The War of Robbery against Germany.

Dr. Paul Rohrbach, the well-known

Colonial author and politician opened a series of lectures on the war, which he says, will be known in History as the German War or the War of Robbery against Germany. England envies our position in the worlds markets, in "Weltwirtschaft" and "Weltpolitik," which we have gained during the last 30 years. Russia wanted to gain the supreme rule over the Balkan-Slaves, an object only to be attained by the suppression of Turkey and by the mutilation of Austria. The outrage of Serajevo can only be understood in connection with these aims. Our enemies relied upon Austrias military breakdown and this was the first and decisive fault in their calculation.

Italy's Position. Senator Valli writes in the "Popolo Romano": "Those who ask for immediate action on the part of Italy, don't know, what they are saying. Mobilization would exhaust and ruin the country. Against whom should we fight? A war against Austria would be inadmissable, a war against Germany absurd. The truth is, a war is for us absolute'y unnecessary. The Berlin Congress has enriched France and Austria, without these countries having fired a shot. Italy got nothing, because she was helpless and could not demand anything. Her policy of clean hands was a policy of sour grapes. To-day it is different. Italy is ready to use all means for safeguarding her interests, should necessity demand it. The powers will naturally have to con-political conditions in Europe takes place. Englands "Advance Guard". Colonel Repington states in the "Times," England has sent only "part of her advance guard" to the Continent. The second part of her advance guard will follow in the spring 1915 and her real army only towards the end of 1915. Sixteen months is a long time to put an army in the field-even if we consider the French method of a fortnigths training as criminal. We are afraid however, the Germans will compel England to an

sider this, when the new regulation of earlier engagement. 300 Germans die in English Concentration Camps.

Considerable numbers of Germans, who were prevented to leave England at the declaration of war, have been brought to concentration camps, where they have to sleep on the bare ground, only covered by a woollen blanket. Sanitary and washing accomodation in these camps are absolutely miserable and infectious diseases have broken out, of which over 300 Germans have already died. This has been testified by Dr. Karl Peters, the wellknown German Colonial Statesman, who has just been allowed to leave England.

No letters to be taken to England. All persons, landing in English ports have to give a declaration that they do not carry any letters or other written communications. If the officials suspect the contrary they may search the passenger and his luggage. King Peter of Servia to marry again. King Peter of Servia is said to have the intention to marry Madame Hartwig, the widow of the former Russian Ambassador in Servia. Madame Hartwig has always been a faithful nurse to the suffering King and the latter wants to show his special admiration for the late best friend, Servia has ever had. Political circles in Servia are shocked. There was another marriage rumour some time ago concerning King Peter and the painter Princess Parlaghy-Lwoff. We presume the Servian Throne is severely shaking.

England fears for India also. Three Battallions of the garrison of Malta have passed the Suez-Canal en route for India. A sure sign of growing

Naval fight near the Dutch Coast. Four German Torpedoboats were met near the Dutch Coast by the English Cruiser "Undaunted" and 4 English Destroyers. An engagement ensued during which the four German boats were sunk through the heavier fire of their enemies. Only 31 of the crew are reported having been brought to England. It is not known what damage the German boats have done to the English an English Friend in London.

I suppose you will be much surprised to hear from me, but I can get letters through and much want to write to you. Naturally, after all those stories rampant about Berlin, you will think we are all now razed from the face of the earth, even if for no other purpose than the most laudable of making room for a — Russian — population. Well, on the whole we are getting rather short of room here in the Fatherland, and it's quite true, it's the Russian element that is taking up a lot of room, but as there are very decided limits to their "constitutionals" which, as prisoners of war, are circumscribed within narrow limits, we in Berlin are still just there where we were when you left Germany, with the exception of those fathers, sons, husbands and brothers of everyone one knows, who are fighting for all that is dear and sacred to them.

You too, probably, have with bated breath, read thrilling accounts of the fearful conditions of things here in Berlin! "Crowds of desparate and excited citizens daily surrounding the royal castle and loudly demanding ... bread!" Of this I can speak as one of the crowd! Can you imagine me clamouring for bread and rampaging around the diverse royal castles waiting for it? The sounds that I can swear to having heard ... and joined in the immediate vicinity of the royal castle, were ... "Hurra! Hurra! Hurra! Deutschland, Deutschland über alles, über alles in der Welt! '

Of course there may have been somebody there, ignorant of the German language, with a soul incapable of grasping enthusiasm for anything above the needs of the stomach, but certainly there were no outward signs of anybody in need of a meal, and I should say the only thing they all did seem in need of, was a nice cool gless of water, as the weather was often uncommonly warm, reached an absolutely white heat, everyone was in a most friendly way engaged in jostling his or her neighbour in order to get a good sight of the Kaiserin and the Kronprinzessin, who were untiring in their pleased responses to the crowds, to be counted by thousands.

Well, all these demonstrations were caused by the enormous victories gained on all sides by the German Army. From Aug. 7th. on, (Liege taken) there was victory after victory, and weeks after towns and fortresses had been taken by the Germans, these same strongholds were in the foreign press proclaimed as being still in the possession of their original owers! When the English and other newspapers were industriously engaged in publishing long descriptions of "German defeats" "disasters", and "totally routed German armies", German soldiers were in long processions leading captured Russian, Belgian, French and English cannons, other war trophies and endless numbers of the small 'Kossacken' horses through the streets of Berlin!

That was on Sept. 2nd, but already on Aug. 29th there had been the overwhelming victory of the German army in East Prussia, where 90,000 Russian prisoners had been captured and about 140,000 were drowned in the swamps and lakes into which they charged headlong in their effort to escape the following up of the Germans who, naturally, were driving them off East Prussia where they had been acting like Hunns, burning and murdering wherever they found helpless, resistless people. The pictures of East Prussian devastations are harrowing to look at. Thousands of homeless peasants were brought to Berlin to be fed, clothed and helped and as a friend of ours was one of those who were engaged in the work, I of course heard particulars from a very reliable source. The second great victory in East Prussia took place on Sept. 11 when the Russians under Rennenkamp were completely routed, over 40,000 prisoners taken, endless trophies won and the Russian army sent flying back, double quick time, to where it came from.

The whole march of the German troops through Belgium was one long victory, whatever is said to the contrary, and the fact that the seat of the French Government was removed from Paris to Bordeaux, shows that they at least knew which side was winning.

In Berlin everything is as nearly normal as possible. There is very little rise in looked for success of the war loan (nearly five thousand millions were brought together inside of a few weeks) ought to convince everyone of how Germany stands financially

PRICE:

Brussels was taken and is held without any loss of live on either side, as the Belgians saw how things stood and knew that resistance here was useless. All the base defamations of the German war methods have been proved to be mere inventions intended to influence other countries, and although naturally the bitterness against England is very strong, the German army is not engaged in a campaign against civilians, and the English here meet everywhere with courtesy and kindness, of which numerous people are ready to testify.

I cannot in words express what I felt when the news was officially published that England declared war to Germany! It was just like seeing somebody with his hands bound stabbed in the back

For anyone here, knowing how earnestly and truly the Kaiser had been doing everything in his power to further peace, believing till the last minute that England was also honestly trying to preserve the peace of Europe, England's declaration of war against Germany, seemed incredible and was a fearful blow. England's most transparent excuse about Belgium's neutrality was of course mere nonsense; just as if England had not used force invariably Everywhere as soon as it suited her purpose!

To think that an utterly unscrupulous statesman should be in the position to cause a world-wide war for the mere purpose of commercial gain, is something too fearful for words; England with Germany could have reached any pinnacle; now, allied to mere brute force and hand in glove whith the corruption of Russia and the Asiatics she has forever lost her reputation for honesty of the danger of Germany's "Militarism" is mere foolish twaddle. What would Europe be with Russia's corruption more widely spread and the Asiatics swarming like ants and ultimately intermarrying all over the continent? However we can be quite calm about all that; Germany stands for culture of the highest grade, for truth, honesty in dealings, advance in all things pertaining to learning, to science and to art combined with such a strong love of the home and home ties, that it simply represents an invincibie force, and is consequently bound to become only stronger when attacked. The whole country is united to a man in the determination to fight for its life with just that tenacity which has given it the position it so justly enjoys today, for it is a well known fact, which cannot be gainsaid in spite of all misrepresentation, that Germany has reached her commercial, political and scholastic prominence by dint of great personal and combined effort and industry, quite apart from the fact that she has produced a very large percentage of the greatest men that ever existed.

To see a whole country in arms to defend its home centre, and its rights as an independent nation is an overwhelming experience, and because Germany is defending a just cause, she will be victorious.

You may be tempted to ask "what is she defending in France?" C'est la guerre, and naturally that always brings with it the unavoidable destruction of much belonging to the side which has been agressive and had to be beaten back. All this terrible loss of life and property could have been absolutely prevented if England had remained neutral instead of allying itself to brute force and a horde of Asiatics.

I wonder if the statement made here by Colonel W. E. Gordon and Lt. Col. F. H. Neish, both of the Gordon Highlanders and wittnessed by two prominent officers, Baron von Lersner and Baron von Berckheim, acknowledging that they received the Dum Dum Bullets as their ammunition which the English army expected them to use, has also been kept out of the English press? Colonel Gordon is A. D. C. to the King, and it is not likely that prominent English officers who naturally love their country, would incriminate their army government if they did not feel it was a confession in justice due to Germany, and which they as honourable men had to make. They are prisoners of war tral states to prohibit them.

A Scotch Lady in Berlin writes to | the prices, and the enormous, most un- | here in Torgau, quite near Berlin, and their written statement saying that they had received but not used the bullets looking upon their use as a criminal act has been published here in all papers, and I know a man who has read them in the original.

> England's heroic "protection of Europe against Germany" is nothing but a fearful onslaught on an absolutely peaceful and peaceloving country which has risen to great height because of her capabilities and industry, and consequently roused the worst of all human passions in nations either incapable of following or unwilling to make the exertion and the reform necessary in order to hold the position which Germany has so gloriously won for herself. However, we all know that what has been honestly and gloriously won, cannot and will not be lost. Millions of families lose their dearest and most cherished possessions, and it will one day be a fearful reckoning up with those caused and who those who could have prevented this utterly unprecedented and ruthless war, the real cause of which as the whole outside world is beginning to realize, is nothing more or less than a greedy murderous scheme of English policy to destroy anything which stands in her way of mercantile advantage. What a stupendous calamity that so many thousands of splendid English people, characters of such absolute integrity of purpose and of the highest principles should now be classified all the world over as belonging to such a system of politics and government. The system of lying it so utterly incredible and so pityably shortsighted that it simply, here where know the state of things in Germany, makes the impression of moral insanity. I read for instance only this morning the copy of a statement made in the Times, that the war loan here had completely failed to bring up purpose, her prestige in every respect and anything like the desired amount which has practically already dug her own grave.
> To use a great many big words about truth is, that it enormously exceeded the most optimistical hopes, and if another loan were needed, the same would of a surety be promptly forthcoming.

Germany can not be permanently defeated; if crippled, the country will ultimately rise to be ten times stronger; the determination is there, and we all know the absolute truth of the old adage, "WHERE THERE'S A WILL THERE IS A WAY".

Roosevelt and the War.

The New York "Outlook" has recently again published an article on the war by Mr. Roosevelt, in which the Ex-president according to the report of the London "Times" joined in the accusations against Germany. The original article is now at hand and we can state that its contents differ by far from the London report. Though Roosevelt speaks warmly for England and Belgium he adds that if a nation is convinced of the life and deathnature of a coming struggle, it is unavoidable that this nation should try to fight off death and prolong its life. He also admits that it was impossible for Germany not to help Austria and that Germany would not have succeeded in her operations if she had not followed the plan, which she used against her enemies in the West. And he continues: "As far as Germany's wonderful efficiency, her outfit for the war, the farsightedness and determination of her General Staff, her readiness, her power and hardiness are concerned, nothing but admiration is due to a nation so earnest, manly and powerful; a nation, which may claim rightily sincere respect for its love of its country and its farseeing self-sacrifice."

The real object of Roosevelts article was not a protest against the methods of German warfare, but a lesson to America that all agreements and peace guarantees are void, if not supported by strong military power. Only 26 Civilians killed in Antwerp. During the bombardment of Antwerp only 26 members of the civilian population have been killed.

Cotton never Contraband.

The United States Government have decided that Cotton can never be Contraband of war. The export of Cotton to all countries has been permitted. Even Contraband should be exported to the countries at war. It is the concern of the belligerents, not the duty of neu-
