly that announcement of Oct date should be made in near future, to maintain momentum and public interest and to answer many inquiries developing following Lie's statement (unauthorized) few days ago that Preparatory Committee would meet soon after ECOSOC session.⁷⁰ Also, announcement preferable before or early in forthcoming meeting of ECOSOC to help forestall any ECOSOC action such as feared by Liesching. Announcement should not await loan outcome in Congress.

3. We concur in duration and scope of Preparatory Committee agenda suggested and will defer until later question of drafting committee and its functions.

4. We agree to European site for Preparatory Committee meeting but would prefer London to Geneva.

5. Please convey foregoing to British and attempt to obtain their approval promptly, with a view to having British Emb join with us in asking ECOSOC secretariat to convene and announce Oct meeting if there is general agreement.⁷¹ We will consult with Canadians, French and possibly others. [Wilcox and Brown.]

ACHESON

560.A.L./6-2446: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Harriman)

SECRET US URGENT WASHINGTON, June 24, 1946—7 p. m.

4935. For Hawkins from Wilcox. Field reports indicate danger let-down preparations trade meeting as result postponement. We therefore plan send all nuclear missions message summarizing major developments to date and setting forth plan future action to be urged on nuclear govts. Message would emphasize that procedure memo Feb 6 still holds except for fact that first meeting of Preparatory Committee will be held some months in advance of nuclear negotiations and that ⁷⁰ The second session of ECOSOC was to convene at New York on May 21. On May 14, speaking before the International Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Trygve Lie, Secretary-General of the United Nations, had announced that the Council, as one of its first actions at this session, would summon the projected international conference on trade and employment.

⁷¹ In telegram 5268, May 20, 6 p. m., from London, Mr. Hawkins cabled: "Plan outlined urtel 4119, May 17, approved by British who will immediately instruct Embassy in Washington to cooperate." (560.AL/5-2046) On May 28 announcement was made at the United Nations that the general conference on trade and employment was postponed until 1947 because of the scope and complexity of necessary preparatory work, and that the Preparatory Committee meeting would be held at London on October 15.

of greatest importance is transmittal between all countries, and not merely with US, preliminary list request items and preliminary list request concessions, deadlines to be next few months for former and end of year for latter. We convinced this essential if meeting to go forward Mar 1947. Delay beyond Mar clearly undesirable because Trade Agreements Act other developments 1948. Message will also refer early transmittal and possible publication US draft of Charter and our plan bilateral discussions between US and each other nuclear country (urtel 6130 June 20 ⁷²) during July, Aug and Sep on Charter and details procedure memo Feb 6.

Pls discuss main points foregoing with Brit and give us their and your views, particularly as to essentiality exchange well in advance of Mar meeting of preliminary lists actual concession requests. We should like Brit, and will in light your reply also seek Canadian and French support in stimulating through their missions nuclear countries action by other Govts re exchange lists. However Canadians have thus far opposed idea transmittal lists concession request on grounds possible embarrassment, argument which we will try overcome.

Dept will afford you opportunity consult Brit prior publication or general transmittal US draft Charter. [Wilcox.]

ACHESON

560.AL/7-246 : Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Harriman) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

LONDON, July 2, 1946—5 p. m.

[Received July 2—4 : 07 p. m.]

6432. Discussed plan outlined urtel 4935, June 24 with Helmore and colleagues (Liesching absent) on June 26. Helmore said matter would be given careful consideration in consultation with other appropriate British officials and definite reply would be given us as soon as possible. Following were his offhand reactions:

In general, he favored an approach along the lines indicated. However, he doubted whether the end of this year would be soon enough for completing distribution of list with rates because the UK plans to have an Empire meeting 6 weeks prior to negotiating meeting and would need more time prior to Empire meeting for consolidation of request lists for Empire discussion. He suggested December 1 as latest date for list with rates with perhaps September 15 as latest date for list without rates.

⁷² Not printed.

He was very doubtful about early publication of charter. He felt that if this were done too soon it would result in crystallization of fixed negative positions by governments of participating countries and would give too much opportunity for vested interests to generate pressure on government. Also publication prior to October meeting would divert attention from principles and cause confusion and time-consuming discussion of details. There was also a feeling that publication prior to the October meeting would create antagonism by seeming to presume agreement on principles which the meeting is called to consider. It would be more appropriate and less provocative if issuance of draft were postponed until some time after the October meeting which would permit amount [account] to be taken of the discussions at the meeting.

He agreed that it would be desirable to distribute to participating governments and perhaps to publish the charter in advance of the spring negotiating meeting, but not very far in advance. Arguments are similar to those previously expressed regarding setting up of Drafting Committee at Preparatory committee meeting. (See Embtel 5202, May 16 and 5058, May 11.^{72a})

Helmore wanted a little time for clearance within the UK Government before giving us definitive reply. This clearance we learn is in progress. Helmore told us today that he hoped to give us definitive views by July 8.

In general, we think British will coordinate with us in educational work through their Missions in nuclear countries.

Helmore told us that the British are working on the charter, not with the idea of producing a complete text, but to develop their thinking on the manner in which the principles agreed to with us will be implemented. However, on certain sections of the charter we understand British are doing some actual drafting and that this is fairly well advanced.

Department will want to consider whether latest version of our draft should not be given to the British in order to get their ideas on points on which they have been working. If this were done before the draft is distributed, the possibility of disagreement by them on portions of our text would be avoided. Presumably we would not want to go into a wider international meeting in complete agreement with ^{72a} Telegram 5058 is not printed.

the British on all details, but if we have their views on main points we might modify our draft so as to avoid any wide divergence.⁷³

HARRIMAN

560.AL/7-646: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Harriman) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

LONDON, July 6, 1946—4 p. m.

[Received July 6—12: 46 p. m.]

6507. Embtel 6432, July 2. Helmore today gave us following memorandum on plan outlined urtel 4935, June 24.

"1. Timetable for transmittal of requests for tariff concessions. Our preliminary view was that the end of December was too late a date for the receipt of specific requests if the drafting countries meeting was to be held in March, especially in view of the need for Empire talks of about 6 weeks' duration before the meeting. On consideration we feel that it will be necessary to have these requests in by 15th November if there is to be time for adequate preparation and that the drafting countries should be asked where possible to transmit requests by instalments before this date. We, for our part, would be greatly helped if requests on the Dominions, and those on ourselves affecting the Dominions, particularly by the USA, could be transmitted as early as possible. An early deadline for the specific requests is thought to be more important than for the lists of items on which concessions will ⁷³ For the earliest consideration by ECEFP of a preparatory draft charter formulated in the Department in February, see footnote 36, p. 1283. From mid-March five subcommittees of ECEFP were engaged in an intensive effort in the study and revision of the chapters of the preparatory draft that were of special concern to each (the subcommittees engaged were those on Private Monopolies and Cartels, International Commodity Problems, International Cooperation with respect to Employment, Specialized International Economic Organizations, and Trade Agreements; the general chapter headings of the preparatory draft were entitled "Purposes", "Membership", "Employment Provisions", "General Commercial Policy", "Restrictive Business Practices", "Intergovernmental Commodity Agreements", and "Organization"). On May 27 the subcommittees submitted to ECEFP itself a new and carefully drawn draft entitled "Draft Charter of the International Trade Organization" (ECEFP document D-45/46, May 27, 1946), along with other related documents. Consideration of the May 27 draft by the plenary committee began on June 5, and continued on June 7, June 12, June 14, June 19, June 21, June 26, and June 28. By this date the work was substantially done, and there were to be only two more meetings, on July 12 and July 19. At the latter ECEFP effected final revisions and approval to a new draft, entitled "Suggested Draft of a Charter for International Trade Organization of the United Nations" (ECEFP document D-70/46, July 25, 1946).

Relevant documentation is found in the Department of State's unindexed lot files, Lot 122 (Executive Secretariat of the Department of State Files: Inter-Departmental and Departmental Committees). The minutes of the plenary committee for the period during which it considered the draft charter are found in Box 20. The documents cited are found in Box 22.

be asked, since it is really only the specific requests that will lead to any constructive preparation. It is nevertheless desirable that countries should be asked to transmit their lists of items as soon as possible, without, however, any deadline being laid down.

"2. Transmittal of US draft charter. Our preliminary view was that (a) publication at any time was undesirable since it might lead govts to take up positions which they could not later retract, (b) it might be better not to circulate a draft before the meeting of preparatory committee in October but rather to circulate one soon afterwards embodying any conclusions arising out of that meeting—and agreed between the USA and the UK—so as to provide a basis for discussion at the drafting countries' meeting. Further consideration strengthens both (a) and (b). It is not part of the plan that the meeting in October should do any drafting; the existence of an American draft circulated before the meeting would undoubtedly encourage the tendency to embark on detailed drafting. We feel that the clarification and elaboration of the proposals which will be necessary at that meeting should be achieved by an exchange of general views rather than by the study of drafts. Even more important, in view of what happened at the Economic and Social Council in February, is to avoid any suggestion of an Anglo-American "ganging up" vis-à-vis the other countries at the meeting in October of its preparatory committee.

"We agree, of course, that a draft charter for discussion at the drafting countries meeting would be most valuable, and the fact that we would prefer it not to be circulated before the October meeting does not of course affect the suggestion that the UK and the USA might usefully exchange views on the spelling out of the main heads of the proposals before that meeting if, as seemed likely, the work in both countries progressed sufficiently to allow for this.

"We should, of course, as we indicated earlier, instruct our missions abroad to collaborate with the representatives of the USA in any of the hastening action that is now envisaged."

Regarding last paragraph, Helmore explained how British would collaborate. He said that in the case of Canada British representative there would see Hector McKinnon and say that British do not see how nuclear meeting can succeed without proposed prior exchange of lists. British representatives in other nuclear Empire countries would be informed of discussions with US and instructed to tell govts concerned of British agreement on need for action. This would pave the way for an approach by US. In the case of non-Empire nuclear countries British representatives would also be informed and documented but would not take initiative in approaching govts concerned. They would be instructed to keep in touch with our representatives and to back up position taken by latter in any appropriate way, which would not include joint or formal representations as this would have appearance of ganging up. British assume that any request to French to support our procedural ideas through French diplomatic representatives in other nuclear countries will come from US alone.

With reference to British view that publication of draft charter at any time is undesirable we pointed out that publication has advantage of giving supporters a tangible worthwhile proposition to advocate and would tend to overcome any impression that may develop that original comprehensive plans for trade organization and code are being prosecuted with diminishing zeal. British replied that their position regarding publication not fixed and that they would be glad to reconsider it later in light of developments.

Correcting statement Emtel 6432, British are not preparing actual legal text of any part of charter but are developing ideas in form of headings on which drafting officers could later fill in details.

HARRIMAN

560.AL/7-746: Telegram

*The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom
(Harriman)*

SECRET

US URGENT

WASHINGTON, July 16, 1946—6 p. m.

5419. For Hawkins from Brown. 1. Have discussed early publication ITO Charter (say Aug) with Clayton (urtel 6507 July 7[6]) who agrees this should by all means be done. Please endeavor persuade Brit wisdom this course which we think desirable to keep momentum as well as remove doubts and criticisms arising from misunderstanding of condensed language of Proposals. Also we have already promised in procedural memo Feb 6 to distribute US version of Charter to nuclear govts. You may assure Brit we would explain other govts our draft Charter does not represent inflexible position but is merely put forward as elucidation and basis for discussion.

2. Final ECEFP action on Charter expected by end this week. Will cable changes basis draft recently given you by Ross⁷⁴ so you may consult Brit on details main issues prior publication without, however, seeking firm agreement on such details.

3. Re timetable transmission rate requests, Dept unwilling urge nuclear govts complete transmission by Nov 15 in view doubts our ability meet this deadline in all cases. We prefer set general deadline at end this year but you may inform Brit we will make every effort complete our preliminary rate requests of Empire countries by Nov 15 in view their special needs. We agree urge transmission lists of items, without rates, as soon as possible and avoid setting deadline for these lists.

⁷⁴James A. Ross, Jr., formerly Assistant Chief of the Division of Commercial Policy, and appointed Economic Adviser to the United States mission at New Delhi. Mr. Ross, passing through London on his way to India, presumably had carried with him to London one of the drafts of the "Suggested Charter" which had been formulated in the final stages of ECEFP's work on the matter.

4. Dept considers action now necessary regularize relations between nuclear group and Preparatory Committee by asking Chile, Lebanon and Norway join trade-barrier negotiations on same basis as others. Dept therefore proposes cirtel to nuclear missions instructing them advise nuclear govts our proposal and request reactions within week or ten days. Please consult Brit, pointing out awkwardness and confusion resulting from continuation of present status and fact that addition of these three would not add greatly to negotiating burden. Particularly difficult for US defend present status in view US initiative on trade-barrier aspects.

5. We are informing UN secretariat US will strongly oppose any move postpone Oct meeting (urtel 6636 July 11⁷⁵) and are pressing them issue invitations immediately. [Brown.]

BYRNES

560.AL/7-1846 : Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Harriman) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

LONDON, July 18, 1946—6 p. m.

[Received 9:24 p. m.]

6799. For Brown from Hawkins. (1) Discussed urtel 5419, July 16, with BOT. Their initial reaction unfavorable but agreed to take under consideration and give us definitive reaction after consulting Ministers.

(2) Initial view on publication of charter was same as heretofore. They agreed to reconsider but felt they could not intelligently take a position without seeing the text of the covering memorandum explaining the nature of draft and the reason for distributing it. Presumably ⁷⁵ Not printed. The Board of Trade had discussed with the London Embassy reports from the United Nations that the UN Secretariat was delaying issuance of invitations to the October meeting of the Preparatory Committee because of "doubt as to effect" of the postponement of the date of the convening of the General Assembly (this date had been moved from September 3 to September 23). The Embassy reported that "Liesching feels strongly and we agree that invitations for mtg London Oct should be issued at once. That if later found necessary to delay mtg countries will meantime have been stimulated to get on with preparatory work and less harm will be done." (560.AL/7-1146) See footnote 88, p. 1345.

same explanation would be sent to governments and made public. Please cable text.

(3) British think your schedule for transmitting request lists means delay in holding negotiating meeting until say April 1. They would like as soon as possible to have the date fixed for that meeting so that preparatory work can be scheduled and staff allocations can be made.

(4) British dubious about the inclusion of Chile, Lebanon and Norway in trade barrier negotiations on same basis as others. They said this raised in acute form question of inviting Argentina to which we replied that Norway, Chile and Lebanon were added by ECOSOC; that while this complicates negotiations it is still more confusing to continue to differentiate these countries; and that since they were added by ECOSOC latter has main responsibility for limiting participants to 18. In view of this we said it seemed unnecessary for either US or UK to complicate matter still further by suggesting any additional country. They recognize complications and will take under consideration.

(5) We think some progress made toward getting British acquiescence and final position may be favorable. [Hawkins.]

HARRIMAN

Lot 54-D361E, Box 328

Excerpt From Department of State "Current Economic Developments" 76

SECRET

[Here follows discussion of subjects not related to the "Suggested Charter".]

Draft of ITO Charter Approved by ECEFP. The Executive Committee on Economic Foreign Policy has approved a suggested draft of a Charter for an International Trade Organization of the United Nations. This draft represents an elaboration of our recommendations contained in the trade proposals (see page 1, July 23, 1945 issue and page 2, December 10, 1945 issue of Current Economic Developments) and is to be transmitted to the other governments members of the Preparatory Committee to serve as a basis for discussion. Present plans call for publication of the Charter, together with an analysis, in September.

Purposes. The purposes of the ITO are stated to be: (1) to promote ⁷⁶ "Current Economic Developments" was a classified weekly publication prepared by the Policy Information Committee, Department of State, for the information of the Foreign Service of the United States. It was designed to highlight developments in the economic divisions of the Department and to indicate the economic problems that were receiving attention in the Department at any given time. This extract is taken from Issue No. 58, July 29, 1946, and is being printed here for purposes of convenience.

solution of problems in international commercial policies and relations through consultation and collaboration; (2) to enable members to avoid measures destructive of world commerce by providing expanding opportunities for their trade and economic development; (3) to assist the industrial and general economic development of member countries, especially those in the early stages of industrial development; (4) in general, to promote national and international action for the expansion of the production, exchange and consumption of goods, for the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers, and for the elimination of all forms of discriminatory treatment in international commerce; thus contributing to an expanding world economy, to the establishment and maintenance in all countries of high levels of employment and real income, and to the creation of economic conditions conducive to the maintenance of world peace; and (5) to provide a centralized agency for the coordination of the work of members to the above ends. The original members will be those agreeing to the charter at the world trade conference, membership also being open to other countries accepting the provisions of the charter, subject to the approval of the conference.

Employment Provisions. Recognizing that maintenance of useful employment opportunities for those able, willing and seeking to work is essential to full realization of the purposes of ITO, each member agrees to take action to achieve and maintain full employment within its own jurisdiction, and in doing so will refrain from adopting measures which would create unemployment in other countries. ECOSOC will supervise the exchange of information and consultation on employment problems.

General Commercial Provisions. With respect to customs duties and internal taxation, general most-favored-nation treatment is called for among all members of ITO, except that this shall not require automatic elimination of any preference in customs duties which does not exceed that in force on July 1, 1939, and which falls into one of the two categories: (a) preferences in force exclusively between territories having on July 1, 1939 a common sovereignty, or (b) preferences in force exclusively between the US and Cuba. No preferences shall be increased above their level on July 1, 1946 and all shall be subject to processes of elimination. National treatment on taxation, and freedom of transit for products of any member country in any other member country are called for and limits are placed on anti-dumping and countervailing duties.

The members undertake to work toward the standardization of valuation of products for tariff purposes and accept certain general principles with regard thereto. Members agree that subsidiary fees and charges in connection with importing and exporting should be limited to the approximate cost of services rendered and not represent indirect protection; most-favored-nation treatment with regard to marks of origin is called for; and certain products will be exempt from marking requirements. Members agree to make available promptly to ITO such statistics relating to their foreign trade as the Organization deems necessary, and to discourage boycotts of products of other member countries.

Tariffs and Tariff Preferences. Any member at the request of another will enter into mutually advantageous negotiations for the reduction of tariffs and the elimination of tariff preferences. Prior international commitments shall not be permitted to stand in the way of action on tariff preferences. All negotiated reductions in most-favored-nation import tariffs shall operate automatically to reduce or eliminate margins of preference, so that, in respect of any product on which the most-favored-nation rate of duty is reduced, or bound against increase, the margin of preference which may apply to such product may not exceed the margin by which the most-favored-nation rate exceeds the preferential rate as of July 1, 1939.

Quantitative Restrictions. Prohibitions and restrictions on imports or exports are abolished except for (a) restrictions imposed during the early post-war transitional period to provide equitable international distribution of short supply items or the orderly liquidation of temporary government-controlled stocks; (b) export restrictions temporarily imposed because of severe shortages of foodstuffs or other essentials; (c) restrictions necessary to the application of standards for the classification and grading of commodities in international commerce; (d) quotas imposed under inter-governmental commodity agreements provided for in the Charter; (e) import restrictions on agricultural products necessary to enforce governmental measures to (i) restrict the quantities of the like domestic product permitted to be marketed, or (ii) remove a temporary surplus of the like domestic product by making the surplus available free or at prices below the market level to certain groups of domestic consumers. Subject to certain conditions, however, any member confronted with an adverse balance of international payments may impose import restrictions. With certain exceptions, quantitative restrictions so imposed must be non-discriminatory.

Exchange Control. To avoid imposition of trade restrictions through exchange techniques, members agree not to impose exchange control on commodity transactions with other members, except where this is permitted in the Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund. However, members agree to relinquish their freedom of action to impose exchange restrictions on commodity transactions under Article XIV of the Fund (post-war transitional period).

Subsidies. Members undertake to notify the ITO of any subsidy to domestic producers of any product and to discuss with other members the possibility of limiting such subsidization if it is found seriously injurious to the trade of any member. Export subsidies would in general be prohibited after a transitional period.

State Trading. State trading enterprises shall accord to the trade of all members nondiscriminatory treatment, as compared with the treatment accorded to the commerce of any country other than that in which the enterprise is located. Such enterprises shall be influenced solely by commercial considerations in making external sales or purchases. State monopolies of individual products shall undertake to reduce margins of protection accorded to domestic producers and complete state monopolies of foreign trade shall negotiate with the other members an arrangement by which, in return for tariff concessions, the state monopoly will undertake to import over a period products of other members to an agreed value.

Emergency Provisions. An escape clause permits withdrawal or modification of any tariff or other trade-barrier concession which proves to threaten serious injury to domestic producers for such time as may be necessary to prevent this injury. However, previous notice in writing must be given the ITO and penalties are provided in cases of abuse.

Restrictive Business Practices. Members agree to take appropriate individual and collective measures to prevent business practices among commercial enterprises which restrain competition, restrict access to markets, or foster monopolistic control in international trade. The ITO will receive and consider written complaints from any member, persons or organizations that a particular practice has this effect. If the complaint is found justified, the ITO will recommend appropriate remedial measures. The ITO may request information from members and conduct studies relating to restrictive business practices and where appropriate make recommendations for action by the members.

Intergovernmental Commodity Arrangements. When special difficulties exist or are expected to arise concerning a particular commodity, members and possibly non-members substantially interested in the commodity shall be entitled to appoint representatives to a Study Group to make a study of the commodity and recommend to the ITO how to deal with such difficulties. The ITO may call an intergovernmental conference to frame an intergovernmental commodity agreement in accordance with certain principles: (a) any member with a substantial interest in the production, consumption or trade of the commodity may participate in the consideration of the proposed agreement and non-member countries may be invited to do so; (b) members agree not to enter into intergovernmental commodity agreements except after investigation by the Study Group of causes of the problem and determination that a burdensome surplus exists which would cause widespread distress to small producers accounting for a substantial portion of the total output, or that widespread unemployment, unrelated to general business conditions, is developing in the industry concerned and cannot be corrected by the normal play of competitive forces. Members must also first adopt a program of economic adjustment to insure progress toward solution of the problem within the time limits of the agreement; and (c) agreements relating to other than primary products shall not be resorted to except in exceptional circumstances. Agreements are not to remain initially in effect for more than five years and renewal will be subject to the principles governing new agreements. A Commodity Council is to be established under each agreement with equal voting power to be given to importing and exporting countries.

Organization. The organization, as was called for in the Proposals, will have a Conference, an Executive Board, a Commission on Commercial Policy, a Commission on Business Practices, a Commodity Commission and a Secretariat. An Interim Tariff Committee is also provided for to act temporarily on behalf of the ITO in investigating a complaint of a member that another member has failed to fulfill its obligations to conduct tariff negotiations. The Charter provides in detail for membership in these groups and the duties of members.

560.AL/7-1846: Telegram

*The Secretary of State to the Chargé in the United Kingdom
(Gallman)*

CONFIDENTIAL US URGENT WASHINGTON, July 19, 1946—8 p. m.

5515. For Hawkins. Draft Charter ITO (version sent you by Ross) approved today by ECEFP subject following major substantive changes plus other primarily technical changes:

[Here follows listing of specific changes made in Articles 8, 18, 26, 32, 49, and 76.]

Corrected copies Charter probably will not arrive London until week or ten days. Therefore please consult Brit basis copy you have with changes indicated above. Dept will hold for few days transmittal Charter other nuclear govts against possibility Brit objections. However please explain to Brit US position flexible on draft as whole and that Dept therefore hopes Brit will not urge changes in draft prior transmittal other govts or prior publication. Dept will cable you soonest outline text covering memorandum (urtel 6799 July 18) explaining nature of draft.

BYRNES

560.AL/7-2346: Circular telegram

*The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Officers*⁷⁷

SECRET

WASHINGTON, July 23, 1946—11 a. m.

Following is summary major developments to date:

1. US invited 15 countries preliminary trade meeting in spring 1946 (see appropriate instruction or Depcirtel cited in Depcirtel Dec 13⁷⁸) for purpose negotiating trade-barrier reductions and preparing for world conference trade employment.

2. US transmitted same 15 countries memo dated Feb 6 entitled "Preparations for Preliminary International Meeting on Trade and Employment" (see Depcirtel Feb 12, 6 p. m.) which set forth US ideas re purpose of meeting, preparations for meeting and relation of meeting to general world conference.

3. At US initiative, UN ECOSOC passed resolution Feb 18 which a) called world conference in latter part of 1946, b) named 19 governments to serve as Preparatory Committee to elaborate for Conference an "annotated draft agenda, including a draft convention" and c) suggested that this agenda include 5 main topics taken from US Proposals (i.e. high employment, trade barriers, cartels, commodity policy and machinery of ITO). Govts named by ECOSOC were US, 15 countries referred to in 1, above, and Chile, Lebanon and Norway.

4. Secretary-General of UN announced May 28 that Prep Committee would hold first meeting London Oct 15 and that world conference would not be held until 1947. It is hoped UN will issue invitations this meeting within next few days. (Substantive discussion this meeting probably largely exploratory, but meeting might also deal with organizational and procedural problems involved in subsequent trade-barrier negotiations and in developing agreed draft of Charter of ITO contemplated by US Proposals.)

5. Status US public notice intention negotiate under Trade Agreements Act is that notice and accompanying list of products to be considered for granting concessions will not be issued prior Oct meeting. This means that, in view time required for public hearings, actual ⁷⁷ Sent to the 15 United States missions accredited to the "nuclear" governments that had been invited by the United States in December, 1945 to send representatives to a trade meeting preparatory to the proposed general conference on trade and employment.

⁷⁸ Not printed.

negotiating meeting at which trade barriers would be reduced, referred to in original US invitation and in memo of Feb 6 (see 2, above), cannot take place until spring 1947. It is now hoped Mar or Apr 1947 can be set for this meeting.

Reports from field indicate that postponement negotiating meeting has in case of some countries already resulted in letdown preparations and is likely to do so in case of others. This extremely dangerous since review preparatory work accomplished to date, particularly in complex tariff field, makes clear need for all of time remaining between now and spring 1947 when actual negotiations begin. Dept therefore proposes following plan designed intensify preparations and urges you make every effort stimulate preparations by Govt to which you are accredited. Plans follows:

1. US views re purpose of negotiating (spring 1947) meeting, preparations needed for meeting and procedures to be followed at meeting remain as stated in memo Feb 6.

2. As indicated in memo Feb. 6, US will transmit other nuclear countries US draft text Charter of ITO covering all aspects Proposals. Transmittal will probably take place early Aug and may be followed by publication of Charter.

3. During Aug and Sep, US plans bilateral discussions at expert level of Proposals, draft Charter and Feb 6 memo with each other nuclear country. You will be informed precise arrangements.⁷⁹

4. Foregoing will advance preparations general provisions Charter and general aspects negotiations. Most difficult and complex aspect of spring meeting, however, will be tariff negotiations which require far more detailed preparations than other aspects. Dept convinced tariff negotiations on multilateral basis contemplated in Feb 6 memo likely break down unless each country knows well in advance of meeting a) what tariff concessions it will request from each other country and b) what tariff concessions each other country will request of it. This would be achieved by transmitting preliminary lists of a) request items and b) request rates referred to page four Feb 6 memo. Such transmittal cannot be left to last few weeks or even months before meeting but must we feel be completed before end this year if meeting is to go forward in spring.

5. Dept believes preliminary lists US request rates can be transmitted all nuclear countries by end this year. Please urge similar time schedule on Govt to which you are accredited, pointing out need for transmittal request lists not only to US but also to each other nuclear country from which it desires tariff concessions.

⁷⁹ Detailed arrangements were worked out soon thereafter. These bilateral discussions began with a round of visits to several European capitals about mid-August and subsequently extended around the world. For a summary of these visits and results stemming therefrom, see p. 1345.

6. Please report earliest possible date what you can learn as to progress thus far made by Govt to which you are accredited in preparing for tariff negotiations, as to its reactions to Feb 6 memo and as to its willingness to proceed as suggested in 5, above.

7. UK Govt has agreed stimulate action on foregoing plan through UK missions in nuclear countries.

BYRNES

560.AL/7-1846 : Telegram

*The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom
(Harriman)*

US URGENT

WASHINGTON, July 23, 1946.

5569. Urtel 6799 July 18. Following is the proposed text of covering memo to accompany transmittal other Govts draft Charter :

“In December of last year the Government of the United States published and transmitted to other governments for their consideration a document entitled Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment.

These Proposals put forward the idea that there should be established an International Trade Organization of the United Nations, the members of which would undertake to maintain employment by appropriate measures and to conduct their commercial policies and relations in accordance with rules to be set forth in the Charter of the Organization. The Proposals contained suggestions as to what these rules might be in the fields of trade barriers, intergovernmental commodity agreements, and restrictive trade practices on the part of private business, and outlined a suggested structure for the machinery of the International Trade Organization itself.

The Government of the United States has now prepared an elaboration of its Proposals in the form of a suggested draft Charter for an International Trade Organization, copies of which are transmitted herewith for the confidential use and information of the Government of _____.

Copies of the suggested draft Charter are also being transmitted to the Secretariat of the United Nations and to the other governments named by the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations to serve as a Preparatory Committee for the projected international conference on trade and employment called by the Council in February of this year.

The Government of the United States wishes to emphasize the exploratory nature of the enclosed draft Charter, which is put forward by the United States solely as a possible basis for international discussion and not as a document expressing final or fixed views of the Government of the United States. Also, it is hoped the draft will clarify obscurities and remove doubts or misunderstandings to which the condensed language of the Proposals may have given rise.

The Government of the United States proposed [proposes?] to publish the draft Charter at an early date in order to stimulate public discussion and consideration of the many points involved. The Government of _____ will be notified before publication takes place.”

Substance of foregoing would also accompany subsequent public release of Charter.

Dept hopes that in light this statement Brit will raise no further objections transmittal or publication text prior Oct.

BYRNES

560.AL/7-2446: Circular telegram

*The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Officers*⁵⁰

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, July 24, 1946—8 a. m.

You will shortly receive third person air mail instruction⁵¹ enclosing copies Draft Charter of International Trade Organization and explanatory covering memo. After clearance from Dept, which you will receive by telegraph, please hand copies Draft Charter to Fonoff together with statement along lines of covering memo.

BYRNES

560.AL/8-246

Memorandum of Transatlantic Telephone Conversation, by the Chief of the Division of Commercial Policy (Brown)

[WASHINGTON,] August 2, 1946.

Mr. Peterson⁵² called to say that the British would not give any decision as to the inclusion of Norway, Chile and Lebanon before August 7 and as to the distribution of the Charter before August 9. He said he thought so far as the first was concerned the decision would be favorable, but with regard to the second he thought the British would decide it was an unwise thing to do at this time.

I told Mr. Peterson I would consult with Mr. Wilcox and cable him our reaction immediately but that I thought we would probably decide to go ahead with the distribution. We had made our plans for discussion of the Charter with a number of countries and wanted them to have time to consider it before the talks; we also planned to hold a meeting in Washington, before the October 15 meeting, of all the Government officials who had participated in the talks. In view of this, I did not think we would want to delay any longer.

⁵⁰ Cabled to the other governments named in the February ECOSOC resolution as members of the Preparatory Committee for the trade and employment conference.

⁵¹ Fourteen of the instructions were sent out under date of July 25 (560.AL/7-2546). Four of the instructions, despatched to United States missions in the Western Pacific and South African areas, were sent out under date of July 26 (560.AL/7-2646). These documents necessarily were received by the different missions and so transmitted to the different governments at varying times. See footnote 85, p. 1342.

⁵² Mr. Avery Peterson, First Secretary of the American Embassy at London.

Mr. Peterson said he would convey this reaction (after receiving our telegram) to Mr. Helmore whom he planned to see on August 3.

With regard to the October 15 meeting, Mr. Peterson said he was continuing to press for provision of personnel by the British and exploring other possible sources. He felt the meeting should certainly take place sometime in October. I said that we, too, were doing all we could to provide a staff.

I called Mr. Peterson back and told him we were sending him the attached cable⁸³ immediately, and summarized its contents for him in case he met with Mr. Helmore before August 3.

560.AL/8-246 : Telegram

*The Acting Secretary of State to the Chargé in the United Kingdom
(Gallman)*

U.S. URGENT

WASHINGTON, August 2, 1946.

5803. For Peterson from Wilcox and Brown. 1. Confirming telephone call re distribution Charter. You are authorized talk British as follows. In view our plan for bilateral discussions August, we much regret we cannot delay plans any longer by withholding distribution, since essential other countries have time to consider Charter before talks. British have already held such talks. Charter merely suggested elaboration of Proposals. We feel Charter will help clear up possible doubts and fears on part other governments and clarify technical points. Accordingly, we plan instruct missions on Aug 5 to transmit Charter immediately unless before Aug 5 we receive from British reasons against transmittal which we consider persuasive. You may assure British we will advance Charter on own responsibility without implying in any way commitment on part of U.K.

2. We plan telegraph same day to all nuclear governments explaining procedural reasons why we think inclusion Chile, Norway and Lebanon in trade-barrier negotiations desirable, that we plan to invite them in 10 days, and stating we assume no objection. [Wilcox and Brown.]

ACHESON

⁸³ Infra.

560.AL/8-346 : Telegram

*The Chargé in the United Kingdom (Gallman) to the Secretary of State*SECRET NIACT

URGENT

LONDON, August 3, 1946—4 p. m.

Received August 3—11 : 52 a. m.

7243. For Wilcox and Brown from Peterson. Memo based your 5803, August 2 left with Helmore BOT.

British position is as follows: (a) If US Charter published British would say they were not consulted and were not in accord with certain American interpretations of ITO proposals as expressed in Charter; (b) British could not at present undertake joint redrafting on these points of different understandings and do not wish to engage in that sort of negotiation now; (c) British still have objection as to wisdom of publication of Charter. They believe it a mistake in tactics.

On question of Norway, Chile, Lebanon, British observe that paragraph 2 reftel gives them to August 15 to comment.

British stated informally that there were main points wherein they think US Charter interpretation of ITO is contrary to their interpretation, as follows:

[Here follows simple listing of British points of difference, relating to Articles 18, 27, 21, 23, 26, 30, 31, and the section relating to cartels.]

British have much less objection to confidential circulation of Charter to nuclear countries and say this would be less embarrassing. [Peterson.]

GALLMAN

560.AL/8-546 : Circular telegram

*The Acting Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Officers*⁸⁴

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, August 5, 1946—9 p. m.

Depcirtel July 24 8 a. m. You are hereby authorized transmit ITO Charter with explanatory memo as soon as copies arrive.⁸⁵

ACHESON

⁸⁴ Sent to the United States missions accredited to the eighteen governments named along with the United States in the ECOSOC resolution of February 18, 1946 as members of the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Trade and Employment.

⁸⁵ In a circular telegram of August 5, 10 p. m., the Department informed the missions at Canberra, Wellington, and Pretoria that "in addition to eight copies by regular air mail, three copies of ITO Charter have been sent you by special route . . . and should arrive by Aug. 9." In the same telegram the Department cabled the text of the explanatory memorandum that was to accompany the draft Charter upon its transmittal to other governments; (see circular telegram, July 23, p. 1337).

The eighteen missions accredited to the governments members of the Prepara-

560.A.L./8-546: Circular telegram

*The Acting Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Officers*⁸⁶

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, August 5, 1946—noon.

Depcirtel July 23 11 a.m. and previous. Dept considers present favorable time to add Chile, Lebanon and Norway to nuclear group originally invited by US to participate in trade-barrier negotiations. Addition these three will place all members of Preparatory Committee named by ECOSOC on same footing and thus avoid confusion and invidious distinctions created by continued exclusion three members of Prep Committee from major aspect of preparations for world trade conference.

tory Committee were informed in circular telegrams on dates varying from August 5 to August 9 that the Department planned to conduct bilateral discussions on the draft Charter with all the concerned governments. This set in motion the sequence of events related to the diplomatic discussions projected in the Department's July planning.

The Embassy at London was instructed on August 6 to inform the British Government of the Department's final position on the matter of the circulation of the draft Charter. The Department cabled: "Please inform British (urtel 7243, Aug. 3) we are proceeding transmit Charter other members Preparatory Committee on confidential basis but will not publish in immediate future. Also, in bilateral talks with these countries we will point out British have not been consulted in preparation of Charter and have for example criticized several provisions which we will mention. On whole we think this far better procedure than presentation to other countries of joint draft. . . ." (Telegram 5845, to London, August 6, 3 p. m., (560.AL/8-346)).

Copies of the draft Charter were on August 12 transmitted for information to the diplomatic missions in Washington of the concerned governments (memorandum notes dated August 12, 1946, (560.AL/8-1246)).

On September 12 the Department in a circular telegram informed all United States diplomatic missions except Madrid that this Government was releasing the draft "Suggested Charter" for publication on September 20, and that copies of the printed text were being forwarded by air mail for transmission to the government concerned. It was explained that the draft Charter represented an elaboration of the Proposals prepared in December, 1945 and contained detailed provisions for implementing the principles of the Proposals regarding international aspects of employment measures, reduction of trade barriers, elimination of restrictive business practices, commodity agreements and the creation of an international trade organization. The missions were to bring the foregoing to the attention of the Foreign Minister concerned on September 18, "stating that suggested Charter . . . is being put forward as a basis for discussion and not as document expressing final or fixed views of US Govt." Copies of the Charter were to be given to the Foreign Ministries "upon arrival but not prior Sept 18." (circular telegram, September 12, 1946, 10 a. m. (560.AL/9-1246)). The diplomatic missions in Washington were informed of these events and handed copies of the draft Charter for purposes of information on September 16. Copies had been sent to the Secretary-General of the United Nations on September 14.

For text of the "Suggested Charter for an International Trade Organization of the United Nations," released by the Department of State on September 20, see Department of State Publication 2598. For the summary of provisions issued by the Department at the same time, see Department of State Bulletin, September 29, 1946, pp. 535 ff. See also, ibid., p. 585, for text of Department's press release issued at this time, and text of a statement by the Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs (Clayton).

⁸⁶ Sent to the 15 United States missions accredited to the "nuclear" governments invited by the United States in December, 1945 to attend a preliminary conference in preparation for the general conference on trade and employment.

While US responsible for issuance original invitations and must therefore also take responsibility for inviting three new members, US cannot properly proceed wholly on own initiative since, in view multilateral nature of agreement contemplated, invitation and acceptance thereof necessarily involve trade-barrier negotiations not only between three new members and US but also between former and each other nuclear country.

In order pave way for US action, please inform Govt to which you are accredited that in accordance with spirit of ECOSOC resolution adding Chile, Lebanon and Norway to original group, US now proposes extension these countries invitation negotiate trade barriers on same basis as nuclear group, that it is proposed issue such invitations on or about Aug 15, and that it is assumed Govt to which you are accredited would have no objection proposed invitations in view earlier action of ECOSOC.

Please inform Dept by Aug 13 of any reaction to foregoing.⁸⁷

Dept aware that invitation to Lebanon will entail negotiation with Lebanese-Syrian Customs Union which may affect form of invitation in this case.

ACHESON

560.AL/8-2846

The United Nations Assistant Secretary General for Economic Affairs (Owen) to the Under Secretary of State (Clayton)

NEW YORK, August 28, 1946.

MY DEAR MR. CLAYTON: I am in receipt of your note dated August 16, concerning the meeting of the Preparatory Committee of the International Conference on Trade and Employment. I have taken very good note of your remarks and I wish to thank you for your extremely ⁸⁷ A generally favorable reaction was contained in replies a majority of which had been received by August 15. (These are found in the 560.AL File.) The London Embassy reported in telegram 7426, August 13, that "Embassy informed today by Foreign Office that British Government agreeable to adding Norway, Chile and Lebanon to nuclear group (Depcirtel August 5, Noon). While agreeing to this action Foreign Office notes that it has certain objections to enlarging nuclear group. These objections relate principally to original understanding that nuclear group should consist of countries having major share in world trade." (560.AL/8-1346)

Telegraphic instructions were sent to the United States missions at Oslo, Beirut, and Santiago on August 19 authorizing them to transmit invitations to the governments to which they were accredited. Chile accepted the extended invitation on August 27, Norway on September 11, and Lebanon on October 2.

The Department of State announced on October 14 that the invitations had been extended and accepted; for text of release, see Department of State Bulletin, October 27, 1946, p. 754. The missions at the three concerned capitals were sent advance texts of the announcement in a circular telegram of October 9, 5 p.m. (560.AL/10-946).

generous offer to supply staff who will assist in servicing the meeting.

I am pleased to be able to inform you that your offer has greatly facilitated the task of the Conference and General Services Department and—subject to certain other staffing requirements being satisfactorily dealt with in the next few days—it will in fact be possible for the meeting to take place on October 15 as originally planned.⁸⁸ We will confirm the date of the meeting at the earliest possible opportunity.⁸⁹

Sincerely yours,

DAVID OWEN

560.AL/S-446^{89a}

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Harriman) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL

LONDON, September 4, 1946.

No. 1632

SIR: I have the honor to refer to the Department's telegram No. 5848, August 6,⁹⁰ instructing Mr. Hawkins and Mr. Peterson to visit Praha, Oslo, Brussels, The Hague and Paris to conduct discussions with Government officials regarding the United States proposals and Draft Charter for an International Trade Organization.

The discussions took place in Praha August 12-13, in Oslo August 15-19, in Brussels August 21-22 (where Mr. Robert Terrell of the Department joined the party), in The Hague August 23-24, and in Paris August 26-28. In passing through Copenhagen occasion was taken to call on the Danish Foreign Minister and his principal assistant to bring them up to date in developments relating to ITO.

The principal points of value of the trip may be summarized as follows:

(a) It brought to light several points in the United States Draft Charter regarding which there was common misunderstanding and criticism.

⁸⁸ The Department had reacted strongly to an alarm raised by the Secretariat of the United Nations, that the London meeting of the Preparatory Committee would have to be postponed because of the absorption of available technical conference personnel by the session of the General Assembly of the United Nations planned for the autumn months in New York. This problem arose late in July, and the Department made the most strenuous efforts throughout August to maintain the projected October 15 date. Approaches had been made especially to the Governments of Canada, the United Kingdom, and France in this effort. Documentation regarding these matters is found in the 560.AL file.

⁸⁹ The national missions at the seat of the United Nations were informed officially of the October 15 date by the Secretary-General on August 31; the Department was so informed in telegram 532, August 31, from New York, not printed.

^{89a} Presumably the date enclosure number should be 9-446; it is however filed as indicated here.

⁹⁰ Not printed.

(b) As a result the Department, guided also by the results of conversations with non-European nuclear countries, will be to a certain extent briefed regarding attitudes likely to arise in the Preparatory Meeting in October, which thus permits a prior consideration of the position which the Department will take at the Preparatory Meeting.

(c) It served to emphasize to European nuclear countries the importance which the United States attaches to the proposed International Trade Organization, and the sincerity of the American intention to modify our own trade restrictions as well as to effect the renewal [removal?] or reduction of trade restrictions in other countries.

(d) It should speed up the study work of European nuclear countries, add importance to the status of their committees appointed to recommend a governmental position regarding the International Trade Organization, and should hasten both the preparation of request lists and the formulation of new post-war tariffs.

(e) It should bring about a greater appreciation of the importance of the relationships and conflicts between temporary trade arrangements of European nuclear countries and the long-term arrangements proposed for ITO.

(f) It should assist in clarifying the relationship of the Preparatory Meeting, the Negotiating Meeting, and the World Trade Conference, and indicate the type of personnel required from nuclear countries at the first two meetings.

(g) Finally, the trip provided additional personal knowledge of the views of individual government officials who are to participate in the Preparatory Meeting.

Outline of Report.

In order to provide maximum usefulness to the Division of International Trade Policy and the country committees concerned with ITO, this report will be divided into three main segments:

(a) Main conclusions of the London conferees regarding the outlook of the five countries toward the ITO.

(b) A chronological summary of the persons seen in the five countries and general indications given by them of the position of each country relative to the ITO.

(c) A serial review of the United States Draft Charter with comments on individual paragraphs reflecting the attitude of governmental officials in the five countries.

MAIN CONCLUSIONS

1. The five countries visited exhibited a sincere and wholehearted interest in the International Trade Organization, and the code of conduct for international trade appears to be considered by all five countries as an alternative greatly to be preferred to the nationalistic trade practices prevalent in the inter-war years. The United States proposals are in every case regarded as being in consonance with the basic economic interests of the countries visited.

The ultimate position which Czechoslovakia will take is more doubtful than that of the other four countries because of its political relationship with the U.S.S.R. and the disruption of its industrial structure because of enemy occupation and the resultant nationalization program. Czechoslovakia, geographically and politically, is on the fence between eastward and westward orientation in the economic and political spheres and has not yet made the basic decision between east or west. For that reason its position regarding the International Trade Organization is likely for a time to be equivocal.

A somewhat similar but less fundamental doubt must also be expressed for France because of conflicting political elements in the country, and the wartime dislocation in French industries which raises doubts as to what position France will be able to hold in a competitive post-war world and as to what position it should take regarding proposals envisaging greater competition in international trade. If the U.S.S.R. should not participate in ITO a conflict might easily arise between the political and economic interests of France which would be difficult to resolve.

As for the Netherlands, support for the kind of Trade Organization and commitments proposed by the United States seems likely to be qualified in a number of important respects because of Dutch concern for the welfare of the Dutch East Indies and Dutch political interests in that area.

The support for our ITO proposals by Norway and Belgium seems likely to be unqualified in every important respect.

2. In all five countries there seems to be general agreement regarding the elimination of quantitative restrictions for protective purposes. This is in sharp contrast from the position adopted in the inter-war years and most encouraging to the hope for a basis for tariff action that would have meaning.

3. The main objections from the five countries to the United States Draft Charter arise from their concern over a possible inadequacy of provisions relating to the transitional period. Their objections are not as yet very specific but it is to be expected that their concern over problems facing them will cause them to examine very critically any provisions which in any way limit their freedom of action for as long a period as there is any chance of these problems still existing.

4. Objections were expressed by several of the five countries to provisions in the Draft Charter regarding cartels and inter-governmental commodity arrangements. These objections in large degree arise from an ideological bias in favor of cartels and commodity agreements. This gives rise to a reaction against the anti-cartel and commodity agreements bias which seems implicit in the text of Chapters V and VI. In particular they object to the presumption that the specified practices of cartels are bad and are inclined to feel that the burden of proof should be on the organizations to prove them so. Regarding commodity agreements they feel that the machinery is so cumbersome as to prevent or delay unduly the taking of needed action.

5. A general question was raised in several of the countries regarding the relationship of shipping problems to the proposed International Trade Organization.

6. A feeling was evident in several countries that regional tariff groups should not be prohibited within the ITO membership if the objectives of the regional group were truly toward freedom in international trade and provided the agreements were actually and effectively open to other ITO members. It was argued that certain members of ITO with common economic problems might be able to reduce trade barriers among themselves to a greater degree than would be possible among all members of ITO; that under these conditions if a regional group gave special mutual concessions such arrangements should not be prohibited provided the offer was effectively open to all members of ITO.

7. Questions frequently arose, without taking the form of concrete suggestions, regarding the coordination of the work of Economic and Social Council, ITO, and other agencies, particularly the Food and Agricultural Organization.

8. In several of the five nuclear governments there was some fear of trade recession in the United States which raised the question whether the United States Draft Charter made adequate provision whereby a country might insulate itself from business recessions in other countries.

[Here follows balance of the report.⁹¹]

Respectfully yours,

For the Ambassador:
HARRY C. HAWKINS
Minister-Counselor for Economic Affairs

⁹¹ Additionally officers from the Department proceeded from Washington at varying intervals to Ottawa, Havana, Rio de Janeiro, Santiago, Wellington, Canberra, Pretoria, New Delhi, and Nanking, for similar consultations, during the period from mid-August to early October; and further discussions were held with the French at London on September 14 and at Washington on September 24 and October 1 (documentation found in 560.AL/file).

On October 7 the Department in its weekly "Current Economic Developments" described the foreign reactions to this Government's trade program in general fashion as follows:

"Since the issuance of our Proposals and draft Charter, Department officers have discussed in detail the points contained therein with officials in the other countries of the Preparatory Committee group and have found that while there is considerable unanimity on some aspects of our program, the US delegation faces a difficult task of persuasion on others. Canada perhaps comes the closest to supporting our program as a whole. UK officials gave their approval to the

560.AL/10-746

*Memorandum by the Chief of the Division of Commercial Policy
(Brown)*⁹²

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] October 7, 1946.

Mr. Acheson's memorandum submitting the Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment to the President for his approval summarized the trade program which they envisaged and set forth the main obligations which would have to be assumed by the United States.

The memorandum stated:

"The tariff provisions (of the Proposals) would involve at an early stage the broad and substantial use of the authority under the Trade Agreements Act. The specific tariff concessions which we would offer to other countries would, of course, be submitted to you for prior consideration and would be subject to appropriate safeguarding provisions."

The President approved this memorandum on September 11, 1945.

On December 6, 1945, the United States invited 15 nations, accounting for over two-thirds of our trade, to negotiate trade agreements. Three smaller countries have since been added. The negotiations are to begin in April 1947.

The Interdepartmental Trade Agreements Committee has now com-

Proposals before they were issued, and have criticized the draft Charter only where it differs substantially from the Proposals.

A definitely different opinion is to be found in the less-developed countries (Australia, New Zealand, India, China, Cuba, Brazil, and Chile) with regard to the reduction of trade barriers. These countries, deeply concerned with the problem of industrialization and full employment, want to use restrictive measures to protect their infant industries. In general, they remain unimpressed with our contention that subsidies offer the least objectionable method for this purpose. They point out that, while tariffs and subsidies both amount to charges on their economies, the very real difficulties in raising the revenue to pay subsidies make the latter impractical for them. The Cubans are reluctant to give up their preferential position in the US market, as are the New Zealanders in the UK. The British, however, are willing to negotiate on preferences if convinced of the sincerity of the US intention to lower substantially our tariff wall, as a defense against which the Empire preferential system was developed.

A major point of difficulty will be faced in connection with our cartel provisions. The Dutch, the Czechs and the Belgians are not willing to concede that all cartels are bad. They would be willing to have the Charter state that certain practices may have undesirable effects, but they object to having the burden of proof put on those engaging in cartel arrangements, as our draft Charter now provides."

⁹² Addressed to the Director of the Office of International Trade Policy (Wilcox) and the Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs (Clayton). A marginal notation by Mr. Brown reads: "Not read by Mr. Clayton, but substance given him orally by C[lair] W[ilcox] and W[inthrop] G. B[rown], specifically marked portions." The latter comprised four paragraphs, beginning respectively, "Because of the number of countries involved. . .", "Most important of all. . .", "The list is bulky. . ." and "In order to meet the time schedule. . ."

pleted its list of items on which tariff concessions will be considered (but not necessarily granted) by the United States at the April meeting. In accordance with standard trade-agreement procedure, this list includes the items of which the "nuclear" countries are, or are likely to be, principal suppliers. Public hearings on this list will be held in January.

The Trade Agreements Committee has also substantially completed a list, compiled on the same basis, of items on which it will request tariff concessions or bindings from the other nuclear countries.

If we are to obtain the commitments which we seek in the Charter from other countries with respect to the use of quantitative restrictions, exchange controls, preferences and other discriminations, and adequate tariff concessions on our export items, it is essential that we grant tariff concessions to them which are substantial in extent and cover a wide range of items. The list prepared by the Trade Agreements Committee (a copy of which is attached)⁹³ has been developed in accordance with established trade-agreement procedure and should be a satisfactory basis for the nuclear negotiations.

Because of the number of countries involved, and their importance in our trade, the list is very extensive. The list includes at least one item, often many, from 450 paragraphs out of the 503 in the dutiable section of the Tariff Act and 150 paragraphs out of the 211 paragraphs in the free list. If concessions were granted on all or a substantial part of this list, it would, in effect, amount to a revision of the Tariff Act.

Most important of all, the list includes key items, such as wool, butter, meat, pottery, woolen and cotton textiles, sugar, copper, glassware and shoes, without which the negotiations would fail.

Therefore, the list has high political significance. Its publication will evoke vociferous protest from vested interests, from pressure groups and opponents of the trade-agreements program. The inclusion of the key items referred to will be the principal cause of this protest.

On the other hand, the list should evoke commendation from supporters of our program for expanding trade and substantial satisfaction from the nuclear governments.

The list is bulky. This is deliberate. We have made no effort to conceal the magnitude of the project. On the contrary, we have presented the list in two forms, one in the legal language of the Tariff Act, the other in the layman's language of Commerce Department statistics, with useful supplementary data, so as to ensure that the public has the fullest knowledge of what we are doing. One of the great strengths of the trade-agreements program has been the integrity of its procedures and administration. This list is designed to maintain that integrity.

⁹³ Not found attached to file copy. See memorandum to the President, about November 5, p. 1352.

It is highly important that these negotiations be clearly related in the public mind to the rest of our economic program, e.g. Article VII, Bretton Woods, the International Trade Organization. I suggest, therefore, that the President be asked to make a statement showing this relationship at the time the list is published and the importance of the negotiations. The list would also be accompanied by a Department press release, substantially in the form attached, giving background information about the tariff negotiations and relating them to our overall trade program.

In order to meet the time schedule, this list will have to be published on November 9. To get it printed, we should have Presidential approval by October 11. A suggested Memorandum for the President is attached, together with a suggested statement for him to make.⁹⁴

WINTHROP G. BROWN

Editorial Note

On October 2 President Truman approved the Department's recommendations for the composition of the United States Delegation to the First Meeting of the United Nations Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Trade and Employment, which was to convene in London on October 15. Mr. Clair Wilcox, Director of the Office of International Trade Policy, was appointed Chairman of the Delegation, and Mr. Harry C. Hawkins, Minister-Counselor of Embassy for Economic Affairs at London, was appointed Vice-Chairman. Other members of the 13-man delegation were drawn from the Departments of State, Labor, Commerce, and Agriculture, the Treasury Department, and the United States Tariff Commission. For the official Delegation list, see Department of State Bulletin, October 13, 1946, page 664.

The Conference extended from October 15 to November 26. There is a public documentation of the Conference published by the Economic and Social Council in the United Nations document series E/PC/T. This includes verbatim reports of plenary and committee meetings. For the official report of the Conference, see U.N. Doc. E/PC/T/33. A set of these records is found in Department of State Lot File 57D284, Box 90. For statements made at the opening and final plenary sessions of the conference by the Chairman of the United States Delegation (Wilcox), see Department of State ⁹⁴ See memorandum to the President, about November 5, p. 1352.

Bulletin, October 27, 1946, page 757, and December 8, 1946, page 1056. For a comparison of the articles of the draft charter prepared by the conference with the articles originally presented by the United States Delegation, see Department of State Publication 2728, Commercial Policy Series 98, Preliminary Draft, Charter for the International Trade Organization of the United Nations (Washington, 1946).

There is an extensive unpublished documentary collection in the Department of State's unindexed office lot files, Lot 57-D284, relating to the subject of the proposed International Trade Organization and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and consisting of 124 boxes. This collection includes the official documentation of the United States Delegation to the London meeting of the Preparatory Committee, in five boxes containing background and preparatory material, the working papers of the Conference, and the working papers of the United States Delegation (including a complete file of incoming and outgoing telegrams). An inventory of the entire lot is found in the Research Section of the Department of State's central files.

560.AL/11-946

*Memorandum by the Department of State to President Truman*⁹⁵

SECRET

WASHINGTON, [undated].

On September 11, 1945, the Acting Secretary of State submitted to you the United States Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment, together with a memorandum summarizing the trade program which these Proposals envisaged and the main obligations which they would involve for the United States.

This memorandum stated in part:

"The tariff provisions (of the Proposals) would involve at an early stage the broad and substantial use of the authority under the Trade Agreements Act. The specific tariff concessions which we would offer to other countries would, of course, be submitted to you for prior consideration and would be subject to appropriate safeguarding provisions."

You approved the memorandum.

On December 6, 1945, these Proposals, somewhat revised after consultation with the British, were published for the consideration of the world, and the United States invited fifteen nations, accounting for over two-thirds of our trade, to negotiate trade agreements. Three smaller countries have since been added. The negotiations are to begin in April 1947.

⁹⁵ Although the memorandum, which is undated, carries the notation "Approved Nov. 9, '46, Harry S. Truman", the President had signified his approval, apparently orally, by November 5; see footnote 97, p. 1354.

In accordance with the procedures which have been followed for the twelve years of the administration of the Trade Agreements Act, a list will be published setting forth the items on which tariff concessions will be considered by the United States in these trade-agreement negotiations. Public hearings will be held on this list which has now been completed (subject to such minor modification in form as the lawyers may advise) by the Interdepartmental Trade Agreements Committee. A copy of the list is attached for your approval.⁹⁶

Because of the number of countries involved, and their importance in our trade, the list is extensive. It also includes certain items, such as wool, butter, meat, pottery, woolen and cotton textiles, sugar, copper, glassware and shoes, which are of great concern to important and highly vocal domestic interests, but consideration of each of which is essential in order even to initiate negotiations with one or more of the countries involved.

Inclusion of an item in this list does not necessarily mean that a concession will be granted on that item. That decision will depend on what develops in the public hearings and whether adequate concessions can be obtained from other countries in return.

Before any concessions are actually offered or granted, they will be submitted to you for approval.

We are seeking heavy commitments from other countries with respect to their use of quantitative restrictions, exchange controls, preferences and other discriminations which have operated to the detriment of the United States. We are asking them for tariff concessions on a very wide range of our export items which, if granted, would have great value for American exports and the American economy generally. This is particularly important in view of the prospect of large surpluses of many of our important agricultural products and the fact that heavy industries essential to our national security have been greatly expanded during the war and will require export markets. If we are to achieve these important objectives for the United States, we must be prepared to make tariff concessions which are substantial in extent and cover a wide range of items.

The list attached has been developed in accordance with established trade-agreement procedure. Because of the wide scope of the negotiations, a special effort has been made to present it in a form which can be most easily used and understood by the American interests concerned.

⁹⁶ Not attached to file copy. The list is printed in Department of State publication 2672, Commercial Policy Series 96. Reference should be made also to Schedule A—Statistical Classification of Imports Into the United States, U.S. Department of Commerce, September 1, 1946.

This list is an essential basis for the forthcoming negotiations. These negotiations must succeed, or the whole program for international economic cooperation will collapse.

If you approve, this list will be made public on or about November 8, 1946.⁹⁷

In view of the significance of these negotiations, it would be highly desirable if, when the list is issued, you could make a brief statement emphasizing the importance of the negotiations and their relationship to the other parts of this country's economic program. A suggested statement⁹⁸ is attached for your approval.

560.AL/10-3146: Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Smith)

SECRET

WASHINGTON, November 7, 1946—7 p. m.

1962. To comply legal requirements for trade agreement negotiations next spring it is necessary publish legal notice of intention to negotiate. Although Soviets have not replied our invitation, Dept has decided include them in notice. This publication is not to be interpreted as renewed importunity to Soviets, but legal step necessary leave us free negotiate next spring. Following exchange cables with ITO delegation London is relevant.

(Deptel 7418, Oct 29 to London) "Dept considering omitting Soviets from public notice intention to negotiate trade agreements in view (a) their failure after 11 months to answer our invitation, (b) extreme unlikelihood any substantial Soviet interest in tariff concessions. Dept does not wish to be in position announcing intent negotiate with nation which has ignored our invitation. This omission would preclude tariff negotiations with Soviets in April but would not interfere general commercial-policy agreement. Please give your reactions soonest in view proposal urtel 902 Oct 24⁹⁹ for Prep Com sponsorship tariff negotiations.”

⁹⁷ The Department on November 5 informed Mr. Clair Wilcox, Chairman of the United States Delegation to the London Preparatory Committee meeting, that "President has approved statement which will be issued with list for release Sunday papers Nov. 10. . . ." (telegram 7554, to London, November 5, 6 p. m., (560.AL/11-546)). This was confirmed in a "Memorandum for Files" made by the Acting Secretary of State on November 6, not printed. The U.S. missions accredited to the other 18 "nuclear" governments had been briefed on the projected schedule and texts in a circular telegram of November 7, 5 p. m., not printed.

⁹⁸ For the Statement by the President, released to the press by the White House on November 9, see Department of State Bulletin, November 17, 1946, p. 909. For related statements and information released at the same time, see ibid., pp. 907-910.

(Embtel 9163, Oct 31 from London) “Re your telegram 7418 discussed exclusion Russia from published list full delegation meeting. Opinion of delegation unanimous Russia should not be removed for following reasons: 1. Klentsov, Soviet trade delegate in London has made overtures to me expressing interest in conference, excusing Soviet absence solely by manpower shortage, and indicating Soviets may wish to participate at later stage. [2.] We should always be in position to say we have kept door wide open to Russian participation and not give slightest basis for propaganda charge that US unilaterally precluded such participation. Withdrawal Russia’s name now might be interpreted as US conclusion that complete final break in economic relations between east and west inevitable. Would be undesirable permit this impression at this stage. 3. Removal Russia might seriously weaken support of France and Czechoslovakia here. 4. Russia still a member of Preparatory Commission may attend spring meeting devoted predominantly tariff negotiations. 5. Cannot see that embarrassment retaining Russia on list would be serious. Delegation judgment concurred in by Hawkins and Winant.”

ACHESON

560.AL/11-2346: Telegram

The Ambassador in the Soviet Union (Smith) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

Moscow, November 23, 1946—noon.

[Received 7:30 p. m.]

4211. We have noted with interest several recent reports from London of conversations with Soviet officials giving various explanations why Soviet Government does not participate in many international meetings, particularly ITO. Reasons given for nonparticipation range from lack of personnel to Soviet preoccupation with questions of security.

While there may be some modicum of truth in these arguments, we believe that in regard to such institutions as the International Bank, ITO and PICAQ, the principal, if not the only, reason the Russians do not join is that they do not wish to. Kremlin insistence on keeping its independence of action in world affairs has even on occasion been frankly expressed by certain responsible Soviet officials, and, in any event, is self-evident in every aspect of Soviet policy in action. Russians want to be able to act unilaterally as they have done in Balkans and will try to do in all areas where it is at all possible. Their attempts at exclusive aviation agreements is but one of many concrete examples of this phenomenon. Another factor is that to join any organization which would require them to give statistics on national income, international trade, balance of payments and gold production, would imply a complete reversal of a basic and scrupulously maintained Soviet policy of state secrecy in such matters.

⁹⁹ Not printed.

On the other hand, whenever they stand to gain something concrete by participation in an international organ or run the risk of losing something important by failure so to do, they appear to find no difficulty in effecting such participation (UNRRA, telecommunications, whaling).

It would appear unreal, therefore, in the absence of concrete evidence to the contrary, to base any policy on the belief that Russians actually desire to join such organs as ITO but are precluded because of personnel or other administrative considerations. It is difficult to understand how a nation of some 180,000,000 inhabitants and pretensions to world leadership cannot achieve the same degree of participation in international organs as a small country such as Belgium, with its population of 8,000,000. When one considers the magnitude of many Soviet diplomatic and consular missions and the personnel it employs in other open and undercover international operations, it would appear that the distribution of this personnel was one of conscious administrative decision.

Finally, it should be pointed out that by neither joining nor clearly refusing to join an organ, and by holding out hope that if certain changes are made, they might join, the Russians achieve a bargaining position which they often use to undermine and emasculate the organ, irrespective of whether they eventually do or do not join it (Bretton Woods and ECITO).

Repeated London 418; Paris 431; Berlin 264.

SMITH

560.AL/11-2746: Circular telegram

*The Acting Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Officers*¹

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, November 27, 1946—9 a. m.

Multilateral tariff negotiations, scheduled open Geneva April 8, will be greatly facilitated by bilateral exchange, earliest possible date, lists tariff concessions to be requested by each participating Govt. Trade-agreements organization now expects have US tentative rate request lists ready transmittal British countries not later Dec. 20. These requests will of course be subject modification in light views submitted by interested persons pursuant US public notice issued Nov 10 (Depcirtel Nov 7²). Conversely, we would like have rate requests lists from these countries soonest and in no event later Jan 13 opening date US public hearings.

¹ Sent to London, Canberra, New Delhi, Pretoria, Ottawa, and Wellington.

Communicate foregoing FonOff emphasizing importance keeping these preliminary exchanges strictly confidential even though tentative and subject later modification. You may also state we are giving priority to lists for British countries because their previously expressed desire consultation among themselves prior spring meeting.

ACHESON

560.AL/12-546

Memorandum by the Deputy Director of the Office of International Trade Policy (Nitze) to the Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs (Clayton)

[WASHINGTON,] December 5, 1946.

I attach two short memoranda in response to the following questions which you asked :

1. What does Charter of International Trade Organization cover?
2. Give short statement on results of London ITO Conference, indicating what points were not fully settled.

[Annex 1]

THE ITO CHARTER

The draft Charter for an International Trade Organization calls for the creation of an international agency, concerned with trade, within the framework of the United Nations. The Charter also embodies a code of rules governing the principal aspects of trade policy. The maintenance of employment and a high level of effective demand by all countries is recognized as a condition for the fullest promotion of trade. Equal treatment of the trade of all countries belonging to the ITO is a fundamental principle of the code. Quotas, exchange controls, and export subsidies are to be used only in specified exceptional circumstances. Countries engaged in state trading are to adhere to commercial principles and treat the trade of all countries equally. Restrictive practices in international trade by private business are to be curbed by international action. Intergovernmental commodity agreements that regulate prices, production or trade are to be entered into only when a burdensome surplus or widespread unemployment have developed or are expected to develop in the commodity in question. Such agreements should be governed by a set of rules including the equal representation of consuming and producing countries. In a chapter added at London, the economic development of all countries is recognized as of major importance to world trade and procedures are established whereby the ITO may grant a limited release from Charter obligations to countries wishing to take measures to protect infant industries.

² Not printed, but see footnote 97, p. 1354.

The United States would give up no sovereignty in joining the ITO. Our status under the Charter would be exactly the same as it under any other international agreement.

Under the proposed ITO Charter, the United States, along with other members of the ITO, would assume certain definite obligations specified in the Charter. The Charter does, however, contemplate situations arising under which members would be justified in taking action contrary to those obligations, and provision is made for release from these obligations if the contemplated circumstances arise. In the event, however, that the United States should at any time decide to take action contrary to the obligations which it has assumed under the Charter and not provided for by the escape clauses, the only sanction which would apply would be a release of other members from certain of their obligations to us under the Charter.

[Annex 2]

RESULTS OF THE LONDON CONFERENCE

In six weeks of work, representatives of 18 countries meeting in London as the Preparatory Committee for an International Conference on Trade and Employment, reached agreement on the greater part of a draft charter for an International Trade Organization. This agreement among the delegations is not finally binding on their governments. A drafting committee will meet in New York in January to smooth out the document prepared in London and to prepare alternative drafts for some of the articles left unsettled at London. Next April the Preparatory Committee will hold its second meeting in Geneva. At the same time, the countries represented on it will negotiate an agreement reducing tariffs and other trade barriers and moving toward the elimination of preferences, in accordance with the Charter. The group in London agreed on procedures covering these negotiations.

The agreement reached at London covered the following points:

A chapter on the need for each country to take domestic action appropriate to its own system to maintain high levels of employment and effective demand as essential to the maintenance of a large volume of international trade;

A chapter on commercial policy limiting the use of quantitative restrictions, exchange controls and export subsidies, except in specified circumstances, and prescribing rules for the conduct of state trading, and the principles according to which tariff reductions are to be negotiated by member countries;

A chapter recognizing the importance of fostering economic development throughout the world and providing means by which countries desiring to use protective measures to encourage the development of industries may secure from the ITO a limited release from their obligations under the Charter for that purpose;

A chapter providing means by which international action can be taken to curb restrictive trade practices of private business harmful to the purposes of the Charter;

A chapter prescribing rules to govern all intergovernmental commodity agreements undertaken to overcome difficulties of production and trade in primary products;

A chapter dealing with the structure of the organization of the ITO.

The following questions were left unsettled at London:

The relation between member and non-member countries;

Rules governing the conduct of complete state monopolies of foreign trade;

Articles dealing with certain technical trade matters, for instance tariff valuation, freedom of transit, etc.

The drafting committee will prepare alternative drafts embodying minority viewpoints for some matters, such as weighted voting and permanent seats on the Executive Board.

The Suggested Charter for an International Trade Organization prepared by experts in the United States Government was a basic working document of the Conference. The new draft charter that has emerged is a truly international document to which all delegates at the conference have contributed. It embodies the essential principles of the American position as well as the contributions of other countries and is a better balanced and more complete document than the original American draft.

560.AL/12-3046

*The Director of the Office of International Trade Policy (Wilcox) to the Secretary of State*³

[WASHINGTON,] December 27, 1946.

CONFIDENTIAL REPORT TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE UNITED STATES DELEGATION TO THE FIRST MEETING OF THE PREPARATORY COMMITTEE FOR AN INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON TRADE AND EMPLOYMENT

London, England, October 15–November 26, 1946

This Confidential Report is supplementary to the formal Report⁴ of the United States Delegation to the First Meeting of the Preparatory Committee for an International Conference on Trade and Employment. It sets forth (1) the principal issues considered at the meeting, (2) the attitudes of other countries toward the American proposals, (3) the strategy adopted by the United States delegation, (4) the outcome of the negotiations, and (5) the prospects of the program for international trade.

It should be emphasized that the work of the meeting was carried on at the expert level, that the negotiations were preparatory rather than conclusive, and that the positions taken involve no final commitments. It is nonetheless true that the Committee has carried the work of drafting a world trade charter to a stage that should make possible its approval without major changes in form or substance.

(1) The Principal Issues

The major objective of the United States was the adoption of a rule that would outlaw the use of import quotas and other quantitative restrictions as a matter of principle, permitting them only with international approval in exceptional cases and requiring that they be administered, in such cases, without discrimination. In the absence of such a rule, it is virtually certain that all other nations will impose quotas on imports and that many nations will so administer these quotas as to discriminate against American goods.

A second objective was an agreement to reduce tariffs and a rule that such reductions would operate automatically to reduce or eliminate margins of preference.

Other nations would like to require us to purchase larger import quotas and narrower margins of preference by reducing our tariffs. We insisted that import quotas be outlawed by rule and preferences be cut automatically so that we could use our tariff concessions to purchase equivalent tariff concessions abroad. On both of these points, we were successful.

³ Transmitted to the Secretary under a covering memorandum dated December 30.

⁴ Not printed.

The Australians argued that our Proposals were negative rather than affirmative, consisting of prohibitions rather than positive measures to expand trade. They and the British emphasized the importance of employment policy. Superficially this appeared to be a major issue. Actually no delegation proposed any positive international measures to expand or maintain employment. The opposition on this point was satisfied with recognition of the fact that a persistent export surplus in the United States or a sudden, sharp decline in our demand for their foods would put them in balance-of-payment difficulties and with a provision permitting countries in such difficulties to use quantitative restrictions to protect their monetary reserves. Such a provision had been included in our original proposals. On this point, we made no concession of substance.

The Australians, with the support of the Indians, Chinese, Lebanese, Brazilians, and Chileans, urged that affirmative provision be made for the industrialization of undeveloped areas. It was the real purpose of this drive to obtain freedom to promote industrialization by using import quotas. Initially this appeared to be the most difficult problem before the Committee. It was resolved, however, when the United States delegation drafted and introduced a new chapter on economic development. In the course of this chapter a procedure is provided whereby the International Trade Organization can grant an undeveloped country, in a particular case, permission to make a limited use of import quotas. This was the only important concession made by the United States during the meeting and it was this that brought about the virtually unanimous acceptance of the charter as a whole.

On cartel policy, our whole position was opposed by the Belgians and the Dutch and the formulation set forth in our Suggested Charter was opposed by the British. Our only real support came from the Canadians. With their help, however, we obtained a revised chapter that is stronger than our original proposals and far stronger than we had thought was possible.

On commodity policy the Committee was confronted with the effort of the FAO to separate agricultural commodities from other commodities and to separate agricultural commodity policy from trade policy by setting up a comprehensive buffer-stock, surplus-disposal, and relief operation under a World Food Board. The U.S. delegation insisted that a common policy apply to agricultural and non-agricultural commodities and that commodity policy be kept in relation with commercial policy under the International Trade Organization. We succeeded in obtaining general support for this position. We defeated a British drive to obtain specific endorsement for buffer stocks as a preferred device. And we came out with a revised chapter that retains all of the safeguards contained in our original proposals.

With respect to organization, the only important issues relating to weighted voting and to the membership of the Executive Board of the ITO. These issues were not resolved.

(2) Attitudes of Other Countries

The Russians did not attend. They consistently attributed their absence to a shortage of trained personnel. This would indicate, at least, that they are not ready to oppose the program. Their absence was fortunate, since it made it possible for us to organize the meeting promptly and to devote our attention almost exclusively to issues with which they would have had little concern. Klentzov, head of the U.S.S.R. trade mission in London, had Kunoci, vice-chairman of the Czech delegation, invite me to lunch and then suggested a subsequent lunch where I outlined the American program and the progress of the London meeting. He said that the U.S.S.R. would have to study the program carefully and determine whether it was in their interest to participate.

The Czechs were the only eastern Europeans at the meeting. They were well represented, entirely cooperative, and gave every evidence of a sympathetic interest in the American program and a desire to see the negotiations succeed. We avoided embarrassment for them and others, in their relations with Russia, by postponing consideration of the articles of the Charter dealing with complete state monopoly of foreign trade and with relations with non-members. They were plainly grateful.

The most striking development at the meeting was the unexpected vigor of the support given us by the countries of western Europe: Norway, The Netherlands, Belgium, and France. They appear to be motivated by a strong desire to follow the U. S. line on trade policy. Aside from these countries, our most helpful support came from Canada and Cuba.

Our strongest opposition came from India and Australia. These countries had two of the most effective delegations at the meeting. The Indians came with a chip on their shoulder. They regarded the Proposals as a document prepared by the U. S. and the U. K. to serve the interest of the highly industrialized countries by keeping the backward countries in a position of economic dependence. They left the meeting in a much better frame of mind. But it is clear that they feel themselves under pressure to push their industrialization by all possible means and with the utmost possible speed.

The Australians were able, intelligent, and reasonable. The head of their delegation, Dr. Coombs, displayed a real capacity for economic statesmanship. The differences between us were more a matter of emphasis than of substance and we succeeded in meeting their political necessities without surrendering anything that we regarded as a matter of fundamental principle. We were fortunate that the nominal leadership of the opposition was in such good hands.

.

The United Kingdom lived up to the letter of its commitments to us and was scrupulously correct in its public statements of formal support. In the closed negotiations, however, it did not assume a role of leadership in support of our program, but took a fairly independent line, supporting us on some issues, opposing us on others, and acting as a mediator between us and our opponents on still others. It had an able delegation and made a major contribution to the outcome of the meeting. One gets the impression that the commitments which the United Kingdom has made to us are highly unpalatable to important segments of British opinion and that the Government, in living up to these commitments, is having to swim against a strong current of public sentiment.

(3) Delegation Strategy

It was the purpose of the United States to advance as far as possible the project of drafting a charter for an international trade organization and promoting definitive negotiations for the reduction of barriers to trade. To this end we had prepared a Suggested Charter elaborating our original Proposals, circulated it to the other members of the Committee, discussed it with all of them (except the Russians), and published it on September 20, 1946. In the meeting our procedural objectives were: (1) acceptance of the American draft as the basis of the Committee's deliberations, (2) completion and publication of as large a part as possible of a revised draft, (3) appointment of an interim drafting committee to carry the drafting work forward between the first and second meetings of the Preparatory Committee, and (4) sponsorship by the Preparatory Committee of the reciprocal trade agreement negotiations projected in December 1945 by the United States.

The British and French had strongly opposed the publication of our Charter. The Australians took the position that it was too early to draft detailed provisions for a charter; that the first meeting of the Committee should produce a more tentative document, similar in character to our original Proposals. We made it clear at the outset that we would not insist upon our particular formulation of the articles in the Charter and that we were prepared sympathetically to consider the proposals made by other countries. The Norwegians and the Dutch then urged the adoption of our Charter as the basis for the Committee's work and the Committee accepted their proposal, set up a series of subcommittees, one to deal with each of our chapters, and took the articles of the relevant chapter as the agenda of each subcommittee.

From then on all of the work of the Committee was directed toward our document. This gave us a great advantage in the negotiations. We had stated the problems, suggested the solutions, established the general pattern of the charter, and provided large sections of text that have not been and will not be altered in any way. Our careful preparation had built up a momentum that carried through the meeting. Our open-minded attitude in the opening sessions allayed the fears of our opponents. The willingness of sixteen other nations to accept a purely American draft as the basis of their work indicates their confidence in our fairness and objectivity and is a tribute that could scarcely have been paid to any other power.

There was considerable reluctance among other delegations concerning the publication of revised texts, the appointment of an interim drafting group, and Committee sponsorship of the tariff negotiations. In each of these cases we waited until the progress of the negotiations had reached a point sufficiently encouraging to indicate a favorable outcome and then proposed the procedure we desired. In each case we obtained unanimous support.

The key to general agreement on substance was an understanding between the heads of the U. S. delegation and the Australian delegation. It became clear that some expansion of the Employment Chapter and the insertion of an Economic Development Chapter would suffice to satisfy Dr. Coombs and that the other members of the undeveloped-nations bloc, with the possible exception of India, would follow his leadership. Coombs finally accepted a radically modified version of his proposals on employment and industrialization and, in return, acquiesced to our insistence on the general rule against import quotas and the automatic reduction of margins of preference. This was the basic bargain in the meeting. The other agreements were collateral.

(4) The Outcome of the Negotiations

Among the 89 articles for the trade charter proposed and discussed, the Committee reached general agreement on 74. These included all substantive issues of major importance. Reservations as to eleven of these articles were recorded by one, two, or three delegations. Each of the present articles thus has the approval, at the expert level, of 14, 15, 16, or 17 countries. The Committee divided on only two articles—those relating to voting and to membership on the Executive Board of the ITO. It failed to complete its work on 11 articles, dealing mainly with customs administration and formal matters, and referred them to the Interim Drafting Committee. It took no action on two articles—state monopoly of foreign trade and relations with non-members—postponing consideration of these issues until its second meeting.

The Committee approved some 200 pages of subcommittee reports reviewing the questions discussed, outlining the positions taken, and explaining the agreements reached. It also approved a memorandum setting forth in elaborate detail the procedures to be followed in the forthcoming reciprocal trade agreement negotiations. And it adopted a series of resolutions relating to the future phases of its work.

It should be recorded that the Committee carried the project of writing a world trade charter much farther than any of its members had believed possible when it met. It completed its work within the six weeks originally assigned to it. And it carried on its deliberations throughout in an atmosphere of cordial cooperation without a bitter exchange or a major division on any matter of substance.

The resulting draft is, in many respects, an improvement on the Charter suggested by the United States. But it closely follows the pattern of that document, making no important concessions on any matter of fundamental principle.

(5) The Prospects of the Program

The success of this project will depend (1) upon the attitude of the U.S.S.R., and (2) upon the future attitude of the other countries on the Preparatory Committee, but, most importantly, (3) upon the support that it receives within the United States.

If the Russians stay away from the second meeting of the Committee, or if they attend the meeting and fight the program, it will be difficult if not impossible to persuade many neighboring states both in Europe and in Asia to go along with plans establishing an effective ITO. It is therefore desirable that they be persuaded to attend the next meeting and that the substantive matters covered in the first meeting be explained to them in detail. The ITO could function effectively without Russian participation. But an ITO opposed by the U.S.S.R. might draw an economic line farther to the west than would otherwise be necessary.

The other nations on the Committee have their fingers crossed. They will go along with our program if we give evidence that we are prepared to practice what we preach. They will abandon it if we don't.

The outcome of the whole enterprise will depend upon the sort of offers that we make at the trade agreement negotiations beginning in Geneva in April 1947. If they are adequate, the rest of the world will follow our leadership. If they are not, our program will be lost.

The success or failure of our international trade policy thus depends less upon the attitude of other countries than it does upon the sort of support that is forthcoming within the United States. If that support is to be effective, it must be vigorous, widespread, and bipartisan. To this end, the Department must be prepared, during the coming months, to devote a considerable part of its time and energy to a program of public information and Congressional relations.

The program to which sixteen other nations have now tentatively agreed is an American program. It was at our insistence that a commitment with respect to trade policy was written into the Atlantic Charter in 1941 and that Article VII was written into the lend-lease agreements in 1942. It was the United States that published the Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment in December 1945 and persuaded the Governments of the United Kingdom and France to go on record in support of these Proposals. It was the United States that invited seventeen [15] other nations, in December 1945, to enter into definitive negotiations for the reduction of tariffs and other barriers to trade. It was at our initiative that the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations set up the Preparatory Committee and agreed to call an International Conference on Trade and Employment. It was our Government that published and circulated The Suggested Charter, sent its representatives to sell the Charter to fifteen other nations in the summer of 1946, and urged the adoption of its provisions upon the Preparatory Committee in the fall of that year. If we do not now go through with the program that we have proposed, we cannot again, in this generation, expect any other proposal that we may make to be considered seriously by the other nations of the world.

Respectfully submitted,

CLAIR WILCOX

UNITED STATES POLICY TO MODERNIZE AND EXTEND THE COMMERCIAL TREATY STRUCTURE OF THE UNITED STATES BY THE NEGOTIATION OF NEW TREA-TIES OF FRIENDSHIP, COMMERCE, AND NAVIGATION

711.002/11-546

*Memorandum Prepared in the Division of Commercial Policy*¹

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] November 5, 1946.

STATUS OF COMMERCIAL TREATY PROGRAM

CP has well under way a major program for the negotiation of treaties of friendship, commerce and navigation. The program is designed to modernize and extend the coverage of existing treaties, some of which are more than a century old.² These instruments determine the basic treaty rights of American nationals, corporations, goods and vessels in foreign countries. In most respects they are completely mutual, assuring the other country the same rights as are obtained by the United States. They complement the provisions of the draft ITO Charter with respect to trade barriers.³

Treaties with more than twenty countries, including some of the most important trading nations, are under consideration.⁴ Negotiations

¹ Forwarded on November 5 by the Chief of the Division of Commercial Policy (Brown) to the Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs (Clayton).

² The planning for the modernization and extension of the commercial treaty structure of the United States began in the Department of State in 1944. The impetus for the program lay in the fact that as of the 1940's there were in force fewer than 30 "reasonably comprehensive" commercial treaties, more than half concluded in the 19th century, and of these "a considerable number" in the period 1800-1850. Additionally, there were in effect some 40 treaties and executive agreements, exclusive of reciprocal trade agreements under the Act of 1934, which dealt in some measure with subjects "appropriate for inclusion in such general treaties". (Department of State Classified Weekly Report, Current Economic Developments, Issue No. 31, January 21, 1946, p. 9)

³ For documentation on this matter see ante, pp. 1263 ff.

⁴ In December 1944 the top-echelon interdepartmental Executive Committee for Economic Foreign Policy (regarding this committee, see footnote 36, p. 1283) recommended that the Department of State should "press forward" with the negotiation of treaties of friendship, commerce and navigation (FCN treaties) with the countries of Latin America. A similar recommendation was made by the committee in April 1945 in respect of the countries of the Near and Middle East. (Ibid., p. 9) General draft articles were of course modified and adapted to the institutions and practices of individual countries.

with China were concluded and a treaty signed November 4.⁵ We are actively negotiating with the Lebanon and hope to reach agreement soon. Drafts have been presented to the Governments of the Philippines, Canada, the United Kingdom, Brazil, Egypt and Chile and will be presented to the Governments of Australia and Cuba in the near future. France and the U.S.S.R. have expressed a willingness to negotiate. Work is well advanced on draft treaties for Afghanistan, Iran and Portugal. An interim agreement with the Yemen, containing establishment, consular and commercial provisions was signed May 4, 1946.⁶

FW 711.002/11-546

*Memorandum Prepared in the Division of Commercial Policy*⁷

[WASHINGTON,] November 5, 1946.

The modern commercial treaty is designed to provide a legal framework, based upon liberal principles and adapted to modern conditions affecting international intercourse, for mutually advantageous relations between two countries over a long period of time. The trade-agreements program and the program directed to the conclusion of a multilateral agreement for the elimination of trade barriers and the establishment of an international trade organization are intended primarily to expedite the flow of goods between nations.⁸ The commercial treaty, on the other hand, deals largely with the rights of persons and corporations and with instrumentalities by means of which the flow of goods and services is carried on. Its usefulness is not limited to economic enterprise in the narrow sense, but extends to the encouragement of cultural interchange by establishing stand-

⁵ This, the first FCN treaty negotiated under the new program, had a special background. The treaty of January 11, 1943 between the United States and China provided for the initiation of discussions for an FCN treaty not later than 6 months after the ending of the war. Actually a draft was presented to the Chinese Government on April 2, 1945 for use as a basis for discussion. See vol. x, bracketed note, p. 1227.

⁶ Documentation regarding these bilateral discussions may be found in the appropriate regional volumes. In the Department's office lot files there are two collections dealing with the United States effort to modernize the commercial treaty system. The papers are arranged on a country basis dealing with the United States effort to modernize the commercial treaty system, Lot 58-D814, "Chronological Files of the Commercial Treaties Branch [of the Division of Commercial Policy]" (1 box), and Lot 59-D669, "Negotiating Texts Used in Postwar FCN Treaty Program" (2 boxes).

⁷ Forwarded on November 5 by the Chief of the Division of Commercial Policy (Brown) to the Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs.

⁸ This refers to the commercial policy encompassed generally in the United States draft proposals for the establishment of an International Trade Organization under the auspices of the United Nations; see pp. 1263 ff.

ards for cooperation in education, the exchange of professional and technical skills, and for the dissemination of information.

The articles of a general commercial treaty may be classified according to subject matter into those relating to (1) establishment, (2) commerce, (3) navigation, (4) general and miscellaneous provisions.

Establishment provisions include rules as to entry, travel, residence, and the carrying on of specified activities by individuals; the status, organization, and activities of corporations; freedom of worship; acquisition, disposition and protection of property; access to courts; freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures; and freedom from compulsory military service.

Commercial provisions in treaties of this type relate to the general principles that should govern the application of import and export duties, internal taxation of imported articles, the making of import and export quota allocations, the regulation of foreign exchange, and the operation of monopolies and the granting of public contracts and concessions as they affect trade. In this field, the commercial treaty makes effective for a relatively long period the general rules relating to trade that have been worked out in twelve years of experience in the making and administration of reciprocal trade agreements.

Navigation provisions deal with such matters as the right of entry of vessels into ports, freedom from discriminatory port charges, assistance to vessels in case of distress, and general non-discriminatory treatment of shipping in all respects.

A general exceptions article is so phrased as to allow necessary freedom of action in national emergencies and to keep the treaty in harmony with the programs of the specialized agencies of the United Nations, such as the International Monetary Fund. Additional provisions deal with such matters as commercial arbitration, freedom of information, and the settlement by pacific means of disputes arising under the treaty, including ultimate appeal to the International Court of Justice.

The standard of treatment specified with respect to the various subjects dealt with in a commercial treaty vary with the nature of the case. In some instances international law is the standard recorded. In certain cases, unqualified rights are specified. In other cases, the rule bars, by means of a most-favored-nation provision, discrimination as between nationals of different countries; in still others the standard is established of giving the alien the same treatment accorded to the nationals of the country in which he is a visitor.

UNITED STATES POLICY OF SEEKING TAX TREATIES FOR THE AVOIDANCE OF DOUBLE TAXATION WITH RESPECT TO INCOME TAXES AND ESTATE AND INHER-ITANCE TAXES

Editorial Note

On January 11, 1946, Mr. Frederick Livesey, Adviser, Office of Financial and Development Policy, reported to the Executive Committee on Economic Foreign Policy on the program of this Government with respect to double taxation treaties. It was explained that the purpose of these treaties was the avoidance of double taxation in income taxes and the establishment of rules of reciprocal administrative assistance in the collection of such taxes. Mr. Livesey pointed out that as of that date the United States had four tax conventions with three different countries, concerning income taxes with Sweden, France, and Canada and concerning death taxes with Canada.

During 1946 the treaty process concerning two conventions signed with the United Kingdom in April 1945 on income taxes and death duties was completed, and instruments of ratification were exchanged in Washington in July. In 1946 also a convention was negotiated ad referendum in Washington with France in March and April and signed in Paris in October; this had to do with the avoidance of double taxation with respect to taxes on estates of deceased persons and inheritances and the extension of reciprocal assistance in the prevention of fiscal evasion of such taxes and was supplementary to a 1939 convention between the United States and France regarding the avoidance of double taxation in income taxes. The French convention was submitted to the Senate by the President on January 10, 1947.

Further in 1946 a convention on income taxes was signed with the Union of South Africa, and discussions progressed with that country looking to a convention covering estate taxes. Draft treaties with the Netherlands, Belgium, and Luxembourg were being reviewed as the year ended in the interested offices of the Department, and an announcement was made on December 1 of a projected negotiation with the Philippines Republic.

The year 1946 saw not only an increase in the number of countries with whom the United States had negotiated tax conventions relating to the avoidance of double taxation in respect of income taxes, but also an extension of the principle of avoidance of double taxation to include taxes relating to estates of deceased persons and inheritances. Basic to both types of convention was the provision for administrative cooperation in the prevention of tax evasion.

Relevant file collections in the Department of State's central indexed files are found under the basic No. 811.5123 * * Double. In the case of France, for example (the country number for France being "51"), papers are found under No. 811.512351 Double. The appropriate office lot file for finding the records kept by the State Department regarding the activities of the Executive Committee on Economic Foreign Policy is Lot 122. Boxes 20-22 of this lot contain minutes and documents of the committee for this period.

GENESIS OF A FOREIGN COMMODITY POLICY FOR THE UNITED STATES; PROPOSALS BY THE UNITED STATES FOR AN INTERNATIONAL SYSTEM TO DEAL WITH COMMODITY PROBLEMS

Editorial Note

In October 1946 the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment meeting in London began consideration of a United States policy for the establishment of an international order to deal with world problems relating to primary (raw material and agricultural) commodities. The United States proposal was incorporated into Chapter VI of the "Suggested Draft of a Charter for an International Trade Organization of the United Nations" (for documentation regarding United States interest in the development of international economic cooperation through the establishment of an International Trade Organization, see pages 1263 ff.).

The U.S. policy on commodities was developed between 1943 and 1946 in the Executive Committee on Economic Foreign Policy, and the resulting foreign commodity policy was closely related to this Government's general commercial policy for the reduction of trade barriers and expansion of world trade and employment. For the United States the point of departure was the United Nations Conference on Food and Agriculture that met at Hot Springs in 1943; and which recommended in pertinent part that international commodity arrangements should be designed to promote the expansion of an orderly world economy, that a body of broad principles be developed regarding the formulation and administration of such international commodity arrangements, and that an international organization to study the feasibility and desirability of such arrangements with reference to individual commodities be created at an early date. The subject of postwar international commodity policy was also taken up in the course of informal economic conversations in 1943 and 1944 between representatives of the United States, the United Kingdom, and Canada.

In September 1944 the Executive Committee addressed itself directly to this problem, receiving from its subcommittee on commodity agreements a report which first outlined the need for action in these terms:

“The case for a jointly agreed international commodity policy rests upon four sets of conditions, namely, (a) the effects of the present war in promoting a lop-sided development of raw material production, and the subsequent likelihood of serious maladjustment in the conditions of supply and demand of a number of primary commodities during the post-war period; (b) the failure of the price mechanism in certain cases to adjust production readily to peace-time changes in the basic conditions of supply and demand; (c) the demonstrated instability of raw material prices and incomes in recent decades; (d) the need for reconciling existing unilateral national policies in support of internationally-traded commodities with international policies for the promotion of world trade.” (ECEFP document D-55/44, September 19, 1944, Lot 122, Box 21)

The report in brief recommended the establishment of an inter-governmental authority within the framework of a world-wide economic organization. This authority would address itself to the case of primary commodities characterized by “burdensome surpluses” and “wide-spread distress” that could not be corrected by the operation of normal market forces. Such cases were to be handled by inter-governmental commodity agreements under stated limitations.

The Executive Committee accepted the report, which became the basis for all subsequent action by this Government in the commodity field. In 1945 the Executive Committee, its commodity subcommittee, or technical committees of this subcommittee, sharpened and clarified these basic propositions (ECEFP documents D-98/45, July 17; D-99/45, July 18; D-106/45, July 24; and D-121/45, September 14, 1945). The results of these studies were embodied by the Executive Committee in late 1945 in the United States “Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment”, and subsequently in the “Suggested Charter” which was transmitted by this Government to interested governments in September 1946, after approval by the Executive Committee in ECEFP document D-70/46 in July 1946. No definitive redrafting of the “Suggested Charter” was undertaken by the London Committee; see pages 1357 ff. for the general results of the London meeting.

Lot 122: Box 22

*Executive Committee on Economic Foreign Policy Document
D-70/46, Washington, July 25, 1946*

CHAPTER VI

INTERGOVERNMENTAL COMMODITY ARRANGEMENTS

Article 41

[General statement regarding intergovernmental commodity arrangements] ¹

The Members recognize that in the relationship between production and consumption of some primary commodities there may arise special difficulties different in character from those which generally exist in the case of manufactured goods and that these special difficulties, if serious, may have such widespread repercussions as to jeopardize the effectuation of the general policy of economic expansion.

Article 42

[Special commodity studies]

1. Members substantially interested in the production, consumption or trade of a particular commodity shall be entitled, if they consider that special difficulties exist or are expected to arise regarding a commodity, to ask that a study of that commodity be made, and the Organization, if it finds that these representations are well-founded, shall invite the Members principally interested in the production, consumption or trade of that commodity, and may invite non-Members having a similar interest, to appoint representatives to a Study Group to make a study of the commodity.

2. The Study Group shall, in the light of an investigation of the root causes of the problem, promptly report its findings regarding the production, consumption and trade situation for the commodity. If the Study Group finds that special difficulties exist or are expected to arise, it shall make recommendations to the Organization as to how best to deal with such difficulties.

Article 43

[Commodity conferences]

If the Organization concludes that measures not involving the regulation of production, trade or prices are unlikely to operate quickly enough in solving the problem, it may convene an intergovernmental conference for the purpose of framing an intergovernmental commodity agreement for the commodity concerned, in conformance with the principles set forth in Article 45.

¹ Brackets appear throughout Chapter VI in the source text.

Article 44

[Objectives of Intergovernmental Commodity Agreements]

The Members agree that the regulation of production, trade or prices through intergovernmental commodity agreements is justified in the circumstances stated in Article 43 to achieve the following objectives:

1. To enable countries to find solutions to special commodity difficulties without resorting to unilateral action that tends to shift the burden of their problems to other countries.

2. To prevent or alleviate the serious economic problems which may arise when, owing to the difficulties of finding alternative employment, production adjustments cannot be effected by the free play of market forces as rapidly as the circumstances require.

3. To provide, during a transitional period, a framework for the development and consideration of measures, which will have as their purpose economic adjustments designed to promote the expansion of consumption or a shift of resources and manpower out of over-expanded industries into new and productive occupations.

Article 45

[Principles governing the institution of intergovernmental commodity agreements]

Members undertake to adhere to the following principles governing the institution of intergovernmental commodity agreements involving the regulation of production, trade or prices:

1. Any Member having a substantial interest in the production, consumption or trade of any commodity for which an intergovernmental commodity agreement is proposed shall be entitled to participate in the consideration of the proposed agreement. The Organization may invite the participation of non-Member countries having a similar interest.

2. Members agree not to enter into intergovernmental commodity agreements involving the regulation of production, trade or prices, except after:

a. investigation by the Study Group of the root causes of the problem which gave rise to the proposal;

b. determination, under procedures established by the Organization in accordance with paragraph 6 of Article 55, either:

1) that a burdensome surplus of the product concerned has developed or is developing in international trade and such burdensome surplus would, in the absence of specific governmental action to prevent it, be accompanied by widespread distress to small producers accounting for a substantial portion of the total output and that these conditions cannot be corrected by the normal play of competitive forces because, in the case of the product concerned, a substantial reduction of price leads neither to a significant increase in consumption nor to a significant decrease in production; or

2) that widespread unemployment, unrelated to general business conditions, has developed or is developing in respect of the industry concerned and that such unemployment cannot be corrected by the normal play of competitive forces rapidly enough to prevent widespread and undue hardship to workers because, in the case of the industry concerned, (i) a substantial reduction of price does not lead to a significant increase in consumption but leads, instead, to the reduction of employment, and (ii) the resulting unemployment cannot be remedied by normal reemployment processes;

c. formulation and adoption by Members of a program of economic adjustment believed to be adequate to insure substantial progress toward solution of the problem within the time limits of the agreement.

3. Intergovernmental commodity agreements involving the regulation of production, trade or prices in respect of other than primary products shall not be resorted to unless the Organization finds that exceptional circumstances justify such action. Such agreements shall be subject to the principles set forth in this Chapter, and, in addition, to any other requirements which the Organization may establish.

Article 46

[Principles and requirements of intergovernmental commodity agreements]

Members undertake to adhere to the following principles and requirements governing the operation of intergovernmental commodity agreements:

1. Such agreements shall be open initially to accession by any Member on terms no less favorable than those accorded to any other country party thereto and thereafter upon such terms as may be approved by the Organization.

2. Such agreements shall provide for adequate representation of Members substantially interested in the importation or consumption of the commodity.

3. In such agreements countries which are largely dependent for consumption on imports of the commodity involved shall, in determinations made relating to the regulation of prices, trade, stocks, production or other substantive matters, have together a voice equal to that of those largely interested in obtaining export markets for the product.

4. In order to minimize the need for production restriction such agreements shall provide, where practicable, for measures designed to expand world consumption of the commodity, consideration being given to the possible effect on competing products.

5. Such agreements shall, with due regard to the transitional need for preventing serious economic and social dislocation, make appropriate provision to afford increasing opportunities for satisfying world requirements from sources from which such requirements can be supplied most effectively.

6. Under such agreements the treatment with respect to the imports or exports of the commodity accorded by any participating country to any Member shall not, unless otherwise agreed by the Organization, be less favorable than that accorded to any other country.

7. Such agreements shall be designed to assure the availability of supplies adequate at all times for world consumption requirements at reasonable prices.

8. Such agreements shall contain provision for administration by Commodity Councils set up in accordance with the provisions of Article 47, except that in the case of existing agreements this requirement may be waived by the Organization.

9. Such agreements shall not remain initially in effect for more than five years. The renewal of an agreement shall be subject to the principles governing new agreements set forth in Article 45. At the end of each five years of the continuance of such an agreement the Organization shall prepare and publish a review of the operation of the agreement in the light of the principles set forth in Article 45. If the operation is found to have failed substantially to conform to these principles, and particularly if it is found not to have made substantial progress toward a solution of the underlying commodity problem, the Organization shall provide for termination of the agreement or for revision believed adequate to make it effective for that purpose.

10. Members agree that full publicity shall be given to any inter-governmental commodity agreement proposed or concluded, to the statements of considerations and objectives advanced by the proposing Members, to the operation of the agreement, and to the nature and development of measures adopted to correct the underlying situation which gave rise to the agreement.

Article 47

[Commodity Councils]

1. A Commodity Council shall be established under each intergovernmental commodity agreement involving the regulation of production, trade or prices of that commodity.

2. The voting membership of each Commodity Council shall consist of the representatives of the countries participating in the intergovernmental commodity agreement concerned, and voting power shall be determined in such a way that the participating countries which are largely dependent for consumption on imports of the commodity involved shall, in determinations made relating to the regulation of prices, trade, stocks, production or other substantive matters, have together a voice equal to that of those largely interested in obtaining export markets for the product.

.

DEVELOPMENTS RELATING TO THE FOREIGN OIL POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES¹

811.6363/4-546

*The Acting Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Navy
(Forrestal)*

WASHINGTON, May 1, 1946.

DEAR JIM: I am taking this opportunity of answering your letter of April 5, 1946 addressed to Secretary Byrnes on the subject of the Anglo-American Oil Agreement and the limitations of American oil reserves.²

As you know the Oil Agreement is now before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.³ No definite date has been set for hearings and we have been somewhat hesitant to ask for its consideration until such time as the British-American loan⁴ is out of the way. It is my opinion that the successful approval by the Congress of the British loan is of the utmost importance and I would not want to take any action that might jeopardize its success. Therefore, it has seemed to me advisable to postpone immediate hearings on the Oil Agreement.

I note your concern over the possible limitations of American oil reserves from the standpoint of our long term security. This question is a very controversial one as is evidenced by some of the testimony brought out at the hearings of the Special Committee Investigating Petroleum Resources under the Chairmanship of Senator O'Mahoney.⁵ However, the problem has recently come to the attention of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee and an ad hoc Committee has been appointed to investigate the matter as well as to look into the possibility of increasing the potential reserves in the Caribbean area. Mr. Charles Rayner of the State Department is the steering member of ¹ For documentation regarding U.S. policy in the Near and Middle East regarding oil, see vol. VII, pp. 18 ff.

² Not printed.

³ Documentation regarding the negotiations in 1944 leading to the conclusion of the Anglo-American Oil Agreement (signed August 8, 1944) is found in Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. III, pp. 94 ff. It was sent to the Senate by President Franklin D. Roosevelt on August 24, 1944. A bracketed note, ibid., 1945, vol. VI, p. 244, describes 1945 events relating to the agreement.

⁴ This refers to the financial agreement concluded between the two governments on December 6, 1945; documentation is found in ibid., pp. 1 ff.

⁵ For a bibliographical note on the records of the special committee, see National Archives, Preliminary Inventory of the Records of the Special Committee of the Senate To Investigate Petroleum Resources, 1944-46. (Record group 46, compiled by George P. Perros) (Washington, Government Printing Office, 1953) this Committee and Commodore Greenman and Captain Dennison represent the Navy Department. I feel sure that the Committee will give every consideration to this complicated problem.⁶

Sincerely yours,

DEAN ACHESON

800.6363/5-946

The British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Bevin) to the Secretary of State

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. BYRNES⁷

ANGLO-UNITED STATES OIL AGREEMENT

His Majesty's Government are anxious to see the Anglo-United States oil agreement ratified as early as possible. It seems to them that the international oil interests of the United States and United Kingdom are substantially similar and that we both have every advantage in bringing into existence permanent machinery for close consultation and day-to-day exchanges of views. The existence of a close understanding between us is essential.

Though His Majesty's Government do not think there is any advantage at present in approaching the Soviet Government they look forward to seeing the oil agreement widen eventually so as to include them.

PARIS, 9 May 1946.

800.6363/5-946

*The Secretary of State to the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Bevin)*⁸

MEMORANDUM

The United States Government has received the memorandum dated May 9, 1946 from the British Government concerning the Anglo-American Oil Agreement.

⁶ The records of the ad hoc committee are found in the 289 Series of the general file of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee located in the National Archives of the United States. The ad hoc committee was appointed on April 22, 1946 and had its first meeting on April 24. Its first report, a preliminary report, was submitted to the plenary Committee (SWNCC) on April 29 (document SWNCC 289/1).

⁷ Sent to the Secretary of State at Paris by the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (Bevin), the Foreign Ministers being there at that time for a meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers. Apparently there was no discussion between the two on this matter at Paris, nor was any acknowledgment made there of the British memorandum. (Memorandum, the Director of the Office of European Affairs (Matthews) to the Under Secretary of State (Acheson), the Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs (Clayton), and the Director of the Office of Near Eastern and African Affairs (Henderson), May 20, 1946, 800.6363/5-946).

⁸ Original sent to London under instruction No. 196, July 3. The Ambassador was requested to reply to the Foreign Office "along the lines of the enclosed memorandum". (800.6363/5-946)

The importance of the Oil Agreement and the advantages to be secured therefrom are fully appreciated by the United States Government. It is most anxious that the Agreement be ratified by the Senate at the earliest possible moment and has for some time been seeking the accomplishment of this result. However, parliamentary considerations have prevented immediate consideration of the Agreement by the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate. Chief among these has been the progress of the British Loan through the Congress. It was our judgment that this should not be complicated by concurrent consideration of an Anglo-American Agreement on petroleum. As soon as the House of Representatives shall have acted upon the British loan, it is our purpose to take up the matter of the Oil Agreement with the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and to press for hearings at an early date. The hearings, however, may not take place before the Senate adjourns and may have to await the reconvening of the Congress.

In that event a delay of several months might occur. Should such a delay occur the United States Government would appreciate an expression of opinion from the British Government about the desirability of utilizing this interval to develop plans, which could be put into operation at a relatively early date, for the generalization of the Oil Agreement in accordance with its own terms as set forth in paragraph 4 of the Preamble and in Article III of the Agreement. An expression of opinion would also be appreciated on the most desirable manner in which a multilateral undertaking in the field of petroleum might be integrated into the United Nations organization and on the procedural steps which that organization might take in order to expedite the convocation of an international conference for this purpose.⁹

This inquiry is made in the hope that any further parliamentary delay in the way of bringing the Anglo-American Agreement into force may not further postpone the negotiation of a multilateral agreement on petroleum which was contemplated by our two Governments in the negotiation of the Oil Agreement.

⁹ In a speech delivered at the University of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania on July 30, 1946 the Chief of the Petroleum Division (Loftus) aired publicly the Department's still tentative thinking along these lines. Extracts of this speech are printed in the Department of State Bulletin, August 11, 1946, pp. 276 ff.

In an instruction circularized to 35 diplomatic missions and 2 consular posts on October 24 the Department noted that "some ideas" expressed in the Loftus speech "encountered considerable criticism from the petroleum industry. . . ." (800.6363/10-2446).

800.6363/9-946 : Telegram

The Chargé in the United Kingdom (Gallman) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL

LONDON, September 9, 1946—6 p. m.

[Received September 9—4 p. m.]

8041. Memo ¹⁰ attached to Department's instruction 196, July 3, regarding Anglo-American oil agreement forwarded Foreign Office July 17. Foreign Office acknowledges sympathetically and states His Majesty's Government are in full agreement that the interval should be utilized to develop plans for future implementation of the agreement and they invite US to send representatives to London latter half September "to discuss matters connected with the future operation of the agreement".

Opinion expressed that "it would be desirable for the proposed discussions to take account of other oil questions which would be appropriate for consideration on the agenda of the first meeting of any Anglo-American oil commission which may be set up in accordance with article 4 of the agreement". ¹¹

Full text by airmail.

GALLMAN

841.6363/12-646

Record of Informal Anglo-United States Oil Talks, November 1946 ¹²

SECRET

A series of informal discussions on oil questions of mutual interest to the British and American Governments took place in London from 19th to the 30th November, 1946, between representatives of the U.S. State Department and officials of the interested U.K. Government Departments. A separate note on the discussions of the position of the Anglo-American Oil Agreement is attached.¹³ The other subjects considered are summarised below :-

¹⁰ Supra.

¹¹ Arrangements for the informal talks were worked out between the two governments during subsequent weeks, and a November meeting date was decided upon. The talks were to be on the official level and on an ad referendum basis. The principal representatives of the United States designated on the United States side were the Petroleum Adviser of the Department (Rayner) and the Chief of the Petroleum Division (Loftus).

¹² This document together with the one immediately following is an agreed record of the talks forwarded to the Department by the Embassy in London in January 1947 after formal approval from "higher authority" in the British Government of "the terms of the section dealing with the position of the Anglo-American Oil Agreement." (841.6363/12-646)

¹³ Infra.

1. Trends in World Oil Supply and Demand.

(a) Views were exchanged on the prospective levels of world supply and demand for petroleum products during the next 4 years, and on alterations in the pattern of world oil movements which appeared likely to result from the anticipated changes in production and consumption levels in the various areas.

(b) The possibility of the United States ceasing to be a major source of oil supplies for international trade in the not too distant future was noted, in which event the present international oil price structure based on Gulf export prices might be affected. It was understood that the oil companies were already considering this problem.

[Here follow thirty numbered paragraphs, two dealing with general matters and the remaining with petroleum questions affecting specifically-designated countries in South America, the Near and Middle East, Europe, and the Far East. The item dealing with the Near and Middle East is printed in volume VII, page 44. There was no section dealing with the subject of a generalization of the Oil Agreement or a multilateral undertaking in the field of petroleum.]

841.6363/12-646

Record of Informal Anglo-United States Discussions in London, November 1946

ANGLO-AMERICAN OIL AGREEMENT

1. The U.S. representatives explained that it was the intention of the State Department to seek the approval of the Senate for the Anglo-American Oil Agreement of September, 1945 at the earliest feasible moment.

2. Views were exchanged on questions which had been raised in the United States on certain aspects of the Anglo-American Oil Agreement. The U.K. and U.S. representatives reaffirmed that :-

(i) neither the British nor the U.S. Government envisaged anything more than advisory functions for the Anglo-American Commission to be set up under the Agreement;

(ii) neither the British nor the U.S. Government understood Article IV 3.d. of the Agreement as obligating the Commission to recommend specific production quotas;

(iii) it was the intention of both Governments in accordance with the undertaking of Article II (a) of the Agreement so to direct their efforts that all valid concession contracts and lawfully acquired rights should be respected and that there should be no interference direct or indirectly with such contracts or rights.

THE UNITED STATES AND THE ACTIVATION OF THE BRETTON WOODS INSTITUTIONS

800.515/12-1345: Circular telegram

*The Acting Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Missions*¹

WASHINGTON, December 13, 1945.

Please communicate the following to the Government to which you are accredited in the most expeditious manner possible:

"In view of the desirability of having the Bretton Woods Agreements² signed by December 31, 1945, it is a matter of great importance that prior to that date those countries which intend to become original members of the Fund and the Bank comply with the procedures set forth in the Articles of Agreement.

"The US intends to sign the Agreements on Dec 27, 1945,³ and ¹ Missions accredited to governments which had signed the Final Act of the Bretton Woods conference. On December 14, 1945, the Department sent a circular note which contained the substance of this telegram to the foreign missions, located in Washington, whose governments had been so informed.

² For documentation on these, as well as on Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund, and the Articles of Agreement of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (hereafter called the Fund and Bank, respectively) and the conference itself see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. II, pp. 106 ff. For other documents relating to the conference, see Department of State Publication no. 2866, Proceedings and Documents of the United Nations Monetary and Financial Conference, Bretton Woods, New Hampshire, July 1-22, 1944 (2 vols; Washington, Government Printing Office, 1948). The Final Act is document 492 ibid., vol. I, p. 927. Each of the Bretton Woods institutions was of interest to the United States: Among the Fund's objectives was the promotion of exchange stability, the expansion of international trade, the maintenance of high levels of employment, and the general promotion of international monetary cooperation.

³ Actually when the Bretton Woods Act became law on July 31, 1945 (59 Stat. 512), President Truman was "authorized to accept membership for the United States" in the Fund and in the Bank.

At about the same time, Department officials discussed the question as to when the United States ought to officially commit itself to membership in the Fund and in the Bank. In a memorandum, dated July 28, 1945 to Secretary Byrnes (800.515 BWA/7-3145) Assistant Secretary Clayton said:

"Dean Acheson [Assistant Secretary] has called my attention to a problem in connection with the Bretton Woods agreements. As soon as the President signs the bill, the United States will be in a position to accept the agreements. It seems to Dean Acheson and me, however, that it would be better for us not to accept them until the other principal financial countries are also prepared to sign. In this way we would accomplish simultaneous acceptance by members having 65% of the quotas and the two institutions could be immediately organized.

"If you and the President believe that this is the proper way to proceed, I can request Mr. Acheson to inquire of the principal financial countries when they will be able to accept the agreements and invite them to join the United States in signing."

In a handwritten note Secretary Byrnes added: "For the President. I have told Clayton to proceed, as suggested" signed J.F.B. The suggestion was approved by President Truman on July 31, 1945. This exchange took place at Potsdam, Germany, at the time of the Berlin Conference.

your Govt is invited to join with the Govt of the US in the ceremony of signature which will take place on that day. All of the other nations which signed the Final Act of the Bretton Woods conference are being invited to participate in that ceremony.

"It is suggested that your Govt may wish to have someone in your Mission in Washington discuss at the earliest possible date matters respecting signature and acceptance of the agreement. Concerning matters not procedural in character information may be obtained from Mr. Emilio G. Collado of the State Dept or Mr. Ansel F. Luxford of the Treasury Dept. With respect to procedural questions relating to the signing ceremony and deposit of instruments inquiry can be made of Mr. Merrill S. Potts of the Treaty Branch of the State Dept.

"Your Govt should be prepared to take the following action with regard to signature of the agreements:

"(1) It should authorize a person in the US to sign the Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund and the Articles of Agreement of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development which are deposited in the State Dept of the US at Washington.

"(2) It should deposit with the State Dept of the US an appropriate instrument of acceptance of the Articles of Agreement as provided for in Article XX, Section 2(a) of the Fund Agreement and Article XI, Section 2(a), of the Bank Agreement.

"(3) It should transmit to the Govt of the US 1/100 of 1 percent of its total quota to the Fund and 1/100 of 1 percent of its total subscription to the Bank. These payments are to be made in gold or in United States dollars. You will probably find it most desirable to have a check or draft in favor of the Govt of the US of America drawn on one of your Govt's dollar accounts in the US. Such check should be delivered to the State Dept at or before the time of signature. For your Govt the payment required with respect to the Fund is and with respect to the Bank is Thus the check should be in the amount of"⁴

ACHESON

800.515/12-1945

Press Release No. 944 Issued by the Department of State, December 19, 1945, Regarding the Signing of the Bretton Woods Agreements

The signing of the Bretton Woods Fund and Bank agreements is scheduled to take place on Thursday, December 27, 1945 in the Department of State on behalf of the United States of America and of such of the other countries signatory to the Final Act of the United Nations Monetary and Financial Conference held at Bretton Woods in July 1944 as are prepared to sign those agreements on that date. The Secretary of the Treasury, Fred M. Vinson, has been authorized by the President to sign the two agreements on behalf of the United States.⁵

⁴ Each message was transmitted with the appropriate quota items filled in. The amounts had been calculated on the percentage (cited above) of the original quotas listed in the schedules included in the Final Act of the Bretton Woods Conference.

China, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Ethiopia, the Philippine Commonwealth, and the Union of South Africa have already indicated their readiness to sign the agreements, and acceptance by Great Britain appears to be assured in view of the favorable action taken by Parliament. The Department is also informed that Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Cuba, Ecuador, Guatemala, France, the Netherlands, Venezuela, and Yugoslavia may be prepared to sign the agreements with the United States, and that by December 27 a number of other countries will probably accept them.

Participation by the United States in the Fund and Bank is authorized by the Bretton Woods Agreements Act approved July 31, 1945 (Public Law 171, 79th Congress).⁶ Similar legislation has been passed by the Philippine Congress and was approved by President Truman on November 20, 1945.

Each of the agreements provides that it shall enter into force when duly executed on behalf of governments having 65 percent of the total of the quotas or subscriptions set forth in Schedule A thereof. Forty-four of the 45 countries listed in those schedules, including the United States, are those which signed the Final Act of the United Nations Monetary and Financial Conference at Bretton Woods, New Hampshire, on July 22, 1944. No quota in the Fund or subscription to the Bank has as yet been fixed for Denmark, the forty-fifth country.

The total of the quotas for the Fund is $8,800,000,000 and the total

⁵ The U. S. instruments of acceptance in the Fund and Bank were deposited on December 20, 1945. For texts of the agreements, see Treaties and Other International Agreements Series (TIAS) No. 1501, or 60 Stat. (pt. 2) 1401, and ibid., No. 1502, or 60 Stat. (pt. 2) 1440.

⁶ 59 Stat. 512. It should be noted that the Act also forms the statutory basis for the establishment of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems (hereafter referred to as the National Advisory Council). The statute, in section 4, directed the Council "to coordinate the policies and operations of the representatives of the United States on the Fund and the Bank and of all agencies of the Government which make or participate in making foreign loans or which engage in foreign financial, exchange or monetary transactions. . . ." The Council was to make recommendations to the President and to submit both special and semi-annual reports.

The statutory members of the Council consisted of the Secretary of the Treasury, as chairman; the Secretary of State; the Secretary of Commerce; the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System; and the Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Export-Import Bank of Washington.

of the subscriptions to the Bank is $9,100,000,000. Sixty-five percent of those amounts would be, respectively, $5,720,000,000 (Fund) and $5,915,000,000 (Bank). The aggregate quotas and aggregate subscriptions of the countries indicated above are considerably more than the 65 percent of the total of the quotas and of the subscriptions, respectively, necessary to bring the two agreements into effect.

It is provided in each of the agreements that as soon as it enters into force each member country shall appoint a governor to the Fund and to the Bank, and that the first meeting of the Board of Governors of the Fund and the Board of Governors of the Bank shall be called by the member having the largest quota or the largest subscription, as the case may be, thus inaugurating the Fund and Bank. The quota and the subscription of the United States are the largest of those fixed for the Fund and Bank, respectively.

[The Bretton Woods Agreements entered into force on December 27, 1945 when in a "ceremony of signature" representatives of the following nations signed the Fund Agreement: Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Guatemala, Honduras, Iceland, India, Iraq, Luxembourg, The Netherlands, Norway, Paraguay, The Philippine Commonwealth, Poland, the Union of South Africa, the United Kingdom, the United States, Uruguay, and Yugoslavia. All of the above with the exception of Colombia signed the Bank Agreement at the same time.]

800.515/12-3145 : Telegram

The Chargé in the Soviet Union (Kennan) to the Secretary of State

RESTRICTED
PRIORITY

Moscow, December 31, 1945—6 p. m.
[Received December 31—1:44 p. m.]

4335. ReEmbs 4232, December 20.⁷ Have just received letter from Molotov in reply to Ambassador's letter of December 20 concerning Bretton Woods invitation. In this communication Molotov states that "Soviet Government does not find it possible at present time to sign the draft agreement drawn up at Bretton Woods concerning the creation of an international monetary fund and concerning an international bank for reconstruction and development. The Soviet Government finds it necessary to subject the questions touched upon in these drafts to further study in the light of those new conditions of the economic development of the world which are forming themselves in the postwar period.”⁸

⁷ Not printed; Molotov was Soviet People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs.

KENNAN

800.515 BWA/1-2646 : Circular telegram

*The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Missions*⁹

US URGENT NIACT WASHINGTON, January 26, 1946—8 a. m.

The United States is directed by the terms of the Bretton Woods Agreements to call the first meetings of the Boards of Governors of the Bank and the Fund. The Agreements have now come into effect by the necessary number of signatures and you are requested to deliver the following invitation to the government to which you are accredited as soon as possible.

“The Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development have come into force and the Government of the United States, as the member having the largest quota in the Fund and the largest number of shares in the Bank, has the honor of inviting your government to arrange for your Governor of the Fund and of the Bank to attend the first meetings of the Boards of Governors. The meetings will be held at Wilmington Island, near Savannah, Georgia, on March 8, 1946 for the purpose of establishing the two institutions.¹⁰

⁸ The Department's reaction to the Soviet refusal is described in the following extract from the Department of State classified information bulletin Current Economic Developments (Issue 31, dated Jan. 21, p. 3) :

“The Department has replied to the Embassy at Moscow on the Embassy's explanation of the Soviet's failure to sign the Agreements. While we are concerned at Soviet failure to ratify, because of the possible implications as to Russia's interest in international economic collaboration, we feel that no pressure should be exerted to get them to join and that the impression should not be given them that possible adherence would be making a concession to the United States.

While the Embassy pointed out that Soviet participation in the Bretton Woods negotiations did not necessarily indicate intention to join and could be explained by Molotov's statement to Ambassador Harriman on April 20, 1944, that participation in the work was for the sake of maintaining the appearance of tripartite collaboration, the Department feels that subsequent Soviet actions in Washington and at Bretton Woods, including dramatic last-minute acceptance of the increased Bank quota, are difficult to explain unless at that time the Soviets intended to join. The Department feels that there is still a possibility that the Soviets may adhere, depending particularly on the possibility of obtaining credits. We also believe that if the USSR remains a non-participant it may make difficult the extension of an Eximbank credit. Any initiative on loan questions will be left to the Soviets.”

⁹ Sent to officers at Missions in countries which had signed the agreement. A circular telegram was sent to officers of Missions in countries which had not signed the agreement, inviting their governments to send observers.

¹⁰ An abbreviated list of the subject matter which the meetings were expected to consider may be found in the Department of State Bulletin March 3, 1946, p. 331.

"It is the expectation of the Government of the United States that the business of the Boards of Governors can be concluded within a two-week period and arrangements have been made for the accommodation of the Governors and those who accompany them for that period of time. Shortly after the conclusion of the meetings of the Boards of Governors it is expected that the Executive Directors of each institution will begin to function at or near the site selected for the principal office of the Fund and the Bank.

"My Government intends to suggest the adoption of a resolution by the Board of Governors of each institution permitting the admission to membership during a limited period of time of those countries listed in Schedule A¹¹ of each of the Articles of Agreement on the terms set forth in the Articles of Agreement on the terms set forth in the Articles of Agreement. It is our hope that some or all of these governments may be in a position to become members of the Fund and the Bank with sufficient speed to permit them to participate in the first meetings of the Boards of Governors, and we are inviting them to have observers in attendance at these meetings.

"The Government of the United States would appreciate it if you could advise us promptly as to the number of persons representing your government who will attend the first meetings of the Boards of Governors as well as the date and place of their arrival in the United States."

Important for the Information of the Mission

An announcement concerning the extension of the invitations will be made at Washington at 11 o'clock Eastern Standard Time on the morning of Monday, January 28. Simultaneously, informative notes will be delivered to the respective missions at Washington. In order to avoid any possibility of premature announcement abroad, you are requested to deliver the note containing the foregoing text as near as possible or feasible to the Washington release hour. Caution should be exercised of course to assure delivery of invitation prior to the arrival of press despatches from Washington.

Owing to the shortness of time, it is essential that the Department obtain immediately at least a rough estimate of the maximum number of persons from each country for whom hotel accommodations may be required. Please endeavor to obtain this information informally and telegraph it at once. Following this, more detailed information will be required concerning individuals and their travel plans. Please telegraph name, title, and delegation function of each individual, including subordinate personnel, and also mode of travel and date and port of entry into the United States. Delegation members should be reminded of the necessity for carrying on their persons suitable credentials identifying them with the meetings. The above points are essential in facilitating entry.¹²

¹¹ Schedule A in each of the Bretton Woods Agreements is a list of assigned quotas in the Fund and subscriptions to the Bank, determined for those nations in attendance at the 1944 monetary conference.

BYRNES

[The Inaugural Meetings of the Boards of Governors of the Fund and the Bank were held at Savannah, Georgia, March 8 to 18, 1946. Important questions settled at these meetings concerned the adoption of by-laws, the location of the principal office of the two institutions, and the salary scale of the executive directors.

The First Annual Meetings of the Boards of Governors of the Fund and the Bank were held at Washington, D. C., September 27 to October 3, 1946.

Before either institution could begin actual operations initial par values for each member's currency had to be set in the case of the Fund, and in the case of the Bank principles had to be worked out respecting the drawing-upon of national quotas for loan purposes. In both instances internal decisions within the United States Government (the National Advisory Council) had a vital bearing on the outcome. For a table enumerating the initial par values established for the national currencies of 32 of the 39 members of the International Monetary Fund on December 18, 1946, see J. Keith Horsefield (editor), The International Monetary Fund, 1945-1965: Twenty Years of International Cooperation (3 vols.), Volume II: Analysis (International Monetary Fund, Washington, D.C., 1969), p. 84. The par values of each currency were to be expressed "in terms of gold as a common denominator or in terms of the United States dollar of the weight and fineness in effect on July 1, 1944" (i.e., $35 an ounce price of gold). The initial par value set for the United States dollar on December 18, 1946 was 100.000 United States cents per dollar.

A related concern pertained to the assent by the United States to the Bank's raising funds through the sale of its obligations on the U.S. market in the amount of 500 million dollars.

Published documentation regarding the formal meetings referred to may be found in the series of reports of meetings and annual reports initiated by the two institutions in 1946. In respect of the Savannah meetings unpublished documentation in the Department of State's unindexed files may be found in several office lot collections, chiefly Lot 54-D84. Relevant documentation (minutes, staff documents, supporting documents) of the National Advisory Council is found in the Department's unindexed files, Lot 60-D137, Boxes 1 and 8.]

¹² A list of those who formed the U.S. Delegation at Savannah is to be found in the Department of State Bulletin, March 17, 1946, p. 433. It may be noted, however, that several of the delegates were unable to attend the conference. Among those attending were Fred M. Vinson (Secretary of the Treasury) who had been named United States Governor of the International Monetary Fund, and United States Governor of the International Bank; Harry Dexter White, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, was appointed United States Executive Director of the Fund; and Emilio G. Collado, who had been Deputy on Financial Affairs to the Assistant Secretary of State, was named United States Executive Director of the Bank. These nominations had been confirmed by the Senate on February 6, 1946 (ibid., February 17, 1946, p. 262).

FORMULATION OF A FOREIGN FINANCIAL PROGRAM: POLICY TO HELP WAR-DEVASTATED AND LIBERATED
COUNTRIES MEET THEIR DOLLAR REQUIREMENTS
PENDING THE BEGINNING OF LOAN OPERATIONS BY THE INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT

811.51/6-1545 : Circular airgram

The Acting Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic and Consular Officers

SECRET

WASHINGTON, June 15, 1945—9:10 a. m.

For Chief of Mission. An integrated program of legislation and implementation to carry out the foreign financial policy of the US has been adopted in principle by the Staff Committee,¹ subject to further discussions with the Treasury, FEA, War and Navy Departments.² A memorandum is being drafted for the President reiterating our basic policies as follows: 1) the carrying out of a lend-lease policy adequate for the fullest prosecution of the war against the common enemy, 2) full participation in relief and rehabilitation measures, 3) international cooperation in monetary and exchange management through the International Monetary Fund, supplemented by bilateral arrangements with the UK and perhaps certain other nations, 4) public and private dollar investment in reconstruction and development abroad during the next decade to the extent of $25 to $30 billion.³

These policies must be accompanied by parallel programs on full employment within the US and a sensible commercial policy.

¹ This refers to the Secretary's Staff Committee, at this time the top policy-recommending body in the Department of State.

² This was done at a meeting of the Secretary's Staff Committee on June 7 (Minutes of the Secretary's Staff Committee, Lot 122, Box 13147). The Committee acted on a Staff Committee Document, SC-124, entitled "Foreign Financial Policy", dated June 5, 1945 (Secretary's Staff Committee Document, Lot 122, Box 13148).

³ Such an over-all memorandum to the President has not been found, but some of the subjects named here are discussed in annexes to SC-124. The fourth item, regarding reconstruction and development, was described in a draft memorandum to the President written about June 15 by Emilio G. Collado, Deputy for Financial Affairs for the Assistant Secretary for Economic Affairs (Clayton) (840.50 UNRRA/6-1545). An abbreviated version of this draft, unsigned and undated, is printed infra.

To carry out the basic policies (each covered in separate subject memoranda) certain legislation is required: 1) lend-lease budget, 1946, 2) doubling of UNRRA quotas, 3) expansion of ExImbank lending facilities,⁴ 4) Bretton Woods Institutions,⁵ 5) repeal of the Johnson Act,⁶ 6) settlement of World War I Debts, 7) amendment of SEC Legislation to allow this government to obtain information on private US investments in foreign countries.

GREW

800.51/4-247 Rec'd

Memorandum Prepared in the Department of State

SECRET

[WASHINGTON, undated.]

THE FINANCING OF RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT BASIC FOREIGN FINANCIAL POLICIES OF THE UNITED STATES

The basic objectives and scope of foreign financial policy, which have been adequately discussed elsewhere, contemplate:

1. The carrying out of a lend-lease policy adequate for the fullest prosecution of the war against the common enemy.

⁴Originally chartered in 1934 to expedite trade with the Soviet Union, the Export-Import Bank, after the breakdown of Soviet debt negotiations absorbed the commitments of a second Export-Import Bank, created also in 1934 to provide credit to Cuba. The original bank then devoted its energies to supplying exporter-importer credits for Latin American trade, and had played an important role in U.S. relations with the other American Republics during the years of World War II. In general the Export-Import Bank's "loans" were simply "lines of credit" established in the United States for the dollar needs only of the foreign borrower, that is exclusively for the purchase of U.S. products and services. See 83d Congress, 2d Session, Senate Document No. 85, Legislative History of the Export-Import Bank of Washington (Washington, Government Printing Office, 1954).

As part of its legislative program, the Administration had proposed to the Congress that the capitalization of the Export-Import Bank be increased from $700 million to 3.5 billion.

In a memorandum written on June 11, 1945 to the Assistant Secretary (Clayton), entitled "Legislation and Organization to Meet Foreign Dollar Requirements", Mr. Collado had stated that "It is obvious that U.S. loan activities should be concentrated in one agency and the ExImbank [Export-Import Bank] is ready-made for the purpose. . . . The present proposal to increase the Bank's funds to $3.5 billion covers only a first approval to Soviet requirements, nothing for the U.K. and little for China. It should be made clear that more will be required before the Bretton Woods Bank can possibly function." (840.50 UNRRA/5-1145)

⁵Congress enacted the Bretton Woods Act with President Truman approving on July 31, 1945, thereby establishing the basis for United States participation in the International Bank and the International Monetary Fund. For relevant citations to the Bretton Woods Agreements of 1944, the establishment of the two Bretton Woods institutions, and the genesis of U.S. relations therewith, see pp. 1384 ff.

⁶The Johnson Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 574) forbade loans by any agency of the United States to foreign governments in default on its obligations to the United States.

2. Full participation in relief and rehabilitation measures.
3. International cooperation in monetary and exchange management through the International Monetary Fund, supplemented by bilateral arrangements with the British and perhaps certain other nations.
4. Public and private dollar investment in reconstruction and development abroad during the next decade to the extent of $25 to 30 billion.

Such a program coupled with an adequate policy of full employment within the United States, and other elements of an international program of expanding world economic activity and trade can have most satisfactory and useful results. In the absence of relatively stable full employment at home and a sensible commercial policy it may well end in frustration.

The present memorandum will deal only with point 4—public and private dollar investment in reconstruction and development abroad.

RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT NEEDS ⁷

	In Millions of Dollars	Totals
Western Europe
United Kingdom	2000-3000
Belgium	200- 400
Netherlands and NEI	1000-1500
Denmark	100- 150
France	1000-2000
Italy	250- 500
Norway	400- 500
	— — —	4950 - 8050
Eastern and Southeastern Europe
U.S.S.R.	6000-6000
Greece	100- 150
Czechoslovakia	400- 500
Poland	? ?
Yugoslavia	100- 200
Albania	— — —	6600 - 6850

⁷ The table that follows was the same with minor exceptions as one prepared by D. M. Phelps of the Division of Foreign Economic Development, and which was placed in a memorandum of May 11, 1945 that went from Mr. Phelps to Mr. Collado and the Assistant Secretary (Clayton) (840.50 UNRRA/5-1145). The Phelps memorandum, entitled "Preliminary Estimates of Financial Requirements for Reconstruction and Development", surveyed in considerable detail the reconstruction requirements of war-devastated countries on a world-wide basis. It stated in part:

"For some months past available data has been assembled on the extent of destruction in countries now liberated, the estimated costs of reconstruction,

Footnote continued on following page.

RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT NEEDS—continued

	In Millions of Dollars	Totals
Europe—Economic Development (public and private financing)		2500 - 3500
Africa, Near and Middle East
Public investments	1000-1500
Private investments	300- 500
	—————	1300 - 2000
Latin America
Public investments	2000-2350
Private investments	1000-1150
	—————	3000 - 3500
Far East
China		3500 - 4500
India
Other
	Grand Total	————— 20850-28400 —————

There are attached separate memoranda^s relating to transitional financial aid to Great Britain and credits to the U.S.S.R. included in the above table.

Sources of Required Dollar Funds for Reconstruction and Development

Private Foreign Investment—At least $10 billion in 10 years—largely “direct” investment.

Export-Import Bank—$5 to 10 billion over 10 years. The $3.5 billion now being requested includes only $1 billion for U.S.S.R. and does not include any amount for U.K.

their foreign assets which may be used to meet requirements from abroad, and the probable deficits in their balances of payments in early post-war years. While these data are in some instances fragmentary and inconclusive it has, nevertheless, been thought advisable on the basis of information now available to make estimates of the possible financial requirements of these countries from the United States, other nations, or the Bretton Woods institutions, if they be established, to meet these deficits. Estimates have also been made of the probable financial needs of these countries recently liberated and of other nations likewise for economic development during the first decade after the end of the war. It should be recognized that all estimates are of necessity highly tentative, but some idea may, nevertheless, be gained as to the possible extent of financial assistance which will be needed by other nations in the early post-war period and of the possibilities for foreign investment, both for reconstruction and economic development.

[Here follows detailed country by country summary and the original table.]

“This total figure should be considered as an estimate of financial requirements for reconstruction and economic development during the initial decade after the termination of the war. Although the estimates made for Western European countries are based largely on probable deficits in balances of payments in early post-war years, that is, during the next three to five years, Europe’s estimated financial requirements for the remainder of the first decade are included in the estimate for European economic development, both public and private.

“ . . . However, the likelihood that investments in the estimated amount will be made must be predicated upon the establishment of the Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development; increased funds available to the Export-Import Bank, and the repeal of the Johnson Act and the ‘Johnson Act’ provision in the Export-Import Bank legislation.”

Not printed.

International Bank for Reconstruction and Development—Initially about $9 billion, most of which will be in dollar credits although the financial responsibility is spread over the member governments.

Only a small part of this may be expected to be forthcoming during 1946.

Legislation Required

Export-Import Bank—Bill in House and Senate to increase lending ability to $3.5 billion.

Bretton Woods Institutions—Bill in Senate Committee.

Repeal of Johnson Act—In Senate and House Committees.

811.516 Export-Import Bank/7-945

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of Financial and Development Policy (Collado) to the Under Secretary of State (Acheson)

WASHINGTON, July 9, 1945.

Subject: Proposed Use of Export-Import Bank Funds.

1. In connection with the scheduled hearings on the expansion of the Export-Import Bank, there follows a summary statement of the type of operations which may be anticipated in the next twelve months:⁹

	millions of dollars
U.S.S.R.—(1st credit)	1000
Transfer from 3-C agreement ¹⁰
France, Belgium, Netherlands	300 - 400 (or more)
Latin America	150 - 250

⁹ Regarding the histories of the individual credits proposed for the countries herein named, reference should be made as appropriate to other Foreign Relations volumes where the more strictly bilateral aspects are documented; the frame of reference here is limited to general policy.

¹⁰ The so-called 3(c) agreements (name taken from the relevant section of the Lend-Lease Act of 1941 as amended) provided for a continued flow of industrial equipment and supplies to certain European countries after the end of the war in Europe although use of such materials was no longer related to the defense of the United States. Funds were still to be provided out of monies appropriated for Lend-Lease purposes. Repayment would be over a 30-year period at an interest rate of 2½ percent per annum. As of this date 3(c) agreements had been concluded with France, Belgium, and the Netherlands.

	millions of dollars
European reconstruction	1250 - 1500
Of which: Poland urgent
Italy—100 - 150
Greece—50 - 100
Yugoslavia
Czechoslovakia
France
Belgium
Netherlands
Denmark
Norway
Other—Saudi Arabia, Turkey, China, etc.	100 - 150
Total	2800 - 3300

2. The bill would give the Bank about $3 billion of new lending authority.

3. The 10-year program contemplates:

	billions of dollars
Private Investment	10 - 11
Bretton Woods Bank	9
Export-Import Bank	6 - 10
Total	25 - 30

4. More Export-Import Bank funds will be needed to fill out 1946 and thereafter—and especially before the Bretton Woods Bank is operating. Probably a further billion or even two will be needed for U.S.S.R., and any British credits will require additional legislation. Further funds will be needed for European and Chinese reconstruction and development in Latin America and elsewhere.

5. A summary of the longer-term program is included in the tables I have given you. Messrs. Phelps and Young can furnish any further details.

811.516 Export Import Bank/7-1745

Statement of Honorable Leo T. Crowley, Chairman Board of Trustees, Export-Import Bank of Washington Before Senate Banking and Currency Committee, July 17, 1945

I appreciate this opportunity to appear before your committee to recommend an increase in the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank.

The United States is approaching an extremely critical period with respect to the financing of its foreign trade. Furthermore, the problem has the most profound implications for the reconversion of war industries at home. There has been during the war an enormous expansion in manufacturing capacities in the United States, and this expansion has been concentrated very largely in heavy industry. Unless foreign markets for the products of American heavy industry can be found during the period which lies immediately ahead, many war-expanded industries will be obliged severely to curtail their operations and, accordingly, to reduce their employment of labor.

Fortunately, potential foreign demands for our products in connection with the reconstruction of war-devastated countries and the economic development of countries whose progress has been retarded by the war will be concentrated principally on the products of heavy industry. Moreover, the United States will be practically the only immediate source of supply for many of the commodities involved.

What is required in order to join our need for foreign markets and the needs of foreign countries for our products is financing. We hope and believe that a large part of the necessary financing will be provided by private financial institutions. However, there are certain types of risks and certain large risks which private banks are not in a position to assume without government assistance and other risks which they are not prepared to assume at all. This would apply particularly to the financing over a period of years of exports of capital equipment, which must be sold on terms which take account of the time required to put it into productive use. It would apply also to long-term loans to governments whose credit is for one reason or another not established to the satisfaction of private investors.

We believe that the necessary financing of our foreign trade during the crucial period of reconversion at home and reconstruction abroad should be provided, to the extent that private credit is not available, through an expanded Export-Import Bank. In performing this role, the Export-Import Bank will be carrying on a function which it has successfully performed over a period of more than eleven years. As private banks and bankers have frequently testified, its operations have supplemented rather than replaced private capital and in this way have not only facilitated the foreign trade of the United States but have also materially assisted in the financing of foreign trade through private channels.

There should be no confusion regarding the fundamental differences between the proposed increase in the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank and other measures relating to our foreign trade which have been approved by Congress or which are under consideration by Congress. The measures which I have in mind include the appropriation for UNRRA, lend-lease, and the pending Bretton Woods legislation.

The appropriation for UNRRA is strictly for relief and has no relation to the financing on a commercial basis of our foreign trade.

With respect to lend-lease, as I and other spokesmen for the Administration have repeatedly stated, lend-lease will be provided only in connection with the defense of the United States and the effective prosecution of the war to final victory. It will not be furnished for purposes of relief, rehabilitation, or reconstruction in Europe or elsewhere. Assistance to the liberated countries of Europe, which is one of the immediate problems facing us, must be provided in some other manner.

In accordance with this recognized principle, the appropriation authorized by Congress for lend-lease for 1946 was based explicitly on the assumption that Congress would increase the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank in order that it could finance portions of the so-called 3(c) agreements for the delivery to certain European countries of industrial equipment and supplies which are not required for the prosecution of the war.

In rendering such assistance to the war-devastated countries, we would proceed on the assumption that these countries must accept the prime responsibility for their rehabilitation and must depend primarily upon their own resources in the process. Nevertheless, there is not only an inescapable obligation on the United States to help the liberated countries help themselves but also a strong element of self-interest; for, by financing their purchases of our products on a sound basis, we are greatly benefiting our own economy.

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development is intended, it is true, to be a major source of large-scale and long-term credit for the rehabilitation of the war-torn countries and the building up of economically underdeveloped countries. Our participation in the International Bank has now been approved by the House and by this Committee and will be approved shortly, I trust, by the Senate. At best, however, the International Bank cannot be in effective operation for a year or eighteen months. A strengthened Export-Import Bank is therefore urgently needed during the period just ahead to provide the necessary financing of our exports in connection with reconstruction and development projects abroad. There will be no other governmental source of dollar credits for this purpose.

In the longer run, the coordination of the operations of the Export-Import Bank with the policies of the representatives of the United States on the International Bank and Fund will be achieved through the National Advisory Council provided for in the Bretton Woods Agreements Act. The Chairman of the Board of the Export-Import Bank, as a member of the Council, will keep it fully informed of the Bank's activities and will be guided in turn by its policy decisions applicable to the Bank's operations.

[Here follows description of the provisions of the proposed legislation.¹²]

Department of State National Advisory Council Files ¹³

Minutes of the First Meeting of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems, Washington, August 21, 1945

Present

Secretary Fred M. Vinson (Chairman), Treasury Department

Secretary Henry A. Wallace, Commerce Department

Mr. Marriner S. Eccles, Chairman, Board of Governors, Federal Reserve System

Mr. Leo T. Crowley, Chairman of Export-Import Bank

Mr. Amos Taylor, Commerce Department

Mr. Frank Coe (Secretary), Treasury Department

1. Responsibility of the Council

The Chairman called attention to the language of the Act (Public 171-79th Congress, 1st Session)¹⁴ which established the Council (NAC-1).¹⁵ He spoke of the wide variety of foreign financial trans-

¹² Congress approved the Administration's legislative proposals and the new Export-Import Bank Act became law on July 31, 1945 (59 Stat. 526). Essentially this Act "made possible the extension of large-scale credits to foreign countries for the purchase of United States goods by increasing the lending authority of the Bank from $700 million to $3.5 billion and by removing the prohibition on loans by the Bank to countries in default on their obligations to the United States Government." (Export-Import Bank of Washington, Second Semiannual Report to Congress For the Period January-June 1946, p. 9).

¹³ This file comprises a substantially complete record of the minutes and documents of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems (the NAC) and its committees. This collection is located in Department of State Lot Files 60D-137.

¹⁴ That is, the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, approved July 31, 1945 (59 Stat. 512).

¹⁵ The memoranda in the NAC series was the documentation on which the Council's agenda was based, and were prepared by the Staff Committee of the Council. This series is not to be confused with a separate documentation described as "Staff Documents", nor with the minutes of meetings of the Council itself. It may be noted also that the National Advisory Council submitted regular and special reports to the Congress which are printed as Congressional documents.

Council Document NAC-1 was an historical summary of the origins of the National Advisory Council, and analyzed the statutory duties of the Council as provided for in the originating statute. Section 4 of the Act stated in pertinent part that the Council was to "coordinate, by consultation or otherwise, so far as is practicable, the policies and operations of the representatives of the United States on the [International Monetary] Fund and the [International] Bank [for Reconstruction and Development], the Export-Import Bank of Washington and all other agencies of the Government to the extent that they make or participate in the making of foreign loans or engage in foreign financial, exchange or monetary transactions."

actions in which the government is now engaged (NAC-2 and 3)¹⁶ and the need for coordination of methods and agencies. The legislative history of the Council was discussed.

2. Over-all Foreign Financial Program

The Chairman said that the government needed an over-all program, showing everything that was to be lent and spent abroad and what would be received. He thought that only thereby could the Council perform the functions which Congress expected of it. He had discussed the matter with the President, and had written him a letter in accordance with the understanding arrived at. The President wishes the Council to prepare such a program, and so indicated in a note to Secretary Vinson (NAC-4).¹⁷

The Council decided to request the heads of departments and agencies to submit programs of their expected foreign financial activities and of the present status of all loans, financial commitments, and programs of expenditure abroad. From this a general program would be prepared.

Secretary Wallace stressed the need for information on private loans abroad. It was decided that Mr. Eccles would check as to what the Federal Reserve System could provide on this subject.

3. Technical Committee on Bretton Woods

The Chairman proposed, and the Council agreed to, the appointment of a special committee to consider and report to the Council on the preliminary problems and policies of the International Fund and Bank and to conduct any necessary negotiations with foreign governments on the establishment of these institutions. The Chairman thought this committee would be practically the same as the group which had worked for several years on Bretton Woods. The Securities Exchange Commission should be included in the committee.

The names of members and alternates were to be sent to the secretary.

4. Export-Import Bank

The Council discussed the following matters concerning Export-Import Bank policy and operations:

- (1) Loans under Consideration. Mr. Crowley informed the Council

¹⁶ Documents NAC-2 and 3 not printed.

¹⁷ The text of the Vinson letter is found in Document NAC-4, not printed; the letter was dated August 9, 1945. A marginal notation indicating approval was written by the President on the same letter on August 10.

that Export-Import Bank loans to the following countries were under consideration in the approximate amounts indicated :

France—	$300 million
Belgium—	50 million
Netherlands—	50 million

(The above, related to the lend-lease 3(c) agreements, were proposed for 30 years at 2 $\frac{3}{8}$ %).¹⁸

U.S.S.R.—	$ 1 billion
Norway—	40 million
Denmark—
United Kingdom—	for food in the lend-lease pipeline.

At the request of Mr. Eccles, Mr. Crowley promised a concise report on the loans now under consideration. Mr. Crowley stated that he would continue negotiations on these loans and report back to the Council, but that, until proper lines and policies were worked out, the Export-Import Bank would make none of these loans until the Council had an opportunity to pass on them.

(2) Dollar Balances. The Council agreed with Mr. Eccles that loans should be considered in relation to the holdings by foreign countries of gold, dollars or American securities. It instructed that such information should be prepared for its use.

(3) Rate of Interest. Mr. Crowley asked the Council to consider the proper rates of interest for Export-Import loans. He suggested a 3% rate as the general rule for long and medium term loans. There was discussion as to the wisdom of a 3% rate for the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union while having a 2 $\frac{3}{8}$ % rate for the Western European countries. Although there was general agreement on the desirability of low interest rates for reconstruction purposes, a decision on interest rate policy was deferred until a full analysis could be prepared.

(4) Private Sources. The Chairman stressed the need to find out whether any of these loans could be placed privately. Mr. Crowley said that such a check would be made. He believed that many of them should be made privately, but he did not believe the banks would touch them.

¹⁸ These credits were projected originally under the 3(c) agreements, and accordingly would have been financed out of Lend-Lease funds; see footnote 10, p. 1395. With the ending of the war, however, Lend-Lease financing was terminated as of September 2, 1945. Financing of Lend-Lease materials requisitioned but not under procurement by that date was now shifted to the Export-Import Bank. It was felt that as the credits "served to carry out previous commitments of the United States Government, their terms with respect to maturities and rate of interest [should be] made the same as those of the lend-lease 3(c) agreements." (Export-Import Bank of Washington, First Semiannual Report to Congress for the Period July-December 1945, p. 17)

(5) Loans Appropriate for the Export-Import and the International Bank. It was decided that the Staff Committee should have a report for the Council prepared on this matter.

5. Other Loans

The Council agreed with a proposal of Mr. Eccles that the State and Treasury Departments should prepare concise reports on pending foreign loans and stabilization agreements and the status of any negotiations now under way.

[Here follows discussion regarding the internal organization of the National Advisory Council.]

FRANK COE

811.516 Export Import Bank/9-345

The Secretary of State to the Foreign Economic Administrator (Crowley)

WASHINGTON, [undated].¹⁹

MY DEAR MR. CROWLEY: The present great expansion in the activities of the Export-Import Bank emphasizes the importance of relating its program to the framework of the foreign policy of the United States as laid down by the President and the Department of State.

The relations between the Department and the Bank have always been close, and we have participated in every step of formulation of major loan policy and negotiation of credits with particular foreign countries. We have, of course, not wished to be too closely involved in detailed operations. The importance to foreign policy of foreign lending by this Government has been recognized in our position on the old Board of Trustees, of which for many years an official of the Department was Chairman, and recently in our inclusion on the smaller new Board.

I am sure you will agree that the Bank should continue to work out its broad arrangements with individual countries in the closest collaboration with the Department and with reference to the various foreign policy considerations present in individual cases. In view of the increasing magnitude and importance of the Bank's credit operations, I also ask that preliminary and general negotiations be undertaken, as has ordinarily been the case in the past, with full participation of representatives of the Department.

This participation is especially important now as we are embarking on negotiations with respect to commercial policy, cartels, commodity policy, and the position of American private trade and investment in all parts of the world. It is essential that financial aid for reconstruction go hand in hand with the creation of commercial conditions which will permit repayment by the stimulation of international trade so necessary to the prosperity of America's expanded industrial potential.

¹⁹ Drafted September 3, 1945.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES F. BYRNES

Department of State National Advisory Council Files

Memorandum by the Chairman of the Export-Import Bank (Crowley) to the National Advisory Council

NAC-7

[WASHINGTON,] September 12, 1945.

Re: Emergency Reconstruction Credits to Liberated and War-Devastated Countries

The Board of Trustees of the Export-Import Bank at a meeting on Tuesday, September 11, approved in principle emergency reconstruction credits to the following countries in the amounts indicated, subject to policy review by the National Advisory Council:

Belgium	$ 100,000,000
France	315,000,000
Netherlands	100,000,000
Netherlands East Indies	100,000,000
U.S.S.R.	1,000,000,000

It should be emphasized that these proposed credits are for the purpose of financing emergency purchases of materials, supplies, and equipment urgently needed by these countries to begin the restoration and rebuilding of their economies. Time is of the essence because of the vital importance of maintaining the flow of goods to these countries from the United States as their only immediate source of supply.

The credits would be extended without prejudice to the longer run and more carefully defined reconstruction programs of the countries concerned or to the amount of dollar financing which may ultimately be required to carry out these programs. The plain fact is that the recently liberated countries and Russia have not had time to determine their needs for imported goods or for external financing and cannot afford to wait until these needs are precisely defined. Nor can the United States afford to wait.

The terms and conditions of the proposed credits are to be left subject to negotiation between the Export-Import Bank and the individual governments involved. In the meantime, however, the rate of interest to be charged by the Export-Import Bank on long-term loans to foreign governments will have been considered by the National Advisory Council and a decision presumably reached.

[Here follows discussion of the individual credits proposed for the countries named above.]

With respect to all of these proposed credits, the Export-Import Bank has naturally been conscious of the fact that these countries have some dollar resources of their own. Furthermore, some of them, notably the Netherlands and the Netherlands East Indies, enjoy a potentially high credit standing in the eyes of private investors. The Bank subscribes to the view, however, that it would be unwise for these countries to draw too heavily upon their own resources until their total needs can be more definitely ascertained and has been particularly mindful of the danger involved in forcing them, because of heavy drains upon their gold and dollar resources, to adopt or maintain trade and exchange restrictions which the United States is seeking by every means to eliminate. Moreover, the Bank has satisfied itself that none of the countries in question can quickly obtain funds in substantial amounts in the private market on reasonable terms.

LEO T. CROWLEY

Department of State National Advisory Council Files

Memorandum by the Chairman of the Export-Import Bank (Crowley) to the National Advisory Council

SECRET
NAC-14

[WASHINGTON,] September 18, 1945.

1. I have circulated to the members of the National Advisory Council a memorandum dated September 17, 1945,²⁰ setting forth the present status of Lend-Lease and Export-Import Bank financing. It is urgent that action be taken by the Export-Import Bank with respect to some of the applications for credits which have been made in order that the flow of supplies and essential materials to those countries will not be interrupted.

2. I recommend that of the applications for credit set forth in my memorandum of September 17, 1945, the following be approved at this time:

(a) Belgium. $100,000,000, of which $55,000,000 should be extended on 3(c) terms and $45,000,000 on such other terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by the N.A.C. and the Export-Import Bank.

²⁰ Not printed. It was an earlier version of this document NAC-14.

(b) France. $550,000,000 on 3(c) terms.

(c) The Netherlands. $100,000,000, of which $50,000,000 should be extended on 3(c) terms and $50,000,000 on such other terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by the N.A.C. and the Export-Import Bank.

(d) Netherlands East Indies. $100,000,000 on such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by the N.A.C. and the Export-Import Bank.

(e) Russia. $1,000,000,000 on such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by the N.A.C. and the Export-Import Bank.

Department of State National Advisory Council Files

Memorandum by the President of the Export-Import Bank (Taylor) to the National Advisory Council

NAC-17

[WASHINGTON,] September 21, 1945.

Re: Objections to a General Rate of 2 $\frac{3}{8}$ % on Emergency Reconstruction Loans by Export-Import Bank

The NAC Staff Committee has proposed that the Export-Import Bank should charge a uniform rate of 2 $\frac{3}{8}$ % on emergency reconstruction loans to liberated and war-devastated countries. The Export-Import Bank strenuously objects to this proposal for the following reasons:

1. The Bank is obligated by the legislative history, if not by the letter, of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 to operate without a net loss to the United States Government. In other words, it is expected to operate on a "business" basis. To operate it on any other basis would seriously prejudice the chances of obtaining additional lending authority from the Congress.²¹

2. It has been generally agreed that an average minimum interest rate of 3% on the aggregate of its loans is probably required to enable the Bank to be self-sustaining. This rate represents the average cost to the Treasury of borrowed funds, or 2%, plus a 1% margin to cover losses and administrative expenses. The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development requires 1% to 1½% for similar purposes.

²¹ The first official intimation that the Executive Branch might request from Congress "interim" additional lending authority for the Export-Import Bank came in President Truman's special message to the Congress on September 6, 1945 in which he set forth a 21-point program for reconversion from wartime to peacetime. He said in pertinent part: "We are preparing to extend the operations of the Export-Import Bank. Our objective is to enable the peace-loving nations of the world to become self-supporting in a world of expanding freedom and rising standards of living. . . . I foresee the need for additional interim lending power [for the Export-Import Bank] to insure a rapid and successful transition to peacetime world trade. Appropriate recommendations will be made to the Congress on this matter when we have completed the exploratory conversations already begun with our associates [presumably a reference to the governments of the war-devastated countries]."

3. A 2¾% rate is considerably below the probable cost to the United States Government of making loans through the Export-Import Bank and is, therefore, a subsidy rate. It may be justified for loans to 3(c) countries to cover the cost of goods requisitioned before V-J Day under existing agreements providing for such a rate. But to apply it to all emergency reconstruction loans would surely result in eventual heavy net losses on the books of the Bank.

4. The Bank fully appreciates that loans to liberated and war-devastated countries are for emergency purchases in the United States; that great economic benefits will accrue to the United States as a result of the acceleration of the reconstruction process which loans by the Export-Import Bank will make possible; and that the terms and conditions of such loans should be as liberal as possible.

Nevertheless, the Bank cannot keep its accounts in terms of the general economic effects of its operations. It must keep its accounts in dollars and cents.

5. The Bank is required by its basic law not to compete with but to supplement and encourage private capital. But a 2¾% rate will clearly prevent either the participation of private capital at the time the loans are made or their refunding in the future. To charge such a rate would, therefore, violate the express instruction of Congress.

6. The recommendation of the Staff Committee sets no objective limit to the amount of loans which the Export-Import Bank shall make at a subsidy rate. Since it does not, the Bank and those who advise it would be forced into the impossible task of deciding once and for all what countries shall get credit at this rate and how much. By contrast, if emergency reconstruction loans are made at a normal rate (except for 3(c) commitments), credit can be extended as needed over a period of time. In this way, the resources of the Bank can be husbanded and made available according to need and capacity to repay as reconstruction proceeds. This would be an orderly process and promote the most effective use of the Bank's resources.

The Export-Import Bank strongly recommends that emergency reconstruction loans, except for 3(c) commitments, be made at the rate applying to normal loans for reconstruction and development, i.e., at not less than a 3% average rate.

WAYNE C. TAYLOR

Department of State National Advisory Council Files

*Memorandum by the Chairman of the National Advisory Council (Vinson) to President Truman*²²

NAC-16

[WASHINGTON, undated.]

The Council has carefully considered the policies involved in the following proposed loans which have been approved in principle by the Export-Import Bank and submitted to the Council by the Chairman of the Bank: Belgium, $100 million; France, $550 million;²³ Netherlands East Indies, $100 million; and U.S.S.R., $1 billion.

The loans proposed for Belgium, France and the Netherlands are closely related to the wind-up of lend-lease. Pursuant to your directive of August 17, 1945, Mr. Crowley is arranging lend-lease financing for lend-lease goods in the pipelines and in inventories abroad and on the seas on V-J Day. Export-Import Bank financing is proposed for some of the lend-lease goods which were under requisition but not in procurement on V-J Day. The amounts involved are (in millions of dollars):

	Pipelines in U.S. plus Inventories Outside U.S. (Lend-Lease Financing)	Lend-Lease Requisitions (Export-Import Bank Financing)
Belgium	45	55
France	280 (est.)	550
Netherlands	82	50

Export-Import Bank funds would be made available for requisitions on 3(c) terms, viz., 30 year at 2¾%. This would give Belgium and the Netherlands the terms which, Mr. Crowley has informed us, were approved for France, as a result of your and Secretary Byrnes' conversations with General DeGaulle.

The Congress was informed by you and by the Budget Director that a shift from lend-lease to Export-Import financing was contemplated for a portion of the lend-lease program. Through these and later statements to Congress by Mr. Crowley, the Congress was informed of this use of Export-Import Bank funds.

The proposed loans for Belgium and the Netherlands include small ²² Marginal notation: "Approved 9/21/45 Harry S. Truman". There is no record in the Council's minutes of any prior discussion of this memorandum by the Council, although it is clear from the minutes of the third meeting of the Council on September 18, 1945 that a discussion with the President on the proposed loans was in the offing.

²³ A correction sheet circulated by the Council's Secretary on October 1, 1945 directed that the words "Netherlands, $100 million" should be inserted immediately before the words "Netherlands East Indies".

amounts for urgent capital goods which were not in the lend-lease programs. This is true of the whole amount of the Netherlands-Indies loan. It should be pointed out, however, that these loans are for only a small portion of the reconstruction goods needed by these countries from the United States.

These credits will assure the maintenance, on a cash-repayment basis, of the pipelines to Western Europe for a short crucial period. The goods involved would have been transferred under lend-lease if the war had continued. Preliminary negotiations indicate that similar arrangements for the U.K., U.S.S.R. and China can be made and thereby liquidate practically all the lend-lease pipelines. Since a portion of the goods are specialized, this solution will also reduce the size of our surplus problem.

The comparatively small amount of reconstruction financing involved in certain of the above loans is for urgently needed items, is tied in with the satisfactory arrangements for settling lend-lease and is backed by good assurances of repayment. Consideration of the major reconstruction needs of these countries will, however, be postponed until the Council has obtained the over-all picture of foreign financial requirements.

The Export-Import Bank loan to the Russians has, as noted above, been approved in principle by the Bank and been considered by the Council. You will recall that the Russians were invited to enter into negotiations for the amount indicated. Those negotiations should go forward and we will so inform the Bank if you approve.

FRED M. VINSON

Department of State National Advisory Council Files

Minutes of the Fourth Meeting of the National Advisory Council, Washington, September 27, 1945

Present:

Secretary Fred M. Vinson (Chairman), Treasury Department

Mr. W. L. Clayton, State Department

Mr. E. G. Collado, State Department

Mr. Amos A. Taylor, Commerce Department

Mr. M. S. Eccles, Federal Reserve Board

Mr. Wayne Taylor, Export-Import Bank

Mr. Harry D. White, Treasury Department

Mr. Frank Coe (Secretary), Treasury Department

[Here follows statement regarding a procedural matter.]

1. Emergency Reconstruction Credits to Liberated and War Devastated Countries

Approval. The Chairman described a conference which he and Messrs. Acheson²⁴ and Crowley had with the President. After a full discussion of the points involved, the President had approved the memorandum (NAC Document No. 16) outlining the proposed loans to France, Netherlands, Netherlands East Indies, Belgium, and the U.S.S.R.

In view of this action, the Council approved the recommendations on these loans made by Mr. Crowley in his memorandum of September 18 (NAC Document No. 14), with the understanding that the negotiations with the U.S.S.R. were not to go forward until there was an opportunity to consult Secretary Byrnes.

Netherlands East Indies. Mr. Wayne Taylor said that this loan would be held up until a satisfactory report had been received from the International Tin Committee.

Exchange of Notes on Commercial Policy. Mr. Clayton said that the State Department had an understanding with the Export-Import Bank that none of these loans were to be completed until the foreign governments had agreed to an exchange of notes on commercial policy. The Council decided that the papers to which Mr. Clayton referred (NAC Document No. 22) should be made part of the record in order to show all the considerations on which the action of the Council was based.²⁵

2. Interest Rates on Long-Term Loans made by the Export-Import Bank to Foreign Governments

The Council considered the rates of interest to be charged by the Export-Import Bank on long-term loans to foreign governments for reconstruction and development purposes. It had before it the recommendations of the Staff Committee (NAC Document No. 18), a memorandum from the Export-Import Bank (NAC Document No. 17), and the analysis prepared for the Staff Committee (NAC Staff Document No. 3).²⁶ After detailed discussion, the Council decided as follows:

a. Long-Term Loans for Reconstruction and Development. The Export-Import Bank's general rate of interest on 20 to 30 year loans to foreign governments for reconstruction and development should be 3 percent during the next period. In the case of loans with serial maturities, the average rate should be 3 percent.

²⁴ Dean G. Acheson, Under Secretary of State.

²⁵ This refers to the United States proposals for the expansion of world trade on a multilateral and non-discriminatory basis. Document NAC-22, undated, not printed, described in some detail the loan discussions, actual or proposed, which were engaging the attention of the United States at this time with respect to France, Belgium, Poland, Czechoslovakia, the Netherlands (East Indies), the Soviet Union, and the United Kingdom; and stated that the United States in such discussions was "endeavoring to obtain agreements with respect to commercial policy and certain other matters of importance to this Government".

²⁶ NAC Staff Document No. 3 not printed.

This rate should be uniform for all governments.

The appropriate rate or rates should be reviewed from time to time as relevant factors change.

b. Loans for Goods Requisitioned under Lend-Lease. In financing the export of goods for which requisitions had been filed by foreign governments under Lend-Lease and accepted by this government prior to V-J Day, the Bank's interest rate should be 2 $\frac{3}{8}$ percent for 30 year loans—i.e., the same as in Lend-Lease 3(c) agreements.

Factors Considered. The Council's decision was based upon a number of factors, not all of which were covered in the documents before it. The more important of these were: the legislative background of the Export-Import Bank; the possible rates of interest to be charged by the International Bank; the present and prospective private rates for domestic and foreign securities; and the interest rate structure of the public debt. Other factors mentioned included the Export-Import Bank reserve policy and expenses; the relation of interest rates on Export-Import Bank loans to the prospect of repayment; the resale of foreign obligations to the public by the Export-Import Bank; and the benefits the United States would derive from world-wide economic reconstruction. It was noted that there are outstanding certain commitments respecting interest rates, and that interest rate discriminations as among borrowers might precipitate unfavorable political repercussions. The financial negotiations with the United Kingdom were also discussed, as were the prospects for the liberalization of commercial policies on the part of countries seeking loans here.

[Here follows discussion of other subjects.]

Editorial Note

The principal use that was made during the latter half of 1945 of the increased lending power granted by the Congress to the Export-Import Bank in the Act of July 31, 1945 was to finance the extension of credits to France, Belgium, and the Netherlands for the purchase of American products and services for which requisitions had been filed and approved before September 2, 1945 under lend-lease arrangements but which had not been contracted for by that date. These loans involved the establishment of lines of credit in the amounts of $550 million for France, $50 million for Belgium, and $55 million for the Netherlands. In its First Semiannual Report to Congress in January 1946 (page 17) the Export-Import Bank said of this situation: "Because of the sudden end of the war and the termination of lend-lease which followed shortly thereafter, the drain on the resources of the bank for this purpose was much larger than had been anticipated. The lend-lease credits extended by the bank thus necessitated the use of funds which it had been believed would be available for other purposes." (That is, general reconstruction loans.)

It has been noted that this financial stringency was anticipated in President Truman's special message to the Congress on September 6, 1945 (see footnote 21, page 1405). On October 4, 1945 the President in a letter to the Secretary of State assigned primary responsibility to the Department of State for implementing a legislative program to win Congressional approval for a further increase in the lending power of the Export-Import Bank. In a memorandum to President Truman on October 11, 1945 Secretary Byrnes informed the President that "The National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems is preparing an overall estimate of credit requirements of foreign countries and a recommendation regarding additional lending authority which the Export-Import Bank would require to handle that share which this Government should undertake to fill. When this has been completed we shall present for your consideration a specific program of additional legislation." (811.032/10-445)

The Secretary of State reported to the President in follow-up memoranda on November 2 and November 28, 1945 that this survey and study was continuing. (Relevant documentation cited here is found in the 811.032 file.)

Department of State National Advisory Council Files

Memorandum Prepared by the Staff Committee of the National Advisory Council

NAC-37

[WASHINGTON,] January 8, 1946.

PRELIMINARY DRAFT

THE FOREIGN LENDING PROGRAM OF THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

1. It is expected that the International Bank will begin lending operations in the latter half of 1946 and that the Bank will assume the primary responsibility for meeting the world's international capital requirements which cannot be derived from private sources. With its present membership, the Bank will be able to lend approximately $7.5 billion, the bulk of which probably will be raised in the private capital market of this country. It is expected that loans made during 1946 will constitute only a small proportion of the total lending power of the Bank.

The operation of the International Monetary Fund is important for assuring the conditions favorable to the servicing of international investments and to the encouragement of a free flow of private capital.

2. In July 1945, the Congress, for the purpose of making loans to war-devastated areas during the period prior to the inauguration of the International Bank and for the promotion of American exports and other special purposes, increased the lending power of the Export-Import Bank by $2.8 billion, making its total lending power $3.5 billion. Up to the end of 1945 about $1.6 billion of these funds were loaned or committed and there remained on January 1, 1946, $1.9 billion for making additional loans. [These figures should be revised as of the date this memorandum is used.]²⁷ In addition to the $1.9 billion there will be available during 1946 about $50 million from repayment of principal and an additional sum (possibly $100 million) from the cancellation of earlier commitments.

3. The policy of this Government has been to make Export-Import Bank loans to war-devastated countries only with the greatest care and after careful study of the immediate and minimum needs of the borrower. Among the factors taken into consideration by the Export-Import Bank in making loans of this character are: (1) the urgency of the need of the borrower; (2) the borrower's own resources; (3) the possibility of obtaining the loan from private sources or from the International Bank; (4) the ability of the borrower to make effective use of the funds; (5) the capacity of the borrower to repay; and (6) the impact of the loan on our domestic economy.

The use of Export-Import Bank loans for financing American exports will be coordinated with the disposal of U.S. surplus military property abroad. Complete coordination of the lending programs of this Government is secured through the National Advisory Council. The NAC will also secure coordination between the foreign lending programs of this Government and the activities of the International Bank insofar as they relate to loans made with American capital.

The Export-Import Bank had by January 1, 1946, committed to European countries only $900 million, practically all for the purpose of permitting Allied Governments to obtain from the United States essential imports which had been going to them on lend-lease. Of these funds $550 million have been committed to France and $100 million each to Belgium and Holland. [Table showing Export-Import Bank commitments.]²⁸

4. A large volume of additional requests for loans have been received ²⁷ Brackets appear in the source text.

²⁸ Table not found appended to file copy. Actually the amounts received by Belgium and the Netherlands for lend-lease credits had been $55 million and $50 million, respectively. These countries had also received $45 million and $50 million, respectively, in general reconstruction credits. In 1945 the Export-Import Bank had also authorized loans of $50 million to Norway, $20 million to Denmark, and $100 million in miscellaneous (cotton) credits to certain European countries. In addition the Bank had commitments of $105 million to various Latin American countries, and $8 million to Asian nations. These are tabulated in the Export-Import Bank's First Semiannual Report to Congress for the Period July-December 1945, p. 16.

by the Export-Import Bank particularly from the war-devastated countries. With the present resources of the Export-Import Bank it is obvious that only the most urgent of these requests can be granted. [Table showing requests for loans.]²⁹

As far as we can see ahead at the present time, the urgent requirements for immediate loan commitments to foreign countries during calendar year 1946 which cannot be met by the International Bank will probably total about $3.5 billion, exclusive of the proposed credit to Britain. To meet these needs the Export-Import Bank will have available during 1946 about $2 billion of uncommitted funds. It is, of course, possible that some of the prospective loans included in the $3.5 billion figure may not materialize in 1946. Whether a large credit to China will materialize during 1946 is not at all certain in view of current political and economic conditions in China. There is some question whether a large credit to the U.S.S.R. will materialize in 1946. Similarly, loans to other countries which now appear likely may not materialize or may be taken by private investors.

Also uncertain is the extent to which private investors in the United States (institutional and other) will be disposed to undertake foreign investments during 1946 without the guarantee of either the International Bank or the Export-Import Bank. Both of these institutions operate on the principle that private capital markets should be protected from undue incursion by Government competition and, in developing their loan projects, both will seek to encourage participation by private investors acting on their own account and risk.

On the basis of these figures the Administration feels that it may be necessary to ask the Congress for an increase of lending power of $1-1/2 billion for the Export-Import Bank during the calendar year 1946. Although it is too early to make a final decision on this question, it is clear that any increase in lending power that may be requested will not be in excess of the figure mentioned above unless a loan of more than $1 billion is made to the U.S.S.R. Whether it will be necessary to apply to the Congress for a further increase in funds for use in years after 1946 depends entirely upon developments in the world situation which cannot now be foreseen and upon the ability of private investors and the International Bank to meet the world's urgent requirements for reconstruction and development capital.

It should be pointed out that the figure of $3.5 billion in loan requirements for 1946 represent commitments and not actual amounts loaned or spent. For example, on January 1, 1946, the net outstanding loans of the Export-Import Bank amounted to only $252 million although the total amount committed and loaned was $1.6 billion. Some of the $3.5 billion in commitments contemplated for 1946 will not be made available until 1947 or thereafter. For example, China probably will not be in a position to make large expenditures for reconstruction until well into 1947 although it may be desirable to make a substantial commitment in 1946.

²⁹ Table not found appended to file copy.

5. The proposed loan to Britain requiring Congressional authorization is a special case but one which is an integral part of the foreign economic program of this Government. The realization of the objectives of the Bretton Woods program, including the early elimination of exchange restrictions and other barriers to world trade and investment,³⁰ requires an immediate solution to Britain's financial problem. It should be made clear, however, that the proposed loan to Britain in no way sets a precedent for similar loans to other countries.

6. In making foreign loans, it is the policy of this Government to give careful consideration to the effects of our lending programs on our domestic economy. Wherever possible, we discourage the employment of loan proceeds for the purchase of commodities in scarce supply and encourage the purchases of surplus commodities, such as cotton, and commodities in long supply, such as a number of capital goods. Plant capacity and trained labor are now available in many of the war-expanded machinery and equipment industries to handle large foreign orders in addition to all demands of the domestic market.

7. The continuation of our domestic economic controls and export controls during 1946 will prevent purchases financed by foreign loans from exerting undue pressures on scarce items in our economy. It is believed that a foreign lending program adequate to meet the minimum needs of foreign countries need not interfere with our reconversion program or create significant inflationary pressure. The major portion of the loans made in 1946 will be spent over a period of several years. A substantial part of the proceeds of these loans will undoubtedly be spent on capital goods including specialized machinery, the placing and execution of orders for which will consume a considerable amount of time. Actual foreign expenditures financed by loans therefore will represent only a small fraction of the value of cut-backs in government expenditures between V-J Day and the middle of 1946; and insofar as they are for surplus goods or for capital goods for which the plants are already tooled up, they will help maintain markets and employment in the United States during the reconversion period.

8. A basic question to be considered is whether foreign countries will be able to service large American loans and investments. There is little doubt regarding the ability of debtor countries to produce a sufficient export surplus to handle the service charges on American loans and investments after their economies have been fully reconstructed, providing an undue part of national income of borrowing countries is not diverted to military expenditures. Ten years from now production in the debtor countries should be 25 to 50 percent greater than before the war. This increase can be brought about through the modernization of economically backward areas, increased employment, and the utilization of new productive techniques.

³⁰ For documentation regarding United States proposals regarding the expansion of world trade and employment on a multilateral non-discriminatory basis through the establishment of an International Trade Organization under the auspices of the United Nations, see pp. 1263 herein; Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, pp. 1328 ff.; and ibid., vol. VI, pp. 1 ff.

The ability of borrowing countries to develop an export surplus sufficient to meet service charges on foreign loans will depend in large measure upon the level of world trade. A high level of world trade will in turn depend upon the maintenance of a high level of world income and a reduction of the barriers to international trade which have grown up in the past. It is expected that the proposed International Trade Organization will play an important role in securing the international economic environment necessary for the maintenance of high levels of world trade. There must also be a world system of multilateral payments if debtor countries are to be able to convert their export surplus with any country into the currency in terms of which their debt obligations must be discharged. It is the purpose of the International Monetary Fund to assure the orderly operation of a system of multilateral payments.

9. The ability of foreign countries to transfer interest and amortization on foreign loans to the United States is very largely a question of our capacity to absorb exports of goods and services from the rest of the world. The problem of meeting service requirements on American foreign loans and investments is not likely to be serious for foreign countries during the next few years while new American investment exceeds interest and amortization on outstanding investments. In the period during which our foreign loans and investments are expanding most rapidly, the additional exports resulting from our foreign investment will be an important factor in maintaining a high level of production and employment. This may well be a period during which the problem of maintaining employment will be acute. At a later stage, when the payment of interest and amortization on outstanding investments exceeds new investments, the American economy will have to adjust itself to receive larger imports of goods and services.

10. The readjustment of the United States economy to receive the service payments resulting from larger foreign investment will depend upon our ability to maintain a high and stable level of employment. On the basis of past relationships between United States national income and foreign payments, our imports of goods and services ten years from now would amount to $9 to $10 billion a year, assuming reasonably full employment and the present level of prices. Furthermore, the natural increase in our population will be an important factor in expanding imports and the depletion of certain domestic resources, if not offset by domestic synthetics, would have the effect of increasing the relation of imports to our national income. It is conceivable that after a time the income from our foreign investment may be necessary to provide us with the raw materials that have become relatively scarce in this country.

Department of State National Advisory Council Files

Memorandum Prepared by the Staff Committee of the National Advisory Council for the Council

NAC-44

[WASHINGTON,] January 17, 1946.

In connection with NAC Document No. 43,³¹ the National Advisory Council Staff Committee recommends consideration of the following as a preliminary list of the probable loan requirements for the Export-Import Bank to the end of fiscal 1946-47:

Europe
Belgium	$ 100,000,000
Czechoslovakia	65,000,000
Denmark	30,000,000
Finland	65,000,000
France	750,000,000
Greece	50,000,000
Italy	100,000,000
Netherlands	250,000,000
Norway	50,000,000
Poland	50,000,000
U.S.S.R.	1,000,000,000
Yugoslavia	25,000,000
Middle East
Turkey	50,000,000
Egypt	—
Saudi Arabia	25,000,000
Far East
China	500,000,000
Netherlands East Indies	100,000,000
Philippine Islands	50,000,000
Latin America
	200,000,000
Other	500,000,000
	<hr/>
	Total $3,960,000,000

³¹ NAC-43 not printed. It advanced the work begun in NAC-37, p. 1411, by taking the substance of the earlier draft and incorporating it into the form of a draft statement on the foreign lending policy of the United States.

Department of State National Advisory Council Files

Minutes of the Tenth Meeting of the National Advisory Council, Washington, January 29, 1946

[Here follows a discussion of a proposed loan to Poland.]

2. Foreign Lending Program. The Chairman referred to the documents before the Council (NAC Documents Nos. 43³² and 44) and invited discussion of the country's foreign lending program. It was generally agreed that a lending program such as that contemplated in the documents referred to would inevitably arouse much opposition. This, it was thought, would take the form of specific opposition to the proposed U.S.-U.K. loan and beyond that, general opposition to the over-all program.

Mr. Clayton remarked that in his opinion the most intelligent criticisms that could be made against the proposed U.K. loan were (1) that it will have inflationary effects on domestic prices and (2) that it will set a precedent for loans to other countries. As an answer to these anticipated criticisms, he suggested that the Council consider filing an immediate report with the President and the Congress on the over-all program.

At Mr. Clayton's request, a vote was taken on the question of preparing NAC Document No. 43 for presentation to the President. It was agreed that this should be done.

Mr. Eccles called attention to the fact that the proposed loan program called for a $2 billion increase in the lending power of the Export-Import Bank.³³ He thought it would be unwise to request this increase in the Bank's lending power while the loan to the United Kingdom is pending. He called attention to the legislative history of the Export-Import Bank which, in effect, earmarks a billion dollars for Russia out of present Export-Import Bank lending authority. He discussed at some length the changes in the over-all political situation during the past six or eight months and remarked that any loan to Russia would be charged with political issues and for that reason should go directly to Congress. He therefore favored using the billion intended for Russia and not asking for additional lending authority until the U.K. loan is settled. In any case, he felt that the funds now available were adequate to meet all expenditures that might be made this year against loan commitments. If by the end of the year reconversion has been completed and goods are being produced in large volume, he thought that the question of making additional loans might be reopened for those countries that could make a good case.

³² See footnote 31, p. 1416.

³³ In his State of the Union Message on January 21, 1946 President Truman had specifically noted the need for expanding the Export-Import Bank's capitalization.

Mr. Eccles was seriously disturbed over the prospects of getting the U.K. loan through Congress. If it should fail, he thought the results would be most serious not only for the United States but for the whole world. It was his view that it would not be embarrassing to handle the funds earmarked for Russia in this way since Russia had never presented a formal application.

Messrs. Clayton and Collado took exception to the assertion that no application had been filed, pointing out that early in 1945 the Russians made a general request for a loan of $6 billion and that last September they presented a formal request for $1 billion. To these requests, which have only recently come to light through State Department accession of FEA files, the Russians have had no satisfactory reply.

Mr. Martin stated that it was his impression from talking with high Russian officials that they are not interested in an Export-Import Bank loan; that they expect terms at least as favorable as those extended to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Coe recalled that Mr. Crowley had presented to the National Advisory Council an over-all loan program (NAC Document No. 14)³⁴ in which $1 billion was mentioned for Russia and that this program had received the President's approval and that Council Minutes showed that negotiations on the Russian loan were not to go forward until the Secretary of State approved (Minutes of Meeting 3, Item 2; ³⁵ Minutes of Meeting 4, Item 1). Mr. Collado remarked that while the State Department had not given the signal to move ahead on the Russian loan, he nevertheless favored holding the $1 billion in reserve.

The Chairman felt strongly that one of the principal purposes of this Government's lending program was to tide war-devastated countries over until the International Bank is established. He hoped that it might be possible, therefore, to present the loan program to Congress on a 1946 calendar year basis with all proposed loans pared down to the lowest figure possible. He went through the list of loans proposed in NAC Document No. 44 and brought out the consensus that some of them could be reduced.

Mr. Clayton, although favoring a request to Congress for an increase of $2 billion in the Export-Import Bank's lending authority, agreed to a reduction of $500 million, on the assumption that $1 billion of the Bank's present resources is earmarked for Russia. However, the trend of the Council's general point of view appeared to favor the use of existing resources, including the $1 billion that has been set aside, in such a manner that it would not be necessary to request additional funds from Congress. If this approach is followed, it was recognized that only the most urgent needs could be met in 1946.

³⁴ Dated September 18, 1945, p. 1404.

³⁵ Not printed; but see p. 1408, Minutes of the Fourth Meeting of the NAC, September 27, 1945.

Mr. Paul ³⁶ expressed the view that the lending program should not be pared to the extent that the Chairman and others had indicated. He was not disturbed by inflationary pressures since, according to studies made by his Department, a large portion of the market demands that will grow out of these loans will merely bring about fuller utilization of industrial capacity. In this connection, he mentioned railway equipment, machine tools, chemicals, synthetic fertilizers, and power equipment. It was his view that some of these industries would be forced in the near future to reduce their rate of output unless loans are consummated and foreign orders are placed. Mr. Paul added that in his opinion the loan program had already reached the point where further cutting might lead to a chaotic condition in a number of countries. The Chairman replied that he was forced to take the realistic view that there was only so much money available for foreign lending and that excessive demands upon Congress might jeopardize the entire program.

The Chairman instructed the Secretary to have the Staff Committee at its next meeting to consider a preliminary draft of a report to the President and the Congress on this Government's foreign lending program which would take account of the various alternative proposals without attempting to resolve the questions of whether a loan is to be made to Russia or additional funds are to be requested.

[Here follows discussion of other matters.]

Department of State National Advisory Council Files

Memorandum Prepared by the Staff Committee of the National Advisory Council for the Council

NAC-59

[WASHINGTON,] February 5, 1946.

In connection with NAC Document No. 58,³⁷ the Staff Committee recommends consideration of the following alternative lists of probable loan requirements for the Export-Import Bank during calendar 1946. Alternative "A" is presented on the assumption that the Council may consider it inadvisable to recommend any increase of the Export-Import Bank's lending power.

Alternative "B", incorporating recommendations of the State Department, is presented on the assumption that the Council may find it advisable to recommend a $1.5 billion increase in the Export-Import ³⁶ Mr. Arthur Paul, Commerce Department representative.

³⁷ NAC Document 58 is an early draft of the loan statement and is not printed.

Bank's lending power, which would include provision for a $1 billion loan to the U.S.S.R.

	Alternative "A"	Alternative "B"
	(in millions of dollars)
Europe
Belgium	50	50
Czechoslovakia	75	100
Denmark	30	30
Finland	65	65
France	500	500
Greece	50	75
Italy	100	100
Netherlands	100	100
Norway	50	50
Poland	50	100
U.S.S.R.	—	1, 000
Yugoslavia	50	75
Middle East
Turkey	25	25
Egypt	—	—
Saudi Arabia	25	25
Far East and India
China	300	500
Netherlands East Indies	100	100
Philippine Islands	—	50
India	50	50
Latin America	150	200
Other Countries and Other Programs	300	400
Total	2, 070	3, 595

Department of State National Advisory Council Files

Minutes of the Eleventh Meeting of the National Advisory Council, Washington, February 7, 1946

Present:

Secretary Fred M. Vinson (Chairman), Treasury Department
 Mr. W. L. Clayton, State Department
 Mr. E. G. Collado, State Department
 Mr. Thomas B. McCabe, Foreign Liquidation Commissioner
 Col. D. H. Morris, Office of Foreign Liquidation Commissioner
 Mr. Henry A. Wallace, Commerce Department
 Mr. A. Paul, Commerce Department
 Mr. M. S. Eccles, Federal Reserve Board
 Mr. Burke Knapp, Federal Reserve Board
 Mr. William McC. Martin, Jr., Export-Import Bank
 Mr. A. Maffry, Export-Import Bank

Mr. Harry D. White, Treasury Department
Mr. Harold Glasser, Treasury Department
Mr. Frank Coe (Secretary), Treasury Department
Mr. I. S. Friedman (Assistant Secretary), Treasury Department

1. *Foreign Loan Program:*³⁸

New Funds and the Russian Loan. Mr. White suggested that the discussions of the foreign loan program begin with the major issue of how much Congress be asked to make available. Mr. Clayton then raised the question of the loan to the U.S.S.R. saying that State considered that $1 billion must be considered as set aside for the U.S.S.R. and therefore the real difference between Alternative "A" and Alternative "B" in NAC Document No. 59 was $500 million. He emphasized that a written application for a $1 billion loan had been received on August 28, 1945, from the Soviet Union and that recently the State Department had received inquiries from the Russians as to the status of this request. It was fortunate that this application was for a $1 billion Export-Import Bank loan because it meant that the application for $6 billion loan was not being pressed.

Mr. Clayton and Mr. Collado indicated that the State Department was contemplating telling the Russians within a few days that this Government was prepared to consider the Russian application and other matters affecting the economic relations between the two countries, including commercial policy, Russian bilateral trade agreements with Eastern European countries, lend-lease settlements, adherence to Bretton Woods, and other matters. These discussions might well take six months, but it was desirable to start negotiations quickly. The Chairman expressed agreement with the State Department's position.

Mr. Eccles urged the desirability of being able to tell Congress that we could get through 1946 without additional funds and this could be done if the $1 billion set aside for Russia was used for other purposes. Mr. Eccles maintained that any loan to Russia should have special approval by Congress. The other members emphasized that this approach might constitute an invitation to the Russians to ask for a larger amount and that Congressional authorization had already been obtained.

The question of terms of the Russian loan was discussed and it was pointed out that the Russian application spoke of 2 $\frac{3}{8}$ percent interest. It was agreed that any statement on Russia would be given orally to Congress and would not be included in the proposed document.

China. In connection with discussions of the amount to be requested, ³⁸ The draft under consideration at the time is found in NAC-58, February 5, not printed.

Mr. Clayton said that $500 million would probably have to be lent to China. It was expected that General Marshall would take this position.

Philippines. The question of including the Philippines in the list of possible loan recipients was discussed and it was agreed that it was not desirable to eliminate the Philippines from any such listing.

Latin America. The Chairman suggested the desirability of further discussions with regard to figures for Latin America and other countries. During these discussions, the Chairman, Mr. Eccles, and Mr. White emphasized the strong gold and dollar position of most of the Latin American countries. Mr. Clayton indicated that he was prepared to reduce the Latin American figure to $150 million, while Mr. Martin and Mr. Collado stressed the desirability of making provision for continued lending to Latin America.

Other Countries Figure. With regard to figure for other countries, Mr. Clayton indicated that he was prepared to see the figure pared down to $150 million. In this connection the Chairman again emphasized his eagerness to pare down the final dollar figure as much as possible and expressed agreement with Mr. Eccles who stated that the loans during the coming period should be made essentially on the basis of lack of dollar and gold exchange. The Chairman said that he felt that the more conservative the figure, the better the Congressional response would be.

Eastern European Countries. Some discussion was also held with regard to the reasons for the changes in the suggested figures listed for the Eastern European countries. Mr. Collado pointed out that further study had been given to these countries and he felt that the new set of figures in Alternative "A" were better than those which had been originally proposed.

Netherlands. The Chairman informed the Council that the possibility of a $200 million loan to the Netherlands had been explored with him, $100 million to be taken by the private capital markets. The Chairman indicated that he felt it desirable to encourage such loans as a means of encouraging private capital participation in lending to foreign governments. He said that he felt that such loans would strengthen the administration's position with regard to the British loan particularly with respect to the ability of the British to repay the loan.

UNRRA. Mr. Eccles raised the question of whether UNRRA could not carry some of the burden of the lending program. Mr. Clayton replied that he had assured Congress that UNRRA would be finished by the end of 1946, except in the Far Eastern area where it would continue into 1947 [1947], and after that UNRRA was finished and it had been so written into the legislation.

Surplus Property. Mr. McCabe raised the possibility of making more use of surplus property materials. The Chairman asked Mr. McCabe for the information he had requested on railroad equipment and was given the material by Mr. McCabe.

Repayment of Loans. The problem of repayment of foreign loans was discussed. Mr. Eccles stressed the need for looking forward to the time when we would have to accept repayment. Secretary Wallace said that he felt that if maximum employment was maintained plus the stimulation to trade given by the British loan, there would be no problem of accepting goods in repayment. Mr. Clayton emphasized that we would have to import much more than before because we had to, stressing the depletion of U.S. natural resources during the war, and gave imports of copper as an example.

Decision To Ask for $1.5 Billion for Fiscal 1947. Discussion throughout tended to center around the question whether the amount of increased lending power for the Export-Import Bank to be requested from Congress was to be $1¼ billion or $1½ billion. The Chairman favored a tentative proposal of $1¼ billion for 1946, suggesting that it might be discussed with the President. Mr. Eccles expressed agreement with this approach, while Secretary Wallace, Mr. Martin, and Mr. Clayton favored $1½ billion. It was finally agreed that the figure should be $1½ billion, but for fiscal 1947, instead of for calendar 1946.

The Commodity Approach. Secretary Wallace suggested desirability of bringing to the forefront in the proposed statement on the foreign loan program the commodity approach instead of the country approach. This approach would give greater emphasis to the time factor and thus quiet the fears of Congress on the inflationary impact of pushing an export program at this time. Mr. Paul pointed out that they had estimated that two-thirds of the exports under the contemplated lending program were in easy supply while the items in short supply could be taken care of by allocation and export licenses. Mr. Paul indicated that they had done some spot checking on their estimates and had found them to be conservative. It was decided that this approach should be more emphasized in the next revision of the document. The Chairman called attention to the omission of agricultural commodities from the document and Mr. Coe said that the Staff Committee was not looking into the possibility of Commodity Credit Corporation being able to finance agricultural exports.

Funds Not Lent in Fiscal 1947. The Chairman suggested that Congress should be assured that the funds of the Export-Import Bank not used for the contemplated loans would not be used to make new loans or increase other loans. The remaining funds should not be used after June 1947 without Congressional re-authorization or re-appropriation.

Others considered that it would be sufficient to inform Congress and let Congress initiate a reduction of lending authority if it wished. Mr. Coe suggested as a compromise that funds remaining might be ineligible for reconstruction loans but usable for other export loans. Mr. Clayton suggested, and it was agreed, that the Staff Committee should draft various alternatives on this matter for submission to the Council at the next meeting.

International Bank. There was discussion of the time required for the International Bank to come into operation and of the difficulties of its making loans before the end of the year. The Chairman thought that the necessary changes in state legislation described by Mr. White could and would be made early.⁴⁰

Other Comments. At one point in the discussions Mr. White pointed out that Congress should be told that all of the money being requested would not have to be raised during 1946 because of the lag between commitments and actual loans. Secretary Wallace said he felt that this point should be emphasized and driven home to Congress.

[Here follows discussion of other matters.]

Department of State National Advisory Council Files

Minutes of the Thirteenth Meeting of the National Advisory Council, Washington, February 21, 1946

Present:

Secretary Fred M. Vinson (Chairman), Treasury Department

Mr. W. L. Clayton, State Department

Mr. Arthur Paul, Commerce Department

Mr. Marriner S. Eeles, Board of Governors, Federal Reserve Board

Mr. William McC. Martin, Jr., Export-Import Bank

Mr. Frank Coe (Secretary), Treasury Department

1. Statement of Foreign Loan Policy of the United States Government

There was further consideration of the proposed Statement (NAC Document No. 70).⁴¹ After discussion it was unanimously agreed to recommend that the capital and lending power of the Export-Import Bank should be increased by $1¼ billion. It was agreed that the document, as revised on this matter, should be submitted to the President for his consideration and approval.

⁴⁰ This has reference to the problem of the sale of securities of the International Bank in certain states.

⁴¹ Not printed.

Action. The following action was taken :

The National Advisory Council approves the submission to the President, for his consideration and approval, of the Council's "Statement of the Foreign Loan Policy of the United States Government" (NAC Document No. 70-A).⁴²

Department of State National Advisory Council Files

*The Chairman of the National Advisory Council (Vinson) to President Truman*⁴³

WASHINGTON, [February 21, 1946].

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems herewith submits a "Statement of the Foreign Loan Policy of the United States Government" together with an appended table showing loan authorizations by the Export-Import Bank.⁴⁴ This statement is submitted for your consideration and approval.

Since the organization of the Council in August 1945 it has been coordinating, as directed by law, the policies and operations of all governmental agencies which deal with foreign financial transactions.

At an early date the Council undertook to consider proposals and applications for foreign loans, and to study the problems and broad implications of foreign lending. The Statement which is now submitted to you is an outgrowth of these activities of the Council and represents our present views. The Council will continue to study these matters and will report further to you as the rapidly changing conditions at home and abroad may require.

Faithfully yours,

FRED M. VINSON

Department of State National Advisory Council Files

Minutes of the Fifteenth Meeting of the National Advisory Council, Washington, March 4, 1946

[Here follow list of participants (19) and discussion of certain topics. The Council then commenced discussion of an Italian request for a loan of $940 million from the Export-Import Bank to purchase reconstruction materials, presented to this Government on February ⁴² Infra.

⁴³ This letter and an attached draft policy statement and draft presidential message to Congress constitute document 70-A in the NAC files; attachments are not printed here; see footnote 44.

⁴⁴ The minutes of the 14th meeting of the Council, February 27, 1946, record: "The chairman announced that the President had approved the 'Statement of the Foreign Loan Policy of the United States Government.'" For text of the policy statement and President Truman's message to the Congress on March 1 transmitting the statement, see Department of State Bulletin, March 10, 1946, pp. 380 ff., or 79th Congress, 2nd Session, House Document No. 489.

14. The Chairman of the Export-Import Bank (Martin) stated that the Bank objected to the proposal that the loan would be on a 30-year term basis, saying that the Bank preferred 20 years. Mr. Harry D. White of the Treasury Department "said he would regret any tendency toward a shorter term for such loans. . . . (He) pointed out that in countries which are badly off, a short-term loan diminishes credit for other loans. . . ."]

Political Loans. Mr. Martin said he would like to discuss the proposed loan on the basis of consistency in Export-Import Bank operations. He realized loans are not being made strictly on a business basis, although in the discussions with the Dutch securities were required to be put up as a guarantee and similar terms will probably be demanded of the Belgians. Mr. White answered that in this case our foreign policy requires assistance to a country, even though it is a bad risk. Mr. Eccles agreed with Mr. White that in the world as it is today the question of foreign credits is largely one of foreign policy.

Mr. Collado stated that the political officers in the State Department feel that Italy of all places in Europe is the country where a certain amount of aid will make for the kind of a government we want. Mr. Clayton observed that a loan to Italy will be a political loan and he wondered whether the Export-Import Bank should make a political loan which none of the Council's members believe will be repaid.

The Chairman said that if the money provided by the Export-Import Bank is to fill in for the International Bank and the International Bank can make loans which have a high degree of risk of [if] a loan of this kind could be defended, particularly since this Government is interested in strengthening and stabilizing conditions. However, he did think a loan should not be made if we do not think it will be repaid. Mr. White pointed out that the Export-Import Bank has already made loans where there are such risks that the loans are only justified because of political considerations.

Mr. Clayton suggested that, when Mr. Martin or the Chairman go to Congress to testify on the increased lending authority of the Export-Import Bank, the statement should be made that some loans will be made concerning which there is not a reasonable expectation that they will be repaid with interest. Mr. White believed that this in essence had already been said in conjunction with the establishment of the World Bank, but he agreed that it should be repeated. Mr. Gaston did not think anything in the record permits the Export-Import Bank to make loans for political purposes only.

[After further brief discussion, the Council decided to approve postponement of consideration by the Export-Import Bank of the proposed loan to Italy pending further study of the questions involved.]

Department of State National Advisory Council Files

*Minutes of the Twenty-first Meeting of the National Advisory Council,
Washington, April 19, 1946*

[Here follow a list of participants (15) and a discussion of other subjects.]

Postponement of Italian Loan Negotiations.—Mr. Coe said that as he understood the figures presented earlier by Mr. Martin, the Bank considered that it had approximately $1500 million of uncommitted funds. Of this sum, $1 billion was being reserved for negotiations with the Soviet Union and the State Department was exchanging notes concerning these negotiations. The remaining $500 million had been authorized for China and might be called for whenever General Marshall⁴⁵ and the State Department considered the time propitious. Although the Bank might expect to receive approximately $250 million in the next 14 months, a sum large enough to cover other loans which had been authorized by the Council, it did not as of the moment have sufficient funds to meet all loans which had been authorized plus the reserve of $1 billion. Furthermore, under these arrangements, there were no Bank funds available for a loan to France.

Mr. Martin emphasized that the repayments of principal and interest and the sum which the Bank hoped to realize by the sale of the short-term obligations of the Netherlands were funds which would be available during fiscal 1947 but which he, as a banker, could not definitely count upon. There was discussion of other loan authorizations of the Export-Import Bank which might not represent firm commitments.

Mr. Clayton said that the outline of the situation indicated clearly that as of this moment the Government could not conclude negotiations for any foreign loan from the Export-Import Bank. Therefore, he thought that the Council should ask the Bank to reexamine its position to see if there were any immediate possibilities for making the loan to Italy and that pending such a report from the Bank the only way in which we could help Italy was through the transfer of the account in the Treasury.

Mr. Collado suggested that since the Bank's position was fluid and since the Italian situation was serious, the Council might authorize the loan to Italy and thereby the Bank, when it had the necessary funds, could extend the credit without further Council consideration. However, Mr. Clayton stated, and it was agreed, that it would be inadvisable for the Council to follow a procedure of authorizing loans for which funds were not presently available.

⁴⁵ General of the Army George C. Marshall, Special Representative of the President to China.

Mr. Coe pointed out that other loans were being considered, discussed and perhaps even negotiated, and queried whether the Council's action should not be broader. Mr. Clayton agreed and said that pending the appropriation of more funds by Congress or a change in the Bank's position as reported to the Council, no additional foreign loan negotiations involving Export-Import Bank funds should be concluded. There was no dissent.

Action.—The following action was taken:

The National Advisory Council agrees that consideration of a long-term loan of $100 million to Italy be deferred pending receipt of a report from the Export-Import Bank on its available funds.

Action.—The following action was taken:

The National Advisory Council agrees that for a short time, pending receipt of a report from the Export-Import Bank on its available funds, negotiations shall not be carried on concerning any new foreign loans.

[Here follows discussion of the proposed loan to the Netherlands East Indies.]

Department of State National Advisory Council Files

*Memorandum by the Chairman of the Export-Import Bank
(Martin) to the National Advisory Council*⁴⁶

NAC-119

[WASHINGTON,] April 25, 1946.

STATUS OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK FUNDS AS OF APRIL 24, 1946

(In millions of dollars)

1. Outstanding loans as of 4/24/46		459.0
2. Undisbursed commitments as of 4/24/46			1, 536. 4
3. Total loans and commitments as of 4/24/46			1, 995. 4
4. Loans authorized by Board of Directors not yet entered on books of Bank as of 4/22/46
a. Republic of China (4/9/46)	500.0
b. Ferrocarril de Antioquia (4/17/46)		: 3
c. Provisional Government of Poland (4/23/46)	40.0		540. 3
5. Total loans, commitments, and new authorizations			2, 535. 7

⁴⁶ Circulated to the Council by its Secretary (Coe) for discussion at the meeting scheduled for April 25.

FOREIGN FINANCIAL PROGRAM

1429

6. Uncommitted lending authority as of 4/24/46 (3,500 less 2,535.7)		964.3
7. Potential additions to Export-Import Bank funds through 6/30/46
a. Private participation in Netherlands credit (estimated)	100.0
b. Anticipated repayments and cancellations (estimated)	100.0	200.0
	<hr/>	<hr/>
8. Uncommitted lending authority adjusted to 6/30/46		1,164.3
9. Prospective demands on Export-Import Bank
a. Approved by NAC for consideration of Bank
Czechoslovakia	50.0
Netherlands	50.0
	<hr/>
Total		100.0
b. Under consideration by NAC or Special Committee
France	500.0
Italy	100.0
Turkey	25.0
	<hr/>
Total		625.0
c. Included in illustrative allocation of Export-Import Bank funds in connection with NAC statement on foreign loan policy but not under active consideration
Belgium	50.0
Denmark	50.0
Finland	30.0
Greece	50.0
Norway	50.0
U.S.S.R.	1,000.0
Yugoslavia	50.0
Philippines	50.0
India	50.0
Latin America	200.0
Other countries and other programs	400.0
	<hr/>
Total		1,985.0 [sic]
Grand total		2,710.0
10. Calculated deficiency in Export-Import Bank funds (2,710.0 less 1164.3)		1,546.0

Department of State National Advisory Council Files

Minutes of the Twenty-second Meeting of the National Advisory Council, Washington, April 25, 1946

[Here follow a list of participants and a discussion of proposed credits to France, printed in volume V, pp. 431-434.]

2. Billion Reserve for U.S.S.R. Negotiations

Mr. Clayton said that the State Department has reconsidered the earmarking of $1 billion for the Russian loan negotiations and now feels that the billion should be available for other loans. There are no other funds available. There has been nothing in the conversations with the Russians to indicate that the funds will be held for them. Discussions have gone on with the Soviet Union for a year, the negotiations will apparently be long and the outcome is doubtful. The French need prompt action, and therefore it has been decided not to continue earmarking the billion dollars. Mr. Collado added that he was doubtful about the outcome of the Russian negotiations as the note requests an impressive list of concessions from the Russians on commercial policy, Manchuria, Eastern Europe, etc. Under the circumstances, with no other funds immediately available and with an immediate French need, the billion held for the Russians should be used for the other countries.

Mr. Martin asked whether the State Department would issue a press release embodying this decision. Mr. Clayton replied in the negative. Mr. Martin then stated that there was wide public interest in the Russian loan negotiations, that the press had given the note wide publicity, and telephone calls to the Bank were coming in constantly. The public knew how much the Bank had available for lending and know about the billion held for the Russians. If loans are made out of this billion, the NAC should make this fact public.

Secretary Vinson pointed out that when the Export-Import Bank went to Congress before, while the war with Japan was still going on, it was with the full knowledge that a billion of the increased funds was to go to Russia. Congress appropriated the funds with this understanding. If now, $1.25 billion is requested, of which a billion is to go to Russia, what will be the reaction? Mr. Collado said that Congress would have the same reaction whether the billion was held out or was to come from the new funds. Secretary Vinson disagreed, as with the new proposal Congress would in effect be asked to appropriate $1 billion for Russia, and this may affect what Congress will do. Mr. Eccles agreed with Secretary Vinson that if the Russian billion is used, the request for an additional $1.25 billion may have difficulties.

Secretary Vinson asked whether the State proposal meant that the Council would have to revoke its action. Mr. Clayton thought not. Mr. Eccles said that this matter had been discussed repeatedly and each time the State Department had been strong that there was a commitment to hold this money for Russia and that it was not available for loans to other countries.

Secretary Vinson concluded that the course of the discussion made it clear that a very careful examination of all statements and actions on the billion would be necessary before action. Mr. Coe asked and it was agreed that the State Department prepare the material requested, giving a complete documentation of the statements made by the various members of the Administration to Congress, to the public, and to the Russians on this subject.

3. Revised Allocation of Funds

Mr. Martin said that the bank now has $964 million (see NAC Doc. 119). After taking into account private participation in the Netherlands credit and anticipated repayments and cancellations, as of June 30, 1946, the bank might have $1,164 million. The Bank has never engaged in negotiations without funds to lend, but the time is fast being approached where the integrity of negotiations will be jeopardized.

Mr. Clayton said that all members knew we were not negotiating with the French about $300 million but about $500 million or more and the Bank knew of the funds problem.⁴⁷

Mr. Martin replied he had thought that $500 million had been the top limit. Mr. Martin added that when the funds in the Bank are as low as at present the views of the Bank as to the speed of commitments must be seriously considered. Sufficient advance information must be given to the Bank if any deadlines have to be met.

Secretary Vinson pointed out that the Export-Import Bank table of illustrative allocations (see NAC Doc. 119) had been based on the assumption that $1.5 billion would be requested from Congress. Mr. Martin said that was the only table on allocations which had been prepared by the Staff. Mr. Eccles suggested that the Staff Committee should re-do these tentative allocations on the basis of $1.25 billion. Mr. Eccles and Mr. Collado agreed that the preparation of the new table should be based on the assumption that the $1 billion would still be needed for the Soviet Union. Mr. Collado added that the new information on loan requests since the last table was prepared would need to be taken into account. The representatives of Czechoslovakia are now back and say they are empowered to talk nationalization and will be expecting funds.

⁴⁷ This has reference to the full-dress financial negotiation with the French Government that had just been launched in Washington; for documentation on this matter, see vol. v, pp 399 ff. It may be noted that the National Advisory Council was functioning in these discussions as the United States Top Committee just as it had for the loan negotiation with the British Government in the autumn of 1945.

Secretary Vinson concluded that based on the discussion it was clear that the Staff Committee should make a new study of allocations based on the $1.25 billion request and taking into account all new information since the last study.

Department of State National Advisory Council Files

Minutes of the Twenty-fourth Meeting of the National Advisory Council, Washington, May 6, 1946

[Here follows a list of participants (25) at the meeting.]

The Chairman asked that the action on the Russian loan be reviewed. Mr. Coe read the draft action from the minutes of the preceding meeting.⁴⁸ It was agreed to substitute the words "adequate additional" lending authority in the last paragraph for the expression "further" lending authority. The action as amended was approved unanimously.

Action.

The following action was taken:

Action No. 16 of Meeting No. 4, September 27, 1945 which reads:

"The Council approves the recommendation of the Chairman of the Export-Import Bank that a credit of up to $1 billion shall be extended by the Bank to the U.S.S.R. for the purchase of reconstruction goods, on such terms and conditions as may be decided by the Council and the Bank.

"Negotiations on this credit shall not go forward until the Secretary of State has been consulted. The credit shall not be concluded until the U.S.S.R. has agreed to an exchange of notes on commercial policy which is satisfactory to this government."

is amended by the following language at the end of the second paragraph:

"The approval of the above-mentioned loan is conditioned upon negotiations not being completed by the Export-Import Bank until adequate additional lending authority is conferred upon the Bank by Congress."

[Discussion of the French loan request then began. The Council noted the results of a constituent election which had just been held ⁴⁸ Reference is to the meeting of the Council on May 22 (23rd meeting). Inter alia, the Council reviewed the history of the Russian loan request from August 1945 to date. There was discussion of priorities as between the Russian and French loan requests, and after extensive review of the French loan situation the Council unanimously agreed that approval of the Russian loan "is conditioned upon negotiations not being completed by the Export-Import Bank until further lending authority is conferred upon the Bank by Congress."

in France in which a proposed constitution had been rejected by the French electorate.]

Political Considerations.—Mr. Eccles said he believed that this loan should be considered on economic grounds. This Government is interested in political outcomes in other countries but he would dislike to have the Government accused of undertaking to buy a foreign election. He did not want a record which was susceptible of this interpretation. He pointed out that we are very critical of the Russians for influencing elections.

The Chairman emphasized that there are political considerations in every loan and referred to the Russian loan. Mr. Eccles thought that in making loans we are concerned with getting the countries back on their feet rather than as to whether the government is socialist, communistic or a capitalistic democracy. We made a loan to Poland because we wanted to help Poland distribute coal.⁴⁹ The Chairman referred to the condition attached to the latter loan that Poland have an election and pointed out that it is not a question of exerting pressure to change ideologies.

Secretary Wallace said it would be unfortunate if word got out that we had in mind major political considerations in making loans.

The Chairman said the political question came up in connection with the time we would conclude the loan in relation to the June 2 elections. If the loan is negotiated in the very near future there is no doubt the conclusion will be drawn that it was made for that purpose. Secretary Wallace said we had sufficient economic reasons for concluding this loan. If the Export-Import Bank does not think so we should go slowly.

The Chairman pointed out that the Chinese loan of $500 million was a political loan and had been made on the basis of General Marshall's plea. Secretary Wallace said that if he had been present he would have voted against the loan.

Mr. Eccles added that there were many strings attached to the Chinese loan. In France conditions are orderly but the question is whether the Constitution and Assembly to be chosen would be right, left or middle. It would be unfortunate to make a loan to influence an election in a particular direction. Also we can have no assurance that a loan made before an election will have the effect we want. The French people might resent the fact that we were trying to influence the election. We have found that to be true in Latin America.

The Chairman pointed out that the State Department had raised the political matter the previous week. Mr. Clayton agreed but said there was sufficient basis for acting without it.⁵⁰ The Chairman inquired whether there was any difference in the position of the State Department today as compared with the previous Thursday. Mr. Clayton replied that there was none whatever. The Chairman stated that he felt he must depend on the State Department for political guidance and advice.

⁴⁹ This refers to a $40 million credit to Poland which the National Advisory Council approved for consideration by the Export-Import Bank in a meeting on January 29, 1946, diplomatic consummation of which was still pending.

Mr. Eccles asked whether, assuming the constitution had been adopted and the loan had not been completed before June 2nd elections and at the elections the Socialists and Communists had a majority, we would refuse to give financial aid to the French Government if that government were willing to carry through the same kind of a program as here presented.

Mr. Clayton said that the answer to Mr. Eccles' question is that we did make the Polish loan and it is hardly conceivable that France would go further to the left than Poland. He had great difficulty in separating political from economic considerations in thinking about Europe. If he thought that country X was in danger of economic and social chaos he would favor a loan if it were reasonable in amount and there were a reasonable chance of repayment. Assuming that we had not made the loan before the election, Mr. Clayton thought that he would favor going through with it, no matter how the election turned out, so long as the elected French government would respect its obligations.

Secretary Wallace inquired whether Mr. Clayton would favor an economically "bad" loan for the purpose of "stabilizing" conditions. Mr. Clayton said no emphatically. Secretary Wallace concluded that there was no fundamental disagreement between them. He proposed that political references be deleted from the Council's record of these discussions. Mr. Clayton said that was agreeable.

Mr. Martin said he was agreeable but noted that his position had concerned the short time being allowed the Bank for consideration rather than the political aspects.

Mr. Eccles observed that, aside from the questions of the election, immediate action was not required. Mr. Clayton argued that prompt ⁵⁰ In the Council's meeting on May 2, Secretary Wallace had raised the question ". . . whether there was a general policy in this Government of making loans to influence foreign elections". The Chairman (Vinson) had replied "that there was not, but there were political aspects to almost all the foreign loans this Government was making. There was no question but that the Polish loan approved recently by the Council had had a political aspect. Further, we had said repeatedly that one of the purposes of our reconstruction loans was to stabilize conditions abroad." Subsequently Mr. Clayton indicated that "the State Department considered the economic situation in France was serious and that we should extend substantial financial aid to France as quickly as possible. . . . The political situation of any country had many aspects and he certainly believed that in the consideration of foreign loans attention should be given to economic stagnation and disruption abroad which, if allowed to continue, might well result in serious political and social disturbances in a foreign country."

action was necessary. We had been talking about this problem for six weeks. In the final analysis decision would be made on the basis of the overall picture and not on this detail or that. He admitted that the fiscal situation bothered him but he had decided it will get worse if we do not help. If we do help them we can hope they will be able to build up their economy and balance the budget.

[Lengthy discussion of the French loan question followed, at the end of which the Council entertained action favorable to the French request.]

Editorial Note

On June 4 the National Advisory Council decided that the Export-Import Bank should proceed to the drafting of a legislative program requesting Congress to increase the Bank's lending authority by $1¼ billion (Meeting No. 31, June 4, 1946). During June this matter was discussed with the Executive Office of the President and cleared with the Bureau of the Budget. At a meeting of the Council on July 2, however, the question arose as to the wisdom of asking Congress for an additional $1¼ billion, one billion of which would be tentatively earmarked for Russia at a time of deteriorating relations with the Soviet Union. (Regarding the growing acerbity in United States-Soviet relations, see documentation concerning the meetings of the Council of Foreign Ministers and the Paris Peace Conference, volumes II, III, and IV.) The Council decided to consult Congressional leaders informally on the matter (Meeting No. 32, July 2, 1946). The Chairman of the National Advisory Council subsequently consulted with Speaker of the House Rayburn and Senate Majority Leader Barkley, and was informed that it would not be possible to get such legislation through that session of Congress. President Truman accordingly decided that it was inadvisable "to take action at that time since nothing would be gained by asking for an appropriation which it was felt could not be obtained." (Minutes of Meeting No. 35, July 23, 1946, and letter by the Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs (Clayton) to Richmond B. Keech, Administrative Assistant to the President, September 23, 1946, (811.032/8-1246).)

The $650 million loan to France, then, marked the end with one exception (a $3 million credit to Ethiopia) of the United States Government's policy to assist war-devastated countries directly in acquiring dollar exchange for the purchase of American capital equipment and services, by setting up lines of credit in the United States under the authorization of the Export-Import Bank. During the period July 1, 1945 through June 30, 1946 the Export-Import Bank authorized commitments for roughly $2 billion in credits for the purchase of American goods and services, as follows: Belgium, $100 million;

China, $67 million; Denmark, $20 million; Finland, $35 million; France, $1200 million; Greece, $25 million; the Netherlands (including the Netherlands East Indies), $400 million; Norway, $50 million; and Poland, $40 million. In addition, the Export-Import Bank in April 1946 earmarked $500 million for possible credits to China beyond the $67 million already committed. The books no longer showed a $1 billion reserve for the Soviet Union.

In the latter half of 1946 deliberations in the National Advisory Council regarding the reconstruction needs of war-devastated countries shifted from discussion of Export-Import Bank credits to loans by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development which had opened its doors on June 25, 1946. Through the United States Executive Director of the International Bank, Emilio G. Collado, the Council kept in close touch with the International Bank's early efforts to formulate a loan policy and set up a loan program. By September 1946 the Chairman of the Export-Import Bank (Martin) was informally referring prospective borrowers to the International Bank for loans, and at its meeting on September 26 the National Advisory Council in effect ratified this policy by formally recommending that a loan request made by the government of Denmark to the Export-Import Bank should more appropriately be submitted to the International Bank (Minutes of Meeting No. 40, September 26, 1946).

Other forms of credit extended by the United States at this time and originally projected in the foreign financial program of mid-1945 included surplus property credits, lend-lease "pipeline" and inventory credits, and the loan to the United Kingdom. The table following shows the principal credits authorized through these sources, as well as through the Export-Import Bank, for the immediate postwar period.

(In Billions of Dollars)

	Total credits extended June 30 1945-Dec. 31, 1946	Amount Utilized as of Dec. 31, 1946	Unutilized as of Dec. 31, 1946
Export-Import Bank Credits (the second and third columns include credits authorized before June 30, 1945 and either utilized or unutilized by Dec. 31, 1946)	2.3	1.1	1.3
Surplus property credits	1.1	.8	.3
Lend-lease "pipeline" and inventory credits	1.4	1.2	.2
Loan to the United Kingdom	3.75	.6	3.15
Total	8.55	3.7	4.95

THE UNITED STATES BALANCE OF PAYMENTS IN THE IMMEDIATE POSTWAR PERIOD; LOANS, CREDITS, GRANTS, LEND-LEASE AID, OR OTHER FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

*International Transactions of the United States: July 1, 1945-December 31, 1946*¹

[In Billions of Dollars]

I. Goods and services:
Goods supplied to foreign countries	17.
Goods received from foreign countries	7.6
Excess of goods supplied over those received		9.4
Income on investments and services supplied to foreigners (net)		1.5
Credit balance on goods and services ²		10.9
II. Financing the credit balance:
1. Contributions:
UNRRA	2.
Lend-lease	1.1
Civilian supplies to occupied areas	.6
Other government contributions (net)	.4
Private donations (net)	1.1
		5.2

¹This table is based upon those to be found in the Second and Third Semi-annual Reports to the Congress of the Export-Import Bank (covering the periods January to June, 1946 and July to December, 1946, respectively). These tables in turn were based on official estimates of the balance of payments of the United States prepared in the Department of Commerce.

²Contributions, loans, and the liquidation of foreign gold and dollar assets listed in Part II of the table, offset the $10.9 billion credit balance due the United States.

2. Loans and Investments of United States funds:
Export-Import Bank ³	1.1
Lend-lease credits	1.8
Surplus property credits	.9
British loan ⁴	.6
Other United States funds (net)	.3
		4.7 ⁵
3. Use of foreign gold and dollar resources	.9
4. Errors and Omissions	.1
Total		10.9

³ This table shows Export Import disbursements, not credit (or loan) authorizations. For details and documentation concerning loans or commitments to foreign countries, and the general financial program of the United States during this same period, see pp. 1391 ff.

⁴ For documentation regarding the loan to Great Britain see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. vi, p. 1.

⁵ A useful table showing the status of the Foreign credits provided by the United States by agency, by type of credit, and by country for the July 1, 1945-June 30, 1947 period, may be found in the National Advisory Council's Report to the Senate Committee on Finance, Foreign Assets and Liabilities of the United States and Its Balance of International Transactions (Washington, Government Printing Office, 1948), pp. 17 ff.

UNITED STATES CONCERN AS TO THE WORLD FOOD SHORTAGE; ESTABLISHMENT OF A BASIS FOR COMMON ACTION BY THE UNITED STATES, THE UNITED KINGDOM, AND CANADA

Editorial Note

In 1946 the world food shortage, centering mainly in Europe and Asia, and threatening to reach famine proportions, received constant attention throughout the year from United States policy-makers at the highest level. As the program of help evolved by this Government was geared to measures to make more food available for export to deficit areas, particularly bread grains, and as this effort came to center especially on organizational matters related to the collection and transportation of wheat to the seaports and then to transoceanic destinations, the major focus of United States action was domestic rather than external.

This domestic United States effort was accompanied however by two important exchanges between the United States and the United Kingdom outside the normal diplomatic channels, in which the President of the United States figured prominently. In the first, in January and February 1946 a series of messages passed between President Truman and Prime Minister Attlee of the United Kingdom, and the essential result was the galvanizing into action of the Executive Branch of the United States Government to meet a rapidly worsening food situation in Europe and Asia that threatened starvation in some areas. The events of this phase are documented or recounted in Memoirs of Harry S. Truman (volume I) Year of Decisions (Garden City, New York, Doubleday and Company, Inc., 1955) and Francis Williams, A Prime Minister Remembers. The War and Post-War Memoirs of the Rt. Hon. Earl Attlee (London, William Heinemann, 1961).

Documentation follows on the second phase of United States-United Kingdom consultation, which occurred in May when Mr. Herbert Morrison, Lord President of the Council in the British Government, came to Washington for conferences with President Truman and leading members of the Government. The Canadian Government was also involved in this phase with respect to decisions made concerning the Combined Food Board.

800.5018/5-746

The British Ambassador (Halifax) to the Acting Secretary of State

WASHINGTON, May 7, 1946.

MY DEAR MR. ACHESON: I have had a message from the Prime Minister about the food situation, which was considered by the Cabinet yesterday. His Majesty's Government desire to charge the Lord President of the Council (Mr. Herbert Morrison) with a mission to the President to explain the limit of our ability to meet the present grave crisis and to explore with him and his advisers how best we can together meet the situation.

2. The problem is acute in three areas apart from those for which UNRRA is responsible, i.e., Western Zones of Germany, India and the old S.E.A.C. area, and in each area unless additional supplies are provided at once famine will occur. At least in the case of Germany and India the political implications of this would be of the gravest possible character.

3. The Lord President will be prepared to make the fullest disclosure to the United States Government of the expected supplies, requirements and stock position of the United Kingdom and the three areas specified above. He would propose to leave for the United States of America on May 10th or 11th by air accompanied by officials of the Departments concerned.

4. I should be grateful if you would enquire whether the proposed mission would be welcome to the President. If so, His Majesty's Government suggest that a public announcement should be made forthwith.

Yours sincerely,

HALIFAX

800.5018/5-746

Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State to President Truman

WASHINGTON, May 7, 1946.

I am attaching a letter from Lord Halifax brought to me by Mr. Makins¹ of the British Embassy with a message from the Ambassador asking for a reply at your earliest convenience.

I recommend that you authorize us to tell the Ambassador that you welcome Mr. Morrison's visit.

In conversation with Mr. Makins, I gather that the point of his visit relates to our pressure upon the British to release some additional amounts of their wheat stocks. This appears to be essential to meet the crisis which is developing for May and June. It is a difficult decision for the British Government because it raises hazards as to their supplies in July, August and September, just at the time when they are making further cuts in consumption. I believe but do not know that Mr. Morrison is authorized to make some arrangement with us provided he can obtain assurances of our support during the summer months.

¹ Roger Makins, Minister-Counselor in the British Embassy.

Secretary Anderson² has been informed this afternoon of this proposed visit and agrees that Mr. Morrison should come.³

DEAN ACHESON

840.5018/5-1846

Memorandum by the Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs (Clayton) to William S. Hassett, White House Administrative Assistant

WASHINGTON, May 11, 1946.

The Right Honorable Herbert S. Morrison, Lord President of the Council and leader of the Labor Party in the British Parliament,⁴ will call on the President at 12:30 o'clock on Monday, May 13, to discuss the world food situation in general and the wheat crisis in particular.

It is expected that during his stay in Washington he will wish to discuss the following problems, some of which he may raise with the President, but most of which will have to be referred to discussion groups for development of agreed data.

I. Wheat Requirements in British Areas of Responsibility.

A. Germany and Austria

1. Uniformity of rations in the three Western Zones (British, French, American).⁵

² Clinton P. Anderson, Secretary of Agriculture.

³ Marginal notation by the President: "Approved 5/7/46 Harry S Truman".

⁴ Presumably refers to Mr. Morrison's parliamentary position of Leader of the House of Commons.

⁵ This was a cardinal tenet of U.S. occupation policy. In the context of the food crisis, the Secretary of State on March 5, 1946 had sent a letter to the Secretary of War (Patterson) expressing the Department of State's "[great concern] about the world food crisis and its effect upon the foreign relations of the United States." The Secretary went on to state that "It has . . . been a policy of this Government, to which the other occupying powers in Germany have agreed, that each occupying power should be responsible for procuring and financing the essential imports required for its own zone of occupation. This policy was based on the assumption, among others, that each of the occupying powers would in fact have access to supplies sufficient to meet the import requirements of its zone. In view of the critical world supply situation, this assumption appears no long tenable. The Department of State suggests, therefore, that each of the three zone commanders in Germany who are dependent on the Combined Food Board for allocations should estimate the ration scale that can be maintained in his zone until the next harvest from such supplies as are available from indigenous sources and imports. If there should be marked difference between the three zones with respect to the ration scale that can be maintained, the Department of State proposes that supplies be equalized as far as possible to eliminate differences and provide for one ration standard in these three zones. . . ." (800.5018/3-546).

We favor standardization of rations at the beginning of the next crop year. However, we are pressing for many changes in the British Zone to increase the production of coal—among them special rations exclusively for miners, which would involve only a slight added charge on food-stuffs. We are deeply anxious that the most energetic steps be taken along all lines to increase coal production in the Ruhr.

2. Actual Requirements

We have not received complete data on requirements for the British Zone.

B. India

1. Requirements

Despite India's assumption that agreement has been reached on her requirements, we have not received completely satisfactory data and there will have to be further discussions on the working level.

2. Source of Supply

The Indians are requesting wheat from the USA over and above what Australia can supply. To gain the good will of the Indians, we should prefer to send wheat direct to India rather than give wheat to the British and let them gain the credit by diverting other wheat to India. It is doubtful, however, that we can ship any wheat to India in May or June due to other demands, and no commitments to India can now be made.

3. Comparison with Japanese

This point may be raised. If so, it will have to be discussed in the main at the working level. We are in agreement that India ranks above Japan. However, the imports contemplated for Japan are based on a lower ration than the present ration in India and represent the minimum at which our Army supply authorities consider it possible to uphold order in Japan.

II. United Kingdom Stockpile

This question is the crux of the present situation and the probable cause of Mr. Morrison's visit, since the United Kingdom has the only known stocks of sufficient size to permit substantial diversions to other areas in critical need. If the question arises, it should be noted that the British apparently have supplies equivalent to several months' consumption, whereas most countries now have less than a month's supply. Accurate statistics must be developed on the working level.

III. Underwriting of Imports to the United Kingdom

This may well be the main point of the British presentation. We are not opposed to this in principle but the reason for their presenting the problem now is that other British areas will not receive adequate supplies unless the British themselves, despite uncertainty as to replacement, reduce their excess stocks in the United Kingdom by diversions to other areas from their Canadian and Argentine sources of supply. No commitment on our part, therefore, is necessary to induce such action. However, if the British would agree to reduce stocks to a level commensurate with that of other countries and to contribute to countries other than British areas, we would consider sympathetically a request to underwrite essential imports into the United Kingdom.

IV. Conservation Measures in the USA

The President is familiar with the steps taken to date. The British may press for additional measures. It is probable that we ourselves have considered, and will again consider, all the measures they may suggest. Any detailed discussions must be handled on the working level but it would not be harmful to intimate that any additional measures we may take at this time might be conditional on the immediate contribution made available through reduction of British stocks. In addition, Mr. Morrison will no doubt suggest the continuation of all present conservation measures beyond June 30 into the new crop year. There is agreement at the working level that such continuation may be necessary.⁶

V. Reorganization of the Combined Food Board

We are agreed in principle that the CFB should be substantially enlarged from its present membership of the USA, the United Kingdom, and Canada. Progress is being made in working out the details of this proposal in intergovernmental discussions.⁷

VI. Purchasing Arrangements in Argentina

We are in agreement that there should be established in Argentina a centralized purchasing arrangement, the distribution of the grain so acquired being subject to the approval of the Combined Food Board. This would prevent competitive bidding and one-sided purchasing advantages. The only questions are the nature and make-up of the purchasing agency, now in process of discussion.

There is attached hereto a brief biographic sketch of Mr. Morrison.

WILLIAM L. CLAYTON

⁶ This Government's domestic program for meeting the food crisis is documented in the Department of State Bulletin, 1946. Reference may be made also to Memoirs of Harry S. Truman (vol. 1) and the memoir by former President Herbert Hoover, The American Epic (Chicago, Regnery, 1964), vol. iv. President Truman had enlisted the support and leadership of the former president, famine relief administrator of World War I years, as an earnest of his own personal concern and that of this Government in the grave implications of the global food shortage.

⁷ For a statement of May 8 by President Truman, Prime Minister Attlee, and Prime Minister Mackenzie King of Canada, announcing their decision to continue the Combined Food Board until December 31, 1946, see Department of State Bulletin, May 19, 1946, p. 861.

840.5018/5-1846

*United Kingdom Record of a Conversation Between President Truman and The Lord President of the Council (Morrison)*⁸

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON, May 17, 1946.]

The Lord President of the Council saw the President again⁹ on May 17th.

2. Mr. Morrison began by telling the President how pleased he had been by the frank and friendly manner in which the negotiations had been conducted by Mr. Clayton and Mr. Clinton Anderson. He said that it was proposed to issue a communiqué recording the agreement reached. The President replied that he had been informed by Mr. Anderson of the results achieved, with which he was satisfied. Mr. Morrison hoped that the wording of the communiqué would help to correct some of the criticism of U.S. action or inaction, to which the President had referred at their first conversation.

3. Mr. Morrison then stated his understanding that the agreement reached would be the basis of the work of the officials of both Governments and of the Combined Food Board. On this he added that it was important that the machinery for the allocation and programming of foodstuffs should be as efficient as possible and that he was glad that possible improvements in the present machinery of the Combined Food Board were to be examined at the meeting on urgent food problems next week, called by the Food and Agriculture Organisation. The President assented.¹⁰

4. On the U.K. position, Mr. Morrison said that the cut in the U.K. requirements of 200,000 tons had been accepted by the U.S. representatives as the end of the argument about the size of the U.K. stocks and pipeline. Of this he was very glad. The cut would lead to great difficulties for the U.K. and might necessitate further restrictions on U.K. consumption. The President said that he did not want this to happen.¹¹

⁸ Apparently a message from the British Ambassador (Halifax) to the British Prime Minister (Attlee); information copy transmitted to the Acting Secretary of State by Mr. Makins.

⁹ There is no record available of an earlier conversation.

¹⁰ As a result of action initiated in the meeting of the Food and Agriculture Organization the Combined Food Board membership consisting of the United States, the United Kingdom, and Canada was dissolved in mid-June and replaced by an International Emergency Food Council consisting of the major food exporting and importing nations of the world. (Twenty-one nations were invited to join, but the Soviet Union declined to send a representative and Argentina was at first represented by an observer.) See Department of State Bulletin, June 23, 1946, p. 1075.

¹¹ The bases of agreement reached in the Washington talks are described on the United States side in a statement released to the press on May 17, entitled "U.K.—U.S. Guiding Principles for Solving World Food Problems", Department of State Bulletin, May 26, 1946, pp. 896–897. The official British statement was made by Mr. Morrison in the House of Commons on May 23; see Parliamentary Debates, House of Commons, 5th Series, vol. 423, cols. 542–543.

5. Mr. Morrison then pointed out that the agreement reached still left a deficit of 700,000 tons. The officials on both sides would be instructed to do their best to close the gap and to examine further sources of supply. The President said that he had sent a message to Stalin and had had a reply to the effect that Soviet Russia could do no more as their available supplies had already been allocated. The President said he had not accepted this as a final reply and had sent a further message to Stalin.¹² He was despatching a party to Manchuria where food might be produced. He was sending Mr. Hoover down to South America.¹³

6. Mr. Morrison said that insofar as it proved impossible to close the gap altogether he hoped it was understood that the burden of carrying the deficit would not be thrown, as it had tended to be thrown in the past, on areas for which the U.K. had a primary responsibility. The President agreed that this was reasonable and fair.

7. Mr. Morrison then said he had seen the Agent General for India and told him what had been settled. Sir Girja Bajpai had been disappointed, but had taken the decision fairly well. Mr. Morrison again emphasised the serious situation in which India found herself. The President said that he recognised the Indian need and he would try to do something more for them. He thought he could.

8. Finally, Mr. Morrison stressed the major importance which he attached not only to the maintenance of the current requirements of the British zone of Germany, but also to that part of the agreement relating to the attainment of common standards and levels of consumption in the three western zones of Germany.

9. At the conclusion of the interview the President thanked Mr. Morrison for his visit and asked him to give you his greetings.¹⁴

¹² The President's first message was sent on May 16 (telegram 913, to Moscow, 840.48/5-1646).

¹³ The former president earlier had undertaken a world-wide tour and survey of the major food deficit areas.

¹⁴ For a general running account of all aspects of United States involvement in the world food crisis, both on the domestic front and in the international sphere, reference may be made to the Department of State's Classified Weekly Bulletin, Current Economic Developments, 1946. Relevant files in the Department's central indexed files, though not devoted exclusively to this matter, are File Nos. 800.48, 800.48 Committee on Voluntary Foreign Aid, 800.5018, 811.5018, 840.48, and 840.5018.

POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES WITH RESPECT TO THE TERMINATION OF INTERNATIONAL RELIEF ACTIVITIES THROUGH THE UNITED NATIONS RELIEF AND REHABILITATION ADMINISTRATION (UNRRA)

Editorial Note

The United States participated actively in UNRRA and its programs throughout 1946, as a member of the UNRRA Council and as the chief contributor to UNRRA (72%). Documentation concerning U.S. relations with UNRRA in respect of individual country relief programs is found under the countries concerned.

It was in 1946 that this Government made its decision that the remaining relief needs of countries after 1946 could best be handled through direct consultation and arrangements between supplying and recipient governments, and that consequently the United States would make no further contributions for UNRRA activities after December 31, 1946. Unpublished documentation concerning the formulation of this decision is found in Department of State indexed file 840.50 UNRRA, in particular the following: Memorandum, Persinger to Wood, "Proposal for Relief Financing in 1947", May 16, 1946, File No. 840.50 UNRRA/5-1646; Memorandum, Wood to Clayton, "Relief Needs After Termination of Present UNRRA Program", May 21, 1946, File No. 840.50 UNRRA/5-2146; Letter, British Embassy to Department of State, May 22, 1946, File No. 840.50 UNRRA/5-2246; Memorandum, Dort to Wood and Clayton, June 20, 1946, File No. 840.50 UNRRA/6-2046; and Memorandum, Persinger to Lowe, "Official Report [by the United States Delegation] of the Fifth Session of UNRRA", October 2, 1946, 840.50 UNRRA/10-246.

The United States decision to end financial support of UNRRA as of the end of 1946 was officially stated at the Fifth Session of the UNRRA Council (August 1946) by Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs William L. Clayton acting in his capacity as U.S. Member of the Council. The United States position was reaffirmed at the second part of the first session of the General Assembly of the United Nations meeting at New York City October-December 1946, by Mr. Adlai E. Stevenson, U.S. representative on the Second Committee of the General Assembly. At the United Nations a critical discussion of this position developed within the United States Delegation itself, and is recorded in the unpublished Delegation Minutes for November 12, 13, 15, and 26, 1946 which are located in the files of the Reference and Documents Section of the Bureau of International Organization Affairs of the Department of State. The Department of State's insistence on holding to its decision is recorded in an unpublished memorandum of telephone conversation between Under Secretary of State Dean Acheson and the Chairman of the U.S. Delegation, Senator Warren R. Austin, November 13, 1946, File No. 501.BB/11-346. Public discussion at the United Nations is contained in the Summary Record of the meetings of the Second Committee.

Important public statements setting forth this U.S. policy, aside from those at the United Nations, were made by Assistant Secretary Clayton on July 30, 1946 (Department of State Bulletin, August 11, 1946, page 268), by Mr. C. Tyler Wood, Special Assistant to Mr. Clayton, on November 28, 1946 (ibid., December 8, 1946, page 1059), and by Under Secretary of State Acheson on December 8, 1946 (ibid., December 15, 1946, page 1107).

THE UNITED STATES AND THE QUESTION OF INTERNATIONAL ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES AND DISPLACED PERSONS; THE GENESIS OF THE INTERNATIONAL REFUGEE ORGANIZATION

Editorial Note

In 1946 the general refugee policy of the United States evolved at the United Nations against the background of the actual, impending, or planned dissolution of the then-existing international bodies concerned with refugee problems, the Office of the High Commissioner of the League of Nations for Refugees, the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees, and the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (UNRRA). The principal achievements of United States policy were to win recognition that the problem of refugees and displaced persons was still in 1946 international in scope and so should continue to be a matter for international concern; to gain acceptance of the principle of no compulsory repatriation; and to occupy a position of influence in decision-making in the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations (ECOSOC) and various of its committees which led directly to the adoption by the General Assembly of the United Nations on December 15, 1946 of a draft constitution establishing the International Refugee Organization (IRO). A summary of the progress of the refugee question at the United Nations in 1946 is found in Foreign Relations, volume V, pages 138-140.

The IRO constitution was opened immediately for signature at New York on December 15 and was signed subject to approval on December 16 by the United States Representative-Designate at the United Nations (Austin); the instrument of acceptance for the United States was deposited on July 3, 1947 pursuant to authority granted to the Executive by a joint resolution of the Congress approved July 1, 1947. The IRO constitution entered into force on August 20, 1948. During the period in which the constitution was receiving the required number of ratifications operational responsibility was assumed by the Preparatory Commission of the International Refugee Organization (PCIRO), for which provision had been made in an interim agreement adopted by the General Assembly on December 15, 1946. The interim agreement, opened immediately for signature, was signed on behalf of the United States on December 16, 1946 and entered into effect on December 31, 1946; PCIRO began functioning at Geneva on February 11, 1947. For texts, see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Second Part, First Session, Resolutions adopted by the General Assembly at the second part of the first session of the General Assembly, pages 97 ff.; or Treaties and Other International Acts of the United States 1846 (the IRO constitution) and 1583 (the interim agreement).

Unpublished United States documentation relating to these matters is found in the Department of State's central indexed files under File No. 501.BD Refugees; and in the files of the Reference and Documents Section of the Bureau of International Organization Affairs which hold the minutes and records of United States delegations to the General Assembly and to the Economic and Social Council. Also to be found in the latter files are certain unpublished United Nations records relating to the ECOSOC phase, with specific reference to the two special committees in which the United States functioned vigorously, the Special Committee on Refugees and Displaced Persons which met in London April 8-June 1, 1946 and the Committee on the Finances of the International Refugee Organization which sat in London from July 6 to July 20, 1946. Published United Nations documentation is included in the official records of the first session of the General Assembly, first and second parts; the records of the Third Committee of the General Assembly for the first part and of the Third and Fifth Committees for the second part; and in the official records of the first three sessions of ECOSOC.

UNITED STATES POLICY WITH RESPECT TO INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION QUESTIONS: THE BERMUDA CONFERENCE AND RELATED DEVELOPMENTS ¹

Editorial Note

In the documents of this compilation there is constant reference to "the Chicago Convention", "the Five Freedoms of the Air", "the Fifth Freedom", etc. These have to do with the four multilateral conventions drawn up at the International Civil Aviation Conference held at Chicago November 1–December 7, 1944. For documentation on this conference, see Foreign Relations, 1944, volume II, pages 355 ff.

The documents signed at Chicago on December 7, 1944 comprised the four conventions and twelve resolutions and recommendations known as the Final Act of the Conference. The four agreements included a general convention on international civil aviation (TIAS 1591, or 61 Stat. (pt. 2) 1180); an interim agreement (EAS 469, or 59 Stat. (pt. 2) 1516); an international air services transit agreement (EAS 487, or 59 Stat. (pt. 2) 1693); and an international air transport agreement (EAS 488, or 59 Stat. (pt. 2) 1701).

The so-called "five freedoms of the air" were spelled out in Article I, Section 1 of the International Air Transport Agreement, as follows:

- (1) The privilege to fly across [the] territory [of contracting states] without landing;
- (2) The privilege to land for non-traffic purposes;
- (3) The privilege to put down passengers, mail and cargo taken on in the territory of the State whose nationality the aircraft possesses;
- (4) The privilege to take on passengers, mail and cargo destined for the territory of the State whose nationality the aircraft possesses;
- (5) The privilege to take on passengers, mail and cargo destined for the territory of any other contracting State and the privilege to put down passengers, mail and cargo coming from any such territory." (59 Stat. (pt. 2) 1701).

This agreement came to be known as the "Five Freedoms Agreement", and is usually referred to in connection with the last of the enumerated principles, or "Fifth Freedom". "Fifth Freedom Traffic" has been defined as "international traffic to, from, or between one or more intermediate points on the designated trunk route".

¹ For previous documentation on the interest of the United States in international civil aviation matters, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, pp. 1455 ff., and ibid., vol. VIII, pp. 64. For documentation on discussions between the United States and the United Kingdom in 1945 leading to an interim arrangement on commercial air services over the North Atlantic route between the two countries, see ibid., vol. VI, pp. 224 ff.

The International Air Services Transit Agreement in its first article made provision for the granting of the first two privileges alone and was frequently referred to as the Two Freedoms Agreement; see footnote 15, page 1458.

811.796/1-346

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Under Secretary of State

[WASHINGTON,] January 3, 1946.

Lord Halifax² called at his request. He referred to prior talks which both Mr. Clayton³ and I had had with him stressing the great importance of making progress on the matter of civil aviation prior to the consideration in Congress of the British loan.⁴ He told me that he was authorized by his Government to say that His Majesty's Government would be very glad indeed to discuss at an early date, which the Ambassador placed about the middle of January, the matter of a bilateral civil aviation agreement between Great Britain and the United States.⁵ He said that at one of our earlier discussions I had mentioned Bermuda as a possible place and the British Government wished to propose Bermuda as the site of the discussions. The Ambassador stated that the British delegation would be headed by Sir W. Hildred. On further examination of his papers he said that he would have to withdraw this statement as it has not yet finally been decided. The British Government stressed the desirability of having these discussions at a non-ministerial level and conducting them as quietly as possible. I told the Ambassador that I was very glad indeed to get the information which he had just given me; that I would report the matter and let him hear further from us in the immediate future.

DEAN ACHESON

² The Earl of Halifax, British Ambassador to the United States.

³ William L. Clayton, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs.

⁴ For documentation on this subject, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. VI, pp. 1 ff.

⁵ From July 1945 there had been communication between the two governments on this matter at the official, ministerial and heads of government levels both at Washington and London, with indifferent results; relevant documentation is found in the central indexed files of the Department of State, principally File No. 841.796. Failure of the two governments in an auxiliary effort in the fall of 1945 to effect an interim aviation agreement is documented in Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, pp. 1455 ff.

841.796/1-446

Memorandum of Telephone Conversation, by the Under Secretary of State (Acheson)

[WASHINGTON,] January 4, 1946.

I telephoned Lord Halifax this afternoon and, referring to the discussion we had had yesterday about the proposed Civil Aviation Conference at Bermuda, stated that I had spoken with the Secretary of State, who had approved very strongly and had asked me to let the Ambassador know that we would be delighted to engage in the discussions and would have our people ready to go whenever we agreed on a good time. I said I had told the Secretary that Lord Halifax had previously suggested the 12th but that, on further looking into the matter, he had decided that that date would be a little premature. I said that our people thought the 15th might be a little more convenient. The Ambassador inquired whether he could tell London that we warmly concurred and had suggested any day on or after the 15th. I replied that we thought the sooner the Conference was held, the better.

Lord Halifax inquired whether I had any idea who might be sent to represent the United States. I said I did not know definitely but we would probably send Mr. George Baker, Director of TRC, Mr. Stokeley Morgan, the four members of the Civil Aeronautics Board, a man from Army and one from Navy. I said there would also be representatives from the two companies concerned—Pan American and American Overseas. The Ambassador asked whether he could pass this on to London and I replied that he could but that I hoped London would not say anything until both of our countries could make simultaneous announcements to the press on the matter. The Ambassador replied that he would make that clear in his telegram.⁶

DEAN ACHESON

⁶ The delegates nominated by the Department were approved by President Truman on January 11. For announcement, released to the press on January 11 with list of principal members of the United States and United Kingdom Delegations, see Department of State Bulletin, January 20, 1946, p. 75. The 10-man United States Delegation was made up of officers from the Department of State and the Civil Aeronautics Board. State Department members included George P. Baker, Director of the Office of Transport and Communications Policy and Chairman of the Delegation; Garrison Norton, Deputy Director of the Office; John D. Hickerson, Deputy Director of the Office of European Affairs; and Stokeley W. Morgan, Chief of the Aviation Division. L. Welch Pogue, Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, headed the CAB group.

The convening of the conference for January 15 at Hamilton, Bermuda, had been announced to the press in a release dated January 9; see ibid., p. 75.

841.796/1-746

Memorandum by the Assistant Chief of the Division of Aviation Affairs (Walstrom) to the Chief of the Division (Morgan)

[WASHINGTON,] January 7, 1946.

In discussing the forthcoming Bermuda conference with Mr. Baker late Saturday afternoon, he asked that I give you a list of items which I thought would have to be considered in connection with this conference.

1. Form of Agreement: While both countries profess adherence to the standard form of agreement drawn up at Chicago, the agreement which the British negotiated with the Greeks is somewhat different from the bilaterals which we have negotiated with various countries. This is particularly true in the Annex, where the British incorporated their ideas as to Fifth Freedom limitations, embarked traffic, controlled frequencies, rates, etc.⁷

2. Fifth Freedom: Recent telegrams from London and Stockholm confirm that the British are trying to bring pressure on other countries to restrict Fifth Freedom traffic. Some time ago we drew up a paper⁸ discussing the points on which we might compromise the Fifth Freedom if absolutely necessary. Since this paper has not been seriously discussed, I assume we are confident that we will have our way. If we are not confident, then we had better start thinking about some of our minimum desiderata short of the full Fifth Freedom, such as the right of American citizens to travel on their own aircraft, etc.

3. Routes: If we intend to sign up a formal bilateral in Bermuda, it will of course mean that all of the routes should be specified.⁹ The CAB has not yet come out with its Pacific decision, and we are therefore not sure as to whether such British points as Hong Kong and

⁷ For documentation regarding the International Civil Aviation Agreements signed at Chicago on December 7, 1944 see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. II, pp. 355 ff. Among the Chicago documents was the "Form of Standard Agreement for Provisional Air Routes," generally referred to as the "Chicago standard form." Mr. Walstrom, in describing this type of agreement in an article in the Department of State Bulletin, December 22, 1946, p. 1126, observed about the annex to the Chicago type of agreement: "[It] is usually confined to describing the routes and traffic points granted to the air services of each contracting party. It imposes no restrictions on capacity of aircraft or number of schedules which may be operated, not does it provide for determination of rates. It likewise places no limitation on the carriage of fifth-freedom traffic (the international traffic to, from, or between one or more intermediate points on the designated route)."

For the Agreement between the United Kingdom and Greece for Air Services in Europe with annex and exchange of notes, dated November 26, 1945, see British Cmd. 6722.

⁸ Not found in Department files.

⁹ The CAB decision regarding Atlantic, European and Near Eastern routes is detailed in a circular telegram of July 5, 1945; see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, p. 1460.

Singapore will be served. It is also uncertain as to whether other points of interest to the British, such as Siam, will be served. There is a further question as to whether TWA can get into Ceylon. Also, do we intend to go into Accra or Lagos on the way to South Africa? If at all possible, it would be desirable for the Board to have its definite route pattern fixed in respect to all areas affecting British territory.

4. British Opposition in Other Countries: It would, of course, be desirable to get British assurance that they would withdraw their opposition to our negotiation of full Fifth Freedom rights in countries such as Egypt, Greece, Iraq, Iran and Belgium.¹⁰

5. India: As yet we have not received the Indian counter-proposal to our bilateral agreement. Unconfirmed reports indicate that India will be a hard nut to crack, and that she may insist on all traffic across India, say between Karachi and Calcutta, being carried by an Indian airline. Presumably, India will be largely influenced by the British, and any clarification we can get as to just what our future position will be, will be extremely helpful in concluding our bilateral.¹¹

6. Newfoundland: While this has a certain bearing on the 99-year base problem,¹² it looks as though traffic rights for U.S. airlines at Newfoundland are going to require some special negotiation. Latest information is to the effect that Newfoundland will grant us Third and Fourth Freedom rights on a limited number of schedules, but that they will ask for reciprocity which, in turn, would be exercised by BOAC. We have never agreed to any such arrangement (i.e., the use of reciprocal rights by a third party) and rejected a similar proposal offered by the South Africans.

7. Australia, New Zealand and South Africa: It is not known how much the Bermuda talks will touch on our operations to the British dominions, but there are certain problems which may overlap. For instance, Australia and New Zealand apparently plan a joint operation to the United States in which these two countries and the United Kingdom will participate. Informal reports indicate that Australia will not grant the Fifth Freedom to anyone. The situation is somewhat complicated: we could not grant reciprocity to any of the three countries proposing to operate the joint service from Australasia without making sure that all of these parties grant us satisfactory rights. The CAB has been requested to draft some language to incorporate in our standard form agreement which might take care of this situation. South Africa still has some ideas regarding balanced frequencies, simultaneous inauguration of service, etc., which may come up at the Bermuda talks.

¹⁰ This issue is discussed in some detail in instruction 183 of August 20, 1945, from the Secretary of State to the United States Political Adviser in Germany (Murphy); see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. II, p. 1469.

¹¹ For documentation on this matter, see vol. V, pp. 112 ff.

¹² Four-way discussions between the United States, Canada, the United Kingdom, and the Commission Government of Newfoundland, regarding the use of airfields in the 99-year leased bases in the Newfoundland-Labrador area by civil aircraft for commercial purposes were in progress as early as January 1945 and continued throughout the rest of 1945 without any conclusive result. Parallel discussions were proceeding at virtually the same time between the United States and the United Kingdom regarding the same question as it pertained to the 99-year leased bases in Bermuda and the Caribbean area. Documentation on both series of discussions is found in the archives of the Department of State, principally File 811.34544.

8. Ninety-nine Year Leased Bases: It is hoped that all of the interested government agencies will be able to formulate an overall U.S. position before the Bermuda talks with respect to the British note of January 2.¹³ If we can work out satisfactory traffic rights at these and other bases, particularly Newfoundland, I do not think it is absolutely imperative that we finalize the technical and military aspects of this problem at the Bermuda conference, although this would of course be desirable if the interested agencies can formulate an overall position by that time.

9. Other Airports: It may be desirable to discuss the matter of other airports desired for our whole route pattern as applied to British territory. For instance, the matter of a suitable land airport and weather alternates in England; the possible use of Bahrein until Dhahran is completed, etc.

10. Communications, etc.: This is a matter I know very little about but perhaps Bermuda would offer the opportunity to work out a common policy with respect to communications and other air navigation matters.

11. Libya: TWA is certificated to go into Tripoli and Benghazi. Our Legation at Cairo has endeavored to obtain landing rights in this connection, but the matter of traffic rights at these two points is still being deliberated in London. We should try to get British assurance that we will have full traffic rights at these points.

12. Germany, Austria, etc.: Apart from the question of whether the U.S. should participate in internal traffic in these countries, we should try to get British assurance that they will support our efforts to get U.S. international air services operating not only through Germany and Austria but also through other ex-enemy countries in Europe where an Allied Commission is supposed to operate.

13. Italy: TWA wants to set up an American-Italian operating company for internal Italian services, but apparently is opposed not only ¹³ Not printed; it was in reply to an United States note of September 8, 1945 in which the United States agreed to the use by commercial aircraft of the United States military airfields in the 99-year leased bases in Bermuda and the Caribbean subject to nine "understandings" which were then set forth in the balance of the note (811.34544/1-246 and 811.34544/8-2545, respectively).

by the British but also by the U.S. air representative on the Allied Council. Maybe this could be straightened out at Bermuda.

J. D. WALSTROM

Editorial Note

The opening plenary meeting of the Conference was held on the morning of January 15 at Hamilton, Bermuda, at which time Sir Henry Self, Chairman of the British Delegation, was elected Permanent Chairman of the Conference.

At the second plenary meeting in the afternoon the Chairman of the United States Delegation (Baker) set forth the United States view that the Conference faced two major problems: "(a) the degree of control, if any, that should be exercised over rates, and traffic (expressed in terms of capacity, frequency, and Fifth Freedom rights); and (b) the use by Civil Air Transport of U.S. military bases leased in British territory." (U.S. Delegation Files, Conference Document No. 4) The proposal was made and accepted that these two subjects be examined each in a separate committee of the Conference, and there was set up a Rates and Traffic Committee and a Leased Bases Committee. It was further decided to establish an Ad Hoc Committee to deal with miscellaneous subjects.

Also at the second plenary meeting the United States submitted to the Conference a draft bilateral air transport agreement (U.S. Delegation Files, Conference Document No. 5). The United States Delegation Chairman described the draft as falling into two main parts:

"(a) The main part of the agreement which accorded with the Chicago Standard Form and on which it was not expected that much discussion would arise; and

"(b) An Annex showing the list of routes in which the United States was interested with a statement of the rights which were sought on each route." (U.S. Delegation Files, Conference Document No. 4)

By January 26 the Rates and Traffic Committee had reached essential agreement on the questions before it, and prepared for reference to the home governments a draft Final Act and a draft Air Services Agreement with Annex dealing with traffic rights and determination of rates, with a third part relating to routes that had not been made final. (U.S. Delegation Files, Committee Document 1/4)

The Leased Bases Committee began its work by referring to the proposals put forward by the United States Government in the American note of September 8, 1945 and to the British reply of January 2, 1946 (see footnote 13, p. 1455). It was agreed "that the meeting might best proceed by taking the points in the U.K. reply item by item" (U.S. Delegation Files, Committee Document 2/1). By January 21 the committee had before it the draft of a proposed bases agreement set down by its drafting sub-committee (U.S. Delegation Files, Committee Document 2/3). Further consideration of the matter was postponed, however, pending the arrival of experts from the British Colonial Office.

The Ad Hoc Committee was charged with the study of "a number of miscellaneous questions which appeared to be appropriate for discussion at the present Conference and also any further questions that might be raised in the course of the deliberations of the Conference or of its Committees, and were referred to [it]" (U.S. Delegation Files, Conference Document No. 18). This included such matters as civil aviation in ex-enemy countries, airfields in Tripolitania and Cyrenaica, use of Bahrein Airfield (Persian Gulf), Third and Fourth Freedom rights for United States airlines in Newfoundland, Pan-American and B.O.A.C. services between the United States and Bermuda, airfields in United Kingdom territory built with United States funds, and the subject of bilateral air transport agreements in general as between the two governments and third countries. (U.S. Delegation Files, Conference Document No. 8)

In due course it was decided by mutual agreement between the Chairmen of the two Delegations that with the exception of Minutes of Plenary Sessions no official minutes of the Conference would be kept. It was agreed further that such unofficial minutes as were kept would be neither recorded in the Proceedings of the Conference nor published. These decisions were taken because of the highly complicated and technical nature of the discussions and the lack of adequately trained technical secretaries. The Minutes of Plenary Sessions, the Conference Documents, the Reports of the Committees, and the Proceedings of the Conference are published. The official file of the United States Delegation, which includes the aforementioned public documents, is deposited in the unindexed files of the Department of State, Office Lot File No. 53-D407.

811.34544/1-2346

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of European Affairs (Matthews) to the Under Secretary of State (Acheson)

SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] January 23, 1946.

SUMMARY OF AGREEMENT DRAFTED IN BERMUDA CONCERNING CIVIL
USE OF UNITED STATES 99-YEAR LEASED BASES ¹⁴

The agreement reserves our military rights and provides that Kindley Field (Bermuda), Coolidge Field (Antigua) and Beane Field (St. Lucia) will be open for regular use.

¹⁴The text of this draft of the bases agreement is found in U.S. Delegation document USD-14.

The British have not yet agreed to the unrestricted use of Atkinson Field (British Guiana) but will probably do so.

The other Bases, which are situated in territories where adequate civil airports exist, will be used as bad-weather alternates. These are Carlson and Waller (Trinidad), Vernam (Jamaica), and Harmon and Argentia (Newfoundland).

The agreement further provides that civil aircraft of the United Kingdom and of all countries signatory to the Two Freedom Agreement¹⁵ may use the Bases for non-traffic stops. Countries not signatory but having bilateral agreements with the United States or the United Kingdom may use them with the concurrence of the United States and the United Kingdom.

The United Kingdom agrees not to grant carriers of third countries greater traffic rights than those accorded by such countries to United States and United Kingdom carriers.

The British have not yet agreed, and probably will not agree to the exercise by United States carriers of Fifth Freedom rights between the Bases and points outside United Kingdom territory. They may agree to permit United States citizens and mail and cargo originating in the United States to be carried between such Bases as have been opened for regular use. As presently drafted, the pertinent provision reserves to United States carriers all the rights which may have already been granted them by the United Kingdom or Colonial Governments.

The British propose that the initial agreement shall be for ten years. The United States delegates argued for a 20-year term lest airlines and Colonial authorities try to amortize their investments in facilities over that short period of time with the result that charges would be exorbitant.

The draft agreement will not be signed in Bermuda but will form the basis of an exchange of notes between the two Governments.¹⁶

¹⁵ This refers to the International Air Services Transit Agreement concluded at Chicago on December 7, 1944, Department of State Executive Agreement Series No. 487, or 59 Stat. (pt. 2) 1693. The terms of this agreement accorded to signatories the first two of the so-called "Five Freedoms of the Air", providing for the grant by each contracting state to other contracting states of (1) the privilege to fly across its territory without landing and (2) the privilege to land for non-traffic purposes.

¹⁶ The Department was informed by letter of January 25 from the Secretary of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Brig. Gen. A. J. McFarland, that the Joint Chiefs had no objection to the draft agreement from a military point of view, and the Delegation at Bermuda was so informed in a Departmental telegram of the same date (811.34544/1-2246 and 841.796/1-2546, respectively).

841.796/1-2746: Telegram

The Chairman of the United States Delegation (Baker) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

URGENT

HAMILTON, January 27, 1946.

[Received January 27—7: 54 p. m.]

To Mr. William L. Clayton Assistant Secretary of State, from Baker (copy for Walstrom) signed Morgan. Following is text of the proposed final act of the Bermuda Civil Aviation Conference¹⁷ as agreed in U.S.-U.K. Rate and Traffic Committee today:

“Final Act of Bermuda Civil Aviation Conference

The Governments of the United States of America and of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, having decided to hold between themselves a conference on Civil Aviation, appointed their respective delegates who are listed below:

U.S.

(List)

U.K.

(List)

(Committees and subcommittees to be described, date of final plenary session, description of instruments formulated as a result of the deliberations.)

Whereas representatives of the two Governments have met together in Bermuda to discuss Civil Aviation matters outstanding between them and have reached agreement thereon,

Whereas the two Governments have today concluded an agreement relating to air services between British and United States territories,

Whereas representatives of the two Governments have today initialled heads of an agreement to be concluded between them relating to the use by Civil Aircraft of Naval and Air Bases in areas leased by the Government of the United Kingdom to the Government of the United States,

(Note: There may be an additional paragraph here regarding the ¹⁷ Drafts of the Final Act and the accompanying Air Transport Agreement, which were completed by the Conference's Committee on Rates and Traffic, are found in the files of the United States Delegation. The drafts here under reference do not have a document symbol but carry the pencilled notation “Joint U.S.-U.K. doc dated 1-26-45 [46]”.

A Delegation commentary on these drafts is found in the immediately following telegram.

The Delegation was informed by the Department by telegram on January 30 that the documents were approved with the exception of a few minor drafting changes; these were communicated separately in another January 30 telegram (not printed) (both telegrams under 841.796/1-3046).

bases agreement and another paragraph on an agreement on miscellaneous matters.)

And whereas the two Governments have reached agreement on the procedure to be followed in the settlement of other matters in the Field of Civil Aviation,

Now therefore the two Governments in conference resolve and agree as follows:—

(I) That the two Governments desire to foster and encourage the widest possible distribution of the benefits of air travel for the general good of mankind at the cheapest rates consistent with sound economic principles; and to stimulate international air travel as a means of promoting friendly understanding and good will among peoples and insuring as well the many indirect benefits of this new form of transportation to the common welfare of both countries.

(II) That they reaffirm their adherence to the principles and purposes set out in the preamble to the convention on International Civil Aviation signed at Chicago on 7th December, 1944.

(III) That the air transport facilities available to the travelling public should bear a close relationship to the requirements of the public for such transport.

(IV) That there shall be a fair and equal opportunity for the carriers of the two nations to operate on any route between their respective territories covered by this agreement and its annex.

(V) That in the operation by the air carriers of either Government of the trunk services described in the annex to the agreement relating to air services between British and U.S. territories referred to above, the interest of the air carriers of the other Government shall be taken into consideration so as not to affect unduly the services which the latter provides on all or part of the same routes.

(VI) That it is the understanding of both Governments that services provided under this agreement or its annex shall retain as their primary objective the provision of capacity adequate to the traffic demands between the country of which such air carrier is a national and the country of ultimate destination of the traffic. The right to embark or disembark on such services international traffic destined for and coming from third countries at a point or points on the routes specified in the annex to the agreement shall be applied in accordance with the general principles of orderly development to which both Governments subscribe and shall be subject to the general principle that capacity should be related:

(A) To traffic requirements between the country of origins and the countries of destination.

(B) To the requirements of through airline operation, and

(C) To the traffic requirements of the area through which the airline passes after taking account of local and regional services.

(VII) That insofar as the air carrier or carriers of the one Government may be temporarily prevented through difficulties arising from the war from taking immediate advantage of the opportunity referred to in sub-paragraph (IV) above, the situation shall be reviewed between the Governments with the object of facilitating the necessary development, as soon as the air carrier or carriers of the first Government is or are in a position increasingly to make their proper contribution to the service.

(VIII) That it is the intention of both Governments that there should be regular and frequent consultation between their respective aeronautical authorities as defined in the bilateral agreement attached hereto and that there should thereby be close collaboration in the observance of the principles and the implementation of the provisions outlined herein and in the agreement referred to."

[Here follows draft text of the proposed bilateral air transport agreement between the United States and the United Kingdom with an Annex consisting of two parts.]

[BAKER]

841.796/1-2746 : Telegram

The Chairman of the United States Delegation (Baker) to the Secretary of State

SECRET
URGENT

HAMILTON, January 27, 1946—3:30 p. m.
[Received 8:37 p. m.]

For Clayton. Meeting of minds reached with British here on bilateral agreement and final act of conference. Both sides now referring matter home. Texts of draft documents were teletyped to you last night.

Agreements involve British giving way completely from Chicago position on control of frequencies and capacity and on our giving way completely on rate control. On Fifth Freedom, the British have also given way. Since our delegation, including all the CAB members, all believe rate control desirable anyway we believe this arrangement constitutes a real victory.

It includes what we described to Acheson as what we wanted to accomplish. In return for British giving up their control of frequency and prohibition of Fifth Freedom, we offer not only rate control but the right to consult with us at any time when they feel they are being unfairly treated or their operators unfairly hampered.

While the British have reluctantly accepted the principle of the free field and no favor on frequencies and on Fifth Freedom on through routes, we amply indicated in our discussions here that we earnestly desire that there be vigorous and healthy British participation in air transport and the sooner the better. In the consultations referred to in the second sentence above reference will undoubtedly be made to the "whereas" and "it is agreed" clauses in the draft final act of this conference which was teletyped to you last night.

These clauses have been boiled down drastically from what the British wanted and we believe them innocuous from our point of view.

We feel that on frequency control they now offer no succor to the British concept since it has been made abundantly clear that we do not concede that any regulation is necessary to accomplish a close relationship between services offered and public demand.

The Fifth Freedom traffic principles set forth are broad enough to allow an operator to operate satisfactorily and we believe would be violated only if an operator tries to go in for really local services, something which the operators have denied they have any desire to do.

In the draft final act you will notice that the final clause binds the Executive Branch of the US Govt to press upon Congress the granting of power to the CAB over overseas rate making. The delegates, advisers, and consultants are unanimous in favoring this. (This includes Josh Lee¹⁸ and all the carriers.) The CAB has recommended it to Congress before now. This is considered desirable not just as a means of working out an agreement with the British, but desirable in any case in view of the overall world aviation picture.

It is, however, essential to this agreement and I presume that it [will?] have Mr. Truman's backing. The machinery set for rate control both before and after the CAB gets regulatory power has been worked out in detail in the annex to the bilateral. Prior to CAB direct power, it recognizes British sovereign right to prevent operation of a line which charges rates unapproved by their aeronautical authorities but it allows for conference between the aeronautical authorities of the two countries.

After CAB powers are granted, however, the British agree that CAB could let a rate run provisionally until a decision was reached by the aeronautical authorities of the two countries or by PICA0 even if the British thought the rate outrageous.

There is throughout both documents a general bend [sic] toward referring to PICA0 matters on which the aeronautical authorities of the two nations cannot agree. The delegation believes that to be in line with our country's general attitude toward a UNO. We are only morally bound to do our best to carry out the recommendations of a PICA0 advisory report, however, in the case of rates and it is thought unlikely that rate matters will in fact have to be referred there.

The exact listing of routes in the annex is still being worked out. I believe that Self and Hildred¹⁹ are honest in their fears of difficulty in getting these papers approved in London. They will certainly be opposed by certain individuals within the Air Ministry. It also looks from here as if the BOAC representatives were very dissatisfied. I believe it very desirable that Department impress on the British ¹⁸ Member of Civil Aeronautics Board and member of U.S. Delegation at the Bermuda Conference.

¹⁹ Sir William Hildred, British Delegate at Bermuda Conference.

Embassy in Washington the desirability of an agreement in the light of the overall rather than aviation relationship of the two countries would be very desirable.

Now that the so-called technical experts have had a meeting of the minds and the general relations of our countries call so strongly for working together, we strongly believe this agreement should not be allowed to drag on or die out.

Previous bilateral agreements with other nations have apparently not had to be cleared with the Army and Navy. Due to the importance of this one and the presence of Army and Navy advisers at Bermuda it may be well to talk with Admiral Sherman²⁰ and to Col. Mitchell in the Office of the Assistant Secretary of War for Air.²¹ General Kuter²² has wired his favorable recommendation to Mitchell and the Navy people here are doing the same to Sherman. Self is strongly against signing anywhere but here saying that, if the signing takes place in Washington it will give more ammunition to those who will accuse the British of selling out to us.

We knew what we wanted when we came; we have got it and more; we hope you will grant to delegation the right to sign a final act and a bilateral Air Transport Agreement (an executive agreement) with annex included; and that this can be done by the latter part of this week.

The opening up of the leased bases to civil operation (on which Hickerson²³ has all the information up to last Monday²⁴) and on which we appeared to have reached a satisfactory meeting of the minds, and on which we have now Joint Chiefs of Staff approval, took a turn for the worse with the arrival of a gentleman named Bigg from the Colonial Office early last week. He was apparently piqued by the fact that the British had announced satisfactory progress prior to his arrival and prior to his having a chance to go over the problems. He has caused a reopening of every question and a great deal of rewording of the draft agreement.

As a result, the Committee on bases is in an unsatisfactory state and Self and I will move on it full time tomorrow. I will then give you further details. I hope we can get things in shape to send someone to Washington early in the week with a new draft of agreement to go over with Admiral Sherman for resubmission if necessary to the Joint Chiefs so that we could initial a Heads of Agreement on bases at the same time as signing the other conference documents.

²⁰ Vice Adm. Forrest P. Sherman, Deputy Chief of Naval Operations.

²¹ W. Stuart Symington, Assistant Secretary of War for Air.

²² Maj. Gen. Laurence S. Kuter, Commanding General of the Atlantic Division, The Air Transport Command, and Military Adviser to United States Delegation at Bermuda Conference.

²³ John D. Hickerson, Deputy Director of the Office of European Affairs and member of U.S. Delegation to Bermuda Conference.

²⁴ January 21.

There have been a number of other smaller aviation problems between the two countries which have been discussed in subcommittee and understanding on these matters may well be incorporated into the final conference act. The miscellaneous subcommittee report is being teletyped to you today.

[BAKER]

U.S. Delegation Files: Lot 53-D407: Folder "Delegation Working Papers and Documents"
Minutes of the Thirteenth Meeting of the United States Delegation, Hamilton, Bermuda, January 28, 1946, 9: 15 a. m.

Draft

I. Bases. Mr. Norton,²⁵ Chairman of the Bases Committee, reviewed the status of his Committee pointing out that there were now six points at issue whereas previous to Mr. Bigg's arrival, there had been only three points at issue. The six points were:

(1) Cabotage. (It was decided to compromise on persons travelling on Government business rather than hold out for the right to transport all U.S. citizens.)

(2) Fifth Freedom Traffic between the Bases.

(3) Atkinson Field, British Guiana. (The British wish to have Mackenzie Field the principal airport.)

(4) Corresponding Traffic Rights.

(5) Sale of Supplies on Bases.

(6) The Four Bases in Newfoundland. (It was decided that the U.S. Delegation position should be that a Bases Agreement could not be signed until the Newfoundland Bases question was settled to the satisfaction of the United States.)²⁶

841.796/1-3146: Telegram

*The Secretary of State to the Ambassador in the United Kingdom
(Winant)*

SECRET
US URGENT

WASHINGTON, January 31, 1946—11 a. m.

1069. The Civil Aviation talks at Bermuda have resulted in the two delegations submitting to their Governments a draft agreement

²⁵ Garrison Norton, Deputy Chairman of the United States Delegation.

²⁶ It was decided by the Delegation at its meeting on January 29 to draft and attach to the Final Act a letter stating that "In signing the agreement it is understood that it will not be put into effect until the question of the four bases in Newfoundland and Labrador are settled to the satisfaction of the United States." (U.S. Delegation Files, Minutes of 15th Meeting of the U.S. Delegation, January 29, 1946, 9: 30 a. m.)

which we feel is fair and reasonable to both sides. In the draft agreement the United States accepts the British position on regulation of rates and the British accept our position on non-regulation of frequencies and, in general, on the Fifth Freedom. The President and I are prepared to accept the Agreement and are authorizing the Chairman, United States Delegation, to sign the Agreement in Bermuda.

We feel that the signature of this Agreement as soon as possible would not only be desirable as a fair and reasonable settlement of the long standing civil aviation controversy, but would contribute materially toward a favorable reception in Congress to the loan agreement. The President has sent his message to Congress on the loan.²⁷ We earnestly hope that the Aviation Agreement can be signed in Bermuda as soon as possible.

Acheson had a talk yesterday with Halifax along the foregoing lines. I believe it would be useful for you to talk with the Foreign Minister²⁸ and perhaps Attlee,²⁹ in your discretion, along the same lines. Lord Keynes³⁰ has, in the past, been helpful in matters of this kind with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and you may find it advantageous to talk with him.³¹

BYRNES

841.796/2-146: Telegram

The Chairman of the United States Delegation (Baker) to the Secretary of State

SECRET US URGENT

HAMILTON [undated].

[Received February 1, 1946—6:28 p. m.]

For Clayton. Colonel Robert Tate and Mr. William Fleming³² leaving Bermuda six p. m. by army plane today with draft heads ²⁷ For text of President Truman's message to Congress, released to the press January 30, 1946, transmitting the United States-United Kingdom Financial Agreement, see Department of State Bulletin, February 10, 1946, p. 183. For text of Agreement, see Bulletin of December 9, 1945, p. 907. For pertinent documentation, see Foreign Relations, 1945, vol. vi, pp. 1 ff.

²⁸ Ernest Bevin.

²⁹ Clement R. Attlee, British Prime Minister.

³⁰ John Maynard Keynes, British Economist and financial adviser to the British Government.

³¹ In telegram 1303, February 2, 6 p. m., the Ambassador replied: "In answer to your 1069, January 31, I have urged Mr. Bevin to promptly authorize his delegation in Bermuda to sign the draft agreement arrived at in Bermuda. This question has been considered a Cabinet matter and a decision will be made at its meeting Monday afternoon [Feb. 4]. I am carrying out the suggestions contained in your message." (841.796/2-246) agreement covering opening 99-year bases to civil air transportation.³³ This draft is referred for approval by United States and United Kingdom delegations to respective governments prior to submission to conference for initialling. This draft represents no recession from principles contained in USD-14 previously approved by Joint Chiefs of Staff and State Department except with respect to sale of supplies at bases as now set forth in article 8. Numerous editorial changes in other articles tend to strengthen document. Thank you for your last two messages giving right to sign final act and bilateral and expressing general approval.

³² Colonel Tate is not listed in the Delegation roster; Mr. Fleming was a representative of the Navy Department on the staff of Delegation advisers.

Rates and traffic committee is still in trouble on one point: The British have given us fifth freedom rights on all routes we have asked for but wish right to consider whether they will also extend such rights to new points if we change routes in the future. Our delegation now strong against requirement of such subsequent approval. Both sides working on this today. I will let you know progress.³⁴

[BAKER]

U.S. Delegation Files: Lot 53-D407: Folder "Delegation Working Papers and Documents"
Minutes of the Twenty-first Meeting of the United States Delegation, Hamilton, Bermuda, February 2, 1946

[Draft]

Routes

The Delegation reviewed and agreed to the draft of Part IV of the Annex to the draft Agreement on Air Transport. This Part IV of the Annex, prepared yesterday by a joint U.S.-U.K. Working Party, allows each country to change intermediate points on the routes agreed to, an issue on which there was a difference of opinion between both Delegations at the Thursday meeting of the Routes Subcommittee. This new draft represented a complete U.K. recession on their position they had taken that they should have the right to veto such changes.

[Here follows discussion of another subject.]

³³ Two drafts of Heads of Agreement regarding the opening of the 99-year leased bases to civil aircraft were completed by the Leased Bases Committee on January 29 and February 1, respectively (U.S. Delegation Files, Delegation Document USD-28, also Committee Document C/II/3; Delegation Document USD-40, also Committee Document C/II/4). The draft referred to here was the latter, and had been agreed to by both Delegations.

³⁴ The question of routes (route descriptions and route changes) was the subject of intensive discussion within the U.S. Delegation and between the two Delegations from January 29. Differences between the two Delegations revolved specifically around two points: Whether precision were desirable in defining route-direction (the U.S. view was yes), and whether there should be consultations between the two governments as to changes in intermediate points along the routes in third countries (the British members wanted consultation). Section III of the Annex to the bilateral agreement was to be devoted to defining routes and Section IV to the subject of route changes. Relevant documentation is found in the files of the U.S. Delegation.

841.796/2-346: Telegram

The Chairman of the United States Delegation (Baker) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

US URGENT

HAMILTON [undated].

[Received February 3, 1946—4:45 p. m.]

For Clayton from Baker to Walstrom and Hickerson. Following material agreed upon for inclusion in final act is in addition to material already transmitted to Department.³⁵ Additional whereas in final act reads as follows:

“Whereas representatives of the two governments have today initialled heads of an agreement (hereinafter called ‘the heads of agreement’) to be concluded between them (after the conclusion of a satisfactory agreement between the Government of the United States and the Government of Newfoundland) relating to the use by civil aircraft of naval and air bases in areas leased to the Government of the United States under an agreement with the Government of the United Kingdom, dated March 27, 1941.”

New paragraph 9 in final act as follows:

“That the Government of the United Kingdom will use its good offices with the Governments of Newfoundland and of Canada with a view to the early conclusion between those governments and the Government of the United States of agreements providing for use by civil aircraft of airfields in Newfoundland and Labrador, namely Argentia, Gander, Goose and Harmon.”

New paragraph 10 in final act as follows:

“That duly authorized United States civil air carriers will enjoy non-discriminatory ‘two freedoms’ privileges and the exercise (in accordance with the agreement or any continuing or subsequent agreement) of commercial traffic rights at airports located in territory of the United Kingdom which have been constructed in whole or in part with United States funds and are designated for use by International civil air carriers.”

New paragraph 11 in final act as follows:

“That it is the intention of both governments that there should be regular and frequent consultation between their respective aeronautical authorities (as defined in the agreement) and that there should thereby be close collaboration in the observance of the principles and the implementation of the provision outlined herein and in the agreement as follows: ‘Notwithstanding the termination of the agreement, its provisions and those of its annex shall continue to apply to any traffic rights which United States air carriers may thereafter exercise at any ³⁵ See text of draft of Final Act transmitted in Hamilton's unnumbered telegram received in the Department at 7:54 p. m., January 27, p. 1459.

of the bases referred to in Article I of the heads of agreement initialled this day (relating to the use by civil aircraft of naval and air bases in areas leased to the Government of the USA under agreement with the Government of the United Kingdom dated March 27, 1941) until such time as the contracting parties may otherwise agree; provided that the Government of the United States shall have the right at any time after fifteen years from the date of the termination of this agreement to give notice of its desire that the provisions of this agreement and its annex shall cease to apply, on the date specified in the notice but which shall not in any case be less than two years from the date of receipt of such notice, to the traffic rights exercised by its air carriers at any of the bases referred to above, pursuant to said agreement.' ”

[Here follow a new text for Part I of the Annex to the bilateral agreement (revised slightly in technical aspects), a statement that no changes had been made in Part II, and a draft text of Part IV seen for the first time by the Department.]

[BAKER]

841.796/2-446 : Telegram

The Chairman of the United States Delegation (Baker) to the Secretary of State

HAMILTON [undated.]

[Received February 4, 1946—4:45 p. m.]

For Clayton from Baker, copy for Walstrom; copy for Hickerson. Last remaining questions of conference worked out today. Additions to final act, bilateral air transport agreement and annex thereto except for Article III in annex were teletyped to you this noon.³⁶ III in annex is given at end of this message. You have already received and have approved II of annex, draft of air transport agreement and draft of final act of conference.³⁷

General Kuter instructed Colonel Tate who returned to Washington Friday with final draft of bases agreement not to formally submit that draft to Joint Chiefs of Staff until advised from here that British were going to approve it although he was instructed to thoroughly brief advisers to Joint Chiefs of Staff. This is to avoid embarrassment of having JCS twice³⁸ approve bases agreement only to have British ask more changes. I would appreciate your approval of final material in prior teletype of this date, of the material in this teletype and of the bases agreement—the latter subject of course to receiving subsequent Joint Chiefs of Staff approval. I would hope all clearances could be obtained from London and Washington by Tuesday or Wednesday.³⁹ Meanwhile full delegation will stand by here in case British Government should give only qualified approval. I believe Self is very hopeful that he will get full approval but the overall agreement would seem to be much harder for the British to swallow than for us. If London approval is given it will be over the strong protest of some government officials. You will know best whether to use your influence with Halifax.

³⁶ This refers apparently to the undated telegram printed supra.

³⁷ See footnote 17, p. 1459.

³⁸ The Joint Chiefs had already on January 25 approved the draft they then had in hand (U.S. Delegation Document USD-14); see footnote 16, p. 1458.

[Here follows draft of Part III of the Annex, regarding route descriptions.]

[BAKER]

841.796/2-546: Telegram

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Winant) to the Secretary of State

SECRET US URGENT
NIACT

LONDON, February 5, 1946—8 p. m.
[Received February 5—5:29 p. m.]

1417. Re my 1392, Feb. 5.⁴⁰ The differences between compromise arrived at in Bermuda and the position taken by the British Cabinet have been cabled to the British Embassy in Washington for transmission to Under Secretary Acheson and Assistant Secretary Clayton.

WINANT

841.796/2-646: Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Chairman of the United States Delegation (Baker)

CONFIDENTIAL
US URGENT

WASHINGTON, February 6, 1946—8 p. m.

A separate telegram comments on the Feb 6 British Aide-Mémoire just presented by Lord Halifax, which reads as follows: ⁴¹

His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom have now considered the draft agreement relating to civil aviation which has been submitted by the British delegation at Bermuda. They share the ³⁹ That is, February 5 or 6.

⁴⁰ Not printed.

⁴¹ There is attached to the aide-mémoire a document headed "Draft Heads for Discussions between U.S.A. and U.K. in regard to Civil Air Transport Across the Atlantic" dated October 3, 1945, to which is appended another document entitled "Draft of an Agreement for Air Services between the United Kingdom and Other States" (841.796/2-646).

anxiety of the United States Government to conclude a satisfactory agreement without further delay and they are prepared to accept the agreement now proposed subject only to a clarification of paragraph 6 of the draft Final Act of the Conference to cover the question of "change of gauge". The interpretation which His Majesty's Government place on this matter is set out in the annex to this memorandum.

2. His Majesty's Government understand however that the United States Delegation at Bermuda are pressing that the Heads of Agreement on the subject of the commercial use of airfields in leased bases should be directly linked with the main civil aviation agreement by the inclusion of specific clauses in the Final Act of the Conference.

3. The draft of the leased bases agreement includes two provisions in particular which His Majesty's Government are unable to accept. They are: (a) an undertaking that His Majesty's Government will use their good offices to persuade Newfoundland and Canada to agree to American requirements in Newfoundland and Labrador; (b) a stipulation that all civil aircraft including British civil aircraft using these bases should obtain all their petrol supplies, spare parts and services from the United States military authorities.

4. As regards (a) His Majesty's Government are naturally reluctant to accept in advance an obligation to press on Canada and Newfoundland commitments which they may well be unable for good reason to accept. As regards (b) there is evident difficulty from the point of view of the interests of the colonies concerned in granting a monopoly of this character.

5. His Majesty's Government earnestly hope that the Department of State on considering these two conditions will instruct the United States delegation to withdraw their insistence upon them.

6. Alternatively, His Majesty's Government suggests that the Department of State should authorise the separation of the Civil Aviation and Leased Bases agreements so that, subject to clarification of the question relating to "change of gauge" referred to in paragraph 1 of this memorandum, the civil aviation agreement may be put into final shape and concluded at Bermuda. The Leased Bases agreement would, in these circumstances, form the subject of future negotiations.

ANNEX

Change of Gauge

It is understood:

(a) That no Fifth Freedom traffic shall be carried in an aircraft other than that which started from the country of origin except where for convenience or economy permission is given to transfer the passengers in such aircraft to a smaller aircraft, which permission will not be unreasonably withheld.

(b) That where the volume of onward traffic is not such as to justify any continuation of a trunk service even with smaller aircraft without violating the principles laid down in paragraph 6 (of the Final Act) such onward traffic as exists should be carried by the local services in operation.

(c) That where a change of gauge takes place the connecting aircraft will not operate as separately scheduled services but will wait specifically on the arrival of incoming trunk aircraft and operate only in connection with such trunk aircraft.

BYRNES

841.796/2-146 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Chairman of the United States Delegation (Baker), at Hamilton

SECRET

WASHINGTON, February 6, 1946—6 p. m.

U.S. URGENT

Following comments refer to Brit aide-mémoire of Feb 6 repeated to you in separate tel.⁴²

Dept reluctant to delay conclusion of air transport agreement if a satisfactory Heads of Agreement on bases cannot be reached at Bermuda within very near future.

With reference to Final Act, perhaps Brit would agree to addition of "subject to the approval of their respective govts" to pgh II on page 4. This additional phrase could also be inserted in line 14 on page 5, as well as in numbered pgh 8, line 41 on page 6.⁴³

Re pgh 3A of Brit aide-mémoire, Dept would be willing to see numbered pgh 9⁴⁴ on page 6 of Final Act omitted. It is assumed that Brit would not object to reference to bases agreement in second pgh of Article 13⁴⁵ of air transport agreement, but this likewise might be revised if Brit object to its present form.

It is recognized that matter covered by pgh 3b of Brit aide-mémoire will require further discussion with military and JCS, but it need not delay conclusion of air transport agreement.

It is hoped that Brit delegation will agree to changes suggested above, but if not, Dept feels that as last resort all references to bases agreement could be omitted from Final Act and air transport agreement if conclusion of latter is to be unduly delayed.

With regard to so-called change of gauge proposal in Annex to Brit aide-mémoire, this seems to preclude an operator from basing similar ⁴² Supra.

⁴³ No definitive editing of this paragraph can be undertaken as the particular draft to which the Department apparently had reference has not been found. It is clear that the intent of this modification was to make the agreements ad referendum, unlike earlier drafts (see Hamilton's unnumbered telegram received in the Department at 7:54 p.m., January 27, p. 1459).

⁴⁴ Text of this paragraph is printed in Hamilton's unnumbered and undated telegram received in the Department at 4:45 p.m., February 3, p. 1467.

⁴⁵ Apparently at one time consideration was given to adding as a second paragraph of Article 13 of the bilateral agreement a text that corresponded to the new paragraph 11 of the Final Act which is printed in the telegram cited in the immediately preceding footnote. No texts either in draft or final form have been found of a bilateral agreement that has an Article 13 with two paragraphs.

sized aircraft at foreign points for onward carriage of through traffic. Dept will rely on whatever revised language you may be able to work out with Brit if present proposal objectionable.

Separate tels offer certain comments on route section of Annex and on Report of Committee III on Miscellaneous Matters (your tel Feb 1).⁴⁶

Subject to whatever modifications are made in the Final Act, the air transport agreement and the Annex to this agreement in the light of the above comments, these drafts appear to be satisfactory and you may proceed with signing in accordance with Full Power.

Please inform as soon as possible whatever changes are finally made in the various documents forwarded by Morgan to Walstrom so that text to be released to press will incorporate any such revisions.

BYRNES

841.796/2-746: Telegram

The Chairman of the United States Delegation (Baker) to the Secretary of State

SECRET US URGENT

HAMILTON [undated].

[Received February 7, 1946—1:22 a. m.]

To Clayton. British delegation received instructions from London today to present US delegation with additional restrictive clause on Fifth Freedom traffic.⁴⁷ They did so, and American delegation strongly opposed it as presented. I believe British delegation here are not strongly in favor of the London proposal and that we can work something out satisfactorily (Halifax should not be told the American reaction on this point—as yet). British Cabinet will be considering over-all policy of final act, transport agreement, and bases agreement Thursday.⁴⁸ I believe Self hopes for general approval of final act and transport agreement by tomorrow night. Halifax has been asked by London to see you on bases agreement, which is, in several respects, distasteful to London. My understanding is that he will request that a clause in the final act which states UK will use its good offices with Newfoundland and Canadian Governments to get agreements on bases there should be dropped from final act, and that we should depend on oral assurances. There is no objection here ⁴⁶ None of the three telegrams alluded to here is printed (841.796/2-146).

⁴⁷ This refers to the "change of gauge" proposal included in Lord Halifax's aide-memoire of February 6; see Department's telegram of February 6, 8 p. m., to Hamilton, under heading of "Annex", p. 1470.

⁴⁸ February 7.

to dropping it. He will also express dissatisfaction with part of agreement (accepted by British here) dealing with military and colonial supplies on bases. British here do not know just what Halifax proposition on this question will be, but Self and I both hope that this question can be left completely out of this bases agreement and arrangement made for further study on this one difficult point. All the rest of the bases agreement, on which an enormous amount of work has been expended, should certainly not be allowed to go uninitialled because of this one difficulty. Mr. Bigg, here from the Colonial Office, has apparently disagreed with Self on many bases matters, and has apparently been writing his own strong dissents to London. I believe this conflict accounts primarily for Halifax being brought into the bases picture at this time. I believe Self hopes for signing and initialling of documents by Sunday night.

[BAKER]

U. S. Delegation Files : Lot 53-D407 : Folder "Delegation Documents"

Memorandum by the Chairman of the United States Delegation (Baker) to Major General Lawrence S. Kuter, Adviser to the Delegation

HAMILTON, February 7, 1946.

At a meeting held in room 401 of the Belmont Manor Hotel on Thursday, February 7, 1946, Sir Henry Self, Chairman of the British Delegation to the U.S.-U.K. Civil Aviation Conference in Bermuda, quoted the following statement from a cable received by him from his superiors in London :

"You can give the Americans an oral undertaking to facilitate discussions with Canada and Newfoundland."

Sir Henry then stated :

"This I now do."

There were present at this meeting :

U.K.

Sir Henry Self
 Sir William P. Hildred
 Mr. Donald Maclean
 Mr. W. J. Bigg
 Mr. L. J. Dunnett

U.S.

Major General L. S. Kuter
 Mr. Garrison Norton
 Mr. George P. Baker

All those present heard the above statements and understood that they would form a part of the official American records.

GEORGE P. BAKER

841.796/2-746: Telegram

The Chairman of the United States Delegation (Baker) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

URGENT

HAMILTON, February 7, 1946.

[Received February 8—2:35 p. m.]

This message is to be telephoned to addressee per instance of originator. Classification is to be disregarded in this respect for Mr. Clayton, Dept of State. Copies to be sent direct to Colonel Mitchell, Office of the Under Secretary of War for Air, and to Vice-Admiral Sherman, Deputy Chief of Naval Operations for both Departmental and Joint Chiefs of Staff use. From Mr. Baker.

In reference to the two objections raised by Lord Halifax to the bases agreement, it is satisfactory to delegation here to drop reference in the final act to the use of U.K. good offices with Newfoundland and Canada. Oral assurances of such good offices have been made by Sir Henry Self here today in a formal manner and a memorandum to this effect to General Kuter from myself will form a part of the official U.S. records.

In regard to Lord Halifax's second objection to bases agreement: His objection to monopoly position of US Delegation is based on a misunderstanding by London of US Delegation position during past 2 weeks. General Kuter joins me in recommending the following quotation as the only wording to appear under Article VIII(A).⁴⁹

"Discussions shall be held between the two governments with a view to making arrangements for the provision of necessary facilities, supplies and services to civil air carriers using the bases, and the agreement to be concluded pursuant to these heads of agreement shall contain provisions defining such arrangements and shall not enter into force until such arrangements have been made."

This suggestion is satisfactory to British Delegation here. Makins in British Embassy⁵⁰ also has the above wording. Self believes that any further suggested changes by London in bases agreement would be only of drafting character. General Kuter strongly recommends therefore that the bases agreement be put to the Joint Chiefs for approval now.

[BAKER]

⁴⁹ In the draft submitted to the two governments for approval at the end of January (see footnote 33, p. 1466), the text read: "The Government of the United States reserves the right to rent, lease, sell or otherwise make available to the Colonial Governments or the operators of civil aircraft, without discrimination, such buildings, facilities, supplies and services where such action will not interfere with the performance of the military mission of the Base. In appropriate cases such transactions will be the subject of consultation between the local military and the Colonial authorities." (U.S. Delegation Files, Delegation Document USD-14)

⁵⁰ Roger Makins, British Minister in the United States.

841.796/2-746 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Chairman of the United States Delegation (Baker), at Hamilton, Bermuda

SECRET U.S. URGENT WASHINGTON, February 7, 1946—6 p. m.

With reference to Deptels Feb 6 re Brit aide-mémoire, Lord Halifax addressed subsequent letter to Undersecretary Acheson saying he had further message from HMG, and there now appear to be some serious Brit objections to draft Heads of Agreement on bases in addition to the two points mentioned pgh 3 of aide-mémoire.⁵¹ Halifax letter informs that the withdrawal of these two provisions will in the circumstances hardly suffice, and Brit urge that bases question should be completely separated from main air transport agreement.

Difficult to say how soon JCS approval for revised Heads of Agreement can be obtained. However, if Brit willing, it would be satisfactory to initial the noncontroversial sections, including the revised Article 8(A) quoted your teletype message Feb 7,⁵² if this latter acceptable to military. Presumably there would be qualifying statement on Heads of Agreement such as "subject to approval of the respective govts".

If there will be delay in getting Brit to initial, Dept believes best solution is to separate the two agreements entirely, but if possible to state in the Final Act that preliminary discussions on the opening of the 99-year bases to civil aircraft have resulted in substantial measure of agreement and that the two delegations have made recommendations to their govts which are intended to serve as the basis for the early negotiation of a formal agreement on this subject.

Further study of Brit change of gauge proposal⁵³ gives Dept some concern with respect to the provision that permission must be obtained for transfer of passengers from one aircraft even to a smaller aircraft. Also, in the event our operators do not feel it necessary to insure right for transfer of onward passengers from one plane to another plane which might be based at a foreign point, there at least should be provision for transfer in the event of breakdown of the first plane, without necessity of getting prior permission. It is also not clear whether the change of gauge restrictions apply only to Brit points. However, Brit proposal appears susceptible to reasonably satisfactory revision, and as stated previously, we rely on your delegation to work out language which would be agreeable.

BYRNES

⁵¹ See text transmitted in Department's telegram of February 6, 8 p. m., p. 1469.

⁵² Supra.

⁵³ See text in Department's telegram of February 6, 8 p. m., under the heading of "Annex", p. 1470.

841.796/2-746 : Telegram

The Secretary of State to the Chairman of the United States Delegation (Baker), at Hamilton

SECRET U.S. URGENT WASHINGTON, February 8, 1946—noon.

Further reference your tel recd Feb 7 on bases agreement. Makins, Brit Emb, was asked whether his Govt would approve initialling the Heads of Agreement if revised Article 8(A) were substituted, and if reference omitted to UK using its good offices with Canada and Newfoundland. Makins said he could not answer this in view of further instructions they had received from HMG referring to additional objections, mentioned in first pgh Deptel Feb 7. However, he will endeavor to obtain an answer not later than Feb 9, and if it is favorable Dept will try to get immediate JCS clearance.⁵⁴

BYRNES

841.796/2-846 : Telegram

The Chairman of the United States Delegation (Baker) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

HAMILTON [undated].

URGENT

[Received February 8, 1946—2:17 a. m.]

War 8421. For Clayton. The following two paragraphs from the annex⁵⁵ of the air transport agreement were very reluctantly agreed to by US Delegation as outside limit to which it can go to meet British so called "clarification" of Paragraph VI of final act⁵⁶ mentioned in British aide-mémoire of February 6:⁵⁷

"Where the onward carriage of traffic by an airplane of different size from that employed on the earlier stage of the same route (hereinafter referred to as 'change of gauge') is justified by reason of economy of operation, such change of gauge at a point in the territory of the United Kingdom or in the territory of the United States shall not

⁵⁴ In a telegram of February 9, 5 p. m., the Department informed the Delegation of Washington approval of certain revisions proposed in Articles III, VIII and XI of the Heads of Agreement which were considered to be relatively minor in importance. The Department continued: "Dept has asked JCS to give informal approval today [of the draft agreement as a whole] and you will be informed directly by military. Dept also asked Brit Emb to urge HMG approval Heads of Agreement on basis of suggested revisions to date, and Emb is doing this." At the end of the same telegram the Department reported that "We have just been informed by telephone that the JCS have given informal approval to the draft agreement subject to certain understandings which are being communicated direct to General Kuter. They tell us these understandings should make no difficulty about initialing the agreement." (841.796/2-946)

⁵⁵ This might more properly have been worded: "The following two paragraphs which have been added to the annex. . . ."

⁵⁶ For text of paragraph VI in the draft of the Final Act, see p. 1470.

⁵⁷ See paragraph 6 of the text of the British aide-mémoire of February 6 transmitted to the Delegation in Department's telegram of February 6, 8 p. m., p. 1469.

be made in violation of the principles set forth in the final act and in particular shall be subject to there being an adequate volume of through traffic in accordance with the provisions of Paragraph 6 of that act.

Where a change of gauge is made at a point in the territory of the United Kingdom or in the territory of the United States, the smaller airplane will operate only in connection with the larger airplane arriving at the point of change, so as to provide a connecting service, specifically scheduled as such, and will thus normally wait on the arrival of the larger airplane."

Believe this to be a most reasonable compromise. Self is cabling the two paragraphs for annex referred to above to London, stating it is as far as US Delegation will go. He is making no recommendation on this point himself. He had received instructions, first, that there be an absolute prohibition of change of gauge, and, later, instructions to propose wording which made right to change gauge subject British permission as in aide-mémoire. The problems raised are difficult ones basically involving Third and Fourth Freedom traffic from the US to other than British countries, and US Delegation thinks this is a last chance attempt on part of London to break away from the over-all deal of rate control, on the one hand, and no prior control of frequencies and limited Fifth Freedom traffic on the other. We agreed some time ago, in addition to rate control, to have through traffic to and from the US the main controlling consideration in our overseas operations, as indicated in the restrictive language on Paragraph VI of the Final Act. We now, in order to close the deal, agree to spell out a further restriction on change of gauge operations, tied into Paragraph VI with an even heavier stress on the volume of traffic standard. Beyond this the delegation does not feel they can possibly go. I do not know whether Self will send our arguments, as well as our language, to London, so I have given the above information to you, should you deem it wise to talk to Halifax about it.

[BAKER]

841.796/2-946

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Chief of the Division of Aviation Affairs (Morgan)

[HAMILTON,] February 9, 1946.

During an informal chat with Sir William [Hildred] on the afternoon of February 9, he voluntarily brought up the question of Fifth Freedom traffic and said that he hoped it was clear that the American Delegation fully understood the interpretation which the British put on the phrase "Fifth Freedom traffic". He said that Fifth Freedom traffic to the British meant all pick-up traffic between foreign nations all over the world, and they were interested in the manner in which such traffic was picked up since it could be expected to have at least an indirect effect on competitive operations nearly everywhere. At the same time he said the British fully recognized that in the bilateral agreement with the United States, they could only put in provisions affecting Fifth Freedom traffic carried between points in British (or United States) territory and points in third countries. They had no intention of trying, through the bilateral agreement, to regulate the carriage of Fifth Freedom traffic between points in two countries, neither being in the territory of the United States or in the territory of the United Kingdom.

I told Sir William I believed that was the understanding of the American Delegation of the British position. We also felt that the references to Fifth Freedom traffic in the bilateral agreement applied only to points in one of the two jurisdictions and points in third countries.

At the same time I said that the American Delegation recognized the very important precedent that was being established through this bilateral agreement and foresaw the possibility that many other nations would wish to adopt the same principles with respect to the transportation of Fifth Freedom traffic. To that extent the bilateral agreement would indirectly affect the carriage of such traffic between points outside of the United States or the United Kingdom. To this Sir William readily agreed.

I then went on to say that a good many of the difficulties which we met with respect to certain provisions and conditions in the agreement, were due to the strong possibility that we would have to incorporate those same provisions in other agreements in the near future. Thus we were, in a sense, although not directly setting the pattern for a sort of multilateral air transport agreement.

It is also my recollection that Sir Henry Self and Sir William expressed themselves in practically the same terms during the late evening meeting of the two Delegations on February 9.

STOKELEY W. MORGAN

841.796/2-1046 : Telegram

The Chairman of the United States Delegation (Baker) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

URGENT

HAMILTON [undated].

[Received February 10, 1946—1:39 p. m.]

For Clayton. Following is language of proposed new Section V of annex dealing with change of gauge:

“(a) Where the onward carriage of traffic by an aircraft of different size from the [that?] employed on the earlier stage of the same route (hereinafter referred to as ‘change of gauge’) is justified by reason of economy of operation, such change of gauge at a point in the territory of the UK or the territory of the US, shall not be made in violation of the principles set forth in the final act of the Conference on Civil Aviation held at Bermuda from January 15 to February 1946, and, in particular, shall be subject to there being an adequate volume of through traffic.

(b) Where change of gauge is made at a point in the territory of the United Kingdom or in the territory of the United States, the small aircraft will operate only in connection with the larger aircraft arriving at the point of change, so as to provide a connection service which will thus normally wait on the arrival of the larger aircraft, for the primary purpose of carrying onward those passengers who have travelled to UK or US territory in the larger aircraft to their ultimate destination in the smaller aircraft. Where there are vacancies in the smaller aircraft such vacancies may be filled with passengers from UK or US territory respectively. It is understood, however, that the capacity of the smaller aircraft shall be determined with primary reference to the traffic travelling in the larger aircraft normally requiring to be carried onward.

(c) It is agreed that the arrangements under any part of the preceding paragraphs (a) and (b) shall be governed by and in no way restrictive of the standards set forth in paragraph (6) of the final act.”

Above was agreed to by British and American delegations in lengthy meeting last night. It has not been approved by British Cabinet but has been transmitted to London and Self expects approval to be forthcoming promptly. You will be informed immediately approval is received from London and of any changes which may be made before signing. We are still hoping to sign tomorrow (Monday).

[BAKER]

Editorial Note

On February 10 the Department of State was informed by the United States Delegation that on the previous day the two Delegations had reached an agreed text for the proposed bases agreement, a master copy of which was being despatched to Washington by courier that morning (February 10). The Department was informed that a new Article 12 (c) had been added as follows:

“The initialling of this document shall not indicate that a contract has been concluded. This document is the agreed bases of, and subject to the preparation of, a formal contract. In the preparation of the formal contract any outstanding points, more particularly the points arising on articles 8 and 11, will be resolved.”

Washington was informed in the same telegram that "The new Article 12 (c) is the agreed US-UK delegation compromise on British Ministry [sic] wording received last night. US delegation believes London Cabinet will accept this at meeting tomorrow morning, February 11. We expect no further changes in bases agreement. . . ." (Hamilton unnumbered telegram, February 10, 1946, received February 11, 8:44 a. m. (841.796/2-1246)) The Delegation informed the Department in an undated and unnumbered telegram received in the Department on February 11, 4:18 p. m., that Section 12 (c) "now accepted by British and should be included in Annex and heads of agreement". (841.796/2-1146)

In the same telegram the Department was informed that Part V of the Annex to the bilateral agreement had also received British approval (see undated and unnumbered Hamilton cable, supra).

Certain technical changes in the drafting of these documents were also conveyed to the Department in telegrams received on February 10 and February 11 (841.796).

Three instruments were signed or initialled at a final plenary session of the Conference on February 11: The Final Act of the Conference, an Air Transport Agreement with attached Annex, and Heads of Agreement relating to the civil use of leased air bases with exchange of letters between the Chairmen of the two Delegations embodying certain reservations of their respective governments on the Heads. For texts, see Department of State Treaties and Other International Acts Series No. 1507 or 60 Stat. (pt. 2) 1499; these are printed also in Department of State Bulletin, April 7, 1946, pages 584 ff.

For the Joint Statement issued by the two Delegations at Hamilton, Bermuda on February 11, 1946, see Department of State Bulletin, February 24, 1946, pages 302 ff.

Pending the conclusion of the "formal contract" referred to in Article 12(c) of the Heads of Agreement a temporary arrangement was worked out between the two Governments in the months that followed in a succession of diplomatic exchanges between the Department and the British Embassy, for the use of the leased-bases airfields in Bermuda and the Caribbean by civil aircraft. This was done without prejudice to negotiations for permanent arrangements. Documentation regarding this matter is found in the Department of State's central indexed files, File No. 811.34544.

Agreement was reached between the two Governments in May 1946 for the holding of talks at Washington in June looking towards negotiating the formal contract cited in Article 12(c). These discussions, held June 18-July 18, resulted in an agreement on a draft text of fourteen articles dealing with such subjects as traffic rights, use of the bases for private and charter flights, limitation of civil use, administrative and operational control and requirements, landing fees, and suspension of United States responsibilities. Final approval and signature awaited further review by interested agencies of the two Governments and by the British Colonial Governments concerned, and the matter was still pending at the end of the year. Documentation is found in File No. 811.34544.

Final settlement was contingent also upon a United States requirement that a satisfactory agreement be reached by the United States with the Newfoundland Commission of Government and the Canadian Government regarding the use of certain bases in Newfoundland by civil aircraft. Conversations were held at Washington June 14–June 26 between representatives of the three governments, and substantial agreement was reached on a draft text. Certain questions however were still unsettled at the year's end. Relevant documentation may be found principally in File No. 843.7962.]

579.6 PICA0/5-1846

The Acting Secretary of State to Mr. William A. M. Burden, Chairman of the United States Delegation to the Interim Assembly of the Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization

SECRET

WASHINGTON, May 18, 1946.

SIR: In your capacity as Chairman of the United States Delegation to the First Annual Assembly⁵⁸ of the Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization, to be held at Montreal, Canada, beginning May 21, 1946, I shall greatly appreciate your communicating to the other members of the Delegation the position to be upheld at this forthcoming meeting.

The position of leadership which this Government holds in the field of international civil aviation, and particularly within PICA0 itself, carries with it the obligation to assume a leading role in the proceedings of the Meeting. The attitude of the United States Delegation should constantly demonstrate the sincere desire of this Government for the greatest possible advancement in this field through international collaboration. The members of the Delegation should, individually and collectively, take the initiative in supplying helpful information based on the resources and experience of this country.

⁵⁸ The Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization consisted of an Interim Assembly and an Interim Council. The former met annually to act principally upon matters submitted to it by the latter, which was in session almost continuously.

Since the majority of nations did not favor the multilateral Chicago Air Transport Agreement,⁵⁹ the United States Government, seeing the necessity for a new bilateral approach, took the leadership in attempting to reconcile the major difference at Chicago, namely the opposed positions of the United States and the United Kingdom. This was successfully accomplished through the US-UK Air Transport Agreement concluded at Bermuda, and the pattern was established under which several mutually satisfactory bilateral air transport agreements have already been reached by the two governments with the governments of other nations. Many more such bilateral agreements are in prospect.⁶⁰

The United States Government believes that further experience with the Bermuda-type of bilateral agreement, and its modification where desirable, are necessary preliminaries to an intelligent discussion of a multilateral agreement. This view represents no change from this Government's position at Chicago that the multilateral approach will ultimately prove to be the solution to the problem of regulation in international air transport. In fact, this view contemplates the adoption of such multilateral agreement through the merging at an early date of those provisions that experience with the Bermuda-type bilaterals has proved to be desirable for a world-wide agreement.

In the present circumstances, it is the belief of the United States Government that discussion of a multilateral air transport agreement at the forthcoming Assembly of PICAQ should be postponed until the next Assembly. Therefore, the United States Delegation, as soon as possible after arriving at Montreal, should ascertain with all possible tact and discretion whether the above view of the general situation coincides with the views of other delegations, particularly those of the British and French. If sufficient unanimity can be developed with regard to this point, the United States Delegation should attempt to have the report of the PICAQ Committee on Air Transport referred back to that Committee without Assembly action. It is recognized that this role is a difficult one, since it is important that the Delegation should not be placed in the position of opposing a multilateral agreement as the desired ultimate objective.

⁵⁹ Signed December 7, 1944; for text, see Department of State Executive Agreement Series No. 488, or 59 Stat. (pt. 2) 1701. This Agreement is often referred to as the Agreement of the "Five Freedoms". For documentation relating to the International Civil Aviation Conference at Chicago, November 1 to December 7, 1944, see Foreign Relations, 1944, vol. II, pp. 355.

⁶⁰ For a list of bilateral air transport agreements concluded by the United States with 28 countries, in the two-year period from December 1944 (following the Chicago Conference) through December 1946, see article by Joe D. Walstrom, Associate Chief of the Aviation Division, entitled "Bilateral Air Transport Agreements Concluded by the United States", Department of State Bulletin, December 22, 1946, pp. 1126 ff. Nine of the agreements were based on the "Chicago standard form" agreement (established at the Chicago Conference) and the remainder were patterned after the so-called "Bermuda Principles". For an explanation of the two types of agreement see ibid., pp. 1127-1129.

An agreement with Peru should be added to the Walstrom list. It was concluded on December 27, 1946.

[Here follows discussion relating to certain contingencies that did not arise, other items to be on the conference agenda and certain matters concerning delegation organization and procedure.

The conference was held in Montreal from May 21 to June 7. A report of the U.S. Delegation is found in the Department of State's central indexed files, File No. 579.6 PICA0/6-746.

The public documentation of the Conference is printed in two sets, a pre-Conference series and a Conference series. The former is published as Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization, First Assembly. May-June 1946. Montreal, 1946, and consists of preparatory documentation drafted for the consideration of the five commissions of the Conference; technically this series consists of five separate publications, corresponding to the five commissions, but frequently these are found on library shelves as one volume. The second or Conference set of documents is published as Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization, Interim Assembly, 3 vols., Montreal, 1946 (I—minutes of plenary meetings, II—committee documents, III—miscellaneous.)]

800.796/7-2546: Circular telegram

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Officers ⁶¹

URGENT

WASHINGTON, July 25, 1946.

Please address following note to Minister for Foreign Affairs country to which you are accredited:

"I have the honor to refer to the International Air Transport Agreement formulated at the International Civil Aviation Conference at Chicago on December 7, 1944, which was accepted by the Government of the United States of America with a reservation on February 8, 1945.

"I am now instructed to inform the Government of that on July 25, 1946 the Government of the United States of America gave notice of its denunciation of that Agreement in accordance with the provisions of Article V ⁶² thereof and that the Agreement will accord-⁶¹ Sent to the United States missions in all the countries whose representatives had attended the Chicago Convention, with the exception of Bolivia.

⁶² Article V specified that any contracting state could denounce the Agreement provided it gave one year's notice.

ingly cease to be in force with respect to the United States of America on July 25, 1947."⁶³

BYRNES

800.796/8-146: Circular telegram

*The Acting Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Officers*⁶⁴

WASHINGTON, August 1, 1946.

In view inquiries resulting from Depcirtel July 25 re this Govts denunciation of International Air Transport Agreement, you are authorized furnish additional following background information to appropriate authorities.

Decision US to withdraw from this Agreement was based on failure of most nations principally concerned with operation and development of air transport services to accept this particular document, together with dissatisfaction with it as reflected at meeting Assembly of Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization held at Montreal. It is therefore opinion US that agreement cannot be relied upon as effective medium for establishment of international air routes for operation by US airlines.

At same time, this Govt still adheres firmly to Fifth Freedom principle, even though it is achieved through bilateral rather than multilateral approach.

All 18 bilateral arrangements concluded by US with other countries since Chicago Aviation Conference provide for such Fifth Freedom traffic, and this Govt will continue to seek to have this principle incorporated in bilateral air arrangements with additional countries.

ACHESON

800.796/8-1246

The Acting Secretary of State to the British Ambassador (Inverchapel)

[WASHINGTON,] August 12, 1946.

MY DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: I am writing this personal letter to express my Government's growing concern with recent developments in the field of international air transportation, particularly with respect to arbitrary limitations which have been incorporated in inter-governmental arrangements on this subject.

⁶³ For a statement by this Government regarding its withdrawal from the International Air Transport Agreement formulated at the Chicago Conference and which the United States had accepted as binding on February 8, 1945, see Department of State Bulletin, August 4, 1946, p. 236.

⁶⁴ Sent to the same missions as noted in the circular telegram of July 25, supra.

When the bilateral air transport agreement between the United States and the United Kingdom was concluded at Bermuda on February 11, 1946, the joint press release of the two Delegations referred to it as representing "a sincere and determined effort to reconcile the widely divergent views by the two nations on the extent to which international air transport should be subject to government controls". The Final Act of the Bermuda Conference also stated "that the two Governments had reached agreement on the procedure to be followed in the settlement of other matters in the field of civil aviation", and proceeded to outline certain general principles.

It was the hope of my Government that its bilateral agreement with the United Kingdom would serve as a model for bilateral arrangements between any two countries, thus making a sound contribution to the wider development of international air transport. However, there now appears to be a trend away from certain of the Bermuda principles, especially those which impose no arbitrary limitations on frequencies and capacity, and which grant the right to carry Fifth Freedom traffic without undue restrictions.

For example, the British-French agreement on February 26[28], 1946⁶⁵ provides for an equal division of traffic between British and French airlines operating on certain routes, while the British-Argentine agreement of May 17, 1946⁶⁶ likewise envisages a quantitative division of capacity between the airlines of the two countries. It is also understood that the effect of the latter agreement will be to place serious limitations on the volume of Fifth Freedom traffic.

The United States Government continues to regard its bilateral agreement with the United Kingdom as an important step forward in the history of air transportation, but finds difficulty in reconciling certain of the Bermuda principles with the arrangements concluded by the United Kingdom with the above-named countries.

It is believed that a very difficult and confusing situation will result if, after having resolved our differences at Bermuda, the United States and British Governments proceed along divergent lines in concluding their bilateral air arrangements with other countries. Furthermore, my Government remains convinced that arbitrary restrictions on Fifth Freedom privileges and quantitative division of traffic and capacity will inevitably result in retarding the overall development of rapid communications, commerce and good will among all nations.

⁶⁵ British Cmd. 6787.

⁶⁶ British Cmd. 6848.

I realize that this question is one which probably deserves further consultation between our two Governments and I understand that aeronautical officials of the United States have been informally invited to London in September, at which time the matter could be discussed in greater detail. It is my Government's earnest hope that the British Government's implementation or ratification of its agreement with Argentina, in particular, could be deferred until these discussions.

In the meantime, however, I am prompted to inquire whether the British Government would be disposed, in the immediate future, to join with us in publicly espousing the principles of the Bermuda agreement in toto as a model for bilateral air negotiations between all countries.

Sincerely yours,

DEAN ACHESON

800.796/8-2946

*The British Minister (Balfour) to the Acting Secretary of State
(Acheson)*

WASHINGTON, August 29, 1946.

DEAR ACTING SECRETARY OF STATE: On August 13th [12th] you wrote a personal letter to Lord Inverchapel on the subject of recent developments in the field of international air transportation. Your letter was at once passed on to the Foreign Office and I have now received their comments.

When representatives of our two Governments met at Bermuda they approached the question of commercial traffic rights from widely divergent standpoints which had hitherto been irreconcilable. That agreement was reached at that Conference was largely due to the very special relations prevailing between our two countries, particularly in the field of civil aviation where our interests are world wide and interlocked, and to the fact that provision could be made in the Agreement for setting up machinery for continuous consultation, as a result of which it was found possible to dispense with the detailed regulation of commercial traffic on a slide-rule basis and substitute for it the statement of certain general principles coupled with the provision of ex post facto safeguards.

At the time of the Bermuda Conference neither the United States nor the United Kingdom were alone in advocating the principles for which each had previously stood. On the contrary, the United States had, since the Chicago Conference concluded a series of bilateral agreements based on the unconditional grant of all five freedoms. The United Kingdom for their part had concluded certain bilateral agreements based on the regulatory principles which they had put forward at Chicago, and these principles had been adopted by the partner Governments of the British Commonwealth of Nations at a Conference held in London in January 1945. While the spirit of the compromise which our two countries displayed at Bermuda enabled them to reconcile their conflicting viewpoints in a mutually satisfactory manner, the corollary has unfortunately not followed that the remaining countries of the world have unreservedly associated themselves with the principles and methods which formed the basis of our bilateral agreement at Bermuda.

Indeed, it was clearly recognised at Bermuda that this was unlikely to be the case, and paragraph 8[9?] of the report of the ad hoc Committee recorded the agreement of both parties that the Governments of third countries should "decide for themselves, in the light of their own interests, the extent of the traffic rights which they would be prepared to grant to the civil air carriers of the United Kingdom and the United States". Since Bermuda my Government have felt entitled on more than one occasion, notably in Greece and the Middle East, to suggest to the United States Government that they should not press third countries to conclude bilateral civil aviation agreements on the basis favoured by the United States Government before Bermuda but they have never challenged the freedom of the United States Government to conclude such agreements should third countries themselves propose this course. We should have regarded such action as a breach of the understanding reached in the ad hoc Committee. That this view is shared by the United States Government is apparent from the letter addressed by Mr. Norton to Mr. Masfield on June 27th in which he states that the United States interpretation of this understanding is that "neither of our governments would seek to deter the governments of third countries from concluding bilateral agreements on any basis which these third countries felt was acceptable in the light of their own interests" and that the United States Government "is willing to use the Bermuda arrangement, or pertinent provisions thereof, as a basis for bilateral negotiations whenever desired by other foreign Governments".

Since the Bermuda Conference it has been the policy of His Majesty's Government to propose to those foreign countries with which they have negotiated bilateral civil aviation agreements that these should follow the general lines of the Bermuda Agreement and at the First Interim Assembly of PICA0 the United Kingdom Delegation tabled proposals for Working Principles for the framing of a Multilateral Agreement which are based thereon.

His Majesty's Government did not depart from these principles in the proposals which they submitted to the French and Argentine Governments for the conclusion of the Agreements referred to in paragraph 4 of your letter. In the case of France, the original proposals submitted to the French Government before the Bermuda Conference provided for the equal division of capacity. When the negotiations opened in Paris immediately after the conclusion of the Bermuda Conference the United Kingdom Delegation submitted to the French Delegation fresh proposals based on the Bermuda Agreement. It was only in deference to the clearly expressed wish of the French Government that the principle of the equal division of traffic with metropolitan France (though not with French overseas territories) was incorporated in the Agreement as eventually concluded.

You also referred to Argentina. Here again, it was only on the insistence of the Argentine Government, after lengthy negotiations and faced with the alternative of a breakdown which would have interrupted the operations of British South American Airways that the United Kingdom agreed reluctantly to certain conditions more restrictive than those of Bermuda. Had they not done so they would not have been leaving it to the Argentine Government to "decide for themselves, in the light of their own interests, the extent of the traffic rights which they would be prepared to grant to civil air carriers of the United Kingdom".

His Majesty's Government regret that the Mexican Government should have quoted to United States negotiators the example of the Anglo-Argentine Agreement. They are however not in a position to defer its implementation or ratification. This Agreement has already been approved by Parliament and His Majesty's Government could not justify to public opinion in this country a withdrawal from it at this late stage. They would, however, be prepared to consider approaching Latin American Governments on parallel lines with a view to the conclusion of civil aviation agreements on the Bermuda model. Moreover, they look forward to full discussions in mid-September of all the issues involved which will no doubt establish whether the identity of views between our two Governments will enable us to join the United States Government in a public declaration of the kind which you have proposed.

May I add my personal hope that the forthcoming discussions will rapidly dissipate any misunderstandings and uncertainties which may have grown up around the Bermuda Agreement.

Yours sincerely,

JOHN BALFOUR

711.0027/9-1946: Circular telegram

*The Acting Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Officers*⁶⁷

WASHINGTON, September 19, 1946.

Unless you perceive objection you may bring to attention of Govt to which you are accredited the following press statement released Sept 19:

"The Department of State today released the following text of a joint statement relating to the international air transport policy of the US and Brit Govts. The statement also is being released simultaneously by the Brit Govt:

1. During the visit of United States aviation officials to the exhibition of the Society of British Aircraft Constructors in London between September 11 and 15, 1946, the opportunity was taken to arrange informal discussions with the Minister of Civil Aviation and representatives of the Ministry and the Foreign Office.⁶⁸

2. The discussions centered on developments in the field of international air transport since the conclusion of the United States-United Kingdom Air Transport Agreement at Bermuda on February 11, 1946.

3. Both parties are in accord that experience since the Bermuda agreement has demonstrated that the principles enunciated in that agreement are sound and provide, in their view, a reliable basis for the orderly development and expansion of International Air Transport. They believe that these principles provide the basis for a multilateral international agreement of the type that their representatives at the meeting of the PICAQ Assembly in May advocated as being in the interests of international air transport.

4. Consequently, both parties believe that in negotiating any new bilateral agreements with other countries, they should follow the basic principles agreed at Bermuda, including particularly:

(a) fair and equal opportunity to operate air services on international routes and the creation of machinery to obviate unfair competition by unjustifiable increases of frequencies or capacity;

(b) the elimination of formulæ for the predetermination of frequencies or capacity or of any arbitrary division of air traffic between countries and their national airlines;

⁶⁷ Page 5 to this circular telegram reads: "The attached circular telegram should be transmitted to the following Missions: Ankara, Ascuncion, Athens, Baghdad, Beirut, Bangkok, Bern, Bogota, Brussels, Buenos Aires, Cairo, Canberra, Caracas, Ciudad Trujillo, Copenhagen, Damascus, Dublin, Habana, Helsinki, Jidda, La Paz, Lima, Lisbon, Madrid, Manila, Mexico, D.F., Montevideo, Monrovia, Moscow, Nanking, New Delhi, Ottawa, Oslo, Paris, Port au Prince, Praha, Pretoria, Quito, Reykjavik, Rio de Janeiro, Santiago, San Salvador, Stockholm, Tehran, The Hague, Wellington.

⁶⁸ Informal British minutes of the meetings, held in the British Ministry of Civil Aviation, London, September 12-14, are found in Department of State central indexed files, No. 711.4127/10-1746, not printed.

(c) the adjustment of Fifth Freedom traffic with regard to:

(1) traffic requirements between the country of origin and the countries of destination

(2) the requirements of through airline operation, and

(3) the traffic requirements of the area through which the airline passes after taking account of local and regional services.

5. The representatives of the two countries were united in the belief that until a multilateral agreement should be adopted, the Bermuda type of agreement represents the best form of approach to the problem of interim bilateral agreements.

6. In furtherance of the foregoing principles each government is prepared upon the request of any other government with which it has already concluded a bilateral air transport agreement that is not deemed to be in accordance with those principles, to make such adjustments as may be found to be necessary.

7. Arrangements have been completed for setting up the machinery envisaged in the Bermuda conversations for continuous consultation and exchange of views between the two countries on civil aviation problems. Mr. Laurence Vass has been appointed as representative of the Civil Aeronautics Board with the Ministry of Civil Aviation in London. Mr. Nigel Bicknell has been appointed as representative of the Ministry of Civil Aviation with the Civil Aeronautics Board in Washington.

The United States representatives at the discussions included: Mr. James M. Landis, Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board; Mr. William A. M. Burden, Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Air; Mr. Garrison Norton, Director of the Office of Transport and Communications Policy of the Department of State; Mr. George A. Brownell, Personal Representative of the President to the Middle East and India in connection with air agreements; Mr. Livingston Satterthwaite, Civil Air Attaché of the United States Embassy in London.

The United Kingdom representatives included Lord Winster, Minister for Civil Aviation; Mr. Ivor Thomas, Parliamentary Secretary; Sir Henry Self, Permanent Secretary, and Mr. Peter Masefield, Civil Air Attaché at the British Embassy in Washington."

CLAYTON

THE CONVOCATION OF AN INTERNATIONAL WHALING CONFERENCE AT WASHINGTON, NOVEMBER 20-
DECEMBER 2, 1946; THE ESTABLISHMENT OF AN INTER-NATIONAL WHALING COMMISSION

Editorial Note

On October 1, 1946 the United States issued invitations for an International Whaling Conference to be held in Washington on November 20, 1946. A draft agenda and draft rules of procedure were sent in a circular instruction on October 24, 1946 to U.S. missions accredited to the invited countries. The principal objectives of the conference were to develop a code of regulations for the 1947-48 and subsequent whaling seasons, and to establish an international whaling commission. The delegates drafted an International Convention for the Regulation of Whaling, which was signed by the United States and other nations on December 2, 1946. This provided for the establishment of an International Whaling Commission.

The Convention, the Final Act of the Conference, and the Report of the United States Delegation may be found accompanying President Truman's Message of April 7, 1947 (Senate Executive L, 80th Congress, 1st Session). The Convention was brought into force on November 10, 1948 (62 Stat. (pt. 2) 1716; TIAS 1849).

In addition, a Protocol for the Regulation of Whaling, signed in London on November 26, 1945, was, at the Washington Conference, extended for the 1947-48 whaling season, and entered into force on February 5, 1948. The text of the Protocol may be found printed in Senate Executive K, 80th Congress, 1st Session (TIAS 1708).

Additional documentation, including a complete set of conference documents, may be found in the Department's indexed central files under No. 562.8 Washington.

UNITED STATES POLICY WITH RESPECT TO ANTARCTICA ¹

800.014 Antarctic/11-1546

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of American Republic Affairs (Briggs) ²

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] November 15, 1946.

ISSUE OF CONFLICTING INTERNATIONAL CLAIMS TO ANTARCTICA RAISED BY PROPOSED BYRD EXPEDITION

Since the initial publicity a few days ago on the Navy-Byrd expedition to Antarctica,³ interest therein has been shown by Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand, and Chile, with a strong possibility that we shall shortly hear from further countries. While the immediate requests may be for permission to send foreign observers (which Navy indicates it will oppose), the main issue is of course Who owns What, and if not, what should we do about it. At present the continent is claimed almost in toto by Great Britain, Australia, and New Zealand, with Norway, Chile, Argentina, and France likewise in the running and Russia reportedly preparing to join. Our position thus far has been that we recognize no foreign claims, assert none ourselves, but reserve all our rights (whatever they may be) to assert claims in the future.

Preliminary discussion with Navy indicates agreement regarding the desirability of clarification at an early date, plus doubts whether the area can ever be regarded as habitable.

Beyond our interest in what may be accessible in the land underlying all the ice and snow, we are interested in Antarctic whaling which is apparently about to be resumed on a large scale.

A preliminary meeting to consider the problem of Antarctic claims

¹ For previous documentation regarding Antarctica, see Foreign Relations, 1940, vol. II, pp. 333 ff. See also Green H. Hackworth, Digest of International Law (Washington: Government Printing Office, 1940), vol. I, pp. 449-465.

² This memorandum was circulated to Under Secretary of State Dean Acheson, the Assistant Secretary of State for American Republic Affairs Spruille Braden, the Deputy Director of the Office of European Affairs John Hickerson, and the Acting Chief of the Division of Special Inter-American Affairs John C. Dreier.

³ At a news conference on November 12, Rear Adm. Richard E. Byrd and Vice Adm. Forrest P. Sherman, Deputy Chief of Naval Operations, announced that Admiral Byrd would be in charge of a forthcoming American expedition to Antarctica.

is scheduled to be held in the Department on November 19 with Navy participation. Among the alternatives discussed informally are:

1) For the United States to suggest a conference among the claimants with a view to dividing up the area among them. I should anticipate that the prospect of reaching such an agreement would be meager if not microscopic, and also that many nations not included would demand their "fair share".

2) For the United States forthwith to set about establishing our own claims on the basis of discovery, land spied from airplanes, the Little America activities, et cetera. The off-the-cuff view seems to be that we could probably make about as good a case as the British Empire claims, although possibly not one which they would readily accept.

3) For us to suggest that Antarctica be placed under the administration of United Nations, for the benefit of humanity, Antarctic terns, penguins, et cetera, with appropriate obeisance to the principles set forth in the United Nations charter.

4) To approach the third alternative above as an objective, via the maneuver of certain maximum United States claims and in the expectation of so confusing and complicating the issue that eventually the United Nations proposal would appear to be the only solution likely to preserve the sanity of the litigants.

ELLIS O. BRIGGS

800.014 Antarctic/9-2446

The Secretary of State to the British Ambassador (Inverchapel)

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to His Excellency the British Ambassador and has the honor to refer to his note No. 531 of September 24, 1946 regarding hutments at Marguerite Bay occupied by the United States expedition to Antarctica of 1941.⁴

Since it is assumed that the United States expedition referred to is the United States Antarctic Service Expedition of 1939-1941, the contents of the Embassy's note have been communicated to the Departments of the United States Government which sponsored that expedition. The Department is informed⁵ that it was the intention that

⁴ The British Ambassador's note under reference read in part as follows:

"Ships of the Falkland Islands Dependencies Survey recently visiting British Antarctic territory between the meridians of longitude 20 degrees west and 80 degrees west of Greenwich inspected the hutments at Marguerite Bay occupied by the United States expedition to Antarctica which left by air in 1941 and found the site in considerable disorder. As the United States Government may already be aware, an Argentine naval vessel, the 'Primero de Mayo', called at Marguerite Bay in 1943. In accordance with explicit instructions left by the United States expedition, the Falkland Islands Dependencies Survey recovered all the salvageable equipment of value, and this and the personal effects of the expedition are now being sorted and prepared for return to the United States at the first opportunity in the next Antarctic summer. British personnel are now in occupation on this site." (800.014 Antarctic/9-2446) buildings and supplies of coal, gasoline, food and other equipment left at the Marguerite Bay site, named "East Base" by the United States Antarctic Service Expedition, should remain there for possible future use by any United States scientific expedition basing in that area. The "explicit instructions" referred to in the Embassy's note were intended by the party of the United States Antarctic Service Expedition which evacuated East Base in 1941 to apply only to the salvage of personal belongings and not to United States government property.

⁵ Letter of October 28, from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, John L. Sullivan, to the Secretary of State, not printed.

The Department is informed that the foregoing has been reviewed by and is concurred in by Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd, USN (Retired), as head of the United States Antarctic Service Expedition.

The Department is also informed of a forthcoming expedition by a non-profit scientific organization, the American Antarctic Society, Incorporated. It is understood that this expedition expects to occupy the East Base site and, with permission of the United States departments concerned, utilize the buildings and equipment. Commander Finn Ronne, USNR, who will head the American Antarctic Society, Incorporated, expedition, was second-in-command at East Base during its occupation in 1939 to 1941. It would be preferred, therefore, that hutments, equipment and stores other than personal belongings left by the East Base component of the United States Antarctic Service Expedition at the Marguerite Bay site remain there for future utilization. The offer of the Falkland Islands Dependencies Survey to return the salvageable equipment to the United States is greatly appreciated, but for the reasons given cannot be accepted.

WASHINGTON, November 18, 1946.

800.014 Antarctic/11-2046 : Telegram

The Acting Secretary of State to the Ambassador in Chile (Bowers)

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, November 22, 1946—7 p. m.

559. Reur 1003 and 1016.⁶ Official position this Govt re Antarctic claims is that US has never officially asserted territorial claims in Antarctic and, on other hand, has never recognized any claims asserted

⁶ Neither printed. Telegram 1003, November 15, from Santiago, reported that the Chilean newspapers had given prominence to an alleged statement by Admiral Byrd to the effect that the United States did not recognize territorial claims in Antarctica. As a result of Admiral Byrd's alleged statement, an extraordinary meeting of the Chilean Army, Navy and Aviation general staff was convened at which agreement was reportedly reached to undertake a joint expedition with Argentina in order to establish Chile's claims over territory in Antarctica (800.014 Antarctic/11-1546). Telegram 1016, November 20, from Santiago, reported that the Chilean Foreign Office was resisting pressure to issue a public statement regarding a joint Chile-Argentine Antarctic expedition (800.014/Antarctic/11-2046).

by other countries. (See Secret Policy Statement on Polar Regions⁷ which Emb received Sept 28).

This policy was conveyed orally to Chargé, Chilean Emb,⁸ few days ago; and in your discretion you may reiterate same to appropriate Chilean authorities.

Two US Antarctic expeditions are contemplated: (1) Naval task force exercise concerned with techniques for operations that climate under direct command Capt R. H. Cruzen; assisting is Admiral Byrd as Officer in Charge of Project; and (2) small, private and purely scientific expedition led by Commander Finn Ronne, USNR, sponsored by American Antarctic Association; this expedition to base in western Palmer Land and to explore inland.

Dept has informed Chilean Emb by memorandum that this Govt has no objections presence Chilean scientist on Ronne expedition, provided Ronne satisfied qualifications nominee and provided Chile de-frays added costs.

Dept also informally advised Emb that Navy not considering accepting any foreign observers on task force expedition.

ACHESON

800.014 Antarctic/12-946: Airgram

The Ambassador in Argentina (Messersmith) to the Secretary of State

BUENOS AIRES, December 9, 1946.

[Received December 16—8: 58 a. m.]

A-1164. In press conference Friday Foreign Minister⁹ made various declarations with reference to Argentine rights in Antarctic of which following is résumé from La Prensa.¹⁰

⁷ The Department's Policy and Information Statement on the Polar Regions, undated, which is under reference here, reviewed United States policy in both the Arctic and the Antarctic. With regard to the Antarctic, it read in part as follows:

"It may be stated that the United States policy up to 1939 was primarily one of refusal to recognize the claims asserted by other Governments and to emphasize the absence of acts of occupation or use of the territory which was considered necessary for the perfecting of a valid claim. The United States Antarctic Service Expedition of 1939-1941 was the beginning of what was planned to be a more positive policy of establishing and perfecting United States claims on the continent. The execution of this policy was interrupted by the war and has, therefore, been held in abeyance pending an appropriate occasion for further steps. A post-war policy on the Antarctic territorial question has not as yet been formulated."

The Department's Policy and Information Statements were concise documents summarizing the current United States policy toward a country or region, the relations of that country or region with the principal powers, and the issues and trends in that country or region. These Statements, which were begun in the spring of 1946, were generally prepared by ad hoc working groups in the responsible geographic offices and were referred to appropriate diplomatic posts abroad for comment and criticism. The Statements were periodically revised.

⁸ Mario Rodriguez.

⁹ Juan Atilio Bramuglia.

¹⁰ A leading Buenos Aires newspaper.

He said discovery and explorations of last decade in Antarctic continent have shown advantages which legitimate possession would give those states which advance claims over that region. He stated Argentina has given special attention since beginning of century to all questions dealing with Antarctic. He mentioned the uninterrupted occupation of Orkneys since that time, claims arising from geographical vicinity, legitimate aspirations over "sector" which might be called Argentine, and in addition he referred to numerous governmental acts and diplomatic documents by which sovereignty has been continuously and peacefully strengthened. He stated then that expedition which will leave within next few days for purpose of scientific studies constitutes a new proof of the interest with which Argentine Navy is attempting to amplify knowledge with reference Antarctic. Other countries, among them Chile and United States, have announced similar expeditions and it is expected that an interchange of Navy officials will be conducted with Chile, as when the Argentine transport "Primero de Mayo" made its Antarctic trip in 1943. He stated that "our aspirations as those of Chile are that there may be a friendly delimitation of the jurisdictions of both countries in the Antarctic."¹¹

Finally, Minister said Foreign Office has firmly maintained Argentine rights, based on unquestionable claims. It has conducted an open-door policy which does not exclude just claims which other American states have advanced in the Antarctic and it has cooperated by means of its meteorological stations with ships of all flags which periodically ply the southern waters. Such facts, which certainly do not weaken the Argentine thesis, indicate Government's attitude with reference to the strengthening of its sovereignty over those Antarctic territories which form part of the National patrimony. The friendly relations which unite Argentina with those nations (which have also advanced claims to Antarctic) will make possible a proper contact for the purpose of arriving at a solution satisfactory to all, through an examination of the claims of each one, whether it be by means of direct negotiations or in an International Antarctic Conference.

MESSERSMITH

¹¹ According to telegram 2489, December 6, from Buenos Aires, not printed, press reports indicated that Chile would be invited to join the Argentine Antarctic expedition scheduled to leave December 10 (800.014 Antarctic/12-646).

S00.014 Antarctic/12-1446

*The Acting Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Navy
(Forrestal)*

WASHINGTON, December 14, 1946.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: At a meeting attended by State and Navy Department representatives on November 25, 1946 there was discussed the U. S. Naval Antarctic Developments Project 1947 and questions of United States policy arising therefrom, particularly as regards possible future assertion of United States territorial claims.

I am in complete agreement with the views expressed at the meeting on November 25, 1946 that this Government should follow a definite policy of exploration and use of those Antarctic areas considered desirable for acquisition by the United States, including those Antarctic areas to which we already have a reasonable basis for claim to inchoate title by virtue of prior discovery and use, in order that we may be in a position to advance territorial claims to those areas at such time or times as it appears we have sufficient basis of sustained interest and use to substantiate those claims under international law.

The United States has not recognized any claims of sovereignty over territory in the Antarctic regions asserted by any foreign state. In its replies to official notifications from foreign governments asserting such claims this Government has on each occasion reserved all rights which the United States or its nationals might have in the particular areas concerned. Therefore, in the view of this Department vessels, aircraft or personnel of the U. S. Naval Antarctic Developments Project 1947 are not precluded by prior territorial rights or claims of other states from entering and engaging in lawful activity in any of those areas or from making symbolic claims thereto or to newly discovered territory on behalf of the United States.

In order that the maximum advantage in this regard may be gained for the United States from the activities of the Naval Antarctic Developments Project, I suggest that you authorize the expedition to take appropriate steps, such as depositing written claims in cairns, dropping from airplanes containers enclosing such written claims, etc., which might assist in supporting a claim of sovereignty by the United States Government and that you give instructions to the officers in charge of the expedition to keep a careful record of the circumstances surrounding each such act. I suggest that no public announcement with respect to these activities should be made without prior specific authorization in each case from you after clearance with the Department of State. It is suggested that the written claims to be deposited should be expressed substantially in the following form:

U.S. NAVAL ANTARCTIC DEVELOPMENTS PROJECT, 1947

I, _____ (name) _____ (rank), a member of the United States Naval Antarctic Developments Project, 1947, operating by direction of the President of the United States of America and pursuant to instructions of the Secretary of the Navy, being engaged in the discovery, investigation, and survey of land and sea areas of the Antarctic regions and being in command of a party carrying out the aforesaid instructions,

Hereby declare that we have discovered and investigated the following land and sea areas:

(Here describe briefly what the party has done, means of transportation, course taken, and inclusive dates.)

And I hereby claim this territory in the name of the United States of America and in support of this claim I have displayed the flag of the United States thereon and have deposited this record thereof under the following circumstances:

(Here indicate where and how deposited, or dropped from airplane at approximately _____ South Latitude, and _____ Longitude _____ of Greenwich on this _____ day of _____, 1947.)

Signed: _____

Witnesses:

It is, of course, essential that a verbatim copy be retained by the person depositing the record and it is desirable that the copy be transmitted as promptly as possible to Washington for deposit with the Department of State.

Sincerely yours,

DEAN ACHESON

800.014 Antarctic/12-1846: Telegram

The Ambassador in Chile (Bowers) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL

SANTIAGO, December 18, 1946—2 p. m.

[Received 4:03 p. m.]

1098. Monday¹² afternoon at interview requested by Foreign Minister,¹³ he handed me a confidential memorandum on Antarctic

¹² December 16

¹³ Raul Juliet Gomez.

question which is being forwarded to Dept by despatch.¹⁴ Summary of memo is as follows:

Chilean Government decree 1747 of November 6, 1940, established boundaries of Chilean Antarctic territory. In view of Argentine observations in this regard, representatives of Chile and Argentina met in Santiago March, 1941, to discuss common boundary of their Antarctic territories. No definitive agreement was reached during these conversations, and it was decided that conversations would continue at a later date in Buenos Aires. Owing to war and political conditions in Argentina, it was not possible to renew them. Almost six years have elapsed without conversations taking place. After removal of aforementioned obstacles, Argentina has now expressed desire to continue negotiations and Chilean Government is agreeable to this suggestion. It is hoped that conversations will be renewed in near future in Buenos Aires. In 1943, Argentine vessel Primero de Mayo visited Antarctic region and three Chilean Naval officers participated in this expedition at request of Argentine Government. As a matter of reciprocity Chile offered to invite three Argentine officers to participate in next Chilean expedition to Polar region. Owing to necessity of utilizing all its naval vessels to patrol extensive coasts during war, it has not been possible to send a Chilean Antarctic expedition up to present. Chile has now, however, decided to send a frigate to Polar region next February, and in conformance with agreement with Argentina, has invited 3 Argentine Naval officers to participate in expedition.

BOWERS

800.014 Antarctic/12-2346: Telegram

The Minister in New Zealand (Warren) to the Secretary of State

SECRET

WELLINGTON, December 23, 1946—5 p. m.

[Received December 23—6:10 p. m.]

616. McIntosh,¹⁵ under instructions of Prime Minister,¹⁶ called me to his office this afternoon, handed me a tentative draft note (which is being forwarded by following telegram)¹⁷ and requested my comment. At same time I was shown a more lengthy proposed press release on generally similar lines. I pointed out to McIntosh that New Zealand Government was familiar with American position in regard to Antarctic claims (which he had correctly stated in conversation), that I

¹⁴ The Chilean Foreign Office memorandum under reference was transmitted to the Department as an enclosure to despatch 14,744, December 20, from Santiago, neither printed.

¹⁵ A. D. McIntosh, Director of the Office of the New Zealand Prime Minister.

¹⁶ Peter Fraser.

¹⁷ Telegram 617, December 23, from Wellington, not printed (800.014 Antarctic/12-2346). The draft note under reference here was cancelled. For the final text of the note, forwarded to the Legation on December 24, see infra.

was without information which would substantiate correctness of some statements in note and press release (referring to operations in the Ross Dependency), and that I could see no useful purpose in New Zealand opening a public debate with the US at this time regarding the present American expedition.

McIntosh referred to recent and sustained clamor in New Zealand press (reLegtel 608, December 16, 2 p. m.)^{17a} for positive assertion of New Zealand Antarctic claims and stated that Prime Minister feels it necessary to take some cognizance of press reports that Admiral Byrd proposes to operate the Navy task force from a base in the Ross Sea.

McIntosh undertook to refer both note and press release to the Prime Minister and to notify me later today if the note is to be canceled or modified. In any event, he expected issuance of modified press release in which New Zealand claims will be implied.¹⁸

WARREN

Wellington Legation Files : 801.4

*The New Zealand Department of External Affairs to the Legation in New Zealand*¹⁹

The New Zealand Government understand from a United States Navy Press and Radio Release of 12 November, 1946, and from various newspaper reports, that a United States Navy Task Force will, early in 1947, establish a base in and operate aircraft over that portion of the Antarctic known as the Ross Dependency, territory which is under New Zealand jurisdiction and administration.

The New Zealand Government would normally have expected a formal request for permission to land on and fly over the Dependency but since they have no desire to place any obstacles in the way of the exercises proposed by the United States Navy Department they do not under the circumstances of this expedition desire to raise the question of this formality. The purpose of this note is to inform the United States Government that every possible assistance will be offered by New Zealand with a view to facilitating the plans of the Task Force.

WELLINGTON, 20 December, 1946.

^{17a} Not printed.

¹⁸ Prime Minister Fraser's statement on Antarctica, which was issued to the press on December 28, was transmitted in telegram 624, December 29, from Wellington, not printed.

¹⁹ Telegram 619, December 24, from Wellington, not printed, reported that Prime Minister Fraser had cancelled an earlier draft note (see telegram 616 from Wellington, supra) and had forwarded this text to the Legation in its stead (800.014 Antarctic/12-2446). This final text was transmitted to the Department of State in telegram 620, December 24, from Wellington, not printed (811.31/12-2446).

800.014 Antarctic/12-2746

The Counselor of the British Embassy (Hadow) to the Chief of the Division of Northern European Affairs (Cumming)

URGENT WASHINGTON, 27 December, 1946.

DEAR CUMMING: Confirmation has lately been received in London that the Byrd expedition buildings mentioned in our letter of the 17th December to Wailes²⁰ were still standing; but the report says nothing of their state of repair. The American geological specimens, medical equipment, books, etc. have been packed for despatch by "Trepassey" on her next visit unless otherwise instructed.²¹ Two thousand nine hundred gallons of aviation petrol left by United States expedition has been found beside dumps near a house on a glacier, which have not been checked.

2. We are further instructed to request you kindly to inform Commander Ronne that:—

(a) for practical reasons of which he is believed to be aware he could not support his proposed party at Marguerite Bay without serious detriment to the operation of our party.

(b) nevertheless His Majesty's Government would welcome a visit by him to Marguerite Bay if he considers it essential to see the position for himself.

(c) if he is prepared to leave a very small party of say four or five men to spend the Antarctic winter and work jointly with the British party of ten, H.M.G. would be glad to consider whether this can be arranged on hearing what sort of specialists he would like to leave and what work he has in mind for them.

3. Beyond this, as Commander Ronne will himself best realise, it is difficult to go without serious physical risk to both parties involved.

4. As the Ronne expedition is understood shortly to be leaving for the Antarctic we should be grateful for urgent transmission of this message and of Commander Ronne's decision; in order that we may communicate the latter to London.

5. With the inaccuracies of the "New York Times" article of 23rd December, it seems unnecessary to concern ourselves, as the more serious misstatements are understood to lack official confirmation or backing.

Yours sincerely,

R. H. HADOW

²⁰ The letter under reference to Edward T. Wailes, Chief of the Division of British Commonwealth Affairs, is not printed.

²¹ In a letter of January 3, 1947, to Hadow, not printed, Cumming wrote in part as follows:

"Commander Ronne has asked that I repeat to you his request, made orally to members of the Embassy on December 27, that the American geological specimens, medical equipment, books, etc. which your letter mentioned as having been packed for despatch by Trepassey be left at the site for the use of his expedition." (800.014 Antarctic/12-2746)

800.014 Antarctic/12-3046

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Chief of the Division of Northern European Affairs (Cumming)

[WASHINGTON,] December 30, 1946.

Mr. Lacoste²² came in to see me today by appointment made at his request and inquired, under instructions from his Government, whether it was correct that the Government of the United States did not recognize any territorial claims in the Antarctic. I replied in the affirmative and added that although claims on behalf of the United States Government had been made by a number of American citizens and by official government expeditions, the United States Government had not formalized any of those claims; that, on the other hand, the United States Government had not recognized the claims of any other government but had reserved any rights it might have with respect to the Antarctic Continent.

Mr. Lacoste then said that he had expected this answer and had been instructed to leave the attached aide-mémoire.²³ He went on to say that he was under no instructions to make any protest or enter into any further discussion of the matter at this time.

In the belief that French Foreign Office archives may have been dispersed or in part lost during the period of the German occupation of France, I read to Mr. Lacoste the text of the note which the American Embassy in Paris had been instructed to deliver to the French Foreign Office in January 1939 (File 741.5127/3),²⁴ and the note which was delivered to the Foreign Office by the American Embassy in Paris on May 26, 1939 (See Paris Embassy's despatch No. 4424, May 26, 1939).²⁵ Mr. Lacoste was interested and asked me if I would be good enough to send him copies of these notes. I said that I would be glad to do so.

HUGH S. CUMMING, JP.

²² Francis Lacoste, French Minister.

²³ Infra.

²⁴ For text of note under reference, see telegram 13, January 6, 1939, to London, Foreign Relations, 1939, vol. II, p. 1.

²⁵ Despatch 4424, May 26, 1939, from Paris, is not printed, but for text of note under reference, see Instruction 1487, May 16, 1939, to Paris, ibid., p. 5.

800.014 Antarctic/12-3046

The French Embassy to the Department of State

[Translation]

WASHINGTON, December 30, 1946.

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

Adélie Land was duly annexed by Dumont d'Urville during his expedition to Antarctica in 1840. The official report of the taking of possession was prepared by Dumont d'Urville on February 19, 1840, aboard the Astrolabe, which was at that time lying in the roads at Hobart, Tasmania.

This discovery was the subject of an article published in the Sydney Herald of March 13, 1840.

On March 27, 1924, a decree of the French Government reserved to French citizens the right to mine, hunt, and fish in these territories.

On April 2, 1924, the Journal Officiel published a decision of the Ministry of the Navy placing Adélie Land under the supervision of the French Navy in the Pacific.

On November 21, 1924, another decree placed Adélie Land and other Antarctic islands and archipelagoes under the jurisdiction of the General Government of Madagascar.

Dumont d'Urville's maps gave Adélie Land the following limits: 136°–142° East Greenwich

These limits, which were the subject of various communications between the French and British Governments, are at present the very same limits set by Dumont d'Urville.

As for the limit in depth, an Order in Council of the British Government dated February 7, 1933 having stipulated that "all territories south of the 60th parallel and situated between the 45th and the 160th meridians are under British sovereignty, except Adélie Land", the French Government specified, in a decree of April 1, 1938, that France's possession in Antarctica extends south of the 60th parallel to the South Pole.

An exchange of notes on October 25, 1938, between the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the British Embassy in Paris, also acting in behalf of the Australian and New Zealand Governments, granted British, Australian, and New Zealand aircraft, subject to reciprocity, the right to fly over Adélie Land.

THE EFFECTS OF...

The first part of the study...

The second part of the study...

The third part of the study...

The fourth part of the study...

The fifth part of the study...

The sixth part of the study...

The seventh part of the study...

The eighth part of the study...

The ninth part of the study...

The tenth part of the study...

The results of the study...

The conclusions of the study...

The implications of the study...

The limitations of the study...

The future research...

INDEX

INDEX

Acheson, Dean G.:

- Antarctica, 1492*n*, 1494-1495, 1497-1498
- Armaments, regulation of, 728-730, 734, 736*n*, 737-738, 749*n*, 764, 768, 770-771, 770*n*, 773, 780-781, 780*n*, 781*n*, 783, 785-787, 789, 802, 802*n*, 804-806, 811-816, 818-820, 818*n*, 824-826, 836-837, 836*n*, 858-860, 875, 875*n*, 894, 896, 928, 934, 952-953, 960-961, 962*n*, 966-969, 978*n*, 980-989, 991, 996-1005, 1007, 1009-1010, 1019, 1021, 1032-1033, 1042, 1046-1050, 1047*n*, 1054, 1056-1057, 1060, 1067, 1068*n*, 1069*n*, 1073-1074, 1076, 1104
- Atomic energy, 1211-1213, 1213*n*, 1227, 1229, 1232*n*, 1237-1238, 1240, 1242-1247, 1242*n*, 1253-1254, 1256-1257
- Bretton Woods institutions, 1384-1385, 1384*n*
- Civil aviation, international, 1451-1452, 1457, 1461, 1465, 1469, 1475, 1481-1486, 1488
- Economic and commercial policy, foreign, 1267-1271, 1275-1277, 1306, 1318-1326, 1341-1344, 1349, 1352, 1354-1357, 1354*n*, 1379-1380, 1380*n*
- Foreign financial program, 1395, 1409
- National security policy, 1118, 1118*n*, 1141-1142, 1185, 1187-1188
- Relief activities, international, 1447
- Trusteeship, international, 551-552, 551*n*, 553*n*, 561, 566, 566*n*, 569, 569*n*, 572, 574-579, 586*n*, 591-593, 594*n*, 595-601, 598*n*, 610*n*, 616-617, 645-646, 662*n*, 668, 671*n*, 674-675, 677-678, 695-696, 701, 709-710
- United Nations, organization and procedure, U.S. position on: Elections, 152, 188, 188*n*, 209-212, 210*n*, 229-230, 232, 238, 241, 243, 247*n*, 248; expenses, apportionment of, 461, 461*n*, 463, 476*n*, 479-481, 486-488, 495*n*; membership, early admission, 381-385, 395-400, 402-403, 406-414, 422-424, 428-432, 436-437, 440, 456-457; voting procedure in the Security Council, 281, 297*n*, 313

Acheson, Dean G.—Continued

- United Nations, U.S. relations with: Arrangements for, 4, 21-22, 33, 34*n*, 46*n*, 49-50; general U.S. policy toward, 53-54, 58*n*, 60*n*, 65, 81-85, 84*n*, 91, 93-94, 104*n*, 107, 110-113, 111*n*, 112*n*
- World food shortage, 1140-1441, 1444*n*
- Adams, J. Wesley, Jr., 371-372, 371*n*, 374, 387
- Admiralty Islands (see also Manus Island), joint U.S.-Australian military rights in certain facilities in the, 613-614, 613*n*, 614*n*, 617, 621*n*, 622
- Afghanistan (see also under U.N.: Membership: States considered), 490, 494, 496, 1157, 1168, 1368
- Afi, Hafaz, 379, 379*n*
- African Metals Corporation, 1237
- Aghnides, Thanassis, 362-363
- Aitutaki Island, 1115, 1144, 1180
- Albania: 1150, 1393
 - Admission to the United Nations. See under U.N.: Membership: States considered.
 - Soviet influence and activity in, 362
 - United States, relations with, 362, 367-369, 454-455
- Alberto da Motta e Silva, Capt. Alvares, 867, 867*n*, 884
- Alexandrov, S. P., 964, 964*n*, 981-982, 986, 1003, 1021-1025, 1083, 1097
- Algeria, 1144, 1181
- American Antarctic Society, Incorporated, 1494-1495
- American Bar Association, 58
- American Federation of Labor, 503*n*, 506, 519, 522
- American Republics, 120, 123, 134-135, 140, 142, 144-146, 152, 154-156, 164, 169-170, 186-187, 191-194, 197-198, 200-201, 204, 206-208, 210-212, 214, 217, 219, 221, 223*n*, 224, 225*n*, 236, 240, 242, 246, 250, 291, 466, 473, 525, 534, 670, 731, 842-843, 1057, 1125, 1127, 1134-1135, 1140, 1161, 1164, 1367*n*
- Air transit, rights, U.S. military, 1142
- Base rights, U.S., 1114, 1117, 1177
- Export-Import Bank, question of loans to, 1393, 1394*n*, 1396, 1412*n*, 1420, 1422, 1429
- Military assistance to, question of U.S., 841, 1141, 1148, 1152, 1152*n*, 1165, 1187-1188, 1190, 1192

- American Samoa, 695-696; U.S. offer to Australia of joint base rights in, 709
- American Society of International Law, 52, 58, 58*n*
- Americans United for World Organization, 56*n*
- Aminoff, Alexis De, 420
- Anderson, Clinton P., 1441, 1441*n*, 1444
- Anderson, Sir John, 1205, 1205*n*, 1208, 1232, 1232*n*, 1234, 1235*n*, 1236, 1251
- Anderson, Maj. Gen. Samuel E., 873, 873*n*, 876
- Antarctica:
- Byrd expedition to, 1492, 1492*n*, 1495, 1497, 1500
- Claims to and interest in: Argentina, 1492, 1494, 1495, 1496, 1499; Australia, 1492; Chile, 1492, 1494*n*, 1495, 1496, 1498-1499; France, 1492, 1502-1503; New Zealand, 1492, 1499-1500; Norway, 1492; United Kingdom, 1492-1493, 1493*n*, 1501
- U.S. policy with regard to, 1492-1503
- Appleby, Paul H., 461*n*, 462-467, 462*n*, 463*n*, 464*n*, 476, 494
- Arab League, 121, 133-134, 138, 191, 193-194, 200, 242, 291, 416
- Arab states, 201, 216, 216*n*, 219-220, 224-225, 234, 236, 242, 245, 250, 412, 415-416, 556, 654, 666, 670, 1059
- Arce, José, 48
- Argentina field (Newfoundland), 1458, 1467
- Argentina, 15, 18, 169, 171-172, 186-187, 198, 205*n*, 207, 214, 223, 223*n*, 246, 340*m*, 353, 490, 493, 519, 841, 1332, 1442-1443, 1444*n*, 1492, 1494*n*, 1495-1496, 1499
- Arneson, Capt. R. Gordon, 868-881, 881*n*, 885, 885*n*, 906, 937-944, 937*n*, 939*n*, 944*n*, 1232, 1232*n*
- Arnold, General of the Army Henry H., 844, 844*n*
- Aruba, 1172, 1175, 1177
- Ascension Island, 1116, 1175, 1177, 1180
- Asmara, 1182
- Atkinson Field (British Guiana), 1458, 1464
- Atlantic Charter (1941), 637, 1366
- Atomic energy. See under United States and under United Nations.
- Attlee, Clement R., 151, 597, 602, 629, 726*n*, 735, 736*n*, 739, 741, 745, 839, 844, 887, 920, 976, 1205, 1205*n*, 1218, 1220, 1230-1232, 1232*n*, 1234*n*, 1235, 1244, 1249-1253, 1259, 1259*n*, 1439-1440, 1443*n*, 1444*n*, 1445, 1465, 1465*n*
- Auger, Pierre, 934, 934*n*, 1034
- Austin, Warren R.:
- Armaments, regulation of, 771-773, 771*n*, 779-780, 780*n*, 799, 952*n*, 954, 969-971, 973-975, 973*n*, 975*n*, 977-978, 978*n*, 980-984, 980*n*, 983*n*
- Austin, Warren R.—Continued
- Armaments, regulation of—Continued
- 988-990, 992-993, 1000, 1005-1007, 1012-1015, 1021, 1025-1033, 1040-1043, 1046, 1050, 1053-1054, 1053*n*, 1054*n*, 1067-1068, 1069*n*, 1074-1077, 1080-1081, 1083, 1091*n*, 1099, 1107-1108
- International law, 531-533, 535-536, 542-543, 542*n*
- Relief activities, international, 1447-1448
- Statements and addresses: Address, June 26, cited, 52; statement in the U.N. General Assembly regarding voting in the Security Council, Oct. 30, 317*n*, 330; press release, Nov. 1, regarding U.N. site, 106*n*; press statements, Dec. 2, regarding Presidio of San Francisco, 111*n*; statement to U.N. Permanent Headquarters Committee, Dec. 6, 113*n*, Dec. 12, 115*n*
- Trusteeship, international, 653-654, 657-660, 658*n*, 662-663, 670, 674, 677, 684, 690, 696, 704
- United Nations, organization and procedure, U.S. position on: Elections, 215, 218, 220, 223*n*, 226-233, 228*n*, 235-238, 235*n*, 237*n*, 241, 243-248, 247*n*, 250; expenses, apportionment of, 470-477, 479-486, 491*n*, 496-499; membership, early admission, 452-453; specialized agencies, invitation to, 507-510; voting procedure in the Security Council, 290*n*, 293-296, 293*n*, 312-317, 317*n*, 319, 329-330, 335, 338-340, 356
- United Nations, U.S. relations with: Arrangements for, 33-37, 34*n*, 37*n*, 42-50, 46*n*, 48*n*, 49*n*; general U.S. policy toward, 101, 105-108, 110-113, 111*n*, 112*n*, 115*n*
- Australia, 66*n*, 119, 123, 125, 136-139, 144, 155-158, 174-175, 178, 180, 190-191, 199-201, 205*n*, 207, 269, 284-286, 289, 292-293, 292*n*, 298, 306, 320, 340*n*, 343, 355, 386-387, 395, 435, 442, 444, 447-450, 452-454, 465*n*, 493, 560*n*, 562, 574, 591, 603, 610, 629*n*, 663, 704, 922, 965, 1116, 1155, 1261*n*, 1268*n*, 1275, 1285, 1291, 1348*n*, 1361-1364, 1368, 1442, 1454-1455, 1492
- Draft trusteeship agreements. See under U.N.: Trusteeship system: Trusteeship agreements for non-strategic areas.
- Joint U.S.-Australian military facilities. See Admiralty Islands, American Samoa, Canton, Guam, and Manus.

- Austria: 291, 372, 399, 960, 972, 1130, 1150, 1441, 1455
 Allied Control Council, 1130
 Allied occupation forces in, 962, 1012, 1130, 1130n
 U.N. membership. See under U.N.: Membership: States considered.
- Aviation. See International civil aviation.
- Azores, U.S. bases in, 1116, 1155, 1172-1173, 1175-1176, 1182
- Bacher, Robert F., 871
- Bahama Islands, 1180
- Bailey, Kenneth H., 705n
- Baillie, Hugh, 979, 979n
- Bajpai, Sir Girga, 216n, 1445
- Baker, George P., 1452-1453, 1452n, 1456, 1459-1469, 1472-1479
- Balance of payments, U.S., 1945-1946, 1437-1438
- Balfour, John, 561, 564, 711, 1486-1488
- Ballentine, Rear Adm. J. J., 843, 843n
- Bancroft, Harding F., 15, 19, 26, 251, 251n, 258n, 260-262, 261n, 262n, 277, 280, 298n, 370, 370n, 685, 685n, 689
- Barkley, Alben, 1435
- Barnard, Chester I., 737, 737n, 761, 795
- Bartlett, Frederic P., 692-693
- Baruch, Bernard M.:
 Armaments, regulation, 757-758, 758n, 767-768, 767n, 774-775, 777, 785-789, 790n, 802-806, 802n, 811-816, 812n, 817n, 818-819, 818n, 824n, 826, 827n, 836, 838-840, 838n, 843-845, 851, 852n, 853, 856-858, 859n, 860, 869-871, 881-889, 897-898, 903-910, 916, 916n, 919-929, 919n, 932-933, 936-941, 943-944, 944n, 946, 955, 963-964, 966, 969-971, 976, 981-984, 983n, 986-988, 990, 992-993, 995, 1000, 1004-1005, 1010, 1016, 1019, 1021, 1025-1030, 1054, 1081-1083, 1083n, 1089-1094, 1106
 Atomic energy, 1238, 1242, 1249
 International law, 543, 543n
 United Nations, U.S. position on voting procedure in the Security Council, 294-295, 294n
- Bateman, George C., 1227, 1231, 1254-1256
- Bathurst, M. E., 529-530, 536
- Baudet, Philippe, 437n
- Baydur, Huseyin Ragip, 235-237, 235n, 237n, 1031, 1031n, 1084
- Beane Field (St. Lucia), 1457
- Bechoefer, Bernhard G., 293, 312, 329, 329n, 331, 331n, 335
- Beckett, William E., 186, 530
- Belgian Congo, 821, 1285; uranium resources in, 1233-1234, 1234n, 1237-1238, 1240-1242, 1247, 1254-1255; U.S. consular staff in, recommendation for augmenting, 1258
- Belgium, 121, 123, 134, 136-139, 146-147, 149-151, 153-158, 169, 189-191, 194, 198, 200-202, 214, 216n, 217-223, 225n, 226, 249, 249n, 472, 493, 520, 554, 556-557, 557n, 560n, 566n, 590, 593, 595, 601-602, 618, 629, 629n, 644, 652, 685, 690, 694n, 821, 929, 1149, 1154, 1156, 1261n, 1268n, 1275, 1312, 1323, 1347, 1356, 1361-1362, 1386-1387, 1393, 1396, 1396n, 1401, 1403-1404, 1407, 1409n, 1410, 1412, 1412n, 1416, 1429, 1435, 1454
- Bell, C. Jasper, 695-696, 695n
- Benton, William, 569, 569n, 1118, 1118n, 1120-1121, 1141, 1185
- Berendsen, Sir Carl, 609-611, 610n, 616, 631n
- Bermuda Conference. See International civil aviation, etc.
- "Bermuda Principles," 1482n
- Bevin, Ernest, 161, 163, 167, 169, 174, 180, 183-184, 341-343, 345-347, 350-352, 355, 403, 403n, 407-408, 477, 502, 553, 553n, 561, 633, 681n, 708-704, 721n, 735, 736n, 894-896, 953, 961-963, 961n, 962n, 966-969, 969n, 972, 976, 978-979, 1014, 1031, 1039-1042, 1039n, 1044-1045, 1053, 1060, 1102, 1380, 1380n, 1465, 1465n
- Bhakdi, Luang Dithakar, 438-440, 438n
- Biak, 1117, 1175, 1177, 1182
- Bicknell, Nigel, 1490
- Biddle, Francis, 539, 539n
- Bigg, W. J., 1463-1464, 1473
- Blaisdell, Donald C., 9n, 10n, 253, 253n, 754n, 755n, 769-775, 783n, 858, 903, 949-951, 994, 1032
- Blanco, Juan Carlos, 48, 213, 223n
- Blandy, Vice Adm. William H. P., 1203-1204, 1203n
- Bloom, Sol, 2n, 4-5, 34, 34n, 38, 43-47, 55, 87-89, 102, 105, 118-120, 122, 124-125, 171-172, 180, 186-187, 220, 340, 469, 510, 542, 554, 557, 655, 661-663, 665-666
- Board of Governors, first annual meeting of: The International Monetary Fund, 1390; The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, 1390
- Boggs, Marion W., 462n
- Bohlen, Charles E., 6, 7n, 10-11, 15, 19, 21, 38, 41n, 166, 166n, 173, 175, 177-178, 182-183, 341, 341n, 350, 350n, 372, 372n, 705, 993, 993n, 1011, 1103-1104
- Bohr, Niels, 805, 805n
- Bolivia, 130, 150, 154, 160, 164-166, 207, 493, 1387

- Bonesteel, Col. Charles H., Jr., 1015, 1032, 1048
- Bonin Islands, 546, 689
- Bonnet, Henri, 180, 183, 261, 261*n*, 437, 437*n*, 579*n*, 631*n*
- Bora Bora, 1117, 1181
- Borton, Hugh, 685, 685*n*, 687, 689
- Bowers, Claude, 1494, 1498-1499
- Braden, Spruille, 169, 171, 171*n*, 569, 569*n*, 1118, 1118*n*, 1141, 1185, 1216-1217, 1492*n*
- Bramuglia, Juan Atilio, 1495-1496, 1495*n*
- Brazil, 121, 138-139, 146, 157-158, 169, 180, 187, 190-191, 199, 205*n*, 206, 242-243, 245-247, 249-250, 250*n*, 265, 285, 359, 363, 433-434, 490, 493, 898, 922, 965, 1050*n*, 1114, 1114*n*, 1268*n*, 1275, 1285, 1291, 1295, 1348*n*, 1361, 1368, 1387
- Bretton Woods Agreements, 1384-1385, 1384*n*, 1386*n*, 1387-1388, 1389*n*, 1421; Bretton Woods Agreement Act, 1384*n*, 1386, 1386*n*, 1398-1399, 1399*n*
- Briggs, Ellis O., 48-49, 48*n*, 49*n*, 1492-1493
- British Board of Trade, 1263*n*, 1280*n*, 1292, 1294, 1294*n*, 1298, 1301-1302, 1310, 1311*n*, 1331, 1331*n*, 1342
- British Chiefs of Staff, 1153-1154
- British Empire-Commonwealth, 119, 134, 144-146, 150, 191-192, 198, 200, 202-204, 207, 212, 219, 291, 473, 554, 557, 590-591, 652, 896, 1017, 1170, 1176, 1180, 1205, 1222, 1270, 1297-1298, 1303, 1310-1311, 1317, 1318, 1320, 1326, 1329, 1331, 1487, 1493; military assistance to, U.S. policy regarding, 1148, 1155, 1190, 1194-1195
- British Joint Chiefs of Staff Mission, 967
- British Overseas Airways Corporation (BOAC), 1454, 1457, 1462
- Brown, Winthrop G., 1263, 1263*n*, 1292, 1294, 1297, 1299, 1302-1305, 1309-1310, 1317, 1320-1325, 1322*n*, 1330-1331, 1340-1342, 1349, 1349*n*, 1367-1369
- Brownell, George A., 1490
- Bulgaria, 1150
- Admission to the U.N. See under U.N.: Membership: States considered.
- Diplomatic recognition of, U.S. attitude toward, 1137
- Military establishment, limitation of, 841-842
- Peace treaty, proposed, 841
- Bunche, Ralph J., 553-554, 557
- Burden, William A. M., 1481, 1490
- Burma, 381, 1144, 1180, 1205*n*, 1222, 1285
- Burton, John R., Jr., 1021, 1038, 1038*n*
- Bush, Vannevar, 736, 736*n*, 764, 786, 1227, 1227*n*, 1229, 1238, 1245-1247, 1257
- Butler, Robert, 640, 679-681, 679*n*, 709
- Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, 115, 138, 144, 151, 154-155, 189-190, 192-193, 210, 212*n*, 214, 217, 220, 227-233, 231*n*, 235-236, 238-239, 241, 246, 248, 249*n*, 467, 476, 493
- Byrd, Rear Adm. Richard E., 1492, 1492*n*, 1494-1495, 1494*n*, 1500
- Byrnes, James F.:
- Antarctica, 1493, 1493*n*, 1495, 1498-1499
 - Atomic energy, 714, 734-736, 736*n*, 738, 740, 757, 757*n*, 761, 764, 767, 769, 780, 787, 802-806, 802*n*, 811-821, 817*n*, 823-824, 827*n*, 836, 838-839, 838*n*, 846, 846*n*, 851, 860, 865, 886-887, 894, 904, 909, 917, 919, 919*n*, 933, 937, 959-960, 963, 966, 971, 973, 973*n*, 975-976, 975*n*, 982, 983*n*, 984, 987-989, 988*n*, 992-993, 996*n*, 1000-1001, 1001*n*, 1004, 1009-1010, 1009*n*, 1018, 1026, 1029, 1083, 1089-1090, 1093, 1103, 1203-1204, 1213, 1217-1218, 1223-1224, 1223*n*, 1227-1228, 1230-1235, 1232*n*, 1234*n*, 1235*n*, 1242, 1244, 1247, 1249*n*, 1258
 - Bretton Woods institutions, 1384*n*, 1387-1390
 - Civil aviation, 1452, 1454*n*, 1464-1465, 1467-1476, 1478, 1483-1484
 - Conversations with: Lord Halifax, 1234-1235; Lord Inverchapel, 851; Lester B. Pearson, 851
 - Correspondence with: Bernard M. Baruch, 777-778, 785-787, 990-992, 995-996, 995*n*, 1089-1090, 1092-1094; C. Jasper Bell, 695; Ernest Bevin, 403-404, 735-736, 736*n*, 896, 962-963, 966-969, 978, 1380-1381, 1380*n*; Sol Bloom, 55-59, 87-89; Committee on Atomic Energy, 761-764; Frederic R. Coudert, 52; Leo T. Crowley, 1402-1403; Robert Patterson, 1128-1129, 1232-1233, 1232*n*, 1441*n*; Fred Searls, Jr., 963-966; Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., 28-33, 89; Raymond Swing, 56*n*; Harry S. Truman, 51-52, 1203, 1217-1218
 - Disarmament and regulation of arms, 840, 840*n*, 995*n*, 1021, 1030, 1053-1054, 1053*n*, 1054*n*, 1061*n*, 1069*n*, 1076, 1083, 1091*n*, 1099*n*, 1104-1107, 1107*n*
 - Export-Import Bank, 1402-1403, 1407, 1409, 1411, 1418, 1432

Byrnes, James F.—Continued

- Messages, addresses, etc., Jan. 3, cited, 51; Jan. 14, cited, 52; Feb. 12, 841; Feb. 28, 52, 300, 300*n*; Mar. 16, Mar. 18, Mar. 20, Mar. 25, cited, 52; statement at United Nations General Assembly, Dec. 13, 1102, 1102*n*, 1106, 1106*n*
- National security policy, 1111–1112, 1112*n*, 1115, 1118, 1118*n*, 1119*n*, 1120–1121, 1123–1124, 1135, 1142, 1160*n*, 1165, 1165*n*, 1172, 1174, 1179, 1183, 1185, 1187–1188, 1191
- Oil policy, 1379, 1382
- Trade and employment, 1263, 1266, 1277–1280, 1277*n*, 1279*n*, 1290, 1292–1294, 1297–1299, 1303–1306, 1309–1313, 1317, 1320, 1328, 1330–1331, 1336–1340, 1342, 1355, 1360, 1360*n*
- Troops in foreign territory, question of reporting on, 892, 894, 896–897, 905, 952, 952*n*, 960–963, 961*n*, 962*n*, 971–972, 978–979, 1012–1015, 1019–1020, 1031–1032, 1037, 1039–1040, 1042–1049, 1047*n*, 1053, 1055–1056, 1059–1060, 1060*n*, 1074, 1080, 1099
- Trusteeship, 551–553, 561–565, 567–570, 569*n*, 572, 575, 577, 610, 621, 626, 629*n*, 637, 637*n*, 640, 654, 658–664, 670–671, 679–681, 681*n*, 689–690, 692, 701–702, 705–707, 707*n*
- United Nations, matters concerning, 2*n*, 5, 5*n*, 9, 9*n*, 19–20, 20*n*, 23–26, 23*n*, 28, 33*n*, 34–35, 34*n*, 42*n*, 47, 49, 51, 65, 75–78, 105, 108, 118, 152–153, 156*n*, 157*n*, 159, 159*n*, 161–162, 166–168, 171–173, 171*n*, 172*n*, 173*n*, 177–179, 185, 215, 218–219, 227–228, 228*n*, 230–233, 230*n*, 237*n*, 238, 241, 244, 246, 248, 274, 278*n*, 292, 299, 299*n*, 313, 335, 340–341, 344, 346, 350, 352, 355, 361–362, 368*n*, 375–378, 393, 403–404, 403*n*, 407–408, 411–414, 416–420, 422, 424, 427, 432, 432*n*, 435–436, 637*n*, 455, 471–472, 474–475, 477, 480–481, 483–484, 494, 495*n*, 496, 498, 500, 501*n*
- Cabell, Brig. Gen. Charles P., 885, 891
- Cadogan, Sir Alexander, 89, 89*n*, 93, 141–151, 141*n*, 153–155, 166, 183, 253–254, 253*n*, 274–277, 281, 281*n*, 318–319, 330, 341, 350, 380, 389, 391–399, 395*n*, 402–404, 408–411, 416, 420, 424–428, 433–435, 768, 768*n*, 770, 851, 894–896, 944–947, 1031, 1031*n*, 1055, 1066, 1107
- Caffery, Jefferson, 281, 437, 579*n*, 620, 650–651
- Calvo clause, 526, 526*n*
- Cameroons: British, 546*n*, 553*n*, 561, 561*n*, 565–567, 565*n*, 566*n*, 570, 577,

Cameroons: British—Continued

- 579–583, 586–587, 589–590, 593, 600*n*, 602, 603*n*, 605, 612, 630, 638, 647, 649, 651, 678*n*; French, 603*n*, 620, 650, 650*n*, 678*n*
- Canada, 119, 121–123, 136–139, 144, 146, 155–158, 160, 165–166, 169, 172, 174, 179, 190, 192, 199–202, 205–207, 205*n*, 469, 475*n*, 476*n*, 484, 489–490, 493, 519, 522, 528–529, 560*n*, 721*n*, 750, 752, 763, 773, 804, 821, 844, 897, 909–910, 921–922, 965–966, 1027–1028, 1085*n*, 1104*n*, 1115, 1115*n*, 1260, 1268*n*, 1275, 1285, 1291, 1319, 1322–1323, 1322*n*, 1325–1326, 1329, 1345*n*, 1348*n*, 1361–1362, 1368, 1370, 1372, 1386–1387, 1442, 1454*n*, 1467, 1470, 1476; air transit rights, U.S. military, 1142; bases and base rights, U.S., 1110, 1117, 1177, 1180; military assistance to, U.S., 1141*n*, 1155, 1165, 1190, 1192
- Canadian Control Board for Atomic Energy, 946
- Canary Islands, U.S. bases in the, 1116, 1175–1176
- Canton Island, 1116, 1175, 1177, 1181; U.S. offer to Australia of joint base rights in, 709
- Cape Verde Islands, 1116, 1175–1177
- Carlson field (Trinidad), 1458
- Caroline Islands, 681
- Casablanca-Port Lyautey, U.S. bases at, 1117, 1175–1176, 1181
- Catudal, Honoré M., 1292–1294
- Chadwick, Sir James, 1207, 1213, 1213*n*, 1227–1229, 1238, 1245, 1247, 1257
- Chapultepec, Act of, 130, 130*n*, 311, 311*n*, 1114, 1114*n*, 1117, 1142, 1177
- Chase, Joseph, 906, 979–980, 1021, 1025, 1096–1098, 1096*n*
- Chaumont, Charles, 266–267, 266*n*, 269–271, 288
- Chemical and biological warfare, 815, 817, 819, 827, 835–836, 845, 847*n*, 855, 886
- Chicago Convention on Civil Aviation. See Final Act of the International Civil Aviation Conference (1944) under International civil aviation.
- “Chicago Standard Form,” 1482*n*
- Chile, 123, 139, 144, 151, 155–158, 190, 192, 205, 493, 519, 670, 1292, 1331–1332, 1337, 1340–1344, 1344*n*, 1348*n*, 1361, 1368, 1492, 1494*n*, 1496, 1496*n*, 1498–1499
- China, 113, 122, 125, 135–138, 147, 155, 157–158, 165, 169, 172, 174–175, 180, 190–192, 194, 200–201, 203, 205*n*, 243–244, 247, 253*n*, 266, 269, 271–272, 285–286, 288, 291, 299, 310, 344, 350–351, 355–356, 394, 398, 417, 423, 462, 467, 475*n*, 476, 485, 489–490, 493, 555–556, 560*n*, 564, 568, 571–572, 576, 590, 595, 602, 653, 667, 691, 704,

- China—Continued
 705*n*, 721*n*, 731, 734, 899, 899*n*, 910, 922, 965, 1126, 1261*n*, 1262*n*, 1268*n*, 1275, 1285, 1291, 1348*n*, 1361, 1368, 1386–1387; bases in Formosa, question of U.S., 1117; Export-Import Bank, question of loans to China, 1393, 1394*n*, 1396, 1408, 1413–1414, 1421–1422, 1427–1428, 1436; military assistance to, U.S., 1141, 1148, 1152–1153; territorial integrity and political independence of, 1127; troops in, U.S., 895, 1014, 1020, 1050*n*, 1168; U.S. policy toward, 1132*n*
- Christmas Island, U.S. bases at, 1117, 1175, 1177, 1180
- Churchill, Sir Winston, 128, 133, 159*n*, 967, 1157, 1205*n*, 1208–1209, 1219, 1221, 1250–1251, 1250*n*, 1254*n*
- Citrine, Walter, 501, 503*n*
- Civil Aeronautics Board, 1452–1455, 1452*n*, 1453*n*, 1461–1462, 1490
- Civil aviation. See International civil aviation.
- Clark, Tom C., 109–111
- Clark Kerr, Sir Archibald. See Lord Inverchapel.
- Clayton, William L.:
 Armaments, regulation of, 905–906, 919*n*, 932–934, 932*n*, 936–937
 Bretton Woods institutions, 1384*n*
 Civil aviation, international, 1451, 1451*n*, 1459, 1461, 1465, 1467–1469, 1473–1474, 1476, 1478, 1489–1490
 Economic and commercial policy, foreign, 1299, 1303–1306, 1305*n*, 1308, 1311–1312, 1330, 1344, 1349*n*, 1357, 1367–1368, 1380*n*
 Foreign financial program, 1391*n*, 1393*n*, 1394*n*, 1408–1409, 1417–1418, 1420–1424, 1426–1428, 1430–1431, 1433–1435, 1434*n*
 National security policy, 1118, 1118*n*, 1121, 1141, 1185, 1185*n*
 Relief activities, international, 1446–1447
 Trusteeship, international, 569, 569*n*, 621, 625, 630–631, 642
 United Nations, general U.S. policy toward, 97
 United Nations, organization and procedure, U.S. position on: Elections, 229; expenses, apportionment of, 476*n*, 479, 483, 483*n*, 486, 487*n*
- Clifford, Clark, 1182–1183
- Chipperton Island, 1117
- Coe, Frank, 1399–1402, 1408, 1418, 1421, 1423–1424, 1427–1428, 1428*n*, 1431
- Cohen, Benjamin V.: Armaments, regulation of, 733, 733*n*, 819, 819*n*, 858, 962*n*, 968, 980, 987, 988*n*, 989, 993, 1008, 1014–1016, 1021, 1039–1041, 1043, 1055, 1057, 1068*n*
- Cohen, Benjamin V.—Continued
 National security policy, 1118–1119, 1118*n*; 1121–1122, 1141, 1185, 1187–1188
 Trusteeship, international, 554, 556–557, 569, 569*n*, 572–574, 576, 594*n*, 620, 651, 651*n*, 670, 671*n*, 684, 692, 698, 702
 United Nations, organization and procedure, U.S. position on: Elections, 139, 139*n*, 171, 173, 175, 178–181, 183; membership, early admission, 412, 412*n*, 437*n*; voting procedure, 258–261, 258*n*, 260*n*, 262*n*, 263, 278, 278*n*, 280–281, 281*n*, 290*n*, 294, 297*n*, 317–320, 329–331, 341, 350
 United Nations, U.S. relations with: Arrangements for, 5; general U.S. policy toward, 34*n*, 38, 46*n*
- Collado, Emilio G., 1385, 1390*n*, 1391*n*, 1393*n*, 1394*n*, 1395–1396, 1408, 1418, 1420–1422, 1426–1427, 1430–1431, 1436
- Colombia, 123, 135–139, 146, 155–158, 169, 186, 189–193, 198, 200, 204–205, 214, 218, 220, 226, 493, 519, 929, 1386–1387
- Combined Chiefs of Staff, 1130, 1153
- Combined Development Trust. See under U.S.: Atomic Energy.
- Combined Food Board (U.S.—U.K.—Canada), 1260, 1439, 1441*n*, 1443–1444, 1443*n*, 1444*n*; joint statement by President Truman, Prime Minister Attlee, and Prime Minister Mackenzie King, May 8, cited, 1443*n*
- Combined Policy Committee on Atomic Energy. See under U.S.: Atomic Energy.
- Commodity Councils, 1377–1378
- Commodity Credit Corporation, 1423
- Conant, James B., 736, 736*n*, 764
- Condon, Edward U., 938, 938*n*
- Conference of Berlin (The Potsdam Conference), 364*n*, 1384*n*
- Connally, Tom:
 Armaments, regulation of, 732*n*, 733–734, 733*n*, 768, 770*n*, 771, 779, 780*n*, 799, 802, 886, 954, 967, 1013–1016, 1021, 1030*n*, 1039–1040, 1042–1047, 1050*n*, 1054–1061, 1055*n*, 1061*n*, 1068–1069, 1071, 1076*n*, 1077, 1081, 1083, 1090, 1097
 Trusteeship, international, 651, 651*n*, 653, 656, 662, 683, 683*n*
 United Nations, organization and procedure, U.S. position on: Elections, 119, 123, 125–126, 129, 131, 158*n*, 171–172, 174, 176–179, 185–187, 215, 220, 241; expenses, apportionment of, 469; membership, early admission, 452–454; specialized agencies, 505*n*, 508–509; voting procedure in the Security

- Connally, Tom—Continued
 United Nations, organization, etc.—Continued
 Council, 306, 314, 316-317, 329-333, 335, 337-341, 340*n*, 344, 350, 356
 United Nations, U.S. relations with:
 Arrangements for, 2*n*, 5, 34, 34*n*, 38, 42*n*, 43; general U.S. policy toward, 54, 58*n*, 59*n*, 73
 Cook Islands (see also Aitutaki), 1144
 Coombs, Dr., 1363-1364
 Cordier, Andrew, 213*n*
 Corominas, Enrique V., 48
 Costa Rica, 144, 147, 151, 154, 160, 164, 166, 493, 1387
 Council of Foreign Ministers, New York, 47, 218, 230, 230*n*, 355*n*, 483*n*, 486, 681*n*, 705, 705*n*, 709, 987, 980
 Council of Foreign Ministers, Paris, 34*n*, 204*n*, 278*n*, 394, 403*n*, 603*n*, 779*n*, 802, 904, 1380*n*
 Crain, Gen. James K., 873, 994, 994*n*
 Creech-Jones, Arthur, 553-556, 601*n*, 620
 Crimea Conference (Yalta) (1945), 254*n*, 558, 575; Yalta agreement, 575
 Crowley, Leo T., 1396, 1399-1405, 1407, 1409, 1418
 Cuba, 123, 138-139, 144, 155-158, 190, 192, 205, 226, 245-246, 289, 289*n*, 292-293, 292*n*, 297, 320, 340*n*, 343, 356, 493, 1268*n*, 1270, 1275, 1285, 1291, 1319, 1333, 1348*n*, 1362, 1368, 1386, 1394*n*; U.S. bases in, 894, 1117, 1175, 1177, 1181; U.S. troops in, 1168
 Cumming, Hugh S., Jr., 400, 420, 1501-1502, 1501*n*
 Curaçao, 1117, 1172, 1175, 1177, 1182
 Czechoslovakia, 123, 139, 144-146, 148, 151, 153-158, 160, 164, 166, 173, 190, 192-193, 207, 229, 489, 493, 666, 1150, 1268, 1268*n*, 1273, 1275-1276, 1285, 1291, 1347, 1355, 1362, 1386-1387, 1393, 1396, 1409*n*, 1416, 1429, 1431-1432; political relationship with the U.S.S.R., 1347; withdrawal of Soviet and American military forces from, 1130, 1130*n*
 Dakar, 1117, 1175-1177, 1181
 Davis, Rear Adm. Arthur C., 873, 873*n*, 875
 Davis, John Parks, 843, 868-869, 871
 Dawson, William, 48-49, 48*n*, 213, 223-224, 223*n*, 245-246, 249, 293, 329, 1057 de Gaulle, Gen. Charles, 1407
 Dejean, Maurice, 1066-1067, 1066*n*
 de la Colina, Rafael, 269-270
 Denmark, 122, 139, 144-145, 148, 150-152, 154-155, 157, 160, 164-166, 189-190, 192, 194, 198, 206, 210, 214-215, Denmark—Continued
 234, 242-243, 245, 247, 493, 1154, 1279*n*, 1386, 1393; Export-Import Bank, question of loan to Denmark, 1396, 1401, 1412*n*, 1416, 1429, 1436; Greenland, U.S. bases in, 1116, 1176, 1181; Grondal naval base, 1181; U.S. military assistance to, question of, 1149, 1156
 Dennison, Eleanor E., 1183
 Dennison, Capt. R. L., 621*n*, 622, 624, 697, 699, 702, 1380
 De Palma, Samuel, 89*n*
 de Rose, François, 898, 938-939, 938*n*, 1038-1039, 1107 De Valera, Eamon, 408, 408*n*
 Dewey, Thomas E., 78
 Dhahran airport, 1144, 1182
 Disarmament (see also under United Nations): Disarmament agreements, 923; disarmament of enemy states, 901; disarmament of Germany and Japan, 841, 1064
 Disarmament Conference (1927), 956, 956*n*
 Disputes, pacific settlement of (see also U.N.: Security Council; Voting: Disputes), 256*n*, 293, 296*n*, 305-306, 306*n*, 316-317, 326, 336-337, 409, 714, 924, 970; question of nonapplicability of veto in cases involving, 299, 307-309
 Dollar, U.S., initial par value set for, 1390
 Dominican Republic, 198, 207, 212, 214, 493
 Douglass, Helen Gahagan, 34, 34*n*, 38, 43, 216, 509, 683, 685, 1057
 Doyle, James E., 858, 858*n*
 Drawing-upon of national quotas (drawing-rights), 1390
 Dreier, John G., 994, 1080, 1492*n*
 Dreyfus, Louis G., Jr., 406
 Dulles, John Foster:
 Armaments, regulation of, 973, 973*n*, 1014-1016, 1019, 1039-1040, 1056-1059
 International law, 542-543
 Trusteeship, international, 550, 554-556, 559*n*, 560*n*, 614, 618, 637-638, 644, 654-655, 657-658, 661-663, 665-670, 675-677, 682-684, 683*n*, 687, 689-692, 689*n*, 693*n*, 697-699, 699*n*, 701-708, 701*n*, 705*n*, 707*n*
 United Nations, organization and procedure, U.S. position on:
 Elections, 118-119, 122, 130, 171-174, 173*n*, 178-182, 185, 188, 214, 216, 220, 243-247, 243*n*; expenses, apportionment of, 469; membership, early admission, 452; specialized agencies, 508, 510; voting procedure in the Security Council, 314, 331, 335, 338-339

- Dulles, John Foster—Continued
 United Nations, U.S. relations with:
 Arrangements for, 2*n*, 4-5, 34, 34*n*, 38, 43; general U.S. policy toward, 58*n*, 103, 106
- Dumbarton Oaks Conference, 8, 127,
 127*n*, 129, 254*n*, 268, 525, 658, 714,
 714*n*, 719, 798, 806, 834*n*, 956, 956*n*
- Dunn, James Clement, 5, 350, 1112*n*,
 1118, 1118*n*, 1122, 1141
- Dunnett, L. J., 1473
- Durbrow, Elbridge, 679-680
- Dzung, K. W., 483, 483*n*
- Eastern Europe, 120, 122, 134, 143, 167,
 170, 177, 179, 191-192, 198, 201, 207,
 209-211, 209*n*, 210*n*, 212*n*, 214, 219,
 229, 240, 243, 1168, 1393, 1422, 1430
- Eaton, Charles A., 2*n*, 4-5, 5*n*, 34, 34*n*, 38, 43, 314, 316, 469-470
- Eberstadt, Ferdinand, 758, 758*n*, 814,
 843-845, 859, 869-872, 881-885, 888-
 891, 906-910, 939-944, 947, 955-959,
 969-971, 986, 1025-1029, 1061*n*, 1072
- Eccles, Marriner S., 1399-1402, 1408,
 1417-1418, 1420-1424, 1426, 1430-
 1431, 1433-1434
- Ecuador, 154, 160, 164, 166, 198, 493,
 1050*n*, 1273, 1386-1387; U.S. bases in, 1116-1117, 1175-1177, 1181
- Eddy, William A., 1185, 1185*n*
- Eden, Anthony, 159*n*, 167, 183
- Egypt, 15, 18, 121, 134-139, 136*n*, 137, 146, 154-155, 157, 170, 180, 189-191, 194,
 199-200, 206, 210, 215-216, 216*n*,
 225, 234, 236, 242, 245, 285, 382, 434,
 475*n*, 493, 683*n*, 898, 906*n*, 922, 929,
 991-992, 1068, 1085*n*, 1157, 1368,
 1386-1387, 1454; air transit rights at Payne field (Cairo), U.S. military, 1144, 1181; Export-Import Bank, question of loans to Egypt, 1416, 1420; military assistance to,
 U.S. policy regarding, 1157-1158
- Eire. See Ireland.
- Eisenhower, General of the Army
 Dwight D., 159, 159*n*, 737, 737*n*, 774,
 852*n*, 854-856, 967, 1054*n*, 1207
- Ellice Islands. See Funafuti.
- El Salvador, 169, 187, 207, 493
- Embick, Lt. Gen. Stanley D., 1120, 1120*n*
- Ericksson, Herman, 227*n*, 399, 399*n*
- Eritrea, 1182
- Esin, Seyfullah, 239-240, 239*n*
- Esmer, Sukru, 484*n*
- Espiritu Santo, 1117, 1175, 1177, 1180
- Ethiopia, 138, 155-157, 165-166, 203,
 207, 493, 1386-1387; Export-Import Bank, question of loan to, 1435; military assistance to, U.S. policy regarding, 1158
- Evatt, Herbert V., 119, 119*n*, 129, 134,
 140, 180, 292, 292*n*, 303, 435, 435*n*,
 679*n*, 680-681, 681*n*, 709, 859-860,
 859*n*, 873, 916
- Exchange rates, par values. See Initial par values.
- Exchange stability, 1384*n*
- Export-Import Bank of Washington.
See under United States.
- Export-Import Bank Act of 1945, 1405, 1410
- Fack, Robert, 228
- Fahy, Charles, 34, 38, 42-43, 43*n*, 58*n*,
 89-90, 92-99, 101-103, 108, 115*n*,
 214, 290*n*, 293-294, 329, 331-333, 335,
 531-534, 531*n*, 534*n*, 536, 538-539,
 542-543, 656-657, 662, 671*n*, 781,
 781*n*, 786, 859, 859*n*, 871, 969, 971,
 992, 1040, 1043, 1060, 1083, 1185,
 1185*n*, 1188
- Fairchild, Maj. Gen. Muir S., 1120,
 1120*n*
- Falkland Islands, 1492, 1493*n*, 1494
- Far East (see also Asia), 207, 247, 1023, 1131-1133, 1138, 1148, 1152-1153,
 1165, 1393, 1416, 1422
- Farrell, Maj. Gen. Thomas F., 897-898,
 897*n*, 906, 908-910, 937, 940
- Fawzi, Mahmoud, 1068, 1074, 1081
- Federal Reserve System, 1400
- Federation of Atomic Scientists, 941
- Federation of British Industries, 1303
- Feller, A. H., 71*n*, 98-99, 99*n*, 134*n*, 530
- Fiji Islands. See Viti Levu.
- Finland, 1150, 1168
- Admission to the U.N. See U.N.: Membership: States considered.
- Export-Import Bank, question of loan to Finland, 1416, 1420, 1429, 1436
- Five Powers (China-France-U.S.S.R.- U.K.-U.S.), 134-136, 142, 161, 193,
 202, 205-207, 224, 254, 259*n*, 266,
 270-271, 288, 309-311, 320, 330, 336-
 337, 341, 343, 350-352, 854, 400,
 403*n*, 466, 489-490, 556-557, 568,
 572-573, 590, 652, 667, 677, 686, 690,
 705*n*, 715, 720, 728, 747, 759, 765,
 770, 772-773, 776, 834, 834*n*, 845,
 890, 908, 913, 916, 931, 1126, 1270
- Five Powers, U.S. minutes of informal meetings of (London): Jan. 9, 141-
 147; Jan. 10, 148-151; Jan. 11, 153-
 156; Jan. 20, 161-163; Jan. 23, 166-
 169; Jan. 25, 183-184
- Fleming, D. F., 58*n*, 885, 906
- Fleming, William, 1465, 1465*n*
- Flournoy, Richard W., 80, 80*n*
- Food and Agriculture Organization
 (FAO), 77*n*, 123, 162, 445, 463*n*,
 477, 507, 507*n*, 510-514, 1278, 1348,
 1361, 1444, 1444*n*
- Foote, Wilder, 45-47, 45*n*, 329, 452, 452*n*, 969
- Foreign loans, U.S. commitments regarding (see also United States:
 National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems (NAC)):

- Foreign loans, etc.—Continued
 Reconstruction and development loans, 1391-1394, 1391*n*, 1393*n*, 1397-1398, 1403, 1405-1406, 1408-1410, 1412
 Relief and rehabilitation loans, 1391-1392, 1398
 Statement of U.S. policy regarding foreign lending, 1424-1425, 1425*n*
 U.S. balance of payments, 1945-1946 (table), 1437-1438
- Foreign Ministers of the American Republics, Third Meeting of, Rio de Janeiro (1942), 526, 526*n*
- Formosa, 1115, 1117
- Forrestal, James, 565-566, 637-638, 660-661, 737, 737*n*, 966, 996, 1178-1179, 1203-1204, 1379, 1497
- Fortas, Abe, 132
- Fosdick, Dorothy, 44, 188*n*, 293, 371-372, 371*n*, 379, 387
- Fouques-Duparc, Jacques, 141, 141*n*, 146, 148, 153-156, 161, 166, 183
- Four-Power Statement, June 7, 1945. See under U.N.: Security Council: Voting.
- Fowler, William A., 513, 694, 1263, 1263*n*, 1265, 1294, 1302, 1309
- France, 66*n*, 113, 120, 122, 132, 136-139, 147, 155, 157-158, 169-170, 177, 180-181, 190, 192, 194, 205*n*, 236, 253*n*, 256-257, 261, 265-266, 270-271, 285-286, 288, 291, 299, 310, 334, 351, 355, 373, 390, 398, 401, 424, 429, 435, 462*n*, 467, 475*n*, 476, 485-486, 489, 491-493, 491*n*, 496-497, 508, 514, 555, 562, 568, 571, 574, 590, 593, 595, 601-602, 610, 618, 625, 625*n*, 629, 629*n*, 644, 652-653, 685, 690, 715, 721*n*, 734, 842, 906*n*, 909-910, 922, 965, 1026, 1085*n*, 1126, 1261*n*, 1268*n*, 1275, 1285, 1291, 1295, 1312, 1319, 1323, 1325-1326, 1345*n*, 1347, 1348*n*, 1355, 1362-1363, 1366, 1368, 1370-1371, 1386-1387
- Air transit rights in French territories, U.S. military interest in, 1144
- Bases in, question of U.S., 1117, 1176-1177, 1181
- Economic and financial discussions with the U.S., 1269, 1304, 1431, 1431*n*
- Export-Import Bank, question of loans to, 1393, 1396, 1396*n*, 1401, 1403, 1405, 1407, 1409-1410, 1409*n*, 1412, 1416, 1427, 1429-1430, 1432-1436, 1432*n*, 1434*n*, 1492
- Military equipment for French army, U.S. supply of, 1141, 1149, 1152-1154, 1190-1191, 1195
- Siam, dispute with, 373, 373*n*, 390, 394, 399, 404, 409, 423, 433, 437-440, 441*n*, 456*n*
- Franco, Francisco, 405, 513*n*
- Fraser, Peter, 136*n*, 144-145, 150, 157, 160, 164, 166, 574, 610, 1499-1500, 1499*n*, 1500*n*
- Freitas Valle, Cyro de, 140-141, 363
- French Guiana, 1144, 1181
- French Indo-China, 15, 18, 1144, 1149, 1154, 1181, 1190, 1195
- French Morocco, 1181
- Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation (FCN) treaties, 1367*n*, 1367-1369
- Fultz, Harry T., 455
- Fumafuti, 1116, 1175, 1177, 1180
- Galapagos Islands, 1116, 1119, 1175-1177, 1181
- Gallman, Waldemar J., 626, 1293-1303, 1317-1318, 1320-1321, 1336, 1341-1342, 1382
- Ganem, Andre, 485*n*, 491-492, 496
- Gange, John F., 1118, 1118*n*, 1185
- Gardner, Richard N., 1265*n*, 1317*n*
- Gater, Sir George, 626
- Geraschenko, Vladimir S., 473, 473*n*, 484, 492, 497
- Gerig, Benjamin, 6, 38, 41*n*, 245, 247, 249-250, 249*n*, 554, 556-557, 563, 563*n*, 569, 569*n*, 586*n*, 594*n*, 595, 595*n*, 601-603, 601*n*, 611-612, 614-616, 614*n*, 618, 620-622, 624, 625*n*, 626, 628*n*, 630, 631*n*, 637-641, 643-645, 647, 649, 652-655, 657, 660, 664*n*, 665, 667-668, 670, 683, 687, 690, 692-694, 694*n*, 703, 705*n*
- Germany, 291, 428, 570, 576, 667, 705, 779, 893, 1023, 1112*n*, 1120, 1126, 1136, 1150, 1173, 1440-1441, 1445, 1455
- Control Council, 1129
- De-industrialization of, 842
- Disarmament and demilitarization of, 841, 1064, 1162
- Military government of, 841
- Occupation of, 1129-1131, 1129*n*, 1153-1154, 1162
- Ruhr and Rhineland, disposition of, 842
- Troops in, British and American, 962
- Western zone, 1441, 1441*n*, 1445
- Giffen, Col., 624, 699, 1032
- Gilbert Islands. See Tarawa.
- Gilmer, Col. Dan, 843, 843*n*, 885
- Gomez, Raul Juliet, 1498, 1498*n*
- Goose Bay (Labrador), 1467
- Gordon, Lincoln, 868-869, 871, 881-882, 885, 890, 903, 906, 911*n*, 937-940, 943-944, 948, 969-971, 969*n*
- Gore-Booth, Paul H., 216, 216*n*, 222-223, 227*n*, 274, 274*n*, 276, 360, 360*n*, 478-479, 478*n*, 1102-1103
- Gray, David, 408

- Greece, 8-9, 15, 18, 122, 139, 154-156, 158, 160, 164, 166, 187, 190, 192, 199, 210, 212, 214-215, 217-219, 226, 362-363, 493, 705, 1157, 1261*n*, 1292, 1387, 1393, 1396, 1416, 1420, 1429, 1436, 1454, 1487; admission of Albania to the U.N., Greek objection to, 421, 436-437; British troops in, 894-895, 1014, 1067; U.S. policy toward, 1158, 1189*n*
- Green, James Frederick, 6, 249, 554, 648-652, 660, 685-687, 685*n*, 692, 697, 699, 1185, 1185*n*
- Greenland, U.S. bases in, 1116-1117, 1149, 1156, 1175-1176, 1180-1181
- Grew, Joseph C., 1391-1392
- Gromyko, Andrey A.:
- Armaments, regulation of, 781, 781*n*, 790, 857*n*, 862, 865-869, 865*n*, 871-872, 881, 883-884, 886, 889, 891-894, 893*n*, 896, 904, 909, 922-923, 926, 933-934, 940-941, 955, 963, 979, 982, 991, 1003, 1023, 1036, 1079-1080, 1083, 1097, 1103-1104, 1106
 - International law, 534, 534*n*
 - Trusteeship, international, 554-556, 554*n*, 614, 618, 629*n*, 643-644, 643*n*, 649, 665-667, 677, 690-692
 - United Nations, organization and procedure, Soviet position on: Elections, 141-155, 141*n*, 157, 161-162, 166, 168, 174, 177, 179, 183-184, 219-221, 219*n*, 228-233; membership, early admission, 383, 385-386, 385*n*, 386*n*, 398-400, 402, 404, 408*n*, 409-411, 419-424, 427-429, 433-434, 436, 458-460, 458*n*; voting procedure in the Security Council, 261, 261*n*, 266, 288
- Gross, Ernest A., 919
- Groves, Maj. Gen. Leslie R., 735-738, 735*n*, 738*n*, 764, 780*n*, 782-783, 812, 812*n*, 815-817, 819, 845, 852*n*, 870, 877-881, 885-886, 888-890, 892, 897-898, 920, 966, 1197-1207, 1197*n*, 1205*n*, 1213, 1215, 1223-1224, 1223*n*, 1227-1229, 1231-1232, 1232*n*, 1234, 1235*n*, 1236-1238, 1240-1243, 1242*n*, 1245-1249, 1251-1252, 1254-1258
- Guadalcanal-Tulagi, 1117, 1175, 1177, 1181
- Guam: Administration of, 695-696; proposed use of U.S. facilities at Guam by Australia, 681*n*, 709
- Guatemala, 493, 1144, 1181, 1386-1387
- Guerrero, J. Gustave, 169
- Habana Resolution, 130, 130*n*, 718
- Hackworth, Green H., 53-54, 139, 169-171, 185-186, 554, 1118, 1118*n*, 1121-1122, 1141, 1492*n*
- Hadow, R. H., 1501, 1501*n*
- Haiti, 207, 493
- Halifax, Earl of, 561, 577, 579, 579*n*, 598*n*, 1211, 1213-1215, 1213*n*, 1227, 1229-1231, 1234-1235, 1240, 1249, 1256, 1440, 1444*n*, 1451-1452, 1451*n*, 1465, 1469, 1472-1475, 1472*n*, 1477
- Hall, William P., 468*n*, 489, 489*n*
- Hambro, Sir Charles, 1215
- Hambro, E., 552*n*
- Hancock, John M., 758, 758*n*, 777-783, 777*n*, 778*n*, 780*n*, 785-786, 789, 802-805, 802*n*, 811-827, 812*n*, 817*n*, 827*n*, 836, 836*n*, 852*n*, 865-871, 865*n*, 867*n*, 877, 881, 885-892, 903-908, 910, 919*n*, 932-937, 939-946, 948, 951, 951*n*, 879, 981-982, 986, 1010-1011, 1021-1028, 1030, 1033-1036, 1081-1083, 1088, 1197*n*, 1242-1243, 1242*n*
- Hare, Raymond, 362, 601*n*, 604*n*
- Harman field (Newfoundland), 1458, 1467
- Harriman, W. Averell, 403, 403*n*, 579*n*, 595*n*, 1266, 1313-1317, 1322-1332, 1339, 1345, 1388*n*
- Harrison, George, 1251
- Harrison, Randolph, 221, 228
- Harry, R. L., 613-614, 613*n*, 868-869, 916
- Haselton, George H., 775-776, 873
- Hasluck, Paul, 227*n*, 265, 268-271, 292, 292*n*, 435, 435*n*, 1052*n*, 1107, 1107*n*
- Hassan, Mahmoud, 222, 222*n*
- Hauser, Philip M., 939-941, 943-944
- Hawkins, Harry C., 601*n*, 1263, 1263*n*, 1265, 1267-1269, 1268*n*, 1271-1273, 1277, 1292-1294, 1293*n*, 1297-1303, 1305, 1309-1310, 1313, 1317-1318, 1320-1325, 1325*n*, 1330-1332, 1336, 1345, 1351, 1355
- Hebert, C. P., 205-206, 205*n*
- Helmore, James R. C., 1263, 1263*n*, 1310-1311, 1326-1329, 1341-1342
- Henderson, Loy W., 10*n*, 21*n*, 216*n*, 237, 426, 426*n*, 569, 569*n*, 574, 576, 1141, 1141*n*, 1185, 1188, 1380*n*
- Herring, Edward Pendleton, 955, 955*n*, 958-959
- Herter, Christian A., 55*n*
- Hickerson, John D., 234-235, 426-427, 426*n*, 454, 562-565, 563*n*, 569, 569*n*, 572-576, 589-590, 609-611, 610*n*, 613-614, 614*n*, 616, 652, 658, 663, 680, 681*n*, 697, 699, 702, 709-710, 731, 754*n*, 857, 873, 875, 1016*n*, 1018*n*, 1179, 1452*n*, 1463, 1463*n*, 1467-1468, 1492*n*
- Hildred, Sir William, 1451, 1462, 1462*n*, 1473, 1477-1478
- Hilldring, Maj. Gen. John H., 569, 569*n*, 624, 840*n*, 919, 1009*n*, 1091*n*, 1112*n*, 1178, 1185-1188, 1185*n*
- Hiss, Alger:
- Armaments, regulation of, 754*n*, 755-756, 764*n*, 771-775, 779-780, 780*n*, 783*n*, 787-789, 806, 833*n*, 873-876.

- Hiss, Alger—Continued
 Armaments, regulation of—Continued
 875*n*, 903, 950*n*, 952*n*, 960–961,
 961*n*, 962*n*, 969*n*, 972, 975*n*, 978–
 979, 989, 994, 996*n*, 1001*n*, 1008,
 1009*n*, 1019–1021, 1031–1033,
 1037*n*, 1047, 1047*n*, 1060–1061,
 1068*n*, 1969*n*, 1073–1074
 International law, 533–535, 534*n*, 535*n*
 National security policy, 1118–1120,
 1118*n*, 1122, 1185
 Trusteeship, international, 554, 558,
 563*n*, 569–570, 569*n*, 572–577, 614,
 616, 616*n*, 618*n*, 620–621, 625, 628,
 629*n*, 631*n*, 634*n*, 637–649, 638*n*,
 650*n*, 651–652, 652*n*, 660, 663*n*,
 670, 671*n*, 693–694, 694*n*, 697–699,
 701–702, 705*n*, 711
 United Nations, organization and procedure, U.S. position on: Elections,
 118–122, 119*n*, 124–126, 140–141, 148,
 148*n*, 153, 153*n*, 156, 159–160, 169,
 171–172, 184–188, 188*n*, 219*n*, 229–
 233, 243–244, 250; expenses, apportionment of, 461, 463, 476–479, 480*n*,
 486; membership, early admission,
 368*n*, 369–370, 370*n*, 425–426, 432,
 439–440, 440*n*; specialized agencies, 500–503, 501*n*; voting procedure in the Security Council, 251, 251*n*, 255,
 255*n*, 258*n*, 259*n*, 260–264, 271–274,
 277, 280–281, 290*n*, 293, 297, 298*n*,
 317*n*
 United Nations, U.S. relations with:
 Arrangements for, 4, 6–7, 7*n*, 10*n*,
 11–12, 15–16, 19–21, 23*n*, 26, 49;
 general U.S. policy toward, 65,
 73–75, 79, 97–98, 100, 104*n*, 110–
 111, 115–116
 Honduras, 198, 207, 493, 1387
 Hoo, Victor Chi-tsai, 153, 153*n*, 161, 175, 183
 Hoover, Herbert C., 1443*n*, 1445, 1445*n*
 Howe, C. D., 1213, 1213*n*, 1227
 Hoxa, Colonel-General Enver, 359–361,
 365–367, 369, 455
 Hsia, C. L., 428, 428*n*, 433, 475–478, 485*n*,
 899, 899*n*, 926, 926*n*, 946
 Hsu, Shunsi, 899, 899*n*
 Hudson, Manley O., 53, 186, 186*n*, 526*n*, 871
 Hughes, Charles Evans, 570–571
 Hull, Cordell, 52, 1308
 Hulten, Charles M., 1185, 1185*n*
 Hungary, 1150
 Admission to the United Nations. See under U.N.: Membership: States
 considered.
 Military establishment, limitation of,
 841–842
 Peace treaty, proposed, 841
 Recognition by the United States, question of, 1137
 Hyde, Louis, 208–210, 208*n*, 209*n*
- Ibn Saud, Abdul Aziz, 1159–1160
 Iceland, 121, 359, 372, 490, 494, 496, 1387
 Admission to the United Nations. See
under U.N.: Membership: States
 considered.
 U.S. bases in, 1116, 1175–1176, 1181
 U.S. troops in, 1168
 Ignatieff, George, 863–869, 871, 873, 881–
 884, 910–916, 982
 India, 15, 18, 145, 147, 150, 155–158, 170,
 187, 190, 192, 201, 203, 206–207, 210,
 212, 216, 216*n*, 219–223, 226, 242–247,
 394, 412, 416, 418, 489, 493, 560*n*,
 666, 677, 683*n*, 684, 684*n*, 985, 1157,
 1205*n*, 1222, 1261*n*, 1262*n*, 1268*n*,
 1275, 1285, 1291, 1303, 1348*n*, 1361–
 1362, 1364, 1387, 1393, 1440, 1442,
 1445, 1454; air transit rights, U.S.
 military, 1143–1144, 1180; Export-Import Bank, question of loan to India, 1420, 1429; U.S. bases in, 1180
 Ingraham, Henry G., 859*n*, 906, 1083,
 1083*n*
 Initial par values, 1390
 Inner Mongolia, 1132
 Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Continental Peace and Security, Rio de Janeiro, Aug.
15–Sept. 2, 1947, 1217, 1217*n*
 Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace, Mexico City (1945) (see also Final Act under Treaties, conventions, etc.), 526,
 526*n*, 717, 717*n*
 Interdepartmental Trade Agreements
 Committee (TAC), 1306, 1308,
 1349–1350, 1353
 Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees, 1148
 International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD), 100,
 483*n*, 507, 507*n*, 509, 1273, 1355,
 1384, 1384*n*, 1386*n*, 1389–1390, 1389*n*,
 1393*n*, 1394*n*, 1395–1396, 1395*n*, 1398,
 1399*n*, 1400, 1402, 1406, 1410–1413,
 1418, 1424, 1424*n*, 1426, 1436; articles of agreement, 1384–1385,
 1384*n*, 1386*n*, 1387–1388
 International Chamber of Commerce,
 515*n*, 519, 522, 1325*n*
 International civil aviation, U.S. policy with respect to, 1450–1490
 Air transport agreement (Chicago), Dec. 7, 1944, denunciation of, by the U.S., 1483–1484, 1483*n*, 1484*n*
 Air transport agreement between the U.S. and Peru, *Dec. 27, 1482*n
 Air transport agreement between the U.S. and the U.K., Feb. 11, 1480, 1482, 1485–1489
 Bermuda Conference, 1451–1481,
 1486–1488
 Fifth freedom, 1450–1451, 1454, 1456,
 1458, 1461, 1465–1466, 1484–1485

- International civil aviation—Continued
 Fifth freedom traffic, 1450–1451, 1453, 1462, 1464, 1470, 1472, 1478, 1484–1485, 1490; U.S. concern regarding British restrictions on, 1484–1486; British position, 1486–1488; joint U.S.–U.K. statement relating to international air transport policy, Sept. 19, 1489–1490
 Five freedoms of the air, 642–643, 643*n*, 1450, 1486
- International Civil Aviation Conference (Chicago), Nov 1–Dec. 7, 1944, 1450, 1482; Final Act of the, 1450, 1453*n*
- International commodity arrangements (see also intergovernmental commodity arrangements under Trade and employment: Issues, etc.), 1372
- International Conference of American States, Bogotá, 1948, 526
- International Conference of American States, Lima, 1938, 526, 526*n*
- International Conference of American States, Montevideo, 1933, 526, 526*n*
- International Cooperative Alliance, 503*n*, 506, 519, 522
- International Court of Justice (ICJ), 69, 75, 126, 128, 296*n*, 299, 325, 449, 529, 609, 689, 714, 1369; acceptance by the United States of the compulsory jurisdiction of, 53–60, 60*n*, 296; judges, election of, 126, 139, 169–172, 184–188, 188*n*, 325–326; statute of, 53, 53*n*, 55–57, 59, 60*n*, 171, 251*n*, 274*n*, 283, 296*n*, 325–326, 345, 714
- International Emergency Food Council, 1260, 1444*n*
- International Federal of Women, 503*n*
- International Labor Organization (ILO), 77*n*, 100, 507, 507*n*, 510–513, 523, 1274, 1276
- International Military Tribunal for the prosecution of the major Nazi war criminals, 539*n*
- International Monetary Fund (IMF), 100, 483*n*, 486–489, 507, 507*n*, 1278, 1369, 1384, 1384*n*, 1386*n*, 1389–1392, 1399*n*, 1393*n*, 1395*n*, 1399*n*, 1400, 1411, 1415; Articles of Agreement, 487, 1281, 1334–1335, 1384–1385, 1384*n*, 1386*n*, 1387–1388
- International Organizations Immunities Act, Dec. 29, 1945, 63, 63*n*, 76–78, 77*n*, 89*n*, 91, 93–94, 96
- International Refugee Organization (IRO), draft constitution establishing, 1448; U.S. signature of (Dec. 16), 1448; Preparatory Commission of the (PCIRO), 1448–1449; proposed U.S. assessment for, 470*n*, 473, 495
- International Tin Committee, 1409
- International Trade Organization (ITO) (see also Trade and employment and U.N.: International Trade Organization, proposed United Nations Conference for the establishment of), 238, 524, 1261, 1263, 1267, 1279, 1281, 1283, 1284, 1289, 1348, 1351, 1355, 1367, 1372, 1415; U.S. draft charter for an international trade organization, 1269, 1281–1284, 1283*n*, 1287–1289, 1296–1297, 1301, 1305–1306, 1312, 1318–1319, 1319*n*, 1326–1327, 1328*n*, 1329–1332, 1330*n*, 1336–1342, 1342*n*, 1345–1348, 1348*n*, 1350, 1357–1358, 1363, 1366–1368, 1368*n*, 1372–1373
- International Whaling Commission, 1491
- International Whaling Conference, 1491
- Inverchapel, Lord, 618, 630–632, 641–642, 729, 729*n*, 961, 961*n*, 978–979, 1256, 1256*n*, 1484, 1486, 1493, 1493*n*
- Iran, 8–9, 15, 18–20, 118, 133–138, 136*n*, 144–147, 150–151, 154, 156–157, 164–165, 199–200, 214, 219, 255*n*, 275, 277, 354, 368, 385, 493, 1168, 1454; military assistance, U.S. policy regarding, 1157–1158, 1189*n*; military missions in, U.S., 1158–1159
- Iraq, 122, 138–139, 155–157, 199–200, 222, 234, 242, 245–247, 249, 250*n*, 418, 493, 546*n*, 560*n*, 600*n*, 1159, 1168, 1387, 1454
- Ireland (Eire) (see also under U.N.: Membership: States considered), 985
- Italy, 15, 18, 132, 156, 364, 366, 372, 568, 571, 1182, 1261*n*, 1271, 1393
 Admission to the United Nations. See under U.N.: Membership: States considered.
 Allied Military Government for, 1130, 1130*n*
 Export-Import Bank, question of loan to, 1396, 1416, 1425–1429, 1455–1456
 Military assistance to, U.S. policy regarding, 1149, 1155
 Military establishments in, limitation of, 841–842
 Trieste, 294, 1023
 Venezia Giulia and Bolzano, disputed area of, 1130, 1130*n*
- Izu Islands, 546
- Jacklin, Seymour, 464–465, 464*n*
- Jacobs, Joseph E., 362, 362*n*, 410, 454
- Jamison, Edward A., 994, 1141, 1141*n*, 1185
- Japan, 132, 291, 428, 548, 552, 562, 568, 571, 576, 679, 686, 779, 893, 1111, 1112*n*, 1120, 1126, 1133, 1136, 1173, 1202, 1430, 1442

- Japan—Continued
 Constitution, 804, 816
 Disarmament and demilitarization of, 841, 1064, 1131, 1162
 Occupation forces: Allied participation in, 1132-1133, 1190, 1194-1195; U.S., 1131, 1131n, 1138, 1162, 1172
 Peace treaty, 689, 691, 704, 710
 U.S. initial post-surrender policy document for, 841
- Japanese Mandated Islands. See under U.N.: Trusteeship system: Trusteeship agreements for strategic areas.
- Jebb, H. M. Gladwyn, 159n, 167, 180, 281, 281n, 341, 350, 360, 360n, 500, 500n
- Johnson Act of 1934, 1392, 1393n, 1395, 1395n
- Johnson, Albin E., 906, 937, 943
- Johnson, Herschel V.:
 Armaments, regulation of, 785, 785n, 892-896, 905, 949, 997, 1095-1096, 1104-1107
 International law, 525, 537n
 Trusteeship, international, 643, 643n, 649, 665, 685, 688, 692
- United Nations, organization and procedure, U.S. position on: Elections, 188n, 219, 219n; membership, early admission, 380, 382n, 385n, 387-389, 390n, 391-393, 392n, 395-399, 402-406, 408-409, 411, 413, 416, 418-420, 423-424, 426-429, 429n, 431-436, 440, 440n, 456-458, 460; voting procedure in the Security Council, 265-273, 266n, 271n, 275, 275n, 280, 281n, 288, 292, 292n, 295-296, 318-319, 329, 332-333
- United Nations, U.S. relations with: Arrangements for, 31, 33; general U.S. policy toward, 60n, 93-94
- Johnson, Howard C., Jr., 755-756
- Johnson, Joseph E., 7, 9, 9n, 15, 19-20, 253, 253n, 260-264, 262n, 275-277, 279-281, 293-294, 312, 329-335, 333n, 338-340, 370, 370n, 385-386, 386n, 685, 685n, 687, 734, 734n, 754n, 833n, 873-876, 885, 903-905, 911n, 949, 992-993, 1045-1046
- Joint Canadian-U.S. Basic Defense Plan, 1110, 1117, 1177
- Joint Chiefs of Staff. See under United States.
- Jouhaux, Léon, 501, 514-515, 522
- Katz-Suchy, Juliusz, 484n
- Kennan, George F., 860-865, 1010-1011, 1266-1267, 1274-1276, 1387-1388
- Kenney, Gen. George C., 6, 130, 729, 842-846, 843n, 874-875, 875n, 885-891, 914-916
- Kenney, John W., 894
- Kerne, Ivan, 90, 92-93, 95-97, 99, 166, 538-539
- Keynes, John Maynard, 1465, 1465n
- Khoury, Faris al-, 219-220, 219n
- Kindley field (Bermuda), 1457
- King, Adm. Ernest J., 852n
- Kirk, Alan G., 625, 1233-1234, 1237-1238, 1243, 1244n, 1247-1248, 1248n, 1258
- Klentsov, V. A., 1355, 1362
- Knoll, Capt. Denys W., 784, 784n, 846, 949
- Knox, M. Gordon, 685, 685n, 898-899
- Konthi, Suphamongkhon, 390, 390n, 439, 439n, 440n
- Koo, V. K. Wellington, 141-151, 141n, 153-156, 158, 161-162, 166-167, 172, 175-177, 183-184, 341, 344-345, 350, 353-355, 532, 534, 534n, 629n, 993, 993n
- Korea, 18, 1012, 1111, 1131n, 1132-1133, 1148, 1148n, 1153; admission to the United Nations, question of, 373; occupation forces in, 1131, 1172
- Krock, Arthur, 1182-1183
- Kurile Islands, 575, 691
- Kuter, Maj. Gen. Laurence S., 1463, 1463n, 1468, 1473-1474, 1476n
- Kuznetsev, Vassilii, 500, 500n, 501
- Lacoste, François, 650n, 867-869, 867n, 1502, 1502n
- La Fe. See San Julian-La Fe.
- Lagens field (Terceira), 1182
- Lake Harbor (Canada), 1180
- Land, Vice Adm. Emory S., 1121, 1121n
- Landis, James M., 1490
- Landon, Kenneth P., 371-372, 371n, 381, 387, 390, 457, 459
- Lange, Oscar, 433, 433n
- Langenhove, M. F. van, 557n
- Lapham, Roger, 125, 125n
- Lavrentyev, A. I., 141, 141n, 148, 153, 266, 288
- Lawford, Nicholas V., 253-254, 253n, 266-270, 274, 276, 279-281, 281n, 288, 395n, 424, 427
- Lawford, V., 944, 1066
- Lawrence, Ernest O., 964, 964n
- League of Nations, 100, 127-128, 149, 359, 412, 507, 525-528, 530, 546n, 686, 974
- Council, 300n, 327, 415, 415n, 545n
- Covenant, 300, 300n, 942
- Dissolution of, 125, 549
- Economic and financial organization, 527
- High Commission for Refugees, 1448
- Mandates, 131, 415-416, 415n, 545, 545n, 549-550, 549n, 560, 599-600, 600n, 662, 671
- Mandates Commission, 125
- Leahy, Fleet Adm. William D., 719, 719n, 851-853, 852n, 1109, 1154

- Lebanon, 8, 15, 18, 118, 158, 190, 192, 199-200, 212, 222, 223*n*, 224-227, 236, 240-241, 257, 334, 493, 546*n*, 600*n*, 1292, 1331-1332, 1337, 1340-1344, 1344*n*, 1361, 1368; customs union with Syria, 1344; military assistance to, U.S. policy regarding, 1160
- Lebeau, M. R., 520
- Leith, Charles K., 965-966, 965*n*
- Lemnitzer, Maj. Gen. Lyman L., 873, 873*n*, 875-876, 875*n*, 885, 890
- Lend-Lease. See under U.S.: Lend-Lease arrangements and under U.S.: National Security.
- Lend-Lease Act of 1941, 1395*n*
- Le Roy, Jean, 601*n*
- Lewis, James H., 569, 569*n*, 1118, 1118*n*, 1141
- Liang, Yuen-li, 251*n*, 265-270, 288, 531-536, 535*n*, 538-539
- Liberia, 203, 207, 212, 493; bases, question of U.S., 1117, 1175, 1177, 1182; military assistance to, U.S. policy regarding, 1159
- Libya, 1144, 1182, 1455
- Lie, Trygve, 35, 50, 52, 60*n*, 77, 82-84, 86, 113, 119, 119*n*, 134, 139-140, 142, 144-145, 149, 152, 157, 159, 166, 172-184, 173*n*, 213*n*, 240-241, 240*n*, 248, 251*n*, 289*n*, 432-434, 436, 438, 440, 440*n*, 472-473, 472*n*, 480, 480*n*, 486, 961*n*, 1104*n*, 1248-1249, 1249*n*, 1325, 1325*n*
- Liesching, Sir Percival, 1263-1265, 1263*n*, 1293-1294, 1297-1299, 1310, 1317-1318, 1320-1321, 1323, 1325-1326, 1331*n*
- Lillenthal, David, 737, 737*n*, 761, 786, 795, 860, 881, 920, 965
- Lindsay, Franklin T., 868, 871, 871*n*, 881, 885, 903, 906, 916-917, 916*n*, 937-939, 938*n*, 944, 955-960, 955*n*, 969, 992-993, 1010-1011, 1010*n*, 1016, 1018, 1021, 1038, 1088-1089, 1103
- Little America, 1493
- Litvinov, Maxim Maximovich, 956*n*, 974
- Liu, S. S., 537-539
- Livesey, Frederick, 1370
- Loans, grants, and other financial assistance. See Foreign loans.
- Loftus, John A., 1381*n*, 1382*n*
- London Tin Conference, 965
- López, Alfonso, 48
- Loridan, Walter, 625*n*
- London, A., 241
- Lucas, Louis F. M., 601*n*
- Luxembourg, 148, 151, 154, 158, 160, 164-166, 192, 207, 493, 1268, 1268*n*, 1270, 1275, 1387
- Lyon, Frederick B., 100-101, 100*n*
- MacArthur, General of the Army Douglas, 804, 804*n*, 816, 852*n*, 1132-1133, 1148*n*
- MacLean, D. D., 632, 960-961, 962*n*, 968, 978-979, 1473
- McCabe, Thomas B., 1420, 1423
- McClintock, Robert M., 216*n*, 1056, 1056*n*, 1084
- McCloy, John J., 736-737, 736*n*, 764, 1119*n*
- McCormack, Alfred, 569, 569*n*, 1118, 1118*n*, 1122, 1141
- McDermott, Michael J., 20, 20*n*, 187
- McDiarmid, Alice M., 528-530
- McFarland, Brig. Gen. A. J., 731, 757, 1092, 1140, 1166, 1458*n*
- McGranery, James P., 97
- McIntosh, A. D., 610, 1499-1500, 1499*n*
- McKeever, Porter, 867, 867*n*
- McKellar, Kenneth, 98*n*, 100*n*
- McKenzie King, William Lyon, 726*n*, 739, 741, 745, 839, 844, 887, 920, 976, 1205, 1205*n*, 1218, 1231, 1232*n*, 1234*n*, 1235, 1244-1245, 1249, 1252, 1443*n*
- McMahon, Brien, 737, 737*n*, 780*n*, 782-783, 1242*n*, 1243
- McNaughton, Gen. Andrew G. L., 851, 851*n*, 868-869, 871-873, 881-884, 916-917, 916*n*, 926, 944-948
- McNeil, Hector, 500, 500*n*
- McRae, William A., 733, 733*n*
- Magawan, Sir John, 1317-1318, 1317*n*
- Makin, N. J. O., 158*n*, 163, 178
- Makins, Roger, 768, 768*n*, 1204, 1204*n*, 1207, 1213, 1215, 1227, 1229, 1231, 1238-1239, 1245, 1247, 1253-1257, 1440, 1440*n*, 1444*n*, 1474, 1474*n*, 1476
- Maktos, John, 78-79, 531-532, 534-536, 537*n*, 538
- Manchuria, 1132, 1168, 1430, 1445
- Manuilsky, Dmitry Z., 503*n*, 509, 509*n*, 1040, 1040*n*, 1068
- Manus Island, U.S. base on (see also Admiralty Islands), 621*n*, 622, 622*n*, 679*n*, 680, 681*n*, 709-710, 710*n*, 1116, 1175, 1177, 1180
- Marcus Island, 546
- Marcy, Carl, 79, 89*n*, 94
- Marguerite Bay, 1493, 1493*n*, 1501
- Marianas Islands, 576, 681
- Marks, Herbert S., 781-782, 781*n*, 806-810, 836*n*, 903, 987, 989, 1007, 1009*n*, 1256, 1256*n*
- Marquesas Islands (Nuka Hiva), 1115, 1144
- Marshall, General of the Army George C., 1187-1188, 1422, 1427, 1427*n*
- Marshall Islands, 681
- Martin, William McChesney, 1418, 1420, 1422, 1424, 1426-1431, 1434, 1436
- Martinez-Cabanas, Gustavo, 482, 486, 486*n*, 489-492, 489*n*, 496-497, 499*n*
- Masaryk, Jan, 174, 174*n*
- Masefield, Peter, 1487, 1490
- Mason, Paul, 601*n*
- Massigli, Rene, 161, 161*n*

- Matthews, H. Freeman, 10*n*, 21*n*, 205, 400, 437*n*, 774, 774*n*, 1016, 1016*n*, 1018*n*, 1103, 1104*n*, 1112*n*, 1122, 1141, 1141*n*, 1167-1171, 1185, 1187-1188, 1203, 1203*n*, 1380*n*, 1457-1458
 Meeks field (Keflavik), 1181
 Melville, Mr., 601*n*
 Messersmith, George S., 1495-1496
 Mexico, 121, 123, 135-139, 146, 154-157, 180-182, 187-188, 190-191, 199-200, 204, 205*n*, 223*n*, 225*n*, 245, 250, 250*n*, 269, 285-286, 382, 433-434, 475*n*, 482, 486, 489, 491, 493, 496, 732, 781, 898, 922, 929, 991-992; air transit rights in, U.S. interest in, 1142, 1144; base rights in, question of U.S., 1117, 1177
 Middleton, George H., 564-565, 589-590, 612-616, 618*n*, 620-621, 628, 628*n*, 630, 631*n*, 634*n*, 638-652, 638*n*
 Mikoyan, Anastas Ivanovich, 1266, 1266*n*
 Miner, Robert G., 250, 250*n*
 Minter, John R., 617
 Moffat, Abbot Low, 390, 390*n*, 438-440
 Molotov, V. M., 218, 218*n*, 341-343, 346-348, 350-355, 436, 654, 705-707, 707*n*, 729, 730*n*, 959-960, 962, 971-980, 975*n*, 980*n*, 982-983, 987-989, 991, 993-994, 996, 1001-1007, 1001*n*, 1009-1010, 1013, 1018, 1022-1024, 1026, 1030-1031, 1030*n*, 1031*n*, 1036, 1041, 1044, 1053, 1053*n*, 1058, 1061, 1061*n*, 1066*n*, 1068-1070, 1072-1073, 1083-1085, 1085*n*, 1087, 1096-1098, 1204, 1387, 1387*n*, 1388*n*
 Mongolian Peoples Republic:
 Independence of, recognition by China and the U.S.S.R., 414
 Soviet influence and control over, 417-418
 Treaty of friendship and mutual assistance with the U.S.S.R., Feb. 27, 413-414, 417
 United Nations, admission to the. See under U.N.: Membership: States considered.
 Monnet, Jean, 1269
 Monroe Doctrine, 291, 311, 772, 799
 Morgan, Stokeley W., 1452-1453, 1452*n*, 1459, 1472, 1477-1478
 Morgenstierne, Wilhelm Munthe de, 1270, 1270*n*
 Morotai, 1116, 1175, 1177, 1182
 Morrison, Herbert, 1311*n*, 1313, 1439-1445, 1441*n*, 1444*n*
 Morse, Wayne, 53-55, 53*n*, 54*n*
 Moscow Declaration on Austria, 399, 399*n*
 Moscow Four-Nation Declaration, Oct. 30, 1943, 715, 715*n*
 Moscow Tripartite Conference of Foreign Ministers, Dec. 1945, 721*n*, 723*n*, 739, 741, 976; communiqué,
- Moscow Tripartite Conference of Foreign Ministers—Continued
 721*n*, 723*n*, 739, 741, 741*n*, 745, 924, 928, 958, 958*n*, 991, 1023, 1033; resolution on atomic energy, 721, 721*n*, 723, 725-727, 739, 741, 745, 839, 923
 Mudaliar, Sir Ramaswami, 145, 145*n*, 150, 1319, 1319*n*
 Munro, Gordon, 1256
 Murphy, Robert D., 1454*n*
 Muscat, 394, 397, 404
 Myers, Francis J., 411

 National Committee for Civilian Control of Atomic Energy, 860
 National Council of Soviet-American Friendship, 1098*n*
 Nauru, 571, 705*n*
 Near East, 19, 120, 122, 134, 136*n*, 155, 170, 191-192, 199-200, 207, 219, 227; 236, 416, 894, 1150, 1156-1157, 1367*n*, 1393, 1416, 1487
 Nepal, 381, 394, 397, 404
 Netherlands, 121, 138-139, 146-149, 153-153, 164-165, 170, 179-180, 189-192, 198-200, 205*n*, 207, 210, 214-215, 221-222, 224, 226-232, 228*n*, 231*n*, 234-246, 248-249, 249*n*, 269, 284-286, 392, 423, 448-449, 475*n*, 493, 560*n*, 922, 929, 991-992, 1154, 1261*n*, 1268*n*, 1275, 1279*n*, 1285, 1291, 1323, 1347, 1361-1362, 1364, 1386-1387, 1393, 1396, 1396*n*, 1401, 1403-1405, 1407, 1407*n*, 1409-1410, 1412, 1412*n*, 1416, 1427, 1429, 1436
 U.S. bases in Dutch territories. See Biak, Curaçao, Morotai, and Surinam.
 U.S. policy regarding military assistance to, 1149, 1155-1156
 Netherlands East Indies, 8-10, 10*n*, 15, 18, 147*n*, 234-235, 234*n*, 235*n*, 241, 244, 362, 1149, 1156, 1347, 1393, 1403-1405, 1407-1409, 1407*n*, 1409*n*, 1428, 1436
 New Caledonia, 1175, 1177, 1181
 Newfoundland, 1117, 1285, 1454; U.S. bases in, 1117, 1177, 1180, 1454; discussions regarding use by civil aircraft of U.S. leased bases, 1454-1455, 1454*n*, 1457, 1464, 1464*n*, 1467, 1470, 1472-1474, 1476, 1481
 New Guinea: Mandate, U.S. rights in, 571; trusteeship, Australian proposals for, 613-614, 613*n*, 617, 617*n*, 621*n*, 622, 640, 640*n*, 678*n*, 679-681, 679*n*, 690, 693*n*, 697*n*
 New Hebrides. See Espiritu Santo.
 New Zealand, 113, 136-138, 144, 146-147, 157-158, 158*n*, 160, 164, 166, 189-190, 192, 194, 198, 210, 214-215, 224, 226-227, 493, 515, 519, 562, 574-575, 591, 603, 610, 610*n*, 629*n*, 653, 674-675, 1261*n*, 1268*n*, 1275, 1285, 1291, 1348*n*, 1454-1455, 1492

- New Zealand—Continued
 Antarctica claims. See under Antarctica.
 Cook Islands, U.S. base in. See Aitutaki.
 Military assistance to, U.S. policy regarding, 1155
 Trusteeship agreements. See under U.N.: Trusteeship system: Trusteeship agreements for nonstrategic areas.
 Western Samoa, U.S. base rights at Upolu. See under Western Samoa.
 Whaling question, 679*n*
 Nicaragua, 198, 207, 493, 1144, 1182
 Nieto del Rio, Felix, 48
 Nimitz, Fleet Adm. Chester W., 638, 737, 737*n*, 774, 812*n*, 853–854
 Nitze, Paul H., 694, 694*n*, 1357–1359
 Noel-Baker, Philip John, 141*n*, 161, 479, 479*n*, 1055, 1055*n*, 1057, 1059, 1068
 Norstad, Maj. Gen. Lauris, 967, 967*n*
 Norton, Garrison, 1452*n*, 1464, 1464*n*, 1473, 1487, 1490
 Norway, 134, 136–139, 144–146, 149–150, 152, 154–158, 160, 164–166, 169, 172, 173*n*, 174–175, 178–179, 184, 190, 192, 198, 210, 214, 226, 493, 1121, 1154, 1261*n*, 1347, 1362, 1364, 1387, 1393, 1492
 Export-Import Bank, question of loan to, 1396, 1401, 1412*n*, 1416, 1420, 1429, 1436
 Military assistance to, U.S. policy regarding, 1149, 1156
 Trade and employment, U.S. position regarding Norwegian participation in preliminary meeting on, 1269–1270, 1276–1277, 1292, 1331–1332, 1337, 1340–1344, 1344*n*
 U.S.S.R. influence on, question of, 173–179, 173*n*
 Notter, Harley A., 7, 719, 719*n*
 Novikov, Kirill V., 217–218, 217*n*, 220, 665–666, 690–692, 701–704, 705*n*, 706, 707*n*, 708
 Noyes, Charles P., 255, 255*n*, 275, 329, 331–332, 370, 370*n*, 372, 459–460, 459*n*, 536, 536*n*, 685, 689
 Nuka Hiva. See Marquesas Islands.
 Nuremberg Trial, 539, 539*n*, 542, 804, 816, 823
 Okinawa, 572, 701
 O'Mahoney, Joseph C., 1379
 Oppenheimer, J. Robert, 736, 736*n*, 749–754, 749*n*, 761, 778–779, 778*n*, 795, 870–871
 Orekhov, F., 251*n*, 265*n*, 710
 Orlov, N. V., 489, 489*n*, 491–492, 496
 Orts, P., 556–557
 Osborne, Lithgow, 1269, 1270*n*
 Outer Mongolia. See Mongolian Peoples Republic.
 Owen, David, 1344–1345
 Pacific Islands. See under U.N.: Trusteeship system.
 Padilla Nervo, Luis, 49, 135, 135*n*, 140–141, 181, 534, 534*n*, 924, 924*n*, 949
 Palestine, 216, 234, 245, 395, 395*n*, 411–412, 415, 415*n*, 556, 565, 985; mandate for, 412, 415–416, 415*n*, 546*n*, 571, 573, 600*n*, 615, 654, 671, 698
 Panama, 144, 146, 148, 150, 160, 164, 166, 493; U.S. bases in, 894, 1116, 1172, 1175–1176, 1182; U.S. troops in, 1050*n*
 Panama Canal, 291, 638, 1142
 Pan American Airways, 1452, 1457
 Panuch, Joseph A., 100, 473, 478*n*
 Paraguay, 130, 207, 493, 1387
 Paris Peace Conference (1919), 545*n*
 Paris Peace Conference (1946), 33*n*, 34*n*, 204*n*, 215, 637*n*, 651*n*, 871–872, 882, 898, 898*n*, 904, 909, 916–917, 925, 927, 939, 974, 974*n*, 1435
 Parodi, Alexandre, 331, 341, 346–347, 350, 352–353, 428, 428*n*, 432–433, 435, 437, 437*n*, 439–440, 508, 867, 867*n*, 869, 871, 938–939, 946, 1031, 1066, 1076*n*, 1098
 Pasvol'sky, Leo, 6, 73, 118, 126–133, 174–176, 178–183, 188, 264, 264*n*, 338, 554–555, 557–558, 563*n*, 733–734, 733*n*, 1118–1122, 1118*n*, 1141
 Patterson, Robert P., 107, 108*n*, 109, 566*n*, 780*n*, 783, 894, 894*n*, 907, 966, 1111–1112, 1128–1129, 1178–1179, 1203, 1203*n*, 1213, 1227, 1232–1233, 1242*n*, 1243, 1246*n*, 1251, 1256–1257, 1441*n*
 Paul, Arthur, 1419–1420, 1419*n*, 1423–1424
 Paul-Boncour, M. J., 141–146, 141*n*, 148–151, 161–163, 166–167, 181, 183–184
 Peabody, Maj. Gen. Paul E., 1216
 Pearson, Drew, 935, 935*n*
 Pearson, Lester B., 121, 121*n*, 139, 159–160, 162–163, 166–168, 172, 173*n*, 174–184, 851, 1204, 1204*n*, 1207, 1213–1214, 1227, 1230–1231
 Peissel, Georges, 491*n*
 Permanent Court of International Justice, 57
 Permanent Joint Board on Defense, U.S.-Canada, 1142
 Perros, George P., 1379*n*
 Peru, 123, 139, 155–158, 190, 192, 205, 246, 340*n*, 356, 493; U.S. base at Talara, 1116, 1175–1177, 1182
 Petersen, Howard C., 737, 996, 996*n*, 1112*n*, 1119*n*, 1203, 1203*n*
 Peterson, Avery, 1302, 1340–1342, 1340*n*, 1345

- Petroleum resources: Anglo-American Oil Agreement, Aug. 8, 1944, 1379-1382, 1379*n*; Anglo-American informal discussions regarding, 1382-1383, 1382*n*
- Phelps, D. M., 1393*n*, 1396
- Philippines, 138, 154, 160, 164, 166, 189-190, 199, 203, 206, 215, 242-243, 245, 247, 340*n*, 412, 416, 418, 493, 674-675, 680, 684, 731, 1161, 1163, 1368, 1370, 1386-1387; Export-Import Bank, question of loan to, 1416, 1420, 1422, 1429; U.S. base rights in, 1114, 1114*n*, 1117, 1153, 1177; U.S. military assistance to, 1141, 1148, 1153, 1165, 1190, 1192
- Phoenix Islands. See Canton Island.
- Pitblado, David, 473, 473*n*, 485, 489-491, 496
- Pogue, L. Welch, 1452*n*
- Poland, 121, 134-139, 142-143, 146-147, 150, 154, 157-158, 160, 164, 166, 168, 170, 173, 178-181, 187, 189-193, 199, 207, 209-210, 212-214, 217, 220, 226-227, 265, 267, 285, 362, 392, 418, 444, 475*n*, 484, 489, 493, 884, 906*n*, 916, 922, 927, 929, 1010, 1026, 1083*n*, 1106*n*, 1107, 1149, 1261*n*, 1262*n*, 1387, 1393, 1396, 1409*n*, 1416, 1428, 1433, 1433*n*, 1436
- Popovich, Vlada, 231*n*
- Popper, David H., 41*n*, 202*n*, 205-206, 209-212, 209*n*, 218-219, 223, 234, 237*n*, 250, 371, 371*n*, 380, 424
- Port Lyautey. See Casablanca-Port Lyautey.
- Portugal, 1116, 1261*n*, 1368
Azores, U.S. bases in. See Azores.
Cape Verde Islands, U.S. bases in. See Cape Verde Islands.
Military assistance to, U.S. policy regarding, 1149, 1155
United Nations, question of admission to. See under U.N.: Membership: States considered.
- Potsdam agreements. See Potsdam Communiqué of Aug. 2, 1945, under Treaties, conventions, and agreements.
- Potsdam Conference. See Conference of Berlin.
- Potter, Pitman B., 58*n*
- Poynton, A. H., 553-554, 601*n*, 626, 652, 664*n*
- Pridi Banomyong, 457-459
- Principal Allied and Associated Powers, (1919), 546, 555, 562, 565, 567-568, 570-571, 576, 667
- Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization (PICA0), 507, 507*n*, 510-512, 513*n*, 514, 1355, 1462, 1481-1484, 1481*n*, 1487, 1489
- Quebec Conference (1943), First, 1205*n*
- Quo Tai-chi, 89, 89*n*, 93, 350, 413, 417, 460*n*
- Rabaul, 1115
- Rabi, Isador I., 807, 807*n*
- Rayburn, Sam, 100, 1435
- Raynor, Charles, 1379-1380, 1382*n*
- Raynor, G. Hayden, 21, 21*n*, 38, 41*n*, 205-206, 205*n*, 216, 216*n*, 221-223, 227*n*, 228*n*, 234*n*, 237-239, 246-247, 249, 293, 371-374, 371*n*, 380-381, 387, 387*n*, 388*n*, 391-393, 391*n*, 400, 404, 424-427, 432, 439-440, 453, 478-479, 478*n*, 783*n*, 1051-1052, 1102-1103
- Reams, R. Borden, 962*n*, 1009
- Reber, James Q., 1185, 1185*n*
- Reciprocal trade agreements program, 1282, 1350, 1367*n*, 1368
- Reid, Escott, 227*n*, 1051-1052, 1051*n*, 1052*n*
- Reid, John S., 616, 616*n*, 652, 652*n*, 658, 663
- Renner, Karl, 1130
- Reuchlin, O., 234-235, 241
- Richards, Arthur, 614*n*, 652, 658, 663, 663*n*
- Ridgeway, Lt. Gen. Matthew B., 729, 784, 843, 843*n*, 846, 885-887
- Rio Conference, 311, 311*n*
- Rio Treaty. See Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance under Treaties, conventions, and agreements.
- Robertson, Norman A., 139, 159-160, 159*n*, 1322, 1322*n*
- Rockefeller, John D., Jr., 114-115, 115*n*
- Rockefeller, Nelson, 104*n*
- Rodriguez, Mario, 1495, 1495*n*
- Rogers, R. L., 528-529
- Romulo, Carlos P., 247, 247*n*, 684
- Ronne, Commander Finn, 1494-1495, 1501, 1501*n*
- Roosevelt, Anna Eleanor (Mrs. Franklin D.), 2*n*, 5, 34, 34*n*, 37*n*, 38, 43-45, 103, 120, 123-125, 129-132, 174-176, 187, 216, 247, 469, 508-510, 655, 657-658, 683-684, 1015, 1056-1057, 1056*n*
- Roosevelt, Franklin D., 2*n*, 133, 1154, 1157, 1195, 1205*n*, 1208-1209, 1219, 1221, 1250-1251, 1250*n*, 1251*n*, 1254*n*, 1283*n*, 1308, 1379*n*
- Ross, Charles, 935
- Ross, James A., Jr., 1330, 1330*n*, 1336
- Ross, John C., 9, 10*n*, 12, 16*n*, 21-22, 33, 34*n*, 35-36, 38, 42, 45, 49, 65, 75, 79, 85, 103-106, 139, 219*n*, 225, 225*n*, 229-233, 234*n*, 235*n*, 253, 253*n*, 290*n*, 293, 295, 329, 461-463, 462*n*, 463*n*, 468*n*, 469, 479, 601*n*, 661-662, 668, 774, 774*n*, 969, 975-978, 980-981, 983-989, 983*n*, 1005-1009, 1015, 1021, 1025-1031, 1041-1045, 1047-1049, 1052, 1056, 1060-1061, 1068*n*, 1069-1074, 1069*n*

- Rothwell, C. Easton, 12, 22, 22*n*, 782, 782*n*, 1118, 1118*n*
- Royall, Kenneth C., 736-738, 736*n*
- Ruanda-Urundi, 546*n*, 557*n*, 566-567, 566*n*, 570, 600*n*, 602, 604, 625, 625*n*, 678*n*
- Rueff, Jacques, 485*n*, 486
- Rumania, 1150
 - Diplomatic recognition of, U.S. attitude toward, 1137
 - Military establishments in, limitation of, 841-842
 - Peace treaty, proposed, 841
 - United Nations, question of admission to. See under U.N.: Membership: States considered.
- Rusk, Dean, 19-20, 19*n*, 764*n*, 766, 770, 783-785
- Russell, Donald S., 35, 100, 463, 476, 478, 569, 569*n*, 965, 965*n*, 1118, 1118*n*, 1141, 1185
- Russell, Harry E., 631*n*, 680
- Ryukyu Islands, 546-547, 572, 689, 701, 704
- Rzymowski, Wincenty, 178, 180-181, 183
- Saba, Hanna, 265, 379, 379*n*
- Saillant, Louis, 500*n*, 501, 503*n*, 521
- Saint-Laurent, Louis S., 484, 484*n*, 1052, 1052*n*
- Salinas, 1117, 1175-1177
- Sanders, William, 293, 295, 329, 331, 451-452, 451*n*, 1013, 1013*n*, 1045-1046, 1050*n*, 1055
- Sandifer, Durward, V., 7, 16*n*, 36, 38, 40-42, 41*n*, 44-45, 123, 188*n*, 213-215, 213*n*, 220, 222-224, 226, 232, 234*n*, 244-247, 293, 329, 368*n*, 369, 371, 373-374, 452-453, 462*n*, 469-470, 486, 508-509, 534*n*, 542, 654-655, 657, 1013, 1013*n*, 1040, 1056-1057, 1059
- San Francisco Conference. See U.N. Conference on International Organization.
- San Francisco Declaration. See Four-Power Statement, June 7, 1945, under U.N.: Security Council: Voting.
- San Julian-LaFe, 1117, 1175, 1177, 1181
- Sanhoury, Abdel Razak el-, 1080-1081, 1080*n*
- Sargent, Sir Orme, 403
- Satterthwaite, Joseph C., 371-373, 371*n*, 381, 387
- Satterthwaite, Livingston, 1490
- Saudi Arabia, 200, 207, 493, 1396; air transit rights in, U.S. military, 1144; base at Dhahran, U.S., 1182; Export-Import Bank, question of loan, 1416; military assistance to, U.S. policy regarding, 1159-1160; military mission to, U.S., 1159
- Savannah meetings, 1390, 1390*n*
- Scott, Joseph W., 949, 949*n*
- Searls, Fred, Jr., 680, 681*n*, 758, 758*n*, 777, 777*n*, 843-845, 885, 888, 890, 906-907, 963-966
- Self, Sir Henry, 1456, 1462-1463, 1469, 1472-1474, 1477-1479, 1490
- Sengier, Edgar, 1237-1238
- Shackle, R. J., 1263, 1263*n*, 1294, 1297, 1320-1321
- Shannon, G. E. G., 601*n*
- Shawcross, Sir Hartley, 116, 538, 1069-1070, 1069*n*, 1072, 1075, 1077-1079, 1081-1083, 1083*n*
- Sherman, Vice Adm. Forrest P., 638, 682, 1463, 1463*n*, 1474, 1492*n*
- Shiple, Ruth, 100
- Shirley, Robert V., 771, 780*n*, 1043
- Siam:
 - Air transit rights in, question of U.S. military, 1144, 1182
 - Military assistance to, question of U.S., 1148, 1153
 - United Nations, question of admission to the. See under U.N.: Membership: States considered.
- Silver, Rabbi Abba H., 411, 411*n*
- Silvercruys, Robert, Baron, 579*n*
- Sim, David, 1322*n*
- Simic, Stanoje, 178, 180-181, 183
- Skobeltzyn, D. V., 1025, 1025*n*
- Smith, Edwin L., 595, 595*n*, 601-603, 601*n*, 649
- Smith, Gen. Walter Bedell, 417-418, 681-682, 790, 790*n*, 857-860, 857*n*, 992, 1011, 1016-1019, 1103-1104, 1103*n*, 1354-1356
- Smyth, Henry D., 751*n*
- Smyth report, 751, 751*n*, 808, 897, 921
- Snyder, John W., 84-85, 84*n*
- Sobolev, A. A., 36, 91, 264, 264*n*, 274, 433*n*, 436, 525*n*, 955-959, 1016-1017, 1016*n*, 1103
- Solomon Islands. See Guadalcanal-Tulagi.
- Southern Rhodesia, 1285
- Southwest Africa, 600*n*, 653, 657-658, 661-662, 661*n*, 683*n*, 704
- Soviet satellites, 204, 208, 224, 237, 242, 245-247, 396, 398, 400, 409
- Soviet Union, 122, 134-139, 147, 155, 157-158, 165, 169-170, 180-181, 183, 186-188, 190, 192, 194, 205*n*, 207-212, 212*n*, 217, 219-220, 229, 231, 238, 243-244, 248, 251, 251*n*, 253*n*, 254*n*, 255*n*, 261, 266, 271-272, 276, 278, 283, 285-286, 288, 291-292, 299, 302-303, 305-306, 309, 313-314, 332-335, 339, 342, 350-351, 354-356, 362, 372, 375, 379, 381, 385-386, 395, 398-400, 404, 409, 411-412, 419-427, 431, 442, 444-445, 448, 462, 467, 473, 475*n*, 476, 484, 489-491, 493, 496-497, 500, 508, 510, 545, 555-557, 562-564, 568, 570-573, 575-576, 590, 595, 602, 614-615, 619-620, 628, 653-654, 667-670, 677, 681, 685-686, 690-

- Soviet Union—Continued
 691, 693, 699, 699*n*, 703-705, 705*n*,
 721*n*, 732, 739, 798, 818, 834, 888-
 889, 906*n*, 910, 959, 962, 992, 1085*n*,
 1110, 1126, 1149, 1161, 1167-1168,
 1261*n*, 1262*n*, 1270, 1273, 1285,
 1285*n*, 1291, 1319, 1362, 1365, 1368,
 1393-1394, 1394*n*, 1444*n*, 1445, 1492
 United Nations, Soviet position
 regarding:
 Budget. See under U.N.: Budget:
 General Assembly: Fifth Committee.
 Commission on Atomic Energy.
See under U.N.: Atomic Energy.
 Forces agreements. See under U.N.: Security: Security system.
 Headquarters site, 112, 112*n*
 Membership. See under U.N.:
 Membership: States considered.
 Troops in foreign territory. See under U.N.
 Trusteeship. See under U.N.:
 Trusteeship system: Trusteeship agreements for strategic areas.
 Voting in the Security Council. See under U.N.: Security Council:
 Voting.
 United States Policy toward Soviet Union, 1136-1139, 1165-1166, 1169-1171; question of U.S. loan credits for, 1314, 1393*n*, 1396,
 1401, 1403, 1405, 1407-1408,
 1409*n*, 1413, 1416-1421, 1427,
 1429-1432, 1432*n*, 1435-1436
 Uranium ore, 897, 921
 World Federation of Trade Unions
 (WFTU). See under World Federation of Trade Unions.
 World trade conference. See under Trade and employment: Preliminary tariff negotiating meeting.
- Spaak, Paul-Henri, 121-122, 121*n*, 134,
 139-142, 147-149, 152-153, 154*n*,
 155, 158, 164, 217, 226-227, 240-241,
 240*n*, 249*n*, 500, 500*n*, 508, 514, 522,
 1233, 1233*n*, 1237-1238, 1243-1244,
 1244*n*, 1247
- Spain, 8, 15, 18, 47, 239, 334, 513*n*, 841, 1017, 1150, 1271
 United Nations, question of admission
 to. See under U.N.: Membership:
 States considered.
 U.S. bases in the Canary Islands, 1116, 1175-1176
- Stalin, Generalissimo Iosif Vissarionovich, 133, 979, 982, 986, 992-993, 1003, 1011, 1022-1024, 1098, 1445
- Stampar, Andrija, 208-209, 208*n*
- Stassen, Harold E., 844, 844*n*
- Stein, B. E., 265-267, 265*n*, 269-273,
 278, 288, 386, 386*n*, 665, 667
- Stettinius, Edward R., Jr.:
 Armaments, regulation of, 728, 734,
 770*n*, 784-785, 790, 802, 875, 1090
 Economic and commercial policy, foreign, 1290-1291
 National security policy, 1118*n*
 United Nations, organization and procedure, U.S. position on: Elections, 117-122, 124-126, 134*n*, 140-
 141, 152, 158*n*, 161, 161*n*, 166-167,
 171-172, 174, 176-179, 181-185;
 expenses, apportionment of, 462*n*;
 membership, early admission,
 360*n*, 361-363, 361*n*, 368*n*, 370*n*,
 375, 378, 380, 380*n*, 381-386, 384*n*, 385*n*, 389, 391-392, 392*n*; voting procedure in the Security Council, 254, 255*n*, 261, 261*n*, 271-272,
 274-277, 275*n*, 310
 United Nations, U.S. relations with:
 Arrangements for, 1-5, 1*n*, 2*n*, 5*n*,
 8, 10, 13, 19-21, 23, 28-30, 33;
 general U.S. policy toward, 52, 75,
 77, 81-84, 83*n*, 84*n*, 89
- Stevenson, Adlai E., 6, 34, 34*n*, 38, 43,
 43*n*, 133-134, 133*n*, 141-146, 148-
 156, 163, 177-183, 183*n*, 186-187,
 220-221, 315, 329-330, 462*n*, 510,
 515, 520-521, 521*n*, 522*n*, 542-543,
 655, 1057, 1060, 1292, 1446
- Stinebower, Leroy D., 7, 39, 41*n*, 211-
 212, 211*n*, 694, 1271-1273, 1271*n*,
 1277, 1294, 1297, 1299, 1302-1303,
 1305
- Stirling, John A., 1263-1264, 1263*n*, 1294
- Stokes, I. N. P., 78-80, 85, 105, 108-109,
 293, 329, 331-332, 462*n*
- Stone, Thomas A., 1244-1245
- Strategic and Critical Materials Stockpiling Act, 1183-1184
- Sullivan, John L., 558, 1112*n*, 1493*n*
- Surinam, 1117, 1172, 1175, 1177, 1182
- Surplus Property Act of 1944, 109-110
- Sweden, 121, 198, 205*n*, 206, 212, 359,
 372, 490-491, 494, 496, 841
 United Nations, question of admission to. See under U.S.: Membership:
 States considered.
 U.S. policy regarding military assistance to, 1149, 1156
- Swing, Raymond, 56*n*
- Switzerland (see also under U.N.: Membership: States considered), 359,
 1150, 1321
- Swope, Herbert Bayard, 758, 758*n*, 906, 909, 911, 937, 940, 942-943, 986, 1054
- Syria, 8, 15, 18, 118, 135, 144, 146, 148,
 150-151, 160, 164, 166, 189-191, 193,
 199-200, 203, 206, 214-215, 216*n*,
 218-220, 222, 224, 226, 257, 334, 493,
 546*n*, 600*n*, 929, 1160, 1279*n*
- Tan, Shao-hwa, 417
- Tandy, Michael, 216*n*, 221

- Tanganyika, 546*n*, 553*n*, 561-562, 561*n*, 565-567, 565*n*, 566*n*, 570, 576-577, 579, 583-584, 586-587, 589-590, 593, 600*n*, 603*n*, 604-609, 610*n*, 612, 616-618, 620-621, 630, 632*n*, 638, 640-641, 644, 647, 649, 651, 656, 660-661, 664, 677, 678*n*
- Taquizadeh, Seyid Hassan, 133-134
- Tarawa, 1116, 1175, 1177, 1180
- Taylor, Paul B., 312, 312*n*, 369, 369*n*, 374, 387, 387*n*, 388*n*, 452
- Taylor, Wayne C., 1405-1406, 1408-1409
- Thomas, Charles A., 737, 737*n*, 761, 795, 870, 881
- Thomas, Elbert D., 770*n*, 771-773, 771*n*, 779, 799, 954
- Thomas, Ivor, 693, 694*n*, 703-705, 1490
- Thompson, Elwood N., 290*n*, 293, 295, 298*n*, 461, 461*n*, 535, 1045-1047
- Thompson, Sir George, 944, 948
- Thompson, Llewellyn, 857, 1018*n*
- Thorp, Willard L., 211*n*, 678, 678*n*, 1185, 1185*n*, 1187
- Tibet, 394, 397, 404
- Togoland: British, 553*n*, 561, 561*n*, 565, 565*n*, 566*n*, 567, 570, 577, 579, 583, 586-587, 589-590, 593, 600*n*, 603*n*, 605, 612, 630, 638, 647, 649, 651, 678*n*; French, 603*n*, 620, 650, 650*n*, 678*n*
- Tolman, Richard C., 812*n*, 843, 868, 871-872, 885, 891, 897-898, 906, 944, 948, 951-952, 951*n*, 1228, 1228*n*
- Townsend, John G., Jr., 2*n*, 4-5, 174, 182
- Trade Agreements Act, 1307-1308, 1312, 1316, 1326, 1337, 1349-1350, 1352-1353, 1367*n*
- Trade and employment (see also International Trade Organization (ITO) and U.N.: International Trade Organization, proposed conference for the establishment of):
- Issues involved in proposed trade charter and conference:
- Agricultural policies bearing on international trade, 1286
- Cartels, 1263*n*, 1267, 1281, 1286-1287, 1291, 1299, 1323*n*, 1335, 1347-1348, 1348*n*, 1358-1359, 1361
- Customs duties, preferential, 1333-1334, 1348*n*, 1350, 1353, 1360-1361, 1364
- Customs formalities, 1287
- Duties, anti-dumping, 1333
- Duties, countervailing, 1333
- Emergency provisions, 1335, 1358
- Employment, 1263*n*, 1267, 1281, 1286, 1291, 1299, 1323*n*, 1335, 1357, 1359, 1361, 1364
- Exchange and financial controls, 1286-1287, 1334-1335, 1350, 1353, 1357, 1359
- Export tariffs or taxes, 1285-1286
- Trade and employment—Continued
- Issues involved in proposed trade charter and conference—Con.
- Freedom of transit for products, 1333, 1359
- Import tariffs, reduction of, 1281-1284, 1284*n*, 1286-1287, 1295, 1299-1301, 1304, 1328, 1334, 1350, 1353, 1356-1357, 1359-1360
- Intergovernmental commodity arrangements, 1281, 1286-1287, 1291, 1328*n*, 1334-1336, 1347, 1358-1359
- Marks of origin, 1287, 1334
- Most favored nation treatment, 1275, 1282, 1286, 1289, 1333-1334
- Protection for infant industries, 1359, 1361, 1364
- Quantitative restrictions, 1287, 1299-1300, 1334, 1347, 1350, 1353, 1357, 1359-1361, 1364
- Shipping problems, 1322-1323, 1348
- State monopolies, 1284-1285, 1335, 1357, 1359, 1362, 1365
- Subsidies, 1287, 1335, 1348*n*, 1357, 1359
- Surplus commodities, 1263*n*, 1267, 1299, 1361-1362
- Tariff valuation, 1287, 1333, 1359
- Taxation, national treatment on, 1333
- Preliminary multilateral tariff negotiating meeting: U.S. proposals for, 1263, 1263*n*, 1267-1273, 1268*n*, 1275-1276, 1278-1290, 1290*n*, 1337, 1349; U.S. draft tariff protocol, 1281, 1283, 1287-1288, 1305; British position, 1263-1266, 1268*n*, 1275; Soviet attitude, 1266-1268, 1274-1276, 1276*n*, 1297, 1313-1317, 1354-1356; preparations for and discussions of, 1292-1303, 1294*n*, 1305-1309; postponement of, 1309-1313, 1317-1318, 1323, 1325-1326, 1325*n*; planning for 1947 meeting, 1337-1339, 1356, 1359, 1366
- Transcontinental World Airlines (TWA), 1454-1455
- Transjordan. See under U.N.: Membership: States considered.
- Treaties, conventions, and agreements (see agreements under individual countries):
- Agreed Declaration by President Truman, Prime Minister Attlee, and Prime Minister Mackenzie King, Nov. 15, 1945, 726-727, 726*n*, 739, 741, 745, 839, 842, 887, 920, 976, 1205-1206, 1205*n*, 1219, 1231, 1232*n*, 1234, 1234*n*, 1236-1237, 1252-1253

- Treaties, conventions, etc.—Continued
- Agreement and Declaration of Trust by President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill, June 13, 1944, 1205, 1205*n*, 1208, 1213–1214, 1219, 1221, 1225, 1227, 1229, 1254, 1254*n*
- Agreement between the U.S. and Canada relating to flights of military aircraft, Feb. 13, 1945, 1115, 1115*n*, 1142
- Agreement regarding Interim Arrangements (Preparatory Commission of the United Nations), June 26, 1945, 117*n*
- Agreement with the Soviet Union for four-power trusteeship over Korea, 545
- Anglo-American loan agreement, Dec. 6, 1945. See under United Kingdom.
- Anglo-American oil agreement, Aug. 8, 1944, 1379–1382, 1379*n*, 1380*n*, 1382*n*
- Articles of Agreement by President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill governing collaboration between authorities of the U.S. and the U.K. in the matter of tube alloys, signed at Quebec, Aug. 19, 1943, 1204–1205, 1205*n*, 1208–1209, 1214–1215, 1219, 1219*n*, 1228–1230, 1235, 1242, 1250–1251
- Bretton Woods Agreements (1944), 1384–1385, 1384*n*, 1386*n*, 1387–1388, 1389*n*, 1421
- Civil aviation:
- British-Argentine civil aviation agreement, May 17, 1945–1486, 1485*n*, 1488
- British-French civil aviation agreement, Feb. 28, 1945, 1485*n*, 1488
- British-Greek agreement for air services in Europe, Nov. 26, 1945, 1453, 1453*n*
- Convention on international civil aviation (Chicago), Dec. 7, 1944, 631, 1450, 1460
- Fifth freedoms agreement. See International air transport agreement, infra.
- Interim agreement (Chicago), Dec. 7, 1944, 1450
- Interim commercial air services arrangement between the U.S. and the U.K. (Dec. 10, 28, 1945), 1450*n*, 1451*n*
- International air services transit agreement (Chicago), Dec. 7, 1944, 1450–1451, 1453, 1453*n*
- International air transport agreement (Chicago), Dec. 7, 1944, 1450, 1482, 1482*n*
- Treaties, conventions, etc.—Continued
- Civil aviation—Continued
- Two freedoms agreement (Chicago). See International air services transit agreement, supra.
- Double taxation, conventions regarding, 1370
- Final Act of the Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace (1945), 130, 130*n*, 311, 311*n*, 1114, 1114*n*, 1117, 1142, 1177
- Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation (FCN) treaties, 1367*n*, 1367–1369 Habana Convention (1940), 130*n*
- Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance, Sept. 2, 1947, 130–131, 130*n*
- Interim agreement between the U.S. and Yemen containing establishment, consular, and commercial provisions, May 4, 1968
- London conventions of Feb. 10, 1925, regarding U.S. rights in mandated territories, 563*n*
- Military aviation agreement between the U.S. and Brazil, June 14, 1944, 1114, 1114*n*
- Potsdam Communiqué (Chapter X), Aug. 2, 1945, 364–367, 364*n*, 389, 394, 398–399, 404–405, 419, 421
- Preliminary statement on U.S. military and naval base system in the Philippines, signed May 14, 1945, 1114, 1114*n*
- Treaty for the relinquishment of extraterritorial rights between the U.S. and China, Jan. 11, 1943, 1368*n*
- Treaty of friendship and alliance between China and the U.S.S.R., Aug. 14, 1945, 413, 417, 417*n*
- Treaty of friendship and mutual assistance between the U.S.S.R. and the Mongolian Peoples Republic, Feb. 27, 1946, 413–414, 417
- Treaty of friendship, commerce, and navigation between the U.S. and China, Nov. 4, 1946, 1368*n*
- Treaty of Paris of 1898, 696
- Treaty of Versailles (1919), 132, 545*n*, 555, 564, 568, 574, 578, 596, 667, 681
- U.S.—U.K. agreements on destroyers and bases, Sept. 2, 1940, Mar. 27, 1941, 1468
- U.S.—U.K.—Belgian Memorandum of Agreement regarding control of uranium ores, Sept. 26, 1944, 1234*n*, 1237, 1248*n*, 1254, 1254*n*

- Treaties, conventions, etc.—Continued
- Whaling: International convention for the regulation of whaling, Dec. 2, 1946, 1491; protocol for the regulation of whaling, Nov. 26, 1945, 1491
 - Yalta agreement (1945), 575
 - Treaties vs. executive agreements, 80, 97, 547-548
 - Truman, Harry S.:
 - Addresses, declarations, messages, and statements:
 - Agreed Declaration by President Truman, Prime Minister Attlee, and Prime Minister Mackenzie King on atomic energy, Nov. 15, 1945, 726, 726*n*, 739, 741, 745, 839, 842, 887, 920, 976, 1205-1206, 1205*n*, 1234*n*
 - Declaration of Nov. 6 proposing strategic area trusteeship for certain Pacific Islands, 674-675, 1110
 - Messages to:
 - Congress: Sept. 6, 1945, 1405, 1411; Jan. 14, 1946, 51; Jan. 21, 1947; Jan. 30, 1946; Mar. 1, 1945; Apr. 7, 1947, 1491
 - U.N. General Assembly: Oct. 23, 52, 975, 975*n*
 - U.N. Security Council: Mar. 25, 52
 - Navy Day Speech, Oct. 27, 1945, 718, 718*n*, 1119-1120, 1120*n*, 1125, 1125*n*, 1128-1129, 1134-1135, 1135*n*, 1140
 - Press conference, Jan. 15, 551, 558, 597, 617
 - Statement on trade negotiations, Nov. 9, 1354, 1354*n*
 - Atomic Energy:
 - U.N. aspects, 714, 736, 740-741, 749, 770-771, 770*n*, 777-778, 780, 786, 789, 802*n*, 811, 813, 818, 826, 836, 836*n*, 838-840, 838*n*, 841*n*, 844, 846-851, 846*n*, 850*n*, 851*n*, 858-860, 859*n*, 906-910, 916*n*, 919-921, 919*n*, 932-936, 938, 939*n*, 942, 953-954, 963, 971, 986-987, 995-996, 996*n*, 1000, 1004, 1010, 1033, 1054, 1054*n*, 1061*n*, 1090, 1093, 1107, 1107*n*
 - U.S. foreign policy aspects, 1203-1204, 1203*n*, 1218, 1218*n*, 1220, 1230, 1232*n*, 1234-1235, 1242, 1244, 1246*n*, 1252
 - Civil aviation, 1452*n*, 1462, 1465
 - Conversation with Herbert Morrison, 1444-1445, 1444*n*
 - Correspondence with: Dean Acheson, 82-83; Clement Attlee, 1231-
 - Truman, Harry S.—Continued
 - Correspondence with—Continued
 - 1232, 1235-1237, 1249-1253, 1259, 1259*n*; Bernard M. Baruch, 767-768, 767*n*, 838-840, 846, 846*n*, 859, 859*n*, 919-929, 942-944, 944*n*, 982, 990, 995, 1000; Francis Biddle, 539, 539*n*; James F. Byrnes, 51-52, 1203, 1217-1218; Tom Clark, 109-110; Sam Rayburn, 1308; John W. Snyder, 84*n*; Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., 1-4, 33, 81-82, 82*n*, 87; Raymond Swing, 56*n*; Fred M. Vinson, 1400, 1400*n*, 1425; Henry A. Wallace, 932-935, 932*n*, 937-938, 940-943
 - Export-Import Bank, 1400, 1400*n*, 1407, 1407*n*, 1409, 1417, 1425, 1425*n*, 1435
 - Foreign loans, 1391, 1391*n*, 1402, 1411
 - International Court of Justice, 56, 60*n*
 - National security, 1114*n*, 1119, 1119*n*, 1124, 1130, 1134, 1152-1153, 1160*n*, 1182-1184, 1191
 - Trade and commercial policy, 1306-1309, 1308*n*, 1312-1313, 1349, 1350*n*, 1351-1354, 1351*n*, 1352*n*, 1354*n*, 1384*n*, 1386
 - United Nations matters:
 - Atomic energy. See supra.
 - Elections to U.N. bodies, 152-153, 184-185
 - Headquarters site, 107-108, 108*n*, 110-113, 112*n*
 - Membership, 411, 411*n*, 414-416, 414*n*
 - Trusteeship system, 551, 551*n*, 553*n*, 569, 610, 637, 658-661, 689, 710
 - U.S. relations with the U.N., 1, 1*n*, 2*n*, 33, 46*n*, 49
 - Voting in the Security Council, 299, 313
 - World food shortage, 1439-1441, 1441*n*, 1443-1445, 1443*n*
 - Tulagi. See Guadalcanal-Tulagi.
 - Turkey, 15, 18, 123, 133-134, 138-139, 144, 151, 156, 158, 160, 165, 170, 189-193, 199-200, 203-215, 219, 224, 226-233, 228*n*, 231*n*, 235-241, 237*n*, 246, 248, 249*n*, 484, 493, 842, 1157, 1168; Export-Import Bank, question of loan, 1396, 1416, 1429; military assistance to, U.S. policy regarding, 1160, 1189*n*
 - Turner, Adm. Richmond K., 729, 733, 843, 843*n*, 845-846, 885-892, 1085-1088
 - Tydings, Millard E., 1006-1007
 - Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, 9, 10*n*, 115, 123, 136-139, 144, 146-147, 149-150, 155-156, 158, 160, 164, 163, 190, 192-193, 207, 210, 220, 229, 467, 476, 493, 503*n*

- Union Minière du Haut Katanga, 1237, 1248, 1253
- Union of South Africa, 136-138, 144, 147, 151, 155, 164, 170, 187, 198, 201, 464, 464*n*, 493, 554, 556-557, 590-593, 597, 602, 618, 644, 652, 657, 683*n*, 685, 704, 821, 1261*n*, 1268*n*, 1275, 1285, 1291, 1370, 1386-1387, 1454-1455
- Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. See Soviet Union.
- United Kingdom, 15, 18, 106*n*, 116, 120-124, 132, 134, 136-139, 147, 155, 157-158, 169, 186-187, 190, 192, 194, 202-203, 205*n*, 210*n*, 216-217, 219, 221-222, 253*n*, 254*n*, 256-257, 265-266, 269, 272, 278-279, 285, 299, 334, 341, 347, 350-352, 355, 374-375, 377-378, 380, 383, 388-389, 400, 412, 415-416, 419, 422-423, 427, 452, 462, 465, 467, 476*n*, 485, 489-491, 493, 496-497, 500, 519, 522, 529-530, 538, 555, 561-563, 563*n*, 568, 570-571, 574, 577-578, 586, 592, 595, 601-602, 604, 610, 625, 625*n*, 628, 653, 663, 685, 690, 694*n*, 703-704, 721*n*, 739, 750, 752, 763, 783, 798, 804, 821, 841, 844, 909-910, 922, 965-966, 1085*n*, 1104*n*, 1121, 1126, 1157, 1161, 1170, 1205, 1205*n*, 1260, 1261*n*, 1285, 1291, 1312, 1319, 1345*n*, 1348*n*, 1363, 1366, 1368, 1370, 1372, 1386-1387, 1392-1394, 1394*n*, 1401, 1408-1409, 1454*n*, 1492
- Air transit rights in Egypt, India, and Burma, U.S. interest in military, 1144
- Atomic Energy, U.S.-U.K. cooperation. See under U.S.: Atomic energy.
- Bases in, U.S. military, 1116-1117, 1177, 1181
- Military assistance to, U.S. policy regarding, 1148, 1152, 1155
- Military equipment, transfer of U.S., 1190, 1192, 1194
- U.S. leased bases in Bermuda and Caribbean area, negotiations regarding use by civil aircraft, 1454*n*, 1455, 1455*n*, 1464-1466, 1466*n*, 1480
- U.S.-U.K. loan agreement (Dec. 6, 1945), status of the, 1265, 1265*n*, 1267, 1268*n*, 1305, 1307-1308, 1312, 1317, 1317*n*, 1320-1321, 1324-1325, 1379, 1379*n*, 1381, 1391, 1393*n*, 1410, 1413-1414, 1417-1418, 1422-1423, 1431*n*, 1436, 1438, 1438*n*, 1451, 1451*n*, 1465, 1465*n*
- United Nations:
- Armaments:
- International traffic in arms, supervision of, 730-731, 840, 842-843, 902-903
- Limitation of arms, 842, 1191
- United Nations—Continued
- Armaments—Continued
- Regulation of, 16, 47, 311, 699, 730, 1190; Security Council role, 756, 834-835, 840, 900-901, 903, 979; development of U.S. position regarding, 717-720, 755, 757, 833-836, 833*n*, 857, 857*n*, 899-903, 977, 1110, 1122, 1128, 1127, 1186, 1193, 1199
- Atomic Energy:
- Acheson-Lilienthal Report, 761, 761*n*, 767-768, 777-778, 778*n*, 781, 781*n*, 785, 788-789, 790*n*, 791, 803, 806-807, 809-810, 819-821, 824, 836-839, 844-845, 855-856, 870, 884, 886, 897-898, 920-921, 965, 1029, 1234
- Atomic bombs (see also Atomic weapons, infra), cessation of manufacture of, 951-952, 956-960, 993; destruction of, 866, 880, 887, 890, 924, 941, 952, 976
- Atomic Development Authority, proposed by Acheson-Lilienthal report (see also U.S. proposal for creation of an international Atomic Development Authority under Commission on Atomic Energy, infra), 791-795, 804-805, 810, 813-816, 820-823, 825-833, 837, 839, 844, 847-850, 856
- Atomic energy in warfare, renunciation of use of, 845, 847, 1082
- Atomic truce, French proposal for, 1038-1039
- Atomic weapons, 742-744, 922; outlawry of production and use of atomic weapons in war, 852-854, 922-925, 940, 951-974, 976, 1022, 1024, 1033-1036, 1198, 1202; prohibition of atomic weapons for military purposes, 865, 973, 979, 1001-1002, 1004, 1017, 1069, 1071, 1086-1087, 1089, 1092-1093, 1097, 1100-1101; regulation of, 900
- Baruch plan or proposals. See U.S. proposal, etc. under Commission on Atomic Energy, infra.
- Blair-Lee House discussions, 790, 790*n*, 809-810, 941
- Commission on Atomic Energy, 23*n*, 119, 214, 290, 295, 301, 318, 322, 326, 337, 395, 713-714, 721, 723-727, 732-733, 732*n*, 750, 761-762, 768, 773, 787-788, 794, 802*n*, 806, 808, 813, 832-833, 835-836, 842, 847, 850-851, 858-859, 862, 870, 872, 878, 881-887, 901, 904-905, 907-909, 911-914, 916-917, 919-921, 923, 926-929, 935, 938-939, 941, 947-948, 951, 959, 964-965, 970-971, 976, 979, 981, 987-995, 1001-1005, 1008-

United Nations—Continued
 Atomic Energy—Continued
 Commission on Atomic Energy—Continued
 1010, 1016, 1019, 1022–1024, 1026, 1028–1029, 1036, 1056, 1062, 1065, 1069–1074, 1077–1079, 1083, 1083*n*, 1086, 1088–1092, 1094, 1096–1097, 1100, 1102, 1106, 1106*n*, 1203, 1214–1215, 1217–1219, 1224, 1228–1229, 1231, 1236–1238, 1248–1249, 1252; Legal subcommittee, 868, 872–873; Subcommittee 1, 865*n*, 866, 866*n*, 868; Subcommittee 2, 865, 865*n*, 867–869, 871*n*, 872, 881–882, 881*n*, 939, 944–948, 944*n*, 949*n*, 982*n*, 1097, 1106*n*, Subcommittee 3 (Scientific and technical), 866, 866*n*, 868–871, 881–884, 881*n*, 904, 908, 925–926, 938–939, 939*n*, 944–948, 949*n*
 General Assembly role, 732*n*, 911–914, 921, 928; resolution on atomic energy, 735–736, 787, 832, 850, 885, 887, 912–913, 923, 970, 976, 991, 995, 1002–1005, 1002*n*, 1023, 1062, 1065, 1086, 1100–1101, 1236, 1253
 Report to the Security Council, first, 1106–1107, 1107*n*
 U.S.S.R.: attitude toward, 712*n*, 721, 739, 743, 757–758, 781, 805, 814, 821, 857–858, 857*n*, 859*n*, 861–867, 865*n*, 869, 871, 881*n*, 882, 889, 897, 904, 907, 916–917, 924, 926–929, 934, 938–940, 939*n*, 956–960, 972–973, 976, 979, 981–982, 1001–1003, 1010–1011, 1017–1019, 1021–1026, 1036, 1070–1071, 1083*n*, 1086–1088, 1092, 1096, 1106*n*, 1107; proposals, 921–925, 933, 940, 946, 971, 976, 1002, 1023, 1036, 1088, 1097
 United States:
 Policy, development of, 712–714, 722, 787–789, 802–833, 833–840, 919, 919*n*; J.C.S. position, 738–749, 773–775, 780–783, 785–789; draft policy statement by Baruch delegation, 813, 813*n*, 816–819, 823–824, 826, 836; revision of, 827–833, 836–837, 836*n*; statement of U.S. policy, 846–851, 851*n*, 921, 1110
 Proposal for the creation of an international Atomic Development Authority (Baruch Plan), 856, 858, 860, 863–865, 877, 881, 886–889, 892, 898, 909–911, 916–

United Nations—Continued
 Atomic Energy—Continued
 Commission on Atomic Energy—Continued
 United States—Continued
 917, 922, 925–926, 929, 933–934, 936, 940–942, 947, 956–957, 970, 973, 979, 1023, 1036, 1053–1054, 1058, 1083*n*, 1087, 1091–1092, 1095–1096, 1098, 1108, 1238
 Representation on, 294*n*, 322, 337, 543*n*, 735*n*, 736–738, 740, 749, 757*n*, 761, 767, 767*n*, 774, 777, 790, 812*n*, 835–836, 838, 843, 843*n*, 846*n*, 851, 853, 856, 858, 860, 885, 897, 906, 911*n*, 916, 919, 937–938, 955, 982, 990, 995, 1000
 Voting procedure (see also under Security Council: Voting; Veto), 721–723
 International control over, 8, 152, 297, 298*n*, 713, 724, 726, 736, 739–740, 742, 744–746, 749–752, 761–762, 828–829, 832–833, 836, 838–839, 845, 847, 852–853, 852*n*, 855–856, 857*n*, 858, 860, 862, 872, 898, 910, 922–923, 979, 989–991, 1017, 1071, 1082, 1093–1094, 1096, 1100, 1108, 1197–1198, 1206, 1214, 1237, 1241, 1242*n*, 1259
 Issues involved in:
 Disclosures, 794, 807–808, 817, 832–833, 837, 850, 878–880, 897–898, 907, 920, 926, 941, 1224, 1228
 Diversion, 806, 813–814, 822, 945–947, 985
 Elimination of atomic and other weapons adapted to mass destruction, 713, 724, 726, 733, 742, 745, 758, 815, 817, 819, 839–840, 847, 866, 885–886, 922, 925, 1002, 1063, 1100–1101
 Inspection, 814, 821–822, 827, 831, 837, 845, 847, 849–850, 852–853, 855–857, 857*n*, 879, 892, 898, 922–924, 941–942, 951, 958, 960, 974, 980–981, 983, 985–986, 996, 1002–1005, 1017–1018, 1024, 1062, 1094, 1096
 Military use of, 842
 National vs. international authority, 815, 826, 833, 850–851
 Peaceful uses of, 713, 724, 726, 740, 742, 744–746, 748, 762, 805, 818, 830, 838, 849, 866, 866*n*, 880, 986, 1202

United Nations—Continued

Atomic Energy—Continued

International control over—Con.

Issues involved in—Continued

Raw materials problem (uranium, thorium), 791-792, 809, 813-814, 819, 826, 828, 830-831, 836-837, 839, 848-849, 863, 878-879, 891-892, 904, 922, 940-941, 947-948, 964, 966, 1224; question of ownership of uranium ore in the ground, 819-826, 965; Soviet efforts to purchase, 897, 921

Safeguards, 713, 724-727, 733, 736, 739-740, 742-743, 745-747, 749, 751-752, 758, 761, 791, 805-806, 827, 829, 847, 877, 923-925, 941, 982, 987, 989-991, 1001-1004, 1006-1008, 1062, 1071, 1094

Sanctions, 804, 810, 813, 817-818, 823, 825-827, 836, 836*n*, 838-839, 845-847, 852, 854-855, 857*n*, 858, 864, 866, 898, 922-923, 925, 983, 986, 1025, 1029, 1082, 1097

Strategic distribution of facilities and stockpiles, 792, 809-810, 830, 837, 848, 889-890

Transition period, 809, 837, 877-881, 886-888, 890, 892, 908, 911, 940-942, 957, 1035

Kerr report (report of Carnegie Foundation), 820

Lilienthal Committee. See Board of Consultants under Secretary of State's Committee on Atomic Energy, infra.

Oppenheimer proposal for international authority over study, development, and exploitation of uranium, 752-754

Secretary of State's Committee on Atomic Energy, 736, 736*n*, 761-764, 767, 774, 786*n*, 789, 789*n*, 790*n*, 808-809, 811*n*, 1234*n*; Board of Consultants (Lilienthal Committee), 736, 737*n*, 761-763, 785-786, 786*n*, 790-795, 790*n*, 808-809, 811, 811*n*, 818*n*, 824*n*, 860, 870, 920, 941

Security Council role, 745, 762-763, 803-805, 815-816, 830, 837, 852, 882-883, 885, 887-888, 890-891, 907, 909, 911-913, 916-917, 922-923, 927-929, 942

Wallace incident, 919*n*, 932-944, 932*n*, 939*n*, 944*n*

Budget, apportionment of expenses of regular (administrative) budget:

United Nations—Continued

Budget, apportionment, etc.—Con.

Contributions scale, 461*n*, 462*n*, 463*n*, 464-467, 472-478, 480, 486, 491-494, 496-498, 499*n*

Criteria for: Ability to secure foreign exchange, 461*n*, 464, 474; capacity to pay, 461*n*, 462, 462*n*, 463*n*, 464-467, 471, 474, 476, 481, 483-486, 494, 497-498; net national income, 461*n*, 462*n*, 464, 466, 471, 474; per capita income, 461*n*, 462*n*, 464, 474, 484-486; principle of sovereign equality, 466-467, 468*n*, 470*n*, 471*n*, 475, 477, 481-482, 485, 497-498; war damages, 461*n*, 462-467, 462*n*, 470*n*, 474, 477; war improvement, 464

General Assembly:

Fifth Committee, 467-478, 467*n*, 468*n*, 470*n*, 471*n*, 472*n*, 474*n*, 475*n*, 476*n*, 480-481, 480*n*, 483, 485-486, 488-489, 491-492, 491*n*, 495, 497-498, 498*n*, 499*n*; Subcommittee on contributions, 475, 475*n*, 477-478, 481-486, 481*n*, 489*n*, 490, 491*n*, 492-494; 496-499, 498*n*, 499*n*

Standing Committee on Contributions, 461*n*, 462, 462*n*, 463*n*, 464-469, 465*n*, 472, 472*n*, 474, 476, 484-485, 487, 489-490, 492-494, 494*n*, 496; final report, 464-465, 467, 467*n*, 468, 469, 470*n*, 475, 482

General Assembly resolution, 499*n*

Maximum and minimum contributions, question of, 461*n*, 462, 462*n*, 463*n*, 465-471, 470*n*, 471*n*, 476-477, 476*n*, 479-482, 480*n*, 484-486, 490, 496

U.S. contribution, 462-464, 463*n*, 467, 469-471, 473, 477, 479, 489-492, 496-499, 498*n*, 499*n*

U.S. policy regarding, 25, 123, 461-499 passim

Disarmament, 16, 756-757, 842, 858-860, 888

Australian proposals, 1052-1053, 1052*n*, 1069-1073, 1070*n*, 1078, 1098

British attitude, 1077-1079, 1098

Canadian proposal, 1051-1052, 1051*n*, 1069-1073, 1070*n*, 1078-1079, 1098

Chinese position, 1098

French proposal, 1076*n*

General Assembly role, 716-717, 730, 732, 732*n*, 756-757, 757*n*, 899-902, 979

- United Nations—Continued
 Disarmament—Continued
 General Assembly role—Con.
 First Committee, 1021, 1051, 1051*n*, 1052*n*, 1068–1071, 1069*n*, 1070*n*, 1071*n*, 1076–1077, 1076*n*, 1083–1087, 1085*n*, 1096, 1099*n*, 1103; Subcommittee 3, 1085*n*, 1088, 1088*n*, 1092–1093, 1099, 1099*n*
 Resolution, Dec. 14, 1099–1102, 1099*n*, 1105–1107, 1106*n*; Soviet letter requesting implementation by Security Council, 1104–1105, 1186, 1188; U.S. position, 1105–1108
 Security Council role, 756, 834–835, 840, 900–901, 903
 U.S.S.R. proposal to General Assembly for general reduction of armaments, 973, 979–980, 980*n*, 988–989, 994–996, 1001–1002, 1004–1005, 1007, 1009–1010, 1015, 1020, 1022–1024, 1026, 1031, 1036, 1061, 1061*n*, 1066*n*, 1068–1069; U.S. reaction to, 974, 976–977, 979–980, 982–983, 983*n*, 987, 989–990, 994–996, 1000–1009, 1014–1015, 1023, 1025–1033, 1036, 1039–1040, 1042, 1044–1049, 1054, 1058–1061; U.S.S.R. amendment providing for commissions to control execution of decisions regarding reduction of armaments and prohibition of use of atomic energy for military purposes, 1068–1071, 1073, 1075–1076, 1080, 1084–1087, 1084*n*, 1085*n*; U.S. comment on, 1071–1074
 U.S. proposal regarding the establishment of a Permanent Disarmament Commission, 1028, 1053–1054, 1053*n*, 1061*n*, 1063–1066, 1063*n*; draft resolution, 1061–1066, 1061*n*, 1076–1078, 1076*n*, 1085, 1097
 Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC), 5, 23–25, 29, 31–32, 34, 120, 122–124, 127, 131, 135, 158*n*, 188–189, 191–192, 197–202, 204–205, 205*n*, 221–222, 223*n*, 225*n*, 234–243, 234*n*, 246, 248–249, 295, 524, 527–528, 530, 537–538, 714, 1063
 Commissions, U.S. policy on membership and elections to, 195–196, 195*n*, 206–212, 209*n*, 210*n*, 212*n*
 Election of members: U.S. slate, 139, 155–157, 189, 192–193, 204, 214, 218, 223, 226, 229, 231–233; Five Power discussion of, 155–156; Canadian views on, 199–
- United Nations—Continued
 Economic and Social Council—Con.
 Election of members—Continued
 202, 205–206, 205*n*; U.S. comment on, 202–205, 205*n*; elections, 158, 158*n*, 226–228, 249*n*
 World Federation of Trade Unions, request for collaboration with and vote in. See World Federation of Trade Unions.
 Four-Power Statement, June 7, 1945. See under Security Council: Voting, infra.
 General Assembly, 714–715, 872, 905, 917, 929, 939
 Agenda, 118–119, 119*n*, 284, 289*n*
 Atomic energy. See under Atomic Energy: Commission, supra.
 Committees:
 Elections of, U.S. slates for, 135–136, 137–138, 144–148, 149–151, 153–154, 160, 163–166, 213, 213*n*
 General (see also Relationships between organs of the U.N. and nongovernmental organizations, infra, and World Federation of Trade Unions), 34, 41*n*, 43, 106*n*, 134–136, 142, 164, 213, 213*n*, 289*n*, 313, 315, 317*n*, 507–508, 511, 968
 First (Political and Security), 34, 41*n*, 43, 218, 226, 315–317, 317*n*, 322*n*, 329–331, 340*n*, 346*n*, 347–348, 348*n*, 350, 355–357, 449, 453–454, 503*n*, 505*n*
 Atomic Energy (see also Atomic Energy: Commission, supra), 732*n*, 733–734, 736, 803, 1083, 1089–1090
 Disarmament. See under Disarmament, supra.
 Regulation of armaments, 717, 900, 902
 Soviet proposal regarding reporting on troops in foreign territory (see also Troops in foreign territory, infra), 226, 967–968, 1013, 1016, 1019, 1030, 1030*n*, 1031*n*, 1039, 1042, 1044–1047, 1048*n*, 1050, 1050*n*, 1055, 1055*n*, 1058, 1061, 1061*n*, 1067–1068, 1067*n*, 1068*n*
 Subcommittee, 355–356
 Second (Economic and Financial), 34, 37, 41*n*, 43, 213, 513*n*
 Third (Social and Humanitarian), 34, 41*n*, 43, 213, 247, 513*n*, 514, 518
 Fourth (Trusteeship), 34, 41*n*, 43, 213, 220, 242, 244–245, 250, 250*n*, 549*n*, 550, 558*n*, 559*n*, 560*n*, 653, 665, 675–676,

United Nations—Continued
 General Assembly—Continued
 Committees—Continued
 Fourth (Trusteeship)—Con.
 692-693, 699n, 700-701, 705-706; Subcommittee, 665-666, 676-677, 682, 689n, 693, 693n, 696n, 697, 697n, 699n, 700, 701n, 707n, 708
 Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) (see also under Budget: General Assembly, supra), 34, 41n, 43, 61, 66-67, 66n, 67n, 71n, 73, 73n, 176
 Sixth (Legal), 34, 41n, 43, 62n, 67-68, 67n, 70-72, 71n, 72n, 74, 74n, 76, 76n, 449, 527, 530, 537-538, 537n, 538n, 539n
Ad Hoc Headquarters Committee. See under Headquarters, infra.
 Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Problems, 472, 472n, 494, 494n
 Committee for Codification of International Law, 218, 534
 Credentials Committee, 134, 138
 Standing Committee on Contributions. See under Budget: General Assembly, supra.
 Disarmament. See under Disarmament, supra.
 Postponement of second part of the first session, 36n, 204, 204n, 418, 418n, 441n, 1331n
 President of the General Assembly, 119-120, 134, 136-145, 147-149, 152
 Troops in foreign territory. See Soviet proposal under First Committee, supra, and Troops in foreign territory, infra.
 Trusteeship system. See Trusteeship system, infra.
 U.S. delegations to the first session (London, New York), 5-7, 5n, 34-35, 37-47, 41n, 43n, 51-52
 Veto problem, resolution regarding, 301, 313, 356-357, 1095, 1095n
 Vice Presidents of the General Assembly, 120, 135-138, 140, 142-143, 147
 Headquarters of the United Nations, selection of a permanent site for, 25, 44, 62, 67-71, 74-77, 79-87, 89-93, 95, 101-115, 125-126, 221, 248
 Draft convention, comments and discussion, 67-71, 67n; draft resolution, 67, 67n; U.S. abstention from voting, 70-71, 71n, 74, 103, 106n; resolution and draft special convention, 75, 77; discussion of, 79-81,

United Nations—Continued
 Headquarters of the United Nations—(Continued)
 Draft convention, etc.—Con.
 81n; negotiations between the U.S. and the U.N., 89-93, 95, 95n, 97, 101-102; discussion by U.S. delegation, 101-106, 106n
 General Assembly Ad Hoc Headquarters Committee, 34, 41n, 71n, 104-105, 106n, 112n, 113n; Subcommittee 1, 106n, 108; report, 109n, 111, 111n, 112n, 113n; Rockefeller offer of Manhattan site, 114-115, 115n; Subcommittee 2, 1115n; acceptance of Rockefeller offer, 115n
 Headquarters Commission, 76, 92, 102-106, 106n, 917
 Interim facilities in New York City, 81-85, 84n, 104n
 Sites considered:
 Manhattan, 114-115, 115n
 Presidio of San Francisco, 107-111, 107n, 108n, 109n, 111n, 112, 112n, 113n
 Westchester (N.Y.) and/or Fairfield (Conn.), 76-77, 85
 International Trade Organization, proposed United Nations conference for the establishment of:
 Preparatory Committee for, 678n, 1268, 1271-1273, 1277, 1279, 1291-1292, 1294, 1296-1298, 1300-1302, 1304-1306, 1318-1325, 1325n, 1327, 1329, 1331-1332, 1331n, 1337, 1339, 1342n, 1343-1346, 1345n, 1348n, 1351-1352, 1354n, 1355, 1357-1366, 1372
 U.S. proposals for, 1271-1274, 1276, 1311; U.S. draft resolution, 1277-1281, 1280n, 1286-1287, 1290, 1290n; ECOSOC consideration of and resolution on, 1290-1292, 1292n, 1300, 1302-1303, 1312, 1337
 Membership in the United Nations, admission of states eligible for, 17-18, 121, 357-460
 Departmental team on admission of new members, 188n, 208, 211, 371-375, 379-381, 387-388
 Eligibility for (see also Treaties, conventions, and agreements. Potsdam Communiqué), 376, 388-389, 391
 General Assembly recommendations, 453-454; U.S. position on, 441-453
 Security Council role, position of permanent members:
 China, 413-414, 416-418, 432-435, 460n
 France, 390, 409, 432-435, 437-440

United Nations—Continued
 Membership, etc.—Continued
 Security Council role, position of—
 Continued
 Soviet Union, 404-406, 409, 410,
 419-422, 425-429, 432-436,
 441, 456-460
 United Kingdom, 391-395, 395*n*,
 403-404, 407-408, 423-427,
 432-435
 United States, 357-359, 360*n*, 353-368, 373, 375-379, 396-400,
 423-424, 429-435, 441-450
 States considered for membership:
 Afghanistan, 380-381, 389, 394-
 395, 397, 403-404, 423, 429*n*,
 441-444, 453-454; U.S. position, 399, 403, 411, 419, 422*n*, 423, 445
 Albania, request for admission,
 15, 18-19, 359-368, 361*n*, 363*n*,
 371, 388, 393-395, 401, 403-
 404, 423-425, 427, 435-437, 442-443, 448; General Assembly, possible consideration by, 447-448; Security Council, consideration by,
 360, 362-364, 369-371, 377,
 380-382, 423*n*, 441; U.S. position, 360*n*, 361-369, 361*n*,
 363*n*, 371-379, 382-385, 389,
 397-400, 405, 409-411, 416,
 421, 423-424, 426, 430-432,
 434-435, 441, 444, 448, 451,
 454-455
 Austria, 372, 381, 388, 394, 398,
 403-404, 408; U.S. position,
 389, 396-397, 399-400, 405,
 408-409
 Bulgaria, 291, 364, 366, 394, 405,
 421
 Burma, 381
 Finland, 291, 364, 367, 394
 Hungary, 291, 364, 367, 394, 405
 Iceland, 372, 380, 389, 394-396,
 403-404, 423-424, 429*n*, 441,
 443-444, 453-454; U.S. position, 396-397, 399, 403, 406-
 407, 409-410, 419, 423-424,
 426, 442, 445-446
 Ireland (Eire), 380, 391, 394, 403,
 407-408, 423, 429*n*, 442-443;
 General Assembly, possible
 consideration by, 447-448;
 U.S. position, 389, 396-399,
 405, 408-409, 419, 423-424,
 426, 431-432, 441, 448, 451
 Italy, 372, 381, 391, 394, 398, 403-
 404, 408; U.S. position, 389,
 396-397, 399-400, 405, 408-409
 Korea, 373
 Mongolian Peoples Republic, 381,
 395, 400-401, 413, 423-425,
 427, 429*n*, 434-435, 441-443;

United Nations—Continued
 Membership, etc.—Continued
 States considered for membership—
 Continued
 Mongolian Peoples Republic—Con-
 General Assembly, possible
 consideration by, 447-448;
 U.S. position, 397, 406, 409,
 412, 416-417, 421-424, 426,
 430-432, 435, 441, 444, 448,
 451-452
 Muscat, 394, 397, 404
 Nepal, 381, 394, 397, 404
 Portugal, 121, 359, 380, 391, 394-
 396, 403-404, 409, 421, 423, 429*n*, 442-444; General Assembly, possible consideration by, 447-448; U.S. position, 399, 405, 409-410, 419,
 423-424, 426, 431-432, 441,
 448, 451
 Rumania, 291, 364, 367, 394, 405
 Siam, 372, 373, 373*n*, 381, 388-390,
 390*n*, 394-401, 404, 409, 423,
 429*n*, 433, 437, 437*n*, 440, 443,
 456*n*, 458*n*; postponement of Siamese request, 438-441, 440*n*, 444; reapplication and acceptance, 456-460, 456*n*,
 460*n*; U.S. position, 388-389,
 397*n*, 399, 405, 409, 423-424,
 429*n*, 435, 437, 440, 456
 Soviet Republics, additional, 381,
 395, 397, 412, 425
 Soviet satellites, 396, 398, 400, 409
 Spain, 364, 366, 388, 391, 405, 409,
 419, 421
 Sweden, 372, 380, 389, 394-395,
 400-403, 407, 421, 423-424,
 429*n*, 441, 443-444, 453-454;
 U.S. position, 396-397, 399-
 403, 406, 409-410, 419, 423-
 424, 426, 442, 446
 Switzerland, 373, 380, 389, 394-
 396, 399, 404-405, 419
 Tibet, 393, 397, 404
 Transjordan, 394-395, 403-404,
 411-416, 423, 425, 429*n*, 443-
 444; General Assembly, possible consideration by, 447-
 448; U.S. position, 397, 412-
 416, 414*n*, 415*n*, 422, 441, 448,
 451
 Yemen, 381, 395, 397, 404
 U.S. resolution on procedure to be adopted by the Security Council in connection with applications for membership, 373, 375-
 377, 379-388, 380*n*, 385*n*, 386*n*,
 403, 410, 418, 443

United Nations—Continued

Military Staff Committee, 19-20, 20*n*, 24-25, 32, 719, 727-730, 728*n*, 734*n*, 755, 759-760, 764-766, 766*n*, 769*n*, 770, 790-801, 816, 840, 844, 873-876, 874*n*, 885, 887-890, 892, 895, 898, 900-901, 906, 908, 910-911, 914-916, 918, 918*n*, 930-932, 950-951, 963, 977, 979, 996-1000, 996*n*, 997*n*, 1000*n*, 1062, 1065, 1072, 1080

Attitudes toward:

China, 775, 775*n*, 784, 931

France, 784, 931

Soviet Union, 728-729, 730*n*, 734, 775*n*, 783-784, 790, 802, 874, 875*n*, 915-916, 915*n*, 930-931, 949-950

U.K., 734, 775-776, 775*n*, 784, 826, 917-918, 931, 953

U.S., 728, 728*n*, 732, 734, 734*n*, 738, 740, 754*n*, 755-757, 775*n*, 780, 784, 785*n*, 796-801, 796*n*

Subcommittee on basic principles, 766, 766*n*, 770-771, 771*n*, 775*n*, 783-784, 790, 802, 874, 914-916, 930-932, 932*n*, 951, 977, 996-997, 996*n*, 997*n*, 1094-1095, 1094*n*, 1095*n*

Subcommittee to make recommendations regarding a standard form of agreement for the provision of armed forces, 874-875, 874*n*, 918, 918*n*, 930-932, 953-955, 977

U.S. representatives on, 738, 740, 754*n*, 759, 759*n*, 764*n*, 765-766, 766*n*, 770, 770*n*, 771*n*, 774-775, 775*n*, 796-798, 796*n*, 800-802, 812, 843-846, 843*n*, 874-876, 885, 914*n*, 917, 919-920, 930, 930*n*, 932, 949-951, 950*n*, 953*n*, 955, 996-997, 999, 1020, 1037, 1037*n*, 1084*n*, 1091*n*, 1094-1096

Nongovernmental organizations, relationship to the U.N., 499-505, 499*n*, 500*n*, 501*n*, 503*n*, 505*n*, 509, 514-523

Preparatory Commission of the U.N., 1*n*, 3, 7, 61, 68, 68*n*, 70, 71*n*, 117-119, 117*n*, 119*n*, 120*n*, 123-124, 133*n*, 134, 140, 143, 145-146, 152, 159*n*, 168, 179, 195*n*, 251*n*

Executive Committee of the, 117-119, 117*n*, 119*n*, 120*n*, 123-124, 134, 165, 361, 462*n*, 715, 715*n*, 727, 754*n*

Interim Committee of the, 71*n*

Report, 61-62, 61*n*, 65, 65*n*, 68, 68*n*, 117*n*, 465, 1279*n*

Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, 60-68, 67*n*, 68*n*, 70-75, 77*n*, 78-79, 87-89, 91, 93-96, 101, 115-116

United Nations—Continued

Privileges and Immunities, etc.—Con.

Draft convention by Preparatory Commission, comments on, 61-68, 68*n*, 70

Draft general convention on privileges and immunities, 68, 68*n*, 70-74, 73*n*; U.S. reservations, 74, 74*n*; resolution and draft convention, 74-75; discussion of, 77-79, 91, 94-95, 97-98, 98*n*

Interim arrangement, U.N. proposal for, 96, 98-99, 99*n*

Major issues:

Diplomatic status: U.S. view on diplomatic privileges and immunities, 63-65, 70; diplomatic immunities for members of the Security Council, question of, 89, 89*n*, 93-94

Laissez-passer for U.N. officials, 98, 100-101, 100*n*,

National service obligations, exemption from, 64, 68, 72-73, 72*n*; Soviet reservation, 115; U.S. reservation, 74, 74*n*, 115-116

Taxes:

Tax equalization proposal, 66-67, 66*n*, 73, 73*n*

Tax exemptions, 64, 66*n*, 67*n*, 70, 72-73, 72*n*; U.S. reservation concerning, 74, 74*n*

U.N. passports, question of, 65, 70, 75-76, 75*n*, 87-89

Secretary General, 26, 120-122, 124, 152, 159-160, 198, 213*n*, 299, 307, 309, 314, 323, 323*n*, 359, 375, 376*n*, 379, 381, 385*n*, 390, 392-393, 401, 406-407, 410, 442, 445, 456*n*, 495*n*, 500, 507-508, 531-533, 535, 618, 632, 635, 665, 784, 952-953, 952*n*, 961, 1030, 1042-1045, 1051, 1065, 1070*n*, 1100, 1104-1105, 1337, 1343

Election of: U.S. slate, 139; discussion of candidates by U.S. delegation, 172-182; Five-Power talks on, 161-163, 166-169, 183-184; election of Trygve Lie, 184*n*, 333

Security:

Maintenance of international peace and security, 8, 16-18, 126-127, 127*n*, 190-191, 197, 200, 252*n*, 255, 266, 279, 283, 285, 296*n*, 308*n*, 310, 326, 342, 416, 552*n*, 605, 610*n*, 614, 616, 652*n*, 693, 700, 714-716, 834, 895, 912-913, 915*n*, 918, 972*n*, 997*n*, 1003, 1062, 1101-1102, 1109, 1112-1113, 1135, 1137, 1161-1162, 1164

United Nations—Continued

Security—Continued

- Military Staff Committee. See Military Staff Committee, supra.
- Permanent international security forces, 798
- Security forces under provisions of Art. 43 of the U.N. Charter, 310, 446, 580, 687, 691, 693, 698-700, 755, 755*n*, 764-766, 770-771, 780*n*, 784-785, 915, 915*n*, 918, 931, 963, 977, 995, 997-998, 1006, 1009, 1013, 1031, 1042, 1044, 1050*n*, 1051, 1062, 1071, 1092, 1101, 1109, 1162
- Security system, 684, 755, 755*n*, 759-760, 785, 900, 918-919, 930-931, 1114
- Regional arrangements, 772, 780, 799-800
- U.N. forces agreements, development of U.S. position on, 718-721, 718*n*, 754-755, 759-760, 764-766, 769-773, 769*n*, 779-780, 780*n*, 796-802, 796*n*, 873, 917-919, 918*n*, 930-932; Soviet position, 874, 915, 915*n*, 949; U.K. proposals, 917-919, 918*n*
- Security Council, 1-2, 5*n*, 8-11, 10*n*, 14*n*, 15, 21, 29, 31-32, 158*n*, 302, 714-715, 904
- Atomic Energy. See under Atomic Energy, supra.
- Committee of Experts, 20, 20*n*, 1072
 - Admission of new states, 370-371, 370*n*, 376-377, 376*n*, 379-383, 382*n*, 383*n*, 384*n*, 386, 386*n*, 450, 482
 - Rules of procedure, voting in the Security Council, 251, 251*n*, 253-254, 257, 260-272, 260*n*, 261*n*, 265*n*, 268*n*, 274-280, 274*n*, 282-289, 282*n*, 283*n*, 290*n*, 291, 302, 318-321, 321*n*, 322*n*, 334
- Decisions of the Security Council, legal obligation on members to carry out, 297, 297*n*, 580, 605, 610*n*, 651
- Disarmament and Regulation of Armaments. See under Armaments: Regulation of, supra, and under Disarmament, supra.
- Membership. See Committee of Experts, supra, and under Membership, supra.
- Military Staff Committee. See Military Staff Committee, supra.
- Nonpermanent membership on the Security Council:
 - Arab delegation slate, 222
 - British views on, 216-217, 216*n*, 221-222
 - Canadian views on, 199-202; U.S. comment, 202-204

United Nations—Continued

Security Council—Continued

- Nonpermanent membership on the Security Council—Continued
 - Election of, 157-158, 157*n*, 191, 226
 - Five-Power discussion of, 146-149, 153-156
 - U.S. delegation discussion of, 119-121, 123, 188, 190, 197-203, 214-215, 218-221
 - U.S. slate, 139, 146, 153, 156-157, 181, 204, 214, 218, 225-226, 225*n*, 229, 234, 238-239, 243, 246
- President of the Security Council, 324
- Rules of procedure for the Security Council, 251-252, 251*n*, 253*n*, 260*n*, 261-263, 262*n*, 270, 277, 281, 283-285, 287, 290*n*, 297, 302, 304-305, 316-319, 321-325, 321*n*, 322*n*, 337, 340*n*, 348, 351, 353, 372, 376, 386
- Security forces. See under Security, supra.
- Strategic area mandates, responsibility for (see also Trusteeship agreements for strategic areas under Trusteeship system, infra), 568, 571-573, 575, 598, 675-676, 685-686, 691, 707
- Troops in foreign territories. See Troops in foreign territories, infra.
- Trusteeships, Security Council role in. See under Trusteeship system, infra.
- Voting in the Security Council (see also Rules of procedure, supra, and Rules of procedure under Committee of Experts, supra), 47, 251, 253*n*, 282, 289, 970, 970*n*
- Amendment to rules of procedure, Soviet proposal for, 251-252, 251*n*, 265-267, 265*n*, 271, 271*n*, 284, 286, 288; British and Australian views on, 253-255, 274-277, 279, 282*n*, 288, 348-349; Chinese view of, 268; U.S. views on and discussion of, 254-257, 264, 267, 271-273, 280-281, 289-313, 290*n*, 322*n*; Committee of Experts, referral to, 261-262, 265-271, 322*n*; General Assembly First Committee subcommittee, 355-356; General Assembly First Committee report, 356; General Assembly resolution, 356-357
- Committee of Five Deputies (San Francisco, 1945): Minutes of 24th meeting, 273; minutes of 29th meeting, 264, 264*n*

United Nations—Continued
Security Council—Continued

- Voting in Security Council—Con.
Dispute vs. Situation, problem regarding interpretation of, 251*n*, 252, 252*n*, 254–257, 260, 267–270, 276, 278, 285–286, 304–305, 321, 327
- Disputes:
Abstention from voting by a party to a dispute under Art. 27 (3), 252, 252*n*, 255–266, 268–274, 276–279, 282–288, 282*n*, 303, 317, 319, 321, 327–328, 335–336, 338
- Voluntary abstention without effect of veto, 328–329, 328*n*, 331–335, 346, 349, 412, 433–434, 434*n*, 437
- Four-Power Statement, June 7, 1945 (also referred to as the San Francisco Declaration), 251, 253, 253*n*, 259*n*, 265, 267–270, 267*n*, 272, 275, 284–285, 292*n*, 294–295, 297–300, 302–306, 303*n*, 308, 317, 319, 321, 323–324, 326–327, 334–335, 337–339, 344–346
- Procedural matters or questions, voting on, 259–260, 262–264, 267–268, 275, 278–279, 283–285, 297, 303–306, 303*n*, 321–322; U.S. proposals for subjects to be treated as procedural, 322–327, 331–333
- Substantive matters or questions, 259–260, 262, 264, 267–268, 270, 275, 278, 284–287, 306, 336, 338–339, 349
- Unanimity rule, 286*n*, 290*n*, 297, 299–301, 300*n*, 301*n*, 313, 315–316, 320–321, 336–338, 345, 348, 351, 954, 970, 1062, 1069–1070, 1080, 1085
- Veto by permanent members of the Security Council, question of, 36*n*, 37, 128–129, 258, 263–264, 266, 268, 277, 286–287, 289–292, 298–299, 301*n*, 303, 332, 341–343, 345–346, 348–349, 351, 354; U.S. position on, 290, 290*n*, 293–297, 299–329; Australian proposal to General Assembly, 289–292, 292*n*, 298, 306, 312, 320, 340*n*, 343, 356; Cuban proposal to call General Conference of United Nations members, 289, 289*n*, 292, 292*n*, 298*n*, 312, 314, 320, 343, 356; U.S. position regarding Australian and Cuban proposals, 329–340, 344, 349, 352; General Assembly First Committee report, 356; General Assembly resolution, 356–357, 1095, 1095*n*

United Nations—Continued
Security Council—Continued

- Voting in Security Council—Con.
Veto by permanent members of the Security Council—Continued
- Admission of new states, 299, 307, 309, 314, 402, 409, 421, 424, 426, 428, 433, 435–439, 441–442, 444, 447–454, 457, 459, 490, 494
- Atomic Energy, 318, 322, 721–722, 744, 748, 799, 804, 810, 825, 839, 845, 852, 863–864, 873, 887, 891, 894, 908, 922, 924, 942, 957, 979–980, 1008, 1029, 1096–1098
- Disarmament, 1063*n*, 1069–1070, 1072, 1079–1080, 1085*n*, 1087–1088, 1091, 1097–1098, 1109
- Strategic area mandates, 564, 568, 572–573, 575, 596, 669, 671, 680–681, 686
- Voting procedure under Art. 27 of the Charter of the United Nations and the Four-Power Statement of June 7, 1945, U.S. policy regarding questions relating to, 251–357 passim
- Yalta voting formula, 254, 254*n*, 268, 276, 297, 300*n*, 303, 306, 318, 320, 326–327, 336–338, 344
- Specialized agencies of the United Nations, 499, 507, 507*n*, 514, 519, 523; U.S. participation in the activities of the intergovernmental agencies related to the United Nations (the specialized agencies), 524
- Troops in foreign territories, Soviet proposal for reports on:
General Assembly (see also under General Assembly: Committees: First Committee), 953*n*, 973, 1013, 1019, 1030, 1030*n*, 1032–1033, 1037, 1037*n*, 1039–1041, 1051*n*, 1052*n*, 1055, 1058, 1067, 1067*n*, 1071, 1073; Argentine resolution, 1068, 1068*n*; Egyptian resolution, 1068, 1068*n*; French position, 1066–1067; General Assembly resolution, 1099, 1099*n*; U.K. position, 961–963, 1012–1014, 1020, 1031–1033, 1039–1042, 1044–1045, 1048–1051, 1048*n*, 1050*n*, 1053, 1055–1056, 1059–1060, 1060*n*, 1061*n*, 1066–1068, 1067*n*, 1081, 1081*n*; U.S. position, 953–954, 953*n*, 960–961, 961*n*, 962*n*, 967–969, 971–972, 971*n*, 972*n*, 975*n*, 977, 1006, 1012–1016, 1019–1020, 1037–1050, 1037*n*, 1050*n*, 1053–1060, 1067*n*, 1081

United Nations—Continued

Troops in foreign territories, etc.—Continued

Security Council, 892-895, 893*n*, 906*n*, 973; views on by China, 899; France, 898; U.K., 894-896; U.S., 894-897, 905-906

Trusteeship Council, 23-25, 30-32, 120, 135, 144, 188-189, 197-199, 206, 221-222, 234, 238, 241, 243-247, 247*n*, 249, 250*n*, 545, 550, 555, 560, 572-573, 579-581, 586, 588, 595, 597, 599-606, 608-609, 624, 629, 633, 641, 645, 647-651, 654-655, 659-661, 664-667, 669, 677, 690, 694, 694*n*, 696-697, 699-701, 703-704, 706-708, 714; U.S. slate for elections to, 189, 194, 215-216, 242-243, 245, 247, 249-250, 250*n*

Trusteeship system, establishment of an international (see also General Assembly: Committees: Fourth, supra, and Trusteeship Council, supra), 47, 131-132, 544-711 passim

General Assembly role, 573-574, 576, 578-581, 586, 588, 591-592, 594-596, 598-599, 601, 604, 608, 612, 614-615, 617-620, 625, 625*n*, 628-630, 634-640, 640*n*, 643-646, 648-654, 653*n*, 657, 665-672, 675, 677, 681, 686, 692, 699-701, 703, 706, 708

Issues, problems, questions raised in establishment of:

Annexation of mandates or enemy territory, 637-638, 657-658, 661-662, 686, 688-689, 690, 691

Aviation rights, 600, 630-631, 642-643, 647, 655-656

Conquest, right of, 575-576, 680

Consultations regarding terms of trusteeship agreements, 576-578, 589, 593-594, 596-598, 602, 611, 617, 619, 625, 628-629, 634, 636, 640, 652, 671-672, 701-702, 704, 706

Italian colonies, disposition of, 544-546, 571, 690, 698, 703-704

Korea, status of, 544-546, 548; agreement with the U.S.S.R. for four-power trusteeship, 545, 1131

Mandated territories, transfer of, 545-546, 545*n*, 548-550

Military establishments in trust territories, 690-692, 698-700, 699*n*, 707

Monopolies in trust territories, 602-607, 639-642, 645-648, 650, 655, 659-661, 663-664, 663*n*, 677-678, 678*n*, 683, 693-694, 693*n*, 694*n*

United Nations—Continued

Trusteeship system, etc.—Con.

Issues, problems, etc.—Con.

Most-favored-nation vs. national treatment, 688

Nonstrategic (ordinary) trusteeships, 552, 552*n*, 573, 681, 687, 691-693, 699*n*

Reservation of legal rights under existing treaties, 576-577, 589, 630

"States directly concerned," 546, 549-550, 554-558, 560*n*, 561-569, 562*n*, 566*n*, 571-578, 579*n*, 589-591, 593-598, 610-611, 614-620, 625-626, 625*n*, 628, 629*n*, 630, 632, 634-636, 638-640, 644, 649, 651-655, 666-671, 675-677, 681, 685-686, 690-691, 697-698, 697*n*, 700-708, 701*n*, 705*n*, 707*n*

Strategic area trusteeships, 544-545, 552, 552*n*, 568, 571, 573, 575, 609, 611, 623-624, 637-638, 662, 674-675, 681, 683, 687, 691, 693

Pacific Islands (see also under Trusteeship agreements for strategic areas, infra), civil administration for certain U.S. controlled, 695-696, 695*n*; de facto possession of certain, 691

Security Council role (see also voting by permanent members: Strategic area mandates under Security Council, supra), 597, 605, 617, 627, 654, 667, 690-691, 701

Trusteeship agreements, 560, 653, 653*n*; form of, 547-548; effect on U.S. conventions with mandatory powers, 671-674

Trusteeship agreements for non-strategic areas, 125, 193-194, 242-245, 247*n*, 250*n*

Australian proposals for trusteeship over mandated territory in New Guinea, 613-614, 613*n*, 621*n*, 622, 629*n*, 631*n*, 640, 640*n*, 656, 678*n*, 679, 679*n*, 680-681, 690, 696, 696*n*, 697*n*, 705*n*

Belgian proposals for trusteeship over mandated territory of Ruanda-Urundi, 566-567, 566*n*, 570, 576-577, 579*n*, 601*n*, 602-603, 603*n*, 625, 625*n*, 629*n*, 630, 659*n*, 678*n*

French proposals for trusteeship over mandated territories of French Cameroons and French Togoland, 550, 579*n*, 601*n*, 602, 603*n*, 629*n*, 631*n*, 642, 650-651, 650*n*, 659*n*, 678*n*

United Nations—Continued

Trusteeship system, etc.—Con.

Trusteeship agreements for non-strategic areas—Continued

New Zealand proposals for trusteeship over mandated territory of Western Samoa, 609-612, 610*n*, 616, 616*n*, 622, 629*n*, 631*n*, 652, 652*n*, 657-658, 657*n*, 659*n*, 663, 663*n*, 676, 678*n*, 687, 690, 693*n*, 696, 699*n*

United Kingdom proposals for trusteeship over mandated territories of British Cameroons, British Togoland, and Tanganyika, U.S. discussion of, 553*n*, 556, 561, 561*n*, 565-567, 565*n*, 570, 576-577; U.S. reply, 577-595; London discussions, 595-603, 601*n*, 603*n*; draft agreement for Tanganyika, 604-609, 604*n*, 608*n*, 610*n*, 612-613, 616-617, 620-621, 626-632, 632*n*, 634-636, 638-651, 656-657, 659-661, 663-664, 663*n*, 677

Trusteeship agreements for strategic areas (see also under Security Council, supra), 247, 250, 311, 1110

Pacific islands detached from Japan (Bonins, Volcano, Izu, Marcus, Ryukyus including Okinawa, Kuriles), 546-547, 571-575, 597, 617, 623, 626-627, 626*n*, 674, 679-680, 689-690, 1110, 1114, 1117, 1177

Pacific islands under mandate to Japan (Carolines, Marianas, Marshalls), 544-547, 551-552, 551*n*, 558, 562, 566-568, 566*n*, 570-571, 573-576, 589-590, 597, 617, 637-638, 657-658, 660-662, 673*n*, 674-675, 679, 1110, 1114, 1117, 1172, 1177

President Truman's press conference, Jan. 15, 551, 558

President Truman's Declaration of Nov. 6 proposing a strategic area trusteeship with the U.S. as administering authority for the Pacific islands formerly under mandate to Japan and certain other islands detached from Japan, 674-675, 1110; reactions of, Australians, 681; British, 678*n*, 703, 711; Philippines, 684; Soviets, 679-682, 685-686, 690-692, 701, 710-711

U.S. draft agreement for strategic trusteeship, 622-624, 622*n*, 626-628, 626*n*, 627*n*, 675*n*, 682, 683*n*, 684-689, 692-693

United Nations—Continued

Trusteeship system, etc.—Con.

U.S. Group on Trusteeship, 554, 644*n*

U.S. participation in trust territories other than Pacific, Korea, and Italian colonies, proposed policy regarding, 544-546

U.S. representation at the United Nations, 1-7, 1*n*, 2*n*, 3*n*, 5*n*, 12-14, 12*n*, 20, 23-26, 28-33, 34-35, 34*n*, 37-45

United Nations Charter, 1*n*, 16, 22, 43, 51-52, 56-57, 60-61, 63, 72-73, 73*n*, 88, 97, 117, 117*n*, 121, 126-133, 149, 157, 162, 179, 189-190, 192-193, 197, 200-202, 214, 251*n*, 252, 254-260, 254*n*, 256*n*, 263, 265, 267*n*, 271-272, 274*n*, 276, 279-280, 282-284, 289, 289*n*, 291, 292*n*, 294-295, 297-299, 297*n*, 298*n*, 301-302, 304, 306-307, 309-311, 313-315, 321, 327-329, 332-333, 335-336, 338, 343-345, 349, 351, 354, 357, 357*n*, 360-361, 375, 376*n*, 377, 394, 399, 407, 410, 414, 419, 421-422, 424, 430-433, 435, 442-445, 447, 451-454, 467, 477, 504, 505*n*, 507*n*, 525-527, 525*n*, 530, 555, 559, 559*n*, 566*n*, 572, 574, 577, 579, 585-587, 596, 598, 600, 605, 609, 610*n*, 611, 615-616, 620, 622-623, 632, 640, 643-644, 647, 652*n*, 666, 668-671, 673, 675, 680, 682, 686, 688, 691, 701*n*, 706, 714-716, 718, 721, 729, 733, 747, 759, 772, 798-801, 833-834, 834*n*, 839, 852, 876, 895, 898-899, 901, 903, 913, 915*n*, 918, 922-924, 931, 950, 952, 954, 970, 975, 979, 984, 997*n*, 1006, 1008, 1026, 1029, 1062, 1068, 1068*n*, 1075, 1080, 1095, 1101, 1109-1110, 1120, 1124, 1126, 1128, 1162, 1166, 1169, 1193, 1214-1215, 1279, 1279*n*, 1493; amendment of, questions regarding, 299, 307, 309-312, 314, 316, 320, 336, 341, 344, 346

United Nations Conference on Food and Agriculture, 1943, 1372

United Nations Conference on International Organization (San Francisco Conference, 1945), 1*n*, 8, 56, 58, 63, 117, 253*n*, 321, 330, 337, 341, 344, 430, 521, 525, 532, 714, 714*n*, 844*n*, 876, 956, 956*n*

United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), 495, 507*n*, 511-513

United Nations Liaison Committee, 15*n*, 21-22, 26, 36, 36*n*, 188*n*, 289*n*, 371-372, 371*n*

United Nations Monetary and Financial Conference, July 1944. See Bretton Woods Conference.

- United Nations Participation Act of Dec. 19, 1945, 1-2, 1*n*, 2*n*, 23, 25, 29, 31-32, 44-45, 49-50, 953
- United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (UNRRA), 77, 445, 470, 495, 507, 530, 1356, 1391, 1398, 1422, 1437, 1440, 1448
- UNRRA Council, 322, 1446
- U.S. policy with respect to the termination of international relief activities through UNRRA, 1446-1447
- United States:
- Antarctic Service Expedition of 1939-1941. See under Antarctica.
 - Armaments and collective security, U.S. policy at the United Nations with respect to (see also United Nations: Armaments), 712-1109 passim
 - Atomic Energy:
 - Arrangements with Belgium regarding uranium ores in the Belgian Congo, question of disclosure of, 1233-1234, 1234*n*, 1237-1238, 1243-1244, 1244*n*, 1247-1248
 - Atomic bomb test on Bikini atoll, 789, 789*n*, 964, 1203-1204, 1203*n*, 1204*n*, 1217-1218, 1218*n*, 1248-1249, 1249*n*
 - Atomic Energy Commission, 743, 782, 907-908, 929, 1253-1254, 1259
 - Chalk river project in Canada, 1228, 1245
 - Combined Development Trust, 964-966, 965*n*, 1205*n*, 1209-1212, 1215, 1218, 1220, 1222-1229, 1223*n*, 1226*n*, 1235, 1239, 1245-1246, 1253-1257
 - Combined Policy Committee, 964-965, 1204-1205, 1205*n*, 1207-1215, 1215*n*, 1218-1233, 1223*n*, 1225*n*, 1235-1236, 1238, 1238*n*, 1242-1245, 1242*n*, 1250-1252, 1254, 1256-1257, 1257*n*
 - Foreign policy aspects of United States development of, 1197-1259 passim
 - McMahon Bill, 783, 783*n*, 870, 872, 881, 965, 1253, 1257, 1259
 - Manhattan Engineer District, 735*n*, 736*n*, 738, 738*n*, 751*n*, 807*n*, 812*n*, 877, 920, 964-966, 964*n*, 1197, 1197*n*, 1200, 1207, 1223, 1228*n*, 1237-1240
 - May-Johnson Bill, 1202
 - Memorandum of Nov. 16, 1945, joint British-Canadian-American, regarding continued cooperation in field of atomic energy, 1205, 1205*n*, 1208, 1215, 1218-1219, 1230-1232, 1232*n*, 1234-1236, 1234*n*, 1244, 1252, 1259
- United States—Continued
- Atomic Energy—Continued
 - Memorandum of Intention signed by Gen. Groves and Sir John Anderson, Nov. 16, 1945, 1232, 1232*n*, 1234-1236, 1235*n*, 1251
 - Patents, wartime arrangements for, 1210, 1210*n*
 - Plutonium piles, 1216, 1240
 - Quebec Agreements, revision of, 1204-1207; draft memoranda of agreement, 1208-1213; discussion by Combined Policy Committee, 1213-1215; British comments on, 1218-1223, 1229-1231
 - Thorium, 1209-1212, 1220-1224, 1254
 - U.S.-U.K. cooperation, negotiations with respect to the continuation of cooperation, 735, 735*n*, 783, 1207-1208, 1207*n*; statement by British Ambassador regarding British intention to set up atomic research establishment in the U.K., 1215-1216; British position on allocation of raw materials, 1225-1226, 1228; U.S. position, 1226, 1228; discussion by Combined Policy Committee, 1228-1229; Attlee-Truman exchanges, 1231-1232, 1235-1237, 1249-1253, 1259
 - Uranium, 1209-1212, 1217, 1220-1227, 1233, 1234*n*, 1239-1241, 1245, 1247-1248, 1254
 - Civil Aeronautics Board, 1452-1455, 1452*n*, 1453*n*, 1461-1462, 1490
 - Constitution, 33, 69-70, 74*n*, 109, 313, 543, 1125, 1140
 - Executive Committee on Economic Foreign Policy (ECEFP), 1183-1184, 1183*n*, 1260-1261, 1283*n*, 1306, 1328*n*, 1330, 1330*n*, 1332, 1336, 1367*n*, 1370-1374
 - Export-Import Bank of Washington, 483*n*, 1386*n*, 1388*n*, 1392, 1393*n*, 1394-1407, 1394*n*, 1399*n*, 1401*n*, 1405*n*, 1409-1413, 1412*n*, 1416-1419, 1417*n*, 1421-1436, 1437*n*, 1438, 1438*n*
 - Question of loans to:
 - Belgium, 1396, 1396*n*, 1401, 1403-1404, 1407, 1409-1410, 1409*n*, 1412, 1412*n*, 1416, 1420, 1435
 - China, 1396, 1413, 1416, 1420-1422, 1427-1428, 1433, 1436
 - Czechoslovakia, 1409*n*, 1416, 1420, 1429, 1431-1432
 - Denmark, 1401, 1412*n*, 1416, 1420, 1429, 1436
 - Egypt, 1416, 1420
 - Ethiopia, 1435
 - Finland, 1416, 1420, 1429, 1436

United States—Continued

- Export-Import Bank of Washington—Continued
- Question of loans to—Continued
 - France, 1396, 1401, 1403, 1405, 1409–1410, 1409*n*, 1412, 1416, 1420, 1427, 1429–1430, 1432–1435, 1432*n*, 1434*n*
 - Greece, 1396, 1416, 1420, 1429, 1436
 - India, 1420, 1429
 - Italy, 1396, 1416, 1420, 1425–1429
 - Latin America, 1396, 1412*n*, 1420, 1422, 1429
 - Netherlands, 1396, 1401, 1403, 1405, 1407*n*, 1409–1410, 1412, 1412*n*, 1416, 1420, 1422, 1429, 1436
 - Netherlands East Indies, 1403, 1405, 1407–1409, 1407*n*, 1409*n*, 1416, 1420, 1428
 - Norway, 1396, 1401, 1412*n*, 1416, 1420, 1429, 1436
 - Philippines, 1416, 1420, 1422, 1429
 - Poland, 1396, 1409*n*, 1416–1417, 1420, 1428, 1433–1434, 1433*n*, 1434*n*
 - Saudi Arabia, 1396, 1416, 1420
 - Turkey, 1396, 1416, 1420, 1429
 - U.S.S.R., 1396, 1401, 1403, 1407–1409, 1409*n*, 1413, 1416–1421, 1427, 1429–1432, 1432*n*, 1435–1436
 - U.K., 1401, 1409*n*
 - Yugoslavia, 1396, 1416, 1420, 1429
- Foreign Economic Administration (FEA), 1391, 1418
- Foreign Liquidation Commissioner, 1190, 1195
- House of Representatives, 80, 98, 100, 470, 1381, 1395, 1398
- Joint Chiefs of Staff, 20, 552, 569, 610, 614*n*, 626*n*, 627–628, 627*n*, 719, 728–731, 737–748, 738*n*, 754–757, 754*n*, 759, 769, 769*n*, 773–775, 796–802, 796*n*, 812, 812*n*, 816, 826, 833*n*, 841*n*, 843–845, 851, 856, 887–888, 908, 910, 914*n*, 917, 919–920, 930, 950*n*, 951, 953, 953*n*, 955, 967, 996, 1037, 1037*n*, 1054, 1061*n*, 1091–1092, 1091*n*, 1095, 1107–1109, 1112–1117, 1119–1120, 1119*n*, 1120*n*, 1122–1123, 1127, 1132, 1139–1140, 1142–1145, 1145*n*, 1148*n*, 1150–1151, 1153, 1155, 1160–1166, 1160*n*, 1165*n*, 1167*n*, 1171–1179, 1177*n*, 1183, 1204, 1217, 1248, 1249*n*, 1458*n*, 1463, 1466, 1468–1469, 1468*n*, 1471, 1474–1476, 1476*n*
- Joint Staff Planners, 738, 738*n*, 774, 1171*n*
- Joint Strategic Survey Committee, 738, 738*n*, 754*n*, 755–757, 796*n*, 873, 1037*n*, 1120*n*

United States—Continued

- Lend-Lease arrangements (see also under National Security policy, infra), 1255, 1391–1392, 1395*n*, 1398, 1404, 1407–1408, 1410, 1412, 1421, 1438; Art. VII, 1351, 1366, 1436; 3(c) agreements, 1396, 1396*n*, 1401, 1401*n*, 1404–1407, 1410
- Maritime Commission, 1121*n*
- National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems (NAC), 1386*n*, 1390, 1398–1399, 1402–1405, 1409, 1411–1412, 1416, 1418, 1424–1425, 1427–1432, 1431*n*, 1434–1436, 1434*n*, 1435*n*, 1438*n*
- National Security Council, 1160*n*
- National Security policy, 712*n*, 1110–1196
 - Air transport command facilities, requirements for, 1133
 - Arms and ammunition, policy toward export of, 731, 841
 - Arms standardization program, 841, 843, 1187
 - Atomic weapons, influence on army of the future, 1197–1203
 - Commercial transport systems, development of and maintenance of U.S. domestic and international, 1164
 - Export control of matériel, technological information, and inventions, 1178–1179
 - Lend-Lease: Liquidation and settlement of, 1141*n*, 1151, 1151*n*; retention, return or recapture of lend-lease military supplies, 1145*n*, 1146–1147, 1151–1152, 1155, 1157, 1190–1195
 - Merchant marine, maintenance of large, 1121, 1127, 1164
 - Military air transit rights and technical stop, 1110, 1114–1115, 1142–1145, 1142*n*; JCS memorandum on U.S. requirements for, 1142–1145, 1142*n*, 1173, 1180–1182
 - Military assistance to foreign governments, 840*n*, 842, 1110, 1145–1160, 1145*n*, 1185–1196
 - Military bases: JCS recommendations on U.S. requirements for military bases and base rights outside the continental limits of the U.S., 1110, 1112–1117, 1163–1164, 1170–1177; essential base areas, 1172–1173, 1175–1176, 1180–1182; required base areas, 1173–1175, 1177, 1180–1182

United States—Continued

- National Security policy—Continued
 - Military forces: Demobilization of, 1111-1112; withdrawal from bases on foreign territory, 1171-1174, 1179-1182
 - Mobilization of manpower, resources, and industry, plans and preparations for, 1164
 - Munitions Board, Army and Navy, 1178-1179
 - National Munitions Control Board, 1188
 - Policy Committee on Arms and Armaments, 833*n*, 840, 840*n*, 841*n*, 899*n*, 994-995, 1186-1187, 1186*n*, 1189-1191, 1194-1196
 - Strategic material, stockpiling of, 1121, 1127, 1164, 1183-1184
 - Surplus military equipment, disposition of, 841-842, 1141-1142, 1141*n*, 1146, 1186, 1190-1192, 1194-1195
 - U.S. foreign policy, 1111, 1125-1127, 1129, 1131, 1147, 1151; Department of State memorandum on, 1134-1139; JCS comments on, 1139-1140, 1165-1166
 - U.S. military policy: JCS statement of, 842, 1119-1127, 1119*n*, 1160*n*; discussion by Secretary of State's Staff Committee, 1118-1123; memorandum prepared by Secretary of State's Staff Committee, 1123-1125; Department of State comments on, 1125-1128, 1160*n*; JCS memorandum regarding basis for the formulation of U.S. military policy, 1160-1165, 1160*n*
 - Universal military training, 1120, 1164
 - War industries, maintenance of, 1121, 1127, 1164
 - Navy Department, 13, 85, 552, 558, 566, 571, 577, 610, 610*n*, 614*n*, 621, 621*n*, 624, 637-638, 657, 659, 663*n*, 695, 695*n*, 698-699, 702, 709, 719, 780, 802, 833*n*, 953, 971, 998-999, 1043, 1054, 1119, 1121, 1123-1124, 1134*n*, 1146-1147, 1150-1152, 1160*n*, 1165, 1173, 1178-79, 1187-1188, 1190-1192, 1195, 1391, 1492-1493, 1495
 - Office of Scientific Research and Development, 737*n*, 1238
 - Office of War Mobilization, 758*n*, 1283*n*
 - Reciprocal trade agreements program, 1282, 1350, 1367*n*, 1368
 - Secretary of Commerce, 1386*n*
 - Secretary of Interior, 566*n*, 1184

United States—Continued

- Secretary of the Navy, 565-567, 569, 610*n*, 695-696, 736, 1113, 1115-1116, 1119, 1119*n*, 1122-1123, 1129, 1160*n*, 1172, 1174, 1179, 1183-1184, 1188, 1203, 1203*n*
- Secretary of State's Staff Committee, 387-388, 387*n*, 551*n*, 567-577, 567*n*, 569*n*, 841-842, 841*n*, 1118*n*, 1123*n*, 1189, 1391, 1391*n*; minutes of meetings, 569-576, 1118-1123, 1141-1142, 1141*n*, 1160*n*, 1185-1188, 1189*n*, 1192
- Secretary of the Treasury, 482, 486, 1386*n*
- Secretary of War, 566*n*, 569, 610*n*, 695, 736, 740, 774, 1113, 1119, 1119*n*, 1122-1123, 1130, 1160*n*, 1172, 1174, 1179, 1183-1184, 1188, 1203, 1203*n*
- Scientific Committee, 824
- Security Council Group, 764-766, 764*n*, 770
- Senate, 1*n*, 2*n*, 24, 53, 73, 98, 98*n*, 100*n*, 101, 547-548, 673, 714, 773, 823, 956, 1253, 1379*n*, 1381, 1398
- Committee on Atomic Energy, 737*n*, 741, 768
- Committee on Banking and Currency, 1395-1396
- Committee on Foreign Relations, 310, 771, 780*n*, 799, 1379, 1381, 1383
- Special committee investigating petroleum resources, 1379, 1379*n*
- State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee, 1112*n*, 1249*n*
- Ad Hoc* subcommittee on military and security functions of the U.N., 738*n*, 754-757, 754*n*, 764*n*, 769*n*, 774-775, 873-876, 950*n*
- American Republics, military assistance for, 1152, 1152*n*
- Arms traffic, 730-731
- Export controls, 1178
- Korea, police force and national defense forces for, 1148, 1148*n*
- Military air transit rights, 1142, 1142*n*
- Military assistance to foreign governments, 1145-1146, 1145*n*, 1150-1151, 1189, 1189*n*, 1192
- Military bases and base rights, 1113, 1113*n*, 1115, 1171-1172, 1174, 1174*n*, 1179
- Petroleum resources, 1379-1380, 1380*n*
- Regulation of armaments, 756, 756*n*, 785, 785*n*, 833*n*, 835, 840, 840*n*, 1091, 1091*n*, 1109
- Subcommittee on rearmament, 1145-1160, 1145*n*
- Troop information, 1037*n*

- United States—Continued
 State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee—Continued
 Trusteeship system, 544, 552, 552*n*, 558, 558*n*, 569, 622, 622*n*, 624, 626*n*, 627–628, 627*n*, 730–731, 730*n*, 738*n*, 841, 841*n*, 843, 953*n*, 954
 U.N. Commission on Atomic Energy, 738, 740, 749, 774–775
 U.N. forces agreement, 719, 719*n*, 754, 764–765, 769–771, 769*n*, 770*n*, 796*n*, 917–919
 U.N. Military Staff Committee, 734*n*
 U.S. foreign policy, 1134*n*, 1139*n*, 1165*n*
 U.S. military policy, 1119–1120, 1119*n*, 1122–1123, 1132, 1160*n*, 1167, 1167*n*
 Surplus Property Act, 1146, 1150, 1190
 Tariff Commission, 1283*n*
 Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA), 737, 737*n*, 761
 War Department, 13, 20, 85, 552, 558, 571, 577, 610, 610*n*, 614*n*, 621, 621*n*, 624, 637, 657, 659, 663*n*, 695, 695*n*, 698–699, 702, 737, 741, 751*n*, 780, 788, 802, 833*n*, 907, 953, 971, 998–999, 1043, 1054, 1111–1112, 1119, 1121, 1123–1124, 1129–1130, 1133, 1134*n*, 1146–1147, 1150–1152, 1160*n*, 1165, 1173, 1178–1179, 1187–1188, 1190–1192, 1195, 1251
 War Industries Board, 757*n*, 758*n*
 War Production Board, 758*n*
 War Resources Board, 758*n*
 Working Committee on Arms Control, 840*n*, 841, 843
 Upolu (see also under Western Samoa), 117, 1175, 1177, 1180
 Urey, Harold C., 812, 812*n*
 Uruguay, 123, 135–138, 144–146, 148, 150, 154, 160, 164, 166, 189–190, 192–194, 198, 204, 214, 223–224, 223*n*, 234*n*, 250, 472, 493, 575*n*, 1387
 Vallarta, Manuel Sandoval, 948–949, 949*n*
 Van Blokland, Beelaerts, 269, 917
 Vance, John E., 982
 Vandenberg, Arthur H.:
 Armaments, regulation of, 725–726, 770*n*, 771–773, 779, 779*n*, 780*n*, 799, 802, 886–887, 954, 972*n*, 973, 973*n*, 974*n*, 997*n*, 1013, 1015, 1054, 1058–1060
 Trusteeship, international, 651, 651*n*, 653–654, 699
 United Nations, organization and procedure, U.S. position: Elections, 119, 173, 173*n*, 175–176, 181–182, 188, 215, 219, 241, 246; expenses, apportionment of, 468–473, 468*n*, 470*n*, 471*n*, 472*n*, 474*n*, 475, 476*n*, Vandenberg, Arthur H.—Continued
 United Nations, etc.—Con.
 477, 479, 481–484, 483*n*, 486–489, 489*n*, 491*n*, 494–495, 494*n*, 495*n*, 498, 498*n*; membership, early admission, 452–453; voting procedure in the Security Council, 306, 316–317, 340, 350
 United Nations, U.S. relations with: Arrangements for, 2*n*, 5, 34 34*n*, 38, 42*n*, 43, 43*n*; general U.S. policy toward, 59*n*, 66–67, 66*n*, 67*n*, 71*n*, 73–74, 73*n*, 74*n*, 77, 105–106
 Van Kleffens, Elco N., 166, 177, 179–180, 183, 233, 233*n*, 235, 238, 434, 434*n*, 873, 873*n*, 917
 Van Roijen, J. H., 139, 221, 228, 228*n*, 249, 249*n*
 Vasiliev, Lt. Gen. Alexandre F., 784, 784*n*, 875*n*, 914
 Vellaso, Pedro L., 48, 428
 Venezuela, 135–138, 142, 147, 164, 169, 187–188, 198, 204, 204*n*, 205*n*, 223*n*, 225*n*, 226–227, 355, 494, 519, 1386
 Vernam field (Jamaica), 1458
 Villard, Henry S., 220, 222, 223*n*, 233, 237, 237*n*, 239–240, 562*n*, 563, 563*n*, 567, 604*n*, 625–626, 625*n*, 655, 1080, 1080*n*
 Vincent, John Carter, 699, 1141, 1141*n*, 1185, 1187
 Vinson, Fred M., 662, 1386, 1390*n*, 1399–1401, 1407–1409, 1418–1426, 1425*n*, 1430–1435, 1434*n*
 Viti Levu, 1117, 1175, 1177, 1180
 Volcano Islands, 546, 689
 Volpe, Joseph A., Jr., 871
 Voss, Laurence, 1490
 Vyshinsky, Andrey Yanuaryevich, 166–168, 177, 183–184, 315, 341, 350, 509, 509*n*, 971, 971*n*, 1069–1072, 1076*n*, 1098, 1098*n*
 Wadsworth, George, 215, 219–220, 222–225, 233, 235–237, 246, 293, 295, 314–315, 340, 1059–1060
 Wailes, Edward T., 205, 205*n*, 621–622, 1501, 1501*n*
 Walker, Frank C., 2*n*, 4–5, 72–73, 72*n*, 171, 173, 173*n*, 176–178, 180, 184, 187
 Wallace, Henry A., 860, 860*n*, 919*n*, 932–944, 932*n*, 939*n*, 944*n*, 964, 1035, 1399–1400, 1420, 1423–1424, 1433–1434, 1434*n*
 Waller field (Trinidad), 1458
 Wallner, Woodruff, 439, 439*n*
 Walstrom, J. D., 1453–1456, 1453*n*, 1459, 1467–1468, 1472, 1482*n*
 Wan Waithayakon, Prince, 456–460, 456*n*
 Ward, J. G., 601*n*
 Warren, Avra Milvin, 1499–1500
 Warren, Earl, 104
 Washington, George T., 90–91

- Watson Lake, 1180
 Watt, A. S., 640
 Webb, James E., 662*n*, 695
 Webster, Sir Charles, 141, 141*n*, 143, 148-151, 153-154
 Wells, Percy, 1102
 Werth, Alexander, 979, 979*n*
 Western Europe, 120, 122, 134, 143, 168, 170, 191-192, 198, 200-201, 207-208, 219, 1393, 1393*n*, 1401, 1408
 Western Samoa: Defense arrangements in South Pacific, 663; mandate, U.S. rights in, 571, 574, 658, 663, 663*n*, 678*n*, 687, 690, 693*n*, 696, 699*n*; trusteeship proposals for, 609-612, 616, 640, 652, 652*n*, 676; U.S. base on Upolu island, 574, 610-611, 610*n*, 616, 658, 1117, 1177, 1180
 Wheelus field (Tripoli), 1144, 1182
 White, Harry Dexter, 1390*n*, 1408, 1421-1422, 1424, 1426
 Whiteman, Majorie, 78, 94, 415*n*, 532, 532*n*, 534-535, 534*n*, 552*n*, 600*n*
 Wilcox, Clair, 678, 678*n*, 1263, 1263*n*, 1290, 1292, 1294, 1297, 1299, 1302-1306, 1305*n*, 1308-1310, 1313, 1317, 1320-1321, 1323-1326, 1340-1342, 1349*n*, 1351, 1354*n*, 1360-1366
 Wilcox, Francis, 39, 329, 331-333, 771
 Wilgress, L. D., 1098, 1098*n*
 Williams, Francis, 1439
 Willson, Vice Adm. Russell, 1120, 1120*n*
 Wilson, Anne, 762*n*
 Wilson, Carroll, 737*n*, 762*n*, 860
 Wilson, Field Marshal Sir Henry Maitland, 967, 1213, 1227, 1256
 Wilson, Leonard S., 371, 371*n*
 Winant, John G., 5, 23, 28, 34, 158*n*, 209-211, 210*n*, 506, 507*n*, 1090, 1263, 1266-1267, 1271, 1273-1274, 1277, 1280*n*, 1292-1293, 1308-1311, 1313, 1355, 1464, 1469
 Winne, Harry A., 737, 737*n*, 761, 795
 Winster, Lord, 1490
 Wise, Rabbi Stephen S., 411, 411*n*
 Wood, C. Tyler, 1446-1447
 World Federation of Trade Unions (WFTU), 100, 499-500, 499*n*, 500*n*, 501*n*, 502-503, 503*n*, 509, 521
 Economic and Social Council, question of relationship with, 500-503, 503*n*, 505*n*, 506, 514-515, 516, 516*n*, 517-519, 522
 General Assembly, question of relationship with, 500-504, 503*n*, 505*n*
 U.S. position regarding, 502-506, 505*n*, 515-516, 519-523, 519*n*, 520*n*, 523*n*
 World Health Organization (WHO), 507
 Wright, Quincy, 58*n*, 1008, 1008*n*
 Yalta agreement, 575
 Yalta Conference. See Crimea Conference, 1945.
 Yalta voting formula. See under U.N.: Security Council: Voting.
 Yemen:
 Interim agreement with the U.S. containing establishment, consular, and commercial provisions, May 4, 1368
 United Nations, question of admission to. See under U.N.: Membership: States considered.
 Yost, Charles W., 217, 240-241, 293, 458, 458*n*, 665, 667, 677, 1040, 1040*n*, 1066-1067, 1079-1080
 Younger, Maj. Kenneth, 474-475, 474*n*, 479, 483
 Yugoslavia, 136-138, 143-144, 151, 153-156, 158-160, 158*n*, 164, 166, 168-169, 180-181, 190, 192-193, 207-210, 215, 220, 224, 227-229, 231, 231*n*, 236, 238, 372, 418, 436-437, 494, 1067, 1137, 1150, 1292, 1386-1387, 1393, 1396, 1416, 1420, 1429
 Zuleta Angel, Eduardo, 107, 114, 115*n*, 135, 135*n*, 140-141, 146, 186

JX
233
-A3

LEHMAN LIBRARY

