TO ALUMNI AND STUDENTS.

The ALUMNI MAGAZINE herewith enters upon its fifth year and the management hopes its most successful one. It seems hardly necessary to remind the alumni that hand in hand with the expansion of the university should go that of its representative publication, but the MAGAZINE must have your individual help if it is to exist or hold its own in the ranks of its contemporaries. It must be sustained by a loyal alumni spirit and must remain dependent on the widely-scattered graduate body, even for news of a personal nature. The moneyed help is still more important and has in the past barely met expenses. A magazine of this nature should at least pay for the labor put into it. Other similar college publications—notably the Stanford Alumnus—have grown so strong of late that they have felt safe to leave the domain of monthlies and have entered the more expensive field of the weekly. The WISCONSIN ALUMNI is not prepared for this step yet, but trusts to grow under a generous patronage to more and more meet the demands of the alumni body. Let them show the proper spirit by promptly subscribing and also keeping the readers of the MAGAZINE informed as to their doings.

DEAN E. E. BRYANT.

THE
WISCONSIN ALUMNI MAGAZINE.

VOL. V. OCTOBER, 1903. NO. 1.

EDWIN E. BRYANT.

[Born January 10, 1835; died August 11, 1903.]

The late Edwin E. Bryant, for many years dean of the college of law in the University of Wisconsin, was a man of wide interests and varied activities. He was a practicing lawyer at the time of the firing on Fort Sumpter, but he almost immediately left his practice and enlisted for the war. He served throughout the rebellion reaching the rank of lieutenant-colonel, before peace was concluded. After resuming his practice for some two years he again turned to military affairs, becoming adjutant general of Wisconsin. He was also private secretary to Governor Fairchild for a time, and later was in the state legislature. He had some experience in journalism, having edited a paper at Monroe before the war, and the Madison Democrat for some time. As a lawyer he not only engaged in an extensive private practice for many years, but he served as assistant attorney general for the post office department during the first administration of President Cleveland. He was chairman of committee on revision of the statutes in 1878, and with William F. Vilas he brought out a reprint of eighteen volumes of the supreme court reports. As a law writer his books are favorably known to the lawyers of the country.

It was, however, as dean of the college of law that General Bryant became known to the Wisconsin students, and it will be from that position and by his title as dean that he will be longest remembered by them. He entered upon the duties of this position in 1889, and continued to serve until the close of the last college year. When he took up his work in the law school it had an enrollment of one hundred and twelve students, and the course extended over a period of only two years. When he laid down his duties as dean the enrollment had increased to two hundred and twenty-six students in spite of the lengthening of the course by the addition of an extra year, and of the raise of the standard of admission. It was during this time that the appropriation for the erection of the law building was secured, and that the law school moved upon the hill. Not only did the outward and material aspect of the law school improve, but the courses of instruction were strengthened and the general character of the work done by the students was considerably improved.

Dean Bryant was, however, much more of a teacher than an administrator. The routine of the detail work of his office was not to his liking, and he was glad to leave to others the minute supervision over the work of the law school, retaining, however, the general control in his own hands. In the instruction of the students his method and manner were peculiarly his own. He had no "system" of teaching, but he endeavored to impart to the students, in the way that seemed best adapted to the subject and to the class, something from his own vast store of knowledge. He conducted his class informally. He was a famous story teller, and considered that the time was not lost by the telling of a story in the class room, if thereby some point of law was emphasized. He illustrated the work as he went along by hypothetical cases in which some members of the class would figure, to the amusement of their fellow students, and by this method there was usually carried away from the class room a grasp upon the principle of the law.

Dean Bryant not only understood the teaching of the class, but he was well fitted to teach not only his own particular subjects, but any of those included in the curriculum of the law school. For he was "very learned in the law," and he was willing and anxious that the students who sat under him should have every facility which he could offer in their advancement in their chosen profession. The student who wished to learn from the instruction of Dean Bryant had ample opportunity for the fulfillment of that wish. The student who did not care whether he became a good lawyer or not did not have his work forced upon him by the dean, but he could not but carry away a considerable insight upon the subject at which he had been working.

The essential characteristic of Dean Bryant both in his work as a man and in his life in the law school was his extraordinary kindness. It was in this also that his faults as a teacher lay. He was too good-natured and too willing to give the dull or indifferent student another chance, and yet, after all, it may be incorrect to call this characteristic of Dean Bryant a fault. There are plenty of those who stand ready for the stern and severe parts who will force the student to the utmost of his endeavors, who will drive instead of lead, but those who like Dean Bryant, can bring to their work a spirit of affection for the student, a fund of information which is ready for the service of those who wish to learn, and high ideals for their profession are all too rare both in active practice and in academic life.

A. L. SANBORN.

SUMMER SESSION OF 1903.

With the close of its work in August, the summer session of the College of Letters and Science finished the first half decade of its history. Short as this period is, it has seen the summer session pass out of the experimental stage, so that now it may be looked upon as a permanent element in the life of the university. The primary reason for this is that it has been found to supply important demands on the part of certain classes in the community. Among these are teachers who may need a more complete acquaintance with the subjects they are teaching. There are secondly undergraduates with deficiencies to be made up. Still another group is formed by undergraduates who find it necessary to complete their course in three years. This they can now do, if their standing is over 85 per cent., by taking eighteen hours of work throughout the academic year, and by attending two summer sessions. Finally—to bring this far from complete enumeration to a close—a most important group is that of the graduate students. They cannot afford to spend three months of the year in idleness, and yet ordinarily they cannot work to the best advantage without laboratories and personal instruction. Besides performing these important services, the summer session has proved to be of material value to the University itself by broadening the sphere of its influence. In a number of cases it has attracted graduate students who have remained through the year. It has led high school teachers who have come here from other states to recommend the University to their students. Furthermore, it has given to the teachers of Wisconsin who are not graduates of the University an opportunity to become acquainted at first hand with its resources, its methods, its influence and its ideals.

The experience of the past five years has not merely demonstrated the necessity for a summer session, it has settled at least in a general way what shall be the type of instruction offered. From 1887 to 1898 there was maintained under the patronage and with the financial assistance of the University what was called a summer school. The instruction was all elementary, a large proportion of it, especially in mathematics and the languages, being of high-school rank. The summer sessions of many universities are of little higher grade than this today. But with the establishment of the Wisconsin summer session it was decided that with a few exceptions nothing should be offered but University work, which would entitle the student to a credit towards graduation, and that advanced courses should be as well represented in the program as the more elementary ones. In order to insure the greatest attainable instructional efficiency a rule was adopted in accordance with which every professor and assistant professor in the faculty teaches at least once in two summers. In addition, arrangements are made by which a number of courses are given by prominent members of the faculties of other universities. As the result of this policy the University has a summer session which in the nature of the work it accomplishes and the grade of students it attracts has but two or three rivals in the country.

The summer school of artisans, though two years younger than the summer session of the College of Letters and Science, seems also to have passed out of the experimental stage. It was established upon the suggestion of the late Dean Johnson and is conducted by the faculty of the College of Engineering. Its students may be divided into three classes: Artisans, manual training teachers, and students registered in the College of Engineering. Many persons such as machinists, shop-foremen, and superintendents, who can not attend the regular engineering course, nevertheless find they need some of the instruction which such a course affords. This they cannot get at a manual training or trades school. Nor can they obtain all they need from a correspondence school because of the lack of personal contact with the teacher, and the absence of laboratories. A second group—the manual training teachers—require some work of the same nature as do the artisans. Having, however, different objects in view, the methods and the materials of instruction are in part different. The students of the College of Engineering attend the summer session in order to take the shop work which is required as a part of their course. By taking it in vacation they can devote the time thus gained to other studies. The program of the school includes courses in steam, gas, and other heat engines, in applied electricity, in machine design, in materials of construction, in shop work, and in surveying.

The summer session opened this year on July 6 and lasted, as heretofore, six weeks. The total attendance in the College of Letters and Science was 328, distributed as follows: Graduates of the University of Wisconsin, 41; graduates of other universities and colleges, 47; undergraduates in the University of Wisconsin, 114; undergraduates from other universities, 10; normal school graduates, 40; teachers, 42; candidates for admission, etc., 34. Of this number 135 were teachers or school superintendents, 13 being members of college faculties. The number of courses offered was 119, and these were given by 30 professors and assistant professors, and 13 instructors and assistants. The instructors from other universities were: Professor John B. Clark, professor of political economy in Columbia University; Professor Merrick Whitcomb, professor of history in the University of Cincinnati, and Professor Le Rossignol, professor of political economy in the University of Denver. The attendance in the school of artisans was 72, of whom 18 were students in the College of Engineering. The instructional force numbered 11. In 1902 the total attendance for these two schools was 407. In addition there were 10 in the summer school of pharmacy, which was discontinued this year. Of the 400 students of the present year 291 were from Wisconsin, 28 from Illinois, 15 from Iowa, 11 each from Minnesota and Ohio, and 10 from South Dakota. The remainder of the total was made up from the 13 states and the island of Jamaica.

FRANK CHAPMAN SHARP.

HAMILTON GREENWOOD TIMBERLAKE.

[Born December 8, 1871; died July 19, 1903.]

Perhaps the news of none of the many deaths that have occurred among faculty members within three or four years past has come with more of a shock than did that of Professor H. G. Timberlake. He had been married but a few weeks, and had barely entered upon the work of the summer session, when, with scarcely a moment's warning, the end came. He was almost at the beginning of his active life, yet there was enough behind him of work already accomplished to tell us something of how useful that life was to be. He had just received a permanent faculty appointment; and he had been selected by the Carnegie Institute as one of a few men whose success in scientific research had marked them as worthy of a special opportunity for the further pursuit of their investigations. His death means not only that he will be missed by those of us who knew him as a friend, but it involves a distinct loss to the University and to the world of science.

Hamilton Greenwood Timberlake was born December 8, 1871, at Medley Springs, Berkeley county, West Virginia. When he was six years of age his father died, and shortly after, in November, 1884, the family removed to Port Byron, Illinois, where his early education was received. After graduating from the Port Byron Academy, he taught for two years, during 1891-2, in Coe township, Rock Island county, and the next year at New Bedford, Illinois. In the fall of 1893 he entered Lake Forest University. His earlier training had been along classical lines, with the intention of preparing for the ministry, and it was with the same purpose in mind that he took up a classical course at the University. During his college career, however, perhaps under the influence of Professor John M. Coulter, who became president at Lake Forest during Mr. Timberlake's freshman year, he developed a decided liking for scientific studies; and, although he graduated from the classical course with the degree of A. B., he had taken a large proportion of the science then available at that institution. He was active in several lines of undergraduate life, winning considerable prominence as a debator, and being editor of the college weekly during his senior year.

Leaving Lake Forest after his graduation in 1897, he received an appointment as assistant in botany at the University of Michigan, where the next two years were spent in graduate study, and where, in 1899, he received the degree of M. S. In the fall of that year he came to the University of Wisconsin as instructor in botany. During the past winter he was elected to a research assistantship by the council of the Carnegie Institute, his work to begin September 1st. In June he was promoted to the position of assistant professor of botany in the University, with a year's leave of absence to enable him to carry on his researches under the Carnegie appointment. He had well under way a paper on the processes involved in starch formation in various Algae, which was to be presented as a doctor's thesis, and the investigations which he had planned in continuation of the same line of work for the coming year were full of promise of extremely valuable results.

HAMILTON GREENWOOD TIMBERLAKE.

On the 30th of June he was married to Miss Violet Slack of Madison. He is survived also by his mother and one sister, living at La Grange, Illinois, and one brother, Mr. Thomas M. Timberlake, of Chicago.

The following is a list of papers on botanical subjects published by Professor Timberlake, all of them since his coming to this university, although the first is an extension of the thesis presented by him for the master's degree at the University of Michigan:

"The development and function of the cell plate in higher plants."—Botanical Gazette, August, 1900.

"Swarm-spore formation in Hydrodictyon utriculatum Roth."—Botanical Gazette, March, 1901.

"Starch formation in Hydrodictyon utriculatum."—Annals of Botany, December, 1901.

"Development and structure of the swarm-spores of Hydrodictyon."—Transactions Wisconsin Academy of Sciences, Arts and Letters, August, 1902.

"The nature and function of the pyrenoid."—Science, March 20, 1903.

C. E. ALLEN.

THE LAW SCHOOL.

The law school enters upon another year with excellent prospects. Many of the old students are returning and a good class of new men are entering. The enrollment up to October 1st was as follows: First year class, 68; second year class, 42; third year class, 21. These figures will be increased considerably by additional entries during the next week.

The work left unprovided for by the death of Gen. Bryant will be taken by Judge E. Ray Stevens, of Madison, graduate of the University of Wisconsin, from the academic department and the college of law, and by Edwin S. EDITORIAL.

The new school year upon which we are entering is a significant one. A new regime begins and with it an experiment but little tried in the west, the administration of a university by an alumnus of the institution. That the prosperity and the prestige that has marked the progress of the university in the past will continue all friends of the institution must hope. President Van Hise will feel the sustaining hand of the entire student and alumni body.

* * *

The ALUMNI MAGAZINE desires that accuracy and completeness characterize its records of university history. To that end correction is made of the statement in the commencement number that the first university paper, The University Press, was established by Joseph Cover, '72, in 1869. The credit belongs to George Raymer, '71, who in 1870 established the Press.

The registration at the university during the first week showed an increase in the freshman class of 125 over last year. In the school of commerce and college of engineering the growth is particularly gratifying. A prosperous year seems opening to the institution.

* * *

Death has been busy in the ranks of old Wisconsin during the past summer and young and old have alike been called and many with sudden and violent summons. The older alumni in particular mourn the loss of Dean E. E. Bryant of the law faculty. An appreciative estimate of the man appears in this issue from the pen of an alumnus who knew him well.

* * *

It is to be earnestly hoped that all alumni will co-operate in the success of this magazine by promptly remitting their subscription dues. Money is needed to carry it on and has been badly needed in the past. The price does not put it out of the reach of anyone as it is less than that charged for like publications of other colleges. Indeed, it has been urged that the subscription to this magazine should be raised to $2, but the management is desirous of reaching as large a number of the alumni as possible. To that end the price is kept at $1 and this also includes the dues to the Alumni association.

OUTLOOK IN ATHLETICS.

GEORGE F. DORNER, '97.

The most noteworthy feature of the football season to date is the adoption of the graduate coaching system, with Arthur H. Curtis, captain of the 1901 eleven, in charge. Wisconsin, able to rely on Phil. King for seven years, during which time his success was unparalleled in the whole country, has not been compelled to make an experiment in the coaching line since 1896, when Mr. King was secured. In the present case, however, the experiment is not in the man so much as the system, for Mr. Curtis' four years on the team have given all who have watched and known him, a pretty good line on his ability. As assistant he will have Charles McCarthy, formerly of Brown University, and a resident of Madison for the past four or five years.

At this date, September 24th, it is futile to attempt an estimate of the prospective strength of the eleven. The writer has not even seen the squad at work. No hard work has as yet been done, Coach Curtis having wisely decided to move slowly with the practice, which is especially necessary, as the new men seem to be green and in need of much drilling on first principles.

Of last year's team only five return, Captain Abbott at left end; Bush, right end; Fogg, quarter back; Bertke, left guard, and Vanderboom, half and full back. All these men are good, with few superiors in their positions in the west, and in Captain Abbott the team has an aggressive, determined leader, who last year was easily the best end in the middle west. But the other "big" teams have more veterans and the task of filling six, and possibly seven, places is rendered doubly difficult by the fact that, with few exceptions, last year's substitutes were the poorest lot seen on a Wisconsin field in many years.

It will thus be seen that much depends on the new material, and regarding the recruits there seems to be a notable difference of opinion. Manager Kilpatrick, who has had most to do with getting the men together, declares them the best crowd that the university has had since 1899. But Coach Curtis is of the opinion that although there is a great deal of plausible looking "beef," the men are practically all inexperienced, many of them lacking the most elementary knowledge of the game. Making due allowance for Coach Curtis' natural attitude of caution in making statements regarding the outlook, his opinion must naturally be given more weight than that of Manager Kilpatrick.

It must not at once be assumed, however, that Wisconsin's prospects are gloomy, for such is not the case. It is merely the part of reason to look the facts in the face, and doing so, one must conclude that on paper, and at this time, the prospects of Michigan, Minnesota and Chicago all seem rather better, equipped, as these teams are, with more veterans and better tried and more experienced quotas of new players. Against this, however, may be set the fact that Wisconsin has always been most dangerous after a year of defeats. The coach this year has the highest confidence of students and alumni, and there is every reason to expect that the old Wisconsin spirit which has always been our proudest boast, is to be in evidence from the start this fall. Every man with the smallest degree of athletic intelligence knows what the team is up against, with its new men and top-heavy schedule, and is determined to make the season memorable, even as in 1897, when King, starting with only Jerry Riordan and "Slam" Anderson, of the '96 eleven, turned out a championship team. The writer believes that if Mr. Curtis is given a free hand this fall he will get out of his material every possible ounce of effectiveness, and that the university will rally to the support of the team as in no recent season. This being true, Wisconsin will have an eleven of which every alumnus may, and will, be proud, whether it wins all or none of its big games.

* * *

The schedule to be played is as follows:

- October 3—Naperville College.
- October 10—Lawrence University.
- October 17—Beloit College.
- October 24—Knox College.
- October 31—Chicago University.
- November 7—Oshkosh Normal.
- November 14—Michigan at Ann Arbor.
- November 21—Northwestern at Chicago.
- November 26—Minnesota at Milwaukee.

The games are in Madison unless otherwise indicated.

The severity of this schedule only makes the difficulties of the coach the greater. Chicago, Minnesota and Michigan come inside of four weeks, and to make matters worst, Northwestern, a hitherto despised opponent, which has been placed on the "off" Saturday usually left open before Thanksgiving, seems likely to have quite a good team. Wisconsin will enter the Chicago game an untried aggregation. Only four games are scheduled before this crucial test, all with teams of the most indifferent quality, while Chicago will have played nine, including Indiana, Purdue, Northwestern and Illinois. If the 'varsity wins the Chicago game, there will be every reason to hope for success in the others which follow it.

The squad at present numbers about forty men, including, besides the five veterans of last year, Roy Chamberlain, guard in 1899; Marsh, Remp, Findlay, Brindley, Cecil Schreiber, Bartelt, Kuehntstead, and Wrabetz, substitutes or reserves in 1902, and Bain of Haskell; Larish and Rosenthal of Oshkosh Normal, Washer of St. Louis, Hart, Hurd, Edge, Broad, Thompson, Perry, Hetzel, Davis, Robinson, Price, O'Brien, Jones, Peterson, Snyder, Zueppke, Rowland, and a number of other new men.

The work to date has consisted of practice in the fundamentals of blocking, charging, making openings, starting, handling the ball, and tackling the dummy.

* * *

It seems likely that the project of a freshman team will at last be given a practical test, and it is safe to say that if anything like a reasonable trial is made, it will prove one of the best football investments ever made at Wisconsin. If the team is given a capable coach and a reasonably good schedule, it is sure to prove a success.

* * *

Writing before the opening of the university, it is impossible to tell anything about the prospects in other sports, but in rowing, at least, Wisconsin is sure to be pretty well represented next year, as at least five, and probably six, of the 1903 'varsity will return. In baseball, prospects are uncertain, and the same is true of track athletics. Spring athletics are, indeed, too remote for discussion at this time, but next month the men who come from the preparatory and high schools will, at least, be pretty well known.

* * *

It seems curious that men who have imbibed the atmosphere of Wisconsin should be able to satisfy themselves with the stuff which circulates in Chicago, but Kirby, one of Wisconsin's most promising substitutes of two or three years ago, has joined Stagg's squad. Fred Schule, ex-captain of the 'varsity track team, will enter Michigan for graduate work this year. This is of no particular athletic interest, however, as Schule competed four years for Wisconsin. The ex-Badger has been in splendid form during the past season, having won the Central, American and Canadian championships successively in the high hurdles, besides taking points in the low hurdles and both jumps. He competed as a member of the Milwaukee Athletic club track team.

* * *

With men like Redden of Michigan and Eckersall of Chicago, playing such conspicuous parts in university football, it is just a little bit hard to see Earle Schreiber kept off Wisconsin teams for the third season, when in letter and spirit he is a better amateur than either of them.
