Late Night Libraries

I have known for a long time that UW students live on a different schedule than I do. They are just arriving at the library to study when I have already gone to bed. The late night use of our campus libraries was extraordinarily heavy at the end of the spring semester. During exam periods more than 200 students had to be scooted out of the building when College Library closed at 2:45 in the morning. It did not surprise me when student representatives appealed to the university administration for 24-hour library service in at least one campus library.

The library system has routinely received requests from students for longer hours but this time they were more persuasive. These students made it clear they wanted more than just a place to study. I was pleased to hear directly from students how much they value the unique environment a university library provides.

UW-Madison students are challenging the widely held assumption that 1) students are no longer interested in visiting libraries and 2) they would prefer all their information to be delivered via the Internet.

The Chronicle of Higher Education published an article titled "Deserted Libraries," that documented the success libraries have had in licensing databases of full-text articles so students have remote access to library resources without having to leave home. The Chronicle reported that many students now feel that they do not have to come to the library to complete class assignments.

Consequently, it is something of a pleasant surprise to hear from so many UW-Madison students who want even more access to campus libraries. Our libraries are invariably crowded during peak periods. More than a million students visited College Library last year. The gate count at Memorial Library was even higher. UW-Madison has one of busiest academic library systems in the world.

Students say that they cannot study late into the night without disturbing roommates and that there is often too much noise and distraction in student housing to encourage serious study. The library provides the support systems they need to concentrate but, they say, the library is often closing when they most need to study.

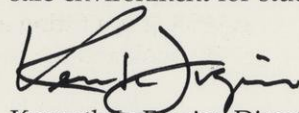

One student told me that he found himself with a textbook propped up in front a blank computer screen at 4 a.m. in an all-night computer lab because that was the only place he could find for late-night study.

And it is not just those who stay up late who want more library hours of access. Another wrote, "I grew up on a farm and prefer to start working early in the morning." Here, at last, I have a kindred spirit among the students. Studying until 4 a. m. is beyond my comprehension, but rising early to get started is something I can understand.

So, with some trepidation, we went forward with a pilot project for 24-hour library service this past academic year in Memorial Library. This fall we move this pilot service to College Library, the primary undergraduate library on campus. It will be open 24 hours a day from Sunday morning through Friday night. All three floors of the library will remain open with full services available. This includes the computer lab, circulation, reserves, access to the collections, available study space on all three floors, and vending services.

There are good reasons why librarians may be reluctant to keep libraries open all night long. The late-night hours often seem like a kind of frontier, a "wild west" with different inhabitants operating by different rules. We are also concerned that it is difficult for custodians to perform thorough cleaning, if we attempt to stay open 24 hours several days a week.

These concerns can be addressed. I have been meeting with campus police and physical plant staff to discuss measures we can take to improve library security and custodial care. We have also engaged students in a discussion of how they can help to maintain an academic environment during late-night library hours. The 24-hour library project will succeed if we can maintain a high standard of stewardship for this vital university facility and ensure a safe environment for students.

Poet Laureate Billy Collins comes to the libraries this fall as a key speaker in the Wisconsin Book Festival; the Friends publish a cookbook, A Literary Feast: Recipes and Writings by American Women Authors from History, drawn from the Cairns Collection, Steenbock Library, and the Wisconsin Historical Society; and College Library launches the Open Book Café.

The first edition of John Locke's An Essay Concerning Humane Understanding (1670) comes to the libraries. Not only is it an elegant first edition, but it is a first issue—a version printed before any corrections or changes were made in subsequent copies, essentially a 300-year-old publication hot off the presses. The gift was made by former Friends President Ann S. Nelson.

Two UW–Madison alumnae make possible the largest endowment for Special Collections in its history. The Shirley E. Cherkasky and Jessie M. Christensen Special Collections Fund will allow, for the first time, steady annual expenditures for preservation and for the purchase of rare and historically significant books.

Celebrating five decades of service

In 1949, months of prodding by President Fred and the university had driven the Wisconsin legislature to make the largest investment in the city of Madison since the building of the Capitol. "President Fred said I was sympathetic," the governor said at the groundbreaking. "Well, when a man comes to see you every day, you either get tired or sympathetic." Memorial Library, the largest library in the state, opened its doors on September 17, 1953.

Honor roll of donors for 2001 and 2002

More than 6,000 individuals and families gave to the UW–Madison Libraries in 2001 and 2002, many of whom were repeat donors. In addition to money, some gifts were materials that are valuable to research and teaching; others were significant contributions to the Friends book sales, which help fund programs, research grants, and library collections.

On the cover

When the libraries' collections reached a total of six million volumes, the Friends of the UW–Madison Libraries made a gift aptly dubbed "six million plus one." They presented a signed copy of Leonard Baskin's Iris: A Book of Etchings, published by Eremit Press in 1988. It is a fitting addition to collection strengths in the history of the book and the book arts.

Largest used book sale in Wisconsin, October 22-25

The next Friends book sale, Wednesday through Saturday, October 22-25, will be held to coincide with the second Wisconsin Book Festival.

The semiannual sales are held every spring and fall. The last sale was the second largest in the program's history, with a net profit of more than $21,000. Out of more than 500 boxes of books, all but five boxes were sold.

Forty-two volunteers donated a total of 171 hours, which does not include the hours invested by cochairs John Toussaint and Jim Dast.

Proceeds help support the Friends grant-in-aid program for visiting scholars and a grant program to campus libraries. In addition, 10 percent of the proceeds are transferred to the endowment.

Friends publish cookbook

by Katie Gilbert

For most nineteenth-century women, domestic life centered on the kitchen and the meals prepared there. A group from the Friends of the University of Wisconsin-Madison Libraries are recreating a sense of that life with a cookbook, using literary excerpts describing meals or meal preparation to illustrate recipes from contemporary cookbooks. A Literary Feast: Recipes and Writings by American Women Authors from History appeared in book stores in August and is the culmination of ten years of work.

A Literary Feast recalls the days before microwaves, refrigerators, and standardized cooking measurements. Although most recipes were not kitchen-tested, they were adapted to meet modern cooking practices, and the authors enjoyed the recipes they made.

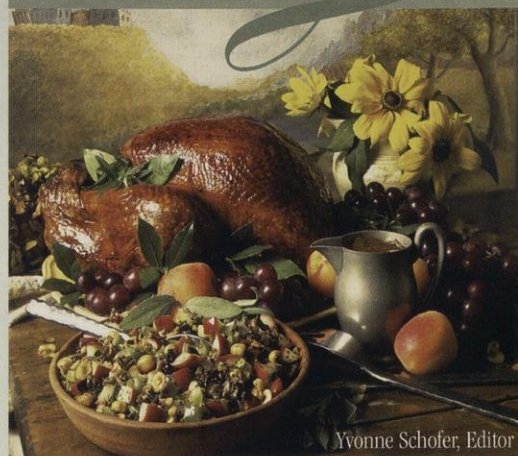

"I spent a whole weekend measuring cups of sugar and flour," says Yvonne Schofer, the English humanities bibliographer at Memorial Library and editor of the cookbook. "I had to make sure the recipes could be understood and, if you did try to prepare them, they would turn out normally."

The writers appearing in this collection often described meals for special occasions in their novels, and the recipes in the cookbook reflect food women would have prepared at the time. The cookbook includes instructions for chowders, pies, candy, vegetables, and more.

A Literary Feast was compiled by Joan Jones, Loni Hayman, and Anne C. Tedeschi, all Friends members. The writers and editor have assigned all royalties from the book to the Friends. Jones Books in Madison, operated by Joan Strasbaugh, a former UW-Madison editor, is the publisher.

The Cairns Collection

Many of the recipes in A Literary Feast: Recipes and Writings by American Women Authors from History were selected from the cookbooks in the William B. Cairns Collection of American Women Writers (1650-1920) in Special Collections, which is primarily a literary collection of approximately 8,000 titles by more than 3,250 women writers.

The cookbook highlights fiction and nonfiction pieces by female authors such as Kate Chopin's The Awakening, Louisa May Alcott's Little Women, and Catharine Beecher and Harriet Beecher Stowe's The American Woman's Home, or, Principles of Domestic Science, as well as cookbooks. Other recipes come from the historical cookbook collection at Steenbock Library, the Wisconsin Historical Society Library, secondhand book shops and family collections.

Students come to the library to learn how to do research, which has almost become a survival skill in the Age of Information. This is one reason the library is now teaching both basic and advanced research skills to more than 25,000 students every year.

Libraries host nation's poet laureate, Billy Collins

Billy Collins, the nation's poet laureate, will speak at 7 p.m., Wednesday, October 22, at the Wisconsin Union Theater. The talk, sponsored by the University of Wisconsin–Madison Libraries and supported, in part, by private donations, is one of the major opening events in the second annual Wisconsin Book Festival, to be held in Madison Oct. 22-26.

Collins was named the United States poet laureate 2001–2003 in June 2001. He will present a poetry reading followed by audience questions and a book signing.

He is the author of seven poetry collections, most recently Nine Horses, Sailing Alone Around the Room: New & Selected Poems and Taking Off Emily Dickinson's Clothes. These last three collections have broken sales records for poetry.

His work has been published in The New Yorker, The American Scholar and Paris Review.

Collins is a Guggenheim Fellow and a professor of English at Lehman College of the City University of New York. He is "a charming public reader, who can pack auditoriums," according to the New York Times.

The Wisconsin Book Festival in its first year drew more than 8,000 people to Madison for the five-day event. This year, presenters include Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist and author Deborah Blum; Madison native and Pulitzer Prize-winner David Maraniss; poet, essayist and feminist Grace Paley; and Piri Thomas, a poet considered to be the founder of spoken-word poetry.

The Friends of the University of Wisconsin–Madison Libraries, which is also among the major sponsors of the Wisconsin Book Festival, is helping coordinate the Collins lecture.

The lecture is open to the public at no charge.

Express orders for the library collections

Each year, the UW–Madison libraries purchase about 50,000 books, the vast majority of which are selected by the bibliographers and subject specialists of the General Library System.

For the past two years, however, the libraries have been experimenting with user-initiated collection building through a program called "Book Express."

When a library user requests a book from another library through interlibrary loan (ILL), the request is first screened to see if it is something that the libraries might like to add to the permanent collections. If it is less than four years old and costs less than $250, there is a good chance it is.

A book order put on the fast track via Book Express will be available for circulation an average of only nine days after it was requested by a patron—a full two days faster than the typical eleven-day wait for a book requested through ILL. The most exciting thing from the libraries' perspective, however, is the response the books receive after their initial circulation.

"In other words, people want them," says Tanner Wray, head of Access Services, who has been overseeing the development of Book Express along with Chief Acquisitions Librarian Karl Debus-López. "Basically, it's patron-initiated collection building," he says.

Based on its success of Book Express over the past two years, the libraries' administration has made an additional $20,000 from unrestricted gift monies available to the program. With that money, it is estimated that the libraries will be able to purchase an additional 540 books to add to their permanent collections.

Thanks to user input in the form of ILL requests, and quick turnaround times through Book Express, it is a safe bet those books will soon be among the most oft circulated in the campus libraries.

Digital Library growing

The Digital Library for the Decorative Arts has new additions to its Web site, courtesy of the libraries' Digital Content Group and the Chipstone Foundation in Fox Point, Wisconsin. The Web site now offers a database of early American furniture in which users can view more than 100 items from the Chipstone Foundation. In addition, the database also provides access to online texts such as Edith Wharton's The Decoration of Houses and Craftsman Homes by Gustav Stickley. To visit the site, go to: <http://decorativearts.library.wisc.edu/>.

The Parents Fund

The UW Foundation Parents Fund, an annual fund that solicits gifts for the university from parents of UW–Madison students, has supported several significant projects in the libraries. In recent years, the fund has made possible the creation of a state-of-the-art lecture hall for campus, a high-tech quiet study hall, and remodeled public space, all in Memorial Library. This support has also helped free other resources that launched 24-hour library service, initially in Memorial Library, and starting this fall, at College Library, the primary undergraduate library.

Part of the college experience . . .

by Andrew Wallmeyer

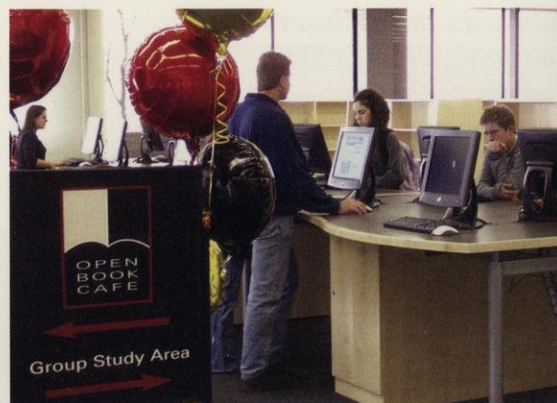

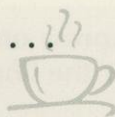

Academic literature, listening material, computer labs, light reading, and . . . lattes?

With the opening of a new café in College Library this spring, the libraries have added coffee and croissants to the long list of offerings to students, thanks to support from the UW Foundation's Parents Fund. The fund had already supported the refurbishing of College Library's furnishings and study spaces.

In addition to a coffee shop with a variety of beverages and bakery items, operated by the Wisconsin Union, the 8,800-square-foot space features a number of individual and group study areas, offers nearly twenty computer workstations, and houses the library's renamed Open Book video and recreational reading collections.

"I have come to appreciate just what a valuable concept it is to allow people to interact with books and media in a café setting," UW–Madison Libraries Director Ken Frazier says. Frazier is not alone in that realization. In recent years, a large number of libraries have added coffee shop components to their facilities, and have done so "very successfully."

How learning and interaction have changed for students from years past weighs on the minds of library administrators as they plan for the future.

"The idea of a library as a place where people collaborate in intellectual work is an idea that was not really articulated by academic librarians in the past," Frazier says. "Presuming that it would be a good thing if people were able to gather around a table in a space where they could talk freely was not evident in the design of libraries."

College Library's Linda Balsiger says students studying were already studying with food and beverages in hand, and the Open Book Café is a natural extension of that.

"I think it will enhance what [students] do now, but I do not know if it will fundamentally change it," Balsiger says. "That's why I think it will work."

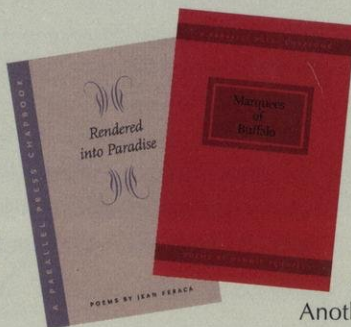

Parallel Press enters sixth year

by Catherine Cox

Since its founding in 1998, the Parallel Press, an imprint of the University of Wisconsin–Madison Libraries, has successfully negotiated a symbiotic relationship between digital and print media that reflects the libraries' ongoing commitment to make scholarly works available worldwide.

Currently, the Parallel Press produces two primary types of publications: poetry chapbooks and print-on-demand versions of classic scholarly works, not available elsewhere.

The press publishes six poetry chapbooks per year from authors with regional ties. Five years and twenty-six chapbooks later, the Parallel Press has been fortunate to feature a number of award-winning writers in its series.

Previous authors include Ted Genoways, two-time winner of the Guy Owens Poetry Prize and winner of the 2001 Samuel French Morse Poetry Prize; Elizabeth Oness, winner of numerous honors, including an O. Henry Prize and a Nelson Algren Award; and Grammy-award winner Mason Williams.

Another press focus—reprinting limited numbers of out-of-print academic texts—grew out of the desire to make these books widely available to scholars around the world as part of the Wisconsin Idea.

Initially, each of the reprinted books appeared in its full form on the UW–Madison Libraries Web site. Shortly after online publication, the libraries began receiving requests for print editions

Friends award $20,000 in grants to campus libraries

For the Mills Music Library, the Friends of the University of Wisconsin–Madison Libraries grant allows it to preserve tapes and copies of sheet music that might be lost otherwise. Mills received Friends support totaling more than $3,000 and is one of sixteen libraries to receive almost $20,000 in Friends grants in 2003.

The individual grants to campus libraries range from $500 to $3,300 and will be used to purchase new preservation materials, preserve old collections and add to existing projects. Librarians in Mills, for example, will purchase a scanner to digitize copies of sheet music written or published in Wisconsin dating from the 1850s—some are the only surviving copies and need to be preserved digitally. In addition, they will preserve reel tapes, mostly of folk music, from the 1970s and 1980s.

The Friends have awarded more than 130 grants totaling $131,000 to campus libraries since 1997.

One of latest print-on-demand books, Root Nodule Bacteria and Leguminous Plants by Edwin Brown Fred, Ira Lawrence Baldwin and Elizabeth McCoy, was first published in 1932 and involved a thorough and critical examination of early research in biological nitrogen fixation.

The Parallel Press recently re-published this volume and its supplement as a digital resource available through the University of Wisconsin's History of Science and Technology Web site.

The Parallel Press sees the Wisconsin Idea—that the boundaries of the university should extend to the boundaries of the state—as fundamental to both its chapbook and print-on-demand series.

An Idea

from three centuries ago

by Katharine
Grayson

In the winter of 1670, influential English philosopher and political theorist John Locke sat in his chambers vigorously debating morality and religion with a handful of friends. Although they reached no consensus, this argument spurred Locke to embark on a philosophical quest that would result in what some argue is his greatest work, An Essay Concerning Humane Understanding.

Three hundred years later a copy of this book has found a home in the UW–Madison Libraries' Department of Special Collections. Not only is it an elegant first edition, but it is a first issue—a version printed before any corrections or changes were made in subsequent copies, essentially a publication hot off the presses.

This book is both an historical and an intellectual treasure. When Locke began to reflect on the recent argument between friends, he decided it was necessary to examine the limitations of man's ability to understand the world before considering religious and moral matters.

He originally thought it would take him no more than a page to reach a conclusion, but he ultimately spent twenty years writing what became Essay.

This work also has national significance, and the Library of Congress considered a similar copy worthy of being included in its Exhibition of World Treasures in June 2001.

The book was printed in 1690 and is in excellent condition, with the original binding still intact. It comes to the library as part of a gift from Ann S. Nelson, former president of the Friends of the UW–Madison Libraries who has contributed many other works in recent years, including a Second Folio of Shakespeare's works. She received this book and many others as part of an inheritance from close family friends Earl and Aubrey Richmond of LaCrosse.

Nelson is happy to donate this rare book to the library.

"Libraries are very important in our lives and I am glad to contribute to them," she says. "These books are friends to me and so much a part of my life. I have felt very lucky to have them in my home, but I am also glad they will be kept safely in the library."

To many people in the United States, Locke is best known for his ideological influence on Thomas Jefferson's writing of the Declaration of Independence and on the guiding principles behind the United States Constitution.

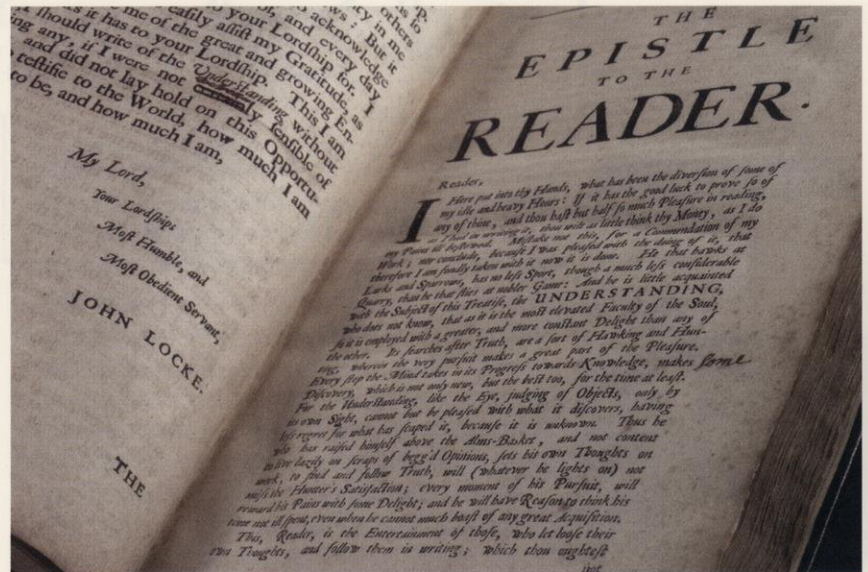

Although far more philosophical than political, An Essay Concerning Humane Understanding is considered his greatest work and an example of his versatility as a writer and thinker.

"It is probably his most important work and, indeed, one of the most important works in the history of philosophy," according to Johann Sommerville, a UW-Madison professor of history.

Also, Sommerville says, this book had a widespread influence from popularizing the use of the word "idea" in English to sparking debate and correspondence between intellectuals of his time.

Locke was a personal friend of Isaac Newton, and this book had a lasting impact on the study of science and the development of many other fields.

"Locke's philosophy gave precision, coherence, and theoretical sophistication to what the great scientists of his period were doing," Sommerville says. "Essay was highly influential on the study of philosophy, psychology, education, and science in America."

In this book, Locke takes on a monumental task—evaluating man's capacity to reason.

"The understanding, like the eye, whilst it makes us see and perceive all other things, takes no notice of itself; and it requires art and pains to set it at a distance and make it its own object," Locke wrote.

Under the care of the library, this first edition that emerged out of Locke's "art and pains" will be preserved for many years to come.

Robert Louis Stevenson also produced art to accompany his tales. Above: One of his illustrations for The Studio (1897).

In addition to other material, former Friends President Ann S. Nelson gave the libraries a set of approximately sixty-five titles by Robert Louis Stevenson. Most of the volumes, in dark tan calfskin with green spine labels, were bound by Joseph Zaehnsdorf (1816-1886), one of Europe's most influential custom bookbinders. In 1842 Zaehnsdorf founded his London bindery, which created traditional and less-traditional leather bindings that are still admired for their excellence of craftsmanship.

First Storm

by Judith Strasser

Writer's Page

Judith Strasser recently retired as a senior producer and interviewer for To the Best of our Knowledge, a nationally-distributed public radio program. She is a freelance writer and an interviewer for Out Loud, the audio feature of the Poets & Writers Web site (www.pw.org), and conducts poetry writing workshops in Wisconsin and elsewhere for adults and children. She is the author of the libraries' Parallel Press chapbook, Sand Island Succession: Poems of the Apostles.

I am fifteen years old. It is dark, early evening, March or early April 1960. I stand just outside the French doors to the glassed-in front porch of our house in Pittsburgh's Squirrel Hill. I am watching a thunderstorm. My sick mother, my oblivious father, my squabbling little sisters inhabit a different world. Only I know the power of this moment. A screen of evergreens shields me from the rain that pelts the sidewalk and rushes down the pot-holed street, but I hear the crack of lightning, see the sky light up like day. I taste ozone in the air; smell the earth as it opens, the soil preparing to welcome seed.

I rush to my third-floor bedroom; write down what I've seen, what I feel. I call my poem "First Storm." A few days later, I take the streetcar down to the smoke-blackened sandstone building that houses the main branch of Carnegie Library. I show my poem to Miss Cathon, in the Children's Room. I've known Miss Cathon since I was a little girl taking Saturday morning art classes at Carnegie Museum. I have no talent for art, but for reasons of their own, my parents kept signing me up. We'd sit in a big lecture hall, looking at slides; then we'd stand at easels, painting or sketching with pastels. Every so often, the instructor would come by, frown at my easel, and make a comment, never favorable. After two hours of this, I'd run downstairs giddy with relief, race past the scary Tyrannosaurus Rex in the Hall of Dinosaurs, and find my way through the back halls that linked the museum to the library. I'd sit in the Children's Room, reading books Miss Cathon suggested—The Blue Fairy Book, Doctor Doolittle—and wait for my parents to finish their grocery shopping and come to pick me up.

Miss Cathon had gray hair and a very pronounced hunchback. John Hersey used her as the model for an important character in his 1960 novel, The Child Buyer. She has been dead for many years now, but a friend who teaches in a university library school tells me that Miss Cathon still maintains a formidable reputation among children's librarians. When I am fifteen, I know only that she likes to see what I write. For years, I have brought her my poems. Most of them are truly awful, rhymed whines about my sisters, sing-song paeans to the glories of autumn leaves. I know exactly how bad they are, because I still have the lined copy book into which, in a loopy child's script, I inked the ones I thought best. On the mottled brown shiny-paper cover, I titled the book: "My Poems, JLS."

But Miss Cathon—quite unlike the ferocious art class instructor—never discourages me. She only tells me to write some more. She wants to read what I write. And when I bring her "First Storm," she sends it to The Horn Book, the professional journal for children's librarians. By the time they publish the poem, it is 1961. I am a high school junior. I have written articles for the school paper; I have even had a short story published in the school district's creative writing journal. But this is my first "real" published piece. I even get paid for it! The Horn Book sends me a check for $5. I spend the money on something—I no longer remember what—but before I cash the check, my father copies it at work on one of those new Xerox machines.

When I wrote "First Storm," I didn't believe in metaphors. I thought of them as arcane interpretations English teachers made up, imposed on writers' work, and used to stump their students. I was very literal. My poem was just a description: what I saw, what I heard, what I felt. "Illumined second—/The heavens' throaty cough./Needle-drops crackling on pot-holed streets./Flashing brilliance/. . . Calm. Violet heads nodding, wetted by//Spring's first storm." Now, more than forty years later, I acknowledge the existence of metaphor. Sometimes—I confess—I even try to strengthen metaphors I discover lurking in the early drafts of my own poetry. And I read "First Storm," now, as metaphor for an adolescent awakening, perhaps sexual, possibly even artistic.

I wish I could ask Miss Cathon what she saw in the poem. What she saw in me.

A love of LEARNING

by Sue Zyhowski,
UW Foundation

Shirley Cherkasky ('49 B.A., '68 M.S.), and her aunt, Jessie M. Christensen ('53 M.A.), were often on opposite sides of political and religious discussions, but they shared a great love for education, books and the UW–Madison.

When Christensen died in April 2002, Cherkasky decided to honor her aunt's memory by making a gift in support of the UW–Madison Libraries. The Shirley E. Cherkasky and Jessie M. Christensen Special Collections Fund will help preserve materials and aid collection development.

Cherkasky is the only child of working parents in Two Rivers, Wisconsin, and she would often be joined in the summer by Christensen, her mother's older sister. Aunt Jessie, who earned a master's degree from the UW, taught English and had served as a librarian in several Minnesota public schools during her career.

Christensen retired in 1968 to Orlando, Florida, where she enjoyed volunteering at the Orlando Public Library. "Jessie led an exemplary life of education, books and high standards," says Cherkasky. "It was only logical to remember her with a gift to the UW–Madison Libraries."

"The Shirley E. Cherkasky and Jessie M. Christensen Special Collections Fund is the largest endowment for Special Collections in our history," says Ken Frazier, director, UW–Madison Libraries. "It will, for the first time, allow steady annual expenditures for the purchase of rare and historically significant books for Special Collections."

"Shirley Cherkasky is an avid reader and bibliophile, who has the vision to understand how exposure to these treasures can be a transforming learning experience for students."

Cherkasky is a culinary historian, a field of study that did not exist prior to 1971. She had a

handed down through the generations remarkable career with the Smithsonian Institution, working in the Performing Arts Division and at the Museum of American History. She coordinated exhibit-related public programs, lectures, films and symposiums. As part of folk life festivals, she began compiling and editing small ethnic cookbooks.

She produced twenty-six of these cookbooks that captured the essential foods and flavors of the featured group. A member of several culinary historians groups, Cherkasky helped found the Culinary Enthusiasts of Wisconsin (CHEW). She also is a member of the International Commission on Ethnological Food Research. This mostly European group of anthropologists has published several of her papers, including "Fish in the Door Way," featuring the Door County fish boil.

Two of Cherkasky's daughters also graduated from the UW. Mara received her bachelor's degree from the College of Letters and Science in 1972, and Clare received her law degree in 1983. Cherkasky spends each summer in the UW–Madison Libraries continuing her research in culinary history.

Celebrating FIVE DECADES OF SERVICE

Memorial: Wisconsin's largest library

by David Null, University Archivist

After a lengthy construction process with several setbacks, including a partial collapse of steel girders in early 1951, Memorial Library finally opened for business on September 17, 1953, during New Student Programs and Registration Week. The building housed approximately 600,000 volumes with a capacity at that time for 1.5 million. It could seat 1,800 people.

Louis Kaplan, associate director for public services, said he hoped the library would be finished within three months. Many light fixtures were not in place, and photos from the time show people checking out books under the glare of bare light bulbs hanging through openings in the ceiling. A system of pneumatic tubes and conveyor belts to move books to the circulation desk on the second floor was also not completely installed. Nevertheless, the library staff managed to open the building for the start of classes on September 21. The building was largely completed by the official dedication on February 1, 1954.

The opening of Memorial Library ended a long, often painful, process to get a separate, adequately sized building for the main university library collections. Finally, to use the metaphor that President E.B. Fred had hoped would resonate with the state legislature, no longer would the university need to "run an eighty-cow farm with a twenty-stall barn."^{*}

Although this saying is usually associated with President Fred, in his oral history Mark Ingraham, then dean of the College of Letters and Science, says that he originated the phrase.*

Louis Kaplan (left), associate director for public services of the university library, and State Architect Roger Kirchhoff, surveying the almost-completed new library.

The buildings on the north side of State Street, where the current entrance is, included Brown's Student Book Store, Yost's On-the-Campus Store for women, Edwin Olson men's clothing and C. W. Anderes men's clothing, the University Co-op, the Yarn Bar, and the Kollege Klub restaurant.

Two students (Mary Jens, Oregon, and Donald A. Peterson, Bloomer) entering the new library. The building was clad in Indiana Bedford limestone with North Carolina pink granite at the entrance.

Students in one of the large reading rooms of the library. There were four large reading rooms, one above the other on floors one through four, with the largest one, on the third floor, measuring 40 by 240 feet. Paneling differed on each floor with oak (first floor), walnut (second floor), korina (third floor), and Philippine mahogany (fourth floor). Green, tan, brown, and rose marbles from Colorado, Vermont, and Italy were used in interior corridors and entrance ways. The library had seating for 1,800 and included 100 faculty studies and 350 carrels for graduate students.

A student in one of the seven typing rooms, each seating nine people with rental typewriters available. In an era long before computers, these rooms were extremely popular with students.

Grand marble staircase leading from the main entrance to the second floor where the public catalog, circulation desk, and periodicals room were located. The first floor was devoted primarily to undergraduate services, including general reference, study rooms, a reserve book room, and a leisure reading new book area.

Student in the basement books stacks. There were ten stack levels, the current North Stacks. The basement contained sliding-tray shelves, which doubled capacity on that floor. These were an early version of today's compact shelving, and a few still remain.

Honor Roll

We are grateful to the Friends of the UW–Madison Libraries and to the parents of university students who made more than 6,000 gifts to the libraries. The Parents Enrichment Fund of the UW Foundation has funded a state-of-the-art lecture hall, new study spaces for students in the libraries, and a cybercafe in College Library.

These categories of support reflect combined gifts to the libraries in 2001 and 2002. Giving to the libraries is a means for giving to the entire university, since libraries have a profound impact on all students. If you are interested in joining the Friends in supporting the libraries, please write to: Friends of the UW–Madison Libraries, 728 State Street, Madison, WI 53706. You may also call (608) 265-2505 or send e-mail to friends@library.wisc.edu.

The Parents Enrichment Fund

Support from many sources is vital to the University of Wisconsin-Madison, which receives only 25 percent of its $1.6 billion annual budget from taxpayer dollars. An important source of that support is the Parents Enrichment Fund of the University of Wisconsin Foundation. The libraries have been named the primary beneficiary of the fund in recent years, because a contribution to the libraries is a gift to the entire university, one that benefits students and faculty alike.

Fold-out woodcut map of the cosmos from De die natali by Censorinus, the third century Roman grammarian; note Earth at its center.

Biding time

This translation by Heinrich Lindenbrog (1570–1642) was published in Leiden, Netherlands, in 1642, a second edition to the first published in 1614. The gift from Professor Emeritus of Classics Herbert Howe and his wife, Evelyn, is an essay partly astrological, partly chronological, which provides insights on ancient methods of computing time.

Censorinus, a Roman grammarian and writer, wrote De die natali in 238 and dedicated it to his patron Quintus Caerellius as a birthday gift. Contents include the history of man, the influence of stars, doctrines of the Greek philosophers, and chronological and mathematical questions, the last of which has been important in determining principal epochs of ancient history.

Art in the Library

Smoke weather stoneweather 35 (1991) by John Cage is one recent gift to the UW-Madison Libraries from ellsworth snyder. The watercolor, pencil and colored pencil artwork was part of an exhibit this spring "Famous for other things . . .," which featured paintings, etchings, drawings, and other objects made by individuals who are better known for their creative endeavors in other fields. In addition to Cage, among those represented were e.e. cummings, Merce Cunningham, Laurie Anderson, Hanna Ris, Jackson MacLow, Steve Reich, and Henry Miller.

A limited edition of forty posters were hand-printed for the Special Collections exhibit by snyder and the Silver Buckle Press. The $50 signed and numbered posters (14 1/4 by 18 1/2 inches) represent Fluxus art, such that the placement and color of the images vary throughout the edition. Rein Jansma. Stairs. New York: Joost Elffers, 1982.

Gifts-in-kind include teaching materials

Stairs is a gift to the libraries from Tom Garver, library liaison to the Friends of the UW-Madison Libraries, and artist Natasha Nicholson. The first edition pop-up book of staircases has no text. It was conceived and executed by Rein Jansma, a well-known "technical" architect in the Netherlands, whose work includes stadiums, sport complexes and major infrastructure works such as bridges, viaducts, tunnels and motorways.

Stairs is among fifteen artists' books, exhibition catalogs, and other materials given to the libraries by Garver and Nicholson. Some materials will be housed in Special Collections; others will become part of teaching materials in the Kohler Art Library. Nicholson recently organized and curated Cabinets of Curiosity: Four Artists, Four Visions in the Elvehjem Museum of Art at UW-Madison. Garver is an art consultant, curator, and writer. In addition to organizing several major exhibitions, he has written or contributed to more than a dozen books and scores of exhibition catalogs.

Melodic micro-history

The Minnesota Historical Society gave the UW–Madison Libraries a small, oblong music manuscript book, possibly of British origin, dating from 1823. It was found in a farm house near Neillsville, Wisconsin. An inscription on the inside front cover reads: "Isaac Field Book Walton 1823." Presumably, the book belonged to Isaac Field who lived in Walton and began writing in it in 1823; Walton may refer to the city in England near London. The volume contains four-part Psalm settings as well as single melodies for hornpipes and other popular nineteenth-century tunes. The notations appear to be in two or three different hands, suggesting that this may have been used by a succession of musicians.

From early Scandinavian explorers . . .

Some gifts of materials given to the libraries for safekeeping do not come from individuals, but from academic departments, often because of their age and significance in the history of the university. Professor Dick Ringler recently delivered an 1837 volume to Special Collections on behalf of the Department of Scandinavian Studies at UW-Madison.

In the volume, Antiquitates Americanae, published in Copenhagen, author Carl Christian Rafn (1795-1864) makes the case that America was discovered by the Scandinavians in the tenth century. The images across two pages in the center of the book show pictographs on Dighton Rock, an eleven-foot-high "glacial erratic" boulder that once rested on the shore of the Taunton River in Massachusetts. On it were believed to be pre-Columbian drawings, probably from Scandinavian explorers. The images in Antiquitates were copies of the pictographs drawn by each of seven early scholars, starting in 1680 and ending in 1812.

On the title page are inscriptions from Rasmus B. Anderson in 1872 and Julius E. Olson in 1891, the first two chairs of the Department of Scandinavian Studies, the oldest such department in the country.

Anderson was the author of several books, one of which was America, Not Discovered by Columbus (1874). He was a resourceful academic. In the early 1870s, Anderson enlisted the world-famous violinist Ole Bull for a benefit concert at the state Capitol—the proceeds bought the department's first collection of books.

Carl Christian Rafn. Antiquitates Americanae. Copenhagen, 1837.

Fall 2003 Exhibits

Stock & Trade: Victorian-Era Trade Cards from the Collections of Daniel M. Albert and Michael R. Albert

Continues through September 19, 2003
Special Collections, 976 Memorial Library.

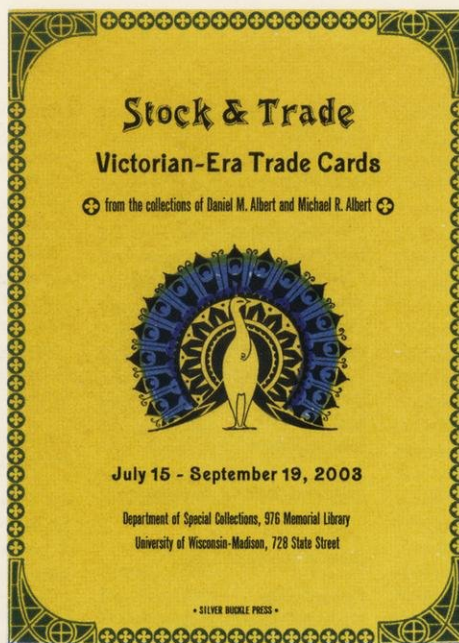

Beginning with the Centennial Exposition (Philadelphia, 1876), burgeoning consumer culture and lithographic printing in color—chromolithography—came together in the form of appealing small illustrated cards advertising consumer goods and identifying local merchants who carried them.

This exhibit draws upon the trade card collections of Daniel M. Albert, M.D., professor of ophthalmology, UW—Madison, and of Michael R. Albert, M.D., Rhode Island Hospital in Providence RI, and sets these colorful (if small) cards alongside other advertising of the period. A specially designed “trade card” produced by Silver Buckle Press is the exhibit’s poster. A limited number of the posters are available for sale through the Press.

Celebrating the 50th Anniversary of Wisconsin's Largest Library

Continues through November 7, 2003
Memorial Library Lobby

University Archives will present an exhibit of images documenting the opening of Memorial Library. After a lengthy construction process with several setbacks, including a partial collapse of steel girders in early 1951, Memorial Library finally opened on September 17, 1953. At last, the university would not have to “run an eighty-cow farm with a twenty-stall barn,” in the words of President E. B. Fred. The building housed approximately 600,000 volumes with a capacity of 1.5 million. Fifty years, two additions, and two million volumes later, Memorial has become Wisconsin’s largest library.

Notes from the Stone-Paved Path: Meditations on North India

Photographs by Lewis Koch and books from collections of Memorial Library
September 22–November 7, 2003
Special Collections, 976 Memorial Library

This exhibit, pairing photographs with books, is the result of a year that photographer Lewis Koch lived and worked in the Tibetan community, near Dharamsala, in northern India. As Koch notes, “Each impression, each image, each page of text is, by definition, a highly edited subjective view of a real place or idea. In this way, the book pages were retrieved in much the same manner as the photographs—through exploration, serendipity, revelation. Both quote from a larger context.” The exhibit is in conjunction with the 32nd Annual Conference on South Asia, October 24–26, 2003.
