Junk Ordinance Referred to Committee for Revision

The meeting of the common council Wednesday evening practically reverted into a public hearing when the junk ordinance came up for passage. The ordinance has been revised several times and published twice, and Wednesday evening was returned to the ordinance committee for further revision and publication.

The measure is one of the most drastic pieces of legislation that has come before the body for some time. The chief objection to it is that it virtually puts the junk dealers out of business at the end of a six months' period, unless the junk men are able to find a location in the heavy manufacturing district or outside of the city. Provision is made that no license be granted for the operation of junk yards in the residential sections of the city, and that those now operating shall be given a license for six months after which there can be no renewal. This period is allowed to give them an opportunity to find another site and clean up their property.

Alderman VanderHeyden declared that it is unfair to force these men to dispose of their yards within a six months' period since there is at the present time no demand for their material. Alderman Steinhauer objected to the ordinance on the grounds that it was discriminatory and that the junk dealers as a whole were made to suffer inconvenience and penalty for the laxity of a few. Objection was also made to the stipulation that fireproof structures be used for storing junk. It was brought out during the argument that other business concerns were not so restricted, excepting those in the heavy manufacturing district. Alderman Thompson reminded the council that under the zoning ordinance a fireproof structure such as is prescribed for the heavy manufacturing district cannot be constructed in the residential section.

Alderman Vogt expressed the opinion that if the yards had been conducted properly the ordinance would never have come before the council. He said the time has come when these objectionable sites must be removed from residential sections. He stated further that the yards do not serve the community in which they are located and that no hardship could be caused if they were obliged to move to the outskirts or to a junk district. He felt they should have an opportunity to secure property for their purpose in the heavy manufacturing district, and that if at the end of the six months' temporary license period, they are unable to move, the council would be reasonable with them.

Alderman Steinhauer said the council should establish a junk yard district before the ordinance is passed.

Mayor Goodland felt that it was unfair to "pick on a few who are trying to make a living on what we throw away." He felt that the dealers should be informed as to where they may go to establish their businesses. He cited the case of a lumber pile that was objectionable, in the Third ward, and told the council that the owner advised the council he was willing to move as soon as he was informed where he could obtain a lot that would meet his needs. He admitted the junk yards are a nuisance in a residence district, but stated the council must be fair.

Alderman McGillan, though opposed to junk yards in residential sections, admitted these were legitimate industries and must be treated fairly. He emphasized that business conditions for junkmen are bad and that they are unable to sell their material at the present time. He felt they ought to have more time in which to seek new locations, and that assistance in this respect should be given them. He believed property on the outskirts of the city or near the railroad would serve their purpose well.

Alderman Vogt, chairman of the ordinance committee, felt sentiment for the junk men was misplaced. He said they had had warnings to clean up, but did not heed them. He said they must be compelled to move, but the city should not take the responsibility off their hands; they should find their own sites.

At this point the mayor gave an opportunity to representatives of junk men to express their views. I. Bahcall offered a substitute paragraph for one in the proposed ordinance relating to licensing and duration of temporary license. Several others cited the adverse business conditions facing the junk dealers and declared they believed all of them would be willing to clean up their yards and keep their material in a building. Some of them, it was brought out, had already taken this step. A statement that brought criticism from members of the council was that in many instances junk men located in certain territories before residences were built there, and if the neighbors didn't like the junk yards they should have looked elsewhere for building sites. Alderman Thompson contended no business should be conducted in such a manner that it will depreciate sites in its neighborhood for building purposes, or serve to keep other people out of the territory. He felt it unjust to spoil any part of the city for residence purpose by the location of a junk yard there. He felt the six months period in which to clean up the yards was insufficient, but stated emphatically the junk yards are a detriment to a neighboring property and should be removed.

One of the junk men spokesmen went so far as to state that if the city compelled this group to clean up, it might

Land Held at High Prices Prevents Expansion of Present Municipal Course: Two Alternative Plans Might be Worked Out

It won't be long now! A month or six weeks from now thousands of Appleton men and women will again be donning their sport togs and hastening out to the great open spaces to chase the little white pills mile after mile around the several golf courses in Appleton and vicinity. The game of golf long ago passed that stage of development where it might be termed just a rich man's recreation. It passed that stage very definitely in Appleton when the new municipal golf links was opened about two years ago in the Fourth ward. People who never thought about learning golf three and four years ago are now enthusiastic devotees of the healthful pastime. Every day during the favorable spring, summer and fall weather the municipal course is filled to overflowing with these people and others who have been ardent followers of the game for many years.

Perhaps the biggest question which looms in the minds of hundreds of local golfers now is, "What can or what will the city of Appleton do to provide more playing space for the ever increasing number of folks who would like to play? There are many people here who would play golf if adequate facilities were provided, but who do not care to go through the trials of learning the even think of acquiring more land at that time. So the problem of congestion still looms large and judging by the performance of the last two years will loom larger than ever this coming season.

The city has, by no means, been the loser on this municipal golf proposition. During the first season of operation a clear profit of nearly $4,000 was real-game on a crowded course such as the local municipal course has proved to be.

Last year the park board secured options on about 48 acres of land adjacent to the municipal course with a view to expanding this course to an eighteen hole playing field. It is now a nine hole course. But when it came to the matter of figures it did not take long to find out that the prices asked for enough land to make up another nine holes were way out of sight—so far out of sight that it was useless to ized from the municipal links and this last year (business depression thrown in) the profit figure jumped up to almost $6,000. In round numbers the profits realized for the two years of operation amount to approximately $9,500. Not a bad investment that, and one which should prove beyond a doubt that the game of golf is not just a passing fad or fancy.

But to get back to the price of the land which the park board dickered for so that another nine holes could be added to the course. For 48 acres or thereabouts the total price was something like $27,000, according to Professor O. P. Fairfield, chairman of the park board. Boiled down to simpler terms this would have meant an average price of $567 an acre! Of course, the park board could not cope with such a fancy figure so that matter was dropped for the time being.

Now comes the golf season and the congestion problem is still very much unsolved. Two alternatives were suggested by Professor Fairfield. Because of the overhead expense involved in maintaining a public course he said it would be much better to have one eighteen hole course than two nine hole courses for the city to take care of. Two courses in widely distant sections of the city or outlying districts would necessitate the employing of a larger force of men for upkeep and maintenance and a larger amount of general equipment.

It was, however, very interesting to learn from Professor Fairfield that land just south of the city limits and directly across Calumet street from the present golf course was offered to the city at $100 an acre. This would mean the necessary 50 acres for the sum of $5,000 which is about the same that was paid for the land which the municipal golf course now occupies. It is true that buying land out of the city and south of the present course would necessitate some re-arranging of the course and possibly the removal of the clubhouse to a different location but, in the opinion of Professor Fairfield, these adjustments could be made without a great deal of expense. A price of $27,000 stacked up against a sum of about $5,000 for the same amount of land, the only essential difference being that one tract is in the city while the other is not is something worthy of considerable thought on the part of all Appleton golf lovers.

The other alternative is to establish a second nine hole course north of Erb park. This would doubtless please many Appleton people who are living in the northern section of the city and there are more of these all the time because the city is growing rapidly in that direction. Land north of Erb park also is out of the city and consequently would sell at a rather reasonable figure. However, there is the objection already mentioned, that of increased overhead. Others offer another objection laying out another nine hole course, and it is that an eighteen hole course is much more satisfactory for all the players and thus makes golfing more of a pleasure. It is also argued that most golfers have cars and that distance to a course, especially when it is only a matter of one or two miles is not an important determining factor. Both of these alternatives for this dilemma of high prices are possibilities worth considering and may become probabilities if the congestion on the public links cannot be relieved in any other way.

One of the chief difficulties encountered in bargaining for the 48 acres last year, according to Professor Fairfield, was the fact that this land was split up among at least a dozen owners. If there had been but two or three owners he thinks it might have been much easier to at least approach a more satisfactory purchase price. But dealing with so many people with each one trying to get fully as much for his property as the next fellow complicates matters considerably.

Professor Fairfield indicated that there was a possibility that negotiations would be opened again toward the end of the 1931 golfing season. If the municipal course continues to prosper and better its income as it has in the past two years there will soon be a very respectable sum accumulated by the park board with which to do things in a bigger way.

Administration of Estate Is Questioned by Steele

Charging that the income from the estate of George F. Peabody, one of the original owners of the Pettibone-Peabody Company, is being so handled by trustees that the City of Appleton, Lawrence college, the Y. M. C. A. and other benefactors in the Peabody will are not going to realize the full benefits they are entitled to, Joseph D. Steele appeared in county court Tuesday afternoon at a public hearing to question trustees concerning the administration of the estate.

Mr. Steele stated at the beginning of the hearing that he was appearing in the interests of the citizens of Appleton, who he said were to receive about three-fourths of the estate in public benefactions after the death of Mrs. William E. Harper, San Diego, Cal., daughter of Mr. Peabody. Lawrence college and the Y. M. C. A. will receive most of the remaining fourth, it was stated. Provision is made in the will for an old ladies' home and the permanent endowment of this institution. This is the principal bequest to the city of Appleton. Other gifts to the city include $50,000 for the improvement of the park system and a small sum for the city schools.

Alfred Bradford, attorney for the trustees of the estate, namely John Neller, John Colter and A. W. Hoyt, objected to Mr. Steele testifying at the hearing and questioning the trustees, claiming that he was not an interested party in this matter. The objection was overruled by Judge Fred V. Heinemann. Judge Heinemann said he wanted to investigate the report of the estate very thoroughly and then made Mr. Steele a "friend of the court" to aid him in obtaining this information.

Compensation of the three trustees amounted to $5,326.98 in 1930, according to the report of the estate for 1930. Mr. Steele questioned Mr. Neller about the increased traveling expenses for trustees which he said exceeded that of the previous year by about $2,000. Mr. Neller replied that there had been no change in the rate of compensation for the last ten years. This item or more than $5,000 for trustees' compensations amounts to about 40 per cent of the gross income of the Peabody estate for 1930, Mr. Steele said. The estate's total income for the year was listed at $13,831. Items of expenditure in addition to the amount paid to the trustees included about $1,600 interest paid on borrowed money, $100 for stenographic service and slightly more than $95 for miscellaneous items. The expenditures totaled more than $7,000 for the year, the report showed.

This left a balance of $6,704, Mr. Steele pointed out, and from this sum an annual payment of $6,000 is paid to Mrs. Harper and $50 to the Appleton Cemetery Association, in accordance with the terms of the Peabody will, leaving a net balance of slightly more than $650 out of the total estate earnings.

Mr. Steele asked Mr. Neller numerous questions concerning the present value of some of the bond securities listed on the report of the estate as assets. He contended that these securities listed at the same price at which the estate bought them several years ago had taken a big drop in price and therefore should be listed at their present market value. Mr. Neller replied that it was customary to list such bonds at the price paid for them and that no change was made until another sale established a new list price. Mr. Neller also added that though some of the bonds now had a low market value he did not believe the estate would suffer any loss at the time these securities matured because they would probably be back to their original value at that time. Those bonds which Mr. Steele called particular attention to are United Brick Corporation bonds and several Chicago real estate bonds. The brick bonds, he said, are practically worthless at the present time and the real estate bonds are far below the price at which the estate bought them.

Attempts on the part of Mr. Steele to ask questions about the business of the Pettibone-Peabody company during the last two or three years were strenuously objected to by Mr. Bradford who said this hearing on the Peabody estate had nothing whatever to do with the mercantile business and that officers of the company did not care to have their private business enterprise aired in a public hearing. He and Mr. Neller said the record books of the Pettibone-Peabody company were open to the inspection of the court or anyone else who had a legitimate right to see them. Judge Heinemann thereupon barred further questioning regarding the business affairs of the concern.

Mr. Neller claimed that the present value of the Peabody estate amounts to $404,000, that the assets listed are approximately $434,000 and the liabilities $30,000. He added that if all the bonds were to be wiped out the estate would still be adequately secured by the real estate value of the Pettibone-Peabody company. Mr. Steele tried to show throughout the entire session by his questioning of Mr. Neller that the estate, in his opinion, was not worth what the report showed. His contention was that the report was inflated in numerous instances.

Almost the entire afternoon was spent in questioning Mr. Neller and there was not sufficient time to put any other witnesses on the stand. Mr. Steele was advised by the court to submit his own testimony in writing. After three hours the hearing was adjourned to an indefinite date. Judge Heinemann, just before the adjournment, said he meant to have a very thorough investigation of the estate before the hearing was over and that he intended to find out definitely whether or not this trust was being properly administered so the citizens of Appleton and other benefactors would get what is rightfully coming to them.

be well to order all garages out of the city, since all of them "harbored junk." He mentioned instances where junked cars are piled in the rear of garages.

With a lengthy discussion that referred to designation of districts, investigation of places where junk is now stored, claims that the zoning ordinance should designate a junk district cheap and large enough to accommodate the group finally ended when a motion was made and carried to refer the entire ordinance back to the ordinance committee with instructions to revise it and present it to the council so changed that it will eliminate the objections raised at the meeting.

Aged Woman Fatally Hurt in Accident

Mrs. A. H. Hummel, 74, sustained injuries Wednesday evening when struck by an automobile at the corner of Drew and North streets, that resulted in her death at St. Elizabeth hospital early Thursday morning. The car was driven by Mrs. Frank Allman, 914 E. North St. Mrs. Hummel's left arm was broken, her right leg was fractured, and her face was cut. These injuries and the shock of the accident caused her death.

The district attorney made an investigation of the accident Thursday morning and stated that no inquest would be necessary, since it was clearly established that the affair was purely accidental. Mrs. Allman stopped her car within twelve feet of the spot where the aged woman was struck.

Get Ready for the Annual Meeting of Chamber

The board of directors of the chamber of commerce met at the chamber offices this afternoon. Records of the organization indicate that the majority of memberships have been paid and the general condition of the accounts is good. This is the last month in the fiscal year of the association. The annual meeting, at which time five new directors will be chosen, will be held in April.

Directors whose terms expire this month are H. A. Schlitz, J. N. Belanger, William Falatiek, Dr. E. L. Bolton and Homer Benton. A nominating committee of five members will be chosen at the meeting Monday, under the direction of the Lions club. This committee will be instructed to prepare a list of ten candidates from whom five will be elected. Ballots will be prepared and mailed to the members, returnable in time to be counted and reported on at the April meeting.

Eleven classifications have been established for awards to merchants having the most attractive window displays in their classification in connection with the annual spring opening March 12, 13, and 14. Winners in the classification feature of the contest will be eligible to a grand prize. Judges are Prof. O. P. Fairfield, Dr. W. M. Evans, and Miss Olga Achtenhagen, of Lawrence college. The judges were chosen by Ray Eichelberger of the Pettibone-Peabody company and H. M. Goldberg of The Fashion Shop.

PUTTING THE SKIDS UNDER THE POWER INDUSTRY

Both houses of the Wisconsin legislature have passed the Loomis resolution for a constitutional amendment permitting any municipality to construct and control plants for the production of heat, light, water or power. Gov. LaFollette no doubt will approve the resolution, since this is one of the four important planks in the utility platform of the Progressives.

Passage of the resolution by such a large vote in both the senate and assembly amounts to a virtual prediction that it will run the legislative gamut successfully two years from now. It is necessary for two legislatures to act favorably on a constitutional amendment before it is submitted to a vote of the people. If Wisconsin remains as overwhelmingly Progressive as it is now, the majority of the voters will follow the lead of their representatives at Madison.

Then what will we have? Another branch of Wisconsin's great industrial structure will be thrown into chaos. Meddling politicians, vindictive officials and men who like to experiment with something new will launch our communities into industrial ventures that will cost the taxpayers plenty. Vast investments are required for public utilities. The official statement of the Wisconsin-Michigan Power Co., for instance, lists its property and plant at $21,617,967.93.

Under the proposed constitutional amendment, the city of Appleton could build a power plant of its own and produce electric current for public consumption in competition with the present utility. It would take a tremendous investment to duplicate the facilities now at hand, and in this very duplication alone there would be nonsensical waste. An ever changing body of officials would have the control and administration of a municipal power plant. It is doubtful indeed whether there could be the same capability of management and the efficiency of operation as are maintained by private ownership. Municipal operation has been successful in small plants under close supervision, but large electrical utilities are highly specialized, require an expensive distribution system and a high degree of maintenance.

Wisconsin would not be where it is today were it not for the enterprise of the public utility owners. It was a matter of good business with them to turn back into their properties a liberal portion of their surplus earnings. They have pushed their lines into the rural communities so most farmers in the thickly populated areas have the comforts and conveniences of the cities. They have brought power to strategic industrial locations so factories would spring up there. Would a municipal utility do likewise? Marathon county, Wisconsin, today is reputed to lead the United States in the number of electrified farms. Initiative of a private enterprise is solely responsible. No municipality would be the aggressive salesman who would expand his business as far out into the surrounding locality as he could reach. We limit our water and sewer mains to the city boundaries. The same policy would obtain with electric power.

After all, what the public wants is cheap industrial power and cheap current for residential use. Privately owned utilities are as capable of rendering this service as any municipal utility could be. These companies were given a monopoly in their respective territories to prevent the very duplication of capital and operating costs proposed by this new law. The state created the railroad commission to prevent the abuse of the monopoly privilege. Power companies know they are obligated to grant the lowest rates possible, commensurate with a reasonable return on their investment, in return for the monopoly rights. If the public is not enjoying the lowest rates possible, it is the fault of the railroad commission.

If the constitutional amendment were on the statute books as a whip to keep the utilities in line, it would have some value, of course, because competition, or the possibility of it, does sometimes make a difference. Instances have occurred where utilities have yielded under such pressure and have reduced rates. However, the whole vista of public ownership has been opened wide, ready for an invasion.

Public utilities years ago realized that abuse of power and domination were undermining their security as monopolies. They began fostering public good will instead of defying it. Most companies have public relations departments. The public has been permitted to share in their prosperity through investments paying good interest or dividends. The whole attitude is different today, and the legislature, in its present program, is undermining the value of the small savings of thousands of residents of this state.

It is perhaps fortunate for the utilities that the resolution for the amendment must pass another legislature two years from now. If they are not selling power at rates commen-surate with what a municipal utility could do, they still have time to complete their housecleaning. The best way to defeat the municipal invasion is from within, and not from a lavish display of money in lobbying, propaganda, attempts at political control and the other elements which flame the passion of those who cater to the masses and flaunt the odium of capitalism.

Money talks more effectively when it cuts the electric light bill than when it takes on the hue of political slush funds.

HONESTY AND GOOD FAITH IN THE NEWSPAPER

"Competing newspapers continue to fall by the wayside," says the editor of The Post-Crescent from his sanctum in Green Bay, in an editorial commenting on the passing of The Chicago Evening Post and The New York World.

After further remarks about the advance of monopoly in the publishing world, he concludes: "The people do not demand a partisan press. They demand a fair one. . . . Given the facts they are content to make their own judgments. But they insist upon honesty and good faith in the presentation of the facts. In addition they want the news in readable, interesting form. They want features and entertainment. They cannot secure that result in a field divided in too many pieces."

Yes, the editor is right about what the people want and demand. The Appleton Review entered the field with its home-owned newspaper so the readers would have a publication where the facts are presented, and where there is honesty and good faith. The first function of Appleton Review is news service to its readers, regardless of the size of a man's advertising account with the paper. Its editorial policy is founded on the welfare of the community and the people living therein, and it will present the facts and the convictions of its editors without fear or favor.

An insistent demand for a newspaper that would lead in the life of the community instead of existing solely for commercial profit led to the establishment of Appleton Review. It has won many friends through its frankness in dealing with local issues and problems. It has not overloaded its pages with features to divert attention from its lack of community interest and to cover up its lack of service to the readers. It places its duty as a newspaper first and foremost. What success we achieve comes from the fountain head of service.

In the legislative session at Madison, a "probe" has come to the front at last to furnish something in the way of a real hot controversy. How the LaFollette folks are scurrying around to make the public utility bribe story hold water. If they do, what political fodder that will make for the next campaign.

Build a road house if you would never experience hard times.

Knowing Our Children Better

By

Edith D. Dixon

When To Pay a Child

Until a child is 14 or 15 years old it is probably best that he should not earn money regularly. He needs first to become familiar with money as a purchasing power, and to develop a sense of values through familiarity with many values. But, since it is only through earning money that he can gain any realization of the effort involved in obtaining it and an understanding of the human cost of the things he uses every day, he should be allowed to earn extra amounts when opportunity offers.

There are a few things which should be kept in mind when paying a child for his services. First, he should not be paid excessively. Overpaying the child gives him a false notion of the amount of effort necessary to meet requirements, and an exaggerated notion of the value of his service.

Second, he should not be paid for everything he does. The child should realize he has certain obligations, as a member of the family group, for which he cannot be paid. Those things may be paid for which occur occasionally, and for which possibly an outsider would have to be paid.

Third, when done for pay, the doing of the job becomes optional. Some parents complain that even though they offer to pay, the child refuses to do the work. This is the privilege of all free laborers. If the thing must be done in any case, then it would be better not to offer to pay for it. If, however, the child undertakes a job for money, he should not be paid unless it is completed. It might be advisable to set a time limit for its completion with an agreement that delay means partial pay; failure to finish, no pay.

Fourth, he should be paid only for those things that have commercial value. Being paid for an act of self-denial, or having a tooth pulled gives the child a wrong conception of financial affairs. The natural reward for being good is not financial remuneration but social approval. The good opinion of family and friends is often, and should be, of more value to a child than money.

The Handsome Man

A Novel by Margaret Turnbull

INSTALLMENT XX

But whenever he saw a dog in the streets of Quebec he looked to see if one foot was missing.

His excursions were short and he wandered alone. He saw a number of his comrades, but they did not recognize him and he did not feel the impulse to let them know who he was. Flesh had dropped from his bones until he resembled one approaching death instead of escaping it. He walked with stopped shoulders. His eyes were sunken, and his hands, in one of which he carried a staff, were emaciated to the thinness of extreme age. The small interest life had held for him seemed to have shriveled with the strength of his body. The English rekindled the spark, his mother's English, the half of himself which he had tried to hate. They were not acting the part of conquerors. They were — unbelievably — friends. From the gallant Brigadier Murray to the commonest soldier, they were courteous, humane, generous, dividing their rations with the starved citizens, sharing their tobacco with them, helping without pay to build up ruined homes, each day working themselves deeper into the good will of those who had been cheated and despoiled by Governor Vaudreuil and his degenerate crowd and by the weakness of the king of France. Even the nuns and the priests welcomed them, men and women of God who for two hundred years had fought indefatigably for New France. Honor and chivalry had come to conquer Quebec and had brought such friendship for its people that a British soldier was hanged in the public square for stealing from a resident of the town.

Jeems felt this comradeship of his enemies. At first he was taciturn and aloof and talked only when courtesy required the effort of him. He observed that many eyes regarded him with a pity which added shame to the burden of his distress, and at times when he was struggling to hold his stooped shoulders erect, sympathetic hands came to help him in spite of himself. His health returned slowly, but in the second week of his freedom an incident occurred which sent a warmer glow through his veins. He heard two soldiers talking on the street. They were talking about a dog—a three-legged dog that passed in front of their line as they had stood ready to fire upon the French.

When he returned to the little room which he still occupied in the general hospital Mere de Sainte-Claude thought fever had set itself upon him again. The next day, he went out looking for the dog and found others who had beheld what his own eyes had seen. But he asked no questions except in a casual way, and did not reveal the reason for his interest. He knew the dog could not be Odd, yet it was Odd for whom he was seeking. This paradoxical state of mind bothered him, and he wondered if his illness had left him entirely sane. To think Odd had escaped Tiaoga's vengeance and had wandered through hundreds of miles of wilderness to Quebec would surely be an indication that it had not. He continued to seek, trying to believe he was making the quest a diversion which was healthful for his body, and that curiosity, not hope or faith, was encouraging him to find the three-legged dog. As Lower Town was the home of most of the dogs, he spent much of his time among its ruins, but without success.

His search came to an unexpected end in St. Louis street where many aristocratic families of the city lived. Nancy Gagnon, who had been Nancy Lotbiniere before her marriage to Peter Gagnon, and a dearly loved belle of the town, described the incident soon afterward in a letter to Anne St. Denis-Rock, and this letter, partly unintelligible because of its age, is a cherished possession of that family.

"I had come out of the house (she wrote) in time to see a strange figure pause near the iron gate which shut him out from the plot of ground where the dog was watching little Jeems at play with some blocks and sticks. He was a soldier in a faded uniform of France, with a hospital badge on his arm, and had apparently just risen from a terrible sickness. As he staggered against the gate with a strange cry, I thought he was about to faint and hurried toward him. Then a most amazing thing happened. The dog sprang straight at him, and so frightened was I by the unexpectedness of his attack that I screamed at the top of my voice and snatched up one of the baby's sticks with which I was about to beat the animal from his victim when, to my still greater astonishment, I saw that both man and beast were overcome by what appeared to be a paroxysm of recognition and joy. The action of the dog together with my scream set little Jeems to crying lustily and my terrified voice brought Toinette and my father to the door. Shall I ever forget what happened then? Toinette started first toward her baby, then saw the man at the gate, and the cry which came from her lips will remain with me until my dying day. In a moment she was in that poor wreck of a soldier's arms, kissing him and sobbing, until, with the antics of the dog and the fiercer shrieking of the child, to say nothing of my own wild appearance with the stick, we were beginning to attract the attention of the public. . . ."

In this way Jeems found his wife and boy. Their story was destined to be remembered because it was a marked incident in a transition of land, people, and customs which history could not regard too lightly. Manuscripts and letters were to bear it on, until, almost forgotten, it was to remain only a whisper among a thousand others of days and years whose echoes grow fainter as time passes. The walls of the old Lotbiniere home in St. Louis street, close to the residence of the beautiful but infamous Madame de Paean, witnessed the piecing together of the story and might repeat it today if they could talk. For Jeems the few minutes after his entry in the Lotbinierehouse, where he and Toinette were guided by Nancy and her father while a black servant brought up the rear with the baby, were nearly as unreal as the last moments of his consciousness on the Plains of Abraham. Inside the door, Nancy placed the child in his arms, which had not relinquished their hold of Toinette, and the discovery that he possessed a son leapt upon him. He was so overwhelmed by the emotion which followed that he did not see Hepsibah Adams as he felt his way through the wide hall to find what the excitement and crying were about. It was Hepsibah with his round, sightless face and his voice breaking with joy when he found Jeems alive under his great, fumbling hands which added—as Nancy wrote in her letter to Anne St. Denis-Rock—"a final proof that God does answer prayer."

That this God who had seen New France sink into ruin had guided their own destinies with a beneficent hand Jeems devoutly believed when Toinette told him what had befallen her after the flight from Chenusio. They were alone in her room. It was the eleventh of December, and the afternoon sun shone from a sky filled with the smiling warmth of autumn rather than the chill of winter. A few hundred yards away, General Murray was holding a review of the regiments which were soon to face Levis in his attempt to retake the city. The sound of martial music came to them faintly, and with it the distinct but softer tolling of a bell which marked an hour of prayer, and to this appeal Toinette bowed her head and murmured words of adoration taught her by the white-robed Sisterhood of Christ. Three years had changed her. Not time alone, but motherhood and the grief of hopeless waiting had made her more a woman and less a girl. At last she had believed Jeems was dead, and now she had him again, an indescribable beauty suffused her face and eyes with its radiance as the mystery of the years was unveiled.

She told of Hepsibah's capture by the Mohawks in Forbidden valley, of his escape, his recapture later by the Senecas, and of her appeals to Shindas and Tiaoga and of her failure to inspire their mercy when, blinded, he was brought to Chenusio.

Visit the "Economy Home" At 822 E. Winnebago

We have been hearing for some time that building costs are lower now than has been the case for many years, but many people who would like to build have been holding off for still lower prices. Believing that prices in many lines of building material supplies are sure to advance in the near future and knowing that demonstration is the best kind of illustration the Standard Manufacturing Company is building an "Economy Home" at 822 E. Winnebago street for the purpose of convincing the doubters that building costs are really at the ebb right now.

The plans from which the "Economy Home" is being built were originally used for a house constructed in 1928, exact cost figures on which are on file at the company's offices. The new building will be a duplicate of the original, except that it will contain a great many small refinements and luxuries which were not included three years ago because of the cost. In spite of the addition of these little touches which go to make the modern home more comfortable, the company estimates that the completed home will be constructed at a cost at least 15 per cent lower than was the case when the original was built, because building materials are so much cheaper now. In fact many items are as cheap as in 1914, before the war.

The public is invited to visit the scene of activities at 822 E. Winnebago street, not the quality of the materials being used and generally follow the work through to the finish. No time will be lost in completing the job, and as soon as it has been finished the comparative figures will be announced, thus offering a most effective demonstration that "now" is the time to build.

The county highway committee will hold a meeting in the office of Frank R. Appleton, county highway commissioner, at the court house Monday afternoon. Routine business will be discussed.

Work of Children's Home Association Proves Very Beneficial to County

When Outagamie county board of supervisors authorized the payment of $100 to the Children's Home and Aid Association of Wisconsin at its February session, few residents of the county and perhaps a small number of the supervisors themselves actually understood just what work is being done in this county. Though neither the county or city employs a trained social worker, such service has been made available by the Children's Home and Aid Association which sends a trained worker to this locality periodically. Miss Helen Wallace visits the city of Appleton once each week, and spends from two to three days per month in the county.

Miss Wallace works in conjunction with County Judge F. V. Heinemann, before whom juvenile cases are brought, the school, county, and city nurses, district attorney, physicians, and individuals. The work has been expanded from that of caring for dependent children to caring for unmarried girls about to become mothers, providing pre-natal care, hospital care during confinement, and caring for both the mother and child until plans for their future have been worked out. If the infant is to be offered for adoption, it is taken off the mother's hands and taken care of until a suitable home is found. In addition there is a certain amount of family rehabilitation work that must be followed up and adjusted as far as means and opportunity of the association permit.

Ten cases in the city of Appleton have been cared for by Miss Wallace since she began making regular visits to the city. One of these is particularly outstanding. It is the case of a boy, a girl and a boy; the boy well on his way toward a criminal career and the girl fast becoming a delinquent. These children were placed in boarding homes where the woman understood children, was sympathetic yet firm, patient, and intellectually able to cope with the situation. At the end of three months' instatement in these homes, a most gratifying report was made. The boy—who previously had a tendency to steal, rebelled against school attendance, broke into stores—was making a valiant fight to catch up to his classmates in school which he now attended without unnecessary urging or compulsion. His entire attitude had changed from one of defiance and indifference to his future to one of ambition and interest in his own well-being. The girl showed an interest in finer things, was anxious to assist with sewing, cooking, and other small jobs about the home in which she lived, and, too, was making a heroic fight to "come back." Here, Miss Wallace pointed out, was a case where two youths well on their way to a life of crime and shame, living under such conditions that they were immediately removed from their abode and placed in the sheriff's home until other suitable homes could be found for them, had been saved from such a fate through timely interference and remedial steps to re-establish them on a higher cultural plane.

Work with children in the county is not necessarily with those from indigent families. Another instance was cited where a mother in a home of good circumstances was unable to properly guide her child, because she did not possess the understanding of handling a problem child. She was given advice from the social worker who has made a study of psychology of children and was able to suggest a course that proved beneficial.

Cases that come to the attention of Miss Wallace involve all classes—physical, moral, mental, and financial. She has also handled three family situations in Appleton since last August.

This direct work in Appleton and the county started last August, after a representative of the Children's Home and Aid Society had visited with persons interested in social conditions in the county. The association consented to send a worker here to spend one day in the city of Appleton and a day or two in the county. Miss Wallace, who was stationed at Oshkosh, was assigned to this territory. The worker immediately got in touch with Judge Heinemann of the juvenile court, the county and city nurses, and others who come in contact with abnormal cases. The prime object is to remove neglected, delinquent, and dependent children to better environment. There are instances in which indigent families refuse to provide for their children in homes outside of their own. Rather than commit these children to institutions, they are placed in boarding homes, thoroughly investigated and licensed as such. Miss Wallace emphasized the fact that homes selected must be ideal for re-establishing the youngster, and where intellect and patience will serve as the tools for this task.

General conditions in Appleton are normal. There is, however, a group of adolescents who flagrantly violate all laws of a moral code, and though an effort is being made to regulate dance halls and similar amusement places and check up on school attendance, laws on the statute books must be even more rigidly enforced to keep children away from undesirable influences, in the opinion of Miss Wallace.

The organization which sponsors the visit of the trained social worker here was started about forty years ago by a Rev. Dysart, Milwaukee, who for a time carried on work in Milwaukee in response to a need that manifested itself there. His work was made possible through voluntary public subscriptions. A house was donated to be used as a home for unmarried nursing mothers. Here plans were made for the mother's future and also that of her baby. An adoptive program was carried on in connection with the work. Girls from all over the state soon came here for shelter and care, and investigatory and follow-up work became necessary. The society branched out to cover other fields.

A boarding home project is being launched in Appleton. Three or four homes are being investigated and if they meet the approval of the association, they will be held in readiness to receive children who must be placed in better environment. The adoptive program as carried on involves a large amount of field work. Prospective foster parents are questioned, their home conditions are investigated, their ancestry traced, and a general inquiry made to determine their fitness to adopt a child. Likewise an investigation is made of the parents of the child to be placed and if any undesirable characteristics are found in its ancestry which may be hereditary, or any conditions of doubt disclosed, the child is placed in the home at Sparta. An effort is made by the society to place children in homes where they will link up well with the family adopting them.

In speaking of the social conditions in this county, Judge F. V. Heinemann stated that the quality of the population was a factor which had a direct influence on general conditions. He believed the absence of a large foreign population, such as is found in the larger cities of the country, is one reason why the county maintains a normal rating. He commended the work done by Miss Wallace and the society, declaring that the work as it has now branched out and developed is filling a need. He recalled six cases that have come to his office in which Miss Wallace has given assistance, but emphasized the fact that cases brought before him are not dismissed by being turned over to the social worker, but are kept under the jurisdiction of his department until such time as supervision is no longer required.

Judge Heinemann has on file in his office a list of homes where children will be boarded and cared for.

Miss Helen Wallace, who has visited the county since last August, has a background that makes her particularly valuable in her field. She is a graduate of the University of Alabama, and last year was a candidate for her masters degree in psychology at the University of Chicago. She has had one and one-half years' experience in the Illinois Children's Home and Aid society. While at Chicago she worked with the United Charities and has had experience with the Immigrants' Protective League, and the Lying-in-Dispensary of the social service department of Chicago. She did considerable research work for the University of Chicago while a student there. Immediately after finishing her work at the university in Chicago, Miss Wallace became affiliated with the Wisconsin organization. She worked in Milwaukee for three months and then was transferred to the Oshkosh office. She is at the Woman's club in this city on the first, second, and fourth Tuesdays and the third Thursday of each month, where persons who have problems in her particular phase of work may visit her.

The committee of four selected as an advisory committee to the board of education in selecting a committee to solve the high school problem, has chosen eighteen persons, three from each ward, to serve on such a committee. Two men and a woman were selected from each ward.

The circuit court calendar for the March term of court will be called by Judge E. V. Werner on Monday, March 9.

Mrs. Edna Whitman, charged with embezzling groceries valued at $500 from her former employer, J. L. Stelpflug, proprietor of the Junction Grocery, was given a preliminary hearing in municipal court Thursday. She was bound over for trial on March 17.

Campus Comment

The basketball lads returned from a trip that had them appear at Carleton College and at Carleton College on Monday and Monday nights respectively. Although the Vikings lost both games fought hard and were not counted until the final gong. The season's record shows seven wins against seven losses. Two of the defeats were administered by Marquette. The high point of the season was the 27-17 defeat of Marquette when the Pioneers visited Alexander gymnasium last month. Laird, Rogers, and Rafter each scored six baskets in one game to tie for individual scoring performances. The offense counted a shade less than 28 points a game while the defense limited opponents to a flat 21 points a contest.

Bob Beggs and Marcus Plant upheld the negative side of the argument against the college in a debate on the subject of unemployment insurance Tuesday. The Albion team is on a two week tour of the Mid-West and the debate here is the tenth on its schedule.

The four best loved girls on the campus were banqueted Monday night at the Conway hotel. They are Cecelia Werner, Agnes Snell, Ardis Elston, and Lois Behn. They were picked by a vote of college women.

Phi Beta Kappa announces that it has elected Cecelia Werner, Helen Werner, Dorothy Walters, and Ruth Lewis to membership.

Publish Ordinance for North Side Business District

An ordinance creating a business district along Wisconsin Ave. from N. Richmond street to N. Meade street was ordered published by the common council at its meeting Wednesday evening. A public hearing will be held on the ordinance at the city hall at 7:30 o'clock Monday evening, March 16.

The ordinance has been under consideration for some time. Under the proposed ordinance lots bordering the street between the streets designated to a depth of 120 feet would be in the business district. The depth of these lots, according to the chairman of the ordinance committee, would allow for the construction of an alley at such time that it becomes necessary. It was pointed out that the city cannot make mandatory specifications for a twenty foot alley which advocates of the business district in this locality felt should be made. An effort to place only certain lots on the street in the business district failed.

The city treasurer was instructed not to collect the two per cent collection fee provided for taxes paid after February 28, until after March 15, so that persons desirous of taking advantage of the extension to June 1 will have opportunity to file their affidavits without this penalty. After March 15 those who have not paid their taxes nor filed their affidavit proving their inability to pay until June 1, will be assessed the extra fee.

The city engineer was instructed to prepare plans and specifications for the construction of a sewer on Verbrick street, with laterals to connecting streets.

A report of the street and bridge committee providing for the collection of rubbish by the city on May 1 and monthly after the first of September to the first of June, was adopted. There will be no collection during June, July, and August. The city engineer was also authorized to prepare plans for the pavement of So. River street in accordance with the recommendations of the street committee. This provides for a 32 foot pavement from Lave street east to the ravine at Carpenter street.; 28 feet across the ravine; 36 feet from Carpenter street to Wagg Ave., and 32 feet from Wagg Ave. to John St.

The council acted favorably on a report from the ordinance committee which provided for the employment of three instead of two bridge-tenders at each bridge, placing them on an eight hour basis.

Garbage collectors are instructed to make two collections weekly during May, June, July, August, and September, and one collection per week the balance of the year. The matter of arranging for compensation was left with the health department, since it has jurisdiction in the garbage disposal matter.

A communication from the Appleton Trades and Labor council urging the city to specify the employment of home labor in contracts awarded for construction work, and also to provide for the payment of the prevailing wage scale, was referred to the city attorney and ordinance committee.

The recommendation from the Fifth ward aldermen that a section of Summer street be widened for pavement, and against which a remonstrance was presented, be not paved, was approved. Petitions were presented by property holders along So. Oneida street, both in favor of resurfacing and opposed to such work if the cost is to be assessed against the abutting property. Those were laid over on request of Alderman Wassenberg, Fourth ward.

Several proposed transfers from residential to light manufacturing districts were referred to the zoning committee.

The meeting had a spirited climax when Alderman Packard, chairman of the finance committee, asked Alderman VanderHeyden to present a report he was instructed to prepare at the council meeting two weeks ago substantiating charges that the city of Appleton pays more for its purchases than the usual price. He reminded the council that sweeping, unfair insinuations had been made by the Fifth ward alderman and, in accordance with a motion carried by the council, VanderHeyden was instructed to report specific instances of overcharge. VanderHeyden declared the council had no power to instruct him to present such a report, and that bills for purchases were on file in the city clerk's office where persons interested could examine them. A bitter argument followed, touching on charges of political tactics, flare-back from the incinerator problem, insults to citizens and council, fairness to merchants, and misconstruction of statements and reports made in the council meetings. VanderHeyden concluded the argument with the statement that he would submit a report when he was ready to do so.

After a brief session as a committee of the whole, the council reported favorably on the proposal to change the working schedule of bridge-tenders.

More Than $100,000 Taxes Are Still Unpaid

City Treasurer Bachman has collected $1,129,672.72 in personal and real estate taxes since the 1931 tax collection period opened in December. There are about $110,400 in unpaid taxes on the books, some of which will be paid by March 15. Under the provision made by the common council Wednesday evening, taxes not paid by February 28 will not be assessed the additional collection fee if same are paid by March 15 or if an affidavit is filed with the city treasurer specifying that the property owner is unable to pay sion of time to June 1. This applies only to real estate. Up-to-date approximately 100 applications for extension of time were filed with the city treasurer.

Uncollected personal property and dog tax lists are now being prepared and will soon be turned over to the police department for collection.

Kimberly News

Mr. and Mrs. James Demarest were guests at dinner of the Rev. and Mrs. H. Wenberg at the Oneida Methodist mission Wednesday. The Ladies' Aid society met with Mrs. Wenberg in the afternoon. They presented a program of hymns sung in the Indian language.

ening. The second round of three games will be played on March 12 and the finals Friday, March 13. E. VanderVelden is captain of team No. 1 composed of P. Doerker, R. LaBerge, C. McIntyre, H. The regular meeting of the village board was held on March 2, at which time routine bills were acted upon and appropriations to School District No. 6, Kimberly Vocational school, and the Kimberly Community band were paid in full.

Insurance on the chemical ladder truck of the fire department was authorized taken out with Jess Wudeven. Officers of the Kimberly Water Works commission appeared before the board, and the president, Joseph Kramer, addressed the board on the subject of building a new village hall that would house the fire department equipment and all the village machinery, and offices for the village and water commissioners. He stressed the need of relieving unemployment in the village and suggested that funds of the water department be used for this work. The village board agreed to meet with the Kimberly water commission on March 11 to discuss the matter.

The board also adopted a resolution providing for the extension of the tax paying period to June 1 without penalty. The taxpayer is required to sign an affidavit acknowledging his inability to pay his taxes on or before March 15. The action conforms with the new state law passed in February. Real estate taxes only are affected by this order.

Two new ordinances, dealing with garbage collection and forbidding the erection of bill boards in the village limits, were adopted.

The committee appointed at the February session of the county board to study the feasibility of building an extension to the present court house met at the court house this afternoon. Clyde J. Burdick, Black Creek, is chairman of the committee, which includes L. E. Nicholas of Ellington; Peter Rademacher, Appleton; Sylvester Esler, Kaukauna, and J. M. Garvey, Oneida.
