The libraries provide public access to a wide range of material, including online exhibits, digitized collections, archival finding aids, our catalog, online articles, and a growing range of materials in many media.

When possible, we provide rights information in catalog records, finding aids, and other metadata that accompanies collections or items. However, it is always the user's obligation to evaluate copyright and rights issues in light of their own use.

My Late Husband Used to Translate

My late husband was an interpreter and he told about one time that a preacher from elsewhere came here to preach. So the two of them stood up front and he started to whisper to him. He made my husband feel uncomfortable by doing that and he thought maybe he was just telling him alone something but he whispered it. finally he finished his sermon and he said, "Translate that now."

So he told what had been whispered to him as much as he could remember. Then when people went out, my husband said, "I had a hard time. I have never translated that way. Usually he speaks a little and then I translate. That is the way we would get it done."

The preacher said, "I thought that was the way you translate."
