The snowy north my father-land, I fondly cling to thee;
 Bright eyes are thine, warm hearts and hands, and spirits true and free!
 And yet I love sunny south, where friends have greeted me
 With eyes as bright, and hands as warm as I shall ever see.

The snowy north, the sunny south—the oak tree and the vine,
 Still may the oak be firm of root, the ivy round it twine;
 And on them both let Freedom's sun forever proudly shine,
 I love them both, they both have won this yielding heart of mine.
