The United States Representative at the United Nations (Lodge) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL      PRIORITY      NEW YORK, August 16, 1954—7 p. m.

139. For the Secretary. Re Chinese representation. Tsiang (China) called on me at his request today. On instructions from his government he informed us of the unfortunate effect last year's moratorium formula had had in Formosa. He again proposed that we consider meeting the issue substantively and vote it down when it is raised. I told him that while this idea appealed to me personally, nevertheless one had to be realistic and look at it from the point of view of getting the largest possible number of votes. Likewise the Assembly's action was only part of a much larger picture and its action could well be controlling in many other areas of the UN where the balance was not so favorable to our position.

Tsiang then suggested that if we could not agree to deal with the matter substantively, we give consideration to a motion that "the ninth GA decides not to consider any proposals" re Chinese representation. This would omit both "postponement" and "current year" phrases from formula and would have much better impact in Formosa, although the use of the words "ninth GA" does indirectly bring in the time factor.

I told Tsiang his formula appeared to have considerable merit and that I would send it at once to the Department for their consideration. I understand Murphy is seeing Scott tomorrow and I strongly recommend Department consider this wording and attempt get British and others' agreement on it. I will telephone Secretary Dulles about this Tuesday a. m. because this is a vital matter and should be dealt with at highest level.

Memorandum of Telephone Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Key)

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] August 17, 1954.

Subject: Negotiations with UK on Chinese Representation Issue

Ambassador Lodge called this morning to urge that Mr. Murphy take a very strong position on the Chinese representation issue when he sees Mr. Scott, UK Minister. He pointed out that we should push the UK at least as hard on this as the Labor Party is pushing us, reminding me that Churchill had agreed with him that the Chinese Communists "could not be admitted to the UN so long as they are at war with the UN".

Ambassador Lodge urged that Mr. Murphy point out to Minister Scott that the Chinese question is of greater concern to us than anything else on the Assembly's agenda and that it is a very serious political issue in this country. He suggested that Mr. Murphy inform Scott that we prefer a vote on the substance of the issue. He recognized that the UK will not agree to this, but suggested that if we begin with this proposal it might be possible to reach agreement on a formula such as Dr. Tsiang has suggested, whereby the Assembly would decide not to consider the matter rather than merely to postpone consideration.

Ambassador Lodge further suggested that, if necessary, we point out to Scott that there is a great preponderance of opinion in this country that Cyprus should be turned over to Greece and that we will have to take this into account in our position on this question.

I replied that I fully shared his view as to the extremely serious political implications involved in the outcome of the Chinese question in the Assembly and agreed that we should make strong representations to the UK.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Key)<sup>1</sup>

[WASHINGTON,] August 17, 1954.

Subject: Chinese Representation in the United Nations.

Participants: Sir Robert Scott, Minister, British Embassy
Mr. Robert Murphy, Deputy Under Secretary of State
Mr. David McK. Key, Assistant Secretary for United Nations Affairs

Mr. Murphy opened the meeting by explaining to Sir Robert that he had asked the latter to come to the Department for the purpose of seeking a US-UK understanding on the subject of Chinese representation at the forthcoming 9th General Assembly. Mr. Murphy stressed the vital importance of this issue in American politics of which he felt certain Sir Robert was fully aware and reminded Sir Robert of the statement made by Prime Minister Churchill in the House of Commons on July 14, 1954 to the effect that Red China could not be admitted to the UN so long as they were technically at war with the latter. Mr. Murphy then handed to Sir Robert the text of a formula, which he described as reflecting our present thinking and which might cover the position of both governments and which read as follows:

“The Ninth General Assembly,
Decides not to consider any proposals to exclude the representatives of the Government of the Republic of China and to seat representatives of the Central People’s Government of the People’s Republic of China.”

Mr. Murphy stated the urgent desirability of early agreement on this very important question between the two governments and the hope that the UK would meet us on it.

Sir Robert stated that he would be glad to convey this formula to his government with a view to obtaining the latter’s views. Up to the present, no instructions had been received regarding his government’s attitude. He asked whether the formula envisaged a limited period of time or whether it would apply for the duration of the 9th GA and was informed that we had in mind the latter. Sir Robert foresaw that this might raise some difficulties since the British position had always been that it did not wish to commit itself beyond a limited period. Reverting to Prime Minister Churchill’s statement, Sir Robert said that the Foreign Office had indicated that the statement applied to a resumed session of which there had been talk at that time. It did not apparently apply to the forthcoming General Assembly.

<sup>1</sup>The substance of this conversation in regard to the Chinese representation question was conveyed to London in telegram 1006 and to USUN in telegram 104, both Aug. 19, 7:10 p. m. (320/8-1954).

In closing Sir Robert stated that he was fully cognizant of the intensity of American political sentiment on this issue and that he would get in touch with the Department as soon as he had obtained the views of his government about the formula which Mr. Murphy had given him.

[Here follows discussion of two other matters.]

Participants: The Secretary
Ambassador Bonnet, French Ambassador
Mr. William R. Tyler, WE

Ambassador Bonnet called on the Secretary at the latter's request.

1. The Secretary told him that he hoped that the French Government would not deviate from its present policy of non-recognition of Communist China and that it would observe the moratorium during the forthcoming General Assembly session. He added that rumors had come to our ears of a possible change in the French position and that if these were true, we would consider it a serious matter.

The Ambassador unhesitatingly replied that no change was contemplated by the French Government. He had read the transcript of the conversation of Mendès-France with Chou En Lai and there had been no reference whatsoever to the subject. The Ambassador was convinced that there was no secret agreement or understanding between France and Communist China concerning recognition. Indeed, he said, there were no conversations going on between the two countries on any subject and France was maintaining the embargo on strategic materials.

TAIPEI, August 19, 1954—5 p. m.

125. Department also pass USUN unnumbered. Embassy has received memo from Foreign Office on Chinese representation issue at ninth session UNGA. Text memo being air pouched. Summary follows:

Expressing gratification at US firm stand against admitting Peiping regime into UN, Chinese Government asks closer cooperation, more frequent contacts with US against Commies redoubled efforts at ninth session UNGA to get Peiping into UN. Chinese Government endorses Dulles July 8 statement that question of Chinese representation in UN is important matter and properly subject to veto in Security Council.

Chinese Government is canvassing friendly governments through its Missions abroad to obtain support on Chinese representation issue at next session UNGA. Record of UN members indicates that, apart from US and China, 18 certain support Chinese, support of 12 others almost certain, that of 9 others hopeful, 8 likely to abstain and 11, including Russia and satellites, will vote against China. Chinese Government asks US in approaching UN members to support Chinese Government to give special attention to wavering of unfavorable free nations, notably Afghanistan, Burma, Denmark, Ethiopia, France, Iceland, Indonesia, Israel, Liberia, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Syria, UK and Yemen. Chinese Government asks be informed of US action and results above.

Chinese representation issue, raised every year in UNGA since its fifth session, was disposed of procedurally without vote on its substance. At eighth session UNGA issue was postponed for duration of session for current year. This formula gives impression UN is awaiting a more opportune time to admit Peiping regime. Chinese Government wishes stronger resolution in support of its UN representation but does not underestimate difficulty of obtaining majority vote for its adoption. Strategy on dealing with issue may have to be worked out at delegation level at UNGA ninth session but Chinese Government hopes US Government will bear above view in mind. If it should clearly appear that such a substantive resolution would greatly reduce number of favorable votes, and might fail of passage, Chinese Government would prefer commit-submitted resolution favoring Peiping be rejected by UNGA to adoption of procedural resolution to postpone decision. In case of procedural resolution, it should state that UNGA decided not to discuss Chinese representation and should leave out mention of postponing its consideration or any qualifier of time such as "in the current year". Insertion of qualifiers of time in a counter-resolution is unnecessary and psychologically undesirable.

Subject: China Representation in the United Nations

There follows the verbatim text of the unofficial English translation of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs' memorandum of August 18, 1954, on the subject of Chinese representation in the United Nations:

MEMORANDUM

I.

The Government of the Republic of China has noted with gratification the firm stand recently reiterated by the Government and supported by the people of the United States of America against the admission of the puppet Peiping Communist regime into the United Nations. It has particularly taken note of the statements on this subject made by President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles on July 7 and 8, 1954 respectfully and of the resolutions unanimously adopted by the United States House of Representatives on July 15, 1954 and by the United States Senate on July 29, 1954. At a time when an appeasement policy towards the Communists is being pursued by certain Powers at the expense of the principles of the United Nations, this strong and just position taken by the United States will help restore confidence in that organization and strengthen the moral basis on which it is founded.

It is expected that, in the impending ninth session of the General Assembly of the United Nations, the Communists will redouble their efforts in bringing the puppet Peiping regime into the United Nations. Their sinister design would be facilitated by the compromising attitude of some of the non-Communist member states. In the face of this situation, the Chinese Government wishes to seek closer cooperation and more frequent consultations with the United States Government with a view to thwarting the Communist design and ensuring the representation of China by the only legitimate Chinese Government in existence.

II

The question of China's representation in the United Nations is not a question of whether one government or another should represent China in that organization. It is not a question which concerns the Chinese people alone. A far large issue is at stake, and, in the words of President Eisenhower, a moral question is involved. It affects the future course of the United Nations and, indeed, the very existence of the United Nations itself.

When the question was first raised early in 1950, its significance was perhaps not immediately realised by the free nations. Even the Representative of the United States in the Security Council thought that the question was one of procedure. In connection with a Soviet proposal to exclude the duly accredited representative of China from the Security Council, Mr. Ernest Gross of the United States made a statement at the 460th meeting of the Council held on January 12, 1950 in which he said :

“I should like to make it clear that the United States Government considers that the Soviet Union draft resolution presents to the Council a procedural question involving the credentials of a representative of a member. Accordingly, a vote against the motion by my Government could not be considered as a veto, even assuming that seven members of the Council voted in favor of the resolution. I wish to make it clear that my Government will accept the decision of the Security Council on this matter when made by an affirmative vote of seven members.”.

The stand taken by Mr. Gross indicates that the United States was not at the time fully appreciative of the gravity of the question and that she was not prepared at the time to assume the role of leadership on this issue in the United Nations. The United States Government has since come to modify its views as shown in the statement made by Secretary Dulles at his press conference on July 8, 1954 :

“I believe that as far as the General Assembly is concerned this certainly is an important matter which would require a two-thirds vote. Anybody that says this is not an important matter is certainly not facing up to the realities of the situation. I believe that in the Security Council it is a matter which is properly subject to veto.”

While it is not expected that there will be need to invoke the veto in this matter, its recognition by the United States Government as an important matter has served to place the question in its proper perspective and to underline the fact that it is a question deserving the most serious attention of the members of the United Nations.

III

The Chinese Government is now canvassing the various friendly governments, through its missions abroad, with a view to securing the support of the largest possible number of United Nations members on the so-called question of Chinese representation when that question is again raised by Communist or pro-Communist delegations at the ninth session of the General Assembly. The Chinese Government will keep the United States Government fully informed from time to time of the outcome of such contacts. It is requested that the United States take what action it may think fit to line up the widest possible support on the same question.

In the meantime, a careful study of such past records of the attitudes of the United Nations members as are available to the Chinese Government shows that eighteen United Nations members apart from China and the United States are certain to give support to the legitimate representation of the Chinese Government; the support from twelve others is almost certain; that of nine others is hopeful although their stand has not been consistent; there would be eight abstentions; and eleven members, including Soviet Russia and its satellites, would certainly oppose the representation of the Chinese Government. A list grouping the United Nations members into the above categories is attached herewith for the reference of the United States Government.

The Chinese Government further wishes to request that, when the United States Government decides to approach the other member Governments on this issue, it pay particular attention to and bring its influence to bear upon those free nations whose stand is wavering or unfavorable. Most of them have severed, or have no diplomatic relations with the Chinese Government. A few others are political fence-sitters or are inclined to appease the Communists. These members are: Afghanistan, Burma, Denmark, Ethiopia, France, Iceland, Indonesia, Israel, Liberia, Luxemburg, Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Syria, United Kingdom, and Yemen.

The Chinese Government will be grateful if the United States Government will keep the Chinese Government informed of what action it may deem fit to take or may have already taken in this respect and the result of such action.

IV

The United States Government will recall that the question under discussion has been raised every year in the General Assembly since its fifth session. However, no decision has yet been made on its substance. Each time it was raised, it was disposed of procedurally by a resolution of the General Assembly to postpone its consideration for the duration of the session. At the eighth session of the General Assembly, the consideration of the question was postponed for the duration of the session "in the current year" only. While the advantage of this formula in securing more favorable votes can not be ignored, it nevertheless gives the impression that the United Nations is merely awaiting a more opportune moment to admit the puppet Peiping Communist regime. Such a resolution is at best a compromise resolution lacking in moral force. It is one on which it is difficult for the Chinese Government to vote.

The Chinese Government, which has recently given much thought to this problem, is anxious to see a stronger and more positive resolution in support of its representation in the United Nations. Such a resolution will not only greatly improve the position of the Chinese Government, but will also strengthen the morale of the free world. However, at a time when the atmosphere seems to be heavily laden with desires to appease the Communist aggressors, the Chinese Government is not under-estimating the difficulties involved in attempting to obtain the desired majority to adopt such a resolution.

The actual strategy in dealing with the question may perhaps have to be worked out at the delegation level shortly before or during the ninth session of the General Assembly in the light of prevailing circumstances. It is hoped, however, that the United States Government will bear the above view in mind in making a decision on this matter. If it should appear obvious that such a resolution would greatly reduce the number of favorable votes, the Chinese Government would prefer to have the Communist resolution rejected by the General Assembly rather than have any counter resolution at all. If some counter resolution should be found necessary to express the sense of the General Assembly, it is hoped that it may be so worded as to simply provide that the General Assembly decides not to discuss any question of the representation of China, leaving out any mention of the postponement of its consideration and any such qualifier of time as "in the current year" or even "for the duration of the present session". Since under Rule 82 of the Rules of Procedure of the General Assembly a reconsideration of the Communist resolution at the same session after having been rejected is virtually impossible, it is believed that the insertion of such qualifiers of time in a counter resolution is not only unnecessary but would have an adverse psychological effect.

We will of course vigorously oppose any efforts to exclude representatives of the Government of the Republic of China and to seat Chinese Communists. We are now considering details of the precise procedures which we will advocate in the Ninth General Assembly to achieve our policy objective and this matter will be dealt with in a subsequent communication.

lowing are points which you might advance in stating our policy. (See President's press statement of July 7, 1954 and Secretary's press statement of July 8, 1954.)

(1) The Chinese Communist regime is disqualified by its consistent record of opposition to and contempt for the principles of the United Nations. It is a convicted aggressor against the United Nations in Korea; it has not purged itself of that aggression. At the Geneva Conference it continually denounced and vilified the United Nations and demanded that the United Nations be repudiated. In Southeast Asia it promoted aggression. There is no evidence that the Chinese Communist regime meets the Charter test of being "peace loving" and "able and willing" to carry out the Charter obligations.

(2) Any increased acceptance of Communist China would directly serve Communist purposes. Anti-Communist forces in Asia would undoubtedly be weakened. Conversely, Communist elements would be strengthened and emboldened. The result would be serious damage to the free nations of the Far East and a gain for the Communist orbit all over the world.

(3) If appropriate, reference might be made to the serious adverse effect on the attitude of United States public opinion toward the United Nations and toward individual states which support the seating of the Chinese Communists.

 Mr. DePalma, UNP

Mr. Key explained that he had asked Mr. deBeus to call in order to ascertain the present position of the Netherlands with regard to the Chinese representation question, adding that he did not think it necessary to dwell on the supreme political importance of this issue in the United States.

Mr. deBeus replied that he had no reason to think the Netherlands position has changed in any respect. His Government would have favored the admission of Communist China before the aggression in Korea, but has opposed it since then. He pointed out that the Netherlands has not exchanged full representatives with the Communist regime and, according to his understanding, will not do so if the Netherlands is asked to support the admission of this regime to the UN in exchange for such an agreement. He assumed that the Netherlands' position would remain unchanged so long as the Chinese Communists are branded as aggressors, but added that he would check with his Government.

Mr. Key then gave Mr. deBeus a copy of the formula for disposing of this issue in the General Assembly which we have suggested to the UK. In response to Mr. deBeus' question, Mr. Key stated we had no reason to believe that the UK position on this issue has changed, although we do not know just how they would like to have the issue disposed of at this Session.

Mr. deBeus then asked whether the Department had reached any decision with respect to the Netherlands candidacy for ECOSOC and the question of Western New Guinea, adding that the Netherlands will oppose the inscription of the New Guinea item on the Assembly's agenda, Mr. Key replied that these matters were under active study and that he would inform him of our decisions as soon as possible.

Subj: Proposed New Policy Concerning U.S. Participation in International Meetings with Chinese Communists.

The attached draft memorandum to the Secretary, prepared in UNA,<sup>1</sup> is occasioned by a recent Cabinet decision that this Government should accredit an official delegation to the 10th World Poultry Congress to which the Chinese Communists had been invited. UNA has been unable to learn whether this Cabinet decision was a fully considered decision to alter present policies of non-attendance at meetings with the Chinese Communists.

In its present form the memorandum lists only arguments in favor of a change in the present policy. If the memorandum is to be approved it should include arguments on the other side as well. For example, a change in our policy of non-attendance might in itself increase the number of invitations extended to the Chinese Communists, might be interpreted as an indication that we are accommodating ourselves to the idea of working with the Chinese Communists, and might encourage some states to negotiate more freely with the Chinese Communists. While the meetings referred to in the draft memorandum are of comparatively minor importance, the question may arise of our attendance at meetings of considerable substantive significance such as a conference on peaceful uses of atomic energy or on certain aspects of the disarmament question.

The qualification in the recommendation that accreditation should be limited to conferences in which it can be shown that the national interest would be served is not clear. It is difficult to see what meeting would be excluded if the Poultry Congress involves the national interest. I am told that the second part of that same qualification referring to "special considerations arising from the conference in question" is intended to cover the possibility of Communist sponsorship.

The recommendation might then be rephrased somewhat as follows: "That although we should avoid appearing to make a general practice of sending official U.S. Delegations to international conferences attended by representatives of Communist regimes which we do not recognize, existing policy should be applied with sufficient flexibility to authorize the accreditation of official U.S. Delegations provided (a) it can be shown that official U.S. participation will result in substantial benefit to this country's interest and there are no special considerations arising from the meeting in question which would make such participation politically undesirable, and (b) (as before)."

Incident to Sir Robert Scott's call on the Acting Secretary regarding another matter, he broached the subject of his recent conversation with Mr. Murphy concerning the admission of Red China to the United Nations. He said that, according to his instructions from his Government, it appeared that London might be willing to agree to the same type of moratorium which was approved for the Eighth Session of the General Assembly. In effect, this would mean that the moratorium would apply to the Ninth General Assembly until December 31, 1954. It will be recalled that the formula we had suggested to HMG envisaged an understanding between the UK and the US to oppose bringing up the matter of Red China's admission during the Ninth General Assembly. Sir Robert suggested that the question undoubtedly would be handled by our delegations in New York, which was agreed. [Here follows a brief discussion of the Cyprus question.]

The redraft, in addition to suggested elaborations of the argument at various points, contains some small suggested changes. These will be readily apparent by reference to the copy of the original draft submitted to L.

The documents have been tabbed from "A" through "L". References to these tabs appear in the text of the redraft and (except for "A", "B" and "C" which are new items) in the margin of the draft as submitted to this office.

Documentation will be supplied separately on the four additional charges set out on the attached list.

Re paragraphs 7 and 8: FE suggests that in subsequent redrafting, account should be taken of the fact that the Chinese Nationalist Government is far more representative of the Chinese people than is the Communist regime, and that representation by the Communist regime would mean less, not more, "universality".

There is evidence that there was a connection between this project and an exercise conducted from mid-July by a working group of the Operations Coordinating Board of the National Security Council, in developing information briefs for the use of Ambassador Lodge as evidence supporting the exclusion of Communist China from the United Nations. Documentation regarding this matter is in CA files, lot 59 D 110, "Chinese Representation at UN, 1954".

COMMUNIST CHINA IN THE UNITED NATIONS<sup>2</sup>

I.

Arguments Against Seating

1. It is an aggressor against the United Nations in Korea, so found by resolution 498 (V) of February 1, 1951 which still stands.

In resolution 396 (V) of December 14, 1950 (copy attached—Tab A) the General Assembly recommended that “whenever more than one authority claims to be the government entitled to represent a Member state in the United Nations and this question becomes the subject of controversy in the United Nations, the question should be considered in the light of the Purposes and Principles of the Charter and the circumstances of each case”. The Chinese Communist regime has consistently acted in callous contempt of the Purposes and Principles of the Charter.

In resolutions of June 25 and 27, 1950 (copies attached—Tabs B and C) the Security Council called for the immediate cessation of hostilities in Korea; called upon the North Korean authorities to withdraw their forces to the thirty-eighth parallel; called upon all Members to refrain from giving assistance to the North Korean authorities; recommended that Members furnish such assistance to the Republic of Korea as may be necessary to repel the armed attack and to restore international peace and security in the area.

The Chinese Communist authorities, in contempt of the United Nations, despatched their troops to fight against the forces of the United Nations. On February 1, 1951 the General Assembly found that the Chinese Communist regime “by giving direct aid and assistance to those who were already committing aggression in Korea and by engaging in hostilities against United Nations forces there, has itself engaged in aggression” (copy of resolution 498 (V) of February 1, 1951 attached—Tab D).

The same resolution goes on to call upon the Chinese Communist regime to “cause its forces and nationals in Korea to cease hostilities against the United Nations forces and to withdraw from Korea”. Although the Armistice Agreement signed at Panmunjom on July 27, 1953 brought about a complete cessation of hostilities pending negotiation of a final peaceful settlement, no such settlement has been reached and forces and nationals of the Chinese Communist regime have not withdrawn from Korea. By its continued direct aid and assistance to these forces and nationals and to others who were already committing aggression in Korea, the so-called Central People’s Government must be considered still to be engaged in aggression in Korea within the meaning of General Assembly resolution 498 (V).

2. At the Geneva Conference the Chinese Communist regime treated the United Nations with the utmost contempt and refused to admit the validity of any of its actions with reference to Korea.

[The text of the statement by Chou En-Lai on May 3, 1954 at the sixth plenary session of the Geneva Conference is attached (Tab E).]<sup>3</sup>

The following, among others, are illustrations of the official Chinese Communist attitude toward the United Nations and its action regarding Korea:

“ . . . The Delegates of the United States and certain other countries . . . endeavor to use, as before, the illegal resolutions of the United Nations for insisting on interfering in the internal affairs of Korea and in preventing the Korean people from solving their own problems themselves”. (p. 127)

“ . . . Those member nations of the United Nations which followed the lead of the United States . . . went so far as to discredit the just action of the Chinese People’s Volunteers in resisting aggression and aiding Korea, and slandered the People’s Republic of China as an aggressor”. (p. 128)

3. It continues to defy the UN Resolution of 1950 establishing a United Nations Commission for Korea, although that Resolution stands and the Commission is today in South Korea.

General Assembly resolution 376 (V) of October 7, 1950, among other things, established the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea (UNCURK). The Commission convened at Tokyo on November 20, 1950, and is still in operation. The text of this resolution is attached, together with an account of the establishment of UNCURK from the President’s Report for 1950 (Tab F).

4. It actively supported the Viet Minh aggression of Ho Chi-Minh against Laos and Cambodia. While these two countries refrained from bringing their case to the United Nations, the facts are demonstrable. (For documentation on Chinese Communist support of the Viet Minh see Tab K.) Thailand was threatened and showed its alarm by appealing to the Security Council for a Peace Observation Commission, their appeal being vetoed by the Soviet Union (Thai resolution attached—Tab G).

5. The conduct of the Chinese Communist regime is exactly the kind of conduct which, under Article 5 and 6 of the Charter, should subject a member to suspension of membership rights or even expulsion from the Organization. Article 5 authorizes suspension of a Member whose conduct is such as to warrant the application of preventive or enforcement action against it, and Article 6 authorizes the expulsion of a member which has persistently violated the Principles of the Charter. The Communist regime is one against which the Member States of the United Nations were authorized to take, and against which they did in fact take, preventive and enforcement action, both military and economic. It seems senseless to seat in the United Nations a regime whose conduct is unmistakably the kind of conduct which calls for suspension or expulsion.

6. The China case represents a precedent of the utmost importance. It is the first time that conflicting claims have been made for the seat of a country and the way this is handled can have important future consequences in other cases.

The National Government is the Government which signed the United Nations Declaration of January 1, 1942, which qualified China under subsequent agreements for original membership in the United Nations Organization. It is in control of a part of what both sides claim to be "China". It is recognized by a large majority of members of the United Nations—only 15 Members (excluding Byelorussia and the Ukraine) recognize the Communist regime—and the Soviet Union, by its note of August 14, 1945, agreed in substance to recognize it for thirty years (the life of the Sino-Soviet Treaty of Friendship and Alliance of August 14, 1945, of which the note was agreed to form a part). (Text of Sino-Soviet Treaty of 1945 attached—Tab G!) It may be noted that, by resolution 505 (VI) of February 1, 1952 (text attached—Tab H) the General Assembly determined "that the USSR, in its relations with China since the surrender of Japan, has failed to carry out the Treaty of Friendship and Alliance between China and the USSR of 14 August 1945". Soviet recognition of the Communist regime is consistent with its other violations of the Sino-Soviet Treaty.

It is true that the Communist regime exercise de facto control over the greater part of China and the greater number of Chinese. However, de facto control is not a conclusive test for purposes of recognition, and even less so for purposes of representation under the Charter. Even the Chinese Communist regime fails to apply the test to recognition, since it recognizes the Communist regime of East Germany and the Communist regime of North Korea as the Governments of Germany and Korea, respectively, and has refused to recognize the Governments headed by Chancellor Adenauer and President Rhee, although these Governments freely rule the greater part of Germany and the Germans, and of Korea and the Koreans. [For facts on Communist recognition of East Germany and North Korea see Tab L.]

The Chinese Communist regime does not conform to accepted standards of international law and practice. It is an aggressor against the United Nations. Its general conduct in other instances has shown a similar disregard of legality and morality. For example:

(a) After the killing and wounding of American citizens in a British civilian plane, it has refused even to receive U.S. notes calling for indemnification and for punishment of offenders, the guilt of which was not denied. (Documentation available in L and FE. Text of U.S. note of August 4, 1954 attached—Tab I)

(b) It holds in prison 30 American citizens without trial, without a statement of charges, and often under intolerable physical conditions. (See attached document—Tab J—entitled “Mistreatment of Foreign Nationals and Interests in Communist China”.)

7. The Charter does not provide for “universality” but for the membership of peace-loving states which both accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.

While it is true that the Charter talks in terms of “states” and not “governments”, the reality is that states only act through governments and states cannot carry out their obligations except through governments. Therefore, the character of a government is necessarily decisive. The important point is, however, that Article 4 conclusively does away with argument that the Chinese Communist regime should be admitted on the ground that the Charter contemplates “universality”.

The point has even greater weight when dealing with a government which would take its seat on the Security Council. The Charter makes clear (Article 23) that membership on the Security Council should reflect “the contribution of members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security”. The Security Council has (Article 24) “primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security”. In view of these provisions, it is the height of folly to seat a regime condemned of violating by armed force international peace and security.

8. Those who argue for the admission of Communist China in the interest of “universality” not only ignore the Charter language which rejects this principle but they also ignore the fact that the Soviet Union, by exercising the veto power, has prevented the admission of some fourteen nations, against whose record there is no blemish whatsoever, unless it be that their governments are non-Communist: Jordan, Ireland, Portugal, Italy, Austria, Finland, Nepal, Ceylon, Libya, Republic of Korea, Japan, Viet-Nam, Laos and Cambodia. It is perfectly clear that the USSR would also veto Germany and Spain if they applied. The states rejected through the Soviet veto thus include German, Italy and Japan, and represent much human population and power in the world. Thus, the argument which we so often hear, that the UN is being “bypassed” because of the absence of Communist China, is too one-sided to be convincing. It disregards the fact that the absence of these many nations which play a major part in international affairs has for years, while the Soviet Union was vetoing their admission, made it necessary for the United Nations to be "bypassed" in many essential respects.

Those who want "universality" should not concentrate upon the absence of one single government of dubious status and reputation, but rather upon the absence of the many. Unless the Soviet Union alters its position with respect to vetoing the admission of those obviously qualified for membership, the whole matter should perhaps be reserved for consideration at the prospective Charter Review Conference.

Four Additional Charges

The CPG has:

1. failed to accept China's recognized treaty obligations;
2. supported the Communist side in Korea in the commission of atrocities and, more recently, in violating the Armistice Agreement by frustrating the work of the NNSC;
3. maliciously collaborated in developing and publicizing false evidence in support of spurious germ warfare charges;
4. systematically suppressed human rights at home.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the United Nations Adviser, Bureau of European Affairs (Allen)

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] September 1, 1954.

Subject: Netherlands Position on Chinese Representation

Participants: Dr. DeBeus, Chargé, Netherlands Embassy
 IO—Mr. Key
 UNP—Mr. Bond
 EUR—Mr. W. P. Allen

Dr. DeBeus, calling at his request to respond to Mr. Key's recent inquiry, stated his Government's position as follows:

The Netherlands Government remains opposed to seating Chinese Communists in the UN now since they have not purged themselves of their aggression. This would apply for the duration of the GA in accordance with the suggested formula we had indicated to them. This is the position the Netherlands Government will take at the forthcoming meeting of the Brussels Pact Powers at which UN matters will be discussed. However, if the other Brussel Powers take a different view the Netherlands Government would necessarily have to re-examine its position.

Mr. Key thanked the Chargé for this encouraging report and requested that he advise us of the final decision of the Netherlands Government as soon as possible following the Brussels meeting. Dr. DeBeus agreed to do so.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Under Secretary of State (Murphy)<sup>1</sup>

[WASHINGTON,] September 1, 1954.

Subject: Admission of Communist China to UN

Participants: Baron Silvercruys—Ambassador of Belgium
Mr. Charles Muller, Second Secretary, Belgian Embassy
Mr. Murphy, Deputy Under Secretary
Mr. Key, Assistant Secretary, IO
Mr. C. Burke Elbrick, Deputy Assistant Secretary, EUR

Mr. Murphy referred to Ambassador Silvercruys' call on the Secretary recently at which time the Secretary had inquired concerning Belgium's position with respect to the admission of Communist China to the UN. The Ambassador said that he had reported the Secretary's views to Brussels and he recapitulated the various points of his conversation with the Secretary, which corresponded almost identically with the memorandum of conversation prepared in the State Department at the time of that previous visit.

Mr. Murphy said that the United States Government feels very strongly about this particular issue, and he inquired whether the Ambassador had received any reaction from Brussels following the reported conversation with the Secretary. The Ambassador said that he had not had specific instructions but that he thought he understood the thinking of the Belgian Government. Under present circumstances, and in view of the 1951 UN resolution which labeled Communist China an aggressor nation, he was sure that the Belgian Government would not agree to the admission of Communist China. He hedged somewhat, however, saying that much would depend on the type of resolution which might be presented to the General Assembly. Anyone, he said, is entitled to say anything on any subject in the General Assembly and he doubted that all discussion of this subject could be choked off. Mr. Murphy said that this was quite a different matter, and he and Mr. Key both pressed the Ambassador for a definite reply as to the Belgian attitude and the action that Belgium would take in the General Assembly on the specific issue of Communist China membership. The Ambassador said that he would inquire again of his Government and would let Mr. Key know definitely what position the Belgian Government would take.

In the course of the conversation the Ambassador referred to the request that he made of the Secretary for support of Belgium's candidacy for a seat in the Security Council. Mr. Murphy said that we were considering the matter sympathetically and that he could add no more at this time to what the Secretary had already told the Ambassador.

The United States Representative at the United Nations (Lodge) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

NEW YORK, September 3, 1954—5 p. m.

201. Re Chinese representation. USUN officers have held two sets consultations at their request with Kiang and Cheng Hsi-ling (Chinese delegation) concerning Chinese representative at Ninth GA. They again put up to us, on instructions, idea of voting on merits of question. USUN gave them same arguments as before against such vote, and desirability of adopting suitable moratorium formula to maintain highest possible vote. In discussing wording of formula, they reiterated opposition to use of words "postpone", "current year", and "to exclude representatives of Government of Republic of China". Their preferred version would state:

"The Ninth Regular Session of the GA decides not to consider the question of Chinese representative".

USUN pointed out possibility it could be argued this formula would prevent GA from approving credential their delegate. Therefore, suggested wording (already put up to UK):

"GA decides not to consider any proposals to exclude representatives of Government of Republic of China or (and) to seat representatives of CPG of PRC."

Today Kiang said his delegation had considered matter further and would be able accept latter formula, but urged that in putting it up to other delegates words "Chinese Communist regime" be substituted for "CPG of CPR". USUN officer said this would be our strong preference, too, but doubted likelihood of any general acceptance in view of past practice of GA references to Chinese Communists as CPG of PRC.

In earlier conversations, USUN officers went over various ways in which subject of Chinese representative could be raised, and different methods of dealing therewith. USUN left it expressly understood no final decisions could be reached on these at this stage. Among various possibilities, most of which more or less obvious, were following:

1. Some delegate might propose appointment special committee to consider matter, pending results of which: (a) Chinese delegate would be seated provisionally, or

- (b) Neither contender would be seated.
2. Chinese Communists might send in credentials for own set of delegates, which would then be before the House along with Nationalists credentials.
  3. USSR might try barter change in its position re new members for agreement from other delegates to support seating Chinese Communists.
  4. Presidential ruling either that subject is "important matter" on which two-thirds needed for any proposals, including approval of credentials or tied with this a proposal from chair for special committee, or ruling in opposite sense that this solely a matter of credentials. Other possibilities could obviously be covered by moving moratorium without difficulty. Enumerated ones would probably require additional Parliamentary tactics to knock down.

In connection with Chinese representative, Kiang today suggested following composition for credentials committee:

US, Philippines, El Salvador, Brazil, Egypt, Australia or Turkey, USSR, UK, and Norway. Balance would be 6 to 3 in favor of Nationalists, and probably 8 to 1 for moratorium, although Norway may have difficulties.

Cheng urged that in US instructions to the field on this subject that emphasis be placed on US feeling this not simply credentials matter at all but one of greatest political importance. He felt this necessary in some quarters where, although US opposition known, this particular point not understood.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Mission at the United Nations<sup>1</sup>

WASHINGTON, September 8, 1954—7:11 p. m.

133. Re procedure for handling Chinese representation issue at Ninth GA.

1. Essential there be firm agreement friendly delegations in advance opening session on precise procedure which will dispose of Chinese representation issue promptly, definitely and with minimum confusion. Fact that initiation these broad consultations must necessarily await agreement with UK on text moratorium formula points up necessity such agreement at earliest possible time. As soon as formula worked out, suggest you initiate consultations on procedure first with UK, then with China, Thailand and Netherlands, and subsequently with others. If Mrs. Pandit is definitely to be in chair at opening session procedure should also be discussed with her.

2. Procedural courses must be considered in light fact that unlike previous years we cannot this year rely on cooperation Acting President. Alternatives include:

(a) As at previous sessions we could wait until issue raised by others [in early plenary meeting, probably in form usual motion; in Credentials Committee in form proposal that Chinese credentials be declared invalid; in form request inclusion new item in GA agenda]<sup>2</sup> and then move to have our counter proposal voted upon first, followed by motion that no other proposals be voted upon. This has worked reasonably well in past, but leaves initiative to others and, if issue raised before election President, subjects us to vagaries Acting President.

(b) We could take initiative in raising matter by proposing our formula at outset opening plenary. This course seems impracticable in absence certain measure cooperation Acting President and if Menon in chair we would expect him employ every possible procedural device thwart us and general confusion could prevail.

(c) In initial consultations with UK you may wish to explore following alternative. If issue raised by others at outset opening plenary, US or other delegation could immediately move that GA adjourn debate on matter until first plenary meeting following completion organization ninth session. Under rules 76 and 78 such motion has priority and only two speakers may speak in favor and two against, after which must be immediately put to vote. In putting forward this motion we would stress desirability of completing formal organizational steps before substantive questions considered.

At plenary meeting following election officers, by prearrangement with President and Secretariat we would speak early, possibly first, in debate and propose our moratorium motion. Since proposal which initiated debate would normally have priority over our motion in vote, we or some other delegation, just before vote, would move under rule 93 that our proposal be put vote first. Following adoption our proposal, we or some other delegation would then move, also under rule 93, that other proposals not be voted upon (assuming President did not rule that in light adoption moratorium formula it would be inconsistent for GA act on other proposals).

If Chinese representation issue not raised at outset opening plenary, we would take initiative this matter by moving our moratorium proposal immediately following election of officers, basing our action on inevitability this matter arising and desirability settling it promptly. In this case our motion would automatically have priority in vote, but following its adoption we would formally move that other proposals not be voted upon (assuming President does not rule that in light adoption our motion it would be inconsistent for GA act on other proposals).

This course of action probably best ensures our control over procedures to be used for disposal Chinese representation issue. However, it may be difficult obtain broad agreement, which we consider essential, on this course. Proposal to adjourn debate at outset plenary may be regarded as transparent move against Menon, while Dutch and Thais may feel it implies their candidate for presidency is committed to support us on this question. Moreover, UK might contend our taking initiative following election officers and in absence other proposals inconsistent with moratorium arrangement which has been understood provide basis for joint action if issue raised by others. It may also be argued that our majority would be greater if moratorium proposal applied in reaction to Soviet initiative.

In any event, if UK (which is key to cooperation Western European and Commonwealth countries) strongly prefers (a) or (b) above, we should not press this course.

3. It is likely that in course proceedings Menon will reiterate view he put forward last year that Chinese representation issue should be taken up initially in Credentials Committee and might formally propose that all proposals be referred that Committee. We would oppose such course on ground no need refer this matter to Credentials Committee and moreover Chinese representation issue constitutes important political question and not simply credentials question as recognized by GA in resolution 396 (V) in which GA stated inter alia that this type issue "should be considered in light of the Purposes and Principles of the Charter". We would argue that such questions can best be decided by Assembly as whole, preferably in plenary session.

If instead of formal motion and in absence any proposals on Chinese representation question Menon while Acting President announces he does not intend accept any proposals on this question since he believes this matter should be dealt with initially by Credentials Committee, we would attempt get floor to state that while we welcome effort to prevent surprise substantive motions before Assembly even organized, we must reserve our right at later time to state our opposition to consideration this important matter by Credentials Committee.

4. Position paper on appointment Credentials Committee pouched USUN sets forth criteria for balanced slate and proposal that US or some other friendly delegation move substitution of complete alternative slate in event Acting President nominates unbalanced group. Complete substitute slate much preferable to proposing amendments substituting individual countries since tends to avoid direct slap at particular countries. Here too need for advance consultations vital. In particular it will of course be necessary ascertain from each country on our alternative slate that it is willing serve.

Suggest as first step that USUN ascertain from Cordier nature slate Secretariat plans recommended Temporary President. You should take occasion emphasize our view that slate must be constructed on basis criteria used in past, i.e., it must be geographically representative and must include no more than three countries which recognize Chinese Communist regime. (For details see position paper.)<sup>3</sup> Slate suggested by Chinese (urtel 201) satisfactory.

SECRET

NEW YORK, September 9, 1954—1 p. m.

217. For the Secretary. Re: Chinese representation and Cyprus. Pursuant to our conversation before your departure for Manila and your memorandum of August 31<sup>1</sup> I conferred with Dixon.

I said that I understood that Scott of the British Embassy had called at the State Department and in the course of his visit had brought up both the matter of Cyprus and also Chinese representation. Bearing in mind your caution not to do anything which savored of "crudity", I asked him whether he would have any objection to discussing these two subjects concurrently.

He laughed and said that he was glad I had asked that question because it so happened he had instructions from Eden not to "link" the two topics. He said, however, that it was an obvious fact that the two were linked and that that fact could not be gainsaid.

I said that I had hoped that he and I could reach an agreement which could then be referred to Dulles and Eden for final approval but that in view of what he reported from Eden it was hard to see how an agreement between us could be reached.

I said, however, that I did wish in any event to expound to him our position on the Chinese representation question. I said that if the United States delegation were to be totally responsive to United States public opinion we would vote no on the substantive question itself. We realized, of course, that this was not a question which was in accordance with British policy and in the interests of Anglo-American harmony. We hoped that they could at the least agree to a simple declaration that the General Assembly would not consider the question. In our judgment, this was far preferable to use of the word "postpone" which implied that the matter would come up at a future time regardless of any change in the behaviour of the Chinese Communists. Naturally, no one in the United States Government had ever used the word "never" or the word "irrevocable". But by the same token we did not think it was right to give the implication that we favored automatically having the question come up at some future date regardless of any change in the Chinese Communist behavior.

He appeared greatly interested in this idea. He said that there apparently was a disposition on the part of the British to agree to a postponement similar to the arrangement which was reached last year, but the postponement would only carry over through the balance of the calendar year. I pointed out that this would not take care of situations in which the matter might come up in the next calendar year in the Trusteeship Council, the Economic and Social Council or any one of a number of subsidiary bodies and that the proper thing was to have it agreed not to discuss the matter for the period ending when the next General Assembly comes in, in September, 1955.

He said that he would report all this to Mr. Eden. He gave me a long talk about the matter of Cyprus, bringing up arguments with all of which I am sure you are familiar. When he asked me for my view I said that I felt that the Greek claim to Cyprus was not a good one and deplored the matter being brought up at all. I felt that it was a pity to try to divert the United Nations from its principal function of preventing war into a device to effectuate all kinds of internal changes.

When he asked me how we would vote I said that I could not speak officially on the subject, that I knew it had always been our policy to vote in favor of inscribing items on the Agenda in the interests of free speech, but that I believed we were not in favor of voting to inscribe this item on the Agenda. We could thus either abstain or we could vote "no" or we could vote "no" and lobby our friends. Those were three possible alternatives. But whatever position we might take, our information indicated that the item might well get on the Agenda. What our decision would finally be I could not possibly tell.

He said that if we abstained they would surely lose, that if we voted "no" they might win, although it would be close, and that if we voted "no" and lobbied, they would surely win.

He added that it looked to him as though the United States would not define its position on Cyprus until the UK had made itself clear on Chinese representation. I said nothing.

My guess is that this deal will have to be made between you and Eden and that in getting the facts developed on both items I have accomplished all that can be accomplished at this time. Going on to other matters, he said he wished to tell me that he felt that the British policy had been "doctrinaire" on the matter of Guatemala and that he had sent many strong telegrams objecting very much to the Whitehall attitude on this question. Selwyn Lloyd had been particularly obdurate.<sup>2</sup> geographic distribution of countries accords with the pattern followed at previous sessions.

Unless such a slate is proposed, the United States should initiate or support appropriate action to ensure the appointment of an acceptable slate which conforms to the above criteria.

COMMENT

The slate nominated by the Temporary President at each of the ten previous Assembly sessions (including the two special sessions) has been accepted by the Assembly without discussion and without objection. These slates were geographically representative. An examination of the previous slates shows that the normal geographic pattern was as follows: Latin America—2; Commonwealth—1; Soviet bloc—1; Western Europe—1 or 2; Middle East—Asia—Africa—2 or 3. Included in the group was at least one of the Great Powers. On five occasions the United States was included, with a consequent decrease of 1 in the representation of Western Europe or the Middle East-African-Asian area. Since 1950, when the Chinese representation issue was formally raised in the United Nations for the first time, an additional criterion applied in the formulation of the Credentials Committee slate—only 3 states which recognize the Chinese Communist regime were included on the ground that the Committee should reflect Assembly sentiment as a whole on the Chinese recognition question and only 17 countries (including Byelorussia and the Ukraine) or less than  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd of the 60 United Nations Members recognize the Chinese Communist regime.

Even if the plenary Assembly acts on the Chinese representation issue prior to the convening of the Credentials Committee, the matter will undoubtedly nevertheless be raised again in the Credentials Committee. It is therefore essential that the Delegation make every effort to ensure that the Committee is composed of a majority of states which are certain to support our view on the Chinese representation issue.

It is difficult to see how the Temporary President (Chairman of Indian delegation) this year could advance any plausible justification for nominating a slate which departs from the two criteria noted above. If the criteria are applied it seems unlikely that the slate could fail to include a majority favorable to our position on the Chinese representation issue, assuming that (1) this issue is disposed of on the basis of procedural action and a substantive vote is avoided; and (2) there is no unexpected change in the attitude of a significant number of countries. If the criteria are not applied and an unacceptable slate is proposed, the United States should initiate or support appropriate action to ensure the appointment of an acceptable slate. Since the President's action will have been clearly partisan, we should be able to obtain adequate support in the Assembly for our position.

A possible procedure would be to propose amendments providing for the substitution of a state or states in place of states nominated in the President's slate. Such a procedure seems undesirable. The process of openly substituting one state for another would undoubtedly stir up resentment and might alienate the votes of countries which would otherwise support us on our general objective. The best procedure would be to propose a substitute slate which conforms to the two criteria noted above, i.e., includes no more than 3 countries which recognize the Chinese Communist regime and is geographically representative. Such a slate might include, for example, the following countries: Brazil, Honduras, UK, USSR, Denmark, Philippines, Iraq, Australia and the United States. Under this procedure, it would be necessary to move under rule 93 that the alternative slate be put to the vote first since the President's slate would otherwise automatically have priority—under the rules proposals are put to the vote in the order in which they are submitted unless the Assembly decides otherwise. It should be noted that it will, of course, be necessary to ascertain in advance that the countries included in the alternative slate are willing to serve. Consideration should also be given to the desirability of having another delegation take the initiative in proposing the substitute slate.

Subject: Chinese Representation

Attached are two telegrams<sup>1</sup> reporting on developments on the Chinese representation situation. From these telegrams it appears that we have the choice of (a) accepting last year's moratorium formula which involves "postponing" consideration of the question "for the current year", or (b) recommending that the Secretary send a personal message to Eden asking the United Kingdom to accept a formula under which the General Assembly decides not to consider the Chinese representation question.

Background:

Following a suggestion by the Chinese Delegation in New York, the US proposed to the United Kingdom on August 17 agreement upon a moratorium formula under which the GA would decide not to consider any proposals on Chinese representation. The UK Embassy replied in effect that this formula presented difficulties but that the UK would probably be prepared to accept last year's formula under which the GA would decide to postpone for the duration of the session in the current year consideration of all proposals on Chinese representation. Ambassador Lodge then asked for time to negotiate with the UK using our position on the Cyprus item as a bargaining point. New York's 217 indicates that Lodge now feels that he has gone as far as he can and that "my guess is that this deal will have to be made between you and Eden." London's 1238, September 9,<sup>2</sup> does not mention Chinese representation but reports that the UK now estimates that it will lose the fight to keep Cyprus off the agenda. Accordingly, our London Embassy comments that while the UK hopes that the US will vote against the inscription of the Cyprus item an abstention will not have serious unfavorable impact with the UK.

Comment:

From the above it appears that the UK does not intend to bargain on the basis of Cyprus and that if we are to try for a better formula on Chinese representation than last year, the Secretary personally will have to be involved. The question remains: Is there enough prospect of success to justify involving the Secretary and causing further delay in reaching agreement with delegations in New York on procedural tactics? Use of phrases such as "postpone" and "current year" are psychologically objectionable both in the US and in China. In the past, however, these phrases have not caused us trouble as they have been offset by a strong speech by the Secretary giving our position. If the GA terminates, instead of adjourning, in December, omission of reference to the "current year" will not in fact prolong the duration of the arrangement. My own feeling is that the UK will probably insist on last year's formula and that valuable time would be lost without practical result by carrying the issue further.

On the other hand in view of the importance of this issue, particularly this year, it may be that we should be able to show that we have left no stone unturned in our effort to get a formula which does not contain the word "postpone" and does not limit our action to "the current year". In such case we should recommend to the Secretary that he send a personal message to Eden asking the UK to go along with the formula which we suggested in August. I understand that IO (UNA) has not yet determined its position.

Texts of the two formulas follow:

Formula adopted by the GA at its last session:

Subject: Chinese Representation Issue

IO (UNA) informs me that at the meeting in the Secretary’s office this noon, the latest formula suggested by the UK for handling Chinese representation at the 9th GA will be discussed.

This formula reads as follows :

“The GA decides not to discuss at its 9th session during 1954 any proposals to exclude representatives of the Government of the Republic of China and to seat representatives of the Central People’s Government of the People’s Republic of China.”

Comment :

This formula involves the acceptance by the UK of one of the two points we had sought. It deletes the word “postpones”. The formula, however, retains the time limit of this calendar year which we had sought to avoid.

It marks a distinct improvement over last year’s formula. Efforts to obtain the full measure of our request might be fruitless and in any case would involve time which will be needed in lining up support for this formula in New York .

Recommendation :

It is recommended that we go along with this proposal.

I showed the Secretary the action copy of USUN telegram No. 229 of September 13, in which it was reported that the United Kingdom was not prepared to enter into a moratorium on Chinese representation extending beyond December 31, 1954, but that it was prepared to change the word “postponement” in the proposed resolution to more affirmative language such as “decides not to discuss at its Ninth Session during the current year any proposals, etc.”

After briefly reviewing the negotiations which had preceded receipt of the message above-mentioned, I inquired whether we should accept the British proposal. The Secretary replied in the affirmative.

I advised Messrs. Robertson and Barbour of the Secretary’s decision, both of whom expressed satisfaction.

Ambassador Van Roijen called today to introduce the newly-arrived Minister-Counselor of his Embassy, and to discuss certain questions regarding the forthcoming General Assembly.

With regard to the question of Chinese Representation, Ambassador Van Roijen said that the Embassy had received no reply to DeBeus' telegram on that subject and that, in the absence of any indication to the contrary, he felt he could assure the Department that his Government would agree to "postponing" consideration of the question of seating the Chinese Communists during the forthcoming session for the remainder of the calendar year. Mr. Key then said that USUN had had further conversations with Sir Pierson Dixon in New York on this subject and that the British were now prepared to agree to a formula similar to that used last year, but substituting for the phrase "Decides to postpone consideration of" the phrase "Decides not to discuss". He then asked whether the Netherlands Government would support a moratorium formula in those terms. Ambassador Van Roijen said that he would have to consult his Government on the suggested change of wording, which he seemed to feel might represent a slight departure from the position agreed upon at the recent conference of the Brussels Pact Powers. It was pointed out to Ambassador Van Roijen that this was not a substantive change and was not, therefore, one which should create any difficulties for the Netherlands Government. Ambassador Van Roijen said that we were obviously in substantial agreement on this question and that he would inform the Department of any further views which his Government might have on the suggested formula.

Position Paper Prepared in the Department of State for the United States Delegation to the Ninth Regular Session of the General Assembly

QUESTION OF CHINESE REPRESENTATION

THE PROBLEM

The Soviet Union has sought unsuccessfully since the Fifth Session of the General Assembly in 1950 to have the Chinese Communist regime seated in place of the Government of the Republic of China.

In order to maintain the largest possible majority in opposition to these proposals, the United States has taken the initiative in formulating procedural motions under which the substance of the question was not put to the vote and the Assembly decided instead not to take any action on the matter. These procedural tactics made it possible for a large majority of the member states, including several of the free world members which have recognized the Communist regime, to vote with the United States on this issue.

It is anticipated that the issue will be raised again at the Ninth Session, probably on the initiative of the USSR and possibly also by India. In order to achieve its dual objective of preventing any change in the representation of China and at the same time maintaining the greatest possible degree of free world unity on this issue, the United States Delegation will have to exercise strong leadership, working in close cooperation with friendly delegations.

UNITED STATES POSITION

1. If the issue of Chinese representation is raised, the United States Delegation, working in concert with the United Kingdom and other friendly delegations, should propose a motion under which the General Assembly would decide not to consider, at its Ninth Session during the current year, any proposals to exclude the representatives of the Government of the Republic of China or to seat representatives of the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China. The United States should take the necessary steps to ensure that this procedural motion is put to the vote before the substantive proposal and, upon its adoption, that the substantive proposal is not put to the vote.

2. In the unlikely event that the procedural action suggested above is not successful and the substance of the Chinese representation question is put to the vote, the United States Delegation should actively oppose and vote against any proposal to exclude the representatives of the Government of the Republic of China and/or to seat representatives of the Communist regime, and should make every effort to persuade the largest possible majority of other delegations to vote with us on this issue.

COMMENT

The primary objective of the United States with regard to the question of Chinese representation is to prevent the seating of the representatives of the Communist regime or any other action which would in any way impair the right of representatives of the Government of the Republic of China to represent that country in the United Nations and in the Specialized Agencies. It is important to the attainment of this objective that the tactics we employ should command the support of the largest possible majority, and in particular of the United Kingdom, whose lead on this issue is followed by a number of states. The support of the largest possible majority is important as a demonstration of continued free world solidarity on this issue, which might otherwise take on the appearance of a contest primarily between the United States and the Communist governments. It also tends to restrain a number of governments from recognizing the Communist regime.

While, for the present, we could continue to count on the the necessary majority to achieve our objective in the General Assembly and in the plenipotentiary bodies of the Specialized Agencies even without the support of the United Kingdom and of the governments which follow its lead, it is essential that we retain their support if we are to continue to achieve this objective in certain smaller organs of the United Nations and in Specialized Agency bodies, some of which include a majority or a near majority of states which have recognized the Communist regime.

To achieve our objective with maximum free world support it is necessary to utilize the Assembly's Rules of Procedure to avoid a vote on the substance of the representation question. This makes it possible for the United Kingdom and most of the governments which have recognized the Communist regime to vote with us on this issue. The United Kingdom has agreed since June 1951 to a "moratorium arrangement" under which United Kingdom and United States representatives have jointly supported in all United Nations and Specialized Agency bodies procedural action which has avoided a vote on substance and resulted in the continued seating of representatives of the Government of the Republic of China and the exclusion of the Chinese Communists. This arrangement has been supported by a large majority of states.

In the course of recent consultations, the United Kingdom has again emphasized the need to handle the representation issue by an extension of this "moratorium arrangement" and has agreed to support the procedural motion which is set forth below. In consultations with most free world members of the United Nations we have also sought assurance of their support on the understanding that we would again employ the procedural action which has been successful in past sessions.

In the past, the Chinese representation issue has been raised by the Soviet Union and India in various ways: (a) At the Fifth Session by a motion at the outset of the opening plenary meeting to exclude the representatives of the Government of the Republic of China and to invite representatives of the Communist regime; (b) At the Sixth session by a request for the inclusion of the question of the representation of China on the Assembly's agenda; (c) At the Seventh Session by a proposal in the Credentials Committee calling upon the General Assembly to declare invalid the credentials of the representatives of the Government of the Republic of China; and (d) At the Eighth Session by a proposal at the outset of the opening plenary declaring that the Assembly considers it necessary that China be represented in the United Nations by the Communist regime, followed by a motion in the Credentials Committee to declare invalid the credentials of the Representatives of the Government of the Republic of China.

It is necessary, therefore, to devise procedural actions for various contingencies:

1. If the question is raised during the plenary meetings at the opening of the session, the United States representative should move as follows:

“The General Assembly,

“Decides not to consider, at its Ninth Session during the current year, any proposals to exclude the representatives of the Government of the Republic of China or to seat representatives of the Central People’s Government of the People’s Republic of China.”

The United States should ensure that this motion is put to the vote before the substantive proposal and, upon its adoption, that the substantive proposal is not put to the vote. The latter could be done by a ruling of the Chair. Alternatively, the United States or another delegation would formally so move under Rule 93.*

2. If the question is raised in the form of a request that a new item on the question of the representation of China be included in the Assembly’s agenda, the United States would move in the General Committee as follows:

“The General Assembly,

“1. Recommends that the General Assembly decide to reject the request of the [Soviet Union]<sup>1</sup> for the inclusion in the agenda of its Ninth regular session of the additional item entitled _____; and

3. If the question is raised initially in the Credentials Committee in the form of a proposal that the Chinese credentials be declared invalid, the United States should move as follows:

“The Credentials Committee.

“1. Recommends that the General Assembly decide not to consider, at its Ninth Session during the current year, any proposals to exclude the representatives of the Government of the Republic of China and to seat representatives of the Central People’s Government of the People’s Republic of China; and

---

**Rule 93* reads as follows: “If two or more proposals relate to the same question, the General Assembly shall, unless it decides otherwise, vote on the proposals in the order in which they have been submitted. The GA may, after each vote on a proposal, decide whether to vote on the next proposal”. [Footnote in the source text.]

"2. Finds that the credentials of the representatives of the Government of the Republic of China conform with the provisions of Rule 27 of the General Assembly Rules of Procedure."

Note: For technical legal reasons the United Kingdom would insist that the above clauses be numbered in the order indicated.

It is possible that a proposal may be made to refer the Chinese representation question to the Credentials Committee (see also separate position paper entitled "Appointment of the Credentials Committee"). The United States Delegation should oppose such a suggestion on the ground that there is no need to refer to that Committee a question which can more easily and quickly be settled in plenary session. The United States Delegation should also point out that the Chinese representation issue constitutes an important political question and not simply a question of proper credentials. This was recognized in Resolution 396 (V) in which the General Assembly declared inter alia that this type of issue "should be considered in the light of the Purposes and Principles of the Charter".

The procedures set forth above assume that we would not ourselves take the initiative in moving any of the suggested motions in the absence of proposals to the contrary, but would move the "moratorium formula" immediately after the China issue is raised by others. Consultations with other friendly delegations may indicate the possibility of the United States taking the initiative on this matter in an early plenary meeting even if the issue is not raised by others. Since this would constitute a departure from the moratorium understanding and might, therefore, reduce the size of the majority in favor of our motion, the United States should not take this course of action unless it has the support of a large number of delegations and, in particular, of the United Kingdom.

The United States position on the Chinese representation question is based on a number of important considerations, which may be summarized as follows:

(1) Communist China is an aggressor against the United Nations in Korea. The General Assembly resolution which found Communist China guilty of aggression still stands. (Resolution 498 (V)).

(2) Through its military dominance of North Korea, Communist China has continued to defy the General Assembly's resolution 376 (V) which established the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea (UNCURK).

(3) At the Geneva Conference the representatives of the Chinese Communist regime treated the United Nations with utmost contempt, repudiating its past actions with respect to Korea and denying its competence to seek the unification of Korea.

(4) Communist China actively supported the Viet Minh aggression of the Ho-Chi-Minh regime in Indochina.

(5) The conduct of the Chinese Communist regime, far from justifying its seating in the United Nations, is of a nature which, under Articles 5 and 6 of the Charter, would subject a Member State to suspension of membership rights or even expulsion from the Organization.

(6) The Chinese Communist regime has not conformed to accepted standards of international law and practice, but has demonstrated a callous disregard of legal and moral standards.

(7) This question constitutes a precedent of utmost importance since it is the first time that conflicting claims have been made for the seat of a country. The way this issue is handled can have important future consequences in other cases.

(8) The Charter does not provide for "universality", however desirable this principle may be, but specifies that membership is open to peace-loving states which both accept its obligations and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.

In further reference to the attitude of the Netherlands Government regarding the question of Chinese representation, Ambassador van Roijen telephoned me this morning and informed me that his government was agreeable to the modification which I had submitted to him when he last called, namely that there be substituted the words "decides not to consider, etc." instead of "postpones consideration, etc." The Ambassador added that while his government was still not prepared to enter into a moratorium agreement extending beyond the end of the current year, he thought it likely that during any discussion of this subject an opportunity would be taken by the Netherlands Delegation orally to state that it did not favor excluding the representatives of the government of the Republic of China or of seating the representatives of the Central Peoples Government of the Peoples' Republic of China during the entire session (even if the session should extend into 1955).

The Ambassador stated that the Netherlands Foreign Minister, Mr. Luns, wished to call on me during his stay in Washington and it was arranged that he and the Ambassador should call on me tomorrow at 4 p. m.

Subject: Chinese Representation in the UN; Other UN Matters.

Minister Thors called this noon at my request.

Chinese Representation. I said that there was a UN matter of the greatest importance to the US which I wanted to take up with him; namely, the question of Chinese representation in the UN. I said we had been somewhat disturbed when we had read the communiqué emanating from the Foreign Ministers Conference at Reykjavik but that we gathered that the terms of the communiqué did not necessarily bind the conferees to support the seating of the Chinese Communists at the Ninth Session. I said in this connection that I had been most gratified to receive a report over night from our Chargé, Thomas Dillon, in Reykjavik to the effect that the Foreign Minister had told him yesterday that Iceland would not vote for the admission of Peiping but hoped that the question would not come to a vote. (The Minister obviously had not had a report of this conversation.)

I then said that it was planned that a resolution almost identical to the one passed at the Assembly last year would be introduced which would call for not acting on this matter in the Ninth Session during the current year. I gave the Minister a copy of the text. He inquired as to other countries which in our view would support this resolution. I told him that we had reached agreement on the resolution with the British and that I thought we would obtain approximately the same favorable vote on it this year as we had last.

He then reviewed briefly the discussion of this matter at Reykjavik saying that the Swedes had pressed the matter strongly; the Norwegians somewhat less so and the Danes still less. He said on his advice that his Foreign Minister had explained that Iceland was in a different position from the other three in that Iceland had not recognized Communist China and did not have a mission in Peiping. He said as a result of this Iceland had reserved its position on the matter and minutes of the Reykjavik meeting so stated. He said when it came to writing the communiqué the Swedes had pressed for using the expression "soonest possible" and Iceland had succeeded in watering this down to "as soon as possible". He said the latter expression was the same as had been used in the communiqué in 1953 and in his opinion did not bind any of the parties to voting for Chinese admission at this Session. He said that he had been talking to the Norwegians and Danes attempting to get them to see the matter in his light. I gathered he plans to continue these discussions. He said the Danish Permanent Representative, Borberg, has requested instructions from his government. I gather he has not had much luck in his talks with the Norwegians. He asked if we would be talking to the Norwegians and Danes and I told him I was quite certain we would.

I pressed him several times during the conversation to say that Iceland would support the resolution no matter what position the Norwegians and Danes might take. On the first two attempts the Minister did not respond directly. At one point he said that there would be criticisms in Iceland and possibly domestic political trouble if they voted different from the Scandinavians. I said I thought they should take into account how the NATO countries in general voted and I said I felt confident almost all of the NATO countries would vote for this resolution with the possible exception of Norway and Denmark. I added that he, Minister Thors, must know how strong the feeling here in this country is on the question. I said should Iceland vote against us on the matter it would certainly not be in the interest of furthering US-Icelandic relations. Finally the Minister said "my Foreign Minister will do what I advise him to do on this matter. I will, of course, have to talk with him when he arrives in New York but I believe we will support the resolution".

Subject: Chinese representation at the opening of the 9th GA

The USSR raised the Chinese representation question at the outset of the General Assembly with a resolution proposing the seating of the Chinese Communists in the General Assembly and other UN organs and bodies. Ambassador Lodge, in a brief speech devoid of any arguments whatever, proposed the U.S. resolution on Chinese representation and proposed also that the U.S. resolution be given priority in the vote. There followed a more extensive debate than has been customary in recent years. Speakers included China, Poland, UK, Australia, Burma, Yugoslavia, and Czechoslovakia. The Indian representative (Menon) reserved his comments for two interventions after the voting had actually started. The vote on giving the U.S. resolution priority over the Soviet resolution was 45-7 (Soviet Block, Sweden and Burma)-5. The vote on the U.S. resolution on Chinese representation was 43-11 (Soviet Block, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Yugoslavia, Burma and India)-6 (Saudi Arabia, Yemen, Syria, Afghanistan, Egypt and Indonesia).

Comment. During the debate the UK made a relatively weak speech arguing chiefly that as Chinese representation was a "violently controversial issue" the UK believed it unwise to consider the issue at present. By contrast, Australia made a strong speech noting that there was a code of conduct in the UN which the Chinese Communists had violated. The Communist speeches were of the usual character except that reference was made to "peaceful China" frequently and especially to "peaceful Chinese" contributions to the Indochina armistice and the Geneva Conference and its cooperative relations with its neighbors, especially India and Burma. Burma as usual spoke briefly but strongly in favor of seating the Chinese Communists while China made an effective statement of its claims to speak for China. In the course of his speech the Chinese representative said that Communist China had been repudiated by most of the thirteen million overseas Chinese despite the fact that most of them resided in territories under governments which "for reasons of expediency" had recognized the Chinese Communists.

Vishinsky sought to bait Lodge by referring to the U.S. resolution as "wishy-washy", taunting that the U.S. was afraid to vote on the straight-forward Soviet resolution, pointing out that even the U.S. press agreed that the U.S. position on Chinese representation was weaker than last year. (With reference to Hamilton in the New York Times.) Lodge did not reply.

The Indian representative, on a point of order after the voting had already started, charged that the whole proceedings were illegal because there was no Chinese representation item on the Agenda. When Madam Pandit asked if the Indian intervention constituted a challenge to her ruling that the voting might proceed, Menon retreated, and Madam Pandit proceeded with the voting.

In the voting Indonesia's abstention is notable inasmuch as last year it voted against the U.S. resolution. Denmark this year joined Sweden and Norway in opposition to the U.S. resolution, but Iceland, alone of the Scandinavian states, voted with us.

The Credentials Committee nominated by Madam Pandit was approved without opposition. The Committee is favorably constituted from the Chinese representation point of view. Subject: Status of Chinese representative in Committee 3 of the GA

A problem has arisen in Committee 3 (Social and Humanitarian) of the General Assembly which is under the chairmanship of a satellite representative, Nosek of Czechoslovakia. Following the precedent set last year by the Polish chairman of another committee, Nosek addresses the Chinese representative not as the "Delegate of China" but merely by name. The Chinese representative yesterday protested.

Anticipating trouble, USUN had already approached the Secretariat, and Hammarskjold had tried prior to the meeting to induce Nosek to follow usual UN procedures. Nosek, however, said that his instructions on the point were very strict. The Secretary General is to make another attempt to work out a solution with Nosek. USUN has asked the Department to consider what course we should follow in the event Nosek persists in his present policy.

Comment: Last year a similar problem arose in Committee 6 under Polish chairmanship. The U.S. representative challenged the chairman's action and a heated and unpleasant exchange followed. Eventually the U.S. succeeded in getting a resolution through the committee calling on the chairman to follow the usual proprieties in addressing all committee members. The resolution was approved toward the very end of the committee sessions, and the Chinese representative avoided asking for recognition subsequent to the resolution.

The present situation is complicated by the possibility that, if we were again able to obtain passage of a resolution along the lines of last year's, Nosek might, under his instructions, disregard the resolution. We would then be faced with the alternatives of acquiescing in a slight to the Chinese Government or seeking to obtain Nosek's ouster as chairman. The latter step is unprecedented and would be difficult to achieve.

Some hope exists that some solution may yet be worked out, such as referring to "the Chinese Representative". Nosek is personally not an obnoxious type such as the Polish chairman last year, and the Chinese delegation last year showed a willingness to look for reasonable ways out of the difficulty. If, however, Nosek is strictly bound by instructions, the problem may become troublesome.

[NEW YORK,] October 18, 1954.

I called on Hammarskjold Saturday p. m. (October 16) and told him that the United States did not want to promote a showdown on the question of his circulating documents coming from the Chinese communists. I said that it was clear to us that his office must have leaked to the papers the story which was printed in yesterday's New York Times about our not being willing to receive the Chinese communist document and that we had noted that he, himself, had given out a formal interview Friday which had been printed in the press Saturday morning. Under these circumstances we were considering the issuance of a Press Release, the text of which I handed to him as follows:

“Secretary General Hammarskjold saw fit to issue a press release on October 15 concerning past procedure in circulation of communications from Communist China by the United Nations secretariat.

“The United States has no desire to prolong this issue which, of course, the United States did not raise in the first place. But in all fairness it should be made clear that the procedures referred to are neither “firm” nor “well established”. The United States has protested similar occurrences in the past. In fact, this procedure would appear to place the Secretary General in conflict with the General Assembly, which has convicted Communist China as an aggressor. It has the effect of providing a gratuitous service to a regime which has shown only contempt for the United Nations and for its proceedings. It is also questionable whether the Secretary General should circulate any documents at the request of non-members.

“The Secretary General also saw fit to characterize the attitude of the United States toward the delivery of this communication. When he said that the United States returned it without comment he failed to set forth our position in its true light. This position, however, was revealed to him in a letter dated October 12, the text of which is as follows:

“Dear Mr. Secretary General:

“It is my understanding that you are in receipt of a communication from the Chinese communist regime making serious charges against the United States, and that you have been requested to circulate the text of this communication to the Delegations of the United Nations General Assembly with the exception of the Delegation of the Republic of China.

“The communication to which I refer is another in a series of false and malicious charges against a Member of the United Nations by an aggressor regime which is a non-Member of the United Nations and which has been branded an aggressor by the United Nations.

“The fact that this regime is a convicted aggressor is, in our opinion, enough justification for you to disregard all their communications.

“In the opinion of the United States Delegation the Secretary General is under no obligation either to release or to circulate such a communication. It is, in fact, not conducive to the cooperation which is so necessary between the Secretary General and the Members of the Organization for the Secretary-General's office to be the instrument through which false charges can be made and published.

“I am confident that you will share this opinion and will not permit the abuse of your high office intended by the Chinese communist regime.

Sincerely,

HENRY CABOT LODGE, JR.’”

He said that that would be very bad and would help nobody and would raise issues which we all should want to avoid having raised.

I said that we did not want to promote a showdown but that when he or his office continually put these matters into the press, we had to think of our own record and our own position and that I would try to persuade my associates not to insist on the publication of this release.

He then said that he was in a dilemma because this policy of distributing Chinese communist documents had been followed for so long that he didn't see how he could change it. I said that when one has done a wrong thing for thirty times then the time has come to stop doing it. He said that he thought study ought to be given to his devising a formulary or rationale for handling the distribution of these communications. He said that he had complaints from the British because he had circulated a Greek statement containing the views of the Archbishop of Cyprus who is a British subject and the thing was in a terrible mess and that his idea was to develop a set of rules which he would then publish and then let anyone object who wanted to.

I said that this looked to me like a very promising procedure and I hoped he would go ahead with it.

As I told you, I have no intention whatever of publishing the release but I did hope to achieve precisely the result which was obtained.<sup>1</sup>

Subject: Proposed Approach to UK Ambassador on Chinese Representation

The attached draft memorandum from Mr. Key to the Secretary <sup>1</sup> recommends that the Secretary reiterate to the British Ambassador the importance we attach to the continuation of the "moratorium arrangement" for handling the Chinese representation question in UN bodies. The approach is suggested because the resolution adopted last September for handling the Chinese representation question during the 9th General Assembly was expressly made applicable only "during the current year".

While it is believed that an approach at this time is probably not necessary, it will do no harm and our failing to do so in view of our approach last year to the British under similar circumstances might be interpreted by the UK as indicating a lessening of our interest.

It is accordingly recommended that you concur in the draft memorandum.

In view of the Secretary's extensive acquaintanceship with the question of Chinese representation, it is believed that no suggestions need be made concerning the precise content of the approach.

I told Sir Robert that the Secretary had asked me to talk to him about the continuation of the working arrangement between our Governments under which we had disposed of the Chinese representation issue in all UN and Specialized Agencies bodies through procedural devices which excluded the Chinese Communists without a vote on the substance of the question. I pointed out that, so far as the General Assembly itself was concerned, the decision last September had been not to consider the subject during the current year—i.e. 1954. I said we assumed that the current arrangement would continue to be applied in UN bodies meeting after January 1 such as the series of ECAFE meetings convening in January. I said we would like to have his Government's confirmation that our understanding was correct.

Sir Robert agreed to consult the Foreign Office. He was especially interested in the question whether we are planning for a resumption of the General Assembly. I told him the Assembly had adjourned; that if there were to be any further meetings before next fall they would take the form of a special session; and that we had no present plans for calling such a session.

ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS

The question of the admission of new members has been and continues to be one of the most pressing problems confronting the United Nations. The applications of a number of qualified candidates, whose admission the United States and the large majority of other United Nations Members strongly support, have long been pending before the Security Council, some since 1946. The Soviet Union has demanded as the price for its agreement to admit these applicants a "package deal" involving the simultaneous admission of the five Soviet candidates. Thus far, the majority of the members of the Security Council have not been willing to pay this price. The problem has therefore remained deadlocked, the Soviet Union vetoing the non-Soviet applicants and the majority rejecting the Soviet candidates or a "package deal".

At the last session of the General Assembly, the Soviet Union submitted a proposal which in effect recommended that the Security Council act favorably on fourteen applications simultaneously. These fourteen included nine non-Soviet applicants (Austria, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Libya, Jordan, Nepal and Portugal) and five Soviet candidates (Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Outer Mongolia, and Rumania). The United States strongly opposed this proposal on the grounds that under the membership provisions of the Charter, each applicant is entitled to separate consideration on its own merits and that the Soviet applicants are not qualified for membership. Further, the list excluded the Republic of Korea and also Vietnam. Moreover, if all Soviet applicants were now admitted, the Soviet Union would probably veto non-Communist states which have not yet applied. Included in this latter category are Japan, the Republic of Germany, Spain, Laos and Cambodia.

However, the Soviet proposal received a majority vote and was defeated only because it failed to receive a two-thirds majority. While a similar Soviet proposal was easily defeated in the Security Council, the vote on the Soviet resolution in the General Assembly shows that a large number of members are probably willing to compromise principle to achieve the admission of qualified applicants. The United Kingdom and France seemed to be preparing for acceptance of such a compromise. They abstained in both the Assembly and the Security Council. Their action was undoubtedly influenced by a strong desire not to offend Italy, which is exerting pressure for a settlement of the membership problem and favors the Soviet proposal as a solution which would achieve Italy's admission.

The Security Council may consider the membership question this year and the General Assembly will do so in the fall. There will probably be increasing pressure for a solution to the membership problem. For this reason, and because of our own concern over the continued impasse, the Department is now reexamining its position.

Subject: Membership.

As you will note from a memorandum of conversation between Mr. Hickerson and Ambassador Tarchiani today<sup>1</sup> we are committed to further discussions with the Italians on the membership problem. Mr. Hickerson wishes that we stimulate activity on this in the Membership Team. His current thinking is to work out a proposal under which we would announce our willingness to amend Article 4 of the Charter by striking out the reference to qualifications, and pending the approval of such an amendment we would put up to the Soviets a deal involving all present and possible future applicants (i.e. Spain, Japan, Switzerland, etc.) but omitting areas in which there are rival claimants (Korea, Vietnam, Germany).

Subject: Admission of New Members to the United Nations

Attached is a summary of a Membership Team discussion of your suggestions concerning a possible package deal. While only preliminary views were expressed and although FE and GER in particular had reservations, there was a general disposition to proceed with exploring such an arrangement. However, there was little support for a Charter amendment.<sup>1</sup>

At this stage, the following points arise for decision:

1. Package Proposal

a) States to be Included. There are now eleven non-Soviet applicants. Japan will probably apply soon and Germany, Spain, Laos and Cambodia are possible future applicants. Of all these, Korea, Germany and Vietnam would probably have to be excluded to prevent a Soviet veto. If Vietnam is excluded, Laos and Cambodia would also have to be omitted. FE appears willing to consider this, but believes that we would have to justify the exclusion of Korea and Vietnam on other grounds than the fact of rival claimants. Spain presents another problem. We believe it should be included, but this could mean a Soviet veto.

The Soviet Union would in all likelihood insist on the inclusion of all five of its candidates. Of these, Outer Mongolia is especially difficult, particularly if Korea is excluded. However, FE is willing to consider this.

b) Timing. If the Department should decide to accept a package proposal, should we wait until the Seventh Session of the Assembly or should action be taken earlier in the Security Council? Should we suggest that Japan apply in the near future? Should we approach Spain to apply for membership if it is decided that it should be included?

2. Amendment to Article 4

We are not sure what your present thought is concerning the nature of the amendment. The following alternatives suggest themselves:

(a) removal of the qualifications for membership; (b) removal of the veto from votes on membership; (c) elimination of the role of the Security Council admission procedures; and (d) a combination of (a) and either (b) or (c).

SUMMARY OF MINUTES OF MEMBERSHIP TEAM ON QUESTION OF
ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS

A meeting of the Membership Team was held on March 25, 1952 to consider our position on the membership question. Particular attention was given to the suggestion that we might propose the admission of all present and future applicants except for areas over which there are rival claimants and at the same time propose an amendment to article 4 to remove the membership qualifications. The opinions expressed at the meeting were only preliminary views.

Mr. Sale said that EUR believed the suggestion should be seriously considered. Mr. Howard (NEA) and Mr. Fensterwald (I/UNA) thought that their offices could support a package arrangement, although they believed it would be unwise and unnecessary to propose an amendment to article 4. Mr. Monsma (ARA) expressed the opinion that ARA would probably be willing to go along with a package proposal if the parts of the Department most closely involved believed this to be the best solution, although he thought that we should continue to consider ways to achieve the admission of only the qualified through circumvention or overriding of the Soviet veto.

Miss Bacon (FE) pointed out the various problems for FE of a package proposal which omitted Korea and the three states of Indo-China and which included Outer Mongolia. She stated that FE would like to reserve its position pending further developments. However, she believed FE might be willing to accept a package arrangement as the only way to achieve the admission of Japan and others we favor. If Korea and Vietnam were excluded, she thought that we would have to justify their omission on other grounds than that they are areas over which there are rival claimants. While Mr. Sale thought Spain should be included, Miss Bacon expressed the opinion that this would mean a Soviet veto. Miss Bacon did not believe that we should try to amend article 4. Mr. Williams (GPA) mentioned the difficulties involved if Germany was excluded. Nevertheless, he did not wish to say that GER would stand in the way but thought that we should await further developments.

It was generally agreed that the Department would have to weigh very carefully public reaction to a package proposal and that a final decision to modify our position could only be made at the highest level.

There was also general agreement that in view of our past position on the membership question, it would probably be easier for the United States to accept a satisfactory package arrangement proposed by another member than to propose an arrangement itself.

Messrs. Sale, Howard and Fensterwald hoped that in the near future we could sufficiently crystalize our position so as to begin consultations with the United Kingdom, France, Italy and others. Miss Bacon, however, believed that it was too early to carry on consultations with other governments and that we should wait until later in the year to finalize our views.

Subject: Japanese Membership in the United Nations.

With the near approach of the entrance into force of the Japanese Peace Treaty,<sup>1</sup> the question of Japan's desire to become a member of the UN enters the stage of a practical problem. It is to be expected that Japan may approach us in the near future for advice on the best tactics to be followed. In any case, Japan's probable candidacy will become a factor in our general planning on the membership question.

The Department is now restudying its membership position. There is a general feeling that a change is necessary and that the only apparent avenue for progress is in the direction of a package deal. The question remains: What states should be in the package?

II. Situation With Respect To Japan.

Japan's candidacy will raise to 17 the number of states awaiting admission and will further increase the disbalance in our favor between Soviet and non-Soviet candidates.

Our main interest in connection with Japan should be to secure its admission at the earliest possible date. Will Japan be likely to fare better as part of a package or on an individual basis?

On an individual basis there is the matter of the Soviet veto. It might be argued that as the USSR is intent on cultivating Japan it would not risk alienating Japanese opinion by a veto of Japan's application. Similar considerations, however, existed in connection with

Italy and the Soviet Union vetoed the application. In the case of Japan, the Soviet Union might seek to justify its veto on the technical basis that a state of war still legally exists between the USSR and Japan or on the propaganda basis that Japan under the peace treaty is not in fact an independent state.

There would, of course, be no obstacle to Japan's attempting a separate candidacy and, if that were vetoed, trying again as part of a package deal. So far as the US is concerned there might be some political gain from the USSR's being forced to veto a Japanese application. There might at the same time be a slight disadvantage in that Japan would thereupon be publicly labelled as a non-Soviet candidate and hence the construction of the package deal might become more expensive.

Japan, of course, must be included in any package deal that we might favor. Its inclusion will, however, present problems. Barring a political settlement for Korea or Indochina, between now and the next GA, there is no possibility that the USSR would be prepared to accept any package deal whatever that included either candidate. Inclusion of Japan and the omission of Korea would add to our already existing difficulties with respect to public opinion in Korea; while omission of the two countries would also make their eventual admission problematical at best. It is certain that the USSR will wish to include Outer Mongolia.

III. Conclusions.

1. If the Japanese approach us for advice we should explain fully the procedural problems involved in Japanese membership. We should inform them that we would not be prepared to consent to any over-all membership arrangement that did not include Japan. We should also state that if Japan wishes to try a separate candidacy we would, of course, support Japan's admission.

2. Comments on the situation of other Far Eastern candidates will be reserved until a specific proposal for a package deal, now in preparation in UNA as a basis for discussion, is received.

If FonOff requests our views re timing its application Dept suggests you state that is question Japan itself shld decide, although you might also inform FonOff SC is expected take up question admission new members before next GA sched meet in fall and GA will certainly do so.

Emb will realize membership question has been one of most difficult problems for UN. Admission is effected by GA decision upon recommendation SC. However applications of a nr candidates have long been pending before SC. Non-Sov candidates have been vetoed by USSR while Sov candidates have never recd required majority. As price for agreement admit non-Sov candidates, USSR has demanded package deal involving simultaneous admission five Sov candidates. Thus far majority in SC, including US, have been unwilling pay this price. However at last GA Sov proposal recommending in effect SC act favorably on 14 applications, including nine non-Sov applicants (Austria, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Libya, Jordan, Nepal, and Portugal) and five Sov applicants (Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Outer Mongolia and Rumania) but excluding ROK and Vietnam, recd majority vote in GA over opposition US and was defeated only because it failed receive two-thirds majority.

Dept's best estimate is USSR wld veto Japan's application if considered separately. FYI only, however, USSR might suggest inclusion Japan in package deal with objective of embarrassing US-Jap relations.

Dept extremely concerned over deadlock on membership question and realizes Japan's eligibility makes problem even more acute. We are considering possible solutions but have not reached any decision.

Subject: Japan's Membership in the UN

Tokyo's 390 June 5<sup>1</sup> reports that the Japanese Government has not yet decided whether to seek UN membership immediately or to wait until after the conclusion of Malik's presidency on July 1.

1. Immediate action required: Tokyo has already been given general background information with regard to Japan's candidacy for UN membership (Deptel to Tokyo 12, April 28). As Japan is aware of the situation with regard to the Soviet veto it is believed that we do not need to offer any advice at this time but should permit Japan to make its own decision with regard to the timing of its application.

2. Possible developments in the Security Council: When Japan's application reaches the Security Council, various developments are possible and the exact procedures which may be followed cannot be foreseen now.

When Japan's application is presented the USSR might approve it or might veto.

Alternatively the USSR might submit a substitute resolution proposing the admission of 14 applicants (the list submitted in the Security Council in February) or variations on that list.

Alternatively the USSR might seek to amend the Japanese application by adding additional applicants.

Problems for the U.S. to decide would include:

(1) Should we sponsor a resolution putting the Japanese candidacy before the Security Council? (Such action would show our interest but also would place Japan specifically under our sponsorship.)

(2) Should we vote down the Soviet proposals or seek to amend them by adding candidates of our own (e.g. Korea, Vietnam, and Laos)?

(3) Should we favor discussion of the Japanese application in the Security Council or in the committee of a whole?

Some of these questions involve the much disputed general membership problem, renewed consideration of which will be necessary at once. I have talked with UNP and it is hoped that UNP, NA and FE can get together on these problems in the near future.

Subject: Admission of New Members to United Nations

Participants: Miss Barbara Salt, First Secretary, British Embassy
 Mr. Wainhouse—UNP
 Mr. Sale—EUR
 Mr. Taylor—UNP
 Mr. Jones—UNP

Miss Salt called upon instructions from the Foreign Office to discuss the question of the admission of new members to the United Nations. She said that the Foreign Office had been officially approached by the Italians in March concerning implementation of the Tripartite Declaration of September, 1951 regarding Italy's admission. She understood that Italian representatives had been instructed to make similar approaches in Washington and Paris. She explained that the Foreign Office was presently giving serious consideration to the membership question and wanted to reply to the Italian inquiry before too long. It therefore wished to inform the United States and France of its preliminary thinking and to ask for any views they might have on the membership issue.

The Foreign Office, she said, had mentioned various alternative courses of action. First, the Security Council might recommend the admission of applicants en bloc, leaving it to the General Assembly subsequently to vote down certain of the Soviet applicants. The difficulty with this course, Miss Salt stated, was that a Security Council recommendation to admit applicants simultaneously was contrary to the 1948 opinion of the International Court of Justice.

Second, Miss Salt said, the Assembly might request a Court opinion regarding the validity of a Soviet veto of Italy's application, or the Assembly might phrase a question to the Court in general terms so as to apply to the Soviet vetoes of all the non-Soviet applicants. Miss Salt explained, however, that a question which concerned only the Italian case was difficult for the United Kingdom in view of its interest in the admission of Ceylon and other applicants. On the other hand, a Court question phrased in general terms had the disadvantage that it might weaken the right of veto.

In addition to these alternatives, Miss Salt mentioned another course, involving separate General Assembly action to admit applicants in the absence of a Security Council recommendation. She noted that such action would, however, be clearly contrary to the Court's 1950 opinion and seemed unacceptable to the United Kingdom.

Miss Salt explained that the Foreign Office had not yet formulated its position on the membership question but that it presently seemed to be thinking about a general question to the Court which would apply to the Soviet veto not only of Italy's application but of others as well.

Mr. Wainhouse stated that the Department was very glad to receive the preliminary views of the Foreign Office and that we have likewise been giving very serious attention to the membership question. The working levels were presently studying the whole problem and it was hoped that in due course a high-level decision would be made on the basis of which we could begin consultations with the United Kingdom, France, Canada and others in New York. He mentioned that consideration was being given to the possibility of some arrangement for the admission not only of all present applicants but also of future applicants like Japan and Spain. However, there were serious problems involved and a number of differences of opinion as to details. He therefore could not say what the end result would be.

With respect to the alternatives mentioned by Miss Salt, Mr. Wainhouse expressed the opinion that the Soviet Union would probably not agree to a recommendation for the admission of all applicants by the Security Council unless it had assurance that the Soviet applicants would be admitted by the Assembly. He agreed that General Assembly action in the absence of a Security Council recommendation would be clearly illegal, and saw less difficulty from a legal standpoint in a Security Council recommendation to admit all applicants provided prior agreement was attained.

Mr. Wainhouse assured Miss Salt that we would want to consult closely with the United Kingdom when our thinking had crystallized further. It was agreed that it would be preferable to wait until the United States, United Kingdom and France had further discussions before consulting with the Italians and that our consultations with Italy should be closely coordinated.

Miss Salt thanked Mr. Wainhouse for our views and said that she would give only an interim reply to the Foreign Office.

2. Our conclusion is that best procedure wld be either postpone consideration Sov res until shortly before Seventh GA wld act on membership, or refer res to Membership Comite, thus avoiding discussion of membership question this time and also avoiding vote on Sov res. Dept believes such procedure cld be justified on fol grounds: (1) postponement wld not delay admission any candidate since final action must be taken by GA. SC action this time therefore not necessary; (2) SC members shld be given opportunity consider their positions on membership in light any new applications which may be submitted before Seventh GA and reports thereon by Membership Comite.

1. In view new wording of agenda item 3 on membership, motion for postponement of discussion or referral to Membership Comite suggested Deptel 489 shld cover both sub-paras A and B rather than Sov res only.

2. In supporting above procedure, Dept believes US shld make brief statement which wld (a) recognize need for solution membership problem; (b) leave door open to possibility of solution without, however, committing US in any way as to its subsequent position; and (c) express considerations which in our view make postponement SC discussion desirable. To achieve this, it is suggested that statement include fol points:

a) US has always believed in universality as desirable ultimate UN objective and has never blocked admission of any candidate by use of veto.

b) Large majority UN members, including US, have become increasingly concerned over failure of SC to reach solution to membership problem because of Sov policies. GA has requested SC reconsider matter and report to next GA. SC members are thus faced with heavy responsibility of attempting to reach agreement on problem.

c) In light GA position, US hopes all SC members will give careful consideration their position on membership and will be willing consult on this matter. Further, we believe it is desirable that SC members consider gen problem not only in light of applications already submitted but also from standpoint of any new applications which might possibly be submitted before Seventh GA and any reports which might be made thereon by Membership Comite. These considerations lead us to believe gen discussion of membership shld not take place at this stage but rather shortly before GA wld act on membership. This procedure cld not operate to delay admission any candidate, since final action must be taken by GA which does not meet until fall.

d) If discussion takes place re submission of evidence as suggested Peru res, you may state US wld, of course, welcome submission of evidence by applicants if they so desire.

Subject: Membership Proposals in the Security Council

I recommend that we take the following action (or some procedurally appropriate variant) on the membership question in the Security Council: (1) propose the addition of Japan to the list of candidates now included in the Soviet list and then vote or abstain on the entire proposal; or (2) if the USSR itself adds Japan to its list, vote for or abstain on the amended proposal; and (3) in either case, if procedurally possible without prejudicing the success of the project, propose the addition of other present candidates (Korea, Vietnam and Cambodia) to receive anticipated Soviet vetoes before we accept the residual list.

This procedure, if successful, would open the way for the admission of the following states: Austria, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Libya, Nepal and Portugal; and Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Rumania and Outer Mongolia.

In connection with these steps we would make a statement stressing our continued opposition to the policies and practices of the satellites, our continued support for the candidacies of Korea and Vietnam, our disappointment that the intransigent attitude of the USSR had for so long prevented the admission of many worthy candidates and our decision, in view of the obstructive Soviet attitude and of the necessity in the interests of the UN as a whole of breaking the stalemate, to vote for (or abstain on) the proposal.

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Hickerson) to the Deputy Under Secretary of State (Matthews)

[WASHINGTON,] July 2, 1952.

The enclosed memorandum deals with the subject of admission of new members to the United Nations which has plagued us since 1946 and on which there has been an absolute stalemate since 1950.

I am convinced that this stalemate cannot be broken unless we are prepared to acquiesce in a basket arrangement for the admission of a large number of states. As you know, we are under terrific pressure from Italy and FE and UNA attach very great importance to the early admission of Japan. I believe that the time has come when we should seriously consider whether we could acquiesce in an arrangement to blanket-in countries mentioned on page 3 of the enclosed memorandum. I should, therefore, be grateful if you would call a meeting early next week in order that we could discuss this problem.

It is my feeling that we should not, at this time, reach a final decision on this matter but that I should be authorized to begin consultation with our principal allies and tell them that although we have not reached a decision, we are giving the idea serious consideration. I would like to consult initially with the United Kingdom, France, and Canada, and following consultation with these three, with China, in view of her position on Outer Mongolia. Depending upon how our consultations with these countries go, I should then like to consult with the remaining friendly members of the Security Council—Brazil, Chile, Netherlands, Greece, Turkey, and Pakistan.

ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS TO THE UNITED NATIONS

This paper presents the principal background factors regarding the possibility of an omnibus arrangement to resolve the long-standing stalemate over United Nations membership, and recommends that the Department begin consultations on this matter with its principal allies.

BACKGROUND OF MEMBERSHIP STALEMATE

Article 3 of the Charter provides that the original members of the United Nations are the states which, having participated in the San Francisco Conference or having signed the Declaration by United Nations of January 1, 1942, signed and ratified the Charter. There are fifty-one original members. These include the Soviet bloc of five.

The qualifications for new members and the procedures for their admission are governed by article 4, which reads as follows:

1. Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.

2. The admission of any such state to membership in the United Nations will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

The International Court of Justice has given two advisory opinions on article 4. In the first, it stated that a Member cannot subject its consent to the admission of a state to the condition that other states be admitted simultaneously. In the second, the Court stated that the General Assembly cannot admit a state in the absence of a Security Council recommendation. It has been understood from the beginning that a recommendation for the admission of a new member is a substantive question subject to the veto.

Only nine states have been admitted as new members since the founding of the Organization. These nine are: Afghanistan, Burma, Iceland, Indonesia, Israel, Pakistan, Sweden, Thailand, and Yemen. The last time that a state was admitted was in 1950, when Indonesia was accepted.

Fourteen others have been voted upon separately but have been rejected. The Soviet Union has used its veto 23 times to block the admission of nine of the fourteen (Austria, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Jordan, Republic of Korea, Nepal and Portugal). The remaining five, all of which are Soviet-sponsored (Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Rumania, and Outer Mongolia),* have never received the seven votes required for a Security Council recommendation. In addition, there are four other applicants which have not been voted upon separately. These are Libya and Vietnam, which applied late last year, and Japan and Cambodia, which have just applied. It seems evident that the Soviet Union would veto these four if each were put to a separate vote.

The Soviet Union has for some time proposed the simultaneous admission of most (but not all) of the non-Soviet applicants and of the five Soviet candidates, always making clear, however, that it would continue to use its veto to block the admission of the non-Soviet applicants unless its own candidates were also admitted. Thus far the majority on the Security Council, including the United States, have not accepted this package deal. The membership question has therefore remained deadlocked, the Soviet Union vetoing the non-Soviet applicants and the majority rejecting the Soviet candidates or a package deal.

The large majority of Members have become increasingly concerned over this stalemate. At the last session of the General Assembly, a Soviet proposal which in effect recommended that the Security Council take favorable action on fourteen candidates (the Soviet five and Austria, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Jordan, Libya, Nepal and Portugal) but which omitted the Republic of Korea and Vietnam, received, over the strong opposition of the United States, a vote of 21 in favor to 12 opposed with 25 abstentions in the Committee. It obtained a vote of 22 in favor to 21 opposed with 16 abstentions in the Plenary vote and was rejected only because the Assembly, upon the request of the United States, determined the matter to be an important question requiring a two-thirds majority. While this same Soviet package proposal was defeated in the Security Council on February 6 of this year, the vote on the Soviet resolution in the Assembly shows that a large number of Members are probably willing to compromise to break the deadlock.

The Soviet Union on June 14 of this year resubmitted its package proposal to the Security Council without including the Republic of Korea and Vietnam. Since it submitted the proposal, Japan and Cambodia have applied.

Our position is to postpone consideration of this proposal until shortly before the next General Assembly. We have taken this position because we wish to reconsider the possibility of an omnibus arrangement but do not want to make a decision now.

DISCUSSION OF OMNIBUS ARRANGEMENT

It seems clear that the only way to break the membership stalemate is through an omnibus arrangement along the lines of the Soviet proposal. Obviously, such an arrangement should preferably include all of the non-Soviet applicants (Austria, Cambodia, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Republic of Korea, Libya, Nepal, Portugal, and Vietnam) and also the states which have not yet applied (Federal Republic of Germany, Spain and Laos). However, it appears certain that the Soviet Union would not accept a list which includes the Republic of Korea, the three Indo-China states, and the Federal Republic of Germany. At present, we have no way of knowing whether it would accept Japan or Spain, if it applies. It is believed that under no circumstances could the United States acquiesce in an arrangement which omits Japan and that we should also desire the inclusion of Spain if it should submit an application. The issue to be resolved is whether we could consider an arrangement which includes all the states we favor except the Republic of Korea, the Indo-China states and the Federal Republic of Germany and which includes the five Soviet candidates.

Some of the arguments which can be advanced to justify our acquiescence in such an arrangement are the following:

1. In 1946 the United States itself waived certain doubts regarding Albania and Outer Mongolia and proposed the en bloc admission of all the then eight applicants: Afghanistan, Albania, Iceland, Ireland, Jordan, Outer Mongolia, Portugal and Sweden. (This proposal was withdrawn when it became evident that the Soviet Union would not accept it.)

2. At the last session of the General Assembly many Members appeared ready to accept a package proposal. It is expected that there will be stronger pressure in this direction at the next session.

3. Admission to the United Nations is a matter of political importance to many of the non-Soviet applicants, particularly Italy and Japan. Their admission is also important from the standpoint of our own relations with these countries. We are under continuing and heavy pressure from Italy to get her admitted.

4. Perhaps a greater moral influence could be exercised over the Soviet satellites if they were inside rather than outside the United Nations.

5. The Soviet applicants are no worse than some present United Nations Members—i.e., the Soviet five.

6. United Nations membership, by furnishing an additional method of contact with the free world, tends to offset exclusive Cominform control over the satellite countries and might somewhat strengthen the position of elements therein opposed to Moscow domination.

7. The admission of a large number of countries would in all likelihood result in a reduction of the United States financial contribution to the United Nations to the one-third goal. We are under constant pressure from Congress to reduce our contribution to one-third and have with some difficulty defeated House moves the last two years to cut our appropriations arbitrarily to that level.

However, there are a number of arguments which can be cited against an omnibus arrangement including the following:

1. Since 1946, the United States has maintained that article 4 requires that each applicant must be considered on its own merits and that the Soviet candidates do not meet the Charter qualifications. At the same time, the conduct of the Soviet applicants has become progressively worse.

2. The admission of Soviet applicants might dignify the puppet regimes, could be interpreted as tacit acquiescence in their present status, and might have an unfortunate effect upon the peoples within these states still looking with hope to the West.

3. The admission of Outer Mongolia would give some sanction to the Soviet effort to organize Asia into pseudo-independent states.

4. If we accepted an omnibus settlement omitting the Republic of Korea, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Indo-China states, the U.S.S.R. would be even less likely to agree to their admission later. It would be difficult to omit the Republic of Korea, particularly at a time when the United Nations is taking action to defend it against Communist aggression.

5. Even though the questions of membership and representation are technically unrelated, willingness to admit the Soviet satellites might make it more difficult to obtain support for our position on Chinese representation.

6. Whereas the Soviet bloc now comprises only  $\frac{1}{12}$ th of the total membership, it would represent between  $\frac{1}{4}$ th and  $\frac{1}{8}$ th of this total if the five Soviet applicants were admitted along with 11 non-Soviet applicants. This would increase Soviet obstructive capabilities. Further, on many issues we could not count on the votes of all eleven non-Soviet applicants.

7. An increase in the number of Soviet satellites in the Organization would correspondingly increase the scope of our internal security problem in New York.

On balance it is believed that some of the difficulties and disadvantages to an omnibus settlement could be overcome if the matter is handled carefully, and that the advantages of obtaining membership for Italy, Japan and others might make it worthwhile for the United States to acquiesce in such a settlement. We could not vote for an omnibus arrangement ourselves because of our strong objections to the satellite candidates. Nevertheless, if the other Members wish to accept the arrangement, and in view of our own deep interest in the admission of the non-Soviet candidates, we might indicate that we are prepared to see the plan carried out, making absolutely clear, however, that our attitude towards the Soviet candidates has not changed in any way and that we ourselves cannot vote for the proposal but will abstain.

The working levels of the Department have seriously considered this question during the past months. Although there are a number of differences as to details, there exists a general feeling that while an omnibus arrangement is in many respects distasteful, the need for some solution to the membership problem is urgent and that, subject to certain conditions, the United States could probably acquiesce in a package proposal.

IMMEDIATE ACTION RECOMMENDED

It is not believed that the United States should decide now whether to acquiesce in a package proposal or that it should decide the many questions of tactics and procedure that would be involved. Before doing so, it would be desirable to begin consultations with our principal allies in order to obtain their views. Such consultations would assist the United States in determining its own position.

During these consultations we would, of course, make it perfectly clear that we have not reached a decision with respect to an omnibus settlement but we would indicate that we are giving the idea serious consideration.

Since it is not known how long the membership question can be postponed in the Security Council, and in view of the considerable time that will be required to work out details if we should decide to acquiesce, it is believed that consultations should be undertaken as soon as possible.

Subject: Membership in the UN

Attached is a memorandum from Mr. Hickerson to Mr. Matthews<sup>1</sup> suggesting that a meeting be called early next week to discuss the possibility of an omnibus membership arrangement. Mr. Hickerson points out that he believes that no final decision should be reached at this time on the question, but that authorization should be given to discuss the matter with various key delegations at the UN.

The memorandum, after outlining the history of the membership question and noting the pressures which have developed toward reaching some settlement of the problem, lists the arguments for and against the membership deal and goes on to recommend, on balance, that it might be worthwhile for this country to acquiesce in some such settlement.

The details of the suggested omnibus arrangement (page 3) have not been completely worked out by UNA but it would appear that the plan envisages an arrangement which would include Austria, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Libya, Nepal, Portugal and Spain (which has not yet applied) and would exclude the Republic of Korea, the Associated States of Indochina (two of which have applied) and the Federal Republic of Germany (which has not applied). The memorandum suggests that we abstain on such an omnibus arrangement indicating at the same time, however, that we are prepared to see the plan carried out.

Comments:

1. The proposal as now framed, though intentionally vaguely worded, would appear to have the intent of making the admission of Spain as well as Japan a sine qua non to U.S. acceptance of the proposal. It is stated that the attitude of the USSR toward the admittance of both Spain and Japan is not known.

It is believed on the contrary that the Soviet attitude toward Spain has been made quite clear and there seems no possible doubt that Spain's admission would not be acceptable to the Soviets (or to many other UN members). It should be noted in this connection that in the present session of ECOSOC the USSR as well as Poland and Czechoslovakia vigorously attacked the application of Spain for membership in UNESCO.

Under these circumstances it would appear that the omnibus arrangement was foredoomed to failure and accordingly it is believed that FE could not support the proposal. In taking this position it can be pointed out that we would be asked to sacrifice the candidacies of Cambodia, Vietnam and possibly Laos as well as the Republic of Korea, to a proposal which has no chance of being accepted.

2. If on the other hand UNA and EUR are willing to accept the arrangement without insisting upon the admission of Spain, it is believed that FE should support the proposal.

In this connection, however, it is our belief that we could not agree to dropping Japan as well as Spain. A deal which omitted Japan would not only be damaging to our relations with that country but would pose severe difficulties for our relations throughout the Far East since we would then be omitting five friendly Far Eastern States, Japan, the Associated States of Indochina and the Republic of Korea, while agreeing to the admission of Outer Mongolia.

Recommendations: that at the meeting you take the position:

(1) that despite the political cost, FE would be prepared to acquiesce in an arrangement which would include all present applicants but which, in residual form, might exclude the Republic of Korea, the three Associated States and West Germany;

(2) that under no circumstances could FE acquiesce in any arrangement hinged upon the inclusion of Spain;

(3) that you be unequivocal on point (2) above in view of the persistence with which Spain's case has been urged by EUR and UNA for the past four months;

(4) that you should be equally unequivocal that Japan must be included in any arrangement.

ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS TO THE UNITED NATIONS

During the EUR Directors' meeting of July 7 it was agreed that Mr. Hickerson's memorandum of July 1 [2] to Mr. Matthews provided a satisfactory basis for consultation on this problem with the UK, France and Canada, and, in the light of the results of such initial consultation, with other friendly members of the Security Council. It was agreed that EUR's concurrence should be subject to the following conditions and clarifications:

(1) Such consultation should not prejudice our freedom of action in determining our final position with respect to the general problem of admission of new members, nor with respect to tactics to be employed in presentation of the proposal in the United Nations. Specifically, it should be made clear that EUR favors a preliminary effort to obtain an amendment to the Charter to remove certain qualification requirements for membership. We consider that procedure toward such amendment should be initiated before the admission of new members whom we consider to be unqualified under present Charter requirements; we consider that such action is essential to provide moral justification of our support of, or acquiescence in, the blanket admission of the proposed new members.

(2) EUR considers that our position should provide for strong support for inclusion of Spain in any en bloc admission and we would not agree to the acceptance of any "package" without Spain, at least until every effort has been made to obtain Spain's inclusion.

(3) It should be made clear that the approval of a final US position on this problem must be subject to bi-partisan Congressional and "executive" agreement.

(4) The procedure for implementation of the proposed position should provide for ascertaining the views of the Soviets regarding an acceptable package prior to any US public announcement of our final position.

19. Verbatim Text. Re Japanese membership application. Shimadzu and Yamanaka (Japanese reps) called today at their request to inform us of instructions received from Tokyo in reply to questions raised in their previous interview here. They read out and left with us following paper:

“The Japanese Government anticipates that, in accordance with the rules of procedure of the SC, consideration of its application for membership will have been completed 25 days prior to the seventh session of the GA. It is not desired that any particular country should be requested to push consideration of the matter, setting aside any other items on the agenda.

If a member of the council should include the Japanese application in the simultaneous admission plan, it is hoped that the US will approve of the plan. However, in case approval should prove difficult, it is desired that the Japanese application be considered as a separate item as soon as possible.

The Japanese Govt has no intention of compromising with the Soviet Union in return for admission to the UN.”

In ensuing discussion, Yamanaka, mentioning rules of procedure wondered whether case would go direct to membership comite from SYG. We replied that in recent past SC on proposal of a member had declined whether to take on agenda applications newly before it and if so whether to send them to membership comite or itself deal with them at once.

We reiterated our strong sympathy Japanese desire for admission and our own strong hope their application would be successful. Referring to rules they had cited, we explained to Japanese we thought debate on membership item should be postponed until date closer to seventh GA and we felt from what they said that their FonOff views coincided with this tactic for dealing with current Sov item in SC. We said we thought majority of SC wld desire that course. We urged them keep in close touch with us and said we would do same with them.

Shimadzu asked if Japanese should talk with UKDel. We said seemed good idea and we suggested that before he approached UK we talk with UKDel and let him know general UK view.

From conversation it appeared clear to us Japanese wanted be assured application would not fall by wayside. We also noted no indication Japanese wanted force Sov veto for any special reason.<sup>1</sup>

Subject: Circumvention or Overriding of Soviet Veto of Applications for United Nations Membership

At a meeting of the Assistant Secretaries last week, during which it was generally agreed that we should not acquiesce in a package proposal on membership, Mr. Hickerson said that we would again look into the possibility of circumventing or overriding the Soviet veto of membership applications.

I hope that we can have a meeting some time this week to discuss this problem. Attached is a paper on the subject to serve as a basis for our discussion.

ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS<sup>2</sup>

CIRCUMVENTION OR OVERRIDING OF SOVIET VETO OF MEMBERSHIP APPLICATIONS

In the past, various alternative courses have been suggested as possible ways to circumvent or override the Soviet veto of recommendations for the admission of new members. We have rejected some of these because we believed that they were illegal and because of their implications regarding the veto power. We have been reluctant to accept others because in our view they would not achieve the desired result.

There follows below a brief discussion of the major alternatives which have been suggested.

1. Security Council Determination that a vote on Membership Applications is Procedural

Since 1947, the United States has consistently declared that it would not use its vote to prevent the admission of any state receiving as many as seven affirmative votes in the Security Council. However, we have always taken the position that a recommendation to admit a new member is a substantive decision and that a permanent member has a right to veto such a recommendation if it so desires.

The various organs of the United Nations concerned with this problem have never suggested that a recommendation to admit a new member is procedural. The Interim Committee, in its 1948 Report to the Assembly, concluded that the Assembly should recommend to the permanent Members that they agree that a recommendation on the admission of a new member should be adopted by the vote of any seven members regardless of whether such a recommendation was considered procedural or non-procedural. The General Assembly, in April 1949, in accordance with this conclusion of the Interim Committee, recommended that the permanent members seek agreement to forbear to exercise their veto when seven votes have been cast in favor of a recommendation to admit a new member. Later in the same year it approved a resolution requesting the permanent members to refrain from the use of the veto in connection with recommendations for membership. Thus the Assembly, while requesting that the veto right not be used, has recognized that this right exists in connection with membership applications. Finally, the Security Council has consistently treated as a veto the Soviet Union's negative vote on membership applications receiving seven or more votes.

However, opinions on this matter have not been unanimous. Certain Latin American countries, notably Argentina, have long contended that the veto should not apply to a recommendation on admission of a new member. At the last session of the Assembly, Cuba maintained that according to the Four-Power Declaration at San Francisco, only questions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security were subject to the veto, and that it therefore followed that the admission of new members was a procedural question. Cuba also maintained that the Assembly could itself decide that the question was procedural and could admit candidates which had received at least seven favorable votes.

We would, of course, strongly object to the thesis that the Assembly could determine whether a question before the Security Council was substantive or procedural, since this is a matter which the Security Council itself must determine. However, in view of the history of the membership question, it would be difficult for the Security Council now to decide that a vote on a membership application was procedural. In any event, a decision of this nature is itself subject to the veto. The procedure which has been used to override a double veto could hardly be applied since this procedure was contemplated only for those matters which have been defined as procedural either in the Charter or in the San Francisco statement, or where a question is so clearly procedural that a contrary claim is virtually frivolous.

Aside from these considerations it might not be in our own future interest to go on record as in favor of a determination that a decision on a membership application is procedural.

2. Referral to the International Court of Justice of the Question Whether a Negative Vote of a Permanent Member can Nullify a Security Council Recommendation for Admission Which has Obtained Seven or More Votes.

The Central American countries introduced a draft resolution to the Sixth Session which would request an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice as to whether a negative vote of a permanent member can nullify a recommendation for admission which has obtained seven or more affirmative votes. In commenting upon this draft resolution, the Department indicated to the United States Delegation that the Court might not consider itself competent to give an opinion on this question, and that even if it should consider itself competent, a favorable opinion would be unlikely. We also said that we were reluctant to go to the Court on a question the answer to which in our view was clear.

The Sixth Assembly postponed consideration of this draft resolution until the Seventh Session. While we would probably have no serious objection to submittal of this question to the Court if desired by others, it is far from certain that any tangible results would be achieved. However, if the Court should give a favorable opinion, it might be easier to override a double veto in the Security Council or for the Assembly to take action to admit applicants.

3. Security Council Determination that a Negative Vote on a Membership Application Which is Cast on Non-Charter Grounds is Null and Void

During the Sixth Session there was also some discussion of the possibility of a Security Council determination that a negative vote on a membership application cast solely on non-Charter grounds does not constitute a legal vote and is null and void. It was suggested that the President of the Council might make such a determination or that he might refer the matter to the Security Council.

A Presidential ruling of this nature would establish a far-reaching precedent that the President has a right to rule on the effect of a Member's vote. To permit the President to make such a ruling subject only to rule 30 of the Council's Rules of Procedure would mean that the legality and effect of a Member's vote would be left in the hands of the President and four other Members. The dangers of abuse of such a procedure cannot be minimized. For instance, on such a precedent the Soviet Chairman might rule that the vote of the Chinese National representative is illegal and it might not be possible to get seven votes to override him.

Referral of the question of the legality of a Member's vote to the Security Council would be less objectionable since seven votes would be required to declare a Member's vote illegal. However, there is no clear authority for such a procedure in the Charter or in past Security Council practice. Further, the question of the legality of a Member's vote would itself appear to be subject to the veto.

In addition, it should be noted that the Soviet Union, by vetoing on alleged Charter grounds or by stating no reasons, could complicate a Security Council determination that a negative vote based on grounds lying outside of Article 4 is null and void.

4. Referral to the International Court of Justice of the Question Whether a Negative Vote of a Permanent Member Cast on Non-Charter Grounds can Nullify a Recommendation for Admission Which Has Obtained Seven or More Votes.

The General Assembly could request an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice as to the legality and effect of a Soviet negative vote cast on non-Charter grounds. At the last session of the Assembly, Nisot (Belgium) informally suggested a revision of the Central American draft resolution (see alternative 2 above) along these lines. The Department preferred Nisot's suggestion to the Central American draft because it believed that the Court might be more likely to consider a question framed in this manner and because we saw more likelihood of a favorable answer. However, it must be realized that the possibility of a favorable opinion from the Court on this question might still be remote. In addition, the Soviet Union could negate the usefulness of referral of the question to the Court by vetoing membership applications on alleged Charter grounds. However, if the Court did give a favorable opinion, there would be some basis for Assembly action to admit applicants.

5. Separate General Assembly Action to Admit Applicants Even Though The Security Council has not Made a Favorable Recommendation Because of the Negative Vote of a Permanent Member

The International Court of Justice has stated that the General Assembly cannot admit a state to membership in the absence of a favorable Security Council recommendation. We have repeatedly supported this view and the General Assembly and the Security Council have consistently proceeded on this basis.

Nevertheless, some Members, from the Latin American group, still contend that if the Assembly is not obliged to endorse a favorable Security Council recommendation, it need not be bound by an unfavorable decision and can itself proceed to admit Members. Moreover, the Italian Government last year attempted to justify independent action by the Assembly when it pressed us to agree that the General Assembly could admit Italy since the U.S.S.R. had vetoed its application on other than Charter grounds. However, we maintained that even though a negative vote is cast on non-Charter grounds, it does not follow that this negative vote is null and void or that the General Assembly is in a position to assume this. Further, we feared that acceptance of the Italian thesis could lead to a gradual whittling away of the veto power.

Nevertheless, a number of members may come to support independent General Assembly action if no other solution to the membership problem develops. In this connection, it will be recalled that some of the Latin American countries regard the Peruvian resolution as a first step in the elimination of the role of the Security Council in admission procedures. This resolution declares that the judgment of the United Nations on the admission of new members ought to be based exclusively on the conditions contained in Article 4; recommends that the Security Council, in considering membership applications, take into account such facts and evidence as applicants may present; and that it base its action exclusively on the conditions contained in the Charter and on the facts establishing the existence of these conditions. If the Security Council should reconsider applicants in the light of this resolution, and if the Soviet Union should continue to veto on other than Charter grounds, a number of delegations may attempt to use the provisions of this resolution to justify independent General Assembly action without prior recourse to the Court.

In support of such action, it might be pointed out that in the case of the extension of the term of office of the Secretary-General, the United States, during the Plenary debate, based its position in favor of General Assembly action mainly on grounds of political necessity. However, it is also clear that there is a firmer legal basis for independent Assembly action to extend the Secretary General's term of office than for independent Assembly action to admit new members. Furthermore, independent General Assembly action in the case of membership could have serious implications regarding the powers of the Security Council, a matter of vital interest to us. If the General Assembly assumed the power to admit applicants in the absence of a Security Council recommendation on the grounds that a permanent Member's vote was cast on illegal grounds, it might in the future assume Security Council powers over other matters. Furthermore, the Soviet Union could frustrate independent General Assembly action by vetoing the non-Soviet candidates on alleged Charter grounds. In particular the Soviet Union, technically at war with Japan, might charge that Japan is not a peace-loving state.

Subject: Admission of new members to UN

At the meeting in your office last week directed to the question of admitting new UN members, Mr. Ferguson, of S/P, urged that we try to see if there is some way of establishing that the veto does not apply to questions of membership when the Security Council is considering applications. This is a matter which has been considered in the Department from time to time in the past. The conclusion has uniformly been reached that the veto did apply to applications for membership. A review now undertaken by this Office of the relevant materials leads again to the same conclusion.

Does the Veto Apply?

Twice since 1945 the General Assembly has asked the International Court of Justice for advisory opinions on the membership problem. Neither time did the questions submitted ask the Court to pass on the issue of the veto's applicability to membership applications in the Security Council. And in neither of its advisory opinions did the Court express any views on this matter. In the absence of any expression from the Court on this question, there are a number of other factors which point without exception to the conclusion that the veto applies.

At the Yalta Conference, when the Security Council voting formula now contained in Article 27 of the Charter was proposed by the United States, Secretary Stettinius explained to Marshal Stalin and Prime Minister Churchill what categories of decisions by the Council would require the vote of seven members including the concurring votes of the permanent members. In the first of these categories he listed recommendations on the admission of new members.

Later on, at the San Francisco Conference which completed the Charter, there was considerable discussion of the Yalta voting formula. In response to questions submitted by some of the smaller powers, the Big Four issued a statement on the veto. This statement did not mention recommendations of the Security Council on admission of new members, but in listing some of the Council decisions that would be considered procedural the statement made no mention of admission to membership.

In 1948, at the request of the General Assembly, the Interim Committee made a study of the veto. In its report to the General Assembly, the Interim Committee included two lists. In one of these were listed decisions of the Security Council which ought to be considered procedural. Recommendations of the Council on admission to membership were not included in this list. In the other list the Interim Committee mentioned a number of Council decisions on which the permanent members should, if possible, "forebear to exercise their veto". This latter list included recommendations for the admission of new members. The General Assembly, when it considered the Interim Committee's report, adopted in Resolution 267 (III) recommendations following up the Interim Committee's report. The first two operative paragraphs of the Assembly resolution dealt with the two lists prepared by the Interim Committee. The membership question was considered to be subject to veto.

Toward the close of the 80th Congress, Senator Vandenberg introduced in the Senate S. Res. 239, which was subsequently passed and has come to be known as the Vandenberg Resolution. Among its provisions, this resolution recommended that the United States seek to limit the exercise of the veto in the Security Council, in particular with respect to pacific settlement of disputes under Chapter VI of the Charter, and with respect to the admission of new members. Thus again the clear implication was that the veto did apply in the Security Council on membership questions.

In the last five years the Soviet Union has cast a large number of negative votes in the Security Council on Membership applications. Without exception, these have been treated by Security Council presidents as constituting vetoes which prevented the Security Council from making favorable recommendations on the applications in question. The Council has never sought to follow any other course than that adhered to by the Security Council presidents.

From the above, one can only conclude that recommendations of the Security Council under Article 4 of the Charter are subject to veto and have been uniformly so regarded. As pointed out earlier, this issue has never been put before the International Court of Justice. If it were now put before the Court, chances seem very slight indeed for a ruling that the veto does not apply.

Is a Veto Null and Void When Based on Non-Charter Grounds?

There remains a further possibility which was considered last winter both in the Department and by the Assembly Delegation in Paris. An argument can be framed somewhat as follows: Where the Soviet Union has cast a negative vote on a membership application for the stated reason that other applicants were not being simultaneously admitted, the Soviet Union has violated Article 4 of the Charter as interpreted by the International Court, since members of the Security Council under the Court's earlier advisory opinion are not at liberty to impose conditions on admission beyond the conditions which are stated in Article 4; a negative vote cast in violation of the Soviet Union's obligations under the Charter is not merely illegal, but is void. Theoretically, this argument might be advanced in any of three forums: The Security Council, the General Assembly, or the International Court of Justice.

In the Security Council, it could not be expected to be successful, since a motion in the sense of this argument would be subject both to veto and double veto. It is highly unlikely that the Council could be persuaded to override a double veto of any motion to the effect that one or more Soviet vetoes were illegal and of no effect. Both in theory and in practice the overriding of a double veto in the Council is available only where a question is clearly procedural; it cannot be said that the question of the effect of a permanent member's negative vote on an application for membership is a clearly procedural question.

If the argument were advanced in the General Assembly, it might conceivably be supported by a majority of UN members, or even a two-thirds majority. However, the procedure of having the Assembly change the interpretation placed by the Security Council on the Council's own voting seems highly questionable, and would expose the proponents in the Assembly of such a procedure to well-founded charges of Charter violation. The consequences of following such a procedure in the Assembly would obviously be very serious if it were carried through. The result might well be the break-up of the Organization to which it had been sought to admit the new members.

The argument might also be advanced in the International Court of Justice, in connection with a request for advisory opinion coming from either the Security Council or the General Assembly. If the question were submitted to the Court, there seems a considerable chance that the Court might decline to give an answer on the ground that a political matter was involved. If it did answer, the Court in all probability would not conclude that the effect attributed by the Security Council itself to a negative vote cast by one of the permanent members should be overturned. The situation might be a little more favorable if the Security Council rather than the General Assembly had submitted the request for an advisory opinion, but it is by no means clear that the Security Council would be able to vote such a request to the Court, because of the veto and double veto. If the International Court reached the issue of whether a negative vote on membership constituted a veto (including the situation where the negative vote was based on non-Charter grounds), it seems unlikely that the Court would hold it to be not a veto.

The utility of advancing the above-suggested argument is probably rather limited in any event. In the Security Council's past consideration of membership applications, the Soviet negative vote on applications favored by the Western Powers has only sometimes been based on non-Charter grounds. And future negative votes which the Soviet Union may decide to cast can easily be rested by the Soviet Delegate on a statement of Charter grounds. In the Security Council's reconsideration of the old applications, including Italy's (where Soviet vetoes have been cast on non-Charter grounds), the Soviet Union can now state that it opposes those applications for reasons which are recognized in Article 4 as legitimate.

WASHINGTON, July 29, 1952.

Subject: Admission of New Members to the United Nations

Participants: Miss Barbara Salt, First Secretary, British Embassy
Mr. Wainhouse—UNP
Mr. Sale—EUR
Mr. Taylor—UNP
Mr. Jones—UNP

Miss Salt called upon Mr. Wainhouse on July 29, 1952 to discuss the United Nations Membership question. She recalled our earlier meeting on this subject of June 13, 1952 and asked whether the Department had any further views. She said that as far as she knew, the Foreign Office has not progressed in its thinking beyond the tentative opinions she had expressed to us earlier, but that it seemed to incline toward referring the question of the legality of the Soviet veto to the International Court of Justice.

Mr. Wainhouse assured Miss Salt that the Department has continued to give very detailed consideration to the membership problem. With respect to a package deal, France seemed cool on the idea and that China, Greece and Turkey might be expected to oppose it. While we have not reached any decision, we continued to see serious difficulties ourselves. Of the various possibilities, a comprehensive arrangement including the present applicants we favor and also Spain and Germany, which have not yet applied, would be the most satisfactory. However, even if we should be willing to consider this, there would be the practical difficulty that the more inclusive the arrangement, the less likely the USSR would accept it. When Miss Salt asked if it would be true to say that we were less inclined toward a package deal than when we met earlier, Mr. Wainhouse said that he thought that was correct, although we still had not reached a final decision.

Mr. Wainhouse said that we had again studied the veto problem in connection with membership and had concluded that there was no way we could legally circumvent a Soviet veto. Miss Salt expressed agreement, adding that the United Kingdom had always stressed that the Tripartite Delegation [Declaration]<sup>1</sup> was not a commitment to get Italy admitted even if we had to act illegally.

On recourse to the Court, Mr. Wainhouse said that this was a possible alternative but he was not all optimistic about the result and thought that we could resort to it only as a holding operation. If the Foreign Office had drafted a text of a question to be put to the Court, we would be interested in seeing it. When Miss Salt asked if we had considered arrangements for non-member participation in the Assembly, Mr. Wainhouse said that we have studied this possibility but that apparently the Italians have no interest in this alternative.

We informed Miss Salt that the Italian Ambassador had called on Mr. Hickerson on July 28 to discuss Italian membership; that the Ambassador had again stressed the importance which the Italian people attach to Italy's admission and the desirability of its admission before the Italian election takes place next year.

Miss Salt reviewed a conversation between Sir Gladwyn Jebb and Ambassador Gross on the tactics we should follow on membership in the Security Council in September. She reported that they discussed the desirability of consultations among the permanent members during the latter part of August, during which we would inform the USSR that our position on a package deal remains unchanged; express our support for the new applicants, (Cambodia and Japan) and ask the USSR for its views on these applicants. When the Security Council meets on September 2 the permanent members would report that they had been unable to reach agreement, and we would request referral of the new applications to the Membership Committee for urgent action. We said we thought that this might be the general line to follow.

Subject: United Nations Membership Question

As you requested, UNP and L/UNA have again considered whether there is any feasible way to circumvent or override Soviet vetoes on applications for United Nations membership. We have reviewed the history of the membership problem beginning with Yalta and San Francisco and have gone over the actions of the Assembly, the Security Council and the Court. Our conclusions are briefly as follows:

In the first place, article 4 means that the Assembly cannot admit an applicant in the absence of a favorable Security Council recommendation. The Court's 1950 opinion reaffirmed this, and the General Assembly has proceeded on this basis from the beginning. In the second place, it has always been understood by both the Assembly and the Security Council that a Council recommendation to admit a new member is subject to the veto. We do not see how we can get around this fact. In view of the history of the membership question and the stated positions of the permanent members, including the United States, and because of the procedural problems involved, it would be extremely difficult for the Council now to attempt to determine that a recommendation to admit a new member is a procedural decision. Although the Assembly could go to the Court on this question, it is far from certain that the Court would consider itself competent to give an opinion. If it should consider itself competent, it would almost certainly decide that the matter is substantive.

It has been suggested, as a way out of our difficulties, that the Security Council might determine that a negative vote cast solely on non-Charter grounds is null and void or that the General Assembly might assume this and itself take action to admit those applicants which the USSR has vetoed illegally. However, the General Assembly is hardly in a position to determine the effect of a vote in the Security Council and a Security Council determination that a negative vote cast on non-Charter grounds is null and void would be difficult if not impossible to obtain. Furthermore, an attempt by the Council, and certainly of the Assembly, to make such a determination would set an undesirable precedent for the future.

It has also been suggested that if the Soviet Union continues to veto on non-Charter grounds, the Assembly might request an opinion from the Court as to whether a negative vote of a permanent member cast on non-Charter grounds can nullify a recommendation for admission which has obtained seven or more votes. Of all the above alternatives, this course would seem least objectionable from our own standpoint, and we might have to resort to it in an effort to provide some new approach to the problem. However, we are not at all optimistic about the results.

In short, we believe that the various alternatives which have been suggested as ways to circumvent or override Soviet vetoes of membership applications are either illegal or are unlikely to achieve any results. Although some members will probably push for one of the above courses of action at the next session of the Assembly, it is likely that there will be strong pressure for an omnibus settlement as the only practicable solution. In this event, our opposition to a package deal will cause even more difficulties than we experienced at the last session.

It might therefore be desirable for you to explore with the Assistant Secretaries the possibility of bi-partisan consultations to ascertain whether there would be the necessary political support for our acquiescence in a package proposal. The package proposal would, of course, contain the maximum possible number of states we favor. We would try to obtain the inclusion of all the present non-Soviet applicants (Austria, Cambodia, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Republic of Korea, Laos, Libya, Nepal, Portugal and Vietnam) and also of Spain and the Federal Republic of Germany. However, it seems unlikely that the Soviet Union would accept the Federal Republic of Germany, the Republic of Korea, or the Indo-China states, and we do not know whether it would accept Japan or Spain. We believe we would have to insist on the latter two countries, but the question remains whether we could in the end acquiesce in a list which was negotiated downward to include all the states we favor except the Federal Republic of Germany, the Republic of Korea, and the three Indo-China states, and which also included the five Soviet candidates.

Subject: USUN Views on Membership

Mr. Hyde just told me that Ambassador Gross' views as developed in a long discussion yesterday are as follows:

1. The United States will not be in a position to offer a blanket deal this year.
2. Even if we were, the Chinese will probably veto Outer Mongolia and the Greeks would at least abstain on the Balkan states. Ambassador Gross considers the British position "dishonest" in that they are apparently trying to make us take the rap for opposing the deal.
3. Gross thinks there is no possibility of a two-thirds majority in the Assembly voting for any applicant, even Italy, not without a Security Council recommendation.
4. If the above premises are correct, the best line for us to take would be to hold a perfunctory conference of the five permanent members, ascertain that no-one had changed his position, and so report to the Security Council.

Subject: Membership Position

I. You asked us to study and make recommendations on the position to be taken on membership at the September SC meeting and in particular, on the following over-all position:

"(a) We have not thus far been able to acquiesce in a package deal and we are not prepared to do so now."

"(b) If we are ever able to acquiesce in a package arrangement it will have to be a larger package than the Soviet 14-nation proposal";

"(c) We should discreetly sound out Soviet attitudes on adding the following states to the package: The Republic of Korea, Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia, Japan, Spain, Federal Republic of Germany."

II. You asked also for study of the idea of including, in a blanket resolution, general expressions like "Germany" and "Korea" for certain countries.

I. Comment on Suggested Over-all Position

(a) We assume that the decision not to acquiesce in a package deal for the time being is a wise one. This need not bind us for a long time. But the essential point now is to avoid commitments, domestic and international, on our future positions and to minimize the difficulties of our position public opinion-wise as much as we can.<sup>1</sup>

(b) The feature of the suggested position that would strike other delegations and the press immediately would be Point (b)—its failure to maintain our flat rejection of the package deal approach. This would seem to help our political position for the moment. But it would most probably lead Chile and Pakistan to seek at once to promote an agreement with the USSR. The press would take our statement as an indication that we had decided to negotiate a deal and would quickly fill in practically all of the details, including reasons why we would not go ahead at once. It would seem difficult, therefore, to hold this position in the form stated above without being pressed into a further stage of negotiations or into indicating our bargaining position prematurely and, perhaps—during the political campaign—into commitments that would tie our hands later on.

We shall have to take a common line with the UK, France and China in the August consultations and in the September SC meeting. If we are not ready now to negotiate and discuss a blanket arrangement, a common line of resistance against the Soviet deal is necessary. The most effective common line would probably be a fairly perfunctory rejection at this time, saying merely that our position has not changed. We cannot ourselves maintain an ambiguous position while expecting our friends to take the line of a flat rejection.

It would, however, be possible for us in the September SC meeting to make a statement along the following lines, without saying that the reason we are opposing the Soviet proposal is its lack of inclusiveness: "The Soviet Union claims that its proposal includes all states that should be considered at this time, that it is a broad, tolerant arrangement designed to achieve a universal membership. This is untrue. The Soviet proposal does not even include all of the applicants—it omits Japan, the Republic of Korea, Viet Nam, Laos and Cambodia. It certainly does not include all of the states—applicants and non-applicants—which deserve consideration for membership."

(c) How can we feel out the Soviet attitudes on the states not included in the Soviet package?

(1) Japan evidently does not want to ask the USSR directly about its attitude and FE probably would not wish to ask Japan to make these inquiries.

(2) In the August consultations we could of course ask the USSR its attitude on the seven states but would most probably not get a reliable answer unless we talked seriously about a specific proposal.

(3) In the September SC meeting we can have the Council take up and act on the new applications (Japan, Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia) before taking up the Soviet resolution. This could probably be arranged and is in accordance with some precedent; its purpose would, however, be clear. It would force the USSR to veto those applications individually or include them in the package.

The only real doubt is the Soviet attitude toward Japan. It is difficult to see how the USSR can now support the Republic of Korea, West Germany or the Indo-China states at all and it certainly would not indicate an attitude on Spain or West Germany unless actual applications were presented.

As indicated under (a) above, it is believed that we cannot now accept a package deal even with Japan included.

Recommendations

(1) For September SC meeting (see attached draft telegram):<sup>2</sup>

That we concert with the UK, France, China, Greece, Turkey, Brazil and the Netherlands in taking the following position:

(a) Consultations with the USSR would preferably be limited to ascertaining that neither side has changed its position.

(b) In the SC, the new applications (Viet Nam, Laos, Cambodia, and Japan) should be considered before the old applications.

(c) We keep the proceedings as perfunctory as possible and avoid extreme statements against either the package deal idea or against the Soviet applicants.

(2) For possible use in the Assembly :

(a) The membership question should be placed low on the agenda, so that it will not be reached until December.

(b) If we then find it practicable to support a package arrangement, we should concert with a number of friendly countries shortly before we move on the question.

(c) Our formula should be as follows :

(i) It is quite possible for the members to agree among themselves concerning the meaning of the criteria used in Article 4. We are ready, provided other members are, to adopt a new interpretation according to which the mere declaration by a state of its acceptance of the Charter is taken as showing the necessary willingness to carry out the Charter objectives. If the USSR will not accept this interpretation we will continue our past approach to Article 4.

(ii) The Republic of Korea, Japan, Viet Nam, Laos, Cambodia, Spain and the Federal Republic of Germany qualify for membership. On the other hand, we have serious doubts of Outer Mongolia's qualification because it is not really organized as a state.

(d) If in subsequent discussions the Soviet Union agrees to add Japan to the list we should accept the arrangement, and take the necessary steps in the SC and General Assembly.

(e) The Assembly should then grant to any states not admitted to membership a seat in the Assembly and its committees. It has been suggested that we might go so far as to give even a vote to these states and this vote would be duly registered in the records but it would be provided that the vote would not count toward the attainment of majorities required by the Charter.

II. Comment on Suggestion to Use Generalized Terms "Korea" "Germany" "Viet Nam".

As a supplementary question, would it be desirable to include in a package arrangement—whenever we are ready to negotiate one—generalized terms like "Korea" and "Germany" in place of the specific reference to the Republic of Korea and the Federal Republic, adding a statement of the conditions of action to admit?

We have canvassed this problem at the working level in FE and GER and on this basis our recommendations are against the idea, for the following reasons :

(1) The approach breaks down on the Indo-China states, since the same conditions do not exist in all three countries.

(2) The phrasing of the statement of the conditions of admission would depend upon our purpose. If our purpose is to secure Soviet approval, the formula for Korea would probably be "as soon as the unification of Korea is achieved"; and for Germany, "as soon as a Government based on all-German elections is established." The fulfillment of each of these conditions would require Soviet approval. Other formulations are possible as, in the case of Korea, "as soon as peaceful conditions are established". The determination of the existence of these conditions would be made by the General Assembly unless some other procedure was provided. However, the Soviet Union would obviously not agree to this; everyone would know the Soviet did not agree; and therefore the inclusion of such a statement would be taken as a means of making the whole arrangement dependent on the admission of the Republic of Korea, Western Germany, etc. It is assumed that there would be no particular point in dealing with the cases of Korea, Germany and Indo-China through these special formulas and accordingly we assume that the formula would in effect provide for the achievement in each case of unification and Soviet approval. The South Koreans, West Germans and Vietnamese might consider this a bad set-back because they would be clearly barred from membership. If, therefore, we cannot achieve membership for the Republic of Korea and the Federal Republic of Germany in connection with a blanket deal it might be better simply to leave them out and, for the time being, to give them a seat in the Assembly as suggested above.

Subject: Japan's Entry into United Nations

Participants: Mr. Kamimura, Minister, Embassy of Japan
Mr. John D. Hickerson, Asst. Secretary for United Nations Affairs
Mr. U. Alexis Johnson, FE
Mr. Franklin Hawley, NA

Minister Shinichi Kamimura, representing Ambassador Eikichi Araki, called on Mr. Hickerson at 10:30 this morning to discuss problems connected with Japan's pending application for entry into the United Nations. The appointment for this meeting had been arranged by Mr. Johnson following Mr. Kamimura's call yesterday.

Mr. Kamimura opened the conversation by asking what decision had been made by the United States to sponsor Japan's application when the Security Council meets on September 2nd. Mr. Hickerson stated that the American position continued to be that of giving warm support to Japan and that the United States would do everything within its power to secure Japan's admission. He added that the problem of Japan's entry was complicated by a two-year stalemate due to American opposition to a Russian package proposal; it was the firm conviction of the United States that the application of each country should be supported on its own merits and voted on separately and individually. He reminded Mr. Kamimura that the Soviet Union had consistently vetoed the applications of the nine countries supported by the United States and that while we did not definitely know what the Russian attitude would be, it might be expected that Russia would veto consideration in the Security Council of Japan's application. Further, while it could not be foretold whether Russia would include Japan in its package list, the United States proposed to counter such a possibility and to take the initiative by introducing at the earliest opportunity a resolution by which the Japanese application would be considered singly and as a separate item. Mr. Hickerson emphasized that this proposal was still under consideration, that we would need to secure the support of our friends on the Council, and that we would like to have the views of Japan. Mr. Kamimura said that it could safely be said that his country would warmly welcome such a step as it would show the interest and initiative taken by the United States and assure the Japanese Government and people of the support of the United States. He continued by saying that the Japanese Government was concerned lest the United States be put in the position of opposing Japanese membership through American opposition to a Soviet-supported package plan in which Japan might be included. Mr. Kamimura stated that he realized the delicacy of the problem, but wanted to know whether the United States could support the package proposal in the event that through negotiations with the Soviets some of the objectionable countries could be eliminated from the Soviet slate. Mr. Hickerson stated that no more could be said than that it would have to be an entirely different package, and that if we could bring ourselves to approve a package it would only be a package in which Japan was included. He stated again that no final decision had been made. Mr. Kamimura indicated his understanding of the United States' position but added that so far as his country was concerned it was interested only in gaining admission into the United Nations, either alone or in association with other countries. Mr. Hickerson ended by saying that he would be away for a few weeks, including the date of September 2nd, but that his Deputy, Mr. Sandifer, would inform the Embassy of the course decided on by the United States.

(1) Our gen objective is to secure defeat Sov omnibus res without ourselves assuming unduly prominent role or losing flexibility our position and at same time to probe if possible Sov intentions re states not included in res. In addition to Jap, ROK and IC states we have gen obligation to support Ger for membership in intl orgs; also Span Amb Aug 12 personally and informally inquired Dept's views re a Span application and was told we cld not advise re submittal of an application but that we wld support if submitted.

We envisage best gen approach to objective wld be attainment common tactical attitude in SC by entire group SC members other than USSR and—in view their position in Jul on this subject—possibly Chile and Pakistan. Accordingly, we shld consult at every stage with UK, Fr, China, Greece, Turkey, Brazil and Neth and appropriately with Chile and Pakistan, in endeavor agree upon common policy.

(2) We are agreeable, in concert with UK, Fr and China to holding consultations with USSR latter half of Aug. In view of U.S. presidency SC during Aug, you are authorized, if others concur, to take initiative in arranging for consultations. During consultations we wld state that our position against Sov omnibus proposal remains unchanged; that we continue prefer separate consideration each applicant; and that we have objections to certain candidates included in Sov proposal. We wld ask whether USSR prepared alter its views. On assumption USSR position will remain unchanged we wld report to SC that consultations had been held but no agreement reached.

We hope keep consultations confidential or at least hold press discussion to a minimum.

(3) In Sept SC mtg we believe it is important that procedure shld be so organized that SC will deal with new applications (Japan, Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia) before taking up Sov res. Especially in view possibility that Sovs will include Japan in package it is extremely important that SC take separate vote on Japan before voting on Sov res so that it is clear that Sovs bear full responsibility if Japan not admitted. It is assumed that applications of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia wld be taken up at same time. We wld be inclined follow Fr initiative re exact method handling the IC applications.

(4) In SC we shld request that each applicant included in Sov res be voted upon separately, stating that we continue prefer separate consideration each applicant and that we have objections to certain candidates included in Sov proposal. We shld also request separate vote on ROK application.

We will vote for non-Sov sponsored applicants and wld expect vote against Sov sponsored applicants though we do not wish to take final position pending consultations with other members. We wld also expect vote against Sov res unless your consultations show such reluctance of other members to take this position as wld place undue responsibility for defeat of omnibus deal on US. In that case we wld consider abstention with statement our continued opposition. Question whether Japan included or not wld also figure in our decision this point, which will be reserved until after views other dels known.

Subject: British Request for Additional Membership Discussion in London

Participants: Miss Barbara Salt, First Secretary, British Embassy
 Mr. Ward P. Allen, EUR
 Mr. William B. Sale, EUR
 Mr. Paul B. Taylor, UNP

Miss Salt came on instructions from the Foreign Office to sound us out informally on the question of whether we would be receptive to an invitation to Tripartite discussions of the membership problem in London after the middle of September. The Foreign Office message which she read to us spoke of "clearing our minds" on this question. It spoke also of the "undignified spectacle" of the membership discussion involving now some twenty-one applicants. (This seems to include Vietminh and North Korea.) Miss Salt said she thought London had in mind discussions of a longer range, exploratory character that would not be tied up in any way with the Assembly discussion which will take place here in Washington around September 20. She thought London had no idea of trying to commit us to anything at this stage.

In further discussion she said she thought the UK Delegation in Paris<sup>2</sup> had unintentionally "fuzzed up" their position on membership and that, in general, Mr. Eden would like to secure the admission of a number of countries when possible.

After consulting Mr. Hickerson, I informed Miss Salt later that Mr. Hickerson does not think such discussions would be useful. We are sending instructions to New York on this subject; USUN will consult with UKUN, and we will go over our position with Miss Salt here. If the British wish to raise any aspect of the membership question in the September talks here, they may do so, and we will be glad to discuss the problem anytime at New York. I pointed out, in addition, the fact that we do not now have anyone in London who is familiar with the membership problem.

161. Re: Membership. Advance consultations were held with Coulson and Laskey (UK) and Hoppenot and Lacoste (France) at outset Gross covered with Department's views stressing our objective of defeat Soviet omnibus resolution; we are open to consultations of permanent members and that we regard it as extremely important that SC take separate vote on Japan before voting on Soviet res.

(1) There was general agreement on holding a private consultation on Thursday, August 21 to which Chinese representative subsequently agreed.

(2) UK will not accept Soviet omnibus resolution in its present form or whatever states USSR might add to it. If it comes to a vote UK will abstain. France also will oppose on principle Soviet package resolution. If it lacks sufficient votes to carry, France will abstain. However, if it obtained majority France would veto it on the theory that admission of Soviet candidates would add hostile members when North African questions are considered.

(3) After considerable discussion no conclusion was reached on how Japanese application should be handled to bring it to vote before omnibus resolution. UK and French felt that consultations with Malik might indicate strong Soviet objection to Japan so that no danger of including it in omnibus res arising. If it appears USSR opposes Japan, UK and France saw considerable difficulty in using SC majority to waive SC rule 32 to put Japanese application ahead of Soviet draft res tabled on 16 June. They felt procedural situation created by July 9 SC meeting which decided to postpone membership question until September 2 is at least moral commitment to take up Soviet res in proper order. UK wondered whether vote at same meeting on separate Japanese application after Soviet draft res would be disadvantageous.

Discussion also showed UK and French are disinclined to see each application apart from Japan put separately to a vote. They would not want to see SC rule 32 waived to vote Soviet draft res state by state. We pointed out SC procedure 13 September 1949 to vote on separate applications before voting on Soviet omnibus proposal. While there was agreement Japanese and ROK applications as well as associated states if they come up need separate vote, there was no decision on how to take up Japanese case first.

(4) USUN raised question of Germany and Spain. French hoped neither application would be before SC. Associated states raised peculiar problem for French because Laos and Cambodian applications are complete but not Viet Nameese. French realize any initiative they take to hold up two until third is completed is dangerous as suggested political direction of all three associated states by France. It was agreed subject to French instructions that in 5-power consultations we might say that applications of Japanese, Laos and Cambodians are in proper form and there is no reason why applications of associated states should not be considered and acted on by SC.

USUN will broaden consultations to other friendly SC members immediately.

Subject: Japan's Entry into the United Nations

Participants: Ambassador Eikichi Araki, Japanese Embassy
Mr. John M. Allison, Assistant Secretary
Mr. Kenneth T. Young, Director, NA

After discussing another subject today with me, Ambassador Araki raised the above matter. After referring to Minister Kamimura's meeting with Mr. Hickerson on August 15, the Ambassador said that he wished to take up this important problem himself. He emphasized the desirability for the United States not to be put into the position in the Security Council of appearing to be the reason for Japan's failure to gain entry into the United Nations. The Ambassador told me that US-Japanese relations would be gravely injured if such an impression arose among the Japanese. He therefore urged that the United States would take some feasible and concrete step to make fully clear its desire and effort to bring Japan into the United Nations. The Ambassador hoped that our opposition to a "Soviet package deal" would not obscure our support for Japan's entry should the Soviet Government decide to add Japan to its list of admissions. He said that his government was particularly concerned over Soviet tactics in this matter because it might lead to great embarrassment for the United States in Japan.

I assured the Ambassador that we were fully aware of the problems involved and will endeavor to do everything we can to bring Japan into the United Nations. I explained that we were planning our tactics in such a way that United States support and Japan's entry would be clear to the world. I said that our present plan was to bring up Japan's application for entry as a separate matter before voting on any other 164. Re membership. Advance consultations were held today with Tsiang (China). Gross presented US views contained Deptel 77 Aug 15 with particular emphasis on desirability SC voting separately on Japan (and also Associated States membership if French so request) prior to voting on Soviet omnibus res.

Tsiang said his instructions re Soviet omnibus res are unchanged, namely, to oppose it. He added that membership of "Mongolian People's Republic" would be particularly obnoxious to his govt and membership of Soviet satellites in Balkans only a little less so. He intends to make effort to have Soviet omnibus res voted on state by state. As respects giving priority to Japan (and possibly AS) membership over Soviet omnibus res, Tsiang was doubtful. He thought that Rule 32 of rules of procedure would make this very difficult. He agreed as to importance of Japan membership being given every assistance but thought that if vote on Japan membership given priority, USSR might then propose amendment to omnibus res to include Japan and with SC voting down omnibus res it would be difficult for friendly powers to explain to Japan, just as it was difficult for them to explain to Italy last year, why friendly powers had voted against Japan membership. Tsiang preferred to withhold question of Japan membership until after omnibus res voted down and then at next SC meeting to raise it in form of separate res.

As respects meeting on membership tomorrow of five permanent SC members, Tsiang thought it would be wise to limit ourselves to probing Malik for whatever instructions he may have re Japan, AS, ROK, Germany, Spain and other pending membership applications and to avoid giving Malik any clues as to tactics we may follow re these applications.

171. Re Japanese membership. Yamanaka called at his request.

(1) He recalled minister's conversation with Waring 15 August and Ambassador's conversation with Allison 19 August.<sup>1</sup> He reported Japanese understanding US position that while US is not in a position to support Soviet package proposal even with Japanese added, the US would support separate consideration of Japanese application at early date and USUN instructed to consult accordingly.

(2) We confirmed correctness of above and told Yamanaka of Malik's position in 5-power consultation which indicates to us that he will not include Japan in his package resolution and will veto Japanese application if voted separately. We also explained the support of Japanese application by four other permanent SC members.

(3) While his government will want to consider question we asked Yamanaka whether he felt Japan would now want consideration of its application separately which might be pursuant to US draft resolution which would recommend Japan's admission. Subject to confirmation Yamanaka felt this is precisely what his government wants to show public opinion US supports and is not delaying Japanese application.

(4) He asked whether we felt it desirable for Japanese representatives in UN be in contact with other SC members. We emphasized desirability of this tactic as indicating Japanese independence, and interest in UN, mentioning effectiveness of Indonesian and Italian observers in handling membership.

(5) It was agreed Yamanaka would confer with his Ambassador and discuss tactics further.

Latter msg stated under point (1) that "We have general obligation to support Germany for membership in international orgs." This statement shld in fact be somewhat qualified. Ever since Tripartite For Min Mtg at Paris in Nov 1949 it has been Tripartite policy to advance Ger membership in selected internatl orgs. In early stages these were primarily econ in character but some cases of political orgs cld also be cited, such as Council of Eur. However, we undertook no general obligation at that time or since and we have retained complete right of choice and decision as to type of org and time of support.

More recently, there has been inserted in gen conv sgd with Ger a provision in Art 3 para 2 pledging the three powers to support "at appropriate times" applications by the Fed Rep for membership in international orgs contributing to the common aims of the free world. Even this commitment is not a blanket obligation to support Ger membership at any time. In any event it does not become effective as a commitment until contr agmts are ratified which can scarcely be before the beginning of 1953.

We do not therefore wish create impression we are at this time suggesting Germany's admission. However, in light strong inclination many members to favor Sov proposal, one purpose Deptel 77 was call attention other dels fact that Sov proposal leaves out several countries including Germany which deserve consideration as part of membership problem as whole. This is in addition to our basic objections Sov proposal.

Upon being informed of Malik's statements about Japanese membership at mtg of permanent SC members on August 21, Kamimura stated that if USSR does not amend its omnibus res to include Japan, Japan Govt will be quite satisfied with Japanese membership res being voted upon after Soviet omnibus res.

Gross outlined to Kamimura alternative possibilities which have been suggested to get around Soviet veto, particularly LA idea of limiting SC vote on membership recommendation solely to qualifications demanded by Art 4 of charter and suggestion that GA might make provisions for states vetoed by USSR to be granted some form of non-voting membership. SECRET

[WASHINGTON,] August 27, 1952.

Subject: Italian Membership in the UN

Signor Lucioli referred to the fact that the Soviet resolution on membership in the UN is scheduled for discussion by the SC on September 2nd, and asked what our position would be at that meeting. I informed the Charge d'Affaires confidentially that the private meeting which the permanent members of the SC had recently held on the membership problem had confirmed our belief that the Soviets would persist in their determination to block the admission of any of the Western-sponsored applicants unless the UN would accept the Russian package proposal. I told Signor Lucioli that none of the other permanent members of the SC seemed prepared to accept the Russian package and that it was therefore apparent that the membership problem would remain stalemated.

In reply to Signor Lucioli's inquiry concerning the tactics which would be followed at the September 2nd SC meeting, I informed him that we preferred that each of the applicants listed in the Soviet resolution, as well as Japan, the ROK, and if the French so desired, the Indo-Chinese applicants, should be voted on separately in order that our support for applicants which we considered qualified would be a matter of record. It was our understanding, however, that the French and British were not inclined to favor a separate vote on each of the applicants and that they seemed to prefer that the September 2nd SC meeting dispose of the Soviet resolution in the simplest way possible, and that we would not therefore press for a separate vote. I informed Lucioli of our understanding that while the British and French would probably abstain on the resolution as a whole, we would probably vote against it as we had at Paris.

Signor Lucioli said that he of course appreciated our difficulty in accepting the Russian package proposal, particularly at the present time, but that he was very much concerned with respect to the tactics which we propose to follow at the SC meeting. He referred to the fact that another failure to resolve the membership problem would be a keen disappointment to Italian public opinion, particularly in view of the fact that there was evidently no alternative solution which would achieve Italian admission. He expressed the view that the continued stalemate will not only be considered a political defeat for the Italian Government but that it will, both in and out of the Government, result in a decreasing interest in the UN as an effective instrument of international action. Lucioli said that as a minimum he hoped that, while defeating the Soviet resolution, the SC might through a separate vote on each of the applicants listed in the resolution reaffirm the support of all but the Soviet member for Italy's admission. He said he hoped we would be able to persuade the other friendly members of the SC to agree to a separate vote on at least the Italian application and said that he would request Guidotti, the Italian Observer at UN Headquarters, to urge the other members of the Council to support such a vote.

With respect to our negative vote on the Soviet resolution, Lucioli recalled the adverse effect which our position at Paris had had on Italian public opinion; that because we had voted negatively and the British and French had abstained, the Italian nationalist press had placed the blame for the defeat of the Soviet resolution (and the continued exclusion of Italy from membership) primarily on the US.<sup>1</sup> He pointed out with respect to Italian public opinion it would be greatly preferable if we could abstain, with the British and French, rather than vote negatively on this resolution in the SC. He remarked it was our vote which made the headlines in the Italian press—not the explanation of our vote.

Luciulli spoke at some length concerning the importance of the UN membership question in connection with the forthcoming Italian elections, explaining that while membership in the UN was a problem beyond the control of the Italian Government, still failure to obtain admission was looked upon by the Italian public as a foreign policy failure on the part of the DeGasperi Administration; Italian public opinion is not concerned with the complicated political and technical reasons for Italy's exclusion, they are interested only in the fact that it is excluded. He said that the UN question had a bearing on public opinion support of DeGasperi's policy of closest possible cooperation with us and that the question would undoubtedly become an important foreign policy issue in the election campaign. He urged that we continue to do everything possible to demonstrate not only our continued support for Italian membership, but also our determination to make every effort to find an effective solution of the problem despite the Soviet's obstructionism.

I assured Signor Luciulli that I would bring his views to the attention of the interested officers of the Department.

Memorandum by the Acting Deputy Director of the Office of Western European Affairs (Knight) to the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs (Bonbright)

[WASHINGTON,] August 28, 1952.

Subject: Vote in Security Council on Membership, September 2, 1952.

WE is concerned about the possible repercussions in Italy of our present plan for handling the U.N. Membership question in the Security Council on September 2. As we understand it, the plan is that we shall veto the Soviet package resolution (on which the British and French will abstain) and that we will not insist upon separate votes on individual candidates, as we earlier planned to do.

The result of this in Italy will be a general impression that the U.S. was responsible for defeating the only possible formula for bringing about Italy's admission. You will recall that last spring most of the blame for Italy's non-admission was laid at the door of the U.S., not only by our usual enemies, but by many of our friends.

Granted that for many reasons, the U.S. cannot follow a less strong policy vis-à-vis the Soviet resolution than it did in the past UNGA, WE recommends strongly that we nevertheless insist on separate votes on each of the candidates for membership. Thus, in the case of Italy the record would be clear that the U.S. had voted in favor and the USSR had opposed (or at least abstained). The same would be true in regard to other countries in which we are interested, such as the ROK. Such a course would deprive the communists of another club with which to beat the Italian Government.

Another aspect of this has already been pointed out to you, that if the Soviet Union, after submitting its package proposal, were thereupon to vote individually against admission of nations it had a moment before recommended for admission, we might be able to charge it with misuse of the veto power, violation of UN statutes, etc., and perhaps even submit the case to the World Court for an opinion.

Recommendation:

WE recommends that USUN be instructed to insist upon separate votes on all applicants for membership; the voting to be held after the voting on the Soviet resolution.

1. In stating US support for applications of Cambodia and Vietnam, you shld be guided by Deptel 2 of July 1.

2. In supporting application of Laos, you might mention fact that it has also been recognized by over 30 states; that it already enjoys membership in specialized agencies (WHO, UNESCO, FAO, ITU and UPU) and is associate memb of ECAFE; and has demonstrated its desire make constructive contribution to development intern co-operation through participation in intl conferences and accession to intern conventions.

3. If question application North Korean regime is raised, suggest you endeavor have SC take no action on application, recalling that in 1949 SC decided not even consider matter and stressing that North Korean regime, which has committed and persisted in an unlawful act of aggression in defiance of UN, has never been lawful govt; that ROK is only lawful govt in Korea; and that GA has declared that ROK is only such govt. You might also state that North Korean application is merely an unauthenticated E tel. Objective this procedure wld be to emphasize that North Korean application shld not even be considered since it is not a govt.

4. Re Vietminh application, we believe same procedure suggested for handling North Korean application eld be applied on grounds covered Deptel 2 of July 1.

5. If procedure suggested paras 3 and 4 meets strong objection other friendly dels, you are authorized vote against recommendations to admit these applicants.

101. Re Membership.

1. Dept suggests that US statement on Sov membership res be along fol lines :

US cannot accept res of Sov Rep for simultaneous admission 14 candidates because we continue prefer separate consideration each applicant and continue have objections to admission certain candidates listed in res. We believe SC shld examine each applicant on own merits. In our view we shld not pool together group of applicants some of which may have sound and others unsound claims for membership.

USSR, in its res presently before us, links together 14 candidates. It asks us to refrain from judging applicants on merits each case; to endorse all fourteen candidates by single vote whether or not we have objections to the admission of any of them, and, incidentally, to ignore fact there are other applicants besides these 14. We firmly believe that nine of candidates listed—Austria, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Jordan, Libya, Nepal, and Portugal, are fully qualified and shld be admitted. However, we continue to have objections to admission of the remaining five—Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Outer Mongolia, and Rumania. These objections are based upon our opinion that these candidates do not fulfill conditions required by Art 4.

US and overwhelming majority UN Membs have long hoped for admission Austria, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Jordan, Libya, Nepal and Portugal. We deplore Sov policy of refusing to admit these states because of refusal of majority to admit others. It is common knowledge that it is this arbitrary policy of Sov Union which has caused continued exclusion Italy and others. For example, the Italian application has been voted upon by this body on five different occasions, and five times her admission has been blocked by the Soviet Union. For our part, we continue to support strongly the applications of these nine states, which shld be permitted immediately to take their rightful place among us as full Membs of UN.

2. If there is separate consideration of Agenda Item B, which we assume relates to GA Res 506 (VI), we believe that it wld be appropriate under this item for SC to take separate vote on each of the applications included in Sov res and also ROK. You shld, if procedurally feasible, propose this course of action, voting for the non-Sov applicants and against Sov applicants unless you believe our negative votes wld constitute vetoes, in which case you shld consult Dept.

The United States opposition was explained on the grounds: (1) that each applicant should be considered separately in accordance with Article 4 of the UN Charter; (2) that there were five applicants included in the resolution which this Government believed were not qualified; and (3) that the Soviet resolution omitted certain applicants as the Republic of Korea.

Memorandum by the Director of the Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs (Wainhouse) to the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Hickerson)

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] October 3, 1952.

Subject: Japan's Interest in Possible Arrangements for Non-Member Participation in the General Assembly

Ambassador Gross, in August, mentioned to the Japanese observer in New York various alternatives suggested in the past as possible solutions to the membership problem. One of the alternatives he mentioned was the suggestion that states excluded from membership by the Soviet veto might be given the right to participate without vote in the General Assembly. Mr. Kamimura of the Japanese Embassy subsequently informed NA that the Foreign Minister was interested in this idea and asked the Department for answers on several specific questions. NA said that they would try to arrange written answers. (A memorandum of this conversation is attached.)<sup>1</sup>

There was recently a newspaper report from Tokyo which erroneously stated that we had made a specific offer to Japan for "associate membership." We have denied this in response to queries from the press and United Nations delegations. A later newspaper report said that the Foreign Office has apparently decided against "associate membership" but we have had no official word on Japan's views. The Italians still seem dead set against the idea, and Guidotti seems worried that Japan might like it.

We believe we should take no action which might be interpreted as a specific offer to Japan. For this reason, and since this is a matter which affects all United Nations Members and on which we have no final views ourselves, we believe that we should not give Mr. Kamimura written answers to his questions. Mr. Young of NA agrees but he has told me that he would like to meet with Mr. Kamimura informally next week to discuss the matter. If you concur, he will discuss in very general terms the questions raised by Kamimura, using the views presented below as a guide. He would make clear that there are important political as well as legal question involved and that we have not yet formulated a final position, and would seek to ascertain whether Japan would be interested.

Our present views on the points raised by Mr. Kamimura are as follows:

1. Is the procedure to admit Japan as a non-voting participant of the General Assembly permissible under the Charter of the United Nations?

There would be no Charter difficulty in arranging for non-voting participation by Japan in General Assembly deliberations on matters which the Assembly considered of particular concern to Japan. The General Assembly has already established the practice of inviting non-members to participate in its Committees on an ad hoc basis during discussion of cases in which they are directly interested. The question is whether non-Member participation in the General Assembly could be established on a more generalized basis consistent with the Charter.

The final answer to this question could only be determined by the General Assembly and would depend upon the scope of participation contemplated. With these reservations, it is our view that there is nothing in the Charter which would prevent the General Assembly from establishing some form of non-voting participation by Japan in its proceedings on a more generalized basis than has been followed in the past.

2. If so, will Japan be able to sit in the same capacity in the Economic and Social Council, Trusteeship Council and other organs of the United Nations when problems of interest to Japan are discussed?

An invitation to Japan by the General Assembly to participate in some manner in General Assembly proceedings would not enable Japan to sit in the same capacity in the Economic and Social Council, Trusteeship Council and other organs of the United Nations when problems of interest to Japan are discussed. Each organ would have to determine for itself whether to permit Japan or other non-members of the United Nations to participate in deliberations on matters of concern to them.

3. In so participating, will Japan be legally bound by the Charter, resolutions, and other actions of the United Nations?

If Japan should participate as a non-member in General Assembly proceedings, this fact in itself would not legally bind Japan to the Charter, resolutions and other actions of the United Nations unless the Assembly required, as a condition for Japan's participation, the acceptance of the obligations of the Charter and an undertaking to be bound by Assembly resolutions to the same extent as Members. However, Japan has accepted, in the Treaty of Peace, certain Charter obligations and it is already bound by the Charter to the extent that it has accepted these obligations.

Furthermore, it should be noted that article 35(2) would in any event be applicable in a case where any non-member wished to bring to the attention of the Security Council or of the Assembly any dispute to which it is a party. This article requires that the non-member accept in advance, for the purposes of the dispute, the obligations of pacific settlement provided in the present Charter.

4. In this capacity, will Japan be able to submit draft resolutions, documents, etc.?

The answer to this question depends upon the quantum of participation which the Assembly might decide upon.

Only one formal proposal for non-member participation has been presented to the General Assembly. Under this proposal, submitted by El Salvador in 1950, the General Assembly would have requested the Secretary General to invite non-Members whose applications had been vetoed by the USSR to send observers to sessions of the General Assembly and its Committees, including the Interim Committee, "in order to enable them to express their views and furnish information whenever consulted by the delegation of any Member State." The proposal would also have provided for the distribution to Members of documents and letters sent by the non-Members to the Secretary General. The General Assembly, however, did not adopt this proposal. Many members, while fully sympathizing with the motives behind El Salvador's suggestion, wanted more time to consider its implications or had doubt that the non-Members would themselves be interested.

If the General Assembly decided to give non-Members the right to participate in the Assembly, it might grant non-Members the privileges provided in the El Salvadorian proposal. These privileges might possibly be extended to include the right to speak in Committees, and perhaps the Plenary meetings, under the same rules as Members on any matter before the Committee and of making proposals and submitting draft resolutions on matters of substance, which could be put to a vote at the request of a Member. More limited participation might include the right to present views on the substance of each item in the Committees at a time authorized by the Chairman and of having written statements circulated to all Members. We have no definite views on this matter.

5. Will Japan be required to make her financial contribution?

The assessment of a financial contribution against non-Members on the same basis as assessments against Members would be contrary to article 17(2), which provides that the expenses of the organization shall be borne by the Members as apportioned by the General Assembly. Conceivably a financial contribution might be requested of non-Members in the event that arrangements for their participation in the Assembly were established, these contributions to cover the expenses resulting from participation. We have, however, reached no final view on this matter.

6. In general, what are the rights and obligations of Japan in this capacity?

See above.

Northeast Asian Affairs (Young)*<sup>1</sup>

[WASHINGTON, October 7, 1952.]

Subject: Possible Arrangements for Non-Voting Participation by Japan in the General Assembly

Participants: Minister Shinichi Kamimura, Embassy of Japan
Mr. Kenneth T. Young, NA
Mr. Franklin Hawley, NA

Mr. Kamimura called by appointment at 12:30 p. m., October 7, 1952, to discuss further the possibilities of Japan's entry into the UN on a non-member or non-voting basis. (Mr. Young was guided in his remarks by the memorandum from UNP, Mr. Wainhouse to UNA, Mr. Hickerson entitled Japan's Interest in Possible Arrangements for Non-Member Participation in the General Assembly, dated October 3, 1952, and kept his discussions of the subject to very general terms.)

In opening the conversation Mr. Young referred to the six specific questions handed in by Mr. Kamimura on September 2, 1952,<sup>2</sup> and stated that in general the question of Japan's non-voting participation in the UN was difficult because there were legal as well as political factors involved. On the legal side, for example, there were questions of procedure while during the course of its existence the UN had built up a body of traditional practices which were also difficult to assess in terms of consideration of a possible Japanese request for the admission by Japan into the GA on a non-voting basis; resolution of such considerations as had been raised by Mr. Kamimura would be dependent also on the views of all the other Delegations, of experts, and also of the UN Secretariat. As Japan's possible non-member participation had not been discussed outside the Department, all these elements made it difficult to give definitive answers, and the Department was still unable to give any final position. Mr. Young stated that he hoped that the present conversation would be kept confidential and that no publicity would be given to it in Tokyo. Mr. Kamimura stated that he would respect the confidence of the conversation and indicated his regret that the Foreign Office had been indiscreet in allowing a leak with respect to their preliminary conversation, as a result of which Tokyo newspapers had reported that the United States had suggested to Japan the possibilities of Japan's non-member admission into the UN.

With regard to Mr. Kamimura's first question which related to the UN Charter, Mr. Young stated that the answer to this depended in the final analysis on the collective judgment of the members of the GA. He said that the Charter is vague on the point raised and that about all that could be said was that the Charter included no specific prohibition. Various countries had been permitted Ad Hoc participation upon particular issues, on a temporary basis. Much would depend upon how the members felt with respect to the scope of the participation which Japan was considering. Mr. Kamimura asked regarding the procedures under which Japan's non-voting membership application would be introduced. Mr. Young stated his belief that considerable preparation would be necessary and suggested that the Japanese might be able to do much along these lines for themselves.

With respect to Japanese participation in ECOSOC and the Trusteeship Council, Mr. Young said that in his opinion the action of the GA in approving or in disapproving Japan's non-voting participation would not necessarily determine the position of these two Councils and that each Council would probably determine this for itself. Conversation of a general nature ensued with respect to the participation of Japan and the extent or degree of such participation in ECOSOC or the Trusteeship Council and regarding Italy's position on the Trusteeship Council.

Regarding the obligations which Japan might incur through the type of membership contemplated, about all that could be said, Mr. Young stated, was that this would depend to a considerable degree on the answer to the first question, i.e., the scope of participation agreed upon by the GA in its consideration of Japan's non-member admission. Mr. Young went on to say that the Treaty of Peace with Japan (Article 5) provides that Japan accept the obligations of Article 2 of the Charter of the UN while Article 35 of the UN Charter presents other factors which Japan should consider. Going on to mention the fourth Japanese question, Mr. Young stated that the submittal of reports, resolutions, etc., would likewise depend on the answer to the first question and therefore require more study. The nature of the answer to the first question would also apply to Mr. Kamimura's fifth question with regard to the financial contribution which Japan might be asked to make to the UN.

Mr. Kamimura suggested that as it was apparent that considerable information remained to be developed, it might be best for the Japanese Government to clarify its own thinking and determine first for itself the position that Japan wished to take or the function it expected to be able to perform within the scope of a non-voting participation in the UN. Mr. Young observed that it had not yet been established that it would be wise for Japan to request participation as a non-voting member, and that Japan's application for admission might again be expected to come up before the Security Council. Mr. Kamimura stated that it was most doubtful that Russia would allow Japan's entry as a regular member, although some faint possibility still remained under Ambassador Austin's idea of liberalizing present admission procedures. He went on to say that the admission of Japan as a non-voting member might provoke the Soviets to walk out of the UN, while any question of the revision of the Charter would doubtless be vetoed by the USSR in the Security Council.

Mr. Takeuchi called on me at 4 p. m., October 13 and, following a brief discussion on another subject, said that he was leaving for New York that same evening in his new capacity as Japan's permanent representative to the United Nations. He said that by "permanent representative" he did not mean that he would be permanently stationed in New York but that he would be going there from time to time, on a commuting basis from Washington, as the situation required. He wished primarily to know whom among the US Delegation he should contact.<sup>2</sup> I said that the Bureau of Far Eastern Affairs

With reference to conjecture by Mr. Takeuchi as to when the "Korea fight" would start, I observed that in addition to the controversy on the Korean situation, Mr. Takeuchi would also probably find most interesting the Assembly discussions on Tunisia, Morocco and South Africa. I said that I would write to Mr. Key to tell him that Mr. Takeuchi would be getting in touch with him in New York.

*The Japanese Minister of Embassy (Kamimura) to the Director of

WASHINGTON, October 23, 1952.

MY DEAR MR. YOUNG: As you recall, Ambassador Gross remarked in our last meeting with him on August 27<sup>1</sup> to the effect that Japan's application for U.N. membership would be taken up by the General Assembly even if the Security Council failed to make a recommendation.<sup>2</sup>

I would like to know what Ambassador Gross had in mind to go [do?] about this question. Specifically, by what procedure, in what form and approximately at what time does the U.S. Government intend to have the General Assembly take up Japan's application? Is Item No. 19 of the U.N. Agenda intended to cover this question?<sup>3</sup>

Again, during the discussions of admission of new members at the last Security Council meetings, Ambassador Austin stressed the need for liberalization of admission procedure. Ambassador Gross also said that actions would be taken in this connection. What are the actions being contemplated by the U.S. Government in order to realize this liberalization? Will a measure to this effect be submitted to the current session of the General Assembly?

If you would be good enough to take the trouble of finding answers to those questions for me or arrange a meeting for me with someone in charge of those questions, I should be grateful. This does not need to be a hurried affair, but I would appreciate it if you would enlighten me or arrange the meeting at your convenience.

Draft Memorandum by the Director of the Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs (Wainhouse) to the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Hickerson)

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] November 3, 1952.

Subject: Non-Voting Participation by Japan in General Assembly and Other Questions.

We have received a cable from Tokyo, a copy of which is attached,<sup>1</sup> stating that the Japanese Ambassador has been instructed to discuss with the Department a Foreign Office formula for non-voting participation in the UN. The cable says that the Foreign Office has by no means decided that it wants this status but that if there is agreement on the formula (presumably this means if the US agrees), the question of desirability would be referred to the Cabinet. Under the formula, non-voting participants invited by an Assembly resolution would have the right to send to the Assembly the same delegation as Members and to participate without vote in the plenary and committee meetings, including the right to speak, propose draft resolutions, and amendments, to submit and withdraw motions, and to receive documents. Invitees would be those excluded from membership by the Soviet veto.

Our preliminary view is that we could probably accept an arrangement along these general lines if desired by Japan, Italy and other qualified applicants. However, we believe that we should consult with other members before taking a position. Some members might oppose the formula on the grounds that it establishes a status too nearly equal to that of members. Further, there is a danger that some might urge that the formula apply to the Soviet applicants as well. We also believe that Japan itself should take some initiative and consult with Italy, which has thus far had serious reservations, and also with certain UN Members.

We suggest that we take the following line when approached by the Japanese Ambassador:

1. We do not wish to encourage Japan or any other applicant for that matter to accept non-voting participation in the Assembly. We still feel we should exhaust every effort to obtain its admission to the UN as a full member. However, if Japan is definitely interested in arrangements for non-voting participation, we will consult with other members to determine the wisdom and feasibility of such a status.

2. Our preliminary view is that we could probably accept an arrangement for non-voting participation along the lines suggested by Japan if desired by Japan, Italy and others. However, it is possible that some members might have reservations, and we would want to consult carefully with them in New York before giving Japan a definite answer. We are prepared to carry on such consultations if Japan desires. We suggest that the Japanese observer at the UN (Mr. Takeuchi) might wish to consult with Italy and with other UN Members on the matter before Japan makes a definite decision and we hope that he will keep in close touch with our delegation in New York, where the principal negotiations on the membership question are now concentrated.

3. We believe that a voluntary financial contribution to cover the cost of services rendered to non-Members might be an element of any arrangement for non-member participation.

The Japanese Ambassador may also raise two questions which Mr. Kamimura, Japanese Minister asked Mr. Young in a letter of October 23.<sup>2</sup> These questions are :

(1) how and when we intend to have the Assembly take up Japan's application, and (2) what action is being contemplated by us with respect to a liberalization of admission procedures. (This question results from Ambassador Austin's speech in the Security Council on September 18 during which he stressed the need for a liberalization of voting procedures in the Council).

We recommend that you answer these questions as follows :

(1) The U.S. believes it would be desirable for the Assembly to adopt a resolution determining (a) that Japan qualifies under article 4 and should be admitted and (b) requesting the Security Council to take this determination into account in reconsidering Japan's application. Similar resolutions have been adopted in the past on other qualified applicants. We would, of course, be willing to sponsor the resolution or, if Japan prefers, some other member might do so. Such a resolution would be taken up when the Ad Hoc Political Committee discusses the item, "Admission of New Members," probably in December.

(2) Ambassador Austin, on September 18, outlined past efforts of the UN toward a liberalization of the veto in connection with admission procedures and stated that because of the continued use of the veto by the Soviet Union, the pressure of moral power of the peoples of the UN toward liberalization of the procedures of the Council is needed. However, he contemplated no specific proposal. We deplore the attitude of the Soviet Union on this matter, but unfortunately we do not see how the Assembly could improve the situation. There is before the Assembly a Central American draft resolution which would ask the International Court of Justice whether the veto is applicable in the case of membership applications. However, we believe there would be little or no chance that the Court would advise that the veto is not applicable.

WASHINGTON, November 4, 1952.

MY DEAR MR. YOUNG: With reference to my letter of October 23, we have received from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs the attached draft formula for the so-called UN Associate Membership.

This formula is the result of technical study of the problem in question by the Ministry, and is submitted in the hope that it will constitute a basis for further mutual study of the problem. It is an informal, tentative draft without commitment, and it should not by any means prejudice the future decision of the Government of Japan on this problem.

Again, even when an informal mutual agreement is reached along the line of this formula as to the status of "Associate Membership", the Government of Japan wishes to be free to decide its course on this problem one way or the other, by taking into consideration the then prevailing situations abroad and at home, the number of other countries willing to become Associate Members, etc.

The submittal of this technical paper, therefore, should not be construed as reflecting the decision of the Government of Japan to apply for "Associate Membership".

Sincerely yours,

SHINICHI KAMIMURA

[Attachment]

The following is a technical study of the status of the so-called UN Associate membership, and should not be construed as reflecting the decision of the Government of Japan to apply for "Associate membership" at this time.

1. The formal designation of the so-called "Associate Member" shall be Non-Voting Participant.

2. Any nation which, in response to the invitation extended through a resolution of the General Assembly, sends a representative to the General Assembly, shall become a Non-Voting Participant.

3. The nations which will be thus invited by the General Assembly shall be those for whom no recommendation for admission has been made by the Security Council in spite of the fact that its application for admission has received more than seven (7) favorable votes in the Security Council.

4. The rights and obligations of a Non-Voting Participant shall be defined in the General Assembly resolution mentioned in Paragraph 1. At the same time, necessary revisions shall be made to the rules of procedure of the General Assembly.

a. Rights

- (i) Right to send a delegation similar to that of a full member to all the meetings of the General Assembly.

- (ii) Right to participate without vote in the discussions of the Plenary sessions of the General Assembly, of its major committees and other committees of the whole. This right shall include all the rights to participate in discussion but the voting right, such as the right to speak, to submit a draft resolution, an amendment, and to submit and withdraw a motion.
- (iii) Right to receive from the Secretary-General all communications and documents pertaining to the General Assembly.

b. Obligations

- (i) Obligation to present credentials.
- (ii) Obligation to comply with the rules of procedure of the General Assembly.

Memorandum by the Officer in Charge of Japanese Affairs (Hawley) to the Director of the Office of Northeast Asian Affairs (Young)

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] November 4, 1952.

Subject: Japan's Participation in the United Nations

Reference is made to letter of October 23, 1952 from Mr. Kamimura, Japanese Minister to Mr. Young; Memorandum of Conversation, October 25, 1952, subject: Japanese Attitudes on Associate Membership in the United Nations; Tokyo's Telegram 1433, November 1, 1952; and draft Memorandum of November 3, 1952 from Mr. Wainhouse, UNP to Mr. Hickerson, UNA, subject: Non-Voting Participation by Japan in General Assembly and Other Questions.<sup>1</sup>

NA concurs generally with the preliminary views expressed in UNP's memorandum to UNA<sup>2</sup> but believes that a somewhat firmer indication of our position be revealed to the Japanese Ambassador or his representatives stressing the following points:

1. Full membership in the UN is to be preferred to any other form of participation therein. Efforts on our part to obtain for Japan any form of membership other than full membership should not be attempted until such efforts have been exhausted. To explore the possibilities of anything less prior to that time might indicate doubts on our part as to Japan's eligibility for full membership.

2. The possibility of Japan's admission with full membership remains a possibility should we ever decide to accept a package deal on membership. This should be given due consideration before we launch into a new and probably complicated venture of seeking to establish a means whereby Japan, Italy and possibly other friendly nations would be able to enjoy limited participation in the United Nations while Soviet satellites would not.<sup>3</sup>

3. Since Japan does not wish to occupy a unique status in the United Nations and we do not wish to propose or assent in the creation of a unique status for Japan, it is essential that Japan take the initiative in sounding the views of Italy and also those of other member states prior to deciding whether to ask our assistance in obtaining a form of non-voting participation.

4. If, attempts to obtain full membership for her in the current session of the General Assembly appear to be unsuccessful, and Japan requests our assistance in exploring with other friendly nations the possibility of a non-voting status, we should do so. In so doing, however, we must make it certain to Japan that we will proceed on a tentative basis relying heavily on the attitude of the member states consulted and the assurance that Japan sincerely wishes such an arrangement.

5. Finally we believe that it is necessary to establish the proper channel for discussions between Japanese representatives and our own. There appears to have been an overlapping of conversations and approaches between Mr. Takeuchi and the U.S. delegation at New York and between Mr. Kamimura and Mr. Young in Washington. Having determined our position on the question of seeking a non-voting status for Japan, negotiations on the methods of procedure should be handled through the Bureau of United Nations Affairs.

The answers to the questions raised in Mr. Kamimura's letter of October 23, 1952 to Mr. Young appear to have been answered satisfactorily by the UNP memorandum. The answers can be transmitted orally or by letter, whichever appears more expedient.<sup>4</sup>

1. While we do not wish to make an issue of order of agenda items, we hope membership is not moved forward and remains one of last items.

2. Since GA consideration of membership question unlikely result in positive action toward solution at this time, Dept wld be inclined favor postponement of consideration membership until next GA provided postponement has sufficient support. item. Furthermore, Dept believes we shld not take initiative in urging postponement, and in discussion with other dels on agenda order and during debate on this matter you shld not mention possibility of postponement of membership as argument in favor keeping membership toward end of agenda. Dept concerned that discussion now of possibility of postponement might be erroneously interpreted by Japan and other applicants we favor as indication lessening US support their applications.

3. If postponement appears feasible after order of agenda items known, Dept believes before final decision reached we shld discuss matter with Japan in view high importance it attaches to UN membership and since its application has never been considered by GA.

Delga 277. Subject: Membership. Prospect that ad hoc pol comite will not reach membership question before adjournment is now receding, despite possibility that Austrian question wld be transferred over from comite one. We doubt that simple move to postpone membership question to next session would succeed, and do not believe US shld take initiative for such postponement.

Our latest info indicates that Central Americans will introduce res for ICJ reference, and that Belaunde will press for admission of Italy by GA without further proceedings in SC. We anticipate Sovs will introduce their package proposal.

In looking at this situation, we see two principal lines of action which might be followed in order to avoid undesirable action by GA at present session. One such course wld be amendment of Sov package proposal so that GA wld request SC to reconsider all pending applications. UK, however, has indicated recently it wld have considerable difficulty in going along with this approach. We also question whether this approach wld be the most effective in heading off contemporaneous adoption of other resolutions.

The second course of action to which staff has given some consideration is idea of setting up a comite to study membership problem between 7th and 8th sessions. Such a comite might be composed of reps of perhaps nine UN members, and wld be asked to report results of its study to next GA. According to our present thinking such proposal wld have maximum chance of defeating Soviet package and of constituting sole action which GA wld take on membership at 7th session. If we were to move along these lines, we wld question desirability of seeking GA endorsement for application of Japan or for applications of 3 Indochinese states. Our doubts on this score are raised (1) by belief that Japan and Indochinese states secured maximum and most impressive majority in SC and wld fare less well in GA voting, and (2) by inconsistency of proposal for committee study with adoption by GA of other res on membership at this time.

If we were to pursue idea of comite to study membership problem, we would need to begin consultation with selected dels urgently. Request Dept's views on this course of action, which is reflected in fol tentative draft res:

2. Recalling that the GA by res 267 (III recommended to the permanent members of the SC that they seek agreement among themselves on possible decisions by the SC, giving favorable considerations to votes on membership applications, upon which they might forebear to exercise their veto when 7 affirmative votes have already been cast in the council,

[WASHINGTON, November 28, 1952.]

Subject: Developments Relating to the Membership Question

A meeting of the Geographic Bureaus, L and UNA was held on Friday afternoon, November 28 to discuss the latest comments and proposals on the membership question from our Delegation in New York (Delga 277, November 27). Attention was centered on USUN's suggestion concerning a committee to study the membership problem between the 7th and 8th sessions, the committee to be composed of some nine UN members and to report to the next GA. Such a proposal would replace proposals contemplated in existing instructions. A tentative view was reached that we might be able to support an inter-sessional committee, if it has substantial support (Gadel 76, November 29).<sup>2</sup>

I. Background:

A. Present Instructions to the Delegation.

Present instructions contemplate:

(1) our initiating or supporting a GA resolution determining that Japan is qualified for membership and requesting the Security Council to reconsider its application;

(2) our supporting similar resolutions relating to Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, acting in concert with the French; and

(3) our proposing or supporting amendments to the anticipated Soviet proposal for SC reconsideration of the Soviet package which would have the effect of adding the ROK, Japan, Vietnam, Laos and

Cambodia and of making clear that "reconsideration" by the SC of the applications involved would not necessarily involve endorsement or favorable action upon all of them.

B. Procedural situation in the GA.

It is possible that the membership question may be reached by the end of this week. The Ad Hoc Committee is now discussing the Palestine question. Membership is the next item on the agenda. There have, however, been suggestions that items might be transferred from the First Committee and given precedence over membership.

Proposals which may be advanced include: (1) a Central American proposal for an ICJ advisory opinion on the result of votes in the Security Council on recommendations for the admission of new members; (2) a proposal by Peru for the admission of Italy by the GA without further SC action; (3) the Soviet package proposal.

The UK has indicated it would have difficulty in going along with an amendment of the Soviet package proposal along the lines of our current instructions, although the basis for the UK hesitation is not clear.

II. Proposal for Inter-sessional Committee.

In the discussions on Friday two principal problems in connection with the inter-sessional committee proposal were discussed:

A. What would the committee do?

The Committee might recommend in favor of an amendment to the Charter deleting the "peace-loving" qualifications for membership but retaining the statehood qualification; it might favor admission by the GA of states receiving seven affirmative votes in the Security Council or otherwise dropping the veto in the SC, etc. It was generally agreed that the tendency of such a study would probably be in the direction of universality of membership. If the qualification of statehood were retained it might be possible to avoid a recommendation which would include such cases as Outer Mongolia.

According to information from New York, Senator Wiley was inclined to look toward universality at some future time and it was also reported that Dulles' recent book likewise gave support to the universality concept.

B. Composition of the committee.

USUN gave no indication of the probable composition of the committee except that nine UN members might be included. It was generally agreed that the five Big Powers should be included. Selection of the four remaining members would present difficulties assuming that two Latin Americans, an Arab, an Asian, another western European, another Commonwealth, etc., would wish to serve. It might accordingly be necessary to expand the membership of the committee. Keeping in mind the sometimes thin line that separates membership from Chinese representation, the composition of the committee might be of especial importance.

III. Instructions to New York.

Agreement was reached on an instruction to New York along the general following lines:

(a) The Department's tentative position was that, if there was substantial support, it might be able to support, but not initiate, a proposal for an inter-sessional study committee and the Delegation was authorized to discuss the proposal with other Delegations.

(b) At L's request parts of the preamble of the proposed resolution which were obviously directed at Soviet use of the veto on the membership question were to be deleted, leaving the presentation of the background in more generalized terms.

(c) The Delegation was asked to insert in the preamble specific reference to the applications of Japan and the three Associated States with an indication that they should be admitted.

(d) The Delegation was cautioned against including any indication of unqualified support of universality.

(e) The Delegation was queried concerning USUN's views on the composition of the committee, it being assumed that the Big Five would be included.

IV. Conclusions:

(a) The GA will not be able at this session to effect the admission of any candidates. Accordingly, it would seem reasonable within certain limits to permit USUN to handle the situation in New York in whatever way it believes will best promote U.S. interests.

(b) We should recognize that the proposed committee might prove to be a step in the direction of universality of membership. While not opposing creation of the committee if there is substantial support for it, we should take care that its terms of reference are so framed that they do not include any unqualified endorsement of universality.

(c) We should continue to attempt to have some special mention of Japan and the three Associated States made either in the resolution on the committee or separately.

(d) We should watch the composition of the committee and insist upon inclusion of the Big Five.

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, November 29, 1952—2:49 p. m.

Gadel 76. Re Membership: Fol are Dept's views on Delga 277:

1. Dept agrees US shld not take initiative for postponement of membership question.

2. GA in previous years has approved resolutions requesting SC to reconsider all applications without any implication that GA was requesting favorable action on all applicants together. Dept therefore does not understand UK objection to an amendment to Sov proposal so as to request SC reconsider all applications. However, if amendment wld not receive substantial support, and if USSR again submits its proposal, Dept believes US shld vote against it without offering amendment.

3. Our tentative view is that we might be able support a proposal for establishment of Comite to study membership problem if this course has substantial support. However, submission of such a proposal by US might be interpreted by others as an indication that US is ready to alter its position on membership. We therefore believe that if it is decided to go ahead with this proposal, some other del, for example LA Del, shld take initiative in presenting it to GA. With this reservation in mind, you are authorized discuss proposal as possible course of action with other key dels. In these discussions, suggest you point out that this course might head off undesirable proposals and might most easily result in defeat of Sov res.

4. Re tentative draft res, Dept has fol preliminary comments:

a. Believe ideas expressed in paras 1 and 2 might be combined and that preamble shld also note action taken by SC on applications of Japan and three Indo-China states and express determination that they shld be admitted.

b. Suggest para 4 be omitted since point already covered in present para 1.

c. Suggest para 5 be modified to make clear GA not expressing itself in favor of unqualified universality and that para 6 be omitted.

d. Suggest para 7 be made first para of preamble.

e. Believe para 9 shld be revised to request comite take into account the two ICJ opinions as well as proposals made in GA or submitted by members.

f. Re para 10, we assume Big 5 wld be represented on GA Comite and therefore question need of additional Comite being designated by SC. In this connection, Dept wld appreciate Gadel's views on composition of Comite.

NEW YORK, December 1, 1952—10:32 p. m.

PRIORITY

Delga 305. Re Membership. USDel staff members talked today with UK, French and Canadian dels concerning idea of inter-session study of membership problem. British and French indicated initial favorable reaction, said they wld need instructions before making any commitment. Canadian del obviously not enthusiastic, but apparently likely to go along. Opinions expressed by UK and France favored comite of perhaps as many as fifteen UN members. They also expressed view that Comite's terms of reference shld be very broadly stated, without specifying particular aspects of membership problem to which comite shld address itself. UK expressed view that idea of inter-session study wld constitute only a device for postponement and wld not contribute in any way to solution of membership problem.

USDel staff here in New York has prepared revised text of possible draft res on subject, which is given at end this message. Revised text of res is being given to British, French and Canadians as very tentative indication of what US has in mind in suggesting inter-session study on membership. It has been made clear to these other dels that US wld not sponsor res, but wld wish some other delegation or dels to sponsor if this course of action were to be followed through.

In revising text of draft res, we have sought wherever possible to adopt Dept's suggestions. In Gadel 76, Dept suggested combining paras 1 and 2 of first draft of res. After trying such combination we concluded it would be very cumbersome, and as a result have included this material in revised text as paras 2, 3 and 4. Para 4 includes reference to Japan and three Indochinese states by name. Paras on reference to Article 4 of Charter and on universality concept have been merged in para 1 of revised text in the form of restatement of first para of preamble in Assembly Res 506A (VI). We do not understand reasons underlying Dept suggestion that para 6 be omitted. Material in this para has been included in order to increase saleability of study idea to other dels, particularly LA dels. Would appreciate knowing if there are overriding considerations for omission this para. If so, will omit it in next draft. Separate message will follow on suggestions as to composition of special comite.

Verbatim textThe General Assembly

1. Considering that the Charter of the United Nations provides that membership is open to all states not original members of the organization and that this universality is subject only to the conditions that they be peace-loving and accept the obligations contained in the charter and, in the judgment of the organization are able and willing to carry out these obligations,

2. Recalling that the Assembly has expressed to the Security Council the Assembly's support of the applications for membership of ten states (Austria, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Jordan, Libya, Nepal, Portugal, Republic of Korea),

3. Recalling that the Assembly in Res 267 (III) has recommended to the permanent members of the Security Council that they seek agreement among themselves on possible decisions by the SC, giving favorable consideration to votes on membership applications, upon which they might forbear to exercise their veto when seven affirmative votes have already been cast in the Council,

4. Recalling that the Security Council has not recommended favorably the applications of fourteen states (Austria, Cambodia, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Laos, Libya, Nepal, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Vietnam) in spite of the fact that their applications have all received seven or more affirmative votes, and in spite of the favorable opinion expressed by a majority of the General Assembly on ten of these states,

5. Recalling that the International Court of Justice, as the principal judicial organ of the United Nations, has twice, at the request of the General Assembly, rendered advisory opinions of the question of membership,

6. Noting the suggestions which have been made by members of the General Assembly, in draft resolutions and in debate, for differing approaches intended to arrive at the admission to membership in the United Nations of those states which are applicants and which are supported by a substantial majority of the Assembly and the Security Council,

7. Establishes a special comite for United Nations membership composed of the reps of [about twelve member states including the permanent members of the Security Council]<sup>1</sup>;

8. Requests the special comite on United Nations membership to consider and study the question of the admission of states to membership in the United Nations in the light of the debates in the General Assembly, taking due account of the advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice and taking into consideration all proposals which have been made in the General Assembly or which may be submitted by members of the United Nations to the special committee;

9. Requests the special comite to report its conclusions to the eighth regular session of the General Assembly and to submit its report to the Secretary-General for distribution to the members of the United Nations two months before the commencement of the eighth regular session; and

Gadel 79. Re Membership:

1. Subject to determination of final position re establishment of special comite and subject to reservation noted para 2 below, draft res contained Delga 305 generally satisfactory. Dept agrees para 6 of draft shld be retained, but suggests that the phrase "a solution to the membership problem" be substituted for everything after "to arrive at". Also, believe that in para 4 of draft, phrase "and in spite of the favorable opinion expressed by a majority of the General Assembly on ten of these states" shld be omitted since it leaves implication GA discriminating against Japan and three Indo-China states. Further, as long as res in para 2 includes reference to Assembly support for ten states, believe some way shld be found to include GA conclusion that Japan and Indo-China States shld be admitted. Suggest for GADel's consideration insertion of word "qualified" after word "fourteen" in para 4.

2. If it is decided move ahead with res for establishment of comite, Dept wld favor preamble containing record of GA action along lines Delga 305 with modifications suggested above. However, we see some risk that parts of preamble might be watered down in GA, particularly by states favoring admission all applicants, on grounds terms of reference of comite wld be prejudiced by certain sections. Dept wld appreciate GADel's estimate on extent of this risk before determining position on draft res.

Gadel 82. Re Membership. In conv with Hickerson today, Italian Amb officially informed us Italy is not interested in any type of "interim membership". Amb stated Italy had consulted large number UN members this matter, and response recd was that Italy shld not seek any UN status less than full membership. Italian Govt considers acceptance provisional or associate membership wld be humiliating and wld not fulfill pledges made in Italian Peace Treaty and Potsdam Declaration re membership for Italy.

Hickerson mentioned to Amb possibility of GA creating special intersessional comite to study membership problem and report back either to GA session next spring (i.e. prior to May 1953 elections) or to GA session in fall 1953. Amb expressed approval idea of such comite since it wld indicate continued UN concern with problem and UN desire to find solution.

Delga 320. Re Membership. Working group this subj has been giving consideration to possible composition of special comite to study membership, with view to making suggestions to Central American dels. These dels apparently now wish to proceed fairly rapidly with res on membership study, and contemplate possibility of naming special comite in draft res to be introduced by them. Our tentative thinking is that slate might consist of China, France, USSR, UK, US, Brazil, El Salvador, Peru, Australia, Pakistan, Lebanon, and Norway. In talking about LA representation on special comite, Central Americans have suggested Cuba rather than Brazil.<sup>1</sup>

In response to your request in Gadel 79, we have considered question of whether during comite debate there is likelihood of preamble in

Estimate of working group is that, while there is always some risk of such a development in regard to a res such as the contemplated res on membership, the risk appears small; in fact likelihood, if anything, wld be for addition of further paras to preamble, perhaps by some of Latin Americans.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Northeast Asian Affairs (Young)<sup>1</sup>

[WASHINGTON, December 4, 1952.]

Subject: Japan's Application for Membership in UN

Participants: Mr. Shinichi Kamimura, Minister, Japanese Embassy
 Mr. Kenneth T. Young, NA
 Mr. Franklin Hawley, NA
 Miss Ruth Bacon, FE
 Mr. Paul W. Jones, UNP

Mr. Kamimura called on Mr. Young at the Department at 3:15 p. m., December 4, 1952, by appointment made at the former's request, to discuss the present status of Japan's application for the membership of Japan in the United Nations.

Associate Membership

Mr. Kamimura stated that he did not come to discuss the possibilities of Japan's associate or non-voting membership which he realized was a complicated question which would require considerable study by the Department but to discuss Japan's application for full membership. Mr. Young stated that he felt that he should, for the record, say that the question of associate membership was not considered to be an outstanding or pending matter, and should not be so interpreted so long as Japan's full membership was still under active consideration before the UN. With respect to information that Italy had now rejected the idea of associate membership, Mr. Kamimura observed that Japan was nevertheless still interested in exploring that possibility.

Clarification of August 27 meeting

Mr. Young noted that Mr. Ushiroku had recently seen Ambassador Key in New York to ask what plans the US Delegation had in mind for action on Japan's membership during the present assembly, such as getting the GA to affirm Japan's qualifications. As Mr. Ushiroku had referred in this connection to Mr. Kamimura's conversation with Ambassador Gross on August 27, 1952. Mr. Young said that, as a participant in that talk, he thought it would be appropriate to clarify the nature of the August 27 meeting and to state that he had no recollection of the understanding that the US would sponsor a resolution in the GA affirming Japan's qualifications for membership. He recalled that Ambassador Gross' main purpose was to discuss the prospective SC action on the membership of Japan, and that conversation beyond that question dealt, as a side issue, on speculation by Ambassador Gross as to what additional measures or steps might be taken if Japan's membership was defeated in the SC, including mention of the possibility, through GA action, of an associate or non-voting membership for Japan; he could recall nothing in the way of a commitment by Ambassador Gross for US sponsorship of a GA resolution in favor of Japan's admission. While not making an issue of this point, Mr. Kamimura observed that he clearly remembered that Ambassador Gross had said that if the Japanese application was turned down by the SC, then the US would look to the GA in order to promote probable public opinion for Japan's admission to the UN. While he said that he could not say whether this was a promise by the US, Japan had interpreted this as Ambassador Gross' promise.

Japanese Desire for a GA Resolution

Mr. Kamimura referred to the action taken by the Security Council in supporting Japan's application for membership by a 10 to 1 vote and said that on that basis the Japanese Government was desirous of knowing if the US was willing to sponsor a resolution in the GA similar to Resolution 296 of 1949. He said that the Japanese Government attached great importance to affirmation by the GA of Japan's qualifications for membership. Mr. Young stated that US intentions had not changed, although they did not necessarily run in the direction of a series of individual resolutions similar to those of 1949.

GA Support for Japan

Mr. Kamimura said that Mr. Takeuchi, while going to New York frequently for one day visits, was unable to devote very much time to the UN aspects of his responsibilities although he thought nevertheless that the Japanese Delegation had got off to a good start. He added that if Japan's membership came up before the GA, he felt sure that it would receive majority support. The Philippines, for example, would not oppose and at the worst would do no more than abstain; there was every prospect that Indonesia would support Japan. He explained that since August 1952 the Japanese had contacted every country in the UN except those in the Soviet bloc, and that Japan was assured of a strong majority in her favor if this question came to a vote. Mr.

Kamimura added that, speaking personally and informally, the country most favorably disposed and most likely to sponsor such a GA resolution would be Nationalist China, which might pose a very delicate question. Mr. Young agreed that, speaking with equal informality, such support from China would indeed pose a delicate and difficult question.

Present Status of Membership Question

With regard to the present status of Japan's application, Mr. Jones explained that the general question of membership, which included that of Japan, was the 7th of 8 items on the agenda of the Ad Hoc Political Committee which was then considering item number 5; it appeared likely that membership would come up for consideration within the next one or two weeks. Mr. Kamimura indicated the hope of the Japanese Government that the committee would consider favorably a resolution for Japan's membership plus, as Senator Austin had recommended, liberalization of entry requirements. Mr. Jones said that Senator Austin had no specific measure or plan in mind and that his statements before the Security Council represented general views on the necessity for liberalization of present procedures. He added that another proposal was a joint resolution by five Central American states under which the General Assembly would ask the International Court of Justice whether the veto of one Security Council member could bar the entry of a state which had the support of seven Security Council members. Mr. Jones said that questions such as this, as well as Japan's membership, might be removed from consideration by the Ad Hoc Political Committee and referred instead to an inter-sessional committee which might be set up to study the entire membership question and to report to the 8th Session.

Regarding the possibility of an inter-sessional committee, Mr. Kamimura appeared to be concerned over its purpose, its probable effect on General Assembly action regarding Japan's membership, and the United States attitude towards such a committee. Mr. Jones explained that the proposals for such a committee had just come up recently and that it was still under study. He emphasized the point that the United States has taken no final position on this committee. However, Mr. Jones, pointed out to Mr. Kamimura the effect which the establishment of such a committee would have on the question of Japan's membership. If the prevailing sentiment in the General Assembly is to set up such a committee, then a resolution endorsing Japan's qualifications for membership in the United Nations would not be voted on by the General Assembly, but instead would probably be referred to the inter-sessional committee. Mr. Young and Mr. Jones both pointed out that in such an event, the whole purpose of introducing a single resolution on Japan would be lost.

Mr. Young assured Mr. Kamimura that the United States is fully aware of the desirability of trying to obtain at this session of the General Assembly some form of endorsement for Japan's membership in the United Nations. Accordingly, the United States has under consideration various ways of accomplishing this objective. Mr. Young indicated in general terms that the United States would not favor a series of separate resolutions similar to the action of the General Assembly in 1949, but was considering the possibility of a separate resolution on Japan or some form of composite resolution. At the very least, he indicated, the preamble of the motion setting up the special inter-sessional committee would make note of the Security Council action on Japan's application, which would constitute endorsement by the General Assembly of Japan's application. It was not entirely clear whether or not Mr. Kamimura fully understood our explanations regarding the inter-sessional committee or our intentions, for he again stated the strong desire of his government to have a separate resolution introduced in the General Assembly on Japan's membership, and, by implication, to have the United States sponsor it. In concluding discussion on this point, Mr. Young attempted to reassure Mr. Kamimura that the Department of State for its part strongly hopes that a majority of the General Assembly would agree to some action this session which would serve as endorsement for Japan's membership.

Further Action in the Security Council

In reply to the question by Mr. Young as to what would be Japan's views with regard to a second Security Council action on its application, Mr. Kamimura replied that this would require study, but that what Japan does want is action by the General Assembly, as Japan's status is still ambiguous. He added that if it were known in Tokyo that no action was to be taken in this session and that Japan's membership would be submerged for another year or two, this would be difficult for his government to explain to the Japanese people and that Tokyo would probably instruct him to press for action at the present session of the General Assembly.

Following Mr. Kamimura's departure, it was agreed that the United States delegation in New York should be informed by telegram of the main points of the conversation and requested to keep in contact with Mr. Ushiroku pending Mr. Takeuchi's visit to New York next week, and that the gist of the information given Mr. Kamimura should be summarized for him in a letter from Mr. Young.

Gadel 87. Min Kamimura called on Dept today and referring to Aug 27 conversation with Gross<sup>2</sup> asked whether US prepared submit res on Japan similar to 1949 res on 9 applicants. He stressed desirability from standpoint public opinion in Japan of GA res determining Japan qualified for membership.

Dept informed Kamimura we were of course, considering action along these lines. However we mentioned possibility that GA might appoint special comite to study membership question and that if this course decided upon GA might wish take no other action. Also mentioned that if GA established special comite it might be undesirable submit separate res on Japan since GA might simply refer res to special comite for consideration. However, we pointed out our strong hope res establishing comite wld include reference to Japan. We also explained we had not taken final position re special comite.

Dept suggests GADel discuss matter with Jap observer NY. Since Kamimura may not have clearly understood reason why separate res on Japan might be difficult if GA establishes special comite, request you explain this problem and seek obtain Jap reaction. Important you stress our strong desire do everything for Japan within framework general membership problem.

Re Gadel 79, in view Japan concern re separate res on its qualifications for membership, Dept believes it is all the more important that if res establishing special comite constitutes sole GA action, this res include some reference to Japan's qualifications.

Re so-called "understanding" referred to in Dec 2 ltr from Ushiroku to Amb Key Dept officer informed Kamimura that there was no understanding as such in US view but only a gen discussion of various possible actions which GA might take on membership question in face Sov veto Jap's application. However, Kamimura insisted he had strong impression conversation of Aug 27 indicated US Govt wld propose specific resolution in 7th Session GA on Jap's application similar to 1949 res. In any event he stated that Jap Govt strongly desires such res this session. He indicated his govt has sounded out and recd favorable response from majority GA members on some GA action re Jap UN membership.

Re associate membership Kamimura indicated his Govt does not wish press matter at this time but has not taken final decision for or against proposal for future consideration.

Gadel 90. Re: Membership. Supplementing gadel 87, Dept has been giving further consideration to problem of meeting Japan's strong desire for GA expression of opinion that Japan is qualified for UN membership. We believe it is important that we do what we can for Japan on this score.

We see two possible alternative courses of action. First, GA cld, as we had originally planned, adopt separate res expressing opinion that Japan meets qualifications for membership and shld be admitted. In our view Japan wld prefer this alternative, and even though it might complicate membership debate, we believe we shld reconsider it in view representations of Japan on matter. Second, GA res establishing Special Comite cld include separate para in preamble containing expression of opinion on Japan. If one of these alternatives decided upon for Japan, we anticipate similar action wld be taken by GA on three Indo-China States.

Dept requests you discuss these two alternatives with representative dels from various areas, pointing out importance Japan attaches to matter and seeking obtain their reactions.

Believe you shld hold up conversations with Jap observer on GA action on membership until after these reactions known.

Subject: Membership Question in the UN

USUN has been working actively on the suggestion for an inter-sessional study group on membership. It now appears that a group of Central American states will probably table a resolution embodying this idea today.

Last week the Japanese discussed with Ken Young the question of obtaining from the GA a statement that Japan in the GA's view has met the Charter requirements and is qualified for UN membership.

Resolutions of this type were passed in 1949 for some nine candidates which had been vetoed in the Security Council. The Japanese indicated that Japan was counting on similar action by this GA for Japan and attached very considerable importance to such action.

Following this conversation the Department informed New York (Gadel 90 December 5) of the Japanese position and suggested that two alternative courses of action were open: (1) the adoption of a separate resolution for Japan or (2) incorporation in the preamble of the inter-sessional resolution of some endorsement of Japan's candidacy; that as between the two, from the Japanese point of view, the first alternative was preferable; that if either of these alternatives were decided upon for Japan similar action would probably be taken by the GA for the three Indochinese states. USUN was requested to discuss these alternatives with representative delegations from various areas.

This morning's Daily Classified Summary (Delga 338 December 8)<sup>1</sup> reports that the US has discussed this question with the French, the British and the Australians. The British and Australians favor separate resolutions while the French prefer reference in the preamble because of a belief that the voting on the Indochinese resolutions "would not turn out well" as a result of the current Tunisian debates.

Comment: This situation has been discussed with PSA (Bob Hoey)<sup>2</sup> and UNP. There was general agreement that Japan's resolution would probably receive a better vote than the resolutions for the Indochinese states but that the latter resolutions would probably pass although with a considerable number of abstentions. So far as the voting situation was concerned there would be little to be gained from treating the question in the preamble as distinguished from separate resolutions because a roll call vote would in all probability be demanded on the preamble paragraph in question. In fact from the FE point of view if Japan and the three Indochinese states were treated together in the preamble, Japan's situation would probably suffer in the voting from association with the Indochinese states. It was felt that our best course would probably be—depending of course on results of wider consultations in New York—to go ahead with a separate resolution for Japan leaving it up to the French to handle the Indochinese cases as they thought best. At some appropriate time we should explain to the Indochinese states our own position in the matter.

Northeast Asian Affairs (Young)*

[WASHINGTON,] December 8, 1952.

Subject: Japanese Views on Action in the General Assembly Regarding Japan's Eligibility for United Nations Membership.

Participants: Mr. Shinichi Kamimura, Minister, Japanese Embassy
Mr. Kenneth T. Young, Jr., Director, Office of Northeast Asian Affairs
Mr. Richard Herndon, Office of Northeast Asian Affairs

Mr. Kamimura called on me today at his request to tell me that he had informed his Government of the conversation with me on December 5[4?] <sup>1</sup> regarding the same subject, and that the Japanese Foreign Office had immediately replied that it was quite disappointed with what appeared to it to be a change in the United States intention to submit during the current session of the General Assembly a resolution regarding Japan's eligibility for United Nations membership. Accordingly, the Japanese Foreign Office wished to know the views of the Department of State as to whether or not the Japanese Government should sound out some other government or governments as sponsor for such a resolution. Mr. Kamimura indicated that, since he was not entirely sure that he had accurately reported or fully understood the conversation of December 5[4?] with me and other members of the Department, he had come in today to seek confirmation or clarification of that conversation.

I expressed regret that the conversation on December 5[4?] had covered several complicated and technical aspects of this problem and that it had not left him with a clear understanding of the United States position. Therefore I reiterated briefly that the United States continued to believe that it would be desirable for this session of the General Assembly to express the opinion by a large majority vote that Japan possessed all the necessary qualifications for membership in the United Nations. I again pointed out that there were at least two ways of accomplishing such an expression of opinion—either by means of a single resolution on Japan or by inclusion of an affirmation of Japan's eligibility in whatever resolution on membership is developed in the Ad Hoc Political Committee. I assured Mr. Kamimura several times that the United States did not change its own intentions to explore or develop this matter within the General Assembly.

At the same time, I briefly pointed out to Mr. Kamimura that our two governments must always keep in mind the realities of a parliamentary situation in the General Assembly involving some 60 governments, particularly the 55 delegations outside the Soviet bloc. I suggested that the introduction of Japanese eligibility faced three risks on the floor of the committees: (1) a large or sufficient majority might not be found to support the resolution because many delegations might prefer for technical reasons not to raise such an issue at this session; (2) the Soviet delegation might possibly retaliate by introducing a package resolution, omitting Japan, which might bring about a complicated parliamentary relationship between the resolution on Japan and such a package resolution; and (3) such Soviet tactics in any event would complicate the whole membership question which apparently many governments wish to avoid at this time. I carefully explained that I was bringing up such risks merely to point them out and not to suggest that there was any weakening in the intentions of the Department of State with respect to exploring the possibilities of a resolution regarding Japan. I told Mr. Kamimura that the United States delegation in New York already has begun to consult some of the other delegations in hopes that they will not find objections to action in this session regarding Japan.

I then suggested to Mr. Kamimura that in my view it would be inadvisable and premature at this time for Japan to approach another government with a view to its sponsoring the kind of resolution that the government of Japan desires. I explained that consideration of the membership question was just getting under way in the Ad Hoc Political Committee and that the United States delegation was still not in a position to know or estimate clearly the attitudes of a majority of the delegations regarding the question of a resolution on Japan. Therefore I suggested that the Japanese observer in New York maintain close contact with the United States delegation during this exploratory period. Mr. Kamimura indicated his agreement with my statements with regard to the above query of the Foreign Office.

Finally, I handed Mr. Kamimura a letter from me under today's date (attached is a copy of the letter) summarizing our conversation of December 5[4?]. After reading it, he stated that it was a clear expression of the position I had outlined and that he felt it would be a reassuring response to the telegram from the Foreign Office.

[WASHINGTON,] December 8, 1952.

DEAR MR. KAMIMURA: I have the honor to refer to your letters of October 23 and November 4, 1952, and also to our conversation on December 5 [4?], regarding several aspects of Japan's application for membership in the United Nations.

With respect to your letter of October 23 and our conversation of December 5 [4?], I wish to make the following comments:

1. We are, of course, most anxious to bring about Japan's membership in the United Nations. We have been studying various ways in which the Assembly might express a favorable opinion on Japan's qualifications. We are taking full cognizance of the statements which you made to me in our conversation of December 5 [4?] to the effect that your Government strongly desires a separate resolution on Japan to be taken up by this session of the General Assembly and passed by a large majority.

2. In our conversation of December 5 [4?], my colleagues and I mentioned that there may be a move in the Ad Hoc Political Committee to recommend the establishment of a special inter-sessional committee to study the entire question of membership in the United Nations between the Seventh and Eighth sessions of the General Assembly. On the assumption that the prevailing sentiment favors such an inter-sessional committee, we pointed out in our conversation that its establishment might complicate the introduction of any separate resolution on Japan's qualifications and that there might be some risk that such a resolution would neither be adopted nor rejected by the General Assembly but merely referred to the inter-sessional committee for study and consideration. However, I wish to assure you that our delegation in New York has been and is now exploring with other members the possibility of a separate resolution on Japan's qualifications or, alternatively, the possibility of the inclusion of a paragraph on Japan's qualifications in the preamble of a resolution establishing an inter-sessional committee.

Regarding the question of non-voting participation for Japan in the General Assembly raised in your letter of November 4, 1952, I wish to confirm hereby the oral, informal understanding in our conversation of December 5 [4?], 1952, that this will remain a tentative matter for future study by both governments. We do not propose to take any steps at this session of the General Assembly on this matter, but will continue to consider the draft formula which you submitted with your letter of November 4, 1952, as an "informal, tentative draft".<sup>3</sup>

I wish again to assure you that the United States delegation in New York is carefully considering the whole problem of Japan's membership in the United Nations and is in constant touch with the Department. May I suggest that the Japanese observer in New York keep in close contact with the United States delegation on the developments of the membership question. I would appreciate it if you would regard this letter as confidential.

Sincerely yours,

KENNETH T. YOUNG, JR.

Minutes of Seventeenth Meeting of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly, New York, December 8, 1952

[Here follows list of persons present (42). All representatives on the Delegation were present (Austin, Mrs. Roosevelt, Senator Wiley, Gross, Jessup, Cohen, Sprague, Mrs. Sampson, and Lubin). Ambassador Austin presided.]

Ambassador Austin asked to say a word before considering the business of the Delegation. He noted that the Secretary had found it inconvenient to see all the members of the Delegation and talk with them about the experiences of this Assembly. The Secretary also would have liked to thank the Delegation for its collaboration with him. It therefore fell to Ambassador Austin to thank the Delegation on behalf of the Secretary. Ambassador Austin spoke of his own personal devotion to the Secretary. During his years of experience as Chief of the United States Mission, Ambassador Austin could truthfully say that as far as relations with the Department of State were concerned no force had ever been imposed on the Mission in its operations. There had always been a careful consideration of the views of each, even when these views conflicted. The Mission and the Department never "got into a miff" over such differences. In such a case, review by the Department and the Mission of their differences had always brought about agreement—with an understanding heart. Ambassador Austin said that he would like to have the records preserve this glorious memory forever. He spoke of the new experiment in the conduct of America's foreign relations by the establishment of a Mission to the United Nations and of the great importance of its task of furthering world peace. He was gratified to commemorate the great service of Dean Acheson as a great Secretary of State.

Ambassador Austin then called on Mr. Taylor who noted that the Ad Hoc Political Committee would be holding an evening session that day in addition to a morning one, at which time it was expected that the membership item would arise. Senator Wiley would be handling this item for the United States Delegation.

I. Membership Question (US/A/AC.61/8).

Mr. Meeker began the presentation of this item by recalling that the Assembly had admitted no new Members in over two years. Indonesia's admission in 1950 was the last one. Hence, at the present there were nineteen pending applications. Five of these were Soviet-sponsored candidates, all of whose conduct in the opinion of the United States fell far short of the accepted standards of international behavior. Of the fourteen remaining applicants, nine had been pending for a long while, some as much as six years. Ten of the fourteen had been endorsed by the Assembly as qualified for admission. In 1952 the other four had made application. These were Japan and the three associated states of Indo-China. The Assembly had not up to that time taken any action with regard to these four. The Security Council had, during the late summer of 1952, considered these new applications, but in separate votes their admission had been vetoed by the Soviet Union.

Beyond endorsing the ten States, the General Assembly had attempted certain other steps. It had asked the International Court of Justice for two advisory opinions. In the first of these, the question had been whether the affirmative vote of a member of the Security Council could be conditioned upon considerations other than those set forth in Article 4 of the Charter. The answer to this had been in the negative. The second question put to the International Court had been whether a favorable recommendation of the Security Council was necessary before the Assembly could act to admit new members. The answer to this had been in the affirmative.

The Assembly had also passed a resolution concerning the veto which had asked the Security Council members, and especially the permanent members, to discuss the veto and attempt to restrict its use. The Interim Committee had drawn up a list of cases in which it was recommended that the veto not be used. One of these was the question of membership. The Assembly had appealed to the Security Council to reconsider pending applications. Finally, during the Sixth Session the Assembly had asked the permanent members of the Security Council to consult on this matter. No positive results had been achieved from any of these various steps.

The item on membership was again before the Assembly. Mr. Meeker indicated that various types of proposals had been made in the past and could be expected again. The first of these was the Belaunde plan. By this plan the Assembly would consider that the Security Council had in fact made recommendations concerning certain applicants, although vetoes had been cast against separate resolutions concerning these applications. The plan noted that these applicants had been included in the package proposal of the Soviet Union and had received the affirmative vote of the Soviet Union in that context. These same applicants had also received at least seven other affirmative votes in other resolutions. Therefore, this plan would have the Assembly declare that the Security Council had made favorable recommendations concerning these applicants and would admit them to membership.

The second type of proposal would be a resolution stating that the veto was inapplicable to the question of membership and that wherever seven votes had been obtained in favor of a candidate he would be admitted by the General Assembly.

A third type of proposal would be to go again to the International Court of Justice for an advisory opinion on the question of whether the veto applied to the present situation in the Council.

It was expected that the U.S.S.R. would again put forward a proposal for the admission en bloc of fourteen of the present applicants, excluding only Japan, the Republic of Korea, and the three Associated States. A similar proposal at the last session of the Assembly had obtained a simple majority vote in Committee. It had failed of adoption in the Plenary only because that body had decided that a two-thirds majority was necessary.

Various schemes for some type of associate membership had been put forward in the past. Interest in such an idea had dwindled, however, and no one was pressing for this at the moment.

Since it appeared that the Assembly might adopt one of the less desirable plans outlined above, such as the Belaunde plan or the Soviet package deal, the Delegation working group recommended that it would be wise to put this matter over for another year by the device of referring it to a study group. The Department had approved this recommendation and had asked that consultation be undertaken. It had become apparent that there would be fairly wide acceptance of such a scheme, although enthusiasm for it was lacking. Five Central American States had agreed to sponsor this idea.

Mr. Meeker reported that one problem remained: What should the General Assembly do, if anything, with regard to endorsing the four new applications on which no action had been taken? A separate resolution endorsing these applications could be submitted. Alternatively, if the resolution proposing a study group was to be the single action taken by the Assembly on this question, resolutions concerning the four new applicants could be sent to the study group. Finally, endorsement of these applications might be included in the study group resolution itself.

In concluding his presentation on this matter, Mr. Meeker mentioned the past policy of the Department in this field. It had long opposed the use of the veto regarding membership applications and even before the Vandenberg resolution this policy had been stated. The concept of universality was favored as soon as States were capable of the responsibilities of membership. The argument had been put forward that universality should be the immediate goal regardless of the capabilities of individual applicants in view of the facts that the Soviets were already Members of the Organization and the Mongolian People's Republic was as much of a state as the Ukraine or Byelorussia. Bringing these questionable applicants in might even operate to improve them. The Department, however, had been opposed to admitting all nineteen present applicants, having felt that it would not be acceptable to the American public.

Senator Wiley said that he had little to add to Mr. Meeker's presentation. He thought it was wise to have this matter in effect postponed by the device of a study group so that the new administration could bear the responsibility for considering whether the UN should have a few more "rotten apples" or whether they should be kept out. He understood the burden of the arguments for admitting such States, but pointed out that the seven-year history of the UN indicated little prospects of success for such a course. He referred to a conversation he had had with a man who had just returned from Korea. This individual felt that Korea was merely one point on the perimeter of Communism's war upon the rest of the world and merely part of its scheme to conquer the world.

Senator Wiley said that he recognized that his arguments might sound to some as anti-UN sentiment. However, he was in favor of the UN and felt that it should be operated on a sound basis. He did not want to see more Vishinskys and satellites brought in. As Secretary General Lie had said, the support of United States public opinion was necessary for the success of the United Nations and some things had to be done to obtain that support. If five or six more followers of the Communist line were admitted, he wondered what would happen to public opinion in the United States. He also cautioned that it would be even more difficult for the Congress to vote money for the United Nations in such an event.

Senator Wiley was happy to follow through upon the recommendation of the staff for a study group. He apologized for expressing himself so strongly, but explained that "living in the grass roots" caused him to feel sincerely and deeply on this matter.

Ambassador Austin judged that the Delegation favored the contents of the draft resolution under discussion which called for a study group. He asked if anyone cared to speak against it. Ambassador Gross said that he was not necessarily against the resolution, but inquired into the reasoning which created a study group of the Assembly and not of the Security Council. Ambassador Austin answered that this was now a General Assembly problem and that a study group composed of those Members indicated in the draft resolution could do no harm. Mrs. Roosevelt suggested that the Central Americans who were putting forward this draft resolution might feel that such a committee was less tied to the stresses and strains of the Security Council.

Mr. Sanders pointed out that this proposal was intended as a means of dealing with the political realities of this Assembly, and that there was a real threat that "gimmicks" such as the Belaunde plan might be adopted. Furthermore, some States not on the Security Council had shown a keen interest in the whole problem of membership and could not be kept off the study group. However, the composition was such, he felt, that the study group as a whole would look at the problem objectively.

Mr. Ross thought that the question of whether or not the idea of the group was acceptable would depend entirely on its composition. He personally had serious doubts that some of the members would be objective.

Ambassador Cohen agreed with the need for examining the composition of the study group. He saw a psychological advantage in establishing this as a General Assembly committee since the Assembly was in a sense engaged in a struggle with the Security Council. In that struggle, despite our membership on the Council, the hopes of the United States rested with the Assembly. He agreed that the new administration should have a chance to consider this problem. He hoped it would be borne in mind that there were more applicants for membership who were on our side than those against us. He also mentioned that it was quite a wound in the minds of our friends who had been unsuccessful in their applications to see the Soviets apparently willing to connive to admit new members while the United States was not so willing. It might one day even be to the advantage of the United States to have the Soviet-sponsored candidates in the Organization. He recalled that the Yugoslavs in the early days had been most slavish to the Soviets and yet had broken away. He felt that the fact that the Yugoslavs were Members of the United Nations might well have assisted them in reaching the decision to break away. He did not want to provoke a discussion of these matters, but merely to raise questions for further consideration.

On the question of the composition of the study group, Mr. Meeker recalled the veto study carried on by the Interim Committee. He suggested that a group from the Assembly outside the membership of the Security Council—where political considerations were all important and where there had been a failure to make any progress—was the best means of studying this problem. He also noted the need for obtaining wide support for this resolution. The potential attitudes of the members of this group had been fully discussed with the liaison officers of the Delegation and with the Department. It was felt that no more than three of the thirteen study group members would favor the Soviet package proposal. From the point of view of the ultimate results of the study group and of wide support for creating the group, the composition was satisfactory.

Ambassador Austin noted that the five permanent members of the Security Council were to be represented on this group. Mr. Meeker said that this had been intentional and was of some significance.

In view of the discussion, Ambassador Austin suggested that no decision be taken at that meeting. Ambassador Gross indicated that he had not meant to delay a decision of the Delegation on this matter and was in fact satisfied with the clarifications he had heard.

Mr. Wilcox spoke about the "rotten apple" theory. He was personally in favor of the concept of universality, but realized that it would be wiser to postpone a decision of the Assembly on this matter for another year. He pointed to the Yugoslav example cited by Ambassador Cohen and said that it would appear that when "rotten apples" were put into the UN they showed considerable improvement. He mentioned the fact that many neutral States had been encouraged to go along with the free world on many of the important decisions taken by the Assembly. Senator Wiley said this was a whole new concept of the results of placing rotten apples in a barrel.

Since there were no objections to the course recommended by the staff, Ambassador Austin declared that this would be the decision of the Delegation. He then adjourned the meeting.

PRIORITY

NEW YORK, December 12, 1952—11:41 a. m.

Delga 358. Re membership. Ad Hoc Comite will begin debate membership today.

Before Comite are:

1. Draft resolution by Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua requesting ICJ advisory opinion originally submitted during sixth session. We understand this draft will be withdrawn.

2. Draft resolution by Peru. (A/AC.61/L.30).

3. Draft resolution submitted by Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua (A/AC.61/L.31).

4. Draft resolution submitted by all Central American States (A/AC.61/L.32).

Text of drafts 2, 3, and 4 above, given in next fol tel.

As reported earlier Belaunde (Peru) insisted on submitting his proposal but said he will not insist on vote and agrees to referral to Inter-sessional Comite. In view of Belaunde's action Urquia (El Salvador) rushed in two Central Amer proposals. Dept will note Urquia's draft shows composition of Inter-sessional Comite different from that suggested to him by USDel. Urquia did not consult USDel before his hasty submission of draft. Composition may possibly be modified in course of comite debate.

Our present thinking is to submit res on Japan after further consultation with Jap observer and Fr del, on the assumption that Japs want us to press for res endorsing their application.

PRIORITY

NEW YORK, December 12, 1952—2: 34 p. m.

Delga 359. Verbatim Text. Re membership. Below are texts of draft res on membership which were submitted yesterday in ad hoc comite:

“Peru: Draft res”

“Considering:

“2. That it appears from the proceedings in the SC that, even though it has been recognized unanimously, in opinions, votes or proposals for admission, some of them in identical terms, that the applicant states in question fulfill the conditions governing admission to the UN, a veto was pronounced at the time of voting which seems to have been influenced by motives outside the scope of Art 4 of the charter and hence in conflict with the opinion of the ICJ of 28 May 1948 and in disregard of the GA's express recommendation;

“3. That the principle of universality which underlies the charter requires only that the applicant states should fol a policy in keeping with internat'l law, and that hence this principle may not be restricted on other grounds, which if they prevailed would transform into a political alliance the organization set up by the will of the peoples represented at San Francisco to be the universal legal community;

"4. That this arbitrary application of the unanimity rule is preventing the UN from accomplishing one of the essential purposes of the charter, namely to enlist the cooperation of the peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the charter;

"5. That the unanimity rule, the purpose of which is to achieve the effective cooperation of the great powers in the consolidation of peace, was not conceived or accepted as a means of authorizing any power to deny the proved and recognized qualifications of the states applying for membership and so to exclude them indefinitely from the legal community to which they are entitled to belong as internat'l persons in conformity with the spirit and letter of the charter;

"6. That while, according to the advisory opinion of the ICJ of 3 March 1950 both the recommendation of the Council and the decision of the Assembly are required for the admission of new members, the Court did not express an opinion on the form of the vote in the SC:

"7. That there are sound reasons for claiming that the unanimity rule, being an exception, should only be applied restrictively and hence only in the cases which involve the functions exclusively vested in the SC;

"8. That in the matter of the admission of new members, as is shown by the records of the San Francisco conference, the final decision lies with the Assembly, and that accordingly the SC's recommendation, though necessary, is from the legal point of view a previous step or a procedural stage which, by its nature and according to the spirit and letter of the charter, does not require the application of the unanimity rule;

"9. That even if the unanimity rule were applicable to the SC's recommendation it would be inadmissible in cases in which it involved a violation of the charter, such as would be constituted by accepting a veto to the admission of new members which had been acknowledged, by the power exercising the veto in the SC, as eligible within the meaning of Art 4;

"10. That the GA res entitled 'uniting for peace', approved almost unanimously by the Assembly has laid down the doctrine that the exercise of the veto by a power cannot paralyze the organization or relieve the GA of its responsibilities under the charter;

Resolves:

"1. To note the SC's report concerning the admission of new members;

"2. To note that the concurring opinions, votes and proposals laid before the SC concerning the admission of new members signify, with respect to the states to which they relate, that they are unanimously recognized as fulfilling the conditions required for membership of the UN pursuant to Art 4 of the charter;

“3. To consider, in the light of the purposes and principles of the charter and in view of the circumstances described above, each of the applications of the states to which the foregoing paragraph relates.”

“Admission of new members

“Costa Rica, El Salv, Hond and Nicara : Draft resolution

“First draft

“Conscious of its responsibilities with regard to the solution of the problem of the admission of new members to the UN;

“Concerned by the fact that many cases are still pending, though they secured the supporting votes of seven or more of the members of the SC;

“Considering that it is essential for the purposes of the UN to facilitate the admission of new members who are peace-loving and who fulfill the other conditions laid down by Art 4 of the charter;

“Considering that in order to secure the adoption at the conference of San Francisco of the rule regarding the unanimity of the permanent members of the SC it was necessary for the sponsoring powers to settle the doubts of various dels as to the scope of that rule, and for that purpose to issue the declaration of 7 June 1945 in which it is stated that the permanent members may make use of the veto in cases which relate to the maintenance of internat'l peace and security and which, according to the declaration, consist exclusively of cases in which the SC has to make decisions which involve its taking direct measures in connection with settlement of disputes, adjustment of situations likely to lead to disputes, determination of threats to the peace, removal of threats to the peace and suppression of breaches of the peace;

“Considering that according to that same declaration restricting the scope of the veto, decisions of the SC which do not involve the taking of any of the measures previously referred to, but which are connected with the maintenance of peace and internat'l security are to be taken by a procedural vote, that is to say by the vote of any seven members of the Council;

“Considering that the expression ‘a procedural vote’ used in the declaration is itself proof that the subjects to which it refers may not be procedural matters in the strict sense of the term but are governed, by assimilation thereto, as if they were procedural;

“Considering that, although it is a subject which may be connected with the maintenance of peace and security, the admission of new members to the UN is not included among the cases in which, according to the permanent members of the Council themselves, they may make legitimate use of the privilege of the veto, but is included among the cases which are dealt with by a procedural vote;

“Considering that, as the organ with which responsibility for deciding on applications for the admission of new members chiefly rests, the GA has the right and also the duty to decide on the cases pending, and in so doing can and should apply the criterion maintained in the declaration of San Francisco of 7 June 1945, according to which the SC acts on this subject by a procedural vote;

“Second draft

“Considering that notwithstanding the efforts that have been made for some years, it has not as yet been possible to solve the important problem of the admission of new members to the UN;

“Recalling that various states members of the UN have made specific proposals or put forward suggestions with a view to reaching a satisfactory solution of the problem of admission;

“Recalling that on two occasions the ICJ, at the request of the GA, has given advisory opinions on the above mentioned problem;

“Bearing in mind that the applications for admission of a large number of states are still pending, despite the fact that seven or more votes were cast in favour of the admission of many of them in the SC;

“Resolves:

“1. To establish a special comite composed of a rep of each of the fol member states: Belg, China, Cuba, Egypt, El Salv, Fr, Gr, Ind, Leb, Neth, NZ, Peru, USSR, UK of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and USA;

“2. To instruct the spec comite to make a detailed study of the question of the admission of states to membership in the UN, examining the proposals and suggestions which have been made in the GA and its comites or which may be submitted to the spec comite by any members of the UN, such study to be conducted in the light of the discussions in the GA and its comites, the advisory opinions of the ICJ and the principles of internat'l law;

“3. To request the spec comite to submit a report on its work and its conclusions to the GA at its eighth regular session and to transmit that report to the SYG in time for distribution to member states at least two months before the opening of the eighth session;

“4. To request the SYG to place at the disposal of the spec comite the staff and the facilities it requires for its work;

“5. To arrange for the item ‘admission of new members’ to be included in the provisional agenda of the eighth regular session of the GA.”

Delga 365. Re membership. Poland submitted this morning expected package deal res reading as fols.

“The GA

Requests the SC to consider the applications of (Albania, the Mongolian People’s Republic, Bulgaria, Rumania, Hungary, Finland, Italy, Portugal, Ireland, Jordan, Austria, Ceylon, Nepal and Libya) in order to submit a recommendation on the simultaneous admission of all these states of members of the UN organization.”

Staff suggests USDel take fol position on above res :

1. While continuing to make clear our opposition to this proposal, we shld acquiesce in reference of Polish draft res along with all other proposals now before comite to intersessional study comite. This wld be logical consequence of our support for idea of full study of all proposals made on this subject and is in line with Sen Wiley's speech this morning.

If vote on res cannot be avoided (a) vote against it, or (b) support amendment along line of Dept position paper SD/A/C.1/402 so that amended res wld ask SC to reconsider all pending applications including those of Cambodia, Japan, Laos, Republic of Korea, and Vietnam. While we wld prefer voting res down, sentiment in comite may make amendment approach desirable or even necessary.

Jebb (UKDel) strongly favors reference to intersessional comite. Ordonneau (Fr) has open mind and indicated will fol our lead. Shaw (Austral) agrees with Jebb. We are making further soundings. We spoke to Ushiroku today who informed us that he had received word from Tokyo that his govt concurs in separate res. He suggested US continue carry ball in this regard. We gave him copy fol draft res :
On Jap :

"The GA

Noting that ten members of the SC, on 18 Sept 1952, supported a draft res recommending the admission to the UN of Jap, but that no recommendation was made to the GA because of the opposition of one permanent member,

Deeming it important to the development of the UN that all applicant states which possess the qualifications for membership set forth in Art 4 of the Charter shld be admitted,

1. Determines that Jap is, in its judgment, a peace-loving state within the meaning of Art 4 of the Charter, is able and willing to carry out the obligations of the Charter, and shld therefore, be admitted to membership in the UN ;

2. Requests the SC to take note of this determination of the GA with respect to the application of Jap."

Dept shld note operative para 2 above is slight modification from our usual GA membership resolutions in past which requested SC reconsideration application of certain country in light of determination of GA. Our orig para 2 was along this line. When we showed it to Ushiroku today he said that while Jap favored strong GA action, he feared our orig para 2 might not be acceptable to other dels. He expressed concern that some dels might move to drop such a para on ground it was inconsistent with idea of intersessional study comite and in order to avoid gen recommendation to SC to reconsider applications for membership. We therefore, tentatively agreed to the modified para 2 shown above.

Memorandum by the United Nations Adviser, Bureau of Far Eastern Affairs (Bacon), to the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs (Johnson)

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] December 15, 1952.

Subject: Membership Question in the General Assembly

Our Delegation is working out with the Japanese in New York a draft resolution which we would submit. The resolution would have the GA find that Japan was qualified for UN membership. Whether the SC would be asked to take note of this finding or whether the resolution would be limited merely to GA action will be decided in New York on the basis of general sentiment there. We would inform the French of our intention to submit the resolution on Japan and inquire concerning their intention with respect to similar resolutions for the Associated States.

Our Delegation intends to try to have the Polish package proposal disposed of by referring it to the inter-sessional committee. Alternatively, we would either oppose or seek to amend it.

We are giving strong support to the Central American proposal for an inter-sessional committee. The composition of the committee is causing some trouble and we are trying to have a second Far Easterner on the committee.

Senator Wiley has spoken in support of the inter-sessional committee and has sharply attacked the Soviet veto record on the membership question.

The Polish Delegate, in introducing his package proposal for 14 candidates, said that his Delegation had serious reservations with regard to some of the remaining candidates. He then proceeded to state these reservations with regard to Japan, the Associated States and the ROK in terms of strong disparagement.

China said that it found the Associated States qualified for membership—more so than the Soviet states which were admitted at San Francisco.

Additional Details Follow :

I. Resolutions before the Ad Hoc Committee.

Four draft resolutions have been tabled so far. They embody the following proposals :

(1) Package Admission.

A package proposal has been submitted by the Polish Delegation which would request the SC to consider the applications of 14 candidates "in order to submit a recommendation on the simultaneous admission" of these candidates.

(2) Circumvention of the Veto.

Two proposals have been submitted, one by Peru and one by Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua, which would look toward the admission of UN candidates despite the Soviet negative vote.

(3) Inter-sessional Study Committee.

The five Central American states have submitted a resolution providing for the establishment of a special committee to study the membership question and to report its conclusions to the 8th GA. As submitted the resolution proposes the following composition for the committee: The Big Five, three Latin Americans, the Netherlands, Belgium, Greece, Egypt, India, Lebanon and New Zealand. We have pointed out the under-representation of the Far East in this group as well as certain other peculiarities in the selection and suggested to our Delegation in New York that it would be desirable to get representation for Thailand or the Philippines either through replacement or addition.

II. Treatment of Japanese Application.

Our Delegation has been in close touch with the Japanese representative, Ushiroku, who has now been informed that the Japanese Government concurs in having a separate resolution submitted recording the GA sentiment toward the Japanese application. Ushiroku was somewhat concerned that if the resolution were to request SC reconsideration of the Japanese application it might encounter opposition in the GA on the ground of inconsistency with the intersessional study proposal. USUN has accordingly proposed an altered wording to meet the Japanese position. The Department is instructing USUN that the revised wording is acceptable and that we would be prepared to omit all reference to the SC if this course would be likely to ease passage of the resolution.

III. Tactics.

USUN intends to attempt to have the Polish package proposal referred for study to the inter-sessional committee. In supporting this procedure we would make clear our opposition to a package proposal. If this means of disposing of the proposal does not appear propitious, the Department is authorizing the Delegation either to attempt to vote the Polish resolution down or to amend the resolution by adding the omitted candidates (Japan, ROK and the three Indochinese states) and deleting all reference to simultaneous admission.

IV. Course of the debate so far.

The debate began on December 12 with general discussions of the membership question by several Latin American states. On December 13 Senator Wiley also reviewed the membership question and strongly attacked Soviet abuse of the veto on membership applications. He said that the Soviet policy in this respect was only one phase of the Kremlin's deliberate obstruction of any progress in the UN and in fact any progress toward true membership. He supported the inter-sessional committee proposal.

Poland blamed the US for the membership deadlock. It distinguished between the 14 applications of long standing—covered in the Polish package proposal—and the seven new applicants. It held that the time was not right to deal with the latter group and added that Poland had serious reservations with regard to some of the seven states. Japan, for example, had signed a “separatist” peace treaty; had failed to demilitarize or introduce democratic reforms; it was occupied by US troops; it was a springboard for US aggression; it was even a “criminal bacteriological laboratory”.

Taking “southern Korea” the Polish Delegate found that it was an occupied country deprived of all the attributes of state-hood. The Associated States of Indochina did not possess the fundamental qualities of a state. He included in his statement also an attack against the Chinese National Government.

The Chinese representative (Liu Chieh) after replying to the Polish attack on his Government said that the Polish package proposal was a form of international blackmail to which the UN should not allow itself to be subjected. The ROK which would be excluded under the Polish formula symbolized the UN's collective will to resist aggression. The Soviet Union had engaged in only nominal hostilities with Japan for a few days using this as an opportunity to strip Manchuria. The Associated States were qualified for membership—more so than the Soviet states which had been admitted at San Francisco.

Plenary Position Paper of the United States Delegation to the Seventh Regular Session of the General Assembly

RESTRICTED

ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS: REPORT OF THE AD HOC POLITICAL COMMITTEE

1. UNITED STATES POSITION

The United States should vote in favor of the seven resolutions on membership adopted by the Ad Hoc Committee. The first of these is the five-power Central American resolution which recommends the establishment of a Special Committee to make a detailed study of the question of the admission of states to membership and to examine the proposals and suggestions which have been made in the General Assembly. The second is the United States resolution requesting the Security Council to take note of the General Assembly determination that Japan should be admitted to membership because it is a peace-loving state within the meaning of Article Four of the Charter and is able and willing to carry out its obligations. The five other resolutions make similar determinations with respect to the application of Laos, Cambodia, Vietnam, Jordan and Libya.

The Polish "package deal" resolution failed to obtain the required two-thirds vote in the Ad Hoc Committee. If it is re-introduced, as is expected, the United States should vote against its adoption. In the event an amendment is presented by Egypt to delete the word "simultaneous" from the Polish resolution, the United States should abstain as it did in the Committee.

The United States should vote under Rule 67 against Plenary discussion of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee. However, the United States should make a brief statement in explanation of its vote along the lines suggested in Annex A.

2. HISTORY IN COMMITTEE

The seven resolutions adopted by the Ad Hoc Committee received overwhelming support of the members: the five-power Central American resolution was adopted 45-5-8; the United States resolution on Japan carried by 48 for, 5 against, and six abstentions; the French resolutions on Laos, Cambodia and Vietnam were accepted by identical margins, 38-5-16 and the Libyan and Jordan resolutions carried each by 49-5-with 5 abstentions. The Polish package resolution was turned down 20-28-11.

3. POSSIBLE PLENARY DEVELOPMENTS

It is anticipated that the seven resolutions adopted by the Ad Hoc Committee will receive similar support in the Plenary. It is also anticipated that, in the event the Polish resolution is resubmitted, it will fail to receive the two-thirds majority necessary for adoption.

It is expected that the Central American sponsors of the resolution establishing the Special Committee will move to amend the composition of the group by substituting Pakistan for India, the latter having stated it will not participate. The United States should vote in favor of this amendment.

Annex A

DRAFT UNITED STATES STATEMENT

MR. CHAIRMAN: I should like to explain briefly the votes my Government will cast on the resolutions before us.

It is clear from the debates which took place in the Ad Hoc Political Committee that all of us regard the membership problem as the outstanding organizational problem of the United Nations. The future growth and vitality of the United Nations depends upon its solution. So long as all of those nations qualified for membership are not here among us, the United Nations cannot achieve its maximum effectiveness. New blood would bring fresh energy and enthusiasm as well as collective strength and wisdom to our discussions.

The debate in the Committee convinced my Government that the Central American draft resolution calling for the creation of a Special Committee offered the most constructive method of procedure. Such a committee will be able to make an objective, careful exploration and analysis of every aspect of the membership problem.

Of course, no one can guarantee that the Special Committee will find the solution. We may recall, however, the work of the sub-committee set up by the Interim Committee to study the problem of voting in the Security Council. The results of that study were, in the opinion of most delegations, highly useful. The results of the efforts of a similar group on the membership problem should be of even greater utility to the United Nations and help us to progress towards the goal of universality.

During the course of discussions in the Committee, many suggestions were made with a view to ending the membership deadlock. My delegation was particularly impressed by the serious thought and study our friends from Latin America have given to the membership problem. My Delegation listened with great interest especially to the distinguished delegate from El Salvador, Ambassador Urquia and to Ambassador Belaunde from Peru. While a number of the suggested solutions seem to my Government to raise grave constitutional issues, I am sure that the Special Committee will wish to study them all carefully to see if they offer a feasible method to move towards fuller implementation of the principle of universality.

I should like, also, to explain briefly why our delegation will have to vote against the Polish draft resolution which was defeated in the Ad Hoc Committee. The Polish resolution, which calls for a "package deal" admission of fourteen states, in our opinion, prejudices the question of admission. This is true whether the text of the proposal calls for simultaneous admission or simply for admission. The Polish draft resolution would have the General Assembly express by implication what we have not been willing to express explicitly: that all of the states listed therein are qualified. It would equate certain states which have not been found qualified (that is, Albania, Hungary, Bulgaria, Rumania and Outer Mongolia) with such peace-loving nations as Italy, or Austria, or Ceylon.

We are firm supporters of universality of membership, Mr. Chairman, but it must be universality based upon principles and not upon deals. This is another serious defect of the Polish proposal. It includes some applicants and excludes others on the basis of no stated standard. It includes some applications which have received endorsement by a majority of the Security Council. It provides the United Nations with no clear and defined criteria by which to judge the pending applications not included in the partial list contained in the Polish resolution or to judge future applications. We favor no deals which leave some existing and all future applications to the whim of future deals rather than to the disposition on the basis of stated principles or standards. It may possibly be urged with reason that principles of admissibility should be more liberal than those we now apply. But those principles upon which we agree should be of universal application, so that they may be applied to all future as well as existing applicants.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, a word of explanation of our vote endorsing the candidacies of Japan, the three Associated States of Indo-China, Jordan and Libya.

This will be the first time the General Assembly is able to pass on the candidacy of Japan. As you know, the Japanese Government filed its application for membership in June of this year. It would already have had a favorable recommendation from the Security Council were it not for the veto cast by the Soviet delegate to the Council last September.

However, in the view of my Government and in the view of the over-whelming majority of representatives on the Ad Hoc Committee, Japan is qualified for membership. It seems to me, therefore, it is only fair for the Assembly to put itself on record in this sense. Such action will provide Japan with further stimulus to continue the positive contributions it is already making to the specialized agencies of the United Nations of which she is a member. It will encourage the Japanese people to continue on the path of peaceful advancement.

For similar reasons we have endorsed the candidacies of the three Associated States of Indo-China and will vote for them in the Plenary. And, finally, let me also say that we were happy to add our votes to the Ad Hoc Political Committee's endorsement of the candidacies of Jordan and Libya. The Assembly has already found these two states qualified for membership. We shall be glad to express our endorsement of their candidacies again.<sup>1</sup>

BACKGROUND PAPER<sup>2</sup>

General Background on Present Situation

Article 3 of the Charter provides that the original members of the United Nations are the states which, having participated in the San Francisco Conference or having signed the Declaration by United Nations of January 1, 1942, signed and ratified the Charter. There are fifty-one original members. These include the Soviet bloc of five.

The qualifications for new members and the procedures for their admission are governed by article 4, which reads as follows:

1. Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.

2. The admission of any such state to membership in the United Nations will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

The International Court of Justice has given two advisory opinions on article 4. In the first, it stated that a Member cannot subject its favorable vote on the admission of a state to the additional condition that other states be admitted simultaneously. In the second, the Court stated that the General Assembly cannot admit a state in the absence of a favorable Security Council recommendation. From the beginning a recommendation for the admission of a new member has been treated as a substantive question subject to the veto.

Only nine states have been admitted as new members since the founding of the Organization. These nine are: Afghanistan, Burma, Iceland, Indonesia, Israel, Pakistan, Sweden, Thailand, and Yemen. The last time that a state was admitted was in 1950, when Indonesia was accepted.

Nineteen other candidates have applied.* The USSR has used its veto 28 times to block the admission of fourteen of these candidates (Austria, Cambodia, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Republic of Korea, Laos, Libya, Nepal, Portugal and Vietnam) all of which the Assembly has determined to be qualified. The remaining five, which are Soviet-sponsored (Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Rumania and Outer Mongolia) have never received the seven votes required for a Security Council recommendation or been found qualified by the Assembly.

The Soviet Union has proposed the simultaneous admission of nine of the non-Soviet applicants (including Austria, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Jordan, Libya, Nepal and Portugal but omitting Cambodia, Japan, Republic of Korea, Laos and Vietnam) and of the five Soviet-sponsored candidates, always making clear, however, that it would continue to use its veto to block the admission of the non-Soviet applicants unless its own candidates were also admitted. The majority on the Security Council, including the United States, have not accepted this package deal. The membership question has therefore remained deadlocked, the Soviet Union vetoing the non-Soviet applicants and the majority rejecting the Soviet-sponsored candidates or a package deal.

Security Council and General Assembly Consideration of the Membership Problem in 1952

The Sixth General Assembly, on February 1, 1952, adopted a resolution recommending that the Security Council reconsider all pending applications and requesting that the permanent members confer with a view to assisting the Council to come to positive recommendations on these applications.

In accordance with the Assembly's request, the permanent members met on August 21 to try to reach an agreement. However, no agreement was possible since the permanent members maintained their previous positions.

The Security Council considered the membership question from September 2 to September 19, 1952. The first item on the agenda was the Soviet proposal for the simultaneous admission of 14 applicants, including the 5 Soviet-sponsored candidates and 9 of the others. The USSR stated that this proposal offered the only solution and that the USSR was willing to continue to veto Italy and others until the Soviet-sponsored applicants were admitted. The Council rejected the Soviet proposal by a vote of 5 (Brazil, China, Greece, Netherlands and US) to 2 (Pakistan and USSR) with 4 abstentions (Chile, France, Turkey and UK). The U.S., in explaining its opposition to the Soviet proposal, said that each applicant was entitled to separate consideration on its own merits, and noted that the Soviet proposal omitted applicants which were qualified while it included 5 candidates which in the opinion of the U.S. did not fulfill Charter requirements.

The Council next considered 5 new applications which it had not previously examined separately. It had before it resolutions recommending the admission of Libya, submitted by Pakistan; of Japan, submitted by the U.S.; and of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, submitted by France. Subsequently, the USSR introduced a resolution recommending the admission of the Vietminh regime, which had sent a telegram purporting to be a membership application. The resolutions recommending the admission of Libya, Japan, Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia received 10 favorable votes but were vetoed by the USSR, which stated that it was willing to include Libya in its package proposal but that it could not agree to the admission of Japan or the three Indo-China states. The Soviet resolution on the Vietminh regime was rejected by a vote of 10 to 1 (USSR). The U.S. and others maintained that this regime was not a state and that the so-called application need not even be considered.

The Ad Hoc Political Committee of the Seventh Assembly considered the membership problem from December 12 to December 19, 1952. At the initial meeting El Salvador submitted a resolution under which the Assembly would conclude that a recommendation to admit a new member was not subject to the veto; and would decide for or against the admission of the applicants which had received seven or more votes in the Council. At the same meeting Peru introduced a resolution under which the Assembly (1) would deduce that a Council recommendation on the admission of a new member was a procedural stage of the matter and was not subject to the veto, and that even if the veto did apply, it would be inadmissible when the member exercising the veto acknowledged that the applicant in question was qualified; (2) would note that the concurring opinions, votes and proposals laid before the Council showed that certain applicants were unanimously recognized as qualified; and (3) would, in view of these circumstances, consider the applications of the states concerned. According to this proposal, the Assembly could vote to admit any of the 9 non-Soviet applicants included in the Soviet proposal since each had received 7 or more favorable votes when considered separately by the Security Council and since the USSR, while voting against their individual admission, had approved of their admission by including them in its package proposal.

El Salvador introduced a second resolution on December 12 which would establish a Special Committee to make a detailed study of the membership problem and report its conclusions to the Eighth Session. The Committee, under the amended resolution, would be composed of representatives of the following states: Argentina, Belgium, Canada, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, El Salvador, France, Greece, India, Lebanon, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Peru, Philippines, South Africa, UK, US, and USSR. On December 15, Peru and El Salvador suggested that priority be given to this proposal to establish a Special committee and that their substantive proposals not be put to the vote but be referred to the Committee.

Poland, on December 13, introduced a resolution recommending that the Security Council reconsider the applications of 14 candidates "in order to submit a recommendation on the simultaneous admission of all those states". This proposal, like the Soviet proposal submitted to the Security Council in September, did not include Japan, the Republic of Korea, Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia.

During the debate on the various proposals, the members expressed deep concern over the continued stalemate, but there continued to be differences of opinion on the various solutions which had been offered. While some approved of Assembly action to admit the qualified applicants even without Security Council recommendations, a number of others, including the UK, contended that the veto did apply to membership applications and that this approach was therefore illegal. The Polish package proposal received some support but less than the same proposal received at the last Assembly. The fact that Japan had recently applied but was not included in the "package deal", plus the fact that a proposal had been made to establish a Special Committee probably accounted for the decrease in support for the Polish proposal.

There was wide agreement, outside the Soviet bloc, that it would be desirable to have a Committee study the membership problem, and the resolution establishing the Committee was approved by the Ad Hoc Political Committee and later by the Assembly. The plenary vote was 48 to 5 (Soviet bloc) with 6 abstentions. (Before the vote the President of the Assembly announced that India, Czechoslovakia and the USSR would be deleted from the list of countries to serve on the Committee since they had stated that they did not wish to participate.)

With respect to the Polish resolution calling for a Security Council "recommendation on the simultaneous admission" of 14 candidates, a move to delete the word "simultaneous" carried in both the Committee and the Plenary. The revised resolution was rejected by a vote of 28 (US) to 20 with 11 abstentions in the Committee and by a vote of 30 (US) to 9 with 10 abstentions in the plenary. The Soviet bloc itself voted against the resolution in the plenary on the grounds that the deletion of the word "simultaneous" changed its meaning.

In addition to establishing a Special Committee, the Assembly approved a US resolution determining that Japan met the qualifications and should be admitted and requesting that the Security Council take note of this determination. Similar resolutions endorsing Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia, Libya and Jordan were also adopted.

Senator Wiley, speaking for the US on the membership problem, reiterated our support for the admission of the 14 qualified candidates. He deplored the fact that the USSR has used its veto 28 times to block their admission and described the Soviet package deal as an "attempt at hold-up." In explaining our objections to the Soviet-sponsored applicants, he noted that they were giving at least moral support to Communist aggression in Korea. He recalled that Albania, Bulgaria, Rumania, and Hungary had defied the Assembly's efforts to end the guerrilla war in Greece and declared that they were waging a war of nerves against Yugoslavia and had molested foreign diplomats and imprisoned foreign citizens on false charges. We pointed out that Bulgaria, Hungary and Rumania had violated the human rights provisions of the peace treaties. We noted that one of the applicants, Outer Mongolia, had never demonstrated the slightest capacity to play the normal role of a state. With respect to the various proposals which had been suggested as possible solutions to the membership problem, Senator Wiley stated that some of them raised grave constitutional issues, and he favored the establishment of a Special Committee which could give an unhurried exploration to the problem.

Action Required This Year

In view of the urgency of the admission of the qualified states, the Department of State has given careful consideration to possible ways to break the deadlock. We have considered proposals to circumvent the Soviet veto but have believed that these proposals were illegal under the Charter and could lead to a gradual whittling away of the veto power on other matters of vital concern to us. We have also examined the feasibility of a political settlement among the Big Five under which we could obtain the admission of more of the states we favor than the 9 included in the Soviet package proposal. However, we have been unwilling to seek such a settlement which would necessarily involve our acquiescence in the admission of some or all of the Soviet-sponsored applicants.

It is expected that there will be strong pressure for a solution to the membership problem this year. The Members of the United Nations have become increasingly concerned over the stalemate, and countries like Italy and Japan attach great importance to United Nations membership. The establishment of a Special Committee resulted in postponement of a decision on the problem but should not be interpreted as a desire on the part of the Members to bury the issue. The United States approached the Central American countries to sponsor the proposal for the creation of the Committee in order to head off support for proposals unacceptable to us and in order to give the new Administration an opportunity to review the problem.

Among the proposals which the Committee will probably study and on which we will have to take a position are the following:

a. Latin American proposals recommending direct Assembly action to admit qualified applicants excluded by the Soviet veto.

b. Proposal to refer to the International Court of Justice the question as to whether the veto is applicable to membership applications or as to whether a negative vote of a permanent member cast on non-Charter grounds can nullify a recommendation which has obtained seven or more votes.

c. Soviet proposal recommending the simultaneous admission of 14 applicants.

d. Proposal endorsing the principle of a universal membership and recommending the admission of all applicant states.

e. Proposal recommending an amendment to article 4 of the Charter to remove the qualifications for membership and/or to eliminate the veto from votes on membership applications.

f. Proposal to give non-Members considered qualified for admission the right to participate in the Assembly without vote pending a solution to the problem.

We hope that the Special Committee will not be organized until after the closing of the reconvened seventh session, and have so indicated to the Secretariat.

Subject: Question of "Associate Membership" (Participation by non-members in the General Assembly)

I thought you might be interested in a brief summary of the situation regarding the question of "associate membership", which we discussed last week. The following are the essential points.

As I mentioned to you, for the past two years we have given serious consideration to the idea of "associate membership" arrangements for States excluded by the Soviet veto under which they could participate in the Assembly's proceedings on a regular basis. We have concluded that there is nothing in the Charter which would prevent the Assembly from granting non-Members the right to participate in the Assembly provided the privilege did not include the right to vote. The Assembly has already established the precedent of inviting non-Members to participate without vote in the Committees on an ad hoc basis during discussion of cases in which they are directly interested.

We have, on a number of occasions, discussed the matter with Italy and Japan. While the Italian Government has indicated that it might consider the idea of "associate membership" if the United States had a special reason to foster the idea, it has thus far not been in favor of any arrangements providing for less than full membership. I think Italy's attitude is motivated in part by a fear that once Italy was granted some form of "associate membership", the Members of the United Nations would feel less compelled to press for its admission as a full Member. In addition, the Italian Ambassador last year referred to some of the smaller States which are members of the United Nations and expressed the view that second class membership for Italy would not be desirable because of its prestige and its standing in the community of nations. He also pointed to the difficulty of explaining less than full membership to the Italian people. We have not tried to encourage Italy to reconsider its position since we have felt that this is a matter for Italy itself to decide and since we have wanted to exhaust every effort to obtain its admission as a full Member.

Japan appears to be more interested. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs prepared a tentative formula last year for our consideration. Under this formula, non-Members excluded by the veto would have the right to send to the Assembly the same delegation as Members and to participate without vote in the Plenary and main Committee meetings and other committees of the whole, with the privilege of speaking, proposing draft resolutions and amendments, submitting and withdrawing motions, and receiving documents. These states would be called "Non-Voting Participants". However, the Japanese made clear that they had not made a decision in favor of such an arrangement and later indicated that although they hoped we would keep the idea under consideration, they did not regard the matter to be urgent.

While we have believed that we could support an arrangement for participation in the Assembly by non-Members excluded by the Soviet veto, a number of other Members might oppose such an arrangement. The Australian Government, for instance, has told us that it does not favor the idea of "associate membership" and has taken the view that there is considerable danger in the doctrine that what is not strictly forbidden by the Charter is permitted. Further, there is the risk that some might urge that "associate membership" arrangements should also apply to Soviet sponsored applicants. For these reasons, we have felt that when and if non-Members show a definite interest, we should carefully consult with other Members before making a specific proposal. We have not carried on extensive consultations because, up to now, Italy has not favored the idea and Japan and others have shown no desire that we move ahead.

[WASHINGTON,] February 5, 1953.

During our meeting with you on January 22, you indicated that you attach very great importance to planning some means of breaking the membership deadlock in the United Nations at an early date. It was agreed that we would take a fresh look at the question promptly.

You will recall that there was special discussion of the possibility of advancing the device of associate membership. After reviewing the extent of our prior exploration of this question showing the lack of any interest on the part of Italy and <sup>2</sup> Japan in associate member status, it was concluded that it would probably be better to concentrate attention on some means of dealing with the problem on the basis of regular membership status.

The attached preliminary memorandum has been prepared pursuant to this discussion. I would very much appreciate your views concerning the possible course of action suggested. If you think it is worthwhile to explore the possibility of an omnibus arrangement in preparation for the meeting of the Special Committee on Membership, we will press the matter actively here with other interested Bureaus.

ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS TO THE UNITED NATIONS

The essential background on the present membership stalemate and a possible course of action for consideration are set forth below.

POSSIBLE COURSE OF ACTION

1. The Department for the past few years has seriously considered the advantages and disadvantages of an omnibus arrangement but has always finally decided against it. However, in view of the urgency of finding some solution to the membership problem which would achieve the admission of Italy, Japan and others we favor, we should again consider the possibility of an omnibus arrangement. If we handled the matter carefully we could probably overcome some of the difficulties of an omnibus settlement noted below.

2. We should not seek any action in the United Nations on the membership question before the Assembly's Special Committee meets in May to review the whole problem and prepare conclusions for the consideration of the Assembly. The Committee will have before it many proposals, some designed to circumvent the Soviet veto and others to achieve a solution within existing procedures. We will have to take a position on all these proposals. If we should decide to move ahead on the basis of an omnibus arrangement, we could pave the way in the Committee for subsequent Security Council action.

BACKGROUND

The qualifications for new members and the procedures for their admission are governed by Article 4, which reads as follows:

1. Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.

2. The admission of any such state to membership in the United Nations will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

The International Court of Justice has given two advisory opinions on Article 4. In the first, it said that a Member, while recognizing that a state fulfills the conditions of Article 4, cannot subject its favorable vote on the admission of that state to the additional condition that other states be admitted simultaneously. In the second, the Court advised that the General Assembly cannot admit a state in the absence of a favorable Security Council recommendation.

Only nine states have been admitted as new members since the founding of the Organization. These nine are: Afghanistan, Burma, Iceland, Indonesia, Israel, Pakistan, Sweden, Thailand, and Yemen. The last time that a state was admitted was in 1950, when Indonesia was accepted.

Nineteen other candidates have applied. The USSR has used its veto 28 times to block the admission of fourteen of these candidates (Austria, Cambodia, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Republic of Korea, Laos, Libya, Nepal, Portugal, and Vietnam), all of which the Assembly has determined to be qualified. The remaining five, which are Soviet-sponsored (Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Rumania, and Outer Mongolia), have never received the seven votes required for a Security Council recommendation or been found qualified by the Assembly. In addition to these nineteen, the North Korean and Vietminh regimes have submitted communications purporting to be membership applications.

The Soviet Union has proposed the simultaneous admission of nine of the non-Soviet applicants (including Austria, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Jordan, Libya, Nepal and Portugal but not Cambodia, Japan, Republic of Korea, Laos and Vietnam) and of the five Soviet-sponsored candidates, always making clear, however, that it would continue to use its veto to block the admission of the non-Soviet applicants unless its own candidates were also admitted. The majority on the Security Council, including the United States, have not accepted this package deal because it is contrary to the Charter principle that each applicant should be considered separately, and because it includes applicants not considered qualified and while excluding others which meet the conditions for membership. The membership question has therefore remained deadlocked, the Soviet Union vetoing the non-Soviet applicants and the majority rejecting the Soviet-sponsored candidates or a package deal.

Some of the Latin American countries have proposed, and will again propose in the Special Committee established by the Seventh General Assembly, that the General Assembly should itself proceed to admit Italy and other applicants considered qualified even though the Security Council has made no recommendations on them. Those advocating this course have tried to justify it on the grounds that a Council recommendation to admit a new member is not subject to the veto, or that the separate Soviet vetoes of Italy and others included in its package deal have been illegal because the Soviet Union has voted for their admission as one of a group. However, it has been widely understood from the beginning that a recommendation on a membership application is a substantive question to which the veto applies, and the Security Council and the General Assembly have always proceeded on this basis. Furthermore, there could be serious consequences in connection with the veto power over other matters of vital concern to us if a precedent were established whereby the Assembly could itself decide whether a matter before the Council is substantive or procedural or whether the vote of a permanent member is null and void because it is illegal. Some members have suggested that recourse might be made to the International Court of Justice on the question of the veto, but it is unlikely that this would lead to any useful result. Similarly, an amendment to Article 4 to remove the veto from votes on membership applications would only be vetoed by the Soviet Union.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE OF SEVENTH GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The large majority of Members have become increasingly concerned over this stalemate. The Seventh Session of the Assembly established a Special Committee to review the whole problem and report its conclusions to the Eighth Session. The Committee, which is now scheduled to meet on May 15, is composed of representatives of the following nineteen states: Argentina, Belgium, Canada, China, Columbia, Cuba, Egypt, El Salvador, France, Greece, Lebanon, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Peru, Philippines, South Africa, United Kingdom, and United States. (The Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia and India were also designated as members of the Committee but declined to participate.) The United States favored the establishment of the Committee in order to stave off support for proposals unacceptable to us and in order to give the new administration an opportunity to reexamine the problem.

OMNIBUS ARRANGEMENT

It appears that the only possibility of breaking the membership stalemate under existing membership procedures would lie in an omnibus arrangement approved by the Security Council providing for the admission of a large number of applicants, both Soviet and non-Soviet. Such an arrangement would in all probability have to include the five Soviet-sponsored candidates (Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Rumania and Outer Mongolia) in order to avoid a Soviet veto. For our part, the arrangement should preferably include all of the non-Soviet applicants (Austria, Cambodia, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Republic of Korea, Laos, Libya, Nepal, Portugal and Vietnam) and also Spain and the Federal Republic of Germany, which have not yet applied. However, it appears certain that the Soviet Union would not accept a list which included the Republic of Korea and the three Indo-China states, all of which it has omitted from its own package deal, or the Federal Republic of Germany. In addition, it might well maintain its opposition to Japan's admission and be unwilling to consider Spain. In my opinion we could under no circumstances agree to an omnibus arrangement which did not include Japan and Spain. The issue to be resolved, it seems to me, is whether we could consider an arrangement which in the beginning would include all the states we favor but which was negotiated downward so that the Republic of Korea, the three Indo-China states and the Federal Republic of Germany would be left out, and which in its final form also included the five Soviet-sponsored candidates.

A. Arguments for Omnibus Arrangement

1. Admission of many non-Soviet applicants, particularly Italy and Japan, is politically important to them and to the United States. We have been under heavy pressure from Italy and Japan to help obtain their admission.

2. The Members of the United Nations have become increasingly concerned over the stalemate and are pressing for a solution.

3. Perhaps a greater moral influence could be exercised over the Soviet satellites if they were inside rather than outside the United Nations.

4. The Soviet-sponsored applicants are no worse than some present United Nations Members, i.e., the Soviet five.

5. United Nations membership, by furnishing an additional method of contact with the free world, tends to offset exclusive Cominform control over the satellite countries and might conceivably strengthen the position of elements therein opposed to Moscow domination.

6. The United Nations was meant to be a universal organization, the membership of which would reflect the world as it actually is.

7. An increase in the number of United Nations Members would give a lift to the Organization.

B. Arguments Against Omnibus Arrangement

1. Since 1946, the United States has maintained that the Soviet-sponsored candidates do not meet the Charter qualifications. At the same time, the conduct of the Soviet-sponsored applicants has become progressively worse.

2. The admission of Soviet-sponsored applicants might dignify the puppet regimes, could be interpreted as tacit acquiescence in their present status, and might have an unfortunate effect upon the peoples within these states still looking with hope to the West.

3. The admission of Outer Mongolia would give some sanction to the Soviet effort to organize Asia into pseudo-independent states.

4. If we accepted an omnibus settlement excluding the Republic of Korea, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Indo-China states, the Soviet Union would be even less likely to agree to their admission later. It would be particularly difficult to omit the Republic of Korea at a time when the United Nations is taking action to defend it against Communist aggression.

5. Even though the questions of membership and representation are technically unrelated, willingness to admit the Soviet satellites might make it more difficult to obtain support for our position on Chinese representation.

6. Admission of the five Soviet-sponsored applicants would increase Soviet obstructive capabilities, while on many issues we could not count on the votes of all the eleven non-Soviet applicants included in the arrangement.

7. Additional Soviet satellites in the Organization would correspondingly increase the scope of our internal security problem in New York.

1. Following are Department's comments on Membership Committee officers for your general guidance in working out slate:

a. Since Latin Americans sponsored establishment Committee they will probably want Latin American chairman. This would be satisfactory to us and we would be willing leave choice to them.

b. Important Committee have good Rapporteur. We suggest von Balluseck, Netherlands, or British Commonwealth representative, preferably Johnson, Canada.

c. If Latin American elected Chairman and Western European Rapporteur, Vice-Chairman should be from Near or Far East. Lopez, Philippines, or possibly Lebanon representative suggested.

2. Even if Membership Committee holds early organizational meeting we hope and expect it would not begin substantive work until May.

UNITED NATIONS MEMBERSHIP QUESTION

In UNP's memorandum of March 26<sup>2</sup> there is a request for a legal analysis of the proposals which Argentina, El Salvador and Peru have made regarding admissions of new members to the United Nations and which will be under discussion by the Special Committee on Membership.

Winnowed down to their barest essentials, the plans, which are overlapping in part, can be stated in the following terms. Argentina submits that the Assembly can admit a member upon a "negative recommendation" of the Security Council. El Salvador contends that a permanent member of the Security Council cannot legally veto a recommendation for admission because the question is of a procedural nature. Peru maintains that the Council has already affirmatively recommended a number of candidates despite Soviet vetoes, because the USSR has, by its proposed admission of such candidates in a "package deal", officially evidenced its conclusion that they are qualified for membership.

I. ARGENTINE PROPOSAL

The latest restatement of the Argentine plan is contained in document A/AC.61/L.36 (13 December 1952), which is a proposed amendment to the Central American (i.e., Salvadoran) plan (A/AC.61/L.31). The important paragraphs of the resolution as advocated by Argentina are as follows:

"Considering that, when consulted about the scope of Article 2, paragraph 4 of the Charter, the Advisory Committee of Jurists at the San Francisco Conference was of the unanimous opinion that, under that provision, the General Assembly could accept or reject a recommendation for the admission of a new Member, 'or a recommendation to the effect that a given State should not be admitted to the United Nations',

"Considering that, at its fifteenth meeting on 18 June, Committee II/1 of the San Francisco Conference agreed with that interpretation and expressly decided to include it in the records of the meeting as the only authorized interpretation of that provision, which decision was subsequently approved by Committee II at its fourth meeting on 21 June and by the Conference at its ninth plenary meeting on 25 June,

"Considering that, in accordance with that interpretation, the powers of the Assembly to 'reject a recommendation to the effect that a given State should not be admitted to the United Nations' and accordingly to decide favourably on its admission to membership, are expressly recognized,

"Resolves to consider each application on its merits and to decide on it accordingly."

The Argentine proposal has been previously discussed by the General Assembly. On November 22, 1949, the Assembly submitted a question in the following form to the International Court of Justice for an advisory opinion: "Can the admission of a State to membership in the United Nations, pursuant to Article 4, paragraph 2 of the Charter, be effected by a decision of the General Assembly when the Security Council has made no recommendation for admission by reason of the candidate failing to obtain the requisite majority or of the negative vote of a permanent Member upon a resolution so to recommend?" In a written statement to the Court (Pleadings in Advisory Opinion of March 3, 1950, pp. 110-122) the United States submitted that the Assembly is not empowered to admit a state to United Nations membership in the absence of an affirmative recommendation of the Council. The statement supplies numerous arguments and evidence to support its conclusion. These can be stated here briefly.

(a) Charter language. According to the text of Article 4(2), the decision of the Assembly is to be made “upon the recommendation of the Security Council”, not “after having received the recommendations of the Security Council”. The language used thus indicates that the Security Council’s role in admission to membership is not merely consultative.

(b) Construction of Article 4(2) by the Assembly and Council. The Assembly discussed the Argentine proposal at its Second session in 1947. In the First Committee debate the resolution was opposed by nearly all of the speakers (Summary Records of First Committee, pp. 343, 349, 354, 360, 363, 365, 372, 378, 379, 381, 383, 384, 388; but see pp. 343, 364 for statements pro), and Argentina did not insist on a vote (ibid., p. 396). A similar proposal was submitted by Argentina at the Third Session (A/AC.24/15). Again a large majority found the proposal unacceptable and it was withdrawn by its sponsor. (Summary Records of Ad Hoc Political Committee, pp. 58, 63 f, 65 ff, 77 f, 81, f, 84 f, 87 f, 90, 91, 95, 97 f, 98, 99, 100, 102, 103, 110, 115, 116, 118, 134; contra, pp. 106, 107, 109, 112.)

The rules of procedure of both the Assembly and the Council are inconsistent with the Argentine proposal. Rule 115 of the Assembly’s Provisional Rules, adopted in January 1946, provided for Assembly consideration only in case of an affirmative recommendation (“If the Security Council recommends the applicant State for membership, the General Assembly shall consider, etc.”). Otherwise, the rules made no provision for Assembly action.

In 1946 the Assembly appointed a committee to draw up rules relating to admission which would be acceptable to the Assembly and the Council. The Assembly Committee decided upon the following proposition as a basis for its work: “It was agreed that the General Assembly was not entitled under Article 4, 2, of the Charter to decide to admit a new Member except upon an affirmative recommendation of the Security Council.” (Document A/384, p. 2.) No rule authorizing the Assembly to act without an affirmative recommendation was suggested. The rules which were agreed upon by the special committees and adopted by the Council and Assembly, and those which are in effect today, merely make explicit the right of the Assembly to request the Council to reconsider applications in cases where the Council has not recommended the applicant or has postponed consideration of the application. (See Security Council Rules 58 to 60; General Assembly Rules 123 to 127.)*

The practice of the Assembly and Council has been uniformly inconsistent with the Argentine proposal. At each of its sessions the Assembly has been faced with the problem of applicants which have failed to get an affirmative Security Council recommendation. Rather than seek to admit applicants defeated by the veto in the Security Council, the Assembly has requested their reconsideration by the Council, and the Assembly has given its endorsement of those applicants it considered qualified for admission.

*When the Assembly’s Rules of Procedure were revised in 1949 (Res. 362(IV) of 22 October 1949), in the light of a study and recommendations by a Special Committee on Assembly Methods and Procedures, no proposals were adopted or made for changing the existing rules relating to Assembly consideration of membership applications. [Footnote in the source text.]

As regards Security Council practice, no "negative recommendations" have been forwarded to the Assembly. When resolutions containing applications for membership have been put to the vote and have failed to obtain seven votes including the concurring votes of the permanent members, the President of the Council has announced without exception that the resolutions failed to carry. The Council has never seriously considered that such an action constituted a "negative recommendation". With regard to membership the Council has considered itself capable only of making an affirmative recommendation or none at all.

The arguments and conclusions advanced by the United States and others were accepted by the International Court of Justice and embodied in its Advisory Opinion of March 3, 1950. The following excerpts from that Opinion are particularly pertinent:

" . . . It is in the nature of things that the recommendation should come before the decision. The word 'recommendation', and the word 'upon' preceding it, imply the idea that the recommendation is the foundation of the decision to admit, and that the latter rests upon the recommendation. Both these acts are indispensable to form the judgment of the Organization to which the previous paragraph of Article 4 refers. The text under consideration means that the General Assembly can only decide to admit upon the recommendation of the Security Council; it determines the respective roles of the two organs whose combined action is required before admission can be effected: in other words, the recommendation of the Security Council is the condition precedent to the decision of the Assembly by which the admission is effected.

"In one of the written statements placed before the Court, an attempt was made to attribute to paragraph 2 of Article 4 a different meaning. The Court considers it necessary to say that the first duty of a tribunal which is called upon to interpret and apply the provisions of a treaty, is to endeavour to give effect to them in their natural and ordinary meaning in the context in which they occur. If the relevant words in their natural and ordinary meaning are ambiguous or lead to an unreasonable result, then, and then only, must the Court, by resort to other methods of interpretation, seek to ascertain what the parties really did mean when they used these words.

"When the Court can give effect to a provision of a treaty by giving to the words used in it their natural and ordinary meaning, it may not interpret the words by seeking to give them some other meaning. In the present case the Court finds no difficulty in ascertaining the natural and ordinary meaning of the words in question and no difficulty in giving effect to them. Some of the written statements submitted to the Court have invited it to investigate the travaux préparatoires of the Charter. Having regard, however, to the considerations above stated, the Court is of the opinion that it is not permissible, in this case, to resort to travaux préparatoires.

“The conclusions to which the Court is led by the text of Article 4, paragraph 2, are fully confirmed by the structure of the Charter, and particularly by the relations established by it between the General Assembly and the Security Council.

“To hold that the General Assembly has power to admit a State to membership in the absence of a recommendation of the Security Council would be to deprive the Security Council of an important power which has been entrusted to it by the Charter. It would almost nullify the role of the Security Council in the exercise of one of the essential functions of the Organization. It would mean that the Security Council would have merely to study the case, present a report, give advice, and express an opinion. This is not what Article 4, paragraph 2, says.

“In consequence, it is impossible to admit that the General Assembly has the power to attribute to a vote of the Security Council the character of a recommendation when the Council itself considers that no such recommendation has been made.” (Reports of Judgments, Advisory Opinions and Orders, 1950, pp. 7–10.)

Argentina has advanced, and will probably continue to advance, two reasons why the Assembly should refuse to accept the Court’s opinion. (1) The Court wrongly ignored the travaux préparatoires which, Argentina alleges, support its conclusions. (2) The Court’s Advisory Opinion is not binding on the Assembly.

In regard to the travaux préparatoires or legislative history of Article 4(2), the Argentine representative made the following statement to the Ad Hoc Political Committee on December 15, 1952 in support of his proposal:

“The matter had been especially considered by the Advisory Committee of Jurists and then in Committee II and finally at the plenary meetings of the Conference. The Advisory Committee of Jurists had unanimously been of the opinion that the text of Article 4, paragraph 2, clearly established the power of the General Assembly first to accept or reject the recommendation for the admission of a new Member and, secondly, to accept or reject a recommendation that a State should not be admitted to the United Nations. That point of view was also clearly stated in the report of Committee II.† Mr. Ferrer Vieyra added that no representatives had impugned the authenticity of the documents to which he was referring. But certain representatives had stated and continued to state that there could be no negative recommendations as regards the admission of new Members.” (A/AC.61/SR 45, p. 280).

This question, which the International Court of Justice did not consider it necessary to discuss, was covered in detail in the written statement submitted to the Court by the United States. Chapter V, Section B(2) of the Dumbarton Oaks proposals states that "the General Assembly should be empowered to admit new Members to the Organization upon the recommendation of the Security Council." The comments on, and amendments to, this paragraph which were submitted by governments prior to the San Francisco Conference clearly reflect the understanding that the provision meant that no State could be admitted without a favorable recommendation. The Australian and Egyptian amendments show this most clearly. Australia proposed that the only role of the Security Council would be one of recommendation in regard to the admission of states at war with Members since 1939. (Doc. 2, G/14(1), UNCIO Docs., Vol. 3, p. 545). Egypt suggested that "the General Assembly shall be empowered, after taking the advice of the Security Council, to admit new Members to the Organization" (Doc. 2, G/7(q), id., p. 456).

At San Francisco the matter was considered by Committee II/1. The whole assumption of the discussions was that under the Dumbarton Oaks proposal the assent of the Security Council was required. At its 11th meeting on May 25, Committee II/1 approved by a vote of 28 to 0 the following text: "The General Assembly may admit new Members to the Organization upon recommendation of the Security Council" (Doc. 594, UNCIO Docs., Vol. 8, p. 398). The text is the same as that of Dumbarton Oaks except that the word "may" replaces "shall be empowered to". This completed the only substantive phase of the consideration of this provision. The changes which were subsequently considered and adopted were of a drafting character.

The provision was sent to the Co-ordination Committee and in turn to the Advisory Committee of Jurists. Both of these bodies were to ascertain whether substantive decisions of technical committees (such as Committee II/1) were embodied in satisfactory language. They were to refrain from substantive decisions, and the changes that they suggested should be appraised in the light of their functions.

The Co-ordination Committee redrafted the provision, but, foreseeing translation difficulties, referred the text to the Advisory Committee of Jurists. This Committee adopted a new text, which is the final form of Article 4(2): "The admission of any such State to membership will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council."

The intent of this change can most adequately be explained by quoting verbatim from the United States written statement to the Court (pp. 120-122):

"The question was raised in the Co-ordination Committee whether the new language had made it clear that the Assembly might accept or reject a recommendation of the Security Council. The text previously adopted by the Co-ordination Committee clearly left some discretion to the General Assembly—‘States may be admitted to membership by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.’ The new language of the Advisory Committee of Jurists—‘the admission . . . will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council’—might possibly be understood to require the General Assembly to admit a State if recommended by the Security Council.

“The Committee of Jurists included in the report of its 14th Meeting on June 18 this statement :

“ ‘A question from the Co-ordination Committee as to whether paragraph 2 of Article 4 made it clear that the Assembly might accept or reject a recommendation of the Security Council was answered in the sense that the text was clear in this respect.’ †

“During the discussion of the Jurists’ text by Committee II/1 at its 15th Meeting on June 18, the secretary of that Committee read a letter which he had received from the secretary of the Advisory Committee of Jurists, as follows (verbatim minutes) :

“ ‘Reference is made to the concern which you expressed as to whether the text of Chapter V, Section B, paragraph 2, as approved by the Co-ordination Committee makes clear that the General Assembly had power to accept or reject a recommendation by the Security Council. The matter was discussed by the Committee of Jurists at its meeting this morning (June 16). The Committee believes that the word “decision” leaves no doubt that the General Assembly may accept or reject a recommendation from the Security Council. That is to say the General Assembly may accept or reject a recommendation for the admission of a new Member or it might accept or reject a recommendation to the effect that a given State should not be admitted to the United Nations. Notice is taken of the language employed in what is now Article 20 concerning the general power of the Assembly and voting therein. That is the paragraph 2, Section C, Chapter V, which states that a two-thirds majority of the Assembly is required to admit a Member.’

“ ‘The Secretary reported that he had been advised by the Secretary of the Advisory Committee of Jurists that the Committee felt these texts would not in any way weaken the original text adopted by the Committee. In the light of this interpretation, the Committee approved the texts.’ §

“The second report of the Rapporteur of Committee II/1 for submission to Committee II, revised and circulated to the Members of the Committee for their approval June 19, 1945, included the following :

“ ‘The Committee considered a revision of the text of this paragraph which was under consideration by the Co-ordination Committee in order to determine whether the power of the Assembly to admit new Members on recommendation of the Security Council was in no way weakened by the proposed text.

“The Committee was advised that the new text did not, in the view of the Advisory Committee of Jurists, weaken the right of the Assembly to accept or reject a recommendation for the admission of a new Member, or a recommendation to the effect that a given State should not be admitted to the United Nations.

“The Committee was advised that the new text did not, in the included in its minutes as the one that should be given to this provision of the Charter, and on this basis approved the text as suggested by the Co-ordination Committee.”

“Taken as a whole, therefore, the legislative history of Article 4, paragraph 2, clearly supports the conclusion that an affirmative recommendation of the Security Council is necessary for the admission of any State to membership. The question before the Court was squarely before Committee II/1 in the form of the Egyptian amendment and, to a certain extent, in the Australian amendment. The purposes of these amendments were made fully clear, and the amendments were rejected. Their rejection reflects clearly the Committee’s understanding of the text which it then adopted.

“The two changes subsequently made in the Committee II/1 text had nothing to do with the question before the Court. They were made for the drafting purposes set forth above. The inclusion, by the Secretary of the Advisory Committee of Jurists, of the clause ‘or reject a recommendation to the effect that a given State should not be admitted to the United Nations’ in his letter explaining that the Advisory Committee of Jurists did not consider the Assembly’s rights weakened by the new text, and the inclusion of this language in the interpretative statement accepted by Committee II/1, cannot be taken as showing a design to make the Security Council’s function purely consultative.

“It should be noted that the statement gives no indication concerning the nature of ‘the right to reject’ an unfavorable recommendation of the Security Council; it does not suggest that this right constitutes a power to admit a State in those circumstances. The right should probably be construed as merely the power to refer the application back to the Security Council for reconsideration. The surrounding circumstances make it impossible to accept the thesis that the right to reject constituted a power to admit an applicant without a favorable Security Council recommendation. For, if the new text indeed authorized the General Assembly to admit applicants without Security Council approval, it reversed all of the previous decisions on the main question that had arisen after the issue was presented to it by the Egyptian and Australian amendments, adopted a text which called for an affirmative Security Council recommendation. The new text was proposed for drafting reasons, and the only question raised was whether or not it had weakened the Assembly’s right. If it authorized the Assembly to act without a Security Council recommendation, it not only did not weaken the Assembly’s right under the previous text; it vastly broadened that right, granting everything sought to be covered by the Egyptian amendment and more than the Australian amendment was designed to accomplish. It is not reasonable to conclude that so complete a change was adopted without any explanation or discussion of its real scope but rather with explanations showing a far more limited purpose and character."

Regarding the advisory character of the Court's Opinion, the Argentine representative said to the Ad Hoc Political Committee that "an advisory opinion was not binding either on the Security Council or the General Assembly or even on the Court itself . . . and that it might be possible for the Court to change its opinion and move towards an interpretation more closely in keeping with the records of the San Francisco Conference." There is a lack of clarity in both the meaning and significance of the thought that the Court's opinion is not binding on the Court. The Court could not change its opinion on its own initiative, and it seems extremely doubtful that either the Assembly or another United Nations organ would request another advisory opinion on the exact same question. Although the Argentine representative was correct in stating that the Opinion was not "binding" on either the Assembly or Council, neither body will lightly ignore an Advisory Opinion which has been requested. The Court is the "principal judicial organ of the United Nations", and its Opinions should be given the highest consideration. Once an Advisory Opinion has been sought and received, the requesting body as a practical matter has less untrammelled discretion in making a decision. A decision which runs counter to an Advisory Opinion would have to be supported by very weighty considerations. As a matter of practice, no organ of the United Nations has ever seen fit to act contrary to such an Opinion.

The question raised by the Argentine proposal is dealt with by Hans Kelsen in his work The Law of the United Nations (1950), pp. 63-64. Kelsen concludes similarly that the Argentine interpretation of Article 4(2) is without foundation.

II. SALVADORAN PROPOSAL

The latest version of the Central American or Salvadoran proposal is contained in document A/AC.61/L.31 of December 10, 1952. The important parts of the draft resolution, beginning with the 4th pre-ambular paragraph, are as follows:

"Considering that in order to secure the adoption at the Conference of San Francisco of the rule regarding the unanimity of the permanent members of the Security Council it was necessary for the sponsoring Powers to settle the doubts of various delegations as to the scope of that rule, and for that purpose to issue the Declaration of 7 June 1945 in which it is stated that the permanent members may make use of the veto in cases which relate to the maintenance of international peace and security and which, according to the Declaration, consist exclusively of cases in which the Security Council has to make decisions which involve its taking direct measures in connexion with settlement of disputes, adjustment of situations likely to lead to disputes, determination of threats to the peace, removal of threats to the peace and suppression of breaches of the peace;

“Considering that according to that same Declaration restricting the scope of the veto, decisions of the Security Council which do not involve the taking of any of the measures previously referred to, but which are connected with the maintenance of peace and international security are to be taken by a procedural vote, that is to say by the vote of any seven Members of the Council;

“Considering that the expression ‘a procedural vote’ used in the Declaration is itself proof that the subjects to which it refers may not be procedural matters in the strict sense of the term but are governed, by assimilation thereto, as if they were procedural;

“Considering that, although it is a subject which may be connected with the maintenance of peace and security, the admission of new members to the United Nations is not included among the cases in which, according to the permanent members of the Council themselves, they may make legitimate use of the privilege of the veto, but is included among the cases which are dealt with by a procedural vote;

“Considering that, as the organ with which responsibility for deciding on applications for the admission of new members chiefly rests, the General Assembly has the right and also the duty to decide on the cases pending, and in so doing can and should apply the criterion maintained in the Declaration of San Francisco of 7 June 1945, according to which the Security Council acts on this subject by a procedural vote;

At the 42nd meeting of the Ad Hoc Political Committee on December 12, 1952, the representative of El Salvador gave a lengthy explanation of the proposal. He recalled the circumstances of the acceptance by the San Francisco Conference of the Yalta voting formula. The core of his argument is that (1) the Four-Power Statement of June 7, 1945 (UNCIO Doc. 852, III/I/37(1)) was “what was known, in the law of contract, as an offer” and that the offer had been accepted by the other Members and had become a part of the Charter; and (2) paragraph 1 of the Statement “contained a complete enumeration of cases . . . in which the permanent members could use the right of veto” and these cases “were exclusively those in which the Security Council had to make decisions which involved its taking direct measures “regarding the maintenance of peace and security.”

The voting formula now contained in Article 27 is that which was drafted at Yalta. At the Yalta Conference Secretary of State Stettinius explained the proposed formula to Marshal Stalin and Prime Minister Churchill, indicating what categories of decisions by the Council would require the vote of the permanent members. In the first of these categories he listed recommendations on the admission of new members. The question which is raised by El Salvador is whether the Four-Power Statement had the effect of excluding membership from the list of vetoable questions despite the understanding at Yalta and the fact that the Yalta voting formula was embodied in Article 27 of the Charter. The preponderance of the evidence militates against such a conclusion.

No one paragraph of the Four-Power Statement can read apart from the whole document. Paragraph I(1), on which the Salvadoran representative places so much stress, must be read in conjunction with the other parts of the Statement, and particularly with paragraphs I(4) and II(2). Paragraph I(1) states, in part :

“ . . . Under Chapter VIII, the Council will have to make decisions which involve its taking direct measures in connection with settlement of disputes, adjustment of situations likely to lead to disputes, determination of threats to the peace, removal of threats to the peace, and suppression of breaches of the peace. It will also have to make decisions which do not involve the taking of such measures. The Yalta formula provides that the second of these two groups of decisions will be governed by a procedural vote—that is, the vote of any seven members. The first group of decisions will be governed by a qualified vote—that is, the vote of seven members, including the concurring votes of the five permanent members, subject to the proviso that in decisions under Section A and a part of Section C of Chapter VIII parties to a dispute shall abstain from voting.”

Paragraphs I(2) and I(3) enumerate certain types of decisions which will not require a qualified vote. Decisions regarding admission are not included in the enumerated list, and those that are enumerated are quite dissimilar in kind and importance from decisions on admissions. Paragraph I(4) says that once you go beyond the type of decision that has been enumerated in paragraph I(2), “decisions and actions by the Security Council may well have major political consequences and may even initiate a chain of events which might, in the end, require the Council under its responsibilities to invoke measures of enforcement under Section B, Chapter VIII.” The paragraph enumerates examples of decisions which might begin such a chain and says that such decisions are subject to the veto. The admission of new members is not included in this enumeration either.

Part I of the San Francisco statement thus shows that the sponsoring powers were not addressing themselves to such a matter as membership when they wrote paragraphs I(1) and I(2). They did, however, include a later paragraph which in a general way governs the matters not covered in paragraphs I(1) and I(2). Paragraph II(2) makes clear that, where there is uncertainty whether a decision is procedural or substantive, only a qualified vote of the Council can determine that it is procedural. In other words, the double veto is to apply in cases of doubt. The Security Council in its practice has apparently never entertained a doubt as to the substantive nature of admissions questions.

The Salvadoran argument depends upon the Four-Power Statement. When that Statement is read in its entirety, it is seen that the Statement does not support the Salvadoran contention, but, together with subsequent practice, negates that contention.

The Four-Power Statement is only one part of the legislative history of Article 27. The Dumbarton Oaks proposals, the discussions at Yalta, and the Yalta voting formula are all part of this history. There remains the significant fact that after all of the discussions at San Francisco and the issuance of the Four-Power Statement, the Yalta formula was left intact in Article 27. Equally important, however, is the post-San Francisco application of Article 27. This history contains no evidence whatever that Article 27 should be interpreted so as to make decisions on membership subject to an unqualified vote of any seven members of the Council.

By resolution 117 (II) of November 21, 1947, the Assembly requested the Interim Committee to make a broad study of the veto problem in the Council. The report of the Committee to the Assembly (Document A/578 of July 15, 1948) contains, inter alia, two lists of types of decisions which are made by the Council. In one list were included "decisions which are of a procedural character within the meaning of Article 27, paragraph 2, of the Charter." Decisions in regard to admission of new members were not included in this list. The other list included "decisions which the Interim Committee recommended should be adopted by the vote of any seven members of the Security Council, whether these decisions are considered procedural or non-procedural." Decisions in regard to membership were included in this list.

The Assembly considered the Committee's report in the spring of 1949 and passed resolution 267 (III) on the subject. The resolution recommends to members of the Council that they consider as procedural the decisions listed in an annex to the Assembly's resolution. Like the Interim Committee's list of procedural decisions, the Assembly's list did not include membership. The Assembly also considered the Interim Committee's second list of decisions, which the Committee felt should be adopted by an unqualified vote, whether the decisions be deemed procedural or non-procedural. The Assembly modified somewhat the Interim Committee's recommendation and in doing so ruled out any implication that at least some decisions on the second list might be procedural. The Assembly recommended to the permanent members of the Security Council "that they seek agreement among themselves upon what possible decisions by the Security Council they might forbear to exercise their veto, when seven affirmative votes have already been cast in the Council, giving favorable consideration to the list of such decisions contained" in the second list of the Interim Committee (underscoring supplied). This recommendation is addressed to the permanent members and not to the whole Council; it requests that the permanent members "forbear to exercise their veto" on certain questions, including the question of admission of new members.

Again, in resolution 296K(IV) of November 22, 1949, the Assembly requested the permanent members of the Council "to refrain from the use of the veto in connexion with the recommendation of States for membership in the United Nations." Thus the Assembly, while requesting that the veto right not be used, has recognized that this right exists in connection with membership applications.

There are still further factors pointing to the conclusion that decisions on membership are not procedural and are subject to a qualified vote:

(1) Under paragraph 2 of Article 18 of the Charter the question of admission of new Members is included in the list of decisions of the Assembly on "important questions" which "shall be made by a two-thirds majority" rather than by a simple majority.

(2) In the last six years the USSR has cast a large number of negative votes in the Security Council on membership applications. Without exception, these have been treated by the Council Presidents as constituting vetoes which prevented the Security Council from making favorable recommendations on the applications in question. The Council has never sought to follow any other course than that adhered to by the Security Council presidents.

(3) In regard to United States interpretation we should recall that toward the close of the 80th Congress, Senator Vandenberg introduced in the Senate S. Res. 239, which was subsequently passed and has come to be known as the Vandenberg Resolution. Among its provisions, this resolution recommended that the United States seek to limit the exercise of the veto in the Security Council, in particular with respect to pacific settlement of disputes under Chapter VI of the Charter, and with respect to the admission of new members. The clear implication was that the veto did apply on membership questions.

(4) The Salvadoran proposal in effect would constitute an attempt on the part of the Assembly to interpret Article 27, which deals exclusively with the Security Council, in a matter entirely repugnant to the interpretation which has consistently been given to that Article by the Council itself.

The representative of El Salvador recognized this principle in part when he said that "it had been decided that each United Nations body should have the right to interpret those provisions of the Charter for the application of which it was responsible" (42nd meeting of the Ad Hoc Political Committee). However, he completely perverted the principle in application when he continued by saying: "If the Security Council informed the General Assembly that seven or more of its members had voted in favor of the admission of a State but that one of the permanent members of the Council had voted against such admission, it would be for the General Assembly, and not for the Security Council, to interpret and apply the provisions of Article 27 of the Charter and to decide whether or not there was a favorable recommendation by the Security Council." Not only is this proposition lacking in logic, it also is based on the fallacy that admission of new members is the sole responsibility of the Assembly, with the Council playing a very minor advisory role. The International Court of Justice pointed out the fallacy of any such idea in its advisory opinion of March 3, 1950: "The General Assembly and the Security Council are both principal organs of the United Nations. The Charter does not place the Security Council in a subordinate position. Article 24 confers upon it 'primary responsibility for the maintenance of peace and security', and the Charter grants it for this purpose certain powers of decision. Under Articles 4, 5, and 6, the Security Council co-operates with the General Assembly in matters of admission to membership" etc. (underscoring supplied).

III. PERUVIAN PROPOSAL

The Peruvian draft resolution, which is contained in document A/AC.61/L.30 of December 8, 1952, states the philosophy of the Salvadoran proposal but is based on a further proposition. Mr. Belaunde, the Peruvian spokesman summed up the purposes of the proposal as follows:

" . . . it was the object of the Peruvian draft resolution to make it clear that, in conformity with the debates at the San Francisco Conference, (1) the Security Council's vote on the question of the admission of new Members should be a procedural vote to which the unanimity rule did not apply, (2) to determine the circumstances in which the veto was legitimate, and (3) to ensure, by referring to the precedent of the 'Uniting for Peace' resolution, that the application of the Charter was not paralysed."

The first object is the same as that of the Salvadoran proposal and no further comment is required.

The second and third objects are interconnected. They envisage a determination by the Assembly that a negative vote by a permanent Member of the Security Council is not "legitimate" when cast contrary to the International Court of Justice Opinion of 1948, and a decision by the Assembly to ignore a veto which it has determined not to be "legitimate". In his presentation to the Ad Hoc Committee at its 42nd meeting Mr. Belaunde said in this regard:

"It might admittedly be asked who or what would determine whether or not the reasons prompting a permanent Member's negative vote were legitimate. The answer was clear: common sense. Surely, it was not arguable that the USSR's veto on the admission of certain States was legitimate when the USSR had itself conceded that those States qualified for admission and had proposed that they should be admitted on condition that other candidates it supported were also admitted." (Underscoring supplied).

Mr. Belaunde's answer in reply to "what" has certain merit. As to "who" should make the determination, the import of his whole statement is that it should be the Assembly.

Each major organ of the United Nations has the prerogative of interpreting its own actions. Although there is no specific reference to interpretations in the Charter, the final report of Committee IV/2 of the San Francisco Conference contains the following statement: "In the course of the operations from day to day of the various organs of the Organization, it is inevitable that each organ will interpret such parts of the Charter as are applicable to its particular functions." (UNCIO Doc. 933, IV/2/42(2), p. 7). Even the International Court of Justice, the highest judicial organ of the United Nations, can give only an advisory opinion on questions of interpretations regarding the functioning of other United Nations organs under the Charter.

Mr. Vieyra of Argentina pointed this out very clearly at the 45th meeting of the Ad Hoc Political Committee when he said that the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of March 3, 1950 "was not binding either on the Security Council or the General Assembly." If the Court cannot give interpretations of the Charter which are legally binding on the Assembly or Council, a fortiori neither the Assembly or Council has the ability to give an interpretation binding on the other.

If a Soviet veto is imposed on illegal grounds, it is the Council, and not some other Organ, which should determine the illegality and the consequences thereof. The Council might request the International Court of Justice's aid in this matter, but both the Council and Assembly have refrained from putting this question to the Court in the past.

The Soviets have cast vetoes on membership resolutions more than two dozen times. In each case the President of the Council has declared that the resolution failed because of the negative vote. The President never made any other ruling or failed to make this one, and his action was never challenged by a member of the Council.

Mr. Belaunde in the past, and obliquely in his present proposal, has advocated a unique theory. In essence it is that a "recommendation" need not be accomplished by one single action of the Council. It could be evidenced by the totality of favorable votes at various times, single or multiple proposals for admission, etc. For example, if an applicant received the favorable vote of five members including three permanent members at one juncture, and received the favorable vote of another permanent member at a later time, and was proposed in a package deal (which failed of adoption) by the remaining permanent member—that would constitute a favorable recommendation.

In addition to the recurrent weakness of having the Assembly find a recommendation of the Council when the Council found none, this theory runs counter to the usual practices of parliamentary bodies.

Decisions are normally reached by a show of hands at one instant and not by a tally of those in favor, to one degree or another, at various times. The old expression "stand up and be counted" has a great deal of relevance to this situation.

IV. CONCLUSION

The above analysis discloses that none of the Latin-American "juridical" plans for breaking the membership impasse rests on a good legal foundation. That of Peru in particular is ingenious. But it is believed that the International Court of Justice, if asked, would not answer that the Assembly could now admit to membership the nine applicants in the Soviet package which individually have received seven or more votes. The Court has already ruled out the Argentine plan. History and practice appear to condemn El Salvador's proposal.

Bureau of European Affairs (Allen)*

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] April 9, 1953.

Subject: Membership Problem in UN

Participants: Count Guidotti, Italian Observer
Ambassador Lodge
Mr. Ross (part of conversation) } US
Mr. W. P. Allen

In the course of a general conversation, Count Guidotti made clear his Government does not intend at present to press actively any further steps to obtain Italy's admission to the United Nations. He recalled they had made their one big, determined effort during the Paris session of the GA, at which time the problem was much simpler of solution, and found then it was impossible to obtain an agreement of enough of the major powers to accomplish their objective. They continue to stand, of course, on the tripartite declaration of a year and a half ago in which the Governments of the US, UK and France expressed their determination to make every effort to obtain Italy's admission.

However, Guidotti raised the possibility that if as a result of the current apparent change of Kremlin tactics there should be an armistice in Korea, this might lead to seating the Chinese Communist representatives, which, in turn, would create a more propitious atmosphere on the whole problem of membership and perhaps re-open possibilities for some sort of arrangement to admit a number of the pending applicants.

Beyond recalling that he had been one of the first Senators strongly to espouse Italy's admission and reiterating his belief that Italy should be a member, Ambassador Lodge was noncommittal on any immediate prospects.

In the course of the conversation, Count Guidotti did make clear his strong hope that whatever eventually might be done in the membership problem, it would not be necessary to include also the question of German membership since that was in turn so dependent upon the central question of German unity that to seek to include West German membership in the UN as part of any arrangement would thus preclude all practical possibilities indefinitely.

In response to a question Ambassador Guidotti stated he saw no possibility of any advance towards a solution of the membership problem being made through the Inter-Sessional Membership Study Committee which the first part of this Session had established. This, he implied, was simply a holding operation and in effect a waste of time since a solution to the membership deadlock, if and when it comes, will come about through changed circumstances and not through any work which such a Committee could perform.

[WASHINGTON,] April 27, 1953.

Subject: Decision on Membership Policy

Mr. Hyde informed us last weekend of the following developments:

1. The French have received new instructions authorizing them to accept a general membership deal;
2. Senator Lodge is attracted to the idea and will probably write a letter today to the Secretary suggesting a re-examination of the whole membership policy with the idea of his negotiating a Big 5 agreement.

Since the special Assembly committee on membership will begin work almost immediately, and since both the Secretary and Ambassador Lodge plan to be away for some time after this week, a decision will be necessary this week.

We think the most serious questions involved in this probably relate to Chinese representation, unless an armistice becomes more remote or unless the Chinese Communists are condemned as aggressors in Indochina. Pressure on our Chinese representation policy is already strong and will become more serious by the next Assembly. It is suggested that the least we could do—if a decision is reached to embark on a course of seeking large-scale membership agreement—would be to insist upon assurances from other friendly and important countries that there will be no linking of the membership problem with the seating of the Chinese Communists.<sup>2</sup>

We have studied other possible combinations, having in view a “Missouri Compromise” arrangement in which fewer states would be admitted now on a 3-1 ratio. However, there seems to be no formula under which this ratio could be maintained. The most logical approach would be to take Europe first and then Asia, but the Soviet ratio is too high in Europe and we would thus be giving up our bargaining power before securing the admission of Japan. What we therefore come to is a fully inclusive arrangement with the possibility of postponing action on the divided states.

Subject: Reopening of UN Membership Question

An informal report has been received from USUN that the French delegate's instructions on the UN membership question have been changed. The French are now to favor the working out of some package arrangement with the USSR.

Senator Lodge is understood to be at least open-minded on the problem and is preparing a letter to the Secretary requesting that the Department review the whole question. It is anticipated that the letter will reach the Department Tuesday morning. The question of membership will accordingly become again a matter of intensive study in the Department within the next few days. Secretary Dulles, in his book on U.S. foreign policy, favored the general concept of universality so there is some feeling that he too may be inclined toward a fresh approach to the membership question.

In commenting on the changed French instructions, one of the UK delegates made a remark to the effect that the French had in mind the seating of the Chinese Communists.

Comment: The membership question is being precipitated at this time in part because the special committee which was appointed by the GA last Fall to seek a solution to the membership deadlock is soon to begin active discussions in New York. While discussion of package proposals would have no part in the comparatively abstract discussions of the committee, national policies with respect to a package proposal will be reflected indirectly. Thus, for example, if this Government is contemplating abandoning opposition to package proposals, our representative in the committee will naturally dwell more on the benefits of universality and the need for a less rigid interpretation of Article IV of the Charter than upon the necessity for considering each application individually without reference to any other considerations.

I have long been of the view that a solution of the membership problem must be based upon some kind of a package arrangement although it may be dressed up in various ways—barring, of course, a complete change in East-West relations. I feel uneasy, however, about possible political implications of a change in position at the present moment. It seems entirely possible that an effort will be made to bring in the Chinese representation question as a balancing factor in some manner.

The British comment on French intentions, while possibly lightly made and with political motivations not entirely clear, suggests the possibility of a tie-in in the French mind between the Chinese representation question and the Indochinese situation. If the Chinese Communists were to recognize the UK in the near future—a possibility which CA has had in mind for some time—this gesture while inexpensive to the Chinese Communists might have serious consequences in under-mining British resistance to the seating of the Chinese Communists. While we have clearly got to face this situation if a truce is reached there are certain disadvantages in reaching this point at this time.

Full study of the subject will, however, have to await Senator Lodge's letter and intensive consideration of whether (a) a reasonable package arrangement can be worked out and (b) whether we can indicate decisively to the British and the French that in working along these lines with them we shall expect that they will stand firm on the Chinese representation issue.

Subject: Reconsideration of "Package" Approach to Membership Problem

Attached is a draft of a memorandum on the membership question which UNP is sending to Mr. Hickerson today. As indicated in a memorandum earlier this week, Senator Lodge is understood to be interested in reviewing the possibilities for a "package" approach to the membership problem. Although a letter from him giving his views had been expected, there have been delays in the preparation of the letter in New York. UNP is accordingly proceeding with a study of the question in view of the urgency of the matter. Both Ambassador Lodge and Secretary Dulles are planning to be away after this week so that if any decision is to be reached on the question at this time it will have to be by Friday.

The draft memorandum has accordingly been given by UNP to the Geographic Bureaus for informal study and comment.

So far as FE is concerned the draft memorandum presents the following main problems:

1) Korea: Are we prepared to consider proposing in a second step of the negotiations that Korea's admission be postponed until some specified future time—such as the achievement of unification; the conclusion of the political conference on a Korean settlement?

2) Indochinese States: Would FE similarly be prepared in a second step of the negotiations to accept postponement of the admission of the Indochinese States to some agreed future date—such as the conclusion of hostilities in the general area, etc.?

3) Outer Mongolia: Is FE prepared, after the initial proposal has been rejected, to accept an arrangement including Outer Mongolia if such inclusion is the price of the arrangement?

Membership for Japan is provided for in both steps 1 and 2 of the UNP draft. The effort to include Spain which is not at present a candidate may be questioned. Certainly FE might object if its inclusion appears likely to render a package proposal unacceptable. The omission of Switzerland which, like Spain, is also not a candidate is not explained in the draft.

In view of the urgency of the problem I am circulating the draft to the three Offices immediately and shall get in touch with you as soon as I have the comments.

1. Problem

There is a strong feeling among United Nations members that the seven-year membership stalemate should be broken. A special committee will shortly study the entire membership problem. The present moment may be suitable for a determination by the United States of its definitive program or policy toward the problem.

Twenty-one states—16 non-Soviet and 5 Soviet-controlled—must be considered for admission. Of these, all but the Federal Republic of Germany and Spain have applied. All fourteen non-communist* applicants have been vetoed by the USSR while the five Soviet candidates† have never received seven Security Council votes.

The USSR has proposed, as a single “deal”, the admission of its five candidates and nine of the non-Soviet applicants (all but Japan, Republic of Korea, Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia). While this proposal has not been adopted, it is generally recognized that—unless a number of states were to remove their objections to Latin American suggestions for circumventing the veto—the only possibility of a complete solution would be through Big Five agreement to include practically all states, Soviet and non-Soviet. However, we must expect that unless the Chinese Communists remain in the “aggressor” status, attempts will be made to include the seating of the Chinese Communists in any general membership arrangement.

The alternative to a general membership agreement would be to permit non-members to participate in the General Assembly. This would not be a really satisfactory solution for the non-member states but must be offered to friendly applicants if their admission cannot be achieved. The essential question, therefore is: Are there terms on which it would be desirable for the United States, during the next few months, to promote Big Five agreement for the admission of a number of new members?

II. Possible approach to negotiation of membership agreement

The following approach to Big 5 negotiations would depend upon prior assurance from the UK, France and a reasonable number of other states that they would oppose any efforts to include the seating of Chinese Communists as part of a membership settlement.

1. Our initial position might be to indicate that, in our view, the membership problem is the admission of twenty states (including Germany and Spain but not Outer Mongolia) and accordingly to suggest Big 5 agreement to (a) admit all fourteen non-Soviet applicants and the four European satellites (not Outer Mongolia), and (b) not to use the veto to exclude any future applicants. The United States might later agree to Outer Mongolia if this will serve our objectives.

2. Although we would consider any suggestions for the admission of fewer states, no such plan would probably be workable or satisfactory to us. In any discussions of this problem, our objective should be to secure some agreement in principle that would provide for all 16 of our candidates even if not all were admitted immediately. Thus, we might accept postponement of the admission of the Republic of

Korea, the Federal Republic of Germany, the three Indochinese states and possibly Spain, if terms for their subsequent admission were agreed to and if the USSR accepted all other states we favor.

3. Should the Soviet Union offer less than the above, we would have to consider whether to reject the entire arrangement or, alternatively, to support the admission of states upon which agreement is possible and press for the broadest possible participation in the General Assembly of any states we favor which are not admitted.

III. Discussion

The approach suggested above would represent the distance to which the United States might go in an effort to reach agreement on the membership problem. It would require concessions which the Soviets have never been willing to consider. In fact, Soviet agreement to Korea, Japan, Germany, the Indochinese states and Spain may well depend upon prior political settlements. If agreement is impossible, there may be political advantage in offering an arrangement as suggested above and in having it rejected by the USSR.

Perhaps the most serious questions would be the implications for the Chinese representation problem. A Korean armistice would make it increasingly difficult to maintain support for excluding the Chinese Communists. These difficulties would probably be increased by seeking a membership settlement through agreement. Therefore, it is believed necessary before seeking such a settlement to obtain firm assurances from the UK, France and others that they will oppose efforts to link the seating of the Chinese Communists to the membership problem.

The Soviets will doubtless insist on Outer Mongolia's inclusion in any agreement. Thus, we should not embark on negotiations unless we can, if necessary, ultimately accept Outer Mongolia in return for all the rest.

Subject: Objectives and Work Program of Special Membership Committee

The following are the Department's views on the objectives of the Special Membership Committee and on the organization of its work. We hope that advance agreement can be reached on these matters with Committee Members so that at the outset the Committee will decide upon a suitable work program.

The main purpose of the Committee should be to develop the various alternative approaches to the membership question in concrete enough form so that the Assembly could, if desirable, make use of them in the fall. The Committee should, insofar as practicable, avoid consideration of the qualifications of individual applicants and confine its study to the larger aspects of the entire problem. It should preferably not make specific recommendations for a particular course of action or vote on individual proposals, but should examine all proposals offered as solutions and report to the Assembly the arguments for and against each of them. In other words, its objective should be a thorough analysis of all proposed solutions which would assist the Assembly to reach a decision.

The proposals which the Committee will probably consider fall into several categories. In one category are proposals regarding admission procedures, such as the Assembly's previous recommendation that the Big Five agree among themselves not to veto membership applications, and various Latin American proposals calling for independent Assembly action to admit applicants which have been vetoed by the Soviet Union. In a second category are proposals regarding the application of the criteria of Article 4, such as the Peruvian resolution adopted by the Sixth Session, suggestions for a universal membership and the Soviet proposal for simultaneous admission of applicants. Under a third category is the suggestion for non-voting participation in the Assembly for non-Member states, such as the proposal submitted to the Assembly by El Salvador in 1950.

Under our conception of the Committee's objectives, it would report on all of these approaches. Although we could not support the various Latin American proposals for Assembly action to admit applicants and would have to express our strong doubts as to their legality, the promotion of them by the Latin Americans would point up the responsibility of the Soviet veto for the frustration of the membership question and might have a useful effect upon the Soviet Union. From this point of view it would be desirable that statements of these proposals be included in the Committee's report even though the majority could not endorse them. Similarly, while we could not support the principle of absolute universality or an application of Article 4 based on this principle, for your information we might at some time in the future have to accept this approach should we decide to seek an omnibus settlement. It may therefore be found desirable for the Committee to state this approach as well as the application of Article 4 which the United States and the majority have thus far favored. Finally, we believe it would be advantageous for the Committee to give some consideration to the question of non-voting participation in the Assembly for non-Member states. Even though we have not decided to press for this alternative to membership in view of the negative reaction of Italy, and should make this point clear to the British and others, we believe we should utilize the occasion for developing this possibility should we decide to move ahead on this basis in the future and in order to strengthen our position against the Soviet Union on the membership question.

If agreement can be reached on the over-all objective of the Committee, it could then proceed to reach decisions on its work program which would achieve this objective. In our view the best procedure might be for the Committee to ask the Chairman and Rapporteur to prepare an agenda listing the various proposals which the Committee would analyze. These would include the major proposals discussed in the Secretariat paper on the historical background of the membership question as well as any new proposals which might be introduced. The proposals might be organized on the basis of the categories mentioned above. In order to limit the debate and minimize pressure by individuals for Committee approval of specific proposals, the Members might be requested to give their views on all proposals within one category by a single statement. At the end of the Committee's discussion, the Rapporteur would prepare a report containing a clear statement of the proposals considered and a summary of the views expressed on each.

POSITION PAPER ON ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS

THE PROBLEM

The Special Committee on Membership established by the Seventh General Assembly was instructed "to make a detailed study of the question of the admission of States to membership in the United Nations, examining the proposals and suggestions which have been made in the General Assembly and its Committees or which may be submitted to the Special Committee by any Members of the United Nations . . .". It was requested to submit a report on its work and conclusions to the Eighth Session.

Generally speaking, the proposals which the Committee will consider fall into three categories. In one category are proposals regarding admission procedures, such as the various Latin American proposals calling for independent action by the Assembly to admit applicants vetoed by the Soviet Union. In a second category are proposals regarding the application of the criteria of Article 4, such as the Peruvian resolution adopted by the Sixth Assembly, proposals for a universal membership, and the Soviet proposal for simultaneous admission of applicants. Under a third category is the proposal submitted by El Salvador in 1950 for non-voting participation in the Assembly for applicants excluded by the Soviet veto.

What should be the position of the United States on the work of the Special Committee and on the various proposals which it will consider?

RECOMMENDATIONS

The United States position on the work of the Committee and proposals it will consider should be as follows:

1. General Objective and Procedure of the Committee

The Committee's objectives should be limited to an exploration of the various possible approaches to the membership question and, without itself taking decisions, to a formulation of these alternatives in such a way as to facilitate action by the Assembly and the Security Council. It should avoid consideration of the qualifications of individual applicants and confine its study to the larger aspects of the entire problem, examining all proposals offered as solutions, and without casting votes or making specific recommendations, reporting to the Assembly the arguments for and against all proposed solutions.

2. Proposals on Admission Procedures

(a) With respect to various proposals relating to the veto, the Committee's report should contain adequate recognition that the most important reason for the frustration of the membership question is the Soviet abuse of the veto right.

(b) The United States should indicate its strong sympathy with the purposes of the proposals of El Salvador, Argentina and Peru, since they represent an unending effort at a solution and since they represent attempts to counteract the arbitrary policies of the Soviet Union. However, we must note the legal difficulties of these proposals as outlined in the Comment section below. If these proposals are pressed to a vote, we would have to vote against them.

(c) If the Latin American countries wish to discuss the possibility of an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice on the veto, a request for such an opinion should preferably be so framed as to link the question of the effect of a negative vote of a permanent member to the Court's opinion of 1948. However, the United States should not take the initiative in proposing this alternative or express optimism as to the results of recourse to the Court.

3. Proposals Concerning the Application of the Criteria of Article 4

(a) The Committee's report should stress the necessity of complying with the Court's opinion of 1948 and of basing votes on membership applications exclusively on the conditions contained in the Charter.

(b) If any members take the position that Article 4 should be applied so as to permit the attainment of absolute universality and the admission of an applicant without the act of admission constituting approval of the conduct of its government, we should not endorse this position and should point out the difficulties involved in view of the language of Article 4. However, we should not object if the arguments in favor of an application of Article 4 based on universality are included in the report together with a statement of the application which we have supported.

4. Non-Member Participation in the General Assembly

Unless prior consultations show that Italy and Japan object, the Committee's report should include, as one of the approaches studied, the grant of non-Member participation in the Assembly as a possible temporary measure if no solution to the membership problem is forthcoming. If practicable, some other member, such as El Salvador, should be induced to present a paper or proposal on this matter.

COMMENT

Background

The qualifications for new members and the procedures for their admission are governed by Article 4, which reads as follows:

1. Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.

2. The admission of any such state to membership in the United Nations will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

The International Court of Justice has given two advisory opinions on Article 4. In a 1948 opinion, it said that a Member, while recognizing that a state fulfills the conditions of Article 4, cannot subject its favorable vote on the admission of that state to the additional condition that other states be admitted simultaneously. In a 1950 opinion, the Court advised that the General Assembly cannot admit a state in the absence of a favorable Security Council recommendation.

Only nine states have been admitted as new members since the founding of the Organization. These nine are: Afghanistan, Burma, Iceland, Indonesia, Israel, Pakistan, Sweden, Thailand, and Yemen. The last time that a state was admitted was in 1950, when Indonesia was accepted.

Nineteen other candidates have applied. The USSR has used its veto 28 times to block the admission of fourteen of these candidates (Austria, Cambodia, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Republic of Korea, Laos, Libya, Nepal, Portugal, and Vietnam), all of which the Assembly has determined to be qualified. The remaining five, which are Soviet-sponsored (Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Rumania, and Outer Mongolia), have never received the seven votes required for a Security Council recommendation or been found qualified by the Assembly. In addition to these nineteen, the North Korean and Vietminh regimes have submitted communications purporting to be membership applications.

The Soviet Union has proposed the simultaneous admission of nine of the non-Soviet applicants (including Austria, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Jordan, Libya, Nepal and Portugal but not Cambodia, Japan, Republic of Korea, Laos and Vietnam) and of the five Soviet-sponsored candidates, always making clear, however, that it would continue to use its veto to block the admission of the non-Soviet applicants unless its own candidates were also admitted. The majority on the Security Council, including the the United States, have not accepted this package deal. The membership question has therefore remained deadlocked, the Soviet Union vetoing the non-Soviet applicants and the majority rejecting the Soviet-sponsored candidates or a package deal.

The large majority of members have become increasingly concerned over this stalemate. Some of the Latin American countries have proposed that the Assembly should itself proceed to admit applicants vetoed by the Soviet Union. Other countries have urged a solution within existing membership procedures based on universality.

The Seventh Session of the Assembly established a Special Committee to review the whole problem and report its conclusions to the Eighth Session. The Committee is composed of representatives of the following nineteen states: Argentina, Belgium, Canada, China, Colombia, Cuba, Egypt, El Salvador, France, Greece, Lebanon, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Peru, Philippines, South Africa, United Kingdom, and United States. (The Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia and India were also designated as members of the Committee but declined to participate.)

Work of Special Committee

1. Objectives and Work Program

The main purpose of the Committee should be to develop the various alternative approaches to the membership question in concrete enough form so that the Assembly could, if desirable, make use of them in the fall. The Committee should, insofar as practicable, avoid consideration of the qualifications of individual applicants and confine its study to the larger aspects of the entire problem. It should preferably not make specific recommendations for a particular course of action or vote on individual proposals, but should examine all proposals offered as solutions and report to the Assembly the arguments for and against each of them. In other words, its objective should be a thorough analysis of all proposed solutions which would assist the Assembly to reach a decision.

It is especially important that the Committee's debates and report not serve to promote the idea that a solution can be achieved only through big power negotiations—a development which would tend to weaken our hand if we later decide to negotiate a settlement and which would make our position more difficult should we decide not to negotiate a settlement. The Committee should therefore discuss and report upon all the approaches, including a provisional arrangement for permitting non-members to participate in the Assembly pending their admission. To the same end, it would be preferable if the United States, United Kingdom, and France would not declare themselves definitely on the substance of the problem, and if the countries which strongly desire a big power settlement would refrain from enthusiastic declarations or resolutions to this effect in the Committee. The small powers on the Committee should, accordingly, be induced to take the formal leadership in the Committee in order to emphasize, at this stage, the role of the Assembly as a whole in this problem rather than that of the great powers. In this way the Committee, representing the broad membership of the Assembly, can convey to the USSR an impression of its sense of urgency concerning this problem and of a willingness to consider courses other than big power agreement.

If agreement can be reached on the over-all objective of the Committee, it could then proceed to reach decisions on its work program which would achieve this objective. The best procedure might be for the Committee to ask the Chairman and Rapporteur to prepare an agenda listing the various proposals which the Committee would analyze. These would include the major proposals discussed in the Secretariat paper on the historical background of the membership question as well as any new proposals which might be introduced. The proposals might be organized on the basis of the categories mentioned in the "Problem" above. In order to limit the debate and minimize pressure by individuals for Committee approval of specific proposals, the members might be requested to give their views on all proposals within one category by a single statement. At the end of the Committee's discussion, the Rapporteur would prepare a report containing a clear statement of the proposals considered and a summary of the views expressed on each.

2. Proposals on Admission Procedures

The continued use of the veto over membership applications by the Soviet Union has led to repeated efforts to find ways to eliminate the veto from votes on recommendations for admission. The United States in 1947 announced that it would not exercise its veto to exclude any of the then applicants which the Assembly deemed qualified, and said that it would go further and accept complete elimination of the veto in the Security Council in reference to the admission of applicants in the future. In 1948, the Interim Committee embarked upon a study of voting procedures in the Security Council. The results of its study were embodied in a resolution adopted by the Assembly in the spring of 1949. This resolution, inter alia, recommended that the permanent members of the Security Council should seek agreement among themselves upon what possible issues they might forbear to use the veto and suggested that admission to membership was such an issue. In the fall of 1949, the General Assembly adopted a resolution recommending that the permanent members refrain from using the veto over membership applications. The United States supported these resolutions and has reiterated from time to time its position that it will not prevent the admission of any state whose application receives seven affirmative votes in the Security Council. It would be desirable for the Committee's report to stress the past efforts of the Assembly on this question and to recognize that the most important reason for the frustration of the membership problem is the Soviet abuse of the veto right.

As a result of the continued use of the veto by the Soviet Union, a number of Latin Americans have pressed for direct Assembly action to admit applicants. The Special Committee will have before it three proposals, submitted by Argentina, four Central American states, and Peru, respectively, calling for such action. These proposals overlap in some respects but the essentials of each are as follows: Argentina submits that the Assembly can admit a member upon a "negative recommendation" of the Security Council; El Salvador contends that the Assembly can admit applicants which have received seven or more favorable votes in the Security Council on the ground that a recommendation to admit a new member is not subject to the veto. Peru also maintains that membership applications are not subject to the veto, and that even if the veto does apply, it is inadmissible in cases involving a violation of the Charter; thus, according to Peru, the Assembly can admit at least the nine non-Soviet applicants included in the Soviet package deal since the Soviet Union is willing to admit these nine as part of a group and its separate vetoes of these states are illegal.

The United States fully sympathizes with the motives behind the Latin American proposals but each of them presents legal difficulties which make it difficult if not impossible for us to support them. In the first place, as the International Court of Justice advised in 1950, the General Assembly cannot admit an applicant in the absence of a favorable Security Council recommendation. In the second place, it has been generally understood from the beginning that a recommendation to admit a new member is subject to the veto and the Assembly and Council have always proceeded on this basis. Even if there were some doubt on this point, it would be for the Security Council and not the Assembly to decide whether the question was vetoable. There could be serious consequences in connection with the veto power over other matters of vital concern to us if a precedent were established whereby the Assembly could itself determine whether a matter before the Council is substantive or procedural. In the third place, even though the Soviet vetoes of Italy and the eight others included in its package deal have been cast on non-Charter grounds, it does not follow that they are null and void or that the Assembly can take action assuming this. It is believed that the majority on the Committee will be unable to support the Latin American proposals for these same reasons.

At the same time, the promotion of these proposals by the Latin American countries would point up the responsibility of the Soviet veto for the frustration of the membership question and might even have a useful effect upon the Soviet Union. It would therefore be useful for the Committee's report to include statements on them even though the majority could not support them. It would also be desirable for the Committee to refrain from rejecting them through a vote.

At the Sixth Session of the General Assembly the Central American States submitted a draft resolution which would request an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice as to whether membership applications are subject to the veto. While this proposal was subsequently withdrawn and has never been seriously considered by the Assembly, the Latin American countries may urge its consideration by the Special Committee. However, we have grave doubts that the Court would consider itself competent to consider the question and even if it did consider itself competent it would almost certainly decide that a recommendation to admit a new member is substantive.

If a question were to be submitted to the Court, it should at least be calculated to increase the likelihood that the Court would consider the question and give a desirable decision. A question which linked the veto problem to the Court's 1948 opinion would seem to be the most logical alternative. For instance, the Court might be asked whether the Assembly can admit a state when a permanent member of the Security Council has proposed and voted for a proposal that the Council recommend the admission of the State as one of a group of states to be admitted simultaneously and yet voted against a proposal in the Security Council for a separate recommendation on the admission of the State, which proposal received seven or more affirmative votes and no negative vote from any other permanent member. As the Seventh Session of the Assembly the United States Delegation discussed this alternative informally with several Latin American delegations. However, the latter decided not to press for any request for an advisory opinion.

If the Latin American members of the Committee commence discussion of a request for an advisory opinion from the Court on the veto it would be desirable again to discuss with them informally the alternative mentioned in the paragraph above. However, it would be necessary to point out that we are not at all optimistic about the results of recourse to the Court.

3. Proposals Regarding the Criteria of Article 4

The Soviet Union has conditioned its consent to the admission of nine applicants on the simultaneous admission of the five Soviet-sponsored candidates. The General Assembly has adopted a number of resolutions requesting the Soviet Union to abandon this policy. It has, since 1947, adopted resolutions determining that specific candidates are qualified and should be admitted and requesting Security Council reconsideration of their applications. In 1947 it requested an advisory opinion from the Court as to whether a Member can condition its consent to the admission of one State upon the simultaneous admission of another. When the Court replied in the negative, the Assembly in 1948 adopted a resolution recommending that states act in accordance with the Court's opinion. At the Sixth Session the Assembly again requested that the Security Council reconsider all applications and base its action exclusively on the conditions contained in Article 4 and on the facts establishing the existence of these conditions. The Soviet Union has disregarded all of these resolutions and has maintained that its package deal is the only solution.

The United States has warmly supported the Assembly's resolutions directed against the Soviet membership policies. It has strongly opposed the Soviet package deal on the grounds that each application should be considered separately on its own merits, that the deal includes five applicants which in our judgement should not be admitted and omits others which should. Thus far the majority in the Assembly have supported the United States position. It would be desirable for the Committee to note the past resolutions of the Assembly and to determine that the Soviet policies are contrary to the Charter.

At the same time it will be realized that a number of Members, particularly the Scandinavian countries and certain Arab-Asian states, favor universality as an immediate goal. Many of them have supported the Soviet package proposal even though they do not endorse the theory of en bloc admission. Sweden has submitted resolutions to past Assemblies recommending reconsideration of applications in the light of the principle of universality, and in 1949 Iraq proposed that members apply with greater flexibility and generosity Article 4 to States which have not received seven votes in the Security Council. The Committee will undoubtedly consider proposals for absolute universality and for an application of Article 4 under which the Organization, in deciding whether to admit an applicant, would not have to pass judgment on the conduct of its government.

The United States has always expressed the opinion that universality is a desirable ultimate goal and that all states should be admitted as soon as they become qualified. However, we have maintained that the criteria of Article 4 cannot be ignored and that the Organization has to examine the conduct of an applicant in deciding whether it is a "peace-loving" state which is "able and willing" to carry out its obligations. We have pointed out that the Soviet satellites have rendered at least moral support to Communist aggression in Korea; that the European satellites defied efforts of the Assembly to end the guerilla war in Greece; have waged a war of nerves against Yugoslavia; and have molested foreign diplomats; and that Rumania, Bulgaria and Hungary have violated the human rights provisions of their Peace Treaties. On these grounds we have argued that the Soviet candidates do not meet the basic criteria required by Article 4.

It would be desirable for the Committee to include in its report a statement of the application of Article 4 which we and the majority have thus far favored. At the same time, it will be realized that under existing procedures a political settlement based on universality providing for the admission of both Soviet and non-Soviet applicants appears to be the only solution to the membership problem. If the United States should ever decide to seek such a settlement, it would be desirable to base agreement on a principle and not a deal, and we might therefore have to accept a new application of Article 4. For this reason, and since the Committee's report should contain statements on all proposed solutions, it is believed that the United States should not object if Members of the Committee favoring universality request that a statement of their views be included in the report.

4. Non-voting Participation in the Assembly for non-Member States

Only one formal proposal for non-member participation has been presented to the General Assembly. Under this proposal, submitted by El Salvador in 1950, the General Assembly would have requested the Secretary General to invite non-Members whose applications have been vetoed by the USSR to send observers to sessions of the General Assembly and its Committees, including the Interim Committee, "in order to enable them to express their views and furnish information whenever consulted by the Delegation or any Member State." The proposal would also have provided for the distribution to Members of documents and letters sent by the non-Members to the Secretary General. The General Assembly, however, did not adopt this proposal. Many Members, including the United States, while fully sympathizing with the motives behind El Salvador's suggestion, wanted more time to consider its implications or had doubts that the non-Members would themselves be interested.

The Department has for the past few years considered the possibility of granting non-Members the right to participate in the Assembly pending their admission, and has concluded that there is nothing in the Charter to prevent this. However, thus far Italy has opposed this idea, Japan has shown no great enthusiasm, and some Members have expressed reservations. We have, therefore, never pressed for this course.

While we have made no decision to suggest non-member participation as an interim solution, it would nonetheless be desirable for the Committee to consider this alternative along with other proposals, provided Italy and Japan have no objections. This would be in line with our view that the Committee's objective should be an analysis of all proposed solutions. Furthermore, it is possible that Italy, Japan and others might become interested if it becomes clear that full membership will not be forthcoming in the near future, if an attractive plan is submitted to them and if the plan is presented not merely as a favor to them but also as a means to increase the effectiveness of the Assembly. In addition, discussion of non-member participation in the Committee would strengthen our position against the Soviet Union on the membership question.

There are various possible alternative arrangements under which non-Members qualified for admission might be permitted to participate in the Assembly. The Assembly might adopt a resolution providing that, upon the specific request of a non-Member, the Assembly might invite the state to participate without vote in Committees on which all Members are represented and in the plenary meetings. Participation might include speaking under the same rules as members, and of making proposals. The Assembly might also request non-Members which participate in the Assembly's proceedings to make a voluntary financial contribution to cover the cost of their participation. While we would wish to avoid discussion in the Committee on the specific states which might be granted the right to participate, we would hope that the Assembly, if it decided to move ahead on this basis, would limit the privilege to those states already found qualified for membership.

If possible the United States should avoid taking the lead in discussions of non-Member participation in the Committee. El Salvador might be approached informally to ascertain whether it wished to initiate discussion on this matter.

Subject: Membership

You will remember that we have talked about a possible message from Ambassador Lodge to the Department which would be of such a character as to bring about the necessary crystallization of policy in the Government on this membership question. I suggest that perhaps the most effective way to do this would be for you to submit something to Ambassador Lodge, and I am offering you the attached language as an indication of what might be most helpful here. I understand that you have in mind adding a statement regarding the current meetings of the Membership Committee.

I am impressed by the strong feeling among United Nations members that a settlement of the membership question is imperative. The French, who have hitherto opposed any package deal on membership, have now indicated to us that they would favor such an approach provided agreement could be reached with the United Kingdom and with us. I shall need to exchange views with both the French and British on this subject in the very near future.

In my opinion there would be positive advantage to us if we could, within the next few months, make a proposal for the admission of a substantial number of new members. Looking ahead to the General Assembly, it will probably be very helpful to us to have some proposals of this character. I realize that the problem has many complexities which we should need to work out before offering any specific proposal. I should appreciate it if, on an urgent basis, the Department would give me an indication of the lines along which I might discuss this with the French and British, and work out the terms and conditions under which such a proposal might be made. I assume that at some point the matter would come into discussion among the Big 5.

438. Re Membership Committee:

Immediate injection omnibus proposal by Egypt into Committee's discussion and decision hold general debate may raise difficulties for US unless we reach agreement with UK and France on satisfactory line to be taken by all three delegations. Dept suggests desirability discussion this problem with UK and France. Suggest you stress difficulties for all three governments if effect Committee's discussions and report is promote idea solution possible only through political settlement. In fact any concessions made in Committee relating to possible membership agreement in future would on one hand weaken our bargaining power with USSR if we decide seek settlement and would on other hand make our positions much more difficult in Assembly if we decide against. You might suggested to France and UK most effective method handling problem would be:

1. Continue stress in Committee necessity keeping several approaches open.
2. Stress necessity Committee not embark on consideration individual applicants including any specific plans for admission particular countries.
3. Point out serious weakness Egyptian position in advocating members apply different voting standards in SC than GA and base our reasoning on Court opinion to effect decision on membership applications must be based solely upon criteria article 4.

FYI if UN members desire achieve universal membership by political settlement we believe this could be done only if general agreement reached by Members beforehand upon some new method of applying criteria article 4. This would necessarily mean any new standard would be applied to all states and not merely some as in case Soviet proposal and that much lower standard of qualifications would in effect be used by members within discretion they have under article 4. However since we have not made any decision seek omnibus settlement we would prefer avoid any indication willingness accept new basis for applying article 4 which might be taken up by others as basis for strong movement toward omnibus arrangement. We therefore hope three governments would not raise question new application criteria of article 4 themselves during Committee discussions unless this proves absolutely necessary. End FYI.

NEW YORK, May 21, 1953—6:50 p. m.

715. Re admission of new members: As Department aware, there appears to be strong feeling among UN members, particularly the small countries, that settlement of membership question is imperative. French, who have hitherto opposed any package deal on membership, have now indicated to us that they would favor such approach provided agreement could be reached with UK and US.

Proceedings thus far in special committee on membership indicate sentiment in favor of breaking deadlock. As indicated in Deptel 438, May 14, Egyptian suggestion that omnibus settlement is only practical solution would probably raise difficulties for US. British feel it may be difficult to keep committee from at least tacitly recognizing that a political accommodation among the big five is only way out of impasse. Looking forward to 8th GA, when Soviet package proposal doubtless will be reintroduced (with better prospects of adoption unless some other settlement is in sight), it might be helpful to us to take initiative with some sort of omnibus proposal of our own, although I have reached no firm conclusion as to what the precise nature of such a proposal should be.

I am generally in favor of trying, under the right circumstances, to find omnibus solution of this problem.

Our action in UN on this question should be consistent with broad lines of policy laid down by President in his April 16 speech which, while it did not refer to admissions question, did refer to a series of other specific matters, in order of priority, as tests of Soviet sincerity. In other words, while he is willing to meet Soviets half way, he wants evidence of their sincerity in regard to such matters Korea, Indochina, Austria and Germany before we start making substantial concessions to them. Admission of Soviet satellites to UN would be substantial concession for which there should be some very real quid pro quos.

In addition to foregoing general considerations there are number of specific risks against which we must carefully protect ourselves:

1. There is likely to be, following armistice in Korea, a much stronger emotional and political drive for seating Communist China in UN than for admitting new members. While American public opinion might in due time become reconciled to admission of Soviet satellites to UN, particularly if such action followed clear evidence of Soviet sincerity in regard to matters mentioned in President's speech, I do not anticipate that American public opinion within predictable future would countenance seating Communist China. Any action which we may support with regard to new members is bound to have effect on our position in UN with regard to Chinese representation and could conceivably seriously weaken our position in latter regard. This should be governing consideration.

2. As indicated, any political solution of membership question would have to be based on clear evidence that Soviet Union has demonstrated by deeds its will for peace. Moreover such solution would have to be based on evidence that satellite countries had demonstrated by their action (e.g., Cardinal Mindzenty, et cetera) that they would at least plausibly qualify under Article 4 of charter.

3. We should also insist on something better than two-to-one ratio in our favor in order to preserve at least our voting ratio on important questions in GA. Moreover, we should not lose sight of fact that nuisance value of each Soviet satellite in UN may offset positive advantage we derive from having our friends in UN.

4. Finally, we must face fact that unless we succeed in securing admission of all nations whose candidacies we support, there is every likelihood that the Soviets, having secured the admission of all their satellites, would veto such nations friendly to US as had not been initially admitted. In this connection Department will recall indications we have had from British that they have had in mind package deal which would leave out Japan, admission of Japan presumably to be used as quid pro quo for seating Communist China. This, I feel, would be quite inadmissible for us.

I feel that procedure outlined by Department for work of present admissions committee, which would prevent it from reaching firm conclusions, is entirely sound and I think we should insist, particularly with British but also with French and others, that this committee refrain from vitiating our bargaining power by attempting to make any specific recommendations at all, including a recommendation that a political settlement should be sought.

ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS

I. THE PROBLEM

United Nations Members have become increasingly concerned over the membership deadlock. The question will again be considered at the Eighth Session.

II. BACKGROUND

Under Article 4, membership is open to "peace loving" states which are "able and willing" to carry out their Charter obligations. The As-

Fourteen of the pending applicants (Austria, Cambodia, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Republic of Korea, Laos, Libya, Nepal, Portugal and Vietnam) have been vetoed by the USSR and five (Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Outer Mongolia and Rumania) have never received seven Security Council votes for admission. Spain and the Federal Republic of Germany have not yet applied.

The USSR has proposed the admission en bloc of nine non-Soviet applicants (all but Japan, the Republic of Korea, Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia) and the five Soviet candidates. This proposal has never been accepted. Some Latin American countries have proposed that the Assembly can admit non-Soviet applicants vetoed by the USSR on the grounds that the veto does not apply to membership applications.

A Committee established by the Seventh Assembly met this spring to examine all proposed solutions. Its report contains no specific recommendations. However, it shows that the Latin American proposals for direct Assembly action were generally unacceptable and that whereas the specific Soviet package deal was also unacceptable, many Members felt that the only solution is probably an omnibus settlement involving the admission of both Soviet and non-Soviet applicants.

III. PRESENT U.S. POSITION

1. Recognizing the desirability of the admission of all qualified states, we have supported the admission of the fourteen non-Soviet candidates and opposed the admission of the five Soviet candidates.

2. We have opposed the Soviet "package" on the grounds that each applicant should be considered on its own merits, that the "package" includes applicants which are not qualified and that it omits Japan and others which are.

3. We have indicated that we would not veto membership applications but have maintained that a Security Council recommendation on an application is subject to the veto and that a Council recommendation is necessary before the Assembly can admit an applicant.

4. We have recognized that under existing procedures the only solution to the deadlock probably is an omnibus settlement including Soviet and non-Soviet applicants, but have been unwilling to seek or agree to such a settlement.

5. We intend to reexamine our position before the Eighth Session in the light of circumstances then existing. In May Ambassador Lodge indicated he is generally in favor of seeking an omnibus solution under right circumstances provided this would not adversely affect the Chinese representation problem, provided the USSR and the satellites have given concrete evidence by deeds of a sincerity of peaceful purpose, and provided satisfactory terms of a settlement providing for states we favor can be worked out.

IV. ANTICIPATED DEVELOPMENTS

There may be strong pressure in the Assembly for an omnibus settlement. Support for this course will probably increase if the USSR shows a willingness to reach satisfactory solutions on other long-standing issues.

Subject: General Assembly Matters: UN Membership

Participants: Miss Barbara Salt, First Secretary, British Embassy
Mr. Paul B. Taylor, UNP
Mr. Eric Stein, UNP

Miss Salt came at her request for a general discussion of problems to be expected at the Eighth General Assembly. In particular, she was under instructions to raise the question of United Nations membership.

1. Membership

As to membership, the foreign office had begun to study the problem for this year. They were inclined to think the issue should not be agitated this year and, in particular, they were especially concerned that no impairment of the veto take place through one or another of the Latin American proposals which have been before the United Nations in the past several years. Although the foreign office thinking is not final as yet, they are, as last year, inclined to think that if there is strong pressure for a Latin American proposal, the best course would be to submit it to the International Court on some agreed formulation. She was inclined to favor a formulation that would clearly result in a negative opinion by the Court. She said it is the view of the foreign office that the Chinese representation problem is in its nature, and must be completely separate from the membership problem. She asked whether we felt there was a relationship between the two matters. I said that, speaking personally, it seemed to me there was a connection in that if the Soviet Union were ever to go so far as to agree to a complete "package" of new members, it would be likely to put Communist China into the package as well. I told her we were just now formulat-

Position Paper Prepared in the Department of State for the United States Delegation to the Eighth Regular Session of the General Assembly

ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS

THE PROBLEM

Nineteen membership applications are pending, including fourteen non-Soviet applications (Austria, Cambodia, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Republic of Korea, Laos, Libya, Nepal, Portugal, and Vietnam) and five Soviet-sponsored applications (Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Rumania and Outer Mongolia). In addition, the North Korean and Vietminh regimes have submitted communications purporting to be membership applications. The Federal Republic of Germany and Spain have not yet applied.

In the Security Council the Soviet Union has vetoed all the non-Soviet candidates while the required majority has never approved the admission of the Soviet candidates or the Soviet package proposal for the simultaneous admission of the five Soviet-sponsored applicants and nine of the non-Soviet applicants (all but the Republic of Korea, Japan, Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia).

The General Assembly has become increasingly concerned over the stalemate. The Seventh Session established a Special Committee to study all proposed solutions and placed the membership question on the agenda of the Eighth Session. The Committee met this spring. It analyzed various Latin American proposals for independent Assembly action to admit applicants, as well as proposals like the Soviet package deal. Its report to the Assembly makes no specific recommendations but none of the proposals it reviewed was found generally acceptable.

At the Eighth Session there may be pressure from the Latin American countries for independent Assembly action to admit applicants, but there is likely to be stronger pressure for a political settlement providing for the simultaneous admission of both Soviet and non-Soviet applicants.

UNITED STATES POSITION

1. The United States should indicate support for the fourteen non-Soviet applicants and opposition to the Soviet-sponsored applicants and also to the Soviet package proposal, and should call upon the Soviet Union to abandon its arbitrary membership policies.

2. The United States may support a resolution requesting the Security Council to keep under consideration all pending applications and reaffirming the principle that each application should be considered separately on the basis of the criteria of Article 4.

3. The United States should oppose the Soviet package proposal if it is resubmitted. If the proposal is likely to receive majority support, the United States may seek to amend it in order to obtain a resolution along the lines of recommendation 2 above.

4. The United States should not support proposals for independent Assembly action to admit applicants and should endeavor to persuade their sponsors not to bring them to a vote. However, if necessary to prevent adoption of proposals unacceptable to us, the United States may support a request for an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice as to whether the Assembly can admit an applicant vetoed in the Security Council not on Charter grounds but rather because of the Council's refusal to admit others simultaneously.

5. If Italy and Japan are definitely interested in arrangements for non-member participation in the Assembly without the right to vote, the United States may consult with other members to seek their reactions, with a view to laying the groundwork for possible action along these lines at the next session for states excluded by the Soviet veto.

COMMENT

The United States strongly supports the admission of Italy, Japan and the other non-Soviet applicants and deplores the fact that their admission has been blocked by the Soviet veto. It opposes the admission of the Soviet-sponsored applicants on the ground that they have failed to demonstrate that they meet the basic Charter qualification; and opposes the Soviet package proposal because it is contrary to the Charter principle, reaffirmed by the International Court of Justice in 1948, that each application should be considered separately on its own merits, because it includes the Soviet applicants and because it omits others we strongly favor.

The United States fully sympathizes with the motives behind various Latin American proposals calling upon the Assembly to admit applicants even though the Security Council has not made a favorable recommendation. However these proposals present legal difficulties. Article 4 of the Charter, as interpreted by a Court opinion of 1950, requires a favorable Security Council recommendation before the Assembly can admit an applicant. Furthermore, it has been generally understood from the beginning that recommendations on membership applications are subject to the veto.

Under existing procedures perhaps the only solution lies in a political settlement involving the admission of both Soviet and non-Soviet applicants. However, even in the unlikely event that the Soviet Union could be induced to agree to a settlement which provided for all the states we favor, it is believed that we should not seek such a settlement. There should be concrete deeds on the part of the Soviet Union and its satellites showing a sincere desire to settle other long-standing issues before the satellites are admitted. In addition, United States agreement to admit Soviet satellites in spite of the fact that they have failed to demonstrate that they are able and willing to carry out the Charter obligations could jeopardize support for our position on Chinese representation.

In order to do everything possible for Italy and Japan, the United States has considered arrangements which would give non-Members excluded from membership by the Soviet veto the right to participate in the Assembly on a regular basis without vote. Italy thus far has not been interested and Japan, while more interested than Italy, has shown no great enthusiasm. However, if these countries definitely want such arrangements it would be desirable to consult with other Members to obtain their reactions. We believe that such arrangements could be worked out in accordance with the Charter and might provide the best solution for some time to come. Even though it would not be practicable to take action on non-Member participation arrangements at the Eighth Session, it would be desirable, if Italy and Japan become interested, to lay the groundwork for future action by consulting with other Members, some of which have had legal reservations.

Gadel 5. Re Membership (urtel 183) :

Department sees no difficulty in UK suggestion Members study possible revisions of admission procedures in connection Charter review.

However, we have several objections to UK draft contained reftel. First, draft would close door to various Latin American proposals. Although we cannot support them we believe GA should not reject them finally and categorically. In addition we wish avoid debate with Latin Americans which draft as it now stands would probably necessitate.

Second, UK draft does not like past GA resolutions seek change in USSR policies which are cause of stalemate, and clearly implies GA favors early political solution of membership problem. Resolution could therefore be used by others in attempt persuade us agree to political solution rather than persuade USSR abandon its arbitrary policies.

In light of above we suggest following changes in UK draft:

1. First paragraph should also refer to GA resolution 197A (III) which recommends members act in accordance ICJ 1948 opinion.

2. Conclusions should be omitted. Alternatively, resolution could, without drawing conclusions, simply note that neither procedural methods nor proposals aimed at political solution secured general acceptance in Special Committee.

3. Recommendations should include request that SC keep under consideration all pending applications and that all Members vote on applications solely on basis criteria of Article 4. This recommendation should be inserted after present recommendation (1).

4. Phrase "and in any case before the Ninth Session of the GA" should be omitted from present recommendation 2.

Subject: Membership

Mr. Stein telephoned at 4:30 p. m. to say that Belaunde of Peru is pressing the idea of setting up a negotiating committee of five UN Members on the problem of admission of new members to the UN. The Committee would be instructed to approach all groups and all major powers, with a view to working out a political solution to the membership problem.

Realizing that the Committee could only be a source of annoyance and inconvenience to us, Mr. Stein wondered how strongly we felt that Belaunde should be talked out of his idea. He pointed out that we had dissuaded Belaunde from pressing to a vote last year his resolution seeking a legal solution for the membership problem. Now, therefore, Belaunde was interested in political methods.

I said I believed a good deal would depend on how strongly Belaunde felt that he must take a leading position in the discussion of the membership problem this year. Since he was one of our most useful friends in the Assembly, we obviously could not press our opposition to the idea of a Committee to extremes. Mr. Stein and I discussed some possible compromise language. He suggested that the Assembly give the Secretary General authority to appoint such a Committee when he thought it appropriate, but we doubted the Secretary General would wish to be, or should be, given such discretionary authority. I suggested that alternatively, the resolution might state that such a committee should be established by the 9th General Assembly if no progress had previously been made in the solution of the membership problem by that time.

We left it that we would attempt to think of other formulae by 9:30 tomorrow morning, when the US Delegation Staff will be talking to Byrnes, and later in the day with the British.

I outlined this morning the following possibilities for dealing with Belaunde's proposal for establishing a Negotiating Committee on Membership:

1. We might satisfy Belaunde by permitting him to introduce a general resolution on the membership problem acceptable to the United States and the United Kingdom.
2. The Negotiating Committee might be set up, to be available to the five permanent members of the Security Council when they consider that such a Committee would be useful in reaching a solution.

3. The Committee might consist of the non-permanent members of the Security Council, who would be asked to lend their good offices in connection with the Five Power consultations on membership.

4. The Committee might be asked to look into the problem of associate membership (I cautioned Mr. Stein that this variant could not be used without further consideration of the desirability of stressing associate membership this year).

5. Belaunde might be encouraged to introduce a resolution requesting an advisory opinion of the Court as to whether the Assembly can admit an applicant vetoed in the Security Council on illegal grounds. Mr. Stein remarked that the British and French were strongly opposed to the suggestion.

Mr. Stein will keep us advised.

Delga 13. Re Membership.

Working group met with Governor Byrnes<sup>1</sup> this morning to review situation re membership item. Meeting reviewed UK draft and redraft prepared in New York on basis Gadel 5. Governor Byrnes and group felt this approach unlikely to gain acceptance in face of other approaches likely to be put before ad hoc committee this year.

Meeting analyzed at length the new suggestion of Belaunde concerning a small UN body to undertake negotiation of a membership settlement. Following points were brought out as drawbacks of this approach:

- (a) It would result in establishment of one more UN subsidiary organ which would be unable to achieve results;
- (b) When a settlement of the membership problem becomes possible, such can be achieved without resort to committees;
- (c) Activity by the commission could embarrass the US through proposals for settlement which this government would reject;
- (d) Establishment of the UN body might raise false hopes for a solution of the membership problem, particularly among the 14 applicants whom we support.

There was also discussion of variants on Belaunde suggestion, such as (1) use of non-permanent members of the Security Council either as a good offices committee or as a group to consult with any committee that might be established by GA; (2) designation by SYG of individual or group to lend good offices at appropriate time; (3) delay in providing good offices group until Ninth Session; and (4) reference of legal questions to ICJ. These alternatives generally considered unsatisfactory as being unlikely to gain sufficient support in Assembly to head off Belaunde proposal or other less desirable resolution.

After discussion and weighing of alternatives, Governor Byrnes felt conclusion was clear that US at this Assembly should support and give direction to Belaunde suggestion. He noted that this contained positive elements which would certainly evoke support in GA. While he was doubtful of negotiating group's ability to produce settlement, he thought it better for US to support proposal which would be viewed as even a little hopeful rather than one totally pessimistic.

It was noted that Belaunde would, in all probability, press ahead with his plan regardless of US views; if US can support his basic idea, we will probably be able largely to control the kind of resolution on membership which emerges from the Assembly as to composition of subsidiary group and functions. We would hope to make clear group was only to hold itself available for good offices. In this way, possibilities of embarrassing action by group would be minimized.

Governor Byrnes felt there was merit in incorporating reference to charter revision in membership resolution. He felt membership was one of the obvious subject matters to be considered in connection with revision. It was agreed that any group set up by Assembly should not be required to report back at any fixed time but should be instructed to report only in its discretion.

We expect to receive from Belaunde a draft resolution on which he has been working. Here in New York we expect to try some redrafting of his resolution along lines which would make it acceptable to us, incorporating elements of charter review and need for each applicant to be considered on own merits. We will wire texts to Department for its consideration as soon as they are available. Exploratory talks with UK and Netherlands disclose that Netherlands delegation and UK working level favorable to Belaunde idea.

General Assembly, New York, September 23, 1953*

[Here follow list of persons present (44) and brief reference to a matter of Delegation attendance at plenary meetings of the General Assembly. Byrnes presided in the temporary absence of Lodge.]

1. Membership

Mr. Stein made the presentation on the problem of admission of new members. He noted the qualifications set forth for the admission of new members in Article 4 of the Charter and the procedures outlined therein for such admission. He said the sad reality was that nineteen candidates had been knocking at the door of the UN for a long time. Fourteen of these were non-Communist nations and they included Italy, Japan and Austria. All these applications had been vetoed in the Security Council by the Soviet Union. The other five applicants were Soviet Satellites which had never obtained a majority in the Security Council.

The Soviet Union had proposed the simultaneous admission of five satellites and nine non-Communist states in what was generally referred to as a "package deal". This proposal had never obtained a majority vote in the Security Council. The United States opposed this approach since the applications of each country must be considered individually and on their own merits. The result had been a deadlock on the question of membership in the Security Council.

The General Assembly had been extremely concerned with this problem and pressures had built up in the Assembly for some move looking to universality of membership. These pressures had gone in two directions. The first was that the Assembly should take over the whole problem and admit those candidates who were qualified. This course was favored by the Latin Americans, who had come up with some very clever theories none of which, however, had been legally acceptable to the United States. The second course was that of a political settlement, i.e., some sort of "package deal". These pressures had reached their height in Paris in the winter of 1951-52, when a resolution to this effect had almost been adopted by the Assembly.

The United States position on this question was relatively simple. First of all, the five Soviet Satellites simply did not qualify for admission. However, the US did favor the admission of all the others who did qualify. Under the Charter, as presently drafted, it would only be possible to obtain their admission by some sort of deal as the Soviets proposed, but this would involve admission of those we felt were not qualified. In addition, a concession on the admission of Satellites would not be possible now, since it would lend weight to the arguments, although logically unconnected, made in favor of seating the Chinese Communists.

A holding operation was therefore necessary. The question was how to accomplish this. Mr. Stein said that Ambassador Belaunde of Peru wanted to have a Good Offices Committee of three which would bargain on a political basis with the parties concerned in an effort to break the deadlock on this matter. This Committee, according to his plan, would have no deadline and would report only if progress were made. Such an approach, Mr. Stein added, would keep the Latin Americans happy and would be very helpful in avoiding the immediate pressures for a package deal. Mr. Stein said that this matter had been taken up with Governor Byrnes who felt that it might be worth-while as a way out for the time being. He also noted that the Department had reluctantly concurred in this proposed course of action. The only disadvantage, said Mr. Stein, was that this might commit us to agreeing at some future time to a political settlement. However, it was the least embarrassing solution for us now and did put us on record as not stalling on this matter. He therefore recommended that the Delegation approve this course of action.

Mr. Stein also mentioned the possibility of Associate Membership for those applicants we considered qualified. Under this scheme they would have all rights of full Members except that of voting. There was the thought that this could some day lead to their acceptance as full Members. It had been discussed with the Italians, Japanese and the Austrians.

Governor Byrnes said that with regard to his views as mentioned by Mr. Stein, he was not too optimistic about the success of any Good Offices Committee, but he felt that the deadlock was very likely to be protracted and that the US Government would face great pressures in the future. He, therefore, agreed with the Staff recommendation. Governor Byrnes noted that if we stood by the qualifications set forth in the Charter we could not allow the admission of the Satellite States. None of them were independent or willing to uphold the obligations of the Charter. To admit them, moreover, would bless them with the characterization of "peace loving". World public opinion would not be favorable to such action, he felt. However, the Latin Americans wanted most strongly to see Italy become a member of the United Nations. Therefore, there was this pressure to contend with. Governor Byrnes said he had read the report of the Committee which had met during the past year to discuss the question of membership and he appreciated the different points of view set forth there. He reiterated that he agreed with the Staff that a Good Offices Committee would not be harmful and might do some good. He wanted, however, to be able to say something about the personnel of such a Committee. He noted also that the British and some others had approved this general idea.

Mr. Murphy read from the language of the Department's telegram and said that the United States Delegation could reply to this that it supported the idea wholeheartedly. Governor Byrnes added his agreement.

Ambassador Lodge, on assuming the Chair, noted the interest of the Secretary in the Associate Membership idea. He said he had tried to sell this idea to the Japanese, who were the biggest country not represented in the UN. He felt that if they would agree, it might become fashionable for others to accept such a type of membership. He noted that the Italians had originally disliked this idea as a sort of second-rate citizenship, but considered this attitude rather doctrinaire on their part. Mr. Murphy said that the Japanese had become very interested in such a possibility of late. Governor Byrnes pointed out that just such a contingency as this would be left open by the recommended approach and the various pressures would be avoided.

Mr. Ward Allen, with regard to Italy's opinion, said that the Italians feared that pressure for their full membership would abate if they got only part of the way in.

Mr. Taylor noted that the position paper authorized us to consult with other countries regarding Associate Membership, if the Japanese and Italians showed any interest in this idea, in order to lay the groundwork for action at future sessions. He recalled that in a discussion with the Austrian Observer, who had once been quite opposed to this idea, they were indicating an attitude of willingness now and thought that the objection that had once been understood to be the attitude of all European non-Members might no longer be so firm.

Delga 27. Verbatim text: Re membership:

USDel this morning wholeheartedly agreed we should support Belaunde (Peru) idea for good offices committee. Governor Byrnes will give Belaunde following re-draft latter's resolution (see Delga 17, September 21) this morning:

"The GA

Having examined the report of the special committee on the admission of new members;

Considering

That the aims of the Charter of the UN would be furthered through the cooperation of all peace-loving states, that efforts of the GA to facilitate the admission of new members have not met with success,

Believing

That a new effort to find a solution to this problem should be without prejudice to the juridical positions maintained by individual members of the UN and to any further consideration of the subject by the GA,

Decides

To establish a committee of good offices consisting of the representatives of (three member states) empowered to consult with members of the SC and with other member states, with the object of exploring the possibilities of reaching an understanding which would facilitate the admission of qualified new members in accordance with Article 4 of the charter. The committee shall report to the GA as appropriate."

Subject: Membership: Peruvian Draft Resolution

Participants: Ambassador Victor A. Belaunde, Peruvian Delegation
 Sr. Jose Encinas, Peruvian Delegation
 Milton K. Wells, US Mission

Late this afternoon Dr. Belaunde and Mr. Encinas had two comments to make on our re-draft of their resolution. In general, both liked our draft. However, they questioned the desirability of mentioning "Members of the Security Council" on the theory that this unduly emphasized the key role of the Permanent Members of the Security Council in the present deadlock. As Encinas commented, it would seem better to refer only to "Member States". This, he said, would make the terms of reference more innocent looking, but just as effective. Belaunde did not comment especially on this point except to say that he supposed our intention was precisely that of emphasizing that the Committee's principal job would be to consult with the Permanent Members of the Security Council.

Both expressed disappointment that our draft had omitted reference to consulting with applicant states. I told them that our feeling was that this language might get the Committee into other proposals not strictly related to membership as, for example, a possible proposal on the part of the USSR that if Japan would renounce its Mutual Defense Pact with the US, the USSR would not block its application.

Belaunde seemed impressed by this line of argument and said he would think it over. In a separate conversation, Encinas expressed a decided opinion that eliminating the reference to consulting with applicant states would not remove the danger we have in mind; and that, on the other hand, it might turn out to be useful for the Committee to hear the views of the various applicant states since they have no direct way of laying their views before the General Assembly. Encinas hoped that our delegation would reconsider our objection to this language.

Subject: Associate Membership in the UN

Participants: Mr. Ryuji Takeuchi, Japanese Minister
Mr. Hiroto Tanaka, First Secretary, Japanese Embassy
Mr. U. Alexis Johnson, Deputy Assistant Secretary
Mr. Robert J. G. McClurkin, Acting Director, NA

Mr. Takeuchi and Mr. Tanaka came in at their request. Mr. Takeuchi said that Ambassador Lodge and the Secretary had talked to the Japanese in Tokyo and to Ambassador Sawada in New York about the possibility of some kind of associate membership in the United Nations. His government would like to have more information about what we have in mind. He mentioned such questions as whether we thought that there might be an annual contribution for the Japanese to pay; whether they would have the right to talk; what the procedure for becoming an associate member would be; and what obligations as well as what rights they would have. He said that a questionnaire on this subject had been left with NA/J by Mr. Tanaka. I said that we would undertake to try to get answers to these questions and would then talk further with him, perhaps in company with Ambassador Murphy.

Mr. Takeuchi concluded by commenting that at the moment they were a little in the position of someone who is being asked how he would like to ride in a second class car which doesn't exist and for which the plans had not yet been drawn.

NEW YORK, September 25, 1953—6:54 p. m.

Gadel 11. Japanese Embassy has referred to recent conversations Secretary and Lodge with Araki on desirability "associate membership" for Japan and has requested our "concrete ideas" on specific terms such plan and reactions other non-members approached. Embassy indicated some reluctance of Japan take firm position until these questions answered and prospects of general support for Japan ascertained and asked whether we intend take positive approach re "associate membership" now.

Department believes that pending consultations other UN Members we could not give Japan final views on exact terms of plan or prospects success on basis of which Japan could take position. In our view arrangements might be worked out which would provide extensive enough privileges to make plan attractive to Japan. Such privileges would include right participate in Main Committees and Plenary, with right speak under same rules as Members, make proposals and receive GA documents. Participants might also be allowed have votes recorded but not counted. To cover cost such participation GA could request voluntary contributions.

However we see following difficulties:

1. Other Members might consider above arrangements incompatible with Charter. If willing support any arrangements at all they might support only limited privileges which would not be acceptable Japan.

2. Other Members might be willing move ahead only if plan covers both Soviet and non-Soviet applicants, a condition we could not accept.

3. Would be difficult obtain support for non-Member participation if Japan is only qualified applicant interested.

In view above considerations suggest you consult soonest with UK, French and other key delegations, pointing out advantages both to UN and to non-Members concerned of non-Member participation and desirability doing everything possible for states unjustly excluded, and ascertaining their reactions to arrangements along above lines for non-Soviet applicants if they are interested. Also suggest you consult further with Italy. If there is general reluctance accept plan now you might sound out others on desirability requesting good offices committee provided for in Belaunde resolution consider possibility non-Member participation for states qualified for membership.

Delga 41. Re: Membership. Membership problem discussed today at luncheon meeting arranged by Governor Byrnes for Belaunde (Peru), Uruquia (El Salvador), De La Colina (Mexico), Crosthwaite (UK), and Ordonneau (France).

Byrnes stated in strongest terms our opposition to admission of satellites on ground that as long as Article 4 requires qualifications for membership these qualifications must be observed and cannot be bargained away for a price. Group agreed.

Three arguments were advanced [by Byrnes] in support of Belaunde idea.

- (1) GA abandonment of any further efforts in this matter would create sense of frustration, particularly among applicant states;
- (2) UN applies principle of negotiation to all problems. There is no reason why it should not be applied to membership deadlock;
- (3) Under Article 4 GA has definite role in membership problem which it cannot abdicate.

Considerable opposition expressed in group to concept that committee should "negotiate". Ordonneau and Crosthwaite strongly opposed Belaunde's thought of several progressive "small packages", some of which might involve satellites.<sup>1</sup>

De La Colina urged that committee's tasks should be limited to that of GA liaison committee with SC since problem can be solved only when agreement reached in SC.

Group then agreed on following redraft last paragraph Belaunde's resolution:

"Decides to establish a committee of good offices consisting of the representatives of (3 member states) empowered to consult with members of the SC with the object of exploring the possibilities of reaching an understanding which would facilitate the admission of qualified new members in accordance with Article 4 of the charter. The committee shall report to the GA as appropriate."

Ordonneau indicated that France might drop its opposition to the idea. We wonder whether Belaunde will stick to agreed redraft.

In a private conversation Belaunde recognized merit of associate membership idea but thought separate resolution should be offered on

<sup>1</sup> Stein had reported previously on Sept. 24 the following regarding the British position on associate membership: "I asked Mr. Crosthwaite whether the UK maintains its past negative position towards the idea of associate membership for the qualified applicants. Crosthwaite said the British remain strongly opposed to the idea and consider it entirely unconstitutional." (Memorandum of conversation by Stein (excerpt), Sept. 24, 1953, UNP files, lot 59 D 237, "Membership") that subject and his committee should not get involved in negotiating arrangements for associate membership.

[WASHINGTON,] September 30, 1953.

Subject: Irish Application for Membership in United Nations

Participants: Mr. Sean Lemass, Deputy Prime Minister of Ireland
Ambassador Nearne, Embassy of Ireland
Mr. Sean Leydon, Secretary of Industry and Commerce
The Secretary
Mr. Hayden Raynor, Director, BNA

In the course of a courtesy call today following the conclusion of a general discussion on world-wide trouble spots, Mr. Lemass inquired as to the status of the membership question in the United Nations and specifically with respect to the long pending Irish application for membership.

The Secretary replied that he could see one of two alternatives possibly leading to a solution in this question. The first would be to work out some kind of arrangement by which applicants which were able to obtain a two-thirds vote in the General Assembly would be afforded the right of participation in the deliberations of that body. He pointed out that, of course, the Assembly under present circumstances was, of course, the important body. He said while certain corners might have to be cut to achieve this kind of solution, he thought it might be possible. The other alternative he said would involve amending, presumably at the Charter revision conference in 1955, the provisions on membership. He said, of course theoretically the Soviets had a veto even on the question of amendments.

In reply to Mr. Lemass' specific inquiry the Secretary expressed the view that a package proposal for admitting applicants en masse was not feasible at this time in view of the character of some of the applicants. He said while we, for instance, might not have too much difficulty with an applicant such as Rumania, when it came to applicants such as Outer Mongolia and Albania it was quite another matter. He also said that it would be inevitable that the Russians in some way would tie in Red China to any package proposal and we just did not think that events today would indicate that Red China deserved membership. For all of these reasons he thought the idea of package admission was not possible today.

Note: After leaving the Secretary's office Mr. Lemass commented to Mr. Raynor that there was some feeling in Ireland that the Irish application should be withdrawn but the position of the government was to permit it to remain on file, so to speak, as it has for the last several years.

CONFIDENTIAL

NEW YORK, September 30, 1953.

Participants: Mr. Eric Stein—U.S. Delegation
Mr. Leonard Meeker—U.S. Delegation
Mr. Ushiroku, Assistant Japanese Observer

Mr. Ushiroku inquired whether we thought the Peruvian draft resolution was likely to be adopted and whether it could be expected to produce results. We gave our opinion that the Peruvian draft would be passed and that it seemed unlikely that the good offices committee to be established under it would be able to make significant progress. We asked Mr. Ushiroku whether the Japanese Government had yet reached a decision on the desirability of an arrangement by which Japan and some other applicants would have non-voting participation in the General Assembly. He said that no decision had been reached, and probably would not be until after the Foreign Minister's return from his current trip in southeast Asia. Mr. Ushiroku thought this might be in about ten days. He said the Japanese Government would be influenced in its decision by various factors: (1) the attitude of other applicant states; (2) the likelihood of Assembly delegations agreeing to an arrangement for non-voting participation; and (3) the effect that such an arrangement might have on the admission of Japan to regular membership. We said we did not know what the attitude of other applicant states would be and, in response to a specific query, said we understood the Italian observer was checking the matter with his foreign office. As to the attitudes of other United Nations Members, we said that our consultations here in New York had not proceeded far enough to disclose any general sentiment. On the third point, it was very difficult to assess what the effect of non-voting participation might be on prospects for admission.

Mr. Ushiroku asked, if the Japanese Government should decide in favor of non-voting participation, whether this could be arranged at the current session of the General Assembly. We said this appeared unlikely. The item on admission of new members stands at the top of the Ad Hoc Political Committee's agenda, and it would be very difficult, to secure the inclusion of a separate item on the agenda toward the end of the eighth session. We discussed briefly the possibility of not concluding finally the debate on the membership item when that item is considered at the head of the Ad Hoc Political Committee's agenda, with a further debate, directed to the question of non-voting participation, after the committee had finished with its other items. We expressed doubt about this suggestion, pointing to the undesirable precedent it might set.

Mr. Ushiroku referred to the memorandum on detailed arrangements for non-voting participation which the Japanese had enclosed with a letter to Mr. Young (NA) on November 4, 1952. Mr. Ushiroku asked whether we would have strong objection to any of the points covered in that memorandum. We said we did not think so. We mentioned, however, that the whole question of arrangements for non-voting participation was capable of many different formulae, and that this was a matter which would require considerable discussion and negotiation. For example, a question might arise as to contributions to the United Nations budget by non-voting participants. Mr. Ushiroku said he thought his Government had omitted this element from its memorandum deliberately. We also discussed the possibility of including in the arrangements for non-voting participation some reference to the non-members' obligations to abide by the Charter. Mr. Ushiroku recalled in this connection the provisions of the Japanese Peace Treaty.

Mr. Ushiroku promised to let us know when his Government had any views to communicate.

Delga 52. Re Associate Membership. USDel has consulted with key delegations such as Australia, Norway, Brazil, Philippines, New Zealand, Sweden, Netherlands, UK, Belgium and France on possibility non-voting participation for applicant states found qualified for membership by GA.

With the exception of Brazil, none of delegations consulted showed positive interest in non-voting participation and some stated definite opposition, referring to constitutional objections. In view these reactions, we do not now plan take any further steps here re non-voting participation apart from reference in Governor Byrnes statement to ad hoc political committee. Situation, of course, would be changed should Japan or Italy change position and show definite interest.

Mr. Forsythe stated that the Australians will support the Peruvian resolution. It seems to them certainly harmless and the most expeditious way of disposing of the problem for this GA.

In amplification of the Australian position on associate membership, Mr. Forsythe reiterated the two principal reasons behind Australia's dislike of the idea. First, they feel it would be an undignified position of second class citizenship in which to place the important pending applicants; secondly, it is not expressly provided for in the Charter. It could, therefore, be justified legally only on the theory that what is not specifically prohibited under the Charter is permitted. This is exactly the theory which so many of the anti-colonial powers are following in order to expand the proper scope and jurisdiction of the UN in the colonial field. In the Australian view this is a dangerous theory and in terms of consistency, logic and precedent, they are reluctant to see it applied to other fields of UN operation.

Participants: Mr. Hens Boyesen, Norway
Ambassador Borberg, Denmark
Mr. W. P. Allen

According to Mr. Boyesen the Norwegian Delegation thinks the Belaunde proposal is a good one and will vote for it. They very much decry the Argentine suggestion that the Committee should report back at this session, agreeing with our view that this would destroy any real utility of the Committee. The Norwegian Delegation will, however, consistent with its past practice, vote for the Soviet package proposal. They continue to feel so strongly that Europe is under-represented that they are prepared to vote for the largest package deal which any of the big powers offers. While they appreciate reasons why to other countries a package deal might not seem politically desirable, nevertheless they do not find it internationally immoral to work out a horse-trade.

In Ambassador Borberg's view, while Denmark will vote for the Peruvian proposal, it would have been preferable for the Committee, which the proposal sets up, to have consisted of the non-permanent members of the SC (of which Denmark is one). There is no dispute between the GA and SC on this issue but simply disagreement between the five veto powers. If any political conciliation among them is possible or desirable, the non-permanent members of the SC are the appropriate and available ones to assist in bringing it about. However, as stated above, Denmark will vote for the Peruvian resolution, and as to membership, Borberg thought that in addition to Peru, whose membership is inevitable, such neutral countries as Sweden and India would be the best choice. I indicated we would probably prefer that at least one of the two remaining countries be one which does not favor a package deal.

Subject: Associate Membership

Dr. Haymerle is awaiting further word from Vienna as to the present thinking of his government on this problem. His personal view, however, which he thinks will be shared by his government, is that it would be desirable to take steps to work out some sort of associate membership only if there is very general spontaneous sentiment among the members for such a course. He does not find any such sentiment at present—indeed, his soundings tally with those of USGADel that a number of countries have grave doubts both constitutionally and politically as to the wisdom of any such plan. Dr. Haymerle feared, therefore, that if it were pushed, while an appropriate resolution might well be gotten through the GA, nevertheless it would have taken such effort and there would have been sufficient opposition that it might well result in making the countries less disposed to exert real efforts to obtain full membership for the pending applicants.

While he could see some merit in additional participation of qualified applicants he put forward the suggestion, as yet only a personal one, that rather than attack the problem head-on under the concept of associate membership, it would be preferable to pick a few items, relatively non-controversial ones at first, and have the GA increase the practice of inviting qualified applicants to participate without vote. The practice could be continued and broadened gradually. In thus approaching the problem in a piece-meal fashion, less opposition would be aroused with less likelihood that a definite stigma of second class citizenship would be attached to the applicants.

Subject: Associate Membership

Dr. Haymerle advised me that he has now received his Government's views on this matter and they are negative. The Austrian Government feels it would be undesirable to promote the idea of associate membership, since it would be likely to arouse such controversy and so increase the political tension surrounding the issue as to hinder rather than help the eventual attainment of the principal objective of full membership.

According to Haymerle, his Government was not even attracted to his more modest approach (previously reported) of gradually increasing the number of specific items as to which the pending applicants would be invited by the Committees to state their views, fearing that, tho to a lesser extent, this would have the same impeding effect on the attainment of full membership. Haymerle was therefore happy to note that we had not mentioned it in our speech.

I stated that we still had the matter under consideration, however, and if any of the other applicants, including Japan, desired it, we might want to pursue it further. He urged that before we took any steps in that direction we consult further with him.

In reply to my query, he suggested that it will be preferable to ask either the Brazilian or Mexican delegation to propose the committee's composition.

Sr. Peon del Valle revealed that his delegation would support the Peruvian resolution in line with its traditional policy of doing everything possible to encourage a trend toward universality. He also stated that his delegation would oppose the Soviet package deal this year.

Ambassador Tattenbach said that his delegation would give its support to the Peruvian resolution although without much enthusiasm. At the same time he said Costa Rica would reserve its position on the pending Central American draft resolution. He said he would vote against the Soviet proposal for the simultaneous admission of fourteen applicants.

Ribas also said that he would support the Peruvian proposal, but without much enthusiasm. He said that Cuba will again oppose the Soviet-proposed package deal.

According to the Danish and Norwegian representatives, the Scandinavian group finds the new Soviet proposal smaller package deal somewhat less attractive than the original proposal of fourteen. They have requested instructions from their respective governments, but the tenor of the conversation made it clear that they are disposed to abstain on this proposal if it comes to a vote. Minister Hergel stated that he had approached Ambassador Malik (USSR) yesterday to inquire whether the new proposal for the admission of five is an addition to or in place of the previous Soviet proposal for simultaneous admission of fourteen. Although Ambassador Malik then replied that the USSR would not "insist" on pressing their fourteen-nation proposal to a vote, Minister Hergel has since heard that the Soviets intend to request a vote on both proposals.

Both Norwegian and Danish representatives advanced the idea that it might be desirable to avoid a vote on either of the Soviet proposals and raised the possibility as to whether, following the expected passage of the Peruvian resolution to set up a negotiating committee, some delegate might move that the two Soviet package proposals not be voted upon. Both representatives thought if this were done they would be able to persuade their delegations to vote for it. Governor Byrnes advised Minister Hergel that such a proposal would be satisfactory to the US and consistent with his speech, and that if it were made the US would vote for it.

Subject: Membership

Belaunde told me today that he proposes to have the Good Offices Committee on Membership meet as early as next Saturday. He will propose that the Netherlands member should be the Chairman. He gave me to understand that he obviously assumes that the Dutchman will decline in Belaunde's favor. Belaunde proposes to suggest that a letter be sent by the Committee to all Members of the SC advising them of the availability of the GOC. The Committee then would approach every Member of the SC in alphabetical order.

I asked Belaunde whether calling the meeting for Saturday would not be rushing things a bit too much. I said that if the Committee becomes too active during this session of the Assembly there will be pressure on the three members to report during the 8th session. I pointed out that the resolution itself provides for a report during the 8th session, or at the latest the 9th session. Belaunde agreed that the Committee must not put itself in the position of having to report while the 8th session is on. He agreed that he would not rush things. He is anxious to discuss with us what the Committee should do.

DEAR DAVE: This confirms my conversation with you of Sunday, March 14.

At the Caracas Conference, Ambassador Belaunde of Peru asked me to obtain instructions from my Government on the subject of the United States position on the admission of Hungary, Rumania and Bulgaria to the United Nations. He said specifically that he was not proposing that Outer Mongolia or Albania be admitted, but felt that it might be possible to make an advantageous arrangement as regards the admission of other countries if we would consent to the admission of Hungary, Rumania and Bulgaria.

I talked to the Secretary about it, and he said that he imagined that Belaunde had in mind the admission of Italy. The Secretary also clearly inferred to me that he might not be averse to a deal which could be really advantageous to the United States in securing the admission of a substantial number of free states in exchange for the admission of a few communist ones.

I desire to know therefore what the present position of the U.S. Government is on this subject. If we propose to adhere without deviation to the policy of the previous Administration, then I would like to be informed. I am inclined to hope that this would not be the case.

If it is our position that we would be willing to enter a trade providing the trade is advantageous I suggest we might tell Ambassador Belaunde that if he is able to promote an arrangement which is clearly advantageous we would be interested in taking a look at it.

Ambassador Belaunde expects to be back in New York by the first of April, and I would hope to have instructions from you well in advance of that time.

Faithfully yours,

HENRY CABOT LODGE, JR.

Subject: United Nations Membership Question

Background

Ambassador Lodge has informed us (Tab A)<sup>2</sup> that Belaunde of Peru, Chairman of a General Assembly Committee to explore prospects for breaking the membership deadlock in the UN, indicated to him at Caracas that if we would consent to the admission of Bulgaria, Hungary, and Rumania, it might be possible to make an advantageous arrangement as regards the admission of other countries. Ambassador Lodge asks whether the Department proposes to adhere without deviation to the policy of the previous Administration on this matter (i.e., no package deal). He is "inclined to hope that this would not be the case," and says that the Secretary clearly inferred to him "that he might not be averse to a deal which could be really advantageous to the United States in securing the admission of a substantial number of free states in exchange for the admission of a few communist ones."

If we decide to accept a political settlement on membership, one possibility might be to agree to admit three of the Soviet applicants (Bulgaria, Hungary, and Rumania) in return for Soviet agreement to admit ten of the non-Soviet applicants (Austria, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Libya, Nepal and Portugal). This arrangement would not provide for four present applicants we favor (Republic of Korea and the three Indo-China States), or for future applicants like Germany or Spain. However, it would be more advantageous to us than the Soviet package of five Soviet applicants (including Albania and Outer Mongolia in addition to Bulgaria, Hungary and Rumania) and nine non-Soviet applicants (excluding Japan as well as the Republic of Korea and the three states of Indo-China).

Questions for Consideration

In considering an answer to Ambassador Lodge, the main questions which require reexamination are:

1. If we agreed to admit Soviet candidates despite their conduct, would it be harder to keep out the Chinese Communists? <sup>3</sup>
2. How serious would public and Congressional opposition be to the admission of Soviet candidates as part of a deal?
3. If Soviet candidates were admitted, would serious difficulties arise because article 4 of the Charter says that membership is open to "peace-loving states" which are "able and willing to carry out their Charter obligations"?
4. Would the admission of Soviet candidates dignify the puppet regimes and discourage opposition elements in these countries, or would new contacts through the UN between the free world and the satellites be helpful to us?
5. Would a settlement along the lines outlined above materially increase obstructive capacities of the Soviet bloc and increase our difficulties in obtaining free-world majorities?
6. If we proposed a deal which the Soviets refused, could we then, without having to use the veto, prevent adoption of the Soviet package proposal or a "compromise" proposal unacceptable to us?
7. Is there some other arrangement on which agreement might be reached which would be preferable to the one outlined above? For instance, would it be better to have a larger package which, in addition to the candidates suggested above, included Albania in return for Soviet agreement to include Spain (which has not yet applied)?
8. Should we propose as a part of a deal that the permanent members agree not to use the veto in future cases? Should we also try to get a guarantee that Germany, Korea and the three states of Indo-China will eventually be admitted?
9. Might this question be discussed with the U.S.S.R. during or after the Korean Political Conference, or should it be handled exclusively through Belaunde and his Good Offices Committee (Peru, Netherlands and Egypt)?

Recommendation

That you call a meeting of Assistant Secretaries to discuss these questions. Ambassador Lodge is anxious for instructions before April 1, when Belaunde arrives in New York.

Subject: Reexamination of UN Membership Question

We have sent copies of your March 23 memorandum on UN membership to Messrs. Robertson (FE), Merchant (EUR), Byroade (NEA), Woodward (ARA), Phleger (L), and Bowie (S/P). When Mr. Murphy responds to your memorandum you might suggest to his office that all of them be invited to the meeting.

The following are UNP's views on the main questions for reexamination which were enumerated in your memorandum:

1. We believe that if the U.S. agreed to admit Soviet candidates despite their conduct, it would be harder to keep out the Chinese Communists. We think that is the major consideration against a deal on membership at this time, but we would like to get some indication of what the Department's view would be on a membership settlement if in the future we found that a deal would not jeopardize support for our position on Chinese representation.

2. We are inclined to believe there would not be too serious domestic opposition to the admission of Soviet candidates as part of a deal provided we could get a trade along the lines suggested in your memorandum and could hold the line on Chinese representation. However, advance Congressional consultations would be advisable.

3. We believe we could meet the Charter difficulties a deal would involve. We could, for instance, make it clear that we are willing to accept at its face value the commitment to accept the obligations of membership made by all the applicants, as a means of testing their intentions. We are most anxious for the admission of states like Italy and Japan. Therefore, we are willing to accept a political settlement if this is what the overwhelming majority really wants, and on the clear understanding our views on the Soviet applicants remain unchanged.

4. We think that the admission of Soviet satellites would have the advantage of making them more accountable for their conduct. However, others will be better judges of the effect of the admission of satellites on opposition elements in these countries and on the governments in control.

5. A settlement along the lines suggested in your memorandum to Mr. Murphy would increase Soviet obstructive capacities, though not materially. (The Soviet bloc now represents one-twelfth of the total. If the deal went through, it would represent one-ninth of the total.) We could still maintain sufficient free-world majorities on "cold-war" issues but these majorities would not be proportionately as great as they have been, since on some questions many of the new non-Soviet Members would abstain. There would be serious difficulties for us on colonial and human rights questions.

6. If we proposed a deal which the Soviets refused, we believe we would still not have to resort to the veto in the Security Council to prevent the adoption of the Soviet proposal or some other "compromise" proposal, assuming we could keep the UK and France in line. However, we would have a difficult time in the Assembly, particularly if the USSR should add Japan to its package.

7. If we agreed to include Albania (in addition to Bulgaria, Hungary and Rumania) we might conceivably be able to get Spain included. However, we would have no future bargaining power since all the Soviet applicants except Outer Mongolia (which we believe we should not include in a deal now or later) would be admitted. Furthermore, the more inclusive the deal, the greater might be the chances that some country would try to obtain the seating of Chinese Communists as part of a membership deal.

8. We believe we should propose as part of a deal that the permanent members agree not to use the veto in future cases, if we can do this without jeopardizing our right to use the veto on Chinese representation. We should also try to get a guarantee that Germany, Korea and the three states of Indochina will eventually be admitted.

9. In our view, we should not discuss this question at Geneva,<sup>2</sup> particularly because we doubt the advisability of making a decision to accept a package deal at this time. If we later decided to move ahead, we would probably do better to negotiate directly with the Soviets.

Mr. Heinrich Haymerle, the Austrian observer, called this morning at his request to say that his government was thinking about the desirability of bringing up once again the question of Austrian membership in the United Nations. They have the feeling, in view of the flat turn-down which the Soviets gave to the Austrian treaty at Berlin<sup>1</sup> that maybe the Soviets would not object.

He said that the current Austrian thinking was that raising the issue could not do any harm, that either they were admitted to membership which would be a very good thing for them, or else they would be turned down in which case they would be no worse off than they are now.

I would like the Department's attitude on this matter.

470. Re: Austrian Membership in UN (urtel 553). Austrian Ambassador approached Department this matter April 2, stating Austria considering raising Austrian membership question and requesting our views. Department replied as follows:

1. Austria need not submit new application since SC could reconsider Austria's case on basis application submitted 1947. To keep Austrian application in foreground Austrians might wish submit to SYG a document for circulation UN Members referring this application and reiterating importance Austria attaches to admission.

2. US warmly supports Austria's membership. However would be difficult isolate Austria's case in SC since other candidates would expect action on their applications too and since USSR could be expected resubmit its package proposal, which we could not accept, and Soviets would argue this proposal offered only solution. We therefore doubt successful outcome if Austrian application now reconsidered in SC. Assembly appointed Good Offices Committee to try break deadlock but we are not very hopeful about results.

Ambassador said Hammarskjold, while not optimistic, seemed indicate to Austrian UN Observer there might be some slight hope for Austria's admission. However Ambassador said he personally agreed our estimate of situation and said he would report our views to Austrian Government including our suggestion Austria might submit document along lines mentioned above. We are under impression Austrians chiefly interested in getting on record their continued desire UN membership but do not necessarily expect SC action at this time.

In subsequent conversation Gruber same date reference was made to Austrian Government's proposal (Vienna's 2468)<sup>2</sup> that question UN membership be considered by Five Power Commission Vienna. He took general view question should not be raised Vienna where Soviets could veto before it came to attention other UN Members and said he would recommend accordingly to Vienna.

I attended this morning the meeting of the Assistant Secretaries which was convoked in Mr. Murphy's office, to discuss the UN membership question.<sup>2</sup> The question had been raised by Ambassador Lodge, who seemed to think we should take a fresh look at it.

After considerable discussion, it was agreed among those present that we should stick to our present position which is one of opposing "package deals". It was felt that acceptance of even a limited package deal, such as that proposed by Belaunde, would be highly dangerous in relation to the Chinese membership question. It was also felt that, with the Geneva Conference in the offing, no consideration of any change in our position should be attempted at this time.

Mr. Murphy accordingly instructed Mr. Key to reply to Ambassador Lodge in the sense indicated above.

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY NEW YORK, April 12, 1954—3 p. m.

612. Regarding membership. Belaunde (Peru) called on me Saturday morning at his request to give me his views on the membership question. He said that there were three countries who were above the Battle and who could be considered as neutrals in the cold war, to wit: Ireland, Finland, Austria. Both Ireland and Austria, he pointed out, were not members of NATO. On behalf of the West, there were Italy and Portugal. On behalf of the East, there were Hungary, Rumania, Bulgaria. On behalf of the Arab world, there were Libya and Jordan. On behalf of Asia, there were Nepal and Ceylon. He did not feel that Russia could reasonably object to Libya, Jordan, Nepal and Ceylon.

As far as Hungary, Rumania and Bulgaria were concerned, they were at present outside of the international order because they are not regarded as Pacific nations which carry out their international obligations. From a legalistic and juridical standpoint there is the fact that the ICJ at The Hague has held that Hungary, Rumania and Bulgaria must name the third member of the Conciliation Commission and that they have not done so. He thought it would be well if the UK were to persuade these three countries to name the individuals and that the individuals named would be approved by us in advance. He felt that the above twelve countries constituted a "package" which might have some chance of approval.

I told him that I was not at all optimistic and did not feel that he ought to get his hopes up about such a package being approved by us. I said that speaking purely personally, it seemed to me that the only package which was really attractive was one in which all of the five permanent members would agree to give up their right to veto the admission of new States. But I made it clear that this was a purely personal view on my part and did not represent the US position.

He said he wanted to go to Washington and talk with the people in Department, who would have this matter in charge. He assumed that it would be Bedell Smith. I assume it would be Assistant Secretary Key. Will you please advise me whom he should see when he goes to Washington because he would like to go within a week or two.

He expected to see Dixon (United Kingdom) later in day. According to Belaunde, Hoppenot did not raise any strong objection to deferring question of Cambodia, Laos and Vietnam until results Geneva Conference known. He said Vishinsky noncommittal, limiting himself to light comments on why Belaunde would exclude Albania and Outer Mongolia, and demurring somewhat when asked whether in truth he didn't consider Austria, Finland and Ireland in neutral category. Belaunde said he also asked Vishinsky why the USSR didn't urge the three satellites to show their good disposition by cooperating with conciliation commission. Belaunde reported that his colleagues on Good Offices Committee "authorized" him approach four powers, and he hoped to go to Washington this week. Later, Scheltema (Netherlands) confirmed that he and Egyptian colleague had interposed no objections to Belaunde's initiating preliminary, exploratory talks. However, for his part, Scheltema stressed that he felt that he was not in a position to associate himself formally with a proposal which his own government might not approve. In reporting matter to The Hague, therefore, Scheltema was interested to know our reactions. He was told that I had given Belaunde a pessimistic reaction as my purely personal views, but that as yet we had not had any official comments from Department.

Subject: UN Membership Question

New York's 612, April 12, reports that Belaunde of Peru, the Chairman of the Good Offices Committee on Membership which was created at the last GA, has given his views on the membership question to Ambassador Lodge. Belaunde is thinking tentatively in terms of a package of 12 which would not include any Far Eastern candidate. Ambassador Lodge, who had not yet received the Department's letter giving the results of recent consideration of the membership question here, told Belaunde that he ought not to get his hopes up about such a package being approved by the U.S. Belaunde, however, indicated a desire to come to Washington to talk about the membership question with the Department.

The letter giving the Department's views on the membership question is being sent to Ambassador Lodge today. It informs him that the Department has reviewed the membership question, that it continues to oppose a package deal and continues to favor separate consideration of each application. The letter authorizes Ambassador Lodge to give this position to Belaunde and to inform him that Mr. Key would be glad to discuss the membership question with Belaunde if the latter still wishes to come to Washington after being informed of the Department's position.

Note: Dispatch of the letter to Ambassador Lodge has been delayed in order to permit Mr. Key to discuss the membership question with the Secretary. As originally drafted the letter, after stating the Department's opposition to a package deal, added that the Secretary concurred in this position. It is understood that the Secretary deleted this sentence and substituted a statement to the general effect that on balance the question whether or not to agree to a package proposal was a close one and that he opposes a package deal at present.

The Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Key) to the United States Representative at the United Nations (Lodge)<sup>1</sup>

DEAR CABOT: I am sorry I could not reply earlier to your letter of March 15 on the UN membership question. However, it seemed desirable to wait to give you an answer until a meeting could be held with Mr. Murphy, Mr. Phleger, and the interested Assistant Secretaries.

We had such a meeting last week and carefully reviewed the whole problem. It was decided that, however much we wanted to see the states we favor admitted, we should maintain our position against any trade involving the admission of Soviet-sponsored applicants in return for the admission of others. The overriding reason for this decision was the connection between the membership problem and the Chinese representation issue. Although these two questions are technically different matters, we all agreed that, practically speaking, it would be difficult if not impossible to keep them separate, and that our consent to the admission of Soviet-sponsored candidates despite their conduct would make it harder for us to hold the line on keeping out the Chinese Communists.

It was felt that even if we were not faced with this major problem, there would be several other considerations to take into account against a trade on membership at this time. First, the imminence of the Geneva Conference would make any move toward a deal particularly untimely. Second, it would be difficult for us to agree to admit Soviet-sponsored applicants in view of the present language of article 4. Third, Soviet agreement to a trade on terms acceptable to us would be extremely unlikely. If, in spite of this, we indicated we might go along with a deal provided certain terms were met, and if the Soviets rejected these terms, it would then be harder for us to prevent the adoption of the Soviet package deal or some "compromise" proposal unacceptable to us.

I think we might be able to discourage a serious move toward a deal if we make our position clear to Belaunde before his Good Offices Committee starts to consult with other Security Council members. I therefore suggest that you tell him that the Department has considered the matter and that we continue to oppose a deal on membership that includes Soviet-sponsored applicants and stand on our position of favoring separate consideration of each candidate on its merits. You might also wish to inform the UK and French Delegations that there has been no change in our position.

I have mentioned this question to the Secretary. He feels that it is a close question but as things now stand, the balance is against a present "package" proposal.

We have just received the report of your conversation with Belaunde of April 10. You may inform him that I would be very glad to discuss the membership question with him if he still wishes to come to Washington after you have informed him of the Department's position as outlined above.

On assumption there was no chance Soviets would accept Austrian membership except as part of some new package deal our first reaction, shared by Austrian Embassy here, was that it would be unwise raise matter in Vienna discussions of occupation alleviations where Soviets could veto before leverage world opinion could be used.

However, there may be possibility USSR, as gesture to Austria and to counter public opinion consequences Soviet Berlin Conference position, would now agree to membership. If favorable possibilities exist, chances success might be improved by raising question in Vienna apart from broader problems and out of limelight. Soviet position if problem raised initially in UN would almost necessarily be negative because of earlier position. On other hand if Soviets were to participate in four power recommendation from Vienna Soviets might find reversal easier and acceptance in UN would then presumably follow.

Re suggestion made to Gruber (paragraph one Deptel 470 to USUN repeated Vienna 2953 pouched other posts) that Austria send document to UN, Haymerle reports matter still under consideration Vienna but he doubts any decision will be taken until after Geneva Conference. Consideration should be given this connection that if possibility favorable Soviet action in Vienna considered to exist, any prior action by Austria to raise issue in UN might prejudice action in Vienna.

WASHINGTON, April 28, 1954—6:12 p. m.

3180. On basis Moscow's 1279, Vienna's 2648 (both being repeated USUN) and USUN's 648 (being repeated Vienna, London, Paris, Moscow), Department concludes, if Austria wishes raise question UN membership, it should do so by transmitting document to UN SYG rather than in new five-power body Vienna, where, however, Austria might usefully sound out Soviets informally bilaterally. After tripartite agreement foregoing we propose so to advise Gruber and Haymerle, making clear that we warmly support Austrian membership except as part of package deal but are not optimistic that Soviets would agree its separate admission in foreseeable future. We have already advised Austrians against going beyond submission of document to SYG because we doubt desirability pushing for UN Security Council action on Austria now since this would probably lead to fruitless discussion of whole membership problem and we would reiterate this view at appropriate time. Embassies London and Paris should ascertain views French and British Governments to permit development tripartite position.

[WASHINGTON,] May 11, 1954.

DEAR CABOT: In a memorandum of April 28, 1954,<sup>2</sup> you asked for comments on a paper concerning the UN membership problem which Ambassador Sawada handed to you. Ambassador Sawada suggests in this paper: (1) that we propose a list of applicants for "simultaneous admission" which would include, in addition to Japan and the other applicants we support, all or some of the five Soviet-sponsored candidates; (2) that in so doing it would not be necessary for us to consent outwardly to the "package deal" formula, since we could take the position that we have come to consider the "behaviour" of each of the Soviet-sponsored candidates to be satisfactory under a "more liberal interpretation" of article 4; (3) that it might be desirable for us not to condition our approval of the Soviet-sponsored applicants upon Soviet approval of the Republic of Korea or the three Associated States of the Indo-China; and (4) that the Soviet Union should and could concede that Japan's admission shall not be linked with the "admission" of the Chinese Communist regime, since the Chinese representation question is legally not a membership question. Ambassador Sawada also expresses the view that it would be to our advantage if the United States rather than the Soviet Union or some "neutral" country submitted a new membership proposal for Japan's admission.

If we decide at some future time to agree to a trade involving the admission of Soviet-sponsored applicants, I think we would want to consider a different application of the criteria of article 4 as suggested by the Ambassador. If we could base our acceptance of a trade on a lower standard, as some Members have already advocated, the admission of Soviet satellites could more easily be achieved without the act of admission constituting approval of the character of their regimes and without an endorsement of the "package deal" formula. Furthermore, since the Soviet Union, even if it agreed to Japan's admission, would hardly agree to the admission of the Republic of Korea and the three Associated States of Indo-China, we would have to consider whether we could consent to a settlement which did not provide for the immediate admission of these latter four states. However, we could certainly not consent to this now, and if we ever could, it could only be on the basis of some arrangement guaranteeing their future admission.

With respect to the Ambassador's statement that the Chinese representation question is legally not a membership question, this is, of course, perfectly true. However, it certainly does not follow that the Soviet Union would not couple its consent to the admission of Japan with a demand that the Chinese Communists be seated.

Of course, any consideration on our part of the Ambassador's idea of a new proposal to be submitted by us must be purely academic. As you point out in your memorandum, his proposal is contrary to our membership policy at this time. We therefore cannot give Ambassador Sawada any encouragement.

In giving him your reactions to his paper, I suggest you stress that we strongly desire a solution to the membership problem which would achieve Japan's admission, and that we have carefully reexamined the entire question. However, we have concluded that we cannot agree to the admission of the Soviet-sponsored applicants, which in our view do not now meet the criteria of article 4, and we are not prepared to water down these criteria. I would also point out the obvious difficulties of any arrangement which did not provide for the Republic of Korea and the three Associated States of Indo-China but which did provide for Soviet-sponsored applicants. Finally, as the Ambassador well knows, it is the Soviet Union which has vetoed the admission of Japan. The United States, on the other hand, has strongly supported Japan's admission and has sponsored its application in the United Nations. It is thus clear that the responsibility for the exclusion of Japan rests solely with the Soviet Union.<sup>3</sup>

Sincerely,

DAVID MCK. KEY

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] May 13, 1954.

Subject: Your Appointment with Ambassador Belaunde

Ambassador Belaunde wants to discuss the UN membership question when he meets with you on May 17 at 10:30 a. m. He is Chairman of the GA Committee established to consult with SC members to try to break the deadlock.

He might also mention Peru's candidacy to succeed Colombia on the Security Council.

1. Membership—Belaunde has already discussed the problem with Ambassador Lodge and others at USUN (see USUN's 612 and 618 and memorandum of conversation of April 28 attached).<sup>2</sup> He suggests a package of twelve, including three Soviet-sponsored applicants (Bulgaria, Hungary and Rumania) and nine non-Soviet applicants (Austria, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Jordan, Libya, Nepal, and Portugal). Apparently he has in mind that agreement would be reached in advance to admit all twelve but the twelve would be divided into groups to be admitted in separate stages. Ireland, Finland and Austria, for instance, would be offered as one unit.

The applicants not included in Belaunde's package are two Soviet-sponsored candidates (Albania and Outer Mongolia) and five non-Soviet candidates (Japan, Republic of Korea, Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia). Belaunde's list differs from the Soviet package in that Albania and Outer Mongolia are not included.

Belaunde told Ambassador Lodge that Bulgaria, Hungary and Rumania were presently "outside of the international order". He recalled that the International Court of Justice has held that these satellites should name members to arbitration commissions under their peace treaties, and he thought the UK might persuade them to name the individuals who would be approved by us in advance. (In 1949, Australia, Canada, New Zealand, the UK and the US charged the satellites with systematic violation of the human rights provisions of the peace treaties and pressed for settlement through the treaty procedures, under which each party would name a representative to a special arbitration commission and these two would then agree upon a third member, or failing agreement, the UN Secretary-General would name him. The three satellites, however, have refused to cooperate. In an advisory opinion the Court held that the satellites were obligated to name representatives to the commissions but all three denied the Court's jurisdiction. In 1950 the Assembly condemned the willful refusal of the satellites to fulfill their obligations. We have cited this case as evidence that these satellites are not qualified for UN membership).

As you know, the Department has decided against a package deal, principally because our agreement to admit Soviet-sponsored applicants despite their conduct would make it harder for us to keep out the Chinese Communists. Under Belaunde's package, we would have to agree to the admission, at least at some stage, of three Soviet-sponsored candidates (Bulgaria, Hungary and Rumania). For this reason, and because the package does not provide for certain states we favor (Japan, Republic of Korea and the three Indo-Chinese states), Belaunde's package is unacceptable to us. It is therefore important not to give him any encouragement. At the same time, since he is such a staunch friend of ours, and in view of his strong feelings on the need for a solution to the membership problem, it is, of course, advisable to give him a full opportunity to state his views on the question.

In giving him our membership position, we recommend that you indicate the following:

1. We share his concern over the continued deadlock, and we have recently reexamined the entire problem and have given very careful consideration to his proposal.

2. We have again concluded, however, that we must continue to oppose the admission of Soviet-sponsored applicants which in our view do not now meet the criteria of "peace-loving" states which are "able and willing" to carry out their obligations.

3. Even if we could agree to the admission of Soviet-sponsored applicants we could not consent to a trade which provided for their admission but which did not provide for Japan, the Republic of Korea and the Indo-China states.

If Belaunde raises the question of the appointment of members to the arbitration commissions under the peace treaties, we suggest you reply that in the light of the history of this problem we believe no country could persuade the three satellites to name individuals to the commissions.<sup>3</sup>

[Here follows a short discussion of the Security Council election situation.]

839. Re Austrian membership. As requested urtel 621 USUN advised Haymerle our position re Austrian membership along lines urtel 3180. Haymerle stated that at time original approach on question, Austrian Government felt possibility existed Soviets might agree membership as gesture to Austria after Berlin Conference. Events since do not justify this feeling and Haymerle personally not optimistic. His government would withhold any action on question awaiting further developments Geneva. Haymerle will inform government our position and advise USUN of text any letter for UNSYG. Would also notify 4 in Vienna that letter had been sent UNSYG. He asked whether letter should request action some kind. USUN answered in negative on ground that entire membership question would probably be brought forth. Haymerle also questioned whether letter should go perhaps to committee of 3 instead of SYG. USUN indicated preference for SYG. In response to query as to likelihood of favorable result through efforts committee of 3, USUN indicated that we uninformed as to any proposal unrelated to package deal.

Haymerle brought up subject "second class membership" which his government opposes on ground it may prejudice their position as regards regular membership. He felt that there were many opportunities for inviting Austrian participation which would give the advantage of associate membership without its disadvantages. He suggested that Austria might be invited to participate in various committee discussions and indicated annoyance that Austria was invited to technical assistance conference only at time when pledges were being made. With these considerations in mind suggest Embassy and USUN communicate following to Japanese as points they may wish consider:

1. US regards non-member participation arrangements as only interim measure and not as substitute for full membership. US would continue strongly support Japanese membership in UN after such arrangements might be adopted.

Members we could not of course guarantee to Japan exact terms of arrangements. However seems to us terms could provide extensive privileges, including right speak and make proposals in main GA Committees and GA plenary and right have votes recorded but not counted. In return GA might request voluntary financial contribution to cover costs such participation.

3. Such arrangements would have advantages for UN as well as non-members concerned. As more states would be permitted contribute to discussions in GA effectiveness and prestige of UN would be increased. In addition USSR would be shown that majority will cannot be completely frustrated by Soviet veto on membership applications. Even possible that effectuation in practice of such arrangements would ultimately lead USSR conclude point of diminishing returns had been passed in continuing veto membership of states like Japan.

4. Question of desirability non-member participation arrangements from Japan's standpoint is of course for Japan to determine itself. Furthermore Department aware Italy has opposed such arrangements and that number of UN Members have been reluctant proceed for both legal and political reasons. We agree it would be undesirable make proposal in GA unless favorable decision assured on acceptable basis and in particular we could not agree to any plan which provided for Soviet-sponsored as well as non-Soviet applicants. 2. Would US consider favorably plan, which Austrians understand advanced by Belaunde of Peru, for voting on applications non-members broken down into three or four separate blocs?

3. Would US see any objection to Austrian Government addressing new note to UN recalling and urging action upon its pending application for membership?

4. Would US be able to offer Austrian Government any further advice as to how it might facilitate action on its application for UN membership?

Austrian representatives explained, while government had little hope under present circumstances attaining membership, it felt some action was necessary to demonstrate Austrian people questions not forgotten nor neglected despite lapse seven years. c. Department has no objection to Austrian note to UN Secretary General recalling Austria's pending application and reiterating Austrians desire for UN membership, and did in fact suggest this course to Austrians. Note would serve purpose of demonstrating to Austrians question not forgotten. However, believe note should not be couched in terms which would result in Security Council taking up application at this time. Would be difficult isolate Austria's case in SC because other candidates would request action on their applications and because USSR would in all probability resubmit package proposal which we would not accept and Soviets would argue their proposal offered only solution. Thus we see no useful purpose SC action on Austria now.

Subject: Admission of Austria to the UN; UNCURK; Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission; Cyprus

Participants: Miss Barbara Salt, UK Embassy
Mr. Allen, EUR
Miss Brown, UNP

1. Admission of Austria to the UN

Miss Salt referred to a memorandum given to the Embassy in London on June 28 setting forth the basis for the British views that Austria was not legally qualified for admission to the UN. Mr. Allen said so far as he had been able to discover the Embassy had not transmitted this document to the Department. Miss Salt stated that the Foreign Office did not consider that Austria met the legal requirements for admission and had requested her to seek an explanation of the basis for the opposite views of the United States since it would like to be persuaded Austria's admission was possible.

She read us from the Legal Adviser's memorandum and promised to provide us with a copy later. We agreed to obtain the comments of our Legal Adviser on it. The memorandum made two principal arguments: (1) because of the restrictions placed on Austria by the Control Agreement and the presence of the Occupying Powers it was not fully sovereign and could not fulfill the Charter obligations of a UN Member, e.g. Article 2(5); (2) to press for Austria's admission would undermine the UK position on other applicants such as Outer Mongolia, whose sovereignty on paper was less dubious. The memorandum also advanced the possibility of an early Assembly vote expressing the view that Austria should eventually be admitted to the UN, but at the same time it raised the question whether such action would be politically wise.

Mr. Allen recalled that the Assembly had previously found Austria fully qualified for admission as illustrated by Resolution 296(IV) and moreover, the USSR had included Austria in its package proposal. We told Miss Salt that we were quite certain that the UK had supported this Assembly resolution and promised to confirm this point by telephone. Mr. Allen commented that even if it should turn out that our Legal Advisers shared the UK's doubts, in light of these facts, it would be politically undesirable to voice them.

Miss Salt mentioned the idea of associate membership and recalled that the UK had never been as keen on such an arrangement as the United States, both because of serious doubts as to its legality and the view that it would require Charter amendment. We indicated that the United States continued to favor associate membership arrangements, which we felt did not require Charter amendment, but that some applicants, particularly Italy, were not interested, apparently because they feared the result might be to ease up on pressure for full membership. Japan, however, had indicated some interest.

Miss Salt noted current rumors of a possible deal to admit Finland and Austria. We added that Libya had also been suggested in the same context. Mr. Allen observed that the rumors might stem from the Secretary General's suggestion, in his annual report, that several states not directly from either conflicting camp might be admitted.

MEMBERSHIP PROBLEMS IN WHO REGIONAL COMMITTEE FOR WESTERN PACIFIC: KOREA AND INDOCHINA

THE PROBLEM

If the USSR sends a delegation, it might propose, possibly at the opening session, that representatives of the North Korean and/or Viet Minh regimes ("People's Democratic Republic of Korea" and "Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam") be invited to participate in some capacity, and that the Delegations from Viet-Nam, Laos, Cambodia and from the Republic of Korea, be excluded.

UNITED STATES POSITION

1. The United States Delegation should take the position that any such proposals are out of order on the grounds (a) that neither of these two regimes have any status whatsoever in the WHO or any other organization in the United Nations system and are consequently not entitled to participate in the meetings in any capacity, and (b) that the Republic of Korea, Viet-Nam, Laos and Cambodia, as WHO members, are fully entitled to participate.

If it appears that proposals contemplated in the "Problem" above might be made, the Delegation should consult in advance with other friendly Delegations to secure broad support for an out-of-order position.

2. However, if for any reason an out-of-order position is not successful and any of the proposals contemplated in the "Problem" above are put to the vote, the United States Delegation should vigorously oppose and vote against them.

BACKGROUND

1. Korea—The United Nations General Assembly, on December 12, 1948 adopted a resolution recognizing the Government of the Republic of Korea as the only lawful government in Korea. The Assembly subsequently reaffirmed this resolution. The Government of the Republic of Korea has been recognized by more than 30 nations, including the United States. The Republic of Korea has been admitted to 6 specialized agencies of the United Nations, including WHO. It has also been determined qualified for United Nations membership by the United Nations General Assembly, and would be a United Nations member now were it not for the Soviet veto in the Security Council. The Communist puppet regime in North Korea, which is a convicted aggressor against the United Nations, has never been a lawful government. It has no status whatsoever in the United Nations or any specialized agency. The United Nations Security Council, in 1949, decided not even to consider a communication purporting to be a membership application from this regime.

2. Indochina—The three Associated States of Indochina (Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia) have each been admitted to a number of specialized agencies, including WHO, and each has been recognized by over 30 countries, including the United States. These three countries have also been determined qualified for United Nations membership by the General Assembly and have been excluded solely by the Soviet veto in the Security Council.

The Viet Minh regime is a Communist-led rebellion against the recognized authority and is not a lawful government. It has no status whatsoever in any UN specialized agency and a Soviet proposal to give this regime membership in the United Nations in 1952 was opposed by every member of the Security Council except the USSR.

1) He was seriously disturbed by the action of Australia in suggesting the item on Laos and Cambodia, could not see where it could do anyone any good, and might easily throw the General Assembly into a violent and non-productive debate on Indo China. He is toying with the idea of writing a personal note to Casey, but will wait until after he has talked with Sir Pierson Dixon tomorrow.

2) I indicated the United States Government's strong desire to have the Ad Hoc Commission on POW's continued, and he agreed enthusiastically to do everything he could to keep Guerrero and others on the job. He apparently had not considered seriously that they would close down.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Special Assistant on United Nations Affairs, Bureau of European Affairs (Allen)

[WASHINGTON,] September 7, 1954.

Subject: Australian GA Item on Admission of Laos and Cambodia

Participants: Mr. James Allen, Australian Embassy
Mr. Ward P. Allen, EUR

Supplementing Sir Percy Spender's recent discussion with the Acting Secretary, Mr. Allen gave me the following statement of his Government's thinking on this matter:

The Australian view is that the first barrier to Communism in area is recognition of autonomy and independence of Laos and Cambodia. There was general agreement on their status at Geneva which Australia hoped could be confirmed by their entry into United Nations. While they are not unduly optimistic as to result of this move it is conceivable that Russians will not wish to veto applications and some move will have been made in general question of admissions. (See section in Secretary-General's report on this matter.)

The Australian Government does not wish to open up the whole question of Indo China by placing a new item on the agenda. They will be satisfied to have the question considered with the general item on admission of new members. They do not, however, wish it to be swamped by other items and caught up in a resolution which has no hope of getting anywhere. The resolution attached to explanatory memorandum should be put in at first moment permitted by the rules. The membership item should read—"admission of new members (a) report of good offices committee, (b) admission of Laos and Cambodia."

When I took him to task for Australia's failure to consult the US in advance, he confessed that this was the fault of the Embassy here. The Government had sent a long telegram to Paris, London, the Associated States Capitals, etc. which the Embassy here misunderstood as not calling for consultation with us until after French reaction had been received. Apparently External Affairs intended simultaneous consultation. However, by the time French agreement was obtained, it was too late to consult us in advance of submitting the item.

Position Paper Prepared in the Department of State for the United States Delegation to the Ninth Regular Session of the General Assembly

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] September 9, 1954.

ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS

THE PROBLEM

Nineteen membership applications are pending, including fourteen non-Soviet applicants (Austria, Cambodia, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Republic of Korea, Laos, Libya, Nepal, Portugal, Vietnam) and five Soviet-sponsored applicants (Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Rumania and Outer Mongolia). In addition, the North Korean and Vietminh regimes have submitted communications purporting to be membership applications.

In the Security Council the Soviet Union has vetoed all the non-Soviet candidates, while the required majority has never approved the admission of the Soviet candidates or the Soviet package proposal for the simultaneous admission of the five Soviet-sponsored applicants and nine of the non-Soviet applicants (all but the Republic of Korea, Japan, Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia).

The General Assembly has become increasingly concerned over the stalemate. A Special Committee established by the Seventh Session reviewed various proposals, none of which was found acceptable, and was unable to make any specific recommendations. The Eighth Assembly appointed a Committee of Good Offices (Egypt, the Netherlands, Peru) "empowered to consult with members of the Security Council with the object of exploring the possibilities of reaching an understanding which would facilitate the admission of new members in accordance with Article 4 of the Charter." This Committee has carried on informal discussions, apparently without success. It has not yet submitted any report, but so far as we know, it has made no progress.

Australia has submitted a new agenda item on the admission of Laos and Cambodia. No explanation of this proposal has been made, but since the applications of both states are already pending, presumably the purpose is to focus Assembly attention on them in the hope the Indochina settlement may now make their admission possible.

In his annual report this year the Secretary General referred to the membership impasse, emphasizing the number of states absent from the United Nations, a fact that he regarded as lessening the effectiveness and influence of the Organization. He suggested that "if it does not seem possible to break the present log-jam all at once, a beginning might be made with some of those cases which do not directly enter into the balance between the conflicting camps". There have been rumors in New York suggesting the possibility of a "deal" of such a limited character. In this connection admission of Finland, Libya and Austria has been mentioned. Accordingly, at the Ninth Session it is possible that some proposal of this character may be put forward.

UNITED STATES POSITION

1. The United States should indicate its support for the fourteen non-Soviet applicants and opposition to the Soviet-sponsored applicants and also to the Soviet package proposal, and should call upon the Soviet Union to abandon its arbitrary membership policies.

2. If a proposal to admit a selected few states (e.g. Finland, Austria, Libya) is made, or if Australia submits a proposal or separate proposals for admission of Laos and Cambodia, subject to instructions from the Department, the Delegation should seek a separate vote on each of the applicants proposed and should vote for any of the non-Soviet applicants.

3. The United States should oppose the Soviet package proposal if it is resubmitted. If the proposal is likely to receive majority support, the United States may seek to amend it in such a way that it would become a resolution requesting the Security Council to keep under consideration all pending applications and reaffirming the principle that each applicant should be considered separately on the basis of the criteria of Article 4.

4. The United States believes that, as long as there is no prospect for the admission of qualified applicants to United Nations membership, it would be desirable for the Assembly to devise arrangements for non-member participation in the Assembly without the right to vote. The Delegation should indicate these views in consultation with other delegations and seek to obtain majority agreement on appropriate arrangements for such of the non-Soviet applicants as may apply.

COMMENT

The United States strongly supports the admission of Italy, Japan, and the other non-Soviet applicants and deplores the fact that their admission has been blocked by the Soviet veto. It opposes the admission of the Soviet-sponsored applicants on the ground that they have failed to demonstrate that they meet the basic Charter qualification; and opposes the Soviet package proposal because it is contrary to the Charter principles, reaffirmed by the International Court of Justice in 1948, that each application should be considered separately on its own merits, because it includes the Soviet applicants and because it omits others we strongly favor.

In light of the suggestion in the Secretary General's report and the widespread view that new efforts should be made to break the membership impasse, and apart from the Australian proposal for admission of Laos and Cambodia, it is possible that a proposal will be made for admission of several applicants selected as a sort of "middle group", not directly aligned with either the Soviet bloc or the free world. They would be drawn from the fourteen non-Soviet applicants. Presumably no such proposal will be made without a prior favorable commitment by the USSR. If the USSR is now prepared to abandon its insistence upon admission of all Soviet-sponsored candidates, we will be confronted with a new situation.

Obviously the United States would not wish to take the initiative in choosing any of the fourteen non-Soviet applicants for special treatment. On the other hand, should some other Member make such a proposal, in light of our frequently expressed support for each of the fourteen non-Soviet applicants, all of whom we regard as fully qualified for admission, we would not wish to oppose several applicants simply because some other qualified states have not been proposed. However, in order to make clear that the United States is not departing from its established opposition to any sort of a "package deal", recommendation 2 above provides that a separate vote should be sought on each applicant.

It is recognized that the three states currently mentioned in rumors in New York—Austria, Finland, and Libya—cannot be depended upon to add to the majority supporting free world positions. At the same time we would not wish to block their admission on this ground. Moreover, the possibility of only a few of the non-Soviet applicants being admitted has always existed.

On several past occasions the Assembly has taken separate votes on each of the applicants and by overwhelming majorities endorsed the qualifications of the fourteen non-Soviet applicants for admission. Since all of them have now been declared qualified by the Assembly, little point is seen for seeking this year a new resolution endorsing each non-Soviet application. Nevertheless, should applicant states not included in any proposals wish to have their names submitted again for Assembly action, we would initiate or support such action. (In any event, regardless of what happens in the Assembly, assuming several applicants obtain favorable Soviet votes in the Assembly, we may wish to consider putting to a vote in the Security Council the applications of all the non-Soviet applicants.)

It will be important to take up the Australian proposal for admission of Laos and Cambodia in such a way that the Assembly will not become involved in substantive discussion of the Indochina settlement.

In order to do everything possible for Italy and Japan, the United States has considered arrangements which would give non-Members excluded from membership by the Soviet veto the right to participate in the Assembly on a regular basis without vote. Italy thus far has not been interested and Japan, while it previously indicated some interest, has just informed USUN that it is not interested at present. Nevertheless, the United States continues to believe that, as long as there is no prospect for admission of qualified applicants to the United Nations, it would be desirable for the Assembly to make arrangements for non-member participation in the Assembly. These views should be discussed with other delegations and if majority support for a proposal for non-member participation is forthcoming, such action should be sought. In order to limit such arrangements to the non-Soviet applicants, the Assembly would provide that they would be open to those applicants that have received seven favorable votes in the Security Council and whose qualifications have been endorsed by the Assembly.

Memorandum by the United Nations Adviser, Bureau of Far Eastern Affairs (Bacon), to the Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs (Robertson)

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] September 27, 1954.

Subject: Non-member participation in the United Nations

In view of the Secretary's personal interest in our sounding out other delegations on the possibilities of moving ahead at this General Assembly on the associate membership question, the Department recently sent USUN a possible draft resolution on the participation of non-members in the UN. Under the draft resolution the General Assembly would invite any state "which the General Assembly has found fully qualified for admission" to accredit representatives to General Assembly sessions. These representatives would be entitled to (a) speak and make proposals, (b) have their votes recorded but not counted, (c) receive UN documents, and (d) to make and have circulated proposals and communications. Non-members taking advantage of this invitation would be expected to make a voluntary contribution to the UN.

In discussions in New York both the Italian and Austrian initial reactions were negative. The UK representative anticipated that his government would not support the plan. Some Latin American states, on the contrary, showed interest.

The Japanese representative expressed strong personal interest but said that in the past Japan had felt that Japan should receive full membership and the Japanese Government had accordingly not taken a formal decision in support of any other type of participation. He said that he would consult his government on the matter and let us know its views.

Comment: It is believed that the Secretary's interest in this problem arises partly in the desire to avoid the essentially negative position which we have taken on the membership question during recent sessions. With nineteen applications pending,<sup>1</sup> some way of breaking the deadlock has been growing in the General Assembly. Non-member participation, if limited to states which have received GA approval, might be the most advantageous solution from our point of view—if it is generally acceptable. The conditions of participation indicated in the draft resolution are very generous. They amount in fact to all the benefits of full membership except the right to have the vote counted.

The proposal is likely to meet difficulties on several scores:

(a) As there is no charter provision for non-member participation, differences may arise among our friends concerning the extent of the rights to be conferred.

(b) To date, the proposed beneficiaries have either been opposed or shown a minimum of interest. Their position in general has been that their chances for obtaining full membership would be impaired if they showed a disposition to accept a lesser status.

(c) The proposal will meet with strenuous Soviet Block [sic] opposition. The result might be an effort to offer non-member participation to Soviet Block candidates.

USUN is now reporting the reactions of other delegations. When fuller reports have been received, a decision will be taken whether or not to proceed to introduce the proposal.

That the GA adopt a resolution stating that it would elect to membership nations which had received seven votes in the SC;

That the SC promptly meet and vote on applications in accordance with this new procedure which would, of course, eliminate the veto;

That thereafter an understanding be reached between the US and the Soviet Union. For illustrative purposes only, this could be an understanding that Italy, Ireland, Portugal and Finland would be admitted, that then Hungary would be admitted and that then another group of states which the US approves of would be admitted, after which one state in the Soviet Group would be admitted;

That "states like Japan and North and South Korea would not be considered at this time".

He asked me to consider this scheme carefully and talk to him about it.

My impression is that he deliberately sought me out in order to put this to me and that although he was careful to say that it was simply a personal idea of his, it is actually a good deal more than that.

Delga 40. London for Secretary from Lodge. Re non-member participation in UN. We have had exploratory talks with number of key delegations regarding our proposal on non-member participation in the United Nations (Gadel 1, September 21). Returns thus far are not decisive either way.<sup>1</sup>

In discussing matter with Senator Fulbright and staff, Senator Fulbright suggested, and I agree, that we should couple our non-member participation proposal with a General Assembly declaration or expression of opinion that membership should not be subject to the veto and that charter be revised to this effect.

I am aware of the relation between this proposal to our position that the seating of the Chinese Communists is subject to the veto. However,

I believe we can make a plausible distinction between admission new members on the one hand and seating of the Chinese Communists on the other.

I believe that joining this element to our non-member participation proposal would materially affect attitude of qualified non-member states and persuade them of the advantages of non-member participation; one of the most common reactions from these countries has been fear that non-member participation is end of line for them. A positive stand by us to remove veto from membership would indicate firm US commitment to do everything possible to bring about admission of qualified applicants.

I believe such a proposal would be favored by the American people. This is confirmed by the grass root soundings taken by the Wiley subcommittee on charter review. This would also be in line with the Vandenberg resolution of 1948.

Request urgently your views on this matter.

Minutes of Seventh Meeting of the United States Delegation to the Ninth Regular Session of the General Assembly, New York, October 1, 1954, 9:45 a. m.<sup>1</sup>

SECRET

Mr. Taylor opened the meeting by announcing that the General Committee would meet next week in order to consider the Soviet item which was introduced in yesterday's general debate by Mr. Vyshinsky.

---

Membership Question

Presenting this subject, Mr. Sisco said that at the last session of the General Assembly a Committee of Good Offices was established, which in the past year has attempted to find the answer to the membership problem. It has not been able to do so, and accordingly its report to the 9th General Assembly will be one of reporting failure.

In previous years, the Soviets have introduced a "package deal". We have consistently opposed this plan, since it is our view that the five Soviet applicants are not peace-loving as defined in Article 4 of the Charter. Also, the Soviet "package deal" does not include five other states of the free world which have received seven votes in the Security Council and a 2/3 majority in the General Assembly, furthermore, such a proposal is contrary to the 1948 opinion of the ICJ which stated that each applicant should be considered separately. In the last session of the General Assembly this proposal never came to a vote since it was withdrawn by the Soviet Union because it did not have the required majority of the General Assembly.

This year's membership item is in two parts: Part a. consists of the report of the Committee of Good Offices and Part b. is the Australian proposal to admit Laos and Cambodia. We have received indications that the UK and most of the Commonwealth nations will support a continuation of the Committee of Good Offices.

The United States position on the admission to membership of the 14 free nations is as follows: We will continue to support admission of the 14 and we will vote against the admission of the five Soviet sponsored nations. If it is proposed that a selected few states within the group of 14 be admitted the Delegation will, subject to instructions from the Department, ask for a separate vote on each of the applicants proposed and will vote for any of the non-Soviet applicants.

We are now directing our efforts toward the United States proposal for non-member participation, Mr. Sisco said. This is a new proposal. We would ask the General Assembly to set forth the arrangements for participation of 14 non-member states. Each of which would receive all UN documentation, be able to engage in debates and could even vote, although the vote would not be counted. We have already had exploratory discussions on this subject with other delegations although there have been no decisive reactions either way as yet.

The United Kingdom and some other delegations have raised some doubt as to the juridical basis of the US proposal and a legal memorandum has been prepared, which we will present to the UK Delegation. Other Delegations have asked what the attitude is of the non-member states themselves. They have been non-committal, Mr. Sisco said, with the exception of Korea, which is enthusiastic, and Japan, whose Prime Minister has accepted the US proposal in principle. We have asked the Department to make contact with those non-member states which the Delegation cannot talk with in New York, since their acceptance of the proposal would facilitate its passage in the General Assembly. Another difficulty encountered is that some delegations have asked whether non-member participation might not be the end of the line for those nations concerned. Our response has been that non-member participation is an interim step towards full membership. Mr. Sisco outlined a telegram sent to the Department yesterday which coupled the non-member participation proposal with a resolution asking the General Assembly to declare that membership questions are not subject to veto in the Security Council and that the Charter should be revised to this effect. This morning a telegram was received from the Secretary approving this policy.

At this point, Mr. Sisco said, the Delegation can soon start expanding its efforts, and the Liaison Officers will be able to engage in further discussions with other delegations on the subject.

Ambassador Lodge observed that the Secretary of State, in his speech in the general debate, had stated that the greatest threat to the United Nations today is the limitation of its membership. This proposal, Ambassador Lodge said, is a far reaching and very important one and one which the United States has a fighting chance to put over. Mr. Bonsal asked whether he might not be supplied with a paper outlining the US proposal so that he might explain it more thoroughly to his liaison contacts, and Mr. Sisco replied that he could supply him with such a paper. Mr. Barco then reported that he had heard from Mr. Asha of Syria that Mr. Belaunde of Peru, Chairman of the Membership Committee, was considering a package proposal including 8 free nations and 4 Soviet-sponsored nations.

Senator Fulbright asked what limitations there would be to participation in this non-member program and Mr. Sisco replied that anyone who has received 7 votes in the Security Council and a  $\frac{2}{3}$  majority in the General Assembly would be qualified and observed that this is limited at present to the 14 nations previously described. The Delegation expressed approval of the coupling of the non-member participation idea with the possible revision of the Charter to eliminate the veto on membership questions and there was some discussion on the possibility of revising the veto situation now rather than waiting until the Charter Review Conference.

Memorandum of Conversation, by Senator J. W. Fulbright of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly and Joseph J. Sisco, an Adviser of the Delegation

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] October 1, 1954.

Subject: Non-member Participation

Participants: Mr. Crosthwaite, U.K. Delegation
Mr. Michael Williams, U.K. Delegation
Senator Fulbright, U.S. Delegation
Mr. Joseph Sisco, U.S. Delegation

Senator Fulbright made available to Messrs. Crosthwaite and Williams a copy of a brief summary of our non-member participation proposal and a copy of the legal memorandum which explains the juridical basis of our proposal.

Mr. Crosthwaite said he would take this matter up in their delegation urgently. During the course of the luncheon conversation Messrs. Crosthwaite and Williams made the following points:

1. He described their position on our proposal as somewhere between outright opposition and extreme scepticism.
2. The UK has real doubts as to the legality of the proposal.
3. He indicated that according to their information none of the European non-members would favor participation on the basis of our proposal.
4. They were opposed to any proposal which would derogate from the authority of the Security Council and enhance the position of the General Assembly. He explained further that in their view the General Assembly is not a reliable organ. He maintained that the UK has no comparable "veto" in the GA as the US has by virtue of its ability to muster 20 Latin American votes on any proposal which really affects its interest. He cited the Latin American support of the US against Indian participation in the Korean Political Conference.
5. They did express specific opposition to the provision that the vote of the non-member participants be recorded but not counted.

Brief Summary of United States Proposal

LIMITED OFFICIAL USE

The proposal is for non-member participation of the 14 qualified states. (Those states who have received 7 votes in SC and  $\frac{2}{3}$  majority in GA).

Under the proposal the GA would set up arrangements for the participation of these non-members. Their privileges might include: receive UN documentation; they could speak, make proposals, and have their vote recorded but not counted, they would be asked to make some financial contribution.

This is different from the old associate membership idea. The GA would invite the qualified non-members to participate on the above basis—no individual applications would be necessary. The non-members could choose to respond to the GA invitation to participate shortly after the adoption of the resolution or at a subsequent later date.

It would be an interim step towards full membership. This proposal is complementary to our continued support of qualified applicants for full membership. Its juridical basis rests on the assumption that the GA, as an adaptable and flexible organ, can invite states to participate in its proceedings under conditions defined by the GA.

The proposal would also include an operative paragraph or two in the resolution which would have the GA declare or express the opinion that membership should not be subject to the veto and that the Charter be revised to this effect.

We have been informed that the Prime Minister Yoshida has accepted the proposal in principle. The Koreans have also indicated their willingness to participate on this basis. We are awaiting responses from a number of other non-members.

Legal Memorandum

LIMITED OFFICIAL USE

Non-Voting Participation in the General Assembly

Representation and voting in the General Assembly are provided for in Articles 9 and 18 of the Charter, which specify that each United Nations Member is entitled to five representatives and one vote in the Assembly. The Charter makes no provision for any form of associate membership in the United Nations.

On the other hand, the Charter does not exclude the possibility of non-Member states appearing before and being heard by United Nations organs, including the General Assembly. Indeed, Articles 11(2) and 35(2) clearly contemplate this. Article 35(2) provides that a "state which is not a member of the United Nations may bring to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly any dispute to which it is a party if it accepts in advance, for the purposes of the dispute, the obligations of pacific settlement provided in the Charter."

In a large number of instances, main committees of the Assembly have invited representatives of non-Member states to appear and speak on questions coming before the Assembly. For example, representatives of Albania and Bulgaria were heard in the Greek case; representatives of Jordan have been heard in discussion of the Palestine problem; the Republic of Korea has been represented by spokesmen in the Assembly's Political and Security Committee. Austria and Italy also have appeared and been heard by Assembly Committees.

These have been instances where the non-Member states concerned were thought to have a special interest in the particular subjects under consideration, and were therefore invited to participate. But there is nothing in the Charter to suggest that similar arrangements may not be made by the General Assembly for one or more non-Member states whose participation the Assembly believes would be valuable over the whole range of subjects dealt with in the Assembly's sessions.

The General Assembly, by large majorities, has expressed its view that fourteen of the existing applicant states ought to be admitted to membership in the Organization so as to participate in its work; they have been excluded only through the veto in the Security Council by one permanent member of the Council. There is no reason why the Assembly may not invite these states to participate in its deliberations, with such privileges as the Assembly wishes to accord, so long as the non-Members do not have their votes counted so as to affect the outcome on proposals placed before the Assembly and its Committees.

Memorandum of Conversation, by an Adviser of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly (Sisco)

CONFIDENTIAL

Subject: Non-Member Participation Proposal

Participants: Mr. Crosthwaite, UK Delegation
Mr. Williams, UK Delegation
Senator Fulbright, US Delegation
Mr. Sisco, US Delegation

Mr. Crosthwaite asked to see us regarding our non-member participation proposal and left with us a legal memorandum which sets forth the reasons why the UK believe our proposal to be of dubious legality.<sup>1</sup> Mr. Crosthwaite shifted his emphasis somewhat in the discussions. In our last conversation he had stressed the argument that our proposal would tend to derogate from the Security Council and enhance the position of the GA which was not a reliable organ from the point of view of the UK, particularly on colonial issues.

Today Mr. Crosthwaite said the UK cannot support our proposal because the GA in effect would be concluding a coup d'etat by taking into its own hands the participation of the 14 qualified applicants. He said the UK cannot support our proposal. If, however, we were willing to submit it to the International Court of Justice and in turn the International Court of Justice were to put its stamp of legal approval on it, then the UK was prepared to consider whether the proposal was politically feasible or desirable. Mr. Crosthwaite stressed that since our proposal is of dubious legality, it would stimulate the GA to further illegalities.

We stressed that in our view, as indicated in our own legal memorandum, our proposal was well founded in its juridical basis. We also said that it did not necessarily follow that a liberal construction of the Charter on the non-member participation proposal necessarily had any connection with future liberal interpretations which the GA might take. While we appreciated the legal views set forth by the UK, we believed our legal case was equally strong. Moreover the political reasons for moving on this proposal are perhaps more important.

Recalling the arguments presented by Mr. Crosthwaite at our previous meeting, we also made the following points.

1. Our non-member participation proposal would not alter the actual or theoretical function and balance of the Security Council on the GA under the Charter.

2. It does not appear that the participation of the 14 qualified applicants would alter the balance of the GA to the detriment of the UK. The few states of the 14 qualified member group which might side with the anti-colonials would not make any appreciable difference with respect to GA consideration of colonial issues. Moreover there are among the group of 14 some states, such as Italy and Portugal whose policies could be expected to parallel those of the administering powers.

3. We assume that the US and UK are moving together and continue to favor the admission of the 14 qualified applicants as full members. If the participation of the 14 qualified non-members would make the GA more unreliable from the UK point of view, would this not also be the case if the same 14 participate as full members? We find it inconsistent that the UK would oppose non-member participation on the ground that the GA would be less reliable and at the same time favor participation of this group of 14 as full members.

4. The UK overestimates our influence with the Latin Americans. We do not have a 20 vote veto but what influence we have is largely based on common interests. There are very few issues in which our own influence with the Latin Americans have not at the same time redounded to the equal advantage of the UK.

Miss Marjorie McMullen, NA

At his request Mr. Tanaka came in to discuss with us the latest developments regarding non-member participation in the General Assembly. He showed us the text of a proposal the Embassy had received from Ambassador Sawada, the Japanese Observer in New York, which we confirmed embodied the main elements of the tentative US proposals. Recalling some previous doubts in the Japanese Foreign Office as to the desirability of "associate membership" for Japan, Mr. Tanaka explained that Ambassador Sawada had taken up our latest suggestions directly with the Prime Minister, Mr. Yoshida, in New York, and the latter had decided Japan should favor the proposal. He inquired regarding the current status of our negotiations.

Mr. Popper explained that the US Delegation to the General Assembly was consulting with other Members and with those applicants that would benefit from the proposal. Once these consultations were completed, we would be in a position to decide whether to proceed with the proposal. One problem was that some of the applicants, notably Italy, Austria and Portugal, had reacted negatively, apparently to some extent on the basis, which we regarded as unjustified, that it might prejudice their chances for full membership. Some UN Members, particularly the United Kingdom, were concerned as to the legality of the proposal. If most of the applicants and many Members opposed the idea, it would be difficult to proceed.

In response to a question from Mr. Tanaka, Mr. Popper indicated that so far only Japan, Jordan, the ROK and just possibly, Ireland were interested in the plan. He observed that if large important powers such as Japan and Italy were interested, it would undoubtedly affect the attitude of others. It was also noted that many UN Members were still without instructions. The prospect did not appear especially encouraging, Mr. Popper concluded, though we wanted more information before making up our minds.

Mr. Tanaka thanked us for the information. He appeared somewhat surprised that more applicants were not interested in the proposal. He indicated that he would be assisting Ambassador Sawada in New York on this matter. We suggested that he should get in touch with Mr. Sisco and Mr. Bonsal of the US Delegation in New York, which he said he would do.

<sup>1</sup> Drafted by Brown (UNP) and concurred in by Stein, Officer in Charge, Pacific Settlement Affairs, cleared with the geographic bureaus (except ARA) and the Deputy Under Secretary of State, approved for transmission by Popper, and signed by Assistant Secretary Key.

First new paragraph which would become opening preambular paragraph would read: "Recalling that the General Assembly in Resolution 296K (IV) requested the states permanent members of the Security Council to refrain from the use of the veto in connection with the recommendation of states for membership in the United Nations."

Second new paragraph which would precede last paragraph preamble as presently written would be: "Recognizing that the problem of the admission of new members will require full consideration at a Charter Review Conference so that admission to membership in the United Nations may no longer be blocked by the veto of a permanent member of the Security Council."

This approach would be combined with strong statement in US membership speech concerning our intention propose at Charter Review Conference removal of veto from membership. Procedure has advantage of minimizing danger that GA might establish undesirable precedent of going on record with specific policy declaration regarding approach to other problems to be dealt with at Charter Review Conference. We would not wish see GA embark on course in this case that might lead to moves for similar declarations regarding Charter review on such contentious issues as matters involving non-self-governing territories or particular Chinese Communist representation on which US position must not be jeopardized.

Suggest USDel consult with key delegations on above basis and report reactions Department.

SUMMARY OF REACTIONS TO US PROPOSALS FOR NON-MEMBER PARTICIPATION IN UNGA

Reactions to our non-member participation proposal, from both qualified applicants and Members, as indicated in the attached, detailed survey, have not been encouraging.

1. Out of the fourteen applicants we consider eligible under our proposal, only three (Japan, Jordan, ROK) are interested. Five (Cambodia, Ceylon, Laos, Libya, Nepal, Vietnam) have not responded. It is clear that three (Italy, Austria, Portugal) are entirely negative, and informal reactions from the remaining two (Ireland, Finland) indicate they will also be negative.

2. We have reactions, mainly preliminary and informal, from twenty-six delegations. Of the eight Latin American states approached, three (Peru, Mexico, El Salvador) favored the plan, and one other (Colombia) probably would support it. The two Far Eastern states consulted promised reactions later. In the British Commonwealth, the United Kingdom is strongly opposed on legal grounds, and we have no final reactions from the others, though Canada, Australia and New Zealand appear somewhat intrigued by the idea. Only one (Belgium) of three Western Europeans consulted seemed favorably disposed. The reaction of the Near and Middle Eastern states has been generally noncommittal, except that Greece and Turkey seem inclined to support the plan.

REACTIONS TO US PROPOSAL FOR NON-MEMBER PARTICIPATION IN UNGA

A. ATTITUDES OF QUALIFIED APPLICANTS

1. Austria

Official reply negative on basis might prejudice full membership later and proposal had aspect of "second-class citizenship" in UN.

2. Cambodia

No response.

3. Ceylon

No response.

4. Finland

Finnish observer was "confident it would not be in the Finnish interest to accept anything short of full membership."

5. Ireland

Foreign Office comments informally it will probably favor the plan and also states new Irish Government has reached no decision as to its attitude toward UN, but will be influenced by the attitudes of Italy and the Vatican.

6. Italy

Opposed.

7. Japan

Japanese observer indicated his Government favored the proposal

8. Jordan

Preliminary reaction favorable.

9. ROK

Enthusiastic.

10. Laos

11. Libya

Under-Secretary approached in Benghazi who promised give us reaction and indicated Libyan intention to resubmit application for full membership.

12. Nepal

No response.

13. Portugal

Not interested in proposal. However, Embassy expressed view Portugal would go along if other qualified nations accepted.

14. Vietnam

No response.

B. ATTITUDES OF OTHERS

1. Latin American States

Peru—Without instructions but reacted favorably and urged US to press proposal.

Argentina—Would support only as a second best approach and then would favor making the participation as full and formal as possible, even to the point of making the states "members of the GA."

Mexico—Reacted favorably, emphasizing necessity for developing a firm legal basis for such GA action.

El Salvador—Extremely enthusiastic and would like to help in every possible way.

Brazil—Initially non-committal, indicating legal aspects would have to be considered with great care. Subsequently instructed that Foreign Office took a dim view, feeling plan was legally doubtful, and questioning desirability of establishing second-class membership. However, would pursue the matter with us when we had concrete proposal to show them.

Venezuela—Personal and informal reaction that idea of "second-class" membership highly unsatisfactory and gives idea that full membership being abandoned, as well as provides USSR with propaganda point alleging US circumvention of the Charter.

Nicaragua—Generally negative along same lines as Venezuela but raised question of what might be done to include Spain and Western Germany.

Colombia—Favorable to anything in direction of bringing non-members into the organization but said it would be a good idea to make sure that such a measure would be passed by GA before introducing it.

2. Far Eastern States

Burma—Promised to give us views later.

Indonesia—Promised views later but did not seem very strongly interested.

3. British Commonwealth

Australia—Ambassador Spender's interest in 1952 noted but recalled that official Australian position negative. However, Mr. Casey found no objection but was referring matter to Canberra.

Canada—Was interested in exploring matter but Ottawa generally cautious, with some legal doubts. Inquired whether any consideration had been given to requesting ICJ opinion on legality and seemed to have some concern over fact that plan would benefit one group of non-members over another.

New Zealand—Found proposal interesting and promised to refer it to his Government. Some question as to whether non-members would wish to be put in position of having to vote on certain matters and whether arrangement sufficiently attractive to offset financial obligations involved.

Union of South Africa—Full membership or nothing, and while promising to consult Government predicted a negative response.

United Kingdom—Cannot support. Doubted legality and suggested desirability of ICJ reference, indicating that if the US is willing to submit it to Court and it finds plan legal, the UK will be prepared to consider whether the plan is politically feasible or desirable. Moreover, important non-members are not interested.

4. Western Europe

Belgium—If applicants reacted favorably and US sponsored the resolution, would undoubtedly support it.

Netherlands—Doubted legality and whether European non-members would participate.

France—Preliminary Foreign Office reaction not favorable.

5. Near and Middle East

Syria—Some interest.

Israel—Considerable interest but noncommittal.

Iran—Probably no objection if no states mentioned and that is left up to GA for decision.

Iraq—Noncommittal but willing to study further.

Turkey—Favorably disposed and promised further reaction.

Greece—No objection.

India—Japanese observer indicated to USUN that India would favor some sort of arrangement permitting greater non-member participation in UN.

Ethiopia—Promised views later but questioned legal basis and wondered about the practical effect of such a plan.

Subject: Non-Member Participation

Participants: Mr. Selwyn Lloyd, UK
Mr. P. M. Crosthwaite, UK
Mr. W. Sykes, UK
Senator Fulbright, US
Mr. Joseph Sisco, US

We discussed our non-member participation proposal once again and we stressed the following: that our legal case, in our view, is as good as that presented by the UK; that we do not believe that General Assembly action on our non-member participation proposal will stimulate the GA to take future actions which the UK believe to be of dubious legality; that submitting our proposal to the ICJ would only delay the opportunity for non-member participation; that we do not believe the participation of the 14 qualified applicants would alter the balance of the GA to the detriment of the UK or the US, but rather the states could be expected to make a contribution to the work of the UN.

The UK really made no new points, but there was a different emphasis in their argumentation. The legal argument was not stressed as much by Mr. Lloyd. When it was pointed out to Mr. Lloyd that it appeared inconsistent for the UK to say on the one hand that they oppose non-member participation of the 14 because it would increase their difficulties in the colonial field, and on the other that they favored the full membership of these 14, he made the following statement in strict confidence. His Government believes the best posture on the membership question is the one which they have maintained all along, namely, that it is the Soviet veto which is keeping out the 14 qualified applicants as full members. In actuality, in light of the difficulties which a number of these states could make as full members, the UK, while maintaining its present posture, is not enthusiastic about their admission as full members or on any other basis. If, Selwyn Lloyd continued, we could get Italy in alone for example, the UK believes this would be politically desirable. He doubted very much that it was politically wise and realistic to bring in so many possible trouble makers, either on the basis of our proposal or on the basis of full membership, and he argued that this would neither serve UK nor US interests.

During the course of the conversation, it was also made clear that if we go ahead on our non-member participation proposal, that the UK is likely to introduce a proposal referring it to the ICJ. They also stressed that the European countries are firm against our proposal.

Our impression, as a result of this conversation and the two previous ones, is that the UK is firm on its position.

Mr. Menon stated that the conference was to be strictly personal and unofficial and exploratory in nature. He was not making any commitments nor asking for them. Mr. Menon did practically all of the talking.

I indicated to him practically verbatim the substance of Gadel 22. His response was that it was an official document and not to be considered very seriously. The point he was seeking to make was that the membership matter, if it is to be resolved at all must be resolved by mutual agreement, not by votes. If the stalemate on admission is to be broken, it must be broken by agreement between Russia and the US. He made no formal proposal, but the implication from his statement was that India is in a position to be the intermediary in working out agreements which would lead to a solution of the membership problem.

Mr. Menon paid the US the compliment of saying that he would trust our word if it were given. As he sees it, the veto on this matter should not be abolished. I understand his position to be that he would oppose the abolition of the veto on membership problems. The whole thing must be worked out by agreement. He stressed that it will and can be worked out when Russia and the US feel that it is politically desirable to do so and there is no need of considering abolition of the veto. He believes in the veto on this and other matters.

I did not raise with Mr. Menon their reaction to our non-member participation proposal. On his own initiative Mr. Menon brought it up and said that he was opposed to it. The only way is by agreement.

Mr. Singh stressed to Mr. Sisco that in their view the way to attack this problem is to direct our efforts toward doing something about full membership rather than proposals for non-member participation.

Subject: India's Views on UN Membership for Japan

In his speech in the general debate in the General Assembly the Indian delegate, Krishna Menon made the following statement concerning Japan:

“Another fact which I am instructed by my Government to refer to is that of Japan. We hope that very soon, and with the utmost speed, a peace treaty between the Soviet Union and Japan will emerge and that Japan will take its place in this Assembly. This is a matter of concern to us as an Asiatic country and we believe that if Japan took its place as a free and equal member of the United Nations it would be a contribution to the stability of Asia and would prevent certain problems that have already begun to rear their heads from coming up here. It would also be a contribution to the greater universality of the United Nations itself.”

Comment: It is to be noted that apparently Menon conditions Japan's admission to the UN upon the prior conclusion of a treaty of peace between the USSR and Japan. He thus essentially sustains the Soviet point of view while ostensibly urging Japan's admission. This equivocal position is in line with the proposal which he recently made to the U.S. Delegation that we support a membership procedure which would circumvent the veto but would involve a U.S.-USSR understanding concerning which candidacies would be acceptable. He suggested that Japan would be excluded for the present.

PRIORITY

Delga 75. For the Secretary from Lodge. Re: Non-Member Participation in UN. USGADel, including Sen Fulbright, have had number exploratory conversations with key dels regarding our non-member participation proposal. Fol is our analysis:

Commonwealth:

UK firmly opposed. They contend our proposal of dubious legality. Lloyd, in a long and revealing talk with Fulbright on strictly confidential basis gave what appears to be real reason for strong UK opposition. They fear that participation of 14 qualified applicants will cause increasing difficulty for them by making GA less reliable on number of issues, particularly colonial field. They insist that they wld have to put our proposal to the ICJ if we moved ahead.

When it was pointed out to Lloyd that it appeared inconsistent for UK to say on the one hand that they oppose non-member participation of the 14 because it wld increase their difficulties in the colonial field, and on the other that they favored the full membership of these 14, he made the fol statement in strict confidence. His Govt believes the best posture on the membership question is the one which they have maintained all along, namely, that it is the Soviet veto which is keeping out the 14 qualified applicants as full members. In actuality, in light of the difficulties which a number of these states cld make as full members, the UK, while maintaining its present posture, is not enthusiastic about their admission as full members or on any other basis. If, Selwyn Lloyd continued, we cld get Italy in alone for example, the UK believes this wld be politically desirable. He doubted very much that it was politically wise and realistic to bring in so many possible trouble-makers, either on the basis of our proposal or on the basis of full membership, and he argued that this wld neither serve UK nor US interests. (Memo of conversation being pouched.)

He made it clear that Nepal wld be either under the influence of China or India, that Finland was under the guns of the Soviet Union, that Portugal wld not want to come in because of the colonial question, that Ireland wld be a constant source of irritation and embarrassment to the UK and that, in his opinion, altogether too much weight was given in the GA to small countries out of all proportion to their size. He did not want to increase the number of such countries, which was already too large.

Casey, Australia, personally found no objection but wld not commit govt unless substantial support prevalent for our proposal.

Canada is not enthusiastic, with some legal doubts, though they indicated it might be difficult for them to oppose our proposal if we went ahead. South Africa negative. New Zealand moderately interested, but noncommittal.

Europe:

France and Belgium both negative, and Netherlands doubtful on grounds applicants themselves do not favor our proposal.

Arab-Asian:

India strongly opposed. Arab reactions cautious. Entezam (Iran) indicated coolness and reported lack of interest other dels. Egypt, Syria, Iraq, Ethiopia and Israel still studying proposal, but no enthusiasm indicated. Turkey undecided, Kyrou (Greece) does not believe our proposal practical, and Saudi Arabia and Liberia negative.

Latin American States :

Of 8 LA states approached, 3 (Peru, Mexico and El Salvador) favored plan, and one other, Colombia, probably wld support it.

Qualified Applicants :

Out of 14 applicants we consider eligible under our proposal, Japan favorable, ROK enthusiastic and informal views of Jordan appear to be favorable. It is clear that 3 (Italy, Austria and Portugal) are entirely negative and informal reactions from two others (Ireland and Finland) indicate they will also be negative.

Reasons given by members in addition to those indicated above include fol:

Non-member participation plan rather than constitute interim step towards full membership, will be substitute for it and will not contribute to breaking the log jam; members point to unenthusiastic responses of most non-members themselves, the latter of whom see non-member proposal as second class role of sovereign states.

The lack of enthusiasm for the non-member participation plan added to the extreme desirability of not having a conflict with the Brit, wld make me unhesitatingly recommend that we drop this proposal at this session. The reason I do not make this recommendation is because of the great importance which I attach to the change in the Japanese attitude. Remembering our conversations in Tokyo in August of 1953 and the great progress in Japanese thinking as shown by indication PriMin Yoshida is presently in support of this scheme. I am very reluctant to throw all this good work away. I hope that Dept will be able to think of a definition which covers Japan alone and brings her in as a non-member in the spirit of the proposal. If such a device cld be formulated, we might try putting it to the Brit simply on a Japanese basis alone, without bringing up all the other countries to which UK objects.

Subject: US Plan for Non-Member Participation

In the course of a conversation that covered many topics, Amb. Lodge informed the Secretary of the status of our canvass of opinion regarding the non-Member participation plan. In view of this report the Secretary agreed that it would be wise to drop this scheme for this session. However, he was intrigued by the idea of trying to devise a formula which would permit Japan, and possibly Italy, to participate in the GA. It was worthwhile not to lose the benefit of the favorable reaction already received from the Japanese.

Amb. Lodge suggested that some formula based upon the criterion of size might be the basis for such action. If stretching the criterion to include Italy would be of use in getting the votes of the Latin American bloc, that might be worth a try.

Subject: Non-member Participation in the UN

Attached is a draft instruction to New York prepared by UNP as another effort on non-member participation.<sup>1</sup> Ambassador Lodge had suggested that the Department find some formula which would cover Japan alone. The present draft singles out Japan and Italy for initial approaches to see if they would declare their willingness to participate in the GA in a non-member status if the GA saw fit to grant it. If Japan and Italy were receptive to the suggestion, all other qualified applicants (i.e., free-world candidates) might be approached and the GA might then pass a resolution extending to all applicants making declarations which have already been found qualified for admission the privileges of non-member participation.

UNP is proposing this draft in an effort to meet the Secretary's apparent continuing interest in the proposal as well as Lodge's desire to respond to Japan's interest. The proposal has been broadened so as not to affront the ROK and Jordan, both of which have expressed interest and possibly to make the proposal more palatable to some UN members.

The UK has questioned the proposal on legal grounds and has also informed our Delegation that for political reasons the association of any of the applicants except perhaps Italy in UN activities would be undesirable in the British view. EUR is accordingly objecting to the despatch of the telegram. You may accordingly be asked to discuss the draft at a meeting with Key and Elbrick.

The present draft with certain changes is acceptable to NA and PSA and to me. While it is doubtful that adequate support for the proposal will be forthcoming in the General Assembly, I believe that a further try will do no harm and might possibly do good. In view of the Japanese and ROK interest in the project, I see no reason for dropping it until we are sure that nothing further can be done. Accordingly, I recommend that we support UNP in favoring despatch of the instruction.

Subject: US Plan for Non-Member Participation in UNGA.

Reactions in New York to our proposal for non-member participation in the General Assembly, both from UN Members and from the qualified applicants, have been largely negative. Nevertheless, because we wish to do everything we can to end the membership deadlock, we would like to approach other Delegations in New York with the following alternative plan:

1. Japan has expressed definite interest in non-member participation; Italy has indicated readiness to reconsider its negative position if there is a real and impelling reason (Tab A).<sup>2</sup> We would suggest to these two states, as key applicants whose position would strongly affect Assembly reactions, that they renew their standing applications, as other applicants have done, and in the same communication state that, in line with their desire to accept the obligations of the Charter and play their part in the UN, they would, if the GA sees fit, be willing to participate as non-members to the extent such participation would be consistent with GA procedures and Charter provisions. We might then similarly approach the other qualified applicants.

2. Assuming Japan, Italy and possibly others respond favorably, the GA would (1) note the declarations and extend to the states involved the privileges discussed in our earlier proposal (Tab B);<sup>2</sup> and

(2) arrange for granting the same status to other qualified applicants as they choose to request it.

3. Because many Members, particularly the UK, strongly oppose non-member participation on legal grounds, they may propose reference of the matter to the ICJ for an advisory opinion. If the majority favors this step, we would acquiesce. We believe chances for a favorable Court opinion are good. Whatever the Court's view might be, the operation as a whole would put us in a relatively good position vis-à-vis the applicants and the Charter Review Conference and would keep the membership issue alive.

4. It is possible that Japan, Italy, and the bulk of the UN membership would not go along with this new variant of our plan. In that case, we might have to limit our action at this session to a description of our proposal in a speech in the Committee, stating we were presenting it for further consideration by governments in the event that the membership deadlock continued.

5. The above proposal has been discussed with FE, EUR, and NEA, and those three bureaus have cleared the attached draft telegram (Tab C) to the Delegation in New York, subject to your decision.

Recommendation

That you authorize the Department to instruct the US Delegation to pursue the foregoing course of action.

Re: Delga 75. While we think it impractical and politically undesirable to single out Japan, we suggest following plan for your consideration and possible action:

1. We note Japan definitely willing go forward with non-member participation and as reported Rome's 1412 possibly Italy also if we make clear we attach importance its participation. We believe there would be great advantages for UN in providing non-member participation status these two states and have little doubt many other applicants would also come along once non-member status established for Italy and Japan. We have focused on Italy and Japan on basis their population, resources, importance in Europe and Far East respectively, potential contribution to UN and present broad participation various activities UN system (e.g. Italy in TC, regional economic agencies, specialized agencies, etc.). We see disadvantages in distinguishing Japan and Italy as ex-enemy states for this purpose both because it would give Communists propaganda ammunition and because it could undermine US position re: Bulgaria, Hungary, and Rumania.

2. We would suggest Italy and Japan renew standing applications for UN membership in new messages to Secretary General as other applicants have done, and in same communication state that in line with desire to accept obligations of Charter and play part in UN they would, if GA sess [sees?] fit, be willing participate in GA in non-member status. In order avoid possible affront their prestige and dignity exact language should be carefully worked out, perhaps along some such line as a statement that if it seems likely affirmative action on their applications will be indefinitely delayed, they would be willing, in interest making more effective contribution to attainment UN objectives, to give serious consideration to possibility participating in Assembly to extent such participation would be consistent with Assembly procedures and Charter provisions.

3. Assuming Japan and Italy agree, we might formally approach all 14 qualified applicants to see whether interested in making similar declaration. Purpose this procedure would be to enable ROK and other applicants interested in non-member participation to act at same time as Japan and Italy if they wish. It would be understood if they preferred to delay response way would be clear for them to make decision any time. In view Australian item Laos and Cambodia these two states might wish withhold response until committee action completed that item.

4. GA in turn would: (1) note these declarations and extend to Japan and Italy (as well as others making such declarations) privileges set forth in Gadel 1 and (2) state that if any other applicants found qualified for admission desire make similar declaration, Secretary General authorized extend same privileges to them. Alternatively, if other delegations consider that (2) constitutes improper delegation authority in important matter relating to membership, GA could simply declare willingness consider favorably granting similar status other qualified applicants.

5. If UK and others insist any such arrangement illegal and propose reference to ICJ for advisory opinion, we would state our belief that such an arrangement constitutes healthy development of Charter, like Uniting for Peace Program, and that we see nothing in Charter precluding it. However, if GA insists on ICJ reference, arrangements could perhaps be made for Court to deal with matter through summary proceedings before current GA adjourns. We feel good chance ICJ would rule favorably and consider in any event risk Court reference worth taking since even if negative opinion, it would put US in relatively good position vis-à-vis applicants and Charter Review Conference.

6. Suggest you discuss situation on basis above with key delegations in New York starting with UK, and with Japan and Italy. In discussion with latter Gadel should indicate our feeling that if they go along, prospect reasonably good for favorable GA action and little question widespread support for ICJ reference if we decide follow that course. In your conversation with UK made clear US cannot accept extreme views given Gadel by Lloyd and remains convinced, as I said in general debate, power and influence UN will progressively decline unless ways found bring all peace-loving states into organization. US cannot believe Lloyd's remarks represent considered UK judgment. We feel strongly UN cannot satisfactorily fulfill its important tasks when qualified states continue to be excluded from its activities and cannot agree to indefinite passive acquiescence present deadlock. On contrary we believe must actively explore every proper method solve problem or minimize its destructive consequences.

7. We appreciate difficulty of persuading British and other Europeans in light their rather strong reactions as reported urtels. However, we are inclined to proceed with this approach notwithstanding their hesitancy. We consider this an organizational question on which honest differences of opinion may be threshed out in Committee discussions and on which we should be willing calmly to accept GA verdict.

I have your memorandum of October 18th. I am disposed to let this matter coast for the time being. I think it useful to have formulated the idea and to have brought it to the attention of other delegations. However, in view of the lukewarm response and the fact that Italy would only act as a favor to the United States, I am disposed to let the matter continue in the present status for this session. I think it constitutes a useful prelude to possible Charter amendment and it suggests an alternative which could perhaps be usefully adopted at the Charter Review Conference if the Soviet Union vetoes a Charter review amendment.

I think that our delegation should make it clear to other delegations that we believe that the United Nations is bound to wither away unless it becomes more universal. Perhaps if this idea seeps in for a year, it will bear some fruit next year.<sup>2</sup>

[WASHINGTON,] October 20, 1954.

Subject: Spanish Observer at UN.

Participants: Sr. Propper, Chargé d'Affaires, Spanish Embassy
Mr. Key, IO
Mr. Allen, EUR
Miss Brown, UNP

Mr. Key called in Sr. Propper to discuss with him the Spanish desire to arrange for an observer at the UN. As he understood the situation, in response to a telephone call from the Spanish Ambassador, Secretary General Hammarskjold had written him a letter indicating the possible problem raised by the various General Assembly resolutions on Spain and stating his intention in these circumstances to consult members of the UN if an official request from Spain to send a permanent observer to the UN were received. Mr. Hammarskjold was now awaiting the Spanish reply. Sr. Propper confirmed this sequence of events.

Mr. Key informed Sr. Propper that we agreed with the Spanish Embassy that it was unnecessary for the Secretary General to consult others, but he also noted the Secretary General's somewhat delicate position in matters of this sort, which led him to lean over backwards. In any case, if we were consulted, Mr. Key said we would indicate our support for a Spanish observer, a view undoubtedly shared by many other members, though a few undoubtedly remained hostile toward Spain. He went on to suggest that if Spain wished to go ahead, a decision it must make for itself, it might facilitate matters by sending a reply to the Secretary General's letter. In such a letter the Spanish Government might in effect reserve its position on the matter of consultations, perhaps expressing the hope that the Secretary General had made any inquiries he considered necessary but at the same time stating that it saw no reason for such action and knew this view was shared by others. Alternatively, an appropriate Spanish representative might discuss the matter informally with the Secretary General in New York.

Sr. Propper believed that it might be best for his government simply to ask directly for observer status, sending the name or names of the Spanish personnel involved in the same communication. He expressed the view that the presence in the Secretariat of Spanish Communists might have some bearing on the UN reaction. He indicated his hope that a permanent small observer group of perhaps one to three persons might be a good beginning for Spain's participation in the UN.

Sr. Propper informed us that his government had sent observers to the 8th General Assembly, the request having been made in a letter from the Foreign Minister to the Secretary General. These observers had been afforded the appropriate courtesies in New York. Mr. Key suggested that it would be helpful to refer to this fact in the letter asking for permanent observer status for Spain. In this connection he noted the possible advantages in handling this matter orally in New York since it would be possible to make some relevant points informally that might not be suitable for inclusion in a letter.

After further discussion, Sr. Propper was inclined to feel that it would be preferable to include in the letter requesting observer status: the statement that a Spanish representative would be pleased to come to New York to discuss the matter directly with the Secretary General. He emphasized the view of his government that events had entirely overtaken the various UN resolutions on Spain, noting that Spain was now participating in a number of the specialized agencies and exchanged diplomatic representatives with most UN members. Mr. Key suggested it would be useful for the Spanish letter to refer to broad Spanish participation in other international activities.

Sr. Propper expressed his appreciation and indicated he would take the matter up with his government in the light of the various suggestions we made to him.<sup>2</sup>

DAVID MCK. KEY

<sup>2</sup> On Nov. 10, 1954 Sr. Propper called on Assistant Secretary Key to hand him a copy of the Spanish text of a note of Nov. 6, 1954, from the Spanish Ambassador to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, requesting UN observer status for Spain; not printed. At that time Sr. Propper explained that it had been decided not to discuss in the note the question whether the Secretary-General need consult with other members on the Spanish request. It had also been decided not to mention that the Spanish Government had representatives present at the General Assembly's eighth session, "since technically speaking, they were not called observers." Miss Salt expressed relief. She remarked that the basis of the British opposition to the idea was legal and not political in character. She stated that Selwyn Lloyd's conversation with Senator Fulbright (in which Lloyd had indicated opposition because of the undesirable political effects of enlarging the General Assembly) was an approach that would appeal to men engaged in politics, but was at pains to point out that it was not the real basis of British policy.

Japan alone as suggested Delga 75 we have concluded, as apparently Japanese observer has also, it would be impractical and politically undesirable.

2. Latest Japanese suggestion (Delga 121) <sup>2</sup> to provide observers with additional privileges in GA involves many same difficulties as broader proposal for non-member participation and raises additional problems. Observers are, on strictly informal basis, accorded certain privileges by Secretary General on his own authority purely as matter of courtesy. Any move to grant them such rights as appearing and speaking in committees would require GA action establishing observer status which might encounter legal objections, and would also pose question what states eligible. In present circumstances we believe it undesirable for GA to formalize observer status in any way. We consider any grant of privileges in GA to non-members must be coupled with provisions limiting it to qualified applicants, which would be more difficult to justify in case of observers. Moreover, any formalization observer status would present special difficulties for US in view of fact Headquarters Agreement makes no provision for observers, on basis of which we have denied and will continue deny visas to representatives of Soviet satellites who wish to come to New York as observers.

3. We see no objection to Japan's renewing present application, as others have done, and draft communication shown to Bonsal seems excellent.

Mr. McNicol told me that the Thai had agreed to co-sponsor the Australian resolution on UN membership for Laos and Cambodia. On the other hand, the Burmese have rejected an Australian request to join in sponsoring the resolution, the Burmese position being that they cannot make a special gesture in the direction of Laos and Cambodia without making a similar one for Nepal and Ceylon.

Mr. McNicol said that he supposed that we would not wish to co-sponsor the Australian Resolution of Laos and Cambodia. Suggest GADel informally inquire whether sponsors willing consider revising paragraph to delete these two, possibly limiting those named to three UN members that signed Geneva Indochina Agreement. If sponsors maintain present language, US should abstain and make appropriate explanation. GADel will of course vote for other paragraphs and for resolution as whole.

Gadel 78. Re: Membership. As indicated Gadel 69 we favor UK draft resolution providing for continuation for Good Offices Committee (Delga 139). We do not consider Indian proposal (Delga 168) acceptable substitute.

Preambular provisions Indian draft generally duplicate British text except that latter has advantage of specific declaration of principle of universality of membership of qualified states. We believe continuation of Good Offices Committee with present membership preferable any effort establish special SC subcommittee. In our view it would be extremely difficult for SC to agree upon composition membership subcommittee, particularly since in past membership question has been handled by separate SC committee of whole. Undoubtedly five permanent members would insist upon inclusion. On other hand, we see some advantage in maintaining existing Good Offices Committee without Great Power participation. Gadel might wish remind Menon USSR supported Good Offices Committee last year which in our view undermines his position that Indian draft alone maintains favorable atmosphere and keeps membership problem out of "cold war". At same time, while we see no particular advantage and seriously doubt usefulness, we would not oppose GA request that SC reconsider pending membership applications. Relevance Rule 138 seems questionable since GA has no special SC membership report and can always request SC reconsider pending applications as it has done in past without reference to rule.

Department believes might be appropriate to seek combination British and Indian proposals so that (1) Good Office Committee continued and (2) SC requested reconsider pending applications and report 10th GA.

We do not agree that adoption Indian proposal, whether as now drafted or combined with UK resolution, would make unnecessary vote on resolution covering Laos and Cambodia. This is separate item before Committee, on which we believe resolution useful if only to re-emphasize USSR alone continues bear responsibility for exclusion these two states.

Gadel 81. Re: Membership. Comments contained in Gadel 78 also applicable revised Indian resolution (Delga 177).

We see no purpose whatever in suggestion contained new operative paragraph 3 for "periodic" SC meetings on membership problem and would plan to oppose it if it came to vote. Such meetings were intended to be held on very special occasions during which SC members would be represented by Foreign Ministers or other special representatives. UN membership question, on which no progress has been made in recent years, is not of such importance as to warrant "periodic" meetings, and we think only harm could come of holding one without any prospect of successful solution this problem. Moreover, "periodic" meeting more likely result in Chinese representation issue being raised in SC than regular meeting. Therefore urge you make strong effort dissuade Indians from pushing this idea, enlisting support of British and others who we feel sure should agree in view our common past reluctance to hold "periodic" SC meetings.

Subject: Membership

By arrangement with NA, Mr. Suma came in for a general review of the status of the UN membership problem.

Mr. Suma said that the Japanese, like the United States, had sought reactions from other applicant states and UN members to the plan for "non-member participation" or, as he put it, "resident membership". Their information, like our own, was that the reaction had been generally unfavorable. Mr. Suma wondered whether there was any further action in this field which could be suggested to Prime Minister Yoshida when he reaches Washington.

I went over the current situation in the Ad Hoc Political Committee with Mr. Suma and expressed our conclusion that we did not expect that there would be any advance in solving the membership problem at this time. In the circumstances, I said, we could perceive no further action which might usefully be taken by Japan. I said I thought the discussion, both public and private, of the non-member participation idea, had been useful and that it might come to have increasing importance if the membership deadlock were to persist for the next few years. For the time being, however, we were letting the matter rest.

NEW YORK, November 10, 1954—9 p. m.

Delga 216. Re membership. Argentina, Cuba, El Salvador and India today tabled joint draft combining their respective earlier proposals. (Delga 213) Argentina, Cuba and El Salvador also tabled separate resolution on ten qualified applicants. (Delga 212). We plan, in absence other willing sponsor, to move amendment adding ROK and Vietnam, which will be before Committee when it meets tomorrow afternoon.

There was inconclusive discussion in Committee concerning procedure to be followed in dealing with various resolutions. Australia proposed all resolutions be discussed concurrently and decision re order of voting deferred until discussion completed. India, strongly supported by Argentina and others, moved that Committee decide to vote first on combined Indian-Latin American draft (Delga 213). It is obvious from Committee discussion and conversation between Menon and Wadsworth after meeting that following vote on Indian-LA Resolution, proposal would be made which would avoid vote on other resolutions we estimate Indian motion will carry. USSR supported Indian proposal. Ordonneau (France) informs us that USSR is prepared not to seek vote its package proposal if others not pressed.

In informal discussions after meeting with Australians, British, French and New Zealanders, their estimate also was Indian motion to give Indian-Latin American Resolution priority would carry. Ordonneau (France) expressed view best face-saving tactic was probably to "go along gracefully" with Menon proposal and let other proposals be referred in some way to SC. He believed, that while Australian Resolution would carry despite substantial number abstentions (his estimate all Arabs, some LA's and all Asian states except Pakistan and Thailand would abstain) affirmative vote would be considerably smaller than in past, possibly not more than twenty. Ordonneau said also, that on basis their canvassing, indications are that Vietnam would be in even worse position, and even ROK unlikely emerge with good vote in light of irritations of some dels with them. Ordonneau said France would vote in favor of Vietnam.

Crosthwaite (UK) concurred generally in French views and pointed out particular problem in connection Vietnam since UK now instructed abstain which would mean unfortunate divergence would become public, which he regarded as serious. This reason alone, Crosthwaite felt, made it most undesirable to press for vote on other resolutions after adoption of Indian-Latin American joint draft. He explained UK abstention based on view should not buy "pig in a poke".

It became clear tactics would depend upon whether Australia decided not to press for vote on Laos and Cambodia, it being generally understood that if they sought vote on their resolution other resolutions including Soviet package and our amendment re ROK and Vietnam would also be put to vote.

Australians seeking instructions on whether (1) press motion to accord priority their resolution on Laos and Cambodia which is likely be defeated; and (2) insist upon vote their proposal on Laos and Cambodia.

Re (1) above, unless Australians decide they must seek vote on according priority to their proposal Laos and Cambodia, which we would support but which would almost certainly be defeated, we believe we should support Indian priority motion.

Re (2) above, if Australians do not press for vote on Laos and Cambodia, we believe we should go along without pressing for vote on any of pending proposals particularly in light of shaky position of Laos and Cambodia and definitely unfavorable situation on Vietnam.

If situation develops in this way, next question will be whether Committee actually refers resolutions that have been tabled to SC after Indian-Latin American joint draft adopted, or whether there will be general agreement that since joint Indian-LA resolution provides for sending records to SC, no further action necessary. We would hope latter course would be followed but if specific resolutions referred to SC we intend make clear Soviet package proposal is in entirely different category from other proposals which cover applicants already determined qualified for admission.

We strongly hope Committee will not refer Soviet package proposal to SC, since this would weaken GA's past position in opposition to this proposal. Committee discussion today made clear Indian intention to move, following adoption Joint Indian-LA Draft (Delga 213), that all other pending proposals be referred to SC. Our estimate and that of UK is that, while vote would be close, Indian initiative probably would succeed though by narrow margin.

Should Indian motion fail and committee proceed to vote on other proposals, we estimate resolution on Laos and Cambodia would carry, though by smaller favorable vote than past GA endorsements these two applicants. At this point, it is possible move might be made not to vote on remaining two proposals; namely, LA resolution on ten applicants, with US amendment adding ROK and Vietnam, and Soviet package proposal. Cuban representative suggested this possibility in Committee today. We would unless instructed otherwise oppose such a move if it develops.

CONFIDENTIAL

NEW YORK, November 16, 1954—8 p. m.

PRIORITY

Delga 240. Re membership. As Department aware India-Indonesia resolution referring all pending resolutions (i.e., Australian proposal on Laos and Cambodia, Soviet package proposal, joint LA proposal covering ten applicants, and US amendment on ROK and Vietnam) adopted 25-24 with 6 abstentions. Those absent were Costa Rica, Ecuador, El Salvador, Liberia, and Venezuela. Abstentions were Afghanistan, Canada, Ethiopia, Iran, Israel, and Peru. It is possible that when Plenary considers Committee report on membership this resolution could be defeated, provided 4 absent LA states voted with US and Canada, which was confused in Committee proceedings, changed its abstention to negative vote. A few affirmative votes, namely Bolivia, Greece and the Philippines, might possibly be influenced to shift.

We see three possible courses:

1. If resolutions relating to particular applicants are not reintroduced in Plenary, we could vote in favor of referral resolution, making appropriate explanation of vote, i.e., including emphasis that this constitutes strictly procedural action and implies no endorsement whatsoever of the substance of the resolution, and particularly Soviet package proposal; that we will insist in SC that each applicant be considered on its own merits; and that we will continue vigorous support applications fourteen qualified states. Affirmative vote on India-Indonesia referral resolution would be analogous to US support referral Indian disarmament resolution to Disarmament Commission despite our objection substance of that resolution.

With respect to our vote yesterday in Ad Hoc Political Committee against referral, we did so on ground publicly stated that we desired opportunity to vote on substantive proposals and in particular in favor of endorsement qualified applicants. We also made clear in Committee statement that our objection to referral of Soviet package to SC was on ground it is not in same category as resolutions reendorsing 14 qualified applicants. It is possible that a negative vote on the India-Indonesia referral resolution in the Plenary, in the absence of resubmitted resolutions re applicants, would be misinterpreted by the 14 qualified applicants and world opinion generally as wakening our support for their admission.

2. We could move for separate vote on documents listed in referral resolution, voting in favor referral all documents, except Soviet package proposal. Since vote in Ad Hoc Committee on referral latter was 24-21-10, with some lobbying we might be able defeat its referral. However, such move likely to decrease US prestige as being over-rigid, considering unlikelihood of SC taking referral action seriously.

3. Since we have already made US position clear on Soviet package in Committee and see little advantage in repeating same performance in Plenary, we could simply vote on referral resolution as a whole and seek to enlist enough votes to defeat it. We would take line that India-Latin American Resolution provides for referral of full GA records to SC and it is therefore superfluous for Plenary to adopt India-Indonesia referral resolution.

In light of prospect that votes on resolutions re particular applicants will likely be by unimpressive majorities, or certainly by majority smaller than in the past, we think we should not encourage their resubmission for Plenary action. In this regard attitude of Australians and Latin Americans important. We do not know at present what action if any Australia is contemplating in Plenary. UKDel tells us Australia now inclined to feel no further action called for, the record having been made. Ribas (Cuba) however at the conclusion of the Ad Hoc Political Committee yesterday and again today did indicate his hope that the referral resolution would be defeated and the other resolutions resubmitted. He also suggested possibility joint co-sponsorship by Cuba, El Salvador, Australia, Pakistan, Thailand and US of resolution favoring all 14 of qualified applicants.

Department should also consider whether India-Indonesia referral resolution should be regarded as subject to two-thirds rule. We believe case can be made either way, but in light of legislative history this proposal believe it would be difficult to convince enough dels that it requires two-thirds majority.

At meeting today Ambassador Wadsworth and staff arrived at following consensus and recommendations.

a. It is desirable to conclude Plenary action with minimum wrangle and as expeditiously as possible.

b. We should not encourage resubmittal of resolutions relating to individual applicants.

c. We should not press for GA decision that Indian-Indonesian referral resolution requires two-thirds majority.

d. If resolutions relating to individual applicants resubmitted in Plenary, we should vote against referral resolution and seek support of others to do same. If referral resolution defeated, we would then vote in favor of resolutions relating to endorsement of 14 qualified applicants and against Soviet package resolution (if resubmitted).

e. If resolutions relating to individual applicants not resubmitted, we should vote in favor of referral resolution and make explanation of vote along lines indicated in (1) above.

Since number of dels anxious to have our views, request instructions as soon as possible. We expect Plenary to consider membership problem Monday, November 22.

We do not concur in recommendation e. Assembly records to SC which would include these draft proposals; and (2) equates Soviet package proposal which GA has consistently rejected with proposals covering applicants previously determined to be qualified and whose admission has been blocked by Soviet veto in SC. We are not impressed with argument that negative US vote on referral would be misinterpreted since we can make perfectly clear in explanation of vote that we continue to support all 14 qualified applicants and are simply opposing pointless proposal. Moreover, committee history of referral proposal and explanations its sponsors seem to us to demonstrate that its purpose was to prevent any expression of GA opinion on individual applicants.

The Spanish Ambassador called at his request. He reported that he had been in New York last week and had discussed this subject with Ambassador Lodge, Secretary General Hammarskjold, and representatives of Peru and Colombia. He said that his conversations had been very satisfactory, and that he expected that the question of observer status for Spain would be satisfactorily settled during the middle of this month. He added that he felt that according of observer status to Spain would clear the way for Spain's application for UN membership "if and when" such an application appeared appropriate. (The Ambassador did not make it clear whether he believed that the gaining of observer status would actually remove the difficulties imposed by various UN resolutions unfavorable to Spain, or whether he merely thought that such status would be helpful).

Mr. Merchant expressed pleasure that the matter was proceeding satisfactorily and said that the Ambassador knew, of course, that Spain could count upon US support.

MATTERS ARISING UNDER CHAPTERS XI, XII, AND XIII OF THE CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS (TRUSTEESHIP AND NON-SELF- GOVERNING TERRITORIES)<sup>1</sup>

I. THE UNITED STATES ATTITUDE ON THE COLONIAL QUESTION

Editorial Note

In the year 1952, policy makers in the Department of State made a strenuous effort to formulate a comprehensive and clear statement of United States policy on colonial questions, with particular reference to the United Nations as a forum for making statements of public policy. These 1952 efforts occurred in a definite historical setting, going back to at least 1948, when on July 20, 1948 the idea of a "colonial policy paper" was propounded by Philip C. Jessup, Acting Chief of the United States Mission at the United Nations, in a letter to Dean Rusk, Director of the Office of United Nations Affairs, not printed (ODA files, lot 62 D 228, "Background, 7—The attitude of the United States on the colonial question"). Rusk picked up the idea, which he circulated in the Department of State in a memorandum of July 27, 1948, pointing out the need for a "long-range policy with respect to emergent nations. . . ." (ODA files, lot 62 D 228, "Background, 7—The attitude of the United States on the colonial question"). There followed a paper dated September 10, 1948, drafted by William L. Yeomans of the Division of Dependent Area Affairs, entitled "Summary of United States Policy Towards Non-Self-Governing Territories" (ODA files, lot 60 D 512, "Col/Pol US Policy Dependent Areas (Gen'l)"); and the insertion of the following passage in Secretary of State George C. Marshall's general debate address to the Third General Assembly at Paris on September 23, 1948: "We have noted with particular interest the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the United Nations relating to the millions of people who are not yet fully self-governing. We are mindful of the obligations undertaken in the Charter for the political, economic, and social development of these peoples. We believe that all possible assistance and encouragement should be given to them, to the end that they may play their full part in the family of nations—either as independent states or in freely chosen association with other states.”

The Yeomans paper of September 10, 1948 was a simple and rough two-page “summary”; but it was the precursor of a long line of drafts each more ambitious and longer than the preceding, beginning with a draft for a Rusk speech in June/July 1949. There followed later in July and in August 1949 the first drafts of a full blown policy paper on “United States Policy Toward Colonial Areas”. These were pushed in particular by Benjamin Gerig, Director of the Office of Dependent Areas, but never reached any finished stage. With the steadily deteriorating situation in the Fourth Committee of the Fourth General Assembly in late 1949 (as between the Administering Authorities and the non-colonial powers) with the United States finding itself squarely in between, the need for formulating a consensus within the Department of State on a general colonial policy for the United States seemed suddenly to become urgent. The Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Hickerson) mounted an initiative on December 23, 1949 (see Foreign Relations, 1949, volume II, pages 369 and 370) which led directly to the paper, printed infra.

This paper was the third of three complete drafts that were produced by the Colonial Policy Review Sub-Committee, January–April 1950, after approximately 20 meetings. Although it was cleared through all the bureaus at the working level, it never was cleared at the Assistant Secretary level. This was probably due more to the pressure of time than any other factor. It was necessary to finalize the paper in late April (April 26, 1950) for use as a background paper for the use of United States delegates to the London Foreign Ministers’ Conference in May 1950. It provided the basis for the United States document, “United States Policy Toward Dependent Territories”, May 1, 1950 (Doc. FM D F-3/1) (see editorial note, Foreign Relations, 1950, volume II, page 440).

Unpublished documentation on the historical background and drafting history of this 1950 paper is in the following files retired by the Office of Dependent Area Affairs (ODA files: lot 60 D 512, “Col/Pol: U.S. Policy Dependent Areas (Gen’l)”); lot 62 D 228, “7—The attitude of the United States on the colonial question”; “Col/Pol: Bureau comments”; “Col/Pol: Col. Pol. Paper ’50 (Preparation of draft)”); “Col/Pol: US Col. Pol. (Early draft papers)”); “Col/Pol: Col. Pol. Paper ’50 (Texts of drafts)”); “Col/Pol: Fon. Min. Conference, May ’50”).

Attention was again focused on this 1950 paper in mid-1952, when proposals were advanced for still another review of the United States position with regard to the dependent areas and the colonial powers who ruled those areas.

UNITED STATES POLICY TOWARD DEPENDENT TERRITORIES

INTRODUCTION

A. Significance of the Colonial Problem

The problems that arise because a very large segment of the world's population continues to reside in territories which have not yet become fully self-governing have assumed wide significance in the development of American foreign policy. Referred to collectively as "the colonial problem", questions involving the status and future development of dependent territories arise repeatedly in international forums, in the political warfare between East and West, and in the bilateral relations of the United States with other states.

Colonial questions have a significant bearing on United States security. The attitude the United States takes on colonial issues affects at once our relations with the principal colonial powers, who are at the same time friendly Western democratic states, and with the far greater number of states who have emerged at one time or another from colonial rule and whose good will is likewise of vital concern to this Government.

More than 200 million people live in the seventy-odd dependent territories of the world.* The future alignment of these emerging peoples <sup>1</sup>The origins of this paper are described in the editorial note, supra. As there noted, the document was drafted by the Colonial Policy Review Sub-Committee. The Committee on Problems of Dependent Areas (CDA), the parent committee, was made up of the geographic bureaus, the Bureau of United Nations Affairs, and certain other Department of State offices that normally were involved in dependent areas questions (as the Assistant Legal Adviser for United Nations Affairs, the Policy Planning Staff, the Executive Secretariat, and the Bureau of Economic Affairs). The Committee on Problems of Dependent Areas, established in March 1944, had two antecedents in the colonial policy field: the Committee on Colonial Problems (CP) (September 1943–January 1944) and the Committee on Colonial and Trusteeship Problems (CTP) (January–March 1944). Minutes and documents of these three colonial policy committees collectively make up lot 54 D 5.

This document was circulated in the Department of State (see editorial note, p. 1139) as a reprint on July 25, 1952 (Doc. CP D-8, July 25, 1952, lot 54 D 5), and came to be referred to as "the 1950 paper".

*Exact figures cannot be given because the question of what constitutes a non-self-governing territory is itself an item of dispute. The number of such territories, including trust territories and those enumerated under Chapter XI to the United Nations has varied from 84 and 72 since 1946. These figures do not include such areas as the former Italian Colonies, the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, and the dependencies of Spain and Portugal. Nor do they include the under-developed hinterlands of some states or the "autonomous areas" of others. [Footnote in the source text.] with the democratic world is a matter of prime importance to the United States.

B. Foundations of United States Policy in the Colonial Field

United States policy toward colonial areas stems from deeply held traditions of the American people as well as from the present and future requirements of United States security in the broad conception of that term.

Mindful of their own colonial origin and of the attainment of American independence after a successful revolution, the people of the United States have maintained a traditional attitude of sympathetic understanding and encouragement toward dependent peoples striving for political freedom. Confronted by a colonial issue, the average American will, as if by instinct, favor the peoples of a colonial area against their European rulers. This fundamental psychological alignment of the American people must be taken into account in the formulation of United States policy.

Associated with this traditional view of colonial questions is the humanitarian interest of the American people in the development and welfare of the inhabitants of dependent areas. Missionaries have been sent by American churches widely through Africa, Asia, and the Pacific, and American mission schools and hospitals are maintained in colonial areas. Private institutions such as the Rockefeller Foundation, the Carnegie Corporation, and the Phelps-Stokes Fund have made notable contributions in the fields of education and health. This same humanitarian concern has led the United States to subscribe to the principle enumerated in Chapter XI of the United Nations Charter, that the interests of the inhabitants of dependent areas are "paramount", and to accept "as a sacred trust" the obligation to promote to the utmost within the system of international peace and security the well-being of dependent peoples.

In the formulation of United States policy on colonial questions considerations relating to the security of the United States and to general international security are clearly of great importance. The security interests of the United States must, however, be broadly conceived; for security factors now include such remote elements as an adequate landing strip on an obscure Pacific atoll or a friendly administration in a little-known territory of Central Africa. In any particular case, due weight must be given not only to the immediate and more obvious effects of a given policy, such as the retention of a base area in the hands of a friendly power, but also the longer-term effects of such a policy on the attitudes towards the United States of the people of the colonial area in question and of the large number of states of the world which are "anticolonial" in their outlook. In most dependent areas of the world the security interests of the United States at the present time will best be served by a policy of support for the Western Colonial Powers, coupled, as necessary, with suggestions to them for the acceleration of political, economic, and social development. An example of such an area might be British East Africa, where nationalist movements are still in an embryonic state and the continuance of British rule is generally accepted by the inhabitants. In some other areas, however, where nationalist forces have so effectively challenged European administration that its restoration seems impossible even with the expenditures of great resources by the power concerned, it is in the interests of the United States to accept the situation as it is and to encourage the progressive and peaceful transfer of administration from the imperial power to the local inhabitants. A recent example of such an area is Indonesia. In any given colonial issue, the United States must make a determination as to whether its security interests are best served by a support of the position of the colonial power or by efforts to bring about adjustments in the direction of the demands of nationalist groups. In the long run the United States can have only one assurance of the preservation of its security interests in most colonial areas the conviction of the inhabitants of the area that the United States has pursued and will continue to pursue policies in which the colonial peoples themselves believe and which they consider to be in their own best interests.

C. New Factors in the Colonial Problem

In formulating a colonial policy for today the United States needs to take account in particular of four developments:

1. The rapid development of nationalist movements in areas formerly dependent.

Since the end of the Second World War eight formerly non-self-governing territories have become full Members of the United Nations, and three others (Ceylon, Jordan, and Korea) have been excluded only by a Soviet veto. Nationalist movements have emerged in such areas as Southeast Asia and North and West Africa. There is every reason to suppose that this trend will be accelerated in the next few years.

2. The impact of militant communism.

The policy makers of the Soviet Union obviously regard the colonial relationship as one of the principal weaknesses of the Western World. The Soviet Union has neglected few opportunities in its own propaganda organs and United Nations (especially in Committee IV, in the Trusteeship Council, and in the Special Committee on Information Transmitted under Article 73(e)) to attack the colonial powers and their administration of non-self-governing territories. It has been noticeable that within the United Nations, Soviet speeches have concentrated on Africa and on British, French, and Belgian administration there.

Strong communist movements already exist in the colonial areas and emergent states of Southeast Asia. On the basis of present information, Communist penetration has not proceeded nearly as far in Africa, although among nationalist leaders and groups there are undoubtedly some with communist ties or sympathies.

It is clear from communist ideology and propaganda and from the tactics of Soviet representatives in the United Nations that the USSR attaches high importance to its efforts to alter the present westward alignment of colonial areas. It should be recognized that in this battle for the allegiance of colonial peoples the Soviet Union gains certain immediate advantages through its irresponsibility.

3. Developments in colonial policy.

American public opinion does not take adequately into account the extent to which colonial powers have in recent years taken steps toward the objectives of self-government and independence for their dependent territories and have undertaken programs for their economic and social development. In the latter field, the British Colonial Development and Welfare Fund and the French FIDES (Fonds d'investissement pour le développement économique et sociale) involve considerable expenditures by British and French taxpayers. Belgium has plans for economic and social development in the Congo. Britain's plan calls for an average of about forty-eight million dollars a year over a ten-year period to be spread throughout Britain's colonies. While the United States has probably spent an average of more than fifty million dollars a year in Puerto Rico alone, it should be recognized that Britain is now a poor country with many colonies. The new development plans of the leading colonial powers have been retarded by shortages of technicians and materials, but a number of important projects have already been inaugurated and more rapid progress may be expected in the future.

To assist in the development of a more informed American public opinion, it would be in the interests of the colonial powers to give more publicity, through the United Nations and other channels, to the progressive aspects of their colonial policies and, in the United Nations, to avoid adopting positions which serve to divert attention from the progressive steps which they actually are taking.

4. The role of the United Nations.

The Charter of the United Nations has made dependent areas, as a whole, a matter of international concern. The effect of the inclusion of Chapters XI, XII, and XIII in the Charter is that for the first time in history a world organization—in this case the United Nations—has before it for discussion a vast volume of information on the dependent areas of the world, whether they be trust or non-self-governing territories. The International Trusteeship System, outlined in Chapters XII and XIII of the Charter, is an improved version of the League of Nations Mandates System for the supervision of the territories, principally former mandates, inhabited by seventeen million peoples. Chapter XI represents the interest of the world community in the welfare and development of the vast majority of non-self-governing peoples who do not live in trust territories. Chapters XII and XIII of the Charter differ markedly from Chapter XI. For Trusteeship Territories, Chapters XII and XIII set up a system of international supervision under which the Trusteeship Council is empowered not only to examine annual reports on these territories but receive and examine petitions relating to these territories and to make periodic visits for purposes of inquiry into the nature of the administration and the progress being made by the inhabitant. In Chapter XI administering Members undertake generally to promote the advancement and development of the peoples concerned, to protect them against abuses, and to further international peace and security. Specifically these same Members undertake to transmit regularly to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, for information purposes, subject to such limitation as security and constitutional considerations may require, statistical and other information of a technical character relating to economic, social, and educational conditions in non-self-governing territories. However, Chapter XI does not provide for an organ of the United Nations to examine or make recommendations for the information transmitted from non-self-governing territories; nor does it make provision for the receipt of petitions from, or visiting missions to, such territories.

United Nations activity in this sphere has created a serious problem for the United States. Of the 59 Members of the United Nations, those who have responsibility for trust or non-self-governing territories are a small minority of eight. Most of the rest are anti-colonial by ideology (the Soviet Union and satellites) or by memories of dependence (Asiatic, Arab, and Latin American states). By their superior voting strength, the non-colonial powers are in a position to carry their views in the United Nations General Assembly by an overwhelming majority. The United States is an administering Member by virtue of its responsibility for one trust territory and six non-self-governing territories. It has, moreover, a profound interest in the survival and revival of its Western European allies, the principal colonial powers. On the other hand, the United States is by tradition sympathetic to the aspirations of colonial peoples, and in Asia and Africa cannot afford to allow the colonial peoples to feel that their best hopes lie with the Soviet Union.

I. GENERAL OBJECTIVES OF UNITED STATES POLICY TOWARD COLONIAL AREAS

The objectives of the United States in the colonial field set forth below are based on the fundamental considerations discussed in the introductory portion of this paper. The application of these general objectives and their translation into policies to be pursued regarding the various dependent areas of the world is set forth in the four regional sections of Part III of this paper. These sections recognize that in a given area at a given time it may be in the best interests of the United States to place special emphasis upon certain of the objectives. Thus, for example, it is felt that in the immediate future it is in the United States interest to place considerable emphasis, in the implementation of its policy toward certain dependent territories, on economic and social advancement and political education to reach the goals of self-government or independence. It will be noted that the safeguarding of the security interests of the United States is not stated as a separate objective, since it is felt that it forms an integral part of all United States objectives in this field and has been a basic factor in their formulation.

A. Political Objectives

1. To favor the progressive development of all dependent peoples toward the goal of self-government and the development of those dependent territories where conditions are suitable toward independence; and to encourage the metropolitan governments to take progressive steps toward the achievement of such self-government or independence in the areas for which they are responsible.

While self-government should be a goal for all dependent peoples, independence can be the goal only for those territories where conditions are suitable. There are, of course, widely varying degrees of self-government up to full independence.

It is generally held that a self-governing territory achieves independence when it acquires control of its defenses, foreign relations, and customs. However, since the administration of a fully self-governing territory requires essentially the same capacity on the part of its people as the administration of an independent state, the criterion for determining the relative desirability of self-government or complete independence is not the capacity of the inhabitants but such other characteristics of the territory itself as its size, its economic resources, its defensibility as a unit, and the status desired by the inhabitants.

It is not possible to foresee all the factors which might make independence an undesirable goal for a given dependent territory. It is at least possible to say, however, that in principle voluntary integration is more desirable than "balkanization" and that independence should be the goal only where a viable state can be effected. It would be unwise to set up scores of small "independent" states which would be economically unsound, unable to resist communist penetration or to contribute effectively to their own defense against an aggressor, or which have insufficient internal unity or cohesiveness to maintain themselves as a political unit. In some areas federation would seem to make independence possible for a group of territories which, separately, could not reasonably aspire to it.

The degree of self-government can increase only as rapidly as people show capacity, and the development of a capacity for self-government depends, in part, upon the provision by metropolitan administrations of opportunities for indigenous peoples to gain experience at progressively responsible levels in all phases of economic and governmental activity. Village and municipal councils provide a useful training ground for developing responsible practical experience. Increasing appointment of indigenous inhabitants to administrative and financial posts of responsibility and provision of adequate educational facilities are essential. An important milestone along the road to complete self-government is reached when a territorial legislature in which indigenous inhabitants form the majority has power to legislate on matters of purely territorial concern.

Since the Charter was signed at San Francisco, substantial advances toward self-government have been made in a number of territories and more than 500 million people have achieved independence. Nationalist movements are gaining strength in non-self-governing territories throughout the world. United States policy must be based on the general assumption that nationalism in colonial areas is a force which cannot be stopped but may, with wisdom, be guided. Numerous pronouncements by United States Government leaders in successive administrations have enunciated the policy of encouraging progress toward self-government and independence in colonial areas.†

2. To encourage the metropolitan powers to foster the growth of responsible democratic movements and institutions among indigenous peoples in colonial areas and, in special cases, after frank consultation with the metropolitan power concerned, to lend the encouragement of the United States, or as appropriate even its active support to democratic nationalist movements.

The nature and scope of United States efforts to further the implementation of the foregoing objective will necessarily vary according to the circumstances of each particular case. The United States should recognize that, though in varying degrees, the colonial powers are carrying out the United Nations Charter undertaking to assist dependent peoples "in the progressive development of their full political institutions." There are, for example, few British territories which have not received, in the post-war years, a further degree of self-government. In areas where the colonial powers appear to be moving ahead in the political sphere as fast as the circumstances warrant, the United States could probably make its most constructive contributions to political advancement through assisting these powers to achieve more rapid economic, social, and educational development of such territories through such means as the ECA, bilateral or multilateral technical assistance, joint efforts with the metropolitan powers in the Caribbean and South Pacific Commissions, and provision for an expanded program for the exchange of teachers, students, and research workers with colonial territories. The United States should also continue to encourage the progressive development of democratic institutions in colonial areas through the public statements of American officials and through the policies pursued by the United States in its own territories and within the United Nations. Due account in any such statements should be given to the fact that such development may vary according to the stage of advancement of the people concerned.

In its relations with the metropolitan powers the United States should encourage them so to conduct themselves that when their control over a territory ends they will be able to retain the good will of the inhabitants, and such relations as may be mutually beneficial, whatever the new status of such a territory may be. The United States clearly cannot support a nationalist movement in a stable dependant area in ways to which an administering power could take legitimate exception. On the other hand, in those special cases where great changes are clearly in the offing and where the authority of the administering power may already be substantially limited by the strength of nationalist movements, the United States may need in its own interest to play a more active role in the promotion of a solution which both sides could accept. For example, the conflict between the Indonesians and the Netherlands threatened the security of the entire Southeast Asia area. As a result, it was essential for the United States to assist in the achievement of a settlement.

On the premise, believed valid, that nationalist movements in colonial areas can be guided, it is clearly in the interest of the United States to give appropriate encouragement to those movements which are non-communist and democratic in character and which represent the aspirations of a substantial segment of the population. The spread of democratic institutions, as we understand the term and not in its perverted Soviet usage, is an objective which the United States should actively pursue. Democratic principles, embracing such things as the right of individuals to choose their own form of government and to be protected against unjustified encroachments of the state, are intrinsically valuable and definitely part of the aspirations of colonial peoples. The encouragement by metropolitan powers and by the United States of democratic nationalist movements would also contribute toward the building of colonial areas into bulwarks against the spread of communism. The very fact of a demonstrated United States interest in democratic nationalist movements will strengthen the hand of these groups against their communist counterparts. In this connection the Philippine Representative to the United Nations, General Romulo, has declared: "The true goal of all dependent peoples is freedom and not enslavement by a new master."

3. To assist, as appropriate, in the development of the changing political relations between colonial peoples and metropolitan countries toward whatever type of relationship, consistent with the United Nations Charter, is best suited to the particular situation, whether trusteeship, voluntary, union, joint membership in a common political union, or some less direct associative relationship, and with regard to much developments to recognize the principle stated in Chapter XI of the Charter that the interests of the inhabitants of these territories are paramount.

Both self-government and independence may be enjoyed within a larger political framework. In response, on the one hand, to the increasing demand of dependent peoples for the right to manage their own affairs and on the other hand, to the facts of economic interdependence and cultural affinity and the need of new governments for greater security than they can provide for themselves, new forms of association between colonial powers and their former dependencies have emerged and are continuing to evolve. The British Commonwealth of Nations is the classic example of the voluntary association of formerly dependent territories with the mother country for the pursuit of common ends. Since World War II the concept of the British Commonwealth has undergone further development. The stated objective of the British Government for territories which are still dependent is "self-government within the British Commonwealth". In the West Indies, where Britain has sovereignty over 14 poor and widely-scattered islands, a Closer Association Standing Committee has recently made a report which includes the draft of a Constitution for a British Caribbean Federation. The report starts from the assumption that the main purpose of the task of the Standing Committee is "to seek the shortest path towards a real political independence for the British peoples of the region within the framework of the British Commonwealth—what is meant in fact by 'Dominion status'".

France, under the Constitution of 1946, established the French Union, which is designed to include France and the dependent territories in a somewhat centralized political framework, allowing for varying degrees of self-government and of association with the metropole and including such categories as overseas departments, overseas territories, associated states, and associated territories. The relationship between the Netherlands and the Republic of the United States of Indonesia, to the establishment of which the United States made a considerable contribution, is another example of the new forms of association being evolved. The Government of Puerto Rico is at the present time giving a good deal of thought to some form of associated relationship with the United States which Puerto Ricans feel would better meet their needs than the old alternatives of statehood or independence.

The United States should give close study to such new forms of association as they develop, and support those which it considers to be in the best interests of the people concerned and consistent with their wishes.

The action of France in making certain territories Departments of France or members of the French Union and as a corollary ceasing to report on them as non-self-governing territories under Article 73(e) of the United Nations Charter has created an issue in United Nations bodies on which the position of the United States is yet to be determined in the light of the foregoing objectives. Similarly the Netherlands West Indian colonies are being integrated with the Kingdom of the Netherlands with increased rights of self-government and with representation in the parliament at The Hague. As a consequence the Netherlands will probably cease to report on these territories within the near future. These new constitutional arrangements have been challenged in the United Nations where non-administering Members suspect that they do not confer genuine self-government on the inhabitants of the areas in question, but have been contrived by the administering Member in hope of removing these areas from the scope of Chapter XI, while in fact retaining them in a dependent status. On this general issue, it is worthy of note that all administering Members are committed by the Charter of the United Nations to promote self-government in colonial areas. In the practice of the United States, the transformation of an area from territorial status to statehood has been effected only with the express consent and active participation of the peoples of the territory and has resulted in self-governing status equivalent to that of other states of the Union. As an alternative to independence, this approach to incorporation is valid and one which will stand up under scrutiny in the United Nations.

Trusteeship stands as a device which may be used to present possible solutions for difficult questions involving the future status of territories. Since the Charter of the United Nations was adopted, trusteeship has been thought of as a possible solution for the problems of such widely-separated areas as Palestine, Antarctica, Berlin, the Italian colonies, and certain Pacific islands. The use of trusteeship in such cases frequently avoids the controversial issue of the extension of sovereignty over the area by any State or group of States. The United States has made clear its position regarding the use of trusteeship in Pacific areas which may be retained under United States administration. President Truman, in a statement on November 6, 1946, declared, "The United States is prepared to place under trusteeship, with the United States as the administering authority, the Japanese Mandated Islands and any Japanese Islands for which it assumes responsibilities as a result of the second World War". The United States has, of course, assumed responsibility as the administering authority for the former Japanese Mandated Islands; and, in his speech before the National Press Club on January 12, 1950, the Secretary of State declared: "In the interests of the population of the Ryukyu Islands, we will at an appropriate time offer to hold these islands under trusteeship of the United Nations."

It cannot be stated, of course, that trusteeship is in every case the best solution where a change of status of a colonial area is envisaged. As in the case of Eritrea, special situations may require other solutions.

4. To seek the alignment with the democratic world of dependent peoples and those achieving self-government or independence; in particular to maintain and strengthen their friendship and respect for the United States.

The importance of this objective is clear in view of the Soviet Union's obvious bid for the sympathies of colonial peoples. It should be recognized however, that among the obstacles to be overcome in the achievement of this objective are not only Soviet propaganda and the bitterness which some such peoples may retain toward their former colonial rulers; there is also, so far as the United States is concerned, a widespread knowledge among colonial peoples of racial discrimination as practiced in this country, a fear of American economic imperialism as a successor to European political imperialism, and a growing suspicion that the traditional American policy of support for the aspirations of dependent peoples is being discarded, in the interests of the containment of communism, for a policy of unlimited support of the colonial powers.

Ceylon, the Philippines, and Indonesia, and, to a lesser degree, Pakistan and India are examples of former dependencies who have friendly relations with the West. Philippine Delegations in the United Nations, for example, frequently express their gratitude for the contribution made by the United States to the development of the Philippines to independence.

5. To seek the fullest possible mutual understanding and cooperation between the United States and the Colonial Powers on colonial policy and, to the degree possible, the acceptance by the latter of basic United States objectives.

The principal colonial powers are western European democratic nations whose security and recovery of political and economic strength are fundamental objectives of United States foreign policy. Moreover, the attainment of United States objectives in the colonial field—economic and social, as well as political—is dependent upon the active support and cooperation of these states.

Belgium, France, and the United Kingdom tend to regard American support for the acceleration of political development in colonial areas as a combination of traditional American attitudes in the political sphere and an expectation of supplanting these powers economically in their territories once self-government or independence has been obtained. Moreover, with respect to issues arising in the United Nations, these powers frequently seem to misunderstand the reasons why the United States lends its support to United Nations recommendations which they regard as a threat to that same recovery of strength actively being promoted by this Government through other mechanisms. Their sense of the large stake which they have in the colonial problem as compared with the United States contributes to their resentment of what they regard as irresponsible United States positions taken, ad hoc, in the interests of compromise. Frequent and frank exchanges of views between the United States and Belgium, France, and the United Kingdom would certainly not eliminate all differences. Such discussions would be helpful, however, if they helped this Government arrive at a more accurate appraisal of the achievements and problems of the colonial powers, and if they provided a greater understanding on the part of the colonial powers of United States objectives and convinced such powers that the United States had a carefully-thought-out, long-term colonial policy in the formulation of which the position of these states had been taken carefully into account; and that United States positions on specific issues would not be ad hoc decisions, dictated by considerations of the moment, but would be consistent with this long-term policy.

The problem is not nearly so great with respect to Australia, Denmark, and New Zealand, since experience shows that these states often express publicly the same view as the United States or (particularly in the case of New Zealand) privately indicate agreement with United States positions. However, steps should be taken as necessary to make sure that these states and the Netherlands understand our objectives.

6. In like manner to seek the fullest possible mutual understanding and cooperation between the United States and the non-colonial powers on colonial policy and, to the degree possible, the acceptance by the latter of basic United States objectives, as well as an understanding of the problems, responsibilities, and achievements of the metropolitan powers.

In South East Asia, in the Caribbean, and in Africa it is vitally important that United States policies for these areas should be fully understood by the independent non-colonial powers in or adjacent to these regions. But the importance of this objective is perhaps most frequently apparent when colonial questions are considered in the United Nations. There the non-colonial powers of the world are in a position to use their voting strength to carry through any recommendations which they consider desirable and proper. Basically many of these powers appear to feel that administering states do not possess, or are not entitled to exercise indefinitely, sovereignty over colonial areas in the same absolute sense that they have sovereignty over their metropolitan areas. A number of these also subscribe to an interpretation of the Charter whereby any course of action not expressly prohibited under Chapter XI is permissible to the General Assembly. The danger of radical action on the part of this voting majority is further increased by the fact that quite apart from the Soviet Union and its satellites, most non-administering Members are, for understandable reasons, anti-colonial in their attitudes. Such members, as former dependencies, feel that the colonial powers are still moving too slowly in satisfying not only the political aspirations but also the economic, social, and educational needs of colonial peoples. This impression is likely to be strengthened when colonial powers, in United Nations bodies, dismiss criticism impatiently as based on ignorance or political considerations, instead of seizing the opportunity to explain fully their achievements and problems.

Frequent and frank exchanges of views with Latin American, Asiatic, and African Members of the United Nations are important in the interests of promoting a mutual understanding of purposes in the colonial field. To the degree possible the United States should seek acceptance by the non-colonial powers of basic United States objectives and should seek to promote an understanding on their part of the problems and achievements of the colonial powers and the importance of preventing in the United Nations an open breach between administering and non-administering Members.

7. The United States should seek to prevent the Soviet Union from being regarded as the champion of colonial peoples.

This is an exceptionally difficult task as the extreme positions taken by the Soviet Delegation are often identical with the extreme views of native nationalist leaders. However, Soviet propaganda at the United Nations meetings can often be effectively answered by temperate and rational responses. The United States should, therefore, continue its efforts to meet Soviet criticisms with valid responses and should attempt to persuade other colonial powers to follow the same tactics. In the past the British and French Delegations have sometimes met Soviet attacks with rather contemptuous dismissals, a type of response which has not made a good impression on delegations of non-administering states. The patient and full replies of Admiral Fiske, who served as United States Special Representative during the Trusteeship Council's examination of the first report on the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, made, on the contrary, an excellent impression. This was also true of Mr. Fahy's statement on Puerto Rico in the Fourth Committee in reply to an attack by the Ukrainian Representative on United States policy there.

In addition, counterpropaganda techniques should be utilized to expose the true character of Soviet actions and policies toward dependent areas. It should be recognized, however, that the use of these techniques must be carefully adapted to each particular forum whether it be a United Nations meeting or a Voice of America broadcast. In the Fourth Committee of the General Assembly, lengthy speeches on conditions within the Soviet orbit are normally ruled out of order even though they may deal with matters comparable to those under discussion. The use in such organs of a full-dress speech is, almost impossible, although a barbed aside may be a feasible and useful device. On the other hand, in Voice of America broadcasts, and through such other information channels as Department publications and releases, more comprehensive counterpropaganda statements might be utilized.

In the long run, of course, Soviet attacks should be met by the implementation of progressive colonial policies. The United States should make every effort to set an example by improving conditions in its own dependencies and should, wherever feasible, attempt to persuade other colonial powers to speed up the pace of development in their possessions.

8. To pursue actively, in relation to United States territories and possessions, policies which develop logically from our past achievements and are consistent with the policies we urge on the colonial powers and in international bodies.

The United States has acquired considerable credit in the eyes of the world generally, not only for its action in granting independence to the Philippines, but also for its administration of its remaining territories and possessions. The United States is presently responsible for the administration of six non-self-governing territories—Alaska, American Samoa, Guam, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands of the United States—and one trust territory—the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. The United States is consequently an “administering authority”. Many persons regard this status as equivalent to that of a colonial power. The United States must continue to pursue progressive and liberal policies in each of the territories subject to its administration, primarily in the interests of the inhabitants of United States dependent territories, but also in order that the United States may maintain its reputation for enlightened colonial administration and its capacity for leadership in international forums in which dependent territory problems are considered. In addition to the General Assembly, its Fourth Committee, the Special Committee on Article 73(e), and the Trusteeship Council, these forums include the Caribbean and South Pacific Commissions.

B. Economic and Social Objectives

To the end of promoting the political objectives set forth in the preceding section and in a manner consistent with those objectives, the United States should pursue the economic and social objectives outlined below. It is recognized that the implementation of these economic and social objectives is dependent upon the availability of fiscal and economic resources and, accordingly, efforts should be directed to increasing the contributions, in both relative and absolute amounts, which the dependent territories themselves can make to this advancement. It is in the interest of the United States to assist the metropolitan powers in strengthening the economies of dependent territories and it should take appropriate action to do so within the limits of funds available for such purposes at any one time.

1. To encourage balanced economic development.

The over-all development of any dependent area, especially its political development, must have a sound economic basis. Economic development must promote the immediate and long-range welfare of the inhabitants and, to be sound, must provide a balance among such factors as the following:

- (a) coordination of economic developments with advancements in the skills, attitudes, customs, and social organization of the inhabitants;
- (b) creation of conditions attractive to capital investment;
- (c) adherence to sound conservation practice; and
- (d) integration with regional and world economic developments.

While the potentialities of each area will indicate priorities in fields of economic development (agriculture, animal husbandry, forestry, mining, fishery industry, and commerce), generally sound development of colonial areas would require attention to greater diversification of economic activities. The physical facts of some areas will not allow a high level of economic development; however, it is desirable that dependent areas not only expand their short-range productivity, but that they develop as far as possible into healthy economic units strong enough to contribute to the collective strength of the free world.

2. To encourage and to promote, where practicable, mutually advantageous economic relations between colonial areas and the metropolitan countries, as well as with the United States and the rest of the free world.

The United States seeks the economic advancement of colonial peoples, the development of the resources of colonial areas and eco-conomic (as well as political) stability sufficient to resist Communist domination. The United States likewise desires to assist and encourage the nations of the free world, including those with interests in colonial areas, to increase their strength.

The United States also desires the advancement of direct United States trade, investment, transportation and strategic interests (including access to strategic materials) which can redound to the mutual advantage both of this country and of the colonial area concerned.

These purposes can be appreciably advanced through the encouragement or promotion of mutually advantageous economic relations between the colonial areas and the metropolitan countries as well as with the United States and the rest of the world.

The ability of the colonial areas to achieve an accelerated development economically, socially, and politically depends in part on the economic recovery of the metropolitan countries and their ability to provide the necessary facilities both in the way of personnel, expanded services and construction required by the colonies. At the same time the efforts of the metropolitan countries to achieve viability at an early date will be furthered in many cases by colonial development projects.

In a more indirect but no less important manner, the expansion of economic activity between the colonial areas and the rest of the world can contribute to increased security, and thus advance the mutual strategic interests of the United States, the metropolitan powers, and the colonial areas as well. Development in the colonial areas accompanied by rising standards of living should make them less fertile fields for Communist agitation and subversion. A strengthening of the metropolitan countries as a result of expanded economic relations with their colonies increases their powers of resistance to the Soviet threat and makes them more effective allies of the United States and the rest of the free world.

The purposes of economic advancement of colonial areas, of increase in the strength of the metropolitan powers of Europe, and of reasonable development of United States trade interests may at times come into conflict. In deciding any such problems on its merits, the purposes must necessarily be balanced, recognizing the principle of the paramountcy of the interests of the dependent peoples, and the problem resolved in the best interest of the United States and the other free peoples of the world.

3. To encourage the development of transportation, communications, and power.

Inadequate facilities for transportation and communications to and within the dependent territories of the world constitute major obstacles to their full development. The natural resources of these areas and their inhabitants are frequently isolated, and will not contribute effectively to the economic activity essential to general social advancement until natural barriers have been bridged by modern roads, bridges, railroads, airfields, harbors, radio, telegraph, and telephone systems. The general advancement of the people of these territories is also being held back by their dependence in large measure on the human being as a source of power. The effective utilization of existing resources for the production of artificial power is fundamental to any widespread improvement in the productivity and standard of living in these areas. All developments in the fields of transportation, communication, and power are dependent upon the degree to which the local inhabitants are trained to operate and maintain the necessary facilities.

4. To encourage the parallel development of primary, secondary, vocational, and higher education.

Broad, well-planned educational development adapted to the needs of the inhabitants is essential to ensure that political, economic, and social developments proceed along constructive lines. In the political field, ignorance is an invitation to the abuse of power, to the development of local demagoguery, and to the infiltration of anti-democratic ideologies; whereas well-rounded education is the foundation of progress towards democratic self-government. In the economic field, lack of skills, knowledge, and adaptability tend to encourage short-range exploitation and hamper long-range, balanced development. In the whole area of social development education is basic to the constructive adaptation of under-developed peoples to the scientific, technical, and humanistic culture of more advanced peoples. In the planning of educational programs it is important that the needs of local inhabitants for education at all levels be adequately met.

5. To encourage the improvement of health services and other social services.

Disease, as well as dietary and other health deficiencies, is a major obstacle to the full development of dependent areas and their inhabitants. The reduction of this obstacle by the improvement of medical facilities and public health services is a fundamental pre-requisite to over-all advance. In this field international cooperation has already demonstrated itself to be most fruitful. The United States should encourage increased cooperation with the World Health Organization, as well as with other international agencies and private organizations working in this field. With the growing impact of Western culture on dependent peoples, improved and expanded social services are necessary to guide constructively social and cultural readjustments. Examples of the type of social services which will be increasingly needed in dependent territories are those dealing with child and maternal health, juvenile delinquents, adult education, and agricultural extension. In these social fields, as in health, the cooperation of international agencies and organizations should also be encouraged.

6. To encourage the development of responsible non-Communist labor unions and of progressive labor policies.

An effort is being made by the Soviet Union to exploit the grievances of the growing class of wage earners in the colonies and as a corollary Communists have sought to manipulate colonial trade unions for political as well as economic objectives. In some instances this technique has been successful. Communist-controlled labor unions have, for example, played a part in the recent disturbances in Malaya. Recognizing the importance of the development of a democratic and responsible labor movement in the Colonies, the United Kingdom has for some years been sending to the Colonies experienced British trade unionists to train colonial labor leaders. In spite of the fact that this type of procedure has not been entirely successful in British areas in Africa, it is a promising procedure which should be encouraged.

In the field of labor policy and legislation the standards laid down in ILO Conventions provide a desirable objective.

II. METHODS OF OBTAINING OBJECTIVES

A. Through Bi-lateral Channels

1. Foreign Service Missions

To further the foregoing objectives the United States should utilize to the full American Embassies, Legations, and other Missions in the capitals of colonial and non-colonial powers, as well as American Consular Posts in dependent areas.

Our Embassies and Legations in such capitals as London, Paris, Brussels, The Hague, Copenhagen, Canberra, Wellington, Pretoria, and the United States Mission to the United Nations provide machinery for continuing consultation with the colonial powers on a whole range of problems relating to dependent areas, including problems arising in the United Nations. (The importance of consultations on issues arising in the United Nations is discussed in Section II, B, 2 and 3, pp. 26-28.) These various consultations would give the United States an opportunity to explain United States objectives and to suggest such constructive policies as the introduction of increasing numbers of indigenous inhabitants of dependent areas into responsible government positions. They should also serve as centers for dispersing assistance and advice in relation to dependent area problems through their specialized missions, advisers, and attachés in such fields as agriculture, health, labor, education, and technical assistance problems. Likewise, our Embassies and Legations in such capitals as Cairo, Saigon, Bangkok, New Delhi, Rangoon, Manila, Djakarta, Addis Ababa, and Monrovia present an opportunity to consult with these states on a continuing basis and to explain United States objectives and policies. It is important, for example, that the problem of the Anglo-Egyptian

Sudan be discussed by United States officials with both Britain and Egypt—that United States objectives in Africa be understood by Ethiopia and Liberia as well as by the United Kingdom, France, and Belgium—that United States position regarding Libya, Eritrea, and Somaliland be fully explained to Egypt and Ethiopia as well as to the United Kingdom, France, and Italy, and that American Far Eastern policy should take into account the views of both European and Pacific colonial powers and the new nations of South East Asia.

In dependent areas, American Foreign Service Posts, properly staffed and with proper guidance regarding policies and techniques could become influential centers for encouraging the type of developments which we favor and for preventing misunderstanding of American attitudes. Their officers could exert influence both on the local administering officials and on the native peoples, and, in the areas where they are assigned, could be of increased assistance in preventing communist infiltration and in assuring the orientation of the officials and the inhabitants toward the free and democratic world.

In order to perform this function, the consular posts would have to be strengthened and headed by first-class, experienced officers who would make the consulates centers of foreign technical and cultural activities by virtue of their own personalities, the coordinating and guiding activities of their staffs, and their profound understanding of all the problems and elements in the social and economic, as well as political structures of the territories concerned.

2. Consultations with Diplomatic Representatives in Washington.

In addition to Foreign Service Missions and the United States Mission to the United Nations, the Embassies and Legations in Washington of both administering and non-administering powers offer useful and convenient channels through which the Department can carry on consultations on colonial matters.

3. United States Information and Educational Exchange Program.

An expanded United States Information and Educational Exchange (USIE) Program could further United States objectives in the colonial field. At the present time USIE devotes only a minor part of its activities to dependent areas. Its officers in the field (Public Affairs Officers) are thinly scattered in the non-self-governing world, many such territories having no such officer. For example, there is no Public Affairs Officer in any trust territory. Thus in such areas, there is frequently no source of information on United States policies towards its own possessions or on the positions taken by this country in the Trusteeship Council and other international bodies on the problems of dependent areas. There often is, however, considerable public criticism and distortion of such United States policies.

Where USIE offices exist in dependent territories, it has been demonstrated that articles on colonial policy and news summaries of events in this field, when available, will frequently be used by the local press. The experience of the Caribbean Commission has also shown that colonial newspapers, partly because they cannot afford to subscribe to wire services, will often reprint entire stories supplied to them. This largely undeveloped field has abundant educational and counter-propaganda possibilities.

In addition to expanding its press services in dependent areas, USIE could further serve United States interests by increasing the number of United States libraries. Besides serving broad informational and educational purposes such libraries, professionally directed, are effective instruments to technical assistance and might well be planned to supplement other aspects of the technical assistance programs. They can also serve as a channel for information about UN activities supported by the United States. United Nations publications, as well as publications about the United Nations, especially those written for popular consumption and translated into local languages, should not only be available in United States libraries, but should be distributed in quantity to schools, adult education centers, and other interested local organizations. Eventually perhaps such activities can best be carried on by United Nations Information Centers, and the United States should encourage the setting up of more such centers in dependent areas. In the meanwhile it would seem consistent with United States policy to make use of USIE offices and libraries.

The expansion of both USIE and United Nations visual education programs in dependent territories is particularly desirable in view of the high rate of illiteracy in these areas; however, suitable simplified materials must be planned and techniques developed for their use. Such materials might include films, film-strips, and photo-displays, directed on the one hand to explaining the United Nations and United States policies therein, and on the other hand to supplementing technical assistance programs.

Both United States and United Nations fellowship, internship, and educational exchange programs could fruitfully be expanded in dependent territories, where shortage of trained personnel is a major problem. Such programs should be genuinely two-way, for there is also an acute shortage, especially in this country, of persons with first-hand professional experience in colonial areas. These programs would naturally be closely integrated with technical assistance projects, and directed towards the major needs of the areas.

The Voice of America might be more effectively used to further United States policies towards dependent areas, and to counter Soviet efforts to win over colonial peoples. There are now no programs especially designed for audiences in dependent territories or beamed specifically at them. Serious consideration should be given by this Government to the need for strengthening its "Voice" in such areas.

Whether or not this should prove practicable, information on United States policies and activities relating to dependent areas could usefully be strengthened in our broadcasts to most areas of the world, particularly in view of the world-wide misrepresentation which such United States policies and activities constantly receive, especially from communist and communist-influenced propagandists.

Finally, all United States channels of information directed abroad should be kept constantly aware of the world-wide scrutiny to which our domestic policies and practices are subjected and the extent to which communist propagandists seize upon and magnify inconsistencies between our professed policies and our actual practices. Every effort should be made to publicize constructive efforts to solve our domestic problems. No American problem receives more wide-spread attention, especially in dependent areas, than our treatment of racial minorities, particularly the Negro. Discussion of this problem cannot be evaded, and only by full publicity to improvements in this field can the United States position be put in fair perspective before the bar of world opinion and communist propaganda be discredited.

B. Through United Nations Channels

1. To further the foregoing objectives the United States should use United Nations organs and the Specialized Agencies to promote a progressive colonial policy.

Colonial questions are being raised with increasing frequency in a wide-range of United Nations organs and agencies. Not only are these questions discussed in the Trusteeship Council, the Special Committee, and the Fourth (Trusteeship) Committee, which devote their time exclusively to such questions, but they also arise frequently in the Economic and Social Council and its Commissions, the Specialized Agencies, the Security Council, the Political and Security Committee of the Assembly, and occasionally in the Third and Sixth Committees of the Assembly.

In all of these bodies when colonial issues are raised, the United States should formulate its position on specific issues in accordance with the broad policy objectives set forth above. Pursuance of these objectives will generally place the United States in a moderate position between the more conservative administering Members on the one hand and non-administering Members on the other.

The United States should encourage appropriate Specialized Agencies to expand their activities relating to dependent territories, both as a means of promoting the economic, social and educational objectives of the United States and of furthering a constructive, technical, and non-political approach to such territories and their problems.

In both the Trusteeship Council and the Special Committee on Information Transmitted under Article 73(e), where administering and non-administering Members are equally represented, the United States occupies a particularly strategic position. The United States should use its influence responsibly to promote constructive action which will command the support of a substantial majority of Members, administering and non-administering. In cases, however, where the pursuit of United States objectives or a regard for the limitations of the Charter requires the United States to line up clearly with either the administering or non-administering group, the United States should not hesitate to do so.

2. As a means of achieving the fullest possible understanding and acceptance by the Colonial Powers of United States policies in the United Nations the United States should consult with them frequently, particularly on all questions which they consider of major importance. General consultations should be a normal procedure before each session of the Trusteeship Council, the Special Committee and the General Assembly.

For example, consultations with Belgium, France and the United Kingdom in advance of the next sessions of the Special Committee and the General Assembly are particularly necessary in view of the marked divergence of views which developed between these powers and the United States during the Fourth Session of the General Assembly. Of the ten resolutions adopted at the Fourth Session on non-self-governing territories not one was supported by Belgium and the United Kingdom. Moreover these two powers and France reserved their position with respect to the Special Committee and did not participate in the election of the non-administering Members.

In these and in any other subsequent consultations with France, Belgium, and the United Kingdom the United States should explain its policy objectives and so far as possible the position which it expects to take on specific issues which will arise. Since the recommendations of United Nations bodies can only be effective to the extent that they are implemented in the territories by the Members responsible, the United States should seek greater understanding of the attitudes of such Members, the maximum area of agreement, as well as acceptance on the part of these powers of basic United States objectives and positions.

With respect to the Trusteeship council, experience has already shown that advance consultations on issues arising in the Council pay dividends in reaching Council recommendations which all administering Members will strive to implement. The position with respect to Chapter XI matters is more difficult but an effort to reach agreement should nonetheless be made.

It should be borne in mind that there would be an advantage to the United States in holding some general consultations which would include all administering Members, since the United States could then count on a considerable measure of support for its views from Denmark, Australia, the Netherlands, and New Zealand. The United States should point out, as appropriate, to administering states that it is in their own interest to make more apparent in the United Nations the progressive aspects of their policies with regard to dependent areas and to avoid adopting positions which serve to divert attention from the progressive steps which they actually are taking.

3. Similarly, as a means of achieving understanding and acceptance by the non-administering Members of United States objectives and policies, the United States should consult with them frequently. Consultations should be a normal procedure before each session of the Trusteeship Council, the Special Committee, and the General Assembly. Unless these Members are given a full and frank exposition of the reasons for United States positions on specific issues they are all too apt to assume, when the United States differs from them, that we do so not on principle but out of a desire to placate the administering Members. Experience in various United Nations bodies has shown that a number of non-administering Members are genuinely desirous of making a constructive contribution to the work of the United Nations and welcome suggestions from the United States.

Consultations with non-administering Members are frequently successful in obtaining their support or co-sponsorship for moderate and constructive United States proposals or in modifying resolutions which those states have sought to introduce. The extent to which the United States has in the past consulted with non-administering Members has greatly contributed to the defeat of extreme proposals sponsored by the Soviet Union.

In the Trusteeship Council the United States has worked very successfully with such non-administering Members as Mexico, Iraq, and the Philippines. For example, the Trusteeship Council's Committee on Higher Education in the African Trust Territories had as its Chairman, Mr. Noriega of Mexico, and one of the basic working papers was submitted by the United States Member. The report of the Committee was adopted unanimously by the Council and is regarded by both administering and non-administering Members as one of the Council's most constructive accomplishments. In the Special Committee the United States, as well as Denmark and New Zealand, have worked effectively with the delegates of India, Egypt, and the Dominican Republic.

These efforts should be intensified in the future in the hope of building up a steady and constructive group of non-administering states. The United States should point out as appropriate to the non-administering states that a moderate attitude may frequently be the most effective means of achieving the ends they seek in dependent territories.

4. Increased efforts should be made to utilize United Nations organs and agencies, where practicable, as forums for constructive exchange of ideas and experience concerning the administration of dependent peoples. The detailed reports of the various states which administer trust and non-self-governing territories on the areas for which they are responsible contain information valuable to administrators in other governments who have responsibilities for comparable problems. Officers of our own Government who are concerned with the administration of United States territories and possessions are anxious to know of the experiences of other administering Members in dealing with illiteracy and specialized problems in the fields of public health, agricultural economy and the like. In the Trusteeship Council especially, but also in the Special Committee, there is a growing tendency to approach problems on the technical and analytical rather than on a political basis. The exchange of ideas on administration among the various administering states, and the contribution of ideas by those non-administering Members who have experienced common problems in their own countries, can be a most fruitful development of the Trusteeship System and of Chapter XI. A subsidiary advantage of this approach would be that it would tend to moderate the atmosphere sometimes created in the Council and in the Special Committee when administering Members are "put in the dock" as regards the administration of their territories.

The United States can contribute to a further improvement in the atmosphere of the Council and the Special Committee† by such means as the following: by replying patiently and honestly to questions on its own territories; by commending other administering Members on valid accomplishments; by showing willingness to make use of the experience of other Members, where appropriate, as well as to make its own experience available to others.

5. The United States should make increasing efforts to see that indigenous inhabitants of dependent areas are placed in responsible posts in executive, legislative, judicial, and other local organs. This can be done in part by setting a good example in United States possessions. In addition, the United States Delegation to the Trusteeship Council, whenever feasible, should urge the other administering authorities to speed up the policy of placing indigenous inhabitants in responsible posts. In progress of this type, which is of great psychological importance to nationalist leaders, advantages of proceeding somewhat over-rapidly generally outweigh considerations which might suggest a slower pace.

C. Through Other Channels

1. The United States should strengthen the two regional non-United Nations Commissions—the Caribbean Commission and the South Pacific Commission—established to advise Member and territorial Governments on economic and social problems arising in the dependent areas within the geographic spheres of the Commissions.

These two regional Commissions represent a mechanism whereby metropolitan governments administering non-self-governing territories in the Caribbean and South Pacific areas can cooperate in the solution of economic and social problems of a regional nature. Each is assisted in carrying out these functions by two auxiliary bodies, a Conference representative of the people of the area and a Research Council which makes recommendations to the Commission itself. Both Commissions also have established Secretariats which include qualified scientific and technical personnel. Both have assembled basic data on social and economic conditions and act as a clearing house for information within the area. Both have planned and carried out programs in the fields of education, health, and economic development, and both have already provided to Member and Territorial Governments technical assistance which otherwise would not have been available.

The use of those two Commissions in connection with the Point IV program to the extent practicable would be a logical and important step. The Commissions are particularly qualified to assess regional needs for technical assistance to non-self-governing territories within their areas, to recommend projects which might be undertaken by two or more Member Governments jointly, and to offer advice and assistance to Governments and Agencies administering technical assistance programs.

The United States can contribute to the success of the Caribbean and South Pacific Commissions by playing a constructive role in meetings of the two Commissions and their auxiliary bodies, by meeting promptly its quota share of the expenses of the Commissions, by furnishing expert assistance for meetings held under the auspices of the Commissions, and by giving prompt consideration to the recommendations of the Commissions and their auxiliary bodies.

2. The United States should urge that the United Nations technical assistance programs be devoted in generous proportions to dependent areas; and, in any bilateral technical cooperation programs (Point IV), this country should encourage colonial powers to request projects for the areas which they administer. In considering the acceptability of all such projects under bilateral programs the United States should adopt the criterion that the interests of the inhabitants of the territory are primary, and it should also support the adoption of this criterion for United Nations projects. Aid planned in accordance with this principle would provide the United States, in cooperation with the rest of the democratic world, with a strengthened ability to counteract the Soviet attempt to champion the cause of colonial peoples. Furthermore, technical assistance as planned would probably prove more acceptable to colonial peoples than projects developed under ECA and be less susceptible to the charge of strengthening imperialism.

3. Every effort should be made by the United States Government to pursue domestic policies consistent with the objectives stated in the paper, as well as to make clear to the people of the United States the effect which domestic situations have on our foreign relations, and particularly on the faith of other countries in this country's capacity for leadership, with regard to dependent peoples and peoples recently emerged from dependent status, it is highly desirable that our policies and practices towards racial minorities in this country be increasingly brought into fuller accord with the democratic principles we profess. In the whole range of political, economic, social, and educational advancement in this country, increased attention should be given to the necessity of taking such steps as will advance the status of world leadership now incumbent on this country.

[WASHINGTON,] April 21, 1952.

Subject: Preliminary Thoughts on the Subject of a U.S. Policy towards Colonial Areas and Colonial Powers.

Our recent endeavors to develop an agreed and effective line of argument against proposals to express a U.S. position on the Colonial question in the text of the MSP legislation <sup>2</sup> have made it clear that our difficulties go beyond the problem of public presentation of the Departmental point of view. They go, in fact, to the definition of this point of view—to the basic policies which guide our actions in dealing with issues affecting dependent peoples. While there is a wide area of agreement within the Department on issues of this kind, there is also evidence of considerable disagreement on purpose, method, emphasis, etc.

The fundamental problem is very old, and is vitally important to the future course of American foreign policy. Its solution is perhaps as difficult as any that has confronted the United States Government in the whole history of its foreign relations. The solution involves a reconciliation of the long-term interests of the United States with its immediate and short-term interests; it also involves a reconciliation of a widespread popular sentiment with certain international facts which are not always evident to people not actively engaged in the business of diplomacy. Perhaps no complete solution is possible in any case, in the sense of a pat formula which can be depended upon to guide U.S. actions in all of the varied circumstances in which the colonial question presents itself. It seems desirable, nevertheless, to seek a wider area of agreement on certain fundamental principles which must be taken into account in all such circumstances.

First, it must be recognized that the basic sympathy of the United States for the aspirations of dependent peoples for freedom and self-Government is so deep-seated that, in the long run, it is beyond serious question that the United States will offer strong support for these aspirations. There is likely to be little disagreement about the proposition that the United States policy aims at the eventual freedom and self-government of dependent peoples everywhere in the world and that the United States will continue in the future, as in the past, to exert its influence to this end. The attitudes which support this aim are numerous. They have their roots deep in our history, and their offshoots may be found in the present opinions of many different groupings of Americans.

There are few topics in the realm of foreign affairs on which there seems to be such essential popular agreement as upon the American attitude toward dependent peoples. Democrats and republicans, liberals and conservatives, isolationists and internationalists—all these tend to join forces at least to accept the principle that the United States should support the aspirations of dependent peoples. There are certain exceptions, of course, and it must also be noted that a certain part of the public sentiment described is perhaps not so interested in the fate of dependent peoples as in sniping at the colonial powers. Even so, the sympathy of the American people for dependent peoples is a fact of life that is both healthy and strong. Most practical politicians realize that it is virtually impossible to gain votes, or even to placate critics by supporting the position of the British in Egypt or of the French in Morocco.

Even if popular sentiment were different, those directly responsible for the day to day conduct of foreign affairs would be required to recognize the necessity, in terms of American self-interest, of a benevolent attitude toward the aspirations of dependent peoples. Over a long period of years, it is inevitable that these dependent peoples will gain self-government. Nations of the Western world cannot at the same time maintain their own democratic political institutions and take the measures which would be required to stifle the demands of the dependent peoples, even if they should desire to do so. The strength and security of the United States in years to come will depend to a considerable extent on friendly relations with these dependent peoples, and the United States cannot hope for such relations if it takes the side of colonial powers in the innumerable conflicts which will inevitably ensue which would be required to stifle the demands of the dependent peoples will develop strong democratic institutions and thereby add to the stability and security of the free world can be realized only if these peoples receive sympathetic support and guidance by the United States during their period of evolution.

On the other hand, American policy with respect to dependent peoples is complicated by the fact that the United States today finds itself, through no choice of its own, in the midst of a power struggle with the strongest and most dangerous dictatorship in history. Our long-term interests will have little meaning unless they are reconciled with our immediate security interests. There would be little value in throwing our support to dependent peoples with a view to developing worth-while democratic friends in half a century, if, by so doing, we might seriously jeopardize present American security and the continued survival of democracy itself. This means that our attitudes, together with our calculated long-term policy aims, must be tempered in particular situations by certain considerations of immediate self-interest.

First among these is the hard fact that the U.S. is now engaged in a far-reaching mutual security undertaking with certain nations which are foremost among the world's "colonial powers". Full cooperation with these nations is essential to the security of the U.S. and to the success of its policy of containment of the U.S.S.R. and of deterring aggression by that policy. The dependent peoples cannot, at the present time, make more than a token contribution toward the real defensive strength of the free world. Therefore, the U.S. must either choose the almost impossible course of attempting to defend itself in isolation, or must rely upon the colonial powers of Western Europe to make an addition to American strength sufficient to deter and to hold in check the tremendous military power of the Soviet armies. We have chosen the latter course. And in order to pursue this course successfully, it is obviously essential that we maintain the friendliest possible relations with our European allies.

It may be argued that our alliance with the colonial powers in NATO would not be affected fundamentally by the U.S. policy toward dependent peoples, because our allies have no alternative but to continue cooperation with the U.S. This argument is frequently advanced in the Congress and elsewhere, and takes the form of various proposals for U.S. action in which such countries as Great Britain and France will have no choice but meekly to acquiesce or submit. "We're paying the piper" it is said, "and we are calling the tune".

This argument embodies some of the most dangerous assumptions that can be made in analyses of present-day foreign policy. In the first place, it assumes that the peoples and the political leaders in the European NATO countries will always react rationally and logically to their own self-interest, quite contrary to the known facts of political life. It is no exaggeration to say that unqualified support for dependent peoples by the U.S. would not only cause a most serious rift between the members of the North Atlantic alliance, but could under extreme circumstances cause the withdrawal of such powers as France, Belgium, and even the Netherlands therefrom. The NATO is an association of sovereign nations and the colonial powers amongst them consider that their relationships with their dependent overseas territories are entirely an internal matter. They have made it abundantly clear that their reports to the United Nations on social and economic matters therein are made as evidence of their recognition of their humanitarian responsibilities and that this cooperation with the UN does not, and can not, infringe on the political relationships existing between these countries and their dependent areas or on the sovereignty of the reporting nations.

But even if we should judge that an actual break up of the North Atlantic alliance is unlikely, the problem of maintaining "full cooperation" remains. A paper alliance would be of little value. The success of our security policies demands that our allies do their full share of the common task, and the development of strong anti-American feelings within these countries would make this task impossible of accomplishment. To be realistic, we must recognize that, in seeking to influence the NATO governments to take measures deemed essential by our mutual defense, we are dealing with politicians who must go to the people at regular intervals and obtain public support. It would be easily possible for criticism of the U.S. and resentment against its policies to grow so strong in European countries that cooperation with the U.S. would be a political liability rather than a political asset for individual leaders. If such a development should take place, the NATO defense program for all practical purposes might well become a failure in fact even though continuing to exist in theory.

In this connection it is well to note that the peoples of the European colonial powers do not by any means tend to regard the basic American sympathy for dependent peoples as an outgrowth of altruism or idealism. Some of the more charitable regard it as an indication of American immaturity and of a confused appraisal of American self-interest, but there are many people who are convinced that American policy is deliberately aimed at "stealing" the dependent territories on behalf of a new "colonial theory" in which American trade and exploitation could take the place of open political control as under the traditional colonial policy. This conviction is strengthened whenever the U.S. sides with nationalist movements in territories which are clearly incapable of self-government.

A second major consideration which must temper the long-term U.S. attitude toward dependent peoples is the danger of the seizure of these territories by Communist or other hostile totalitarian elements. This danger results not so much from the possibility that local movements towards independence may be Communist dominated (which is true only in rare instances) as from the fact that the Soviet Union profits whenever a "situation of weakness" develops anywhere in the world.

It is part of the Communist gospel (1926 Comintern meeting at Moscow) that Leninists-Stalinists must first support fully any and all nationalist groups with a view to weakening the "imperialist's powers" by detaching their overseas dependencies from them. Only after this first objective has been attained can the Communists then turn their primary attention to fostering the second revolution, "the revolution of the Proletariat", i.e., the subjection of the recently liberated people to the full control of the Communist agents of Moscow. This second revolution can be relatively easy if the "independent" territorial government is so weak that it cannot maintain internal order or if the results of independence have disillusioned the population.

Even in most favorable instances, the government of a newly created nation inevitably faces the most serious political, economic and social problems. And where self-government is attained prematurely, these problems are magnified. If we lived in an age where the Communist will to world domination did not exist, the painful consequences of premature self-government might nevertheless be risked. Over a period of years one could expect the dependent peoples, through the slow process of trial and error, to gain the confidence, the wisdom, and the sense of responsibility required for real independence. However, the Communist danger does exist, and its threat to the dependent territories cannot be ignored. Premature independence, even with non-Communist governments in control at the start will usually lead to mass dissatisfactions and disillusionments which can be skillfully exploited by the Communists and which can lead within a relatively short period of time to a Communist seizure of power. The difficulties and frustrations of the nascent state do not lead to a reorientation of the popular mind to the West since local leaders find it politically profitable to focus the hatred of the people on the Westerner in order to cover up their own weakness and selfishness. Therefore, by fostering premature independence, we definitely play into Communist hands.

A final consideration which we should bear in mind when confronted with the "colonial question" is that the U.S., regardless of whatever policies it may adopt, can never hope to outbid the Soviet Union for the affections of the extremist elements in the dependent territories. Our internal political processes, as well as our foreign ties, require us to act responsibly. And the responsible can never outbid the unscrupulous. Communist leaders and agents have promised dependent peoples the world on a silver platter; we can not. We can not commit ourselves to provide a bed of roses for newly-independent nations, nor to pick up the check for the social and economic failures which so often occur in connection with early experiments in self-government. Therefore, even with the most sympathetic policies, the U.S. cannot hope to convince the extremist elements in the dependent territories that America is much more than "A little better" than the European colonial nations.

For these reasons, our best interests as well as common sense should lead us to pursue the same policy which we have sought to follow for many years; to assist loyally and frankly both parties in the colonial dialogue along the road of evolution towards the political autonomy of all peoples on a basis of true democracy and enlightened self-interest, of the people as a whole towards the disappearance of colonial bonds. Indeed we should assist as impartial well wishers towards the substitution therefor of freely negotiated and accepted economic and cultural—and sometimes even political—relationships, knitting together the free world into an ever stronger, larger and more prosperous community of equals instead of an anarchic conglomerate of weak, poor and dissatisfied political entities which could provide all too easy victims to Soviet Communism.

It is also desirable for us to seek ways and means of achieving a clearer understanding among the American people and their political leaders of the dilemmas which the U.S. confronts in dealing with the colonial question. It is particularly desirable that we foster a recognition of the fact that the issues are not simple and clear-cut, that the U.S. has conflicting interests, and that our policies must be tailored to fit particular situations. This will be a very difficult task, but it is a task which must be undertaken if the U.S. Government is to be assured of the public support which the successful execution of this long-term evolutionary policy requires.

Subject: United States Policy towards Colonial Areas and Colonial Powers

Mr. Knight's preliminary memorandum on United States policy towards colonial areas and colonial powers interests me very much. I think it is an excellent beginning. Since you suggest that you would be glad to have comments I am jotting down a few ideas that came to my mind as I read it.

I think there is a fundamental point which does not emerge clearly in the preliminary memorandum. The point is that the problem is complicated by the attitude of a large number of states, chiefly located in the Middle East and Asia but to a certain extent including also some Latin American states. These states are the vocal and active champions of the dependent peoples. Many of them have recently emerged from their dependent position to a position of full membership in the international society. Some of them no doubt champion the dependent peoples for reasons other than an idealistic concern with the welfare of these peoples. The fact remains, however, that the problem needs to be looked at in terms of our relations with the so-called colonial powers, our relations with dependent peoples, and our relations with the champions of dependent peoples. Viewed in the light of this additional party to the controversy it may well be that the importance of the attitude of the dependent peoples has more real significance even in terms of the hard substance of military effort than is indicated, for instance, in the bottom paragraph on page 2. The hostility or even the neutrality of any large part of this total group might be a very serious burden in case of war.

It is in part the existence of this group of champions or sponsoring states, particularly with reference to operations of the UN, which makes it difficult for us to control the timing of the attainment of independence by some of the dependent peoples. The UN decisions on Libya and Somaliland are examples. Other cases may well arise of a similar character.

As I think Mr. Knight's paper brings out, we have a job of selling our views to a number of different audiences. Mr. Knight brings out very well some of the points which have to be made clearer to American opinion. I think one could emphasize more strongly the necessity for bringing home to the colonial powers the fact that even though they are the ones faced with the immediate responsibilities in dependent areas, we have with them a common problem which we must meet together. It seems to me they are more ready than they were a few years ago to recognize that our interest is legitimate even though they still maintain "these are internal matters". For instance, the UK is at last beginning to recognize the legitimacy of our interest in the problem of the Sudan and our last message to Paris on the Tunisian case contains a strong argumentation in support of our interest in this matter.

Obviously we must try to meet the point which Mr. Knight brings out at the bottom of page 3 in regard to the suspicions about American motives. I hope that our record on Indonesia bears out our early attempts to satisfy the Dutch that we were not trying to supplant them economically in the area. We would need to be on our guard constantly to avoid justifying the fears which some elements in the colonial countries now have.

I think we also are faced with a large problem in trying to sell our position to the states which I have described as the champions of the dependent peoples. I think we could in appropriate ways bring home to some of these governments the fact that their situation as they gain in power is somewhat akin to that of the colonial powers. India, for example, in regard to Nepal and Tibet has an attitude which does not square with its attacks upon us or upon the colonial powers. One could probably lift out of official statements of the government and officials of Pakistan statements about the Afghan proposal for Pushtoonistan which would not square with Bokhari's statements in the Security Council on the Tunisian case. India's attitude in regard to Hyderabad is another example in point. The Egyptian attitude towards the Sudan and towards Libya does not seem to be wholly free from an attitude which they would call "imperialistic" if it was held by the UK. I am not suggesting that we accuse them of being two-faced, but that we try to point out to some of them that basically their interests and ours are similar and that they are really not 100% in favor of a free hand for dependent peoples.

The discussion of the communist problem on page 4 raises some questions in my mind but I am not sure enough of the facts to quarrel with the conclusions.

MEMORANDUM ON U.S. POLICY TOWARDS COLONIAL AREAS AND COLONIAL POWERS

The attached paper on U.S. colonial policy by Ridgeway Knight<sup>2</sup> seems to me to give a well-reasoned and lucid interpretation of the policy which we have perforce been following. We have for a long time been trying to balance long-term objectives in the colonial field with short-term requirements.

In actual practice, however, our problems arise when we have to apply this principle to particular cases in the United Nations Committees dealing with colonial questions. It is like we have so often found in our colonial talks with the British and French—we agree in general but differ in particular cases.<sup>3</sup>

There is also the question as to whether the immediate and short-term interests of the free world are best served by supporting our West European allies in particular issues which alienate other large segments of the free world, in particular the Moslem world. Every aspect of the colonial question, large or small, wherever it arises in any Committee of the United Nations, compels us to take a decision which throws our weight either on one side or the other. And we must realize, I think, more clearly, that some innocent-looking questions which might on the surface be regarded as minor in their implications, do have far-reaching effects.

Nevertheless, I think the memorandum of Knight and Nunley is on the whole very helpful and ought to contribute to clearer thinking in the Department on the colonial question generally.

A more detailed reaction to the memorandum is being prepared in UND.<sup>4</sup>

Draft Memorandum Prepared in the Office of Dependent Area Affairs and in the Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs

[WASHINGTON,] May 8, 1952.

Subject: EUR memorandum on "U.S. policy towards colonial areas and colonial powers"

The EUR memorandum on U.S. colonial policy, in brief, takes the position that although our long-term interests require us to maintain a sympathetic attitude toward the aspirations of dependent peoples, our short-term security interests require us to give "full cooperation to the colonial (NATO) powers" and that we should explain this dilemma to the American people.

The particular arguments in support of this position are based upon the existence of the East-West conflict and include the following reasons:

- a. Full cooperation with the NATO colonial powers is essential to U.S. security because no others are able to make an effective contribution at this time,
- b. Less than "full cooperation" with the NATO countries might thwart their public opinion to a point where NATO might break up,
- c. Even if such a break-up were unlikely, failure to support our NATO allies' colonial policy may create such strong anti-American feelings and resentment as to prevent effective cooperation,
- d. That "unqualified support for dependent peoples by the United States" would not only cause a serious rift in NATO but might bring about withdrawal of certain powers,
- e. That by the U.S. fostering "premature independence" we definitely play into Communist hands, and
- f. That since we cannot "outbid the Soviet Union for the affections of the extremist elements in the dependent territories", we can not hope to convince these elements that America is more than "a little better" than the European colonial nations.

The EUR memorandum concludes that "our best interests as well as common sense should lead us to pursue the same policy which we have sought to follow for many years—to assist loyally and frankly both parties in the colonial dialogue along the road toward the political autonomy of all peoples on a basis of true democracy and enlightened self-interest of the people as a whole towards the disappearance of colonial bonds".

UNA agrees with the conclusion. However, the body of the memorandum appears inconsistent with this conclusion and, in effect, urges a short-term policy which seems to us directly contrary to the conclusion. In fact, the argumentation in the memorandum raises in our minds the basic question whether it would not be short-sighted to elevate our immediate NATO interests so far above other considerations, and whether such a policy would not, in the long run, weaken the free world's ability to resist aggression.

The memorandum does not adequately analyze the need to harmonize our NATO interests and obligations with the global security interests of the United States, including our interests in the United Nations. A policy of unqualified support of the colonial powers as advocated in the EUR memorandum would alienate hundreds of millions of newly independent peoples who are fundamentally opposed to colonialism. Such a policy manifestly encourages the formation of a "third force" and might even lead these nations to identify themselves with the Communist cause. The virtually inexhaustible manpower and other resources of these nations constitute a tremendous military potential; we should ponder the effect upon our security if this potential should be denied to us or added to the power of the Soviet Union. Such a stark possibility must be averted in our wider interest.

The United Nations is the best instrument we have to maintain the cohesion of the entire free world. The United Nations provides a forum where a discussion may work as a safety valve and assist in reaching agreement for the progressive advancement of the dependent peoples. In the United Nations we are trying to mobilize the support of the Arab-Asian nations for our policy of opposing Communist aggression anywhere in the world.

Although the Security Council is severely hampered by the conflict between Communism and the free world, the General Assembly has been able to maintain action in Korea and, through its "Uniting for Peace" resolution has attempted to prepare itself for any future action which may be needed against aggression. Such United Nations action could not be taken—action in Korea could not have been taken—without the support and approbation of a significant majority of the non-colonial powers which are Members of the United Nations.

We cannot on one hand deny these nations an opportunity to discuss the problems in which they have a vital interest and on the other hand expect their support of our policies.

Colonial issues can poison the atmosphere not only in the United Nations but it can poison the atmosphere of bilateral and multilateral negotiations outside the United Nations where the cooperation of these nations is essential.

On the one hand, the EUR memorandum advises "full cooperation with the NATO colonial powers". But if this means almost complete identification with their colonial policies and practices, even when these are repressive in nature, as they sometimes are, it is asking more than public opinion generally, even controlling public and Congressional opinion in the United States, would be able to accept. It is part of our difficult task to hold United States opinion together, as well as to influence our NATO colonial allies to follow a course which will not only not alienate the rest of the world but will not alienate opinion in the United States as well. NATO requires as much support by public opinion in the United States as by public opinion in Western Europe. NATO will be in danger if the people of the United States and the large sectors of the liberal opinion of Western Europe should conclude that NATO is an old-fashioned alliance designed to maintain the status quo at any cost. Moreover, if the present policy of NATO colonial powers leads to continued crises, our immediate NATO interest in the colonial areas would be impaired and our allies administering these areas would be weakened by their efforts to deal with such crises.

On the other hand, the memorandum advises against "unqualified support of the dependent peoples". With this UNA fully agrees, for the same basic reason referred to above. This argument is indeed unnecessary since at no time has U.S. policy given such unqualified support. Many of the demands made by extreme elements in the colonial territories, and particularly by their self-appointed sponsors in the United Nations, are wholly impracticable and therefore unacceptable. The colonial relationship, whatever its historic antecedents, we believe is still in many places useful and necessary. The United States itself maintains such a relationship, and we must be prepared to defend it while constantly improving it and moving as rapidly as may be feasible toward its liquidation through the attainment of self-government (as in the case of Puerto Rico),<sup>1</sup> and, in suitable circumstances, to independence (as in the case of the Philippines). On this fundamental and basic American concept of colonial policy there can be no marked deviation either in favor of our NATO allies or of our anti-colonial colleagues in the United Nations.

UNA also considers that the "time" factor in the progress of dependent peoples toward self-government is a delicate matter of great importance. The EUR memorandum refers at one point to "a long period of years", and at another point to "half a century" as a time when self-government might be achieved. We do not believe that it is sound to generalize on this point. Experience has shown that every case must be judged on its own merits. The trend is for dependent territories to achieve self-government before many people believe they are "ready" for it. And it seems likely that this trend will accelerate in the future. The idea of preventing peoples from achieving self-government until they are "ready" for it is a dangerous idea. What the colonial powers need to do is to concentrate on speeding up the political training and economic and social advancement of dependent peoples so that they will have some capacity for governing themselves well when they do achieve self-government. Whether or not the United States should actively press the colonial powers to take such steps, we would make a bad mistake by giving these powers "full cooperation" in any other policy.

The United States is thus bound to follow a difficult middle course which may in particular cases make us unpopular with both extremes. This means that we may support the colonial group or the anti-colonial group or we may decline to take a position, depending on the particular circumstances in each case. But the wisdom of this course is apparent to moderate opinion and will become apparent in wider circles if it is properly explained in high level statements.

Full cooperation with our NATO colonial allies cannot be a one-way street. The United States has sought and should continue to seek a basic understanding with our British, French and Belgian colleagues on the colonial question. But such an understanding cannot begin with the premise of accepting their position without qualification. The United States should urge upon them the wisdom of granting freedom of choice to their colonial peoples at a stage early enough to be psychologically advantageous. The British have very nearly learned this lesson and have practiced it successfully in India and more recently in the Gold Coast and in Nigeria.<sup>2</sup> It is the French and Belgians who do not wish at any moment to recognize a point where their colonial tributaries might choose to break away from the metropole. It is this mistaken position which is causing the difficulty.

"Premature independence" obviously is as bad as over-due autonomy. And experience has shown that Communism thrives on delayed and repressive colonial policy as much as on premature independence movements. The U.S. should condone or encourage neither. Above all, the U.S. should avoid the danger of such a close identification with reactionary colonial policies that liberal opinion in the world will no longer be influenced by our leadership. Such liberal opinion exists in Britain, France, and Belgium, as well as in India, Thailand, the Philippines, Mexico and the United States. These liberals are today anti-Communist, and it is to our interest that they should remain so.

It is quite true that we cannot outbid the Soviets on colonial questions for the "affections of the extremist elements in the dependent territories". No such attempt has ever been made. However, it is also true that responsible elements in most dependent areas recognize the difference in motivation between the Soviets and the United States. In the United Nations, the most vocal anti-colonial powers, who have considerable influence on colonial movements, have up until now largely ignored Soviet overtures. In fact, one of the chief objectives of the Arab-Asian group in the United Nations has been to obtain

U.S. support.<sup>3</sup> It is therefore again to our self-interest to see that elements, now in control of colonial nationalist movements, are not usurped by the extremists under the pressure of repressive colonialism.

For these reasons, UNA does not believe that either our short-term or long-term interests would be served by following the argumentation suggested in the EUR memorandum. It is of the highest importance for the U.S. and for the free world generally, in this critical period, to urge the freedom-loving colonial powers to repeat what in their best and most enlightened periods they have practiced in the past, namely, to accept a freely chosen partnership with their colonies based on democratic principles. And this can only be achieved when the "inalienable rights" of colonial peoples are fully respected.

Four papers<sup>1</sup> are attached on the subject of United States policy towards colonial areas and colonial powers:

1. Memorandum by Mr. Knight (EUR) with the title "Preliminary Thoughts on the Subject of a U.S. Policy towards Colonial Areas and Colonial Powers", sent under date of April 28 by Mr. Perkins to Messrs. Matthews, Bohlen, Jessup, Hickerson, Byroade, and Nitze.
2. Preliminary comment by Mr. Gerig, dated April 30.
3. Memorandum of comment, dated April 30, by Mr. Jessup.
4. Draft memorandum prepared by UND and UNP, dated May 8, commenting on Mr. Knight's memorandum.

Mr. DePalma tells me that Mr. Watts, Executive Director of the Policy Planning Staff, said at a staff meeting on April 30 that the Policy Planning Staff was thinking of undertaking a study of this subject, using Mr. Knight's memorandum as a springboard.

I recommend that we have a meeting urgently of the interested people in UNA as soon as you have had a chance to look at these memoranda. You have already read Mr. Jessup's memorandum.

What we need to consider urgently is the approach that we take on the procedure to be followed in developing this subject in the Department. Should we undertake to promote the establishment of the working group on the general subject of colonial policy with focus on United Nations problems? Or should we encourage (perhaps it is already under way without encouragement) an over-all study by the Planning Staff? If the latter is done, what focus should be encouraged for the study:

1. A statement of general guiding principles for colonial policy;
2. A statement of principles applicable in particular to organizations in areas—the United Nations, NATO, and the various geographic areas; or
3. Possibly a combination of these two.

Subject: United States Policy toward Colonial Areas and Colonial Powers

The attached memorandum<sup>2</sup> represents our tentative views on some of the problems raised in the memorandum of April 28 circulated by Mr. Perkins entitled "Preliminary Thoughts on the Subject of a U.S. Policy towards Colonial Areas and Colonial Powers". I use the adjective "tentative" because this question is not only a continuing one with long and short-term aspects but it is one which is being examined again by the United Nations Liaison Committee in the general "postmortem" on the last General Assembly, in which this problem arose in an acute form, owing to the Moroccan and Tunisian situations.

The colonial problem, however, in more general terms, has been a problem of major importance in the United Nations ever since the drafting of the Charter in 1945. The philosophy, purposes and methods of the colonial system has been a subject which has tended to divide the United Nations into a large anti-colonial group on the one hand and the minority of colonial powers on the other.

The Department of State and United States Delegations in this situation have, in practice, evolved a middle position between these extremes and have attempted to play the role of "honest broker" in developing a sizable group which has held a moderate position with respect to the colonial issue.

Such a middle position not only accorded with our own historical background and our present "colonial" responsibilities, but it also was the result of a balance of forces within the government itself where differing views have been held by the various geographical Bureaus in the Department. In this Bureau we have approached the problem pragmatically in an attempt to harmonize divergent positions both on the world scene and internally. The attached memorandum reflects these views.

Various attempts have been made in the Department over the past several years to formulate a comprehensive colonial policy position. The most recent attempt, made in 1950 (see copy attached),<sup>3</sup> though couched in general terms, did not secure complete agreement in the Department and was not finalized as a policy statement. It has, however, served as a general guide in the development of United States positions on particular questions in the United Nations. Our experience has shown, however, that even when agreement is reached on general principles and attitudes to be taken on the colonial question, great difficulty is found in applying them in particular cases as they arise, sometimes unexpectedly, in United Nations bodies. In other words, a statement of general policy or principles will not furnish a general panacea for all our troubles. Nevertheless, in this, as in other fields, we can only proceed intelligently in particular cases if we have a common basis of policy as a point of departure.

Therefore, we believe that thinking on this question in the Department would be clarified if there were another general examination of the problem as a whole, especially in view of the critical issues which Morocco and Tunisia have raised.<sup>4</sup> Increasing pressure and appeals are being made to us by the principal colonial powers and also by the increasingly vocal Arab-Asian,<sup>5</sup> Far Eastern and Latin American countries. The present emphasis on colonial and trusteeship matters in the United Nations necessarily means that such a clarification will look to the problem of dealing with these matters in United Nations organs and agencies. We suggest that a working group be activated at once to undertake this study. The group should include UNA and the geographic Bureaus and perhaps two or three other areas. The Policy Planning Staff should be represented if it desires. The group would naturally seek the views of yourself, Ambassador Jessup, Mr. Bohlen, and other interested officers. I am prepared to designate Mr. Gerig and Mr. Cargo to represent UNA in such a working group.

Subject: U.S. Colonial Policy

The large number of recent memoranda and comments on this subject within the Department, including particularly the comments in response to my memorandum of April 28, while demonstrating differences of approach, show that there is no disagreement on the basic proposition that both our long-term and short-term interest require us to maintain the uncomfortable middle-of-the-road position. There are, however, differences of view as to rationale, emphasis and tactics.

Mr. Hickerson's memorandum suggests the reactivation of a working group to undertake an examination of the general problem, particularly since it will constitute one of the major sets of problems at the next session of the United Nations General Assembly. I agree that such a group should be activated. However, I strongly share the feeling that no statement of general policy or principles will obviate the difficulties of working out the U.S. position on specific problems as they arise. Therefore, while the group should, as an initial task, seek to clarify the rationale of our general policy, utilizing the 1950 study as a point of departure, its principal attention should, in my view, be focused on the two following objectives:

(1) A re-appraisal of tactics and strategy to be followed in the UN. At the forthcoming GA our attitude on colonial matters will find its most prominent expression and the impact on world opinion will be greatest. The group should, therefore, explore both the content and feasibility of a vigorous initiative by the Administering Powers, which the U.S. could wholeheartedly back at the next GA both in a forthright presentation of the accomplishments and problems in the colonial field and in regard to specific items on the agenda of the Fourth Committee, or likely to be raised at the GA.

(2) The development of an explanation of the conflict of issues involved which could be used as the basis of published documents, speeches by prominent Department officials or background information for leaders of U.S. public opinion in order to achieve a clearer understanding of and support for our policy by the American people.

I am prepared to designate Mr. Ward Allen, UN Adviser, and Mr. Herbert Hill of the EUR Planning Staff, as regular participants in such a group, together with such other officers of EUR, as the work may require from time to time.

Editorial Note

On June 18, 1952 the Department of State Working Group on Colonial Problems was established. Membership included representatives of the Bureau of United Nations Affairs, the four geographic bureaus, the Ambassador at Large, the Policy Planning Staff, the Counselor of the Department, and the Assistant Legal Adviser for United Nations Affairs. Although the membership of the Working Group was virtually identical with that of the longstanding Committee on Problems of Dependent Areas (CDA), the Group did not function as a subcommittee of that committee but independently. The Working Group on Colonial Problems held its first meeting on June 20, 1952, the minutes of which are printed infra. Minutes and documents of the Working Group are in lot 54 D 5, which contains also records of the colonial policy committees described in footnote 1, page 1077.

I. Scope of the Work Program to be Undertaken by the Working Group.

1. The Chairman opened the meeting by noting that everyone present was generally familiar with the reason why the Working Group on Colonial Problems had been established. He requested that the group adopt a pragmatic approach and attempt to deal with specific problems while also considering long range policy questions. He suggested that each area represented prepare a list of problems which should be brought before CP. He noted that UNA would like to follow this procedure for current UN problems but that there are, in addition, problems in various areas which have not yet reached the UN stage which could profitably be raised. He suggested that each member of the working group submit to the CP Secretary by Tuesday, June 24, a list of immediate and long range problems in the colonial field. These lists will then be combined and distributed as a committee document. Consideration could then be given at the next meeting to what the group's work program should be.

2. With regard to the general consideration of U.S. colonial policy he suggested that further consideration of the 1950 document on U.S. colonial policy (FM D F-3/1) <sup>1</sup> should not be ruled out, noting that this document had never been finally approved in the Department. He stressed that such an overall document would not provide answers to specific colonial problems which arise, for example, in the General Assembly of the UN. Nonetheless an overall policy statement would be of considerable value to those officials not working daily with the colonial problem and for those delegates to technical conferences who are often confronted unexpectedly with colonial questions. He hoped, however, that the group would not become "bogged down" in an effort to reach agreement on a long paper setting forth general U.S. colonial policy and suggested that by the preparation of a list of the various problems a determination could be made as to what problems should be given priority consideration.

3. Mr. Monsma expressed doubt as to the value, in the ARA area, of simply listing recurring problems such as those of the Falkland Islands and Belize. The Chairman replied that the Committee might well consider not only territorial problems but the attitudes of the peoples involved and other comparable questions. He suggested that each representative attempt to include in their list an across-the-board view of present and potential colonial problems in their area. Mr. Howard said it would be very easy to prepare a long list of problems in the NEA area but that it was much more difficult to do something about them. He asked whether the working group would be responsible for preparing position papers on colonial problems for the General Assembly or the Trusteeship Council and, if so, whether this would result in a duplication of the work usually handled between UND and the geographic areas. The Chairman said that UND was anxious to avoid any duplication, and that if positions on colonial questions for forthcoming international meetings could be determined by the CP working group it would be unnecessary to repeat this work elsewhere. Mr. Howard asked whether the list should contain issues such as those of the Sudan and Cyprus, which may be raised in the next, or a subsequent, General Assembly. The Chairman replied that he felt that such problems should be considered by the group.

4. Miss Fosdick asked whether it was intended that a paper be prepared which would raise the overall issues relating to the colonial questions. The Chairman replied that such an overall paper might be approached inductively rather than deductively since the latter approach had failed on the 1950 paper. Miss Fosdick suggested that an overall guideline paper should be prepared rather than depending upon sporadic papers to set forth our basic policy. The Chairman said that an initial step might be made through the preparation of a summary of the 1950 paper. Miss Fosdick asked whether the primary objective of the group was not to examine our entire colonial policy. Miss Bacon reminded the group of both the difficulty that had been encountered in trying to reach agreement in 1950 on an overall statement and of the detailed work which had gone into the preparation of the 1950 document. The Chairman said that it had been UNA's thought that the group would deal primarily with specific problems and that this idea was also reflected in memoranda written by the various geographic offices. Miss Fosdick expressed the view that the working group should take nothing for granted as far as previous policy was concerned and that all of the representatives should divorce themselves from their office loyalties in order to consider problems in a detached manner. If such was not to be the case, the colonial problems might as well be handled through regular channels. Mr. Meeker suggested that the members of the working group should probably read the 1950 paper and then attempt to prepare a new statement of U.S. policy.

5. Mr. Monsma noted that he had participated in the attempts to reach agreement on the 1950 paper. While this was a revealing exercise, the group could only answer such questions as "should the U.S. continue to be a 'balance wheel'?" It was impossible however to reach agreement on what such terms as "balance wheel" meant. Therefore, while a short paper outlining general policy might be helpful, even after it is prepared it will still be necessary for the working group to address itself to specific questions. Miss Fosdick asked whether it was absolutely essential that the group reach final agreement. She suggested that the group would be fulfilling a purpose if it did nothing more than raise the various dilemmas in the colonial field and refer them to the Secretary of State for resolution. Mr. Pollak took the view that the group should avoid trying to settle only philosophical generalities. He suggested that in reviewing Tunisia and other North African problems which had arisen it might be possible to determine the areas and the direction in which the group should go. The Chairman said that the Department was, of course, not in a position to "let the wheels stop" on particular questions, since many specific problems are coming up or will be coming up soon in the UN. Therefore, he felt that it would be necessary to consider specific problems as well as to work on an overall policy statement.

6. Mr. Monsma noted that it was possible that issues would arise for committee consideration which are not on the General Assembly agenda. He recalled the "postmortem" which had been held in the Department on the last General Assembly. Mr. Gerig had stressed the "moderating position" which the U.S. had tried to take on each issue. In the overall review it was not clear whether the U.S. had accomplished its objective by such an approach and the Committee might well study such a question profitably. Another question which might be considered is whether we are morally bound to carry out General Assembly resolutions even though we are not legally bound to do so. He indicated that these were the type of problems that ARA would like to see considered. Miss Bacon noted that FE was also interested in working on specific problems.

7. Miss Fosdick said that she would question the objectives on which everyone usually agreed. She questioned the adequacy of the 1950 paper in view of the many new developments since that time. She urged that a statement of the issues and new tendencies be prepared and concluded that the group should concentrate more on programs than on objectives. The Chairman expressed agreement that the group should assess what has been done in the colonial field, but he said that it was also vital that the group agree to discuss specific problems not only because these problems must be met, but because they will lead the group to a discussion of the basic U.S. approach to colonial questions. He said that UND regarded the colonial issue with a sense of extreme urgency, because it is possible that the colonial problem at the next General Assembly might surpass the East-West issue in importance.

8. The group agreed to the following suggestions by the Chairman : (1) each area will submit to the Secretary by Tuesday, June 24, a list of suggestions on problems (not necessarily territorial) which should be considered by the working group ; (2) the members will review the 1950 paper and a paper summarizing its main points will be circulated for consideration at the next meeting of the group; and (3) with the two above steps as points of departure the group will consider at the next meeting its future work program.

9. The next CP meeting will be held in Room 5104, New State at 10:30 a. m. on Friday, June 27.

[WASHINGTON, June 26, 1952.]

I have given some thought to Mr. Cargo's request that each member of the Working Group submit a list of specific problems which might profitably be studied by the group. A number of possible topics have occurred to me as colonial problems which are in the forefront of our current foreign policy thinking. These topics will, of course, have occurred to most of the members of the Working Group independently.

Pretty clearly, the problem of drawing up a list of topics to be studied is essentially a problem of selectivity from among an enormous amount of material. Accordingly, I would like to suggest a criterion by which to measure suggested topics:

It seemed to me that our discussion last Friday [June 20] suggested that the purpose of the Working Group is not so much to redefine the U.S. position on colonial problems as to draw new equations between that position and other U.S. positions which have become increasingly important in the implementation of our foreign policy. In a general way we all know what our colonial policy is—the U.S. favors the orderly evolution of dependent peoples toward political and economic freedom, etc. Our problem is not that we have shifted our goals with respect to dependent peoples. Our problem is that in various specific situations other factors have intruded themselves, and a conflict of U.S. positions frequently results.

To my way of thinking, the problems we can fruitfully study are those which pose most sharply the interaction of two or more of these themes of contemporary foreign policy.

In Tunisia, for example, our natural sympathy for colonial peoples has been countered and to some extent overridden by urgent need for solidarity with France, one of our foremost military and political partners. We face very similar conflicts of interest in Iran and Egypt.

Tunisia, Egypt, and Iran are merely dramatic illustrations of a pattern which repeats itself in many forms and in many areas. Thus, for example, we have had great difficulty in maintaining a very vigorous position in the UN with respect to the shocking conduct of the South Africans; indeed, in view of the very serious turn which South African events have taken since the close of the last session of the General Assembly, I would think the Working Group could very profitably devote some attention to that whole situation. Another problem which has gotten us into even more difficulty in the UN is our attitude on economic aid through the UN to underdeveloped areas: I would suggest that some consideration of our position on the creation of an International Development Authority might be quite instructive. (It is to be noted that in this last case, the conflict is primarily with themes of domestic policy—i.e., economy, and mistrust of the UN—rather than with another theme of foreign policy.)

In reviewing our relations with the Arab world, some attention might be given to the problems posed in setting up the MEC. A closely related problem is that of strengthening our ties with the underdeveloped Arab countries and at the same time maintaining cordial relations with their relatively advanced and hence highly suspect neighbor, Israel.

The foregoing suggestions are quite random, and no special significance attaches to any one of them. Their important common characteristic, as I have indicated, is that each of them raises one or more aspects of conflict between our traditional position toward dependent peoples and other U.S. positions which have achieved some short-run or long-run urgency. Focusing on these areas of conflict, with the hope of working out intelligent methods of reconciling various types of conflict, seems to me the most fruitful point of departure for the Working Group.

NEA agrees with UND that these problems are likely to become even more dominant at the Seventh General Assembly than in past sessions. Moreover, with the exception of the Pacific Trusteeships, NEA probably has a more direct interest in all questions of this sort than other Geographic Bureaus in the Department, since, as Sir Zafrulla Khan remarked during the Sixth Session: "It so happens that the dependent areas and peoples are all of Asia and Africa; the dominant peoples are all European and American.”

Bearing these general considerations in mind, and aside from the items which UND itself may list, the specific problems in the NEA area which may arise at the Seventh Session, are the following:

1. The Tunisian question
2. The Moroccan question
3. The South West African question

We should be prepared, as well, with regard to the following questions which may arise, whether at the Seventh or at some future session.

1. The Cyprus question, of which note was made at the Sixth Session for the first time, although indirectly, by the Greek Delegation, and by a member of the Soviet bloc;
2. Question of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan.

We are all aware, of course, of the insistence throughout the NEA area on the economic development of under-developed territories and, therefore, of the expressed desire for large-scale UN technical and economic assistance. These problems have a very decided bearing on questions of trusteeship and non-self-governing territories as well as upon the NEA area generally.

As of general interest I am also sending you a comment on the overall program for the Seventh Session.

1. Alignment of underdeveloped areas of world with colonies

In terms of world stability and the security of the Western world, the most ominous feature of the colonial problem is the fact that the underdeveloped countries of the world take sides vigorously with the colonial peoples in any of their real or supposed issues with the metropolitan powers. This is perhaps accounted for by the fact that a low standard of living, whether the result of causes internal or external to a particular territory, breeds the same ignorance, want, disease and desperation wherever it exists. This magnifies the size of the so-called colonial problem out of all proportion and tends to align most of the rest of the world into a bloc, sometimes hostile, more often neutralist in relation to the Western powers, but always open to Soviet attempts at manipulation.

2. Implementation of established U.S. policy in relation to colonies and other underdeveloped territories

The U.S. Government has laid down formal and official policy lines concerning the colonial problem, as well as with respect to underdeveloped areas generally. Article 73 of the United Nations Charter spells out the policies which we agree to carry out in our own colonies and at the same time commits us to collaboration with other colonial powers in aiding them to carry out these same policies in their colonial possessions. The Act for International Development sets out policies and programs of action for the underdeveloped territories of the world, whether these be dependent or independent. With respect to dependent territories there is need to develop techniques and programs under the Act for International Development which will carry out the commitment we have made in Article 73 to collaborate with the European metropolitan powers in achieving the social, economic and scientific purposes of that article in their dependent territories. This involves a number of areas of activity including—

(a) Furnishing policy directives in detail to implement our policy to Washington and field personnel and agencies, including US-UN personnel, based on clear assignments of responsibility.

(b) Consultation with metropolitan powers to establish methods of cooperation.

(c) Development of specific programs for particular territories designed to carry out our treaty obligations and Congressional directives.

(d) Public information, including special measures to reach the populations of underdeveloped countries. (In this connection the special importance of Puerto Rico should be studied and fully exploited).

In the Working Group meeting on colonial areas this morning each of the area representatives were asked to submit a list of the problems in the colonial field which should be considered by the Working Group. I believe that none of the individual problems or cases in the colonial field in the Western Hemisphere need be considered by the Working Group as such. The important thing as far as the American Republics are concerned is their general attitude on colonial matters, since this has a bearing on the position they are likely to take on any colonial question that may come up in the UN. Attached is a memorandum on the "Attitude of American Republics Toward European Dependent Territories in the Western Hemisphere" citing some of the more obvious examples of interest and concern demonstrated by the Latin American countries in the problem of dependent areas, with particular reference to those in the Western Hemisphere. The paper may be of use to the Working Group in a consideration of the attitude of the American Republics, although the examples cited need not be considered except as they explain the attitude of the American Republics on the general question of colonial relations.*

[WASHINGTON, June 25, 1952.]

The following constitute some of the more obvious examples of interest and concern demonstrated by Latin American countries in the problem of dependent peoples, with particular reference to those in the Western Hemisphere.

The final act of the Bogota Conference of 1948 contains a resolution (XXXIII) which includes the following declaration:

"that it is a just aspiration of the American Republics that colonialism and the occupation of American territories by extra-continental countries should be brought to an end."

Although this Declaration was not supported by the Delegations of the U.S. and of Brazil, it may be taken as accurately reflecting the continuing viewpoint of most, if not all, of the other American Republics. It is interesting to note, for example, that at the 1951 Washington Meeting of Consultation of American Foreign Ministers this Declaration was mentioned in a resolution restating inter-American principles regarding European colonies and possession in the Americas (Resolution VI). In addition to the above Declaration, the action taken at Bogota provided for the creation of a special committee of the Organization of American States to study and recommend a solution to what was referred to as "the problem of the existence of dependent and occupied territories." Although participation in this committee was not unanimous, representatives of 14 of the American Republics met in Havana in 1949 and came up with a rather broad set of conclusions.

The reasons for such Latin American demonstrations of interest and concern in the status of dependent peoples, it seems to me, are basically two:

(1) the natural reaction of governments of countries which have attained sovereignty and independence from metropolitan powers and which have been exercising that independence over a considerable period of time. It is interesting to note, for example, that among the considerations upon which the Bogota Declaration was based were the following:

“Whereas:

The historical process of the emancipation of America will not be complete so long as there remain on the continent peoples and regions subject to a colonial regime, or territories occupied by non-American countries;

The ideal that inspired the epic of the independence of America will always animate our peoples and governments, united in their moral pledge to strive by all peaceful means within their power to eliminate from the continent any status of dependency, whatever its form, political, economic or juridical;

Ever since they achieved their independence, the American States have had this common objective, which has lately been defined in precise terms at the Meetings of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs, held at Habana and at Rio de Janeiro; in Resolutions condemning colonial regimes in America and reaffirming the right of the peoples of this continent freely to determine their own destinies;”

Countries which regard themselves as having not only obtained independence from colonialism, but also as having spent a considerable portion of the period since gaining independence in defending themselves against encroachments upon that independence, are not likely to take what we might regard as a purely objective attitude toward what they believe to be the right of other peoples to attain the status they enjoy.

(2) The existence and long continuation of a number of instances in which the sovereignty of a particular area or region is in dispute between one or another of the American Republics and a European country. The outstanding examples of such disputes are the following:

(a) The Belize Dispute, largely between Guatemala and the British. In this case, Guatemala insists that it was unjustly deprived of the control of the territory known to Guatemala as Belize and to the British as British Honduras, and the British just as insistently claim that territory as theirs. Various attempts have been made to bring this dispute to a satisfactory settlement, but its continued existence is an important reason why Guatemala has continually taken every opportunity to belabor the issue of colonialism both in the Organization of American States and the United Nations. This dispute is somewhat complicated by the fact that Mexico regards itself as entitled to portions of British Honduras. Although the Mexicans have not been aggressive in raising the issue, they have made it unmistakably clear, whenever it is raised, that, should there be any change in control of the territory, Mexico would demand what it regards as its share.

NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

(b) Falkland Islands—Although the British have maintained control of the Falkland's for considerably more than 100 years, Argentina has always maintained that the islands properly belong to it. As in the case of Guatemala, the existence of this dispute undoubtedly offers the principal reason for Argentina's continually demonstrated interest in raising the issue of colonialism in international forums.

(c) British Guiana—Although an arbitration award in 1897, resulting primarily from the positive position taken by the United States, presumably settled the issue of the boundary between Venezuela and British Guiana, the Venezuelan government has on occasion revived the issue. This was done most recently in connection with certain "revelations" regarding the circumstances of the original arbitration. This issue was unquestionably a factor in the general support which Venezuela has given, at least in the Organization of American States meetings, to anti-colonialism. The Resolution of the Washington Foreign Ministers meeting referred to above, was, for example, based upon a proposal of the Venezuelan Foreign Minister. It is also possible that Venezuelan interest in the neighboring Dutch Islands has affected that government's attitude on the question.

(d) Antarctica—Although the absence of population in Antarctica eliminates the "colonial" aspect of the matter, the interest of the two Latin American countries, Argentina and Chile, which are claimants to portions of Antarctica, helps to keep alive their concern regarding the entire dependent areas problem. In spite of the fact that a fairly successful tripartite agreement among Argentina, Chile and the United Kingdom, which is renewed annually, has tended to reduce irritation, there have been incidents from time to time which threatened to cause a real flare-up in relations between the Latin American countries on the one hand and the British on the other.

I. Approval of Minutes (CP M-1)

1. The minutes of the first meeting were approved as issued.

II. Future Work Program of the Working Group (CP D-1, D-1/1, D-2 and D-3)

2. The Chairman called attention to the documents which had been prepared to assist in planning the future work program of the committee. He recalled that at the first meeting the group had agreed to adopt a dual approach and consider not only specific problems but overall colonial questions as well. The Chairman asked the group to comment on the consolidated list of suggested topics (CP D-1) and the outline summary of the 1950 paper (CP D-3).<sup>1</sup> He noted that the entire 1950 paper had been retyped and would be distributed by the Secretariat.

3. Mr. Howard asked whether it would be possible to reproduce with the reprint of the 1950 paper the various statements on colonial problems by U.S. officials which were to have been appended to the 1950 paper. He also suggested that this list of statements might be brought up to date. The Chairman expressed agreement with Mr. Howard's suggestion and indicated that UND would assume responsibility for preparing such a collection.<sup>2</sup>

4. The Chairman asked for views on what approach should be taken toward overall consideration of the colonial problem, noting that CP D-3 had been prepared only as a point of departure. Mr. Stein inquired as to the purposes behind the preparation of the 1950 paper. The Chairman replied that it had been undertaken as part of a comprehensive review of colonial problems but that in view of the impasse which had resulted, it had been taken along to the London Foreign Ministers' Conference (May 1950) for information only. In response to a question from Mr. Howard, the Chairman said that certain offices in the Department had approved the 1950 paper, but that others had suggested further changes, some of a major character. Since 1950 no further work had been done on the paper.

5. Mr. Howard said that he had reread the 1950 paper and thought that it was an admirable approach to the colonial question even though there have been many new developments in the field since 1950. He suggested that most offices should have no difficulty in accepting such a paper as an overall policy statement without committing themselves on specific problems. Mr. Meeker urged that S/P be requested to do a general paper which would contain statements of policy which could be applied to specific colonial problems. Such guidance, for example, would be helpful in an attempt to reconcile the underlying conflicts referred to in Mr. Pollak's memorandum (CP D-1/1, pages 1 and 2). He suggested that it would be preferable to have this paper drafted in S/P rather than in the working group, and through such a paper guidelines could be established on what the working group should do on specific problems. Mr. Pollak expressed agreement with Mr. Meeker's suggestion, but Miss Bacon asked whether the working group would continue to meet while such a paper was being prepared. She suggested that although S/P's thoughts might be helpful, CP could still examine the general approach and type of guidance needed on the colonial problem. She concluded that the group's work program might be delayed through awaiting preparation of a paper by S/P. Mr. Meeker said that he was not suggesting that the working group delay its work on specific problems. The Chairman said that in view of Miss Fosdick's absence he would contact S/P in order to see what they planned to do with reference to a study of the colonial problem. It would then be possible for the group to decide what should be done. He expressed the belief that the various drafts which could be prepared by the offices represented on CP might be very helpful in the consideration of the overall approach which should be adopted.

6. Mr. Knight said that he would like to make some general comments on the problem of colonies since he had not been present at the previous meeting. He said that in his opinion the heart of the problem as far as the State Department was concerned had been set forth in Mr. Pollack's memorandum in which he said "in a general way we all know what our colonial policy is. . . . Our problem is that in various specific situations other factors have intruded themselves and a conflict of U.S. positions frequently results." He said that it would probably be possible for the working group to agree on a general statement of U.S. policy but that such a statement would not be too helpful. He asked whether a frank approach to the underlying differences on U.S. policy in the past would not be the most helpful step. He discussed the varying attitudes of the interested areas in the Department toward the colonial problem. On the basis of the existing situation Mr. Knight made the following comments and suggestions: (1) unless underlying differences among the interested areas of the Department have been resolved the papers produced by the working group will be pointless; (2) the papers on specific problems which are prepared must be carefully written in order that they will not be rejected, for example, by the Department of Defense. He noted that in the case of Tunisia all areas in the Department and EUR had done everything possible to push the French on Tunisian reforms. He suggested that the group might discuss Morocco as a specific case since our past course on this question had been neither "orderly nor evolutionary"; the American people should be educated on the merits of an evolutionary approach to the colonial question; (5)<sup>3</sup> at the same time we should develop a strong position that can be used in the UN and through which we will not be forced to try and outbid the Soviet Union for the support of the underdeveloped areas of the world; (6) he suggested that the 1926 Comintern paper on Communist strategy toward colonies could be used as a highly effective source of anti-Communist propaganda material; (7) finally, an effort should be made to get France to follow a line in the UN similar to that followed by the UK.

7. At this point the Chairman called upon Miss Fosdick, who had just arrived at the meeting, to comment on the suggestion that S/P draft a guide paper on the overall phases of the colonial question. Miss Fosdick said that S/P is now planning an extensive study of the colonial question but that it was not certain as to how soon a guide paper for CP could be prepared from this study since the colonial problem will be considered in relation to other major problems. Mr. Howard asked whether the S/P study would deal with action problems. Miss Fosdick said that it was primarily a projection for the next five or ten years and would probably not be too helpful for use in the next General Assembly. The Chairman asked how this study would be related to the 1950 paper on colonial problems. Miss Fosdick said that objectives would constitute one part of the S/P study but that this section would not constitute the main portion of the study. She suggested that the working group continue to move ahead on its own and noted that Mr. Sandifer and Mr. Ferguson had agreed that the group would have to work on specific problems. The Chairman said that it would be helpful if Miss Fosdick could keep the group informed on how best to proceed in light of the S/P study. Miss Fosdick said that S/P and the working group should conduct their studies independently but that she would keep the group informed.

8. Mr. Pollak said, with reference to Mr. Knight's comments that he agreed that seeking general conclusions would not be a fruitful experience since philosophical generalities would be of little help. Mr. Knight said that it was very vital that we examine the underlying elements and differences. In his view part of the trouble with the 1950 paper was that it was not properly balanced. The pro-independence elements of the papers had been over-emphasized and nothing had been included about the debit side of independence for colonial peoples. He concluded that unless we recognize the debit side our position will be so weak that it will be outweighed by military considerations.

9. Mr. Howard said that he agreed with Mr. Knight that it would be difficult to explore the various colonial problems but that nonetheless it might be possible to reach general agreement. He questioned however whether the conflict was one of semantics since, for example, we know through historical experience what "orderly evolution" is. He cited the example of the British Commonwealth as an illustration. He suggested that the examination of such examples might lead to two steps: first, the group could consider specific colonial questions; and second, the formulation of an overall program could be kept in mind as the first step was being carried out.

10. The Chairman said that he was aware that agreement on general terms would not solve the group's problems and therefore, it would be best to concentrate on specific problems. However, the idea of getting comprehensive statements of U.S. colonial policy should not be discarded in view of its helpfulness. He said that it was very important that the underlying issues of colonial policy be discussed.

11. At the suggestion of the Chairman, it was agreed that the 1950 paper should be scheduled for subsequent discussion. At that time it will be possible to see what divergencies exist and what adjustments in the paper are necessary and what new lines of investigation might be required. An attempt will then be made to reach general agreement on an overall statement.

Subject: Colonial Policy Group discussions

It is our impression that the first two meetings of the Colonial Policy Group may have narrowed the agenda problem to two chief questions: first: the relative emphasis to be given to a general policy re-examination with reference particularly to the more important specific problems (e.g., the North African) as compared with a process of combined policy discussion and application to a series of particular issues expected soon to arise in various UN organs; and second: The specific topics for discussion and their priorities under each method of approach.

In developing a work program which will be the answer to these questions, we believe it would be useful to agree rather concretely on the particular jobs the group wants to complete, thereby establishing a frame of reference for questions of emphasis and timing. We take it as self-evident that something more is expected of a group of officers widely representative of the Department and provided with the maximum secretariat and documentation assistance than the routine discussion and clearance of compromise language for position papers on matters of relatively minor importance, or the merely passive registering of important decisions taken elsewhere without prior referral for discussion and recommendation by the group. Alternative courses have, in substance, been put forward in the individual suggestions of several members of the group and we suggest that agreement might be reached that our jobs are roughly three :

1. Lay the groundwork for, and possibly complete, one or more papers supplementing or revising the 1950 study.

Comment.

Probably the most time-consuming part of this job would be working through the multitude of problems in the colonial policy field. To this end, it has been strongly urged that the group should address itself to current draft position papers and such an approach can perhaps best be complemented by the projected reconsideration of the 1950 paper and by discussion of special studies which may be submitted, such as the long-range planning paper to be prepared in S/P.

Perhaps more thought should also be devoted to raising and organizing some basic questions which colonial problems now pose for this Government, and to this end we attach a memorandum suggesting some factors and questions that seemed important to us. A copy of this memorandum has previously been given to S/P.

2. Assess and plan current U.S. efforts to bring the other administering powers into agreement on policies and programs which can commend themselves as consistent with U.S. objectives and as likely to maximize in the UN whatever good will is left for a course of "orderly" and non-rapid "evolution".

Comment.

UND and EUR might prepare a statement for the group showing what problems have been singled out for bilateral discussion and what progress has been made and can be expected.

The group would consider whether additional items or countries should be added, new approaches made, or old ones renewed. We could explore alternative methods of persuasion and could reappraise the need for a fuller understanding by us of some of the problems of the other administering authorities.

In addition to the problems which can be expected to engender most heat at the 7th GA, the group might consider what longer-range programs can profitably be discussed in this context. Increased technical assistance, educational exchange and a concerted counter-offensive to Soviet propaganda suggest themselves as useful subjects.

3. Serve as a focal point for the encouragement and formulation of concrete programs in the Point IV, VOA, educational exchange, and possibly other functional fields that can be carried on and recognized as U.S. substantive contributions to the economic and political advancement of colonial peoples.

Comment.

The interest of the functional offices has been evidenced by the attendance of several representatives at the first meetings, and work toward the objective stated might well be started at once by scheduling meetings devoted in whole or in part to a description of current programs and exploration of needs both as to areas and types of program, and possibilities for expansion, new emphasis, new approaches and increased public support.

The frame of reference offered, then, adds up to three objectives—reassessing and restating U.S. policy in particular and in general; seeking maximum understanding of an intelligent cooperation with our NATO friends to forward our own and their interest in the peaceful settlement of colonial problems in the framework of the United Nations; programming substantive economic and educational contributions to the eventual political stability and well-being of the peoples of the dependent areas.

These several lines of endeavor can probably best be pursued if they are taken up concurrently. Although there will be need for consecutive work in the several offices on the principal items in each line, referral to the group and reworking or supplementing can proceed with the focus of discussion shifting from meeting to meeting.

RE-EXAMINATION OF U.S. FOREIGN POLICY ON COLONIAL PROBLEMS

The need for re-examining our policy on the dependent areas of other nations is pointed up by several factors in the current world situation: (1) the special relationships reflected by NATO between the United States and the principal colonial powers; (2) rising nationalism in certain dependent areas, particularly in North Africa; (3) Communist political exploitation of U.S. words as against deeds in the field of colonial policy; (4) the long-range threat of political instability in the dependent areas caused by population growth coupled with increasing disparities in per capita income.

Such a re-examination would need to frame in clear and operational terms the objectives of the United States in this field. This would necessitate consideration of such factors as :

(a) U.S. interest in fostering strength and health (economic and political as well as military) in the colonial powers which are our partners in NATO and the defense of Western Europe;

(b) U.S. need for raw materials and bases in the dependent areas of colonial powers;

(c) U.S. concern with the future political orientation of the dependent areas as they evolve in the foreseeable and longer-range future;

(d) U.S. need to minimize effectiveness of Soviet propaganda aimed at winning over dependent peoples and alienating them from the U.S.;

(e) U.S. interest in preserving this country's world standing as a proponent of self-determination, democratic processes, and social and economic betterment in underdeveloped areas.

When U.S. objectives have been framed, a number of questions of policy and implementation present themselves. The significance of alternative sets of answers must be assessed in order to decide on a course that can be followed, as different immediate situations arise, in pursuit of the stated objectives. It will be necessary in establishing and carrying out policies to differentiate between dependent areas : we are obviously confronted by different problems in such disparate places as (1) Western Samoa, (2) the Cameroons, and (3) Tunisia. Some dependent areas may never reach the political stage at which the North African dependencies have arrived; others may reach it in time. The following are some of the questions of policy and implementation requiring consideration :

(a) To what extent are the strategic capabilities of the European colonial powers, in terms of European and free-world defense, enhanced, diminished, or otherwise affected by their particular colonial responsibilities?

(b) In what cases can those powers expect to succeed in the maintenance of their dependent areas by continuing to follow the policies which the metropolitan governments now envisage?

(c) What, if any, changes in those policies can help to keep events in dependent areas in the channels of evolution and prevent violent explosion?

(d) What pressures are available to the U.S. and should be employed by this Government to require such changes by the colonial powers?

(e) How much, if any, utility is there in continued reiteration by the U.S. of its well-worn generalities and clichés in the colonial field, measured in terms of whatever things we will have decided to do?

(f) Should the U.S. expand technical assistance (direct or through the UN) to all or some dependent areas, and institute programs of capital development? How much U.S. supervision should there be? To what extent should we insist on education (including adult education) as part of the programs?

(g) What steps can the U.S. take by way of information and propaganda to secure maximum support for U.S. policies among dependent peoples and elsewhere in the world? Some concrete suggestions: (i) attempt to avoid last-ditch and embittering fights in UN organs over colonial problems, and to use other media for pursuit and publicity of its dependent areas policies; (ii) appointment of individuals such as Luis Muñoz Marin<sup>2</sup> to GA delegations; (iii) a UN Dependent Areas Decennial Exposition in 1955 to advertise what is being done in those areas, and to stimulate trade; (iv) special recognition of dependent area contributions to collective security (Korea?); (v) employment of dependent area personnel in UN Secretariat; (vi) review of U.S. and UN information media, particularly radio; increased advisory activity by the Trusteeship Council and Article 73 Special Committee, on political affairs in dependent areas.

Editorial Note

The 1950 paper on United States Policy Toward Dependent Territories was circulated to the Working Group on Colonial Problems as a reprint on July 25, 1952 (Doc. CP D-8, July 25, 1952). This item was put on the agenda for the Working Group's meeting on July 29. However, at that meeting the acting chairman simply called the Group's attention to the fact that the document had been received on statements of United States officials on the colonial question, 1942-1952 (Doc. CP M-5, August 1, 1952 (minutes of July 29), lot 54 D 5, not printed). The intention at that time, never carried out, was that the document on the statements would be incorporated into the 1950 Paper.

At the meeting on August 8, Mr. Cargo (the Acting Chairman) reported that the Office of Dependent Area Affairs (UND) ". . . was anxious to discuss the overall United States policy toward colonial areas. UND has been working on a statement of broad objectives over the next four or five years. He asked that all CP members consider the utility of a statement similar to the 1950 document. He indicated that this general problem would be scheduled for discussion at the next meetings." (Doc. CP M-8, September 23, 1952 (minutes of August 8), Department of State Committee files, lot 54 D 5).

Preparations for UN General Assembly

1. The Chairman, Mr. Gerig, said that he had been following the work of CP and expressed his appreciation for the contributions the members had made.<sup>1</sup> He said that CP should begin work on a statement, perhaps several pages in length, which the Chairman of the U.S. Delegation of the UN could make to the GA on colonial problems in view of their increasing importance in the UN. Our representative in Committee IV could then elaborate on this at the beginning of the debate there and present our position in a clear and straight-forward manner. He noted that CP had concluded that the U.S. should take a middle of the road position with respect to colonial problems. Such a position will be difficult to present in a "glamorous" form. Nevertheless, the U.S. should take a more positive approach and the Delegation should "preach what we practice" in the case of Puerto Rico.

2. Mr. Allen expressed agreement that a statement of the type suggested by Mr. Gerig should be made but he warned that it would be a difficult one to prepare. He recommended that the British and French be advised of our intentions and if the statement prepared is a good one, it should be shown to them before it is presented in the UN.

[Here follows discussion of certain papers (Docs. CP D-10 and CP D-10/1, dated August 4 and August 7, 1952, respectively, "Participation of Dependent Areas in the Work of UN Organs").]

Further Consideration of U.S. Policy Toward Colonial Areas (CP D-3, CP D-7 and CP D-8)<sup>2</sup>

9. Action: It was agreed that papers relating to specific dilemmas in the colonial field should be prepared in order to provide a more realistic basis for future consideration for overall U.S. policy toward colonial areas. The assignments were as follows: UNP (Mr. Stein)—Tunisia and Morocco; FE (Miss McNutt)—Indonesia and Indo-China; NEA (Mr. Feld) Eritrea and Libya; and UND (Mr. Fowler)—South West Africa and Somaliland.

10. Discussion: The Chairman called attention to the three papers previously distributed and indicated that they might serve as a basis for preparing a new statement of U.S. policy toward colonial areas. Mr. Halle asked whether it had been agreed to use the 1950 paper as a point of departure. The Chairman said that this paper had almost completely cleared in 1950. He indicated that it had recently been reviewed in UND and most of it still seemed applicable. If the other areas agree that this is the case, then the paper might be used as the basis for preparing a new over-all statement. He noted that in the past few years a number of general principles seemed to have been accepted, e.g., the right to independence where suitable, the right of self-determination, etc. Such principles are in keeping with the historical traditions of the U.S., but they are, of course, tempered by present day considerations.

11. Mr. Halle said that he would suggest that many of the "objectives" set forth in CP D-3 are actually courses of action. Mr. Gerig said that they might better be described as political attitudes. Mr. Halle asked whether there were any conflicts with respect to these objectives. The Chairman replied that there were no essential conflicts since nearly everyone agrees on the basic goals. The essential difference is on the time factors involved.

12. Mr. Allen suggested that in addition to working on the three documents under consideration that an attempt be made to set forth an explanation of the conflicts that exist. This in turn could be used as background material in explaining, principally to the U.S. public, our position on colonial problems. Mr. Halle suggested that a listing of the main dilemmas in the colonial field might be the proper point of departure. The basic problems would then be set forth and the group could go on to a statement of overall objectives. The Chairman expressed the view that this might be a very practical way to approach the problem. With the approval of the committee assignments of

CONFLICT OF UNITED STATES POLICY OBJECTIVES IN RELATION TO TUNISIA AND MOROCCO<sup>2</sup>

Tunisia and Morocco are French Protectorates, established in 1871 and 1912, respectively. While the treaties setting up the protectorates recognize the sovereignty of the native ruler, they transferred important powers to the protecting power, including control of foreign affairs, armed forces, finance, and a dominant position in the control of land ownership and economic development. Both Protectorates have been financial liabilities to France. On the other hand, such economic development as has occurred has resulted in numerous benefits to the ever increasing number of French settlers (there are some 150,000 Frenchmen in Tunisia and 350,000 in Morocco) and a relatively small group of investors and absentee owners in France. The Tunisian and Moroccan people have derived relatively limited economic and social benefit from this development.

Nationalism has grown in strength since the end of World War II so that it now commands broad popular support in Tunisia particularly in the well disciplined Tunisian labor organizations; in Morocco the support while substantial is somewhat more circumscribed. The rise of new states in Asia (India, Indonesia, etc.) as well as the independence of the less advanced Libya fired the nationalist aspirations. In the minds of a steadily increasing number of Tunisians and Moroccans the nationalist parties offer the only means of regaining for the local inhabitants political, economic and social control of the country. Any improvement brought about by the protecting power in the lot of the local population inevitably swells the ranks of the nationalists. If no real concessions are made to the nationalists they may turn away from their present leaders to more radical elements.

For France, it is impossible either to grant its protectorates independence or ruthlessly suppress the nationalists because of the political and philosophical cleavage among the French themselves. To maintain their position as a great power and to protect the interests of the large French colony they believe that they must cling to the status quo, or a reasonable facsimile of it, as represented by the French Union. This explains why their programs for the protectorates offer a shadow of reform but retain the substance of French control. The French policy appears to be to foster political progress and stability by balancing as much as possible each concession to the North Africans by formal increase of the political status of the French colonies.

The French are convinced that any concessions to the nationalists brings them a step closer to a complete loss not only of the two protectorates but of the rest of French Africa. They believe that such a development would be a first step toward the complete destruction of the present colonial system on which so much of Europe's power and civilizing influence is based. The problem has vast domestic political implications for the French Government.

The United States has conflicting interests in the area. Our long-term traditional interest leads us to sympathize with the aspirations of dependent peoples toward independence. Our shorter range policy makes it imperative for us to support France in order to create the essential area of strength in Western Europe, the keystone of the containment arch. Strategically, North Africa would be particularly important in the event of an Allied withdrawal from Europe and bases are considered necessary in that area. We have the necessary bases in Morocco. An outbreak of violent nationalist resistance would force the French to increase their military contingent in the area at the expense of Europe, Indochina, etc. In considering French reactions to our policies on Tunisia and Morocco it should always be remembered that their stakes in the defense against Soviet Russia is at least as great, if not greater, than ours.

For the United States, the problem resolves itself into the need for a moderate middle-of-the-road policy which will neither permanently alienate the good will of the North Africans by too firm alignment with French colonial policy, nor drive the French to emotional acts of desperation by the encouragement of too rapid evolution towards independence for the protectorates.

In dealing with the North Africans it should be remembered that, while the surge of nationalism has world-wide repercussions, the power of the West, if wisely used, will induce the Moslem world to accept gradual progress towards independence, provided such progress is continuous and real.

THE DILEMMAS FOR THE UNITED STATES PRESENTED BY SOMALILAND
UNDER ITALIAN ADMINISTRATION<sup>2</sup>

THE PROBLEM

The problem is to ascertain the dilemmas for the United States involved in the question of Somaliland under Italian administration.

DISCUSSION

The disposition of the former Italian colony of Somaliland after World War II is a question in the colonial field which has found certain United States foreign policy interests in conflict with certain other United States interests. The conflicts that have arisen in this case may be summarized briefly as follows.

On the one hand, it is in the interests of the United States that the former Italian colony of Somaliland be given a stable administration by a friendly power capable of insuring its security. In view of the lack of interest in administering Somaliland among other friendly powers which would meet these qualifications, the above-mentioned United States interests were factors leading the United States to support the return of Italy to Somaliland. Furthermore, with a critical struggle being waged over the allegiance of Italy, as between the free world and the Soviet world, it was in our interests to strengthen the prestige of an Italian government favorable to the free world. This was another consideration which inclined the United States to support the return of Italy to Somaliland.

On the other hand, it is in the interest of the United States to retain the sympathy and support of the many "anti-colonial" nations in Asia, Latin America and Africa. These nations tended to support the Somali leaders and the neighboring African state of Ethiopia in their opposition to Italy's return to Somaliland. There were strong reasons therefore for the United States to sympathize with their views.

It is also in the interest of the United States that there be a strong and effective United Nations. To the extent that the United Nations fails to deal with colonial questions, such as the disposition of Somaliland, in a way favored by the majority of its members, the latter will tend to lose faith in the United Nations. It is therefore in the interests of the United States to see that the United Nations deals effectively with such problems in a way that will obtain majority support.

It was in part as a result of these conflicting interests that the United States supported the return of Italy to Somaliland for a period of ten years only and under the terms of the trusteeship agreement which provided also for a United Nations Advisory Council. The same conflict of interests affect United States positions in United Nations bodies on Italy's administration of the Trust Territory of Somaliland.

Further dilemmas confront the United States in the case of Somaliland in view of the fact that the territory must be made independent in less than eight years. The United States, therefore, tends to support recommendations in the United Nations urging the Italian administration to take more active steps in the direction of setting up responsible local government ready to take over increasing responsibilities in the near future. However, such proposals tend to encourage the more extreme dissident elements in Somaliland, such as the Somali Youth League, which not only makes difficulties for the Italian administration but increase their complaints to the United Nations in regard to Italian administration. On the other hand, blanket support of the Italian administration arouses the suspicions of the "anti-colonial" powers in the United Nations and makes us liable to the charge of encouraging the Italians to take undue advantage of their position to maintain a large corps of Italian officials in the territory, to squeeze the economic life of the territory in the interest of Italians, and otherwise to favor and perpetuate Italian interests in Somaliland.

A further dilemma confronts the United States in that proposals for improving the economic, social and educational status of the territory would require resources which go far beyond that which the territory could maintain and may need to maintain when it stands on its own feet. Thus the United States is torn between its desire to support needed developments in Somaliland, generally favored by a majority of United Nations members, and its recognition of the need for realism, a course favored by Italy and other administering powers but much less popular in the United Nations.

THE DILEMMAS FOR THE UNITED STATES PRESENTED BY THE SOUTH WEST AFRICA QUESTION IN THE UN<sup>2</sup>

THE PROBLEM

The problem is to ascertain the dilemmas for the United States involved in the South West Africa question.

DISCUSSION

The question of South West Africa, which has been on the agenda of the United Nations General Assembly since its first session in 1946, is one of the many questions in the colonial field with regard to which the United States has conflicting foreign policy interests. In this case the conflicts can be stated briefly as follows.

On the one hand, the United States is interested in retaining the friendship and close cooperation of the Union of South Africa. The Union is not only strategically located athwart the sea and air lanes between the South Atlantic and the Indian Ocean but it also has mineral and other resources of great value to this country both from a security and an industrial point of view. Moreover, the Union has the only industrial plant, army and air force of any consequence in Africa south of the Sahara, and has an air squadron fighting in Korea. Thus one set of political, security and economic interests would incline us to show our solidarity with the Union by supporting her claims in regard to South West Africa.

On the other hand, the United States is interested in insuring the friendship and cooperation of the many "anti-colonial" nations in Asia, Latin America and Africa, as well as of the emerging colonial peoples. The conflict with Soviet communism is world wide and all these nations and peoples are important to us strategically and economically. Thus another set of political, security and economic interests would incline us to support these nations, which form a majority in the UN, in their view that South West Africa should not be absorbed by the Union of South Africa but should be placed under international supervision.

As the Union is a Member of the British Commonwealth the United States, in taking a position on the question of South West Africa, must not only consider its effect on our relations with the Union but also with other Members of the British Commonwealth.

The United States is also interested in a strong and effective United Nations. We are therefore greatly concerned that resolutions of the General Assembly be accorded the greatest possible respect and be implemented to the fullest possible extent. We would thus tend to support United Nations actions vis-à-vis South West Africa. At the same time we are anxious to avoid any action by the United Nations which might lead to the withdrawal of the Union from the United Nations thereby not only weakening the United Nations but also setting a precedent of great potential danger to it. We would thus tend to seek to moderate the kind of United Nations actions toward South West Africa which would probably be favored by the majority of United Nations Members.

In summary, the need of the United States for close and harmonious relations with the Union of South Africa, the other Members of the British Commonwealth, and the large group of "anti-colonial" powers, as well as our need for a strong and effective United Nations, oblige us to take a position vis-à-vis the question of South West Africa which will reconcile these various interests to the greatest possible extent and sacrifice none of them to a serious degree. It is clear that in evaluating these various interests there must be a constant reappraisal, particularly as to how the factor of time is affecting all of these interests.

Except for the two cases of Morocco and Tunisia, the dilemma facing American foreign policy in regard to colonialism is not yet very acute in Africa.<sup>2</sup> The dilemma is posed by the necessity of weighing the relatively short-term security considerations resulting from the cold war between East and West against the longer-term policy of encouraging the orderly transition from colonial status to responsible self government wherever possible. Contrary to what may be the general impression, the United States is not faced with this dilemma to any appreciable extent in Libya, Eritrea, the United Nations Trust Territory of Somaliland under Italian Administration and South West Africa, all of which are areas in which the United Nations has taken or is taking action relative to their political status. Except for South West Africa the action has already been completed by the United Nations, although the federation of Eritrea with Ethiopia will not be officially consummated until September 11, 1952. In all four cases there is no basic conflict between U.S. security requirements and the present political status of these countries. The South West African case is a juridical and legal problem, without important security aspects. It involves moral issues for the international community of nations but this alone does not make it a matter which constitutes a security problem. The Union of South Africa's unilateral action in integrating the former League of Nations mandate of South West Africa into the Union, although admittedly a breach of international morality, can hardly be said to represent an example of the type of dilemma posed by Tunisia or Morocco. It is only in the North African areas where base rights and other strategic considerations complicate the picture that the dilemma is sharply posed.

COLONIAL POLICY—INDOCHINA<sup>2</sup>

THE PROBLEM

The United States is losing the sympathy and support of the independent countries of Asia and the Middle East through the supply of American military and economic aid to French Union forces in Indochina and the support of the Associated States. It is argued by critics that the three States are not in fact independent;—that their status within the French Union makes them little more than colonies; and that action by the U.S. in support of the French Union forces and of the three governments amounts to U.S. support of French efforts to restore a colonial control against what some have believed to be the indigenous "Nationalism" of the Communist Viet-Minh forces.

PAST SITUATION

Prior to the ratification by the French Assembly, on February 2, 1950, of the three separate agreements with Viet-Nam, Laos and Cam-

India which established those States as independent Associated States within the French Union, the U.S. extended no financial, military, economic or political advice or assistance to the French Administration in Indochina. It was our aim to avoid being involved in the re-establishment of the pre-war Indo-Franco relationship. To this end we sought to encourage the French to arrive at some modus vivendi with the area which would give recognition to the aspirations of the people for self-government. As the threat to the security of the area became more and more apparent, the need for agreement among the French and the three States was given even greater emphasis since it was our view that, in this area of growing Nationalism, the absence of such an agreement would make the area an untenable line of defense.

PRESENT SITUATION

Since the establishment of the three States as independent entities, the U.S. has vigorously pursued a policy of granting military, political and economic assistance to the three Governments and military aid to the French Union Army operating in the defense of the area.

Our motivation has been two-fold :

(a) Security:

We have sought to bolster by all practicable means, the strength of the region as a bulwark against Communist infiltration.

The importance of this area to U.S. security and the resulting necessity for the U.S. position can be seen from the following points :

1. The area is one in which conditions of actual warfare exist;
2. Military estimates agree that Tonkin is the tactical keystone to control of Indochina while Indochina is similarly the tactical entry into Southeast Asia;
3. The Viet Minh makes frequent and specific references in its own public statements to both its formal and working connections with world Communism; accordingly, it is not representative of a Nationalistic movement in its usual sense. Additionally, the threat of Communist China to the region and to Southeast Asia as a whole is of extremely serious proportions;
4. Should Indochina be occupied by Communist dominated forces, whether composed of indigenous Communists operating under the cloak of Nationalism or as a result of overt invasion from Communist China, it is doubtful if Thailand and Burma could long maintain themselves as non-Communist Governments;
5. There is no question in the opinions of qualified observers that the withdrawal of the hard core of French Union forces from Indochina in the near future would result in a collapse of the three State Governments and the early formation of Communist dominated Governments in their stead;
6. Communist domination of Southeast Asia would greatly enhance the military capability of Communist armies in other parts of the world through the accession of 70% of the world's natural rubber supply, 50% of the world's tin supply and the control over the only source of food (rice) available to feed the food deficit countries of Asia.

(b) Recognition of the Nationalism of the Area:

Concomitantly, however, we have sought to strengthen the three Governments as independent entities both as to their internal structure and as to their relationships with the rest of the Free World. To this end, we have encouraged the French to transfer increasing responsibility to the three Governments; we have encouraged any steps which would result in political, economic and social reforms within the Governments; we have encouraged the participation of the three States in international organizations; and we have urged recognition of the three States by other nations. In this connection, the three States have been recognized by over thirty nations; they belong to several organs of the UN and their applications for UN membership have been submitted.

We have noted, in this connection, that the status of the area as a part of the French Union has been defined by the French as not a rigid one and the French Minister of the Associated States stated in a press conference that the French Union is not a prison and that membership in it is voluntary.

THE UNITED STATES POSITION IN THE NETHERLANDS-INDONESIAN CONFLICT 1945-1949<sup>2</sup>

At the end of the war in the Pacific, the United States had only indirect responsibility in the Netherlands East Indies. Under a civil affairs agreement with the Netherlands, the United States had permitted the early return of Dutch colonial authorities in Netherlands New Guinea and adjacent islands as these areas were regained from the Japanese. Near the end of the war, however, Indonesia was transferred from United States command to the British Southeast Asia command and it was the British, acting as the Allied agents in Indonesia, who accepted the Japanese surrender and were left to cope with the immediate post-surrender problems involving the return of Dutch troops. British occupation troops arrived in Indonesia some six weeks after the Japanese surrender to find the Republic of Indonesia, proclaimed on August 17, 1945, apparently firmly entrenched in Java. Fearful of the reaction that an all-out military campaign to restore Dutch rule in Indonesia might produce in India and Burma, the British military command over Dutch protests dealt directly with Republican officials. Despite British efforts to avoid bloodshed, some fighting ensued. Press accounts of British action against the Indonesians served, particularly in the U.S., to focus public attention on Indonesia. On December 19, 1945 the Department of State issued a statement intended to clarify the United States position. This statement indicated that the United States could not take responsibility for the actions of the British, operating under an Allied mandate, and declared, "Our sole desire is to see such a peaceful settlement achieved as will best promote world stability and prosperity and the happiness of people."

In February 1946, in reply to a Ukrainian demand that British activities in Indonesia be investigated by the Security Council, the United States upheld the British position and suggested that any interference might jeopardize the bilateral negotiations then in progress under British auspices. The United States showed little official interest in the following year until the signing of the Linggadjati Agreement by the Netherlands and Indonesia. This agreement recognized the de facto authority of the Republic of Indonesia in Java, Madura and Sumatra, and called for the establishment of a federal United States of Indonesia. The United States welcomed the initialling of the agreement in November 1946 and, with its formal signature in March 1947, recognized the de facto authority of the Republic of Indonesia as outlined in the agreement. In the face of Dutch protests, the American Consul General was authorized to deal with Republican authorities. British troops had withdrawn from the scene in November 1946.

Negotiations aimed at implementing the Linggadjati Agreement showed little sign of success and, confronted with an imminent breakdown of the talks, the United States presented dual notes June 1947: 1) calling on the Indonesians to accept the Netherlands proposals on the implementation of the Linggadjati Agreements as offering an opportunity to form an interim government; and, 2) expressing to the Netherlands Government fear of the use of force and urging continued negotiations. Eleven days later the United States indicated to the Indonesians that economic aid might be extended to an interim government.

When these moves failed and the Netherlands initiated military action in July 1947, the United States supported the Security Council resolution of August 1 demanding a cease-fire, and on the same date the United States offered its good offices to the disputants.

This offer was refused by the Republic of Indonesia. However, a Security Council proffer of good offices was accepted and on August 25 the United States was chosen by Belgium and Australia as the third member of a three-man Good Offices Committee (GOC). The U.S. also participated in a Consular Commission appointed by the Security Council to observe the execution of the cease-fire. Meetings of the GOC were held aboard the USS Renville, offered by the United States when no other meeting place could be agreed upon.

Through the assistance of the GOC, the Netherlands and the Republic of Indonesia concluded on January 17, 1948 the Renville Agreement establishing a truce and the basis for negotiating a final political agreement. However, profound reciprocal mistrust hastened the breakdown of negotiations under the Renville Agreement in May, whereupon the United States joined Australia in pressing a compromise plan as a basis for future negotiation. Both this arrangement, known as the Dubois-Critchley Plan, and the unilateral proposal in September of Mr. Cochran, the new United States representative on the GOC, called for free elections, the establishment of a constituent assembly, representative government, and the early establishment of a sovereign USI. Following the suppression by the Republic of Indonesia of a Communist uprising in September, the United States informed the Netherlands Government that it regarded a solution along the lines of the Cochran Plan as the best way to avoid the serious consequences of failure to achieve a negotiated settlement.

At the very time the United States was in the process of obtaining a conciliatory stand on the part of the Indonesian negotiations, the Dutch on December 17 delivered an ultimatum to the GOC for transmittal to the Indonesian Republic requiring additional concessions and a reply by the following morning. The United States representative refused to deliver this message and informed the Dutch that to press for a reply would be tantamount to abandoning bona fide negotiations. On December 18 the Dutch initiated their second military action. The Republican capital of Jogjakarta was seized and most of the high Republican officials interned. Three days later, acting on the recommendation of Mr. Cochran, ECA suspended authorizations for procurement of supplies to be used by the Netherlands in Indonesia on the grounds that conditions for economic recovery did not exist. Together with Australia, the United States next took the initiative in calling the Security Council into session beginning December 22, and on January 11, 1949 the United States representative on the Security Council stated in unequivocal terms that the Netherlands had violated the Linggadjati and Renville Agreements as well as the UN Charter, and declared that the U.S. desired to see the United States of Indonesia as "one of the fully sovereign and independent peoples of the world."

On January 26, 1949 the Security Council adopted a resolution of which the United States was cosponsor calling on both parties to discontinue all military operations, calling on the Netherlands to release political prisoners recently seized and to facilitate the return of Indonesian officials to Jogjakarta, and recommending the resumption of negotiations looking to the completion of transfer of sovereignty by July 1, 1950. The GOC was dissolved and replaced by the United Nations Commission for Indonesia (UNCI) with broader powers of recommendation and supervision of the execution of the Security Council's resolutions. Membership remained the same.

After the Netherlands Government in February proposed the holding of a Round Table Conference at the Hague, the United States continued to work so as both to achieve a resumption of negotiations and to secure implementation of the resolutions of the Security Council. Finally, at the RTC itself, the United States member of UNCI played a principal conciliatory role in formulating the agreement that finally emerged on December 27, 1949 as the basis for Indonesian independence.

In reviewing United States policy during this period several conclusions emerge:

1) the primary motivating factor for United States policy was the desire to see established political and economic stability in Indonesia so as neither to drain further the weakened resources of the Netherlands in the postwar period nor to indicate disregard for the political aspirations of the peoples of Asia; 2) the sharpening of the East-West struggle from 1947 on necessitated concern lest a Western European power fall to Communism, but by the same token, the United States recognized that failure to support Indonesian nationalism might cause Indonesian nationalists to turn to the Communists for support. The clear-cut anti-Communist stand of the Indonesian Government in September 1948 made possible more wholehearted support of legitimate Indonesian claims to sovereignty, 3) first inclined to a policy of neutrality and dispassionate conciliation as a result of the above conflicting considerations, by mid-1948 United States policy turned to active support of Indonesian nationalist aspirations when confronted with the unreasonable character of Dutch direct action and the unyielding nature of Dutch demands.

AFTERMATH OF THE U.S. POSITION IN THE NETHERLANDS-INDONESIAN
CONFLICT 1945-1949

The good will for the United States that accrued in Indonesia as the result of United States support for Indonesian independence has since been dissipated to a considerable extent by a number of developments.

Important among these is the belief in Indonesian political circles that the United States did not firmly support Indonesian aspirations until after the Madiun rebellion and the second Dutch police action, and that, meanwhile, U.S. material support going to the Dutch made their military actions against the Indonesian Republic possible. This belief has led Indonesian politicians to the conclusion that what support the U.S. gave Indonesia vis-à-vis the Dutch was motivated more by fear of Communism than by regard for the justice of the Indonesian cause. In addition, Indonesia's fear of involvement in the East-West struggle and the consequent adoption of a neutral position has led to further criticism of United States foreign policy as aimed only at the containment of Communism. United States policy in both Indochina and Tunisia are cited as examples of continued U.S. support for colonial powers. To some extent, the present Indonesian attitude toward the U.S. may be due to Communist propaganda.

However, it is apparent that some reservoir of good will for the United States remains. With some reservations, U.S. aid programs continue to be acceptable to Indonesia. Individual Indonesian politicians remain privately friendly to the U.S. and to U.S. aims. Americans in Indonesia are not subject to the degree of suspicion and distrust that has attached to the Dutch. United States power continues to be respected, although not without a concomitant resentment.

On balance, it would be difficult to conclude that United States policy toward Indonesia has been successful in obtaining that country's unquestioning friendship. At the same time, the United States does retain some good will and respect in Indonesia, and it is clear that, had support for Indonesia not been forthcoming before Indonesian independence, the United States would now have little or no access to that country, other than perhaps the most formal and restricted diplomatic access. There is much vocal criticism of the United States in Indonesia and inherent suspicion of American motives but much cooperation with the United States on a non-vocal level.

The head of the Indonesian State, President Sukarno, has on several occasions stated quite frankly to the American Ambassador in Indonesia that the one significant act by which the United States could win over public opinion and be assured of public support in Indonesia, would be to give Indonesia support in the Indonesian-Dutch dispute over Netherlands New Guinea.

THE U.S. POSITION IN THE NEW GUINEA DISPUTE

Even after the successful establishment of the Republic of Indonesia, a number of thorny questions remained to be resolved between the Netherlands and Indonesia. One such question has been the disposition of Netherlands New Guinea, called Irian by the Indonesians.

At the Round Table Conference, resolution of this issue was postponed through a formula which called for the holding of a conference to determine the disposition of the area by the end of 1950. Though this conference was held, neither it nor subsequent negotiations have solved the problem. Indonesian politicians without exception demand that the area fall under eventual full Indonesian sovereignty; some few Dutch Socialist leaders are apparently willing to acquiesce to a formula that will acknowledge Indonesian sovereignty provided that Dutch interests are duly safeguarded. To date, however, they have not been able to muster sufficient strength to reverse the official Dutch position calling for retention of sovereignty. In the most recent negotiations, which were exploratory and not binding, the Dutch indicated willingness to submit the legal question of sovereignty to an international body for adjudication. Australia has been even more adamant in demanding that Netherlands New Guinea remain under Dutch administration. The Australian position, influenced by popular acceptance of the "white Australia" policy, is based on fear that Australian security would be endangered if the area were to be occupied by a weak power.

In the face of these conflicting claims the United States has consistently maintained a neutral position and insisted that the question be worked out through bilateral negotiation. At present there seems to be no solution in the offing that could satisfy Indonesia, the Netherlands and Australia, and it is possible that eventually resource will be had to the United Nations, where the Indonesian question remains on the agenda of the Security Council.

Dilemmas of U.S. Foreign Policy Objectives With Respect to Colonial Areas

2. Action: In the absence of any final conclusions with respect to the dilemmas in CP D-11, it was agreed to schedule further discussion of this paper at the next meeting of the Working Group.

3. Discussion: The Chairman called attention to the NSC Staff Study relating to North Africa and asked whether copies of the Study would be distributed. Mr. Cyr indicated that he had several copies which he could distribute to interested offices upon request and that, if necessary, additional copies could be ordered. He reported that the present draft is the fourth one and was prepared by OIR. The original draft had been prepared jointly by NFA, EUR and OIR. He expressed the view that the present draft constituted an excellent point of departure for any group concerned with the North African problem. Mr. Stein commented that the NSC Staff Study seemed to him to be a very good and fair paper and therefore suggested that this Study might provide a better basis for a discussion of the dilemmas that the U.S. faces with respect to colonial problems in North Africa. Mr. Cyr noted that the NSC Staff paper was directed more toward the long range problems involved.

4. The Chairman then requested that Mr. Stein comment on the memorandum relating to Tunisia and Morocco included in CP D-11. Mr. Stein noted that this memorandum simply suggested some of the problems that exist in these two colonies. French North Africa is unique with respect to other colonial colonies in view of the large French settlements there. In both Tunisia and Morocco the economic and social benefits derived by the Arabs have been negligible compared to those of the French colonists. A major question concerns the dynamics of nationalism in these two areas and whether it will fall and then rise again. Nationalism now seems to have wide popular support in both places although it is somewhat stronger in Tunisia. Some of the reasons for this growing nationalism have been the granting of independence to Indonesia and Indo-China, the re-organization of the Moslem League and the increasing opportunities for education among the Arabs in these areas. It seems almost certain that the spirit of nationalism will grow, and if the nationalist leaders cannot secure concessions from the French they will probably turn to more radical solutions. The more articulate groups in Tunisia and Morocco seem to feel that nationalism is the only way to secure the economic and social gains that they desire. Mr. Stein said that the basic question seems to be, as stated in the third paragraph of his memorandum, "For France, it is impossible either to grant its protectorates independence or ruthlessly suppress the nationalists because of the political and philosophical cleavage among the French themselves." He said that it was very important to determine whether French policy is directed toward the transfer of control of the colonies from Paris to the French colonists. Apparently the French believe that the granting of any concessions to the nationalists will lead to the loss of their colonies. For the U.S. the conflict with respect to Tunisia and Morocco seems to be between our long term tradition of supporting colonial aspirations for independence and the short range problem of building strength in Europe against the USSR.

5. The Chairman said that apparently some of the points set forth by Mr. Stein applied to other areas as well. One of these is the question of white minorities in such areas as Rhodesia, Kenya and Indonesia. Mr. Cyr said the white minority problem does not really apply to Morocco and Tunisia since the French may not grant complete independence to these two areas. Mr. Wellons pointed out that NIE 69, which is currently being prepared, will be of considerable help in discussing this question since it points out that North Africa is essentially a different problem from that of other areas and that it will always be closely tied to Europe for strategic and economic reasons. The Chairman asked whether this concept was generally accepted in the Department. Mr. Howard pointed out that NIE 69 defines the problems without providing a solution for it. The Chairman pointed out that although we might accept such a concept, the Arab states would never admit it.

6. Mr. Halle asked whether it would be fair to say that the U.S. is primarily interested in stable and cooperative governments. If this is the U.S. objective and it is assumed that there will be a trend toward independence for colonial areas then the U.S. should use its efforts to see that this trend is an orderly process. Mr. Allen said that he did not agree completely since part of the conflict for the U.S. is between long range and short range policy. He also questioned the wisdom of granting independence to such areas as Libya at a time when the older nations are moving toward increasing interdependence. Mr. Halle said that he was assuming that the UN and the trusteeship system look forward to eventual sovereignty for all areas. Mr. Howard pointed out that it was possible to criticize the whole nation state system but that this was not a sufficient argument for frustrating the desires of the nationalists in the colonial areas.

7. Mr. Cramer asked how strong nationalism was in French North Africa. Mr. Cyr said that a few years ago the Moroccan nationalists were supporting a system of local autonomy within the French Union but that they are now insisting on complete independence. Mr. Allen said that he considered some form of self-government inevitable for Tunisia and Morocco and so the question is how to deflect their immediate demands for independence.

8. Mr. Wellons asked whether CP would prepare a position paper on Tunisia and Morocco for use in the General Assembly. The Chairman said that it was too soon to say but that he hoped it would be possible for the Department to arrive at a common policy. Mr. Halle said that he would strongly urge that a common policy be adopted for all colonial areas. Instead of formulating our total policy on a case by case position, he said that what was needed was a policy. Mr. Cyr noted that it was evident from the discussion that it would be enough of a problem to get a decision on Tunisia and Morocco alone without lining up a policy which would apply to all areas. Mr. Wellons pointed out, however, that it should not be forgotten that North Africa really constitutes a separate case.

9. The Working Group then turned to a consideration of the Indo-China section of CP D-11. Mr. Hoey noted that the problem in Indo-China is different from the one faced in either Tunisia or Morocco but that by our actions in Indo-China we have alienated some of the Asian countries. Until 1950 the U.S. took no part in the problem of Indo-China since it was regarded as an internal French matter. Since that time we have supported the experiment. Indo-China differs from North Africa in two respects. The threat of Communism represents a serious problem and the force of nationalism is clearly recognized by the French. He pointed out that the memorandum included in CP D-11 on Indo-China simply pointed out the dilemma that we face without answering the question of whether we should adopt a different course of action with respect to the Associated States. Mr. Spalding asked whether our course in North Africa is inconsistent with our policy in Indo-China. Mr. Hoey pointed out that the support of the French in Indo-China and our support of them in North Africa actually means two different things since the French are anxious to withdraw from Indo-China. Mr. Halle said that the conflict seemed to be between long range and short range objectives. He suggested that it should be possible to determine, through an overall examination, what factors the various colonies have in common.

10. Mr. Howard asked how acceptable the idea of French Union was in Indo-China. Mr. Hoey replied that in view of the incompatibility of the Three Associated States, French Union seems to be the only practical solution. Under the circumstances it seems foolish to Balkanize the three states or to federalize them. He noted, however, that if North Africa would join the French Union it might be even more practical as a solution for Indo-China. Mr. Howard asked whether it was possible that North Africa would accept the Vietnam treatment. Mr. Cyr said that Arabs seem to feel that they cannot cooperate with the French.

11. Mr. McKay said that it was entirely possible that on the basis of the examination of colonial dilemmas the group might find that there is no "colonial question" and therefore it is impossible to have a common policy. Mr. Halle said that there are 20 different Latin American states and yet we have found it possible to adopt a common policy toward all of them. Mr. Allen noted that the Latin American countries have many more things in common than do the colonial areas. Mr. Hoey added that even in the case of the Associated States it is hard to apply a common policy. Mr. Pollak noted that one common element in Indo-China and North Africa is that the U.S. must consider French interests in connection with both areas. Mr. Halle said that nationalism vs. the support of the colonial powers is always the basic problem.

12. The Chairman said that in any statement by the Secretary of State it would seem necessary to express approval of the historical policy of encouraging trends toward legitimate self-government. He suggested that it might be possible for CP to agree that we should encourage trends toward greater federation of colonial areas where economically and politically feasible.

Editorial Note

In a meeting of the Working Group on September 5, 1952, there was substantive discussion of two items; and then only brief consideration of Doc. CP D-11, "Dilemmas of United States Foreign Policy Objectives with Respect to Colonial Areas". "It was agreed that CP D-11 would be deferred for further consideration until a later meeting of the Working Group." (Department of State Committee files, lot 54 D 5, Doc. CP M-12, October 3, 1952 (Minutes of September 5 meeting))

The September 5, 1952 meeting was the last meeting of the Working Group on Colonial Problems except one on January 9, 1953 which was convened to deal with the Puerto Rico question (see pages 1427 ff.). Accordingly, no further consideration was given by the Working Group to the problem of general United States policy toward dependent areas.

The question of the future of the Working Group was raised in September 1953. In a memorandum of September 16, 1953 to the Assistant Secretary of State for Administration (Wailes), the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Sandifer) proposed the abolition of the Working Group (ODA files, lot 62 D 225, "Working Group on Colonial Policy, 1953"). The Director of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs (Gerig) favored reactivation of the committee (see Gerig memorandum, September 21, 1953, infra).

In another connection, Gerig wrote this assessment of the Working Group on Colonial Problems in terms of problems and accomplishments: "With regard to the objective of working out a general U.S. policy towards colonial questions, the Committee did make considerable progress in identifying the various elements of the problem and in bringing together relevant documentation (including previous analyses of the problem prepared in the Department). . . ." Gerig said further: "In the course of its work the Committee served as an effective means for clearing position papers on specific colonial problems arising in UN organs. And in this task its basic purpose, namely, to recommend a clear general policy on colonial questions, became more clear although the Committee did not, in the view of most of its members, complete this task. There appeared to be general agreement, however, that in colonial questions the US, because of its relations to its NATO allies who are the principal colonial powers and also because of the necessity for maintaining the sympathies of colonial peoples as well as the sympathies of other countries such as our Latin American neighbors and the Arab-Asian bloc, was bound to follow a middle-of-the-road course." Subject: Formulating a Colonial Policy Position

As you know, we have for some years been attempting to clarify and to formulate a United States position with respect to the colonial problem, both as it affects our policy in U.S. territories and as it affects the position we should take in the United Nations with respect to the general colonial question.

Over the years we have tried to build up by an inductive process a United States position and have arrived at a description which we call "a middle-of-the-road" policy. Last year we had a Committee on "Colonial Policy" consisting of representatives of seven or eight Bureaus in the Department which did not succeed in clarifying the question very much beyond our earlier position. This Committee is still in existence but has not met in some months. The question arises whether we should not activate it again.

The change in Administration and the special interest which Secretary Dulles has displayed in the past in the colonial question affords an opportunity to re-think the question. This is the more necessary as the Secretary has himself stated that "the United States policy has become unnecessarily ambiguous in this matter". We are confronted also with the necessity of helping the new Administration find, if possible, a position which may in some respects differentiate it from the previous Administration.

It is therefore necessary for UND to go into this question again with a view to making available for top-level decision an analysis which would enable them to consider whether a different policy or a different emphasis on existing policy is needed.

I believe, therefore, that UND should immediately undertake the following steps:

1. Assemble all the relevant references to the colonial problem which Secretary Dulles has made since 1946. It would also be relevant to assemble similar statements by the President and perhaps by Ambassador Lodge. (Miss Armstrong might do this.) <sup>1</sup>

2. Assemble any important unofficial opinion or views of prominent Americans or organizations—church, labor, Negro, etc.—which might have relevance to the question. (Mr. Nosiglia and Miss Sawyer.) <sup>2</sup>

3. I believe that in the near future we should re-convene the Colonial Policy Committee in order to consult the other Bureaus as to whether further meetings would be profitable or whether any conclusions or recommendations might be drawn from previous meetings. (Mr. Robbins and Mr. Strong might explore this question, using such records of the Committee as might be useful.)<sup>3</sup>

Subject: United States Policy on Colonial Issues

Last spring, Secretary Dulles, following his journey to South Asia and the Near East, emphasized two points in connection with colonial issues.<sup>2</sup>

1. He said that our colonial policy had become "unnecessarily ambiguous" and that it would be far better to maintain a "frank and open" disposition and not to attempt as a tactical matter to keep Arabs and Asiatic countries guessing.

2. He also stressed the "orderly development of self-government", and warned that "the Kremlin uses extreme nationalism to bait the trap by which it seeks to capture dependent peoples."

The following conclusions are based on the above two points:

Obviously, we cannot support extreme colonialism any more than we can support extreme anti-colonialism since both are made to order for communist exploitation. This means that we must take a middle ground position as there is no other choice. But the trouble has been that we have been taking this middle ground position without any enthusiasm, even almost apologetically, when there appears to be no reason for such an unconfident approach. The contention is that because we must enlist allies from both sides of the colonial question, we are thereby required to carry water on both shoulders. But that is not so. The middle ground position is right because it is the only position that is always damaging to Soviet operations. This being the case, we should come out and say so and give our reasons affirmatively.

Up to the present our policy, publicity-wise, appears to be putting too much emphasis on the material as opposed to the moral approach. In so doing we overstress our NATO alliance with colonial powers which makes it look as if our traditional interest in political liberty has been weakened. It has dwelt too much on the mechanics of defense while somehow failing to get across with equal emphasis the reasons why we build for defense. Perhaps we have assumed too much that most other peoples are equally conversant with the true nature of the danger of international communism, but unfortunately many of them are not, and this should be corrected. We, therefore, should change our emphasis from the material side of defense to the moral issues behind the necessity for defense. We should emphasize not how we get defense so much as why we must have defense, why communism is so repugnant to national freedoms everywhere. After all, communism and its global objectives are the Root Evil, so we should stress first things first, after which we shall find that our policy can free itself of all of its so-called "policy conflicts" and become entirely clear.

The threat of world communism being what it is, we should stress the point that the continuing efforts of the Soviets to take over one small nation after another represents a policy which constitutes the greatest and only important road block to the ultimate achievement of a secure independence by any dependent or newly-liberated people.

With this in mind, the basic American approach to all colonial problems becomes quite simple to define. It is that :

"Ever since our own war for independence we have been traditionally dedicated to the idea of political liberty for all people. Unfortunately, this policy is now threatened by the known strategy of the Soviet Union, which is to infiltrate and ultimately stamp Kremlin control on every nationalist movement it can reach. In order to counteract this strategy the United States should—one, encourage any action which will help to decrease communist influence in colonial areas, and two, oppose any action which will help the communists to sow the seeds of discord."

In order to carry out this approach, it is suggested that our representatives take the following line in discussing colonial issues with members of the United Nations :

Our representatives should point out that the necessity to combat the infiltration of Soviet influence into colonial situations deserves top priority in every country which sincerely desires to promote constructively the independence of others. Unless this is done there can be no secure independence for any people struggling to attain their freedom, even though the threat of Kremlin control over their affairs appears to be only in the distant background.

A warning of what communist imperialism is like as seen through its "peoples' governments", is sharply demonstrated by the brutal manner in which it suppresses popular disturbances in its satellite "colonies" in Eastern Europe. Administration of this sort is colonialism in its most objectionable and repressive form. Colonialism is sometimes defined as the forcing of one nation into an inferior status by another. In that case the people of East Germany, Poland and Czechoslovakia might well be asked "just how inferior can a people get?"

Since the object of American policy is to prevent the Soviet subversion of nationalist movements and the liquidation of nationalist leaders, it should seek all the support it can gather to discourage the prolonging of overdue autonomy as well as the promotion of premature independence, because communist influence thrives on both extremes.

Our policy must be to promote orderly progress toward self-government. But "orderly progress" does not mean the kind of progress that is geared to the leisurely pace of pre-war colonial policy. It must recognize that a speed-up is necessary; that the growing intensity of nationalist movements will cut short the time which might otherwise have been used to accomplish the orderly development of dependent territories into self-governing nations. If communist agitation is to be prevented, the imperative necessity of today is to recognize and to provide outlets for popular pressures rapidly enough to stop communist-supported, extremist groups from seizing control of these nationalist movements.

While there is no common remedy for the relief of tensions which build up among peoples in widely differing stages of development, our policy in almost every case can and should be to encourage the enlargement of colonial training programs by the drafting of very greatly increased numbers of the local citizens into the various fields of education in the art of government. This, at least, will increase the size of responsible elements within the community and reduce the opportunities for extremists and communists to begin their operations.

Finally, so that our basic position on issues arising out of colonial relationships may never be misunderstood, our spokesmen should emphasize the simple formula by which we are guided. This is that we are traditionally dedicated to the idea of political liberty while the Soviets are equally dedicated to the idea of ultimate Kremlin control. Consequently, in view of the Soviet Union's known intention to take over every nationalist or independence movement it can reach, we will do all in our power to encourage any action which will decrease their influence and will oppose any action which will help them to sow the seeds of discord.

Memorandum by the United States Representative on the Trusteeship Council (Sears)

[NEW YORK ?,] September 22, [1953.]

NOTES ON UNITED STATES APPROACH TO COLONIAL ISSUES

What We Do Emphasize:

1. We say that we are opposed to Communism.

But in so doing we give the false impression that we are more concerned about fighting Communism than promoting healthy nationalism as it emerges into self-government.

2. We say that we are opposed to extremism in any form—colonial or anti-colonial.

We state almost apologetically that we must be for a middle ground—compromise-policy in order to try and keep the free world together.

The feeling seems to be that because we must have allies on both sides of the colonial question, we are thereby required to carry water on both shoulders.

3. We take the material as opposed to the moral approach and talk too much about how we are going to get defense, rather than why.

We over-advertise our obligations under our NATO alliance with the colonial powers.

What We Should Emphasize:

1. What we should emphasize is that we are historically wedded to the principle of political liberty for all, and that we are so devoted to the aspirations of all constructive nationalist movements that we will do everything within our power to prevent them from being captured or distorted by the tactics of international Soviet imperialism.

We ensure freedom for tomorrow by blocking Communism today.

2. What we should emphasize is that we are for orderly progress towards self-government as disorderly progress leads directly to Communist exploitation.

By orderly progress we do not mean the kind of progress that was geared to the leisurely pace of pre-war policies.

We should recognize that a speed-up is necessary; that the growing intensity of nationalist movements will cut short the time which might otherwise have been used to accomplish the orderly development of an earlier day.

3. We should play up the moral approach by pointing out why the free world must have protection against Communist aggression and infiltration.

We should press the point that the ultimate achievement of lasting liberty for dependent or other

What We Do Emphasize:

This makes it look as if our traditional interest in political liberty has been weakened.

In other words, we dwell too much on the mechanics of defense instead of the human reasons behind the necessity for defense.

What We Should Emphasize:

newly-liberated people can never be attained unless the free world can protect itself against the spread of international Communism which proposes to stamp out Kremlin control on every nation it can subvert.

Take, for example, our Air Force bases in North Africa. We should explain at every opportunity that these bases are just as essential to the survival of the Arabs and their institutions as they are to the United States and its institutions.

Editorial Note

Two basic public statements of United States colonial policy were made in the autumn of 1953: one by Secretary of State Dulles entitled "The Moral Initiative", in a speech before the Congress of Industrial Organizations at Cleveland, Ohio on November 18, 1953 (Department of State Bulletin, Nov. 30, 1953, pp. 741-744); the other by Henry A. Byroade, Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian and African Affairs, entitled "The World's Colonies and Ex-Colonies: A Challenge to America", in an address made before the World Affairs Council of Northern California at Asilomar, California, on October 30, 1953 (ibid., November 16, 1953, pp. 655-660). Both statements reflected the concern of the new Administration with "communism—the new colonialism", indicated by Sears.

In his speech of November 18, the Secretary of State placed his discussion of the colonial question in the setting of a general discussion of United States foreign policy. There were three main areas of global struggle between liberty and despotism: the home front, the free-world front and the captive-world front. "On the free-world front the colonial and dependent areas are the field of dramatic contest. Here the policies of the West and those of Soviet imperialism come into headlong collision." Dulles developed quickly the theme that it was inevitable that the 19th-century colonialism of the Western Powers "would be transitory and self-liquidating"; but that international communism in mapping a strategy for world conquest had "hit on nationalism as a device for absorbing the colonial peoples." As a result the Western Powers including the United States were faced with "a task of infinite difficulty and delicacy" in responding to the rising tide of demands by colonial peoples for independence. "There are some who, having just gained political independence, already stand close to losing it in the way the Communists planned. Some non-self-governing peoples, if they won today what the extremists demand, would find that they had fallen into the Communist trap." To those who might feel that the United States was exercising too much restraint in its colonial policy the Secretary of State responded that "Zeal needs to be balanced by patience." He cited three examples of "orderly evolution" from colonial status to independence—Indochina, the Sudan, and the Philippines—"despite the obstacles that communism has created".

The Byroade speech of October 30, 1953 was devoted in its entirety to the United States attitude on the colonial question. In the introductory section of his lengthy talk Byroade briefly described and quickly established the legitimacy of demands of dependent areas of the world for freedom from foreign domination—"Western colonialism of the old type". He then rang the alarm-bell. Just at this time when the 19th-century colonial order was disappearing a new form of imperialism had "begun to extend a clutching hand to every quarter of the globe. I am referring to the new Soviet colonialism. This new colonialism is more subtle and more poisonous than the old, because it often masquerades under the guise of nationalism itself. . . ." The whole thrust of the lengthy speech that followed was to establish the valid conditions for United States colonial policy, for the withdrawing colonial powers, and for the peoples of the emerging new nations, to make "the real choice today" which "lies between continued progress toward self-determination and surrender to the new Communist imperialism." It was the well-established policy of the United States that all colonial peoples should be assisted in an orderly and resolute manner to attain self-government or independence under circumstances which would enable them to maintain their independence on an equal basis with the free nations of the world. This policy reflected a deep-rooted feeling on the part of the American people against alien rule of any people against its will. Byroade listed five considerations as to why in the United States interests the progress of dependent areas toward independence should be orderly and evolutionary: (1) Hasty withdrawal of the colonial power would invite internal disorder and external aggression, (2) the United States wanted independence to be real and to endure, (3) independence would not automatically be a "cure-all" for the perplexing problems of Asia and Africa, (4) the strength and stability of certain European nations—the colonial powers, "our allies"—would be adversely affected by a disorderly retreat from imperial status, and (5) it was important that the political development of the emerging nations be sufficiently advanced so that they would be able to assume the burdens of statehood in their responsibilities toward the international order. Byroade devoted a large part of his speech to the application of these general principles of United States colonial policy to specific problems confronting the colonial powers and/or the United States in Africa south of the Sahara and in French North Africa. Finally he noted the dilemmas confronting United States policy in the Near East and South Asia, as observed by himself and the Secretary of State in the personal visit of Secretary Dulles to 13 countries of the area in May 1953 (for documentation on the Dulles trip to the Near East and South Asia, see volume IX) and as commented upon by Dulles after his return: "When disputes arise between the Eastern nations and our Western allies, we often find ourselves in sympathy with both sides." He cited the intractable Suez dispute between Egypt and Britain as an example. "In all differences of this nature, our fundamental problem is to lessen suspicion and encourage agreement between the Eastern and Western powers. By every word and action of our Government, we should make it clear that the old colonial relationship is dead and that it will stay dead. At the same time, we should encourage a better understanding of the possibilities inherent in a new relationship based on voluntary cooperation among independent nations." Earlier, in the context of his remarks about the situation in French North Africa, Byroade had put it somewhat more matter-of-factly: "It is no secret that these problems confront America with a dilemma. The present situation therefore calls frankly for a middle-of-the-road policy which will permit us to determine our position on practical issues on their merits as they arise. . . ."

Editorial Note

The underlying issues of colonial policy with which the United States was confronted at the United Nations were many and complex and rarely arose in a generalized context in which a question of general policy was readily recognizable or applicable; further, these issues almost never impinged upon an immediate and vital interest of the United States. Necessarily then, the thrust of the documentation here has been selective and illustrative rather than comprehensive and inclusive. Within the overall purpose of showing how United States policymakers viewed the issues and what they regarded as the available options, the documentation specifically centers on three main foci: Issues (1) raised for the most part on the initiative of other governments in diplomatic exchanges with the United States; (2) which loomed more prominently in United States consideration at a particular point in time of the on-going history of the issue; and (3) which came to focus in a particular organ or committee of the United Nations (the Trusteeship Council, the Ad Hoc Committee on Factors, the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories, the Committee on Administrative Unions, Committee IV of the General Assembly, and the General Assembly itself). Such issues and United States policies relating thereto were definable in the limited format of an instruction to the United States Delegation concerned. Generally there is no account here of legislative proceedings at the United Nations, nor of the United States role therein, such information being already in the public domain.

FOURTH COMMITTEE

A. THE ISSUE OF COLONIALISM

The general issue of colonialism has become an issue as dominant in the United Nations as the East-West conflict. A large majority of the members—in fact, all the members outside Western Europe, the old Commonwealths [sic] and the U.S.—have a strong tendency to vote against “colonialism” and for “self-determination” or “independence” whenever these issues are posed. A small but vociferous group of countries—at the Sixth Session Egypt was by far the most active—which have strong emotional feelings against “colonialism”, activate the large latent anti-colonial majority; Pakistan, India and Egypt are now pushing forward their rival efforts to organize it as a continuing tactical group under their leadership.

It must be anticipated that colonial questions will continue to be a major issue in the General Assembly for the foreseeable future and certainly an increasingly contentious subject for the immediate future. The colonial question in the General Assembly, initially largely confined to Committee Four and in special cases to the First Committee and the Ad Hoc Political Committee, has by now spilled over into other main Committees; for example, the Third Committee in the question of self-determination and the "colonial application" clauses, and the Second Committee in the question of an Economic Commission for Africa. However, it is in Committee Four, concerned with Trusteeship and Non-Self-Governing Territories, that colonial issues are constantly considered and the political tensions surrounding the "colonial problem" are continually evident.

B. FUNDAMENTAL SPLIT IN THE FOURTH COMMITTEE

Since the first session of the GA, the Fourth Committee has tended to divide on practically all questions into two groups—a small minority of powers administering trust territories or non-self-governing territories (7 states not including the U.S.) and the overwhelming majority of non-administering powers. The latter group is motivated by strong anti-colonial sentiment which has come to increasingly strong expression, and has held almost the entire initiative in determining the program and proceedings of the Committee. These two groups are attracted to opposite poles on five essential points:

1. The non-administering powers generally believe that colonialism in any form should be eliminated. The administering powers, however, start from the premise that one or another of the dependence relationships may, according to circumstances, still be useful or necessary.
2. Many of the non-administering powers maintain that the United Nations has the sovereignty or at least shares the sovereignty over trust territories. This is denied by the administering powers, who, however, do not claim sovereignty for themselves.
3. The non-administering group generally contend that there can be no final change in the status of non-self-governing territories under Chapter XI without General Assembly review and perhaps even revision. The administering powers, in general, reject this view.
4. While the majority of non-administering powers maintain that independence is the only acceptable goal for colonial territories, the administering powers see other alternatives; e.g., unity within the French Union, voluntary membership in the British Commonwealth, or statehood in the case of the United States.
5. Many of the non-administering powers contend that independence should be promised within a fixed term of years, if not immediately; the administering powers maintain that the desirable date of independence cannot generally be determined in advance.

In this situation the United States has, in practice, evolved a middle position between the extremes and has sought to develop a sizeable group of states which would also take a moderate position with respect to the various colonial issues. In this effort, the United States is assisted materially by the fact that the views of the members of the United Nations on colonial issues are diverse. The members of the administering and non-administering groups by no means share a common viewpoint, nor do they vote identically on specific issues arising in the Fourth Committee. Among the administering powers, general positions range all the way from "ultra-conservative" to "moderate" or "liberal". In the non-administering group, there is a similar graduation ranging from "moderate" to "extreme". Thus, a moderate force exists potentially in the Fourth Committee. It is comparable in many respects to the "independent vote" in politics. It may on occasions support even the conservative administering powers, or, it may sometimes support the more extreme members of the non-administering group, but it constitutes a hard core about which a moderate position, between the two extremes, may be formulated and adopted in the Fourth Committee at the expense of more extreme proposals. While the composition of the moderate group may vary from time to time and on particular issues, it is clear that the following states are among those which normally take middle ground positions on colonial questions: Among the administering group—the United States, Denmark, and New Zealand; among the non-administering group—the Scandinavian states, Luxembourg, Iceland, Greece, Turkey, Canada, Thailand, the Dominican Republic, Peru, and certain other Latin American states.

C. U.S. RECORD IN VOTES

If all Committee Four resolutions approved during the Sixth Session of the General Assembly are taken into account, it is apparent that on almost every question the U.S. was able to support or to abstain on the action taken by the General Assembly. It should be noted that the U.S. participated in the sponsoring of only two of these resolutions. The U.S. Delegation, both by statements in the Committee and by informal talks with the sponsors of numerous other resolutions, was able to persuade the sponsors to accept changes which improved their resolutions. As a result, in its votes on Committee Four resolutions the Delegation opposed only two proposals which were approved by the Assembly. These were as follows:

- (1) The paragraph in the resolution on administrative unions affecting trust territories providing for the establishment of an ad hoc committee to give preliminary examination to the special report of the Trusteeship Council on administrative unions; and
- (2) The paragraph in the resolution on organization and methods of functioning of the visiting missions recommending that, whenever necessary to appoint to visiting missions members other than representatives sitting on the Trusteeship Council, the Council consider inviting UN Members who are not members of the Council to nominate suitably qualified persons.

After the failure to eliminate the foregoing objectionable portions of the resolutions in question, the U.S. voted against the administrative unions resolution and abstained on the visiting missions resolution. The only other resolutions on which the U.S. Delegation abstained were the following:

(1) The Fourth Committee resolutions granting hearings to representatives of the indigenous peoples of South-West Africa and their spokesmen.

(2) The resolution on attainment by the trust territories of the objective of self-government or independence (which invited the administering authorities of the trust territories to report on the period of time in which it was expected that the trust territories would attain self-government or independence.)

(3) Part (b) of the resolution on the question of South-West Africa reaffirming that the normal way of modifying the international status of South-West Africa would be to place it under the International Trusteeship System in accordance with the provisions of Chapter XII of the Charter.

D. SIGNIFICANT TRENDS IN COMMITTEE FOUR

It is possible that the foregoing evaluations, based wholly upon U.S. votes on General Assembly resolutions which were actually put to the vote, may give an overly optimistic picture of the degree to which the discussion and actions of the Fourth Committee accorded with the interests and desires of the U.S. In the first place, the U.S. voted affirmatively on a number of resolutions which we would have preferred not be brought to a vote because of embarrassment to our Allies or because we do not consider helpful additions to the UN machinery and procedures. Moreover, there is no doubt that a deepening of the cleavage between the administering and non-administering members of the Committee occurred during the session. We were less successful than before in moderating the conservative approach of some administering countries, particularly the French, Belgian, British and Australian delegations, as well as the extreme approach of some of the administering group. The extremism of the anti-colonial majority increased measurably. The more radical members expressed their objective more clearly and sharply as being the grant of independence to non-self-governing areas rather than the improvement of conditions and the increase of autonomy. South Africa's refusal to carry out the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on South-West Africa added to the truculence of this group. When the Western powers, including the U.S., opposed the consideration of the Arab complaint concerning Morocco, the same issue broke out in aggravated form in the Committee Four debate at various points.

Experience even before the Sixth Session had shown clearly the settled technique of the anti-colonial majority of using the debates in the Fourth Committee to maintain a steady pressure against the administering powers toward an undefined or vaguely defined objective of "freedom" or "independence" for these territories. One major field of application of this increasing pressure on the administering powers is the gradual development of machinery, in addition to the Trusteeship Council, for passing judgment on the actions of the administering powers not only in the trusteeship field but in the field of reports from non-self-governing territories under Chapter XI. Year by year the machinery in this field has been increasing. This year the Assembly added two new bodies, a Committee on Administrative Unions and a Committee on the Factors to be Taken into Account in Determining Whether a Territory is or is not Non-Self-Governing. These bodies, like the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories and the South West Africa Committee, are inter-sessional bodies.

During the sixth session the majority in the Committee also pressed ahead with other forms of pressure. They extended the practice of hearing directly from inhabitants of territories under consideration in the Fourth Committee itself. In the case of South West Africa the attitude of South Africa gave great provocation for this. However, the Committee not only declared its intention to hear chiefs of the Herero tribes—and even before any other action had been taken—but they have heard the Rev. Michael Scott on two occasions and the challenge to this practice by South Africa may in fact encourage the extension of it in the future. The Committee also passed resolutions looking toward the adoption of continuing arrangements for confronting the representatives of administering powers in the Trusteeship Council and in the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories with representatives of the indigenous inhabitants. Although the temper of the anti-colonial group in the Fourth Committee was greatly aggravated by the particular conditions that existed at the time, it must be assumed that the majority will in following sessions continue its pressure and move ahead from the positions achieved at this session, in the same direction.

The reaction of the principal administering powers to these developments was to increase the rigidity of their attitudes and, in general, to state or imply that the end of their patience and of their collaboration had about been reached. All of them, with the exception of Denmark, adopted a more uncompromising attitude than the United States. This is revealed in the voting record alone. The voting record of the administering powers on seventeen Committee Four resolutions approved by the Sixth Assembly is as follows:

	Yes	No	Abstentions
United States	12	2	3
Denmark	13	1	2
Netherlands	8	4	5
France	6	6	5
United Kingdom	6	4	7
Australia	6	3	8
New Zealand	6	3	8
Belgium	3	7	6

Many of the administering powers, not including, however, the U.S., were ready to walk out of the Fourth Committee if a resolution affirming the right of the Fourth Committee to discuss political conditions within the Chapter XI territories was adopted. Only superb conciliation moves behind the scene averted the adoption of this resolution and a consequent walk-out. Even so, members of the French Delegation in the Fourth Committee absented themselves during the discussion of the issue, which had its origin in speeches by various representatives on conditions in French Morocco.

E. U.S. ROLE

The GA is the forum in which the issue of colonialism is most dramatically presented to the world. Although the U.S. is not subject to the same criticisms as are the other administering powers it is, after all, an "administering authority" with not insignificant territorial responsibilities. For this reason alone the U.S. cannot completely associate itself with the anti-colonial majority in Committee Four. As indicated above, we have sought to maintain a middle position between the extreme members of both groups.

In consequence, the U.S. has attempted, through advance consultations and tactics in the GA, both to moderate the anti-colonial majority and to loosen up the rigid opposition of the administering powers. In 1951, our consultations with other governments were far more extensive than ever before, including all regions except the Soviet bloc. However, experience in the recent GA creates doubt as to whether many votes were altered by these consultations. This is probably due, at least in part, to the circumstances which aggravated the consideration of Fourth Committee questions at the very beginning of the session. Our experiences with non-administering powers shows clearly that, even though their delegates in the Fourth Committee do a great deal of "free wheeling" and spontaneous production both of speeches and resolutions, their governments generally support the anti-colonial trend in the Fourth Committee itself and will back-up even extreme positions taken by their representatives.

In the Fourth Committee, we attempt to play a conciliating role in the formulation of resolutions. We attempt to secure such modifications of majority resolutions as will enable ourselves, in the light of our substantive and political interests, and as many administering powers as possible to vote for them. We try to moderate the stand of the administering powers. On a given issue we seek to bring together a group of moderate states sufficient in size to ensure the adoption of reasonable resolutions or, as has been done on occasion, to prevent by the two-thirds rule the adoption of unreasonable or extreme resolutions. These tactics have been thus far relatively successful, having regard to the composition of the Committee. They have thus far prevented a breakup of the Committee, and, up to the present, have largely avoided for us the stigmas attached to "colonialism" by most UN Members.

However, the sixth session showed that a crisis may be near concerning the whole work of the Fourth Committee. The majority is clearly bent on pressing forward further and faster. The administering powers are at the point of refusing cooperation. It is evident that we face formidable difficulties in the Fourth Committee in maintaining, at even the standards of past performance, a program which will be on the whole moderate in its results and an atmosphere which will permit the continued cooperation of the administering powers in the work of the Committee.

F. CERTAIN CONCLUSIONS REGARDING U.S. PARTICIPATION IN COMMITTEE FOUR

It is clear that the colonial problem as a whole is fast developing into a major international issue in which U.S. interests and relations with the rest of the world are vitally affected. While the ability of the U.S. to control this issue will vary from case to case, the position of the U.S. and the manner in which it exerts its influence will affect United States interests with respect to the colonial powers, the non-colonial world, our own territories and the UN as an organization. By mustering considerable effort, we managed to defeat the Arab request for considering the Moroccan item at the last session; the same thing was done concerning the Tunisian item in the Security Council. But a strong majority is determined to secure a hearing for the anti-colonial case in these and other areas. Even at the sixth session, the Moroccan problem and the other anti-colonial problems detracted considerably from the emphasis which we wished to give to East-West issues. It is quite possible that, at subsequent sessions, such anti-colonial issues may displace East-West issues at the center of the stage. Many countries—such as Iran—which have political independence have retained a degree of economic subservience to the UK, France or the U.S. and in future cases of friction such countries will find it expedient to appeal to the "colonial" issue.

On the basis of the factors which have been set out in this paper, the United States seems destined to continue to play a middle role, between extreme positions on colonial issues, both in the UN as a whole and in the Fourth Committee. The following conclusions regarding U.S. participation in Committee Four assume the continuance of this middle position:

1. The positions taken by the United States Delegation in the Fourth Committee on specific questions should be based on a comprehensive view of U.S. requirements and interests rather than on an effort merely to conciliate opposing viewpoints. Normally, however, this will place the U.S. in a middle position and will, as a result, prevent the U.S.

from being completely identified with either the extreme administering or non-administering group.

2. The efforts which U.S. delegations have made in previous Assemblies to develop a sizeable, moderate group of states on the various issues which have been presented should be continued and intensified. At best, such a moderate group can determine the action which the Committee will take. Failing that, it may be able to prevent extreme or unreasonable action.

3. Every effort should be made to ensure that the U.S. position on colonial issues is made clear both publicly and in consultations with other Members. To this end strong emphasis should be placed on statements of our position on the substance of issues, and situations in which U.S. positions can only be inferred from U.S. votes should be avoided. While it is difficult to imbue middle-of-the-road positions with "glamour" or drama, some initiative and leadership can be secured by taking a strong, plainly and fully explained position which will serve as an alternative attraction to extreme negativism on the one hand or irresponsible radicalism and innovation on the other.

4. Despite the fact that the results of pre-Assembly talks with administering and non-administering members have not been as satisfactory as we have wished, we should continue and even extend these talks in the future. We should ensure that a proper balance is maintained in these consultations so that neither group will feel that it is neglected or regarded as secondary importance, so that the U.S. will not be completely identified with either group. Careful consideration should be given to the more suitable method of carrying out consultations both prior to the Assembly and during Assembly sessions. In discussions with both groups we should continue to emphasize our hope that expressions of view and proposals for action on these issues, which understandably arouse sentiment and emotion, will be moderate and responsible and look toward the preservation of an atmosphere in which constructive action can be taken.

5. Our present policy of stressing the importance of the continuing activities of the Trusteeship Council and the Committee on Information From Non-Self-Governing Territories is well advised and should be firmly adhered to. We might develop even further the line that the effective operation of the Charter system requires that the General Assembly not interfere with the work and decisions of the Trusteeship Council except on the really major issues.

6. As one tactical device, we should try to establish definitely the principle that questions relating to Chapter XI are "important questions" and subject to the two-thirds majority requirement pursuant to Article 18, paragraph 2 of the Charter. Although most of the precedents are in this direction, practice has not been entirely uniform.

7. In some cases, consideration might be given to referring appropriate contentious issues to the International Court of Justice for advisory opinions. A case in point might be the question of the compatibility of administrative unions involving trust territories and adjacent colonies with the provisions of the Charter and the trusteeship agreements.

8. Continued study should be given to methods of restricting the influence of the Secretariat among non-administering delegations. The use by the Secretariat of these delegations to put forward speeches and resolutions as a means of promoting contentious Secretariat policies in the colonial field should be appropriately discouraged. As on all other issues, the services of the Secretariat on matters relating to the critical colonial field should be impartially rendered.

9. In determining U.S. positions on issues arising in the Fourth Committee we should, in every instance, give consideration to the desirability of the United States taking the initiative by introducing, "planting" resolutions or ideas.

10. Where advisable, major questions in the colonial field should be assigned to Committee Four as a means of forcing a concentration on significant issues rather than on the details of the operation of the Trusteeship Council and the Committee on Information From Non-Self-Governing Territories.

11. In view of the fact that colonial questions are discussed in a number of committees of the Assembly, careful coordination is required by the Assembly Delegation in order to ensure that there is identity of policy in the various forums of the Assembly and that the tactics in the various committees are mutually adjusted to accord with U.S. objectives. An important discussion or vote in Committee Three on self-determination can readily affect a decision taken shortly thereafter by Committee Four.

Subject: General French Attitude toward Colonial Questions in the United Nations; Issues arising in the forthcoming session of the Trusteeship Council.

Participants: Mr. Gabriel van Laethem, Second [First?] Secretary, French Embassy
Mr. J. Jefferson Jones, III, UND
Mr. Benjamin Gerig, UND
Mr. William I. Cargo, UND

At his request Mr. van Laethem called on Mr. Gerig yesterday afternoon (February 14, 1952) to discuss certain questions on the agenda of the forthcoming session of the Trusteeship Council.<sup>1</sup>

Mr. van Laethem began with a lengthy statement of his views regarding what he called the deterioration of the position of the West in Africa, the gist of which was as follows: The actions of the General Assembly, and in particular the attitudes of the Soviet, Arab, and Latin American blocs, are seriously undermining the position of the colonial powers in Africa. The granting of independence to Libya was the first unfortunate step in a chain of events which might eliminate the strategic control of the West over Africa and imperil the success of the defense measures which are being undertaken in Europe. In five years the French possessions in Central Africa, which were now peaceful, might be brought to the same situation as the North African territories. The few native leaders in African territories found it impossible to resist the temptation of possible future participation in the United Nations as representatives of independent states and, encouraged by the Arab states, were therefore unwilling to compromise or listen to reason on political issues. If the present course were to continue, a large number of new African states might be expected to arise.

Forthright leadership was required to arrest these trends in Africa. Nothing could be done with the Soviet bloc in the United Nations and little could be done with the Arab bloc. But much might be accomplished by appropriate approaches to the Latin American states. Only <sup>1</sup> This was the Tenth Regular Session of the Trusteeship Council which met at New York Feb. 27-Apr. 1, 1952. Unpublished documentation for this session is in Department of State central decimal file 350 and in the files of the Reference and Documents Section of the Bureau of International Organization Affairs (hereafter cited as "the IO files"). The Position Book made up for the U.S. Delegation to this Session was based directly on the projected agenda and is filed under file no. 350/2-2752. the United States could do this effectively. The United States, he thought, should emphasize general security and political arguments, as the French had found from their experience on the Moroccan question<sup>2</sup> that the Latin American Governments would respond to these. The French could make the task of the United States much simpler by the formulation of their objectives in Africa on a much more comprehensive and clearer basis than had been done heretofore. Essentially, this would be an explanation and extension of the theory involved in the French Union, which had never adequately been clarified to the world. The United States should exert leadership to achieve a change of direction in Africa, and in the speeches of State Department officials and in the relations of the Department with the press great stress should be laid upon the accomplishments of the colonial powers and the substantial investments which the United States has made in recent years in the development of African territories.

In the course of his comments, Mr. van Laethem said that the colonial powers were being victimized by the distorted use of terms such as "colonialism", "autonomy", and "independence". He remarked that "we can't be the accused forever" and said that instead of "colonialism", stress should be placed on what colonial administration actually has become. Instead of "autonomy", emphasis should always be placed on the Charter objective of "political advancement", and instead of "independence", the colonial powers must stress the trend of the world toward inter-dependence. On this point he observed that just at the time when the French were in the process of giving up their independence in Europe—a lesson learned in the course of some centuries of bitter experience—the great cry in Africa was to establish independence for many small entities. He felt that the people of Africa should be forced to profit by the hard-earned experience of Europe as regards the inter-dependence of peoples. He also observed in this same connection that the British political conceptions in Africa were "out-moded", making particular reference to the recent constitutional developments in the Gold Coast.<sup>3</sup>

Mr. Gerig said that Mr. van Laethem's analysis was very far-reaching indeed, and certainly merited careful thought. He asked whether Mr. van Laethem had any details as to plans for the future development of the territories in Africa, and also whether the French expected to integrate their planning with the United Kingdom, for example, in such areas as West Africa. Mr. Jones asked whether Mr. van Laethem had any further information as to the scope of the planning which he envisaged. Mr. van Laethem made no specific reply to these inquiries.

Mr. van Laethem then referred to a number of resolutions on trusteeship matters adopted by the recent General Assembly which will be considered by the Trusteeship Council. He said that the resolutions on petitions, on the visiting missions, and administrative unions required study to find ways of minimizing possible difficulties. He described the resolution on the closer association of the indigenous inhabitants of trust territories in the work of the Trusteeship Council as "dangerous", and the resolution suggesting that the administering authorities formulate estimates of the time in which it is expected to achieve the objective of self-government or independence as "bad but not acute".

Mr. Gerig said that we were in the process of formulating our positions on these and other matters and that, while considerable attention had been given to them already in UND, final positions had not been taken by the Department. Mr. Cargo expressed the view that not much difficulty should be encountered in the Trusteeship Council on the resolutions dealing with petitions, visiting missions, and administrative unions. He assumed that the Council would proceed to establish a standing committee on petitions, as suggested by the General Assembly, with power to meet between sessions. However, as this committee could undertake only a preliminary examination of petitions, as the Assembly resolution noted, the Trusteeship Council would take final action on petitions as at present. The difficulties with regard to the administrative unions resolution would be expected to arise in connection with the meeting of the newly established Assembly committee on that subject rather than in the Trusteeship Council.

With regard to the resolution dealing with the closer association of the indigenous inhabitants in the work of the Trusteeship Council, Mr. Gerig stated that he did not consider it possible to establish any kind of "dual representation" in the Trusteeship Council and that this would run counter to the spirit in which the trusteeship arrangements had been established. He felt that this was a complex problem involving the local administrations, and observed that we had not yet considered the question in detail with the Department of the Interior which administers the Trust Territory for which the United States is responsible. He said, however, that it might be possible for the Council, after consideration of the Assembly resolution, to invite administering authorities, wherever practicable, to attach representatives of the indigenous population to their delegations to the Trusteeship Council. He pointed out that the French and the British had both taken steps of a comparable nature in connection with their delegations to the General Assembly. Mr. van Laethem again expressed the concern felt in Paris about indigenous participation in the Trusteeship Council, setting forth views expressed previously to the Department by the French Embassy when this matter was under discussion in the General Assembly.

Mr. van Laethem inquired as to the views of the Department on the Ewe question. Mr. Gerig again said that the Department had not finally determined its position, but that tentatively the view was that the inquiry into the Ewe problem<sup>4</sup> would be best and most economically carried out by the regular visiting mission rather than by a special mission. He emphasized that the time factor was of importance if it were to be done by the regular mission which would have to make the visit in time to complete its survey and prepare its reports before the Eleventh Session of the Council. Mr. van Laethem also asked whether the Department had any views concerning the composition of such a mission. Mr. Gerig said that it seemed to him that Mr. Ryckmans, because of his experience in Africa and for other reasons, would be a useful member of such a mission, if he could be prevailed upon to go.

Subject: Belgian attitude toward certain Assembly resolutions relating to Non-Self-Governing Territories

Participants: Ambassador Silvercruys—Belgian Embassy
Assistant Secretary Hickerson }
Mr. Benjamin Gerig }UNA
Mr. Ward Allen—EUR

At his request, Ambassador Silvercruys called upon Mr. Hickerson today to say that Foreign Minister Van Zeeland had requested him to convey to the Department the views of the Belgian Government in regard to the attitude adopted by the United States Delegation on the adoption of various resolutions introduced in the Fourth Committee of the last Assembly dealing with non-self-governing and trust territories.

The Ambassador said that his Government had noted "with surprise" that on several of these resolutions the United States Delegation had voted in favor, or at most had abstained, whereas the Belgian Government took "strong exception" to several of these resolutions and thought they were harmful and even dangerous.

There were five resolutions in particular which disturbed the Belgian Government, namely: (1) the resolution regarding participation of non-self-governing territories in the work of the Special Committee on Information under Article 73(e); (2) the resolution on the revision of the Standard Form which tended, he said, to require the submission of political information; (3) the resolution calling for the setting up of a standing committee on Petitions to meet, if necessary, between sessions of the Trusteeship Council; (4) the resolution regarding the attainment of self-government or independence by the trust territories at a particular date; and (5) the resolution on the participation of indigenous inhabitants of the trust territories in the work of the Trusteeship Council.

It was a matter of regret, he said, to the Belgian Delegation at the Assembly that the representatives of the United States "sided with the Delegates of nations which have little responsibility in the matter" and whose customary hostility toward the administering authorities was well known.

The adoption of the two resolutions pertaining to the work of the Special Committee on Information constituted an attempt to restrict the rights of the administering authorities and to drive a wedge between them and the populations. This, he said, was dangerous and harmful.

In regard to the three resolutions pertaining to trust territories, his Government had understood that the United States had earlier expressed its opposition to the setting up of a standing petitions committee. However, in the Fourth Committee the American Delegate had voted for the resolution.

In regard to the resolution on the time limit for attaining self-government or independence, his Government rested its position on Article 76 which states that the basic objectives of the trusteeship system "to promote progressive development toward self-government as may be appropriate to the particular circumstances of each territory." He particularly wished to stress the word "progressive". He thought the United States Delegation would have voted against such a resolution instead of abstaining.

The resolution providing for participation of the inhabitants of the trust territories in the work of the Trusteeship Council was even more dangerous since, as the Cuban representative had explained in introducing it, it was aimed at giving the representatives of the inhabitants "a status equal to special representation." It tended to recognize an opposition between the indigenous inhabitants and the administering authority. They were surprised, therefore, to find that the United States Delegation had voted affirmatively.

The Ambassador said that the Belgian authorities are fully conscious of their moral, social, economic and political responsibilities.

toward the populations of the Congo and of Ruanda-Urundi. They are promoting the advancement of both territories with the speed and moderation necessary to insure the well-being of the people. The Belgian Government had hoped for a better understanding on the part of the United States of the conditions which prevail in these territories and of the responsibilities assumed by the Belgian authorities.

In view of the surprise manifested by certain delegations to the United States representative in Committee 4, the latter had stated in Paris that his delegation would lend its good offices in the Trusteeship Council in the hope of seeking an application of these resolutions acceptable to all. The Belgian Government, therefore, sincerely hoped that the United States Delegation to the Trusteeship Council will be advised of the attitude of the Belgian Government and that he would receive instructions to proceed in such manner as will insure a reasonable solution in the application of these resolutions.

Mr. Hickerson said that the Department would study carefully the viewpoint expressed by the Ambassador and in a few days he would try to give the reply which the subject-matter merited. He was not prepared to go into detail now. He would say, however, that the Ambassador would understand that our approach and the Belgian approach to the general colonial question might in some respects differ. The United States regards its role as that of "honest broker" between what sometimes appears to be extreme positions taken by both the colonial and the anti-colonial groups. The United States sentiment was fundamentally in favor of making rapid advancement in the development of non-self-governing territories toward self-governing institutions and we were trying to be helpful to any situation where the rise of nationalism is one of the significant phenomena of our times.

Mr. Gerig pointed out that with reference to the five resolutions to which the Ambassador referred, all of them had been introduced in a much more extreme and unacceptable form and that the United States Delegation had succeeded in most cases in getting modifications of the language. Mr. Hickerson added that these and other points of detail would be taken up when we made our reply to the observations of the Ambassador.

Ambassador Silvercruys said that he himself was not too fully acquainted with the details of the resolutions to which his Government objected but that he believed and hoped that it would be possible to ameliorate their harmful effects if the administering authorities in the Trusteeship Council took the right line in their application. Mr. Hickerson said that there would be opportunities to discuss all these points, both before and during the session of the Trusteeship Council.

Subject: Problems arising at the Tenth Session of the Trusteeship Council

M. Hure, French Delegation to the United Nations

Assistant Secretary Hickerson }

Mr. Ward Allen, EUR

At his request, M. Pignon called on Mr. Hickerson to discuss certain questions which will arise during the tenth session of the Trusteeship Council.

Organization of a Visiting Mission to Investigate the Ewe Question Pursuant to the Resolution of the General Assembly

M. Pignon recalled that the Assembly resolution on the Ewe question gave the Trusteeship Council the option of sending a special mission to investigate the Ewe question or, alternatively, of entrusting this task to the regular visiting mission which would go to West Africa during 1952. He said that the French Government was completely in favor of the regular mission and strongly opposed the formation of a special mission for the purpose envisaged. He elaborated this point at some length, indicating French apprehension of establishing a special mission because of the precedent which this might constitute and also the view of the French Government that more local agitation would result from a special mission than from a regular mission. Mr. Hickerson indicated that the Department also favored a regular mission to carry out the study of the Ewe problem.

Turning to the question of the date at which a mission might carry out its work in connection with the Ewe question, M. Pignon said that the French Government desired the mission to arrive as late as possible. He pointed out that the elections to the Representative Assembly of French Togoland are scheduled for March 30 and said that it would be undesirable for the visiting mission to arrive during the election campaign. He then pointed out that the Assembly resolution on the Ewe question asks that the mission undertake a study of the operation of the Joint Council for Togoland affairs which is to be established. He observed also that the same resolution requires the administering authorities to consult with the population regarding the composition of the Joint Council. M. Pignon said that it would not be possible to complete these consultations, to establish the Joint Council, and to have it in operation before July 1. This date, therefore, would be the earliest date that it would be possible for the Mission to be received in French Togoland. He said further that the electoral procedure in British Togoland was still more complicated and that the British, so he had been informed, would be unable to receive the Mission before September 1.

In order to avoid conflict with the General Assembly resolution, which requests the Trusteeship Council to examine the report of the Mission on the Ewe question in time to place the matter before the General Assembly at its next session, M. Pignon believed that a special session of the Trusteeship Council should be convened during the General Assembly. (Subsequently it was pointed out that this might be a second part of the eleventh session of the Council rather than a special session.) The Council would consider the report of the Mission on the Ewe question and thereafter the Assembly would consider the matter, thus complying with the Assembly resolution. In response to Mr. Hickerson's inquiry, M. Pignon indicated that the Mission would probably need to spend one month in the two Togos. It could then, M. Pignon thought, prepare its report on the Ewe question and despatch it to the United Nations, thereafter carrying out its other functions in the two Togos and the Cameroons.

Mr. Hickerson said that the French proposal seemed to him an ingenious one and noted that it arose from the desire of the French to proceed as far as possible with the organization and functioning of the Joint Council before the arrival of the visiting mission in the territory. He said that, assuming the United Kingdom was in agreement with this procedure, the United States would support it as a reasonable means of implementing the Assembly resolution.

M. Pignon asked whether the United States had any views as to the composition of the Mission. Mr. Hickerson said that we thought that Belgium and Australia would be good choices as administering members. M. Pignon expressed full agreement with this suggestion. As for the non-administering members, Mr. Hickerson said that any of the non-administering members of the Trusteeship Council, except the Soviet Union, seemed to us to be acceptable. It was pointed out, however, that Thailand and the Dominican Republic had just served on the Trusteeship Council's visiting mission to the trust territories of East Africa.

Administrative Unions

M. Pignon referred to the resolution of the General Assembly on the subject of administrative unions. He pointed out that this resolution made specific references to the position of the trust territories of the Cameroons and Togoland within the French Union. M. Pignon said that the French Government was anxious for the study on this subject to be undertaken by the Trusteeship Council. They did not wish this to be left to the General Assembly or to the newly established Assembly Committee on Administrative Unions. Mr. Hickerson said he saw no difficulty on this point.

Petitions

With reference to the General Assembly resolution requesting the Trusteeship Council to establish a standing committee on petitions, M. Pignon said that the French would "cause no difficulty" with regard to the establishment of the standing committee. The French were of the view, however, that the committee should not be in session continually. M. Pignon also felt that it should be permitted to determine which petitions could be disposed of at once by the Trusteeship Council and which, on the other hand, should be discussed in the presence of the special representative from the trust territory concerned and in conjunction with the examination of the annual report on that territory. It was pointed out to M. Pignon that this was substantially the practice followed at the present time. However, it was also noted that the Trusteeship Council's Rules of Procedure provide for the possibility of examining petitions of an urgent character at an earlier date than would normally be the case. Mr. Hickerson indicated that the general point which M. Pignon had in mind seemed reasonable.

Participation of the Inhabitants of Trust Territories in the Work of the Trusteeship Council

Mr. Hickerson indicated that he was aware of the apprehension of the French Government in connection with the resolution on this subject adopted by the General Assembly. He stated that the United States, too, was opposed to any development in the nature of "dual representation" in the Trusteeship Council which would, in effect, provide some form of special representation for the indigenous inhabitants of trust territories in addition to the representation for France, for example, as the administering authority. The United States felt that such a procedure would be contrary to the spirit of the trusteeship arrangements. However, the United States believed that a moderate implementation of the Assembly resolution could be undertaken without endangering the position of the administering powers. It seemed feasible to the United States for the Trusteeship Council to recommend to the administering authorities that, where practicable, they attach indigenous persons from the trust territory concerned to their Trusteeship Council delegations. He observed that the French and British governments had already used indigenous persons on their delegation to the Fourth Committee of the General Assembly. Mr. Gerig commented that the United States had had a Puerto Rican member on one of its delegations to the Special Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories. M. Pignon indicated his concurrence with what Mr. Hickerson had said and added that he found no difficulty with the formula which the United States had in mind.

Petitions Relating to the Unification of French and British Cameroons

M. Pignon called attention to a petition which had recently been sent to the United Nations suggesting unification of the two Cameroons. He said that this represented no substantial opinion in the territories. While he was not overly pessimistic on the matter, he feared that efforts might be made to give rise here to a new Togo problem. He observed that the General Assembly strengthened such tendencies when it became aware of them and also said that the United Nations Secretariat might well exert an unfortunate influence in the matter. Mr. Hickerson said that he recognized the danger, but that he did not know specifically what could be done except to continue, as we had done in the past, to urge a more moderate and temperate approach to such problems.

Mr. Meade referred to this resolution which the UK Delegation had opposed at the last General Assembly and which is to be considered by the forthcoming session of the Trusteeship Council, reiterating the UK view that as approved by the GA the resolution was an unfortunate one. Nevertheless, both the Colonial Office and Foreign Office realize that the Trusteeship Council should not send a report back to the next GA which would amount to an "undisguised rebuff", since this would give rise to more extreme GA action. The UK was therefore hopeful that the administering authorities would be able to agree among themselves on some type of implementation of the resolution which would not prejudice their basic position and hoped the US would agree to a resolution by the Trusteeship Council which would invite the administering authority, where possible, to include on their delegations to the Trusteeship Council persons from the trust territories themselves, by analogy to Rule 74 of Rules of Procedure of the Trusteeship Council.

Mr. Hickerson responded by reiterating our opposition to any concept of "associate membership" for the trust territories in the Trusteeship Council and stated that the UK suggestion was exactly the formula which we had had in mind in voting for the resolution and which, on February 25, had been suggested to and approved by M. Pignon, the French TC representative. It appeared therefore that the US, UK and France were in complete agreement on the implementation of the resolutions and we expressed confidence that our respective delegations to the Trusteeship Council in New York would be able to work out the solution along these lines.<sup>2</sup>

Subject: The Ewe Question

After the meeting of the Trusteeship Council on Friday, February 29, Sir Alan Burns made a point of expressing to me his appreciation for the "support and assistance" which the United States had given the United Kingdom and France in connection with their desire to have the Visiting Mission to West Africa arrive in the Togolands as late as possible. (He referred to the fact that, after the British and French delegations had outlined the various reasons why it would be impossible for them to receive a visiting mission before September 1, Ambassador Sayre had proposed that the Council decide that the visiting mission assemble at Headquarters in August, arrive in the Togolands not later than September 1, spend 30 days in investigations in the territory, and prepare their report in time for examination by the Trusteeship Council at a session to convene not later than November 7.) Although the vote on the matter was postponed at the request

Mr. Hickerson commented on the various points with respect to the action of the Fourth Committee of the Sixth Assembly which Ambassador Silvercruys had raised at the previous meeting along the lines of the attached summary.<sup>1</sup>

Ambassador Silvercruys expressed appreciation for the painstaking care which Mr. Hickerson had taken in commenting on each of the questions which he had raised. He said that the Department's careful study of the questions and its willingness to take the Belgian views into consideration were indicative of their importance. He said that the Government of Belgium would be very glad to give consideration to the views which Mr. Hickerson had expressed and that he considered that the two governments were not far apart in so far as their general objectives in the colonial field were concerned. Belgium would continue to discharge its responsibilities in the Congo and Ruanda-Urundi in the same way that it had assumed these responsibilities. The Belgian objectives in these territories were to make it possible for the two races to live in peace and to promote the advancement of the two territories as rapidly as possible.

Subject: United States participation in Committee 4

Participants: Sir Christopher Steel, British Embassy

Mr. John D. Hickerson—UNA

Mr. Ward Allen—EUR

Mr. Benjamin Gerig—UND

At Mr. Hickerson's request Sir Christopher came to the Department today to receive the Department's further reply to several complaints which Sir Christopher had made regarding the activities of the United States Delegation in Committee 4 of the General Assembly; in particular, the complaint that Dr. Tobias had taken a position in the Committee which was not in harmony with delegation decisions and which was inconsistent with general views expressed by United States representatives in the colonial talks.<sup>1</sup>

Mr. Hickerson said that he had looked further into this allegation and was able to say that Dr. Tobias had at all times been amenable to United States Delegation decisions and that he had faithfully and accurately represented United States views throughout his participation in the General Assembly. He had, indeed, taken these positions even though at times they may have been somewhat contrary to his own personal views and desires. Mr. Hickerson wished to add further that when Dr. Tobias made a general statement in Committee 4 referring to the Chairman's able conduct of Committee business, this customary and pro forma statement should not be regarded as an endorsement of all the decisions of the Chairman or as an approval of the unwarranted Guatemalan attack on the British monarchy which had just been made previously and which the Chairman was unable to prevent.

<sup>1</sup> In a formal protest on Nov. 28, 1951 by Sir Christopher Steel, Minister of the British Embassy, the statement was made to Assistant Secretary Hickerson "that the United Kingdom Government was disturbed over recent developments in Committee 4 . . . that the whole basis of the cooperative relationship between the United States and the United Kingdom on colonial questions, which had been worked out in the colonial policy discussions in Washington and in London, was being jeopardized by the policies and attitudes of Dr. Channing Tobias, the United States Representative on Committee 4." Sir Christopher had cited particular examples. (Memorandum of conversation, by Hickerson, Nov. 28, 1951, file 320.14/11-2851) Further unpublished commentation is in the ODA files, lot 60 D 512, "Col/Pol: British Policy" (Letter, Sandifer (at Paris) to Hickerson, Dec. 5, 1951; memorandum, Gerig to Hickerson, Feb. 1, 1952).

For the colonial policy discussions held at Washington in 1950, see Foreign Relations, 1950, vol. II, pp. 434 ff. The 1951 London talks are documented in ibid., 1951, vol. II, pp. 623 ff.

Sir Christopher said that while he was glad to have this assurance he was rather more interested in the basic differences of attitude between our two delegations in regard to the role which the United Nations could play in colonial and other matters. He thought the United States was too much inclined to recognize the United Nations as a nucleus which could oppose the administering powers and that we were too ready to come to terms with this nucleus rather than to fight it in the interest of our own rights and the rights of the free world. Mr. Hickerson replied that this description did not accurately reflect our point of view. He said, however, that in certain cases, such as Korea, we felt that it was to the interest of all of us to make it a United Nations activity rather than the activity of the several nations acting under Article 51.

Sir Christopher said he hoped that in any future colonial talks there would be included in the United States Delegation the person or persons who would represent us in the General Assembly. Mr. Hickerson said he agreed that the persons handling our affairs in Committee 4 should certainly be fully briefed on the colonial talks and this was, in fact, the case this year, since Mr. Gerig who had participated in these talks was sitting immediately behind our delegate and kept him fully informed. Mr. Gerig said that in the case of the French and Belgians their representatives in the Fourth Committee were the same as those who participated in the colonial talks, but that this was not the case with the United Kingdom, since neither Sir Alan Burns nor Mr. Mathieson had participated in the talks previously in London.

Mr. Hickerson terminated the conversation by saying that although there is a wide area of agreement on general questions in the colonial field, it would be impossible always to anticipate specific questions arising in the Fourth Committee, in which our respective delegations would have to take their positions in the light of circumstances as they developed on the spot and having in mind our respective backgrounds and domestic situations, which were not always similar.

Position Paper Prepared in the Department of State for the United States Delegation to the Eleventh Session of the Trusteeship Council<sup>1</sup>

[WASHINGTON,] June 2, 1952.

ITEM 12: REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON PARTICIPATION OF INDIGENOUS INHABITANTS OF TRUST TERRITORIES IN THE WORK OF THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL<sup>2</sup>

TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL COMMITTEE ON THE PARTICIPATION OF THE INDIGENOUS INHABITANTS OF TRUST TERRITORIES IN THE WORK OF THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL. (EXPECTED TO BE MEETING DURING THE WEEK BEGINNING JUNE 2, 1952)

The Problem:

The problem is to determine the position to be taken by the United States Representative on the Trusteeship Council Committee on the Participation of the Indigenous Inhabitants of Trust Territories in the Work of the Trusteeship Council.

Recommendations:

1. The objective of the United States Representative should be the preparation by the Committee of a report or resolution which, subject to the qualifications set out in paragraph 2, is responsive to the desire of the General Assembly as expressed in Resolution 554 (VI) to have the inhabitants of trust territories associated more closely in the work of the Trusteeship Council, which would obtain broad support among Administering and Non-Administering Members of the Council, and which would provide the more moderate members of the Fourth Committee with a reasonable alternative to unacceptable proposals for direct representation of the inhabitants of trust territories in the Trusteeship Council which more extreme members of the Committee will probably advance at the Seventh General Assembly.

2. In pursuance of the foregoing objective, the United States Representative should seek to avoid action by the Committee which would:

(a) be of such a negative character as to offer moderate members of the Fourth Committee no reasonable alternative to the more extreme

<sup>1</sup> The 11th Regular Session of the Trusteeship Council met at New York June 3-July 24, 1952. The Position Book for the U.S. Delegation is filed under 350/6-252. Unpublished documentation is in file 350 and the IO files and the ODA files (lot 62 D 182 and lot 62 D 225).

On June 2, 1952 the President approved the appointment of Benjamin Gerig, Director of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs, as Acting U.S. Representative to the 11th Session of the Trusteeship Council (memorandum, Acting Secretary Bruce to the President, May 29, 1952, file 350/5-2952). This appointment was necessitated by the recent resignation of Francis B. Sayre as U.S. Representative on the Trusteeship Council.

proposals on this question that may be expected at the Seventh General Assembly;

(b) result in some form of "dual representation" on the Council;

(c) fail to take account of the variations in the conditions relating to the individual trust territories and the consequent need for flexibility as to the manner and timing of any steps to associate the inhabitants more closely in the Council's work.

3. If the Delegation finds that it will not be possible to obtain broad support among the Administering and Non-Administering Members of the Council for a report or resolution on this subject pursuant to the above recommendations, the Delegation should consult the Department.

Discussion:

At its Sixth Session the General Assembly adopted resolutions on the participation of non-self-governing territories in the work of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories and on the participation of the indigenous inhabitants of trust territories in the work of the Trusteeship Council. The United States voted for both resolutions. The vote on the resolution relating to the work of the Trusteeship Council was 33-4-4. Of the other Administering Members of the Council, Belgium, France and the United Kingdom voted against the resolution, while Australia and New Zealand abstained. All of the Non-Administering Members of the Council, except the Dominican Republic, voted for the resolution. The Dominican Republic abstained. Some of the proponents of the resolution, in particular Cuba, clearly had in mind the concept of associate membership in the Trusteeship Council for the inhabitants of the trust territories and the resolution commends the practice of some specialized agencies and regional commissions of the United Nations in admitting non-self-governing and trust territories as associate members. However, the operative paragraph of the resolution merely "invites the Trusteeship Council to examine the possibility of associating the inhabitants of the trust territories more closely in its work and to report the results of its examination of this problem to the General Assembly at its Seventh regular session."

The Representative of the United States in explaining his affirmative vote on this resolution in Committee Four made the following statement:

"My Delegation interprets the amended resolution to mean a desire on the part of the Assembly that the inhabitants of the trust territories should be associated more closely in the Trusteeship Council's work but not to restrict or limit the power of the Trusteeship Council to examine all the practical possibilities of achieving this objective. In other words, our vote should not be interpreted to mean that the United States has committed itself at this time to supporting any specific or particular form of such association of the inhabitants in the Trusteeship Council's work."

In consultations in New York and Washington before the opening of the Council's Tenth Session, representatives of the United Kingdom indicated that, in view of the situation that might arise in the Fourth Committee at the Seventh General Assembly, the United Kingdom considered that the Trusteeship Council should adopt a moderate resolution in implementation of the General Assembly's resolution. It favored a formula whereby the Trusteeship Council would ask Administering Authorities, where possible, to include in their delegations to the Trusteeship Council persons from the trust territories. (At a later date, the United Kingdom indicated informally to the United States Delegation that they had already made plans to attach Tanganyikans to their Delegation at the Eleventh Session of the Council and intended to do the same with West Africans at succeeding sessions.) Council action along these lines was also supported by the United States Delegation. The Representative of Iraq, early in the Session, introduced a draft resolution somewhat along these lines and the United Kingdom Delegation informally circulated a revision of this draft.<sup>3</sup> After consultations with other Members of the Council, in particular the United States, the Representative of Iraq later introduced a revised draft of his resolution which

"recommends that, where appropriate or upon the request of the Trusteeship Council, the Administering Authorities associate suitably qualified indigenous inhabitants of the trust territories, such as persons who have participated actively in the political, economic, social and educational life of the Territory, in the work of the Trusteeship Council as part of their delegations, or in any other form which they deem desirable."

In further consultations with the representative of Iraq the United States Delegation indicated that while the revised Iraq draft was generally acceptable to it, it could not agree to the inclusion of the phrase "or upon the request of the Trusteeship Council". Mr. Khalidy (Iraq) stated that he understood our position but that he could not agree to the elimination of this phrase. However, he would agree to a separate vote on this phrase and would be prepared to let it "meet its fate".

From further consultations with Administering Members it became apparent that most of them recognized the desirability of a moderate implementation by the Council of the General Assembly's resolution. Some were not convinced that the Iraq draft resolution, even with the elimination of the above-mentioned phrase, adequately safeguarded their interests. The United States Delegation endeavored to persuade them that the resolution left adequate controls in their hands and that the opportunity of adopting such a moderate resolution sponsored by a leading Non-Administering Member of the Council should be seized at the current session; otherwise such a favorable opportunity might not present itself at a later session. It appeared that the Belgians would not have been unhappy to have the modified Iraq resolution adopted over their abstention. Consideration was also being given by other Administering Members to further amending the Iraq resolution so as to render it acceptable to them. The United Kingdom Delegation, however, modified its earlier position, indicating that it could support the Iraq draft only in a considerably weakened version. Unless this could be done, the United Kingdom was under instructions to move postponement of the issue until the Eleventh Session. Mr. Khalidy (Iraq), however, could not accept further weakening of his resolution. It therefore became clear that the United States would be the only Administering Member supporting Khalidy's revised proposal. When under these circumstances the United Kingdom and the rest of the Administering Members urged postponement, the United States Delegation reluctantly agreed to this course.

The attitudes of the Non-Administering Members of the Council toward the Iraq proposal were not entirely clear. The USSR introduced a more extreme proposal according to which the Trusteeship Council would decide

“that the population of the trust territories have the right . . . to send their representatives to participate, without vote, in the consideration by the Trusteeship Council of the annual reports of the Administering Authorities and of all other questions relating to these territories.”

It is not clear therefore what position the Soviet Delegation would have taken on the Iraq draft resolution. Consultations indicated that Thailand and probably China would have supported the Iraq proposal. However, while generally favorable to the Iraq proposal, the Dominican Delegation expressed its doubts about any resolution making recommendations as to the composition of delegations of members. The Representative of El Salvador stated (T/SR.408) that he considered that neither the Iraqi draft resolution nor the USSR draft resolution exactly corresponded to the intention expressed by the General Assembly in Resolution 554 (VI). While he was sympathetic to the idea that the indigenous inhabitants of the trust territories should acquire a greater knowledge of the work of the Trusteeship Council, he did not feel that the General Assembly resolution called for direct and immediate action by the Council. It would be more proper, he said, for the Council to appoint a committee to study the various ways in which the indigenous inhabitants might be more closely associated with its work.

In view of the doubts expressed by both Administering and Non-Administering Members, with regard to the Iraq proposal, the United States agreed to the appointment of such a committee as was proposed by El Salvador. However, in discussing the proposal of El Salvador, the representative of the United States made clear that his Delegation considered that with certain modifications the Iraq proposal might offer a satisfactory solution. He recognized, however, that the substantive action ultimately taken should be such as to command the widest possible support in the Council. Khalidy (Iraq) stated that he had made every effort to meet the Administering Authorities views and this had not proved acceptable; he thereupon withdraw his draft resolution. El Salvador's proposal for a committee was then adopted. The following Committee was appointed to "study the possibility of associating more closely in the work of the Council inhabitants of the trust territories": El Salvador, France, Iraq, Thailand, United Kingdom and United States.

While the Department still considers that a proposal along the lines of the Iraq resolution, with the modification noted above, offers a satisfactory solution. It is possible that certain Administering and Non-Administering Members may still find it unacceptable, and that other formulas may be offered.

As has been indicated in the past the United States could not accept the concept of dual representation, which it considers inconsistent with the concept of trusteeship, nor could it accept a resolution which fails to leave a reasonable degree of discretion in the hands of the Administering Authority in the view of the varying circumstances in the trust territories and of the practical administrative problems that may arise. On the other hand, there appears to be no valid reason to alter the United States position that it would be most desirable for the Council to take action providing for moderate and reasonable implementation of the objectives sought in the General Assembly's resolution. There are indications that certain Members of the General Assembly, in particular India, are preparing to press for some form of associate membership for the inhabitants of trust territories. If the United States and other Administering Members are to resist such efforts successfully they must offer to the more moderate Members of the Fourth Committee a reasonable alternative. Otherwise, for lack of such an alternative, a sufficient number of them may support a more extreme proposal to insure its adoption despite any efforts which the Administering Authorities may make to defeat it. The United States might in this case be placed in the most unfortunate position of having to join with other Administering Members in disregarding a General Assembly resolution.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>4</sup>The United States was active at the Trusteeship Council's 11th Session on this matter; and was instrumental in bringing about the committee's decision, which "recommended the adoption by the Council of a draft resolution expressing the hope that the Administering Authorities would find it appropriate to associate suitably qualified indigenous inhabitants of the Trust Territories in the work of the Council, as part of their delegations or in any other way manner which they might deem desirable. At its 454th meeting, the Trusteeship Council adopted the draft resolution proposed by the committee [Resolution 466 (XI)]." (United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Seventh Session, Report of the Trusteeship Council Covering its Fourth Special Session and Its Tenth and Eleventh Sessions 18 December 1951 to 24 July 1952 (Supplement No. 4) (A/2150), p. 26.)

Documentation on exchanges between the U.S. Delegation in New York and the Department of State is in file 350. Regarding internal Department of State documentation, there is a memorandum significant for setting forth the general lines of the basic division between the Bureau of European Affairs and the rest of the Department on general colonial policy, in the context of this particular issue. The memorandum was drafted by Hayden Raynor on June 21, 1952, under the subject title, "USDel Position re Problem of Participation of Indigeneous Inhabitants in Work of Trusteeship Council" (350/6-2152). It said in part: "I believe that we must recognize that their [Britain, France, Belgium, the Netherlands] problems in the Trusteeship field are often much more complex and delicate than ours in our Trust Territories and that just because we can accept a given resolution it does not necessarily follow that they could also accept it and implement it in their territories. We have had intimations that a number of the other AA's are fast coming to the conclusion that the long record of recommendations of the TC and Fourth Committee, individually usually innocuous enough, are changing the constitutional concept of the UN role in Trusteeship and non-self-governing territory affairs and that they may now have reached the point where they draw the line. There is some reason to sympathize with their concern."

In connection with the "question of participation", as this problem became known, a position prepared for the U.S. Delegation to the Seventh Regular Session of the General Assembly, not printed, is useful as including a discussion of non-self-governing territories as well as trusteeship territories (IO files, Doc. SD/A/C.4/97, Oct. 5, 1952, "Participation of Dependent Areas in the Work of UN Organs").

Subject: Position of Administering Countries in UN General Assembly Fourth Committee

Participants: Dr. J. G. de Beus—Netherlands Embassy
Mr. John D. Hickerson—UNA
Mr. Louis Henkin—UNP

In the course of a conversation on another subject Mr. de Beus informed me that his Government has for sometime had the feeling that the situation in the United Nations in regard to the administering of non-self-governing territories is getting out of hand. In the Fourth Committee the Administering Powers were becoming "defendants" and were being attacked without reason on emotional and political grounds. The Dutch Government thought that it might be desirable to have a concerted stand by the Administering Powers. It thought that the situation could be handled if the Administering Powers got together and took the line that they would reply to reasonable criticism but not to unreasonable attacks. For this purpose Mr. de Beus stated, they had prepared a tentative unofficial working paper<sup>2</sup> which he left with me. He hoped that we would study it and give him unofficial comments. He also mentioned the possible desirability of a written exchange of views perhaps in September before the General Assembly reconvenes.

I told Mr. de Beus that I agree that the situation he described was not good. I explained that the United States has tried to be a "middleman" between the Administering Powers and the others, although we are also an Administering Power and the object of criticism. As is often the fate of the middleman we had succeeded in becoming unpopular with both sides. I explained to Mr. de Beus that historically the United States was an ex-colony as were most Members of the United Nations. Also the American people are emotionally anti-colonial, and tend to sympathize with the underdog, witness the press reaction in this country on the Tunisia problem. In the circumstances we will probably have to continue to play the middle role, needling some Administering Powers to be more reasonable and needling some of the other countries to do the same.

I assured Mr. de Beus that his memorandum would receive careful study and that he would hear from us.

Memorandum Handed to the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Hickerson), by the Netherlands Minister of Embassy (De Beus), June 20, 1952

Suggestions of the Netherlands Ministry of Foreign Affairs concerning the policy to be followed by the Administering Powers in the Committee on information from non-self-governing territories and in the General Assembly of the U.N.

The Administering Powers which have responsibilities for non-self-governing territories, have repeatedly been subject to stringent criticism in the General Assembly of the United Nations. Susceptibilities with regard to the colonial problem are so acute in the United Nations that every year again political pressure is exercised on the Administering Powers, and the Charter of the United Nations is handled and applied in a manner, contrary to the decisions of San Francisco in 1945. Consequently, the question arises whether it would not be advisable for the Administering Powers to enter into joint consultations with respect to the policy to be adopted towards this attitude of the General Assembly.

This problem results in particular from the obligation of transmitting information under Article 73 which obligation has resulted in a supervision by the General Assembly, not provided for in the Charter. If this supervision has remained within certain bounds and the recommendations resulting therefrom have been of a constructive nature, this situation would be acceptable. However, the Sixth Session of the General Assembly has once more shown evidence of serious and unjustified criticism with respect to the policy of the Administering Powers. This criticism often was of an aggressive character and, moreover, based on political considerations, whereas the terms of Article 73e specifically exclude all discussion of political aspects. Therefore the Ministry of Foreign Affairs is of the opinion that the Administering Powers should consider the possibility of taking a firm and unanimous stand against this attitude of the anti-colonial Powers.

The Netherlands Government believe unanimous action of the Administering Powers to be of primary importance, as otherwise they, one after the other, will subsequently fall into trouble and will, again and again, find themselves confronted with unacceptable Resolutions of the General Assembly. This does not necessarily imply that this unanimity should apply to all issues; a certain divergency of opinions should be possible.

Neither should this co-ordination be expected to imply that in the future the Administering Powers would no longer be subject to unpleasant or unfavourable resolutions of the General Assembly, the composition of this body being such that the developed countries, responsible for the development of other countries, are in a small minority. However, the history of the U.N. shows that a group of States, acting unanimously and following a well-formulated programme, is often able to prevent resolutions which are contrary to the letter and to the spirit of the Charter of the U.N.

Consequently it would be most beneficial for the position of the Administering Powers if their mutual differences of policy were not too great. That differences of opinion such as presented themselves in the Fourth Committee of the Sixth Session of the General Assembly manifest themselves, should be avoided. In voting on resolutions in the Fourth Committee e.g. Denmark voted 14 times in favour, once against and once abstained, whereas Belgium cast 4 affirmative and 7 negative votes and 9 abstentions. The present situation is the more unsatisfactory as in particular the standpoints regarding certain questions of principle appeared to be different.

To avoid these differences in future the Ministry of Foreign Affairs would like to give some suggestions as to a common policy to be followed with respect to a number of problems which regularly present themselves when the reports concerning the non-self-governing territories are being discussed. It would be recommendable to consider at the same time the sanctions the Administering Powers might possibly annex to their standpoint. All possible sanctions should properly be announced before being applied, in order that the anti-colonial Powers be informed of the policy of the Administering Powers.

1. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs is of the opinion that the Administering Powers should proceed on the assumption that the Special Committee for the non-self-governing territories will be maintained. It is indeed unthinkable that the majority of the Fourth Committee would be prepared not to re-establish the Special Committee. It must be admitted that in practice the Special Committee has done good and useful work. On the whole the discussions were matter-of-fact and observations were made which more than once proved to be of value to the Administering Powers. One of the advantages of the Special Committee being maintained is that the results of its activities exercise a favourable influence on the work of the Fourth Committee of the General Assembly. Till now these results have not been unsatisfactory for the Administering Powers; this is probably due to the fact that in the Special Committee the Administering Powers and the non-Administering Powers are represented in equal numbers, whereas in the Fourth Committee the Administering Powers constitute a small minority.

2. The Administering Powers should be in perfect agreement on the nature of the interference of the General Assembly in the administration of the non-self-governing territories. The principle should be strictly adhered to that the Administering Powers exclusively are competent with regard to the administration of the territories and that they are not responsible to the United Nations in respect thereto—their obligations in that regard are limited to the transmitting of information on the subjects mentioned in Article 73 (e).

3. The information submitted under Article 73 (e) of the Charter is not transmitted to be "pigeon-holed"; it may be discussed of course by the General Assembly. In general, however, the General Assembly should confine itself to "observations". In case it makes recommendations, the Administering Powers cannot be compelled to observe them; if they do observe them, they do so of their own free will. It is therefore unacceptable that the Special Committee, as was suggested by Cuba, should use a whole session (every four years) in order to examine to what extent the resolutions of the General Assembly have been observed. Therefore the Administering Powers should unanimously oppose the institution of a four-year Special Committee which would devote a fourth session to this special end. If this nevertheless should happen, the Administering Powers should not comply with a possible request for information on the way in which the recommendations of the General Assembly have been observed. They might also—by way of extreme sanction—consider the possibility of unanimously refusing to attend such fourth session (or such part of it as intended for this purpose). Finally they might react to this manifest abuse of power by suspending the transmission of the usual information.

4. With respect to the determination of the factors which should be taken into account in deciding whether a territory is or is not a territory whose people have not yet attained a full measure of self-government, the Administering Powers should take the view that these factors never can have any binding effect. They can only be considered as indicative, as a guide for the Administering Power itself to determine whether a territory falls outside the scope of Article 73(e) of the Charter. They may also be used as a guide in drawing up the information required by the General Assembly in compliance with Resolution 222(III).<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> In New York on June 10, the Permanent Delegation of the Netherlands had transmitted to the Mission at the United Nations (USUN) and to the Delegations of the other Administering Authorities a memorandum entitled "Non-Self-Governing Territories," dated June 10, 1952. The memorandum was transmitted subsequently by the Permanent Netherlands Representative to the Secretary-General of the United Nations on June 27.

This memorandum consisted of two parts, Parts A and B. The nine points of Part A were an abbreviated version of the instant June 20 memorandum. Part B, entitled "Factors", was a more detailed discussion of this paragraph, as follows:

"B. Factors.

1. There is a distinction between the general principles of Chapter XI and the specific obligation laid down in Article 73(e).

2. The "factors" merely serve to determine whether a territory has reached a stage a self-government where it falls outside the scope of Article 73(e). Such a stage has been reached as soon as the matters mentioned in Article 73(e) have been placed within the control of the Government of the territory. This is where the obligation to transmit information ends, even if the territory has not yet reached a full measure of self-government in other fields.

Under resolution 567(VI) it is recommended to study the factors determining whether or not a territory has attained a full measure of self-government in general. Such a study seems not to be relevant since the general provisions of Chapter XI entail no specific obligation on the part of the Administering Powers except for the obligation of Article 73(e). The question is not whether a territory falls outside the scope of Chapter XI but whether or not the transmission of information under Article 73(e) should be terminated.

3. In the introduction to the list of factors annexed to resolution 567(VI) three cases are distinguished:

- a. the attainment of independence;
- b. the union of a territory on a footing of equal status with . . . the metropolitan Power etc.;

5. The discussions on the political development of the non-self-governing territories are a problem by themselves. During the Sixth Session of the General Assembly considerable difficulties presented themselves and it then appeared that there was no concord among the Administering Powers as to a common standpoint.

In general such discussions should be considered not to be allowed. In practice, however, it is not always possible to avoid them as the political background cannot always be neglected when economic, social and educational problems are discussed. It is therefore reasonable to agree to the practice the Fourth Committee has followed till now and not to rule a speaker out of order, so long as he does not exceed certain limits. It should be considered admissible that a speaker discusses politics by way of exception, in general terms, referring to the economic background and if, in any case, his speech does not assume the character of an attack on any Member's political policy in any individual territory.

If this limit is exceeded all Administering Powers might, by way of extreme sanction, leave the Committee for the time during which the item that gave rise to the discussion is under debate.

If once more a resolution should be proposed such as the one proposed by Iraq at the Sixth Session of the General Assembly—in which the statement was made that it should be considered in accordance with the Charter that the Fourth Committee deals with political matters—the Administering Powers should oppose such resolution. They might then state that, if the resolution is adopted, the abovementioned sanction will be applied.

6. Another question on which a unanimous standpoint of the Administering Powers seems desirable is that of the sending of "Visiting

c. the case of territories which have become neither independent nor fully integrated with another State but which have already attained a full measure of self-government in their internal affairs.

The list of factors is limited to the cases a and b, while c is said to merit further study. Case c should be understood as meaning the attainment of full self-government in the matters mentioned in Article 73(e).

4. As soon as a territory has attained the status mentioned in case c the provisions of Article 73(e) cease to apply to the (former) Administering Power, because:

a. constitutional considerations prevent the transmission of information by the metropolitan Power, the latter having lost competence in such matters;

b. full self-government in the matters of Article 73(e) places the territory, as far as those matters are concerned, on a footing of equal status with independent States;

c. the (former) Administering Power exercising no longer control over such internal affairs is not in a position to provide information under Article 73(e); d. continued transmission of information would create a new form of dependence of the territory.

Therefore, only the competence in the matters mentioned in Article 73(e) should be taken into account in deciding whether the transmission of information should be continued."

Missions" to non-self-governing territories as was suggested by Pakistan and Lebanon at the Sixth Session of the General Assembly.

This ought certainly to be rejected, as it would directly prejudice the sovereignty of the Administering Powers. By way of extreme sanction all Administering Powers might refuse to participate in the Committee's activities as long as the Missions' reports are being discussed. They might also state that the Missions will not be admitted.

7. If an Administering Power has decided to cease the transmitting of information, an identical standpoint should be adopted with respect to the hearing of representatives of that territory by the General Assembly.

8. In general all endeavours to have representatives of non-self-governing territories heard by the General Assembly should be opposed. Apart from the fact that the General Assembly is unsuited for this purpose, the Charter confines this possibility to representatives of trust territories only.

If the General Assembly should nevertheless decide upon such invitation the Administering Powers might resolve to leave the Committee for the time of the hearing.

9. The Administering Powers should adopt an identical standpoint with respect to resolution 566(VI), which invites the Special Committee to examine the possibility of associating these territories in the work of the Committee in the capacity of associate members. The Administering Powers might adopt the standpoint that representatives of non-self-governing territories can participate in the work of the Special Committee only as members of the delegations of the Administering Powers. If the non-self-governing territories should be designated as associate members of the Special Committee—be it as non-voting members—this should induce the Administering Powers not to take part in the activities of the Special Committee.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs is of the opinion that it would be most important if the abovementioned suggestions could be discussed at a meeting of representatives of the Administering Powers, at such a moment that the results thereof can be submitted to the respective Governments in order that they may be able to provide their delegations to the Seventh Session of the General Assembly with identical instructions. In this connection this Ministry would appreciate it highly if it could be informed whether a discussion of this nature is considered useful and whether the points set forth above might constitute a useful starting point. Such a discussion could perhaps take place during the session of the Special Committee for the non-self-governing territories in 1952, as at that time the experts of the Administering Powers are assembled. The Ministry would be glad to learn the comments of the Administering Powers on the above.

Memorandum of Conversations, by the Acting Officer in Charge of Trusteeship Area Affairs (McKay)

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] July 17, 1952.

Subject: Future of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories (formerly the Special Committee on Information Transmitted under Article 73e of the Charter)

Participants: Separate Conversations with:

Mr. W. A. C. Mathieson, United Kingdom Delegation

Mr. Francis Hure, French Delegation

Mr. Pierre Ryckmans } Belgian Delegation

Mr. Jacques Houard }
Mr. Benjamin Gerig } United States Mission

Mr. Vernon McKay }

In separate conversations with the above-mentioned members of the British, French and Belgian delegations, we have raised the question of their attitude toward the future of the Article 73e Committee, the terms of reference of which expire this year. Although they indicated that their governments had not yet taken a final position on this question, they expressed the following tentative views.<sup>1</sup>

Mr. Mathieson (UK) stated that he thought his government (1) regarded the extension of the Committee's life as inevitable, (2) would participate in it in the same way as in the past, (3) would oppose any extension of its function and (4) would abstain on a General Assembly resolution to extend the life of the Committee with its present functions. He said that as far as he knew the French position would be the same as the British, and thought the same was true of the Belgians, although he had not heard any Belgian views on the question.

Mr. Hure (France) said that his government would participate in the 1952 session of the Committee on the same de facto basis and with the same constitutional reservations as in the past. He thought that the only thing which might interfere with such participation would arise if the Egyptian or other members of the Committee should launch an attack on France because of the Tunisian question. With regard to the future extension of the life and functions of the Committee, he stated that the position of his government might not be decided for some time. He felt that his government would either abstain or vote against a General Assembly resolution to extend the life of the Committee with its present functions, and would certainly vote against a resolution which would extend the functions of the Committee. He stated that it was more and more difficult for his government to reach decisions on colonial issues because these issues had become so important in French thinking that they frequently had to be discussed with the Foreign Minister.

Mr. Ryckmans and Mr. Houard of Belgium said that their government (1) would vote against any proposal to re-establish the Committee, whether or not its functions were extended, (2) would probably participate in the Committee if its functions are not extended but would not participate if the Committee's function are appreciably extended, (3) will oppose any discussion of or recommendation concerning any aspect of Belgium's administration of the Congo, (4) if Belgian administration in the Congo is discussed, the Belgian representative will discuss conditions of non-self-governing peoples in specific metropolitan countries even though no information has been transmitted on these peoples under Article 73e, and (5) would withdraw from the Committee if a Belgian intervention along the lines of (4) above is ruled out of order.

[WASHINGTON,] July 23, 1952.

The Problem

The problem is to determine the nature of the reply which should be given to the Netherlands Embassy with regard to the memorandum (copy attached) <sup>1</sup> on non-self-governing territory questions handed to you by Mr. de Beus of the Netherlands Embassy on June 20, 1952.

Background

On June 20, Dr. de Beus handed to you the attached memorandum. He explained that his Government had had for some time the feeling that the situation in the UN with regard to non-self-governing territories was "getting out of hand" and that the Government of the Netherlands thought it might be desirable for the administering powers to take a concerted stand. Dr. de Beus described the memorandum as a tentative, unofficial working paper and expressed the hope that we would study it and give him unofficial comments. You told Dr. de Beus that his memorandum would receive careful study and that he would hear from us.

The memorandum left by Dr. de Beus, described as "Suggestions of the Netherlands Ministry of Foreign Affairs", relates entirely to non-self-governing territory questions arising in the UN. The memorandum indicates positions which the Netherlands Government believes should be taken on a number of substantive questions, including such matters as (1) the future of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories, (2) the role of the Assembly in relation to information transmitted under Article 73(e) of the Charter, (3) the question of implementation of Assembly recommendations relating to non-self-governing territories, (4) the issue of the discussion of political conditions in non-self-governing territories, (5) the question of visiting missions to non-self-governing territories, and (6) the issue of the cessation of the transmission of information on a non-self-governing territory.

In addition to these substantive points, the memorandum urges the primary importance of "unanimous action" by the administering powers in the General Assembly in connection with issues in the colonial field. It proposes also that the administering powers should consider the "sanctions" which they would use to defend their viewpoint, and suggests certain contingencies in which, in the view of the Netherlands Government, the administering powers should all refuse participation in Committee Four or suspend the transmission of information under Article 73(e). The memorandum concludes with the suggestion that the points contained in it be discussed at a meeting of the representatives of the administering powers which, it is further suggested, might take place during the 1952 session of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories (now scheduled to open on September 11). The Netherlands wishes to be informed whether a discussion of such a nature would be considered useful and whether the points set out in the memorandum might constitute a useful starting point.

Recommendation

It is recommended that Dr. de Beus be invited to the Department and that, in the conversation with him, you make the points set forth in the attached brief.

Concurrences:

This memorandum has been cleared with WE (Mr. Spalding) and EUR (Mr. Sale). The Netherlands memorandum was circulated to the Colonial Problems Committee and was discussed by that group. The suggested reply to the Netherlands is in accord with the consensus reached in the Committee.<sup>2</sup>

Brief for use in connection with the memorandum on non-self-governing territory questions in the United Nations handed to Mr. Hickerson by Dr. J. G. de Beus of the Netherlands Embassy on June 20, 1952

1. The Department is grateful to the Netherlands Embassy for providing us an opportunity to examine the suggestions of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs concerning policies which might be followed in the Committee on Information From Non-Self-Governing Territories and the Fourth Committee of the General Assembly.

We fully recognize the important character of the substantive points raised by the Netherlands Government and will consider them carefully in the course of our preparations for the forthcoming meetings of UN bodies.

When we have been able to prepare our positions on these various questions, we will welcome further opportunities to explain our views and to discuss these various questions in detail with representatives of the Netherlands Government.

The Department will no doubt find itself in full or partial agreement with a number of points raised in the Netherlands Embassy memorandum.

2. However, in accordance with the request of Dr. de Beus, we will be glad to make certain informal comments at this time, particularly concerning some of the procedures suggested in the memorandum.

3. We would not favor at this time a formal meeting of all administering powers to consider the various questions raised, for the principal reason that we wish to avoid, insofar as possible, any charge that the administering members are taking a broad, concerted stand against the non-administering members in the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories and the General Assembly.

On the other hand, we will welcome, as in the past, exchanges of views as fully and as frequently as may be desired with Netherlands representatives and representatives of other administering and non-administering states. We would hope to continue full exchanges of views, so far as may be feasible, among administering members as well as with non-administering states at the time of the meeting of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories and during the General Assembly.

4. We have taken careful note of the suggestion in the memorandum that the administering powers should consider the "sanctions" which they would use to defend their viewpoint and, in particular, the proposal that, in certain contingencies, the administering powers should jointly refuse participation in Committee 4 or suspend the transmission of information with regard to their territories.

It can be said at this time that the Department would strongly advise against any action by the eight administering powers which would suggest the use of "sanctions" on our part in an effort to combat extreme action by the General Assembly. The United States, for its own part, would not be able to agree to employ such "sanctions". Such a course of action, we believe, would not only greatly damage the United States position in the General Assembly but would also cause serious damage to the position of the Netherlands Government, which up to now has not experienced in the Fourth Committee the degree of criticism directed at some of the administering powers, including the United States.

Action aimed at achieving a united stand and a threat by the administering powers of non-participation in specified contingencies would, in our opinion, only serve to antagonize non-administering members and would result in strong accusations that we were following the type of tactics employed by the Soviet Union and its satellites.

5. The Department believes that the Netherlands Government has been extremely forthright to date in discussing the question of cessation of information from the Netherlands Antilles and Surinam and that on this issue it should not assume a defensive position on legalistic and jurisdictional lines.

As in the past the Department considers that every effort should be made in the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories and the Fourth Committee, as well as the Ad Hoc Factors Committee, to reply to questioning as patiently and fully as possible. This, we believe, is the best way to meet anticipated criticism.

6. The Department fully appreciates the special concern of the Netherlands Government this year in relation to matters arising in the Fourth Committee and wishes to cooperate with it to the fullest possible extent in keeping matters in this field from "getting out of hand".

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs (Gerig)

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] August 18, 1952.

Subject: Suggestions of the Netherlands Ministry of Foreign Affairs concerning the policy to be followed by the administering powers in the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories and the General Assembly of the United Nations

Participants: Dr. J. G. de Beus, Minister } Netherlands
Baron C. W. Boetzelaer, First Secretary } Embassy
Mr. Durward V. Sandifer, UNA
Mr. Ward Allen, EUR
Mr. Benjamin Gerig, UND

Mr. Sandifer explained that he had invited the Netherlands representatives to come in today in order to reply to two of the questions raised by the Netherlands Government some time ago. The other specific questions, he said, we would be ready to reply to in the near future. He added that on a number of these specific suggestions the United States was in general agreement but that our reply would be given more in detail later, perhaps around the middle of September.

On the first of the two general questions raised in the Netherlands memorandum, namely, the desirability of a formal meeting of all the administering powers to consider various questions raised in the United Nations, it is our feeling that a meeting of this kind would be inadvisable, since we wished to avoid, as far as possible, any charge that the administering Members are taking a concerted stand against the non-administering Members in United Nations bodies. While informal and irregular meetings of the administering group have from time to time taken place on specific questions during meetings of the General Assembly, we have wished to avoid giving the impression that the administering Members as a group were concerting all their actions. Such a position, he said, would tend to develop group action on the other side, which might be to our disadvantage. Mr. Sandifer added that we were, of course, anxious to consult with individual Members, including the Netherlands, at any time that any matter of common interest arises.

On the second broad suggestion in the Netherlands memorandum, namely, that the administering powers should consider the "sanctions" which they would use to defend their viewpoint, particularly that in certain contingencies they should jointly refuse further participation in Committee Four or suspend the transmission of information with regard to their territories, Mr. Sandifer said that the Department would strongly advise against any such use of sanctions and that we would not be able to agree on such a course of action. It was our feeling, he said, that such sanctions would not only greatly damage our respective positions in the General Assembly but would only serve to antagonize still further non-administering Members who would accuse us of following the type of tactics employed by the Soviet Union and its satellites.

Mr. Sandifer said that the position of the Netherlands in United Nations bodies on the colonial question has been forthright and we did not see that it was necessary for the Netherlands to assume a defensive position on legalistic and jurisdictional lines. It was our hope that the Netherlands, like the United States, would continue to work for the formation of a body of moderate opinion among a majority of the Members of the United Nations so that our positions on the colonial and other questions would come to be accepted by a wider group of opinion in the United Nations.

Mr. de Beus said he was grateful for this reply to the memorandum which he would transmit immediately to his Government. On the remaining specific questions, he expressed the hope that we could have further talks regarding them before the General Assembly met.

Mr. Sandifer said that Mr. Gerig and others would be prepared within a short time—at any rate before the middle of September—to discuss the remaining specific questions with the Netherlands Delegation, and that we would get in touch with them about it later. It was then suggested that possibly such talks should be held in New York, and it was agreed that either in New York or Washington further discussion would be held before the middle of September.

As Mr. de Beus left, Mr. Sandifer handed to him the rough notes which he had used for his remarks, for Mr. de Beus' information.<sup>1</sup>

Memorandum of Conversation, by Claude G. Ross of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs<sup>1</sup>

WASHINGTON, August 27, 1952.

Subject: Netherlands Memorandum concerning the policy to be followed by the Administering Powers in the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories and in the General Assembly.

Participants: Mr. Gabriel van Laethem, First Secretary, French Embassy
Mr. Benjamin Gerig, UND
Mr. Ward Allen, EUR
Mr. Claude G. Ross, UND

Mr. van Laethem explained that he had called to inquire whether we had answered the memorandum from the Netherlands Embassy containing suggestions of the Netherlands Foreign Office concerning the policy to be followed by the Administering Powers in the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories and the General Assembly and, if so, what answer we had made.

Mr. Gerig stated that we had replied to two of the tactical questions raised by the Netherlands Government but that we had not replied to the other specific questions as our positions were still being examined within the Department. We had indicated to the Netherlands Embassy that the United States was probably in general agreement with a number of the specific suggestions but that our reply would be given in more detail later. The two questions which we had answered were those concerning (1) the desirability of a formal meeting of all the administering powers to consider various matters that would [be] raised in the United Nations and (2) the desirability of considering the use of "sanctions" by the administering powers to defend their viewpoint.

With regard to the first point Mr. Gerig said that we had expressed the view that a meeting of the kind suggested would be inadvisable at this time as it might easily create the impression among non-administering Members that the administering powers were preparing to take a concerted stand against them in United Nations bodies. Such an impression would tend to stimulate group action among non-administering Members which could easily be to our disadvantage. We had, of course, emphasized to the Netherlands Embassy that we desired to consult with the Netherlands, as well as with other Members, as fully and frequently as in the past on matters of common interest and that we looked forward to continuing full exchanges of views at the time of the meeting of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories and during the General Assembly.

In the matter of recourse to sanctions, particularly the suggestion that in certain contingencies the administering powers should jointly refuse to participate further in the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories or the Fourth Committee of the General Assembly, Mr. Gerig stated that we had strongly advised against the use of sanctions as an effective or desirable course of action. The use of sanctions would only prejudice our position in the General Assembly, antagonize still further non-administering Members and expose us to accusations that we were adopting the kind of tactics employed by the Soviet Union and its satellites.

Mr. van Laethem said that the French Government had acknowledged the Netherlands memorandum in somewhat similar fashion, indicating general agreement with some of the suggestions contained in it but stating that replies to specific points would be made in later conversations prior to the General Assembly. He said he understood that the United Kingdom thought each administering power should circulate to the others its reply to the Netherlands memorandum but that his Government did not favor this idea. Concerning the efficacy of sanctions Mr. van Laethem agreed that a walkout by one power would accomplish nothing but he felt that there might be a case where a walkout by all the administering powers could be most effective. He admitted, however, that it would be difficult to foresee or plan for such a situation in advance.

Mr. Gerig and Mr. Allen both emphasized that the administering powers should not adopt a defensive attitude in the United Nations but should present their arguments fully and firmly. Mr. van Laethem agreed with Mr. Allen that the French Government had on occasion been needlessly defensive in the past. In this connection Mr. van Laethem said that if his Government agreed to the inscription of the Tunisian issue in the agenda of the General Assembly, it would then make the most vigorous case possible. He then went on to stress the paramount importance of the Tunisian question. The Western Powers might be able to make mistakes in Indonesia and Libya, but we could not afford to do so in Tunisia. "Tunisia was the test case" which posed the important question of whether there was to be "orderly and scientific progress" in the achievement of self-government by dependent territories. The Tunisian case would have profound repercussions throughout Africa and Asia.

Position Paper Prepared in the Department of State for the United States Delegation to the General Assembly Ad Hoc Committee on Factors<sup>2</sup>

[WASHINGTON,] September 2, 1952.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY AD HOC COMMITTEE

(“to carry out a further study of the factors which should be taken into account in deciding whether a territory is or is not a territory whose people have not yet attained a full measure of self-government”)

THE PROBLEM

The problem is to determine the position of the United States Delegation to the General Assembly’s Ad Hoc Committee on Factors.

RECOMMENDATIONS

[Note: Recommendations on the specific questions of (a) Cessation of Submission of Information on the Netherlands Antilles and Surinam and (b) Future Cessation of Submission on Puerto Rico, are contained in separate position papers which should be utilized in conjunction with this paper.]<sup>3</sup>

1. In view of the complexity and emphasized importance of the problem to date in the United Nations, the United States Representative should favor full discussions in the Ad Hoc Committee as the United States has previously done in the Special Committee and Committee IV.

2. The United States Representative should bear in mind that the most desirable outcome of the discussions, in view of the exhaustive treatment the factors question has received in the last four years, would be a report by the Ad Hoc Committee which would sum up previous considerations and set forth the conclusion that any definition or list of factors which finally might be formulated can only be useful as a guide in determining when a territory ceases to become non-self-governing.* In this connection the United States Representative should <sup>1</sup>This was one of three papers in a Position Book entitled “General Assembly Ad Hoc Committee on Factors” and dated Sept. 4, 1952. Copies of this and Position Books for other Committee sessions are also in the ODA files, lot 62 D 182.

*If the Ad Hoc Committee decides to take up the question of competence, see the previous position paper (Annex F). [Footnote in the source text.]

be guided by the position taken repeatedly by the United States that neither a definition nor a list of factors could be flexible enough to take account of the complexities of constitutional forms and usages in the wide variety of territories and at the same time specific enough to be definitive. In discussions on this point the United States Representative may take occasion to point out that the careful and exhaustive consideration which the factors question has received to date in the United Nations and the divergencies which have characterized the consideration of this question by various Members have amply demonstrated the soundness of the United States position.

3. Should the Ad Hoc Committee desire, in response to General Assembly Resolution 567 (VI), to submit to the Assembly a list of "factors which should be taken into account" elaborating the list contained in the Annex to the resolution, the United States may agree to such a list, provided that no one factor or combination of factors is presented as determining in any given case the status of a territory in relation to Chapter XI. In this connection, the factors emphasized previously by the United States are contained in Annex A.

4. The United States Representative should support the principle that the General Assembly may examine information submitted to it regarding the cessation of information but should oppose any proposed resolution or language which implies that it is the prerogative of the General Assembly ultimately to decide when a territory ceases to become non-self-governing or even the General Assembly and the Administering Authority to decide. We might, however, express the hope that any actions leading to the cessation of reporting under Article 73(e) would be such as to meet with the general satisfaction of UN Members.

5. In formal or informal consultations with representatives of other powers in the Ad Hoc or Fourth Committee, the United States Representative should

(a) Express appreciation for the substantive contributions they have made to the discussions of the "factors question" and the wisdom of their efforts to maintain a cooperative atmosphere in this regard;

(b) Urge the administering powers to exercise the utmost patience in order to maintain a friendly and cooperative atmosphere and, despite whatever the majority conclusions of the Ad Hoc Committee and Committee IV may be, not to exacerbate the situation by any suggestions of non-participation in activities under Chapter XI or disregard for recommendations in the field of non-self-governing territories. We should invite them to interpret in the broadest practicable sense their obligation to transmit information under Article 73(e) of the Charter on economic, social, and educational conditions in non-self-governing territories.

(c) Share fully and frankly with them [as well as the non-administering Members] the United States position on substantive questions.

6. Should a point of order be raised in regard to views of the Belgian Government which stress the fact that many Members have not reported on the aboriginal peoples living within their jurisdictions, the United States Representatives should take the position that such views may legitimately be placed before the Ad Hoc Committee and the General Assembly since neither are bound by the terms of reference of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories which do not entitle it to apply its conclusions to any specific territory. The United States Representative should not initiate discussions on this matter, but in the course of their development, should take the following position :

(a) Express appreciation to the Belgian delegation for the important and impressive data which they have presented for the information of the Committee and the General Assembly;

(b) Indicate that concern for the welfare and development of all aboriginal peoples ought, on the one hand, to enhance appreciation with the United Nations of the general problem of promoting self-government and, on the other, by virtue of their participation in the work of the United Nations to increase the awareness of Member Governments who administer such peoples of their responsibilities in regard to them;

(c) Point out, however, that the absence of territorial identity outside the territorial limits of the Member Governments who administer such peoples would seem to preclude them from the reporting provisions of Chapter XI of the Charter;

(d) Present the view that the matter of reporting on aboriginal peoples within the boundaries of Member States would depend upon the present provisions of the Charter being reviewed and, therefore, extended consideration of this question could only lead the Committee into difficult discussions in the political field which would be beyond the competence of the General Assembly to decide under its present terms.

In discussing the Belgian views, care should be exercised to avoid any statement which might be prejudicial to the position of the United Kingdom with respect to the South African protectorates of Bechuanaland, Basutoland, and Swaziland, the administration of which is desired by the Union of South Africa.

7. If it seems appropriate at the early stages of the Ad Hoc Committee's deliberations, the United States Representative should make a general statement along lines of the attached draft (Annex B).<sup>4</sup>

BACKGROUND

Under Chapter XI of the United Nations Charter "Members of the United Nations which have or assume responsibilities for the administration of territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government," undertake certain responsibilities in regard to these territories. The Charter does not, however, undertake to define the term "a non-self-governing territory."

At the First Session of the General Assembly, after some discussion of the problem, the Assembly merely "noted" the list of 74 territories on which eight members had transmitted, or declared their intention of transmitting information.

By 1948 the General Assembly had before it information on only 62 of the 74 territories listed in the 1946 resolution. The Assembly then adopted a resolution proposed by India (and considerably modified) which affirmed the principle that the United Nations should be informed of such changes in the constitutional position and status of certain territories as had led the responsible Government to discontinue transmission of information, and requested the Members concerned to furnish the Secretary General with the relevant documents relating to the new status of the territory and its constitutional relationship to the metropole. (GA Res. 222 (III), Annex C).<sup>6</sup>

At the Fourth Session of the General Assembly a resolution on "Territories to which Chapter XI of the Charter Applies" was adopted. In this resolution the General Assembly considered that it was within its responsibility "to express its opinion on the principles which have guided or may in the future guide the Members concerned in enumerating the territories for which the obligation exists to transmit information under Article 73(e) of the Charter." The Assembly further invited the Special Committee "to examine the factors which should be taken into account in deciding whether any territory is or is not a territory whose people have not yet attained a full measure of self-government." (See GA Res. 334 (IV), Annex D).<sup>5</sup>

In 1951 the Special Committee undertook an examination of the factors. The Committee's report on this problem noted that there are numerous elements which should be taken into consideration in determining if a territory is or is not self-governing and that it did not consider that "any single factor or any particular combination of factors can be regarded as prominent or decisive in every case, except that the will of the people of the territory concerned properly and freely expressed, would in all cases be the paramount factor in deciding whether a relationship between the administering authority and a non-self-governing territory has evolved to a stage where that territory could be said to have attained a full measure of self-government." The report listed a number of factors of a geographical, political, economic and cultural nature which in the opinion of the Committee should be taken into account in determining if a territory has achieved a status of full self-government, stressing that the list is not to be considered as being exhaustive. In "a spirit of seeking understanding rather than marking [sic] controversies” the Special Committee did not enter into the question of competence, that is, who should determine when a territory is no longer non-self-governing.

After receiving the report of the Special Committee, the Fourth Committee of the Sixth General Assembly appointed a sub-committee to study the basic and general factors to be taken into account in deciding whether a territory is or is not a territory whose people have not yet attained a full measure of self-government and to consider the advisability of establishing procedures for the further study of the problem.

This sub-committee drew up a list of factors as well as a draft resolution which the Fourth Committee submitted to the General Assembly. The Assembly adopted the sub-committee's resolution (see GA Res. 567 (VI), Annex B) and thereby: decided to take as a basis for the future study of the factors the list drawn up by the sub-committee; invited the Members of the United Nations to transmit to the Secretary General by May 1, 1952, a statement of their views on the factors; appointed an Ad Hoc Committee of ten members (Australia, Belgium, Burma, Cuba, Denmark, France, Guatemala, Iraq, the United States, and Venezuela) to carry out a further study of the factors and to report to the Seventh General Assembly; and invited the Secretary General to convene the Ad Hoc Committee in order that it might complete its work one week before the opening of the 1952 session of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories. The Committee is to convene in New York September 4.

To date seventeen Member Governments have provided statements of their views on the factors question in accordance with the request contained in para. 2 of GA Res. 567 (VI)—Belgium, Burma, Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Denmark, Egypt, El Salvador—Guatemala (joint reply), France, Greece, Indonesia, Iraq, the Netherlands, Pakistan, Philippines, USSR, the United Kingdom and Yugoslavia.<sup>6</sup> The United States response to this request was as follows:

“The United States assumes that the General Assembly Resolution of January 18, 1952, inviting Members to submit their views on this question by May 1, 1952, is primarily intended for those Members who have not participated in the General Assembly's Committees dealing with this question. The United States has already made known its

These documents are filed (item 10) in the Position Book for the U.S. Delegation to the 1953 Session of the Ad Hoc Committee on Factors (IO files and ODA files, lot 62 D 182). views through active participation in these Committees and has nothing to add to these views at this time. Any further comments which the United States may wish to present will be made in the Ad Hoc Committee of the General Assembly . . .”

The Committee is to take into account all the information available, including that transmitted to the Secretary General on the reasons which have led certain Administering Members to cease to transmit information on certain of their territories.

Past United States Position

In a note of August 19, 1946 transmitting copies of the latest annual reports of the Governors of Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and Panama Canal Zone, Guam and Samoa, the Department of State suggested that Chapter II of the Charter “would appear to apply to any territories administered by a Member of the United Nations who do not enjoy the same measure of self-government as the metropolitan area of that member.” The Department of State added that for 1946 the United States had used a purely pragmatic approach in selecting the territories on which it should transmit information on the hope that the experience of the various Members would perhaps reveal more clearly the kind of criteria, if any, which could eventually be agreed upon in making the selection. The United States ceased transmitting information on the Panama Canal Zone after 1946, having received a protest from the Republic of Panama, and indicated subsequently that this was a matter for consultations between the United States and the Republic of Panama. The United States voted for GA Res. 222 (III) and stated that even had this resolution not been adopted the United States would expect to inform the Secretary General if for any reason it ceased to transmit information on one of its territories. The United States recorded its understanding, however, that the transmission of the information requested in the resolution did not alter the right of each administering state to determine the constitutional position and status of any particular territory under its sovereignty. The United States restated this understanding when the Special Committee was entrusted with the task of studying the factors. The United States position at that time was that the General Assembly had the right to compile a list of factors for the guidance of Members but that no definition or list of factors could be flexible enough to take account of the complexities of constitutional forms and usages in the wide variety of territories involved and at the same time specific enough to be definitive.

At the Sixth General Assembly during the discussions in Committee IV on the Report of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories, the Alternate United States Representative, Dr. Channing Tobias, included in his statement on November 21, 1951 the following comments on the factors question :

“ . . . A special section of the Report contains a carefully studied analysis of the factors which should be taken into account in determining whether or not a territory has become self-governing within the meaning of the Charter. This report results from an Assembly resolution of two years ago and it reflects, in the view of my Delegation, a great deal of wisdom and intelligence. Undoubtedly some Delegations here may think that they could add other factors to this list and some may think that certain factors appearing there should be eliminated. My Delegation has always taken the position that the circumstances of the various non-self-governing territories are so different that no single factor or combination of factors would necessarily apply in all cases. We have studied this document most carefully and we believe that the Fourth Committee should accept it as a guide to be seriously taken into account in determining when a people have reached the point when it has become self-governing or when it has attained a status whereby it need no longer be reported upon under Chapter XI.

“The United States Delegation believes that territories should be encouraged and assisted to become self-governing as rapidly as possible and we would not wish such a development delayed as a result of laying down so many complex factors to be met that the people might become discouraged in their onward progress toward self-government. We believe it is the duty of this Committee not unnecessarily to complicate the progress or to place too many difficult hurdles in the way. As I look over this list of factors, I could not help but think that a number of so-called independent countries might find it difficult to qualify on all the points mentioned in this list.

“Mr. Chairman, my delegation believes that what we must always strive for is that non-self-governing peoples may be placed in a position where they can freely choose their destiny. It is this element of freedom of choice which in our view is the keystone of the whole question. Non-self-governing peoples should not be coerced against their will to assume a status which they do not desire. Such a relationship is almost certainly bound to make trouble and will usually create deep-seated resentments. And when I say that these peoples should be free to choose, I mean that they should be able freely to decide the nature of the relationship which they wish to maintain with any other country. History has shown that this relationship has sometimes taken the form of independence. In other cases it has taken the form of some degree of association with the mother country and other countries, and in still other cases, it has taken the form of complete assimilation or integration with another State. All these are possibilities, and it would be a wise man indeed who would undertake to forecast which is the most desirable form of self-government for peoples who are now not fully self-governing.”

Application to Territories Administered by the United States

Under Article 73(e) the United States reports on Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands of the United States, Guam and American Samoa. It also reports to the Trusteeship Council on its administration of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. These seven territories are at widely varying stages of political, as well as economic, social and educational development. On the one hand, Hawaii and Alaska are on the threshold of statehood in the Union while Puerto Rico has as of July 25, 1952 achieved the status of an autonomous Commonwealth under a constitution drafted by the people of Puerto Rico and approved by the United States Congress. At the other extreme is the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands composed of 96 distinct island units composed of 2,141 individual islands scattered over an ocean area of approximately three million square miles and with a combined land area of only 687 square miles. The United States has placed on record in the Security Council the statement that despite the fact that no people are more consecrated to the principle of independence than the people of the United States, such status for the Trust Territory could not be achieved within any foreseeable future. The territories of the Virgin Islands, Guam and American Samoa enjoy varying intermediate stages in the development of local self-government and no one can foretell what their ultimate political status will be.

It is obvious, however, that in taking positions in the United Nations on the factors question, the United States must bear in mind that all territories under its jurisdiction are not likely to achieve statehood as an ultimate status and that our present new relationship with Puerto Rico calls for a broader interpretation of "self-government" than simply membership in the Federal Union.

It is assumed that, in view of the changed status of Puerto Rico as a result of the promulgation of its new Constitution on July 25, 1952, it will no longer be appropriate or advisable for the United States to submit information on Puerto Rico in accordance with Article 73(e) of the Charter.<sup>7</sup> Such action on the part of the United States will depend upon a definition by this Government as to the new relationship between it and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. However, since information remains to be transmitted for the period July 1, 1951 to June 30, 1952, it is assumed that the cessation of submission of information would not become effective until a year hence.

Administering Authorities Which Have Ceased to Transmit Information

France: The French Government in 1949 maintained that the territories on which no information was transmitted (Martinique, Guadeloupe, Reunion, French Guiana, St. Pierre and Miquelon, French Oceania, New Caledonia and Dependencies, French Establishments in India and the Associated States of Indo-China) were no longer non-self-governing by virtue of having become departments of France

“with a regime which is largely identical with that of the Departments of Metropolitan France,” or overseas territories “with a regime which on the whole closely resembles that of the Overseas Departments of Metropolitan France as regards the status of the inhabitants and their method of political representation” or associated states with “freedom of self-government to the extent of independence within the framework of the French Union.”

United Kingdom: The British position with respect to Malta in 1947 as stated by the United Kingdom Representative, was that Malta on September 5, 1947 “had attained full responsibility for local self-governments” and while not yet in full control of its external affairs was nevertheless fully responsible for the conduct of its internal affairs. In 1949, the United Kingdom Representative invoked “constitutional consideration” from the phrase “subject to such limitation as security and constitutional considerations may require” in Article 73(e) as a reason for the United Kingdom’s ceasing to transmit information on Malta. The United Kingdom Representative stated that “since under the 1947 constitution Malta was responsible for its own internal administration, including the matters mentioned in Article 73(e) the United Kingdom Government was not concerned with these matters for constitutional reasons and could not, therefore, supply any information regarding them”.<sup>8</sup>

Netherlands: On June 29, 1950 the Government of the Netherlands informed the Secretary General of the United Nations that the Netherlands Government would from the current year on no longer present a report on Indonesia since the sovereignty over these territories, with the exception of Netherlands New Guinea, was formally transferred to the Republic of the United States of Indonesia on December 27, 1949. The note of the Government of the Netherlands continued as follows:

. . . “in all probability no further report on the Netherlands West Indies and Surinam will be submitted after 1950 since both these territories will then have acquired an autonomous status and a full measure of self-government placing them outside the scope of Chapter XI of the Charter. It is, however, the intention of my Government in that case to present to your Excellency a report pursuant to paragraph 2 of Resolution 222 (III) of the General Assembly.”

On August 31, 1951 the Netherlands Government advised the Secretary General that in the opinion of that Government, the Netherlands Antilles and Surinam have now ceased to be Non-Self-Governing Territories within the meaning of Article 73(e) of the Charter and that consequently the Netherlands Government had decided to terminate the transmission concerning these territories. The Special Committee considered the communication from the Netherlands Government and adopted a resolution which noted the information made available by the Netherlands Government relating to Surinam and the Netherlands Antilles and the fact that a conference among representatives of the two territories and the Netherlands on an equal footing was to be held in March 1952 to decide upon a system of cooperation for the common affairs of the three countries and the establishment of a new constitutional order to replace the present interim arrangement. The concluding paragraph of the resolution "Takes note of the communication of the Government of the Netherlands with reference to the cessation of the transmission of information on these territories, and transmits this information, together with its Special Committee report on General Assembly Resolution 334 (IV) and the summary records relating to these questions, to the General Assembly, for any necessary action." The General Assembly decided (Resolution 568 (VI)) that in 1952 it should examine the communication of the Netherlands Government in the light of any report prepared by the Ad Hoc Committee and take into account whatever new arrangements as to common affairs may be developed by the 1952 conference of representatives of the Netherlands and of the Netherlands Antilles and Surinam. The resolution concludes with the decision "to include in the agenda of the next regular session of the General Assembly the question of the cessation of the transmission of information under Article 73 (e) of the Charter as regards the Netherlands Antilles and Surinam."

Views of the Non-Administering Members

The records of debates show that many non-administering members hold that the General Assembly has final authority to decide, or that this authority is to be exercised jointly by the General Assembly and the respective administering authorities. The replies of the non-administering members who have given views on the factors question are difficult to summarize. It is apparent that a sincere attempt has been made on the part of these members to give careful and objective consideration to the factors question. Their replies, as might well be expected, reflect that they take their own particular political situations and outlooks as the principal point of departure. One recurring theme of the replies has been the question of the competence of the General Assembly to apply any one list of factors to specific territories with the corollary that the cessation of the transmission of information under Article 73 (e) of the Charter should depend on a separate investigation of each particular case. Another recurring theme calls for the application of the principle of self-determination. It is significant that of all the non-administering members which have submitted their views only Burma, while agreeing that it would be advantageous to have a list of factors laid down, believe strongly that the list should merely serve as a guide and not be applied rigidly.

Views of the Administering Members

The attitude of the administering authorities likewise reflects their individual political situations as well as their colonial responsibilities. They all hold the general view that, in the final analysis, the decision as to when a territory ceases to be non-self-governing rests with the metropolitan government, and that Chapter XI of the Charter does not provide the basis for maintaining that the General Assembly has the power to decide the question of the cessation of the application of Article 73(e) to a particular territory. Some of them have even threatened to cease to participate in the work of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories and Fourth Committee work as it pertains to Chapter XI of the Charter. While maintaining that the list of factors can only be of value as a guide to Members responsible for transmitting information under Article 73(e), they have participated in the discussion of this question and five Members (Belgium, Denmark, France, the Netherlands, and the United Kingdom) have presented detailed and constructive sets of comments for consideration by the Ad Hoc Committee.

Special Views of Belgium:<sup>9</sup> The Belgium views contain the theme upon which the Belgians have spoken for some time, namely, that there exists in the Americas and Asia peoples with a lower degree of civilization for whom no information has yet been transmitted. There are many examples of the formal establishment through laws and decrees of a special system taking into account their particular status or giving to the State some form of trusteeship over such peoples. The areas in which they live may be regarded as vast reservations in which they are more or less completely outside the laws in force for the rest of the State. In elaborating upon this theme, the Belgian Government lists, from ILO publications, 27 Members of the United Nations who administer sizeable groups of indigenous peoples concerning whom information has not been transmitted in accordance with Article 73(e). The important point is not that the Belgians have now provided elaborate documentation of their theme that reporting on non-self-governing peoples is incomplete. It is to be noted that previous efforts on their part to expand upon this theme have been ruled out of order in the Special Committee and Committee IV on the ground that such information was not before the Committees for consideration. The important question which now arises is whether or not the views submitted by Belgium are properly before the Ad Hoc Committee. These are legitimate views and if the Belgians are not ruled out of order, (and they have informed us that they will walk out if ruled out of order) a new factor of broad significance may have to be considered by the Ad Hoc Committee and possibly the General Assembly. In this connection it should be pointed out that the terms of reference of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories which do not entitle the Committee to apply a definition or list of factors to any specific territory for the purpose of determining its status are not binding upon the Ad Hoc Committee.

U.S. POSITION ON THE FACTORS QUESTION FOR THE 1950 AND 51 SESSIONS OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON INFORMATION FROM NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. In view of the complexity and importance of the problem the United States Representative should favor full discussion in the plenary sessions of the Committee, but may support the appointment of a subcommittee once the subject has been thoroughly explored.

2. The United States Representative should be guided by the consideration that the most desirable outcome of the discussions in the Special Committee (and later in the Fourth Committee) would be a recognition of the difficulty or even the impossibility of formulating either a definition or a list of factors which would be presented as determining in every case whether a territory is or is not "a territory whose people have not yet attained a full measure of self-government". Neither a definition nor a list of factors presumably could be flexible enough to take account of the complexities of constitutional forms and usages in the wide variety of territories involved and at the same time specific enough to be definitive.

3. In the event that the Committee reaches a conclusion along the lines of Recommendation 2 above the United States Representative should consider seeking the co-sponsorship of a non-administering

This was a document of the Department of State Committee on Problems of Dependent Areas; it was also serialized in a second documents series, that of the Interdepartmental Committee on Non-Self-Governing Territories (Department of State files, lot 54 D 5, Colonial Policy Committees). Regarding the Committee on Problems of Dependent Areas, see pp. 1427 ff.

Member for a resolution which would recommend to the General Assembly that it take note of the difficulties encountered by the Special Committee, express the view that it is not possible to formulate a definition or a list of factors which would be determining in all cases, and invite administering Members to interpret in the broadest practicable sense their obligation to transmit information under Article 73(e) of the Charter on economic, social, and educational conditions in non-self-governing territories.

4. If, however, the Committee should desire, in response to General Assembly Resolution 334 (IV) to submit to the Assembly a list of "factors which should be taken into account" the United States Representative may agree to a list along the lines of Recommendation 5(a) below provided the list is not presented as a definition and no one factor or combination of factors is presented as determining in every case the status of a territory in relation to Chapter XI.

5. In any discussion of the "factors which should be taken into account" the United States Representative:

a. May, as appropriate during the discussion, advance some or all of the following as factors which might be taken into account, pointing out, however, their varying degrees of significance and the difficulty of using them individually or in combination as a test:

(1) Whether the inhabitants of the territory are represented in the metropolitan parliament on the same basis as the inhabitants of the metropole.

(2) Whether incorporation in the metropolitan area assures to the inhabitants of the territory rights and privileges equal to those enjoyed by the people of other component units of the metropole.

(3) Whether the territorial legislature is locally elected.

(4) The respective powers of the territorial legislature and the metropolitan legislature in relation to the territory.

(5) Whether the Governor is appointed by the metropole or elected by the inhabitants of the territory.

(6) Whether the ministers or heads of departments are inhabitants of the territories, and whether they are appointed by the metropole, chosen by the Governor, chosen by the majority party in the territorial legislature, or elected by the people.

(7) The extent of the Governor's veto, reserve, or decree powers.

(8) Whether universal adult suffrage exists in the territory.

(9) Whether the inhabitants possess metropolitan citizenship.

b. Should oppose, as factors determining the status of territories in relation to Chapter XI, control of external affairs or eligibility for membership in the United Nations.

6. If the question arises, the United States Representative should recall the terms of reference of the Special Committee, which do not entitle the Special Committee to apply a definition or list of factors to any specific territory for the purpose of determining the status of that territory in relation to Chapter XI of the Charter.

7. If, through consultation, it appears that the United Kingdom maintains its intention to seek Special Committee agreement that an administering Member may invoke the phrase "subject to such limitation as security and constitutional considerations may require" to cease reporting on a territory which, although admittedly not fully self-governing in the sense of controlling its external relations, is fully responsible for its internal affairs including the economic, social, and educational matters specified in Article 73(e), the United States Representative should seek informally to dissuade the United Kingdom Representative from raising this point in the Special Committee except insofar as he might consider it necessary to make a reservation on the point on behalf of his Government.

Extract from the discussion section of the paper dealing with the distinction between self-government and independence.

There is a distinction drawn between self-government and independence in Article 76 of the Charter. Since control of its external relations is generally accepted as an attribute of a state, the framers of the Charter meant to imply, in making the distinction between self-government and independence, that a territory might be fully self-governing short of having obtained control of its affairs in this sphere. Moreover, Article 76 speaks of development toward self-government or independence "as may be appropriate to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned", and, in Article 73(b) administering Members undertake "to take due account of the political aspirations of the peoples". Finally, the inclusion of this factor as a determining factor would cast doubt on the right of a territory to be considered self-governing for the purposes of Article 73(e) even if the people of the territory should choose incorporation into a larger unit or a special form of relationship with the metropole whereby, by mutual agreement, the metropole conducted the external relations of the territory.

"The question has been raised as to the meaning of the phrase "subject to such limitations as security and constitutional considerations may require" which appears in Article 73(e) of the United Nations Charter. In particular, it has been suggested that this phrase may be so construed as to permit a Member of the United Nations to cease reporting with respect to a territory, on the ground that changes in the territory's status make it constitutionally inappropriate for the

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in resolution 334 (IV) adopted on 2 December 1949, the General Assembly invited any special committee which might be appointed on information transmitted under Article 73(e) of the Charter to examine the factors which should be taken into account in metropolitan state to transmit information to the United Nations under Article 73(e), and, further, that the General Assembly would not be competent to review this action and pronounce upon whether such action is justifiable.

"Examination of the pertinent provisions of the Charter, the proceedings of the San Francisco Conference, and applicable rules of international law, leads to the following conclusions:

"1) The meaning of the phrase in question is not clear and precise, nor can the exact intent of the negotiators be ascertained. Nevertheless the San Francisco records indicate that many delegates would not have agreed to the insertion of this language in the Charter had they considered that this language could be construed so as to permit a metropolitan state to relieve itself arbitrarily and unilaterally of its reporting obligation under Article 73(e).

"2) Under general rules of international law governing interpretation of treaties, it is believed that the reasonable and natural interpretation of the language in question, in the light of the general objective of Article 73, is as follows:

"The Members of the United Nations which are administering non-self-governing territories undertake by Article 73(e) to report to the United Nations with respect to economic, social and educational conditions in such territories. This undertaking is subject to "limitation" (in legal parlance, the term "limitation" is used in the sense of "qualification" or "restriction"), i.e., a Member may qualify or limit the information transmitted where security or constitutional considerations so require. To qualify or to limit information transmitted obviously is not substantively the same as to withhold information absolutely. Only under the most exceptional circumstances, such a threat to or breach of international peace which directly endangers the security of the territory or of the metropolitan power, could withholding of all information conceivably be justifiable."

"3) It is clear that the administering Member could and would determine in the first instance what security and constitutional considerations may require in connection with its reporting obligations.

"4) In a case where an administering Member has been reporting with respect to a territory, pursuant to Article 73(e), and ceases to report on the ground of changes in the constitutional status of such territory, the General Assembly would, and is competent to, review this action, at least to the extent of determining for itself that the territory in question is no longer a "non-self-governing" territory within the meaning of Article 73 and that consequently the administering Member has not violated its obligations under Article 73(e). The General Assembly's competence to do so is based upon its broad powers to discuss and recommend contained in Article 10, in conjunction with the particular provisions of Article 73.

"5) If the General Assembly were to refer these questions to the International Court of Justice for an advisory opinion, it is believed that that tribunal would consider itself fully competent to pass upon them, since that tribunal has jurisdiction, by its Statute to "give an advisory opinion on any legal question at the request of" an authorized United Nations organ. Obviously a question involving an interpretation of a treaty, as with Chapter XI of the Charter, falls within the Court's advisory jurisdiction under Article 65 of its Statute." 4. Invites the Ad Hoc Committee to take into account all information available, including that transmitted to the Secretary-General on the reasons which have led certain Administering Members to cease to transmit information on certain of these territories, and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its seventh regular session;

INTRODUCTION

1. The territories which are covered by Chapter XI of the Charter are these territories whose people have not yet attained a full measure of self-government. It may be noted that the expression "self-government" is qualified in the Charter by the words "full measure" in the English text, "completement" in the French text, and "plenitud" in the Spanish text.

2. The task of the General Assembly, at present, is to indicate the factors which should be taken into account in determining whether the result of the advancement of the people of any given territory is such that that territory has reached a stage of self-government where it falls outside the scope of Article 73(e) of the Charter.

3. The condition under which the provisions of Chapter XI of the Charter cease to apply will be that the inhabitants of the territory have attained, through political advancement, a full measure of self-government. The fulfillment of this condition may be achieved by various means, involving in all cases the expression of the free will of the people. The two principal means are (a) the attainment of independence and (b) the union of the territory on a footing of equal status with other component parts of the metropolitan or other country or its association on the same conditions with the metropolitan or other country or countries. The extent to which the provisions of Article 73e continue to apply in the case of territories which have become neither independent nor fully integrated within another State but which have already attained a full measure of self-government in their internal affairs is a question which merits further study.

4. The two principal forms of political advancement mentioned in the above paragraph, call for the consideration of different factors in determining whether a territory has or has not reached a stage of self-government where it falls outside the scope of Article 73(e) of the Charter.

5. Accordingly, the General Assembly lists under two separate headings below the factors to be taken into account, stressing that the list cannot be regarded as exhaustive or definitive, and that a single factor or particular combination of factors cannot be regarded as decisive in every case. Whether the peoples of a territory should be regarded as having reached a stage of self-government where there is no longer any obligation to transmit information should be solved in the light of the conditions enumerated under either of the two headings, taking into account the circumstances of each particular case, which will need to be studied separately.

6. Nevertheless, the General Assembly considers that the essential factors to be taken into account in deciding whether a Non-Self-Governing Territory has attained a full measure of self-government are the following :

(i) Political advancement: Political advancement of the population sufficient to enable them to decide upon the future destiny of the territory with due knowledge;

(ii) Opinion of the population: The opinion of the population of the Territory, freely expressed by informed and democratic processes as to the status or change in status which they desire.

7. These factors apply both to Non-Self-Governing Territories which have achieved independence and to Non-Self-Governing Territories which have freely united or associated themselves on a footing of equal status with other component parts of the metropolitan or other country or countries. In the latter case, however, the following factors are also essential and should be taken into account:

(i) Legislative representation: Representation without discrimination in the central legislative organs on the same basis as other inhabitants and regions;

(ii) Citizenship: Citizenship without discrimination on the same basis as other inhabitants.

I. FACTORS INDICATIVE OF THE ATTAINMENT OF INDEPENDENCE OR OTHER SEPARATE SYSTEM OF SELF-GOVERNMENT

A. General

1. Political advancement: Political advancement of the population sufficient to enable them to decide upon the future destiny of the territory with due knowledge.

2. Opinion of the population: The opinion of the population of the territory, freely expressed by informed and democratic processes, as to the status or change in status which they desire.

B. International Status

1. Independence: The attainment of independence by the territory, or complete control over its external relations and internal affairs.

2. Eligibility for membership in international organizations: Eligibility for membership in the United Nations or for membership or associate membership in other international organizations; representation by delegates selected by the territorial government.

3. General international relations: Power to enter into direct relations of every kind with other governments and with international institutions, and to negotiate, sign and ratify international conventions.

4. Voluntary limitation of sovereignty: Degree to which the sovereignty of the territory is limited by its own free will when that territory has attained independence or other separate system of self-government.

C. Internal Self-Government

1. Territorial government: Freedom from control or interference by the government of another State in respect of the internal government (legislature, executive, judiciary) and administration of the territory.

2. Participation of the population: Effective participation of the population in the government of the territory by means of an adequate electoral and representative system.

3. Economic and social jurisdiction: Complete autonomy in respect of economic and social affairs.

II. FACTORS INDICATIVE OF THE FREE ASSOCIATION (WHETHER IN A FEDERAL OR UNITARY RELATIONSHIP) OF A TERRITORY ON EQUAL STATUS WITH OTHER COMPONENT PARTS OF THE METROPOLITAN OR OTHER COUNTRY

A. General

1. Political advancement: Political advancement of the population sufficient to enable them to decide upon the future destiny of the territory with due knowledge.

2. Opinion of the population: The opinion of the population of the territory, freely expressed by informed and democratic processes, as to the status or change in status which they desire.

3. Geographical considerations: Extent to which the relations of the territory with the capital of the central government may be affected by circumstances arising out of their respective geographical positions, such as separation by land, sea or other natural obstacles.

4. Ethnic and cultural considerations: Extent to which the population are of different race, language or religion or have a distinct cultural heritage, interests or aspirations, distinguishing them from the peoples of the country with which they freely associate themselves.

5. Constitutional considerations: Association (a) by virtue of the constitution of the metropolitan country or (b) by virtue of a treaty or bilateral agreement affecting the status of the territory taking into account (i) whether the constitutional guarantees extend equally to the associated territory, (ii) whether there are constitutional fields reserved to the territory, and (iii) whether there is provision for the participation of the territory on a basis of equality in any changes in the constitutional system of the State.

B. Status

1. Legislative representation: Representation without discrimination in the central legislative organs on the same basis as other inhabitants and regions.

2. Citizenship: Citizenship without discrimination on the same basis as other inhabitants.

3. Government officials: Appointment or election of officials from the territory on the same basis as those from other parts of the country.

C. Internal Constitutional Conditions

1. Suffrage: Universal and equal suffrage, free periodic elections by secret ballot, freedom of choice of electoral candidates.

2. Local rights and status: Equal rights and status for the inhabitants and local bodies of the territory as enjoyed by inhabitants and local bodies of other parts of the country.

3. Local officials: Appointment or election of officials in the territory on the same basis as those in other parts of the country.

4. Internal legislation: Complete legislative autonomy of the territory, by means of electoral and representative systems, in all matters which in accordance with the normal terms of association are, in the case of non-unitary systems, not reserved to the central government.

AGENDA FOR THE COLONIAL POLICY DISCUSSIONS IN 1950 ENTITLED "PROBLEMS IN CONNECTION WITH THE DEFINITION OF THE CONCEPT OF 'NON-SELF-GOVERNING'"

The following extract (p. 3 of the paper) deals with the question of competence:

"1. The United States agrees that each administering Member has the right to determine the constitutional position and status of any particular territory under its sovereignty. The United States also considers that the decision with a respect to specific territories rests with the administering Members concerned. It is assumed that administering Members and all other Members of the United Nations would wish to respect any opinion or judgment handed down by the International Court of Justice with respect to Chapter XI of the Charter. The United States does not consider, however, that the interpretation of the expressions "non-self-governing territories" and "territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government", since they appear in the Charter, is a matter for unilateral determination by individual administering Members. The United States considers, therefore, that in view of Article 10, the General Assembly would not be exceeding its authority in discussing and attempting to define these expressions, in recommending to administering Members generally the consideration of any definition the Assembly might be able to arrive at, or even in expressing its opinion in general terms, on the principles which have guided or may guide Members in determining on which of its territories it will transmit information. The United States believes that the General Assembly would be unwise to recommend to individual administering Members that they should transmit information on a specific territory or territories."

on Factors by the United States Representative (Gerig)*<sup>1</sup>

[NEW YORK, September 4, 1952.]

Mr. Gerig (United States of America) said that important preparatory work had been done by the two committees which had already studied the subject. Consequently, all that the Ad Hoc Committee had to do was to review the work already done and, possibly, to amend the list of factors in the light of the comments made by governments. On certain points those comments would be very valuable.

His delegation was prepared to examine all the comments with a view to perfecting the list of factors, even though it was generally satisfied with the list which had been submitted to the sixth session of the General Assembly.

In any event, the final list would only serve as a guide for the States which had to supply the information provided for under Article 73e of the Charter. No single factor could be regarded as decisive in every case, except perhaps the freely expressed opinion of the populations concerned, which was the one overriding factor.

If the Committee were to consider all the territories about which information should be submitted, including those about which there was no information and those which had lost their independence, it would become apparent that they differed so much in their constitutional structure that one factor could not be of equal value in each individual case. Nevertheless, the Ad Hoc Committee would be doing useful work in perfecting the list of factors, which should serve as a general guide.

He, too, considered that it was not for the Committee to discuss what authority should finally decide which territories should be the subject of information to be supplied under Article 73e of the Charter.

On the general question of the development of Non-Self-Governing Territories towards self-government, his delegation was convinced that the need to prepare a list of factors was the logical outcome of the actual provisions of Chapter XI of the Charter, which the United States had helped to draft at San Francisco. His country was still fully prepared to carry out the obligations it had undertaken and to implement the provisions of Article 73e and of General Assembly resolution 551 (VI), regarding the supply of information on Non-Self-Governing Territories.

<sup>1</sup> Extracted from the Summary Record of the second meeting of the Committee, New York, Sept. 4, 1952, 2:30 p. m. Gerig, Director of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs, was assisted by three advisers in his capacity as U.S. Representative on the Ad Hoc Committee: William I. Cargo, Deputy Director of the Office of Dependent Areas; Mason Barr, Caribbean Division, Office of Territories, Department of the Interior; and Claude G. Ross, Office of Dependent Area Affairs.

He suggested that the Ad Hoc Committee could submit preliminary remarks to the General Assembly, based on an analysis of the work done thus far. It might also prepare a more complete list of factors, on the understanding that the list could not apply strictly and uniformly in every case.

Regarding the agenda, he agreed with the view expressed by the Venezuelan representative at the previous meeting that the Committee should confine itself to a study of the principal factors; otherwise it might be unable to complete its work within the required time.<sup>2</sup>

[WASHINGTON,] September 8, 1952.

ITEM 9: FUTURE OF THE COMMITTEE ON INFORMATION FROM NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

THE PROBLEM

The problem is to determine the position of the United States Representative to the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories on the Future of the Committee.

RECOMMENDATION

The United States Delegation should support and/or initiate a proposal for the continuation of the Committee for an additional three-year period under its present terms of reference.

<sup>1</sup> This was one of 15 papers in a Position Book entitled "Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories (Third Session) 1952". This and the Position Books for other sessions are found in the IO files and in the ODA files, lot 62 D 182 (for the First through Ninth Sessions, 1950-1958).

<sup>2</sup> For the background of this Committee, see below, "Background". The Committee's Third Session extended from Sept. 11 to Oct. 7, 1952; it met at the Headquarters of the United Nations, New York. The U.S. Representative on the Committee was Benjamin Gerig, Director of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs; the Alternate U.S. Representative was William I. Cargo, Deputy Director of the Office of Dependent Areas.

Documentation relating to this Committee and issues considered by it (not just the 1952 session) is in file 320.14, the IO files, and the ODA files (particularly lot 62 D 182 and lot 62 D 225).

BACKGROUND

The Charter makes no provision for a body to examine and make recommendations on the information which administering Members transmit on non-self-governing territories under Article 73(e). But by resolution the General Assembly in 1946 voted to establish a Committee for this purpose, composed of eight administering and eight elected Members, and in 1947 and again in 1948 voted to re-establish the Committee, for one year. In 1949 the Assembly established the Special Committee on Information Transmitted under Article 73(e) of the Charter for a three-year term and provided for the re-consideration of the future of the Special Committee and its terms of reference in 1952. The United States initiated this proposal as an alternative to establishing a permanent Committee.

When the Committee first met in 1947, it was governed by terms of reference which empowered it to examine the Secretary-General's summaries and analyses of information transmitted, but to make, with respect to this information, recommendations only of a procedural character. The 1948 and 1949 session of the Special Committee, however, operated under new terms of reference which empowered the Committee to make, in addition to procedural recommendations, recommendations of substance provided these were limited to economic, social, and educational matters and were not directed to particular territories. Not until the 1949 session, however, did the Special Committee, or, indeed the General Assembly, venture to make substantive recommendations. In establishing the Committee in 1949 for a three-year term the General Assembly gave it substantially the same terms of reference as those enjoyed by the Committee of 1948 and 1949, maintaining the previous limited recommendations on substantive recommendations.

In 1949 the Assembly also adopted a joint United States-Mexico Resolution to have the Committee give particular attention to one aspect of conditions in non-self-governing territories each year during its three-year tenure. In 1950, the Committee discussed educational conditions in non-self-governing territories and prepared a report which was favorably received. In 1951 the Committee gave major emphasis to economic problems and development. At its present session the Committee will give major attention to social conditions.

The Committee in 1951 also completed work on the revision of the Standard Form, which is the "topical outline for the guidance of members in submitting information under Article 73(e)."

In addition to discussions on the educational, economic and social conditions, the Committee has dealt with problems with political implications. Among these are "the application of the Declaration of Human Rights in Non-Self-Governing Territories"; "the factors which should be taken into account in determining if a territory is or is not a territory which has not achieved a full measure of self-government"; and "the question of the cessation of information on Surinam and the Netherlands Antilles."

ATTITUDE OF THE ADMINISTERING AUTHORITIES

The United Kingdom, Belgium and France have participated in the work of the Committee only with considerable reservations. They have consistently advocated a very narrow interpretation of the functions of the Committee, insisting that they should remain procedural. Their representatives have stated their reservations as to the legality of the Committee at each of its past two sessions.

Recent conversations with representatives of these three members have indicated their tentative views in regard to the extension of the Committee's life. The United Kingdom has stated that it considered the extension of the Committee inevitable. It would participate in the same way as in the past if the Committee's life is extended but would oppose any extension of the Committee's functions, and would abstain on a General Assembly Resolution to extend the life of the Committee with its present functions.

The French representative has stated that its Government has not decided its position. He feels, however, that the Government would either abstain or vote against a Resolution to extend the life of the Committee with its present functions, and will certainly vote against a Resolution which would extend its functions.

The Belgium representatives have said that their Government would vote against any proposal to re-establish the Committee whether or not its functions were extended. They would probably participate if the Committee's functions were not extended but would not participate if the Committee's functions were appreciably extended, or if any aspects of Belgium's administration of the Congo were discussed.

The Netherlands Government in a recent note to the Department stated its opinion that the Administering Powers should proceed on the assumption that the Committee will be maintained. It considers that the Committee had done good and useful work and that on the whole the discussions in the Committee were matter of fact and observations were made which more than once proved to be of value to the Administering Powers. The note further stated that one of the advantages of the Committee, probably due to its balanced membership, is that its activities exercise a favorable influence on the work of the Fourth Committee.

ATTITUDE OF NON-ADMINISTERING MEMBERS

Non-Administering Members, who, in the General Assembly, outnumber administering Members in a ratio of 52-8, have generally avored making the Special Committee a permanent organ. There have also been attempts on the part of some to give the Committee wider powers, including the right to receive petitions and send visiting missions to non-self-governing territories and generally to make the Special Committee as far as possible the counterpart of the Trusteeship Council.

PAST UNITED STATES POSITION

The United States originally opposed, in 1946, the establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee. The United States supported its continuance in 1947, and, in 1948, was the author of a compromise proposal adopted by the Special Committee and by the General Assembly that the Committee meet again in 1949 "without prejudice as to the future".

In 1949 the United States Delegation to the Special Committee was instructed to "initiate or co-sponsor and actively support" a proposal for the establishment on a three-year basis of a Special Committee similar to the 1948 Committee. This was to be without prejudice to the re-examination of the whole issue in 1952. The United States should, however, vote against any proposal to make the Committee permanent or to alter its previous balanced composition and terms of reference.

The United States position was based on the following consideration:

1. Since General Assembly consideration of, and recommendations concerning, the information transmitted under Article 73(e) could not be prevented in any case, there was an advantage to administering Members in having this information considered in the first instance by a balanced Special Committee.

2. In view of this anticipated pressure for the establishment of a permanent Committee, the three-year proposal seemed the best compromise and the one most likely to command the necessary support. Denmark and New Zealand, among the administering Members, were reported ready to support this compromise.

It was agreed further that the United States, in the interests of directing the Committee away from purely propaganda speeches should take the leadership in promoting constructive substantive discussion and to this end might explore with other delegations the possibility of the Committee's concentrating, during each of the next three years on one of the three functional fields—economic, social, or educational conditions—covered by the Article 73(e) information.

DISCUSSION OF RECOMMENDATION

Sufficient support for this proposal might be obtained from the more moderate non-administering Members to make this an acceptable alternative to the establishment of the Committee on a permanent basis over the objections of the Administering Members. This proposal would enable the Committee to continue its procedure of examining one major aspect of conditions in non-self-governing territories at each of its sessions. The proposal would have the added advantage of providing a further trial period as a basis for recommendations at such time as the General Conference for the review of the Charter is convened (1955).<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup>The Committee on Information at its Third Session discussed at considerable length the question of its future; and finally adopted by a vote of 13-3 (Belgium, France, United Kingdom)-0 a resolution proposed by the United States to extend the Committee for an additional 3-year period under its current terms of reference. An Egyptian amendment to the U.S. resolution which would have added a fourth year was defeated by a vote of 8-8(US)-0. Earlier a proposal to reconstitute the Committee on a permanent basis was defeated by a vote of 7-8(US)-1, Cuba having chosen to abstain rather than support the resolution because it had been initiated by the Soviet Union. Participants: Baron van Boetzelaer, Netherlands Embassy
 Dr. Durward V. Sandifer, UNA
 Mr. William I. Cargo, UND

Baron van Boetzelaer called at his request and left the attached aide-mémoire with Mr. Sandifer. The aide-mémoire refers to the item on the agenda of the forthcoming General Assembly concerning the decision of the Netherlands Government, announced during 1951, to terminate the transmission of information to the United Nations under Article 73(e) of the Charter about Surinam and the Netherlands Antilles. The Netherlands Government states the view that it would be preferable to postpone the discussion of this item until next year and inquires whether the United States would be prepared to initiate action in the General Assembly leading to possible postponement.

Baron van Boetzelaer emphasized that his Government felt that a discussion on Surinam and the Netherlands Antilles in the General Assembly at this time might have a disturbing effect on political conditions in Surinam and might also jeopardize the further progress of the roundtable conference, the resumption of which is anticipated in the near future.

Mr. Sandifer said that the possibility of postponing the Surinam item had not been taken into account in the preparations thus far undertaken in the Department on this subject. He said that, among other factors, this question would need to be studied in the light of other agenda items and the over-all situation in the General Committee. Mr. Sandifer observed that, as the Netherlands Government had already ceased transmitting information on Surinam, a good case would need to be made if a proposal for postponement were to be successful in the Assembly.

In response to questions as to the public arguments which the Netherlands Government thought might be used to justify postponement, Baron van Boetzelaer said that he would make inquiries and supply information to the Department on this point, but that he thought the situation was simply that the Netherlands Government had decided that the development of self-government warranted a cessation of the information and that the competence to make this decision rested with them.

Mr. Sandifer said, while we wished to be as helpful as possible to the Netherlands Government, the Department would need to study the aide-mémoire and that the Netherlands Government would be informed of our views. He observed that the Department would need to consider specifically whether the United States would be able to take a lead in the matter as requested by the Netherlands Government.

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

1. The Netherlands Government has given serious consideration to the question whether the temporary interruption of the RTC between the Netherlands, Surinam and the Netherlands Antilles should influence the Netherlands policy of terminating the transmission of information about the areas concerned to the United Nations.

It maintains the view that already now the West-Indies parts of the Realm should not any longer be considered to be non-self-governing territories, about which information should be transmitted under Article 73(e) of the United Nations Charter, these territories having attained autonomy in internal affairs since the Interim Order of Government came into force.

Moreover it has always maintained that it is the exclusive responsibility of the Administering Power to ultimately decide whether it should discontinue the transmission of information about certain areas. This responsibility does not rest with the General Assembly.

Finally it is the opinion of the Netherlands Government that the General Assembly mistakenly saw a connection in the termination of the transmission of information on Surinam and the Netherlands Antilles and the RTC. The only remaining issue to be dealt with at the RTC is the establishment of a system to manage the collective interests of the Realm. The right of self-government, granted by the Interim Order of Government, is not in any way affected thereby.

The Netherlands Government has therefore reached the conclusion that its policy of terminating the transmission of information to the United Nations about Surinam and the Netherlands Antilles is not to be modified on account of the interruption of the RTC.

2. One of the reasons why the RTC did not immediately lead to the desired results is to be found in the complexity and magnitude of its task: to lay down in constitutional form the management of the collective interests of the different partners forms a problem for which speedy solutions cannot be expected. A major difficulty confronting the Conference in this connection was the great difference in resources between the three participants. This difficulty stood in the way of reaching a solution whereby the smaller participants would feel that they had been allotted a fair share in the management of the collective interests.

Moreover the approach of such problems by the Latin American peoples often has an emotional character whilst the Dutch prefer discussions on the basis of constitutional law.

Nevertheless the Netherlands Government is confident that a resumption of the Conference will lead to agreement and that this resumption will take place in the near future.

The Secretary General of the United Nations is to be informed to that effect in due course.

It is therefore the considered opinion of the Netherlands Government that a discussion of the cessation of the transmission of information on Surinam and the Netherlands Antilles is inopportune at this juncture and that it would be preferable to postpone it until next year.

3. There is an additional reason why postponement would be desirable. The American Embassy at The Hague has brought to the attention of the Netherlands Government that an American consular officer at Surinam has informed the State Department of his uneasiness about the activities of certain extremist groups in that territory. A discussion of item 38 of the agenda of the General Assembly might activate these circles in causing further disturbances of the political balance in Surinam, thus hampering its economic progress.

4. A discussion of item 38 of the agenda of the General Assembly might further aggravate the many existing controversies in the Fourth Commission. The remaining issues of the RTC might be drawn into a debate, leading to arguments about the right of self-determination.

This could not only give rise to heated discussions in other Commissions but would also certainly jeopardize the solution of the remaining problems before the RTC.

5. A proposal to postpone discussion of item 38 might already be made in the Steering Committee of the next General Assembly in order to attain that it be removed from the agenda on the basis of the information received by the Secretary General as indicated under 2. This attempt should however, only be made if there is a reasonable chance of success. If and when this would not seem to be the case it would be preferable if the Fourth Commission would move to postpone discussion until next year through a short resolution.

The Netherlands Government considers that, if it would itself take the initiative in a move for postponement, the impression might be created that it has something to conceal. In order to obviate possible suspicions to that effect it would prefer such a move to be made by another power. It would therefore greatly appreciate to know whether the Government of the United States would be prepared to initiate action leading to a postponement of the discussion of item 38 of the agenda of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

Subject: Talks on Fourth Committee Matters with Non-Administering United Nations Members

Pursuant to the plan discussed in the Working Group on Colonial Problems it is proposed to hold discussions before the opening of the Seventh Session of the General Assembly with selected Non-Administering Members of the United Nations on the more important items on the agenda of the Fourth Committee. Such discussions would be held in New York or Washington, depending in each case on the availability of suitable representatives of the Governments concerned. In addition to these talks it is planned to send a circular airgram to <sup>1</sup> Addressed to the UN Advisers of the following bureaus of the Department of State: Ruth Bacon, Bureau of Far Eastern Affairs; Harry Howard, Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian and African Affairs; and George Monsma, Bureau of Inter-American Affairs. These officers were representatives of their bureaus in a Departmental committee known as the UN Liaison Committee, which also included membership from the UN Affairs (the steering group) and from the Bureau of European Affairs. A copy of this memorandum was sent also to Ward Allen, UN Adviser, Bureau of European Affairs; this bureau's relationship was wholly with Administering Members. The airgram was sent subsequently Oct. 18, 1952, not printed (320/10-1852).

United States Missions in nearly all non-administering countries so that an exchange of views on important Fourth Committee items may be arranged with the various Foreign Offices. Talks with certain administering powers either have been held or are planned for Washington and New York.

It is proposed that the following list of topics be sent to each non-administering state with whom it is intended to hold discussions, along with an invitation to participate in such talks. The invitation would also ask the Government concerned whether it has any other topics to suggest. The topics we would propose are: (1) Administrative Unions; (2) Ewe and Togoland Unification; (3) Participation of Inhabitants in the Work of the Trusteeship Council and the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories; (4) Future of the Special (Non-Self-Governing Territories) Committee; and (5) Factors which should be taken into Account in deciding whether a Territory is or is not Self-Governing.

The following countries, listed by area, are those with which UND would suggest talks. We should like the advice of each geographic bureau as to the composition of this list for countries in its area, and as to the level of representation and the location of each talk. UND believes that the talks will be most beneficial when they are held with individuals familiar with Fourth Committee matters, preferably representatives on the Fourth Committee.

Far Eastern Countries: Burma, China, Philippines, Thailand.

Near Eastern and African Countries: India, Pakistan, Iraq, Lebanon, Syria.

Latin American Countries: Brazil, Chile, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Mexico, Uruguay, Venezuela.

It is expected that the airgram on Fourth Committee matters to our Missions in non-administering countries, which will form the substantive basis for the above talks, will be sent to you shortly for clearance. Meanwhile, however, it is hoped that agreement can be reached promptly as to the agenda and arrangements for these talks in order that they may be initiated in the near future.<sup>2</sup>

[WASHINGTON,] September 19, 1952.

Subject: Postponement of the item on Cessation of the Transmission of Information on Surinam from the forthcoming General Assembly agenda

Participants: Dr. de Beus, Minister, Netherlands Embassy
Mr. Durward V. Sandifer, UNA
Mr. Benjamin Gerig, UND

Following a conversation on this subject on September 8, Dr. de Beus came to the Department today to learn whether the United States could take some initiative in the forthcoming General Assembly in order to secure postponement of the subject item from the Assembly agenda because of the Netherlands' fear that existing internal political conditions in Surinam would be worsened by a discussion of this point in the Assembly at this time. (An aide-mémoire on this subject was presented to the Department on September 8.)

Mr. Sandifer said that the Department had given consideration to this subject and while agreeing that it would probably be desirable to secure postponement of this item for the reasons given, the Department did not see clearly what initiative the United States could take which would secure the desired action by the Assembly. He pointed out that other so-called colonial questions will be on the agenda this year and any moves which the United States or other administering Members might take could have unfavorable repercussions. He believed, therefore, that the United States should not, in any case, take any initiative alone in securing postponement. He further raised the question of any convincing arguments which might be used.

Dr. de Beus said that the best argument would be that the round-table discussions on the future relations of Surinam to the other members of the Dutch Commonwealth were suspended and that since this argument was contained in the joint resolution of last year which the Assembly adopted, it could be used again. He pointed out, however, that the Dutch would not wish to use it since they did not agree that there was any necessary relation between their right to cease reporting on Surinam, in view of its new status, and the round-table discussions. His government agreed, however, that third parties could use this argument and thought that the best place to bring about a postponement of the item would be in the General Committee.

Mr. Sandifer thought that several of the Members who sponsored the joint resolution for postponing this item in the last Assembly, namely, Denmark, India, the Philippines and the United States, might take the initiative but it was not clear how many of these would be in the General Committee. Another alternative would be to leave the item remain on the agenda and secure postponement of its consideration in the Fourth Committee by putting it down to the end of the list and perhaps not getting around to it by the time the Assembly is ready to adjourn. Dr. de Beus felt that as between the two alternatives, the best would be to get it postponed in the General Committee.

Mr. Sandifer said that we would make some further inquiries as to whether some of the sponsors of last year's resolution would not think that since the round-table conferences were not completed, a further postponement was desirable. He repeated that the United States itself would not wish alone to take this action. Dr. de Beus agreed with this suggestion.

Dr. de Beus then said that since the Netherlands Ambassador would be seeing Secretary Acheson on Tuesday, he hoped that they could agree on the course of action to be taken, probably along the foregoing lines.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Dr. J. H. van Roijen, the Netherlands Ambassador, had already spoken to Secretary of State Acheson on Sept. 10 on the occasion of calling on Acheson with Dr. J. M. A. H. Luns, Netherlands Minister Without Portfolio, who was visiting in the United States. Acheson summarized what he understood to be the Netherlands position "with respect to this specialized problem", and asked the Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs (Perkins), who was present, "to have the Department study the matter". (Memorandum of conversation, drafted by R. D. McClelland of the Office of Western European Affairs, Sept. 10, 1952, UNP files, lot 58 D 742, "Cessation of Transformation of Information by the Netherlands Section 1 (1952-53)") No record has been found of any subsequent Acheson-de Beus conversation on this matter.

The Department of State agrees with the view of Her Majesty's Government that the items "Membership of Visiting Missions" and "Economic Commission for Africa" do not appear to call for discussion at present. The Department suggests that they be dropped from the agenda, and that the items on Tunis, Morocco and Cyprus be discussed during the general discussions prior to the colonial talks.

The Department of State welcomes the opportunity for a further discussion of colonial questions with representatives of Her Majesty's Government.

COLONIAL QUESTIONS IN THE UNITED NATIONS, 1952

OBSERVATIONS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE ON THE AIDE-MÉMOIRE FROM THE BRITISH EMBASSY DATED SEPTEMBER 3, 1952

(The numbers in parentheses refer to paragraphs in the memorandum appended to the British aide-mémoire.)

General Policy—(paragraphs 1-6)

The United States agrees with the view of the United Kingdom Government that the interest of the world in the affairs of non-self-governing territories, springing from a variety of motives, is a legitimate interest which finds an opportunity for expression in the United Nations. We agree wholeheartedly that the United Nations also provides an excellent opportunity for administering authorities to publicize their policies and achievements, to expound on the complexities of the problems they face, and to allay anxiety and prejudice in world opinion concerning colonial affairs.

We are pleased to note that the United Kingdom seeks to avoid retreating into negative arguments, and we agree that the administering authorities have made too little use of the strong case inherent in their record of achievement. We agree further with the view of the United Kingdom that certain non-administering delegations are beginning to adopt a more mature approach to colonial questions, and that this tendency should be encouraged. We believe that the cooperative and restrained attitude which the United Kingdom plans to adopt in the 1952 Assembly will assist materially in enlisting the sympathy and support of moderate elements.

The paper was cleared on Sept. 19 in a meeting of representatives of the Bureau of UN Affairs, the geographic bureaus, and the Assistant Legal Adviser for UN Affairs. The memorandum was transmitted to the British Embassy on Sept. 20 under cover of the Department of State aide-mémoire, Sept. 20, supra.

With regard to the five limitations in paragraph 5 which you would wish to place on United Nations action, we feel that a distinction must be made between what is desirable and undesirable in practice and what is legal and illegal under the Charter. As you are aware, our interpretation of the Charter would not provide a legal basis for your view that you cannot concede the right of the United Nations to discuss political affairs of non-self-governing territories, and that you cannot recognize the right of the United Nations to make recommendations relating to particular non-self-governing territories. We do believe, however, that the proper and most orderly way to initiate a discussion of political affairs of non-self-governing territories would be to have such items placed on the agenda in the normal manner. And as a practical matter we consider that, in general, action by the United Nations along these lines should be discouraged. We do not believe, however, that discussion of political affairs of non-self-governing territories would necessarily have such far-reaching consequences as you anticipate. With regard to the despatch of Visiting Missions to non-self-governing territories and the holding of United Nations plebiscites in non-self-governing territories, we share your view that such action should not be taken except with the consent of the administering authority. With regard to the right of petition in matters relating to non-self-governing territories, and the granting of oral hearings, we believe there is no legal basis in the Charter for extending to non-self-governing territories the system of oral hearings and petitions established in the international trusteeship system, and we think that proposals to this effect should be opposed.

We are gratified to note the large measure of agreement between the United States and the United Kingdom on the positive and constructive approach which should be made in the Fourth Committee. As you will note from our comments on specific issues, however, we are concerned lest the limitations which you wish to place on United Nations action might jeopardize the success of your tactics.

Administrative Unions—(paragraph 8)

We note that the United Kingdom is reasonably satisfied with the operation of the Trusteeship Council's Standing Committee on Administrative Unions and is prepared to accept the Committee's reports as a basis of discussion in the Fourth Committee. The United States shares this view. Furthermore, we hope that the United Kingdom is correct in the belief that the Fourth Committee will in time tend to follow the Trusteeship Council's lead in accepting the administrative unions while maintaining a close watch on their operation in practice. In the General Assembly's Committee on Administrative Unions, which is to present its observations to the Assembly on the Special Report on Administrative Unions (T/1026) prepared by the Trusteeship Council, the United States will attempt to persuade the Committee to present favorable observations on this report. We note that the United Kingdom is prepared to appear before the Committee, but we hope that the Committee will limit itself to examining the Special Report of the Trusteeship Council, and will not attempt to question the Administering Authorities concerned, as we believe that this function should be performed by the Trusteeship Council. We share the view of the United Kingdom that the General Assembly's Committee on Administrative Unions is superfluous, and we should take the position that it should not be reconstituted for another year.

Ewe and Togoland Unification—(paragraph 9)

We are in general agreement with the view of the United Kingdom that the future of British Togoland lies with the Gold Coast. The views of the inhabitants of the two Togolands are in a state of flux, however, and we do not feel it possible to prophesy at this time the outcome of the Ewe and Togoland unification problem. The wishes of the inhabitants might be realized, for example, if all or part of British Togoland should unite with all or part of French Togoland and the larger area become a part of the Gold Coast. We are not suggesting this as a solution of the problem. We are merely stating that while we share your views as to the ultimate future of British Togoland, we feel that the problem is somewhat more complex than your memorandum indicates. We note, moreover, that you make no mention of French Togoland, although developments in that territory are an inextricable part of the problem.

We are disturbed by reports of incidents in French Togoland which might be interpreted as efforts to interfere with the free expression of the views of pro-unification groups to the Visiting Mission. We feel that such reports make it difficult to avoid extreme action by the General Assembly. In general, we feel that the Assembly will desire convincing evidence of the real wishes of the inhabitants of the Southern as well as the Northern sections of both Togolands. It would probably not be sufficient, for example, to demonstrate that a majority of the inhabitants of British Togoland desired association with the Gold Coast unless it were also clear that such a majority included a majority of the inhabitants of Southern Togoland. In this connection we have been puzzled by reports of resistance on the part of inhabitants of Southern Togoland to a recent visit to that area by the Prime Minister of the Gold Coast. We would appreciate any further information on this matter which might clarify the situation. With regard to French Togoland we also feel that the views of the inhabitants of the Southern section have an importance somewhat greater than the proportion of the total population of the territory that they represent.

It is not clear to us that the Ewe and Togoland unification movements are "necessarily abortive", at least in the long range, and we cannot therefore support your efforts to discourage further United Nations interest in this matter. In our view the General Assembly has thus far acted with considerable moderation. It has limited itself to efforts to ascertain the state of public opinion in the territories and to encourage the development of machinery for cooperation between the two territories on their common problems. The Assembly has come to recognize the complexity of the question, and we feel that a frank discussion of its continuing complexities is more likely to lead to moderate action by the Assembly than would efforts to discourage further consideration of it. Nor do we feel that the former course of action would add any obstacle to the closer association of British Togoland with the Gold Coast, a process which we agree is already demonstrating its advantages to the former.

Cameroons Unification—(paragraph 10)

We agree with the view of the United Kingdom and are satisfied with the action of the Trusteeship Council, which felt that no recommendations on the unification of the two Cameroons was necessary and limited itself to expressing the hope that the measures being taken by the Administering Authorities will eliminate frontier difficulties. The Cameroons unification movement does not appear to have obtained substantial popular support in either territory. In view of the rapidly changing political situation in West Africa, however, it seems likely that the Trusteeship Council will wish to continue to keep this matter under review. In this connection, it could be pointed out in the Fourth Committee, if necessary, that the 1952 Visiting Mission will presumably give attention to the views of the inhabitants of the two territories on the unification question. It would be premature, therefore, for the General Assembly to go into the matter until the Trusteeship Council has had an opportunity to examine the Visiting Mission's Report.

Participation of Indigenous Inhabitants of Trust Territories in the work of the Trusteeship Council—(paragraph 11)

The United States considers that the basic approach embodied in the Trusteeship Council's resolution, by which indigenous inhabitants would be attached, where appropriate, to the Delegations of Administering Authorities, represents the most practicable and satisfactory means of providing for the closer participation of the inhabitants of trust territories in the work of the Council. In principle, we consider it undesirable to provide for representation in United Nations bodies for the inhabitants of trust or non-self-governing territories apart from the representation of the responsible administering authorities or their territorial administrations. Nonetheless, in view of the widespread opinion in the General Assembly that a closer association of the inhabitants in the work of the Council is desirable and in view of the value which such closer participation, appropriately brought about, might have, not only for indigenous populations and the United Nations, but also for the administering authority concerned, the United States believes that the best course of action in the Seventh General Assembly will be to support the Trusteeship Council's action as a practicable and positive alternative to other more extreme proposals which may be forthcoming. While certain methods for bringing such association about are already in operation, the United States will give careful consideration to any proposals which may be made with respect to further methods for achieving such association, to the practical and legal problems which they may raise, to the advantages which they may offer, and to any suitable variations in phrasing of the resolution adopted by the Trusteeship Council which might make it acceptable to a larger number of United Nations Members without altering the principles involved. The United States will actively oppose any proposal which would advocate or attempt to establish associate membership or other forms of dual representation for trust territories or their inhabitants in the Trusteeship Council.

In connection with this question, we should like to discuss with the United Kingdom the steps which might be taken to implement the Trusteeship Council's resolution. We are giving consideration to attaching a suitably qualified inhabitant of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands to the United States Delegation, and we understand that at one time the United Kingdom was considering attaching inhabitants from trust territories under United Kingdom administration to its delegation.

The problem of time-tables or schedules for the attainment of self-government or independence—(paragraphs 12-13)

The United States believes that no useful purpose will be served by setting strict and detailed time-tables in accordance with which all Trust Territories would be expected to achieve self-government or independence. The United Kingdom will recall that the United States abstained at the Sixth General Assembly on Resolution 558(VI) in which the Assembly requested information on this matter. The basis for the United States abstention was our opposition to the rigid language of sub-paragraph (e), which asked for information on "the period of time in which it is expected that the Trust Territory shall attain the objective of self-government or independence."

We believe that the information requested in sub-paragraphs (a) through (d) can be supplied by administering authorities and that an appropriate answer can be made to sub-paragraph (e) explaining in detail the reasons why a rigid statement cannot be made as to the period in which it is expected that a territory will attain self-government or independence. We intend to supply this information in relation to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands in as great detail as possible since we feel that a full and frank presentation of the problems involved will assist administering authorities in rallying responsible opinion in the Assembly to support their view that, in general, specific time-tables are impracticable. We consider, however, that in certain cases in which a territory is nearing the goal of self-government or independence, there may be advantages in announcing a date for the achievement of the goal as the United States did in the case of the Philippines.

Future of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories—(paragraphs 14-17)

The United States recognizes the practical advantages of having the information transmitted under Article 73(e) of the Charter discussed initially in the balanced Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories, and we believe that the Committee serves a useful purpose. A continuation of the practice of giving major consideration annually to one of the functional fields covered by information transmitted under Article 73(e) can result in a substantive contribution by the Committee. We do not believe that changes in the terms of reference of the Committee are either necessary or desirable.

The United States hopes that, despite the wide degree of sentiment which may be present in the Committee and the Assembly for the establishment of the Committee on a permanent basis, it may be possible to reconstitute the Committee for an additional three year period.

In view of Article 22 of the Charter, we cannot agree that the establishment of the Committee on a permanent basis would be tantamount to an amendment of the Charter by resolution. Our reason for favoring a three-year extension of the Committee is based on pragmatic rather than constitutional grounds. We believe that if the tenure of the Committee is subject to periodic review, it will be easier to divert efforts to extend the functions of the Committee.

Discussion of political information—(paragraphs 18-20)

The United States believes that it would be unwise for the General Assembly to state explicitly that it has the right to discuss political conditions in non-self-governing territories and hopes that a situation can be avoided where the General Assembly would undertake to do so. However, we believe that a certain amount of "political" discussion is inevitable even in connection with economic and social questions, and that it will be difficult if not impossible to draw a sharp line. When such discussion is believed by an administering authority to have serious effects on the internal situation of a territory it would be appropriate to appeal to the common sense of delegates.

While the United States maintains the view that the transmission of political information is not required under Article 73(e), the United Kingdom is aware that the United States has voluntarily transmitted such information without serious effects. The transmission of such information does not, of course, prejudice the right of administering members to determine the status of their territories under Chapter XI.

We believe that the transmission of political information can in certain instances be beneficial to the administering authorities since it may prevent unjustified suspicions and give the administering authorities an opportunity to publicize the political progress made in their territories.

Factors determining whether or not a Territory is Non-Self-Governing—(paragraph 21)

The United States agrees that each administering Member has the right to determine the constitutional position and status of any particular territory under its sovereignty. The United States also considers that the decision with respect to specific territories rests solely with the administering Members concerned. It is assumed that administering Members and all other Members of the United Nations would wish to respect any opinion or judgement handed down by the International Court of Justice with respect to Chapter XI of the Charter. The United States does not consider, however, that the interpretation of the expressions "non-self-governing territories" and "territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government", since they appear in the Charter, is a matter for unilateral determination by individual administering Members. The United States considers, therefore, that in view of Article 10, the General Assembly would not be exceeding its authority in discussing and attempting to define these expressions, in recommending to administering Members generally the consideration of any definition the Assembly might be able to arrive at, or even in expressing its opinion in general terms, on the principles which have guided or may guide Members in determining on which of its territories it will transmit information. As for a General Assembly resolution concerning the decision of an administering authority to cease transmission of information, we believe that such a resolution should not be worded in a manner which would imply that the decision of the administering authority is subject to approval or disapproval by the General Assembly.

With regard to the general problem created by the cessation of transmission of information, we find it understandable that certain

United Nations Members may be concerned lest Chapter XI be circumvented by premature cessation, and we believe that the administering authorities should seek to avoid arousing apprehensions on this point.

Central African Federation—(paragraphs 22-26)

With regard to the possibility of a Central African Federation, we note the statement of the United Kingdom that it is by no means certain that a Federal Authority will in fact be set up. This being the case, we agree that the General Assembly should not discuss such hypothetical issues when it has so many real issues to consider. Because of our view of the General Assembly's wide powers under Article 10, however, we could not support the United Kingdom's views that the establishment of the federation is a constitutional subject and thus outside the competence of the General Assembly, or the United Kingdom view that this question is a matter of domestic jurisdiction. We appreciate the fact that the three Central African territories might derive economic benefits from a federation, and we assume that the United Kingdom's traditional respect for the will of the indigenous inhabitants of its territories would prevent it from establishing a federation against the wishes of these inhabitants. We believe that such a step might damage the United Kingdom's reputation for wisdom and justice in its relations with dependent peoples, and might jeopardize efforts of the West to maintain the friendship of Africans.

Kenya Land Question—(paragraphs 27-32)

We share your hope that discussion of the Kenya land question can be confined to the corridors. However, it is not clear to us on what legal basis we could prevent it from being referred to the Second, Third, or Fourth Committee. It is our feeling that if reference should be made to this question in one of the above committees in connection with related agenda items, a brief moderate reply on the substance by the United Kingdom representative would be the best tactic to avoid building this matter up into one on which the Assembly might feel called upon to express itself.

With regard to the possibility of a request for an oral hearing for anyone claiming to represent the Kenya Africans, we feel that such hearings should be granted only in exceptional circumstances. We hope that discussion of this question can be avoided or kept to a minimum in the United Nations at this time.

Racial Discrimination—(paragraphs 33-35)

The United States is in general agreement with the United Kingdom's approach to United Nations discussion of race relations in non-self-governing territories. Full and free discussion on this difficult subject can only be valuable to the extent that it is conducted in an objective and dispassionate manner.

We believe that the wisest course for the administering authorities in the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories would be to present their experiences in a free and frank manner and to invite non-administering Members to make available their best thought and experience on the subject.

While recognizing that the practice of racial discrimination is not restricted to any particular group, we are not yet convinced of the wisdom of an "attempt to demonstrate that anti-white discrimination constitutes a potential menace to international peace and a serious bar to the economic and social development of mankind". Such an attempt would undoubtedly provoke a strong reaction from certain Members of the United Nations and would have the effect of provoking that type of discussion which we seek to avoid.

With regard to your suggestion that this question might be referred to ECOSOC, we think it might be feasible, after the question has been adequately discussed, to refer the records of the discussion to ECOSOC, if such a proposal is made. We do not wish to create the impression that we are attempting to prevent a discussion of the problem.

Human Rights and Non-Self-Governing Territories—(paragraph 36)

The United States notes that arrangements are going forward with respect to the application of the European Covenant on Human Rights to all British non-self-governing territories. It is to be hoped that the principles embodied in this Covenant and in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights will be increasingly observed in all non-self-governing territories.

We share the view of the United Kingdom that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights is intended to be a goal of achievement toward which the people not only of non-self-governing territories but of all nations should strive. We believe that constructive results can be achieved in the furtherance in all countries of the principles of the Declaration through the provision of information regarding its implementation in all countries, including non-self-governing territories. The United States will continue to report on significant developments in this field, and hopes that all administering Members will do so in respect of their own territories. In this connection, the United States intends to submit to the United Nations a report supplemental to its 1951 report on the application of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. This report deals almost entirely with those articles of the new Puerto Rican Constitution which pertain to Human Rights. On balance, we believe that the administering authorities, particularly the United Kingdom, would gain far more by meeting the General Assembly's reasonable wishes on this question than by any other attitude.

British Honduras—(paragraphs 37-40)

The United States Government agrees with the United Kingdom Government that it is not possible to forecast the specific combination of circumstances which might provoke discussion at the United Nations on the question of British Honduras. We believe that there are two distinct parts of the Problem: (1) the competence of the General Assembly to discuss conditions in individual non-self-governing territories, including information transmitted under Article 73(e) of the Charter, and (2) the question of sovereignty over British Honduras.

We agree that the question of sovereignty over British Honduras is a legal issue which is not an appropriate matter for discussion in the Fourth Committee. We agree, moreover, that it would be desirable to keep discussion of individual territories and of political conditions to a minimum, and to endeavor to ensure that the recommendations of the Assembly in this field are couched in general terms which do not refer to any particular non-self-governing territory. We cannot find a basis for eliminating discussion of such matters as British Honduras any more than we have been able to find a basis for preventing the Soviet Union from discussing conditions in Puerto Rico.

We believe that the remarks of the Representative of Guatemala concerning British Honduras at the last session of the General Assembly were quite ill-advised. We have been impressed by the fact that none of the other non-administering Members have shown any sympathy or support for the Guatemalan position. We hope that the poor reception of his remarks last year will induce the Guatemalan representative to speak with greater moderation at this Assembly. In any case, we hope it will be possible for the United Kingdom to handle this question in such a way as to avoid generating support for Guatemala.

Participation of Non-Self-Governing Territories in the work of the Special Committee—(paragraph 41)

The United States considers that, in general, the same approach should be followed in dealing with this question as was followed in the Trusteeship Council. At the 1952 meeting of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories the United States intends to support action which will endorse the practice of some administering Members in attaching qualified persons from their territories to their delegations to the Committee and will favor the continuation and increase of this practice where appropriate and practicable. We would oppose in the Committee any proposals which would establish separate or dual representation for dependent territories through associate membership or by other means.

The United States considers that the participation in the work of the United Nations through service on the delegations of administering authorities provides an opportunity for bringing dependent areas into closer contact with the work of the United Nations; similarly, their participation in this form can be of value not only to the United Nations body concerned, but to the administering Member of whose delegation they form a part. This is particularly true in the case of responsible indigenous leaders and qualified indigenous experts in various fields. Even in the absence of indigenous personnel suitably qualified for such an assignment, there would be advantages both to the United Nations and the administering Member from such participation by non-indigenous personnel from territorial administrations. To secure these advantages, however, there is no need to create a new status of "associate membership" for the territorial administration. The creation of such a status for territorial administrations would no doubt lead to increased pressure to make the representation of associate members completely separate from that of the administering authority, and to provide that the representative in each case should be chosen directly by the people. Since the United States is opposed in principle to dual representation—that is to representation of the responsible government, on the one hand, and of the people governed, on the other—it believes that it would be wise to try to avoid creating a situation which might lead to increased pressure to bring about that end.

On the assumption that the Committee's action on this subject at its present session will be basically the same as that taken by the Trusteeship Council, the United States will take the position in the Assembly that such action represents the most practicable and satisfactory means of providing for closer participation for non-self-governing territories in the work of the Committee, and will actively oppose any proposals in the Assembly which would advocate or attempt to establish associate membership or any other form of dual representation for non-self-governing territories or their inhabitants in the Committee.

Human Rights: Resolutions on Self-Determination of Peoples and Nations—(paragraphs 49-53)

We agree that the General Assembly is not likely this year to be concerned in detail with the article on self-determination drafted by the Human Rights Commission for inclusion in the Human Rights Covenants. We are prepared, if necessary, to point out that, in view of the fact that the Commission has been asked to complete the draft Covenants for submission to the Eighth General Assembly, it would be desirable to defer consideration of a draft article for those Covenants at the forthcoming Seventh Session. If, nevertheless, there is general debate on this draft article, we would make clear that the United States supports the principle of self-determination and intends to promote its realization in accordance with its constitutional processes and the provisions of the Charter. We would, however, reserve our right to propose changes when this Article is considered in detail. Such a course might avoid precipitating a controversial debate on the draft article in the Third Committee, which might prejudice our efforts subsequently to eliminate certain objections which we, too, find in the present draft.

With regard to the two resolutions on self-determination adopted by the Human Rights Commission we should like to point out that they were not "endorsed" by the Economic and Social Council; they were transmitted by ECOSOC to the Assembly "without comment". You may recall that in these circumstances the United States Representative in ECOSOC indicated that, despite certain objections to both resolutions, we would support their transmission "without comment" to the Assembly and would again set forth our position on their substance in the latter body.

Our substantive position on the two resolutions remains the same as that expressed in ECOSOC. We consider that Resolution A can be rendered acceptable by amendments such as those we introduced in ECOSOC, which would: (a) eliminate the phrases characterizing the colonial relationship as "slavery", (b) make more flexible the means provided for ascertaining the wishes of non-self-governing peoples (i.e. permit the use of means in addition to United Nations plebiscites), and (c) provide that actions in this field be in conformity with the provisions of the United Nations Charter. We are prepared to introduce or support amendments along these lines in the Third Committee.

Resolution B is not interpreted by us as bearing any relation to the self-determination article of the Covenants. We agree, however, that it is in effect a recommendation to transmit political information on non-self-governing territories. While the transmission of such information is not specified as an obligation under Article 73(e) of the Charter, you will recall that the United States has voluntarily transmitted such information on the governmental institutions of its territories. We expect to continue to do so in the future. However, we believe that the omission of political information from the categories specified under Article 73(e) was deliberate, and we therefore have opposed, and in this instance will oppose, resolutions which "recommend" the transmission of such information. In our view Resolution B falls in this category despite its use of the word "voluntarily", as that word is deprived of much of its significance both by the use of the words "recommends" and by the cumulative effect of resolutions on this subject.

Preparatory and Ancillary Measures—(paragraphs 54-55)

(i) Diplomatic Approaches

The United States, like the United Kingdom, is undertaking consultations with many Members of the United Nations in respect to items on the Fourth Committee agenda.

(ii) Inter-delegation Contacts before and during the Assembly

With respect to the suggestion of the Netherlands Government for a meeting of all administering powers prior to the opening of the Assembly to consider the various questions which may arise and to concert their action in respect thereto, we have informed the Netherlands Government that we would not favor at this time a formal meeting of all administering powers. We wish to avoid, in so far as possible, any charge that the administering Members are taking a broad, concerted stand against the non-administering Members in the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories and the General Assembly.

On the other hand, we will welcome, as in the past, exchanges of views as fully and as frequently as may be desired with the delegations of administering and non-administering states. Such exchanges would be useful both before and during the Assembly. In this connection, however, the United States cannot agree that an informal but regularized procedure whereby a particular grouping of Members would meet from time to time to discuss Fourth Committee matters would be desirable. Whether such meetings were limited to administering members or broadened somewhat, as suggested in the United Kingdom memorandum, the United States considers that such an arrangement, which would inevitably become known, would intensify the "bloc" sentiment in the Fourth Committee.

As the United Kingdom is aware the United States has for some time exerted its efforts to minimize this tendency and to develop a moderate and reasonable body of opinion in the Fourth Committee which would not be identifiable as either administering or non-administering, colonial or anti-colonial, western or eastern. The United States does not share the view expressed in the United Kingdom memorandum that irresponsible elements in the Fourth Committee have enjoyed easy successes mainly as a result of the divisions between administering Members. A perusal of the resolutions adopted by the Fourth Committee in recent sessions and the voting records thereon does not indicate that the extreme and irresponsible elements in the Fourth Committee have enjoyed easy successes. In any event, the United States doubts that concerted action by administering Members on a regular and continuing basis would substantially improve Fourth Committee decisions; it might well result in a crystallization of sentiment in support of the extreme anti-colonial point of view. Such a development would jeopardize efforts to minimize the bloc approach and secure support for compromise measures, which by avoiding negativism, serve as a counter attraction to irresponsible radicalism. We believe that the administering members can play their most useful role in the Fourth Committee if they retain a certain independence and flexibility. Even some diversity of view may be advantageous. Therefore we feel that it would be unwise to set up such an organized group as is suggested in the United Kingdom memorandum.

The ability of administering members to secure the support of moderate and friendly delegations lies more in the merits of the case which administering authorities espouse than in the unanimity with which they act. Furthermore, an assumption that even the most uninformed criticism, aside from that emanating from the Soviet bloc, stems from sincere motives will, we feel, help to keep the tone of Fourth Committee discussions moderate. Conversely, a rigid, uncompromising and legalistic attitude on the part of administering members engenders suspicion and antagonism in all quarters and makes it difficult to appeal to moderate sentiment in the Fourth Committee.

Mr. Hickerson: Mr. Hickerson opened the meeting and recalled that there had been an exchange of memoranda between the British Embassy and the Department on the various items to be discussed. He suggested that the discussion might begin with the first subject dealt with in these memoranda under the heading "General Policy".

<sup>1</sup> The United States-United Kingdom talks on the United Nations were held in Washington Sept. 23-26, 1952 (with social preliminaries on Sept. 22). Regarding the talks on general UN affairs, see pp. 1 ff. The so-called colonial talks were held on Sept. 25. The record of the morning session only is printed here, pertaining to general colonial policy. A complete set is in ODA files, lot 60 D 257, "1952 Colonial Policy Talks". The minutes printed here were prepared by James R. Fowler of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs on Sept. 30.

Agenda Item 1: General Policy

Sir John Martin: Sir John Martin recalled that following the colonial discussions with the United States in 1950, the UK had changed its general attitude in the UN and followed a more positive approach. He felt that the experience of the last two years had shown this to be a profitable decision. The UK acknowledged the legitimate interest of the world in the affairs of non-self-governing territories and recognized the continuing interest of the UN in these affairs. He felt that perhaps the UK had still not fully exploited the tactics which they had adopted; however, they intended to continue along the same line.

Sir John pointed out, however, that there were certain limits which the United Kingdom placed on UN activities in the colonial field. These limits were briefly discussed in the UK memorandum but he wished to review them briefly. If these limits were over-stepped he felt that the UK position in their territories would be undermined. The UK was convinced that its fears on this score were real, not imaginary nor exaggerated. In particular they felt that the discussion of political affairs of non-self-governing territories by the UN and the extension of the concept of accountability by the examination of conditions in particular territories, or of petitions from the territories or the despatch of visiting missions to the territories would have ruinous consequences. He felt that it was with respect to these limits that the basic disagreement existed between the UK and US. He recalled, however, that in the previous discussion the US had indicated that it did not consider the discussion of political conditions in non-self-governing territories to be desirable.

Mr. Hickerson: Mr. Hickerson stated that this was not exactly the US position. We felt that the UN was competent to discuss political conditions. In the case of Tunisia, however, we felt that the UN could not settle the matter in any event, and that discussion of the issue in the present atmosphere would probably not facilitate a settlement by the two parties. We did not feel that the discussion of political conditions would have the ruinous consequences which the UK anticipated. He recalled that the US submitted political information on its territories. We had not found that this action nor the discussion of the information had led to any difficulty. Mr. Hickerson thought that if the UK had from the start submitted political information voluntarily and had not made an issue of this matter, it would have avoided a lot of trouble.

Sir John Martin: Sir John pointed out that US territories were not in the limelights as were the UK territories. Africa was the center of interest at the present time. World opinion was not anxious to annoy the US whereas other countries did not worry about annoying the UK. With respect to the basis for the UK position, he felt that they had a legal case but their practical reasons were primary. Chapter XI of the Charter was a new idea—administration was not to be carried out behind closed doors and a system of reporting had been evolved to insure this. It was clear, however, that a system of control had not been set up by Chapter XI. The Administering powers were not answerable to the Assembly; in this respect the situation differed as between trust and other non-self-governing territories.

Turning to the practical arguments, Sir John reviewed briefly the situation in Kenya and the difficulties the UK faced there. He pointed out that the local administration was faced with the growth of an African secret society. The situation was very delicate, and the UK felt that the discussion of conditions in Kenya with perhaps a hearing for an African and a resolution on the subject would greatly weaken the local authorities in handling the matter properly. In the Gold Coast the situation was simple in comparison to many other territories, but even here there was a danger that sectional and special interests would appeal to the UN with dangerous and difficult consequences. He felt that continued pressure might lead the UK to pull out of Africa prematurely, leaving the African to slip back into chaos and confusion.

Mr. Hickerson: Mr. Hickerson said that, legalities aside, he felt we agreed almost entirely with the UK view. The fact that we felt that it was not illegal to discuss political conditions in the territories did not mean that we favored such discussion. In the case of Cyprus and Kenya we would work behind the scenes to avoid such a discussion. We do not feel that an open attempt to stop discussion would be helpful. With respect to the other limitations mentioned by the UK, we agreed that visiting missions and UN plebiscites should not be held without the consent of the administering authority and we agreed that there was no legal basis in the Charter for a system of petitions and oral hearings such as existed in the Trusteeship System.

Sir John Martin: Sir John said that he felt that US position would be most helpful. He felt that it would be wise for us both to undertake a clear exposition of our positions in the corridors and behind the scenes, not in an aggressive manner, but with the hope of avoiding precipitate action. The whole matter had been given consideration at a very high level in London, and it was felt that the UK position must be upheld. If a resolution were passed which invaded the limits set by the UK, they would consider seriously withdrawing from the particular UN body concerned.

Mr. Mathieson: The UK felt that the practical grounds for its position were the primary ones. For purely political reasons, the UK was determined that discussions of political affairs in non-self-governing territories should not take place.

Mr. Hickerson: If the issue was placed on legal grounds as a matter of competence, he was sure we would lose; therefore, every effort should be made to discourage the discussions behind the scenes.

Mr. Allen: Mr. Allen pointed out that it did not necessarily follow from the US position on the matter of competence, that we felt that the Fourth Committee was competent to discuss political issues in non-self-governing territories. We felt that the normal way to bring about such discussion would be to place the items on the agenda in usual manner.

Sir John Martin: Sir John felt that this was a better way to go about it. Furthermore, other Committees might be better balanced organs in which to have such a discussion. The UK would not feel there was such a problem if the land problem in Kenya were discussed in connection with other land problems of the world. The UK would not rigidly insist that no political matter could ever be mentioned in the Fourth Committee; if such a discussion were not pressed and if a resolution were not put forward, the UK would not oppose.

Mr. Mathieson: The UK has decided that if its bounds are overstepped, it will consider withdrawing. He asked what would be the US position if the UK took such action?

Mr. Hickerson: Mr. Hickerson stated that the US would not withdraw.

Sir Gladwyn Jebb: Sir Gladwyn asked if the US would participate in the debate in the event that the UK withdrew.

Mr. Hickerson: Mr. Hickerson stated that our action would depend upon the nature of the debate and the particular issue. In general, the US would try to exercise a moderating influence. If a discussion of political affairs arose we would seek to make such a discussion helpful rather than harmful.

Sir John Martin: Sir John asked whether the US would consider a recommendation by the General Assembly concerning political affairs in a non-self-governing territory to be legitimate.

Mr. Hickerson: Mr. Hickerson replied affirmatively although he pointed out the exact position might depend upon the nature of the recommendation. Some recommendations might be considered out of order.

Mr. Mathieson: Mr. Mathieson stated that the UK was considering making a major opening speech at the next Assembly in which it would review its policies generally, point to its record of achievement and express its desire to be left alone to continue its work without irresponsible criticism from the UN. Such a speech would be moderate in tone and would not contrast too vividly the conditions in British territories with conditions in other countries.

Mr. Hickerson: Mr. Hickerson felt that considerable caution should be used in such an approach. He pointed out that we do not yet know the situation which will develop.

Sir Gladwyn Jebb: Sir Gladwyn felt there was a need for an opening statement to make the situation clear at the outset.

Sir John Martin: The UK was not considering an aggressive speech but one whose mood could best be described as "rebuffed".

[There followed a brief discussion of the order of agenda items during which it was decided to discuss items number 17 and 16 at once before Sir Gladwyn Jebb's departure.]<sup>2</sup>

Agenda Item 17: Inter-Delegation Contacts

Mr. Mathieson: Mr. Mathieson stated that the UK was concerned about the US refusal to participate in regular machinery for consultation with respect to colonial problems at the Assembly. The UK wished to establish periodic and regular meetings of the administering Members to consider the problems they face in the Fourth Committee. He felt that the bloc approach was universally accepted at the UN and he urged that the US participate with the other administering Members in consideration of matters which were of great importance to it.

Mr. Hickerson: Mr. Hickerson pointed out that the US did not participate in any of the blocs at the UN. We would not be able to join the grouping which was suggested by the UK.

Sir John Martin: Sir John pointed out that the UK was not suggesting a formal arrangement.

Mr. Hickerson: Mr. Hickerson stated that the US could not agree to an informal but regularized procedure. We could not be in a position where we could be accused of being a member of the colonial bloc.

Mr. Mathieson: The UK would concert with other administering members as a colonial power. In such consultations it was necessary and helpful to have the views of the US.

Mr. Hickerson: The US will always be glad to discuss its views with other Members of the UN, both administering and non-administering, but we will not be able to join an organized group for the purpose of such consultations. The US has been re-examining its over-all position on colonial questions in the UN, and while no final decisions have been made, we were about to conclude that there was no other role we could play in this matter other than the one we have followed in the past. It should be remembered that the US was trying to bring 80 million people to the side of the West.

Sir John Martin: Sir John pointed out that the US was already, in effect, a member of the administering bloc, both because of its own responsibilities in the administration of territories and because of close ties with the other Western European colonial powers. It would seem that it would be in the interest of the US to recognize its position and join with the others to prevent chaos in the non-self-governing territories of the world.

Mr. Hickerson: We agree fully that it is in our interest to prevent chaos wherever it might occur; however, we believe we can help most by staying outside any regular group and exerting our influence independently. He reiterated that the US will always welcome the views of the UK and others on colonial matters.

Self-Determination

Mr. Mathieson: Mr. Mathieson noted from the US memoranda that the US was in favor of the principle of self-determination. He was puzzled by this statement since he did not know the meaning of that principle.

Sir Gladwyn Jebb: Sir Gladwyn referred to the question of secession as it related to self-determination and to the difficulties which self-determination poses in specific cases.

Mr. Hickerson: Mr. Hickerson reviewed the US position on this matter as stated in the memorandum given to the British Embassy. With respect to Resolution A he pointed out that the US would oppose the resolution unless we obtained amendments eliminating the reference to slavery and providing more flexible wording with respect to the use of UN plebiscites. With respect to the amendment which would state that UN actions in this matter should be in conformity with the Charter, the US position was not yet finally determined. It was possible that we would only insist upon the first two amendments and not insist on stating explicitly the need for conformity with the Charter.

Sir Gladwyn Jebb: Sir Gladwyn asked if there were any chance that the US would merely vote against the resolution as it stood.

Mr. Hickerson: Mr. Hickerson replied negatively, stating that it was the objective of the US to improve the resolution so that it could support it. Mr. Hickerson then reviewed the US position with respect to Resolution B.

Mr. Mathieson: Mr. Mathieson stated that it appeared that the US and UK agreed completely on Resolution B.

1. United States Position and French Tactics.

Mr. Hickerson, after reviewing the Secretary's discussion last summer with members of the French Cabinet and our general views on this matter as outlined in previous instructions to Paris, informed Ambassador Hoppenot of our position on inscription of the item as set forth in Deptel 1780, and as had been conveyed by Ambassador Dunn to Foreign Minister Schuman a few hours before.

Ambassador Hoppenot expressed his understanding and said he thought the position a reasonable one for us to take. Emphasizing again that the French Cabinet had not reached a final decision on the matter, Ambassador Hoppenot stated he felt there was a good chance they would not resist inscription and outlined for our comments the following possible courses of action which the French Delegation might take thereafter:

a) Make a statement to the effect that they do not recognize the competence of the United Nations to consider or deal with this matter and that therefore they will not take any account of any resolution which the Assembly might adopt and thereupon proceed to a general statement of their program and objectives in Tunisia. Mr. Hickerson strongly urged that the French Delegation not state in advance that they will refuse to take any account of any resolution, since such a statement at the outset would infuriate the Arabs and Asians and only have the effect of an embittering debate and provoking more extreme resolutions. It would certainly be appropriate for the French Government to state that they have felt and continue to feel that the United Nations is not competent to deal with this matter and that they fully reserve their position on this point. If the Assembly passes a resolution which the French find unacceptable they could at that time determine their attitude toward it and make such statement as they may then find necessary.

b) Ambassador Hoppenot indicated that consideration was being given as an alternative to introducing a resolution under which the General Assembly would declare itself incompetent to consider the matter. We replied that in our view this also would be unwise and counter-productive and that we ourselves could not vote for it. It was a foregone conclusion that such a resolution could obtain no more than four or five favorable votes and could serve no useful purpose.

c) Ambassador Hoppenot raised as a third alternative tactic the introduction of a resolution requesting the International Court of Justice for an advisory opinion on the competence question. We replied that such a proposal would be more logical and defensible than the other two alternatives but it seemed also highly unlikely that it would receive a majority. We pointed out that it would be regarded by the Arabs and Asians as still another device to muzzle them and prevent them from stating their case in the United Nations and we thus seriously doubted that the requisite majority could be obtained. We also suggested it might be tactically unwise since if, as the United States Legal Adviser believes, the International Court of Justice should decide against the French contention, the French would be in a worse position and the role of the United Nations in the problem would be materially strengthened. Moreover, by leaving the matter thus in suspense in United Nations forums such a move would make bilateral discussions with the Tunisians more difficult since they would be more likely to remain intransigent pending the outcome of the Court's decision.

2. Participation in the debate.

In response to our question as to the extent of French participation in the debate, Ambassador Hoppenot said he felt beyond the initial exposition of their program and objectives the French Delegation would not participate because that would constitute a surrender of their position that the General Assembly is not competent. We took the view that it would be far preferable for the French to participate wholeheartedly in the debate throughout, reserving, if they desired, at the beginning of each intervention their position on the competence issue. We suggested that their refusal to participate in the debate would leave the field to the other side, make it more difficult for France's friends to help her and would mean that only the unfavorable charges would receive publicity in the world press. We felt it would be much wiser for the French to make replies to incorrect statements during the debate by setting forth the real facts of the matter.

3. General Assembly Resolution.

Turning to a discussion of the nature of the resolution which might emerge from the General Assembly, Mr. Hickerson stated that we cannot now think of any resolution we could vote for except one which would call upon the parties to resume negotiations. We would, of course, oppose any resolution condemning France or seeking to interject United Nations machinery in the solution of the question. In response to Ambassador Hoppenot's question, Mr. Hickerson stated we would oppose any provision in the resolution which would result in automatically placing this item on the agenda of the next session of the General Assembly. We will have to consider what our position should be on a provision in the resolution which would ask the French Government to report to the Secretary General or to Members of the United Nations on the matter in the future, a provision which Ambassador Hoppenot was confident would be strongly resisted by the French Government.

4. Hearing Tunisian Representatives.

We discussed at some length the difficult problems raised by the certain desire on the part of a majority of the Assembly to invite some Tunisian representative or representatives to be heard. Ambassador Hoppenot initially expressed himself most strongly (as did Ambassador Bonnet at a later luncheon conversation) that the French Government would not countenance the granting of a hearing to any Tunisian representatives and would not participate in the discussion should a representative be invited to appear. We indicated that since an invitation to some Tunisians appeared as certain to us as inscription on the agenda, our present thinking is to support granting a hearing to "a representative of the Bey". We felt this would probably, from the point of view of the French, be the less undesirable of two evils, and that if, as Ambassador Hoppenot indicated, the French Government would refuse to permit any representative of the Bey to leave Tunis, the repercussions would be very serious indeed. If this were the case the Assembly would certainly proceed to invite other Tunisians to appear, very likely Salah Ben Youssef, an ex-Minister in the Bey's Cabinet, now in Cairo, and perhaps Ladgham and others. Both Ambassador Hoppenot and Ambassador Bonnet remain extremely skeptical that their Government would consent to the appearance of any Tunisian representative but felt that the only possibility of their doing so would be the realization that to permit the presence of a properly selected representative of the Bey was the lesser of two unhappy choices.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> A second session was held with Ambassador Hoppenot on the afternoon of Sept. 30, which dealt with noncolonial subjects except for a brief exchange on Morocco, in part as follows: "Ambassador Hoppenot said that with respect to Morocco the problem is the same as Tunisia and the French have the same approach to it. Mr. Hickerson stated that . . . we have not taken a final decision on our position. In general, we believe the Moroccan and Tunisian cases to be similar and we will probably take the same position on Morocco as we are taking on Tunisia." (320/9-3052)

Position Paper Prepared in the Department of State for the United States Delegation to the General Assembly Committee on Administrative Unions<sup>1</sup>

[WASHINGTON,] September 22, 1952.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATIVE UNIONS

THE PROBLEM

The problem is to formulate the position of the United States Delegation in the General Assembly Committee on Administrative Unions with regard to the Special Report on Administrative Unions (T/1026, T/1026/Corr.1, T/1026/Add.1) adopted by the Trusteeship Council at its Eleventh Session on July 23, 1952. The General Assembly Committee is to meet on September 23, 1952.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. The Delegation should support the special report adopted by the Trusteeship Council as a carefully prepared and detailed analysis of the problem of administrative unions.

2. The Delegation, in supporting the special report, should make a statement in the Committee recalling the particular importance which the United States has consistently attached to the problem of administrative unions, recalling the extensive Trusteeship Council documentation on the subject which shows that the Council has thoroughly studied and restudied the problem, recalling the substantive achievements of the Council, and recalling that the Council established in 1950 a Standing Committee on Administrative Unions which regularly examines the operation of administrative unions and reports to the Council at each session on any Union in which a Trust Territory under review participates.

3. The Delegation should introduce in the Committee, if appropriate, a draft resolution along the lines of Annex A for the Committee to recommend for adoption by the Assembly.

4. If a proposal is made in the Committee that the General Assembly should re-establish the Committee for another year, the Delegation should take the position that this would be undesirable because it would result in the unnecessary duplication of United Nations activities, which the General Assembly is trying to avoid.

5. If the other three members of the Committee wish to have the General Assembly request an advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice as to whether existing administrative unions are within the scope of and compatible with stipulations of the Charter and the terms of the Trusteeship Agreements, the Delegation should support such a request. If the Committee is divided on such a proposal, the Delegation should consult the Department.

6. The Delegation should hold individual consultations with the other three delegations on the Committee (Belgium, Brazil, and India) before the opening of the Committee in order to explain United States objectives, and to establish such harmonious working relationships as may enable the Delegation to achieve these objectives.

DISCUSSION

A. Background of the Problem

The problem of administrative unions between Trust Territories and adjacent territories under the sovereignty of the Administering Authorities concerned has been one of the major problems before the Trusteeship Council and the Fourth Committee for more than four years. It should be noted that the Trusteeship Agreements for all the Trust Territories except Nauru and Western Samoa authorize the Administering Authorities concerned to constitute customs, fiscal or administrative unions or federations, and to establish common services between the Trust Territory and adjacent territories under the sovereignty or control of the Administering Authority where such measures are not inconsistent with the basic objectives of the International Trusteeship System and the terms of the trusteeship agreements. It should also be recalled that the General Assembly approved these agreements upon the assurance of the Administering Authorities that they did not consider the relevant terms of the agreements as giving them powers to establish any form of political association between the Trust Territories and adjacent territories which would involve annexation of the Trust Territories in any sense or would have the effect of extinguishing their status as Trust Territories.

The most recent action of the General Assembly on this subject was the adoption of Resolution 563(VI) of January 18, 1952, which asked the Council to submit a special report containing a complete analysis of each of the administrative unions to which a Trust Territory was a party, and of the status of the Cameroons and Togoland under French administration arising out of their membership in the French Union. The Council was asked to give special attention in this analysis to

(a) The five considerations enumerated in paragraph 1 of Resolution 326(IV) of the General Assembly, and

(b) The compatibility of the arrangements already made with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Trusteeship Agreements.

The report to be examined by the General Assembly Committee on Administrative Unions, which is to meet three weeks before the Assembly's Seventh Session, is the special report adopted by the Trusteeship Council on July 23, 1952 in compliance with General Assembly Resolution 563 (VI).

It is important to note, however, that this special report is only the latest of numerous studies of administrative unions made by the Trusteeship Council. In order to make this point clear, it is necessary to summarize the action taken by the Trusteeship Council and the General Assembly on the problem of administrative unions since the Second Session of the Trusteeship Council (1947-1948).

1. Trusteeship Council, Second and Third Sessions.

At its Second Session the Trusteeship Council undertook a preliminary examination of the Annual Report by the Government of Australia on the Trust Territory of New Guinea, and at its Third Session, in the summer of 1948, the Council adopted certain observations, conclusions, and recommendations concerning the administrative unions affecting New Guinea, Ruanda-Urundi, and Tanganyika. (See A/603, Report of the Trusteeship Council Covering its Second and Third Sessions.) Since the Annual Reports on British Cameroons, British Togoland, French Cameroons, and French Togoland were not received in time for examinations at the Third Session, they were postponed until the Fourth Session.

2. General Assembly, 1948.

At its Third Session in 1948 the General Assembly considered the observations made by the Trusteeship Council on administrative unions and endorsed the observations of the Council that such administrative unions must remain strictly administrative in nature and scope and must not have the effect of creating any conditions which will obstruct the separate political, economic, social, and educational development of the Trust Territory. The Assembly recommended that the Council investigate the question in all its aspects and report to the Fourth Session of the Assembly. The Council was also asked to recommend any safeguards considered necessary to preserve the distinct political status of the Trust Territories and to enable the Council effectively to exercise its supervisory functions; to invite the Administering Authorities concerned to furnish additional information; and to seek, where appropriate, an advisory opinion of the International Court on whether such unions are within the scope of and are compatible with the Charter and the Trusteeship Agreements.

3. (Ad Hoc) Committee on Administrative Unions, 1949-1950.

In accordance with General Assembly Resolution 224(III) the Trusteeship Council at its Fourth Session adopted Resolution 81(IV) establishing a six-member Committee on Administrative Unions (China, France, Mexico, New Zealand, USSR, and United States) to undertake preparatory work in connection with the investigation re-requested by the Assembly. The Committee was to draw up an outline, collect information, and report to the Council on the various administrative unions. In addition, the Council adopted Resolution 82(IV) instructing the Committee to make a study of the relations between France and the Trust Territories administered by France. This Committee after ten meetings submitted an Interim Report (T/263) to the Council on March 1, 1949 and after seven additional meetings submitted its report (T/338) to the Council on June 6, 1949. At its Fifth Session, in Resolution 109(V) the Council decided that it would continue to study and examine the operation of existing or future administrative unions in order to safeguard the identity and status of the Trust Territories. The Administering Authorities concerned were requested to furnish in their annual reports separate records and statistics on each Trust Territory. The Council transmitted to the Assembly the reports of its Committee on Administrative Unions and the information furnished by the Administering Authorities. At its Sixth Session the Council adopted Resolution 129(VI) requesting its Committee on Administrative Unions to continue its study and report to the Council July 1950. Argentina was appointed to take the place of Mexico on the Committee and the Philippines was designated to serve in the absence of the USSR. After fifteen additional meetings the Committee transmitted its report to the Council. This report, which was unanimously approved by the Council, is an important study of the problem of administrative unions, and it was printed as an Annex to A/1306: Report of the Trusteeship Council Covering its First Special Session, its Second Special Session, and its Sixth and Seventh Sessions. In preparing the above-mentioned reports the Ad Hoc Committee on Administrative Unions examined a large number of Conference Room Papers and more than thirty valuable memoranda prepared for the Committee by the Secretariat. The latter documents were circulated as official documents of the Trusteeship Council in the T/AC.14 series; this series of documents, it should be noted, is no longer available except in the archives of the United Nations and in the files of individual delegations.

4. General Assembly, 1949.

At its Fourth Session the General Assembly adopted Resolution 326(IV) which recommended that the Council complete its investigation and present a report to the Fifth Session of the General Assembly with special reference to any safeguards the Council may consider necessary. The Assembly further recommended that in completing its investigation the Council pay particular attention to the following:

(a) the desirability of having the Administering Authorities inform the Trusteeship Council beforehand when they propose to create new administrative unions of Trust Territories with adjacent territories, or extend the scope of any existing union or federation;

(b) the desirability, should it be impossible as a consequence of the establishment of an administrative union to furnish clear and precise separate financial, statistical, and other data relating to a Trust Territory, of the Administering Authority concerned accepting such supervision by the Trusteeship Council over the unified administration as the Council may consider necessary for the effective discharge of its high responsibilities under the Charter;

(c) the desirability of establishing a separate judicial organization in each Trust Territory;

(d) the desirability of establishing in each Trust Territory a separate legislative body with increasing powers and with headquarters within the Trust Territory, and of eliminating any type of legislative action originating in any other legislative body with headquarters in a Non-Self-Governing Territory;

(e) the desirability of taking into account, before any administrative, customs, or fiscal union is established or extended in its nature or scope, the freely expressed wishes of the inhabitants of the Trust Territories concerned.

It should be noted that the words "the desirability of" in these five considerations were the subject of considerable discussion in the Fourth Committee, and that the United States and other Administering Authorities interpret them to mean "the question of whether it is desirable".

5. Trusteeship Council, 1950.

The Trusteeship Council at its Seventh Session in the summer of 1950 adopted Resolution 293(VII). This important resolution was based upon the report submitted to the Council on July 11, 1950 by the Ad Hoc Committee on Administrative Unions referred to in paragraph 3 above. In this resolution the Council addressed itself to the five considerations of General Assembly Resolution 326(IV) in so far as they applied to the administrative unions affecting the Trust Territories of the Cameroons under British administration, New Guinea, Ruanda-Urundi, and Tanganyika. With regard to Togoland under British administration the Council expressed the opinion that in view of the fact that various proposals concerning the administrative arrangements affecting the Trust Territory of Togoland under British administration are under consideration, further examination of the administrative union of Togoland under British administration and the Gold Coast could not usefully be undertaken at this time. Furthermore, Resolution 293(VII), in compliance with the request in General Assembly Resolution 326(IV) established and drew to the attention of the administering authorities concerned four safeguards which the Council considered necessary in order to assist it in the discharge of its functions and to avoid the possibility of any administrative union operating in such a manner as to prejudice the outcome of the objectives of the Trusteeship System. These safeguards are :

(a) That the Administering Authorities furnish clear and concise financial, statistical, and other data relating to Trust Territories participating in administrative unions;

(b) That the Administering Authority facilitate the access of Visiting Missions to such information on an administrative union as may be necessary to enable the Mission to report fully on the Trust Territory concerned;

(c) That the Administering Authorities continue to maintain the boundaries, separate status, and identity of Trust Territories participating in administrative unions;

(d) That the Administering Authorities ensure, with regard to Trust Territories participating in administrative unions, that expenditures on the administration, welfare, and development of any such Trust Territory for a given year be not less than the total amount of public revenue derived from the Territory in that year.

Finally, in Resolution 293(VII) the Council decided to establish a Standing Committee on Administrative Unions which shall regularly examine the operation of administrative unions and report to the Council at each session on any union in which a Trust Territory under review participates.

6. Standing Committee on Administrative Unions, 1951.

In accordance with Resolution 293(VII) the Council appointed Argentina, the Philippines, New Zealand, and the United States to the Standing Committee on Administrative Unions. This Committee held two organization meetings in 1950, and six meetings in 1951 during which it adopted reports on Tanganyika (T/915), New Guinea (T/916), British Togoland (T/917), British Cameroons (T/918), and Ruanda-Urundi (T/919). In 1951 China and Thailand were appointed to replace Argentina and the Philippines on the Standing Committee.

7. General Assembly, 1951-1952.

At its Fifth Session the General Assembly adopted Resolution 443(V) which postponed the item on administrative unions until its Sixth Session.

At its Sixth Session the Assembly, despite the work already done on the subject as described above, adopted Resolution 563(VI) requesting the Trusteeship Council to submit to the Seventh Session of the Assembly a special report containing a complete analysis of each of the administrative unions to which a Trust Territory is a party, and of the status of the Cameroons and Togoland under French administration arising out of their membership in the French Union with special reference to

(a) the five above-mentioned considerations in Resolution 326(IV) of the General Assembly, and

(b) the compatibility of the arrangements already made with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Trusteeship Agreement.

Furthermore, in Resolution 563 (VI) the General Assembly established its own Committee on Administrative Unions, composed of Belgium, Brazil, India and the United States, to meet three weeks before the Seventh Session of the Assembly, to make a preliminary examination of the special report prepared by the Trusteeship Council, and to present its observations thereon to the Assembly at its Seventh Session. The operative paragraph establishing the Assembly Committee on Administrative Unions was an amendment proposed by Brazil, and opposed by the United States and other delegations on the grounds that it would result in a costly and unnecessary duplication of work. The Brazilian amendment was adopted in the Fourth Committee by 29 votes to 10 with 8 abstentions, and in the Plenary by 30 votes to 14 with 11 abstentions.

8. Standing Committee on Administrative Unions, 1952.

In 1952 the Standing Committee on Administrative Unions not only had its regular reports on each administrative union to prepare, but the Council adopted Resolution 420 (X) requesting the Standing Committee to draft also the special report for the Assembly. In 1952, therefore, the Standing Committee held 34 meetings during which it adopted its regular reports on New Guinea (T/969), Ruanda-Urundi (T/1011), Tanganyika (T/1017), British Togoland (T/1020), British Cameroons (T/1022) and its special report (T/1026 and T/1026/Add.1). The Committee had before it in preparing these reports many new Conference Room Papers, and 26 new working papers prepared by the Secretariat in the T/C.1/L series.

B. Discussion of Recommendations

The special report on administrative unions (T/1026) and (T/1026/Add.1) is a carefully prepared and detailed analysis in eight chapters totaling 162 pages, which was adopted by the Trusteeship Council on July 23, 1952, by 7 votes to 1 (USSR), with three abstentions (Australia, Belgium, United Kingdom), and Iraq not voting. The report had been prepared and adopted unanimously by the Standing Committee on Administrative Unions (China, New Zealand, Thailand, and United States) under the chairmanship of the United States. The report would have been considerably longer except for a decision of the Committee to delete from the report whenever practicable such subject matter as was readily available in other official documents of the United Nations. This practice gives parts of the special report a skeleton appearance which caused the Committee some concern. The Committee made this decision, however, after a Secretariat called to its attention General Assembly Resolution 593 (VI) on the control and limitation of documentation, one paragraph of which invites the Governments of Member States to refrain "from requesting the repetition or reissuing of material readily available in other United Nations documents."

The problem of organization of the special report was a complicated one. Chapter I reviews the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Trusteeship Council on the general question of administrative unions, but not with regard to specific territories. Chapter II summarizes the provisions of the trusteeship agreements concerning administrative unions and the interpretations of these agreements which the various administering authorities have given. The remaining six chapters deal with particular territories and are subdivided, with one exception, into four parts as follows: Part A summarizes the historical events preceding the present administrative unions; Part B summarizes the laws establishing the various administrative arrangements; Part C reviews the recommendations and observations made by the General Assembly and the Trusteeship Council and its subsidiary organs on the territories concerned and, wherever appropriate, the observations of the administering authorities concerned; Part D gives the Council's observations and conclusions on the two matters to which the General Assembly in Resolution 563 (VI) asked the Council to give special attention, namely, (a) the five considerations enumerated in paragraph 1 of Resolution 326 (IV) of the General Assembly, and (b) the compatibility of the arrangements already made with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Trusteeship Agreements. It is this Part D, and particular Section (b) of Part D, which is of special importance because it contains the Council's observations and conclusions.

The conclusions adopted by the Council in Section (b) of Part D differ in the case of the various territories even though the provisions of the various trusteeship agreements authorizing the establishment of administrative unions are generally similar. The Standing Committee on Administrative Unions was well aware of this fact, but it was of the opinion that it could not reach any realistic and satisfactory conclusions concerning the questions raised in General Assembly Resolution 563 (VI) without paying in its analysis due regard to several other factors. These other factors were the differing ethnic, geographical and historical factors in the territories concerned, the differing degree of political advancement in these territories, the practical operation of the administrative arrangements, and the individual laws establishing these administrative arrangements. In those cases where the conclusions of the Committee differ for various territories, the Committee believed that such differences resulted not from any inconsistency on the part of the Committee but rather from these differing factors.

In view of the thorough quality of the special report, and in view of the fact that only the USSR voted against it in the Council, it is recommended that the Delegation give its full support to the report in the General Assembly Committee on Administrative Unions.

Recommendation 2.

Despite the effort and care of the Trusteeship Council in dealing with the problem of administrative unions, certain non-administering Members of the United Nations continue to be concerned with the possibility that administrative unions may become disguised forms of annexation resulting in the extinguishment of the political identity of the trust territories and accordingly to believe that intense and continuous review of the administrative unions is essential. These Members of the United Nations have been generally unwilling to launch direct attacks on the various administrative unions in the General Assembly, but at the same time they have seemed unwilling to acknowledge that the Trusteeship Council has done as thorough a job as possible in its study of the problem. It seems likely that Brazil and India, the two non-administering members of the General Assembly Committee may hold this view. Possibly they are not fully aware of the extensive Trusteeship Council documentation on the subject, which shows that the Council has studied and restudied the problem. The United States, as a member of the Council's Committee on Administrative Unions from the beginning, is in a position to point out the extensive work which the Council has done. It is therefore recommended that the Delegation should make a detailed statement at the opening of the Committee along the lines suggested. Such a statement should, among other things, recall the particular importance which the United States has consistently attached to the problem of Administrative Unions, recall that the extensive Trusteeship Council documentation on the subject shows that the Council has thoroughly studied and restudied the problem, recall the substantive achievements of this study, and recall that the Council has established a Standing Committee on Administrative Unions to regularly examine the operations of the administrative unions and report to the Council at each session on any union in which a trust territory under review participates.

Recommendation 3.

If the tactical situation in the Committee seems appropriate, it might be advantageous for the Delegation to introduce in the Committee a draft resolution for the Committee to recommend for adoption by the Assembly. Such a resolution should be a balanced resolution which would commend itself to both administering and non-administering members of the Committee and the General Assembly. A draft resolution along these lines is attached as Annex A which the Delegation should use if it seems appropriate.

Recommendation 4.

It is possible that Brazil or India may suggest in the Committee that the General Assembly should reconstitute the Committee for another year. Such a suggestion would be in line with a noticeable trend on the part of certain non-administering members to consider Trusteeship Council problems in the Fourth Committee where the non-administering members outnumber the administering members by 52 to 8 rather than to rely on the Council which has a balanced membership of six administering and six non-administering members. At the Sixth Session of the General Assembly the United States opposed the Brazilian amendment providing for the General Assembly Committee on Administrative Unions and tried unsuccessfully to muster enough votes to defeat it in plenary, where it was adopted by 30 votes to 14 with 11 abstentions. The Delegation should oppose such a proposal because the reconstitution of the Committee would inevitably result in the repetitious, unnecessary, and costly type of work which the General Assembly in other resolutions is trying to prevent (See Annex B covering the four General Assembly resolutions which are pertinent in this regard).<sup>3</sup>

Recommendation 5.

The General Assembly on November 18, 1948, adopted Resolution 224(III) which, inter alia, requested the Trusteeship Council to request, whenever appropriate, an advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice as to whether such unions are within the scope of and compatible with the stipulations of the Charter and with the terms of the trusteeship agreements. It is possible that one of the members of the Committee may suggest that the problem of whether such unions are compatible with the Charter and with the trusteeship agreements is a legal problem with which the Trusteeship Council is not qualified to deal, and which, therefore, should be referred to the International Court of Justice. If the other three members of the Committee favor such a proposal the United States Delegation should also support it. If the Committee is divided regarding such a proposal the Delegation should consult the Department for further instructions.

Recommendation 6.

It seems likely that the United States objectives set forth in the preceding recommendations are more likely to be achieved if the Delegation holds individual consultations with the other three Delegations on the Committee before the Committee's first meeting. It is therefore recommended that the Delegation hold such consultations with the other three Delegations in the attempt to establish harmonious working relationships. The Delegation should seek to dissuade any of the other three Delegations from advancing extreme proposals which would be likely to precipitate extreme counterproposals and thereby jeopardize the attainment of the objectives of the United States Delegation.

DRAFT RESOLUTION ON ADMINISTRATIVE UNIONS FOR POSSIBLE INTRODUCTION BY THE UNITED STATES DELEGATION IN THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATIVE UNIONS

The General Assembly,

Recalling that by its Resolution 224 (III) of 18 November 1948 the General Assembly recommended that the Trusteeship Council should investigate the question of administrative unions in all its aspects, and that by its Resolution 326 (IV) of 15 November 1949 it recommended that the Trusteeship Council should complete its investigation,

Recalling that by Resolution 326 (IV) the General Assembly noted that the trusteeship agreements do not authorise any form of political association which would involve annexation of the trust territories in any sense, or would have the effect of extinguishing their status as trust territories, and affirmed the view that measures of customs, fiscal or administrative union must not in any way hamper the free evolution of each trust territory towards self-government or independence,

Recalling that by its Resolution 563 (VI) of 18 January 1952 the General Assembly requested the Trusteeship Council to submit to the General Assembly at its Seventh Regular Session, a special report containing a complete analysis of each of the administrative unions to which a trust territory is a party, and of the status of the Cameroons and Togoland under French administration arising out of their membership in the French Union,

Recalling the studies of administrative unions undertaken by the Trusteeship Council's Ad Hoc Committee on Administrative Unions in 1949 and 1950, and by its Standing Committee on Administrative Unions in 1951 and 1952,

Expresses its appreciation to the Trusteeship Council for the Special Report submitted by the Council in compliance with General Assembly Resolution 563 (VI), and endorses the observations and conclusions contained in the Special Report,

Notes that the Trusteeship Council's Standing Committee on Administrative Unions will continue its regular examination of each administrative union affecting a trust territory, and requests the Council to instruct the Standing Committee to study these administrative unions not only with regard to the four safeguards enumerated in Trusteeship Council Resolution 293 (VII) but also with regard to any other matters which the Standing Committee deems appropriate,

Calls to the attention of the Administering Authorities the observations and conclusions contained in the Special Report to the Trusteeship Council and the observations thereon made by the General Assembly's Committee on Administrative Unions,

Requests the Administering Authorities to furnish promptly to the Trusteeship Council as complete information as possible concerning the operation of the administrative unions affecting trust territories under their administration,

Expresses the hope that the Administering Authorities concerned will notify the Trusteeship Council promptly of any change in or extension of existing administrative unions, or of any proposal to establish new administrative unions.

TRANSMISSION AND DISCUSSION OF POLITICAL INFORMATION UNDER ARTICLE 73(e)<sup>3</sup>

THE PROBLEM

What position should the United States take with respect to the discussion of political conditions in particular non-self-governing terri-

---

<sup>1</sup>This was one of 16 papers in a Position Book entitled "Instructions to the United States Delegation to the Seventh Regular Session of the General Assembly Committee 4 (Trusteeship)". This and the Position Books for other Sessions of the General Assembly are in the IO files.

<sup>2</sup>The Fourth Committee had a continuous existence going back to 1946 and coterminous with that of the General Assembly itself. Likewise its legislative life was coterminous with the sessional life of the General Assembly, in the case of the Seventh Regular Session, from Oct. 14, 1951 to Dec. 21, 1952. Unpublished documentation relating to Fourth Committee matters is principally in file 320 (General Assembly and its Committees), file 320.14 (non-self-governing territories subjects), and file 350 (trusteeship matters), in the Department of State central decimal files; in the IO files proper and in IO files, lot 71 D 440 (files pertaining to U.S. Delegations to the General Assembly, 1946-1965); and in the ODA files (lots 60 D 512, 62 D 182, 62 D 225, and 62 D 228).

The U.S. Delegate on the Fourth Committee was always a Presidentially appointed member of the U.S. Delegation to the General Assembly, who, at the Seventh Regular Session, was Philip C. Jessup, Ambassador at Large. Jessup was closely assisted by Ambassador John J. Muccio, a senior adviser to the Delegation. Other advisers included Benjamin Gerig, Robert R. Robbins and Eric Stein, all from the Office of Dependent Area Affairs, of which Gerig was Director.

tories when such a specific item has not been placed on the agenda, and to the related problem of the transmission of political information under Article 73(e) ?

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. In view of the divisive effect of previous debates on this issue, the Delegation should seek to avert a discussion in the Fourth Committee which would tend to establish or lead to the introduction of a resolution explicitly stating the Committee's competence to discuss political affairs in particular non-self-governing territories. Should such a resolution nevertheless be introduced, the Delegation should exert every effort to secure its withdrawal.

2. The Delegation should be guided by the view of the United States that the General Assembly is competent, under Article 10 of the Charter, to discuss and make recommendations on conditions in non-self-governing territories generally, including political questions arising out of Articles 10, 14, and 73.

3. The Delegation should bear in mind that the proper and most orderly way to initiate discussion of political conditions in non-self-governing territories is the placing of such items on the Fourth Committee's agenda in the normal manner.

4. With respect to the related question of the transmission of political information, the Delegation should maintain the position that the transmission of such information is not obligatory under Article 73(e), but that the United States voluntarily submits political information and hopes other Administering Authorities will do so.

COMMENT

The question of the Competence of the Fourth Committee to discuss and make recommendations on political conditions in particular non-self-governing territories was, until 1951, associated with the more specific question of the transmission of political information under Article 73(e). During the Sixth General Assembly, however, the disposition of the Moroccan question in the General Committee and the Plenary Assembly led in the Fourth Committee to references to political conditions in Morocco and in turn to acrimonious debate of the broader competence issue. In light of the strong views of the Arab-Asian bloc, therefore, the question of the General Assembly's competence to discuss political conditions in non-self-governing territories may well arise again.

Recommendation 1

The circumstances under which the question of the Fourth Committee's competence arose at the Sixth Assembly and the bitterness of the ensuing debate clearly indicates the desirability of forestalling, if possible, its recurrence this year.<sup>4</sup>

The Guatemalan delegate commented on political and other conditions in British Honduras, as did the Egyptian delegate with respect to Morocco. On points of order, the delegates of the United Kingdom and France protested the discussion of political conditions in non-self-governing territories. Following the French intervention, the Iraqi delegate proposed that the Fourth Committee vote immediately on a draft resolution which "resolves that it is empowered to discuss political matters and political aspects in regard to non-self-governing territories". The French Delegation shortly afterwards withdrew from the meeting. During the course of the debate it was evident that the Iraqi proposal received considerable support, and that its adoption with minor amendments proposed by Ecuador was virtually a certainty. Subsequently, the Iraqi resolution was withdrawn and the United Kingdom, French, and Iraqi Delegations agreed to a ruling by the Chair that the discussion of political subjects be closely correlated with economic, social and educational conditions in the territories. Thus, a middle position between the extremes taken by some administering powers—i.e., that the discussion of political conditions amounts to an amendment of the Charter (UK), that it is unconstitutional (France)—and on the other hand, by certain non-administering Members—who believe that the right of the Fourth Committee to do so should be asserted—served to prevent a decision by vote which most probably would have gone in favor of the latter.

In the event that a resolution is introduced affirming the competence of the Fourth Committee, the Delegation should bear in mind that a decision against the administering Members as represented by the United Kingdom, France and Belgium would most likely harden their views on this issue and perhaps prejudice their willingness to cooperate with the Fourth Committee. The Delegation should therefore utilize every appropriate means to ensure the resolution's withdrawal.

Recommendation 2

Under Article 73, administering members undertake to ensure the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of non-self-governing territories. They "accept as a sacred trust the obligation to promote to the utmost, within the system of international peace and security established by the present Charter, the well-being of the inhabitants of these territories, and, to this end . . . to develop self-government, to take due account of the political aspirations of the peoples, and to assist them in the progressive development of their free political institutions. . . ." By the inclusion of these provisions in the Charter, the international community has registered its concern, in a multilateral contractual undertaking, for the welfare, including the political advancement, of the inhabitants of non-self-governing territories. The obligations undertaken as a result of the provisions of Article 73 differ in no way from other obligations imposed upon Members by the Charter. It follows that the General Assembly, acting in conformity with Article 10 of the Charter, "may discuss any questions on any matters within the scope of the present Charter . . . and, except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations to the Members of the United Nations or to the Security Council or to both on any such questions or matters."

There would seem to be no doubt that the General Assembly, under Article 10, has the right to discuss and make recommendations on political conditions in particular non-self-governing territories and, without question, the General Assembly would so decide. The Delegation might bear in mind, however, that the United States has consistently taken the view that it would be unwise for the General Assembly or Fourth Committee to make recommendations with respect to specific territories, since such recommendations would undoubtedly provoke a degree of friction detrimental to constructive work by the Fourth Committee.

There has been a tendency in the past for some delegations to use the Report of the Assembly's Special Committee on Information as a point of departure for the discussion of political conditions in particular territories. Such action serves to reduce the effectiveness and to obscure the purpose of the Assembly's agenda. The Delegation should bear in mind, therefore, that the proper and most orderly way to initiate discussion of political conditions in non-self-governing territories is the placing of such items on the agenda of the Assembly and their allocation to the Fourth Committee.

Recommendation 4

The United States has consistently maintained the position that the transmission of political information is not required under the provisions of Article 73(e). At the same time, the United States voluntarily transmits political information on its territories, and hopes other administering Members will do so with respect to their territories. Although Denmark regularly transmits comparable data, the voluntary submission of political information by Australia, New Zealand, the Netherlands and France has been sporadic. Both the United Kingdom and Belgium oppose the provision of such information on either a mandatory or voluntary basis, maintaining inter alia that to do so would constitute an extra-legal amendment of the Charter.

The General Assembly has, however, on several occasions expressed itself on the question. At its second session, it noted the voluntary submission of political information by some Members, considered this to be in conformity with the Charter and, therefore, to be encouraged (Res. 144(II)). In Resolution 327(IV), the Assembly expressed the hope that information on government would be voluntarily submitted.

The Assembly will consider at the present session a resolution on this subject adopted by the Human Rights Commission and referred by ECOSOC without comment to the General Assembly. (For position in Resolution B in Self-Determination of Peoples and Nations, see document SD/A/277 included in the Plenary Book of Instructions.) Should this or other resolutions bearing on the question of the submission of political information be debated in the Fourth Committee, the Delegation should take the position that it would be unwise to place such submission on other than a voluntary basis. Accordingly, a resolution which would "recommend" the voluntary transmission of political information would be unacceptable and would undoubtedly elicit a strong reaction on the part of some administering powers.

[WASHINGTON,] October 23, 1952.

Subject: Revision of Position Paper: "Transmission and Discussion of Political Information under Article 73(e)"

This is to confirm the conversations which members of the Legal Adviser's Office have had with you concerning the revision of the General Assembly position paper, "Transmission and Discussion of Political Information under Article 73(e)", (SD/A/C.4/99, October 6, 1952). As this paper itself indicates, it has not received final clearance in the Department; and this office cannot give its clearance until some modification is made in Recommendation 2 which reads:

"2. The Delegation should be guided by the view of the United States that the General Assembly is competent, under Article 10 of the Charter, to discuss and make recommendations on conditions in non-self-governing territories generally, including political questions arising out of Articles 10, 14, and 73."

This office objects to the present phrasing of this recommendation because it may reasonably be implied that the United States does not consider that the General Assembly has competence under Article 10 to discuss and make recommendations on political conditions in particular non-self-governing territories. Such an implication is inconsistent with the Comment on Recommendation 2 which appears upon page 5 of this position paper, and is most certainly inconsistent with the United States position on the items of Tunisia and Morocco which have been assigned to Committee 1. Regarding the Tunisian and Moroccan questions, the United States position is that the General Assembly is competent to discuss and make recommendations relating to these items; and that this competence is not restricted to recommendations generally, but extends to whatever type recommendation the General Assembly may decide upon.

This office therefore proposes that Recommendation 2 of this paper be clarified so as to reflect accurately the United States position on the competence of the General Assembly, as follows:

- (1) Delete the word "generally" from the recommendation; or
- (2) Add new language, so the text will read as follows:

"2. The Delegation should be guided by the view of the United States that the General Assembly is competent, under Article 10 of the Charter, to discuss and make recommendations on conditions in non-self-governing territories, including political questions arising out of Articles 10, 14, and 73, both generally and also with respect to particular non-self-governing territories."<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup>The Department telegraphed the following instruction to the Delegation on Oct. 29:

"Re: Comite 4 Political Discussions.

"Dept has decided not to complete clearance draft position paper on transmission and discussion of polit info under Article 73 (e) sent to Del as SD/A/C.4/99. Question of competence GA consider polit questions in colonial field may not arise Comite 4 in form requiring statement US views. Question of transmission polit info under Article 73 (e) is dealt with in position paper SD/A/277.

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] November 4, 1952.

Subject: Committee Four Items

At lunch today, Bunche discussed a number of questions in the Fourth Committee. He considers the Wameru issue to be one that can cause a lot of trouble. He hoped that the British might be able to make some conciliatory gesture or statement which would help to soften the attack of the anti-colonial group.

On the question of Southwest Africa, he said that everyone seemed to have exhausted their ingenuity in thinking up anything which could profitably be done. However, he had asked Wieschhoff (Secretariat) to work on an idea which he expected to have in a day or two and which he promised to show me.

We discussed at length the question of the difficulties posed by the number of requests for oral hearings. Bunche agrees with our views on this point and talked about various ways in which it could be solved. He thought an ad hoc committee to study procedures might be useful and agreed that the work might be done by a subcommittee of the Fourth Committee which could report back to the full Committee during this session. He agreed with my suggestion that a Committee of this type should deal with the matter solely in terms of general procedure and not in terms of the specific petitions or requests currently received. As to an eventual solution, he thought it might be possible for the Fourth Committee to appoint a subcommittee to hear the applicants and to report to the full Fourth Committee, but he was not at all sure this would be accepted by the anti-colonial groups. He did think we could get acceptance for a proposal to the effect that in hearing the petitioners the Fourth Committee would allow them to make a single statement after which the Committee would proceed with other business. In the interval, members of the Committee would be given say 48 hours to submit questions in writing which would be transmitted to the petitioners who would in turn submit their answers in writing. He felt that a procedure of this kind would eliminate much of the waste of time experienced in the cross-examination of the Ewe representatives in Paris last year.

In general, Bunche thinks that the administering powers would be in a very much stronger position if they from time to time take the initiative in introducing proposals instead of always sitting back and waiting until their opponents put them on the defensive in regard to a resolution they don't like. I told him I had urged this point of view for some time.

CONFIDENTIAL

Subject: Oral Hearings in Committee 4 of Inhabitants of Trust Territories

It is clear from your memorandum of November 1, 1952<sup>1</sup> and from the recent meetings of Committee 4 that the question of oral hearings by individuals and groups before the Committee is bound to become an increasingly troublesome problem. This memorandum contains some observations on the situation in relation to hearings of people from the trust territories. We are preparing a paper, which we will clear, on the particular issue you raise in your memorandum, namely the possibility that a Puerto Rican independence group may request a hearing in the Fourth Committee in connection with the factors question.

In the present mood of Committee 4, it is already quite evident that it will be difficult, if not impossible, at this session to get the Committee to decide not to hear individuals from trust territories who express a desire to be heard. Our Delegation in the Fourth Committee has on various occasions offered reasonable arguments as to why a hearing should not be granted in a particular case, but the Committee has not responded to the reason and logic which has been advanced, nor do I think it is likely to do so at the present time. I think, therefore, we are bound to have great difficulty at this session in achieving what I assume to be our general objective in respect of these requests for hearings—namely, while admitting and supporting the right of petition in relation to the trusteeship system, to seek to prevent the hearing of individuals and groups from being extended to become a major if not the major activity of Committee 4. Since there is no basis for contending that the Assembly is not legally competent to hear petitioners from trust territories, the achievement of the objective of limiting the number of hearings must be obtained with the support of a majority of the members of the Committee. For this reason, and because the majority at the moment is obviously intent on hearing almost everybody from the trust territories who expresses a desire to be heard, I think our best hopes for the future lie in the fact that the Fourth Committee at this session appears to be committing itself to a series of hearings which will almost inevitably consume a great deal of time and possibly will make the more moderate members realize that some other course must be followed than a simple agreement by the Committee to hear everybody who seeks to be heard. If this situation of “saturation and confusion” should materialize, perhaps at the next session of the Fourth Committee arguments such as those we have made on occasion this year may prevail in individual cases. If this general approach is valid, I believe that efforts by the administering powers at this session to rationalize the procedures of Committee 4 in relation to these oral hearings might give the Committee the feeling that it could from now on give attention to all who apply for hearings without jeopardizing its larger work program. Thus, a study of procedures at this stage might stimulate the establishment by Committee 4 of additional and even permanent machinery for oral hearings.

I believe that the Delegation has already used in relation to individual cases the principal contentions which we feel here might from time to time be advanced against an oral hearing. With appropriate adaptation to a specific case, the principal possible contentions seem to be: (1) that the applicant for a hearing should bring his case first to the Trusteeship Council; (2) that, where a visiting mission is in the area, the report of the visiting mission should first be received and examined before a hearing is granted to an applicant from that area; (3) that the request for a hearing should indicate the nature of the problem which the applicant wishes to discuss and that the problem should be of major importance; and (4) that the applicant should submit written documentation on the basis of which a judgment could reasonably be made as to the desirability of granting him a hearing. It is true that these arguments do not seem to attract much support in the Committee this year. However, as I have suggested above, if the Committee has a bad experience with the question of oral hearings at this session, more attention may be paid to such views next year.

I am afraid that this is not a very optimistic analysis, but I am sure you agree that as is the case with most problems in the colonial field there is no easy solution to this one either.

Delga 208. Re approval by 4th Committee of GA of requests for hearings. The SYG UN has officially informed USUN that 4th comite approved on Oct 22, 1952 requests for hearings submitted by the Meru Citizens Union (Tanganyika), the "Union des Populations du Cameroun" (Cameroon under French administration) and the all-Ewe Conference (Togoland), and on Nov 6 approved requests for hearings submitted by the Somali Youth League (Somaliland), the Unione Nazionale Somala (Somaliland), the "Assemblee Traditionnelle du Peuple Douala" (Cameroon), the "Parti Socialiste Camerounais" (Cameroon) and the "Groupements Musulmans du Cameroun" (Cameroon). On Nov 4 approved request of Togoland Congress (Togoland).

The SYG UN has also advised of the designation of reps by the following orgs: Union des Populations du Cameroun (Ruben Um Nyobe), Somali Youth League (Abdullahi Issa), Unione Nazionale Somala (Sallah Scek Omar) and Groupements Musulmans du Cameroun (Duala Manga Bell). It is understood that these reps have applied or will apply for visas to come to New York. Reps of Meru Citizens Union and Togoland Congress are presently in New York.

The SYG UN has informed USUN informally that Um Nyobe has advised of difficulty in securing visa Paris and that Issa has advised of failure obtain visa Cairo despite visa application Oct 20. According to Stavropoulos (UN legal dept) it is UN position that 4th comite approval of requests for hearings constituted invitations by UN and that designated reps of above-mentioned orgs entitled admission US under provisions sec 11 (5) of Hdqrs Agreement.<sup>1</sup>

All in all, the Fourth Committee granted eleven oral hearings concerning four trust territory problems: the Wa-Meru land problem in Tanganyika, the Ewe and Togoland unification problem, the Cameroons unification and other problems, and certain general problems in Italian Somaliland. Although oral hearings were granted to representatives of five African political organizations in the French Cameroons, only two of the groups actually sent spokesmen: the Union des Populations du Cameroun (UPC), which sent Ruben Um Nyobe, and the Parti Socialiste Camerounais, which was represented by Charles Rene Okala.

Subject: Mr. Henry Hopkinson's<sup>1</sup> Reported Views on the UN's Work on Colonial Questions

There is enclosed a copy of a memorandum of an informal conversation between Mr. Peter Smithers, M.P. and officers of the Embassy on the subject of Mr. Henry Hopkinson's reported views on the work of the UN on Colonial Questions. Mr. Smithers is Mr. Hopkinson's Parliamentary Private Secretary (unpaid, unofficial personal assistant) and takes a keen interest in colonial affairs.

[Enclosure]

MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION

Participants: Mr. Peter Smithers, M.P.
Mr. B. M. Hulley
Miss Margaret Joy Tibbetts

Mr. Smithers said "off the record" that Mr. Hopkinson had personally enjoyed his stay in New York at the UN but had been much perturbed at developments in the Fourth Committee, particularly with the United States' attitude on colonial questions. He said that the British "rather expect" a critical approach on the part of the Latin American and Asian-Arab nations because of the past history and the presently ill informed nature of opinion, both official and unofficial, in those countries. The United States is, however, in a completely different category, and it was inexplicable to Mr. Hopkinson how the United States could expect nations like France and Britain "to put themselves on the block every year" in these Fourth Committee discussions. Mr. Hopkinson had, according to Mr. Smithers, been completely unable to understand the basis of the United States attitude on the competence of the UN to discuss Tunisia and had wondered if the United States had thought through all the implications of its failure to support France on a major issue of this nature.

Mr. Smithers continued that Mr. Hopkinson would certainly not blame France if she walked out of the Fourth Committee and that it was questionable whether the United Kingdom should continue to participate in UN colonial matters. In response to an inquiry as to whether that would not be a far too drastic step, Mr. Smithers said that there was no reason why Britain should have to go on "putting up with this sort of thing" and that "a lot of us" (presumably other Tory M.P.s) feel that the UK should just refuse to have anything to do with the work of the UN in colonial affairs. In any case, he concluded, Mr. Hopkinson had found the attitude of the Guatemalans and the Egyptians, for example, more consistent and easier to understand than that of the United States.

Subject: Visiting Mission to the Trust Territory of the Pacific, 1953.

The Trusteeship Council, on November 20, selected the members of the Visiting Mission which is to go to the Trust Territories in the Pacific: i.e., the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, New Guinea, Nauru and Western Samoa. Members selected for the Mission are: UK, France, Dominican Republic and Syria. The Mission is to depart about February 9 and return about May 20. The itinerary is to be worked out by the Mission in consultation with the Secretariat and the Administering Authorities concerned. The Mission will probably spend about two weeks in our Trust Territory.<sup>1</sup>

Comment: The composition of the Mission is not ideal from the U.S. point of view. The UK has designated as its representative Mathieson, who has been unfriendly in his attitude both to the U.S. and to American personnel in New York. It is probable that he will have considerable influence with his French colleague also. For this reason FE believed it to be desirable to have as friendly non-administering members as possible such as China or Thailand in preference to Syria. Syria has not yet served on the Trusteeship Council and accordingly would not have adequate background for asserting a strong position in the Mission in support of U.S. policy even if the Syrian representative should wish to do so. FE attempted to have the draft position paper amended so as to advise our Delegation for its background information and for such use as it might appropriately make of the Department's preference in the composition of the Mission. UND was, however, opposed to giving any guidance to our Delegation and it was not until Sandifer had discussed the matter with Mr. Johnson that UNA was willing to do anything in this direction. Mr. Johnson suggested that we might reasonably suggest if opportunity offered that as the Mission was going to the Pacific at least one Far Eastern state might be included. On the morning of November 20 Mr. Sandifer telephoned this suggestion to Mr. Gerig. It was, however, apparently too late to influence the situation. It is unlikely that the Mission composed as indicated above will present as favorable a report upon our administration of the Trust Territory as did its predecessor.

FOURTH COMMITTEE ADOPTS NINE-POINT RESOLUTION ON FACTORS; RECOMMENDS THAT 10-MEMBER SPECIAL COMMITTEE MAKE FURTHER STUDY

The Fourth (Trusteeship) Committee today recommended that a 10-member special committee be set up to carry further the study on factors which determine whether a territory is fully self-governing.

The recommendation of the Committee formed part of a nine-point resolution which will come before the General Assembly in plenary session.

The resolution represented a proposal introduced originally by Burma, Cuba, Egypt, Guatemala, Iraq and Venezuela (Doc. A/C.4/L.231), to which an amendment by the Dominican Republic and Peru (Doc. A/C.4/L.234) was introduced. In its final form, the text incorporated amendments by Argentina, Ecuador, the Netherlands, Poland and the USSR.

The resolution was adopted at the close of a three-and-a-half-hour session involving a 90-minute discussion of procedure and 24 separate votes. The resolution was finally adopted as a whole by 34 to 12, with 8 abstentions. Six of the 60-member Committee were absent when the ballot was taken.

The resolution asks the Assembly to:

(1) Approve provisionally "as a guide" the factors listed in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Factors (Doc. A/2178).

(2) Consider individual cases individually, taking into account the right of self-determination of peoples.

(3) Declare that the list of factors should in no way be interpreted to hinder the attainment of self-government.

(4) Declare that "for a territory to be deemed self-governing in economic, social or educational affairs, it is essential that its people shall have attained a full measure of self-government as referred to in Chapter XI of the Charter."

(5) Recommend that the list of factors be taken into account provisionally in cases examined by the General Assembly concerning cessation of transmission of information on territories or the obligation to transmit information.

(6) Decide to set up a new ad hoc committee of 10 members with instructions to continue and carry out a more thorough study of the factors.

(7) Invite the new committee to take into account also earlier statements by governments as well as the following "additional elements," in relation to Chapter XI of the Charter:

(a) the possibility of defining the concept of self-government;

---

- (b) the features guaranteeing the principle of the self-determination of the peoples;
- (c) the manifestation of the freely expressed will of the peoples.

(8) Invite members to transmit by 1 May 1953 a statement of their views on "the subjects contained in the terms of reference of the committee."

(9) Convene the committee four weeks before the opening of the next General Assembly.

The 12 members voting against the resolution as a whole were: Australia, Belgium, Colombia, Denmark, France, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Sweden, Union of South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The eight abstaining were: Canada, Dominican Republic, Greece, Israel, Nicaragua, Norway, Peru and Uruguay.

The six absent when the ballot was cast were: Costa Rica, Honduras, Iceland, Panama, Paraguay and Turkey.

Chairman Rodolfo Munoz (Argentina) announced at the close of today's vote that the choice of members to form the special committee would be made after the resolution had been considered by the General Assembly.

The Committee decided, after a lengthy debate this morning, that it would vote first on an amendment by Argentina (Doc. A/C.4/L.237) which proposed, among other things, that provisions of an amendment by the Dominican Republic and Peru (Doc. A/C.4/L.234) should be added to—and not substituted for—the provisions of the six-power draft resolution. By this decision, the six-power draft resolution was made the basis of the Committee's voting.

In a series of votes, the Committee then incorporated the amendments by the USSR (Doc. A/C.4/L.233), Poland (Doc. A/C.4/L.235), Ecuador (Doc. A/C.4/L.239) and the Netherlands (Doc. A/C.4/L.236), as well as amendments by Argentina and joint amendments by the Dominican Republic and Peru.

During the voting, the representatives of the Dominican Republic and Peru withdrew a provision of their amendment which would have the Assembly take note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Factors.

In explanation of vote, Benjamin Gerig (United States) stated that two theories underlying the resolution had led the United States to vote against its adoption as a whole. The first of these was the concept of the indivisibility of autonomy, which was embodied in the resolution. The second, he said, was the idea that the General Assembly was the authority which was competent to decide when a territory was fully self-governing.

Dr. Brita Skottsberg-Ahman (Sweden) gave similar reasons for her delegation's negative vote.

Carlos Peon del Valle (Mexico) reserved the position of his delegation.

Dr. Enrique de Marchena (Dominican Republic) and Dr. Carlos Salazar (Peru) said that their delegations had abstained in the vote on the resolution as a whole because of the inclusion of two paragraphs which dealt with autonomy and which they could not accept.

Emile Najjar (Israel) said he believed that the Committee had not been successful in reconciling diverging views.

The Committee adjourned until tomorrow at 10:30 a. m., when it is expected to begin consideration of the Report of the Trusteeship Council (Doc. A/2150).

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK, December 9, 1952.]

Subject: Composition of the Ad Hoc Committee on Factors

In a meeting of the Administering Powers, called by Australia and the United Kingdom, held on December 5, 1952, the United Kingdom strongly urged that since difficulties were being encountered in finding a fifth administering member for the Factors Committee, all administering members should agree to refuse to serve on the Committee. In the ensuing discussion Ambassador Muccio expressed opposition to this suggestion. Ryckmans also recognized that, if such an attitude of non-cooperation were adopted the Administering Powers would be in an indefensible position since that would be, in effect, refusing a balanced committee after this had been freely offered to them by the non-administering members. Australia also opposed the suggestion. It was evident that Denmark and New Zealand were not much in sympathy with the proposal for non-cooperation, although they were prevented from saying so directly by the fact that the instructions which they had precluded them from serving on the Committee. The issue was left unresolved, with the understanding that the Administering Powers would consult their governments further on the basis of the factors which had emerged at the meeting. The New Zealand representative who was rapporteur of Committee 4, reported that the Chairman of Committee 4 also rather hoped for an opportunity to nominate an unbalanced committee and to break the precedent which he apparently regards as unfortunate.

<sup>1</sup> Addressed to Philip C. Jessup and Charles A. Sprague of the U.S. Delegation to the General Assembly and the following advisers to the Delegation: Ambassador John J. Muccio, O. Benjamin Gerig, Curtis C. Strong and E. P. Noziglia. Ambassador at Large Jessup was the U.S. spokesman in the Fourth Committee, with the assistance of Ambassador Muccio.

Subsequently, on December 8th Dr. Lannung told Mr. Cargo that he had discussed the situation with both New Zealand and the United Kingdom on the day following the meeting, and that the United Kingdom had agreed to serve as the fifth administering member. This decision was announced by the Chairman of Committee 4 at the meeting of the Committee on the morning of December 8th.

This episode seems to illustrate rather clearly the desire on the part of certain Administering Powers to find a basis for non-participation in colonial questions in the United Nations and, in particular, their strong desire to associate the United States in such efforts.

DRAFT RESOLUTION VI: FACTORS WHICH SHOULD BE TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT IN DECIDING WHETHER A TERRITORY IS OR IS NOT A TERRITORY WHOSE PEOPLE HAVE NOT YET ATTAINED A FULL MEASURE OF SELF-GOVERNMENT

1. UNITED STATES POSITION

The United States should vote against the resolution on this subject (Resolution VI) in the form recommended by the Fourth Committee.

This resolution provisionally approves an annexed list of factors to serve as a guide both for the General Assembly and for the Administering Members in deciding whether a territory has or has not attained a full measure of self-government. It also provides for a new Ad Hoc Committee on Factors to carry on a further study.

The United States voted against this resolution in Committee Four because the resolution contained two principles which we could not accept. The first of these is the clear implication in the resolution that the Administering Authority and the General Assembly jointly decide when a territory is no longer non-self-governing. The other is the principle of the indivisibility of autonomy. That is the concept that in order to qualify as self-governing, a territory must have achieved a

2. HISTORY IN COMMITTEE

This resolution was introduced in connection with the Fourth Committee's discussion of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Factors. After several amendments were accepted and following a paragraph by paragraph vote, the resolution was adopted by a vote of 34-12 (U.S.)-8.

3. POSSIBLE DEVELOPMENTS IN PLENARY

It is anticipated that this resolution recommended by the Fourth Committee will be adopted without difficulty and without discussion.

FOURTH COMMITTEE ITEMS AT THE SEVENTH GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The Fourth Committee of the Seventh General Assembly held 65 meetings and adopted 15 resolutions. In the Committee the United States voted for 9 of these, against 5, and abstained on 1. In the Plenary the United States was able to support 11 out of the 14 resolutions finally adopted, as 2 of those against which it had voted in Committee Four (the Ewe resolution and the resolution on the renewal of the Non-Self-Governing Territories Committee) were satisfactorily amended, and 1 (the Wa-Meru resolution) was rejected, failing to obtain the necessary two-thirds majority.<sup>1</sup>

PRINCIPAL ISSUES IN COMMITTEE IV

1. Renewal of the Committee on Information: Sentiment in Committee Four was sharply divided between the majority who preferred the renewal of the Committee for an indefinite period and those Administering Authorities who were opposed to the continuation of the Committee. At the Committee stage, the United States and Venezuela took the lead in endeavoring to secure a compromise between the 2 extremes by seeking to renew the Committee for successive three-year periods. The advocates of an indefinite continuation of the Committee were successful in Committee Four (40-12(U.S.)-2). However, strong statements by the United Kingdom, Belgium and France, pointing out that they could not participate in such a Committee, led the Plenary to reject the idea of a permanent Committee by a vote of 11-18(U.S. Administering Authorities)-30 and approve a simple continuation of the Committee for three years.

<sup>1</sup> The summary records of the Fourth Committee and the General Assembly are published by the United Nations at New York in the Official Records of the General Assembly (session as appropriate; in this case the Seventh Regular Session). A rich source is the Annexes which are printed for each General Assembly session. These include individually printed fascicules of as many pages as required to set forth a complete legislative history of each agenda item, with texts of important documents and a check list of all relevant documentation. Taking the subjects reported in the instant document as an example, the reference source for paragraphs numbered 1, 2, and 3, would be United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Seventh Session, Annexes, fascicule for agenda item 33. This was a composite of 17 pages covering agenda items 33-36, all relating to information from non-self-governing territories under Article 73(e) of the United Nations Charter; there was additionally a second fascicule for agenda item 36 containing the Report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Factors (Non-Self-Governing Territories). Continuing with the subjects of the instant document, there were fascicules in the 1952 Annexes for numbered paragraphs 6, 7, and 8, as follows: agenda item 32 (Ewe and Togoland unification question), agenda item 31 (administrative unions), and agenda item 38 (South West Africa). There were none for numbered paragraphs 4 and 5, as these were not inscribed items on the agenda.

Many of the events relating to non-self-governing territories and trusteeship question, at this as at other General Assemblies, were not reported separately by the U.S. Delegation and were included in the mass of detail making up the daily telegraphic summaries from the delegation to the Department of State. These are divided in the Department of State files between classified and unclassified summaries, are located in file 320, and include reporting on public events at the United Nations and official conversations between members of the U.S. Delegation and advisory staff and their counterparts in other national delegations. In respect of this particular General Assembly, there is also a complete collection of memoranda of conversations in which Ambassador Jessup was engaged or in which he had a direct interest, in the UNP files, lot 60 D 268.

2. Factors and Cessation: The Assembly has long considered itself competent to formulate guidance for Administering Authorities on the factors to be taken into account in the determination of when a territory ceases to be non-self-governing. The question of the General Assembly's competence and role in relation to such a decision had been avoided until this session. The resolution adopted by the Fourth Committee (34-12 (U.S.)-8) on the report of the Factors Committee clearly implies that the General Assembly shares with the Administering Authority competence to decide whether a territory is or is not non-self-governing. This resolution was adopted in Plenary by a vote of 36-15 (U.S.)-7. On a related subject, the question of the cessation of transmission of information on Surinam and the Netherlands Antilles, the Fourth Committee referred the matter to the new Factors Committee (29-0-13 (U.S.) to consider in the light of the Factors resolution. The Plenary vote was (55-0-4 U.S.). The United States abstained because of the unacceptable principles embodied in the Factors resolution.

3. Participation of Indigenous Inhabitants: Committee Four adopted 2 resolutions on this subject, 1 applicable to the Non-Self-Governing Territories Committee (40-10 (U.S.)-4) and the other to the Trusteeship Council (25 (U.S.)-1-24). The United States voted against the first of these resolutions because it refers to "direct participation" of "representatives" of non-self-governing territories in the work of the Committee. The United States believes that the best means of associating non-self-governing and trust territories more closely with the work of the United Nations is by expanding the practice of attaching suitably qualified indigenous persons to the delegations of Administering Members. The United States was able to support the resolution directed to the Trusteeship Council because it reflected this position. The Plenary vote on the Non-Self-Governing Territories Committee Resolution was (43-11 (U.S.)-4) and on the Trusteeship Council Resolution 36 (U.S.)-1 (Belgium)-19).

4. Oral Hearings: The question of the granting of oral hearings in Committee Four to petitioners from trust territories became acute at the Seventh Session when the Committee indiscriminately granted hearings to all who applied, in most cases without first examining the credentials of the petitioners or determining the nature of their complaint. The United States took the position that an orderly procedure should be established for granting such hearings and that in general oral hearings should be dealt with at least in the first instance, by the Trusteeship Council. Some Administering Authorities maintained that the way in which oral hearings were conducted by the Fourth Committee this year constituted participation by indigenous inhabitants of the trust territories in the work of the General Assembly. An additional problem for the United States involved the issuance of visas to the invitees, some of whom were ineligible for admission to the United States as ordinary visitors.<sup>2</sup>

5. The Wa-Meru Question: The most difficult of the oral hearings involved a section of the Wa-Meru tribe of Tanganyika which was forcibly evicted from its land by the Government of Tanganyika as part of the implementation of a land re-allocation scheme in that territory. This group petitioned the Trusteeship Council, were granted an oral hearing and appealed to Committee Four when they considered that the Trusteeship Council Resolution had not given them full satisfaction. The discussion of this petition in Committee Four was conducted in a very emotional atmosphere, frequently critical of the Trusteeship Council. The Committee adopted a resolution by a vote of (32-17(U.S.)-3) inviting the Administering Authority to return the lands. In the Plenary this resolution, as well as a substitute resolution supported by the U.S., which expressed regret at the action taken by the Administering Authority and emphasized the need for full compensation and other ameliorative steps, without asking for the restoration of the land, each failed to achieve the necessary  $\frac{2}{3}$  vote. The Committee text failed by a vote of (28-20(U.S.)-10) and the substitute text was thereafter defeated by a vote of 21(U.S.)-21-16).<sup>3</sup>

6. Ewe and Togoland Unification Question.—The United States introduced a resolution on this question in the Committee the principal objective of which was to bring about the re-establishment of a Joint Council for Togoland Affairs in which all local political groups would participate. Several amendments to the United States draft were adopted which rendered the final Committee draft unacceptable to the United States. The most extreme of these, introduced by Guatemala, provided for negotiations by the United Kingdom and France to establish a single trusteeship for a unified Togoland. The Committee

<sup>2</sup> As this item was not originally on the General Assembly's agenda, no Department position paper was prepared on the subject; a plenary position paper, Doc. US/A/3572, Dec. 20, 1952 (IO files, lot 71 D 440) relates to a specific rather than a general question, that of hearings of petitioners from the Trust Territory of the Cameroons under French administration.

Regarding the visa aspect of the question, the U.S. Government from the outset sought to speed up the processing of visa applications of those who had been granted oral hearings by the Fourth Committee and a rather extensive exchange of cables resulted on this between the Department of State and the field (Accra, Paris, Rome, Dakar, Lagos, Addis Ababa, Cairo, Leopoldville, Dar es Salam, Nairobi, and the Mission at the United Nations). For certain details on this problem, see the Gerig memorandum of Mar. 13, 1953, p. 1307. Rather full documentation is found in the ODA files, lot 62 D 225, "Visa Applications—Oral Hearings". There is a scattered documentation on this subject in the S/A file, lot 53 D 65, "UNGA 1952—4th Committee".

<sup>3</sup> A useful file of published and unpublished documents is in the ODA files, lot 62 D 225, "Wa-Meru." Telegraphic reporting is in the daily unclassified summaries; see particularly an extended report of Committee 4 meetings on Dec. 3, 1952, daily unclassified summary No. 117, telegram Delga 311, Dec. 3, 1952, 11:40 p. m. (320/12-352). A useful document in ODA files, lot 62 D 225 is the Office of Intelligence Research's Report No. 5946 of Feb. 24, 1953, entitled "Native Interests and Land Distribution in East Africa: A Case Study." adopted this resolution by a vote of 29-10 (U.S. Administering Authorities) -10. In the plenary the Guatemalan paragraph was deleted by a vote of 18-22 (U.S.) -18, and the text was otherwise improved by amendment. As a result the United States, as well as the United Kingdom and France, supported the amended resolution, which was adopted by a vote of 55-0-3 (Belgium, Norway, Peru).

7. Administrative Unions.—This question, which has been a troublesome one in a number of previous sessions, had a most satisfactory outcome this year. Largely due to US initiative the resolution proposed by the General Assembly's Committee on Administrative Unions was comprehensive, reasonable, and acceptable to us. This resolution, with minor modifications, was adopted in the Fourth Committee by a vote of 43-5 (Soviets) -3 (Belgium, Luxembourg, South Africa) and in the plenary by a vote of 49-5 (Soviets) -1 (Belgium). The controversial proposal initially made by Brazil to refer the question of administrative unions to the ICJ was not pressed to a vote.

8. South West Africa.—Consideration of this controversial question was, as the result of a suggestion made by Brazil, postponed until the Eighth Session and life of the Ad Hoc Committee on South West Africa was extended. The postponement resolution, which the U.S. and El Salvador joined Brazil in sponsoring, was adopted in Committee by a vote of 27-8-5, and in plenary by a vote of 45-2-8.

OTHER ISSUES

Assembly action on other issues is summarized below. The U.S. voted for all of these resolutions.

a. Social Conditions in Non-Self-Governing Territories (resolution approving the NSGT Committee's report on social conditions)—adopted in plenary by a vote of 45-5 (Soviets) -2 (Belgium, France).

b. Racial Discrimination in Non-Self-Governing Territories (resolution recommending steps to abolish all discriminatory practices in such territories)—adopted in plenary by a vote of 51-0-1 (South Africa).

c. Educational, Economic, and Social Policies in Non-Self-Governing Territories (resolution involving reporting by the Administering Authorities on their implementation of NSGT Committee reports)—adopted by a vote of 47-2 (Belgium, France) -8.

d. Report of the Trusteeship Council (resolution noting this report)—adopted by a vote of 46-0-5 (Soviets).

e. Hearing of petitioners from the Trust Territory of Cameroons under French Administration (resolution referring action on this matter to the Trusteeship Council)—adopted by a vote of 38-0-6 (Soviets, France).

f. Hearing of Petitioners from the Trust Territory of Somaliland under Italian Administration (resolution referring action on this matter to the Trusteeship Council)—adopted by a vote of 47-1 (Belgium) -10.

GENERAL CONCLUSIONS

While it is difficult to generalize as to the trends which characterized the Fourth Committee this year, it is clear that the U.S. has found it increasingly difficult to persuade the Committee to take moderate "middle ground" action. On many Fourth Committee issues the middle ground between the traditional colonial powers and the more critical non-administering members has diminished, sometimes practically to the vanishing point. The moderate group in this Committee, which fluctuates in composition, is frequently neither sufficiently large nor well organized to carry moderate or compromise proposals. Furthermore, it generally emerges only during the course of the session in reaction to extreme proposals. The Charter requirement of a two-thirds majority for plenary decisions on trusteeship questions acts as a restraining factor and at this session was a vital element in preventing the adoption of certain proposals highly prejudicial to the Administering Members, which might well have restricted their further participation in this aspect of UN work. It is evident that efforts must be made to strengthen this safeguard and extend its application to the increasingly important questions arising in the field of non-self-governing territories. In conclusion, however, it can be said that a number of difficulties foreseen for this session of the Fourth Committee were avoided and that the U.S. middle position achieved certain successes in terms of the resolutions finally adopted. The U.S. also succeeded in retaining a considerable degree of prestige and sympathy among a large number of the non-administering countries.

MEMORANDUM ON THE FACTORS TO BE TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT IN DECIDING WHETHER A TERRITORY HAS OR HAS NOT ATTAINED A FULL MEASURE OF SELF-GOVERNMENT

By resolution of the General Assembly adopted on 10 December 1952 an Ad Hoc Committee of ten members, comprising Australia, Belgium, Burma, Cuba, Guatemala, Iraq, Netherlands, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, United States of America and Venezuela, was appointed in order to continue and carry out a more thorough study of the factors which will have to be taken into account in deciding whether a territory has or has not attained a full measure of self-government.

In its terms of reference the Ad Hoc Committee is invited to take into account, inter alia, the list of factors (A/2178) prepared in 1952 by the Ad Hoc Committee set up under General Assembly resolution 567 (VI) and the statements transmitted by governments in compliance with the aforementioned resolution and, further, to take into account the following additional elements:

- (a) The possibility of defining the concept of a full measure of self-government for the purposes of Chapter XI of the Charter;
- (b) The features guaranteeing the principle of the self-determination of peoples in relation to Chapter XI of the Charter;
- (c) The manifestation of the freely expressed will of the peoples in relation to the determination of their national and international status for the purposes of Chapter XI of the Charter.

Paragraph 8, of the resolution of 10 December 1952 invites the Members of the United Nations to transmit in writing to the Secretary-General, by 1 May 1953, a statement of the views of their Governments on the subjects contained in the terms of reference of the Committee.

Paragraph 9, of the resolution of the General Assembly also requests the Secretary-General to convene the Ad Hoc Committee so that it may begin its work not later than four weeks before the opening of the 1953 session of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories. The Secretary-General will accordingly send in due course a notification informing the Governments concerned of the date and place of the meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee.

Attention is also drawn to the resolution adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1952 as regards the cessation of the transmission of information under Article 73e of the Charter in respect of the Netherlands Antilles and Surinam. This resolution in its operative part decides that the Ad Hoc Committee should examine carefully in 1953 the document submitted by the Netherlands Government relating to this matter, in the light of the aforementioned resolution on factors, and report to the Assembly at its eighth regular session.

The text of both of the above-mentioned General Assembly resolutions is enclosed.

As may be noted, to the resolution of 10 December 1952 (document A/2296) an annex is attached containing (a) a list of factors indicative of the attainment of independence, (b) a list of factors indicative of the attainment of other separate systems of self-government, and (c) a list of factors indicative of the free association of a territory with other component parts of the metropolitan or other country.

Other documents which may be found relevant are the following:

(i) part four of the report of the Special Committee on Information transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter (Document A/1836);

(ii) the report of Sub-Committee 9 appointed by the Fourth Committee at the sixth regular session of the General Assembly to study the question of factors and the report of the Fourth Committee to the General Assembly at its sixth regular session (Document A/2057);

(iii) the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Factors (Non-Self-Governing Territories) (Document A/2178) which records the views expressed by various members of this Committee in 1952 and lists a number of factors which will have to be taken into account in deciding whether a Territory has or has not attained a full measure of self-government;

(iv) the replies of the Governments laid before the 1952 Ad Hoc Committee and the working papers prepared by the Secretariat (documents A/AC.58/3, A/AC.58/4 and A/AC.58/5).

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] January 19, 1953.

THE COLONIAL ISSUE AND THE UNITED NATIONS

Belgium is very sensitive regarding the effect that statements made in the United Nations and actions taken by that Organization may have on the Belgian Congo and the Trust Territory of Ruanda-Urundi. This is understandable in terms of the vast importance of the Congo to the Belgian economy. It is 80 times the size of metropolitan Belgium and one-fourth the size of Europe. It is rich in copper, cobalt, palm oil, gold, industrial diamonds, tin and uranium.

The colonial policy of Belgium is, however, frequently criticized for being out of step with what is considered by many to be an enlightened colonial policy. The Belgian policy lays greatest emphasis on the social and economic development of the territory and very little emphasis is placed on political development and education for administration and management. To the critics of Belgian policy this contrasts unfavorably with the situation in most British territories where the development of self-government is encouraged. The Belgians are convinced of the wisdom of their policy, but this conviction has not made them less sensitive to criticism. In defense of their policy they assert that it has contributed to the economic and social betterment of the inhabitants and has enabled Belgium to keep its territories freer from internal disorders than any other part of Africa.

Although good working relations between the Belgian and United States Delegations to the United Nations are maintained, Belgian public opinion is often critical of United States positions in the United Nations discussions of colonial problems. Belgians are quick to point out the critical importance of the Congo's raw materials to the defense of the free world and to the economic stability of Belgium. It appears to many Belgians that United States support of United Nations action in the dependent area field is incongruous with its efforts to build up a strong, free Europe.

1. Belgium is regarded as the most conservative of the eight colonial powers in the United Nations.

a. Of 10 resolutions before the 1952 General Assembly relating to Non-Self-Governing and Trust Territories, on which the United States voted affirmatively, Belgium voted affirmatively on only 4. The only other colonial power with as negative a voting record was France; however, its position was in some cases more flexible. The United Kingdom voted affirmatively on 8 of these 10 resolutions.

b. For example, re higher education, while hundreds of inhabitants of British colonies in Africa attend foreign universities (outside of the metropolitan country), none of the inhabitants of the Belgian territories do so and only a handful study in Belgium, and this is a part of a deliberate policy. Following the recent announcement of a U.S. offer of fellowships and scholarships for inhabitants of trust territories, made pursuant to a General Assembly resolution, officials of the colonial administration in the Belgian Congo have indicated to United States officers that they do not wish the offer to be publicized in the Belgian trust territory.

2. The Belgian Government is particularly sensitive to anything that appears like United Nations interference or criticism of their administration of the Congo and of the Trust Territory of Ruanda-Urundi, and interpret their obligations under the Charter in a very restricted manner.

a. A two-day talk on colonial policy was held with the Belgians in 1950 in which an attempt was made to persuade them to follow a more positive and cooperative line in United Nations Committees. These talks were not as productive as similar talks with the French and British. Subsequent talks have been held with the British and French but not with the Belgians.

b. The Belgian Government tends to give only the minimum of information in their reports to the United Nations required under Chapter XI of the Charter. In particular, the Belgian view of the requirements of Article 73(e) of the Charter is very narrow. They maintain that technical information is all that is required to be submitted to the U.N. and that for information purposes only. They have consistently opposed the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories established by the General Assembly to discuss the information transmitted. At a dinner conversation with Ambassador Jessup during the Seventh General Assembly the Belgian Representative stated that his Government now considered it a mistake to ever have participated in the Committee. On the specific issue of renewing the Committee he hoped that the Assembly would adopt an unacceptable resolution so that Belgium could more easily take the decision not to continue their participation. This attitude was characteristic of the Belgian Delegation in regard to other proposals before Committee Four.

c. The Belgian Government is particularly sensitive regarding any resolution which would give the indigenous inhabitants of the territories greater participation in the work of the United Nations Committees. The Belgian Representative in Committee Four took a serious view of the granting of oral hearings by the Fourth Committee, maintaining that it constitutes participation of indigenous inhabitants in the work of the General Assembly.

d. The Belgian Government also fears any move in the United Nations which would stress a time period within which independence might be achieved.

3. The attitude of the Belgian authorities is well exemplified in a speech given on February 12, 1952 by Mr. Fernand Van Langenhove at the Belgian-American Association in Brussels. In this speech the following points inter alia were made :

- a. The importance to the Belgian economy of the Belgian colonies.
- b. That many anti-colonial countries with large unassimilated indigenous peoples continue to criticize Belgium and other colonial powers while their own native populations are less well treated.
- c. That there is a tendency for liberal United Nations Members to fall unwittingly into allies of Soviet imperialism, which is paradoxical.

4. The Belgian Representative in Committee Four has recently been employing a tactic of counterattack. He maintains that the scope of Article 73 of the Charter should be widened to include the aboriginal populations in many countries who have not achieved the same degree of civilization as the rest of the population. This has proved to be an unpopular thesis among those Members of the United Nations, chiefly Latin Americans, which include such populations within their territory. It is difficult to determine to what extent, if any, Mr. Ryckmans' efforts to have this thesis accepted has led to the abatement of anti-colonial criticism, which is its obvious purpose.

5. The importance which Belgium attaches to colonial problems in the U.N. is testified to by the assignment of such an important figure as Mr. Pierre Ryckmans, formerly Governor-General of the Belgium Congo and presently Director of Belgium's Atomic Energy Commission, to be its representative on the Trusteeship Council and in the Fourth Committee. Although Mr. Ryckmans' position with respect to colonial issues is very unpopular among the non-administering Members of the United Nations, he is held in high respect. His working relations with United States Delegations have always been most cordial and friendly.

6. Although the Belgian Ambassador took an occasion to approach the Department to note "with surprise the attitude adopted by the United States Delegation at the Sixth Assembly of the United Nations on the adoption of various resolutions . . .", it is not expected that a similar démarche will be forthcoming as a result of the Seventh General Assembly. Close working relations with the Belgian Delegation at the Seventh General Assembly indicate that they appreciate the reasons for the position on colonial problems which the United States has pursued.

UNDERLYING ISSUES IN UNITED NATIONS CONSIDERATION OF COLONIAL QUESTIONS

1. What are the respective basic assumptions of the principal administering and non-administering powers as they emerge in United Nations consideration of colonial questions?

2. To what extent have the colonial powers become accountable to the United Nations for their colonial administrations?

a. Has Chapter XI modified the constitutional relationship of administering authorities to their colonies?

b. "Political information" question (transmission of, discussion of, recommendations concerning).

c. Force and effect of "recommendations" of UN bodies.

3. To what extent do the powers which have not reported under Chapter XI nevertheless have responsibilities to the United Nations for population groups under their control who do not participate in their political processes (i.e., who are not fully self-governing)?

a. What constitutes a non-self-governing people under Chapter XI?

b. What attitude should the U.S. adopt toward the Belgian thesis?

4. To what extent is it proper for the United Nations to involve itself in the decision of the administering (colonial) power to shift one of its territories from non-self-governing (colonial) status to self-governing status and consequently to cease transmitting information on it to the United Nations?

a. "Factors" and "cessation" question

b. "Puerto Rico" question

c. Hawaii and Alaska

5. What is the proper role of the UN in promoting international respect for the concept that all peoples have the right to determine their own destinies?

a. Self-determination question.

6. How can the U.S. reconcile its security interest under NATO with its traditional policy of sympathy for the aspirations of non-self-governing peoples for self-government, and our need to retain the friendship and support in the East-West struggle of the anti-colonial states and peoples of the world?

a. Tunisia

b. Morocco

c. Cyprus

7. To what extent should the U.S. exercise pressure on the European states administering Caribbean territories to improve conditions in nearby areas in order to avert dangerous subversive movements there?

8. What is the U.S. interest in the present condition and future development of the Melanesian and Polynesian peoples of the South Pacific, e.g.

- a.* Question of Netherlands New Guinea
- b.* Use of South Pacific Commission

9. To what extent and in what manner shall the colonial population play a part in UN consideration of colonial questions?

- a.* Participation in TC, NSGT Committee, etc.
- b.* Oral hearings

10. What is the appropriate role of the General Assembly in relation to the Trusteeship Council?

a. Should the principle of balance in the Trusteeship Council be rendered nugatory by the General Assembly?

b. What should be the respective roles of the Trusteeship Council and the General Assembly in matters of oral hearings?

c. To what extent should the General Assembly make recommendations directly to the administering authorities of Trust Territories instead of through the Trusteeship Council?

11. To what extent shall UN machinery not provided in the Charter be established to deal with colonial questions?

- a.* Renewal of NSGT Committee
- b.* UN plebiscites in non-self-governing territories and trust territories re self-determination
- c.* Visits to non-self-governing territories

12. What policy should the U.S. follow toward the integration of colonial areas with special reference to:

- a.* The Ewe question
- b.* The Cameroons unification question
- c.* Administrative unions affecting trust territories
- d.* Integration of Guam and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands
- e.* Unification of the Samoas
- f.* Federation of British Caribbean areas
- g.* South West Africa question
- h.* Central African Federation
- i.* Integration of the Somali Areas of East Africa
- j.* Integration of French territories in West and Equatorial Africa

13. What position should the U.S. take regarding the development of multi-racial societies in colonial areas?

- a.* French North Africa (Arab, Berber, European)
- b.* East and Central Africa (African, European, Asian)

- c. Malaya (Chinese, Indian, Malay)
- d. Fiji (Indian and Fijian)

14. To what extent is it feasible for the U.S. to go beyond the strict requirements of the Charter re colonial questions in order

- a. to win the sympathies of the colonial peoples,
- b. to move the colonial powers to make more rapid progress in orderly development self-government,
- c. to have more influence in the UN majority, and
- d. to take the initiative away from the Soviets?

Memorandum Prepared in the Office of Dependent Area Affairs<sup>1</sup>

[WASHINGTON, March 13, 1953.]

PROBLEM

The problem is to explore possible ways for speeding up the processing of visa applications of individuals who have been granted oral hearings by United Nations bodies.

BACKGROUND

During the Seventh Session of the General Assembly the Fourth Committee granted oral hearings to representatives of eleven groups of petitioners from trust territories in Africa, inviting them to present their cases in the Committee during the course of the session. Most of the petitioners who appeared before the Fourth Committee had no difficulties in securing the regular United States non-immigrant visa 3(2); however, the issuance of visas to Ruben Um Nyobe, representative of the Union des Populations du Cameroun, and Abdullahi Issa, of the Somali Youth League, was delayed for a considerable length of time. This was because these two representatives, or their respective organizations, had in the past been associated with communist organizations and therefore were not eligible to enter the United States under the Internal Security Act of 1950, then in force. The following paragraph discusses these two cases in some detail.

Union des Populations du Cameroun

On October 22, 1952, the Fourth Committee agreed to an oral hearing for the Union des Populations du Cameroun, which subsequently designated Mr. Ruben Um Nyobe as its representative. Upon receipt of this information, the Department sent a telegram (no. 45, September 27 [October 28], 1952) to the Consulate General in Leopoldville,

Belgian Congo, informing it of the Committee's action and stating that the Department "was anxious to avoid any responsibility for delay." On November 10 the Embassy in Paris (telegram no. 2871) informed the Department "was anxious to avoid any responsibility for delay". that ninth proviso action be sought. However, it was considered that no action could be initiated by the Department until the United States received from the Secretary General of the United Nations official notification of the Committee's invitation of Nyobe. Such notification, dated November 10, 1952, was received at USUN on November 15, 1952; however, its form was not entirely satisfactory since it did not indicate that Nyobe was considered by the Secretariat as an "invitee" within the meaning of section 11(5) of the Headquarters Agreement. It was only by the Secretariat note of November 18 that the United States was definitely advised that Nyobe was considered to be covered by section 11(5).

Upon receipt of the official confirmation by the Secretariat, on November 18, UNI initiated a security check through SY, the purpose of which was to enable the Department to determine definitely whether the visa applicant was admissible under present immigration statutes. The check was completed on December 4, 1952, and a letter to the Attorney General requesting ninth proviso action was dispatched on December 5. Action was taken by the Attorney General on December 9, 1952 and Nyobe's visa issued on December 11. On December 17 Nyobe appeared before the Fourth Committee.

Somali Youth League

The Somali Youth League was voted an oral hearing by the Fourth Committee on November 6, 1952 and designated Abdullahi Issa as its representative. On November 15 the Embassy in Cairo (OMV 34) informed the Department that Issa might require ninth proviso action. However, as in the above case of Ruben Um Nyobe, it was deemed that no action could be taken until the United States received official confirmation of the invitation from the Secretariat. This notification in its final form was received on November 18 and the Department's security check of Issa completed on November 28. On December 2, the letter requesting ninth proviso action was sent to the Attorney General, who approved the granting of Issa's visa on December 9. The Department transmitted this information to Cairo by telegram no. 1188, dated December 9, and the visa was issued on December 11, 1952. Issa appeared before the Fourth Committee on December 19, 1952.

Difficulties encountered in the proceedings of visa applications in 9th proviso cases

It is apparent that the Department was considerably handicapped by the Secretary General's delay in officially notifying the United States that the hearings had been granted. Most of the delay, however, resulted from the complex procedures for the processing of visas in ninth proviso cases. The hearings for Nyobe and Issa therefore had to be repeatedly postponed, and the long delay was a source of great embarrassment to the Delegation. (USUN telegrams to Department no. 208 dated December [November] 17, 1952, and no. 272 dated November 26, 1952, copies of which are attached.)<sup>2</sup> On several occasions the United States representative was questioned by the representatives of Byelo-Russia and Indonesia as to the visa status of the oral petitioners. Only through the cooperation of the Chairman of the Fourth Committee (Munoz, Argentina) and the Secretary (Ralph Bunche) was the United States spared further embarrassment with attendant increased possibilities of detrimental publicity. The danger is, of course, that damaging propaganda charges may be made if the United States appears to be denying entry to a petitioner whom the General Assembly has invited to be heard. In addition, it will be recalled that the United States had set the date of December 23, 1952, as its objective for concluding the work of the Fourth Committee. If the petitioners had not received their visas, the Fourth Committee might have had to re-assemble in February, a situation for which the United States might have been held partially responsible.

Possible Steps to Minimize Delay in Processing Visa Applications

Set forth below are some possible suggestions to improve the procedures in the handling of visa applications of United Nations "invitees":

The Department should :

1. Immediately be informed by the Delegation of oral hearings granted to petitioners.
2. Continue its practice of sending telegrams, immediately on receipt of such information, to the appropriate consular posts advising them of invitations from the United Nations to individuals.
3. Initiate security checks of invitees immediately after receiving word of the Committee's invitation from USUN, without waiting for official notification from the Secretary General's office.
4. Consider the possibility of initiating ninth proviso action without waiting for the completion of security checks by SY in cases when there is information indicating that individuals will be found inadmissible.
5. Instruct the Delegation to keep in touch with the Secretariat to encourage prompt transmittal of the official notification of each invitation.
6. Consider the possibility of sending a letter to the Attorney General setting forth the background of the problem faced by the Department and making clear the importance of rapid action on ninth proviso cases involving United Nations invitees.

Memorandum by the United States Government Addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations<sup>1</sup>

MEMORANDUM

The United States Government takes the opportunity presented by Resolution 648 (VII), Factors Which Should Be Taken Into Account In Deciding Whether A Territory Is Or Is Not A Territory Whose People Have Not Yet Attained A Full Measure of Self-Government, to set forth certain views, particularly with respect to the additional elements which the General Assembly has invited the Ad Hoc Committee to take into account.

The United States Government considers that efforts by the General Assembly to formulate a list of factors to be taken into account can be of value to the States administering non-self-governing territories and that it can assist in determining their obligations under Chapter XI of the United Nations Charter. Such obligations have freely and voluntarily been recognized by eight Members of the United Nations and the list of factors which has been provisionally recommended by the General Assembly for consideration appears to indicate that other States might also have such obligations in relation to territories under their administration whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government. The United States wishes to call special attention to the tragic case of those peoples who enjoyed independence prior to World War II but who have since had a dependent status imposed upon them.

In United Nations discussions of the "factors" problem the United States Government has been guided by three underlying convictions which it would take this opportunity to reaffirm:

(1) It is not feasible to lay down a definition of a full measure of self-government which can be precise, absolute and all inclusive.

This conviction is based on United States experience in administering non-self-governing territories and in participation in United Nations deliberations on this subject. In the light of its own experience in administering non-self-governing territories and promoting their development towards self-government, the United States recognizes the difficulty of predicting the exact form which eventual self-government may take. In some instances complete independence is the desired goal; in others a form of integration in or association with another political entity may best accord with the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned. Moreover, the paths of development leading to the expressed goals of full self-government or of independence may vary considerably under differing constitutional systems. Even as the constitutional arrangements of sovereign States defy strict classification so the end arrangements in the evolution of non-self-governing territories cannot be predicted in terms of any particular set of factors. The record of United Nations deliberations on this subject also indicates the difficulties involved in compiling a list of factors which would be inclusive enough to take into consideration the complexities and the varieties of constitutional forms and usages extant—a list which would at the same time be definitive.

(2) No enumeration of factors can do more than serve as a guide in determining whether a territory is or is not fully self-governing and each specific case will need to be determined by the particular circumstances of that case. This conviction is borne out by the conclusion of the Ad Hoc Committee on Factors in 1952.

(3) Each Administering Member of the United Nations is responsible for determining the constitutional position and status of territories under its sovereignty and the decision with respect to reporting under Article 73(e) on specific territories rests solely with the Administering Member concerned.

The United States does not believe, however, that the interpretation of the expressions “non-self-governing territories” and “territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government” since they appear in the Charter, is a matter for unilateral determination by individual Administering Members. We believe, therefore, in view of Article 10, that the General Assembly, for example, has authority to discuss and attempt to define the above expressions, to recommend to Administering Members generally the consideration of any definition it might adopt, or even to express its opinion in general terms on the principles which have guided or may guide Members in deciding on which of their territories they will transmit information.

In its approach to the problems raised in sub-paragraphs (b) and (c) of Resolution 648(VII) the United States has always been guided by the belief that all peoples should be encouraged and assisted in developing the political, economic, social and educational bases necessary to enable them to express responsibly and freely their own views as to their destiny. The element of free choice which all peoples desire is also the paramount consideration in problems connected with the achievement of self-government. The mode of expression of the peoples' wishes may, of course, vary in accordance with existing political circumstances and constitutional arrangements and any other arrangements which the people may desire.

The United States, therefore, agrees with the conclusion of the Special Committee in 1951, that “it does not consider that any single factor or any particular combination of factors can be regarded as predominant or decisive in every case, except that the will of the people concerned, properly and freely expressed, would in all cases be the paramount factor.” Closely related to this factor is that listed as political advancement in Resolution 567(VI) and considered by the General Assembly in that resolution as one of two essential factors. The political advancement of the population should be sufficient to enable them to decide upon the future destiny of the territory with due knowledge. The satisfaction of these criteria would guarantee the free choice referred to, thereby assuring the exercise of the principle of self-determination for these peoples.

As to the features guaranteeing the exercise of the principle of self-determination, the United States would take this opportunity to indicate several important ones. The freedom of the individual and his ability to participate and have a voice in his government rank very high among these features. The right of an individual to freedom of speech, press, assembly, religion and the right to a fair trial are of such importance that ordinarily they should be guaranteed in basic constitutional documents. Universal adult suffrage, based on adequate educational opportunities, will enable the citizen to participate in the decisions of government. In addition to the protection of the individual afforded by constitutional guarantees, the powers of government and its procedures should be clearly defined. Free and democratic electoral processes and the independence of the judiciary are likewise important elements.

Within a nation or territory in which a truly democratic society exists there will prevail a climate which will nurture the healthy exercise of the principle of self-determination. At the same time that the will of the majority will prevail, adequate protection and safeguards will be maintained for minorities. Dissimilar groups living and working together will be encouraged to sublimate their differences and work out a common destiny and thereby obviate the dangers inherent in expressing the principle of self-determination in ways which might cause excessive fragmentation and consequent jeopardy to their own interest and to the security of the international community.

The will of the people of a territory in which these factors obtain can be manifested in a number of ways. The people can express their will directly through plebiscites or referenda. More often the will of the people will be manifested through the normal functioning of orderly democratic government. Political parties will make a stand on issues concerning the territories' immediate or more remote future, and the free elections of candidates to both executive and legislative offices and the consequent processes of democratic government will reflect the will of the people on this as on all other important issues. As long as a free democratic political system broadly representative of the population exists in any given territory, it will not be difficult for the people to manifest their wishes concerning their present status or even their ultimate destiny.

It will not often be necessary to have recourse to internationally supervised plebiscites when such conditions exist. In fact, overreliance on this technique might seriously impede the development of those institutions through which the wishes of a people may be expressed on the whole range of their common problems. Full encouragement should be given by the international community to the development of broadly based, democratic, domestic institutions through which the will of the people can be made known on a continuing basis. Although the development of these institutions may make resort to internationally supervised plebiscites usually unnecessary they do not preclude their use in special situations.

Memorandum by the Officer in Charge, Trusteeship Affairs (McKay) to the Director of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs (Gerig)

[WASHINGTON,] May 14, 1953.

Subject: French Objections to Oral Hearings in the Trusteeship Council of Petitioners from the French Cameroons

In connection with the preparation of a position paper on the question of the hearing of petitioners from the French Cameroons at the Twelfth Session of the Trusteeship Council, I telephoned Mr. Francis Hure of the French Delegation this morning. In response to my question, Mr. Hure informed me that upon instructions from Paris the French Delegation had informed the Acting President of the Trusteeship Council, through the Secretary-General, that the French Delegation objected to the granting of oral hearings in the Trusteeship Council to representatives of the Traditional Assembly of the Douala people (T/Pet.5/L.7) and to representatives of the Bamileke people (T/Pet.5/L.9). You will recall that under Rule 80, paragraph 2, the President of the Council is authorized, between sessions of the Council, through the Secretary-General, to inform any petitioner who requests an opportunity for an oral presentation or petition that the Council will grant him a hearing at such time or place as the President may name. However, before communicating such information to the petitioner, the President "shall inquire of the Administering Authority or authorities concerned whether there are substantial reasons why the matter should first be discussed in the Council." The French notification to the UN was therefore made in response to a request from the Acting President of the Council through the Secretary-General. If the French had raised no objection, the President presumably could then have invited the petitioners to appear without consulting the Council. Since the French did object, however, the matter presumably will be discussed in the Council.

Mr. Hure said that his Government had not yet given the French Delegation detailed instructions but that, when the matter arose in the Council, he thought that his Delegation would oppose both requests for oral hearings on the grounds that the Council already has sufficient information on the subjects which the petitioners wished to discuss. In response to a further question, he stated that he thought his Delegation would be quite satisfied to have all questions relating to the French Cameroons postponed until the thirteenth session on the grounds that the next full discussion on French Cameroons problems was scheduled for that session. He hoped, however, that if the Council did take such a decision, it would not word its decision in such a way as to grant oral hearings for petitioners from the French Cameroons at the thirteenth session. He felt that his Government would oppose such a decision as it did not want the Council to hear the petitioners at any time.

In elaborating on French thinking on the general problem of oral hearings, Mr. Hure said that his Government was increasingly concerned by the number of requests for such hearings. He implied that his Government would therefore take a more strict attitude of opposition toward oral hearings than in the past. With regard to the Cameroons unification question, for example, his Government felt that the movement was an artificial one and that the granting of oral hearings would be against the interests of the Cameroons peoples because it would only publicize the unification question and thereby stimulate further agitation and unrest in the Territory.

Subject: Provision for including two inhabitants of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands in the U.S. Delegation to the Twelfth Session of the Trusteeship Council.<sup>1</sup>

The staff study for the Twelfth Session of the Trusteeship Council, which we sent you on April 6, 1953,<sup>2</sup> refers to the possibility of attaching a suitably qualified inhabitant of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands to the Delegation to the Twelfth Session of the Trusteeship Council. The staff study indicated that consideration was being given to such action pursuant to recommendations of the Trusteeship Council (Resolution 466 (XI)) and the General Assembly (Resolution 655 (VII)) and that consultations concerning the implementation of these resolutions were to be held with the Departments of the Interior and Navy.

As a result of such consultations, the Department of the Interior has by letter of May 29, 1953, from Mr. William C. Strand, Director of the Office of Territories,<sup>2</sup> nominated Mrs. Dorothy Kabua, a member of the Marshallese Congress, to serve on the U.S. Delegation. Mrs. Kabua has been recommended for this position by the High Commissioner of the Trust Territory, Mr. Frank E. Midkiff, a copy of whose letter on the matter is attached to Mr. Strand's letter.<sup>2</sup> Copies of both letters are enclosed. You will note that Mr. Midkiff considers Mrs. Kabua the inhabitant of the territory best suited to sit with the Delegation to the Trusteeship Council this year. As Mrs. Kabua does not speak English, it is recommended by the High Commissioner and the Interior Department that she be accompanied to the Trusteeship Council by her son, Mr. Amata Kabua, a school teacher, who would serve as her interpreter.

For the reasons set out below, I strongly hope that it will be possible to accept the recommendations of the High Commissioner and the Department of the Interior and to attach Mrs. Kabua and her son to the Trusteeship Council Delegation for the period of the examination of this report on the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. All concerned recognize, of course, that the expense of attaching two inhabitants of the territory to the Delegation would be greater than anticipated. However, Mrs. Kabua and her son have been suggested for reasons cogently set forth in the High Commissioner's letter. In this connection, I should like to point out that as the Trusteeship Council did not hold a 1953 winter session the demands for funds for Trusteeship delegations this year have been considerably smaller than usual. Under these circumstances it would not appear unreasonable to devote some part of these savings on a project of such value as that recommended herein.

There are a number of reasons why the United States should implement the resolutions cited above at this time. The United States took a leading part in the Trusteeship Council and the General Assembly in securing the adoption of these two resolutions. These resolutions represent compromises between those UN Members who sought to establish some kind of separate and direct representation in the Trusteeship Council for the inhabitants of trust territories and those who opposed any closer association of the inhabitants with the work of the Council. The U.S. opposed as a matter of principle any such direct representation and strongly contended that the attaching of inhabitants to the Delegations of the Administering Members would provide a desirable kind of closer association of inhabitants of trust territories with the work of the TC without derogating from the full responsibility of the Administering Authorities for the international affairs of these territories during the period of trusteeship. If, however, no administering authority implements these resolutions at the Council's forthcoming session, the only session scheduled before the next session of the General Assembly, it is likely that further efforts will be made in the Assembly to recommend some kind of representation for trust territory inhabitants unacceptable to the U.S., thereby placing us in a difficult dilemma politically and at a disadvantage vis-à-vis a large part of world opinion.

An additional reason for implementing these resolutions at the Council's forthcoming session lies in the fact that particular attention will be focussed by the Council on the U.S.-administered Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands at this session. A UN Visiting Mission has just visited the Pacific Islands, and its report, along with the annual report submitted by the United States, will be before the Council for consideration. There will also be a number of petitions (18) concerning the Trust Territory before the Council. Furthermore, it is expected that the United States will be represented on the Council by a new Representative and a new Special Representative. For the U.S. to include inhabitants of the Trust Territory on its Delegation to this session of the Council, in response to Council and Assembly Resolutions, would not only bring a favorable response from the majority of UN members but would also assist the new U.S. representatives in making a good first impression on the Council, the UN, and public opinion generally. Finally, direct experience with the workings of a United Nations body would, as pointed out by the High Commissioner, be valuable for qualified inhabitants of the Trust Territory, as well as a demonstration of the sincerity with which the U.S. carries out its trust in their behalf.

The High Commissioner indicates that it is his plan to leave Honolulu for Washington and New York on June 15, 1953. Presumably he would wish arrangements made so that Mrs. Kabua and her son could leave the Trust Territory in time to accompany his party. It is expected that briefing sessions will be held in the Department on June 19th and that the group from the Territory will proceed to New York on June 22 so as to complete preparations for their appearance before the Council, which is scheduled to take up the Pacific Islands on June 24, 25, and 26. Presuming this schedule is maintained, the presence of the Kabua's in New York would no longer be required after that period.

In order that the Department of the Interior and the High Commissioner may be informed as soon as possible of the Department's action on this matter, it would be appreciated if you could have it examined urgently and give us a reply in the near future.

The Counselor of Embassy in the Netherlands (Trimble) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

THE HAGUE, August 31, 1953.

No. 251

Subject: Belgian Withdrawal from United Nations Dependent Areas Committee

Several members of the Netherlands Foreign Office, including the Secretary General Baron van Tuyll, have expressed surprise at the action of the Belgian Government in withdrawing from participation in the work of the Committee on Information from Non-self-governing Territories without advance notice or consultation with the Netherlands Government. The Netherlands reaction is not unexpected in view of the fact that the Benelux organization is supposed to further close consultation between the Benelux partners on foreign policy questions. Foreign Office officials believe that the lack of consultation in this connection can be explained by the apparently predominant influence in policy determination in dependent areas affairs exercised by the Belgian Ministry of Colonies. In both the Netherlands and Belgium the colonial ministries share responsibility with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, but in the Netherlands the Ministry of Foreign Affairs largely determines United Nations policies.

The Netherlands is concerned at the present lack of balance in the Committee between the representatives of the Administering and the representatives of the Non-Administering Powers. This concern is prompted by the possibility that the Committee may adopt some resolutions or procedures contrary to Netherlands interests in the case of Netherlands New Guinea. Presumably difficulties might also arise with respect to the cessation of reporting on Surinam and the Netherlands West Indies. Several Foreign Office officials have suggested the possibility that further developments in the Committee could result in the Netherlands also withdrawing from participation in it. The Embassy, however, has been assured by these officials that if such action were contemplated the Netherlands would consult with the United States.

WASHINGTON, August 31, 1953.

CA-1159. Subject: Exchange of Views on the Forthcoming Eighth Session of the General Assembly

The Department desires at this time to exchange views with other Members of the United Nations about the work of the Fourth Committee (Trusteeship and Non-Self-Governing Territories) at the forthcoming Eighth Session of the General Assembly scheduled to be convened in New York on September 15, 1953. You are requested, in your discretion, to discuss with the Foreign Office the items on the provisional agenda dealt with in this airgram, which are among the more important issues likely to be considered by the Fourth Committee. You should indicate that these views are tentative and subject to modification after the Department has received the views of other Members. You are also requested to report any significant reactions from the Foreign Office to the items discussed below by cable if in your judgment they would not reach the Department before September 21 if sent by air pouch.

FYI Only: As was pointed out in the Department's circular airgram of October 18, 1952,<sup>2</sup> concerning preparations for the Seventh Session of the United Nations General Assembly, one of the principal difficulties that has confronted the United States Delegation in recent sessions of the General Assembly has been the fact that many representatives of the smaller countries in the Second, Third and Fourth Committees apparently have only the most general instructions and are consequently swayed by their personal ideas and the orations of their colleagues. The Department is anxious, therefore, that both the Foreign Office and the representatives on these Committees be fully informed about its views on the principal agenda items.

The Department is interested not only in having its views presented to the Foreign Office and the representatives on the Fourth Committee but also in receiving as soon as possible the views of other governments on the Fourth Committee items referred to in this airgram or any other items in which the other governments show particular interest. The Department is particularly interested in receiving information about any proposals or draft resolutions which other governments plan to introduce in the Fourth Committee.

It is apparent that certain colonial questions will be among the most controversial items before the forthcoming Assembly. Certain of the most difficult of these (i.e. Morocco, Tunisia) may not arise in the Fourth Committee. Nevertheless, the atmosphere in one Committee affects the atmosphere in other Committees, and the Department is anxious to do everything possible to keep discussion in the Fourth Committee on a moderate, reasonable and constructive basis. Those who profit most from controversies between administering and non-administering powers are the communist governments who find in them an excellent basis for endeavoring to weaken the unity of the non-communist world.

The most important item from the United States point of view which will be before the Fourth Committee of the General Assembly at its Eighth Session is that concerning the cessation of the transmission of information on Puerto Rico. The United States Delegation to the General Assembly's Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories will include Dr. Fernos-Isern, Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico to the United States as Alternate Representative. It is expected that our delegation to the Eighth General Assembly will also include a prominent Puerto Rican. The Department's circular airgram of March 31, 1953 set forth the Department's position and indicated the tactics that would be employed on this item.

The Fourth Committee of the General Assembly will also have before it the question of the Netherlands Government's decision on the cessation of the transmission of information under Article 73(e) on Surinam and the Netherlands Antilles. While the two cases of cessation, i.e., on Puerto Rico and on the Netherlands territories, appear on the same agenda item of the General Assembly there are substantial differences between the two cases. With respect to Puerto Rico, the United States will maintain that a full measure of self-government has been achieved by the people of Puerto Rico and that therefore it is no longer appropriate to transmit information to the United Nations under Article 73(e) of the Charter. On the other hand, the Netherlands Delegation will maintain that as a result of the constitutional changes which have occurred between the Netherlands and Surinam and the Netherlands Antilles, responsibility for economic, educational and social conditions of the territories resides with the governments of the territories and that constitutional limitations preclude the further transmission of information. The Netherlands will not make the contention that a "full measure of self-government" has been achieved by the territories but rather that a "large measure of self-government" has been attained and that governments of the territories have opposed the further transmission of information to the United Nations. The question of cessation on the Netherlands territories, at the request of the Seventh General Assembly, was examined recently by the General Assembly's Ad Hoc Committee on Factors. Because of the divergency of views of its Members, this Committee reached no conclusion on the item and referred the matter back to the Eighth General Assembly. While the Netherlands case has been before various organs of the United Nations for three years, we hope that United Nations consideration of the Puerto Rican case, on the other hand, will be completed at the forthcoming session of the General Assembly. End FYI.

The unclassified material below is presented in such a form as to serve, if you desire, as the basis for a Memorandum or Aide-Mémoire to be handed to the Foreign Office to supplement your discussions. A Spanish translation of this unclassified section is now in preparation in the Department for the convenience of posts in Spanish speaking countries and will be forwarded to the field within one week.

General Considerations

The United States continues to be guided by the following general considerations in its approach to dependent area questions in the United Nations. We approach these questions with a sincere desire to promote the principles set forth in the United Nations Charter. We realize that all Members of the United Nations have an interest in the affairs of non-self-governing territories, for the expression of which the Fourth Committee of the General Assembly is the logical and natural forum. We feel sure that all representatives on the Fourth Committee will be guided by the principle to which the administering Members are pledged in Chapter XI of the Charter "that the interests of the inhabitants of these territories are paramount". The most effective promotion of this principle will, we feel, arise from a cooperative spirit on the part of administering and non-administering powers alike. Many of these problems are genuinely complex and do not lend themselves to quick and easy solutions. We hope, however, that a large measure of agreement may be reached in the Fourth Committee as to reasonable and realistic steps which may be taken toward the advancement of non-self-governing territories towards the goals set forth in the Charter. It is with this objective in mind that the United States desires an exchange of views on certain of the more important questions that are expected to arise in the Fourth Committee at the forthcoming session of the General Assembly.

Ad Hoc Committee on Factors

The Ad Hoc Committee on Factors was set up by the General Assembly to study the "factors which should be taken into account in deciding whether a territory is or is not a territory whose people have not yet attained a full measure of self-government". This study was undertaken because Chapter XI of the United Nations Charter applies to "territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government", but does not define this expression.

During United Nations discussions over the past five years, the United States has favored full and frank discussion on this question in the belief that from such debate fuller understanding of the issues involved would emerge. The United States has participated in the Ad Hoc Committee established by the Sixth and Seventh General Assemblies to carry out a further study of this question. We believe that the report of the latest Ad Hoc Committee has contributed toward the refinement of the list of factors and that it sheds further light on this complex question. We propose to take the same attitude towards the Committee's report as we have towards previous discussions of this question and hope that other Members follow a similar course, in order that there may be maintained in the Fourth Committee the cooperative spirit between the non-administering and administering Members which we are convinced is essential to effective promotion by the United Nations of the advancement of non-self-governing territories. The United States continues to believe that the factors listed in the Committee's report provide a useful guide in determining when a territory ceases to be non-self-governing. It is our view, however, that no specific factor or particular combination of factors should be represented as determining the status of a territory in relation to Chapter XI of the Charter, since no formulation could be flexible enough to embrace the complexities of constitutional forms and usages in the wide variety of territories and at the same time be definitive.

As to the authority which has the competence to decide when a territory has attained a full measure of self-government, and therefore need no longer be reported on, it is the view of the United States that each administering Member has the right to determine the constitutional position and status of territories under its sovereignty. The United States also considers that the decision regarding reporting under Article 73(e) on specific territories rests solely with the administering Members concerned. The United States does not believe, however, that the interpretation of the expressions "non-self-governing territories" and "territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government", since they appear in the Charter, is a matter for unilateral determination by individual administering Members. We believe, therefore, in view of Article 10, that the General Assembly, for example, has the authority to discuss and attempt to define the above expressions, to recommend to administering Members generally the consideration of any definition it might adopt, or even express its opinion in general terms on the principles which have guided or may guide members in deciding on which of its territories it will transmit information. We believe that any resolution regarding the decision of an administering authority to cease transmission of information should not imply that the administering authority's decision requires the General Assembly's approval or disapproval. The United States finds it understandable that certain United Nations members may be concerned lest Chapter XI be circumvented by premature cessation of transmission of information under Article 73(e). We hope that administering authorities will endeavor to avoid arousing apprehensions on this point.

Participation of Non-Self-Governing Territories in the Work of the Committee on Information From Non-Self-Governing Territories

The Seventh General Assembly has asked the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories to study further the question of the direct participation in its discussions of representatives of those non-self-governing territories the inhabitants of which have attained a wide measure of responsibility for economic, social and educational policies. The United States believes that, as in the case of the comparable question with respect to the Trusteeship Council, the most practicable and satisfactory means to bring about such participation at the present time is to expand the practice of attaching suitable qualified indigenous inhabitants of territories to the Delegations of the appropriate administering authority.

The United States has followed the practice of attaching qualified leaders and experts from its non-self-governing territories to its Delegations to the Committee on Information. For example, when Puerto Rico was a non-self-governing territory the United States Delegation in 1951 included Dr. Roberto de Jesus Toro, a Puerto Rican expert on questions of economic development. Other administering authorities have from time to time attached indigenous personnel to their Delegations to United Nations meetings concerned with non-self-governing territories. The United States considers that this practice should be continued and encouraged.

The United States would feel it necessary to oppose in the Fourth Committee any proposals which would establish representation for dependent territories or the inhabitants of such territories distinct from the representation of the administering member responsible for the administration of such territories.

Participation of Indigenous Inhabitants of Trust Territories in the Work of the Trusteeship Council

The Sixth General Assembly by Resolution 554 (VI) invited the Trusteeship Council to examine the possibility of associating the inhabitants of trust territories more closely in its work and to report the results of its examination to the General Assembly at its Seventh Session. The Council considered the problem at its two sessions in 1952 and adopted a resolution which expressed the hope "that administering authorities would find it appropriate to associate suitably qualified indigenous inhabitants in the work of the Trusteeship Council as part of their delegations to the Council or in any other manner which they deem desirable."

During the discussion of Resolution 554 (VI) at the Sixth Assembly the sponsors of that resolution indicated that it was their desire to bring about the participation of representatives of indigenous populations in such a way that their representation would be separate and distinct from that of the administering authority. Mention was made of the concept of associate membership for the trust territories, with their representation to be chosen by the people of the territories rather than by the responsible administering authority. In the Trusteeship Council, however, the concept of separate representation was opposed by all administering authorities, as well as certain non-administering Members. The United States, while recognizing the desirability of closer association between the peoples of trust territories and the work of the Trusteeship Council, has considered that separate or dual representation for such peoples in the Council was incompatible with the concept of Trusteeship. At the conclusion of the discussion, the compromise formula described above, proposed by Thailand and supported by the United States, was adopted by the Council.

At the Seventh Session of the General Assembly the United States supported action taken by the Trusteeship Council on this subject by voting for Assembly Resolution 653 (VII) which in effect endorsed the action of the Trusteeship Council in suggesting participation by inhabitants as members of administering authorities' delegations or in any other way which they deem desirable and requested the Council to include information in its reports to the Assembly on the action taken in implementation of the Council's resolution.

The Syrian delegation introduced a resolution at the Twelfth Session of the Trusteeship Council which proposed the establishment of a committee to further examine the question of participation of indigenous inhabitants in the work of the Council. There was little discussion on the substance of the question and the resolution was adopted in spite of reservations expressed by some of the Members who felt the resolution of the Seventh General Assembly had endorsed the Council's action and that therefore further consideration of the question was unnecessary. The United States, El Salvador, Syria and the United Kingdom were appointed to the Committee to continue the examination of the question and to report to the Thirteenth Session of the Council (January 1954).

The United States considers that action by the Eighth General Assembly on this subject would be inopportune since the question remains under active consideration by the Trusteeship Council and will be examined further by the Council at its Thirteenth Session on the basis of the report of its recently established Committee. However, in any discussion that might take place at the Eighth General Assembly, the United States would continue to give careful consideration to any proposals which might be made with respect to further methods for achieving closer association and participation by trust territory inhabitants in the Council's work. United States support of close association of these inhabitants in the Council's work is evidenced by the fact that two inhabitants of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (Mrs. Dorothy Kabua, member of the Marshallese Congress, and her son, Amata Kabua) were appointed as members of the United States Delegation to the Twelfth Session of the Trusteeship Council. France also appointed an indigenous representative from a trust territory, Mr. Apedo-Amah from Togoland under French administration, as a member of its Delegation to the Twelfth Session of the Trusteeship Council. However, the United States continues to consider it undesirable to establish representation in United Nations bodies for inhabitants of trust territories apart from the representation of the responsible administering authorities or their territorial administrations.

The Ewe and Togoland Unification Question

This question was originally raised in the United Nations by petitions from leaders of the 800,000 Ewe people, who inhabit the coastal area of the trust territories of British Togoland and French Togoland, as well as a portion of the Gold Coast Colony. They object to being divided among different administrations and have requested unification under a single administration. Subsequently, other groups have asked for the unification of the two trust territories as a whole, rather than simply the Ewe areas. The question has been before the Trusteeship Council and the General Assembly in some form almost since their establishment. It will be before the Eighth General Assembly by virtue of a special report on the matter requested of the Trusteeship Council by the Seventh General Assembly.

The general position of the United States regarding this problem is as follows: The United States believes that, in conformity with earlier Trusteeship Council and General Assembly resolutions, advances have been made in reducing the inconveniences caused by the international boundary between the two trust territories and in increased cooperation between them in the economic, social and educational fields. It is our view that steps should be taken to preserve and develop cooperation in these fields while at the same time encouraging political advancement in each of the two territories. With regard to unification, it appears that the views of unificationists in the two Togolands are in a state of flux. In this situation it is difficult and probably unwise to recommend any drastic alteration of the present political status. However, the United States does favor full implementation of Trusteeship Council Resolution 643(XI) and General Assembly Resolution 652(VII). In supporting these resolutions the United States emphasizes that the contemplated implementation of these resolutions is to take place in several stages and urges the Council and the administering authorities concerned to concentrate their attention on the first stage as set forth in the Assembly's Resolution, namely, "carry on full and extensive consultations with the principal political parties in the two territories", with a view to reestablishing the Joint Council for Togoland Affairs, or a similar body "on a basis which will enlist the cooperation of all major segments of the population."

In considering steps to meet the wishes of certain groups in the two Togolands, it is necessary also to consider the effect of such action on the remaining inhabitants of the territories. For example, the interests of the inhabitants of the northern parts of the two territories (where the inhabitants, who form numerical majorities in both territories, have thus far been generally opposed to unification) must certainly be given proper consideration along with the interests of the predominantly Ewe-inhabited southern parts of the territories. It also seems likely that the opinions of the peoples in both the north and the south may be materially affected if the Gold Coast achieves complete self-government in the near future.

Educational Advancement in Trust Territories

FYI: You may wish to make reference to the information in the section immediately following in any general exchange of views with the Foreign Office on the respective views of the Department of State and the Foreign Office on the work of the United Nations in the field of dependent areas. This information details a recent example of action taken by the United States to assist in the promotion of the welfare of dependent peoples through the United Nations. End FYI.

On January 18, 1952, the United Nations General Assembly adopted Resolution 557 (VI) on Educational Advancement in Trust Territories which invites Member states of the United Nations to make fellowships, scholarships and internships available to qualified students from trust territories. Thus far seven nations, including the United States, have made offers of various kinds for grants in accordance with the Assembly invitation. The United States announced its offer in a note to the Secretary-General of the United Nations on November 6, 1952. Four grants were made available to students from any of the trust territories except the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, which is administered by the United States. Students of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands will of course be eligible for scholarships which may be offered by other United Nations members. Applicants for United States offered fellowships and scholarships were required to be indigenous to the trust territory through which they applied, proficient in English, and to have the equivalent of an A.B. degree except where candidates had gone as far in their formal education as the resources of the countries permit. In any event the applicants had to be at the junior or senior year of college level. The scholarships include maintenance, tuitions and fees, book allowance, and costs of domestic and international travel. The American diplomatic and consular officers concerned were given the relevant information concerning these grants in a circular airgram of December 9, 1952.

Applications for the United States grants were received from students in four of the trust territories, Western Samoa, Tanganyika, British Cameroons and British Togoland. On the basis of their qualifications four students have been awarded these scholarships, one student from each of the above trust territories and are now undertaking their studies in educational institutions in various parts of the United States.

The six nations, in addition to the United States, that have made offers to students from trust territories are Yugoslavia, India, Philippinus, Turkey, Norway, and Indonesia. It is anticipated that the United States will renew its offer for the school year 1953-54, and the number of grants offered may be increased.

Memorandum by the Officer in Charge of Trusteeship Affairs (McKay) to the Director of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs (Gerig)

[WASHINGTON, September 2, 1953.]

BACKGROUND INFORMATION NOTE ON THE PROBLEM OF ORAL HEARINGS <sup>1</sup>

Arguments for and against oral hearings are set forth below :

ARGUMENTS FOR ORAL HEARINGS

1. The growing tendency of the Fourth Committee to grant oral hearings is a reflection of the widespread concern in the international community on the colonial question. Not only is there great public sympathy for petitioners but some observers have singled out the petitions process as the most vital and significant part of United Nations activities in the colonial field. The sessions of the Trusteeship Council and the Fourth Committee which attract the largest public interest and the greatest number of press correspondents are those at which oral petitioners appear.

2. The granting of oral hearings is an effective way of focusing world attention on colonial problems, and of making its influence felt in colonial administration.

3. Oral hearings give representatives a chance to question the petitioners, and enable the General Assembly to obtain more information as well as a better understanding of indigenous points of view.

4. Oral hearings give the indigenous inhabitants more of a chance to familiarize themselves with the nature and significance of United Nations activities.

5. The Fourth Committee in certain instances may be an effective safety valve in which discontented petitioners can let off steam.

6. The United States would derive considerable propaganda value in the cold war from a liberal position toward the granting of oral hearings. This is particularly true because of the widespread attitude that our position on colonial questions is unnecessarily negative and legalistic.

---

<sup>1</sup>This document was prepared in connection with the informative Department of State position paper on oral hearings (Doc. SD/A/C.4/120, Sept. 5, 1953. "The General Problem of Oral Hearings in the Fourth Committee", not printed (IO files)). In a note to Gerig attached to the memorandum, McKay explained that the problem had been thoroughly "worked" within the Office of Dependent Area Affairs; and that it had been decided to draft the "pro and con arguments" separately, as "they help to clarify our thinking on the problem". Gerig subsequently appended to the document's title the words "in the Fourth Committee".

ARGUMENTS AGAINST ORAL HEARINGS

1. It is impracticable for an organization of sixty states to grant oral hearings to private individuals or organizations.

2. The General Assembly should not unnecessarily lengthen its work by the indiscriminate granting of oral hearings when it is trying to save money and to reduce the length of its sessions.

3. If the Fourth Committee were to grant a large number of oral hearings concerning trust territories, or if it were to grant any oral hearings concerning non-self-governing territories, a number of the administering authorities might be antagonized to the point of non-cooperation in these United Nations activities.

4. Oral hearings give the Soviet Delegation and other extreme anti-colonial powers an unnecessary and undesirable opportunity to exploit the United Nations for their own propaganda purposes.

5. The granting of oral hearings unnecessarily magnifies and distorts the grievances of petitioners and sometimes actually tends to create unnecessary problems.

6. The opportunity for oral hearings before the Fourth Committee tends to encourage political irresponsibility on the part of ambitious politicians, and over-reliance on the United Nations to solve problems which can best be solved by the people of the territories themselves.

THE EWE AND TOGOLAND UNIFICATION PROBLEM: SPECIAL REPORT OF THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL (A/2424)

THE PROBLEM

The unification of British and French Togoland is being requested in petitions to the UN from political parties in both Togolands, representatives of which may be granted oral hearings by the Fourth Committee. Certain non-administering Members may renew last year's effort for a resolution recommending steps to bring about the unification of all or part of these two trust territories. Such a resolution would be adamantly opposed by the two administering authorities, the U.K. and France, and would be unlikely to win the necessary two-thirds vote because it would fail to take into account the wishes of those Togolandese who oppose unification. This is the complex type of problem that can best be worked out by the peoples concerned, with the UN assisting by encouraging the establishment in a free political atmosphere of local political institutions in which representatives of all major groups can exchange and develop their views. The U.S. will be faced with the problem of endeavoring to have this item dealt with in such a way that it will not sharply divide the colonial and non-colonial powers but rather will permit a compromise solution acceptable to a substantial number of the non-administering Members, of the administering Members, and of the political parties in the two territories.

UNITED STATES POSITION

1. The Delegation should continue to support the step-by-step approach to this problem set forth in Assembly Resolution 652(VII).

2. The Delegation should oppose proposals which depart from the above approach to the extent of recommending any particular form of unification.

3. The Delegation should also oppose proposals for UN plebiscites or special UN investigative missions to the area on the grounds that insufficient time has elapsed for a fair trial of the program recommended in Resolution 652(VII), and that the Trusteeship Council's 1949 and 1952 Visiting Missions to West Africa made special studies of the problem.

4. The Delegation may, however, support a proposal for another survey of the unification question by the Trusteeship Council's 1955 Visiting Mission to West Africa.

5. The Delegation may, if appropriate, support re-emphasis by the Assembly of the importance of developing democratic institutions in the two territories, as well as the responsibilities of the administering authorities and the indigenous leaders for maintaining an atmosphere conducive to the free development of such institutions.

6. The Delegation may support requests to the administering authorities and the Trusteeship Council for full reports on the unification question before the next Assembly convenes.

COMMENT

In the past the U.S. position has been based on the view that the wishes of the inhabitants themselves should be the most important element in determining whether or not all or parts of the two Togolands should be unified. It has consequently supported various means of determining these wishes, including special investigations by UN Visiting Missions and the establishment of joint councils in which representatives from both Togolands could express their views. No clear-cut predominating view has emerged. In fact, considerable differences of view have become apparent as to the extent of the areas to be unified, the territories with which unification is sought (i.e. some British Togoland prefer unification with their neighbors in the Gold Coast, rather than with their neighbors in French Togoland), and the means by which unification should be achieved.

In these circumstances the U.S. at the Seventh Assembly initiated Resolution 652(VII), which recommends that the two administering authorities "make every effort to bring about the re-establishment of the Joint Council for Togoland Affairs, or a similar body, on a basis which will enlist the cooperation of all major segments of the population." (Such a Joint Council set up in 1952 had been boycotted by the pro-unification parties in both territories.) To the end that the Joint Council be successfully re-established the resolution recommended that the administering authorities "carry on full and extensive consultations with the principal political parties in the two Territories". While the terms of reference of such a Council were to include the question of unification, the resolution specified that it should be authorized "to consider and make recommendations upon all political, economic, social and educational matters affecting the two Trust Territories". No precise procedure for selecting the members of the reconstituted Council was recommended, that being among the subjects on which consultations were to be held. However, paragraph 5 of the resolution provides that the ultimate objective should be to reconstitute the Joint Council, "as soon as possible, by means of direct elections on the basis of universal adult suffrage exercised by secret ballot". Resolution 652(VII) thus accorded with the United States view that this problem should be dealt with in stages, designed to develop both political awareness of common problems and means to enable the inhabitants to express their views.

Pursuant to Trusteeship Council Resolution 643(XI) and Assembly Resolution 622(VII) the two administering authorities reported to the Trusteeship Council at its 12th Session (June-July 1953) the steps taken by them pursuant to these resolutions. Both stated that they had publicly invited the views of all parties and sections of the population as to an acceptable basis for reconstituting the Joint Council but that the process of consultations was not yet far enough advanced to permit a report on their results. The Trusteeship Council then adopted a special report on this problem (A/2424), which recounted in detail the information given by the administering authorities. This report was supported by the U.S. and approved by a vote of 11 to 1 (USSR).

Two other aspects of this question require comment. One is the frequency and persistence of petitions to the UN charging the French with persecution of the pro-unification parties in French Togoland, which would appear to justify re-emphasis by the Assembly to the administering authorities and the political leaders of their responsibilities for maintaining a free political atmosphere.

The other is the fact that British Togoland will presumably be called upon in the relatively near future to make some decision as to its future relationship to the Gold Coast, which suggests the desirability of not precipitating the Togoland unification question until the two questions can be considered together as interrelated aspects of the future of British Togoland.

[WASHINGTON,] September 14, 1953.

HEARING OF PETITIONERS FROM THE TRUST TERRITORY OF THE CAMEROONS UNDER FRENCH ADMINISTRATION: REPORT OF THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL (RESOLUTION 655 (VII) OF DECEMBER 21, 1952)

THE PROBLEM

The Seventh Assembly, after the Fourth Committee had heard two petitioners from the French Cameroons adopted Resolution 655 (VII), which asked the Trusteeship Council to investigate further the questions raised by the petitioners and to report to the Eighth Assembly. As a result of a reorganization of its schedule, the Trusteeship Council postponed all French Cameroons' questions to its Thirteenth Session (January-February 1954), at which time the questions raised by the petitioners from the French Cameroons will be considered in conjunction with the 1952 Annual Reports and the 1952 Visiting Mission Report on the two Cameroons. The problem may be complicated by the fact that the Fourth Committee may decide even in the absence of a Council report on this question to deal with it substantively at this session or to grant oral hearings requested by certain groups in the Cameroons.

UNITED STATES POSITION

1. The Delegation should support a resolution which would postpone Assembly consideration of the substance of this question to the next session when it will have before it a report from the Trusteeship Council on this matter.

2. Inasmuch as the Council has already agreed to hear certain groups from the Cameroons next January, it would be preferable for all requests from Cameroons' groups to be brought to the attention of the Council so that there will be an opportunity for all relevant information on the Cameroons to be placed before the Council at one time. If, nevertheless, requests from Cameroons' groups for hearings before the Fourth Committee are put to a vote, the Delegation should abstain.

3. If the Fourth Committee holds hearings or otherwise deals with the substance of this question, the Delegation should take the position that the records of any statements or debates should be transmitted to the Trusteeship Council to be taken into account in its review of Cameroons questions, and that it would be inappropriate for the Committee to arrive at any conclusions on these questions until it has before it the Council's report on them, i.e. at the Assembly's Ninth Session.

COMMENT

1. At the Assembly's Seventh Session the Fourth Committee granted oral hearings to five groups from the French Cameroons:

1. The NGONDO (Traditional Assembly of the Douala People)
2. The U.P.C. (Union des Populations du Cameroun)
3. The Cameroons Socialist Party
4. The Groupements Musulman du Cameroun
5. The Bloc Democratique Camerounais

Three of these were unable to send representatives, but the Committee did hear statements from the U.P.C. representative, Mr. Ruben Um Nyobe, and a representative of the Cameroons Socialist Party, Mr. Charles Rene Okala.

In the brief discussion following these statements, some Members pointed out that it was almost impossible to discuss the substance of the matters raised by the petitioners in the absence of other relevant information, including the 1952 Annual Reports on the two Cameroons and the Report of the 1952 Visiting Mission to these territories. (As the U.P.C. seeks unification of the two Cameroons, reports on both territories are relevant.) At the close of this discussion the Assembly adopted Resolution 655 (VII), which, after pointing out that the Trusteeship Council had not examined the 1952 Annual Reports or Visiting Mission Reports on the Cameroons and "that these Reports may give a fuller account of the matter," asked the Council to investigate further the questions raised by the petitioners. Thus, in this resolution the Assembly recognized the relationship between the matters raised in the Fourth Committee hearings and the 1952 Annual and Visiting Mission Reports.

At the Twelfth Session of the Trusteeship Council the Representative of France stated that he did not feel that the Council could deal effectively with this question at that time. He pointed out that there was little or no new information brought out in the Fourth Committee hearings. Moreover, the 1952 Annual Reports were not yet issued, and they and the Visiting Mission Reports on the Cameroons were scheduled to be considered by the Council at its Thirteenth Session in January 1954.

He therefore proposed that the consideration of the matters raised by the petitioners be considered at that session along with all the other information on the Cameroons. This resolution was approved by a vote of 10 to 0 to 1, and two French Cameroons' groups, who had petitioned for oral hearings before the Council (the Ngondo and the Kumzse) were informed that they would be heard at the Council's Thirteenth Session.

2. Two groups from the French Cameroons have requested hearings before the Fourth Committee this year. These are :

1. ESOCAM (Evolution Sociale Camerounaise)
2. NGONDO (Traditional Assembly of the Douala People)

It is possible that other groups will also request hearings. Since the matters on which they wish to be heard have been referred to the Trusteeship Council, which has decided to consider them at its Thirteenth Session (January 1954), it would appear to serve no useful purpose to hear additional Cameroons' viewpoints in the Fourth Committee at this time. If these requests were to be brought to the attention of the Council, which has already accorded two hearings to Cameroons' groups at its Thirteenth Session, it could decide whether or not it would be useful to hear these additional viewpoints. However, inasmuch as two groups from the French Cameroons were heard by the Fourth Committee last year, there is some merit in the contention that other legitimate groups in the Territory should be accorded the same privilege. The United States would therefore abstain on proposals to grant hearings in the Fourth Committee on the grounds that, while it is not opposed to all legitimate Cameroons viewpoints being heard, it would prefer the more orderly procedure of allowing the Trusteeship Council to consider these requests for hearings first. It is understood that the French Delegation will also abstain on requests for hearings from groups in the French Cameroons.

3. Without the report of the Trusteeship Council on its investigation of the matters raised in last year's Cameroons hearings, the Fourth Committee would find it almost impossible to reach any definite conclusion on these matters this year, even if it were to hear certain additional Cameroons viewpoints on these matters. It would appear logical, therefore, for all additional views and information brought out in this year's Fourth Committee on Cameroons questions to be transmitted to the Trusteeship Council, following last year's precedent. The Council would then be able to take all available elements into account in arriving at conclusions and formulating its report on Cameroons questions to the next Assembly.

Press Release No. 1757 Issued by the Mission at the United Nations, New York, September 28, 1953, Regarding Requests for Oral Hearings Concerning Trust Territories<sup>1</sup>

MR. CHAIRMAN: I would like to explain the general position of my Delegation regarding oral hearings of inhabitants of trust territories in the Fourth Committee. It is our view that this Committee should hear inhabitants of trust territories when they request an opportunity to present their views on specific problems which are of sufficient importance to merit the direct attention of the full membership of the United Nations.

At the same time we are somewhat concerned over the practical problems involved in granting numerous oral hearings in a large Committee of sixty states. We have a long agenda of important problems which cannot be effectively dealt with unless the sixty Committee members have sufficient time to express their own views on these problems. In looking over the records of last year's Fourth Committee, my Delegation has found that requests for oral hearings or the hearings themselves took all the Committee's time at 12 meetings and a large part of 13 other meetings. This was a very large proportion of the Committee's 66 meetings, and the Committee was unable to deal with every item on its agenda even though it held more meetings than in any previous year.

To my Delegation, therefore, it seems both logical and necessary for the Committee to avoid the indiscriminate granting of all requests for oral hearings. We believe that any procedural committee such as the one proposed by the distinguished representative of the United Kingdom in Document A/C.4/L.271, might give careful attention to this problem.

Mr. Chairman, may I now describe briefly some of the general principles which my Delegation believes should guide the Fourth Committee in deciding whether or not to grant an oral hearing. The first of these I have already mentioned. We believe that the problem raised by the petitioners should be specifically stated and should be of sufficient importance to merit a hearing. Secondly, we believe that the Committee should take into account the character of the petitioner and the organization he represents; the petitioner should be a person who can provide useful and relevant information and normally should be an inhabitant of the territory concerned. In the third place, we do not believe that the Committee should grant hearings to lawyers who are not residents of the territory concerned; this type of representation is too susceptible of abuse which would be harmful both to the United Nations and to the petitioners themselves. Petitioners are of course free to obtain all the legal advice they want, but they should present their own problems to this Committee where, in any case, they will find numerous lawyers to help ensure that they receive a full and fair hearing. The fourth principle guiding my Delegation is this. We believe that petitioners from trust territories should normally be heard in the Trusteeship Council before they are granted hearings in this Committee. The petitions system of the Trusteeship Council has been carefully elaborated by a smaller body of twelve Members who have been given the specific task of devoting more time than other Members to the study of trust territory problems. We believe that the General Assembly would not wish to undermine the petitions work of the Trusteeship Council. Finally, my Delegation believes that in deciding whether or not to grant a hearing, the Committee should take into account the extent and character of past actions by the Trusteeship Council and the General Assembly on the problem raised by the petitioner.

She was also the U.S. Member on the Fourth Committee.

These five principles, Mr. Chairman, are not applicable in every case, but they have been taken into consideration by my Delegation in deciding how to vote on each of the requests before us.

Press Release No. 1823 Issued by the Mission at the United Nations, New York, November 19, 1953, Regarding the Ewe and Togoland Unification Problem<sup>1</sup>

MR. CHAIRMAN: The Ewe and Togoland unification question is completely new to me, and I have found our Discussion of it intensely interesting. I am particularly grateful to our African friends who have come such a long way to tell us what their people want. Their presence here has added a note of vitality to our discussion and, I am sure, has helped all of us to a better understanding of this important problem.

Mr. Chairman, the United States has consistently maintained that the wishes of the inhabitants themselves should be the most important element in determining whether or not all or parts of the two Togolands should be unified. For this reason we have supported the establishment of machinery to determine these wishes and to make recommendations upon political, economic, social and educational matters affecting the Territories. We hope and believe that the Joint Council for Togoland Affairs can be made to work. It has the great value of affording a democratic means for a mutual exchange of views by the principal political parties in the two territories. If democracy is to work, people with conflicting interests must learn to meet together, to reach decisions on points of disagreement, and to respect those decisions. For this reason my Government considers that the General Assembly and the Trusteeship Council can do most to help the peoples concerned by concentrating on the development of satisfactory machinery for the discussion of Togoland problems.

Mr. Chairman, the main issues of the problem have already been thoroughly elaborated in this Committee. I do wish, however, to take a few moments to explain the two major factors which have led my Government to take the position I have described.

Foremost of these factors is the complexity of the problem. For more than six years we have continually examined and reexamined the requests of hundreds of Togoland petitioners. As a member of the Trusteeship Council and the Council's various Committees on Petitions, the United States has carefully and sympathetically studied the wishes of the inhabitants as expressed in these petitions. One of my United States colleagues, moreover, was a member of the Council's first Visiting Mission to the Ewe area. In the course of this intensive study we have analyzed a number of alternative solutions which seem theoretically possible. Thus far, however, we have found each of these theoretical solutions impractical, primarily because it would be opposed by large numbers of the peoples concerned.

The second important factor which has influenced my Government, Mr. Chairman, is that Togoland opinion is clearly in a stage of evolution. In the beginning, a relatively small number of Ewe leaders asked us to recommend the unification of the Ewe-speaking people who live in British Togoland, French Togoland, and the Gold Coast. As time passed, however, a constructive development of major significance occurred. More and more Togolanders began to take keen interest in their political future. This new political activity, inspired by the United Nations, has already done much to accelerate the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the area. In the short run, however, the repercussions of this wider popular interest have made the task of the General Assembly infinitely more difficult. We soon learned, for example, that a number of leaders had decided to take up the banner of Togoland unification as opposed to Eweland unification.

Mr. Olympio has informed us that the All-Ewe-Conference now fully supports the idea of Togoland unification. It is nonetheless clear that the advocates of Togoland unification do not agree on exactly what kind of unification they desire. It is the feeling of my Delegation, moreover, that the tenor of our discussion this year has been somewhat misleading because we have not had an opportunity to hear representatives of the two groups which oppose Togoland unification. In the northern section of British Togoland, as the Second Visiting Mission pointed out, live many people who oppose Togoland unification and who, quite understandably, want to put an end to the boundary which separates them from their fellow tribesmen in the Northern Territories of the Gold Coast. Members of the Mission met with considerable numbers of the chiefs, elders, and peoples of this area, and I understand that the spokesmen of the Dagomba people stressed their hope that the 1952 Mission would be the last to visit them since they want to become part of the Gold Coast.

The second group which has no representatives here is of course the Togoland branch of the Convention People's Party. Their reasons for opposing Togoland unification, which have been expressed in written petitions to the United Nations, are also quite understandable. They want to participate in a political development which many representatives in this Committee consider to be one of the most promising in the continent of Africa. I speak, of course, of the impending self-government which the people of the Gold Coast are to enjoy. I am sorry to have to express at this point the regret of my Delegation at the gratuitous personal attack made by one of the petitioners on the African leaders of the Gold Coast and on its distinguished British Governor. The impatience and depth of emotion of our petitioners are readily understandable, but such intemperate allegations do their cause a disservice in this Committee and do injustice to the intelligence of their own people.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, it is clear to my Delegation that the conflicting and evolving opinions of the peoples of the two Togolands make it inappropriate for the General Assembly at this time to recommend any change in the international status of the two territories. We therefore believe that the Assembly at this session should urge the two administering authorities and the political groups concerned to cooperate in making the Joint Council for Togoland Affairs an effective organization for the discussion of Togoland problems.

We are also concerned over the emotional political atmosphere in the territories lest it jeopardize the orderly development of democratic institutions. My Delegation was disappointed to find that although the second Visiting Mission attended four mass meetings organized by political parties in British Togoland, it did not take part in such meetings in French Togoland. We hope that all possible steps will be taken, both by the administering authorities and by the rival political parties, to insure that the next Visiting Mission will be able to carry out its task in a calmer political atmosphere. We also hope that the administering authorities will take appropriate steps to disseminate throughout the two territories the full texts of any resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Trusteeship Council on the Ewe and Togoland Unification Problem.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON, February 19, 1954.]

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS AND COMMENTS ON THE FIRST PART OF THE EIGHTH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY—1953

[Here follow numbered paragraphs 1 (generalities), and 2 (propaganda and the cold war) of Part A, captioned "Results of Eighth Session".]

3. In the complex of colonial and racial issues, the gulf between the colonial minority and the anti-colonial majority widened alarmingly at this session. The natural reaction to extreme positions on one side is to increase the extremist attitudes on the other. At least some UK officials, for example, seem now convinced that their temporary, US inspired campaign at the two previous sessions of a more forthcoming and conciliatory approach has not paid dividends in evoking a similar cooperative approach from the majority. Moreover, France's adamant, uncooperative stand on the North African items proved more effective, to judge by the voting results, than South Africa's more restrained and persistent efforts through continued participation to convince the members of the correctness of her case in the South African questions. It can be anticipated that this will be taken as a lesson, both by South Africa and by others who are under future attack for their colonial or racial policies.

The anti-colonial majority, on the other hand, while reasonably adroit in the wording of resolutions, was at times bolder and stronger in its attacks than previously. Even the US, for almost the first time, was the direct object of criticism and opposition in the Puerto Rico case.<sup>2</sup> It is true that we succeeded in obtaining approval of a resolution which indorses our conclusion that Puerto Rico has become sufficiently self-governing for us to cease transmitting information on it as a "non-self-governing territory". However, this was obtained only through the most strenuous efforts with other members, both at New York and in various capitals; the resolution was far from satisfactory in wording, and there was in the debate a disturbingly widespread undercurrent of anti-US sentiment. More importantly, decisions taken which extend the Assembly's role in NSGT problems beyond its originally intended scope and which at the same time permit decisions on these matters by a simple majority (rather than two-thirds) are disturbing developments which foreshadow intensification of these problems at future sessions.

[Here follow numbered paragraphs 4 and 5 of Part A, dealing with President Eisenhower's speech and proposal for an atomic energy pool for peaceful purposes and general observations on the lack of salient political issues for the Eighth Regular Session of the General Assembly; and numbered paragraphs 1-4 of Part B, entitled "Comments Regarding the Political Role of the GA".]

5. There is some question as to whether the General Assembly is performing as constructive a role as it should in its third major task of easing tensions and strains in the complex of changing colonial relationships.<sup>3</sup> It seems sometimes unfortunately true that the GA increases tensions by providing inviting opportunities which would not otherwise exist for the divergent anti-colonial countries to make common cause against the colonial powers regarding territories remote from areas of their direct interests or knowledge or concern. The GA does offer the non-colonial powers a mechanism to ventilate their feelings and grievances and has served as a sometimes effective prod to the administering authorities to hasten the institution of improvements in territories they administer.

On the other hand, as indicated above, the gulf between the colonial minority and the anti-colonial majority is steadily widening and compromise and accommodation seem to be more and more difficult. In general, at the Eighth Session, the US continued to maintain a balance in its position between the two groups but did not adhere consistently to a middle-of-the-road position. That is to say, the "balance" was achieved in a number of instances by taking alternately positions more favorable to one side and then to the other on succeeding questions. The inevitable consequence was that both sides felt we were not consistent and neither side was satisfied with the results. The most outstanding examples in the political field were, of course, the North African items where we sternly resisted even the mildest of resolutions and the subsequently discussed South African items where fur-

<sup>3</sup> In the omitted portion of Part B, four major potential political roles for the General Assembly were listed, as follows:

"(a) To substitute for the moribund Security Council as the UN action body in the event of breaches of the peace and acts of aggression, such as another Korea;

"(b) To work out the peaceful settlement of political disputes, both East-West issues (Germany, Austria, Trieste, etc.) and other political questions (Palestine, KMT troops in Burma, etc.);

"(c) To ease the tensions and strains in the complex of changing colonial relationships, and

"(d) To serve as a forum and sounding board for both sides in the cold war."

ther interpretative inroads were made, with US acquiescence or support, into the classic principle of non-interference in domestic matters.

We may anticipate in the future continuing and increasingly successful efforts on the part of a confident anti-colonial majority to extend the role of the UN in colonial problems. In particular, efforts will concentrate upon extending the more limited surveillance of the UN in NSGTs to approximate the extent of UN supervision over the trust territories. This development the other colonial powers will fight bitterly, and the US too must necessarily resist as illegal from the point of view of the Charter and undesirable for the development of the UN at its present stage. The serious dilemma posed to the US by this struggle of forces is to take more forthright steps to guide and channel, and where necessary resist these efforts by the anti-colonial majority without alienating that majority, destroying their confidence in us and their support on other matters and without abandoning our adherence to the traditional principles of self-government and self-determination.

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] January 29, 1954.

Subject: Questions of Particular Interest to the British at Thirteenth Session of the Trusteeship Council

Of the eighteen items on the agenda of the Thirteenth Session of the Trusteeship Council, the following questions will be of particular concern to the British.

1. British Togoland problems—particularly whether British Togoland shall be unified with French Togoland or integrated into the Gold Coast (some oral hearings have been granted to petitioners from British Togoland on this question).

2. British Cameroons problems—including petitions seeking the unification of British and French Cameroons (some oral hearings have been granted to petitioners from French Cameroons on this question).

3. Tanganyika problems—including the Wa-Meru land problem and possibly questions about the spread of the Mau Mau movement into Tanganyika (no oral hearings have thus far been requested concerning Tanganyika).

<sup>1</sup> Drafted by Curtis C. Strong of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs.

A brief account of the principal issues involved in the problems follows.

British Togoland Problems:

The problem of the future status of British Togoland will probably be the most difficult issue before this session of the Trusteeship Council. This narrow land-locked strip of territory in West Africa which has been under British mandate or trusteeship since World War I, has been administered as an integral part of the Gold Coast. It has a population of less than 400,000 compared with almost 4,000,000 in the Gold Coast. It is the smaller portion of the former German Togoland. The other portion, now the trust territory of French Togoland, which is not integrated with the neighboring French territory of Dahomey, has a population of over one million.

A movement to unify the two trust territories, which was started by the Ewe Tribe in the south of both trust territories and the Gold Coast, has obtained increasing support in the United Nations. The Eighth General Assembly adopted three resolutions on the Togoland unification problem.<sup>2</sup> Resolution 750 A, which was adopted by a vote of 46-0-9 (US, UK), recommends the reestablishment of the Joint Council for Togoland Affairs with the power to consider and make recommendations on the question of unification and expresses the hope that a formula will be achieved acceptable to all "which will facilitate the unification of the two trust territories". Because the phrase just quoted prejudged the wishes of the inhabitants, the United States voted against its inclusion. When the phrase was retained, the United States abstained on the resolution as a whole.

Resolution 750 B, which was adopted by a vote of 52(US)-1-4 (UK), recommends the introduction of universal, direct, and secret suffrage in both trust territories.

Resolution 750 C, which was adopted by a vote of 37(US)-3-12 (UK), expresses the opinion that further changes in the constitution of the Gold Coast may necessitate revision of the trusteeship agreement for British Togoland. A paragraph whereby the Assembly would have stated that the integration of British Togoland into the Gold Coast before both Togolands had attained self-government or independence would be contrary to the principles and purposes of the International Trusteeship System was narrowly defeated in plenary by failure to obtain a two-thirds majority. It demonstrates, however, the considerable opposition in the United Nations to any plan for complete integration of British Togoland into the Gold Coast.

<sup>2</sup> Published and unpublished documentation on the Togoland question at the Eighth General Assembly is in the ODA files, lot 62 D 225, "Ewe Problem". For the legislative history of the question and the report of the Fourth Committee, see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Eighth Session, Annexes, fascicule for agenda item 31. "The Ewe and Togoland unification problem: special report of the Trusteeship Council".

The near passage of the above mentioned paragraph was a great shock to Dr. Nkrumah, the Prime Minister of the Gold Coast, whose party, the CPP, ardently supports integration of British Togoland into the Gold Coast.<sup>3</sup> Since the adoption of these resolutions by the Assembly he and his party have carried on an active campaign in British Togoland to obtain support for integration. There are now a large number of petitions before the Council favoring integration, as well as a number favoring unification with French Togoland. Nkrumah has stated that the British Togoland should be allowed to decide their own future and this will apparently be the principal issue in British Togoland in the general elections to be held next summer.

The problem of the British will be to demonstrate convincingly to the General Assembly that the people of British Togoland genuinely desire integration with the Gold Coast, as such a step would involve termination of the trusteeship agreement for British Togoland, which requires General Assembly approval. The British might be asked whether, in order to strengthen their case before the Assembly, they intend to invite the Trusteeship Council to send observers to the elections in British Togoland this summer.

A source of difficulty in the United Nations will probably be the feeling of many United Nations members that both trust territories should be allowed to express their views simultaneously on unification as well as on some form of association with the neighboring British or French territories. The French will presumably object to any plebiscite in French Togoland. The British might be asked whether they know the French attitude on this point as well as what the French attitude is towards the elections which they are planning in British Togoland.

The President of the Council (Ambassador Munro of New Zealand) has, with British concurrence, granted oral hearings to three members of Nkrumah's party from British Togoland. It is understood also that the British are including some British Togoland as advisers on their delegation to the Council. These advisers will also presumably be persons who favor integration with the Gold Coast. Under these circumstances it may be expected that the parties in British and French Togoland which favor unification of the two territories will also ask for hearings. The United States has in the past taken the view that these parties represented a substantial segment of the population and should be heard. However, as there have been no requests from these parties thus far, the question has not been raised in the Department at this time.

<sup>3</sup> This reaction of Nkrumah's was briefly reported by the Consulate General at Accra in Accra telegram 45, Nov. 27, 1953, 10 a. m., not printed (320.14/11-2753). The matter was more fully reported by William E. Cole, the Consul at Accra, in his despatch 106, Dec. 8, 1953 (320.14/12-853). Cole said that in conversation with Reginald H. Saloway, Minister of Defense and External Affairs, Gold Coast Government, the information was conveyed that Prime Minister Nkrumah was "very annoyed over the resolutions about Togoland adopted by the UN Fourth Committee" and that Nkrumah had "summoned the Indian Commissioner in West Africa, Raja Rameshwar Rao, the Lebanese Consul, and the Liberian Consul General into his presence to upbraid them for the attitude taken in the UN by the delegates of their countries . . ." Cole reported that Saloway had spoken "with much appreciation" of the statement made by Frances Bolton in the Fourth Committee on Nov. 19, 1953 (see USUN's press release 1823 of Nov. 19, 1953, p. 1336).

British Cameroons Problems:

The trust territory of British Cameroons consists of two disconnected narrow strips of territory along the eastern border of Nigeria, with a population of about one million compared with over 20 million in Nigeria. It is administered as an integral part of Nigeria and is much smaller than French Cameroons, which has a population of over three million and is administered by the French as a separate entity. The most interesting recent development affecting British Cameroons is the endorsement by the Nigerian Constitutional Conference, which reconvened this month in Lagos, of proposals whereby Southern Cameroons will become a quasi-federal territory within the new Nigerian Federation, with its own regional legislative and executive council and representation in the Nigerian Federal Legislature and Council of Ministers. Northern Cameroons is not included in the proposal but will remain a part of the Northern Region of Nigeria. While it is understood this corresponds to the wishes of the inhabitants of Northern Cameroons, the failure to include Northern Cameroons in the new separate Cameroons Region may be criticised in the Trusteeship Council and the General Assembly as failing to recognize the distinct trusteeship status of that part of the Territory.

While the desire for unification of the two Cameroons seems to have much less support than the Togoland unification movement, it has grown in recent years, possibly partly because of the attention it has received in the United Nations. The unification movement exists almost entirely in the southern part of both territories. The British might be asked how the decision to establish Southern British Cameroons as a separate Region in the Nigerian Federation may be expected to affect the unification movement.

It should be noted that the 1952 United Nations Visiting Mission concluded that there was relatively little popular interest in the unification movement in either territory. However, two groups from French Cameroons (KUMSZE and NGONDO) which, in varying degrees, favor unification, have been granted oral hearings at this session of the Council. Ruben Um Nyobe, of the extremists French Cameroons party (Union des Populations du Cameroun) has also requested a hearing but the position on his request cleared in the Department is that the United States will oppose granting him a hearing.

Tanganyika Problems:

The most difficult problem concerning Tanganyika to arise recently in the United Nations has been caused by the removal of members of the Wa-Meru Tribe from their land on Mt. Meru in order to make it available to modern cattle raising, which is, in practice, carried on only by Europeans. A resolution adopted by the Trusteeship Council at its Eleventh Session recommended various measures to alleviate the difficulties of the Wa-Meru and asked the Administering Authority to keep the Trusteeship Council informed of further developments in the matter of their resettlement. At the Seventh General Assembly a resolution asking the Administering Authority to restore the lands of the Wa-Meru failed to receive the necessary two-thirds vote, and no resolution was adopted. The question also received relatively little attention at the Eighth General Assembly. However, particularly in view of the fact that India has become a member of the Council, efforts may be made to raise the Wa-Meru question again at this session of the Council.

Reports that the Mau Mau movement has begun spreading from Kenya into the northern part of Tanganyika may also arouse questions in the Council. The British appear to have taken adequate measures to deal with this problem but we might wish to ask them whether there are any questions we might ask them in the Council which would assist them to place this matter in its proper perspective.

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

TOGOLAND

As the United States Government will recall, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions on the Togoland unification question at its Eighth Session. The first of these resolutions invited the Administering Authorities to re-establish the Joint Council for Togoland affairs, its member [sic] being directly elected by universal suffrage and secret ballot.

The Second General Assembly Resolution invited the Administering Authorities to revise the system of electoral qualifications in the Trust Territories to provide for universal adult suffrage.

The Third General Assembly Resolution instructed the Trusteeship Council, at its Thirteenth Session, to embark on a study of the problem of attaining the basic objectives of the International Trusteeship System (i.e. self-government or independence) in the light of the constitutional and political situation in the Gold Coast.

The issues facing the Administering Authorities at the Thirteenth Session of the Trusteeship Council are, therefore, as follows:

First to report to the Trusteeship Council on the extent to which they have been able to implement the first and second resolutions, and, secondly, the nature and content of the Trusteeship Council's study of the constitutional future of the two Togolands.

So far as the first of these resolutions is concerned, the United Kingdom Government is examining means whereby the Joint Council may be re-established. But the consultations already conducted in British Togoland during 1953 about the possibility of re-establishment have shown that the population of Northern British Togoland is strongly opposed to the recreation of the Joint Council and that, although in Southern British Togoland the main political parties appear to agree with the principle of the Joint Council, they have made their agreement subject to conditions which cannot fail to give rise to difficult political and administrative problems. Apart from these problems, the United Kingdom Government is not satisfied that the strength of the various opinions in Southern Togoland is accurately known. It is expected, provided a satisfactory agreement is reached between the Gold Coast and United Kingdom Governments in the constitutional discussions now proceeding, that a new constitution will be promulgated for the Gold Coast, in the spring of this year, providing, inter alia, for the creation of an All-African Cabinet. This constitution, once in being, will represent a considerable advance towards complete self-government or independence for the Gold Coast which cannot fail to have a profound effect upon the attitude of the British Togoland public to the question of their political future.

The general election to the Legislative Assembly of the Gold Coast, which will follow this new constitution, is expected to take place in May and will be conducted on the basis of a revised electoral register with full adult suffrage. The results of this election should serve to indicate what the views of the people of British Togoland are, since in Togoland the election will doubtless be fought on the integration versus unification issue. These factors have a potent bearing on consideration of the means whereby the Joint Council can be re-established and the desirability of allowing them to operate accounts for the short delay which will inevitably occur in implementing the First General Assembly Resolution.

It will be apparent from the foregoing that it is not practically possible for the Joint Council to be re-established, so far as British Togoland is concerned, until the revised electoral registers have been completed (about the end of April) since the re-establishment of the Council has to be based on elections conducted on universal adult suffrage.

The foregoing indicates the line which the French and United Kingdom Delegations will take at the Thirteenth Session on the question of the re-establishment of the Joint Council.

So far as the Third General Assembly Resolution is concerned, the basic United Kingdom attitude to the question of the future of British Togoland is that the time is rapidly approaching when the implications for the trusteeship status of British Togoland of the constitutional advancement of the Gold Coast (in which British Togoland has shared) must be carefully examined. We, therefore, welcome the Assembly's direction to the Trusteeship Council that such an examination should take place, and even if the Assembly had not itself ordered such a study, we would have suggested it in the course of 1954. It is clear, however, that on a matter of such importance it is essential that both the Administering Authority and the Trusteeship Council should participate in this study with as clear a knowledge as possible of the state of public opinion in the Trust Territory. As indicated above, the general election, which is expected to be held in the Gold Coast and Togoland in May and June, 1954, will probably provide such an expression of opinion and enable the Administering Authority and the Trusteeship Council to embark on the study ordered by the General Assembly on the basis of a realistic impression of the strength of the various factions in the Trust Territory. For this reason it is the earnest hope of the United Kingdom that the Trusteeship Council will agree to postpone the study called for in the Third General Assembly Resolution until its Fourteenth Session.

In view of the considerations set forth above, it is the considered opinion of the Governments of the United Kingdom and France that the substantive study of the fundamental issues of the future status of the Trust Territories, and especially of British Togoland, should be deferred from the Thirteenth to the Fourteenth Session of the Trusteeship Council, and we trust that the Government of the United States will recognise the validity of these arguments.

It is the intention of the United Kingdom Government to present to the Fourteenth Session of the Trusteeship Council a memorandum setting forth its views on the content of the Trusteeship Council's study, with particular reference to the constitutional future of British Togoland.

It is probable that requests will be made by supporters of the integration of British Togoland with the Gold Coast for an oral hearing before the Thirteenth Session of the Trusteeship Council. The United Kingdom Government considers that it might be valuable to the Council to listen to the views of these petitioners so that it may be apprised of the existence of a body of opinion in the Trust Territory, not hitherto heard at the United Nations, but which is opposed to Togoland unification.

Her Majesty's Government understands that the French Government will be making representations to the United States Government similar to those above. If the United States Government wishes to discuss this matter further it is suggested that, since the Trusteeship Council is already in session, this could most appropriately be done by consultation between the United States and United Kingdom Delegations in New York. Her Majesty's Government sincerely hopes that the United States Government will instruct their Delegate to the Trusteeship Council to support the line taken by the United Kingdom and French Delegations on all the above issues when they come up for discussion in the Council.

Memorandum by an Adviser of the United States Delegation to the Thirteenth Regular Session of the Trusteeship Council (Gerig), to the Deputy Director of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs (Robbins)<sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] February 1, 1954.

Subject: Meeting of Administering Authorities

Ambassador Munro called a meeting of the Administering Members of the Trusteeship Council today to consider three questions of special interest: (1) the Togoland question; (2) the request of Mr. Frazao, of Brazil, to have the status of Observer at the Trusteeship Council; and (3) the question of supplying a Vice-Chairman to replace Dr. Urquia when he leaves for Caracas about February 15.

Togoland Question

On the Togoland question, the French and British Members supplied the information which was contained in the Aide-Mémoire which Mr. Campbell and Miss Salt of the British Embassy had left with Assistant Secretary Key. Sir Alan Burns, for the U.K., explained that since there will be elections in May in British Togoland which will undoubtedly reflect the opinion of the inhabitants as to unification or integration, it is impossible before then for the British to present a clear picture of the desires of the Togoland inhabitants. Moreover, the Administering Authority is engaged in drawing up a revised electoral list for the Territory which cannot be completed before the end of April. For these reasons, the British propose postponement of the Togoland item until the Fourteenth Session of the Trusteeship Council in June, at which time they will be able to give a complete answer in the light of the intervening elections and thus enable the Trusteeship Council to prepare its reply to the next General Assembly as regards Resolution 750 C (VIII).

M. Pignon, for the French Delegation, completely supported the British explanation and in addition pointed out that it would take them somewhat longer to complete their electoral lists in French Togoland. Moreover, they would wish to see what happens in the British elections but would also be in a better position in June than they are now to deal with the problems arising out of the Assembly resolution.

All the Administering Members of this group agreed that the only practical way of dealing with this question was to postpone it until June for the very substantial reasons given. It was believed that all the Members of the Trusteeship Council would see the necessity for this postponement and that there would be no difficulty, since this would enable the Trusteeship Council to make a report in ample time for the next General Assembly with all the necessary data at hand.

[Mr. Sears and I therefore hope that the Department will respond in the same way to the British Embassy.]<sup>2</sup>

[Here follows discussion of the two other matters mentioned in the first paragraph.]

Request of Mr. Frazao, of Brazil

Mr. Frazao, of Brazil, has written to the Secretary General suggesting that he might be given a seat, perhaps alongside the Specialized Agencies, with a nameplate as "Official Observer". It was not known whether this was at his own request or at the request of his government, but presumably the former. It was pointed out that Article 33 and Article 89 of the Charter provide respectively for such participation in the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council but that no such provision was made in the Charter for the Trusteeship Council and no provision was made in the Rules of Procedure. It was felt that if a precedent were established in favor of Mr. Frazao, who would probably not have used the privilege, it was at the present stage not a good idea to set this precedent, since members of the Soviet group would almost certainly take advantage of it to spread more of their propaganda. It was left that Ambassador Munro would point out some of these constitutional and practical difficulties to Mr. Frazao in the hope that he would not press the point at this time.

Vice-Chairmanship

Ambassador Munro called attention to the situation which would exist in the month of February when he is President of both the Security Council and the Trusteeship Council if the Vice-Chairman, Ambassador Urquia, is to be absent, as planned, to attend the Caracas Conference. After some discussion it was suggested that perhaps on the days that the Security Council meets in the afternoon, the Trusteeship Council could meet in the morning. Also, the Chairman said he would speak to Dr. Urquia to see whether he could not postpone his departure from New York until the end of February. If, nevertheless, a conflict should arise, it was felt that consideration would need to be given to the election of a second Vice-Chairman.

The Department of State to the British Embassy<sup>1</sup>

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

The information contained in the British Embassy's Aide-Mémoire of January 29, 1954 concerning Togoland is appreciated by the Department and has been given the most careful consideration.

The Department considers that the plan to introduce a revised electoral register, with full adult suffrage, in the trust territory of Togoland under United Kingdom administration represents an important step in the political advancement of the territory which is in conformity with General Assembly Resolution 750 B (VIII) and which should be welcomed by the Trusteeship Council. The Department understands why, until the revised electoral register is completed, it is impossible for the Administering Authority to re-establish the Joint Council for Togoland Affairs on a basis of universal adult suffrage pursuant to General Assembly Resolution 750 A (VIII). It considers the Administering Authority's explanation acceptable and believes that it should be acceptable to the Trusteeship Council. It will so advise the United States Representative on the Council.

The Department also appreciates the reasons which have lead the Governments of the United Kingdom and France to seek to defer to the Trusteeship Council's Fourteenth Session the study which the General Assembly in Resolution 750 C (VIII) asked the Council to make of the future status of the trust territories of British and French Togoland, "having particular regard to the special circumstances created by the constitutional and political situation in the Gold Coast."

<sup>1</sup> Handed by Robbins to Mr. Campbell, Colonial Attaché, British Embassy, and to Barbara Salt, First Secretary, on Feb. 12, 1954, 12:30 p. m.

It agrees that it would be impracticable for the Council to attempt at its current session any definitive re-examination of all aspects of the problem pursuant to Resolution 750 C (VIII), particularly in view of the fact that the new constitutional arrangements for the Gold Coast and British Togoland are still under discussion. There would, however, seem to be no reason why, if members of the Council desired, some preliminary consideration of the matters raised in Resolution 750 C (VIII) should not be undertaken at the Council's current session. Some members of the Council might, for example, wish to have the Council consider how it would proceed with the study and what information it would require. They might then wish the Council to adopt a resolution requesting the Administering Authorities concerned to supply to the Fourteenth Session of the Council full details as to the Gold Coast constitutional changes insofar as they affect the two Togolands, as well as their views on the future status of the two Trust Territories. A resolution along the above lines, rather than an outright proposal by the Administering Authorities to defer to the Fourteenth Session the study asked for by the Assembly would probably attract more support in United Nations bodies.

It will be recalled that the 1952 United Nations Visiting Mission to Trust Territories in West Africa in its report on British Togoland considered that "if an appreciable further measure of self-government is to be accorded to the Gold Coast and if it is considered desirable, as in the past, to apply these constitutional changes to Togoland as an integral part of the Gold Coast, the Visiting Mission considers it inevitable that the Administering Authority will feel obliged to consider whether the responsibility vested in it by the Trusteeship Agreement can be reconciled with the authority which may be transferred to the Government of the Gold Coast in respect of the Trust Territory." Moreover, the General Assembly, in Resolution 750 C (VIII), expressed the opinion "that further changes in the constitution of the Gold Coast . . . may to the extent that they provide an increased measure of self-government necessitate revision of the existing trusteeship agreement in respect of the Trust Territory insofar as concerns the existing administrative union."

It is the Department's understanding that constitutional changes providing an appreciable further measure of self-government will be introduced in the Gold Coast and applied in British Togoland between the Council's Thirteenth and Fourteenth Session. While neither the Visiting Mission nor the General Assembly took the position that the Trusteeship Council should study such changes before they were applied to British Togoland, there may nevertheless be a feeling on the part of certain Members of the United Nations that to defer the Council's study of the effect of these changes on the two Trust Territories until after they have been introduced in British Togoland would involve a certain abdication of responsibility on the part of the Trusteeship Council.

In the Department's view the policy being followed by Her Majesty's Government of introducing full adult suffrage in British Togoland and providing an opportunity for the inhabitants to participate in an election, which will doubtless indicate the views of the inhabitants as to the future status of their territory, represents statesmanship of a high order and is fully in accord with the principles of the Trusteeship System. The Department is, however, concerned that the matter be handled in a way which will ensure maximum approval in the United Nations. It is with this aspect in mind that the Department has raised certain questions of procedure. The Department presumes that Her Majesty's Government is primarily concerned lest at this stage in the evolution of new constitutional arrangements the Council attempt to arrive at conclusions and recommendations as to the future status of the two Trust Territories. The Department agrees that such an attempt would be unwise and will so advise the United States Representative on the Trusteeship Council. Thus, to the extent indicated above the United States is prepared to support deferral of the study asked for in Resolution 750 C (VIII) to the Council's Fourteenth Session. Insofar as questions of procedures and tactics are concerned, the Department agrees that, as the Embassy's Aide-Mémoire suggests, they could most appropriately be further discussed in consultations between the United States and United Kingdom Delegations in New York.

The Department would also like to inquire what the reaction of Her Majesty's Government would be if, as appears likely, a proposal were made by a Non-Administering Member that the Trusteeship Council send an observer or observers to be present in British Togoland when the general election is held there next May and June, and to suggest that this question also be discussed by the Delegation in New York.

The Director of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs (Gerig) to William L. Yecomans, Office of Territories, Department of the Interior

[NEW YORK.] February 11, 1954.

DEAR BILL: Enclosed is a first draft of a memorandum which, as you will see, is aimed at improving the procedure of the Trusteeship Council which in most respects, as you know, has become pretty deadly and useless.

The questions which are asked for several days are usually already answered in the reports, and the whole process has resulted in an atmosphere rather reminiscent of a criminal court procedure.

As you see from the enclosed memorandum (which is merely a first draft intended for our own thinking), I am attempting to see whether a change of emphasis in procedure could bring about a better condition in the Council. The main proposal, as you see, is to get the discussion going on a certain number of selected problems which the Administering Authority would outline, either at the end of the Annual Report or in the Special Representative's opening remarks, or both.

Now what I would like to have your help on is whether you could indicate four or five such problems in the case of the Pacific Trust Territory which would lend themselves to this form of treatment, assuming always that we would be willing to let the Council in on a consideration of such problems, with a view to inviting their assistance.

I am not sure that the other Administering Authorities would be willing to place themselves that much at the mercy of the Council, or whether they believe that the Council would have anything constructive to offer in any event. We haven't talked to the other delegations yet about this.

My main purpose, therefore, is to see whether you would be able to indicate four or five such problems in our case, and even to outline them a bit in the form of a draft sample statement which could be made along these lines.

I hope this will not be asking too much of you, and that you could dash this off rather quickly so that we can see whether the idea has any practical merit. Any comments of yours would, of course, be deeply appreciated.

Ever cordially yours,

BENJAMIN GERIG

[Enclosure]

Memorandum Prepared by the United States Delegation to the Thirteenth Session of the Trusteeship Council

[NEW YORK,] February 11, 1954.

POSSIBLE IMPROVEMENT IN THE PROCEDURE OF THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

I. PRESENT SITUATION IN THE COUNCIL

The question-answer method has, in the view of many Members of the Council, become stereotyped, routine, restrictive and in a large measure unproductive.

This method, moreover, has developed in a form disadvantageous to the Administering Members and not satisfactory to the non-administering.

It is disadvantageous to the Administering Members because (a) it rests on the unacceptable premise that the good faith and good intentions of the Administering Authorities must be called in question, and (b) it assumes that the Administering Authority must be held in suspicion of some kind of skulduggery for his own benefit.

The questions in nearly all cases—except when put forward by other Administering Authorities—can be reduced to a simple proposition—“Have you been a good boy during the past year?” The only obvious answer, of course, which the Administering Authority can and will give is—“Of course I have been a good boy, but conditions are such that I cannot do all I would like.”

In general this method renders the Council sterile as a medium through which a constructive and positive result can be attained. The fundamental purpose of the Trusteeship Council should be to seek, collectively and cooperatively, to find the best possible solutions for problems which inevitably arise in any country and for whose solution knowledge, experience and good judgment should combine to bring about a positive result. This purpose can hardly be achieved in a courtroom atmosphere when a half-dozen so-called “court’s prosecuting attorneys” are attempting to secure a conviction of the trustee for malfeasance or misfeasance.

II. SUGGESTED CHANGE IN PROCEDURE

It is not suggested that the question-answer method should be or can be wholly dispensed with. This is obviously one way to bring out information. But it is here suggested that in addition to or perhaps largely in substitution of this method, the following method might be tried:

1. The representatives of the respective Administering Authorities should make an opening statement outlining in detail eight or ten of the special problems which have confronted the administration in the past year. These problems would not only include those originally presented by the Administering Authority, but also those problems which might have emerged in the effort to carry out previous Trusteeship Council or General Assembly recommendations;

2. The Administering Authority should freely invite the Members of the Council to offer any constructive and helpful advice and suggestions based on their own knowledge and experience which might assist the Administering Authority in dealing with the problem;

3. The President of the Council should aim to channel the discussion of the Council toward a consideration of the particular problem and its solution. Questions might be asked by various Members for information on the problem but the discussion should take on the character of a collective effort rather than a consecutive series of bilateral questions and answers, as at present; and

4. Each problem discussed would presumably lead to a Council recommendation and it would be understood, of course, that the Administering Authority would continue, as at present, to have the responsibility to accept, reject or modify the Council's recommendations, as may be necessary in any particular case.

III. ADVANTAGES OF THIS METHOD TO THE ADMINISTERING AUTHORITIES

This method would give the initiative to the Administering Authorities and remove, at least in large part, the defensive posture to which they have been increasingly subjected.

The discussion, except possibly for the Soviet Member, would be kept more largely within the framework of the trusteeship agreements rather than to attack the validity of the agreements themselves or even the whole trusteeship and colonial system. If the Soviet Member would refuse to participate in this collective effort to find solutions to problems, his intervention would be exposed for what it is. It may be assumed that most of the non-administering Members would offer their advice and suggestions sincerely, and thus the Soviet Member would be segregated and largely isolated.

The proposed method would tend to bring the Council back to its original purpose, namely, to exercise a supervisory role in the form of positive and constructive assistance to the Administering Authority, instead of a kind of international criminal court where a succession of bilateral exchanges take place aimed at undermining the position of the trust power.

This method would also enable the technical and expert character of the Council to emerge as it was envisaged by those who formulated this Chapter of the Charter. It would offer possibilities where the Specialized Agencies could gear in more effectively in the search for solutions to problems.

Finally, it would avoid unnecessary repetition of answers to numerous picayunish questions, the answers to which, in most cases, are already to be found in the voluminous reports already provided by the Administering Authorities.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs (Wainhouse)

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] February 12, 1954.

Subject: Mr. Sears Statement in the Trusteeship Council

Mr. van Laethem of the French Embassy came in to see me at his request yesterday. He started the conversation by saying that his people in Paris are working on various formulae to improve the relationship between France and its colonial possessions in Africa. He dwelt at some length but most vaguely on various formulae which the French are developing on types of federation for the various possessions.

Upon completing this rather vague and disconcerted discussion, Mr. van Laethem then said that the Ambassador had asked him to see me to convey in a friendly way—this, he said, was not a démarche—the views of the Ambassador regarding the statement which the United States Representative made in the Trusteeship Council on Wednesday, the tenth, concerning the Cameroons. Mr. van Laethem said that the Ambassador felt that such statements do not contribute to good relations between our countries; they are unprofitable; they are gratuitously harmful and play into the hands of our enemies. Mr. van Laethem referred to the speeches made by the Secretary and Mr. Byroade on colonialism and said that in his view what Mr. Sears stated went beyond those two speeches. Mr. van Laethem also complained that the manner in which the British deal with their colonial possessions compared with the way in which the French deal with their colonial possessions was almost always to the disadvantage of the French. I said to Mr. van Laethem that this was a matter not within my area of responsibility and that I had not seen the text of what Mr. Sears said in the Trusteeship Council. At this point Mr. van Laethem opened the New York Times for February 11th and drew my attention to the article dealing with Mr. Sears' statement. Mr. van Laethem also referred to the New York Herald-Tribune of February 11th which carried a brief account of the statement but was more harmful than the Times article in that the headline in that account referred to U.S. pressing for the independence of the Cameroons.<sup>1</sup>

I told Mr. van Laethem that I would call this matter to the attention of the appropriate officers in the Department.

"United Nations, N.Y., Feb. 10—The United States politely cautioned France today not to allow the development of her Cameroons trust territory to fall behind the rate of progress in other parts of Africa.

"Mason Sears, speaking for the United States in the Trusteeship Council, pointed to the signs of early nationhood for the Gold Coast and Nigeria and self-determination for British Togoland and the British Cameroons.

"'We cannot blind ourselves to the complications which could arise if self-government was being achieved by some peoples of West Africa while not yet being fully achieved by others,' he said.

"'We believe that if such a situation is allowed to drift and becomes unduly prolonged it will create many difficulties and will ultimately provide fertile territory for alien controlled agitators, disguised as local patriots, to introduce Communist activity, which officially aims to take over every nationalist movement it can reach.'"

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] February 12, 1954.

Subject: Mr. Sears' Statement on French Cameroons in the Trusteeship Council

I am enclosing a copy of the verbatim text of the statement on French Cameroons made by Mr. Sears in the Trusteeship Council on February 10. As you will recall, AF expressed some concern about this statement as reported in the New York Times of February 11. Mr. Wainhouse informs me that Mr. van Laethem of the French Embassy, on the instructions of his Ambassador, raised informally and in a friendly way some question about Mr. Sears' statement. It may be that the French Embassy also was relying upon the report in the New York Times. As you will see from the verbatim text, Mr. Sears' statement was well balanced, a fact that was not reflected in the Times story. I believe that you will agree that Mr. Sears' statement accords with recent general statements of policy by the Secretary and Assistant Secretary Byroade and does not give any cause for concern.

You may be interested to know that USIA is cabling full texts of Mr. Sears' statements in the Trusteeship Council to our Public Affairs Officers in Accra and Lagos. Mr. Sears' earlier statement on British Cameroons was broadcast by the Lagos Radio Station and the Station expressed an interest in broadcasting the texts of subsequent statements by Mr. Sears. Moreover, the Middle East News desk of USIA considered Mr. Sears' statement on French Cameroons of such interest that a full story quoting liberally from it was sent by Wireless Bulletin to all thirteen posts receiving the Bulletin in the Middle East.

[Enclosure]

VERBATIM TEXT OF MR. SEARS' STATEMENT ON FRENCH CAMEROONS

Mr. Sears (United States of America) : In discussing the Territory of the French Cameroons, the main point my delegation would like to emphasize—and we think it is the overriding issue—is the rapid political and economic progress which is taking place throughout the highly populated areas of West Africa. It has become a classic example of what can be done where there is a will to co-operate between peoples of greatly differing languages and backgrounds, and we are certain that it will contribute enormously to the final settlement of the colonial issue.

But the nature of this progress is such that we cannot blind ourselves to the complications which could arise if self-government was being achieved by some peoples of West Africa while not yet being fully attained by others. We believe that if such a situation is allowed to drift and it becomes unduly prolonged, it will create many difficulties and will ultimately provide fertile territory for alien-controlled agitators, disguised as local patriots, to introduce Communist activity which, as we all know, officially aims to take over every nationalist movement it can reach.

To put it another way, it is our judgment that the expected early emergence of nationhood for the Gold Coast and Nigeria, including final self-determination for the British Trust Territories of Togoland and the Cameroons, will have a very far reaching effect upon adjoining territories. This means that as time goes on, French judgment with respect to the rate of progress best suited to the welfare of their part of the Cameroons is destined to become of greater and greater importance not only in the Trust Territory but throughout Africa. It is our opinion that it will have a profound effect upon the ability of colonial administrators everywhere to harness the process of orderly evolution to the constantly accelerating forces of African nationalism.

However, after listening to the discussion of the last few days, we are satisfied that the efficient, well-informed administrators in the French Cameroons are fully aware of the implications of forthcoming developments in neighbouring territories. We are confident that they are prepared to make sound decisions which will recognize the political realities of the times and that they will not permit the progress of the people in their trust territories to differ importantly from progress in adjoining areas.

In conclusion, we wish to congratulate the French administrators for the many fine contributions which they are making to the advancement of the people of the Cameroons.

We are happy to believe that the Cameroons, in their turn, will become self-governing at an early date, and that they too will use their self-governing powers to advance the cause of freedom in this important part of the world.

Memorandum by the Deputy United States Representative on the Trusteeship Council (Gerig) to the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Key)

CONFIDENTIAL

[NEW YORK,] February 17, 1954.

Subject: Tactics of USDel in Trusteeship Council

In order to avoid any misunderstanding, either in the Department or in French or British circles, I wish to explain the tactics which USDel has been following in the Trusteeship Council.

First of all, I should explain that Mr. Sears, Mr. McKay and I keep copies of the colonial policy statements of Secretary Dulles of November 17 and of Assistant Secretary Byroade of October 30 constantly at our elbow, and we carefully measure our statements and our questions in the Trusteeship Council against these basic documents.

It has been Mr. Sears' desire, and we have agreed, to change somewhat the nature of U.S. participation in the Council by adopting a selective rather than a comprehensive approach to the problems. In the Council the custom has been—and in the past the U.S. went along with it—to ask a number of questions under each of the four main headings—political, economic, social and educational. Then each Delegate would make a comprehensive commentary running into eight or ten pages covering each of these items in considerable detail. This time USDel decided that instead of this comprehensive treatment it would be better to select two or three of the big items to which we wished to call attention and treat them more briefly. You will see, therefore, that in Mr. Sears' statements so far made on British Cameroons, French Cameroons and British Togoland, his final statement was only about a page and a half in length and selected one or two large issues such as, for example, (1) the early attainment of self-government for British Cameroons in relation to Nigeria, (2) the impact which this development is almost certain to have in the adjoining French Cameroons and therefore the necessity for the French to be mindful of this development, and (3) the forthcoming elections in British Togoland when the people, under the principle of self-determination, will decide whether to look westward toward union with the Gold Coast or eastward toward unification with French Togoland.

These statements have in no wise, in our view, departed from the Dulles and Byroade statements. They have, of course, applied these principles to particular cases, and in that respect we were fully aware that they needed to be carefully measured. A perusal of these statements (copies attached) will show, I think, that they were couched in courteous and sufficiently general terms, and should give no real cause for criticism.

One effect of these brief statements has been that the New York papers, almost for the first time, have taken note of our positions in the Trusteeship Council. Moreover, we are informed that USIA finds them much more usable than the general comprehensive statements have been heretofore.

USDel is fully aware that the basic colonial policy position, as outlined in the Dulles and Byroade statements, stresses self-government as the objective for all non-self-governing peoples and in certain cases, where conditions are suitable, a choice of independence or some other alternative following the application of the principle of self-determination. We are also aware, as is clearly pointed out in both the basic policy statements, that there is such a thing as premature attainment of independence which would not only be unrealistic and unenduring, but would open the way for communist exploitation. I think a careful reading of our brief statements to the Trusteeship Council will indicate that we have taken all this carefully into account.

Mr. Sears feels, and we all agree here, that the colonial and trust powers should advance the territories under their charge toward self-government as rapidly as practicable, and in doing so show to all the members of the free world that the colonial question should not be a divisive issue among them, thus playing into the hands of the communists.

I trust this memorandum will suffice to clarify any misunderstanding which may have arisen in regard to our activities here. It might be well soon to have a discussion in the Department at which the Assistant Secretaries and other officers particularly concerned with colonial questions could meet with Mr. Sears and discuss our tactics further.

Mr. Sears has seen this memorandum and agrees with it.

Memorandum of Conversation, by Curtis C. Strong of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] February 24, 1954.

Subject: Belgian Views on Statements by the U.S. Representative in The Trusteeship Council

Participants: Baron Silvercruids, Ambassador of Belgium
Mr. Charles Muller, Second Secretary, Belgian Embassy
Mr. Key, Assistant Secretary, United Nations Affairs
Mr. Robert R. Robbins, Acting Director, UND
Mr. Curtis C. Strong, UND
Mr. Ward Allen, EUR

Ambassador Silvercruids said that he wished to speak in a friendly but frank manner as he had in the past regarding certain aspects of the work of the Trusteeship Council. In particular, his Government as well as the Belgian Mission to the United Nations in New York and he himself had been disturbed by the tenor of the statements made thus far by the United States Representative in the Trusteeship Council. It was true these related to British Cameroons, French Cameroons and British Togoland but they contained phrases which could be interpreted as having general application to colonial areas in Africa and which could have nefarious consequences for those areas. Speaking with considerable seriousness and intensity, the Ambassador said that the Belgians were not surprised when such statements were made by the representatives of certain states but that it came as a real shock when statements of this sort were made by the representative of a friendly power with whom Belgium shared so many interests and responsibilities of vital importance to the security of the free world. Baron Silvercruids went on to say that although the general ideals expressed in these statements were lofty ones to which we would all adhere, certain phrases could be taken out of the context by interested parties and give encouragement to subversive elements in dependent areas in Africa. He was sure that we both desired progress in Central Africa to be carried out without upsetting the stability of this important area.

He read from Trusteeship Council verbatim records such phrases as "the Colonial days of these regions are coming to an end with the rapid approach of full self-government" (T/PV.488); "French judgment with respect to the rate of progress . . . is destined to become of greater and greater importance not only in the Trust Territory but throughout Africa" (T/PV.493); and "we will soon see a very practical demonstration of African self-determination in action, and it seems to us that it deserves enthusiastic support" (T/PV.498). He and other Belgian officials had been favorably impressed by Assistant Secretary Byroade's "sober" statement of U.S. policy on African problems. They found it impossible to reconcile Mr. Sears' statements with that general policy statement.

Ambassador Silvercruys stressed the community of interest of our two countries, making particular reference to NATO. He noted the importance of the Belgian Congo in our common defense arrangements. He pointed out that it was inconsistent, while working for stability in western Europe, to give encouragement to instability in the dependent territories in Africa when the stability of the two areas was so closely interrelated. He referred to the growing importance of Belgian military installations in the eastern Congo and said that in the past several years some "subversive" activities have begun to be noted in the Congo. It was no coincidence, he felt, that only after the British high command for African defense had been shifted to Nairobi, had the Mau Mau movement become active in Kenya.

The Ambassador hoped that the Department would find it possible to convey to the United States Representative on the Trusteeship Council the serious concern felt by the Belgian Government as to the unsettling consequences in Africa of the statements he had been making in the Council, particularly if the present trend of these statements continues. They were, of course, particularly concerned over the possibility that he might speak along similar lines with regard to Ruanda-Urundi.

Assistant Secretary Key expressed his appreciation for this frank expression of the Belgian viewpoint, which he said was quite understandable. He said that he had been in touch with the United States Representative on the Trusteeship Council, Mr. Mason Sears, earlier today on this matter and that Mr. Sears had assured him that the statements which he had made applied only to the Trust Territories in West Africa, that he was fully aware that the territories in Central and East Africa had not reached a similar stage of development and that he had no intention of making similar statements with regard to the latter territories. Mr. Sears had, in fact, been very favorably impressed by the record of Belgium in Ruanda-Urundi and his statement on that Territory would give every credit to the splendid achievements of the Belgian administration.

If Ambassador Silvercruys considered that it would be useful, he would be glad to suggest that Mr. Sears consult with the Belgian representative on the Trusteeship Council, Mr. Ryckmans, and give him similar assurances. Ambassador Silvercruys replied that he thought such consultation would be very useful and in fact he felt that continuing and close consultation between the two delegations was always desirable.

[WASHINGTON,] February 24, 1954.

Subject: Belgian Concern over American Representative's Statement in Trusteeship Council.

Participants: Mr. Georges Carlier, Counselor of the Belgian Embassy.

Baron Dhanis, Belgian Congo Affairs Attaché, Belgian Embassy.

Mr. John E. Utter, AF.

At their request, Mr. Carlier and Baron Dhanis called on me today to express to me the concern with which the Belgian Government viewed the possible repercussions to the speech which Mr. Sears gave in the Trusteeship Council on February 10, 1954 on the French Cameroons. Mr. Carlier informed me the Belgian Ambassador had already spoken to Assistant Secretary Key on this matter but that he and Baron Dhanis felt that it was advisable and necessary to bring it directly to the attention of the African Office.

Reference was made to Assistant Secretary Byroade's speech of November 1, 1953, entitled "The World's Colonies and Ex-Colonies: A Challenge to America," before the World Affairs Council of Northern California, at Asilomar, California, and the subsequent speech of the Secretary in Detroit regarding the Colonial policy of the United States Government. Mr. Carlier stated that these speeches had been received with great pleasure by his Government and there was a feeling among the administering powers that the United States, without yielding its traditional sympathy toward the evolution of peoples to self-government, was at last becoming more realistic in its views regarding colonialism. According to Mr. Carlier the extreme language used by Mr. Sears could only lead to stirring up trouble among Africans and be used to incite revolt against the administering powers. He said that with proper encouragement it was conceivable that the troubles in Kenya could spread to Ruanda-Urundi and thence to the mining district of the Congo. The end result, he continued, would be to start a chain of events which could only play into communist hands. The stability of the Katanga area, so rich in strategic materials, he remarked, was as much the interest and concern of the United States as it was of Belgium; therefore caution should be used in public statements made by American representatives, especially since these statements were broadcast around the world. Mr. Carlier said that he had never in his experience received such an annoyed and violent message as the one from his Minister in Brussels regarding Mr. Sears' speech.

Mr. Carlier hoped that the Department might take the necessary precautions to avoid the repetition of speeches tending to inflame the passions of Africans against their Administering Powers. This he felt could best be achieved if our public utterances were guided by the policy already established by the Secretary and Mr. Byroade.

Mr. Carlier stated that he wished to inform me that Ambassador Silvercruys had called on Assistant Secretary Key to say that the Belgian Government was disturbed by the tenor of statements made by the US Representative in the Trusteeship Council regarding the British and French Cameroons.

He added that he and Baron Dhanis had also called on Mr. Utter, in African Affairs regarding the same subject. He then told me what he had told Mr. Utter (for these remarks, see Mr. Utter's memorandum of conversation on this subject dated February 24, 1954).

Mr. Carlier emphasized that he had never in his experience received such an annoyed message as the one from the Belgian Foreign Minister on this matter.

Subject: Mr. Sears' Statement in the Trusteeship Council.

In addition to the complaint made by Mr. Gabriel van Laethem from the French Embassy in a conversation with you on February 11 about Mr. Sears' statement on the French Cameroons in the Trusteeship Council, it has come to my attention that Belgian representatives have also expressed their concern at the tenor of Mr. Sears' remarks at the Trusteeship Council.

The text of Mr. Sears' statement would not appear to justify the press reports in the New York Times and Tribune of February 11 and 10, but the statement nevertheless did receive unfortunate emphasis in the press. The implication in the complaints made by the French and Belgians appears to be that Mr. Sears, in delivering his statement, may have departed from the prepared text or given particular emphasis to those portions concerning which they would be most sensitive.

I need hardly mention our desire to avoid friction with the French and Belgians over colonial issues whenever possible, especially with the French during the period when we may be leading up to the EDC ratification debate.<sup>1</sup>

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Key)<sup>1</sup>

WASHINGTON, March 3, 1954.

Subject: French Views on Statements by the United States Representative in the Trusteeship Council

Participants: M. Henri Bonnet, Ambassador of France
M. Gabriel van Laethem, First Secretary, French Embassy
Mr. David McK. Key, Assistant Secretary, United Nations Affairs
Mr. Robert R. Robbins, Acting Director, UND
Mr. Curtis C. Strong, UND
Mr. Ward Allen, EUR

Ambassador Bonnet said that he wished to discuss with Mr. Key in a frank and friendly spirit the concern that had been aroused in Paris, as well as in the French Embassy and in the French Mission to the United Nations, by certain statements made by the United States Representative in the Trusteeship Council. The Ambassador wished to make clear that there was no friction between the French and United States Delegation to the Trusteeship Council; on the contrary the French Representative, M. Pignon, had emphasized his high personal regard for the United States Representative and the cordial relations between the French and United States Delegations. Both M. Pignon and he were convinced that Mr. Sears' statements in the Council had been animated by lofty motives. However, French officials, concerned with the administration of overseas territories in Africa, were seriously concerned over the harmful repercussions which they felt sure Mr. Sears' remarks would have in some of these territories. Certain phrases were bound to be exploited by extremists who sought to discredit the French administrations there.

The French recognized and were grateful for the fact that Mr. Sears had paid tribute to the accomplishments of French administrators in Africa. However, Ambassador Bonnet felt bound to say that he felt there was some inconsistency between these favorable remarks and the philosophy of the statements in which they appeared. Actually the policy of the French to provide a broad economic and social basis for political advancement stems from quite a different conception of colonial administration than the excellerated [accelerated?] political approach emphasized almost exclusively by Mr. Sears. He had in mind in particular the clear implication in Mr. Sears' statements that independence was the desirable goal for every nationalistic group in Africa seeking it. The French felt that many of the local political movements in Africa could not be dignified by the term "national" movements. Moreover, they believed that encouragement of these numerous movements could lead to the fragmentation of Africa into a large number of nonviable, weak and unstable African states. This would be contrary to French policy, and presumably not desired by the United States either. At a time when, with United States encouragement, strenuous efforts were being made to break down international barriers in Europe, he felt sure that the United States could not desire to encourage political fragmentation in Africa. The French concept was a federal one with the territories under their administration in Africa maintaining their associations not only with each other but also with metropolitan France to the mutual benefit of all parties.

Mr. Sears had suggested in effect that the French model their policy on British policy in West Africa and that they maintain the same pace of political development. Without wishing to criticize British policy in this area, Ambassador Bonnet said that the French were not persuaded that the British experiments in the Gold Coast and Nigeria would be entirely successful. They would prefer to wait and see how they worked out before imitating them. Moreover, conditions were not the same in all West African territories. French Togoland, for example, was not enjoying the kind of prosperity which had so materially helped the Gold Coast and British Togoland along the road to self-government. French policy, too, was aimed at the achievement of self-government for the territories under their administration. The French felt that their methods were in the best interests of the inhabitants and that time would demonstrate their effectiveness.

The Ambassador also pointed out that there were a number of North African nationalist propagandists in New York, as well as in Europe and Africa, who could, and undoubtedly would not hesitate to misuse phrases from Mr. Sears' statements to demonstrate American support for their cause. He felt sure that it was not Mr. Sears' intention to provide such persons with anti-French ammunition. However, he was seriously concerned lest in this area, too, which was of particular importance to the security of the free world, Mr. Sears' statements would all too readily lend themselves to such use.

Mr. Key expressed his appreciation for Ambassador Bonnet's frank and friendly explanation of the French views concerning Mr. Sears' statements. He said that he had had occasion to talk to Mr. Sears about his statements and he was sure that Mr. Sears had not intended to be critical of French policy but simply to point out in a friendly and constructive spirit some of the factors in present day West Africa that must necessarily condition the policy of all colonial administrators in the area. Mr. Key would not deny the possibility that certain of Mr. Sears' statements might be distorted or misused by nationalist propagandists. He hoped that this would not be the case; however, if it were, it should be possible to make clear that such propagandists were guilty of distortion and misrepresentation. He would certainly pass on to Mr. Sears the apprehensions which Ambassador Bonnet had expressed and he felt sure that Mr. Sears would give careful thought to the considerations which the Ambassador had put forward and would continue his close and cordial relationship with the French Delegation.

Mr. Key informed Ambassador Bonnet that Mr. Sears hoped to pay a visit to West Africa after the close of the current session of the Council. The Ambassador expressed his pleasure at learning that Mr. Sears was planning to make such a trip. He felt that nothing but good could come from this opportunity for the United States Representative to acquaint himself with conditions in West Africa. He also agreed that, if damaging propaganda use of Mr. Sears' statements were made, it would be possible for Mr. Sears to point out that his statements had been distorted and misrepresented. He wondered if it might not be desirable for Mr. Sears to give some thought in advance to the kind of rectification he might wish to make.

Mr. Huré approached me today to say that Paris had asked the French Delegation to raise an objection to the fact that Mr. Sears' statements on the French Cameroons and French Togoland in the Trusteeship Council were being publicized in West Africa by the United States Information Officers in Lagos and Accra. Mr. Huré said that the French Delegation did not object strongly to the substance of Mr. Sears' statements but to the fact that the exploitation of such statements by hostile elements in West Africa would weaken the position of France and the United States there.

Mr. Huré said that he thought the French Ambassador in Washington would have protested against the action of the United States Information Officers when he called on the Department recently if he had known about it at the time of his call.

Mr. Huré asked if the US Information Officers could not also broadcast and otherwise publicize the statements made by Mr. Pignon in his concluding observations on the French Cameroons and French Togoland, in order to present a more "balanced" picture of French policy in the area. I replied that I would inform Mr. Sears and the Department of Mr. Huré's comments.

Attached is a copy of the memorandum of the conversation between Mr. Hure of the French Delegation to the Trusteeship Council and Mr. McKay<sup>1</sup> of the United States Delegation on the above subject. This is the conversation summarized in the USUN unclassified summary of today's date, which we discussed at this morning's staff meeting.

Mr. Sears has made four statements in the Council on trust territories in West Africa and they have been issued as USUN Press Releases as follows: British Cameroons #1871; French Cameroons #1872; British Togoland #1873; and French Togoland #1875. Certain phrases in these statements have been somewhat more dramatic than statements of United States Representatives in the Council in the past and as you know have aroused some concern on the part of the Belgians and French. Both the Belgian and French Ambassadors have called on Assistant Secretary Key to convey this concern. For your background information, I am also enclosing copies of memoranda of their conversations with Mr. Key.<sup>2</sup>

Mr. Strong of this office has been in contact with Mr. Simpson of the Middle East and Africa Press Section of USIA, who has transmitted informally to UND copies of the Wireless Bulletin stories that have been sent out to the USIA posts in the Middle East and Africa. In our opinion, these stories have given a balanced presentation of Mr. Sears' statements. In addition, we understand that the full text of Mr. Sears' statements have been sent to USIA officers in Lagos and Accra.

Mr. Strong has called Mr. Simpson's attention to the sensitivities of the Belgians and French; however, it might be well if you were to pass on to USIA this additional French reaction as it relates specifically to the publicizing of Mr. Sears' statements by the Information Officers at Lagos and Accra. Perhaps USIA will wish to make the French objections known to these officers. I should add, however, that their activities in publicizing the statements of the United States Representative in the Trusteeship Council seem to us entirely normal and proper.

SUMMARY NARRATIVE—DEPENDENT OVERSEAS TERRITORIES—WESTERN HEMISPHERE

The fourteen Western Hemisphere Dependent Overseas Territories of European Countries (DOTS) are of importance to the United States because of their geographic position which has made them of vital importance in our national defense. In addition to their strategic importance, certain of these DOTS are important suppliers of bauxite and petroleum products. Surinam, British Guiana and Jamaica export to the United States approximately 80% of the total United States imports of this ore and currently produce approximately 59% of the Free World supply of bauxite. Oil from Venezuela is refined in the Dutch West Indies (Curaçao and Aruba) and the total capacity of the two large refineries there amounts to about 6% of the Free World supply. Other strategic minerals in small quantity are produced in British Guiana—columbite and tantalite—which in 1953 amounted to 2 or 3% of the Free World supply. It is known that manganese is present in that colony. The United States has military leased-base areas until the year 2040 in Trinidad, Jamaica, St. Lucia, Antigua, the Bahamas and British Guiana—a defense of the Panama Canal.

The economies of the DOTS are almost wholly based upon agriculture. These DOTS are plagued by under-developed economies, chronic unemployment and underemployment, disease, illegitimacy, illiteracy, political immaturity, and a weak social structure. The island DOTS are heavily overpopulated and the high birth rate make some of these areas among the most densely populated in the world. On the other hand, the three Guianas and British Honduras are under-populated.

BRITISH GUIANA

In British Guiana, the largest of the British DOTS, the United States has leased-base areas including an important air base to which this Government retains re-occupancy rights. Its main agricultural products are sugar and rice and its main industries are extractive ones—bauxite, gold and diamonds. British Guiana came into world prominence in October, 1953 when a communist oriented government popularly elected in April, 1953 was overthrown by the British Government, troops were landed and the constitution was revoked. British Guiana is now operating under an interim government, the stability of which is maintained by the British Government. The success of the Communists there arose out of the bad economic situation—a rapidly growing population with severe unemployment, poverty, disease, bad housing, and lack of economic planning or development. The situation is complicated by the mixed racial composition containing East Indians, colored, and Amerindians.

The United Kingdom has recently announced a large scale economic development plan to be financed over a period of years. The United States programs in the field of technical assistance will supplement and complement the British economic development program and should alleviate in some measure the adverse economic conditions which feed the communist cause.

SURINAM

Surinam (Dutch Guiana) is the chief supplier to the United States of bauxite and was the site of a strategic base during World War II. It has huge timber resources which have not been well developed. The country is still basically agricultural in its economy, but farming is restricted to the coastal plain and not well developed even there although the rich clay-lands are suitable for producing such important export products as rice, coffee and cocoa. The only industry of export importance, other than mining, is sawmilling and the manufacture of plywoods.

Surinam is one of the least developed of the Caribbean DOTS although it has some of the greatest potentialities of the area. It has insufficient roads, adequate irrigation and sanitation, and soil erosion control. The Netherlands and Surinam Governments have worked out a ten-year development plan and the International Bank has recently surveyed the economic potentialities of Surinam and has stated that it would consider sympathetically requests for financial assistance in connection with Surinam's economic development plans. United States technical assistance will supplement both Dutch and Surinam economic development plans.

The diversity of its population—mainly East Indian, West Indian, Javanese, Bush Negro and Amerindian (Arawak Indian) complicates both the economic and social picture. Although many of the factors that were present in British Guiana exist in Surinam, Communism has not gained a stronghold. Its government is stable and friendly to the United States.

ATTITUDES OF LATIN AMERICAN STATES TOWARD EUROPEAN COLONIES IN THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE

SUMMARY INTRODUCTION

The following paper summarizes the attitudes of Latin American states toward the controversial subject of European colonialism in the Western Hemisphere as expressed at various Inter-American bodies including the Meetings of the Foreign Ministers of the American Republics at Panama, 1939; Havana, 1940; Washington, 1951; the Inter-American Conferences at Bogotá, 1948, and Caracas, 1954, as well as the American Committee on Dependent Territories in 1949. It is recalled that by the terms of the Monroe Doctrine of 1823, the United States interposed no objection to European colonies in the Western Hemisphere existing as of that date. However, the American continent was declared to be henceforth ineligible for future colonization by any European power and further attempts to establish or extend such colonies to be considered as "dangerous" to the "peace and security" of the Western Hemisphere. For more than a century, the

Latin American states have demonstrated their traditional opposition to extra-continental colonialism and have missed no opportunity to agitate for the termination of European colonialism in America. Such opposition has been most vehemently expressed in Inter-American meetings, but it is also reflected in the United Nations* where Latin American states generally take an anti-colonial position and where the states having claims to occupied territories consistently reserve their government's position with respect to the recognition of the sovereignty of the European powers over four disputed territories. However, for the purposes of brevity, discussion has been limited in this paper to the Inter-American bodies where the reaction against colonialism has been most concretely expressed.

While the Latin American states as a group have generally opposed European control and occupation of American territory and have sought to eliminate it from the Hemisphere, the degree of opposition has varied from the extremely anti-colonial states [i.e., Argentina, Guatemala, Mexico and Chile whose interests are reinforced by claims to territory occupied by the United Kingdom]<sup>2</sup> to the more moderate states [such as Brazil, Colombia, the Dominican Republic and Venezuela despite the latter's claim against the UK].<sup>2</sup> The latter group has supported the more extreme group politically and morally to the extent of urging attainment of such claims through peaceful means.

In the midst of the heated debates on colonialism at Inter-American meetings, the role of the United States has been that of moderator. While expressing the view that the United States is opposed to the extension of European political influence in this hemisphere or any expansion of the area under colonial rule, United States delegates have nevertheless reiterated the position that discussions of colonialism in the Americas were undesirable in bodies where all of the nations concerned were not represented and where certainly [sic] friendly nations were not in a position to present their side of such issues and the bases for their claims. Even though the United States has urged inaction in Inter-American bodies with respect to colonial problems in the Americas and indicated that the United Nations might be a more appropriate body for their consideration, it has done so with caution because it is unlikely we would wish to encourage discussion of this controversial subject in the United Nations.

In dealing with questions of European colonialism in the Americas the United States has found itself under pressures from two friendly groups of nations, i.e., the anti-colonial Latin American states who urge termination of extracontinental colonialism and the European colonial powers who have not hesitated to express their opposition to Inter-American resolutions opposing colonialism, such as the ones forthcoming from Bogotá and Caracas. At the Inter-American Meeting at Bogotá, the United States delegate abstained on the creation of the American Committee on Dependent Territories on the grounds that the Conference was not a court of law and that action appearing to support the claims of one of the parties to a territorial dispute was inappropriate for a meeting in which the other party was not represented and that means for examining the problems of dependent peoples are provided in the Charter of the United Nations.

Later, at the Tenth Inter-American Conference at Caracas in 1954, the United States abstained on inclusion of the question of colonialism on the agenda on the grounds that the status of dependent territories is a subject which involves the interests of both American and non-American states and would more properly fall within the competence of the United Nations in which all interested states are represented. With respect to the disputes between the United Kingdom and American states which have advanced claims to certain territories administered by the United Kingdom, the United States has urged that such disputes be resolved on a bilateral basis or submitted to other procedures for peaceful settlement available to all parties.

To date, the resolutions adopted by Inter-American meetings have resulted in no concrete program to terminate colonialism in the Americas but have succeeded in keeping the issue alive and bringing pressures to bear upon the European powers concerned.

[Here follows the main body of the paper, entitled "Discussion", consisting of several units devoted to inter-American meetings, 1940-1951, that addressed their attention to the colonial situation in the Western Hemisphere.]

TENTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES, CARACAS, VENEZUELA, MARCH 1-28, 1954

As a result of resolutions proposed by Argentina, Brazil, and Ecuador, the question of "Colonies and Occupied Territories in the Americas and the Report by the American Committee on Dependent Territories" was included on the agenda of the Tenth Inter-American Conference at Caracas over the objection of the United States which abstained. The United States' stand was based on the premise that interests of both American and non-American states were involved and the subject should more properly be taken up bilaterally or through the United Nations. In general the United States reaffirmed the principles it had enunciated at Bogotá in 1948 and re-emphasized its view that peoples should be helped to attain a constantly increasing measure of self-government.

The Resolution on "Colonies and Occupied Territories in America"† adopted at Caracas was based on a proposal introduced by Argentina, subsequently amended by Guatemala, which declared that the peoples of America oppose colonialism and desire an end to the occupation of American territories. Moreover it expressed their sympathy with the legitimate aspiration of now-subject peoples to obtain their sovereignty and proclaimed the solidarity of the American republics with the just claims of the peoples of America to the territories occupied by extra-continental countries. A new paragraph proposed by Guatemala was added to the original Argentine resolution reiterating "the faith of the American republics in the methods of pacific settlement set forth in treaties in effect" and repudiating "the use of force to maintain colonial systems and the occupation of territories in America". In presenting its proposal, the Argentine delegate cited various declarations, emphasizing particularly the Act of Havana of 1940, as giving juridical basis for action by the American Republics against colonialism. He stated that the continuation of the colonial system had retarded the solidarity of the hemisphere and endangered the continental system and made specific reference to the Falkland Islands and portions of the Antarctic over which Argentina exercises its sovereignty. In support of the resolution, Chile said that the present sovereign nations of America did not have as much maturity at the time of their independence as do the present colonies and territories now being discussed. He felt that if a people had a right to independence, they should have it without any qualifications and in urging adoption of the Argentine resolution, called on the colonial powers to voluntarily grant liberty to the peoples under their control thus obviating the necessity of shedding blood. He made specific reference to British Guiana stating that the British had abrogated the constitution using communism as a pretext to land troops "once again on American soil". "The use of communism as a subterfuge" was condemned and Belize was described as "not even a colony but a territory occupied by force". The Guatemalan representative demanded its return and stated his inability to accept the condition that a desire for independence must be evidenced by the people before attention would be given to their independence. He felt that, in practice, the choice given dependent peoples is not between independence and non-independence but between the "classic colonial status and something a little better". All such peoples should be given independence first and then consulted as to their preference as to forms. The Bolivian representative expressed disappointment that no new states had appeared in America after World War II and said that his country would support all declarations forming moral public opinion against colonialism.

In a departure from its previously announced policy that Inter-American conferences were inappropriate bodies to deal with the controversial question of colonialism since the interest of countries outside the hemisphere were affected, the Brazilian delegation introduced a proposal urging extra-continental powers to "terminate the mandate given them under the terms of the United Nations Charter in order that those peoples may exercise fully their right of self-determination and the regime of subordination to extra-continental powers may be definitely eliminated". In addition, the Brazilian proposal envisaged the possibility of placing certain parts of the American territory "not prepared to exercise within a brief period of time its right of self-determination" under a trusteeship regime, "so that its progressive development toward attaining self-government or independence may be facilitated". Argentina initially opposed this resolution and sought to substitute the reference to "dependent territories" and "areas under continental control" with "colonies" and "colonialism" and to delete the provision suggesting the settlement of the colonial problem through pacific means and with the understanding and assistance of the metropolitan powers. It attempted to replace the paragraph with respect to the placement of colonies in this hemisphere under the United Nations Trusteeship system with a paragraph proclaiming the decision of the American republics to request in the United Nations the independence of the territories in this hemisphere subject to colonial rule. In the final voting, however, most of the Argentine amendments were rejected and the whole resolution, as revised, was approved 15-0-1 (US) under the heading "Colonies in American Territory".‡ The major provisions of the resolution recommended that the assistance of the extra-continental countries be sought in finding the best way possible to enable American territories under the colonial system of extra-continental nations to organize their own autonomous existence through pacific means, so that they might be converted into sovereign members of the community of nations as soon as possible. Although Colombia favored as practical and just the development of the theme of international mandates and trusteeship, the majority of states, including the United States expressed distaste for such a provision. The Chilean representative expressed this feeling when he said "there are countries in the United Nations, such as Soviet Russia, to which Chile could never agree to deliver any colony or territory in America under a trusteeship program".

The United States representative stated that he could not vote affirmatively on any of the proposals under consideration since these matters clearly involved the interests and responsibilities of friendly governments not represented. The delegation therefore abstained in the vote on the Argentine and Brazilian resolution.

A proposal by Ecuador§ thanked the American Committee on Dependent Territories for its work and transmitted its report to the United Nations recommending "to the Council of the Organization of American States that in accordance with Resolution 33 of the Ninth Inter-American Conference of American states, it convoke the American Committee on Dependent Territories when circumstances make this advisable". The United States voted against the major part of this resolution concerning the reactivation of the Committee. In putting forth the resolution, the delegate of Ecuador stated that the Conference should tell the non-American powers to "keep hands off the hemisphere" and contended that colonialism was contrary to American ideals. He further stated that the Brazilian resolution did not set forth "the true American feeling" and did not go far enough because it was based on the false assumption that the colonial powers will give freedom to their colonies on a voluntary basis.

In addition to the Inter-American resolutions adopted on colonialism as such, the history of a supposedly innocuous resolution introduced into the cultural committee (Committee 4) of the Tenth Inter-American Conference at Caracas, illustrates the strong feeling of the Latin American states against control of territory in the Americas by European states. The Delegate of El Salvador introduced a draft resolution affirming the historical interest of the American Republics in the Island of San Salvador (Watling Island), 200 miles eastsoutheast of Nassau in the center of the British Bahama Islands. It proposed to erect "a simple monument to Christopher Columbus", to "place thereon a plaque commemorating the discovery of America" and to "establish on the island a library consisting of works on the discovery of America and the development of the American Republics". A further provision recommended that steps be taken to obtain the consent of the British Government in order to carry out this work.

After a purely academic discussion in the subcommittee on the method for gathering books for the library, the resolution (on March 19 in Committee 4) became the subject of a heavy politically inspired debate by Argentina, Bolivia, Guatemala and Colombia. Argentina contended that the American governments which had condemned colonialism only the day before would have to "beg permission of the United Kingdom" to erect the monument and, in the view of the Bolivian delegate, would be in the humiliating position of having to pay homage to "imperialism" before being allowed to pay homage to Columbus. Guatemala and Colombia both expressed the feeling that the Conference would be placed in a ridiculous light in passing the resolution as proposed. Guatemala went so far as to propose requesting the Organization of American states to take steps to remove the island from the jurisdiction of Great Britain so that the monument could be erected. When a final vote showed ten countries against consideration of the project, two for, and two abstentions (US, Venezuela), the Committee then passed a substitute motion|| containing only a small reflection of the original draft and expressing the desire of the Conference to render homage to Columbus in the manner suggested "once extra-continental colonialism has wholly disappeared from America". The United States abstained on the substitute motion.

CONCLUSION

To date, although Inter-American resolutions have opposed colonialism, no positive program for decisive action on the overall problem of European possessions in the hemisphere has developed. The resolutions have succeeded in keeping alive the issue and bringing pressure to bear on European powers which have expressed to the United States their opposition to such anti-colonial resolutions. While the United States has continued to oppose the extension of such colonies or of European political influence in this hemisphere, it has advocated refraining from adopting any resolutions which would appear to prejudge the conflicting claims of friendly nations. It has reiterated its claim that Inter-American Conferences are not courts of law and that action appearing to support the claims of one of the parties to a territorial dispute are not appropriate for a meeting in which the other party is not represented and that means for examining the problem of dependent peoples are provided in the Charter of the United Nations.

While the most vociferous expression of opposition to colonialism and occupation of American territories by non-American states has occurred in Inter-American meetings as described above, the Latin American states concerned have, since the establishment of the United Nations, consistently their rights with respect to the "occupied territories" in the Trusteeship Committee of the General Assembly as well as the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories and have restated their objective of bringing about the termination of colonialism in the Americas.

It should be noted that since this study has been concerned only with the attitude of Latin American States toward European possessions in the Western Hemisphere, the vital question of their attitude toward Puerto Rico has been omitted. Moreover, although little has been written concerning the attitude of the inhabitants of European colonies toward the Latin American states, such a paper might at a later date prove interesting and worthwhile.

Memorandum of Conversation, by an Adviser of the United States Delegation to the Trusteeship Council (McKay)

[NEW YORK,] March 4, 1954.

Subject: Future Termination of Trusteeship Agreement for British Togoland.

Participants:	Mr. Daniel Chapman—UN Secretariat	Separately:	Mr. B. Aleksander—UN Sectr.
	Mr. Allesani } Petitioners		Mr. R. T. Miller—UN Sectr.
	Mr. Fleku } from
	Mr. Mensah } Br. Togoland
	Mr. D. V. McKay—USUN		Mr. D. V. McKay—USUN

Mr. Chapman and the three petitioners all emphasized to me that the trusteeship agreement must come to a complete end at the same time that the Gold Coast and British Togoland achieved self-government. Chapman said that it would be quite impossible for Gold Coast Prime Minister Nkrumah to agree to a self-governing Gold Coast becoming an administering authority. Chapman thought that it would not be difficult to terminate the trusteeship agreement at the same time self-government was achieved. It would only involve setting a date in advance and having all the necessary papers drawn up and approved by the United Kingdom and the United Nations before that date.

Mr. Chapman, an Ewe from the Gold Coast, said that he went home in December to make final arrangements with Nkrumah concerning the new job Chapman is to take in the Gold Coast Government when he leaves the United Nations in April. He is to become Secretary to the new all-African Cabinet when it comes into office. (This is the third Gold Coast job he has been offered during the past year.) Chapman said that it would be a new type of work for him and that he had suggested that perhaps he ought to take some university study of public administration before assuming his new duties. However, he said, the two European officers who are now doing the work had assured him that they could give him the necessary help and training. They are to work for Chapman when he arrives. Chapman said they were very gracious about their new relationship with him.

In a separate conversation with Mr. Aleksander and Mr. Miller of the UN Secretariat, I found that Aleksander opposed the termination of the trusteeship status of British Togoland on the grounds that the inhabitants would be worse off under an independent Gold Coast. He thought that the Gold Coast should become the administering authority in place of the United Kingdom. Miller contended, however, that the Gold Coast would not agree to becoming an administering authority although he agreed with Aleksander that the inhabitants of British Togoland would be better off under trusteeship.

Aleksander insisted, in any case, that it would be imperative to have a UN sponsored or observed plebiscite in British Togoland on the direct question of whether the trusteeship agreement should be terminated in favor of integration with the Gold Coast. He apparently felt this was necessary for two reasons: (1) because the United Nations would be turning the inhabitants over to a status which would be worse than their previous status; and (2) because the precedent for other trust territories would be too dangerous if there were no plebiscite on the direct question of the termination of the agreement. He contended strongly that a plebiscite was required in order to meet the Charter requirement of determining the "freely expressed wishes" of the peoples concerned.

(Aleksander seemed so emotionally attached to these views that it seems likely he will convey them to like-minded non-administering members of the General Assembly; we should, therefore, be prepared for a proposal for a UN sponsored or observed plebiscite in British Togoland at the appropriate time.)

Memorandum by the Deputy Director of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs (Robbins) to the Director of That Office (Gerig)

[WASHINGTON,] April 15, 1954.

Subject: Preparation for the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories

I have had preliminary discussions of the draft agenda of the 73<sup>e</sup> Committee with officers of the Non-Self-Governing Territories Branch. As a result, it is suggested that you may wish to undertake discussions shortly with Mr. Strand, Director, Office of Territories, Department of the Interior, and certain other members of his staff, concerning preparations for the 1954 session of the Committee on Information. Inasmuch as the Office of Territories has been drastically reorganized during the past year it may be necessary for you to "sell" Mr. Strand on the importance of U.S. participation in the work of the Committee and the need for effective backstopping of the U.S. Delegation by the Office of Territories in cooperation with other agencies of the Government. It is suggested, therefore, that in your discussions with Mr. Strand you make the following points:

(1) The large majority of Members of the United Nations believe that there is no field in which the United Nations can do more important work than in the colonial field. For that reason they are constantly urging increased UN activity in the colonial field and an extension of UN supervision over colonial territories. The General Assembly's Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories is a product of the interest of the majority in colonial problems. Through this Committee and in other ways constant pressure is put upon the UN Members which administer non-self-governing territories to account for their stewardship and accelerate the rate of development of their territories.

The United States has sought to make the Committee a constructive force and to avoid its use as a propaganda forum for the more "irresponsible" of the anti-colonials. To this end it has endeavored to channel the Committee's discussion toward a constructive exchange of experiences between administering and non-administering Members concerning common problems they may have faced in promoting the advancement of underdeveloped peoples. Maximum participation by administering authorities in the discussion of the technical aspects of economic, social and educational developments is essential, therefore, if the constructive work of the Committee is to be continued.

(2) At its forthcoming session the Committee will devote major attention to the consideration of economic conditions and problems of development in non-self-governing territories. It would be helpful, therefore, if the Office of Territories would begin the preparation of papers bearing on economic conditions in United States territories with special reference to the particular aspects of the economy listed on the Committee's agenda, a copy of which is attached. It would be especially helpful if some general papers were prepared on such topics as: The Virgin Islands Corporation and its Contribution to the Economy of the Territory; Economic Development Plans for American Samoa and Guam; The Integration of Federal Activities in Alaska; and, The Economic Development of Hawaii.

(3) It would be additionally helpful if an officer from the Department of the Interior could be assigned to the U.S. Delegation who would be able to contribute substantially to the Committee's discussion of economic problems.

(4) We also strongly urge that an indigenous inhabitant from one of our territories be appointed to the U.S. Delegation. This person should be one who could make an effective contribution to the Committee's discussions. It is especially urgent that this be done inasmuch as the United States is largely responsible for the resolution which calls for administering Members to attach such inhabitants to their delegations. We have considered in relation to the draft agenda what person might be chosen from our territories to serve on the Delegation. High Talking Chief Marioto Tuiasosopo, former Speaker of the House of Representatives and now Member of the Senate would make a favorable impression and contribution. From another area, Mr. Victor Bornn of the Virgin Islands, bank official and businessman of St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, who has developed the local cooperatives (formerly governmental but now private) would make an excellent impression. Both are dark-skinned gentlemen. If the procedure suggested by this resolution is not followed, it will become increasingly difficult for the U.S. to oppose more extreme proposals to provide more direct participation of inhabitants in the work of the Committee.

Memorandum of Conversation, by Jerome R. Lavallee of the Office of African Affairs<sup>1</sup>

[WASHINGTON,] May 14, 1954.<sup>2</sup>

Subject: French Togoland and French Cameroons.

Participants: Mr. John E. Utter-AF- Chairman
 Mr. J. R. Lavallee-AF
 Mr. Benjamin Gerig-
 M. Jean Jurgensen, Chief of the African Section, French Foreign Office
 Mr. Vernon McKay-
 M. Francois de Quirielle, Assistant to M. Jurgensen
 Mr. Curtis Strong-UND
 M. Gabriel van Laethem
 Mr. Nicholas Feld-AF

M. Jurgensen opened the discussion by stating that the next session of the Trusteeship Council (the Fourteenth Session, which is expected to meet in New York from June 2 to July 16, 1954) will take up the question of French and British Togoland. At some time during the session the British and French are expected to report on the steps taken by them pursuant to the three resolutions on this problem adopted by the Eighth General Assembly. On June 10, elections are scheduled to be held in British Togoland along with the Gold Coast. The results of the election in the Trust Territory should indicate whether the British Togolanders prefer unification with French Togoland or integration with the Gold Coast. Therefore, the British will have to await the outcome of these elections before they can submit their report to the Trusteeship Council.

M. Jurgensen then referred to the Bill or Projet de Loi concerning French Togoland, a copy of which he had handed to Mr. Utter the previous day for study.<sup>3</sup> He pointed out that the Bill, which he expected to be approved by the French National Assembly in June, has already been presented to the French Parliament and was actually under study of the General Political Committee of the Assembly of the French Union, which had brought about important changes in the initial text. These amendments portend a greater degree of decentralization and prepare the way for reforms of even greater significance.

<sup>3</sup> Most of the officials participating in the conversation recorded here also were present for a meeting the previous afternoon for a political discussion concerning French territories in Africa South of the Sahara; for Lavallee's record of that meeting, see volume xi.

1. The powers of the Territorial Assembly are to be enlarged to include substantive questions.

2. The members of the Executive Council, four of whom are to be nominated by the Governor and five elected by the Territorial Assembly, are to be given specific fields of responsibility or portfolios.

M. Jurgensen added that the future of the Territory was to be settled by the establishment of more liberal institutions and not by unification. He concluded his remarks by asking our opinion as to what extent we believed it will be possible for us to support the French in the United Nations.

Mr. Gerig stated that he had read the Bill but that there were some details which were not altogether clear to him. He added that if the French could point to a substantial increase in the degree of self-government they would go a long way in getting assistance from various members of the United Nations.

M. Jurgensen stated that, in his view, the Joint Council idea was already dead in view of the proposed reforms. Further, if British Togoland votes for an integration with the Gold Coast, and the Trusteeship Council is presented with this fait accompli, then the French would seek to have the Trusteeship Agreement terminated. In reply to a question from Mr. Strong on this subject, M. Jurgensen replied that if the British sought a termination of the agreement at this time, the French would follow suit with a similar request.

Mr. Gerig stated that if the French could show an aspect of self-determination then, in his opinion, the Trusteeship Council would vote in its behalf. He added, however, that suspicion was so great that the Trusteeship Council will no doubt wish to oversee any elections which might be held to determine the future status of the Territory. M. Jurgensen replied that they were in accord with that idea but that, of course, he could not commit the Government on this point. Mr. Gerig then suggested that it might be well for the French to propose the plebiscite idea rather than wait until some one else proposed it. M. Jurgensen agreed.

Mr. Gerig said that it might be better for the French to prepare a report as they have been instructed, stating that the idea of a Joint Council was no longer popular or applicable in French Togoland. According to Mr. Strong the French might suggest that the Joint Council limit itself to handling customs and frontiers problems.

In conclusion, Mr. Gerig stated that, in the view of many UN members, the desired objective for all Trust Territories is independence and would probably not approve the termination of a Trusteeship Agreement on any other basis.

Mr. McKay pointed out that British Togoland, as part of the Gold Coast, will participate in making its own laws in Africa, whereas the laws for French Togoland, even under the proposed reforms, will be made in Paris. This fact will constitute another difficulty for the French in the UN. M. Jurgensen concluded by stating that the French wish to keep in step with the British in the Togoland question.

The meeting concluded with a very limited discussion on the Cameroons. It was generally agreed that the Cameroons question will not present any difficulty at the forthcoming session of the Trusteeship Council.

Memorandum by the United States Representative on the Trusteeship Council (Sears) to the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Key)

[NEW YORK,] June 3, 1954.

Subject: West Africa

This memorandum will report some of the reactions and impressions received during a recent visit to West Africa.

My journey began at Leopoldville in the Belgian Congo and continued on through French Equatorial Africa, French and British Cameroons, Nigeria, French and British Togoland, and finally the Gold Coast. The hospitality which was extended to me by representatives of the British, French and Belgian Governments was beyond all expectation.

My principal impressions were as follows:

Although I have travelled and spent considerable time in many places throughout Asia and Europe, the people of West Africa appear to be by far the most cheerful and happy lot I have seen. One gets no feeling whatever that these people are being restrained or in any way repressed by the white man.

I was very much impressed by the amount of construction and development which was taking place on every side. Low cost, sanitary housing on a large scale is to be seen in all countries, while everywhere one goes the white administrators are engaged in building new roads, new schools, new universities and new factories. The atmosphere is charged with progress.

Progressive political advancement is also much in evidence—most of all, of course, in British areas. And there seems to be no consciousness of a color line anywhere.

Under the circumstances the term "colonialism", as generally understood, should be replaced by a new and more accurate description of the progress which is taking place in this part of Africa. I could find no sign of economic or racial exploitation in any field. In fact, it is the reverse which is the case. The atmosphere is one of emancipation from ignorance and from uncivilized customs which have largely disappeared. Progressive measures of all kinds are being fed into the West African system as fast as they can be absorbed and one hates to think what would be the situation if the European administrators were withdrawn tomorrow. If this were to happen, and Communist organizers given a free hand, the whole area in time would undoubtedly become a vast industrial slave camp, in every respect as bad as the days of the African slave trade.

The basic problem so far as I could observe centers around the wide divergence between British and French development policies. Both countries are sincerely and successfully promoting the welfare of the people under their administrations and both aim ultimately to establish political freedom according to trusteeship obligations. The trouble comes because British policy endeavors to develop among the Africans a hard corps of responsible political leaders, while French policy concentrates on assimilating the Africans into the French cultural system and—in a sense—to develop them into the best possible Frenchmen. This is a basic policy difference which gives rise to a number of complications which will sooner or later have to be adjusted. The British, of course, emphasize self-government and from their point of view they would like to see it come as soon as possible. On the other hand, the French, although by no means laggard in developing self-governing institutions, do not place so much emphasis on it as the British do. This raises the question as to what the political repercussions will be when the Gold Coast and Nigeria become fully independent and by free choice sovereign members of the British Commonwealth, while the French areas are still in a dependent status. It is my opinion that the French are very realistic administrators and that if and when it becomes apparent the the British policy is working successfully they will raise their present sites [sights?] so as to speed progress toward self-government in such a way as to keep political disturbances at a minimum.

So much for general impressions. The remainder of this memorandum will touch briefly on political and economic affairs in the various French and British areas.

French Cameroons. The French High Commissioner provided his personal twin-motored airplane and two of the best informed officials so as to permit me to see as much as possible during my short stay in their country. I was accompanied by M. Georges Becquey, Chief of External Affairs, who was also Special Representative of the French Cameroons in the Trusteeship Council, and by M. René Tirant, Delegate of the High Commissioner for the North Cameroons. We travelled from north to south. In the north we visited the civilized and conservative Moslems as well as some of the most primitive people that it is possible to see. In the south we saw pagan and Christian peoples which are much more politically active than their neighbors in the north. Although I visited many of the traditional Mohammedan leaders, called Lamidos or Sultans, and was called upon by the paramount tribal chief in the south who happens to be President of the Traditional Chiefs Association, I was unable to observe any outcropping of nationalism even though it unquestionably exists. The French, however, did tell me that they were aware of no desire on their side of the border for any sort of unification with the tribes in the British Cameroons.

British Cameroons. I spent a number of days at Buea with Brigadier Gibbons, who is the chief administrator of the territory. While there I had several talks with Dr. Endeley, leader of the Kamerun National Congress. In the elections of last December his party won all of the 13 seats allotted to the Southern Cameroons in the Eastern Nigerian House of Assembly. This has given him a government without a minority, which in the end may spell his downfall. At any rate, the main political fact of life in the Southern Cameroons is a widespread fear of the Ibo people who inhabit the adjoining Eastern Region of Nigeria. The Ibos are said to be the most politically aggressive people in West Africa. They are led by Dr. Azikwe and are many times more numerous than the people of the Southern Cameroons. In consequence, the politicians in the Southern Cameroons feel that if they join in any way with their neighbors in Nigeria they will lose forever all political identity. On the other hand, the Moslem people of the North are as one with the Northern people of Nigeria. This puts Dr. Endeley in a difficult position. At present he admits that because of the French policy of gradual assimilation into the French way of life, there is no immediate prospect of independence for the French Cameroons. This means that since he cannot, as a nationalist leader, advocate the placing of his people under French control, and since he is unwilling to join the Ibos to the West under Nigerian control, he has no alternative except to let the North go its own way, while he asks the South to remain under British control. His people would thus represent such a small fragmented group as to raise the question of whether he can get the necessary backing from any source to accomplish such a limited purpose.

On the other hand, Brigadier Gibbons intimated that before the next elections, two years from now, it was not impossible that a minority might develop in the Southern Cameroons which could lead to the ultimate association of the entire Cameroons as a federated part of a new and independent Nigeria.

Nigeria. This huge country of some 35,000,000 people is the largest remaining British colony in the world. Population-wise, it is about as large as Egypt and the Union of South Africa combined. It is divided into three regions, the Northern region, the Western region and the Eastern region. As a result of the recent constitutional conference with the British Colonial Office, each of these three regions, if they so desire, may become self-governing within a loose Nigerian federation by 1956 or shortly thereafter. This would make Nigeria a sovereign nation, and a nation which would presumably choose to become a member of the British Commonwealth. On the other hand, as I understand it, the British do not wish Nigeria to be divided into fragments and do not propose therefore to permit the creation of a sovereign state until such time as all three regions agree to it. This means that if the Northern region, which is composed largely of Moslems and is very conservative, does not choose to end their association with Great Britain, the Eastern and Western regions will become self-governing areas within Nigeria, but not sovereign.

I had the pleasure of visiting the Emir of Kano and asked him how he felt about self-government for the Northern region. In reply he emphasized the word "ripen". He would not commit himself beyond the statement that his people needed time to "ripen". I was told that he is a very strict and conservative Moslem and is a disciplinarian in his administration.

I also had an opportunity to talk with Dr. Awolowo, who is the Chief Minister for the Western region. I asked him what his attitude would be in the event that the Northern region balked at self-government by 1956 and thus delayed independence for Nigeria as a whole. His answer was that he would seriously consider the question of "secession".

I did not have the privilege of meeting Dr. Azikwe, who is the Chief Minister of the Eastern region, but I understand that he is the most ambitious political leader of them all and is the chief advocate of a Nigerian federation over which he would like to become the first Prime Minister.

The Governor of Nigeria, Sir John Macpherson, was kind enough to discuss with me on a number of occasions the political progress which was taking place in Nigeria. He emphasized that it was impossible to predict what would develop within the next two or three years. He used the term "fluid" to describe the situation.

French Togoland. I stayed for a number of days in Lomé with M. Pechoux, the Commissioner of French Togoland. I got the reaction that he ran what the Navy would call a "taut ship". There is, however, no question about his expectation that the trust territory will be self-governing one day, although he did not seem to feel that there was any particular hurry involved. The most interesting thing he told me was that they had recently discovered very extensive phosphate deposits in the territory and that this would have revolutionary economic results. On the political side he told me that the nationalist leader, Mr. Olympio, had lost much ground and was no longer of any real influence. He appeared to me to be a very competent but conservative administrator who was determined to do his best to provide for the development and the welfare of the people under his charge.

Because I expressed an interest in seeing as much of the native customs and way of life as possible, the French administrators were good enough to take me to call on the chiefs of a number of fairly large towns. In every case these traditional chiefs showed us the greatest hospitality and all kinds of honors, including exhibitions of dancing and drumming and gunpowder salutes. To a man they spoke of a desire to be left alone so that they might develop peacefully under the present French administrators. Every one of them expressed annoyance over the fact that during their lifetime they had gone through four or five changes in foreign administration. They told me they now wished a period of calm. Although the nationalists in French Togoland bombarded the American Consul at Accra in the Gold Coast with requests for an interview before I left British territory—on the ground that they would not be allowed to speak with me on French soil—I could detect no effort on the part of the French to restrain any political leaders from having an interview if they so desired. In Palimé, as a matter of fact, a delegation of three nationalist leaders conferred with me, but they had little to say.

While travelling through French Togoland, it was my privilege to be accompanied by Mr. Apedo-Amah, who was the very effective, Special Representative of that Territory at the last session of the Trusteeship Council.

British Togoland. Under the new Gold Coast constitution, on June 15, there will be an election in British Togoland, as well as in the Gold Coast, to select representatives to the new Legislative Assembly. The issue in Togoland will be whether or not to vote for candidates who favor joining the Gold Coast and ultimately becoming independent along with that country, or uniting themselves with French Togoland, even though this would entail a further period of remaining under trusteeship administration. The political parties involved are the C.P.P. (Convention Peoples Party) under the leadership of Prime Minister Nkrumah of the Gold Coast, and Mr. Antor who heads the Togoland Congress Party which favors unification of the two Togolands. Delegations from both parties came to see me to explain their position. To each I replied that the United States was only one of 60 nations in the United Nations and that our principal interest was that all people at the appropriate time—the time best suited to their interests—should have an opportunity to assert their ideas regarding self-determination. The only thing I emphasized was that American public opinion trusted that all campaigning would be conducted by the various leaders on an honest basis. In this connection I received a very poor impression of Mr. Antor. He made definite assertions which I knew personally to be untrue and I am quite certain that political morality is a subject which holds for him no interest whatever. I should judge that with him, as in the case of other less prominent nationalist leaders, the motivating force was a desire to be a large frog in a small pond rather than no frog at all. The people in the Northern part of British Togoland will, of course, vote to a man to be joined with their families and neighbors across the Gold Coast border. This means that there is every likelihood that not more than one or two seats in British Togoland will be held by representatives who oppose joining with the Gold Coast. In the meantime, the issue of Ewe unification has reached into the background in view of the mechanical and political impossibility of devising a formula that could unite these people which are spread over Southern areas of the Gold Coast as well as across both French and British Togolands.

The Gold Coast. Under the new constitution which was published during my stay in the Gold Coast, the new cabinet is to be made up entirely of African ministers. The only vestige of British authority to remain will be in the reserve powers of the Governor. Inasmuch as these reserve powers, which involve the right to intervene in such matters as security and external affairs, but have seldom if ever been used, the Gold Coast, for all intents and purposes, is now self-governing.

I had a long interview with Prime Minister Nkrumah and, as I understand it from him—and this of course can be checked against the pertinent documents—the Gold Coast Legislature can at any time from now on declare itself independent and apply for membership within the British Commonwealth. On this point Mr. Nkrumah expressed some concern about the position of Dr. Malan, the Prime Minister of South Africa. It appears that Dr. Malan has recently issued a statement to the effect that he would endeavor to block the admission of the Gold Coast into the British Commonwealth. Prime Minister Nkrumah informed me that he had not yet come to a conclusion on how to handle this situation, but he intimated that he thought the question was one which should be determined between the Gold Coast and the British Government directly, and not between the Gold Coast and the various members of the Commonwealth. I found Nkrumah to be a very friendly and a very earnest, and I should suppose, a very astute man. He has spent fifteen years in the United States, five of which were during World War II, so he is well acquainted with the attitude and capacity of the American people. I also believe that he is fully appreciative of the tremendous responsibility which lies on him to introduce and lead his people successfully in their first stages of independence.

It seems to me that the British deserve the greatest credit for the way they are cooperating and assisting the government and the people of the Gold Coast to assume the responsibilities of nationhood.

Conclusion

West Africa is an extraordinary area of contrasts between very backward people and really advanced people, as well as between conservative Moslems in the interior and progressive Bantus along the coast.

Involved also are the complications arising out of the absence of a common language. There are literally hundreds of different tongues. As far as I could make out, the principal mediums of intercourse are pidgin English, and French, and the Housa language of the North. It is, however, a very thickly populated part of Africa which has no remnants of old-fashioned colonialism and where there are large territories which will almost certainly have sovereign independence within a very few years. It is an area where both British and French administrators are doing a splendid job to advance the welfare and happiness of the people. As such, it seems to me to be a part of the world which we should do everything we can to encourage, by drawing public attention to the capabilities of its people and its success in adjusting itself to the impact of modern civilization.

In conclusion it should be emphasized again that from an American point of view, West Africa is in no proper sense a "colonial" region, because in this part of the continent the seeds of self-sustaining freedom are most certainly beginning to bear fruit.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Sears attached a note to this memorandum indicating his desire "to show a copy of this to the British, French and Belgian Reps on the Trusteeship Council". In a letter dated June 7, 1954 (drafted by Gerig), Key responded in part:

"As to your question about giving copies to your French, British and Belgian colleagues on the Council, I can see some advantages and also some disadvantages. On the whole, I incline toward not making it available to them, at least at the present, for the following reasons: First, the report is a very intimate and frank document which was undoubtedly written for the eyes of American officials and therefore contains some information which perhaps should make it a classified document; then, too, your rejection of the term "colonialism" as no longer applying to that area might lead them to expect a more marked change in United States policy than may actually take place; and finally, some of your comparisons between British and French policy, somewhat to the disadvantage of the latter, might be badly received by the French who are particularly sensitive just now in view of what we are urging them to do at Geneva and elsewhere. However, if you feel strongly that you would like to hand it to them, we might look at it again, or perhaps you might wish to eliminate one or two paragraphs." Subject: Possible General Assembly Item on Communism—the New Colonialism

It has been suggested to Cabot that one subject which might be exploited during the 9th General Assembly is "Communism—the New Colonialism". He likes the idea and thinks it would be worthwhile for the Department to study the possibility of having it as a new item.

If such an item were debated in one of the political committees, it would give us an excellent counter to the Soviet Big Lie that the United States is the number one colonial power.

Equally, it would afford the Delegation the opportunity to underline the imperialistic character of the world communist conspiracy, showing that the peoples' democracies are simply colonies which are compelled to adjust to the military and economic desires of the imperial power in Moscow. The item would also permit us to point out that national communist parties represent a form of colonization—strictly controlled and submissive to the policies of Moscow and dedicated to the overthrow of their own national governments in order to install a form of government designed by and submissive to Moscow.

In view of events in Southeast Asia and related matters, you might want to consider the merits of having such an item. I understand the matter was discussed June 8 by the OCB Working Group on the United Nations, which is chaired by Harold Moseley.<sup>1</sup>

Any thinking the Department has on the above will be appreciated by Cabot.<sup>2</sup>

The British Embassy to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL

1510/2/29/54

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

TOGOLAND

It will be recalled that Togoland was the subject of Her Majesty's Embassy's Aide-Mémoire 1510/2/9/54 of the 29th of January, and of the Department of State's Aide-Mémoire of the 12th of February.

2. Now that the Gold Coast is moving toward self-government, Her Majesty's Government have decided that the time is ripe for consideration of the future of Togoland under United Kingdom Trusteeship. British Togoland is a narrow landlocked strip of territory on the eastern border of the Gold Coast with a population of about 400,000; it is too small and poor to stand alone and has close economic and ethnic ties west and east with the neighbouring Gold Coast and French Togoland. British Togoland is administered under a Trusteeship Agreement which is a bilateral agreement between Her Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom and the United Nations. Any decision on the future of Togoland involving a change in the Agreement is therefore the joint concern of Her Majesty's Government and the United Nations.

3. Article 5 of the Trusteeship Agreement provides that Her Majesty's Government shall administer British Togoland as an integral part of their territory. When the Agreement was signed, the United Kingdom representative explained that this meant that British Togoland was to be administered as an integral part of the Gold Coast. The new Gold Coast Constitution formally preserves the responsibility of Her Majesty's Government as administering authority for Togoland. It leaves the Governor responsible in his discretion for Togoland and provides that any functions relating to Togoland exercised by Gold Coast Ministers shall be subject to the Governor's directions.

4. On the 28th of April last a declaration was made in Parliament that the Gold Coast would, at the appropriate time, be granted self-government, and the territory is now entering the last stage of constitutional development before attaining this status. When the Gold Coast becomes fully responsible it will no longer be constitutionally possible for the United Kingdom to administer the Trust Territory as an integral part of the Gold Coast. Nor, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, would it be possible for them at that stage to administer the Territory independently of the Gold Coast. After forty years of common administration, Gold Coast and Togoland affairs are so closely mingled that the separate administration of this inland territory would be against the interests and also the wishes of its peoples. Such an arrangement could not be effective, and would therefore destroy the hope of any further progress in realising the aims of the Trusteeship system.

5. There has been some agitation in recent sessions of the United Nations General Assembly for the unification of British and French Togoland in one separate state. This has been stimulated largely by the desire for tribal unity of some groups of the Ewe tribe living in the southeastern corner of the Gold Coast and in the southern parts of both Trust Territories. In the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, unification of the two Togolands would solve nothing but would, on the other hand, create fresh difficulties: it would cut off the Ewes in the Gold Coast from those in Togoland and the tribes of the northern section of British Togoland from their kinsmen in the northern territories of the Gold Coast.

6. Her Majesty's Government have therefore no alternative but to seek the termination of the present Trusteeship Agreement when the Gold Coast assumes full responsibility for its own affairs and, together with the General Assembly, must consider what other arrangements should be made for the future of Togoland. As this situation may well come about within a measurable period and as the United Nations will probably require about two years to reach a final conclusion on the future of British-administered Togoland, it is considered necessary to put the problem to the United Nations forthwith in order that they may start without delay to consider what that future should be. A Memorandum has accordingly been prepared on the subject for transmission to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, which indicates that in our view the basic objectives of the Trusteeship System will best be fulfilled by the integration of British-administered Togoland with the Gold Coast.

7. The Memorandum will be transmitted to the Secretary-General on the 21st of June under cover of a letter which will request him to include the following item in the Agenda for the Ninth Session of the General Assembly: "The future of the Trust Territory of Togoland under United Kingdom Trusteeship". A copy of the Memorandum will be sent simultaneously to the President of the Trusteeship Council for the consideration of the Council at its Fourteenth Session, which began on the 2nd of June.<sup>1</sup>

8. The Memorandum, a copy of which is attached,<sup>2</sup> has been discussed with the French Government as part of the normal procedure of Anglo-French consultation on colonial questions of mutual concern.

9. Her Majesty's Government would be grateful for the support of the United States Government in the General Assembly and the Trusteeship Council. They would also be glad if the whole matter could be treated as confidential until the 21st of June, in courtesy to the Secretary-General and the Trusteeship Council.

10. A communication in similar terms is being addressed by Her Majesty's Representatives at Brussels, Oslo, Copenhagen, Stockholm, and The Hague, to the Governments to which they are accredited.

OFFICIAL USE ONLY

WASHINGTON, June 28, 1954—7:34 p. m.

681. Department approves proposal resolution on following lines:

“Trusteeship Council,

Informed by the United Kingdom of the impending constitutional developments in the Gold Coast which affect the future of the Trust Territory of British Togoland;

Having regard to the terms of the trusteeship agreement, and to the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Trusteeship Council relating to this question;

Noting that it is the intention of the United Kingdom to place on the provisional agenda of the next General Assembly the question of ‘the future of Trust Territory of Togoland under United Kingdom Trusteeship’;

Considering that it is the duty of the Trusteeship Council to assist the General Assembly in its consideration of this question;

Recognizing also that the free and democratic general elections recently held in the Gold Coast and in British Togoland, based on the principle of universal suffrage, have given a significant indication of the wishes as well as the political maturity of the people of British Togoland;

Convinced, however, that before a final determination of the future of this territory can be made it will be necessary, as the Charter provides, and as the Administering Authority recommends, to establish the ‘freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned’;

Noting that the Administering Authority proposes that the United Nations itself should arrange to ascertain, by whatever means it considers desirable and appropriate, the wishes of the inhabitants of the Trust Territory as to the status to be enjoyed by them when the present arrangements for administering the territory become inoperable;

1. Expresses the Council’s gratification that the initial step in the process of self-determination has been taken through the general elections for the Legislative Assembly;

2. Commends the UK for the efforts it has made in cooperation with the peoples of the Gold Coast and British Togoland to chart a course leading to the establishment of arrangements which will accord with the wishes of the people concerned and the principles of the Charter;

3. Commends also Prime Minister Nkrumah and his government for the statesmanship and wisdom which they exercised in the administration of Togoland, and especially for the manner in which the recent elections were conducted;

4. Recommends that the forthcoming General Assembly place the proposal of the United Kingdom early on its agenda so that its general guidance in this important matter can be developed with due deliberation on all the issues involved;

5. Agrees if the General Assembly so desires, at its Fifteenth and Sixteenth Sessions, to formulate such methods and procedures for ascertaining the wishes of the inhabitants, and for terminating the trusteeship, so that the General Assembly at its Tenth Session can set in motion the approved machinery in the course of 1956."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> This resolution was passed by the Trusteeship Council with several amendments, one of which recommended that the General Assembly consider the item along with the unification problem. At the conclusion of the 14th Session, the Council submitted a special report to the Assembly, "The Togoland Unification Problem" (UN Doc. A/2669, July 23, 1954), which thoroughly described the implementation of Resolutions 750 A, B, and C (VIII) of the Eighth Session of the General Assembly, at the 13th and 14th Regular Sessions of the Trusteeship Council in 1954.

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] June 30, 1954.

Subject: Possible General Assembly Item on Communism—the New Colonialism.

We have been giving considerable thought to the suggestion in your memorandum of June 10, that we introduce the above subject as a new item for exploitation at the Ninth General Assembly.

The idea has been discussed with appropriate political and intelligence officers in the Department and they have all expressed a willingness to contribute in the preparation of suitable material. With respect to the parliamentary technique of introducing a new item, however, it is our feeling that it would be more effective to present the data as a suitable occasion presents itself. As you well know the word "colonialism" is anathema to many of our Asian and Latin friends, and it is thought that we might well have difficulty in gaining their support in this endeavor. They might use a formal item on this subject to attempt to embarrass the so-called "colonial" powers.

Our specialists indicate that they already have considerable material already prepared on this general subject and have asked that we give them more specific guidance as to the scope of the project. They have suggested that communism be attacked on three broad points: intervention, imperialism and exploitation. The attack might begin with a general revelation of international communism as a far-flung clandestine political organization operated from Moscow as was done by the Secretary in his March 8 speech at Caracas—with the addition of specific facts. Soviet imperialism then could be exposed, as countries have fallen under its control and have in fact become colonies. Soviet and possibly Chinese Communist exploitation could then be shown in some detail, pointing out how the economies of these unfortunate countries have been warped to fit the Communist requirements. A special case, with an eye to land reform in Southeast Asia and the Far East, might be made of exposing the failure of collectivisation in Russia. The attendant loss of freedom, of course, could be shown.

It is suggested that you may wish to have George Betts let Harold Moseley or Olcott Deming know if the above approach is satisfactory to you in order that the details may be ironed out at the working level and the preparation of the material begun.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup>The Working Group was formally reactivated on July 23, 1954, in order to coordinate the provision of certain interdepartmental support for U.S. activities at the Ninth Regular Session of the General Assembly, "particularly with respect to exploiting the vulnerabilities of the international Communist conspiracy . . ." This was in pursuance of President Eisenhower's policy to use the United Nations as "the only real world forum where we have the opportunity for international presentation and rebuttal . . ."  Mr. Mangano, Office of United Nations Political & Security Affairs.

The following is a summary of the significant points of view exchanged between the United States and the United Kingdom during the Colonial Policy Talks held on July 26-27, 1954.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup>The British Embassy submitted a proposed agenda to the Department on July 13, 1954, not printed (memorandum entitled "Tentative Suggestions from H. M. Colonial Office for Bilateral Talks on Colonial Questions in the United Nations to start Monday, July 26, 1954", attached to memorandum of conversation dated July 13, 1954, not printed, file 700.022/7-1354). There is printed here the final agenda, dated July 26, revised in accordance with U.S. suggestions for additions (indicated by italics). There also was prepared a Department of State position paper for each agenda item, none printed.

PART I

"1. Review of the attitude of 'blocs' in the United Nations on colonial questions, including consideration of diplomatic action on particular issues: possibilities of bringing about a larger bloc of moderate opinion.

"2. Review of the basic principles motivating our respective attitudes to colonial questions in the United Nations.

"3. Possibility of discussion in the Fourth Committee of the political affairs of particular territories:

- (c) Central Africa
- (d) Greenland
- (e) Surinam

Review of the attitude of "blocs" in the United Nations on colonial questions, including consideration of diplomatic action on particular issues; possibilities of bringing about a larger bloc of moderate opinion.

The UK informed us that it intended to make approaches to the Latin American countries, as it had in the past, for the purpose of gaining wider understanding and support among these countries for British colonial policy and to develop a greater "bloc" of moderate opinion in the Fourth Committee. In these approaches the United Kingdom stressed (1) that its colonial policy was not imperialistic but that it was dealing with problems (of economic and social development) which in many respects were not too different from those which the Latin Americans had to face domestically and; (2) the underlying concept of the Commonwealth, i.e. a fraternity of free peoples which makes a large contribution to world stability. We were also told that the United Kingdom planned to announce its recognition of the new Guatemalan Government that afternoon (July 26). The United Kingdom told us further that they had had some success in lobbying with members of delegations other than those who sit in the Fourth Committee and that during the forthcoming session of the General Assembly they planned to approach heads of delegations on specific items. They might also follow the procedure of making direct approaches to foreign offices of members on certain items. With respect to the Arab-Asian bloc little prospect was seen for moderating the views of this group. A UK representative (Gidden) stated his opinion that

"5. Attitude to be taken with regard to Report of Committee on South West Africa.

"6. Future composition of Committee on Information.

"7. Application of the two-thirds voting rule in Plenary Assembly to questions affecting non-self-governing territories.

"8. Participation of indigenous inhabitants in the work of the Trusteeship Council (Syrian resolution, Doc. T/L.458), and other United Nations bodies, including question of granting oral hearings.

"9. Development of intervention in colonial and domestic matters in Committees other than the Fourth Committee.

"10. Self-determination.

"11. Chairmanship of Fourth Committee.

"12. India's proposed move to have General Assembly seek ICJ opinion on the legality of United States nuclear tests in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

PART II

"13. Review of current and future developments in the major colonial territories—West, East and Central Africa; Malaya, the West Indies."

(USUN files, Dependent Areas: Conferences; the indicated position papers are in the same file.)

India's influence in the Fourth Committee might be on the wane because of Mrs. Menon's undignified behavior at the Eighth General Assembly and also because India's assumption of leadership was resented among the Arab-Asians. The United Kingdom, we were told, was consistently working through the Commonwealth "network" to "improve" India's attitude toward the colonial problem. In general, however, the United Kingdom had not found Commonwealth ties to be effective in the colonial field. With respect to the possibility that the Soviets might moderate their very doctrinaire approach to colonial questions and thereby develop influence among the non-administering members of the Fourth Committee, Mr. Gidden thought that their attitude at the Fourteenth Trusteeship Council discussion of the nuclear tests in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands indicated that they hadn't changed much. He pointed out that the Soviets could have caused trouble had they supported the Indian resolution which was not too different than their own. In response to our question whether it would be useful to point to the various manifestations of Soviet imperialism in the Fourth Committee the British replied that it was their policy not to focus attention on Soviet statements in the Fourth Committee and that they thought such references would be out of order in the Fourth Committee. They had, however, found that references to Soviet imperialism in other Committees could be made with good effect.

We told the United Kingdom that we had made a general approach to the foreign offices of Latin American countries on colonial problems prior to the last two sessions of the General Assembly but that we felt that the "free-wheeling tendencies" of some Delegations partially nullified the effect of advance approaches to Ministries of foreign affairs. We had not decided whether we would make a general approach this year.

Review of the basic principles motivating our respective attitudes to colonial questions in the United Nations

The United Kingdom told us that their basic policy with respect to United Nations activities in the colonial field had not changed. Although they opposed the existence of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories, they had cooperated with it to the extent of having an educational expert on their delegation to the last session and planned to bring an economic expert to the forthcoming session. They thought that there was a great danger that if the emotional attitude of the Fourth Committee got out of hand it could prejudice the development of sound, democratically oriented governments in the colonial territories. Their position that Article 2(7) precluded the discussion of internal political affairs in territories was firm and unchanged and would be pursued even at the risk that British colonial achievements would not be fully advertised and appreciated. Mr. Gidden expressed doubt that too many members of Committee Four had the interests of the indigenous inhabitants at heart and he believed that their real motive was to extend the supervision of the United Nations over non-self-governing territories. Members of the United Nations did not suffer from a lack of information he said, but from a doctrinaire approach to colonialism and he thought they would seize upon any opportunity to discuss the internal affairs of a territory not to praise but to criticize.

During a review of progress and plans for political development of the British colonies in the various areas of the world the United Kingdom was asked to divulge the circumstances under which it would cease transmitting information on a particular territory to the United Nations. We were informed that United Kingdom policy is not to cease reporting on a territory until the case for self-government is so clearly made that there can be no question about it. The United Kingdom did not expect this policy to weaken the case of other Administering Authorities who might cease transmitting information on territories before independence was achieved because this policy would not be admitted publicly. In fact, the legal position of the United Kingdom was the same as that of the Netherlands, i.e. that when a territory gains complete control of its internal affairs there is no longer a requirement to transmit information on it.

We reviewed the basic attitudes motivating our participation in United Nations colonial activities and stated that in our view the question of the timing of the various steps which must be taken in the transition from a dependent to a self-governing status is of vast importance. Such steps must be taken fast enough to meet the reasoned and legitimate demands of the dependent peoples, while at the same time not exposing them to Communist infiltration or to outright aggression. If progress were too slow the danger of Communist exploitation of the legitimate nationalist movements existed; if premature self-government were granted the danger of Communist subversion or aggression would be increased. We stated that in the United Nations we would continue to exercise our influence toward moderation and we hoped that other Administering Authorities would avoid taking too negative or too rigid positions with respect to proposals which may be made. We hoped that without sacrificing principle, a degree of flexibility and moderation in debate might help contribute to an improved atmosphere in the Fourth Committee and to an increased possibility of achieving moderate action. We also urged the United Kingdom to review its position of not disclosing more fully to the United Nations the significant achievements it was making in developing self-government in its colonies in the hope that an understanding of this development would make UN members less critical of British colonial policy.

Cyprus<sup>3</sup>

We were told by the UK that for security reasons Cyprus must remain British for the foreseeable future. In this connection the following points were made: (1) with the withdrawal from Egypt and the Suez Canal importance of Cyprus to United Kingdom increases; (2) United Kingdom cannot count indefinitely on a friendly Greek Government; (3) possibility exists that United Kingdom's enemy may not be Greece's enemy and; (4) there are limitations which would make the idea of leasing bases on the island impractical. Another factor which had to be considered was the reaction of the Turkish population of Cyprus and of Turkey to any change of sovereignty. The Turkish inhabitants of the island were quite content with the present situation.

We were told that in 1948 a liberal constitution had been offered to the Cypriots but that it was rejected by the Communist and Nationalist Parties who adopted Enosis. That constitution had not been withdrawn but had been left open for the people to accept. The British Government had now decided that the situation of no constitutional progress must be ended and that a modified constitution would be enacted. While this constitution would have some more advanced features than that of 1948, it would not be as liberal as the latter in that the unofficial members of the legislature will be in a minority. The modifications in the constitution were necessary because under the provisions of the 1948 constitution the Communists are strong enough to be able to take control of the government. It is the United Kingdom view that despite Enosis agitation Cyprus was a stable territory, but that external pressure might cause difficulties. Although there had been "sounding out" of sections of the population on the proposed constitution the people had not been consulted on its provisions. The United Kingdom emphasized that they would point to this constitution as a first step in constitutional development which must be given an opportunity to succeed.

The United Kingdom considers that the Cyprus questions would be the "touchstone" of their participation in the Ninth General Assembly. Their attitude on all other questions as well as their ability to be of assistance on such questions would depend on whether or not this item were inscribed. Because they viewed the discussion of political affairs in Cyprus by any Committee of the General Assembly as a violation of Article 2(7) of the Charter they would not condone the inscription of this item on the agenda. In their view discussion in the United Nations would only exacerbate the situation and would present the Soviets with an opportunity to take advantage of what would be made to appear as a NATO weakness. After being urged by us not to adopt such a drastic position as that of non-participation, the British stated that perhaps it was too early to talk of that in as much as they hoped to be able to prevent inscription. However, after stressing their legal arguments in the General Assembly's General Committee, the British intended to inform the members of the plenary that if the item were inscribed on the agenda Her Majesty's Government would have to consider seriously whether participation in the Committee that discussed it would be profitable, and that if the General Assembly adopted this precedent whereby any Member could require a discussion of the domestic political affairs of another, the United Kingdom would have to make an "agonizing reappraisal" of its policy of "going along" with United Nations activities in the colonial field.

The British were told that Greek initiative to put this item on the agenda would put us in a "tough spot", and that we had not as yet formulated a position on the question of inscription. The British expressed the hope that they would be informed of our position as soon as it was reached.

Role of UN Secretariat

It was generally agreed that lobbying by the United Nations Secretariat to influence General Assembly action through drafting statements, resolutions, etc. was undesirable. It was suggested that the installation of the new Assistant Secretary General might provide the opportunity for an informal approach on this question.

Future Composition of Committee on Information

Whereas the British would prefer that the balance be maintained between administering and non-administering members when Denmark withdrew from the Committee they had not taken a position of principle on the question of parity of membership. They did not think there was a chance that Belgium would participate in the work of the Committee and furthermore believed that the criticism leveled at Belgium for its position of non-participation was insignificant.

Application of the two-thirds voting rule in Plenary Assembly to questions affecting non-self-governing territories

The United Kingdom expressed the view that Madam Pandit's ruling at the Eighth General Assembly to consider all non-self-governing territories items as unimportant and thus subject to adoption by a simple majority vote was unfortunate. They believed, however, that a different President might improve the situation. They thought it best to rely on ad hoc determination of "important" questions to which the  $\frac{2}{3}$  majority would apply rather than seek to establish separate categories of such questions by resolution or otherwise.

Togoland

The United Kingdom expressed appreciation for the initiation taken by the United States Delegation at the Fourteenth Session of the Trusteeship Council with respect to the United Kingdom plan for the future of British Togoland. They hoped that the General Assembly would adopt a procedural resolution recommending their plan to the Trusteeship Council. The UK did not believe that their plan for the termination of the trusteeship agreement for British Togoland would create any difficulties for French Togoland vis-à-vis the United Nations.

We told the British that we would continue to assist them on this question.

India's proposed move to have General Assembly seek ICJ opinion on the legality of United States nuclear tests in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

With respect to India's avowed proposal to have the General Assembly request the International Court of Justice for an advisory opinion on the legality of our nuclear tests in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, we told the United Kingdom that while we could see no way of preventing General Assembly discussion of the item, we felt strongly that it was to our best interests not to have a request made of the ICJ. The United Kingdom Representative stated that they would continue to assist us on the Trust Territory issue, but they frankly admitted that it would be difficult for them to appear in very strong opposition to a member of the Commonwealth. In reply to our statement that we would consider as very serious any wavering of our allies' support on a matter that was so vital to the security of the free world, the United Kingdom representative stated that the United Kingdom would support our position on this item as he hoped we would support the United Kingdom on Cyprus.

Memorandum by the Deputy Director of the Office of Regional American Affairs (Jamison) to the Director of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs (Gerig)

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] July 29, 1954.

I appreciated the opportunity to attend some of the colonial policy talks with representatives of the UK this week and should like to pass on to you one or two thoughts which have occurred to me in connection with those discussions.

With reference to the consideration of Topic 1, in which the Latin American attitude figures in such an important way, I did not gain the impression that much progress was made with regard to that portion of the topic which was added by the United States, that is, "possibilities of bringing about a larger bloc of moderate opinion". I strongly doubt that the one or two things which the British said they were doing will have any important effect on the Latin Americans. If they insist, for example, upon using diplomatic approaches with the Latin Americans to point out the similarity of their problems in the dependent areas with problems in the Latin American countries, their approaches will, in my opinion, be counterproductive. Neither do I feel that the British attitude which seems to challenge the basic motivation on the representatives of most of the governments, certainly those of Latin America, in the Fourth Committee augurs well for the development of a "larger bloc of moderate opinion". I believe that the method likely to be most fruitful among the Latin Americans to attain that objective would be to find some way of getting those that now may fit in the moderate category to use their influence in moderating the view of others, rather than for the UK or even the United States to make direct approaches. It is for this reason that the attitude of Brazil is of very great importance, since Brazil is probably in a much better position to influence other Latin American countries than are we or the British.

Moreover, if moderate opinion is to be increased, it will have to be done on the basis of solid facts and figures which demonstrate not only the economic and social progress being made in dependent areas but also, and more important, whatever examples of progress towards self-government there may be. So long as the British (1) insist that they will not even talk in the United Nations about the important steps they may be taking to develop self-government and (2) maintain the attitude they now so obviously hold, that the motives of those even partly on the other side of the fence are suspect, there doesn't seem to me to be much chance of increasing the number of moderates on these questions, at least among our Latin American friends.

INTERNATIONAL COMMUNIST CONSPIRACY AND SOVIET COLONIALISM

PROBLEM

To make clear to the free nations of the world the fact of the international communist conspiracy and, with this end in view, to produce useful documentary materials demonstrating the ties of local communist and front organizations with Moscow, and the techniques employed by the communist movement in promoting the selfish interests of the USSR; to inform the nationals of the free nations of the world that communist-controlled parties, although they may have an indigenous base, are merely adjuncts of an international movement; to show that these parties are the instruments of a new colonialism, Soviet colonial expansion and control.

DISCUSSION

It is believed that documentary data is either readily available in the Government, or can be compiled, to demonstrate convincingly that the so-called national or country communist parties have a direct connection with the Kremlin and in some instances with Peiping. From the Kremlin they receive direction, training, and support. Many hundreds of the communist leaders in these countries have been trained in Moscow, some over a period of years. Many hundreds of others have gone to Moscow for consultation. Still additional hundreds have attended international front meetings sponsored by the Kremlin. Many local parties are receiving economic or propaganda assistance from Moscow.

It is also believed that documentary material can be obtained to show that, following the return of these local communist leaders from Moscow, certain actions are taken, certain directives are issued, which were patently given the local leaders during their stay in Moscow.

Of the wealth of material on the international communist conspiracy in the files of various government agencies and departments, much is of a devastating nature. It is not believed, however, that this has ever been pulled together in one handy, useable place and form. Nor is there any arrangement for a continuing assembling of this material.

Note is taken of the fact that the current intelligence survey conducted under the direction of the Director of the Central Intelligence

Agency has recommended that a major effort be devoted to developing intelligence on the international communist conspiracy.

Appropriate facts can also be used to show that the Soviet Union and Communist China represent the new colonialism and that the Soviet Union has imposed, and will impose, a colonial rule far worse than that of any Western nation in the past.

The U.S. Information Agency feels that if the required material were assembled and the Operations Coordinating Board gave its backing to a coordinated government effort on the subject of the international communist conspiracy, a victory could be gained in one battle of the psychological side of the cold war.

The U.S. Information Agency has of course made some effort along the line of the international communist conspiracy, but has had to deal too largely in generalities; there has not been a sufficiency of bricks and mortar. The Agency feels that the bricks and mortar are needed to make a convincing case of conspiracy.

A coordinated effort by responsible Departments and Agencies would have the following immediate purposes:

1. To establish the subservience of the local Communist Party to the internationalism.

2. To document in convincing detail the control exercised by the national Communist Party over front groups, other groups, and related activities.

3. To show that in carrying out the purposes of the Kremlin the local communist leaders become the instruments of imposing a new colonial rule far worse than any in the past.

4. To identify the principals in the national structure and if possible to establish the connections of the principals with both the local Communist Party and the international center for communism for as long a historical period as is possible.

5. To select particular communist campaigns and link them if possible with Moscow direction or at least with Moscow policies and action. If it is impossible to establish Moscow initiative it is possible to demonstrate that various local campaigns arise from communist-controlled international meetings and to pursue the extent to which the local counterparts of the international communist-controlled meetings fall into line.

COORDINATION

At an appropriate time it would be necessary to establish procedures for planning courses of action for using documentary material available or to be compiled. It would appear desirable in most cases to make the maximum use of grey and black channels for initial public release of such material in order to establish credibility and basis for exploitation. Indication of the types of exploitation which might be planned and coordinated are the stimulation of statements by high government officials; inclusion of material on this theme in major speeches to be made by government officials; use of appropriate material at international conferences, specialized professional conferences, seminars, colloquia, etc.; the release of materials through government outlets domestically to be picked up and used overseas; uses in the domestic press and publications field; and special ideas and techniques for making foreign governments and peoples more aware of the external threat of Soviet communism.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS

The following are a number of general observations pertinent to the implementation of this activity:

1. This is one of several approaches to combatting world communism, in support of U.S. positive national objectives.
2. Special situations in particular countries must be taken into account. This includes the use of appropriate terminology; consideration of the local status of the Communist Party and its relationship to the local government, the status of overall U.S. relations with that government, and propaganda lines of our allies. Information of this sort may be obtained from the U.S. missions overseas.
3. Caution must be exercised to ensure close coordination with grey and black activities.

RECOMMENDATIONS

It is therefore recommended that the OCB:

1. Endorse the development of a coordinated program of activity by the appropriate departments and agencies on the subject of the international communist conspiracy and Soviet colonialism.
2. Request the IAC to take appropriate action to fill the needs of the participating agencies for intelligence on this subject.
3. Direct the Executive Officer, in consultation with the Board Assistants, to determine appropriate organizational procedures for coordinating interagency action on this subject.

Subject: Soviet "Colonialism" at the Ninth General Assembly

We have given considerable thought to the question of the desirability of making Soviet colonialism the theme of the Ninth Assembly and would make the following comments for whatever use they may have:

1. The colonial problem will almost inevitably be the single most controversial issue at the forthcoming General Assembly. The Cyprus question, almost certainly to be inscribed on the agenda on the initiative of Greece, and the dispute over the sovereignty of Netherlands New Guinea (West Irian) which the Indonesian Government has threatened to bring up, are the two outstanding "colonial" questions which will pose difficulties for the United States at the Ninth General Assembly. The recent policy statement of France with respect to political reform in Tunisia and Morocco may succeed in keeping this perennial issue off the Assembly's agenda at this session although information reaching us and recent disorder in Morocco indicate that the Arab-Asian bloc may raise the question. Four allies from among the nations of the Western World are involved in these questions (U.K., France, Netherlands, Greece) and with the exception of Greece their position will be that the less discussion of colonialism that takes place in the United Nations, the better their position. We already have been told by the British that they will threaten to "walk out" of the Committee which discusses Cyprus, while the French have adopted this technique of non-participation at past sessions when Tunisia and Morocco have been discussed. We do not know yet the precise tactics the Dutch will adopt if the question of New Guinea (West Irian) is discussed. Thus, as in the past, the United States will be hard put to adopt a positive attitude on the substance of these colonial disputes. Were we to advocate a full-scale discussion of Soviet "colonialism" our sincerity would be challenged unless we advocated a strong anti-colonial position on these other items, a situation which would jeopardize our relationship with our closest allies, two of whom are on opposite sides in the colonial debate.

2. In addition to those of our Western Allies directly concerned with the items mentioned above, others who administer non-self-governing territories would be very hesitant to support a full-blown discussion of colonialism in any form. Under their influence most of the other nations of Western Europe and the white Commonwealth countries would probably prefer to abstain from such a discussion. In the past the colonial powers have countered Soviet charges with effective use of examples of Soviet imperialism. They could be counted upon to continue this tactic of counter-attack but it is highly unlikely that they will agree to any full scale offensive against the Soviet Union on colonialism when they realize that they are so vulnerable in this respect and have suffered so much at the hands of anti-colonialists in the United Nations.

3. Although the Arab-Asian Members would probably welcome a General Assembly which had colonialism as its theme, or more accurately anti-colonialism, their sights would be set not on the Soviet brand but on the Western European brand. They would undoubtedly insist that all forms of colonialism be discussed and not just the Soviet brand. To the extent that individual members of this group have been lulled by the apparent relaxation of East-West tension following the truce in Indo China, it would be difficult to enlist their support for any anti-Soviet attack which they might construe as exacerbating East-West relations. They are as ever, however, prepared to continue their attack on Western European colonialism.

4. While the Latin American nations can probably be counted upon to go along with us on any anti-Soviet item, they too would have difficulty in divorcing any discussion of Soviet colonialism from the brand practiced by our European allies. The anti-colonial temper of the recent Caracas Conference is only the most recent example of the attitude of the Latin American countries toward colonialism.

5. If it is decided, therefore, to pursue the objective of making the theme of the Ninth General Assembly Soviet "colonialism", we will probably have to be prepared to go counter to some very important interests of our Western allies. It is not likely that a majority of United Nations Members will care to make a distinction between Soviet and Western European colonialism. In this respect it should be borne in mind that an issue of direct and vital concern to the United States and indeed to the security of the Free World and one which has colonial overtones may well be discussed at the Ninth General Assembly. The Indian Representative on the Trusteeship Council has indicated that his government will ask the General Assembly to recommend a moratorium on nuclear tests in the United States administered Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands pending an ICJ opinion on the legality of conducting such tests in a trust territory. It is very unlikely that we will be prepared to acquiesce in that proposal, and we will be in need of all the support we can get from UN members.

6. Our experience in international meetings since the Geneva settlement on Indo-China is too limited to indicate the nature and quality of support that we could muster for any anti-Soviet items. There are indications, however, that there exist varying degrees of reluctance among UN members to stir up what they hope are only lukewarm ashes of cold war controversy. It would be a mistake for the U.S. to take the initiative on any anti-Soviet items until soundings were taken of the attitudes of other Members. The reaction of American public opinion would be adverse to the UN were we to find ourselves in a more or less isolated position on any such item, especially one discussed on our initiative.

It is recommended therefore, that we employ a technique which has been effectively used in the past and which could be utilized with success at the Ninth G.A. This would involve reference to Soviet imperialism in statements wherever appropriate. In the Political Committee's discussion of colonial items it would be a simple matter to point to Soviet practices to demonstrate the hypocrisy of their pose as the champion of dependent peoples. In any Third Committee discussion of self-determination similar statements would be appropriate. Soviet economic imperialism could be an appropriate topic of statements in the Second Committee. Our Western European allies, as well as the Latin American countries, could be persuaded to join us in the discreet utilization of this technique.

1. I think we all understand the desirability of making clear to the nations of the free world the nature of the international communist conspiracy, the betrayal of national "liberation" movements, and especially the use of Soviet Parties as agents of the Soviet Government and instruments of Soviet imperialism, aggression and control.

2. I am sure that we all agree, too, that any case which we may wish to make concerning this problem should be built on the solid foundation of the documentary evidence. Indeed, I am persuaded that if we depart from such a foundation—whatever our purpose or forum—and rest our case on spurious data, we will soon find that we have not only failed to win our objectives, but will be in a dangerous position.

3. Furthermore, it occurs to me that the methods and techniques in the use of such material are extremely important and may well determine its ultimate influence. Leaving aside uses of this material by USIA and in psychological warfare, I believe that, in the United Nations, any artificially stimulated or forced use would detract from its validity and effectiveness, on the ground that people might feel that they had heard enough of U.S. propaganda on such matters and desired to lessen East-West tensions. If used as a natural, legitimate statement, whether in response to Soviet diatribes or otherwise, and well done, it might prove very effective.

4. I would certainly substitute for the term "new colonialism", as applied to the Soviet Union, the term "new imperialism", or some variant thereof. It is a much more accurate and much more descriptive term, it seems to me, to describe the manifold policies of the Soviet

Union in this respect. It is, I think, also more meaningful in countries outside the United States, where the term "new colonialism", as applied to the Soviet Union, would hardly be understood, for the simple reason that the only "colonialism" known to people of Asia and Africa, for instance, is that of the Western Powers. In this connection we should make the very effective and quite accurate point that, whereas the Western Powers, partly because of their traditions as well as of objective conditions, have been in a process of de-imperialism during the last 50 years or so—and notably during the past 30 years. The Soviet Union today is the only great power in the world actively engaged in a policy of aggressive, dynamic imperialism.

Imperialism would be much better understood, and I think it can be made to stick, and could well cover the following:

(a) The general expansionist and aggressive policies of the Soviet Union.

(b) Aggressive international Communism as an instrument of Soviet policy.

(c) Soviet policies in Eastern Europe which have, it seems to me, not only reduced the states of Eastern Europe to the status of satellites of the Soviet Union, but to the de facto status of actual dependencies and protectorates through the use of methods and techniques which are all too familiar to us.

(d) The development of the Soviet Colonial Empire in Central Asia.

(e) Soviet policies with regard to the Far East, including Communist China, the so-called Mongolian Peoples Republic, Korea and South East Asia.*

---

*I would suggest in connection with the above that extremely useful material can be found in the following:

"(1) Nicolas Sulber, 'Soviet Undertakings and Soviet Mixed Companies in Eastern Europe', XIV Journal of Central European Affairs 2 (July 1954) 154-173, which is an excellent account of what I would term the Soviet reversion to something like 17th and 18th century mercantilism; (2) Alexander W. Rudzinski, 'The Myth of Satellite Sovereignty', Mid European Studies Center, Mimeographed Series, 26, April 26, 1954, which contains very useful material as to the destruction of the independence of states in Eastern Europe; (3) Sir Olaf Caroe, Soviet Empire (1953), which is a brief but excellent study of what the Soviet Union has done in Soviet Central Asia." [Footnote in the source text.]

According to an OCB memorandum of Mar. 25, 1955, the Working Group on the United Nations, after its reactivation in July 1954, started 26 study-papers under the general heading of "The Soviet Model of Colonial-Imperialism". However the colonial issue as such was not one of the topics listed in the OCB memorandum of Mar. 1955, in which material gathered through the group's efforts was effectively used in U.S. statements made during the Ninth General Assembly (which were forced labor, "atoms for peace", World War II prisoners of war, racial discrimination, narcotics traffic, freedom of information, and refugee program).

It is on record that the following remarks were made on Oct. 25, 1954 to Committee 4 by C. D. Jackson, Representative on the U.S. Delegation to the Ninth Regular Session of the General Assembly:

"Illustrative of what I am trying to say in measured language occurred in somewhat less measured language last Friday. In speeches we heard here on Friday some rather strong language was used regarding the administering authorities, including a reference to the European nations as 'hypocritical' in their attitude toward non-self-governing territories.

"If such a statement can be made in this Committee in reference to nations which have demonstrated actual, visible, tangible forward movement toward decolonialization, may I redress some of the balance by suggesting that some notice, no matter how cursory, be taken of the new colonialism which is rising in the Soviet orbit.

"We ought to consider whether there isn't more than one kettle we wish to call black, or to put it another way, which particular one merits our indignation." (USUN Press Release 1989, Oct. 25, 1954)

The summary record of Jackson's statement to the Fourth Committee on Oct. 25, 1954, is in United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Ninth Session, Fourth Committee, pp. 101 and 102; the Jackson statement occurred in the context of the Fourth Committee discussion of information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73(e) of the Charter (Reports of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and of the Committee on Information).

ANALYSIS OF PROBLEMS EXPECTED TO ARISE IN THE FOURTH COMMITTEE OF THE NINTH GENERAL ASSEMBLY<sup>1</sup>

In Committee Four specific problems are often less important than the underlying issues they reflect. Thus, while an agenda item may appear to refer to a procedural matter, the real issue may be a question of principle such as the extent of the powers of the General Assembly to deal with non-self-governing territories. Moreover, the importance of the items on the agenda of Committee Four may lie more in their cumulative effect than in the intrinsic significance of any one of them.

In the light of the above general comments ODA has selected five items from the agenda of Committee Four, both as characteristic of the problems expected to arise in that Committee and as among those likely to present the greatest difficulty for the United States. Similar difficulties may also arise concerning such perennial problems as the granting of oral hearings to petitioners from trust territories, the possibility of referring the question of administrative unions to the International Court, the question of the association of non-self-governing territories in the work of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories and the problem of whether or not to consider certain non-self-governing territories resolutions as "important" questions within the meaning of Article 18.

1. INDIAN PROPOSAL

Illustrative of the volatile problems which will be considered by the Fourth Committee and in which we have particular interest is a possible move by India to refer to the International Court of Justice the question of the legality of our holding nuclear tests in the Trust Territory. This would strike at the basis of our atomic weapons testing program.<sup>2</sup>

Should the Indians raise the question of the legality of our tests in the Trust Territory, we will not oppose discussion; we will, however, make every effort to defeat any proposal referring the question to the Court. We believe that under the Charter and under our Trusteeship Agreement, approved by the Security Council, we have a clear right to conduct these tests in the Trust Territory.

2. PARTICIPATION OF TRUST TERRITORY INHABITANTS IN WORK OF TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

This question represents one of the efforts of the majority of non-administering Members to extend the functions of the United Nations—in this case by increasing the direct contacts between the Trusteeship Council and the inhabitants of trust territories. Whether the proposal involves seating a representative of the inhabitants at the Council table or various alternative means of direct contact, the result would be a tendency on the part of the non-administering Members to equate the views of individual inhabitants with those of the responsible governments (i.e., the administering authorities) and possibly to weaken the prestige of the administering authorities in the territories. At the Thirteenth Session of the Council, a Syrian proposal, which would have increased direct contacts through visiting missions, petitions, and oral hearings was defeated by a 6 to 6 vote, all the administering authorities voting against. The Syrian representative then indicated he would introduce his proposal in the Assembly.<sup>3</sup>

Thus, we will probably be faced in the Fourth Committee with the Syrian proposal, which in its present form is unacceptable to all the administering authorities. The position of the United States is particularly difficult because we have always held that, while we were opposed to any form of separate representation for the inhabitants on the Council, we also believed that ways could be found within existing Charter arrangements for increasing the participation of trust territory inhabitants in the work of the Trusteeship Council. The United States will have to decide whether to put forward a moderate proposal of its own, or to attempt to obtain modifications in the Syrian proposal so as to render it acceptable, or to join the other administering authorities who will doubtless prefer to oppose it outright. The Soviet bloc will probably not play an active role, but will presumably vote for the Syrian proposal, as they did in the Council. Inasmuch as trusteeship matters require a two-thirds vote in plenary sessions of the General Assembly, the United States and other moderate members might succeed in obtaining the elimination of the objectionable features of the Syrian proposal in the final voting, if despite our efforts it is adopted by the Fourth Committee. We would thus hope to secure a moderate Assembly resolution which would encourage increased participation of the inhabitants of trust territories in the work of the Trusteeship Council without derogating from the responsibilities of the administering powers or unduly complicating their task.

<sup>3</sup> Unpublished documentation regarding the events described here is in file 350. A useful position paper on the subject was prepared for the U.S. Delegation to the Ninth Regular Session of the General Assembly, not printed (IO files, Doc. SD/A/C.4/128, Sept. 11, 1954).

3. TOGOLAND PROBLEMS

There will be two items on the Assembly's agenda relating to Togoland. The Togoland unification problem is inscribed by virtue of Assembly Resolution 750 (VIII) which, inter alia, requests the Trusteeship Council to report on certain steps leading to the unification of the trust territories of British and French Togoland. There will also be an item on the future status of British Togoland. This item, whose inscription has been requested by the United Kingdom and by the Trusteeship Council, relates to a document submitted by the British indicating that they wish to terminate their trusteeship over British Togoland, that they consider that this territory can achieve the objectives of the Trusteeship System through integration with an independent Gold Coast, and asking the General Assembly to consider means of determining the wishes of the inhabitants.

These two items reflect two conflicting tendencies that exist both within the two Togolands and in the United Nations. The first is that the two Togolands should be unified; the second that British Togoland should be integrated with the Gold Coast. While there is increasing evidence that "integration" is favored by a majority in British Togoland and is gaining support in the United Nations, a majority in the Assembly has for some time favored "unification". It will not be easy to get the Assembly to reverse its direction, particularly when some Members will regard it as a disguised form of annexation of a trust territory by a British dependency. Moreover, a number of Members have regarded the unification issue as a form of pressure on the less politically advanced administration of French Togoland and they will be loathe to give up this weapon.

Since the British have recognized the right of the General Assembly to satisfy itself as to the wishes of the inhabitants of British Togoland, including the possibility of a UN-supervised plebiscite, the question of the future of British Togoland may not in itself arouse heated controversy in the Fourth Committee this year. However, there may well be sharp controversy over efforts to deal with French Togoland on a similar basis and in particular to introduce UN machinery for determining the wishes of the inhabitants. The French would presumably oppose such action.

Thus the United States problem will probably be to try to assure that the Assembly devises machinery for determining the wishes of the inhabitants of these two territories in a manner flexible enough so that the French can be induced to accept it. As in most Fourth Committee questions, the most influential proponents of extreme or doctrinaire proposals will probably be some of the Arab-Asian states rather than the Soviet bloc. There are some indications, however, that India, often a leader of the former group, may take a moderate position, thus leaving hope that the Fourth Committee may be induced to avoid doctrinaire extremes on this question.<sup>4</sup>

United States Position

"1. The Delegation should, in consultation with the United Kingdom Delegation, support the British proposal that the General Assembly ask the Trusteeship Council to determine the best method of ascertaining the wishes of the inhabitants of British Togoland as to the future status of their territory. The Delegation should also favor according the Council a high degree of flexibility in working out such procedures.

"2. If it is proposed that the Council also formulate procedures for ascertaining the wishes of the French Togoland, the Delegation should support such a proposal. It should, however, seek to assure that the Council is accorded a high degree of flexibility in working out the procedures, and, in this connection, should consult with the French Delegation.

"3. The Delegation should take the position that until the views of the inhabitants of British Togoland (and possibly French Togoland) as to the future status of their territory have been ascertained, the Assembly should take no further steps leading towards the unification of the two territories.

"4. There would be a reasonable case for postponing oral hearings on Togoland questions to the Fifteenth Session of the Trusteeship Council which will presumably deal in more detail with the next steps to be taken in the two Togolands; nevertheless, if it appears that a majority support granting hearings to representatives of legitimate Togoland groups in the forthcoming session of the Fourth Committee, the U.S. Delegation should vote for the granting of such hearings."

In the "Comment" section that followed the paper referred to the June 1954 elections, as follows:

"Some preliminary indication of the wishes of the inhabitants of British Togoland are to be found in the results of the elections held in the Gold Coast and Togoland in June 1954. In Togoland the candidates of the Convention Peoples Party, and others favoring integration of British Togoland with the Gold Coast, won a majority of the seats from the Trust Territory. However, in the south where the Ewes are the dominant group the results were not clear, and the electorate appeared to be fairly evenly divided between candidates favoring integration with the Gold Coast and those favoring unification with French Togoland. Moreover, it should be kept in mind that both the integrationists and the unificationists in British Togoland seek the attachment of French Togoland in some manner to the Gold Coast. Unificationist leaders say that they would favor federating a unified Togoland with the Gold Coast; while the slogan of the C.P.P. is 'unification through integration'."

4. SOUTH WEST AFRICA<sup>5</sup>

The Fourth Committee will be called upon to consider a report on conditions in South West Africa prepared by the Committee on South West Africa (Brazil, Norway, Pakistan, Syria, Thailand, Uruguay) pursuant to General Assembly Resolution 749A(VIII). Since the Union of South Africa does not recognize any right on the part of the United Nations to examine conditions in that territory, to say nothing of making recommendations on it, discussion on this report is likely to increase the tension between it and the United Nations. The Union might refuse to participate in Fourth Committee debates on South West Africa and will probably not recognize the legality of any Assembly recommendations on the administration of the territory. Such actions might extinguish any spark of hope, which the United States has tried to help keep alive, for negotiated solution to the problem of South West Africa.

The United States continues to base its position on the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice and cannot, of course, condone the Union's refusal to accept that opinion. We will therefore make clear our adherence to the principles in the Court's opinion while at the same time trying to tone down UN condemnation of South Africa or intervention in its affairs so as to leave open an avenue of eventual cooperation. The United States is, however, likely to play a minor role in the Fourth Committee debates on this matter.

5. CESSATION OF THE TRANSMISSION TO THE UN OF INFORMATION ON NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

As at the Eighth Session, the question of the cessation of the transmission of information on certain territories under Article 73(e) of the Charter will undoubtedly be a difficult item. This question, as much as any, brings strong feelings into play on the colonial problem and results in a rather firm line being drawn between administering authorities and non-administering Members. The chief issue connected with the problem of cessation concerns the part the General Assembly plays in the decision to cease reporting. Whereas the major colonial powers maintain that they alone can make the decision to cease reporting on a territory and that the Assembly can only take note of that decision, the great majority of non-administering Members insist that a territory must be reported on until the General Assembly decides otherwise. Thus, at the Eighth General Assembly a resolution calling upon the Netherlands to resume transmitting information on Surinam and the Netherlands Antilles and a resolution which approved the United States decision to cease transmitting information on Puerto Rico, both explicitly stated that the final decision with respect to reporting under Article 73(e) rested with the General Assembly.<sup>6</sup>

The paper commented further on this situation vis-à-vis the political situation in French Togoland:

"Any consideration of the future of British Togoland also brings up the question of the future of its French counterpart. Early in 1954 the French announced some steps to increase the participation of inhabitants in the government of the Trust Territory and to expand the electorate. However, even with the implementation of these reforms political advancement in French Togoland would be considerably behind that in the Gold Coast and British Togoland. Moreover, there are indications from petitions and other sources that the French have been using strong-arm methods to suppress unificationist and nationalist movements. The French position on a possible UN plebiscite or other form of consultation with the inhabitants of French Togoland on their Territory's future status is not known, though it is assumed that they will oppose any form of consultations which did not adequately safeguard their interests."

At the Ninth Session the Assembly will again consider the item of the cessation of the transmission of information on the two Netherlands territories on the basis of information on the Round Table Discussions between the Netherlands and the territories to be furnished the Assembly by the Netherlands Government. It may be expected that the Latin American Members will view this item in the light of the anti-colonial action taken at the Tenth Inter-American Conference at Caracas. The other cessation item on the agenda will concern the communication of Denmark relative to its decision to cease reporting on Greenland.<sup>7</sup> As a result of recent constitutional changes Greenland has become an integral part of Denmark with rights equal to other parts of the realm. This is the first case of the complete integration of a former colony with the metropolitan country which the Assembly will actively consider. It is not possible to predict whether the majority of the Assembly will consider that this constitutes a full measure of self-government. The debates during the Puerto Rican item indicate that some non-administering members will recognize a full measure of self-government only in the form of independence.

While the United States is not directly involved in either of these items and is sympathetic to the position of the Netherlands and Denmark it is quite likely that we will be drawn into active participation in the discussion on them. Unlike the other administering authorities we recognize a wide power of the Assembly to discuss, express its views and pass recommendations on this subject. At the same time we recognize that the administering authority alone has the right to determine the constitutional position and status of territories under its sovereignty and that it alone can make the decision to cease reporting on a particular territory.

A subsidiary problem concerns the membership of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories.<sup>8</sup> As a result of its decision to cease reporting on Greenland, Denmark will no longer be a Member transmitting information under Article 73(e) of the Charter and therefore will not continue on that Committee as an administering Member. The Committee will thus have only seven administering Members. Of these seven, Belgium did not participate in the 1953 session of the Committee and there has been no indication that it intends to participate at the forthcoming session. At the Ninth Session the terms of two non-administering Members, Ecuador and Indonesia, will expire. If the principle of balanced membership of the Committee is to be maintained, a point on which the administering authorities will undoubtedly insist, only one non-administering Member will be elected to replace these two. This may occasion some differences of opinion as to the geographical distribution of seats on this Committee. If the Assembly fails to take action on the Greenland item or if it requests Denmark to resume reporting on the territory, it conceivably could be urged by some Members that Denmark remain a Member of the Committee.

REPORT OF THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL: SECTION ON ATTAINMENT BY TRUST TERRITORIES OF THE OBJECTIVE OF SELF-GOVERNMENT OR INDEPENDENCE

THE PROBLEM

The Trusteeship Council's report contains a section (Ch. V, Sec. 9) entitled "Attainment by the Trust Territories of the objective of self-government or independence."<sup>1</sup> This section was prepared pursuant to

---

<sup>1</sup> United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Ninth Session, Report of the Trusteeship Council, covering the period from 22 July 1953 to 16 July 1954, Supplement No. 4 (A/2680), p. 34. See also ibid., Part III, "Attainment by the Trust Territories of Self-Government or Independence", pp. 279-297. This is the text of a draft report submitted by the Secretary-General of the United Nations on the subject and considered and adopted with amendments by the Trusteeship Council at its 14th Session.

General Assembly Resolution 752 (VIII) ; however, as it does not contain all the elements called for in that resolution, it may not be satisfactory to certain Members. Since the Trusteeship Council does not report to the Assembly on the U.S.-administered Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, there is no reference to that territory in this section of the report. The United States would nevertheless have to take a position on proposals made under this item. Moreover, proposals might be formulated in a way which would affect U.S. responsibilities, and in any event they would affect the responsibilities of other administering powers which would presumably seek our support for the positions taken by them.

UNITED STATES POSITION

1. The Delegation should not play a prominent role in the discussion of the item.

2. If appropriate, the Delegation should indicate that the United States abstained on Resolution 752 (VIII), as well as on Resolution 558 (VI) on which it was based, largely because it had reservations as to the practicality of setting time-limits for the attainment of self-government or independence by Trust Territories.

3. With regard to the failure of the Council to implement the final phrase of Paragraph 3 of Resolution 752 (VIII), i.e., "stating in each case its conclusions and recommendations in the light of Resolution 558 (VI) and the present resolution," the Delegation may point out that this matter was discussed at the Fourteenth Session of the Trusteeship Council and a set of conclusions and recommendations introduced by India was withdrawn in order to allow time for the Representatives of the Administering Powers to consult their Governments. Consequently, the Assembly should await the next report of the Trusteeship Council before determining whether further Assembly action is necessary.

4. In general, the Delegation should abstain on further proposals on this subject at this session. If, however, a resolution is introduced which, in the Delegation's view, requires a clear cut positive or negative stand, it should consult the Department.

COMMENT

Despite the fact that the operations of the United Nations Trusteeship System are as a whole directed towards the "attainment by Trust Territories of the objective of self-government or independence," the majority of the Assembly has felt that certain supplementary measures are required. Among these measures have been those set forth in Resolutions 558 (VI) and 752 (VIII).

The first of these resolutions seeks more information from the Administering Authorities in their annual reports on both the manner and the time in which each Territory is to achieve these objectives. In its final paragraph it asks each Administering Authority "to include . . . information in respect of . . . the period of time in which it is expected that the Trust Territory shall attain the objective of self-government or independence."

The United States has in practice considered that General Assembly resolutions relating to Trust Territories generally are applicable to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, although, of course, the United States has the right set forth in Article 13 of the Trusteeship Agreement "to determine the extent of their applicability to any areas which may from time to time be specified by it as closed for security reasons." Thus, the United States provided information on Resolution 558 (VI) in the 1951-52 annual report to the General Assembly on the Trust Territory. After referring to various steps being taken to achieve the Trusteeship objectives, the report states that "no specific period of time can be forecast for the attainment of the objective of self-government or independence for the Territory as a whole."

Resolution 752 (VIII) resulted from the view of a majority of the Assembly that the Administering Authorities had not satisfactorily responded to Resolution 558 (VI). It asked the Trusteeship Council to include in its reports to the General Assembly (thereby excluding the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands) a separate section dealing with the implementation of Resolutions 558 (VI) and 752 (VIII). It specified certain types of information which this section should contain and asked the Council to state its conclusions and recommendations in the light of the two resolutions.<sup>2</sup>

Section 9 of Chapter V of the Trusteeship Council's current report does contain a factual account of the measures taken by the other Administering Authorities pursuant to these two resolutions. It does not, however, contain any "conclusions and recommendations." A set of conclusions and recommendations was introduced by India in the Trusteeship Council near the close of the Fourteenth Session; however, it was withdrawn when several of the Administering Authorities stated that they would have to refer them to their governments, and that they would not be able to obtain instructions on the proposed con-

"(a) Consultation with the inhabitants of each Trust Territory in regard to the measures taken or contemplated towards self-government;

"(b) the development in each Trust Territory of representative, executive and legislative organs and the extension of their powers;

"(c) the development in each Trust Territory of universal adult suffrage and direct elections;

"(d) the training and appointment of indigenous persons in each Trust Territory for positions of responsibility in the administration; and

"(e) the development of adequate public revenue; and stating in each case its conclusions and recommendations in the light of Resolution 558 (VI) and the present resolution."

clusions and recommendations before the close of the Session. The Representative of India, while recognizing the need of the Administering Authorities to have time to consider his proposals, indicated that he would reintroduce the matter early in the next session of the Council.

Since Resolution 752 (VIII) and the section of the Trusteeship Council's report prepared pursuant to it do not relate to United States Trusteeship obligations, there is no reason for us to participate actively in the debate on this item. Moreover, we have reservations concerning the practicality of a generalized application of the time-table concept. Consequently our best course is to follow the precedent of abstaining on this item, unless, of course, a new type of proposal requires reconsideration of our position.

Subject: Togoland

During a conversation with Caston on October 19, I inquired as to whether or not the British had had any conclusive talks with the French with respect to the issue of Togoland. Caston said that they had been talking to the French but nothing very definite had emerged. He added that the French would certainly go along with the British on the latter's stand on British Togoland. He said that secretly the British hoped the French would say, when the subject of French Togoland was introduced into the debate, that the French Togolese were "not ready" for any plebescite. The British hope to turn British Togoland over to Nkrumah and let him dicker with the French.<sup>1</sup>

When I made an offer to assist the British, as we did in the Trusteeship Council, Caston said that while they certainly appreciated our past assistance and offers for future aid they hoped to have the Indians take the lead. When I asked about the Indians' willingness, Caston said the Indians had more or less been put on the hook on this one and had been "persuaded" to take the lead. The British believe that if the Indians

<sup>2</sup> The United States nevertheless was closely involved with the Togoland item in the Fourth Committee, as evidenced by the following extract from a memorandum of Nov. 27, 1954, by Robert R. Robbins, delegation adviser. (The memorandum was written in connection with a proposal that a short statement be made in the Fourth Committee on the matter by the U.S. Delegate.)

"The British are well aware that we will support them as fully as possible on this item. The Indian draft resolution L/370, which is acceptable to the British, was circulated on November 22nd. The British strategy is to let the Indians 'carry the ball' on this item, hoping that we will assist among the Latin American Delegations. The UK opening statement will be factual and restrained. The Indian Delegation will introduce its resolution after the oral petitioners have been heard. It is suggested that our statement be made following the Indian statement, but perhaps only after some of the other non-administering members who might be critical have spoken." Subject: Application of Two-Thirds Majority Rule to Categories of Questions in the Colonial Field.

The United Kingdom Delegation (Mr. Gidden) referred today to the US-UK Colonial Talks held last summer in the Department and recalled that at that time the possible application of the two-thirds rule to certain matters arising in the colonial field was mentioned. Mr. Gidden said that since that time the Colonial Office had studied the problem and that its condensed thinking was set forth in the attached list of six categories of questions on which it would be desirable to have decisions taken by a two-thirds majority.

Mr. Gidden went on to say that the Colonial Office had requested that the list be referred to the Department for its comments. The Colonial Office has expressed the hope that if the U.S. and U.K. could reach some general agreement on what they would regard as "important questions" requiring a two-thirds majority, it might be possible for our two governments to follow a common line when this matter arises. Mr. Gidden did not believe that it would be possible in the course of the Ninth General Assembly for us to reach any final conclusions on this matter. He believed, however, that occasion could arise during this assembly in which our respective delegations might wish to indicate that this subject had already received some serious study by them.

I told Mr. Gidden that the results of the Colonial Office's study of this matter would be of much interest to the Department and that I would be happy to refer the list of categories to the Department for its comments.

CATEGORIES OF QUESTIONS IN THE COLONIAL FIELD ON WHICH IT WOULD BE DESIRABLE TO HAVE DECISIONS TAKEN BY A TWO-THIRDS

1. Decisions involving the political affairs of Non-Self-Governing Territories, either general or in relation to particular territories.
2. Decisions to admit petitions, written or oral, relating to the affairs of Non-Self-Governing Territories. (Note: in general such decisions would fall to be taken in the first instance in an Assembly Committee, where Article 18(2) is inapplicable, but we should urge reference of such questions to the Plenary Assembly for decision).
3. Decisions involving reference to the International Court of Justice of a Colonial (or Trusteeship) question.
4. Decisions relating to the cessation of Article 73(e) transmissions.
5. Decisions involving recommendations to administering powers to pursue some specific policy or to accept some specific obligation in relation to the United Nations or Colonial questions.
6. Decisions involving an interpretation of the scope of Chapter XI of the Charter e.g. the extent to which Article 73(b) empowers the United Nations to examine the political affairs of Non-Self-Governing Territories.

Subject: Mr. Sylvanus Olympio's Views on the Future of British and French Togolands.

This morning I had a long talk in my office with Mr. Olympio. After very careful and persistent questioning, I ascertained a number of his views about the future of the two Togolands.

While it was hard to get him away from philosophizing about the Togoland unification issue, I will record the answers which he gave to me in brief form.

He emphasized the appearance since last Spring of a new issue in British Togoland which he describes as "association" as opposed to "integration." If a United Nations supervised plebiscite is to be held in Togoland in 1956, he says that the people of the southern part of the territory, if given the opportunity, will vote in favor of "association" of their territory as a federated part of the Gold Coast. On the other hand, he says if the issue is merely that of "integration", by which their territory is absorbed into a unitary Gold Coast, the vote will be in the negative. He also says that the association idea is beginning to spread not only throughout the Ashanti area of the Gold Coast but also into the Moslem part of British Togoland itself.

He expressed some disappointment that the plebiscite should come jointly with the achievement of independence. He would much prefer that Gold Coast independence should come prior to the holding of any plebiscite in the trust territory.

With respect to French Togoland, he believes that the holding of a plebiscite in the British territory will create a strong political movement on the French side for the holding of a similar plebiscite except that the plebiscite question, he thinks, would concern itself with the question of terminating the trusteeship responsibilities of France. If the French Government should persist over a period of time in standing in the way of such a plebiscite, he volunteered that the Communist movement would begin to seriously establish itself in French Togoland. Even today, he observed, the Communists are distributing a profusion of pamphlets throughout the territory.

I asked him what would be the situation if the French blocked the plebiscite on the grounds that the territory was incapable of being economically self-sufficient. He intimated that the issue then would have to be whether the Togolandians desired to promote their future as an ultimate member of the French Union or as a federated portion of the Gold Coast within the structure of the British Commonwealth.

Subject: General Assembly: Fourth Committee Matters

Participants: Baron Silvercruys, Belgian Ambassador
Mr. Charles Muller, Second Secretary, Embassy of Belgium
Mr. David McK. Key, IO
Mr. Benjamin Gerig, ODA

At his request, the Belgian Ambassador came to the Department to express the views of the Belgian Government in regard to several matters which have arisen in the Fourth Committee of the General Assembly. In particular, he wished to express the surprise and regret of the Belgian Delegation on the divergent views which have developed on the Syrian resolution entitled "Participation of the indigenous inhabitants of the Trust Territories in the work of the Trusteeship Council".

Baron Silvercruys said that in the past our respective delegations had maintained close contact on questions arising in the Fourth Committee. When at the last meeting of the Trusteeship Council the Syrian proposal was brought forward, the United States, Belgian and four other delegations found it wholly unacceptable and the resolution failed by virtue of a tie vote. They had naturally assumed that when the Syrians brought in the same resolution in the Fourth Committee, we would continue to be opposed to it. They were the more surprised, therefore, when our delegation said that with certain minor amendments the United States would support it.

The Ambassador pointed out that they felt in line with past practice that it was desirable to both our Governments to maintain such close contact as we had been doing, for example, on such questions as Chinese representation, atomic energy, as well as on colonial and trusteeship matters. The Syrian resolution was one which was wholly unacceptable to the Belgian Delegation which would be unable to apply it. He hoped that this did not mean that there was any change in our past practice of consulting, even though we might not always agree on various questions.

Mr. Key assured the Ambassador that there was no change in our policy and practice of consulting with our friends on all matters of common interest. He was surprised if this was not done in this particular case and was certain that there was no intentional lack of contact if, indeed, the rush of developments in the Fourth Committee was such that it was difficult to maintain close contact at all times.

Mr. Key went on to explain that our delegation was certain that the Syrian resolution would pass in any case and that our tactic was to offer a number of amendments which we thought would take the sting out of the resolution, or at least remove its most objectionable features. Mr. Gerig said that the resolution was actually voted on day before yesterday and was passed by 38 to 8, with 3 abstentions. It was clear, therefore, that the resolution would pass, and the amendments which our delegation had proposed were considered by them not as minor but as important.

Mr. Key said we would look into the matter of continuing contact with the Belgian and other delegations, but he again assured the Ambassador that there was no change in our practice in that regard. The Ambassador said that he was very glad to know this and would so report to his Government.

Subject: Future of French Togoland.

I had lunch today with Messrs. Grunitzky, Brenner and Sousseni, who are probably the three top pro-French African leaders in French Togoland. Mr. Grunitzky is a member of the French Parliament.

In the course of our conversation, the following information I believe represents their joint thinking with respect to the future of French Togoland.

In the first place, they are all delighted that the British Government is ending its trusteeship responsibilities in British Togoland. If a United Nations supervised plebiscite is held in British Togoland next year and the people vote for integration with the Gold Coast, the French Togoland will immediately press the French Government for much more rapid progress towards self-government.

According to Mr. Brenner, if the French authorities did not restrain the Togoland, he believed Togoland could be ready for self-government in five years. None of them wanted to join the Gold Coast or fall under the political control of Prime Minister Nkrumah and his Convention People's Party. On the other hand, if the French were too slow in promoting the people toward self-government, they said that the issue of liberty would enter into the picture and that in that case there would be strong agitation to leave France and join the Gold Coast.

They said that the whole political face of French Togoland had changed for the better since the election of Prime Minister Mendès-France. They also said that the political lift which the forthcoming independence of the Gold Coast would give to all of West Africa would not be confined to trust territories but would include Dahomey, the Ivory Coast and all other French areas. They asked what was the difference between a trust territory and a colony, inasmuch as, to use their expression—"black men were involved in both places". They expressed satisfaction that Governor Pignon was about to become the Chief Political Officer in the French Colonial Office. They seemed to believe, as I do, that he is a very understanding and forward-looking man.

After talking with these three very moderate African leaders, I conclude that the impact of Gold Coast independence will have a very profound effect almost immediately throughout West Africa and that it may easily bring about some basic changes in the structure of the French Union, probably bringing it nearer to the theory of the British Commonwealth.

FOURTH COMMITTEE OF THE NINTH GENERAL ASSEMBLY

One of the basic objectives of the United States during the Ninth General Assembly, as in past Assemblies, has been to foster an attitude of moderation among the anti-colonial powers and of greater conciliation among the administering members and, thus, to promote greater cooperation and mutual understanding between the two sometimes widely divergent groups thereby minimizing the tensions which weaken the free world. Our aim has always been one of furthering the progress of the non-self-governing peoples toward independence or self-government, but in an orderly fashion, avoiding too-rapid progress built on flimsy foundations. There is a strong continuing tendency among the non-administering members of the UN to endeavor to extend the supervisory role of the United Nations in the dependent territories in order to accelerate that progress, and our role has evolved, over the past few years, into one of seeking to moderate the attitudes of the more extreme among the administering and non-administering groups, keeping in mind the interests of the non-self-governing peoples. Our success in that role during the last Assembly was mixed.

On the one hand, the benefits of such moderate action were illustrated in the passage of two particular resolutions: (1) an approval of the cessation of the transmission by Denmark of information on Greenland which has now become a part of the Danish realm; and (2) a resolution on Togoland which recognizes that the people of British Togoland are now in a position to express their own wishes as to their future. On the other hand, we were unable to avert the passage of several resolutions by the Fourth Committee which we regarded as overextending the supervisory role of the United Nations in the non-self-governing territories. In one instance, despite our objections, the Assembly, passed a resolution which would have the effect of giving the General Assembly the power to decide on the advisability of sending a visiting mission to a territory about to change its status, in order to check, for all practical purposes, the accuracy of statements made by the administering powers. This resolution conflicts in principle with our belief that the determination of the constitutional status of one of our territories is not subject to review by the UN. In conflict also with our principles was a paragraph inserted in the resolution on Greenland which reiterated the theory that the General Assembly is competent to determine whether a non-self-governing people have or have not achieved a full measure of self-government.

III. DEPENDENT AREA PROBLEMS BEFORE THE UNITED NATIONS OF SPECIAL INTEREST TO THE UNITED STATES

A. THE UNITED STATES DECISION TO CEASE TRANSMISSION OF INFORMATION UNDER ARTICLE 73(e) OF THE CHARTER IN RESPECT OF PUERTO RICO

The Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations (McFall) to the Director, Bureau of the Budget (Lawton)<sup>1</sup>

[WASHINGTON,] July 3, 1952.

MY DEAR MR. LAWTON: The Department of State has received your request for its views and comments with respect to House Joint Resolution 430 approving the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico which was adopted by the people of Puerto Rico on March 3, 1952. The Department recommends that the President approve this Joint Resolution.

The Department has supported the successive steps which have been taken by the Congress and by the President, with the objective of giving to the people of Puerto Rico the opportunity to organize a constitutional Government in accordance with their own freely expressed wishes. The Department took the following position before the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs on May 17, 1950 with respect to S. 3336, "a Bill to provide for the organization of constitutional government by the people of Puerto Rico", which was enacted into law on July 3, 1950 :

"The Department of State believes it to be of the greatest importance that the Puerto Rican people be authorized to frame their own constitution as provided for in S. 3336, in order that formal consent of the Puerto Ricans may be given to their present relationship to the United States. It is believed that, with their own constitution, the high degree of internal self-government which the Puerto Ricans today enjoy in their voluntary association with the United States, will assume for them an added significance. Moreover, such action by our Government would be in keeping with the democratic principles of the United States and with our obligations under Chapter XI of the Charter of the United Nations to take due account of the political aspirations of the people in our territories and to develop self-government in them. The Department of State feels that the enactment of S. 3336 into law would have great value as a symbol of the basic freedom enjoyed by Puerto Rico, within the larger framework of the United States of America."

On April 22, 1952 the President transmitted to the Congress for its approval the Constitution which had been drafted by a constitutional convention elected by Puerto Ricans and which had been approved by the people of Puerto Rico by a vote of 374,649 to 82,923. The President declared that the Constitution conformed fully with the applicable provisions of the act of July 3, 1950 and of the Constitution of the United States, that it contained a bill of rights and that it provided for a republican form of Government.

The Department informed the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs by letter dated May 13, 1952 that it recommended the adoption of S. J. Res. 151 approving the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico which was adopted by the people of Puerto Rico on March 3, 1952. House Joint Resolution 430 is identical with Senate Joint Resolution 151 with the addition of one exception and three provisos all of which it is understood are acceptable to the Insular Government of Puerto Rico.

Other governments and peoples, particularly of countries having the same cultural and linguistic background as those of Puerto Rico, have taken a keen interest in the relations between the United States and Puerto Rico. The United States has given, in the enactments which have provided an ever-increasing self-government in Puerto Rico, evidence of the sincerity of its devotion to the principles of self-government for dependent peoples, government by the consent of the governed, democracy and freedom. The Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico gives Puerto Rico a status chosen and carefully worked out by Puerto Ricans themselves in accordance with their own conception of the needs of Puerto Rico and its relationship with the United States.

The achievement of self-government by Puerto Rico will be a matter of great interest to Members of the United Nations in their discussions of the political progress of non-self-governing territories. It will be a convincing answer to attacks by those who have charged the United States Government with imperialism and colonial exploitation, and it should be warmly welcomed by Members who have a sincere interest in the political advancement of dependent peoples. The new relationship which would be established by the approval of House Joint Resolution 430 would give Puerto Rico the full measure of self-government contemplated in Chapter XI of the Charter of the United Nations. The people of Puerto Rico themselves have stated, in a resolution adopted by their constitutional convention on February 4, 1952, that this compact entered into by mutual consent would mark Puerto Rico's attainment of "complete self-government".

Sincerely yours,

JACK K. MCFALL

The Acting Secretary of the Interior (Northrop) to the Secretary of State

WASHINGTON, October 9, 1952.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I am pleased to report to you that with the establishment of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico on July 25, 1952, the people of Puerto Rico have attained a full measure of self-government, consistent with Puerto Rico's status as a territory of the United States.

The establishment of the Commonwealth marks the culmination of a steady progression in the exercise of self-government initiated with the first organic act for Puerto Rico enacted by the Congress in 1900. That act provided for a governor appointed by the President of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, a legislative assembly in which the lower house was elected but the upper house was composed of the heads of executive departments of the government and five other persons, all appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate; and a supreme court, the members of which were also appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, justices of the lower courts being appointed by the governor with advice and consent of the upper house of the legislature. The act provided for Puerto Rico's representation in the Congress by a popularly elected Resident Commissioner.

In 1917, the scope of self-government was increased with enactment by the Congress of the Jones Act. Under it, the people of Puerto Rico elected both houses of their legislature, and the popularly elected upper house advised and consented to the governor's appointment of justices of the lower courts. The President retained authority to appoint the governor, the justices of the supreme court, the heads of the departments of justice and education, and the auditor, but all other heads of executive departments were appointed by the governor. The people of Puerto Rico became citizens of the United States. The protection of a bill of rights patterned on the bill of rights of the United States Constitution was extended to Puerto Rico. Provision for representation in the Congress remained. The legislature could repass a bill over the governor's veto, but if the governor did not then approve it, it did not become law unless it received the approval of the President.

In 1946, the President appointed as governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate, a Puerto Rican who had formerly been Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico. This was the first time that a Puerto Rican had been appointed governor.

In 1947, the Congress authorized the people of Puerto Rico to elect their governor, beginning with the general election in 1948, and provided a line of succession in the event of a vacancy in the position of governor or of the governor's temporary absence or disability. The elected governor was authorized to appoint all the members of his cabinet, the heads of the executive departments, including the attorney general and commissioner of education. No change was made in the provisions respecting appointment of the auditor and justices of the supreme court.

In 1948, the candidates for Governor and Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico, who were elected by very substantial majorities, ran on a platform calling for the preservation of the relationship between Puerto Rico and the United States, and for the adoption by Puerto Rico, within that framework, of a constitution of its own drafting. In that election, there were also candidates who advocated statehood for Puerto Rico and independence for Puerto Rico; they were roundly defeated. In accordance with the expressed wishes of the people of Puerto Rico, and in recognition of their political advancement sufficient to enable them to reach an informed judgment as to a desirable political destiny, there was introduced in the Congress a bill to provide for the organization of a constitutional government by the people of Puerto Rico. It was enacted on July 3, 1950 (64 Stat. 319).

That law, unique in the history of United States' territorial administration, expressly recognized the principle of government by consent, and, declaring that it was adopted in the nature of a compact, required that it be submitted to the voters of Puerto Rico in an island-wide referendum for acceptance or rejection. If the act were approved by a majority of participating voters, the Legislature of Puerto Rico was authorized to call a constitutional convention to draft a constitution, which would become effective upon its adoption by the people and approval by the President and the Congress. Those provisions of the Organic Act which related to matters of local government would thereupon be repealed, while the remaining provisions of the Organic Act, relating to such matters as Puerto Rico's economic relationship to the United States, the continued application of Federal laws, and continued representation in Congress, would thenceforth be known as the Puerto Rican Federal Relations Act. The Congress made only two stipulations with respect to the content of the constitution to be adopted: that it provide a republican form of government and that it include a bill of rights.

Four political parties participated in the campaign preceding the referendum; two endorsed the act of Congress, one opposed it, and one was divided in its position. On June 4, 1951, 506,185 persons, 65.08 per cent of the 777,675 qualified voters of Puerto Rico, participated in the referendum, and 76.5 per cent of those voting approved the act. On August 27, 1951, ninety-two delegates were elected to a constitutional convention, representing the Popular Democratic, the Statehood and the Socialist parties. The convention met in September 1951 and concluded its painstaking work in February 1952. An official English and an official Spanish version of the constitution were adopted, and the text was published in the four daily newspapers of Puerto Rico in both languages. Copies of the document were distributed throughout the Island.

On March 3, 1952, the constitution was submitted for adoption or rejection. Of the 783,610 qualified voters, 457,562 participated in the referendum. Of these, 374,649 voted to adopt the constitution; only 82,923 disapproved it. On April 22, 1952, the President transmitted the constitution to the Congress, with his approval, and the Congress approved it by Public Law 447, 82d Cong. (66 Stat. 327), signed by the President on July 3, 1952. On July 25, 1952, after final ratification by the constitutional convention to accept the constitution as approved by the Congress, the Governor of Puerto Rico proclaimed the establishment of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico under the new constitution.

The constitution of the Commonwealth is markedly similar to that of a State. It establishes a tri-partite form of government, with a popularly elected governor, a popularly elected bi-cameral legislature and a judicial branch. The heads of all executive departments will be appointed by the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Puerto Rican Senate; appointment of the Secretary of State will also require the consent of the House of Representatives. The President will no longer appoint any member of the executive branch, and the United States Senate will not participate in the appointment of any official of the government of the Commonwealth.

The Legislative Assembly, which will be elected by free, universal and secret suffrage of the people of Puerto Rico, has full legislative authority in respect to local matters. The Commonwealth has the power to impose and collect taxes, and to contract debts. Acts of the Legislative Assembly will become law upon approval of the Governor, or, in the event that an act is vetoed by the Governor, upon its re-enactment by two-thirds of the total number of members of which each house is composed. The President may no longer prevent a bill repassed over the Governor's veto from becoming law by disapproving it. The protection of a bill of rights is extended to persons in Puerto Rico. All public officials must take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and the constitution and laws of the Commonwealth. Amendments to the constitution may be proposed by the Legislative Assembly, and will be voted on at a referendum, becoming effective if ratified by a majority of the electors voting thereon. In approving the constitution, the Congress placed no limitations on the substance of future amendments, except to provide that they shall be consistent with the act approving the constitution, with the applicable provisions of the Federal Constitution, with the Puerto Rican Federal Relations Act, and with the act of Congress authorizing the drafting and adoption of a constitution.

The judiciary of the Commonwealth is independent under the constitution. The justices of the Supreme Court will no longer be appointed by the President but will be appointed by the Governor with the advice and consent of the Senate of Puerto Rico. Justices will hold office during good behavior and may be removed, after impeachment, for causes specified in the constitution. The number of justices (four associate justices and a chief justice) may be increased only by law at the request of the court itself. No judge may make a direct or indirect financial contribution to any political organization or party, or hold any elective office therein, or participate in any political campaign or be a candidate for elective office unless he has resigned his judicial office at least six months prior to his nomination. Although judgments of the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico may be appealed to the United States Court of Appeals, decisions of the United States Supreme Court have established that the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico is the final authority on the meaning of a Puerto Rican law and that its decision interpreting such a law may not be reversed unless the interpretation is "inescapably wrong" and the decision "patently erroneous"; it is not sufficient to justify reversal that the Federal Court merely disagree with the Puerto Rican Supreme Court's interpretation. There will continue to be a Federal District Court in Puerto Rico, but its jurisdiction does not differ from the jurisdiction of Federal District Courts functioning within the boundaries of States.

Under the constitution, there is full and effective participation of the population of Puerto Rico in the government of Puerto Rico. Article II, section 1, provides that no discrimination shall be made on account of race, color, sex, birth, social origin, or condition, or political or religious ideas and requires the laws to embody these principles. Puerto Rico is divided by the constitution into senatorial and representative districts for purposes of electing members of the Legislative Assembly, and provision is also made for election of senators and representatives elected at large. By a special procedure established by Article III of the constitution majority parties are precluded from filling a number of seats in the Legislative Assembly substantially disproportionate to their voting strength and minority parties are assured of representation in proportion to their island-wide voting strength. Elections will be held every four years.

Article II, section 2, requires that the laws shall guarantee the expression of the will of the people by means of equal, direct and secret universal suffrage and shall protect the citizen against any coercion in the exercise of the electoral franchise. Article VI, section 4, provides that every person over twenty-one years of age shall be entitled to vote if he fulfills the other conditions determined by law and prohibits depriving a person of the right to vote because he does not know how to read or write or does not own property.

The people of Puerto Rico continue to be citizens of the United States and the Constitution of the United States continues to be applicable to Puerto Rico to the same extent as prior to the establishment of the Commonwealth. Under the Puerto Rican Federal Relations Act, there will still be free trade with the United States, only United States coins and currency will be legal tender in Puerto Rico and the statutory laws of the United States not locally inapplicable will have the same force and effect in Puerto Rico as in the United States, in the absence of a provision to the contrary. Puerto Rico will continue to be represented in the Congress by a Resident Commissioner whose powers are neither diminished nor increased by the establishment of the Commonwealth. The people of Puerto Rico will continue to be exempt from Federal income taxes on the income they derive from sources within Puerto Rico, and into their treasury, for appropriation and expenditure as their legislature may decide, will be deposited the proceeds of United States internal revenue taxes collected on articles produced in Puerto Rico and the proceeds of United States tariffs and customs collected on foreign merchandise entering Puerto Rico.

Puerto Rico has not become an independent nation; neither has it become a State of the Union. It remains a territory of the United States. The action of the Congress in authorizing and approving the constitution of the Commonwealth was taken under the constitutional power of the Congress to make needful rules and regulations respecting the territory of the United States. Puerto Rico's foreign relations, like those of the other territories and, it may be added, like those of the States, will continue to be conducted by the United States.

However, with respect to internal government and administration, Puerto Rico occupies a unique position among the territories. By requesting the Congress to authorize the drafting and adoption of a constitution, Puerto Rico has voluntarily entered into the relationship with the United States which it has chosen to describe as a "commonwealth" relationship. The term "commonwealth" was adopted by Puerto Rico as the official English designation of the body politic created by the constitution (the official Spanish title is "estado libre asociado"), to define the status of that body as "a state which is free of superior authority in the management of its own local affairs but which is linked to the United States of America and hence is a part of its political system in a manner compatible with its Federal structure", and which "does not have an independent and separate existence" (Resolution No. 22 of the Constitutional Convention). By authorizing the drafting of the constitution and by approving the constitution, Congress has agreed that Puerto Rico shall have, under that constitution, freedom from control or interference by the Congress in respect of internal government and administration, subject only to compliance with applicable provisions of the Federal constitution, the Puerto Rican Federal Relations Act and the acts of Congress authorizing and approving the constitution. Those laws which directed or authorized direct interference with matters of local government by the Federal Government have been repealed. This cannot be said of any other territory of the United States. With respect to no other territory has the Congress adopted an act in the nature of a compact authorizing the organization of a constitutional government by the people of the territory. In all other organized territories, the basic structure of the government is established by an act of the Congress, not by an act of the people of the territory. In all other organized territories, the chief executive is appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, not popularly elected by the people of the territory. In all other organized territories, the executive officer immediately subordinate to the governor is appointed by the President, either alone or with the advice and consent of the Senate, but not by the governor of the territory. In all other organized territories, judges of the highest courts exercising local jurisdiction are appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, not by the governor of the territory. The people of Puerto Rico will participate effectively in their government through universal, secret and equal suffrage, in free and periodic elections in which differing political parties offer candidates, and which are assured freedom from undemocratic practices by the constitution itself. In these elections, there will be no interference by the United States. Puerto Rico has complete autonomy in its economic, cultural, and social affairs.

The final declaration of the Constitutional Convention of Puerto Rico (Resolution No. 23), expresses the views of the people of Puerto Rico as to the status they have now achieved :

“When this Constitution takes effect, the people of Puerto Rico shall thereupon be organized into a commonwealth established within the terms of the compact entered into by mutual consent, which is the basis of our union with the United States of America.

Thus we attain the goal of complete self-government, the last vestiges of colonialism having disappeared in the principle of Compact, and we enter into an era of new developments in democratic civilization.”

I request that you take whatever steps appear necessary, in connection with the international commitments of the United States, to give due recognition to the establishment of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and to the full measure of self-government which has been achieved by the people of Puerto Rico.<sup>1</sup>

Sincerely yours,

VERNON D. NORTHPROP

The Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Interior (Chapman)

[WASHINGTON,] November 17, 1952.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The receipt is acknowledged of Mr. Vernon D. Northrop's letter dated October 9, 1952, containing a full account of the steps leading to the establishment of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico on July 25, 1952.

As the Department of the Interior is aware, the details set forth in Mr. Northrop's letter are being carefully studied by officers of this Department to determine how the new status of Puerto Rico may affect the international commitments of this Government. Of particular concern is the question whether, as a consequence of the new status of Puerto Rico, the United States should continue to transmit information about Puerto Rico to the United Nations under Article 73(e) of the Charter of the United Nations.

Resolution 222 of the Third General Assembly requested each administering Government to inform the United Nations of any change in the constitutional position and status of any territory as a result of which the Government considers it unnecessary to transmit information under Article 73(e) of the Charter. Under the provisions of that resolution, the United States is requested to communicate to the Secretary General, within a maximum period of six months, appropriate information including the constitution, legislative act providing for the government of the territory, and the constitutional relationship of the territory to the Metropolitan Government. Such communication might go forward at about the same time we transmit the annual report on Puerto Rico for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1952, which is due on January 1, 1953.

In connection with their consideration of this matter, our officials will continue to consult with appropriate officers of the Department of the Interior whose cooperation to date in providing the necessary data on the domestic aspects of the problem, which are essential for a consideration of the international aspects, has been very much appreciated. The Department of State expects shortly to be in a position, to advise the Department of Interior of its views on the question of cessation of information on Puerto Rico and to reach an agreed Government position on this issue.

Sincerely yours,

For the Secretary of State:

CESSATION OF THE TRANSMISSION OF INFORMATION UNDER ARTICLE 73(e) OF THE CHARTER IN REGARD TO PUERTO RICO

THE PROBLEM

The problem is to determine the position that the United States Government should take on the question of the future transmission of information on Puerto Rico under Article 73(e) of the Charter.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. The United States should take appropriate action as recommended below based on the conclusion that the establishment of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico under the Constitution which entered into force on July 25, 1952 renders it inappropriate for the United States to continue to transmit information to the United Nations on Puerto Rico under Article 73(e) of the United Nations Charter.

<sup>1</sup> Presumably drafted in the Office of Dependent Area Affairs, Bureau of UN Affairs. Apparently the cleared draft was incorporated into the documents system of two different committees, the Colonial Policy Working Group and the Interdepartmental Non-Self-Governing Territories Committee (CPD-13a, Jan. 7, 1953 and NSGT D-1/53, Jan. 8, 1953, respectively). Regarding the Colonial Policy Working Group, see pp. 1075 ff. The interdepartmental committee had had an indifferent existence since 1946 and met only rarely; for most of this time it was an adjunct of the Interdepartmental International Social Policy Committee.

2. In accordance with existing obligations, information on Puerto Rico for the administrative year ending June 30, 1952 should be transmitted in the usual manner early in 1953. Appropriate information relating to the period July 1–July 25, 1952 should be included as practicable, so that this action will complete the regular transmissions of information on Puerto Rico which have taken place annually since 1946.

3. Pursuant to the terms of General Assembly Resolution 222(III) (Text in Annex A),<sup>2</sup> the United States should inform the United Nations that as a result of the change in the constitutional position and status of Puerto Rico it is considered unnecessary to transmit further information under Article 73(e) of the Charter and should communicate to the Secretary General of the United Nations as soon as practicable appropriate information and documentation as requested by that Resolution. The draft text of a communication to the Secretary General for this purpose is attached (Annex B).<sup>2</sup> A List of Documents suggested for submission with the communication is also attached (Annex C).<sup>2</sup>

4. Subject to final approval, the attached draft Analysis of the New Constitutional Status of Puerto Rico with respect to the Report of the United Nations General Assembly's Ad Hoc Committee on Factors should be made available to officers of the United States Government only for use as background in discussions which will ensue on the new status of Puerto Rico (Annex B).<sup>2</sup>

5. In view of the importance of the views of the Government of Puerto Rico in relation to United Nations consideration of the question, the procedures to be followed should include:

(a) an appropriate initiative by the Government of Puerto Rico requesting the United States Government to cease transmitting information to the United Nations on Puerto Rico; and

(b) participation by a representative of the Government of Puerto Rico on the United States Delegations to United Nations meetings where the question is considered, with opportunities for him to describe from the viewpoint of the Government and people of Puerto Rico the attainment by Puerto Rico of a "full measure of self-government" and to answer questions which may be raised.

<sup>2</sup> None of these annexes is printed. All of the substantive information generated within the U.S. Government on this subject was based on the body of information that appears in the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Interior, Oct. 9, 1952, p. 1429.

<sup>3</sup> Luis Muñoz Marín, Governor of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, sent such a letter to the President under date of Jan. 17, 1953, not printed (copy attached to Department of State instruction 192, to the Mission at the United Nations, Mar. 11, 1953, not printed (350/3-1153)).

Consultation and Clearance Required

In taking the necessary steps vis-à-vis the United Nations to cease reporting under Chapter XI of the Charter, the Government of Puerto Rico should be consulted fully in order that all authorities concerned may be in agreement on the procedures to be followed. Consultation should also be carried out as practicable with Congressional leaders and members of the Congressional Committees concerned.

Memorandum by the Adviser, United Nations Planning Staff (Chase)<sup>1</sup>

[WASHINGTON,] January 9, 1953.

Subject: Self-Government for Puerto Rico

I have already communicated to you my apprehensions about growing Congressional pressures which might be brought to coalesce in a concerted attack upon the position of the US in the UN, or at least upon the character and composition of the UN, once the honeymoon period has ended with the new administration, if not earlier.

This morning I attended a meeting of the Colonial Working Group which discussed the communication to be made on January 25 by the US to the Secretary General about the attainment of self-government by Puerto Rico six months earlier, and the consequent cessation of transmission of information by the US under Article 73*e*. Among the various matters discussed was the question of probable objections by UN members to the "inadequacy" of the new status of Puerto Rico. It appears that UND feels that there might be considerable and extensive objections from the LA and A-A blocs. This morning the representative of L at the meeting confirmed that L had not been able yet to decide that it could certify to the attainment of self-government by Puerto Rico, and had thus not yet concurred in the papers being formulated for delivery on January 25.

There seemed to be substantial agreement in the group that the Netherlands may have made a tactical error in submitting its notification of intent to cease supplying information on Surinam by supplying with its notification too copious documentation.<sup>2</sup> There was strong sentiment expressed around the table that it was highly desirable, perhaps indispensable, that the new Governor of Puerto Rico be placed among the US Delegation which would handle the Puerto Rican question at the UN; everyone seemed to believe that his excellence in debate would be of the greatest usefulness in fending the expected attacks on the US action. There was some sentiment, however, that his presence might lead either some of the LAs, A-As, or the Soviet bloc to try to bring about a call for the simultaneous presence at UN deliberations of representatives of the independence movement in Puerto Rico to give testimony opposing that of the US "stooge", the Governor of Puerto Rico. Finally, the question was raised of what the US should do were the LAs and A-As to question the action of Congress, a speculation engendered by their very careful scrutiny and questioning of the Netherlands documentation about Surinam. Some participants in the meeting considered it possible that the LAs and A-As might even go so far as to propose a resolution calling upon the US Congress to reconsider its action on Puerto Rico.

I feel that we cannot afford to overlook the probability that should Congressional action establishing self-government for Puerto Rico encounter an extensive and spirited opposition of substantial portions of the LA and A-A blocks, the reaction on the Hill will be very inimical to the position of the US in the UN. Most likely it would feed the fires of hostility already being breathed forth by such Republican Senatorial leaders as Bridges and Bricker; it is not impossible that the latter would be induced thereby to add to the measure that he has just introduced into the Senate another to the effect that no UN action could have any effect upon an act of Congress. If it becomes established that we shall indeed encounter opposition of the character foreseen, I recommend that we lose no time in holding advance discussions with appropriate Congressional groups where we would attempt to blunt the unfavorable effects of feared action in the U.N.

Mr. Gerig suggested that I draw up this memorandum and submit it to Mr. Sandifer. I therefore attach an extra copy for transmission by you to Mr. Sandifer in your discretion.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Notation at top of document, written by Sanders to the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations (Sandifer): "I am checking with Ben Gerig on where we go from here." Gerig was Director of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs.

In fact there was a meeting on Jan. 12 of the Non-Self-Governing Territories Committee, to consider aspects of the Puerto Rican question vis-à-vis the United Nations. The Committee was of the opinion that a minimal submission of documentation should be made, because of the problems raised for the Netherlands with regard to Surinam. This documentation should include a letter from the Governor of Puerto Rico requesting cessation of information to the United Nations, a declaratory memorandum from the United States regarding cessation, and a text of the constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Hickerson) to the Secretary of State

[WASHINGTON,] January 15, 1953.

Subject: Cessation of Submission of Information on Puerto Rico under Article 73(e) of the United Nations Charter

It is proposed that the United States Government should cease to submit information to the United Nations in accordance with Article 73(e) of the Charter on Puerto Rico in view of its achievement of a full measure of self-government as a result of the establishment on July 25, 1952, of the new Constitution creating the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. Department and interdepartmental clearance has been obtained for the proposed course of action set forth in the recommendations of the attached position paper (Tab A).<sup>1</sup> The proposed action is strongly urged by the Government of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and supported by the Department of the Interior (Tab B).<sup>2</sup>

Discussion

This course of action, based upon the conclusion that it is no longer necessary or appropriate for the United States to continue to submit information on Puerto Rico, suggests that: (a) Information for the administrative year ending June 30, 1952, should be transmitted in the usual manner early in 1953; (b) The Secretary General be advised not later than January 25, 1953 (in accordance with General Assembly Resolution 222(III) which calls for the communication of such information within a maximum of six months) that the United States has decided to cease transmission of information on Puerto Rico; (c) The full concurrence and collaboration of the Government of Puerto Rico should be obtained in taking this action; and (d) Consultation should also be carried out as practicable with Congressional leaders and members of the Congressional Committees concerned. Mr. Brown (H) has been asked to undertake conversations with certain Congressional leaders to inform them of the proposed action.

Because of the merits of the Puerto Rican case and because of the strong views held by the Puerto Ricans that due recognition should be accorded their new constitutional status and that they will no longer accept arrangements which imply dependent status, there is believed to be no alternative course of action. Nonetheless, it should be noted, that in taking this action, difficulties may arise in the United Nations when this matter is considered in the General Assembly and its Committees. These difficulties, the extent of which cannot be as-essed in advance, may include any of the following: (a) Claims that the United States alone is not competent to decide whether Puerto Rico has achieved a full measure of self-government; (b) Attempts to examine in detail and to judge Federal and territorial legislation; (c) Assessment of the Puerto Rican case in terms of the factors developed by the General Assembly to determine when a territory is no longer non-self-governing;<sup>3</sup> (d) Proposal to refer the matter to the International Court of Justice; and (e) The usual anti-colonial propaganda by Iron Curtain countries. It is proposed to meet these eventualities by advance diplomatic preparations, a well-documented oral presentation with an able Puerto Rican serving on the United States Delegation and, in the final analysis, by a firm reiteration of United States policy that this Government alone is competent to decide when territories under its administration have achieved a full measure of self-government.

Recommendations

It is recommended that you approve the proposal to inform the Secretary General of the United Nations that the United States Government has decided to cease transmission of information on Puerto Rico and, therefore, that you sign the attached instruction to the United States Representative to the United Nations (Tab C).<sup>4</sup>

Concurrences

Department clearance was obtained in the Colonial Policy Working Group by representatives of UNA; UND; UNP; UNA/P; ARA; EUR; FE; NEA; TCA; L; L/UNA; H; and E: ED.

The interdepartmental Committee on Non-Self-Governing Territories including the Department of the Interior, also cleared the proposed action.

The Government of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico has strongly urged the proposed action.

The United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin) to the Secretary-General of the United Nations (Lie)<sup>1</sup>

[UN-1727/89]

NEW YORK, January 19, 1953.

The Representative of the United States of America to the United Nations presents his compliments to the Secretary-General of the United Nations and has the honor to refer to Resolution 222 (III), adopted by the General Assembly on November 3, 1948. This resolution states that, having regard to the provisions of Chapter XI of the Charter, it is essential that the United Nations be informed of any change in the constitutional position and status of any non-self-governing territory as a result of which the responsible government concerned thinks it unnecessary to transmit information in respect of that territory under Article 73 (e) of the Charter. The Members of the United Nations concerned are requested by this resolution to communicate to the Secretary-General, within a maximum period of six months, such information as may be appropriate, including the constitution, legislative act or executive order providing for the government of the territory and the constitutional relationship of the territory to the government of the metropolitan country.

Since 1946, the United States has transmitted annually to the Secretary-General information on Puerto Rico pursuant to the terms of Article 73 (e) of the Charter. However, on July 25, 1952, a new constitution establishing the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico entered into force. In the light of the change in the constitutional position and status of Puerto Rico, the United States Government considers that it is no longer necessary or appropriate for the United States to continue to transmit information on Puerto Rico under Article 73 (e). Therefore, the United States Government has decided that with the submission of information for the period July 1, 1951 to June 30, 1952, it will cease to transmit information on Puerto Rico.

There will be transmitted to the Secretary-General, under separate cover, for the information of the Members of the United Nations, the text of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and other appropriate information as called for under the terms of General Assembly Resolution 222 (III).

<sup>1</sup> Source text attached to Department of State circular airgram of Mar. 31, 1953, 4:10 p.m., infra. This note was delivered under authority of Department of State instruction 192, Mar. 11, 1953, not printed (350/1-1153). Under cover of the note the Department transmitted 3 documents with the request that they be transmitted to the Secretary-General. These included: (1) Text of the constitution of Puerto Rico, (2) Memorandum by the Government of the United States of America Concerning the Cessation of Transmission of Information Under Article 73 (e) of the Charter With Regard to The Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and (3) copy of the letter of Jan. 17, 1953, from the Governor of Puerto Rico to the President of the United States.

that as a result of the entry into force on July 25, 1952 of the new Constitution establishing the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the United States Government has decided to cease to transmit information on Puerto Rico under Article 73(e) of the Charter.

The attainment by the people of Puerto Rico of their new Commonwealth status is a most significant step. This is the kind of progress to self-government contemplated by the United Nations Charter. This is the democratic pattern of the free world—of goals set and hopes realized. The people of Puerto Rico expressed their view by resolution at their Constitutional Convention in the following words: “Thus we attain the goal of complete self-government, the last vestiges of colonialism having disappeared in the principle of Compact, and we enter into an era of new developments in democratic civilization.”

I invite your attention in particular to the enclosed letter of Governor Muñoz Marin of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico in which, after requesting the termination of the transmittal of information under Article 73(e) with respect to Puerto Rico, and after recounting the development of the Island’s political progress, he says: “The people of Puerto Rico are firm supporters of the United Nations and this great organization may confidently rely upon us for a continuation of that good will.”

Let me add that the people of Puerto Rico at this moment are proudly cooperating to the utmost in the United Nations effort to repel aggression in Korea. The men of Puerto Rico who are bearing the hardships of battle with other United Nations troops have, by their courage and determination, demonstrated their strong love for freedom.

There are enclosed for the information of the Members of the United Nations the following documents<sup>2</sup> in compliance with the terms of Resolution 222(III) of the General Assembly:

- (1) Text of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico,
- (2) Memorandum by the Government of the United States of America Concerning the Cessation of Transmission of Information Under Article 73(e) of the Charter with Regard to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico,<sup>3</sup>
- (3) Copy of the letter dated January 17, 1953, from the Governor of Puerto Rico to the President of the United States.<sup>4</sup>

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

WASHINGTON, March 31, 1953—4:10 p. m.

Subject: Attainment of Self-Government by the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico

For information of all posts listed:

Since 1946 the United States has transmitted annually to the United Nations information on Puerto Rico pursuant to Article 73(e) of the United Nations Charter which relates to territories whose peoples "have not yet attained a full measure of self-government". The new Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, which entered into force on July 25, 1952, was developed by the people of Puerto Rico and their duly elected representatives and conforms with their wishes as expressed in popular referenda and elections. The new Constitution was approved by the Government of the United States.

With the establishment of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the people of Puerto Rico have attained a full measure of self-government. Accordingly, and in response to a request from the Government of Puerto Rico, the Government of the United States decided that it is no longer appropriate for it to submit information on Puerto Rico pursuant to Article 73(e) of the Charter. The United Nations was informed of this decision on January 19, 1953, by a letter from the United States Mission to the United Nations to the Secretary General. Subsequently, on March 20, 1953, a further communication was sent to the United Nations, enclosing for the information of the Members of the United Nations, (a) the text of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, (b) a memorandum by the Government of the United States of America concerning the cessation of transmission of information under Article 73(e) of the Charter with regard to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and (c) a letter dated January 17, 1953, from the Governor of Puerto Rico to the President of the United States.

Copies of the various documents referred to above are transmitted herewith for the information and use of the post. These documents, it will be observed, constitute a detailed account of the development of self-government in Puerto Rico, of the steps taken vis-à-vis the United Nations and of the basis therefor. All posts may make use of these documents, as appropriate, in responding to questions. The documents will no doubt be communicated in due course by the Secretary General to all Members of the United Nations and be distributed in the usual way as United Nations documents.

<sup>1</sup> Two sets of documents were transmitted to 52 posts for action; one set to 17 posts for information, including Aruba, Barbados, Belize, Curaçao, Kingston, Martinique, and Port-of-Spain.

For action of posts indicated:

You are requested, unless you perceive objection, to call upon appropriate officials of the Government to which you are accredited and leave with them for their convenience one set of the documents transmitted with this instruction as advance copies of the documents which will be circulated in due course by the Secretary General of the United Nations. You should point out that this progress of Puerto Rico to self-government is in accordance with the objectives set out in the United Nations Charter and the traditional policies of the United States. You should note that the establishment of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico under the Constitution of July 25, 1952, and the consequent attainment of a "full measure of self-government" by the people of Puerto Rico is a source of pride and satisfaction to the Government of Puerto Rico and to the United States Government. You may wish to emphasize that the new status of Puerto Rico has been established with full agreement of the Government and people of Puerto Rico and in accordance with their expressed wishes and to refer in this connection, as appropriate, to portions of the letter of the Governor of Puerto Rico and of the memorandum by the United States.

You are also requested to report any comment which may be forthcoming from officials of the Government to which you are accredited concerning (1) the establishment of the Commonwealth and the attainment of self-government by the people of Puerto Rico and (2) the decision of the United States Government to cease reporting to the United Nations on Puerto Rico. This information will be of particular value to the Department in preparing for anticipated discussion in the United Nations of the documents transmitted herewith. It is expected that this discussion will take place in the first instance in the General Assembly's Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories, scheduled to convene in August 1953, and subsequently in the Eighth General Assembly.

The following is for your information and for use in your discretion: The Department believes that possible critical reactions to the decision of the United States to cease reporting to the United Nations on Puerto Rico will fall into two main categories: (a) Statements to the effect that the United States alone cannot make such a decision and that the concurrence of the United Nations is required. On this point, it is the view of the United States that each administering member of the United Nations has the right to determine the constitutional position and status of territories under its sovereignty. The United States also considers that the decision regarding cessation of reporting under Article 73(e) on specific territories rests solely with the administering members concerned. We recognize, however, that the United Nations will be interested in discussing the Puerto Rican case and that the General Assembly, under its broad powers to discuss and recommend under Article 10 of the Charter, may not only wish to consider the case of Puerto Rico but probably also to adopt a resolution on the subject. We have accordingly submitted appropriate documentation for the information of United Nations Members and will be prepared to answer various questions which may be raised. (b) Statements to the effect that since the United States retains, with respect to Puerto Rico, control over foreign affairs and defense, the Commonwealth has not in effect achieved a "full measure of self-government". On this point, a clear distinction exists between "independence" and a "full measure of self-government". "Independence", while one of the principal means, is not the only means by which a "full measure of self-government" may be attained. The United States holds that the retention by the United States Government of responsibility for the foreign affairs and defense of Puerto Rico is in no way incompatible with the achievement of "a full measure of self-government" by the people of Puerto Rico. The memorandum by the Government of the United States, enclosed herewith, indicates the manner in which self-government is exercised by Puerto Rico under the Constitution of July 25, 1952. Special significance is also attached to the fact that the Commonwealth status achieved by Puerto Rico is the governmental arrangement which the people of Puerto Rico themselves sought. The letter of the Governor of Puerto Rico expresses this forcefully as follows:

"The Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, therefore, represents the government that the people of Puerto Rico have freely adopted. It reflects our own decision as to the type of institutions and the kind of relationship to the United States which we desire. There can be no doubt that in the full sense of the term, in form as well as in fact, the people of Puerto Rico are now self-governing. We have chosen our institutions and relationship with the United States. We have determined the nature and distribution of the powers of government. We have created our own Constitution under which we established our own government . . ."

the United Nations Charter. The Colonial Office, while indicating that it is in entire and full agreement with the United States on the latter's complete freedom to cease to submit information on Puerto Rico, has posed informally three questions, the answers to which would serve to fortify the British in supporting the United States position.

The Officer in Charge is requested to inform the Colonial Office in general terms and in regard to the three specific questions substantially as follows:

The Department is appreciative of the careful study which the United States documentation on Puerto Rico has received in the Colonial Office. It is gratified to know that the United States Government may count on the support of Her Majesty's Government when this matter comes up from consideration in the General Assembly's Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories. It is particularly grateful to the Colonial Office for setting forth in advance the three fundamental questions because answers to them are basic in establishing the limits to which, according to the United States view, this matter may be appropriately discussed by the United Nations.

The United States method of handling the case of Puerto Rico in the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories has not been worked out in detail and it is believed essential to maintain a flexible approach and to strive to create a harmonious and cooperative atmosphere for the discussions. To try to achieve this end the United States Delegation will provide straightforward explanations to questions seeking information in regard to the documentation transmitted to the United Nations by the United States. It cannot itself, however, engage in discussions as to the propriety of United States laws. Moreover, if extended attempts at such discussions are made by other Members, the United States Delegation may be obliged to seek to have them ruled out of order. It is believed important in this connection to keep the amount of documentation placed before the Committee at a minimum in order to avoid in so far as possible discussions and debate on United States constitutional and legal instruments. Therefore, the United States Government does not intend at this time to place before the United Nations any additional documentation but will present orally such additional information.

Basic to the United States position on Puerto Rico is the contention that each administering member of the United Nations is responsible for determining the constitutional position and status of territories under its sovereignty and that the decision with respect to reporting under Article 73(e) on specific territories rests solely with the administering member concerned. The United States recognizes, however, that the United Nations will be interested in discussing the Puerto Rican case and that the General Assembly under its broad powers to discuss and recommend under Article X of the Charter, may not only wish to consider the case of Puerto Rico but probably also to adopt a resolution on the subject. The United States considers that it was fully justified in ceasing to report on Puerto Rico and would vigorously oppose any resolution that states the contrary view. The United States would, however, vote for a resolution commending its action.

The reply of the Colonial Office's first question, in which it asks to know our attitude toward the possible discussion by the United Nations of the constitutional instruments concerning Puerto Rico which have been transmitted for information, is contained in the general discussion above.

The second question asks what arguments are expected to be used if complaints are raised that Puerto Rico is not guaranteed the right of secession. The United States Delegation will point out in this connection that the question is not germane to the discussions in as much as the right of secession is not a requisite of a full measure of self-government as set forth in Chapter XI of the Charter, as the legislative history of Article 73 will reveal. The United States Delegation will further point out that reference to the history of the development of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico will reveal that the present constitutional relationship with the United States is in keeping with the freely expressed wishes of an overwhelming majority of the people of Puerto Rico. In the local Puerto Rican elections which were held on the issue of the future status of Puerto Rico the alternatives to "commonwealth status", i.e. "independence" or "statehood" were fully presented to the people by political parties standing on those platforms. Thus the majority decision of the people of Puerto Rico was made in cognizance of the possible alternatives.

The third question asks what arguments will be used if the matter of Puerto Rican representation at the center of government is raised. Here again the United States will stress the fact that the type of representation the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico has in an elected Resident Commissioner who represents the Commonwealth before the Federal Government and holds a non-voting seat in the House of Representatives conforms with the wishes of the people of Puerto Rico. In enumerating the positive advantages to Puerto Rico of its special status as a "freely associated state" within the Federal Union, the United States Delegation will elaborate upon the role and position of influence of the Resident Commissioner in relation to Federal Government policy and administration. It will also point out that Puerto Rico could obtain full legislative representation in the United States Congress only if it were a State like one of the 48, subject to all pertinent provisions of the Constitution of the United States. In that case, however, the people of Puerto Rico would lose the fiscal advantages which they now enjoy as a result of their present relationship to the United States. The Constitution of the United States would require this result. The people of Puerto Rico are exempt from Federal income taxes on the income they derive from sources within Puerto Rico and from all other internal revenue taxes. The proceeds of United States internal revenue taxes collected on articles produced in Puerto Rico and shipped to the United States are covered into the Treasury of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. Also, the proceeds of tariff and customs collected on foreign merchandise entering Puerto Rico are deposited into the Puerto Rican Treasury for appropriation and expenditure as the Puerto Rican Legislature may decide. These arrangements constitute substantial fiscal advantages of particular benefit to an area such as Puerto Rico whose natural economic resources are not, as yet fully developed. The admission into the Union under the terms of the Constitution of the United States, would entail the loss of these advantages and that the taxpayers of Puerto Rico would have to contribute over one hundred million dollars annually to the United States Treasury, a sum which represents ten per cent of the national income of Puerto Rico and nearly sixty per cent of its budget.

Although Her Majesty's Government is fully aware that under the American System of Government the Executive Branch cannot interpret what may be the will later on of the United States Congress and the decision of the Courts in regard to the future status of Puerto Rico, there is substantial evidence available in support of the view that any subsequent change in the status of the Commonwealth may be determined only by joint action of the United States and Puerto Rican Governments.

Position Paper Prepared in the Department of State for the United States Delegation to the Eighth Regular Session of the General Assembly

RESTRICTED

[WASHINGTON,] September 2, 1953.

CESSATION OF TRANSMISSION OF INFORMATION UNDER ARTICLE 73(e) OF THE CHARTER IN RESPECT OF PUERTO RICO

THE PROBLEM

Since 1946 the United States in pursuance of Article 73(e) of the UN Charter has transmitted annually to the Secretary General information on Puerto Rico as a territory "whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government". With the establishment of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico under the constitution promulgated on July 25, 1952 the United States Government and the Puerto Rican Government concluded that the people of Puerto Rico have attained a full measure of self-government and that it was no longer appropriate to transmit information on Puerto Rico under Article 73(e). In accordance with Resolution 222 (III), the United States Government informed the United Nations of this decision and transmitted appropriate documentation for the information of UN Members in communications dated January 19 and March 20, 1953. These communications are presently under consideration by the General Assembly's Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories which will report thereon to the Eighth General Assembly.

The problem confronting the United States is twofold: (1) to ensure that UN Members have the fullest possible understanding of what the Puerto Rican people have achieved in fulfillment of their freely expressed wishes, and to obtain maximum support for the US view that this constitutes a full measure of self-government; and (2) to have the General Assembly take note of the developments and the consequent US decision to cease reporting on Puerto Rico in an acceptable resolution.

The United States has a strong case. However, some UN Members may be inclined to consider the Puerto Rican case not only on its merits but also in relation to other aspects of the highly controversial colonial problem. Moreover, the desire of some non-Administering Members to strengthen the role of the General Assembly in colonial affairs may result in the injection into the discussion of such complicating issues as (1) competence: i.e. the role of the General Assembly in making the decision on reporting under Article 73(e); (2) the question of granting an oral hearing to the Independence Party (a minority political party in Puerto Rico); and (3) proposals to grant the special status of "associate member" of the Committee on Information to Puerto Rico.

UNITED STATES POSITION

1. The Delegation should freely provide information, both in UN meetings and informally in response to questions, regarding the constitutional position and status of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and the political, economic, social and educational development of Puerto Rico. It is hoped that a prominent official of the Puerto Rican Government will be attached to the Delegation for this purpose.

2. While it is hoped that the UN will not seriously question our decision to cease transmitting information on Puerto Rico and that the issue of the competence of the General Assembly will not be raised in an acute form, the Delegation should make every effort to avoid controversy over the question of competence. Regarding this general problem of which authority has the right to determine when a territory has achieved "a full measure of self-government" and therefore need no longer be reported on under Article 73(e), the Delegation should be guided by the following position: We believe that each Administering Member is responsible for determining the constitutional position and status of territories under its sovereignty, and the decision with respect to reporting under Article 73(e) on specific territories rests solely with the Administering Member concerned. We do not believe, however, that the interpretation of the expressions "non-self-governing territories" and "territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government", since they appear in the Charter is a matter for unilateral determination by individual Administering Members. We believe, therefore, in view of Article 10 that the General Assembly, for example, has the authority to discuss and attempt to define the above expressions, to recommend to Administering Members generally the consideration of any definition it might adopt, or even to express the opinion in general terms on the principles which have guided or may guide Members in deciding on which of their territories they will transmit information.

3. The General Assembly will have before it a draft resolution on Puerto Rico recommended by the Committee on Information. We consider that the United States was fully justified in ceasing to report on Puerto Rico and would vigorously oppose any resolution which stated the contrary view. Our opposition to any such resolution would not be based on the view that the General Assembly is not competent to criticize our decision but rather on the view that our decision is right. We would, however, vote for a resolution commending our action. If a resolution is proposed which clearly raises the issue of competence, the Delegation should consult the Department as to its voting position.

4. The Delegation should bear in mind the desirability of avoiding any action by the General Assembly which would result in carrying over the question to a later session.

5. The Delegation should oppose any efforts to grant oral hearings to any of the groups from Puerto Rico which have petitioned the UN to be heard on this item. In so doing the Delegation should maintain that it would be inappropriate for an organ of the General Assembly to hear the views of a domestic political party, whose views were rejected by the Puerto Rican people in a free democratic election.

6. The Delegation should oppose any proposal to extend to Puerto Rico a continuing status in connection with the work of the Committee on Information for example as an "associate member" of the Committee. Such a proposal would imply an unwillingness on the part of the General Assembly to accord due recognition to the full measure of self-government which Puerto Rico has achieved and a lack of understanding of its constitutional position within the Federal system.

COMMENT

By 1948 several administering authorities had ceased to transmit information to the UN under Article 73(e) on certain of their non-self-governing territories. This led to the adoption of Resolution 222 (III) wherein the General Assembly considered it essential that the UN be informed of any change in the constitutional position of any non-self-governing territory as the result of which the responsible government concerned thinks it unnecessary to transmit information in respect of that territory under Article 73(e). This resolution also requested the administering authority concerned to communicate to the Secretary General appropriate information regarding the change in status of the territory. The United States supported this resolution and has complied fully with its provisions in the present case.

Delga 175. Re Puerto Rican case Committee IV. Difficult atmosphere of Fourth Committee debate on cessation information Surinam and Netherlands Antilles and proposed amendments to Swedish draft resolution forecast probable adoption resolution asserting competence GA to share in decision when territory ceases to be NSG and urging resumption of reporting under Article 73(e). Dutch attempt to have discussion this item postponed until after roundtable conference failed completely with nine speeches today and at least ten scheduled for October 28.

In view foregoing, most likely committee will desire pronounce on Puerto Rico cessation by amending Committee on Information resolution to assert competence of Assembly to participate in decision to cease reporting.

A vote favoring US decision to cease reporting on Puerto Rico may be expected from all members present except Soviet bloc, probably 2-3 other members, with perhaps 10-12 abstentions. However, if competence issue raised, negative votes or abstentions might be increased by addition of seven administering powers although the number of abstentions among nonadministering members might diminish. Under two-thirds rule in plenary, favorable outcome could not be taken for granted.

Mrs. Bolton and Fourth Committee advisers suggest US delegation might abstain or not participate in vote, stressing our inability to accept GA competence and stating that US has faithfully fulfilled Assembly resolutions, action is completed by the USG, any further action is meaningless.

An alternative suggestion made is that US delegation, confronted by a large majority for a resolution in favor US action re Puerto Rico by clearly asserting GA competence, should vote affirmatively and explain after vote that we do not regard the GA as having competence.

Department is, therefore, being consulted as to what US delegation voting position should be on a resolution which clearly raises the question of competence.

Will advise Department soonest precise form of Puerto Rican resolution which may come to vote by Friday, October 30. Mrs. Bolton desires top-level position.<sup>1</sup>

DRAFT RESOLUTION ON THE CESSATION OF THE TRANSMISSION OF INFORMATION IN RESPECT TO PUERTO RICO<sup>2</sup>

The General Assembly,

Considering that Resolution 222(III), adopted by the General Assembly on 3 November 1948, while welcoming any development of self-government in non-self-governing territories, considers that it is essential that the United Nations be informed of any change in the constitutional status of any such territory as a result of which the government responsible for the transmission of information in respect of that territory under Article 73(e) of the Charter thinks it unnecessary or inappropriate to continue such a practice,

Having received the communications dated 19 January and 20 March 1953 informing the United Nations of the establishment of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, as a result of the entry into force on 25 July 1952 of the constitution of Puerto Rico, and stating that in consequence of these constitutional changes the Government of the United States would cease to transmit information under Article 73(e) of the Charter,

Having studied the report prepared by the Committee on Information from non-self-governing territories, during its session of 1953, on the question of the cessation of the transmission of information on Puerto Rico and presented to the General Assembly in conformity with paragraph 2 of Resolution 448(V),

Having examined the communication of the Government of the United States in the light of the basic principles embodied in Chapter XI of the Charter and of all the other elements of judgement pertinent to the issue.

Considering that the agreement reached by the United States of America and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico in forming a political association which respects the individuality and the cultural characteristics of Puerto Rico, maintains the spiritual bond between Puerto Rico and Latin America and constitutes an additional link in continental solidarity,

1. Takes note favorably of the conclusions set forth by the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories in its resolution;

2. Recognizes that the people of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, by expressing their will in a free and democratic way have achieved a new constitutional status;

3. Expresses the opinion that it stems from the documentation provided that the association of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico with the United States of America has been established as a mutually agreed association;

4. Recognizes that when choosing their constitutional and international status, the people of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico have effectively exercised their right to self-determination;

5. Recognizes that in the framework of their constitution and of the compact agreed upon with the United States of America, the people of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico have been invested with attributes of political sovereignty which clearly identify the status of self-government attained by the Puerto Rican people as an autonomous political entity;

6. Considers that due to these circumstances, the Declaration Regarding Non-Self-Governing Territories and the provisions established under it in Chapter XI of the Charter can no longer be applied to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico;

208. Re: Puerto Rico. Reference circular airgram March 31, 1953 re Attainment self-government by Puerto Rico. GA will vote this week on resolution on Puerto Rico. Dept and Puerto Rican Government hopeful suitable resolution recognizing attainment of full measure of self-government by Puerto Rican people will receive wide support. US Government and Puerto Rican Government especially hopeful for Latin American support. No resolution yet introduced but will probably be based on resolution adopted by Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories, which simply noted US decision to cease transmitting information on Puerto Rico, and which US considers satisfactory. Understand position Venezuelan delegation uncertain, and is awaiting instructions.

Important Foreign Office should fully understand that new Constitution Puerto Rico and relations with US are result free choice of Puerto Rico as expressed free democratic election. Also important Foreign Office be aware deep concern Puerto Rican Governor Munoz Marin and Resident Commissioner Fernos Isern that new status Puerto Rico be understood by its Latin American neighbors.

In your discretion, promptly convey above views to Foreign Office, expressing hope it will be possible for Foreign Office instruct its UN Delegation support US position.

STATEMENT BY THE HONORABLE FRANCES P. BOLTON, UNITED STATES REPRESENTATIVE, IN COMMITTEE FOUR ON PUERTO RICO

MR. CHAIRMAN: It is the intention of my Delegation to make a final statement when all other delegations have had an opportunity to express their points of view on the subject under consideration. However, I should like to clarify, at the outset of our discussions today, a number of points raised in yesterday's debate in order that certain misconceptions which evidently exist will not continue to cloud our discussion.

1. First of all, reference has been made to the letter addressed by the Governor of Puerto Rico to the President of the United States. Through an error by one speaker the Governor has been quoted as stating in his letter that at present the Congress of the United States retains full jurisdiction to legislate with respect to Puerto Rico without the consent of its people, to override its laws, to change its form of government, and to alter its relations to the United States. The letter of the Governor states, on the contrary, that until the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico began to function, the Congress of the United States retained full jurisdiction. I hasten to rectify this matter because I know how the Governor of Puerto Rico would feel if his interpretation of the compact were not properly presented.

2. In further elaboration of the remarks I made yesterday, may I say that obviously United States laws and such compacts the United States may enter into are subject to the interpretation of the United States and the parties concerned, in this case the people of Puerto Rico. In a spirit of cooperation we have brought before you the United States interpretation which is also that of the people of Puerto Rico. We would not feel justified in engaging in a debate as to the significance of United States laws, less so after they have been interpreted by the Courts of the United States. Nor have we thought it proper to pay attention to such distortions as have been made by and circulated in behalf of those who as self-appointed interpreters of the United States laws, compacts and agreements would lead us to believe that nothing except their own cherished ideas should be accepted no matter how impractical and contrary to the wishes of the people of Puerto Rico such ideas may be, and what may be their motivation.

3. Two facts stand out of all the documentation transmitted by the United States to the United Nations. One is that the people of Puerto Rico have organized themselves politically under a constitution of their own adoption whereby a republican form of government has been created stemming from the sovereignty of the people of Puerto Rico. This fact is amply sustained by the language of the constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico itself. The second fact is that there exists a bilateral compact of association between the people of Puerto Rico and the United States which has been accepted by both and which in accordance with judicial decisions may not be amended without common consent.

4. The nature of the relations established by compact between the people of Puerto Rico and the United States, far from preventing the existence of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico as a fully self-governing entity, gives the necessary guarantees for the untrammelled development and exercise of its political authority. The authority of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico is not more limited than that of any state of the Union; in fact in certain aspects is much wider. It would be absurd to claim that the 48 states of the Union are not fully self-governing entities. In accordance with the principle of federation the people who have created and organized state governments in accordance with their own state constitutions, have also relinquished certain attributes of authority to the Federal Government which the state governments do not have. In accordance with the compact between the people of Puerto Rico and the United States, the people of Puerto Rico have agreed that the Government of the United States may have, concerning Puerto Rico, the functions and authority that the United States Government has concerning the states of the Union. Therefore, to say that this latter fact negates self-government in Puerto Rico would be tantamount to saying that self-government does not exist in the 48 states of the Union. It should be remembered that the functions of the Federal Government in Puerto Rico are carried out under the same laws and within the same constitutional limitations under which they are carried on behalf of the states. This qualifies the exercise of federal authority in Puerto Rico and protects the self-governing powers of Puerto Rico. That the participation of the people of Puerto Rico in the Federal Government is not the same as that of the people of any state of the Union is easily understandable if it is borne in mind that the obligations of the people of Puerto Rico towards the Federal Government, especially in matters of a fiscal nature, are not the same as those of the people of the 48 states. In order for the people of Puerto Rico to participate equally as the people of the 48 states in the affairs of the Federal Government, Puerto Rico would have to become constitutionally integrated permanently as a state of the Union with all the corresponding obligations without exception. This proposal has been before the people of Puerto Rico as the program of one of its political parties. The people haven't chosen it as the type of relationship to which they would give their preference.

5. In presenting the case of Puerto Rico before this Committee, the United States Delegation has not at any time stated that in creating the present association between the people of Puerto Rico and the United States any known type of association heretofore has been adopted. Much to the contrary, the criterion followed has been to assist the people of Puerto Rico "in the progressive development of their free political institutions according to the particular circumstances" of Puerto Rico. It has been evident to the people of Puerto Rico that should they follow such known types of political relations as those of independence, or full integration into the Union, they would jeopardize their own paramount interests in economic, social, educational as well as political matters. The criterion followed in the establishment of the existing association between Puerto Rico and the United States have been to create such relationships as would ensure for the people of Puerto Rico the best opportunities to develop socially, economically and culturally taking into consideration their geographic and demographic circumstances. It is in this light that the terms of political and economic union referred to by Dr. Fernos-Isern should be viewed.

6. As an instance to illustrate what I have said, I shall refer to the question of minimum wages in Puerto Rico. There are no trade barriers between Puerto Rico and the United States, as there are no trade barriers between any two states of the Union. It might have been considered only fair in order not to give undue advantage to Puerto Rican producers over mainland producers in the mainland market to have the same provisions of law apply in Puerto Rico. However, because Puerto Rico is not as industrially developed as the 48 states of the Union, the law provides special treatment for Puerto Rico and exempts it from the fixed minimum to which all wages in the industries of the United States are subject. The wages in Puerto Rico are determined in such manner that the workers may be paid as high a wage as the circumstances of the industry may warrant. However, they are not necessarily as high as those on the mainland lest such requirement stifle Puerto Rican industries. This places Puerto Rico in a competitive position in relation to the United States market to which it has free access. Only the laws of Puerto Rico apply to any industry not engaged in external trade.

7. Another case in point is the reference made to the quota on Puerto Rican sugar that may be marketed in the United States. Sugar marketing in the United States is subject to quota not only in what concerns Puerto Rico but in what concerns the 48 states as well as importations from foreign countries. As a result of this system of marketing quotas, the price of sugar has been stabilized. Puerto Rico not only sells its sugar in the United States at the same price that United States domestic sugar is sold, free from customs duties, but the growers receive benefit payments equally as those of the mainland producers. One of the aspects of the economic union most favorable to Puerto Rico is to be found in these provisions concerning sugar. Should Puerto Rico separate from the United States, it certainly would have no claim, on the basis of its status, to customs free entry of sugar into the United States, nor to a quota commensurate with its production capacity, nor to the benefit payments that domestic sugar producers are accorded. The fact that Puerto Rico refines all sugar consumed in Puerto Rico and ships to the United States a certain amount of its sugar quota, as refined sugar, limits the amount which may be refined in the mainland. Dr. Fernos, as a member of the House of Representatives Committee on Agriculture, would be pleased to discuss with any interested Members of the Committee the United States Sugar Act.

8. It would be a great mistake to consider that because the functions of the Federal Government in Puerto Rico are conducted under the same laws as those functions are carried on in the United States, the authority of the people of Puerto Rico in the conduct of their own government, under their own laws, is diminished. In a federal system the fact that certain functions are reserved to the Federal Government does not mean that the authority of the government of the several states, in all matters not delegated to the Federal Government, are not fully within the power of the states. Again in this regard Puerto Rico is not in any position different from that of any state of the Union.

9. The Federal Relations Act to which reference has been made has continued provisions of political and economic union which the people of Puerto Rico have wished to maintain. In this sense the relationships between Puerto Rico and the United States have not changed. It would be wrong, however, to hold that because this is so and has been so declared in Congress, the creation of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico does not signify a fundamental change in the status of Puerto Rico. The previous status of Puerto Rico was that of a territory subject to the full authority of the Congress of the United States in all governmental matters. The previous constitution of Puerto Rico was in fact a law of the Congress of the United States, which we called an organic act. Congress only could amend the organic act of Puerto Rico. The present status of Puerto Rico is that of a people with a constitution of their own adoption stemming from their own authority which only they can alter or amend. The relationships previously established also by a law of the Congress, which only Congress could amend, have now become provisions of a compact of a bilateral nature whose terms may be changed only by common consent.

10. I submit that having before us the Constitution of Puerto Rico, and with Laws 600 of 1950 and 447 of 1952 having been circulated, if an opinion as to the status of Puerto Rico is to be formed and any interpretation is needed, that offered by the parties concerned should prevail. To go back to statements made in the course of debate in Congress or in hearings and to try to interpret the documents before us in the light of isolated utterances, brought before us out of context, can only lead to utter confusion.

11. As a member of Congress which took part in all the legislative processes which culminated in the compact between the people of Puerto Rico and the United States whereby the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico was established, I was impressed by the fact that at all times the whole nature of the process was that of bilateral agreement. Even when the joint resolution approving the Constitution for Puerto Rico was before Congress and some reservations appeared to be necessary in order to clarify the fact that the Constitution of Puerto Rico would conform with the terms of compact, such clarifications as were decided upon by the Congress were submitted to the approval of the Constitutional Convention of Puerto Rico.

12. Some pain has been expressed in the Committee because the Resident Commissioner, who holds a seat in the House of Representatives of the United States Congress, does not have full voting rights. This, Mr. Chairman, cannot be regarded as painful to the people of Puerto Rico.

Under the United States Constitution, Puerto Rico could obtain full legislative representation in the United States Congress only if it were a State like one of the 48, subject to all pertinent provisions of the Constitution of the United States. In that case, however, the people of Puerto Rico would lose the fiscal advantages which they now enjoy as a result of their present relationship to the United States. The Constitution of the United States would require this result. The people of Puerto Rico are not subject to Federal income taxes on the income they derive from sources within Puerto Rico nor to any other internal revenue taxes. The proceeds of United States internal revenue taxes collected on articles produced in Puerto Rico and shipped to the United States are covered into the Treasury of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. Also, the proceeds of tariff and customs collected on foreign merchandise entering Puerto Rico are deposited into the Puerto Rican Treasury for appropriation and expenditure as the Puerto Rican Legislature may decide. These arrangements constitute substantial advantages of particular benefit to an area such as Puerto Rico whose natural economic resources are so limited. The admission into the Union under the terms of the Constitution of the United States would entail the loss of these advantages. The taxpayers of Puerto Rico would have to contribute over one hundred million dollars annually to the United States Treasury, a sum which represents ten percent of the national income of Puerto Rico and nearly sixty percent of its budget. For this reason the majority of the people of Puerto Rico prefer Commonwealth status, albeit it does not provide for full legislative representation in Congress, to statehood with membership in the Union of States and full legislative representation in Congress. They have expressed this preference emphatically in the election of 1948, the subsequent referenda on the new Constitution and the election on November 4, 1952. In this last election, the party in power received 429,064 votes out of 664,974 cast, a greater majority than ever before.

It might also be stressed that under the Commonwealth the people of Puerto Rico, besides not being subject to Federal taxes, enjoy the same advantages as their fellow citizens in the 48 States, i.e., protection by the national government, freedom to travel in United States territory and to resettle there, and participation in and the protection and services of the federal civilian and military establishments. Many grants-in-aid and other federal legislation represent further benefits to the people of Puerto Rico.

13. It has been said that the United States Government has not provided the General Assembly with adequate information upon which it based its decision to cease transmitting information on Puerto Rico. Mr. Chairman, I refer the Committee to the full explanations contained in Document A/AC.35/L.121 of April 3, 1953, and the large volume of information transmitted for the year July 1, 1951-June 30, 1952, upon which the Secretariat's Summary, Document A/2414/Add.2 of August 13, 1953 is based. I ask the Committee to decide for itself whether the United States has failed to fulfill the request for information set forth in Resolution 222 (III) regarding decisions to cease transmission of information.

14. Members of the Committee who participated in this year's session of the Committee on Information and those who have studied the documentation considered by that Committee are aware of the various references made to the role of Puerto Rico in extending technical assistance in connection with various international programs. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, it is most unfortunate that the interest and enthusiasm of former Assistant Secretary of State Miller in regard to Puerto Rico, his birthplace, should be misconstrued.

I believe that Secretary Miller has merely tried to emphasize what so many other representatives of the Governments of the United States and Puerto Rico sincerely believe, namely, that Puerto Rico, with its Spanish language and cultural heritage can help to forge stronger links of understanding between Latin America and the United States and contribute much to the advancement of the good-neighbor policy in the Caribbean area.

15. Some disappointment has been expressed that Puerto Rico has not had as fortunate a fate as Cuba, both having been at one time under the sovereignty of Spain. I presume, Mr. Chairman, that this refers to the fact that Puerto Rico has not chosen to become completely independent. But our considerations here relate to self-government which has been achieved in accordance with the freely expressed wishes of an overwhelming majority of the Puerto Rican people. It is true that Puerto Rico has not chosen to separate itself from the United States and become completely independent, and therefore has not assumed control over such matters as foreign affairs and national defense. But I must point out that there are members of the United Nations who are said to be independent, yet they do not control matters of foreign relations and national defense.

16. We have been told in this Committee in a most polite and ingenuous, though nonetheless straightforward manner, that the people of Puerto Rico have bartered their individuality in exchange for purely materialistic gains, with consequent loss of their dignity as a people. But I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the very fact that Puerto Rico has developed its own concept of commonwealth status is because it desires to retain its cultural heritage and the freedom to develop its own personality and the well-being of the Puerto Rican people without sacrificing the economic foundation upon which these paramount values are based. Poverty, hunger and ignorance are not the ingredients with which a society of free people can be established and developed and its dignity maintained.

On the other hand, economic, social and educational programs based upon individual initiative and local responsibility build and maintain the stature and dignity of a people. Under such circumstances freedom is established.

Mr. Chairman, I am most grateful for the patience of the Committee in permitting me to remove what I believe to have been clouds of misconception, so that the discussions may continue free of misunderstanding.

Delga 221. Re Puerto Rico. Mrs. Bolton, Ambassador Daniels and advisers strongly recommend following telegram be sent urgently Tegucigalpa:

Puerto Rican Government representatives and US delegate seriously concerned at apparently uninformed and unfriendly statements made by Honduran representative at Fourth Committee GA now considering new Commonwealth status of Puerto Rico as "Estado Libre Asociado". Honduran delegation apparently lacks instructions. Please suggest immediately to Foreign Minister or President desirability sending telegraphic instructions Honduran delegation to consult Puerto Ricans and if possible support Government Puerto Rico on this important issue.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The view that Puerto Rico had not reached a full measure of self-government and that therefore the United States was not entitled to cease transmission of information was expressed in the Fourth Committee on Nov. 4, by India, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Burma, Honduras, Indonesia, and Poland.

India announced the intention of proposing, as an amendment to the 7-power (Latin American) draft (L. 300) endorsing the U.S. decision, that a small committee be established to study further the Puerto Rican question and report to the next General Assembly.

In the debate, the Indian Delegate contended that Puerto Rico was economically and commercially dependent upon the United States. Yugoslavia warned against setting "a dangerous precedent" which might "encourage other attempts at the progressive destruction of the system of international controls" over non-self-governing territories. Committee 4—Puerto Rico—Following a series of votes, the Committee Nov. 5 endorsed 22-18-19 the seven-power resolution (L. 300) approving cessation of transmission by the US of information on Puerto Rico. It also recommended, 32-19 (US, Colombia, Panama, Paraguay)-8 (Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Nicaragua, Peru), an amendment stating the GA's competence to decide whether a NSGT has or has not attained a full measure of self-government.

By a vote of 13-34-12, the Committee rejected a section of the five-power amendment (L. 302) sponsored by Burma, Guatemala, Honduras, Indonesia, and Mexico, expressing GA confidence the US would find it possible to continue transmitting information on Puerto Rico. It also defeated, 5-31-13, another part of this amendment which would have deleted from the resolution clauses by which the assembly would 1) note favorably the NSGT Committee's conclusions with regard to Puerto Rico, 2) recognize the Puerto Rican people had been vested with attributes of political sovereignty which identified their status as an autonomous political entity, and 3) consider that charter chapter XI no longer applied to Puerto Rico.

Also rejected, 18-34-7, was an Indian amendment calling for establishment of a six-member committee to study the question further and to report to the next GA.

Before the voting, Iran, Peru, Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, and Israel expressed strong support for the US position.

Votes on the individual paras of the resolution ranged from 48-1-6 to 24-17-17. Individual votes on the resolution as a whole follow:

In favor: Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Haiti, Iran, Israel, Liberia, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Thailand, Turkey, and Uruguay.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Burma, Byelorussia, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Guatemala, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Mexico, New Zealand, Poland, The Ukraine, South Africa, the USSR, Yugoslavia.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Argentina, Denmark, Egypt, El Salvador, France, Greece, Iceland, Lebanon, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Syria, the UK, the US, Venezuela.

*Press Release No. 1808 Issued by the Mission at the United Nations,
New York, November 6, 1953*<sup>1</sup>

STATEMENT BY THE HONORABLE FRANCES P. BOLTON, U.S. REPRESENTATIVE, IN COMMITTEE FOUR, IN EXPLANATION OF VOTE ON THE PUERTO RICAN ITEM. [NOVEMBER 6]

As indicated yesterday, the United States favored the Resolution sponsored by seven Delegations because that Resolution expressed in its original form the agreement of the General Assembly with the decision reached by the United States Government that Puerto Rico has ceased to be a non-self-governing territory within the meaning of Chapter XI of the United Nations Charter.

However, because that part of the five-Delegation-amendment which clearly asserts the competence of the General Assembly was adopted, we were obliged to abstain. We did so, Mr. Chairman, because the argument in favor of the original resolution, as clearly stated by its sponsors, namely, that it recognized facts, became no longer true.

The Fourth Committee, in dealing with this item, has attempted to do two things simultaneously. It has undertaken to judge the Puerto Rico case which, viewed solely on its merits clearly has the support of a large majority of the members of this Committee. At the same time it has gone out of its way to try to establish the competence of the General Assembly in the question of cessation of transmission of information under Article 73(e) of the Charter. By so doing, a number of delegations have been deprived of the opportunity of voting solely on the merits of the case.

Whatever the majority views in favor of such efforts may be, we believe it would have been preferable to handle the two distinct matters separately, and not in the midst of considering a particular case to take advantage of the situation to inject the competence issue.

RESTRICTED

NEW YORK, November 8, 1953—3 p. m.

Delga 244. Re Puerto Rican case in plenary. Mrs. Bolton, Dr. Fernos and Committee 4 advisers have analyzed situation with following tentative conclusions:

US objectives should be:

(1) Eliminate competence clause in preamble. On assumption two-thirds rule would apply, this could be accomplished only by insuring that Latin American delegates who voted no or abstained in committee (Colombia, Panama, Paraguay, Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Nicaragua, Peru) as well as Thailand and Iran maintained their previous votes or could be persuaded to vote in negative. Ecuador might be persuaded to abstain.

(2) Secure adequate number of votes to pass resolution as a whole. This depends first upon ability persuade administering members other Commonwealth and Scandinavian countries to change abstentions to yes and negative votes to abstentions and explain votes. Uncertainty of what Arab bloc may do in view of US position on Morocco and Tunis makes this situation precarious. Further consideration that Ethiopia, Haiti, Liberia, Uruguay, and Philippines be persuaded to continue support resolution if competence paragraph eliminated.

(3) Because of possibility that application of two-thirds vote might not be sustained, in conversation with administering members and other Commonwealth and Scandinavian countries, we should urge them to abstain rather than vote no and explain votes in order to secure the largest possible favorable vote for Puerto Rico. In this eventuality we should vote yes with explanation of vote because of grave implications not only for Puerto Rico politically but that cessation may be approved only in cases where full independence is achieved.

Tactics: Because of possibility plenary action mid-November and probably need refer matter to certain home governments, we should begin at once explore situation with administering members and other Commonwealth and Scandinavian delegates in order give Latin Americans assurance resolution as originally sponsored could receive two-thirds majority.

Under guise explanation of vote, Mrs. Bolton should urge plenary to eliminate preambular competence clause in order to permit large majority express true feelings re Puerto Rico.

Delga 253. Re Puerto Rican case in Plenary. Eight administering authorities plus Canada, Norway and Sweden met today at USDel request to discuss plenary tactics on Puerto Rican resolution. Group agreed almost certain  $\frac{2}{3}$  rule will apply and competence preambular paragraph will fail obtain  $\frac{2}{3}$  vote. USDel asked all members group for their affirmative votes on resolution without competence paragraph. Australia and UK at first sought group support to delete operative paragraphs 5 and 8, but finally agreed with US contention that we could not hold other delegations in line if these paragraphs were deleted. On operative paragraph 8 the 4 delegations which abstained in committee four agreed to vote yes, and the 3 which voted no agreed to abstain, thus making possible a  $\frac{2}{3}$  majority on this paragraph if other delegations hold their voting positions. Subject to approval by their governments, which they agreed to seek promptly, all except Australia agreed to vote yes on resolution as a whole without competence preambular paragraph. Copland thought Australia might abstain rather than vote yes, but was not certain and will consult Canberra and let us know definitely. Ryckmans will ask Brussels for approval of yes vote with explanation after the vote to effect that Assembly has no competence.

498. Re Puerto Rican case in GA. Reference Department's circular airgram March 31, 1953 re attainment self-government by Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. Vote in GA Plenary on resolution on Puerto Rico expected November 27. Department and Puerto Rican Government desirous secure adoption satisfactory resolution and thus completion consideration Puerto Rican question this GA. Consider resolution adopted by GA's Fourth Committee satisfactory except for preambular paragraph relating competence GA decide whether a territory has attained a full measure of self-government. We believe however that competence paragraph introduces extraneous issue and that it will be deleted in Plenary vote where two-thirds majority required.

Application two-thirds rule raises possibility that no resolution on Puerto Rico will secure necessary vote, with resulting possibility further UN discussion this matter next year. Department very anxious avoid this situation and therefore hopes when competence paragraph is deleted Belgium will be able vote for resolution. US understands Belgian view that no resolution this question necessary but concerned over political repercussions in Puerto Rico, if no resolution adopted. Moreover failure adopt favorable resolution might give encouragement independence movements in non-self-governing territories generally and reinforce view many UN Members that full self-government can be achieved only through independence. The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Mexico<sup>1</sup>

RESTRICTED PRIORITY WASHINGTON, November 20, 1953.

A-284. Re Puerto Rico. The final vote in the General Assembly Plenary Session on item of cessation of transmission of information on Puerto Rico is scheduled probably for November 25. The United States abstained on this resolution, which was adopted by 22 votes for, 18 against and 19 abstentions, because of the preambular clause asserting "the competence of the General Assembly to decide whether a non-self-governing territory has or has not attained a full measure of self-government as referred to in Chapter XI of the Charter." Mexico voted for the competence clause, which was part of a series of amendments sponsored jointly by Burma, Guatemala, Honduras, Indonesia and Mexico, and against the resolution as a whole.

For your information, it is expected that the preambular clause will be eliminated by failure to achieve the requisite two-thirds vote thus permitting a large majority of the Members of the General Assembly to express their satisfaction over the full measure of self-government which Puerto Rico has achieved.

It is suggested at your discretion that you approach the Foreign Minister informing him that the United States and Puerto Rican Governments hope that the Mexican Delegation may be able to support the resolution which recognizes the status of self-government achieved by Puerto Rico in accordance with the freely expressed wishes of its people in democratic elections. If the Mexican Government is unable to support by a favorable vote this application of the principle of self-determination and action in harmony with the large majority of Latin American States, the United States Government would hope that Mexico might at least abstain in the voting. The Embassy should of course avoid expressing or implying any criticism of the Mexican Delegation at the United Nations.

For your information, the Mexican Delegation in the Fourth Committee has taken such an extreme position that it is doubtful whether efforts on the part of the Embassy are likely to succeed in changing the vote. The Embassy may even regard such an approach as being unnecessarily harmful in which case the approach should not be made. However, in view of the unfortunate political repercussions in Puerto Rico if no resolution is adopted, the Department desires to take every step to insure that the resolution is adopted with the largest possible majority. Moreover, the Department perceives some value in letting the Mexican Government know that we appreciate its vote recognizing the self-governing status of Puerto Rico.

For your information, the argumentation of Mr. Espinosa y Prieto, Counselor of Embassy, of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, who represented Mexico in the Fourth Committee of the General Assembly was the most invidious heard in the Committee, the anti-U.S. propaganda and doctrinaire approach of certain other governments—the Soviet bloc, Guatemala, Yugoslavia, India and Indonesia being taken for granted. The United States Delegation regarded Espinosa's views as most regrettable inasmuch as he and his Government have had as great an opportunity as any other friendly UN Member to understand the Puerto Rican case and to appreciate the merits of the Commonwealth arrangements which have been established in accordance with the wishes of an overwhelming majority of the Puerto Rican people.

There follows for the Embassy's information the excerpt from the Summary Record of the Fourth Committee meeting on November 2, 1953 summarizing Mr. Espinosa's case against Puerto Rico. It should be borne in mind that this summary is toned down considerably from what was actually said by him :

“Mr. Espinosa (Mexico) said that on the one hand, the United States was to be congratulated on the fact that Puerto Rico was certainly the most advanced and fortunate of the Non-Self-Governing Territories; on the other hand, the new and original form of association between Puerto Rico and the United States suffered from certain obvious defects. Out of their feeling of consideration for the United States, many delegations might be prepared to let those defects pass in silence, but the Fourth Committee should be consistent and apply to Puerto Rico the same criteria that it had recently applied to the Netherlands Antilles and Surinam. In a statement to the United States Senate, Mr. Miller, Assistant Secretary of State, had said that it would help the prestige of the United States and its programme throughout Latin America if the added recognition of self-government were given Puerto Rico. The far-reaching implications of that statement were obvious when it was remembered that the majority of Latin American countries were actively anti-colonial and that the Puerto Ricans were a Spanish-American people.

“Many Latin Americans were disappointed that Puerto Rico, which had broken away from Spain at the same time as Cuba and the Philippines, had not been as fortunate in its final status as they had. He was not overlooking the very real problems confronting Puerto Rico, problems reflected in the vigorous campaigns of the majority party and the minority groups, which were fighting for greater equality as a Full State of the Union. The main problem facing Puerto Rico was economic and, in opting for a system which would ensure them material salvation, the majority of the Puerto Rican people had unfortunately been obliged to renounce some of their individuality. It was to be hoped that the case of Puerto Rico would throw into relief the need to ensure that no peoples in the world were ever forced to sacrifice their dignity in order to live.

"Latin America would not demand independence for Puerto Rico if the Puerto Ricans and the United States considered it impossible. Nevertheless, Latin America was a moral entity. Its prestige was an important consideration in the world and it asked that Puerto Rico should be given equality of status. In that connection, Mr. Miller, Under-Secretary of State, referring to the way in which Puerto Rico could assist the Point Four programme in Latin America, has said that Mr. Munoz-Marin had offered personnel, facilities for students and funds to the University of San Juan. He himself did not believe in technical assistance in its present form, but rather in a fair and disinterested exchange between countries that were on an equal footing. When the Puerto Rican people, who were the intellectual equals of any of the Latin American people or of the people of the United States, were also their legal equals, the Latin American countries would send their students to the University of San Juan and would grant scholarships to Puerto Rican students to attend their universities. When Mr. Fernos-Isern had the right to vote in the Congress, which had such broad rights over his country, the association between the two countries would be well on the way to fulfilling the requirements of Chapter XI of the Charter.

"Hasty action in the case of Puerto Rico might jeopardize the future work of the Committee. At the time of the San Francisco Conference Puerto Rico had been as economically and socially advanced as it now was. Politically, its status at that time had marked a step backwards compared with its status under Spanish domination, when the Puerto Ricans had been represented in the Cortes at Madrid. In view of Puerto Rico's advancement in social, economic and educational matters, the United States was the more to be congratulated on having placed the Territory within the scope of Chapter XI. Puerto Rico had been an outstanding example of how the non-self-governing peoples could advance towards emancipation. If Puerto Rico was really no longer within the scope of Chapter XI, the example would be complete. But by withdrawing it from the scope of Chapter XI before it was fully self-governing, the United States would endanger the whole system embodied in that Chapter. It should be noted that, during the current session, the United States position on almost every point had been contrary to that of the majority of the members of the Committee and more in keeping with the views of the Administering Powers, although the United States was not itself a colonial Power. His delegation had always advocated a conciliatory policy and had often accepted the Administering Powers' suggestions. The Administering Powers, for their part, should not underestimate the assistance they could receive from the non-administering countries. His country had suffered for three hundred years under the colonial regime and had been cut off from all contact with the outside world. It was in the light of that experience that he felt obliged to state that the information regarding the Non-Self-Governing Territories placed at the disposal of the United Nations was not sufficient. It was frustrating for intelligent people merely to review limited information without being able to take any constructive action on it. Unfortunately, moreover, there was becoming apparent a new and dangerous tendency to regard the transmission of information as dishonourable and a regrettable trend towards colonial isolationism.

“His country had the utmost friendship for the United States and would have liked to see the problem of Puerto Rico discussed previously at a different level. It believed that the cessation of the transmission of information regarding Puerto Rico was unjustified and its stand on any draft resolutions that might be submitted would be determined by that consideration.”

There is also included for the information of the Embassy excerpts from Congresswoman, Mrs. Frances P. Bolton's 16-point speech of November 3, 1953 in the Fourth Committee in which she replied specifically to some of the points made by Mr. Espinosa:

“14. Members of the Committee who participated in this year's session of the Committee on Information and those who have studied the documentation considered by that Committee are aware of the various references made to the role of Puerto Rico in extending technical assistance in connection with various international programs. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, it is most unfortunate that the interest and enthusiasm of former Assistant Secretary of State Miller in regard to Puerto Rico, his birthplace, should be misconstrued.

“I believe that Secretary Miller has merely tried to emphasize what so many other representatives of the Governments of the United States and Puerto Rico sincerely believe, namely, that Puerto Rico, with its Spanish language and cultural heritage can help to forge stronger links of understanding between Latin America and the United States and contribute much to the advancement of the good-neighbor policy in the Caribbean area.

“15. Some disappointment has been expressed that Puerto Rico has not had as fortunate a fate as Cuba, both having been at one time under the sovereignty of Spain. I presume, Mr. Chairman, that this refers to the fact that Puerto Rico has not chosen to become completely independent. But our considerations here relate to self-government which has been achieved in accordance with the freely expressed wishes of an overwhelming majority of the Puerto Rican people. It is true that Puerto Rico has not chosen to separate itself from the United States and become completely independent, and therefore has not assumed control over such matters as foreign affairs and national defense. But I must point out that there are members of the United Nations who are said to be independent, yet they do not control matters of foreign relations and national defense.

“16. We have been told in this Committee in a most polite and ingenuous, though nonetheless straightforward manner, that the people of Puerto Rico have bartered their individuality in exchange for purely materialistic gains, with consequent loss of their dignity as a people. But I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the very fact that Puerto Rico has developed its own concept of commonwealth status is because it desires to retain its cultural heritage and the freedom to develop its own personality and the well-being of the Puerto Rican people without sacrificing the economic foundation upon which these paramount values are based. Poverty, hunger and ignorance are not the ingredients with which a society of free people can be established and developed and its dignity maintained.

“On the other hand, economic, social and educational programs based upon individual initiative and local responsibility build and maintain the stature and dignity of a people. Under such circumstances freedom is established.”<sup>2</sup>

A statement on Puerto Rico of the kind proposed would presumably be made before the voting and included as part of a general statement.

UND does not presume to give an opinion on the broad political effect of such a statement. It seems clear, however, that a statement favoring independence would tend to diminish the influence in Puerto Rico of the two other Parties, namely, the Statehood Party (now Republican in affiliation) and the majority party (about 65 percent of the voters) now governing Puerto Rico.

There are two other effects which need to be considered: First, the immediate effect upon the votes in the General Assembly where two-thirds will be required and which it now appears will be secured, even if this statement is not made. It seems unlikely that any votes will be lost if the statement were made. The idea of possible ultimate independence as a result of free choice by Puerto Rico under the new Compact principle has been directly or indirectly stated several times by our Delegation, but of course this does not have the weight of a statement attributed to the White House.

The second effect of the statement is its possible repercussion in Puerto Rico. It is believed that Dr. Fernos is in the best position to advise whether such a statement might have the result of increasing political tensions in Puerto Rico, and perhaps even encouraging further violence by the Nationalists.

To sum up—it is not believed that the statement will seriously affect the vote either way but might have some serious repercussions in Puerto Rico and in the Puerto Rican community in the United States.

You know better than I whether the President's authorization with reference to Puerto Rico was made after adequate consideration and weighing of relevant facts. As you know, I was not present when you discussed this matter with the President. Thruston Morton feels that for the President to make this statement without prior consultation with some Congressional leaders would be apt to have a bad reaction. Also, I assume that consideration should be given to the effect of the statement upon the loyal elements in Puerto Rico and whether this will undermine their position and seem to build up the disloyal minority. Dr. Fernos could advise you on this.

Would this announcement on our part be seriously embarrassing to the French and be used by the extreme nationalists and perhaps communist-inspired elements in North Africa? Also, you might check the effect upon the Puerto Rican element in New York City as to 274. Eyes only for Secretary from Lodge. Reference urtel 256, November 24, concerning Puerto Rico. I assume that the President's statement to me was made after adequate consideration and weighing of the relevant facts and have no reason to think that it was not. I intend to notify Doctor Fernos on Thursday so as to give Governor Munoz-Marin time to issue a press statement taking full advantage of this dramatic confirmation of Puerto Rico's right to self-determination.

Frankly, I do not believe that the reactions in France or NYC should stand in the way of a gesture which is typical of the President's political genius and which will help American prestige in quarters where we need it. This is a good chance to recoup some of the unavoidable losses which we suffered during the Tunisian-Moroccan debates and to put the responsibility where it belongs concerning Puerto Rican independence.

I agree with you about the word "glad" and also have inserted language making clear the paramount authority of Congress. Following is the text of my proposed statement :

"MADAME PRESIDENT: While, of course, I strongly favor the new status of Puerto Rico as self-governing commonwealth associated with the US, I am not here to review the events which led to its adoption.

"My purpose in seeking recognition is to bring to the Assembly the following important message from the President of the US.

"I am authorized to say on behalf of the President that if at any time the legislature of Puerto Rico adopts a resolution in favor of complete independence, he will immediately thereafter recommend to Congress that such independence be granted and he would in addition welcome Puerto Rico's adherence to the Rio Pact.

"Madame President, we are proud of our new relationship with Puerto Rico and of the joint contribution to political progress which our two peoples have made. one else, in regard to the H-bomb explosion. I said I hardly thought the matter would arise until the June session of the Council, but it would surely arise then. However, it was felt that we ought to anticipate certain such questions and be preparing answers to them. I imagine the answers could first be drafted here, particularly as the Strauss statement pretty fully covers the subject, and would then have to be cleared in other parts of the Department and in AEC. The following are some of the questions which I think might be formulated. You will think of others.

1. What kind of land mass in the Trust Territory was destroyed, and in view of the fact that the trust power is not sovereign in the Trust Territory, by what legal right may the trust power destroy such territory?

2. Was adequate provision made for removing indigenous inhabitants, either from the island itself or from surrounding islands which were in the danger zone?

3. Was the island which was destroyed of any agricultural or economic value, and if so, what are the trust power's plans for adequate compensation to the owners or users?

4. What effects has the explosion had on marine life (a) within the three-mile limit, and (b) outside this limit, and what arrangements are being made to provide adequate substitute sources of food supply?

5. Is the trust power contemplating further H-bomb experimentation in this area, and, if so, what steps are contemplated to provide adequate safeguards for inhabitants who might be affected by "fall out" radioactive material at an even greater distance than before?

6. Does the Administering Authority feel satisfied that no long-run effects on the inhabitants, either physical or psychological, will result from these even larger and more incalculable destructive devices?

7. Does the Administering Authority feel that it is justified, in this area, in experimenting with weapons over which it has no control.

685. Petition regarding Trusteeship Territory of Pacific Islands. Hall saw Bunche this afternoon at latter's request. Bunche furnished copy Marshallese petition (separately transmitted in telegram 686) and following proposed note prepared by Security Council Affairs Department Secretariat:

"In accordance with paragraph three of the Resolution of March 7, 1949 of the Security Council (S/1280) and Resolution 46 (IV) of March 24, 1949 of the Trusteeship Council, the Security Council should be advised of the receipt by the Secretary General of all reports and petitions received from, or relating to, strategic areas under trusteeship.

In pursuance of the terms of the above noted Resolutions, the Secretary General has the honor to inform the members of the Security Council that the petition from the Marshallese people concerning the explosion of lethal weapons within their home islands has been received and that copies of this petition have been transmitted to the Trusteeship Council for examination and report to the Security Council."

Bunche expressed concern that handling this petition as proposed by Security Council Affairs Department would provide basis for Soviet intervention Security Council, and expressed personal preference for handling petition same basis as other petitions concerning the Pacific Islands. He cited T/PET, 10/27, petition from Martin R. Haase, as example of normal treatment such petitions.

Bunche also expressed view that petition seemed to be more professional in form and language than those usually received from residents trusteeship territories and expressed concern that petition might be Communist inspired. He showed Hall original petition, which he stated was received by mail direct from Marshall Islands. Petition well typed with two erasures, one corrected in ink, one in typed script. Signatures appeared authentic and included Marshallese officials in islands in addition to Mrs. Dorothy Kbuva.

Bunche requested urgent advice as to preferred treatment petition by United States. Hall advised Bunche he would check this point specifically with the Department and advise him definitively [sic] Tuesday, May 4. Hall expressed tentative view that Special Security Council note should be voided. Similar view then expressed to Security Council Affairs Department by USUN.

Please advise soonest preferred course of action in handling petition.

NEW YORK, May 3, 1954—6 p. m.

686. Petition re trust territory of Pacific Islands, following is text of petition received by UN Friday, April 30. Petition is signed with 111 signatures, 11 purported to be members of the Marshallese Congress hold-over committee and 100, separately numbered, purported to be interested Marshallese citizens. First name amongst interested Marshallese citizens is Dorothy Kabu, who is identified as first Marshallese delegate to UN trusteeship council. She also apparently signed on behalf of two members Marshallese Congress hold-over committee:

“April 20, 1954 to: The United Nations from: The Marshallese people.

Subject: Complaint regarding the explosion of lethal weapons within our home islands.

The following should not be misconstrued as a repudiation of the US as our governing agency for the UN under the trusteeship agreement, for aside from the complaint registered in this petition we have found the American Administration by far the most agreeable one in our memory. But in view of the increasing danger from the experiments with deadly explosives thousands of times more powerful than anything previously known to men, the lethal effects of which have already touched the inhabitants of two of the atolls in the Marshalls, namely, Rongelap and Uterik, who are now suffering in various degrees from ‘lowering of blood count,’ burns, nausea and the falling off of hair from the head, and whose complete recovery no one can promise with any certainty, we, the Marshallese people feel that we must follow the dictates of our consciences to bring forth this urgent plea to the UN, which has pledged itself to safeguard the life, liberty and the general well-being of the people of the trust territory, of which the Marshallese people are a part.

The Marshallese people are not only fearful of the danger to their persons from these deadly weapons in case of another miscalculation, but they are also very concerned for the increasing number of people who are being removed from their land. Land means a great deal to the Marshallese. It means more than just a place you can plant your food crops and build your houses; or a place where you can bury your dead. It is the very life of the people. Take away their land and their spirits go also.

The Marshall Islands are all low coral atolls with land area where food plants can be cultivated quite limited, even for today’s population of about 11,000 people. But the population is growing rapidly; the time when this number will be doubled is not far off.

The Japanese had taken away the best portions of the following atolls; Jaluit, Kwajalein, Eniwetok, Mille, Maloelap and Wotje to be fortified as part of their preparation for the last war, World War II. So far, only Imedj Island on Jaluit Atoll has been returned to its former owners.

For security reasons, Kwajalein Island is being kept for the military use. Bikini and Eniwetok were taken away for atomic bomb tests and their inhabitants were moved to Kili Island and Ujelang Atoll, respectively. Because Rongelap and Uterik are now radio-active, their inhabitants are being kept on Kwajalein for an indeterminate length of time. ‘Where next?’ Is the big question which looms large in all of our minds.

Therefore, we the members of the Marshallese Congress hold-over committee, writers of this petition, who are empowered by the Marshallese Congress, to act in its name when it is not in session and which is in turn a group of members representing all the municipalities in the Marshalls, due to the increasing threat to our life, liberty, happiness and possession of land, do hereby submit this petition to the UN with the hope that it will act on our urgent plea. Thus, we request that:

1. All the experiments with lethal weapons within this area be immediately ceased.

2. If the experiments with said weapons should be judged absolutely necessary for the eventual well-being of all the people of this world and cannot be stopped or changed to other areas due to the unavailability of other locations, we then submit the following suggestions:

a. All possible precautionary measures be taken before such weapons are exploded. All human beings and their valuable possessions be transported to safe distances first, before such explosions occur.

b. All the people living in this area be instructed in safety measures. The people of Rongelab would have avoided much danger if they had known not to drink the waters on their home island after the radioactive dusts had settled on them.

c. Adequate funds be set aside to pay for the possessions of the people in case they will have to be moved from their homes. This will include lands, houses and whatever possessions they cannot take with them, so that the unsatisfactory arrangements for the Bikinians and Eniwetok people shall not be repeated.

d. Courses be taught to Marshallese medical practitioners and health-aides which will be useful in the detecting of and the circumventing of preventable dangers.

We would be very pleased to submit more information or explain further any points we have raised that may need clarifications.

The Marshallese people who signed this petition are on the following sheets, divided in the following manner:

The first group are members of the Marshallese Congress hold-over committee. The second group are some of the many interested Marshallese citizens. The name of each person appears on the left-hand side and his or her home atoll and occupation on the right-hand side opposite the signature.

If more signatures are needed we will promptly supply them. The only reason we are not supplying more now is because to do so would mean a delay of some three months, the time necessary to make complete circuit of our far-flung atolls and islands by ship."

Subject: Draft Press Release in response to Marshallese Petition

At the Director's meeting yesterday with Assistant Secretary Key it was agreed that an adequate response to the Marshallese petition re the effects of the thermonuclear tests should be prepared for the use of USUN when the petition is circulated by the Secretariat to the Members of the United Nations.

The attached draft <sup>2</sup> is being circulated to the above persons simultaneously in order to lose no time. Mr. Bunche told me he might be able to delay the circulation of the petition for a day or two, but a draft response should be agreed upon in the course of today.

If necessary, we might have a meeting late this afternoon to revise this draft. It should be examined from the standpoint of facts, promises, and public relations effects.

OFFICIAL USE ONLY      PRIORITY      WASHINGTON, May 6, 1954—6:48 p. m.

543. Re: Marshallese Petition (urtel 694).<sup>2</sup> If you perceive no objection, it is suggested that USUN issue a statement simultaneously with the release of the petition, based on the following text which has been drafted and approved by AEC and the Depts of Defense, Interior and State:

The United States Government greatly regrets the effects which the recent thermonuclear tests in the Pacific Proving Grounds appear to have had on certain of the inhabitants of the Marshall Islands, as described in the petition to the United Nations. That any of the inhabitants of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands should have suffered in the slightest from the effects of these tests is a matter of concern to the American people and Government. I can assure them, as well as the Members of the United Nations, that the authorities in charge are doing everything possible to prevent any recurrence. Specifically, the 236 inhabitants who, because of a windshift, were within the area affected by a fall-out, remain under observation and any of them who may need it will receive the best medical attention. They and the American personnel of the group taking part in the test who were also exposed to the fall-out from the March 1st test were immediately provided with identical medical treatment. As soon as it was apparent that these people were exposed to fall-out, they were evacuated to the U.S. Naval Station at Kwajalein, where care was immediately provided by the U.S. Navy. In addition, a team composed of medical experts from the Atomic Energy Commission, U.S. Navy and Army, was promptly formed and sent to the area, to assure that all available medical attention and care for the personal well-being of these people were provided. The services of the American Red Cross office at Kwajalein were supplied in furthering the comfort of all. I am informed that there is no medical reason to expect any permanent after-effects on their general health, due to the fall-out.

While it is impossible at this time to assure the petitioners that their first request will be met, namely, that "all experiments with lethal weapons within this area be immediately ceased," I can say that, as the petitioners rightly imply, the United States would not be conducting such tests if it had not been determined, after very careful study, that they were required in the interests of general peace and security.

The selection of testing sites in this particular area was made after careful examination of the alternative possibilities and in an effort to insure that the tests were carried out with least possible danger.

The United States Government considers the requests and the suggestions of the petitioners eminently reasonable and valuable. The restraint and moderation with which they have been put forward cannot but elicit the admiration and sympathy of all concerned.

<sup>2</sup> In telegram 694, May 5, 7 p. m., the U.S. Representative at the United Nations (Lodge) advised the Department of State: "At my request Bunche is holding release petition [re Trust Territory of Pacific Islands] to press and public until Monday, May 10." (799.021/5-554).

As suggested, the United States Government is taking and will continue to take "all possible precautionary measures . . . before such weapons are exploded". It also agrees that "all people in the area be instructed in safety measures." Further, it is reasonable and right, as the petitioners suggest, that any Marshallese citizens who are removed as a result of test activities, will be re-established in their original habitat in such a way that no financial loss would be involved to those so moved; also, that instruction be given to Marshallese medical practitioners and health aides which will be useful in detecting dangers and avoiding harm.

The United States Government, and the officers immediately concerned with the administration of the territory, greatly appreciate the words of commendation of the petitioners with respect to the way the territory is being administered.

The welfare of the inhabitants has been the constant concern of the Government, and particularly of the High Commissioner, who will continue to spare no effort necessary to give effect to the trusteeship agreement.

SECRET

NEW YORK, May 6, 1954.

DEAR DAVE: The petition from the Marshall Islands inhabitants has raised three questions in my mind which the Department of State and Department of Interior may wish to consider among others:

1. Is there any support for Ralph Bunche's impression, which we reported to the Department, that this Petition was too perfect to have originated with the Islanders themselves without outside inspiration?

2. Why should the first reaction of the Islanders be to petition the United Nations rather than the President of the United States? Does this reflect outside inspiration? Does it reflect a complete lack of confidence in the U.S. Government as represented by its agents in the Islands?

3. How could such a Petition be signed by 111 residents of the Islands and be dispatched to New York without some advance information on it having been uncovered by the Commissioner's staff? Does the situation indicate some inadequacy in our organization in the Islands? If so, what steps are being taken to correct the situation? <sup>1</sup>

Sincerely yours,

HENRY CABOT LODGE, JR.

<sup>1</sup> In a letter of May 10, 1954 the Director of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs (Gerig) transmitted a copy of this letter to William C. CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] May 7, 1954.

DEAR MR. STRAUSS: I wish to call your attention to the fact that certain questions concerning the effects of the recent thermonuclear weapons tests conducted at the Pacific Proving Grounds in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands may be raised in the United Nations Trusteeship Council in July when it examines the administration of the Trust Territory. Normally the proceedings of the Council do not attract much publicity. It is probable, however, that the U.S.S.R., and possibly one or two other Members of the Council, such as India and Syria, will criticize the United States for testing such destructive weapons in a trust territory, in which event the press might give the matter considerable attention.

The Trusteeship Council, which is composed of twelve members (Australia, Belgium, China, El Salvador, France, Haiti, India, New Zealand, Syria, United Kingdom, United States, and the USSR) conducts a detailed study annually of developments in each trust territory. This annual examination is a feature of the International Trusteeship System established by Chapters XII and XIII of the United Nations Charter. It was under the provisions of these Chapters and more specifically the terms of the Trusteeship Agreement approved by the Security Council on April 2, 1947 and by the President on July 18, 1947, that the United States undertook the administration of the Trust Territory.

The Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands differs from other trust territories in that it has been designated a strategic area. According to Article 83(1) of the Charter, the Security Council is to exercise all functions of the United Nations relating to such areas. However, the Security Council has, pursuant to section 3 of that Article, availed itself of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council in performing those functions of the United Nations under the Trusteeship System relating to political, economic, social, and educational matters in strategic areas. Thus, the Trusteeship Council has a legitimate interest in the effects of the recent tests on the manner in which the United States is carrying out its international obligations with respect to the welfare of the inhabitants of the Territory.

Under these circumstances it is desirable to anticipate as far as possible questions that may arise at the Fourteenth Session of the Trusteeship Council, which convenes on June 2, and to collect and prepare material for use in answering and forestalling such questions. In this way the United States Representative will be better prepared to allay the possible concern of any members of the Trusteeship Council and to minimize the propaganda advantages which the U.S.S.R. may seek to derive from this situation.

There is attached a list of questions suggestive of the type that may be asked by Trusteeship Council members. The answers to come of these questions can be found in your statement of March 31. I will be grateful for any additional information or suggestions which might assist the Department of State in its preparations for the Fourteenth Session of the Trusteeship Council. Mr. Benjamin Gerig, Director of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs in the Department is in charge of these preparations, and will be glad to discuss the matter further with your office.

Sincerely yours,

DAVID MCK. KEY

LIST OF POSSIBLE QUESTIONS

Those questions marked by asterisks are wholly or partially answered by materials available in the files of the Department and in the statements made by Admiral Strauss and Ambassador Allison.

1. Why were areas within the Trust Territory chosen for testing purposes? *<sup>1</sup>

2. Does the Administering Authority feel satisfied that there will be no long-run effects on the inhabitants, either physical or psychological, from these enormously destructive devices?

3. Movement of people*

(a) Were any inhabited areas in the estimated danger zone? If so, what provision was made for the evacuation of the inhabitants? Will any such evacuation be temporary or permanent? In either case, what arrangements have been made for the welfare of the evacuees?

(b) Did the actual danger area of any of the tests extend to any inhabited area not within the estimated danger area? If so, was it necessary to evacuate any of them, temporarily or permanently? What arrangements were made for the welfare of any such evacuees?

4. Damage*

(a) How much land was destroyed?

(b) How much land was in any way damaged? What was the extent and kind of damage?

(c) What was the extent of sea area, including lagoons and surrounding open sea, contaminated or otherwise affected? What were the effects? How lasting are they? Will any areas require decontamination? Is there any way of doing this?

(d) How many persons were injured? How many were indigenous inhabitants? What steps were taken to treat and otherwise assist them? What is their present condition?

5. Compensation

(a) Was the land area which was destroyed or rendered useless of any agricultural or economic value and, if so, does the Administering Authority plan to compensate the owners or users? * How?

(b) If there was damage to any property outside the test area, are there any plans to compensate the owners or users? How?

(c) To the extent that marine life (an important source of food) was contaminated, has any compensation or assistance to the inhabitants affected been undertaken or planned?

(d) Was any compensation made for injuries sustained by indigenous inhabitants?

6. What kind of advance notification was given? Was it adequate to warn all shipping and aircraft which might enter the area?

7. Is the Administering Authority contemplating further H-bomb experimentation in this area, and, if so, what steps are contemplated to provide adequate safeguards for inhabitants or other persons who might be affected by "fall out" radioactive material at an even greater distance than before?

It is possible that questions concerning the international obligations of the United States may also be asked. The Department of State is preparing answers to questions of this type, of which the following are examples.

1. Is not the testing of such destructive devices incompatible with the obligations of the United States under the Trusteeship Agreement and the Charter?

2. In view of the fact that the Administering Authority is not sovereign in the Trust Territory, by what legal right may the Administering Authority destroy portions of such territory?

3. Does the Administering Authority feel that it is justified in experimenting in the Trust Territory with weapons which it cannot control with any certainty?

4. What authority does the United States have for closing large areas of the ocean for these tests?

5. Did any notification include the UN? Was any kind of UN approval deemed necessary, sought, or obtained? Presuming there is a right to close large danger areas of this kind, does this right include the right to contaminate international waters and marine life? *

WASHINGTON, May 10, 1954.

DRAFT FOR SECRETARY'S PRESS CONFERENCE, TUESDAY, MAY 11

Subject: Marshall Islanders Petition.

The Department has been informed, confidentially from the United Nations Secretariat, that a petition has been received by the United Nations signed by 111 Marshall Islanders, who have complained regarding the explosion of H-bombs within their territory and have alleged that a number of their people were affected. They urge that these experiments be stopped or, if this is not possible, that certain safeguards be provided. The petition is in restrained and sympathetic terms, but will doubtless create considerable reaction when it is circulated to the United Nations Members, possibly day after tomorrow, May 12.

It is recommended that if a reporter should have obtained knowledge of the existence of this petition before tomorrow and raises a question, you might wish to reply along the following lines:

The Department has no official knowledge of any such petition but if such a petition has been received and when it is brought to the attention of this Government, we will naturally give it serious consideration.

For your information, the Department is preparing a statement in sympathetic terms to be made by Ambassador Lodge when the petition is released to the United Nations Members. It has been drafted in cooperation with the Atomic Energy Commission and the Departments of Defense and Interior.

Press Release No. 1917 Issued by the Mission at the United Nations, May 14, 1954<sup>1</sup>

STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR HENRY CABOT LODGE, JR., REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE UNITED NATIONS, CON-CERNING THE MARSHALLESE PETITION ON THERMONUCLEAR TESTS IN THE PACIFIC TRUST TERRITORY

The United States Government is very sorry indeed that some inhabitants of the Marshall Islands apparently have suffered ill effects from the recent thermonuclear tests in the Pacific proving grounds, as described in the petition to the United Nations. This is a matter of real and deep concern to the American people and government, who take very seriously our responsibilities toward the inhabitants of the trust territory of the Pacific Islands.

I can assure them, as well as the members of the United Nations, that the authorities in charge are doing everything humanly possible to take care of everyone who was in the area affected by the unexpected falling of radioactive materials caused by a shift in the wind during the March 1 test.

<sup>1</sup>This statement was based on a substantial revision of the Department of State draft, the revision being transmitted by Lodge in telegram 706, May 7, 1954, 7:07 p. m., file 799.021/5-754, and approved by the Department in telegram 549, May 10, 1954, 6:57 p. m., file 799.021/5-754, neither printed.

The 236 Marshallese citizens in the affected area were immediately given the same medical examination as the American personnel of the test group who were similarly exposed. They were promptly evacuated to the United States Naval Station at Kwajalein, where their needs were immediately provided for by the United States Navy. In addition, a team of medical experts from the Atomic Energy Commission, United States Navy and Army, was promptly formed and sent to Kwajalein—and the services of the American Red Cross office at Kwajalein were enlisted—to assure any necessary medical attention and care for the personal well-being of all concerned. They are remaining under close observation and any of them who may need it will continue to receive the best medical attention.

I am informed that there is no medical reason to expect any permanent after-effects on their general health, due to the falling of radioactive materials.

The United States Government considers the request and the suggestions of the petitioners both reasonable and helpful. The restraint and moderation with which they have been presented evokes admiration and sympathy.

Regarding the petitioners' request, that "all experiments with lethal weapons within this area be immediately ceased," attention is called to the United States Government's announcement of May 13 that "the 1954 series of tests . . . have been completed," and that "within a few days sea and air traffic may be safely resumed within the 'warning area' which was set up for safety purposes for the time when the tests were taking place. Official notice to mariners and airmen will be published."

As the petitioners rightly imply, the United States would not have been conducting such tests if it had not been determined after very careful study that they were required in the interests of general peace and security. The selection of test sites in this particular area was made only after very careful examination of the alternative possibilities, and in an effort to insure that the tests were carried out with least possible danger. It will be recalled that, pursuant to the provisions of the trusteeship agreement which designate the trust territory as a strategic area, the United States notified the United Nations on April 2, 1953 that the area of the Pacific proving grounds was being closed for security reasons in order to conduct necessary atomic experiments.

Let me also assure all the inhabitants of the Pacific trust territory, and the members of the United Nations, that the United States authorities are doing everything possible to prevent any recurrence of possible danger. United States Government is taking and will continue to take "all possible precautionary measures. . . . before such weapons are exploded," as suggested by the Marshallese citizens. We also agree that "all people in the area be instructed in safety measures," and that instructions be given to Marshallese medical practitioners and health aides which will be useful in detecting danger and avoiding harm.

Further, it is reasonable and right, as the petitioners suggest, that any Marshallese citizens who are removed as a result of test activities, will be re-established in their original habitat in such a way that no financial loss would be involved.

The United States Government, and the officials immediately concerned with the administration of the territory, greatly appreciate the words of commendation of the petitioners with respect to the way the territory is being administered.

The welfare of the inhabitants has been the constant concern of the United States Government, and particularly of the High Commissioner, who will continue to spare no effort necessary to give effect to the Trusteeship Agreement.

Subject: Marshall Islanders' Petition

Participants: Sir Alan Burns—United Kingdom Delegation
Mr. B. O. B. Gidden—United Kingdom Delegation
Mr. Robert Robbins—USUN/UND
Mr. Curtis C. Strong—USUN/UND

Before the opening of the Trusteeship Council today, Sir Alan Burns and Mr. Gidden approached us to inquire how the United States Delegation planned to handle the petition from the Marshall Islanders. In particular, they wanted to know if and at what time we would submit written observations on this petition. They also inquired as to whether we expected to handle the petition in any special way. They went on to say that the reason for this inquiry was due to the fact that they would be required to obtain instructions from London and they would need to transmit our written observations to London in this connection.

They were assured that we expected to submit written observations on the petition and that these were now under preparation in Washington. We went on to say that the observations would be similar to the statement already made by Ambassador Lodge, and that we expected that, in addition to the United States' written observations, the Special Representative would be prepared to present further data.<sup>2</sup> We also stated that we expected the petition would be handled in the usual way, (i.e. through the Petitions Committee). Sir Alan and Mr. Gidden were glad to have assurances from us that there would be a sufficient interval between the receipt of the United States written observations and the consideration of the petition to enable them to send it to London and receive instructions on it.

The General Manager, Atomic Energy Commission (Nichols) to the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Key)

WASHINGTON, June 9, 1954.

DEAR MR. KEY: The Atomic Energy Commission agrees that the United States representative on the United Nations Trusteeship Council should be well informed on tests in the Marshall Islands and their effects on the Trust Territory and its inhabitants. The Commission has undertaken to answer the questions posed in your letter of May 7, 1954.

It should be noted that in developing the answers, discussions have taken place between members of the Department of State, Department of the Interior, and the Atomic Energy Commission. The information contained in the attached answers also is unclassified and, therefore, can be utilized without security restrictions.

It is hoped that this information will prove helpful in allaying any possible concern of Trusteeship Council members and in minimizing any propaganda advantage of unfriendly nations. The Commission will be glad to furnish any further assistance you may wish.<sup>1</sup>

Sincerely yours,

K. D. NICHOLS

ANSWERS TO STATE DEPARTMENT "LIST OF POSSIBLE QUESTIONS"
SUBMITTED BY ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

The following answers are in the same general order as the questions submitted.

<sup>1</sup> On June 17, 1954 a copy of this letter with enclosure was forwarded by the Director, Office of Dependent Area Affairs (Gerig) to William C. Strand, Director, Office of Territories, Department of the Interior, with the suggestion that it be transmitted to the High Commissioner of the Trust Territory (Midkiff), and inviting comments from both Strand and Midkiff. (ODA files, lot 62 D 225, "Trust Territory of Pacific Islands")

1. The area of the Trust Territory was chosen for testing purposes because of its remoteness from populated centers and from established air routes and sea lanes. Another consideration was to obtain climatic conditions which present few obstacles to operations which are rendered quite difficult even under optimum conditions.

2. It is expected that there will be no deleterious, long-run effects on the physical well-being of the native inhabitants. This is based on the best medical estimates of external radiation doses as well as on the body burden of the ingested and/or inhaled fission products. Should a technical discussion develop on this subject the Atomic Energy Commission will be pleased to make available a person competent to answer such questions as may arise.

It is, of course, difficult to evaluate precisely the psychological impact of an incident of this kind. The Atomic Energy Commission has observed, however, that

(a) the evacuees were very satisfied with their treatment and living conditions at Kwajalein and with the announced plans to restock their islands;

(b) possibly the greatest concern to the natives in their minds is the uncertainty of the time of return of some of them to their home islands. Reassurances of their return and the time thereof have been made and will continue to be given.

3. The danger area as established before the start of Castle and as extended after the first shot of the series included no inhabited areas aside from the Atolls of Eniwetok and Bikini which were occupied solely by American Test Personnel. However, outside of the established danger area, the Atolls of Rongelap and Utirik, inhabited by Marshallese, and Rongerik, temporarily occupied by American Weather Personnel, were contaminated by radioactive fall-out because of an unexpected shift in wind conditions. As a result, the Commander, Joint Task Force Seven, ordered these Marshallese and United States Weather Personnel evacuated temporarily to Kwajalein Atoll, where they were given a thorough medical examination including blood counts. They have been kept under constant surveillance by an Atomic Energy Commission-Department of Defense team of medical experts. In addition to receiving the best of medical care, the people were well provided for in terms of food, clothing, shelter, and recreation. Sixty-four Marshallese were evacuated from Rongelap, eighteen from Ailinginae, and one hundred and fifty four from Utirik. The radiation level to which the Utirik inhabitants were exposed did not demand that they be removed but they were transported as a precautionary measure. About 40 persons from Rongelap showed beta radiation burns principally on their scalps and necks. Nearly all of these burns have healed leaving no permanent marks. Some 3 of these same persons also suffered loss of hair in patches on the scalp. It is expected that there will be regrowth of normal hair in these areas. It should be noted that the people who were on Ailinginae were residents of Rongelap but were engaged at the time of fallout in harvesting food. The 28 American Weather Personnel were evacuated at the same time in the same manner. The period of close medical observation having been completed, the inhabitants of Utirik have now been moved to their original homes and established under living conditions equivalent to or better than those which obtained at the time of evacuation. The people from Rongelap are being provided with improved homes on Majuro Atoll fabricated from plywood with aluminum roofs. This type of construction will enable them more efficiently to collect rain water which will enhance their subsistence. These new dwellings on Majuro Atoll are being built on a temporary basis and they will be removed from Majuro with the natives when they are re-established in their original home-site on Rongelap in approximately six months to one year. At that time they will be furnished livestock, provisions, and impediments [implements] which will establish living conditions at least equivalent to those which obtained immediately prior to the initial evacuation.

4. There was no land destroyed or damaged outside the Pacific Proving Grounds (Eniwetok and Bikini Atolls). With respect to other atolls the fallout that occurred did not damage the land in the sense that it could not be reinhabited or could not be used for agricultural pursuits. Except for possibly the uninhabited northern islands of Rongelap Atoll, all of the islands could be re-entered safely in the near future by personnel who had not previously experienced significant radiation exposures. Since the indigenous inhabitants have already received some radiation exposure, it has been deemed wise not to allow them to return until the activity has decayed to an insignificant level. The amount of activity in the soil does not constitute a hazard to the growth and edibility of plant life. The amount of activity in Bikini and Eniwetok lagoons would make it unwise to eat fish at this time from these areas without monitoring them first. The information presently available indicates that the fish in all the lagoons, except Bikini and Eniwetok, and in the open sea are suitable for consumption at this time, as the activity is so small that no deleterious effects may be expected to the fish themselves nor will the edibility of the fish be impaired. It is pertinent to note that the fish which normally inhabit the lagoons are not of the migratory species and that those migratory fish which enter the lagoons are not apt to become radioactive during the short period in which they remain in the lagoons. No sea areas need decontamination. The radioactivity on practically all of the islands will be at a very low level in a few months.

5. As pertains to compensation for injuries and loss of income suffered by the natives, personnel of the Atomic Energy Commission and the Department of Defense are now investigating means for settling any claims which may arise. As of this date no claims have been registered by native personnel. In connection with Bikini and Eniwetok Atolls steps are being taken by the Department of the Interior and the Navy Department to settle claims in favor of the former inhabitants of those atolls for the use of their lands.

6. Prior to the Castle test series the United States established a danger area around the Pacific Proving Grounds. The area was bounded by the meridians  $160^{\circ}35'$ – $166^{\circ}16'$  East Longitude and the parallels  $10^{\circ}15'$ – $12^{\circ}45'$  North Latitude. Formal notices were published warning vessels and aircraft to avoid the area designated above. This information was disseminated through all practicably available channels such as Notice to Mariners, Notice to Airmen, daily memoranda from the various Hydrographic Branch Offices Pacific, and scheduled radio broadcasts by Hydrographic Office Pacific. After the experience of the first shot of Castle, the danger area was extended to include the above area plus a sector from  $240^{\circ}$  clockwise to  $095^{\circ}$  out to a distance of 450 miles from a point  $12^{\circ}$  North  $164^{\circ}$  East. This new enlarged danger area was made known prior to continuation of the test series through the channels noted above and in addition special notification was given to the Japanese Government through our State Department and our Far East Command.

In addition to the above warnings, the Commander, Joint Task Force Seven, maintained an active sea and air patrol of the area at all times. During periods immediately prior to shot times these patrols were intensified and extended. Areas of predicted fallout were searched from ground zero over a sector extending 600 miles out and 120 miles in width. The Atomic Energy Commission considers the above measures were adequate. If during these patrols and survey periods the Task Force had noted any personnel within the danger area it would have taken measures to warn such personnel to leave the area and the shot would have been deferred until they had moved to a safe location. The danger area was abolished on May 21, 1954 and the only areas from which transient aircraft and shipping are now precluded are the closed areas of Bikini and Eniwetok Atolls and the water areas of their lagoons within three miles to the seaward side of the peripheries of the land areas of these atolls.

7. At future tests the Atomic Energy Commission will exercise all caution possible to avoid injury to personnel or damage to property. Based on knowledge gained in past experiments, the Commission feels that it can assure that future tests can be conducted without any untoward incidents.

Memorandum by Bernard Fensterwald, Office of the Assistant Legal Adviser for United Nations Affairs, to Dwight M. Cramer of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs<sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] June 10, 1954.

Subject: Thermonuclear tests in Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

You have requested the views of this Office on a number of questions that arise out of recent United States thermonuclear tests in the Pacific and that may be asked of the United States Representative on the United Nations Trusteeship Council at the forthcoming meeting of the Council in July.

Question 1. Is not the testing of such destructive devices incompatible with the obligations of the United States under the Trusteeship Agreement and the Charter?

Answer. The testing of such devices is not incompatible with the obligations of the United States under the Trusteeship Agreement and the Charter. On the contrary, it is entirely compatible.

Article 5 of the Trusteeship Agreement provides that "the administering authority shall ensure that the trust territory shall play its part, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, in the maintenance of international peace and security. To this end the administering authority shall be entitled: . . . (3) to make use of volunteer forces, facilities and assistance from the trust territory in carrying out the obligations toward the Security Council undertaken in this regard by the administering authority, as well as for the local defense and the maintenance of law and order within the trust territory." This provision reproduces almost verbatim the duties of administering authorities which are specified in Article 84 of the Charter.

In all honesty and candor it can be stated that the tests have been undertaken by the United States as an integral part of its over-all program to strengthen itself to play a leading role in the maintenance of international peace and security. This role of the United States is an actual one, as typified by our enormous contributions in manpower and material to the collective United Nations action to repel aggression in Korea. We have been using certain facilities and assistance of the Trust Territory to strengthen our ability to carry out our obligations. We are specifically entitled to use such facilities and assistance under Article 84 of the Charter and Article 5 of the Trusteeship Agreement.

Question 2. In view of the fact that the Administering Authority is not sovereign in the Trust Territory, by what legal right may the Administering Authority destroy portions of such territory?

Answer. The abstract problem of the possessor of the "sovereignty" of the territory has little or no bearing upon the question of the legal right of the governing authority to use public property for public purposes. This right depends not on sovereignty but on the authority to govern. For example, let us assume for purposes of argument that the administering authority of a trust territory under the United Nations possesses no "sovereign rights" over the territory. This notwithstanding, there is little doubt that the governing authority has the right to build a dam and hydroelectric plant and to "destroy" real property by flooding it. If this property is private property, the governing authority can legally acquire it by exercising its right of eminent domain . . . a right which is common to governments everywhere.

In the instant case the United States has used several small parts of atolls for public purposes. Whether or not such use resulted in the destruction of the property is irrelevant as long as the property was legally acquired and used for public purposes. It is suggested that UND make an accurate determination of the ownership prior to the tests of the land actually destroyed and that rendered uninhabitable, in order to relate to the Council what parts were public domain or under private or feudal ownership. In addition, all facts relating to compensation should be marshalled; these facts should include the manner in which partial compensation has been provided by the furnishing of new homes, supplies, etc.

Question 3. Does the Administering Authority feel that it is justified in experimenting in the Trust Territory with weapons which it cannot control with any certainty?

Answer. It is believed that this is primarily not a legal question. The question seems to be based on some assumptions which may be questionable.

Question 4. What authority does the United States have for closing large areas of the ocean for these tests?

Answer. The United States does not claim the right to close off areas of the high seas. However, there has been a long-standing practice by naval powers, which has been generally acquiesced in by other nations, of using areas of the high seas for military maneuvers and tests, provided suitable warnings are given to vessels of other states for the duration of the maneuvers or tests.

Use of the term "closed area" should be avoided except when referring to the islands, atolls and their territorial waters. The high seas areas were "danger areas" or "warning areas" from which ships or planes were warned away.

The permissibility of this practice in a particular instance depends, inter alia, upon the reasonableness of the location and size of the area closed, the period of time involved, and the effectiveness of the warnings given to vessels and aircraft using the area.

The reasonableness of the location and size of the area will naturally depend upon the type of maneuver or test being carried out. It is general practice to hold such maneuvers and tests in locations designed to create a minimum amount of interference with navigation and fishing. As modern warfare develops more destructive weapons, the test areas, of necessity, increase in size. The size of our test areas in the recent thermonuclear experiments were, if anything, too small rather than too large.

The reasonableness of the length of time of closure of the area will also depend upon the type of maneuver or test being carried out. In the case of a series of thermonuclear tests the period may be an extended one because, due to weather and other factors, the date of each explosion often must be delayed in order to provide the maximum safety both within and without the test area. In addition, the area may not be safe for a period after each explosion. The rule should probably be that warnings in regard to test areas on the high seas should not be for periods longer than are reasonably necessary for safety precautions.

Warnings given by the United States have been extensive. In addition to circular diplomatic notes communicated well in advance and broad public notice given through the press and other media, United States ships and planes have given warnings to all ships or planes of other states found in or near the affected areas, particularly at times when tests were imminent. Strenuous attempts have been made to keep the areas free of ships or planes whose safety might be endangered by entry.

It can be concluded that our designation of danger areas has been in accordance with international practice and the exigencies of thermonuclear experimentation.

Question 5(a). Did any notification include the United Nations?

Answer. A search of the files of DC/R by a member of L/UNA revealed no such notification in the pre-1950 tests. However, notification may have been made to the Trusteeship Council. We have no information concerning post-1950 tests.

Question 5(b). Was any kind of United Nations approval deemed necessary, sought, or obtained?

Answer. There is nothing in the United Nations Charter or the Trusteeship Agreement which would require approval by any United Nations organ. No approval was sought or obtained. As to the use of the islands and their territorial waters, Article 1 of the Agreement designates the whole of the trust territory as a "strategic area"; and Article 13, which provides that the provisions of Articles 87 and 88 of the Charter shall be applicable, states that the administering authority "may determine the extent of their applicability to any areas which may from time to time be specified by it as closed for security reasons." (Underscoring added)

Question 5(c). Presuming there is a right to close large danger areas of this kind, does this right include the right to contaminate international waters and marine life?

Answer. No categorical answer to this question should be made. It is suggested that any U.S. spokesman confine himself to the following three points:

1. The high seas and the marine life are common property of all states and no one state has the right to contaminate them indiscriminately with impunity. However, regarding the theoretical legal question of state liability for contamination of the high seas, it should be pointed out that this is a field of the law which has never been developed or explored to any great degree. In particular, there are very few, if any, real analogies to contamination resulting from thermonuclear experimentation. International lawyers will have to give careful study to the problems involved before any firm conclusions can be reached.

2. From a factual standpoint very little is known as to the extent of contamination caused by thermonuclear tests. We know very little about the immediate effects upon marine life, the length of time that harmful characteristics may last, etc. Studies of these aspects are being undertaken and will have to be completed before it will be possible to reach any firm conclusions concerning liability.

3. In the meantime, all claims will be given sympathetic and speedy attention, and the United States will make compensation for damages resulting from thermonuclear tests where the facts warrant it.

It is requested that all position papers, draft speeches, etc. on this subject be sent to L for comment and clearance. It is also suggested that someone from L be sent to New York to advise our delegate on the Trusteeship Council on these matters when they are under active discussion.

Mr. Mason Sears, US Representative, Trusteeship Council

In the course of a friendly talk at the apartment of Ambassador Guidotti (Italian Observer at UN) last night with Mr. Sumskoi of the Soviet Delegation, the latter raised the question of the Marshall Islanders Petition and asked how we intended to handle it. I assured him that we were prepared to handle it to suit the convenience of the Council. Mr. Sumskoi gave me reason to believe that the Soviets planned to give a good deal of attention to the petition. He has been sitting for the USSR on the Petitions Committee and seemed interested in knowing whether we expected the petition to be considered, in the first instance, by that Committee.

In the course of our conversation I had occasion to say that there had been a number of atomic explosions in the USSR and that I wondered what had happened there. Mr. Sumskoi's reply was, "but that was not in a trust territory".

820. Re Marshallse petition. USUN has received copy second AP story on effect H-bomb Marshall Islanders, which quotes Dwight Heine, as spokesman and as one of authors of petition, as regretting failure US to put Marshall Islander on TCDel this year when presence NY particularly important. While USUN appreciates reasons for decision on composition TCDel this year, AP story written in way which will evoke public sympathy with Heine's position. New York Times story criticizing US on this point killed temporarily.

Under these circumstances USUN and TCDel strongly urge that Department's concerned reconsider inclusion Marshall Islander on del. Suggest that competent person from among signers of petition, such as Heine, be added to delegation with understanding that when petition considered he would be released from delegation to speak for petitioners.

Recognize that no request for oral hearing yet made but this could be precipitated.

In view absence budgetary provisions for indigenous member TCDel this year, suggest AEC financing be requested if funds not otherwise available.<sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, June 24, 1954.

DEAR MR. GERIG: In reply to your classified letter of May 10, 1954,<sup>1</sup> to which was attached a copy of a letter from Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge raising several questions with respect to the Marshallese petition to the United Nations, I am enclosing a copy of a classified letter received from High Commissioner Midkiff.

On page 2 of his letter the High Commissioner raises the question which logically comes to mind as a result of your inquiry as to whether the Department of State wishes to suggest a change in the present situation as regards the channeling of petitions. We shall be glad to receive any suggestions you may have on this question.

On page 3 of the attachment<sup>2</sup> to his letter, I believe the High Commissioner has made an erroneous reference to James Milne as the writer of the petition. The writer was apparently Dwight Heine as stated on page 2 of the letter itself and in a recently published newspaper story.

If we can provide any further information on this subject, we shall be glad to do so.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM C. STRAND

CONFIDENTIAL EN PLANE MAJURO TO KWAJALEIN, May 21, 1954.
PERSONAL

DEAR BILL: I have just completed conferences with the people of Rongelap, Ailinginae and Uterik. A factual report is attached.

I talked carefully with several persons down at Majuro to try to get a line on (1) why the petition was sent to the United Nations direct; (2) whether or not some member of our administration had helped draft the petition; and (3) whether the petition indicates a lack of confidence on the part of the Micronesians in the present U.S. administration.

1. I was informed that the Micronesians repeatedly have been told by visiting United Nations missions to feel free at all times to send petitions directly to the United Nations if they desire. Also, this accessibility—I was once told by members of a visiting mission—has been found necessary and wise in connection with certain of the old line trusteeships where colonialism has been a practice. Many petitions have gone directly to the United Nations via the visiting missions. However, these missions in the past have provided copies of the petitions for us for study prior to the time when they have been delivered to the Trusteeship Council. The Mission Secretary has given them to us in advance somewhat sub rosa.

The Majuro district officials had heard of efforts to secure names on a petition but the district administrator had thought that the petition would in due course be presented through channels. He was surprised to find that it already had gone forward. However, he felt that from previous instructions from U.N. visiting missions, it would be quite out of order for him to try to sidetrack or short circuit a petition from the people to the United Nations and, hence, he avoided following up to an extent that, in hindsight, he now feels to have been over liberal.

I think we have never had a suggestion from State about this subject of channeling petitions. I see from the letter of inquiry on the subject that this present petition and experience pretty well crystallized State's attitude. I suggest that it would be well to try to get a statement from State on the subject. We could run afoul of the United Nations on the issue, particularly if the next visiting Mission should have a member from an unfriendly country on it.

2. As to (2), whether or not a member of our American personnel helped Mr. Dwight Heine write the petition, I have his word that he wrote it unassisted except for the support and conference of the President of the Marshallese Congress. The latter speaks little English but is very fluent in Marshallese and is quite a flowery orator. Both he and Dwight Heine are brilliant and able. Heine has had two years at the University of Hawaii and besides has studied elsewhere in Honolulu and New Zealand. He is a hard worker, loves his people, is trying to serve them well.

I learned that there has been existing ever since March 1 a genuine fear of the bombs and their fall out, and of the possible loss of more land and islands. The Rongelap People when I first went there really were depressed about fears for their future health but even worse about fear that they would never get back to their home atoll. They knew of the experience of the Eniwetok People and the Bikini People. I am informed that the latter especially state that they had been assured by representatives of the AEC and Navy that they would soon be returned to their atoll. They are still on Kili and are rather unhappy about it. They value their home islands and land far more than we of America, with vast miles of unused areas, can appreciate.

While I was in Washington last, I received a pitiful letter from Amata Kabua, son of a high chief and land owner in the Marshalls, expressing great fear for the safety of his people and for the threat to the atolls. The young man is presently at Maunaole College in Hawaii. He asked me how he could get help to limit the tests, etc., and if it would be proper for him to write on behalf of his people to the President of the United States. I wrote a letter of reply to him telling him all will be well and to have no fear; I gave reasons in so far as possible. He replied thanking me and stated that he was sending my letter on to Majuro. However, my letter was received in Majuro after the petition to the United Nations had left there.

I saw the March 1 explosion. I was stopped from giving out information about it when I went on to Majuro. However, I did speak in generalities, told of the story that had appeared in Newsweek (article by the Chairman of the Joint-Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy), and tried to assure them they need not fear and that the experiments were for the safety of the Pacific and their islands. I learned of the "fall out" after I left Majuro on March 4 to go to Ponape via Kwajalein. I was told that for some weeks, when the people were losing their hair, were nauseated, had white, non-pigmented patches on their bodies, and when the AEC Medicos, without ability to let the people know why, came down and took blood samples from the people of Majuro—that fear was terrible amongst the Marshallese.

I can now report that they feel reassured as to their future health and personal safety and the security of their lands. (By the way, I wish we could get payments concluded from AEC and Navy for land before the end of this fiscal year, and before I go to U.N. That would be a big help to our prestige and a restoration of confidence.)

3. Now as to whether or not the Marshallese have lost confidence in the Administration, etc. There are many who look back upon the active Japanese occupation, when there was lots of work available, money in circulation, new and interesting recreation, etc. and to the Navy occupation and vast activities as contrasted with our cut-back programs, and feel that the great United States is neglecting the Trust Territory by comparison. We are trying and are succeeding in creating an understanding on this score.

I believe there was a reasoning amongst the Marshallese leaders that to get results on this AEC bomb testing program, it would be best for them to appeal to the U.N. quickly. My conversations do not cause me to question their cooperative attitude toward our administration or to doubt that they are aware of and appreciate the good faith and intentions of the United States.

I conclude that their direct appeal to the U.N. was due to their desire to do in what they regarded as a fearsome emergency, that which might get the best results most quickly. I know that they are happy to be under the United States and wish to help the administration of the Trust Territory in all practicable ways. I am sure there is no cause for worry as to their cooperative attitude.

If you have any further points or think certain other data might help Ambassador Lodge to understand the situation, I should be glad to hear from you about them.

Yours very truly,

FRANK E. MIDKIFF

Memoranda of Two Conversations, by Robert R. Robbins of the United States Delegation to the Trusteeship Council

OFFICIAL USE ONLY

NEW YORK, June 29, 1954.

Subject: Marshall Islanders' Petition

Participants: (1) Mr. B. O. B. Gidden, Counsellor, Colonial Affairs, UK Mission to the UN

Mr. Robert R. Robbins, USUN/UND

(2) Sir Alan C. Burns, UK Representative in the Trusteeship Council

Mr. Mason Sears, US Representative in the Trusteeship Council

(1) Mr. Gidden called at USUN today to talk over at his request the question of the handling of the Marshall Islanders' petition. He said that his delegation wanted to be as helpful as possible to us both in the Petitions Committee, where the petition would first be considered, and in the Trusteeship Council. It was important to know in so far as possible what our approach would be in order that the United Kingdom would be in a position to know what we would or would not accept by way of a report from the Committee.

What Mr. Gidden wanted to know specifically was whether or not we would accept a report recommending that the United States give assurance that the atomic and hydrogen experiments would cease—he assumed that we would not.

I told Mr. Gidden that we would not give such assurances which were not insisted on even by the petitioners. However, as he knew from our statements to date we were prepared to deal with the matter in a completely frank manner and to satisfy the petitioners on all other points raised.

After discussing the United States case in general terms with Mr. Gidden, he said that there were a number of good points which he felt that it would be easier for them to make rather than us. For example, we had heard no outcry about the Americans who had been injured by the thermonuclear fall-out. He added, however, that there was strong public opinion in Britain on the matter, and they would be obliged to act cautiously.

He felt that it was important for some friendly member of the Petitions Committee to take the initiative and, as he saw it, it would have to be the UK, France or Belgium. He would be glad to take the initiative, if we wish it. He felt that India and Syria might line up with the Soviet Union against us, and that it was possible that we would come out of the Committee with no report at all on two diametrically opposed recommendations.

I told Mr. Gidden that we wouldn't have our cause of action clearly outlined until after the High Commissioner, Mr. Midkiff arrived. However, we would be pleased and grateful if the United Kingdom would take the lead in the Petitions Committee, and would keep him informed of developments. He said that his delegation would be guided by instruction from London which could best be worked out by knowing what we wanted. He added that in this period of misapprehension on the part of the governments in a number of other fields, this was a matter on which we ought to be able to stand together.

I mentioned to Mr. Gidden that we hoped to have Mr. Dwight Heine, one of the signers of the petition as a member of our delegation. He said that he thought this was a good idea. He expressed the opinion that if Mr. Heine was to serve on our delegation, he should be designated as Assistant to the Special Representative or Assistant Special Representative and to speak and answer questions from the Council table. To turn him loose to be questioned as a petitioner would not only involve procedural difficulties, but might have unfortunate results.

(2) After talking with Sir Alan Burns this afternoon on the handling of the United States draft resolution on British Togoland and the Gold Coast we proceeded to discuss the Marshall Islanders' petition.

Sir Alan assured me of the full cooperation of the UK Delegation.

He assumed that we would probably get a 3-3 vote in the Petitions Committee, and that in the Council we might expect to get one or more abstentions from China, Haiti and El Salvador.

I told Sir Alan that as soon as we were in a position to do so, we would sit down and go over the whole matter with him.

892. Re Marshall Islands Petition. In handling the Marshallese petition, the following points are indicative of the general approach that Sears believes would be most effective.

First—obviously the blame for the miscalculation that endangered the Marshall Islanders lies entirely on the United States. It should never have happened.

Second—the Atomic Energy Commission has stated that “Based on knowledge gained in past experiments, the Commission feels that it can assure that future tests can be conducted without any untoward incidents”.

Third—the main facts in the case are as follows:

(a) 236 Marshall Islanders were endangered by the blast of these; 45 suffered some degree of burn. All of them have completely recovered. Two Atolls, Rongelap and Utirik, were affected by the blast. The larger one—Utirik—is back to normal and has been reoccupied. Rongelap will be reoccupied by its 82 inhabitants within a year.

(b) The Trusteeship Agreement of 1947 which covers the Marshall Islands was predicated upon the fact that the United Nations clearly approved these islands as a strategic area in which atomic tests had already been held. Hence, from the very outset, it was clear that the right to close areas for security reasons anticipated closing them for atomic tests.

(c) Concerning the location of the Pacific proving grounds, the fact is that there is no other place to which the United States has access where these huge thermonuclear experiments can be conducted with less risk to human life. No one in his right mind would contend that the Soviets should be the only nation to conduct nuclear experiments. At issue, therefore, is not the right to conduct these experiments. The question is whether the United States authorities in charge have exercised due precaution in looking after the safety and welfare of the islanders involved.

The conducting of thermonuclear experiments is a most difficult task under any conditions. The March "fall-out" over Rongelap and Utirik was not the only radioactive "fall-out" on record. The Soviet authorities are well aware of this. Due to miscalculations on their part, an area in Japan was subjected to a "fall-out" emanating from Siberia on blank [sic]. Fortunately, it had no more effect upon the health of the Japanese concerned than in the case of the people of Utirik in the Marshalls. But it happened.

(e) We are glad to have on our delegation Mr. Heine, who is one of the signers of the petition. He is, in fact, one of the two men who did the actual drafting of the petition. Through him and on our own behalf we are anxious to cooperate in every way possible to see that this petition receives the kind of attention that it deserves. The issue is not to be minimized because all those affected have already recovered, or because fewer people than would live in one apartment house are involved. Neither is it a simple case of taking private property under the law of eminent domain. Rather, it is a moral question which is highlighted because it occurred in a trust territory and comes against a background of experiments so powerful that all thinking people are aghast at the possible consequences.

In view possibility complex technical questions may be raised, it would be most helpful if AEC adviser could be present when this item is considered. Consideration not expected before July 7, but will advise on timing.

Preamble declares H-bomb experiments in trust territory inconsistent with UN charter, especially Article 83(2), and with trusteeship agreement and US obligations under trusteeship system.

Operative paragraphs recommend that:

- (a) US stop tests in trust territory.
- (b) Provide full compensation to those affected by recent tests.
- (c) Restore full rights of inhabitants to all land used for tests.

Resolution will be circulated tomorrow morning as document TC/.2/L.101.

11. Re Marshallese petition. Sears today handed informally to UK TCDel following draft resolution, approved by Midkiff, as indicative of kind of resolution US would like to see emerge from TC consideration of Marshallese petition. Its informal and suggestive character was emphasized. UKDel indicated it would give text careful study and see how far it could go toward introducing resolution along these lines in petitions committee: Having examined the petition from the Marshallese people concerning the trust territory of the Pacific Islands under US administration in consultation with the US as the administering authority concerned (T/P 10/28, T/OBS. 10/3, T.L. blank) [sic]: Bearing in mind the terms of the trusteeship agreement for this territory, and in particular that in article 1 of the agreement, the territory is designated as a strategic area, that according to article 13 the administering authority may specify any areas in the territory as closed for security reasons, and that according to article 5 the territory shall play its part in the maintenance of world peace and security:

1. Expressed its genuine and deep regret that a number of inhabitants of two atolls in the Marshall Islands suffered ill-effects as a consequence of the recent series of nuclear tests conducted by the administering authority in the territory, that these two atolls suffered some damage, and that the inhabitants of one of them will be unable to return to their homes for about a year;

2. Notes the measure taken by the administering authority to provide the necessary medical attention and care for the personal well-being of all the affected inhabitants;

3. Notes with satisfaction that the good health of those affected is now reported to be completely restored, that the inhabitants of Utirik, the larger of the two atolls, have been returned to their homes where new housing and other facilities have been provided them, and that provision has been made for the payment of any justified claims that may be submitted by the two atolls affected;

4. Notes the assurance of the administering authority that the best medical advice indicates that there will be no permanent deleterious after effects on the general health of the inhabitants affected:

5. Notes also the concern of the petitioners that additional Marshallese may be removed from their home atolls;

6. Welcomes the assurance of the administering authority that it does not intend to remove any further inhabitants from their present homes;

7. Urges the administering authority to return the inhabitants of Rongelap to their homes as soon as the condition of the atoll permits and to provide them all possible assistance in their re-settlement;

8. Recommends that all affected inhabitants be given periodical medical examination to assure that no unexpected or belated after-effects are overlooked;

9. Urges that prompt and sympathetic attention be given to all justified claims for damages submitted by the affected inhabitants, as well as to any justified remaining claims on the part of inhabitants removed from Bikini and Eniwetok;

10. Recommends that if the administering authority considers it necessary in the interests of world peace and security to conduct further nuclear experiments in the territory, it take such precautions as will ensure that no inhabitants of the territory are again endangered, including those precautionary measures requested by the petitioners."

Although draft resolution has been shown only to UKDel, China and New Zealand have already indicated general support of US on this matter.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> A draft resolution along the lines of the above was introduced by Belgium, France, and the United Kingdom and was circulated as a revised draft resolution on July 9 in UN Doc. This three-power draft reflected changes of substance with respect to paragraphs 6 and 9 (in the end paragraph 9 was dropped altogether) which the Department of State communicated to the Mission at the United Nations on July 8 (Gerig memorandum, July 8, 1954, ODA files, lot 62 D 225, "Trust Territory of Pacific Islands").

26. Re TC-Marshallese Petition. In TC today Menon (India) after long though fairly moderate statement on general advancement in TTPI discussed at length Marshallese petition. He declined support USSR draft resolution. He challenged right of US to use area for nuclear proving ground and introduced amendment completely revising Belgian, French, UK draft resolution. Major operative paragraph would refer question of US right utilize TTPI for nuclear tests to ICJ and would recommend that pending a decision we desist from further tests in territory.<sup>1</sup> Menon forecast that if defeated he would put item on agenda of ninth GA under Article 96 of Charter.

Menon's arguments focused on question whether it is legitimate to use TT for nuclear tests. Emphasized injury to inhabitants and "annihilation" of land and assets. Maintained that Articles 1, 5 and 13 of agreement do not provide authority for such tests which are "not strategic exercises". Emphasized US obligations under Article 76(b) of Charter, Article 6 of agreement and challenged anyone to prove that tests are in any way beneficial to people of territory and claimed they were not consonant with Charter and agreement. Stated repeatedly that he was not requesting here US cease such tests—that was not appropriate question for TC.<sup>2</sup> But was only asking that US cease using TTPI for such tests pending determination by ICJ of our legal right to continue them in territory. Matter will be taken up in petitions committee at 10 a. m. Monday, July 12.

TC delegation urgently requests detailed statement of US legal position, including coverage above ICJ proposal, for use in committee Monday morning. Also considers it essential that representative Legal Adviser's office be present in committee Monday to advise on legal aspects of problem.<sup>3</sup>

27. From Sears for Key. In view importance clearly favorable vote three-power resolution Marshall Islanders petition, consider it essential that Department take appropriate steps to assure affirmative vote El Salvador and Haiti. It is not expected that any of three draft resolutions will receive majority vote in petitions committee. Thus all three expected to come before TC for action by Wednesday, July 14.

If affirmative vote El Salvador and Haiti received, expect favorable vote three-power draft nine-three (USSR, India, Syria).<sup>1</sup> [Sears.]

Subject: Trusteeship Council Action on the Marshallese Petition Concerning Nuclear Tests in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

Attached are two copies of Trusteeship Council Document T/L.510, the 57th Report of the Council's Standing Committee on Petitions. This report relates to petitions concerning the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and summarizes the Committee's consideration of the petition from the Marshallese People concerning the conducting of nuclear tests in the Territory.<sup>1</sup>

The report contains the full text of three draft resolutions on this matter introduced respectively by: (1) the USSR, (2) Belgium-France-United Kingdom, and (3) India. It indicates that all three resolutions failed of adoption in the Committee. The votes were as follows:

- (1) USSR draft—1 in favor (USSR) ; 3 against (Belgium, France, UK) ; and 2 abstentions (India, Syria)
- (2) Three-power draft—3 in favor (sponsors) ; 3 against (India, Syria, USSR)
- (3) Indian draft—2 in favor (India, Syria) ; 3 against (Belgium, France, UK) ; and 1 abstention (USSR).

Subsequently these three draft resolutions were considered in a plenary session of the Council. At the conclusion of the debate the Indian and USSR drafts were rejected and the three-power draft was adopted. The votes in the full Council were as follows :

<sup>1</sup> An informative report on the meetings at New York, July 7 through 13, was written in a memorandum from Deputy Director of the Office of Philippine and Southeast Asian Affairs (Day), to the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs (Robertson), July 14, not printed (799.021/7-1454). The report inter alia described: (1) the British, French, and Belgian Representatives as being "of great assistance"; (2) Frank Midkiff, the High Commissioner, as "most impressive in his manner and in the extent of his knowledge in submitting to the questioning . . ."; and (3) Dwight Heine as "an effective spokesman for the Micronesians, for the Administering Authority and for the 'free world' . . ."

(1) Indian draft—

(a) operative paragraphs 1 & 2: 2 in favor (India, Syria); 7 against (Australia, Belgium, China, France, New Zealand, US and UK); 3 abstentions (El Salvador, Haiti, USSR),

(b) resolution with above paragraphs and most of preamble deleted: 3 in favor (India, Syria, USSR); 7 against (same as above); 2 abstentions (El Salvador, Haiti).

(2) USSR draft—1 in favor (USSR); 9 against (same as above plus El Salvador and Haiti); 2 abstentions (India, Syria).

(3) Belgian–French–British draft—9 in favor (same 9 as opposed to USSR draft); 3 against (India, Syria, USSR).

I should like to call particular attention to the proposal of India to refer the question of the legality of conducting nuclear tests in the Trust Territory to the International Court of Justice. The Representative of India stated that his Delegation would seek to place this proposal on the agenda of the Ninth General Assembly. UND has already initiated a study of the legal and other aspects of this problem and will be in touch with S/AE in connection with the development of a United States position on this question.

Subject: Legal Questions re Reference of Marshall Islands Nuclear Tests to ICJ

In preparation for colonial policy talks with the representatives of the United Kingdom, UND would appreciate having legal opinion on the following questions which have arisen as a result of the Indian proposal refer to the ICJ the question of the legality of U.S. testing of nuclear weapons in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands:

1. Is there any legal basis for the view that an Indian proposal to place on the agenda of the Ninth General Assembly an item whereby the GA would request an advisory opinion of the ICJ on the legality of U.S. nuclear weapons tests in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands raises a question that is not within the competence of the GA and should therefore not be placed on its agenda? In other words would there be a legal basis for an effort to keep such an Indian proposal off the Assembly's agenda?

2. What effect would seizing the Security Council of such a proposal have on the consideration of this item by the General Assembly?

3. How sound is the United States position that it is acting in conformity with the terms of the Trusteeship Agreement and the Charter in conducting the nuclear tests in the Trust Territory?

4. What type of majority vote would be required in the General Assembly to defeat a proposal to refer to the ICJ the legality of conducting such tests in the Territory, a simple or a two-thirds majority?

In light of the fact that the talks with the British are to be held on Monday, July 26, it would be greatly appreciated if you could give early consideration to these questions.<sup>1</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, July 21, 1954.

Subject: Reference of Legal Questions re Marshall Islands Nuclear Tests to ICJ

The following answers are given in response to the questions presented in your memorandum of July 19 on the above subject.<sup>2</sup>

1. In the view of this Office, it is within the competence of the General Assembly to seek an International Court of Justice advisory opinion on the legality of our tests. We know of no legal basis for keeping the Indian proposal off the Assembly's agenda. Article 10 of the Charter provides that the General Assembly "may discuss any questions or any matters within the scope of the present Charter or relating to the powers and functions of any organs provided for in the present Charter . . ." (Underscoring supplied.) The Indian proposal, at least in so far as discussion of the matter by the General Assembly is concerned, certainly falls within these broad bounds.

It should also be noted that Article 96, paragraph 1 of the Charter authorizes the General Assembly to "request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on any legal question".

2. Paragraph 1 of Article 12 of the Charter is as follows:

"While the Security Council is exercising in respect of any dispute or situation the functions assigned to it in the present Charter, the General Assembly shall not make any recommendation with regard to that dispute or situation unless the Security Council so requests."

Consequently, as long as the Security Council is considering the matter, the General Assembly could discuss it but not make recommendations concerning it.

3. The strength of the legal position of the United States would vary greatly with the drafting of the questions to be asked of the ICJ. Therefore, no generalized answer can be given to your third question. However, our over-all position is not invincible, and we believe that every effort should be made to keep the problem from being sent to the ICJ.

4. It seems probable that a two-thirds majority would be required for the referral to the Court of the question of the legality of our tests, since under Article 18(2) "questions relating to the operation of the trusteeship system" require such a majority. The question in the instant case appears to fall squarely within the "operation of the trusteeship system".

However, an argument may be made that, regardless of subject matter, requests to the ICJ for advisory opinions are not important matters and require only a simple majority. There are precedents on both sides of this issue. In the consideration of the problem of Indians in South Africa the Assembly, acting under Article 18(3), decided 29-24 that the particular request in that case was an important matter and required a two-thirds majority; and the proposal to refer failed to secure this majority. Conversely, in relation to resolution 338(IV) submitting questions concerning South West Africa, the President of the Assembly ruled that only a simple majority was required for a referral to the Court. Although the resolution as a whole passed 40-7-4, the second part of operative paragraph 2 was adopted only by a vote of 21-20-11, less than a two-thirds majority. This is a precedent for the proposition that while the substantive agenda item may be regarded as being "important" under Article 18, a request to the ICJ by separate resolution regarding the same agenda item need not be regarded as "important".

In any event, even if it is decided that the request for an advisory opinion in the present case does not fall within the provisions of Article 18(2), it should be kept in mind that under Article 18(3) a simple majority can decide that a two-thirds majority shall be required for passage of the resolution containing the referral.

The United States Representative on the Trusteeship Council (Sears) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL

NEW YORK, July 23, 1954.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: From the point of view of the United States the most important item on the agenda of the recently concluded Fourteenth Session of the Trusteeship Council was the petition of the Marshallese people protesting the use of their islands, which are among the Pacific islands administered by the United States under a Trusteeship Agreement with the United Nations, as a proving ground for nuclear weapons. In the Council the United States secured the adoption by a vote of 9-3 (USSR, Syria, India) of a resolution tacitly approving our continuing such tests in the Territory. A Soviet resolution which would have recommended that we discontinue the tests, as well as an Indian resolution which would have sought an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice on the legality of conducting such tests in the Trust Territory, were both decisively defeated.

However, the Trusteeship Council's action in no sense concludes the matter. The Indian Delegation has stated that it will place an item on the agenda of the Ninth General Assembly whereby the Assembly would seek the Court's opinion on the legality of our using the Trust Territory for these tests. Furthermore, information on the consequences of the radioactive fall-out after the test of March 1, 1954, which caused damage to the health and property of certain inhabitants of the Trust Territory outside the closed area, will have to be included in the United States report to the United Nations on its administration of the Trust Territory for the period July 1, 1953-June 30, 1954.

It is important, therefore, that the appropriate branches of the Government realize that this problem is a continuing one which will require careful consideration both immediately and in the future. I should like to emphasize two aspects of the problem which must be followed up promptly and dealt with satisfactorily if we are to minimize possible future repercussions of this issue that could be damaging to United States interests.

First of all, we cannot afford a recurrence of the accident which caused injury to a number of Marshallese as well as Americans and Japanese. We have formally and publicly undertaken to take every precaution against recurrence of this type of disaster. Should there be a repetition of the accident, we might have difficulty in obtaining the support of even our closest Allies in the United Nations in our attempt to justify the continuation of nuclear experiments in the Trust Territory and in allaying criticisms of this Government for the additional harm which they would have caused. Moreover, there would probably be considerable criticism in this country as well.

The second important matter relates to our undertakings to compensate adequately the peoples of the Trust Territory who as a result of nuclear tests have suffered ill effects as regards their health, property or capacity to gain a livelihood. One aspect of this question relates to compensation due the Bikini people, who were removed from their home island in 1946. The slowness in making a settlement of the compensation promised these people is causing increasing criticism in the Trusteeship Council. This criticism is heightened by the fact that conditions on Kili Island where they have been resettled are not satisfactory to the Bikinians. Moreover, this is the second resettlement scheme that has proved unsatisfactory to them.

Finally, as a result of the injuries, damage and displacements caused by the hydrogen bomb tests, just compensation has been promised to the Rongelap and Uterik peoples affected. There is no doubt that attention will be focused in the Trusteeship Council next year on the question of whether just and prompt settlements have been made to these people. I urge that these settlements be worked out and made forthwith.

It is my duty to place on record the above problems and to suggest that all agencies of the Government concerned be made fully aware of the need for dealing with them promptly and effectively so that the United States will not be placed at a disadvantage in the United Nations on a matter vital to our security.

Sincerely yours,

MASON SEARS

The Deputy United States Representative at the United Nations (Wadsworth) to the Acting Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Wainhouse)

OFFICIAL USE ONLY

NEW YORK, August 4, 1954.

DEAR DAVE: Prior to his departure for Africa, Mason Sears sent Ambassador Lodge his views on a number of questions relating to nuclear tests in the Pacific Trust Territories. Mr. Sears pointed out that the Indian proposal for an International Court of Justice opinion on the legality of our using the Trust Territories for tests will probably be on the agenda of the 9th General Assembly and that information on the consequences of the radio-active fall-out after the test of March 1, 1954 will have to be included in the United States Report to the United Nations on its administration of the Trust Territory. He felt in particular that two aspects of the problem should be followed up promptly to minimize possible future repercussions on this issue that could be damaging to United States interests.

The first of these is that we must avoid a recurrence of the accident which caused injury to a number of Marshallese, as well as Americans and Japanese. Should there be a repetition of the accident we might have difficulty obtaining the support of even our closest allies in the United Nations in our attempt to justify continuation of nuclear experiments in the Trust Territory. The second matter relates to our undertakings to compensate the peoples of the Trust Territory who, as a result of nuclear tests, have suffered damage to their health, property, or capacity to gain a livelihood. In this connection Mr. Sears points out that the slowness in making a settlement of compensation promised the people of Bikini who were removed from their home island in 1946 is causing increasing criticism in the Trusteeship Council. This criticism is heightened by the fact that conditions on Kili Island where they have been resettled are not satisfactory to the Bikinians, and this is the second resettlement scheme that has proved unsatisfactory to them.

Finally, since just compensation has been promised to the Rongelap and Uterik peoples affected by the hydrogen bomb tests, he points out that attention will be focused in the Trusteeship Council next year on whether just and prompt settlements have been made to these people.

It seems to us that Mr. Sears has made a strong case for United States action in working out settlements of the above questions promptly and effectively so that the United States will not be placed in a disadvantageous position in the United Nations on a matter vital to our security. I would appreciate receiving the Department's comments and advice as to the steps being taken in this matter.<sup>1</sup>

Sincerely,

JAMES J. WADSWORTH

"I have received your letter of August 4 concerning Mason Sears' expression of views to Ambassador Lodge on questions relating to nuclear tests in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. I agree with you that Mr. Sears has made a strong case for US follow-up action and I feel it would be helpful to have something additional from the Mission which would give impetus to consideration of these problems on our side, and which would give the opportunity for further State Department action with other agencies of the Government. I feel personally that it would be most appropriate for the letter to come to the Secretary from our Representative on the Trusteeship Council and believe that Mr. Sears' suggestion that copies be sent to the Department of the Interior and the Atomic Energy Commission is a good one. A letter from Mr. Sears to the Secretary would undoubtedly enable us to spur these other agencies into more rapid action in resolving which we agree are most important matters on which we will have continuing obligation to report in the United Nations.

"I trust that you will agree with me on this and will have Mr. Sears' letter sent to the Secretary. In this connection I believe it would be helpful if Ambassador Lodge wished to send a covering letter of endorsement as suggested by Mr. Sears." *Memorandum for the Files, by Charles D. Withers of the Office of

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] August 19, 1954.

On August 17 a meeting was held in the office of Mr. Gerig (UND) to discuss US strategy in the General Assembly in dealing with a threatened Indian move to have the GA recommend a cessation of nuclear tests in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands pending an ICJ opinion on the legality of those tests. Participating in the meeting were the following:

L/UNA—Mr. Fensterwald,
Mrs. Fleming;
L/FE—Miss Fite;
EUR—Mr. Allen;
ARA—Mr. Monsma;
UND—Mr. Gerig,
Mr. Ross,
Mr. Withers;
UNP—Mr. Bechhoefer,
Mr. Meyers;
NEA—Mr. Howard.

Participants in the meeting were in agreement in general on the following points:

The Indians are determined to bring up the question of nuclear tests in general, and probably the Trust Territory bomb tests in particular, before the General Assembly. As a matter of fact, the Indian proposal for a general moratorium on nuclear tests is an annexed document to the report of the Disarmament Commission, and, as such, will be on the First Committee agenda. No advance appeal to the Indians would deter them from raising the issue.

In addition to the Disarmament Commission report in Committee One, it is believed that India will ask for a separate agenda item for the Fourth Committee on the tests in the Trust Territory. It is possible, however, that instead of specifying the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the Indians may broaden the issue to tests of this nature in any Trust Territory. For us to have the issue raised by a friendly power in the Security Council in order to dispose of it before its consideration in the General Assembly would be poor strategy in as much as it would be obvious to others that this move was designed to preclude a resolution by the General Assembly. And if the Indian idea on the tests in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands did not prevail the door would be left open for them to broaden the issue in the General Assembly, possibly to our disadvantage. Our basic policy requires the continuation of the nuclear tests in the Trust Territory and we do not want to be placed in a position of having to defy an opinion by the ICJ. It was felt that we have a strong position, legally and morally, in this matter. However, we realize that there is risk of an adverse Court decision, due to the possibility of political factors entering into the decision. We must therefore endeavor to keep the issue away from the Court.

As to the voting position in the plenary of the Assembly, it was recommended that we oppose strongly any move to have those nuclear test issues decided by a simple majority vote. Under Article 18, questions involving the "maintenance of peace and security" and the "operation of the trusteeship system" require a two-thirds vote. It would be highly important to secure at least 31 votes against the Indian proposal in the committee stage, and if this fails to have at least 21 or more to defeat it in the plenary. In view of the general predilection in the Sixth Committee for referring nearly all disputes to the Court, we should endeavor in the strongest way possible to keep the issue out of Committee Six.

In view of the decision that it would be almost impossible politically and practically to keep the Indian theme from being discussed in the General Assembly and in view of the inadvisability of having the problem seized on our initiative by the Security Council, the main problem is to enlist as much support in the Assembly as possible toward defeating any resolution which would refer the question to the Court. To this end, it was agreed that an Aide-Mémoire should be sent to selected posts in the field covering (1) a general restatement of our position on disarmament, (2) our position on the Indian proposal for a general moratorium, scheduled for Committee One when the Disarmament Commission report is discussed, and (3) our position on the possible Indian move in the Fourth Committee on tests in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. The Aide-Mémoire would be held in abeyance to see whether or not the Indians make their move to inscribe the item before the deadline of August 21. Should they do so, the Aide-Mémoire should be delivered to selected friendly governments in an endeavor to enlist their support. At the same time it was recommended that an instruction should be sent to New Delhi requesting the Ambassador, at his discretion, to bring to the attention of the Government of India our position on this Indian move.

(Should the Indians fail to make a move before August 21 and elect to attempt to inscribe the item later on an urgent basis, our position might be to fight this move on the ground that the general subject is being or will be discussed in Committee One under the Disarmament item.)

Subject: Request for opinion of L/UNA on attached memorandum for possible use during the forthcoming General Assembly on "Legal Right of Administering Authorities to Conduct Nuclear Tests in Trust Territories under their Jurisdiction"

Attached is a memorandum containing relevant provisions of the Trusteeship Agreements approved by the Security Council (in the case of the Pacific Islands) and the General Assembly (in the case of the other Trust Territories) for the administration of UN Trust Territories which would appear to allow Administering Authorities concerned to conduct nuclear tests in Trust Territories in the interest of international peace and security. This paper was prepared with a view to use in justifying a possible United States contention that all Administering Authorities would have such a right, in the event the Indians broaden their threatened resolution calling for cessation of nuclear tests in Trust Territories pending an opinion of the International Court of Justice.

[Enclosure]

LEGAL RIGHT OF ADMINISTERING AUTHORITIES TO CONDUCT NUCLEAR TESTS IN TRUST TERRITORIES UNDER THEIR JURISDICTION <sup>1</sup>

According to the provisions of the ten Trusteeship Agreements approved by the General Assembly, as well as the one approved by the SC, for the administration of Trust Territories under the supervision of the United Nations, it would appear that all Administering Authorities would be within their legal rights to conduct nuclear tests in these territories in order to contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security. Provisions contained in all the agreements, except that of Nauru, state that the Administering Authorities shall be responsible for seeing that the trust territories under their administration shall play their part, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, in the maintenance of international peace and security.

Five of the Agreements (i.e. British Cameroons, British Togoland, Tanganyika, Western Samoa, and the Pacific Islands) specifically provide that the Administering Authority shall be entitled to establish bases and to make use of "facilities and assistance" from the Trust Territory concerned in carrying out obligations to the Security Council undertaken by the Administering Authority. Provisions of the Agreements incorporating these provisions are as follows:

TRUSTEESHIP AGREEMENTS APPROVED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY FOR BRITISH CAMEROONS, BRITISH TOGOLAND, TANGANYIKA (ARTICLE 5 OF EACH AGREEMENT—OFFICIAL RECORD, 2ND PART, 1ST GENERAL ASSEMBLY, SUPPLEMENT 5)

The Administering Authority shall be entitled "to establish naval, military and air bases, to erect fortifications, to station and employ its own forces in the Territory and to take all such other measures as are in its opinion necessary for the defence of the Territory and for ensuring that it plays its part in the maintenance of international peace and security. To this end, the Administering Authority may make use of volunteer forces, facilities and assistance from the Territory in carrying out the obligations towards the Security Council undertaken in this regard by the Administering Authority, as well as for local defence and the maintenance of law and order within the Territory".

TRUSTEESHIP AGREEMENT APPROVED BY THE SECURITY COUNCIL FOR THE PACIFIC ISLANDS (ARTICLE 5)

"In discharging its obligations under Article 76(a) and Article 84 of the Charter, the Administering Authority shall ensure that the Trust Territory shall play its part, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, in the maintenance of international peace and security. To this end, the Administering Authority shall be entitled:

. . . "3. to make use of volunteer force, facilities and assistance from the Trust Territory in carrying out the obligations towards the Security Council undertaken in this regard by the Administering Authority, as well as for the local defence and the maintenance of law and order within the Trust Territory".

The Trusteeship Agreement for Western Samoa (Article 10) provides that the Administering Authority shall be entitled to:

(Paragraph 3) "to make use of volunteer forces, facilities and assistance from the Trust Territory in carrying out the obligations towards the Security Council undertaken in this regard by the Administering Authority, as well as for local defence and maintenance of law and order within the Trust Territory".

(Paragraph 4) "to take all such other measures in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations as are, in the opinion of the Administering Authority, necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security and the defence of Western Samoa".

By granting to the Administering Authority the right to make use of facilities from the Trust Territories in carrying out obligations to the Security Council, it may be argued from a legal point of view that the United Nations has recognized the right of the Administering Authorities to take such measures in these territories as may be necessary to maintain international peace and security, including the conducting of nuclear tests.

In the case of Ruanda Urundi (Article 5 of the Agreement), French Togoland (Article 4*b*), and French Cameroons (Article 4*b*), the Administering Authorities are authorized by Trusteeship Agreements to "take all measures of organization and defence appropriate (within the limits of the Charter) for ensuring . . .

"(b) the respect for obligations concerning the assistance and facilities to be given by the Administering Authority to the Security Council" and

"(d) the defence of the Territory within the framework of special agreements for the maintenance of international peace and security".

These provisions, while not as explicit as those referred to above, might under certain circumstances be held to provide a legal basis for the conducting of nuclear experiments in these Territories for the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Trusteeship Agreement for New Guinea, by Article 4, makes the Administering Authority "responsible for the peace, order, good government and defence of the Territory and for this purpose" gives to Australia "the same powers of legislation, administration and jurisdiction in and over the Territory as if it were an integral part of Australia, and will be entitled to apply to the Territory, subject to such modifications as it deems desirable, such laws of the Commonwealth of Australia as it deems appropriate to the needs and conditions of the Territory". This article would therefore seem to permit Australia to conduct such experiments, particularly since it is additionally authorized by Article 7, "to take all measures in the territory which it considers desirable to provide for the defence of the Territory and for the maintenance of international peace and security".

By Article 4 of the Trusteeship Agreement for Nauru, the Government of Australia is made "responsible for the peace, order, good government and defence of the Territory and for this purpose, in pursuance of an agreement made by the Governments of Australia, New Zealand, and the United Kingdom, the Government of Australia will on behalf of the Administering Authority and except and until otherwise agreed by the Governments of Australia, New Zealand and the UK continue to exercise full powers of legislation, administration and jurisdiction in and over the Territory". By this article, there would seem to be no legal restriction imposed on Australia to test nuclear weapons in Nauru if it deemed to do so is in the best interests of international peace and security.

According to the Trusteeship Agreement for Somaliland, Italy (by Article 2) is made "responsible to the United Nations for the peace, order, and good government of the Territory in accordance with the terms of this Agreement". By Article 6, Italy is authorized to "maintain police forces and raise volunteer contingents for the maintenance of peace and good order in the Territory" and "after consultation with the Advisory Council, may establish installations and take all measures in the Territory, including the progressive development of Somali defence forces, which may be necessary within the limits laid down in the Charter of the United Nations, for the defence of the Territory and for the maintenance of international peace and security".

These provisions of the Trusteeship Agreement for Somaliland, as in the case of other Trusteeship Agreements, would appear to permit the Administering Authority to conduct nuclear experiments in Somaliland so long as they are being conducted for the express purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

A section of some length concerning disarmament (paragraph g) precedes this extract.]

(h) NUCLEAR TESTS IN TRUST TERRITORIES

In the recent session of the Trusteeship Council a question related to the disarmament question was raised, namely the use of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands for nuclear tests. India proposed that the Council recommend to the General Assembly that it request an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice on the legality of using the Trust Territory for nuclear tests and that, pending the Court's decision, the United States desist from further tests. This proposal and a Soviet proposal calling upon us to desist from further tests in the Trust Territory were rejected, the key parts of the Indian proposal by 7 votes (Australia, Belgium, France, New Zealand, United Kingdom, United States and China), to 2 (India, Syria), with 3 abstentions (El Salvador, Haiti and the USSR), and the Soviet proposal by 9 votes to 1 (USSR) with 2 abstentions (Syria and India). We supported a UK-French-Belgian resolution which the Council adopted by 9 votes to 3 (India, Syria, USSR). This resolution recognized that the agreement provides that the territory "shall play its part in the maintenance of world peace and security" and recommended that if we, as the administering authority, consider it necessary to continue further nuclear tests in the interests of peace and security, we should take such precautions as will ensure that no inhabitants are endangered.

We anticipate that India may introduce in the General Assembly a proposal similar to its proposal in the Trusteeship Council. We would strongly oppose such a proposal. Our conducting of nuclear tests in the Territory is clearly in conformity with our rights and obligations as set forth in the Charter and the Trusteeship Agreement. Article 84 of the Charter and Article 5 of the Agreement state in almost identical language that the Administering Authority "shall ensure that the Trust Territory shall play its part in the maintenance of international peace and security". We are clearly entitled to use the facilities of the Trust Territory to this end. It would be contrary to the security of the United States and of the free world for us to agree to desist from tests which are an essential part of the development of our strength in nuclear weapons. In areas under our jurisdiction there is no place where these tests can be conducted with less danger than in the Trust Territory. We recognize that in conducting such tests we must take every possible precaution to safeguard the welfare of the inhabitants. While we will, of course, continue to take every such precaution, as in the Trusteeship Council, we would not object to and would in fact support a resolution by the General Assembly calling attention to our obligations in this regard.

CONFIDENTIAL

NEW YORK, August 26, 1954.

DEAR FOSTER: Before going off to Africa with the United Nations Visiting Mission, Mason Sears brought to my attention the vital importance which he attaches to the United States' carrying out promises made, in both public and private, to the Marshall Islanders in connection with our atomic experiments. Attached is a letter from him on this matter, expressing views with which I heartily concur.<sup>1</sup>

It seems to me that we cannot hope to carry out an effective program in the United Nations, and especially in the Assembly this coming Fall, if the United States is so vulnerable to charges not just from the Soviets and their crew, but from the Indians and similar neutralists, that our promises to compensate the Marshallese and to arrange to protect them from future dangers springing from atomic experiments are so much sound and fury signifying nothing.

Attacks of the kind the Soviets and Indians will make must be met head-on, and with as convincing a record as is possible. Now that so much time has elapsed since our promises were made, restoring the record to a balance favorable to us will not be easy. However I am convinced that an active program by the State Department pursued with the other agencies of the Government could give the tangible results needed to honor our commitments.

Faithfully yours,

HENRY CABOT LODGE, JR.

Position Paper Prepared in the Department of State for the United States Delegation to the Ninth Regular Session of the General Assembly

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] September 7, 1954.

INDIA'S PROPOSED MOVE TO HAVE THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY SEEK AN ADVISORY OPINION OF THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE ON THE LEGALITY OF US NUCLEAR TESTS IN THE TRUST TERRITORY OF THE PACIFIC ISLANDS

THE PROBLEM

It is anticipated that India will raise in the General Assembly, as it did in the Fourteenth Session of the Trusteeship Council, the question of the legality of our nuclear tests in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. Their move to have the Council recommend that the General Assembly request an advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the question and, pending that opinion, to ask the United States to cease the tests in the Territory, was defeated. In its stead a resolution sponsored jointly by the United Kingdom, France and Belgium implying the necessity of continuing the tests and recommending that we take stringent precautions in protecting the Territory and its inhabitants was passed. The problem is to determine our stand in the event the Indians revive this question in the General Assembly.

UNITED STATES POSITION

1. The Delegation should oppose any proposal which would have the effect of recommending suspension or cessation of nuclear tests in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

2. The Department believes that, regardless of the question of the jurisdiction of the General Assembly over strategic areas, it would be politically unwise for the Delegation to attempt to preclude, through the use of any technicalities, discussion of the issue in the General Assembly.

3. Should the Indians endeavor to have a separate item inscribed on the agenda and, as a result, the General Committee is considering the appropriateness of its inscription, the Delegation should state that under Article 84 of the Charter and Article 5 of the Trusteeship Agreement we have a clear right to conduct these tests in the Trust Territory and reference to the Court is unnecessary, but that if the majority of the Members of the General Committee believe such a discussion is worthwhile, we would be prepared to discuss the item in the appropriate committee. In a vote on inscription the Delegation should either abstain or vote in favor at its discretion in the light of circumstances in the Committee.

4. If then the General Committee is faced with the problem of assigning such an item, the Delegation should :

(a) if the item includes a proposal for cessation of the tests pending a Court opinion, urge strongly that this matter be considered together with the general disarmament question in the First Committee; or,

(b) if the item does not include a proposal for cessation of the tests, urge that as a trusteeship matter it should be discussed in the Fourth Committee.

5. With the thought in mind that the wisest course of action would be to face this issue squarely and to make every effort to defeat any move for a referral of the question to the Court and for a cessation of the tests, the Department has circularized its diplomatic missions in friendly countries, informing those missions of our position and instructing them to enlist the support of those governments. The Delegation should pursue this course in its contacts with delegates from friendly nations.

6. The Delegation should oppose strongly any move to have the nuclear test issue decided by a simple majority vote, citing Article 18 of the Charter, which places "the operation of the trusteeship system" in the category of questions requiring a two-thirds vote, as well as noting that this is also a recommendation affecting the maintenance of international peace and security and so requires a two-thirds vote under this Article.

7. Should the delegation believe that introduction of a resolution along the lines of the one passed by the Fourteenth Session of the Trusteeship Council would assist in attaining the Department's objective it may seek to secure the introduction and adoption of such a resolution.

8. Should any delegation introduce independently any resolution along the lines of the one adopted by the Trusteeship Council, the Delegation should support it.

COMMENT

Following the hydrogen bomb test of March 1, 1954 in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and the resultant radioactive "fall out" which harmfully but temporarily affected certain inhabitants of the Marshall Islands, representatives of the Islanders petitioned the United Nations to have the United States cease the nuclear tests or, if this were considered impossible under present world conditions, to request the United States to take extraordinary precaution toward averting future occurrences of this nature. The petition at the same time praised the American administration of the Trust Territory. During a discussion in the Trusteeship Council of this petition, the Representative of India proposed that the Council recommend to the General Assembly that it request an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice on the legality of using the Trust Territory for nuclear tests and that, pending the Court's decision, the United States desist from further tests. That resolution failed in the Trusteeship Council, only India and Syria favoring its principal operative parts; El Salvador, Haiti and the USSR abstained. However, India's aversion to our nuclear tests in the Pacific and to nuclear weapons in general has been clearly enunciated on numerous occasions, including public statements by Prime Minister Nehru himself, and although they failed to request an agenda item on this issue before the deadline of August 21, we anticipate their pursuance in the General Assembly of their abortive move in the Trusteeship Council. Already the Indians have made certain proposals to the Disarmament Commission for a general moratorium on nuclear tests. Their submission is an annex to the Report of the Disarmament Commission and, as such, will be on the agenda of the First Committee.

The Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands is in a different category from other trust territories in that it has, under Article 82, been designated as a strategic area. Article 83 of the Charter states, in part, that United Nations functions relating to strategic areas shall be exercised by the Security Council, which avails itself of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council. It could thus be argued that the Security Council is the appropriate place for a discussion of this issue. However, the Trusteeship Agreement for the Territory, agreed to by the United States and the Security Council, provides that the General Assembly may discuss the administration of the Territory. The Department takes the position that this gives the General Assembly the right to discuss the nuclear tests. From the political point of view the Department has taken the stand that to attempt to throttle discussion would evoke a reaction unfavorable to the United States, even from some of our friends.

The United States, in considering this probable Indian presentation, should follow the basic premise that under present circumstances it remains necessary for us to continue the tests and that the most practical place so far found is in the Trust Territory. The United States considers that it has been and is acting within its legal rights under the United Nations Charter and the Trusteeship Agreement. It is, however, to our best interest to keep the question off the ICJ docket. It is not possible to predict whether the Court would render an opinion favorable to the United States since it must be anticipated that political factors may have some effect upon the Court's findings. We would not want to risk the possibility of an adverse opinion in the Court, because our interests and those of the free world require that the tests go on in the Trust Territory; and we certainly would not want to be placed in the position of noncompliance with even an advisory opinion of the Court.

Regardless of the possible outcome of a Court opinion, it is in the interests of the United States that international consideration and publicity of this matter be terminated at the earliest possible moment, since it serves only to embarrass the United States and to provide material for the communist propaganda grist mills. Referring the matter to the Court would simply prolong and accentuate the publicity given to this matter.

In its discussions with other delegations pursuant to Recommendation No. 4 above, the Delegation should pursue the following lines: Our conducting of nuclear tests in the Territory is clearly in conformity with our rights and obligations as set forth in the Charter and the Trusteeship Agreement. Article 84 of the Charter and Article 5 of the Agreement state in almost identical language that the Administering Authority "shall ensure that the Trust Territory shall play its part in the maintenance of international peace and security." We are clearly entitled to use the facilities of the Trust Territory to this end. It would be contrary to the security of the United States and of the free world for us to agree to desist from tests which are an essential part of the development of our strength in nuclear weapons in the absence of agreement on comprehensive and safeguarded disarmament. In areas under our jurisdiction there is no place where these tests can be conducted with less danger than in the Trust Territory. We recognize that in conducting such tests we must take every possible precaution to safeguard the welfare of the inhabitants. While we will, of course, continue to take every such precaution, as in the Trusteeship Council, we would not object to and would in fact support a resolution by the General Assembly calling attention to our obligations in this regard.<sup>1</sup>

WASHINGTON, September 11, 1954.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I am enclosing copies of letters received recently by the Secretary from the United States Representative to the United Nations, Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., and the United States Representative on the Trusteeship Council, Mr. Mason Sears. Both letters refer to discussions in the United Nations of nuclear tests in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and both stress the importance of carrying out promises made to the Marshall Islanders affected by the tests concerning compensation for damages suffered from past tests and safeguards against possible harmful consequences of any future tests.

I fully share the views expressed by Ambassador Lodge and Mr. Sears. The United States will certainly be exposed to serious criticism in the United Nations and elsewhere if the promises we have made to the Marshallese people are not kept.

I would appreciate your calling to the attention of the officers concerned in your Agency the importance which the Department of State attaches to prompt fulfillment of these promises. I would also appreciate your informing the Department of State of the steps taken to this end so that our representatives in the United Nations will be in a position to deal effectively with any charges that may be made concerning our actions in the Trust Territory. In this connection, I should like to draw your attention to the fact that while India has not thus far placed on the agenda of the forthcoming session of the General Assembly an item concerning the legality of nuclear tests in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, it continues to be probable that this matter will be discussed in the Assembly.

I am sending similar letters to the Atomic Energy Commission and the Department of the Interior.<sup>1</sup>

Sincerely,

WALTER B. SMITH

CONFIDENTIAL

[WASHINGTON,] September 11, 1954.

DEAR CABOT: In the absence of the Secretary, I am writing to acknowledge your letter to him of August 26, 1954, enclosing a letter from Mason Sears and endorsing his views on the importance of carrying out promises made to the Marshall Islanders in connection with our nuclear experiments in the Marshall Islands. I heartily concur with the views expressed by you and Mr. Sears and am sending copies of your letter and that of Mr. Sears to the Atomic Energy Commission and the Departments of the Interior and Defense. Copies of my letter of transmittal are enclosed. I have asked that this matter be pursued energetically so that we may present the best possible record when our activities in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands are discussed in United Nations bodies.

To assist you in dealing with this question when it arises, I am requesting that you and Mr. Sears be kept informed of the steps taken to keep the promises to which you have referred. I am also enclosing a brief note of acknowledgement to Mr. Sears which I would appreciate your passing on to him when he returns from Africa.<sup>1</sup>

Faithfully,

WALTER B. SMITH

(Background: New Delhi's Telegram 336<sup>1</sup> said that a memorandum incorporating the substance of paragraphs "g" and "h" of Department's CA-1368<sup>2</sup> on disarmament and the nuclear tests had been included in a memorandum and given to the Government of India. to the GOI. New Delhi's 357 informed the Department that the text of the pertinent paragraphs of CA-1368, with certain language changes, had been handed to Natarajan, Deputy Secretary for UN Affairs, GOI Ministry of External Affairs).

In a discussion today with Mr. Meyers of UNP, it was agreed that no special instruction would be sent at present to New Delhi directing the Chargé d'Affaires to seek an appointment with Nehru for the purpose of explaining our position, consistent with security factors on the nuclear test issue should it arise. Instead, it was agreed that the Delegation would attempt to find out in New York what, if any, steps the Indians proposed to take in the matter and that if there were a clear indication that the Indians in fact expected to bring up the matter, the Department would then instruct the Embassy in New Delhi to contact Nehru. It was agreed that such an approach at the present time might defeat our objective and that it would be better to wait and see what, if any, effect the Embassy's memorandum left with the GOI would have on India's thinking.

[WASHINGTON,] October 29, 1954.

DEAR CABOT: In your letter of August 26, 1954, you stressed the importance which you and Mr. Mason Sears attach to this Government's carrying out the promises made last summer in the Trusteeship Council to the Marshall Islanders in connection with nuclear tests carried out in their islands. In letters of September 11, 1954, Acting Secretary Smith informed you and Mr. Sears that your letters to me on this matter, along with the Department's endorsement of the views expressed therein, had been transmitted to the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Defense and the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission. I have recently received comments on your letters from each of them.<sup>1</sup> It is clear from those comments that there is complete agreement with the views which you and Mr. Sears expressed, namely, that we must prevent any recurrence of the accident which caused injury to Marshall Islanders and others. I am assured that every precaution will be taken to that end.

<sup>1</sup> Letters not printed. Admiral Strauss' letter was sent Sept. 30 but has not been found in the files of the Department of State. The letter of the Secretary of Defense was dated Oct. 15, 1954 (799.021/10-1554) and that of the Secretary of the Interior was dated Oct. 20, 1954 (799.021/10-2054).

With regard to the question of compensating those Marshall Islanders who suffered injuries, damages or losses as a result of the March 1st test, Secretary of Defense Wilson informs me that, after consultation with the Atomic Energy Commission, the Department of Defense has accepted responsibility for settling any legitimate claims submitted by the Marshallese in this connection. It has been determined that the Foreign Claims Act provides the Defense Department with statutory authority for payment of such claims not in excess of $5,000.

Secretary of the Interior McKay informs me that as a result of this decision, he has asked the Government of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands to inform the Marshall Islanders of their right to submit claims and to assist them in the preparation of their claims. Thus, while no claims have been received by the Departments concerned in Washington, the necessary preliminary steps for their submission and settlement at an early date have been taken.

Secretary McKay points out that the situation with regard to the compensation of the people removed from Bikini Atoll is somewhat more complicated. It is inextricably bound to the entire question of the conditions under which land in the Trust Territory is to be reserved and utilized by the military. He indicates that the Interior Department is actively engaged in discussions with the Department of the Navy on this question and that some progress is being made.

The Department has been informed by the Atomic Energy Commission that the Commission, in cooperation with the Navy Department, has undertaken the first of its periodic medical examinations of the Islanders who suffered ill-effects from the nuclear explosion. The Commission is also making plans for a resurvey of the affected atolls and the collection of biological specimens and soil samples. We are informed that this survey will be undertaken in the very near future.

With regard to the problem of assisting the Bikinians in their adjustment to the island of Kili on which they have been resettled, Secretary McKay informs me that a community development project designed to improve the Islanders' agricultural production and to help them develop other economic enterprises is now under way. Additional measures to improve communication and transportation between Kili and the nearby island of Jaluit are planned.

The Department will keep you informed of further developments on this matter as they arise.<sup>2</sup>

Sincerely yours,

JOHN FOSTER DULLES

<sup>2</sup> In a letter of the same date Secretary Dulles transmitted to the U.S. Representative on the Trusteeship Council (Sears) a copy of the instant letter, informing him that "the Department will keep you informed of developments in this matter as they arise." (799.021/8-2654)

The Chairman of the United States Atomic Energy Commission (Strauss) to the Secretary of State

CONFIDENTIAL

WASHINGTON, December 2, 1954.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In my letter dated September 30 to Under Secretary Walter Bedell Smith,<sup>1</sup> I noted the Commission's interest in an expeditious settlement of the problems arising from the use of certain locations in the Marshall Islands for the conduct of nuclear experiments. Mr. Smith, in his letter of September 11, forwarding copies of letters received from Ambassador Lodge and Mr. Mason Sears, had requested that the Commission inform the Department of State of the steps being taken to carry out the commitments made by the U.S. Government to the Marshall Islanders affected by the Pacific tests. In my interim letter to Mr. Smith I stated that the Commission would prepare a detailed reply on this subject.

In the recent meetings of the U.N. Trusteeship Council the United States gave assurances that it would take every precaution to prevent the recurrence of casualties as a result of fallout such as occurred following the March 1 experiment. As you know, immediately following that test, which was the first of the Castle series, the warning area around the test site was greatly enlarged. A warning area of similar scope will certainly be established in any future experiments conducted in the Pacific Proving Grounds. You may be assured that the Commission is determined that no repetition of such an accident shall occur.

As Mr. Mason Sears has recorded in his letter to you of July 23, a copy of which Mr. Smith forwarded to the Commission with his letter of September 11, there are two outstanding problems which relate to compensation to the Marshall Islanders as the result of Pacific test activities. The first of these concerns compensation due the inhabitants of Bikini, who were displaced in 1946. In respect to this aspect of the problem a Memorandum of Understanding is now being negotiated between the Departments of Navy and Interior under the terms of which use and occupancy agreements will be negotiated between the Department of the Navy and the Government of the Trust Territory for the use of Bikini and Eniwetok atolls by the Atomic Energy Commission. The Commission has authorized the Department of Navy to represent the Commission in these negotiations. As presently visualized the agreements for the use of Bikini and Eniwetok, when completed, will provide for lump sum payments to the Government of Trust Territory from funds appropriated by the Congress to the Department of the Navy. These payments will enable the Government of Trust Territory to compensate the Bikinians. The Commission has been advised that the Department of the Navy is continuing the negotiations with the Department of Interior, and it is our hope that this aspect of the compensation matter can be finally discharged in the near future.

The second aspect of this problem refers to the promises made to compensate the Rongelap and Uterik people for damages resulting from the March 1 fallout. The Department of Defense, under authority derived from the Foreign Claims Act, has agreed to consider and settle these claims. It should be noted, however, that such claims must be presented within one year after the occurrence of the incident out of which the claim arises. The Commission is not aware that any claims from the people of Rongelap and Uterik have yet been received.<sup>2</sup>

Immediately after the March 1 fallout, it was deemed necessary, as you know to remove the natives of Rongelap and Uterik to Kwajalein for medical observation and care. The natives received the finest medical attention available. It soon became apparent that the natives of Uterik had not been exposed to dangerous amounts of radioactive fallout and they were returned to their native homes, under living conditions equivalent to or better than those existing before their evacuation. Continued medical attention was given, however, to the natives of Rongelap who had received significant amounts of radioactive contamination. Because of residual radioactivity on Rongelap, it was deemed wise to resettle the Rongelapians on another atoll until the activity had decayed to a safe level. These people have therefore been temporarily housed on the island of Ejit in Majuro Atoll. Housing was constructed for them under supervision of an A.E.C. contractor, using funds supplied by Joint Task Force 7. These houses, of plywood with aluminum roofs, have been so constructed as to make it possible to remove them to the natives' original home when it is safe for them to return.

Meanwhile the Atomic Energy Commission has accepted the responsibility for continued medical examinations of the natives of Rongelap as a routine precautionary measure. The first medical recheck has just recently been completed and was conducted for the Commission by medical teams from the Naval Medical Research Institute and the Navy Radiological Defense Laboratory. The preliminary report of these medical teams has been reviewed in the Commission and reveals that no permanent impairment of the natives' health is to be expected. A further medical recheck will take place probably around February 1955 and further checks will be made thereafter.

<sup>2</sup> Marginal notation by C. Dudley Withers of the Office of Dependent Area Affairs states: "Interior (Yeomans) says deadline has been brought to attention of those affected. CDW 12/16/54". William Yeomans was an officer in the Interior Department's Office of Territories.

The A.E.C. has also accepted the responsibility for such periodic resurveys of Rongelap and the collection of biological specimens and soil samples as may be necessary to determine the earliest possible time when the natives may be safely returned to their homes. The first such resurvey is presently being planned and it is expected that it will be made within the next two months. It is still the Commission's view that the residual level of radioactivity will decay to insignificance and the natives will be returned to their homes by May 1955.

You will be interested in two further programs which the Commission is considering in order to improve the living conditions of the Marshall Islanders.

Acting on a suggestion made originally by Mr. Midkiff, then High Commissioner of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the Commission has agreed to bear the cost of constructing an island communication system between Kili and Jaluit and the construction of family housing units on Jaluit which will enable the Bikinians on Kili to fish in the lagoon at Jaluit. It is planned that the actual construction will be supervised by A.E.C. contractor personnel and paid for from A.E.C. funds.

The Commission's Division of Biology and Medicine, in cooperation with the Trust Territory and the University of Hawaii, is investigating the possibility of undertaking certain agricultural programs to increase food production for the people on Kili and Majuro and for the Marshall Islands generally. The objective is to provide the islanders displaced from their homes by the Pacific experiments with a satisfactory ecological environment. This project, in which the Commission is deeply interested, would have an importance to the Marshallese far beyond the alleviation of distress arising from the conduct of nuclear experiments.

I hope that the information which is set forth in this letter will place the Department in the position to deal effectively with any charges which may be made in the United Nations discussions or elsewhere concerning our test activities in the Trust Territory.

Inasmuch as the responsibility for carrying out the commitments made to the Marshall Islanders are shared with the Commission by the Department of Defense and the Department of Interior, I have taken the liberty of sending copies of this letter to Secretary Wilson and Secretary McKay.<sup>3</sup>

Sincerely yours,

LEWIS STRAUSS

WASHINGTON, February 8, 1952.

Subject: Universal Declaration of Human Rights

Mr. Dulles called to inquire what action the United States had taken with respect to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. His interest grew from the fact that, in connection with the approval of the Japanese Peace Treaty,<sup>2</sup> objections had been raised in Congress to the inclusion in the Preamble of a reference to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.<sup>3</sup> Mr. Dulles wanted to be sure that the United States was not committed to any action under the Declaration—that we had never "signed" anything.

He also desired information on just where we stood with regard to the Draft International Covenant on Human Rights.<sup>4</sup>

In outlining briefly the situation with regard to the Universal Declaration and the Draft Covenant, I explained that in our references to the Declaration we always took pains to point out that it was drawn up as "a common standard of achievement" to be, in the words of former Secretary Marshall, "a standard of conduct for all" but not a binding obligation.<sup>5</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

NEW YORK, May 15, 1952.

Subject: General Discussion on Human Rights

Present: Mrs. Roosevelt	Mr. Lubin
Miss Whiteman	Mr. Murden
Ambassador Gross	Mr. Bolte
Mr. Simsarian	Mr. Maffitt
Mr. Ross	Mr. Cory
Mr. Hyde
Mr. Stewart

Ambassador Gross opened up the question of what Mrs. Roosevelt's estimate is on how the current meetings of the Human Rights Commission will come out in considering the two Covenants<sup>1</sup> and also on what treatment the Economic and Social Council, as well as the General Assembly, will give them.

He asked if she would care to comment on a report of Cordier that there is some sentiment in the Human Rights Commission that favors slowing down on the drafting of the Covenants and perhaps emphasizing the Declaration. He also recalled that at the April Security Council dinner, Santa Cruz stated his feeling that it was a mistake to go ahead with the Covenants.

Mrs. Roosevelt felt that the approach in the Commission now is a political approach in that representatives are not voting on the technical question of what is in each article of the Covenants, but rather on the basis of general political attitudes. She feels that the Tunisian case is reflected in this vote.

There is a great need for the State Department to undertake a general public relations program to meet the attack on U.S. participation in the United Nations which is now concentrated on the work in the human rights field. Something needs to be done at home to make for understanding of the U.S. position. If public opinion at home develops along the lines of these recent attacks, the U.S. Representative in the Human Rights Commission will be in the same position as the Soviet Representative, that is, engaged in a propaganda activity and not working on something which the Senate, when a treaty is finally agreed, would even consider on its merits. It is time to meet the attacks being made on the United Nations which take the line that it is a highly dangerous organization.

<sup>1</sup>The work on the division of the draft covenant into two instruments, one including civil and political rights and the other economic, social and cultural rights, began in the Commission on Human Rights and in the Economic and Social Council in 1951. This was a position supported and encouraged by the United States; for documentation, see Foreign Relations, 1951, vol. II, pp. 735 ff.; see also article by James Simsarian entitled "Economic, Social and Cultural Provisions in the Human Rights Covenant: revisions of the 1951 session of the Commission on Human Rights", in Department of State Bulletin, June 25, 1951, pp. 1003 ff.

Going on to comment on Ambassador Gross' report of two conversations, Mrs. Roosevelt felt that it is for the General Assembly to say what should be done in the future, assuming that the Covenants are completed at this session of the Human Rights Commission. She added that she is beginning to feel that there is much in Mr. Cohen's position that in the present political climate a good deal can be accomplished with the Declaration.

At this point Ambassador Gross put forward as a tentative summary that the U.S. as a government does not want to retreat from the main line of its effort in the field of human rights. In the face of the attacks on the effort to draft Covenants, we have the duty to protect the continuity of this effort.

He wondered how this position can be protected and saved without having it become an issue in the political campaign. The question of a Human Rights Covenant and the broader question of U.S. participation in the United Nations are issues we wish to keep out of the campaign.

Mrs. Roosevelt restated the need for the State Department to realize, meet and inform public opinion. This opinion has changed but she feels that the genuine interest of the American people continues in international affairs. In world affairs the U.S. should lead, not only in military and economic affairs but in standing for the rights of human beings. Herein lies a dynamic force which is of real value in our relations with Asia. This is the basic fact that needs to be understood. The Declaration has come out of this feeling and the Covenants may or may not come out of it. She is not inclined to want to abandon work on the Covenants, because the Soviet Union will continue to favor it and will then class the U.S. with the United Kingdom as forming a group of colonial powers opposing the Covenants for that reason. In our future handling of the Covenants we must be alive to the way in which the USSR can capitalize on what we do.

This brought Mrs. Roosevelt back to the need of organizing public opinion and telling the Non-Governmental Organizations how they can make their own views felt. On the issue of human rights, Mrs. Roosevelt stated that her mail has tripled in recent months which shows the concern of many people who need to be reassured as to the usefulness of what the U.S. is doing in this field.

Finally, she agreed with Ambassador Gross that in the economic field there is much we can do to meet the diminution of interest in the United Nations. Indeed, we must use the economic field to push the United Nations. As one specific example, she mentioned the possibility of an Arab-Israel rapprochement on the basis of pure self-interest resulting from their economic interdependence.

Position Paper Prepared in the Department of State for the United States Delegation to the Seventh Regular Session of the General Assembly

[WASHINGTON,] September 24, 1952.

DRAFT COVENANTS ON HUMAN RIGHTS

THE PROBLEM

To determine the position of the United States Delegation concerning the draft Covenants on Human Rights,

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. The United States Delegation should express support for the resolution adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its fourteenth session instructing "the Commission on Human Rights to complete its work on the two covenants at its next session in 1953 and to submit them simultaneously to the Economic and Social Council".

2. The United States Delegation should oppose the detailed review of the individual articles of the draft Covenants at this session of the General Assembly, relying on the above resolution of the Council and the resolution adopted by the Commission at its eighth session that it should be allowed an opportunity to complete its work on the two covenants prior to their consideration by the Council and the Assembly. The Delegation should not, however, oppose a general discussion of the Covenants in the Assembly if general sentiment favors such a discussion.

3. The United States Delegation should oppose any resolution requesting the General Assembly to reconsider its decision to have two separate covenants.

4. A separate position paper on the self-determination questions considered by the Commission on Human Rights is being prepared.

5. A separate position paper on the United States position with respect to the individual articles of the two Covenants is also being prepared, for use by the United States Delegation in the event the Assembly does not agree to the postponement of the detailed review of the individual articles of the draft Covenants.

COMMENT

The Commission on Human Rights at its eighth session (April 14 to June 13, 1952), devoted practically its entire time to the revision of the substantive articles and the Preambles of the two draft Covenants. The Commission did not have sufficient time to complete the drafting of the two Covenants and accordingly did not revise the provisions on implementation or the formal articles at the end of the two documents and also did not prepare its recommendations (as requested by the General Assembly) on a reservation article and a federal-state clause for inclusion in the two Covenants.

The Commission, at the end of its eighth session, adopted a resolution pointing out that the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly should not consider the two draft Covenants prior to their completion by the Commission at its next session in 1953.

On the recommendation of the Commission, the Economic and Social Council adopted the following resolution at its fourteenth session (on July 30, 1952) by a vote of 11 to 3 (Czechoslovakia, Poland and USSR) with 4 abstentions (Egypt, Iran, Mexico and Pakistan). The 3 negative votes and the 4 abstentions were cast because of the reference in the resolution adopted to the two covenants to be drafted (these 7 countries preferring the drafting of a single covenant).

The resolution adopted by the Council reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having considered the resolution of the Commission on Human Rights (eighth session) on the completion of its work concerning the draft international covenants on Human rights,

"Instructs the Commission on Human Rights to complete its work on the two covenants at its next session in 1953 and to submit them simultaneously to the Economic and Social Council."

The following 11 countries on the Council voted for the above resolution: Argentina, Belgium, Canada, China, Cuba, France, Philippines, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay.

The General Assembly at its sixth session (February 5, 1952) adopted a resolution by a vote of 27 to 20 with 3 abstentions calling on the Commission on Human Rights to draft two Covenants on Human Rights. (See Annex for vote on this resolution). At the end of the eighth (1952) session of the Commission on Human Rights, the USSR proposed a resolution calling on the General Assembly to reconsider its decision for two Covenants. This proposal of the USSR was rejected by the Commission 8 to 10.

The USSR submitted a similar proposal in the fourteenth session of the Economic and Social Council, and this proposal was also rejected (July 30, 1952) by a vote of 6 to 10 with 2 abstentions. The 6 countries voting for the USSR resolution were Argentina, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Mexico, Poland and USSR. The 10 countries voting against the resolution were Belgium, Canada, China, Cuba, France, Philippines, United Kingdom, United States, Sweden, Uruguay. The 2 abstentions were Iran and Pakistan. Cuba and the Philippines voted against the USSR resolution although in the General Assembly Cuba voted for one covenant and the Philippines abstained on this issue.

The USSR pointed out in the Commission on Human Rights that it also intended to submit a resolution on this issue in the Economic and Social Council and in the General Assembly.

Annex

VOTE IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY (SIXTH SESSION) ON TWO COVENANT ISSUE

The resolution calling on the Commission on Human Rights to draft two Covenants on Human Rights was adopted by the General Assembly in plenary on February 5, 1952 by a vote of 27 to 20 with 3 abstentions. This vote was not a roll-call one, and it therefore is difficult to state exactly which countries voted for and against the resolution. There was, however, a roll-call vote in the plenary session of the General Assembly the same day on an amendment submitted by Chile calling for one covenant. This amendment was rejected 25 to 29 with 4 abstentions. The vote on this amendment was as follows:

For amendment	Against amendment	Abstentions
Afghanistan	Australia	Dominican Re-
Argentina	Belgium	public
Burma	Bolivia	Panama
Byelo-Russia	Brazil	Philippines
Chile	Canada	Syria
Colombia	China
Cuba	Costa Rica
Czechoslovakia	Denmark
Ecuador	France
Egypt	Greece
Ethiopia	Honduras
Guatemala	Iceland
Haiti	India
Indonesia	Lebanon
Iran	Liberia
Iraq	Luxembourg
Israel	Netherlands
Mexico	New Zealand
Pakistan	Nicaragua
Poland	Norway
Saudi Arabia	Paraguay
Ukraine	Peru
U.S.S.R.	Sweden
Yemen	Thailand
Yugoslavia	Turkey
	United Kingdom
	United States
	Uruguay
	Venezuela

El Salvador and the Union of South Africa were absent. In an earlier vote on this issue in the Third Committee, El Salvador voted for one covenant.

In the earlier Third Committee vote, Colombia and Panama voted for two covenants, and Burma, Guatemala and Israel abstained. In the above vote on the Chile amendment in plenary, Burma, Colombia, Guatemala and Israel switched to vote for one covenant and Panama abstained. Syria had voted in the Third Committee for two covenants, but switched in the above vote to an abstention. Although the Dominican Republic abstained on the Chile amendment, it voted for the final resolution in plenary for two covenants.

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Hickerson) to the Secretary of State<sup>1</sup>

[WASHINGTON,] February 9, 1953.

Subject: American Foreign Policy and the Promotion of Human Rights Through the United Nations

Problem:

To examine and re-define United States policies and action in the United Nations relating to the promotion of human rights under the Charter. Such a review is necessary in order to lay down firm policies which will be responsive:

- (a) to the need of maintaining United States leadership in rallying and strengthening the free peoples of the world; and
- (b) to domestic criticism of specific action taken or contemplated in the promotion of human rights in the United Nations, particularly with respect to the proposed Covenants on Human Rights.

Background:

The following major considerations enter into any reformulation of policy:

1. The promotion and encouragement of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms by joint and separate action is one of the purposes of the United Nations. The United States, as a Member of the United Nations, must continue to comply with this obligation.

<sup>1</sup>The source text was an attachment to a covering memorandum of Feb. 12, 1953, from Hickerson to Secretary Dulles, which read in part: "In a democracy it is appropriate that from time to time policies being followed be re-examined and reviewed. The change of administration makes this a particularly appropriate occasion for such a review. I asked my Bureau, in association with the officers in the Legal Adviser's Office who have worked on the problem, to make a complete review of our policy respecting the promotion of human rights through the United Nations. I enclose a copy of this review for your consideration . . ."

2. In the discharge of this obligation the United States has thus far held a position of leadership ever since the inception of the United Nations. The establishment of the Commission on Human Rights (Article 68 of the Charter) was due to United States initiative in San Francisco. The United States participated actively in the drafting of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and supported its completion and approval by the General Assembly in 1948.

3. United States leadership in the promotion of human rights and our championship of the fundamental freedoms has been a significant factor in the cold war. It has helped to bring into focus the basic differences between the countries aspiring to greater freedom on the one hand, and those under the control of totalitarian Communism on the other. It has helped to strengthen the ideological basis for common action on the part of the free nations and for greater unity among them.

4. The United States has participated actively, ever since the submission of an initial draft by the United Kingdom in 1947, in the drafting of a Covenant on Human Rights in the Commission on Human Rights.

In participating in the drafting of such a treaty, the United States has been guided by the following objectives:

(a) To promote and strengthen the observance of human rights which are basic to the maintenance of free and democratic institutions; and

(b) To assure that the final text would conform to American constitutional principles, would in no way restrict or derogate from any rights set forth in the American Constitution, and would not be self-executing.

5. The United States had hoped to confine the proposed Covenant to civil and political rights as set forth in the American Bill of Rights. When a majority vote in the General Assembly called for the inclusion of economic, social and cultural rights, it was due to a persistent effort on the part of the United States that the General Assembly decided on the drafting of two separate Covenants which would permit separate consideration and ratification of one Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and another Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

6. In recent years vocal criticism has developed in the United States concerning United States participation in the drafting of these Covenants, with the expression of fear by many that such international treaties would supersede the Constitution and impose obligations upon the United States destructive of some of the basic concepts of the United States Constitution. Such criticism, initially formulated by a Committee of the American Bar Association, is reflected in the proposed "Bricker Amendment" to the Constitution (S. J. Res. 1).<sup>2</sup> See Tab A [B]. It has been strongly urged by these groups that the United States should cease to participate in the drafting of the Covenants. This view has been opposed by a number of other groups in this country, however, including the New York City Bar Association.

7. In contrast, there has been evident a growing determination within the UN itself to complete the Covenants. These proposed treaties have to an overwhelming majority of the Members of the UN become symbols of the loftiest aspirations of the UN. Many Asian-Arab-Latin American countries insist on the drafting of treaties for the expression of their aspirations in the field of human rights. For the United States to withdraw at this stage from participation in the elaboration of these treaties would greatly weaken the position of leadership of the United States in the UN as a whole, and would be exploited to the full by countries hostile to the United States, and particularly the USSR.

8. While the Draft Covenants as developed to date (See Tab B [A])<sup>3</sup> are not entirely satisfactory from the American point of view, it has proved possible, by and large, to gain acceptance of texts which do conform in essentials to American constitutional principles. Should the United States abandon the Covenants, it is certain that before their completion, the texts would substantially deteriorate and articles would be included utterly unacceptable to the United States. The Covenants will no doubt serve as accepted standards of conduct after their approval by the UN, whether the United States does or does not ratify them.

Recommendations:

It is recommended:

1. That the United States should continue to participate actively in all measures considered in the United Nations for the promotion of respect for and observance of human rights and freedoms.

2. That, with regard to the Covenants, the United States should continue to participate in the drafting of these treaties in order to achieve the best possible results. In doing so, the United States should avoid being "out in front," but should assume its responsibilities as one of the 60 Members of the Organization. United States Representatives should as appropriate point out that there are many ways other than through the Covenants to promote more effectively human rights and freedoms, particularly in the field of economic, social and cultural rights. See recommendation 4 below for an elaboration of this point. If a majority view develops in the UN for a further delay in the completion of the Covenants, United States representatives should support this view.

3. That in drafting the Covenants the following policies be observed:

(a) Support the drafting of two separate Covenants, one Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the other Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in order to stress the sharp differences between these two groups of "rights."

Civil and political rights are of such a nature as to be given legal effect promptly by the adoption of legislation or other measures as may be necessary. Since these rights, as now embodied in the draft of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights are generally in line with the American Bill of Rights, ratification of this first Covenant by the United States would not restrict or derogate from rights under the United States Constitution.

Economic, social and cultural rights, while spoken of as "rights" are, however, to be recognized as objectives to be achieved progressively by private as well as public action, subject to available resources.

(b) In the light of (a) above, the United States should lend support primarily to the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. While cooperating in the drafting of the Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the United States should not hesitate to express its doubts regarding the usefulness of such a Covenant since it deals with matters which, in many instances, do not lend themselves to legislation.

(c) Support the retention of language in the Covenants to assure that they are non-self-executing.

(d) Support the retention of language in the Covenants to make it clear that they will not in any way restrict or derogate from any rights in the Constitution of the United States.

(e) Urge the inclusion of a federal state article in the Covenants to make it expressly clear that the obligations of a federal state, such as the United States, under the Covenants will be limited to matters which, under the Constitution of the country, are within the federal jurisdiction and to ensure that the constitutional balance between the powers delegated by the federal Constitution to the federal government, on the one hand, and the powers reserved to the States, on the other hand, would not be altered by the Covenants.

(f) Oppose the inclusion of provisions in the Covenants to authorize the proposed Human Rights Committee to receive or consider complaints or petitions from organizations or individuals concerning alleged violations of the Covenants. If such provisions are included, the United States should urge that they be set forth in a separate protocol or protocols.

(g) Support the inclusion of non-judicial procedures in the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights relating to complaints with respect to alleged violations of the Covenant, limited to States Parties to the Covenant and simply authorizing the proposed Human Rights Committee to ascertain the facts in each case and make available its good offices to the States concerned, with a view to a friendly solution of the matter on the basis of respect for human rights as recognized in the Covenant. A report should be prepared by the Committee on each case and published by the United Nations.

If these policies are fully reflected in the Covenants as finally approved, and particularly in the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the objectives of the "Bricker Amendment" (S.J. Res. 1) would be attained (see Tab A [B]).

4. That the Department consider and propose, as appropriate, other and possibly more effective methods of promoting human rights such as:

(a) Less ambitious and more specific international treaties or recommendations (for instance the Convention on Political Rights of Women or the Declaration on the Rights of the Child).

(b) Fuller information and publicity regarding constructive measures adopted by various countries to advance human rights.

In this connection consideration might be given to the appointment of a Rapporteur on Human Rights, similar to the appointment of a Rapporteur on Freedom of Information by the Economic and Social Council at its 1952 session.

(c) An exchange of experience regarding measures taken in various countries to overcome disrespect for human rights particularly in the field of discrimination.

(d) The improvement of living standards which require economic and social measures rather than legislation.

(e) The fuller development of mass media, particularly in the under-developed countries to assure greater freedom of information.

5. That as a corollary of 4(a) above, the President authorize the signature on behalf of the United States of the Convention on the Political Rights of Women completed at the 1952 session of the General Assembly (see Tab C)<sup>3</sup> and the approval by the Senate of the Genocide Convention (see Tab D).<sup>4</sup> Appropriate understandings or reservations will have to be filed with each of these conventions. The ratification of the Genocide Convention by the United States is particularly urgent. The Convention is already in force with 40 countries having adhered to it. Non-ratification by the United States has deprived us of the opportunity to make full use of the Convention in branding as Genocide basic policies and actions of the USSR and its satellites.

6. That the United States take every opportunity to expose and publicize the violation of human rights and freedoms by the USSR and its satellites, as illustrated by forced labor in these countries, religious persecutions and the disregard of basic principles of justice in the trial and punishment of persons in these countries.

S.J. RES 1 SUBMITTED BY SENATOR BRICKER AND OTHER SENATORS ON TREATIES

S.J. Res. 1 submitted by Senator Bricker and a number of other Senators in the 83d Congress lists three tests with respect to treaties.

1. "A provision of a treaty which denies or abridges any right enumerated in this Constitution shall not be of any force or effect."

This test is proposed to be met by recommendation 3 (d). Under this recommendation, the Covenants would expressly provide that they are not in any way to restrict or derogate from any right in the United States Constitution. As a matter of fact, Justice Field in 1890 pointed out in Geofroy v. Riggs that the treaty-making power of the United States "does not extend 'so far as to authorize what the Constitution forbids'."

2. "No treaty shall authorize or permit any foreign power or any international organization to supervise, control or adjudicate rights of citizens of the United States within the United States enumerated in this Constitution or any other matter essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States."

This test is proposed to be met by recommendations 3 (f) and 3 (g). Under these recommendations, the Human Rights Committee proposed to be established under the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights would have no authority to receive or consider complaints or petitions from a citizen of the United States or from any other individual. Also, the proposed Human Rights Committee would not be authorized "to supervise, control or adjudicate" rights or any other matters. The Committee would simply ascertain the facts in each case and make available its good offices to the countries concerned with a view to a friendly solution of the matter. A report of its efforts would then be prepared by the Committee and published by the United Nations. The Committee would address itself only to the obligations of countries under the Covenant.

3. "A treaty shall become effective as internal law in the United States only through the enactment of appropriate legislation by the Congress."

This test is proposed to be met by recommendation 3 (e). Under this recommendation, it is proposed that language be retained in the Covenants to assure that they are non-self-executing; that is, that they will not be enforceable as such in the courts of the United States. They will require implementing legislation to the extent such legislation has not already been enacted, and it will be this legislation that will be enforced in the courts of the United States.

Subject: Senator Bricker's Proposal for a Constitutional Amendment to Limit the Treaty Power.

The recent announcement of Senator Bricker's proposal for a Constitutional amendment to prevent the use of treaties and Presidential agreements "to undermine the sovereignty of the United States" emphasizes the urgency and importance of the Department having a fully developed position on the relationship between the Constitution and our international activities with special reference to the treaty-making powers of the President. Senator Bricker's proposal is obviously related to the draft Covenant on Human Rights and the Genocide Convention.

Criticism of our participation in the United Nations and allegations of our intent to use the treaty power to amend or circumvent the Constitution can no longer be dismissed, as some have urged, as isolated misinterpretations. It is not, of course, only our United Nations activities, especially the draft Covenant on Human Rights and the Genocide Convention, which are involved but the treaty-making powers generally.

I believe that some positive action by the Department is required. This might take the form of a statement by the Secretary, a letter to a Senator, or any other medium appropriate for placing the legal views of the Department before the public. The means of achieving this purpose are secondary. What is important is to make public a forceful legal opinion which would reassure public supporters of our international programs many of whom have unquestionably been confused by Senator Bricker's proposal.

I have just learned that the Department has been requested to transmit a report on the Bricker Resolution to the Senate Committee, and that action has been assigned to L/UNA. This might serve as an appropriate occasion for making known our position.

CONFIDENTIAL

Subject: United States Policy Regarding Draft International Covenants on Human Rights

Since the meeting in your office last week,<sup>2</sup> we have discussed further with Mrs. Lord<sup>3</sup> the problem of a change in United States policy toward the Human Rights Covenants. The memorandum which is attached has been prepared in the light of these discussions. It sets forth arguments for and arguments against a change in the policy of support for the Covenants. It then goes on to suggest three possible courses of action which might be followed if a decision is made to change the policy which this Government has pursued up to the present time. These courses are considered in terms of their effectiveness in accomplishing a change in United States policy with the least damage to our public position at home and abroad.

When a decision is reached on the question of basic policy and on the course to be followed if a change in policy is decided upon, we expect to work with Mrs. Lord further on the preparation of a general policy statement for her to make in the Human Rights Commission at its forthcoming session in Geneva.

If a decision is made to change United States policy toward the Covenants, it has occurred to us that it might be useful to include in a letter of instructions to Mrs. Lord prior to her departure for Geneva the following elements: (1) a recital of United States efforts for several years on drafting the Covenants in the Human Rights Commission, which has been proceeding under instructions from the General Assembly; (2) a statement of our view that codification of human rights in the Covenants is not an appropriate and effective way of furthering the observance of human rights throughout the world at the present stage in international relations; (3) an authorization to the United States representative to put forward methods other than the Covenants for appropriate action through the United Nations to further the goals proclaimed in the Declaration of Human Rights; and (4) statements of the importance attached by this Government to the pursuit of human-rights goal through appropriate procedures in the United Nations and of wholehearted support for suitable steps to this end. In the event of a decision to change existing United States policy toward the Covenants, the change would presumably be foreshadowed if not announced in your testimony before the Senate committee holding hearings on the Bricker amendments to the Constitution. It is, therefore, our thought that you might wish to make a public release of the letter of instructions to Mrs. Lord before her departure. Public indications of a changed policy, in the hearings on the Bricker amendments and in a letter to Mrs. Lord, could be helpful in reassuring large numbers of people in this country about United States participation in the United Nations and could prepare the ground for Mrs. Lord's work at the session of the Human Rights Commission by making it clear that her actions in Geneva stem from instructions given by the highest authorities in this Government.

UNITED STATES POLICY REGARDING DRAFT INTERNATIONAL COVENANTS
ON HUMAN RIGHTS <sup>4</sup>

I. SHOULD PRESENT UNITED STATES POLICY IN SUPPORT OF THE DRAFT COVENANTS BE CHANGED?

A. Arguments For:

1. It seems unlikely at the present stage in international relations that the observance of human rights throughout the world will be furthered by means of international agreements which lack real enforcement provisions. At the present time progress can best be made, not through the imposition of legal obligations, but through means of public discussion and persuasion.

2. It is highly problematical that even the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights can gain the consent of the U.S. Senate to ratification.

3. It is by no means clear that a significant number of countries whose existing standards in the human rights field would be affected by the Covenants, would ratify them and actually give effect to their provisions.

4. The Covenants, once adopted and in force among some states, could work to the disadvantage of United States interests, whether this country became a party or not. The Covenants would be a source of propaganda attack on positions taken by the United States and on conditions within this country. The Covenants might contain provisions on economic self-determination and the right of nationalization which would be detrimental to United States interests in certain areas abroad.

<sup>4</sup> Drafted by Meeker and an officer of his staff, W. E. Hewitt. The two officers had jointly prepared a draft on Feb. 16 which differed from the instant memorandum in form, substance, and emphasis, although much of the material was the same and simply presented differently (memorandum by Meeker and Hewitt, Feb. 16, 1953, L/UNA files, Human Rights—Conventions and Treaties—1949-1965”).

5. Continued United States effort in support of the Human Rights Covenants might appear, at least to some observers and critics in this country, as inconsistent with the Administration's policy on civil rights in the United States, where the emphasis is now on persuasion as against any new federal civil rights legislation.

6. The Covenants are under attack by large and important groups in this country such as the American Bar Association and a number of members of the U.S. Senate. For the administration to press ahead with the Covenants would tend to keep alive and strengthen support for the Bricker amendments to the Constitution.

B. Arguments Against:

1. The United States has believed that continued friendly relations among nations depends in part upon the observance of human rights throughout the world, and that the draft Covenants will be a means by which progress may be made in this field. The United States has therefore for several years supported the idea of incorporating basic civil and political rights in a binding international instrument. A change in position now would be difficult to explain.

2. Sentiment in other countries, especially those of Latin America and the Middle and Far East, strongly favors the Covenant. United States support for the Covenants has helped in our relations with those countries, which together have a majority in the General Assembly. To withdraw support from the Covenants would have a marked negative effect on these relations.

3. To withdraw support from the Covenants would be interpreted by at least some other countries as a step backward in the world effort to promote universal observance of human rights. Countries unfriendly to the United States, particularly the Soviet bloc, would be presented with a propaganda weapon for use in the cold war, which we could expect them to exploit particularly in under-developed areas.

4. Withdrawal of United States support of the Human Rights Covenants will not necessarily prevent their completion. United States interest requires that the final texts of the Covenants, in the event that they are accepted by some countries, be in as satisfactory a form as possible. United States efforts to this end will be less effective if we have withdrawn support from the Covenants.

5. A considerable body of organized opinion in the United States favors support for the Covenants.

6. The Covenants would not increase federal power over the states in the human-rights field. The United States has been insisting on the inclusion of a federal-state clause in the Covenants, by which the existing federal-state relationship would remain the same.

II. IN THE EVENT OF A SHIFT IN UNITED STATES POLICY AWAY FROM ACTIVE SUPPORT OF THE COVENANTS, THE PROBLEM OF HOW BEST TO IMPLEMENT THE NEW POLICY MUST BE CONSIDERED. THERE ARE A NUMBER OF POSSIBLE COURSES FOR GIVING EFFECT TO SUCH A SHIFT IN POLICY. FOR BREVITY AND CONVENIENCE, THE PRESENT MEMORANDUM WILL SUGGEST THREE VARYING AND REPRESENTATIVE POSSIBILITIES, GIVING THE ARGUMENTS FOR AND AGAINST EACH.

A. The United States would invite United Nations Members engaged in drafting the Covenants to take stock of their efforts and consider whether long experience has not shown that it is difficult or impossible to produce mutually satisfactory instruments which will at the same time operate effectively to promote human rights; the United States would express its view that now is not the propitious time for seeking the codification of human-rights standards in such general form as the Covenants, that a greater degree of general acceptance of goals in this field must be achieved before the time will be ripe. The United States would urge that the United Nations give attention and emphasis to means other than the Covenants for making progress toward the goals set forth in the Declaration of Human Rights; the United States would suggest consideration of such means as (i) a human-rights rapporteur designated by the Human Rights Commission to survey and report on the progress being made in the different countries, the results of his study to be discussed by the Commission with appropriate attention to special problems and systematic denial of rights; (ii) periodic reporting by member governments, with the assistance of national advisory groups, on forward steps being taken in their respective countries, such reports to be discussed as appropriate by the Human Rights Commission; (iii) the provision of advisory services, through a panel designated by the Human Rights Commission, to countries desiring what amounts to technical assistance in the human rights field. In view of the instructions given to the Human Rights Commission by the General Assembly, and in view of the likelihood that other members of the Commission would wish nevertheless to proceed with work on the Covenants, the United States would continue to participate in the work of drafting despite its general position on principle expressed above.

1. Arguments For:

(a) This would be a wholly candid position, making a clean break with the past where experience has led the United States to conclusions different from those held by this Government four or five years ago.

(b) The position would have maximum influence in drawing support away from the Bricker amendments.

(c) It comprises elements of positive policy which would minimize the difficulties to be anticipated, in a change of basic position, from other countries and from the United States groups particularly interested in human rights policy.

(d) By continuing to participate in the drafting process, the United States would retain some measure of influence over the texts of the Covenants, perhaps preventing the inclusion of provisions which would be detrimental to American interests.

2. Arguments Against:

(a) Work on the Covenants might well continue despite the change in United States position, with resulting instruments less satisfactory than those which might be anticipated if the United States continued its policy of support for the Human Rights Covenants.

(b) Reporting, either by a rapporteur or by member governments, on human rights developments in the different countries might facilitate propaganda charges against conditions in the United States.

(c) This position would most clearly express our opposition to the Covenants, and for that reason would, in comparison with alternatives II.B. or II.C. below, accentuate the disadvantages of a change in policy referred to in part I of this memorandum.

B. The United States would state its opposition to the Covenant on Economic and Social Rights, arguing our view that these rights must be furthered in other ways; the United States would reserve its position altogether regarding the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights; and the United States would express willingness to continue to participate in drafting, with the hope that the latter Covenant might eventually emerge in acceptable form.

1. Arguments For:

(a) In stating frankly this position, the United States still would not be opposing stubbornly the will of the majority and would continue to cooperate in their drafting efforts.

(b) The United States would be able to exercise influence toward securing relatively satisfactory Covenant texts, particularly in the case of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

(c) This position would to some extent serve to reassure the groups in the United States most strongly opposed to the Human Rights Covenants.

2. Arguments Against:

(a) This position might be interpreted by other countries as implying a patronizing attitude on the part of the United States, an attitude especially resented by the less developed countries.

(b) United States influence in the drafting process would be relatively less than in the past, with the possible result of frequent American defeats in voting.

(c) This position would lack elements of positive and constructive policy in the human rights field, such as could help the United States Government, which are of importance to other countries and to the groups in the United States particularly interested in the promotion of human rights.

C. The United States would continue to participate in the work of drafting the Covenants; the United States would refrain from asserting leadership in the work, and would actually follow a course calculated to delay, if not prevent, the completion of the Covenants. The United States would pursue this course as perhaps the first stage in carrying out a new policy, to be followed later by announcement of a change in position and by pursuit of a course such as that indicated in II.A. or II.B. above.

1. Arguments For:

(a) The above course of action might soften the propaganda disadvantages to the United States of a change in policy toward the Human Rights Covenants.

(b) Lack of positive leadership by the United States might make it more difficult to reach agreement on the final texts. Eventually, therefore, other countries might be persuaded that the whole idea of concluding the Covenants is not a practical undertaking at the present time.

(c) The United States might find it easier, after a period of expressing repeatedly its dissatisfaction with the progress in drafting the Covenants, to announce and follow a basically changed policy.

2. Arguments Against:

(a) The above course of action would readily be sensed by other delegations as indicating a basic change in policy. Charges of duplicity and bad faith might then be added to charges of unfriendliness to the United Nations human rights programs.

(b) Failure of the United States frankly to state its basic policy change at the outset would make it more difficult for the United States to gain adherence later to positive programs in the human rights field which this country might decide to put forward.

(c) The tactic of veiled and gradual withdrawal of support for the Covenants would have only minimum effectiveness in diminishing the prospects of the Bricker amendments [sic].

Memorandum by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Sandifer) to the Director of the Office of United Nations Economic and Social Affairs (Kotschnig)

Subject: United States Policy Regarding Draft International Covenants on Human Rights

Mr. Phleger's and Mr. Hickerson's joint memorandum to the Secretary, dated February 18, 1953, on the subject "United States Policy Regarding Draft International Covenants on Human Rights" was considered at a meeting in the Secretary's office today attended by Mrs. Lord, Mr. Phleger, Mr. Hickerson, and myself.

After reading the memorandum the Secretary indicated his view that we should proceed with a change in policy along the lines set forth in part II.A of the memorandum. The Secretary also liked the idea of a letter from him to Mrs. Lord. He emphasized the importance of great care in its preparation and also spoke of the need for careful scrutiny of alternative approaches of the character listed in part II.A to avoid any new mechanisms which might give the Soviets an opportunity for prying around in human rights conditions in the United States. It was agreed, upon Mr. Phleger's suggestion, that Mrs. Lord should prepare a first draft of this letter.

It was also agreed that work should proceed on the preparation of a general policy statement for Mrs. Lord's use in the Commission as suggested in paragraph 2 of Mr. Phleger's and Mr. Hickerson's memorandum.

It was understood as a part of this general decision that the United States would continue in the Human Rights Commission to participate in the technical work of the completion of the Covenants, as stated in the last sentence of part II.A. Mr. Dulles said that in view of our change in policy we would of course not insist on drafting changes as we had in the past where we thought they were necessary to bring them in line with our own constitutional law and practice. Our role would be one of helpfulness but not one of pressing our views upon the Commission.

[WASHINGTON,] March 26, 1953.

Subject: United States Policy Concerning Proposed Covenants on Human Rights

In accordance with our conversations concerning United States policy for the next session of the UN Commission on Human Rights which opens in Geneva on April 7, it is proposed that Mrs. Oswald B. Lord point out in the Commission that in the present stage of international relations it is the opinion of the United States that there are more effective ways to promote the human rights objectives of the UN Charter than through the drafting of the proposed Covenants on Human Rights; that a greater degree of general acceptance of goals in this field must be achieved before it will be useful to draft treaties of the scope of the proposed Covenants; and that the Commission on Human Rights should accordingly give attention and emphasis to means other than the Covenants for making progress toward the human rights goals of the UN Charter. (Tab A)

Mrs. Lord is asked to point out to the Commission on Human Rights that the United States attaches great importance to the achievement of the human rights goals of the UN Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and accordingly is prepared to support at this session of the Commission the following means for the achievement of these goals:

1. The institution of world-wide surveys by the Commission on Human Rights on various aspects of human rights, through the assistance of a rapporteur appointed by the Commission. The first two subjects suggested are freedom of religion and the right to a fair trial. The rapporteur would consult non-governmental organizations as well as governments and the Specialized Agencies for relevant data for submission to the Commission. The report of the rapporteur would be considered in the Commission on Human Rights and general recommendations are anticipated relating to the particular subject discussed. The procedure proposed here is similar to that already undertaken by the UN Economic and Social Council in the field of freedom of information.

<sup>1</sup>Drafted by the Officer in Charge, UN Cultural and Human Rights Affairs (Simsarian). This memorandum was cleared with the geographic bureaus, a normal procedure with many questions affecting U.S. policy at the United Nations (each bureau had an UN adviser who acted in a liaison capacity between each bureau and the Bureau of UN Affairs). In this particular instance the clearance of the Bureau of Inter-American Affairs was rather ambiguously qualified, the clearance being conditioned upon views expressed in a memorandum of Mar. 20, 1953 by the Assistant Secretary for Inter-American Affairs (Cabot) to the Director of the Office of UN Economic and Social Affairs (Kotsehnig), regarding specific items on the agenda of the Human Rights Commission. Assistant Secretary Cabot seems to have been concerned that the Latin American states might be criticized for violations of human rights if certain procedures were adopted. Cabot wrote: "We should avoid, as far as possible, procedures which are likely to result in a situation where countries which are basically anxious to cooperate with the UN would receive a substantial share of the criticism, while the countries which are the major violators of human rights would be able to avoid much, if any, criticism." (340.1 AG/3-2053)

2. Annual reports on developments in the field of human rights from each Member Government of the United Nations, prepared in each instance with the assistance of a national advisory committee, such reports to be considered in the Commission at the time the survey reports of the proposed rapporteur are submitted. The proposed national advisory committee on human rights would be appointed by the Secretary of State and would be available on a consultative basis to assist in the preparation of the annual reports to be prepared under the general supervision of the Department of State.

3. The establishment of advisory services on specific aspects of human rights defined by the UN Economic and Social Council, such services to be in the form of experts going to countries requesting the services, scholarships and fellowships being provided for training abroad and arrangements for seminars. These services would be along the lines of other advisory services now being provided in the United Nations in the economic, social and public administration fields. (Tab B)

Recommendation:

It is recommended that you approve the proposals in this memorandum. Mrs. Lord will be given instructions along the lines set forth in this memorandum for the next session of the Commission. Mrs. Lord has reviewed the proposals in this memorandum and considers them satisfactory.

STATEMENT OF POLICY FOR 1953 SESSION OF COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS

The United States Representative should point out that in the present stage of international relations it is the opinion of the United States that there are more effective ways to promote the human rights objectives of the UN Charter than through the drafting of the proposed Covenants on Human Rights; that a greater degree of general acceptance of goals in this field must be achieved before the time will be ripe for the proposed Covenants; and that the Commission should accordingly give attention and emphasis to means other than the Covenants for making progress toward the human rights goals of the UN Charter.

The United States Representative should point out that the United States attaches great importance to the achievement of the human rights goals of the UN Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and accordingly is prepared to support at this session of the Commission the following means for the achievement of these goals:

(a) The institution of world-wide surveys by the Commission on Human Rights on various aspects of human rights, through the assistance of a rapporteur appointed by the Commission.

(b) Annual reports on developments in the field of human rights from each Member Government of the United Nations, prepared in each instance with the assistance of an advisory committee, such reports to be considered in the Commission at the time the survey reports of the proposed rapporteur are submitted to the Commission.

(c) The establishment of advisory services on specific aspects of human rights defined by the Economic and Social Council, such services to be in the form of experts going to countries requesting the services, scholarships and fellowships being provided for training abroad and arrangements for seminars.

In view of instructions from the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council that the Commission proceed at this session with its work on the proposed Covenants, it is expected that the Commission will do so. The United States Representative should urge, however, that adequate time also be set aside at this session for the consideration of the steps outlined above for the promotion of human rights in the United Nations. The United States Representative should as a loyal member of the Commission participate in a technical capacity in such drafting or redrafting of the proposed Covenants that may be undertaken at this session. In view of the United States change in policy with respect to the proposed Covenants, the United States Representative should not insist on drafting proposals as in the past when we considered it necessary to bring the provisions of the proposed Covenants in line with our own constitutional law and practice. The United States role should be one of helpfulness but not one of pressing our views upon the Commission. Detailed technical instructions on the draft Covenants have accordingly been prepared simply as a guide to the United States Representative in a technical participation in the drafting of the proposed Covenants at this session of the Commission.

Position Paper Prepared in the Office of United Nations Economic and Social Affairs for the United States Delegation to the Ninth Session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights

CHR/D/13/53

[WASHINGTON, March 26, 1953.]

ADVISORY SERVICES IN THE PROMOTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

PROBLEM

To determine the position of the United States Representative with regard to (1) the proposal of the Secretary General that advisory services be rendered by the United Nations to countries and territories which may request them in the promotion of human rights (Doc. E/1900, par. 56), and (2) the proposal on technical assistance in draft resolution K in Annex I of the 1952 Report of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities (Doc. E/CN.4/670).

RECOMMENDATIONS

I. The United States Representative should propose or support the adoption of a resolution on advisory services in the Commission on Human Rights to request the Economic and Social Council to ask the General Assembly:

A. To authorize the Secretary General:

1. Subject to the directions of the Economic and Social Council, to make provision for the following services, with the cooperation of the specialized agencies where appropriate, and in consultation with non-governmental organizations having consultative status, in specific aspects of human rights defined by the Economic and Social Council:

(a) For the appointment of experts to provide advisory services at the request of governments which show the need for them in specific aspects of human rights defined by the Economic and Social Council;

(b) To enable suitably qualified persons to observe, and familiarize themselves with, the experience and practice of other countries on specific aspects of human rights defined by the Economic and Social Council;

(c) To enable suitably qualified persons who cannot receive professional training in their own country on specific aspects of human rights defined by the Economic and Social Council, to receive appropriate training in foreign countries having the necessary facilities for such training; and

(d) To plan and conduct seminars on specific aspects of human rights defined by the Economic and Social Council.

2. To include in his budgetary estimates of the United Nations the sums necessary for carrying out an effective operational program based on the provision of the above services.

B. To instruct the Secretary General to undertake the performance of the services as provided in A.1 above, in agreement with governments concerned, on the basis of requests received from governments and in accordance with the following policies:

1. The kind of service to be rendered to each country under A.1(a) shall be acceptable to the government concerned and shall be determined in consultation with that government;

2. The selection of the persons under A.1(b) and (c) shall be made by the Secretary General on the basis of proposals received from governments, which shall indicate their preferences with regard to host countries, and shall be acceptable to the host countries;

3. The amount of services and the conditions under which they shall be decided by the Secretary General with due regard to the greater needs of the under-developed areas and in conformity with the principle that each requesting government shall be expected to assume responsibility, as far as possible, for all or a major part of the expenses connected with the services furnished to it, either by making a contribution in cash, or in the form of services for the purposes of the program being carried out.

C. To request the Secretary General to report regularly to the Commission on Human Rights and as appropriate to the Commission on the Status of Women on the measures which he takes in compliance with the terms of this resolution, and to request these Commissions to formulate recommendations from time to time concerning the continued action required to carry on the essential advisory services in the specific aspects of human rights defined by the Economic and Social Council.

II. The United States Representative should propose or support a recommendation from the Commission to the Economic and Social Council that it define the following specific aspects of human rights to which the above advisory services would be applicable:

(a) Improvement of judicial procedures.

(b) Establishment and improvement of techniques of mass information media, including such facilities as news agencies.

(d)<sup>2</sup> Increased participation in national and community civic affairs, especially for women recently granted the vote.

(e) Abolishing slavery and institutions and practices akin thereto.

(f) Legislative measures for the prevention of discrimination and the protection of minorities.

III. The United States Representative should reserve the position of the United States with respect to the amount that should be provided in the regular UN budget for the proposed advisory services. It is the United States view that this proposed program should not in any event exceed the costs of the current UN advisory services in public administration (which amount to about $145,000). The United States Representative may indicate this maximum figure to the Commission if there is an indication in the Commission that a larger budget amount is anticipated.

DISCUSSION

The Secretary General in Doc. E/1900 suggests that "assistance could be given for example, in the formulation of basic laws concerning human rights, in the establishment of judicial organs and in the drafting of rules of judicial procedure, in the establishment of institutions of self-government, in raising the status of women, in preventing discrimination and protecting minorities, in abolishing slavery and institutions and practices akin thereto, where such problems exist." The Secretary General at the same time also suggests that the United Nations might assist individual countries and territories in the promotion of economic, social and cultural rights. The inclusion of the latter field of activity in the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms is of doubtful validity since there are separate technical assistance programs going forward with respect to economic, social and cultural matters.

The United States Representative should urge that the scope of this program be limited to specific aspects of human rights (as enumerated above under recommendation II) defined by the Economic and Social Council rather than the general subject of "human rights."

The program recommended in this paper is preferable to the recommendation of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities (a) that organizations participating in the technical assistance and other programs now providing aid or advice at the request of Member States, give sympathetic consideration to requests which governments may submit for such technical assistance in connection with measures aimed at the eradication of prejudice or discrimination or at the protection of minorities, (b) a technical assistance program to assist solely "in the eradication of prejudice or discrimination and in the protection of minorities," and (c) such services to include "educational programs designed to combat prejudice and discrimination."

The recommendations of this paper reflect to a considerable extent the wording and structure of General Assembly Resolution 418 (V), concerning advisory social welfare services, approved December 1, 1950.

It is assumed that the financing of the program herein envisaged would be under the regular budget of the United Nations, analogous to the regular budget activities of the United Nations in the field of social welfare and public administration. For administrative purposes it is assumed that the proposed program in human rights would be brought within the administrative jurisdiction of the United Nations Technical Assistance Administration. Such an arrangement exists on a reasonably harmonious basis at the present time between UNTAA and the Social Affairs Division of the UN Secretariat. In general, the theory is that UNTAA is responsible only for administrative arrangements but looks to the Division of Social Affairs for substantive judgments.

BACKGROUND

The support of the United States for the advisory services program outlined in the recommendations of this paper is particularly important as illustrative of United States support for the promotion of human rights in ways more effective than the proposed Covenants on Human Rights. It is the United States view that the United Nations should no longer press ahead with the proposed Covenants since treaties of the broad scope of the Covenants are not the most effective way to promote human rights at the present time. The United Nations should instead now concentrate on ways to achieve a wider acceptance throughout the world of the human rights goals of the UN Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The provision of advisory services in the specified aspects of human rights enumerated in recommendation II is one effective way to promote the human rights goals of the UN Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It is expected that there will be wide support for a program of advisory services in this field in the Commission on Human Rights as well as later in the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

Subject: Telegrams to American Embassies Concerning New U.S. Policy on Draft Covenants on Human Rights

As a follow-up of my conversation with you Saturday,<sup>1</sup> I recommend that telegrams be sent to our Embassies in Belgium, France, Sweden and the United Kingdom requesting them to advise the Foreign Offices of these countries of the new United States policy concerning the draft Covenants on Human Rights.

On Belgium, the Belgian Delegation to the United Nations in New York told me that it would be advisable to have us wire Brussels for Belgian support, because without support from the Belgian Foreign Office, it was likely the Belgian Delegate would not support our new policy.

On France, I expect to meet with Ambassador Dillon and Members of the French Foreign Office in Paris on Saturday, April 4, but it would be helpful to advise them beforehand of our policy since the Commission meetings open April 7.

On Sweden, the Swedish Foreign Office and Delegate have cooperated with us in the past on the work of the Commission on Human Rights, and a wire to Stockholm now might win their support for our new policy.

On the United Kingdom, I expect to meet the British Delegate in Geneva Monday, April 6, but he is likely to have to wire London then for instructions on possible support of our position. It would be helpful to inform London now of our new policy in order that instructions might be given to the British Delegate before he leaves for the Geneva meetings.

I am looking further into the question of whether telegrams should also go to Lebanon and Chile. If in fact Mr. Charles Malik and Mr. Azkoul of Lebanon do not go, and a new man is to go instead, it may be advisable to send a wire to Beirut. As to Chile, I have been receiving adverse reports as to the views of the new representative of that country, Miss Mistral who is now in New York, and a wire to Santiago may be advisable.

There is no need to send telegrams to the other countries represented on the Commission. I am having direct conversations in New York with the representatives of Uruguay, the Philippines, Australia and China. I doubt the advisability of sending telegrams to India, Pakistan, Egypt and Yugoslavia. The other countries (other than the United States) on the Commission are Poland, the Ukraine and the USSR.

Rights, he asked whether Mrs. Lord could include the following statement in her speech to the Commission: "We hope that there will be a time when human rights will be sufficiently respected in fact and when a human rights conscience will be sufficiently developed throughout the world so that a codification of the then prevailing principles will be worthwhile. When and if such a time comes the United States may give consideration to the ratification of a covenant on human rights, and for that reason we are concerned with the drafting of the Covenants now so that they will be in the most acceptable form and will require the least possible change if they are used as a model for future treaties."

Mr. Phleger assured Judge Halpern that it seemed to him that such a statement would be consistent with the letter to Mrs. Lord from the Secretary<sup>3</sup> and consistent with the policy of the Department on this subject, but that the statement should not be made until the Secretary had an opportunity to review this matter and expressed his approval of the statement.

Judge Halpern said that he felt that the United States Delegation would not have a defensible position in the Commission unless it could make this statement. He thought that without this statement, we would be vulnerable to attacks which would be difficult to meet and our moral position would be very difficult if not impossible to maintain.

The Secretary of State to the United States Representative on the Commission on Human Rights (Lord)

[WASHINGTON,] April 3, 1953.

MY DEAR MRS. LORD: As you leave for Geneva to represent the United States at the High Session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, the best wishes of our Government and of the American people go with you. The President and I are anxious that you carry a personal message to the Commission.

We believe that the American people are determined to do all within their power to make the United Nations an increasingly vigorous instrument of international order and justice. It is our earnest wish that the United Nations become an ever more effective agency for promoting, in the words of the Charter, "respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion."

The United States stands for full and complete enjoyment of these fundamental rights. The whole American philosophy of government is based on the conviction that man was endowed with these rights by his creator and that they are inalienable. This conviction is expressed at many points in the legal structure of our national and state governments and is most clearly set forth in the Declaration of Independence and in the Bill of Rights in the Constitution of the United States.

Our history demonstrates that nationwide observance of fundamental human rights did not spring into being upon the enactment of statutes. In the years that have intervened between the ratification of the Bill of Rights and the present, we in the United States have made important advances. Through education and publicity, we have developed a human rights conscience which is perhaps the strongest factor in the progress we have made. In its most recent report to the United Nations for publication in the agency's Yearbook on Human Rights, the Government of this country has submitted detailed evidence of the progress recorded in a single year. We intend that these advances shall continue.

Moreover, our Government has noted with satisfaction the improvements in the observance of human rights which have taken place in other countries; but it has noted as well that much remains to be done. We recognize that injustices occur to a greater or lesser degree in all countries, including our own. They cannot be overcome in a day. We must work to eliminate them.

In the light of our national, and recently, international experience in the matter of human rights, the opening of a new session of the Commission on Human Rights appears an appropriate occasion for a fresh appraisal of the methods through which we may realize the human rights goals of the United Nations. These goals have a high place in the Charter as drafted at San Francisco and were articulated in greater detail in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as adopted by the United Nations General Assembly at Paris in 1948.

Since the establishment of these goals, much time and effort has been expended on the drafting of treaties, that is, Covenants on Human Rights in which it was sought to frame, in mutually acceptable legal form, the obligations to be assumed by national states in regard to human rights. We have found that such drafts of Covenants as had a reasonable chance of acceptance in some respects established standards lower than those now observed in a number of countries.

While the adoption of the Covenants would not compromise higher standards already in force, it seems wiser to press ahead in the United Nations for the achievement of the standards set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights through ways other than the proposed Covenants on Human Rights. This is particularly important in view of the likelihood that the Covenants will not be as widely accepted by United Nations members as initially anticipated. Nor can we overlook the fact that the areas where human rights are being persistently and flagrantly violated are those where the Covenants would most likely be ignored.

In those circumstances, there is a grave question whether the completion, signing and ratification of the Covenants at this time is the most desirable method of contributing to human betterment particularly in areas of greatest need. Furthermore, experience to date strongly suggests that even if it be assumed that this is a proper area for treaty action, a wider general acceptance of human rights goals must be attained before it seems useful to codify standards of human rights as binding international legal obligations in the Covenants.

With all these considerations in mind, the United States Government asks you to present to the Commission on Human Rights at its forthcoming session a statement of American goals and policies in this field; to point out the need for reexamining the approach of the Human Rights Covenants as the method for furthering at this time the objectives of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights; and to put forward other suggestions of method, based on American experience, for developing throughout the world a human rights conscience which will bring nearer the goals stated in the Charter. In making such suggestions, I am sure you will want to give special weight to the value of bringing the facts to the light of day, to the value of common discussion of problems in the international forum of the Commission on Human Rights, and to the values of each country drawing on the experience of other countries for inspiration and practical guidance in solving its own problems.

We recognize that in presenting to the Commission a change in approach, extended discussion will be required in the Commission and later in the Economic and Social Council and General Assembly as well. By reason of the considerations referred to above, the United States Government has reached the conclusion that we should not at this time become a party to any multilateral treaty such as those contemplated in the draft Covenants on Human Rights, and that we should now work toward the objectives of the Declaration by other means. While the Commission continues, under the General Assembly's instructions, with the drafting of the Covenants, you are, of course, expected to participate. This would be incumbent on the United States as a loyal Member of the United Nations.

Through the agency of the United Nations and its powerful moral influence, much has been and can be accomplished. Example and education can exert powerful influence. The United Nations can also play an important part, through health, welfare, and other technical assistance programs in raising standards of living throughout the world and bringing a full life to millions of persons who struggle merely to exist. The removal of restraints on the rights of expression and association can release the creative energies of the human spirit.

Firm in our belief that the United Nations is the most hopeful and effective means of bringing about world peace and of promoting the welfare of nations throughout the world, the United States Government will support your every effort to these ends.

Sincerely yours.

WASHINGTON, April 6, 1953—3:48 p. m.

6615. Inform Foreign Office your discretion US Representative UN Commission on Human Rights will state new US policy early in the session opening at Geneva April 7 along following lines:

In present stage of international relations, US not prepared consider ratification proposed UN Covenants on Human Rights now being drafted. In US view there are more effective ways than proposed Covenants to promote human rights goals of UN Charter and Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

There is such wanton disregard of human rights in wide areas of world today, attention of Commission should be turned to creating higher level human rights conscience through education and publicity.

US Representative will propose following practical UN action programs in Commission: (1) comprehensive annual reports from each government on human rights developments in that country and consideration reports in Commission; (2) study of significant aspects human rights throughout the world, obtaining information from non-governmental as well as governmental sources and UN Specialized Agencies and consideration studies in Commission; (3) UN technical advisory services on specific aspects of human rights, including experts to countries desiring assistance, scholarships and fellowships and regional seminars under UN auspices.

PRIORITY

WASHINGTON, April 6, 1953—6:14 p. m.

636. For Mrs. Lord. Secretary included following in statement before Senate Judiciary Committee April 6:<sup>1</sup>

"1. The present Administration intends to encourage the promotion everywhere of human rights and individual freedoms, but to favor methods of persuasion, education, and example rather than formal undertakings which commit one part of the world to impose its particular social and moral standards upon another part of the world community, which has different standards. That is the point of view I expressed in 1951 in relation to the Japanese Peace Treaty. Therefore, while we shall not withhold our counsel from those who seek to draft a treaty or covenant on Human Rights, we do not ourselves look upon a treaty as the means which we would now select as the proper and most effective way to spread throughout the world the goals of human liberty to which this nation has been dedicated since its inception. We therefore do not intend to become a party to any such covenant or present it as a treaty for consideration by the Senate.

"2. This Administration does not intend to sign the Convention on Political Rights of Women. This is not because we do not believe in the equal political status of men and women, or because we shall not seek to promote that equality. Rather it is because we do not believe that this goal can be achieved by treaty coercion or that it constitutes a proper field for exercise of the treaty-making power. We do not now see any clear or necessary relation between the interest and welfare of the United States and the eligibility of women to political office in other nations.

These same principles will guide our action in other fields which have been suggested by some as fields for multilateral treaties."

[WASHINGTON,] April 7, 1953.

Subject: Statement on United States Policy on Human Rights in the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.<sup>1</sup>

As you know, I have pointed out in my statement in the Senate hearings on the Bricker proposal that we do not feel that the United States should, in the present stage of international relations, consider the ratification of the Covenants on Human Rights now being drafted in the United Nations and that attention should be given in the United Nations to the furtherance of human rights through more effective ways than the proposed Covenants.

The United Nations Commission on Human Rights opens tomorrow—April 7—and it seems useful to us to utilize this opportunity for the issuance of a statement by you stressing positive United States support for the human rights goals of the United Nations Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. This statement would be helpful in our information efforts abroad as well as in this country.

Accordingly I recommend that you issue the enclosed statement at noon on April 7.

Proposed Statement by the President

RESTRICTED UNTIL RELEASED

April 7, 1953.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE MEMBERS OF THE UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS AT THE OPENING OF ITS SESSION APRIL 7, 1953 IN GENEVA <sup>2</sup>

I am asking Mrs. Oswald B. Lord, the new Representative of the United States on the United Nations Commission on Human Rights to express to the Commission my deep personal interest in its work. In these days of international tension and strain, it is encouraging to know that the members of the Commission on Human Rights are working to develop effective programs to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms for all people and all nations throughout the world.

The United Nations Charter states the human rights goals which the United States and the other Members of the United Nations have pledged themselves to achieve in cooperation with the United Nations—the promotion of universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.

For the people of the United States as well as for people everywhere, the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights is a significant beacon in the steady march toward achieving human rights and fundamental freedoms for all.

People everywhere are seeking freedom—freedom to live, freedom from arbitrary restraint, freedom to think and speak as they wish, freedom to seek and find the truth. We must press ahead to broaden the areas of freedom. The United States is convinced that freedom is an indispensable condition to the achievement of a stable peace.

Unfortunately, in too many areas of the world today there is tyranny and the subjugation of peoples by totalitarian governments which have no respect for the dignity of the human person. This denial of the freedom of peoples, the continued disregard of human rights, is a basic cause of instability and discontent in the world today.

For these reasons, the work of the Commission on Human Rights assumes greater importance and meaning. For these reasons also, there

USUN Press Release 1688, April 9, 1953

Statement Made by the United States Representative (Lord) Before the Commission on Human Rights, Geneva, April 8, 1953

As this is the first occasion in which I have had the privilege of serving in the Commission on Human Rights, I hope you will permit me to make a few general remarks about the agenda. I am happy to be a member of this Commission and to join with you in the vital task of helping to advance the cause of freedom. I accepted this appointment from the President of the United States because I personally am convinced of the importance of promoting respect for human rights through international cooperation.

At the very outset of our work, I wish to assure you that the United States Government continues to support wholeheartedly the promotion of respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Both President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles have spoken to me personally about their deep concern that the United Nations move steadily forward toward the goals laid down in the Charter.

In order to assure steady progress toward those goals, the Government of the United States is suggesting a new and urgent approach to the promotion of human rights, to take account of changed conditions in the world. Today, disregard of the basic principles of human rights is widespread and fundamental freedoms are denied peoples in many areas.

Under these circumstances, the world does not yet appear ready for a treaty of such comprehensive scope as the proposed covenants on human rights. We need to work together immediately to develop a higher moral sense of human rights values in all areas of the world. For that reason, the United States is urging that this Commission give immediate consideration to the development of human rights action programs.

The Commission on Human Rights already has made an outstanding contribution to the constructive achievements of the United Nations. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights stands as a major landmark of progress in this difficult field. It is with understandable pride that I participate in this Commission, where our two past chairmen, Mrs. Roosevelt and Mr. Malik, and their colleagues have brought intelligence and skill to bear upon some of the most challenging problems of our times.

The agenda of the Commission clearly falls into two distinct parts: the completion of the draft covenants and the consideration of a wide range of other matters.

The General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council have asked that the Commission complete the drafting of the covenants. This task will necessarily occupy a considerable portion of our time; but perhaps, if we could set May 1 as a target date for completing the remaining portions of the two covenants, we need not devote more than half of our session to this task.

Since the completion of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in 1948, the Commission has been entirely engrossed in the drafting of the proposed covenants on human rights. As discussions have proceeded on the covenants, it begins to appear that they are not receiving the acceptance which had been initially anticipated and that they will not be ratified as widely as had been hoped. The climate of world opinion does not yet seem favorable to the conclusion of the covenants in the United Nations. The covenants will not have the expected effectiveness in the field of human rights. For these reasons, my Government has concluded that in the present stage of international relations it would not ratify the covenants.

Inasmuch as the United States is a loyal member of the United Nations, its delegation will continue to collaborate in the drafting of these covenants and to make suggestions for improving them. The Covenants will be looked upon as a more precise and definitive statement of the principles embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, irrespective of their ratification or non-ratification. My Government hopes that there will be a time when human rights will be sufficiently respected in fact and when a human rights conscience will be sufficiently developed throughout the world so that a codification of the then prevailing principles will be worthwhile. When and if such a time comes the United States may give consideration to the ratification of a covenant on human rights, and for that reason we are concerned with the drafting of the covenants now so that they will be in the most acceptable form and will require the least possible change if they are used as a model for future treaties.

It seems increasingly important, therefore, that alternative and more effective and acceptable ways be devised by the Commission to achieve the goals of the Charter for the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The remaining part of our agenda contains a large number of items not related to the draft covenants. The United States delegation endorses the listing on the provisional agenda and the order of that listing. At the appropriate time, however, I shall suggest that some of these items be given priority. A number of these items are of the utmost significance and deserve our most earnest consideration. It is for this reason that I hope that perhaps the last half of our session might be devoted to programs of practical action.

It is the view of the United States Government that the guiding principle for the work of the Commission should be to find the surest and speediest methods of raising the level of practice around the world in the observance of human rights. This would require that we initiate a number of action programs. I shall be prepared to make detailed proposals about such action programs in connection with specific agenda items. For the present I should like merely to outline the three principal proposals which my Government wishes me to submit to the Commission.

First, we will propose that the Commission institute a study of various aspects of human rights throughout the world. The Commission could undertake this with the assistance of a rapporteur. The rapporteur would consult with non-governmental organizations as well as governments and specialized agencies for relevant data to submit to the Commission. The report of the rapporteur would be considered in the Commission, which might then make general recommendations concerning the subject under discussion. Two subjects that might well be considered first are freedom of religion and the right to a fair trial.

Second, we will propose that annual reports on developments in the field of human rights be prepared by each member Government with the assistance of a national advisory committee. These reports would be considered in the Commission at the same time as the study of the proposed rapporteur would be submitted.

Third, we will propose that the United Nations establish advisory services on specific aspects of human rights along the lines of the advisory services now being provided in the economic, social, and public administration fields. These services would be in the form of experts going to countries requesting the services, scholarships and fellowships being provided for training abroad, and arrangements for seminars.

These are action programs that the Commission can undertake now. There is no need for the Commission to limit itself to the drafting of covenants on human rights, which in any event will have limited applicability. The Commission should give more of its attention to constructive programs which can be initiated without delay in the United Nations for the promotion of the human rights principles of the Charter. Indeed, it will be greatly to the advantage of the Commission itself if it can at this session begin work on some of these affirmative tasks even before the covenants are considered by the General Assembly. In this way the Commission could mark out the basic lines of its future action programs and establish firmly its position in this field.

With all these potential programs for immediate action at this session of the Commission, I think that you can appreciate my view that we should reserve adequate time for the consideration of these later items.

It is my earnest hope that the work of this session will be successful, especially in the launching of new programs that will contribute effectively to the safeguarding of human liberty.

Indian response emotional. USSR seized opportunity associate itself with India. Impression created US alone in rejecting covenants despite statements by UK and USSR that they not committed to ratify but deferring decision to completion of covenant. (IPS has text US rebuttal statement.)

You should continue press along lines indicated in Secretary's letter and further develop US alternative of UN action program. You should reiterate as necessary view that US considers greater progress in Human Rights field possible through action programs rather than through Covenants although US will continue participate in efforts to draft Covenant.

In response to questions you should indicate that US position on Covenants on Human Rights was not evolved as answer to proponents Bricker Amendment but represents basic approach this Administration to UN human rights issue.

Since this basic new approach was directly relevant to Bricker hearings, forthright statement on this issue was included in Secretary's statement to Senate Committee at this time.

Re report other delegations attribute change in policy to change in administration, you should not dissipate this impression, since new administration has in fact adopted new approach designed to further progress in human rights more effectively than heretofore.

CONFIDENTIAL
No. 232

GENEVA, April 28, 1953.

Subject: Reaction of other Delegations to the new United States Policy on Human Rights.

For the information of the Department, there are reported below the reactions of some of the other delegations in the Commission on Human Rights to the new United States policy in the field of human rights.

The first public knowledge of the new United States approach to human rights resulted from the Secretary's statement before the Senate Judiciary Committee on Monday, April 6. This statement received brief notices in the Geneva press and in the Paris edition of the New York Herald Tribune on Tuesday, April 7. The Secretary's letter to Mrs. Lord was released to the press here on Tuesday. At the opening of the Commission meeting on Wednesday morning, April 8, Mrs. Lord made her initial statement, in which she included the President's message to the Commission. The warm and affirmative tone of that message and its arrival in time to be used in Mrs. Lord's statement did much to soften the impact of her announcement that the United States would not become a Party to the Covenants.

The reaction in the Commission was less hostile than our Delegation had anticipated, although the speeches of both the Indian and Philippine representatives were severely critical. The atmosphere would probably have been far more acrimonious had it not been for two different and fortuitous factors: the recent shift in general Soviet policy, resulting in a very mild comment from Mr. Morosov; and the presence of a considerable number of new and inexperienced representatives who were not prepared to make immediate comments on Mrs. Lord's statement.

Some of the representatives expressed admiration for the frankness of the American course. We suspect, however, that in some cases this was a left-handed compliment or that it was felt to be the diplomatic thing to say. It is quite evident that most of the delegates consider that frankness is not a part of traditional diplomacy. There are some who feel that we would have followed the usual diplomatic course if we had not had some ulterior or sinister purpose.

The suspicions of others were aroused, therefore, by our bluntness and by our making what they thought to be an unnecessary announcement before the completion of the Covenants. These representatives in particular are awaiting the details of our affirmative proposals to demonstrate that our Government will sincerely back international cooperation in the area of human rights.

A series of informal meetings is being held with Australia, Belgium, France, Sweden, and the United Kingdom to try to reach a common agreement or, at least, to avoid acrimonious public dissension, which can benefit only the Soviet bloc, on matters that will come up later, such as the Federal State Article, individual petitions, and self-determination. The Delegation is also consulting continually with delegations outside this group in order to explain our new policy and to exchange views on agenda items.

Our Delegation concludes that the initial impact of its negative position on the Covenants has begun to be dissipated, especially now that the Commission is preoccupied in the arduous task of drafting the articles on implementation. It expects and hopes that its prestige in the Commission will be notably strengthened as soon as it has formally submitted its draft resolutions on the three new action programs. For this reason, the Delegation has hastened the preparation of these draft resolutions as working papers for the purpose of consultation with other non-Soviet delegations, the Secretariat, and the non-governmental organizations. The Delegation appreciates the promptness with which the Department, in restricted telegrams No. 659, No. 688 [668?] and No. 676 responded to its requests for assistance.<sup>2</sup> [Here follows at some length an account by the representatives of the following countries: Australia, Belgium, China, Egypt, France, India, Lebanon, Philippines, the United Kingdom, Uruguay, and the Soviet Union; and by representatives of non-governmental organizations. Kingdom.<sup>2</sup> As a matter of fact, I had made an informal agreement with the representatives of these countries that they would not attack our program. I was disappointed that they not only referred to the importance of the Covenants and our not signing them but also went fairly far in pointing out the difficulties of such a program. The French Representative, however, was very constructive and helpful and carried out his promise to be of help by submitting amendments.<sup>3</sup> My impression is that the French Representative would like very much individually to go along with us but that he had had instructions from his government to resist some of our suggestions. The help we received from France and China in the debate was most helpful in developing a procedure.

The Representative of Egypt was also very helpful and has shown great friendliness during the whole conference. The Chairman of the Commission (Egypt) has consistently not only pushed to have the United States program presented but also had hoped to have it come to vote. It was due mainly to his insisting on its being included on the Agenda that we are about to make progress. Although my personal relationships have been excellent with the Indian and Lebanese Representatives and they had privately expressed enthusiasm about our program, they did not comment one way or another.

The Uruguayan Representative made no comment and abstained on the final resolution, proposed by Sweden, which asked Member States and Specialized Agencies to submit comments on our proposals by October 1, 1953—in time for discussion in the General Assembly. Only the Soviet bloc opposed this motion and only Uruguay abstained. I have not been able to establish as good relationships with the Uruguayan representative as I would have wished. The Chilean challenged the United States proposals on a legal basis of the whole procedure and his remarks were critical to a degree that it raised doubts in the minds of other delegations. Those making comments on their disappointment at our not signing the Covenants were the Soviet Union, Sweden, and Yugoslavia. The Soviet attacks on our proposals were rather violent and sarcastic. This was the only showing of unfriendli-

<sup>2</sup> The British position had been foreshadowed in Mrs. Lord's despatch 232 of Apr. 28, supra. The British representative, Mr. Hoare, had indicated that although the United Kingdom did not expect to sign the draft Covenants, the British Government "would rather let the drafting go on indefinitely", thus "forestalling any necessity to state whether they would sign or not and also forestalling any inquiry into any specific problem of human rights such as that envisaged in our so-called action program. . . . Mr. Hoare's reaction to the so-called action program was violently adverse and he took the position that nothing could result from any reporting of existing conditions to the Commission except attacks upon the United States and United Kingdom for propaganda purposes . . . ."

<sup>3</sup> This French position had been presaged in despatch 2183 from Paris of Apr. 8, 1953, in which Ambassador Dillon had reported the unofficial reaction of the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs upon being apprised of the new U.S. policy on human rights: the new policy was a sound one but some concern was felt about the new action program. (340.1 AG/4-853)

ness on the part of the Soviet bloc during the whole meeting. The Yugoslavians were most helpful and had given us several suggestions before the debate and introduced some very helpful amendments.

I consider that we made a good deal of progress and gained ground by having the proposals forwarded to Member States and Specialized Agencies, even though I regret that we did not have time to get a final vote on the proposals at this session. A great deal of diplomatic preparation will be needed from here on to explain our proposals to other governments before the meetings of the Council and the General Assembly. We need especially to anticipate the kind of questions that we were asked by the Soviet, Chilean, and Belgian representatives about the legality of our proposals.

Comments on Other Representatives

Mr. Morosov of the Soviet Union as well as Mr. Druto of Poland have shown unusual friendliness both in and out of meetings. Mr. Morosov came to me yesterday, telling me he was going to vote for me for membership in the Subcommittee on the Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities and expressed the hope I would vote for his candidate. I told him I would vote for his candidate.

We have made especially good friends outside the meetings with the representatives of Pakistan, Lebanon, India, Sweden, France, the United Kingdom, Australia, and Belgium. We have found the representative of the Philippines rather cold and unapproachable. He seems to suspect our motives in whatever we do and seems to feel that we wish to avoid anything that has to do with discrimination.

We have not been able to make any progress on a personal basis with the two Latin American representatives; but some of this might be due to the fact that the Uruguayan representative is so very much concerned about our tariff on wool and seems to take it as a personal discrimination against his country.

Mr. Humphrey of the Secretariat has been very helpful especially behind the scenes in advising us on strategy. As previously stated, the Chairman (Egypt) has been very friendly both during the work and on the outside.

I have a personal conviction that some of the misunderstandings of our motives in proposing a new program and in trying to outline an orderly system of work for the Subcommittee have been misrepresented to some of the delegates by Mr. Santa Cruz of Chile, who is here on a United Nations Mission and who openly stated to me in a rather violent way his feelings about the United States not signing the Covenants. In my mind, he is definitely a mischief-maker.<sup>4</sup>

In spite of the fact that we began in a rather hostile atmosphere after our first statement, which came as a shock to all the representatives except the few I was able to talk to in New York, we feel we have overcome this hostility and that we have many countries that will fight for our program. For as the Chairman has said, and I think he reflects the opinion of others, "This program of the United States will save the Human Rights Commission".

HUMAN RIGHTS COVENANTS

Mr. Green then next reviewed the Draft International Covenants on Human Rights pointing out that while the US announced in 1953 that it will not sign the Covenants, it is continuing to assist in the drafting. He further commented that the US program for specific action in the field of Human Rights had not yet been acted upon by the Human Rights Commission. In concluding, he stated that the US did not favor having either Committee 3 or the Human Rights Commission concentrate on the final drafting of the Covenants to the exclusion of other matters nor do we favor convening a special plenipotentiary conference for this purpose.<sup>1</sup>

Regarding the action program, Mrs. Lord, the United States Representative, in reporting to the Secretary of State on the 10th Session of the Commission on Human Rights, held in New York from Feb. 23-Apr. 16, 1954 said: "The Commission devoted its first five weeks to the completion of the two draft covenants on Human Rights. The last forty minutes of the seven and a half weeks of substantive debate were devoted to the United States' proposals for an action program . . . . We will need another year of diplomatic consultations in order to persuade other governments, especially those of the British Commonwealth

In answer to Senator Smith's question as to why the US continues to assist in the drafting of Covenants which we will not sign, Mrs. Lord stated that US interest could be served by this procedure as we have some influence in toning down excessive demands by some of the less responsible States and also have the opportunity of getting the US viewpoint on Human Rights questions better understood by other governments.

Mr. Hotchkis indicated his support of continued US participation in the drafting of the Covenants insofar as economic rights are concerned as we could better defend US interests and continue to call attention to the fact that while the Soviets vote for political, economic and social rights, they do not grant such rights to their own citizens.

In answer to a question, Senator Smith confirmed his belief that the US Senate would not ratify the Covenants but expressed his support of continued US participation in the drafting of both Covenants. The meeting adjourned at 10:22 A.M. and Western Europe, to go along with us and to arrange with some governments to co-sponsor our proposals. There is also need for more thorough consideration within our own Government of the implications of our proposal to study individual rights . . . ."
