NO MORE WAR' MEETING WILL BE TOMORROW

Program Has Been Prepared To Celebrate Beginning Of World War

A "No More War" meeting will be held Saturday at 8:00 p. m. in Music Hall, in celebration of the anniversary of the beginning of the World War. Similar meetings are being held on the campuses of various normals and colleges, as methods of educating against war.

Miss Irma Hochstein of the legislative reference library has prepared a list of books on attainment of permanent peace and books against militarism. The lists have been posted in the various libraries of Madison. The books have been placed on prominent shelves as a part of the preparation for "No More War" day.

The program will be opened with the showing of a 15 minute film of the Educational Corporation. This one reel feature entitled "What's the Limit?" is an imaginative film of the animated cartoon type, illustrating the havoc of war. The film was shown a few weeks ago before several members of the Woman's Club by Prof. H. M. Dudley of the Extension Division with pleasing results.

Justice M. B. Rosenberry of the Wisconsin Supreme court, who will be the presiding officer, will present the theme of the evening. Miss Zona Gale will deliver a short address. Miss Gale is a member of the Wisconsin Peace society.

Prof. Carl Russell Fish, who is also on the program, will speak upon the "Possibility of Peace."

Callahan Talks On Part-Time Schools

"The Wisconsin method of dealing with the continuation and part-time school problem, is what has put it ahead of many states in this respect," said John Callahan, state superintendent of public instruction, Thursday in his talk on the relation of the state department of public instruction to the continuation and part-time schools of Wisconsin.

"Placing the administration of the work in a board that makes it its business to look after it, is what has 'speeded the work up,' whereas if each city had had its own problem to look after, there could have been no consolidated movement. Some places would have hesitated to take up the work, and others would not have the necessary equipment and funds, for what is everybody's business is nobody's business."

The increasing demand for vocational training in junior high schools he pointed out as one of the future dangers to the continuation and part-time school.

"This demand now averages between 30 and 70 per cent of the pupils," she said, "and equipment for both schools will be a heavy expense. The solution of the problem will have to be the co-operation of the two in the use of the equipment."

"To bisect a line and erect a perpendicular at that point, take a piece of paper the length of the line, fold it through the middle, mark off this space on the line and at the middle point, place the point of a square-cornered piece of paper so the bottom edge will rest on the line. Then draw a line from the top dot."

This is the manner in which Prof. W. W. Hart would have intuitive geometry taught. The occasion of the explanation was a conference on the organization of junior high school mathematics which was held Thursday afternoon.

"Constructive geometry has no place in the junior high school course," and Prof. Hart. "The trouble with the junior high school is

About eight or nine hundred students and residents of this city are expected to attend the Vesper service in the open-air theatre back of Bascom hall Sunday evening at 7 o'clock.

The Rev. M. G. Allison will speak and Prof. E. B. Gordon is in charge of the music. This is the last meeting.

Cercle Francais Will Give Drama

It was announced at the fifth meeting of the Cercle Francais Thursday evening at Lathrop hall, that a play would be given next Wednesday by French and Spanish students.

The musical number was a violin solo by Miss Henderson, accompanied by Miss Ingram. An illustrated lecture was given by Prof. A. F. Grundler.

BUNCHED HITS CINCH VICTORY

Lowman's Coaches Win From Varsity Nine By 3-2 Score

By James F. Lowe

Bunched hits in the second inning by Boebel, Armstrong, and Sullivan clinched a victory for Lowman's Coaches playing against the Varsity on lower campus yesterday afternoon.

The two hits coupled with an error and a sacrifice netted two runs, giving the Coaches a lead that the Varsity could not overcome.

Boebel, pitching for the trainers, took the first two men up easily in the first inning. Gus Tebell, the next man up, clouted out a three-bagger, but did not score before the side was out.

Ritchie was colvled for a hit by Armstrong, the first man to bat for the coaches. The next two men were put out, Armstrong in the meantime advancing to third. He then scored on an error.

In the second, the first Varsity man up fled out. A Mr. Hatfield then ambled up to the plate and lifted a long hit over the left fielder's head into the weeds. For distance, it was good for only two bases, but the ball could not be found and we are forced to credit the batsman with a home run.

WEEDS WILL PREVENT SPEEDY LAKE TRIP

Students at Chadbourne Hall have made arrangements for a sightseeing trip around Lake Monona to take place Sunday afternoon, July 30. Owing to the weedy condition of this lake the regular launches cannot be used. Two smaller boats will leave the Park Street pier at three-thirty o'clock. On the return trip, the party will stop at Bernard's Park, where a bag lunch will be eaten. The trip will take about four hours.

It has never been determined what should constitute its course. Every chap with a petty fad wants to make it an adjunct to the course. Teachers of mathematics should organize and know what they mean when they are talking about junior high school mathematics."

FINAL SOCIAL GATHERING IS THIS EVENING

Musical And Dramatic Numbers Will Be Given By Students

TO PRESENT FAIRY OPERA

Musical and dramatic numbers by students from the School of Music will be features of the final social gathering of summer school faculty and students in the auditorium and students in the audience.

Members of Miss Borge's classes will present "Milliotte," a fairy operetta in one act by David Stevens, in which Miss Esther Clark will have the title role.

Milliotte is Heroine

The story of the operetta centers on Milliotte, a young girl, who first appears alone in a forest counting her savings which amount to only one hundred cents.

Through the magic of the Turtle-woman, the pennies become dollars, which procures food, clothing, and fuel and leaves a balance of a dime.

Fairies Appear

Later the fairies appear, and the Turtle-woman is transformed into the fairy she was before she was punished for transgressing certain elfin laws.

Three financiers, with the dime as capital soon increase the amount to a dollar, which is restored to Milliotte.

Love Greater Than Knowledge

In this allegory, the Girl Graduate feels that her knowledge surpasses that of King Solomon, Confucius, and the Muse. Finally, however, through the teaching of Father Time, the girl realizes that her knowledge is small, and finally the Young Man reveals to her that love is greater than knowledge gained from books.

Miss Marian Lawson, contralto soloist, and Miss Katherine Reid, soprano soloist, students of Prof. P. W. Dykema, will appear in "Old Plantation Days"

HESPERIAN REUNION HAS BEEN POSTPONED

The reunion of the Hesperian Literary society, which was scheduled for last evening, was postponed in order that it might not conflict with the concert by Ricardo Martin. The reunion may be held sometime next week, but no definite plans have been made.

WILFRED ZCHURZ.
It was by mere chance that I came upon Wilfred Zchurz '12. We were both diving for the same cigar butt when a policeman spied us and started after Wilfred. Instinctively I started after him and as we raced along the street toward his home in the Latin quarter, he told me the following story:

"I have found my engineering degree a great comfort to me. I know that as soon as the depression of which I have been a victim for the last ten years is over I can get a good job."

We soon arrived at the alley in which Zchurz slept but there were two policemen waiting for us. That night Wilfred told me many more interesting tales of college days as we sat upon our modest beds which the city had furnished.

POETREE
Matilde Young was old and rough. In fact unlike a fairy. She knew her oats and all her stuff. When Denver was a prairie.

But did Matilde mind her years? She didn't care a hoot. She cut her hair below her ears, And powdered up her snoot.

She bought herself a sporting lid, And drew herself a map, And now the boy all call her kid, And take her on their lap.

CROWDS REFUSE TO LEAVE GYM
AFTER HEARING MARTIN'S SINGING

By the Cub.

Refusing to leave the gymnasium after Riccardo Martin's masterly rendition of the famous Arias from Fagliacci, last night, a thousand and more music lovers clamored for an encore. The tenor graciously consented.

It was this selection from the Italian opera that was the supreme test of Mr. Martin's voice. Through all its intricacies, its laughing scales, its thundering crescendos, and its wailing modulations, Mr. Martin was comparable to Caruso. There was that volume, that quality, that assurance which made every auditor sit in spellbound wonder. As notable as was the volume of his voice was the range. Even as he soared into the upper register there was detectable not the slightest variation in quality. Rich and round and clear were all his tones. He is truly a master. Of that all his hearers were convinced. His reputation as one of America's foremost tenors, then, is not without foundation.

Mr. Martin opened his program with Siegmund's Love Song, from Die Valkyrie by Wagner. Because his voice is well adapted to this sweet melodic song, Mr. Martin at once pleased his hearers. It was a fitting introduction.

In the Chant Venitien by Remberg, which served as a concluding number for the second part of the concert, he scored a great success. More spirited than any of the preceding numbers, it was a manual stimulant. Loud and long applause followed. Then, demonstrating that we like to hear what we know and what we can understand, Mr. Martin sang that ever popular lilting song from Riggleto, How Fickle Women Are, and he was awarded a storm of applause that called him back for a second encore. This time he sang Kentucky Home.

While it was a delightful rendering of that old southern favorite, to mind it seemed to lack the plaintive tenderness that one associates with that crooning melody. The same might be said of the Songs My Mother Taught Me, by Dvorak. Here, too, there appeared to be a want of the tender feeling that should be apparent in the Dvorak masterpiece.

His program included songs from the Italian, the French, the Russian, the German and the American. Hesitant as I am to confess it, I feel the American songs, Sea Fever, by John Ireland, and Before the Dawn, by G. W. Chadwick, were accorded less enthusiasm than any of the other numbers. Which to my notion, was just.

To pass unnoticed Hubert Carlin, Mr. Martin's accompanist, would be to neglect one of the most pleasant treats of the evening. Mr. Carlin was truly that. Not only was he an unusually able pianist but he was also a skilled accompanist. There is a difference. Almost boyish in appearance, he was possessed of a modesty that is not common in artists. And when his audience steadfastly refused to let him go, he returned after playing Chopin's Polonaise and offered some enchanting melody that neither I nor my neighbor was able to recognize. It may have been original. But whatever it was, it was so delightful that he was called back to play it a second time.

Ain't it Heck? Nature may be grand, but all postal regulations certainly aren't. "Not by a long shot," say we all. Do you s'pose Doc Work thought of the inconvenience he would cause our "begged" and enamored coeds when he made the new ruling about "specials"? No more will our "studentesses" crawl out at 5 and 6 o'clock of a morning to see if those special deliveries from the more than special men have arrived. And no more will the messengers deliver "ten cents extra" letters which come in on the 12:48 p. m.—nope, not until the following morning, and after 7 o'clock mind you. We just happened to think that this may cause an increase in the sale of radio sets. That will be interesting, eh what, when we all can listen in to the endearing good-nights and good-mornings of our fair neighbors. Anyway, we think Madison should be an exception to the new ruling, which says that "special delivery letters may not be delivered from any postoffice in the country after 11 o'clock," and not sent out until the next morning "as soon as possible" after 7 o'clock. One of the S. G. A. rules is that there shall be no clapping for serenades after eleven o'clock. The dean of women made that request and it was presumably given S. G. A. support and sanction.

Occupants of some of the sorority houses have repeatedly violated the rule. Others have as faithfully lived up to it. The result is obvious. Serenaders who have no high regard for the rights or privileges of others, play their symphonies in jazz music until an early hour in the morning. It is noticed that they play loudest and longest in front of those houses where the women students violate the S. G. A. rule by repeatedly encroaching.

Evidently the serenading party desires noisy appreciation of their chivalrous efforts. At any rate the sorority houses who have respected the spirit of the S. G. A. rule have not been receiving the benefits of serenades. And it appears that the lateness of the hour has no deterring effect upon either the serenaders nor those who are being entertained.

Where is the spirit of fair play? When some houses respect the rule, which after all is a reasonable one? why cannot the others meet them with the same spirit? If the women students will not obey the rules laid down by their own governing body—then student self-government among the women is a farce.

Unfortunately for those few who believe that the night should be filled with music, there are many others who have become obsessed with the idea that study and sleep are among the essentials. These latter prefer to take their serenades in small doses and preferably before the midnight hour. That is why the S. G. A. rule was passed. That is one of the potent reasons why it should be obeyed and respected.

The regulation which prohibits one o'clock parties and all playing after midnight is but one result of this continued lack of consideration for the rights of others. The city has passed an ordinance forbidding late playing. And the university authorities have made a similar regulation concerning university parties.

That such regulations were made is but natural. When students cannot properly restrain their own activities and interests so as to keep them from annoying others, then they must expect to have even harsher rules than is seemingly necessary thrust upon them.

But it is too bad that the innocent as well as the guilty will lose their privileges. A little temperance on the part of a few would have prevented such strict regulation.

'Part Time Schools Are 'Side Shows,'" Says Dr. Turner

Expresses Disapproval Of Attitude Of Full-Time Educators

A "side-show" that nobody has time to look after was the way in which Dr. Jennie M. Turner, of the state board for vocational education, characterized the part-time school of most states in her lecture, "Academic Traditions for Changing Academic Standards or the Part-Time Schools," yesterday afternoon at Bascom hall.

"Many administrators in full-time schools are hostile to it and cause trouble," was the charge she made against Wisconsin. "Some regard it as a makeshift to be tolerated until the law can be amended to require pupils to stay in school as long as they should be on a full-time basis."

"Others think the part-time school is different from a high school, and the pupils can not be expected to much school work; that they must be entertained; have a 'milk and water' diet of instruction."

"Educators do not yet understand the possibilities that can come from making industry a part of education, thus letting the child's education extend over a long period of time," she said.

I do not mean that parents should be allowed to take advantage of the part-time idea to take their children out of school to make them help support the family, but if a boy becomes tired of school and is anxious to earn money, he will be better off in the part-time school. Wages should be paid him in accordance with his record at school. Under proper conditions, he will in the end learn more.

"Our law makes a mistake to allow age to determine when a child shall leave the school. It should depend on how much he has learned."

The two biggest things the part-time school should give are power in industrial democracy and training for citizenship, because the future is going to be concerned more with the industrial side of life than with the political."

Deer Diary

By K. T. Kut-up

CHAPTER VIII

(In which I find vamping isn't so satisfactory.)

July 20, 1922—Deary, last night I had my first sad awakening from being a vamp.

Now deary, a man may be fascinated or amused (according to his type) by a vamp but, the vamp girl has no place in the hearts of her less attractive sisters.

The reason why, little Deary, is because each and every girl aims to be the "leading lady" and any clever vamp who interferes with her popularity is her bitterest enemy.

This wise philosophy deary, old scout, I concluded after a long wakeful, tearful, remorseful night.

Deary you know you are my true confidant. I tell you all my joys, my sorrows, my ambitions (few tho' they be) but Deary never, no never before have I told you such a sand tale as I'm going to tell you now. Listen sympathetically little one.

Last evening, three of my girl chums, Rosalind, Laura and Marion and myself, or rather I and my three girl chums (because I stand out far beyond them in relative attractiveness) went over to watch the ball game in the field front of the library.

Deary, why do girls make such perfect dumb doras of themselves at a ball game?

They get hysterical, scream and the like and almost faint dead away.

Deary, I am proud to say that I was the only girl at that game who had perfect poise.

I hate ball game! The only ball game I like is the exciting game of croquet where your head and that of your opponent collide once in a while (oh thrilling!).

As I said I was the only little girl on that ball field who didn't shriek, roll my eyes back in their sockets and fall into some manly arms.

But each of my three companions had some one to fall back on. After they had pulled the "unconscious stunt" for the third time, one of the victims mopped his brow and turned to me. "I'm about caught up on these perishing wimmin," said he.

I didn't say one word but deary, if eyes can speak, mine told him volumes of sympathy.

Deary was it my fault that I'm attractive? Could I help it if he talked to me. He was so utterly charming!

He asked me where I came from and I said Chicago and he knew every man I knew and went to odds of shows and the like. Right then and there I invited him to the house for Sunday dinner.

August 6th and he's coming!

All this while I was conscious of the icy glove of my three friends because in the meantime their heroes had vanished.

Rather than have them angry at me I said bye bye to my new sweetie and jaunted off with the girls upstairs.

Just as we passed a barber shop I happened to look in and say my handsome hero having his nails manufactured.

Throwing down a bill (I'm sure was a 10) and not waiting for change he grabbed his panama and dashed out.

Of course I knew it was me whom he was after but I was walking ahead—with Marion the other two were behind.

Do you think they'd let him thru? I should say not. Each grabbed onto an arm and so the poor man had to walk with them.

He kept talking loud enough for me to hear but when I tried to reply my answers were drowned by the other girls.

When we got to the capitol Marion deserted me to go home and write a theme so I dropped back with Laura, Rosalind and Rudolph (isn't that the dearest name? He's just as nice as his name too!)

I kept up a gay line of chatter but the atmosphere was getting cooler ever minute.

Unconsciously I walked faster. The other girls complained of being tired and within five minutes he and I were walking alone I don't know how the other two faded away.

I haven't seen them only once since but their heads were a foot up in the air.

Deary aren't girls mean when they act that way? I can't understand where I get my broad, deep character. Last night I cried myself to sleep not because of selfish melancholy but for all the girls in the world who are so cruelly self-centered.

Leake Tells How Darwin Got His Dope On Monkeys

"The Voyage Of The Beagle" Is Subject Of Scientific Lecture

How an expedition sent out to explore a country for colonization purposes became the source of an epoch making scientific book was the theme of a lecture on "The Voyage of the Beagle," given by C. D. Leake, instructor in physiology, in Science hall Tuesday afternoon.

"Darwin's five years' cruise on the Beagle, a ship sent out by the British navy to explore the coasts of South America and the Pacific islands with a view to colonization, supplied him with the inspiration and the facts for his book, "The Origin of the Species," said Leake.

"Darwin barely escaped being 'flunked' at Cambridge, where his ability in Latin, Greek and Mathematics was a minus quantity, but he managed to graduate, and as naturalist joined a group of British men in a five year cruise of the Beagle along the coast of South America and the Pacific Islands. On this cruise, he encountered storms, drouths, and earthquakes; he saw and was influenced by the effect of these earth changes on animal life, the pressure exerted by natural conditions on animals and people, their very struggle for existence. "Many later scientific expeditions have been carried out," said Mr. Leake.

"The field of science has been made wider as a result of travel and these expeditions, all our knowledge of the earth has been developed. The scientific travels made by physicians have given us many important facts, one being the effect of high temperature upon the blood. On the basis of these trips, it has been made possible for men to fly."

Approximately $61,845.89 in city water rentals was collected by Thursday night. This leaves a total of $6,322.03.

Red Cross Desires
To Educate In Love
And Unselfishness

Director Schaefer Claims This Will Solve All American
Problems

A solution of all American problems, political, economic and social, would result from educating one generation in love and unselfishness.

It is on this theory that the American Junior Red Cross society is working, according to A. L. Schaefer, director of the organization, who lectured Wednesday in the Engineering building on the American Red Cross as an educational movement.

Develops Collective Action

"One of the greatest benefits of the Red Cross," said Schaefer, "is that it develops collective action in boys and girls in a social group. The individual is lost sight of and consequently, unselfishness.

It offers great opportunity for working out projects. Some of these that have been taken up by the various chapters are raising money for hospitals; sewing for hospitals and refugees from disasters; and the making of furniture for needy institutions. The last has been an excellent project for manual training classes."

Encourage Friendliness

The organization is trying to develop, through the schools, a spirit of world friendliness. It is doing this by encouraging correspondence between schools of different countries, the making of scrap books containing pictures and information showing life as it is in the respective countries, and the exchange of samples of school work.

Mr. Schaefer exhibited a scrap book made by pupils in South Africa which was sent to a school in Minnesota, one made in Paris, Illinois that is to be sent to Montenegro and also specimens of wood carving sent by pupils of Italy and Austria to children in some of the American Red Cross chapters.

English Teachers Should Read And Interpret Poems

Prof. S. A. Leonard Reads
From "Atlantic Book
Of Plays"

One of the duties of the teacher of English is to read and interpret plays and poems so the pupils will understand and appreciate them. With this thought in mind Prof. S. A. Leonard read two plays from "The Atlantic Book of Plays" in the lecture room of the Law building Wednesday afternoon. Professor Leonard made it emphatic that it was not necessary, however, for the teacher to impersonate in her reading.

The first play used for illustration was Winthrop Pankhurst's "The Beggar and the King," a play written during the war but one which the author says will be applicable for many years. It simply illustrates the optimistic or ostrich method of dealing with the unpleasant. The solution of the king and his servant as to the disposal which shall be made of the beggar is the one that has been at work during the Russian revolution and will work during every situation of this kind.

The second play was "Campbell of Kilmore" by J. A. Ferguson, a play of the time of Prince Charley with the setting of the Waverly novels.

Both plays demonstrated Professor Leonard's point and will serve as a basis for a teacher who is planning to take up this type of work in the teaching of English.

1923 Badgers Are All Sold For Once

"The 1923 Badgers are more than sold out," said Horace Powell, editor-in-chief of this year's annual, today. Mr. Powell has been filling mail orders since the close of the regular session and has disposed of the 4,500 copies which were printed. Because of the large number of year books which were sold, it will be impossible to exchange with any other of the universities or colleges, as has formerly been the custom.

This is the first year that all copies of the annuals have been disposed of through sale. In former years those not sold out have been sent to libraries throughout the state, and to various Wisconsin high schools as a means of advertising the university.

The reduction of the price by 50 cents from that of the preceding year, and the complete disposal of the entire number published indicates a successful year from a business standpoint. Sherman Green '23, was business manager of this year's Badger, and Loran S. Clark had charge of the advertising.

Decorating Class Studies In Stores

"Accurate knowledge of the modern adaptations of period furniture was gained by the student," said Miss Ellen Hilstrom in speaking of the cooperation of Madison merchants with her class on Interior decoration, which is visiting the furniture stores this week.
